PREFACE

The aim of this book is to present in available form what the average citizen desires to know about those events which have conjoined to make Dunn County what it is today. To the narration of said events has been added biographical mention of many former and present-day citizens, having a strong human interest that will be personal, directly or indirectly, to many readers of the volume.

The material for the history proper has been drawn from many sources, among them: the History of Northern Wisconsin, 1881; History of the Chippewa Valley. 1892; the back files of the Dunn County News; papers prepared by well known pioneers and long-time residents of the county and read by them at meetings of the Old Settlers' Society; official records at Madison and at the Dunn County courthouse; the Wisconsin Blue Book or legislative record; the state and federal census reports giving various statistics; and other literary and documentary records, in addition to which must be mentioned a considerable amount of valuable data that was orally contributed.

The large amount of biography, amplified in many cases by more or less genealogy, was obtained through personal interviews with those who are thus represented, or with some member or members of their respective families.

The purely historical data—that contained on the first 246 pages of the volume after being compiled, was for the most part submitted to certain well informed citizens for approval or correction before going to press. Mr. C. E. Freeman, of Menomonie, in this capacity rendered much valuable service, also contributing some articles from his own pen. There were also many other helpers, some in Menomonie and some in other parts of the county, to whom the publishers owe a debt of gratitude.

Probably no perfect history was ever written, but we trust that in the present work we have rectified the most serious errors of former historians of this region without any of our own being sufficiently great to affect its value as a fairly reliable history of the county of which it treats.

BIOGRAPHICAL

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN AND THE RED CEDAR

Dunn County lies at an altitude of about 1,000 feet above sea level in its highest It is situated near the southern border of the first continent that was lifted part. from the ocean's bed, and which extended from Labrador southwest along the margin of the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes, and crossed into Michigan and Wisconsin, thence stretching northwest to McKenzie's River. As the land gradually neared the surface with an ever-advancing shore, it was subject to the action of the waves, the heat and cold, and other vicissitudes of that distant geologic period, and the disintegration of the rock-bound coast followed, pulverizing the formation and forming numerous beds and drifts. In the process of time these became cemented and indurated, and the rock produced what is called the Potsdam That this rock was formed by the disintegration of an older rock, by sandstone. aqueous action, is proved by the ripple marks everywhere seen on it, and that it originated in an early geologic period is gathered from the fact that so few animal remains exist in it, and those of a simple form, namely, trilobites and two varieties of lingula.

While the water over this region was comparatively shallow, innumerable icebergs, crowded into the ocean by glacial action, and holding in their frigid embrace the boulders and other material, called the drift, accumulated in a more northern region, deposited their debris as they melted, which accounts for the formation that is found so generally distributed here.

There are signs and indications that while the coal measures were forming this region was above the sea, but that it afterwards sank and received other deposits. Above the drift alluded to, the sandstone crops out wherever the upper strata has been deeply cut into by water courses. Characteristic sandstone ledges may be seen in various parts of the county, in particular along the Chippewa and Red Cedar Rivers and along Wilson's and Gilbert's Creeks.

In the southern part of the county a narrow strip of the Niagara limestone may be found, appearing above the glacial drift in the towns of Sherman, Eau Galle and Lucas. There are no metallic ores, properly so called, in this region, and although a number of years ago some traces of iron, and even gold, were found in the vicinity of Knapp, causing considerable excitement for a while, there was not enough of either metal to repay the cost of smelting, and what was found was undoubtedly the result of glacial action. Nothing has ever been found in Dunn County to repay the labors either of a mineralogist or an antiquarian.

Dunn County comprises 24 government townships, as divided by ranges, or 22 political towns, with a total area of 552,960 acres. The eastern part of the county is fairly level, consisting mostly of prairie, with some marsh land, the soil being easily worked and productive. The western portion is more rolling, and in pioneer days was covered with extensive forests, but most of the valuable timber was subsequently cut by the lumbermen, who acquired the rights to thousands of acres. The soil produces excellent crops, and the greater part of the land is now laid out in farms. Fish and game in numerous varieties, were abundant in early days, this whole region being a paradise for hunters and trappers, but the fur bearing animals and larger game have disappeared. In some of the streams, however, there is still good fishing. There are few lakes in the county, the largest, Lake Menomin, at Menomonie, having formerly been a mere pond used for storing logs, but increased in size and depth by the building of a dam.

Much of the early history of Dunn County, and the Red Cedar or Menomonie Valley, of which it is a part, is closely connected with that of Prairie du Chien, the oldest city in western Wisconsin. Prairie du Chien was probably first occupied by white men, the servants and agents of LaSalle, in 1681. As early as 1737 it doubtless became the semi-yearly rendezvous of fur traders and in 1781 the permanent abode of settlers.

The immense profit in the sale of furs in European markets was one of the incentives for private exploration in the unknown lands of the West. In the fur trade Mackinaw became an important point between Quebec and all that region of country draining into the upper great lakes. As soon as the divide between the waters tributary to lake Michigan and those tributary to the Mississippi river was crossed and the Fox-Wisconsin route was established, a large business in furs on the head streams of the Mississippi opened for the adventurous trader. Mackinaw was a long way off and the site of Prairie du Chien, a prairie on the eastern bank of the Mississippi about three miles above the mouth of the Wisconsin, was the natural topographical place and the geographic point for a center of distribution of supplies for this trade and for the collection of the pelts of the fur-bearing animals of numerous kinds to be found along the newly discovered river courses.

Old world and new world treaties also played a part in fixing this point of future settlement. At first the whole of the western country was under the domination of France, but in 1763 she ceded to Spain all her lands on the west of the Mississippi River, and to England all those to the east of the river. A portion of the last by treaty with Great Britain in 1783, passed to the United States, which country later still acquired the lands formerly ceded by France to Spain lying on the west of the river.

During this time of the separate holdings of the country divided by the Mississippi, Prairie du Chien by reason of its location at the western entrance of the principal water way across the eastern half of the continent, assumed a position of national, even of international importance, and there was a demand for stockades, forts and barracks to be built and defended at national cost and with national troops. A military occupation drew to it a more or less permanent population. After the place became useless as an international outpost, the military structures and a military force were continued to protect the settlers and fur traders from the hostile Indians.

That Prairie du Chien was early considered a point of vantage, appears from a letter of La Salle's dated August 22, 1682. He, after setting forth the enterprise of Du Luth in securing beaver and other furs above the head of lake Superior and on the headquarters of the St. Croix River, and complaining of the action of the government in permitting Du Luth to bring his furs by way of the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers, says: "But if they go by Wisconsin, where buffaloes are hunted in the summer and where I have begun an establishment, they will ruin the trade on which alone I rely, owing to the great number of buffaloes killed every year, which is greater than one can believe." Reference is made in this letter to the Chippewa River, as though thus early blazing the way from Prairie du Chien to Menonnonie. He says: "One comes to the Riviere des Boeufs (Buffalo River) which is as wide at its mouth as that of the Illinois."

This account is doubtless founded on a report of Father Louis Hennepin, a priest of the order of the Recollects of St. Francis. He and his two companions, Antoine du Gay Auguel, known from his birthplace as "le Picard" and Michael Accault were sent out by La Salle, from Fort Crevecour, near Lake Peoria, Illinois, on February 28, 1680. They were on their way up the Mississippi when they were captured by a band of Sioux warriors on the warpath against the Illinois and Miami nations. These Sioux took the white men to the Mille Lacs region in northern Minnesota. He mentions the Buffalo River, which he calls "R. de Boeufs," which he said was full of turtles and which he ascended for several leagues. It is believed that he ascended Beef Slough, which at that time was possibly the main channel of the Chippewa River. He does not mention any other river that would correspond with the Chippewa River of the present day. After spending some time in the Mille Lacs region in Minnesota, Hennepin and Auguel, leaving Accault as hostage, were taken down the river by the Indians after supplies which La Salle had promised to send to the mouth of the Wisconsin. On this trip they hunted in the region between the Chippewa and the Wisconsin, and possibly saw Dunn

County in these wanderings, Accault and his guards joined the party and were Left for a while at the mouth of the Chippewa or possibly at the mouth of Beef Slough. Here and on various islands the squaws hid meat. They then again ascended the Mississippi, and were rescued from the Indians by Daniel Graysolon, Sieur du Luth. Toward the end of September Hennepin, Du Luth and the two other men again descended the Mississippi and reached Canada by way of the Wisconsin River, the Portage, Fox River and Green Bay. The Franquelin map of 1688 calls the Chippewa the R. des Sauteurs.

The next mention of the Chippewa River is in an account of a journey of Le Subur's up the Mississippi River in September of the year 1700. It is there stated that on the fourteenth day after leaving the mouth of the Wisconsin River, "He left on the east side of the river, a large beautiful river, which comes a great distance from the north, and called Bon Secours, from the great number of buffalo, stags, bears and deer found there." This river, the account further states was below and near Lake Pepin. This reference serves to locate the river "left on the east" as the Chippewa; the same stream that Hennepin in 1680 called the River of Bulls and La Salle in 1682 mentions as Buffalo River.

In this account of Le Sueur's journey in 1700 is probably the first reference to the stream now known as the Red Cedar River. Speaking of the Chippewa it is said: "Three leagues up this river there is a lead mine: and seven leagues higher, on the same side, you meet another river of great length." From this description we may not be able to rediscover the lead mine, but the distances given do serve to locate the river spoken of as the Red Cedar.

The agents of La Salle probably learned of the general features of the lower Chippewa Valley as high up as the Red Cedar in the year 1680, for in his letter of 1682 he said, writing of the Chippewa: "It is followed from ten to twelve leagues, the water being smooth and without rapids, bordered by mountains which widen from time to time, forming meadows."

It is possible that the Red Cedar River had been explored by white men before Le Sueur's journey and perhaps before Father Hennepin's discoveries. It is known that Lake Court d'Oreilles had been a gathering place of the Indians from early in the seventeenth century. The trails from the headwaters of the Wisconsin, Black and Chippewa Rivers passed by this lake on the road to the Sioux country. It is near the sources of the Red Cedar River. Old beaver dams on all tributaries on the Red Cedar indicate that its valley was once rich in furs.

In La Salle's letter of 1682, he reports to the government that Du Luth had for three years been trading in the Lake Superior country and sending his men among the Sioux and the Chippewas, finally coming himself by the Bois Brule and St. Croix Rivers to Lake Pepin. Hennepin says Du Luth came by this route in 1680. In a letter directed by an official to the governor of Canada written in 1683, it is stated that Du Luth was then sending a company of traders to the Sioux which was to be joined by other persons. The Sioux were then on the upper Mississippi. In a similar letter in 1690-91 it is stated that Perrot in going up the Mississippi River met at the Fox-Wisconsin portage a canoe of Frenchmen coming from the Sioux country and further that he on arriving at the Mississippi dispatched men to warn the "French-men who were then among the Nadouaissoux to proceed to Michilimakinak, this because of a threatened war between several different tribes of It is stated that in 1693 Le Sueur built a fort near Red Wing, Minnesota, Indians." to protect the fur trade route from Lake Superior by the St. Croix River. When Le Sueur in 1700 arrived at Lake Pepin, word was brought to him that a Frenchman had recently been killed in the country near by. At his command the Indians brought the companion of the man who had been killed. He "was a Canadian named Dinnis. He stated that his comrade had been accidentally killed; his name was La Place; he was a soldier who had deserted from Canada and fled to this country." Further, there came to Le Sueur in the winter of 1700-07, on Blue Earth River in Minnesota "seven French traders from Canada." "They had been plundered and striped naked by the Sioux.'

It is quite certain that there were at that early day beaver on the Red Cedar.

It appears that traders and trappers in large numbers were then pressing up the Mississippi and its branches. There is no direct evidence that these trappers caught these beavers, yet it is a fair inference that they did and that they knew of and traversed the Red Cedar Valley.

That the validity of this supposition, that white men were on this river as early as the year 1700 should not be impugned by reason of the absence of direct written evidence coming from the trappers themselves, is evident. They as a class were men who could neither read nor write. It was then unlawful for any one to trap for fur-bearing animals, especially beaver, without a license from the government. It was also unlawful to engage on the frontier in the fur trade without such license.

Notwithstanding these prohibitions many communications addressed to the government show that illicit trading and trapping was carried on to so great an extent that at one time the price of pelts was so reduced that there was fear that the fur trade would be ruined. Trappers often staid in the wilderness several years at a time and engaged friendly Indians to market, as their own, the pelts taken by them in violation of the regulations of the government. Soldiers neglected their duties and went on trapping excursions. Some even deserted and took to the wandering life of trappers.

Du Luth and Le Sueur were accused of engaging in this illicit trade. The former was said to cloak his trade under pretense of exploring new lands, and the latter to hide his violation of the law by eager search for mines. It was pointed out that both of these men carried on their operations in the best fur producing regions, and went equipped with large quantities of merchandise solely adapted to the Indian fur trade.

The Red Cedar being a side stream would naturally be visited, if visited at all, by individual trappers or small parties of trappers, who probably had no license. Even had they had the ability to make a record, such adventurers would not publish their discoveries. They would not by publication invite detection and punishment and at the same time inform rivals in trade of the locations where pelts were to be gathered in plenty.

The next reference to the Red Cedar after that of Le Sueur's journey of 1700 is in an account of a journey by Jonathan Carver. In 1767 he made his way up the Chippewa River and incidentally remarks: "Nearly thirty miles up, it separates into two branches, and I took my course through that which lies to the eastward." He followed this branch (the main Chippewa) to some distance beyond its falls. Then by one of the trails passing by Lake Court d'Oreilles he went to the headwaters of the St. Croix. Of the lower Chippewa, he says: "The country adjoining the river, for about sixty miles is very level, and on its banks lie fine meadows, where larger droves of buffalo and elks were feeding than I observed in any other part of my travels."

Carver was a Connecticut man who had served in the British army in North America during the French war, and seems to have been the first Englishman to make a journey through the Northwest. He is the first person for whom is made a claim of proprietorship of the site of Menomonie. The claim rested on a deed said to have been given by two Sioux chiefs to Carver, covering lands in western Wisconsin, including Dunn County. The territory of these two counties was in the early political organization of this state included in Crawford County. and this deed showing the symbol signatures of the chiefs, a turtle and a snake, is spread upon the records of that county. By the terms of the deed, this land grant had a maximum width of 120 miles on the line drawn due north from a point due east 100 miles from the head of Lake Pepin to form its east boundary; and from the north end of that line the northern or northwestern boundary ran southwestwardly in a straight course about 175 miles to the Falls of St. Anthony. The side formed by the Mississippi River and Lake Pepin, in their irregular meandering but generally southeastward course extends on a direct line between its ends about 70 miles.

Measuring due east 100 miles from the foot of Lake Pepin at the mouth of the Chippewa River, the southeast corner of this grant, is found in the central part of Wood County, Wisconsin, about five miles southeast of Pittsville. Thence the east and it represents the second sec

boundary, measured due north 120 miles, passes about six miles east of Marshfield, Wisconsin, through the west part of Marathon County, and along the east line of Taylor and Price Counties to the northeast corner of the grant in Iron County, about two miles southeast from Mercer, Wisconsin. On the northwest, a straight line running thence to the Falls of St. Anthony passes near Rossville, in Sawyer County, across the Red Cedar Lake and upper Turtle Lake in Barron County, and by the railroad towns of Turtle Lake and Amery, crosses the St. Croix about two miles north of the Apple River, and crosses the central part of White Bear Lake in Minnesota.

There is no evidence that Carver at any time took possession of the lands granted or ever tried to enforce a right of possession, but his heirs and their grantees have ineffectually tried to establish a title under the deed. The possession of the site of Menomonie has been claimed by many Indian tribes; France, Great Britain and the United States have successively exercised dominion over it, but Carver made the first private claim of ownership to it. This claim, the United States in 1854 ignored by issuing to William Wilson a patent covering a part of the site of Menomonie. A decision of the United States supreme court made in 1823 in effect ruled out the Carver claim and deed. Chief Justice Marshall wrote the opinion filed by the court. Hereviews the history of the so called Indian lands, and points out as a fact that the French and English from the time of their earliest discoveries and conquests in North America had insisted that the fee in all lands vested in the power making the discovery or conquest and that the right of the Indian tribes therein was limited to mere occupancy. And that when these sovereign powers ceded to the United States parts of these lands so held such absolute fee therein vested in this The court held that by the established law, whether right or wrong as nation. an abstract proposition in ethics, the Indian tribes had only a right to remain in possession of the lands until the dominant power saw fit to disposess them. In the eye of the law the Indians held no claim to or right in the lands that they could They have been permitted to cede them to the nation in power sell and convey. but never to cede them to another nation nor under any inherent or original right to sell or surrender them to individuals.

From the time of Le Sueur's journey to that of Carver's, incidental mention in the official correspondence of Canada is made of traders being on the upper reaches of the Mississippi River and of French officers building forts on Lake Pepin to protect the traders and to conciliate Indian tribes that they might be kept from joining, at first the Sauk and Foxes in their war against the French and still later the tribes friendly to the Sauk and Foxes in their war against the French and later the tribes friendly to the English during the seven years of war. For over a half a century, from 1700 to 1767, no direct accounts of travellers are found relating to Prairie du Chien and the Chippewa River Country. The warfare above mentioned prevented settlement and discouraged exploration.

Carver in his book of travels has given what seems to be the first authentic and trustworthy description of the Chippewa River and has also given the first direct and particular account of Prairie du Chien. Carver says nothing of permanent settlers nor of resident traders. It is a much disputed question, this of the first white occupier or settler of Prairie du Chien, who he was or whence he came. Tradition has it that Jean Marie Cardinelli and his wife, both French, were the first real settlers of Prairie du Chien. They are said to have come there, bringing with them an Omaha Indian as a slave, some time between 1720 and 1730.

The next personal and succinct account of Prairie du Chien, after that of Carver, is given by Peter Pond, a successful fur trader. He, like Carver, was a Connecticut man born and bred. In 1773 he first traded on the Mississippi, and his account pertains to this and the two ensuing years. Pond seems to have entered the Western trade with a good deal of confidence and he and his partner accumulated an immense quantity of goods at Mackinaw for the Indian trade. He says: "I divided my goods into twelve parts and fitted out twelve large canoes for different parts of the Mississippi River. Each canoe was made of birch bark and white cedar; they would carry 7,000 weight." At Green Bay he "engaged nine clerks for different parts of the Northern and Western country." After giving out some goods on credit to Indians on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, he at Prairie du Chien saved one outfit for himself, which he took to St. Peter's River and sent out the rest in charge of his clerks. He says: "I had nine clerks which I had employed in different rivers that fell into" the Mississippi. On his return in the spring to Prairie du Chien he says of the trade; "the number of packs of peltry of different sorts was called fifteen hundred of a hundred weight each which went to Mackinaw." Of the amount that went down the river to St. Louis he makes no mention, although it is evident from his account that some did go this way. It is possible that one of his nine clerks "on the rivers that fell into the Mississippi" may have been located in the Chippewa and Menomonie Valleys.

In 1784, eight years after Pond's first visit, three Frenchmen purchased from the Indians, a large part of the Prairie des Chiens. This purchase was sanctioned by the British commander at Mackinaw, it was recognized in Jay's treaty, and later confirmed by Congress, not however until after 1820.

As permanent buildings became necessary at Prairie du Chien for defense and for trade it was found that the most accessible material for constructing them was the pine on the Red Cedar River, then called Menomonee River. And Wilson Creek then known as Meadow River, was found to be the first suitable watercourse above the mouth of the Menomonee for a dam, useful alike in getting out logs and in the manufacture of the same into timber and lumber. At its mouth this creek had on each side, high banks, rising sheer, not far from the water's edge. A wide extent of bottom lands immediately above gave ample room for a reservoir. On its banks extending several miles above its mouth, and on the banks of the Menomonee River near by stood large forests of pine.

This particular locality and the river courses of the Menomonee and the Chippewa connecting it with the Mississippi River were then within a neutral Indian belt of country lying between the lands occupied by the Chippewas and the Sioux. These streams made transportation easy and neutrality made it comparatively safe. It was under these conditions, therefore, that lumbering operations were started at the present side of Menomonie in 1822.

CHAPTER II

EARLY LUMBERING OPERATIONS

The first lumbering operations in Dunn County or in the Red Cedar Valley of which it is a part, were in 1822, when Harding Perkins, backed by James H. Lockwood and Joseph Rollette, rival fur traders, erected a mill at the confluence of the Wilson or Meadow Creek and the Red Cedar or Menomonie River, the present site of the city of Menomonie.

The next was the logging operations of a military expedition from Prairie du Chien in 1829 under the command of Lieutenant Levin Gale with the purpose of securing logs and timber for the defense of Fort Crawford at that place.

Shortly after this came the building of a second mill at Menomonie in 1830 and a mill on the banks of the Gilbert Creek, a short way down the river in 1831, both by James H. Lockwood, backed by Joseph Rolette.

A third location was selected by Hiram S. Allen on the banks of Irvine Creek, still further down the river from Gilbert Creek. This mill was evidently built in the middle 30's, as Allen probably did not come into the valley until 1834, and mills seem to have been running on Wilson, Gilbert and Irvine Creeks when John H. Fonda, who had been a member of the military expedition of 1829, started his second operations here in 1836 or 1837. Allen in addition to building the Irvine Creek mill bought the Gilbert Creek mill and possibly an interest in the Wilson Creek mill. Allen originally came to cut logs and get out squared timber to float down the river, but found that to make the lumbering business profitable he must have means of mill sawing. The Wilson Creek mill was called the upper mill, the Gilbert Creek mill the middle mill, and the Irvine Creek mill the lower mill.

Recorded information regarding these early operations is found in the narrative of James H. Lockwood published in Vol. II of the Wisconsin Historical Collections; the narrative of John H. Fonda, published in Vol. V of the Wisconsin Historical Collections; and the account of Henry R. Schoolcraft of his trip down the Red Cedar River, on pages 388-389 of his "Personal Memories of a Residence of Thirty Years With the Indian Tribes, 1812-1842."

Of the operations of Hardin Perkins, Mr. Lockwood says:

"About the year 1822, a man by the name of Hardin Perkins, from Kentucky, came to Prairie du Chien for the purpose of building a saw-mill in the Indian country, and obtained permission from Major Taliaferro, then agent for the Sioux Indians, with the consent of the Indians, to erect a saw-mill on their land on the Chippewa River and tributaries; but Perkins not having the capital to carry out his project, nor sufficient influence to obtain the permission of the Indians to erect this mill, solicited Joseph Rolette and myself to join him, which we did, and contracted with Wabashaw's band of Sioux, who claimed the Chippewa River country, for the privilege of erecting a mill and cutting timber for it, paying them about $1,000 per year in goods, and furnished Perkins the necessary means for the purpose; and he was to take charge of and conduct the business. He proceeded to Menomonee River, a tributary of the Chippewa, and on a small stream running into the Menomonee, about twenty miles from its mouth, erected a saw mill and had it so nearly done that he expected to commence sawing in a very few days, when one of those sudden freshets to which hilly countries are subject, came upon him and swept away the dam, mill and appendages, and Perkins returned to Prairie du Chien with his family and hands, having suffered during his residence there considerably from fear of the Chippewa Indians who resided near, and sometimes visited the mill builders.

"Col. Snelling, who commanded at Fort Snelling, had frequently since Perkins and his men commenced operations, threatened to send a force and destroy the mill, saying the Indian agent had no authority to give permission to build mills in the Indian country. The parties being pretty well convinced of the fact, and that Col. Snelling had malice enough to carry out his threat, if for nothing else but to punish Mr. Rolette, with whom he had some difficulty, concluded not to rebuild, until they could be authorized by some better authority, supposing then that the Secretary of War had that power; and Mr. Rolette and myself made up our minds to pocket the loss, and let Perkins off with the loss of the few articles he had furnished and his services, which amounted to about fifteen hundred dollars. It proved a bad speculation to all parties. The annuity we agreed to pay the Indians for the privilege of building the mill and cutting timber, being stopped during the time there was no work on the mill, the Indians insisted upon its payment, and inquired the reason we did not go on with the work. We were obliged to tell them that their Great Father would not allow us to do so. They said they had given us permission, and that the country was theirs, and the Great Father had no right to say anything about it."

Mr. Lockwood continues the narrative as follows:

"In the fall of 1829, returning from St. Louis, I met at Galena Major John Biddle of Detroit, who had then been elected our delegate to Congress from Michigan, and inquired what he could do for me, or the people of Prairie du Chien at Washington. I then related to him the situation in which I and Mr. Rolette were placed with regard to the mill and annuities to the Indians. He told me that when I got home, if I would address him at Washington, stating our case, that he would attend to it. I wrote to him a full statement of the case and difficulties, and Major Biddle obtained for us from the Secretary of War, permission to erect mills, etc., provided we contracted with the Indians through the Indian agent at Prairie du Chien.

"We renewed our contract with the Indians, through their agents, and in May, 1830, sent a mill-wright who was also a partner, a superintendent, carpenter and blacksmith, with laborers, provisions, teams, and tools, to erect a mill on the Chippewa River or its tributaries. The mill-wright selected the site of the old dam of Perkins for his dam, and built the mill on the Menomonee River, and dug a canal across a point of land from the small stream to the mill. The hands we were obliged to employ were mostly Canadians, and we engaged the wife of one of them, a Menomonee half breed, as cook for the hands. Few Americans can manage the Canadian voyageurs to advantage. They suppose that they must be treated with the same familiarity as American laborers, and reason them into doing their duty; but this is not the proper treatment. The voyageur has been so long accustomed to look upon his employer, as his superior and to be treated by him as his inferior, that so soon as he is treated as American hands expect to be treated by their employer, they at once conceive a contempt for him, and become mutinous. Such was the case with our superintendent, and he proved not to be qualified to superintend any kind of men or business, and all the hands looked upon him with contempt.

"Three or four Chippewas came to them and the Menomonee half breed woman,she being the only one that understood the Chippewa language,-and told them that if they did not leave there, they would kill them all. This was about nightfall, and the superintendent was so much alarmed that at dark he got into a canoe with one man, as much frightened as himself, and went down in the night over the rapids, that were difficult to navigate even in the day time, leaving orders with the men to load the provisions, tools, etc., into the boat, and to start in the morning down the Chippewa River near to its mouth, which they did, driving the oxen by land. The superintendent, whose name was Armstrong, arrived at the Prairie evidently much alarmed, and gave me a terrible account of his escape; and not until he had been at the Prairie some considerable time did he inform me that he had ordered all the men to leave the mill, and that they were probably on their way down. I was then satisfied that my presence was required there, unless I intended to abandon the mill; and it being in the hot weather of August, I did not feel much inclined to make a voyage in a canoe exposed to the sun, but from the materials we had to deal with, I saw at once that it was necessary.

"I had a canoe manned with a half breed Winnebago, who spoke Chippewa, and together with Armstrong and the Frenchman who had come down with him, put out at once, taking in my canoe provisions enough for myself and crew to reach the mill. We had proceeded about forty miles up the Mississippi, when early in the morning at a sand-bar, in the middle of the channel about one fourth of a mile from the shore, I met a canoe with a Menomonee half-breed and a large athletic Ohioan by the name of Hartwell, whom I had never seen before. Armstrong had engaged him as carpenter, and taken him to the mill without my having seen him, or knowing his name. I asked them where they were going, and they said to the Prairie. I said, "no!—you must return with me." I knew that the half-breed would obey without difficulty, but Hartwell said he was going to the Prairie, and I knew in order to take all of them back, I must take these back as I met them. Hartwell was a strong man and armed with a rifle, but I said to him, "This canoe at least is mine, and does not go to the Prairie; you can take you choice, whether to go back, or to remain on this sand-bar."

"He concluded to go back, and for fear that they might give me the slip, I got into the canoe with them and we proceeded up the river about ten miles farther, where we met all the Canadians with the half-breed Menomonee woman, when we all put ashore. I told them that they must go back to the mill, which they refused to do. I soon discovered, as I had suspected, that the woman was the leader of the party, and I bribed her to go back. She consented, and the others followed her example. She and her husband were in a large canoe, not half finished, which would go hard up stream. From the manner of her consenting so readily to return, I suspected that she intended as soon as they could lag a little behind, and get some point between me and them, to slip down the stream, which I afterwards learned was really their intention. To prevent this, I told them, as they were weak-handed, and had a heavy canoe, that I would embark with them and help paddle. I paddled all day, and made a good day's work up stream, and encamped in a channel of the river opposite to Wabashaw's Prairie.

"The men had only taken provisions enough to last them to the Prairie, and it was soon seen that my stock would not be sufficient for the additional mouths until we reached the boat. In camp at night one of the men named Francis La Pointe, a native of Prairie du Chien, and well acquainted with the customs of the Indians, told me that it was but a short distance across the country to the Chippewa, where the boat then was; and proposed to go there, take a canoe and meet us with provisions, which I requested him to do. He accordingly after breakfast borrowed a gun, took some crackers in his pocket, and started across, while we proceeded up the channel along under the bluffs for about five miles to where the canoes cross the Mississippi to the western side. Just as we were about putting off from the shore, La Pointe came running down the hill hallooing, "Indians." The canoes were all putting out into the river, but I ordered the canoe that I was in to put to shore, and take the man in, confiding, at the time, in his statement.

"La Pointe had on, when he started, two cotton shirts, and when he returned one of the shirts was nearly cut from him, and several stabs through the other. He had thrown away all his ammunition and his hat, and stated that after crossing the hill and getting into a ravine of tall grass, that five Chippewa Indians suddenly surrounded him, took away his powder, shot and provisions, cut his hat and shirt all to pieces, called him a dog, and would have taken his gun had he not begged hard to retain it, telling them that it was not his. He told so probable a story of what would naturally be the conduct of a war party of Indians, that I at first believed him, but we stopped shortly after for dinner, and although the men pretended to be much afraid of the Indians, I discovered something in their conduct that satisfied me, that it was a hoax. They proposed to turn back to Prairie du Chien for fear of the Indians, but I told them that I was never in the habit of turning back through fear, until I saw there was really danger, and that I did not require them to run any risk which I would not myself freely share."

"We finally proceeded on quietly until near the mouth of Riviere Au Boeuf or Buffalo River, when Armstrong and the man who came down with him, who were actually in great fear, as they were not in the secret of the plot, discovered an Indian on the bluffs below its mouth, or imagined they did, and gave the alarm of "Chippewa!" But we met some Sioux at the foot of the Bluffs, and they said that it could not be Chippewas, as they had the day before been hunting over there and thought it probable that some of their people might still be hunting there. So we proceeded to a point opposite to the mouth of the Chippewa River, and encamped for the night.

"So much had been said about danger from the Chippewas, that I began to believe there was something in it, and must confess that the next morning I entered the narrow mouth of the Chippewa, fringed with bushes, with some fear that some Indian might be hid, and fire upon us without giving notice of his presence; but once in, the feeling of fear wore off, and we proceeded on with little to eat until 10 o'clock, when we came to a Menomonee lodge, where we found a great deal of venison, and a quantity stuck up around the fire cooking, to which we did ample justice. We then proceeded about ten miles up the river, where we found the boat and three Americans who had remained with it. But they refused, as well as the Canadians to go back to the mill under the superintendence of Armstrong; and from all accounts of the men, as well as from what I had seen of of him, I was satisfied that he was not calculated to conduct such a business, and I concluded that the best way to get rid of him, was to purchase him out, even if I had to give more than he was justly entitled. His fear of the Chippewas was such, that he did not wish to return. He owed me about five hundred dollars, which would not be worth much if he left the mill; yet, to get rid of him, I gave him that, and took a quit claim of all his claims upon the mill, and let him have a small canoe in which he descended the river

'My people agreed to go back to the mill, provided I would get the Menomonees to go up the river with us, but I had no interpreter in whom I could confide, as my half breed Winnebago had joined his comrades, the Canadians, against me. I sent down for the Menomonees at the lodge we had passed, to come and go with us; but presume that the half-breed Menomonee woman had instructed them how to act; for although I offered them a high price, they pretended to be afraid of the Chippewas, which I was satisfied was not the case, and they declined to go, unless another band who were hunting on the Chippewa, above the mouth of the Menomonee River, would go with them. So I sent an Indian for them and proceeded on with my boat, and encamped on a sand-bar opposite the Menomonee River, and waited for the Indians until about noon the next day, when they arrived, but they did not want to go into the Menomonee, expressing their fears of the Chippewas. I offered them a keg of powder, a bar of lead, and promised, when they next came to Prairie du Chien, to give them a keg of whiskey; but they still declined going, reiterating their apprehensions, which I was satisfied were feigned for the occasion, and that they were but playing their part as instructed by the half-breed woman. Believing such to be the case. I ordered the men to put the things in the boat, telling them that I was not afraid of the Chippewas, and should go to the mill. Upon this, some of the Canadians showed a disposition to mutiny, but I had made up my mind to go, and knock down the leader with a club; and force them to accompany me. How I should have succeeded I do not know, but at that moment the Indians finding that I was determined to go without them, said they would go, and we proceeded up the Menomonee River about nine miles, where we encamped.

"The Winnebago and Menomonee half-breeds unloaded one of the canoes and said there was a lake near there, and that they would go and shoot elk; but in about an hour they returned, apparently much alarmed, and said they saw tracks of Indians around the lake. But the Menomonees who had agreed to go with us fearing to lose their promised pay if we went back, said that the tracks were not Chippewas but Menomonees, as some of their people had been there that day hunting. The next day we proceeded on up the river without anything of note until we reached the mill, except occasionally seeing a Chippewa in imagination.

There was among the carpenters of my party a discharged soldier of the name of Holmes, who was a better mill-wright than Armstrong, and upon whom, as I afterwards learned, Armstrong had depended to build the mill. I then made a bargain with Isaac Saunders, one of the carpenters Armstrong had taken up, giving him an interest in the mill to superintend it, and engaged Holmes by the day to build the mill. There had been very little work done during the summer, and they did not get the mill ready to commence sawing until March, 1831; and by the first of June following, had sawed about 100,000 feet of lumber. It was impossible at that time at Prairie du Chien to get any other hands than Canadians, except occasionally a discharged soldier; and among the Americans that were at the mill, there was not one who knew how to construct a raft.

"The Canadian manner of rafting had been to lay two floats of timber about ten inches square, and raft the boards on them, and they rafted our lumber in that way; but when they had completed the raft, they found there was not water enough to float it, the water being very low that spring. As many of the men's time would be out in May, I went up with another set of hands to supply the places of those that would come away with the raft. But on arriving there, I found the water very low, and the Canadians declared that the lumber could not be rafted out of the river. It appeared that we would have to wait for a rise of water; and having a double set of hands, I concluded to build another mill, on a stream about one mile from the other. I set the hands to work getting out timber for the dam, mill, etc., etc., "The Canadians who had first gone there, and went back with me against their will, and whose times were about expiring, were still disposed to be mutinous, and declared their intention of not waiting for a rise of water to get the timber out, and of leaving as soon as their time should expire. I told them that they could not leave until they took down the lumber; that I would pay them for their time, and that they could not get provisions to go unless they took it by force, and that, I did not think, would be very safe for them to attempt while I was there, and if they cut a pine tree to make a canoe of, I would have them prosecuted and imprisoned and, as a Canadian is much afraid of a jail, they concluded to continue their work.

"During the time I was contriving how this lumber was to be got to the mouth of the Menomonee, and talking with Holmes one day about it, he told me he had somewhere seen lumber rafted over rapids by laying one sawed board or slab lapping about half its length upon another, after the manner of shingling, and thus repeat and combine until the raft or crib should be formed; and that it would hang together in passing over any rapids. Upon this hint I caused a crib to be made, but the men said it would drown any one who would be fool-hardy enough to take it. over the rapids. I waited till the following Sunday, when the men would be idle, and then told two of the hands that if they would take that crib to the mouth of the Menomonee, I would pay them one dollar each. They did so without accident, and returned by land before night, and reported that the lumber could be taken down in that way without any difficulty. The men now went to work and rafted it; got it nearly all to the mouth of the river, when about the first of June, it commenced raining, and continued most of the time very hard for a fortnight. The stream on which our dam was, rose in about twelve hours something like twelve feet, and the Menomonee River about the same, carrying away the dam, and sweeping the loosemade cribs of lumber from their moorings, and scattered the lumber over the bottoms of the Menomonee and Chippewa Rivers. About fifty thousand feet of this lumber was afterwards recovered in a damaged state, at a great expense, and taken to St. Louis and sold at a reduced price. Such were some of the difficulties attending the early attempts at lumbering in this country. The only hands that could be employed were the Canadian voyageurs; they could row a boat well, or run a raft, but that was about the extent of their knowledge of lumbering. Occasionally you could pick up a discharged soldier that had some knowledge of the business, and these were the materials that pioneer saw-mill proprietors had to use, and manage as best they could."

Of the military expedition of 1829 Mr. Fonda says:

"It was in the fall of 1829, while the present Fort Crawford was building, that Col. Zachary Taylor, afterward president of the United States, ordered a body of men to proceed to the pineries on Menomonee River, there to cut logs, hew square timber, make plank and shingles to be used in the construction of the Fort and its defences. The number of soldiers drafted for the purpose was seventy, besides three officers and myself. Col. Taylor himself came to me as he had done before, and did afterward—and said he wanted me to pilot that expedition. It was late in the season, and I did not like to bear the responsibility, and told him so; but Taylor had more confidence in me than I had in myself, and nothing would do but I must go. We left here in seven Mackinaw boats, with ten men in each boat. The officers accompanying the expedition were Lieut. Gale, Lieut. Gardinier, Segt. Melvin, and myself as pilot. Lieut. Gale was the senior officer, and had command. I was put in command of the advance boat, Gale in the third boat, Melvin in the fifth, and Gardenier in the rear boat, with orders to keep the boats well up, and see that they reached shore together at night.

"The weather was fine for that season of the year, cold nights and clear frosty mornings. The boats made good heading against the current, kept together admirably, and the men felt vigorous under the influence of the pure, bracing atmosphere. Officers and men were in good spirits, and we passed along swimmingly until we reached Wa-ba-shaw's Prairie. As we entered Lake Pepin, floating ice was encountered, the current was swifter, and the cold intense. Now, instead of the men being in good spirits, good spirits got into the men, and from that moment we had trouble. Lieut. Gale would get ashore with his gun and a couple of men, to kill some of the geese and ducks for our mess, and always left orders for the boats to keep together. One afternoon, when we had entered the Chippewa River, Gale landed on the northwest shore to shoot brant geese, that were very plenty, leaving Lieut. Gardenier in command, with strict orders to keep all the boats together, and at night to land them in a body, so the men might form one camp. This was necessary for the sake of convenience, and because it kept the men from getting separated, in case the river should close suddenly. After Gale went ashore, I took his boat, which was the flag-boat, of the expedition, and appointing one of the men to take temporary command of mine, continued up the river. Chippewa River is a very crooked stream, and the channel is worse. Often only one or two of the boats would be in sight, on account of the bends and abrupt turns in the river. At sun-down we had arrived to within fifteen miles of the mouth of the Menomonee River, and only three boats in company. I decided to encamp, and wait for the other four boats.

"Selecting a place on the southeast side of the river, the men prepared camp, and I sent a skiff to the opposite shore to bring over Lieut. Gale and one soldier named Earl, who had come down stream opposite to the camp. Gale saw the other boats were missing, and sent me down in the skiff to find them and hurry them up. Some distance below, I met Melvin with two of the boats. He said Gardenier had run aground on the sand-bar that I had guessed as much, for Gardenier was far behind when across the river at right angles with the course of the stream. Lieut. Gardenier was not aware of this, and when his boats struck the bar the men tried to force them over into the deep water channel just above, but this made matters worse, for the boats were heavily laden with stores, and the quicksand closing around them, soon made it impossible to move back or forwards. Between the boats and the shore on either side, the swift, icy water was too deep to wade, and the only alternative was to remain where they were until the other boats took them off. So when I got down to the bar, there they were tight enough—in more respects than one. It was very cold, and to keep the blood in circulation, they had tapped two of the wiskey casks, and were circulating the liquor-every soldier was allowed a certain amount of wiskey per diem, at that time called "wiskey rations"-this article of the soldier's rations was abolished during Jackson's administration, and coffee and sugar substituted.

"On arriving alongside of the boats, I saw it was useless to think of getting them off that night, so telling all who could to tumble into the skiff, I pulled for the shore, and after three or four trips, had all the men, together with their blankets and provisions, safely landed in the Chippewa Bottoms. After the fires were made, I got into the skiff and rowed back to the main camp, where Melvin had arrived before me. I reported to Lieut. Gale, and sitting down regaled myself on roasted goose. Next morning we went to Lieut. Gardenier's camp to inquire into the matter of running the boats aground. A council was held and resulted in Lieut. Gardenier's being sent back. There was an effort to attach the blame on me, but it fell through.

The day following was spent in unloading the boats, and fruitless attempts to get them off the sand bar. On the third night the Chippewa River closed, and while the ice was getting strong, we made sleds to draw the stores on the ice fifteen miles up to the point on the Menomonee River, where we were to cut timber. By the time the sleds were made, the ice on the river was strong enough to bear a team, and the sleds were loaded with casks of wiskey, blankets and provisions, and we drew them up to the proper place on the Menomonee River, where Gale remained with two men to watch the stores, while I returned with the men and sleds for another lot.

"It seems that soon after I left, Gale discovered a war party of Chippewas on the path, looking for Sioux, and having a natural fear of Indians, he made off through the wooded bottoms at the top of his speed. The chief of the party sent a couple of his swiftest runners to bring Gale back, but they could not overtake The warriors had no idea of disturbing anything, but seeing the liquor and him. goods lying around without a guard, they were tempted to help themselves, and took some of the goods and filled everything they had that was capable of holding whiskey, and then departed. It is seldom war parties are out after snow has fallen; I have only noticed it among the Sioux and Chippewas, who were always warring against each other. I arrived the second day with more goods, and learned from the two men that Lieut. Gale had been gone almost sixty hours from camp. I sent men in the direction he had taken, and discharged guns every moment, and stationed a look-out on the high ground that commanded an extensive view of the Chippewa Flats. The day passed without our finding the Lieutenant. On the third day, the oldest chief of the war-party paid us another visit, returning all the things they had taken, except the whiskey, which they promised to pay for with venison.

"While the party were in the camp, the look-out reported that he could see some object moving on the marsh, about three miles distant. Two soldiers were sent out who succeeded in creeping on Lieut. Gale, and catching him before he could get away. He had been wandering three days and three nights, and exposure had deranged his mind, and he did not recognize his friends. He was brought in, and, on examination, I found his feet and legs were frozen up to the knees. A hole was cut in the ice, and the Lieutenant's limbs thrust through. After the frost was out of the frozen parts, they were greased with melted deer-fat, and wrapped up in blankets. In a few hours Gale had come to his senses-especially that of feeling-and ordered us to carry him down to Prairie du Chien. We made him as comfortable as possible on a sled, and with three men started to draw him to the Prairie, leaving Sergeant Melvin-who was my senior, and ranked me-in command of the men. Lieut. Gale endured great pain, for every motion was torture, but when we were within sight of the Indian lodges on Wa-ba-shaw Prairie, he forgot his pain, and wanted us to avoid meeting the Indians. This would have been a difficult thing to accomplish, so we marched into the village, and Wa-bashaw came out of his wigwam to welcome us. Upon learning the condition that Gale was in, the chief had him carried into his lodge, and treated after the Indian manner with a concoction of white-oak bark and poultice of roots. To these remedies Gale owed his perfect recovery, if not his life. We left Wa-ba-shaw Prairie and arrived safe at Prairie du Chien, and the Lieutenant was placed under the care of Dr. Beaumont. I was immediately ordered up the river again, with the three men, and had to drive two yoke of oxen back. When we arrived at the camp on Menomonee River, the men had a log cabin most finished, and were drawing the goods into it.

"We had only been there a short time, when one of the men who was drawing a sled, slipped down and broke his lower jaw. Sergeant Melvin was a severe disciplinarian and believed in flogging a soldier for an accident. He ordered the man to strip and prepare to receive a few lashes. It was brutal, to scourge a man who was already suffering with pain, so I told the man to keep his coat on. The Sergeant glared at me, but perhaps he discovered something in the expression of the men's faces, for he kept silent, and the man was put on the sick list. The men were divided into three gangs, two of thirty men each, one gang commanded by Melvin, another by me; and the third gang of ten men, remained in camp. It was my first duty to build a large flat boat, and having selected a piece of timber suitable for the gunwales, we erected scaffolds and prepared pullies and ropes to raise the log upon them. This preparation attracted the attention of Melvin, and he supposed the men were about to hang him. Fear had previously caused him to have built a small block-house in which he had placed all the arms and ammunition, and where he now unnecessarily shut himself up. He gave me orders through a loop hole, but would never come out to see if they were faithfully executed.

'The work progressed steadily until the river opened. Trees had been felled, timber hewn, stuff for the flat-boat got out, and we had divided the log with whipsaws, and the parts were being hewed into the proper shape for gunwales, when one of the men laid his thigh open to the bone with a broad-axe. It was necessary that the man should have medical aid, so Melvin made out his report of the work done, also a charge against me for creating mutiny, and appointed me to carry the documents and two wounded men-the man who broke his jaw was unfit for duty-in a dugout down to headquarters. I paddled down the river without accident, and entered the slough north of fort one evening after dusk, and was surprised to hear the bugles playing the "Dead March." I had the men put in the hospital as soon as I landed, and then repaired to Maj. Garland's office, where I found Taylor and his officers, holding a council. They were deliberating on the removal of Lieut. MacKinzie's body from the old burying ground near the mound, where Col. Dousman's dwelling stands, to the officers' graveyard north of the new fort. It was to be done with the honors of war, and the musicians were practicing for the occasion, which accounts for the music I heard. I delivered the papers to Quarter Master Garland, and after perusing them in silence, he began to read Melvin's charge against me in his droll tone, that convulsed all present with laughter. Garland asked me if we intended to hang the sergeant. I told him we hadn't thought of such a thing, and then gave a straight-forward account of all that had transpired from the departure of the seven boats, up to my leaving the camp on the Menomonee in the dug-out. I was not court-martialed.

"Lieut. Gardenier, Boiseley, myself and seven men, returned to the pineries to bring down the rafts. We found on our arrival, that the men had worked well, and had got out a large quantity of square timber, with any amount of shingles, and the flat boat was put together and nearly finished. Two rafts were soon formed of the timber, and I was put in command of one, and Lieut. Gardenier took the other. My raft was the largest, but it drew less water, and therefore all the provisions for the men of both rafts, were placed on it, except a barrel of whiskey. Melvin was left with some of the men, to bring down the shingles in the flat boat, as soon as it was launched."

The account of Fonda of the location of this force on the Menomonee is provokingly meagre, but from what is stated it would seem that the camps were established and the cutting done near the mouth of the river, and not far from Dunville. First he makes the statement that the stop on the Chippewa for repairs was made within fifteen miles of the mouth of the Menomonee River," and then he says that when the start was made again the journey was "fifteen miles up to the point on the Menomonee River where we were to cut the timber."

The description of the wanderings of Lieutenant Gale on the Chippewa flats, over which was an extensive view from the high point occupied by the lookout, also fixes the place at the mouth of the river in the vicinity of Dunnville, as no other place on the Menomonee can be made to fit this description.

There is a tradition also that one camp of this expedition was located on the west bank of the Menominee as far up as one mile below Irvine Creek.

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

From the account of Schoolcraft of his journey down the Red Cedar River in August, 1831, we learn that this second stream which he passed on August 11, here referred to by Lockwood was "a creek just below" the creek on which the first mill was built. And from it we also find this first stream estimated to be 15 miles below the falls of the Menomonee River, at present Cedar Falls, then called "Kakabika Falls." Lockwood in writing about the dam construction by Perkins says it was across "a stream running into the Menomonee, about twenty miles from its mouth." These two accounts clearly locate the first and second dams as built on Wilson Creek and the third on Gilbert Creek.

Schoolcraft in his account also mentions the fact that after two hours run from the falls he "reached the site of a saw mill," and further that "a Mr. Wallace, who with ten men was in charge of it, and was engaged in reconstructing a dam that had been carried off by the last spring freshet, represented Messrs. Rolette and Lockwood of Prairie du Chien." He said that no Sioux had been here for seven years. At that time a mill was here and the Sioux came and encamped in it. Wallace also told him there was a mill on a stream just below but not in sight from the river.

The Mr. Wallace mentioned is probably Captain George Wales, a confusion between the two names being entirely possible. It is known that Gilbert Creek mill was built some distance up that creek and not visible from the Red Cedar River. Schoolcraft asked Wallace "where the lines between the Sioux and the Chippewas crossed. He said above." On a map accompanying the report the Chippewa-Sioux boundary under the treaty of 1825 is shown to cross Wilson Creek about one one mile above its mouth and to cross the Menomonee River at a less distance above the mill, then it is represented by a straight line running to the Chippewa River at a point near the mouth of Mud Creek.

After the freshet of June 1831, Lockwood makes no further mention of the Menomonee mills, the record made by S. hoolcraft under date of August, 1831 is not continued.

In 1836 or 1837, Mr. Fonda again visited the mills on the Red Cedar. He speaks of going to Lockwood's mills on the Menomoniee in 1836 or 1837 and remaining two years. In another he casually remarks "In 1839 while in the Menomoniee pineries," and in still another place he speaks of an election at Prairie du Chien in 1840 as having taken place "the year after my coming down from Lockwood's mills. This would indicate that he was here in 1837-39.

Of these two years he writes: "I went to the mills on the Menomoniee River. I went to Lake Pepin with my family in the steam boat Science. At the lake were two trading houses. Immediately upon our arrival at the lake, a fierce battle was fought on its shores, between the Sioux and Chippewas, which resulted in the defeat of the latter. I passed the scene of the fight, and saw the mutilated bodies of the dead Indians. The Chippewa Indians were better warriors than the Sioux, but being poor, their arms are almost valueless, which accounts for their defeat. From the lake we went up the Chippewa River in Mackinaw boats. The water of the Chippewa is as red as wine, and a crimson streak may be seen for some distance below its mouth. This color I attribute to deposits of iron-ore through which the channel on the river runs. On reaching the mills, (there being three of them,) I entered upon my duties as a lumberman. The mills were situated on the Menomonee River, in a tract of neutral ground between the Chippewa and Sioux These two tribes were constantly warring against each other, and I had Indians. frequent opportunities to see war parties of both tribes. There were some Chippewas living near the mills, who sold game, maple sugar, wild fruits and such like articles to the mill hands.

On one occasion the hands had gone to work, and left their cabin locked up, when a number of Chippewas came in their absence, crept through a window, stole the blankets from the beds, pork from the barrel, filled their blankets with flour and started away with all their plunder. Fortunately, the mill hands discovered their loss early. They pursued the Indians, overtook them, gave them a good whipping, and took away everything that had been stolen. It was with such incidents as these, that we relieved the monotony of life in the pinery. "One day my wife was alone in our cabin, when an old Chippewa who had often visited us, came in with some maple sugar. My wife took the sugar, and in return gave him some pork and flour, at the same time telling him she thought there were Sioux Indians near, for that day she smelled kinnikinnick.smoke in the woods. The Chippewa soon left, and it seemed not more than a moment after that the house was filled with a war party of Sioux. The chief asked if there were any Chippewas there, and she answered that she had not seen any. The Sioux said they had tracked one to the cabin, and taking some of the sugar the Indian had brought, called it "Chippewa's sugar," and said they would eat the sugar, and cut the Chippewa's throat when they caught him. The war party ate all the food they could get, and then filed out; but they didn't catch the old Indian, for he managed to escape, and afterwards brought game to our house.

"There is something mysterious in the appearance of a war party. I have seen several, and they glided along like a serpent, with noiseless, even motion; and had I not been looking at them, I should not have known that they were passing within thirty feet of me. Once a raft broke to pieces, and I went with the men to recover the lumber. While engaged in collecting it, we had to pass over a ridge frequently during the day, and at night when we were going over on our way back to the mills, we heard a laugh close by our side. We looked around for the cause, but not finding it, we were about to move on, when the laugh was repeated, and we were surprised to see what we had taken for a pine stump, assume the form of a Chippewa scout. It appears he had been hid there all day, watching for Sioux, and we had passed within arms' reach several times, without seeing him.

"I remained two years in the pineries and could have made money, had I accepted the offer made me if I would remain longer; but I desired to return to Prairie du Chien."

One feels the loss of specific statements by Fonda as to the location of the Wilson Creek dam and mill; of the work and living shanties used, and where located; of the specific localities where logs were cut; the manner in which when cut they were transported to the mill and the method by which they were there sawed; as well as the place where and the manner of the rafting of the lumber. How the lumber was run out of Gilbert Creek; the number of men in each crew at the different mills; the way in which the people lived; whether in one mess or in several messes; how many women were then here; what if any food was raised about the mills for the people; and the names of some of the men and women he met during his two years stay in the "Pineries." The nearest Fonda comes to the mention of names in his narrative is to be found in the use of pronouns and impersonal designations, as "I", "my wife", "my family", "the mill hands", "the Sioux" and the "Chippewas." Besides the general statements herein before given there is but little touching the life generally of the people at the mill.

The mill on Irvine Creek was probably built about 1835 by Hiram S. Allen, afterward a pioneer of Chippewa Falls, where he spent the remainder of his life. Allen came to the Red Cedar Valley from Galena in 1834, and started getting out logs and square timber. He found however, that lacking booms in which to secure logs near the mouth of Chippewa, he must saw his logs into lumber if he was to be successful in his venture. Accordingly in 1835 he bought the Gilbert Creek mill and probably acquired an interest in Wilson Creek mill. This part ownership is indicated by a deed dated January 8, 1841, conveying the Wilson Creek mill from James H. Lockwood and Hiram S. Allen to James Green. Allen was married in 1838 to Mary De Marie, a daughter of Louis De Marie, who lived at French Town opposite Chippewa Falls. The romance started when the young lady accompanied her father from Chippewa Falls to the Allen camp in the Red Cedar country for The Irvine Creek (Randall calls it Spring Creek) mill was sold in 1841 to supplies. Stephen S. McCann. Among his employees were Simon and George W. Randall, who afterward, with himself and Jeremiah C. Thomas formed in 1846 the Eau The Irvine Creek mill was burned Claire firm of McCann, Randall and Thomas. in 1843, the loss falling on Allen, the original owner.

The mill was rebuilt by Bois Hurd. From the fall of 1847 to June, 1849, Andrew

Tainter was his partner there getting out shingles. Mr. Tainter sold to Lorenzo Bullard, who became Hurd's partner. The United States survey of 1849 says of this point on Irvine Creek: "Creek 25 links wide. Hurd's mill on this creek is a small fixen one saw, and very little timber around."

An entry in the books of Black & Knapp under date of September 1, 1847, shows a charge against Hurd & Tainter, "To repairing stirup for mill, $2.50." In November same year, "To boating goods to mill, $36," and the account continues to June 16, 1849. These books show that on June 26, 1849, an account was opened with Hurd & Bullard, the item on that day being, "To mending mill stirrup, $1.00." It is a singular coincidence that these two accounts should be opened with an item of the same nature, repairing for mill, and presumably the Irvine Creek mill in both instances. This inference is strengthened by the fact that a note of Bullard's was turned in by Tainter to Knapp & Tainter for $311 on Tainter's purchase of a partnership interest in the Wilson Creek mill from John H. Knapp in 1850.

The Gilbert Creek mill, erected by James H. Lockwood in 1831 was sold in 1835 to Hiram S. Allen. In 1842, G. S. Branham became his partner. In 1846 they sold to Samuel Gilbert, Sr., from whom the creek takes its name. From the fall of 1846 to the summer of 1847, Andrew Tainter was associated with Mr. Gilbert in getting out lath at the mill. In the minutes of the United States survey made in 1849 is this legend, "Came to corner of a house near which 5 others belonging to Samuel Gilbert and son and occupied by their families and workmen. Breast of mill dam, 15 feet high; fifty links south is a sawmill running one upright and two circular saws."

A mill was built on the Eau Galle, the present site of Eau Galle village, in 1838-39. It was erected by Captain George Wales with Thomas Savage as a partner. The millwright was Captain Dix. Captain Wales was a brilliant young West Point graduate, who appears to have acquired extravagant habits while in frontier army posts. He was in charge of the Lockwood operations at Wilson and Gilbert Creeks for a while, and upon leaving that employ, started for himself on the Eau Galle. Captain Dix had also probably been employed at the Lockwood mills. The Eau Galle mill was put in operation in 1839. In 1839, not long after the completion of the mill, William Carson, a Canadian, and Henry Eaton, a down-east Yankee, appeared. Claiming that the mill company had no exclusive rights in the forest, they commenced getting out square timbers and shingles, the former by hewing and the latter by riving and breasting, forming the timber into rafts upon which the shingles were loaded for transportation. This proved annoying to the owners of the Eau Galle mill, for it not only took much of the most convenient and valuable timber but also obstructed the navigation of their little river for their cribs of lumber. Dix and Savage, therefore, decided to sell an interest in the mill to the intruders, and thus maintain the monopoly which they had established and prevent the monopoly which they feared. The partnership about this time and for some time thereafter was known as William Carson & Co.

Not long after this, Savage and Dix withdrew and the partnership of Carson, Eaton and Wales continued the business, Wales being the financial man of the concern. Wisconsin was at this time a territory, and the Chippewa and Red Cedar Valleys little more than unexplored wilderness. Mr. Carson was optomistic as to the future which would bring great numbers of people to so heavily timbered a region. The mill owned by Carson, Eaton and Wales was a large one for that time, having a cutting capacity of 10,000 feet per day with two upright saws of the gate variety, the only kind known to the times.

Captain Wales, as noted, was the financial and also the sales agent of the firm. In his visits to St. Louis and other Mississippi points which this work involved, he found his expenses more than his income, and in 1844 he sold out to his partners.

The partnership of Carson and Eaton was continued for some years. In 1852 an interest was sold to Eldridge D. Rand, a prominent lumberman of Burlington, Iowa. Later Mr. Eaton retired and the firm became Carson and Rand. The mill was destroyed by fire in 1860 but was immediately rebuilt. The Eau Galle operations of the firm continued with many enlargements and improvements to the mill until 1874 when through the scarcity of timber on the Eau Galle, the further operation of the mill was not thought profitable and operations were discontinued. The firm however, continued to operate a flour mill in connection with the mercantile business they had established. In 1874, Mr. Carson removed to Eau Claire where he died in January, 1898.

Samuel Lamb, a veteran of the Black Hawk war, came to the Red Cedar country in 1834 and settled at what afterward became known as Lamb Creek Falls. Lamb's wife was Susan Margaret De Marie, a daughter of Louis De Marie, a pioneer of Frenchtown, opposite Chippewa Falls. Arthur McCann and Hiram S. Allen also married daughters of this sturdy French Canadian. In 1835, Lamb and his wife settled at Cedar Falls, above what is now Menomonie, and their first child, Charlotte, was born there in 1838.

Shortly afterward Lamb built a house near the junction of the Red Cedar and the Chippewa, and opened a saloon. It became a noted resort for the lumbermen and hunters who roamed the region. The Lamb settlement later came to be called Dunnville.

The second child of Mr. and Mrs. Lamb was born at Dunnville in 1840. This child, Henry, is still living at Brookville, St. Croix County, this state. Lamb was a carpenter and millwright. He not only built several houses at Dunnville, but also worked on some of the mills elsewhere in the valley. In 1841 he sold out to his brother-in-low, Arthur McCann, and moved to Brookville, St. Croix County. There he met his death by falling from a mill which he was building. Arthur, Stephens and Dan McCann had come to the valley in 1840, the year previous. They were natives of Marietta, Ohio. Arthur McCann was murdered by a man named Sawyer in 1843. His wife returned to her parents and afterward married George P. Warren, first county clerk of Chippewa County. Philo Stone took possession of the tavern. Philo and Roswell Stone, brothers, had come from Vermont in 1838 and engaged in hunting and fur trading in this region. Amos Colburn was another early settler, and the settlement was for a while called Colburn's. He erected a frame building and used it as a tavern. In 1843 John Macauley settled nearby.

Dunnville was tentatively designated the county seat of Chippewa County in 1845 and was made the county seat of Dunn County in 1854. The temporary county building was burned in 1858, and on January 1, 1861, the county seat was removed to Menomonie.

The murder of Arthur McCann is vividly recounted by Randall. He states that McCann had formed a partnership with J. C. Thomas, who proceeded to build a mill then known as the "Blue Mill" midway between the present cities of Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire. McCann continued to live at Dunnville. They had employed on the work for some time, a man by the name of Sawyer, who when his time was up, went down to McCann's for a settlement, after which McCann proposed cards, at the same time treating freely.

The game went on until evening, when some dispute arose the later threw a scale-weight at the former, whereupon he repaired to the cabin of Philo Stone, near by, carefully loaded his rifle, went back to the door of McCann's house and called him; on his appearance at the door Sawyer took deliberate aim, and McCann fell dead on his own door-step, the victim of a drunken brawl. Sawyer made his way up the river to Eau Claire, and thence to the Falls of Chippewa, where his pursuers lost track of him, since when he has never been heard of, although a large reward was offered for his apprehension by McCann's friends.

In the spring of 1846 John H. Knapp, with William Wilson as silent partner, purchased the Wilson Creek dam and mill from David Black, followed by a conveyance there of June 10, 1846. From that time authentic records are in existence, and the settlements which sprang up about the various mills and camps may be treated as separate entities.

In considering the history of Dunn County from this point it is well to bear in mind that before that year mills had been erected on Wilson Creek, Gilbert Creek,

CHAPTER III

THE JEFFERSON DAVIS MYTH

The story that Jefferson Davis, afterward president of the Southern Confederacy, was at Menomonie in the early thirties is one that has found much favor with those who later delighted in telling of pioneer operations on the Red Cedar. The story was repeated from mouth to mouth, and has been published in many books, including histories of the Chippewa Valley and its counties. Attorney Charles E. Freeman, of Menomonie, has made a close study of the subject, which has attracted wide attention among historians, and is here reproduced to correct an error which has been wide spread. In his article, Mr. Freeman says:

"While the second Fort Crawford at Prairie du Chien was being built was Jefferson Davis at the site of the present city of Menomonie? Was he an officer of the United States army, in charge, during that time of a force of men engaged in the cutting of pine timber on the Red Cedar River?

The Red Cedar, or Menomonie, empties into the Chippewa River from the north, at a point about 30 miles from the mouth of that river. The location of the city of Menomonie is on this river about 18 miles from its junction with the Chippewa. The first Fort Crawford was established in the year 1816, and the second fort of that name was constructed during the years 1829 to 1832. Davis was in the army from July 1, 1828 until some time in August, 1835. Timber was cut on the Red Cedar by direction of the commander of Fort Crawford during the time of its construction, and while Davis was in the army. The army records show that Davis was at three different times from 1828 to 1832 assigned to duty at Fort Crawford.

It was customary at that early day for privates in the army, at the end of their term of enlistment to remain on the frontier and engage in such work as they could find to do. Among the privates at Fort Crawford who followed this custom were Elisha Brown, Joseph Benson, Mr. Decker and Mr. Lemon. They came after service in the army to the Red Cedar country and worked in the lumber camps. It appears from the account books of the firm of Black and Knapp that Benson and Brown were here as early as 1846, the former in June and the latter in September of that year. Benson opened his account with the purchase of "2 plugs of tobacco, $1.50" and Brown with "1 pair of Pantaloons, $4.50." It is probable from statements of early residents of Menomonie as to their impressions, that these two men had been here for some time previous to 1848, working for former owners of the Wilson Creek mill to which the account book's mention pertain.

Upon the statements of Brown, Benson, Decker and Lemon as remembered by those to whom they ever made, rests the local tradition, perpetuated in widely circulated printed accounts, that Davis was on the Red Cedar in person, that he was in charge of a force of United States soldiers, and was engaged in the cutting of lumber with which to build Fort Crawford. Like all other traditions there is in this an uncertainty as regards time and place. It may have been at any time from 1828 to 1832 or even earlier. As pine grew in abundance on the west side of the Red Cedar River, the place of Davis' supposed operations is referred to as being on the west bank, anywhere from the mouth of the river to the present site of Menomonie.

It is a noticeable fact in trying to trace down these traditions that some of these men were not free and explicit at any time in regard to their adventures in the service of the government, and were extremely reticent in the early years in regard to their army experiences. Benson continued to live in Menomonie during the remainder of his life. He died in this county and is buried in Evergreen Cemetery. Brown lived in Menomonie for a number of years and then moved away, but frequently returned to visit with relatives. Decker and Lemon lived many years in this county. It is believed that these men originated the tradition of Jefferson Davis and the Red Cedar, and the facts and circumstances that can be marshalled, which by inference only, go to support it.

It is to be regretted that no definite and specific statement, made by any of these four men, can be given in support of the story that Davis was on the Menomonie and cut timber from its banks. Local writers on early times in Wisconsin have followed this traditionary story regarding Davis, and in some instances have cited Brown's supposed statements as authority. Reviewers of the ante-war service of Davis and one of the biographers, also, seem to have adopted these local statements made by the narrators of early events.

In a little book written by Thomas E. Randall, of Eau Claire, entitled "The History of the Chippewa Valley" on page 11, he, after referring to the establishment of the mills of Lockwood on Wilson and Gilbert Creeks, tributaries of the Red Cedar River, says: "It is to these mills that young Lieutenant Jefferson Davis is said to have been despatched for lumber to rebuild Fort Crawford. An amusing incident is related by several of the old soldiers who were with Davis and some officers on one of these trips for lumber. The order had been filled at the mill (Lockwood's), the lumber rafted down the Red Cedar in strings to the Chippewa, all safely coupled up, and an old voyageur shipped as pilot. The officers and all leaped on board, and all went well until they neared the head of Beef Slough. "To de right, hard," said the old Frenchman. "What's that, you villain?" cried the West Pointer, "You're going to run this raft right to hell. I tell you to pull to the left where the main river is." It was done and the lumber lost in Beef Slough, as the channel was effectually blocked with drift wood.

In the "History of Northern Wisconsin," a large quarto volume, published by "The Western Historical Company, in 1881, at Chicago, mention is made of the early cutting of timber on the Red Cedar River for Fort Crawford, and of the probable connection of Davis with such cutting, and it is stated; "The story as told by the old settlers is, that this was the redoubtable Jeff Davis, which is probably true, as Davis was located at the fort." This is on page 274.

In a "History of the Chippewa Valley," also a quarto volume, published at Chicago, in 1891, reference is made to the story of Davis' being on the Red Cedar River and especial mention is made of the story as given by Elisha Brown. On page 141, we find it stated that Jeff Davis "went in 1830 with about thirty men, Brown being one of the number, up the Chippewa River to fell timber and make it into rafts."

A comparison of the general trend of the traditions as to the time when, the place where, and the purpose for which, Davis was hereabouts, with well authenticated statements of traders and residents on and along the Fox-Wisconsin route from Green Bay to Prairie du Chien; with records concerning the army; and with Davis' own statements, seems to lead to the conclusion that there is no trust-worthy basis for this traditional story and that as a matter of fact Davis was never in charge of the cutting of timber on this river for Fort Crawford and was never here in person.

The tradition or traditions are associated with many personal incidents, such as the great peril of Davis while here from hostile Indians; his mistake in running a raft into Beef Slough, and his elopement with General Taylor's daughter. The peril and the mistake of others, and the elopement, it is believed, is aside from the questions under discussion.

Brown is cited as authority, by the Editor of "History of the Chippewa Valley" for the story that Davis ran a raft into Beef Slough, and is credited with being one of the soldiers who manned Gen. Taylor's boat when, it is said, he pursued Davis and his eloping daughter.

In a book of some wider circulation than the local works referred to, "Dodd's Jefferson Davis," the various versions of Davis' expedition to this river have become crystallized in this form: "Davis was stationed at Fort Crawford in 1828 and 1829 and in the early months of 1829 was detailed to superintend the cutting of timber on the banks of the Red Cedar River, a tributary of the Chippewa. The party camped near the present site of the town of Menomonie. Owning to the proximity of unfriendly Indians, it was necessary to fortify the camp and maintain guards or small out posts." Then follows an account of Davis' becoming isolated from camp and of his having to hide in the underbrush to escape being scalped by the Indians. No authority is given for these statements, either as to Davis' being here or as to the incidents detailed. In the memoirs of Davis by his wife, on page 59 it is stated: "While stationed at Fort Crawford in 1829 he commanded a detachment for cutting timber to repair and enlarge the fort." While, on page 65, it is stated: "In the autumn of 1829, Lieut. Davis was ordered down to Ft. Winnebago where he remained until 1831." Attention is especially called to these statements of Mrs. Davis, as they indicate that Davis, if on this river in 1829, must have been here before the autumn of that year, and as Dodd states, in the early months of 1829.

Coupled with the first statement is this: "The requisite timber for the repairs he found among the hackmatak, (tamarack), cedars and other varieties of timber that grow near the Menomonie or Red Cedar River." Again, "Lieut. Davis was camped ten miles from the mouth of the Chippewa, the first stream that empties into that river." As this stands, it is a meaningless description. If we eliminate some of the data as worthless, the location would seem to have been ten miles up the Menomonie or at the site of Varney Creek. This is where some of the traditionary statements place him. At this place, however, he certainly cut no cedars and probably no tamarack.

Then is given in these Memoirs an account of the running of the timber cut, similar in detail to that given by tradition. It is said, "When the timber was rafted oxen and outfit were placed upon it, but the swift stream sucked it into a side current of the Chippewa River. The raft was broken up, several of the oxen drowned, and the whole work had to be done over again." "In consequence of this accident it was called Beef Slough, and it is so named to this day." It certainly did not need this incident to name this slough as the whole river over a century before had been known as Beef River from the numbers of buffalo that roamed its adjacent meadows. So the name cannot be brought forward as proof of the incident and then the incident being thus established taken as proof of the fact of Davis' visit here. The account closes with this statement: "Four miles from where Lieut. Davis logged in the wildernesses is Menomonie, a city of 7,000 inhabitants." For authority, Mrs. Davis cites some western historian whose name, she says, was not communicated to her.

These traditions, and the statements, presumably based upon them. do not seem to have any direct confirmation either from history or from personal statement of Davis himself. The fact that for a brief time in 1829, for a longer time in 1831-32 and for a short time in 1832-33, Davis was stationed at Fort Crawford, coupled with that statement in a letter written by Davis, that he was at one time put in charge of the cutting of timber for Fort Crawford, would perhaps, at first blush, tend to corroborate the traditions and statements mentioned. But a careful consideration of these supposable confirmatory proofs in connection with records of Davis' employment during the years mentioned, and with recorded statements of the employment of others in the building of this fort during the years of its construction, comes near positive disproof of the facts claimed as to Davis' sojourn on and his command of a force working on this river.

As showing the improbability of such local visit and temporary employment of Davis, the following facts and arguments are presented. The Army Register for 1828 shows Jefferson Davis to have been graduated from West Point Military Academy in that year and to have been commissioned July 1, 1828, second lieutenant of the First Infantry.

In Cullum's Officers and Graduates of that Academy, vol. 1 p. 333, is this brief army assignment of Davis. "Served: on frontier duty at Ft. Crawford, Wis., 1829; Ft. Winnebago, Wis., 1829-31; Yellow River, superintendent saw-mill, 1831; Ft. Crawford, Wis., 1831; Dubuque mines, Ia., 1832; Jefferson Barracks, Mo., 1832; and Ft. Crawford, Wis., 1832-33."

After Jefferson Davis had been chosen president of the Southern Confederacy, the taunt by the aristocratic Southerners that Lincoln had been a rail splitter was met by the retort that Davis had been a "lumber jack." Davis' friends wished to clear up the matter so far as he was concerned, and he finally wrote a letter to his friend Gen. George W. Jones, then of Dubuque, Iowa, dated January 5, 1872. A newspaper copy is in the library of the Wisconsin History Society marked F834-3D. F. I.

This letter reads in part as follows: "In 1829, I went to Fort Winnebago, then a stockade, and was put in charge of the working parties to obtain material for the construction block houses, barracks, and stores. Gen. (then captain) W. S. Harney was sent with his company to the maple, ash, and oak forest on the Baraboo River; both parties used the whip saw, and being among wild Indians were, doubtless, objects of wonder. When the timber procured on the Wisconsin was brought down to the portage of the Wisconsin and Fox rivers, the former wasso full that its waters flowed over its banks and ran in a broad sheet into the Fox River. Taking advan-tage of the fact, we made rafts suited to the depth of the water and floated the lumber across to the site of the fort on the east bank of the Fox River." Again, referring to the year 1831, he writes: "Was ordered to Prairie du Chien and subsequently was sent up the Yellow River, where we (the government) had a sawmill, to cut lumber for Fort Crawford. Pine logs were obtained on the Chippewa and rafted to the mill on Yellow River, oak logs were cut around the mill and the lumber of both kinds rafted and floated to the landing at Prairie du Chien." He than adds: "To this extent was I a 'lumberman' in Wisconsin, being then in the United States Army.¹

The Yellow River mentioned by Davis, is a stream flowing into the Mississippi River from the west, in the state of Iowa, about two miles above Prairie du Chien. (see Wis. Hist. Colls. vol. 2 p. 156 and vol. 5 p. 126, note). This river was a well known place as early as 1766. Jonothan Carver in an account of his travels of that year says that, on leaving Prairie du Chien and proceeding up the Mississippi, "A little farther to the west, on the contrary side; a small river falls into the Missisippi, which the French call Le Jaun Riviere, or the Yellow River. Here the traders who had accompanied me hitherto took up their residence for the winter." Carver's Travels p. 42.

In the Memoirs of Davis by his wife on pages 80, and 81 it is stated; "In 1831 while Fort Crawford was still in the process of construction Lieut. Davis was ordered up Yellow River to superintend the building of a sawmill." "The weather was intensely cold and he was often wet to the skin for hours." "The exposure brought on pneumonia, and he lay for many months at this isolated place, directing as best he could, the operations of his men from his bed." It will be noted that Davis' himself says, that he was ordered to a mill already built. As to the other statements of Mirs. Davis, it must be said that it is very singular that Davis should have been left sick at this place for so long a time when medical aid was within two miles.

If the weather was intensely cold the inter must have been frozen over and he could have been taken to the fort. Or, if too sick to be moved, it is singular that some other officer was not put in command. It may have been such improbabilities that induced Hon. A. J. Turner, in his account of Fort Winneabago and Portage, in 14 Wis. Hist. Colls., to transfer this Yellow River episode, sawmill and all, bodily, to Yellow River, a tributary of the Wisconsin River, and to picture Davis successfully running a raft through the Dells of the Wisconsin, instead of unsuccessfully into Beef Slough off the Chippewa. And for a similar reason Dood in his "Jefferson Davis" may have thought it proper to locate this Yellow River, as he says; above Chippewa Falls, some three hundred miles from Fort Crawford."

Davis' statement and the army records show that Harney ranked Davis, so it is evident that he did not have charge of the Upper Wisconsin expedition of Harney in 1829, so probably Davis was not at Yellow River on the Wisconsin or if Yellow River above Chippewa Falls be taken as the site of the sawmill, then, it is evident, logs from the Menomonie were not sawed there.

In pursuing this subject it is well in connection with Davis' letter and the Memoirs to note the statement of Saterlee Clark an early resident of Wisconsin, published in vol. 8 Wis. Hist. Colls., pp. 309 and 310, as to the whereabouts of Davis from 1828 to 1831. He says: "The same season, 1828, the first infantry was ordered to the Portage to build a fort, to be called Fort Winnebago." Again, "Of the officers stationed at Fort Winnebago from 1828 till the 5th of July, 1831, only two survive, to-wit: General William Harney and Lieut. Jeff Davis. Harney at that time was a captain, and Davis his subaltern."

It should be remembered that the Army Register before cited shows the First Infantry to be Davis' regiment.

This statement of Clark is supplemented by Morgan L. Martin in a narrative published in 11 Wis. Hist. Colls., where he states that in the autumn of 1828, he met Maj. Twiggs and Lieut. Davis with three companies of soldiers going to establish a garrison at Ft. Winnebago. Morgan met them on the Fox River and they were going to the Portage of the Wisconsin.

Although Davis does not mention being at Ft. Winnebago in the fall of 1828, but says that he went there in 1829, these statements of Clark and Martin show him to have been there in 1828. Confirming this is a report of Maj. Twiggs of the First Infantry, dated at Ft. Winnebago, September 30, 1828, in which he says that he had that day arrived with his command and selected a site for temporary barracks. Again in December, 1828 he reports progress in getting up the temporary barracks and states that the timber has been and is being procured in the vicinity not more than 9 to 11 miles away. These reports are given in 14 Wis. Hist. Colls. pp. 73, and 74.

It will be noted that in his letter, Davis in connection with this statement that he went to Ft. Winnebago in 1828, says; "than a stockade." This shows a prior occupancy, that of the year before, according to Clark, Morgan and Maj. Twiggs, and Davis there.

The report of the secretary of war for 1828 with an accompanying report of the engineer in charge, shows that old Fort Crawford was not to be kept up, and that it was recommended that a fort be established on a bluff opposite Prairie du Chien, on the west bank of the Mississippi River. Detailed plans for the proposed fort were submitted with the report. This report is dated, December, 1828.

The county records of Crawford County, book "A" in the office of the register of deeds, page 84 and other pages, show that the United States did not purchase the site of the second Fort Crawford until in May, 1828.

John H. Fonda, an early resident of Prairie du Chien, in reminiscences published in Vol. 5, Wisconsin Historical Collections, says that he enlisted in the United States army in April, 1829, at Fort Crawford, then in command of Col. Zachary Taylor; that in that year the second Fort Crawford was commenced; that he was sent by Taylor to show a force of men where to get timber with which to build the fort; that he took them up the Wisconsin River to where Galena was afterward built, and that timber was there cut and rafted down the Wisconsin River; that in the fall of 1829, Taylor ordered a force of seventy men under the command of Lieutenant Gale, having under him, Lieutenant Gardenier and Sergeant Melvin "to proceed to the pineries of the Menomonie River, there to cut logs, hew square timber, and make planks and shingles to be used in the construction of the fort and its defense. Fonda was sent on this expedition as general utility man. He gives a very circumstantial account of the expedition, in its going to Menomonie, its operations there during the winter of 1829-30, and of its return to Prairie du Chien in the spring of 1830.

Some things stated by him are very noticable, when read in connection with the traditions and accounts given by others of Jefferson Davis' operations on this river. The commander, Gale, in fear of a Chippewa war party left his temporary encampment and to save his scalp, as he supposed, went in hiding in the Chippewa bottoms, and nearly perished there from cold and want of food. Fonda further states that Sergeant Melvin later built stockades and placed guards to protect his men from the savages and that Lieutenant Gardenier recklessly or carelessly ran the raft under his command into Beef Slough where it was lost among the wreckage with which the slough was filled. Fonda's account is "I cried to Gardenier to either make fast above me or pull for the point opposite the slough. He heard me and tried to make the opposite shore, but owing to the strong current or some mismanagement, the raft was wrecked in the slough."

It is possible that Mrs. Davis' "Western Historian" appropriated this account of Lieutenant Gardenier's mishap in the spring of 1830 to his own purpose and applied it to Lieutenant Davis in the spring of 1832. It does not seem possible that army officers would have allowed this "sucking in" of a raft into Beef Slough to have occurred twice within two years.

Fonda's account would indicate that the early camp and operations of which he speaks were near the mouth of the Menomonie, probably near the site of the present village of Dunnville.

It is a singular fact that in the telling by Brown and Fonda of this matter of the running of the raft into Beef Slough there is a similar personal incident related by each. Brown is reported as saying that Davis told him "to tell General Taylor that the logs could be hauled across the country, but this he refused to do." Fonda says: "Gardenier promised me something handsome if I would not give the particulars in my report as to how the raft was lost."

It is possible that Brown, Benson, Decker and Lemon were with the expedition of 1829-30. If so, it is probable that in after years their recollections of the names of officers in charge was a trifle hazy. Davis' name became prominent in connection with the Civil war, and the fact of his presence at Fort Crawford in an early day became a matter of public talk. Under these circumstances it would be natural for these men to come to the conclusion that their employment on this river had been under Davis.

Prof. Butler, in an article in Vol. 10, Wisconsin Historical Collections, page 75, states that Davis at one time wrote to him that he, in 1829, while on detached duty from Fort Winnebago, visited the site of Madison, and claimed to have been the first white man there. This tends to show that any assignment which Davis may have had at Fort Crawford in 1829 must have been temporary.

In a note in Vol. 12, Wisconsin Historical Collections, page 234, it is stated that Davis was absent from Fort Crawford during January and February, 1832, and on furlough from March 26 to August 18, 1832, and was sent to St. Louis, with Black Hawk in August or September, 1832, If on furlough, as stated, it is not probable that he ran lumber by raft out of the Menomonie into the Chippewa and thence into Beef Slough in the spring of 1832.

Conceding that Davis was at Fort Crawford in 1828, he could not have been there until after the date of his commission, July 1; the statements of Clark and Martin place him at Ft. Winnebago in September of that year. The report of the secretary of war for 1828 shows that the site of the new Fort Crawford had not been established as late as December of that year and would indicate that no considerable rebuilding or repairs of the old fort were under way. The narrative of Fonda states that work on the new fort was not commenced until after April, 1829, and the records of Crawford County showing transfer of the site of the new fort to the United States in May, 1829, corroborates his statement in this regard.

It is evident, therefore, that Davis did not get out timber on the Red Cedar River for Fort Crawford before the summer of 1829.

According to Davis' letter to Gen. Jones, he did not go to Fort Crawford until 1831. The Memoirs state that he did not go there until that year. Clark states that Davis was at Fort Winnebago until July 5, 1831. Davis' letter to Prof. Butler shows he was at Fort Winnebago in 1829 or on detached duty from there.

It is quite certain, therefore, that Davis did not in 1829, 1830 nor up until July 5, 1831, get out timber on this river for Fort Crawford.

An examination of the unpublished reports of commanders and subaltern officers at Forts Crawford and Winnebago, during the years 1828 to 1832, inclusive, might throw new light on this question of Davis' employment during that period of time.

It is stated in the History of Crawford County page 337, that in the year 1831, the garrison was removed from the old fort to the new fort on the prairie. This would indicate that the fort was built but not finished. Naturally then it would be lumber that was now required for finishing. And Davis in his letter distinctly says, that he was sent to a government mill on Yellow River to cut lumber, and tells from where the pine logs were obtained, that is, on the Chippewa. If he had gone personally to get the pine logs he would have said on the Menomonie, for as a matter of fact if any were obtained they were taken from there. At no time has there been pine on the Chippewa below the falls of that river, a distance of fully fifty miles farther away than the location of pine on the Menomonie.

Here again, basing a conclusion on what Davis himself states to have been his employment and the place of his work; on the fact that the fort had been so far completed that the garrison had moved in, warranting the inference that it was lumber for finishing and not timber for construction that was needed and that Davis supplied; together with the fact that he could have been employed in getting out lumber for only a short time in 1831-32, judging from the record of his frequent absences, furlough, and the period of his sickness at Yellow River narrated in the Memoirs, it is evident that Davis was not on this river in 1831-32 getting out timber for Fort Crawford.

There seems to be no claim that Davis was here at a later date than 1831-32 nor are there any circumstances warranting such a claim, and in his letter of January 5, 1872, he states that his work on Yellow River in 1831 closed his service as lumberman in Wisconsin.

A summarization of these separate conclusions into one final judgment can result in no other determination than that Jefferson Davis was at no time in charge of a force of men cutting logs on theRed Cedar River, and that probably he never was at the present site of Menomonie, nor on the Red Cedar River.

CHAPTER IV

JURISDICTION AND COUNTY BOUNDARIES

Jurisdiction over Dunn County has been claimed by four nations, Spain, France, England and the United States; the French and English colonial authorities; the territorial officials of the Northwest Territory, and of the Territories of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin; and the officers of the counties of Crawford, St. Croix and Chippewa.

Spain, by virtue of the discoveries of Columbus and others, confirmed to her by papal grant (that of Pope Alexander VI, May 4, 1493) may be said to have been the first European owner of the entire valley of the Mississippi River, but she never used this claim as a ground for taking actual possession of this part of her domains other than was incidentally involved in De Soto's doings. The name of Florida was first applied to the greater part of the eastern half of North America, commenc--ing at the Gulf of Mexico, and extending northward indefinitely.

England, basing her claims on the explorations made by her subjects along the Atlantic coast, issued to various individuals and "companies", charters to vast tracts of land extending from the Atlantic westward. Practically, however, the upper Mississippi valley may be considered as having been in the first place, Canadian soil, for it was Frenchmen from Canada who first visited it, and traded with its natives. The names of Canada and New France were used interchangeably to apply to the vast French possessions of the American continent. The name Louisiana was invented by La Salle and applied by him to the entire Mississippi valley. But, generally speaking, the Canada or New France of the Eighteenth century took in the upper Mississippi valley, while the name Louisiana was used only for the lower valley.

At the close of the great European conflict which found its echo in the so-called French and Indian War in America, the area that is now Wisconsin, became by the Treaty of Paris, signed Febuary 10, 1763 (a preliminary treaty having been signed at Fontainebleau, November 3, 1762), a part of the British empire.

The success of the American Revolution resulting in the Treaty of Paris, September 3, 1783, revived the claims of the coast states, but finally these claims were ceded to the Federal Government, in order to form new States and Territories.

After the land was acquired by the Federal authority, many plans were proposed for its government, Thomas Jefferson suggested that the territory be divided into ten States, of which the State of Michigan was to include the present Dunn County.

The Northwest Territory was erected by the Congress of the Confederation (the Constitution of the United States not being adopted until Sept. 17, 1787) through the "Northwest Ordinance", passed July 13, 1787. Eventually there were formed from the Northwest Territory, in addition to Ohio, the Territories of Indiana (May 7, 1800), Michigan (Jan. 11, 1805), Illinois (Feb. 3, 1809), and Wisconsin (April 29, 1836).

Wisconsin was a part of the Northwest Territory from July 13, 1787, to May 11, 1800; of Indiana Territory from May 7, 1800, to Feb. 3, 1809; of Illinois Territory from Feb. 3, 1809, to April 18, 1818; and of Michigan Territory from April 18, 1818, to April 29, 1836, when the Territory of Wisconsin was created.

Crawford County, erected by proclamation of Lewis Cass, governor of Michigan Territory, October 26, 1818, included what is now Dunn County. When the Territory of Wisconsin was organized, April 29, 1836, Crawford County, Wisconsin, also included in its vast area the present limits of Dunn County.

St. Croix County was created Jan. 9, 1840 under No. 12, Laws of Wisconsin Territory, 1839-40. This county embraced all the territory north and west of a line beginning at the mouth of Porcupine River, on Lake Pepin, thence up said river to its first forks, thence to the Meadow fork of Red Cedar River, thence up that river to Long Lake, etc. Thus all that part of the present Dunn County, north of Wilson Creek and west of the Menomonie River was placed in St. Croix County, and the rest remained in Crawford County. St. Croix County elected officers on the first Monday in August and selected what is now Stillwater in the state of Minnesota as the county seat. The early settlers in what is now Dunn County, north of Wilson Creek were in St. Croix County, but it is doubtful whether the jurisdiction was ever more than in name only.

Chippewa County was created in 1845, by an act of the territorial legislature approved February 3. It embraced all the area west of Portage County, north of Crawford County, east of the Mississippi and south of St. Croix County. This county included in its territory that part of the present Dunn County not already described as being in St. Croix County. An election of officers was set for the fourth Monday in November, 1845. At this election, commissioners were also to be named to create a county seat. Until such action was taken the county seat was to be located at the mouth of the Menomonie River, at or near its junction with the Chippewa River, at or near the residence of Samuel Lamb. This would place the county seat at Dunnville. The county was to remain attached to crawford for judicial purposes. While Chippewa County was thus created, no organization was perfected until some years later.

By a readjustment of the boundaries between St. Croix and Chippewa Counties on March 8, 1849, Chapter 77, Laws of 1849, all the present Dunn County was placed in Chippewa County.

Dunn County was set off from Chippewa County on Feb. 19, 1854 by Chapter 7, General Laws of 1854. It embraced all the present Dunn and Pepin Counties. The county was attached to Chippewa for judicial purposes. A general election was ordered to be held in November, 1854, for all proper county officers, not including clerk of the circuit court nor county judge. The officers were to take office on Jan. 1, 1855. The "seat of justice" was to be located at Amos Colburn's at or near the ferry across the Red Cedar River, near its mouth; in other words, at Dunnville.

By an act approved, March 31, 1856, it was ordered that Dunn County be fully organized on Jan. 1, 1857. It was placed in the eighth judicial district, and court was to be held in the county on the second Monday in June and the second Monday in December. A county judge was to be elected on the first Monday of September, 1856, and the county officers, in November, 1856. All were to take office on Jan. 1, 1857.

Pepin County was set off from Dunn County by Chapter 15, General Laws of 1858, thus leaving Dunn County with its present boundaries.

The county was named from Charles Dunn, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin Territory, appointed by President Andrew Jackson, in 1835. The legislative steps which led to the creation and organization of Dunn County are worthy of extended study.

The Journal of the Assembly shows that William M. Torbert, then representing the counties of La Pointe, St. Croix, Pierce and Polk in the assembly, presented to that body on January 21, 1854, a petition of William B. Newcomb and others for the organization of a new county; that the petition was immediately referred to the committee on town and county organization; that W. J. Gibson, member from La Crosse County was chairman of this committee; and that on January 16, five days before the petition of Newcomb was presented, Gibson had introduced a bill to attach a part of Chippewa County to Pierce and Buffalo counties, and that he on January 18, introduced a bill to attach a part of Chippewa County to Buffalo County; and, that on January 24, the committee of which Gibson was chairman acting on the petition of Mr. Newcomb reported a bill for the organization of Dunn County. This became known as Assembly Bill No. 71. On January 27, this bill was considered in committee of the whole and reported back without amendment. On January 28, it was reported as correctly engrossed, and on the same day read a third time and passed. The Senate Journal shows that this bill was, on January 30, reported to that body as having been passed by the Assembly; that on the thirty-first the Senate heard the bill read a third time and passed it.

Again, by the Assembly Journal it appears that on February 1, the bill was reported back from the Senate as passed, and that on February 2, it was reported by the Assembly enrollment committee as correctly enrolled.

The bill thus passed by both houses was approved by Governor William A. Barstow on the third day of February. 1854, and became "An Act to organize the County of Dunn," known as Chapter 7, laws of 1854, and was published February 19, 1854.

The area of the county is given in the bill as that now comprised in the present county of Dunn together with all of the territory of Pepin County as now constituted. The act provided for the election in November, 1854 of "the proper county offices for county government, (not including clerk of Circuit Court nor County Judge)." The officers elected were to enter upon their duties January 1, 1855. For judicial purposes the county was attached to the county of Chippewa. The county seat was designated as"located at Colburn's at or near the ferry across the Red Cedar River, near its mouth."

Mr. Gibson on January 19, seems to have paved the way for Mr. Newcomb's petition, for he on that day moved that his bill to attach a part of Chippewa County to Pierce and Buffalo counties be laid on the table. Mr. Gibson's other bill to attach a part of Chippewa County to Buffalo County became a law. It detached but a small part of one government township lying to the southeast of Dunn County.

The present generation may never know the log-rolling that brought all this about. But note the celerity of action. The petition was presented January 21, and on February 2, 13 days after, the act was signed and approved by the governor.

In 1856 Mr. Gibson, then a state senator, introduced in the Senate on March 14 a bill to organize the county of Dunn for judicial purposes. This bill took the usual parliamentary course through the Senate, was sent to the Assembly and returned to the Senate as passed by the Assembly, and from the Senate presented to the governor for his signature. The governor on March 31, 14 days from the introduction of the bill, signed and approved the act which became Chapter 91, Laws of 1856.

By this act the county became fully organized for judicial purposes from and after the first day of January, 1857, and was to constitute a part of the Eighth Judicial Circuit.

What is here given is but a brief abstract of the legislative procedure by which Dunn County became a political subdivision of the state. The present generations lack the historical setting; a knowledge of the social and political conditions that prompted the effort that inaugurated the legislative action.

Records state that William B. Newcomb and others petitioned the legislature to act. But, why did they petition, and who were the others who joined in the petition? The petition itself was doubtless cast aside as it cannot now be found in the state archives. It, of course, would if found show the names of the signers, and perhaps disclose the conditions then existing or the reasons then offered to show why the Legislature should dismember Chippewa County and out of the territory taken away establish the county of Dunn.

One suggestion made as a demand for the organization of this county is that the government of this part of the territory of Chippewa County was inefficient and weak, both as to civil and criminal matters. No records of the proceedings of the county board of Chippewa County, nor of the action of its officers prior to the time of the organization of Dunn County can be found; it is generally understood that no permanent record was ever made. This absence of records and failure to keep records lends weight to the suggestion of an inefficient and weak government.

It may have been that taxes were not equitably levied or that public moneys were not impartially expended; that roads were not judiciously laid or properly kept up; that political offices were not fairly distributed or that political patronage was not satisfactorily dispensed. In any event the county was duly created and organized, and was launched upon the career which was to make it one of the most prosperous communities in the whole sovereign state of Wisconsin.

CHAPTER V

COUNTY GOVERNMENT

When Dunn County was created in 1854, the act of the Legislature provided that a general election should be held in November, 1854, and that the officers thus elected should take office. Jan. 1, 1855.

A general election was held Nov. 7, 1854. The officers elected for Dunn County which then included Pepin County, were as follows: William Cady, clerk of the board of supervisors and register of deeds; Henry Eaton, county treasurer; Thomas B. Wilson, county surveyor; Alex Hamel, coroner; William Wilson, supervisor; Willard Holbrook, sheriff; Sheriah Stevens, superintendent of schools and justice of the peace; and Jacob Rowell, constable. These officers were certified to the secretary of state by the clerk of the board of supervisors of Chippewa County on Dec. 5, 1854.

By the provisions of law at that time applicable to a case where a new county was established having within its territory no organized town, the whole territory of the county was deemed to constitute a town and its inhabitants were authorized to elect town supervisors. These supervisors were by positive provision of the statute empowered to act as supervisors of the county. Tradition has it that the other two supervisors beside Mr. Wilson, elected in the fall of 1854, were J. McCain and William Carson. It is more probable, however, that they were elected town, and consequently county, supervisors in the spring of 1856.

It would appear that William Cady qualified as clerk of the board of supervisors, for late in 1855 he signed himself as clerk in filing with the secretary of state a list of officers elected in November of that year. This list is as follows: Samuel B. French, register of deeds; William Cady, clerk of the board of supervisors; Thales Burke, treasurer; L. G. Wood, surveyor; and Seriah Stevens, coroner.

That any county government which existed before 1856 was more or less vague and informal is indicated by the fact that despite its action of 1854, the Legislature in the spring of 1856, ordered a general election for November, 1856, and specified that the county officers elected then should take office or Jan. 1, 1857.

Apparently the three town supervisors, Thomas Wilson, J. McCain and William Carcon met on Aug. 11, 1856, as the county board of supervisors and created seven townships; Menomonie, Spring Brook, Eau Galle, Dunn, Rock Creek, Bear Creek and Pepin. The last two named were in what is now Pepin County.

A general election was held in November, 1856, and officers elected.

A town election was held in each of the seven towns on April 7, 1857. The seven chairmen elected constituted the the county board. They were: William Wilson, Menomonie; Carroll Lucas, Spring Brook; William Carson, Eau Galle; John Gardner, Dunn; Daniel Weston, Rock Creek; L. C. Wood, Bear Creek; M. M. Davis, Pepin.

All the early records of Dunn County were destroyed in the fire at Dunnville in 1858. There is considerable doubt as to the exact date of this fire. There is considerable conflict of testimony.

From a minute book used as a reception book for instruments delivered for record, now in the office of the register of deeds, it appears that the last mortgage recorded on page 497, in volume 1 of mortgages, this volume having been burned, was received for record from September 28 to October 10, 1858, while previous to this omission of twelve days and immediately afterwards that instruments were received nearly every day. Again volume 3 of deeds, saved from the fire, shows on page 530 an instrument received for record September 22, 1858, while the next instrument, recorded on page 531, is marked as received for record October 12, 1858.

In the absence of more precise information it seems safe to place the time of this court house fire between some date in August and some date in October, 1858.

Probably between September 28 and October 18, 1858.

In the Eau Claire Free Press, a weekly paper established in September, 1858 appears a paragraph under date of October 14, 1858, as follows: "Destructive Fire." "By a gentleman from Dunnville, we learn that the court house of Dunn County was burned last night, at 11 o'clock. All the records of the county were destroyed, except the record of deeds. We did not learn how the fire originated."

At first blush this might seem to fix the date of the fire during the night of October 13, 1858. But no one can now tell when the paragraph was written, October 14, or on some previous day of the week, before which the paper went to press. In any event the time limit within which the fire occured is apparently shortened to the week ending October 14, 1858.

The first official record of the meeting of the county board, now to be found at the Courthouse, is that of its meeting on November 9, 1858. At that time the destruction of the county property and records was evidently considered complete. Rooms were rented for county offices. New record books were purchased. As to articles saved no action seems to have been taken, except that a committee of the county board was appointed whose sole duty was stated to be, "to dispose of one keg of nails that was saved from the fire of the courthouse."

Register of Deeds—It is possible that William Cady elected register of deeds in 1854 did not qualify as such officer. The only records from the register's office saved from the courthouse at the time of the fire in 1858 were the index of the record of instruments. It does not appear from this index book nor from the deed book who was register in 1855 or in 1856. The first date of the receipt of papers for recording shown therein is of June 18, 1855. There appears to have been five deeds received for record on that day.

An old appointment record at Madison shows that William B. Newcomb of North Pepin was appointed register of deeds for Dunn County on May 3, 1855. North Pepin was then in Dunn County. In the list of officers for 1855 heretofore given, it appears that Samuel B. French was elected register of deeds in November of that year. Mr. French in later years stated that after he was first elected register, Mr. Newcomb refused to turn the books pertaining to his office over to him and that finally he hired a young attorney-at-law who came to Menomonie to locate, to go to North Pepin and get the books. Mr. French stated that the attorney got the books but he was under the impression that they were procured by tact and force rather than by writ and due process of law.

The appointment of Mr. Newcomb presupposes a vacancy in the office of register of deeds. The election of 1855 being in an odd numbered year indicates that it was a special election. At that time a vacancy in a county office might be filled at a special election. Mr. French having been elected register of deeds at such special election, would, if he qualified, take the office and supplant Mr. Newcomb, the appointed officer, for the remainder of the regular term of two years to which William Cady had been elected in 1854, and for which he failed to qualify.

Probably the controversy between Mr. French and Mr. Newcomb was over the question whether an appointee to fill a vacancy in the office of register of deeds held for the remainder of the full term or only until a successor should be elected at a special election to fill such vacancy and should qualify. Following are the registrars succeeding Mr. French: J. H. Green, 1857-58; F. R. Church, 1859-60; Francis Breck, 1861-64; W. S. Grover, 1865-66; F. R. Lockwood, 1867-69; J. Kelly Jr., 1870-75; S. A. Peterson, 1876-81; Peter Peterson, 1882-88; and Charles Knutson, 1889-92; Charles Knutson, 1893-94; Martin Fladoes, 1895-1902; Hy. S. Inenfeldt, 1903-10; Edward C. Quilling, 1911-18; M. F. McLeod, 1919-25.

County Judge—An Act of the Legislature of 1856 provided for the election of a county judge for Dunn County on September 1, 1856, he to take office January 1, 1857, and hold for the term of two years. There is however no record of either an election or an appointment. Whether elected or appointed, William Cady seems to have become the first county judge of Dunn County. The record book now preserved in the office of the county judge shows a probate proceeding commenced before Mr. Cady as county judge and an order therein made by him as early as February 18, 1857. The file of papers in such proceeding has also been preserved and is now pigeon-holed in such office. By such record book Mr. Cady seems to have held the office of county judge until 1859, two years, the limit prescribed by the act of 1856. The county judges succeeding Mr. Cady are as follows: E. B. Bundy, 1863-68; P. C. Holmes, 1868-73; Robert Macauley, 1874-81; John Kelly, Jr., 1882-98; Robert Maccauly, 1899-1902; William S. Swenson, 1903-16; J. W. McCarley, 1918(resigned after 1 year) and C. R. Freeman, 1919.

Coroners—Axel Hamel, 1855; Seriah Stevens, 1856-58; D. H. Buman, 1859-60; Walter Crocker, 1861-62; office vacant, 1863-66; A. W. Studabaker, 1867-68; J. P. Wood, 1871-78; H. S. Barden, 1879-80; N. Crosby, 1881-82; G. M. Lanchkton, 1883-84; John Knoble, 1885-86; John Borland, 1887-88; J. J. Merrick, 1889-90; W. H. Park, 1891-92; George W. Higbie, 1893-94; George Galloway, 1897-1908; Frank Hintzman, 1909-18 and Carl Olson, 1919-25.

Sheriffs--Willard Holbrook, 1855-56; Amos Colburn, 1857-58; E. E. Evans, 1859-60; W. R. Culbertson, 1861-62; Levi Vance, 1863-64; S. Marugg, 1865-66; Thomas Blair, 1867-68; W. W. Winterbotham, 1869-70; E. L. Doolittle, 1871-72; Samuel Omdahl, 1873-74; T. J. George, 1875-76; C. W. Moore, 1877-78; T. J. George, 1879-80; S. Severson, 1881-82; George Thum, 1883-84; Thomas W. Macauley, 1885-86; William H. Wright, 1887-88; George Thum, 1889-90; George Dyle, 1891-92; Henry Miller, 1893-94; Charles Howison, 1895-96; Daniel P. Chamberlin, 1897-98; Henry Miller, 1899-1900; George Parker, 1901-02; John Stule, 1903-04; Willard L. Smith, 1905-06; Henry Haefner, 1907-08; M. F. Swant, 1909-10; Frederick G. Kopp, 1911-12; Fredinand Mortenson, 1913-14; Ludvig A. Tilleson, 1915-16; Fredinand Mortenson, 1917-18; Ludvig A. Tilleson, 1919-20; Charles J. Owen, 1921-22, and C. W. Helm, 1923.

Superintendents of Schools—Seriah Stevens, 1855; A. J. Messenger, 1865; Carroll Lucas, 1866-67; T. C. Golden, 1868-69; Carroll Lucas, 1870-71; W. S. Johnson, 1872-73; George Tonnar, 1874; George Schaffer, 1875-79; Florence Tickner, 1880-81; A. B. Finley, 1882-84; Mary B. Slyle, 1885-86; J. C. Sherwin, 1887-88; H. W. Reed, 1889-90; J. E. Florin, 1891-92; J. E. Florin, 1893-94; Elvera Bricklev, 1894-98; Nelson O. Varnum, 1899-1906; Jennie M. Brackett, 1907-10; John W. Klingman, 1911-18 and Earl L. Eades, 1919-25.

County Clerks.—William Cady, 1855-56; James R. Green, 1857-58; James Breck, 1859-60; Francis Breck, 1861-64; W. W. Winterbotham, 1865-68; Samuel Black, 1869-74; W. H. As already mentioned when the court house burned at Dunnville in 1858 the records of the county for the first few years of its history were destroyed. The new book of records (proceedings of the county board) that was started after the fire shows the names of five towns namely; Eau Galle, Spring Brook, Rock Creek, Dunn and Menomonie, into which the county was then politically divided. It was from these towns, or some of them, that the others were subsequently set off. In this process there were very few fragmentary changes, or transferences of a few sections from one town to another, so common in the early history of some counties; when a new town was set off its boundaries were in almost every instance made to correspond with the government townships and ranges.

The first new town mentioned on the earliest record book now existing was that of Peru, which was organized on March 5, 1859, being set off from the town of Rock Creek. This—the smallest town in the county—had for its north and west boundaries the Chippewa River, and hence to that extent was, and is, irregular in outline.

The town of Red Cedar was organized Dec. 5, 1860, and included in addition to the present town of Red Cedar the towns of Wilson, Sand Creek, Otter Creek, Grant, Tainter and Colfax.

An entry in the county board records in August, 1861, shows that the towns of Dunn County were at that time associated for government purposes with Dallas County, or, practically, that territory that is now Barron County. The name Dallas County appears regularly in the assessment tables on the county board records for some seven or eight years, being first omitted in the tax table recorded in November, 1869.

The next town organized after Red Cedar was Weston, which was set off from Eau Galle with the same territory as at present.

The town of Lucas was next set off, from Menomonie, with its present territory. Elk Mound was next set off from Spring Brook, on Dec. 30, 1865, with the same territory as it has today.

The town of New Haven was set off from the town of Menomonie on Dec. 10, 1866, its territory being defined as "all of townships 29, 30 and 31 of range 14," which includes what are now the towns of New Haven, Tiffany and Stanton.

The town of Grant was next organized, being set off from the town of Red Cedar on Dec. 26, 1866. Its territory included what are now the towns of Grant, Sand Creek, Wilson and Otter Creek.

The town of Sherman was set off from the town of Menomonie on Nov. 13, 1867 and included the present towns of Sherman and Hay River.

The town of Sheridan was set off on Nov. 13, 1867, its territory being defined as township 31 of range 13, or what it is today. The records do not say from what town it was taken.

The town of Colfax was set off from Red Cedar on Dec. 28, 1868, and contained the present towns of Colfax and Tainter.

The town of Tainter was set off Jan. 25, 1869, from the towns of Colfax and Red Cedar, the part taken from Red Cedar being Sections 5 and 6 and the north half of Sections 7 and 8, which included, or was, the site of the village of Cedar Falls.

The town of Stanton was the next town created, Nov. 15, 1870, from the town of New Haven, and included what is now the town of Stanton and the south half of what is now the town of Tiffany.

The town of Tiffany seems to have been organized between November, 1873 and November, 1874, as it appears as a separate town in the tax tables recorded in the latter month and year but not in the former. The present editor could find no record of the exact date of its organization. It probably was given the territory which it now has, as none seems to have been taken from it or added to it subsequently.

The town of Sand Creek, with the territory it has today, was set off and organized from the town of Grant on Nov. 16, 1876.

The town of Otter Creek was set off from the town of Grant on Nov. 16, 1877, as now constituted.

The town of Hay River was set off from the town of Sherman on June 28, 1879, with its present territory.

The town of Wilson was set off from Grant in 1886, though at what particular session of the county board does not appear. It was the last town organized in the county, making up the full total of 22.

As elsewhere stated, Dunn County orginally included the county of Pepin, which was set off as a separate county in 1858. An act of the legislature, approved April 2, 1860. sanctioned the submission of the question of the removal of the county seat from Dunnville to Menomonie at the next general election. The majority having voted ammatively, the seat of government was accordingly changed, the officers and county business moving to Menomonie on Jan. 1, 1861. On their arrival diep occupied die private residence of G. M. Powler on Main Street, (where the post-office now stands) which, in accordance with previous arrangement, was vacated for that purpose. They remained there three years, after which the county rented any suitable building that could be secured. Several of the county officials at times for a few years occupied other buildings, as happened to be most convenient to them. The terms of court were held in a hall at the rear of the Menomonie House, also in what was known as Grob's Hall now Smith's Hall.

In 1867 the county hired and fitted up what was known as the "Charley Waller building," on the corner of Main Street and Broadway. The offices were on the first floor and the court room upstairs. On the night of Oct. 14, 1868, burglars broke into the former and stole one hundred dollars. In 1870 the court house business was moved to the building that was later used as the "Times" office, loc ted on the site of the present Arcade building. That building was used but a sho t time as the court house, however, as in 1871-72 the present structure was erected by Canute Thompson, at a cost of $36,000. The inside fittings brought the total cost up to $45,000. It was occupied in the fall of the latter year. It is a good-sized and substantial brick building and is situated in the center of a park occupying a whole square, the land having been donated to the county by W iam Wilson. A. J. Kinney was the architect of the court house and the supervisors at the time of its construction were T. W. Macauley, J. W. Granger and A. Sherburn. It is interesting to note that the brick used in the building was made on the court house ground and in Wilson Park, a tract also donated to the city by Captain Wilson soon after the plat of the city was made. The clay was hauled to the spot from beds lying on the outskirts of the city. An addition was made in 1915.

The first jail possessed by the county was a small building at Dunnville, which in October, 1858 burned down. A block building was then erected, and in 1869 after the county seat had been removed to Menomonie, the jail was taken to pieces and moved also, being erected at the southeast corner of the courthouse park. It was destroyed by fire, and the present jail was erected in 1874, at the corner of Chestnut and Fourth Streets, (now Ninth Avenue and Tenth Street) at a cost of $7,500. It was subsequently improved at a cost of $2,000.

When Dunn County was organized it was made a part of the Eighth Judicial District, which was presided over by Judge S. S. N. Fuller, who served until 1860. His successor was Henry D. Barron, whose service, however, was short, as in that same year. 1860, Judge L. P. Wetherby of Hudson became circuit judge.

In 1862 the Eighth District was composed of Eau Claire, Chippewa, Dunn, Pepin. Pierce, St. Croix, Polk, La Pointe, Douglas and Burnett counties, and it so remained until 1865, when several counties having been dropped, or transferred to other circuits, it was made to include only the counties of Chippewa, Dunn, Eau Claire, Pepin, Pierce and St. Croix.

In 1866 Dallas (now Barron) was added, and in 1867 Judge H. L. Humphrey, of Hudson, became the circuit judge as successor to Judge Wetherby. The judicial records for 1873 mention Barron County, omitting its former name of Dallas.

A change was made in the circuit in 1878, Barron and Chippewa counties being placed in the Eleventh Circuit and Eau Claire in the Thirteenth, leaving the Eighth Circuit to include the counties of Dunn, Pepin, Pierce and St. Croix. At the same time Judge Egbert B. Bundy of Menomonie succeeded Judge Humphrey on the bench.

In 1879 Buffalo County was added to the circuit and Eau Claire was taken back, making the Eighth Circuit to consist of Buffalo, Dunn, Eau Claire, Pepin, Pierce and St. Croix. Thus it remained until 1892-93, when Eau Claire was transferred to the Seventeenth Circuit. As no further change has been made, the Eighth Circuit is now composed of the counties of Buffalo, Dunn, Pepin, Pierce and St. Croix.

Judge Bundy, having served on the bench of the Eighth Circuit for 18 years, was succeeded Jan. 1, 1897, by Eugene W. Helms, of Hudson, who died in office and whose successor, in 1915, was Judge George Thompson, of Ellsworth, the present judge of the circuit.

Dunn County in general has always been one of the most law-abiding sections of the state and few notable crimes have been committed here. What was supposed to be the first murder of a white man in the valley happened at Menomonie in 1844. The victim was stealthily shot in the garret of an old log house. The perpetrator of the cold-blooded crime was arrested and taken to Prairie du Chien, where he was tried before Judge Dunn and acquitted.

Another episode which cost the lives of a respected official of Dunn County and that of his brother of Pepin County, and which resulted in the lynching at Durand of one of their murderers, will always form one of the most interesting portions of local history. While the principal events took place at Durand, Dunn County was directly concerned and its entire population was acutely interested. The excitement incident to the tragedy extended to the whole country and the affair became one of national celebrity.

On Sunday, July 10, 1881, Milton Coleman, under-sheriff of Dunn County, and Charles Coleman, deputy sheriff of Pepin County, accompanied by E. A. Toft of Menomonie, were returning through Durand in charge of a prisoner captured at Wabasha, who was accused of burglary committed at Mr. Toft's jewelry store two weeks before. As they entered Durand about 5:30 p.m. they were told that Alonzo and Ed. Williams, alias Maxwell, notorious horse thieves and desperadoes from Missouri, for whom a reward was out, had crossed the river in a skiff that day, and were skulking in the outskirts. Placing their prisoner in the Durand jail for safe keeping, the Coleman brothers, against warnings given them, set out to look for the outlaws. They were armed with shot guns and had no fear. At about 8:30 o'clock, on the edge of town, they saw two men approaching along the road, each armed with a Winchester rifle and a revolver. Milton Coleman raised his gun and cocked it, aiming at Alonzo Williams. At the same time he said, "You are my" but he never finished the sentence. Williams fired with unerring aim and Milton fell back, his neck broken by the bullet. As he fell his gun was discharged at his antagonist. Alonzo fired a second shot and fled down the road. At the same time this occurred Charles Coleman and Ed. Williams exchanged shots. Charles received a fatal wound just below the heart, and Williams kept on firing, shooting five or six times with his revolver. Coleman sank on one knee in the road and fired a second time. Then he fell dead. He had been hit twice. Both the Williams brothers, it later developed, had been struck by shot, Ed's wounds being the more serious, but after the shooting he walked away and joined his brother. The excitement throughout the entire Northwest was aroused to the highest pitch, and for more than six weeks the Eau Galle woods, in which the murderers had taken refuge, were scoured without avail. Armed men came from as far as Winona and Red Wing to join in the search and menomonie furnished many The Ludington Guard was called out in July to assist in the hunt. volunteers. Not until November, however, was definite news obtained of the fugitives. Word was at last received that Ed. Williams was captured in Hall County, Nebraska. Sheriff Killian of that county found both brothers in bed in a farm house, and, after a desperate struggle made Ed. his prisoner, Alonzo making his escape. Ed. was brought to Menomonie Thursday, November 17, by Sheriff Killian and Deputy Henry Coleman of Dunn County and locked in jail here by Sheriff Severson. At this time Williams told of their terrible experience in the Eau Galle woods. Both men suffered intensly from their wounds and went for days at a time without food. After ten davs they emerged from the woods, reached the Mississippi at Maiden Rock, found a boat and crossed Lake Pepin to Minnesota. Not until they reached that state did they learn of the effect of the shooting. At 10 a.m., Friday, Williams was brought into the circuit courtroom to enable the people to see him, but there was no disorder. That afternoon the man was taken to Durand for preliminary examination by Sheriff Killian of Nebraska, Undersheriff Miletus Knight, Deputy Henry Coleman, Justice N. F. Carpenter, and the correspondent of the Pioneer Press. On Saturday morning, the time set for the examination, the hearing was postponed until 2 in the afternoon. Williams was then taken before Justice W. B. Dver in the Durand courthouse, the room being crowded with spectators. The prisoner when arraigned gave the name of William E. Maxwell and pleaded not guilty. He waived examination, however, and was remanded for trial. As the officers with the prisoner were coming out of the courtroom and down the stairs, cries of "Hang him" were heard. A man with a rope dodged through the outer door and placed the noose over the prisoner's head. The officers were then hurried down the corridor by a crowd of men, after offering fruitless resistence Maxwell, or Williams, fought like a tiger, but was quickly overpowered and dragged by the rope outside and to an oak tree in the courthouse grounds. He was hanged over a horizontal limb of this tree, and fifteen minutes later his body was cut down by the authorities. It is said that not more than 25 men had a hand in the hanging, which was well planned. The body was buried in Potter's field. Nothing further was heard of Alonzo Williams (up to 1910).

CHAPTER VI

DUNN COUNTY IN THE BARSTOW-BASHFORD ELECTION

The Barstow-Bashford election took place in 1885. At this early date, Dunn County became connected with a state wide political scandal. The situation was not made in the county and came about by no criminality of its electors nor through any iniquity of its citizens. The accidental association of the county with this unsavory episode has generally been attributed to an attempt on the part of certain Eau Claire democratic politicians to exploit the Dunn County community in an illegal endeavor to elect as governor the candidate of their party. The opposing candidates for governor were William A. Barstow, democratic nominee, and Coles Bashford, republican nominee. Dunn County had then been established but little more than one year and was not fully organized by the election of a board of supervisors and by the election of general county officers until 1857.

It appears that the records in the office of the secretary of state show, that at the election of 1855, Dunn County was apparently divided into three voting precincts. It had in fact but two such precincts. The vote in these three supposed precincts on governor was given in the returns made, as follows: Menomonie 44 for Barstow, democrat, and 1 for Bashford, republican; at O'Galla (Eau Galle), respectively, 27 and 28, and at Gilbert's Mills 53 and 14. The return of this vote at Gilbert's Mills was filed with the secretary of state on an application of Mr. Bashford for a writ of quo warranto to oust Mr. Barstow as governor, into which office it was alleged he had intruded. He was in fact inducted into that office on these fradulent votes supposed to have been cast at Gilbert's Mills and other similar votes cast in other parts of the state, counted for him by the state board of canvassers. A similar conclusion as to the fraudulent character of these votes at Gilbert's Mills was reached by a legislative committee appointed to investigate charges made of corrupt practices at this election, so far as it concerned the office of governor.

The whole story as to the entire state is interesting reading, but of especial interest to Dunn County people is this vote at Gilbert's Mills. The return filed was certified to by William Smith and Thomas Taylor, inspectors, and James Henry and Henry Wilson, Jr., clerks. John W. Hunt, assistant secretary of state, testified before the committee that he received this return at the secretary's office on Dec. 14, 1855. He thought he received it by mail. He also testified that he received a similar return from Spring Creek, Polk County, on the morning of December 15. This was the day set by law for the state canvassing board to canvass the state vote.

This return from Spring Creek was found by the court and by the committee of investigation to be a forgery and fraudulent. The fact is, the evidence taken failed to locate any such place as Spring Creek, Polk County, where an election was or could have been held. As to Gilbert's Mills, it was found to be a geographical entity, but it was also found that no election had been held there. J. Gillet Knapp, assistant sergeant-at-arms of the senate, testified before the committee that he and others went to Gilbert's Mills and there on Dec. 26, 1855, "saw and conversed with Oliver Gilbert, the proprietor of the mills, and inquired of him and of others whether an election was held at that place in November, 1855," and further says, "we were assured that no election precinct had been established there, and no election hadbeen held, nor attempted to be held." He also stated that Gilbert's Mills is in the same township, and but two and a half miles from the Menomonie Mills, where a precinct had been established and a poll opened. But Mr. Gilbert assured this deponent that no one went there from Gilbert's to vote."

Mr. Knapp unhesitatingly asserted before the committee that in his opinion the returns from Gilbert's Mills and from Spring Creek as well as another return which had been declared fradulent by the court, and had been filed as a statement of a vote at Bridge Creek in Chippewa County, were all written at the same place and time by a Jackson County official. That he had written them in his office at Black River Falls. Mr. Knapp explained that he had examined the handwriting of the returns filed at Madison for the places named and had taken particular attention of the kind of paper on which the returns were written. That he had inspected the handwriting of the official in question found in his office and in the public offices of Jackson County. He then states before the committee, "I also first pointed out the fact that one of the half sheets, on which the returns from Gilbert's Mills were written, on file in the secretary's office, had been torn from a half sheet of the returns from Bridge Creek, and the other half sheet had been torn from the returns from Spring Creek." The aggregate spurious votes returned from the three precincts named were 294, showing a majority for Barstow of 207. Adding to these the spurious votes returned from Waupaca County, the aggregate was raised to 384 and Barstow's apparent majority from these four sources to 283.

The result of the state canvass on the face of the returns was to give the office of governor to Barstow by a majority over Bashford of 157. The Supreme Court in its decision as to the result of this election for governor contented itself by declaring that Bashford received a plurity of the legal votes cast for that office and was therefore duly elected governor of the state. In arriving at this decision many Bashford votes were discarded not because they were inherently fraudulent but because the result had not been properly certified to the state board of canvassers. For instance, all returns made direct to that board from the voting precincts were rejected as the law provided that the precinct officers should certify the results found by them to the county board of their respective counties and thence be reported to the state canvassers. Under this ruling, which was the law, the votes of Menomonie Mills and O'Galla in this county were thrown out. It was not possible here to comply with the law, as this county had not become fully organized and it had no board of supervisors at that time. So far as the result of the gubernatorial election of 1855 was concerned the two legal precincts of Dunn County exercised no more influence on the results of the election than did the supposed legal but spurious vote of Gilbert's Mills.

It might be thought that after all Barstow was ousted from the office of governor not on the strength of charges of fraud but by reason of the informality of the return of votes but the Supreme Court in overruling his motion to dismiss the proceeding provided for his further participation in the proceedings by way of answer and trial. His counsel, however, appeared at the bar of the court and declined to take further action in the matter. By thus refusing to proceed in the case it was virtually admitted by Barstow that he knew that the legal vote of the state was against him.

Through the intermeddling of outside politicians Dunn County not only became named in the scandal but also innocently became named in connection with the resulting epoch-making decision relating to the rights of electors to have their votes which have been lawfully cast, counted, and not be nullified by the counting against them of spurious votes, which by mere forms of law have been placed before a canvassing board. It has been said that in this quo warranto case our Supreme Court was the first of all courts in the United States to decide that it would go behind the returns of a legally established canvassing board and ascertain in a judicial proceeding the true lawful vote cast by the electors for a nominee at a political election for the office of governor of a state, and decree the installation of the rightfully elected candidate for the office in dispute, as so ascertained by it.

It was conceded by the attorneys for Barstow that in the case of a state officer, the present procedure would lie, but they insisted that a governor was not an officer but something other and greater, that he was an executive; that the executive branch of the government was in some way embodied in him and that he and it was beyond the reach of the judiciary branch of the government. The court held that the governor is an officer within the meaning of the provisions of the constitution and of the statutes, that he in person is distinct and separate from the executive department of the state.

After the decision of the canvassing board the scene in this political contest was confined to the capital of the state. The action in the story henceforth was swift and the shifting events connected with it created intense feeling and interest in the spectators. On Jan. 7, 1856, Barstow was installed as governor and on the same day Bashford appeared before the Supreme Court and took the official oath as governor. On the eleventh and twelfth of that month Bashford applied to the attorney general of the state, as relator, for leave to present to the Supreme Court a writ to try the right of Barstow to the office into which he had been inducted and left with him the form of application that he wished him to present to the court. The attorney general refused to grant leave as requested but prepared an application and writ of his own devising, which on the fifteenth he presented to the court, and on which on the seventeenth a summons was issued requiring Barstow on February 5 thereafter to answer thereto. The summons having been served and return made on January 22, Bashford appeared by his attorneys and moved that the information filed by the attorney general be discontinued and that he, Bashford, be permitted to file an information in his own behalf. The motion was denied and the attorney general allowed to prosecute the proceeding. No sooner was this done than Barstow by his attorneys filed a motion to quash and dismiss the summons issued at the request of the attorney general on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction in the premises. The position taken by Barstow was that the executive department of the government was a co-ordinate department and as such was independent of the judiciary department even to the extent that it had the right to determine the matter of the election of its head-the governor. That the governor was not an officer within the meaning of any constitutional or statutory provision providing for an interference by the courts. This motion was denied and Barstow ordered to plead. On February 21 a stipulation was presented to the court in effect asking the court to pass upon the case on certain features thereof then pre-The court refused to consider the case as presented. Then on February sented. 25, Barstow filed a plea which by its terms denied the jurisdiction of the court. Τo this the attorney general demurred and the court sustained the demurrer, saving, "We have already decided that we have jurisdiction of the case." Barstow was required to answer over within four days. Whereupon on the day set for Barstow to plead his attorneys came into court and announced that now they withdrew from the case and handed to the court a communication from Governor Barstow which stated his views and his position and closed with these words: "And I shall deem it my imperative duty to repel with all of the force vested in this department, any infringement upon the rights and powers which I exercise under the constitution.

The attorneys for Bashford then moved the court for judgment on default of Barstow to plead. The attorney general protested that this motion was made without consultation with him and that he representing the people desired time in which to consider the matter. Time was granted to March 18, at which time the attorney general filed a statement to the effect that the rights of the people were not being conserved by the prosecution of the case any further and asked to dismiss the case. This statement was dated March 15 and the records of the court show that the attorney general had filed with the clerk of the court on the tenth a statement that he would not prosecute the case further and that he then and there dismissed the same.

Later "the court proceeded to the decision" of both motions, the attorney general's motion to dismiss and Bashford's motion for judgment. It was ruled by the court that technically a judgment of ouster should be entered on the record but considering the gravity of the matter involved wished notwithstanding the default to have evidence presented as to the right of Bashford to a judgment. Testimony was taken relative to the returns which had already been placed before the court by Barstow on his plea which was called a plea to the jurisdiction of the court. Upon the default and on the evidence required by the court, a judgment of ouster was entered against Barstw.

Barstow and his partisans, having foreseen what would be the decision of the court, though to negative its effect so far as that was to be political in its nature by resigning. Accordingly on March 21, in a communication to the legislature he submitted his resignation, and the next day Arthur McArthur, lieutenant governor, addressed a communication to the legislature informing that body that he had assumed the duties of governor, the governor having resigned.

It was pointed out that Barstow not having been legally elected governor could not by a pretended resignation of an office to which he was not entitled thus transmit it under the provisions of the constitution to the lieutenant governor. March 28, Basford sent a message to the legislature informing that body that in accordance with the judgment of the Supreme Court he had assumed the duties of governor and that he was ready to co-operate with them.

McArthur had asserted that he would never give up the executive offices until compelled to do so by a judgment of a competent court, but Bashford armed with a certified copy of the judgment in the Barstow-Bashford case and accompanied by a sheriff's posse of friends walked into the governor's offices and McArthur walked out. He is credited in the official report as having served from March 21 to March 25, 1856. Bashford took office March 25, 1856 and served the remainder of the term.

During this time of the trial of the right to the gubernatorial office in the court, there went on a sort of comic opera series of events in the legislature, which pieced together would make a laughable chapter. The whole situation is probably presented in the resolution offered by a disgusted member who sought to condemn the practice of the legislature in spending its time, "in political discussions, passing buncome resolutions, framing or building political platforms," and equally frivolous ways. The senate was republican and the assembly democratic in complexion.

This state was new at the time; it had been admitted to the union but seven years before this trial; Eau Claire County had not yet been established; Dunn County had not then been organized; the state capital was mentioned in the proceedings as the "Village of Madison;" the total vote of the state was less than 73,000 and the margin between two political parties in a bitter contest was less than 200 votes. The peaceable outcome was a distinctive triumph of law over force. The acquiescence of the people in the decision rendered showed the strength of their faith in the efficiency and honesty of the judicial branch of their government. At the trial three able men sat upon the bench. Judges Edward V. Whiton, Abram D. Smith and Orsamus Cole presided. At the bar appeared advocates of wide reputation for learning and ability. Barstow was represented by Matt H. Carpenter, J. E. Arnold and Harlow S. Orton, and there appeared for Bashford, Edward G. Ryan, James K. Knowlton and Timothy O. Howe. In the report of the proceedings are transcribed the main arguments of counsel on both sides and the separate opinions of the three judges. The proceeding then in court was novel in its nature and the question presented was political in aspect. It had already been discussed both in and out of the legislature and had been decided in their own mind by thousands of our citizens mostly according to the political bias of each.

The fact that all of the prevailing excitement subsided on the announcement by the court of its decision is matter little short of the miraculous. In the case the protest of Barstow was that the judiciary could not constitutionally interfere in the executive department of the state and supervise its prerogatives and privileges, as it would do if it assumed to correct or set aside the action of the state canvassing board which had certified that he had been elected to the office of governor. On the part of Bashford it was claimed that no interference was asked with the prerogatives and privileges of the executive department; that the claim was that on a proper application the court could and would protect the people in their right to an honest vote and an honest count, this under the fundamental right of suffrage reserved to them by the constitution. If the wrong doing against such right had been done by a canvassing board it made no difference, the wrong would be righted. The position of Barstow's counsel was specifically put on record by a question put by the court and answered by Mr. Carpenter, thus:

"Chief Justice Whiton-'Do you hold then, Mr. Carpenter, that the executive is judge of his own election?' "

"Mr. Carpenter—'Certainly, I hold that the governor is the ultimate judge of his own election and qualification, subject only to the people; that there is no other department of the government authorized to decide.' "

The claim of Bashford was concretely stated by Mr. Ryan:

"We do not propose to interfere with the executive at all; only to ascertain who is the executive. If the record is true, the canvass is a falsehood" and "the intrusion of Barstow into the executive office was a usurpation, it was a violation of the constitution."

The court held in the case before it that it had power to determine who had been elected and adjudged that Coles Bashford had been elected to that office. In writing the opinion of the court the chief justice announced, "An election by the qualified voters of the state, and not a canvass of the votes, confers a right to office."

CHAPTER VII

SOME ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF 1846

James H. Lockwood, to show that his comtemplated enterprise of lumbering, on the Red Cedar River, was in the nature of a public benefit, set forth in his application, in the year 1825, for a government permit, that "the improvement now going on in the country between this valley and St. Louis and the probable increase in population that will come into the mining country, makes timber necessary, there being none cut in the Indian country."

The mining country mentioned was the Galena District on the Galena River. Its population did soon increase, but its supply of lumber, in a few years, came largely from the Wisconsin River, cut from Indian lands under government permits. In fact one of its lumbermen, about 1835, built a sawmill in this "mining country." Evidently Mr. Lockwood failed to foresee the enterprise of others.

No record appears on the account books at Menomonie of sales of lumber in this mining country. The only entry found pertaining to it seems to indicate merely a tie-up of the raft at that point. It is a cash credit, in 1848. "By provisions for man at Galena $2.92."

Lockwood seems to have been too sanguine about trade at the mines, and also as to a quick settlement of the Mississippi River Valley. As a matter of fact there was no considerable settlement in this valley between Prairie du Chien and Fort Snelling before 1846. It has been stated by a good authority that the only settlement between these places up to 1845, was that at La Crosse and but seven males and five females were then living there, and that in that year the first frame house was built between Prairie du Chien and Red Wing. In 1846, below Prairie du Chien and above the rapids of the Mississippi River there were only the mining settlements mentioned and the small towns of Dubuque and Ft. Madison.

St. Louis was the first market place below the rapids. To run lumber to St. Louis added greatly to the expense of up-river lumbering. There was not only the increase of cost in wages and board of the raft's crew for the additional distance down and back, but the breakage in passing the rapids at what is now Keokuk. This loss of breakage has been estimated by a Wisconsin River lumberman who in the early days of lumbering ran his lumber to St. Louis, at five per cent, one-twentieth part of the whole amount of lumber run over the rapids.

The river towns below Prairie du Chien had greatly increased in importance from 1829 to 1846, but their condition at the end of that period was out of depression. This is what the newspapers of the valley in 1846 said, and they evidently voiced the talk of the people in their conventions and upon the street. One leading paper in presenting the situation stated it to be such, that, "our river towns are languishing." The cause of this sickly state was said to be the neglect of the general government to improve the channel of the Mississippi River at the rapids. By reason of this neglect it was said there was not available sufficient transportation facilities and all trade was being diverted to Chicago and other great lake towns.

During the summer, conventions were held at Memphis and at Chicago. The former to urge improvement of the river and the latter to make further known the fact, that at the head of Lake Michigan there was a natural distributing depot from the West to the East and also from which to distribute the goods of the East over the West. At this convention there were present 2,300 delegates.

Whether during the latter part of the period from 1829 to 1846 the demand for lumber on the river below was too limited; whether the proprietors of the mill at Menomonie did not give the business proper attention; whether the financial backing of this enterprise was too small, or whether from all these things combined the result came, it is not easy to determine, but the fact is, the business here was not prosperous. It does not appear to have been as successful in 1846 as it was from 1837 to 1839, at the time when John H. Fonda says he worked here for Lockwood. The existing conditions did not seem to warrant an investment, in 1846, in a sawmill at Menomonie but business men often forecast future conditions and invest on what they think they foresee, rather than on those things which have become established in the past and are continuing at the present time. John H. Knapp and William Wilson probably, in 1846, invested, believing that future favorable conditions in the Mississippi River Valley for a lumber trade would so on exist, as did Lockwood in 1829. (See article on the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company).

Lockwood in 1829. (See article on the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company). The river towns may, as reported, have "languished," but there was a large rural population, yearly emigrating into southern Wisconsin, northern Illinois and Iowa. The hard times of 1837 and other adverse economic factors operating in the eastern states, set in motion a stream of westward emigration. Men came, with and without families, each eager to secure cheap lands. This rush was in full push in 1845 and continued well into the fifties. This farm settlement beckoned trade in lumber but local conditions at the mill at Menomonie were adverse to purchase. From Jan. 1, 1841, to June 1, 1846, there had been four successive proprietors of this sawmill, colled the upper mill, located at the mouth of Meadow River, now known as Wilson's Creek. Four changes of ownership in five years does not present a situation indicating that continuity of action necessary to the stability required for the prosperity of any permanent business enterprise. The court records of the time show the last three of these proprietors each to have been bankrupt or nearly so when he quit business here.

It was not a fully prosperous and well established enterprise that Mr. Knapp and Mr. Wilson bought in May, 1846. Mr. Knapp although somewhat forehanded had his money invested in business at Ft. Madison. Mr. Wilson, had no ready money to invest and in fact had heavy obligations as the result of an unfortunate steamboat venture. Mr. Knapp paid the money required to be paid down on the purchase and his financial standing supplied the credit necessary to start the business.

These men were cautious. They bought only a one-half interest, but to secure some stability of action, entered into a contract with David Black, from whom they bought and who retained the other one-half interest, by which for five years they were to have full and unquestioned control of the entire business.

They were at Menomonie in conference about June 1, 1846, the time set for them to take full possession of the property. It was agreed they should divide supervision. Capt. Wilson was to attend to the manufacture of the lumber at Menomonie, and start it on its run as far as the mouth of the Chippewa, at that point, Mr. Knapp was to take charge of running it down the river and selling it at any river towns where he found a market.

This decision served to make Capt. Wilson a resident partner at the mill. He soon saw what this meant to him in social life. He was to be separated from his family, to live with a crew of mill men, they equally deprived of the social influence of family life. Connected with this social situation is an incident told by Henry E. Knapp, the same having been told to him by his father, John H. Knapp.

At the end of the conference here mentioned Mr. Knapp started on his journey home. At the mouth of the Chippewa River he found the steamboat on which he was to take passage on its way up the river instead of down, as by schedule time it should have been going. Rather than wait ashore he went aboard and made the trip up and back. On the return, at the Chippewa, Mr. Wilson got aboard. Mr. Knapp, surprised, said, "Why, Capt. Wilson, what has happened? You were to stay at the mill." The captain replied: "Mr. Knapp, I concluded it was not the best thing for me to stay there without my family. I am going to Ft. Madison and make arrangements for my family to move to the mill." The captain's wife and his family did arrive here on the ensuing fourth of July.

A man ordinarily considers the city, town or country community where his family resides as his permanent abiding place and all other human settlements where he may chance to be mere temporary living places. Here was an instance of the application of this principle or theory of living. Capt. Wilson now sought to connect, with his definite business aim to establish a stable business enterprise, the helpful aid of a permanent home. He extended the application of the theory to his workmen, and proposed to employ a better class of workmen than those he had found here and to employ when he could men of family who would bring their families here. Several men of family soon did move here with their families. Among them may be named Lorenzo Bullard and Jason Ball. John Vale probably already had his wife here. An entry of credit in Capt. Wilson's account in 1846, reads: "By six days in June procuring supplies and hands, $6.66." Probably the time mentioned was when he was at Ft. Madison after his family.

Heretofore the workmen were to a large extent such as Lockwood describes as being hired in yearly shifts. Of the workmen left here by David Black many were transients, some staid but a few weeks, others but a few months. Among those recently hired or who staid here and who did remain for some time may be named, William and Samuel Whitcomb, Isaiah Hix, Alexander Hammal and Joseph Benson.

The leaving of workmen did not in all instances mean that the men who quit here left the Red Cedar basin. There was then on the river above a logging camp at Lamb's Creek and another or more on Hay River. There was a sawmill settlement at Gilbert's Creek; a mill at "Hurd's Mill" on Irvine's Creek; and on the Eau Galle River, that of Carson and Eaton. The quitting of a man here might mean simply that he was shifting to one of these places. John Fay was a transient. His account in 1846 shows that he worked six and one-half days, became indebted for medicine, board and whiskey and went away 75 cents in debt. Others show an account of but a few weeks' duration.

One of those chance or unlucky events soon occurred to work its unfavoring influence on this sawmill enterprise. David Black, the equal partner of John H. Knapp, died in July, 1846. In law the death of a partner dissolves the partnership. The natural and normal business of the firm instantly stops. The remaining partners are thenceforth known as the surviving partners. Their lawful duty and their only legal right is to close out the business, convert the partnership effects into money and to therefrom pay all expenses incurred by them in relation to the partnership property, pay all just claims and demands against the firm and then pay to the legal representative of the deceased partner the part of the net proceeds in their hands to which his estate is entitled.

This restrictive activity of a surviving partner is so rigidly enforced under the law that if they engage in new ventures even though made with the purpose of making present assets of greater value, yet in case of loss they have personally to bear the whole loss, while if there should be a gain, they must divide that gain, as profit, with the estate of the deceased partner.

The contract by which Knapp and Wilson were to have supervision of the business for five years was intended to give stability to the enterprise. It expired with the expiration of the partnership, at the death of David Black, and so became as naught.

We have no traditions to tell us what was done to keep this business venture running or what steps were taken that resulted in the preservation of the property intact in the hands of Knapp and Wilson and from no early chronicle can we read it. From the court record at Prairie du Chien of the administration of David Black's estate and from the account books of the upper mill from 1846 to 1850, it is possible to construct this probably true story.

At the death of David Black, administration of his estate was granted to John S. Lockwood, as administrator. He came here in November, 1846, and staid until about December 18. On that day he is charged $10, for four weeks' board while "administering of estate of D. Black," and is charged in the month $6 for service of horse and driver to Lake Pepin. The driver was John H. Knapp as we learn from his account in the same month. While here Lockwood settled an open account between Black and the firm of Black and Knapp. He is credited "By 15847 ft. of lumber at $8.62 per M. being amount due estate D. Black on lumber a/c for 1846." The credit is carried out at $136.60. It seems to have been subject to certain deductions, which having been made, Lockwood was paid in cash $117.10. On Black's account during the summer there are five separate memorandum charges for lumber delivered for his benefit, to which no price is attached. These charges taken in connection with this definite measurement amount found due, indicates that the basis of this account was a certain quantity of logs or lumber belonging to David Black which was not included in the sale to Knapp and Wilson and which he left at the mill for the then present use of the firm, to be at some time returned to him in kind.

On this same trip Lockwood closed up, for the time being, the co-partnership business of Black and Knapp. His account is credited with the sum of $595.94 on settlement of partnership business to Dec. 1, 1846. There is a statement on the account that this sum is to be paid according to an agreement entered into, the terms of which are not stated.

These adjustments only touch the difficulties consequent upon the death of Mr. Black as to business already done. They did not provide for the future operation and development of the lumber enterprise. The ownership of the property was still left clouded with an uncertainty as to who would eventually own Mr. Black's one-half interest.

This interest could be and doubtlessly was considere 1 from two different standpoints. Mr. Lockwood claimed the mill and buildings to be property owned in common in which Mr. Black's estate held a one-half part. Mr. Knapp claimed them as personal property which he and Mr. Black had held as partnership property and the full ownership and control at Black's death came to him as surviving Probably Mr. Knapp's position was correct. The private rights acpartner. quired here in the improvements made were merely the rights of squatters on the public lands. The land belonged to the United States. It had not been surveyed. It had not been thrown open to sale. Had the improvements become actually a part of the land then they would have been the property of the United States. Evidently they were personal property the same as logs cut, lumber manufactured or goods put into the store or warehouse. The license from the government to Black and Knapp merely permitted them to possess the site and cut timber in the Indian country. Lockwood, as administrator, proceeded to make, if possible, at public auction, a sale of Black's supposed separate one-half interest, ignoring Mr. Knapp's claim of right to sell it as a part of the whole assets of the firm.

Knapp and Wilson did not help to further this public sale. In one of Lockwood's reports to the court he complains that Captain Wilson failed to post up at the mill a notice of this sale. A public sale meant for Knapp and Wilson great annoyance if not considerable financial loss. It was next to impossible for them to raise the money to buy in Black's one-half interest, and it was not desirable to them that a stranger become a part owner of the mill.

The public sale was not made and the matter was allowed to drag along for four years. On May 4, 1850, Lockwood as administrator transferred Black's interest to Knapp and Wilson. In the price paid there was probably included such sum as the parties agreed upon for all unsettled partnership affairs of the firm of Black and Knapp.

To keep the business running after Black's death it is apparent from the partnership books that many makeshift schemes were resorted to and dummy accounts kept, and probably with the knowledge and consent of Black's administrator.

To get logs for the mill required an obligation of some one to pay for the cutting and driving. As Knapp and Wilson were to assume any such debt and it could not be made a charge to the business of Black and Knapp, they entered upon the work of logging. This was done in the name of several partnerships. In some the name of Capt. Wilson openly appears as a partner, while the accounts of others but thinly veil the fact that he and Mr. Knapp were interested parties adverse to Black and Knapp.

Of these companies there was Bliss and Whitcomb, Whitcomb and Wilson, Bullard and Wilson and Wickham & Co. There were also three other partnership logging companies operating in this immediate vicinity that furnished logs to Knapp and Wilson. In two of these three companies Mr. Bullard was interested. One of these three companies was that of Brown and Vance. Its accounts on the company book continue from 1846 to 1852. It had a camp at Lamb's Creek and was an independent company. William and Samuel Whitcomb, William Wickham and Lorenzo Bullard were employees of Knapp and Wilson. William Whitcomb was a general laborer, Samuel was a millwright, Wickham was an expert shingle maker and Lorenzo Bullard was at different times in charge of special departments of the work here. The firm of Whitcomb and Wilson seems to have had a camp on Hay River. Josiah Harris, one of its workmen, is credited with $30, "for measuring logs on Hay River." This company appears to have bought shingles and to have bought as well as cut logs. The aggregate amount of its account running over two and one-half years is $7,000. On the ledger for 1847 are columns of the scale of logs of this company filling two pages with one colmun over. The scale is unfooted and at the bottom is the memorandum "measured at the mill."

The account of Wickham & Co. seems to have been but a name under which Knapp and Wilson carried on a logging and shingle business. At the end of this account which for the most part consists of general entries without price carried out is this statement: "1850, Oct. 4, settled all accounts on this book to this date, Wickham & Co., and William Wickham, and balanced the book." No totals nor balance given in figures.

At one time separate from the accounts of Wickham & Co., Wickham is credited with 680,000 shingles, $1,360.00. Shingle makers were usually charged with the bolts turned over to them and credited with the price of the shingles made. In the account of Wickham & Co. appear credits to thirteen different men for shingles made, aggregating 701,500. No price stated.

It does not seem necessary to carry the examination further. We must be satisfied by the showing made that these logging companies named were to a large extent fictitious. It is not fair to assume that they were conceived in fraud and carried on to cheat, but rather that they were necessary business methods resorted to for the purpose of keeping in operation this lumber enterprise until such time as the legal entaglement consequent upon the death of Mr. Black could be in a legal way untangled and the proprietory right to Black's one-half interest in the property be with gains.

The number of men employed in the Red Cedar Valley in the early days is un-

Lockwood merely says that a force of carpenters, and laborers were sent here at the building of the first mill. Nothing stated from which the number could be estimated or calculated. Fonda states precisely of the military expedition of 1829-30 that there were 74 persons. From an account by Lockwood of his picking up detachments of his returning crew of 1830 when they chandoued the mill, in July of that year, we can estimate the full force at from 20 to 25. As to how many he brought in 1831 or then had here in all it is barely possible to make a random guess. If we take the estimate of 20 to 25 for the first crew and suppose the crew brought to replace them to be equally strong, then we can put the force of 1831 at from 40 to 50 persons. Schoolcraft on August 11, 1831, in an account of his voyage down the Red Cedar River, says, that a Mr. Wallace with ten men was at the upper mill. Lockwood being then engaged in getting out timber for the dam and mill at account of 1837-39 we can learn nothing of the number of people here at any one or at all of the mills.

We have no mention during the earlier period under consideration of the personal property at the middle and lower mills. The first mention of such property at the upper mill is in the mortgage given by Green to Lockwood January 28, 1841, for there is included "6 pair of oxen with yokes and chains, and 1 set of blacksmith tools, and also all tools belonging to said mill (called the upper mill)."

The next mention of such property is in the estate of William Black who died in 1844. The inventory filed shows:

"Sawmill $2200, Frame house $250, Log house $200, 6 yoke of oxen, yokes and chains $450. Blacksmith tools $45, Farm and kitchen utensils $20." Total value $3,165.

No inventory appears of record in David Black's estate, and in the deeds of Black and of his administrator to Mr. Knapp the personal property is mentioned only in general terms, as including all that pertains to said upper mill. But it appears that Mr. Knapp paid in all for the property $4,600, an increase over the William Black inventory of $1,435. This sum includes of course in part the accumulations for such time as Mr. Knapp may have accounted for profits of the business to the estate of Black.

By a rough inventory as of August 20, 1853 the property at the upper mill was put at $70,000. By a more carefully taken inventory, taken in April, 1853, it is shown to be $78, 317.21. To those who knew of the millions shown by the later inventories of this upper mill this inventory will be of interest in its details. For this reason it is here given:

Farm, $2,000; mill, $30,000; 20 yoke oxen, $2,000; 10 horses, $800; 6 wagons, $400; sleighs and harness, $250; 15 cows, $350; young cattle, $125; 1 corn mill, $100; 2 boats, $250; farm implements, $150; mdse. on hand, $6, 575; logs, $30,000; lumber in yard, $5,317.21; total, $78, 317.21.

This last inventory was taken by the persons interested as the value of the property as of the organization of the firm of Knapp, Stout & Co., on August 20, 1853.

The increase of property from 1846 to 1853 would indicate a prosperous condition of the business in those and the intermediary years. The entries in the books of Black and Knapp for the first three years show an immediate increase of business under the management of Knapp and Wilson. By an entry Nov. 24, 1846, thereappears to have been put into the Chippewa River 60,000 feet of logs and 21 M. shingles. In July, 1847 is shown under designation of trip No. 2, receipts from raft $1,555.52 and expenses paid in getting the raft to market of $701.22. Aug. 24, 1847 trip No. 3 a credit of $1,708.95 and debit against same $599.59. November, 1847 trip No. 4 $1,220.52, debit $887.79. Three trips were made in 1848 aggregating credits of $5,087.34, debits $2,423.48 and in June of this year there is a credit from sales at lumber yard and to individuals of $1,165.18. The output for 1849 musthave increased greatly or the price of lumber must have been advanced for the credits for trips during that year are from two and one-half to three times larger than for 1847.

The number of accounts of workmen for 1846 and 1847 indicate a force of men employed of 20 to 25, and the accounts of payments for logs, lumber and shingles shows a large amount of these commodities to have been gotten out by jobbers.

The success of these men men (Knapp & Wilson) is in strong contrast with prior failures. The records of Crawford County show that Green quit a bankrupt and that the estates of both William and David Black were insolvent.

All hands, loggers and shingle makers, were, judged by the standards of a dry town, hard drinkers. A liquor account here was for a few years kept in the form of a score, a mark to each drink not paid for, it covers several pages and is kept as threshers tally grain, in blocks, four upright marks crossed by a fifth. The scores run, for each credit customer, from 20 to 150 drinks, each month. Some are entered as: "103 drinks and 1¼ pints, $61.82," and "81 drinks and 5 pints, $6.31." Often the transfer to the drinker's general account is humorously covered up, as "sundries," or as "nourishment."

Much liquor appears in the book accounts. Alexander Hammal, a workman, who appears also to have been a trader, is charged in July, 1846, with "Boating whiskey from the lake, $2.00," and in March, 1847, he is credited, "by 40 gallons whiskey, $20.00." George Wilson was probably a workman and jobber. His account shows that at one time he worked for Brown and Vance, he was here with David Black before 1846. His account in 1847 is credited with thirty-eight gallons of whiskey, delivered to Whitcomb. Brown and Vance as late as September 12, 1850, balanced their account by turning back "whiskey to balance, $34.10." (in the debit side of its account on the first page thereof it is charged with four barrels of whiskey. Joseph Benson worked in Wickham's camp. On July 14, 1850, he is charged, "To whiskey at Wickham's, S3.75." One J. J. Gage on settlement of his account in July, 1847, is credited, "I barrel whiskey to Whitcomb & Wilson, S25.00." In the winter of 1846-47 there are several credits in Capt. Wilson's account for whiskey charged to Whitcomb and Wilson and to Brown and Vance. In 1850 George R. Buckley is charged with whiskey to date, S7.50. In the same year Andrew Case appears charged each month with about S3.50 for whiskey. In the day book of 1851-52, Quinn Schay is charged on a certain day, "4 bottles wine, S2.00." A couple of days later he is charged for, "upsetting table and breaking furniture, S15.00." William Mullaney is also charged, on this book, with "pint of brandy, S0.75," and soon after for "lying and getting drunk, S5.00."

Mr. Knapp and Mr. Wilson belonged to separate religious organizations, but both churches held to the doctrines of "free will" and man's personal moral responsibility. Here they acted on the principle that the man who drinks to excess should be held accountable for the result of his actions. There is shown in the accounts above quoted no disposition to shift the penalty for drunken misdemeanor from the drinker to the man behind the bar.

Mr. Knapp and Mr. Wilson were when they came here ardent temperance men and they continued through life to be consistent advocates of temperance. Soon after their coming they abolished the custom of rolling out, at the unloading of the keel boat at each trip, a cask of liquor for general drinking. But they were men of great common sense. They saw the rights of others and understood their whole duty towards and their obligations to those under and about them, and governed their management of affairs accordingly.

All accounts of early lumbering show that the workmen were as a class hard drinkers. Lockwood has so described the workmen on this river. The account books of Black and Knapp show that such were the laborers left here by David Black, and they also show that the new men hired by Mr. Wilson in June, 1846, equalled, possibly excelled in deep potations the men that staid.

High as were the personal principles of the Messrs. Knapp and Wilson, deeply as they deplored some of the conditions existing in the lumber woods, earnestly as they endeavored to promote temperance, they did not nevertheless attempt to override, through their authority as employers the habits, customs and appetites of a class of laborers who, independent and carefree, as all old settlers know, would have snapped their fingers and ranged on to other camps and other mills had their supposed private right to drink as much liquor as they pleased been forcibly interfered with by an employer.

Knapp and Wilson did succeed in overcoming the adverse business factors encountered by them and did establish a successful business. This was primarily for what they came here. They did not come here as prohibition missionaries nor as temperance aposties but they are entitled to much credit for what they did accomplish here in inducing sobriety and correct living.

After 1850 the success of the business established by Mr. Knapp and Mr. Wilson and afterwards conducted by them is such that the story of its success seems tinged with romance. Its narrative recital can scarcely be believed to be what it really is, a veritable historical review.

CHAPTER VIII

MILL AND DAM LOCATIONS AT MENOMONIE 3088

About a year or two after Hardin Perkins, backed by James H. Lockwood and Joseph Rolette, secured permission to erect a mill, in 1822, a dam was built across Wilson's Creek, and a mill was there constructed. Dam and mill were soon swept away by a sudden freshet, the mill not yet having been put into operation. In 1830 Lockwood and Rolette sent a second crew here, the foreman of which selected as a site for his dam the identical place built upon by the former crew. The number in the respective crews is not stated, but from things that are stated by Mr. Lockwood in his narrative of these two expeditions it is inferred that there were from 20 to 25 men in each. No woman is mentioned in the first crew but in the second was a Menomonie squaw who served as cook and as interpreter with the Chippewas. She was the only woman and the only member of the force who could speak the Chippewa language.

Again a freshet broke the dam after about 100,000 feet of lumber had been sawed. Probably at this time the mill was not carried away, as Lockwood in his account of the incident does not mention the mill and only states that the dam was carried away. Schoolcraft, who passed here in 1831 soon after the freshet, mentions particularly the work of replacing the dam, but says nothing about a mill having been destroyed.

These two consecutive dams and the third one, built in 1831, it is now confidently affirmed, stood where the present dam across this creek now stands. To support such a conclusion there is not only Lockwood's statement and Schoolcraft's report, but there are the statements of men who saw this dam rebuilt and repaired in later years. The then position of old timbers, they say, clearly indicated, at this certain place, the foundation of a former very old dam and no other foundation for such a purpose, either above or below it, was thus, or in any other way shown.

It seems to be a matter of general knowledge that a dam has been continuously maintained on this early site. As before, so since 1831, it has, at times, been swept away by freshets, once, within the memory of many now here, when the yellowbrown water of Wilson's Creek was forced through the channel of the Red Cedar River, then itself at freshet stage, and across the lake to the foot of the bluff below the City Hall. The broad band of muddy water could be easily traced this whole distance by one standing above on the bank of the lake. This current of water from the creek then cutting transversely that of the river, then at its flood, shows the terrific force of a freshet on this small stream.

The shape of the lower valley of this creek is such that an on-coming freshet has no opportunity of lateral expansion. The descending flood cannot spread. The basin of the creek at its mouth is bottle-shaped. For 100 rods above the dam it is straight and narrow and the water is confined between high banks. The exit of a flood into the river is as through a chute, that a government surveyor reported in 1849 to be 150 links (99 feet) wide.

This site on Wilson's Creek for a dam has been accounted a fairly safe one, not withstanding the frequency of its visitation by disastrous floods. The destruction each time, although annoying and expensive, was not wholly financially ruinous to those who owned it. In 1838 and in 1846 the first dams were built at Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire and they were soon injured by freshets and in 1847 they were completely washed away by floods, entailing so serious a loss that all of the proprietors were made bankrupts. These dams have since frequently been swept away by high water.

While the historian may with confidence locate the three first dams across Wilson's Creek on the site of its present power dam, some uncertainty creeps in when we attempt to locate the first three sawmills built here. Three such mills are mentioned in early narratives as having been built on this creek. Probably the first dam and the first mill were built together as they went out together, and as such a joint or close construction was the usual early method of building a low power dam and its accompanying mill. Regarding the second mill Lockwood states that the foreman of his crew built it below a point of land that jutted out into the river, as a lower lip of the creek. That he cut a canal across this lip through which to bring logs to this mill. The north bank of the river in that day extended out considerably into what is now the channel of the river. In imagination one might place the position of this mill bodily in the present river channel between the power house and the north end of the wagon bridge, both as now located.

We are not told how water was supplied to this mill for power purposes, but naturally it would be by a flume from the creek pond along the west bank of the creek to the mill. Provokingly there is an entire absence of information on this point, neither are we told why this mill was placed on the river. Possibly it was so placed as a precaution for its safety in case another freshet carried away the dam, a precaution which it seems did save the mill at the time of the flood of 1831.

It has been a general impression of early settlers that all early mills were located at the east end of the creek dam. This impression would seem to have been confirmed by the statements before mentioned of these who reconstructed and repaired this dam as to the foundations found, and their further statements that no abutments or approaches along the creek such as are required to support a mill building were found, except at the east end of this dam. But, here is Lockwood's statement that the second mill was built below the creek on the river and the fact that Lockwood does not mention the destruction of the mill at the carrying away of the second dam, and the fact that Schoolcraft does not say anything about the rebuilding of a mill but does mention the rebuilding of a dam. It is possible to reconcile the correctness of the general impression of early settlers with the fact that the second mill was built where stated by Lockwood and that it remained there intact when the second dam was washed out.

There is extant a statement, in a history of the Chippewa Valley,—we do not know on what authority it is founded—that Hiram S. Allen in 1837 rebuilt the first sawmill erected here. Such a rebuilding possibly furnishes a solution of this perplexing question as to the location of the mills. When Allen rebuilt he constructed at the east end of the creek dam a mill to take the place of the second mill. This mill undoubtedly remained and marked the mill site known to the early settlers and its foundation timbers superimposed on those of the first mill helped to make the aggregate accumulation of timbers found by those who later dug into them in making repairs.

It is a pleasure to record the fact that the dam built here somewhere between 1846 and 1849 across the Red Cedar River not far below the entrance of Wilson's Creek was never while the manufacture of lumber continued, wholly nor partially destroyed by freshets. It is to be noted in the first place that this dam seems to have been well constructed and in the second place it is known that it was well cared for, both as to its physical condition and as to its subjected strain.

From the foregoing discussion, it would appear that the second man in authority to come here built where the first man had constructed. That is, at the head of the gorge that leads out of Lake Menomin, just within the mouth of the creek that empties from the north into the gorge. For effective and efficient work within the terms of his employment he could have made no other selection. He was to erect a mill of moderate capacity and construct a dam at low cost. It must be in the Sioux country near the Chippewa line, and within the neutral belt recognized by an Indian treaty, which was approximately 25 miles in width. The Chippewa line across the river was scarce a mile farther up, and there was no available creek between here and Cedar Falls, beyond which place it was impracticable to go. Above the mouth of the river and below these falls no stream so completely answered the purpose sought as did this creek. Irvine's Creek was passed; it was too small, with insufficient water. Gilbert's Creek had a fair flow of water, but no banks at its mouth into which to set a dam to make a reservoir. Here was a creek of fair capacity and with banks at its entrance into the river. A dam here with a mill placed beside it served not only the creek but also the river. Logs cut either on the creek or on the river could be conveniently floated to the mill and there sawed. At Gilbert's Creek logs from the river could not be sawed at its mill save by forcing them up stream at least one mile, a thing utterly impracticable.

In passing it might be of interest to state that the Gilbert's Creek valley contained an immense quantity of as excellent pine, both as to size and quality, as grew anywhere in the Red Cedar River basin. Old settlers have stated this as a fact, and an inspection and measurement of the stumps on any uncultivated tract to be found in this creek valley corroborates the statements.

The selection here, on Wilson's Creek, once known as Meadow Creek, of the site for the dam was made from business considerations of adaptability and utility; the place was adapted to the cheap generation of power and could be readily utilized as a point for the cut of a wide range of pine.

CHAPTER IX

EARLY SETTLEMENT OF MENOMONIE

The modern history of Dunn County dates from the beginning of the lumber business at Menomonie in 1822-23. The permanent settlement dates from 1830. Milwaukee was settled but a few years earlier; Madison in 1837, seven years later; Chippewa Falls, 1838, eight years later; Black River Falls, 1839, nine years later; Hudson, 1841, eleven years after; and Eau Claire, 1845, fifteen years after. Going outside of the state it is found that Chicago had but two families one year after the site of Menomonie was first occupied; that St. Paul was not settled until 1838, eight years after permanent settlement in Menomonie.

The occupation of 1822-24, told about by Lockwood, cannot be said to have been a settlement; it was at best only an attempted settlement. This was followed by an occupation of the river banks near Dunnville in the winter of 1829-30 by officers and soldiers of the United States to the number of 74, engaged in getting out timber and lumber, but there was no thought by them of making a settlement. Quite a full account of the doings of this force, detailing the character of their work and the mode of their life has been given by one of its members, from which it appears that the expedition was purely military.

The occupation here in 1830 is the first that can truly be called a settlement occupation. That of Gilbert's Mill was close upon its heels as it was begun in 1831. The life of these camps can only be conjectured. The workmen were French-Canadians who had formerly served in the fur trade and discharged United States soldiers, or, in some cases, deserters. In general, rough crews, whose daily life of work, with recreation of cards, music, dancing and drinking can be imagined from many accounts extant of western pioneer life. The Indians furnished venison, bear meat, fish, game birds, maple sugar and berries. The men so inclined, on leisure days hunted and went fishing. Some ate in the company kitchen and slept at the company's bunk house; some, by couples, or more, organized a mess and lived by themselves, and some took to themselves squaw wives. All traded at the company store and their supplies were occasionally pilfered by thieving Indians. The crews were for the most part hired for a season; came here in the fall and during the next summer from May to November went on company rafts to Mississippi River towns. Some came back, others did not return, and new men were hired to take their places. Often brothers or chums came at the same time and went away together.

Schoolcraft reports a Mr. Wallace with ten men as being here in August, 1831. Randall in his papers on the Chippewa Valley states that George Wales, an exarmy officer, was then in charge here. As the name of Wallace, as a lumberman, is not known in this region, and Wales is known to have engaged in other lumber enterprises in this vicinity, it seems proper to consider that the man interviewed by Schoolcraft was named Wales and not Wallace.

John H. Fonda was the member of the military force of 1829-30 who wrote an account of the expedition. He also came to this mill in 1837-39. He has recorded the fact of his living here, but his account is very meager. He brought here his wife and children, but we are not informed that any other family resided here at the same time. He has, however, stated the method of transportation in and out. He and his family came from Prairie du Chien to Reads Landing on a steamboat, thence up the Chippewa and Red Cedar Rivers on a Machinaw boat. When he went away he got a Machinaw 30 feet long in which with his family he floated down the rivers to the place from which he came. He expresses himself with having been pleased with his work and his life here, and tells us of the Indians as providers and as pilferers, and describes the quite, stealthy and serpent-like glide of an Indian war party on its chase through a forest.

The enterprise of lumbering called for a united effort of a crew of men or of several crews of men located at one place or at nearby places, to cut, draw, skid and float logs to the sawmill; to there saw them into timber and lumber; and grade, pile and raft the same, and from the mill run the rafts to market. The sawmill was the central point of each particular enterprise; the place where the logs came, where they were sawed and from whence the product was shipped. It naturally became a center of settlement, a place where proprietors and those employed lived and to which their respective families came and remained. The lumber business decidedly fostered community life. To this business this valley owes its first settlements made at the very earliest period of settlement of the upper Mississippi River basin above Prairie du Chien.

The year 1846 ushered in here a new era; it is the date at which, socially, permanent and abiding things began at this place and have continued to this day; it separates the present period of records and recorded knowledge, concerning what has and is now happening here, from accounts before traditional and conjectural; it marks the time of the advent into the settlement at Wilson's Creek of woman as a permanent factor, and the commencement time, when marriage was instituted, in this valley, and after which children were born and reared, the time when the family became established in this prior settlement of gregarious woodsmen massed in crews.

Captain William Wilson established permanent family life on the present site of Menomonie, when in 1846 he established a home here, and brought here his wife and family. Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Bullard came with them. John Vail, one of the workmen, already had his wife here. A little later than the Wilsons and the Bullards came Mr. and Mrs. Jason Ball. These four were the only families living in Menomonie in 1846.

Of the arrival of Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Bullard, Randall has said: "At this early day there was no means of ingress or egress to any part of this valley except by the river, the keel boat, propelled by men with poles, going back and forth on the running boards, the lower end of every pole being furnished with a steel pointed iron socket, which was thrust against the bottom, while against the other end pressed with all his might if need be the shoulder of the "living engine," whose duty it was to drive the boat over sand-bars and rapids to its destination."

On the first trip up the Red Cedar, the river being low and the boat heavily laden, got around four miles below their destined home, and these ladies with their children, took the foot path winding along the side hills, and over the steep rocky bluffs to their new homes.

Of the many amusing incidents related by these ladies of their first experience in their secluded and nearly embargoed domicil, there is room here for only one. Soon after their arrival, Mrs. Blois Hurd came with her husband, who was a millwright, to reside at Gilbert's Mill, three miles below, and for some months, was the only woman residing there—a beautiful intelligent lady, but whose health was very delicate. Near the close of a day in September, Mr. Gilbert, (the old gentleman) came up and requested the immediate assistance of one or both of these neighbor women for Mrs. Hurd who had been taken very ill. How they were to get there, was now the difficult problem to solve, to walk three miles over the difficult, intricate foot-path, after the fatigues of the day, was too much for their strength. Their husbands were ready to accompany them, and a bright thought seized one of the party, a raft with oars all on, "ready to pull out," lay just below the mill; to "tie loose" was only the work of a moment, but not one of the men had ever run those rapids, or knew how to handle a raft, but in high glee away floated the party, their hearts full of benevolence, and their heads with novel ideas of traveling; down they went with wonderful speed, and hair-breath escapes from wreck, over the first falls, but on the second chain, where the intricate channel wound along between great boulders, the necessity for the guiding hand of an experienced pilot was soon made apparent, by the bow running high and dry on the rocks while the stern was whirled around by the rapid current, which threatened to break up the whole contrivance. No boat was near, night was coming on, the water was deep all around them, and there they were inextricably fast, nothing now remained but to wade ashore, and cautiously they followed Mr. Gilbert supporting each other, as waist-deep in water, whirling and eddying between the smooth boulders, they made their way to terra firma, and climbed the steep bank to the trail, and in their wet garments, drabbling in the sand, walked on to the residence of the sick lady, after again getting wet, by fording Gilbert's Creek.

The census reports both state and federal, reflect the untoward conditions existing here for settlement, up to 1860. In 1850 Chippewa County comprised practically all of the territory at present included in Buffalo, Trempealeau, Chippewa, Eau Claire, Rusk, Barron, Polk, St. Croix, Pierce, Dunn, and Pepin counties, and yet the United States census of that year gives the population of Chippewa County as 615. This nearly staggers belief, that less than 70 years ago the area of these eleven counties contained but 615 inhabitants subject to census enumeration. However, the state census of 1855 gave Dunn County only 1796 and the federal census of 1860 only raised it to 2704. An estimate of the number of persons at this place and in the camps in its immediate vicinity in 1850, based on the names appearing on the account books of the company gives 150.

Elisha Brown and Levi Vance came here in the summer of 1846 and each worked for Black and Knapp until in October of that year. They on October 28, jointly began logging on contract for this firm under the partnership name of Brown and Vance. It does not appear that they had had any former experience in this business, they apparently had no capital. As might well be predicted, they did not make money. They first established a camp at Lamb's Creek and later moved to the South Fork of Hay River. Their business was confined to transactions with Black and Knapp and their account shows a settlement November 21, 1847. They were then in debt $180.62. On September 12, 1850, there was a final settlement with them and they were still in debt. While the fact of this showing of continuous and ultimate indebtedness does not of itself show that these men did not make a profit, yet the character of the articles shown as charges in their account against the price of their logs indicates it. Most of the price was absorbed in charges for supplies and equipment to be used up in camp.

There is a tradition that Jason Ball died here in the spring of 1847 and that his widow that same year married Levi Vance, one of the partners of the firm of Brown and Vance. By Vance she had children and some of her descendants still live in this city. On the company's books there is some corrobative evidence of the death of Ball and of the marriage of his widow to Vance. From legendary story, Ball's burial place is placed by some at the big elm near the present warehouse and by others on the eastern bank of Wilson's Creek above the La Pointe Lumber yard.

Up to March 10, 1847, after July 26, 1846, Ball's account shows a daily liberal purchase of household supplies and if articles of family domestic use. After March 10, but few entries appear. On March 23, 1847, the account is credited with, "1 overcoat $11.50." On April 28, "By charge to Philander Ball $3.00." On Philander Ball's account of the same date is a charge "To credit of Mrs. Ball $4.00," and under the entry is another which does not appear on Jason Ball's account, "To credit of Mrs. Ball $20.00." The significance of this last entry lies in the fact The significance of this last entry lies in the fact that in the account of Brown and Vance, the same year, month not shown, there is a credit, "By Mrs. Vance, balance due her, charged to Philander Ball, $20.00." No charge on Philander Ball's account is found as a credit to Mrs. Vance. It seems probable that the same $20 is concerned in these two entries; that Black and Knapp charged it to Philander Ball and gave to the widow of Jason Ball some paper to the effect that it owed to her the amount of this charge; later that Mrs. Ball as Mrs. Levi Vance transferred it to Brown and Vance, that this firm presented it to Black and Knapp and were given credit on its books for the sum called for, $20.

Jason Ball's account was closed with the credits mentioned and one from John Vale for S1.25. These various credits seem to indicate that Jason Ball dropped out of the life of the settlement in some way, and the form of the credits in the closing of his account seemingly indentifying Mrs. Ball as Mrs. Vance indicate that Jason Ball died. We may look at the matter in one of two ways; that the legend that Jason Ball died and his widow married Vance is confirmed by the entries on the books, or that the probabilities arising from the entries on the books, of such death and marriage are substantiated by the legend.

The Wilsons and the Bullards remained here permanently. Levi Vance moved to another part of the county but as noted his descendants are still here. All that is known of Jason Ball rests entirely on tradition, save the entries in his personal account on the lumber company's books.

Present information regarding John and Fannie Vale comes from early written narratives and personal testimony of early settlers. In Randall's History of the Chippewa Valley is this reference to Mrs. Vale: "Since the departure of Allen and Branham, with their families, no female, or, only one, Mrs. Fannie Vail, had been bold enough to seclude themselves and undertake the hardships and privations of such an isolated abode."

This reference to the Allen and Branham families, would indicate that several of the early lumbermen may have had their white wives here in the days before 1846. It is well established, however, that there were no white women here except Mrs. Vale when the Wilsons and Bullards arrived.

A more extended mention of the Vales appears in a narrative written by Mrs. Bella French and published in 1875 by the Sketch Book Company, LaCrosse, Wisconsin. It purports to be founded upon tradition but its language suggests that the narrative is somewhat colored by the imagination of the writer, and is confined almost exclusively to an account of the death of Mrs. Vale at the cabin of A. Lemon and of her burial at a nearby place. John Vale is described as an old man, uneducated and much given to drink and Mrs. Vale as a woman who had lived a hard life and "in the matter of civilization, was but little above the savages." This expression is emphasized by the further statement that two white women, Mrs. Vale included, as one, had "been among the Indians so long that they had about forgotten that they did belong to the Caucassian race." No clue to the name of the other of the two women referred to by this writer, is given by her.

This account of the death of Mrs. Vale is a grewsome tale. The asserted squalor of the place where she died, the revolting detailed circumstances of her death and burial and the impassioned action of her husband on these two successive occasions need not be here repeated, but it is very questionable whether the place as described and the scenes as depicted justify the conclusion above stated.

The books of the lumber company show that Vale in 1846 and 1847 was a common laborer and was credited with work to the amount of $423.40, and in 1847-48 with $239.72. Does a savage at low wages perform labor to the value of $663.12 inside of three years. Vale's account opens in the fall of 1846 and closes March 19, 1849. From October 28 to December, 1850, Vale again ran an account but it was small and he went away in debt to nearly the total amount of this his last account.

From Mrs. French's narrative it would seem that it was in the fall of 1850 that Mrs. Vale died. Her name appears on the books of the company but once. It is in a credit to Capt. Wilson, under date of September 6, 1847; "By boarding Stickney and Fanny Vale when sick, S12.50." Mrs. Vale may have been but "little above" the savages yet Capt. Wilson and his wife took her in and ministered unto her.

On the company's books in November, 1848. Vale is charged with "6 pounds of beefsteak." This is the first instance where a charge for meat is found designated as "beefsteak," on these books. His account shows a fair average for family food supplies, large charges for liquor and little that was designed for the personal service or individual comfort of the wife. At the death of his wife, Vale, according to Mrs. French's statement threatened to go and drown himself. What became of him she does not record. It is probable that this couple had knocked about the frontier half a life time, living often in penury and dying in want. They were one of the four families that Capt. Wilson gathered here in 1846 with which to start his policy of building up a stable community with workmen having resident families.

Modern investigators have been reluctant to believe Mrs. French's low estimate of the Vale family, and are inclined to believe that she was striving for dramatic effect rather than for historic accuracy or justice to pioneer womanhood.

Recent testimony regarding Mrs. Vale has been given by William Lemon of Weston in this county, that Mrs. Vale died at his father's house at Varney's Creek, formerly Tainter's Creek, and that he was at home at the time. This is a small stream that empties into the Red Cedar River on its west side about one and onehalf miles below Irvington and five miles below Menomonie. Anthony Lemon, William's father, when he first came into this country went to Chippewa Falls, from there to Dunnville, then to Varney Creek, later to Gilbert's Mill and later still to Eau Galla. In 1850 he lived at Varney Creek; William was then nine years old. He remembers John Vale as a tall slim man of a crooked appearance and as being a hard drinker of intoxicating liquors, but of a kindly manner and disposition, and Mrs. Vale as mean spirited and especially vixenish in word and action toward her husband. At this time she repelled his every advance of attentive kindness. Perhaps this was not an inate disposition of Mrs. Vale but a shrewishness acquired by reason of the hard condition of her life. Mr. Lemon distinctly remembers the circumstances of Mrs. Vale's death but does not recollect where she was buried but thinks it probable that she was buried on the east side of the river opposite Varney Creek on the prairie. He remembers that Vale, after his wife's death staid at Varney Creek a short time and recollects that it was told about the camp not long after that he had gone down the river.

Two incidents served to fix the memory of the Vales in the mind of young Lemon. One that at the near approach of death he remembers it was said Mrs. Vale should not die on a feather bed; that she should be put on a straw tick. Whether this was the expression of a superstitious early day notion or merely the enforcement of some economic or sanitary domestic practice the writer is unable to say. The other incident was, that during Mrs. Vale's last sickness she gave to his mother, Mrs. Lemon, two old fashioned heavy flatirons. One of these with the handle gone. William Lemon now has and in a somewhat changed form uses it in the setting of saws.

From another source, from a person who then occasionally lived at the Upper Mill, it is learned that Mrs. Vale figured in one of the frequent Indian scares of those times. One day word came to Captain Wilson that an Indian was assaulting It is to be believed that Mrs. Vale was a woman small in stature and Fannie Vale. of spare form. The Captain went at once to her cabin, located near and east of the site of the present piano factory, and found that an Indian had Mrs. Vale against the inner wall of the cabin and was choking her. When rescued she was nearly strangled and was black in the face. When the Captain entered the cabin he grabbed the Indian whose blanket immediately slipped off and the Captain clutched him by the tufts of hair on his head and pulled him to the door. There the Indian braced himself, a hand on each side of the opening for the door. In his determination to oust the Indian the Captain had dragged him so energetically that upon stopping at the door the Indian's hair was pulled out. Resistance on the part of the Indian then ceased and he went away and laid down on the nearby river bank where members of his tribe came to see him. Rumors of dire vengeance on the part of the Indian's friends became rife, but when the Captain met the principal Indians and had explained how it had all come about they put away their wrath and said the Indian was justly punished. The Indian's assault was on account of Mrs. Vale's refusal to turn over to him all of the bread that she had baked for her own use.

The women mentioned on the company books from 1846 to 1850 are: Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Bullard, Mrs. Clair, (she lived with the Bullard's) Mrs. Ball, (later Mrs. Vance.) Mrs. Vale and a certain Phebe Brown. The least is known about the last woman mentioned. She had an account which in 1850 shows a credit by "22 prs. mittens $5.50 and 8 flannel shirts $2.00." The items of this account indicate a habit of industry that pertains to the Caucasian race rather than to general savagery. What man is there who on the facts known will be so ungallant as to assert that any of these women were near savages? Probably Phebe Brown was the wife of Elisha Brown and she probably stayed at the camp of Brown and Vance on Lamb's Creek. In an early mortgage record, in volume 2, page 624 of mortgages in the register's office in this county, "Elisha Brown and Phebe Brown his wife" are named as mortgagors.

Mr. Bullard opened an account at the Company's store July 13, 1846, and from the credits on his account it would seem that for several years he ran the boarding house, worked in the mill, got out logs in the pinery and cut lath. Two of the entries in his account would indicate that the widow Clare worked at the boarding house: "August 15, 1846, 1 pair side combs for Mrs. Clare, 80.19;" "August 5, 1847, to Mrs. Claire's bill to January, 1947, S26.72." That Mrs. Bullard was here seems evident from this charge, "November 1, 1847, pair shoes for Mrs. B., $1.25." That Mr. Bullard at that time had a daughter who may have been away is indicated by the charge, "May 26, 1847, cash paid out for daughter, $13.55." This daughter, some years later, married Samuel B. French.

The same store accounts show that July, 1846, Jason Ball was charged, "to amount of steamboat fare, $8.00," and in August, 1846, he was credited by "37 days cooking, $25.34." These charges in a way corroborate the early statements regarding the coming here of Jason Ball. A further entry in his account, "March 23, 1847, to 2 notes of hand, handed to Mrs. Ball," tends to prove that he then had a wife here.

After 1846 there was a successive annual increase in the number of families that settled here. Women came and remained. The state census of 1855 shows of females 358 of males 726, in the Menomonie precinct, practically one-half as many females as males. The families came and business success came. The company's lumber business increased amazingly and no other industry for 14 years was started here. The camp became a permanent settlement.

In April, 1847, Mrs. Claire, already mentioned, married William Whitcomb. Two years later, Thomas Piercewell and Margaret Scott were married.

In 1858 the occupied part of the site of Menomonie was that on the north side of the river. The Wisconsin Milling Company's office now stands where probably the first cabin was built in 1822-24. It is the spot upon which in 1830-31 stood the trading shanty, and upon which ever since, to this time, has stood either a trading shanty, a store or an office. There was not, up to 1858, any individual ownership of the lands or of houses. The lumber company owned everything.

In 1854, the erection of a first mill, the first building to be put up on the south side of the river was begun. In 1857-58 a bridge was built across the river where the present bridge stands. The mill and bridge were built by the company. In 1858 a village plat on the south side of the river was surveyed. It was duly mapped and recorded. The next year the sale of lots commenced. Thus in 1859 there began still another period in the development of the city.

But before proceeding any further with the general history of Menomonie, it is necessary to glance back once more, and, starting at the very beginning, narrate in a detailed and consecutive manner the story of the Knapp, Stout & Company; for, this famous lumbering concern for many years practically was Menomonie; the foregoing chapters of this volume have been merely preliminary to its history, and what afterwards remains to be told will be largely the story of what was since grown out of its work in this region. While this task will make it necessary to deal with certain subjects that have already been more or less casually mentioned, the advantage of having the story related in a systematic and consecutive manner as to details, and dealt with as a complete entity in a separate chapter will outweigh the inconvenience of occasional reiteration. The story of the rise and growth of this great concern has been told on several occasions, in different publications, but never without a considerable admixture of error, not to mention the omission of important Its early history, in particular, was never correctly given, and with reasonfacts. ably full detail, until written by C. E. Freeman and read by him as a historical paper before the Unity Club of Menomonie as representing the Memorial Library some years ago. Later in a general way it was presented in a paper read before the January meeting, 19—, of the Commercial Club. Mr. Freemans paper begins far back and with meticulous care traces every step in the history of lumbering operations in the valley up to the year 1858, when the site of Menomonie was surveyed and platted, together with the successive steps in the formation of the Knapp, Stout & Company. It will be given verbatim in the following chapter, supplemented by additional data from other sources refering to the later history of the company. Mr. Freeman's article includes the consecutive paragraphs in quotation marks.

CHAPTER X

THE KNAPP, STOUT & CO. COMPANY

The original Knapp. Stout & Company was organized on August 20, 1853. The co-partnership was based on an inventory of an estimate value of $70,000 holdings by the gentlemen who entered into the agreement. The story of the acquiring of the various interests dates from 1846.

William Wilson, a resident of Fort Madison in the then territory of Iowa, who previously had had some experience in lumbering operations in northern Pennsylvania, having been informed that there were vast pineries and excellent inducements and opportunities for investment on the Chippewa River and its tributaries in the territory of Wisconsin, concluded to make personal examination. Accordingly he made the trip to the Chippewa and Red Cedar counties, and his comprehensive business grasp, practical knowledge and keen insight enabled him to see and determine at once that here was a rare opportunity for investment in pine lands and to engage in the manufacture of lumber. He returned to his home full of enthusiasm and confidence, and told his friends of the beautiful rivers, vast forests of pine and rare opportunities for investment and labor and the securing of renumerative reward for each.

He found in John H. Knapp, also of Fort Madison, one who saw like himself his life's best opportunity, and who earnestly and enthusiastically offered to join him in an effort to gain a competency in the almost uninhabitable wilds of the Chippewa Valley. On May 19, 1846 the two men executed a co-partnership agreement for lumbering operations in the Chippewa Valley. They were not, however, the first arrivals or pioneers in this business here, though the enterprise they started in time so far over-shadowed the comparatively insignificant work of their predecessors that the latter has almost been lost sight of. Mr. Freeman's story of the evolution of the Knapp-Stout concern, together with the antecedent facts, referred to at the end of the previous chapter, is as follows.

"He who studies the past growth of this city gets at the same time the history of the city and the story of a great lumber enterprise. Until recent years the history of either well might be taken as the narrative of the other. Among the fruits of that enterprise are two of our city's important benefactions—the Memorial Library and the Stout schools. That this lumber business was a great enterprise is a fact attested by tradition, by the pages of contemporarily published lumber magazines and periodicals, by the statements of some now living who were engaged in its later year activities and by the business records of the company that conducted the enterprise.

"A writer for the Wisconsin Historical Society Collections, in a book of the Industries of Wisconsin during and after the Civil War, has stated that Knapp, Stout & Company was said, in the early '70s, to be the greatest lumber corporation in the world; that it in 1873, on the Red Cedar and Chippewa Rivers, owned 115,000 acres of pine lands, and had in its employ 1200 men. The real estate book of this company shows that during its existence it owned in the valley of the Red Cedar River alone some 490,000 acres of pine lands.

"The first occupancy here for the lumber business was in 1822 or 1823. The first permanent settlement, that which has continued to this day, was in 1830. In 1830-31, 100,000 feet of lumber was cut here. At our river mill the last log was sawed in August, 1901. There was a continuous cutting of logs into lumber for 70 years, the once appointed term of a man's life, but more years, by far, than the actual span of life of many a man who in those years worked here.

"It is evident, in the association of past events and in years of settlement, that this is an old city. Its age, measured by years, is best understood by a comparison of its permanent beginning with the time when other cities near and far had their beginnings. "A search of the records of the state shows that Milwaukee was settled but a few years earlier; Madison in 1837, seven years later; Chippewa Falls, 1838, eight years after; Black River Falls, 1839, nine years later; Hudson, 1841, eleven years after, and Eau Claire. 1845, fifteen years after. Going outside of the state it is found that Chicago had but two families one year after the site of Menomonie was first occupied; that St. Paul was not settled until 1838, eight years after permanent settlement here.

"In the administrative function of the state it is presumed that every person knows the law. In considering the history of a community, a town or a city it is assumed that every person knows the history of the place where he resides. We all know that as a matter of fact the presumption and the assumption are mere fiction, that there is scant basis of truth for either to stand upon. A decent regard for the feelings of our fellows constrains us to admit that we all do know the history of the place in which we live.

"By way of apology, for considering the history of this city at this time, perhaps it may suffice in connection with the admission that all permanent residents do know the city history, to suggest that each year ushers in a new generation and each week strangers are welcomed as permanent settlers, and to call attention to the fact that no authoritative publication in book form is available for correct information for the new generations and for the new settlers.

"The books treating of the history of Menomonie are: The History of the Chippewa Valley, published in Chicago; The History of the Lumber Industry of Northern Wisconsin, published in Chicago; A Sketch of Menomonie, by Mrs. Bella French, and an Early History of the Chippewa Valley, written and published by Thomas E. Randall, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, in 1875; the others are founded upon it so far as the early history of our city is concerned. All of these books are grossly inaccurate in statement as to dates, and as to the personal names of proprietors, and as to the relative times of their ownership, and as to the mutual association of persons in firms or corporations. Even the writer on Civil War industries referred to, whose work was published by the Wisconsin Historical Society, makes the blunder of misnaming the corporation operating here, giving it as "Knapp Stout and Company." It should have been The Knapp Stout & Co. Company. Again, he antedates the operations of this corporation by laying the stress as to his statistics at a time some five years prior to its organization. He refers to 1873 and this corporation was not organized until 1878.

"The matter of a name of a corporation is not a trivial thing. The exact name of a corporation stands to it in the same stead as does the baptismal name of a person. The corporation is an entity, a corporate thing, and at its organization the state stands sponsor for its name. By the name given it, it is known in the law, and by no other name. The corporation operating here was named The Knapp Stout & Co. Company. When a part or parts of this name are eliminated through carelessness its identity is lost. It may not legally contract in a shorter name and it cannot be successfully prosecuted in such shorter name in a civil or a criminal tribunal of the state.

"Of all of the early settlements in this state this settlement has probably the most complete original record evidence of its initial time of commencement and of the precise local place of its beginning. Its first step and all subsequent steps are authenticated, by either the written statement of some one who participated in the events constituting the step, by files or records of the transactions of the step in some court of record of the state, by the extant original instruments attesting transfers or agreements as to transfers of the site or by preserved daily original business entries in business books kept from 1846 continuously to the recent close of the active affairs of the corporation that finally took over and continued the business enterprise here. Any one certain fact in our history may be evidenced by more than one of these testimonies.

"Such being the available material it would seem to be our duty to correct rather than by inaction help to perpetuate the errors that outside narrators have engrafted upon our local history. It were well that some "Truthful James" enter the field and tell in simple language what he knows about the scenes, the persons and the events that make up our aforetime history. As an aid to such a coming result I give to you an abstract of the information that lays open at your door.

"The first location and establishment of a dam and mill in this valley was in 1822-23, on Wilson Creek, at its mouth. These were destroyed by a flood within a few months after commencement of work and before their completion. Both were rebuilt, but not until 1830-31. By March, 1831, 100,000 feet of lumber had been sawed at the Wilson Creek mill, but in June of that year the dam was swept out by a freshet and the lumber carried away and scattered. This dam at Wilson Creek was probably on the exact site of the present dam on that stream.

"There is no definite and well authenticated account of an occupation even temporarily on this river for any purpose before this of 1822-23. Between the occupancy of 1822-23 and that of 1830 it is probable that some private forays were made on the timber growing here, but no mention is found of them. Lawfully, only those having a permit from the United States could then cut timber on this river, and during this period it is believed no such permit was issued.

In both instances, that of 1822-23 and that of 1830-31, James H. Lockwood and Joseph Rolette, rival fur traders, both of Prairie du Chien, were the backers of the enterprises. In the first venture one Hardin Perkins was interested and a man named Armstrong was a part owner in the second. Perkins lost his services and $1,500 and Lockwood & Rolette divided the remainder of the loss. Armstrong, to get rid of him, was paid $500 for his interest in the business venture of 1830-31, before the dam and mill at Wilson Creek were completed. Then an interest was given to one Isaac Saunders.

"From August 11, 1831, until the fall of 1837 we find no mention of this mill by any one claiming to have been here during that period. John H. Fonda, an early resident of Prairie du Chien, in a published statement, states that he was at the mill on the Menomonie River in the years 1837, 1838 and 1839, in all two years. He calls the mill Lockwood's mill.

'From a statement made by James H. Lockwood, the last known owners before 1841 of the Wilson Creek mill were Lockwood and Rolette, with an interest in Isaac Saunders, given to him to induce him to take charge of the business there. By Fonda's statement it would appear that in 1837, 1838 and 1839, Lockwood owned There is no evidence of a transfer of the interest of Rolette or of Saunders this mill. in and to this mill. Yet it is probable that not only the interest of Rolette, but that of Saunders, was, at some time, conveyed, for by a deed recorded in Crawford County, it appears that a transfer was made of the Wilson Creek mill to James Green by James H. Lockwood and Hiram S. Allen. This deed bears date January 8, 1841. By the same records it appears that Green, by a deed, dated May 18, 1842, conveyed this mill to William Black. The records of the county court of Crawford County show that William Black died in 1844 and that David Black, described in the petition for administration of his estate as the nearest relative living in this vicinity, became administrator of his estate. An inventory was filed which showed only personal property. David Black asked for an got an extension of two years in which to settle the estate, which in fact never was settled so far as the records Before the two years for which the extension was given had expired, David show Black died. It is conjectured that David Black in some way acquired title to the Wilson Creek property through these administration proceedings, for by a deed recorded in Crawford County, dated June 16, 1846, for a consideration of $2,000, he conveyed to John H. Knapp an undivided one-half interest therein. It was but a few weeks after the giving of this deed that he, David Black, died.

"A partnership was formed between David Black and John H. Knapp at the time of the sale of the one-half interest by which Mr. Knapp was to carry on a lumber business at the mill for the firm styled "Black and Knapp" for a term of five years.

"David Black's estate was administered through the county court of Crawford County and the administrator thereof became authorized to and did give to Mr. Knapp a deed of the one-half interest remaining in David Black. This deed is dated May 4, 1850. For this one-half interest S2.600 was paid. On thousand dollars in cash and two short time notes of eight hundred dollars each. It will be remembered that for the first one-half interest Mr. Knapp paid two thousand dollars. By the record it appears that now John H. Knapp became the sole owner of the Wilson Creek mill, paying therefor the sum of forty-six hundred dollars. As a matter of fact, however, Mr. William Wilson, through whose enterprise this purchase was made, was a joint and equal owner with Mr. Knapp. On the death of David Black it was the legal duty of Mr. Knapp to close up the partnership business, but it is evident that this sacrifice of the property was avoided by a contract entered into with the administrator of Black's estate. by which Mr. Knapp agreed to continue to conduct the business. He did so until 1850 when he bought the remaining one-half interest of the administrator.

"It is not difficult, from this time on, to trace the successive ownership of this property. In 1823, and again in 1830, the right acquired by Lockwood and Rolette rested on a permit from the United States government to cut timber on Indian lands, supplemented by a contract with the Indians by which they were to receive $1,000 per year in goods for their consent to the privilege granted. The first avowed claim to any specific tract of land at Wilson Creek appears in the deed from Lockwood and Allen to Green, wherein the grantors covenant to put the grantee into possession of land on the Menomonie River in Carver Grant, so-called, one-half mile square. By a description of the survey, the mouth of Wilson Creek was placed at the middle of the east boundary line of this square. The deed from Green to William Black conveys the same tract, so also do the deeds of David Black and of the administrator of David Black, to Mr. Knapp. It has been noted that no transfer from William Black to David Black is found, and it is surmised that title came to the latter by administration of William Black's estate.

"The country about here had not been surveyed when the deed of Black to Knapp was given, and it contains this promise: "that whenever the above tracts of land shall be sold by the United States or when the same shall be in the market, that then and in such case the said Black shall either prove up a pre-emption or purchase the same at the land sales and convey the one equal undivided half thereof to said Knapp, he, said Knapp, paying one equal half of the consideration money."

"Black's death occurred before the land was pre-empted or sold and before it came into market.

"In May, 1846, before the purchase by Knapp from Black had been consumated by deed, Mr. Knapp and William Wilson entered into an agreement by the terms of which they were to carry on a lumber business at the Wilson Creek mill for five years. This agreement, although technically not a partnership agreement between Mr. Knapp and Mr. Wilson, was in effect such an agreement to carry out the agreement on the part of Mr. Knapp with David Black. Its effect was to make Knapp, Wilson and Black partners, and they conducted the business under the firm name of Black and Knapp until 1850 when the deed was given by the administrator of the estate of David Black to Mr. Knapp.

"The death of David Black made it impossible to secure title to the land described in his deed in the manner therein agreed upon. A United States survey of the lands was made in 1849, and we find that William Wilson, on April 24, 1851, by pre-emption entered lots 1, 2 and 3, section 26, township 28 north, of range 13 west, which corresponds in area and location closely to the trace conveyed by David Black. Mr. Wilson four days later, April 28, 1851, conveyed these lots to John H. Knapp. On this pre-emption Wilson received a patent dated April 19, 1855. The title granted by this patent, by operation of law, inured to Mr. Knapp and his grantees by virtue of the conveyance to him of April 28, 1851. The remainder of section 26 was pre-empted by other persons in 1855, who were then members of the firm of Knapp, Stout & Company.

After the conveyance by the administrator of the estate of David Black, and the entry by Wilson, the changes in the associates in business and the title to the property at Wilson Creek mill were rapid. August 19, 1850, Knapp sold a onethird interest in the business to Andrew Tainter, and a new set of books were opened in the firm name of Knapp and Tainter. Knapp and Tainter sold within the next three years interests in the business to B. B. Downs and Henry L. Stout.

"To give a summary of the successive steps in this four-part partnership, first, Mr. Knapp sold to B. B. Downs a one-twentieth interest; second, Mr. Stout bought the interest of Downs, whereupon Tainter sold to Stout a one-twelfth of the whole property and Mr. Knapp sold to him seven-sixteenths of the whole business. This gave Mr. Stout a one-fourth interest.

"The new and old owners formed a co-partnership as of August 20, 1853, based on an inventory of an estimated value at $70,000, to be known as Knapp, Stout & Company. The apportionment of interests made on the books shows Knapp, one-half, Tainter one-quarter, Stout one-fifth, and Downs one-twentieth. It will be borne in mind that William Wilson's interest is here included in Mr. Knapp's one-half. In 1854 Knapp sold to Thomas B. Wilson a one-fourth interest in the business with the agreement that the firm name should remain as then fixed. Downs, in the same year, sold his interest to Stout, thus reducing the number of partners to four, each having a one-fourth interest. But, in fact, the interest of William Wilson was carried in the one-fourth part of Thomas B. Wilson, he making a declaration of trust showing his father's interest in his share.

"This somewhat circumstantial and detailed account of the organization of the firm of Knapp, Stout & Company is given in the hope that it may correct some of the whimsical and unsatisfactory statements which have appeared in histories of the Chippewa Valley and have been written into the biographies of the deceased members of this firm.

"The private papers and the private records of the last line of owners showing the establishment of their business and the successive firm names of their enterprise have been put in my hands and I have used them, in connection with information found in the public records of Crawford and Dunn counties, in an earnest endeavor to give a correct statement of events, leading from the first settlement here up to the permanent organization of the lumber company as a corporation.

"An investigation will show a certain parallelism of continuous advancement in business and in social development. The temporary logging camp had a force of men, only, independent and self-reliant, unrestrained, save at times of actual work; a somewhat permanent camp was attended with a self regulated hamlet; a more permanent camp with a politically organized town government and a permanent corporate organized business became seated in a civic organized city.

"After the formation of the partnership company Mr. Knapp sold to John H. Douglass an interest and there were then six members of the firm although record title appeared in only five members. These later members were John H. Knapp, William Wilson, Andrew Tainter, Henry L. Stout, Thomas B. Wilson and John H. Douglass, named in the order in which their repective interests were taken. These men, at first some of them as a group and later all of them as a group, conducted business under the firm name of Knapp, Stout & Company from August 20, 1853, until March 16, 1878. On June 1, 1878, they formally transferred their firm and individual interests to a corporation organized by them.

"In order to preserve, as nearly as the law would permit, the old firm name under which they had done business there was prefixed to such old name the word "The,' and affixed thereto the word 'Company', making the name of the corporation "The Knapp Stout & Co. Company."

The capital stock of the corporation was fixed at $2,000,000. John H. Knapp was made president; Andrew Tainter, vice president; Thomas B. Wilson, secretary; and John H. Douglas, treasurer. Of these men, William Wilson, John H. Knapp. Andrew Tainter and Thomas B. Wilson actively identified with the history of Menomonie as residents here. Henry L. Stout was a prominent resident of Dubuque and ended his days there. John H. Douglas moved from Dubuque to St. Louis and ended his days there. John Knapp, son of John H. Knapp, became a stockholder in the corporation, and soon afterward Peter E. Wilson, eldest son of Thomas B. Wilson, and William W. Cassidy of Read's Landing, also became stockholders. "Of the three early mills along the Red Cedar River we have a traditionary account. It has been given by Mr. Thomas E. Randall, now deceased, late of Eau Claire, Wisconsin. Some years ago he wrote a series of sketches on the early history of the Chippewa Valley, printed first as newspaper articles, later published in book form. He did not come to the valley until 1845, and located and lived to the time of his death on the main Chippewa. He and Hiram S. Allen became great friends. An inspection of his book reveals but incidental mention of the Menomonie or Red Cedar River, and for the most part such mention is for the purpose of giving incidents in the life of Mr. Allen. The traditions as given by Randall have been copied in subsequent publications concerning this county as being its early history.

"As given by Randall some of the legendary history runs as follows: 'In the spring of 1828, Street and Lockwood erected at Wilson Creek the first mill built in the Chippewa Valley. This firm constructed a second mill at Gilbert Creek. In 1835 Street and Lockwood sold both mills to H. S. Allen. In 1839 Allen built a sawmill at Irvine Creek, which he rebuilt in 1841. He then owned the three mills called Upper, Middle and Lower Mills. The same year (1841) he sold the Lower mill to Stephen S. McCann; it was burned in 1843; in the fall of 1841 the Upper mill was sold to one Green, who soon after transferred it to a Mr. Pearson, by whom the first dam across the Menomonie was erected; he soon sold it to an old gentleman by the name of Black, who, in 1844, transferred a half interest to Knapp and Wilson, who, the following year, associated themselves with Mr. Stout under the firm name of Knapp, Stout & Co.; in a later article this event is placed by Randall as of 1846; and that Knapp, Stout & Co. in 1860 sold to Andrew Tainter a one-fourth interest in their business.'

"Generally speaking, it may matter but little to the general reader in giving early local history whether events be placed within five or even ten years of their real occurrence or whether names of settlers and owners connected with such events be given as Jones or Brown, but, to the local resident it is sometimes exasperating to find the antecedents of his present personal surroundings grossly misstated.

"In the present instance it is well established that the first mill here was built in 1822-23, not in 1828, and that no mill was built here in 1828, but that in 1830 and 1831 this mill was built by Lockwood and Rolette and none at any time by Street and Lockwood; that Mr. Black mentioned by Randall did not in 1844, nor at any other time, transfer the property to Knapp and Wilson, but that another Black did transfer a one-half interest in such property in 1846 to John H. Knapp; that Mr. Stout did not associate himself with Knapp and Wilson in 1844 nor 1846, but not until 1853; that Andrew Tainter acquired an interest in 1850, instead of 1860, and prior to Mr. Stout's purchase.

"The records show that Lockwood and Allen conveyed the Upper Mill to Green, but at the same time it shows that out of a consideration of $5,000 Green gave back a mortgage of $4,671 running to Lockwood. While these transactions might indicate an interest of Allen in the Upper Mill they negative the idea that Allen owned it and sold it to Green. There is no direct evidence that Allen ever owned this mill.

"As the records show a deed to Green in January, 1841, and one from Green to William Black in May, 1842, it seems improbable, in the absence of direct evidence, that there was an intermediary named Pearson, as stated by Randall to be the fact, who made some progress in the erection of a dam across the Menomonie River. Regarding the dam across the river, we find in the deed of David Black, given four years after the time stated as being the time when Pearson entered upon its construction, this proviso: that the grantor also transfers an equal undivided interest in and to a contract in relation to the building of a new mill on and a dam across the said Menomonie River. This proviso would seem to indicate a project for the building of a dam and mill rather than the completion of an enterprise already well forwarded. In the accounts of Black and Knapp there is no appearance of this contract having been in any way entered upon or carried out, although the fact is a dam had been constructed across the river before October, 1849. Perhaps the death, soon after this deed was given, of Mr. Black may have put the project in abeyance. "As to the time when Mr. Stout acquired his interest and as to the time when the co-partnership under the name of Knapp, Stout & Co. was formed, an entry on the firm books of Knapp and Tainter shows it to be as of August 20th, 1853, instead of 1844 as stated by Randall.

"To corroborate Lockwood in his statement that he and Rolette built the mill, we have from the United States Department of the Interior copies of the application of Lockwood for, and of the permit by the War Department to build this mill, which shows that Rolette was associated with Lockwood. Schoolcraft, when in 1831 he was at the Wilson Creek mill, was told by the man in charge that the mill belonged to "Messrs. Rolette and Lockwood." Fonda in 1837 calls this mill Lockwood's. The permit here mentioned required a contract with the Indians through the Government Agent. General Street was at that time such agent at Prairie du Chien. Popular suspicion may have connected him with the enterprise and Randall have merely written the suspicion into his sketch.

"It was long the fashion to write the histories of monarchies by setting forth the facts as to the rise, the reign and fall of monarchs. It may be a suspicion that I have here given you as a history of our city but a list of successive proprietors who have in succession each obtained, held and relinquished the ownership of the Upper Mill, the early name of this site.

"To set out in detail the progressive economic story of the former business period here with its accompanying social advancement would take too much of your time.

"The ground that I have gone over is that whereon chaotic error has heretofore mostly been found, the field wherein wrong statements have been most persistently repeated.

"Up to 1858 the occupied part of the site of Menomonie was that on the north side of the river. The Wisconsin Milling Company office now stands where probably the first cabin was built in 1822-23. It is the spot upon which in 1830-31 stood the trading shanty, upon which, always, ever since, to this time, has stood either a trading shanty, a store or an office. There was not up to that time (1858) any individual ownership of lands or of houses. The lumber company owned everything.

"In 1854 the erection of a grist mill, the first building to be put up on the south side of the river, was begun. In 1857-58 a bridge was built across the river where the present bridge stands. The mill and the bridge were built by the lumber company. In 1858 a village plat on the south side of the river was surveyed. It was plotted and recorded. The next year the sale of lots commenced. From this time on the general histories of this place are for the most part accurate in statement although meager in narrative."

Thus ends Mr. Freeman's narrative as he wrote it. That which follows is derived, as previously stated, from other sources, but is printed with Mr. Freeman's approval.

The little single sash sawmill of Black & Green had a capacity for manufacturing from 5,000 to 7,000 feet of "timber" (lumber?) per day. The sawing and rafting of the lumber, running it to market and selling it in those early days devolved mainly upon the proprietors. There was at that time no market for the sale of lumber, or the purchase of food, nor any of the commodities essential to living, even on the frontier, nearer than Prairie du Chien. The only means of communication with the business world was by keel boat down the river or by the Indian trail.

About 1850 a new mill, 60 x 100 feet in ground plan, was built by the firm, and two years later a gang saw was placed in the mill. This mill burned Dec. 26, 1856, and the firm then erected a large water sawmill on the same site, which was enlarged from time to time, and was in operation at the time of the fiftieth anniversary of the company's activities.

They bravely and energetically met every obstacle and disadvantage, each year adding a little to the plant and resources of the firm. The company did not during the first 41 years of existence declare a dividend nor divide its profits. The members of the firm clearly perceived that at no far distant day, the value of uncut pine lands would of necessity become greatly enhanced, and on this account, as well as the maintenance of their business they used much of their surplus capital in the purchase of large tracts of timber mostly pine lands which in those days were obtainable at low prices.

Among these were the purchases from C. C. Washburn, Cornell University, Russell Sage, Haley & Pitcher, the North Wisconsin and the Omaha railroad companies, the United States government and the state of Wisconsin. The purchase from C. C. Washburn in 1863 was over 10,000 acres of land and the mill at Waubeek. The purchase from the Cornell University in 1879-80 was also over 10,000 acres. The total purchase of pine lands in Wisconsin as shown by its real estate records were about 530,000 acres of which about 490,000 acres were in the Red Cedar valley.

Regarding the extent of the pine forests in this valley, it is a matter of history that they were included in the great pine belt which extended across the states of Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota. Some men now living tell of the immense tracts of pine they saw in this valley in an early day. In many instances in solidly covered contiguous sections were found the best quality pine trees that grew in the valley. Many still living can remember seeing in the spring of each year the pond at this place, now Lake Menomin, covered to far above the cemetery with saw logs so thickly massed that scarce a square yard of open water could be seen in the whole area covered, more than 300 acres. This supply was for the current year, the logs to be replaced by the next winter's cut.

The amount of lumber cut by this company was enormous, but there is not sufficient data at hand from which to make even an approximate accurate statement of the total. No estimate based on an average cut per acre of the lands purchased can be of value. In two instances, that of the Washburn and the Haley-Pitcher purchases, a large acreage was of cut-over land. From 1846 to 1851, the pine trees manufactured were cut on government lands under permits from the departments at Washington. Early inventories and sawmill accounts have been destroyed or lost by accident of flood or fire.

The vast area of cut-over land was eventually devoted to agriculture. Some of the finest farms in Barron County, one of the leading dairy communities in the world were developed from lands once covered with dense pine forests and cut-over by Knapp, Stout & Co.

In the 70's Knapp, Stout & Co., was said to be the greatest lumber corporation in the world. It was certainly most excellently situated so far as established facilities for carrying on the lumber business was concerned. It had nearly complete mastery of the Red Cedar River Valley; its mill dams and its mills were located at most of the available sites on the main river; its flooding dams were built across every northern tributary and contiguous to each such dam there were located as many logging camps as could be accommodated in their output of logs by the forced artificial flooding capacity of the streams; at the mills were well stocked supply and merchandise stores; on every route from each central mill to its outlying camps were, at easy stages, stopping places; at these stopping places there was either a farm or a large camp garden; at the mills were local lumber yards and at most of the important towns on the Mississippi River as far down as St. Louis were sales yards, each with its complement of finishing mills.

The efficiency of this system of mills, stores, farms, gardens, stopping places, local and sales yards and the right of exclusive control of the upper small streams of the Red Cedar River can best be summed up by citing the remark made by Mr. William Carson, a lumberman of Eau Claire, and one of the founders of Eau Galle this county, made at a time when the price of lumber was, for the producer, ruinously low. He stated, that owing to the system of operation here described, the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company could manufacture lumber at the then general market prices and make a profit, while lumbermen on other rivers could not at the same prices get back the cost of production.

In the earlier years in this region men were averse to looking forward to a life of work for wages. It was not uncommon then to see a man buy horses, harness, and a wagon, and haul produce or products under a general contract or at a specific price per load rather than drive an employer's team at daily, weekly or monthly wages. This man cheerfully faced loss rather than take personal service. It was usually in such a case a loss, if the man's income at the end of the year were to be compared with the amount of wages he might have received for the same period of time. Some, or all, of these things, were sure to happen; loss of a horse by disease or accident; loss of time, from lameness of the horse, from laying off for repairs to be made, by the shoeing of horses or in the hauling of hay and feed.

In 1873 the firm owned 115,000 acres of pine lands on the Chippewa and Menomonie Rivers, from which it cut and manufactured during that year, in its various stream and water power mills, 55,000,000 feet of lumber, 20,000,000 shingles and 20,000,000 lath and pickets. It maintained at Menomonie, in addition to its lumber mills, store, and stables, a foundry machine shop and blacksmith shop, a grain warehouse of 40,000 bushels capacity and a grist mill in which its yearly requirement of flour was ground. It owned six large farms in Dunn and Barron counties containing 6,000 to 7,000 acres of improved land; upon which was raised large supplies of wheat and pork. It conducted general merchandise stores, the annual sales of which amounted to $750,000. Its dams and camps were on every available site in the valley. Large lumber vards were maintained at Read's Landing, Dubuque and St. Louis. Twelve hundred men were on its pavroll.

As the time approached when the pine timber would be exhausted in Wisconsin, the company looked to other localities for investments. During the five years prior to 1896 it carefully selected, examined and purchased over 400,000 acres of pine lands situated in Missouri, Arkansas and Mississippi. The comapny also owned extensive and valuable real estate properties in St. Louis, Mo., Dubuque, and Fort Madison, Ia. The combined sawing capacity of those mills in the late 90's was over 750,000 feet of lumber a day, allowing 11 hours' work for each day. The mills in Wisconsin were cutting 650,000 feet of lumber per day. This did not include lath and shingles. The principal lumber yards were at St. Louis, Fort Madison, Dubuque and Cedar Falls. The lumber for all the yards located outside of Wisconsin was rafted at the mills and run down the Red Cedar, Chippewa and Mississippi Rivers to the points of destination.

As an indication of the cut per year it may be cited that at a stockholders' meeting in 1887 a proposition was brought before the meeting to limit the board of directors in their operation of the mills in that year to a cut of 87,000,000 feet of lumber with its proportionate cut of shingles and laths.

The annual manufacture of the company for many years was from 80,000,000 to 90,000,000 feet of lumber and 50,000,000 shingles at the several mills at Menomonie, Cedar Falls and Downsville, disposed of at its wholesale yards at various points on the Mississippi River, in addition to an extensive car trade which the company had been enabled to carry on with the western prairie country, through the railroad facilities which had opened direct communications with all parts of the nation. The number of employees on the payroll of the company averaged about 2,000 during the last twenty years of operations. In this number were included the employees at the various business branches in the states where the corporation carried on business.

This concern was one of the oldest lumbering institutions in the country. From the point of view of the business transacted during the last 30 years of its existence, it stood at the head of the list of lumber manufacturers in the United States. There have been associations, or combinations of corporations, that have cut more timber in a given time, to be floated down streams or transported by railway to different points, to be manufactured by different persons, firms and corporations, but no single firm or corporation equaled it in the amount of lumber manufactured.

Perhaps the most significant fact in the whole history of the institution is that while its members may have been prosperous, may have accumulated a competence, yet at the same time hundreds of the employees have been able, through their employment and aid, to purchase and pay for homes and purchase and improve farms, so that there is scarcely a neighborhood in the Red Cedar and the Chippewa valleys where there are not well-to-do and prosperous farmers who received the first dollar that was paid on the purchase price of their homes from the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company for services rendered. Nor is this all. It may safely be said that no other lumbering concern in the Northwest bore so largely and yet uncomplainingly the burdens of taxation nor paid as much into the public treasury. During the last 35 years of the company's operations, it paid, as a firm and corporation over $1,500,000 in Wisconsin alone. This does not include taxes paid by individual members nor taxes paid in other states. During the last 30 years of its activities the company as a firm or corporation paid in taxes in the several states where its business and prosperity has been located, more than $2,000,000.

In the days that saw the beginning of this significant venture, this section was a wilderness covered by splendid pine forests. Civilization followed the woodman's The lumberman literally blazed the way for settlement and progress. The ave small industry that was taken over in 1846 by Messrs. Wilson and Knapp and which increased and flourished under the wise direction of these men and their associates became the nucleus around which for many years all things in this vicinity centered. From this nucleus was evolved a busy, beautiful and prosperous city. At no time did the interest of these founders in the welfare of the settlement ever flag. Nearly every pioneer now living includes in his biography a period when he was employed in some capacity by the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. The archives of this corporation contain the material from which an almost complete history of Menomonie might be written. Its pay rolls for many years contained the roster of nearly all When gradually the lands were cleared and fertile farms sprang its bread winners. up where the virgin forests had reared their majestic heads, the interest of these sturdy and far-seeing founders did not cease with the passing of the era of lumbering. but continued through that epoch when agriculture was established as the stable and enduring foundation of the communities prosperity.

On August 12, 1896, the members of the corporation, their families and invited guests assembled to celebrate the semi-centennial anniversary of the beginning of this enterprise. The exercises were held during the afternoon and evening of that day at the residence of Senator James H. Stout. The spacious grounds had been appropriately decorated for the occasion, and for two hours were thrown open to the public that all might share in the notable commemoration. A novel feature of this observance was the presence of a band of Chippewa Indians, who had pitched their tepees on the lawn, and as a pleasant reminder of the amicable relations always maintained between the company and the red men in the early days, the leader, Aleck Moose, lit a peace pipe, which was passed among the officers, each of whom puffed heartily at the calumet. At the banquet which was spread out upon the greensward, addresses were delivered and reminiscences recalled by members of the company and pioneers bearing upon the long-continued and honorably conducted activities of the corporation.

Between 1846 and the final cessation of operations in 1901 the company's activities continued practically unabated. The company was never formally dissolved for the reason that its services are still occasionally needed in the clearing of land titles and the like, but while its corporate existence still endures theoretically, the great enterprise like the men who made it what it was, has passed from the field of effort, leaving a permanent monument behind it in the form of other varied and important interests which it made possible.

In 1886 John H. Knapp, on account of failing health, declined serving longer as president of the corporation and Henry L. Stout was elected president. Mr. Knapp died in the autumn of 1888, and his widow and children, in the settlement of his estate, became stockholders in the corporation. The next of the founders to depart this life was the oldest of them all, Capt. William Wilson, who died in this city (Menomonie) in 1892 at the age of 85 years. T. B. Wilson, his oldest son, who gave practically his entire life to the company's business, having come to Menomonie with his father in 1846, and who enjoyed before his death the distinction of being "the oldest inhabitant" passed away in March, 1898. Capt. Andrew Tainter died Oct. 18, 1899, after an active career here, which began in 1850. Henry L. Stout died at his home in Dubuque on July 17, 1900. It was claimed as a remarkable coincidence that on the day of Mr. Stout's death the rear of the last drive from Rice Lake left that place. At about the same time, James Bracklin of Rice Lake, head woods foreman, and one of the well known characters of the northwest, died, the date of his passing being July 26, 1900.

Singularly enough, the lives of the founders nearly spanned the period of activity of the big lumber company. Though the organization went on, and the mills kept on sawing, in the course of a short time it was necessary to abandom manufacture because of the exhaustion of the supply of material. The Cedar Falls and Downsville mills ceased work in the fall of 1900. The following year the three Menomonie mills—the steam mill, the water mill and the shingle mill—closed business, the last raft being sent down the river on August 12, 1901.

The water power and franchises were sold to the Wisconsin Power Company, which disposed of them to the Chippewa Valley Railway, Light & Power Company, by which they are now owned and operated for the transmission of electric current to various points. The St. Louis property was taken over by the heirs of T. B. Wilson. The Thornton Ark., interests were acquired by J. H. Stout, who greatly extended them. He died Dec. 10, 1910. F. D. Stout purchased the properties of the company located at Leeper, Mo., Dubuque and Fort Madison, Ia., and in Mississippi. The land holdings in this vicinity went to various parties. The Wisconsin Land Company purchased a large tract of Barron and Washburn County lands.

Thus closed one of the most interesting chapters in the history of Northern Wisconsin's pioneer industry, the source of its greatest wealth, a chapter without which the annals of settlement and progress in the entire northwest would be incomplete.

AGRICULTURE

Most of the pioneer settlers in Dunn County were attracted to this region by the opportunities for steady employment in the lumber industry, though there were a few, even in the early 60's, who took homesteads and began to build up farms. Some of these settled on prairie land in the vicinity of Colfax, and are mentioned personally in connection with the history of that village.

With the clearing away of the timber the number of farmers increased, coming here from various places, even as far as New England. Many of them—undoubtedly a majority—worked for a part of the time at lumbering, either in the woods, on the river, or in the mills, to earn money for current expenses, for few of them had any capital except what they gained by such labor, and there were many who settled on lands with the idea of farming when they had not more than a dollar or two in their pockets. In such cases they put up a hastily built shack or log hut, with a straw-roofed barn for their cow or oxen, installed their families—if they were married—and then went into the woods as lumberjacks, which they remained for years, improving their farms as they found opportunity.

It took hardy men, and women, too, to endure the hardships of such an existence, and there were few others who tried it. The labor of tree-felling, grubbing, or extracting the stumps of the cut timber, breaking the soil, and building houses and barns, in places remote from any depot of supplies, and sometimes far from even the roughest kind of a road, was not such as to attract the soft-handed or pleasureloving habitant of the cities, accustomed to the conveniences of civilization. It was work that took strong hands and a stout heart, endowed with a plentiful stock of patience and endurance, and it was by such men—lumberjacks and farmers that the foundations of Dunn County's wealth and prosperity were laid.

Dunn County has evolved agriculturally into one of the richest areas in Northern Wisconsin. Dairying is the branch of farming that is now most favored, and a tour through the districts contiguous to Menomonie, as well as in many other parts of the county, invariably surprises the traveler by the character of the farm houses which it reveals. According to recent figures the equalized property valuation in Dunn County is over $51,000,000, the greater part of which is on the farms that have Menomonie as their trading center. Other available figures show the value of the dairy products shipped from Dunn County to be $5,100,000 for one year. Wisconsin is known as the greatest dairy state in the Union, and Dunn County ranks fourth among the 71 counties in the state in the output of butter, which in one year from the 18 creameries now operating amounted to 8,000,000 pounds, valued at $4,-000,000. Each of these creameries contributed its share to the reputation Wisconsin butter enjoys for quality throughout the world.

The combined output of the three creameries located in and near Menomonie, namely, those operated by the New Hudson Road, Rusk ,and Downsville co-operative creameries last year (1924) reached the enormous amount of 5,000,000 pounds of butter. The cash receipts of these same plants for the year amounted in round numbers to $2,500,000.

Dunn County has seven cheese factories also, making approximately 1,000,000 pounds of cheese annually. The increase in the number of fine dairy cows has accounted for the banner years in production, there being 45,100 dairy cows in the county, 20,000 cows have had "C. T. A." records.

Much of this progress must be credited to The Dunn County School of Agriculture and Domestic Economy, which for the last 23 years or more has been a potent influence in educating the farmers and inducing them to adopt scientific methods.

Many farmers are interested in the raising of pure bred cattle, the breeds most favored being the Holstein-Friesian, Guernsey, Jersey, Ayrshire, Shorthorn, Here-

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

There are three county dairy breeders' associationsford and Brown Swiss. Holstein, Guernsev and Jersey. The high quality and high production of the dairy cows of Dunn County has been demonstrated at the National Dairy Show. Cows from Dunn County won first in the grade Guernsey class of the Cow Testing Association work. In calf club work Dunn County made among the largest number of winning points. The county also ranks first in the number of silos and first in corn production among the ten counties in Western Wisconsin. It is also first in potato production. It ranks among the first in the northern part of the state in the amount of hogs and corn and corn products. Due to the splendid climate, warm soil, and favorable weather conditions, corn grows, matures, and yields much better than in some of the counties farther to the east and south. Because of the abundant growth of corn many hogs are produced, the leading breeds of which are the Duroc-Jersey, Poland-China, Chester-White, Berkshire and Hampshire. Sheep do very well in the vicinity of Menomonie, as the soils are well drained and afford good grazing. Shropshire, Southdown, Hampshire and Oxfords are the leading breeds.

While there has been a constant and consistent rise in the value of farm land about Menomonie, the community is fortunate in that it has experienced no artificial inflation such as has characterized in some sections the period following the war. Consequently the lands are not over-encumbered and there is room ahead for a healthy development without a set-back. Official records show that Dunn County has surpassed in material progress the average county of the state. This is proved by the actual value of the land, which in 1911 was $34.25 an acre, in 1921, $92.50 per acre. In 1921 the average for the state was $83.00 an acre.

Fifty carloads of lime were spread on the soil in 1924. And over 1,000 acres of alfalfa were sown. In the winter and spring of 1925 there were 100 cars of lime-stone spread on the soil and over 2,000 acres of alfalfa sown.

With respect to the acres in cultivated crops, land area and number of farms, according to the agricultural statistics for the years 1922 and 1923, Dunn County ranks second among the ten counties of the West District (Buffalo, Dunn, Eau Claire, Jackson, La Crosse, Monroe, Pepin, Pierce, St. Croix and Trempealeau), being exceeded only by St. Croix County. The total crop acreage in Dunn County was 204,507 acres; approximate land area, 556,160; the land in farms, 490,044; the number of farms (1923), 3,543; the number of farms owned and managed, (1919 census), 3,126; number of farms rented (1919 census), 440.

Of the above mentioned counties in the West District, Dunn County stood highest in total corn production, the amount being 1,199,750 bushels. It had the largest area in corn, namely, 52,625 acres, but was slightly exceeded by four counties in the yield per acre. It stood highest, however, in the farm value of the product, $1,599,800. The acreage of corn for grain (1923), 28,367 acres—was the highest in the West District, as also was the production, 1,077,946 bushels. With respect to corn for silage, the yield per acre was 7.5 tons. The silage and fodder acreage of the county was 24,258; the number of silos, 1,942, increase of 189 over the previous year (1922).

In the same year, 1923, Dunn County devoted 63,400 acres to the raising of oats, producing 1,902,000 bushels, with a farm value of $817,860. The yield per acre was 30 bushels, not a high average as compared with the other counties of the West District, all of which exceeded that figure.

The amount of land sown to barley was 11,243 acres, with a yield of 30 bushels to the acre, or a total of 337,290 bushels, having a farm value of $205,747. In this crop the county ranked among the first as to yield per acre.

The statistics for rye for the same year show as follows: number of acres sown, 6,711; bushels produced, 100,665; farm value. 865,432.

Spring Wheat—Number of acres sown, 2,311; production, 41,598; yield per acre, 18 bushels; farm value, $40,766.

Winter wheat—Number of acres sown, 838; production, 13,408; yield per acre, 16 bushels; farm value, $13,140.

Buckwheat-Number of acres sown, 1.762; production, 24,668 bushels; yield per acre, 14 bushels; farm value, $21,594.

Clover seed (1922)—Number of acres sown, 4,686; production, 7.029 bushels; yield per acre, 1.5 bushels; farm value, $71,696.

Clover and timothy hay (1923)—Number of acres, 56,578; production, 67,894 tons; yield per acre, 1.2 tons; farm value, $936,937.

Alfalfa (1923)---Number of acres, 362; production, 941 tons; yield per acre, 2.6 tons; farm value, $20,937.

Other tame hay—Number of acres, 2,380; production, 3,094 tons; yield per acre, 1.3 tons; farm value, $35,581.

Wild hay—Number of acres, 6,417; production, 8,342 tons; yield per acre, 1.3 tons; farm value, $83.420.

Potatoes—Number of acres, 4,929; production, 374,604 bushels; yield per acre, 76 bushels; farm value, S146,095. In this crop Dunn County stands at the head of all the counties in the West District, though the figures are small compared with those for the year 1922, which were as follows: Number of acres sown, 7,043; production, 802,902 bushels; yield per acre, 114 bushels; farm value, S216,783. The decrease was due to low price of potatoes.

Tobacco (1923)—Number of acres, 504; production, 622,680 pounds; yield per acre, 1,235 pounds; farm value, S68,049. This was an increase in the acreage over 1922 (434 acres) but a somewhat smaller production, which in that year was 1,260 pounds.

Cabbage—Number of acres, 356; production, 2,492 tons; farm value, $24,621. Peas for canning—Number of acres, 220; production, 3,916 cwt.; farm value, $11,230.

Dry edible beans—Number of acres, 411; production, 3,699 bushels; farm value, $1,336. Only 2 acres were sown to sugar beets, 74 acres to flax, and 285 acres to soy beans.

The number of tractors in Dunn County in 1923 was 396.

In 1924 (January 1) the number of dairy cows and heifers of one year old and over in Dunn County was 45,100, with a total farm value of $2,300,100, or farm price per head, $51.

Number of all cattle on farms (Jan. 1, 1924) was 66,500, valued at $2,749,500, or $41.35 per head.

The number of horses and mules was 13,900, with a farm value of $1,223,200, or $88 per head.

The number of swine was 48,000, with a farm value of $465,600, or $9.70 per head.

The number of sheep was 8,300, with a farm value of $70,550, or $8.50 per head.

The total land area of Dunn County is 556,160 acres. The following figures present a summary of the general increase in agricultural values for the period between 1900 and 1920:

Number of farms: In 1900 there were 3,221 farms in the county; in 1910 there were 3,297, and in 1920 there were 3,566.

Improved land in farms: 1900, 218,067 acres; 1910, 245,142 acres; 1920, 265,693 acres.

Value of all farm property: 1900, $8,748,003; 1910, $20,913,419; 1920, $50,-732,758.

How divided: Land, 1900, $5,255,710; 1910, $12,985,549; 1920, $30,228,423. Farm buildings: 1900, $1,726,950; 1910, $4,356,001; 1920, $11,154,746.

Implements and machinery: 1900, $417,200; 1910, $937,317; 1920, $3,348,312. Live stock on farms: 1900, $1,348,143; 1910, $2,643,552; 1920, $6,001,277.

CHAPTER XII

THREE DUNN COUNTY INSTITUTIONS

Agricultural Society and Fair—A society called the Dunn County Agricultural Society was started in 1872 and a single fair was held, after which operations were suspended for a time owing to the difficulty of transportation.

On June 19, 1885, a new Dunn County Agricultural Society was organized at a meeting held in the courthouse, when 44 farmers signed the constitution. George Gallaway called the meeting to order, and the officers elected were: William Millar, president; Theodore Louis, L. D. Brown and John H. McGilton, Sr., vice presidents; H. W. Reed, secretary, and Samuel Black, treasurer. No fair was held the first year, but in that year the county board was induced to appropriate $3,500 for the purchase of 50 acres of land east of the city for a fair ground. The first fair was held in 1886, when the gate receipts were $965.62.

Since then fairs have been given annually except during the war years of 1916, 1917 and 1918. But while this gap appears in the annuals of the fair, each succeeding exhibition from the beginning has been an advance over its predecessor. The aim has been to make a show worth while to the people—a fair of real educational value. Thus the amount put into the plant and into premiums has increased with the increase of receipts. The purpose has not been to make a profit but to create an enterprise of the highest service, bearing in mind that prudence requires a margin of safety for continuance of the life of the institution and as provision against the rainy day.

For the last five years the society has been on a stock basis; its indebtedness has been cleared up, improvements have been made on the grounds, and its finances are in a prosperous condition. The policy of the county board toward the fair has been liberal and, in short, the fair is in a better position than ever to serve the public. In 1924 a new grand stand was erected that will seat 3,000 people, 2,000 of the seats being covered by a roof. Along the front end of the stand there are several box sections with a capacity of six to each section.

The following statistics illustrate the growth of the fair. Gate receipts—1886, $975.62; 1923, $8,802. Grand stand receipts—1886, $67.15; 1923, $1,348.50. Amount of premiums—1886, $349.50; 1923, $5.690.

A good idea of the present activities and financial status of the institution may be obtained from the annual report of the society for 1924, the fair being held that year from September 16 to 19 inclusive, which contains the following items:

Receipts—From the state since last report, $4,345.37; from Appropriations— Aid, $2,500.00; from subscriptions or gifts, $67.50; from loans, $13,500.00; from memberships, $20.00; from gate receipts, $8,274.25; from grand stand and bleachers, $2,823.25; from entries—speed, $265.00; from space and privileges, $1,875.22; from stall and pen fees, $370.80; from advertisements, $393.00; cash on hand at date of last report, $5.12; total $34,439.51.

Disbursements—Total premiums actually paid, $5,486.50; for ribbons and banners, $315.70; for repayment loans and interest, $8,190.03; for plant and equipment, $9,578.83; for officers' salaries, $274.00; for purses—speed department, $2,352.70; for special acts and features, $4,088.82; for advertising and publicity, $337.30; for printing and supplies, $816.74; for judges and superintendents, $474.71; for police, gate and other help $1,085.14; for insurance, $455.51; for water, light and power, $210.88; for hay and forage, $398.85; general expense, $361.24; cash on hand, $12.56; total, $34,439.51.

Assets—Value of grounds owned, $5,000.00; value of buildings owned, $31,-076.03; cash, $12.56.

Liabilities—Capital stock outstanding, $1,810.00; bonds or mortgage loans, $5,000.00; notes payable, $1,550.00.

In addition to the competition in exhibits of various kinds of stock there were running races for Dunn County horses, and a number of special features, as a bread contest, a school display, a flying circus consisting of an aeroplane and a corps of acrobats performing daring feats on the wing of the plane, a carnival on the pike, a teachers' meeting, American Legion dances, and a great fireworks spectacle—the Dunn County historical pageant.

The following is a list of the successive presidents and secretaries of the society from the beginning, the presidents' names being places first in each year: 1885 to 1887 (inclusive)—William Millar, H. W. Reed; 1888—A. C. Sherburn, 1885 to 1887 (inclusive)—William Millar, H. W. Reed; 1888—A. C. Sherburn, H. W. Reed; 1889—William Millar, H. W. Reed; 1890—Geo. H. Seely, John N. McGilton; 1891—A. R. Hall, O. W. Massee; 1892—Geo. Gallaway, O. W. Massee; 1893—F. J. Golden, O. W. Massee; 1895—Paul C. Wilson, Geo. Gallaway; 1896 to 1897—Henry Millar, Geo. Galloway; 1898—F. A. Vasey, Geo. Gallaway; 1899— F. A. Vasey, R. W. Cronk; 1900—J. B. Chickering, R. W. Cronk; 1901 to 1905 (inclusive)—J. B. Chickering, Geo. Gallaway; 1906 and 1907—S. W. Jackson, N. J. McArthur; 1908—S. W. Jackson, J. D. Millar; 1909 to 1915—Paul C. Wilson, J. D. Millar; 1916 to 1918 (inclusive)—no fair; 1919 to 1924 (inclusive)—Frank Pierce, J. D. Millar.

The Dunn County Asylum for the Chronic Insane is an institution of which the county may well be proud. The Dunn County News, in its Semi-Centennial Edition in 1910 said in regard to it: "Humanity and economy—tender consideration, enlightened methods of treatment and efficient business management—these are the cardinal characteristics which have made the Dunn County Asylum for the Chronic Insane a source of relief for hundreds of unfortunates and a means of profit to the tax payers of the county. They are a combination of qualities in public service rarely found developed in so high a degree, and have placed the local institution well to the forefront among those of its kind in the United States."

The primary object of the institution is not to make money but—to quote the words of a former trustee—"to provided comfortable wholesome home where the unfortunate charges placed in our care may be made happy," and this object has been well attained.

It has required careful and efficient management, but more than ordinary foresight was displayed when the plan was conceived by the authorities in control of the government some 35 years ago. At the session of the county board of 1890, a special committee appointed the year before, consisting of A. R. Hall, H. D. Ransier and George Gallaway, reported that it would be advisable to build a county asylum, and recommended that a building commission of three be appointed. At that time there were 20 county asylums in the state, and Dunn County was supporting 49 patients in various hospitals. The expense of this burden amounted to $4,000 annually to the county, and a like amount to the state. It was urged that at least 200 acres of land be procured near the existing poor farm for an institution that would enable Dunn County to properly care for this class of indigents, and at the same time save money to the county.

On Feb. 10, 1891, at an adjourned meeting of the board, a special committee, consisting of A. R. Hall, William Miller, J. H. Stout and R. J. Flint, made a report. They found that the present system of keeping the chronic insane in county asylums was inaugurated in this state in 1881, the rate for maintenance per patient being fixed at $3 per week. As an encouragement for counties to try the new system, the state agreed to pay $1.50 for the local support of each patient. Each county providing a suitable asylum would receive $1.50 per head for supporting its own insane, and $3 per week for supporting the insane of other counties. In November, 1881, the State Board of Charities and Reform certified five counties to the secretary of state as having availed themselves of this inducement, and the system had been found a success from the start.

The committee visited the asylums in Dodge, Jefferson, Iowa, Dane, Outagamie and Racine counties, and they found that the best results were obtained in a building large enough to accommodate 100 inmates, with a central building and two wings. The open door plan was urged, which means that the patients are given a minimum of restraint. This was the system adopted and which has proved to be one making for the comfort and contentment of the afflicted, leading in many cases to their complete recovery. One of the chief benefits of the plan, and which was dwelt upon by the committee, is that it furnishes inmates with employment and keeps their minds occupied in a wholesome manner. The committee showed that the system had an average cost per capita in the existing asylums in 1888, running from $1.25 in Winnebago County to $2.63 in Sheboygan. They were all self-supporting and all had paid for their buildings. Architect John Charles of Mineral Point had made estimates showing the total cost of the buildings to be $60,000, which, with the initial investment in land, would bring the original investment up to $65,000.

An appropriation for this amount was recommended, the general government of the institution to be placed in the hands of a board of three trustees, each to be elected by the county board for three years. The trustees were to elect a superintendent and a physician. Resolutions were unaminously adopted for the purchase of a site, for an appropriation and the appointment of a building commission. It was stipulated that the asylum was to be completed by Dec. 1, 1891, and a committee of four members of the county board was to act with the building commission. The chair appointed as a commission J. H. Stout, A. R. Hall and William Miller, and as the committee to act with the commission E. C. Jacobs, J. K. Heller, A. C. Sherburn and E. H. Drake. At the annual session of the board in 1892, the building commission reported that it had finished its labors Feb. 8, 1892, and turned over the buildings ready for occupancy to the trustees. The whole amount expended was S64,703.77, leaving a balance in the fund of $296.23. The first patient was received on Feb. 10, 1892.

The first board of trustees consisted of J. H. Stout, A. R. Hall and William H. Smith. Their first report, submitted in the fall of 1892, showed the institution to have been a success from the start. The gain shown in that report, covering a period from Feb. 9, 1892 to October 1 of the same year was $5,147.88. The number of patients received during that time was 111, there remaining in the institution Sept. 30, 1892, 90, of whom 48 were Dunn County charges. By 1905 the indebtedness to the state was discharged.

The institution has always been self-supporting, so that no county tax nor appropriation has ever been needed to meet a deficit in its finances. The building covers considerable ground and consists of a basement, first and second floors, and an attic. The portion occupied by the patients is divided into four wards, each containing seven sleeping-rooms, and there are four day rooms. In addition there is a cottage containing three rooms. The normal capacity of the asylum is 117 patients, but two or three more can be cared for when necessary. The average number approaches close to the normal capacity. The main kitchen is on the first floor and there is an auxilliary one in the basement. The buildings have been improved from time to time, chiefly through interior changes or adaptations, and no expense has been spared to keep them up-to-date and make them thoroughly commodious and serviceable for their purpose.

Each year one of the trustees retires, his place being taken by one newly elected. The official indoor staff of the institution consists of a superintendent, matron, four day attendants and two night attendants. There is no resident physician, but the asylum is visited twice a week, or oftener if necessary, by a physician from Menomonie, who is a member of the staff. The medical attendant for the last 25 years has been Dr. N. L. Howison.

It should be noted that the asylum is located two miles east of Menomonie, in the town of Red Cedar, and a short distance farther east on the same road, (State Highway No. 12), is the Poor Farm, the two institutions being under the same management, which arrangement has prevailed since the asylum was built. The amount of land originally included in the property has since been increased to 1010 acres, on which farming and dairying is carried on for the benefit of the institution, three men being employed on the farm. These men are assisted in summer by some of the more trustworthy patients. in accordance with the plan originally conceived of giving the latter healthful occupation tending to direct their minds into normal channels. In this, so far as may be, the patients' individual inclinations are consulted, some liking to care for horses or cattle, while others prefer field or garden work.

As more farm products are raised than can be used by the institution, the very considerable surplus is marketed, the receipts from this source proving an improtant item in its resources. These products include not only the ordinary farm crops but also a considerable quantity of milk and cream.

The water supply of the institution is obtained from two wells on the premises, each with a depth of 400 feet, and a resevoir on Bullard hill having a capacity of 3,000 barrels. The water is pumped into the resevoir from the wells by electric power derived from the power line which supplies the city, and which also supplies the current for the electric lighting system.

The report of the trustees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and signed by the superintendent and matron contains the following statements:

"During the past year the usual amount of general repair work, and some permanent improvements, have been made. The new building used for a pump house and garage has been completed since our last report. This building houses the new deep well pump, and the 500-barrel storage tank was a necessary addition to the water system. The old ice house is in poor condition and has been condemned by the State Board of Control, and the institution is now quite in need of a more modern and up-to-date cold storage to take its place. A new and modern building for this purpose, equipped with an ice-machine and storage rooms for vegetables and fruits, meats and dairy products, and a work room where these commodities can be handled, would be most desirable." The report of the attending physician showed the general health of the patients to have been very good, but few sick, and six deaths due to old age and chronic diseases.

The balance sheet of the institution for the year ending June 30, 1925, showed the proprietary interest of Dunn County therein to amount to $252,210.99, this including the value of all properties, the available balance charged to the county treasurer, and accounts receivable. The total expenses of operation for the year were $37,257.08. The operation of the farm and garden showed a net profit of $4,412.43.

The board of trustees (April 1, 1925) consists of the following members: Geo. R. Topliss of Eau Galle, president; Edward S. Roach of Colfax, vice president; and C. K. Averill of Menomonie, secretary. T. H. Moore has been superintendent since April. 1912, and Mrs. D. C. Moore, matron. H. O. Geopfarth is bookkeeper.

The Dunn County Home and Poor Farm are situated just east of Bullard Hill, and adjacent to the Asylum grounds, the land pertaining to it being included in the 1010 acres mentioned in connection with the Asylum. The two buildings are not more than half a mile apart, but the Poor House is the older building. It is very much smaller than the Asylum and is a red brick structure of two stories and base-ment, having accommodations for 25 inmates. This institution also is equipped with all modern conveniences. It is heated by two furnaces located in the basement; the electric current for lighting, etc., is supplied from the city, and the water supply is derived from the Asylum plant on Bullard Hill. Since the Asylum was built the two institutions have been under the same management. At the present time (April 1, 1925) the Home has 12 inmates who are being cared for by the county. The report of the trustees for the fiscal year ending June $\overline{30}$, 1924, showed the cost of maintenance for the year to have been \$2,696.21. There was in the Poor fund the sum of \$1,351.47, and there was due from county, towns and villages the sum of \$2,665.00. The inventory of farm products, live stock, and other property pertaining to the farm amounted to the total value of \$1,438.00; accounts receivable, \$2,665.00; receipts, \$3,740.69; disbursements, \$2,396.21; total assets, \$23,135.41.

CHAPTER XIII

THE COUNTY SCHOOL SYSTEM

With respect to the early rural schools in Dunn County few records have been preserved; perhaps because there was little to record in regard to them. Though not insensible to the benefits of education, the pioneers were engaged in too hard a struggle for existence, and had too little means, to be able to devote much money for school purposes. Schools were started here and there, however, where there was a sufficient population to support them, and teachers were engaged for a small recompense. Many of them had received no special training for that work, but as they were expected to instruct the pupils in little more than the three most elementary branches of education—reading, writing and arithmetic—their duties were not population had. Perhaps their greatest troubles lay in the management of unruly children and in the primitive accommodations with which they had to put up.

The first county school superintendent was Seriah Stevens, who took office in 1855, and apparently served ten years, as the next county superintendent mentioned was A. J. Messenger, who entered upon his duties in 1865. In 1859 the county board of supervisors appropriated a total of $144.96 for educational purposes, which was distributed among the five towns then composing the county as follows: Menomonie, $19.20; Eau Galle, $17.92; Rock Creek, $27.84; Spring Brook, $44.48; and Dunn, $35.52.

In the following year, 1860—in which there were six towns, Peru having been set off from Rock Creek—the total apportionment was $169.00.

A. J. Messenger was succeeded as county superintendent by Carol Lucas, who served in 1866-67. By this time, if not before, the schools of Dunn County vere receiving state aid, as the county board records in November, 1867, mention the sum of $959.27 as "State school money from state paid the several towns."

The successive county superintendents up to 1892 (after the two already mentioned) were: T. C. Golden, 1868-69; Carroll Lucas (second term), 1870-71; W. S. Johnson, 1872-73; George Tonnar, 1874; George Schaffer, 1875-79; Florence Ticknor, 1880-81; A. B. Finley, 1882-84; Mary B. Slyle, 1885-86; J. C. Sherwin, 1887-88; H. W. Reed, 1889:90; J. E. Florin, 1891-92. (For later superintendents see chapter V).

With the meager records that have been found for these early years, it is impossible to give a detailed account of the growth and development of the educational system of the county. The tax apportionments from year to year show a steady increase, and for the year 1900 there is a record to the effect "That there be levied for school purposes a county school tax of $10,800.70, to be the same as the amount apportioned to the several towns and Menomonie City by the state superintendent for the year 1900." As the amount set apart for Menomonie City was $2,519.17, the apportionment for the rest of the county was $8,413.60.

From the year 1912 down to the present more definite information is available. In that year the county was divided into 133 school districts, with 135 schools, in which 163 teachers were employed. Of these schools 122 were one-room district schools; two were two-room district schools; three were second-class state graded schools; six were first-class state graded, and two were free high schools. Colfax and Downing had high schools, that at Downing having been organized at the beginning of the year. In the same year five teachers' institutes were held at as many different places in the county, and one school board meeting was held in the city of Menomonie. The total expenses of the office of county superintendent of schools (not including the superintendent's salary) were $763.41, which had been previously paid out of the general fund. In the following year, 1913, a sum of $2,532 was set apart (to be raised by taxation) to defray the expense and salary of the superintendent of schools. The county school tax, aside from this, was $24,846.96.

The annual report of the county superintendent of schools to the county board of education for the school year ending June 30, 1914, showed that there were then in the county 134 school districts and 136 schoolhouses, in which 170 teachers were employed. One new building had been erected during the year and a number of schoolhouses had been remodeled. Of the teachers, 11 were men and 159 women. There were 7,476 children of school age in the county, 5,222 of whom were enrolled in the public schools and 384 in the parochial schools. The high schools (outside Menomonie) had 14 graduates. The average daily attendance in all the schools in the county (outside the city of Menomonie) for the year ending June 30, 1914, was 3,398. The average yearly salary of teachers was: Rural-male, $337.03: female, $332.88. State Graded-male, $615.37; female, $528.83. High Schools and Grades below-male, $833.67; female, $397.91. The total cost of maintaining all the schools in the county (outside of the city of Menomonie) was $105,592.95. One-day teachers' institutes were held in each of the following places: Eau Galle, Knapp, Elk Mound, Wheeler, Boyceville, Downing, Colfax, Downsville and Ridgeland. A two day institute conducted by F. S. Hyer of the Stevens Point Normal School was held in Menomonie.

The state Graded Schools were those at Boyceville, Cedar Falls, Downsville, Elk Mound, Eau Galle, Knapp, Ridgeland, Weston and Wheeler. The High Schools were those at Colfax and Downing. The report (containing other items not here included) was signed by Dona A. Taylor, county superintendent.

The report of County Superintendent Dona A. Taylor for the school year ending June 30, 1915, showed that most of the school buildings had been improved during the previous summer. There was an additional school district and schoolhouse, and 169 teachers had been employed—one less than in the previous school year. The average daily attendance was 3,410. There was an increased interest in penmanship, with better results shown in the pupils' work. The last legislature having passed a law providing for the appointment of a supervising teacher in each county, Dunn County had obtained the services of Miss Theresa A. Leinenkugel, who for six years had been county superintendent in Eau Claire County. There were six graduates from the high schools.

Mr. Taylor was county superintendent also for the year ending June 30, 1916. His report for that year showed 30 graduates from the high schools, a large increase over the two or more previous years. The cost of maintenance was $108,381.22. Two children's Reading Circles had been formed, one at Sand Creek and the other in the Knapp Settlement School.

Dona A. Taylor was succeeded as county superintendent by Theresa A. Leinenkugel, the previous supervising teacher, and her report for the year ending June 30, 1917, showed the number of children of school age in Dunn County (outside the city of Menomonie) to be 7,567, of which 5,185 were enrolled in the public schools. There were 171 teachers, of whom 16 were men and 155 women. The total cost of maintenance (outside the city of Menomonie) was $112,785.90. In August, 1917, a Teachers' Institute was held for a week, and on September 15, the same year, a State Graded Teachers' Meeting was held in the assembly room of the Dunn County Normal School—the first of its kind ever held in Dunn County. Reading Circle work was progressing rapidly in the county. Miss Anna Ryss, formerly of River Falls State Normal School, was appointed supervising teacher.

Miss Leinenkugel's report for the year ending June 30, 1918, mentioned the formation of a new school district (No. 4 in the town of Sand Creek) and building of a schoolhouse there; also the construction of a schoolhouse in District No. 2 in the same town. There was a somewhat smaller enrollment this year, namely, 4,664. There were 174 teachers, and the cost of maintenance was $154,338.66. Teachers' meetings were held in all the larger villages, and a five day Institute was held in Menomonie, August 12 to 16 inclusive. The report mentioned the sale of thrift stamps and war savings stamps by the children, beginning in December, 1917; also the organization of War Savings Societies. Since the beginning of the war much more work had been expected of the teachers, and also from the county superintendent, due to the fact that the public schools had been used as a medium by which information had been called for by the governement. This additional work included taking a census of the cattle and hogs and the organization of calf, pig, sheep and canning clubs.

Earl L. Edes, the present county superintendent, assumed the duties of that office as successor to Miss Leinenkugel, and his report for the year ending June 30, 1919, mentioned a four-page paper called "Dunn County Schools," issued by the principal of the Training School and the county superintendent semi-monthly, which was proving a help to the teachers, giving them valuable suggestions. Owing to the prevalence of influenza only two Teachers' Meetings were held, though in August a five day Teachers' Institute was held in Menomonie.

Mr. Edes' report for the following year—that ending June 30, 1920—showed that three new school buildings were under construction, and that extensive repairs were being made in several others. The general movement for school consolidation was acquiring impetus, and in June the first consolidated school in Dunn County was organized at Elk Mound, the new district including the Elk Mound Graded School, the Hanson School, the Transport School and the Banner School. Plans were under way for the erection of a new building to house the seven departments. For a more detailed account and description of this school the reader is referred to the history of the village of Elk Mound. The second consolidated school was organized at Rusk by combining the Rusk School, the Beyer Settlement School and the Lyndale School, but it was decided for the present to continue holding school in the three district schoolhouses. Nine days in the school year were devoted to Institute work.

In his report for the next school year, ending June 30, 1921, the county superintendent referred to a shortage of qualified teachers, which had made it necessary to issue some special third grade certificates and five special permits; in regard to the general undesirability of such proceeding he made some pertinent remarks. Some of the districts were remodeling their schoolhouses by putting in basements, installing modern heating, ventilating systems, and electric lighting systems. The total enrollment of children was 4,704; the total number of teachers, 177. Reference was made to community work, which was beginning to attract a good deal of attention throughout the state, and the organization of school societies was commended, with suggestions as to programs.

Mr. Edes' report for the year ending June 30, 1922, contained a list of books recommended for Teachers' Reading Circle work, which by this time was well organized, each teacher being required to read and study three such books during the year. The Young Peoples' Reading Circle work had also been improved. A number of text books were recommended for use in the rural and graded schools of the county.

The rural schools now number 128, of which 40 are joint district schools. The state graded schools are six in number—by name those of Downsville, Eau Galle, Wheeler, Knapp, Cedar Falls and Ridgeland. The high schools are at Colfax, Downing, Elk Mound and Boyceville. The above enumeration refers, of course, to the schools under jurisdiction, excluding the Menomonie City schools.

The work of the present county superintendent has been of a marked progressive character, with a strong tendency toward more perfect organization. Its main features deserve special mention.

One of his chief aims has been to systemize and coordinate the work of the rural schools, which up to six years ago, was lacking in such coordination, each school pursuing its own studies largely at the discretion of the teacher as to the time devoted to the different subjects, without reference to what was being done in the other schools. This lack of uniformity led to much unevenness in the results attained, and occasionally to deficiencies in certain studies on the part of the pupils of one school as compared with those of another. The new system has obviated this, and now the pupils in the rural schools all over the county not only spend the same amount of time daily on each study, but also pursue that particular study all at the same time, except in a few cases where special modifications of the rule have been found necessary.

Mr. Edes has also thought cut and introduced certain activities and customs calculated to increase the interest of pupils, teachers, and parents in the work done, through the influence of competitive effort, which finds its manifestation in local and other exhibitions—a plan that has proved its value by raising the average of scholarship throughout the county. For a number of years previously there had been some small school exhibits at the annual county fair, but the work is now better systematized and more far-reaching.

This competitive exhibition work begins in the rural schools the pupils in each being encouraged to use their best efforts. The best examples are then selected from each school for exhibition in a community fair, of which 16 will be held this spring, each in a different community in Dunn County, and those winning prizes, or favorable mentions, are reserved for exhibition in Mencmonie at the time of the graduation exercises of the eighth grade in the city schools, occurring usually early in June. The winners in the city exhibition are accorded the honor of having their work exhibited in the annual state fair held in Milwaukee. Thus, the interest of the children in their studies and related work is greatly and healthfully stimulated, and there are few who will not strive their best to win the approbation of their general public of their own and other localities.

The system not only includes examples of work in the ordinary studies suitable to such representation where the presence of the pupil is not required, but also takes in literary and musical contests and athletics. Each school decides for itself, with respect to the literary and musical contests, what kind of selection it can best give; the local winner then competes in the community contests, and the winner there competes at the county fair, the "Fair" contest being held in the evening. At the fair, also, races and other forms of competitive exercise, have been introduced recently for the older people to take part in, the spirit of friendly emulation existing among the children, being thus extended to the parents and others.

For these Fair competitions a special building was erected in September, 1924 on the pattern of a modern rural school, the ground plan measuring 34×34 feet, not counting the entrance portion of 10×16 feet. It has a basement, in which are the furnace and play-room, while on the ground floor are the library and class room in which the pupils' work is exhibited. Some of the material for this building was donated by business firms, both in and out of the city, the county board also making an appropriation, and the balance of the cost being raised by the schools through entertainments of one kind or another.

Another practice has been introduced by Mr. Edes with the view of increasing the efficiency of the teachers, and which has been carried on for the last three years. A group of teachers—usually some 12 or 15, accompanied by the superintendent, or one of the two supervising teachers—will pay a visit to some selected rural school during school session and observe the work of the teacher in charge. Then after the pupils are dismissed a general discussion is held, helpful suggestions being often made by which all present may profit.

Parent-teachers' organizations have also been formed in some communities, at which talks are made for the purpose of advancing community work, especially in regard to the schools, and to bring the teachers and parents of the children into closer touch with each other so that all may be interested and work together with a

All these activities are in accordance with the most modern methods of educational work, and present a striking and happy contrast with those in use in pioneer days when the rod was regarded by most teachers, and many parents, as the most effective means of stimulating scholastic effort on the part of the pupils. It was a method in use for many centuries in practically all countries, for a proverb that has been deciphered from the monuments of ancient Egypt reads: "The ears of a child are on his back," and classical literature reveals that the same stimulus was used by schoolmasters in Greece and Rome. The temptation to play truant under such circumstances was but natural. Modern society, in this country at least, is to be congratulated on its more humane methods, which make the path of learning easy and pleasant to all but the most stupid or lazy pupils, of whom today there are comparatively few.

The educational exhibits at the county fair are not confined to the rural schools but include also the pupils in high schools outside the city of Menomonie, pupils of the ninth and tenth grades in graded schools and students of the Dunn County Agricultural School and Dunn County Rural Normal School. It is also open to teachers of Dunn County. Premiums are given for the best exhibits in the different classes. In Class A, for grades 1, 2, 3 and 4, the exhibits for the best specimens of which premiums were offered were (in 1924): Mounted display of freehand paper cutting, page of writing, poster, illustrated booklet, illustrated story or poem, illustrated alphabet, exhibit by any individual of not more than three articles not included under any other entry in this class.

In Class B, for grades 5, 6, 7 and 8: product map of any continent, product map of Wisconsin, three drawings, either in ink, pencil or crayon, mounted display of four letters received from pupils in other parts of the United States or other countries, four physiology drawings, page of writing, collection of six wild flowers pressed, mounted or named; map of t'.: United States showing territorial growth since 1783; booklet showing mounted pictures of principal breeds of cattle, hogs, horses and sheep; school district map showing schoolhouse, roads, silos, breeders of pure bred stock, and pure seed farms; and best exhibit by an individual of not more than three articles not included under any other entry in this class.

Class C is open to all pupils of the first eight grades, and the exhibits, briefly stated, were: Map of the pupil's congressional district, bird chart, map of Wisconsin showing institutions, map of Dunn County, original poem, kodak views, model of log cabin, bird house, poster showing the development in methods of travel from early times to the present, poster showing changes in the means of communication from early times up to the present, poster illustrating the effects of invention upon the life of the housewife, and a booklet illustrating a selection studied in reading or litera-ture.

Class D, for pupils in high schools (outside Menomonie), ninth and tenth grade pupils, students in the Agricultural and Rural Normal Schools embraces exhibits arranged on the same general plan adapted to different or more advanced studies; while Class E, for teachers and students in the Rural School has similar application to the work of those special schools.

Class F included the athletic races, which were held by townships, the district contests being under the direction of the teacher or principal in charge.

Class G embraced the literary and musical program contest. It may be said in connection with this branch of competition that at Downsville there is a very good band, which is conducted by Mr. Edes; at Louisville there is a fine community orchestra, and at Cedar Falls also there is an orchestra. These organizations, besides others in the county, not connected with the schools, are exerting an influence in matters of musical taste not to be disregarded.

The Dunn County School of Agriculture and Domestic Economy.—The extensive application of science to agriculture has within a recent period created a new branch of education. The pioneer farmer of the Northwest differed less in his tools and methods from his prototype of Biblical times than he did from the farmer of today. This great and comparatively recent change is due in some measure to the invention and introduction of agricultural machinery, but to an even greater extent it is the result of a scientific study of nature's methods.

The aid rendered the farmer by modern machinery, great as it is, is purely mechanical and mathematical. It simply multiplies the amount of power which he formerly derived from his own muscle and that of his draught animals. It has never called for a greater exercise of brain power on his part. The modern science of agriculture, on the contrary, has made him use his intelligence and demands from him a theoretical and practical knowledge of a wide range of subjects of which his pioneer predecessor knew little or nothing. In short, it has made him go to school to learn his trade.

In 1903 an agricultural paper, "The Farmer's Voice," said: "Twenty years ago, well, anybody could farm. Today the successful farmer is the trained farmer, and ten years from now the farmer who is not trained will find it hard sledding to get on at all." About the same time a prominent Dunn County farmer remarked, "The time is rapidly coming when a farmer should know pretty nearly everything."

Each statement was a prophesy and the prophesies have been practically fulfilled. Even when they were uttered the time had come for an advance. For many years there had been state schools, or colleges, where instruction was given in agriculture and the mechanic arts, but only a small per cent of the sons and daughters of farmers had been able to avail themselves of the state colleges, partly because of insufficient preparation for entrance, and partly because of the distance to the school and consequent expense in attending. It was necessary to bring such schools nearer to the people, and to specially adapt them to the purpose in view.

The Dunn County School of Agriculture and Domestic Economy was the first of its kind to be established in America. This school and the similar one of Marathon County were authorized by legislative act in 1901, and Dunn County was the first to organize under this act. Plans for the establishment of schools of this nature were outlined in a report of the state superintendent acting as a special commissioner. The principles laid down in that report, and in the law, were followed in the establishment of this school, which was primarily intended for boys and girls from the country who had finished the work of the country schools. No schools had previously been created to meet the special needs of those who, without a full high ing and domestic economy.

It was in November, 1901, that the Dunn County Board of Supervisors took The Normal School had already been established, pursuant to a legislative action. act of 1899, and was occupying temporary quarters. It was decided to house the two schools in the same building, and a building committee was appointed, consisting of Supervisors Clark and Cronk, with J. H. Stout, J. E. Florin and N. O. Varnum, Mr. Florin being an attorney and Mr. Varnum then county superintendent. The board appropriated $20,000 for the cost of the building; the actual cost, however was only $16,353.13. Its ground plan dimensions are 42×96 feet; it is built of brick and is three stories high. The four lots on which it stands, valued then at $5,000, were bought with money donated, Mr. Stout contributing $2,500, the city of Menomonie $1,500, and the balance of $1,000 being raised through the personal subscriptions of citizens, who were called on for that purpose by Henry M. Miller. The building was formally accepted by the board of supervisors on Saturday, Nov.8, 1902, and was opened to the school on Monday, November 10, with K. C. Davis, Ph. D., principal, and in direct charge of the agricultural department; Grace J. Stokes in charge of the department of domestic economy, and L. M. Cole in charge of the department of manual training. The board of control consisted of J. H. Stout, president; N. O. Varnum, secretary, and J. E. Florin, treasurer.

In beginning the work of the school the instructors and j. D. Florin, treasurer. (board of control) asked for the loyal support and patronage of the people of Dunn County and the surrounding region, issuing a general statement in which, after referring to the origin of the school, they said: "Here the rural boys and girls will find splendid opportunities for securing more intimate knowledge of the things knowledge and to the kind of training necessarily required in securing it. To compel the boys and girls to enter into the competition of life without the special essential to success, as measured from a financial standpoint and from the standpoint of individual development."

In a printed bulletin, published quarterly by the school authorities, the courses of study were outlined and the students given useful and interesting information in regard to the institution. The second number, published in December, 1902, contained the statement that the state law of 1901 provided that the state should pay to the county maintaining a school of agriculture and domestic economy "a sum equal to one half the amount actually expended for instruction" in such school during the preceding year, provided that the amount given by the state to the county should not exceed $2,500.

Some changes were soon made in the law so that it authorized "any county (not to exceed four) to build and equip a school of agriculture and pay the running expenses for one year. After that the state will pay two-thirds of the annual cost of maintaining the school—not to exceed $4,000 for each school." Two years' experience in running the Dunn County school then showed that the annual running expense was about $6,000, two-thirds of which was paid by the state and one-third by the county. The present law gives the County Agriculture Schools $6,000 per year as aid.

Much was done for the school by individuals and local institutions to make it The authorities of Tainter Memorial Library began purchasing books a success. of special value to students in the Agricultural School and they were granted the free use of the library. The authorities of the Stout gymn sium extended to the voung men of the school the privileges of that institution. For the first year Senator Stout permitted the young men to use the complete equipment of the Stout Manual Training carpenter shop for their lessons in farm carpentry. This gave them time for fitting up the shop building belonging to the school and getting it properly equipped to begin work for the fall of 1903. It also saved the Agricultural School much expense in equipment while the other departments were being provided for. Senator Stout also had the vard in front of the building well cleared, filled, enriched and graded, and the floors of the entire building waxed and finished in the best possible manner; and a few months later he gave to the Agricultural School the original Stout Manual Training building, which was moved from its old location on the Central School grounds to the southeast corner of the Agricultural School lot. It was used by the Agricultural School for manual training work until the new shop was built.

Prominent educators, not only in the state of Wisconsin, but in many other states, were watching the school with considerable interest as an experiment which or might not prove successful, but it was not long before its success was a recognized fact.

The farmers throughout the county were urged to visit the school and see for themselves the work that was being done and they and their families were always made welcome, as they are today. The regular course for young men was as follows: science or agriculture, soils and fertilizers, dairying, poultry raising, stock feeding and care, judging and marketing, plant life; economic insects and diseases; vegetable, flower and fruit gardening; farm carpentry and blacksmithing; rural architecture and building; business arithmetic; farm accounts and commercial forms; history; civil government; library reading.

The course for young women included sewing, cooking, home economy, personal and domestic hygiene, millinery, home nursing, poultry raising, chemistry of foods, principles of gardening, history, civil government, library readings.

A special short course for young men and young women was also arranged to cover two winter terms of 12 weeks each. This short course did not require any academic work, but was made up chiefly of agriculture and shop work for young men and of cooking, sewing and laundering for young women. Tuition was free in in both the regular and the short courses to all students living in Dunn County; the amount charged students from other counties being only four dollars for the winter term of 12 weeks.

The enrollment for the first year in the regular course was 53, most of the students being residents of Dunn County, though four were from neighboring counties and one—a girl—from Pueblo, Colo. In the short course there were ten students, all of Dunn County, while one student took a special course.

Some students have been obliged to earn their way by doing various kinds of work out of school hours, but this has been no detriment either to them or the school. It has taught them habits of self reliance and proved their earnestness and determination, and in no case have they lost caste either with the faculty or the student body by so doing.

Before the Agricultural School was established a Dunn County Farmers' Club had been organized. The instructors of the school began to work in unison with club, and sub-ordinate organizations were formed in the various townships of the county, with the object of advancing the interests of agriculture in all its branches. Rural school teachers having classes about to finish the country school course were invited to bring their pupils to visit the Agricultural School, and thus information was spread and interest increased.

Soon after starting, the Agricultural School purchased sets of tools to be loaned to any county school wishing to try manual work, either at noons and recesses, or in classes, and Senator Stout soon after presented the school with 15 sets of such tools to be used for that purpose.

In December, 1903 Dr. A. E. Bryant, V. S., was engaged to give special lectures on veterinary science. Angeline Wood had succeeded to the charge of the department of domestic economy. H. E. Layne had succeeded Mr. Varnum as county superintendent, and was secretary of the county school board, J. H. Stout being president and J. E. Florin vice president.

It is less, however, with men than with measures that this history is concerned. To enter into all the details of the school's work would be to usurp the function of its prospectus or bulletin. Some things should be mentioned, however, as most of the things the students did then, they do now, besides others, which will be subsequently referred to.

The young men learned to make models of farm buildings. In the metal working class they were taught forging, welding, tempering, pipe-fitting and soldering. They took drives to farms to learn how to test herds, judge stock and poultry, prune trees and otherwise test in a practical way the experience they had gained in school. In the domestic economy department the girls learned to make their own garments and became good cooks.

The school did many things and does now for the farmers free of charge. Milk and cream were tested for butter fat; farm and garden seeds were tested; clover and other legumes were treated for bacteria; oats were treated for smut and potatoes for scab; apple trees were grafted when the scions were furnished; good roads were planned; barns, silos, poultry and milk houses were planned; also water systems for houses and barns, and drainage and sewer systems for barns and homes; pure bred stock was selected for buyers, and information was given regarding feeds, stock, crops, new plants, planting, weeds, diseases, insects, spraying, fruits, machines, powers, and all farm subjects.

Another building was soon added to those already mentioned. It was given by Mr. Stout and 105 others, and the city of Menomonie, and was called the horticultural building. It measured 28x50 feet and was two stories high over a bank basement. The building derived its name from the basement story, which was used for the potting of plants, grafting and budding lessons, winter storage of scions, roots, bulbs and tender plants. On the main story was a poultry department and a room for keeping and exhibiting machinery and tools used by the school on the farm and garden. The upper story was used by the students as a gymnasium.

In 1905 Jennie M. Brackett was elected county superintendent, and in the spring of that year the school bulletin contained the following announcement, addressed to teachers:

"A summer school in agriculture, manual training and domestic economy will be held in the county building in Menomonie for two weeks, beginning July 24, 1905. The work will be in charge of the faculty of the County Agricultural School. Prof. Davis will have charge of the work in agriculture, Prof. Cole of the manual training work, and Miss Angeline Wood of the domestic economy work. Arrangements are being made to do some work in the common branches if it found that the needs of the summer school require it." This was a teachers' institute and all teachers in Dunn County were urged to attend. Throughout the county agriculture was now experiencing a wonderful intellectual uplift, due to the work of the school. Young people were urged to enter the school at any time, if they could not enter at or near the beginning of the term. No entrance examination was given, and tuition was free to all living in Dunn County. The school was in the receipt from time to time of many useful gifts from individuals or business firms. Cordial relations existed between this school and the Teachers' Training School, and work was exchanged between the two schools to the mutual advantage of each.

In the same year, 1905, Mrs. Bertha Tainter gave a greenhouse to the school, which was fitted up for the work of the students. Soon after this, the testing of cattle for tuberculosis was taken up by the school, and classes of students were taken out to herds where the owners wished the testing done, the farmer and students getting the benefit. The farmers were also being taught to get rid of poor and unprofitable cows and replace them by better stock; also how to practice economy in feeding. They were shown the best methods of fighting insect enemies, preventing plant diseases, managing crops, grafting fruit trees, planning and building farm structures, combating weeds, estallishing water and sewage systems, draining marshy or boggy lands, testing seeds, deciding on what power systems to use, whether water, wind, steam or gasoline engine, etc.

In 1907 Prof. James A. Wilson succeeded Prof. Davis as principal of the Agricultural School. He was a practical farmer, dairyman and stockman, and had much experience in farm institute work. He was a graduate of the Minnesota School of Agriculture, and had taken the full university course in the college of agriculture. He had also taught common school at Cottonwood and Thief River Falls, Minn.; at the latter place he organized and built up a good high school, and had been principal for one year of the School of Agriculture at Crookston, Minn.

It is not the purpose of this article to relate all the minor changes that have taken place in the growth of the school. Its origin and general plan of work have been described, and that plan has been pursued with but slight modification up to the present time. The number of students has increased to 85, and the faculty now consists of seven members, who are as follows: D. P. Huges, B. S. A., principal; Clara Moeschler, B. A., M. A., assistant principal; Mrs. E. Gibson, Stout Institute domestic economy; Elwood Cleasby, B. S. A., science; Ben McDonald, Stout Institute manual training; Arthur Gordon, River Falls normal husbandry; and Mrs. Florence Pierson, clerk and librarian.

Mr. Hughes became principal in 1917, succeeding Theo. Sexauer.

The courses of study now include the four-year agricultural course, the four-year home economics course, two-year agricultural course and the two-year home economics course, and the two-year winter short course in agriculture and domestic economy.

In the four-year agricultural course the first years work (suitably and progressively arranged for the two semesters) includes the following subjects: English, commercial arithmetic or algebra (algebra in alternate years to first and second year students), general science, animal husbandry, physical education, shop work, and civic biology.

The second year's work includes English, poultry, horticulture and bees, citizenship, farm crops, feeds and feeding, physical education and dairy husbandry.

The third year's work includes English, modern history, farm mechanics, soils, physical education and general geography.

The fourth year's work includes English or advanced shop work, U. S. history, chemistry or physics, economics, physical education, algebra, geometry, commercial arithmetic, advanced shop work are classed as elective studies.

In the same manner, the four-year home economics course for the first year includes English, arithmetic or algebra, general science, home economics, physical education; for the second year, English, poultry, citizenship, home economics, physical education, gardening and horticulture; for the third year, English, modern history, economics and physical education; and for the fourth year, English, American history, chemistry, home economics and physical education. The electives are geometry and algebra.

The two-year courses in agriculture and domestic economy consist of the same subjects as are given in the first two years of the four-year course. In addition, other subjects may be elected from the vocational subjects offered in the third and fourth years.

The two-year winter short course in agriculture includes for the first year, arithmetic, milk testing and feeds and feeding, crops and soils, farm mechanics (rope work, harness work, forge and carpentry) and physical education. For the second year it includes English, animal husbandry (veterinary science and farm animals), poultry and horticulture, farm mechanics (gas engine and autos), mechanical drawing and concrete, and physical education.

The general work of the school is very interesting as well as instructive to visitors, and those among them who are old enough to remember the agricultural methods in vogue 50 to 60 years ago in this region cannot resist the conviction that the young people of the present day are better off in their opportunities than their grand-parents were.

Extension Work and Smith-Hughes Work .- The Dunn County Agricultural School has done a great deal of extension work with the farmers and their wives along the lines of farming and home making since its origin. The main lines of assistance given to the farmers are testing grass seeds for purity and germination and corn for germination; testing milk, cream and skim milk; testing soil and telling how much lime to use; organization of cow testing associations; breed associations; horticultural societies; soil improvement associations, as well as poultry and bee associations. This work has been carried on for many years. The farmers have been aided to secure pure seeds and better livestock and the use of limestone has been practiced. One year the school aided the farmers to get 14,000 pounds of certified Grimm alfalfa and 50 carloads of limestone. The surveying of land for tile drainage has been done also. Many thousands of hens have been culled by the teachers and pupils of the school and the vaccination of thousands of hogs for protection against hog cholera. Boys and girls club work has been carried on for several years and last year the club boys and girls exhibited 75 calves at the Dunn County Fair. Many orchard pruning demonstrations have been held in the county and many culling demonstrations.

The Smith-Hughes part-time schools and project work began in 1918 or 1919 and has continued up to the present time. The average attendance at the three parttime schools held during the fall of 1924 and spring of 1925 was 25. The study of dairy cattle and home grown feeds was the line of discussion at these schools. Several carloads of limestone were purchased by the farmers attending the meetings and many fields of alfalfa and soybeans are being planted as the result of these schools. The joining of Cow Testing Associations and improving of herds is one of the direct results. Sweet clover pastures are being started also.

The aim of the Smith-Hughes work is to bring practical instruction and follow up project work to the farmers and their sons who are actually engaged in farming and who cannot get away from the farm to attend other schools.

Principals of the Dunn County Agricultural School:—Kary C. Davis, 1902 to 1907; Jas. A. Wilson, 1907 to 1909; F. R. Crane, 1909 to 1911; W. W. Sylvester, 1911 to 1913; Theo. Sexauer, 1913 to 1917; D. P. Hughes, 1917 to 1925.

The Dunn County Rural Normal School.—The following historical sketch of this school was written by Miss Elizabeth Allen, principal, on the occasion of its twenty-fifth anniversary (1924), and is reproduced with her permission.

"On Wednesday, Aug. 10, 1899, State Supt. L. D. Harvey came to Menomonie, Wis., to discuss the question of establishing in this city a Training School to prepare teachers for the rural schools of the county.

"The idea of such a school doubtless originated in the brain of Conrad E. Patzer, now of Milwaukee State Normal School, who with Supt. L. D. Harvey, gave publicity to the idea which was promptly seized upon by Marathon County, and especially by her capital city, Wausau, to whom belongs the credit of impressing the state legislature with the importance of investing a portion of the school funds for the improvement of the rural schools.

"As a result of their publicity work, the legislature of 1899 made an appropriation of $2,500 to establish experimental training schools in two counties of the state, of which Marathon County should be one. This sum was to be divided between the two counties, $1,250 each, provided the county board of said county would set aside $2,500, or twice the amount given by the state, for the same purpose.

"Marathon County responded promptly and her school was opened Sept. 11, 1899, with Ex-State Supt. O. E. Wells as principal and Miss Rosalia Bohrer as assistant. Twenty-five student teachers were enrolled the first day and the school has gone on from that day with rapid strides to its present splendid strength.

"At this meeting in Menomonie, Aug. 10, 1899, there were present Senator J. H. Stout, Mr. R. J. Mathews, Mr. J. E. Florin, County Supt. Varnum, Mr. G. W. Clark and several members of the County Board of Supervisors. Supt. Harvey made a very forceful presentation of the need of trained teachers throughout the state, and County Supt. Varnum gave important statistics showing the number of schools and teachers in the county and the extent of training for the teaching work.

"It was due largely to the discussions at this meeting and to the far-sighted vision of Senator Stout and his desire to promote educational advantages for the boys and girls in Dunn County that at a special meeting of the county board held Tuesday, Sept. 5, 1899, by a unanimous vote, it was decided that Dunn County should be the second county to accept the state's proposition. The state would pay $1,250, the city of Menomonie $500, and the county of Dunn $1,700. The school should be opened on Monday, Sept. 18, 1899, to graduates of the eighth grade and others who so elected, and it should offer a one year course.

"A Training School Board was elected consisting of President J. H. Stout, Treasurer J. E. Florin, Secretary N. O. Varnum, it being so ordered that the county superintendent should always be ex-officio secretary of this board.

"The board was empowered to secure a principal for the school at once and an assistant as soon as necessary; and on Monday, Sept. 18, 1899, exactly seven days later than the opening of the Marathon County school, Principal W. L. Morrison stood before a group of twelve student teachers ranging from eighth grade to high school graduates and formally organized this school. The following week eleven more students enrolled and Mr. Waite acted as assistant to Mr. Morrison until a permanent teacher could be secured.

"On October 23 of the same year the membership had reached 41 and Miss Elizabeth Allen of the Milwaukee State Normal School took her place as assistant. During that first year 57 students were enrolled, 18 of whom were graduated June 29, 1900. The course of study prescribed covered necessary reviews of all subjects taught in the rural schools added to a year's training along professional lines.

"The school was most fortunate at its inception in having men associated with its organization who so well understood the needs of the county and who were so strongly committed to the promotion of its welfare and to the advancement of rural schools, and also to the splendid attitude of the county board of supervisors.

"With no charge for their use Senator Stout furnished and equipped two large rooms on the fourth floor of the Stout Manual Training building, at the south end of the building, for the use of the school, and here it was housed for two years until it had a building of its own.

"The enrollment in the fall of 1900 made it evident that a building would very soon be an actual necessity, and the county board of that year appointed a committee to investigate the matter. Senator Stout offered the gift of "Music Hall," formerly the old Baptist church, provided the city of Menomonie would furnish a lot. After due consideration of the building and other factors in the situation, the matter was voted down for these reasons: The conservative element of the board considered the school still in its experimental stage. The building in itself was inadequate for the purposes desired. There was a strong probability at this time that at the next session of the board a county school of agriculture would be established and both schools could be housed in the same building.

"In November, 1901, that school was unanimously ordered to be organized, at at the same session a building committee was appointed to take charge of the erection of a suitable building to house both schools. Supervisors Clark and Cronk, acting with the Training School board, Messrs. Stout, Florin and Varnum, were the committee who brought to a successful completion the present building. Meantime the school was working at full capacity with 70 enrolled selected from 80 applicants and with 10 on the waiting list.

"The board appropriated $20,000 for the building. The four lots on which the building now stands, valued at $5,000, were donated as follows: $2,500 by Senator J. H. Stout, $1,500 by the city of Menomonie, and the balance, $1,000, by personal subscriptions of citizens, and it is due largely to the splendid efforts of the sum was secured. The total cost of the building and or M. Miller, that this last sum was secured. The total cost of the building and equipment was $20,216.85. "The building was formally accepted by the board on Saturday, Nov. 8, 1902, and it was opened to the school on Monday, Nov. 17, 1902. "Moving Day" was an event not soon to be forgotten; the historical bottle was carefully stored in the office and the "County Normal" was at home.

"In the fall of 1902 it was found necessary to add another teacher to the faculty in order to accomplish work outlined, as the school was automatically growing into a two-year course school for eighth grade graduates, necessitating extra classes and broader curriculum. From that time the faculty was gradually increased to meet the demands of heavier enrollment, broader course of study and more extension work till it numbers five at the present time (1924).

"As principal Prof. W. L. Morrison served five years and began the sixth when his health made it imperative for him to go to California, where he has since resided, carrying on his splendid ideas in educational work through organized classes for training Sunday school and Bible class teachers. His work in organizing and promoting this school was one of absolute devotion and his memory is held dear in the hearts of the boys and girls who recited to him here.

"Mr. Morrison was succeeded by Mr. G. L. Bowman, who came to us Oct. 27, 1904, from the Waupaca County Training School. Mr. Bowman gave 18 of the best years of his life to this school and to Dunn County and was, by an untimely stroke, taken from his work April 19, 1922. His love, his loyalty, his ideals remain as a living testimony to the quality of his work.

"In June, 1912, Miss Allen resigned from her position as supervisor of practice and went to Newburgh, N. Y., as a fruit farmer. From this busy life she was recalled to take the principalship of the school in August, 1922, a position which she still occupies.

"In 1924 the Bowman Model School was erccted, being dedicated in November, that year. It stands on the school grounds facing Third Street, and is used as a model school of practice and demonstration for the training classes (including grades 1 to 6). This building represents the standard type of a one-room rural school of the first class, thoroughly modern and up-to-date in every particular as to construction, heating, ventilating and equipment. The cost, including equipment, "In 25 years the school has had but three principals. It has enrolled about 1,000 students, graduated nearly 800, had 14 assistants on its roll, and been associated with seven different county superintendents, and always with the highest degree of co-operation. The original course of study was arranged for one year's work following eighth grade, leading to a third grade certificate. The course now administered is a one year's course following high school graduation leading to a first grade certificate, a noteworthy advance.

"The school was established on a basis of Loyalty, Integrity, Co-operation and Service—and it still stands on that platform. It is, as it has always been, a school of opportunity, of choice, of initiative. Its motto is "Forward" and it has not departed from it. The prophecy uttered by Principal W. L. Morrison in 1900: 'If the normal keeps for its purpose the elevation of the rural schools; to reach the most remote corner of the county and give character to the weakest school; to furnish refuge and council to teachers in trouble; to relieve teachers from the burden of frequent examinations; to inspire to better and grander service; then it will live because there is nothing that can take its place.' has been fulfilled."

will live, because there is nothing that can take its place.' has been fulfilled." The present faculty of the Normal School (1925) consists of Elizabeth Allen (principal), Mrs. Nelle Gordon Edes, Edith Carey, Gladys Zimmerman, Agnes S. Anderson and Agnes G. Winston. The county school board this year consists of John N. McGilton (president), Henry Miller (treasurer), and Earl L. Edes (secretary).

CHAPTER XIV

FURTHER HISTORY OF MENOMONIE

Linked with Prairie du Chien by the Mississippi, Chippewa and Red Cedar rivers and the opportunities for commerce upon their currents, the settlement at Menomonie followed that of the early military post and trading rendezvous as a natural consequence. Timber was needed to construct the buildings at the station on the Mississippi, and the pine on the banks of the Red Cedar River, then the Menomonie, offered an easily accessible supply. A temporary settlement had been made here in 1822, and the forests of the valley were well known to the frontiersmen. In 1822 Hardin Perkins obtained permission from the agent of the Sioux Indians to erect a sawmill in the Indian country, but his enterprise was never carried out, and James H. Lockwood and Joseph Rolette, fur traders of Prairie du Chien, obtained like consent in 1829. A mill was erected at the mouth of Wilson Creek, which began sawing in March, 1831, marking the beginning of operations that continued until Messrs. Wilson & Knapp bought the property in 1846, several changes of ownership having in the meanwhile occurred.

From this beginning was developed the great lumber industry that is traced more in detail in a review of the activities of Knapp, Stout & Co. From this beginning also grew up the community that became Menomonie. In 1855 the post office was established with T. B. Wilson as postmaster. Menomonie was platted in 1859 and was at once given its name. Various persons were asked by the lumbermen, Wilson & Knapp, who had the village plat made, to suggest a name. S. B. French, who had arrived six years before, proposed the name "Menomonee," which had been the original name of the Red Cedar River but had been dropped as such in 1850. Why the name of the river was changed is not known, as there was little red cedar on the banks of the stream. But a revival of the name in connection with the village appealed to the founders and the suggestion was acted The letters in the last syllable of the name were later changed to "ie" by upon. the post office department to distinguish it from other geographical names having the same pronunciation. The word is of Chippewa Indian origin and has reference to wild rice, of which there was an abundance on the stream when it was given the title.

Menomonie is known far and wide as a city of rare physical attractions. The citizens generally take especial pride in the appearance of their home surroundings; front lawns are kept sightly and back yards sanitary, and squalid conditions in any part of the city are practically unknown. Practically all the buildings that have been erected for a number of years past, especially in the residential portion of the city, are of substantial construction and pleasing architecture. The residence streets are for the most part laid out in the form of boulevards with grass plats at either side and skirted by handsome shade trees. Two parks, Wilson and Riverside, given to the city by wealthy citizens in early times, add to its beauty and afford means of wholesome pleasure to the people, and to these must be added the lake bank being developed by the Improvement Association.

Surrounding the city and extending throughout Dunn County, are many natural beauty spots of great charm, affording accessible places for enjoyable outings and fine opportunities for the sportsman with rod and gun. Well stocked trout streams are found in abundance, and the Red Cedar River and Lake Menomin contain numerous game fish of several varieties. Among the beauty spots with which nature has favored Dunn County may be mentioned as among the most popular, Wilson Creek, whose banks afford a wonderful variety of scenic delight; the banks of the Red Cedar, both above and below Menomonie; Paradise Valley; Chimney Rocks, southwest of Downsville, Lamb Creek Falls, Cedar Falls, and Elk Mound.

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

Evergreen Cemetery.-The ground comprising this cemetery, some 45 acres, situated near the river in the northeast part of the city near the limits, was formerly the property of Knapp, Stout & Co., and was laid out by them as a cemetery at an early date. They were at that time the prime movers in all public enterprises, and, a cemetery being necessary, they not only laid it out but also for many years retained the management of it. In 1904, the company—then the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company—having closed out their lumber business here, with other related enterprises, a meeting of the lot owners and citizens was called at the court house to provide other management for the cemetery. The meeting was called to order and presided over as chairman by C. E. Freeman, J. C. Wilcox acting as T. B. Wilson, of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, placed before the secretary. meeting the proposition of the company to deed Evergreen Cemetery to a properly organized association. On motion of R. J. Flint the association was named the Evergreen Cemetery Association. An annual meeting was provided for and three trustees were elected, namely, Torger Hansen, T. B. Wilson and J. B. Chickering, to serve for one, two and three years respectively. Through reelection the same trustees continued to serve until Mr. Hansen's death in March, 1924, when E. C. Quilling was elected to succeed him. In March, 1923, Paul E. Bailey was elected to succeed Mr. Chickering, who died that year. The cemetery has been improved and well cared for, and its headstones and monuments awaken many tender memories on the part of the old-time residents of the city who stroll through its critet paths.

An important and interesting chapter in the development of the community was the advent of the railroad now known as the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha. The government had made a large grant for the building of a line to St. Paul, and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul held this grant for years. In 1869 a popular movement was started which resulted in the organization of a partly local company, the Milwaukee & St. Paul Company having meanwhile built a line up the Mississippi River. The grant was transferred to the company above mentioned, and Messrs. Humbird & Baldwin made an agreement to build a line from Tomah on the Milwaukee road to Black River Falls, Eau Claire, Menomonie and Hudson, and the road was built under the name of the West Wisconsin Railroad Company. This road reached the city in 1871, the following January moving trains both ways. The route north of the city was one of three that were proposed. One went through the course of Gilbert Creek, another through the city and across the pond by the lumber yards, striking the route of the present line three or four miles out of town. There were objections to the trestle over the pond, and also to a bonus demanded for going through the city, and the course finally selected which passes through the present Junction. Henry H. Porter, who was then president of the road, came here several times in an effort to get the line over the pond, but failed. The West Wisconsin road experienced financial difficulties, and after several changes of name became a part of the present Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha system. The line at first ran between St. Paul and Tomah. After the Chicago & Northwestern built its line to Elroy, the route of this road was changed so that it went through Camp Douglas to Elroy, and it finally became attached to and affiliated with the Northwestern. For years it was necessary to go from the city to the Junction to take trains, and this led to a strong agitation for a connection with the city. On Aug. 29, 1876, bonds for $50,000 were voted for the execution of a contract with the Chippewa Valley & Minnesota Railroad Co., of which S. B. French was secretary. The arrangement was not carried out and the town was released from all obligations. Then President Porter of the West Wisconsin road proposed to bring a spur into the north side of the city for $10,000, but the citizens would give nothing unless the line came across the This Mr. Porter agreed to do if given a depot site and $25,000. This river. proposition was accepted, and the town issued $28,000 worth of bonds, of the proceeds of which $3,000 was to be used for depot grounds. An election was held on Aug. 26, 1879, the result being 412 for the bond issue and 135 against it. The bonds were for 10 and 20 years at 7 per cent interest, and the first half were retired Feb. 5, 1890, and the second half Feb. 5, 1900. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St.

Paul built its branch up the Red Cedar to Menomonie as a spur of the Chippewa Valley division in 1882 without sepcial financial inducement. Both roads operated short lines to the mill at Cedar Falls. J. H. Hyland, who later rose to an eminent position in the railroad world, was the first station agent here of the present Omaha company.

The proximity of Menomonie to the great railway gateways of St. Paul and Minneapolis and to the rail and water terminals at Superior and Duluth, together with the local rail connections, afford ready facilities to the inhabitants of the city and surrounding territory for getting products to market. The earnings at the stations of the two roads here—the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha (comprising part of the Northwestern sustem) and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—are indicative of the vast volume of trade which centers at this point. In recent years the total amount of freight received has approximated 200,000,000 pounds annually, on which was paid about $290,595.69. The total amount of freight forwarded is annually about 148,000,000 pounds, on which is paid $178,bined earnings of these lines at Menomonie is therefore in round figures over $549,000 a year.

Included in the transportation facilities of the city and county must be mentioned the improved highway system that is now being developed. Four federal aid trunk lines pass through the city; one known as No. 12 and one, as No. 116 running east and west; and the others, No. 25 and No. 70, running north and south. No. 12 is the state's most direct and best highway connecting Chicago and the Twin Cities. No. 25 forms part of the shortest route between southwestern Wisconsin and the cities at the head of Lake Superior. Another federal trunk line, No. 64, cuts across the northern part of Dunn County east and west. Besides these arteries of interurban traffic, the county is developing a system of good roads

During the 36 years following the purchase by Wilson & Knapp of the Wilson Creek mill (1846) there was no village organization, and in fact there has never been any. Until 1882 the local government was conducted under town organization, though a village plat had been made. In 1882 Menomonie was incorporated as a city, the charter being prepared by Rock J. Flint, then a member of the state senate. A. J. Turner of Portage assisted in the work. Subsequently some amendments were made, but now all such are abrogated by the General Charter Act, changes now being confined to adoption of portions of the general charter. Since 1902 elections have been held biennially. In 1912 Menomonie adopted the commission form of government—by a mayor and two councilmen—which has proved more satisfactory to a majority of the citizens than the former aldermanic system. The commission keeps taxes down to as low a point as is consistent with good service, the rate being among the lowest known for citize of the server with good service, the rate being among the lowest known for cities of the same class in Wisconsin. The first mayor elected by the city was Capt. William Wilson, and the first city clerk, J. R. Mathews. Succeeding mayors have been, in the years given, as follows: 1883, William Schutte; 1884, G. H. Seeley; 1885, E. Marks; 1886, William Schutte; 1887, T. S. Heller; 1888, Peter E. Wilson; 1889, E. Marks; 1890 E. Marks; 1891 and 1892, John Hopwood; 1893, E. A. Barker; 1894 and 1895, Rock J. Flint; 1896, George Gallaway; 1898 and 1899, John J. Carter; 1900, A. H. Johnson; 1902, Edward Haag; 1904, J. R. Mathews; 1906, A. H. Johnson; 1908-1910, J R Mathews; 1911-1915, Carl E. Peterson. The councilmen now serving are A. L. Johnson and F. W. Rowe, the latter being also city clerk and comptroller. A. L. Johnson

The Menomonie Improvement Association.—During the years of their operation here the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company (known previous to the year 1878 as Knapp, Stout & Co.) owned the water power which included the pond and pond bank—a fact not generally known to the public, as by many people it was supposed to be public property and was used as such without interference by the big lumber firm. The situation was better understood, however, when T. B. Wilson, Sr., offered the pond bank as a gift to the city if the latter would accept it and make it a public park. This offer was declined and the company, wishing to dispose of the property, as they were practically through with their work here, sold it to private parties, a number of lots being disposed of to individuals. Finally the complete water power, including the pond and what was left of the pond bank, was transferred to the Wisconsin Power Company. A few thoughtful and farsighted people now awoke to the fact that if the natural beauties of the city were to be preserved and become a heritage for future generations, it was necessary to take action at once in that direction.

It was over 20 years ago that on a certain day four prominent citizens of Menomonie, namely, J. H. Stout, C. E. Freeman, J. C. Wilcox and W. C. Ribenack, met on the street and the question of paving improvements came up and was discussed. Mr. Stout remarked, "Well, we'll have a town here after a while," to which Mr. Wilcox responded, "If we are ever going to have the town look like a civilized place we'll have to clean up the lake front." The remark was well timed, for the water front at that time was strything but clean or attractive in appearance. It had been uncared for and was defaced by unsightly shacks, sheds, dead and fallen trees and other objects detracting from its natural beauty, and had become a place that the better class of people were more disposed to keep away from than to visit. At that time there was a tax assessment against the Wisconsin Power Company (of which Mr. Stout was president) of $4,500 on account of paving improvements, and this matter having been mentioned on the occasion referred to, Mr. Wilcox further remarked that it would be a graceful act on the part of the Wisconsin Power Company to turn over the lake front to the city in consideration of the remission of the paving tax. Mr. Stout was favorably impressed by the suggestion and said that he would take the matter up with the board of directors of the company. Three or four days later he announced that he had done so and that they had consented to the proposition. The next thing was to get the city to adopt it, and early in 1904 the Advancement Association presented it to the city council. It had by this time received some publicity, and as it had been calculated that the handling of the project by the city would mean a tax of about $49, a number of prominent citizens objected and ranged themselves in opposition, presenting a petition to the council against it. The council thereupon turned the matter down and the friends of the improvement scheme were forced to seek some other method of carrying it through. The only way that seemed feasible was through public subscription but in that case it was necessary that there should be a visible and responsible organization possessing the necessary powers.

At a meeting held in the basement of the Memorial building, J. E. Florin, an attorney, told those present that such an organization could be formed under the provisions of the Olin law, which had been passed to meet a similar situation in Madison, whereby five or more persons could incorporate for the purpose of effecting public improvements by means of money raised through subscriptions. The Menomonie Improvement Association was thereupon formed, Mr. Florin being employed to draw up the constitution and secure the charter. The Woman's Club took up the matter of securing subscriptions and did secure money or pledges to the amount of about $1,500. But much more than this was needed-$4,500 being required to secure the transfer of the rights to that part of the water front involved from the Wisconsin Power Company to the Association, to say nothing of the further sums that would have to be raised to effect the desired improvements. But the purchase of the property was the first step necessary. The articles of incorporation were signed on June 1 and on the following day the first regular meeting of the Association took place, when officers were elected, namely: Alfred Pillsbury, president; Miss Stella Lucas and Miss Isabel Epley, vice presidents; Miss Elizabeth Allen, recording secretary; Mrs. F. F. Morgan, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Kate Weber, treasurer. J. H. Stout was chosen director for three years; Mrs. A. J. Josephson, director for two years; and J. C. Wilcox, director for one year. The articles of incorporation provided that the purpose of the Association should be to acquire, open, extend, maintain and improve parks, boulevards and pleasure drives in and about the city of Menomonie according to authority contained in Chapter 55 of the Laws of 1899 (the Olin law). A plan for raising funds through membership fees, suggested by J. C. Wilcox, was adopted and made a part of the by-laws, which provided for three classes of members-annual, life, and honorary. Annual members were to pay dues of $1.00 or more in advance; any person might become a life member by paying $100; honorary members might be elected by the directors but should have no vote. Under these regulations several persons became life members and about 125 more subscribed from $1.00 to $25 per year for five years in order to raise the amount necessary to purchase and improve the Four trails down the bank were put in and a running trail around the entire park was provided. The last payment to the Wisconsin Power Company was made in 1909.

Another task undertaken by the Association was the much needed improvement of grading and terracing Wilson Avenue from Broadway to a connection with the depot hill road, this work costing about $900. The city assisted in this improvement by putting down a good brick walk with gutters on each side. As a further improvement on depot hill the Association bought a lot and moved the Pixley house and blacksmith's shop, so that the city, having bought out Mr. Kirkland, the proprietor, could utilize the grading down of the depot hill in making a better roadway into the city from the west. A number of shacks which disfigured the approach to depot hill were moved to another track of land and improved to some extent in appearance by being better grouped and by the laying out of gardens and the planting of fruit trees about them. All this was good work and well done, but what was now needed was a comprehensive and coherent plan of operation so that the money raised, not without difficulty, through subscriptions might not be wasted in haphazard and amateur attempts at improvement which might prove ill-advised or too costly in the end, but that it might be expended wisely for permanent benefit to the community. This idea having been advanced by J. C. Wilcox, Mr. Stout, to whom it seemed timely and sensible, took early action on it by sending for Warren P. Manning, a famous landscape architect of Boston, who came here and for a fair remuneration took in hand the task of making a general survey and laving out a definite plan of work for the Association.

Subsequent to the sale of the pond bank to the Association the Wisconsin Power Company sold its holdings to the Chippewa Valley Railway, Light & Power Company, and when the latter company raised the old dam three and a half feet, the shallow pond, formerly used for floating logs to the mill, was suddenly converted into a navigable lake, which is now called Lake Menomin. At once a strong interest in boating sprang up which called for suitable accommodations. Several projects were proposed, and, as usual in such matters, there were various opinions, into the respective merits of which it is not necessary to enter. It is sufficient to say that a modern community boat house was built, supplied with boats and canoes, and which, with individual slips, cost something over $4,000. For this enterprise no subscriptions were solicited, and no money subscribed for general Association work was put into the boat house proposition, the intention being to make it pay its cost and be self-supporting. patronized by the people, and in particular by the students of Stout Institute. The boat house is well

The Association is responsible for a number of other improvements. Its latest work has been to reclaim the banks of Wilson Creek along Highway No. 12, the land between that highway and Wilson boulevard having been acquired. A part of it is to be made into a tourist park and the rest laid out into a community park and children's playground for North Menomonie. The Menomonie Improvement Association has now a membership of 200 or more prominent citizens, and its work has met with the approval of the public and has made Menomonie a cleaner, better and more attractive city. Much more might be said in regard to the history of the organization than is contained in this outline sketch, but to relate it would be to go into too much detail. As might be expected with such an ambitious and extensive program, there was not always unanimity of opinion among the members, either as to the advisability of the plans suggested, or as to the methods that should be adopted in carrying them out; and there were times when the burden of initiative and decisive action fell upon the shoulders of a few; but the general public is mainly interested in the results accomplished, and those results speak for themselves.

All franchises on the Red Cedar River and tributaries were formerly, as elsewhere stated, owned by the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and were used by them in the operation of their large lumber business. Under these franchises they had dams at Downsville, Menomonie, and Cedar Falls, in Dunn County; Rice Lake, Chetek, Cedar Lake, and Prairie Farm (on Hay River) in Barron C unty, and at Birchwood in Washburn County. These dams were used for flooding purposes to facilitate the transportation of logs down the streams. They also operated grist and flour mills at Menomonie, Chetek and Rice Lake. In 1901 they ceased operations in this region and in the following year sold their water-power franchises to the Wisconsin Power Co., who also took over the grist and flour mills, operating them until 1908, when they sold out to the Chippewa Valley Railway Light & Power Co. The last mentioned company in 1910 built a more modern dam at Cedar Falls, and the company continued operations under the same name until 1914, in which year the stockholders sold out to a Mr. Brewer (of Grand Rapids, Mich.) and the company was reorganized into the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power Co. The latter concern sold in 1924 to the Northern States Power Co.

A waterworks system was installed in Menomonie in 1885, the city paying under the terms of the franchise $50 a year as hydrant rental on each of the 110 hydr its provided at the outset. The plant was built and owned by Moffet, Hodgkins & Clarke of Syracuse, N. Y., engineers and contractors, and consisted of the combined standpipe and direct pressure systems, the pumping being done by two compound duplex engines with a united capacity of 2,000,000 gallons a day. The number of hydrants has since been increased to 133. The franchise held by the waterworks company was made to cover a period of 60 years, or to run to the year 1945, but the city was given the privilege of taking over the plant at the end of five year periods upon an appraised valuation, provided a year's notice of the intention to purchase was given. In accordance with this agreement the city took over the plant in October, 1915. In January, 1918, the question came up of drilling artesian wells to improve and increase the city's water supply. Water, it was thought, could be obtained by drilling to a depth of about 280 feet. This artesian water was clear and cold and not too hard. The water from the then existing wells was too hard unless mixed with river water, but when so mixed it was not always palatable nor safe. This plan was approved and the wells were subsequently drilled, coming into use in 1920. There are two of these wells, each 387 feet deep and equipped with arc lifts, and all the present water supply is derived from them. The total capacity is 2,000 gallons a minute. There are now 17 miles of main piping in the city, and about 1,100 water takers.

Lighting System.—At an early day, soon after electricity came into use for general lighting purposes, the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company established an electric light plant on Wilson Creek and used it for their plant and to light the homes of some of their stockholders, the city then having no street lights. Finally, in 1897, the company organized the Menomonie Electric Light & Power Company, for more general purposes, the power being obtained from the dam and plant at Wilson Creek. As the power proved insufficient at times, a steam plant was added and the two were used together when it was found necessary. The Menomonie Electric Light & Power Company continued operations in this manner until May, 1911, when it sold its city franchises and outfit to the Chippewa Valley Railway Light & Power Company, which had previously—in 1908—bought the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company water franchises.

On April 11, 1904, an ordinance was passed granting a franchise to the Menomonie Gas Company, and since that year the service has been widely extended, especially for fuel purposes. The concern has changed hands a number of times and in 1909 the gas works were rebuilt an equipment for the manufacture of water gas being installed. In 1918 the company was reorganized with a capital stock of $40,000, all the stockholders except three living outside this state. There is now an investment of $65,000 in the business and the concern is in a prosperous condition.

A considerable quantity of paving has been done and the city now has modern streets throughout the down town district and in a part of the residential portion.

The city maintains a fine public hospital, built in 1915, fuller mention of which is made elsewhere in this chapter. There are several parks owned by the city, in addition to the beautiful parkway along the lake front, that along Wilson Creek boulevard, and other pleasure grounds along the lake and streams, owned and controlled by the Menomonie Improvement Association. These are much enjoyed by residents, students and visitors in the summer months.

According to its last census Menomonie has a population of 5,104. With the growth of the city its wealth has increased apace. The valuation in 1883, as equalized by the county board, was $1,375,705; in 1890 it was $1,762,955; in 1900 it was $1,787,967; in 1909 it was $3,003,089, and in 1924 it was $5,907,457. The total personal property (1924) is assessed at $1,428,555.

In 1885 a volunteer fire department was organized, with Thomas A. McNevin, chief; William Fricke, assistant chief; Frank Carter, secretary; and William Schutte. The men were paid for actual time in service. Abundant pressure through the water mains is had from an 80-foot standpipe situated upon a high elevation in the eastern part of the city, thus obviating the necessity of maintaining fire engines. The department includes: Hose companies Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and Hook and Ladder No. 1, one hose company being located at North Menomonie. In December, 1906, a substantial two-story brick hose house was erected adjoining the city hall. The latter is a frame building that was moved to its present location about 40 years ago. The equipment of the fire department now includes an American Lafrance combination truck of two horses. The department is now only partly volunteer, the chief and three drivers receiving full pay. At North Menomonie there is a volunteer company of ten men. Further improvements are being planned. Before 1911 the chiefs of the department succeeded each other at frequent intervals, few serving more than a year or two, but in that year cities of the fourth class came under the control of the state fire and police commission, by the rules of which a fire chief serves until he is incapacitated by age, or resigns, or is removed for cause. J. E. Johnson, who then became chief, has continued to serve as such up to the present time.

The first fire to occur in the city involving serious loss was that of 1880, which destroyed the S. B. French block on Main Street between Third and Fourth avenues. The second occured on Nov. 28, 1884, when flames wiped out Grob's hall and the Merchant's Hotel on Broadway, opposite the present Hotel Ryan. In this fire the damage amounted to about $29,000, those who suffered losses being Mrs. E. Grob, on building; F. Schmidt, saloon keeper; P. G. Hannemeyer, hotel and furniture; R. Farr, furniture in hotel; John Hanson, tools and stock; Anton Anderson, dwelling and blacksmith shop. There were other minor losses. The Grob building destroyed at that time was erected in 1869, when it was the largest business structure on this side of the river. The second floor was used as a public hall and a year before had been remodeled and finely furnished. The Merchant's Hotel was built in 1873, and at the time of the fire was conducted by R. Farr. The old hook and ladder company fought this fire as best it could, aided by volunteers. At one time the Eau Claire department stood in readiness to come to Menomonie's relief, but the request of Mayor Seely for assistance was countermanded when at last the flames were gotten under control. After this blaze the fire department was The next large fire was that which destroyed the Central School and reorganized. Training buildings on Feb. 3, 1897. On April 24, 1906, flames wiped out property worth $50,000 on Main Street. The heaviest loss on this occasion fell on J. S. Sipple, whose department store was burned, with damage amounting to $26,000. Other properties destroyed or damaged were the buildings owned by C. A. Clark and Max Lachner, Paul Sommerfeld's stock, Pabst Brewing Company building, Mike Mitzger's stock, Palace Bakery, building and stock of Victor Hanschel, and a few other places, on which the damage was about $2,000. The flames raged on both sides of the street and devastated a considerable area. The next big fire occurred Aug. 31, 1922, when the three buildings of the Stori estate, with the two Teare buildings on Main Street opposite the Memorial Library were destroyed, with a loss of about $125,000. There was but little insurance, there being none on the Stori buildings. On Oct. 11, 1922, Edgar Johnson's garage on Main Street, between Seventh and Eighth streets, burned down with a total loss of about The next and last big fire occurred May 5, 1924, also on Main Street, $25.000. involving a part of the A. H. Johnson (now William Johnson) estate and the Ole Berg estate, the Evangelical church being also damaged. The total loss was between $135,000 and $150,000, there being a partial insurance. This fire was found to be of incendiary origin, as were also one or two of the others, evidence to that effect having been found after the fires.

The serious disasters that have visited Menomonie since the time of its founding have been confined to the several fires, (elsewhere mentioned) of no great extent, though entailing considerable loss to a few individuals, and to two or three floods. During several seasons, the city was visited by floods which occasioned considerable loss, not only locally, but throughout the valleys of the Red Cedar and Chippewa rivers. The worst of these in the remembrance of those now living occurred in 1880 and 1905. On June 4, 5 and 6 of the former year copious rains caused a rapid rise in the waters of the streams, and the dams at Colfax and the Wilson mill on Elk Creek were carried away and a number of bridges were swept The rains were renewed and a week later the situation was greatly aggraout. The shingle mill at Cedar Falls was carried away, the boom went out and vated. the bridge went into the river. The dam and booms of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company in Menomonie were for a time in great peril but held out. During the week beginning June 4, 1905, there were freshets that caused an estimated loss in Dunn County of $200,000. The old water mill, the west end of the "company's bridge," and the bridge near the residence of Thomas Stone were wrecked by the torrents in Menomonie, and the Irvington bridge and the railroad bridge at Downsville suffered a like fate. A ferry had to be operated across the Red Cedar 200 yards south of the old red wagon bridge near Riverside Park, and a ferry was put in at Irvington. The Milwaukee road suffered a heavy loss, and a stage route had to be established to Dunnville for mail. Many farms on the river bottom were inundated. The residence and business portions of Mencmonie are fortunately situated, inasmuch as they occupy a plateau high above the water level, thus enjoying immunity in time of floods.

Post Office.—At a very early date in the history of Menomonie the mail was obtained from Prairie du Chien in any way that happened to be convenient. About 1850 a post office was established at the "middle mill" on Gilbert's Creek, with Oliver Gilbert as the postmaster. In 1855 it was removed to Menomonie, being kept in the office of Knapp, Stout & Co. on the west side of the river, with T. B. Wilson as postmaster. There it remained until 1860, in which year it was moved to the east side. Its first location on this side of the river, as now remembered, was in a frame building that stood on the site of the First National Bank. After that it occupied a building on the site of the present office and show rooms of the P. H. Hamarly stone and monument works on Main Street. From there it was moved to a building in the center of the same block known as the Tonror drug

Its next location was across the street in a building owned by S. B. French. store. The latter building being destroyed by fire on Jan. 1, 1880, the post office was moved across to a warehouse on the north side of the street, being moved back into the French building after it had been rebuilt. Its next location was in the Heller building, opposite the school grounds, and after that in the Arcade building, where the Five and Ten Cent Store is now. There it remained until March 20, 1915, when it was moved into the fine government building that is its present quarters.

The postmaster who succeeded T. B. Wilson was Mr. Church, but it is not known when he took the office nor how long he served in it. He was succeeded by W. W. Winterbottom—probably about 1869—and Mr. Winterbottom's successors in consecutive order, with the approximate length of time during which they served, were as follows: S. D. McKahan, 13 years; E. L. Everetts, four years; J. R. Mathews, two years; O. P. Stenerson, four years; Thomas Stone, four years; E. Marks, 17 years; R. E. Bundy, nearly five years. Mr. Bundy was followed by M. A. Hanson, the present postmaster, who took the office in April, 1922, and who has served in the post office continuously in one position or another since April, The postmasters who had charge while the office was in the French building were McKahan and Everett; those in the Heller building, Everetts, Mathews, Stenerson and Stone, and those in the present building have been Postmasters Marks, Bundy and Hanson. The work rooms in this building are large, conveniently arranged and well lighted, and the building on the outside is neat and attractive in appearance.

To the Menomonie post office are attached ten rural routes, which is more than are controlled by any other office in the state. The first was established in April 2, 1900, when the rural route system was in an experimental stage. On Oct. 15 the same year two more were established, the others being subsequently added from time to time. None of them is less than 25 miles in length. On Dec. 1, 1904, the city carrier system was inaugurated and five carriers are now employed. This did away with most of the boxes, of which there were formerly 800 or more, a number now reduced to 150. Yale lock boxes were introduced in 1878. The large number of boxes previous to December, 1904, entailed a large amount of work on the postmaster and his assistants, as the people would rush to the office at every mail distribution. One man is remembered who thus called for three years without receiving a letter, and really not expecting one, but at last his persistence was rewarded, and much to his surprise and pleasure, one was finally handed to him. He is still a resident of Menomonie and has not forgotten the

The first schoolhouse in Menomonie was a private one erected in 1852 by Knapp, Stout & Co., for the accommodation of their children and those of their neighbors. Dr. Rogers taught there during the winters of 1852 and 1853, and the Rev. Joshua M. Pittman in the winters of 1854, 1855 and 1856. A regularly organized district school was established in the last named year. When the village was surveyed and platted in 1859 a one-room frame schoolhouse was built. There were then about This schoolhouse was destroyed by fire in 1868. In 1870 a new public 40 pupils. school building was erected with four rooms, which later became a part of the Central, or high school, structure, to which additions were made from time to time. In 1880 the city schools were in a very prosperous condition, having a regular graded system and four schoolhouses, namely: The Central, erected at a cost of $12,000; East School, $4,500; Coddington School, $5,000; West Side, $1,000. School had a four years' course, including mathematics through geometry, Latin through Virgil, and German. The High School had 100 pupils, and, what was re-The High markable, there had been no case of tardiness for two years. The other schools were graded from the primary, through the intermediate, to the grammar, and embraced seven years of study. There were 600 pupils in the several departments, and good teachers were employed from the several state normal schools.

About 1890 or 1891, through the generosity of Senator James H. Stout, a manual training and domestic science school of two rooms, was attached to the Central High School and soon had an enrollment of 40 pupils. The board of education made it a part of the free school system. The manual training building and Central School building were burned in 1897, but in a very few months work was under way for the erection of a larger and better building. This building, erected in 1898-99 is the brick manual training building conspicuous by a high tower, and was the first of the group of buildings in which the work of the Stout Institute is now carried on.

It should be noted that all the developments which had taken place before 1903 were for the boys and girls of the city of Menomonie, and all of the shop and laboratory work was carried on under the public school administration. The vear 1903 marks the beginning of the Stout Training Schools, which were organized for the purpose of training teachers of manual training, domestic science, and kindergarten work. At this time Dr. Lorenzo Dow Harvey was made superintendent of all the schools of Menomonie, and his unusual capacity of organization and leadership had much to do with the rapid development of these schools, which, after Mr. Stout's death in 1910, were taken over by the state. In that year, 1910, there were enrolled in the public schools of the city, 1,114 children, divided as follows: High School, 205; Central, kindergarten and eight grades, 403; Coddington, kindergarten and four grades, 112; Fowler, six grades, 128; East, four grades; 48; North Menomonie, six grades, 143; Junction, ungraded, 31. There was but one large modern school building in the city system, the Central. The wide area over which the city extends presented a complicated problem in the proper housing of all the grades, and it was necessary for some students from all parts of the city to attend Central School.

In the interests of economy, as well as efficiency and convenience, it was planned to replace the Fowler and Coddington schools in the Fourth ward with modern buildings in which the pupils then attending those schools should have a centrally located school home. The Central school building now in use was erected in 1897, and when built was one of the finest and most complete of its kind in the state. It replaced the building which stood on the same site, and which was destroyed by fire with the Stout Manual Training building, the previous winter. The cost of the bare building was $42,850, the furnishing and equipment bringing the entire outlay to upwards of $60,000. A new Coddington School building, at the corner of Fifteenth Avenue and Sixth Street, was erected in 1917 and opened in January, 1918.

The first city school superintendent was Jesse B. Thayer, who held that position until about 1875, serving some 10 or 12 years. He was succeeded by John G. Ingalls, who served for a number of years. His successor was R. B. Dudgeon, who had charge of the schools until the fall of 1903. After him J. E. Hoyt was superintendent until the fall of 1903. Mr. Hoyt's successor was Dr. L. D. Harvey, head of the Stout schools, who was also superintendent of the city schools from the fall of 1903 to Jan. 1, 1909. The next superintendent was George A. Works, who in 1905 had succeeded Thomas L. Jones as principal of the high school, and who served as city school superintendent from Jan. 1, 1909 to 1921. He was followed by Fred Thompson, 1911-1914; C. G. White, 1914-1917; E. W. Waite, 1917-July, 1920; and Will G. Ballentine, July, 1920, to the present time.

Senator Stout's position on the Board of Education of the Menomonie public schools proved in the highest degree fortunate and uplifting. Educational development was a subject that lay close to his heart and he brought to the task a driving force that had already manifested itself in other directions, and which was guided by sound and far-sighted judgment. Coupled with the efforts of the local authorities, it accomplished wonderful results. Nor was he sparing of his ample means, as the magnificent Stout Institute, that has spread the fame of Menomonie as an educational center all over the land, sufficiently proves.

It was in the public schools that Senator Stout's progressive ideas were first worked out. The schools were organized into a senior high school, a junior high school, the intermediate and elementary grades, and kindergarten, and this system has since continued. The senior high comprises the tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades, and the junior high school the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. The courses of study in the senior and junior high schools are organized around the five major fields of educational interest, namely: English, foreign languages, science, history and mathematics. In addition to these, vocational work, manual training, home economics and commerce are also taught, and opportunity for work in music and the fine arts is offered. The music work deserves special attention, having reached a high degree of excellence. The school maintains at a high standard, an orchestra, and glee clubs for both boys and girls. Thus, a pupil with musical ability finds opportunity and encouragement to develop his talent.

The junior high school is arranged to give the pupil a large number of comparatively brief contacts with the field of education. In other words it proposes to give the students a sample of each subject that the senior high school has to offer. With this experience he can enter the senior high school, knowing in a way his likes and dislikes, his special abilities, and with reasonable freedom of election select those lines of work which suit his interests best. Especial mention should be made of the exceptional opportunity for work along lines of manual training and home economics which is open to the high school students. All the faculties of Stout are available for this work, giving it a range and equipment far beyond that found in the average public school. As proof of the quality of the high school work it may be stated that the high school is on the accredited list of the North Central Association of Colleges. This rating allows its graduates to enter without examination any college or university in the 18 states comprising the Association. The first six grades are housed in four buildings distributed over the city, so that no child is far from a grade school. All the grade school buildings are modern structures, embodying the best features of up-to-date schoolhouse construction. The usual grade program is carried out by the regular grade teachers, who, in each of the subjects of music, art and physical training are assisted by a specially trained supervisor. The health of the children is carefully guarded by the schools. A graduate nurse is a regular member of the teaching force. She visits each room practically every day. Contagious diseases are detected promptly and epidemics prevented. Defects of eyes, ears, teeth and throat are discovered and recommendation for correction made to the parents. Under-nourished children are detected and, with the approval of the parents, are given one feeding of milk each day at school. In addition especially under-nourished children are formed into nutrition classes which meet for dinner one day each week. Correct foods are emphasized at this weekly luncheon. In Menomonie parents can send their children to school with confidence that their helath will not be jeopardized; rather that under the careful supervision the child has a chance to grow not only mentally but physically.

In the present year, 1925, the city has four school buildings—the Central, Coddington, East, and North Menomonie. The Central school includes high school, eight grades, and kindergarten. It is provided with a gynmasium, some of the pupils also using the armory for gymnastic purposes. Music is made a prominent feature and there is a band and orchestra conducted by Paul E. Gregg. The Coddington school includes six grades, with a kindergarten and an opportunity room reserved for retarded scholars. This is a comparatively new building and when it was erected the old Fowler school was given up, the present Coddington school taking its place and that of the old Coddington. The East school, now being rebuilt, which up to the present time has had four grades, will have six henceforth and probably also a kindergarten. The North Menomonie school has seven grades and a kindergarten.

The pupils enrolled number 1192, divided as follows: senior high school, 286; junior high school. 261; Central Kindergarten and grades, 179; Coddington kindergarten and grades, 276; North Menomonie kindergarten and grades, 126; East school, four grades, 64. All the school buildings are of modern construction, the North Menomonie, like the Coddington, having been completed within the last few years. In connection with each school there is a Mother's Club, designed to interest parents in the progress of their children. These clubs meet with the teachers once a month and are well attended. Such are the Menomonie public schools today, but it is not unlikely that they may be better in the future, for the spirit of Senator Stout still lives and operates as an active influence in their management so that those who have them in charge, not satisfied with past achievements, however gratifying, are hoping and working for still greater results.

St. Paul's Lutheran School.—The St. Paul's Lutheran congregation, consisting of about 300 families, believing it a duty to impart a liberal education in a Christian spirit to the younger generation, has conducted for many years a well organized parochial school of eight grades. It is the aim of the teachers to make the pupils entrusted to their care healthy-minded by developing originality and by teaching activity, the mechanical part of education being subordinated to the understanding of those principles which regulate reason and sound judgment which can then be applied as circumstances demand. The present school building was constructed in 1904 and is very adequately adapted to the purpose in mind. The teachers are normal graduates of many years' experience.

St. Joseph's School.-As early as 1890 the members of St. Joseph's parish (Catholic) had felt the necessity of providing for a parochial school which shoul 1 give adequate religious training as well as secular instruction to their children. The rather modest frame building on Ninth Street first used for school purposes soon proved inadequate to the purpose and a good brick school was put up in 1901. Within ten years or so this in turn was out-grown and in 1912, the present fine school building was erected, facing Tenth Avenue. It is a solid brick structure, two stories high, of tasteful architecture, and modern in every way, the four class rooms being fully equipped. In addition the building contains a beautiful chapel, a society room with a kitchen attached, and a roomy basement with all modern facilities. Special attention has been paid to the heating and ventilating systems. The average attendance varies between 110 and 125 pupils. For almost 30 years the Franciscan Sisters of La Crosse have had charge of the school, the pastor of the church acting as principal. At present there are four teachers besides the pas-While the system of education followed at St. Joseph's school aims at the tor symmetrical development of the religious and moral sense, together with the cultivation of the mental faculties of the pupils, every effort is made to secure for them an all-round, complete, well-balanced, up-to-date elementary education. A parochial school was established in 1886 by the Evangelical Lutheran Friedens Church, but after being conducted for 33 years, was given up in 1919.

The City Hospital of Menomonie, a well equipped and well managed institution, was established in 1915, the building being erected and opened in that year. It cost $13,333 and was equipped with beds, other furniture, and all necessary utilities at a cost of $9,000 more, making the total cost over $22,000. It is a city institution, the money for its establishment having been raised by taxation, but is practically self-supporting, as the city and county physicians send some of their cases here to be cared for. There is no resident doctor, but there are five registered nurses under charge of a superintendent, who is also a registered nurse of experience. The hospital as first constructed was a brick building of two stories and basement, standing in the midst of spacious grounds between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets and, Eleventh and Twelfth avenues. On Nov. 15, 1920, a fire took place which destroyed the roof, besides doing other damage, the loss being $15,000, which was covered by an equal amount of insurance. The building was at once repaired, being partly rebuilt and made as fireproof as possible, and some time after that a new addition was made to the building in memory of Melchior Brooks, a retired merchant of Menomonie who had died and left $16,000 to the institution. The hospital now contains 20 beds, having accommodations for that many resident patients. The first superintendent was Miss Lorna Stafford, who held that position until January, 1916. Her successor was Miss Leah Stratton, who was succeeded in March, 1920, by Miss Irene Lage. Within a few months after becoming superintendent Miss Lage died and in July, 1920, Miss Ethel Hewett succeeded her, the latter holding the position until May, 1924, when she was succeeded by the present superintendent, Miss Della M. Lystol. In addition to the superintendent and nurses, the hospital employs six persons in the general work of the institution. Among them, Frank Gadow, who has been employed here from the beginning, has proved himself especially useful and efficient as janitor and utility man.

Wisconsin Telephone Company.-The first telephone was installed in 1878 or 1879, on a private line from Knapp, Stout and Company's office to the place now known as Menomonie Junction. This line was grounded. In 1882 a local company was formed. O. K. Ranum was manager and he became toll agent for the Wisconsin Telephone Company. The exchange was located in a drug store on Main Street. In December, 1894, the Wisconsin Telephone Company, which had been granted an ordinance, took over this exchange. A year later an ordinance was granted J. D. Hills and Sanford Heafield to build an exchange to compete with the Wisconsin Telephone Company. This was accomplished and in January, 1899, the property was transferred to the Menomonie Telephone Company. This company had little success, however, and in September of the same year the Menomonie Telephone Company and the Wisconsin Telephone Company were consolidated, and the exchange was moved to the Johnson building on the corner of Main Street and Broadway. One toll section and two magneto local sections were installed. The number of subscribers amounted to approximately 300. In 1906 the exchange was moved to 307 Main Street, its present location. A modern type 9-D, six-position switchboard, equipped with 400 lines, was installed. All grounded lines were changed to metallic, the outside plant was rebuilt, a cable extending throughout the city being put in. At the completion of the new switchboard on May 1, 1906, the Wisconsin Telephone Company had 366 city subscribers and 90 rural. Business increased rapidly in volume and as a result of the congestion on cables and switchboards it became necessary, during the years 1915 and 1916, to install two additional switchboard sections and 200 additional multiples. The cable plant was enlarged and the cable system extended further into the resi-The underground system, costing approximately $7,000, was indence districts. stalled at this time in order that the poles and cables might be removed from the business section of the city. One of the cables installed was a 990-pair cable, containing 12 quads of No. 13 gauge, to handle the toll circuits. Two hundred multiple jacks and signals, also additional rural and toll equipment were installed. The construction crew has recently completed the erection of three miles of 50-pair cable commencing at Thirteenth Street extending east of Menomonie into rural territory in order to eliminate the over-head wires on account of the strain on the poles, also avoiding considerable trouble in the event of sleet storms. Erection of cable is contemplated for 1925 west of Menomonie in order to remove the excess strain of the over-head wire lead in this territory. On April 1, 1925, Menomonie exchange had 1770 subscribers, of which 645 are rural.

The Eank of Menomonie is the outcome of a very early banking enterprise in Menomonie. For a number of years Knapp, Stout & Co. (later The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company) did a limited sort of banking business here as an adjunct to their lumber industry, the chief feature of which was the issue of script, which they paid out to their employees and which was good for its face value in Menomonie, but could not be redeemed elsewhere. But by 1867 the need of a banking institution of more general scope was felt, and one was started in May of that year by S. B. French, in the store he conducted, located two doors east of the present Bank of Menomonie, on Main Street. Mr. French issued drafts or bills of exchange, both domestic and foreign, but conducted no checking account. After a number of years a fire destroyed one half the block including the French store, and in 1881 he erected the building now occupied by the Bank of Menomonie, in which for some years he conducted a regular banking business. Then, owing to a deal on margin in "Omaha" railroad stock, which proved unfortunate, he became financially involved and made an assignment under the state law. The property and business were bought by Capt. Andrew Tainter, and his son Louis S., who conducted it as a private bank. Captain Tainter died in 1899, after which Louis S. Tainter than the business alone until 1903, when, on Aug. 24, it was organized under The charter, or "certificate of authority," dated Aug. 28, was rethe state law. ceived a few days later and the concern began business as a state bank, with Louis S. Tainter, Fred L. French, Mrs. Bertha Tainter, and Mrs. Fanny McMillan as stockholders. Louis S. Tainter was president; Mrs. Fanny McMillan, vice president; F. T. Watson, cashier; and Fred L. French, assistant cashier. The organization was under the name of the Bank of Menomonie and the capital was $30,000. No important changes occurred until Feb. 19, 1906, at which time all of the old stockholders sold out, the stock being bought in by a new set, consisting of James H. Stout, L. D. Harvey, Elmer B. Hill, and W. C. Ribenack. James H. Stout was president of the new organization; L. D. Harvey, vice president and Martin Fladoes became cashier, no further changes occurring until the death of Mr. Stout Dec. 8, 1910, when L. D. Harvey was elected president. Mr. Stout's interest was bought by L. D. Harvey, Martin Fladoes, O. O. Nesseth, Olaf Noer and Dr. L. A. Dahl, and is still owned by them. The present officers of the bank are: Martin Fladoes, president; Oscar Wilson, vice president; John A. Fladoes, cashier; and Myrtle Hosford, assistant cashier. The bank's capital remains at $30,000; there is now a surplus of $8,000 and the deposits amount to $300,000.

In November, 1873, the firm of Schutte & Quilling, composed of William Schutte, Sr., and Albert Quilling, who were general merchants on Broadway, started a banking business as co-partners, occupying quarters in the rear of the Schutte & Ouilling store building. The business was successful from the start and enjoyed a steady growth. It was continued as a partnership concern until 1903, in which year the state legislature enacted a law requiring all banks to incorporate or discontinue using the sign or name of bank or banking. To conform with this law, the Schutte & Quilling banking concern was incorporated as The Schutte & Quilling Bank, with a capital of $30,000 and a surplus of $6,000. The same quarters were occupied until 1907, when the bank was moved into a new home at 630 Broad-In January, 1918, the capital was increased to $100,000, and in 1920 to wav. $200,000. On Nov. 20, 1923, the bank celebrated its golden jubilee with an open house, entertaining in the afternoon more than 1,500 friends and patrons. Early in the following year it was merged into the First National Bank, Albert Quilling, the survivor of the two original partners, selling his stock and quitting the regular banking business, to organize the Security Loan & Trust Company. William Schutte, Jr., for many years cashier of the Schutte & Quilling Bank, became a vice president and a director of the First National, while O. C. Kausrud and Alfred Peterson, directors, also joined the First National.

The First National Bank was started as a state bank in 1879 by the late F. J. McLean, and began business with a capital of $30,000. On Jan. 2, 1883, it became a national bank. Mr. McLean was its first president and served in that capacity for many years. In 1906 his interest in the bank was taken over by the late Senator James H. Stout, who remained at the head until his death in 1910, when his interest was acquired by Frank Pierce, then engaged in the banking business in Durand. Mr. Pierce became president of the First National in 1911, moving here on Sept. 1, and he has since continued in that capacity. The original capital of the First National was $50,000, which was later increased to $60,000. Continued growth made further expansion necessary and in 1920 the capital was again increased, to $100,000. J. A. Decker was the first cashier of the bank when it came into existence as a state bank, and continued in that capacity after it was nationalized until the spring of 1883, when he resigned, leaving Menomonie a few months later to engage in banking business at Baldwin. Mr. Decker was succeeded by the late W. C. McLean, who was cashier for many years. W. C. Ribanack fol-lowed Mr. McLean, holding the position for about three years, when he was succeeded by James P. McLean, who was cashier during 1904-1905. In 1905 Frank C. Jackson came here from Superior to take the cashiership, and continued in that capacity until July 1. 1923, when he resigned and went to California to make his home. A. M. Simpson has been serving as cashier since Mr. Jackson retired. One of the most notable events in the history of this bank, and in the business history of Menomonie, was referred to in the Dunn County News of Jan. 10, 1924, as follows: "Arrangements have been completed which will bring about consolidation of the First National Bank of Menomonie and the Schutte & Quilling Bank, two of the oldest and strongest banks in the Northwest. Frank Pierce, president of the First National, continues at the head of the enlarged institution. Within a week, as soon as the remodeling at the First National is completed, the working force and equipment at the Schutte & Quilling Bank will be moved to the First National building. By the transfer the First National takes over the assets and liabilities of the Schutte & Quilling Bank, with the exception of the Schutte & Quilling Bank building. The ownership of this property passes to Albert Quilling, who has for half a century been president of the bank which now goes out of busi-The merger of these two banks gives Menomonie the largest bank for a city of its size in Wisconsin, and, with one or two exceptions, the largest bank in any city of 5000 population in the United States. The combined resources under the new arrangement will reach nearly $4,000,000. According to the financial report of the First National at the close of business Feb. 3, 1923, its resources amounted to $1,731,744.98, and those of the Schutte & Quilling Bank to $1,952,-To meet the needs of the business which this large expansion has made 117.16. necessary, the capital of the First National will be doubled. Its present capital of $100,000 will be increased to $200,000; the bank's surplus will be $40,000." The merger was celebrated by a public reception held at the First National Bank on Saturday, Feb. 16, 1924. That it was an event widely noted was manifest when the officers of the local institution received bouquets and congratulations from the officers of various banks throughout the Northwest, including the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Eau Claire, and Chicago, besides others. Visitors were received from all over the county and from neighboring counties, as well as from the city (Menomonie). Probably 4,000 persons visited the institution. Officers of the bank met the visitors at the door and presented flowers to the ladies and cigars to the men, and neat pocket-pieces of a new penny, surrounded by an aluminum horseshoe, were given to the children. There was music by an orchestra and the girls of the bookkeeping department were kept busy serving luncheon. Guides escorted the people through the large vault containing the money safes and safety deposit boxes, explaining the electrical alarm, time locks, and other features of interest. The new vault has four times the capacity of the old one, and is the last word in burglar-proof construction. It will accommodate more than 2,000 safety deposit boxes and anticipates growth for years to come. An attendant is constantly on duty to respond to the demands of the customers of this department.

The Kraft State Bank was formed in March, 1914, by Phillip Kraft and his sons, John S., William F. and Samuel P. Kraft. It was organized as a state bank with a capital of S30,000 and a surplus of S5,000, and the building was erected which has been the home of the bank up to the present time. The first officers were: Phillip Kraft, president; John S. Kraft, first vice president; Samuel P. Kraft, second vice president; and William F. Kraft, cashier. In August, 1923, Phillip Kraft died and Samuel P. was elected president, O. G. Anderson becoming first vice president, John S. Kraft second vice president, William F. Kraft cashier, and Rudolph Rommelmeyer and H. B. Hendrickson assistant cashiers. There has since been no change in the official board. The concern was engaged in a general banking business from March, 1914 to May, 1924, when a trust department was added. In 1918 the capital was doubled, being increased to $60,000, and in May, 1924, it was further increased to $100,000. At the present time the total resources of the bank, including deposits, are over $1,000,000.

The Security Loan & Trust Co. was organized on March 17, 1924, by Albert Quilling, with certain business friends and associates. It received its charter on March 17 that year and started with a capital of $100,000 and a surplus of $10,000. It occupies the first floor of the building at No. 630 Broadway—the building which formerly housed The Schutte & Quilling Bank. The operation of the institution includes trust service, savings and time deposits, real estate loans and investment securiteis, and the drawing of contracts, deeds, mortgages, wills, and other legal papers. The present officers are: Albert Quilling, president; C. K. Averill, vice president; Geo. R. Brewer, vice president; H. W. Quilling, cashier; and Emil J. Bressler, assistant cashier.

In writing a history of retail lumbering in Menomonie, it becomes necessary to go back into the early 50's when material for the first buildings to be built in this city were retailed by the Knapp, Stout and Company from the present site of the LaPointe Lumber Company. The management of the Knapp, Stout and Company at that time was in the hands of Captain William Wilson, grandfather of the present manager of the company, G. W. LaPointe, Jr. It was in this yard in 1879 that August Morscheck obtained employment as a

It was in this yard in 1879 that August Morscheck obtained employment as a yard man, and has for nearly 46 years handled building material that has gone out of the yard to furnish shelter for man and beast. Mr. Morscheck's record is one of faithful, continuous service. In his time he has undoubtedly handled more than a million feet of lumber every year.

With the closing of the saw mills, the retail operations were taken over by The Wilson-Weber Lumber Company, which was organized in May, 1902. Thomas B. Wilson, James F. Wilson, Charles H. Weber and Louis H. Weber were the incorporators. They continued retail operations here and at other points in this section of the state until 1911.

In 1911 the ownership of the local yard passed to the LaPointe Lumber Company, a corporation, and G. W. LaPointe, Jr., of Wilson, became manager. Mr. LaPointe had previously engaged in the hardwood lumber business and in logging operations in the northern part of the state and operated a retail yard at Wilson and also one at Downing. Associated with Mr. LaPointe at Downing was A. H. Barnard, a hardwood lumberman of Minneapolis. In the spring of 1912 the lumber yard at Rusk operated by the North Star Lumber Company was purchased by the LaPointe Lumber Company.

In 1916 the O. & N. Lumber Company was incorporated and its general office located in this city with Mr. LaPointe as secretary and general manager. The stockholders of the O. & N. Lumber Company are all lumbermen and pioneers. J. T. Barber, president of the O. & N. Lumber Company, came to this section of the country from Hannibal, Missouri. In 1875 he obtained a position with the North Western Lumber Company and, at the death of Mr. D. R. Moon, became its president. Mr. Barber has also served as secretary of the Montreal River Company. S. G. Moon, treasurer, is the son of D. R. Moon. Mr. Moon's father was first engaged in buying and selling timberlands, logs, lumber and general merchandise in Eau Claire in 1861. In 1869 Mr. Moon became interested in a saw mill at Hannibal, Missouri, and it was here that he made the acquaintance of Mr. Barber. Mr. Moon was also connected with the Sterling Lumber Company. A. R. Owen, vice president, is general manager of the John S. Owen Lumber Company at Owen, and is president and general manager of the Rust-Owen Lumber Company at Drummond. John S. Owen, director, is president of the John S. Owen Lumber Company at Owen, and is also interested in the mill at Drummond. Both A. R. Owen and John S. Owen are interested in extensive lumbering operations in the South and West. Aside from his duties as secretary and general manager of the O. & N. yards and president of the LaPointe Lumber Company, Mr. LaPointe has served the Wisconsin Retail Lumber Dealers Association as its president, treasurer and as a director.

The number of yards owned by the O. & N. Lumber Company was just about doubled in 1917 when they became owners of the Wisconsin yards of the Midland Lumber and Coal Company. Today they operate 33 yards located from Downing to Stetsonville on the "Soo" Line and from Wilson to Neillsville on the Omaha. O. & N. yards are located in nine counties and serve people in fifteen.

Up until the LaPointe Lumber Company became owners of the West Side yard, the majority of homes that were built in Menomonie were built without plans. Plan books were just beginning to be thought of. Up until this time lumber yards were merely looked upon as dealers engaged in selling lumber. So it was something a little bit new for the LaPointe Lumber Company to advertise in our pages that they furnished complete plans and prices for complete homes, which they did along about 1912 and 1913. Many homes were built in Menomonie from plans furnished by the LaPointe people, but it was found that in a number of cases plans that were offered in plan books were not suited to this particular section, or that very often the builder wanted to make changes.

With the thought in mind of increasing its service to the builders of this community, the company in 1917 employed a draftsman to take charge of making plans for prospective builders. Arnold O. Arntson, a graduate of Menomonie High School, took charge of this part of the work. From this small beginning, the Builders' Service Department, as it is now called, has gradually grown until today four men are employed in the drafting of plans and making guaranteed estimates of building costs. The LaPointe people have eliminated all the guess work from building. They have also provided a means whereby people are able to clearly understand what their homes are to look like through the means of complete blue prints and working drawings. This is a service that is not found in many towns the size of Menomonie and it is only because of the large system of yards which the O. & N. people operate that they are able to offer this service. here

The company employs the HoltBid System of estimating which was originally compiled by one of its former employees, A. W. Holt, now located in Minneapolis. The company also uses a modern electrical blue printing machine.

Few of us realize the number of people employed by the O. & N. and LaPointe Lumber Companies in this city. Twenty-five families are represented in the O. & N. and LaPointe offices here today. A group photograph was taken a year or two ago at the time of the annual convention of yard managers which is held in this city every February. Since the picture was taken a number of yards have been added and at the last convention banquet there were 90 present.

The Wisconsin Milling Co. owns and operates the flour mill that was started 67 years ago by Knapp, Stout & Co., that famous lumber concern having built the original flour mill in 1858. It was operated by water power and had five run of stone, to which two more were later added for feed grinding purposes. In course of time the old millstones were replaced by steel rolls, and other modern equipment was put in. The concern was incorporated as The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company in 1878, and continued to operate the mill subsequently until they ceased business here in 1901. They then sold it to the Wisconsin Power Co., by whom it was operated until 1906, when it was bought by the Wisconsin Milling Co. The latter have since more than doubled the capacity of the flour mill. The plant, consisting of several good-sized buildings, is situated on both sides of the Red Cedar River, which at this point runs from east to west. On the south side of the stream, which is here crossed by a bridge, is the large flour and feed mill, with a small building formerly used as an office but which is not at present in use. It is in the larger building that the company manufactures its flour products, and to it the farmers bring their wheat to grind into flour, also corn, oats and barley for grinding into feed. Just across the bridge is the fine office building now in use, standing on land somewhat elevated above the level of the road, while to the west of it is the "scratch feed plant," where mixed feed for poultry is ground, and which has two elevators, one at each end, each forming an integral part of the building. The east end of this mill was formerly the warehouse of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and it therefore possesses historic interest for the older residents of Menomonie and the surrounding territory. The flour mill turns out eight standard products, namely: Mill Rose Flour and Company's Best, the latter a fancy patent flour; Rye Flour, Bolted Corn Meal, Buckwheat Flour, Hygienic Flour, a whole wheat product for bread and pancakes; Rye Graham, and Creamola, a breakfast food made from the heart of the wheat. The feed mill manufactures a number of brands, which ber r the trade-mark of "A-C Feeds," and which are prepared in accordance with the published results of scientific research in the agricultural stations of America. They include: A-C Dairy Ration, made from pure grains and protein concentrates and mineral salts, for feeding cattle; A-C Calf Meal, Monarch Dairy Feed, A-C Scratch Feed, A-C Chick Developer Feed, A-C Baby Chick Feed, A-C Egg Producer (a mash), Monarch Scratch Feed, No. 2 Chop Feed, for horses and mules, and A-C Hog Feed. All these feeds are specially designed for the purpose indicated, containing a variety of grains, seeds, and other substances mixed in suitable proportions, and have won approval from the farmers and increased patronage of the mills. The flour mill has a capacity of 600 barrels The mills are operated by water power, supplemented by electricity. in 24 hours. and are fully equipped with the most approved modern machinery. The product is shipped to points in Wisconsin, the Central States, and Eastern territory, including the markets of New York and Philadelphia. The present officers of the company are: E. O. Wright, president; A. E. Brecht, vice president; B. L. Kabot, treasurer; and F. C. Myer, secretary. About 35 men are employed on an average.

The Menomonie Milling Company is engaged in the operation of a mill on Gilbert Creek, about a mile from the city. The enterprise was established some 35 years ago by Andreas E. Hofland, who built a steam mill on his farm. About six months later, steam power having proved unsatisfactory, Mr. Hofland made a contract, which included a 99-year lease, with Frank McLean for the water right on Gilbert Creek, and moved the mill to the new site, where he built a dam and resumed operations. Two years later the mill burned. Then, on April 19, 1902, the Menomonie Milling Co. was incorporated with A. E. Hofland president, O. J. Tilleson vice president, Alex Hosford secretary, and W. C. Ribanack treasurer. Albert Quilling was a director, in addition to the officers above mentioned. In January, 1904, Mr. Quilling was elected secretary and in 1911 Odin Hofland became a director. Byran L. Kabot has been secretary and treasurer since 1912. The concern has continued to do a profitable business, doing custom milling, manufacturing pearl barley, and dealing extensively in feeds. The product of the mill averages 200 cars a year and is sold throughout the United States.

The manufacture of brick has been a leading industry for many years, and it may be said to have taken in large measure the place of the once great lumber industry.

One of the earliest brick makers in Menomonie, if not the first, was a man named Jesse Hughes, who operated a small plant located where the barn of the Hydraulic Pressed Brick now stands. It is not known just when he started, but he was still engaged in the business in 1888, ceasing operations soon after that.

In 1872 John and Frank Kelly, with W. A. Drowley, started a brick-making plant situated on the Hudson road two miles west of Menomonie, which was known as the Kelly & Drowley yard. It was a small concern, but in 1882 was incorporated as the Dunn County Pressed Brick Co., with J. G. Thorpe, of Eau Claire, as president, J. T. Gilbert of Milwaukee secretary, and John H. Knapp of Menomonie treasurer. John Hopwood and Judge John Kelly were stockholders. Mr. Gilbert, though his legal residence was in Milwaukee, spent about half his time in Menomonie, being here during the summers. The output of the concern was increased. About 1886 the name was changed to the Menomonie Pressed Brick Co., Frank Kelly at the time being superintendent. W. A. Drowley dropped out about 1888 and went over to the Standard Pressed Brick Co., a new concern, and in 1897 the plant was sold to the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Co., who operated it until 1907, when they ceased to do so.

In 1888 the Standard Pressed Brick Co. was started, with yards in the town of Menomonie northwest of the city and outside its limits. The site had been previously occupied for brick making by a man named Maltby, who had about three acres of land, and who was bought out by the Standard people. The latter were from Minneapolis, a Mr. Byers being president of the company and F. W. Cook, secretary. W. A. Drowley of Menomonie was superintendent. The Standard Pressed Brick Co. went out of business in 1894, and the property was subsequently leased by the Menomonie Pressed Brick Co., who operated it for three years. They had no clay land, however, but leased some from Mr. Drowley who owned a tract across the road.

Another concern, called the St. Paul & Minneapolis Pressed Brick Co., also operated a brick-making industry, having 80 acres of land to the southwest of the Standard property. The president and manager was J. K. Caldwell, a New England man, who, it is said, came here from Galesburg, Ill., and the plant, therefore, was commonly referred to as the Caldwell plant or yards. Mr. Caldwell, however, was not successful, and after operating for a while, and buying machinery which he never installed, he quit and returned to Galesburg to live with a son-inlaw who resided there. The plant subsequently remained idle for a number of years and was finally bought, about 1902, by the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Co., whose property it is now.

In 1885 the Wisconsin Red Pressed Brick Co. was incorporated, whose yards, covering about 28 acres, were situated, as they are still, on the west bank of Red Cedar River, within half a mile from the post office and within the city limits. At that time J. W. Kendrick, of Minneapolis, was president of the company, and A McMullen, also of Minneapolis, secretary and treasurer, while the superintendent was S. L. Alexander of Menomonie. The concern has enjoyed a prosperous existence up to the present time. It has a capital of $50,000 and employs about 55 men. Its officers are: J. P. McLean, president; F. J. McLean, vice president and treasurer; and Oscar Wilson, secretary. Since 1921 it has been controlled by the Excelsior Brick Co.

The Excelsior Brick Co. was organized as a stock company in the year 1900 by F. J. McLean, J. H. Stout, and S. L. Alexander. Its yards are located within the city limits about a mile and a half west of the post office. Its original capital of $15,000 has been increased to $50,000 and its present officers are: J. P. McLean, president; W. W. McLean, vice president; and F. J. McLean, secretary and treasurer. Oscar Wilson is manager and O. E. Carlson, superintendent. About 1912 this company bought from the heirs of Harry Sprink the property and good will of the Tramway Brick Co., whose plant was situated about six miles northwest of Menomonie, changing its name to the Menomonie Brick Co. The combined product of the Wisconsin Red Pressed Brick Co. and the Excelsior Brick Co., as united under one management, is over 12,000,000 brick per year. It includes rough texture brick, wire-cut-faced brick, red sand mound brick, also veneer, colonial, sewer, chimney and common brick. The concern also keeps fire clay and mortar coloring in stock.

The Hydraulic Pressed Brick Company, organized in 1868, having headquarters in St. Louis and offices in Minneapolis, has two brick plants a mile and a half west of town, started about 1893, and is engaged in the manufacture of Hytex brick. The company ships to all parts of the Northwestern States and employs approximately 125 men in operating both plants.

In 1912 a man named Segerstrom came to Menomonie from Minneapolis and got the citizens and Commercial Club interested in the establishment of a piano factory here. He was given a site for a plant just across the river and a large factory was erected. After operating it for two years Mr. Segerstrom failed, and George P. Norris of Minneapolis was appointed receiver. He then organized the Holland Piano Co., which is now operating the factory, the present manager being J. M. Sleeper, who succeeded Henry M. Johnson in that position. The concern manufactures upright and player pianos, both under two names or trademarks, namely, the Holland piano and the Geo. P. Norris piano, the total output being about 3,000 a year. From 60 to 100 men are employed.

The Forster Foundry Co., a concern that has enjoyed an uninterrupted career of prosperity for the last 27 years, was started in 1898 is the Dunn County Iron Works by H. H. Forster and Gotfried Kruger, who erected the building now in use—a frame and concrete structure. The site, on Broadway near Ninth Avenue, was part of a tract formerly belonging to John H. Knapp, and 56 years ago was occupied by the Edwards & Son chair factory. But after a few years the chair factory burned down and for a number of years thereafter the land was used for a cow pasture and sometimes as a circus ground, until Mr. Forster bought it from Henry Knapp. For four years the Dunn County Iron Works were conducted as a common repair shop. At the end of that time Mr. Kruger sold his interest to Mr. Forster and the latter, about six months later, sold it to T. L. Thorsen. The concern then went into the manufacture of the Aetna gas engines. Mr. Thorsen remained in it for two years, and when he dropped out his place was taken by Samuel H. Forster, a son of H. H. Forster. On Jan. 1, 1922, the concern was incorporated as the Forster Foundry Co., with a capital of $10,000, and George B. Forster (another son of H. H.) was taken in as a member of the company. The manufacture of gas engines had been given up several years before, and since then the business has been conducted as a first class repair shop, though some manufacturing is still done to order-chiefly of structural iron work and miscellaneous building material, which is shipped mostly to points in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The present officers of the company are: H. H. Forster, president; S. H. Forster, vice president; and George B. Forster, secretary and treasurer.

The Globe Iron Works were for some six or eight years a manufacturing concern of Menomonie that was engaged in the manufacture of the White gas engines. The promoters came here from Minneapolis and had a good engine, but failed to develop a domestic trade, shipping their product mostly to Australia and New Zealand. For a while they did a good business, but the inventor of the engine, becoming manager, made some changes in it which he regarded as improvements, but which were not acceptable to the foreign trade, the consignees returning the shipments, and soon after that the concern went out of business here. Their plant was bought and is now used by the Litnum Bronze Company.

The Litnum Bronze Company was organized as a stock company in 1919 by August Litnum, of Milwaukee, H. C. Inenfeldt, of Menomonie, and others, for the manufacture of litnum bronze, an invention of Mr. Litnum which has been perfected by Mr. Innenfeldt. The concern acquired, by purchase, the plant of the former Globe Iron Works, which manufactured the White Gasoline engine, and has since continued its operation. The material manufactured in various forms has some remarkable qualities, being stronger than steel, while 20 per cent lighter, and having better wearing qualities, besides having a wonderful resistance to the corrosive power of acids. It is produced in the form of all sorts of bronze castings, and as such largely used in all the paper mills in the Fox River Valley, and also in the form of centrifugal pumps, which are shipped to Los Angeles, Calif. Some of the product goes east to New York and to various other parts of the country. The present officers of the company are: H. C. Inenfeldt, president; S. B. Ingram, secretary; B. F. Crane, vice president; A. J. Josephson, treasurer. There are seven trustees, including the officers above mentioned, with the addition of Ed. E. Roach, George Emerton and E. A. Finley. Mr. Litnum is not now a member of the company.

In 1917 the John Wildi Evaporated Milk Company came to Menomonie and built a fine milk condensary plant costing $250,000. Operations were commenced in April, 1918, and continued by the company for several years, when they sold out to Nestle's Food Company, and the plant was operated by the latter for three or four years. It had a capacity of 150 to 200,000 pounds of fluid milk a day, or a daily output of $1,500 to 2,000 cases of factory product, necessitating normally the employment of 150 to 200 persons. But unfortunately the great expectations raised by the establishment of so large an industry in Menomonie were doomed to final disappointment, as the receipts proved insufficient to cover the great cost of operation. The plant was closed down in the fall of 1924 and is now being dismantled.

In 1895 H. H. Foster, C. J. Anderson and Fred Kempe established the Menomonie Iron Works, which were operated for about ten years as a general foundry and machine shop, employing ten or more skilled workmen. The plant then burned down and the business was discontinued.

The Oscillating Sleigh Co., an enterprise started in 1904 for the manufacture of high grade vehicles, and the Waldron & Vasey feed mill, started in 1909, are no longer operating.

Cigar making has been carried on in Menomonie for quite a number of years. A leading concern in this line is that of Anderson Bros., Inc., which was established in 1893 and is now the largest cigar factory in northern Wisconsin. The company is capitalized at $40,000 and has turned out as large an output as 2,000,000 cigars in one year. Associated with this concern is the A. B. Leaf Tobacco Company, having a capital stock of $50,000, of which $22,000 is paid in. It started business in 1920 in Barron, Wis.

The Menomonie Cigar Company, with Reine Breitzman and Al. Plutshack proprietors, also manufacture several brands of popular cigars.

The Menomonie Marble and Granite Works, P. H. Hamerly proprietor, is a well established concern, which manufactures tasteful monuments and gravestones.

The Menomonie Greenhouse has been operating for over 20 years and is noted for its excellent service and the quality of its product. Design work, cut flowers and plants, shrubbery, vegetables and bulbs are the most important lines of horticulture carried on by the manager of the plant.

The Menomonie Nurseries were begun about three years ago for the purpose of supplying the surrounding country with hardy homegrown strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, and other small fruits; also with plum, apple, cherry and other trees.

The Menomonie Dairy Co. is a concern operated under the management of H. J. Vigels in the manufacture of ice cream, also doing a general dairy business. The output of ice cream amounts to about 50,000 gallons a year.

In retail lines Menomonie is acknowledged to be one of the best cities of its size in the state. Shippers come here from many miles around, including residents of other cities and villages, being attracted by the complete stocks of high quality goods on sale. In 1924 the equalized valuation of the merchants' stocks was $790,959. One department store alone carried a stock worth $150,000. It would be impossible in a work of this kind to go into a general history of the various stores. Reference may be found to many in the biographical part of this volume, contained in the biographies of their respective proprietors.

In 1863 the village began to feel the need of a hotel and Nathan Eytcheson built the Menomonie House, which continued for many years to afford accommodations to travelers, the proprietor in the early 90's being O. K. Fox.

The Central House was started in 1869 by P. Hansen, who soon afterwards took his brother, T. Hansen, into partnership. It has been several times enlarged and improved and is now conducted by W. P. McGuinnes, who has been its proprietor for five years.

In 1871 George P. Hanneymer built the Merchant's Hotel, which burned down in 1883 and not rebuilt.

The Royal Hotel was built in 1885 by the Menomonie Hotel Company, which was incorporated in the same year, with F. J. McLean as president and A. Quilling, treasurer. It was opened by Mr. and Mrs. William Auer of Chicago and has since changed owners a number of times, the present proprietor being Wilbur Tibbils, who took it five years ago.

The Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company is an organization that has now enjoyed an unbroken and successful career of half a century. It was first conceived by a group of about 40 farmers who met in Grange Hall in the town of Spring The actual date of organization was Oct. 16, 1875, and business was Brook. commenced on Jan. 17, 1876. The company operates on the yearly assessment plan, the assessments being regulated so as to cover losses plus the small expense of operation. A central office is maintained in Menomonie and there are agents among the farmers in the different towns. The statutes of the company provided that one man could be insured for not more than $3,000, (now $15,000) and all kinds of farm property could be insured. There has been a steady growth, and in January, 1925, there were 3,041 policies in force representing about $15,000,000 of insurance. Thomas Dickson was the first president, and H. A. Farnham was the secretary of the company during its infancy. Then W. H. Landon was secretary until 1913, after which E. B. Young held the office for a year. Then J. B. Chickering, who died recently, performed the duties of the office until 1920, when he was succeeded by J. D. Millar, who has served up to the present time. The losses for the first year consisted of a barn owned by William Blume and a cow owned by John Stavrum, the total amounting to $420. The assessment of two and a half mills has remained the same despite the fact that the total losses last vear (1924) were about $35,000. The field covered by the company is confined to Dunn County. The present members of the board of directors are: E. B. Young (president), J. D. Millar (secretary and treasurer), S. S. Sivertson, Thomas Dunning and Frank Stewart.

Social activities have been a strong feature in the city's life from an early period in its history. In one of its issues in the year 1874 the Dunn County News published a review of the principal societies then existent here, which, in addition to the Masons and Odd Fellows, included the following: The Ladies' Benevolent Society, non-sectarian, which was controlled and managed by ladies, though gentlemen were admitted as members; Grace Mission Church Society, for promoting the welfare and prosperity of the Episcopal church, for which purpose the society gave various entertainments; the Ladies' Sewing Society, organized in 1868 by the ladies of the Methodist church; the German Harmonia Society, a musical organization sustained by German citizens, a Turner Society being included in it; the German Aid Society, organized in 1874; the Scandinavian Aid Society, which had a singing society connected with it; and the Mencmonie Literary Society, having as its object, the mental improvement of its members by means of lectures, readings and similar exercises. Other societies sprang up later, such as the Good Templars, a temperance organization, which had its uses in the saloon days; the Sons of Herman and Daughters of Herman, German societies; the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and others. Some of these societies have gone out of existence, no one remembers when, but their places have been filled by others, and there is today no lack of opportunities for those desiring social intercourse outside of the home. Brief mention will be here made of the principal social or fraternal organizations now existing in the city, some of which were established many years ago.

Menomonie Lodge No. 164, F. & A. M., was granted a dispensation Sept. 6, 1866, and its charter is dated June 12, 1867. It is the oldest fraternal society in Menomonie, having carried on its work for over 58 years. Its present membership is 276.

Menomonie Chapter No. 53, R. A. M., is 11 years younger than the lodge, having received its dispensation July 24. 1877, and its charter being dated Feb. 20, 1878. At the present time (May 1, 1925), it has 165 members.

Menomonie Chapter No. 131, O. E. S. (Eastern Star) received a dispensation May 9, 1902 and a charter dated May 17, 1902. It has 248 members. Menomonie Commandery No. 47, K. T., was constituted Oct. 18, 1922, and now has 75 members.

In 1914 the fine building known as the Masonic Temple was erected at the southwest corner of Main Street and Broadway. It is a large, handsome and substantial two-story brick structure with basement, and is well fited up through-out. Its cost was $30,000, the money being raised through stock subscriptions, the stock being purchased not only by Masons but also by citizens of Menomonie and Dunn County not belonging to the order. The holding company is known as The Masonic Temple Association, of which Walter A. Clark is now president and Oscar Wilson, secretary and treasurer. One of the hardest workers for the success of this enterprise was Brother A. C. Anderson. The Commercial Club occupies the first floor of the building, and also the basement, where there is a good bowling alley, while on the upper floor are the rooms of the Blue Lodge, Chapter (R. A. M.), Commandery and Eastern Star, all these organizations paying a fixed rent to the holding society for their accommodations. The Masons have a strong organization in Menomonie and the meetings of the different branches of the order are well attended and marked by a spirit of unity and interest in the work. Bury Lodge No. 183, I. O. O. F., was instituted Aug. 3, 1870, and in August, 1876 Red Cedar Lodge No. 261 (German ritual), I. O. O. F., was instituted. These two lodges were consolidated in 1912 under the name of Red Cedar Lodge No. 183,

I. O. O. F., with a charter dated June 5 that year. Ben Hur Encampment No. 54, I. O. O. F., was organized about 1890 and was reorganized in 1922 with a charter dated Oct. 11. There were 30 charter members.

Evergreen Lodge No. 44, D. of R. (Rebekahs), I. O. O. F., was instituted March 1, 1875, and received a charter dated Dec. 3, 1875. There were 20 charter members. At present the lodge has 74 members.

The Odd Fellows own a two-story brick building on Main Street, which was purchased and remodeled in the spring of 1916. The ground floor is occupied by The lodge rooms, which are on the second floor, are used not only by the Odd Fellows, but also by several other fraternal societies, including the following: White Rose Colony No. 240, Beavers' Reserve Fund, chartered July 11, 1906; Mencmonie Tent, Knights of the Maccabees, chartered in April, 1897; Independent Scandanavian Workingmen's Association, chartered May 23, 1898; Normanna Lodge, Scandanavian Sisters of America, chartered Sept. 13, 1905; Forest Hcme Camp No. 93, Royal Neighbors of America, an old camp, the charter of which, however, bears no date; Juvenile Camp of Royal Neighbors No. 93, chartered in October, 1921, with 27 charter members, and the Carpenters' and Joiners' United Brotherhood No. 68, chartered in February, 1901.

Pine Camp No. 1261, M. W. A. (Modern Woodmen) of which the Royal Neighbors' camps are auxiliaries, was organized in January, 1890, and now has about 305 members. In January, 1925, the camp moved into their present room in the Knights of Pythias hall, having previously occupied quarters in the I. O. O. F. hall. Forest Home Camp of Royal Neighbors has between 250 and 260 members, and the Juvenile Camp 34 or 35.

Ed. Č. Gottry Lodge No. 170, K. of P., was instituted Feb. 9, 1909, with 18 members, and in the following June received its charter. It has had a steady growth and is now a strong lodge with 201 members (April, 1925).

Liberty Temple No. 34, Pythian Sisters, was organized April 18, 1918, and now has a total membership of 87—66 sisters and 21 knights.

Another branch of the Knights of Pythias order was organized in January, 1925, namely, the Dramatic Order of Knights of Khorassan, a purely social organization, sometimes referred to as "The Dokkeys," and which may be regarded as "the playground of Pythianism." The growth of the Pythian order in Menomonie became visible when the Pythian Temple was erected in 1924. On April 18, that year, the building association was incorporated, and on July 27 the cornerstone of the building was laid with imposing ceremonies, including a procession with band, and an address by Richard S. Witte, of Milwaukee, supreme representative. There were many Pythians present from other towns. The temple, situated on Main Street between Fourth and Fifth, was dedicated in November the same year. It cost $24,000 and is owned by the Pythian Building Association, incorporated with $20,000 worth of stock, all held by members of the Pythian order.

The Menomonie Liederkranz, formerly one of the most prominent musical organizations in this section, was formed in 1905 by a few enthusiastic spirits whose purpose was to advance the musical interests of the city. Dr. A. F. Heising was the first president. The society had a fine male chorus and social functions were held once a month in Stori's hall. During the war the Liederkranz was changed to a purely social club, and about a year ago it dissolved.

The Commercial Club, one of the leading civic organizations of the city, including on its membership roll the names of nearly all the influential business men, held its first meeting in the Gymnasium building on Jan. 17, 1905. N. J. MacArthur was chairman of the committee on organization, and the first officers elected were: J. H. Stout, president; L. D. Harvey, first vice president; E. J. Kimball, second vice president; N. J. MacArthur, secretary; and William Schutte, Jr., treasurer. It was announced that Mr. Stout gave the club the use of the rooms in the Gymnasium for a period of three years, subject only to the condition that the work of the club should not interfere with the work being done for the schools of the city. These rooms were occupied by the club until June, 1914, when removal was made to its present fine quarters in the Masonic Temple, the club renting the first floor and basement. The formal opening of the Commercial Club took place on March 3, 1905. It started with about $1,000 worth of furniture and supplies of its own, besides property installed for the use of the club and owned by Mr. Stout. It began in a prosperous condition with no indebtedness. During the 20 years of its existence the club has interested itself actively in many projects for the advancement of the city. It has succeeded in creating a common feeling of fellowship among the business men of the city, and all classes of citizens, the spirit of democracy being largely emphasized in its membership, and has helped to create a stronger union between the city and the county in general. A pleasant feature has been an annual banquet to the members of the county board, the first of which was held in the fall of 1905. Among the projects in which the club has interested itself may be mentioned the launching of the new Omaha depot project in 1905; commercial and industrial and transportation improvement, covering a number of subjects; sanitary conditions surrounding the city water supply; summer band concerts in the parks; advertising of the city's advantages; investigation of the resources of Menomonie and surrounding territory; taxation of electric corporations; and other useful work in promotion of the public welfare.

The Dunn County Old Settlers' Association was organized at a meeting held in the court house on Saturday, Oct. 3, 1891, when a constitution was adopted. Henry Ausman, of Elk Mound, was elected president for the first year, and S. B. French, of Menomonie, secretary. It was decided to hold annual meetings. According to the constitution, any person who had reached the age of 45 years and who had lived at least 25 years in Dunn County, was eligible to membership. A great many joined, as the records that have been preserved show a total of between 500 and 600 names. Many of these, of course, have now passed away, but some of the original members are still living. For a number of years the society has held its annual meetings in the Memorial Building, Menomonie. At the meeting held on Saturday, Oct. 18, 1924, more than 100 members were present. The member then present with the longest residence in the county was Mrs. Luthera E. Ames of Eau Galle, who came here from New York State in 1854. It is usual at these reunions to have a banquet and for some of the members to read historical papers or relate their personal experiences of early days, and in this way some valuable contributions to the history of the county have been made and preserved through newspaper publication.

The Rotary Club of Menomonie was chartered in January, 1924, with 25 members and now numbers 33. Like similar clubs elsewhere, it is a service organization intended to include one representative from each line of business and each profession in the city. While too young as yet to have an impressive record, the club has a membership of active and mentally alert citizens who are not likely to let any opportunities slip by them for advancing the best interests of the community.

In January, 1911, an organization known as the Associated Charities was effected in Menomonie for the general relief of the poor and needy of the city. The Charities are supported by public subscription, the organization being composed of a number of prominent citizens, both men and women; several of the churches also have taken part in the work. Cases of need are investigated and help furnished in the shape of food, clothing, fuel, medical attendance, nurse service, or whatever is most necessary in each particular case. Occasionally assistance is given to people residing outside of the city. It was through this organization that the services of a visiting nurse were secured for Menomonie, and for a number of years she was supported entirely by the organization. Then a few years ago the city appropriated $50 a month toward her salary, her duties being enlarged to include those of school nurse, but now the city pays the entire expense of a city nurse. Before the organization of the Charities, Menomonie had an Anti-Tuberculosis Society, of which Dr. Anfin Egdahl was the head, but the work of that society was taken up by the Associated Charities after the organization of the latter. Dr. N. L. Howison has been a most active worker for the Charities. In 1916 the city appropriated for the Charities $30 a month, that amount being increased to $40 a month later. The rest is made up from donations-money collected on tag days, and by sub-The presidents of the Associated Charities have been: M. C. Douglas, scription. Dr. Anfin Egdahl, Mrs. Paul Wilson, Frank Jackson, and Rev. A. E. Westenberg, the last mentioned of whom is now serving. Mrs. Frank Pierce is now vice president, Mrs. E. P. Noyes secretary, and Martin Fladoes, treasurer.

The public rest room on Third Street between Main Street and Crescent Avenue, was donated to the city by Albert Quilling.

A branch of the Child's Conservation Society of America has recently been organized in Menomonie.

The Menomonie Country Club was organized three years ago by a group of progressive citizens who realized the advantage of such an asset to the city. It now enjoys a splendid nine-hole golf course of incomparable beauty. Situated as it is, one mile from the city, on Federal Highway No. 12 and State Highway No. 79, on the banks of Wilson Creek, the location is ideal. The spacious, wellappointed club house is situated directly on the banks of Wilson Creek in a setting of virgin white pine, which are greatly admired by all who knew Wisconsin in the days of its lumber industries The club house is thoroughly equipped with every convenience and is available for use by visitors to Menomonie through various avenues of approach; and students of the summer school of Stout Institute have the privilege of its use through arrangements with the school authorities.

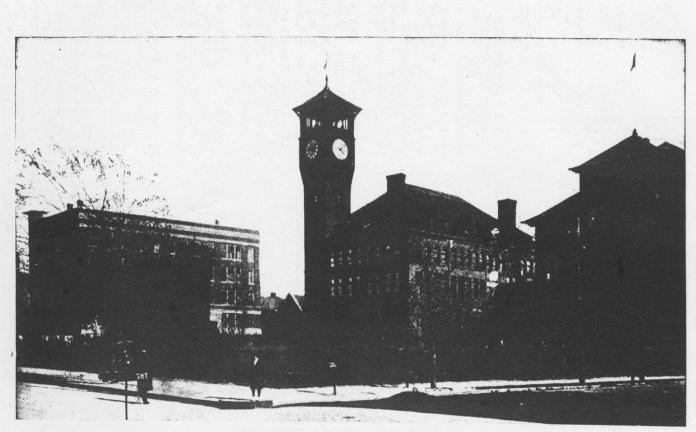

The Woman's Social Club was an organization formed in October, 1907, for the promotion of the physical and social well being of the women of Menomonie. Its first president was Miss Alma Binzel, and Julia Bigelow was physical instructor. This club dissolved several years ago.

The Menomonie Woman's Club was formed in April, 1902, with Mrs. E. E. Lamberton secretary, and with an enrollment of 20 members. The original purpose was mutual help and united effort toward intellectual development. It gradually enlarged its scope, however, so as to include any movement for the general improvement or welfare of the city. Among its useful activities may be mentioned its co-operation with the Improvement Association at the starting of that organization, the providing of swimming suits to high school students, the providing of waste paper baskets for the streets, improvement of conditions in the public schools, the holding of an arts and crafts exhibit, distribution of Christmas dinners, and social help and the promotion of ideals among the members. The club joined the Wisconsin federation in its first year and has always been represented by delegates at the state conventions. It has now a good membership, including many of the leading women in the community.

The Tuesday Musicale was a woman's club which was organized Nov. 1, 1905, with Mrs. Fannie Macmillan, president; Miss Edith Gerard, vice president; Miss Ada Kelsey, secretary; and Mrs. Frank Torrey, librarian. The objects of the club were to study the works of the classical composers, advance the proficiency of the members in music and bring about a closer social intercourse among them. For the first year the club met at the homes of members and subsequently in the Memorial building, an open session being held once a year. The club did much to promote the musical interests of the city but finally dissolved. Its place has been taken by the Wednesday Musicale, organized along similar lines.

Several other important subjects in connection with the history of the city remain to be treated, among them the press, the Stout Institute, the Memorial Building and Library, military societies and the churches, all of which will receive mention in succeeding chapters.

CHAPTER XV

THE STOUT INSTITUTE, MEMORIAL BUILDING AND LIBRARY

The Stout Institute.—Twenty-two years ago there was established in Menomonie an educational enterprise that has spread the fame of the little city not only throughout the United States, but also in Canada and lands beyond the sea. It had for its unique purpose the training of teachers of household arts and of industrial arts. The word "unique" is used advisably, for the idea was then new, and even today there are no other schools in the country exclusively in its field of work, To Menomonie come students from all over the land, and even from other countries, to get new ideas in the teaching of children and in the philosophy of bringing the school into vital relations with the practical things in human living.

The germ of this idea dates farther back than the period above mentioned. It was conceived in the mind of James H. Stout, state senator for 16 years, and a member of the great lumber company whose activities resulted in the founding of the city. Mr. Stout—to whom thousands of human beings owe a deep debt of gratitude—had amassed a considerable fortune, but, unlike most men with similar opportunity, he acquired money not for the sake of money but for the good that money can do for the welfare of humanity. He came to Menomonie in 1889, but before that had become interested in manual training. Almost immediately after his arrival here he became active in that direction, and also in the cause of general education, and as a member of the school board for some years he accomplished some notable things.

At that time (1890) manual training was given in only two or three cities of Wisconsin. After a conference and arrangement with the school board in September of that year, Mr. Stout set to work and in 1891 his first school, a two-room, two-story building of 22x24 feet in ground plan was opened, offering to the boys and girls of Menomonie courses in manual training and domestic science in connection with the city school system. On the first floor were the wood-working and mechanical drawing departments, and on the second the sewing, dressmaking and cooking departments. This building, which stood just north of where Central School now stands, was soon out-grown, and, having been moved, is now used by the Agricultural School.

To take its place Mr. Stout erected in 1893 a large building costing $100,000 and equipped completely for carrying on many lines of hand work. The motive for this building was found in the St. Louis Manual Training School, though its actual model was the Toledo Training School. It was of three stories, with a ground plan of 59x137 feet.

The work proceeded, watched with interest by leading educators throughout the state, but in 1897 there came a brief interruption, for on Feb. 3 of that year the building was destroyed by fire. So much success had been already attained, and so much interest created, that on the day following this disaster a petition was circulated, and signed by hundreds of citizens, urging Mr. Stout to rebuild the school. In response he offered to build a larger and better manual training building, to be fire-proof, and to cost not less than $60,000, on the understanding, or condition, that the city should build a high school at an equal cost. This being agreed to, a new manual training building—the one now in use—was erected, costing with equipment about $150,000. This substantial and ornamental structure, with its high clock tower, is conspicuous in the Stout group, and, with the rest, is a fitting monument to the big-hearted lumberman and statesman to whom it owes its existence.

In 1901, carrying further forward his plan of complete and symmetrical equipment, Mr. Stout built the School of Physical Training, containing a gymnasium and a natatorium, and costing complete about $100,000. Here for some years the school children were given free baths and also taught to swim, and here also for a period the Commercial Club had quarters. Prof. N. J. MacArthur was the first physical instructor, coming from Toronto, Canada, and launching the work most successfully. He and his successors have not only instructed the pupils in the care of their bodies and directed their exercises, but under their tutelage Menomonie High School and the Institute have produced athletic teams that have added to the reputation of Menomonie institutions through their success in competition with other schools.

In September, 1899, after the organization of the Dunn County School for the training of teachers for rural school work, it was given quarters in the main building of the Stout Institute, but in 1902 the county provided a special building for it, which it shares with the Dunn County School of Agriculture, The history of these two county schools is sketched in separate articles.

It should be noted that all the developments which had taken place before 1903 were for the boys and girls of the city of Menomonie, and all of the shop and laborntory work was carried on under the public school administration. The year 1903 marked the beginning of the Stout Training Schools which were organized for the purpose of training teachers of manual training, domestic science, and kindergarten work. In that year Mr. Stout established two schools for this purpose-one for manual training work and the other for domestic science. Subsequently a school for home makers was founded for the benefit of girls who desire to acquire proficiency in the domestic arts but do not intend to pursue professional work as teachers. The coming of Dr. L. D. Harvey in 1903 was an important event, not only for the Menomonie public schools, of which he was made superintendent, but more particularly for the Stout schools, the rapid development of which was due largely to his unusual capacity for organization and leadership. In September, that year, there were 25 students enrolled in the Training School. Forty-eight were enrolled the second year, 98 the third year, and in 1908 there were 197 students enrolled. By 1913 the number had increased to over 500 and it is now over 600. Summer schools we e started in 1906.

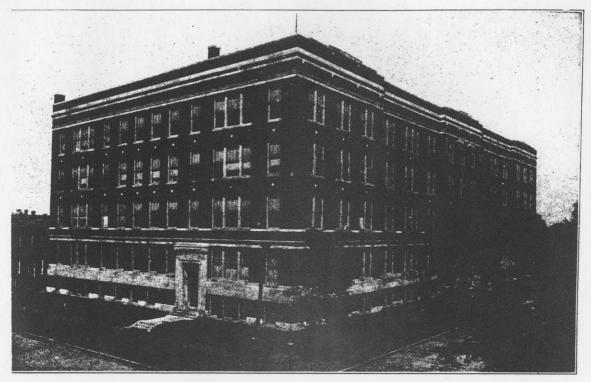

The Kindergarten department of the Stout Institute grew out of a movement inaugurated by Mr. Stout in 1899, when he erected kindergarten buildings in connection with the Coddington and North Menomonie schools and equipped rooms in the Central building for the training of kindergarten teachers. In 1909 the kindergarten department of the Institure was closed, thereby giving more room to other departments which needed it badly.

Early in 1908 another important development took place, when the Stout schools were incorporated and became the Stout Institute. After the death of Mr. Stout, which took place on Dec. 10, 1910, the Institute was taken over by the state. In 1913 the state appropriated $265,000 for new buildings and grounds, and in the same year the Building Trades School, costing $50,000, was erected. The year 1916 saw the erection of the Household Arts Building at a cost of $200,000. In addition to these, there are the Industrial Arts Building and the School of Physical Culture.

While the early development of the work of the school was due largely to the efforts of Mr. Stout, its later development and progress were brought about by Dr. Harvey and Mr. Stout's working together. When the school was taken over by the state, the work of bringing about legislation providing for appropriations for the maintenance of the school, and for new buildings and equipment, fell largely upon Mr. Harvey, and this was always handled in a masterly way. For many years after coming to Menomonie he spent considerable time in traveling and lecturing. His messages concerning the work done at Stout were carried into all sections of the United States. The new ideas were broadcasted over the country, with the result that for many years the Stout school at Menomonie was recognized as a school doing a new and unusually valuable work for the advancement of education. Hundreds of visitors came each year to view at first hand the work of the school.

Schools Burton E. Nelson of Racine, Wis., was, by the board of trustees, made president. He assumed active charge in April, 1923. Mr. Nelson organized the first vocational school in the central west, working under separate organization and administration. This same statement probably holds true for the entire country. The advanced law making this school possible is accredited to the late Charles McCarthy of the Wisconsin Reference Library, and was passed by the Wisconsin Legislature in 1911. Mr. Nelson gave the following seven years to a careful study of vocational education and the development of the Racine Vocational School. With his wide acquaintance with the city superintendents throughout the middle west the school should receive a new impetus for growth and advancement.

When in 1911 the Stout became a state school it assumed a new obligation to produce a sufficient supply of competent teachers for the state. New problems of expansion and specialization had to be met. But the demand for Stout Institute graduates increased so rapidly that a further extension of the course became There came now a demand in all of the larger high schools for degree imperative. The Stout Institute was not authorized to go beyond the two-year graduates. diploma course. No other school was prepared to furnish such instruction as Stout was able to give. Recognizing that fact, the legislature in 1917 conferred upon the Stout school the degree granting power-that of Bachelor of Science in industrial arts or household arts according to the school in which the work is taken. The school continued to grant the two-year diploma because the demand for fouryear graduates far exceeded the supply. Beginning in July, 1925, upon completion of two years of work, a certificate of attainment will be given. Those who choose the three-year course will receive the diploma. This, and in some cases the certificate, forms the basis for the issuance of a teaching license. In Wisconsin a license is issued for one year, and is renewable for another year. After two yea 3 of successful teaching a life certificate is issued.

.Vhile the major part of the Institute's enrollment is from Wisconsin, almost every state in the Union is represented in the student body. Stout graduates are teaching virtually in every state; they are teaching in Canada, the Canal Zone, Cuba and other parts of the West Indies and in Hawaii. Graduates who can be strongly recommended are generally placed before the diplomas are granted. The Stout Institute strives not for enrollment but for accomplishment.

Beginning with the summer session of 1921 the Instutite has operated on a 45-week year. There is the usual holiday vacation and a short recess between the regular and summer sessions. The school year, now considered as being 45 weeks, is made up of five nine-week terms, one of which is the summer session. In the latter, certain courses are operated on the semester basis to enable the students to earn semester credit.

The average attendance at Stout Institute for 12 years up to September, 1924, was 408; its lowest was 221 in 1917-18, and its highest was 589 in 1922-23, when a number of special students were carried in addition to regular students. With the enrollment restricted to regular students the attendance dropped a little but is now again in the neighborhood of 600.

It has been the policy of the school for some years to restrict the number of freshmen; the number of men is confined to 102 and the women to 144 each fall.

The school has been designated by the state board of vocational education of Wisconsin as the institution to be recognized and federally aided for teacher training for vocational schools. It has also been federally recognized as the center for the efforts of the federal board of vocational education in Wisconsin.

All organizations and outside activities of the school are banded under one head, the Stout Student Association, the board of directors of which is made up of the executive officers of the several organizations. It is the mission of the association to influence uniformity in the extra-curricular activities of the student body, to curb those activities which are too apt to absorb an undue amount of attention of the student body, and to promote interest in those activities which bring about more rounded development of the minds and bodies of the students but which are not generally popular. The school band is unusually complete and active for a collegiate band, and is popular with the students, who welcome its appearance at assemblies, "pep" meetings, ceremonies and games. The dramatic club, under the name of The Manual Arts Players, has built up a reputation for excellence in performance and staging that packs the auditorium at every appearance. The men's glee club takes a trip every spring and the women's glee club always is in demand.

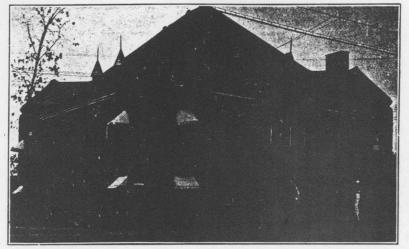

The athletic teams always are strong contenders. The football team of 1921 held the state normal conference championship. The basketball and gymnasium teams have had strong records, finishing well up in the percentage column many times in spite of the packed schedules of the players caused by the large number of laboratory courses which cut into the afternoon practice time. A weekly paper, The Stoutonia, is edited and printed by a student staff under the direction of the printing and english departments. A separate staff edits the school annual, The Tower.

Stout Institute's faculty comprises 47 instructors. In the administrative group, besides President Nelson, are Clyde A. Bowman, director of the school of Industrial Arts and summer session; ... is Daisy A. Kugel, director of the school of Hore Economics; B. M. Funk, business manager; Miss Myrtle M. Bletsoe, registrar and appointment secretary; and Mrs. Adelaide C. French, secretary. Practice classes in both industrial arts and home economics are taken from the grades and high school classes of the city schools, as they were when Mr. Stout first began his teacher training school.

The first public library in Menomonie is said to have had its origin in 1874, when the question of license or no license having been voted on at the spring elections, and the result having been against the saloons, the women of the community established a library and reading-room, supported by public subscription, as a place where the young men could spend their leisure time. In 1876 it was taken over by the city and was maintained as a municipal institution until the year 1900, when it was discontinued. Carrol Lucas was the first president, and S. B. French the first secretary, of the original library board, and among the directors were, in addition to Mr. Lucas and Mr. French, Mrs. Andrew Tainter, Mrs. E. H. Grannis, J. B. McKahan, W. H. Landon, Torger Hanson, T. B. Wilson, E. H. Weber, F. J. McLean, John H. Knapp, and other well known people. For several years the library was located on Broadway in the business district, and was then moved into the two northeast rooms on the second floor of the First National Bank building, where it remained until 745 of its 3,000 volumes were turned over to the Tainter Memorial Library (subject to being called for) and the rest placed in the hands of the school board. For some years prior to the closing of the library, the city made an annual appropriation of $800 for it. For a time after it went out of existence the city appropriated $200 annually to the Memorial Library as compensation to that library for service of books to the public schools.

The Mabel Tainter Memorial is an institution of which the people of Menomonie and of Dunn County, generally, have reason to be proud. It was erected by Captain and Mrs. Andrew Tainter as a memorial to the daughter whose name it bears, a young lady of unusual promise who died on June 10, 1886. Somewhat less than two years after her death, or in April, 1888, the Rev. H. D. Maxson came to Menomonie and organized the Unitarian society, in which Captain and Mrs. Tainter became interested. Availing themselves of Mr. Maxson's help in organization, and thoughtful of the public needs and of their daughter Mabel's known feelings, they decided to erect as her fitting monument a building which, with other uses, should be the home of a free public library.

In the accomplishment of this purpose they lost no time. The building was built of Dunnville sandstone, faced on the inside with Menomonie brick. All the roofs are of slate, furnishing additional protection against fire. The whole building was artistically and richly furnished and decorated. The permanency of this decoration and finish can be judged from the fact that scarcely any redecorating where we we we we have

has been done and that after 35 years of constant use it is in fairly good condition.

This beautiful edifice, which cost in the neighborhood of $125,000 was dedicated July 3, 1890. The ceremonies were held in the handsome auditorium of the new structure before an audience that crowded the apartment to the doors. Many visitors and invited guests were present from abroad. On the platform were Captain and Mrs. Tainter, the mayor and members of the common council, the speakers of the evening, several of the resident clergy, and L. S. Tainter, president of the Mabel Tainter Literary, Library and Educational Society, which had been organized for the purpose of accepting the gift, and of carrying on from generation to generation the useful work for which the property and money were given. As eloquently stated on behalf of the donors on that occasion, "In accordance with her wish, the father and mother have felt that the fittest monument to the dear dead is a contribution to the welfare of the living.

In graceful yet forceful language the Rev. H. D. Maxson made the presentation address, setting forth the aims which it was intended the institution should carry out. "It is desired that this building be a center of those various activities," he said, "which can deepen, broaden, heighten the entire round of life. formity with this purpose there has been provided a free library and reading-room, to be kept clear of all narrow partisan or sectarian control, and to offer its privileges on equal terms to all residents of this county. It is desired that these rocms be supplied with the best literature for young and old, such as will enlarge and enrich the mind. In harmony with the general purpose for which this building is erected, there has been provided the room in which we meet tonight. It is desired that it be devoted to lectures, entertainments, services such as will quicken the intellect, strengthen the character, fill the soul with glimpses of those larger relations which link us with the infinite and eternal. In harmony with this general purpose for which this building is erected there have been provided on the floor below, several rooms for whatever amusements and social satisfactions can broaden life without impairing the inheritance of tomorrow...... In this place may no man feel himself a stranger. Here may there be cultivated that spirit, here may there be realized that ideal which permits no boundary line of caste nor creed to separate man from man."

On behalf of the incorporators-the Mabel Tainter Literary, Library and Educational Society-the trust was accepted by S. W. Hunt in a brief but earnest speech, and an impressive dedicatory address was delivered by Rev. J. H. Crocker of Madison.

About a month before the dedication of the building, the property had been conveyed by deed to the incorporators of The Mabel Tainter Literary, Library and Educational Society, who have since had charge and control of the institution. Under the terms of the gift the Unitarian Society has the free use of the auditorium, assembly room, parlors, ladies' work room and young men's club room, but the management and supervision of the whole building is in the hands of the officers of the corporation. In other words, the general management of the building is entirely independent of that society. The library and reading-room are main-tained "as separate and distinct from all religious supervision."

There were 13 original incorporators of the Mable Tainter Literary, Library and Educational Society. Seven directors were appointed by them, who fill all vacancies in the trustees, incorporators and in this board as they occur. Any money from the rent of the building goes to the library fund. However, the building is frequently put to worthy public uses from which no revenue is derived, which is in accordance with the benevolent and public-spirited purpose of the founders.

Up to the time of Captain Tainter's death, which occurred Oct. 18, 1899, he furnished the money necessary for the immediate defraying of the expense of the building and of the library. In his will he left an endowment fund, but at his death there were no funds provided for the immediate defraying of the expense of the building and of the library. None, in fact, were available until the endowment fund could be turned over to the trustees of the building by the trustees of the estate and time enough should have elapsed for some income to have accrued therefrom. It was two years before there was any accumulated income from the trust funds. During that period of time such expense was paid by Mrs. Fanny Crane and the late Louis S. Tainter, daughter and son of Captain and Mrs. Andrew Tainter. The original endowment—of $65,000—has since been increased to $105,000 through legacies left by other members of the Tainter family and by other citizens of Menomonie.

The Memorial Library was opened to the public on Jan. 21, 1891, and at that time contained 3,000 volumes. The first year it had 900 patrons and a circulation of 15,000. Books have been continually added until now the collection embraces about 16,374 volumes, besides 2,577 public documents and 3,930 pamphlets. The annual circulation is 60,000. The total number of patrons in 1924 was 5,964, of whom 1,947 were from the rural districts.

While this is a privately endowed library, it is conducted for a public purpose. That purpose is the circulation of its accumulated books throughout the county of Dunn without cost to its patrons. The primary qualification of a patron is that he or she be an inhabitant of such county. A person once having become a patron, his standing thereafter, if he continues to be an inhabitant of the county, rests solely on his own conduct. He is only required to observe a few rules made for the care and return of the books taken by him and generally to live up to the legal obligations of a bailee having the possession of property belonging to another.

In the foundation of the library there were made three innovations or departures from the generally accepted restrictions to be imposed upon a library. It widened its field beyond the limits of the municipality in which it was organized and became a circulating library for the entire county of Dunn; it did not require its patrons to procure a guarantee for the faithful performance of their obligations to the library, nor to put up a money deposit to secure such performances; and it opened up its shelves to the free and unhampered inspection of all patrons and visitors. The library is tolerant in matters of religion and politics. It endeavors to place on its shelves the works of all reputable writers on all phases of religion and politics. Unasked, its library staff does not assume to advise nor to direct nor influence the reading of any patron, Its managing committee believes that its patrons know what they wish to read and what and when they want to read. The only way the library seeks to influence its patrons is by the qulaity and kind of books it purchases. Suggestions as to what to purchase are always welcome from those who have a kindly interest in the welfare of the library.

When first opened the library had a much smaller circulation in the rural districts than now. The automobile and the parcels post have helped the managers of the library to a great extent in the carrying out of the wishes of the donors that the benefits of the library should be as great to the patrons living outside of the city as to those living within the city. In this respect this library long stood unique. It has been of especial value to the schools, and every encouragement is offered for the use of the books both by teachers in the city and those of the district schools.

The first librarian was Miss Cora Farnum (now Mrs. P. B. Clark), who entered upon her duties Aug. 1, 1890. Other libraries were visited and library management and classification of books studied. A catalogue was completed for public use by Jan. 21, 1891. This catalogue was the only one published, as the continual arrival of new books soon compelled the adoption of a card catalogue system in its place. The first assistant was Miss Ada Kelsey, now Mrs. Fred Curran. She or Miss Lizzie Kelsey (now Mrs. N. L. Howison), were assistants during the four years of Mrs. Clark's work in the library. Mrs. Clark had a very efficient and able library board in Rev. Henry Doty Maxson, Mr. C. E. Freeman and Miss Stella Lucas. At one of the board meetings Mrs. Clark suggested that to have book-marks would be of great use in protecting the books from turned down corners, pencil marks, etc. The plan was adopted, and, having proved very popular, has been continued. They are known as the Maxson book-marks from the fact that on every one is printed a number of reasonable requests indited by Mr. Maxson supposed to be made by the book to a little boy reader, with respect to its proper use and care; they are now sold in many bookstores. After Mrs. Clark resigned, Miss Stella Lucas became librarian and served for 17 years or until her death in August, 1911. Mrs. Essie C. Nickerson, who acted as librarian for several months during Miss Lucas' last illness, was appointed to the post of regular librarian in September, 1911, and is still serving. The work of the library has so increased that now several persons are required as assistants. Of the members of the library board, much is due to C. E. Freeman, who has given to the institution unstintedly of his time, advice and assistance. The late Prof. G. L. Bowman, who was also a member of the board, worked effectively in its behalf, and through his death the library lost a friend hard to replace.

In concluding this article it should be mentioned that, in addition to the library, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Woman's Relief Corps have commodious rooms in the Memorial Building. The entire establishment is illustrative of farseeing wisdom as well as of the highest form of philanthropy, and has done much for the elevation and enlightenment of the people of Menomonie and Dunn County.

CHAPTER XVI

THE PRESS OF MENOMONIE

The Dunn County News.-The intelligence of a community is to a large extent reflected in its press. To conduct a successful newspaper the editor and publisher must be quick to gauge the modes of thought of the public upon whom he depends for support, and to ascertain their attitude with respect not only to local needs and interests, but also in regard to the broader questions of politics, both domestic and foreign, education, new inventions affecting civic or social interests, and many other things that have more or less to do with the daily life of the average citizen, or which may affect their children in years to come. To a certain extent he may act as a guide or teacher, but not in an arbitrary sense regardless of public opinion, or his public will soon desert him. His chief business is to print the news, and secondly, in his editorial capacity, to act as a sort of intellectual filter in straining out and presenting in its purest form the best and strongest sentiment of the community, with such modifications or emphasis as may be suggested by his own knowledge and experience, which, after all, is but public sentiment condensed and clarified through an individual medium.

All this is no light task when it is remembered that a newspaper is not merely an educational, but a business institution, and must be made to pay. Any serious mistake may ruin its commercial success, and even when no such mistakes are made, there are various other causes which may operate adversely and lead to failure. Competition, the wealth or poverty of a community, its average intelligence and degree of business enterprise expressing itself through the advertising columns, are all factors which enter into the matter and have to be taken into consideration. When a newspaper, therefore, can point to its beginning in a pioneer community and to 65 years of steady growth without any notable embarrassment or misfortune, it argues exceptionally good management, as well as reasonably favorable conditions of operation.

On April 21, 1910, the Dunn County News published a "Semi-Centennial Edition," in which it reviewed its 50 years of history up to that time. From that review the following account is taken nearly in full, such brief portions only being omitted that are not essential to the main story, or which are more conveniently printed elsewhere in this volume. Enough has been added to bring the narrative up to date.

"Fifty years ago (65 this year, 1925) the reading public of Dunn County greeted the initial appearance of their first newspaper. Like Menomonie's first industrial enterprise, like nearly every important undertaking in the early days here, like the the very community itself, it had its inception at the hands of those sturdy, sagacious builders who furnished the brain and sinew of the great business concern known as Knapp, Stout & Co.

"Appropriately, the newspaper in its beginning was called The Dunn County Lumberman. In those days nearly every material interest in this section, if not actually bound up in, was at least related to, the vast enterprise whose character was indicated by that title. As time went on the young community took on more diversified interests. Lines of mercantile and industrial activity were developed and a symmetrical growth was ere long manifest, in which many spheres of action were in evidence. While the prosperity and progress of them all depended to a great degree upon the central motive force which has taken form in the mammoth mills upon the pond bank where the river currents bore down frcm the pineries the potential sources of great wealth, at the same time the ramifications of community life gradually led to the feeling that the place was something more than a lumber camp. It began as the years went by to assume the aspect of a small city, some pretentious in its appearance and its purposes as cities of its class were reckoned in that pioneer period upon the wooded northern frontier. And so the little city's newspaper partook of, and to a degree led in, the metropolitan spirit, and in a few years became ill content to be known by a designation that told of but one field of business effort.

"Therefore, after a few years' publication, in which it had proven its right to stand before the world as the printed spokesman of a vigorous and cosmopolitan body of people, it one day in 1866 came out with its title changed from that of a class or trade publication, and has been known from that time to the present by a title which more accurately indicated its character as a public journal covering the broad field of human effort. But although the name was changed, the paper continued to be the same, its growth continued from the same beginning, its utterances were along the same lines of policies as before, and today a retrospect of the life of the paper carries one back to that Thursday in April, 1860, when from the second story of the tinshop building at the "Company's" plant the first printed sheet run from the press in Dunn County saw the sunlight.

"Unfortunately, no copy of that original issue, so far as diligent search can reveal the fact, is now extant. There is at the Memorial Library a bound copy of Volume 3 of the Dunn County Lumberman. The third series of 52 issues begins . with the edition of April 19, 1862. As a complete volume of a weekly publication embraces 364 days, one day being gained in each volume as compared with the calendar year, the natural inference would be that the second volume began on April 20, 1861, and the first on April 21, 1860. But local history has it otherwise. Chronicles based upon information obtained from early settlers insist that the original publication day was April 1. If this be true, a discrepancy exists that is not explained. Some light is shed upon the interesting point by the records in the probate office of Dunn County. It appears that the first probate notice filed is that pertaining to the estate of S. W. Sherburn, and the affidavit of publication, signed by C. W. Wheaton, foreman in the office of the Dunn County Lumberman, attests the fact that the first publication of the notice was given Thursday, June 7, 1860, in the tenth issue of that year. If the tenth issue was on June 7, running back from that date it would be easy to ascertain that the first was on April 5 of that year. Affidavits relating to subsequent notices would lead to the same conclusion. Just wherein the discrepancy occurs between that date and that which is indicated by the beginning of the third volume will probably never be absolutely established, in the absence of the first two years' files. But certain it is that in the month of April, 1860, the paper was established and has been issued continuously ever since. Its original day of publication was Thursday and continued so for a considerable time, though in the interim before the beginning of the preserved files it was changed to Saturday.

"Going back to the beginning, it is found that Knapp, Stout & Co. exercised the same careful and judicious choice with reference to the first editorship of The Lumberman as was manifested by them in selecting material for other important posts in the great business scheme which they had created and directed. The man selected for the management of the newspaper was Charles S. Bundy, then a young attorney of Menomonie, and now (1910) one of the municipal judges of the District of Columbia. He was the first of the line of strong men who successively had charge of the paper, either as editor or proprietor, each carrying it forward consistently with its traditions and its never-changing purpose to stand for the best in the community and for the highest ideals of citizenship.

"Three years ago, in response to a request made at that time by R. J. Flint, then one of the proprietors of The News, Mr. Bundy wrote at Washington his account of the founding of the paper."

In that account, after reminding his prospective readers that Dunn County originally extended south to the mouth of the Chippewa River and included what was finally set off as Pepin County, he went on to say:

'That change of boundaries moved the center of Dunn County several miles northward and made Dunnville no longer geographically suitable to remain the county seat, and insured its removal northwest to Knapp, Stout & Co.'s mills on the Menomonie River. If I remember rightly, the act creating Pepin County provided for the change. However that may be, 'Menomonie,'as it was christened by Mr. S. B. French, was unanimously chosen for the county seat. Almost the first thought after that was settled was a county paper. In order to carry my readers back to those times, it will be necessary to explain that the country was then "new" in a very real sense. What is now Menomonie consisted of Knapp, Stout & Co.'s mills; the company store, a large and well stocked establishment, where could be bought almost every article of food, apparel, ornament, or shelter, either for man or beast; Bullard's hotel on the knoll just west of the company store, where the best kind of mince pie and coffee could always be had; Andrew Tainter's house, still nearer the store to the northward—a modest two-story frame; Capt. William Wilson's rambling one-story and story and a half frame, only a few steps to the southeast of the entrance to the store; Mr. S. B. French's house, and a few others which I am not able to recall. There was, besides, a considerable cluster of other buildings down the west bank of the river below the mills, some large, as the dining-hall and dormitory, and others small, and used as lodgings for the mill hands and their families. These buildings were all frames, as I recall them, and they furnished comfortable quarters for a population of probably 500 habitants. There was no bridge across the river then and the only mode of crossing was by ferry boat attached by sliding pulleys to a rope stretched across the river at a point just above the dam. All that plateau where the 'village,' and later the city of Menomonie now is, was unbroken prairie without a single house, and was not yet platted on paper.

After mentioning the members of the Dunn County bar and the county officials of that day, Mr. Bundy continued:

The whole population of Dunn County was probably below 5,000. Farming, beyond the raising of potatoes and a few garden vegetables, had not then begun. There were no farms immediately around Menomonie, Mud Creek prairie, Sherburn prairie and Elk Creek prairie had each a few settlers who raised enough of grain and vegetables for their own use and probably some potatoes for sale at the The company had begun to raise potatoes on their farm at Rice Lake and mills. possibly were then able to supply their own wants, but the people generally depended upon the lower country for their bacon, beans, corn, wheat and fruit; in fine, everything except rain, sunshine and fuel. Prairie roads soon became sandy from travel, but as there were no fences, wherever the sand became too deep each traveler could turn out of the old tracks and make a new path for himself. In summer time this worked admirably in practice, since all the driver had to look out for was the gopher hole that was liable to trip the horse; but in winter, especially for night travel, this freedom of choice led to occasional wanderings from the straight and narrow paths that led to warm fires, supper and lodgings. The a stage route from Black River Falls to Hudson by way of Menomonie. There was This stage carried the mail. This is the merest glimpse of the field which was to sustain the new paper. Captain Wilson was a born optimist, and he was the 'whole push' in Menomonie. He had determined to have a newspaper. With plenty of money at his command, it was an easy matter to procure a press, type and materials, and it seems that he had a printer in mind who would do the mechanical work. All he lacked was an editor. Turning to me one day, he says, 'Bundy, I believe you would make a pretty decent editor. Suppose you try it?' As I had never yet read anything in type of my own composing and had never seen the inside of a printing office, I had no grounds for doubting my qualifications for the post, and I cheerfully signified my willingness 'to try.' That was the genesis of the first Dunn County newspaper, founded in 1860.'

To resume the main narrative: "The paper, under the editorship of Mr. Bundy, who, it may be said, is now living at a venerable age in Washington, D. C., was a seven-column folio, and in politics was Republican, as it had been during the half century of its existence. When the Civil War broke out Mr. Bundy enlisted in Company K, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, serving as orderly sergeant. Upon his departure the editorial chair was filled by his brother, E. B. Bundy, later for many years circuit judge for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, who conducted the paper for a short time. He was succeeded by Thomas Phillips, who remained in editorial charge until Knapp, Stout & Co. sold the paper to Dr. E. G. Benjamin in 1865.

"During those far-off years the paper was all home print, as there was in that period no patent, nor ready-print, service for country newspapers. Plate houses were then unknown, and the paper had to be all set up, as well as printed, in the local office. But the four bright pages of news matter, comment and advertising displays still hold a fascination for those who love to delve into the events and affairs that engaged the serious attention of those who lived in the days gone by The advertising columns showed then, as now, who were active and influential in the business world. The announcements of Knapp, Stout & Co., naturally occupied liberal space, and the public was made familiar with the fact that the stores of the firm sold everything desired by the household, from pins and needles and calico prints to sides of beef and pork by the barrel. Neither could the reader escape the fact that the big concern had emporiums at both Dunnville and Menomonie. Its manufacturing facilities were duly exploited in regard to flour milling, machine shop work, tinsmithing, harness-making, etc., as well as in the production of lumber, lath and shingles. The 'ads' show the quaint characteristics of the day, both with reference to typographical composition and subject matter. Prices were not featured, as they are in modern merchandising, but the buyer was attracted by an enumeration in detail of the commodities he was likely to require, with assurance as to their quality, which one may believe were amply justified by the fact. Full page displays by the company were not infrequent, but in the form of separate announcements running down the column rather than in a co-ordinated collection of panels, each forming a part of one general effect.

"Among the individual announcements are those of pioneers whose names it would be of interest to recall, but space does not permit a reproduction of them all. Among the professional cards, however, were those of Dr. E. G. Benjamin, physician; W. D. Webb, attorney and counselor; F. R. Church, notary public and land agent; E. B. Bundy, attorney; Dr. J. C. Davis, physician and surgeon; and S. B. French, real estate agent and dealer in land warrants. The news columns, as do those of any representative local paper, furnish a mirror of the life of the time. They contain accounts of local happenings, with such comments as to reflect accurately the social life of the people and their everyday relationships, and convey a correct idea of their amusements, recreations, business dealings and their more intimate affairs, as well as of the more important events that constituted their history as a body politic.

"Through these early numbers runs a strain of pathos in the accounts of the operations in the army, forming largely a record of casualties, whether in the achievement of victory or in the sufferings of defeat. Facilities for the prompt transmission of the news were not what they are today, even with the metropolitan and more pretentious publications, and the reports of great battles were often delayed for many days and were presented in the briefest form. But they were clear and concise and given with intelligent comment, and one may well understand how anxiously they were awaited and how intently the readers hung upon every thrilling sentence.

ing sentence. "Dr. E. G. Benjamin, who had been associated with the Free Press at Eau Claire as part owner of that paper, came here through the influence of Capt. William Wilson as the city's first physician in August, 1860. One day in November, 1865, the name of the firm of Knapp, Stout & Co. disappeared from the heading of the paper where for five years it had stood as an indication of the proprietorship. In its place stood forth the name of Dr. Benjamin.

"Dr. Benjamin was a man of pronounced ideas, strong principles, and the absolute courage of his convictions. His connection with the paper left a strong imprint on its character, which remained throughout its subsequent history. That the new editor was not disposed to be too much restricted by the bonds of precedent may be judged from the following, taken from an editorial published Dec. 9, 1865: 'With an eye to brevity, we review the first three weeks with the Dunn County Lumberman. At the start a change of name was contemplated; because the old name did not seem wide enough to cover and represent the business of the county. We are not all lumbermen any more. The farming and commercial interests begin to loom up; and mechanics and manufacturers are claiming attention. And the old name stands yet; and so let it stand. What's in a name?

"The new editor, however, was not long content to rest with this mere protest against what he deemed an impropriety which it was in his power to rectify. On Saturday, April 7, 1866, the paper came out with a new heading. Across the top of the front page appeared the words, in bold type, 'The Dunn County News.' How important the new owner regarded this change will be clear from the fact that the old serial numbering was abandoned with this edition, and the issue was designated as Volume 1, Number 1. That this was carrying the idea a little too far appeared to be the belief of succeeding owners, who recognized the period during which the paper was known as The Lumberman as in fact a part of its history, and changed the serial enumeration to conform to the original plan and include the first six years of publication. Thus the serial numbers appearing at present on the folio line are approximately correct, allowing for certain discrepancies that crept in during the early history of the paper.

"While remaining staunch and true to Republican doctrine, and upholding strongly the policies that made for local advancement, the new editor made other minor alterations in form, and his personality stood forth strikingly in the printed columns. Up to this time the motto of The Lumberman had been: 'Union and Liberty, Come What May; in Victory as in Defeat, in Power as out of Power, Now and Forever.' This quotation from W. H. Seward was dropped from the title page by Dr. Benjamin and in its place shone forth the legend: 'The Union Forever, One and Inseparable.'

"Dr. Benjamin was intensely patriotic and prided himself on the fact that he was not afraid at any time to express by verbal speech or written word the thoughts that lay upon his mind. Many allusions in his articles demonstrate this to be a fact regarding persons; as to principles he delights in thundering forth his convictions regardless of whom they pleased or offended. He was particularly pronounced in his views regarding the evils of the liquor traffic.......... Nor must it be presumed that it was a slight matter for a frontier journal in those days to wage the war he did with such vigor and persistency.

"A noteworthy change effected by Dr. Benjamin upon his purchase of the paper was one of location. The outfit was removed from the upper story of the tinshop at the Company's plant beyond the bridge, and established in a portion of a frame dwelling house which stood on the site of the present Heller block. Office opposite the schoolhouse' is the manner in which the office address was designated in the paper's standing card in 1866. A partner was taken into the business at the time of the issue which announced the change of name." This partner was Charles E. Mears, a practical printer who had purchased a

This partner was Charles E. Mears, a practical printer who had purchased a half interest in the office, becoming co-editor and co-proprietor. The paper was then enjoying a patronage which placed it among the first of the county papers of its time. It does not appear, however, that Mr. Mears had an active personal hand in the editorial work of the paper, nor was his connection with it of much more than six months' duration.

"On August 10, 1867, the News appeared for the first time with S. W. Hunt as editor. Here is the terse proclamation setting forth the change in control:

'Sold Out.—After a pleasant acquaintance with the readers of the Dunn County News for two years, I have sold the institution to Messrs. Wilson and Messenger and retire on terms and conditions quite comfortable and satisfactory. E. G. Benjamin.'

"After this came the following: "To the Public—On the 6th inst. we purchased the Dunn County News, and at the same time procured the services of S. W. Hunt, Esq., as editor. We start out in our newspaper career with the present number, a great part of which, however, had been made up before we became proprietors. In making our debut in this to us untried field we deem it right to indicate briefly what our intentions and desires in this respect are: and, in the first place, we intend to do what we can to advance the interests of this section of the state, and especially of Dunn County,—will try to advance all religious, moral and educational movements; and in politics we shall never be neutral, but for the Union all the time. Finally, we hope and desire to make our paper a journal of so much interest that every resident of Dunn County will desire a copy in his house.—W. & M.'

As an item of interest to many readers of this volume, though not directly concerned with the subsequent history of the News, it may be added that Dr. Benjamin, after severing his connection with the paper, left town and went to Whitewater, where for some years he was proprietor of the Whitewater Register. Later he returned to Menomonie and acquired a competence in mercantile lines.

The new firm of newspaper owners was composed of Capt. William Wilson and A. J. Messenger, the former, as every student of history of Dunn County knows, being for many years one of the best known and most active citizens of the county, and a leading spirit in most of its progressive enterprises. Alvin J. Messenger and his family had arrived here in 1860. "He was a native of Portage County, Ohio, and when 18 years of age, in 1839, he moved with his father to Des Moines, Iowa. He had served as clerk of court for eight years at Burlington, and when he came to Menomonie he had a varied and well rounded business experience. During his residence here he had charge of the land department of Knapp, Stout & Co.'s business, looking after titles, taxes, and certain legal points, particularly relating to the firm's real estate interests. He was county superintendent one term, and his death occurred in 1880.

"Samuel W. Hunt, who served as editor under the liberal proprietorship of Wilson & Messenger until 1871, was a lawyer by profession, and an able one. He was a native of Tioga County, New York, where he was born in 1835 of sturdy English stock, though the family was intensely patriotic in its allegiance to America. Mr. Hunt's grandfather, with two brothers, fought in the Revolutionary War with the Colonial troops. Always a student, his inclinations early turned to the pursuit of law, but before completing his study at Owego Academy, he came, upon the advice of his physicians, to Wisconsin in 1858. He first located at Hudson, where he formed enduring friendships with Judge J. L. Humphrey and other leading men. He attended school for a time at River Falls, and then spent a year at Lawrence University, Appleton. His health being restored, he returned in 1860 to his old home, and completed his course in law, finally graduating from the Albany law school in 1865. In the autumn of that year Mr. Hunt came to Wisconsin. He spent one year at Hudson, and then came to Menomonie, taking up his permanent home here in 1866. For four years following the purchase of the News by Wilson & Messenger he served as its editor, evincing marked ability in that capacity. Under his direction the paper assumed a position whereby it was acknowledged one of the most influential journals in northwestern Wisconsin. Previous to entering upon newspaper work, Mr. Hunt for three years was associated in law practice with F. J. McLean, whom he had induced to come to Menomonie. In 1872, after his retirement as editor, he formed a partnership with C. E. Freeman under the firm style of Hunt & Freeman...... Mr. Hunt always took a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the Chippewa Valley and Dunn County, and stood for everything that made for their advancement. Under his guidance the News became a valuable factor in this direction, as the files of the paper during his regime, and the results attained, bear witness. He was personally connected with the development of some of the most important local institutions, such as the Tainter Memorial, the Unitarian Society, etc. He served in the Assembly in 1868, and in 1880 was a delegate to the Republican National Convention, but while he was an active member of his party and never shirked his duties as a citizen, public office never had great attraction for him. He died in this city Oct. 3, 1897.

"Saturday, Aug. 12, the first issue of the News appeared under the ownership and editorial management of Flint & Weber, a firm of ambitious and energetic young newspaper men, who came to the city from Prescott." The new firm in making its bow to the public in an article headed 'We rise to Explain,' said, among other things, 'If anyone wants to know what kind of a newspaper we shall print, the best way for him to find out is to subscribe for it for a year, read it diligently every week, and by the time his subscription expires he will be able, as far as he is concerned, to answer that question without our assistance.'

"The modest but pointed salutatory of the new proprietors proved to be the preface of a long chapter wherein success stood forth on every page. The paper steadily and gradually improved in character, widened its field of circulation and influence and increased its following. When Flint & Weber took charge of the paper it was an eight column folio and all home print. In December, 1875, so well had affairs progressed, that it was decided to equip the plant with a power press, which was done, a Fairhaven being substituted for the old Washington hand press. At the same time the form of the paper was changed to a six-column quarto, and for the first time it came out an as eight-page sheet, with patent insides."

This improvement was effected at considerable expense to the publishers, but was justified by the subscipient growth of the paper, which was gradual and healthy. The equipment was also bettered to enable the office to turn out a higher quality of job work to meet the demands of the increasing business.

Then a blow fell that was seriously felt, not only by The News, but by the entire community. Edwin Henry Weber, who had been a partner in the Menomonie publishing firm for nearly 27 years, died on Jan. 16, 1898. He passed away at his home in this city on a Sunday afternoon in the fifty-third year of his life. The cause of his death was Bright's disease, and though his dangerous condition was understood, the end came sooner than expected. The shadow of a great sorrow fell upon the circle of his home and of his business activities. To Mr. Flint, with whom he had been associated for more than 30 years as a friend and business companion, the bereavement came keen beyond expression. Mr. Weber was born in Friendship, N. Y., Oct. 26, 1845, and came to Wisconsin with his parents, who were among the early settlers of Friendship, Adams County. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Adams County Press. In 1864 he enlisted with the Union army as a private in Co. K, 40th Wisconsin. Upon the mustering out of his regiment he resumed his trade in the office of Brannan & Turner, publishers of the State Register at Portage. In 1868 he formed a partnership with Rock J. Flint, an employe in the same office, under the firm name of Flint & Weber, and they purchased the Prescott Journal, then published by that gifted writer, Lute A. Taylor. In June, 1871, their office was destroyed by fire, following which they came to Menomonie, taking over, as stated, The News, on Aug. 12, 1871. Mr. Weber led the life of a public spirited citizen in the best sense. For ten years he was superintendent of the Menomonie Water Works Co., he was a member of the board of trustees of the city library for many years, and was a charter member of William Evans Post, G. A. R. When he died loyal tributes were published by many admiring brethren of the press. He was universally pronounced one of the bright lights of journalism, and one who would be sadly missed by the craft.

"Until Nov. 2, 1900, Mr. Flint ably continued the publication of the paper but in that month a partner was again taken into the business in the person of F. F. Morgan. A high rank in the field of journalism had been won solely on his merits by the newcomer. For 12 years he had been publisher of The Cumberland Advocate, one of the influential Republican papers of Barron County. 'Under the new dispensation,' said Mr. Flint's introduction of his associate, 'we are certain the old family paper will grow better and better as the years roll by.' Mr. Morgan assumed his duties with no promises to make, but he said, 'it shall ever be our steadfast purpose to assist in holding the News up to its present honorable and enviable position among the weeklies of the state, and we shall address ourselves to the task with that loyalty and enthusiasm which the conditions seem to inspire.'

"That he did address himself to his task with the highest form of loyalty and enthusiasm his record showed from the very first. Mr. Morgan was a veritable dynamo of energy, and the persistency with which he labored for the welfare of the paper is still proverbial. Three months after the advent of Mr. Morgan an expansion to a seven-column quarto was manifest in the paper, this change taking place on Feb. 8, 1901. In November, 1904, the paper became permanently an all home print publication.

"On Nov. 2, 1906, the paper was issued for the last time on Friday, which had been the publicaton day since January, 1888. From Nov. 8 forward the publication day was Thursday, this change being made for the convenience both of subscribers and advertisers.

"The second death to occur in the publishing firm was that of Mr. Morgan on Feb. 3, 1908.______ His sudden end was a great shock to the community, and an irreparable blow to his family, friends and business associates. He was born at Campton, Kane County, Ill., Oct. 3, 1861, his family locating in Buffalo County, Wis., when he was but a year old. He began his first newspaper work on the Arcadia Leader, and conducted the paper for five years. For two years he followed daily newspaper work in La Crosse, and in 1888 went to Cumberland, where he purchased The Advocate. His work there, as in Menomonie, was rewarded with signal success.

"J. T. Flint, son of the senior member of the firm, had been made a partner on Jan. 1, 1907, with a one-third interest, though following both this change and the untimely death of Mr. Morgan, the firm name continued to be Flint & Morgan, Mrs. F. F. Morgan continuing to hold her husband's one-third interest until the last transfer of the property.

"The business change which brought the paper under a new ownership and management was effected on June 1, 1908, and on June 4 was announced in The News as follows: 'W. R. Hotchkiss, the president and manager of the Dunn County News Company, as the publishing house is now known, came to Menomonie from Barron, where he for three years had published and edited the Barron County Shield, following a newspaper experience embracing various points in the southern and eastern portions of the state. It has been his unceasing effort to merit the generous introduction to the public of Dunn County accorded him by his predecessors, and to carry forward the work which they had advanced so well.

"The present company is the first corporation that has owned The News. Besides Mr. Hotchkiss, the stockholders are Mrs. Mabel Hotchkiss and O. J. Barr, the latter of Brodhead. The business is conducted by Mr. Hotchkiss, the others being silent partners M. C. Douglas, now serving as editor, began his duties May 1, 1909, coming from Milwaukee, where for 16 years he had been connected with the newspapers of that city, seven years as managing editor of The Sentinel.

"The retirement from the local newspaper field of Rock J. Flint, now United States Marshal for the Western District of Wisconsin, and J. T. Flint, the son who had literally grown up with the News and contributed much by faithful attention. to his duties with the paper to its latter-day successes, is deserving of more than passing attention. R. J. Flint, during the more than 37 years in which he was a publisher of the News, took an advanced position for all that made for the welfare of the city, and imparted the benefit of his wisdom and experience to many movements tending to its up-building. He was one of the prime movers in the establishment of the county asylum, has served as one of the incorporators of the Menomonie Literary, Library and Educational Society, served for years as chairman of the town before the city of Menomonie was incorporated, and was one of two men who collaborated in preparing the draft of the charter under which the municipality was organized. These are but a few of the activities that have distinguished him as a useful citizen. Still hale and hearty, capable, genial, untiring in his labors and unfalteringly true to his friends, all who know him wish him a long continued career of valuable service and contentment."

In October, 1913, the News was sold to M. C. Douglas and J. T. Flint. In the following February the Flint-Douglas Printing Company, a corporation, was organized to take over the property, which is still owned by this company. Mr. Douglas was subsequently president of the company and editor of the News until his death on Nov. 5, 1923. The present officers of the company are: Lucile W. Flint, president; Malcolm S. Douglas, vice president; and J. T. Flint, secretary-treasurer and manager, who has held this position since the company was formed.

"Since the retirement of Flint & Morgan the work of advancement, carried forward so far by them, has been continued. The company has added about $4,000 worth of equipment, including two large cylinder presses, with electric power equipment, a power stitcher and other machinery, which, with the two job presses installed by Flint & Morgan, and large quantities of type and other material for doing book and job printing of every description, make the News office the best equipped printing establishment in northwestern Wisconsin.

Also illustrative of the evolution since the beginning is the improvement and enlargement of the quarters which have been used as the home of the Dunn County Mention has been made of the first small office above the tinshop at the News. Company's plant and of the removal to the site where the Heller block now stands. In 1867, upon the retirement of Dr. Benjamin, the plant was again removed, this time to a small structure on the rear of the lot where the present building stands, facing Third Sheet. It remained here but a short time, and then the building was erected on Wilson Avenue to the east of the present structure, which served as the paper's home for 40 years and became one of the familiar landmarks of the This building, still well preserved, is now used as a contractor's shop on city. The present commodious edifice was erected at Wilson Avenue Second Street. and Third Street in 1907, and was first occupied on June 27 of that year. It contains well arranged quarters for each of the several departments, including suites for the business offices, editorial rooms, composing room, press and mailing room, stock room and bindery, and in the absence of untoward interference by the elements should serve for many years to come."

At one time or another the Dunn County News has had competitors, nearly all of which, however, had but a brief existence. In March, 1870, a paper called the Lean Wolf, which had been established at Durand in October, 1869, was moved to Menomonie; but in the following July it was merged in the Dunn County News.

A paper that lasted longer was the Menomonie "Times," the publication of which was begun in 1875 by a man named Relph. After a few months, not finding sufficient support, it ceased, or suspended publication; but it was revived in July, 1876, as a Democratic paper, that being the year of the Blaine-Tilden campaign. Flavius J. Mills was then proprietor and editor. A short time afterwards it was again owned by Mr. Relph in association with a Mr. Gardiner. The latter subsequently retiring, Mr. Relph conducted it alone until July, 1879, when Mr. Gardiner, who held a mortgage on it, transferred the security to a Chicago firm, who foreclosed the mortgage. The plant was then purchased by Dr. D. H. Decker and F. J. McLean, who published the paper under the style of the Menomonie Times Printing Company, though no incorporation took place until 1884. In October, 1888, A. P. Davis became the editor and principal stockholder of the company. After Mr. Davis sold his interest in the early 1900's there was a succession of editors until 1910, when the paper was discontinued.

In December, 1887, a German weekly paper called the Menomonie Nordstern was started, being published from the beginning by the German Printing Co. The stockholders were Herman and Carl Freischmidt, William Winrich, Carl Pieper, and others. The paper was edited by Carl Pieper until January, 1902; then by Frank and Antonio Pieper until its suspension in March, 1904. Another edition was issued styled "Nordwesten." The paper was independent populist in politics.

The Wisconsin Signal, another populist paper issued weekly, was founded in 1891 by Carl Pieper. In the following year it was sold to the Signal Publishing Co., composed of 100 farmers of Dunn County. From 1892 until the spring of 1894 it was edited by Miss Leona Windsor; then by Miss Anderson. J. B. Tainter was business manager until November, 1898, after which there is no further men-

The Menomonie Badger was a juvenile paper founded by Thomas Dreer in October, 1903. It was published by him weekly until May, 1904, when it ceased to be issued.

A paper called Facts and Figures was published as a quarterly from April, 1900, to April, 1901, for the Wisconsin Anti-Saloon League by H. W. Rintelman, being edited by Henry Coleman.

The Dunn County Herald, another temperance paper, was established in 1888, being edited by Dr. Kate Kelsey and F. A. Vasey. It lacked sufficient support and after a brief career was suspended.

CHAPTER XVII

MILITARY RECORD

In September, (Sept. 8 and 9) 1876, an organization was effected in Menomonie of the survivors of the Civil War. A former history mentions a second reunion, which took place on July 4, 1877, when the whole village participated. Governor Ludington furnished the equipments, and the famous war eagle, Old Abe, was in the procession, borne by David McLane, one of the soldiers who carried him through the war. This organization had four or five reunions, after which its activities ceased, the survivors of the war, or most of them, becoming members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

While the Civil War was in progress an association called the Soldiers' Aid Society, was formed and conducted by the leading weren in the town in accordance with the purpose-indicated by its name.

William Evans Post No. 58, G. A. R., was organized Jan. 6, 1883. It was named after Capt. William Evans of Company K, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, which company he raised, ranking as captain from May 3, 1861. He was mortally wounded at Golden's Farm, Va., and died in a hospital in Philadelphia on July 28, 1862. Capt. Evans was a resident of Menomonie and an employee of Knapp, Stout & Co., having come to Wisconsin in 1856. He was a native of York County, He was succeeded in command of the company by Capt. John Milton Mott, Penn. who ranked from Sept. 1, 1862. Capt. Mott was taken ill while in the service and died at Frederick City, Md., July 26, 1863. He had typhoid fever but was recovering and being allowed outside of the hospital, he found some blackberries in a wood, it is said, and having eaten too many of them, suffered a relapse which proved fatal. In course of time William Evans Post attained a membershij of 270, a number that has since dwindled to a dozen or 15 through deaths and removals. Some of the surviving members live out in the country, and usually there are not more than five or six who now attend meetings, even of those living in the The Post has occupied nicely furnished rooms in the Mabel Tainter Buildcity. ing ever since it was erected, this provision being made for it by the donors, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Tainter. Previous to that the Post occupied rooms on Main Street in a building next to the Johnson building that was burned in May, 1924. When the members were younger and still enjoyed vigor and health, the Post took active part in everything relating to Grand Army affairs, sending delegates to the annual national conventions, held successively in various cities, which occasions were marked by a grand parade; also marching in Memorial Day parades, holding camp fires in association with the Woman's Relief Corps, and taking part in other public functions. But time has wrought its changes and the Post is no longer active as such, though a few individual members have retained their faculties to a fair degree and are still a power in their respective communities, where they are honored for their civic and patriotic records. It is worthy of note that the Post's first commander, Rock J. Flint, is now serving in that capacity.

Woman's Relief Corps.—A history of this organization was read on its fortieth anniversary, held on Tuesday, April 25, 1925, by Mrs. Cora Steele, from which the following account has been taken.

"After William Evans Post was organized on Jan. 6. 1883, a number of loyal women decided to form an auxiliary. The first meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Naomi Doolittle on Main Street on April 2, 1884, and the William Evans Relief Corps No. 7 was organized. Officers were elected and installed. S. J. Bailey, then commander of William Evans Post No. 58, assisted by R. J. Flint, officer of the day, acted as instituting and installing officers. The meetings were held in the A. O. U. W. hall in the Johnson Block, at that time the home of the Grand Army.

"Only 28 ladies were present, although 35 members were enrolled on the char, Our first officers were: President, Amanda Bailey; senior vice presidentter. Elizabeth Skeel; junior vice president, Jannette Pease; treasurer, Hattie Vander-hoof; secretary, Lida E. Doolittle; chaplain, Ida Relph; conductor, Naomi Doolittle; guard, Cora Macauley.

"From the Woodmen hall we moved with the Grand Army to the hall in the Sipple building (now occupied by the Waterman-Erhhard Co. store). This was our home until Feb. 25, 1891, when, through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Tainter this beautiful Memorial Hall was provided for our use During the first ten years of our existence there were many calls for aid. At that time we worked hard for funds to pay off a mortgage for a soldier's widow, to provide nurses for the sick, and food and clothing for those in need, as pensions were not what they are today. We also assisted the department by furnishing a room at the Soldiers' Home in Waupaca and contributing to many funds.

"April 2, 1894, we celebrated our tenth anniversary. The entertainment was public and held in what was known as Stori's Hall. Mrs. Nettie Lutz was president.

"About this time we started the monument fund. Our idea was to purchase a monument for the city or the cemetery, one that would be a credit to our society and a living tribute to our heroic dead.

In May, 1896, the Department of Wisconsin honored our corps by electing Mrs. Elizabeth Skeel as department president. This made Menomonie headquarters of the department for one year and gave our corps two department officers, as Cora M. Steele was appointed her secretary. In 1897 Mrs. Skeel was elected department treasurer, serving two years.

"In 1898 the Spanish-American war cloud hung over us. Many of our members had sons, husbands, or brothers, who enlisted. Weeks and months of anxiety passed before the loved ones returned-some never. We assisted the department in all calls for aid. Individually many necessities and dainties were forwarded to our boys. When they returned we assisted the citizens in giving them a royal welcome and banquet.

"After the war was over we redoubled our efforts to finish raising the amount still needed for our management fund. In the spring of 1901 this was accomplished and in the latter part of April the monument was placed on the Grand Army lot in Evergreen Cemetery, a beautiful monument which was unveiled May 30 and dedicated to the sacred memory of the heroes of both wars.

"In 1909 we celebrated our twenty-fifth anniversary. To commemorate the event we presented the Central School and the Normal School each with a large bunting flag. The presentation was made by Mrs. Kate Weber. Later a beautiful silk banner was presented to the local corps by J. A. Decker, a gift from William Evans Post, G. A. R., followed by an interesting program of music, songs, recitations and the corps history. Mrs. Rosalie Phillips was president at this time. Nearly 200 veterans of the Blue and members of the W. R. C. enjoyed the occasion.

"In April, 1914, a second time we were called upon to assist the government to care for soldier boys. This time the results were so awful, the grief and sorrow so widespread, that we were taxed to the limit both in purse and loving labor to assist the Red Cross, and provide for husbands, sons, and lovers called across seas. To dwell on this is unnecessary; it is fresh in the minds of all. Let me only add that our relief corps was second to none in doing our share..... We were at all times ready to furnish a banquet for the boys as they returned and assist all other patriotic societies and organizations to show our appreciation of the sacrifices of the World War veterans.

"This time last year we furnished $75 to plant elm trees on the Memorial highway, considering it an honor to do so. "Since organized we have always responded to calls for relief work from both department and national headquarters; we have visited schools and presented them with patriotic literature and flags; looked after all veterans of the Civil War, cheered them with flowers when ill, remembered them each on their birthdays and holiday time with some gift. Their deep appreciation of these little courtesies gives us great pleasure.

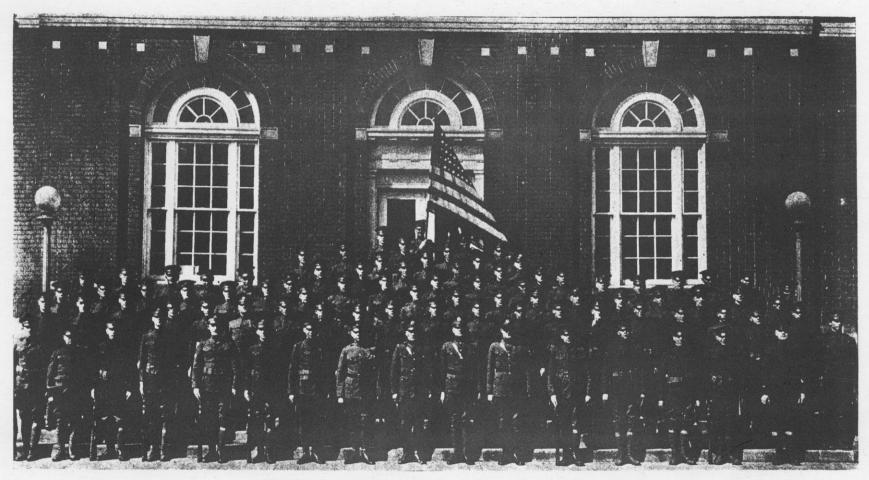

"While financially they do not need our assistance, as many did years ago, socially they appreciate our calls, and we will gladly continue to try to make life pleasant, not only for those who wore the Blue, but every man who has served his country in uniform. Memorial Day is always observed in the most impressive manner. Flowers are furnished and services attended in a body.

"Since organized we have expended over $3,400 in relief work. This does not include contributions called for various department funds, Memorial Day in the South, literature, fruit and furnishings for the Soldiers' Home, fruit and flowers for the sick, or flags for different cemeteries in the county. For many years we held our afternoon socials at the homes of our members, but of late the attendance is so large we have met here. At one time it needed only one hostess; now it requires eight to attend to the serving. While we greatly enjoy these social gatherings, we are not unmindful that our first duty is to labor for those more unfortunate than ourselves; to extend charity to those who need our assistance; cheery greetings for the ill and depressed; with loving and thoughtful service to each and all with whom we come into contact."

T. J. George Camp, No. 8, United Spanish War Veterans.—A local organization of Spanish War service men was formed soon after the close of the war, and when regularly organized took the name of "T. J. George Camp No. 259, Spanish-American War Veterans." The earliest minute book of the camp that can now be found has its first page dated in the month of October, 1903, but it seems probable that it was organized before that. The first meetings held were informal, as a number of Spanish war organizations were being formed at the time and the local men waited awhile so as to have time to consider which they should join, finally uniting with the "Spanish-American War Veterans," as above intimated. Later some of these different bodies united and the local camp was reorganized as T. J. George Camp No. 8, United Spanish War Veterans, with a charter dated April 18, 1904. At the time of reorganization there were about 26 members, a number that has since been reduced to 15 or 17. The camp takes part in Memorial Day exercises every year.

The Ludington Guard, a military organization with a long and honorable history, was formed as a cavalry company, Jan. 16, 1877, with Thomas J. George (still a resident of Menomonie) as captain. It was named after Harrison Ludington, then governor of the state. The company remained as cavalry for about six years, when the members found difficulty in obtaining mounts, as each man had to furnish his own horse. It was then made an infantry organization, becoming Company H of the Third Infantry, Wisconsin National Guard.

Several times the local soldiers were called to duty: on June 23, 1878, on account of the Indian troubles in Burnett County; on July 23, 1881, to hunt for the Williams brothers, and on July 8, 1894, on account of the strike at Spooner. On each of these occasions the company showed promptitude in turning out at the first call, and courage in the performance of duty, not a man showing a white feather.

On April 28, 1898, the company was mustered into federal service, on account of the war with Spain, and saw service in Porto Rico under General Miles, at the battle of Coama supporting the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Regiment, which took an active part in the fight. They were under the direct command of Capt. John Ohnstad, who is now in the regular U. S. army. No casualties were suffered. They were mustered out of service in January, 1899.

The company was reorganized on May 9 of the same year with J. W. Macauley, captain. In 1916 Company H was mustered into federal service again and was sent to the Mexican border, being mustered out of service Dec. 14 of the same year. On March 26, 1917, the call again came and a guard was placed on the main line Red Cedar railroad bridge. Twenty-four men and one officer were left to guard the structure, while the remainder of the company were sent to Superior to guard bridges and ore docks.

On Sept. 5 the entire regiment was concentrated at Camp Douglas and three days later were sent to Waco, Texas. In the latter part of the month the regiment was reorganized and the local company became Company H, 128th Infantry. On Feb. 14, 1918, the men entrained for Camp Merritt, N. J., and sailed for Brest, France, four days later. They arrived in France March 10. Captain Albert Nathness was transferred to the 18th Regiment of the First Division, the rest of the company joining the 28th Regiment of the same division.

The first taste of battle came in June, 1918, when the regiment containing the local men was transferred to Alsace-Lorraine, being among the first American troops to step on German soil. They stayed there until the middle of July, when they were shifted to Chateau Thierry. From there they were shifted north to Juvigney. For 20 days they were in the battle of the Meuse-Argonne, which was the longest stretch of straight fighting the men were in.

After the armistice was signed the men took part in the march into Germany and were stationed at the Coblenz Bridgehead, where they held one of the honored positions between the First and Second Divisions of the U. S. regular army. The regiment returned to the States and was mustered out of service at Camp Grant, May 17 and 18. They returned home May 19, at which time they received one of the greatest ovations ever tendered a local organization.

Such was substantially the account of their service in the great war as written by their former captain, John Ohnstad, and published in the Dunn County News, in its issue of April 17, 1924, with other data contained in this article. All of them, however, did not return, for 22 had fallen on the field of battle. The names of the members of Company H who went to France for World War service are preserved on a bronze memorial tablet affixed to the face of a granite monument which stands in a conspicuous place on Main Street, between the post office and Memorial building, and which bears the following inscriprion:

"To those who offered their lives in defense of their ideals and in memory of those who gave the last full measure of devotion."

The names of the dead, each indicated by a star, are: William H. Buckland, Dan Storing, Charles L. Owen, Lawrence W. Neverdahl, Ralph L. Richard, Albert Amundson, Raymond Branshaw, Arthur C. Close, Stanley R. Harris, William H. Hosford, Lloyd S. Howe, Anton Juve, Arnold Keister, Guy R. McClusky, Arthur C. Nelson, Odin F. Olson, Clarence G. Paff, Arnold G. Peter, Fred W. Ranee, Fred J. Rassbach, and Hedley Semdstrom. There is one other name indicated by a star—that of Winifred Hays; he was erroneously reported as dead but returned home about a year after the close of the war, and is now living.

This monument was erected by an organization known as Company H Sisters, which was formed soon after the company went to France for the purpose of supplying the boys with comforts that they would not be able to get at the front. The cost of the monument, about $1250, was defrayed by money raised through entertainments of various kinds. It was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies on Armistice Day, Nov. 11, 1921. Exercises were held at 10:45 a. m. in the auditorium of Stout Institute, the principal speakers being President Harvey and the Rev. A. E. Von Stilli. The ex-service men of Stout Institute were provided with reserved seats. At 2:00 p. m. the unveiling ceremony took place, the monument being unveiled by Major A. Nathness and the Rev. P. H. Linley of Milwaukee delivering an address. The ladies of the Woman's Relief Corps also presented a flag to Walcott Post, G. A. R. Music was furnished by the local band.

On March 4, 1920, Company H was again reorganized, this time under the captaincy of Albert Nathness. On Dec. 14 Nathness was promoted to major and Gordon Cassel became captain. The company had a strength of 103 men and three officers. When Cassel resigned Arthur Anderson became captain, being followed by Gustav Hitz, the officer now in charge.

The company has taken several expensive pleasure trips and participated in camp manuevers at various times, showing themselves to be well drilled soldiers. On Aug. 26, 1884, they were the guests of the First Regiment of Milwaukee, and on that occasion the citizens of Menomonie showed their appreciation of the soldiers by presenting them with a beautiful silk flag. Their next trip was to the International Encampment and Rifle Contest at Chicago, Oct. 1 to 8, 1887; and on Jan. 6, 1889, they went to Madison to the inauguration of Governor Hoard. In 1907 the entire company went to Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis on a two weeks' trip. Eleven days were spent in camp. In the summer of 1922 they participated in maneuvers between Camp Douglas and Sparta with two Wisconsin and one Illinois regiments and a troop of the Fifth U. S. Cavalry. Several other troops of infantry and cavalry regulars took part in the demonstration.

After the company was mustered out of service at the close of the World War the local soldiers reorganized as the Eleventh Separate Company, but in 1921 they were organized as Company A, 128th Infantry. When Captain Hitz took charge in August, 1923, there were 35 active men on the roll and about 20 "deadheads," but the company has since been recruited up to 93 enlisted men and three officers, active. Captain Hitz, a World War soldier, with a citation for gallantry in action has brought the organization up to a high degree of military efficiency, and in the spring of 1924 it was highly praised by Major Lee Sumner of the U. S. regular army.

The following is a list of commissioned officers from the time of organization of the company up to the present time: Captains—T. J. George (promoted to major in 1883), George R. Brewer, L. O. Haugen, J. C. Ohnstad, J. W. Macauley, M. F. Swant, Albert Nathness, Gordon Cassel, Arthur Anderson and Gustav Hitz.

First lieutenants—Simon Marugg, William Young, George R. Brewer, H. E. Knapp, S. A. Peterson, M. Doolittle, A. S. Ladd, O. B. Ballard, J. C. Ohnstad, A. Magnuson, J. W. Macauley. Dane Waite, M. F. Swant, A. P. Davis, Walter Neys, Albert Nathness, H. W. Quilling, Harry C. Nelson, E. C. Hill, Talma Scott, Frank Schroeder, Arthur Anderson, Arthur Öestreich, C. M. Russell.

Second lieutenants—William Young, George R. Brewer, H. T. Cassidy, H. E. Knapp, H. A. Wilcox, S. A. Peterson, A. S. Ladd, O. B. Ballard, R. Carlsrud, A. Ransier, L. O. Haugen, M. Hansen, A. Magnucon, J. W. Macauley, E. Skeel, M. F. Swant, A. P. Davis, Walter Neys, M. J. Winters, H. W. Quilling, Hans M. Hanson, Harry C. Nelson, E. C. Hill, Harold Buckland, Martin Lierman, Gordon Cassel, Sever Setter, Edgar Setter, John M. Fladoes.

Majors-T. J. George, Albert Nathness.

The armory in Menomonie was built after the Spanish-American War, from money allowed by the state, which was saved until the company had enough to buy the lot and build it.

The Ludington Guard Band.—A military band was organized in Menomonie about a year after the organization of the Ludington Guard and subsequently became the regimental band of the Third Regiment, W. N. G. Jacob Miller, who was the organizer, was also its capable leader for a number of years, after which John B. Williman took hold of it and also proved a good director. Like most similar organizations, it had its ups and downs, and some time after Mr. Williman gave up the directorship on account of advancing years, it broke up. In 1888 it was reorganized under the directorship of Charles Ingraham, and under the old name of the Ludington Guard Band soon regained its former reputation as an efficient musical organization. Mr. Ingraham continued as director until 1907, when he was succeeded by Ole C. Kausrud, under whose directorship the band remained until about five years ago, when Paul E. Gregg succeeded him. About a year or so previous to that the Knights of Pythias had formed a band, largely if not entirely composed of members of the Ludington Guard Band, and had bought a set of uniforms for it. It was known as the "Dokkey" or "Dokie" Band, and Paul E. Gregg was the director. As such it did some parade work and gave some concerts, holding separate rehearsals. But two rehearsals a week with different directors proved an inconvenient arrangement for the men, and Mr. Kausrud, who had been conducting the Ludington Guard Band rehearsals, finally dropped out, being succeeded, as already mentioned, by Paul E. Gregg, and the old order of things was resumed. At present the band consists of about 25 men. Besides taking part in parades on general holidays and other special occasions, it does a considerable amount of concert work in summer, including the St. Criox county fair work at Glenwood City, and usually the Buffalo County fair work at Mondovi; also playing Sunday concerts at Electric Park, on the traction line between Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls, and concert work in Menomonie. For concert work in the city park a shell band stand was erected several years ago, costing about $2,000, the city appropriating $300 of this amount, and the balance being raised by public subscriptions. In August, 1923, the band won a gold saxo-phone as prize in a band competition held at Winona, Minn., and on various other occasions it has been highly spoken of as an excellent musical organization. Hosford-Chase Post No. 32, American Legion, was organized in Menomonie Hostord-Chase Post No. 32, American Legion, was organized in Menomonie Aug. 9, 1919. Publicity had been given in the Dunn County News to the proposed organization and 28 service men signed written applications for membership. The following officers were elected to serve for the remainder of the year: J. W. Macauley, commander; P. M. Krogstad, vice commander; A. O. Arntson, adjutant; Paul E. Bailey, finance officer; A. Cantrell, historian. At this meeting committees were appointed to arrange for a Home Coming Day at the Dunn County Fair, Sept. 10, also for securing members and obtaining a charter. The Post conducted Fourth of July celebrations in 1921, 1922 and 1923. It also paid a part of the cost of Point Comfort (part of the city park system) in 1922, assisted in raising money for the Tourist Camp in 1924, and sponsored and assisted in financing the Boy Scout troops in 1925. The commanders who have served since Commander J. W. Macauley have been: 1920, P. T. Huntington and C. M. Peddycourt; 1921, Orville A. Tilleson; 1922, H. G. Lundegard; 1923, Galen F. Martin; 1924, A. L. Mitten; 1925, Herbert O. Goepfarth.

The American Legion Auxiliary Unit of Hosford-Chase Post No. 32 was organized in May, 1920, and in the first year had about 91 members. At the present time there are 130, all female relatives of service men who died in the line of duty, either during the war or since. The Auxiliary acts as aid and support to the Legion, especially in rendering assistance to disabled service men. It holds its meetings once a month in the American Legion club rooms. Its largest assets are from the sale of the American Legion poppies before Memorial Day, though other funds are raised through entertainments of various kinds. The first president of the Auxiliary was Mrs. A. J. Johnson, who served in 1920-21, and whose successors have been: Mrs. J. E. Joyce, 1922; Mrs. A. W. Macauley and Mrs. A. R. Josephson, 1923; Mrs. Ada Hosford, 1924; and Mrs. E. E. Stevens, 1925.

The national organization of home war activities after this country declared war against Germany, which was extended on much the same general lines to states and counties, made the work practically the same everywhere except as to minor details. It would be impossible within the limits of reasonable space to mention all the residents of Dunn County, who, disqualified by reason of age, sex, or other disabilities, from service in the army or navy, yet did work at home that helped to win the war; for such a list would include a very large proportion of the men and women of the county, besides many of the children. Some facts, however, should be briefly touched upon, and a few names mentioned, such personal mention in no wise implying that others were not as active and self-sacrificing, but serving merely to indicate the principal leaders, through official position, of the different organizations engaged in patriotic work. At the outset it may be mentioned that the Press performed an effective part in support of all branches of the work, to which it gave publicity, and it is from the pages of the Dunn County News that the following items are taken, being arranged, so far as may be, in chronological order as the events referred to occurred.

A Red Cross Chapter was organized in Menomonie as early as March 19, 1917, before war had been actually declared, at a meeting presided over by T. B. Wilson as chairman; with Mrs. E. E. Lamberton as vice chairman; Mrs. Jonathan Boothby secretary; and William Schutte treasurer. There were about 70 persons present. A board of 12 directors was nominated by a committee appointed for that purpose. After the declaration of war on April 6, 1917, there were many applications for membership. The first quarters occupied by the chapter were on the second floor of the Wilson-Weber building, but they soon proved too small, and a frame building—formerly the Oscar W. Huber home—to the north of the Wilson-Weber Lumber Co.'s office, was turned over to the chapter for their work by T. B. Wilson. The work committee, with Mrs. H. C. Inenfeldt chairman, was divided into four classes, or subdivisions, all organized for practical service, in which all were soon actively engaged.

On Wednesday, April 18, 1917, a movement was started to form a local service council analagous in scope and purpose to the National Defense Council, the idea being to bring under one head all local activities pertaining in any way to war preparedness, and so to co-ordinate the various efforts as to effect the best results. This movement was strongly backed by the Menomonie Commercial Club and took concrete form in a committee composed of five members, namely: L. D. Harvey, R. H. Rodgers, R. J. Flint, H. W. Quilling and C. K. Averill. The organizations asked to participate were the Menomonie Woman's Club, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Red Cross Chapter, and the Spanish-American War Veterans.

A Loyalty Parade took place on May 4 under the direction of O. C. Mauthe. The Dunn-Pepin County Medical Society, as a meeting held in the office of Dr. A. F. Heising on Friday, April 20, pledged fullest co-operation of the society along the lines of medical preparedness. Toward the latter part of May a Y. M. C. A. war fund campaign was under way and about $500 collected. The citizens were urged to buy Liberty bonds and a bond campaign was planned by the county council of defense.

After the passing of the draft law, June 5 had been appointed as registration day, and by June 7 2187 young men between the ages of 21 and 30 had registered.

Up to June 14 the application for Liberty bonds turned in to the four local (Menomonie) banks totaled $62,750, divided as follows: First National Bank, 52,700; Schutte & Quilling Bank, $6,000; Bank of Menomonie, $3,950; Kraft State Bank, $100. The committee in charge of the Liberty bond campaign consisted of J. T. Flint, H. C. Inenfeldt, E. P. Wright, R. E. Bundy and C. B. Stone. The committee in charge of the city canvass was composed of Frank Pierce, L. D. Harvey and A. O. Giese. Many of the county meetings were large and enthusiastic. The Ludington Guard Band and New Zenith Band assisted at a number of the village meetings.

Toward the middle of June plans were under way for putting the Menomonie Chapter of the Red Cross and its auxiliaries in the running with full force for the war fund to be raised in the week between June 18 and June 25. This was a national campaign and the county work was mapped out by T. B. Wilson, J. C. Wilcox and B. H. Waterman, who constituted the campaign committee. This drive resulted in the collection of $7,849.83.

On June 21, 1917, the Liberty bond flotation in Dunn County amounted to $88,150, purchased by 495 subscribers.

By the end of June, 1917, Dunn County had a well organized County Council of Defense, with L. D. Harvey chairman, to take the place of the original organization, and at a meeting of the local council, with R. H. Rodgers chairman, and H. W. Quilling acting as secretary, which was attended by 20 representatives of local councils of defense outside the city, about 40 persons being present including the city delegates, Mr. Rodgers explained the nation-wide plan of organization, with respect to war emergency measures and the part to be taken therein by the national, state and county councils of defense respectively.

The county council of defense as at first composed consisted of the following citizens: Chairman, L. D. Harvey; executive committee, J. S. Goven, E. O. Wright, Geo. P. Wolf and H. C. Inenfeldt; secretary, Frank Pieper; treasurer, Martin Fladoes; with the following additional members representing the departments indicated: Agriculture, Geo. P. Wolf (county agent); labor, H. C. Inenfeldt; manufactures, W. O. Wright; general business, E. F. Stoddard; transportation and communication, W. H. Francis; bankers, Frank Pierce; the press, M. C. Douglas; patriotic organizations, O. G. Kinney; women's organizations, and Red Cross, Mrs. A. Egdahl; physicians, Dr. P. E. Riley; education. J. S. Govin.

July 1 (Monday) the Dunn County draft board appointed by Governor E. L. Philipp held its first session at the court house, electing Sheriff Ferdinand Mortensen chairman and Frank Pieper (county clerk) secretary. Other members of the council were E. B. Hill of Colfax, Dr. I. V. Grannis of Menomonie, E. E. Black of Downing, George M. Hovlid of North Menomonie and Henry Miller of Weston.

July 10 the county board voted $1,000 to the defense council, there being only three negative votes. In the same month there was a drive among the women for fcod conservation.

September 3, 1917 (Labor Day) was selected on which to go through a public program in honor of the draft-selected men from Dunn County. It included a parade, a basket dinner at the Fair grounds, band concerts, and an address by Richard Lloyd Jones of Madison. The program was successfully carried out.

The work of the exemption board on the first draft ended Aug. 30. One hundred and forty men passed the examination. Dunn County's quota was 103, of whom the first contingent—five in number—left for Camp Grant on Sept. 6 from the Omaha depot, a large number of citizens turning out to give them encouraging cheers. These five men were Elmer T. Nelson, John C. Chase and Cornelius J. O'Keefe of Menomonie, Chris Delong of Eau Galle, and Roy James of Knapp (Route 2).

Sept. 20 a patriotic drive was planned to present the American side of the war to the people of every community in the county so that all might understand the great issues involved. This drive was under the charge of a committee of five and opened on Oct. 4, loyalty meetings being held in every part of the county.

On Sept. 11 the Woman's Liberty Loan committee called a meeting to plan activity for the women in the approaching new Liberty bond sale.

On Monday, Sept. 19, the second contingent, of 41 men, left for Camp Grant amid the cheers of 2000 people.

The drive for the second issue of Liberty bonds started Oct. 14, the quota having been placed at $350,000.

Oct. 23 the Dunn County Chapter of the Red Cross held its annual meeting in Menomonie, a good report being presented. There were by this time ten branch chapters in the county.

A week's drive to secure funds for Y. M. C. A. war work was started Monday, Nov. 12. By this time the work in all departments had become intensified. The Y. M. C. A. drive was followed by one for the Knights of Columbus, and in the same month, November, there was a food pledge drive resulting in 3,493 pledges being obtained, with 257 refusals.

In December a speaking campaign was planned and carried out, speakers visiting each of the 140 rural schools in the county to educate the people in the causes and objects of the war and increase the patriotic spirit. The committee to perfect details consisted of L. D. Harvey, chairman of the county council, E. O. Wright, G. L. Bowman, R. H. Rodgers and F. H. Good. Miss Theresa Leinenkugel, county superintendent, co-operated heartily in the work.

Dec. 15 the county clerk and assistants began sending out questionnaires prepared for the men on the registered list of the new draft. In the same month a drive for new members of the Red Cross was begun.

In the meanwhile a close co-operation between the state educational body and the council of defense was promoting patriotic education in the Menomonie schools, and loyalty pledges were being signed by the pupils. The establishment of branches of the Junior Red Cross was also encouraged.

By January 1, 1918, about $5,000 worth of war saving stamps had been sold in Menomonie. A war stamp drive was begun on Feb. 3, local selling points being established. The women's societies and most of the fraternal societies helped in this work. In the same month a big drive was put on throughout the state by the Lutheran Church to provide funds for the national conference for soldier's and sailors' welfare. The Rev. E. C. Haavik was chairman of the Dunn County committee and good results were attained.

The waste due to the liquor traffic was receiving national attention and on March 7 a plan was devised to get prospective voters at the spring election to sign pledge cards. A meeting for this purpose was called by the organizing committee of the Progressive League, consisting of B. H. Waterman, A. Quilling, H. G. Johnson, M. King, E. O. Wright, C. K. Averill and R. E. Bunday. The women did good work in the campaign; but in the election in April the city voted for license. Two other license contests were fought out in Dunn County, one in the town of Tiffany (containing the city of Boyceville), and the other in the town of Weston, in both of which the "drys" prevailed.

In March another drive for the Red Cross was planned, with the object of raising $18,000 a year to maintain work.

March 28, 1918, it was announced that Dunn County's quota for the third Liberty loan drive was $360,000, and Chairman Frank Pierce and the workers under him began making preparations for the drive, committees being appointed in the various towns.

In the meanwhile a drive was put on to increase the acreage of wheat in the county, which resulted, as announced April 18, in an increase of over 4,000 acres.

In the Liberty Loan drive Dunn County "went over the top," the total face value of bonds bought amounting to $424,250.

Friday and Saturday, May 10 and 11, were big days in Menomonie, a great Community Fair for the benefit of the Red Cross being held at the armory on both days, and a grand parade being held on Saturday to celebrate the success of the third Liberty Loan drive. The Fair cleared $4,500.

A Red Cross drive was started May 3, the American Red Cross having called for an effort to raise $100,000,000, and at the same time it was announced that Dunn County had a quota of $9,000 to be raised as part of a national fund of $10,000,000 for the Salvation Army.

From time to time during these money-raising, and other war time activities, the soldier boys were leaving for camp, with the encouragement of the home people, who attended in large crowds at the depot to minister to their comfort and give them parting cheers. On May 28 a contingent of 80 left, which was the largest up to that date. It is sad to relate that some of these departing heroes who bravely, if not cheerfully, waved farewell to their friends and relatives as the train moved out of the depot, were destined never to see home again, but met their death on Flanders' Fields or in camp or army hospitals. Already news of casualties had begun to arrive, and ere long the pages of the Dunn County News showed portraits of the honored dead, sometimes in groups of three or four, with suitable tribute to their deeds and character. A list of those who thus gave up their lives in the cause of freedom from military despotism may be found in the article on the Ludington Guard contained in this volume.

In July Dunn County again went over the top in a war saving stamp drive, which was over-subscribed by $14,000 or more.

On Sunday, July 21, memorial services were held in Stout Auditorium in honor of the soldiers from Dunn County who had given up their lives in the great conflict. A large audience was present, the hall being filled.

In September preparations were made for the fourth Liberty Loan drive to begin Sept. 28. This drive was over-subscribed by nearly $50,000, the total sale of bonds being $589,100.

In October the schools, churches, and other public meeting places in the city were temporarily closed on account of the prevailing influenza.

A report of an armistice between the contending armies which reached this country in the first week of November being sent under an mistaken impression by an American officer, and which was given publicity in the News issue of Nov. 7, caused a premature celebration; but a few days later a correct report arrived that the armistice had been actually signed on Nov. 11. A grand demonstration then took place, all the stores and places of business being closed, and preparations being hastily made for two parades, which were carried out, one in the forenoon and another in the afternoon, in which the Stout students took part, besides many of the citizens. All were rejoiced at the news of vistory, and that the reports of additional dead and wounded which toward the close of the war had been appearing more and more frequently in the News columns, were now practically ended, and that with the exception of the few who were destined still to succumb from wounds or disease, the soldier boys who still survived would ere many weeks be on their return home to their anxious relatives. Of those joyous reunions it is needless here to speak; they can better be imagined than described. Some of the soldiers were detained for awhile with the army of occupation in Germany, but there was no longer the same anxiety as to their lives and welfare, and hope deferred was in time realized and the citizen soldiery absorbed again into their respective communities with joyful welcome.

With respect to the Red Cross, Miss Marion Ingalls, the present secretary, has kindly furnished the following article:

On March 2, 1917, a meeting was held in the Memorial Building to discuss the formation of a Red Cross chapter. The meeting was opened by T. B. Wilson, who was elected temporary chairman. Mr. L. D. Harvey was the speaker of the evening. A petition signed by 47 charter members to form a Dunn County chapter was forwarded to the National Red Cross.

On March 19, 1917, authority having been received, the permanent organization of the chapter took place at a meeting in the Memorial Building, with the following officers: T. B. Wilson, chairman (succeeded in 1921 by B. L. Kabot); Mrs. E. E. Lamberton, vice chairman (succeeded in October, 1917, by Mrs. O. E. Huber); Mrs. Jonathan Boothby, secretary (succeeded in 1918 by Marion Ingalls, who still holds that office); William Schutte, Jr., treasurer. The board of directors chosen was composed of the following persons: Mrs. E. E. Lamberton (succeeded in October, 1917, by Mrs. O. W. Huber), William Schutte, Jr., Mrs. Jonathan Boothby, Mrs. I. B. Spencer (succeeded in 1920 by Rev. A. E. Westenberg), Rev. Mr. Tolleys (succeeded in 1918 by Miss Hessie Freeman), Mrs. Frank Carter, Miss Hattie Bates, Mrs. A. J. Josephson (succeeded in 1921 by B. L. Kabot), Mrs. Robert Taufman, B. H. Waterman, Mrs. C. H. Diedrich and T. B. Wilson.

In November, 1918, it was voted to add to the board of directors the chairman of each branch.

The active work of the chapter was organized with Mrs. T. B. Wilson in charge of the surgical dressing department, who served continuously to the end of the war. Mrs. Charles Nelson was succeeded by Mrs. O. W. Huber as matron or superintendent in charge of sewing. Marion Ingalls was in charge of the cutting of hospital garments and the supply of branches. Mrs. W. G. Patterson was succeeded by Mrs. Belle Ranney as head of the inspection department. Mrs. Jonathan Boothby had charge of knitting and Mrs. Paul Wilson of packing and shipping.

The following branches were organized: Big Otter Creek, May 14, 1918; chairman, Mrs. O. E. Losness. Blair Moor, June 11, 1918; chairman, Mrs. R. D. Robbertson. Boyceville, Sept. 11, 1917; chairman, Mrs. William Clough. Cedar Falls, May 17, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Frank Wilkinson. Chippewa Bottoms, June 6, 1918; chairman, Mrs. A. L. Knutson. Colfax, June 5, 1917; chairman, Mrs. George T. Vorland; Connorsville, May 16, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Benjamin Clough. Damon Ridge, Aug. 29, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Sanford Baum. Downing, July 12, 1917; chairman, Mrs. Harris Pratt. Downsville, Jan. 5, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Mary Flick. Dunnville-Waubeck, Jan. 3, 1918; chairman, Mrs. A. N. Abbott. Eau Galle,; chairman, Mrs. George Topliss. Elk Mound, Aug. 11, 1917; chairman, Mrs. George Mars. Fall City, Oct. 17, 1917; chairman, Mrs. Albert F. Klatt. Finstad Valley,; chairman, Mrs. H. Mattison. Grant, May 30, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Frank Fischer. Knapp,; chairman, Mrs. William Robinson. Lambs Creek,; chairman, Mrs. O. T. Thompson. Little Otter Creek, June 13, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Fred Palmer. Louisville, Jan. 10, 1918; chairman, Miss Leola Norgard. Lucas, Jan. 16, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Walter Hughes. Maple Ridge, Aug. 9, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Wallace Kunz. Meridean, May 24, 1918; chairman, Miss Agnes Fossum. North Hay Creek, May 21, 1918; chairman, Nettie J. Eide. Ridgeland,; chairman, Mrs. M. L. Randall. Rock Creek,; chairman, Mrs. Mary Melrose. Sand Creek, Aug. 24, 1918; chairman, Mrs. Robert Worman. Spring Brook, June 21, 1917; chairman, Mrs. Edna Tiffts. Twin Hills, March 12, 1918; chairman, Agnes Tietz. Vanceburg, Sept. 6, 1917; chairman, Mrs. L. G. Richards. Washburn Farm, Aug. 13, 1918; chairman, Alvena Anderson. Weston, Jan. 29, 1918; chairman, Mrs. William Branshaw. Wheeler, June 20, 1917; chairman, Mrs. Charles Sahlie.

There were also three unorganized auxiliaries, namely: Hatchville, North Menomonie, and Rusk, presided over respectively by Mrs. George Hovlid, Mrs. J. C. Jacobson and Mrs. F. R Ross.

During the period of the war 151 boxes of completed work were shipped from the Dunn County Chapter, comprising 83,960 articles, of which 68,275 were surgical dressings, 6,927 knitted articles, 6,483 hospital garments, and 2,306 refugee garments.

Two consignments of used clothing were collected and shipped for Belgian relief, weighing 7,198 pounds and 7,069 pounds respectively.

The total collections made up to Jan. 1, 1919, totaled $58,542.18, in which amount is included the First War Fund Drive of $6,764.27, turned over entire to the National Chapter. This total also includes $11,898 from memberships, $4,500 from the Red Cross Fair, $9,861.32 from the monthly donations of the City and County Support Clubs, organized under the direction of James F. Wilson to supply the necessary operating funds for the production of work the Dunn County Chapter.

The work rooms were first on the upper floor of the Wilson Land & Lumber Co.'s building, then the entire cottage next to this building was occupied, and finally removal was made to a large suite of rooms in Stout Institute; the uses of all of which places were donated to the chapter. The faithful workers who gave so freely of their time and labor to the Dunn County Red Cross accomplishments are legion.

The Red Cross were asked by the mayor to conduct a hospital during the influenza epidemic in 1918, because the city hospital could not take care of contagious cases. The hospital was maintained at 409 Wilson Avenue under the personal direction of James F. Wilson, with Red Cross members as volunteer nurses under the supervision of Mrs. C. B. Stone. One hundred and twenty patients were cared for, with no fatalities.

Following the war the Chapter has maintained an office and a full time secretary for home service and information, and assistance with government claims for Dunn County service men. The average number of men seeking such service during this entire period, 1919-1925, has been 100 per month, with never diminishing regularity. There are 227 active disability cases on the Chapter files, and over 2,000 service men. From October, 1920, to October, 1921, the Red Cross had a regularly employed county public health nurse, Miss Rachael Dietrichson. When this work was taken over by the county, the Red Cross followed with classes, 1921-1922, throughout the county in home hygiene and the care of the sick, with Katherine E. McKinley as instructor. There were 24 classes, with 518 country women enrolled. Mrs. H. C. Inenfeldt was chairman of the nursing committee, under whose direction fell the health work.

In Disaster Relief, $1,250 was forwarded for the benefit of the sufferers from the Japanese earthquake in September, 1923; $3,200 was raised in Dunn County for the Dunn, Barron and Polk counties cyclone sufferers in June, 1922, the local relief work being under the direction of T. B. Wilson; $236.35 was contributed to the relief work in connection with the Illinois cyclone in 1925.

The Junior Red Cross was active during the war under the chairmanship of E. W. Waite and Theresa Leinenkugel. Since the war Earl Edes and W. G. Ballentine have been chairman for the county and city respectively. The funds are used for financing medical and surgical care for children whose parents are unable to do this. This branch of work has averaged ten cases per year.

The activities for the present year, 1925, include soldier and soldier family home service, and a monthly series of Free Chest Clinics. The Chapter is always in readiness for disaster relief, and co-operates with other existing agencies in the handling of civilian cases. Marion Ingalls.

The Dunn County News in its issue of Nov. 28, 1918, said:

"Dunn County in the recent war work campaign exceeded its quota by $2,482. The divisions that collected in the form of individual subscriptions during the campaign enough money to put them over the top were Hay River, the village of Colfax, the village of Downing, village of Elk Mound, village of Weston, Otter Creek, Sand Creek, town of Stanton and town of Tiffany. Towns in which appropriations were made by the town board to the amount of the allotments, or to make up deficiencies, were the towns of Colfax, Menomonie, Rock Creek and Spring Brook. Those in which levies were ordered by the county board to make up deficiencies were the towns of Dunn, Elk Mound, Eau Galle, Grant, Lucas, New Haven, Peru, Red Cedar, Sheridan, Sherman, Tainter and Weston. Stout Institute did especially well, subscribing $1400. Throughout the county exceptionally noteworthy work was done by women's organizations."

Dunn County was one of the comparatively few counties in the state to make good its quota of war savings stamps for 1918 before the close of the year and it did so handsomely. The quota—$508,400; sold—$514,180; surplus—$5,780.

In December the influenza, which had taken so heavy a toll, not only of the men in the army, but also the people at home, began to decrease, and with the dispersion of the clouds of war and pestilence the light of hope grew stronger and the people began to adjust themselves to the new conditions which confronted them—conditions caused by the war, involving the country in vast financial obligations and affecting all classes of society.

In the six and a half years that have since elapsed much has been done to repair war's ravages, but much still remains to be done and a large part of the burden must be transferred to the shoulders of the next generation. The present has its problems, which are strenuous enough, but the spirit of co-operation which has hitherto proved stronger than faction, and has held the American people together in a forward movement on lines of industry, patriotism, and good will toward the other nations of the earth, will doubtless prevail, and to the historian of the future will fall the task of recording more perfect victories and higher achievements than have been witnessed by those now living.

CHAPTER XVIII

CITY CHURCHES AND PARISHES

Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church.-According to previous histories of this region, it was the Episcopal Methodists who established the first religious congregation in Menomonie. The Rev. Chauncey Hobart, D. D., was the first man to represent the denomination in the upper Mississippi Valley, which included the Menomonie circuit in the Chippewa district, and the first meeting held here for divine service was in the summer of 1852. It was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Mayne under the direction of Mr. Hobart. Services were also held in the winters of 1854, 1855 and 1856 in the private schoolhouse of Knapp. Stout & Co., in the mills, by Rev. Joshua M. Pittmann, who, however, is said to have been a Baptist, so these may have been either Baptist or union services, no particular demonination being mentioned. In 1857 the Rev. Mr. Hobart was presiding elder for the Methodists, having charge of the Trempealeau, Eau Claire, Chippewa, Willow River, and Apple River circuits. Acting under his instructions, the Rev. S. Boles organized the Methodist Episcopal Church society at Menomonie in the fall of 1857. The Rev. J. L. Dyer had charge of a portion of the Chippewa Valley district in 1858, and in that year and subsequently meetings were held in the mills of Knapp, Stout & Co., among the pastors who conducted the services being the Revs. W. N. Darnley, J. Gurley, J. L. Dyer, and E. S. Hanens. In 1861 the Rev. J. B. Rey-nolds was pastor of the society. He was followed by the Revs. D. F. Knapp and W. Woodley. In 1864 the services were held in the schoolhouse in the village, and late in that year the preliminary steps were taken for the erection of a church building by the purchase of a lot for its site. The location was on Block 128, on the Wilson flat, between Broadway and Second Street West, the building when completed standing on the southwest corner of the block, and facing south. For some time previous to its occupation, however, the Methodists and Congregationalists conducted services on alternate Sundays in an old schoolhouse on Main Street, on the site that is now the north half of the Central schoolhouse grounds. The two societies conducted a union Sunday school. The Rev. W. Haw was the Methodist pastor in 1866, and under his direction, in association with W. Wilson and A. J. Messenger, the corner-stone of the church edifice was laid by the Rev. Bishop W. Thompson. The church was dedicated in the spring of 1867. For some time after its completion the Congregationalists held services in it every Sunday alternating morning and evening with the Methodists, until finally the latter desiring to have the full use of the building, the Congregational society left and sought another place of worship. At some time in the latter 70's, probably about 1877—the precise year not now being remembered—the church was moved to the present site on Wilson Avenue, and a new dedication took place. Under a succession of active and earnest pastors, the congregation grew, in spite of occasional financial stringency, until more commodious quarters became necessary. In the year 1900, therefore, the church was rebuilt by Contractor G. W. Pepper from plans prepared by Architect John Charles, and on Sunday, Jan. 20, 1901, another dedication took place, with appropriate ceremonies. The dedicatory sermon was preached in the morning by the Rev. Robert Forbes of Duluth, after which the financial needs of the church were presented (amounting to about $800). and an appeal made for aid, to which there was a liberal response. In the afternoon further ceremonies occurred, conducted by Presiding Elder Trimm of Chippewa Falls, assisted by the Rev. A. J. Davis, resident pastor, and other ministers. A largely attended meeting was held in the evening, conducted by Mr. Forbes, at which further contributions were made. The seating capacity of the remodeled building was 350, and in the local newspaper the building was described as "a beautiful structure, a credit to the society and to the city." As complete records.

are lacking, it has been found impossible to give a full list of all the pastors who have served this congregation. Among those who seem to have been pastors here at an early date were Rev. T. C. Golden, Rev. A. J. Davis, Rev. H. W. Bushnell, Rev. S. O. Brown, Rev. G. D. Brown, Rev. John W. Bell, Rev. E. S. Hanens, Rev. J. McClane and Rev. G. T. Newcome. Some of these may have served later than some of the following, the approximate time of whose pastorates have been ascertained, namely: Rev. S. S. Benedict (1870-1879), Rev. John Steele, 1879-1880), Rev. John B. Bachman (1886), Rev. J. D. Brothers, and Rev. James Evans, the last named assuming the duties of the pastorate in October, 1890. Among others who served later were the Revs. Mr. Marcellus, Mr. Beeks, Mr. Emery, Rev. James Coram and Rev. Mr. Dunn. Then came the Rev. Arthur Dinsdale, who served two years or more, and, after him, the Rev. James Benson, who served three or four years. The next pastor was the Rev. W. I. Lowe, and he was succeeded by the Rev. A. R. Klein, who preached his first sermon here Sept. 6, 1920, and who is still in charge. In 1922 the church edifice was rebuilt, only a small part of the original building being utilized. A pipe organ was installed, and on Sunday, Nov. 19, 1922, the church was rededicated, the Rev. A. R. Klein, D. D., presiding, and the dedicatory sermon being preached by Rev. Roy P. Smith of Simpson M. E. Church, Minneapolis. There was a choir of 30 voices and the new pipe organ was used for the first time. In the evening the speaker was Rev. Dr. J. W. Irish of Madison. On Monday evening an organ recital was given by Charles C. Kirk as a part of the dedicatory exercises. The present membership of Centenary M. E. Church is 305, but over 500 attend the services. There is a choir of 30 voices. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 308. There are several active societies, including: The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; the Standard Bearers, a missionary society of young people; the Light Bearers, a missionary society of younger people; and the Epworth League, which has a membership of about one hundred. The church has one mission, the Methodist Church at Cedar The congregation of this mission is an old one, and, so far as now remem-Falls. bered, has been served from Menomonie from the beginning. The building will seat 113 and in summer there is a good attendance, the services being held from 9:00 to 10:00 a. m., while in winter they are held in the afternoon. The membership is about thirty.

First Congregational Church.-On Feb. 17, 1861, a meeting of citizens of Menomonie was held in Newman Hall (known later as the Knapp, Stout & Co.'s land office) for the purpose of organizing a Congregational church and society. Lorenzo Bullard was chairman and S. B. French secretary of the meeting, and by unanimous vote the society was named "The First Congregational Church and Society of Menomonie." The first members were the Rev. P. Canfield, Mrs. P. Canfield, H. C. Brunelle, Mrs. Orella Shorey and Mrs. Eliza E. Malcome. Before a notary public on March 6, at their second meeting, the officers were elected and steps were taken for the proper organization according to the state laws, and on March 10, the constitution and by-laws presented were accepted and signed by 23 The church was regularly organized by the Chippewa Valley District persons. Convention of Ministers and delegates on Dec. 28, 1861, adopting the articles of faith and covenant taken from the year book of 1859 and held in common by many churches at that time. The church continued to use Newman Hall until arrangements were made to occupy an old schoolhouse located on Main Street (on the north half of the Central School grounds) where services were held every other Sunday, the congregation alternating with the Methodists, and the two societies having a union Sunday school. Through the generosity of Knapp, Stout & Co., a house was built in 1862 for the pastor's use, and was called the Congregational The Rev. Philo Canfield, who had been instrumental in organizing parsonage. the church, terminated his pastorate on May 17, 1863, during which time six members had been added to it. For 18 months thereafter the people were unable to hold religious services. However, the Rev. J. C. Sherwin of West Salem, Wis., was with them occasionally, and he recommended the Rev. J. P. Imes, who became pastor here in December, 1864. As Mr. Imes' religious opinions, however, were more in accordance with those of the Baptist denomination, in which the people declined to follow him, he remained here less than a year. His attitude greatly distressed and humiliated Mr. Sherwin because he had recommended him. In 1865 the church was admitted to the St. Croix Valley Association of Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, and was represented at the National Council of Congregational Churches at Boston by the Rev. George Spaulding of Hammond, After the departure of Mr. Imes the people were able to hold services only Wis. on occasions when it was possible to have with them either the Rev. George Spaulding or the Rev. A. Kidder of Eau Claire, Wis., until in the spring of 1868 they persuaded the Rev. Mr. Sherwin to leave his church at West Salem, Wis., and take charge of the work in Menomonie. At some time in the two-year period that elapsed between the departure of Mr. Imes and the acceptance of the pastorate by Mr. Sherwin a church edifice was erected, the people of the village in general helping in the work. It was supposed by many to be a union church, but when it was dedicated in the spring of 1867 it was called the M. E. Church. The Rev. Mr. Sherwin, however, held Congregational services in it every Sunday for some time, alternating with the Methodist pastor until the Methodists decided to occupy the pulpit exclusively. This put the Congregationalists to the necessity of seeking a new place of worship, which they found in an old carpenter shop that was also being used for school purposes (the old schoolhouse having been burned) and which was in a very dilapidated condition; but they continued to hold services there until the cold weather drove them to the warmer quarters of the Menomonie House hall, at that time the only hall in the village. With the lapse of years there had been a considerable growth in the membership, and in June, 1869, the society was reorganized and several amendments made to the original constitution. In July of the same year it was decided to erect a house of worship on the lots now occupied by the H. E. Knapp residence, which were donated by Knapp, Stout & The building was commenced immediately but was not completed until the Co. fall of 1870. For nearly ten years the people had been struggling with difficulties, having to hold services in almost any kind of sanctuary, sometimes at the home of a member, and for a part of the time having had no pastor; the completion of their first church edifice, therefore, was an event that was hailed with great jov. Ill health forced the Rev. Mr. Sherwin to leave the pastorate after eight years of faithful work, in which he had won the esteem of all who were associated with him, and had increased the membership of the church by more than 100. On August 18, 1875, the work was taken up by his successor, the Rev. A. McMasters, during whose pastorate, which lasted four years, new rules and regulations for the church government were drafted and accepted. Mr. McMasters, who was a very able minister, also advocated the removal of the church building to some place more centrally located, but the people were not yet ready to take such a radical step. He preached his farewell sermon on Aug. 9, 1879. Answering a call, the Rev. Henry Ketchum of Wolfboro, N. H., preached his first sermon on Aug. 16 as pastoral candidate, and by the unanimous vote of the congregation was elected pastor for one year, to commence in September, 1879. Coming to his work in Menomonie in the strength of vigorous youth and manhood, Mr. Ketchum inspired the congregation with new life, which brooked no interference in its onward march and recognized no limit to the measure of success the church might attain. He, also, like Mr. McMasters, advocated the removal of the church building to a more central location, and this time the suggestion met with approval and was acted on. Four lots were secured where the church and parsonage are now locatedcorner of Wilson Avenue and Fifth Street-and the building having been moved in the fall of 1880, the first services at the new location were held on June 16 the same year. The attendance was greatly increased on account of this central location, and about two years later, on consideration that the church build an annex to be used as a prayer room and study. and paint the building, Mr. Knapp built and gave them a parsonage. The Rev. Mr. Ketchum not only increased the membership but seemed to bring the members of not only the church but of the allied societies closer together. In 1887 he tendered his resignation, which, however, was not then accepted. In the next year he again tendered it, and as this time his decision could not be changed, it was accepted and he terminated his pastorate on Feb. 15, 1888, after a service here of eight and a half years. The Rev. S. S. Hebberd, who answered the call on April 15 the same year, was a scholarly gentleman who did especially good work among the young people. He remained two years and was succeeded on July 1. 1890, by the Rev. James W. White. In order to do more effective work, because the membership of the church had grown to be large, and the work had expanded, the Rev. Mr. White advanced the idea of building a new church with greater facilities, which was met with enthusiasm, and owing to the generosity of two of the lady members, the people were enabled to erect a beautiful church edifice that was dedicated June 1, 1902 and is still in use. It will seat 600 people. Mr. White remained in Menomonie as pastor of the First Congregational Church for 11 years and five months, during which time the church not only grew in numbers but gained a splendid reputation, as he was a very effective minister who instructed and led his congregation in and to higher views of Christian life. Under the leadership of Rev. R. L. Breed, who succeeded Mr. White in November, 1901, the congregation made amendments to their by-laws, arranged a new system of record keeping, and changed the order of services. An address given to the society in January, 1903, by the Rev. J. W. Frizzell of the First Congregational Church of Eau Claire, Wis., on "The Opportunities of the Church of Today." was very instructive and aided the people in their subsequent work. The annual state convention of Congregational Churches met in Menomonie for the first time in October, 1903, nearly 300 ministers and delegates being present. In 1904 amendments were again made to the regulations, uniting with the church the allied societies, of which there were quite a number, each having a large membership. After four years of successful work, Mr. Breed resigned, preaching his farewell sermon on Nov. 1, 1905, and after hearing several excellent ministers, the church on Dec. 7, that year, extended a call to the Rev. Lathrop C. Grant of Eau Claire, who began his pastorate here Jan. 7, 1906. Mr. Grant was an able and persuasive orator and proved an earnest worker on behalf of the congregation. As a stout and aggressive foe of the liquor evil he rendered valuable service to his fellowmen. He remained here until about the end of the year 1914, and for about eight months after his departure the church had no pastor, but had to depend on outside supplies. During that period some able ministers preached here, but the need of a regular pastor for advancing the work of the church and society was strongly felt, and finally the services of the Rev. Arthur E. Westenberg were secured. He assumed charge on August 1, 1915, and has remained to the present time. His work has been earnest and effective and under his direction good progress has been made. In 1924 the interior of the church edifice was re-The full membership of the church is now about 250, of whom 185 decorated. are resident members. There is a large Sunday school and several active societies, including: the Christian Endeavor, organized some 30 to 35 years ago; the Woman's Auxiliary, corresponding to a ladies' aid society, which under one form or another has been in existence many years and was formerly known as the Social Circle; the Woman's Missionary Society, and the Scritsmier Club, the last mentioned being intended to include all the young men and high school boys who have ever belonged to the Sunday school. The parsonage, a commodious and thoroughly modern residence, is situated on a lot adjoining the church on its south side. It is owned by the society and has been in use in its present condition for the last 18 years.

Immanuel Baptist Church.—The origin of this congregation was a series of meetings held in Menomonie in the winter of 1861 by Rev. Amasa Gale, a Baptist minister, which aroused considerable interest in the denomination. In the following year the Rev. Morgan Edwards conducted meetings and baptized a number of converts to this faith. As a result the Menomonie First Baptist Church was organized in December, 1864, with ten members. Occasional services were held and in October, 1866, the Rev. W. W. Ames began his duties here as pastor. About the same time L. L. Larkham became a member and was chosen first deacon;

Gerard Orderman, second deacon; and H. Hanford, clerk. Under these officers the church reorganized. The congregation differed from the majority of the Baptist churches in the West, in that they held to the sentiments of the denomination in the northern states in the time of the anti-masonic movement which followed the supposed abduction and murder of William Morgan, after his alleged exposure in 1828 of the secrets of free-masonry. Mr. Ames had resolved during his previous pastorate never to serve a church which would not disfellowship members of secret organizations. Ultimately, through his influence, this church was organized against all forms of secret association. In 1868 a mission Sunday school was formed at Sherburne Prairie and in the following year a chapel was built there. In 1868 Capt. William Wilson became a member of the church, and in 1869 a Sunday school was established in the hall at the works of Knapp, Stout & Co., with Captain Wilson as superintendent. He built and furnished a fine edifice for the First Baptist Church, which was dedicated March 12, 1871, by Rev. J. W. Fish, and which is said on good authority to have cost about $17,000. Captain Wilson gave the organization the use of the building on the condition that it continued to retain the same listinctive principles which had been adopted previous to his becoming a member. On the day of dedication he told the congregation that he intended to deed the property to the church on the same conditions as soon as the organization was in a position to maintain it free from debt. The announcement of this intention greatly increased and strengthened the opposing influences which had always operated against the church from various sources. But the chief factor in those influences was the position of the church against secretism. It resulted in the depletion of the numerical strength of the association by the withdrawal of 18 members under the leadership of Rev. C. K. Colver, who was the pastor for one year, 1873-74, immediately after the close of Mr. Ames' pastorate. (The latter, Rev. Ames. was again pastor of the original church in 1878). The majority of the seceding members formed a new organization known as the Olivet Baptist Church, which discarded the anti-secret resolution that had been adopted in the First Church. This new association ceased to exist in 1886, and the İmmanuel B: otist Church was then organized, with 30 members, by Rev. W. A. McKillop of Eau The first pastor of this congregation was the Rev. A. C. Blackman, who Claire. served three years, and was followed by Rev. John McGuire, a student pastor from Rochester Theological Seminary, who remained a few months. The pastorate was then vacant until the appointment of Rev. S. A. Abbott on Jan. 1, 1891, except that S. E. Price, another theological student, preached occasionally in the interim between regular pastors. The early meetings were held in a hall over the hardware store of John Edwards & Son, on Main Street, Mr. Edwards being one of the deacons. About 1892 Immanuel Baptist Church erected a church building near the corner of Eleventh and Elizabeth Streets-the latter street being now known as Thirteenth Avenue. There they worshipped until 1914 or 1915, when the building was moved to its present location, at the corner of Broadway and Fifteenth Avenue, and at the same time it was enlarged and improved, an outside brown stucco finish being put on. The new site was donated by Deacon Goodson, who also gave a frame house which stood on it for a parsonage, this house, which stood on Broadway, being moved back on the lot to its present position just east of the church. The pastor who succeeded the Rev. S. A. Abbott was Rev. Henry A. Buell, who preached his trial sermon on October, 1913, and after being called to the pastorate, remained here until he resigned on Nov. 2, 1916. Then the Rev. J. B. Reynolds received a call and, having accepted, remained for a year. His successor was the Rev. P. C. Hanson, who was called in the spring of 1919, and while he was pastor the parsonage was improved by the addition of an outside stucco finish, making it to harmonize in appearance with the church. The next pastor, C. E. O'Beirne, accepting a call extended to him in April, 1921, remained in charge for two years, after which, there being no pastor for a year, no services were held. Then the congregation engaged the services of Rev. J. E. Kess, who assumed the duties of the pastorate in May, 1924, and is still serving. At present the church has 54 members; the Sunday school about 60, with an average attendance of 43. The Ladies' Union is active in ladies' aid work. There are two missions also served by the Menomonie pastor: one near Rusk, which was established in March, 1905, and which has a fair sized frame building; and the other at Otter Creek, which was organized five or six years ago and has a frame building with a good basement. The membership of both these missions is small, but the Otter Creek mission has many supporters. With respect to the subsequent history of the original, or First Baptist, church, the conditions imposed by Captain Wilson when he donated the church property, not having been fulfilled, on his death in 1892, both the building and site passed to his daughter, Mrs. James Stout. Mr. Stout wanted the lot for a part of the site of the Stout Institute-it is now the site of the gymnasium—and Mrs. Stout offered to give the church edifice to the society if they would move it to another location. This they agreed to do, and engaged a man to do the moving. Being in poor financial condition, however, they were unable to pay the contractor, and he accordingly sold the building to get his money. It was moved to the corner of Sixth Street and Twelfth Avenue, where it stands today, having been converted into a residence. The pipe organ which the church possessed is said to be now in use in St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church of Menomonie. A fine baptismal font, which was one of the fittings, disappeared and its present whereabouts-if it is in existence-is not known...

St. Joseph's Parish.—The first priest to hold services for the Catholics in and about Menomonie was Father Smedding of Chippewa Falls, who came here for occasional visits as early as 1861. It was in that year that a small frame church was erected at Menomonie, the site being given by Knapp, Stout & Co. A loca-tion for the rectory was donated by Peter Lammer, a member of the parish. Fa-thers Fagan and Nicolay attended St. Joseph's Church as a mission of Chippewa Falls until 1871. It was then that the F. Keller, residing at Eau Galle, built the first parish residence but left before its completion. After him Father Michel took up his residence at Menomonie, remaining until 1878. He was succeeded by the Rev. M. Heiss, who was pastor until 1882. The next pastor to take charge was the German Baron, Constantine Von Droste, under whose administration a new church was begun, which, however, was severely damaged by a storm before being completed. Rev. Louis Lay, appointed pastor in 1885, finished the new His place was taken in 1887 by the Rev. Dr. S. Rohr, who remained until 1889. Father Louis Kaluza was appointed pastor in 1889 and served the parish until 1892. Under his pastorate much was done toward its upbuilding. The church was veneered, a sanctuary and sacristy were added to the building, and a set of three altars were procured through the efforts of that pastor, who gave much of his slender means for the accomplishment of the work. The greatest merit of Father Kaluza consisted in opening St. Joseph's School in 1890. As the first school building, the old church was used. Father Kaluza turned over his own residence to the sisters, he himself living in a room temporarily added to the sacristy. Father A. J. Joerres succeeded Father Kaluza in 1892. He remained at Menomonie until 1897, in which year Father J. T. Volz assumed the pastorate. Under the latter's administration a new school was started in 1901. In the same year the church was destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt in the following year in practically the same place as the old church, the new structure, however, being a solid brick building. A substantial rectory was erected in 1905 at a cost of $6000. The Rev. J. B. Hauck was appointed pastor of St. Joseph's parish in 1907. As it was found that the school did not meet modern requirements, a new building was The cost of the new school amounted to $18,700, a very moderate cost to the parish for a fine modern building. In 1914 the Rev. A. J. Dorrenbach was given charge of St. Joseph's parish. The debt of $6,000 still remaining on the school was paid off in 1915. The following year the old school building was re-modeled into the present St. Joseph's Convent at the cost of $6,000. The old sister's house was removed and the premises were improved and beautified. The church was entirely redecorated in 1920, at a cost of $2,500, Mr. Hy. Gartner being the artist. At present the parish numbers somewhat over 200 families. The school is attended by 125 children. Four teaching sisters have charge of the school, and an additional teacher conducts the nusic department. The present trustees of the parish are Messrs. John Cramer, Jr., J. W. Styer, C. O. Govin and W. J. Myers. The parish has four societies, two of a strictly religious nature and two of the social and insurance type. The former are the Ladies' Altar Society, headed by Mrs. C. Finney, and the Men's Holy Name Union, presided over by George Belair; the latter, the Knights of Columbus and the Knights of Wisconsin. The Knights of Columbus, Council 2055, were organized in the parish five years ago, the membership being 150 and Mr. Herman Born acting grand knight. The Knights of Wisconsin have been in existence at Menomonie as Branch 135 since 1892. The number of members at present is 112, John Lammer being president.

Grace Episcopal Church has a history which covers more than half a century. It is said that Episcopal services were held in the village as early as 1870, but it was not until two years later that the church was organized, after application had been made, Sept. 1, 1872, to Bishop Armitage of Milwaukee. The first officers elected were: Robert Macauley, warden; E. B. Bundy, treasurer; and E. H. Weber, secretary. Mrs. Robert Macauley, Mrs. E. H. Weber, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Barwise, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Mathews and Mr. and Mis. A. P. Davis were also among the original members. Until 1874 the congregation was under the pastoral care of Rev. R. F. G. Page of Eau Claire and became an active Christian organization. A lot was purchased in March, 1873. In September, 1874, the Rev. P. B. Morrison was appointed missionary pastor, and the corner-stone of the church was laid by him on June 10, 1875, assisted by the Rev. M. L. Kern of Chippewa Falls. On July 1, 1875, the Rev. W. H. H. Ross was appointed missionary and the first resident pastor, and in the following October the church-a brick structure-was completed, services being held in it Oct. 10 by Rt. Rev. E. R. Welles, assisted by the Revs. P. B. Morrison and W. H. H. Ross. As all the church's records are not now in possession of the society, some difficulty has been experienced in procuring a complete list of the successive pastors in their proper order, in particular for the period between 1880 and 1888—but after patient inquiry and investigation, the list as here given is believed to be substantially correct. The Rev. M. L. Kern took charge of the mission in 1876 and remained until October, 1877. During the next three or four years it was served by the Rev. C. D. Mack, Rev. O. E. Ostensen, Rev. Ammi M. Lewis (who died here after a brief pastorate), and Rev. E. R. Sweetland. The last mentioned, who assumed charge in July, 1879, was reappointed by the Bishop for another year in July, 1880. In April, 1881, he left and Sweetland. that year the Rev. M. L. Kern became rector again and officiated as such for five years, or until his death on July 7, 1886. In May, 1882, the church was reconsecrated, or rededicated by Bishop Wells and assisting priets, probably after some changes or renovations had been made in the building. After the Rev. Mr. Kern, the Rev. C. R. D. Crittenden seems to have been rector for a year or so, the Rev. Charles H. Hartman being appointed in April, 1888. In that year a parsonage was built at a cost of $1300. It was a frame building situated just south of the church on Sixth Street, and is still standing, though now rented out. After a brief pastorate the Rev. Mr. Hartman left and Mr. A. A. Miller, lay reader, conducted the services for about a year, or until the appointment as rector of the Rev. E. E. Edwards in 1890. Mr. Edwards, with Robert Macauley, as a committee of two, drafted a plan to improve the church, and while the work was in progress services were held in the court house. For a number of years the ladies of the church, organized as the Grace Mission Church Society, were very helpful in promoting the welfare and prosperity of the church by holding fairs and giving other entertainments in order to raise funds. In 1891 the Menomonie mission petitioned to be made a parish and the petition was granted. In the following year electric lights were installed, the old chandeliers being taken out and donated to the Episcopal church at Knapp. In the same year, 1892, the Rev. E. E. Edwards left and Rev. A. V. Gorrell took his place, remaining as pastor until 1893. A call was then extended to Rev. James Simonds, who became rector in that year. In the fall of 1894 he resigned, his successor, in 1895, being Dr. S. H. Meade. About that time a wing was built on to the south side of the church to be used as a guild hall. Dr.

Meade's pastorate was short, as in 1895 the Rev. W. B. Thorne of Winter Rock, Fla., became rector. In 1898 the death of E. H. Weber deprived the church of one of its best workers. He was one of the owners of the Dunn County News and a man of influence in the community. The Rev. W. B. Thorne left in 1899 and was succeeded by the Rev. W. A. Dennis, who remained until 1903. A call was then extended to the Rev. C. W. Turner, who became rector in 1904 and served the parish until 1909. In January, 1910, the Rev. Phillip Reed assumed the office of rector, but left in the same year. He was succeeded by the Rev. E. E. Williams and in the latter's pastorate, in 1911, a hot air heating plant was installed in the rectory. In 1913 Mrs. E. E. Bundy, who was a very devoted worker in the parish, offered to pay off one half the standing indebtedness if the parish would raise the other half. This was done and the debt cleared off. In July, 1914, Rev. E. E. Williams resigned and the Rev. W. H. Wolfe of Eau Claire, took charge of the services. He was then a deacon, but was ordained to the priesthood in Menomonie in November, that year, by Bishop W. W. Webb of Milwaukee. Soon after that he came here to live and remained pastor until 1918. While he was in charge the church edifice was burned, on Sunday, Jan. 16, 1915, the fire, which started in the basement, being discovered about 8 o'clock in the morning. It was very cold weather—about 20 below zero—and the firemen worked hard till well along in the afternoon but little was left of the building save the walls. There was an insurance of $3700 on the building, of $900 on the contents, and $200 additional on the piano. An offer of the use of Memorial Hall as a temporary place of worship, made by the Rev. C. F. Niles on behalf of the Unitarian Society, was accepted. Plans were soon under way for a new church, which was built on the same lot and is the edifice now in use. No guildhall was built but a good basement was put in and supplied with a kitchen. The Rev. Mr. Wolf remained here until the church was completed, and after he left the Rev. E. E. Williams returned, the congregation establishing themselves in their new church. In 1918 the Rev. M. G. Argus succeeded Mr. Williams and remained until 1920, after which, for about a year, Mr. O. A. Carlson, lay reader, conducted the services. Then Rev. A. B. Dimick was rector for awhile and after him the Rev. A. H. Head, the latter leaving in the fall of 1923. On May 11, 1924, the Rev. Horatio Gates assumed the duties of priest in charge and has since remained. At present (March, 1925) the church has 60 communicants, with a confirmation class of 14 soon to become members. The number of supporters and contributors amounts to about 80. The societies now active are: the Woman's Guild; the Woman's Auxiliary, a missionary society; the Girls' Friendly Society; the Servers' Guild, composed of young boys who serve at the altar; and the Altar Guild. In addition there is a well attended Sunday school.

First Evangelical Church.-The origin of this congregation dates back about 65 years, to the year 1860, when a number of families came from Pennsylvania to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and met for worship in the home of Peter Sippel at Iron Creek. In that year and in 1861 the congregation was served by the Rev. J. Rapkopf from Buffalo County, his period of service lasting for one year. In 1861 Dunn County and what is named in the church records as "Chippewa Falls County" were united under the name of the Chippewa Mission, and the Rev. Herman Bunse, who was placed in charge, visited Iron Creek once a month, coming from Minnesota. In 1863 the Rev. F. Emde succeeded the Rev. Mr. Bunse as pastor in charge of the mission, and in that year the first church edifice of the Iron Creek congregation was built. In 1864 the Rev. C. F. Zimmermann was attached to the Chippewa Falls and Dunn County Mission and served until 1865. He was succeeded by the Rev. William Pfefferkorn, who, like other pastors during this period, preached both in the church and in the homes of the people. After him, in 1867, came the Rev. F. Asman, the above mentioned and following pastors assuming charge usually within two weeks after the conference, which was held in April. The next pastor, 1868-1869, was the Rev. F. Stroebel, and it was in 1869, when he was pastor, that the mission, having become self-supporting, was changed into the Dunn County Circuit, and the Iron Creek congregation built a parsonage. In 1870-1872 the pastor was the Rev. Matthew Wittenwyler, and after him there came in succession the Rev. Peter Spich, 1873-1874; and Rev. M. C. Werner, 1875-1877. It was in the latter year, 1876, that a church edifice was built in Menomonie, which was known as Zion Church of the Evangelical Association, and which was situated at the corner of Seventh and Balsam streets, the latter street being now known as Eleventh Avenue. The dedication of the new edifice took place on Nov. 26, 1876, the ceremonies being presided over by Bishop R. Dubs of Cleveland, Ohio. At that time the congregation probably had about 40 members. In 1877 this field was organized as the Menomonie Circuit and included the churches at Menomonie, Iron Creek, Elk Mound and a congregation in the town of Tainter, in the southeast corner of the town, and close to the line separating that town from the town of Red Cedar. In 1879 the Rev. J. P. Viel became pastor and served two years. The next pastor, 1879-1880, was the Rev. C. F. Reichert and according to a custom which prevailed at that time and for many years afterward, he had an assistant, who was the Rev. William Detert. The Rev. David Sneider assumed the pastorate in 1881, with F. Moser as assistant. In 1882 the Rev. F. Moser became the regular pastor and served the field in that year and in 1883. In 1884 the pastor assigned to the Menomonie Circuit was the Rev. William Pfefferkorn, and in that year the annual conference was held in Menomonie. The pastor placed in charge in 1886 was the Rev. C. F. Finger, and he remained until the spring of 1889. Then came the Rev. H. Clement, 1889-1892; Rev. G. Friedrich, 1893-1894; Rev. A. F. Haberman, 1895-1897; and Rev. J. I. Seder, 1897-1900. While the Rev. Mr. Seder was pastor the Iron Creek congregation erected their second church edifice, a frame building. His successor was the Rev. F. J. Siewert, 1900-1904; after whom came the Rev. R. Eilert, 1904-1907; then the Rev. Phillip Schneider, who served from 1908 to 1911, and in whose pastorate the present parsonage at No. 1215 Seventh Street, was built at a cost of about $5,000. The previous parsonage, on Sixth Street, had been purchased. From 1913 to 1916 the Rev. R. Eilert was again pastor, being succeeded by the Rev. W. L. Lembke, who served from 1916 to 1920. The latter was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. B. J. Diekvoss, who has remained in charge. In 1923 plans were laid for the present church edifice, the site was excavated in October, that year, and on June 6, 1924, the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies by the Rev. W. G. Radetz. On Dec. 9, 1924, the church was dedicated by Bishop L. H. Seager, D. D, from Le Mars, Iowa, assisted by the presiding elder, the Rev. W. G. Radetz, and the pastor of the church, a number of other pastors being present. The building, which was erected at a cost of $57,000, is a fine brick structure, 109 feet in length, with an average breadth of about 50 feet, the front being 60 feet in width. The church is beautified by stained glass windows, some of which were donated as memorial windows by members of the congregation; Mr. and Mrs. P. Kraft donating one, Mr. and Mrs. William Foster one, C. C. Wieman two, Mrs. Arthur Schaefer one in memory of her husband, Mrs. William Albright one and Mrs. Fred Blume one; and another was donated by Gilbert Pfefferkorn, Mrs. S. P. Kraft and Mrs. John Kothlow in memory of their father and mother, Rev. and Mrs. William Pfefferkorn (see list of pastors). A pipe organ about to be installed will be donated by the Kraft brothers-Samuel, William and John-in memory of their father and mother. The present membership of the church is 160; that of the Sunday school, 190. The auxiliary societies are the Ladies' Aid, with a membership of 35; the Woman's Missionary Society, also about 35; and the Christian Endeavor League, composed of young people, with a membership of about 54. Up to about seven years ago the four congregations previously mentioned-those of Menomonie, Elk Mound, Iron Creek and Tainterwere members of the Menomonie Circuit; but they were then divided into two circuits or districts as at present, one being composed of Elk Mound and Iron Creek and the other of Menomonie and Tainter. The last mentioned, therefore, is also served by the pastor of the church in Menomonie. Since this change was made there have been no assistant pastors, and the services have been conducted entirely in English.

German Methodist Episcopal Church.-This congregation was organized in 1864, but nothing is known of its activities during the first four years. The existing records begin with the date of Oct. 19, 1863, when the First Quarterly Conference was held in the home of John Quirling (now spelled Quilling) in the town of Spring Brook. At that time, when a formal organization seems to have taken place, John Quirling, Nicholas Kock and Ernest Bublitz are mentioned as the first trustees, and Rev. Friedrich as district superintendent or presiding elder. The Rev. Adam Mueller was pastor. In the following year a church edifice was erected at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Second Street West-the location now occupied by the Menomonie Welding Works-and a parsonage built the same year south of the church. During the pastorate of the Rev. William Hildebrandt (1872-1875) the parsonage and lot were sold and the church moved to the present location, corner of Tenth Avenue and Eighth Street (at that time Sixth Avenue and Spruce Street), a new parsonage being built on the south side of the church. In 1878. in the pastorate of the Rev. Daniel Pfaff, the old church was torn down and the present one built, which seats about 200 people. In 1897 the parsonage was sold and the present one built at 1002 Ninth Street. The list of pastors who have served this congregation is as follows: Rev. Adam Mueller, October, 1867 to September, 1870; Rev. Henry Singenstrue, September, 1870 to October, 1872; Rev. William Hildebrandt, October, 1872 to October, 1875; Rev. Charles Schoenheider, Sr., October, 1875 to October, 1877; Rev. Daniel Pfaff, October, 1877 to October, 1880; Rev. William Pomerenke, October, 1880, to October, 1882; Rev. John Nieppold, September, 1882 to September, 1883; Rev. Christian Nachtrieb, September, 1883 to October, 1886; Rev. August Biebighaeuser, October, 1886 to October, 1891; Rev. George Goess, October, 1891 to October, 1896; Rev. F. J. Wiegand, October, 1896 to October, 1900; Rev. C. A. Borchardt, October, 1900 to October, 1906; Rev. William E. Baumgarten, October, 1906 to October, 1910; Rev. Carl Krueger, October, 1910 to September, 1913; Rev. Friedrich Brinkmann, September, 1913 to January, 1920; (The Rev. Mr. Brinkmann having died while pastor here, E. W. Gehrke, a local preacher, served the congregation until October, 1920); Rev. John F. Steiner, October, 1920 to Octover, 1922; Rev. Henry Potthoff served one year, 1922-1923; Rev. F. C. Schulz, from September, 1923 to the present The church was at its highest point of membership and activity during the time. pastorate of the Rev. A. Biebighaeuser. During the Rev. C. A. Borchardt's time there was an Epworth League of 28 members. The Rev. F. J. Wiegand started a mission in the town of Spring Brook; and while Rev. William E. Baumgarten was pastor a church was built there (about two miles southeast of the village of Elk Mound), which is served by the pastor of the Menomonie church. About eight families belong to this rural congregation, and a Sunday school and Ladies' Aid Society are maintained. The combined membership of the two churches is about 85; that of the two Sunday schools, 53. The Menomonie church has a Ladies' Aid Society of 22 members. The relatively small Sunday school in Menomonie, which numbers but 19 or 20, and the abandonment of the Epworth League, are due to several causes; one being that many of the young people of the church have left the city to seek employment elsewhere, while others prefer to attend services conducted in the English language; also to war conditions, and to the merging of the Northern German Conference with the English Conference. From 1880 to 1886 the Menomonie pastors also preached at Deer Park; and also in former years two other small missions were served from the Menomonie church, one of which was in the Lierman settlement in the town of Lucas, about seven miles from Menomonie. Neither had a church building.

First Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church, Menomonie.—The first service by a Norwegian Lutheran pastor in Menomonie was held in 1859 by Prof. Dr. Laur. Larsen, who was at that time preacher at Rush River, Pierce County, Wis. Regular services were held first in 1867 by Rev. K. Thorstensen, at that time pastor for Froen, Little Elk Creek and adjoining congregations. Existing records show that seven services were held in Menomonie in 1867. After service in a schoolhouse on the west side of Red Cedar River on Oct. 27, that year, the question of effecting a regular organization in Menomonie was discussed but was not definitely decided until a meeting had been held after service on Dec. 15. The organization of "The First Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Congregation in Menomonie, Dunn County, Wis." was effected Jan. 23, 1868, and a constitution was adopted. The Rev. K. Thorstensen, called as pastor of Little Elk Creek and Cranberry Creek, also served the congregations of Baerum, near Elk Mound, Lyster in Bufialo County, Holden at Eighteen Mile Creek, near Colfax, Bonnet Valley in Buffalo County, Bloomer Prairie, Sand Creek, Solum at Prairie Farm, Barron County, and Menomonie. A contribution of $484 having been received or collected, the congregation joined with the German Lutherans in the upkeep of a church edifice, which was dedicated on Sept. 19, 1871. Already in May, 1874, the congregation had purchased its own lot. In March, 1875, the German congregation bought the Norwegians' interest in the church but gave the Norwegians the privilege of using it for four years longer if they desired, but in 1877 the Norwegian Lutherans built a church of their own. In connection with a preacher's conference held in Eau Claire, Oct. 10 to 17, 1877, three churches were dedicated: one in Eau Claire on Sunday, Oct. 14, the church at Little Elk Creek on Thursday forenoo.1, Oct. 10, and the Menomonie church in the afternoon of the came day. Prof. Laur. Larsen delivered the dedicatory sermon here. The church edifice, 32x50 feet in ground plan, and with furnishings, but without the tower, cost $3,400, with a debt of $800. The Rev. I. L. P. Dietrichson was at that time pastor of the congregation. No particular changes were made in the church building until D. Kvasse was pastor. In 1895 a basement was put under it and a furnace installed. The year 1897 saw the installation of electric lights, and in 1898 the church was changed inside and out, by building a tower, a choir room, a sacristy, gallery, new altar and new seats, also decorating it. Owing to these extensive changes, which made it look like a new church, it was rededicated by President V. Koren on Sept. 25, 1898. In 1906 a pipe organ was put in by the Young People's Society and in 1909 a bell was purchased. The first pastor who visited the congregation lived in the Little Creek parsonage, in which this congregation had proprietary rights. In 1891 the Froen congregation, together with Baerum congregation, bought two lots, and the house which was located back of the church, for $1,100. In 1893 the house was rebuilt and it continued to serve as a parsonage until the present one was built in 1915, which cost about $7,000. In a historical sketch of the church written a few years ago by Rev. E. C. Haavik, he remarked: "In the 50 years that the congregation has been in existence it has been connected with Froen congregation, from which it also has received valuable aid and cooperation.'

The congregations which now stand in connection with Menomonie, aside from Froen, the history of which is sketched elsewhere in this volume, are Our Saviour's Church at Varney Creek and St. John's Church in North Menomonie. The following pastors have served the congregation: K. Thorstensen, 1868-1874; H. G. J. Krogh, 1875-1876; I. L. P. Dietrichson, 1876-1879; P. A. Dietrichson, 1879-1889; K. Seehuus, 1889; T. K. Thorvilson, 1889-1892; D. Kvanse, 1892-1912; E. C. Haavik, 1912 to the present time. The first trustees were: Christian Johnson, Syver Syverson and A. Amundson; assistants, Karl P. Knutson and O. Ohnstad; secretary and treasurer, A. Amundson; choir leader and Sunday school superintendent, Elling Larson. The Ladies' Aid Society was organized in 1875 with Mrs. Francisca Young as first president. Mrs. A. H. Johnson was president for the Ladies' Aid Society in 1877, and served with faithfulness and much capacity for 28 years until 1905. The Young People's Society was organized in 1875. The Young Girls' Society was organized in 1898 by Mrs. D. Kvaase. Fram, a men's society, was organized in November, 1913, with P. P. Graven as president. At one time the congregation had a band led by F. W. Micheels. The congregation joined the synod of the Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church in America at the annual meeting held in Holden church in Goodhue County, Minnesota, in 1874. On June 9, 1917, in the city of St. Paul, occurred the consolidation of the three Norwegian Lutheran church bodies—the Hauge Norwegian Lutheran Synod founded in 1846, the Synod for the Norwegian Lutheran Churches organized in 1853, and the United Lutheran Church started in 1890. The natural effect of this union was to bring together the local congregations and unify local work. In the fall of 1918 committees representing the local congregations were elected for the purpose of effecting local union; that is, the union of the Menomonie churches and those in the surrounding territory depending on service from the Menomonie In the city of Menomonie proper there were two Norwegian Lutheran pastors congregations, one being the Synod congregation, known as the First Norwegian Lutheran Church, and the other a United Lutheran congregation; and in North Menomonie there were also two, one of each of the above mentioned branches. The synod church edifice in North Menomonie was built about 1885, and the United Lutheran edifice a little before that. Each of these congregations elected a committee of five members and the four committees met and agreed on articles of incorporation and on the consolidation in each place of the two divergent branches into a single congregation. Thus in Menomonie the United Lutherans and the First Norwegian Lutheran body were merged into one congregation, which took the name of "Our Saviour's Lutheran Church," to which was also attached for pastoral service and control the Mamre United Lutheran Congregation (located five miles west of Menomonie); while in North Menomonie a union occurred between the Synod church, known as St. John's, and the United Lutheran congregattion, to this consolidated church being joined a third congregation known as the Tramway Norwegian Lutheran Church, these three congregations after their union taking the name of "The Norwegian Lutheran Church of North Menomonie." The United Lutheran Church building is still in use but the synod building has been converted into a residence. It should also be mentioned that a similar consolidation took place at Elk Creek of the Froen Norwegian Lutheran Synod congregation and the Little Elk Creek congregation of the United Lutheran body, which were formed into the Evangelical Lutheran Congregation of Little Elk These consolidations, which reduced eight congregations to three, made Creek. it possible to dispense with one of the two Menomonie pastors, so that there has since been only one here, who serves as pastor of Our Saviour's, the congregation in North Menomonie, the Little Elk Creek congregation, and what is known as the Varney Creek congregation. The pastor conducts two or three Sunday services, in summer having the assistance of a theological student. The present parsonage in Menomonie-a fine modern residence, was erected in 1915 and dedicated in December, that year.

In the year 1871 Rev. Amund Johnson organized Spring Brook Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran congregation at old Meridean, Dunn County. Some of the members of the congregation lived on the north side of the Chippewa River and some on the south side. The Rev. Mr. Johnson served the congregation until 1872, when Rev. Gzermund Hoyme took charge of it and served until 1876. In that year the Rev. Lars Lund became minister. In 1875 the first church was built at old Meridean. Up to that time the service had been conducted mostly in living-houses and sometimes in the lumber yards. In 1886 the church burned down, but in 1889 a new and much larger church was built to take its place. At that time a considerable number of people emigrated from Norway and settled on the prairie west of Rock Falls in the town of Rock Creek, down on the bottoms around Meridean and on the north side of the Chippewa River, north of Caryville, in the town of Spring Brook. Most of these people were members of Spring Brook congregation, which was a large one, probably numbering between 300 and 400 members. From the beginning the congregation was connected with Conference, and was a Norwegian Lutheran church body till 1890, when the United Lutheran Church of America was organized, which it joined. When in June 1917 the three Norwegian Lutheran church bodies known respectively as the Norwegian Lutheran Synod, the Hauge, and the United Lutheran Church of America were consolidated and formed into the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. the Spring Brook congregation automatically became a member of that body. The Rev. Mr. Lund served the congregation until 1893, when Rev. I. A. Skare was called as minister. On account of sickness Rev. Mr. Skare resigned in 1888 and the Rev. M. O. Waldal became the minister and served until 1910. In that year the Rev. E. A. Norson took charge of the congregation and served until 1917. In March of the latter year it was decided to divide the congregation in two, so that those members living on the north side of the Chippewa River might have the chance of organizing one of their own, which they did, giving it the name of Spring Brook Norwegian Lutheran Congregation. Those living on the south side of the Chippewa River named their congregation the Rock Creek and Meridean Norwe-gian Lutheran Congregation. The parsonage at old Meridean was sold and a parsonage was bought in Caryville by the two congregations jointly. In 1918 the Rev. K. Sumstad accepted a call from both congregations and became pastor. In 1919 Spring Brook congregation built a church two miles northwest of Carvville on the north side of the Chippewa River, This is a frame building plastered with stucco on the outside, and having a ground plan of 56x30 feet, The membership of the congregation is 140. The Rock Creek and Meridean Congregation bought the old church, which they moved south upon the prairie three miles west of Rock Falls and three miles southeast of Meridear. The church was rebuilt in 1920 and is a wooden structure of 70x32 feet. The membership of this congregation is about 200. As a rule services are held every other Sunday in each church. Each congregation has a Ladies' Aid Society which meets every other week, and a Young People's Society meeting as a rule every other Sunday afternoon. Each congregation has a Sunday school and a six weeks religious school (vacation school) in the summer time.

Our Saviour's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church of Varney Creek was started in 1884, when eight or ten Danish and Norwegian families began meeting for worship at the homes of the members. They were served until 1889 by Rev. P. A. Diedrichson of Menomonie. After three or four years a schoolhouse was built in the neighborhood and the congregation worshipped until about the year 1909, when they erected the church edifice now in use, which is situated in the town of Dunn, two miles south of Irvington and about a mile from the river. The church, which is a fair sized frame building, with steeple and bell, and a seating capacity of 100 people, stands on the graveyard or cemetery property, which was laid out some five years or more before the building was erected, the graveyard occupying the south part of the land. The Rev. E. C. Haavik of Menonomie preaches for the congregation about once every three weeks, though strictly it is not within his charge.

Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul's Church was organized as a German Lutheran congregation in 1864, the services being conducted for a number of years by ministers from an adjoining town. Up to 1869 they were held in private homes, but in that year the people joined with the Norwegian Lutherans in erecting a church edifice, corner of Fifth and Balsam streets, the trustees at the time being Fred Brunn, William Schutte and August Rowe. Both congregations used the building until 1877, in which year the Norwegians built a church for themselves. St. Paul's congregation had purchased the Norwegian interest in the building in 1875, it being agreed or understood, however, that the Norwegians might use the building for four years thereafter, if necessary. After acquiring full possession, the German Lutherans moved the church to a lot on Ninth Street, between Eleventh and Twelfth avenues. On July 16, 1878, the society was incorporated. A par-sonage was built in 1879. The first six pastors of the church were, in the order named: Revs. C. Althoff, Eugene Notz, W. Jaeger, F. Fruechtenicht, P. Kleinlein and Aug. Pieper. While the last mentioned was pastor the congregation erected on Ninth Street, near Eleventh Avenue, the large brick church that is now in use. The old church was subsequently used by the society as a schoolhouse until 15 or 16 years ago, when it was torn down and the present parochial schoolhouse built. At an early day two stations, or rural congregations, had been established, one on Iron Creek in the town of Red Cedar, and the other in the Bover Settlement in the town of Spring Brook, which up to the time of the Rev. Aug. Pieper were served by the pastors of the Menomonie Church. About that time they began to engage pastors of their own, who served the two missions, the Menomonie pastor only visiting them occasionally when there happened to be a temporary vacancy. The first of these rural pastors was Rev. Ed. Kirshke, who remained about two vears; then Rev. G. R. Baum served for a year; Rev. E. Stevens ten years; Rev. H. Schaller four years; and Rev. William Baumann, of Rusk, four years up to the present time. In 1884 some 30 families separated from St. Paul's congregation and organized the Frieden's Church of Menomonie. The Rev. Aug. Pieper was followed as pastor of St. Paul's Church by Rev. M. Eickman, who served from 1891 to 1903. His successor was Rev. J. Schwartz, 1903 to 1920, and since 1920 the pastor has been the Rev. William Keturakat. The fine modern parsonage now in use was built in 1921, the old parsonage, standing on the same site, being During the last five years the congregation has added about 50 families to sold. its membership and there are now about 315 connected with the parish, with 245 voting members and almost 1,000 communicant members. The parochial school, a well equipped brick building, standing on the site of the old church, is attended by 122 scholars. The first teacher called here was a Mr. Bublitz, who assumed his duties in a vacation period when the Rev. Eugene Notz was pastor. He staved about a year, and was succeeded by F. Karbaum, who remained two years, leaving in 1887 when the present church was built. Then F. W. Rowe (present city clerk) became teacher and remained so until 1904. His successor was Henry Klug, who served about five years, when he was succeeded by Otto Stindt, the present teacher, whose assistant is Gertrude Klaenhammer. St. Paul's has a a Ladies' Aid Society of 89 members, and a Young People's Society of the Walther League numbering 50. There is now no debt on the church property and plans are under way to renovate and redecorate the building, and also to install a new The officers of the church society, in addition to the pastor and teachers, organ. are: President, Aug. J. Brummond; deacons, Aug. Holzheuter and Henry Kreuger; secretary, Robert Steinbring; financial secretary, Otto Stindt; treasurer, Emil Bressler; trustees, Frank Rowe, William Schutte and Robert Steinbring.

Evangelical Lutheran Friedens Church was organized in 1883 as the result of a controversy whereby 30 families separated themselves from the Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul's Church and formed an independent congregation. Application was made to the Rev. P. Recknagel of Eau Claire for a pastor and the first meetings of the new society were held in the court house, the Rev. P. Recknagel himself conducting services for about three months. At the end of that time the congregation secured the services as resident pastor of the Rev. John Weihrauch. A church edifice was erected on the present side, on Eighth Street corner of Twelfth Avenue, and dedicated on Sept. 28, 1884. In 1885 a parsonage was built and in the following year a schoolhouse, the first teachers of which were, successively, H. Voight, W. Shack and M. Hetze, the last mentioned of whom, still a resident of Menomonie, taught for 14 years. After that one or two ladies acted as teachers until the school was given up in 1919. A Sunday school had been established a number of years previously, and has been efficiently conducted up to the present time, having now 116 regular members. In 1887 the congregation bought a cemetery site, about half a mile south of the city, and a cemetery was established which is still owned and used by them, and which is nicely laid out and kept in excellent order. In 1899 the Rev. H. Hoerig succeeded the Rev. Mr. Weihrauch as pastor and served until 1917, when he was succeeded on Oct. 15 of that year by the present pastor, the Rev. J. M. Woerth. The congregation now includes 354 families, or over 1,000 communicants, and its steady growth has twice made it necessary to enlarge the church. The services are held alternately in English and German. The Ladies' Aid and the Luther League-the former with 124 and the latter with 94 members—are active auxiliary societies.

Unitarian Society of Menomonie.—This society was organized at a meeting held in the court house on April 9, 1888, "for religious, charitable and educational purposes." Among the first names that appear on the minute books of the organization were those of R. J. Flint, S. W. Hunt, C. E. Freeman, R. D. Whiftord, N. F. Carpenter, F. E. Pease, S. J. Bailey, D. W. Waite, John Steele, Sever Severson, Carroll Lucas, Mrs. M. S. Messenger, Stella Lucas, Elmer J. Newsom, F. E. Pease and Mrs. Bertha Tainter. The first trustees elected were S. W. Hunt, Mrs. M. S. Messenger, Mrs. Bertha Tainter, S. J. Bailey, Dan W. Waite and Stella The first officers were: S. W. Hunt, president; Elmer J. Newson, secre-Lucas. tary, and Stella Lucas, treasurer. A committee of three was appointed to draft the constitution and bylaws, consisting of S. W. Hunt, F. E. Pease and Stella Lucas. It was moved and carried that a call be extended to Prof. Henry D. Maxson to be pastor and teacher of the congregation. The following "Bond of Union," presented by S. W. Hunt, was then adopted by the society: "We whose names are hereunto subscribed, desiring a religious organization which shall make integrity of life its first aim, and leave thought free, associate themselves together as the Unitarian Society of the city of Menomonie, and accept to its membership all of whatever theological opinion, who wish to unite with us in promotion of truth, righteousness, reverence and charity among men." The articles of incorporation provided, among other things, that the society should co-operate with and be identified with the Unitarian or Independent Fellowhsip of America; the officers to consist of a minister or te cher, siden trustees, and a secretary; these officers, with the president or chairman of any society connected with the main society to constitute the executive committee. Thus the society was launched, with Professor Maxson, who had accepted the call tendered him, as minister. At a meeting held in December, 1889, the president read the following communication from Andrew Tainter, dated Dec. 16: "It is my purpose to convey the Memorial Building I am erecting in this city to trustees for certain public uses, among which is the tender to your society and congregation of a place for the prosecution of its educational, social, and religious work. I hope to have such a place ready for your use on or about the middle of May next. A. Tainter." This offer was accepted and a vote of thanks passed. The Memorial Building, however, was not ready by May, nor for some time after, and until it was the society held their services in Unitarian Hall, a room in the upper part of the building in which the Waterman & Ehrhardt store is now located. In July, 1890, the society being then installed in Memorial Building, a Young Men's Club was organized, and other activities followed, a kindergarten being organized in the spring of 1901. On Nov. 23, 1891, Professor Maxson died and in June of the following year a call was extended to the Rev. H. D. Stevens of Alton, Ill., to become pastor of the society. He accepted but remained only until January, 1893, and after he withdrew Mrs. Ada Kelsey was engaged to read sermons at the regular services until another pastor could be procured. Mr. Stevens' successor was the Rev. C. F. Niles of Janesville, Wis., who soon after assumed charge and remained for a number of years. A Sunday school had been established and was being successfully conducted. In 1894 a piano was bought and in November, 1905, a Monday Evening Club was formed, to consist of all adult members of the society and congregation. In June, 1896, it was proposed to sell the parsonage and to loan out the proceeds for the benefit of the society. This parsonage stood on Lots 3 and 4 in Block 14, in Codington's addition to Menomonie. It was not sold, however, for a number of years afterward. On several occasions in the next few years the Rev. Mr. Niles tendered his resignation but was persuaded to withdraw it and remain with the society. In February, 1897, on account of poor health Mr. Hunt withdrew from active work with the society and Mr. P. B. Clark became a member of the board of trustees in his place. The custom of holding no services during the summer vacation period seems to have been begun in 1900. Elmer J. Newsom, one of the most active members of the society from the beginning, died toward the latter part of this year, for mention is made of his death in the minutes for Jan. 1, 1901. F. F. Morgan was elected to the board in his place. In 1901 the parsonage was repaired. About this time the organization of a Men's Club was discussed. Mrs. Sarah E. Hutchinson was in charge of the Sunday school and so remained for several years, proving highly capable. In April, 1902, Mr. Niles made a report showing that the services reached at least 400 people. On April 9, 1903, the society celebrated its fifteenth anniversary at Memorial Amusement Rooms with a banquet, the Memorial Sunday School Orchestra furnishing music. It was decided to hold quarterly socials with supper and monthly socials without supper. Letters of congratulation were read and the Rev. Mr. Niles delivered an inspiring address. In May Mrs. Elizabeth Howison was appointed assistant treasurer to solicit funds to carry on the work of the society. In December, 1902, Miss Stella Lucas resigned as treasurer, receiving a vote of thanks for her long and faithful service, and P. B. Clark was chosen to fill the vacancy. Mr. Stout had been for some time a very liberal contributor to the society and about this time plans were discussed to raise funds to relieve him of a part of the burden. In 1905 the society had two officers, R. J. Flint being president and P. B. Clark, secretary and treasurer. In March Mrs. Elizabeth Howison was elected a member of the board of trustees to fill the place of Mrs. M. S. Messenger then recently deceased. About this time it was resolved to purchase the Alexander house (on the north side of Twelfth Avenue, second block west from Broadway) for a parsonage, which was done and the home put into good condition for the pastor. As shown by the list of names entered in the record book of the society, there were at this time about 250 persons connected with the society. The number of names actually recorded is 252, but several are followed by a question mark, which implies some doubt as to their being regular members. At the annual meeting held in March, 1906, it was reported that the old parsonage had been sold and a new one bought. R. J. Flint, who had served as as trustee for 18 years, retired from the board, being given a vote of thanks for his long and faithful services. The trustees elected were J. H. Stout, James B. Chickering, P. B. Clark, Miss Stella Lucas, George Thompson, Mrs. Elizabeth Howison and Mrs. Andrew Tainter. In September a committee of three was appointed to assist the treasurer in raising funds, namely: Miss Stella Lucas, Miss Hessie Freeman and Mrs. Charlie Anderson. In April. 1907, the Sunday school had a membership of 140, Charles Ingraham being superintendent. Mr. Niles reported that 60 new names had been added to the church rolls the past year. Mrs. Bertha Tainter was given a rising vote of thanks for the great interest she had taken in the society, and her kindly assistance to the same, and a deep feeling of regret was expressed at her absence. In September Mr. Niles was invited to continue his services with the society for another five years and accepted. He was then elected delegate to the International Congress of Liberal Religions to be held at Boston, September 14, with expenses paid by the society. society, known as the Ladies' Circle, which had a membership of from 50 to 70, was active in various ways not only along lines of self culture, but also in helping the society. The financial problem being a pressing one, the ladies, in the fall of 1909, raised some money by means of a bazaar. About this time the Young Men's Club had a membership of 40 or 50 and was doing good work, siderable interest in the society throughout the county. A campaign for funds and new membership was started. In February, 1911, F. L. Curran became superintendent of the Sunday school in place of Mrs. Essie Nickerson. In this year an appeal for help was made to the American Unitarian Association, but without result. Encouraging letters were received from time to time and the work continued in spite of insufficient resources. In the latter part of the year, 1911, Miss Stella Lucas died, after having been an active member and officer of the society for a period of 23 years, and her place on the board of trustees was taken by Mrs. Essie Nickerson. In 1912 it was decided to improve the parsonage, the money to be raised by placing a mortgage on it, and, in September, 1913, it was decided to sell the barn on the parsonage lot and to paint the parsonage. A report in February, 1914, showed that the Girls' Guild had raised the money to purchase a new set of song and service books and had a small balance left over. Money being due the pastor, it was resolved this year to place an additional loan on the parsonage. In September, 1916, Mr. Niles resigned, his resignation being accepted and a financial settlement being made with him. A report in February, 1918, showed that the Girls' Unitarian Club, a new organization, had been doing good work, especially for the Red Cross Society. The Rev. Walter Smith was now pastor, and during the previous year there had been an increase of 37 in the membership, bringing up the total membership of the society to 144. The Ladies' Reading Circle had been very active and much Red Cross work had been done. Some money had been raised by means of a lyceum entertainment and it was proposed to give further entertainments of this kind. The board of trustees elected for this year consisted of J. B. Chickering, Louis Ehrhard, F. E. Niles, Mrs. Pillsbury, Mrs. Frank Crane, Miss Hessie Freeman and F. L. Curran. The officers were: J. B. Chickering, president; F. E. Niles, vice presifent; F. L. Curran, secretary, and Miss Freeman, treasurer. A report on subscriptions showed that about one half of the money raised was paid by two persons, the other half being paid by 37 persons. About this time, or soon after, the Rev. Walter Smith left, and the church being without a pastor, the services were suspended. The question of resuming them came up in February, 1921, and they were subsequently resumed, the Rev. A. E. Von Stilli, of Artesian, S. D., becoming pastor. In January, 1924, he was released at his own request, and since Feb. 24, that year, no services have been held.

The Christian Science Society of Menomonie.-In the summer of 1906 a few people interested 1. Christian Science met together to study the works of Mary Baker Eddy. After having met a few times without making very rapid progress, it was resolved to take up lessons for the week from the Christian Science Quarterly, meeting Tuesday afternoons of each week. This was done until September, 1907, when the meetings were changed from Tuesday afternoons to Sunday mornings, being held in private houses until larger quarters could be obtained. In March, 1908, the society began holding Wednesday evening services also—a custom that has since been continued-and in the following month a more formal organization took place, eight persons becoming regular members. On May 8 they had their first lecture, delivered by Judge Clarence Buskirk, and in the same month the society decided to rent a room in the Heller block in which to hold services, which were first held there on June 7 with Reta L. Avers as first reader. In November of that year Mrs. Anna Boardman resigned as clerk, her place being filled by Mrs. F. Massey. Some money was contributed to the Publishing House Extension Fund. In January, 1909, literature for the reading-room was bought; also music for the services. Fletcher Massey was treasurer. The society was strengthened by the addition of four new members. In September, that year, it was decided to start a Sunday school with Mr. Massey as superintendent, the first session to be held on October first. Miss Ayers, Mr. and Mrs. Thorsen and Mrs. Massey were appointed teachers for the balance of the year. D. K. Hill was clerk of the society. In November Mr. and Mrs. F. Massey resigned and also Mrs. H. W. Jimmerson. In January, 1910, D. K. Hill was elected clerk and treasurer and Mrs. Hill superintendent of the Sunday school. In June of that year Miss Reta L. Avers resigned. By this time the society was fairly well established, holding regular meetings and with officers duly elected from year to year, or whenever a vacancy occurred. In November, 1915, the regular status of the society was affirmed by a resolution that "Henceforth members of the society shall be those who herein sign the tenets of the Mother Church." An occasional resignation occurred, but new members were also received, so there was a slow but gradual growth. As previous to this, however, a number of the members had left town and the congregation was hardly large enough to need the rooms in the Heller block, in July, 1918, they began meeting in private homes. Occasional contributions were made at this time to the war relief fund. In September, this year, a new organization took place, as a "committee on organization" consisting of Mrs. George Seeley and Hazel L. Johnson, was appointed. In July, 1919, the society went back to the Heller block, leasing two rooms. Boxes containing free Christian Science literature were placed in the city depot and junction depot. The society also contributed to the relief of the Duluth fire sufferers. Another removal was made to rooms in the rear of the Noer drug store building, and while there the Sunday school work reached a high point of efficiency and interest. In June, 1922, the question arose whether the society should follow the manual of Mother Church toward being a branch of the same, or follow the course of the dissenters at Boston and call themselves "A group of Christian Scientists." It seems that this question was not officially settled until January, 1923, when the society decided to follow the manual. In the same month it was decided to rent a room in the First National Bank building and the meetings have been held there since march, 1923. The officers elected in January, 1924, were: Miss Emma Bruenn, first reader; Mrs. M. C. Peddycord, second reader; Mr. A. L. Inenfeldt, president; Mrs. Inga Kuester, treasurer; Mr. T. A. Kvale, clerk. Miss Emma Bruenn and Mrs. Mary Massey were members of the literature distributing committee. Mrs. Mary Massey was practitioner for two years, but resigned in March, 1925, on account of leaving town. The officers of the society in the present year, 1925, are the same as in 1924 except that Mr. Kvale and Mr. Inenfeldt have exchanged offices, the former now being president and the latter clerk. The society is still small but is imbued with an earnest spirit and is making good progress.

CHAPTER XIX

INCORPORATED VILLAGES

Boyceville.—The incorporated village of Boyceville is situated on Tiffany Creek in the southeast corner of the political town of Tiffany, a town named after Pettis Tiffany, who came to Dunn County in 1840—it is not known from where—and conducted the first logging operation on this creek.

The village occupies a level site on a stretch of prairie land bordered in several directions by low hills or bluffs, which on the southeast approach very close to it. It was settled as early as 1860, and is said to have been surveyed and platted in August, 1868, though the earliest plat on record at the Dunn County courthouse is dated in 1884, the year in which the Wisconsin Central railroad was built through it. This latter plat calls the village Barker (the name given to the station by the railroad company), and was made in September, 1884 by D. W. Waite, county surveyor, for Abel Kaye, "for purposes of sale and assessment." The location is defined as "a part of the N. E. 14 of the N. E. 14 of Section 35, Township 30 N. of Range 14 W." The plat shows the four blocks between Tiffany and Main streets and between East and Center streets.

Another plat, called "Brown's Addition," and consisting of two blocks between Tiffany and Main and between Stanley and Center streets, was made for Moses Brown by D. W. Waite in the same month. Later additions were made for Adolph Peterson in 1908, 1911 and 1914; for Otto E. Skamser in 1913; the "Park Addition." consisting of 63⁄4 acres, for Vick Lewis and wife, in 1914; the "Twin Oak Addition" for Mrs. A. D. Caryl in 1915; "Hayes Addition," 1915; "High School Addition," December, 1921; and the survey and map made on the incorporation of the village, the map being dated December 9, 1921.

Thomas West, a pioneer still living, came to this region in 1858 and worked for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and the Jewett and other lumber companies. In 1867, he came to Boyceville and found lumbering was being done in this vicinity by A. C. McDougall and Mike Conners. At that time there were plenty of Indians At the village "Mose" Brown had a small grocery and A. Barton, a blackhere smith shop, while the Hays (or Hayes) brothers had a mill at Haystown. Barton lived at his shop on the creek and Brown's house was the only one on the village site. Menomonie was the place whence the people obtained their supplies. The railroad was not yet thought of and there were no made roads, only trails through the woods, and the people walked, or used ox teams. The only man in this region who had a horse team was John Brewer, a farmer, who lived six miles out. At that time the towns of New Haven, Tiffany and Stanton were all comprised in the town of New Haven and the men voted at Menomonie. Mr. West, who lived six miles north of the village site, in the spring of 1868, helped to build the first schoolhouse in this district, half a mile north of the site of the Boyceville creamery. It was a log building and is still standing. The big lumbermen got through in this territory about 20 years ago, though some cutting has been done since.

When the railroad came in 1884 the company (as already mentioned) named the station Barker, by which name the village also was known for some seven or eight years, though the name of the post office was Boyceville. In 1891 there were about 100 inhabitants here, and the industries included the sawmill of John Marlett, the saw and flour mill of F. L. and J. C. Roberts, and, about a mile to the west, at Haystown, the saw and grist mill of A. A. Hays & Bros. The Cadott hub and spoke factory was also a local industry for several years.

John Cook must have been the first postmaster of Boyceville, as the office, previously known as the Tiffany Creek office, was moved to his house from Haystown some time before the coming of the railroad. It is not well remembered who succeeded Mr. Cook, though it may have been pioneer N. W. Bradshaw, as he had the office for some time. Miss Anna Trainer also had it for a while, and so did Mrs. Bradshaw, who, after becoming a widow, married Fred Brook. Mr. Brook, who became postmaster in 1901, served as such for some years. Adolph Peterson took the office in 1907 and Lyle I. Daigneau in 1914. On Feb. 21, 1921, R. C. Taylor became postmaster and is still serving as such. Boyceville became a thirdclass office on Jan. 1, 1914, while Mr. Peterson was still postmaster. Three rural routes are attached to it.

The first school in the town of Tiffany—the one mentioned by Mr. West—was, according to another authority, a log building with a shanty roof, located on the bank of Tiffany Creek within the present limits of the village of Boyceville. Miss Annie Stickney, who subsequently became Mrs. William Hayes, was, it is thought, the first teacher. Mrs. Levisa Blakeley (wife of Nelson L. Blakeley) was also an early teacher here, probably the second. The log building after some years was sold for a farm residence and a frame schoolhouse was built which occupied the site of the present high school This was a one-room building about 20 x 30 feet long, and was the school of District No. 1, town of Tiffany. Mrs. Blakeley was the first teacher here, and Mrs. Hayes also taught in it after her marriage; other teachers in this school were Eliza, Kate and Mary Teare.

By 1888 the population of the district had so increased that the schoolhouse was no longer large enough to accommodate the number of pupils, and accordingly a new, two-room building was erected immediately adjacent to the old one, and this latter was in use until 1913, when more space being again demanded, a four-room brick building was put up on practically the same site, the frame structure becoming a residence, which it is now. Three years later an addition of two rooms was made to the brick building, which gave the district a six-room school. On a winter's night three or four years later this building burned down and for a while the pupils of this district attended school in the Methodist church and in the Opera House, continuing to do so until the present schoolhouse was built. In addition to the eight grades, the school provides a four-year high school course, the grades taking up four rooms (two in a room), and the high school three, namely, the assembly, English and commercial rooms. There is also a half basement under the assembly room, which is used for gymnasium purposes. Altogether seven teachers are employed, three in the high school including the principal. There are now (May, 1924) 67 pupils in the high school and about 144 in the grades.

About 1890 a man came to Boyceville from Baldwin, St. Croix County, and established what is now the Boyceville creamery. He was induced to do so by Benjamin Brickle, who furnished funds to start the enterprise. Either because it was not properly managed or because the farmers were not yet ready for it, it was unsuccessful and after a while passed into the hands of other parties operating under the name of the Montanyea Creamery Co., who kept it going for five or six years, though with little profit. It was then changed into a farmers' co-operative concern, which it has since remained. As such it has had some ups and downs, but has made progress and is now on a sound financial basis. The annual report for the year ending Dec. 31, 1922-an especially good year-showed, among other, the following items: Total pounds of cream received, 1,356,711; butter fat, 346,573; butter made, 421,426; amount paid patrons by check, $136,638.30; by butter and other supplies, $7,145; average price paid to patrons, $0.414; average price received for butter, $0.369. Corresponding items for the year 1923 were: Total pounds of cream received, 1,028,228; butter fat, 216,089; butter made, 318,836; amount paid patrons by check, $122,082; by butter and other supplies, $6,057.13; average price paid to patrons, $0.49; average price received for butter, $0.43. The officers of the company are: Emrick Nelson, president; Frank Meisner, secretary-manager; Robert Grutt, treasurer. Directors: Jake Wisemiller and Jos. Lipovsky, Jr. The creamery has 160 patrons.

The Boyceville Press was started Aug. 10, 1910, by E. E. Conroy, who came here from Elmwood, Wis. It was a two-page, six-column paper, independent in politics. Mr. Conroy conducted it until Feb. 21, 1912, when he sold out to H. K. Halvorson, who enlarged it to an eight-page, six-column paper and made it Republican. He has since continued as editor and proprietor, and for the last four years Mrs. Myrtle L. Halvorson has been associate editor. Mr. Halvorson has been successful in making the paper interesting, printing special articles such as biographies of pioneers of this locality, in addition to the regular home and foreign news. A good job printing office is also conducted by him.

The village has a fine brick opera house, which was built in the fall of 1916. It is owned by a stock company, the directors being William Zabel, Otto E. Skamser, Elwyn Benner, and Ajer and Frank Drake. It is used for film shows, community meetings and various entertainments, and fraternal society and American Legion meetings are held in the basement. The stage measures 20 x 40 feet and the auditorium has a seating capacity of 370, which can be somewhat increased by the use of folding chairs. There are several accessory rooms, the building is heated by steam, and fire exits are conveniently placed.

The Bank of Boyceville is a state bank which was founded in 1909, with a capital of $10,000 and a surplus of $2,000. The organizers were Arnt Erickson of New Auburn, William Larson of Bloomer, and O. G. Kinney of Colfax; these men constituted the official board. In July, 1910, Clifford W. Hayes came in as bookkeeper and in the fall was made cashier. On July 27, 1915, the capital was increased to $25,000, and in October, 1918, to $30,000, which it is now. There is a present surplus (May, 1924) of $6,000 and deposits of about $440,000. The officers in this year, 1924, are: William R. Zabel, president; Theron N. Clough, vice president; Clifford W. Hayes, cashier, and Charles H. Zabel, assistant cashier. The directorate is composed of the officers with the addition of John Schultz and William Schlough. During the participation of this country in the World War this bank handled about three hundred dollars' worth of government certificate indebtedness. It has also been helpful to the farmers in various ways. It has helped some to get started in pure bred stock, having been instrumental in distributing over 100 pure bred Duroc-Jersey hogs. In 1921 it took some of the farmers to the National Livestock Show at St. Paul, and in cooperation with some of them it procured a limestone crusher and last year ground over 600 tons; during the present year (1924) it has procured for them a ton of alfalfa seed. The bank has contributed to, and is cooperating with the campaign for national publicity of Wisconsin dairy products.

The First National Bank of Boyceville was established in 1917, application for a charter being made September 5, that year, by W. A. French, Martin Schlough, Jr., William Anderson, F. C. Sutliff and Elwyn Benner. The meeting for organization was held Dec. 8, 1917. The charter was issued Jan. 11, 1918, and the bank opened its doors for business in the same month, with a capital stock of $25,000, and a surplus of $5,000. There were 40 stockholders, as there are at the present time, The officers were: W. A. French, president; Elwyn Benner, vice all farmers. president, and Herman Steffen, cashier. The board of directors included the above mentioned officers, also William Anderson, O. E. Rose and Charles E. Whistler. The bank's first quarters were in the Isaac Mahanna building on Main Street, but This were occupied only temporarily, or until a special building could be erected. building, also located on Main Street, is a good brick structure and cost about $6,000. Removal to it was made in the fall of 1918. The bank has enjoyed a steady growth from the first and has made particularly rapid progress during the last two years. The capital and surplus have remained the same, while the deposits are now (May, 1924) $210,000. Gustave Oie is now the president, Ray Marcy, vice president; and M. M. Setter, assistant cashier.

The Boyceville Telephone Company is an offshoot of the Knapp Telephone Company, whose lines were extended to Boyceville in or about the year 1910. The village of Wheeler was also included in the system, but in 1914 the three-fold interests were divided and each village has since had its own independent company. The lines are respectively owned and controlled to a half-way distance between them, and between other neighboring towns or districts in like manner, such as Menomonie, Downing and Prairie Farm. Connection is made at Menomonie with the lines of the Bell (long distance) system, and at Glenwood City with those of the West Wisconsin Telephone Company, full day and night service being maintained. The present officers of the Boyceville company are: William Clough, president; George Talmage, vice president; C. W. Hayes, secretary; Lavina Williams, assistant secretary. William Clough is manager, and the directors are William Schlough, William Clough, C. W. Hayes, George Talmadge and O. E. Skamser. The present lineman is James Harmon.

Some 16 years ago Jacob Karlen started a portable sawmill in Boyceville, and since then has operated it in Knapp and Downing, as well as in Boyceville, cutting timber in the neighborhood of these villages and doing custom work for building and fuel purposes, and also custom planing. His mill is equipped with a circular saw and is operated by steam. When moving he transports his heavy timbers with a traction engine and the lighter parts with a team. Robert Karlen, a brother of Jacob and also a resident of Boyceville, also operates a portable mill, at present at Clenwood City and near Wilson, but formerly in the norther part of Dunn County, at and near Connersville.

The elevator and feed mill of the Wisconsin Milling Co. was built and established here in 1920 by Arthur Heinsohn. Mr. Heinsohn has had considerable experience in the business, as in 1913 he became proprietor of the Downing feed and grist mill, which he conducted for four years, and then started the Wheeler feed mill, which he owned and operated for three years, then selling it to the Wisconsin Milling Company. Since establishing the Boyceville plant he has been its manager. The elevator has a capacity of 20,000 bushels, and the concern handles all bulky commodities needed by the farmers. In the summer of 1923 the company built an oil station here for both wholesale and retail purposes, which is called the Boyceville service station.

Boyceville was incorporated as a village in the spring of 1922, the first officers elected being as follows: Ralph Hunt, president; I. L. Harmon, N. A. Anderson, Elda A. Caryl and D. W. McIntyre, trustees; V. B. Lewis, supervisor; Alice Appleby, clerk; John Eicher, treasurer, and Edward Witt, assessor. The population in 1920 was given as 415.

Previous to the year 1916 for domestic lighting purposes the residents used mostly individual gasoline-pressure apparatus. Then the Glenwood and Downing Light & Power Co. put in power lines, and the people for the first time enjoyed the convenience of electric lights. About two years later the company sold this branch of their system to the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power Co., who operated it for a year and then sold it to the West Wisconsin Hydro-Electric Co., the present owners. Water for domestic and other purposes is obtained from wells, some houses being installed with home pressure plants. As yet there is no organized fire department.

There are three churches in the village, one Methodist, and the others Scandanavian and German Luthern respectively.

Several branches of Methodists have in former times held services either in or near Boyceville. As early as 1878 a Protestant Methodist Church was started in the northeast part of the town of Stanton, about two miles from Boyceville, this village, however, being then known as Barker. Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Clark were the chief movers in starting the society, and services were held at more or less frequent intervals for some years, after which they were given up.

In 1888 a Free Will Methodist Church was started in the village, and held services in a frame schoolhouse, which was moved to a location near that of the present St. John's Lutheran Church. The people were joined by some German Methodists, but soon a disagreement arose and the German Methodists left the village organization and started a church of their own about two milles out in the country on the road to Menomonie, where they have since remained. The Free Will Methodists in the village then united with the Methodist Episcopal Church and Boyceville became the afternoon point in the Downing circuit. Among the most prominent and active workers in those early days were Mr. and Mrs. Oddie, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Rundle, Mr. and Mrs. Nel Blakeley, and, a little later, Mrs. J. B. Clark, Mrs. Elda Caryl, Mrs. Burget and others. The society grew slowly and by 1917 had but 22 members. In the autumn of that year the Rev. E. J. Sachjten, of Enderlen, N. D., came to Boyceville as the first resident pastor, serving also the Blanchard and Pine Grove charges. Steps were immediately taken to erect a church building, a canvas for subscriptions being taken during the winter. Work on the building was started in the spring and it was completed at a cost of about $8,000; its present valuation, however, is nearer $10,000. It was a hard task to secure the necessary funds, but under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Sachjten and Dr. I. W. Irish, superintendent of the Eau Claire District of the West Wisconsin Conference, the work went on. In the fall of 1918 the Rev. John W. Burchall was appointed to Boyceville, coming here from Chetek. The prevailing epidemic of influenza had delayed the dedication of the building, which finally took place on May 25, 1919, Dr. John Thompson of Chicago and Dr. J. W. Irish officiating. In September, 1920 a good house was bought for a parsonage, costing $4,400. The Rev. John W. Burchall served here for three years, leaving in the fall of 1921. The next pastor was the Rev. J. A. Moats, who remained a year, and in the fall of 1922 the Rev. F. J. Smith took charge and is still serving. He has devised a means of easing the financial strain put on the people by the erection of the church and parsonage by exhibiting motion pictures in the opera house once a month. These pictures are of general subjects, but are especially educational and uplifting. Thev have proved popular and the financial results have been encouraging. The present membership of the church is about 54, while the Sunday school has an enrollment of There are no outside appointments now and morning and evening serabout 75. vices are held each Sunday. The Ladies' Aid Society laid a new floor in the church basement in 1923 and in the same year a 36-inch bell was placed in the belfry. The Junior League and Epworth League are active societies. This is the community church for the American people of Boyceville and vicinity.

St. John's Lutheran Church (German) was organized in the village some 30 years ago and about seven or eight years later erected its present frame building. There are now about 24 members in the congregation and services are held in English and German.

Trinity Lutheran Church (Norwegian) is also an old congregation, the date of its organization not being now remembered. Its present edifice, a good frame building, was erected in 1912, but for a number of years previous to that the congregation held services in St. John's Lutheran Church, the pastors coming from Glenwood City. Services are now conducted every other Sunday.

There is an Evangelical congregation attached to the Wheeler, Boyceville and Oak Grove circuit, located a mile and a half or so to the southeast of Boyceville on County Trunk Road K. It is an old congregation having about 27 members and holds services in a schoolhouse.

Of the organized societies in Boyceville, aside from the churches, the first established was R. P. Hobson Camp, No. 5747, M. W. A., which was chartered Oct. 8, 1898, with 27 members and named after a hero of the Spanish-American war.

On June 1, 1905, North Star Lodge, No. 206, Mystic Workers of the World, was chartered with 11 members.

A camp of Royal Neighbors of America, the woman's auxilliary to the Modern Woodmen, was instituted Oct. 29, 1909, and its charter, dated Nov. 18, 1909, bears the names of 20 members.

Boyceville Lodge No. 27, I. O. O. F., was instituted Feb. 14, 1918, and was chartered June 5, that year. The charter shows the names of but eight members, who must have been officers, but the lodge now has about 85 members.

Good Luck Rebekah Lodge, No. 202, woman's auxilliary to the Odd Fellows, was instituted and chartered in 1921, with 27 members.

Harmon Harris Post, No. 314, American Legion, has a charter dated Feb. 8, 1921. The first commander was Kenneth Stout, the second Carl Hedlund, and the third Albert Anderson, who was succeeded by the present commander, Norman Peterson. The post has 35 paid up members, some of whom reside in the village and some in the adjacent or surrounding country.

In addition to the above mentioned societies there is the Boyceville Woman's Club, now in the fourth year of its existence, with 46 members, which follows a miscellaneous program. A lodge of Beavers was also established about 1913 or 1914, but lasted only a year or two.

During the war the town of Tiffany was divided for home war work into two halves, east and west, the village of Boyceville being located in the east half. In all the drives the district "went over the top." The first loan, handled by Walter S. Clough and C. W. Hayes, between $3,000 and $4,000 was raised; the amount raised on the second was $15,200; the third, $39,300, and the fourth, $37,450.

It is unnecessary to ennumerate all the business enterprises of Boyceville, of which there are between 35 and 40, if not more. They include, besides those already individually mentioned, a small but good modern hotel, conducted on the European plan by O. E. Skamser, a salting station belonging to the M. A. Gedney Co., three potato warehouses, and the large lumber yard and building of the Inter-State Lumber Co., besides the various stores and shops. The banks, opera house and most of the stores are situated on the north side of the Main street running parallel with the railroad tracks. Alvin C. Hilson is agent for the "Soo" line.

In the neighborhood of Boyceville there are many breeders of Duroc-Jersey hogs, who have formed an association called Boyceville Duroc-Jersey Breeders Association, of which V. B. Lewis is president and William R. Zabel, secretarytreasurer. The Boyceville Equity Exchange, Inc., handles grain and other produce. Cheese is manufactured in this vicinity by Ernest Intermueller and by the Annis Creek Cheese Co.

Colfax.—The village of Colfax is situated at the junction of Eighteen Mile Creek with the Red Cedar River, in Section 9, Township 29 north of Range 11 west, or in the political town of Colfax. The village is on the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway, commonly known as the "Soo," which was built as the Wisconsin Central in 1884 and taken over by the "Soo" on a 00 year learning in 1014

Wisconsin Central in 1884 and taken over by the "Soo" on a 99-year lease in 1911. Colfax is said to have been first settled in 1867, though the History of Northern Wisconsin, published at Chicago in 1881, gives the year 1865 as that of its first settlement. However that may be, John D. Simons is generally regarded as the

Some years before, however, certain pioneers had arrived in the vicinity and settled on farm lands, among them Mr. Simons himself, whose farm was in Section 18. An account of these early settlements, and also of others in Running Valley, was contained in certain papers read before the Old Settlers' Association some years ago by Mrs. D. C. Baldwin—herself one of the original pioneers—and the data she then supplied has been drawn on largely in the present account, so far as it relates to pioneer days. Mrs. Baldwin's Colfax article was read Oct. 11, 1916, and her article on Running Valley (also printed in this volume) on Oct. 20, 1917. In making use of the former, the order of events as therein given has not always been followed, some items have been condensed and some omitted, the latter on account of being elsewhere given, or for other reasons, the omissions, however, being few and comparatively unimportant.

and comparatively unimportant. Much is given in Mrs. Baldwin's own words. "In April, 1858," she say, "Cyrenius Baldwin and James Mathews left Waukesha for Dunn County. They first went to Prairie du Chien and took the boat for Rumsey's Landing. There they met Charles Boles and he brought them over to where Colfax stands at the present time. There was so much water it was almost impossible to travel around. C. Baldwin bought a half section on 17 and James Mathews a quarter section on 8. This land he (Mathews) bought half for himself and the other half for his brother, A. T. Mathews. Then they returned to their homes in Waukesha County. In 1864. C. Baldwin drove a span of horses through, bringing his wife and two children, and arriving in November. They also brought a span of two-year old colts. D. C. Baldwin and Albert Hinkley left Waukesha Oct. 1, 1864. They drove 121 sheep to Oconomowoc, shipped them to Sparta, and drove them from Sparta to Dunn County. They arrived at the J. E. Mathews home Oct. 20, 1864. Albert Hinckley went back to Waukesha the next year. On May 20, 1865, this flock of sheep was destroyed by prairie fires." These sheep were valued at from $10 to $50 per animal, as they were of high grade, and wool was worth $1 a pound at the time. Some time after this—the exact date has not been ascertained—Mr. Baldwin started a store in the village, which he continued to operate until his death in 1892.

"In May, 1860, James and Andrew Mathews, of Palestine, Waukesha County, started with their families for Dunn County. They had two wagons drawn by two yoke of oxen. On their arrival they camped near the river on land owned by Cvrenius Caldwin, not knowing exactly where their own land was." The women of the two households did their washing with the soft water from the Red Cedar River and hung the clothes on the bushes to dry. But a large band of Indians having come down the river and pitched their wigwams nearby, the women took in the clothes, fearing the Indians might steal them. This angered some of the squaws, either because they considered that the act cast a reflection on their honesty, or because they were really looking for such an opportunity and felt disappointed, and one of them threatened Sarah Mathews (daughter of Andrew Mathews) with a poker; but Sam Barker and a man named Cantrell coming up, prevented any mischief, talking to the squaws in the Chippewa language. Next day the Indians broke camp and returned up the river, and the Mathews families had no further intercourse with them except on friendly terms.

Among other early settlers near Colfax mentioned by Mrs. Baldwin were: John Hill, who came from Waukesha County in 1860, James Lowry in 1863, and John Lowry and wife in 1864, also from Waukesha County. David Philander Knapp, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., in 1860 drove a horse and "buckboard buggy" from Milwaukee to Capt. Moore's farm and traded that property to Capt. Moore for a land warrant. He got 120 acres, homesteaded the adjoining 40, and bought other adjoining land until he had 400 acres. This land subsequently came into possession of his children and Mr. Knapp returned to his native place. He had come to Wisconsin with his family by the Great Lakes route, landing at Milwaukee and staying all winter with relations in Dodge County, driving over land to Dunn County in the spring. He was usually called "Elder Knapp," being a preacher as well as farmer, and his experiences in both capacities, as well as in that of a hunter, were many and various and of a typical pioneer character.

In 1865, W. A. Mathews was married in Eau Claire to Laura Mann. Albert worked two years for the Shaw Lumber Company and then moved with his family to a farm. John and George Paul entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. John soon returned to Waukesha for his family, bringing them to Dunn County with a horse team and they settled on a farm. John and Thomas Studley arrived here with ox teams in 1865 and took homesteads, as James McElwain also had done, who came here in 1860. Alex Running and David Monteith were the legal advisors of the community in pioneer days; Farnham Chickering was the recognized orator on social occasions, and Carrol Lucas, of Menomonie, is said to have been the first school superintendent. E. B. Hill was county treasurer for a number of years. Some later settlers mentioned by Mrs. Baldwin were Dr. L. A. Larson, who came here from Chicago in 1896; Dr. George Ribensack, about 1899 (both physicians and surgeons), and Dr. Brooks, dentist, about 1902. There were no open saloons but many "blind pigs." (Carroll Lucas was the third county school superintendent. See Chapter V.—Editor).

The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company was a great help to the early settlers, buying their grain, giving them credit, so they could erect their buildings and feed their families, and helping them in many other ways. The log drive, which lasted several weeks, was always hailed with delight. One drawback, from this side of the river, was that the cattle all crossed the river for pasture, and it did not seem possible that they could go into the river among the logs and make their points on the home side at evening.

"Rev. William Galloway was the Methodist minister on this circuit in 1865. I remember he left his team of horses at James Kidd's and they were running in the pasture when one of them was killed by lightning. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Viets moved into Knapp, Stout & Co. Company's big boarding-house at Twenty-two Mile Ford in 1877 and stayed there until 1888, when they moved onto the oakland stock farm at Menomonie." Mrs. Andrew Tainter said of Mrs. Viets at one time, "Blessed is the home maker and peace maker, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." "We got along very well for and there was an abundance of fruit, blueberries, red raspberries, wild grapes and fine wild plums. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Russell moved here from Delaware County, N. Y., in 1877." Among the early school teachers mentioned by Mrs. Baldwin were Maggie Miller, Martha McCormick, Miss Belknap, Anna Chickering, Jessie Butterfield and Sarah Jame McCormick. J. R. Mathews taught school here later. Frank Butterfield taught at the school in Running Valley which O. C. Kinney went to.

John D. Simons built the first house in the village in 1867, and in the spring of 1869 he built a mill here and ground wheat flour, corn meal and buckwheat. It was a great help to the farmers, as they previously had to go either to Menomonie or to Chippewa Falls. Every time there was a heavy rain the dam went out, and it was a godsend to the people, because he hired men and their teams to rebuild it, and they got flour for their families and feed for their teams. "Mr. and Mrs. Simons lived in their log house, which was very comfortable. Mrs. Simons decided that she would open up a store in one of her living rooms. She got several pieces of orange and blue calico, unbleached sheeting, Coats' thread, hooks and eyes and matches, and took great delight in showing her goods.

"Mr. Simons the same year sowed rutabaga seed on some breaking. He had 1,400 bushels of rutabagas and they were fine. The men working in the mill had many to eat, and as our town had no name, they called it Begga town. You will often hear an old settler call it Begga town at the present time. If anyone in the vicinity went to Menomonie, he got the mail, and as nearly all drove oxen, it would be midnight when they returned. They would put each one's mail on a post, or any place handy, and when the snow disappeared in the spring we would find mail all around the house. It seemed as if we did not know enough to nail up a box, so it would be safe. In 1870 J. B. McKahan built a store in Begga town, and W. R. Culbertson moved his family here and acted as manager of Mr. McKahan's business. Chris Kinney, O. G. Kinney's brother, was head clerk. George Galloway, of Menomonie, hauled goods from that place for Mr. McKahan. Mrs. Baldwin states that the arrival of the Culbertsons was "the beginning of social life." Some years later J. B. McKahan sold his store to John D. Simons, who took over the office, also, which he held for a number of years."

Among the social events or institutions mentioned by Mrs. Baldwin was a debating school held in the old schoolhouse. "Dr. Nichols," she says, "was the physician who was called here in pioneer days. Dr. Eli Monteith of Iron Ridge was the first doctor to locate here (in 1876) and Hamp Barden was the first dentist. He manufactured his own dental tools and did good work. Mrs. Dr. Monteith was the first music teacher in Colfax. Silas Pooler moved here with his family in 1860, driving an ox team. Ole Larson and family arrived from Vernon County on June 15, 1861. O. J. Running came in 1862 from Coon Prairie, bringing his family of nine children in a prairie schooner drawn by oxen. He had nine dollars in money when he arrived here. James Kidd came in 1867 from Utica, N. Y. Arthur Simpson came here from Millville, Mass., in 1865, and Andrew Simpson from Staten Island, in 1868. About 1870 the "Omaha" railroad was built to Menomonie. Prior to that all produce was drawn, by oxen mostly, either to Menomonie, Eau Claire or Chippewa Falls. At that time Rusk was the nearest trading point for this part, and I have often seen 40 ox teams on their way to Rusk in one morning."

Alec Running and J. E. Mathews started a store in 1873, which was conducted by them for a number of years. The Dr. Monteith, mentioned by Mrs. Baldwin, came to Colfax in 1876 and practiced here for many years. The first blacksmith's shop was operated by Halver Erickson and the first barber shop, by Thomas Leach. The first child born within the limits of the village was Lulu Maud Culbertson on Oct. 21, 1870. She became an artist of merit and in October, 1893, married Oscar Knutson and went to Santa Clara, California. "Andrew Johnson built a large store and used the upper story for a hall, Andrew Ajer being manager. The hall was used for all public gatherings. We had a Good Templars Lodge (organized in 1898), so we got up a play and the largest crowd I ever saw in a hall in the village attended."

Andrew Johnson sold his store to O. G. Kinney and Severin Fjelsted and the concern was known as the McKinney Mercantile Co. In April, 1904, it was consolidated with the firm of Flitcroft & Thompson and the O. K. Hardware Store, under the name of the Colfax Store Co., with the first officers as follows: O. G. Kinney, president; Thomas Emmerton, vice president; E. B. Hill, secretary; T. E. Thompson, treasurer, and W. C. Flitcroft, manager. In 1881 the village had a population of 60. In 1884 Lou Calkin was placed in charge of the Northern Grain Co.'s warehouse, being succeeded in that position later by J. D. Burns. The latter was succeeded by Joe Freestone, who was still holding the position in 1916 when Mrs. Baldwin wrote her reminiscences, having retained it for half a century.

It was on July 11, 1884, that the Wisconsin Central Railway was completed to Colfax, and a large crowd of people from the surrounding country gathered in the village to celebrate the occasion. It was in the same year that Peter Running opened his hardware store, the first in the village. Mrs. A. C. Hayner had the first millinery store. Mr. Sackett carried the mail from Menomonie to Bloomer. Later Myron Doolittle, of Menomonie, carried the mail from Menomonie to Sand Creek. The early settlement of Colfax village was north of the creek, which location was retained until the coming of the railroad, when, the tracks having been laid some half mile south of the creek, most of the business concerns and residences were moved over to that side, where they are today, except that the creamery, schools, a church, and about 14 or 15 houses are across the bridge to the north. The original site was mostly brush timber, except along the banks of Eighteen-Mile Creek.

The village of Colfax was first surveyed, by order of Andrew Tainter, on June 26-27, 1874, its location being given as the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 9, Township 29 north, of Range 11 west. Thomas Parker was the surveyor and the plat showed two blocks of eight lots each. Since then quite a number of additional surveys and plats have been made. John D. Simons was responsible for at least three, made respectively in September, 1884; June, 1897, and May, 1899, a part of the third, however, being afterwards turned back into farm land. Geo. T. Vorland platted an addition in October, 1898; J. E. Rublee in February, 1899; Berg & Braaton in February, 1909; and among other additions were Fjelsted's in May, 1912; the Lake View addition in July, 1912; Cutting's in 1915, and Jacob Thompson's and the Park addition of Colfax at that time as "about 100," and mentioned as the business enterprises the water-power flour and grist mill of John D. Simons, a blacksmith's shop, a wagon shop, and a few stores, besides the post office.

In 1904 Colfax was incorporated as a village, the question being submitted to the people on July 12, and an election for officers on August 6. The officers elected were: Geo. T. Vorland, president; A. C. Chance, clerk; O. G. Kinney, treasurer; K. A. S. Swenson, assessor; J. H. Clark, constable; S. A. Lee, police justice; D. Pooler and Jacob Thompson, justices of the peace; and James Kidd, Dr. L. A. Larson, Peter Peterson, Jerome Beebe, E. B. Hill and O. C. Olsoni trustees.

On March 10, 1905, the high water washed out the dam on Eighteen-Mile Creek, cutting off the power and depriving the village of light. On Friday, March 31, the same year, a monthly market day was started and there was a big sale of livestock. On June 7, 1905, on account of high water, due to storms, the railroad bridge across Red Cedar River gave way while a passenger train was crossing it, the engineer and fireman losing their lives. No passengers were killed or hurt, as they had got out to walk over before the train attempted to cross. The engine was not taken out of the river until December 4.

Mrs. D. C. Baldwin in her reminiscences has described how in very early days the mail was brought from Menomonie and hung up or thrown down in any convenient place outside the residences of the respective families, or persons, to whom it was addressed; and that sometimes after a snow storm it would not be found and would remain where it was until spring. When J. B. McKahan established his store, however, in 1870, and engaged W. R. Culbertson to manage it, the latter was appointed postmaster, the office being then established. Later, when Mr. McKahan sold out to J. D. Simons, the latter took over the office and held it subsequently for a number of years Then Miss Jessie Mathews was appointed, and it seems had it for at least several years (she was serving in 1897); and after her N. A. Lee, during whose administration the first two rural routes were established, a number since increased to five. On September 1, 1915, J. D. Burns succeeded Mr. The office is now in the third class and is Lee and has since remained postmaster installed with 195 boxes, the building which it occupies being owned by Mr Burns. After the entry of the United States into the World War, a large war stamp business was done.

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

On Jan. 1, 1912, the telephone building was burned and the village was temporarily without service. About 1902 Oluf Olson established the Colfax Cement Block Works, which he had conducted successfully ever since, having built up a considerable business.

The water-power flour and grist mill of John D. Simons was erected in the late 80's. A few years later he sold it to James Anderson. It subsequently passed through the hands of Elbert E. Hill and T. E. Thompson, the latter selling out in 1910 to Carl O. Larson. It was then known as the Colfax Feed Mill and Electric Power Plant, and was operated in its double capacity by Mr. Larson until 1920, when he sold the light plant to the Colfax Light & Power Co., but is still conducting the feed mill with his son, Reuben O., as partner. The power plant is situated on the Red Cedar River, two miles north of the village and was built at a cost of $500,000. A large irregular bend of the river was cut off by the construction of a half-mile channel, by which means a 22-head of water was obtained. The generator is composed of two separate units, one of 500 kilowatts and the other of 1,000 kilowatts. The plant, which is connected with the Northern Wisconsin Power Co., went into operation April 21, 1921. The main office of the company is at Amery, Wis., E. J. Snyder being president. The local plant is in charge of R. D. Winger.

The original water supply of Colfax was derived from individual wells, but in 1889 the business men, realizing the necessity of better fire protection, got together and laid a main (on Main street) from the mill to Railway Avenue, putting a rotary pump into the mill which furnished direct water pressure. A hand chemical and hand-drawn hosecart were also purchased and were in use until 1921, when a motorchemica fire truck was bought, together with a hook and ladder truck, which constitute the present fire extinguishing apparatus. The department is organized on the voluntary system, the members being paid $3 each for actual fire duty and $1 for practice duty. In 1914 the present domestic water system was instituted, the leading spirit in the enterprise being O. G. Kinney. A standpipe and tank resevoir, 115 feet high, were erected, the tank having a capacity of 40,000 gallons, the water being pumped into it by an oil engine from a well 270 feet deep. Since the inauguration of this system the village has had a good pipe line supply.

The Colfax Telephone Exchange was installed in 1903 by Oscar I. Anderson, previous to which time the village had no local exchange but only a long distance toll line from Menomonie, controlled for some years by Louis A. Tainter. Mr. Anderson operated the local exchange until Jan. 1, 1911, when he sold it to T. E. Thompson, the present proprietor. At the time of the purchase it had 200 phones, a number since increased to 475. In 1897 J. L. Smith became local agent for the "Soo' railway, which position he held for 14 years. He then spent several years in other business pursuits, and in 1915 bought the Hotel Colfax, which he has since conducted. This hotel had been built by Aaron A. Owen and run by him for eight years.

The Colfax Messenger was founded by Andrew C. Chase in April, 1897, the first number being issued on Friday, April 30. Mr. Chase was born in Sauk County, Wis., in 1863, and was married in 1886 to Jennie M. Conroy. For a number of years he was vice president of the Wisconsin State Press Association. The Messenger, when started, was an eight-page, five column paper, but had only two pages of home print. It was not the first paper published in the village, as one had been started previously by a man who took a number of subscriptions, ran his papercalled the Colfax Record—for six months, and then left town abruptly, leaving the people without confidence in newspaper enterprises. This made it hard for Mr. Chase and the chances of success for the Messenger for some time seemed doubtful. But he persevered and made gradual headway, within two and a half years opening up two more pages of home print and enlarging the paper to six columns. In May, 1913, he enlarged it to seven columns. Mrs. Chase acted as associate editor, and the Messenger favored the Independent Republican side in politics. After a journalistic career in Colfax of 20 years, during which time he built up a good patronage, Mr. Chase, on March 1, 1917, sold out to Ward L. Swift, the present proprietor, who moved the plant in the fall of 1920 to its present location, and has since greatly improved it. Mr. Swift has put in new presses and a good linotype machine, and in addition to the publication of the Messenger as a weekly newspaper with home and foreign news, is operating a job printing office. The Messenger is now an eight page, seven column paper, with four pages of home print. For about eight months at the start Mr. Swift had Donald M. Leight as a partner, but at the end of that time bought out Mr. Leicht's small interest. The Messenger Publishing Co. was incorporated in 1917, with Mr. Swift as the principal stockholder and editor of the paper.

When the first number of the Colfax Messenger was issued (April, 1897), the following business enterprises and professions were represented in the village. Three general merchandise stores conducted respectively by J. D. Simons, Ole Nelson, and Kinney Mercantile Co.; the Royal Hotel, conducted by E. W. Viets, the Colfax Hotel by L. E. Roen, and the Farmers' Home Hotel by D. Pooler, who was also justice of the peace; Peter Running, general hardware; Ole Noer, drugs, dry goods and boots and shoes; S. J. Bronstad, shoe repair shop; Larson & Rogers' pumps and windmills; Theo. Bennett, confectionary and tobacco; the Misses Erickson & Solid's dressmaking and millinery establishment; Mrs. A. C. Hayner, milliner; the Star Livery and dray line, J. N. Scritsmier, manager; Haaken Iverson, harness shop (sold out to H. H. Scritsmier in November, 1897); A. R Lewis, black-smith and wagon maker; the Colfax Grist Mill, J. A. Anderson, proprietor; O. R. Johnson, cigar manufacturer; K. Helgerson, paper and laundry agent; Geo W. Higbee, justice of the peace and town clerk; W. S. Swenson, lawyer; L A. Larson, physician and surgeon. The lodge of Modern Woodmen was also in operation, and there were Methodist and Lutheran churches, besides the post office and a public school. Several Bloomer and Chippewa Falls business concerns had advertisements in the Messenger.

In January, 1898, the People's Bargain store was doing business, with H. P. and O. Hanson as proprietors; in September, that year the Wisconsin Central depot was burned; in December, 1899, the Odd Fellows lodge was organized, and in June, 1900, the Messenger mentioned the starch factory, a building measuring 40 x 110 feet, which had been erected, or was then in process of erection, on the bank of Red Cedar River, about 40 rods from Main. This was an enterprise from which much was expected, but which was operated intermittently for a few years only. Its lack of success was due chiefly to the fact that potatoes then brought a high price in the regular market, and it did not pay the farmers to sell them to the factory. The building is still standing on the bank of the river.

The number of pupils enrolled in the Colfax public schools for the term ending Nov. 23, 1900, was 127; the daily average 92. In the same year Dr. L. A. Larson reorganized the Colfax Band of which he is the leader; the new Royal Hotel was built, the Colfax Stone Company was started, and the firm of Flitcroft & Thompson advertised themselves as having "the most complete general store in the Northwest."

In 1901 A. C. Chase published a souvenir edition of the Messenger, in pamphlet form, a copy of which is preserved in the public library. It contained an enumeration of the business enterprises of the village and its professional interests, showing some additions within the two or three previous years; also some pioneer data, and short biographies of some of the prominent resident and early settlers, with some illustrations. The population of the village was said to be 404, and the staple articles of export, potatoes, hay and oats, of which 1,000 car loads had been shipped during the previous five years Between 1900 and 1902 several fraternal lodges were started, and on Oct. 24, 1902, the Colfax Milling Co.'s plant was destroyed by fire.

The Bank of Colfax was established as a private bank, Aug, 1, 1899, by George D. Bartlett and G. T. Vorland, and continued as such until July, 1903, when it was incorporated as a state bank with George D. Bartlett, president; William Lister, vice president; and G. T. Vorland, cashier. The capital was $10,000, which was later increased to $20,000, then to $25,000, and finally to $30,000, which it is now. There is a present surplus of $10,000 and deposits of about $400,000. In 1900 Messrs. Bartland and Vorland, as private bankers, erected a small brick building on the present site In 1911 an addition was built on to it, and it was again enlarged in 1916 and 1920, in the year last mentioned assuming its present size and appearance, which is sufficiently impressive. In the course of time some changes have occurred in the official board, and J. T. Joyce is now president; G. T. Vorland, vice president and C. A. Shern, cashier.

The Peoples State Bank was founded in the fall of 1915 and opened for business on Sept. 8. The chief promotor was Oscar Gunderson, who came here from Brown's Valley, Minn. The incorporators were W. E. Van Brunt, C. N. Amble, N. A. Lee, Edwin Anderson and W. W. Mathews. Mr. Mathews was the first president and has since remained in that office. The first vice president was C. N. Amble, while the present incumbent of that office is T. E. Thompson. Oscar Gunderson, the first cashier, was succeeded in the early part of 1917 by A. R. Bronken, now serving. The first directors were W. W. Mathews, W. E. Van Brunt, C. N. Amble, N. A. Lee and Oscar Gunderson, while those now serving (1924) are W W. Mathews, T. E. Thompson, W. E. Van Brunt, Ole Everson, S. S. Sivertson, George De Laitsch and A. R. Bronken. In spite of some early reverses the bank has made progress and now enjoys the confidence of the business community. It has deposits of about $295,000, the original capital of $20,000 having remained unchanged.

One of the substantial and successful industries in the village is the Colfax Stone Company, which, however, is owned in Madison by John Peterson. The enterprise was started by William Lister, who came here from Maiden Rock, Pierce County, Wis., in 1900, accompanied by O. W. Olson, and while prospecting in this vicinity, discovered a deposit of good building stone in a bluff one mile from the village. Securing title to the land, he established a quarry, which he operated alone for about eight years. At the end of that time he took in as partners Sam Conway of Eau Claire and John Peterson of Madison. In the spring of 1916 Mr. Lister died, and his death was followed in the fall of the same year by that of Mr. Conway. Mr. Petersen bought out the heirs. In the meanwhile the concern had become consolidated with the Wisconsin Construction Co. of Madison, and building stone for churches, schools and other public buildings-among them the fine Memorial Lutheran Church in Madison-was cut and shipped out in considerable quantities, the stone for the church above memtioned alone amounting to 30 carloads. The business is still conducted on the same successful basis, about 15 men on an average being employed in the quarries. O. W. Olson, who has been with the local concern since the beginning, is manager of the yard and quarries.

The Colfax Creamery Co. was founded as a farmers' cooperative concern on June 24, 1905, the chief promotors and incorporators being S. S. Siverson, W. J. Mathews, A. A. Anderson, Ben Bjornson and B. C. Baldwin. The creamery began operating July 1, 1905, and in the first six months—from that date to January 1—manufactured 96,316 pounds of butter, with total receipts of $21,115.63. In 1906 the output of butter was 208,000 pounds, which sold at the net price of 221/8 cents per pound, the total receipts being $47,857.76. Since then the business has gradually increased, and in 1923 the quantity of butter manufactured was 386,145 pounds, with total receipts of $170,395.89. There were approximately 230 patrons, who were paid a total of $152,288.44. The present butter maker, Al F. Braaton, assumed his duties here about one year ago. The present officers and directors are: M. O. Christoffersen, president; Carl Amble, vice president; Nick Bergeson, treasurer; with B. Tollefson as an additional director.

The first school building in Colfax was a rude little structure situated 80 rods west of the site of the present Methodist Episcopal Church. It was built in 1864 and measured 16 x 18 feet with 10-foot posts. It seems to have done duty for about seven years, as in 1871 the second schoolhouse was erected, a frame building of 18 x 20 feet with 12-foot posts, which was used for school purposes until 1889. It stood on the site of the present residence of S. O. Mattison, and in later years was referred to as "the old red schoolhouse." Margaret Miller is said to have been the first teacher in the original building, and Sarah Wilson the first teacher in the second one. Among the later teachers in the latter was O. G. Kinney.

When the second building was no longer large enough to accommodate the increasing number of pupils, a two-story frame building of two rooms was erected (about 1910) on the present school site across the creek. It measured 26 x 50 feet, and later an addition was built to it, making a three-room school used for grade purposes. The first teacher here was John Andrews. This building is still in use, and next to it stands the high school, a substantial stone building of three stories, which was completed in 1910 and opened September 12 that year. In addition to the high school courses, it accommodates grades 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, the first three grades being conducted in the frame building. The high school provides an accredited four-year course, including English, Latin, science, agriculture and manual training, and commercial and domestic science courses. The domestic science department is housed in the old frame building, while back of the latter is another building used for the agriculture and manual training department, which are united. About 100 pupils are now enrolled. There are 12 teachers in addition to the principal, who at the present time (1924) is Mr. N. O. Reppen. Though the present buildings have answered well up to the present, it seems likely that in the near future a new and larger high school will have to be constructed.

Among the various activities of John D. Simons was the building of a church. It was the original idea to build a Union Church, which any Protestant denomination might use, but a disagreement arose among the members of the building committee, and as it could not be satisfactorily adjusted, Mr. Simons built the church himself, and occasionally services were held in it for some years until it came into possession of the United Lutherans. It was generally known as "Simon's Church." It was a good-sized frame building and was subsequently sold to the Odd Fellows lodge, being now used for meetings by that lodge and others.

The first Lutheran services in Colfax were held in private residences in the early or middle 60's, the first pastor to serve the community being the Rev. O. J. K. Hagestad, who had a charge at Little Elk Creek, a few miles south of Menomonie, but lived in what was known as the Rush River Settlement, Pierce County, which was his principal charge. He visited Colfax occasionally between 1864 and 1866. This congregation was affiliated in doctrine with that branch of Lutherans now governed by The Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, which was formed in 1917. Locally the congregation belonged to what was known as the Holden territory, which included also the Holden Church, four miles (by road) north of Colfax in the country, and another congregation at Norton, six miles west of Colfax, where services had been held from an early date, though it was not until Oct. 1, 1911, that the corner stone of the Norton church edifice was laid. This building cost $4,000. The three congregations were under a single organization and all three belonged The next pastor of the Holden district to the same denomination of Lutherans. was the Rev. K. Thorstensen, who served it from 1866 to 1874, and he was succeeded by the Rev. H. F. Haakonsen, who assumed the charge in 1875 and left in 1879. It was during the latter's pastorate that the Holden congregation, four miles north of Colfax, built a church edifice costing $7,000, which was opened for worship on Christmas Day, 1876. The Rev. Haakonsen was succeeded by the Rev. D. J. Growe, who served here until 1883, and whose successor was the Rev. J. Waage, from 1883 to 1907. While the Rev. Mr. Waage was pastor a bell was placed in the belfry of the Colfax church, a substantial stone building, the corner stone of which had been laid Oct. 12, 1902, and which was being used though not yet fully completed. In 1907 the Rev. T. Saetveit became pastor of the Holden district, and in the following year, on May 17, the Colfax building was dedicated. A pipe organ was installed in the church in 1911, being first used on Sunday, May 7. The Rev. Mr. Saetveit remained pastor until 1919, in which year important changes took place, to understand which it is necessary to glance back a little. For a number of years there had been another Lutheran congregation in Colfax, a United Lutheran society, which had been formed in the fall of 1900 and had bought the church building that had been erected by John D. Simons. The first regular pastor of this congregation was the Rev. A. P. Lea, from Chippewa Falls, who served until June 1, 1902; and after him came the Rev. N. E. Wickre, of Running Valley, where he resided while serving Colfax until 1908; then the Rev. P. O. Thorson, of Glenwood City, from 1908 to 1910, and Rev. M. K. Aaberg from 1910 to 1918. The changes which took place in the year 1919 were the separation of the three congregations of the Holden district-namely, Holden, Colfax and Norton-into distinct organizations, and the consolidation of the Colfax (Synod) congregation with that of the United Lutherans here. In the same year the Rev. T. Saetveit was succeeded by the Rev. Chr. S. Thompson, who has since remained here, residing in Colfax, but who also served the Holden, Norton and North Running Valley congregations, the latter being officially called The North Running Valley United Lutheran Church. It has a building which cost $4,000. The present value of the Colfax church property, including some additional land purchased, is about $15,000. Some repairs have been made recently, a new roof having been laid on the building. This is an active congregation and publishes a monthly "Parish Record" in the interests of the Colfax charge and of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. It is edited by the present pastor, while A. R. Bronken is business manager and Sam K. Iverson assistant.

The Lutheran Free Church at Colfax is a branch of a church of the same denomination in Running Valley, and was established in 1914, the Rev. J. M. Michaelson, who had held services in the village as early as January, 1912, serving both congregations and holding services in Colfax every other Sunday. After six or seven years he was succeeded by Rev. L. R. Lund, who was pastor for two and a half years. Mr. Lund's successor was the Rev. Carl Amundson, who is still serving. The Colfax congregation worships in a frame building and includes about 60 families.

About a mile east of Colfax village is a small church called by the congregation, "Betania," of the Lutheran Brethren Synod, which originated in the year 1870. The principal founders were J. J. Petersen, J. Vaade and S. Berentsen of Colfax. From 1870 to 1900 Betania Church was a branch of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, but in doctrine and government was substantially a Lutheran Free church. In 1900 a reorganization took place, the present edifice was built, and the congregation united with the Lutheran Brethren Synod. The present membership is about 40, with a good attendance. The pastors from 1893 have been as follows: Rev. J. J. Petersen, 1893-1901; from 1901 to 1903 no pastor; from 1903-1906, Rev. J. J. Petersen; from 1906 to 1912, pastorate vacant; from 1912-1918 Rev. J. J. Petersen; in 1919, Rev. R. S. Cjerd (now at Grand Forks, N. D.); in 1920 and 1921 Rev. Tom Pedersen (now in Antler, N. D.); from the fall of 1921 to present time (August, 1924), Rev. A. O. Huseby. The Rev. J. J. Petersen, who served the church during three different periods is still living in Colfax, being now 93 years old.

The first preaching by a Methodist minister in Colfax was in 1862, when D. P. Knapp from an eastern conference visited the place and preached in the schoolhouse. From that time until the projecting of the church building in 1899 there were 37 years of religious effort by pastors and others. In 1867 the Rev. Henry Springer was appointed the first itinerant minister to the charge that included this school district in his round of preaching appointments. The first revival was conducted by Rev. Mr. Chingman in the same year. In August, 1898, a mass meeting of the citizens of the neighborhood decided to construct a church building for the Methodist Episcopal Church. The subscription list was completed in a few weeks, the contract let to Hoeppner & Bartlett of Eau Claire, and the work commenced in earnest. On May 17, 1899, the corner stone was laid. The first sermon was preached in the church August 6, and the dedication took place Sept. 3, 1899, the Rev. D. Bolton, from Madison, assisting. No list of the earliest pastors has been found, but the Rev. F. E. Lewis may have been appointed in 1896, or earlier, as he was preaching here in April, 1897. The Rev. H. P. Waldron seems to have succeeded the Rev. Mr. Lewis in the fall of that year, as his name appears in connection with church services here at that time. These, however, were not resident pastors. The Rev. H. A. Synder began serving the church in September, 1901 (each pastor beginning service in September); the Rev. Thomas Stamp, who served three years, came in 1902; the Rev. W. T. Scott in 1905; the Rev. Frank Haight in 1912; the Rev. A. A. Marcy in 1913; the Rev. M. E. Fraser in 1915; the Rev. E. J. Scahtjen in 1918; the Rev. Frank Prucia in 1920, and the Rev. Albert A. Acker, the present pastor, in the fall of 1922. The first parsonage was a small frame building erected in 1901 adjacent to the church and on land belonging to the congregation. During the pastorate of the Rev. Frank M. Prucia it was traded for a building in the east part of town, about four blocks east of the church, but a year later the latter parsonage was traded for the one now in use, just north of the church. Today the Methodist Episcopal Church of Colfax has about 100 members and a Sunday school enrollment of 125. The active societies are the Ladies' Aid, Woman's Home Missionary, Epworth and Junior Leagues and the Boys' and Girls' Club. In the summer of 1923 the interior of the church edifice was decorated at a cost of seven hundred dollars.

Services were held in Colfax in February, 1905, by Rev. H R. Vaughn, a Congregational minister from Elk Mound, and though the formation of a Congregational Church here was not favored by the Methodists, occasional services in accordance with the tenets and customs of that denomination were held in the village for a few years.

This history of Colfax village would be very imperfectly written unless due credit were given to the work of the women, which, during the last 20 years has been more and more manifest, especially along social and civic lines. The pioneer women did their part individually in the care of their children, the management of household affairs, and in church work, which was all that most of them found time for; but with the growth of the community there was felt a desire for progress along cultural lines. This found expression in the organization, on January 26, 1904, of the Ladies' Reading Club, of which Mrs. C. S. Hawker was elected president, Mrs. George Vorland vice president, Mrs. A. C. Chase secretary, and Mrs. Elmer B. Hill treasurer. Meetings were held every two weeks on Tuesday afternoons, the activities and discussions of the club being confined for some time to literary topics.

The society at first was small, but the members earnest and enthusiastic. It had been organized but a short time when the need of a better supply of books was felt, and it was resolved to make an effort to establish a local library, not only for the benefit of the club members, but also for that of the general public. The question was brought up and discussed at a meeting held June 14, 1904, at the home of Mrs. Elmer B. Hill, and the general opinion being favorable to the enterprise, steps were taken to carry it into execution. A few books were donated by the members, and arrangements made to secure the benefit of the state traveling library, with headquarters at Madison; also of the Stout traveling library, which sent out books from Menomonie. With these a start was made, Miss Mattie Ingerson being appointed to serve three months as librarian. On Nov. 20, 1899, the Colfax Messenger announced that the library was open to the public. Progress at first was slow and considerable effort was needed to keep the institution going without aid, though a little money was raised from time to time through donations and by getting up entertainments to which admission tickets were sold.

On Feb. 13, 1906, the village board was approached on the question of public aid, but the committee was told that the population of the village was under the number specified in the state laws as justifying such an appropriation. In April, 1907, however, the village board voted an appropriation of $100 for the library, and in 1908, $100 more was received from the same source. Since then the board has continued to help, gradually increasing the amount voted, and during the last 13 or 14 years a special library tax has been assessed. The appropriation for 1923 was $1,400. On Dec. 15, 1908, the library was removed to a room in the lean-to addition to the office of J. H. Critsmier, and Miss Anna Fuller became librarian. The library remained in that location until 1915, when it was moved into the municipal building, completed in that year, where it has since remained.

The Colfax Woman's Club—which name was adopted by the Ladies' Reading Club when it joined the State Federation of Women's Clubs on Feb. 8, 1916, and which has grown from 12 to 42 members-still makes donations to the library. The librarians succeeding Miss Fuller have been Miss Irene Carter, Miss Cora Amble (holding the office for three years), Miss Lillian Gunderson (one year), and Mrs. E. B. Rosenberg, the last mentioned being now in charge. The library occupies a spacious and comfortable room, which was planned for its present use as both circulating department and reading-room. It is nicely furnished, electrically lighted and steam heated, a fireplace having also been provided for additional warmth and comfort on special occasions. The library is open every afternoon for reference purposes, and also for book circulation except on Sunday, as well as four evenings each week. It now contains about 2,400 books, about half of which are fiction; and the reading-room is supplied with about 20 or more of the leading magazines and two daily newspapers. Its privileges are enjoyed both by the people of the village and those of the surrounding country. In 1923 the experiment was tried of sending out a traveling library from Colfax, but the plan was given up, as there was not a sufficient demand for books issued in that manner.

On Feb. 25, 1914, a committee of five ladies from the Ladies' Reading Club (now the Woman's Club), namely, Mrs. W. R. Brooks, Mrs. A. C. Chase, Mrs. Ed. B. Rosenberg, Mrs. A. J. Running and Mrs. Geo. T. Vorland, met with representative business men at the Bank of Colfax to discuss and formulate plans for the construction of the municipal building already mentioned in connection with the history of the library. The construction having been decided upon, plans were accepted, the contract made, and bonds issued. The cornerstone was laid Nov. 6, 1915, with appropriate ceremonies, the main feature of which was an address by The building consists of two stories and basement, with a Gov. C. L. Phillipp. The library occupies a large room on the first floor, separate square tower in front. quarters on the ground floor being occupied by the fire department. On the second floor is an auditorium capable of seating 560 people, at one end being a stage or platform on which plays may be enacted, or musicians or speakers be accommodated. Four long tablets-two on each side of the proscenium arch-front the audience, bearing the names of 161 service men from Colfax and the surrounding country, who helped their country in the World War. The building contains a banquet hall, council room, police room, jail, two rest rocms, and a gymnasium room, in addition to the other rooms or parts already mentioned, and is admirably adapted to all the purposes of a community building.

Another notable achievement of the Woman's Club was the inauguration of the Community Civic League Fair. It was first known as the Junior Civic League Fair, the original object being to interest the young people in the work of cleaning and beautifying the village, the cultivation of small gardens, and other useful work, including domestic science, needle and fancy work, and school and manual training work. The first fair was held in the fall of 1915, premiums being offered to the children, with an age classification of 14 to 16 years, and the fairs have been held annually from that time to the present, with beneficial results. The scope of the work has also been enlarged to include live stock exhibits. During the last two years the Colfax Commercial Club has assisted in this work, and it was when it began to help that the name of the Community Civic League Fair was adopted.

The Woman's Club has also been active in other civic and social work and has proved itself a live force in the community. During the war it aided in the various drives for funds, and in war stamp and Red Cross work, held one baby clinic, conducted a nurses' school for three weeks, had cooking schools, made donations for the "Near East, and adopted a French war baby. It keeps in touch with school conditions by sending visiting committees to the schools, also encouraging parents to visit them and become personally acquainted with the teachers, and in cooperation with the Commercial Club it has set out flower boxes on certain street corners, wherever the people in the vicinity will care for the flowers.

During the progress of Colfax as a village community a number of fraternal and other societies have been instituted, most of which are still flourishing. In 1898, long before national prohibition was thought of as a means of curbing the drink evil, a Good Templars lodge was established here, known as Colfax Lodge, No. 70, I. O. G. T. It was a useful institution for a number of years. In December, 1900, Evergreen Tent No. 94, of Maccabees, was instituted but ceased to function a number of years ago. On Dec. 8, 1899, Fidelity Lodge No. 34, I. O. O.F., was instituted with 18 members, and was chartered in June, 1900. This lodge has had a successful career and has a good membership today. Its auxiliary branch, Martin Rich Rebekah Lodge, was chartered Aug. 15, 1916, starting with 16 members, and is also in good condition. Nordland Lodge No. 50, I. S. W. A., obtained a charter dated March 2, 1901. Some 12 years ago this lodge established a park on the east edge of town, which was turned over to the village April 11, 1924. It is known as the "S. A. F. Park" (Scandanavian America Fraternity). Red Cedar Camp No. 2746, M. W. A., was first organized as early as 1897, or before, and obtained a new charter March 8, 1918. Eight members of this camp served in the World Banner Camp No. 3143, Royal Neighbors of America, the auxilliary society War. to the Woodmen, was instituted July 3, 1902, with 25 members and is still flourish-In October, 1903, a lodge of Beavers was organized with 26 members. For ing some time past this lodge has held no meetings, though, being an insurance order, Sluppen Lodge No. 233, Sons of Norway, was the members still pay their dues. chartered June 9, 1923 with 24 members.

Orrin Russell Post No. 131, of the American Legion, was established in 1919. It has about 40 members and holds meetings in the basement of the Municipal building. Its commanders in succession have been Dr. E. O. Kalk, Lawrence A. Fjelsted, Arthur Michaelson and Chris A. Shern, the latter now serving (1924). Orrin Russell, for whom the post was named, died from wounds received in battle. Herman Fruvog and several others from this section were also killed at the front. (See Ludington Guard article in this volume). During the progress of the war the village of Colfax met all its allotments in the various drives, surpluses being turned into a standing fund for war purposes.

Colfax is now the largest village in Dunn County, having a population of about 1,000. The site is level, except that the ground slightly rises north of the creek. The stores, with the post office and municipal building, are located on both sides of Main Street, and a grain elevator and potato warehouses near the railroad tracks. The residential section is notable for its neat, well painted houses, most of which have spacious lawns. As the village has now advanced far beyond the mere hamlet stage, no attempt will be made to ennumerate all its business concerns. Some of the most important have been already mentioned in the course of this narrative, and further references of this kind may be found in the biographies of A. J. Running, G. F. Martin, T. E. Thompson, Fred H. Martin, Christ Ugger, E. O. Larson, Carl O. Larson, J. E. Rublee, Christ J. Johnson, Thomas Running, E. C. Ajer, S. K.

Iverson and others.

The Colfax Band, already mentioned as having been reorganized in 1900, is an old institution of the village. Like similar organizations in other places, it has had its up and downs. It was active from 1900 to 1902, then lapsed into a state of desuetude. About 1913 it was started again with a membership of 45, or thereabouts; but during the war practice was given up and not resumed until 1921, when with 25 members it started on a new period of activity and is a live organization at the present time, with Dr. L. A. Larson as leader.

Downing is an incorporated village in the southwest corner of the town of Tiffany, on the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway, commonly known as the "Soo." According to the recollection of one or two still surviving pioneers, the site of the village in very early days was known as Tiffany, being so named after Pettis Tiffany, the pioneer, who came to Dunn County in 1840, settled on the creek that bears his name, (also perpetuated in the name of the town), and conducted the first lumbering operations here.

There is probably no one now living who remembers the settlement as it then existed, but it was doubtless very small. The student of local history, familiar with early conditions, would naturally picture it as consisting of a few log cabins inhabited by lumbermen, with perhaps a little store, or depot of supplies, among which whiskey was pretty sure to figure.

As Mr. Tiffany was 89 years old at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 25, 1873, he must have been born in 1783 or 1784, within a year or two after the close of the Revolutionary War, and was about 56 when he came to Dunn County. After he ceased his lumbering operations here, the place dropped out of sight, or, as a community settlement, ceased to exist. Abraham Culbertson, now living in Downing, remembers that when he came here at the age of 15 years in November, 1869, there were in the vicinity at that time several white settlers who had homesteads, among them "old Phineas Lyman from Hudson," and William Daugherty, both living within a mile of the village site. The land was heavily timbered and there was pine wood on the hill that is included within the village limits, so Mr. Tiffany's logging operations, if they were conducted at this exact spot, were evidently quite limited. Fred Grassley, an elderly man, had a contract from the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company to log the timber. He cut between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000 feet down the creek, but made a financial failure. The man who had general charge of the company's logging interests in this locality, however, was James Downing, who owned a farm and large house, which was a stopping-place for travelers, and it was he after whom the modern village, started in the early 80's, was named.

The western part of Downing touches the line between Dunn and St. Croix counties. The business part, with most of the residences, lies south of the railroad tracks, and was included some 40 years ago or more in a tract of 120 acres owned by Jonathan Stoddard, who surveyed and platted five blocks. There is at the court house, however, the record of a plat of 10 blocks north of the railroad, called "A. A., M. H. and R. A. Weed's Addition to Downing," the location being defined as Section 30, Township 30 north of Range 13 west. A small part of the Weed addition was later vacated. Other additions have been recorded as follows: Stoddard's Addition, surveyed and platted April 21, 1885, for Jonathan Stoddard, Stoddard's Second Addition (of three blocks), March, 1887; Coolcroft Addition by the Coolidge Company, June, 1910; Sunnyside Addition for M. E. and E. F. Stoddard, June, 1910. The Mound Cemetery plat was surveyed in August, 1916.

John H. Coolidge, who had a contract to cut ties for the railroad, came to Downing in 1882, and, with associates, organized the Downing Manufacturing Company, which was incorporated in 1885. The concern owned about 16,000 acres of timber and built a large sawmill—the largest hardwood sawmill in the United States and also had a shingle mill to cut up scattering pine, besides conducting a store. Mr. Coolidge was connected with the business until his death in 1891, after which his sons, Dana C. and Marshall H., came into possession of it and continued to operate until they had exhausted the timber, which was in or about the year 1900. More recently the company was reorganized by Dana C. Coolidge, R. A. Cleveland and C. T. Montanyea (the latter since deceased) and is engaged in the manufacture of show cases and refrigerators, Dana C. Coolidge being president of the company.

In the early 90's there was also a saw and grist mill owned and operated by G. Rudsell. The population at that time was said to be about 500.

Alexander H. McCabe had the first general store in Downing, which he erected in 1884 on the corner of Main and Wilson streets. The business of this store soon outgrew its capacity, and in 1889 Mr. McCabe built a larger one; but he met with misfortune, as in 1905, the large store was totally destroyed by fire. The loss was too great for Mr. McCabe to stand and he did not rebuild.

It was Alexander H. McCabe who established the Downing post office, being appointed as the first postmaster in the spring of 1885. After holding the office for a short time, he was succeeded by Norman Van Valkenburg, who had it for a short time under President Cleveland's first administration. The next postmaster was Dr. W. H. Park, who was appointed under Harrison's administration, and held the office until 1895, when he was succeeded by John E. Dennis (in Cleveland's second administration). Mr. Dennis held the office for four years, and was succeeded by Dr. W. H. Park, under the McKinley administration. In August, 1903, Mr. Park was succeeded by E. F. Stoddard, who was appointed under the Roosevelt administration, and was postmaster until May, 1917, when John E. Dennis was again appointed, this time under the Wilson administration, and held the office for four vears. Then E. F. Stoddard took it again, receiving the appointment under the civil service rules of the Harding administration and assuming its duties in May, 1922. He is still serving. Downing is an office of the third class and has two rural routes: Route No. 1, 25 miles in length, runs north 12 miles, has 125 boxes, and is a very heavy route; Route No. 2 runs south three miles in the shape of a double-U-loop, has 88 boxes, and is an average rural route, 20 miles in length. The post office, which has been located in the same building on Main Street since 1900, has 125 small, 20 medium, and 25 large boxes. During the World War a large business was done in war savings stamps.

In 1907 Oliver H. Herdahl came to Downing and with his brother, Nels O., bought the old "company store," which they conducted for one year under the firm name of Herdahl Bros. Then they incorporated the business and in 1909 O. C. Nelson bought an interest in it. Later Nels O. Herdahl sold his interest to Walter Clark of Menomonie. A large general merchandise business was conducted for a number of years, but in the latter part of October, 1922, the building and contents were destroyed by fire. Mr. Herdahl is now engaged in the undertaking business in Downing.

The country surrounding the village is a rich dairying section and within a radius of 10 miles there are some 5,000 cows. As early as 1890 the farmers started a creamery here, but after operating it for a short time and finding they could not agree, they sold it to the Montanyea Creamery Co., by whom it was conducted for a while. Then the National Dry Milk Co. took up the business, but, lacking a manager of sufficient practical experience to make a success of it, they sold out in 1922 to the Ripon Produce Co., who are operating successfully and on a large scale. They have a three story building and high powerplant, and manufacture all kinds of milk products.

Mercantile activities in Downing have experienced the usual changes and fluctuations, but among those who have stayed the longest was Lewis H. Foss, who went to work for the Downing Manufacturing Co. in 1886 and became clerk in their store two years later. In 1890 he put up a building and opened a general store on his own account, which he conducted for 29 years, finally selling out in 1918. There are now two general stores in the village, besides one or two smaller ones dealing in confectionery, cigars, etc., a millinery store, three hotels, two potato warehouses, a hardware store, blacksmith's shop, garage, and feed mill. There is also a local band and orchestra, which functions somewhat intermittently. In 1913 Arthur Heinsohn bought the Downing feed mill—a building 40 x 60 feet in surface dimensions—and conducted it as a general feed and grist mill until 1917, when he went to Wheeler and established a mill there.

Downing was incorporated as a village in 1909, previous to which it was under town government. The water supply is obtained from wells. The electric powerline laid to Downing by the Glenwood Light & Power Co. in 1905 inaugurated the era of electric lighting, though the ownership of the lines has since undergone some changes. Downing is now on the same line as Colfax.

The Bank of Downing was organized in 1903, the charter bearing the date of August 14. Previous to that it had existed for about two years as a private bank, having been started as such by Dana C. and Marshall H. Coolidge. On its becoming a state bank Elizabeth Coolidge was made president and Dana C. Coolidge was vice president and cashier, Elizabeth Coolidge, A. M. Underwood and M. H. Coolidge being directors. The capital stock was $5,000, which has been since increased to $16,000. Business was started in a building on Main Street, opposite the location now occupied, the present building being erected in the winter of 1920-21. It is a substantial brick structure, furnishing excellent banking facilities, and was first occupied on Feb. 2, 1921. The bank has been an important factor in the business life of the village and the territory surrounding it. The present officers, who are also directors, are: D. C. Coolidge, president; E. C. Wagner, vice president; Ray Williamson, cashier; E. Berg, assistant cashier.

The village has a fine brick community building, or civic hall, which was opened in 1917, having been erected at a cost of about $10,000. On the first floor is an auditorium seating 250 people, or more, and provided with a stage and adjacent dressing-rooms, and having a rear gallery, in which some of the seats are placed. The basement contains a dining-room and kitchen and there are also several additional rooms in the building, in one of which is installed the village library.

An attempt to start a public library was made at an early date—in the middle 80's, or perhaps a little before—but no permanent results were obtained. Then about 1888 some prominent residents of the village, namely, E. F. Stoddard and wife, Mrs. C. B. Coleman and daughter Emma, the McCabe family, and others, raised some money, bought books, and made a new start. The Rev. W. J. James also proved of considerable help. The library is still small, activity in its behalf having been somewhat intermittent, but it is appreciated by the best people of the community and forms a nucleus from which a larger and more complete institution may in time be developed

The people of Downing have seen several journalistic enterprises started in the The first was the Downing Review, which was founded in 1893 by Dr. village. W. H. Parks and M. E. Collins. The office was on the first floor of the new I. O. O. F. building on Main Street. The publication of this paper was continued for a period of about two years, when fire destroyed the building and also the printing The building was never rebuilt and the newspaper publication was never plant. There were two other efforts made to establish a paper for Downing. resumed. In 1896 a man by the name of Hichkock started a small plant, which had a very short career-about six months. Then a man by the name of J. F. Donham came here and started a weekly magazine that he called "Donham's Doings," but owing to the marked eccentricities of the publisher, this enterprise was also of short duration-about two years. In March, 1909, Jacob De Wilde, cashier in the Bank of Downing, and E. F. Stoddard, postmaster in Downing, started the Downing Chronicle, a monthly magazine, which was printed in New Richmond, Wis., the magazine being made up from contributions by several of the citizens of Downing. Besides Mr. Stoddard, who was the literary editor, there were the Rev. W. E. Marsh, who contributed items on religious and church doings, Prof. Walter Best, whose depart-ment pertained to schools and agriculture, Mrs. F. J. McIntyre, contributor on domestic and social matters, and A. L. Best, who sent in items in regard to agriculture. This magazine met with the approval of its readers and the Chronicle had a large subscription list. But the work connected with the compiling of a magazine of this nature took a lot of time, and as those interested in it were doing their part without compensation, besides having other work which demanded all their time, it was decided to discontinue the publication of the Chronicle, which was done, and the subscription list was turned over to D. M. Merrill, a printer from St. Paul, who came here and published what was known as the Downing Review, a weekly publication, and enjoyed a large jobwork patronage in connection. When war broke out with Germany, Mr. Merrill was offered a very remunerative job in the detective service of the United States and sold the plant of the Herald to James A. Neil, from Eau Claire, who enlarged it, added a linotype machine of late pattern, and did a very large business; but, wanting to get into a larger town, and receiving an attractive offer from the citizens of Elmwood, Wis., he removed all of the presses and other oufit belonging to the printing plant to that city in the fall of 1921. Not wishing to be without a local paper, the Commercial Club took the matter up and persuaded Geo. L. Elsworth, publisher of the Knapp Enterprise, to remove his printing plant from Knapp to Downing; but Mr. Elsworth remained here only a few months, leaving in the fall of the same year, and for a few months thereafter there was no publication. Then the Enterprise was taken over by the Commercial Club, a stock company being formed, and pullication was resumed, the company operating under the name of the Downing Newspaper Association. The Rev. L. L. Litchfield, the local Methodist minister, having had some newspaper experience, was placed in charge, an experienced typist, Miss Eva Barber, was employed, and the whole management was placed in the hands of Newton Little, a stockholder. Later, in the spring of 1924, Mr. Little leased the whole plant from the Association, and at this time is getting out an eight-page, six-column paper, about one-third being home print. There is a paid up subscription list of about 600 copies.

The first school in this locality stood by the creek on the Gus North farm, or on the other side of the present creamery site, where now stands the residence of Charles Hawkins. There was another school district which took in a part of the village, its schoolhouse-known as the Livingston school-being situated on the village line, about 40 rods west of where the post office is now. The building of the mills had caused a considerable influx of people and better school accommodations were needed; so, in 1887, Joint District No. 7 was formed, including not only territory in the towns of Stanton and Tiffany, Dunn County, but also territory in the town of Glenwood, St. Croix County, and a good-sized building for a grade school was erected, occupying the site of the new high school on Wilson Street. The district includes the same territory today as it did when it was formed 37 years ago. The two buildings first mentioned were rural schools. One of the earliest teachers in the Livingston school was Mrs. E. F. Stoddard, while the earliest teacher in the schoolhouse beyond the creamery site was, as now remembered, a Mrs. Lamphere. The schoolhouse of Joint District No. 7 was used for grades only until the year 1900, when an addition was built on to it and a high school established. In its double capacity it was in use until May, 1922, when it burned down, and for a year thereafter the classes were taught in the Odd Fellows' building and the civic hall. On April 15, 1924, the present schoolhouse was opened, a fine brick building erected at a cost of $40,000, and which included the grades and a four-department high school. With the principal, five teachers are employed, and the total number of pupils is between 150 and 160.

Methodist class meetings were held in Downing in the early 90's, if not before, and this village in time became the headquarters of the Glenwood-Downing circuit, Boyceville and Connersville being included until 1917, when Boyceville became a separate charge. In Downing services were held on Sunday afternoons, the preachers coming from Glenwood City. The Methodists, however, were not strong enough financially to erect a building unaided, so a church was built through the efforts of the Protesant people of the community generally, to serve the purpose of a union church, and the building, improved and enlarged, is today owned by the Union Evangelical Association. It has been used by several denominations, and at one time—about 1903-04—a small Episcopal society conducted occasional services in it, but, aside from the ownership of the building, it has been for the most part under Methodist control, and since 1899 has been served by resident Methodist pastors. These pastors, assuming charge in September, usually, according to Methodist custom, have been as follows: Rev. W. J. James, 1899-1901; Rev. Charles P. Keast, 1902-1903; Rev. George Willett, 1903-1904; Rev. William Galloway, 1904-1907; Rev. A. A. Siefert, 1907-1908; Rev. W. E. Marsh, 1908-1910; Rev. W. G. Johnson, 1910; Rev. John I. Sainty, 1912-1915; Rev. R. R. Braddick, one year; Rev. A. H. Pierstorf, over one year; Rev. A. F. Acker, three years; Rev. L. L. Litchfield, from September, 1922; Rev. H. A. Waste, from October, 1924, to the present time. A parsonage was built at an early day and was remodeled in the pastorate of the Rev. John I. Sainty, the church building being improved at about the same time and a basement put in. Several years ago the parsonage was sold and another building bought for that purpose at a cost of \$4,000, which, however, it is now the intention to sell, as a third residence building has been purchased and is now the parsonage. This was bought in June, 1923, and cost \$3,200. It belongs to the Methodist Church. The present seating capacity of the church is about $20\overline{0}$. It is well furnished and provided with electric lights and furnace heat, and the basement contains a kitchen and dining-room for use on social occasions. There are 138 members. Services are held twice each Sunday, and there is a Sunday school, a Ladies' Aid Society of 40 to 50 members, and Epworth League Society of 35 members, and a W. C. T. U. Society of about 65 members.

The Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen, with their auxiliary lodges, or camps, of Rebekahs and Royal Neighbors, have been represented in the village for a number of years. Tiffany Lodge No. 40, I. O. O. F., was instituted July 25, 1887. The lodge was twice burned out, and a new charter, dated May 31, 1902, was secured. The lodge has at the present time about 95 members, but at one time had as many as 106. Twin City Rebekah Lodge No. 60, I. O. O. F., was instituted Dec. 9, 1891. Like the men's branch of the order, it was burned out, and was given a new charter dated May 31, 1902. It has about 50 members. Downing Camp No. 5752, M. W. A., was chartered Oct. 11, 1898, and started with 10 members. It had received a new charter, dated Dec. 28, 1923, and is an active organization with a good membership. Fairnook Camp, No. 6598, R. N. A., was instituted Sept. 9, 1910, its charter being dated October 28, that year. It started with 22 members. The American Legion also a post in Downing, No. 234.

Elk Mound is an incorporated village of about 350 inhabitants on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway, in Section 27 of the political town of Elk Mound.

It has been said that it was surveyed and platted in May, 1874, but the first survey and plat on record bears the date of March 8, 1878, and was made for the West Wisconsin Railway Co. (now the "Omaha") by J. W. Remington. It consisted of Block A of 10 lots, Block B of 12 lots, and Block C of 26 lots on the south side of Main Street. The location was defined as "on the southeast quarter of Section 27, Township 28 north of Range 11 west."

The situation of the village is picturesque, the ground on which it stands rising in the northern part into a lofty bluff from which its name, Elk Mound, is derived. In regard to this bluff there is a story concerning a magnificent elk which in early days would occasionally appear on the summit. From the top of the bluff a fine view may be seen of many miles of country. There was but little lumbering here, though some pine was cut by Eau Claire mill people about 1905, and there were a few scattered sawmills in the surrounding district.

In January, 1882, "Robert's Addition" to the village was surveyed and platted by William Weissefels for Richard and Emily S. Roberts. Three other plats are also on record: Wingen's Addition, made for Peter Wingen and wife; an East Side Addition surveyed in 1906, and Nels Hanson's Addition, also surveyed in 1906.

The construction of the railroad in 1870 brought to Elk Mound its first settlers, but its early growth was slow, as in 1880, nine years later it had but 75 residents. In the next ten years its increase was only about 25, and it had then, in addition to the railway station, two churches, a post office, a district school, a store, a blacksmith's shop, and a steam feed mill owned and operated by E. J. Martiboy. Soon after that, probably in 1892 or 1893, Mr. Martiboy sold his mill and went to Haywood. An old brick and stone building in the west end of the village, it has passed through several hands, and in January, 1923, was bought by Guy Hanson, an exservice man of the World War, from the Olaf Oas estate and is now in operation, Mr. Hanson grinding all kinds of feed.

Henry Ausman, who was for many years the most prominent figure in the business life of the village, engaged in mercantile business here while still living on a farm, in 1878 buying a small grocery kept by a man who also ran a bar and sold beer Mr. Ausman at once cut out the bar and put in a stock of general and whiskey. merchandise. He conducted that business for 32 years, at the end of which time he retired, turning it over to his sons, by whom it is now conducted under the name of H. Ausman & Sons. Mr. Ausman is still living (May, 1924) and is now in his eightyeighth year. Another pioneer resident of the village having a long business record is Nels Hanson, who for 48 years conducted a wagon making and repairing shop, starting in 1875 and retiring in 1923. Twenty-two years ago William Seidenberg entered into mercantile business here and is still engaged in it, being proprietor of the Farmers' store. Among the later business men may also be mentioned M. T. Birge, who for the past nine years has conducted a good modern drug store. The village has two good general stores, a confectionary, pool room and barber shop, blacksmith's shop, two garages, feed mills, lumber yard, telephone exchange, and other business activities.

In July 1908, a small manufacturing enterprise was started a mile and a half west of Elk Mound, on the Arne Tilleson farm, by A. H. Kleven, S. A. Gorenson and Archie Stahlman, who manufactured concrete blocks there until 1918, when, because of lack of material, they quit the business. Mr. Kleven is now a contractor in the village.

Another enterprise, which promised well but ultimately failed to maintain itself, was a flax mill started in the spring of 1905 by the Eau Claire Linen Mill Co., who erected a plant here and bought flax from the farmers, who had several hundred acres planted in it, the raw material being manufactured into fibre for rope, towelling, furniture packing and refrigerator linings. The flax was hand-pulled and in summer employment was given to about 100 hands. But the company failed to make money, the Eau Claire plant burned down, and the Bank of Elk Mound, taking over the local mill, operated it for three years, and then quit, the property being sold piecemeal. The officers of the bank during that period were: A. B. Ausman, president; E. B. Ingram, vice president; and E. S. Gregerson, secretary and treasurer; O. H. Ingram being head of the Eau Claire company.

The Bank of Elk Mound was incorporated as a state bank on Dec. 23, 1905, by O. H Ingram of Eau Claire, A. B. Ausman and Henry Ausman, Sr., the first mentioned being president, Henry Ausman, Sr., vice president, and E. S. Gregerson cashier, while the directors were O. H. Ingram, C. A. Chamberlin, C. T. Bundy, H. Ausman, Sr., and O. J. Garton. The capital was $10,000. The bank opened for business Feb. 3, 1906, in a brick and stone building on the north side of Menomonie Street, moving to its present location on the opposite side of the street on Nov. 1, This building, erected by the bank for its own use only, is a handsome and 1921. substantial structure, fire proof with terazzo floors and marble fixtures, a strong modern vault electrically protected, and a customers' vault for safety deposits. On Jan. 13, 1920, the bank increased its capital stock to $25,000. E. S. Gregerson, elected president in 1916, is still serving, and since the same year E. W. Hanson (previously assistant cashier) has been cashier. Also since that year A. B. Ausman has served as vice president and Noble Hanson as assistant cashier. During the war the bank took an active part in pushing the Liberty loan and other drives (E. W. Hanson being in the service), and in every drive went over the top. The bank takes a great interest in all activities which are a benefit to the farmers and the community.

Two attempts at journalism have been made in the village, but were unsuccessful. A paper called The Mound Builder, the editor of which was Edward Conry, was started about eight years ago but ran for about a year only, after which, Mr. Conry—a hustling sort of man—left town. The other paper was the Mound Journal, published by a man from Minnesota, who also was unable to make his paper stick, going elsewhere after a year or so.

The village being situated in the midst of a good farming and grazing country, the farmers about 30 years ago started a creamery, which was practically a cooperative concern. Ten years ago the building burned down and the company was then reorganized under the new co-operative laws, and is still a flourishing institution, manufacturing about 600,000 pounds of butter per annum. It is in stalled in a good modern brick building.

There was a grain elevator in Elk Mound as early as 1874, operated by an uncle of W. Erpenbach, and since then the village has always had accommodations for grain storage and shipments. The present elevator, built more than a quarter of a century ago, is owned by the Elk Mound Elevator Co., formed in 1920, who then took it over from H. Ausman & Sons, the latter concern having previously taken it over from the Wisconsin Elevator Co. The president of the Elk Mound Elevator Co. is E. O. Wright of Menomonie, while E. W. Scott, a farmer, is vice president, and Frank Crane of Menomonie is secretary-treasurer. The elevator has a capacity of 20,000 bushels, and last year the company built a feed mill, which they are operating in connection with it.

A man named Webb is said to have been the first postmaster of Elk Mound, the office having been established through the influence of Henry Ausman. Mr. Webb, who kept a small store, failed and was succeeded by John Weisenfels, who sought to increase his profits by selling intoxicating liquor, and who had the post office for awhile. Henry Ausman, who bought out Mr. Weisenfels and abolished the bar feature of the store, and who was railway and express agent and notary public, also became postmaster, serving in that office from 1878 to 1915. He was succeeded by Arthur M. Howe, who was appointed July 1, 1915, under President Wilson, and being reappointed in that president's second term, is still postmaster. The office has now five rural routes, covering many miles of the surrounding country.

The Elk Mound Commercial Club, organized about the year 1900, has at times done some important work in promoting local improvements, though its activity has been somewhat intermittent. At its inception it was composed of 80 per cent of the men living within half a mile of the village. It has been instrumental in removing a number of unsightly buildings, getting fine residences built and good sidewalks laid, and also in the establishment of the present splendid school.

An early attempt was made to establish a public library in the village, but there was not sufficient interest or energy in the movement and it died out. In the flourishing days of the Congregational society, some books, which served the purpose of a small public library, were kept in the church, but were destroyed when the building burned in 1912. Then a village library association was formed, books being obtained from the state library commission at Madison and loaned out from the manual training room at the school, this system being in vogue for two years. At the end of that time it was given up, though the state library commission still sends out books to those making individual application.

The village of Elk Mound was incorporated in the spring of 1909, the first ordinance being enacted in March. The first village officers were: Henry Ausman, president; Nels Hanson, C. H. Mau, Matt Schaaf, P. E. Riley, Torval Jensen and O. J. Garten, trustees; E. S. Gregerson, clerk; J. G. Brackett, treasurer; B. J. Benson, supervisor; M. L. Van Dreser, assessor; E. A. Ausman, corstable; E.S.Gregeryear, 1910, electric lights were introduced into the village, the first power for which Was supplied by the Chippewa Falls Light & Power Co., later by the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power, and now by the Northern States Power Co., Elk Mound being on the line of this last mentioned company extending out from Cedar Falls, where one of their dams is situated.

A volunteer fire department was organized on a small scale in or about the year 1905, a small sum of money being raised and invested in a hand-pumping engine and a water tank on wheels. This apparatus was housed in a shack in the lumber yard, and when the lumber took fire and burned two or three years later the apparatus was destroyed. Then the property holders of the village took up a subscription and raised more money, and another outfit was purchased, for which a shed was built. After the incorporation of the village in 1909 a more efficient system was inaugurated, a fire company being organized, consisting now of 22 men, with a chief, assistant chief and secretary, the men being paid for service at fires, rehearsals and false alarms. There are now three tanks, a chemical engine, and hook and ladder truck, the tanks being mounted on wagons. Eight call boxes have been placed in various parts of the village, operated electrically, and the residents are afforded reasonable protection. After Elk Mound had begun to function as an incorporated village a hall was leased for civic purposes in a building corporation. In 1912 that building burned and a company was organized, which in the following year erected the civic building and hall now in use.

The first school of the district including the village was situated about a mile and three quarters to the northwest. It is not now remembered when it was built, but school was held there in 1878-79, if not earlier. Somewhat later another schoolhouse was erected about three quarters of a mile east of the center of the village, and the two schools were united as School District No. 2, Joint, of the towns of Elk Mound and Wheaton. The building to the east of the village was used up to 1905, when the proposition to establish a school on the hill in the north end of the village was strongly opposed and led to an acrimonious dispute. But the advocates of the change of location had their way and a building was accordingly erected on the hill, being used for school purposes until three years ago, when the fine consolidated grade and high school, inclusive of several districts, that is now the pride of the village, was built, being opened in October, 1921. The following information in regard to this school, furnished by Principal Chester H. Byrnes, will be of interest to parents of this vicinity, and doubtless to many of the pupils, either now or in later years.

The Elk Mound Consolidated Grades and High School brings to the rural boys and girls the same privileges offered to their city cousins. The building, which cost $80,000 with equipment, is a beautiful modern structure standing on the south slope of the high mound from which the village takes its name. Looking southward from its well lighted assembly room, one can see an ideal rural valley. The farm homes in this valley are owned by a progressive class of farmers, having every modern convenience. The school is equipped with a steam heating plant, a ventilating system, electric lights, hot and cold water and showers. In the fine gymnasium every boy and girl has his or her physical training period daily. There is a fine shaded park in the rear of the building. The tennis court is located here. The plavground equipment consists of swings, trapezes and teeters. A fine athletic field lies to the west of the building. Eight covered wagons transport the boys and girls from their homes to the school and back again, cars being used in the fall and The faculty has a 100 per cent enrollment in the Wisconsin Teachers' spring. The school has a 50 per cent enrollment over last year and the con-Association. stant annual growth shows that the rural boys and girls appreciate the privilege of a secondary education.

A high standard of academic preparation is required. Reports from normal schools and colleges and the university show that our graduates compare very favorably with those from the citv high schools. Last year (1923) the eighth grade took the county diploma examination. Out of a class of 15, 13 were honor graduates with an average of 85 per cent or better. There is a Parent-Teachers' Association which meets monthly to discuss constructive suggestions and the programs are varied and interesting. Work done by the pupils of this school has been exhibited in the county fair and the school won a loving cup as having the largest number of points in educational exhibits; and in project work during the vacational period the boys and girls, through exhibits and club entries have won about $225 in premium money.

In declamatory and oratory the Elk Mound contestants took first honors in the local league, winning two loving cups, while the representatives sent to the district contest held at Eau Claire furnished keen competition for the larger city schools. In athletics the Elk Mound school has successfully competed with schools having a much larger enrollment. The athletic council is composed of five members, namely: the coach of the boys' and the coach of the girls' team, one member representing the student body, one representing the school board, and one the Parent-Teachers' Association. A wonderful spirit of service and charity at home has been developed through the Camp Fire organization; food and clothing have been collected by the girls and then distributed among the poor and needy. They have a Camp Fire lodge fully equipped for banquets and ceremonials, and which has been made a comfort room for members and guests. The school has nine teachers.

Trinity Evangelical Church, the largest in the village, had its origin in a congregation started more than half a century ago at a location about a mile south and a mile east of here, where Evangelical services were held, in the German language, up to 1907. In the meanwhile the village was growing and at last it seemed to many of the members desirable to build a church here, as a more central and convenient location. The movement was opposed by some, who were attached to the old rural church, but the other party had its way, H. Ausman exercising a strong persuasive influence, and in 1906-07 the church was built. The objectors remained behind, retaining the old building and joining the German Methodist Episcopal denomination, and that church is now served from Menomonie, a preacher coming every three weeks.

The edifice in the village is a fine, large brick building with stained glass windows, and adjacent to it is a large frame parsonage, suitably corresponding in style with the church. The congregation is an active one and numbers 108 members, the attendence at services being about twice as large. There is a highly organized Sunday school with an enrollment of over 250 scholars. The auxilliary societies include the following: A Woman's Missionary Society of 19 members; the Ladies' Aid of 33 members; Evangelical League of Christian Endeavor, 23 members; and the Junior Church Endeavor with 20, a very live organization. The present pastor (1924) is the Rev. Lester H. Laubenstein, who assumed the charge on May 5, 1923. A recent predecessor was the Rev. Levi Goehring, who served three years. Before the Rev. Mr. Goehring came, and for awhile afterwards, the church was on the circuit of Elk Mound and Menomonie, but it became independent while he was pastor and is now the headquarters of the Elk Mound circuit, there being another Evangelical church in the country, eight miles southwest of the village.

This latter church is generally known as the Iron Creek Church, because of its location on Iron Creek, but its denominational name is Salem Evangelical Church. It had its origin in a Sunday school started in 1861 and is the mother church of all of this denomination within some miles of Elk Mound. In October, 1923, it celebrated its sixtieth anniversary. There was a large attendance, many pioneers being present, and also several of the charter members. The Iron Creek Church has a membership of 76, with an attendance of 120 to 130, and a Sunday school with an enrollment of 135. It is served by the Elk Mound pastor. The Evangelical Church in America was established in Pennsylvania by Germans, and the Elk Mound church formerly had services in the German language, but now all the services are in English, the latter language having been gradually adopted.

St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Elk Mound, originated—it is thought about 40 years ago—in the town of Spring Brook, about a mile south and a mile west of the village, where a church and cemetery were established. In 1916 the church edifice in the village of Elk Mound was erected, a good frame building of fair seating capacity. The land for the purpose was donated by W. Erpenbach, the congregation putting up the building. The old church was served from Chippewa Falls, and at earlier periods from Eau Claire and Mencmonie. The present pastor, Rev. A. T. Thome, comes from Chippewa Falls. There are now about 25 or 30 families in the congregation.

The Norwegian Lutherans of Elk Mound began holding services about 1912, and in 1914 built a frame church at a cost of between $2,800 and $3,000. The congregation was started with 16 families and now includes 27. Services are held every three weeks, the present pastor (May, 1924) being the Rev. John Paulson, who comes from Chippewa Falls, though since May, 1923, pastors from other places have occasionally preached here. Before that time there were resident pastors, the first being the Rev. A. P. Lea, who came from Chippewa Falls, and, after him, the Rev. C. M. Horneland, who remained three years. There is a Ladies' Aid Society. This church is an offshoot from the Barum Norwegian Lutheran congregation, started over 50 years ago, whose church edifice is situated three miles northeast of the village. The Barum congregation was formerly a large one but its numbers have dwindled.

A church was established in the village of Elk Mound, in 1913, the name of which, in German, is Der Evangelischen Friedens Gemeinde. Its records begin in the month of January, that year. Services were first held in a building located near the present community hall, and which was used for hall and church purposes, the building rented until it burned down in 1912. After that the people erected their present building in the northeast part of the village. They have preaching every other week, the pastors coming from Fall Creek and Cadott.

A Congregational Church was organized in Elk Mound village about the year 1900 and had an existence of some 15 years. A Sunday school of this denomination had been started in the village about 1897 by the Rev. Howard R. Vaughn, the church, a frame building being erected in 1900. Mr. Vaughn was pastor and worked in Elk Mound for about 12 years, or until 1910, serving this church and several others, at Albertville, Truax and Amy respectively, the church at Amy being of the Baptist denomination. After he left, there were two other pastors here. In 1912 the church building burned down and was not rebuilt. Summer educational work of a religious character was taken up in 1902, school being held six days a week. Rev. H. R. Vaughn was the official head of the movement until two years ago, and though his successor in the pastorate here had no summer school, it was held elsewhere. In 1920 it was reestablished in Elk Mound by the Evangelicals and is now in operation. This type of school has become the recognized model of religious (Protestant) day schools, being copied in certain points by the Lutherans. Its main feature lies in the application of modern physiology to religious education.

A camp of Modern Woodmen of America—Elk Mound Camp No. 5952—was established in Elk Mound in 1892, and subsequently a camp of the auxilliary branch of Royal Neighbors. Both are still active. About the year 1900 a Beavers' lodge was started, the members of which—scme 60 in number—do not now hold meetings, but continue to pay their dues. Lloyd S. Howe Post No. 37, American Legion, was organized in September, 1919, the first commander being Dr. Geo. H. Schlenker. He was succeeded by Ervin L. Frederick, the latter by Henry L. Carden, and he by Guy Hanson, the present commander. This post started with 15 members and at one time rose to 50, but the present number of paid up members is 27. In May, 1923, the post secured a portable projector for showing moving pictures and until January 1, 1924, gave weekly exhibitions in the community hall. They then closed for the winter. In May, 1924, an extra machine was secured and the exhibitions were resumed, being given each Wednesday.

Knapp-The incorporated village of Knapp is situated on the Chicago, St.

Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway in the southern part (Section 33) of the town of Stanton. It lies in a valley protected on the north, south and west by high bluffs, or hills, through which flows Wilson's Creek. The railroad, first known as the West Wisconsin Railway, was built by Humbert & Baldwin, connection being made with St. Paul in September, 1871, though trains ran through Knapp in the previous year. Before that time the site of the village and the surrounding country was mostly a dense forest, traversed only by Indians, white hunters and, occasionally, an itinerant Methodist minister. With the coming of the railroad came also the settlers, among the first being John Bailey, Omar Ccle, and several homesteaders. In the following year a post office was established, the first postmaster being A. K. Humphrey, who built and conducted the first store, which stood on the ground now occupied by the store of L. A. Prichard.

The first plat of Knapp on record at the county courthouse is undated, but was made not later than the spring of 1875. It bears the title, "Merrill's part of the Village of Knapp," the location being described as "the S. E. ¼ of N. W. ¼ of Section 33, Township 29 north of Range 14 west." It was surveyed by J. H. Webster for "John and De Lila Merrill." On April 14 and 15 J. H. Webster surveyed a plat of the village "by order of Arch K. Humphrey and Lydia J. Humphrey," described as the S. W. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ of Section 33, Township 33 north of Range 29 west. Subsequently plats of the village, or parts thereof, were made, as follows: A plat of East Knapp by J. H. Webster, June 27, 1875, for E. P. Bailey, Lucinda Bailey, Solomon Fletcher and Amy A. Fletcher, which consisted of "parts of the E. ½ of the N. W. ¼ of Section 34, Township 29, Range 14;" an addition of nine blocks to East Knapp made for J. D. Miller in May, 1878; an addition to Knapp surveyed for John and Christina Whiteford in May, 1878; Merrill's second addition, of four blocks, surveyed in April, 1880, for John and De Lila Merrill; Hall's addition (Blocks A to H), surveyed April 21, 1881; Miller's second addition, recorded in November, 1881; A. R. Hall's second addition in June, 1881, and an addition by Lydia J. Humphrey, recorded in June, 1882.

Owing to the large supply of various kinds of timber in the vicinity, manufacturing was started at an early date, soon after the coming of the railroad, the first sawmill being erected by James Bailey, brother of the John Bailey already mentioned. The Knapp,Stout & Co.,!ater known as the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, had a small sawmill in Knapp in early days, and it was from the Knapp family that the village took its name, though that concern did not cut much timber in this immediate vicinity. With the start of the village Omar Cole and A. K.Humphrey started a sawmill business, and after Mr. Humphrey's death, which occurred either in 1875 or a year or two later, A. C. Poore became Mr. Cole's partner, but the firm met with reverses and after four or five years the mill closed down.

Another sawmill was put up by Temple and Harrington, by whom it was operated until it burned down. It was then rebuilt by Cole & Poore, who disposed of it to the Hall & Dann Barrel Co. of Minneapolis, organized in 1879. This company enlarged the plant considerably, building a store in 1880, and for several years did an extensive business in the manufacture of lumber, staves and barrel headings, employing at times as many as 200 men. In 1881 they were turning out 2,500 sets of barrel stock per day. The heading mill cut 40 cords of wood per day, making 200 sets, and about 75,000 staves were slashed out, the wood used being white and red oak, maple, ash, rock elm, birch, butternut and basswood. Logs brought from $2 to $9 per thousand at the mills, and the dry-houses kiln-dried the stock in 24 hours. William Kimball was superintendent. This concern subsequently became absorbed into the Hardwood Manufacturing & Storage Co., a Minneapolis corporation of which Albert R. Hall was the president. The operation of the plant was stopped in 1888 and the machinery sold piecemeal. Two or three years later the stack was blown down and wrecked the greater part of the building. The company sold their remaining timber to the Downing Manufacturing Co. and to George H. Christian, the latter selling to A. R. Hall, who had a small mill and did some lumbering on his own account. He did not log that timber, however, but sold it to the Frank Carter Company. Some of it is said to be standing yet, in which he has an interest. Mr. Hall manufactured and sold hubs to a wagon factory in Shakopee, Minn., which concern, claiming that they were not all of white oak, as contracted for, refused to pay cash for them, but gave him a number of wagons instead, which he sold to the farmers.

In 1875 or 1876, the Northwestern Hub & Spoke Factory was started in Knapp by Knute Hubbard & Thomas Morgan, who also operated a store and blacksmith's shop. Within a year or two, Morgan, who was the junior partner, sold to Hubbard, and the latter after operating the business for a few years, disposed of it to E. T. Bond, of South Evanston, Ill. About 25 men were employed and the concern manufactured about 40 full sets of hubs and spokes per day, finished and polished, some sawed felloes being also made. A store was conducted in connection with the works, but after a few years Mr. Bond gave up the business; though he sold the property, the factory was no longer operated.

Another large business started in Knapp was that of the Bailey Manufacturing Co., incorporated Oct. 18, 1880, with a capital of $100,000, the incorporators being E. P. Bailey and S. J. Fletcher. They took over the sawmill built by "Jim" Bailey, and added to it a large plant for the manufacture of lumber, wagons, trunk slats, and the Springer cultivator and seeder (combined). From 80 to 100 men were employed in the works, and a store was also built, the sales of which, it is said averaged about $40,000 a year. The concern failed, however, in 1883 for $75,000 and the works were taken over by Stillwater parties, who operated them for a year or so and then quit.

John Anderson started the second store in the village, but sold out after a while to H. W. Kellogg, who, it is said, subsequently came to a tragic end by suicide in St. Paul.

One of the active business men of Knapp for some years was Charles Townsend, who opened a drug store in 1884. Several years later he went into manufacturing, leasing a mill from the Hardwood Manufacturing & Store Co., which stood on Block 3 of the original village site, and which he operated for two seasons as a spoke factory. He then turned it into a sawmill and factory for the manufacture of staves for syrup barrels, and as such conducted it until 1902. In the meanwhile he had extended his activities to include the operation of a creamery and a grain elevator; but the farmers, having organized a co-operative creamery, forced him to give up that branch of his business. His factory was closed out in 1902, when he went to Cedar Falls, taking a part of his plant with him, and the elevator in 1904 passed into the hands of the New Richmond Roller Mills; it is the elevator now owned and operated by the Co-operative Equity Co. Mr. Townsend sold his store when he left to a co-operative company, who conducted it for three years, selling in 1911 to Goedecke & Jones, who moved the business to their present brick store, the old building being torn down in the fall of 1922.

In the early 80's, when F. E. Blaser was railroad agent here, the amount of freight forwarded per month was 2,500,000 pounds; the amount received 500,000 pounds, and $300 per month was taken in for passenger fares. Dr. W. W. Dorr conducted the boardinghouse for Hall, Dann & Co., while there were two other doctors in the village, A. T. Bright and C. H. Tressel; H. W. Kellogg was conducting the store he bought from John Anderson, while Herbert Lucas was proprietor of a hardware and tin shop, and Mathew McCormic of a billiard room. There was a Good Templar lodge, organized in 1873, and a lodge of United Workmen, instituted in 1880. Religious services were held in the schoolhouse. The village was under town government, as it continued to be for some 14 years thereafter, the town of Stanton then having a population of 500.

In 1886 iron ore was discovered in the hills near Knapp, and also in the vicinity of Wilson, Wildwood and Lucas, and some excitement resulted, considerable prospecting being done. Five hundred tons of the ore were smelted at Black River Falls in 1890, but activities in this direction ceased when it was realized that there was not enough of the ore to make mining profitable. A little later a still greater excitement was caused by the discovery of some gold amongst the ore mined in this neighborhood, and which was extracted by the cyanide process to the amount of five dollars' worth to the ton, though some single specimens were found to be much richer. As the total cost of production, however, was some $12 or $13 per ton, the acquisition of wealth in this manner was found to be impracticable and Knapp failed to become a mining town.

It has been claimed that in 1885 Knapp had a population of 800, though in 1880 there were but 500 or so in the whole town of Stanton. The increase of course was due to the manufacturing industries that were established here, many of the workmen being married and bringing their wives and children here. With the decay of manufacturing the population dwindled, so that a historian writing in 1891 (History of the Chippewa Valley) said that there were then not more than 350 in the village. In 1920 the village population was given as 478 and it has not increased to any appreciable extent since then. Progress in recent years has been chiefly along other lines, such as better public utilities and the development of stronger social educational and religious agencies, in which some good work has been accomplished. Business, however, has not stood still since the lumbermen departed.

What is now the First National Bank was organized as a state bank in 1904 by Chester R. Case, and others, Mr. Case having come here in May that year at the instance of Albert R. Hall, who was a man of business and political influence, and who was made president of the institution. Charles Townsend being vice president, and Mr. Case cashier. There was also an assistant cashier. The officers whose names are given, together with F. H. Welcome and W. H. Francis formed the board of directors. Business was started in a small building of 16 x 24 feet, owned by Mr. Hall and situated on the lot adjoining the present site, this building being occupied for about three years. Then removal was made to the James Austin building across the street, which was the home of the bank until the building now occupied was erected in 1915. In June, 1918, the bank was converted into a national bank, with a capital of $25,000 and an earned surplus of $5,000; the deposits were then about $200,000. The officers elected on the reorganization were: William Robinson, president; W. H. Francis, vice president; Chester Case, cashier; Dale Carter, assistant cashier. William Robinson, W. H. Francis, F. H. Welcome, C. R. Case and J. E. Case were directors. Subsequently the three first mentioned all died and their places were filled by others. The present officers are: W. H. Francis, president; Theodore Albrecht, vice president; C. R. Case, cashier, and Walter L. Leslie, assistant cashier. The directors are W. H. Francis, W. H. Kimball, C. R. Case, J. E. Case and Theodore Albrecht. The bank's capital and surplus have not changed, but the deposits are now (May, 1924) about $250,000. This bank has proved a strong friend of the farmer, and during the great war made a fine record in putting over the government loans, going well over the top in all of them.

A. K. Humphrey has been mentioned as the first postmaster of Knapp, and H. W. Kellogg also had the office for a while. The exact succession of postmasters is uncertain, with respect, at least to the early period, but Tim Murphy is remembered as one and Alden M. Kimball as another, the latter serving about 1891. Of the later ones there is a definite record. Mrs. Chrissie Frizzell took the office Dec. 1, 1893; Alden L. Kimball (2nd time) in November, 1897; Miss May L. Kimball, September, 1903; Miss Nelle Tufts, April 1, 1915; Samuel L. Tufts, April, 1917, to February, 1922, his commission being dated March 16, 1917; and Matthew H. Schlosser has served since Feb. 1, 1922. Under Mr. Tuft the office was advanced to the third class, and it now has two rural routes, No. 1 running south from the village and No. 2 running north.

The Knapp Telephone Company was started in August, 1903, by Charles McV. Fletcher and Charles Townsend, who formed a company and incorporated. The territory covered included Boyceville and Wheeler and lines running with Downing and Weston; but in 1914 Boyceville and Wheeler became independent, each now having its own exchange, the lines being controlled by the three villages to a half way distance between them. Downing is operated from Glenwood. The Knapp exchange controls about 200 phones and gives day and night service. S. F. Cole has been president of the company since 1913. H. W. Jodel is now vice president, George Hart treasurer, Al Morrell secretary and manager and Geo. W. Schaefer a director.

Several attempts at journalism have been made here in the past, but the results attained were not permanent. A paper called the Knapp News was started at the time of the gold excitement, some 20 years ago or more. It passed through several hands, one of the successive proprietors changing the name of the paper to "The Knapp New News," but none of them made a pronounced success and about 1909 the issue ceased.

The first school taught in the vicinity of Knapp was at the home of Omar Cole in Section 34, town of Stanton, and was held for two terms, the first of which was taught by Miss Lydia L. Cole, a sister of Omar who had come here from Pennsyl-The second term was taught by Mary L. Weatherby, daughter of Dr. L. vania. P. Weatherby who was one of the first physicians to settle in this region and lived on a farm six or seven miles north of Knapp. Then a log schoolhouse was built about a quarter of a mile north of the east end of the village; and later, in 1872, a small frame schoolhouse just across the east limits of Knapp, both these schoolhouses being in No. 3 Joint District, and the latter in Section 27. The first teacher in the frame schoolhouse above mentioned was, so far as is now remembered, Miss Nettie C. Brown, who later became the wife of William Vanderhoof, and this schoolhouse was in use until Districts No. 3 and 4 were consolidated, District No. 4 taking the west end of Knapp village. Here and at that time another frame building was erected and was in use for a number of years until it was finally discarded for school purposes and was taken over by the local G. A. R. post, who used it for their meetings as long as they held any. The building still exists and is now used When the number of pupils in Knapp and the vicinity had so increased for a barn. as to overcrowd the building last mentioned, a new and graded school was erectedin 1884-in the west end of town, this being a two-story frame structure on the present schoolhouse site. It was in use until the fall of 1908, when it took fire from some unknown cause and was burned to the ground. In the following year, 1909, the present brick building was erected, which is practically a three-story building including the basement, as the latter is lighted with large windows, making it substantially a ground floor. This school includes the eight grades and a two-year The building cost about $8,000, or, with the furniture, about $9,000. high school.

The country around Knapp is a good grazing district, well watered and has many dairies. A creamery was started here in the early 90's and bought the Episcopal church, which was no longer used, for its operations. It failed, however, and was taken over by Charles Townsend who operated it for awhile but was finally forced out by the farmers, who had started one on the co-operative plan. They failed to agree among themselves, however, and were unsuccessful. The present concern, the Knapp Creamery Co., took over the business of the Knapp Co-operative Creamery Co. on Jan 1, 1923, and in that year turned out 350,000 pounds of butter, buying from the farmers about 400,000 pounds of cream. The run has since been increased, the company is shipping now from 70 to 80 tubs of butter per week, of about 64 pounds to a tub. The concern is a partnership, A. J. Olson and E. H. Close being the proprietors.

As early as 1856 the territory in which the site of Knapp village was included was a part of the Knight's Creek Circuit of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1870 regular services were established in it by the Rev. M. S. Webster. It contained five preaching places. Subsequently the name was changed to Knapp Station Circuit, and services held here every other Sunday. In 1876 the Knapp Methodists built a small church edifice at the cost of $600, and for two years the Rev. J. P. Greer was pastor, to be followed by a long line of faithful ministers down to the present time. As the congregation increased with the growth of the village, the original building was in time found to be too small, and in 1893 a much larger one was erected, which is still in use and is a neat and well cared for building. The church has the usual auxilliary societies and maintains a good Sunday school. There is an excellent parsonage.

For about seven or eight years Protestant Episcopal services were held in Knapp, a church of that denomination being erected in the village in 1883, chiefly through the efforts of the Rev. M. L. Kern of Menomonie, who had conducted services here previously in the schoolhouse. The practice of supplying the pulpit from Menomonie was continued until the summer of 1890, when it was given up, owing to the smallness of the congregation. The building being left to care for itself, soon fell into decay, and was finally sold to the then existing creamery company, who for some time used it as their plant.

The Baptist congregation in the village was organized over 30 years ago, the exact date being uncertain, as all the original members have passed away. When the Methodists erected their new building, however, in 1893, the Baptists purchased their old one, which was a small building, but which they enlarged to some extent by putting on an addition. They also moved it to a more easterly location. Though the congregation is now small, it has a resident pastor, the Rev. Mr. Anderson, and regular services are held.

At quite an early period some people of the Adventist faith held cccasional services in the country near Knapp, and continued to do so until an Adventist church was erected in the village, about 1887, so far as can be now remembered. This congregation is still in existence, though it has never had a regular pastor, it being customary for an elder to direct the services. Occasionally, however, a visiting pastor exercises that function.

Knapp was incorporated as a village in June, 1905, the incorporators being Charles Townsend, Charles M. Fletcher, Samuel M. Tufts, L. B. Roseberry and Henry Billebeau. This movement was brought about owing to the high taxes the village was paying under town government, amounting to 4 per cent. After the incorporation the tax went down to 2 per cent. Charles M. Fletcher was chosen as the first village president, T. B. Schaefer as clerk, William Miller treasurer, Samuel M. Tufts assessor, and George Gibson, George Carpenter, R. D. Waterson, George Myers, Andrew J. Nutter, Warren Green and W. W. Chapple trustees, Mr. Chapple being supervisor. The incorporation was opposed by the town officials, who declined to let Mr. Tufts take the books when he wished to make out his assessment lists, but his thorough local knowledge enabled him to dispense with them.

Previous to 1921 home gasoline plants were generally used for lighting purposes, but in that year the lines of the Burkhardt Electric Light & Power Co. were put through the village, the power plant being located at F urkhardt on Apple River, but the headquarters of the company being at Hudson. For domestic water pur, oses there are individual wells, this supply being supplemented by a town reservoir fed from a spring, the water being piped from the reservoir to the watering trough and distributing place. The village hall, built 25 years ago, was burned in the spring of 1924. In addition to the enterprises already named the village possesses a fairly good-sized hotel, four or five general merchandise stores, a drug store, a grocery, a notion and variety store, a pool hall, barber shop, garage, two blacksmith's shops, the lumber yard of D. E. Kiser, a Cameron lumber yard, the Knapp Co-operative Exchange elevator, and a small screen manufactory with M. S. Sampson proprietor. Open air moving picture shows are being exhibited in the village once a week (1924), as they are in several other villages in the county, and will be continued during the summer, the expense being paid by the business men.

Since Knapp became a community center the lodges of several fraternal orders have been established here. Those now active are the following:

Ridgley Lodge No. 164, I. O. O. F., was chartered June 7, 1882, and now has a membership of about 96. The lodge owns a building in which is a large room used both by the Odd Fellows and by several other lodges. The Odd Fellows membership has fluctuated greatly, at one time being down to eight members—just enough to fill the offices—and at another being up to 104. The present condition, however, is good.

Valley Lodge No. 98, Daughters of Rebekah, the woman's branch of the Odd Fellows, was chartered June 8, 1887, and was continued for a number of years, when, owning to a decrease in membership the charter was surrendered and the lodge moved to Hersey. A new Rebekah lodge, known as Sunshine Lodge No. 81, was established in Knapp in 1914, the charter bearing the date of July 2. It was started with 50 members and now has about twice that many.

Samaritan Encampment No. 72, I. O. O. F., was chartered Feb. 6, 1884, the village at that time having a considerable population. After the mills here stopped running and the population rapidly decreased, Samaritan Encampment was moved to Wilson, on invitation of the Wilson Odd Fellows. It was kept up there for a short time, but the members drifting away, the charter was surrendered. A new Encampment at Knapp, the name of which is Friendship Encampment No. 12, I. O. O. F., was chartered in March, 1913 with 24 members, and still holds meetings. John H. Knapp Lodge No. 238, F. & A. M., was instituted in 1888, its charter

John H. Knapp Lodge No. 238, F. & A. M., was instituted in 1888, its charter being dated June 13. It has continued to flourish and has now between 50 and 60 members.

Crown Camp No. 1245, M. W. A., chartered Nov. 4, 1889, has 90 members.

Knapp Camp of Royal Neighbors of America, auxiliary to the Modern Woodmen of America, was instituted August 21, 1999, with 20 members, and received a charter dated August 27, that year. It is still operating.

A Beavers' Reserve Fund Fraternity, and The Queens, a branch of the same order, were started in the village many years ago, and were consolidated under a new charter June 17, 1922, having then 13 members.

On April 30, 1884 the old soldiers of the Civil War organized in Knapp, A. K. Humphrey Post No. 148, G. A. R., and subsequently held meetings for many years until death had so thinned their ranks that further activities were given up. At present there is no American Legion post in Knapp, the young soldiers of the World War belonging mostly to the post at Wilson or that at Menomonie.

Ridgeland is an incorporated village situated in Section 6, Township 31 nort of Range 12 west, or in the political town of Wilson. It is surveyed and platted in the year 1900 by Sidney G. Jones for the Ridgeland Company, of which George M. Huss was president and F. V. Vial secretary, the plat being certified June first. Another plat was made in 1920, when the population of the village was 184, and in the following year the village was incorporated.

Ridgeland is close to the Barron County line and occupies a level site. A branch of the "Soo" Railway known as "The Blueberry," runs from Ridgeland to Park Falls in Price County. About one half of the mail for the village comes in by this road and the other half by rural route from Wheeler, which is on another branch of the "Soo." The post office was established in 1900, the year the village was first platted, George Johnson being the first postmaster, while Warren F. Grover now holds that office. There is one rural route.

Ridgeland is a convenient shipping point and place of supplies for the farmers in the northern part of Dunn County. Here are two general stores, a hardware store, one farm machinery dealer, a feed mill, a cooperative shipping association, a creamery, a blacksmith's shop, two restaurants, a hotel, a garage and two filling stations, a lumber yard, a grain elevator, potato warehouses, a shoe shop, a barber shop, a moving-picture theatre and a bank. Church and school are not lacking and the village has telephone communication. The water supply is derived from individual wells, and for protection against fire a bucket brigade has been organized which every Ridgeland worthy of the name regards as "the best in Wisconsin."

The first store in Ridgeland was started by Ole Jorstad and A. L. Pangraf under the firm name of Pangraf & Jorstad, and O. E. Willard opened the first hotel in a two-story frame building. The second hotel was opened by August L. Luer, who is still conducting it.

The children in Ridgeland first attended a joint-district school situated nearly a mile outside the village. The first schoolhouse in the village was a frame building erected in 1904. This was replaced in 1917 by a modern brick building, which is also a joint-district school. Three teachers were employed up to 1922 and since then four, as in that year a two-year high school course was instituted. Early in December, 1924, the attendance was 91 pupils in all grades. A meeting of the citizens was called for Dec. 16, 1924, to discuss the installation of electric lights in all the rooms of the school building.

In 1902 the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in the village, the Rev. Mr. Bradley being the first pastor. The edifice is a frame building with a seating capacity of 175. The pulpit is supplied from Prairie Farm.

The Ridgeland Cooperative Creamery was first started as the Ridgeland Cream-In 1904 the business men of the village bought the site and sold shares in the erv. company. In 1922 the present fine brick building was erected, which is fully installed with modern machinery including an ice-making machine. Since the organization of the company Louis Handorf has held the office of president. Ernst Kahl was the first vice president, with Albert Bongratz treasurer and H. H. Clough the first manager. Of the new company Louis Handorf was president, Ernest Kahl vice president, Ole Jorstad treasurer and E. Beiswanger manager. At the start the output of butter was sometimes as low as eight tubs per week. The growth of the concern has been very satisfactory, the figures for 1923 showing that in that year the creamery received from the farmers 1,631.480 pounds of cream and 534,212 pounds of butter fat, for which they were paid $211,114.17. The receipts were $230,777.76, or an average price for butter of $0.432 per pound. All cream was paid for f. o. b. at the farmer's door. The present officers of the company are: Louis Handorf, president; Will Gear, first vice president; John Nelson, second vice president; Fritz Scheltheiss, secretary and treasurer, and E. Beiswanger, manager.

The Ridgeland Shipping Association is a farmers' cooperative concern that was organized in October, 1916, though some shipping was done a year earlier. The concern ships all kinds of livestock and poultry, the annual shipments of stock, including hogs, amounting to about 70 carloads. The present officers are: Otto Kahl, president; John H. Nelson, vice president; A. E. Holten, secretary and treasurer, and Fred Jordan and Charles Bilse, directors.

The Farmers State Bank of Ridgeland was organized in 1913 by M. L. Randall, Ole Jorstad and Dave Russell, with a capital of $10,000.00. M. L. Randall was the first president and L. B. Thompson the first cashier. In 1914 a one-story brick building was erected, supplied with a fire-proof vault and time locks. A general banking business is done and the institution has been successful. The capital stock is now (December, 1924) the same as at the beginning, the surplus and undivided profits $3,000.00 and the deposits $181,000.00. The present officers and directors are: M. L. Randall president and director, Old Jorstad vice president and director, F. L. Van Sickle vice president and director, A. J. Mattke cashier and director, and William Jellema assistant cashier and director.

The Prairie Farm, Ridgeland & Dallas Telephone Co. was started in 1908 with connections also at Wheeler on the south, Hillsdale on the north and New Auburn on the east, and with switchboards at Prairie Farm, Ridgeland and Sand Creek. At the present time the company has about 900 subscribers and the present officers are: Frank Roamhild, president; John Rassback, vice president, and Martin Larson secretary and treasurer.

Wheeler is an incorporated village on the "Soo" railway in the southeastern corner of the town of Hay River. Its population for 1920 was given as 217 and it is close to that figure now. The history of the community dates back 40 years or more. It was first known as Welton, and as such was surveyed and platted in June, 1884, by D. W. Waite, county surveyor, for Mrs. Mariah L. Welton, a widow and early settler here. The location as defined on the plat was: "Part of the N. E. 1/4 of the N. W. 1/4 of Section 36, Township 30 north of Range 13 west." An addition, called Bullock's Addition, was surveyed in the same month and year by J. H. Webster for Louisa L. Bullock, but was not recorded until Nov. 8, 1889. In October, 1908, an addition was surveyed and platted for Patrick Nooney. All these are recorded as plats of Welton, or of a part of it. Other plats, however, have been recorded as additions to Wheeler, one for Andrew Lien in April, 1913; one in the same year for Thomas E. Lunn, Robert R. Porter, W. F. Stark and Amund Olson, and two for Patrick Nooney in 1917. Mr. Nooney, who came to the village in 1892, put up a business block, in which he and his wife for three years conducted a general store. For 15 years they also kept a hotel, later conducting it for awhile as a board-ing-house.

The two earliest settlers now living in the village are Frank J. Basner and Martin Lefstad. Mr. Basner says that when he arrived here in 1886 there were about half a dozen buildings on the village site, among them being the grain house now in use, though not the elevator. The railroad had been built a year and a half before and the railroad company had named the station Lochiel, though the post office was called Wheeler and the village Welton. There was at the same time a post office called Lochiel three miles to the north, where there was also a store and small settlement.

At Welton, or what is now Wheeler, a store had been started before Mr. Basner came by S. A. Sherburne and H. D. Wheeler, who conducted business under the name of Sherburne & Wheeler. The latter was the first postmaster here and it was in his honor that the village subsequently took its present name, as about 1892 or 1893 the people got the railroad company to change the name of the station to Wheeler. The village, therefore, became known as such, and the general adoption of that name followed in time.

The Sherburne-Wheeler store burned down and the partners left instead of rebuilding. It was for that cause that in 1886 Mr. Basner came here from Eau Claire, considering it a good business opening. He started another store and has now been engaged in business here for 38 years. In early days Jess Cisco had a saloon and boarding-house here, M. M. Granger, a Civil War pensioner, conducted a small grocery, Martin Lefstad was blacksmith, and William Buckley established the first hotel in the village. A pioneer of the town of Hay River was Nathaniel Crosby, who called himself the "Father of the Town," as he had taken a prominent part in having it set off.

The village had a slow growth, and by 1892 had a population of about 50. It had two brickyards, one operated by Echart & Co. and the other managed by William Kindred, and a sawmill for the manufacture of railroad ties and wagon spokes, owned and conducted by F. J. Marshall & Co. The manufacture of railroad ties was one of the important industries in early days, and the harvesting of the blueberry crop was another. Nowadays there are not so many blueberries, and what there are are bought up by city people, the local residents not getting any.

The brick yard already alluded to as having been managed by William Kindred, and which was a mile and a half east and south from the village, was for a few years quite an important concern. The business was started in 1887 by the Minnesota Brick Co., who invested $150,000 in the plant, which included, in addition to the brick yards and sheds, a hotel, blacksmith's shop and livery stables. The buildings were large and imposing in appearance. William Kindred was superintendent. There was a deposit of good clay here for brick making purposes, and the prospects seemed good for success, but owing to lack of practical experience and other causes, the concern failed in 1894.

Another enterprise which failed to realize initial expectations was a feed mill started in 1904 by Lester and Laverne Butterfield, two farmer boys who sold their farms to get the $7,000 which they put into the business for building and machinery. They failed to make good and the property was taken over by Minneapolis people on a mortgage, the Butterfield boys leaving town and going, one (Laverne) to Alaska and the other (Lester) to Panama as a soldier in the U. S. army. The Minneapolis people who took over the mill ran it for awhile, but they, too, got into financial difficulties, and 10 or 12 years ago the mill stopped running.

About 1905 Christ Johnson established an industry that is still flourishing, the Concrete Silo Manufacturing Co. He makes house, barn and silo cement blocks and has built up a good business. Five years ago he put up a new building, 34×94 feet in ground plan, which is no larger than he needs for the amount of product he turns out.

Robert R. Porter, the present postmaster of the village, who came to Wheeler in 1894, for some years conducted a warehouse here, buying and selling grain, potatoes and other produce. Martin Lefstad conducted his blacksmith shop from 1885 to 1904, adding a woodworking department and also dealing in farm implements. He still continues in the implement business and also conducts a hardware store.

In August, 1917, Arthur Heinsohn came to Wheeler from Downing and started what is now the Wheeler feed mill, which he conducted under that name for three years. At the end of that time he sold it to the Wisconsin Milling Co., who employed Albert Giere as manager.

The Wheeler creamery was built in 1903 and for a number of years was a cooperative farmers' enterprise; but as such it was not successful, and in the fall of 1914 it was bought by Walter Stolpe, who has continued to operate it. In 1923 he bought from the farmers 645,000 pounds of cream, paying out $78,940.00 and made 207,077 pounds of butter.

By 1912 the village began to feel the need of a banking institution and the Wheeler State Bank was founded, the incorporators being D. C. Coolidge, A. H. Breitengross, P. A. Beebe, Martin Lefstad, Andrew O. Lien, Ole Pererson, L. H. Rockwell, Jr., R. F. Breitengross and Pat Nooney. The first officers were: D. C. Coolidge, president; A. H. Breitengross, vice president; and A. Pederson, cashier. The directorate included the above mentioned officers, together with Martin Lefstad, O. O. Tuveng, Swen Anderson and P. A. Beebe. The capital was $10,000 and on starting business the bank occupied a part of the Lefstad hardware store until its present building was erected, which was a few months later. In 1914 A. Pederson was succeeded as cashier by P. Hovden, who is still serving as such. In the same year A. H. Breitengross was succeeded as vice president by R. F. Brietengross, who has since remained in that position. In 1920 the capital stock of the bank was doubled and is now $20,000; there is a surplus of $1,000 and deposits of $180,000.

The Wheeler Telephone Exchange was formerly under control of the Knapp Telephone Co., whose lines also took in the village of Boyceville, but in 1914 the Wheeler and Boyceville branches became independent concerns, and now each company controls lines to a distance extending half way between its home office and the other villages mentioned. Connection is made through Menomonie with the Bell long distance system. The Wheeler Telephone Co. has at present about 225 phones. The president is August Sahlie, the vice president Ole O. Tuving, and the secretary R. F. Breitengross.

In addition to the business interests already mentioned, the O. & N. Lumber Co. has a yard here, there are three potato warehouses, a Gedney salting station, two garages and a service station, a hotel kept by H. U. Owen, three general stores, one of which has a furniture department, a hardware store, a millinery store, two restaurants, a meat market and a blacksmith's shop.

In 1915 a Commercial Club was organized, but after awhile the interest died out and the club became inactive. On Jan. 10, 1920, it was reorganized and has since proved an active factor in the progress of the village. It introduced the electric lighting system, and has caused a small park to be started near the railroad tracks, money being raised by voluntary subscription, a piece of land leased from the railroad company and flowers planted. The benefits of electric light have been enjoyed for the last four years, the power being obtained from the lines of the Northern Wisconsin Light & Power Co., with headquarters at Amery, Wis. Wednesday is bargain day in Wheeler and in the evening outdoor moving pictures are exhibited by a Minneapolis concern, the local merchants and other citizens contributing funds to meet the expense. Geo. Hilson is agent at Wheeler for the "Soo" line, and Dr. R. A. Draper has practiced medicine here since May, 1914, having succeeded Dr. J. J. Curtain, whose practice he purchased.

The question of incorporating the village came up in May, 1922, and the incorporation was carried into effect in the spring of 1923. A volunteer fire department was started on Jan. 14, 1924, an Ajax chemical being purchased, with axes and ladders. There are ten men in the department, with F. J. Basner as chief. At the same time that the question of incorporation of the village came up—or in the spring of 1922—a waterworks company was formed, which has 12 stockholders. The system consists of a circular cement tank, 16 feet deep and 16 feet in diameter, into which water is pumped from a well 286 feet deep by a windmill and from the tank is piped to the houses of the stockholders. Other residents obtain their domestic water from private wells.

The first postmaster of Wheeler was H. D. Wheeler. His successor, according to present recollection, was G. W. Pepper, a preacher, who acted for a while as assistant, and after the Wheeler-Sherburne store burned and Mr. Wheeler left town, continued to take charge of the mails until the appointment of the next postmaster, Marshall Granger, using as an office a grain house which is now the property of the Wisconsin Milling Co. Mr. Granger remained postmaster until 1893, after Grover Cleveland had been a second time elected president. He appointed Frank J. Basner to the Wheeler post office and Mr. Basner served four years and three months. The latter's successor was N. Crosby, who in 1500 was ucceeded by Robert R. Porter, now serving, and who in 1908 erected the building now occupied by the post office, which is an office of the third class. Mr. Porter has also established three rural routes, one running north, another northeast, and the third northwest. The northerly route goes as far as Ridgeland and takes care of about one half of the Ridgeland mail.

The first schoolhouse in the vicinity of Wheeler was a log building across Hay River to the north, which, after being in use for three years, was burned down on the last day of the term, some 34 or 35 years ago. A school board was then organized consisting of Frank J. Basner, F. S. Sherwood and Dan Budd, and built in the village a frame schoolhouse of one room, the land for the purpose being donated by Mrs. Mariah L. Welton. That building forms part of the present one, an addition having been built on to it so as to convert it into a two-room building. It is now an eight-grade school with two teachers. For the term ending in May, 1924, the primary room had 46 pupils and the senior room 36.

At quite an early day religious services were held in the country surrounding Wheeler, one of the means of grace being a Baptist chapel car, which came to the village occasionally. This was before any church was built here.

A congregation of the Evangelical Church of the Wisconsin Conference was organized in Wheeler a number of years ago, and is known as Evangelical Grace Church. For a number of years this place was only a preaching point, having no parsonage and being served by pastors from other places. In 1909 the church edifice now in use, was erected, a neat frame building of fair seating capacity, which has been kept in good condition up to the present time. In 1914 the pastor serving the congregation was the Rev. R. A. Buschweiler, and he was followed in 1915 by the Rev. E. J. Aubach, and the latter by the Rev. John E. Marks. The Rev. W. G. Schulz came in April, 1916. He built the parsonage and was resident pastor here for four years, leaving in 1920. For a year after his departure no appointment was made, but the Rev. A. O. Boettcher of Prairie Farm looked after the circuit that year and preached occasionally in Wheeler. The Rev.P.E. Walter was pastor one year, 1921-22, being succeeded May 2, 1922, by the present pastor, Rev. William Croft. The church is a mission connected with the Boyceville and Oak Grove congregations, the former of which has a membership of 27 and a church located a mile and a half east of Boyceville on County Trunk Road K, and the latter being a small congregation that meets in a schoolhouse. One or two services are held in Wheeler ever Sunday and at the other two points every other Sunday, all being under the charge of the pastor at Wheeler.

The Norwegian Lutherans also have a congregation in Wheeler, which was organized about the year 1902, and a year later a small church building was erected one mile southwest of the village, an acre of land, through the solicitation of F. J. Basner, having been donated as a site by the railroad company. The congregation might have secured two acres, but thought one was enough. Later, however, when it was too late to get land for nothing, they secured one quarter more through purchase. In 1908 they erected their present church in the village, a good frame building, and the original site is now a graveyard. This congregation began with nine members and now has 37. It was formerly served from Prairie Farm, but now the pastors come chiefly from Glenwood City.

The Modern Woodmen and Royal Neighbors have camps in the village. I. M. Gates Camp No. 6393, M. W. A., has a charter dated April 12, 1899, showing the names of 27 members. Five members of this camp rendered service to their country in the World War, namely, Harold W. Lei, Edward Fellback, Harry E. and William E. Budd and Andrew Erickson. Wheeler Camp No. 3253, R. N. of A., was instituted Oct. 10, 1902, the date on its charter being October 27. It started with 21 members.

In connection with Wheeler should be mentioned the Big Beaver Cheese and Butter Co., whose factory is situated on Beaver Creek, on rural route No. 3 out of Wheeler. This company was started 23 years ago by the neighboring farmers as a cooperative concern, which it has since remained. The original building, still standing, is now used for a garage, the one now used as the factory having been built four or five years ago. This concern has had a successful career and turns out a considerable quantity of American twin cheese.

CHAPTER XX

UNINCORPORATED VILLAGES AND PLACE NAMES

In this chapter it has been thought proper to include not only those unincorporated villages in the county that are communal entities at the present time, but also those whose periods of business and social activity belong to a past time, and to add to them mention of certain places that have never at any time attained the importance of villages but which for one reason or another have become known by name to the inhabitants of the county past or present and the names of which, therefore, have a certain historical significance. The alphabetical method of arrangement has been chosen as the simplest.

Amy, a mile or so northeast of the center of the town of Spring Brook, never rose to the dignity of a village or even a hamlet, but a post office was formerly located here, as shown by the county atlas published in 18d3. A Baptist church was also organized in the locality, in which occasional services were held 15 to 20 years ago by the Rev. R. H. Vaughn, a Congregational minister of Elk Mound.

Baxter is a small community center on the bank of Hay River in the town of Hay River and about nine miles north of the village of Wheeler. Its exact geographical location is defined as "in the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 3, Township 30 north of Range 13 west." The nearest railroad is the "Soo" passing through Wheeler. About 15 or 16 years ago a creamery was started here which has since been turned into a cheese factory, one of the best in the county. Andy Baxter at the same time opened a general store which he is still conducting. Both these enterprises are up to date and there is also a blacksmith's shop and garage, besides half a dozen or more houses.

Blairmoore was formerly a post office in Section 31, town of Wilson. It is said to have been named for a Mr. Blair, who lived for a while in the neighborhood.

Carrolton, was formerly a station on the Wisconsin Central Railway (now the "Soo") in Section 4, town of Tainter. In November, 1884, David D. Darling had D. W. Waite plat the site of a village here, but no village ever grew up.

Caryville is a station, hamlet and post office on the Chippewa Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in the northern part of the political town of Rock Creek. It is also on State Highway No. 85 giving direct road communication with Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls to the northeast and with Durand to the southwest.

Caryville was settled as early as 1855 but has never attained much size as a village. On Sept. 5, 1883, a survey of the site, or what must have been nearly the site, was made by D. W. Waite, county surveyor, by order of George Schuyler Pierce and wife Martha, and a plat was made and recorded under the name of "The Village of Pierce," the location being defined as "in the eastern part of Section 11, Township 26 north of Range 11 west." This plat was rescinded Nov. 12, 1883, and in May, 1892, another survey and plat were made for the Milwaukee Land Co., of which John W. Cary was president, the location being defined as "the south half of the northeast quarter of Section 11, Township 26 north of Range 11 west." It was from this Mr. Cary that the village took its name. The post office was called Caryville as early as 1886, if not before, as it thus appears in an atlas of the county published in that year.

The present noticeable features of Caryville are, after the station, the general store of Geo. B. Plumer, formerly station agent, who bought out O. M. Smith in 1913; a grain elevator, and a hall used for lodge and community meetings. The residences are not many but are neat and homelike in appearance. The grain elevator belongs to the R. E. Jones Company of Wabasha, Minn. It was built by the Milwaukee Elevator Co., who conducted it for three years, selling it at the end of that time to the Armour Grain Co., who also had it for about three years, and from them it was bought some four or five years ago by the R. E. Jones Company. Carl Froseth has been manager from the beginning.

The post office is of the fourth class, with one rural route which covers about 28 miles, passing through Rock Falls and to the southeast. Mrs. Alice M. Plumer has been postmistress since 1910, having succeeded Mrs. Ann C. Wagner, who had the office previously for about three years.

Caryville Camp No. 5480. M. W. A., was started in July, 1899. It has a small membership and meetings are held but rarely. The Ladies branch, Mayflower Camp, R. N. A., was organized about 1910 and meets once a month. There is a district school in the village, and a local telephone company, called the Caryville Telephone Co., of which Geo. B. Plumer is the secretary and treasurer. Near the village, in Section 2, Town 26 north of Range 11 west, there is a ferry across the Chippewa River.

Cedar Falls, located in Section 6, town of Red Cedar, and on the Red Cedar River, which is crossed at this point by a bridge, was settled in 1856. In 1859 a water-power mill was built here by the Gilbert Brothers from Gilbert's Creek, and they sold it later to Berry & McCormick, the "Berry" of this firm being Dr. W. A. Berry, an eye specialist, whose name has been confused by former historians with that of a Frenchman named Burry, who, if not the first settler here, was at least a pioneer of the village. Berry & McCormick sold out to Maxwell, McGilton & Co., the latter member of which firm, John H. McGilton, was one of the notable pioneers of Dunn County. He was born in Clinton County, N. Y., in 1825, son of Thomas and Isabella McGilton of Dublin, Ireland. He emigrated to Canada about 1838, and came to Dunn County in 1856, settling first in Eau Galle, where he followed the trade of millwright. It was in 1865 that he came to Cedar Falls and bought a half interest in the mill property. He also owned 800 acres of land and was elected to the legislature in 1880.

Maxwell, McGilton & Co. operated their mill for 10 years and it was then sold by the sheriff to S. A. Jewett & Co., who disposed of it to Hayley, Pitcher & Co. The plant was later purchased by the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, early operators here, who made additions to it from time to time, and a spur from the "Omaha" railway was run into the village for freight purposes, and was operated until the mill closed. In the early 90's, in addition to the lumber mills, there were large planing and shingle mills, the capacity of the sawmill being about 100,000 feet in a day of 11 hours. About 100 men were employed and the population of the village was 250, half of them being Norwegians. Some 25 families belonged to the Scandinavian Evangelical Church, which was served by the Rev. L. Lund of Menomonie, who visited the place once a month.

James Galdwell, who arrived about 1879, was proprietor for a number of years of the Cedar Falls house. The three Harrington brothers, Edwin L., George and John, came to Cedar Falls in 1878 and bought land in the village and also on Sherburne Prairie. In addition to farming they also, about 1877, built a large stone building in the village and for four years conducted a store in it, at the end of which time they sold to G. W. Horton, who had another store, which was run for the benefit of the mill. The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company when they quit in the fall of 1890 sold their store to Oscar Fitch.

In one of the plat books in the courthouse at Menomonie is the record of a plat called "Harrington's Addition" to Cedar Falls, though the present editor was unable to find a copy of the original plat. The History of Northern Wisconsin, published in 1881, gave the population of Cedar Falls as 50, adding, "The place has a prosperous appearance." Ten years later as already shown, it was five times as great.

The glory of the old mills has passed away, together with most of the people, and the chief object of interest here now is the large dam and power plant built in 1910 and now owned by the Northern States Power Company. There are also at Cedar Falls a general store, garage, grist mill and a Methodist Episcopal church. The church is a frame structure with a seating capacity of 113. The congregation was organized many years ago when the village was large and prosperous. It is served every Sunday from Menomonie. Comfort, in Section 34, town of Weston, on a short branch of the "Omaha" Railway, was once platted as a village by William J. Starr of Eau Claire, who had a lumber camp here. He built a small warehouse, a platform and a box car station, and for a while, especially about 1909, there was a considerable passenger traffic to and from this point, even more than there was at Weston, the terminus of the railroad. The platform and box car are still in evidence, but otherwise the place is nothing but a name and a memory. No village ever developed here.

Connersville is a hamlet in the town of New Haven on the intersection of the lines between Sections 27-28 and 33-34, and on the south fork of Hay River. It is not on a railroad but is traversed by State Highway No. 64. Connersville was settled in 1865. In the early 70's and for a number of years thereafter the stage route from Menomonie to Prairie Farm passed through the village and a post office was established here; but about 1879 or 1880 the office was moved to a point two miles to the northwest, where it remained until after the building of the Wisconsin Central Railroad some six or seven miles to the south. The village is now served from Downing.

Connersville was named after David Conners, a well known pioneer of this region. The Roberts family were also prominent here in early days, Leslie Roberts, it is said, starting the first store in or about the year 1879. He later sold it to Charles Hendrickson, by whom it was conducted for 15 years, at the end of which time Mr. Hendrickson sold out to Joseph Fujko. The second store was started by David H. Clark, who is still conducting it. Two years ago Carl Byrd opened a third store. Fred Christianson conducts a blacksmith shop and H. R. Knoepke a garage.

The village has had a slow growth and has always been small. In 1890 it had about 40 inhabitants and there were a sawmill and a feed mill here. About the same time the farmers started a cooperative creamery, which is still flourishing, and the people have a community church, previous to which time religious meetings were held in the schoolhouse. The Rev. Mr. Boyne, a Methodist minister from Prairie Farm, preached here some 50 years ago as one of several places that he visited in northern Dunn County, Connersville being as far south as he got. In 1880, when the hamlet had a population of 25, there was a Methodist mission here, the Rev. J. Q. Helm serving Connersville and Nanceville, and the Methodist church has ever since continued to minister to the spiritual needs of some of the residents. The German Lutherans have lately bought a schoolhouse and remodeled it for church purposes. The feed and sawmill of Henry Schlough has been operated for the last nine or ten years, and there is a filling station in the village for cars. There are about a dozen residences, and Bolan Camp, No. 6568, M. W. A., is active with a number of members.

The name Bolan needs further mention, as it was the early name of the village, as shown by a plat preserved in the courthouse at Menomonie, which is entitled "A Plat of Bolan," the location being described as "A part of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Section 27 Township 31, north of Range 14 west." This site was surveyed in November, 1885 by J. H. Webster for F. L. Roberts. An atlas published in 1888 gives the name of Bolan to the dot which represents the village, while immediately underneath appear the words "Connersville P. O." In time the place took the name of the post office and that of Bolan was dropped, except as preserved in the name of the Modern Woodmen Camp.

Davis some 35 years ago was a settlement in the town of Sherman, about five miles east of Knapp. It had a post office.

Downsville is an unincorporated village on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in the town of Dunn, eight miles south of Menomonie. It is on the Red Cedar River and has a very picturesque situation, the bluffs on each side of the valley rising to a considerable height. State Highway No. 25 runs north and south through the village, furnishing good road communication with Durand, Menomonie and other points. Some time ago J. C. Ticknor, in a paper read before the Old Settlers' Society, said in regard to Downsville:

"On June 22, 1855, Ebenezer Thompson selected the lands where the village of Downsville is located, on which he built a small sawmill, cutting a short ditch across the bend in the Red Cedar River, and using this ditch as a mill race; but high water soon enlarged the ditch until it became the main channel. On Feb. 24, 1858, Thompson deeded his interests in this mill to B. B. Downs, who built a dam across the river at this point, and by his name was the village known."

The first survey and plat recorded were made in May, 1859, for B. B. Downs and Ebenezer Thompson and included 22 blocks, whole and fractional, in Sections 34 and 35, Township 27 north of Range 13 west. A second plat was recorded Jan. 7, 1861, of 20 blocks, whole and fractional, made for Burrage B. Downs. Another plat was made March 5, 1883, by D. W. Waite, county surveyor, and a "First addition to Downsville" was recorded July 8, 1885. In June, 1885, a cemetery was surveyed and laid out.

Captain Downs sold his mill to Knapp, Stout & Co., who enlarged and improved it, increasing its capacity to 100,000 feet in a day of 11 hours. They had planing and shingle mills in connection with it and gave employment to about 100 men, keeping a boarding-house, which was managed for them by S. C. Rogers. They also conducted a store for some years, selling it in 1891 to Sam and John Kyle. In 1883 there occurred a great flood which washed out the dam and railway tracks, and the Knapp-Stout people, then operating under the name of Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, got Captain Downs, who was a man of good constructive ability, to come back and repair the damage. This flood is usually referred to by the local residents as "The second big washout."

The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company finished their work here in September, 1900, and tore down their mill and took it away, leaving Frederick Borm, their manager, to close out their local business for them. About that time, and previously, John Coats owned and operated a steam feed mill, which he continued to do until 1892. Soon after that he died and the mill was subsequently dismantled. Another feed mill was built at a distance of about two blocks from the site of the Coats' mill, and was operated for about two years by Henry Ames. He sold it to Reuben Warren, who sold it out to a man who had it for a while and then left the village, going to Cedar Falls. Then two young men ran the mill for a while. For the last three or four years it has been operated by Annis & Wing.

On June 7, 1905, occurred the third big flood in the Red Cedar, the water reaching the highest point ever known. It washed out two wagon bridges, one at Menomonie and one at Irvington, and at Downsville it carried away the railroad bridge, washed out the east side dam and the banks of the river to within 30 feet of the lumber office, also taking away a part of the lumber yard. The reconstruction of the dam after this disaster changed the course of the river, and shortened it, as, instead of describing a wide loop as it formerly did, it now pursues a comparatively straight course at this point. The location of the railway depot and lumber yard have also been changed, as they are now 1,000 feet farther north than the former depot and yard were.

When the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company left here, George Whinnery bought their sleeping shanty and turned it into a store, with a hall upstairs, which was used as a lodge room by the Modern Woodmen. This building was burned on March 24, 1904, and the Woodmen lost their charter and regalia. Ole Quarn then built his present store on the site. The lumber yard was started August 24, by Frederick Borm, its present proprietor, who deals in hemlock, white pine and western fir; also in cement and general building material. The Knapp-Stout store, sold to Kyle Bros., is now conducted by Harry Kyle, son of John, and this and the Ole Quarn store represent the present mercantile interests of the village. Ralph W. Loomis conducted a store here for four years and a half, starting in 1915. The hotel, built many years ago—a large and well preserved building—has passed through a number of hands, and for the last five or six years has been conducted by John Wolf. For the last five years Reed & Murdock have had a salting station in Downsville.

The Downsville Co-operative Creamery, said to be the largest in the county, was incorporated in 1903 by a number of farmers of this locality, who started the business in the building now in use, though it has since been twice enlarged. The first butter was made June 10, 1904, by Thomas Wittig, the creamery already having 126 patrons. The original building was $26 \ge 60$ feet in surface dimensions and the first addition, made ten years later, measured 14 ≥ 60 feet. This sufficed for another ten years and then the second addition, of brick, $26 \ge 50$ feet, was built (1924) costing about \$11,000. The first officers of the concern were: D. C. Billings, president; Henry Bates, vice president; Dean McDonald, secretary, and Amos Smith, treasurer. R. E. Bundy was an additional director. Mr. McDonald having resigned one month after the business was started, Frederick Borm succeeded him and has since served as secretary. The present officers have held their positions for at least ten years—the treasurer and secretary since the first organization, except for the month that Mr. McDonald was secretary. These officers are: T. B. Denning, president; C. N. Whinnery, vice president; Frederick Borm, secretary and manager; Amos Smith, treasurer, and John Roth, director.

The following selected statistics show the growth and size of the business:

Figures for the first half year, June 10 to Dec. 3, 1904.—Pounds of cream bought, 328,479; pounds of butter made, 114, 645; amount received for same, $20,999.13. 1905—Pounds of cream bought, 711,430; pounds of butter made, 242,289; amount received for same, $51,738.34.

1924—Pounds of cream bought, 3,212,920; pounds of butter made, 1,155,275; amount received for same, $455,851.34. The total for 20 years is as follows: Pounds of cream bought, 35,540,746; pounds of butter made, 12,725.721; amount received for same, $4,643,840.59. The amount paid the farmers during that period was $4,282,983.82.

The Downsville Telephone Co. was organized in 1903 and in the following year combined with the Louisville Telephone Co. under the present name. The lines take in the village of Weston on the west, Fall City on the east, and Dunnville on the south. The company has 214 phones on its own lines, and has connections with the Eau Galle Telephone Co., the Elmwood Telephone Co. and the Wisconsin Telephone Co. E. B. Young is president of the company, Henry Miller vice president, Fred Borm secretary, manager and treasurer, and T. B. Downing and J. T. Larson are directors.

The Farmers and Merchants State Bank was organized by W. R. Thomas in 1916, the articles of incorporation being dated September 25. The bank opened for business on May 19, 1917, with a capital of $10,000 and a surplus of $1,000. H. L. Kyle was president, and John Roth vice president. W. R. Thomas, who had been chosen cashier at the time of organization, held that office nominally until a week before the opening of the bank, when he sold his interest and dropped out, S. H. Feldman taking his place. The directorate included the officers with the addition of R. W. Loomis and Alex Norb. A good substantial building of Dunnville stone had been erected, roomy and comfortable, and provided with modern equipment. The changes which have since taken place in the personel of the institution have been as follows: During the war period S. H Feldman was in the navy, having enlisted therein on April 25, 1918 and serving until March 15, 1919. In the interval his place as cashier was supplied by his brother H. O. Feldman. In 1918 Mr. Loomis left and was succeeded as director by Amos Smith. A. E. Feldman, who had been the first assistant cashier, also went into the navy and there vas no assistant cashier while he was away. After that K. V. Fleming took the office, serving from January to March, 1919, when, the Feldman brothers, having returned, reassumed their former positions. Later Walter Stremel became assistant cashier, A. E. Feldman going to Bay City, Wis., to enter a bank there of which he is now cashier; and on Mr. Stremel leaving W. M. Bisson succeeded to his place. After remaining here two years, Mr. Bisson left to take a position in the First National Bank of Menomonie, and H. M. Fortney, from Wheeler, became assistant Mr. Bisson returned early in 1925, and he and his father, C. A. Bisson, cashier. bought a considerable interest in the bank; W. M. Bisson is cashier at the present time, (June, 1925). The capital of the bank remains at $10,000 but there is now (May, 1924) a surplus of $3,000 and deposits of $200,000. The bank was active in war work whenever possible, and has been helpful to the community in various ways.

The first post office in Downsville was kept in the store of Knapp, Stout & Co., and remained there after the store had been bought by Sam and John Kyle. Then H. T. Cassidy, who had worked for the Kyles, bought out another store-keeper named Drake and was postmaster for a number of years, or until his death. After that Mrs. Cassidy conducted it for a year or two. The office then passed to O. K. Ranum, who conducted a drug store in the village for four or five years. At the end of that time Mrs. Emily M. Fayerweather was appointed postmistress (Dec. 6, 1910) and has since served in that capacity, the office being located in her residence. There is no train service, Downsville being on a rural route from Menomonie, but there is also a rural route attached to the Downsville office, which goes eastward, then makes a wide curve and returns to the village from the west. Merton Turner is the rural mail carrier and had served for 17 years up to June 17, 1924, being the only carrier who had served the route.

In the early 60's there was a small frame schoolhouse in Downsville, which stood on the site of the present Cantrell garage, and which was afterwards converted into a store. Some time after the erection of this, a schoolhouse was built about a mile west of the river. Then in the early or middle 70's a frame school building was erected across the river about a quarter of a mile southwest of the village, the other two schoolhouses going out of use. This schoolhouse built in the 70's is still in use and has been supplemented by another building erected near it, the two together forming the district school, namely, Joint District No. 2, Dunn and Weston. It is a nine-grade school, the ninth grade corresponding to the first year of high school, and has three teachers. Daniel S. Brill is the present principal, he having succeeded Archie Schaefer in that office in the fall of 1924. In the same district, four miles north of Downsville, there is another schoolhouse, with one room and one teacher, making four teachers in the district.

In the early 60's the Rev. Mr. Gurley, a Methodist elder who resided in Pepin, visited Downsville occasionally and conducted services. Other preachers also came, including the Rev. Mr. Doughty and the Rev. John Holt, the latter from Louisville, Dunn County, where there was, and still is, a Methodist church and parsonage. The small frame edifice that is now the Methodist church in Downsville was formerly used as a union chapel, but in time the Methodists obtained control and the building is now owned by them. The congregation numbers about 30 people and services are held about once in every two weeks. There is a Sunday school of 30 children, and a Ladies' Aid Society which meets once a month and renders valuable aid in support of the church, giving lunches, suppers, and other entertainments in order to raise funds. On certain occasions they have cleared $100 or more.

About half a mile from the village to the south is a German Lutheran Church. The congregation was organized about the year 1875, or at least meetings began to be held about that time in private houses, the visiting pastors coming from Pepin, Mondovi, Menomonie, and other places. In 1900 the church edifice was erected, being dedicated in June that year, and since then the congregation has been served from Menomonie, the pastor for the last seven or eight years being the Rev. John Woerth. There are now about 14 or 15 families in the congregation, and there is a Ladies' Aid Society in connection with the church. Jacob and Christiana Herman had bought the land, including the site both of the church and of Rosehill Cemetery, from Stephen Tibbetts, a pioneer, and the cemetery which they had surveyed and laid out is still owned in the family. Jacob Herman, Jr., and Jacob Flick also helped materially to get the church started by going around and obtaining subscriptions.

In addition to the cemetery above mentioned there are two others close to the village. One of these—the Parnell Cemetery—is the oldest in or near Downsville, and it is here that the remains of nearly all of the earliest settlers of this locality repose. It is located half a mile west of the village. It is now used only occasionally. The other is the Riverview Cemetery, east of the village, which is managed by the Riverview Cemetery Association. In Downsville's busy days, when the lumber industry was flourishing, and there were about 500 residents here, the village had a Norwegian Lutheran congregation, which was organized in December, 1888, by the Rev. L. Lund of Menomonie. Beginning with 40 members, it was subsequently increased to 60 or more. The closing of the mills two years later caused practically all the members to drift away to seek a living elsewhere, and services ceased to be held. The same cause led to the abandonment or break-up of a Norwegian Methodist congregation which flourished here for a while about the same time as the Lutheran congregation. Neither of the Norwegian congregations had a church building, the members meeting in each other's homes or in what is now the Methodist church.

Downsville may be regarded as an ideal rural community. Its situation on the river fringed with bluffs, is attractive; its school is good, and social activities enter largely into the life of the village. Its short distance from Menomonie, with which it has direct rail communication, together with good roads (State Highways Nos. 25 and 51) for automobile travel, join the conveniences of the city to the advantages The water for domestic purposes is obtained in most cases from of the country. individual wells. A small waterworks system was put in, however, in the summer of 1921 and supplies some seven or eight families with pipe water. The source of supply is an artesian well, the water being raised by a Rife hydraulic ram to a tank having a capacity of 55 barrels. The system was installed at a cost of only $1,500 and has proved economical. As yet the village has no electric lighting system, the people using lamps or gasolene home light plants. A garage and a blacksmith's shop should be mentioned as among the business enterprises. In 1923 a band was started which is making good progress under the direction of Mr. E. L. Edes, present county superintendent of schools.

During the last 30 years or so a number of fraternal societies have established lodges in Downsville, which have filled a useful social purpose aside from their insurance features. These will now be briefly alluded to.

Downsville Camp No. 2356, M. W. A., was first chartered June 18, 1894, but the original charter was lost in the fire that destroyed the lodge building in March, 1904. A new charter, dated April 30, 1904, was then obtained, which shows the names of 11 members. The camp has now nearly 80 members.

Riverside Camp No. 3115, R. N. A., was instituted June 28, 1902. It also lost its original charter in the fire above mentioned and was granted a new one, dated Feb. 7, 1905.

Juvenile Camp No. 3115, R. N. A., was chartered Sept. 1, 1922, with 11 members.

Downsville Lodge No. 196, I. O. O. F., was instituted May 20, 1893. Like the Woodmen, it has had trouble from fire, losing its original charter and other property when its first hall was burned. Its second charter is dated March 27, 1908. In the year in which it secured its new charter (1908) the lodge erected a fine stone building, two stories high and of attractive appearance, in which it now holds its meetings, the same hall being used by the auxiliary lodge of Rebekahs. The first floor of this building consists of a good-sized dance hall, with stage, suitable for entertainments of various kinds and general community meetings, while upstairs are the lodge rooms with a kitchen department attached. The board of directors at the time the building was constructed consists of W. E. Dean, C. E. Fisher, Al Fayerweather and O. M. Laughlin, with W. H. McIvor general manager, and H. Walter contractor. The lodge has now about 70 members.

Marie Lodge No. 142, Rebekahs, was instituted Jan. 28, 1896. Like the men's lodge it lost its original charter by fire, but secured a duplicate one, dated March 27, 1908, which shows the names of 14 members. The lodge now has several times that many.

Downsville Colony No. 286, Beavers' Reserve Fund Fraternity, was incorporated Jan. 20, 1902. The names of nine members show on the charter, but there were 25 present at the first regular meeting, and it is now a good-sized colony.

Golden Rod Colony No. 135 of Queens (the ladies' auxiliary to the Beavers) started shortly after with 14 members and has had a satisfactory growth. The Beavers meet in the Odd Fellows hall.

Scme reminiscences of Downsville in early days, written by Mrs. Thomas Huey, may be found in Chapter XXI of this volume.

Dunnville, the first county seat of Dunn County, and a former point of operations of Knapp, Stout & Co., but which as a village passed out of existence many years ago, and is now a place of no importance except for the stone quarries in its vicinity, was situated on the Red Cedar River about a mile and a half above where it enters into the Chippewa. It was named in honor of Judge Dunn. Today the Menomonie branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway passes through the site of this former village, of which some 70 years ago much was hoped and expected.

As early as 1840 the first house was built on the site by a man named Lamb, who conducted it as a tavern, enjoying a considerable patronage from the rough class of lumbermen and hunters who passed this way. It is said that Lamb was an old soldier—doubtless of the War of 1912-15 with Great Britain—also that he was so dissipated as to be unfit to attend to business. He had married Margaret Demarie, an adopted daughter of Louis Demarie, a resident of what was then known as French Town. In a former history of this county was printed a story of a murder committed at Lamb's place, which is here repeated, as there are probably many people of Dunn County now living who have never heard of it, and also because, in a work which aims chiefly to present the better side of human nature and to record worthy actions, it raises the veil for a moment by way of contrast, on scenes and actions of a different kind, which were not uncommon in pioneer days in this region, when the conditions of life were rough, and whiskey was cheap and almost universally consumed, often to excess.

"In 1848 Lamb disposed of his business to his brother-in-law, Arthur McCann, who had come to the Chippewa River in the previous year with his brothers, Stephen and Dan McCann, and had recently married Rosalie Demairie, a sister of Mrs. H. S. Allen. He had in partnership with J. C. Thomas commenced in 1843, and nearly completed, the "Blue Mill," now (1892) known as the Badger State Mills, the former remaining at home. They had employed on the work a man named Sawyer, who, when his time was up, came to McCann for a settlement. The busi-ness part of the meeting disposed of, Sawyer was invited by the former to a game of cards. The play went on until evening, the men drinking freely, when a dispute arose and hot words ensued. McCann threw a scale weight at Sawyer, when the the latter at once repaired to the cabin of Philo Stone nearby, loaded his rifle, returned to the door of McCann's house and called him. When he came to the door Sawyer took deliberate aim and shot him dead. The murderer made good his escape and was never afterwards heard of, though a large reward was offered for his apprehension. The young widow then returned to her parents and afterwards married George P. Warren, the first county clerk of Chippewa County. Philo Stone took possession of the tavern. His wife was a full-blooded Chippewa squaw and proved to be a good housekeeper." (See also Chapter II, p. 18).

The same historian relates that Dunnville was first called Colburn's, after another early settler, who put up a frame building which he called a hotel, and which was conducted from 1856 to 1858 by Charles S. Curtiss. In 1843 John Macauley came to reside here. Dana Heller, who came to the county in 1856, kept a hotel in Dunnville, and also practiced dentistry and operated a farm. He was elected county treasurer in 1866. A large farm was owned in the vicinity of Dunnville by Dr. Walter Crocker and operated by him and his relatives, the Curtisses. It may also be mentioned that one of the early creameries in the county was built here and operated for some time.

Dunnville was the county seat of Dunn County from the formation of the county in 1854 to the setting off of Pepin County in 1858. In September, 1856, a plat of 42 blocks was surveyed by A. W. Miller for John H. Knapp, Henry L. Stout, Eveline Stout and others, but was not filed for record until Feb. 28, 1859. All of this plat except four blocks was vacated by order of the county board in November, 1869. An addition of 10 blocks, called "Bundy's Addition to Dunnville," was surveyed in February, 1859. The first election for county officers took place in Dunnville in November, 1856, and official business was started in a small frame building erected for the purpose by Romeyn Fiske. This was subsequently burned down and the early records destroyed.

When Dunnville was chosen as the county seat, Dunn County embraced not only the territory that is included in it today but also what is now Pepin County; but when in 1858 the latter was set off as a separate political entity, the former balance of material interests and voting power was destroyed and the county seat was shifted to Menomonie. In the early 80's there was a stage line between Dunnville and Menomonie, the stage running twice a week. E. W. Parker was the contractor and P. F. Orr the driver. The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company owned and operated their sawmill and general store up to the early 90's, at which time the place had about 80 residents. The stopping of the mill caused the place to decline and, as a village, it gradually disappeared, though the quarrying of stone has largely taken the place of the former lumber industry. (See the reminiscences of Mrs. Thomas Huey, Chapter XXI).

Eau Galle is a small village on the Eau Galle River in the southeastern part of the town of the same name, or in Township 36 north of Range 14 west. The situation is picturesque, as the river here widens into a small lake called Eau Galle Pond, caused by the building of a dam, and on the opposite side from the village are some fairly high bluffs. It is a rural community and distant some seven or eight miles from the nearest railroad, which is the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

Eau Galle is a village with a long history, though the most important events now lie in the past. White men are said to have made their appearance on the Eau Galle River as early as 1832, and in 1835, N. S. Manning, who had been in the United States' service and up the Chippewa and Red Cedar rivers after lumber to rebuild Fort Griswold, came to Eau Galle.

The real history of the place began a few years later, in 1838-39, when Capt. George Wales, a West Point graduate, in partnership with Thomas Savage and a millwright styled Captain Dix, erected a sawmill here. According to a former historian, (History of the Chippewa Valley, 1892) Captain Wales was a man of rare business capacity but of dissolute and extravagant habits. The mill was put into operation the following spring. William Carson and Henry Eaton, two young men the former from Canada and the latter from New England, visited theriver at that time, selected a location and began to get out square timber and shingles. Some months afterwards Thomas Savage (a brother-in-law of Carson) and Captain Dix disposed of their interest in the mill to the new comers and the firm became Carson, Eaton & Wales. Captain Wales attended to the financial department of the concern until he retired from it in the fall of 1844 and left the valley never to return. The mill burned but was rebuilt. According to Frank Pierce, now president of the First National Bank of Menomonie, who was in the employ of the concern for 10 yearsfrom January, 1889 to the latter part of 1898-first as bookkeeper and then as manager, Mr. Savage sold to William Carson about the year 1839, and the business, then small, was continued under the name of William Carson & Co. Not very long afterward Henry Eaton entered into partnership with William Carson under the name of Carson & Eaton. For a very short period Burrage B. Downs was a partner. Late Elbridge D. Rand of Burlington, Iowa, came in, making it Carson, Eaton & Rand, and it so remained for quite a long time. Both Downs and Rand were in the concern in 1854, as shown by a real estate abstract now in possession of B. E. Graves of Eau Galle. Downs sold out for $10,000, and in February, 1866, Mr. Eaton sold land, and it was probably at that time that he got out of the concern and went to Winona, Minn., and the subsequent style of the concern was Carson & Rand. Mr. Rand died about the year 1887, and his estate, which was large, was cared for by three trustees, Mr. T. G. Foster, Horace F. Rand (a son) and Mrs. Carrie A. Rand, the widow. Mr. Foster was the active trustee, and it was he who in January, 1889, brought Frank Pierce to Eau Galle to take the place of bookkeeper for the firm, which proved a short step to the position of manager. Some time before Mr. Pierce's advant on the scene the firm had discontinued the manufacture of lumber in Eau Galle—the pine timber having been all cut by 1879 or 1880—and remodeled the water mill into a roller flouring mill, which was one of the first, if not the first, in the state. previous grinding having been done by stones. About 1897 this mill burned and was not rebuilt. Mr. Carson, the last surviving partner of the old firm, having died, Mr. Pierce closed out the business in 1898, finally sending all documents to the heirs both of Mr. Carson and Mr. Rand at Burlington, Iowa. Since then Eau Galle has since seen nothing like its former activity, as the Carson & Rand concern, through all the latter phases of its existence, at least, was very active in handling everything which farmers produce or are interested in.

One of the live personalities of the village for many years, and general superintendent of mill and yard work for the company, was William H. Smith, who was born in Will County, Ill., in 1832, of Vermont parents, taught school as a young man, and came to Eau Galle in the spring of 1857. He married Miss Sarah J. Flint. Mr. Smith was a brother-in-law of William Carson. He has passed away, as also has Patrick Fitzgerald, another well known pioneer, who came to the village with Mr. Carson and was made outside superintendent for the company, directing and supervising the work of the men in the woods, with power to hire and discharge men according to his judgment. He was capable, honest and genial, and very He finally retired and bought a little house in the village, where he made popular. his home for the rest of his life, for ten years never going outside of it as far as James Rayburn was the original village blacksmith, and James A. Durand. Graves, father of the present postmaster, was lumber pilot on the river for Carson & Rand, and also kept a boarding-house.

The village was surveyed and platted in September, 1889, for the trustees of the estate of Elbridge D. Rand, namely, T. G. Foster, Carrie A. Rand and Horace S. Rand.

William Carson, so far as now remembered, was the first postmaster of Eau Galle and had the office for many years, some say for about 40. The next was E. M. Drake, who moved the office to the east side of the river on top of the hill, where he had a store. Daniel Barnes, who succeeded Mr. Drake and had a small confectionary store, moved it down town again. Then David Caldwell became postmaster, who was a shoemaker and had a small shop, though he did not locate the post office there. O. W. Fowler, successor to Mr. Caldwell as postmaster, moved the office to its present location next to the E. J. Nelson store, and continued to handle the mail for the next 10 or 11 years. He was succeeded by Bennett E. Graves, the present postmaster, who took the office May 13, 1915, under the first administration of President Wilson. The Eau Galle post office is one of the fourth class, with two rural routes, which were established in Postmaster Caldwell's time. One of these routes goes east and has a length of 25 miles; the other goes west and is 16 miles long. The office has 16 lock boxes and 108 call boxes.

The people here have seen three different creamery enterprises operated, the first by Carson & Rand. The second was a cooperative farmers' concern, which ran for some six or seven years, the building being located across the bridge on the east side of the river. Owing to differences of opinion among the farmers, it was not a great success and finally came to an end. There is now a good creamery in the village, installed in a modern building of stucco construction, which was erected by Hackman Bros. in 1920. In 1921 they sold out to W. M. Koage, the present proprietor, who in 1923 turned out about 151,000 pounds of butter and 4,100 gallons of ice cream.

Bennett E. Graves, who was in mercantile business in Eau Galle for 20 years, was first employed here in the brick store of Carson & Rand; afterwards in the Weinzril building, the frame building now occupied by the store of E. J. Nelson, who bought the business in May, 1923, from Mr. Graves, the latter having started it in 1907. The post office occupies the same building, a partition dividing it from the store. The Carson & Rand store was sold to George Tarrant & Sons, for whom Mr. Graves worked for six years, and they sold to Graves & Drake, the Graves of this firm being Bennett E. Graves, the present postmaster. Silas Unser also conducted a mercantile store in the village with his son, William P., as partner, for about ten years, starting about 1908. There are now three general stores in the village.

Within recent years there have been several bad fires here, one of which, about two years ago, destroyed the former Nelson store, together with E. H. Hooper's pool hall and confectionary. An active enterprise is the Topliss wagon and repair shop, started by Geo. R. Topliss and father in 1891. There is no regular hotel in Eau Galle, but Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wolf supply transients with rooms and meals. The daily stage that carries the mail between here and Durand also takes passengers. Banking facilities are found at Durand and Downsville.

The Eau Galle Telephone Company is a local concern established over 20 years ago and incorporated April 7, 1904. The lines extend out about seven miles in all directions and there are from 240 to 250 phones. The present officers of the company are: George Baer, president; A. M. Abbott, vice president; George McGilton, secretary, and B. E. Graves, treasurer.

The people in the village of Eau Galle obtain their water for domestic purposes from wells, some raising the water by windmill power, but others obtaining power from the lines of the Durand Light & Power Co., who bought out a local farmers' cooperative plant, the secretary and manager of which was William H. (known as "Dan") Huntington. The Durand Light & Power Co. was organized in 1899, William H. ("Dan") Huntington, H. M. Orlady, Frank Pierce, F. J. Gobar, A. J. Wallace, George Topliss, Jr., George Tarrant, Sr., George Tarrant, Jr., C. A. Ingram and H. D. Tanner being among the other stockholders, who numbered about 25 in all, most of them being Durand people. None of these original stockholders are now in the company. The present dam at Eau Galle was built, or completed, in 1913. In December, 1922, the company put in a new generator and have two now in use, the other having been installed in 1914. The older one is a generator of 200 kilowatts and the newer one of 250 kilowatts. Power is furnished to quite a number of families in the village, and to some outside, having home storage plants, the total number being about 50. The power plant also operates the feed mill which was formerly operated by H. D. Tanner and has been continued in use up to the present time. Harrison Boa is the present manager of the power plant at Eau Galle, while H. A. Miles is manager for the company in the Durand offices.

The first school in the village that is now remembered was kept in one end of the Carson & Eaton boarding-house in the early 60's and for probably nine or ten years subsequently. Then a school was built on the present school site and was in use until some 30 years ago at that location, when it was moved to a position nearer the center of the village. About the beginning of the present century, or soon after, the two-story school building now in use was erected, and the old one, being sold for a store, burned down a few years later. About the same time an addition was made to the present building, which houses a ten-grade school, the two highest grades corresponding to the two first years of high school There are four rooms, with as many teachers. This school is designated as Joint District No. 1 of Eau Galle and Waterville.

St. Henry's Congregation.—Previous to the year 1866 the spiritual needs of the Catholics in Eau Galle were attended to by missionary priests, who came here from different places and held occasional services. Among them was the Rev. Michael Heiss from Milwaukee, who was later archbishop of that place, and there were also some French priests. The services at first were held in private homes, but in 1859 a small frame edifice was erected for worship, which stood close to the bridge in the southwest part of the village on lots 2, 3 and 4. From 1866 Eau Galle had resident pastors, the first of whom was the Rev. Fagin, who remained two years. Then Father Florenz was here for a year. He was followed by Father Nicholas, who also spent a year here, his pastorate covering the year 1870. For the next three years the pastor was the Rev. John Meurs, at which time there were probably about 50 families in the congregation. The church began to get stronger in the early 70's after the Franco-German war. At that time there was a French parish at Dead Lake in Pepin County. The next pastor, Rev. H. Wirz, came in 1873, and was succeeded by Father G. Keller, whose pastorate lasted from 1874 to 1876. The pastor's duties were then by no means confined to the village of Eau Galle, for at that time Eau Galle was the center of a parish that included several other places as missions. From 1869 to 1877 Durand was a mission to Eau Galle; El Paso, Pierce County, was a mission to this place in 1873, 1876, 1880 and 1881; Menomonie was a mission of Eau Galle from 1869 to 1878; Mondovi and Plum City were also missions and there was a mission at East Springfield, Buffalo County. Father Edward Fraley succeeded Father Keller, and the next pastor was the Rev. M. Flammang, who was here seven months. Then came Father Joseph M. Baur, who was here from 1881 to 1883, his successor being the Rev. W. Weckes, from 1883 The Rev. Bernard Klein served as a supply from 1885 to 1892, and the to 1885. Rev. William Reading was pastor from 1893 to 1903. Father Reading did good work in building a new church, of brick veneer construction, in the west end of the village, where eight acres of land had been bought in 1883 from William Carson, and two more (also from Carson) in 1884. The building of the church was begun in 1893 and in 1894 Father Reading built the parsonage. In 1900 he built an addition to the church which caused the building to assume the form of a cross. Father Reading's successor was the Rev. Adolph Miller, who came in 1903 and remained Then Father William Ludwig spent a year as pastor in Eau Galle, until 1907. and after him the Rev. A. Douben was pastor from 1908 to October, 1912. Father Douben's successor was Rev. Joseph Laufer, who served until Feb. 10, 1917, when he was succeeded by the present pastor in charge, Rev. Joseph Steinhauser. latter had been here but a few months when, on July 5, 1917, the church edifice was struck by lightning and burned down. This was a heavy disaster for both priest and people, but Father Steinhauser took up the task of erecting a new building, and, his people responding to the call, the work on it was started in September the same year, though on account of causes connected with the war, it was not finished until February, 1919, being dedicated on May 18 following, by Bishop Schwabach. It is a nice looking building, with a ground plan of 46 x 98 feet, and has a fine basement and a belfry with three bells. There are about 400 souls or 100 families in the congregation. When Father Steinhauser first came here he had Elmwood and Farm Hill for missions, but was soon relieved of them and since no missions have been attached to Eau Galle, so regular services are held here. There are six active societies connected with the church: the Holy Name society, for men; the Catholics Knights of Wisconsin, for adults, and a juvenile branch of the same order; the Ladies' Altar Society; the Young Ladies' Sodality and the Catholic Boys' Brigade. At an early day a Catholic cemetery was laid out across the creek, but was superseded in 1882 or 1883 by the cemetery now used.

The other church in the village belongs to the Methodist Episcopal denomination. This congregation was started many years ago, the first Methodist preacher corning here in June, 1856, from Spring Creek. Rev. Mr. Gurley came about 1856 and held services in the schoolhouses and in homes. Eau Galle was then served from Arkansaw, Pepin County, but about 1884 or 1885 became a separate charge, with the Rev. F. Borgia pastor. The congregation was then a large one and about 1887 erected the present church edifice. There are now three outside appointments in connection with the charge, namely: West Chapel, situated four and a half miles west of the village, the congregation having a small building; East Chapel, also with a small building, located four miles to the east, in the locality known as Waubeek in the town of Dunn; and a congregation at Hay Creek, three miles northeast of the village, which holds services in a schoolhouse. The services in Eau Galle are held every Sunday morning, there being a meeting of the Epworth League in the evening. The congregation numbers from 85 to 90 members. A good parsonage forms a part of the church property.

In addition to the churches a camp of Modern Woodmen of America and one of Royal Neighbors, long established, afford opportunities for social meetings. John Green Post No. 167, G. A. R., was also for many years an institution of the village, where the Civil War veterans used to gather to greet each other, transact post business, and fight their battles o'er again until time so thinned their ranks that further meetings were discontinued.

Fall City is situated in the upper part of Section 30, Township 27 north of Range 11 west, and is in the political town of Spring Brook. This locality was settled in May, 1855, by several members of the Wiggins family, including Elijah, S. T., H. B. and J. W. Wiggins, also C. C. Tubbs and Silas Blodgett, all of whom had taken claims of 160 acres each a year before. At that time this region was very wild ard there were many Indians in the vicinity.

Soon after settling here H. B. Wiggins began the erection of a sawmill, and in 1856 began sawing lumber. About the same time a sawmill and grist mill were built by a millwright named Reuben George. About the middle 60's there were in Fall City a sawmill, a grist mill, a store, two blacksmith shops, a photograph gallery, a carpenter shop, and for a part of the time two hotels, besides some dwelling-houses. Later a stage line was established between Fall City and Menomonie, the stages running twice a week. E. W. Parker was the contractor and a man named Bradford the driver. In 1880 the place had a population of 40. For many years a post office was maintained, but it has been discontinued and the village is now on a rural route served from Menomonie. There is a general store conducted by Curtis Verne, a garage, the proprietor of which is O. W. Klatt, and a feed mill operated by Glen Whiting. The village is not without a good school (District No. 2, established in 1876), and there is also a camp of Modern Woodmen of America, No. 6050, which has a good membership. There are about 18 or 20 residences, somewhat scattered.

An interesting article in regard to Fall City, written by Eugene Wiggins, was published by the Dunn County News on June 14, 1923, and has been reprinted in this volume. It may be found in Chapter XXI.

Granger was a settlement which existed some 40 to 45 years ago, the location of which has been vaguely described as "in the northwest part of the county." It is said to have had a population of about 100.

Graytown is a small community center in Section 5, town of New Haven. The place was named for Aaron B. Gray, who is regarded as its founder, and who was born at Wheeler, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1845, son of Daniel and Lydia (Wheeler) Gray. On June 3, 1874, Mr. Gray married Emma Colbath, who was born at Cameron, N. Y., March 20, 1858, daughter of William and Rebecca (Chase) Colbath. Mr. Gray came west in 1879, was in the hotel business at New Richmond, Wis., for two years, and came to the town of New Haven, Duun County, in the fall of 1881. He bought 40 acres of land in Section 5, which he farmed for 24 years. Graytown is not on a railroad, nor has it any post office, the mail being collected and delivered by rural route service from Clear Lake, Polk County. From about 1889 to 1899 the Glenwood to Graytown and cut timber in this vicinity. The village has a saw-mill, and shingle mill, a cheese factory, a general store, and a few residences. The nearest church is at Reeve, Barron County. Graytown has always been a small village, but has its charm for those who prefer life in a quiet rural community to the noise and bustle of the cities.

Hatchville, situated on the line dividing the town of Lucas from that of Weston, and close to the western line of Dunn County, was formerly a post office, and though never more than a small hamlet, has been known to the people in the western part of the county for many years. At the present time Hatchville has a store and a creamery, the latter situated in the town of Weston. There is also a church known as St. John's Church. Postal service is supplied by rural route from Spring Valley.

Haystown is the name of an early settlement in the town of Tiffany, which was about a mile west of Boyceville. About 1868 a sawmill was established here by five men, four of whom were members of one family, the name of which was spelled "Hays" by some of the members, and "Hayes" by others. The four men alluded to were William, Ansel A., John N. and Alonzo W. Hayes, the other partner being David Lawton. Having bought the power site, they built a dam and mill, which latter they operated for 15 years or so. Then they added a grist mill and operated both, the plant being known as the Tiffany Creek Mills. A small settlement grew up, named for the Hayes (or Hays) family, and consisting-in addition to the mills-of a store and post office and a few dwellings. The store was conducted by Daniel Shaw, and the first postmaster was A. D. Caryl, the mail coming by stage from Menomonie. This stage was driven for a number of years by William Boursau. Later, before the coming of the railroad, the post office was moved to the home of John Cook, at Boyceville, and was known as the Boyceville post office, though the railroad company named the station Barker, the latter name-used both for the station and village-not being dropped for some seven or eight years. Tiffany Creek Mills ceased operations in 1914, after which there was nothing much The left. Some seven or eight years ago, however, William Teegarden settled here and has since remained. He operates a sawmill and has also a large icehouse. Quite recently Henry M. Lohnis, who was a soldier in the World War, has built a large hennery at Haystown. It measures 20 x 80 feet and contains an incubator with a capacity of 5,808 eggs.

Irvington, two and a half miles south of Menomonie and on the Red Cedar River, which is here crossed by a bridge, derives its name from the Irvine family. The place was formerly called Bullard's Creek. In 1854 Geo. K. Irvine settled here and operated a sawmill (water mill) until 1882, when he settled on a farm one mile south. Then his son, Frank C. Irvine (born in Iowa and now living in Minneapolis), bought a steam mill situated on the creek 80 rods south of the water mill, and operated it until 1890. In that year the property came into the hands of a Minneapolis concern known as Coffin's Box & Lumber Company, who established a plant at Irvington, starting in a small way but gradually adding to it in buildings and machinery until it was quite a large and important concern. At first the company manufactured veneering, but subsequently started a basket factory, making bushel baskets from elm wood, a business that they carried on until 1907. E.C. Coffin was general manager and William C. Schaefer, superintendent of the mill. Frank C. Irvine was resident buyer and had charge of the shipping and office work. When timber became scarce in this locality the company closed out their business here and are now located at Midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis. At Irvington there is now a store and a feed mill, and the Frank Carter Company of Menomonie ship some wood from here. The store, which includes a meat market, is conducted by Henry L. Rude, who bought it in April, 1823, from J. D. Fisher, the former proprietor.

Lochiel, a former village situated on Otter Creek in the town of Hay River, and about three miles north of the village of Wheeler, is said to have been first settled in 1869. In 1891 it had a population of about 100 (reported), with a post office and a mail service twice a week. At the same time there was a steam feed mill owned and operated by D. D. & A. McPherson, who also operated a lumber business here, the mills being conducted until about 1896, after which the place declined and ceased to exist as a community center.

Louisville is a locality in the eastern part of the town of Dunn, which was first settled in the middle 50's of the last century. It has always been a farming community and no village has ever developed here; it is said, indeed, that Louisville has never even contained a store or a blacksmith shop. As there were quite a number of people who came here and took land for farming purposes, the settlement was more or less scattered. The locality was originally called the Massee settlement after a pioneer family of that name; but in 1865 a post office was established in the neighborhood and named Louisville in honor of Theodore Louis, one of Dunn County's most notable pioneers, and the settlement soon took the name of the post office. A more detailed account of it, written by J. C. Ticknor, may be found in Chapter XXI of this volume.

Lucas was many years ago a farm-house post office in Section 32, town of Lucas. In the early 80's a man named Z. Bliss ran a stage between this place and Menomonie. About 25 people lived in the vicinity of the post office.

Menomonie Junction is in Sections 4 and 11, Township 28 north of Range 13 west. It is on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway, which here makes a junction with a branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. The "Omaha" road (this branch then being known as the West Wisconsin railroad) was opened for traffic at this point in the spring of 1871; and the C. M. & St. Paul branch from here to Menomonie was built in 1880 (see Chapter XII). At the Junction there is a store and there is a population in the vicinity of 100 or more. A survey and plat were made in October, 1881, but no real village has yet developed here. The chief importance of the place is that travelers by the "Omaha" going to or coming from Menomonie have to change trains here.

Meridean.—The village of Meridean is situated on the Chicago. Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, in Section 14 of the town of Peru, and is about half a mile from the Chippewa River. The original village of Meridean, however, now referred to as "old Meridean," was in Section 6, town of Rock Creek, at the confluence of Fall Creek with the Chippewa, where for many years a ferry has been maintained (in Section 5, Township 26, Range 11). At old Meridean a shingle mill was built in 1863 by Ira Dean, who in the following year sold it to Garland & Nicholls, a firm composed of Jerome B. Garland and E. A. Nicholls. The mill later came into possession of Chapman an 1 Thorphic who operated it for a number of years and in 1880 were turning out about 75,000 shingles a day. Up to that time the property had been destroyed three times by fire but rebuilt.

In 1871 Garland & Nicholls and the Eau Claire Lumber Co. built a sawmill there which had a capacity of 18,000,000 feet per year. It was equipped with one gang and two rotary saws, a gang edger, trimmers, and lath, shingle and picket machines. E. A. Nicholls had come to (old) Meridean in 1864 with Mr. Garland and entered into partnership with Chapman & Thorpe in the shingle mill. He also managed the company's stock farm on 1,500 acres. A tragic incident of those days is still remembered. On Sept. 30, 1871, the boiler in the shingle mill exploded, whereby Nora Nebow, a young girl of 16, and her uncle. Peter Aas, employed as fireman, were Miss Nebow was a sister of Mrs. Ole Fossum now living in Meridean. killed. In 1888 the Eau Claire Lumber Co. sold out to the Mississippi River Logging Co., the village at that time having about 135 inhabitants. The latter company operated the business for several years and then changed the scene of their activities to Routledge, Minn. This brought the life of the old village to an end and the Meridean post office was moved to its present location, where there was a store conducted by L. E. Schnare. What was left of the original village also moved with the post office and the present village of Meridean was started.

The Norwegians, who formed a considerable part of the population of old Meridean, at an early date built an Evangelical Lutheran church there, which was destroyed by a flood in 1880. It was rebuilt in 1882, being dedicated Jan. 7, 1883, but in 1886 it was again destroyed, this time by fire. Another building was erected to take its place in 1889, the new structure being dedicated on August 25, that year. Two Sunday schools were conducted in connection with it, the organization being in charge of the Rev. L. Lund of Menomonie. The church remained at its old location until the spring of 1921, when it was moved to a point a mile and a quarter south and two miles east of Meridean, in the town of Rock Creek.

There are several traditions in regard to the origin of the name Meridean, which have been investigated somewhat carefully by O. E. Hagen of the town of Rock Creek, and the result of his investigations is here presented.

One tradition is to the effect that in the early part of the nineteenth century, before the beginning of the lumber traffic and the advent of settlers into this region, a trapper named Dean lived with his family on what is known as Meridean Island. After a few years he lost his wife, whose name was Mary, by drowning in the river or slough, and in her memory the trappers and early adventurers called the place Mary Dean.

According to another tradition, in the early days of the lumber traffic on the Chippewa, a young woman named Mary Dean came down the river on a lumber raft from a sawnill above. On arriving at the mouth of the slough the raftsmen tied up the raft for the night and got into a drunken brawl, in the course of which she was murdered by them, and after burying her body in the jungle close by, they called the place by her name in a sort of grim jest.

In the third story it is related that in the pioneer days of this region a certain Mrs. Dean came up the Chippewa River on a steamboat, being on her way to join her husband, who was employed in the lumber traffic. She was accompanied by her bright little daughter Mary, who from her sweet character soon became the pet of all on board, so that the rough manners and profane conversation of the boatmen and lumberjacks were for the time, at least, softened into a semblance of decency and higher manhood. But she was suddenly taken dangerously ill and had to be taken ashore, the craft being tied up to the bank for a time, while with tearful sympathy those present watched her life ebb away until death ended her suffering. A little coffin was improvised from an empty box, and with few ceremonies but many tears she was buried under a tree, where later the company's blacksmith shop was built. In loving commemoration of her, those present gave her name to the place. The grave and tree were later (1884) washed away by a flood.

Mr. Hagen regards this last account as the true one, as it is supported by a chain of evidence, starting with one of the men who had witnessed the death and burial of the child. This man, many years afterwards, when Meridean was pulsating with the hum of the sawmills and the vibration of mill machinery, visited the place and told the story to Edward A. Nicholls of the lumber company, who later told it to the informant of Mr. Hagen. It was also corroborated in 1912 by E. F. Baker of Eau Claire, who in a newspaper article (Dunn County News, Feb. 8, 1912) related how he had heard the story in 1881 from an old man named McCann (Stephen McCann, according to his recollection), which differed only in one or two minor details from the other account. According to him, the girl, who was about ten years old, and her mother, a widow, came up the river on a steamboat which he commanded, and was taken ill and died on the boat.

Other accounts of the origin of the name have also been given, which need not be repeated here, as enough has already been said. The fact that within a period of 60 or 70 years so many stories had arisen in regard to what would seem to be a simple matter, may be taken as a modern illustration, close to hand, of the manner in which many ancient myths were started, the chief elements in the matter being faulty recollection and superabundant imagination on the part of the many who contributed to their propogation.

In the course of time the place name under present consideration became modified into Maridean (see History of the Chippewa Valley, 1892), and then into Meridian, which was the name of the post office for a number of years up to 1912, when the U. S. postal department altered it to its present form of Meridean at the instance of O. E. Hagen, acting through the Hon. I. L. Lenroot, member of the House of Representatives. (This, the present form, however, must have been in ordinary use for some years previously, as the name of the village is given as "Meridean" in an atlas of Dunn County published in 1888, a copy of which may be seen in the register of deeds' office in the courthouse in Menomonie.—Editor.)

The history of the present village, as already shown, does not extend back much more than 25 years. There has been no great or rapid growth, but the business interests include a good general store kept by I. E. Brack, a bank, a lumber yard, a creamery, and two garages. There is also a small schoolhouse and a good-sized church. The site of the village is level, but there are bluffs about half a mile to the south and higher ones farther out towards the north.

The first steps toward starting the creamery were taken in 1898 by I. E. Brack and Torger Olson, who drove around calling on the farmers to get them interested. Louis Hagen also took a prominent part in the work but the farmers were slow to be convinced, and it was not until the following year that the enterprise began to assume a practical form. Then a farmers' cooperative company was organized with 65 shares at $50 a share. The creamery has been operated continuously ever since and has remained a cooperative concern. Louis Hagen was the first manager, acting as such for nine or ten years, and being succeeded by I. E. Brack, who still holds that position. In the year 1923 the farmers were paid about $65,000 for their cream, which was manufactured into 150,000 pounds of butter. The creamery building was erected when work was started and its location is close to the Brack store. A cheese factory was operated for a while before the creamery, the head man and organizer being Ole Kleven, who also helped to organize the creamery and was first president of the latter company.

The lumber yard in Meridean was started by Knute Flakoi (now of Mondovi, Wis.) about the year 1902. It was bought in July, 1916 by the Meridean Lumber & Fuel Co., owned by H. M. Orlavoy of Durand. The concern deals in all kinds of lumber, building material and fuel. Olaf Olson is local manager.

The Meridean State Bank was organized Oct. 20, 1920, with a capital of $15,000. The organizers were chiefly farmers, who took stock in the enterprise. Frank Pierce (now president of the First National Bank of Menomonie), Walter J. Rowe, I. E. Brack and Olaf Olson took a leading part in the organization. Frank Pierce was the first president, I. E. Brack vice president, and Walter J. Rowe cashier; while the directors were Frank Pierce, I. E. Brack, Andrew J. Brunner, J. P. Fossum, A. D. King, Olaf Olson, O. Theo. Torgerson, Joseph Weber and D. W. Andrew. On May 24, 1921, Frank Pierce resigned as president and was succeeded by J. P. McLean, and at the same time Joseph Weber resigned as director. being succeeded by Oscar Wilson. No other changes in the personel of the institution have since occurred (to May, 1924). The capital of the bank has remained as before and the deposits are now about $85,000. The present building was started soon after organization and completed on Jan. 20, 1921, except for the fittings. It is a substantial brick structure with modern equipment, including a steel, manganese, burglar-proof safe. The bank handles insurance and everything within the legitimate sphere of banking operations.

The church at Meridean is known as Cranberry Creek Lutheran Church. The congregation (Norwegian) is an old one, having been started in 1858, when the Rev. (Prof.) Larson came to this country from Norway and preached in Pierce County, and at Little Elk Creek, five miles south of Menomonie. An uncle of Evan Torgerson of Meridean (Hans Torgerson Dahl) wrote to Prof. Larson to try to induce him to hold services here. At that time Prof. Larson had a daughter in this vicinity who was about to be married, and he therefore came, riding horseback by way of Goose Lake and through a very rough country. He held services and started the congregation at a place one mile southeast of Meridean in a small log house. Subsequently services were held at intervals in private homes until 1876, when a church edifice was erected about three-quarters of a mile east of the village site, or half a mile east of the present site of the church. In 1901 it was moved to its present location and rebuilt, and in 1921 it was rebuilt into a cross-shaped building, with full basement, a belfry and bell being also added. The original building cost about $600, but the expense of the enlargement and improvements mentioned was about $8,000. The people belonged to the Froen congregation of Elk Creek until Jan. 13, 1878, when they organized themselves into a separate congregation. The present pastor is the Rev. C. N. A. Garness, who succeeded the Rev. K. Sumstad. There is a Sunday school, a Ladies' Aid Society, and a young peoples society called the Willing Workers. One of the oldest members of the congregation is Even Torgerson, who came to this locality in 1858 and has been here most of the time since, having been engaged in farming until his retirement eight years ago.

The district school in Meridean is an old building, erected probably over 40 years, but has been kept in good condition. It contains one room and one teacher is employed. The people of Meridean obtain their domestic water from wells and use gasoline lamps for illuminating purposes, except I. E. Brack, who has an individual lighting plant.

About a mile and a half west of the village, in Section 15, town of Peru, there is a ferry across the Chippewa River, which is known as Fair Play Ferry.

Norton, on the "Omaha" railway, five miles west of Colfax and in the town of Tainter, is a small community center comprising a general store, a cheese factory, one or two garages, and several residences. Norton was formerly a post office but is now on a rural delivery route from Colfax. The cheese factory was built about 1917 by Lewis E. Root, who sold it in June, 1923, to William Prange. At Norton a Lutheran congregation was organized many years ago and became attached to what is known in Lutheran circles as the Holden district, being served from Colfax. It has continued to flourish and in 1911 erected a church edifice at a cost of $4000.

Red Cedar, in the town of Peru, and on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, near the junction of its Menomonie branch with the Chippewa Valley Division, has a station, and a general store kept by H. J. Holland, who is also postmaster. At an early day the place was known as Hunt, and for a number of years the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company had a mill here. In the early 90's Red Cedar had about 150 inhabitants, and there was a sorghum and feed mill here run by Frank Lorshbough, but the former activities are no longer in evidence. There are now five or six houses in addition to the store; also a Methodist church.

Rock Falls is a village on Rock Creek in Section 22, town of Rock Creek. It is on Trunk Line Highway No. 85, furnishing direct road connection between Durand and Eau Claire, while two miles to the north is Caryville, a station on the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. The first settler in the territory now included in the towns of Peru and Rock Creek was a notable man of a very different type from the average pioneer, and as his name is closely connected with the early history of the village, the following allusion to him from the pen of Prof. O. E. Hager, published in the Dunn County News, March 10, 1910, will not be out of place in this article.

"One of the very earliest arrivals in the Chippewa Valley, antedating that of Torger Olson and his companions (who arrived in 1855), and the first settler in the towns of Peru and Rock Creek was William Plaisted of Vermont, the sage of the Chippewa Valley, a marvel in the realms of thoughts, living in a world of his own, far removed from all scenes of the mad scramble for money and wealth. He was a scion of a family of literary and scientific proclivities, and an uncle of his was a lexicographer of the rank of Worchester and Webster. Mr. Plaisted's store of knowledge, though mostly self acquired, was amazing, and when delving into the deep recesses of thought his whole soul was aglow with a fervor that was contagious, inspiring and impelling. His knowledge of the English language was phenomenal and some of us who have sat at his feet and those of the greatest scholars of our age, men of high academic rank and distinction, do not hesitate to pronounce Mr. Plaisted the profoundest of them all. He could read lexicons and grammars as others do novels, for pastime, at one time bursting into loud laughter over quaint definitions and at another trembling with scholarly indignation over incorrect or imperfect ones. Despite the fact that he lived the life of a recluse, he was always social, affable and genial, having none of that narrow, clannish and uncosmopolitan feeling so common here, and so offensive to the more sensitive foreigners. As to his views, political or religious, he was neither intrusive nor obtrusive. Mr. Plaisted was a millwright by trade and as such had traveled extensively, both in the Northern and Southern states and he may have come here in quest of employment. He arrived here somewhere about 1850 and was soon captivated by the romantic canyons and rushing waters of the Rock Creek and the scenic beauty of the site of Rock Falls, of which he became the first owner. The place is said first to have been called Rock Run, the name given to it by Mr. Plaisted. Later on he located on the precipitous bluffs overlooking the Chippewa Valley near the confluence of the Chippewa River and Rock Creek, where, unknown or misunderstood by the more materialistic community, he lived after the fashion of Diogenes, spending his days in profound metaphysical speculations. Mr. Plaisted died in the nineties of the last century, like sages of old a conumdrum to the world, a remarkable instance of how genius is misplaced in life and how an unappreciative world thrusts greats lights aside in order that cunning and pretentious mediocrity may garner the material benefits and wear the laurels of distinction He was buried in the cemetery at Rock Falls, where no tombstone marks his grave and soon nobody will be able to point out the last resting-place of the pioneer father of this part of the county.

The actual beginning of the village of Rock Falls can be dated from the arrival in 1856 of George H. Chamberlin. Mr. Chamberlin, who was born in Canaan, N. H., Jan. 12, 1827, had come west in 1851 to Briggsville, Marquette County, Wis. He was married in 1852 to Antoinette Weston, and they resided in Briggsville until the removal to Rock Falls, Dunn County. Mr. Chamberlin was a man of practical affairs, a worker and a builder who established a mercantile business in Rock Falls which he conducted for 46 years. He also held many local offices of trust and represented Dunn County in the assembly in the session of 1881. Appointed postmaster of the village in 1857, during the administration of President Buchanan, he served in that office for a full half century, retiring in 1907 as the oldest postmaster in the United States.

In the oldest plat book preserved in the courthouse at Menomonie may be seen a plat of the village site (or a part of it) recorded under the name of Rock Creek, the location being defined as "The north half of the southwest quarter of Section 22, Township 26 north of Range 11 west." It is not stated by whom or for whom this plat was made. The village was again surveyed and platted (this time as Rock Falls) in November, 1875, for George H. Chamberlin, S. J. Kendall and Betsey Weston, proprietors, the plat being recorded Feb. 16, 1876. Another plat was made in June, 1887, for George H. Chamberlin, a part of which, however, was later vacated.

In 1857 the first mill was built at Rock Falls by Weston & Chamberlin, and Mr. Chamberlin, not being a practical miller, hired a man to run the mill until his brother Hiram had had time to learn the business. In 1868 the mill was sold to M. R. Bump. On Aug. 23, 1878, it was undermined and washed out by a flood. Mr. Bump rebuilt it and afterward sold an interest to J. P. Schneider and it was then operated under the name of Bump & Schneider. Later Mr. Schneider sold his interest to Wilbur D. Churchill, the firm then becoming Bump & Churchill. Afterwards Samuel and D. W. Andrews (father and son) bought it and it was operated by them together for ten years. Then Samuel the father, died, and D. W. Andrews has since been sole proprietor. Where the mill is situated the creek flows through a deep rocky gorge, which is one of the most picturesque spots in Dunn County, mill and falls together making a picture tempting to artists and amateur photographers. Mr. Andrews manufactures rye, wheat, buckwheat, wheat graham and rye graham flour and feed. In 1923 a concrete dam was put in, replacing the old wcoden one.

In 1880 the village had a population of 150 and had a tri-weekly mail service. At the same time M. R. Bump was operating his "grist" mill, Harrison Beeman was established in the village as a mason and carpenter, and William Skelton was conducting a blacksmith's shop. Ten years or so later, when the mill above mentioned (which seems then to have been called a "flour" mill), was being operated by Bump & Schneider, there was also a grist mill run by Edward Hoover, which, however, amounted to little, as it was deficient in power. Another blacksmith's shop was started by a man named Weygant, who sold it to N. P. Johnson, the present proprietor. The other business interests of the village at the present time include the general store of George F. Day, a hardware store conducted by J. H. Day, a creamery, a garage and three service stations, and two dealers in farm implements. Another store, that of Kleven & Swenson, closed out business in 1923. There are two churches, one Catholic and the other union. Telephone facilities are furnished by the Rock Falls & Meridean Telephone Co., of which Lewis E. Hagen is secretary and manager.

The creamery was started by the farmers in 1902 and has always been a cooperative concern. It has occupied the same building from the beginning and there are now about 40 stockholders in the company. During the year 1923 this creamery received 896, 264 pounds of cream from the farmers and turned out 284,166 pounds of butter. The value of the butter shipped was $115,935.97, the amount paid patrons was $113,704.67. The buttermaker, H. K. Hanson, has been with the creamery for 14 years.

The school district is No. 2, and the present schoolhouse was built about 16 years ago. An event remembered by a few "old-timers" was the burning of a former schoolhouse on May 4, 1875.

The first preaching in this part of the county was in 1856, when the Rev. Mr. Beeman, a Protestant minister, came into the field and at intervals for two years held services in private homes. Then in 1857 the Rev. Mr. Goff entered upon the work, preaching in residences and schoolhouses until the end of the year 1859. In 1860 the Rev. Mr. Skinner came and worked until the close of 1862. From 1863 in 1871 the people were served by five successive pastors, the Revs. Doughty, Webster, Frizzell, Kingslev and Barrett, the last mentioned of whom died during his second year's work. In 1872 the Methodist Episcopal conference sent the Rev. H. D. Jellison, who served as a supply for two years. In 1875 only a few services were held and in the fall of that year the conference sent the Rev. Mr. Doughty, who served two years, and during his pastorage a parsonage was built. In 1877 the Rev. G. W. Smith worked in this field; then in 1878 the Rev. John Butler, a Methodist, came, and in that year the parsonage was destroyed by fire. In 1879 the Rev. G. L. Bowen, another Methodist, had the charge. In 1881 and 1882 only a few services were held, as there was no regular preacher; and from 1883 to 1891 they were more or less irregular, though the following pastors served here for short per-iods: Revs. Norris, Doremus, Rossiter (a Universalist), Wells (Baptist) and Bartlett, the last mentioned being a Sunday school worker and missionary from Eau Claire. In 1891 the Rev. Mr. Robinson took charge and during his year in the field the present frame church building was erected, and the old town hall—for some time the previous place of worship- was no longer used. In 1893 the Rev. John Hainer, of Eau Claire, was sent by the Methodist Episcopal Church and served until 1895, after which the Rev. R. Stoakes, F. G. Drake and W. E. Monroe, served each one vear. In 1898 the conference appointed Rev. T. Bigger, who served two years, and after him the Rev. E. D. Upson served for an equal length of time. Since then there was been a succession of different pastors, some Methodist, the present pastor, Rev. E. A. Raue, belonging to the Presbyterian denomination. A Sunday school is maintained and there is a Ladies' Aid Society. In the present year the church was remodeled.

The Catholic congregation in Rock Falls was organized 16 years ago and now numbers 35 families. The church was built a year after the organization and is a frame building. It was first served by Rev. Henry Tholler from Altoona, Eau Claire County, who came here once a month on Sundays and on some of the church holidays. Then Father A. Siebert, from Round Hill (three miles from Durand) visited Rock Falls for two years. Then Father Tholler served the congregation again for two years, and after him Father Hackner, from Mondovi, who now serves the congregation twice a month, on the first and third Sundays. A Ladies' Aid Society is maintained.

As a rural village Rock Falls has strong attractions, and the bustling city of Eau Claire, with its excellent stores, can be easily reached by car, or by train from Caryville. The benefit order of the Beavers' Reserve Fund has some members in the village and its vicinity.

Rumsey's Landing was a steamboat landing on the north bank of the Chippewa River close to the point formed by the Southeast corner of Section 35 west, town of Spring Brook with the southwest corner of Section 36 west, that town; or in Range 12 west and close to the line separating Township 26 north from Township 27 north. The name of Rumsey's Landing is associated closely with pioneer times, the years from 1840 to 1850 being busy ones at the Landing, and also for 20 years later, the farmers selling their grain here until the coming of the railroad in 1871. There was an elevator here, a store and a grain warehouse, besides a ferry, the store being the only one for miles around. In the early 90's H. C. Ballard operated a sawmill in the vicinity. The Landing was doubtless named for John and H. T. Rumsey, who were very early settlers here.

Rusk is a station and hamlet on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway in the town of Red Cedar. The site is flat and forms part of a considerable stretch of prairie land. As surveyed by J. W. Remington for the West Wisconsin Railway Co. (now the "Omaha"), the plat being recorded Jan. 28, 1875; it was described as "a portion of the west half of Section 15 in Township 28 north of Range 12 west." In 1879 the railway company had an addition surveyed (recorded May 22) that included blocks A to L for a public park. On the coming of the railroad (1872) several business enterprises were started here. R. F. Juchtke opened the first store and George A. Gilbert & Bro. a wagon and blacksmith's shop, which they conducted for a number of years thereafter. It was not long before a second store was opened by W. R. Culbertson, who was a merchant in the village for about ten years; and a grain elevator was built, it is thought by James Hill, though it was owned and operated for many years by Hill, Kinsey & Moulton. Later it passed to C. F. Freeman & Co., and from them to the Wisconsin Elevator Co., the later concern selling to A. H. Aldrich & Co. of Roberts, Wis., who are the present proprietors.

F. R. Ross, the present postmaster, was a merchant here for many years, starting in 1887 and for two years having A. B. Webert as partner. William Beyer and wife, previously farmers, conducted a hotel in the village from 1876 to about 1887, when they returned to their farm. Nicholas Cook, a German immigrant, opened a meat market in Rusk in 1889 and operated it for four or five years until his residence was burned, when he returned to farming, his former occupation. Edward K. Drayton, a harness maker, arrived here in June, 1877, and several years later was serving as town clerk. The firm of Zuehlke & Moedy also conducted a general merchandise business for some years. Others had settled on farm lands in the vicinity before the village was started, among whom were the following: John Hause, who took land in Section 20, in 1855; Adelbert C. Sherburne, who settled in Section 9 in October the same year, and George D. Owen, who came in 1865, and started a farm in Section 5. J. F. Ronneberger took land in Section 8 in 1876. These men became successful and wealthy farmers. The Sherburne family was prominent not only here, but in other parts of Dunn County. A feed mill was started in the village in 1885 by Nels K. Christensen. Since then it has passed through several hands and is now owned and operated by J. C. Lee.

For some 15 or 20 years after the village was founded it enjoyed a busy and prosperous life as a wheat shipping center, and it was no uncommon thing to see as many as 100 teams of farmers and buyers here at the same time. Towards the end of that period the chintz bug made its appearance, which wrought so much damage in the fields that the farmers stopped raising wheat and went into dairying instead. They had already—about 1885—started a cooperative creamery, which became more prosperous with the increase in the amount of dairying, and is now conducted under the name of The Rusk Creamery Co. Several lumber companies have done business in Rusk, including the North Star, the Wilson Weber and the La Pointe Lumber Co., of Menomonie, the last mentioned now having a yard and office here. In addition to the interests already mentioned there are in the village a blacksmith's shop, two garages, and a general store conducted under the name of the Rusk Co-operative Mercantile Co.

The Rusk post office is of the fourth class and has no rural routes. F. R. Ross, who came to the village 40 years ago, was postmaster for 20 years and, after an interval, is again serving, having been reappointed under the Harding administration.

A Baptist congregation, which was organized March 9, 1895, and is now composed of ten families, has a church about a mile and a half northwest of the village. Two and a half miles northeast of Rusk is the Catherine German Lutheran Church. This congregation, now including 50 families, was started in 1876. The present pastor is the Rev. William A. Baumann, who lives near the church and also serves a church near Iron Creek.

Sand Creek.—The village of Sand Creek, situated in Section 13 of the town of Sand Creek (Township 31, Range 11), and on the Red Cedar River, was surveyed and platted in July, 1871, the survey and plat being made by W. Weissenfels for H. P. and Mary J. Graham, Samuel and Clara A. White and Robert and Mary R. Folles, all of the city of Eau Claire.

Sand Creek is a somewhat retired rural community, the nearest railroad station being New Auburn on the "Omaha," which is about eight miles to the east and slightly north, while Ridgeland on the "Soo" lies about 12 miles to the west. Soon after the platting of the village, or in 1872, a dam across Sand Creek and a flour mill were constructed, and for some 12 years thereafter the mill was an important enterprise of the village, though it and the dam were several times carried away by floods. Finally in 1884 another flood washed them out and they were not rebuilt.

In 1873 the first school was started, and in the same year Tucker & Pomeroy had a small store in the village, which they later sold to Ezra Clark, and soon after that another store was established. The village grew and prospered until in addition to the mill, it contained five stores, three blacksmith's shops, three hotels and two wagon shops. The population was then (1880) about 130. The height of prosperity was reached about 1881, in November of which year H. Brewer surveyed and platted a small addition for Ole Nelson. A stage line furnished transportation three times a week between Menomonie, Sand Creek, and Rice Lake, F. E. Smith being the contractor and E. L. Doolittle the carrier.

About 1881, however, the village began to decline, which was due, partly at least, to the fact that the railroad now known as the "Omaha", which was then in process of construction and completed as far as New Auburn, did not build through Sand Creek, but passed some miles to the east of it, thus depriving it of direct rail communication. In 1891 the population was given as 100. At that time, in addition to the post office, there were in the village several stores, a blacksmith's shop, a church, a district school, a grist mill and a flour mill. Of the two mills the former was operated by A. T. Johnson and the latter by P. S. Peterson & Co. The population of Sand Creek village is now about 110. A large creamery, owned by the Farmers' Store Company, has been in successful operation for 18 or 20 years. The Cooperative Store Co. also conducts a mercantile enterprise that is well patronized and financially stable. A combined feed and planing mill—the one formerly operated by the Johnson family, and which is located half a mile west by south across the river—has within the last few years passed into other hands. In the vicinity there used to be a carding mill, which ceased operation after the raising of sheep was given up here. Telephone service is furnished by the Prairie Farm, Ridgeland & Dallas Telephone Co., which was organized in the fall of 1906 and took in Sand Creek as an additional exchange. There is a brick schoolhouse, housing a two-room graded school built within the last two years, a bank, a hotel, several stores, a garage and a blacksmith's shop.

The Bank of Sand Creek, which is a state bank, was established in 1918 and has membership in the State Bankers Association. It has a paid up capital of $10,000, with a surplus and undivided profits (Jan. 1, 1924) of $4,060, and deposits of $144,280. William Larson is president; Theodore Nelson, vice president; and J. M. Moe, cashier.

The Norwegian Lutheran Congregation of Sand Creek was organized Oct. 3, 1867, and in 1881 a church edifice was erected two miles west of the village, which is a frame building with a seating capacity of about 200. The congregation has also two other churches, one situated about five miles west on Lower Pine Creek, and the other on Popple Creek, while the parsonage is in the village of Sand Creek. There has been a resident pastor (in the village) since 1871. The following pastors have served this congregation or parish: Revs. K. Torstenson, Harald Haakenson, D. J. Growe, J. Waage, O. T. Flaaten, M. Flekke, O. Neilson and Rev. Engel-Olsen, the last mentioned being the present incumbent. About 100 families now belong to the congregation. The societies connected with it are: The Ladies' Aid (four branches in four different locations), the Young Peoples' Society, the Dorcas Society, and the church choir.

Teegarden, on the "Omaha" railroad in Section 6, town of Menomonie is the seat of the lumber establishment of Thos. Teegarden & Son, and of the Teegarden Co-operative Cheese Co. Members of the family from whom the place takes its name built a small mill in the vicinity (in Section 1, town of Lucas) as early as 1856 or 1857. Teegarden has rural mail delivery from Knapp.

Tonnar is a place name shown in Foote's Atlas (1888) in the north part of Section 8, town of Wilson, or about a mile southeast of the site of the present village of Ridgeland. About 1890 the place had a post office and some 50 inhabitants.

Tramway, on the "Omaha" railroad in the northwest part of the town of Menomonie, has been known for 40 years until recently as a place where brick was manufactured. The industry was started in 1884 by W. W. Winterbotham and a partner named Holden, forming the firm of Winterbotham & Holden, who bought the site from Albert Traxler, who had homesteaded the land in 1865. The brick yard they established and conducted for a number of years, subsequently passed through several hands until in 1920 it came into those of the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Co. of Minneapolis, who stopped the work here.

Truax some 40 years ago or more, in the flourishing days of the lumber industry, was a village or hamlet, the location of which has been vaguely described as "down the river from Menomonie on a little stream that enters the Red Cedar from the east." It has long since disappeared.

Tyrone, a former community center, platted in 1858, was situated close to the Chippewa River, in Sections 21 and 28, town of Peru, or in Township 26 north of Range 12 west. The place was named by Hamilton W. Hubbard, who settled there in 1856 on coming from Fond du Lac County. He established a large farm and mill there and also did some logging, leaving about 1894 on the death of his wife, Margaret.

Vanceberg is a small hamlet of 30 or 40 people on the Hay River in the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the town of Sheridan. It takes its name from Levi Vance, a noted pioneer of this county, who established a fur-trading post here at an early date. It was he who built the first hotel in Menomonie, and he was sheriff of the county at the time of his death, which took place Sept. 22, 1864. At Vanceberg about 1868 there occurred a battle between the Sioux and Chippewa Indians, which was fought around the Vance home on the hill, and in which about 100 Indians were killed, mostly Sioux, as the Chippewa were victorious. In July, 1873, a mail route was put in between Menomonie and Vanceberg, via Tiffany, and for many years the hamlet had a post office. It is now served by rural route from Prairie Farm. In the fall of 1866 a sawmill was built here by Thomas J. and Ingersoll George, who engaged in the lumber business, and the latter was proprietor of the mill as late as the early 90's. About 25 years ago it was moved to Silver Creek, Barron County. A general merchandise store kept by L. G. Richards, who started it in 1911, and a small church are the two main features of the community now. The store building was erected by Elias Cummings.

Waneka, on Muddy Creek, in the northern part of the town of Spring Brook, is a farming community, the name of which, however, carries with it some historical associations. In 1852 B. Fowler, father of the late Mrs. Cyrus S. Whittier of Menomonie, and a native of the state of Maine, came to Waneka from Dane County with his family and built a hostelry and stage station here which was practically a half-way house on the journey between Menomonie and Eau Claire. He was the first settler in the locality, but after six years sold out to a man named Heller and returned to Dane County. At Waneka during the anxious Civil War days the women used to meet and sew garments for the soldiers, and in the early 80's there was a post office and the stages running between Black Piver Falls and Hudson used to stop here, but after railroads had been built through this region the stage lines were abandoned and and Waneka lost its only remaining importance. There is no sign of a village, but there are two conspicuous churches, one of which is that of the Evangelical Lutheran St. John's Society (German), a fairly large frame building with a steeple, built in 1902, there being also a graveyard in connection with the church. The other is the Salem Evangelical Church, somewhat smaller, bearing the date of 1861, indicating the time when the congregation was organized.

Waubeek, in Section 27, Township 26 north of Range 13 west (town of Dunn), is not a village but a locality where there was formerly a post office. Waubeek derived its name from a place in Pepin County, where formerly there were mills. In course of time the mills burned down and the people then got up a petition and had the post office moved into Dunn County, to the location above mentioned. This was done under President Cleveland's first administration (1885-1889), the office retaining the name of Waubeek. Mrs. Luthera E. Gardiner (now Mrs. Luthera E. Ames, of Eau Galle) was postmistress there for 20 years, taking the office at the death of her father in 1888 and holding it until the rural main service was established. There is a small Methodist Church at Waubeek, which was built about 1884, and in which services are occasionally held at the present time, though few of the early members are now left. The locality is a fine farming region and some of the best farms in the county may be found here. Among them is the Edgar Bow place, the land constituting which was bought from the government about 1858 by Lyman Fitch (father of Mrs. Ames above mentioned). Another man had pre-empted it but Mr. Fitch bought him out. Frank Ames (Mrs. Ames' husband's grandfather) gave the land for the cemetery. At one time there were five Ames families in the neighborhood, and it was then called Amesville, but none are left here now.

Weston is a village in Section 22 of the town of Weston. It is the terminus of a short branch of the "Omaha" railway (now the C. & N. W.). In the pioneer days of the county the Fox River Land & Lumber Company operated in this vicinity and many of the early settlers bought their land from them.

About 1889 William J. Starr of Eau Claire bought up a considerable quantity of land in this part of the county—about 14,000 acres, comprising about one-half of the town of Weston—and a year or two later, having induced the "Omaha" road to build their spur track to the site of the present village he built a saw and planing mill here and began lumbering. That was the start of the village, which soon became a lively place. A post office was established in the depot, with Alfred E. Boe, who came here as agent for the railroad in 1902, as postmaster. Within a few years Weston had a population of about 320 people.

The mill while in full operation cut about 50,000,000 feet of lumber annually. Mr. Starr continued his operations until 1910, by which time he had cut all his timber and so closed his business here. The population immediately decreased and Weston has since been a somewhat quiet rural village. It was incorporated in 1909 but went back to town government in 1919, chiefly on account of having experienced three disastrous fires, one of which destroyed about half the village.

Alfred E. Boe, already mentioned, who erected the second frame house in Weston, was among those who left the village after it had ceased to be a place of considerable activity, but in 1921 he returned and entered into mercantile business here, buying the stock of general merchandise of W. H. Bliss. At the same time he again became postmaster and is still serving as such, besides being storekeeper. Mr. Boe also acts as manager for the Elmwood Lumber & Grain Company, who have a lumber yard here, C. K. Averill of Menomonie being the chief stockholder in the company. There is a garage and filling station and the village is on the lines of the Downing Telephone Company, organized in 1903.

Some years ago a Methodist Episcopal congregation was started in Weston, the congregation first holding services in the Modern Woodmen hall, a branch of that order having been previously established here. About 1919 they bought the building and continued subsequently to use it for their church home until it was destroyed by fire two or three years later. After that they worshiped for a while in a small building that had been erected to serve the purpose of a village hall, afterwards building their present church.

In addition to the places already mentioned, a few others may be found referred to in old publications such as former histories or atlases, the early files of local journals, and early plat books preserved at the courthouse. Several were merely plats of villages which never developed into anything. Perhaps two or three were lumber camps of transient existence and importance. At one locality, Mamre, situated four or five miles west of Menomonie, there is a Lutheran Church (see page 157). One or two were laid out as summer resorts. A plat was recorded Feb. 1, 1858, showing certain lots north and south of the Chippewa River in Township 26 north of Range 11 west, the section not being stated. It was a proposed village called Elkton, the proprietors being W. H. Gleason, C. M. Seley, C. Belles and F. R. Church, the last mentioned being at that time register of deeds for the county. This plat was vacated by the county board in July, 1867.

Grand View Camps in the town of Tainter, on the backwater lake from the Red Cedar River, were laid out by William and Mary Burch in 1921 as a summer resort.

CHAPTER XXI

MISCELLANY

Local Sites of State, County and City High School Buildings and Grounds (By C. E. Freeman).

These sites and grounds in this city cover a space equal in area to three and onehalf of our city blocks and beside, one lot and the full width of street one block in length. They are distributed over five blocks, four of which lie in the heart of the city in the form of a square and are situated west to east, between Broadway and Third Street, and north to south between Main Street and Ninth Avenue.

The State Manual Training building, a department of the Stout schools, and the city high school building, with their surrounding grounds, occupy blocks 53 (south block) and 76 (north block) and that part of Wilson Avenue, now vacated, that did formerly run east and west between these blocks. There is in this tract an unbroken parcel of school ground thirty-six rods long, north and south and sixteen rods wide, east and west, of three and six-tenths acres of land.

The main building of the training school is located on the east side of this parallelogram tract, facing on Second Street, and that of the high school on the west side thereof, fronting on Broadway. These two buildings are placed squarely across that part of Wilson Avenue that formerly extended between these two blocks 53 and 76. They are connected by a long, enclosed, elevated and commodious passageway stretching from the second story of one building to the second story of the other, running lengthwise over the strip of vacated street.

Before the erection of these buildings, the city resident and the stranger on its streets, turning into upper Wilson Avenue, from north or south, looked, if he would, westward down the avenue and out of its end into the sunshine high over the river basin and of the valley of Gilbert's Creek on to the distant hills and bluffs. The sky line of these hills and bluffs and the upper portion of their densely wooded eastern slopes presented a pleasing view, the like of which is not to be seen through the end opening of any other of the city streets.

The city having acquired title to these blocks 53 and 76, the city council in the plenitude of its power, gained largely by its grip of actual possession of these blocks, vacated the intervening street, and now, he that is on upper Wilson Avenue, looks westward along its open way into a cul-de-sac, closed by the brick wall of the training school building. Its dark bricked up end was made darker by the shadows cast therein by the surrounding walls of other school buildings.

The once distinguishing feature of this avenue, the view beyond its western end, must remain only a remembrance, personal to those who over 20 years ago looked out upon it. It was a vista that may be mentioned but cannot be visualized by description so that the reader or hearer can see it, even with the mind's eye.

The four-story domestic science building of The Stout Institute covers the whole of the south one-half of block 75. Its main entrance, seldom used by students or visitors, faces south on Wilson Avenue, while its end entrances on Second and on Third streets serve the constant daily use of the building.

The site of this building was given to the state. The plan for its construction was made to cover every available inch of the site. The plan being exhibited, the adjacent property owners were asked to give, from the north one-half of the block, sufficient land to afford light and air for the back part of the building and for access thereto by a public alley.

A sovereign asks, and the asking is intended as, and is interpreted to be a request. The necessary land was given and the north wall of this state building stands flush with the north boundary line of the land at first given.

Connected with the educational management of this state school, in its domestic science department, are two buildings known as the Homemakers' school. These are located on the north one-half of block 40. They are dwelling houses and front respectively west and east, on Fifth and Sixths streets. Ninth Avenue bounds the grounds on the north. The house on Fifth Street stands back from the avenue on the second lot. It is on a commanding height that gives a view of the river basin and of Gilbert's Creek to the westward, the house on Sixth Street is in the northeast corner of the school grounds. This last mentioned house was long the residence of Mr. George H. Barwise and of his family. They were nice people, rather exclusive as English people are apt to be.

Mr. and Mrs. Barwise were in many respects typical English folk. The grounds of the Homemakers' school then were fashioned on English lines. The oak and the evergreen trees and the ornamental shrubbery that covered the whole ground now occupied by the school, was trimmed and cared for as we are wont to think English estates are trimmed and cared for. Mr. Barwise was a book-keeper and ever faithful to his task. It is said that for 20 years the farthest he went from his desk was to the station at Menomonie Junction. His daily round of labor and pleasure was methodical in the extreme with a morning cup of coffee brought to him piping hot in a thin china cup, while he was still in hed. Connoisseurs in taste affect to believe a certain delicious delicacy is added to coffee drunk from a thin cup, to beer drunk out of a thick ice-cold mug, and to wine sipped from a thin glass. In a "bone-dry" nation, succeeding generations, probably, cannot verify these suppositions, save as to the enhanced savor of coffee so drunk. Never, never again, possibly, shall man or woman, know the taste of liquor; and of cereals and grapes there shall, doubtless, nevermore be a brewing, distillation or vinous fermentation. To appreciate the richness of the bead in beers, the acme of flavor in distilled liquors, and the fine bouquet of wines, may perchance, become one of the lost arts

Mr. Barwise gave notice that he must quit the office on account of a chronic illness. He was told to come each day, if he could, even though he stayed but a few minutes, or an hour. His employers appreciated his faithfulness and realized that if he felt that his labors were ended he would not rest easy. He was kept on the pay roll.

This man and woman were earnest churchmen and had much to do with the establishment and the early maintenance of Grace church, then as now, located but a block away. They made a great deal of Christmas time and as their grandchildren increased in number Mrs. Barwise was busy from one Christmas until the next in making and purchasing presents for all. Not one was ever overlooked. At one time M. L. Kern was rector in charge of this church. He had cogitated and grew from some outside orthodox sect into the Episcopal faith. He was generally, in the community, spoken of as "Elder Kern." In meeting Mrs. Barwise he often accosted her as "Sister Barwise," to which greeting she invariably replied: "Don't sister me, I am not a Methodist."

The Stout Institute gymnasium building occupies all of lot 7 in block 54. It fronts endwise north on Wilson Avenue, its west wall runs north and south on the line of Second Street, and stands opposite the south portion of the manual training school building. The outside face of its eastern wall marks the line between lots 7 and 8, the residence lot of Mr. R. G. Ingraham. He and his family live on this lot. In winter their house is shaded by the county school building in the morning and in the afternoons the years around, it is in the deep shadow of the gymnasium.

On this gymnasium lot there once stood a large and richly finished Baptist church. It was also lavishly furnished, having among its appointments, near the pulpit, a fine pipe organ, and underneath the pulpit an adequate immersion fount. When the fount was to be used the pulpit was pulled aside as a discarded stand.

Cost sometimes shows the laudable intention of a builder to build well, and it may indicate somewhat the grandeur of the buildings constructed. This church was built in 1870-1871, when materials and labor were cheap and low compared with prices of today. The writer seems to be reliably informed as to the cost of this church. It cost $17,000 with an additional cost of $1,700 for the organ.

This church building made over, now stands as a dwelling house on lot 4 of block

8 at the intersection of Twelfth Avenue and Sixth Street. Its pipe organ (soon to be discarded for a new one) is now in service, at St. Paul's Evangelical church at the corner of Eleventh Avenue and Ninth Street in this city, but the whereabouts of its fount is not known. The church was built and owned by Capt. William Wilson.

The county school main building and its adjacent special buildings in which are located the county training school for teachers of the common schools, the county school of agriculture, and domestic economy are situated on the east onehalf of block 54. The main building is set well back in its grounds, its north side answers as a front and faces on Wilson Avenue. Back of it on Ninth Avenue is a solid mass of wooden structures that serve the activities of the agricultural department. This department has its schoolroom in the lower story of the main building.

Where now this main building stands was once a dwelling house in which the Rev. John C. Sherwin lived for a few years. Mr. Sherwin was one of those men who by nature and nurture was qualified and equipped to go forth as a missionary to the early sojourners on the frontier where lived men and women, for the most part honest of purpose and earnest in the walks of life, but careless of the conventionalities of society and of the church. He early appeared in the Mississippi River Valley and at an early day made LaCrosse his home. He came here in 1859 and organized the Congregational church. In 1868 he came again and reorganized this church and became its resident pastor until 1874.

He moved pleasantly and modestly among all of the people. Under his gentle manners there was a strong and persistent air of purpose which attracted and did not repel. He was a successful hunter and fisherman. He did not alarm nor flush the game. He never scared a school of fish from its secluded hole but quietly caught each fish there. He did not attempt to scare sinners from hell but enticingly beckoned them to heaven. Whether he was called of God is not known, but it is known that he came to the people of the West and that he did much good.

Main and Broadway are the principal streets of the city, and all of these school buildings, except those of the Homemakers', are within one and two blocks of these streets, and those excepted, are but two blocks south from Main and four east of Broadway.

These sites are now the seats of inculcated learning. Here students by repeated conning of lessons gain a knowledge of the general principles that govern the physical and mental activities of life. These studies are supplemented by manual training, but this training is on lines previously determined upon and specifically worked out in advance for illustration of the texts taught.

Before their present use these sites were not fallow ground. On them were then the abodes of men and women who lived here some of the experiences, noted some of the effects and recorded some of the conclusions, that have now become the basis of study and observation in these schools. The knowledge they acquired rested largely on their daily direct contact with the unlooked for, the adventitious events of life.

They went before and prepared the way for the student throng we now see upon our streets. It may not, therefore, be amiss at some future time, to recall the names of these pioneers while some still live who knew them in the flesh.

Block 76 was always known as school block, but three dwellings were built thereon before the increase in the school ground area. Block 53 had six dwelling houses located on it, when, in 1897, it was purchased for school purposes. These houses were among the earliest built in the town plat and had in the mutation of home settlement housed many early day families connected with early day local history. Three houses stood on the ground now covered by the domestic science school building and in them lived at different times a number of the early day prominent families. Two houses occupied the ground of the county schools. Before the Barwise family occupied the Homemakers' house it was successively the abode of the family of a foreman, a preacher, and a teacher. It was a building early erected on the village plat.

Memoir of Peter Jungck.-The author of this memoir, who passed away early in the present year, 1925, was an early settler of Menomonie who knew this community when it was a mere cluster of homes. It had been his privilege to see Menomonie develop from a lumbering settlement to it present size. His mind treasured many incidents of the early days and had imparted his recollections to C. E. Freeman, who has gathered much in the way of historical lore pertaining to Dunn County and the Chippewa Valley. The narrative, recalling Menomonie as it was in 1868, when Mr. Jungck came here, was given by him to Mr. Freeman in 1914, and appeared in the Dunn County News of Feb. 12, 1925.

"I came to Menomonie in June, 1868. My brother, Carl Jungck, had been here for two years. On the block where Egbert Marks now lives, block 128, there were no residences but the Methodist church stood on the southwest corner of the block facing south. The Congregational church was built later on the northwest corner of this block facing north, where Henry E. Knapp's house now stands.

"My brother, Jacob Jungck, came here in 1853 and was pilot on the rafts that ran down the Red Cedar River. Somewhere about 1863 he went into the flour mill of the Knapp, Stout Company as clerk under John J. Carter. About 1866 Mr. Carter built a two story building on lot 3 in block 126 and with my brother, Jacob, opened therein a store, run in the name of Jacob Jungck.

"When I came here there was a small dwelling house on the southeast corner of this block and the store built by Mr. Carter and a dwelling house of Henry Grobe on the west side of the block. These were the only buildings then on the block.

"My brother, Jacob, at the time he went into the mill, married Margaret Hafmeier, who died in this city in August, 1914. She was the first German girl who came here to live.

On the triangular block opposite where Mr. Carter's store was built, there stood the Wisconsin house, a hotel run by Fritz Knoble. For about two years my brother, Carl and I lived over the Carter store and my brother, Jacob, lived in a lean-to back of the store. My two brothers, however, had lived there about two years before I came here.

"On the grounds known as the Captain Tainter homestead, running from near the bridge at the company's mill to where the City hall now stands, there were no buildings. In 1869, I think, Andrew Tainter, known as Captain Tainter, began construction of a large house, now the Bertha Tainter hall. The frame was up and not enclosed, but the roof was on when one day there came up a thunder storm with a very high wind. I was then at the Carter store. My brother was also there. We had hard work to keep the doors in the store from blowing in. I looked out toward the Tainter house and saw it blow over. It went down flat with the ground. Phillip Rhomback was the contractor and had to stand the loss. John E. Edwards was the architect.

"On the block south of the block where Mr. Carter's store stood there was but one building, a small house, which stood a little north of the southeast corner of the block. On the block where the Royal hotel now stands there were four buildings. At the northwest corner there was the Tyroler house, run by Anton Berger and Frank Wasser. At the southwest corner the dwelling of Peter Lammer, which now stands back of the hotel and north of Lammer's a small building of Mr. Brooks. On the southeast corner of the block a building occupied by Henry Grobe. The Wisconsin house, the Tyroler house and the Grobe building were used as saloons.

"On block No. 84 there were on Broadway the store building of Brook & Hess on the northeast corner, the small dwelling of Philip Rhomback in the middle, north and south, and the dwelling of William Huber, a little north of the southeast corner, and the house of John Hess near the Brook & Hess store. On the opposite block east, No. 85, there was on the northwest corner a small dwelling house owned by Torger Hansen. On the northeast corner there was the building used at times for a blacksmith shop and as a machinery shed. On the southeast corner there was a dwelling house of David Heller and to the west of it was a small building. This small building was then used as a dental office by J. A. Heller, a son of David Heller. In the Brook & Hess store and in the Torger Hansen buildings there were saloons. "On block No. 77 there was on the northeast corner what was known as the court house building. Next south was the dwelling of Andrew Simon. On the southeast corner was the dwelling of Lorenzo Vaplon, a shoemaker, and on the southwest corner on the bluff overlooking the low ground, where now is located the Omaha depot and railroad tracks, was the house of Henry Richard, a worker in the flour mill. On the northwest corner was the house of Crist Conrad, a mason.

"On block No. 52 at the northeast corner was the house of Butcherin. On the next lot south was the house of August Geisert. On the southwest corner was the house of Jacob Ehrhard, the father of Louis Ehrhard. There were no houses further south on Broadway, except it may be that Mrs. Morgan's house was at what is now the corner of Birch Street and Broadway.

"On block No. 76, the schoolhouse block, David S. Hull had at the east end of lot 8 a store building—one story with an "L" at the back end for a dwelling. He had a drug store and was then justice of the peace. The west half of the lot was sold to George F. Burton in 1869 and he built on the east part of his west half, a building. He and another man for a while ran a flour and feed store. The business did not pay and he the next year conveyed the east half of his west half to Mr. Hull, who then moved his drug store into this building. In the same year, 1870, Burton sold the west half of west half of lot 8 to Christian Voedisch and he built thereon a two-story building. He used the second story as a dwelling and the first floor as a cabinet shop and undertaker's parlor. In the basement he had a saloon. He personally and alone ran the shop and the saloon.

"On the lot south of the Voedisch building on Broadway was a house of an upright of two stories and a wing of one story in which William Young lived. On the northeast corner of the block was a small one-story frame house used as a schoolhouse. Afterwards when the large school house was built on the south side of the block this small house was moved by Henry Richard onto lot 6 in block No. 77. It faced the west. Christian Voedisch first lived in it. The building was afterward burned.

"On block No. 53 on lot 6 there was a large house, an upright and a long wing. It was then the residence of W. W. Winterbotham. I think the house on the northeast corner of the block was built when I came here and that James Blair lived there. The house west of the corner was built after I came and William Blair lived there. The house in which Mrs. Mott afterwards lived on lot 3, block 53, was occupied when I came by Larkham. There may have been a house on the southeast corner but I do not remember it. These were all the houses on the block.

"The building known as the court house on block No. 77 was used as a court house upstairs and for a dance hall and church. The stairway was inside the building on the south side. The building was 34 feet on Broadway and 36 feet on Main Street. The downstairs was used as dwelling rooms. In a year or two the county offices were moved to a building where the First National bank building now stands and court was held in Grobe's hall on Broadway.

"At first, after my brother and I bought the building 1870, we rented the south side to Thomas McMoren for a harness shop and my brother, Carl, used the north side for a shoe shop and I worked for him. The upper part was used as a dwelling. McMoren died in a few months and we rented this side to John Anderson for a harness shop. After about two years he moved away, then we rented the room to Elsi Gerard for the same business. In about three years he failed and I bought his stock. This is the building Carl and I conveyed to the city of Menomonie in 1905.

"In 1868 the site of Menomonie where not cleared for houses was covered with small brush. There was the appearance of there having been some large trees but they were few and scattered."

History of the Massee Settlement (later called Louisville), from a paper read before the Old Settler's Society by J. C. Ticknor.—On July 26, 1851, Amos Colburn selected the lands south and west of the Red Cedar River on which was afterwards located the village of Dunnville. There were others who were there at an earlier date, but they were "squatters," as they did not acquire title to any land. On March 21, 1854, J. H. Knapp took the lands on the east or north side of the river opposite to the Colburn tract, on which his company located their store, hotel called "Tainter House," barn and warehouse. The first date on the Tainter House register is April 21, 1858. As this point was the head of river navigation, it become a busy point, where the change was from water to land transportation; and it continued to be so until the railroad through the country put the steamboat out of commission. No history of the vicinity would be complete without mention of Dr. Crocker, who located at Dunnville in about 1855 or 1856, was the only physician in this vicinity for some years and was kept busy attending the ills of the early settlers.

On June 22, 1855 Ebenezer Thompson selected the lands where the village of Downsville is located, on which he built a small sawmill, cutting a short ditch across the bend in the Red Cedar River, using this ditch as a mill-race; but high water soon enlarged the ditch until it became the main channel. On Feb. 24, 1858, Thompson deeded his interests in this mill site to B. B. Downs, who built a dam across the river at the head of the ditch, and in the winter of 1859-60 erected a sawmill at this point; and by his name was the village known.

In McHenry County, Illinois, were a number of families who had come west from "York State", who were desirous of getting for themselves a home, and they decided to come to northwest Wisconsin. Henry H. Steves came to investigate and to locate lands for some of them. After looking over the surrounding country, he decided that as Dunnville was the prospective county seat, to get lands in that vicinity; and on Nov. 2, 1855, he selected and entered lands for himself, George Massee, James Vasey, Edward Ticknor and Stephen Morphey in Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, town 26 north of Range 12 west. On Dec. 10, 1855 Aaron Vasey selected land in 1-26-13. On May 26, 1856, William Creaser, Sr., Thomas Massee and William Massee entered lands in the same vicinity.

Having located their lands, the next question was to get their families upon the new homes. In the spring of 1856 H. H. Steves covered his wagons, loaded his household goods and family, and with ox teams started for Dunn County. Thomas Massee came with him to help drive what stock he could bring, and in June, 1856 he landed in Dunn County.

In the fall of 1856 William Massee, with a part of his family, arrived at their new home, driving there with the first horse team. In 1857 James Vasey, Thomas and Fletcher Massee and J. B. Steves came through with ox teams and live stock arriving in June of the same year.

In 1858 Edward Ticknor, F. T. and Aaron Vasey and William Creaser, Sr., with their families, ox teams, covered wagons loaded with house goods, and cattle, started for Dunn County and arrived in June, 1858. And in 1859 Stephen Morphey and family made the trip, arriving in June. and with him came a young man by the name of William Magden. The trip from McHenry County, Ill., took fully six weeks when made with oxen.

Theodore Louis, then a young man who had spent some time in the west hunting and fishing, came to this vicinity in 1856, and finding game and fish plentiful, made a camp near a small creek and on July 7, 1856, selected this land being in Section 9, Township 26 north, Range 12 west.

Daniel Smith from Pennsylvania came west with his family and on Oct. 8, 1855, entered lands in 7-8, 26-12, early in 1856 moving on to the same with his family.

Israel Barnum and family landed at Dunnville, and on April 5, 1858 entered lands in 18-26-12 and soon after moved his family thereon. These farms were so located so that a spring or creek could be used and the buildings were located so that water from either of these sources was convenient thereto. Good water convenient for use was deemed very important by all early settlers.

Francis and John Lorshbough and Michael Smith came west from Pennsylvania and settled in this neighborhood about the same date or soon after. Samuel Kyle, Sr., and family arrived in Dunn County on June 2, 1855, camping first on Mud Creek, and on July 5, 1858, with the assistance of T. B. Wilson, entered lands in Sections 1 and 2, 26-13, and upon which he made his first home. Malcom McLean entered lands in Section 12, 26-13 on Aug. 1, 1856 and soon moved his family upon the same. He was one of the first to operate a country blacksmith shop in this vicinity.

In this neighborhood in 1858 a schoolhouse was built of logs 16x24 with a seat around the walls with two rows of board desks and seat combined in the center. In the summer of 1858 Nettie Barnum taught the first term of school therein. Fanny and Mary Massee each taught this school for several terms immediately following. In the early 60-s, as other school districts were organized, spelling schools became the vogue for winter evenings. It was considered an honor for anyone to be selected by the teacher to enter these contests.

The districts in which these contests were more frequently held were "Cummings or Forest Center, Kyles and Fall City." The teachers would send out invitations or notices that on a certain evening a spelling contest would be held at their respective schoolhouses and would then drill their school for the contest. Two leaders would be named and they would then select their members from those present after a warming-up heat, as race men would say. The real contest would come when a misspelled word would send the speller to his or her seat. In this contest the school in which the winner was a member would claim the victory. Many pleasant evenings were thus spent and the ride to the place of meeting would be made in a large sleigh, the box of which would be filled with straw, and then with robes and blankets over and under, the boys and girls would enjoy the ride.

In the early 60's the Fourth of July would be celebrated by a joint Sunday school picnic and was usually held in the grove near the Forest Center school. The chilren of the several classes would be dressed up in their Sunday best, loaded into lumber wagons with as many seats thereon as the box would permit, and with four horses hitched to the same would be taken to the picnic grounds, where long tables would be spread with the best eatables the country then afforded.

One of the articles that was thought necessary was a spring pig for each table, nicely roasted with a lemon in its mouth and red, white and blue ribbons tied around its tail. The salute was fired, but as cannons were scarce, two anvils were used instead.

Nearly all of the early settlers of this neighborhood were members of the Methodist Church before coming here and immediately commenced to organize a religious society, holding services in the log schoolhouse, and because of their activity induced their minister to reside in their vicinity. One of the first ministers in this settlement was Elder J. L. Dyer, who was on this charge in 1859 and 1860; and they built the first church in 1868 under the leadership of Rev. John Holt.

This settlement and near vicinity responded to the call to arms during the Civil War by the enlistment in the service in August, 1862, of Aaron Vasey, William Creaser, Jr., Robert Creaser, George Kyle, John Kyle, William Magden, Samuel Dyer (minister's son) E. W. Gurley and T. M. Robinson, who with others from Dunn County were recruited to fill up Company K, Fifth Wisconsin; but when taken to the front they were used to fill up other companies. Aaron Vasey was the only one who left a wife and family at home, the others being single men. David McLean enlisted at Eau Claire in the "Eagle Regiment" in August, 1861.

Of these Aaron Vasey and William Creaser, Jr., were killed in service. William Magden and Samuel Dyer were wounded and with the others returned after seeing full service. This company embarked on the Knapp, Stout & Co.'s steamboat "Chippewa Falls" at Dunnville on its return trip from Eau Claire to Read's Landing on Aug. 23, 1862 (as noted on the Tainter House register).

On the day for leaving all the friends were there to bid the soldiers goodbye. As the load would be large the boat dropped down to near the mouth of the river and the soldiers went on board at that point. This boat was taken over by the United States government about this date and used as a transport on the Mississippi River. Horses were scarce in the early days and to supply the demand Fletcher and Thomas Massee and F. T. Vasey would return to Illinois during the winter and there they would buy a number of horses and drive them up here, usually arriving in March so as to have them on hand for sale or trade at the opening of the spring work. And by their trafficking in horses it became known as the "Massee Settlement," the home of the horse traders.

And my first experience as a witness in a law suit was in a suit to replevin a span of horses which had been traded for another span. The trial was held in the drug store of D. S. Hull, Esq. It was a justice and jury trial. E. B. Bundy and F. C. McLean were the attorneys for the respective litigants and I was the star witness, and McLean made the statement in the argument to the jury, that "the people of this settlement were teaching their babies how to trade horses." As I was then only 12 or 13 years old, this remark I shall never forget, as I took it as a personal slam.

Upon the last Sunday in August, 1862, this neighborhood was thrown into a fright by the report that Indians were on the war path, and that a large band was in the vicinity of Mud Creek swamp. Church service had been held as usual and those who lived east of the schoolhouse were met by someone with the report that the Indians were coming, and for them to give the alarm.

Thomas Massee and F. T. Vasey on horseback immediately started to see that all were warned. They rode by father's home as we were eating dinner and suggested that we meet at Downsville. Father insisted on finishing dinner while mother picked up the few valuables that were around the house. Before these preparations were completed the neighbors commenced to drive by, all headed for Downsville.

When we arrived it seemed as though everybody in that vicinity was there; some had their household goods; but each had some sort of weapon of defense; all the guns, axes, pitchforks and sythes were there. Then the question was, what next to be done? Some favored one way and some other ways, but it finally was agreed that something more definite should be known before it could be decided what ought to be the line of action. A company of men on horseback was sent out towards Mud Creek, all armed with rifles or shot guns. Among these were Theodore Louis, 'Thomas Massee, J. B. Steves, and F. T. Vasey, and it was agreed that one was to return and report if any definite news could be learned. But they all stayed together and when in the vicinity of Fall City they met some parties who had likewise been sent our from other parts, and as none had seen any indications of danger, they all started to return, but, were caught in a heavy thunder storm, and they camped in a barn by the road until daylight the next morning. When they returned they found that the cows had come home during the night and they commenced milking them for the neighbors.

While the assembly at Downsville were waiting for reports from the scouts sent out, some decided to go to Durand, and loaded their belongings on a flat boat, and others built rafts, while others took wagons and started for the same point. While these preparations were going on, a heavy thunderstorm came up, and when the first thunder was heard many declared it was the cannon at Menomonie, while others insisted it was thunder. I remember a remark made by a Mrs. Andrew Shafer which I can now recall very distinctly, "If that is thunder I will lick grease." It was a mystery to me where she was going to get the grease. The storm lasted till night and nearly everybody was thoroughly drenched, and with no place to sleep for the whole crowd; so some commenced to think that the danger could not be as great as at first imagined, and they talked of returning home. Three or four families of this neighborhood decided to try that, and my father was one who did. By the next night nearly all were back again and soon matters resumed their usual course.

Where this scare started from, or by whom it was started, was never definitely ascertained, but J. A. Heller, then living with his parents on Mud Creek, has given me this version of the Indian scare. A son and daughter of a Mr. Jones, living on a farm in the vicinity of Mud Creek, started on horseback for a ride towards Elk

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

Mound, and when near the head of the Mud Creek swamp saw smoke from a fire back of Nathan Skeel's house, and several persons running around the house and barn, and they imagined that they were Indians on the war path. They immediately returned home and gave the alarm throughout that neighborhood, and the families in that vicinity started for Dunnville. I find upon the Tainter House register of Aug. 31, 1862 this entry: "Indian delegation from Mud Creek, Messrs. Heller, Jones, Harshman, Tubbs and families, residence Mud Creek. Destination, home." On inquiry a day or so afterwards, it was ascertained that Mr. Skeel's folks were making soap and some of the neighbors were assisting. The same scare spread throughout the neighboring counties.

A post office was established, after petition, in 1865. At a meeting called at the schoolhouse H. H. Steeves suggested that it be called Louisville in honor of Theodore Louis, the first white man to camp in that vicinity; and this name was agreed upon. F. T. Vasey was the first postmaster. He held the position for about three years, when he resigned and J. B. Steves was appointed and held the position for about 32 years, and until 1900, when the free rural service was established and the office abolished. Mail was received at first weekly, then semi-weekly, and lastly daily.

Mrs. Thomas Huey, Downsville, has some interesting memoirs which she read before the Old Settlers' Society and which were published in the Dunn County News, of the early days in Dunn County as she knew them.

Coming to Dunn County by ox team with her parents in 1864 she resided here through the greater part of the pioneer period, and in her paper she tells of the hardships of those times.

"I did not come into Dunn County riding after any fine dapple gray horses, but instead I came riding after an ox team sixty-one years ago this last summer. A mere child, I came with my parents, Katherine and Thomas Davidson, and family, from our old home in Waukesha County, near Milwaukee, to five miles out from Menomonie on the Hudson road.

"Old Mr. Cockeram, whom you all no doubt remember, had been writing to my father about how cheap land could be acquired up here and that it was a good place for a poor man to get a start, so father decided to come up here and buy some land. Mr. Cockeram had been our neighbor in southern Wisconsin and had come to Dunn County previously to our coming.

"We took the train at Milwaukee, coming part way. Then we got off and took a boat as the train did not run any further. I think this place was Prairie du Chien. After coming a short distance this boat was stuck on a sand bar and another boat passing which was carrying soldiers, as this was in Civil War days, took the passengers from our boat on and brought them to Reads Landing. There we stayed all night at the Bullard House.

"The next day we took a small boat called the Monitor, which brought us to Durand. There we were met by some friends, the Nimmos, who had also been our neighbors in southern Wisconsin. They were the parents of Alex. Nimmo, formerly of this city. They met us with an ox team and took us out to their home four miles out from Durand on Spring Creek.

"The next day my father walked all the way to Mr. Cockeram's on the Hudson road, returning with him and his ox team and took us all and our baggage to the Cockeram home, which was a long, tedious trip. There were no fine bridges those days, but it was just down one hill and up another. We arrived at Mr. Cockeram's away after dark.

"I remember Mrs. Cockeram as a dear, kind woman and she had supper waiting. I remember she had some honey for supper which they told us had been gotten out of a tree in the woods, which we thought very wonderful then. Mr. Cockeram's people then lived in a log house which consisted of just one room.

"That fall my father bought the land that is now known as the Jacob Brevad place on the Hudson road. He acquired this land for three and one-half dollars per acre. Just one small field of this land was cleared and there were no buildings of course, so there was a bachelor by the name of Ergourd who lived in a cabin down on Gilbert's Creek which they called Bachelor's hall and he went to the army and we got his cabin to move into. My father had brought a set of carpenter's tools from Milwaukee so he got some lumber and made what furniture we had, which consisted of two bedsteads, table and benches. We had brought our bedding and dishes with us. Mother cooked on a fireplace and made the finest bread in a tin oven. I can remember my father carrying a sack of flour home from Menomonie on his back five miles.

"We lived there two years before there was a schoolhouse built and our first teacher in the new schoolhouse was Ruth Hopkins, who afterwards became Mrs. Miner Dunn, who lived in this city for a number of years. The first school superintendent to visit our school was Carroll Lucas. I well remember his visitation and of him telling the children interesting stories. John Kelley, or perhaps he is better known to you as Judge Kelley, and also his brother, Tom, attended school with us there. Nellie Drowley also was one of the pupils and later taught the school and then after that becaus Judge Kelley's wife.

"John Oddie and his wife came through about that time from southern Wisconsin in a covered wagon and stopped to visit us and then went on and located in the Boyceville section.

"Several years later I came to Dunnville to work in the Knapp, Stout and Company's boarding house. There was a family by the name of Burby running the boarding-house at that time. Charlie Moore, whom some may remember, was then general manager of the company's entire business at Dunnville. Mr. Moore was later elected sheriff of Dunn County and Henry Knapp came to take his place.

"Dunnville was a busy place those days. The company bought wood and all kinds of farm produce. There was a large warehouse there at that time where the boat landed which was first called the Pete Wilson and later built over and renamed the "Phil Scheckel," after the captain. This boat brought all the goods up the river that were used in all the Company's stores and were hauled from there by four-horse teams to their various stores.

"I have seen ten or twelve such teams come tearing down the hill and line up by the warehouse to be loaded. Dr. Lyman clerked on the boat one season while I was there just before he went to study medicine.

"We received mail only twice a week. The United States mail was carried by an old Mr. Orr to and from Menomonie, going by way of Louisville and serving the little post office there. The company kept a big four-horse covered stage which made daily trips to and from Menomonie, which carried their private mail and any passengers which would arrive on the boat or any that would come down from Menomonie to take the boat. J. H. Stout was then manager of the river work below Dunnville and kept a regular room at the hotel which was the first room to the left at the head of the stairs, which was always kept in recdiness for him and was known as Stout's room. He was not always there as the boat did not get in every day, depending on the stage of the water. T. B. Wilson kept a driving team and looked after the river work from Menomonie to Dunnville. He also kept a reserved room in the hotel further down the hall.

"We all worked hard but there was lots of life to Dunnville those days and we had jolly times. A great many people from Menomonie came down there in the winter for sleigh ride parties and had dances in the large dining room. I recall seeing Jeff George for the first time there at one of these dances. In the winter there were always a good many stoppers or transients coming through and we would have the ice crew to board, who put up the ice for the company. John Ticknor of this city was then teaching the Dunnville school and boarded at the hotel while I was there. I recall many old familiar faces throughout the county who worked on the river at that time. Many have passed on. Among them were Pat Mc-Mahon and William Cassidy.

"While working at Dunnville I met Thomas Huey, who was in the employ of the company. We were married at Eau Claire in July, 1879, and came over to Menomonie, stopping a few days at the old Menomonie House while buying our housekeeping goods, which were bought at the company's old warehouse. Then we went to Downsville and boarded a few days at the company's boarding-house while getting the house then known as the Hennemyer house in readiness to move into, which we had rented. Ed. Parkhurst was then running the boarding house. While at the hotel, Harry Suter and Jim Williamson made me a potato masher and rolling pin at the mill, which I still have. The mill was then running on power

"Later, in the spring of 1882, we started a little hotel in this Hennemyer house. It was the spring the Milwaukee railroad was built through and I boarded the men who surveyed the railroad and also the head men who supervised the building, and also the first operator at Downsville. His name was Denison. While living in the Hennemyer house my two oldest children were born.

"In the spring 1883 the big washout, which many will remember, occurred at Downsville when the dam went out. The company's store, sleeping shanty, and several other buildings were washed away. It was then necessary for them to take the Hennemyer house, which they owned, to put their goods in which had been saved in the washout, and they bought all of our goods which we wished to dispose of and sent us to Dunnville to board at the hotel as Mr. Huey was still in the employ of the company and was needed on the river, being pilot on the rafts in the summer season and driving team in the woods winters, working for the Knapp, Stout and Company for over 30 years. The Cramptons were then running the boardinghouse at Dunnville while we boarded there.

"The summer after the washout in 1883, while we were boarding at Dunnville, the company laid out some lots on what was then known as the old Creaser farm at Downsville, and we bought the first two lots sold, thereby getting a corner location. Mr. Huey let the contract for the building of our house at once and it was completed and ready for us to move into on the twentieth of October, 41 years ago this month. I remember so well how happy I was that day when we arrived at our own new home, and that I made biscuits for supper in the stove I am still using. It had grown so tiresome boarding with two children and hiring laundry done.

"Mrs. Will Cronk of this city, then Miss Eliza Teare, was teaching at Downsville that year and her sister, Mary, was teaching the Creaser school, which is the Kyle district now, and the two girls boarded with me in my new home 41 years ago this winter. A little later Miss Myrtle McGilton of this county taught there and lived in our home. My two youngest children were born in this present home and we have continued to live there ever since, Mr. Huey passing away in 1915. In his 20 years at Dunnville he had won a host of friends, who recognized him as one of their trusted citizens. His parents and two brothers preceded him in death. Two sisters, Mrs. Emma Fohnhow and Mrs. Adelheid Simmork, live in Germany. He had no relatives in America. Mr. Walters was a member of the Blue Lodge chapter and Commandery Masons of Eau Claire, who conducted the ritual at the grave. He was also a member of the Sons of Herman.

Pioneer Days In Fall City; By Eugene Wiggins; published in the Dunn County News of June 14, 1923.—"During the winter of 1853-54 Elijah Wiggins, S. T. Wiggins, C. C. Tubbs, Silas Blodgett and H. B. Wiggins, my father, concluded to come up and see Dunn County, with the intention of taking up claims if they were suited with the country. Accordingly in the spring of 1854, in May, they, accompanied by J. W. Wiggins, then a young unmarried man, came to Dunn County.

"They were well pleased with the country, and all of the men with families took up claims near each other of 160 acres, near to what is now the village of Fall City, in the town of Spring Brook. And in May, 1855, having all disposed of their claims in Dodge and Dane counties, in Wisconsin, they came together in covered wagons, each wagon having one or two yoke of oxen, the wagons containing the household goods. Each man brought two cows and a box of chickens, and they camped out and cooked their meals outdoors. They were nearly three weeks on the road and came by way of Black River Falls and through Eau Claire. We arrived near where the village of Fall City now stands on May 20, 1855, and camped out on the banks of Mud Creek, and made camp under the spreading branches of a burr oak tree, on the farm now owned by Budd Young, now of Menomonie. The tree is still standing. It has not grown much and does not look different from what it did about 68 years ago. We camped there three weeks while the men folks were building log shanties, one on each man's claim. These were the same claims they had picked out the year before.

'I can remember when we came through Eau Claire. All that was there was a dinky little mill, a board shanty, and a small cheap ferry boat-and Menomonie was scarcely larger. The first time I saw Menomonie it was nothing but trees and brush on the south side of the river. We crossed the river in a small skiff to get to the Knapp, Stout & Co. store, and left the team hitched to a tree. I have seen Eau Claire to be the metropolis of the Chippewa Valley, and Menomonie grow to be one of the real beauty cities of Wisconsin. The ountry was well timbered then around Fall City, and there were plenty of wild animals, such as deer, bears, wolves, and various small animals native to this part of the country. At that time this part of the town, especially near the marshes and hills where there was much brush growing, abounded in a species of rattlesnakes that we had to be on our watch for at all times. Twice there were bands of Indians came through. I remember my grandfather Wiggins had a large dinner horn that my grandmother could blow a blast on that could be heard two or three miles, and it was arranged that in case of danger she was to blow this horn to let the settlers know there was danger near to some one of the settlers, as the men often went a long ways from home to cut wild hav, and to cut logs and timber for various uses on their claims.

"One day in summer, as all the men were up on the marsh making hay, the old dinner horn suddenly sent forth a succession of long and loud blasts that echoed and re-echoed over the hills and prairie of this part of Spring Brook. The women at once took their children to what they thought was some safe place where they could not be found, and the men grabbed their rifles and started for the settlement on the run. When they got to the house of my grandfather Wiggins, which was the first one they came to, they found a party of 40 Indians in the log shanty and clustered around the door, because all could not get inside. They had done no damage beyond eating up everything that was in the house and picking up and appropriating everything they took a fancy to for themselves. The men drove them outdoors and after some parley with them, told them to "puck-a-chee," and they soon filed away to the north. This party was said to be a party of Sioux returning from a raid on the Chippewas. This band and one other of the same size that we saw going along the bank of the Chippewa River towards Eau Claire, were the only large bands we ever saw at this place. The wolves used to keep us awake nights, many times howling not far from our log shanties. When my oldest sister and I got to be about ten and 12 years of age we used to hunt the cows, which at that time roamed at will, and bring them home, where they were shut up for the night. Several times we met bears and twice we met wolves face to face; but they always ran one way and we another. I have always been inclined to believe that we made the best time.

"The settlers at that time had no barns but made cow yards out of tamarack poles near the house and shut the cattle in them for the night. One dark night a bear came to our yard, jumped in and killed the only calf we had. Our two cows were bellowing and making a furious uproar; it woke us all up. Father grabbed his rifle and ran out, but it was so dark he could not see much. The bear must have been a big one, for it carried the calf nearly 80 rods from the house, where it stopped and ate what it wanted. Four men watched near the dead carcass for two nights but never got a shot at the bear. There used to be herds of deer but I never saw but one of elk. When the settler wanted meat he went out and killed a deer. Sometimes they would kill several, cut the meat up in strips and hang it on poles in the houses and let it dry, and when smoked a trifle it was fine eating, and would keep indefinitely.

"As near as I can remember there were only two or three settlers here when we came, but others soon came and soon there was quite a settlement. There were no horses and no buggies of any king for quite a long time after this. When we boys grew up and wanted to take our best girls out we hitched a yoke of oxen to the old log sled in the winter time, put some hay in the box, got enough boys and girls to fill the sleigh box full, put buffalo robes over our laps and went to some spelling school or gathering of some kind, probably three or four miles away. I want to say right here that those red-cheeked, rosy, happy girls and those bright, strong pioneer boys had the jolliest and happiest time that can be imagined. They made the welkin ring as the oxen slouched along, and I venture to say that no young folks today in their big touring cars have such carefree joyous times as we did in those happy pioneer days.

"My father settled on 160 which Mud Creek runs through and began the erection of a sawmill within a short time after he had settled in his new home. He began sawing lumber in 1856 with this mill. In Fall City and Waneka there are still buildings (now standing) erected with lumber sawed in this mill 68 years ago. In a few years the lordly Chippewa River, which is only a short distance from Fall City, bore on its bosom a stream of lumber rafts, logs and a number of steamboats. Rumsey's Landing, which is, or rather was situated on the river, about three miles south of Fall City, was the market to which the farmers of this town, and also a goodly number from Rusk Prairie, hauled their wheat to be shipped down to the The sawmill and the grist mill owned by John Govin of Fall market by boat. City were built about the same time. A millwright, Reuben George, was the man that finished off both mills and got them to running. He was a splendid millwright and a fine workman. The logs that supplied the sawmill were mostly cut in the big swamp near Elk Mound, and most of them were run down the creek in the early spring.

"I well remember the big Indian scare, which strangely enough, went all over the state in the same day, and stranger, still, at the same hour of the day. It was on a Sunday morning. We had the chores done and were sitting around the house when we heard a horse come running at a great speed. We all went to the yard at the front of the house. The rider proved to be Mr. John Govin, one of our near neighbors. He had a running horse, and, let me say, it could run, too. Mr. Govin was hatless and his horse covered with foam, and as he flew past he shouted, "The Indians are coming, run for your lives. They are killing everybody and burning everything they come to." The next man that came along stated that the Indians were only two miles northeast of us and numbered over 300 warriors. My father set me to running bullets at once while he went with several other men to try to hold the Indians in check until the women and children could be gotten together in a place of comparative safety. Soon the teams began to go by loaded down with women, children and old men, and, I regret to say, several men that were not very old. The teams were running, women screaming, children crying-in The mob all went to Rumsey's Landing, where they were r and all left in a big mob on the south side of it. They fact, a regular panic. ferried across the river and all left in a big mob on the south side of it. could not have been left in a worse place, for if the Indians had come they could have stood on the high yellow banks on the north side of the river and shot the people down without any serious danger to themselves. All the families came back towards evening and that night camped around the log house of William Bates, while men stood guard. The next morning all returned home and the Indian scare was a thing of the past.

"Nearly 60 years ago Fall City was larger than it is today. There was a sawmill, grist mill, store, two blacksmith shops, a photograph gallery, carpenter shop, and part of the time two hotels and a few dwelling-houses. One hotel kept a barthe only time I think that liquor has ever been sold over an open bar in the town of Spring Brook.

"The first term of school in Fall City district No. 2 was taught by Miss Harriet Wiggins. She afterwards married H. K. Carrington, now of Menomonie. She died about 12 years ago. I recall the first term of school. The first term there was only one book in school, a McGuffy's spelling book, that was the property of the teacher. This was passed from one scholar to another as was needed. Later on, when we began to learn to write, we used brown wrapping paper, when it could be had, and many times we peeled birch bark off the trees which grew all along the bank of the creek only a few rods from the schoolhouse. There was not a slate nor copybook in school at that time and not for many months after that term. You will see this was a pioneer school in all ways, in fact, a kind of Abraham Lincoln outfit. But this school in after years became famous in Dunn County as a school of good spellers and used to bring home the honors in most all spelling matches with other schools.

"The first town law enacted in Spring Brook was one against letting hogs run at large, with a penalty of $5 for violating the law. So far as I know, Hugh Campbell of Elk Mound, who still owns a farm near Fall City, Mrs. E. B. Young, and myself, are the only ones left of the bunch of pioneers who came in 1855 and settled near Fall City. The rest have crossed the divide into the great unknown."

Running Valley is a region which extends in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction, the lower end embracing part of the northeast corner of the town of Colfax and the southeast corner of the town of Grant, and the upper end extending into Chippewa County. An account of its settlement was read by the late Mrs. D. C. Baldwin at the Old Settlers' meeting held at Menomonie, Oct. 20, 1917, from which the following extracts have been made.

Running Valley was settled in 1862; Gunder Kinney and Ole Running were the first settlers, filing on their homesteads in the early summer of that year. Mr. Running brought his family the same year, but Mr. Kinney did not bring his until the following year. Several moved there with their families,—the Larsons, Dahls, Bennetts, Ambles, Halvorsons, and Helgesons. Their covered wagons afforded them temporary shelter, but by fall they had rude log houses erected. Most of the men worked during the summer on the Moore farm, earning money wherewith to buy the necessities of life. In the following year they began to open up their land, but had to endure many hardships.

In 1870 the settlement was visited by an epidemic of smallpox, which proved fatal to many. That year, also, Gunder Kinney, while tearing down an old strawcovered granary, met with an accident which cost him one of his legs. Tom Running was sent on horseback to Eau Claire for a doctor, and brought back Dr. Alexander, who amputated the leg, Mr. Running assisting by holding the chloroform; but the operation was so crudely performed that it was a year before Mr. Kinney was able to get around.

Miss Frank Butterfield, who later became Mrs. Frank Van Wie, taught the first school in the valley. The schoolhouse was small and not pretentious, it consisting merely of a few boards crudely placed together so as to afford a rude shelter. The next year her sister, Ada Butterfield (Mrs. Ada Preston of Eau Claire, now deceased), taught the school. "They had erected a log schoolhouse by this time right on the spot where the stone schoolhouse stands, called the Kinney schoolhouse. When Ada Butterfield taught in the log schoolhouse, it was customary, the last thing before closing school, to sing. They all stood up and were singing, when a dozen or more Indians were attracted by the lovely music and were a-peeping in the windows; but Ada stood at her post. She commenced to keep time with her foot, and the children forgot all about the Indians, who soon disappeared."

At one time the Kinney school was the voting place, the precinct extending from Sherburne Prairie to Barron County. Mr. Dahl was elected assessor, and it took him all summer to do the assessing. The Dahls lived in a log house with an attic above, and when Mr. Dahl was away from home, Mrs. Dahl and the children slept in the attic; they climbed up a ladder in the middle of the house and then pulled the ladder up after them, so the Indians could not get at them. When Mr. Alic Running and Miss Christine Salverson were married, Miss Salverson prevailed on Mrs. Russell Culbertson to bake the wedding cake, and one who attended the wedding went back to Norway and took a piece of the cake with him, and it was on exhibition at one of their fairs. "That is the reason," adds Mrs. Baldwin," so many sturdy Norwegians emigrated to Northern Wisconsin.

"The James and Andrew Mathews' families had a log house-logs just rolled up but no chinking. They had blankets hung up at the windows. Dick Bennett and the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company's men all camped in the house and in the morning it was 40 below zero. They had one cow but no stable to put her in and she froze her udder so bad they could not milk her. They went to the marsh above where Colfax now stands, broke the ice and gathered moss and filled the open spaces and fixed the windows and the house was very comfortable."

In March, 1863 there was a heavy snow, four feet on the level. The people had wheat to take to Knapp, Stout & Co.'s mill at Menomonie, but it took the men three days to go and return with the ox teams, and in the meanwhile their families nearly starved, the Mathews families living mostly, or entirely, on potatoes and buttermilk.

In Mrs. Baldwin's reminiscences we read of various incidents of those pioneer days, trifling in themselves, yet having a direct human appeal as touching the springs of humor or pathos.

We read of Mrs. (Elder) Knapp's headache being cured from drinking wild "tea," which she thought was the genuine store-bought article; of Samuel Staples, in his wife's absence, undertaking to make pancakes, but putting salt on them instead of sugar; of a skunk getting into the Baldwin cellar; of the grand housewarming when the Baldwins moved into their new house (built in 1891), when the Tietze band from Sand Creek was hired and the people danced all evening; of Rose Monteith teaching in the little red schoolhouse when she was only 14 years old; of the perils of crossing the river in a boat during a log jam, and of William LaForge under such circumstances taking Florence Ticknor across to visit the school, when, according to Mr. La Forge, they were "sometimes both on the logs and sometimes both in the boat;" of the wolves howling whenever they heard the whistle of the steam threshing machine owned by W. J. Mathews and Fred Stephens, and of the havoc made in the packs by Charles Pooler, Sr., by means of traps and poison; also of other things, only a few of which can be here mentioned.

John Paul was the champion swimmer in the Baldwin neighborhood and now has two grandsons, Howard and Lyman Paul, who are noted swimmers of this county.

The following story, related by Mrs. Baldwin, has a strong human interest: In the spring of 1862, the Rev. D. P. Knapp came west from Ogdensburg, N. Y., to take up a homestead. His family consisted of a wife and seven children, the children's ages ranging from one to 12 years. They were made welcome at the Moore farm, where they rested for some days after their trip, having driven with a team from Milwaukee. When at last they moved into the house that was to be their temporary home, the change from the roomy, comfortable parsonages to a one-room shack, was too great for Mrs. Knapp and she wept bitterly. The following fall Mr. Knapp built a somewhat larger house on his own farm, but it was hastily constructed and far from comfortable. It seems to have had a particularly poor roof, which let the snow and rain through, and it is said that the children could see the stars through it at night. No wonder Mrs. Knapp cried. The pioneers who failed to dig wells the first summer were greatly inconvenienced by having no water for their stock during the next winter. Mr. Knapp was one of these and all winter he and his family had to drive their cattle to the river to drink, a distance of a mile and a half.

There were bears in the woods which sometimes raided the pig pens, and occasionally the men of the community would go on a bear hunt. On one occasion they brought home four large bears, which were skinned and dressed on the Dodge place, and everyone had bear meat.

Accidents, sometimes annoying and often amusing, were not infrequent. One morning Mr. Dodge, Mr. Pie and Mrs. Ralph started with a horse team for Eau Claire. They had with them a box of eggs, some boots and shoes to be repaired, and some books, belonging to Mrs. Ralph. When crossing the river at the Bach Clark ford, Mrs. Ralph, who weighed 200 pounds, fearing the books would get wet, leaned over to get them, when her weight upset the wagon, and all the cargo went to the bottom of the river. Mrs. Ralph's hoop shirt kept her afloat till she reached shallow water, when she was helped out by Mr. Pie, but she was so mortified by the accident and the loss of the property in transit that her first coherent remark on reaching shore was: "I wish I was drowned." Such are a few of the pen pictures of early days in Running Valley as set down by one who lived the life they depict, which is in all essential respects typical of pioneer life, not only in Dunn County, but throughout most of the Northwest, or at least in the state of Wisconsin, where though the people were not called upon to face the horrors of an Indian massacre, like the pioneers of New Ulm and other places in the sister state of Minnesota, they had neverless to be on their guard against such a possibility, and against the thievish propensities of their Red neighbors, and to endure many hardships and privations with patience, locking forward with hope to a better future, which has been happily realized for their children and descendants, and which a few of the "old-timers" themselves have lived to enjoy.

Mr. S. S. Sivertson has also furnished some historical data in regard to Running Valley, the most of which is given here, nearly in his own words. Mr. Sivertson says:

In the year 1862Ole Running and Gunder Kinney started for Eau Claire (from Vernon County) to look for land, going about 20 miles north of that place. They said, "Here we take out homestead," because there was a creek and meadow, with plenty of wild hay. Those were the main points-water and hay. Ole Running never went back to Vernon County, but Gunder Kinney took a boat from E i Claire back to get his family; but for certain reasons he did not move until the spring of 1863. Then he set out for his homestead with his family, with a yoke of oxen hitched to a covered wagon, a few cows and some sheep. The same year there came a number of other settlers. The next thing was to break some land and get some log houses built. There were fish in the creek and plenty of venison in the forest, and in the spring of the year the settlers would make maple syrup and sugar, and use barley or wheat for coffee. Now it was time to think of church and of school for the children. The first school meeting was held in Gunder Kinney's house, and it was decided to build a schoolhouse on Nels Tobias' land. The building was used not only for a school but also for church purposes by "Conferencen Synode Hauges Synod" and also by the Methodists. The valley was called Running Valley because the Runnings were the first settlers there. Eau Claire was the nearest place at which to obtain supplies until they got Rutabaga town, or what is called Colfax now.

Mr. Sivertson then mentions the accident to Gunder Kinney, whereby he lost a leg and subsequently had to use a wooden one, and says that this was six years after he had moved to Running Valley, which would make it in or about the year 1868. He goes on to say: "Now Chris, being the oldest of the boys, had to do what he could, being only 14 years old. He got a position as a clerk in Culbertson's store in Colfax; from Colfax he went to Eau Claire, where he died at the age of 27."

Pioneer Settlers in the Town of Peru.—In an article published in the Dunn County News in 1910 (March 10) Prof. O. E. Hagen had the following to say in regard to the pioneer settlers in the town of Peru: "Late in the summer of 1855 a number of them under the leadership of Hans Torgerson started with ox team and wagon up the Mississippi and Chippewa and reached Peru after a journey of about two weeks, bringing their household goods, cows, etc. Hans Torgerson located at once on Section 24 and Anders Fauske on Section 26, and early in 1856 Torger Olson selected and preempted his future home. The remainder of the company went in various directions in quest of employment, and one settled in Minnesota. A number of the immigrants remained in Vernon County over the winter and came in the spring or summer.

'The first year was beset with difficulties that would have disheartened less They were unacquainted with the English language and found resolute people. themselves in an inhospitable wilderness, almost cut off from the outside world. The nearest depot for provisions and implements was at Read's Landing, and the only means of transportation were keel-boats, flat-bottomed craft propelled by poles, and occasionally at high water small river steamers bringing supplies to the sawmills above. Their provisions soon gave out and so Mr. Torgerson decided to go to a little store in connection with a sawmill on the Menomonie River, where he thought he might be able to obtain a few of the most urgent necessities. As this expedition forms a typical episode in early pioneer life it may be worth recording. A raft or float was built and launched on the river and Mr. Torgerson embarked. The swift current of the high water soon bore him out of sight. But when he reached the confluence of the Chippewa and Menomonie he was unable to land on the west bank and was borne onward until he came to some overhanging branches of trees that swept him off the raft. He caught branches, however, and got ashore, while the raft sailed on with his rifle and other things and with his cap in its wake. It was now night, pitch dark, with pouring rain, thunder and lightning, but neverless he pressed on. Soon, however, he struck deep and raging currents of water, which he crossed one after the other until he finally had to cease and await daylight. Then he discovered that he was on an island, but the inner branch of the river was packed with logs. On these he crossed and found a sawmill, houses, and people who gave him both breakfast and a cap. He found his way to Read's Landing, purchased provisions, etc., to be shipped by steamboat and after waiting a week for the steamer, he found himself on the homeward journey.

'Meanwhile the folks at the homes to be, having been left to subsist on the scanty remains of provisions left from the upward journey, and on the birds of the air and the fish in the water, had reached their last meal without there being any signs of deliverance. Then Torger Olson, who was the leader now, and the chief character of this part of the romance, resolved to start for Eau Claire, where there also was a sawmill, boarding-house and a little store, so, yoking up the oxen, they started, cows and all. They reached John West, a German living near Porterville, about noon and tried to explain their errand. A polyglot conversation now ensued. in the course of which John thought he heard the word "Arbeit," and also surmised the situation. So he invited them to a bountiful dinner, for which the women went out to dig potatoes and the boys set out for Eau Claire. In due time they reached the metropolis of the Chippewa Valley and of Northwest Wisconsin. The edifices that met their gaze were not so very imposing. A primitive looking sawmill on the site of the old steam mill on the Eau Claire River, a blacksmith shop where the depot of the Central Railway now stands, a log boarding-house where the Chippewa Valley Bank is now situated, and a frame house or shanty in course of construction on the ground now occupied by the Eau Claire House. The streets were lanes cut in the dense jungle of birch and oak brush along a part of Barstow Street and up towards the mill. Lots were also for sale for $10 in the vicinity of the mill and $5 on Barstow Street. At the boarding-house and store they were also short of provisions and awaiting supplies by keel boats or steamers. Two large pieces of pork were, however, secured, and well satisfied, the boys bade the metropolis adieu and soon rejoined the women and the cows. In the potato field the women had raised prodigious havoc, as the great piles of tubers in their wake proved, and of them the genial John dumped a rich supply in the wagon box of the boys. After a short rest the caravan moved on again on their homeward journey, and camped that night on the grounds of the present Hysen farm. Here the good cow supplies them with fresh milk, but finding they had no receptacle to catch the fluid in, Torger made use of his new hat for that purpose, which proved a success, although there was some leakage. Thus they regained their homes and soon all were reunited, having added one episode more to the thousands of similar ones in the lives of our sturdy pioneers who guided the course of empire in its majestic and irrestible march. The year 1856 saw settlements both in Peru and Rock Creek firmly established and also many new arrivals." Prof. Hagen also mentioned George H. Chamberlin, Mr. Clark, and the Norrish brothers, who, with others came in that year, when Durand also was founded, and adds that during the next few years "there was a great influx of settlers."

The Indian Scare of 1862.—The following data in regard to the stirring times mentioned was contributed by J. A. Heller of Menomonie.

"In the time of the Sioux Indian massacre in Minnesota in 1862, we in northern Wisconsin, and especially in Dunn County, were somewhat alarmed as to the danger of the same from the Chippewa tribe. I was driving with my parents on our farm west cf Mud Creek bridge at Waneka on the road to Eau Chire in the town of Spring Brook. My father was on a visit to Freeport, Ills. My brother, M. W. Heller, was home on sick leave from General McClellan's army then advancing on Richmond. The farm on our east was occupied by a Mr. Jones and his family of partly grown children.

"The eldest boy and his sister, on a Sunday morning about harvest time, started out for a horseback ride, and going east to the first road north, rode till they were in sight of the N. Skeel farm, where they saw the house on fire and the people rushing in and out. They thought the Indians were burning the house and murdering the family. Turning their horses and galloping back home, they gave the alarm, and then came on to our house, just across the creek west, and then galloped on west and then back and south toward Fall City, spreading the alarm. My mother hid in the corn field; my brother and I hitched up our teams and by that time the Marshman's family and others came to us and we loaded up and started on tke road south to Fall City. When we got to the turn I called to my brother to stop and I got out and said I would go back and take a shot at the Indians. I hid behind a bunch of willows and waited for the Indians to come. Finally I got tired of waiting and went to the house; then went to the Harshman house and he had just come in from looking at his corn field and found his family gone.

"I told him the news and he said he would hitch up his horse to the buckboard and we would follow them. I said that while he was doing so I would go and tell the Dodges who lived back off the road. When I got back Mr. Harshman and I started to follow our people. When we got in sight of the Waneka schoolhouse we saw the people gathering there. In the meantime one of the Govins galloped through the settlement giving another alarm, and going to the schoolhouse, told them they would be all killed, and to go out on the open prairie and all die together.

"Mr. Harshman and I then went on south. After passing south of Fall City we met a small body of the Louisville settlement farmers on horseback with guns, going to fight the Indians. We told them they would find refugees gathered at the Waneka schoolhouse. We then traveled on but before getting to Dunnville we met our own people and those that fled with them on their way back. We then returned with them. Some fled as far as Durand and the alarm spread like wildfire. At Menomonie they organized a company and put out guards, and they say that when the Chippewa Indians heard of it they were more frightened than the whites, fearing they would be attacked, and they fled north as fast as they could go.

"It turned out that the cause of this great scare started at the Skeel farm as the Skeel family were making soap, for it boiled over and their rushing around to put out the fire and save the soap, together with the smoke, caused the alarm to be given by the Jones boy and girl. I was then 16 years old and am now 79."—J. A. Heller.

The Little Elk Creek Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church.- The original congregation was organized in February, 1858, among the first members being Thou Hendrickson Thorud, Ole Evenson, Erick Gunderson, M. P. Moark, Tosten Kittleson, August Nelson, and Ole O. Thorud. From time to time new members were received: in January, 1859, Kristenson and John Johnson; on August 3, that year, Nils Enerson, Ener Nilson, Cornelus Gunderson, Marie Gunderson and Hendrik Thorud; on Aug. 2, 1960, Ole Thompson, Ole Christopherson, Jens Halstenson and Christian Erickson; and on June 5, 1861, Sigvet Sampson, Johanas Hanson, Knute Thompson, Sever Severson and Nils Olson. At first services were very infrequent, being held only twice a year, the minister coming from Rush Prairie, Pierce County, but after the construction of roads had rendered travel less difficult, they were held oftener. In 1876 a church building was erected, which was dedicated Oct. 18, 1877.

In the meanwhile another congregation, started in 1866, was holding services two or three times a year, the minister coming from Eau Claire, the first members of which were Johanas Johannessen, Andres Erickson Vagnild, Hendrick Severson, Svend Rund, Abraham Knudson, Erick Olson, Erick Tunis, Jens Solie, Johanas Snedker, Hans Skelle, Martin Berg and John Anderson. This congregation erected a building in 1889. For many years the two congregations remained separate, but on Jan. 28, 1919, they were united, forming the Little Elk Creek Norwegian Lutheran Church. In 1920 the present church edifice was erected, being dedicated November 28 that year, its location being in Section 18, town of Red Cedar, about half way between the locations of the two older buildings, and about six miles northeast of Downsville. In 1924 a $4,000 pipe organ was donated by Mrs. Bereth Tunis in memory of her deceased son, Ludwig Tunis. There are now about 55 families in the congregation, and services are held every two weeks. The societies are the Ladies' Aid and Young Peoples' Luther League. The present pastor (August, 1924) is Rev. E. C. Haavik, who resides in Menomonie, where in 1915 the parsonage was built by the two congregations of Menomonie and Little Elk Creek, costing approximately $7,000.

Evangelical Church in the town of Tainter.—This congregation was started some 45 years ago and in 1891 a church edifice was erected, which is situated in the northwestern part of Section 35, on the road running north and south. There is no resident pastor, the church being supplied. At the present time (July, 1924) the congregation contains about 25 families.

The Hay River Evangelical Lutheran Church is situated in the northeast quarter of Section 1 (lot 5) in town 30 of Range 13 (town of Hay River). The congregation was first organized Sept. 20, 1875, being composed of a few Norwegian settlers in that vicinity. It now includes about 40 families. The first church edifice used by the congregation was built in 1880. It was replaced by the present building erected in 1904. This church has always been served from Prairie Farm. There are two societies connected with it—a Ladies' Aid and a Young Peoples' Society.

The Menomonie Fish and Game Association was organized in 1900 and started with 15 members. E. P. Troutman was elected president, and M. A. Hansen, secretary and treasurer. These two officials retained their offices until 1916. In 1904 they helped to form the State Fish and Game Protective Association, becoming charter members. During their term of office several cars of fry from the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, as well as from the state of Wisconsin, were received. From 1916 to 1919, C. P. Stone was president and Art Giese secretary and treasurer. These officials were succeeded by Geo. R. Brewer as president and T. W. Rowe, secretary and treasurer, serving as such until 1920; after that Geo. R. Brewer was secretary and M. A. Hansen treasurer until 1923; J. H. Dawes became president in 1924, and H. B. Loomis is now secretary and treasurer. The Association has now a membership of 300. In 1924 it purchased the tract of land half a mile long, lying north of 116 and adjacent to the Red Cedar River, for a black bass hatchery. Trout are being bred in tanks, and also on this site. The executive committee is composed of E. J. McLean (chairman), Geo R. Brewer, John Sands, William Siefert and Edw. Rossiter.

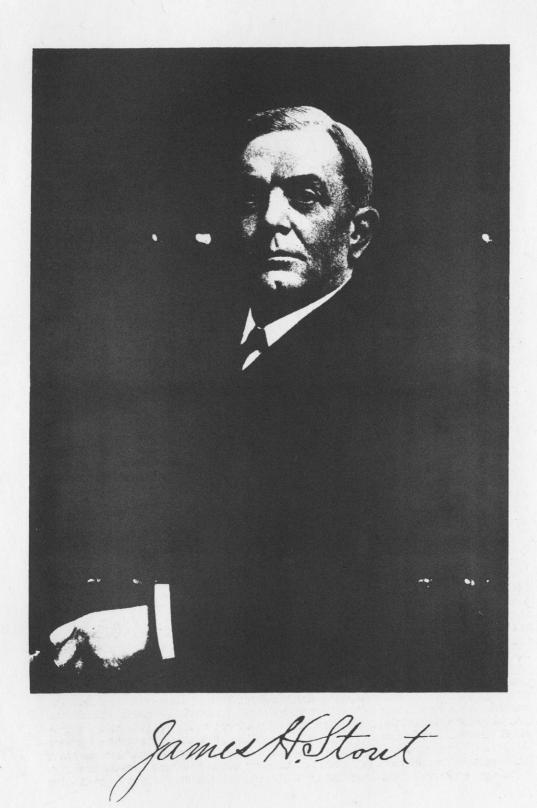

The development of the resources of Dunn County and the increase in its wealth are shown in the increase of its assessed valuation, which was as follows for the years mentioned: 1880—Personal, $1, 373,140; all property, $4,100,023. 1890—Personal, $1,541,162; all property, $5,250,975. 1900—Personal, $1,926,547; all property, $5,789,261. 1910—No report. 1915—Personal, $5,164,901; all property, $27,457,399. 1920—Personal, $9,844,483; all property, $46,044,275. 1924—Personal, $7,498, 970; all property, $51,118,658.

The equalized valuation of the towns, villages and city of Menomonie as shown in the schedule of apportionment of taxes for the year 1923 was as follows.

Colfax, $1,657,668; Dunn, $2,561,035; Eau Galle, $2,863,527; Elk Mound, $1,801,087; Grant, $1,812,405; Hay River, $1,332,124; Lucas, $2,176,704; Menomonie, $3,195,642; New Haven, $1,248,321; Otter Creek, $718,126; Peru, $657,637; Red Cedar, $3,802,852; Rock Creek, $1.108,099; Sand Creek, $1,451,622; Sheridan, $1,407,022; Sherman, $1,499,618; Spring Brook, $2,991,086; Stanton, $1,478,251; Tainter, $1,766,548; Tiffany, $1,361,952; Weston, $2,195,325; Wilson, $1,061,883; Boyceville Village, $679,228; Colfax Village, $1,172,919; Downing Village, $392,533; Elk Mound Village, $504,707; Knapp Village, $412,391; Ridgeland Village, $175,545; Wheeler Village, $346,336; Menomonie City, $6,642,454. Total, $50,474,647.

The state and federal census records of population for Dunn County, for the years selected, beginning in 1855, are as follows: 1855–1,796; 1860–2,704; 1865–5,170; 1875–13,427; 1880–16,818; 1885–21,951; 1890–22,664; 1895–25,006; 1900–25,043; 1905–26,074; 1910–25,260; 1915–26,074; 1920–26,970. It is worthy of special mention that Dunn County has always been free from a bonded debt.

CHAPTER XXII

BIOGRAPHICAL

James H. Stout, one of Menomonie's leading citizens, founder of the famous institute which now bears his name, and generous contributor to its cause, was born in Dubuque, Iowa, the son of Henry L. and Eveline (Deming) Stout. He received a good education in the schools of his native city, and in 1867 and 1869 took literary courses in the University of Chicago. His thoughts, however, turned to the lumber business in which he had been reared from a boy, so he returned to Dubuque, and engaged in that line. In 1871, he was sent to Read's Landing, in Wabasha County, Minnesota, on the Mississippi, to succeed Thomas B. Wilson in charge of the Knapp, Stout & Co. interests there. In 1877, he went to St. Louis, to look after the company interests there, and later to Washington, D. C., looking after legislative matters connected with the concern. He located in Menomonie in 1889, and spent the remainder of his life here. When he first went to Washington he expected to spend about two weeks looking after the interests of the lumber companies in a dispute that had arisen with the railroads over the height of the bridges over the Mississippi at St. Louis. Instead of two weeks he remained there over two years, but his patience and diplomacy finally won. He succeeded in convincing congress of the justice of his cause, and gained his point, which was in accordance with the popular desire at St. Louis. This experience placed him in touch with many public men of national standing, a field of acquaintance which was later greatly extended through his educational connections. Senator Allison, of Iowa, until the death of that statesman, was always one of his warm friends, and Secretary of Agriculture Wilson is another with whom he was intimately associated as friend and collaborator. It was while in St. Louis, too, that Mr. Stout became interested in educational work. A friend remarked one day in his hearing that he would like to educate his three boys in manual training, but did not have the means. Mr. Stout immediately spoke to this effect: "That need not hinder you. I will furnish the money if you will look after the boys." The arrangement was carried out. Mr. Stout watched the result and his interest in this form of education was This incident not only illustrates Mr. Stout's generous impulses toawakened. ward young men seeking self-improvement; it marks an inspiration that has resulted in the finest and best equipped institution for the promotion of manual instruction the country contains, and the beginning of an activity that has made itself felt in every quarter of the nation. When, a short time later, Mr. Stout came to Menomonie, he at once began considering means of bettering the local school system. Manual training at this time had found a place in the public schools of not more than one or two Wisconsin cities, and then only in a modest way in connection with the high school. He first erected a two-room building to be devoted to manual training and domestic science, and also furnished, at his own expense, the teachers for these two new lines of work. The work soon became so popular that students could not be accommodated in the limited space afforded by these two rooms, and Mr. Stout proceeded to erect a much more commodious building and equipped it for a much wider range of work in both departments. Equipment was provided for wood work of various kinds, forging, foundry work and machine shop practice. The advantages offered by this new building and its splendid facilities were appreciated by the students of the school and the popularity of the work increased. Instruction in drawing throughout the grades of the public school was also introduced about the same time and rooms for the art department were provided and equipped in this new building. Mr. Stout's interest in the common school child was by no means confined to manual training. He also arranged to have kindergartens opened in the city and for the carrying out of that plan erected two buildings, equipped them and turned them over to the city. Not only did he erect and equip these buildings in the outlying portions of the city, but he also provided for the teaching force and met all the expenses until the time the kindergartens were taken over by the Board of Education. In 1897 the Central High school building and the large Manual Training building were both burned. The fire entailed a personal loss upon Mr. Stout of not less than $50,000. This reversal stimulated rather than dampened his ardor. Before the ruins were cold Mr. Stout was waited upon by a delegation of citizens and earnestly requested to erect another building. In response he agreed to put up another and better building to cost $60,000, on condition that the citizens should build a high school to cost as much. This offer was gladly accepted by the city and a $60,000 Central School building was provided. Mr. Stout not only made good on his offer, but expended more than $100,000 in the new manual training building and its equipment. An enlarged force of teachers was provided at Mr. Stout's expense, the expense not falling upon the taxpayers, as the records show. Menomonie was probably the first city in the United States to have a thoroughly organized course of manual training and domestic science, extending from the kindergarten through the High school. The local school system has become a subject of study by educators all over the country, and countless numbers have made pilgrimages to the city to study the Menomonie plan and methods. While the perfecting of this system was a matter of great pride and satisfaction to Mr. Stout, he had from the beginning larger plans in view, seeking the betterment of the average school child's opportunities in every part of the country. As an object lesson the Menomonie schools tended to this end in a large degree, but he aimed still further. In 1903 the Stout Training Schools for the preparation of Manual Training and Domestic Science teachers were organized in The inspiration for the enlarged scope of the institutiou was a con-Menomonie. viction in Mr. Stout's mind that a larger supply of well-trained teachers in these lines was required than was afforded by sources then in existence. The facilities for manual training were not fully utilized by the local needs and the opportunity was at hand for engaging in the broader field. The training schools opened in September, 1903, with two students in the Manual Training department and 23 in the Domestic Science department, all of whom sought preparation for teaching. L. D. Harvey, late state superintendent of public instruction, was in charge of the work, having been made superintendent of the entire school system of Menomonie. The absolute separation of the Stout Institute from the school system of Menomonie in 1908 followed a comprehensive report to the Board of Education made by Superintendent Harvey, in which it was made clear that this feature of the school work would always entail a deficit, and for its further development additional provision must be made which would involve an expenditure which could not and should not be made by the city. This deficit had been met in the past wholly by Mr. Stout, and it was recommended that provision for the future be made through a separate corporate body under the management of a Board of Trustees. The impression that Menomonie was paying more for its schools than other cities was shown to be incorrect, notwithstanding that through the existence of the manual training schools the pupils of the local system were given the best advantages in this line enjoyed in any public school system in the country, large or small. The benefits to the community have been manifest, notably in the greater length of time the students on an average remain in school, and in their increased earning capacity after gradua-His 👾 🖊 tion. Mr. Stout was one who was never content to do things by halves. plans were always comprehensive, and he stood by them until they were carried to completion. This trait in his character as well as his unbounded liberality was well shown in his provision for the physical well-being of the students of the schools in which he was interested. After building up, at personal sacrifice of a vast sum of money, an unparalleled manual training system of which the pupils of the public schools received the benefit; after installing kindergartens and equipment so that the training of the child from the beginning might be the most thorough and complete known to modern educational progress, after lending his encouragement, influence and personal services as chairman of the Board of Education to the upbuilding of a perfect system of city schools, he had another form of munificence in store. In 1901 he erected a building containing a gymnasium and natatorium and employed two teachers to take charge of the physical education of the public school pupils of the city as well as those of the training schools proper. This handsome brick building, perfect in all its appointments, cost not less than $80,000. This structure has brought about a second bond of close union between Stout Institute and the city of Menomonie, the first of course being the manual training facilities made possible for the children of its citizens. It was in quarters established here through the generosity of Mr. Stout that the Commercial club first carried on its manifold activities. These have become familiar to every resident of Menomonie, and, as is well known, constitute an important part in the life of the community. So diversified and so useful are the functions performed through the use of these facilities that it is certain the city would not have been the Menomonie it is today The idea of such a club, to make use of the possibilities afforded without them. by the School of Physical Culture, originated in the mind of Mr. Stout. When, in January, 1905, its organization was perfected, he was made its first president, and he served as one of its directors from that time until his death. As an officer and director of the club, Mr. Stout was always planning ways to increase its usefulness and add to the enjoyment of its members and their families. It was his wish that it should be absolutely democratic in its spirit, and that policy has been scrupulously carried out. Every reputable male resident of the city is eligible to membership, and the greater the number who availed themselves of its opportunities the better pleased was Mr. Stout. Free use was given the club of the second and third floors of the building, and the luxuriously appointed reading and rest room, the thoroughly-equipped billiard room, the card room and the bowling alleys afford a source of pure enjoyment and recreation which could be obtained in no other way and which are duplicated in few cities except of the larger class. The gymnasium and natatorium are available to the members, and are much appreciated by those who utilize them. Besides affording a recreation place for the men of the city, where every influence is wholesome and ennobling, and a meeting-place for the civic, commercial and industrial advancement of the city, this act of munificence on Mr. Stout's part has had another and perhaps even more far reaching influence. The social and cultural aspects of life in these quarters in its relation to the city as a whole render the club most distinctive. The weekly socials, carried out during the winter months, in which both young and old participate, and in which no lines of caste are ever drawn either on the basis of wealth or fashion, have done more to foster a fine family spirit among the people of the city than any other agency could have brought about. In these affairs Mr. Stout was always one of the most enthusiastic participants whenever he was in the city. When obliged to miss one of them he felt a sense of personal loss. His genial presence, his cheery smile for all, his little thoughful attentions seeking to promote the pleasure of the others gathered there, will always be remembered among the delightful and inspiring features of these parties. They were planned by him as a means of increasing the happiness of his fellow citizens. He helped to make them fulfill that mission, and it was no doubt his wish that they be continued, in an increasing efficiency in the service designed for them. The Woman's club and the Woman's Social Culture club, with their many lines of broad, useful effort, were also indebted to the same opportunities for a gathering place. In the educational development of Menomonie, in the various ways mentioned, Mr. Stout invested upwards of $600,000. His benefactions were bestowed without ostentation, and so quietly that to this day they are scarcely comprehended by many people living in his home city. Nor were his efforts confined to the fields of manual training, domestic science and physical culture. He was deeply interested in all forms of education looking to the advancement of the welfare of the common boy and girl deprived of the advantages of higher education. His ideal was to make the public education facilities of the highest possible advantage to the masses. For instance, he was quite as deeply interested in providing the country boy with proper agricultural training as the town boy with industrial education. He was instrumental in the passage of laws and the adoption of measures for the improvement of the rural district schools.

Likewise he was an earnest and efficient worker for the provision of better library facilities for the people, especially those of the country. From these things it must not be inferred that he was opposed to the development of higher educational advantages, though his attitude toward the colleges has at times been misunderstood. He was always in sympathy with their work, but used to say: "There are plenty of men of large means ready and able to give for the maintenance of higher educa-What little money I have to give I wish to put into the elementary and tion. secondary field." He was chiefly instrumental in securing the passage by the legislature in 1899 of a law permitting counties to provide training schools for rural That same year, largely through sentiment which he had created school teachers. locally, Dunn County took the initiative in the establishment of a school under this law which was opened in the main building of Stout Institute. In 1902 the county provided a special building for the school jointly with the County School of Agriculture, established in that year in pursuance of a law which Senator Stout helped to have enacted. Both these schools were the first of their kind in the state, and their efficient service to the surrounding community have fully verified the wisdom shown in their establishment, a fact further proved by their having been taken as models for many others provided elsewhere. Mr. Stout served as president of the board of trustees of both these schools from their inception until his death. In the public services of James H. Stout his aid to the cause of popular education, unquestionably world-wide in its influence, stands out most conspicuously. Therefore no sketch of his life would be complete without this outline of activities in that regard. They do not, however, by any means embrace all his service to the public. As a public spirited and useful citizen he is entitled to rank among the foremost in the state. He has taken an active interest in politics, but merely as a good citizen, not as an office seeker. Such preferment as he has had came to him without solicitation on his part. -In 1894 he was first elected to the senate, and was subsequently three times reelected, each time without opposition. During practically all of Senator Stout's 16 year's service in the senate he was chairman of the Committee on Education. This position was accorded to him not because he sought it, but because his associates recognized his special fitness for the position. It is not too much to say that during that entire period, there was hardly an educational measure of any importance presented in the legislature concerning which Senator Stout had not been consulted before it was presented. He did not always approve of measures concerning the value of which he was consulted, but never discouraged the originator from presenting the measures in the form of bills and having them considered by the legislature. The rather striking fact in connection with this matter was that Senator Stout was not a man who through log-rolling tactics undertook to defeat a measure before the legislature. It came to be known that there was no use in appealing to him to help carry through or defeat a measure by such means. Its intrinsic merit, or lack of merit, was what interested him, and good or bad, he was willing to have it presented clearly for the fair consideration of the members of the legislature. While the senator's dominant interest in the legislature, was with educational matters, he was by no means limited in his activities to educational questions. There was probably no other man in the senate who had a more intelligent interest in all important matters of legislation of whatever kind than Senator Stout. He was a member of other important committees than that of education, and gave the same interest to the hearings on matters coming before these committees that he did to educational matters. He may well be described as a man with all around interests, effective in many directions, and exceptionally effective in the field of educational interests. During the last two sessions of the legislature, in recognition, he was made president pro tem, of the senate. His personal influence, due to the fact that he always avoided personal animosities and never sought the advancement of his own interests, was as great as that of any man in that body. He was deeply interested in laws for the development of libraries, for the promotion of agriculture, the conservation of natural resources, the improvement of public highways, the establishment of public park systems and many other lines of betterment that might be mentioned. In 1896, when the proposition was being considered for the holding of a great exposition in Milwaukee for the celebration of the semi-centennial of Wisconsin's statehood in 1898, he was one of the prominent men of the state who stood ready to give of their money and time to make it a success. The preliminary Committee of One Hundred, composed of representative citizens of all parts of Wisconsin, chose him as director general of the exposition. Though the project was abandoned because certain localities and interests stood out for another form of celebration at the state capital, Mr. Stout's state patriotism was strikingly demonstrated in that connection. As a local benefit and to promote the good roads cause throughout the state, he caused to be laid at Menomonie, at an expense of several thousand dollars to himself, a model road which is today an object lesson of progress in that line. For a number of years prior to 1903 he was a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin serving for a time as vice-president of the board. He served as a member of the Board of Commissioners of the State Historical Library Building, created by the laws of 1895, and was made its president. He was a member of the Executive committee of the State Forestry association. In 1895 the legislature passed a law under which the Wisconsin Free Library commission was organized,and he was made the president of that body. He was elected president of the West Wisconsin Library association, organized in 1898. In 1903 he was a member of the Joint Committee on Forestry and Lumber of the legislature, and the same year was appointed a member of the State Board of Managers for the St. Louis Exposition. At the time of his death Mr. Stout was a member of the State Conservation commission, a position for which he was selected because of his well known sympathy. with the new movement for the conservation of resources and his special knowledge of conditions bearing upon that problem. His knowledge of navigation brought him often in contact, while he was active in the lumber business on the Mississippi, with the United States Board of Steamship Navigation, and he was for years a member of its Executive committee. Probably no other citizen of Wisconsin during the last decade and a half of his life was appointed on more delegations to represent the state at important national gatherings than was Mr. Stout. In the fall of 1909 he attended in that capacity the National Conservation Congress held in St. Paul, and the National Irrigation Congress at Pueblo. These things but serve to illustrate the honors Mr. Stout cared to accept and the character of his public service. His utter lack of political ambition is shown by his refusal to consider proffered and substantial support for the offices of governor and even United States senator.-In a local way his benefactions were many, and his influence extended to every branch of civic improvement. To his last days he had in mind many projects for the improvement of conditions pertaining to his home city and county that only awaited the co-operation of his fellow citizens. He was one of the originators of the idea of establishing a county asylum in Dunn County and served for years as a member of its Board of Trustees, helping to make it one of the best in the state. He was a strong supporter of the development of a park and boulevard area for Menomonie, and a few years before his death, at his own expense, he had Warren H. Manning of Boston lay out a comprehensive plan to that end, and he assisted materially in work done in accordance with that plan. In or about the year 1896 he gave to Dunn County the first county system of traveling libraries in the state, consisting of 35 collections, and he maintained these libraries until the time of his He was also a liberal supporter of the state traveling library system, and was one of the trustees of the Mabel Tainter Memorial, with its fine free library. He was also a life member of the Dubuque Library, and a life trustee of the Finley Hospital at Dubuque, both of which institutions he materially benefited. An offer of the building and equipment of a model consolidated rural school to be located near Menomonie was one of his latest expressions of interest in general educational advancement. Mr. Stout was always a great believer in co-operation, and his patience in waiting for the general approval of cherished plans for the public welfare was regarded by his friends as remarkable. But, possessed of unusual foresight, he was able to look far ahead where others viewed but the immediate future, and having his own plans thoroughly formulated and being convinced that they were right, he had complete confidence that others would in time come to his view of the subject. He was a man of peace. He shrank from discord, and was willing to * abide the time when his ideas would be accepted with harmony. Mr. Stout, as is well known, was a man of wealth, and he left a large estate. One of his birthrights was a native aptitude for business, and this was developed by early manhood training. His keen foresight he applied to his business affairs as well as to his many projects for the public benefit, and he left all his varied interests upon a sound, substantial footing. A good organizer, he picked able men to do his work, and the institution in which he was interested were left in strong hands and well managed. • At the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1910, he was president of the First National Bank of this city, (Menomonie), the Bank of Menomonie, the Wisconsin Milling Company, the Stout Lumber Company of Thornton, Ark., and the Thornton & Alexandria Railway Company. Mr. Stout's private secretary, W. C. Ribenack, was associated with him in all of these enterprises. Mr. Stout took personal pride in the success of all of his local business undertakings, and it was his special aim to make them of real service to the public. He was proud to see his banking interests develop and become of service to the community. The First National Bank and the Bank of Menomonie were among the strong financial institutions of this section, and during the panic of 1907 were among the few banks that The largest interest left by Mr. Stout in a business way was lumbering, paid cash. the Stout Lumber Company being one of the large companies operating in the Southwest, with 70,000 acres of land, and with headquarters at Thornton, Arkansas. In his personal affairs Mr. Stout was known as a reticent man, and though always cordial and considerate in his treatment of others, he was not one who was free in his confidences. In all of his transactions he was careful as to details, made few mistakes, and expected of others, as he invariably accorded, a square deal. He never decided a question except upon thoughtful deliberation, and then he stuck to his decision. He was strong in his opinions, yet never pressed them offensively upon others. In the life of James H. Stout the ruling motive was service to others. His plans for carrying out this service were large, but they were always unselfish. The object he worked for was to benefit humanity in a broad sense, not merely to help individuals. To attain this object he worked upon a well conceived plan, and for that reason his efforts were beyond doubt more potent for good then these of many philanthropists who have given much more but in a less thoughtful and deliberate manner. It may be said that there are few who really knew him. He had few intimates, but upon these his remarkable qualities constantly grew as his deeper nature was revealed to them by long acquaintance. He had a great love for children, and it was their appeal to him which no doubt determined the bent which his chief efforts took during so many years of his useful life. He loved peace and was never known to bear a grudge. Though he was able to make money and made it, wealth had no attraction for him for its own sake. His idea of the use of money was to do good with it, and among those who benefited he made no distinctions. James H. Stout was married June 10, 1899, to Angeline Wilson, daughter of Capt. William and Angeline (Hale) Wilson. They had three children: James Huff, Jr., Eveline Deming and William Wilson. James Huff, Jr., was born Nov. 10, 1890, and died March 14, 1911. Eveline Deming was born July 16, 1895, and William Wilson was born January 14, 1898

Captain Andrew Tainter was born at Selina, New York, July 6, 1823, eldest of the 13 children of Ezekiel and Ruth (Burnham) Tainter. He was a direct descendant of Joseph Tayntor (or Taynter), who was the pilgrim forefather of the Tainters in America. Joseph Tainter—which spelling of the family name we shall now follow—embarked for New England at the age of 25 years on the good ship Confidence, which left Southampton, England, April 24, 1638. He came to America in the service of one Nicholas Guy, and soon after his arrival was married in Watertown to Mary Guy, the daughter of his patron. The records show that he was active and prominent among the colonists in that town, for many years between 1640 and 1680—serving in one office or another, as selectman, constable, tytheing man, etc. The direct line of descent to the subject of this sketch is:

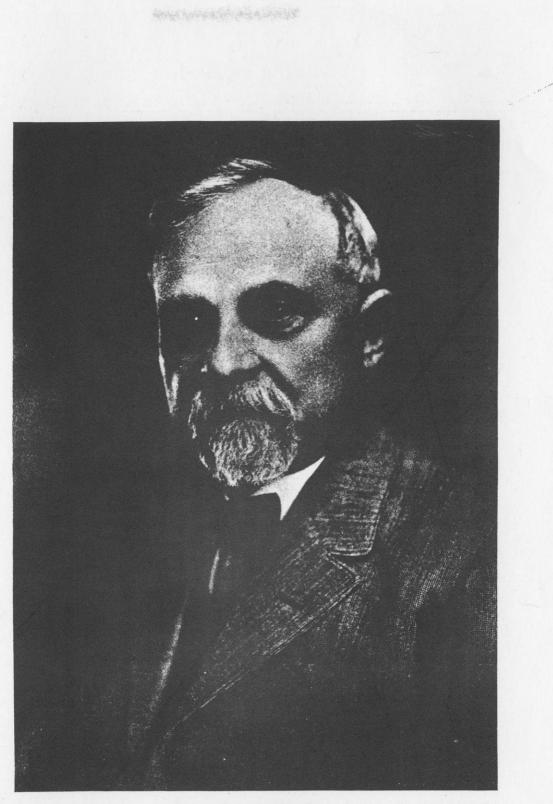

Joseph, Simon, Simon second (a deacon), Simon third, Abijah, Stephen (a physician), Ezekiel, Andrew. In 1832, when Andrew was nine years old, he came with his parents to Wisconsin, the family settling at Prairie du Chien. He remained there until 1845 and in August of that year he made his journey through the wilderness to the Chippewa Valley and found work during the summer at Chippewa Falls. At the close of the season he went down river to Galena on a raft. Returning in the spring of 1846 he worked for Benjamin Brunson, who owned a mill at Chippewa Falls, and received $20 a month. During the winter of 1845-46 he made shingles at the old Gilbert Mill on Gilbert Creek. His first work on the Red Cedar River was done in the fall of 1846, when he was engaged with Blois Hurd in making lath and in the spring of 1847 he ran a sawmill with Mr. Hurd on Irvine Creek. The next year he sold his share in the mill and went to work in the pine woods near the river about a mile below Irvine Creek, getting out square timber. He continued at this arduous labor until August, 1850, when he became interested in the operations of John H. Knapp and William Wilson; from then on his business career is a part of the history of Knapp, Stout & Co., which is related in full elsewhere in this Captain Tainter was one of the outstanding figures in this concern and volume. assumed his full share of labor and responsibility in the management of the com-In the assignment and distribution of their duties each member pany's business. of the firm took charge of that branch of the business for which he was best equipped. Upon him devolved the task of supplying the mills with logs. In 1858 the firm bought the first steamboat used by them on the Chippewa River and Captain Tainter commanded the craft about two years. As the business of the company expanded and their logging operations extended farther up the river the task of furnishing the mills with logs became one of great magnitude. In the death of Captain Tainter, Dunn County lost one of its early pioneers and also one of its foremost citizens. His part in transforming a wilderness into busy cities and fruitful farms he performed faithfully and well, and his best recompense may be found in the thousands of prosperous homes and in the hearts of a grateful people. Captain Tainter died in Rice Lake, Oct. 18, 1899. of pneumonia, contracted while attending the Barron County Fair in that city. Captain Tainter was married in 1861 to Mrs. Bertha (Lucas) Lesure, and this union was blessed with four children, Louis S., Ruth, Mabel and Fannie. Of these the three first mentioned are deceased, while Fannie is now Mrs. B. F. Crane of Menomonie. Bertha Lucas was born at Smyrna, Chenango County, N. Y., April 4, 1828, the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Simons) Lucas. In 1844 she came with her parents to Wisconsin and settled at Genesee, Waukesha County, where she was married in 1845 to William Coolidge Lesure, who died a few years later. In 1855, together with her parents and her brother, Carroll Lucas, she came to Dunn County and settled on a farm at Mud Creek, the journey from Genessee being made with ox teams, as it was before the day of railroads. She taught school on Sherburne Prairie near Rusk for a time, then came to Menomonie, where she did sewing to support herself and children until some time in 1861. In that year she married Andrew Tainter at Read's Landing. Mrs. Tainter's early life was spent at Smyrna and she was educated at an academy. She was a descendant of a Revolutionary soldier. Her grandfather, Joseph Simons, served with Washington at Valley Forge. He received a grant of land near Smyrna, which is still in the Simons family. Mrs. Tainter will be remembered by those who knew her long and well for her great helpfulness to others. She took a kindly interest in all of those about her and was extremely democratic by nature. She has been known, after her removal from the city, to take pains to look up, upon her return for visits. former employees, whom she had not seen for years. Her act of greatest philanthropy was the gift, jointly with her husband, of the Mabel Tainter Memorial in 1890, for which they both will always be held in grateful remembrance by the people of Menomonie. She was an indefatigable worker, even until recent years. She was also a deep student all her life and an insatiable reader. Until the last she took a lively interest in all current events. She died in St. Paul, Oct. 11, 1916.

Louis Smith Tainter, for many years an outstanding figure in Menomonie life, and well known from coast to coast, was born in Menomonie, Feb. 2, 1862, the son of Captain Andrew and Bertha (Lucas) Tainter. His boyhood was passed in Menomonie, where he attended the public schools, afterward attending the State Normal school at River Falls. Shortly after his return from there he went to East-man Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he was graduated. Upon his return to Menomonie he studied law in the office of Hunt & Freeman, to better equip himself for business. He soon displayed a great liking and exceptional aptitude for land business and logging operations and was appointed assistant to his father, who had charge of those departments for Knapp, Stout & Co. In the early eighties he was given entire charge of logging operations of The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company on Hay River and tributaries, and continued in that position until 1890, when all the pine timber on that stream owned by the company had been logged. He was then put in charge of the logging operations of the company on the head waters of the Red Cedar, and of their land 'epartment at Menomonie, which positions he fulfilled until the close of operations of 1902. After the death of Thomas B. Wilson in 1898 Mr. Tainter was elected to succeed him as secretary of the company and he held that office until the death of his father in 1899, whom he succeeded as vice-president. After the close of Knapp, Stout & Co. Company's active business, he moved to Chicago and New York, where he resided for several years. He then became associated with the Magnesite Dock & Land Company of Oakland, Calif., and held positions of responsibility and trust with that company until 1906, when its plant and business were entirely destroyed by the earthquake that year. He continued to reside in California until about 1908, when he went to Boston, Mass., to accept a position with the Publishers' Paper Company and Conwav Lumber Company doing an active logging and lumbering business. He soon showed marked ability and was shortly put in entire charge of their land and logging departments. At the time of his death he had risen to the position of president and general manager for this company in New Hampshire and Massachusetts. He was married to Effe M. Crouch of California in 1888. During the war Mr. Tainter rendered valuable service to the country in selecting equipment and men for logging operations in Scotland. He was made a member of a committee of prominent New England men to get equipment together which was sent abroad, consisting of portable mills, logging outfits, etc. He also assisted in selecting the men to run them. These proved so efficient that when put to work on the Andrew Carnegie estate in Scotland, the American outfit turned out lumber at about double the speed of the British crews working side by side with them. In the latter part of November of 1919 he was obliged to submit to an operation, from the effects of which he died on Sunday, Jan. 25, 1920. His sister, Mrs. B. F. Crane, and her husband, were in Boston at the time of his death. His will contained the following "I direct that my body be clemated and it is my desire, if the consent of clause: the Department officials can be obtained that the ashes be enclosed in an indestructable container of copper, or other appropriate material, and securely deposited in a suitable excavation hollowed out of the solid rock upon the ledge on Whiteface Mountain, which is situated, according to my present recollection, upon Lot No. 49, in Waterville, New Hampshire, said lot, together with other lands formerly owned by the Publishers' Paper Co., having been acquired by the United States of America through its forest service as a part of the White Mountain forest In accordance with his wish as so expressed, Mr. Tainter's body was reserve." cremated at Boston, Mass., and the ashes taken to New Hampshire for burial. Mr. Tainter was a man of great executive ability, a good judge of human nature, endowed with remarkable energy, and possessing genial qualities that won and held friends.

Charles E. Freeman, of Menomonie, attorney and local historical writer, was born April 22, 1847, in a two-story brick combination house and store on the west side of Greenwich Avenue, just below Fourteenth Street, city of New York. His parents were Joel M. and Susan Jane (Moore) Freeman. The father was born in Vermont in 1818 and being one of a family of 13 children, he was obliged to begin work at a very early age and turn over his pay to his father's creditors until he was 18 years old. He then bought his time and henceforth was his own master. It was in Hartford. Conn., on July 4, 1845, that he was married to Susan Jane Moore, who was born in that city in 1829. With her co-operation he started in the city of New York a little business, buying raw silk, spinning, skeining and spooling it and selling it to the retail merchants. This enterprise proved successful, the business growing to a considerable size and being carried on by them until 1852, when Joel M. Freeman sold it to his brother-in-law, Hiram Tuttle, the husband of Mrs. Freeman's sister. He and his wife then moved to Orange County, Vermont, where he became the proprietor of the old Freeman homestead on which he had been After living there until 1854, he sold the place and came west to Sauk reared County, Wisconsin, where for three years he operated rented farms. In the meanwhile he bought 200 acres of land, which he farmed until 1858. Then selling it, he moved to the village of Newport, where, and at the town of Delton, he followed various lines of work until 1864. On January 1, that year he enlisted in Company E, 12th Regt. Wis. Vol. Inf., and went out to fight for the Union. It was the last phase of his earthly career, for he never returned home but died in a hospital near Atlanta, Ga., in July, 1864, at the age of about 46 years. His wife continued her residence in Delton rearing and educating her children. They had six in all, four of whom were living at the time of the father's death. The six were: Charles E., of Menomonie; Henry Rollin, who died in infancy; Rollin Henry, now of Miami, Fla.; Alice M., who is Mrs. Guy Pierce of Kilbourn City, Wis.; Frank, deceased, and Altha, who died young. The mother, Mrs. Susan Jane Freeman, lived to the good old age of past 80 years, when she died at Kilbourn City, Wis. Charles E. Freeman acquired his early education in the district schools and at Delton Academy, Sauk County, Wis. After that until 1867 he worked on farms during the summers and was employed as a clerk in the stores during the winters. He then went to Phildelphia, where for a year he worked in a retail shoe store. At the end of that time he entered Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and after completing the elementary courses took up penmanship. In the fall of 1868 he went to St. Louis, where he obtained a position in a wholesale store, but after working a few months was attacked by bilious fever. When he recovered he once more changed his location, going to Burlington, Vt., where he remained for over a year, being employed by a U.S. engineer having charge of government works at that place. Having considerable spare time on his hands and wishing to put it to profitable use, he borrowed a set of law books, which he studied thoroughly as he found opportunity. On leaving Burlington he returned home to Delton and spent a short time with his mother. He then went to Madison, Wis., and entered the law school that is now a part of the university. He was a member of the class that was graduated in 1871. He was at once admitted to the bar and until September, 1872, was in the law office of C. C. Remington at Baraboo, Wis. It was in 1872 that he came to the city of Menomonie and engaged in the practice of law with Hon. Samuel W. Hunt under the firm name of Hunt & Freeman, an association which lasted until Mr. Hunt's death in October, 1897, or for a period of 25 years and one month. After that event Mr. Freeman practiced alone until 1905, when he took his son Charles R. as partner, with whom he was associated under the style of Freeman & Freeman until 1918, when Charles R. Freeman was appointed county judge to succeed J. W. McCauley. Since then the subject of this sketch has practiced alone. He has never aspired to public office, though he served two terms as district attorney and three terms (not successive) as city attorney. When he began practice in Menomonie his partner, Mr. Hunt, was an attorney for The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. As such partner he became an attorney for said company and has continued to be such attorney to this time, and has been secretary of the company since they closed down their mill here. He has also been attorney for different resident members of the company and still remains so, and has been legal advisor for many estates. His law business has always received his close attention and he has avoided all activities or entanglements that would seriously interfere with it. He is, however, a member of the Commercial Club and has been chairman of the library committee of the Memorial Library since the Mabel Tainter Memorial was erected in 1890. One of the original members of the Unitarian Society organized in 1888, he still retains his membership, though for the last year and a half the society has been inactive. For many years Mr. Freeman has taken a keen interest in the history of Dunn County and has spent both time and money in research work, embodying the results of this work in the form of papers read before the Old Settlers' Society, of which he is a member, and in newspaper articles. As a historian he possesses a keen critical faculty,-perhaps due to his legal trainingbeing quick to detect errors in previous statements, and being careful and thorough in his own methods of work. His position as attorney for The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company gave him a close insight into the affairs of that great lumber concern which was for more than half a century the mainspring of Dunn County life and activity, and the larger part of the article on that company published in Chapter X of this volume came originally from his pen. In it he has corrected a number of errors which had obtained currency through previous publications. Another example of his careful historical work is the article on "High School Sites" in Chapter XXI, and, in addition, many other articles on various subjects which are contained in this volume owe their accuracy and reliability to his careful revision. Mr. Freeman's offices are over the Bank of Menomonie at the corner of Main and Third streets. which he has occupied for 44 years. He has a comfortable residence at 1103 Eighth Street. He was married June 1, 1871, at Kilbourn City, Wis., to Mary E. Barlow, who was born at Delevan, Wis., July 21, 1846. She was the daughter of Stephen S. Barlow and Ann M. Barlow. The Barlows were pioneer settlers of Wisconsin, they having come here before Wisconsin became a state. Mr. Barlow was well known throughout the state. He was its attorney general from 1869 to January, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Freeman became the parents of two children, Hessie B. and Charles Rollin. Hessie B., born Nov. 13, 1878, was graduated from the Menomonie High School with the class of 1897, and subsequently from a commercial college in Minneapolis. Charles Rollin, born Nov. 27, 1880, was graduated from the Menomonie High School with the class of 1899. In 1901 he entered the law department of the Wisconsin State University at Madison, from which he was graduated with the class of 1905. In the latter year, as already mentioned, he became his father's partner in the law business and so remained until he was appointed in 1918 to the position of county judge. At the spring election in the following year he was elected to that position, in which he is still serving. He was married Sept. 28, 1910, to Hortense Salter of Colby, Clark County, Wis., and he and his wife are the parents of two children, Mary, born July 16, 1911, and Charles Richard, born Nov. 23, 1915.

The Knapp Family, whose history is inseparably interwoven into the warp and woof of the story of Menomonie and Dunn County, had its origin in America with Nathaniel Knapp, who came to the Colonies in 1630 with the Winthrop and Saltonstall fleet. He died Aug. 16, 1658. By his good wife, Eleanor, he had seven children, of whom Jonathan Knapp, born Dec. 27, 1631 was the oldest. From this Jonathan there is a direct descent in the male line to Jabez Knapp. Jabez Knapp To this couple was born at Horsehead, New York, on married Hannah Holly. May 30, 1791, a son, John H. Knapp, Sr. He was a harness maker in early life, and at one time managed a harness factory at New Orleans. He also developed a coal and gold mine in his native state, and located different industries near his home. He held the rank of general in the York State Militia, and at the opening of the Black Hawk hostilities, came and participated in that war. In 1833, he came to where Fort Madison, Iowa, now is, and purchased and laid out the townsite in 1835. His house was built on the site of the old fort, he using the chimney of the officers' quarters for the chimney of his own house. His was the third family to locate in Lee County, Iowa. The famous chief, Black Hawk, was his near neighbor, being camped within 50 feet of his house. General Knapp was a noted figure in his day, a true type of the pioneers who built up the upper Mississippi Valley. He died January 4, 1837. General Knapp was married Jan. 21, 1813, to Harriet Seely, who was born in Orange County. New York, in 1792, coming from a prominent Colonial family. She died in Menomonie, Feb. 28, 1884. To General Knapp and his wife were born five children: Ameda, who married John Douglass; William D.; Elizabeth, wife of Henry Eno; Jonas S.; and John Holly, Jr.

John Holly Knapp, Jr., one of the founders of Menomonie, and for many years a leading factor in the Knapp, Stout & Co., was born in Elmira, New York, March 29, 1825, the son of General John H. and Harriet (Seely) Knapp. In early youth he became acquainted with the famous Indian chief, Black Hawk, and was a playmate of his son, Nashauskuk. He familiarized himself with the Sauk language, and in early boyhood frequently saw that matchless orator and warrior chief. Keokuk, famous in Indian annals. When 20 years of age he went East, and attended a collegiate institution at New Haven, Conn. Later he took a commercial course in a business college. By deep reading and private study, he subsequently became a thorough scholar and student, and was a man of high and varied culture. In June, 1846, he came to Menomonie. His connection with Knapp, Stout & Co., and with The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, of which he became president when it was incorporated, is related elsewhere in this work. In 1869, he visited Europe, accompanied by his son, Henry Eno. and toured England, France, Germany and During this trip he consulted some of the most eminent physicians and Italy. surgeons in Europe, as he had previously consulted their brethren in America. For many years he was afflicted with an obscure ailment which baffled the greatest skill, and ultimately caused his death. Despite this handicap of ill health, his success in life was great, and he left a noble heritage of honor and integrity, as well as a considerable fortune. He was a devout Christian, and a member of the Congregational church, being liberal in his support of religious, educational and charitable institutions. He died at Menomonie, Oct. 14, 1888. John Holly Knapp, Jr., was married Nov. 26, 1849, to Caroline M. Field, daughter of Theodore and Elmira (Allen) Field, a prominent family of Ware, Mass. She was educated at a female seminary at Mount Holyoke, Mass. and met Mr. Knapp while on a visit in the west. She died Jan. 31, 1854, leaving one son, Henry Eno Knapp. Oct. 31, 1855, Mr. Knapp married his second wife, Valeria Adams, of Reading, Penn. This union was blessed with six children: Effie V., William A., John H., Edgar J., Herbert V. R. and Rolla S.

Frank Pierce, president of the First National Bank of Menomonie, and a man of varied business and social activities, has been a resident for many years in that part of Wisconsin contained in the counties of Dunn and Pepin. As it is by no means unlikely that those elements of character which have contributed to his success and made him a power in the community were derived from his parents, a few words in regard to them will not be out of place. The father, Riley Pierce, was a native of Catteraugus County, New York, who at the age of 18 years made western land investments, buying 400 acres in Bremer County, Iowa, though he did not then settle on it. He came west, however, to Elgin, Ill., from which place he started in company with a young man named Miller on a journey to Pike's Peak, Colo., this adventure being undertaken about the year 1858 owing to the reports of gold discoveries in that region. No railroad then crossed the western plains, where the Indians were lords of the soil and usually hostile to white encroachments or travel across their territory. In the feverish quest for gold, however, this and other dangers were forgotten or disregarded and thousands of men set out for what was thought to be a new El Dorado, many of whom never came back, some not even reaching their goal, being slain by the Indians or by some white desperado with whom they had come into unlucky collision. Young Pierce and his companion went to Council Bluffs, Ia., with ox teams and continued their journey from there with wagon trains. Before they reached Pike's Peak, however, they met others coming back who had met with disappointment, whose stories so discouraged young Miller that he decided to go no further but to turn back. But Riley Pierce was determined to go on, if not to Pike's Peak, at least to some part of the far west territory, where, if he met with adventure and danger, he might at least have a

Accordingly he bought Miller's team and continued to follow chance at fortune. the setting sun, passing through Salt Lake City, where Brigham Young presided as high priest over the polygamous Mormon colony, through Echo Canyon and other notable places on the western pilgrimage until, after some months travel he arrived at Stockton, Calif. In that vicinity, in the San Juan Valley, he had a cousin who was engaged in farming and who gave him employment. After working for him two years he took a job driving a 13-mule team, hauling supplies to the mountain mines. The mules were handled and driven by a contrivance known as a "jerk line," in the use of which young Pierce became expert, and for two years he was thus occupied. At the end of that time he returned home, making the journey in sailing vessels and by rail crossing the isthmus of Panama. Not long after his return he was married in Illinois on Sept. 21, 1861, to Vernelia Panton, who was born in Michigan. On the very day of their marriage the bridal pair left for the West to make a home on Mr. Pierce's Iowa land. On arriving there he built a shack for a temporary dwelling and then began the development of a farm homestead. His land included what is now part of the site of the village of Plainfield, but by him it was used for agricultural purposes and stock raising, and very successfully, as be became not only one of the leading farmers in his county but was well known throughout the state. From 1881 to 1888 he shipped cattle and horses to North Dakota and the Red River Valley. In 1883 he became a squatter on a piece of land near Grand Forks, N. D. On an adjacent tract he found another squatter, by name William H. Davidson, and together they built a shanty right on the dividing line between the two tracts so that the line passed through the center of the shanty. There they lived together until they had proved up their land, after which Mr. Pierce returned to his home farm in Iowa, his family having operated it during his absence. He added to his original claim until he owned a whole section, which is now the property of his son Frank. Riley Pierce developed it into a fine farm and ranch, from 1881 to 1884 shipping cattle and horses to North Dakota and the Red River Valley, and being recognized as one of the wealthiest farmers in his part of the state. After a long, active and successful career, he passed away on Sept. 2, 1916. His wife is still living on the home farm. They were the parents of three children: William, who also became a prominent and well to do farmer; Frank, of Menomonie. Wis.; and Vernon, who now conducts the home farm in Iowa, and who is president of the Farmers State Bank of Plainfield, that state. Frank Pierce was born at Plainfield, Iowa, March 7, 1869. As a youth he attended the common and high schools and subsequently took a commercial course in a business college in Burlington, Iowa, entering it in November, 1887, and being graduated with the class of 1888. On Jan. 9, 1889, he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and entered the employ of Carson & Rand, at Eau Galle, as bookkeeper. Three and a half years later he was made manager and as such remained at Eau Galle for six years more. Then in 1898, having previously purchased from Carson & Rand a wholesale hardwood lumber business at Durand, Wis., he went there to take charge of it. at once becoming one of the prominent business men of that city. He had been there only three months when he was tendered the position of cashier of the Bank of Durand, and, having accepted it, served in that capacity until 1911. During all that time the hardwood lumber business was carried on under the firm of Carter & Pierce, Mr. Frank Carter of Mencmonie being his partner. In July, 1911, Mr. Pierce was elected president of the First National Bank of Menomonie, which is one of the largest banking houses in northern Wisconsin, and he is still serving in that capacity. He has also continued active in the lumber business and is vice president of the Badger State Lumber Company. In February, 1912, in association with others, he bought a large tract of timber land in Arkansas and established the Valley Lumber Company, he becoming the president, which he still remains. The company had extensive mill facilities and for several years manufactured over 25,000,000 feet of lumber per year. Though they have now cut all their timber, they still own many acres of cut-over land. Mr. Pierce is a member of the Meridean Lumber & Fuel Company and is half owner of the H. M. Orlady Lumber Company of Durand, also vice president of the McCoy-

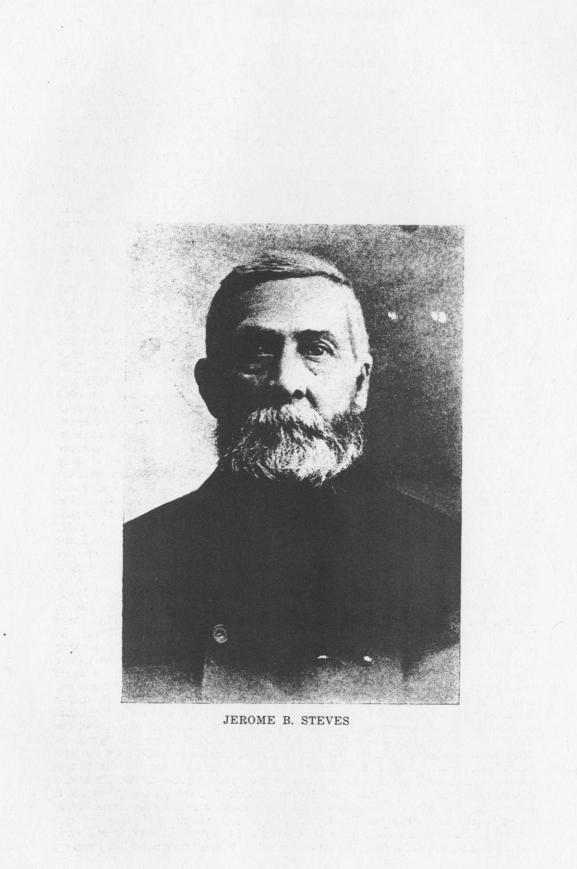

Wilson Limited, engaged in logging in Vancouver, B. C., and for several years he has been vice president of the Carter Ice and Fuel Co. of Menomonie. While at Durand he took a prominent part in establishing the Durand Light & Power Company, of which he was treasurer and manager; and he organized the Home Telephone Company, of which also he was president and manager. He is president of the Wilson's Creek Realty Company, which owns the land on which the Menomonie Country Club is situated, and is a stockholder in various enterprises in Wisconsin and other states, his financial interests being wide and varied. They cover both city and agricultural property, one of the farms in which he is interested being the widely known "Bubbling Spring Farm" in Dunn County, where Shorthorn cattle are bred. Among his various activities Mr. Pierce has devoted some time to public affairs as a matter of good citizenship and public spirit. He was mayor of Durand for two years, served six years as a member of the board of education of Menomonie, and for the past six years has been supervisor from the second Ward, by virtue of which office he is also a member of the county board. He has various society affiliations, being a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of the fraternal order of Modern Woodmen of America, also to the Menomonie Commercial Club, of which he was president four years, and of the Rotary Club, of which he is now treas-urer. Mr. Pierce was married at Eau Galle, Wis., Oct. 7, 1891, to Phoebe Layne, who was born in Pepin, Wis., June 19, 1873. He and his wife are the parents of three children, Vernelia, Marion Frances and Robert L., of whom the following is a further record. Vernelia, born July 10, 1892, at the early age of 15 years was graduated from the Durand High School and then entered Downer College at Milwaukee, from which she was graduated before reaching her twentieth birthday. Then for two years she taught mathematics and grammar in the Durand High School. She was married Aug. 10, 1913, to George B. Orlady and now resides at Mondovi, Wis., where Mr. Orlady is proprietor of the Community Advertising Company. She had one child, Jean Ann. Marion Frances, born Dec. 13, 1898, after being graduated from the Menomonie High School in 1917, entered National Park Seminary at Washington, D. C., where she pursued her studies until June. 1918, continuing them during the following year at Downer College, Milwaukee, and the year after that at the University of Wisconsin. She then became a student in Miss Church's Art School, Chicago, and subsequently entered the Clement-Brown Art School in New York City, from which she was graduated in 1921. In 1923 she was united in marriage with Myron G. Duncan. Mr. Duncan, being endowed with an exceptionally fine tenor voice, is now studying voice culture in Milan, Italy, under the foremost teachers, while Mrs. Duncan has taken up the Robert L. Pierce, born May 2, 1901, was graduated from the Menomonie piano. High School, attended the University of Wisconsin for one year, then became a student in Northwestern College at Evanston, Ill., where he completed the commercial courses. He then entered the First National Bank at Menomonie as assistant cashier and is now vice president of the institution. Like his father, he is thirtysecond degree Mason, a Knight of Pythias, and a Rotarian; also a member of the County Club and the Commercial Club. The Pierce family are affiliated religiously with the Congregational Church.

R. Gillette Ingraham, senior member of the firm of Ingraham Bros. & Torrey of Menomonie, jewelers, watch repairers and optometrists, has been a resident of this city for the most part since 1879 and an active man of business here since 1885. He was born in Lake City, Minn., March 9, 1862, son of Marcus M. and Lucinda L. (Fuller) Ingraham. The parents were natives of South Adams, Mass., where they were married. From there in the early 50's they came west to southern Wisconsin, where they remained a few years, settling in Lake City, Minn., in 1858. Marcus M. Ingraham was a builder and contractor, and followed that occupation until 1862, in which year he enlisted as a soldier to fight for the Union. After being discharged from the army at the close of the war, with the rank of second lieutenant, he rejoined his family at Lake City, in which community, located on the bank of Lake Pepin, a wide lateral expansion of the Mississippi River, he and his wife passed the rest of their lives. They were the parents of seven children: John M.,

Frank L., Abbie H., Julia A., R. Gillette, Charles H. and Bessie P., whose record in brief is as follows: John M., who came to Menomonie in 1879, engaged in the hotel business, successively operating several different hotels. In the year 1900 he went to Pine City, Minn., where he conducted a hotel for 18 months, at the end of that time going to Sandstone, Minn., where he was in the same business until his death in February, 1918. Frank L., who followed the occupation of printer in Lake City, Minn., died in 1909. Abbie H. is now Mrs. L. M. Follett of Eau Claire, Julia A., who died in 1884, was the wife of Arthur Rockwell. Charles H. Wis is a member of the firm of Igraham Bros. & Torrey of Menomonie. Bessie P. is now Mrs. F. A. Torrey of Menomonie. R. Gillette Ingraham acquired his educa-tion in the common and high schools of Lake City, Minn. It was in September, 1879, that he first came to Menomonie, his first employment here being as clerk in the old Menomonie House, which was then under the management of his brother, Later he worked as clerk in the general store of Birch & Clark and still John M. later in the Merchant's Hotel. In the fall of 1881 Mr. Ingraham went to Appleton Wis., to learn watch making, and he remained there until the fall of 1884, going then to Lake City, Minn., when he was employed for six months by the Crane Bros. Jewelry Co. In August, 1885 he again returned to Menomonie and established the Ingraham Bros. Jewelry Co., taking his brother John M. as a partner. store was located where the present Menomonie Dye Works are situated. Their There they remained until November, 1885, when they moved to the Johnson Block, which was their place of business for 17 years. Then in 1902 R. Gillette Ingraham, with Alfred Thomas and Alfred Pillsbury, erected the Arcade building, in which the store of the firm has since been located. On May 1, 1888, the subject of this sketch purchased the interests of his brother John M., and subsequently operated the business alone until August, 1923, at which time he took in as partners his brother Charles H. and his brother-in-law F. A. Torrev, changing the firm name to Ingraham The business is one of the oldest and best established in the city Bros. & Torrev. and the store one of the most attractive. Mr. Ingraham has often been urged to accept public office but has declined, not from lack of public spirit, which he has manifested in various other ways, but because his business has demanded all his time and attention, involving duties which he could not delegate to others, while he felt that they were plenty of other men who could acceptably fill any vacant public offices. He has fraternal affiliations with the Beavers and Modern Woodmen of America. On June 24, 1896, Mr. Ingraham was married in Lake City, Minn., to Susie G. Slocum, whose parents were natives of New Jersey and early settlers in Lake City, Minn., but are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Ingraham are the parents of three children: Dorothy, born Nov. 27, 1898, and Marjorie and Catharine (twins), born July 3, 1901. Dorothy is a graduate of the Gregg Shorthand College, Marjorie, a graduate of Hull House, Chicago, was engaged for a short Chicago. time in welfare work in Waukegan. All three daughters are now residing at home with their parents. The family attended the Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Ingraham and the children are members, the former being also a member of the Guild and its president.

Fred W. Steves, a prominent farmer in the town of Dunn, was born on his father's farm in Louisville, town of Dunn, county of Dunn, on June 3, 1869, son of Jerome B. and Melinda (Smith) Steves. As a boy he attended school in Louisville and remained at home with his parents until 1898, when he bought the Henry M. Steves place, a farm of 180 acres situated in Sections 6 and 7 town of Dunn, and so called from its previous owner, who was a great uncle of Fred W. He has since bought an additional tract of 104 acres, which gives him altogether a farm of 284 acres. He has developed a part of the land now having 120 acres under the plow, and the farm is in fine condition. The buildings include an excellent residence and a complete set of barns and out-buildings. It is conducted under the name of the "Green Plains Stock Farm" of F. W. Steves & Sons. Pure bred Holstein-Friesian cattle are raised, a fine herd being maintained, and also pure bred Duroc-Jersey hogs. Mr. Steves and his sons are among the leading farmers of their town. They believe in the policy of keeping pure bred stock and in modern methods of farming, and they make a specialty of dairying. Mr. Steves for nine years served as school clerk and is now treasurer of District No. 4. He was married March 30, 1898, to Minnie A. Stavrum, who was born in the town of Spring Brook, Sept. 24, 1871, daughter of John and Ariminta (Crossman) Stavrum. Of this union three children have been born; Vincent C., Feb. 9, 1899; Laura L., July 20, 1902, and Wilbert J., March 24, 1905. Vincent C., who was graduated from the Dunn County Agricultural School, is now in Los Angeles, Calif. Laura L., a graduate of the Dunn County Training School, is a proficient teacher. Wilbert J., a graduate of the Dunn County Agricultural School, is associated with his father on the farm. The Steves family are active members of the Louisville M. E. Church. Mr. Steves belongs fraternally to the Modern Woodmen and the Beavers while Mrs. Steves is a member of the Royal Neighbors and Beaver Queens.

Bert J. Steves, M. D., one of the best known physicians in Dunn County, who has also a good record as a citizen, war worker and "booster" for the interests of Menomonie and Dunn County, was born in Louisville, this county, Jan. 23, 1874, son of Jerome B. and Malinda (Smith) Steves. His elementary education was obtained in the grade school in his native place, and in 1895 he was graduated from the high school in Menomonie. He then entered the Chicago Homeopathic College and was graduated with the class of 1903, after which he took one year of interne work. In 1904 he came to Menomonie, where he has since practiced his profession with the exception of one year, as in 1907 he entered the medical department of of Northwestern University, from which he received the degree of M. D. in 1908. His first offices in Menomonie were situated in the First National Bank building, and there he remained until 1910, when he moved to the Noer building. In 1919 he moved to his present offices in the Heller building, where he practiced alone until October, 1922, when he associated himself in partnership with Dr. J. A. Halgren. He has built up a fine professional reputation and is equally popular socially. During the participation of this country in the World War he served as a member of the Dunn County draft board. He is a member of the Dunn and Pepin County Medical Association, the American Medical Association and the Tri-State Medical Association; also of the Menomonie Commercial Club, the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic order and the Commandery and consistory at Eau Claire. Dr. Steves was married Aug. 2, 1905 at Waubeek, Wis., to Miss Minnie M. Webb, and he and his wife are the parents of a son, Richard J., who was born Aug. 17, 1911. Dr. and Mrs. Steves are members of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Steves is prominent socially, being a past president of the Woman's Club, a member and president of the Ladies' Aid Society, a member of the Eastern Star Chapter and of the Wisconsin State Women's Club.

Jerome B. Steves, who died June 6, 1918, was a resident of the town of Dunn for over 60 years. He was the eldest son of Phillip and Janet (Hartwell) Steves and was born Oct. 12, 1837 in Clarkson, Monroe County, N. Y. In 1854 he came west to McHenry County, Illinois, to work for his uncle William Vasey. In company with James Vasey, and Thomas and Fletcher Massee he made the long and toilsome journey to Dunn County with an ox team in 1858. Here in the "forest primeval" they built their homes and the little locality was given the name of Louisville in honor of Theodore Louis one of the first pioneers in that section. While Mr. Steves was interested in farming his own time was mainly devoted to the building trade. He was the architect and builder of the Methodist Episcopal church and schoolhouse at Louisville and had charge of the inside finishing of the Dunn County courthouse. He also built the Methodist Episcopal church at Augusta (Eau Claire County), Wis., and several residences in Menomonie and Louisville bear evidence of his mechanical skill. At an early age Mr. Steves was converted and for 66 years was an earnest and loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His devotion seemed to increase with the passing years and it found expression in the time and energy he gave to the care of the Pleasant Valley cemetery adjacent to the church. By his personal supervision for 15 years he transformed it into a final resting-place of rare artistic beauty. This labor of love is the crowning glory of his long and useful life. Mr. Steves was married in January, 1860, at Louisville, Dunn County, to Miss Matilda Smith, the daughter of Daniel and Mary Smith. She was born May 15, 1842, at Driftwood, Penn., and came in 1856 with her parents to Louisville, where she spent the remainder of her life. She passed away Dec. 21, 1901. She was an earnest christian, quietly living her religion before the world and in her home. She was a devoted wife and mother and the poor and neglected ever found in her a friend. This family was blessed with five children, of whom Fred W., of Louisville and Dr. B. J. Steves of Menomonie are now living.

George R. Brewer, a well known and respected resident of Menomonie, formerly active in business, but for some ten years or more practically retired, was born in Buckingham, province of Quebec, Canada, Dec. 4, 1852, son of John and Elizabeth (Atchinson) Brewer. The father, of English extraction, died in the state of Washington; the mother, whose ancestors were Scotch-English, died at Iron Prior, Ontario, Canada. George R. Brewer acquired his education in the public schools of Canada. At the age of 15 he came with an uncle to the states, stopping for three weeks in Eau Claire and then, coming on to Menomonie, entered the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. Company as clerk in their general store, remaining with them subsequently for 15 years, during a portion of which time he had charge of their clothing department. - In 1882 he engaged in the hardware business on Main Street, which he conducted for ten years. Then in 1892 he entered the employ of the Osborne Harvester Co. as traveling collector, his duties taking him over the entire From 1902 to 1913 he was with the Northwest Thrasher Co., occupying a state. similar position, his territory, however, covering quite a number of states. In 1913 Mr. Brewer retired from the road, and his time since then has been mainly occupied in looking after his private interests. He is a stockholder in the bank of Menomonie and is also connected with the Security Loan and Trust Co. of this city. He and his wife own quite an amount of city property, including five store buildings. Their residence at 406 Wilson Avenue is directly opposite that which was his first home in this city and which he bought in 1879. Mr. Brewer formerly took an active part in the affairs of local government, serving four years as alderman from the third ward and also at one time as city assessor. His acquaintance is very wide and many of his acquaintances are his warm friends. Of the Elks Lodge he is a valued member. Mr. Brewer was married Oct. 23, 1879, to Alice M. French, who was born in Menomonie, March 29, 1857, daughter of Samuel B. and Virginia (Bullard) French. He and his wife are the parents of a son, Fred F., who was born June 27, 1893, and is now residing in Los Angeles, Calif. He was educated in the public schools of Menomonie, being graduated from the high school. He then entered the state university, where he took a three years' course. He was in the United States' service in the World War, being assigned to the Heavy Automobile Ordance Repair Department, going through the necessary course of training in the "Lansing Automobile College." He was in France about a year and while overseas was transferred to the London College, where he spent three months. He returned home in August, 1919, after being discharged in New York. Mr. Brewer and his family are members of the Congregational Church.

Samuel B. French, one of the early business men of Menomonie who made a good name for himself as merchant, banker and progressive citizen, was born in Chautauqua County, New York, in 1831 and was there educated and grew to manhood. It was in the fall of 1853 that he came west to Menomonie, here becoming bookkeeper for the lumber firm then known as Knapp, Stout & Co., in whose employment he continued until 1867. He then opened a general store and while conducting it also did a banking and real estate business. In 1880 he was burned out and at that time gave up his mercantile business and established him exclusively, or in the main part, as a banker, erecting a fine and substantial brick building for his purpose. Mr. French was a man of sound judgment and had sterling personal qualities which made him an especially valuable citizen. He was an active factor in the upbuilding of the city and improvement of local conditions and took a particular interest in providing proper educational facilities for the young, for which the present generation owes him a debt of gratitude. He was married in August, 1855, to Mary Virginia Bullard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Bullard, who were among the early settlers in Menomonie. Mr. and Mrs. French had three children, Alice, Fred and Samuel B., Jr.

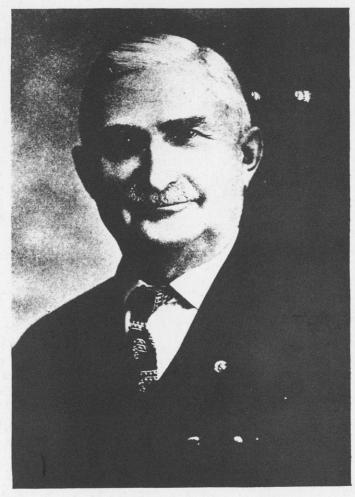

Ole C. Kausrud, vice president of the First National Bank of Menomonie, was born in Norway, May 14, 1877, son of Christian and Gunhild Kausrud. The father was born in Ringereke, Norway, March 3, 1848, and was there reared and educated. He came to America in 1884 at the age of 36 years, locating at once in Menomonie, where for many years he was in the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Afterwards he worked some time for the Holland Piano Company Co. Company. and resided in North Menomonie. He died Jan. 19, 1923, and his wife, who survived him, has since lived with her daughter, Mrs. Matt Hagen of Eau Claire. Mr. and Mrs. Christian Kausrud had seven children: Ole C., of Menomonie; Erick of Los Angeles, Calif.; Martin, of Ashland, Wis.; Carl, of Toronto, Canada: Elsie, wife of Matt Hagen of Eau Claire; Anna L., who is Mrs. Gus Swanson of Bellevue, Iowa, and Mary, who died in Norway. Ole C. Kausrad was educated in the public schools of Menomonie and entered business life in 1891 as clerk in the general store of E. Fonaas at North Menomonie. With that capable merchant he remained six years, during which time he picked up much useful knowledge. Then in December, 1897, he became bookkeeper in the general store and private bank of Schutte & Quilling. In the previous year, 1896, he had become a member of the Wisconsin National Guard, Co. H. Third Regiment, and he served with it after the war with Spain broke out, taking part in the battle at Coamo, Porto Rico. He was honorably discharged in January, 1899. In 1903, when the Schutte & Quilling Bank was incorporated, Mr. Kausrud was elected assistant cashier, in 1909 he was elected one of the directors, and for a few months before the merger with the First National Bank he was cashier. He was elected vice president and director of the First National Bank in February, 1924. A strong factor in the business life of the community, he takes a keen interest in its advancement, is an active member of the Commercial Club, and belongs to the local Masonic lodge. For 25 years he was a member of the Ludington Guards Band and also for 13 years acted as its director. Mr. Kausrud was married in Menomonie, Aug. 10, 1905, to Genevieve Jackson, daughter of S. W. and Mildred D. (Forbes) Jackson, who settled in Dunn County in 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Kausrud have one child, Jackson L., who was born Sept. 8, 1910.

Peter Jungck, one of Menomonie's early business men, who passed away on Feb. 9, 1925, was born in Munchweiler, Bavaria, Germany, on Nov. 13, 1846, son of Charles and Magdalena (Ehrhardt) Jungck. He was one of a family of seven children whose names were respectively: Charles, Jr., Fred, Jacob, William, Barbara, Elizabeth and Peter. The eldest son and child, Charles, Jr., came to Menomonie, Wis., in 1856 and for a number of years conducted a shoemaking business here. He is now deceased, as also are all the other children. Jacob came to Menomonie in 1858 and like practically all the other early settlers here, found employment in connection with the lumber business, working as a raft pilot and also as bookkeeper for Knapp, Stout & Co., remaining in the employ of that concern for 18 years. He then engaged in the mercantile business with J. J. Carter, in which he was successful, for many years being one of Menomonie's prominent citi-The son William died in Germany. Peter Jungck acquired what education zens. he had in Germany, where also he learned the shoemaker's trade, being a good shoemaker by the time he was 14 years old. Subsequently he came to the United States, reaching Menomonie on June 13, 1868. Here he entered the employ of his brother Charles, for whom he worked as a shoemaker for 18 years. It was at the end of that time that he established himself in the harness business in a shop located in a little frame building on Broadway, where his son George W. now operates a hardware store. There he remained for 24 years, at the end of which time he removed to No. 113-115 West Main Street. He also built for himself a neat and attractive residence just west of his harness shop. In 1870 he bought the land on which the present Masonic Temple stands, selling it to the city in 1910. In the manner of his passing Mr. Jungck would by most people be considered fortunate. He spent no weary weeks or months of pain on a sick bed waiting for approaching dissolution, but was active up to the last day of his life. Death's swift messenger, apoplexy, found him in his shop, and his son George, coming in about 10:45 a. m., found him lying on the floor. Within five minutes after the arrival of medical aid he passed away, at the age of 78 years, another pioneer of the county gone to join the great majority. He died as he had often wished, and many there are who have cause to envy him. His life here covered the period during which the city had made its greatest advance in prosperity and there were few things connected with its history with which he was not familiar. In 1914 he gave to C. E. Freeman a narration of his reminiscences, which was published in the Dunn County News and may also be found in this volume, being well worthy of preservation as the testimony of an eye witness as to many things of importance that happened, or existed in the early days he recalled. Mr. Jungck was married in Menomonie, Sept. 8, 1873, to Barbara Miller, of Fort Madison, Iowa, daughter of George and Barbara Miller. After 43 years of wedded life, she died June 16, 1916, having been the mother of three children: George W., now in the hardware business in Menomonie; Albert P., who is connected with the Minneapolis Auto Tire & Sales Co.; and Magdalina, now Mrs. A. W. Brown of City Falls, Iowa. Francis E. Butler, M. D., founder and organizer of the Menomonie clinic, and widely known for his professional ability, was born Aug. 12, 1880, at Randon Lake, Sheboygan County, Wis., son of Richard D. and Mary (Walsh) Butler. The par-ents were of Irish ancestry though born and reared in Wisconsin. For many vears the father was one of the leading lumbermen of the state, a member of the Butler, Mueller Lumber Co. of Marinette County. He died Oct. 25, 1895, his wife Mary having passed away in 1890. Francis E. Butler, after acquiring an elementary education in the common schools, pursued further preparatory studies in St. John's Academy at Delafield, Wis., being graduated with the class of 1895. In 1903 he was graduated from Marquette University at Milwaukee with the degree of M. D., and in the same year came to Menomonie, where he has since remained. From 1915 to 1918 he was in partnership with Dr. G. C. Nedry, his professional association terminating when he entered the United States' service in the World War. Dr. L. H. Hartman succeeded Dr. Nedry. On Aug. 1, 1919, the Menomonie Clinic was organized by Doctors Francis E. Butler, I. V. Grannis and L. H. Hartman. After it had been in operation a year Dr. Hartman dropped out and Dr. George Schlinker came in, but in 1923 the latter severed his connection with the clinic and was replaced by Dr. O. J. Blosmo, so that the present staff consists of Doctors Butler, Grannis and Blosmo. The offices of the Clinic occupy the entire second floor of the Noer building and include a large reception room, consultation room, library, and private rooms for the surgeons. The medical and surgical equipment is very complete and up-to-date, and an excellent record has been made by the institution. Dr. Butler is a member of the American Medical Association, the Eau Claire and Associated Counties Society, the Wisconsin Surgical Society and the Tri-State Medical Society. He also belongs to the Catholic Church and the Knights of Columbus. He was married in Oshkosh, Wis., in June, 1908, to Lydia Ostertag of that city, and he and his wife are the parents of two children, Frances E. and John R.

Garlen L. Bowman, for 18 years principal of the Dunn County Normal School, whose highly valued services were terminated by his death on April 18, 1922, was born in the state of Ohio, March 24, 1855. He came to Wisconsin with his parents in 1867. He was educated in country schools, the River Falls Collegiate Institute, and the Afton (Minn.) Academy, and also by private tutors. In 1895, after examination, he was granted a teacher's unlimited state certificate. For six years he taught in the rural schools of Pierce County, for two years he was county superintendent in the same county, for 13 years principal in succession of the high schools at Prescott, Fairchild, Ellsworth and Superior, and for six years professor of mathematics in the Superior State Normal School. Then Mr. Bowman became attracted by the vastness of the field of training teachers for rural schools and he took up that as his life work. His first training school position was at New London, where he was at the head of the Waupaca County Normal School, from which he came to the training school in Menomonie in the fall of 1904. Here, after 18 years of highly efficient work, death came to him suddenly on the date above mentioned. He had but little warning, but was ready to go; and he went as he always wished to go, while still an active and capable worker in his chosen field. His passing came as a shock to the faculty and student body of the Normal school, who, after the announcement, sat for 15 minutes in silent tribute to his memory, and there were few dry eyes among those present when the class was dismissed for the day. Mr. Bowman had been eminently successful in his life work, being widely recognized as an authority on the training of rural school teachers. The Dunn County school under his leadership was conceded to be a model of its king. School superintendents of many states and other educational experts who visited the school-of whom there were many-invariably went away marveling at the development which they found there, and at the wonderful atmosphere of the place, due to the inspiring of its guiding genius. His methods have been emulated in hundreds of schools throughout the country. But the loss of a mere scholastic genius, however able or eminent, could not have caused such grief as was felt on the announcement of Mr. Bowman's death. His pupils and associates were his friends, and he had won not only their admiration but their love. Especially was this so with respect to the children. He once said that he could count by name 250 Menomonie children who had entered into fellowship with him. "Never," he said, "am I happier than when I can walk along with a child on each side of me, clinging with his little hand to one of my fingers;" and to such he used to expound in simple language his philosophy Teachers, pupils and friends in every walk of life gave him their intimate of life. confidences, and never did he fail to give the help or advice sought. His criticism was always kind and his help constructive. Not long before his death a stranger accosted him on the street and asked, "Are you Mr. Bowman?" Answering affirm-atively, Mr. Bowman asked the stranger how he knew. "Because of what my daughter had told me about you," he said. "I want to thank you for what you did for her, and incidentally, for all of us." This is a slight illustration of the fruitage of his life of service. Mr. Bowman was a member of the Masonic order and his religious affiliations were Unitarian. For many years he held membership in the National Educational Association, the Wisconsin State Teachers' Association. and the Northwestern Teachers' Association. In the affairs of the community Mr. Bowman was an important factor, upholding with zeal and strong influence the things he deemed for the best. He was a member of the Commercial Club, where his advice was always valued. He was especially active as a member of the Menomonie Improvement Association, and at one time served as its president. A lover of flowers, birds, and all natural scenery, he was earnest in advocating the preservation of such natural advantages, and as a member and chairman of the parks committee was an active factor in such work. Mr. Bowman was also very successful as a public speaker, and his services in that capacity were much sought after for public occasions. A philosopher and a student of life, a profound thinker, gifted with a fine command of language, and, above all, possessed of a magnetic and impressive personality, his orations always had real value, and were greatly enjoyed by the public. During the war he did yeoman service as a patriotic speaker. Mr. Bowman was married Aug. 15, 1883, at Diamond Bluff, Wis., to Alice Mero, who survived him, and he was survived also by their son, Clyde A., now director of the School of Industrial Arts in the Stout Institute, Menomonie.

John C. Ticknor, a pioneer citizen of Menomonie, who has risen to prominence in the profession of law, was born in the town of English Prairie, McHenry County, Ill., Aug. 29, 1856. His parents, Edward and Eliza E. (Morphy) Ticknor, who were both of English ancestry, were married in Fulton, Oswego County, N. Y., and subsequently came west to McHenry County, Illinois, where they remained until 1858, when they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin. Here they settled on a farm in the town of Dunn, being members of what was known for many years as the Massee settlement and later as the Louisville settlement. Starting as pioneers, they gradually developed a fine farm on which they lived in prosperity and comfort until they were separated by death, Mrs. Eliza A. Ticknor passing away Feb. 20, 1894. After this bereavement Edward Ticknor came to live with his son John C., with who he remained for the rest of his life. He died in Menomonie April 8, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ticknor were the parents of four children, Henry E., Florence A., John C. and Mary E. Henry E., who was for many years a prominent attorney of Superior, Wis., and also served as deputy clerk of the United States' court for several terms, died in July, 1923; and as Florence and Mary are now deceased, the subject of this sketch is the only member of the family living. John C. Ticknor acquired his education in the district schools of Dunn County, the Menomonie High School, the River Falls Normal, and the law department of the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1880. During the following year he practiced his profession at Hudson, Wis., in the office of John W. Bashford. In 1882 he returned to Menomonie and formed a partnership with John H. Ives, thus founding the law firm of Ives & Ticknor, which became widely known in legal circles and flourished until about 1888, when it was dissolved, Mr. Ives going to St. Paul to become a member of the firm of Irwin, Rvan & Ives. For the next three years Mr. Ticknor practiced alone; then the law firm of Manwaring and Ticknor was formed, composed of Mr. Ticknor and Edward B. Manwaring, but it had a short existence, as in 1892 Mr. Manwaring went to Superior. Since the dissolution of that firm Mr. Ticknor has practiced alone, with offices in the Heller block. From 1901 to 1906 he was attorney for the McCormick Harvester Co., and for five years subsequently served in a similar capacity for the Minneapolis Threshing Company. He was city attorney of Menomonie for five years, and also served three terms as district attorney, having been first elected as such in November, 1900, and taken office Jan. 1, 1901. His second term was in 1912-13, and his third term began Jan. 1, 1923 and ended Jan. 1, 1925. In earlier years Mr. Ticknor was quite prominent in politics, being an active and useful member of the Republican party. He was a delegate to county, congressional and state conventions; was a delegate from the 10th Congressional District to the Republican National Convention, held in Minneapolis in 1892, which nominated Harrison for re-election as President; has served as member of State and Congressional Committee for the 10th Congressional District in 1896; was member of the Executive Committee of Wisconsin State League of Republican Clubs, and was elected president of the Republican League of Menomonie in 1896, an action in promoting the candidacy of William McKinley for President. Mr. Ticknor is affiliated fraternally with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Rebecca, and Encampment, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias, Pythian Sisters and the D. O. K. K. He was married Jan. 19, 1888, in Franklinville, Catteraugus County, N. Y., to Ella Terry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Terry, her mother's family name being Adams. After six years and a half of married life, Mrs. Ella Ticknor died June 20, 1896. She left one child, Louise, now Mrs. Arthur P. Stebbins of Barron, Wis., who is the mother of two children, Joan and Mary.

John O. Blosmo, a well known and respected resident of Menomonie, in which city he has lived for half a century, was born in Norway, April 14, 1854, son of Ole and Sarah (Summervauld) Blosmo. He was reared in his native land, where he attended school, subsequently doing farm labor until he came to America in 1873, landing in Quebec, Canada. From that port he went to Ishpeming, Mich., finding work in the iron mines of that vicinity, and remaining there until July, 1874. He then came to Menomonie, where he has since made his home. His first employment here, that summer, was in a sawmill; then in the following winter he worked for Knapp, Stout & Co. in the woods. In the spring of 1875 he entered the employ of the late T. B. Wilson, Sr., as gardener and hostler and has ever since remained in the employ of the family. His long residence here, and his steady and reliable character, have made him well known to all the old residents, who appreciate him at his true worth. Mr. Blosmo was married Sept. 25, 1880, to Carrie Klingberg, who died March 10, 1892, after having been the mother of two children: Inga, born April 17, 1882, now Mrs. Arthur Hoeffner of Minneapolis; and Oscar J., a physician practicing in Menomonie. On Sept. 24, 1894, Mr. Blosmo was married - secondly to Nettie Larson, of which union one child, Julia, was born Nov. 23, 1914. Mrs. Nettie Blosmo passed away Nov. 23, 1924. The family are members of Our Saviour's Norwegian Lutheran Church.

Oscar J. Blosmo, M. D., one of the younger professional men of Menomonie, who is making a good reputation as physician and surgeon, was born in this city, Feb. 17, 1884, son of John O. and Carrie (Klingberg) Blosmo. After passing through the grade school he became a pupil in the high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903. Then entering the University of Minnesota, he took up pharmacy and in 1907 was graduated with the degree of pharmaceutical chemist. Following that he became an instructor in the pharmacy department of the University, at the same time devoting a part of his time in studying for several advanced pharmaceutical degrees. He then spent six months in post-graduate work at Columbia University, New York City, after which he took up medicine, his graduation from the medical department of the University of Minnesota taking place in 1921. He then took 18 months of hospital training-six months in the general hospital in Minneapolis and one year in that of Los Angeles, Calif., in the latter institution being a member of the house staff. He then returned to Menomonie and since Jan. 1, 1923, has been on the staff of the Menomonie Clinic. Dr. Blosmo is an earnest student of his profession, in which he is making rapid strides. He is a member of the Dunn and Pepin Counties Medical Society, The Minnesota State Pharmaceutical Association, and the American Medical Association, and is licensed to practice medicine in the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and California. He has also other society affiliations, belonging to Acacia and the Alpha Kappa Kappa Medical Fraternities of the University of Minnesota. He is also a member of Minneapolis Lodge No. 19, A. F. & A. M. Dr. Blosmo was married Nov. 24, 1910, in Minneapolis, to Elsie E. Hanke, daughter of Charles H. and Mary (Code) Hanke. Her father is a resident of Minneapolis, her mother being deceased.

Andreas E. Hofland, president and the original organizer of the Menomonie Milling Co., and ever since one of the leading men in the company, was born near Drammen, Norway, March 3, 1846, son of Erick and Ele (Andreas) Hofland. The father was for many years a mine foreman for a logging company. Both he and the mother died in Norway. Of their seven children five are living, the full list being as follows: Andreas E., of Menomonie; Anna, now Mrs. Alexander Sockness of Menomonie; Carrie, who married Peter Odness, and is now a widow operating a farm in the town of Menomonie; Christ Erickson of Seattle, Wash.; Lina Erickson, a school teacher in Norway, and Ole and Christ, who are the two deceased. Andreas E. Hofland, who attended school in Norway, subsequently learned the trade of miller, which he followed in his native land until 1871. He then emigrated to the United States, locating first in Manitowoc, Wis., where he spent 11 months, and from there coming to Menomonie. Here for the next three and a half years he was in the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. In 1875 he returned to Norway and built a flour mill at Drammen, which he operated for eight years. Then in the fall of 1883, returning to the United States, he reentered the employ of the lumber firm which was now The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and worked for them through the winter. In the following spring he changed his occupation, buying 40 acres of raw land in the town of Menomonie, south of where the Menomonie mill now stands. He began his development of this property by building a small frame house and out-buildings. Then, having bought a stump-puller, he grubbed and cleared the land, increasing the cleared and cultivated area from year to year. From time to time, also, as his means would permit, he bought additional land until his farm contained 220 acres, and continually he kept on improving it. His original buildings gave place to larger and more modern ones, adapted to his larger and still increasing business. With respect to the dairying branch, which he carried on until 1906, he had started with only two cows and for the first three months carried his milk to the city in a 12-quart pail, delivering it at the houses of his customers. His next step was to buy a horse and wagon and establish a larger route, his business growing from year to year. He conducted this branch of it for 15 years, his total farming operations covering a period of 22 years, from 1884 to 1906, in the latter year selling the farm to his son Edward. During these years of agricultural activity Mr. Hofland had not forgotten his trade of miller and in 1894, together with Ole Tilleson, he built a steam mill on his farm. Steam power, however, not proving wholly satisfactory, Mr. Hofland six months later made a contract with Frank McLean for the water right on Gilbert Creek, where the mill now stands. This contract carried with it a 99-year lease, and at once Mr. Hofland and his partner moved the mill from the farm to the present site, building a dam on Gilbert Creek and resuming operations at the new location. Two years later the mill burned. Then Mr. Hofland organized a stock company called the Menomonie Milling Co., the officers of which were: A. E. Hofland, president; O. J. Tilleson, vice president; Alex Hosford, secretary, and W. C. Ribanack, treasurer; with Albert Quilling, a director in addition to the above mentioned officers. In January, 1904, Mr. Quilling became secretary and in 1911 Odin Hofland became a director. In 1912 Bryan L. Kabot became secretary and treasurer. The concern has continued to do a flourishing They do custom milling and manufacture pearl barley, also dealing business. quite extensively in feeds, their output, sold throughout the United States, averaging 200 cars a year. Although Mr. Hofland is now 79 years old, he enjoys good health and is still very active at the mill. He is one of the oldest members of our Saviour's Norwegian Lutheran Church, in which he has long been a very active Since 1884 he has been one of the deacons and he was also a member of worker. the building committee. His family are also members of the church. Mr. Hofland was married in Norway to Otillia Aamodt, and seven children have been the issue of this union, namely: Edward, born Feb. 26, 1876; Bertha, Aug. 10, 1877; Elise, Sept. 14, 1880; Lina, Dec. 15, 1882; Odin, March 22, 1885; Alma, Jan. 20, 1888, and Netta Maria, Aug. 26, 1890. Edward, who is a prosperous dairyman in the town of Menomonie, married Helga Lund and has six children; Helen R., Agnes L., Esther A., Paul E., Frederick O. and Henry R. Bertha is now Mrs. Peder A. Johnson of the town of Lucas, and has one child, Ruth Gladys. Alice is a dressmaker in Minneapolis. Lina was graduated from Waldheim Sanitorium as a registered nurse, which profession she followed for several years. She is now the wife of Oscar Eng of Menomonie and the mother of one child, Peder Allen. Odin, single, is now vice president of the Menomonie Milling Co. Alma, who was graduated from a business college in Minneapolis, having pursued a thorough course in bookkeeping, followed that occupation until her marriage in that city to J. B. Erickson, whose wife she now is. Netta M. was graduated from the Dunn County Normal School and from the River Falls State Normal School, and for several years taught school in Wisconsin and other states. She is now at home assisting her aged mother in the work of the household. Though a modest man Mr. Hofland has a right to be proud of his record, on which he can stand without fearing to look anyone in the eye. It rests on hard, honest and persistent work, directed by keen intelligence coupled with foresight.

Torkildt Bronken, better known as "Ton." Bror.!:en, who for nearly 40 years has carried on agricultural activities in Dunn County, was born in Norway, Sept. 29, 1849, son of Peter and Bergette Bronken, the father being a farmer and timber speculator. "Tom" attended school in his native land until he was 16 years old. In 1866 he came to the United States with his parents, the family locating in, Detroit, Mich., where they remained for a year. Then going to the Saginaw Valley he was employed there for three years in the logging and lumbering industry. At the end of that time he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and bought 160 acres of railroad land in the town of Otter Creek, but for the next 15 winters he worked in the woods as a lumberjack. In the meanwhile his father died and our subject's mother some time afterwards married Andrew A. Bronken, who had a farm of 160 acres in the town of Grant. The land was mortgaged, however, and, being sold on foreclosure, "Tom" bought it. He has since cleared it, built a new frame house, barns and other buildings, and now has altogether some 100 acres under cultivation. His herd of grade cattle numbers 20 head and he also raises hogs. The farm contains 360 acres and lies partly in the town of Otter Creek and partly in that of Grant. Mr. Bronken was married in 1885 in the town of Grant to Ingeborg Haraldson, a native of Norway who had come to this country at the age of ten years. He and his wife are the parents of seven children, Palmer, Herman, Anton R., Berner, Talvin, Berdie and Cora.

Anton R. Bronken, cashier of the Peoples State Bank of Colfax, was born in the town of Grant, Dunn County, Wis., April 14, 1890, son of Torkildt and Ingeborg (Haraldson) Bronken. As a boy he attended school in what is now Joint District No. 4, including the towns, or parts of the towns, of Grant and Otter Creek. After remaining at home until arriving at the age of 17 years, he went to North Dakota, where that summer he worked on farms. During the following winter he was employed in the woods of northern Minnesota, after which he returned home and spent a short time on his parents' farm. He then went to Montana, where he worked as a common ranch hand and did some "cow punching," also at one time working on a railroad section as a member of a bridge gang, at another in a brewery and for one month in a flour mill. These activities were all in the vicinity of Bozeman of Manhattan, Mont. About the beginning of the year 1909 Mr. Bronken returned home and remained there until spring, when he set out for Saskatchewan, Canada, to make a grasp at fortune in a different locality. There he filed on a land claim at a point 92 miles from the nearest railroad. After filing he went to Conrad, Montana. on reaching that place he found himself "broke." His pride preventing him from sending home for money, he slept for two weeks in box cars in the stock yards and begged his food like a tramp until he was finally given a job digging sewers. After that he worked in a brick vard and also for three weeks as baggage clerk in a railway depot. He next went to work in the lead and silver mines at Elkhorn, Mont., where he earned $4.50 per day, and remained for a year. Then, wishing to prove up on his claim, he, with a companion he had picked up, returned to Saskatchewan, traveling as far as he could by rail, and then walking the 92 miles to his claim, the distance being made in two days. He had built a cabin on the place and left a man in charge, whom he found on his arrival had noting to eat but some oatmeal and a little sugar. Mr. Bronken sent the man to town with a heavy team to get provisions, the round trip meaning a seven days' journey, and while the man was gone all that Mr. Bronken and his companion had to eat was the oatmeal and sugar, with an occasional duck or mud hen that they shot. Feeling that the conditions of life so far from civilization and from a market for supplies, were too hard, and might not be much better for a number of years to come, Mr. Bronken gave up his claim and returned to the mines, where he put in another year's work, during most of that time acting as blacksmith. He was also the village barber. cutting the miners' hair and shaving them, in addition to which he played the violin at dances two nights a week, for which he received $7.50 per night. Thus, with his daily wage of $4.50, the pay for his musical work, and the 50 cents he received for each haircut, he was beginning to accumulate a little money; but the excessive work was over-taxing his strength, his health failed and in the spring of 1912 he returned home; the summer of that year was spent in a hospital. That experience, however, did not cure his ambition, nor his desire to achieve success through his own unaided efforts, so when he felt strong enough he went to Minneapolis, where he secured a position in the Great Northern Railway offices, where he was employed from 8:00 o'clock a. m. to 4:30 p. m. On leaving work there each day he walked 12 blocks to a restaurant, where he worked till 7:30 p. m. for his board; and from the restaurant he went to a night school to acquire a commercial education. In the spring of 1914 Mr. Bronken obtained a position as clerk in the First National Bank at Starbuck, Minn., it being understood that he was to have an opportunity to learn the banking business. He worked for his board and slept in the back room of the bank. There, however, he remained but a short time, returning to Colfax, Wis., and entering the employ of the Colfax Store Co. as bookkeeper, in which position he served three months. He was then for one year assistant cashier of the Bank of Colfax. When the People State Bank of Colfax was organized, he was offered and accepted the position of assistant cashier of that institution, commencing his duties on Sept. 1, 1915. On Jan. 1, 1917, he was made cashier, and as such has since remained, his character for ability and reliability having proved an asset and source of strength to the bank. If patience and dogged persistence in striving after high things are qualities deserving credit, then Mr. Bronken's present position has been well and worthily won. He has also proved himself useful in general affairs, as for two years he served efficiently as one of the village trustees and for a year was village president. He is a member of the Lutheran Church of America, also of several societies, including the Masons, Odd Fellows, Sons of Norway and the Scandinavian American Fraternity. Mr. Bronken was married June 10, 1920, to Dagney Berg, who was born in the town of Grant, Dunn County, on Aug. 9, 1893. He and his wife have been the parents of four children: Borgny, Anita and Dana Anthony, who are living, and Henning, who died in infancy. Mr. Bronken's career illustrates in forcible manner the value of self-help and may well prove an example to poor but ambitious youth.

Lorenzo Dow Harvey, the first president of Stout Institute, and for many years a man of national reputation for his services in the educational field, was born in Dover, N. H., Nov. 23, 1848. He came to Wisconsin with his parents when very young and was reared on a farm near Rock River between Janesville and Milton. He began teaching when only 16, earning money thereafter to put himself through college, where he was considered a brilliant student and teacher, being asked to teach in the college a part of the time during his junior and senior years. At Milton College in 1872 he received the degree of B. A., and in 1876 that of M. A. His Alma Mater honored him with the degree of Ph. D. in 1885. After leaving college he studied law, evenings and was admitted to the bar in the early 80's. For ten years, from 1875 to 1885, he was superintendent of schools at Sheboygan. His success there led to his call to the Oshkosh Normal School as institute conductor and professor of political economy, and that position he held until 1892, when he was elected president of the Milwaukee Normal School. Seven years later, in 1899, he resigned the latter position to become state superintendent of schools, and as such he served for four years, during which time he was responsible for much progressive legislation, including the law creating the county training schools for teachers and the county agricultural schools. He was also a vigorous advocate of the law to have the election of the state superintendent of public instruction in the spring instead of in the fall, taking the educational interests of the state out of politics to that extent. On leaving the state superintendency Mr. Harvev became superintendent of the Menomonie school system, which included the city schools, a county training school for teachers and a county agricultural school. He also became president in 1903 of the Stout Institute, in which position he served until his death on June 1, 1922. This latter position he was led to accept through the advice and influence of his close friend, the late Senator James H. Stout, who regarded him as the best man in the country for it, and it was here that he did his most important work and achieved his greatest fame. While the early development of the work of the institute was due largely to the efforts of Mr. Stout, its later development and progress were brought about by Dr. Harvey and Mr. Stout working together. When the school was taken over by the state, the work of bringing about legislation providing for appropriations for the maintenance of the school and for new buildings and equipment fell largely upon Dr. Harvey, and this was always handled in a masterly way. His work soon attracted national attention, and an extended article by Adele Marie Shaw, published in the World's Work, New York. issue of March, 1904, referred in terms of high praise to his remarkable record and especially his power of organization that was felt in the life of the whole system. The author spoke with discrimination, for to Dr. Harvey's wonderful power of organization, coupled with his profound knowledge of modern educational needs, and the great influence of his rare personality, is due in a great degree the progress that has been made by the Institute, and, it may be added, the progress in vocational education throughout the country. For many years after coming to Menomonie Dr. Harvey spent considerable time in traveling and lecturing. His messages concerning the work done at Stout were carried into all sections of the United States. The new ideas were broadcasted over the country, with the result that for many years the Stout school of Menomonie was recognized as a school doing a new and unusually valuable work for the advancement of education. Hundreds of visitors came each year to view at first hand the work of the school. As each step in its advancement represented careful planning and strenuous effort on his part, it will be proper here to give a resume of the development and growth of the Menomonie school system since he assumed control of it. Manual training had been introduced into the city schools in 1890, owing to the influence of Mr. Stout, who stood a large part of the cost. In 1903, following the advent of Dr. Harvey, the Stout Training Schools were organized and opened in September of that year with two student in the manual training department, 23 in the domestic science department, and 35 in the kindergarten department, all taking courses in preparation for teaching in those branches. There was a steady increase in attendance until 1915-16, when 556 enrolled for the regular school year. The Stout Institute was incorporated as an independent school in 1908, and in 1911, a few months after the death of Senator Stout, it was taken over by the state. Illustrative of the fact that Dr. Harvey was a pathfinder in unexplored fields of education, a commission was given him by the Wisconsin legislature to investigate and report on industrial education in rural communities. That his influence along this line was national was shown by his appointment as chairman of a committee to investigate and report to the National Council of Education on the same subject. For more than two years before his death Dr. Harvey was engaged, with the assistance and co-operation of his daughter, Miss Gladys Harvey, in the work of acquainting the people of their state with their school system and inspiring in them a desire to see it grow better and more useful. As chairman of the Committee on Publicity of the Wisconsin State Teachers Association, he conceived and directed a campaign of education in Wisconsin that resulted in better buildings, better equipment in the schools, more adequate compensation for teachers, and higher standard of teaching, all based upon the high ground that the education of our children is the most important business of the state, and the pupils in our schools deserve the best we can give them. Among the teachers of Wisconsin he labored as a faithful, helpful, inspiring co-worker for 56 years, and his rare gifts of companionship made his coming welcome in every circle and made an enduring friend of almost every acquaintance. As evidence of the high regard in which he was held by the educators of Wisconsin, a movement was started by them a year before his death to place a life-size oil portrait of him in the office of the state superintendent of public instruction at Madison; and this portrait, painted by Christian Abrahamson, now hangs in the Wisconsin capitol, a tribute such as no other Wisconsin teacher has been accorded. Dr. Harvey was always an active association man, serving as president of the Wisconsin State Teachers' Association in 1890-91; president of the Department of Superintendence, National Educational Association, 1898-99: and president of the National Educational Association in 1908-09, being also a life director of the last mentioned society. He was the author of a series of arithmetics and of many educational reports and addresses. interests and activities, however, were by no means confined to the schools. His remarkable mind compassed in a general way nearly all fields of human endeavor, and being a rapid and thorough reader, he kept a strong grasp on the affairs of the His fund of information enabled him to hold his own in every group and his dav. conversation was a never-failing source of delight to thinking people. His love of books began in his early years when stretched on the floor in front of a great fireplace, he read by the light of the blazing logs. He loved the out-of-doors, and his favorite pastime for years he found in boating and fishing, spending his vacations at the Ashland Club and Lac Court d'Oreilles. In civic matters his interest was keen, and he was a regular attendant at the meetings of the Menomonie Commercial Club, which he helped to organize in 1905, and of which he was the second president, succeeding the late Senator Stout. His influence was felt for years in nearly all local projects of importance. It remained for the World War, however, to bring out Dr. Harvey's immense influence as a citizen to the full. Fired by the most intense patriotism, he gladly assumed a load of war activities in addition to his regular duties, and succeeded in completing the organization of one of the first county councils of defense formed in Wisconsin. In fact, largely through his assistance, there was formed a local service council before any of the county councils came into existence, which served the same purpose. While residing in Oshkosh, Dr. Harvey entered the Masonic Order, and in time he attained the thirty-second degree. He was a life member of one of the Milwaukee commanderies and was held in high honor in the order. His home life was ideal. He was married in 1874 to Miss Lette Brown of Edgerton, who was his companion in all his activities and experiences. Mrs. Harvey won a leadership in club and civic affairs, and served as president of the Wisconsin Federation of Women's Clubs, besides receiving many other honors at the hands of women's organizations. For more than a year before his death, which was due to angina pectoris, the pain of which he endured with manly fortitude and resignation, it was known that Dr. Harvey's health was failing, but the great change came suddenly and was a shock to the community.--a misfortune in the reality of which it was hard to believe. He was survived by his widow and two daughters: Gladys, who has been already mentioned, and Helen, who was Mrs. Lynn A. Williams, and who died six months later at Evanston, Ill. Two other Aughters, Leeta, who was the wife of Carl D. Jackson of Oshkosh, and Hazel, are deceased. The value of such work as Dr. Harvey performed lies not only in its inherent character but in its permanence. Its effect upon the lives of the present generation and others yet to come cannot be estimated, but it is sure to remain for many years a potent factor in the educational development of the country, and perhaps to influence in no small degree other spheres of human thought and activity.

Clinton M. Peddycoart, a thriving merchant of Menomonie, proprietor of the Golden Rule Five and Ten Cent Store, was born in Greene, Iowa, July 13, 1893, son of Elmer and Hattie (Crosby) Peddycoart. The parents were both natives of Iowa. in which state they were married, and they were engaged in farming there Then in partnership with a Mr. Erret, Elmer Peddycoart established until 1909. a five and ten cent store in Greene, and later they established another in Austin, Minn. In 1915 Mr. Peddycoart disposed of his interests in Green, Iowa, and coming to Menomonie started the Golden Rule store in the old post office building of the Arcade block, operating it in partnership with Mr. Erret until Jan. 1, 1921. He then sold his interest in the Austin store and buying his partner's share in the store in Menomonie, turned a half interest over to his son Clinton, M., the name of the firm being changed to Peddycoart & Son. As such it continued until Jan. 1, 1923, at which time Mr. Peddycoart sold to his son his remaining half interest, and has since been retired from active business pursuits. He spends his winters in California, residing the rest of the year in Menomonie. He and his wife have had one child, Clinton M., the subject of this sketch. Clinton M. Peddycoart, after the usual attendance in the grade school, became a pupil in the high school, from which he was graduated in 1911. He then entered Cornell University, where he took the science course and was graduated with the class of 1915. On his return to Menomonie he entered his father's store, in 1921 acquired a half interest in the business, and on Jan. 1, 1923 became sole owner, as above narrated. In this now well established enterprise he has found a congenial field of activity and is having a successful business career. He is a member of the Commercial Club and is a blue lodge and chapter Mason. Among the patriotic young men of the city, he responded to the Nation's call to arms in the war against Germany and her allies, enlisting April 16, 1917. For a short time he attended the officers' training camp at Ft. Sheridan, being transferred from that place to the University of Illinois, where he took the aeronautical course, being commissioned second lieutenant in February, 1918, assigned to Love Field at Dallas, Texas, he there trained 135 cadets in that In September, 1918, he was ordered overseas, and at Issodun, France, he course. took further training in the largest flying field in the world. He was later transferred to the 141st Aero Squadron, but the armistice prevented his seeing actual service in the battle line at the front. He, however, accompanied the army of occupation into Germany, being stationed at Coblenz. After his return home he was discharged at Mitchell Field, Long Island, on July 9, 1919. He is a member and past commander of Hosford Chase Post No. 2, American Legion. Mr. Peddycoart was married June 9, 1920, in Detroit, Mich., to Helen Strong of Boston, whom he had met in France, where she was engaged in Red Cross work. They have two children, Deane and John.

Dennis C. Brennan, a former business man of Menomonie, engaged in the hardware trade, but now deceased, was born in Quebec, Canada, March 26, 1857, and came to the States with his parents when three years old. They settled at Ripon, Wis., where he was reared and educated. He then went to Fond du Lac, where he learned the tinner's trade, and after that took up his residence in Janesville. his marriage in 1888 he went to Aurora, Ill., where he followed his trade until 1897. After He then came to Menomonie and established the Brennan hardware store in a part of the building now occupied by the Barber Furniture Company, and here he carried on business until his death on June 3, 1916. Mr. Brennan was married on Feb. 10, 1888, in Wausau, Wis., to Anna M. Weix daughter of Andrew and Christina (Graeiner) Weix. She was born Nov. 6, 1861 at Leroy near Fond du Lac, Wis., and was there reared and educated. Taught self-reliance at an early age, she learned the millinery trade and later that of tailoress, and also took up photography. She subsequently became closely connected with the hardware business which her husband established in Menomonie, the more so as, owing to his failing health he looked to her for assistance. She gradually learned how to order goods and toward the last the management of the business fell entirely into her hands. It was while thus engaged that Mrs. Brennan evolved the diea with which her name has been associated—that of a kitchen shop. It is believed that it was the first of its kind in the country, but the idea was a good one and she turned it to practical Practically everything needed for the kitchen is found in this shop, together use. with many novel accessories both for the kitchen and dining-room; and among them are cetain specialized lines of high grade aluminum, cast aluminum and nickled copper and brass. Large store space for the stock is not required, for pots and pans, kettles and lids, and the numberless small and large articles all pile high and still present a neat and attractive appearance-attractive especially to the busy housewife. Cases are used for the high grade kitchen accessories-the casseroles, chafing-dishes, trivets and trays, and for the special wares which provide perfect appointment for the serving table and dining-room. Mrs. Brennan started her kitchen shop in 1912 and she has made a decided success of it. It has been its own advertisement and though for years it has been known to every woman in Menomonie it is only lately that its fame has begun to spread to distant points, causing inquiry and imitation. Such inquiries have come even from as far east as New York City and as far west as Portland, Oregon, and, as Mrs. Brennan says, in time there will be kitchen shops everywhere. Attractive window displays keep the people dropping in a few at a time so that the trade is easily handled without extra sales people. In her buying Mrs. Brennan keeps quality in mind as the first essential, finding that guaranteed lines are satisfactory lines. Her store has been located where it now is at 332 Main Street, since 1919, she having purchased the building in 1915.

A. J. Brummund, who for 16 years has been engaged in the hardware or tinsmith business in Menomonie, for some years conducting both, and who is well established here as a business man, was born at Beaver Dam, Wis., Oct. 16, 1869, son of Gottleib and Ricke (Rulow) Brummund. The parents were natives of Germany, where they It was in 1866 that they came to the United States, locating at Beaver were married. Dam, Wis., and from that place they later moved to Norfolk, Nebr., where they A. J. Brummund was a young child when he accompanied his parents both died. to Norfolk, Nebr., and there he grew to manhood, acquiring his education in public As a young man he learned the tinsmith's trade, which he and parochial schools. followed in Norfolk until 1907. He then came to Menomonie and here engaged in the hardware business with his father-in-law, W. H. Steffen, under the firm name of the Steffen Hardware Co. They continued together until 1910, conducting a general hardware and tinsmith business. Mr. Brummund then became the sole owner of the business and continued as such until 1918, in which year he sold the hardware branch to Paul Jensen, he, himself, retaining the tinsmith business, which he is still conducting, his shop being located on Fourth Street between Main Street and Wilson Avenue. He manufactures cupalos, eve troughs, furnace pipes and attachments, etc., keeps three men employed in addition to himself, and has built up a large and profitable trade and a fine personal reputation as a competent and reliable business man. While a resident of Norfolk, Nebr., he enjoyed considerable prominence, serving on the city council and as alderman from his ward. In 1915 he built the present residence of himself and family at 1120 Eleventh Street, a commodious and nicely located house. It was in November, 1903 that Mr. Brummund was united in marriage with Augusta Steffen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Two children are the fruit of this marriage, Gertrude and Walter. Gert-Steffen. rude is a graduate of the Menomonie High School and the Minneapolis Business College and is now a member of the Dunn County News force. Walter is a pupil in the Menomonie High School. The family are connected by membership with St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

Ward L. Swift, proprietor of the Colfax Messenger, and of the printing office connected with it, was born at Beaver Fails, Renvillo County, Minn., May 30, 1871, son of Pardon H. and Mary C. (Williams) Swift. The father in early life was a practicing attorney. In 1872 he went to Michigan as supply clerk for the Calumet & Hecla Mining Co. and was in the employ of that concern for five years. He then returned to Wisconsin and engaged in the newspaper business at Clinton, Rock County, buying the Clinton Herald, which he published until 1877, when he sold out. Going to Oconto, Wis., he then bought and subsequently published the Oconto Reporter, remaining its proprietor until December, 1884. His next sphere of journalistic activity was at Rice Lake, Barron County, where until 1895 he published the Rice Lake Chronotype. Then selling that paper, he went to Madison, where for the next four years he was correspondence clerk in the treasury department of the state government. At the end of that time Mr. Swift returned to Rice Lake and took over the Rice Lake Leader, which had been previously established by his son Ward L., and that paper he published until 1901, during the latter part of the time his son being associated with him. Then selling the paper, he went to Watertown and took over the Watertown Republican, which he conducted for a year, at the end of that time he and his son Ward L. establishing the Watertown The latter paper he conducted for three years, then, through the Daily Leader. influence of U.S. Senator Spooner, he was appointed special agent for the department of the interior, in which position he served for two years, when he resigned and retired. He died a widower at Madison, Wis., March 2, 1916, his wife Mary having passed away in August, 1914. Ward L. Swift acquired a common and high school education at Rice Lake, Wis. He early became interested in newspaper work beginning to help in his father's office at "printer's devil" at nine years of age. Having completed his schooling at the age of 18, he then became more closely connected with the printing and newspaper business and two years later became his father's partner, this association being continued for some four years, or until 1893. In that year he became a full-fledged newspaper proprietor, going to Tomahawk, Lincoln County, where he bought the Tomahawk Blade, which he published for two years. He then turned it over to his father and went to Janesville, Wis., to become news and telegraph editor on the Janesville Gazette, in which manner he was occupied for two years and a half. His next journalistic experience was in Rhinelander, where for two years he conducted the New North for George W. Bishop. Then returning to Rice Lake, he conducted the Rice Lake Leader until his father sold it in 1901. He was next with the Eau Claire Leader and continued with that paper until 1902, when he joined with his father in establishing the Watertown Daily Leader, being subsequently connected with that paper for about two and a half years. He then changed his occupation for a time, for the next two and a half years being traveling salesman for the American Type Founders' Company. From the end of that period up to March 1, 1917, he was connected with the Eau Claire Press Co., on the date mentioned coming to Colfax and buying the Colfax Messenger from A. C. Chase, and here he has since remained. Mr. Swift has im• proved the paper and increased its circulation and is also conducting a flourishing job printing business. On Nov. 15, 1902. Ward L. Swift was united in marriage with Emma G. Freese, of Cadott. Chippewa County, Wis., and of this union there are two children: Wardena C., born Dec. 1, 1903, who is a graduate of the Whitewater State Normal School, and now a commercial department teacher; and Pardon Holden, born Feb. 2, 1907, who is a pupil in the Colfax High School.

John Seitz, who for years was prominent in the agricultural industry in Dunn County, and, having gained a competence, is now living retired in Menomonie, was born in Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 10, 1862. His parents, George and Louisa (Fox) Seitz, were natives of Germany and Switzerland respectively and came to the United States when young. They were married in Milwaukee, where for some time the father followed the trade of brewer. In 1867 they came to Dunn County, buying 80 acres of railroad land in Section 19, town of Eau Galle. This land was wild and had a quantity of timber on it, which George Seitz began cutting. Later he grubbed the stumps, broke the land and developed it into a farm. The family lived during the early years under pioneer conditions, having little but the bare necessities of life, though they were able to procure an abundance of wild game, bear and deer being numerous in the vicinity of their home. Hard work was the order of the day but in time it brought results, and Mr. and Mrs. Seitz became fairly prosperous and more comfortable. Mr. Seitz died on the farm, but his wife is still living and now resides in Elmwood with her son Frank. They were the parents of eight children, all now living, namely: John, subject of this sketch; Lena, now Mrs. W. H. Woods of the town of Sherman, Dunn County; Anna, who is Mrs. John Klaus of St. Paul; Elizabeth, wife of William Chapman of Minneapolis; Minnie, of Newport, Wash.; Charles, who is a rancher in the Blue Mountains of Oregon; Frank, a farmer of the town of Weston, this county, and Henry of Spokane, Wash. John Seitz, as the son of pioneer parent:, had but limited educational opportunities, for a short time attending the rural schools. After remaining with his parents until he was 22 years old, he started in for himself, buying a farm of 160 acres in section 19, town of Eau Galle, which adjoined the old home farm. With the exception of three acres that had been cleared, it was all wild land. He started with a set of log buildings, which he later replaced with good frame ones, and he continued to follow diversified farming until the fall of 1918. He then retired, selling his farm and moving to Menomonie, in which city he bought a house at No. 1018 Sixth Street, which he now rents out, occupying another residence at 1509 Main Street, Mr. Seitz was married first in February, 1885, to Mary Lamon, which also he owns. who died Nov. 19, 1913, leaving nine children: Nellie, of Menomonie, widow of Harvey Partridge; Walter, of Oregon; Blanche, now Mrs. Paul Lehman of the town of Weston, Dunn County; Earl, who is in the garage business at Ellsworth, Wis.; Clifford, of Elmwood, Wis.; Sylvia, now Mrs. Edward Parent of Milwaukee; Grace, now deceased; Raymond of Fond du Lac, and Harold of the town of Weston, Dunn County. On Jan. 1, 1920. Mr. Seitz was married to Amelia Scheel, whose maiden name was Amelia Bloedorn, and whose parents were Julius and Minnie (Leek) Bloedorn. She was born in Germany, Aug. 26, 1870, the family coming to this country in 1884 and locating at Ashton, Spink County, S. D., where the mother, Mrs. Minnie Bloedorn, died Feb. 16, 1922. The father, Julius Bloedorn, is now living at Groton, S. D. It was in 1886 that the daughter, Amelia, now Mrs. Seitz was married to Carl F. Scheel, who at that time was employed in a brickyard. He was born in Kuno, near Berlin, Germany, March 27, 1861, and came to America at the age of 21. After working hard and saving as much as possible he had his parents come from Germany and made a home for them at Waterloo, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. Scheel came to Dunn County, settling on land in the town of Sherman. It consisted of 80 acres purchased from Capt. William Wilson, all of it wild, and its development was a task that took considerable time and a vast amount of physical energy. Besides attending to the housework, Mrs. Scheel reared ten children, being obliged to employ a doctor only once. In the end they developed their farm to one of 214 acres, with fine buildings and full equipment. After Mr. Scheel's death, which occurred Dec. 27, 1914, Mrs. Scheel with the assistance of her children, carried on the farm successfully. In March 1922 she sold it to Herbert Quilling. These children, including all in the family, were: Herman, of Fall City, Dunn County; Carl, of the town of Sherman; Anna, now Mrs. Oscar Olson of Eau Claire; William, a farmer of Dallas; Barron County; Emma, now Mrs. Roy Leach of Bloomer, Wis.; Mary, now Mrs. Eli Sukow of Burgin, Ky.; Ernest, a farmer of Dunn County; Edward of the town of Menomonie, who married Alvera Marunda; Amelia, now Mrs. Egbert Savage of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and is an instructor in manual training and in typewriting; and August (a twin of Mary), who is deceased. Mr. Scheel was a warm hearted, generous man, who died greatly respected and esteemed. In 1901 he and his wife joined the German Methodist Church, of which she is still a member, as also are their children.

John W. Burdick, a well known and respected resident of Menomonie, in which city he has lived practically retired for many years, was born in the town of Stonington, New London County, Conn., son of Barnum H. and Sarah A. (West) Burdick. The father, a native of Rhode Island, was engaged in the fisheries business and was also a ship builder. In 1856 he came west with his family, settled in Scott County, Minn., and soon after built the first steamboat to run on Lake Minnetonka. They remained in Scott County three years, then moved to Martin County, Minn., where he followed farming and was also a mail contractor, taking contracts to carry the mail by stage. It was in the early 80's that he came to Dunn County, where he followed the carpenter's trade, subsequently for several years having the care of the schoolhouse. He lived to a very advanced age, passing away when 96 years old. He had been twice married; his first wife, Sarah, having died in 1869, he chose for his second Mrs. Emily McLean, who in maiden life was Emily Flint. He had two children, who were born of the first marriage, namely: Francis, who died in 1872, and John W., subject of this sketch. John W. Burdick as a youth attended school in New London County, Conn., and came west with his parents in 1856. He remained with them until he was 26 years old, and then on Feb. 11, 1864, joined the Sixth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry as civil engineer, subsequently serving with that organization until the close of the war, though the only action he saw was in the last battle fought. Discharged Aug. 19, 1865 at Ft. Snelling, he returned to Minnesota and for two years thereafter was in the merchantile business at Fairmont, that state, during which time he became familiar with the different kinds of furs, taking them in exchange for merchandise. In 1868 he became associated in St. Paul with the American Fur Co., for whom he traveled three years buying furs, and after that until 1880 he was with the A. C. Bailey Fur Company. His next move was to enter into the lumber brokerage business, in which he remained for three years, during which time he became interested in the iron mines and went to Duluth, where he was occupied until 1887 in work connected with them. It was at the end of that time that he came to Menomonie, of which place he has since Mr. Burdick was first married in 1861 to Rebecca A. Swearengen, been a resident. who died in 1885 and by her had four children: William, now deceased; Minnie of California; Vina, deceased, and Frank, now associate editor of the Martin County Mr. Burdick was married secondly July 22, 1893, in Chicago, (Minn.) Sentinel. Ill., to Margaret Skill, who was born Aug. 23, 1869, in Ontario, Canada, daughter of Peter and Fannie (Preston) Skill. Her father, a native of England, was a solider in the army, and served with the Light Brigade in the Crimean War, making the famous charge with them at Balaklave, when so few returned. He is now deceased, but his wife is still living and is now residing in California. Of this second marriage two children were born: West, A. and Virginia. West A. Burdick, who is em-ployed in the office of the state architect at St. Paul, married Vernal Horne and has one child, Margaret. Virginia is the wife of J. E. Ray of Menomonie, an instructor in the Stout Institute, and they have one child, Virginia.

Fred W. Schultz, one of the retired farmers now residing in Menomonie, who, like the others, took an important part in helping built up the agricultural interests of Dunn County, was born in Prussia, Germany, April 20, 1856. He was educated in the public schools of his native land, where he subsequently followed farming, remaining there until 1888, when he came to America. Locating in Menomonie,

MR. AND MRS. FRED W. SCHULTZ

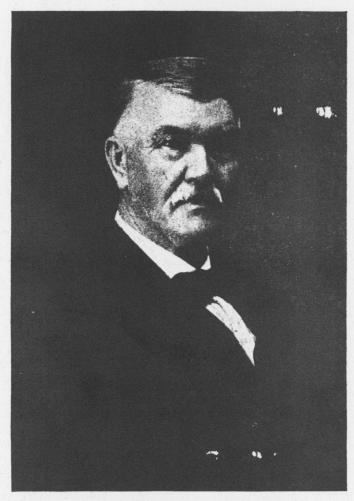

Wis., he obtained his first employment here in a brick yard, where he worked for a year, and then for a while was employed in the mill of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. Quitting the mill, he spent two years on farms and then returned to the It was in 1900 that he began farming on his own account, buying 80 acres of partly improved land in the town of Menomonie. The improvements included a dwelling-house and several outbuildings, though the latter were very poor. Thev answered the purpose for a short time, however, though Mr. Schultz soon improved them or built better ones. In particular he erected a good new barn, adding the other buildings as he found opportunity, and in the meanwhile he proceeded with the work of clearing the rest of the land, a task that was well accomplished in time. The ultimate result was a good farm, which he conducted until April 10, 1918, when he retired and, selling the place, came to Menomonie and bought his present residence, with four lots, at No. 1818 Sixth Street, which he has occupied ever since. Mr. Schultz was first married in Germany, March 4, 1885, to Paulina Schoemacher, who was born in Prussia, Aug. 15, 1857. She accompanied him to America and, after a married life of 13 years, died May 2, 1908, leaving eight children, who are all now living, as follows: Paul of Tacoma, Wash.; Bertha, wife of George Harvey of Seattle, Wash., and the mother of three children, Leonard, Ronald and Margaret; Fred of Chicago, Ill., who married Beulah King; August of Clement, Calif.; Alma of Seattle, Wash., Emma, who is Mrs. George Thomas of Chippewa Falls, Wis., and has three children, Clifford, Harriet and Ruth; Edward, also of Chippewa Falls, who married Dorothy Wilson and has a daughter, June; and Margaret, residing in St. Paul, who is the mother of one child, Leonard, who was reared and has always lived with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Schultz. On July 1, 1909, Fred W. Schultz was married secondly to Mrs. Bertha Storing, whose maiden name was Bertha Steffen, and who was born in Germany, July 8, 1861. She was first married to Daniel P. Storing, a native of Cooperstown, N. Y., who settled in Pierce County, Wisconsin, where he followed his trade of carpenter until his death on March 17, 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Storing became the parents of nine children, one of whom named Fred, and another, unnamed, died in infancy. The others were Ida, Charles, Cora, Edward, Etta, Wilma and Daniel, concerning whom the following facts are available. Ida is the wife of Julius Krohn of Menomonie and has three children, Helen, Margaret and Charlotte. Charles, also a resident of Menomonie, married Frances Kissner and has two children, Elizabeth and Carroll. Cora, wife of Fred Knoble of Menomonie, has four children, Herbert, Robert, Bertha and Charles. Edward, who resides in Lake City, Minn., married Hilda Oestreich and has three children, Aurilla, Marvin and Marie. Etta is the wife of Oscar Schultz of Lake City, Minn., and her children are Jackie, Esther, Edward and Dorothy. Wilma resides at home with her mother and step-father. The son, Daniel Storing, has a special record as one of those whose life was sacrificed in the great World War. Even before this country entered into that war young Storing saw military service on the Mexican border with Company H, Third Wisconsin Infantry, from June 19, He had become a member of that organization in 1913, and he to Dec. 14, 1916. continued to serve with it except for a short time that he was with Company C. First Minnesota Infantry. After his company had gone into service for the war with Germany and her allies he trained at Camp Grant and at Waco, Texas. was not destined ever to see the battle front, however, though he did go overseas. He On April 8, 1918, he came home on a furlough after having been confined to the hospital at Hoffland Island with rheumatism. On April 13 he left for Camp Merritt, N. J., and on the 24th of the same month took ship for France, in which country he was landed a very sick boy on May 4. On May 17 a telegram was received by his mother informing her that he had died on May 6, the immediate cause of death having been pneumonia. Owing to ill health he had received an honorable discharge in October, 1917, but not content to remain when Company H left with the colors, he re-enlisted and did all he could to recover in order to serve his country. He died with the rank of sergeant, which he had earned through good conduct and soldierly capacity, and left behind him a host of friends. Memorial services were held for him in Menomonie at Friedens Lutheran Church, at which some 600 persons were present. Flowers were presented by Company H Mothers and Sisters Clubs, there was appropriate music, and an appreciative and patriotic address by the Rev. J. M. Woerth. Daniel Storing was in his 25th year, having been born in Menomonie Aug. 21, 1893. He was educated in the public schools and had been employed in various ways in the city. He left a memory that will not soon fade from the minds of those who knew him. The Schultz and Storing families are members of the German Lutheran Church.

Sever G. Bjerkness, who has been connected with the Colfax post office as rural mail carrier for the last 23 years, and is still serving, and whose residence in Dunn County covers a period of nearly half a century, was born in Soler, Norway, July 3, 1864, son of Gunder and Marie (Severson) Bjerkness. It was in 1882, some seven years or so after the emigration of their son Sever, that Mr. and Mrs. Gunder Bjerkness followed him to the United States, coming directly to Dunn County and buying 120 acres of wild railroad land in the town of Grant, on which they settled and where they spent the remainder of their lives. They passed through most of the hardships incidental to pioneer life in the wilderness, but survived them, and in time built up a good farm, which was for several years operated by their eldest son, Mrs. Marie Bjerkness passed away first, on Feb. 9, 1907, Mr. Bjerkness Ole. dying in April, 1909. They had five children: Ole, who is living in the town of Grant, Dunn County; Martin, who died in Norway; Sever G., subject of this sketch; Sophia, who was the first wife of Samuel Lee and died June 2, 1913; and Rudolph, a farmer in the town of Grant. Sever J. Bjerkness after attending school for a while in his native land, at the age of 11 years came to the United States, making the trip in company of Miss Marie Erickson, who later became the wife of They arrived together in Menomonie, young Bjerkness coming on Hans Bradley. to Colfax to the home of his uncle, Arnt Severson, with whom he lived for the next Then at the age of 18 he started out for himself, working in the woods seven years. in winter and on farms in summer, as many of the early settlers did. Each fall for some years he also went to Grand Forks, Minn., where he operated threshing machines, returning again to Colfax at the end of the harvest season. In 1893, the year of his marriage, he bought a farm in the town of Grant, which he operated for two years. He then disposed of it and went to Washburn, Bayfield County, where he remained for two years or more, employed in the sawmill and whole-sale mercantile house of C. N. Cramer & Co. In the fall of 1897 he returned to Dunn County and settled on a 40-acre tract of land in the town of Otter Creek, which he had bought in 1884. There he built a log house and barn in true pioneer fashion and proceeded to make a home. Finding the farm small after a while, he bought another 40 acres and went on with the work of improvement. For two years he served as town assessor and with his pay for this service he was able to carry out improvements on his place. He cleared 35 acres of it and continued to operate it until 1908, in which year he traded it for 80 acres in the town of Colfax. The latter farm he operated until 1913 and then rented it out, coming to Colfax village, where he bought two lots and built a fine residence, which he and his wife now occupy. He solt the farm in 1916. On May 1, 1901, Mr. Bjerkness was appointed the second rural mail carrier attached to the Colfax office and was assigned to cover Route No. 2, which he did for 19 years, at the end of that time being transferred to Route No. 1, which he has covered since. He is now the oldest carrier attached to the Colfax office. Each route mentioned is a 25 mile route, and during his 23 years' service Mr. Bjerkness has covered a distance of 179,400 miles. He belongs to two societies, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Scandanavian-American Fraternity. Mr. Bjerkness' marriage, already alluded to, took place in the town of Grant on July 18, 1893, and united him with Hilda L. Berg, who was born in Tromso, Norway Jan. 27, 1872, daughter of Christopher and Jorgine (Davidson) Berg. She came to America in 1891, and to Colfax, Wis., residing here for one year with her uncle, John Berg, and subsequently in St. Paul, Minn., until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Bjerkness have been the parents of four children, namely: Cora, born April 15, 1894, who died March 30, 1900, not quite reaching her sixth birthday; Mamie, born March 3, 1896, who died still younger, on April 5, 1898; Gudrun, born March 18, 1898, now a graduate nurse, wife of Leroy F. Robinson, and the mother of a son. Leroy E.; and Ruth, born Dec. 18, 1905, who is a student at the State University of Wisconsin. The family are members of the Lutheran Church in Colfax, and enjoy a good social standing.

Walter Brierly, buttermaker for the Downsville Co-operative Creamery, was born at Braidwood, Ill., Jan. 27, 1884, son of Rev. Joseph and Jane (Fisher) The parents now reside at Hersey, Wis. Walter acquired his education Brierly. in the common and high schools of Chetek, Barron County, and the high school at Pittsville, Wood County, Wis. He then learned the art of butter making, beginning at Woodville, where he remained a year. He next went to Hersey, where he had charge of the Farmers' Co-operative Creamery and while there he attended for a year the butter making department of the agricultural college at Madison, which is a department of the university. Being graduated, he received a diploma and then returned to Hersey. On Aug. 10, 1909, he took the position of head buttermaker and general overseer for the Downsville Co-operative Creamery, a position in which he has since served. _ The concern has grown from one of very small proportions to be the largest in Dunn County. Its output for the year 1923 was 1-, 012,000 pounds of butter, and this of the highest quality, as Mr. Brierly has never failed to win a diploma in any of the numerous contests in which he has taken part. His efficiency has been a strong factor in the success of the creamery. He is a member of the Beavers' Fraternal Reserve Fund. He was married April 8, 1907, at Hersey, Wis., to Edna Randolph, and he and his wife are the parents of two children: Robert, born Feb. 10, 1912, and Walter, born July 16, 1914. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Eugene F. Stoddard, the present postmaster of Downing, was born in Greenbush, Sheboygan County, Wis., Nov. 29, 1858, son of Olonzo E. and Flora (Styles) The father was born at Hale's Corners, Lewis County, New York, and the mother in Coburn, Ontario, Canada. After their marriage in the Dominion, they came west to Wisconsin in 1848 and settled in Sheboygan County, taking a homestead in the town of Greenbush, where they remained until 1906. remainder of their span of life they spent in Downing with their son Eugene, Mrs. Stoddard dying in May, 1910, and Mr. Stoddard in Septemer, 1912. Their children, eight in number, were as follows: Albert G., now a doctor at Spanish Fork, Utah; Etta, now Mrs. T. P. McIntyre of Olivia, Minn.; Charles, of Los Angeles, Calif.; Clara, who is Mrs. Louis King, Calif.; Cora, wife of Walter Douglass of Los Angeles; Gertrude, who is Mrs. William J. Carson, a widow, residing in Washburn, Wis.; Eugene F., of Downing; and Julia, who is deceased. Eugene F. Stoddard acquired a district school education in Sheboygan County. He then learned the cheese making business under his father, who was engaged in operating the first cheese factory in Sheboygan County, and after he had acquired a good knowledge of it, became a traveling expert, organizing cheese factories and installing the machinery, which occupation he followed for a period of nearly 16 years. In 1885 he came to Downing and for 11 years subsequently was a scaler and estimator for the Downing Manufacturing Co. Then in 1896 he purchased the Dr. Park drug business, which he owned and conducted for seven years. It was in September, 1894, that Mr. Stoddard was first appointed postmaster of Downing, and, with the exception of five years during the administration of President Wilson, he has since served in that position, having been appointed for the second time in 1922. In 1903 he bought a tract of 71 acres in the village of Downing, and platted and sold the Sunnyside addition. He still owns five acres of the land, on which he is doing some farming. He is a member of the local lodge of Odd Fellows, and in addition to his postmastership has rendered some public service, having for several years formerly been clerk and treasurer of the school board. Mr. Stoddard was married Aug. 25, 1885, in the town of Greenbush, Sheboygan County, to Minnie E. Roberts, who was born in that town Jan. 19, 1861, daughter of Henry and Martha Roberts, her parents being prominent in Sheboygan County. Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard have had nine children, three of whom died in infancy. Another, Lucy, who married Hugh Best, died in 1918. Wallace is an expert machinist in Minneapolis, Lawrence is also in Minneapolis, being superintendent of sales for the Greggs-Cooper Company. Rollin died in 1923. Neil is a student in the University of Wisconsin and will graduate in June, 1925. Colter died in infancy. The family attend and help to support the Union Church in Downing.

Charles A. Pinkepank, head of a flourishing grocery concern in Menomonie, was born at Fort Madison, Iowa, son of Charles and Minnie (Schoetig) Pinkepank. The father was born in Germany and came to the United States in 1865, landing at Baltimore, whence he went west directly to Fort Madison. A shoemaker by trade, he was manager of a shoe store there for three years, and then went into business himself, remaining a resident of Fort Madison until his death, which occurred His wife, who was born and reared in that city, still resides there. Charles 1874. A. Pinkepank as a youth attended school in Fort Madison. He then learned the barber's trade, which he followed there for two and a half years. It was in 1887 that he came to Menomonie and for the same length of time he followed his trade In 1889 he went to work for the Schuelte & Quilling Mercantile Co., by whom here. he was employed for 16 years, or until they sold out to B. H. Waterman in 1907, after which he remained with Mr. Waterman until 1913. He then founded the C. A. Pinkepank Grocery Co., which he has sure conducted at No. 614 Broadway in the Schuelte & Quilling building. Mr. Pinkepank is one of Menomonie's leading merchants, prosperous in business and interested in everything that makes for the welfare of the city. For the last 20 years he has been a member of the Ludington Guard Band. He also belongs to the Menomonie Commercial Club, and is identified by membership with several fraternal societies, namely, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Pinkepank was married April 3, 1902, in Menomonie, to Ida Diedrich, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Schoetig) Diedrich. Of this union four children have been born, Frederick, Elizabeth, Mae and Clyde. The family attend the Congregational Church.

Sebastian Schneider, for many years a resident of Menomonie, in early days an employe of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and later the proprietor of a successful meat business built up by himself, who is now retired, was born in Bayner, Germany, son of Sebastian and Katherine (Schanenberger) Schneider. Both parents are now deceased. The subject of this sketch after attending school in his native land, learned the blacksmith's trade there. In 1883 he emigrated to the United States, coming directly to Menomonie, Wis. Here he followed his trade for a short time and then entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company as cook, remaining with them until the spring of 1892. Then in partnership with Philip Wiseman, he established a meat market at 413 Tainter Avenue, north Menomonie, which they operated together for 17 years. At the end of that long period Mr. Schneider sold his interest in the business to Mr. Wiseman, and in 1908 purchased a market at No. 520 Main Street, Menomonie, from A. O. Strand, which he operated until January, 1921, building up a good business. He then turned it over to his sons, George S. and Herman F., who are now operating it. He owns and occupies a fine residence at 320 Tainter Street, and is fraternally affiliated with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Schneider was married Aug. 10, 1887, in Menomonie, to Louise Ehrhart, daughter of Louis and Anna (Wyman) Ehrhart. Both her parents are now deceased and Mrs. Schneider herself died June 9, 1914. She was the mother of seven children: Mayme, now Mrs. Clarence Barnette of Oakland, Calif.; Philip, who lives in La Crosse, Wis., where he is connected with Armour & Co.'s interests; Ella, wife of Ed. Gugle of Menomonie; Anna, at home; George S. and Herman F., already mentioned, and Carl, who died at the age of two years.

Schneider Bros., George S. and Herman F., proprietors of a well conducted and successful meat market in Menomonie, are natives of Dunn County. both having been born at North Menomonie, George S. in Sept. 14, 1898, and Herman F. on Jan. 28, 1902. They are the sons of Sebastian and Louise (Erhhard) Schneider, the former of whom established the business which the sons are now conducting. George S. Sneider was educated in the common and high schools and learned the butcher's trade under his father, for whom he worked until 1921, at which time Sebastian Schneider turned the business over to his sons. Herman F. Schneider was given an education similar to that of his brother, being graduated from the high school with the class of 1920. At the age of 17 he became his father's assistant, and since the date given above when the father turned the business over to the sons, he has been his brother's partner. Their market is located at 520 Main Street and is a clean, sanitary and attractive place of meat supply, largely patronized by appreciative customers.

Arthur M. Berg, for four years a member of the firm of Berg & Anderson, proprietors of a garage, and automobile dealers, Menomonie, was born in this city, Aug. 27, 1894, son of Ole A. and Anna M. (Tellefson) Berg. The parents came to the United States from Norway in 1884, settling first at Rochester, Minn., where they made their home for a year. Then in 1885 they came to Menomonie, Wis., Ole E. Berg entering the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, for whom he worked for some years. Subsequently he engaged in business for himself. He died March 27, 1923 being survived by his wife, who is still living. They had four children, the first born of whom died in infancy. The others were: Olga, now Mrs. Odd Ellwsen of Chicago; Arthur M., of Menomonie; and Clarence, who is connected with the Menomonie postal service. Arthur M. Berg acquired his education in the public schools of Meromonie, and after leaving the high school went to work in the Menomonie garage, where he remained until 1917. Then for a short period he was in business for himself. On May 13, 1918, he enlisted in the United States' service, becoming a member of the First Provisional Ordinance, with headquarters at Raritan Arsenal, Metuchen, N. J., and subsequently did convoy work on the road until his discharge in February, 1919, at Raritan, with the rank of sergeant of ordinance. He then returned to Menomonie and until August, 1919, was employed in Liddy garage. He now once more engaged in business on his own account, in partnership with Otto Anderson, under the firm name of Berg & Anderson, and this concern did a successful business. They were located at the corner of Main and Eight streets, where they had a garage with a capacity of 40 cars, a large sales and show room, with an office in front and a repair department in the rear. The firm employed six mechanics, one salesman and a bookkeeper. They handled the Paige and Jewett Automobiles and were widely known for their expert repair work, having a fully equipped shop, and they also handled all kinds of auto accessories. In addition they conducted a battery service station and handled the Universal batteries and corduroy cord tires. On May 5, 1924, their garage was totally destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $11,000, which was partly covered by insurance. The firm then went out of business. Mr. Berg since that time has continued to handle the Paige, Jewett, Chevrolet, Hudson and Essex cars and is doing a finebusiness. He is now located at the corner of Main and Fifth streets, and has an office in the same building with the Menomonie Oil Co. Mr. Berg was married March 8, 1917, to Ruth Gridley, who was born at Wauwatonna, Wis., April 4, 1895. They have two children: Melvin, born Jan. 22, 1920, and Donald G., born July 18, 1922.

Mrs. Lina Baker Bliss, a resident of Menomonie having many friends and acquaintances, and whose comfortable home is at No. 1909 Broadway, was born on the Moore farm in the town of Tainter, Dunn County, Wis., Aug. 31, 1884, daughter of Frank M. and Rispa (Smith) Baker. The parents, elsewhere more fully mentioned in this volume, were pioneers of this county. The subject of this sketch acquired her elementary education in the common schools and then entered the high school at Rice Lake, Barron County, Wis., from which she was graduated with the class of 1902. She then became a teacher, and was thus engaged for nine years in Barron and Dunn counties. For a similar period of nine years she had charge of the telephone office in Downsville and for one year conducted the Downsville Hotel. In the fall of 1919 she entered the Kraft State Bank in Menomonie, where she was employed until the fall of 1923 as assistant cashier and bookkeeper. She is a member of the organization known as the Beavers' Reserve Fund Fraternity and also of the Rebeckah Lodge (I. O. O. F.) in Downsville. On Aug. 19, 1918, she was married to Howard C. Bliss, a mason and barber. In 1921 they built their present residence, a nice semi-bungalow at 1909 Broadway. By a former marriage Mrs. Bliss has a daughter, Margaret Crosby, who is now a pupil in the Menomonie High School.

Edward H. Grannis, M. D., who was recognized for many years as one of the leading physicians of northwestern Wisconsin, who was dean of the medical profession of Dunn County, and one of the best known military surgeons in the state, was born in Morrisville, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1854. In 1875 he was graduated from Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, and for two years subsequently practiced his profession in Chatfield, Minn. It was in 1877 that he came to Menomonie, where he practiced until a few days of his death, which took place Oct. 14, 1916. Dr. Grannis was both successful in his profession and personally popular. He was kindly and genial in disposition and often treated patients without hope of pecuniary reward, knowing that they were unable to pay him. In addition to his ability as a physician he was a skilled surgeon, and he served for many years in the Wisconsin National Guard, perhaps longer than any other surgeon of his day, in 1913 being relieved and placed upon the retired list upon his own application on account of physical disability. In announcing the order, the then adjutant-general, Orlando Holway, thus referred to Dr. Grannis's military record: "Colonel Grannis has rendered long and efficient service, both in peace and war. He enlisted in the Ludington Guards, later Company H, Third Infantry, Wisconsin National Guard, Sept. 1, 1878. He was commissioned captain, Oct. 21, 1885 and was transferred to the medical department as captain and assistant surgeon Feb. 5, 1898 and was assigned to the Third Infantry. He was discharged May 11, 1898 to be mustered into the United States service, War with Spain, being commissioned as one of the medical officers assigned to the Third Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry and was present with the command in the Porto Rican campaign. On the reorganization of the Wisconsin National Guard he was commissioned major and surgeon, Third Infantry, with rank from June 15, 1899 and was commissioned colonel and surgeon general Feb. 5, 1913. The service rendered by Colonel Grannis has been valuable and efficient, and he leaves the service with the sincere resp. ct and love of all." Doctor Grannis has served as surgeon-general of the Wisconsin state militia for two years. He always took a keen interest in military affairs and liked to visit Camp Douglas while the troops were there for their yearly encampment in summer, and he did this even after he had retired. He was always a welcome visitor at the Company H armory. He was moreover a good shot; he had been a member of the state rifle team, had won the title of "Distinguished Marskman" in the national guard, and also the revolver presented by Gen. Charles King for the best score with that weapon. The regard in which he was held by his fellow officers was shown in the presentation by them of a beautiful silver cup inscribed as follows: "Presented by Col. Orlando Holway and the officers of the Third Infantry, W. N. G., to Major Edward H. Grannis in recognition of efficient service as surgeon in the W. N. G. for one-third of a century, Sept. 1, 1878 to Jan. 1, 1912. Dr. Grannis served for many years as president of the Dunn-Pepin County Medical Society and was also president of the Tenth District Medical Society, and his ability was so generally recognized by the other members of his profession that he was often consulted by most if not all of them. Dr. Grannis was married in 1876 to Gertrude A. Van Vliet, a woman of noble qualities who preceded him to the grave by two years. They had two children: Marguerite, now Mrs. J. P. O'Malley of Bayfield, Wis.; and Irving Van Vliet, a physician of Menomonie.

Irving Van Vliet Grannis, M. D., a well established physician and surgeon of Menomonie, who saw nearly two years' military service in the strenuous times during the war with Germany and her allies, is a native of this city, having been born here July 30, 1882, son of Dr. Edward H. and Gertrude A. (Van Vliet) Grannis. As a youth he attended the grade and high schools of Menomonie and in 1898 entered the University of Wisconsin, where he received his degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1912. Then as a medical student at Harvard University he qualified himself for his future profession and as a member of the class of 1914 was graduated with the degree of M. D. After his return to Menomonie he became associated in medical and surgical practice with his father, Dr. Edward H. Grannis, an association that was continued until the father's death in October, 1916, after which the subject of this sketch practiced alone until August, 1917. It was then that he entered into the United States' military service, being assigned the rank of first lieutenant. Sent to Fort Riley, Kans., he there attended the medical officers' training camp, and remained until he was transferred to the 309th Cavalry and stationed at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, where he remained six months. On May 31, 1918, he was promoted to the rank of captain, and on October 29, the same year to that of major and transferred to Eagle Pass, Texas, attached to the Third U. S. Infantry. There he remained five months, being in command of the base hospital during the "flu" epidemic. At the end of that time he was again transferred, this time to Fort Ringgold, Texas, attached to the Fourth U. S. Calvalry, which was his station until July 5, 1919, when he received his discharge. Dr. Grannis then returned to Menomonie and since Aug. 1, 1919, has been associated with the Menomonie Clinic, having charge of the eye, ear, nose and throat department. He is popular with the members of his profession and also with the citizens of Menomonie generally, having a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He is a member of the Eau Claire and Associated Counties Society, the Wisconsin State Medical Society, the Ameri-can Medical Association, the Menomonie Rotary Club, and in the Masonic order he has risen as high as the commandery. He was married Feb. 16, 1915, in St. Johns, New Brunswick, to Miss Sybil Craigie. He and his wife attend the Congregational Church.

Andrew L. Sahlie, now living retired in Wheeler, is one of the sturdy pioneers of Norwegian birth who have been potent factors not only in the building up of Dunn County, but also in the development of many others throughout the great North-Some of these wealth-creators and civilizers have passed away, exhausted by west their many years of toil and privation, but others, like Mr. Sahlie, are still with us and taking restful ease after a long and laborious carreer. Andrew L. Sahlie was born at Sahlie, near Hammer, Norway, on April 28, 1837, son of Lars and Anna (Erickson) Sahlie, who were both natives of that part of Norway, and who finally died there. Andrew L. attended school and subsequently worked at various occupations until he came to the United States in 1868. He was six weeks crossing the ocean in a sailing vessel, and on his arrival in this country came west to La Crosse, Wis., where he found employment in sawmills. In September, 1874, he came to Dunn County and took an 80-acre homestead in the town of Sherman. Though settlers had come into the county 20 years or more before this time, it was still but very thinly settled, except where lumbering operations were being carried Mr. Sahlie's 80 acres consisted of cut-over land, on which there was the usual amount of brush and stumps. Making a small clearing, he erected a log house and barn and started to develop the land, without any machinery except a few hand tools. The succeeding years were full of hard work, but the star of hope shed its benignant beams upon his little farm, which improved in appearance from year to year and after a while began to increase in size, for, as soon as he was able he bought more land, and continued to do so at interval until he had 350 acres. He also replaced the original log building with larger ones of frame construction, and in time found himself the owner of a very good farm, and prosperous and respected. It was a worthy prize but well earned. Having continued agricultural operations until 1913, Mr. Sahlie retired from active work, moving to the village of Wheeler, where he bought a piece of land and built a fine residence. Though now 87 years old, he is well preserved and able-bodied. He was first married in Norway in 1861 to Agnes Johnson, who died in 1865, leaving one child, Louis, who is now a retired farmer in Wheeler. Mr. Sahlie was married secondly at La Crosse, to Carrie Johnson who died March 18, 1915. Of the second union five children were born, August, John, Clara, Julia and Charlie, of whom the following is a further record. August, who married Anna Swanson, is in the employ of the O. & N. Lumber Co. at Wheeler, and he and his family reside with his father, the other members being two children, Edna and Evelyn. John, who also lives with his father, is in the mercantile business in the village. Clara is the wife of Ole Tuving, a farmer in the town of Hay River, and has six children; Albert, Harold, Clarence, Fern, Olof and Myrtle. Julia is the wife of Andrew O. Lien, a real estate dealer of Menomonie, Wis., and her children are Oliver, Sylvia, Victor, Vincent and Arnold, Victor and Vincent being twins. Charlie A. and John own and operate "The Wheeler Store," Charlie married May Noble, and has two children, Hannah and Hugh. The religious faith of the family is that of the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

Ole J. Running, in his day a prominent representative of one of the best known families in Dunn County, was born in Trondhjem, Norway, Dec. 8, 1848. He was educated in his native land and there learned the tailor's trade. It was in 1871 that he came to the United States, locating at Menomonie, Wis., and entering the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company as tailor, which trade he continued to follow until 1884. On April 20, 1875, he was united in marriage to Margaret Wagnild, who was born in Sockendalen, Norway, June 30, 1855, and came to this country with her parents, Anders and Ingri (Swenson) Wagnild, in 1868, settling with them on a farm in the town of Dunn. In 1884 Mr. Running bought his father-in-laws' farm of 80 acres in Section 32, town of Dunn, and entered upon a new career as a farmer. He was well adapted to the work, being industrious and persevering, and he greatly improved the place, breaking more of the land and building or rebuilding according to his necessities or to keep up with the times. He also bought another tract adjoining of 83 acres, which gave him a farm of 183 acres, and he continued to improve the entire property, in 1904 erecting a fine residence. Here he continued to reside until his death in March, 1892. He and his wife were the parents of eight children, George A., Alfred S., Carl O., Inga M., Sever E., Caroline, Ole (first), and Ole R., of whom Ole (first) died in infancy. George A., who was born Jan. 10, 1877 in Menomonie, is a carpenter by trade, single, and resides with his mother on the home farm. Alfred S., born in Menomonie, Feb. 27, 1879, is now a Lutheran minister located at Sand Point, Ida. He married Julia Olson and has five children: Orville, Cyrus, Arnold, Joseph and David. Carl O., born March 28, 1881, and who is now with the Lavelle Cream Separator Co. at Fargo, N. D., married Clara Kncope and has four children: Viola, Albert, Charles and Clinton, the two last mentic led being twins. Inga M., born Aug. 26, 1883, died Oct. 18, 1917. Sever E., born March 5, 1885, is separately mentioned in this volume. Caroline, born June 28, 1888, is the wife of Fred B. Rasmussen of Long Beach, Calif., and has one child, Erma Marie. Ole R., born May 17, 1892, is unmarried and resides on the home farm, which he is conducting for his mother, it having been previously managed after the father's death by the son, George A. The family are members of the Elk Creek Lutheran Church.

Anders Wagnild, an early settler in the town of Dunn, was born in Sokendalen, Norway, in 1823. He was there married to Ingri Swenson, a native of the same place, and in 1868 they came to America and to Dunn County, Wisconsin, Mr. Wagnild buying a homestead right to 80 acres in Section 32, town of Dunn, on which no clearing or building had been done. For their first primitive dwelling on the place Mr. Wagnild struck out quite an idea. Without taking time at first to build a regular house, either log or frame, he searched in the woods until he found four trees of a sufficient distant apart, and at the proper distance, so that they would answer the purpose of posts and studdings. He then made his walls by nailing siding to the trees and then added a thatched roof to complete his house, and this the family inhabited until he could find the time to put up a log building. It was a somewhat unsteady dwelling, as when the wind blew it swayed from side to side, but it answered the purpose and was picturesque and romantic. In time the Wagnilds developed a good farm, with all necessary buildings, and became reasonably comfortable and prosperous. It is worthy of mention that in later years when looking up the patent or abstract of this farm property, it was discovered that no mortgage had ever been placed on it, a somewhat unusual circumstance. The old folks lived there many years, Mrs. Ingri Wagnild passing away first, in 1894, and Anders Wagnild in 1917, he surviving her about 23 years.

Sever E. Running, of the firm of Cole & Running, proprietors of the Menomonie Dye House, is one of the active and successful business men of the city. He was born on his father's farm in the town of Dunn, this county, March 5, 1885, son of Ole I. and Maret (Wagnild) Running. As a boy he attended District School No. 8, town of Dunn, and subsequently took a course in the business college at La Crosse, Wis. He then learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for four years, for ten years after that being with the Teare Clothing Co. of Menomonie as salesman. In June, 1919, with Nels T. Cole as partner, he purchased the Menomonie Dye House at No. 617 Broadway, which they have since continued to operate, doing a large business in dry cleaning, pressing and repairing, and also making suits to order, taking pride in turning out the highest quality of work. They collect and deliver from and to any part of the city. Mr. Running was married July 7, 1911, to Olga Ray, who was born in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County, March 31, 1889, daughter of Ole and Margaret (Schroeder) Ray. Of this union two children have been born: Margaret Doris, in August, 1915, and Norman Anton, on June 13, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Running have a pleasant home on Twelfth Street in the Lakeview district and they are blessed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. They and their children are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

Ole Nesseth, county treasurer of Dunn County, was born in Norway, Nov. 11, 1855, son of Ole and Carrie (Larsen) Nesseth. In 1869 the parents with their family emigrated to Quebec, Canada, whence they went directly to Vernon County, Wisconsin. There he did farm work for two years, then in 1871 went to Polk County, where he and his wife took a homestead of 80 acres of wild land, where they made their permanent home, until their death. They had four children: Peter, deceased; Randine, now Mrs. Ole Johnson of Polk County, Wis.; Louis, who is operating the old homestead in Polk County; and Ole, subject of this sketch. Ole Nesseth in his boyhood attended district school at Bloomingdale, Vernon County, after which for a short time he was engaged in farm work. In the spring of 1873 he came to Cedar Falls, Dunn County, where until July that year he worked in the shingle mills as a packer. Then coming to Menomonie, he went to work for A. H. Johnson in his general store and was in his employ subsequently for nearly 30 years, or until 1902, during the last ten years of that time being manager of the store. Then in the fall of 1902 he took the position of traveling salesman for the Gowan, Pevton-Twoy Grocery Co. of Duluth. In that position, however, he remained only six months, as he had to resign because of ill health. In the spring of 1904 he established himself in the grocery business in the Lang block on Main Street, and was located there until March, 1906, when he sold out. In July, that year, he entered the Bank of Menomonie as bookkeeper, and not long afterward was appointed cashier, in which position he remained with that institution until his resignation on Sept. 1, 1919. He then went to Eau Galle, where for nearly two years he resided with his son Oliver. In September, 1921 Mr. Nesseth returned to Menomonie and until December of the following year was bookkeeper for the Fuller Auto Co. Elected county treasurer in November, 1922, he entered upon the duties of that office on Jan. 1, 1923 and is still serving in it. That he should have been elected to an office of such responsibility is ample evidence of the esteem and confidence in which he is held by his fellow citizens, who judged him in view of his record, extending back over a period of half a century in this county. Mr. Nesseth was married Dec. 12, 1879, in Menomonie to Nettie Everson, daughter of Ole and Annette (Christianson) Everson. Her parents were natives of Norway who came to the United States in 1876, settling in Menomonie, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Nesseth, who proved herself a good wife and mother, after a happy married life of 39 years, was called by death Dec. 20, 1918. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Nesseth were as follows: Anna, who now keeps house for father; Oliver, who resides in Eau Galle, this county; Ebba, who is Mrs. Anton Hogstad Jr. of Brookings, S. D.; Richard, who died in 1917; Minda, now Mrs. J. W. Dockar residing with her father; and Agnes, who is Mrs. A. H. Bunker of Hastings, Nebr. Mr. Nesseth and those of his children residing here are members of Our Saviour's Norwegian Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

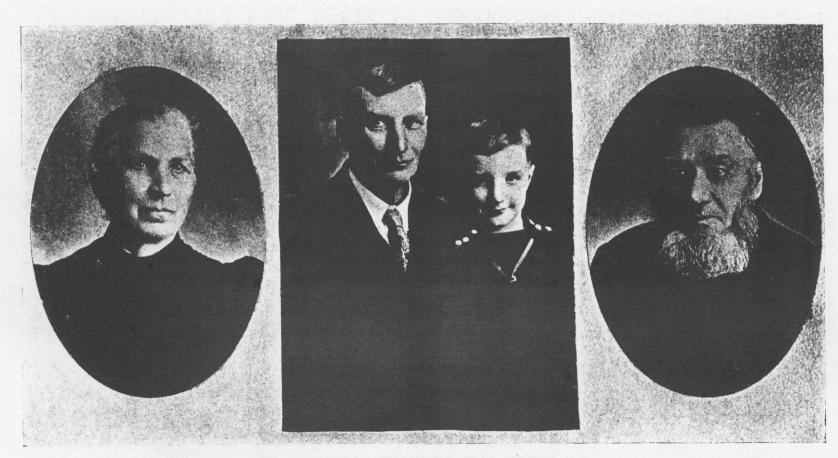

George Whinnery, founder of a well known family in Dunn County, but now deceased, was born in Ohio, Feb. 22, 1821, son of William and Margery (Carl) Whinnery. He was educated in his native state and at an early day came west, settling in Iowa, whence he came to Dunn County, Wis., but soon afterwards he returned to Iowa, where he and the family remained until October 12, 1857. They then became permanent residents of Dunn County and were prominent farmers in the town of Dunn, Mr. Whinnery buying a part of his land from the government and a part from the railroad company. He was married Oct. 12, 1851, to Mary Pratt, who was born at Clonis, Ireland, Oct. 14, 1831, and died on the farm at Downsville in April, 1872, leaving ten children, as follows: Albert P., William, Eldon C., George J., Charles N., Isaac Franklin, Ella M., Walter, Alice and Arthur M. For his second wife Mr. Whinnery married Pamelia Palmeter of Menomonie, who was born in Chatauqua County, New York. Mr. Whinnery died June 25, 1903, and Mrs. Pamelia Whinnery ,April 18, 1893.

Isaac Franklin Whinnery, better known as "Frank" Whinnery, a well known farmer and respected citizen of the town of Dunn, proprietor of Elm Ioka Stock Farm, was born in this town, April 5, 1864, son of George and Mary (Pratt) Whinnery. As a boy he attended the school of his district and when old enought began to help his father on the home farm, working for him until he was 30 years old. Then he began farming for himself, on March 15, 1894, buying 120 acres of land in Section 24, town of Dunn, the tract being an improved farm. He has since carried the improvements much farther, most of the present buildings having been erected Among them is a basement barn of 36x72 feet in ground plan and with the by him. Another is a silo of 12x50 feet, and he has also built a Lowden patent equipment. garage and a hen house, and has remodeled and partly rebuilt his residence, besides drilling a well 147 feet deep and erecting over it a windmill, these constituting a practical home waterworks system supplying running water for house, barn and yards. In addition to making these and other improvements, Mr. Whinnery has bought an additional tract of land, of 50 acres in Section 29, on which are beautiful camping grounds and a fine spring, used in summer by tourist or picnic parties. He keeps a fine herd of grade Guernsey cattle, with a pure bred sire, and pays close attention to dairying, in addition to mixed farming. His hogs are of the Poland-China variety. He is widely recognized as a thoroughly capable farmer, and is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and in the Downsville Telephone Company. Mr. Whinnery was married July 3, 1893 to Kate Kannel, who was born at Maiden Rock, Pierce County, Wis., Sept. 3, 1871, daughter of Charles Frank and Frances (Inglie) Kannel. Both her parents are now deceased; her father was born June 3, 1829 and her mother August 31, 1833. The father passed away May 11, 1882, and the mother Sept. 9, 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Whinnery have five children: Hugh Franklin, born June 27, 1894, residing on the home farm; Mabel Lucille, born March 23, 1896, who is the wife of William Manske of Fall City, Dunn County, and has one child, Galen Eugene; Harold Vernon, born Sept. 27, 1900, on the home farm; Ella Frances, born Dec. 25, 1903, and Kenneth Delno, born May 1, 1910, both of whom are at home. Mr. Whinnery is affiliated fraternally with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Beavers, Mrs. Whinnery belonging to the Beaver Queens.

Fred Scheibe, who was for many years engaged in farming in the town of Elk Mound, but is now retired, is a native of Dunn County, having been born on a farm in Section 35, town of Elk Mound, on Jan. 22, 1862, son of Frank and Martha Elizabeth (Ausman) Scheibe. He was reared on the home farm and educated in the district school. Until 1885 he was engaged in assisting his father and then went to Washington, where he operated a farm and was engaged in agricultural labor for seven years. In 1892 he returned home and took charge of the home farm, subsequently caring for his parents until their death. After continuing his agricultural operations here until 1919, he sold the farm to his brother-in-law, Otto Drummer, but still resides on it. He has erected his third set of buildings on the place, each marking a decided advance over the preceding set, and the present one being thoroughly modern in type, the residence being electrically lighted. He has also added to the farm 80 acres of land in Section 1, town of Spring Brook, and the farm

MR. AND MRS. FRANK SCHEIBE, FRED SCHEIBE AND MASTER FRANK SCHEIBE DUMMER is well stocked with grade cattle. Mr. Scheibe is a stockholder in the Elk Mound Co-operative Creamery, and is a man of substance and influence in his community. He is a member of the Evangelical Church at Elk Mound.

Frank Scheibe was born in Germany, Feb. 3, 1827. While still a young man he emigrated to America and in 1857 was married in the state of Pennsylvania to Martha Elizabeth Ausman, and in the following year, 1858, they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, where the latter already had a brother living, John Ausman. (See the Ausman biographies). On his arrival Frank Scheibe bought 160 acres of wild land in Section 25, town of Elk Mound and began the building of a farm. It was hard work and the times also were hard, so much so, in fact, that Mr. Scheibe was forced to sell the north "80" of his farm to obtain money for the support of his large family. In common with all the pioneers, he started with log buildings, but in course others of modern construction took their place and prosperity finally crowned his efforts. He died Aug. 28, 1901. His wife, in maidenhood Martha Elizabeth Ausman, as before mentioned was born at Rohrda, province of Aschwege, Germany, on June 19, 1842, and came to America with her parents when a little girl, the family settling in Forest County, Pennsylvania. Her marriage to Mr. Scheibe has been already narrated. She was converted in 1862 and united with the Evangelical Association, and in this church she remained, a faithful and devoted christian until she was called to the heavenly mansions, her death taking place at her home in Elk Mound on August 13, 1907. In addition to her immediate family of surviving children, she left two brothers and a host of other relatives and friends. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Scheibe, 14 in number, were as follows: Elizabeth, who married Charlie Lange, of which union there are three children, Myrtha, Raymond and Dorothy; Henry, of Asotin County, Washington, who married Lizzie Huber and has nine children, Raymond, Gussie, Clara Belle, Dewey, Sidney, Henrietta, Wilbur, Glenn and Lawrence; Nicholas, now deceased, who married Julia Schick and left five children, Ella, Roy, Henry, Frank and Laura; Fred, of Elk Mound, Dunn County; George, of Eau Claire, Wis., who married Caroline Bushendorf and has four children, Victor, Leonard, Ervin and Mildred; John, of Tacoma, Wash., who married Jennie Alberts; Adolph, who was drowned in the Chippewa River; Samuel, of Cloquet, Minn., who married Hattie Crain, and has five children, Helen, Clarence, Gladys, Eleanor and Harold; William, deceased; Anna, now Mrs. J. D. McGilvray of Cloquet, Minn., whose children are Earl, Thelma, Frank, Dorothy, Anna Belle and Ray; Emma, who is the wife of Otto Dummer of Elk Mound and has one child, Frank Scheibe; Gust, now in Oregon, who married Belle Crosby; Edith, deceased; and Clara, wife of Herman Bentz of Albertville, Chippewa County, Wis.

Solomon S. Cronk, who settled in the town of Dunn nearly half a century ago and laid the foundations of a home, and of a family, members of which have taken a more or less prominent part in the upbuilding of the county, was born in the state of New York, July 5, 1818. He subsequently went to Canada, and was married at Trenton, Ontario, Oct. 3, 1843, to Hannah Wessells, who was a native of that place, born July 25, 1823. In March, 1866, they settled in Syene, Dane County, Wis., on a farm and there remained until 1876. Then they came to Dunn County and engaged in farming in the town of Dunn, practically starting all over again, as they bought 80 acres of land that was mostly wild, only a small clearing having been made, on which stood a shanty. In the latter they made their home until they were able to build a more commodious and convenient house. During the early years, while the father was developing the land, aided by the elder boys, many hardships were experienced such as are inseparable from pioneer life, but they grew less in time as the farm became more highly developed, as modern machinery was introduced, and roads were built and supplies were more easily procured. The family made their home for some time in the shanty already mentioned, but Mr. Cronk later built a larger and more convenient dwelling. He also acquired 40 acres more land and erected a barn 26x56 feet in ground plan, with 16-foot posts, which was then considered large. He cultivated his farm of 120 acres success-fully until his death on Oct. 21, 1885. His wife Hannah died Jan. 25, 1897. They were the parents of ten children, only one of whom died young, the record in brief being as follows: Araminta V., born Aug. 25, 1844, who became the wife of E. H. Steves and died June 11, 1898; Calista A., born Oct. 17, 1845, who married David Kirschner and died July 19, 1915; John J., (better known as "Jeff"), born May 28, 1848, who died April 19, 1898, and whose wife in maidenhood was Jennie Schneider of Hudson, Wis.; William W., born Oct. 29, 1849, who married Mrs. Mary E. Krause (nee Lynch) and died Jan. 2, 1907; David Madison, born Nov. 9, 1851, now residing in Menomonie, who married Mary E. Doughty; Sylvester W., born Jan. 22, 1854, who married Eliza Teare, and died July 5, 1920; Sarah M., born Dec. 23, 1855, who became the wife of Edgar M. Drake and died March 13, 1907; Wilmott W., born Nov. 14, 1857, who died unmarried July 12, 1919; Reuben W., born Jan. 19, 1860, who married Elizabeth Diedrich and is now residing in Menomonie; and George A., born Nov. 12, 1865, who died March 27, at the age of one year four and a half months. Mr. and Mrs. Solomon S. Cronk were members and active supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Reuben W. Cronk, now living retired in Menomonie after a successful career as farmer and business man, was born in Belleville, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 19, 1860, son of Solomon S. and Hannah (Wessells) Cronk, who brought him to the States and to Wisconsin when six years old and to Dunn County when 16 years old. He acquired his early education in the rural schools, later spent six months in the River Falls Normal School, and then took a business course in the Curtis Business College The next three years of his life were spent in the employ of in Minneapolis. Winston Brothers, railroad contractors, at Minneapolis. At the end of that time, returning to the home farm, Mr. Cronk took charge of it and was its subsequent manager until the death of his mother. He then bought the interests of the other heirs, becoming the sole owner, and greatly improved it, rebuilding most of the buildings and clearing most of the unimproved land. He also increased its area by buying another 40-acre tract. Soon after acquiring the farm, however, he was appointed under-sheriff and moved to Menomonie, where he and his family resided for two years. At the end of that time he returned to the farm, which he operated for six years. He then rented it and again took up his residence in Menomonie, and with Oscar Massee, under the firm name of Cronk and Massee, was engaged in the farm machinery business for six years, at the end of which time they sold out. Since then Mr. Cronk has been practically retired except that for the past nine years he has been adjuster for the Dunn County Farmers Insurance Company, and is still serving as such. In addition to this public service as under-sheriff, he was for several terms a member of the county board. He is a member of the Masonic order and of the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Cronk was married Jan. 8, 1896, to Elizabeth Diedrich, who was born in Menomonie, March 23, 1875, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Soechtig) Diedrich. Her parents came to Dunn County in 1866 and located in Menomonie, where the father was in the harness business for many years. To Mr. and Mrs. Reuben W. Cronk five children have been born: Archie W., Feb. 2, 1897; Charles F., Sept. 13, 1899; Angie E., 14, 1901; Lucille, Jan. 10, 1904; and R. Jefferson, March 20, 1920. Lucille died at the age of two years and eight days on Jan. 18, 1906. Archie W., who is a traveling salesman for the P. P. Lorillard Tobacco Co., married Lena Zelmer; they reside in Menomonie and have two children, Betty Jane and Walton. Charles F., is now a Federal board student under Dr. Murphy at his laboratories in Chicago. He married Gracine Jones. On March 26, 1917, he enlisted in Menomonie in what was then Company H, Third Wisconsin Infantry. About the sixth of April the company was sent to Superior for guard duty in that city. In May 1917, they left for Camp Douglas, remaining there about two weeks and then going to Camp McArthur at Waco, Texas. To quote his own words from this point, he says: "At this camp we were enlisted to full war strength and changed to Co. H., 128th Infantry, 32d We drilled all the following days and left for Camp Merritt, Hoboken, Division. N. J., the first part of January, 1918. We sailed about two weeks later for France on the Covington, landing at Brest. We were ordered inland shortly after landing and out company was split up. I was transferred at that time to Co. I, First Division, and found myself on the fighting front March 26, 1918 at Mount Sec sector, the Toul front. We left this sector April 1st and moved to the Somme front, Picardy sector, moving in the front lines in April. On the morning of May 28, 1918, we made our memorable attempt at Cantigny. During this first offensive battle I went over the top four times. From here our remaining troopers moved to Mount Didier, Noyon front, to help out the French. This was called a defensive battle. We were in support of the "French" Blue Devils. Next we moved back to Cantigny to hold said town until we were relieved. During this time I was slightly wounded. This was in June, 1918. Next we moved to the Marne front for the great Marne for the great Marne battle called the second battle of the Marne. I went over the top on the morning of July 18 and over again on the same day late in that afternoon, and over the top again on the morning of the 19th, at which time I was seriously wounded and consequently finished my war career. I was in Base Hospital 109 Pont du Audimore, France, in Base 54 and Base 86 at Meves, France, until May, 1919. We sailed from St. Nazaire, France, on a hospital boat for home, landing at Newport News, Virginia. From here I was sent to a hospital in Camp Grant and received my discharge July 1, 1919. In all I went over the top seven times. Our division was cited many times for bravery, as was our regiment. I received along with the regiment the French Forager or Croix de Guerre, and minor regimental citations for different offensives. Since that time I have been recuperating." Of the other children of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Cronk, Angie E., a graduate of the Stout Institute, class of 1923, is now a dietician in the Fifth Avenue Hospital, New York City. R. Jefferson, the youngest, is a pupil in the Menomonie High School. The family home is a fine modern residence at No. 1008 Eighth Street, Menomonie.

D. Madison Cronk, a member of a well known Dunn County family, now living retired in Menomonie after a successful career in agriculture, was born in Trenton, Ontario, Canada, Nov. 9, 1851, son of Solomon S. and Hannah (Wessels) Cronk. He was 15 years old when he came to the States in 1866, and in 1869 he came to the Louisville Settlement where he attended school for a year, after which for four years he worked out at farm labor. In 1874 he bought 100 acres of land in the town of Dunn and in the same settlement. There was a small clearing and a shack had been built on it, but aside from this the land was wild, and young Cronk's task was accordingly that of a pioneer. He began to develop a farm and built a home at the same time, for early in that year-on Feb. 18, 1874-he had been married at Maxville, Buffalo County, Wis., to Mary E. Doughty, who was born in Bloomington, Ills., Aug. 5, 1854, daughter of the Rev. Edward and Phoebe (Smith) Doughty, who will be further mentioned in this volume. His wife proved not only a loving companion but a good helpmate and by working together they made as good progress as could have been expected. In 1882, eight years after his start, he bought an additional 40-acre tract, which adjoined his farm. It was partly cleared and a house had been started on it but not finished. Mr. Cronk completed the house and later put up a good basement barn of 40 by 56 feet in ground plan, and at various times a number of other buildings, including a silo, machine-sheds, milk house, hog house, granary and garage, and by the purchase of more land he increased the area of his farm to 300 acres. He made a close study of modern farming and dairying, managing his place on scientific principles, so far as they were practical and in accord with his resources. There he farmed successfully until 1918, when, on account of poor health, he retired, in February, that year, turning over the management of the farm to his son Edward. Having done so, he and his wife took up their residence in the city of Menomonie, where he purchased their present residence at 914 Eighth Street. In addition to his farming activities, Mr. Cronk for many years took a personal interest and helpful part in the affairs of local government. He served as town treasurer, and at different times as a member of the town board, and was either clerk or treasurer of the school board of his district for over 25 years. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Menomonie and he is now serving on its board of trustees. From time to time their home life was brightened by the coming of children, only one of whom died young, the others

These children were, in the order of birth, Victor D., Phoebe being all now living. Grace, Edward E., Mabel H., Vera A. and Ernest M., of whom the following is a Victor D., born Jan. 5, 1875, was graduated from the law departfurther record. ment of the state university and is now a prominent attorney in Chicago. He married Beatrice Swenson of that city, and has one child, Antoinette M. Phoebe Grace, born June 1, 1877, is now Mrs. A. J. Hunt of Des Moines, Iowa. Edward E., born April 1, 1879, is now the proprietor of the old home farm in the town of Dunn, having become so in 1918. He married Alice Sanders, and has four children, Lawrence E., David Madison, Albert W. and Kenneth F. Mabel H., born Oct. 26, 1888, is the wife of Rev. Samuel W. Keck, a Congregational minister of Watertown, S. D., and is the mother of three children, Lois E., Samuel J. and Eleanor G., the two latter being twins. Vera A., born Jan. 24, 1891, died on Sept. 3, 1902, a tender flower transplanted to the garden of the Lord. Ernest M., born Aug. 8, 1893, is a representative farmer in the town of Dunn. He married Myrtle Sanders and has one child, Bruce V.

Rev. Edward Doughty, father of Mrs. D. Madison Cronk of Menomonie, was born at Far Rockaway, Long Island, N. Y., on March 19, 1807, and on July 12, 1828, was there married to Phoebe Smith, who was a native of the same place, born April 3, 1811. Her father was a Methodist Episcopal minister, for years traveling a circuit in response to his calling. Mr. and Mrs. Doughty came west to Maxwell, Buffalo County, Wis., in 1856, the latter part of their journey being made by steamboat up the Mississippi River to Alma. There they found a formidable obstacle in Beef River, which they were unable to cross until they had constructed a sort of ferry boat, so that the journey from Alma to Maxwell took them a week, though it was only a distance of 12 miles. The duties of a Methodist minister in this region in those early days were almost invariably of a missionary character, and a number of different points where there were congregations, or where services were held, were included in a circuit which the preacher traversed on horseback in all kinds of weath and over the roughest roads or trails. In this way Mr. Doughty visited most of the settlements within a large number of miles from his headquarters and became well known to most of the people, by all of whom he was respected and by many loved and esteemed. In 1863 he helped to build the M. E. parsonage in the Louisville settlement and in it preached his first sermon there. It was there that he died on Aug. 13, 1881. His wife, surviving him a few years, passed away on Feb. 4, 1887. Their example and precept bore good fruit, and though two generations have since grown up they are not yet forgotten. They were the parents of 12 children, Daniel, Elizabeth (first), Elizabeth (second), Henry, Samuel H., William F. John W. And P. Pherberth, Henry, I. Conding W. And P. William E. was a Methodist minister, John W. met his death in the Civil War, being shot in the yard at Libby Prison; and Asa B. also served as a soldier in that war, but survived its dangers and hardships, which now, 60 years afterwards, he can still recollect.

Sylvester Wellington Cronk, former proprietor of Willowbrook Stock Farm in the town of Dunn, and in his day a sturdy representative of the farming interests of this county, was born at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 22, 1854, son of Solomon S. and Hannah (Wessells) Cronk. As a boy of 12 years he accompanied his parents to Dane County. He was educated in the public schools and was later engaged in railroad construction work as foreman of a crew. In 1881 he returned to Dunn County and for three years thereafter he lived on the home farm. In 1884 he began for himself on a rented farm in the town of Dunn, which he conducted for six years. He then bought a farm of 220 acres, largely improved, in the Louisville district, which he finally built up into a fine place with adequate buildings and all necessary equipment. There until 1918 he followed general farming and dairying, keeping pure bred Holstein cattle, and meeting with good success. In the latter part of that time, however, his health began to fail, and in the Mayo Hospital at Rochester, Minn., he underwent four operations. On giving up the farm he had moved to Menomonie, which was his last place of residence. He died in Sacred Heart Hospital, Eau Claire, on July 5, 1920, leaving behind many friends to mourn He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. S. his loss. Wellington Cronk was married Aug. 19, 1884, to Eliza E. Teare, who was born in Kilbourn City, Wis., Oct. 30, 1859, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Teare. She was graduated from the Kilbourn City high school and prior to her marriage was a Mr. and Mrs. Cronk became the parents of four children, who were born teacher. as follows: Sylvester D., July 24, 1890; Elva E., June 14, 1893; Viola J., March 16, 1895; and Wilmott B., March 10, 1898. Wilmott B. is also a graduate of the Dunn County Agricultural School and for four months during the war was a student at the S. A. T. C. school of training in Menomonie. He has taken courses at the Palmer School of Chiropractic. Mrs. Cronk is a member of the auxiliary societies of the M. E. Church; also of the Ladies' Club, the League of Women Voters and the Eastern Star. The family home in Menomonie, of modern construction, is pleasantly located at No. 921 Sixth Street. Mr. Cronk was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, while both he and his wife were members of the Old Settlers' Association. He was also a member of the Dunn County Fair Association and for over 20 years was marshall of the fair grounds.

John Cronk, who for some years has lived retired in the city of Menomonie after a successful career as a Dunn County farmer, was born in Camden, Province of Ontario, Canada, April 15, 1847, son of David and Nancy (Clark) Cronk. Both parents died in Canada. The subject of this sketch attended school in his native province and was reared on a farm there. He was married in Canada in August, 1868, to Sarah M. Coglon, who was born in the township of Loborough, Frontenac County, Province of Ontario, Canada, on Nov. 12, 1846. In the year after their marriage he and his wife came to the States, settling in Des Moines, Iowa, where they remained for a year. From there they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and for a while made their home at Rumsey's Landing, then a busy place on the Chippewa River in the town of Spring Brook, where most of the pioneers who came up the river landed. In 1872 they began their career as pioneer farmers in the town of Spring Brook, buying 160 acres of land which was mostly wild, though it had a log shanty on it, in which they made their home for a number of years. The property was in the name of Mrs. Cronk, as shown by the deed. Mr. Cronk at once began clearing the land, but, probably because he found himself short of funds, in the following year, 1873, he went to Rice Lake, Barron County, where for two years he and his wife conducted the hotel for Knapp, Stout & Co. In 1875 they returned to the farm and for several years thereafter continued to reside in the log house, after which Mr. Cronk erected a good substantial farm residence. He worked hard, developed his land, and put up barns and other buildings as circumstances demanded or would permit, and in course of time he became one of the well-to-do and prominent farmers of the town of Spring Brook. As such he remained until 1915, in which year he and his wife sold the farm and retired, taking up their residence with their son, William A., in Menomonie. Here his wife passed away on August 13, 1923, after 55 years of happy wedlock, during which she proved herself a loving companion and good helpmate. Mr. Cronk owns a good house next door to that of his son, the property, like the farm, having also been in his wife's name. It was purchased soon after they removed to the city and is at No. 403 Eleventh Street. When purchased, the house stood close to the street, but, having moved it back some distance, he has made a good lawn in front, and has also remodeled the house into a modern dwelling. Mr. and Mrs. John Cronk had two children, William A. and Effie T.

William A. Cronk was born in Canada, Sept. 19, 1869, and as a babe accompanied his parents to the state of Iowa. He was still very young when they settled on their farm in Dunn County, but several years after their return from Rice Lake he began to attend the rural school. Later he took up more advanced studies, attending grammar school in Menomonie, and he was finally granted a teacher's grade certificate. For 15 years thereafter he taught rural school and while teaching also did some farming. At the age of 21 he farmed the home place for his father and continued to do so until 1905. After that he operated rented farms for three years, and then became manager for the Frank Drummond farms at Cable, Wis., later managing the Nadeau Bros.' farms at Nadeau, Mich. While there, on Nov. i, 1913, he received an appointment as rural mail carrier attached to the Menomonie post office, and soon took up his duties, beginning as carrier on Route 8 on which he remained for five years. He was then transferred to Route 3, on which he is still serving. He is a member of the M. W. A. and was formerly clerk of the town of Spring Brook. On Sept. 9, 1905, he was married to Grace Farnham of that town, who, however, was born at Millbank, S. D., July 5, 1884, daughter of Romain and Laura M. (Bayard) Farnham. Her parents settled in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County, Wis. in 1896, buying a farm of 80 acres, to which they later added 160 acres more, making a fine farm-when developed-of 240 acres. They remained there until 1909, when they sold the place and left for the far west, first locating in Washington, then in Oregon and later going to Cali-fornia, where they are now living, near Hanford. Their daughter Grace was educated in the public schools of Dunn County, including the normal school, and was subsequently a teacher for two years. Mr. and Mrs. William A. Cronk have a daughter, Marjorie F., who was born Nov. 29, 1908, and is now a pupil in the Menomonie High School.

The second child of Mr. and Mrs. John Cronk, Effie T., was born March 13, 1871. She attended district and summer school, and after receiving a grade certificate, taught for several years. She was married in March, 1893 to Francis T. Louis, and on Dec. 2, 1893, a son, Francis L., was born. The mother passed away on the following day, December 3. The child was reared by his grandparents and allowed good school opportunities. He is now an enterprising young farmer in the town of Spring Brook. He married Georgiana Mars. The Cronk family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Henry Siedenberg, retired farmer, pioneer, and veteran of the Civil War, residing in the town of Elk Mound, was born in Hanover, Germany, Sept. 25, 1834. After attending school for a while, he became a shepherd, which occupation he followed for four and a half years. When about 19 years of age, or in 1853, he emigrated to the United States, landing at New York and proceeding west to Miami County, Ohio, where for three years he was engaged in farm labor. He then resumed his westward progress, locating in Winona, Minn., but there he remained but a short time. Journeying up the river to Read's Landing, opposite the mouth of the Chippewa, he took a keel-boat up that river to Eau Claire, and thence went on to Chippewa Falls, where he was engaged by Tom Randall & Co. to work on the Randall farm, and he was also employed on the dam then under course of construction. With the coming of winter he joined the throng of lumbermen in the woods and was employed there at logging until a particularly deep snow interrupted work, when he returned to Eau Claire. Soon after that he helped to build the canal from Half Moon Lake to the Ball & Smith Lumber Co.'s plant, after which he helped to dig a well in what is now the city of Eau Claire. During the summer months he worked on the river, rafting lumber from Eau Claire to Read's Landing. In September, 1864, Mr. Siedenberg enlisted at Eau Claire for Civil War service, becoming a member of Company B, First Wisconsin Cavalry, and he remained a soldier of the Union until Aug. 19, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. war service was chiefly in Alabama and Georgia, and he was a member of the cavalry squad that effected the capture of Jefferson Davis, president of the Southern Confederacy, when he was endeavoring to escape out of the country, and he received his share of the reward offered by the government for Mr. Davis' capture. After his discharge from the army Mr. Siedenberg returned to Eau Claire, where he found employment at ordinary labor, remaining there until 1867, when he came to Dunn County and engaged in farming, buying 160 acres of wild land in sections 27 and 35, town of Elk Mound. It was an important milestone on his life's journey, as it was not only a total change of occupation, but it was also the time when he began domestic life, as in January, that year, he had been united in marriage, in La Crosse County, Wis., to Sophia Keikenberg, who was like himself a native of Germany, born June 14, 1847, and who had come to America in 1866 with her sister Charlotte, locating in West Salem, La Crosse County, Wis. Mr. Siedenberg built a log house on his land as the first dwelling of himself and wife, and they began home-making under somewhat primitive conditions but with abundant hope for the future. To realize that hope they worked hard, Mr. Siedenberg going into the woods in winter to earn money at logging, and improving his farm in summer as he found opportunity. It was the path followed by most of the pioneers of this region, and in time brought the desired results, though they were slow in coming. When finally he had a good set of buildings and his land mostly cleared and under cultivation, he felt that he had reached the goal and turned over much of the work to his growing sons. He and his wife are still on the farm. They have had a family of eight children, namely: William, born Jan. 9, 1869, now manager of the Farmers' store in Elk Mound; Herman, born Jan. 27, 1871, who is now operating the home farm; Henry, born March 26, 1873, who is farming near Rusk; Frederick, born Jan. 14, 1876, now on the farm; Alfred, born May 29, 1884, who is a dentist in La Crosse; Arthur, born Nov. 11, 1889, who is with his brothers on the farm; Edward, born Nov. 1, 1887, and George. The two last mentioned, Edward and George, are now deceased. As pioneers of Dunn County who spent 54 years in helping to build up its agricultural resources, Mr. and Mrs. Siedenberg made a record that is well worthy of preservation in the county annals.

Charles N. Whinnery, for many years a well known and influential farmer of the town of Dunn, but now living retired in Menomonie, was born on a farm in that town, July 26, 1862, son of George and Mary (Pratt) Whinnery. As a boy he attended school in Downsville and grew to manhood on his parent's farm, on which he lived until he had attained his majority, during that period helping his father to clear and cultivate the land. In 1883 he became a camp cook, an occupation that he followed continuously for 11 years following, for the most part along the Chippewa, Flambeau. Jump and Apple Rivers. In 1894 he went to South Dakota and took a homestead of 160 acres in Cuddington County, which he subsequently proved up and farmed for five years. In 1899 he returned to Dunn County and bought the old farm of his father's consisting of 200 acres in Sections 25 and 26, town of Dunn, which property he proceeded to improve, erecting various new buildings. them were a frame house 28x30 feet, with an addition of 16x28 feet, containing a kitchen and bath-room; a basement barn 30x100 feet, with a silo at one end measuring 14x40 feet; a granary, machine-shed, poultry house, and whatever other buildings were necessary or desirable, all well constructed and conveniently placed and equipped. Mr. Whinnery gave his special attention to dairy farming, and developed a good herd of some 40 or more Holstein cattle, one-half of which were full bloods, and with a pure bred sire at the head. He continued his operations until September, 1921, at which time he retired, renting the farm to his son Eldon and moving to the city of Menomonie, where he bought the residence he now occupies at No. 913 Eighth Street. During his active career in the town of Dunn Mr. Whinnery performed some good public service. He was for two years town assessor, served one term as enumerator, and two terms as a member of the town board of supervisors, and was school clerk of District No. 7 for ten years. He helped to organize the Downsville Co-operative Creamery, of which he has since been a director, and fraternally he is affiliated by membership with the camp of Modern Woodmen of America at Downsville. His active career was one of intelligent industry along lines highly beneficial to the county and was crowned with ample success. Mr. Whinnery was married March 21, 1896, to Elizabeth Lyness, who was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, Oct. 24, 1873. The children of this union are Eldon, Everett and Raymond. The first of these, Eldon, born May 1, 1898, who is agent for the Delco Light Plants, married Faye Randolph. Everett, born Sept. 19, 1900, who is now conducting the home farm, married Mabel Thompson and has one child, Galand. Raymond, born May 27, 1905, is a graduate of the Menomonie High School, class of 1924 and now a student in Lawrence College, at Appleton, Wis. The Whinnery family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Among the solid and effective upbuilders of Dunn County, they occupy a good social position, having a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

John Ausman, one of the notable pioneers of Dunn County, now deceased, was born in Hessen, Germany, Dec. 14, 1830, sor of Henry and Anna M. (Wiegund) Coming to America in 1846, the parents settled at what is now Oil Ausman. City, Pennsylvania, with their seven children-four sons and three daughters; they later came to Dunn County where they spent the remainder of their lives with their children. The children above alluded to were: John, subject of this sketch; Nicholas, who is deceased; Henry, deceased; Fred, deceased; Martha (deceased) who was the wife of Frank Scheibe; Catherine, who married Fred Harley, and Elizabeth, who married Michael Webert, both these daughters having also passed Iohn Ausman was reared in Pennsvlvania, where he attended school. away When about 20 years old he came west to St. Louis and subsequently spent some time along the Mississippi River going as far north as Minneapolis, or St. Anthony's Falls, where there was only a single pitched claim shanty, St. Paul, however, being a flourishing trading-post. Mr. Ausman was employed for a short time at Read's Landing, on the Minnesota bank of the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Chippewa, but in the early 50's came the Chippewa to the site of Eau Claire, the latter place at that time consisting of a few rudely built houses. He took part in building some of the first houses and sawmills in Eau Claire, where he lived during the winter months when not engaged in logging for himself in the forests of northern Wisconsin, or for the Ingraham-Kennedy Company. In 1859 Mr. Ausman decided to secure a tract of land for himself. Knowing the country westward toward Menomonie, he went on Elk Creek and then, climbing to the top of Elk Mound hill, which commands an extensive view, from that point he chose the spot that was to be his home for the rest of his life. On Feb. 22, 1869, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Schweitzer of Chippewa Falls, who was born in Germany, Nov. 15, 1853, and had come to this country with her parents when three years old, the family settling at Chippewa Falls, where she was reared. She proved a faithful wife and helpmate and a loving mother, and together they built up a model home. Though much younger than her husband, she passed away before him, on May 6, 1919, her loss being deeply mourned. He lived a few years longer, passing away July 3, 1923, at the venerable age of 93 years, seven months and 23 days. All his life he had enjoyed the best of health and his end was quick and peaceful. He had worked the greater part of the day among the trees and scenery along Elk Creek. which he loved, and had returned home about 3 o'clock in the afternoon apparently in his usual health. At 4 o'clock he retired to his bed, where a few moments later he was found dead by a member of his family, death having been due to heart failure. Thus passed away one of the few pioneers who have lived to see this part of the country transformed from a wilderness to its present condition. He had seen the march of progress from the ox team to the auto truck and car, and even to the aeroplane, and took a keen interest in the development. Possessed with a good memory, he could entertain his relatives and friends with interesting stories of pioneer days. In early life he took an active part in public affairs in his community, serving on the town and county board and for some years being treasurer of school district No. 5. He also helped to organize the Bank of Elk Mound, in which he was a stocknolder. Mr. and Mrs. John Ausman were blessed with a family of 12 children, of whom five are now living, the record being briefly as follows: John, born, Sept. 13, 1870, died in his 34th year on March 4, 1904; Anna, born April 25, 1872, died Sept. 2, 1873; Julia, born March 14, 1874, is now Mrs. Archie Stallmann of Yates, Mo.; William, born April 2, 1876, died June 16, 1885; Louise, born April 15, 1878, died March 29, 1896; Arthur, born April 17, 1880, died July 1, 1880; Flora, born May 14, 1881, is now living in Los Angeles, Calif.; Elizabeth, born Aug. 9, 1884, is now Mrs. Emil Link of the town of Spring Brook; Milton, born Oct. 13, 1886, is a prominent farmer of the town of Spring Brook; Julius, born Sept. 21, 1888, died Aug. 1, 1916; Esther, born Jan. 5, 1891, is now Mrs. M. R. Owen of Richey, Mont.; and Vincent, born Nov. 19, 1896, died Feb. 13, 1899. Thus all the seven children who are deceased died before either of their parents, and the latter, therefore, had sorrow in this life in parting from their loved ones.

Emil Link, a well known farmer in the town of Spring Brook, was born in this town Feb. 3, 1896, son of Henry and Lena (Nehm) Link. The father, Henry Link, also was born in this town, attended school here, and helped his parents on their farm until he grew to manhood, after which for a number of years he operated different farms in the town of Spring Brook. In 1914 he bought 160 acres in Section 12, a farm that he had conducted for seven years. Selling it in 1921, he moved to Black River Falls, where he resided for one year, moving at the end of that time to St. Paul, where he is now living. He and his wife were the parents of three children: Albert, born Jan. 9, 1892; Ben, June 24, 1893, and Emil, Feb. 3, 1896, as already mentioned. Emil Link was reared and educated in his native town of Spring Brook and remained at home assisting his parents until his marriage, Dec. 22, 1921, to Elizabeth Ausman, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Schweitzer) Ausman. He and his wife are the parents of two children, Irma L. and Kenneth J. The family are affiliated with the M. E. Church in Menomonie.

Milton E. Ausman, a prominent farmer in the town of Spring Brook, a member of a well known family of pioneer associations, was born on the John Ausman farm in Section 11, this town, Oct. 13, 1886, son of John and Elizabeth (Schweitzer) Ausman. He was reared on the home farm and as a boy attended the Rork School, his education being supplemented by a course in a St. Paul high school, where he was graduated with the class of 1908. He then entered Highland Park College in Des Moines, Iowa, where he studied for nearly two years. In 1910 he returned home and took charge of the home farm, a tract of 400 acres, which he operated until 1919. He then purchased the old Schaaf farm of 160 acres in Section 2, town of Spring Brook, and this, with 160 acres in Section 11, which were deeded to him by his father, make him the proprietor of a farm of 320 acres. For several years he has been extensively engaged in dairying, and the raising of beef cattle and hogs, always keeping a large dairy herd, and he has had in his possession as many as 700 head of hogs at one time. Mr. Ausman is now engaged in pea raising and in the present year, 1924, raised 85 tons of shelled peas, equivalent to 200,000 cans. He is a stockholder in the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery and for several years was a stockholder in the Bank of Elk Mound. His fraternal affiliations are with the Masonic Blue Lodge in Menomonie. Mr. Ausman was married Jan. 23, 1919, in Elk Mound, to Anna E. Goetz, daughter of Louis and Era K. (Battenberg) Goetz, and he and his wife are parents of two sons, Erving M. and John L.

Henry William Ausman, a prominent farmer in the town of Spring Brook, the scion of a pioneer family well known throughout Dunn County, further mention of whom may be found in this volume, was born in this town. April 18, 1861, son of Henry and Martha (Sipple) Ausman. He acquired a district school education and remained at home helping his parents until 19 years of age. He then went to the village of Elk Mound to learn the harness maker's trade, working at it there for eight months, after which he returned to the home farm remaining there until 1885. During the next five years he was engaged in working 160 acress belonging to his father in Section 14 of the town of Spring Brook. In 1890 he purchased the farm in Section 14, this town, which he is now operating, successfully carrying on general farming and dairying. He has modernized the farm in various ways, including the remodelling of the buildings. For many years he and his wife made their own butter, which they sold to private customers in Eau Claire. They also raised many chickens, disposing of them in the same manner. Mr. Ausman is a stockholder in the Elk Mound and Eau Claire telephone companies. He has always taken an intelligent interest in the welfare and advancement of the community in which he lives and has lent his aid and influence to every worthy cause. He was married in the town of Elk Mound, March 12, 1885, to Caroline Webert, who was born March 10, 1866, in Cadott, Chippewa County, daughter of George and Catherine (Goetz) Webert, the parents being natives of Germany who came to America in the fall of 1865 and settled in that county. After remaining there a year, however, they came to the town of Elk Mound, Dunn County, and to the Fred Ausman farm, where they resided until 1885. After that they lived with their children during the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Webert, who was born Aug. 18, 1824, was the first to pass away, dving Jan. 31, 1894, in her sixty-ninth year. Mr. Webert, having been born Aug. 25, 1818, was nearly 85 when he died July 11, 1903. They had been the parents of 12 children, namely, Michael, Anna C., Magdalena, Henry, Maria, Conrad, Anna M., Jacob, Elizabeth, Catherine. Anna and Caroline. Of these children the following is a further record: Michael, who was born Nov. 8, 1843, married Elizabeth Ausman on Sept. 19, 1869. He died April 26, 1904 and his wife on Aug. 21, 1920. Anna C., born Dec. 10, 1846. was married on Jan. 21, 1868, to John Haag. Mr. Haag died May 22, 1919 and Mrs. Haag is now residing at Cadott Falls, Chippewa County, Wis. Magdalena, born Aug. 18, 1848, was married April 5, 1876, to Fred Ausman, who died March 10, 1904. Mrs. Fred Ausman is now a resident of Eau Claire. Henry, born in 1850, died in Germany at the age of one year. Maria, born in 1852, died in Germany at the age of six weeks. Conrad, born in 1853, died in Germany at the age of two years, being the third successive child to die in infancy. Anna M., born Jan. 23, 1855, was married on March 31, 1884, to Henry Buschendorf, and is now residing in Chippewa County, Wisconsin. Jacob, born May 23, 1857, married Catherine E. Ausman, March 14, 1878. He died Oct. 4, 1904. Elizabeth, born Aug. 5, 1859, died at the age of 16 Catherine, born Jan. 9, 1862, married John F. Ausman, Jan. 18, years in 1875. 1883, and died Sept. 4, 1923. Anna, born in April, 1864. died at the age of eight vears in 1872. Caroline, born March 10, 1885, and married Henry W. Ausman, March 12, 1885. Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Ausman, who have no children, are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Eau Claire.

Paul L. Vasey, who is actively and successfully engaged in the insurance business in Menomonie, was born in the town of Dunn, Dunn County, March 18, 1895. son of Wesley R. and Fannie (Corkeram) Vasey. As a boy he attended district school in the town of Dunn, subsequently taking a college course at Oskaloosa, Iowa. After that until 1917 he worked for and with his father on the home farm. In February, 1918, he enlisted in the army at St. Paul, and being assigned to the quartermaster's corps on special service, was sent to Camp Meigs at Washington, D. C., where he remained until August. He was then transferred to Hoboken, N. J., where he remained until receiving his discharge April 26, 1919. In May the same year he became associated with S. B. Ingram in the insurance business under the firm name of Ingram, Vasey & Co. They deal in general insurance, Mr. Vasey acting as office manager, and have established themselves as one of the reliable concerns in the city. Mr. Vasey is a member of Hosford Chase Post, No. 32 of the American Legion. He was married July 4, 1917, in the town of Dunn to Lonavern Harshman, whose parents, Charles and Jessie (Larrabee) Harshman, are pioneer residents of the town of Spring Brook. Mr. and Mrs. Vasey are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They are the parents of one child, Orval W., who was born May 13, 1920.

Earl B. Catura, one of the popular young business men of Menomonie, where he is engaged in the land and realty business, was born at Arkansaw, Pepin County, Wis., June 10, 1888, son of B. M. and Mary (Redick) Catura. The father was a native of Canada and the mother of England, of Scotch descent. They settled in Pepin County about 1885, where Mr. Catura, Sr., was largely interested in various lines of business, and in which he continued until his death on June 28, 1912. His wife died in April, 1904. Earl B. Catura attended public school in Arkansaw, Pepin County, and completed a high school course at Westboro, Wis. He then entered the Eau Claire Business College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1912. After that he took up his father's business at Arkansaw, which he continued to carry on there until 1921. In that year he came to Menomonie and opened offices in the Heller Block on Main Street, where he has since been successfully engaged in the land and realty business. He has also recently organized the Universal Business Exchange, of which he is general manager, with P. E. Ryberg as assistant manager. On Dec. 17, he enlisted for service in the World War, subsequently trained at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., and was made top sergeant, handling and shipping horses for the government. He was discharged March 27, 1919, when he returned home and resumed his business. Mr. Catura is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of the Elks lodge in Eau Claire; Hosford-Chase Post No. 32, A. L., of Menomonie, and of the Menomonie Commercial Club.

Christian Larson, now living, retired in the city of Menomonie at the age of 92 years, was born in Christiania, Norway, in 1833, and was there reared and educated, subsequently learning the carpenter's trade. There on June 22, 1876, he was married to Maren Swenby, a native of Christiania like himself, and born Feb. 28. Mr. Larson came to America in 1884, locating in Menomonie, Wis., where 1855. he worked at his trade. In the following year, 1885, his wife and four children, whom he had left behind, joined him, and with Mrs. Christian Larson came also Caroline Swenby, her sister, who afterward became Mrs. Oliver E. Ohnstad. Mr. Larson followed his trade until old age prevented him. To him and his wife-a worthy couple-seven children were born: Martin, of Menomonie; Carl, of Hibbing, Minn.; Ole (first) deceased; Andrew, now in the upholstery business in Menomonie; Inga, who is Mrs. Fred Pauley of the town of Menomonie; Jennie, who for 11 years was in the employ of the Dunn County News and is now at home looking after the household and caring for her parents in their declining years; and Ole (second), who is deceased. The four first mentioned were born in Norway and the last three in Menomonie. The family home is at No. 820 Third Street.

Oliver E. Ohnstad, who passed away in Menomonie on Feb. 4, 1920, after a very successful career as a business man, was born in McFarland, Dane County, Wis., Nov. 24, 1867, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Ohnstad. The father was born in Norway in 1833 and was there educated, after which he learned the shoemaker's trade. In 1858 he came to America with his parents, the family settling in Dane County, Wis. Ole followed his trade in Madison for 15 years, at the end of which time, in 1873, he came to Menomonie and engaged in the shoe business here, at first in a small way. But his business increased and in time he transformed or merged it into a clothing business recognized as one of the substantial business men of the city in mercantile At a later period of his life he went to Arkansas and engaged in the land and circles lumber business, becoming well and favorably known there also. He died at Hot Springs, that state, on Nov. 10, 1924. Mr. Ohnstad was married in Wisconsin to Sarah Askinwall, a native of Dane County, Wis., and to him and his wife are born four children: Levina, now Mrs. E. R. Boll of Hot Springs, Ark.; Helen, who is Mrs. Leon A. Roy of Muskogee, Oklahoma; Cal John C., of the U. S. army, now stationed in Illinois; and Oliver E., who is deceased. Oliver E. Ohnstad attended the grade and high schools of Menomonie and subsequently entered St. Olaf College, from which he was graduated. He also took a business course and thus equipped for the battle of life, he began it as clerk in his father's store. Later he acquired a half interest in the latter's clothing business and as a merchant achieved a gratifying success as long as he continued in that business, which was until he sold out to B. R. Teare in 1900. He then began investing in farms and other lands, in which line of enterprise also he made a reputation as a successful man, his name becoming well known through Dunn County. He owned several farms in the vicinity of Menomonie and also several in other parts of the county. When, after a two week's illness, he died on Feb. 4, 1920, the community realized that it had been bereft of a strong and forceful citizen, whose methods were always square and honest, and whose place it would not be easy to fill. His personal character made his sincerely mourned.

Oliver E. Ohnstad was married on March 8, 1893, to Caroline Swenby, who was born in Modum, Norway, Oct. 13, 1869, daughter of Ole and Inga Marie (Bure) Swenby. Her parents died in their native land. Her brothers and sisters were: Maren, who is now Mrs. Christian Larson of Menomonie; Lizzie, who is Mrs. Ole Peterson of Rice Lake, Wis.; Hans, a furniture dealer in Menomonie; Louis and Christ of Hibbings, Minn., and Andrew of Goodland, Minn. In 1885, with her sister Maren, she came to the United States, arriving in Menomonie, Wis., July 8. Shortly afterwards the Wilson and Stout families persuaded her to come to their homes and she was with either one or both of those families for eight years. After the Stout Institute had been founded and was working satisfactorily in most respects, the lack of dormitories and refectories for the teachers and students was felt to be a serious handicap. Mrs. Ohnstad solved the problem so far as the eating facilities were concerned by converting three large rooms in her residence on Eighth Street into dining-rooms, and for four years she fed from 50 to 58 people at each meal. Not all her activities were concerned with her own private interests, however, for she did many things calculated to benefit the general community, or that were for the welfare of others, and which may be classed as benevolent or charitable acts. It was she who collected the $2,000 to pay for the installation of the elevator in the citv hospital. After her husband's death Mrs. Ohnstad sold the family residence and bought the well known "Grassland Stock Farm," of 240 acres formerly owned by Paul Wilson. She did not reside there long, however, as her health would not permit, but bought the small bungalow at 1121 Main Street, Menomonie, which she occupied until her death on Nov. 2, 1924. To Mr. and Mrs. Oliver E. Ohnstad three children were born: Sarah M., Oct. 6, 1894; Oliver C., Jan. 3, 1898, and Emily M., Dec. 28, 1900. Sarah M., a graduate of the Stout Institute, taught school one year at Marshfield, one year at Milwaukee, and two years at Madison. She is now Mrs. Earl Catura of Menomonie and the mother of one child, Mary Lou. Oliver C., after graduating from the Menomonie High School, took a two years' course in the agricultural department of the state university at Madison, where he distinguished himself, being president of his class and both years receiving the medal for oratory. He is now living on the "Grassland Stock Farm." He married Manila Graham and has one child, Lois Ann. Emily M., who was graduated from the Menomonie High School and the Dunn County Normal School, is now the wife of Harold Olsen, an athletic instructor in the University of Ohio at Columbus, where they reside. Thus, the family record, upheld by both parents and children, is one strongly marked by admirable qualities, and high ideal worthily pursued and successfully attained, and it is to such qualities that the great Northwest owes the importance it has as an integral part of this nation.

Valentine Brieor, a veteran of the Civil War, and an early settler in Dunn County, who passed away in Menomonie on Nov. 6, 1924, after a life of considerable activity, was born in Germany, April 25, 1846, son of Valentine and Elizabeth (Roth) Brieor. It was in 1848 that the parents came to the United States, owing to the revolutionary troubles in Germany, and located in the town of Muskego, Waukesha County, Wis., where Valentine Brieor Sr., was engaged in farming until his death in 1856. His wife survived him many years, passing away some 30 years ago, or about 1893. Valentine Brieor, the present bearer of this memoir, was educated in the public schools of Waukesha County and resided at home on the farm, at first with his parents, and after his father's death, with his mother, until February, 1863, when, a young man not yet 18 years of age, he enlisted in Company E, Seventh Regt. Vol. Inft., for service in the war then raging. It was taking many chances of death, for up to that time the Confederates had been by far the more successful, and moreover, young Brieor was not a native of the United States for which he was going out to fight, but he went out as a soldier, did good service, was at Richmond and Petersburg and present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. After being honorably discharged after the close of the war, Mr. Brieor returned to Wisconsin, arriving in Milwaukee, July 4, 1865. That season he worked in the harvest fields, after which he took a trip through Minnesota, looking over the country for a location, but not finding anything to his liking in that state, he returned to Wisconsin and in 1870 settled in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County, buying 80 acres of land and commencing the arduous task of its development. Later he bought another 80-acre tract, in the town of Red Cedar, just across the line dividing the two towns. Thus he had a farm of 160 acres, which he cultivated for twelve and a half years. He then sold out and bought another farm of 80 acres in the town of Red Cedar, on which he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1895. He then sold that place and moved to the city of Menomonie, buying the residence property at No. 1020, where he made his home until his death. For many years he was a member of the local G. A. R. Post and was officer of the guard in said Post, at the time of his death. Mr. Brieor was first married in 1870 to Martha Sipple, who died Jan. 3, 1922, without issue. On Jan. 6, 1923, Mr. Brieor married Mrs. Sophia Fisher, widow of Fred Fisher. She was born in Germany, Nov. 5, 1852, and it was there that she was first married. She came to the United States with Mr. Fisher in 1882 and soon afterwards they located in Dunn County, Wis., where Mr. Fisher worked five years for the Knapp-Stout Company and 30 years on the Crane stock farms. He died May 24, 1919. He and his wife were the parents of four children: Amelia, now deceased; August, now of Rice Lake, Wis.; William, of Minneapolis; and Gilbert, also of Minneapolis. Mr. Brieor was an active member of the German M. E. Church. Mrs. Brieor is also a member of that denomonation. They are well known and esteemed.

William Brightsman, engaged in farming and dairying in Section 4, town of Menomonie, was born in Germany, Sept. 5, 1852, son of John and Dorothy (Hintz) Brightsman. The year 1860 saw the emigration of the Brightsman family to the United States. Landing at New York, they came west to the Mississippi River, then up that river by boat to Read's Landing on the Minnesota shore opposite the mouth of the Chippewa. Crossing the river by ferry, they walked the rest of the way to Menomonie, a distance by road of 45 or 50 miles, if not more. On arriving at the city which was then the headquarters of the famous lumber firm of Knapp, Stout & Čo., Mr. Brightsman found employment with them as a lumber piler and sorter, following that occupation until he died in the spring of 1868. His wife, who survived him many years, died in 1906. Their children, six in number, were: John, deceased; William, subject of this sketch; Henry, deceased; Joseph and Fred of Menomonie, and Herman, deceased. William Brightsman, who spent the first eight years of his life in his native land, subsequently attended school in the town of Spring Brook and the city of Menomonie. At the age of 14 he went to work in the shingle mills of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and later was employed in hauling supplies to the different lumber camps, going as far north as Rice Lake. He continued in that line of occupation until the company closed out its business in this region in 1900. He then began farming, renting a farm for four years. It was situated in Section 4, town of Menomonie and contained 120 acres, and is the farm he is now operating, as he bought it in 1904. It was formerly the Charles Brunn Mr. Brightsman has improved it considerably, having erected a complete farm. set of buildings. He has 60 acres of the land under cultivation, and is doing general farming and dairying, keeping grade cattle of mixed breeds. He is a stockholder in the Hudson Road Creamery. On June 10, 1880, he was married in the city of Menomonie to Etta Price, who was born March 4, 1861, daughter of Ernst and Tina (Schultz) Price. The issue of this union is a family of ten children, as follows: William, born March 24, 1881, now residing in Menomonie; Theresa, born May 26, 1883, now Mrs. Otto Maves of Cedar Falls, and the mother of six children, Elona, Laverne, Dorothy, Edna, Leonard and Arthur; Lena, born Dec. 12, 1885, now Mrs. George Morfeit of Menomonie; Sadie, born May 5, 1887, who is Mrs. Paul Haus of Cornell, Wis., and has four children. Irene, Clarence, Willard and Annabelle; Charles, born Jan. 16, 1889, living at home with his parents; Alice, born April 5, 1891, now of Eau Claire; Ernst, born Jan. 1. 1893, residing in Milwaukee; Herbert, born Jan. 2, 1895, also in Milwaukee; Daly, born Nov. 12, 1897, at home; and Emma, born Aug. 2, 1899, residing in Mencmonie. The family are affiliated religiously with the German Lutheran Church.

Jacob Hermann, Sr., a pioneer in the town of Dunn, and one of the very early settlers in this county, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Nov. 21, 1817. He was married in his native land to Christina Bachtle, who was born in Wuttemberg, Nov. 18, 1825. In June, 1848, they came to the United States and for five years thereafter resided in Baltimore. Thence they moved to Norfolk, Va., and from there came west to Davenport, Iowa. In November, 1855, they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and pre-empted 80 acres of land in Section 11, town of Dunn. He did not, however, begin its development at once but instead worked in Downsville for Ebenezer Thompson, who was building a mill and dam there, which were soon washed out by a flood, after which Mr. Herman worked for Capt. Downs, who took up the work that Mr. Thompson had given up, and succeeded in putting it through. It was the dam built by Capt. Downs that diverted the change in the Red Cedar River from its former into its present channel at Downsville, and in the building of that dam, Mr. Herman had a part. As soon as he had money enough, Mr. Herman began to develop his farm, erecting a log dwelling and barns on it and clearing and breaking the land. He was aided by his wife and children, who all worked hard and their united industry in time conquered success. Mr. Hermann became well known and for several years served on the town board. He added to his land until he had over 300 acres, and when he died, July 10, 1897, was quite well to do for a farmer of those days. His wife did not survive him long, passing away on Jan. 15, 1898. They had reared a family of four children, Fred, Caroline, Jacob and Louis. Fred, born in Germany, Feb. 20, 1846, married Mary Anen. He died May 21, 1922, leaving five children, Anna, Louisa, Martha, George and Walter, Caroline, born in Virginia in 1849, became the wife of Jacob Fritz and died in August, 1916. She was the mother of a large family numbering 17 children, namely: Louisa, Amelia, Frank, Caroline, Louis, William (deceased), Albert, Henry, Rosetta, Jacob, Martha, Carl, John, Edward, Ida, Lena and Margaret. Jacob Hermann, Jr., and Louis are given special mention on these pages.

Jacob Hermann, the second of that name who has been active along agricultural lines in the town of Dunn, was born in this town Sept. 26, 1856, son of Jacob, Sr., and Christina (Bachtle) Hermann. He acquired a public school education and as he grew up helped his parents to improve the home farm. When he was 34 years old his father gave him a part of it and he then started out for himself as an independent farmer, building for himself a good frame dwelling, with barns and other out-buildings. His subsequent career on the farm was one of enterprise, progress and success. He added to his land until he owned 317 acres in one body, and his place became known far and wide as the Spring Stock Farm. It is well watered and fenced, is provided with an ample set of substantial buildings and well stocked with good cattle. Mr. Jacobs farmed it until 1921, then rented it out and took up his residence in the village of Downsville where he bought the Dr. Denham residence, which he has remodeled and made into a fine house. He served as a member of the town board for four years and was treasurer of School District No. 2 for 12 years. As a stockholder he is interested in the Downsville creamery. Mr. Herman was married April 7, 1890 to Augusta Paulina Petrosky, who died March 18, 1891. Mr. Jacobs was married secondly on Oct. 1, 1891 to Matilda Maxion, who was born in Prussia, Germany. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs, namely: Eda, born July 29, 1892, who is now Mrs. Edward Frank of Pepin, Wis.; Edward, born Oct. 26, 1893, now a farmer in the town of Dunn, who married Myrtle Flick and has one child, Carroll; Clara, born March 19, 1895, who is the wife of Fred Stevens of Mason City, Iowa; Bertha, born Oct. 3, 1896, who married Arthur Arnold, resides at Glencoe, Minn., and has one child. Melvin; Edna, born June 9, 1904, who lives with her sister Clara at Mason City. Iowa; and Matilda, born June 13, 1908, who is a pupil in the high school. The family residing at home are affiliated religiously with St. Jacob's Lutheran Congregation, and Mr. Hermann belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America.

Nelson W. Peck, in his day a well known and highly respected citizen of Dunn County, was born at Independence, N. Y., April 30, 1840, son of Ebbe and Chloe

WILLIS PECK AND FAMILY

(Carpenter) Peck. He completed his scholastic education at Alfred College in his native state. On July 4, 1865, he was married at Wausau, N. Y., to Emily Easton, who was born in Potter County, Penn., Feb. 25, 1843. After their marriage he and his wife settled on a farm at Titusville, Penn., which they operated for about four Then moving to New York state they bought a farm in the town of Eagle, vears. near Centerville, where they remained for a few years. In 1871 Mr. Peck came west to Dunn County to look up land, but not favorably impressed with the region at that time, he pushed on to Missouri and Kansas. Before leaving Dunn County he had sent for his wife and child-the later then two years old-to join him here, and they came accordingly making the journey by train from New York State to Read's Landing, Wis., and from there by stage to Dunn County, by way of Eau Before they arrived, however, Mr. Peck had gone on to Kansas and Mrs. Claire. Peck, after staying in Dunn County for a short time, followed him there. He had taken a claim in that state and he and his family remained there a short time, but Mrs. Peck not liking that country, they returned to New York State. In 1877 they came again to Dunn County, Wis., this time for permanent settlement. At first they rented a farm in the town of Sherman, remaining on it five years. At the end of that time Mr. Peck bought a farm in Section 29 in the same town. About 20 or 25 acres had been cleared and broken and there was a log house on the place. There the family made their home until 1905, in which year they moved to another farm in the same town, on which they lived for two years, also operating a cheese factory there for the manufacture of American cheese. It is worthy of note that Mrs. Peck was the first person to exhibit this kind of cheese at the Dunn County In 1907 Mr. Peck retired and moved with his family to Menomonie, where Fair. he died on March 11, 1910. His wife is still residing in the family home at 1203 Seventh Street. They were the parents of six children, Delbert, Willis, Wilbur, Daisy, Carrie and Esther; whose personal records in brief are as follows: Delbert, who married Clara Baskin, died in 1899, leaving three children, Ella, Edith and Lois. Willis, who married Julia M. DeLine, is living and he and his wife are the parents of eight children, Edna, Ethel, Adelbert, Lloyd, Leon, Lucy, Ruby and Nelson. Wilbur, a twin brother of Willis, died Feb. 27, 1825. Daisy, is now the wife of Frank Eastwood of Menomonie and has two children, Edwin and Frances. Carrie, now Mrs. Otto Sumpter of Menomonie, has four children, Hazel, Orpha, Rov and Archie. Esther is the wife of Joseph Webster of Saskatchewan, Canada and has three children, Lawrence, Leo and Leona the two latter being twins. Mr. and Mrs. Peck were members of the Congregational Church, to which the latter still belongs.

Zacchaeus C. De Line, in former years a farmer in the town of Sherman, but now deceased, was born in Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, April 30, 1840. After acquiring a public school education he learned the cooper's trade, which he followed until he enlisted for service in the Civil War, in Company F, 13th Reg. Wis. Vol. Inf. He served until the close of the war, being discharged at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 24, 1865. He then returned to Fort Atkinson, Jefferson County, Wis., where his home was at the time of his enlistment and resumed his trade of Cooper. From Fort Arkinson he moved to Milford, Wis., where he followed his trade for eight years. Then going to Oakland, Wis., he rented a farm for two years. In 1885 he went to Eau Claire and for one winter followed his trade there. At the end of that time he came to Dunn County and rented a farm near Knapp, which he operated for a time, finally purchasing 40 acres of wild land in Section 27, town of Sherman, on which he put up buildings and where he was engaged in clearing the land and farming until the death of his wife on Nov. 7, 1915. In the spring of the following year he went to the Soldiers' Home, at Waupaca, Wis., where he died June 20, 1916. He was married at Oakland, Jefferson County, Wis., to Lucy Moore, who was born in the state of Vermont and came to Wisconsin with her parents when seven years old. Mr. and Mrs. De Line were the parents of eight children: Rosa, who is now deceased; William, of Rochester, Minn.; Thomas, of Hamilton, Mont.; Henry H., of North Menomonie; Frank, deceased; Julia, who is now Mrs. Willis Peck of the town of Sherman; and two others who died in infancy.

Willis Peck, who has been a resident of Dunn County since childhood, was born in Ottawa County, Kansas, Feb. 15, 1872, son of Nelson W. and Emily (Easton) Peck. After coming with his parents to Dunn County in 1877, he attended the rural schools in the neighborhood of the family home and grew to manhood on his parents' farm. In 1898, he became owner of the original 80 acres of the home farm in Section 29, town of Sherman, where he has continued to reside. He has, however, greatly increased the size of the farm, having purchased additional land until he now has 321 acres all in one body, of which 160 acres are under the plow, the balance being in pasture and timber. He has also made many notable improvements. He has erected a fine set of modern buildings, including a neat residence, two large barns, a machine shed, double corn crib, wood shed, ice house, garage and a large brick silo, the house and barns being provided with running water from his home waterworks plant. He has also installed an individual electric plant for lighting his residence and other buildings, as well as the yard. His main barn is 36x100 feet in ground plan, with a full basement, having also a lean-to of 16x56 feet, and is provided with a patent equipment, including drinking cups, litter carriers and a milking machine. Mr. Peck has a fine herd of Holstein cattle, headed by a pure bred sire, as also are his hogs, which are of the Poland-China breed. A large flock of high grade Hampshire sheep is also numbered among his assets. Mr. Peck's farm is nicely and conveniently situated just off Federal Truck Highway No. 79, between Menomonie and Boyceville, which places he uses as his markets. He is a strong believer in modern methods and operates his business in accordance with a well organized system, the result of which shows in the appearance of his place and in the work he accomplishes. He occupies a high standing, not only as a farmer but also as a man and citizen, taking a helpful interest in the affairs of his town and county. For 14 years he served as treasurer of School District No. 4, town of Sherman. He is a member of the Menomonie colony of Beavers and he and his family attend and help to support the Methodist Church at Boyceville, though not members. On July 4, 1893, Mr. Peck was united in marriage with Julia M. De Line, who was born at Milford, Jefferson County, Wis., on June 24, 1874, daughter of Zacchaeus C. and Lucy (Moore) De Line. Eight children are the result of this union, namely: Edna M., born March 2, 1896, now Mrs. William Kirby of the town of Stanton; Ethel V., born Dec. 1, 1898, wife of E. B. Marshall of the town of Stanton; Adelbert W., born Dec. 31, 1900, on the home farm assisting his father; Lloyd W., born Aug. 29, 1903, and Leon D., born Sept. 10, 1905, both of whom are on the home farm; Lucy E., born Feb. 28, 1908, now a student in the Dunn County Agricultural School; Ruby E., born May 13, 1910, and Nelson W., born March 17, 1913.

Frank Mason Baker, in former years a well known and respected farmer of the town of Dunn, but now deceased, was born Aug. 2, 1858, in Memphis, Mo., where in his boyhood years he acquired his early education. That education was later supplemented by a course in the Menomonie High School after he had come to Dunn County, Wisconsin, in 1875. Thus equipped for life's battle he entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, in which he remained until 1894, during that time filling many important positions the last of which was that of manager of the Moore farm. In 1894 he began his career as an agriculturist, buying a farm of 160 acres in Barron County, Wis., which he operated for seven years. He then sold it and bought one of 280 acres in the town of Dunn, Dunn County. This was an improved farm and on it Mr. Baker was engaged in diversified farming until his death on March 6, 1914. For some time before that final event he had been suffering from poor health, and with the intention of soon retiring from active work had in the winter of 1913 bought a nice house at 1509 Main Street, Menomonie; but he was destined never to make it his home and he passed away at the home of his wife's sister, Mrs. Matilda Whinnery. Mr. Baker was married Oct. 30, 1883, to Rispa Smith, daughter of Jacob D. and Harriet (Stuttler) Smith, well known pioneers of the town of Dunn. She was born in Cameron County, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1860, and came to Dunn County with her parents in the spring of 1867. her next few years being spent in attending the rural schools. After her husband's death Mrs. Baker resided for a year and a half in their house at 1509 Main Street, then sold it and from that time until 1918 made her home with her sister, Mrs.

Whinnery and with her daughter at the Central House in Downsville. In 1918 she bought the neat modern bungalow at 1720 Sixth Street which she now occupies. She is a woman of exceptional business ability, able to attend successfully to[•]all her own private interests. To Mr. and Mrs. Baker were born two children, Lina and Agnes. Lina, born Aug. 31, 1884, is now Mrs. Howard Bliss of Menomonie. By a former marriage to George Crosby, she had a daughter, Margaret. Agnes, born Oct. 14, 1891, became the wife of William Timmerman, who was foreman of a construction crew and was killed at Duluth while superintending the building of a bridge. Mrs. Timmerman, who resides with her mother, has two children, Helen and Laurel.

John A. Anderson, a well known and representative citizen of the town of Grant, whose well kept farm consists of land in Sections 17, 18 and 20, was born in Norway on March 19, 1859, son of Andrew and Isabelle Framy. As an infant he accompanied his parents to the United States in 1862 and for several years resided with them in Pierce County, Wisconsin. In 1866 they came to Dunn County, where the father homesteaded 160 acres in Section 20, town of Grant. It was all wild land and Andrew Framy had to start in as a pioneer, building a primitive house and barn and continuing his improvements to the best of his ability until his death in 1898, 32 years after he had been settled there. His wife died in 1914. In the early days Menomonie was their nearest trading-point, and oxen were used as draft animals both for travel and on the farm. In going to and returning from Menomonie they had to ford the Red Cedar River in summer, crossing the ice in winter. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Framy has 12 children, five of whom died before maturity. The other seven are now living, namely: A. A. Anderson of Colfax, B. A. Anderson, Albert F. Anderson, Parnella, who is the wife of Olaf Peterson (these being all residents of Colfax), Johm A. Rena, wife of Bernt Matison of Marshfield, Ore., and Anna. who is Mrs. Rev. George Lane of Stanford, Wash. John A. Anderson was reared on the home farm in Dunn County, where he made himself useful, also attending district school. Following the Norwegian, or Scandanavian custom, when he grew up he took for his sur-name his father's first name (Andrew or Ander) with the addition of "son," becoming John A. Anderson, instead of John A. Framy, which would have been his name had he adopted the English or American custom of continuing the same surname through succeeding generations. At the age of 23 years he began farming for himself on a homestead of 80 acres. Later he bought 180 acres and has built up his farm until it now has an area of 260 acres. As it was all wild land when he began work on it, the task of development proved a hard one. He started with a log dwelling and barn, which he replaced with good frame buildings later on, his present barn being a large one, and he cleared his land as fast as possible. Engaged in general farming and stock raising, he kept a herd of 20 grade Holstein cattle, his bred of swine being the Poland-Chinas. Mr. Anderson continued active along these lines until 1923, in which year he rented the farm to his son, Melvin and is now living retired. He is a member of the Holden Lutheran Church. Mr. Anderson was married in Dunn County to Carrie Anderson, daughter of Knute and Oleanna Anderson, her parents, native of Norway, being now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of eight children now living, namely: Oscar Arthur, Clara, Hilda M., Mabel, John K., Edwin G., Melvin C. and Inga A. Albert, another child, died in infancy. Oscar Arthur, born May 5, 1887, is now farming in the town of Grant, Dunn County. Clara, born Feb. 18, 1886 is keeping house for Arthur. Hilda M., born Nov. 6, 1890 is the wife of Albert S. Anderson of Denver, Colo., and has four children. Mabel, born Nov. 22, 1892, is the wife of Olaf Anderson of Wind River, Wyo., and has two children. John K., born August 27, is living with Arthur in the town of Grant. Edwin G., who has taken the name of Edwin G. Anderson Framy, was born June 22, 1896. After this country had entered into the war with Germany, he entered the army service from Minneapolis and went to France as truck driver for an ammunition train, returning home after the close of the war and received his discharge Aug. 1, 1919. He is now living in Wind River, Wyo., where his sister Mabel is. Melvin C., born Oct. 8, 1898, is now conducting the home farm. Inga A., born Jan. 19, 1901, is a school teacher in South Dakota. She had a twin brother, Alfon, who died at the age of eight months. The Anderson family are members of the Holden congregation of the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

John T. Brewer, who is connected with the Boyceville postal service as rural mail carrier, was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, son of Christopher C. and Margaret (Jones) Brewer. The parents were reared, educated and married in that county, where they were subsequently engaged in farming until 1898. They then came to Dunn County, settling in the town of Sherman, where they resided until Mr. Brewer's death on October 10, 1909. Mrs. Margaret Brewer is now in Laverne, Calif. They had eight children: John T., now of Boyceville; Bertha, who is Mrs. Albert Lee of Williston, N. D.; Bessie, now Mrs. Edward Lee of Laverne, Calif. Laura, wife of Martin Lee of Williston, N. D.; George, in California; William, of Riverside, that state; Raymond of Laverne, Calif.; and Mary, who is the wife of Martin Scapple of Laverne, Calif. John T. Brewer in his youth attended the dis-trict schools of Dunn County and was graduated from the agricultural school in Menomonie with the class of 1907. Then for about three years he followed various occupations in several states, in 1910 locating in Glenwood, St. Croix County, where he remained for a year. After that he spent two years in operating his father's On Nov. 1, 1913, he took the civil service examination for the mail service farm. and received an appointment as rural letter carrier attached to the Boyceville post office, since which time he has carried the mail on Route No. 1. This route covers a distance of 26 miles and during his 11 years of service on it Mr. Brewer has travelled about 88,200 miles. In 1914 he bought his present home, a tract of 12 acres within the village limits. He has a comfortable place, to which he has given a rural aspect by keeping several cows and raising chickens and other poultry. Mr. Brewer was married Sept. 14, 1912, in New Richmond, Wis., to Gertrude Clough, who was born Jan. 3, 1884, daughter of Benjamin B. and Mary (Granger) Clough, the parents being now residents of Connersville. Three children have been born of this union: Lester C., May 8, 1913; Dale D., Nov. 15, 1914, and Leon G., Dec. 4, 1916. Mrs. Brewer is a member of the Royal Neighbors, the woman's auxilliary to the Modern Woodmen of America, and of the Rebekahs, which is the woman's branch of the Odd Fellows.

John W. Barber, proprietor of the Barber Furniture Co., Menomonie, located at 228-342 Main Street, was born in the town of Gaines, Orleans County, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1867, son of William C. and Anna (Wheeler) Barber. The father was born in the same county Sept. 1, 1840, and his active career was divided between farming and railroad work. His wife Anna came from the state of Connecticut, the date of her nativity being May 29, 1846. They were married in Orleans, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1866, and spent their lives thereafter in that place, he dying there Oct. 25, 1905, having survived his wife but 15 days, as she had passed away on the tenth of the same month. They had a family of six children, all of whom are now living but one. They were as follows: John W., of Menomonie; Mae, now Mrs. Milford L. Hokes of Orleans County, N. Y.; Lulu A., who is the wife of Clinton E. Price of Mt. Morris, Ill.; Edward R., who died March 10, 1904; William A., of Rochester, N. Y., and Grant O., of River Forest, Ill. John W. Barber was educated in the public schools of Albion, N. Y., after which until 1886 he worked as clerk in stores in that place. He then went to Rochester, N. Y., where he was employed four vears in a shoe factory. In 1890 Mr. Barber came west to Chicago, and for the next five years was a hotel clerk in the big city. He then learned the undertaker's art, going into business for himself and he was thus occupied until July ,1909. It was at that time that he came to Menomonie, and bought what was left of the Gallaway furniture and undertaking business, which was then located on Third Street, between Main Street and Wilson Avenue. Having removed the stock to the present location of the Michaels & Sandvig grocery store, he conducted business there until 1914, when he moved to his present quarters. Here he has a store 44x80 feet in floor surface, with a large casket room and warehouse. He carried a complete stock of funeral supplies and a fine line of furniture. The second floor of his building is divided into flats for renting purposes. Mr. Barber is enjoying a successful business career, the result of hard work, careful planning and the reputation he has built up for himself for courtesy and integrity. He was married Nov. 26, 1906, to Marigen Holbrook, whose parents were early settlers in Pepin County, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Barber have one child, John W. They are members of the Congregational Church and Mr. Barber also belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

Carl Sorkness, a practical farmer of the town of Grant, who has various interests and activities, some of which pertain to public office, was born in this town, June 30, 1873, son of Ebert and Seraianna (Kvistad) Sorkness. The parents were natives of Norway, where the father was born on a farm. They came to the United States before the breaking out of the Civil War and Ebert Sorkness, perhaps because he found money hard to obtain, work being scarce, entered the Federal service as a member of the Twelfth Wisconsin Infantry. As a soldier he escaped both death and injury and after his discharge came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and started in for himself as a pioneer farmer, buying 200 acres of wild land in the town of Grant, where he was one of the earliest settlers. His course of life for many years thereafter was similar to that of other pioneers and included the clearing of land, the erection of log buildings, and later of better ones, mostly frame, and the cultivation and improvement of his farm. In 1915 he retired and took up his residence in the village of Colfax, where he is still living, being now 86 years old. His wife Seraianna, whom he married in Dunn County, died in April, 1885. They had six children, one of whom, Paul, is now deceased. Those living are Mary, Carl, Anna, Emma and Louis. In 1890 Ebert Sorkness married his second wife, Elizabeth Erickson, of which union there were six children born, four of whom are now living, namely, William, Jennie, Nora and Helen. The two deceased are Emil and Gilma. The mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Sorkness, died in 1909. Carl Sorkness was reared in the town of Grant, where he attended school. He worked on the home farm until reaching the age of 25 years, at which time he started in for himself, buying 160 acres of partly improved land in Section 15, town of Grant. In the years that followed he was kept busy in clearing his land and improving the farm, making gradual progress. In 1904 he built a small frame house in place of the log house on the farm and in 1922 built an addition to this house and remodeled it. He rebuilt the barn in 1915. He is now carrying on general farming and dairying, keeping 25 head of Holstein grade cattle. He also raises Duroc-Jersey hogs. He has served as secretary of the Trout Creek Co-operative Creamery and is a member of the board of control of the co-operative creamery at Colfax. He is also a stockholder and director of the Farmers' store at Colfax. As town clerk Mr. Sorkness rendered good service for seven years, for an equal length of time serving as assessor, and he is clerk of the school board of his district. In 1924 he was again elected town clerk and is now serving as such. Thus, as a citizen he is both useful and prominent and he and his family hold a high position in the community. Their religious affiliations are with the Lutheran Free Church. Carl Sorkness was married in Menomonie, on May 13, 1905, to Lizzie Sandvig, daughter of Oluf and Mary Sandvig, who settled in Dunn County many years ago. Both her parents are now de-To Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sorkness ten children have been born, all of whom ceased. are residing on the home farm, namely, Eldor, Morris, Gordon, Lydia, Gilma, Delno, Reuben, Kenneth, Dagny and Lillian.

Oscar Albion Bunker, many years ago a well known citizen of Menomonie, prominent in business circles as a contractor and builder, but who has long passed away, was born at Montpelier, Vt., Nov. 23, 1832. He was of Scotch-English ancestry, being descended from one of three brothers who came to America in colonial days, his mother being of the stock that produced Daniel and Ebenezer Webster. In early manhood he moved to Warrensburg, N. Y., where at the age of 18 years he entered upon the occupation of contractor and builder. In 1859 he removed to Cornwall, Canada, where he remained until 1867, when he went to Saratoga, N. Y. While there he superintended the construction of the Ft. William Henry Hotel at Lake George. In 1870 he came west and located in Menomonie, where for 23 years he was a conspicuous figure in his chosen calling. The "News" building and many of the best residences in town were built by him. A man of marked mental powers, he was a close observer and a great reader and his capacity for remembering dates and statistics was remarkable, so rarely leading him astray that he became a recognized authority on such matters. His death came about through an act of imprudence. He had visited Dunnville to contract for stone to be used in repairs upon the Central school building for making which he was under contract. Finishing his business there before train time, he walked up to Downsville. On the way, weary and over-heated, he took a plunge in the river. It was a fatal act and he never thereafter saw a well day. It gave a shock to his system the first effects of which were soon seen in an abcess in the groin and later in typhoid fever which terminated his life on Sept. 10, 1893, when he was 61 years old. He was a well meaning, kind hearted man, devoid of malice, a good neighbor and a kind husband and father. Mr. Bunker was first married to Mary Lawrence, who died in 1867, leaving one child, Solon L. Bunker, who is now a leading contractor in Menomonie. Mr. Bunker married for his second wife, Electa Varney, who died leaving a son, Lester Howard, now of Duluth, Minn. Though twice unfortunate, having been bereaved of two wives in succession after a comparatively short domestic life with each, Mr. Bunker contracted a third marriage, with Lois E. Harris, of Menomonie. Of this marriage three children were born: Ina May, now Mrs. George DeGuire, Mr. DeGuire being school superintendent at Chetek, Wis.; Page Scribner, who is working in the forestry department for the U.S. Government in Texas; and Frank Harris, of Caguas, Porto Rico, where he is superintendent of a large tobacco plantation. The mother of these children is still living and resides with her daughter Mrs. DeGuire at Chetek.

Solon L. Bunker, prominent throughout Dunn County as a contractor and builder, in which line of enterprise he may be regarded as heir to his father's activities, was born at Cornwall, Canada, Nov. 12, 1863, son of Oscar Albion and Mary (Lawrence) Bunker. In 1870 he accompanied his father to Menomonie, where he acquired a public school education. He then learned the carpenter's trade as combined with contracting and building, and was associated with his father until the latter's death in 1893. After that event he worked as a journeyman until about 1904, when he formed a partnership with Milton O. Doolittle, with whom he was associated in contracting and building for several years. The partnership was then dissolved and since 1909 Mr. Bunker has carried on business alone. He has built up a fine reputation for thoroughly competent work and fair business dealing and is recognized as one of the leading men in his line in Dunn County; indeed he has done some important work beyond the limits of the county and extended his fame accordingly. Among the notable specimens of his skill may be mentioned the Shutte-Quilling Bank building, the Episcopal church, Teare's store building and residence, and the beautiful colonial residence of W. W. Mathews on the Stout Road, all these in Menomonie; also the bank building at Colfax and the First National Bank building at Boyceville, in addition to many other business blocks or residences in Wilson, Woodville, Colfax, Glenwood, Boyceville and other villages. His achievements in this important field of business enterprise, together with the substantial and reliable elements of his personal character, have given him a high standing in the community. He has also rendered some efficient public service, many times repeated, as a member of the election board, and he is now a member of the board of education, his duties in that connection being highly congenial to him. The Commercial Club numbers him among its active and interested members, as also do the Beavers' and Odd Fellows' lodges in Menomonie. Mr. Bunker was married, June 17, 1897, to Nellie Hesselink, who was born in Belvidere, Ill., March 8, 1873, daughter of Garret Henry and Olive Hesselink, who had settled in that place about two years previous to her birth, and later, in 1880, after some wanderings, located in Menomonie, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Bunker have had seven children: Marian Etta, born March 13, 1899; Albion Henry, born Feb. 18, 1901, now of Hastings, Nebr., who was married Dec. 27, 1923, to Agnes Nesseth, and has one child, Franklin, born Oct. 14, 1924; Walter Lawrence, born May 27, 1903; George Howard, born March 25, 1905; Willard Arthur, born May 13, 1907; Helen Doris, born Dec. 25, 1909, and Robert Franklin, born June 8, 1916. The family are affiliated religiously with the Congregational Church.

Sec. A start of the second

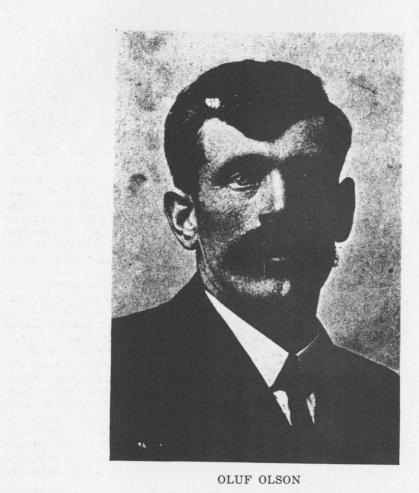

Garret Henry Hesselink, for many years a well known and respected resident of Menomonie, but now deceased, was born in Winterswick, Holland, Oct. 25, 1838, and came to the United States with his parents at the age of ten years. At least, he started to this country with his parents, but the mother died on the trip over, and so also did a sister of Garret H., the sister's body being consigned to the waves in mid-ocean, and that of the mother, who died later, being buried in New York. It was a sad landing party and it may be that the head of the family wished that he had never left his native land to suffer such sudden and unexpected bereavement. The loss of a loving mother must have been a severe blow to Garret Henry, but the nature of youth is elastic and the new and strange scenes in which he found himself helped him to shake off some of his sadness. He accompanied his father to Amsterdam, on the Mohawk River in Montgomery County, N. Y., now a city of 35,000 inhabitants, which was his home for some time. Later he made his home in Westfield, N. Y., where he was in business as a carpenter, a miller and a farmer. On April 12, 1866, he was united in marriage at Fredonia, N. Y., to Mrs. Olive Stone, and they lived in Westfield for about five years until moving to Belvidere, Ill. After a few years' residence in the latter place, they moved back to Westfield and resided there until they came to Menomonie in 1880. Here Mr. Hesselink entered the employ of Burch & Clark, who conducted a general store. Later he was night watchman for several years for The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and then went to Fall City, where he was in partnership with his son-in-law, W. J. Yates, and conducted a general store known as the Fall City store. Coming back to Menomonie after a few years, he conducted a grocery store in partnership with F. X. Desparois for a number of years. Mr. Hesselink was very active in church work. He was a member of the First Congregational Church, and at one time superintendent of the Sunday school, and was a deacon for a number of years before his death. He had served in the Civil War with a Pennsylvania regiment and was a member of Williams Evans Post. G. A. R. He was granted a long life, passing away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Solon L. Bunker, on Tuesday, Oct. 3, 1922, at the age of 83 years, 11 months and eight days. He had been sick for about a year, being confined to his bed for the greater part of that time. On April 12, 1916, he and his wife had celebrated their golden wedding. She passed away, Feb. 9, 1920. Mr. Hesselink was survived by his daughter, Mrs. S. L. Bunker of Menomonie, eight grandchildren, and two brothers, John and Abner Hesselink of New York.

O. W. Olson, manager of the yard and quarries of the Colfax Store Co., of Colfax, was born in Ulensaker, Norway, Dec. 8, 1863, son of Ole Williamson and Dorothy (Erickson) Olson. Both parents died in Norway. The subject of this sketch acquired a public school education in his native land, where he remained until 1883, when, at the age of 19 years, he emigrated to the United States. Making his way to Goodhue County, Minnesota, he there found employment on farms. In a stone yard at Frontenac, that county, he began to learn the trade of stone cutter, which he completed at Maiden Rock, Pierce County, Wis., to which latter place he went in 1891, and where he worked for eight summers. He then returned to Frontenac, Minn., and worked in the stone yard there as a journeyman until 1900, in which year he came to Colfax and took a position as designer and cutter for the Colfax Stone Co., in which he served until 1905. He was then promoted to the position of general superintendent of the stone yard and quarry of the company, and has since remained as such. He is an expert in the working of stone and his services have proved valuable to the concern. He has also, since coming here, taken a general interest in the progress of the village and helped in the affairs of local government. He is now serving in his twelfth year as a member of the village board, and for ten years was a member of the fire department. A member also of the Lutheran Church, he has fraternal affiliations with the society known as the Scandanavian American Fraternity. Mr. Olson was married Dec. 28, 1891 to Anna Hanson, who was born in Ulensaker, Norway, Dec. 26, 1868, and who came to the United States in 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Olson are the proud parents of nine children, all of whom have been given a good education and are proving a credit to their upbringing. They also have ten grandchildren. A record of the children shows the following facts. The eldest, Bertha Helen, born Oct. 12, 1892, is now Mrs. Alvin Hillson of Boyceville, where Mr. Hillson is station agent. They have three children, Arvin, Oliver C. and Myron Kenneth. Norman Richard, born Jan. 13, 1894, is now a stone cutter with the Colfax Stone Co. He married Myrtle Studlie and has one child, Gano. Elizabeth Mina, born Oct. 21, 1895, is the wife of William Stockland of Colfax and has three children, Rowland, Doris and Wilda. Hulda Marie, born Dec. 6, 1896, resides in Chicago, the wife of Albert Cardinal. Selma Louise, born May 5, 1898, married Edward Close of Knapp, where Mr. Close conducts a creamery. She has three children; Phyllis, Joy and one unnamed at this writing. Roy Hiram, born Dec. 17, 1890, is now in Minneapolis; Stanley Alexander, born Sept. 15, 1901, a stone planer in his father's factory; Esther May, born Sept. 8, 1903, lives in Minneapolis, and the youngest, Dorothy Margaret, born March 30, 1905, resides in Colfax with her parents. The family are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America.

Henry R. Wigdahl, a substantial farmer and well known and respected citizen in the town of Otter Creek, was born in the town of Franklin, Vernon County, Wis., Oct. 23, 1881, son of Austin and Elizabeth (Johnson) Wigdahl. The parents were natives of Norway, where Austin Wigdahl followed the trade of tailor till he came to the United States in 1858. Here he located first in Crawford County, Wisconsin, where he homesteaded 160 acres of land which was covered with brush and heavy timber. Having built a log house, he set to work to clear his land, and in time with the aid of oxen broke 60 acres. He then sold the place and moved to Vernon County, where he bought 160 acres of land partly improved, subsequently cleared more of it, and carried on farming there until his death in 1909. His wife is still living in Vernon County, making her home with her daughter, Elizabeth. There were eight children in the family, namely: Peter, Tollof, Lewis, Mary, Elizabeth, Anna, Henry and Joseph. Henry Wigdahl was reared on his parents' farm in in Vernon County, went to school there and helped with the farm work, remaining at home until he was 23 years old. He then started out for himself, his capital amounting to $15 in money and a team of horses. For two years he worked for farmers, then in 1907 came to Dunn County and bought 120 acres in Section 32, town of Otter Creek. This was a farm with 50 acres of land broken and a frame house and log barn on it. Mr. Wigdahl later bought two more tracts of 120 and 80 acres respectively, making in all 320 acres. He has himself cleared 50 acres and now has 120 under the plow, the remainder being in pasture and brush. In 1918 he built a modern frame house of nine rooms, installed with furnace heat, and in 1919 built a barn of 34x78 feet. This, however, was destroyed in a cyclone in 1920 and he replaced it with another of 34x78 feet and had added a silo and necessary sheds. As a general farmer and dairyman he has made good progress, keeping 17 head of grade Holstein cattle and also raising Chester-White hogs. He served five vears as a member of the town board of supervisors and for 12 years as treasurer of his school district and is a man who has earned and holds the confidence of his fellow townsmen. Mr. Wigdahl was married in Chicago, Oct. 28, 1907, to Bertha Moseng, who was born in Vernon County, Wisconsin, daughter of John and Catherine Moseng, her parents being natives of Norway and early settlers in Vernon County, Wis., where both died. They had seven children, Knute, Ole, James, Thomas, Bertha, Anna and Susanna. Mr. and Mrs. Wigdahl are the parents of six children; Truman, Abner, Kimball, Bernhardt, Harriet and Hazel, all residing at home.

Ole B. Eng, who in a literal sense may be called an upbuilder of Dunn County, seeing that he has erected a number of its edifices, both public and private, was born in Helgeland, Norway, May 3, 1869, son of Benjamin Hanson and Ellen (Kusperson) Eng. Both parents were natives of Norway and the father during his active career followed the trade of a shoemaker. They both died in Norway. Ole B. Eng was reared in his native land, where he attended school. At the age of 17 he began to learn the cabinet-maker's trade, working at it during the summer months and during the winters being engaged in the fisheries. In 1893, seeking larger opportunities, he set our for the United States and on August 17, landed at New York, whence he came directly to Menomonie. Here during the next 20 years he worked for various contractors, and at the end of that time, in 1913, entered into contracting on his own account, since which time he has erected not only many residences but also other and larger buildings. Among them may be mentioned the Little Elk Creek Norwegian Lutheran Church; the parsonage of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church, Menomonie; the Catholic convent, which he remodeled and rebuilt; the Anderson Bros.' cigar factory and the Averill apartments, and in 1918, with others, he built the large 36x250 foot barn for the county asylum. Among the more important residences he has erected are those of Ole E. Bradseth, C. J. Johnson, C. M. Peddycoart and G. A. Joyce, all in Menomonie, besides many in the country. Mr. Eng was married July 16, 1893, in Norway, to Johana Bakken, who was born in Helgeland, that country, Aug. 1, 1859, daughter of Jacob Anderson and Levina (Peterson) Anderson, also natives of Norway, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Eng are the parents of two children: Laura, born Sept. 3, 1894, now the wife of Donald Mereen and the mother of a son, Donald E.; and Borghild, born Oct. 8, 1896, who was graduated from the Stout Institute and is now teaching domestic science at West Allis, Wis. The family are members of Our Saviour's Norwegian Lutheran Church, Mrs. Eng being active in the Ladies' Aid Society and other church work, Mr. Eng is a member of the Independent Scandanavian lodge. In 1900 he erected the fine six-room residence which is the family home at 222 Eleventh Avenue West.

Lars Christianson, who with the assistance of his sons has built up one of the largest farms in the town of Otter Creek, was born in Norway in June, 1842. In his native land he acquired a sufficiently good education to qualify him for the profession of school teacher, which he followed there for 30 years. He was also married there to Ella Knutson, and in 1894, emigrated with his family to the United States, settling first at Stoughton, Wis., where he taught Norwegian school for some time. Then he went to Texas, where he remained for two years, subsequently returning to Stoughton, Wis. After spending two years more in the latter place he came to Dunn County and began his career as a farmer, buying 160 acres of land in Section 35, town of Otter Creek, and commencing operations by erecting a small shanty for a dwelling. From that modest beginning he has advanced until he and his family now own 640 acres all in one piece, of which 300 acres have been cleared and placed under cultivation. His herd of grade Shorthorn cattle now number 50 head, and dairying and stock raising form part of the business of the farm, in addition to the raising of grain and the cultivation of tobacco. Mrs. Ella Christianson died in 1923, and, as Mr. Christianson himself is now 83 years old, he is practically retired. though still quite active physically. He and his wife were the parents of five children, Krist, Caroline, Hilda, Dena and Harold. It is Krist and Harold who now carry on the farm, all, however, residing on it, except Caroline, who lives in Minneapolis. Dena is the wife of Oscar Johnson and they also reside on the home farm Hilda is the housekeeper of the family. The present buildings on the farm are good and up to date in construction. The house, built by Mr. Christianson about 18 years ago, contains ten rooms, well arranged, and supplied with furnace heat and electric lights. There are also a large and substantial barn, a silo, granary, two tobacco sheds, and other buildings. The Christianson family have always pulled together and thereby have accomplished results. They have a high standing in the community.

Oluf Olson, owner and general manager of the Colfax Cement Block Works, was born in Hadland, Norway, Sept. 7, 1865, son of Ole and Kirsta (Olson) Olson. The parents came to the United States in 1882, and proceeding west to Wisconsin, settled on a farm in Running Valley, town of Auburn, Chippewa County, where they spent the remainder of their lives, the father dying in 1905 and the mother in 1921. There were two children, Oluf, the subject of this sketch, and Ella, who is now Mrs. Nels O. Nilson of Running Valley. Oluf Olson acquired a good public school education in his native land, where he also began to learn the mason's trade as a tender to journeyman masons. It was in 1882 that he came to this country, locating in Running Valley, Chippewa County, Wis. There he purchased 160 acres of land, all wild raw land, and on the place he built a house and outbuildings and began grubbing and developing the land. He spent 20 years on that farm, accomplishing some good results and transforming it into a good piece of agricultural property. He then gave up farming and coming to the village of Colfax extablished the Colfax Cement Block Works, which he has developed into a profitable business and which he is now conducting. It has grown to considerable dimensions and includes not only the manufacture of cement blocks for building purposes but also that of well tiling. He has a beautiful residence, built of cement blocks of his own manufacture, and of a neat and tasteful architectural design. He is also interested as a stockholder in the Farmers Produce Company. Besides attending successfully to his personal interests, Mr. Olson has devoted some of his time to the public service, having served as a member of the village board and in other ways taken an active part in the advancement and improvement of the community. He belongs fraternally to the Modern Woodmen of America and to the Scandanavian American Fraternity. On Jan. 7, 1895, he was united in marriage to Laura Waaga, who was born in Norway, and who died Oct. 5, 1901. She left one child, Ella, who became the wife of R. D. Winger, manager of the local plant of the Colfax Light & Power Co., and she and her husband resided with Mr. Olson, who has not remarried, until her death, Feb.4, 1925. Mr. Olson is a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. He is a good representative of the manufacturing interests of Dunn County, and also of its sturdy and reliable citizenship.

Ferdinand Mortensen, who has filled various roles in life, including that of former sheriff of Dunn County, and who resides in the village of Colfax, was born in Westraalen, Norway, June 15, 1866, son of Morton Christopherson and Hannah Lokkes. In 1881 the father came to the United States to begin the establishment of a new home, and was followed by the mother and children in the following year. Settling in Dunn County, Wisconsin, they resided for some four years in the town of Sand Creek and then moved to the vicinity of Hayward in Sawyer County, where for the rest of his life Morton Christopherson followed his trade, which was that of carpenter. Both he and his wife spent their last days at the home of their son Ferdinand in the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County, Mrs. Christopherson dying in 1900 and he in 1912. Ferdinand Mortansen, who, after the Scandanavian custom, took for his surname his father's given name, with the addition of "sen." (or son) attended public school in Norway until 15 years old, and in 1882 came with his mother to America. After the family had settled on the farm in the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County, he attended English school for three months and for several years thereafter worked for various people. He then went to the Pacific coast, where he remained seven years, residing at different times in the states of California, Oregon and Washington, or at least made his headquarters there, for during three years of that time he followed the occupation of a sailor and received a mate's papers. But on account of his health, at the end of that time he returned east to Hibbing, Minn., where he remained for a year doing carpenter work. He also visited other parts of Minnesota and northern Wisconsin. In 1897 he returned to Dunn County and bought a farm of 80 acres in Section 10, town of Sand Creek. It was practically all wild land and he proceeded to develop it into a farm, improving and cultivating the land and erecting a house, barn and other buildings which work he continued without interruption until the fall of 1912. He was by that time well known throughout the county, and having achieved considerable popularity, he ran for the office of sheriff and was elected, in the spring of 1913 moving to Menomonie and assuming the duties of the office. After serving the regular term of two years, he returned to his farm, but in the fall of 1916 he was again elected sheriff and served another term. He then bought a residence in the village of Colfax, where he and his wife are still residing. When he first came to the village he engaged in a mercantile business which included the handling of machinery. It later became the Co-operative store, which closed out business in 1922. Since the summer of 1923 Mr. Mortensen has served as road patrolman, and while living in the town of Sand Creek he served 11 years as school treasurer, the same length of time as justice of the peace and 13 years as town clerk, and for six years was a member of the asylum board. In the spring of 1923 he was elected a member of the village board of Colfax, and is still serving. It will be seen that Mr. Mortensen's career has been one of varied activities. He has seen a large expanse of country and tried his fortune in various places, but the scenes of his youthful days possessed an attraction for him that finally caused his return to them and he has since identified himself closely with the interests of his town and county. He belongs to several societies, including the Odd Fellows, Knights of Phythias, Modern Woodmen of America, and Sons of Norway. On Nov. 9, 1896. Mr. Mortensen was united in marriage with Anna Danielson, who was born in Helgeland, Norway, June 29, 1873, and who came to this country in 1892. To Mr. and Mrs. Mortensen six children have been born: Hannah, on Jan. 7, 1898; Dagmar, March 2, 1900; Alex, Oct. 15, 1907; Arnold, March 6, 1912; Frances, Sept. 6, 1914; and Emily, born Sept. 15, 1918. Hannah is now a stenographer in the Union Bonding Co.'s office at Washington, D. C.; Dagmar is the wife of Henry Quale of Minneapolis and Alex is a barber in Colfax. The Mortensen family are connected religiously with the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

Sever K. Anderson, an up to date farmer in the town of Otter Creek, was born in Norway, May 18, 1865, son of Knute A. Frame and Oleanna Severson. The parents were farmers who came to the United States and to Dunn County, Wisconsin, in 1882, settling in the town of Colfax on June 24. For two years Knute A. Frame worked on farms; then in December, 1884, took a homestead of 120 acres in Section 24, town of Otter Creek, it being a tract of wild land covered with brush. He built a small house of 14x16 feet and a log barn with straw roof, and with the help of his family started clearing the land. There was an abundance of wild game in the vicinity, including deer, bear, and prairie chickens, and the deer and bear sometimes came so close to the house that they could be shot from the doorstep. They afforded the household a supply of meat, while fish could be obtained from almost any neighboring stream, and potatoes and other vegetables grown in the home garden. Bread was harder to procure, as the flour had to be brought from a distance over very rough roads, or sometimes over mere trails. Mr. Anderson worked hard on his place, gradually clearing his land, and in time he built a part of the present house and part of the present barn, and continued to carry on general farming until his death in 1908. His wife died in 1911. They had 12 children of whom those now living are: Gena, wife of John Anderson of the town of Grant; Bertha, wife of Andrew Balke of Minneapolis; Fannie, widow of George Lacev of Williston, N. D.; Dena, widow of A. Dwyer of Williston, N. D., and Sever K. The others died in Norway. Sever K. Anderson came to Colfax with his parents when 17 years old. After his school days were over he had worked on farms there and after coming to America and to Dunn County, Wisconsin he worked on the parental homestead, helping his father to develop it. Then in 1892 he started in for himself, buying the 160-acre tract that constitutes his present farm, which was all wild land, and which he has brought under cultivation and into a high state of development, 75 acres being now under the plow. He also erected the present buildings, which are well planned and substantial. As a general farmer and dairyman Mr. Anderson has made good progress and his herd of Durham grade cattle at present numbers 21 head. He also raises Duroc-Jersey hogs and grows tobacco. He was married in the town of Grant, Nov. 8, 1904, to Carrie Larson, who was born in Norway, daughter of Lewis and Carrie Larson. Her parents spent their lives in their native land, both being now deceased. Their daughter Carrie and her brother Arnt were the only members of the family to emigrate to the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have been the parents of five children: Constance O., Selma K., Anna A., Lloyd and one who died in infancy. The mother, Mrs. Carrie Anderson, passed away on Oct. 22, 1911. Mr. Anderson has had a long career marked chiefly by hard work, which in early manhood included experience as a logger in the woods, as well as general farm work for others as well as for himself. He has made a good record and may be regarded today as one of the representative farmers of his town.

Christian Pauly, better known as "Christ," who is now living a comparatively retired life in Menomonie after a career of considerable activity in various lines of business, was born in Alsace, France, March 27, 1849, son of Christian and Margaret (White) Pauly. He was educated in France and Germany, in both of which countries he did farm labor until he came to the United States in 1870, landing at New York, August 1. From that city he went to Buffalo, N. Y., where he spent three months at common labor. Then he went to Fort Madison, Iowa, and was there for two months. In December, 1870 he came to Menomonie, Wis., by way of Eau Claire, coming from the latter place by stage. For a short time he was employed in the woods by Knapp, Stout & Co., and then became barn boss, which position he held for two years or nearly. In June, 1873, Mr. Pauly changed his occupation, building a small house on Crescent Street, Menomonie, with a bakery in connection with it, which latter he operated for two years. Then in 1875 he went into the butcher business on Main Street, just west of where the Teare Clothing store is now situated, and that business he conducted for five years, after which for four years he operated the old Wisconsin House. In 1885 Mr. Pauly erected a large livery and sales stable at the corner of Sixth Aveaue and Second Street, the building measuring 50x64 feet, and that business he operated for 18 years, selling it in 1903. Since then he has spent most of his time building up and improving the Paulv stock farm of 320 acres in the town of Weston, which he purchased while in the livery business. He has put up a complete set of fine buildings and cleared about 200 acres of the land. Since December, 1870 he has made his home in the city of Menomonie, with the exception of one year during which he lived on his farm. During the rest of the time the farm has been rented out There are Shorthorn, beef and dairy cattle on the place, altogether about 70 head. Mr. Pauly is a stockholder in the new Hudson Road Creamery at Menomonie. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. In business affairs he has achieved a gratifying success and he is well known and respected as a man and citizen. Mr. Pauly was married Oct. 28, 1878. to Marv M. Gastever, who was born in Woodbridge, N. J., Dec. 15, 1859, daughter of John P. and Anna M. (Weber) Gasteyer. Her parents were natives of Germany who came to this country when young and were married in New Jersey. In 1862 they came west to Wisconsin, settling in the town of Eau Galle, Dunn County. where they purchased government land and proceeded to build up a home. In October, 1864 Mr. Gastever was drafted for service in the Civil War and was sent to Sherman's army, which he accompanied on its famous "march to the sea." He was discharged June 19, 1865, and returned to his farm in Dunn County, which was his subsequent home until his death on March 9, 1906. His wife survived him two years and nine months, dying Dec. 8, 1908. Their children were: Edwin J., a farmer in the town of Eau Galle, Dunn County; Mary, now Mrs. Christ Pauly; Peter, who operates the old home farm in the town of Eau Galle; and Mary A., who died in 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Christ Pauly have been the parents of two children: Mamie, born July 28, 1879, who died July 4, 1891, at the age of nearly 12 years; and Fred, born Aug. 3, 1881, who owns and conducts a farm within the city limits of Menomonie. He married Inga Larson, and has four children, Margaret, Raymond, Marion and Fred, Jr. The Pauly family are members of the Congregation Church.

John Krogness, successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in Section 36, town of Otter Creek, was born in Norway, May 18, 1873, son of Andrew Swensen and his wife, whose maiden name was Olsine Anderson. The parents were farmers in Norway until 1907, in which year they came to the United States and to Dunn County, Wisconsin, for a while making their home with their son John, who had preceded them to this country. Andrew Swensen was then nearing his end, however, and in the following year, 1908, he died. His wife, who survived him, is now a resident of Menomonie. Of their family two children are now living; John, the subject of this sketch, and Anton, who lives on a farm in the town of Colfax. John Krogness was reared in his native land, attending school there, and subsequently being engaged in the fishing industry until he came to the United States in 1901. He first located at Stoughton, Wis., and during that summer worked on a farm in the vicinity. Then coming to Dunn County, he worked that winter in the woods and for the three following years conducted a rented farm. At the end of that time he • bought 240 acres of wild land in Section 36, town of Otter Creek, and during his first summer here he lived in the woods and began clearing his land. He also started to build a house, which he later finished and subsequently added to, so that it now contains nine rooms. He has also improved his small barn and other buildings, and built a tobacco shed and at the present time has 160 acres under the plow. He does diversified crop farming, including the raising of tobacco, and also gives close attention to dairying, having 16 head of Durham grade cattle. Mr. Krogness was married at Colfax in 1902 to Randena Gottliebson, daughter of Gottlieb Olson and Anna Jenson, and he and his wife have been the parents of 13 children, nine of whom are now living, namely: Alma, Agnes, Richard, Alvin, Garfield, Ole, Thorvold, Jens and Elena. Those deceased are: Alvin (first), Garfield (first), Marie and Randena.

Camille A. Bisson, vice president of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville, was born in the island of Jersey, in the British Channel, on April 8, In the year after his birth he accompanied his parents to America, the family 1859. settling at Henderson, in Sibley County, Minn. When he was six years old they returned to France and it was there and in Switzerland that he was educated. In 1876 he returned to America, being then a youth of 17, and again located at Henderson, where subsequently for nearly half a century he was one of its leading and most active citizens, and a strong factor in its growth and prosperity. For several years he was engaged in the fire insurance business; he was post master of Henderson for 15 years, and was cashier of the Sibley County Bank from 1894 to 1924. Also at different times he held the offices of city clerk and alderman, as well as county commissioner, besides serving at times in minor offices. In 1924 Mr. Bisson moved to Menomonie, Dunn County, and in February, 1925, bought an interest in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank at Downsville, becoming vice president and director, and he is an active force in the institution. Mr. Bisson was married in Henderson, Minn., on Oct. 13, 1889, to Eleanor E. Grimes, who was born in Sibley County, Minn., July 6, 1865. Of this union there are five children, namely: Raymond E. H., now cashier of the Basin State Bank at Stanford, Mont.; Francis C., of Minneapolis, advertising manager for the Daily Market Record; William M., cashier of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville; Leo C., of Minneapolis, office manager for the Ledix Products Co.; and Wilfred E., teller in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville.

William McKinley Bisson, cashier of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank, of which he is a stockholder, was born at Henderson, Minn., March 3, 1903, son of Camille A. and Eleanor (Grimes) Bisson. He was educated in the grade and high schools of Henderson, being graduated from the latter with the class of 1920, and subsequently took a two years' course in the State University of Minnesota. He then became assistant cashier in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville, and continued as such until 1923. He next accepted a similar position with the First National Bank of Menomonie and was in the employ of that institution until 1925, when he and his father bought into the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville. Mr. Bisson is an active wide-awake young business man with every prospect of a successful career.

David Wisner, a well known resident of Menomonie, where he is now living retired after a long and active career spent chiefly in agriculture, was born in the town of Red Cedar, Dunn County, Wis., son of George and Bena (Hurley) Wisner. The parents were early settlers in this county, coming here single and being married in Menomonie. After working a short time for Knapp, Stout & Co. George Wisner located on 80 acres of wild land in the town of Red Cedar, with the intention of developing it into a farm; but he met with one of those unforeseeable accidents that sometimes befell the lumber worker, as he worked in the woods during the first winters in order to earn ready money for the support of the family. While rolling a log up the skids the log slipped and struck him, causing such serious injuries that after suffering great pain he passed away in a short time, or about the middle of February, 1861, the subject of this sketch being only four months old at the time. The wife and mother was thus left in a pathetic situation with bright hopes for a happy future shattered, a child to take care of and the problem of how to get a living pressing heavily upon her. Unable to carry on the farm, she let the title lapse and it went back to the previous owners. For two years she worked for William Stevens, at the end of which time she became the wife of Christ Ranney. David Wisner grew up in the care of his mother and step-father, attending school and subsequently helping them until he was 18 years old. Then going to Eau Claire, he entered the employ of the Northwestern Lumber Co., for whom he worked in the woods, chiefly as camp cook, but also on the company's farms. After that he worked four months for the Ingraham Lumber Co. at Eau Claire. By the end of that time, having saved several hundred dollars, he turned his attention to farming, renting the farm of an uncle in the town of Elk Mound, and also buying his second-hand tools and machinery. But his expectations were disappointed, as the farm did not prove to be the money-making proposition it had been represented to be, and he lost all his money. He then rented the Gottfried Krueger farm in the town of Red Cedar, on which he remained five years, meeting with enough success to enable him to pay all his debts and save something besides. He also bought 120 acres of land in Red Cedar. At the end of five years, or in 1889, Mr. Wisner took the notion to try his fortune in the far west and accordingly went to Seattle, Wash. where until 1893 he was engineer in a brewery, but the climate there not being favorable to his health, he returned to Dunn County, Wis., and settled on his 120acre tract, on which he had made the last payment while in Seattle. It was wild and was destitute of buildings, so he began with the usual pioneer routine-made a clearing and put up a house, the latter, however, being a frame and not a log structure. Then he proceeded to build up a farm, which, besides the clearing of the land, necessitated in time the erection of other buildings. Among these was a full basement barn of 35x50 feet. In time he had 85 acres cleared, keeping the balance in pasture and timber. Also for many years he followed threshing each fall in conjunction with his other farm work. After being engaged in general farming very successfully at that location until June 25, 1913, he sold the farm and retired, taking up his residence in Menomonie to enjoy the conveniences of city life. Having bought seven lots on the Stout road, he built a substantial eight-room house and a barn, as at that time he still kept a horse. In 1918 the barn was struck by lightning and destroyed, but Mr. Wisner immediately erected another. His place is well located and an attractive and comfortable home. On Sept. 25, 1882, Mr. Wisner was united in marriage with Kate Schaaf, who was born in Eau Claire, March 7, This marriage has resulted in eight children, all but one of whom are now 1861. living. They are respectively, Emma S., Ida M., Matilda K., Phile D., George D., Edward W., and Elsie L. Margaret, the first born, was the one who died. She was born Sept. 9, 1883, and lived but a few months, dying Jan. 1, 1884. The record of the others is briefly as follows. Emma S., born Oct. 30, 1884, is now Mrs. Robert Keck of the town of Menomonie, and the mother of six children: Alvin R., born June 24, 1906; Earl F., born Sept. 24, 1907; Ralph G., born June 16, 1911; Gladys K., born June 21, 1913; Leona E., born June 16, 1916; and Helen E., born July 2, 1918. Ida M., the second surviving child of Mr. and Mrs. Wisner, was born Jan. 8, 1886, is now Mrs. Frank Knopps of the town of Menomonie, and has four children: Francis A., born Sept. 30, 1913; Inez L., born Aug. 1, 1918; Charles, born Jan. 28, 1920; and James K., born July 27, 1923. Matilda K., the next living daughter in the Wisner family, was born Feb. 16, 1890, and is now Mrs. Jacob Martinson of the town of Spring Brook. Her children, three in number, are: Harold, born Sept. 7, 1914; Almira, born March 30, 1916, and Ralph, born June 5, 1918. Phile D., the fourth child and daughter, is Mrs. Lawrence Burns of the town of Menomonie. She has four children: Lawrence D., born Oct. 22, 1914; Morris F., born March 18, 1916; Janet I., born Jan. 24, 1920; and Edward D., born Dec. 25, 1921. George D., the elder of the two surviving sons, was born Jan. 3, 1894. and is now operating the village blacksmith shop in Knapp. He married Ethel Mary Hoover and they have three children: Donald George, born April 26, 1917; Dorothy Elizabeth, born Feb. 17, 1919, and Vernon Chester, born Dec. 16, 1922. Edward W., the second son, was born Jan. 30, 1896, is now residing in Minneapolis, unmarried. Elsie L., the youngest of the surviving children of Mrs. and Mrs.

David Wisner, was born May 11, 1899. She is now Mrs. Aug. Schultz of Cadott, Wis., and is the mother of three children: Garland E., born Dec. 30, 1919; Eleanor K., born March 3, 1922, and Arden D., born Sept. 16, 1924. The Wisners are a good representative family who have ably performed a useful part in the building up of this community, at the same time making their own way in the world. They attend the German Lutheran Church.

Edwin R. Bundy, who is operating a farm of 40 acres in Section 32, town of Weston, which he has owned for the last 16 years, is a native of the eastern part of this country, having been born in New Hampshire, March 16, 1859, son of Aldice P. and Levina V. (Dupont) Bundy. The father was born in Boston, Mass., and the mother in England, the latter going to New Hampshire with her parents when young, and it was in that state that she was later married to Aldice P. Bundy. In 1861, having then two or three children, they came west to Minnesota, settling in Olmsted County, about 16 miles west of Rochester, where, until 1865, Mr. Bundy operated rented farms. In the latter year the family came to Dunn County, traveling with an ox team in winter time and settling just west of Irvington in the town of Menomonie on a tract of 80 acres of wild land, on which he put up a set of log buildings. During the first year, however, he worked for Knapp, Stout & Co. After three years' possession of the land above mentioned, Mr. Bundy sold it and moved to the town of Weston, where he had bought some government land in Section 19. There he and his family resided for four years, or until 1872, when he sold that tract also and bought 40 acres in Section 36, the tract now owned by Allen There his wife died on June 23, 1883, and he nearly five years later, on Badger. May 28, 1888. They were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are still living, and who were as follows: Curtis F., now of Elmwood, Pierce County, Wis.; Edwin R., of the town of Weston; Eugene, who is in Spokane, Wash.; Mary and Walter, who are deceased; Abbie, wife of Christ Nelson of the town of Eau Galle: George who lives in Pepin County; Charles of the town of Eau Galle, and Warren of the town of Weston. Edwin R. Bundy acquired his education in a district school in Olmsted County, Minnesota, and resided with his parents until the spring of 1881, when he went to the Black Hills in what is now South Dakota, where he was engaged for a while in the logging and lumbering business. In August, 1883, he returned to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and for one year thereafter operated the John T. Kingsley farm under rental, after that spending five years as a farm laborer working for others. He also worked for a short time at Porter's Mills in Eau Claire County. In 1889 Mr. Bundy settled on a farm in Section 35, town of Weston, which he operated for nine years, at the end of which time he sold out, and, moving to Elmwood, was engaged in logging there for a year. Then, in 1900, he went to the Wilarnic Valley, in Oregon, but in the following spring returned to Elmwood, Wis. It was in 1909 that he bought his present farm of 40 acres in Section 32, town of Weston, where he has since carried on general farming. He has improved the place by putting up a good set of buildings and has become identified with the locality as one of its best known citizens, he and his family standing high in the community and having a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Bundy was married in 1882, to Vedee Usher, who, after nearly five years of married life, died Sept. 4, 1887. She left three children, namely: Guy, born April 19, 1883, who is now living in Los Angeles, Calif.; Nora D., born Aug. 6, 1884, now a widow, Mrs. Flemming of Los Angeles; and Milo C., born June 9, 1886, who died Jan. 20, 1915. On July 4, 1892, Mr. Bundy married Emma Droel, and of this union ten children have been born, as follows: Leona B., born May 15, 1893, who married Bert Morgan and resides in Dunn County; Marshall E., born Feb. 2, 1895, who married Ethel Myers and lives in the town of Weston; Charles L., born May 13, 1897, who is now in the U.S. army, being a member of Company C, Ninth Field Artillery, stationed at Fort Snelling; Ray L., born July 31, 1890, who died April 8, 1902; Dora D., born Dec. 26, 1901; Peter, born April 17, 1904; Nellie, born April 21, 1907; Verney, born Aug. 23, 1909, and Lela H. and Lula (twins) born June 30, 1913, of whom Lula died July 29, 1914. The six youngest are all living on the home farm. Charles Braker, a former resident of the town of Weston, where he made a good record along agricultural lines, and was highly esteemed as a man and citizen, was born in the town of Eau Galle, this county, Jan. 22, 1871, son of Henry and Susan (Cunningham) Braker. As a boy he attended the Howison school in the town of Weston, and remained with his parents until 1895. In that year he started in for himself, renting the Charles Howison farm in this town and subsequently operating it for 17 years. In 1909 he bought 80 acres in Section 32, town of Weston, and in 1912 bought another 40, which adjoined the 80 on which he had settled in 1912, and here he spent the remainder of his life as an active farmer and dairyman, enterprising in character and having a good practical knowlege of his business. In 1913 he erected a fine barn of 32x80 feet in ground plan, and in 1916 built a nice nine-room house. He also improved his out buildings from time to time, as it was needed, and kept his farm well stocked with high grade and pure bred cattle. He was one of the organizers of and a stockholder in, the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, said to be the best in the county as to the volume of business done. On June 17, 1895, Mr. Braker was married in Downsville, to Arrilia Anderson, who was born in the town of Weston, daughter of Ole and Madeline (Lemon) Anderson. Mr. Braker died July 28, 1922, when but in his fifty-sixth year, his passing being an event sincerely and widely mourned. Mrs. Braker has since carried on the farm with hired help, and has increased its area by the purchase of 100 additional acres. She is a member of the Lower Weston Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Weston Community Club, and has a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Peter E. Hove, now living retired on his farm in Section 12, town of Tainter, which he developed from a crude state to its present fine condition, was born in Norway, Oct. 28, 1856, son of Evan Evanson and his wife Julia, whose name before marriage was Julia Jensen. The parents who were farmers by occupation, both died in their native land. Of their seven children, three are now living in this country, namely, Peter E., Ingebret and Knute. The others that are still living reside in Norway. Peter E. Hove spent the first 27 years of his life in his native land, and his education was obtained in the common school and at a christian military high school. As a young man he served there as deputy sheriff, and it was there that he was married in 1885 to Julia Troppen, daughter of Peter and Julia Troppen. She was one of a family of six children, one of whom, Gertrude, is now deceased. Of the others, Peter and Knute are still in Norway; Thomas, who lives in Edgerton, Wis., married Martha Jorgenson, and Eva is the wife of Ed Nethurn of Lake Preston, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Troppen, the parents, spent their entire lives in their native land. It was in the year of his marriage, 1885, that Mr. Hove came to the United States, first locating at Edgerton, in Rock County, Wis., where, however, he remained for only a year, going at the end of that time to Kindred, Cass County, N. D., where he resided five years doing farm work. His next move was to Winnebago County, Iowa, where he engaged in farming on his own account and became so prominent a citizen of his town that he was for a time chairman of the town board, besides holding other offices. It was in 1912 that he left there and came with his family to Dunn County, buying a farm of 166 acres in Section 12, town of Tainter. Mr. Hove spent six years on this place making im-provements, and during that time remodeled the barn, granary and other buildings besides breaking more land until he had 100 acres under the plow. He carried on general farming and dairying here until 1918, at which time he rented the place to neighbors, though he still owns it, and also a pleasant home in Colfax. He and his wife are the parents of ten children, as follows: Gust, born in 1885; Edwin, Dec. 25, 1888; Josephine, Oct. 18, 1891; Minnie, March 12, 1893; Clara, Aug. 3, 1895; Selma, Nov. 29, 1898; Peter, Feb. 20, 1900; Otto, Aug. 28, 1902; Esther, Jan. 8, 1905; and Gladys, Nov. 3, 1906. Josephine is the wife of Gilbert F. Gunderson of Colfax and Minnie the wife of Albert Nettum of River Falls, Pierce County, Wis.

George H. Stetler, who owns and operates a good stock and dairy farm in Section 30, town of Tainter, was born in Downsville, Dunn County, July 3, 1867, son of Henry and Catherine (Smith) Stetler. The parents were natives of Pennsylvania, the father born in 1829 and the mother on Sept. 9, 1852. Henry Stetler fought three years for the preservation of the Union. Enlisting at Gibson, Cameron

HENRY STETLER AND FAMILY

County, Penn., on Dec. 5, 1861, he was mustered into service at Harrisburg, Penn., becoming a member of Company G, 84th Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. His company was assigned to the Tenth Brigade, Third Division, Third Corps of the Army of the Potomac, and with it he took part in numerous engagements, most of which were great and sanguinary battles. They included Kensington, Fort Republic, Front Royal, Cedar Mountain, Manassas, Fredericksberg, Chancellorsville, Mine Run, Kelley's Ford, Wilderness, Strawberry Plains, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Potopotomay, Cold Harbor. Siege of Petersburg, Deep Bottom, Hatcher's Run, Popular Spring Church, besides others. Also at one time he was on guard duty at the capitol in Washington. He was discharged at Elmira, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1864, at the close of his term of service. In 1865 he came to Wisconsin and bought 80 acres of wild land in the town of Dunn, situated near the village of Downsville, building a log house and one or two other necessary buildings, and starting a farm. Having no horses or other farm equipment, he hired Ed Blank to do his land breaking for him, while he engaged in other occupations. He was a millwright by trade, but did saw filing for the Knapp. Stout & Co. at Downsville, and also for a while ran a sawmill, besides doing general farming. Subsequently he sold his farm near Downsville and bought 80 acres in the town of Sherman from Henry Roach, on which place he spent the rest of his days, developing and cultivating it. His wife Catherine is still living and resides with her son the subject of this sketch. There were eight children in the family, of whom six are now living, namely: George H., above mentioned; Emma, wife of Fred Gunlach of the town of Sherman; Cora, who married Tom Thompson and lives in Minneapolis; Mary, wife of Pat Doar of Ingram; Rutherford, a farmer in the town of Otter Creek, and Amos, who is in California. The two deceased are Sherman and Lucretia. George H. Stetler was reared on his parents' farm in the town of Sherman and acquired his education in the district school. Later he took a course in engineering in Des Moines. Then returning home, he lived on the farm, helping his father until the latter died. The property having then come into his possession, he sold it and bought 192 acres in Section 30, town of Tainter, where he is now located. This was all wild land and was cleared by himself and brother Ruthford, and he built on it a fairly substantial house, barn and other buildings and has developed it into a good farm. He does general farming, and dairying, and raises stock for the market, keeping on an average of 20 head of Shorthorn cattle, while 80 acres of his land are under the plow, the rest being in pasture and timber. Mr. Stetler was married in the city of Menomonie on May 21, 1919, to Mrs. Ida Halverson, widow of Tollef Halverson and daughter of Ed. and Ellen (Evenson) Johnson. Mrs. Stetler's parents were early settlers in Dunn County, and the father is still living; the mother died in 1898. Mrs. Stetler has four children of her first marriage, Harold, Ervin, Howard and Edna, who are residing on the farm with their mother and step-father.

Levi Vance, one of the notable pioneers of Dunn County, who gave his name to a small community in its northern part, and who, after a busy life as Indian trader, hotel keeper and public official, passed away nearly 65 years ago, was born in France in 1812 and when quite young accompanied his parents to Canada, where he spent the years of his remaining youth and early manhood. Early in the 40's, seeking further and profit, he crossed the border line into the states and located at Galena, Ill., which place, besides being noted for its lead mines, was as far as the railroad extended westward, for a number of years to come. Beyond that and across the Mississippi were the vast prairies of the little known western territory, inhabited chiefly by roving Indians and a few white traders, scouts or trappers. In Galena, Levi Vance met and married Leora Leach, and, seeing no advantage in going farther westward, they came north up the Mississippi River to Read's Landing, opposite the mouth of the Chippewa. Then crossing the greater stream, they followed the course of the Chippewa northward, until it lay too much to the eastward for their purpose, when they continued their journey northward through the woods until they reached what is now the northern part of Dunn County, finally halting at the spot now known as Vance, or Vanceberg, as it was there that Mr. Vance established a trading-post, giving it his own name. For 12 years he traded with the Sioux and Chippewa Indians for furs, his provisions and general supplies, except fish and game, being brought from Read's Landing by ox-team, the round trip taking from four to five weeks. Mr. Vance in time became well acquainted with the Indian traits of character, learned their language, and so gained their confidence that he became known as their legal and general advisor, and on a number of occasions after he came to Menomonie the Chippewas held their pow wows in his back yard. It was in 1859 that he took up his residence in this city, building a hotel on the site of the present Tourists Hotel, and which he subsequently conducted until his death in 1865, when he was also holding the office of sheriff. He was one of the best known characters in Dunn County and one of the most popular, being a favorable, and perhaps typical, representative of the generation to which he belonged. His wife, Mrs. Leora Vance, died in 1904. They had been the parents of seven children, namely, Agnes, Julia, Eliza, Thomas, Frank, Walter S. and Martin, all of whom are now deceased except Frank, who is in Montana, and Walter S., a resident of Menomonie who deals in livestock.

Walter S. Vance, a well known citizen of Menomonie, engaged in the buying and selling of live stock, was born in the little community of Vanceberg, Dunn County, Sept. 16, 1858, son of Levi and Leora (Leach) Vance, the parents being pioneers in the northern part of the county. When he was still quite young the parents settled in Menomonie and in this city, then but a small village, he pursued his elementary studies in a little schoolhouse that stood in the block just west of the present First National Bank building. Furnished with a spelling-book, an almanac, and a slate and slate pencil, he started out on his quest for knowledge, not equipped like the pupils of today, yet perhaps imbued with as much ambition to learn the things that would prove useful to him in future years. As soon as he became old enough, how-ever, he had to go to work, and, like most of the men and boys of that day in this locality, his first employers were the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, for whom he worked six winters. He then took up his father's early business of buying furs, in which he continued for many years. In or about 1876 he began buying and selling cattle and horses and has since continued in that line of business enterprise, having formerly operated three or four large stables in Menomonie, though of late years he has been active only during the summer months. He is a well known citizen of this county, where his name carries a geographical as well as a historical significance. Mr. Vance was married in Menomonie, Sept. 21, 1879, to Elizabeth Plemon, daughter of Luke and Cordelia Plemon. Her parents, natives of Canada, settled in Buffalo County, Wisconsin, whence they came to Dunn County in the early 50's, locating at Cedar Falls, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Vance are the parents of one child, Wilsie, who is now Mrs. M. M. Ames of Sheboygan, Wis.

Thomas Dodge, Civil War soldier and a pioneer of Dunn County, now passed away, was born in the state of New York, of New England parents, in July 1837. In 1854 as a youth of 17 he came with them to Dane County, Wisconsin. He had a fair practical education, having attended school in his native state. On Sept. 25, 1857, he married Sophronia Knapp of Dane County and they began domestic life and the making of a home. In 1861 the breaking out of the Civil War convulsed the country, and Mr. Dodge on October 1, that year, enlisted in Company K, 14th Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, with which organization he served until July 26, 1862, when he was mustered out at Stamburg, Tenn., on account of disability. On his return home he and his wife came to Dunn County and settled in Section 6, town of Grant, on a tract of 160 acres of partly improved land, which in time through hard work he made into a good farm, grubbing and developing the land and erecting buildings as conditions demanded or permitted. He was a member of the Farmers' Alliance, recognizing in union an important method of advance for the agriculturist. He also belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church and embraced the cause of prohibition, joining that political party. After a steady and useful life he died Sept. 6, 1908. His wife Sophronia died Oct. 30, 1918. They were the parents of five children, namely: Nellie, born July 1, 1860, now Mrs. Myron Doolittle of Saskatchewan, Canada; Rhoda, born Aug. 22, 1864, in the town of Grant, who is now Mrs. Emit P. Madison of Colfax; Harvey W., born July 27, 1876, who married Mabel Cutting and resides in Saskatchewan, Canada; Thomas, born July 11, 1862, who died in June, 1873; and Bertha, born June 19, 1869, who died in June, 1890.

George Madison, an early settler in the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County, where he improved a farm and held various public offices, was born at Milling, Penn., Oct. 30, 1831, son of Joseph E. and Melinda (Schoonover) Madison. The parents were farmers in that locality, where the father died in 1841. After that event George went to live with an old couple in New York State. where he was educated and with whom he remained until 23 years old. On Oct. 23, 1854, at Wellsville, N. Y., he was united in marriage with Jemima La Forge, who was born June 19, 1834. In 1861, some five years or more after their marriage, they came west and settled on a farm at or near Necedah, Juneau County, Wis., where they remained until 1872, at which time they sold their property there and came to Dunn County, buying 120 acres of land in the town of Sand Creek. This farm was for the most part improved and was well stocked. Mr. Madison developed the remainder of the land, however, and added another 40 acres to it, thus making a farm of 160 acres, and there he followed general farming until his death on May 28, 1897, having spent 25 years of his life on that place. He was a steady and intelligent man, taking an active interest in the welfare and development of the general community, and when called upon to serve in public office did so to the best of his ability, which was considerable. He was a member of the town board and held at different times many minor offices. The town of Sand Creek lost a good citizen when George Madison passed on. He was survived by his wife until November, 1902, when she, too, gave up this earthly life. Mr. and Mrs. George Madison were the parents of five children, all of whom are now living, and who are as follows: Emit P., born Nov. 14, 1858, now living in Colfax, Dunn County; William H., born July 7, 1864, who married Minnie Holmes and is now in Oronwood, Mich.; George B., born Dec. 28, 1867, who owns the old home farm in the town of Sand Creek; Ada, born April 3, 1871, now Mrs. Oscar Toycen of Sand Creek; and Abby, born March 21, 1874, who married Aden Knight and lives at Rice Lake, Barron County, Wis.

Emit P. Madison, now living retired in the village of Colfax, after a successful career in agriculture, was born in Steuben County, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1858, son of George and Jemima (La Forge) Madison. When he was two or three years old, or in 1861, he came with his parents to Juneau County, Wisconsin and the next ten or eleven years of his life were spent on their farm at Necedah. His education was acquired partly in public schools and partly in an academy at Necedah, where he spent three years as a pupil. It was in 1872 that he accompanied his parents to Dunn County and to a new farm in the town of Sand Creek. After beginning industrial life he worked 16 winters in the pine woods getting out logs for the lumbermen, during which period also he was married. At the age of 24 he bought a farm of 80 acres in the town of Sand Creek, to which he later added another tract of 160 acres, making a farm of 240 acres. Though some clearing had been done, the greater part of the land was wild. Mr. Madison spent the next 18 years of his life in developing this farm, at the end of which time it was a fine piece of agricultural property. His buildings included a fine basement barn of 34x56 feet and all were well planned and substantially constructed. He followed general agriculture, paying particular attention to dairying. In 1910 Mr. Madison rented his farm to a tenant and, retiring from active work, moved to the village of Colfax, where he built a fine bungalow residence, since occupied by himself and wife. He still owns the farm and in 1913 added to its value by erecting a fine nine-room house on it. He is also a stockholder in the Bank of Colfax and in the Colfax Store Company. Mr. Madison was married April 14, 1886, to Rhoda Dodge, who was born in the town of Grant, Dunn County, Aug. 22, 1864, daughter of Thomas Dodge. The children of this union are as follows: Vernon and Vernice (twins), born April 12, 1887; Guy W., born Oct. 18, 1889; Glenn, born Jan. 22, 1895; and Malcom, born April 16, 1903. Vernon, who is now farming in the town of Dovre, Barron County, married Minda Peterson and they have five children, Vera, Freeman, Donald, Harvey and Dorothy. Vernice is the wife of Alfred Peterson, a farmer in New Auburn, Chippewa County, and has three children, Erma, Beatrice and HelenJane. Guy W., now on a ranch at Wolff Point, Mont., married Victoria Sansaver. Glenn, who is conducting a confectionery store and restaurant at Colfax, first married Fanny Van Brunt, who died Jan. 15, 1918; he subsequently married Anna Wike. Malcom, a graduate from the Colfax High School, is now a student in the River Falls (Wis.) State Normal School. Mr. and Mrs. Madison and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They are good representatives of that element in the population which had to do with the making of Dunn County in a rougher stage of its progress than the present, and upon whom fell harder work than falls to the lot of those of the present generation. That work was well done and the reward of ease and comfort now enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Madison has been well earned.

Mary McCoy Crampton, who, during a long life marked for the most part by strenuous activity in the struggle for existence has shown herself one of the most capable of her sex and has achieved business success without sacrificing any part of her dignity, integrity, or any of the best attributes of womanhood, was born in County Longford, Ireland, June 5, 1856, daughter of Thomas and Ann (Morrow) McCord. The father was also a native of County Longford and the mother of There were five children in the family, John, William. Mary, County Leitrim. Anna and Alexander. John, died in Ireland. William, who came to America, became a very successful stockman, but was unfortunate in the manner of his death, which was the result of a railroad accident. Though his back was broken in two places and his neck also broken, to the astonishment of the doctors who attended him, he lived for six weeks afterward. Anna was married in Ireland to a Mr. Blakeley and still resides in that country. She had a son William who came to America and became an aeroplane manufacturer in Minneapolis. He also flew in one of his own planes and carried mail, and Mrs. Crampton has in her possession a letter that he carried on his first mail trip. Alexander, who also came to this country, was drowned in Clear Lake, Chippewa County while on a fishing excursion. Mary McCoy acquired her school education in her native land. It was in 1873 that she came to America and located at Eau Galle, Dunn County, Wis., where she entered the employ of the Carson family as cook. After remaining in the Carson home for several years, she came to Menomonie to become housekeeper in the family of Capt. Andrew Tainter, and in that position she remaind until her marriage, Oct. 10, 1877, to George W. Crampton, who was, like herself in the employ of Captain Tainter, and who was born in Vermont on Dec. 12, 1852. In 1881 Mr. and Mrs. Crampton moved to Dunnville, where for nine years they conducted the old Tainter House for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. They then returned to Menomonie, where they spent a year, the succeeding year being spent in Superior. Having experienced hardships and reverses in that city, they again returned to Menomonie, Mrs. Crampton opening a boarding-house at the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Yards which she conducted for 18 years, keeping two tables, one for the workmen and one for the officials, and during that long period she had help for only one year. She had to work hard but notwithstanding was happy and contended, and she saved her money and made a success of the enterprise. When she gave it up she bought a very nice residence at 208 Twelfth Avenue, Mencmonie, where she has since made her home and she rents some of her rooms to students attending the Stout Institute. Mr. Crampton died Feb. 22, 1915. They had two children: Thomas W., born Sept. 2, 1878, and George A., born Sept. 2, 1884. Thomas W. was graduated from the Menomonie High School and took a year's course at Stout Institute, also the electrical course of the International Correspondence School. On account of lameness he could not serve in the army but found work in the shipyards of Seattle at welding and cutting, also on punch and shear machines, and in handling the electric and steam cranes of the Skinner & Eddy Co. and the Ames Shipbuilding Co. He is now superintendent in San Francisco and Seattle for the Elliott-Fisher Typewriter and Adding Machine Company. George A. Crampton was graduated from the Eau Claire Business College. He worked in the brickvard during summer vacations and in 1905 entered the employ of the Omaha Railway at Altoona, Wis., in the roundhouse and yards, later becoming a locomotive In the spring of 1906 he worked in the car department of the company fireman. at Eau Claire, attending business school nights. In the summer he worked for the Wisconsin Pipe & Fuel Company in their office at Eau Claire, and in 1907 went to Menomonie, where he worked in the office of the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Company. In 1910 he left Menomonie to take a position in the offices of the division superintendent of the Omaha Railway at St. James, Minn., leaving there in the fall of 1914 to take a similar position in the office of the division superintendent of the Milwaukee road at Aberdeen, S. D. When the war came on, through the special recruiting service of the director general of military railways, then in charge of the railroads of the country, he obtained an assignment to the 44th Engineers. Later he obtained a furlough from railway service and enlisted in the army at the local recruiting station May 23, 1918, leaving Aberdeen the same evening for Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., where the enlistment was completed on May 28, 1918. From there he was sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Ind., where the 44th Engineers, Maintenance of Way Battalion was to be organized and equipped. By or before June 6 the work of training had been commenced. Mr. Crampton kept a diary of his experiences while in the service which contains much interesting detail, which cannot be here reproduced on account of lack of space. On July 1, he was promoted to first class private. On July 22, the battalion entrained for Camp Merritt, N. J., and on the 28th, Private Crampton was sent from Camp Merritt to Pier 4, Hoboken, N. J. on baggage detail. He and his comrades had some rough experiences and were tired and hungry, and trying to sleep on a stone pavement when rescued by a Red Cross nurse. They sailed for overseas July 30, the transports heading south to avoid reported enemy submariens. On board the troops were put through boat and fire drill and every soldier constantly wore a life belt with emergency rations sewed in the hem. A submarine attack was made on the troop ships on Sunday, Aug. 11, by several enemy submarines. The destroyers in the convoy dropped depth bombs on the submarines as their periscopes disappeared beneath the waves and there was reason to believe that two of them had been acaccounted for. None of the torpedoes fired by the enemy found a mark. The harbor of Brest was safely reached and the battalion went into camp. Though the conditions there were very unsanitary, the men having had typhoid prophylaxis treatment in the states, suffered no injury to their health. Being transferred to Rennes, they arrived there Aug. 1, going into barracks. With a part of the 61st Engineers they were put to work on railroad along the line from Rennes to Brest. After the armistice was signed Nov. 11, the camp went to town to celebrate and not only they but the French soldiers and others did so very thoroughly. Soon after that the different units were broken up and distributed among different sta-Mr. Crampton with his companions went to Nantes. Bad food brought stations. on an attack of sickness and caused injury to his stomach from which he has hardly yet completely recovered. By the middle of May some of the officers and men began receiving evacuation orders for home. On May 30, Mr. Crampton found himself promoted to sergeant-major of the Headquarters Company for good work while acting sergeant. July 20, orders were received for ten men, including himself to travel to Brest for evacuation to the States. He returned to the States, Aug. 18, and was discharged at Camp Dodge, Aug. 26, 1919, with a character en-dorsed on discharge papers as "Excellent." He is now private secretary to the general superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, with headquarters at Montevideo, Minn. He married Marion Scott and they have two children, Betty and Donald. Mrs. Crampton not only proved herself a good worker and business woman, but also a good wife and mother, seeing that her sons had sufficient educational opportunities to fit them for the battle of life. Through her own work she acquired a fair competence, and that work includes other activities in addition to those already mentioned, for at times she has accepted offers from local concerns to act as demonstrator, did similar work for the Greggs-Cooper Co. of St. Paul, and for 30 years has prepared banquets for special occasions, with respect to which latter class of work she is proud to say that she never had a failure. She is a member of the Episcopal Church and of its Woman's Guild; also of the Woman's Relief Corps, the Eastern Star and the Legion Auxilliary of the American Legion. She has many friends in Menomonie and throughout Dunn County who admire her for the qualities which brought her the success she has attained.

David Heller, pioneer landlord at Dunnville, first resident dentist of Menomonie, and early treasurer of Dunn County, was born in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, July 20, 1810. He grew up and was married in his native state to Sarah Wilson, who was born in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, which county adjoins that of Northumberland. She was a sister of the late Captain William Wilson, prominent lumberman and one of the founders of Menomonie. Her mother was a Simmons and a relative of Daniel and Noah Webster. In 1856 David Heller and his good wife located at Lakeport, Pepin County, remaining there until the spring of 1857, when they moved to Dunn County, taking charge of the Tainter House at This hotel, a famous stopping-place in the early days, was located on Dunnville. the north side of the Menomonie River, while the village of Dunnville, proper, was on the south side. In addition to operating this hotel, Mr. Heller practiced his profession as a dentist. As landlord, dentist and good citizen he became so well known that in 1859 he was elected county treasurer. During his stay at the Tainter House he bought 80 acres of land in the town of Spring Brook and built a house, barn and outbuildings, thereon. Here, about 1861, he took up his residence, combining agricultural work with the continuation of his dental practice for some two or three years. He then traded his farm for property in Menomonie, and became the first resident dentist in the city. After a useful life of busy activity he died on Sept. 3, 1868. His wife survived him 18 years and died in Menomonie on May 11, They were the parents of seven children: William T., Martin Wilson, 1887. Thomas S., James E., John A., Robert and Mary. All are dead except John A., now a prominent citizen of Menomonie. Martin Wilson Heller was one of the founders of Rice Lake, this state. He served in the Civil War, and the Grand Army Post No. 77 at Rice Lake is named in his honor. Thomas S. served three years in the First Iowa Cavalry. James E. graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and took up the practice of law in Indianapolis, Indiana. He there became a prominent attorney and jurist, was elected prosecuting attorney for the city of Indianapolis, and later elevated to the bench of the criminal court. He served in Col. Shannon's "One Hundred Day Regiment" from Indiana that was rushed to Kentucky and Tennessee to take the place of troops that had been sent to join Sherman's army on its march to the sea.

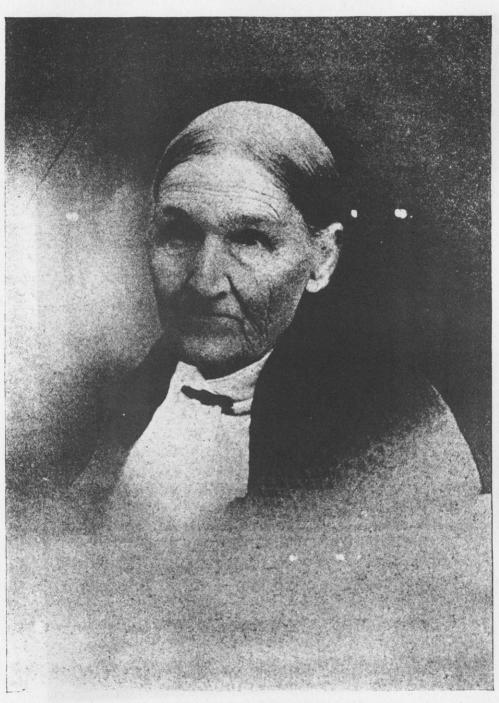

John A. Heller, prominent man of affairs, public official, and for many years a leading insurance agent of Menomonie, was born at Salona, Clinton County, Penn., March 31, 1846, the son of David and Sarah (Wilson) Heller, the pioneers. He was ten years of age when he came to Dunn County with his parents. In the following vear, 1857, he came to Menomonie and boarded with his uncle, Capt. William Wilson and attended school for a few months in the first building that was erected on the north side for school purposes. This building was a small frame structure of about 14x16 feet, and then stood on the north side of the river. The teacher was Mr. Pitman, who taught school in school hours, preached and taught Sabbath school on Sundays, and worked in the shingle mills packing shingles Saturdays and evenings. This same building also became the first school building on the east side, it being transported across the river. Mrs. Mary (Downs) Heller was the first teacher. It stood on Main Street about where the Wolf barber shop is now located, was later used by David Heller as a dental office, he being the first dentist in the village of Menomonie. This building was also later occupied by John A. Heller for many vears as a dental and insurance office. It was also used as voting headquarters for the city. About 40 years ago it was moved back from the street and used for a woodshed by Mr. Phillsbury, druggist, being later torn down. After his first few months schooling in Menomonie young Heller returned to the Tainter House at Dunnville and there attended schools taught by Miss Massee, John Cavanaugh and others. He removed with his parents to the town of Spring Brook, where he attended the school taught by Carroll Lucas and others. After that he started out to see the world and was gone three years. On reaching La Crosse, where his brother, M. W. Heller was employed in the provost-marshall's office, he was treated by him to a hair cut, a shave and a suit of clothes together with a little money. He then resumed his journey, stopping next at La Porte, Ind., where he had another brother, J. E. Hiller, in an insurance office. This brother put him in school at the La Porte academy. While he was there the news came of the surrender of Richmond, which news caused general rejoicing, the people marching through the streets with bands playing; but a little later came the news of Lincoln's assasination and the joy was turned to sorrow and mourning. Young Hiller went with others to Michigan City, where they saw Lincoln's funeral cortege pass through; and at La Porte, Ind., he heard Clara Barton, R. G. Ingersoll, John A. Logan, Horace Greeley, Bishop Clark and others, which was the start of the great American lec-ture courses. James E. Heller and H. G. Teed, who had learned the original rules of baseball at Freeport, Ill., asked John A. Heller to go out and find signers to form a ball club, which he did and the Laport ball club was organized. After some practice, in the fall they challenged the Elkhart (Ind.) team and beat them 125 to 30. The next year they played the various neighboring teams and won all the games played. The third year they wound up by challenging the "Westerners" of Indianapolis for the state championship. On their way to that city they stopped off at Lafavette and won from the team of that city, as also they did from the 'Westerners' at Minneapolis by a score of 40 to 25 on their return to La Porte they were met by the band and even a larger crowd than had met the returned soldiers. Mr. Heller then went to Chicago and saw the game between the Washington club and the Forest City club of Rockford, Ill., played at Chicago, the Forest City club winning It was this game that gave Spaulding the reputation of being the greatest baseball pitcher of that time. After that Mr. Heller went to Freeport, where he ha an aunt who paid for his taking a commercial course at the V. W. Bayless Commercial College. It is worthy of note that this Mr. Bayless and his brother also conducted a business college at Dubuque, Iowa, where James and Frank Stout received their commercial training. From Freeport John A. Heller went to Galena, where he visited relatives, and thence to Dubuque, where he called on James H. Stout and asked for work. Mr. Stout remarked, "I'll have to send you back to Menomonie, as that's where we send all those seeking work." Mr. Heller then applied to railroad headquarters, and all they could offer was a brakeman's job, and they told him they hated to offer it to a man with a "plug" hat and kid gloves. Consequently he returned to Mr. Stout, who took him to his home, treated him royally and gave him a ticket to Read's Landing. There he met T. B. Wilson, who wanted him to make a trip down the river on their new boat "Annie Gerdon," Captain Tainter having just returned with the said boat on its maiden voyage. Mr. Heller accepted the offer. Mr. Slocum and his nephew were the pilots and the two Wilcoxes were the engineers. They had an eventful trip down to La Claire, head of the rapids of Rock Island. Mr. Slocum having accidentally injured his knee, Mr. Heller took his place at the wheel, Mr. Slocum sitting in a chair and telling him what to do. On his return to Read's Landing he found that the large boats had been pulled off on account of the lateness of the season, and owing to this reason he found the opportunity of making several trips back and forth to La Crosse, carrying belated passengers, baggage and freight. He was rewarded for this work, when through, with ten dollars, a sum of money which in those days looked large to him. Mr. Wilson then sent him to Menomonie. On his arrival there-this was in the fall of 1868-he found a letter from Mr. Bayless offering him the position to take charge of the commercial department of his college at Free-Mr. Heller accepted it, telling him he would be on hand in a short time, but port. owing to his father's sickness and death (Sept. 3, 1868) he cancelled the agreement. He then entered his father's office and took up his business, although the only knowledge he had at that time of dentristry was what he had gained from helping his father when only a boy. However, by 1871 he had saved enough money to enter the dental college of Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in the following year, 1872. During the holidays while at college, he visited New York and Brooklyn, in which latter place he heard Henry Ward Beecher preach. After his graduation he went to Washington and visited his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey, the former of whom was employed in the treasury department of the government. He then returned to Menomonie and from that time until 1884 was a practicing dentist here, giving up practice in that year to care for certain other business interests, which in the meanwhile had been growing and needed closer attention. As a part of the property which came to him on his father's death were 11 colonies of bees, of which he took charge, in time increasing the number to 110 colonies, and making a name for himself through the state as one of its leading apiarists, shipping large quantities of honey to Chicago. His other interests were along real estate and insurance lines, as for over 30 years he was connected with the Northwestern Mutual Insurance Company of Milwaukee. He bought or erected a number of buildings, in 1878 buying the lot and building on the corner of Main and Fourth streets where in 1880 he erected the fine block which now houses the Barber Furniture Company. In 1882 he bought his present residence at the corner of Fourth Street and Wilson Avenue. The block on Main and Second streets which houses the Anderson drug store, P. E. Gregg's music store, Cotts & Olson's restaurant known as "The Grill," Wolf's barber shop, Golemate's shoe-shining parlor, and F. E. Miller's smoke shop and billiard hall, has been built and improved by Mr. Heller. This building is known as the Heller Block, and the second story is divided into offices and also includes the Belair photo studio. During his long and active career Dr. Heller rendered some valuable public service, at various times holding different offices. He was formerly justice of the peace, town clerk and school commissioner; also county commissioner from the second ward of Menomonie, and a member of the board of public works and of the board of education. It was about the time that he was serving in the last mentioned capacity that the first kindergarten in Dunn County was started and for a while, after the school building was burned, the kindergarten was housed on the upper floor of his building at the corner of Fourth and Main streets. In addition to his other activities, Dr. Heller was an enthusiastic hunter, his expedition in quest of game having taken him through a large part of Wisconsin and into various western states, including Texas and other parts of the Southwest. He has hunted moose, deer and buffalo, besides smaller game, and proved himself a good shot. In 1914 he and his son, W. E. Heller, of Fargo, N. D., made the Mediterranean trip, going as far as Petras in Greece, calling at Gilbralter, Genoa, Naples, outgoing, and on the return trip at Messina in Sicily, again at Naples, then at the excavated ruins of Pompeii, and again at Gibralter, whence they sailed for home. Dr. Heller is an interested member of the Masonic order, having belonged to Menomonie Lodge No. 164 for 56 years, and having served as worshipful master of the lodge and as high priest of the chapter, and on Jan. 1, 1925, he was presented with a life membership certificate by the order. He was united in marriage on July 15, 1875, to Evelyn L. Fletcher, and of this union nine children were born, whose names respectively were Mary Bird, John Albert, Charles D., William Epley, Frances Ruth, Sarah Ana, Mark Emerson, Evelyn and Esther Allyn. Their further record is briefly as follows: Mary Bird, born June 4, 1876, is now the wife of Dr. J. E. Waldron, a dentist with a large practice in Eau Claire. John Albert, born April 16, 1878, married Ida Myric and died April 8, 1918, being survived by his wife. Charles David, born April 24, 1880, was for 18 years in the employ of Marshall, Field & Co., being advertising manager for both the wholesale and retail department. He is now a member of the Rathburn-Grant-Heller Company of Chicago, manufacturers of direct and by mail advertising projects. He is also adjutant of the 122d Illinois regiment and is better known as Captain Heller. He married Margaret Demesa, a descendant of Count Demesa mentioned in French history, and they have two children, Irving and Mona. William Epley, born Jan. 20, 1882, was graduated from the Menomonie High School and the Chicago Dental College and is now practicing dentristy at Fargo, N. D. He is also interested in various business enterprises, particularly in real estate, and has a fine business rating and high social standing in the city in which he has made his home. He married Mina Hendry and they have three children, William Epley, Jr., Gordon H. and Jean Cameron. Francis Ruth, born March 9, 1884, was graduated from the Menomonie High School and the Stout Institute, and was also a student at Columbia College, New York. She is now one of the faculty of the new vocational school at Grand Rapids, Mich. She married Eugene Scoville, who is engaged in the real estate business. Sarah Ana, born April 30, 1886, is the wife of Dr. David C. Pierpont, surgeon and manager of the Pierpont Hospital at Iron wood, Mich. She has four sons, John A., David, William M. and James. Mark Emerson, born Feb. 26, 1888, lost his life in the World War, being killed in the St. Mihiel Advance, in France, Sept. 14, 1918. Evelyn, born May 17, 1890, died on the thirtieth of the same month. Esther Allyn, born July 4, 1895, died Sept. 24, 1922. She was a graduate of the Menomonie High School, a student at Columbia College, New York, and an efficient teacher. The Heller family were affiliated religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church. John A. Heller was, however, on of the first members of the Unitarian Society of Menomonie. In Chapter XXI of this volume may be found a short article by him in regard to the Indian scare of 1862

Mrs. Evelyn L. (Fletcher) Heller was born at Hastings Center, Oswego County, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1854, daughter of Albert and Marie (Kenyon) Fletcher. The mother was a relative of Commodore Oliver H. Perry, the hero in 1813 of the naval battle on Lake Erie. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Fletcher were both born in New York State and came to Menomonie, Wis., in 1871, Mr. Fletcher for a number of years thereafter holding responsible positions with the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, at one time having charge of their sawmill at Downsville and at another being in charge of their steam mill in Menomonie. He died in 1895 and was survived by his wife, who passed away on August 15, 1924, at the age of 89 years. Evelyn L. Fletcher acquired her education in the public schools of New York State and came to Menomonie with her parents in 1871, and in 1875 she was married to John A. Heller. She was a woman of refined and elevated character, which she showed in all the tenderest relations of life as wife, mother and friend. Endowed with a true christian spirit, she was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and an active worker in its auxilliary societies. This noble woman passed to the better land on April 17, 1925, her death filling many hearts with sadness; but many years shall pass ere those who knew her lose the memory of her gracious presence.

Lieutenant Mark E. Heller, hero of the Great War, who gave his life on his country's altar in order that the world might be a better place for others to live in for countless generations to come, was killed in action at Manheulles, France, in the St. Mihiel drive on Sept. 14, 1918, having led his men in a dangerous attack, and having single handed made a notable capture. His brief life was filled with worthy accomplishment, and in far off Fargo, North Dakota, the students of the North Dakota Agricultural College, eat in a dining hall and pass to their studies through an ornamental gate, both of which are monuments of his youthful enthusiasms and energetic devotion while a student there. Mark E. Heller was born in Menomonie, Feb. 26, 1888, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Heller. He attended the graded schools of his native city and then entered the high school, graduating in 1908. Desiring to see something of the world, he then secured employment with the engineering corps of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, which at that time was building its Pacific coast extension. At this junction came a thrilling experience which nearly cost him his life. His train was stalled at Helen, Mont., where the big flood of that year then raging. As there was no possible way to go farther by train, Mr. Heller, being of an ambitious nature, secured employment, but after a few days he decided to journey on, and started on foot to Taft, some 233 miles distant. He soon encountered a young man named George La Fortune, who was bound for Idaho. They traveled together for several days, headed for Undismayed by the great floods then raging, they continued on their Missoula. way, having to cross a railroad bridge which had been badly shaken and damaged by the raging flood. The woodwork was practically gone and the passage was made on swaying strands of steel. La Fortune, a halfbreed, and very agile, walked these strands but young Heller crawled across on hands and knees. Continuing westward down the river, they found an old boat owned by a Japanese truck farmer. In this they embarked, attempting to cross directly to the other side and to steer it by using poles. But on reaching mid-stream the raging current carried them down the stream, the boat was capsized and both men were plunged into the swirling waters amid logs and other debris. There were separated by an island, La Fortune being swept to one side of it and Mr. Heller on the other. It was opposite Missoula that they were sighted, and La Fortune was rescued, by a crew of men in the presence of over 300 people including city and county officials. They observed Mr. Heller but could not reach him and he was soon lost to their sight. The sheriff organized a rescue party and started down the river after him. About this time Mr. Heller managed to get astride a huge log and rode it down the current. This ride was both thrilling and dangerous. He rode into breakers that mounted ten feet above his head, he encountered whirlpools where the logs would stand almost straight up, wallowed through heavy swells with the timber whirling around and around and turning over end, altogether passing through trials and dangers from which escape may well be considered miraculous. He was finally carried on his log along the side of an island where the water was a little less agitated, and while close inshore and passing under an overhanging branch of a tree he seized hold of it, drew himself up to safety. In the meanwhile the sheriff and rescue party had followed down the river until they had got below a point where they hoped to effect a rescue provided they got there before him, but as they saw nothing of him, they gave him up for lost, and having obtained a team to haul their boat back, they started to return. When opposite the island where young Heller had found refuge, they heard him calling and having ascertained his whereabouts, rescued him with the boat, 38 hours after he had been cast into the water. They took him to Missoula, where he found La Fortune under arrest. After satisfying the public who he was and where he was going, he continued on his journey afoot to Taft where he joined the engineering corps of the C. M. & St. P. Railway engaged in putting down the extension to the Pacific coast. In a few months he suffered an attack of mountain fever and the head engineer advised him to go home. He therefore turned his face eastward, but stopped at Fargo, N. D., where he had a brother living, and for a time he was employed as physical director at the Y. M. C. A., though his health had been considerably impaired by the experiences through which he had passed. He also occupied a similar position with the Moorehead College across the river in Moorehead, Minn. Then he entered the State Agricultural College at Fargo, from which he received his degree in 1912. During those four years he was an outstanding figure in the undergraduate life of the college, being especially prominent in athletic and dramatic activities. Finding there was no eating-place for the student body, he started the movement for the erection of the "Copper Kettle Inn," now one of the features of the institution. Although he was at that time making his own way, he not only fathered the project but also financed it. He proposed and designed the beautiful campus gateway there, superintended its construction and was largely instrumental in raising the funds for it. This beautiful structure, known as Heller's gate, is now overshadowed by a beautiful memorial tree planted in his honor. After his graduation he went to Chicago and then secured employment in a large paper-mill at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. He left there with an excellent recommendation and was next employed as chemist with a large cement company at Gary, Ind., until after the completion of the Panama canal. From there he went to Chicago and entered the employ of the Marshall Field Company. For this concern he introduced the shipping of small packages by parcels post and assisted to establish the postal sub-station in their store. His next field of activity was in Kansas, his first employment in that state being as a member of the staff of the "Timesette" at Chanute He also entered into other activities there. He organized a golf company, handled and sold automobiles, was interested in a large motion picture house and was agent for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee. Shortly after the call to arms in 1917, young Heller having had three years' military experience in Company H, Third Infantry, W. N. G., offered his services to his country. Before he received his papers, showing his Wisconsin record, however, the Kansas quota had been filled. He therefore entered the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill., where he received his commission as second lieutenant. About Jan. 1, 1918, he sailed for France and was placed on detached service with an English command. For a while he was on the firing line and was then assigned to units constructing breastworks and bridges on the front. He next surveyed a valley which in the course of the fortunes of war might fall into the hands of the enemy. Upon the completion of this work he was given a furlough, which he spent in Paris. On its expiration he was assigned to Company 59th Infantry, and was thrown into the terrible offensive at St. Mihiel. There he was killed in an heroic advance on Sept. 14, 1918. He was hastily buried at Bove, near the battlefield. Later he was laid at rest in Grave 4, Section 7, Plot 1, St. Mihiel American Cemetery, 1233, Thiacourt, Meurthe-et-Moselle. His body reached Menomonie on April 15, 1919, and he is sleeping his last sleep in Evergreen Cemetery amid the scenes of his boy-Memorial services were held in his honor at Menomonie, at Fargo, and at hood Chanute, many organizations passed resolutions of respect, and bereaved letters of consolation from far and wide testifying to the high regard in which the young man had been held in every relation of life. Worthy of preservation are the two letters which his parents received from his captain and from his first sergeant. The sergeant's letter is given first.

"Ernst, Germany, Feb. 17, 1919.

John A. Heller, Menomonie, Wis.

Dear Sir:

I have been requested to write you in regard to the death of your son, Mark E. Heller, on Feb. 14, 1918. I was platoon sergeant at the time and was the first one to reach him after he fell. We were in the St. Mihiel Sector, and were advancing on the village of Manheulles. As we reached the edge of the town, Lieut. Heller and his runner broke down a door in a wall the Germans had constructed and captured two prisoners and two German machine guns. We then followed the fleeing Huns through the village and took up a position on the further side. Here we found some German maps and packs, and after our line was firmly established the lieutenant left me in charge of the platoon and said he was going to take the maps back to the captain. In the meantime the Huns started shelling the village intermittently, and a few minutes after he had left me I heard two shells coming and looked around to see where they fell. Following the explosion, I heard him call in a lusty voice, 'Help.' I looked to see where he was and he immediately called again 'Help me now.' I summoned the runners and ran toward the direction of the voice and called to him but received no answer. I ran on further and found him lying on his back unconscious. We carried him to a place of safety and I sent a runner for the first aid man, but before aid arrived the lieutenant passed away never regaining consciousness. About ten minutes elapsed between his injury and his death. We examined him and found he had been struck by a shrapnell in his right side, but the fatal wound was caused by a piece of shrapnell about the size of a fish scale which struck him almost squarely between the eyes, causing hemorrhage of the brain. Lieutenant was a brave and noble man and well liked by every man in the platoon. He was carried back and buried at Bove, France. Regretting my inability to give you more information, I wish to extend my sincere sympathy for the loss of your son. I am, dear sir,

Sincerely yours,

Sergt. B. S. Johns,

Co. D, Fifty-ninth Infantry.

The captain's letter, also written from Ernst, Germany, on Feb. 17, was as follows: John A. Heller, Menomonie, Wis. Dear Sir:

In answer to your letter of inquiry concerning your son, Mark E. Heller, I have instructed Sergt. Benjamin S. Johns, an eye witness of his death, to write and explain the details. Lieutenant Heller was killed at about 6 p. m. Sept. 14, 1918, in the St. Mihiel offensive. Having gained an objective and after placing his men in safe positions, he started through the village of Manhuelles for company Headquarters. On his way he was hit by a piece of sharpnell, which caused his nearly instant death. He was buried by Chaplain Jenny at Bove, east of Manhuelles. I can truthfully say that Lieutenant Mark E. Heller of my command was a model and an excellent leader of the men intrusted to him. He was highly esteemed and loved by everybody who came in contact with him, both by superior officers and men under him. On and before the fatal day he proved to be a fearless and efficient officer in time of danger. By his example he inspired his men with courage and enthusiasm. Personally he captured two prisoners and took over two machine guns. The loss of such an efficient officer is deeply regretted. Extending my sincere condolence to you, I am truly yours,

W. A. George,

Captain commanding Company D, Fifty-ninth Infantry.

P. S.—He was recommended for promotion a few days before his death."

William Milliron, treasurer of the incorporated village of Knapp, and formerly an active farmer in the town of Stanton, was born in Westmoreland County, Penusylvania, Sept. 15, 1848, son of Joseph and Ann Marie (Beason) Milliron, who were natives of the same state. They subsequently moved to Indiana and from that state to Rice County, Minnesota, where Joseph Milliron engaged in The rest of his life was spent there in that occupation except for a period farming. of two years, during which he conducted a farm of 160 acres in the town of Stanton, Dunn County, Wis., after which he and his wife went back to Minnesota, in which state they both died. William Milliron being young when the family moved to their Minnesota farn, acquired his education in the schools of Rice County, that state. In 1868, at the age of about 20 years, he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and bought his father's homestead in the town of Stanton. The land was covered with heavy timber, in which he made a clearing and built a log house, taking up his abode in it. Then began the hard work of improvement, cutting the timber, pulling or burning out the stumps, clearing out the brush, breaking and cultivating the soil and erecting necessary buildings. All this took time and during the few years that he lived on that place he could develop only a part of it, farming such part of it as he had cleared. In 1873 he sold the place and bought a farm of 80 acres in section 31 in the same town, on which were some slight improvements. On this latter place he remained for 30 years, in which time he effected a vast change in its appearance. It had increased its area, by additional land purchases, to 163 acres and had a good set of buildings, with a considerable part of the land under cultivation. Having followed diversified farming there until 1903, he rented the place to a tenant and moved to the village of Knapp, where he bought the residence he has since occupied. In 1894 Mr. Milliron was elected treasurer of the town of Stanton, which politically included the village of Knapp, the latter being unincorporated. After the incorporation of the village, he was elected village treasurer, which position he has since held through successive re-elections. While on the farm he rendered other public service as supervisor, chairman of the town board and member of the county board, also serving on the school board of his district. His personal record, both as a farmer and as a public official, is well known to his fellow citizens, who have confidence both in his ability and his integrity. On Jan. 4, 1874, William Milliron was united in marriage in Dunn County, with Jane Crye, who was born in Madison County, Sept. 25, 1855, daughter of John and Eda (Davis) Crye. Her parents were for a number of years well known farmers in the town of Stanton, having come to Dunn County in 1864. After a long and happy married life Mrs. Milliron met her death in an automobile accident on July 2, 1924, near Lemington, Wis., when she and Mr. Milliron were on their way to that place to visit their daughter, Mrs. Lewis E. Buckner. Mr. and Mrs. Milliron were parents of seven children, namely, Eveline, Edith, Loren E., Nellie, William, Clara and Retha, of whom William and Retha are now deceased. The record of the others is briefly as follows. Eveline has been twice married, first to Joseph Shafer, by whom she had three children, Clinton, Louis and Lucy. She is now Mrs. Alexander Page of Minneapolis. Edith is the wife of Thomas Riley of Everett, Wash., and the mother of five children, Nellie, Margaret, Eda, Thomas and Dorothy. Loren E., who is now conducting the parental farm in the town of Stanton, married Elizabeth Gross, and has seven children, Edward, Bessie, Daisy, Catherine, Fred, George and John William. Nellie is the wife of Andrew Dahlberg, a farmer in the town of Cady, St. Croix County, and has one child, Anna Jane. Clara is Mrs. Lewis E. Bruckner of Lemington, Sawyer County, Wis., where Mr. Bruckner is conducting a store including a feed business. She has two children, Margaret A. and Adrian P. The Milliron family are affiliated religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Wesley R. Vasey, now living retired in Menomonie, was for years one of the most successful farmers in Dunn County and has a record worthy of preservation. He was born in the town of Dunn, this county, Aug. 22, 1868, son of Francis T. and Phoebe (Doughty) Vasey. Francis Vasey, born in New York State in 1839, came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, in 1856 and took up land. In 1858 he was married to his first wife, Lucretia Smith, who died only two years later, in 1860. On Sept. 15, 1864 he married Phoebe A. Doughty, who was born in Bloomington, Ill., March 14, 1847. Of this second union two children were born: John E., Dec. 11, 1866, who is a prominent farmer in the town of Dunn, Dunn County; and Wesley R. of Menomonie. Wesley R. Vasey in his youth attended district school and was reared on his parents' farm, on which he worked, thus assisting them, until his marriage in 1891. He then bought 150 acres from his father, located in the same town and about three miles east, a large portion of which was developed. Mr Vasey continued the improvements on it and in time developed one of the finest farms in Dunn County, adding to his land area from time to time until he had 500 acres. He followed diversified farming, though making a specialty of hay. His building achievements are also worthy of commemoration. In 1900 he built a full basement barn measuring 40 x 100 feet, the lumber for which he had sawed himself in a mill bought for the purpose. This was the first basement barn built in the town of Dunn. In the following year, 1901, he added to his buildings a machineshed 30 x 80 feet, with a garage and corn crib attached. The year 1904 saw the erection of a fine modern 12-room residence of 34 x 28 feet in ground dimensions and two stories in height. An individual electric light plant and home waterworks system were installed for house and barn, the latter convenience including a 300barrel cistern. The house is furnished with steam heat and bath. Then in 1919 a fine cut-stone garage of 24 by 36 feet was built, having a capacity of five cars. Mr. Vasey also installed an oil tank and gas pump and conducted a filling station. He entered largely into dairying, milking as high as 44 cows at one time. In 1918 he raised and sold over five thousand dollars' worth of wheat, and in the following year raised and sold nearly 150 bushels of clover seed. During his latter years on the farm nearly all his work was carried on by motor power, tractors, trucks and other motor power machinery being freely used. In 1923 Mr. Vasey sold his farm, stock and tools and moved to Menomonie, buying a fine modern eight-room residence on the corner of Tenth and Main streets that was formerly owned by Dr. B. J. Steeves. Mr. Vasey for 17 years was treasurer of School District No. 4, town of Dunn. He belongs to the fraternal order of Beavers, the Independent Order of Good Templars, and has been a member of the M.E. Church since he was 11 years old. Mr. Vasev was married April 8, 1891, to Fannie Cochram, who was born in the town of Lucas, Dunn County, Sept. 12, 1867, daughter of Osmond and Ann (Rick) Cochram. The parents, natives of England, were married in that country and started at once for the United States, thus making the journey to this country a sort of honeymoon trip, but they never went back to their native land. For two years after arriving in America they resided in New York City, then came west to Milwaukee, where they made their home for four years, and at the end of that time to Dunn County, driving from Milwaukee with a pair of steers and a pair of heifers.

From the Fox River company they bought 40 acres of wild land in the town of Lucas, which they ultimately developed into a fine farm, increasing its area at different times until they owned 400 acres. Mr. Cochram also built the first 100foot basement barn in Dunn County. He was well known through the county, especially for his social accomplishments, being a good singer and knowing quite a variety of songs, some of which he used to render at meetings of the Old Settlers' Association, of which he was a member, and also on other suitable occasions. He is well remembered by all the old settlers who are now living. He died on the farm, Jan. 10, 1916; she then took up her home with her daughter, Mrs. Henrietta Sherwood in Menomonie, where she passed away, Aug. 7, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Vasey have been the parents of seven children, Emily, Ethel Lois, Paul L., Mildred Janc, Cecil F., Alice I. and Florence M., of whom the following is a partial record. Emily, born May 9, 1892, died Jan. 11, 1894. Ethel Lois, born June 15, 1893, was graduated in 1911 from the Central Holiness University at University Park, Iowa, after which she taught school two years at Wilmot, S. D. She then reentered the university and took another two-years' course. At the end of that period she became a student in the University of Wisconsin, from which she was graduated in mathematics. During one semester she taught that science in the school at West Allis, Wis., and later for two years at Proctor, Minn. She married Leonard Albaugh of Menomonie, but still follows teaching, doing some vocational and substitute work. Paul L. Vasey, born March 18, 1895, is a partner in the insurance firm of Ingram-Vasey Insurance Co., with headquarters in Menomonie. He married Lonaverne Harshman and they have an adopted child, Orville Winston by name. Mildred Jane Vasey, born May 31, 1896, was graduated from the Central Holiness University at University Park, Iowa, with the class of 1914. She then taught school four years in South Dakota, after which she went to Washington, D. C., where she was employed in the war risk department of the government. Then returning to South Dakota, she resumed teaching, being thus occupied for four years more. She is now Mrs. Ralph Sanders, her husband being superintendent of schools of Roberts County, S. D. They have one child, Donald. Cecil F. Vasey, born Sept. 8, 1899, for many years remained on the home farm assisting his father. He married Bessie Sanders and they now reside in Menomonie, he being associated with his father in the trucking and long distance hauling business, they have one child, Virginia Francis. Alice I. Vasey, born Sept. 14, 1904, was graduated from the rural schools and at the age of 16 years from the Menomonie High School. She was a student one one year in the Eau Claire State Normal School and one year at the state university. She is now Mrs. D. L. Gibson, and resides in Racine, Wis. Florence M. Vasey, born Feb. 12, 1906, was graduated from the rural schools, and in 1922 at 16 years of age, from the Menomonie High School. She then entered the state university where she is now a student.

Sever Running, more familiarly known as "Sam" Running, who has built up a considerable nursery and fruit raising business at North Menomonie and elsewhere, and who for some years led an adventurous life, was born in Trondhjem, Norway, May 20, 1857, son of Johan Arnt and Anne Hanson. The mother died in Norway in 1887, and in 1890 Sever, who had then been for some eight or nine years in the United States, sent for his father and for his brother Peter, who accordingly also came to this country. The father died in 1902, in Norway, to which country he had returned. Peter is now in the real estate business in Minneapolis. Sever Running after attending public school, entered the officers' military school at Trondhjem, where he completed certain prescribed courses, after which he entered the Flag Junker School in Christiania, Norway, from which he was graduated in the class of 1877. He then spent four years in an attorney's office. It was in 1881 that he came to the United States, locating in Menomonie, Wis., the fame of which place as a lumber center with ready employment for new comers had reached his native Thus he found it, and after entering the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. land. Company, he was soon made cashier and bookkeeper and as such worked for the company for ten years. He then started a nursery business in Menomonie, raising plants and shrubs, and combining with it the production of apples and small fruits, and he continued in that line of business for 17 consecutive years. In 1898 the country, and the civilized world generally, was excited by the news of the discovery of gold in Alaska, and at once thousands of individuals, singly or in parties, set out for the new land of sudden fortunes. It was a long and terrible journey, an many never reached the goal but perished on the way. Undeterred by their misfortunes, however, if they knew anything about them, a multitude of others pressed onwards, some to lose their lives through the hazards of the journey, others to reach the promised land only to fail in obtaining any part of the wealth that was there for those who could find it and bear it safely away, and others-a much smaller number—to meet with fortune and return home wealthy. The excitement at the time proved so contagious that Mr. Running was also seized with the gold fever, and together with William Fox, Ole Lien, George Quilling, Robert Midtlyng, and his son Axel, set out for Alaska and the Klondike, with all essential supplies. Soon after their arrival there, Mr. Midtlyng and Mr. Running were caught in a terrible snow storm on the summit of Chilkat Pass, along the trail where goods were left at various points for the mule freighters to haul to their various destinations. Thev were unfamiliar with the route and the blowing storm had entirely obliterated the Thus they were practically lost. Mr. Midtlyng, in fact, gave up, expecting trial. to perish that night, but Mr. Running not being so easily frightened, looked about for a place where they could burrow in the snow and remain until the storm had abated and the trail was reopened. As luck would have it, they found one of these piles of goods and there found a shovel, some sacks and a sled. With this material together with their own sled, they built a framework and piled it over with snow, and their blankets around them they spent the night. Though it was very cold, they had plenty to eat and passed the night in a fairly comfortable manner. About day break others came along and broke the trial. Thus they were liberated and pushed on to where they had done their clearing and there joined the rest of the company who had preceded them before the storm. The amount of gold that he and Mr. Midtlyng found, however, after they had been operating for some time, was so small that Mr. Running became tired of the useless quest and turned his attention to fishing, an occupation in which he was an expert, and in which he met with good success, his car sometimes reaching 100 pounds in a day, which he sold at one dollar per pound. He also traversed the whole length of the Yukon River from Lake Linderman to Cape Nome, in a boat that he himself had built on Lake Linderman, and which was made of whip-sawed lumber, he also sailed on Behring Sea, like a hardy viking, from Fort Michaels to Cape Nome, all alone in his boat, and towing behind him a smaller boat laden with 700 oil cloth suits that he had purchased in Dawson City, a mercantile adventure that proved successful, as, on arriving at Cape Nome he sold them all at a good profit. The successful issue of this venture was quite possibly due to the seaworthy qualities of his boat, which he had built expressly to stand hard wear and tear, and to sail on perilous waters, backed by his own strength and skill as a sailor and oarsman. After spending three years filled with incident and adventure in that distant region, Mr. Running returned home and resumed his fruit growing business, to which he has since given his attention. He has had interests in this line at Eau Claire and Minneapolis and now has 15 acres at North Menomonie, which he devotes to the raising of strawberries, raspberries, apples, and various plants and shrubs. In 1908, with William A. Starr of Eau Claire, he set out a fine apple orchard of 100 acres in the town of Weston, the trees of which are now in good bearing condition and are proving productive. Mr. Running still owns an interest in this orchard, which is operated under the name of the Weston Orchard Company, the Wealthy apple being their chief pro-His nursery at North Menomonie is known as the Sam Running Nursery. duction. At various times he has rendered useful public service. He was alderman for eight years from the first ward of Menomonie, was president of the city council for two years, and as supervisor and a member of the county board. In religion he is a Unitarian. life, died Nov. 28, 1919. She had been the mother of ten children, two of whom died in infancy. The others were: Ingvald, who resides in Minneapolis; Annie, now Mrs.Ed Steen of Minneapolis, and the mother of two children, Olin and Clifford; Gunder, wife of A. R. Wilson of Cleveland, Ohio; Samuel, engaged in the automobile and battery repair business in Minneapolis, who is married and has two children, James and Paul; Kate, now Mrs. Louis Abendroth of Minneapolis; Lillian, of Minneapolis; Clarence of Superior, and Axel, who accompanied his father on the Alaskan trip, and who died while engaged in railroad work for the government. Axel had married at San Francisco and left one child, Alice.

Dana C. Coolidge, president of the Downing State Bank and owner of Fairnook and Coolcraft Farms, near that village, was born in St. Cloud, Fond du Lac County, Wis., Aug. 22, 1871, son of John and Elizabeth (Coleman) Coolidge. The father, a native of New Hampshire, and the mother, of New York State, were married in Plymouth, Sheboygan County, Wis., and the former, John Coolidge, established himself in the mercantile business in St. Cloud. Later, however, he became a railroad contractor for the old Wisconsin Central Railway, now the "Soo" line, for which he built mony miles of road, also furnishing poles and ties. In 1881 he settled in Eau Claire, of which city he remained a resident until 1885, when he moved to Minneapolis. In 1882 he, with certain associates, built the plant of the Downing Manufacturing Company, and he was active in the manufacturing business and in railroad construction until his death on May 8, 1891. His wife, Elizabeth, passed away on June 9, 1914. They had two children: Dana C., subject of this sketch; and Marshall H., formerly of Minneapolis, but now deceased. Dana C. Coolidge was educated in the public schools of Wisconsin and at Pillsbury Academy, being graduated from the latter institution with the class of 1891. After his father's death he came to Downing and with his brother Marshall took over the father's business-that of lumber manufacturing-which they carried on until their timber was exhausted, Dana C. managing the Downing interests, while Marshall H. had charge of those in Minneapolis. In 1901 the subject of this sketch reorganized the company, which is now engaged in the manufacture of show cases and refrigerators, he being its president. In 1901 also he organized the Downing State Bank, of which he has since been president, and he has also organized banks in Wheeler, Glenwood City and Star Prairie. In addition to the above mentioned enterprises, he has for the past 25 years been actively engaged in farming. The Fairnook and Coolcroft Farms-both well equipped dairy farms, with good herds of Holstein cattle-are located near Downing in the town of Tiffany. "Fairnook Farms" is situated upon a group of hills with gently rolling fields and meadows, comprising a tract of 600 acres. The district is free from marshes and stagnant pools and is one of the best dairy sections of the state. Three beautiful, swift-running trout streams, fed by numerous springs, course their way through the valley. The herd is composed of high grade Holstein and Guernsey cows. The Guernsey gives the high butter fat and deep yellow color to the milk; the Holstein supplies a high percentage of solids- not fats- and noted for its digestibility. It is recornized that this combination produces delicious flavor and a healthful beverage and food. Federal and state veterinarians inspect the herd and furnish the proprietor annually with an accredited herd certificate. These inspections are frequent and include also examination of the buildings, equipment and the men employed. Cleanliness is the rule at Fairnook Farms, and it is a rule rigidly enforced down to the minutest detail. Every man in the dairy department must pass a strict medical examination before he is employed. Barns are swept, washed, and thoroughly cleaned each day. Particular care is devoted to the grooming of the cows. Their udders are washed and wiped before each milking, and at all times they are cleaned on the milking side as well as over the entire udder. Clean uniforms are worn by the milkers and milk room attendants. Milk cans, pails, strainers and all other utensils, are sterilized twice a day and subject to intense heat for 30 minutes. Daily examinations are made in the laboratory of the Minnesota State Board of Health, so that a force of experts is always on guard. Immediately after drawing, the milk is cooled to 38 degrees, bottled sealed and packed in ice ready for shipment. The result of these precautions is a very superior quality of certified milk, in which lurks no insidious foe to health, as may be the case when such precautions are not taken. Dana C. Coolidge organized and was the first president of the Dunn and St. Croix Counties Holstein Breeders' Association. He is a director of the Holstein Breeders' Club and Cow Testing Association, and a charter member of the Cooperative Shipping Association. He has also been active in various other ways. For over 30 years the Coolidge Company has been engaged in buying and selling Wisconsin lands. It is organized under the strict Wisconsin corporation law and has a capital of $100,000 fully paid up. Mr. Coolidge was a member of the Assembly from Dunn County, unopposed, and serving two terms; a member of the county board three years and chairman two years; a trustee of Dunn County Asylum three years, and president of the village of Downing for a number of terms. He is a member of the Masonic lodge at Glenwood City and of the Odd Fellows' in Downing. For many years he has been a live factor in the development of Dunn County and his usefulness as a progressive and representative citizen of the best type is generally recognized throughout the county. Mr. Coolidge was married in Minneapolis, on Feb. 27, 1900, to Amy M. Robertson, who died in May 8, 1919. She left four children: Dorothy and Jack, who are attending the University of Minnesota; Dann died Jan. 8, 1925, and Philip J., a pupil in the Downing school.

John E. Vasey, a well known farmer and respected citizen residing in the Louisville settlement in the town of Dunn, was born in this locality Dec. 11, 1866, son of Francis T. and Phoebe (Doughty) Vasey. The father was born in the state of New York in 1839, and came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, in 1856, taking up land. He was one of the pioneers of the county, using the word "pioneer" in its strictest sense and not as it is too frequently applied to any early settler; for, when he came, there were very few white people in the county, which was mostly a wilderness. Indians there were and plenty of wild game, and for years to come life was a fierce struggle with nature. But for that struggle Francis T. Vasey was well equipped and in time he surmounted all obstacles, despising dangers, and developed a good farm. He was first married in 1858, two years after his arrival in the county, to Lucretia Smith, who died two years later, in 1860. It is impossible for a reader of heart and intelligent apprehension to withhold a tribute of admiration for the brave women who left comfortable homes in civilized communities to accompany their husbands into such a wilderness as Dunn County was in the 50's and still later. It meant not only hard work sufficient to wear out any but the strongest, but also possible dangers from savages, wild beasts, floods, prairie fires, sudden illness with no doctor at hand, and the care of bearing and rearing children; yet there were many who did it, saying "Good bye" to parents, other relatives, and friends, whom they might never see again, and in some cases didn't. So it was with Mr. Vasey's first wife Lucretia. On Sept. 15, 1864, he married his second, whose maiden name was Phoebe A. Doughty, and who was born in Bloomington, Ill., March 14, 1847. They had two children: John E., born Dec. 11, 1866, and Wesley R., born Aug. 22, 1868. Both Mr. and Mrs. Francis T. Vasey have passed on and are no longer numbered among the living; but in their day they were known and respected as people who well performed their part in life, helping to build those conditions of civilized life which the present generation is enjoying and their names are worthy of enduring record. John E. Vasey attended public school in Louisville settlement, which was named in honor of the pioneer, Theodore Louis. Until arriving at the age of 25 years he remained home, helping his father to develop the farm. Then in the fall of 1890 he bought a farm of 150 acres in Sections 4 and 5, town of Dunn. The property was improved, having a fairly good house, with some small out-buildings. Here Mr. Vasey made his start as an independent farmer and made steady progress. In 1905 he installed a portable sawmill on his place and sawed with it the lumber that he used in the erection of his two large barns and out-buildings. He also raised his house and made other improvements in it, being engaged in general farming and sawmill work. He has added to his land until he now owns 690 acres, on which are two good sets of buildings. In his early activities he raised beef cattle, sheep and hogs, but in latter years he has worked into dairy farming and a large herd of Holstein cattle, with three pure bred sires, graze in the fields that gave pasture to his former Galloways. Thus Mr. Vasey has kept up with the times, but is no longer as active as formerly, as in 1921 he rented his farms and is at present living on a 40-acre tract belonging to his son, on which he keeps some sheep, horses and two cows. He cleared and broke about 100 acres of his land in addition to what was cleared when he bought it. On Aug. 18, 1924, Mr. Vasey lost his large barn by fire, but has replaced it with a new one in the Gothic, or balloon, style with full basement and patent equipment. The grand dimensions of this barn are 40×120 feet. Mr. Vasey was married July 13, 1892, to Agnes M. Harshman, who was born in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County, Jan. 7, 1874, daughter of Daniel D. and Lovina (Curtis) Harshman. The issue of this marriage was six children, one of whom, Helen A., died at the age of ten years and another in infancy unnamed. The survivors are Clarence E., Julius F., Howard L. and Hazel P., whose further record is briefly as follows. Clarence E., born May 16, 1893, is now a prominent farmer in the town of Dunn. He has been twice married; first to Flossie Powers, who died Feb. 4, 1920, leaving four children, Helen, Mabel, Clarence E., Jr. and Francis T. Clarence E. (Sr.) married secondly Myrtle Tinnea of Illiuois. Julius F., born June 10, 1895, and who is now renting and conducting his father's farm, married Eva Eighmy of Forest Center, town of Spring Brook, Dunn County. Howard L., born Dec. 19, 1898, is in the employ of the street car company in Milwaukee. Hazel P., born Aug. 19, 1902, was graduated from the River Falls State Normal School and is now a supervising teacher in Iowa County, Wisconsin. The Vasey family-those at least who are at home-are affiliated religiously with the Louisville M. E. Church, John E. Vasey belonging fraternally to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Beavers' Reserve Fund society.

George Harris Chamberlain, one of the notable pioneers of Dunn County, and for many years a popular and representative citizen of Rock Falls, was born in Canaan, Grafton County, N. H., on Jan. 12, 1827. His education was acquired mainly at Newbury, Vt. After leaving school he worked in a meat market in Manchester, N. H., for two years, and was subsequently engaged in the same occupation at Clinton, Mass., for two years and a half. Then in 1851 he came west, settling at Briggsville. Marquette County, Wis., where he resided until 1856. In that year he moved to Dunn County and settled at Rock Falls, near which place he bought 400 acres of land. In the following year he bought the Rock Falls flour mills, which he conducted alone until 1861. He then formed a partnership with his father-in-law, Daniel Weston, for whom the town of Weston was named, and until 1869, they carried on a store in addition to the flour mill, in that year selling the mill property. In 1884 Mr. Weston died, after which event Mr. Chamberlain continued for many years to conduct the store, besides operating a farm. In fact for more than half a century he was one of the leading citizens in the southeastern part of Dunn County, and during that long period held many offices of trust. Appointed postmaster of Rock Falls by President Buchanan in 1857, he held that office continuously for 50 years, retiring only in 1907 when the rural route was established from Caryville. He was undoubtedly by that time the oldest postmaster in the United States in point of continuous service. Mr. Chamberlain continued to reside in Rock Falls until 1912, when he moved to Minnesota. As a part of his public record it should be mentioned that he represented Dunn County in the state assembly in the session of 1881, and won considerable prominence as a member of that body. Mr. Chamberlain was married June 29, 1852, to Antoinette Weston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Weston, pioneers of Dunn County, and of this marriage four sons and a daughter were born, namely, Daniel, Jabiel, Frank, George and Nettie. It was with his daughter, who married Milton Mc Neil, that Mr. Chamberlain moved to Mankato, Minn., and in October, 1914, to Faribault, Minn., and it was at her home that he died on July 16, 1921. His wife Antoinette, who was born Oct. 11, 1833, died Jan. 7, 1909.

O. C. Berg, proprietor of Sunny Slope Stock Farm in Section 29, town of Dunn, is a man who has attained prosperity by many years of earnest effort and is now both widely known and well respected in his community. He was born at Tuna, Norway,

LOUIS C. FINDER AND FAMILY

March 11, 1859, son of Christian Nelson and his wife, Ellen Anderson, who were natives of the same place and died there, the mother in 1885 and the father in 1894. After attending school, he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native land until 1880, in which year he emigrated to the United States. Coming directly to Menomonie, Wis., he entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co., Company and for three years worked in their mill. At the end of that time he began his career as a farmer on his own account, buying 160 acres of land in Section 29, town of Dunn, on which stood a small log shack and a log barn with straw roof, and into the house or shack he moved with his wife, to whom he had been married on April 12, 1883. Her maiden name was Anna Anderson; she was born in Norway, Aug. 18, 1861, and came to this country in 1881, locating in Menomonie. Together they started to build up a farm home, and it was not long before some progress was perceptible, as in 1884 the log shack gave place to a more substantial and commodious dwelling. As the years went on he improved more and more of his land, making such improvements in his buildings as were needed, but it was in 1913 that he set about to thoroughly modernize his farm, in that year building a fine, full-basement barn, 34 x 72 feet in ground plan, and attaching to it a good silo of 14 x 34 feet; and in the following year he converted his house into a fine 12-room residence, fitted out so far as possible, with modern conveniences. Since then he has built a machine house or shed, 100 feet long, with sliding doors to house his machinery; and a blacksmith's shop equipped with all necessary tools. His water supply is derived from a well 130 feet deep, sunk on a hill to get the necessary elevation for an adequate pressure, the water being raised by windmill power and answering all the purposes of a good domestic waterworks system. These improvements have greatly increased the value of the property and made it one of the best farms of its size in the town of Dunn. It is well stocked with grade Holstein cattle, in the herd being a pure bred sire, and during the last few years Mr. Berg has made dairying the chief branch of his business, though he also does some mixed farming in the raising of crops. He formerly served one term on the district school board. On March 26, 1916, he sustained a severe bereavement in the death of his beloved wife Anna, to whom much of his prosperity and happiness were due. They had been the parents of a large family, numbering 14 children, all now living, namely: Christina E., Axel W., Öscar W., Helga, Carl, Agnes, Clara, Ragna, Hjalmer. Martha, Richard, Albert, Victor and Walter, in regard to whom the following data may be added. Christina E., born Jan. 6, 1884, is now Mrs. Carl Severson of the town of Dunn, this county, and is the mother of four children, Helmer, Alvin, Elvina and Clara. Axel W., born April 2, 1885, is now a farmer in Alberta, Canada. Oscar W., born July 7, 1887, is unmarried and conducts the home farm for his father. Helga, born Aug. 24, 1888, is living on the home farm. Carl. born Jan. 9, 1890, is in Alberta, Canada. Agnes, born Nov. 19, 1891, is the wife of Lars Ness of Alberta, Canada, and has two children, Oliver and Helen. Clara, born March 10, 1893, and Ragna, born Nov. 21, 1894, were both graduated from the Dunn County Normal School and are now teachers. Hjalmer, born Feb. 27, 1896, is single and makes his home on the farm. Martha, born Feb. 28, 1898, is employed in the office of a Minneapolis business concern. Richard, born March 12, 1900, is on the home farm, as also is Albert, born Nov. 30, 1902. Victor, born Oct. 12, 1904, died Feb. 3, 1925. Walter, was born June 15, 1905. In July, 1923, Mr. Berg left home on a trip to his native land, which he wished to see once more before he grew too old to travel. He spent some six or seven months there, returning in February, 1924.

Louis C. Finder, proprietor of "Level Farm" in Section 24, town of Lucas, was born in Germany, Nov. 22, 1864, son of Carl and Minnie Finder. The family came to this country from Germany in 1867, landing at New York and coming directly west to Lake Mills, Jefferson County, Wis., where Mr. and Mrs. Carl Finder made their home for ten years. Then in 1877 they came to Dunn County and began the creation of a farm, buying 80 acres of timber land in Section 24, town of Lucas. Renting a small shack from the lumber company, they made their home in it until Mr. Finder had erected a log barn, in which they lived during the first winter. In the spring Mr. Finder built a house, into which they moved . He continued to operate and improve the farm until 1891, when he sold it to his son Louis and went back to Lake Mills in Jefferson County, where he and his wife lived for ten years, at the end of that time returning to Dunn County and taking up their residence in Menomonie. Their last years were spent in that city, Mr. Finder passing away Dec. 20, 1915, and Mrs. Finder in March 12, 1924. They were the parents of eight children: Hannah, now Mrs. John Raider of Menomonie; August, deceased; William, of Lake Mills, Wis.; Minnie, who is Mrs. Fred Stubb of North Menomonie; Louis, subject of this sketch; Amelia, now deceased; Herman, now in Sashkatchewan, Canada; and Emma, now Mrs. Cornelius Duniman of Waterloo, Wis. Louis C. Finder, who came to Dunn County with his parents in 1877, subsequently remained with them, helping his father to develop the farm. As already mentioned, he bought it in 1891, when his parents returned to Jefferson County, and he has since made some important improvements on his own account, having erecting a complete set of fine buildings, among them a barn of 34 x 74 feet in ground plan, with modern equipment; a tile silo of 14 x 46 feet; a machine shed 20 x 72 feet; a granary 18 x 3? feet, grain shed, of 20 x 70 feet, and a good seven-room residence. These buildings are lighted with a carbon gas system. Mr. Finder has also added to his farm 40 acres in Section 25, so that he now has a farm of 120 acres, 70 of which are under cultivation. He keeps Holstein cattle, having a pure bred sire in the herd and is a stockholder in the New Hudson Road Creamery. He was married April 16, 1893, in the city of Menomonie, to Elizabeth Houss, who was born June 9, 1870, in the town of Menomonie, daughter of Jacob and Augusta (Petrich) Houss. Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Finder, the record of whom is briefly as follows. Martha, born Feb. 3, 1894, is now following the profession of trained nurse at Benton Harbor, Mich.; Walter, born July 31, 1895, is in the employ of the Wisconsin Telephone Company, with headquarters in Chicago. Emil, born March 19, 1897, is a farmer in the town of Lucas. He married Mammie Behling and has one child, Gordon. Alvina and Tena (twins) were born July 14, 1899. Alvina died Feb. 22, 1902, Tena is now Mrs. Frank, her husband being a farmer in the town of Menomonie. They have one child, Marion. Albert, born Oct. 19, 1901, is one the home farm. Mary, born Dec. 8, 1904, is in training at Benton Harbor, Mich., for the profession of nurse. Caroline, born March 4, 1907, is at home. Emma, born Aug. $\hat{3}$, 1908, is attending high school in Menomonie. Agnes, born May 4, 1912, is attending grade school. The family are members of St. Paul's German Lutheran Congregation in Menomonie

Elnathan Baker, a well known and respected citizen of the town of Hay River. proprietor of a good farm in Sections 12, 13 and 14, who has been a resident of Dunn County for 47 years and active in more than one line of enterprise, was born in the town of Oake Grove, Pierce County, Wis., Nov. 3, 1861, son of David W. and Elizabeth J. (Monroe) Baker. The father was born in the state of New York, March 30, 1823, and the mother on Feb. 18, 1839, at Zane, Logan County, Ohio. They were married by the Rev. J. L. Borton at Hale, Hardin County, Ohio, on Aug. 13, 1856, and came west in the fall of that year, settling on a homestead in Pierce County, Wisconsin, which at that time was a wilderness. Mr. Baker was a minister of the Protestant Methodist Church and was active in that capacity for over 40 years, but he received little for his services, as the people of the communities in which he and his family lived were nearly all poor, and the denomination was not a strong one in numbers nor wealth. His own life, and that of his faithful hardworking wife, seems to have been a long struggle against poverty and adverse conditions, and the family endured many privations. From Pierce County they moved in 1875 to Goldfield, in Wright County, Iowa, which is in the northern central part of that state, and there they remained until the spring of 1877, when they returned to Wisconsin, Mr. Baker homesteading 160 acres of wild land in the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County. The family then numbered seven persons, himself and wife and five children, and they were so poor that they sometimes subsisted for days on potatoes and salt. Not only was the nearest market 30 miles distant, but the soil of the farm was poor and sandy, the surface also being rough and hilly. The journey to Menomonie had to be made on foot, or with an ox team or "an old plug" of a horse. It seems to have been a poor choice of location, but perhaps was the best that Mr. Baker could make at the time; in any case he stuck to it and in time managed to break 40 acres of his farm. It is pleasing to record that he and his wife had easier times in their latter years, for as their children grew up they proved helpful and the old folks no longer had to toil despairingly for a living that was little better than starvation. They both attained advanced years, David W. Baker dying in Sand Creek on July 14, 1907, and Mrs. Elizabeth J. Baker at Sumner, Wash., on Aug. 5, 1924. Their children were nine in number, namely: Joseph I., born Aug. 10, 1857, now in Sumner, Wash.; Elnathan, subject of this sketch; Electa A., born July 19, 1863, who died in infancy; David, born July 7, 1865, deceased; Eva M., born May 12, 1868, now the wife of James A. Bortle of Sumner, Wash.; Lily J., born March 27, 1870, deceased; James F., born Sept. 22, 1872, now of Van Norman, Mont.; Edith, born Feb. 28, 1875, wife of John Hogan of Cabin Creek, Mont.; and Alice, born Sept. 17, 1877, wife of Riley Day of Kelso, Wash. Elnathan Baker remained with his parents until he was 21 years old. He then began farming on his own account, homesteading 160 acres of wild land in the town of Sand Creek and putting up a set of log buildings. He took his parents to this place, caring for them, and lived there six years, during which time he improved much of the land. He then turned the farm over to his brother James, the latter to take care of the parents, and went to Lochiel, then a hamlet in the town of Hay River, about three miles north of Wheeler, where he entered the employ of D. D. McPherson, who, with his brother Alexander (called Sandy) was running a grist mill and mercantile business there, Sandy taking care of the engine, while Mr. Baker superintended the manufacture of the flour and feed. There he remained for 14 years, or until about 1896, when he left the mill and settled on some land which he had previously bought, consisting of 120 acres on Sections 23 and 26 in the town of Hay River, and about a mile north of the village of Wheeler. It was all wild land and without buildings, so its development into a farm was a pioneer task. There Mr. Baker lived for 12 years, by the end of which time he had cleared much of the land and had a good set of buildings. Then selling it, he bought 160 acres on Section 14, town of Hay River, which also was a wild tract without buildings. He added to it 40 acres on Section 13 and 80 acres on Section 12, thus making a farm of 280 acres and erecting a good set of buildings, including a silo, on the original 160 He also put in some good stock. He has good buildings on his 80-acre tract. tract in Section 12, on which he put his son James; but the latter died in 1923 and Mr. Baker, with his wife and son, George F., are now living on it, while another son, Victor, operates the 160 and 40-acre tracts. For a number of years Mr. Baker has taken a prominent and helpful part in local affairs of a public character. He was chairman of the board of supervisors of the town of Hay River for 12 years, from 1901 to 1913, and therefore a member of the county board; was chairman of the. first highway commission for Dunn County, and clerk of School District No. 5 for 12 years. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Baker was married April 2, 1888, to Laura B. Bortle, who was born in Trempealeau County, Wis., Feb. 6, 1867, daughter of Philip J. and Mary J. (Clark) Bortle of the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County. Her parents were natives of New York State who had come west and settled in Trempealeau County about 1851. They later moved to Dunn County, not very long after it had been set off from Chippewa, which was in 1854, and were residents here for many years. The mother died first, on Nov. 11, 1894, while she was on a visit to Trempealeau County; the father, surviving her several years, died in Eau Claire on March 28, 1897. They had left Dunn County before Mrs. Bortle's death, and were then residents of Eau Claire. The children in the Bortle family were: Henry G., of whom there is no special mention; Mary Elizabeth, wife of Stephen Baldridge of the town of Sand Creek; Charles F., who lives at Argo, Minn.; Lafayette, of Pulman, Wash.; Jeanette E., wife of Frank Barry of Puyallup, Wash.; James A. of Sumner, Wash.; Adeline E., wife of Henry Hawkes of Frankfort, S. D.; Laura B., now Mrs. Elnathan Baker; Myra, wife of Frank Ranken of Sanger, S. D., and Royal M., who lives in Eau Claire. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Elnathan Baker, ten in number, are: Leonard E., born Nov. 8, 1889, now a resident of Boyceville, who married Chloe Harbit, and has five children, Emma, George, Hettie and Hattie (twins) and Laura; Lawrence A., born Feb. 3, 1890, now a master sergeant in the U. S. anny, who is married and has two children, Gladys and Albert; Maybelle, born Feb. 16, 1891, wife of Malcolm Grogan of Fall Creek, Eau Claire County, and the mother of four children, Edward, Alvin, Arline and Franklin; Edward O., born Aug. 6, 1892, who while in the medical department of the U. S. military service, died at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, on Oct. 14, 1918, from influenza; Hugh G., born March 19, 1895; James M., born Feb. 12, 1897, who married Olga Hoff and died April 10, 1923, leaving one child, Earl Franklin; Hettie, born Feb. 5, 1898, now Mrs. Emil Score of the town of Sherman, who has two children, Orville and Elaine; Victor E., born Dec. 9, 1901, as already mentioned, who married Allie Root of Granton, Clark County and has one child, Dorothy May; Minta E., born Aug. 24, 1905, who resides at home with her parents, and George F., who is also at home. The family are affiliated religiously with the Methodist Church.

Hugo Boerner, of Section 16, town of Menomonie is a man with a good agricultural record, proprietor of a farm of 200 acres with good buildings. He was born in the province of Thuringen, Germany, Sept. 2, 1873, son of Frederick and Fredericka (Notnagel) Boerner. The family came to the United States in 1887, proceeding directly west to Dunn County, and for several years thereafter they resided with Settey Singerhaus in the town of Menomonie. With him Hugo Boerner remained until 1891, at which time he entered the employ of the Coffin Box & Lumber Co. at Irvington, where he worked for 11 years. He then bought part of the land which forms his present farm—160 acres in Section 16—of which but a small part had then been cleated. During the years that have since elapsed he has worked persistently and had achieved some excellent results, all without hired help. He has cleared 75 acres and he built a large barn, which he installed with the James & Libby equipment. In 1922 he erected a fine residence of concrete block construction with a ground plan of 32 x 36 feet, and containing 11 rooms. He has also bought another 40 acres of land. His operations have been crowned with success and in addition to his direct farming interests he is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery. He is now serving on the school board of District No. 9. Mr. Boerner was married May 20, 1902, in the city of Menomonie, to Mary Werner, who was born in Dunn County, Nov. 12, 1884, daughter of August and Louise (Moischiek) Werner, the former of whom is now deceased, Mrs. Boerner's mother residing with her. To Mr. and Mrs. Boerner seven children have been born: Emil, Feb. 23, 1903; Martha, Feb. 17, 1904; Irma, April 27, 1905; Albert, Jan. 1, 1910; Milton, May 24, 1912; Norma, March 18, 1914, and Hugo, Dec. 12, 1924.

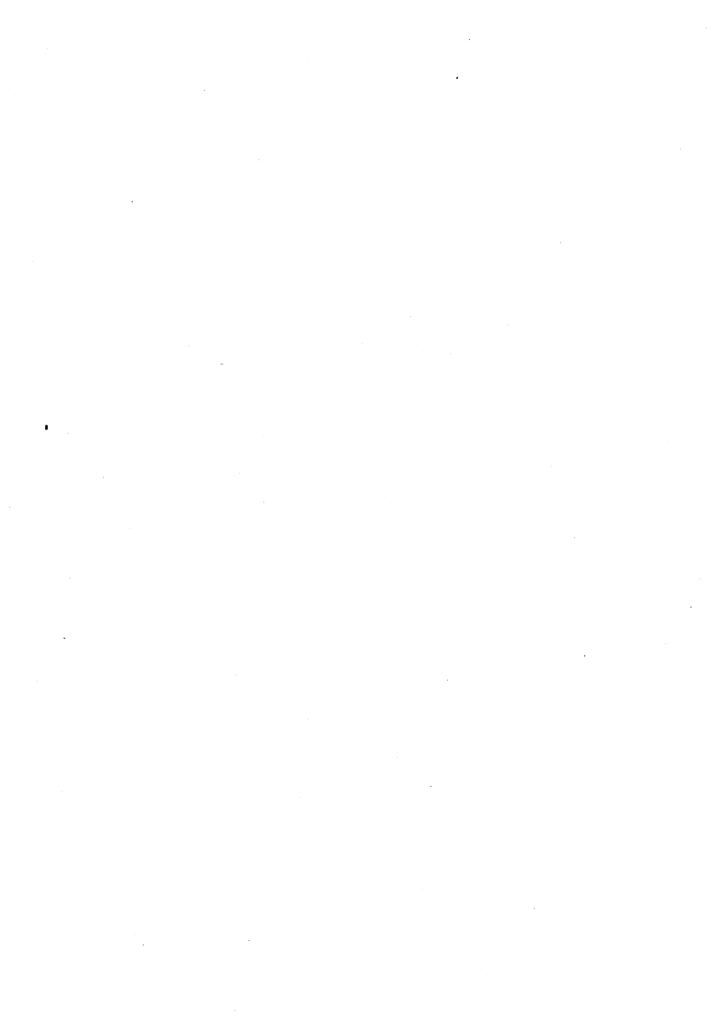

Herbert L. Barnhart, proprietor of Golden Glow Farm, situated in Section 21, town of Red Cedar, was born in Richland County, Wis., Dec. 12, 1874, son of Enoch E. and Martha A. (Hughes) Barnhart. The father was born in Oswego County, New York, and subsequently went from there to Ohio, where he met and married Martha A. Hughes, who was a native of that state. Later they moved to Indiana and while residing there he enlisted for service in the Civil War, becoming a member of an infantry company from Ft. Wayne. After the war they settled in Richland County, Wisconsin, where they engaged in farming and for many years were well known and prominent people. There Enoch B. Barnhart died in 1890, and his wife, surviving him over 30 years, passed away in 1921. They were the parents of eight children, eight of whom are now living, namely: George B., of Richland County, Wis.; Herbert L., subject of this sketch; Ernest B., residing in Kansas; Eugene of Richland County, Wis.; Marion E., who married a Mr. King and lives in Richland County, and Alice L., now Mrs. William Critchfield of Rusk County, Wisconsin. Herbert L. Barnhart was educated in the common schools of Richland County and remained at home with his parents until reaching the age of 17 years. He then spent some years doing farm labor in southern Wisconsin, in Illinois and in Iowa. In the year 1900 he began farming for himself, renting a farm in Richland County, Wisconsin, which he operated for nine years. In 1909 he bought a farm, which was the first he had owned, and which he sold two years later, buying another, and also two more after that, owning and operating in succession four different farms in Richland and Iowa counties, this state. In the spring of 1920 Mr. Barnhart came to Dunn County and bought the J. B. Chickering farm in Section 21, town of Red Cedar, which is the one he is now operating. It contains 160 acres and he has greatly improved it in a number of respects, particularly in regard to the buildings, which he has modernized. He is engaged in dairy farming, having a herd of 40 high grade Holsteins, seven of which are pure bred, and he is milking 25. Mr. Barnhart is an active member of the Dunn County Holstein Breeders' Association, and also president of the Dunn County Grain Growers Association, besides being a stockholder in the Rusk Co-operative Creamery. He was married Jan. 4, 1900, in Richland County, to Mamie Bobb, who was born in that county Sept. 21, 1879, daughter of John G. and Ada W. (Wakefield) Bobb. Her mother is now deceased but her father is living and resides with Mr. and Mrs. Barnhart. The latter have four children, all residing at home and who were born as follows: Arthur H., Oct. 17, 1900; Ada M., Dec. 5, 1905. Mvra. Sept. 12, 1907, and Elbert L., July 12, 1914.

Sanford Baum, farmer, dairyman, and fruit grower, of Section 17, town of Wilson, was born in Fulton County, New York, Sept. 24, 1854, son of John and Mary C. (Shear) Baum. The parents were natives of New York State, the father born in Montgomery County and the mother in Herkimer County, the father being of Holland Dutch ancestry. The Baums were early settlers in the Mohawk River Valley, and at a later date the grandfather of the subject of this sketch served in the war with Mexico (1845-46). John Baum, father of Sanford, was a farmer in New York State until 1867, when he came west with his family to Winnesheik County, Iowa, where he farmed two years. He then took a homestead in Martin County, Minn., where he and his wife spent their last years. They had nine children, of whom the only ones now living are Sanford, Castilla, Elmina and Roxie. Castilla has been twice married; first to Gust Cole, and after his death to Ben Ashley of Jackson, Minn., where she is now living. Elmina married Al Welcome, for whom the village of Welcome, Minn., was named. He died and she is now living in Martin, Minn. Roxie is the wife of Will Ellis of Butte, Mont. The five children now deceased are James W., J. Melvin, Alexander, Mary and Sarah. Sanford Baum was 13 years old when his parents moved to Minnesota. In Winnesheik County, Iowa, he had attended school but such knowledge as he gained after that was largely self-acquired. He resided on his parents' farm until 1876, when at the age of 22 years he was married, at Martin, Minn., to Emma Neal, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Neal. Her parents were of English birth and had settled in Minnesota a number of years before. In the year of his marriage to this, his first wife, Mr. Baum took what was called a "tree claim" in the town of Manyaske, Martin County, Minn. Such claims, consisting usually of prairie land, as Mr. Baum's was, were granted by the government to those who would set out a certain number of trees on them, and look after them until they had obtained a good start and were strong and hardy. Mr. Baum proved his claim in this manner, and by building a barn and granary and then sold the property and in 1892 went to Arkansas, where he bought a farm on which was a large apple orchard. This place he later traded for 80 acres in Section 17, town of Wilson, Dunn County, Wis. It was in 1895 when he took possession and he found 30 acres cleared, and a log house on the place, which house he "sided up," also building an addition and plastering it all inside, which made it a comfortable dwelling. He also erected a barn, granary, machine shed, etc. and put up all necessary fencing. At the present time he has 54 acres of the land under the plow, the balance being in timber and pasture. He had made good progress in general farming and dairying, keeping grade Guernsey cattle. He also raises hogs and has a one-acre orchard of bearing apple trees. He is a stockholder in the Ridgeland Telephone Company and the Ridgeland Cooperative Creamery. By his first wife, Emma, Mr. Baum had two daughters, Leona M., wife of Fred Therburg of La Crosse, and Eva Pearl, wife of Frank Bellis of Montana. Mr. Baum's present wife, whom he married in Arkansas, in June, 1894, was Mrs. Blance E. Keener, daughter of Lewis A. B. and Amanda C. (Knode) Griffith, her parents, who were born in Maryland, becoming settlers in Missouri and Iowa. By her first husband Mrs. Baum had two sons, Oscar and Ralph of Montana. Ralph enlisted in a Montana regiment after this country had entered the war, but owning to sickness saw no active service.

Andrew Anderson, proprietor of Maple Grove Farm in Section 4 of the town of Spring Brook-the Section 4 in Township 26 north that is included in the Chippewa bottoms, being near the river-was born in the city of Menomonie, Dunn County, Wis., Oct. 31, 1869. His parents, Esten and Ingeborg (Dragseth) Anderson, were natives of Soknedalen, Norway, the father born Nov. 8, 1835, and the mother Nov. 2, 1837. They were married in 1861 and emigrated to America in the spring of 1868, being landed at Quebec, Canada, whence they came directly to Dunn County, Wisconsin. The last stage of their journey was made up the Chippewa River and they disembarked from a small steamer at Rumsey's Landing, and thence went on to Menomonie, where Mr. Anderson found work with Knapp, Stout & Co. After two years in the lumbering industry, in 1870 he bought part of the farm on which the subject of this sketch was born-a tract of 60 acres in Section 4, Township 26 north, or the political town of Spring Brook. It was unimproved and for a while the Andersons resided with the Solberg family until Mr. Anderson could put up a small house, which he built with lumber in Eau Claire and rafted down the Chippewa River. Having learned the trade of carpenter in his native land, he was able to put up the house himself, and he also erected all his other buildings, besides doing carpenter work for other settlers as they came in. After he had cleared most of his 60 acres he bought 40 more later he put up a new set of buildings better suited to modern needs, and continued to improve and successfully cultivate his farm. In very early days the family bought their provisions at Rumsey's Landing, where there was a store. They got their mail at Rock Falls until a post office was established at old Meridean. In the latter place he helped to establish the Norwegian Lutheran Church, which was built by his brother, John Burke. He drove in much of the piling in the Chippewa River which held the lumber company's logs. After having established a good home in his adopted land, in 1905 he made a visit to his old home in Norway, meeting some of the friends of his youth who still survived. His death occurred on his farm, Jan. 28, 1918, and was an event much regretted in the community. His wife Ingeborg, who survived him, is still living on the old homestead with her son Andrew and is now 87 years old. Thev were worthy people who did their part well in helping to build up the community in which they settled. They were the parents of six children: Mary, now Mrs. Ole Froseth of Eau Claire, and the mother of five children, Alfred, Elmer, Mirnie, Inga and Oscar; Andrew, the direct subject of this memoir; Edward, now a farmer in Eau Claire County, who married Ingeborg Running, and has six children, Mabel, Elroy, Olga, Edwin, Inga and Helen; John, a resident of St. Paul, who married Mary Bye and has three children, Ernest, Lucille and Eunice; Ole, of Terry, Mont., who married A. Mandia Wilson and has two children, James and Alice; and Peter, of Outlook, Mont., who married Olga Wagnild. Andrew Anderson acquired his education in the Foss Brook school and remained at home assisting his father in improving and cultivating the farm, of which he was manager for several years. In 1915 it was deeded to him and he has since been the sole proprietor. He operates it according to modern methods, showing himself progressive and enterprising and has taken his place among the leading farmers of his town. His cattle are high grade Guernseys, the herd containing a pure bred sire, and he is a stockholder in the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery and the Caryville Telephone Company, and president and treasurer of the Chippewa Bottoms Threshing Machine Company. He has been a director and treasurer of the Foss Brook school for 20 years and is a Deacon in the Spring Brook Norwegian Lutheran Church, having become so in 1923. On June 3, 1911, Andrew Anderson was married in the town of Spring Brook to Ida Holte, who was born in this town March 2, 1885, daughter of John and Guru (Holte) Holte. He and his wife are the parents of two children: Esten J., born June 3, 1912, and Gunda I., born June 16, 1915. Coming of good pioneer stock, and with careful home and church training, they should make good future citizens of this country.

John Holte, an early settler in the southern part of Dunn County, and, as the creator of a good farm, a benefactor to the county's agricultural interests, was born in Soknedalen, Norway, March 2, 1843. He first came to this country in 1868 or 1869, locating at Downsville, Dunn County, Wis., where he worked seven years for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. He then returned to Norway, where he married Guru Holte, a native of the same place as himself, and after remaining there until 1882, he came again to the United States, this time accompanied by his family. For two years he worked for the lumber company at old Meridean, sometimes referred to as the Meridean Lumber Co., but which in the course of years underwent several changes in ownership. In 1884 Mr. Holte turned his attention to farming, buying the Oscar Mossier farm of 160 acres in Section 35, town of Spring Brook, which he developed into a fine place, there spending the rest of his life. He died July 1, 1918, having made a good record as a pioneer farmer of this county. His wife Guru, who survived him, is still living on the farm, which is now owned and operated by her son Bert. This son, who married Inga Dragseth, has four children, John, Harry, Oscar and Gerhart. There were three other children in the Holte family: Ida, now Mrs. Andrew Anderson of the town of Spring Brook; Andrew, who died at the age of 26 years, and one who died a babe.

Oliver E. Losness, proprietor of Meadow Brook Stock Farm, an excellent farm in Section 4, town of Otter Creek, which he began to develop nearly 40 years ago, was born in Norway, Oct. 15, 1859, son of Ingebret O. and Goro (Ostergaard) Losness. The father was a carpenter by trade, and also to some extent a farmer. He emigrated to the United States with his family in 1870, settling first in Fillmore County, Minn., where he rented a farm, remaining there for five years. Then in 1875 he and they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, traveling in a covered wagon, somewhat resembling the old-fashioned "prairie-schooners" that made the California trip in the 50's. It was drawn by oxen and progress was slow, all the more so as some cattle were brought along, aside from the draught oxen, and it fell to the task of young Oliver, then about 15 years old, to drive them. That trip was made half a century ago but he well remembers it, as it took seven days to make it. On arriving in Dunn County the parents took a homestead of 160 acres in Section 4, town of Otter Creek. The tract was all wild and they were the third settlers in the valley. A short distance from the primitive dwelling which they put up was an encampment of Indians, who were engaged in hunting and trapping along Otter Creek. There were then plenty of deer and some bear, the former sometimes coming almost up to the house. With the help of his son Oliver, Ingebret O. Losness cleared all his land. His original house and barn were log structures, the barn having a straw roof. He was a man 62 years old when he settled in Dunn County, having been born in 1813, and he lived 24 years longer, dying on his farm in 1899 at the age of 86. As a general farmer he had for those days made good progress. His wife Goro died some years before him, in 1891. Oliver E. Losness, who was his parents' only child, obtained his schooling in Filmore County, Minnesota, and after coming with them to Dunn County was given plenty of work on the farm by his father, whom he helped to clear and cultivate the land. Their nearest tradingpoint was Menomonie about 20 miles away, and it took two days to make the trip with the ox team. To that place, the county seat, they used to take their grain for sale bringing back supplies for the household. Many times Oliver walked there and back to transact business. In 1886, several years before his father's death, he took over the farm of 160 acres and has since been its proprietor. He has both enlarged and improved it, as it is now a farm of 260 acres, of which he has 120 under the plow, the balance as yet being in pasture and timber. He has built a ten-room frame house, doing all the carpenter work himself. In 1924 he erected a fine modern barn of 34 x 86 feet in ground plan, with a full stone basement and installed with Stevenson stanchions and drinking-cups, and among his various buildings are two good silos. At the present time he has 25 head of grade Holstein cattle, raises Duroc-Jerseys hog, and is carrying on general farming and dairying with good success. One of the prominent citizens of his town, Mr. Losness has for 34 years taken an active part in local affairs. He served as town clerk for 19 years, and has served as town treasurer and assessor, also as school clerk for 20 vears. For one year he was chairman of the board town of supervisors and therefore a member of the county board, and he has been jury commissioner for 27 years. In all of these offices he has shown efficiency and his work has been helpful to his town and district. He is today a man widely known and as widely respected. Mr. Losness was married in Dunn County Feb. 8, 1891, to Olava Berg, who was born in Norway, Sept. 14, 1871, daughter of Rasmus and Marit (Olson) Berg, and who came to the United States when 18 years old. Two of her brothers, Ole and Morris, also came to this country and are now in North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver E. Losness have been the parents of 12 children, of whom 11 are now living, namely: Gunda, Edwin, Robert, Albert, Oscar, Mabel, Nina, Otto, Florence, Hazel and Helen, the one deceased being Julius. Gunda is the wife of Henry Barttrum of Duluth and they have an adopted daughter, Betty Jane. Edwin, who is farming near Colfax, married Mabel Moen and has three children, Leonard, Mildred and Loraine. Robert, now residing in Minneapolis, married Ruby Ankney and has one child, Marleys Ruth. The other surviving children are living on the home farm. Robert and Albert were inducted into the United States' service in the World War, Robert serving nine months in the coast artillery at Fort Warden, Wash. He was discharged at Camp Grant. Albert served ten months in the ordinance department, being stationed first at Madison, Wis., thence going to Virginia, from there to Baltimore, Md., and finally to Camp Wingate, N. M., where he remained the longest and where he was finally discharged. It is worthy of mention that in 1924 Mr. and Mrs. Losness rode in an automobile to Fillmore County, Minnesota, in seven hours, a trip in which in 1875 it had taken them seven days to make with ox team-traveling in the contrary direction.

Edwin C. Ajer, one of the younger business men of the village of Colfax, a member of the Ajer-Iverson Mercantile Co., was born in Glenwood City, St. Croix County, Wis., Feb. 15, 1893. son of Andrew and Anna (Sivertson) Ajer. At the age of seven years he came to Colfax with his parents, and here he attended the grade and high schools, being graduated from the latter with the class of 1908. For a year subsequently he was a student at Gale College, Galesville, Wis., and then went to Goodhue County, Minnesota, where his father was conducting a general store. There he remained six months, at the end of which time, in 1910, Andrew Ajer moved his stock of goods to Boyceville, Dunn County, Wis., at which place Edwin C. spent another six months working in the store. Then in January, 1911, he entered the Bank of Boyceville as assistant cashier, in which position he spent some nine years, remaining until 1920. During the year 1921 he was in the real estate business, which he followed in various places throughout the state, selling village and city lots at auction. In January, 1922, Mr. Ajer came to Colfax and organized the Ajer-Iberson Mercantile Co., a corporation with A. J. Ajer president, Sam K. Iverson vice president, and himself as secretary, treasurer and manager. Having bought the store and bankrupt stock of the Lee Mercantile Co., they put on two big sales and sold all the old stock, which they replaced with new, and they have placed the business on a firm foundation and are making a success Their building is a two and a half story brick structure, with full basement. of it. measuring 62 x 128 feet in ground dimensions. A part of the main floor is used for the dry goods and shoe department, another part for hardware, and at the rear is the grocery department and office, the basement being used for storage. The concern is one in which the village and towns people have confidence and patronage largely, as only high standard goods are sold and only fair profits sought. On July 6, 1918, Mr. Ajer, then 25 years old, was drafted for war service, from Menomonie, and was ordered to Columbus Barracks, Ohio. From there he was transferred to Camp Hancock, Georgia, and later to Camp Sevier, S. C., where he was assigned to the 60th Machine Gun Battalion, 20th Division. He was promoted from the rank of corporal to that of sergeant major and remained in South Carolina until he received his discharge, Feb. 3, 1919. On Nov. 15, 1921, he was married in Red Wing, Minn., to Lillie Gaard, daughter of Kewis and Lena (Boyd) Gaard. Her parents are now living in Boyceville, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Ajer have two children, Warren E., born Sept. 24, 1922, and Merle W., born March 19, 1924.

Sam K. Iverson, a prominent citizen of the village of Colfax, and a member of the Ajer-Iverson Mercantile Co., was born in the town of Tainter, Dunn County, Jan. 10, 1885, son of Ingbrett and Agnette (Simonson) Iverson. The father was born in Stavanger, Norway, June 16, 1837. He grew to manhood in his native land, became a shipbuilder, and in 1869 was there married to Karen Larson. In 1872 they came to the United States, first settling in Milwaukee, where they remained five years, Ingrett Iverson working in ship yards. But in their hearts they cherished an ambition to own a homestead which they might spend their subsequent years in improving and making more valuable and where they could be free and independent for the rest of their days. With this object in view, in 1877 they came to Dunn County and took up a homestead, of 160 acres, in the town of Tainter. In the following year, however, Mrs. Karen Iverson was taken from her sorrowful family by death, and one fair plan was marred. But the duties of life give us but little time to indulge in grief and Mr. Iverson kept on working, endeavoring to improve the property. It was some years before he again married, but in 1884 he was united to Agnette Simonson, who proved a loving and worthy companion and helpmate. Together they resided on the homestead until Mr. Iver-son's death on July 26, 1912. The farm was then taken over by their son, Sam K., with whom Mrs. Iverson now resides in Colfax. She is now 77 years old. There was one other child of Mr. Iverson's second marriage, namely, Ellen, who married Lovin Lauritson and died July 27, 1913. Sam K. Iverson in boyhood attended district school in the town of Tainter. On his father's death, being then in his twenty-eighth year, he bought the interests of the other heirs and subsequently continued to operate the farm until 1920, when he rented it out and moved to Colfax. The farm, which contains 200 acres, is known as Triplet Spring Farm. It has a fine set of buildings and is well stocked with pure bred and high grade Guernsey cattle. Besides giving it all necessary attention, Mr. Iverson from 1914 to 1920 conducted a real estate office in Colfax, and he still carries on some real estate operations. In 1918 he organized the Colfax Farm Loan Association, one of the largest associations of the kind in the state, which he has served ever since as secretary and treasurer. It was in January, 1922, that he became one of the members and vice president of the Ajer-Iverson Mercantile Co., an enterprise to which he is now giving his chief attention and which is proving very successful. At different times in his career Mr. Iverson has rendered some useful public serv-He served as school clerk of his district for a year, and from 1906 to 1920 he ice. was treasurer of the town of Tainter. He was married in that town, Oct. 1, 1913, to Caroline Johnson, daughter of Erick and Mattie (Knutson) Johnson. Both her parents died in 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Iverson are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church in Colfax, of which the former is secretary, the latter being a member of the Ladies' Aid Society. They have four children, who were born as follows: Edna V., July 7, 1914; Vernon J., Feb. 29, 1916; Kenneth V., Feb. 11, 1918; and Velma G., Jan. 6, 1920.

Knute Bergum, a well known and representative farmer of the town of Hay River, residing in Section 1, was born in Waage, Gudbrandsdalen, Norway, July 1, 1863, son of Sever and Tena (Olson) Bergum. Of his parents' seven children he was the fifth in order of birth. After remaining in his native land until he was about 20 years old, he came in 1883 to the United States, whither his brother Ole had preceded him, and located in Menomonie, Wis., where he spent a part of his first summer working in a sawmill and the rest of it as a section hand on the C. M. & St. P. Railway. On his arrival he could speak no English but gradually picked up a workable knowledge of it through hearing it spoken. In August, 1884, he and his brother Ole contracted for 160 acres of wild land on Section 1, town of Hay River, but until 1889 Knute continued to work in mills in Chippewa Falls and for the railway company on the section. Then he and his brother took possession of the land they had bought and started improvements, Ole later selling his interest to Knute. To the original 120 acres the latter has added 80, making a farm of 240 acres, which he has brought into a good state of development and cultivation. His first buildings were small log structures, but those he has now include a good frame two-story house, well heated and supplied with hot and cold water: two good barns, two stave silos, a good hog house and others. The farm is well stocked with grade Holstein cattle, a pure bred sire being included in the herd, and Mr. Bergum has a good equipment of teams, tools and machinery. He is doing general farming and dairving, and since he came to this country 41 years ago, a young man or boy without capital save health and strength, he has made steady progress and has something to show for his many years of hard work. He has also attained sufficient prominence in his community to make his aid sought for in the affairs of local government. He was clerk of his school district, No. 3, for 28 years. Then a number of years ago he became one of the town supervisors, serving three vears as a member of the side board, and from 1913 to 1923 as chairman, thus for ten years being a member of the county board. He is a stockholder in the Farmers State Bank of Ridgeland. Mr. Bergum was married, Jan. 3, 1893, to Sarah Tuveng, who was born in Menomonie, Wis., May 17, 1873, daughter of Nels and Mary (Christianson) Tuveng, the parents having come to this country from Norway in June, 1869. Mr. Tuveng was for several years an employee of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, after which he settled with his family on a farm in the town of Hav River, where he died May 16, 1918. His wife is still living. Their children were: Ole, now on the home farm; Charles, in California; Sarah, wife of Knute Bergum, and Tilda, who is now deceased. All were born in Dunn County except Ole. Mr. and Mrs. Bergum are the parents of six children, Sever Nelmer, Martin, Theodore M., Mabel E., Minnie and Estella K. Sever Nelmer, born Nov. 21, 1894, is residing on the home farm assisting his father. Martin, born April 9, 1897, was inducted for war service and left on Aug. 31, 1918, for camp at Indianapolis, where he trained. He was not called into active service and returned home Dec. 17, 1918. He is now on the home farm. Theodore M., born July 2, 1900, was graduated from the Colfax High School and subsequently from St. Olaf College at Northfield, Minn., having specialized in chemistry. In 1923 he was principal of the high school in Bowman, N. D., and in the following year held a similar position at Fort Benton, Mont. Mabel E., born July 5, 1907, who was graduated from the Dunn County Training School in 1923, is now teaching rural school not far from home. Minnie, born Jan. 5, 1910, is a student in the Colfax High School. Estella K., born Nov. 8, 1912, has not completed her education. In the summer of 1888, five years after his arrival in this country, Mr. Bergum brought his father, mother, and other members of the family to America and they settled in Menomonie, the parents in the spring of 1889 going to live on his farm. They remained with him for nine years and then went to Duluth on a visit to their son John. While there the mother died, the father passing away later, on June 3, 1903. They had seven children, whose record in brief is as follows: Marith, now deceased, was the wife of Ole Torgenson of Rice Lake, Wis.; Ragna, who married Severt Mark of Rice Lake, is now a widow; Betsy is Mrs. Charles Anderson of Brainard, Minn.; John resides at Moose Lake, Minn.; Ole is in Detroit, Mich.; Knute is the subject of this sketch, and Mary, who was Mrs. Knute Larson of Rice Lake, is now deceased.

Evangeliste Belair, a veteran lumberman now retired and living in Menomonie, was born in eastern Canada, Dec. 27, 1845, son of Joseph and Amable (Payment) Belair. He attended school in Canada and remained there until 19 years old, at which time he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, then the active scene of logging and lumbering activity. Here he entered the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co., who soon sent him to Chetek, Barron County, to help built the dam there. While thus engaged, or about three weeks after he had begun work for the company they sent him to Rice Lake to make hay for the winter, and then back to Chetek to look after a logging camp while the foreman was absent in Canada. He there met with a great misfortune, for the first tree he fell broke his leg, and that so badly that a week later he had to have it amputated at the knee. That put him on the useless list for two years, during which time he resided with his brother at Chippewa Falls. At the end of that time, being able to work again, though not at logging, he reentered the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. as a filer and remained with the company (after 1878 known as Knapp, Stout & Co. Company) for 36 years. At the end of that long period he went to Stillwater, Minn., to work for the Hershey Lumber Co., but once again he was unlucky, for within a few days, while working in the mill an accident deprived him of the thumb of his right hand and for five years thereafter he was unable to work. He then took over the care of the East Side school in Menomonie, and was thus occupied for five years, at the end of which time he retired and made a visit to his old home in Canada. Since his return he has lived retired in Menomonie. Mr. Belair was married Jan. 11, 1881, in Menomonie, to Elizabeth Eder, who was born in East Edan, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1856, daughter of John and Margaret (Wiess) Eder. Coming west in 1869 her parents settled in Nicollet County, Minnesota, where they resided until 1890, spending the remainder of their lives in St. Paul. Mr. and Mrs. Belair have had two children, both now living: George E. of Menomonie, and Florence, who is the wife of Arthur Bondurand of Madison, S. D. The family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Congregation.

George E. Belair, proprietor of one of the best equipped and most modern photographic art studios in Northern Wisconsin, which is also the oldest establishment of its kind in the city of Menomonie, was born in this city, Oct. 18, 1881, son of Evangeliste and Elizabeth (Eder) Belair. After acquiring a considerable part of his education in the Catholic parochial school, he pursued further studies in the Menomonie High School. He then began industrial life in the employ of the Dunn County News, but after a short time left the printing-office to take up the more artistic business above mentioned. Having studied general art and music under Prof. Jacob Miller of Menomonie, he entered in 1899 the photographic studio of Milton Swant. In the following year he entered the studio of R. O. Helsom, by whom he was employed until 1908. In that year he bought a half interest in it, and thus continued until 1913, when he bought the remaining half interest, becoming sole owner. He has greatly improved the studio by introducing more modern facilities for lighting, and by replacing the old cameras with others of the latest construction and with more perfect lenses, so that he is now able to produce whatever artistic effect he has in mind. He has devoted many years of serious study to his profession. and his work stamps him as a fine artist. This is a fact so widely recognized that his pictures have been hung at the Pittsburg salon, Pittsburg, Penn., the Frederick and Nelson Exhibit at Seattle, Wash., the International Exhibit held in New York, and at conventions of the Photographic Association of America, and of the North-Central Photographic Association, of which organizations he is a member. Locally he is a member of the Menomonie Commercial Club, having also served on its board of directors; of the Beavers' Reserve Fund lodge, and of St. Joseph's Catholic Congregation of the Knights of Columbus.

Peter Bertilson, a prominent farmer of Section 17, town of Menomonie, was born in Denmark, March 31, 1866, son of Nels and Mary (Peterson) Bertilson. He was reared and educated in his native land and at the age of 20, in 1886, came to the United States, locating first in Detroit, Mich., where for four months he was employed in the railroad shops. In the fall of the same year he came to Dunn County and for a year thereafter was engaged in farm labor here. Then going to Minneapolis, he worked five years for the "Soo" Line railroad. At the end of that time he returned to Dunn County and began his agricultural operations here, buying 40 acres of land in the town of Dunn, where he lived until 1905. In that year he sold out and bought his present farm in Section 17, town of Menomonie, previously known as the John Emmet farm and here he has since followed farming and dairying successfully, keeping high grade Holstein cattle. He has improved both the buildings and the land and has a good piece of agricultural property in his possession. He is also a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery. Mr. Bertilson was married in Minneapolis, Dec. 24, 1892, to Christina Nelson, who was born in Denmark, Jan. 19, 1866, and came to America in 1886. Her first summer in this country was spent in New York, after which she came west to Tracy, Minn., where she remained for a year before going to Minneapolis, where she met Mr. Bertilson. Of their marriage four children have been born, namely: William, a farmer in the town of Dunn, who married Ethel Johnson and has two children, George and Leonard; Nels, a farmer in Section 17, town of Menomonie, who married Rosena Peterson and has two children, Levern and Wayne; Andrew, residing on the home farm; and Christ of Eau Claire, Wis. The Bertilson family are members of the Varney Creek church in the town of Dunn.

John W. Atkinson, proprietor of Elm Grove Farm in Section 25, town of Weston, was born in Schadac, St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, Aug. 12, 1847, son of George and Mary (Smith) Atkinson. The father was a native of England who emigrated to Canada in 1840, when a young man, and was married to Mary Smith in New Brunswick, of which province she was a native. There they resided until 1849, and then in the month of May came to the States, proceeding west to Chicago, and going from that city to Lockport, Ill., where they remained until 1856. Then they moved again, this time to the town of Oronoco in Olmsted County, Minn., not far from Rochester, where George Atkinson took up government land, and where he and his wife resided for about six years engaged in farming. Thev were pioneers of their locality, as the Atkinson and Joseph Wild families were the first to settle east of the Zumbro River in that town. Mr. Atkinson's dream of a happy future in the bosom of his family was not, however, destined to be realized, as, whether from motives of patriotism or from the pressure of necessity, he enlisted in August, 1862, in Company F., Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Civil War, and, being taken prisoner by the enemy, died in Andersonville prison on Aug. 12, 1864. He and his wife had eight children, of whom John W., the eldest, took charge of the farm, on which the mother continued to reside until her death on Jan. 12, 1890. The other children, in order of birth, were: Robert, who is deceased; Edwin, deceased; Charles, now in Southern Oregon; Albert, deceased; Sarah, deceased; and Mary, who is Mrs. Jasper Haines of Pasadena, California. John W. Atkinson as a boy attended district school in the town of Oronoco, Olmsted County, Minn., helped his father on the farm when he was old enough, and, after the latter's death operated it for his mother until he was 25 years old. Then, in 1872, turning over the care of it to other members of the family, he went to Yellow Medicine County, Minnesota, where he took a land claim and remained for four years. At the end of that time he returned home, remained in Olmsted County until 1880, and then came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, which was to be the scene of his future activities. He spent his first year in this county on the Henry Bates farm in the town of Weston, and afterwards operated the George McCarthy farm for five years. In 1885 he bought his present farm of 80 acres in Section 25, settling on it in 1887. Of this farm he has cleared many acres, fenced it, and erected a fine set of buildings, so that it is today in fine condition, and here he is carrying on general farming and dairying with good results. He is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, and, as a citizen has a high standing in the community. For one year he served as chairman of the town board of supervicors, at the same time being a member of the county board. Mr. Atkinson was married, April 8, 1871, in the town of Maxwell, Pepin County, to Katherine Isabelle Schofield, who, after nearly 43 years of wedded life, passed away on March 18, 1914. Three children were born of this marriage, Clara Mae, Minnie Emma and M. Mamie, the two latter being twins. Clara Mae is now Mrs. Louis Schumann of Chicago, but was first married to Henry Jensen, by whom she had two children, Lorna and Garfield, both now living in Chicago. By her second husband, Mr. Schumann, she has three children, Raymond, Kenneth and Catherine. Minnie Emma is now Mrs. George Dean of the town of Menomonie, Dunn County, and M. Mamie is residing on the home farm. The Atkinson family-those at home-are affiliated religiously with the Lower Weston M. E. Church.

Rev. Elias C. Haavik, pastor of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church, was born at Barmsund Nordfjord, Norway, March 1, 1879, son of Jens and Olina (Fagerlid) Haavik. The father, who throughout his active career followed the double occupation of farmer and fisherman, died in May, 1921, while his son Elias, the subject of this sketch, was visiting his old home in Norway. The mother passed away in 1923. There were six children in the family: Elias C., of Menomonie; Andreas, who lives on the home farm in Norway; Ludvig, deceased; Annie, now Mrs. Ole Drage of Drage, Nordfjord, Norway; Olai, a Lutheran pastor now living in Seattle, Wash.; and Klaus of Barmsund, Nordfjord, Norway. Elias C. Haavick after attending a grade school in his native place, became a pupil in a private school at Raudeberg, which was conducted by his uncle, R. Fagerlid. In 1899 he came to the United States, locating at De Forest, Dane County, Wis. In March he entered the service of a farmer with the understanding that he should be allowed to attend school until May 1, which he accordingly did, during which time he acquired a knowledge, in some measure, of the rudiments of the English language. It is here worthy of note that Mr. Haavik arrived in De Forest on a Sunday, and Monday morning-the very next day-found him in his class at school. After the school term was over he worked that summer on the farm. That fall, wishing to enter high school, he found some difficulty as not being far enough advanced in English, but with the help of the principal of the De Forest school, Mr. E. C. Meland, who got into touch with Dr. Harvey, then state superintendent of schools and later president of Stout Institute, he was allowed to enter, and he justified their good opinion of his abilities by graduating with the class of 1904. Then, from 1904 to 1906, he attended Luther College at Decorah, Iowa. In 1906 he entered the Luther Theological Seminary at St. Paul, Minn., and was graduated with the class On June 9, 1909, he was ordained at Trempealeau, Wis., where the annual of 1909. meeting was held that year, and he became assistant pastor to the Rev. J. Nordby, who was president of the Eastern District, with headquarters at Lee, Ill. After holding that position until the spring of 1911, Mr. Haavik accepted a mission charge on the home mission field at Livingston, Mont., the field extending from Big Timber to Missoula, a distance of 360 miles. In November, 1912, he accepted a call to become pastor of the First Norwegian Lutheran Church in Menomonie, the pastorate also including charges at Little Elk Creek, North Menomonie and Varney Creek. At that time both synods were in existence and there were two churches at each place, but in 1917 the two synods were united at St. Paul, Menomonie and adjacent fields not being consolidated, however, until the fall of 1918. Since that time Mr. Haavik has been the sole pastor of these communities, having charge of the churches already mentioned, so that he is now covering the field formerly covered by two pastors, and serving approximately 1,600 people. His congregations or churches, with the individuals composing them are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. Mr. Haavik has not risen to his present position of responsibility and usefulness without strenuous exertion and a successful struggle against various disadvantages, such as knowing no English when he first came to this country, and having to earn his own living, and attending school at intervals. He has done well and made a good record; when at school and college he stood high in his classes and in demonstrations, and as a pastor he has taken good care of his churches and proved himself an able speaker and tireless worker. Haavik was married at De Forest, Wis., July 29, 1909, to Sena Thue, of that place, who was a high school classmate of his. She was born on a farm near North Bristol, Dane County, Oct. 18, 1880. She was graduated from Stoughton Academy, at Stoughton, Wis., in 1900, and from the De Forest High School with the class of 1904. Subsequently she taught grade schools for eight years. The passing years have brought to Mr. and Mrs. Haavik the blessing of three children, two daughters and a son, who are as follows: Ingeborg O., born July 28, 1911, at Livingston, Mont.; John Edward, born June 26, 1914, in Menomonie; and Florence Adeline, born Oct. 29, 1919, in Menomonie. The Haavik residence is at the corner of Tenth Street and Tenth Avenue, while our Saviour's Church is at the corner of Sixth Street and Tenth Avenue.

Henry Ausman, one of the most notable of the pioneers of Dunn County, for many years a resident of Elk Mound, who in various ways was a driving force in business and agricultural development, religious growth, and the machinery of local government, was born in Germany, Oct. 20, 1836, son of John H. and Anna M.

The father was a miller by occupation. In 1848, owing to (Weigand) Ausman. revolutionary troubles in Germany, he emigrated with his family to the United States, first settling in Venango County, Pennsylvania, or, to be more exact, in that part of it now known as Forest County. There he followed farming until 1860, when the family moved to Dunn County, Wisconsin, and here Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ausman resided with their children until their death, he passing away in 1882, and she in 1891. These children were seven in number, several of whom had preceded the rest of the family to Dunn County. All of them are now deceased. Henry, the subject of this sketch, who was the third in order of birth, had attended school in Germany and was 12 years old when he left his native land. Up to the end of his life, 76 years later, he could remember the long voyage of six weeks in a sailing vessel and the joy with which the passengers hailed the sight of land. In Venango County, Pennsylvania, he assisted his father on the farm, being thus occupied until he attained his majority, at which time he set out to earn some money for himself as a lumberman on one of the tributaries of the Alleghenv River. On Aug. 4, 1855 he was married in Venango County to Martha Sipple, a native of Germany who had come to America with her parents in 1847, locating in that county. There, or in that vicinity, he remained, engaged in the same occupation, until 1860, and then, with his wife, father, mother and youngest sister, he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, joining other members of the family who had preceded them and settled in the town of Spring Brook. Here, Henry Ausman took a government claim of somewhat less than a quarter section, and for one year worked for Knapp, Stout & Co., whereby he earned enought money to buy the lumber for a frame house which he built on his land, doing all the work himself. Subsequently he erected other buildings and in time cleared about 125 acres of the land, continuing his residence on the farm until 1884, though his own personal work on it ceased when he entered into mercantile business in the village of Elk Mound, which he did in 1877, leaving the care of the farm to other members of the family. On beginning his mercantile career, Mr. Ausman purchased a building in the village in which was a saloon in connection with a small grocery store. This business he bought out, assuming charge on March 1, 1878; and, at once discontinuing the saloon, he put in a good stock of hardware, farm machinery, and general merchandise. For 32 years thereafter he conducted this business on a profitable basis, becoming known as one of the leading merchants in the county—one whose goods were reliable, whose prices were fair, and whose word could always be trusted. But even before he engaged in it he had become so well and favorably known throughout this region that in the fall of 1878—the year in which he opened his store—he was elected to the state assembly, in which he served with credit to himself and benefit to his constituents. Indeed he might have had further political honors, as he was strongly urged by his friends to run for congress, but declined. He did, however, accept the office of postmaster, to which he was appointed in 1878, under President Hayes' administration, and in which he served for 37 years, when he resigned. He also served as station agent, notary public and town treasurer, and took the leading part in the organization and incorporation of the village, being its first president. Another business enterprise which he took a prominent part in establishing was the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery, of which he was president for several years; and he also organized the Bank of Elk Mound and served as its first president, remaining one of its stockholders for the rest of his life. That life covered the period of 88 years and he was active until the day before his death, which took place at 5:15 on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 4, 1924. He had gone to bed and passed peacefully into his last long sleep. In the same year he had spent five months at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Goehring at Naperville, Ill., celebrating his eighty-eighth birthday there on October 20. During Mr. Ausman's active career his name was a tower of strength to any enterprise with which he was connected, such was the confidence which his record inspired. The inflexible moral principles which guided him in all his relations with his fellow men, were based upon a sincere belief in the Christian religion, dating from his early manhood. In 1862 he became a full member of the Evangelical Church through confirmation, and in

In course of time, as his sons grew to manhood, three of them-Edward, Albert B. and Benjamin A.-were made co-partners in the Ausman business, which on Mr. Ausman's retirement, was turned over to them, and is now conducted under the firm name of H. Ausman & Sons. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ausman, eleven in number, were Catherin E., Martha, John Frederick, Mina, Henry W., Edward, Magdelina, Emma Caroline, Albert Benjamin, Benjamin Albert and Laura Rebecca, of whom the following is a further record. Catherine E., born March 2, 1856, married Jacob Webert and for many years lived on a farm in the town of Elk Mound, which farm she still owns. Mr. Webert having died in 1904, she subsequently She has nine children, Fred, Martha, Edward, kept house for her father. Alvin, Lewis, Florence, Erma, Stanley and Minnie. Martha, born Feb. 16, 1858, is the wife of Henry Pohrman of Chippewa Falls, but has no children. Frederick, born March 6, 1860, married Catherine Webert, who died in 1923. He is now retired and lives with his five children. Appe. Berntle C is now retired and lives with his five children, Anna, Rosetta, Samuel, Edna and George. Mina, born May 23, 1864, is the wife of Frederick Wege, a farmer in the town of Elk Mound, and has one child, Della. Henry W., born April 18, 1862, and who is a prominent farmer in the town of Spring Brook, married Caroline Webert; they have no children. Edward, born Sept. 7, 1867, is, as already mentioned, one of the firm of H. Ausman & Sons. He married Ella Jessel, and has eight children, Roy, Hazel, Edward, Jr., Florence, James, Margaret, Marion and Erma. Magdelina, born Oct. 26, 1869, died September, 1894. Emma Caroline, born March 14, 1872, married Joseph Axt and resides in St. Peter, Minn., where Mr. Axt is station agent for the C. St. P. M., & O. Railway. She has two children, Clifford and Dorothy. Albert Benjamin, born April 22, 1876, now one of the firm of H. Ausman & Sons, is an active factor in the community affairs of Elk Mound, being now village president and also a member of the board of education. He helped to organize the Elk Mound Creamery Company, and was secretary for several years; is a stockholder, director and vice president of the Bank of Elk Mound, and a member of the Elk Mound Commercial Club. He is well known throughout Dunn County as a progressive and public spirited citizen. He married Jessie Dalrymple and has five children, Henry, Kathryn, Emmett, Vaughn and Faith. Benjamin Albert, born April 22, 1876, a twin brother of Albert Benjamin, and who is also a member of the firm of H. Ausman & Sons, married Mabel Frederick and has one child, Palma. Laura R., born Aug. 17, 1878, married Charles Goehring and resides in Naperville, Ill.; she has no children. Mrs. Martha Ausman, the mother of the above mentioned children, after a married life of 68 years, during which she well and faithfully performed the duties of wife and mother, died July 23, 1923. She was a woman of many rare qualities of mind and heart. The surviving members of the family are all affiliated religiously with the Evangelical Church. (See portrait page 295).

Lewis H. Foss, a retired merchant residing in the village of Downing, was born in the town of Rock River, Jefferson County, Wis., April 30, 1853, son of Hellik O. and Torgun (Tostensdater Haugen) Foss. The parents were natives of Norway, who came to America when young people, arriving in this country after a long and tedious voyage in a sailing vessel. They were married in Watertown, Jefferson County, Wis., and began home making on a farm in the town of Rock River. In 1855 they disposed of their property there and moved to Portage County, where they followed agriculture for the remainder of their lives. Hellik O. Foss died about 1894, and his wife Torgun about 10 years later. Lewis H. Foss as a boy attended public school in Portage County and resided at home with his parents until reaching the age of 19 years, from the time he was able to be of use helping his father on the farm. He then started out in life for himself, going to Stevens Point, where he worked for a short time in the new sawmill of John Weeks. From there he pushed on to the woods of Marathon and Lincoln counties, working in the lumber camps as a logger during the winter and on the drives in spring, also at times being employed in the mills. His connection with the lumber industry lasted for about five years, and during that time he gained an intimate knowledge of the north woods and all the various and picturesque phases of the lumberman's occupation. At the end of the period mentioned, Mr. Foss located in Barron County, buying 240 acres of land in the town of Chetek, where he was engaged in farming for three years. At the end of that time, or in 1886, he disposed of his farm and came to Downing, Dunn County, going to work in the woods for the Downing Manufacturing Co. After two weeks of that work, however, the company called him in and placed him in their store in the village, where he remained as clerk for three years and three months. In 1889 he bought a corner lot here, on which in 1890 he erected a store building, starting in business for himself with a stock of general merchandise. The enter-prise proved successful and Mr. Foss's career as a merchant in Downing covered a period of 28 years, terminating in 1918, when, being crippled by rheumatism, he sold his stock to the Colfax Store Co. and retired. For a while thereafter he rented out his store building and then sold it. It was not very long after he came to Downing that he purchased a nice residence property in the village, consisting of two lots and a small house, the latter of which he remodelled into a larger and better dwelling-house, and which he and his wife have since occurried. He has always been active in promoting the best interests of the village and, when called upon, has willingly devoted some part of his time to the public service. Thus, for four years he was treasurer of the school board, and, for several years before the village was incorporated, one of the supervisors on the town board. Mr. Foss was married at New Hope, Portage County, Wis., on Sept. 5, 1879, to Christine Anderson, who was born in Norway, Feb. 11, 1857, and who was a babe of two months when she came to America with her parents, Andrew and Gurine (Anderson) Anderson, the voyage on a sailing vessel taking five weeks. At New Hope, Wis., where they settled, they engaged in farming, an occupation in which Mr. Anderson continued for the remainder of his life in that locality, finally passing away in May, 1899. His wife Gurine survived him a number of years, dying on Jan. 16, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Foss are prominent in the social life of Downing and have a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

es. They are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church at Glenwood City. William G. Patterson, proprietor of "The Patterson Shop," a well patronized ladies' ready to wear store in the city of Menomonie, was born in Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 20, 1866, son of Adam and Annie (Lowe) Patterson. The father was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and the mother of Canada, and they were married in Michigan. In 1869 they came to Chippewa Falls, Wis., where they resided for a year, in 1870 settling in Menomonie. Here Adam Patterson was employed as a machinist by the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. Both he and his wife are now deceased. They were the parents of eight children, of whom three are now living: William G. Patterson acquired his education in the common and high schools and began industrial life as a worker in the shingle mills and afterwards worked in the sawmills. Later he had charge of all the pipe fitting for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, and held that position until they installed an electric plant, which he was selected to operate. This was placing upon him considerable responsibility, especially in view of the fact that he knew practically nothing of electricity, and, indeed had never seen an electric light. The man that installed it departed as soon as he had done so, leaving it in charge of Mr. Patterson. Though it was a new and strange experience to the latter, he succeeded in justifying the company's selection of him as the man to have charge, picking up the necessary knowledge through study or inquiry. After two years (in 1884) he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and went over the plant where the machines were made and while there, owing to the keen intelligence he showed, and the knowledge he had acquired, he had more than one offer of a good position, but, preferring the West, he returned to Menomonie and resumed his position with the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. In 1889 he went to Beloit, Wis., and started the first electric plant there. In 1892 he returned to Menomonie and took charge of the city electric plant, which had been installed during his absence, and he remained in charge of it until it was sold to the Chippewa Valley Railway Light & Power Co., and afterwards, as he stayed with the latter company until it sold out to the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power Co., and with the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power Company until Feb. 1, 1918. It was then that he entered into his present business, that of a merchant, buying out Mrs. Bertha McGroth, who was conducting a store in a part of the First National Bank Building on Main Street. Buying a piece of land on Second Street, South of the building mentioned, he erected his present store building, a substantial one-story, full basement structure of 30x50 feet, which he occupied in August, 1923. The store is well supplied with suitable furnishings. The main floor is stocked with ladies' and misses' ready-to-wear apparel, furnishings and notions, while the basement contains toys, crockery and other articles, Mr. Patterson's office being located in a balcony in the rear. In the management of the business Mr. Patterson is largely assisted by his wife, who does the buying. Only goods in popular demand, and of good quality are handled, and the trade is not only increasing but consists largely of the patronage of the leading people in the city. Mr. Patterson was married Sept. 12, 1888, to Frances M. Putnam, who was born at Sparta, Wis., Aug. 10, 1868, and of this union six children have been born, namely: Junetta, born Sept. 2, 1889, now Mrs. A. J. Blamey of St. Paul and the mother of two children, Betty Jane and Mary Frances; John R., born Sept. 6, 1892, now in the employ of the Allis-Chalmers Co. at Detroit, Mich., is married and has one child, John T.; Sarah Jane, born Jan. 1, 1896, who assists her parents in the Patterson store and resides at home; William G., Jr., born Nov. 15, 1899, is a student at the Stout Iustitute; Kenneth E., born July 24, 1907, a student in the Menomonie High School; and Jewell who died in infancy. All the surviving children are graduates of the Menomonie High School. Mr. Patterson is a stockholder in the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis. He is a member of the Knights of Phythias and has been keeper of records and seals in the local lodge since its organization in 1909. He and his family are members of the Unitarian Church or Society, which for the last three years he has served They have a pleasant home at No. 302 Third Avenue West. as treasurer.

John F. Denham, homeopathic physician of Boyceville, was born at Lexington, McLean County, Ill., Oct. 26, 1857, son of William E. and Eliza (Bowers) Denham, natives of Ohio. Coming to Wisconsin in May, 1862, they located at Maiden Rock, Pepin County, where the wife and mother died on June 19, the same year, and within a few weeks after her arrival. Mr. Denham survived her nearly half a century, finally passing away at an advanced age on Feb. 22, 1911. John F. Denham was less than five years old when he lost his mother. Several years later he began attending school in Maiden Rock, where he acquired the elements of knowledge. At the age of 18, with only a common school education, and with no plans for the future, he was told by his father that he had secured him a position to teach school, and that he was to go before the school superintendent to pass an examination. This he did successfully, his lowest mark on any subject being 92. Being thus acceptable, he was given a rural school and taught subsequently for 14 terms, saving as much of his earnings as he could, for he had now formed the idea of entering the medical profession, and was in need of funds to pay his way through college. First, however, he studied one year with Dr. A. N. Hutchinson, a homeopathic physician at Maiden Rock, then another year with Dr. Wing, an allopath of the same place. Having finally resolved on homeopathy as the branch of medical science to which he would devote himself, in 1887 he entered the Hahnemann Medical College at Chicago, where he pursued the prescribed studies, being graduated with the class of 1889. In 1890 he opened offices at Eau Galle, Dunn County, Wis., but in the next year moved to Downsville, where he practiced his profession successfully until 1918. In 1895 he took post-graduate work at Chicago and in the same year took a course in electric treatment under Dr. Neisweinger, of Chicago. It was in 1918 that Dr. Denham came to Boyceville and established himself in practice here, where he has met with fine success. He is a member of the village board and health officer and has identified himself closely with all local movements for the public good. His society affiliations are with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Dr. Denham was married, July 1, 1891, to Sarah E. Adams, who was born in the town of Dunn, Jan. 9, 1873, daughter of Isaac and Jennie (Cunningham) Adams. Her father was a native of Scotland and her mother of Ontario, Canada. Married at Downsville, Dunn County, Wis., by the Rev. Mr. Golden, they settled on a farm in the town of Dunn, being among the early settlers there. Each died at an advanced age, Mr. Adams on March 7, 1909, and Mrs. Adams on March 21, 1908. Mrs. Denham, like her husband, was a teacher, beginning at the age of 16 years and continuing in that profession until her marriage, making a good record. She is a member of the Royal Neighbors. and the Federated Woman's Club, being president of the local club of the latter. Dr. and Mrs. Denham have been the parents of five children, Jane M., Mildred Eva, Frances E., William Albert, and Jessie, the youngest of whom, Jessie, born born Feb. 18, 1906, died July 4, 1908. Of the others the following is a brief record. Jane M., born June 25, 1895, attended the Menomonie High School and the Stout Institute, being graduated from both institutions. She taught school for three years in Louisiana, and then enlisted for war service as a dietician. She was training at Camp Custer when the armistice was signed, and received her discharge in March, 1919. On the nineteenth of the same month she was married to W. B. Terhune of New Orleans, a mental hygiene physician, practicing in Dr. Austin Riggs' sanatarium at Stockbridge, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Terhune have two children; W. B. Jr., born Sept. 23, 1920 and Jane Elizabeth, born Dec. 27, 1921. Mildred Eva, born June 25, 1897, was graduated from the Boyceville High School and the River Falls Normal School and is now teaching at Peshtigo, Wis. Frances E., born Dec. 4, 1899, was graduated from the Menomonie High School. On Jan. 16, 1919, she was married to Arthur Birong and they now reside in Minneapolis, where he has charge of the Minneapolis City Dairy. They have two children, Jeanne Marie, born May 28, 1921, and John Denham, born July 9, 1923. William Elbert, born Jan. 2, 1902, is a graduate of the Boyceville High School and the Eau Claire State Normal School, and is now residing at home.

William Hintzman, a veteran of the Civil War, now passed away, who was also an early settler in Section 4, town of Menomonie, was born in Germany, Sept. 25, 1828, where after arriving at manhood he was married to Wilhelmina Lemke. In 1858 they came as emigrants to the United States, and to the state of Wisconsin, settling in the town of Concord, near Watertown. On June 20, 1864, Mr. Hintzman enlisted for Civil War service in Company C, 16th Wisconsin Infantry and remained a United States soldier until he received an honorable discharge on June 2, 1865. He was one of Sherman's army on the march through Georgia and to the sea, and in after years his comrades used to tell stories of his endurance during that famous campaign, and he, himself, used to relate how the soldiers, in destroying railroads, used to bend the rails by twisting them when heated around telegraph poles. One of his first experiences in the war was a harrowing one, as he was in a railway collision in which three of his intimate friends were killed and it was his melancholy duty to help bury them. After his discharge from the army he returned to Concord, Wis., where he remained until the spring of 1870, when he moved with his family to Dunn County, first stopping in Menomonie. He soon, however, bought a tract of 120 acres of wild land in Section 4, town of Menomonie, and began the development of a farm. He was active in town affairs, helping to build the first roads and schools and assisting new settlers as they came in. In 1891 he retired and took up his residence in Menomonie, where he remained until his wife's death in March, 1903. After that home tie had been severed he returned to the farm, where he passed the remaining eight years of his life with his son August, dying March 25, 1911. He was a member of William Evans Post, No. 58, G. A. R., of Menomonie, which he joined on June 9, 1894, and was a man with a wide circle of friends, whose loss was deeply deplored. Mr. and Mrs. William Hintzman were the parents of eight children, whose record in brief is as follows: Ernestine, now Mrs. Henry Huber of the town of Tainter, Dunn County; Frank and John, who were both drowned in Lake Menomonie two days after the family arrived in this county; August F., operating the old home farm; Amelia, who married Conrad Bliem and is now a widow residing at Dufur, Ore.; William, deceased; Minnie, wife of Frank Mathews of Deer Park, and Emma, who is Mrs. J. E. Ziegler of Portland, Ore.

nomonie, proprietor of what is known as the Grand View Guernsey Farm in Section 4. was born in the town of Concord, Jefferson County, Wis., Nov. 10, 1863, son of William and Wilhelmina (Lemke) Hintzman. He was still a babe when he accompanied his parents to Dunn County and unconscious of the trouble which visited the family two days after their arrival, when two of his brothers were drowned. As he grew up he attended district school and helped his father on the home farm, becoming an expert agriculturist. In 1891 he rented the farm and subsequently operated it on his own account, buying it in 1895. He has since remained the proprietor and has made a number of valuable improvements, having cleared considerable land and erected a full set of good buildings. As a dairyman he has made an excellent record, having a large herd of Guernsey cattle, with a full bred sire. He is also a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and has served as school clerk of School District 9. Mr. Hintzman was married in the city of Menomonie on April 15, 1891, to Emma Jabusch, who was born in Deer Park, St. Croix County, Wis., March 2, 1869, daughter of John and Louise (Luning) To this marriage five children were born, all of whom are living except Iabusch. Henry W., born Sept. 1, 1892, who died from the "flu" on Feb. 8, 1920. The survivors are as follows: Luella, born May 17, 1896, now Mrs. Frank Lausted of the town of Tainter and the mother of one child, May Louise; Evelyn, born Sept. 15, 1903, who is a graduate of the Dunn County Normal School and a teacher in the town of Tainter; Emily, born July 21, 1907, a graduate of the Dunn County Normal School, now teaching in the town of Dunn, and James E., born June 10, 1909, residing at home with his parents. The family are members of the German M. E. Church in Menomonie and have a high standing in social circles.

Frank Drake, farmer and business man, manager of the Boyceville Opera House, was born in Menomonie, Wis., Feb. 27, 1864, son of Charles and Mary (Brown) The father was a native of New York State and the mother of Wisconsin. Drake. Charles Drake came to Rumsey's Landing, Dunn County, Wis., in the vicinity of which place he did farm labor for a short time. Then going to Menomonie, he entered the employ of Mr. Gilbert on Gilbert Creek, working in his shingle mills, and after being thus employed for a while, he became one of the first settlers in the town of Hay River, homesteading 160 acres there and putting up a set of log build-To obtain the necessary cash supply, he drove ox teams in the woods for the ings lumber companies, and later operated camps for them near Knapp. During his early years on the farm, he had to bring his provisions packed on his back from Menomonie. For many years he was a very active and prominent citizen of his town, aiding new settlers as they came in, and helping to build the first roads and schools. He was also for many years chairman of the town board and, therefore, a member of the county board, being one of the men who helped to shape the destinies of the county. He died in January, 1906, his wife Mary having passed away in the previous month, December, 1905. They had a family of eight children, namely: Riley, now operating a farm and store at Fall City, Dunn County; Alice, who is Mrs. John Schaider of Lincoln, Nebr.; Nettie, who married Nicholas Belzer, and is a widow residing in Lincoln, Nebr.; Frank, of Boyceville; Charles, of Grafton, N. D.; Anna, wife of Arthur Granger and residing in North Dakota; Guy W., of Boyceville; and William, who was killed on the railroad at Brainard, Minn., in 1900. Frank Drake in his boyhood attended school in Fall City and in the town of Hay River. He remained on the home farm in the town of Hay River until he was 24 years old and then bought 40 acres of land from his father, which tract he farmed for one year. At the end of that time he came to Boyceville and erected a large public hall, which was the first one put up in the village, where he conducted dances, at the same time he conducted a livery stable, for which he had erected the building. During four years of the time while he was thus engaged, he also drove the mail from Menomonie to Boyceville. He then moved to Menomonie and continued to drive the mail for another four years. At the end of that time he bought two farms in the town of Tiffany, one of which he has since sold, but he still retains the other, which is a farm of 162 acres in Sections 22-24, and is now operating it, though his residence is in the village, where he is interested in several business enterprises.

He owns residence property in the village in addition to his own house, and has the largest financial interest in the Boyceville Opera House, which is a fine brick structure with a capacity of 500, and presenting both moving pictures and road shows. He was one of the organizers of the enterprise and has been successful in conducting it. The opera house is also used as a community building and several lodges hold their meetings in it. Mr. Drake also built and is the owner of the Drake garage, the building, measuring 40 x 90 feet, being well equipped for general garage work, which he does, besides handling the Chevrolet cars. His position is well established as one of the active, enterprising and successful citizens of Boyceville. He was married, August 27, 1888, to May Brown of the town of Hay River, Dunn County, who was born in 1874, and who before her marriage was a proficient teacher. The fruit of this marriage is three children, namely: Mary, born in 1891, who is the wife of Calvin Clough and has two children, Jule and Merle; Myrtle, born in 1897, now Mrs. H. K. Halvorson of Colfax, and the mother of one child, Donald; and William, who is studying in the McPhail Conservatory of Music in Minneapolis. Mr. Drake and his family are affiliated religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Maj. Thomas Jefferson George, of Menomonie, whose military career included active service in two wars, who has also displayed his efficiency and fidelity in public office, and who is besides one of the most notable pioneers of Dunn County now living, was born at Newton Falls, Trumbull County, Ohio, Nov. 18, 1842, son of Lloyd Ray and Annis (Smith) George. The parents were of English-Scotch The father was a potter by trade but during the latter part of his life was origin. engaged in manufacturing and mercantile business. It was in 1846 that he moved to Wisconsin and for a few years thereafter lived in Racine. From that place he moved to Juneau County, where he made his home until 1867, in which year he came to the Chippewa Valley and to Dunn County. In 1876 his death occurred at Vanceberg in the town of Sheridan. His wife died in Menomonie in 1886. Thomas Jefferson George as a boy attended common school in Juneau County and remained at home with his parents until the breaking out of the Civil War. On April 8, 1861, he enlisted at New Lisbon, Wis., in Co. D, Fourth Regt. Wis. Vol. Inf., and as such served until April, 1862, when he was honorably discharged and returned home. Out of the next four years, during which he was engaged in making a living, he spent one year in a lumber mill in Jackson County, and then in the fall of 1866 came to Dunn County, locating in the town of Sheridan. There at Vanceberga place established by Levi Vance as a fur-trading post—he and his brother Ingersoll built a mill and for several years were engaged in the lumber business. When the town of Sheridan was set off, Mr. George was chairman of its first board, and within a few years he had become so well known and esteemed throughout the county that in the fall of 1874 he was elected to the office of sheriff and served as such in 1875-76. After being out for a term he was reelected in 1878 and served two years more, in 1879-80. While an incumbent of this county office he resided in Menomonie, and when he was no longer sheriff he engaged in the farm machinery business. From Civil War days Mr. George had taken more or less interest in military affairs, and this interest turned into action in 1883 when he organized a troupe of cavalry which subsequently became a part of the Third National Guard regiment, Mr. George becoming batallion major in the regiment. When the Spanish-American War broke out in 1898 he was major of the First batallion of the regiment and as such took part in the operations in Porto Rico. Mustered out of the service at Camp Douglas, Wis., on Jan. 14, 1899, he returned to Menomonie and since then has not been actively engaged in any particular line of business, aside from that of an official nature. From 1887 to 1890 he served two terms as sergeant-at-arms in the Wisconsin State Senate at Madison; he served as alderman from the fourth ward of Menomonie, and for many years he has been public administrator, which office he still holds. He was chosen department commander of the Spanish-American War veterans for the state of Wisconsin with the rank of brigadiergeneral, serving as such for two years. He is also a member of the Loyal Legion, a state organization with headquarters at Milwaukee, and Capt. T. J. George

THOMAS J. GEORGE AND FAMILY

Camp (named after him) of Spanish-American War veterans; also of Menomonie, Post No. 58, G. A. R., and of the blue lodge of the Masonic order. Thomas J. George was married Nov. 12, 1888, to Cecelia Willimann, who was born in Luzerne, Switzerland, April 29, 1857, daughter of John B. and Catherine (Glanzmann) Willimann. The fruit of this union is four children: Philip W., born Jan. 19, 1890; John W., April 10, 1892; Karl W., Nov. 14, 1894, and Lloyd W., May 4, 1898. Of these four sons, Philip W., who is in the Minneapolis postal service, married Marth Lanfall and has a son, Leo L.; John W., engaged in the sheet metal business at Eau Claire, married Minnie Peterson and has one child, a son, Thomas Jefferson Peterson; Karl W., now with the Hupmobile Body corporation of Racine, married Alice Drewry, and has a daughter, Janette Cecelia; Lloyd W., is now a director of manual training and athletics at Lindstrom, Minn. All four of Major George's sons entered the World War in the United States' service, of whom the following is a record. Phillip W. George enlisted for service in the U. S. Army in November, 1918, and was ordered to the officers' training school at Little Rock, Ark. He was there, however, only a few days when the armistice was signed and he returned home as the war was over. Karl W., enlisted at Janesville, Wis., April 17, 1917, in Company M, Sixth Regiment. He trained at Camp Douglas, Wisconsin and Camp Waco, Texas. He left for overseas in February, 1918 on the transport Covington, landing at Brest, France, March 4. He was transferred to the Fifth Corps and later to the 40th Division and was in the battles of the Aisne-Marne, the Oise-Aisne and the Meuse-Argonne. On March 7, 1919, he embarked at Bordeaux on the transport, Walter L. Luckenback, and landed at New York, March 20. His position was orderly to the major. He was discharged at Camp Grant, Ills., April, 1919. While at Waco, Texas, the famous 32d Division football team was organized, of which he was one of the most active members and one who helped to make it famous. Lloyd W. George enlisted in the U. S. Signal Reserve Corps, Dec. 20, 1917, at Chicago, Ill., as a candidate for commission. Later he was sent to the flying fields at Urbana, Ills., and from there transferred to the Selfridge fields at Mt. Clemens, Mich., where he was made corporal. He was discharged at Camp Grant, April 2, 1919. John W. George enlisted in Co. F, Wis. State Guards, Sept. 21, 1917. On June 3, 1919 he was commissioned second lieutenant and on Sept. 23 the same year was transferred to Co. B, 128th Infantry On Nov. 1, he received his signed commission and served with his proper rank until April 6, 1920. On April 1, 1921, he want into the 105th Cavalry, National Guards of the United States, a federal organization, and was commissioned first lieutenant on April 15. He resigned May 6, 1922. The members of the George family, including the direct subject of this sketch, attend the Congregational Church. They are typical representatives of the best citizenship of the Northwest, builders and preservers of the commonwealth and of the nation, the sons having proved true to the high standard of patriotism set by the father. On the mother's side there is another interesting story to tell, which may be found in the biography of John B. Williamm.

John B. Willimann.—If the subjects of many biographies in this volume may be described as pioneer farmers or merchants, he whose name appears above may be with as much propriety be mentioned as a pioneer musician of northwestern Wisconsin, as he came to this region some 54 years ago and most of his subsequent career was spent in imparting musical instruction, though music was not the only art of which he was master. Mr. Willimann was born in Antwerp, Belgium, May 22, 1827, the eldest of his parents' three sons. His father served in the army as a musician. In 1838 the family moved to Luzerne, Switzerland, where the father and sons devoted most of their time to music. There John B. Willimann met his future wife, Catherine Glanzmann, who was born in Switzerland, April 1, 1828, and they were married at Luzerne, Feb. 23, 1852. Some 16 years later, in April 1868, they came to the United States, settling at Highland Park, Ill., where Mr. Willimann was engaged in teaching music. In the spring of 1870 a brass band was organized in Menomonie and it needed a competent instructor. Mr. Willimann was sent for and engaged to teach the band. In the fall of the same year he moved his family here and this city was his home for the rest of his life. Mr. Willimann was a bookbinder and a fine workman, and he worked at his trade more or less every year, but music was his ruling passion and his time was mainly devoted to instruction in the art. For many years Willimann's brass band and orchestra were the leading musical organizations here, the band at one time being that of the Third Regiment, and when the Ludington Band was formed Mr. Willimann was its first instructor and leader. For a number of years he kept a music store, and at various times he gave instruction to bands in Durand, Knapp, Baldwin, Hammond, Woodville, Cedar Falls, Downsville and other places. His pupils ever held him in high esteem. When in 1902 he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding, the Ludington Band volunteered their services to add to the enjoyment of the occasion-a graceful act in which Mr. Willimann took great pride and delight. On that momentous occasion about 150 friends and neighbors were present and the happy elderly pair were the recipients of many heartfelt congratulations, some in the form of speeches both in German and English. A box containing $80 in gold was presented to them by Dr. Heising, Major George contributed a humorous recitation, there was an enjoyable banquet and afterwards the guests indulged in cards and dancing. It was one of the red letter days in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Willimann, of which there are but few in the majority of lives. Less than six years after the event Mr. Willimann passed to his long rest. He had been in poor health for several years and the end came on March 23, 1908. His wife survived him until February, 1911. They had enjoyed a happy home life together, and eight children had blessed their union, three of whom died in infancy in Switzerland. The others were: John W., of Seattle, Wash.; Fenton W., of Minneapolis; Mrs. Cecelia George of Menomonie; Nina, wife of George P. Gerber of Durand, Wis., and Mary, wife of Ernest Gabeline of Menomonie.

Robert R. Porter, postmaster of the village of Wheeler, was born in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, March 12, 1862, son of Joseph N. and Mary J. (De Haven) Porter. The parents were natives of that state, the father engaged all his active life in the coal mining industry. When Robert R. was two years old they moved to Philadelphia, where he received his schooling, and he resided with them until he was about 25, being interested more or less in the coal mining business. He spent one year in Virginia conducting a store for an iron mining company. Then in 1888 he came to Dunn County and for two years conducted the store for the Minnesota Brick Co., for three years being superintendent of their plant. In 1894 he came to Wheeler and engaged in the produce business here, buying grain and potatoes and conducting a warehouse. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster of Wheeler, which position he has since held under all administrations. When he first took it the post office was small and he was able to attend to other business in addition, but now he is obliged to give all his time to it. He has established three rural routes, served from Wheeler, and is a popular official. His interest in the village is that of an active and public spirited citizen, and as a member of the Wheeler Commercial Club, he works for the good of the community. He also belongs to the order of Modern Woodmen of America and to the Evangelical Church. Mr. Porter was married, Nov. 28, 1891, to Clara M. Dahl, of the town of Hay River, Dunn County, and who was born June 10, 1873, Mr. and Mrs. Porter are the parents of six children, as follows: Nelly, born Aug. 16, 1893, who married Glenn Hensel of Wheeler, manager for the O. & N. Lumber Co., and has a daughter, Helen; George H., born Jan. 14, 1894, now with the Robert Chisholm Co. at Fort Francis, Ontario; Robert. born Sept. 6, 1899, residing at home; Carl B., born Nov. 28, 1904, now in the employ of the Kohler Manufacturing Co. at Kohler, Wis.; William, born Aug. 13, 1907, who is a pupil in the Menomonie High School; and Harriet, born June 3, 1916, who is at home

William F. Witt, who settled in Dunn County half a century ago, farmed for many years in the town of Spring Brook and spent his declining years in Menomonie, was born in Breusewitz, Germany, April 4, 1841. He spent the first 30 years of his life in his native land and was first married there to Anna Hove, who died in 1867, leaving two sons; Fred A., now a prominent farmer in the town of Spring Brook, and William F. Jr., who is a farmer in the town of Red Cedar. In 1868 William F. Witt, Sr., married for his second wife Fredericka L. Lentz, who was born Sept. 27. 1839, and in 1871 with her and other members of his family he emigrated to the United States, first Settling at Watertown in Jefferson County, Wis., where they remained for three years, during the first of which Mr. Witt did farm labor and during the next two earned a living by cutting cord wood. In March, 1874 he came with his family to Menomonie, Dunn County, and was engaged by Mr. Knapp of Knapp, Stout & Co. as coachman and later as gardener. In 1875 he bought 80 acres of unimproved land in Section 35, town of Spring Brook, and, clearing some of it, planted crops and began the development of a farm; but the land being sandy, the crops were poor and after struggling with that place for five years, he gave up the task of further improving it and in 1880 he traded it for a tract of land on the Chippewa bottoms. But this also proved an unfortunate venture, for that same year there was a flood and the river rose to such a height that the water covered his farm, doing considerable damage, but adding to Mr. Witt's experience. His next land was better chosen and consisted of 180 acres in Section 27, town of Spring This place he in time cleared up, erecting all necessary buildings, and Brook. eventually converting it into a fine farm, though it was all wild when he took it. He operated it until 1909, when, his health failing, he sold the property to Louis Panck, though it is now owned by Henry Fenske. On retiring he and his wife moved to Menomonie, where he died on Feb. 19, 1914. His wife then went to live with her daughter, Mrs. Bert French, at whose home she passed away some ten years later, on March 27, 1924. They were worthy people, possessed of the typical pioneers virtues of industry, patience, endurance of hardship, and a sustaining hope for the future, which helped through more than one tight place.

A. Fred Witt, a good practical farmer and prominent citizen of the town of Spring Brook, was born in Germany, Aug. 2, 1863, son of William F. and Anna (Hove) Witt. As shown in the biography of his father, our subject's mother died in Germany and William F. Witt marrying in the following year, 1868, Fredericka L. Lentz, it was with his father and this stepmother that A. Fred Witt came to this country in 1871, he being then not more than nine years old. He resided with them in Jefferson County, Wisconsin, until he was 12 and had a little schooling, but not much, as they were very poor, and he being the eldest child in the family had to begin work when very young. He made his home with his parents until he was 27 years old, having come with them to Menomonie, Dunn County, in March, 1874, lived with them five years on a sandy farm in Section 35, town of Spring Brook, and in 1880 passed through the flood when they were living on a farm on the Chippewa bottoms, and later settling with them on the farm which they finally developed in Section 27, town of Spring Brook. At times he worked out for others but for the most part was engaged in assisting his father. On April 30, 1891, he was united in marriage with Phoebe L. Cummings, who was born Jan. 4, 1869 in the town of Spring Brook, daughter of Sanford and Martha (Brown) Cummings. In the same year he began farming on his own account, for some years renting the Curtiss farm. In 1902 he settled on his present farm, having come into possession of 80 acres of land before he was of age. He later bought 20 acres more and his present farm consists of 100 acres in Section 27, west, town of Spring Brook. When he began operations on it, there were no buildings and the land was wild. A dwelling being necessary at once, Mr. Witt went to Portersville, a lumbering town in Eau Claire County, where he bought a house for $80, and not being able to transport it intact to his farm, he paid Eugene Wiggins $100 to take it to pieces for him, and they then rafted it piecemeal down the Chippewa River to Rumsey's Landing, from there hauled it to the farm, where they put it together again, and it was the home of Mr. and Mrs. Witt until 1915. The present buildings on the farm are the second set. The barn was erected in 1913 and measures 36×56 feet in ground plan, with a full basement; and the fine, modern eight-room residence was built in 1915. His out-buildings, which are sufficiently numerous, are all in good condition, and he has cleared and broken 65 acres of his land. As a general farmer and dairyman he has made good progress, having a herd of high grade Holstein cattle with a pure bred sire. He is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, served as clerk and director on the Forest Center Schoolboard for 12 years, and is a member of Fall City Camp, No. 6050, M. W. A. Mr. and Mrs. A. Fred Witt are the parents of four children, as follows: Olive A., born July 28, 1894, is the wife of Irvin Sipple of Waneka and the mother of five children, Burnetta, Gordon, Lloyd, Albert and Eva. Fredericka M., born Sept. 29, 1897, is now Mrs. Lee Larson of the town of Red Cedar and has one child, Robert O. Norma H., born Oct. 11, 1902, is living on the home farm, as also is Freddie A., born Feb. 14, 1905. The Witt family are members of Out Saviour's (German) Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

Henry W. Haefner, now living practically retired at Irvington, Dunn County, was born in the town of New Berlin, Waukesha County, Wis., Aug. 13, 1857, son of Jacob and Margaret (Weinberger) Haefner. The parents were natives of Germany who came to the United States in 1846, locating in Milwaukee, at which time there was but one brick house in that place. There they remained for several years and then settled in the town of New Berlin, Wis., where they spent their remaining years. Henry W. Haefner as a boy attended school at Hale's Corners in Milwaukee County and also for one year a school in northwestern Il'inois, and college at Naperville. On July 4, 1874, a youth in his seventeenth year, he came to Menomonie and during the following year was engaged in farm work in this vicinity. He then returned to Waukesha, where he remained for some years, not returning to Dunn County until 1881. On his second arrival he engaged in mercantile business in Menomonie in partnership with a Mr. Harley, their store being located where the post office now stands. After nine months Mr. Haefner sold his interests in the store to his partner, and for a month or so worked in the notion department of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company's store. For a year after that he was engaged in the junk business and in buying of hides, wool and similar products. At the end of that time he embarked in the dray and teaming business in which he continued subsequently for 13 years, during which time he executed contracts for excavating, his work in this line including the excavating of the basements or cellars of the Dunn County Asylum, the Memorial building, the Royal Hotel and the first Manual Training School in Menomonie. In January, 1895, Mr. Haefner went to Pepin, Wis., where for six months he conducted the Dunn Hotel. Then he spent two years in conducting the Burlington House at Alma, Wis. After the breaking out of the war with Spain, he enlisted, July 2, 1898, and served in the U.S. army until March 7, 1899. On his return to Menomonie he became connected with the Barron Woolen Mills Co., and for 16 years, from August to January, he was engaged in selling their products in Dunn County, during the summer months working for the Deering & International Harvester Company. In November, 1906, Mr. Haefner was elected sheriff of Dunn County, assuming the duties of the office on Jan. 1, 1907, and at the end of his two year term he became under-sheriff under Ludwig Tilleson, continuing as such during Mr. Tilleson's first term. In June, 1913 he came to Irvington and engaged in the mercantile business, purchasing the general store of Herman Merrell. Later he added to his business a meat market and garage, erecting the necessary buildings, and he was engaged in operating this combined business until 1920, when he sold the stock and retired, though he still owns the buildings. His former work as salesman in Dunn County brought him into personal contact with most of the people and he is a man of very wide acquaintance; indeed, it was due to this cause and the personal popularity he acquired, that he was elected sheriff. He also served as school clerk of his district for three years. He belongs to the Menomonie lodges of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America, and to the Mystic Workers of the World at Eau Claire. Mr. Haefner was first married Feb. 19, 1881 to Elizabeth Dahms, of which union there were two children born: Viola, who is now a teacher in St. Paul; and Samuel, also residing in that city. On June 2, 1907 Mr. Haefner was married secondly to Fredericka Damgard, who died Feb. 19, 1922. In addition to the two children mentioned, Mr. Haefner reared a grandson, Walter William, who is now a high school pupil in St. Paul.

Rev. H. Hoerig, a former pastor of the German Evangelical Lutheran Friedens

. . -. Congregation of Menomonie, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1850. He studied theology in the Mission Seminary at Dettelsau, Bavaria. He entered the active ministry in 1875, serving two years as assistant to Dr. Meier, pastor of the German Lutheran Congregation at Lyons, France. In 1877 he came to America, entering the ministry of the German Lutheran Synod of Iowa and Other States. He served but two congregations during the remainder of his ministerial career, being pastor of the German Evangelical Lutheran Immanuel's Congregation of Watertown, Wis., for 23 years, and pastor of the German Evangelical Lutheran Friedens Congregation at Menomonie, Wis., for 17 years. During the time of his service at Menomonie the church at this place was rebuilt and enlarged. In the fall of 1917 he retired from active work and since then has lived as superannuated pastor with his daughter and family, Rev. and Mrs. John F. Drewelow, now at Fall Creek, Wis.

Rev. John M. Woerth, pastor of Peace Lutheran Church, Menomonie, was born in Logansville, Wis., July 29, 1886, son of Rev. George and Henrietta (Sanders) The father died many years ago, on Dec. 12, 1898, but Mrs. Henrietta Woerth. Woerth still survives her husband and resides at Prairie du Sac, Wis. Woerth still survives her husband and resides at Prairie du Sac, Wis. John M. Woerth in his youth attended grade and high school at Sauk City, Wis. He then entered Wartburg College at Waverly, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1909. His theological education was obtained in Wartburg Seminary at Dubuque, Iowa; he was a member of the graduating class of 1912 and he was ordained to the ministry on July 17, that year. His first charge was as pastor of St. James Lutheran Church at Winters, Texas, but a year later he was transferred to St. Paul's Lutheran Church at Rice Lake, Wis. In 1916 he accepted a call to Peace Lutheran Church, Menomonie, of which he took charge in October of that year and of which he has since remained pastor. He also has charge of the Lutheran congregation at Downsville. both congregations belonging to the North Wisconsin Conference of the Iowa Synod. The Menomonie congregation contains 338 families or 843 communicants, while the Downsville congregation has 15 families and 40 communicants. The Rev. Mr. Woerth has worked to good purpose since he took up the duties of his present charge and the two congregations have been materially strengthened and have grown in spiritual grace. He has an ernest and able co-worker in his wife, to whom he was united Feb. 5, 1913, and who was before marriage Valborg Gunderson of Mt. Horeb, Wis. They have three children: Dorothy L., who was born, April 6, 1914; Gerald J., March 14, 1916, and Helen Valborg, March 25, 1918.

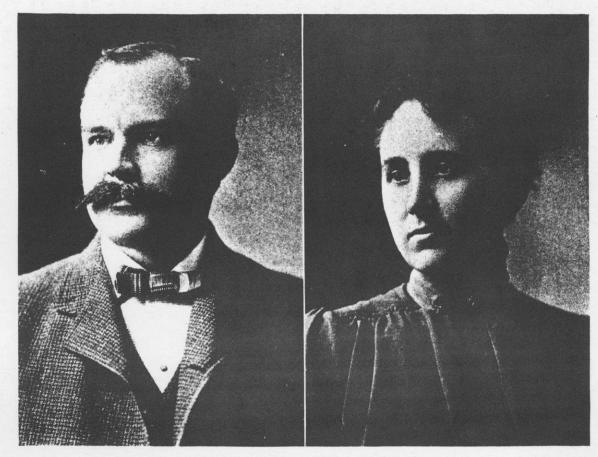

Byron M. Wells, an early settler in Dunn County, who passed away many years ago, but had descendants, well known people now living in the county, was born in Essex, N. Y., May 29, 1837, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wells. At an early day he was brought by his parents to Eau Claire, Wis., and there attended school, after which he learned the trade of tinsmith. In November, 1861, he enlisted in Sherman's Company, Second Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry and was made quartermaster sergeant. His military service lasted less than a year, however, as he was discharged on account of disability on Sept. 4, 1862. He then returned home to Eau Claire and resumed his trade. In 1864 he came to Menomonie and went to work for Knapp, Stout & Co. as tinsmith, being thus occupied for a few years He then established himself in business on Main Street, conducting a thereafter. shop until 1879, in which year he went to Meridean, where he remained for about a year, at the end of that time returning to Menomonie. His life was now nearing its close and he died on April 22, 1881. He was a member of the Masonic Blue Lodge at Eau Claire and of the G. A. R. Post in Menomonie. Byron M. Wells was married on March 10, 1864, at Chippewa Falls, Wis., to Joanna Cobban, who was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, Aug. 10, 1841. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wells resided on the west side of the river, in Menomonie, for about three years. At that time there were only a few families living there, they being among the earliest. In 1867 they moved over to the East Side, where the actual city of Menomonie now stands. With respect to Mrs. Wells' personal history it should be stated that when she was only five months old her mother died and she was taken to Scotland by her maternal grandparents, John and Mary Anderson, and was there reared and educated. At the age of 20 years she returned to the United States, making her home for some time with her brother, George Cobban, of Marion, Iowa. From there she came to Eau Claire, Wis., and prior to her marriage taught school in Chippewa County. She is still living, being a resident of Menomonie, and is a lady possessing a marked charm of manner that has endeared her to a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. and Mrs. Byron M. Wells were the parents of five children: Charles S., born Sept. 2, 1866; Albert B., born Aug. 17, 1867; Catherine E., born Nov. 2, 1870; Grace, born Aug. 24, 1872, and Mary Ella (better known as Nellie), born Dec. 25, 1876. Charles S. was drowned in Lake Menomonie, May 26, 1879, his sad death casting a shadow over the family. Albert B., who is a railroad man residing at Sunburst, Mont., married Lena Mertes of Winona, Minn., and has five children, Hazel, Claude, Roy, Frank and George. Catherine E. is now Mrs. Edward Fletcher of Menomonie and has four children, George, Byrne, Harold and Alan. Grace is the wife of True Whittier of Menomonie and has one child, Mary Ella is the wife of Charles Whittier, telegraph operator at Me-Gladys. nomonie Junction, and has a daughter, Esther M. Mrs. Wells and her children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and she is also a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and if the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She occupies a comfortable residence at No. 1423 Second Street.

Cyrus Stillson Whittier, a notable pioneer of Dunn County, who passed away some 12 years ago, but whose personal and family record is one that is well worthy of preservation in the annals of the county, was born at Pleasant Ridge Plantation (otherwise known as Plantation No. 1) on the Kennebec River, Maine, on Aug. 23, Until he had attained his majority he remained in his native state. Then 1834. in 1855 he came west to Stillwater, Minn., which was his regular place of residence for a while, though for five years he spent each winter in the South. In 1860 he came to Menomonie, entering the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co., and for them he sawed out the timbers used for the massive gate posts of the new residence of Capt. Wilson. On Aug. 7, 1862, Cyrus S. Whittier was united in marriage with Lydia M. Fowler of Menomonie, daughter of Bartholomew and Lydia (Littlefield) Fowler. She was born in Greenwich, Maine, Dec. 26, 1846, and had come to Menomonie with her parents in 1852 from Galena, Ill., having previously lived in Madison, Wis., from which place the family had moved to Galena with an ox team. From Galena they came up the Mississippi by steamboat to Read's Landing, and from that point the father, Bartholomew Fowler, conveyed his family in an open boat up the Chippewa and Red Cedar rivers to Irvington. There Capt. William Wilson met them and brought them by team to Menomonie. Even the dryest mention of such a trip, made over 70 years ago, is sufficient to excite the imagination. The hand of man had then done little to mitigate the wild, free aspect of nature, and one can fancy the little party in their small boat waving goodbye to the loungers at the steamboat landing on the Great River, and, crossing that stream, entering the mouth of the Chippewa, breasting its current and pushing up its winding course, first through the marshy lowlands of its lower reaches, and afterward through the more picturesque country above, marked by frequent bluffs and high mounds, alternated or diversified with charming bits of flower-besprinkled prairie. Occasionally they may have noted some hardy settler's cabin, or perhaps several cabins, at some specially favored spot, the nucleus of some future hamlet or village. No doubt, also, they had occasional glimpses of Indians, or noted the curling smoke from aboriginal camp-fires on the edge of the forest. Many were the interesting sights that they might have seen and doubtless did see. But probably the most interesting of all was the little settlement of Menomonie, at which they finally There was not much of it then; only the mills, the homes of Capt. Wilson arrived. and Capt. Tainter, and the boarding-houses and dwelling of the mills hands and rivermen, the surrounding country being mostly wild and unbroken. Mr. Fowler settled at Waneka in the northern part of the town of Spring Brook, where he established an inn or tavern, which was a stopping place for stages, being a half-way house between Menomonie and Eau Claire. The stages running between Black River Falls and Hudson also stopped there, Mr. Fowler was not only an inn keeper. but worked land. In those days Indians in war paint and feathers were sometimes seen going by the house, for the trails were all around them. There were no settlers near and the appearance of a redskin at the door was often occasion for alarm to the women when Mr. Fowler was working in the fields. These Indians were Chippewas, and, while not unfriendly to the whites, were constantly at strife with Sioux to the west. In her latter years Mrs. Whittier was able to recall an occasion when a brave returning from one of these expeditions grew threatening and displayed a knife, muttering imprecations in his native jargon which Mrs. Whittier fortunately did not understand. The band went out to make hay nearby and did not molest the family further than to steal a barrel of flour. At night Mrs. Fowler kept a light in an upper window to guide white travelers in the dark, an accommodation that was much appreciated. In view of possible trouble with the Indians. Mr. Frowler provided his house with heavily timbered doors, which, however, were never needed; but Mrs. Whittier remembered the shooting of a Chippewa squaw by the Sioux near Gilbert's mill which stood near the site of the present Menomonie Milling Co.'s plant on the west side. Her brother was employed at the mill, living with his wife close by, and saw the occurrence. After six years at Waneka, Mr. Fowler sold the stage station to a Mr. Heller and went back to Dane County, near Stoughton. After remaining there the family returned and settled across the river. Mr. Fowler entered the employ of the lumber company, working in the mills and in the woods, and later moved to a farm. At the time of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus S. Whittier the only store on this side the river was that of James McKahan, occupying a small, one-story frame building. Captain Wilson had moved over to his new home by that time, and Captain Tainter lived where Bernham Tainter now (1912) resides. There were also the Menomonie House near the present city hall, a schoolhouse and a few dwellings on this side. Following the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Whittier, which was performed by E. B. Benjamin, justice of the peace, Mr. Whittier remained five years with Knapp, Stout & Co., and then moved to a farm seven miles from Menomonie in the town of Red Cedar. There he and his wife remained for about 22 years, after which they moved back to Menomonie, re-entering the employ of the company and continuing to work for them until the mills shut down in or about the year 1900. Mr. Whittier was a shingle sawyer by trade. A writer in 1912 said: "Henry Sneen now owns the place where they (the Whittier family) lived during those years on the farm, and Al Dodge is on the farm where the old stage station built by Mr. Fowler stood. One can still see the old cellar on the Eau Claire road about 11 miles from the city." On Wednesday, Aug. 7, 1912, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus S. Whittier at their home at 1409 East Second Street, sat down to a feast that was served in the dishes that contained their wedding dinner just 50 years before. Over the center of the table at which they sat was suspended a pot of gold containing $50, a gift each dollar of which represented one year of their wedded life. The dinning-room was decorated with evergreen, golden glow and white and purple flox. Two tables were set with 14 plates each and all dishes were used that had been left of the set of 50 years before, consisting of pearl chinaware made by J. and G. Meakin. Besides the pot of gold numerous other presents were received, among them being a beautiful berry spoon lined with gold. Another, a $5 gold piece, was received from the members of the Baptist Church, of which Mrs. Cyrus S. Whittier had been a faithful member for about 18 years. Gaiety, unrestrained, ruled during the dinner and the venerable celebrants were the most joyous of all. When Mrs. Whittier was asked the age of Mr. Whittier, in her excitement she replied he was 28 years old. This, however, was his age when they were married, but to her he seemed still young. The out-oftown relations present were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cowing of Superior, Mrs. Earl Sanders of Lake Forest, Ill., and P. L. Whittier of Crandon. The afternoon was spent pleasantly with songs, banjo and violin selections, and stories, after which came the substantial supper. The observances closed with the expression of the sincere wish by children and relatives that this event, which can come but once in any person's life, might be followed by many more happy days and years. The health of Mr. Whittier, however, had already begun to fail, a year or two before this celebration, and it did not improve. His end was gradually approaching and nomedical skill nor loving care on the part of wife and friends could stay the hand of the Grim Reaper. On Tuesday, Oct. 7, 1913, he breathed his last sigh and passed away at the age of 79 years, one month and 14 days. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Whittier eight survived their father, namely: Everard S., of the town of Red Cedar; William; Addie, wife of H. A. Waterston of Duluth, Minn.; Cora, wife of Frank Cowing of Bennett, Wis.; True A., Charles S. and Earl L., of Menomonie; Ralph, now deceased, and Perley L. of Crandon, Wis. All the sons were present at the time of Mr. Whittier's death. There were 22 surviving grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the home on Second Street, the Rev. William Galloway officiating. Mrs. Lydia M. Whittier survived her husband less than four years, and her end came in a very different manner. Not gradually through months of increasing feebleness did she approach the dark river across which we must all journey to the brighter land of eternity, but, almost before she had time to realize that her feet were on the brink, she was plunged into its waters. On Friday afternoon, June 22, 1917, when in her usual good health, she had an apoplectic stroke; on Saturday morning she had another, and on the afternoon of the same day, June 23, a third occurred, and she passed from this life greatly mourned by her children, relations and friends. All the children who had survived their fatner were living except Ralph, who had preceded his mother to the grave. The survivors were present at the funeral services held Tuesday afternoon, June 26, conducted by the Rev. J. B. Reynolds, pastor of the Baptist Church. Interment was made in Evergreen Cemetery. In addition to her children Mrs. Whittier was survived by 22 grandchildren and tour great grandchildren. These two grand old pioneers are at rest. For more than the ordinary span of human life they worthily performed their part and in the end gained some earthly reward. We would not bring them back, there is no need, for in a large and important sense they are still with us. Their deeds and work form part of the heritage of the present generation, and their children rise up and call them blessed.

Frank J. Hones, an extensive farmer and dairyman in the town of Colfax, Section 1, was born in Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 16, 1864, son of Thomas M. and Mary (Henderson) Hones. The father was from London, England, and had followed the occupations both of ale brewer and fisherman, and on coming to this country settled in New York, subsequently going from there to Portsmouth, N. H. His wife Mary, whom he married in Portsmouth, was a native of Scotland. She was not, however, his first wife, as he had been previously married, and of that union there were four children, of whom the only one living is Emily, wife of Brigadier-General Bell of the United States army. She resides in California. Of the second union two children were born, William, residing in California, and Frank J., subject of this sketch. Frank J. Hones passed the early years of his life in the states of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, attending school in the cities of Portsmouth, N. H., and Haverhill, Mass., but not for any long period, as at the age of 12 years he went to work in a shoe factory in Haverhill. He remained there until he was 19 and in that period of seven years obtained good practical knowledge and personal skill in the process of shoemaking. At the end of that time he went to Boston and took a course in Bryant & Stratton's commercial college. He then came west to St. Paul, where for some time he was employed in a shoe factory and wholesale shoe house. His next change of occupation was to go on the road as a shoe salesman, covering parts of Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and northern Michigan, and he was thus engaged for the long period of 25 years. During that time he resolved ultimately to get onto the land and spend his latter years as a farmer, proprietor of a good place and watching it grow in value from year to year, instead of being continually on the move from one place to another, for most of the time banished from the comforts With this object in view, he bought 120 acres of land in Section 36, town of home. of Grant, Dunn County, Wis., the tract being partly improved, and when he was ready he took up his abode on it. He had been married at Eau Claire, Wis., on Sept. 14, 1889, to Mabel E. Buffington, daughter of Edwin and Nancy (Crockett) Buffington, and he and his wife were the parents of one child, Kenneth W. After settling on his farm Mr. Hones proceeded to make further improvements, erecting buildings, which included a good modern residence of stone construction and containing 11 rooms. Later he bought 320 acres in Section 1, town of Colfax, to which farm he moved in 1916. He sold his farm in Section 36, in 1919. He has since been engaged in general farming, stock raising and dairying, but as his health lately has not been good, he leaves to his son Kenneth the actual management of affairs. He has a herd of 57 pure-bred and grade Guernseys and milks 32 cows. using for that purpose a Universal milking machine. His bulls are pure bred and his swine are Duroc-Jerseys, of which he raises on an average of 100 per year. Two hundred acres of his land are in a state of cultivation. Mr. Hones is a member of The son, Kenneth W., married Ragna Roe and they have one the Masonic order. Mr. Hones' course through life has been progressive and has been child, June C. one of action. When obliged to leave school he continued his studies in his spare time, and when he was able took a commercial course to fit himself for a business career, after gaining a practical knowledge of the shoe business. During his career as a traveling salesman he was laying the foundation for his success as a farmer, and he ultimately obtained the goal of his ambition. Now he can afford to take life easier, leaving its sterner responsibilities to the younger generation.

John C. Wilcox, a prominent business man of Menomonie, part owner of the Graven & Wilcox shoe store, was born Jan. 3, 1862, at Honey Creek, Sauk County, Wis., son of Heman A. and Martha J. (Tofflemier) Wilcox. The father was a native of New York State, and the mother of Canada. From that state Heman Wilcox went in 1835 to Chicago, where he remained until 1856. He then went to Madison, Wis., arriving there before Wisconsin was admitted to the Union, and he was one of the pioneer developers of the city. It was there also that he was married to Martha J. Tofflemier. In 1856 he moved with his family to Sauk County, this state, where he engaged in farming and milling and also for some years was a mer-There he remained until his death, which occurred March 26, 1878. His chant. wife survived him nearly 40 years, passing away Dec. 22, 1917. They had been the parents of six children: Harriet, now Mrs. William S. Jones of Wichita, Kans.; Heman Alonzo, of Minneapolis; Mary, who married a Mr. Jackson and is now deceased; Frank L., of Superior, Wis.; Jessie B., now Mrs. L. A. Brown of Madison, Wis.; and John C. of Menomonie. John C. Wilcox acquired his education in the common and high schools at Spring Green, Sauk County, Wis., his teacher for much of the time being the lady who subscent hearth became of the time being the lady who subsequently became Mrs. Robert LaFollette. His first industrial experiences were in railroad and farm work in that county. It was in 1880 that he came to Menomonie and here for two years was clerk in the old Merchants Hotel. He then entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, with whom he remained for nine years, being manager of the clothing department at the time he resigned his position. In April, 1891, Mr. Wilcox formed a partnership with Peter Graven and they established the Graven & Wilcox Shoe Co., with a store located where the Jensen Hardware Co. is today at 314 Main Street. There they remained until 1900, when they moved to their present location at 336 Main Street, where they have the largest and best equipped shoe store in the city or county. Mr. Wilcox has been active in Commercial Club work and other public affairs and in many ways has proved himself a public spirited citizen and one whose aid and influence have been potent factors in building up the community. He twice served as president of the Commercial Club, and is now president of the Retail Merchants' Association and chairman of the approval committee. In addition to his interest in the shoe business, he is part owner of the Hansman & Wilcox stock farm at Knapp, a 190-acre tract which he and Mr. Hansman purchased in 1916 and have developed into a fine modern stock farm where they are raising pure bred Holstein cattle, H. F. Hansman acting as manager. Mr. Wilcox was married Jan. 21, 1883, at Black River, Wis., to Miss Sarah W. Heller, daughter of Capt. Martin W. and Hannah (Budd) Heller. Of this union two children have been born: Lucille, who is now the wife of J. T. Flint of Menomonie, and Helen, wife of H. F. Hansman of Knapp, Dunn County. Mrs. Sarah W. Wilcox passed away on June 13, 1924.

The Waterman-Ehrhard Company.-In 1907 B. H. Waterman purchased the general store of Schuette & Quilling on Broadway, Menomonie, which he operated for six and a half years, or until Jan. 13, 1913, when he consolidated with Louis Ehrhard, who for several years had operated a drug store in the city, and they moved the stock of both stores into the old Kraft Mercantile Co.'s building at the corner of Main and Sixth streets. This store measures 100 x 170 feet, the 100foot frontage being on Main Street and the 170-foot frontage on Sixth Street. The building is two stories high, with full basement and includes seven departments, namely: hardware, groceries, clothing, drugs, ladies' ready-to-wear, shoes and flour and feed. The concern is a stock company, with B. H. Waterman president and business manager; S. H. Waterman, vice president; and Louis Ehrhard, secretary and treasurer.

E. Oliver Wright, president and general manager of the Wisconsin Milling Co., Menomonie, who is also actively connected with other important business interests, was born in Gallatin, Mo., June 26, 1870, son of William A. and Rachel (Wills) Wright. The father, who was born in Tennessee, was a farmer and stock raiser in Davis County, Mo., for many years. He is now deceased, as also is his wife Rachel, who was born in Indiana. E. Oliver Wright as a boy attended the grade and high schools in the town of Jefferson, Davis County, Mo., and subsequently the Chillicothe Normal and Business College, completing his course at Chillicothe in June, 1891. In August of that year he went to Minneapolis and entered the service of the Pioneer Fuel Co., as cashier in their retail coal department, and remained with them subsequently for two years. His next position was a chief accountant with the Mills and Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Minneapolis, with which company he remained until 1901. After that he was with the F. H. Pravey Co., grain dealers of Minneapolis, for two years, and later in the auditing department of the James Quirk Milling Co., working for the latter concern until October, 1906. Then on October 15, he came to Menomonie to take the position of general manager for the Wisconsin Milling Co., of which he subsequently became president also. In 1921 Mr. Wright assisted in organizing the American Baker & Material Co., of which he was made president. Ac ive in everything that has to do with the welfare and progress of the city in which he resides, he is a member of the Menomonie Commercial Club, of which he is a past president, and of the Menomonie Rotary Club, of which he was one of the organizers and its first vice president. He is a Free Mason belonging to the blue lodge, chapter and commandery in Menomonie, and to the Mystic Shrine in Minneapolis, and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge in Menomonie. Mr. Wright was married in Minneapolis, Minn., on May 16, 1894, to Laverna D. Rexford, daughter of Addison and Marie (Du Tillier) Rexford. Both her parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Wright have one daughter, Mildred G., who is a graduate of Milwaukee Downer College, from which she received the degree of Master of Science in 1916. In 1917 she received the Master's degree from the University of Illinois, majoring in chemistry. The family are members of the Congregational Church of Menomonie.

Rev. William D. Keturakat, pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Menomonie, was born in Tauroggen, Russia, Sept. 3, 1886, son of Rev. Martin and Anna (Clashen) Keturakat. The parents were natives of Germany, where they were married. In 1873 they went to Russia and for 18 years the Rev. Martin Keturakat followed the calling of Lutheran pastor in Kovno and Tauroggen. Then in 1891 he and his family returned to Germany, settling in Ebling, where they made their home until 1898, in which year they came to the United States. After residing for a while in Chicago, they went to Philadelphia, later returning west to Eitzen, Minn. Their next home was in Collinsville, Ill., where the father and head of the family died on March 15, 1911. Since then his widow has resided in Milwaukee with her daughter, Neomai. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Keturakak were the parents of five children, namely: Martin, now a Lutheran minister at Summit, S. D.; Neomai, of Milwaukee, Wis.; William D., subject of this sketch; Lydia, wife of the Rev. Henry Ziemer of St. Louis; and Hannah, who is Mrs. Alvin Stegeman of Milwaukee. William D. Keturakat acquired his grade school education in Ebling, Germany, and after coming to America with his parents, entered Northwestern College at Watertown, Wis. Later he took seminary work in Springfield, Ill., being graduated with the class of 1909. He was ordained a Lutheran minister in June, 1909. at Collinsville, Ill. His first pastoral charge was at Barron, Wis., where he remained for two years, after his father's death in 1911 becoming his successor at Collinsville, Ill., where also he served two years. His next charge was at Centuria. Wis., and during his four years' work there he organized and established congregations at Amery, Rock Creek and Grantsberg, Wis. He then went to Hamberg, Wis., northwest of Wausau, where he remained until coming to Menomonie in November, 1920. Here he has charge of a large congregation, the work involving many responsibilities and duties which keep him busily employed. It has enabled him, however, to prove his ability and he has succeeded in imbueing the people under his charge with a high spirit of Christian devotedness to the faith and of active working efficiency, which has made St. Paul's congregation a power for good in the community. Rev. William D. Keturakat was married June 9, 1910. in Collinsville, Ill., to Marie Mueller, daughter of Conrad and Marie (Braze) Mueller. Her mother is now deceased but her father is living and is a resident of St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Keturakat have been the parents of five children; who were born as follows: Martha, April 13, 1911; Margaret, Aug. 30, 1916; Winifred, Feb. 3, 1920, and Charles and Charlotte (twins), June 1, 1922.

William R. Zabel, president of the Bank of Boyceville, and one of the leading men of this village, was born at Plainview, Wabasha County, Minn., April 17, 1882, son of August and Henrietta (Tetzlaf) Zabel. The parents were natives of Germany who came to America in 1862, locating in Olmstead County, Minn., where they remained for about one year. They then moved to Plainview and engaged in August Zabel is now retired and living in Plainview village. Mrs. farming. Henrietta Zabel died on March 9, 1911. They were the parents of eight children: Edward, of Plainview; Tena, now Mrs. Charles Petrich of Plainview; Adolph, deceased; John, of Plainview; Bertha, who is at home with her father; Gust, of Elgin, Minn.; William R., of Boyceville, Wis., and Charles, who is assistant cashier of the Bank of Boyceville. William R. Zabel acquired his education in the schools of Plainview, Minn., being graduated from the high school with the class of 1901. In 1903 he went to Grand Meadow, Mower County, Minn., and was there engaged in general mercantile business until 1913. During that period he was also a director of and stockholder in the First State Bank of Dexter, Minn., and he was also interested in the Nolen Auto Co. In 1913 Mr. Zabel disposed of his holdings there and came to Boyceville, purchasing an interest in the Bank of Boyceville, of which he then became the president. In this office he has since continued, and his connection with the bank is one that has proved highly beneficial to the institution and to the community generally. He has taken a prominent part in every practical movement for the improvement of local conditions and advancement along both moral and material lines. He is a stockholder in some of the important business concerns of the village, including the telephone company, the Boyceville Opera House, and the cooperative creamery, being president of the opera house company, and he is secretary and treasurer of the Boyceville branch of the National Farm Land Association. He is also interested in the agricultural development of the county, being the owner of several good farms, which he rents out, and participating also in other land development plans. He has been a member of the board of education of Boyceville ever since making his home in the village, and as such deserves some of the credit for the building of the beautiful new high school. Mr. Zabel was married, Aug. 26, 1911, to Grace F. Leonard of Spring Valley, Minn., and of this union have been born seven children, who were born as follows: Marion, Oct. 3, 1912; Howard, July 14, 1914; Eleanor, Nov. 27, 1915; Robert, March 12, 1917; Constance, July 30, 1918; Theodore, April 15, 1920, and Freedom. The last mentioned is deceased. Mr. Zabel and his family are consistent members of the German Lutheran Church.

Clifford W. Hayes, cashier of the Bank of Boyceville, and one of the active business men who are taking a leading part in the upbuilding of Dunn County, was born in the town of Tiffany, this county, Sept. 26, 1872, son of William and Annie E. (Stickney) Hayes. The father was born at Erie, Penn., and the mother in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, the latter being of old New England stock. They were married in the town of Stanton, Dunn County, and settled one mile west of what is now the village of Boyceville in the town of Tiffany. There William Hayes, with his brothers, Ansel H., Alonzo W. and John N., established a sawmill, and a settlement grew up around it which was known as Hayestown, and which, in addition to the mill contained a store and post office and a few dwelling-houses. The post office, which was not called Hayestown, however, but Tiffany Creek, was conducted for several years by Mrs. William Hayes. The Hayes brothers continued in the lumber business until 1914, sawing logs in the rough and manufacturing lumber, and it was they who furnished the lumber used in the construction of the first court house in Menomonie. In 1920 William Hayes removed to Humboldt, Iowa, where he now lives retired. For ten years he has been a widower, his wife Annie having passed away on Dec. 10, 1910. They were the parents of five children: Clifford W., of Boyceville; Alvin H., of Dunning; Edna A., now Mrs. Lew Sutliffe, residing in North Dakota; Ida E., also of North Dakota, who married John Jacobs but is now a widow, and Lester C., who died in infancy. Clifford W. Hayes acquired his elementary education in the district schools of the town of Tiffany, after which he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for two years. He then went to New Richmond, where he attended high school, subsequently resuming work at his trade and continuing at it for a year thereafter, after which he conducted the home farm for a year. In 1901 he became clerk in the general store of N. W. Bradshaw, and was thus occupied for seven years. The . next three years of his life were spent as an employee in the R. A. Cleveland lumber yards in Boyceville. In July, 1910 Mr. Hayes accepted a position as assistant cashier of the Bank of Boyceville, which had been organized in October, 1909, and a year later he was made cashier, in which capacity he has since continued to serve, with credit to himself and manifest benefit to the institution. He is popular not only as an official of the bank, but as a reliable citizen whose activities along business and social lines have benefited the general community. He is secretarytreasurer of the Boyceville Telephone Co., and also of the Boyceville Opera House Co., and fills the same offices for the Boyceville Rod and Gun Club, which club has hatched 100 pheasant's eggs, setting the young free in the woods to propogate their kind, and have also supplied over 100 cans of trout fry and fingerlings to replenish the trout supply of the streams. Mr. Hayes is also treasurer of the Boyceville Advancement Association. He has never sought to evade public office when he could be of use to the community. For eight consecutive years he was clerk of the town of Tiffany, which then included the village of Boyceville and was also a member of the school board for two years, besides which he has taken a strong interest in the welfare and progress of the village. Mr. Hayes was married July 15, 1908, to Luella I. Paul, who was born in the town of Colfax, Dunn County, Aug. 23, 1869, daughter of John V. and Mary A. (Jones) Paul. The fruit of this union is one child, Nealia Ellen, who was born April 1, 1910. Mrs. Luella I. Hayes, after being graduated from the common schools, pursued more advanced studies in a Minneapolis high school and the River Falls and Stevens Point state normal schools, after which she taught school for $17\frac{1}{2}$ years. She was a member for three years of the first Dunn County board of education and of the Boyceville board of education for six years. She was also village clerk for one year. She is a member of the Woman's Club of Boyceville, which is affiliated with the Federated Clubs, and of which she was the first president; also of the Rebekahs, the Royal Neighbors and the W. C. T. U. The family are members of the M. E. Church, Mrs. Hayes belonging also to the Ladies' Aid Society in which she is active. In 1910 Mr. Hayes built a nice modern residence on South Central Street, which has since been the family home.

John Vincent Paul, an early settler in the town of Dunn, was born May 10, 1835. He was brought to America at the age of nine years, subsequently resided in the East until he was 19, and then came to Wisconsin, locating in Waukesha County, where he engaged in farming. In 1867 he bought some land in the town of Colfax, Dunn County, coming here temporarily for that purpose and to start improvements, and in 1868 he returned to Waukesha County to close out his affairs there and get his family, driving back to Dunn County with a team of horses, and wagon or buggy, and also bringing cattle, hogs, sheep and chickens. This transportation of most of the chief constituents of a farm made the journey slow and tedious; but they finally arrived here and began to improve their place in the town of Colfax. not only wild but also proved rough, but Mr. Paul erected good buildings and in The land was time cleared his land and developed a good farm. He had been married in Milwaukee, Feb. 5, 1861, to Mary A. Jones, who was born in Waukesah County, Wis., Sept. 15, 1844, and was of Welsh ancestry. She proved a good wife and mother, and their family in time numbered seven children: Emma, now deceased; George W. and Charles A., of the village of Colfax; Luella, wife of Clifford W. Hayes of Boyceville; Jennie, now Mrs. E. B. Rosenberg of Colfax, and Maude, who is the wife of W. H. Ferguson of Marshfield, Ore. In 1903 Mr. and Mrs. Paul retired from farming and took up their residence in the village of Colfax, where they spent the rest of their days, Mrs. Paul passing away first, on Dec. 17, 1908, and Mr. Paul about a year and a half later, on June 23, 1908. They were worthy, honest and industrious people, good types of the hardy pioneers of this region, and in early manhood Mr. Paul was quite noted as a swimmer, being considered as one of the best in northern Wisconsin.

WILLIAM G. HILL AND FAMILY

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

William G. Hill, now living retired in the village of Knapp, and who is a man of many and varied experiences, was born in England, Feb. 14, 1863, son of George and Charlotte (Atherton) Hill. The parents were natives of England, where the father died in July, 1883, but the mother is still residing there, being now 88 years They had five children, all of whom live in England except the subject of this sketch. They are: Sarah, now Mrs. John Hartley; William G., of Wheeler, Wis.; Rosa, living with her mother; Emily, wife of Edward Henslip, and Mary Ann, wife of John Robb. William G. Hill acquired a public school education in his native land, where he remained until April, 1881, when he came to the United States. For six months during that year he resided in Waukesha County, Wisconsin. in the fall he came to Dunn County, making his home with his uncle, John Hill, In 1883 Mr. Hill returned to England on a visit but in the following year came back to this country. His return trip was something in the nature of a world tour, as, taking the Suez Canal route eastward, he visited Italy, Egypt, Australia, New Zealand and California, arriving at Colfax, Dunn County, Wis., in August, where he worked for his uncle John. On Nov. 18, 1885, he was united in marriage with Louise L. Simpson, who was born in Millville, Mass., Feb. 6, 1863. He then rented his uncle's farm in the town of Colfax, which he conducted for two He next bought an improved farm of 160 acres in the same town, where he lived until 1890, in which year he went to California and was foreman on a large farm in that state until 1893. Then returning to Colfax, Mr. Hill took a homestead tract of 160 acres of wild land in the town of Sherman, on which he erected a set of buildings, and where he spent eight years, engaged in improving the place. After that he farmed three years in the town of Tainter, and then bought of Elmer Hill 120 acres of land in the town of Colfax, on which he farmed for two years. He then returned to his homestead in the town of Sherman and operated that farm until 1918, though during that period he was absent several months on another trip to England, leaving Nov. 26, 1912 and returning in the spring of 1913. In 1918 Mr. Hill sold 120 acres of his farm and moved with his family to the village of Wheeler, where he built a nice bungalow dwelling and has since resided. While still living on his farm he traveled two years for the Equity society and did the same for two years after moving to the village. He has rebought the 120 acres of his farm that he sold and now owns the entire homestead of 160 acres. In July, 1923, he became manager of the Wheeler Service Station, and served as such until they sold out He is a member of the fraternal orders of Odd Fellows and Modern Jan. 1, 1925. Woodmen of America. Mr. and Mrs. William G. Hill have been the parents of ten children, of whom eight are now living. The following brief mention includes the ten: Lillie F., now Mrs Fred Giethman of Ulen, Minn., and the mother of two children, Edward and Ross; Emily, who married Lloyd Ranney of the town of Hay River and has four children, Kenneth, Norma, Buleau and Malcolm; Mary C., wife of George Hunt of Castleton, N. D.; Pearl, who is Mrs. Edward Schmidt of Castleton, N. D.; Arthur G. (first), who died in infancy; Arthur G. (second), operating the old homestead farm in the town of Sherman, who married Inga Setter and has a son, Robert; Mildred, who is Mrs. Roy Ankney of Wheeler and has four children, Marshall, Jack, William Hill and Betty C; Rose, wife of Cyrus Ankney of Minneapolis; Clara, who died at the age of 13 years, and Velden R., who is attending school and resides with his parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hill are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Colfax. They are people of high standing in the community and have a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Andrew Baxter, the well known founder and proprietor of a flourishing store and other business in Section 3, town of Hay River, was born on a farm in Vernon County, Wisconsin, Dec. 8, 1878, son of David N. and Helen C. (Emberson) Baxter. The father was a native of Scotland, born near Glasgow in 1842; he died in Vernon County Wis., March 12, 1894. The mother was born in Coon Valley, Vernon County, Wis., Feb. 13, 1850, her parents being Norwegian farmers. She was married to David N. Baxter about 1877. She is still living and resides with her daugh-ter, Mrs. Lester West, in Mowbridge, S. D. Andrew Baxter grew to manhood on the home farm in Vernon County and was there educated in the rural school. When he was 16 years old his father died and the burden of conducting the farm fell upon his shoulders. Henceforth he took the management of it for his widowed mother, conducting it successfully until 1904. Early in March that year he came to Dunn County and bought from Edward McMerchie half an acre of land at Big Beaver in Section 3, town of Hay River. He also purchased materials for the building of a small store and an adjoining residence, after doing which, he returned to Vernon On April 5, 1904, he was married to Augusta C. Krause, who was born County. Nov. 12, 1880, daughter of August and Anna (Krause) Krause, the parents being of German birth. Bringing his bride to Big Beaver, Dunn County, Mr. Baxter found temporary accommodations while he proceeded with his building operations; but he discovered that the site he had selected was low and subjected to being overflowed by water, so he negotiated with "Sam" Kyle, who lived at Downsville, for half an acre of land just north of the one he had chosen. To effect this transaction he had to walk to Downsville, a distance of 29 miles, and back. That spring he completed his house and store and began business, carrying a small stock of general merchandise. Later he bought another half acre of land, which adjoined his place on the north, and on it built a small feed mill and blacksmith's shop, both of which he owns and operates today. His mercantile business has grown so that he has had to enlarge his store building and he now carries a large and varied stock of general merchandise. He has also enlarged his house and bought 80 acres adjoining his other property, which he operates as a farm. The locality has come to be known as Baxter and as it looks at present it seems like the nucleus of a village. For some years Mr. Baxter represented the International Harvester Company in this section and did it so well that in 1923 he was awarded by the company a prize of $1,000 for the best showing in their business for 1922. As his victory was against a competition of 1288 other agents in this state, the fact is of itself sufficient evidence of that business ability that Mr. Baxter has shown in all his undertakings and which has made his one of the most conspicuously successful men in Dunn County. He and his wife have been the parents of six children: George A., born May 29, 1905; Anna H., July 29, 1907; Carl A., June 26, 1909; William L., Aug. 2, 1911; Lillian A., Oct. 27, 1918, and a child who died in infancy. George A. is now his father's assistant in the latter's various enterprises. The other surviving children are attending school in Menomonie, where their mother maintains a home for them. Mrs. Baxter's father is still living in Vernon County, Wis., but her mother died Feb. 18, 1916.

Arthur Woods, for many years a prominent farmer in the town of Eau Galle, but now deceased, was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, March 1, 1840, son of Dawson and Catherine (Davidson) Woods. The parents were natives of Ireland who imigrated to Canada when young, settling in Dunn County, Wisconsin, Here they became pioneer farmers, securing 80 acres of land in Section 33, in 1866. town of Eau Galle. It was a wild tract in a wild country without roads, and supplies had to be "packed in." that is, carried on the back in pack form, from Durand and Eau Galle village. Dawson Woods built a log cabin into which he moved with his family, and after years of hard labor he finally developed a farm. Both he and his wife are now deceased. Their children were John, Arthur, Eliza Jane, Dawson, Ellen, Thomas, Martha, David, Anna, Harriet and Sarah. Arthur Woods as a boy attended school in Canada, coming to the States with his parents in 1866. Being 26 years old at the time, he was already ambitious to be his own master and work for himself. Accordingly he likewise took a homestead, a tract of 40 acres in the town of Eau Galle, which, like his father's place, was all wild land, and this in time he developed into a good farm. Later he bought 80 acres in Section 32, and 60 acres in Section 29, which also he developed, becoming a successful farmer and a well known figure in the community, and remaining active until his lamented death on July 3, 1907. Arthur Woods was married Oct. 2, 1872, to Nora Moody, who was born in Dunn County, Wis., June 4, 1854, daughter of John Gilbert and Honora (Houlihan) Moody. Her father, of Irish ancestry, was born in New York State, but her mother was born in Ireland. They were married in Chicago and came to Dunn County in 1854 as genuine pioneers, settling on 180 acres of government land in Sections 21 and 22, town of Eau Galle. The brush was so thick that they had to cut a path through it to reach their place. Mr. Moody built a log shanty with a split rail roof, which was the first dwelling of the family and in time he built up a fine farm there, developing 100 acres of land and erecting a full set of modern farm buildings. His last years were spent in retirement in the village of Eau Galle, where he died in 1908 at the age of 88 years, and his wife in 1916 at the same age, she being eight years his junior. Mrs. Arthur Woods after the death of her husband continued for some time to carry on the farm with the assistance of her sons. She then moved to Nashwauk, Minn., where she lived for five years, returning at the end of that time to Wisconsin and taking up her residence in the village of Elmwood, where she bought a piece of land consisting of five lots and built a nice stucco cottage, which is her present home. She and her husband were the parents of 14 children, one of whom died in infancy. The record of the others is, briefly, as follows: Kate, now Mrs. Charles Nelson of Flint, Mich., is the mother of four children, Jennie, Lizzie, Cassie and Alvin; Ella, who is the wife of William Robelia of the town of Eau Galle, has three children, Shremley, Harrison and Clarence; John, married Phyllis Lawrence and resides at Nashwauk, Minn., having two children, Lawrence and Loraine; Edward, single, resides at Nashwauk, Minn.; William, also single, lives in Eau Galle; Arthur, single, is residing in Eau Galle; Fred, of Virginia, Minn., married Margaret Dickenson and has four children, Nora, Arthur, Clarence and Frances; Joseph, of Keewatin, Minn., married Ida Griffin; George, of Eau Galle, who married Mabel Kelly, has two children, Neal and Evelyn; Marvin, is deceased; Mercy, now Mrs. Orville Leaman of Flint, Mich., has two children, Bernardine and Bernard; Sherman, now owner of the home farm in the town of Eau Galle, married Mamie Kelly, and has three children, Darrell, Verla and Marcella; and Vernon, single, lives in Virginia, Minn. This is a worthy family, all the surviving members of which are doing useful work in the world and building up character and good individual reputations. Mrs. Nora Woods is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is a lady with a wide circle of friends.

Fred Seiler, an active farmer in Section 10, town of Dunn, was born Aug. 8, 1886, on the farm that he now owns and operates, son of Gottleib and Susan (Schmutz) Seiler. The parents were natives of Switzerland who came to this country about 40 years ago or more, settling first in La Crosse, Wis., whence in 1877 they came to Dunn County, locating in Downsville, which place was one of the points at which the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company were then operating. For about ten years Gottleib Seiler worked for that company, or until they got through there, after which, there being little to do in the village, he began farming, buying 40 acres of wild land in Section 10, town of Dunn, and also homesteading an 80-acre tract adjoining, which gave him a farm of 120 acres, or, rather, the land for one, as it became a farm only through his own long continued exertions, supplemented by those of his faithful and industrious wife. Later, also their children helped. When he began he put up a house, barn and chicken house, all built of logs, and then turned his attention to the clearing of his land, a task that he accomplished in time, also doing general farming. For a number of years he and his wife continued their labors until their children, especially their son Fred, took the hardest work off their hands. The eldest son, Herman, is now a carpenter living in Downsville. The second child is Margaret, who is the wife of Gust Evelius and resides in Minneapolis, where he conducts a barber shop. The youngest is Fred, now proprietor of the home farm. Gottleib Seiler died in April, 1917, and his wife Susan in July, 1923. Fred Seiler acquired his education in the district school and was trained to agriculture by his father, whom he helped to grub, break and cultivate the land. This apprenticeship to farm work began when he was ten years old and he has never been idle since. He and his father have always worked together in the development and improvement of the farm. In 1912 they built a basement barn of 32 x 52 feet and in 1914 a large commodious eight-room house. In 1917 after the father's death our subject bought the interests of the other heirs and from that time until his mother's death in 1923 was the manager and co-partner of the place with his mother, at her death becoming the sole owner. He has put up a machine shed and other out-buildings. and fences, and has kept up with the times in the management of his business. His cattle are good grade Holsteins and he is giving particular attention to dairy farming and the raising of hogs, meeting with good success. Mr. Seiler married Madge Smith, who was born in the town of Dunn, Oct. 12, 1901, daughter of Frank and Maude (Chickering) Smith of this town. Mr. and Mrs. Seiler have three children; May, Ruby and Reba, the two latter being twins. The family are members of St. Jacob's Lutheran Church, and have a good social standing in the town of Dunn and vicinity.

Edward R. Smith, a well known farmer of Sections 13 and 14, in the town of Dunn, was born in Cameron County, Pennsylvania, Feb. 9, 1861, his parents being natives of that county. It was in 1866 that they came west to Dunn County, Wisconsin, locating on Little Elk Creek in the town of Dunn, where they remained for about two years. Then they took a homestead of 40 acres in Section 13, which consisted only of wild land without buildings. Its development called for hard work on the part of John Smith, and also his wife, whose family duties kept her fully engaged. As it was years before the land was sufficiently developed to yield them support, Mr. Smith in the meanwhile had to work at other things. The first dwelling of the family on their farm was a log house, the logs for which Mr. Smith cut in the woods above Downsville, floating them down the river to a point on its bank as near as possible to his land, when he hauled them the rest of the way by There he lived for about 18 or 19 years, improving his farm as fast as he was team. able until his labors were ended by his death in April 11, 1887. His wife survived him several years, dying on the farm, March 16, 1900. Of their ten children, only four are now living: Reuben, of Downsville; Laura, now Mrs. William Coates of the state of Iowa; Mary, who is the wife of John Throne of Eau Claire, and Edward R., subject of this sketch. Edward R. Smith when a boy attended the Creaser school in the town of Dunn, but at an early age had to make himself useful on the home farm, where in time he learned to be a good farmer, though in his activities he has been handicapped for the greater part of his life owing to an accident which befell him when he was 16 years old, when his foot was crushed by a log, necessitating its amputation. In the year 1900, after his mother's death the other heirs to the property assigned to him their rights in the 40-acre farm, and he began operating it on his own account. He has increased its area to 160 acres and has improved it in every way, erected needed buildings. It occupies parts of Sections 13 and 14 and is now a good piece of agricultural property. Mr. Smith has been successful and is doing a good dairying business, keeping mixed stock. He is a stockholder in the Waterman-Erhard Co. of Menomonie. On March 19, 1884, Edward R. Smith was married to Deborah Lowry, who was born at Little Falls, N. Y., daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hurley) Lowry. Her father was a native of Ireland but reared in New York State, her mother being born at Troy, N. Y. In 1865 they came to Dunn County, Wis., locating on land in the town of Colfax, where they built up a farm on which the father is still living, the mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Lowry, having died on Oct. 11, 1923. Their children were as follows: Deborah, now Mrs. Edward R. Smith; James, of Minneapolis; Estella, wife of J. E. Corey of Grant Pass, Ore.; Emma, wife of Frank Leach of Menomonie Junction; Bertha, who is Mrs. William Staples of Wynotcha, Wash.; George, a farmer in the town of Colfax, and Charles, who is also farming in the town of Colfax. Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Smith have been the parents of six children: Claude L., Hester M., John H., Edward C., Miles L. and Willis O., in regard to whom the following is a further record. Claude L., born Jan. 18, 1885, is a stone cutter in the Dunnville quarries. He married Grace Baron and has one child, Amos. Hester M., born May 29, 1886, married Michael Gisness, who died in 1918, leaving her with two children, Mildred and Anona. She and her children reside with her parents. John H., born July 29, 1888, is also a stone cutter and, like his brother Claude, works in the Dunnville quarries. He married Emma Dean and has four children, Gerald Dean, Miles E., Jean H. and Jannita A. Edward C., born Aug. 14, 1891, and who is managing the home farm, married Edna Wald and has one child, Willis C. Miles L., born Oct. 22, 1899 and a stone cutter by occupation, married Effie Backen and has two children, Anona K. and Lois E. Willis O., born Sept. 15, 1901, lives with his parents and also works in the stone quarries. The family are affiliated religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Dunnville. Mr. Smith is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Royal Neighbors, its auxilliary branch, to which latter camp at Downsville, Mrs. Smith also belongs.

Edward McRoberts, one of the earliest settlers in Eau Galle, Dunn County, who passed away over 20 years ago, was born in County Down, Ireland, and there grew to manhood. In 1848, while yet single he emigrated to the United States, and in the following year there came to America from his own county, a young woman, Eliza Gilmore, whom he knew, and to whom he was married in the city of New York in 1850. Soon afterwards they moved to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where Mr. McRoberts became head gardener for the John Jacob Astor family and remained as such for some years. In 1856 they heard the call of the West and coming to Wisconsin, located at Eau Galle, Dunn County. Here Mr. McRoberts entered the employ of the Wales Lumber Co., which later became the Carson & Eaton Co., and still later the Carson & Rand Co., and for about three years he worked in their blacksmith shop during the winter and in their sawmill during the summer. At the end of that period he bought 80 acres of land in the town of Eau Galle, a tract entirely covered with hardwood timber, and began the hurculean task of transforming it into a farm. Making a clearing, he built a log house for a dwelling, then several other log structures to serve as stables or barns, all these buildings having thatched roofs. Then followed the strenuous work of cutting the timber, grubbing out the stumps, and breaking and developing the land. Though it took years, it was in time well accomplished, and the original buildings were replaced by larger and better ones, frame-built. There Mr. McRoberts followed general farming for 20 years, effectually aided by his faithful and industrious wife. Prosperity, when it came, was well earned and proportionately enjoyed. Mr. Mc-Roberts retired from active work at the age of 60 years, but continued to reside on the farm until his death, which took place on Dec. 25 (Christmas Day), 1903. He had been a widower for over five years, Mrs. McRoberts having died on June 11, 1888. They had five children, Charles, David, Edward, William and John, all of whom are deceased except David.

David McRoberts, Jr., a well known merchant of Eau Galle, who is now the oldest living pioneer of the village, was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., July 29, 1855, son of Edward and Eliza (Gilmore) McRoberts. He was educated in the public schools of Eau Galle and spent the years of his youth and early manhood in helping his parents develop the farm. At the age of 21 he entered the employ of Carson & Rand, the well known lumber company, and was with them subsequently for three years. After that he worked seven years as teamster for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company of Menomonie, or until 1883, and in that year, on October, 17, he was married to Jessie Cross of Arkansas, Pepin County, Wis. He then returned to Eau Galle and rented his parents' farm, which he operated under rental until his father's death in 1903, or for a period of 20 years, at the end of which time he took it over, continuing to operate it until 1919. In that year he gave up farming and took up his residence in Eau Galle village, where on July 12, 1920, his wife passed away, leaving many aching hearts behind her, for she had been a faithful wife and efficient co-worker with her husband, a wise and loving mother, and a hospitable neighbor. Mr. and Mrs. McRoberts had had three children: Earl, born Dec. 1, 1885; Edward, born Jan. 10, 1888, and Eliza, born in 1890, who died in 1903. Earl is now manager of the McRoberts Mercantile Co. in Eau Galle, and is one of the hustling young business men of Dunn County, standing high in the community, and being a member of the Masonic and Modern Woodmen fraternal orders. Some years ago when the subject of this sketch thought of retiring from agricultural pursuits, he bought another 80-acre farm adjoining his own so that each of his sons would have a farm, erecting a good set of buildings on the newly acquired land, and operating both farms until he retired. Then Earl took the new farm, but as he soon afterwards decided to go into mercantile business, his father sold it. Earl married Minnie Reckin, of the town of Eau Galle, daughter of August Reckin, and has two children, Gordon and Earl Junior. Edward is now manager of the old home farm, being a representative of the third generation on it. He married Marjory Allen of Eau Claire, and has two children, Dorothy and Robert. Mr. McRoberts also conducts a boat livery on Lake Eau Galle, keeping a number of good boats, both for fishing and for pleasure rowing. He keeps on hand a quantity of all kinds of bait for the angler. While at the store a full line of fishing tackle is kept. The family are connected religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jens O. Stene of the town of Tainter, who has been a resident of Dunn County for nearly half a century and is still active and efficient along agricultural lines, was born in Lillehammer, Norway, April 1, 1855, son of Ole Swanson and Selma (Johnson) Swanson. The father was a day laborer who died in Norway, his native land, after which the mother came to the United States and made her home with her children, Nettie, the wife of T. G. Berger of Minnesota, and Jens O. She died at the home of the latter in 1908. There were two other children, Andrew and Bertha, both of whom died in infancy. Jens O. Stene was reared in Norway, where he lived with his parents and attented school. He was 18 years old when he came to the United States and the state of Wisconsin, finding work on a farm on Beloit Prairie in Rock County, Wis. There he remained five years, during a part of which time he attended English school. He then located in Eau Claire and for one winter was employed in the woods for a lumber company. His next move was to enter the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, who employed him on their farm at Wilson for four years. At the end of that time he bought 240 acres of railroad land in the town of Wilson, Dunn County, but later sold it and bought 170 acres in Section 16, town of Tainter. This was all wild land covered with brush and timber. Mr. Stene put up some buildings, including a dwelling, and barn and entered upon the task of converting his land into a farm, a task that he has since performed. For 20 winters he worked in the pine woods. He sold 70 acres of his land fronting on the lake, and now has 80 acres under the plow, the rest being in pasture. As a general farmer and dairyman he has made good progress, his cattle being grade Guernseys. Mr. Stene's recollections go back to pioneer days when Dunn County was a pretty wild tract of territory, when the red man was often to be seen, when game and fish were plentiful but the conditions of life on the early farms was very trying to all except to those who had strong constitutions. He has seen the farms and cultivated areas increase and the wilderness disappear, villages spring up, and new inventions like the tractor and automobile revolutionize the old methods of work and travel; and he himself has been a factor in the work that has effected some of these changes. In 1880 he was married at Eau Claire to Anna Aason, daughter of Iver and Anna Aason of the town of Wilson and early settlers in Dunn County, but both of whom are now deceased. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Jens O. Stene, namely, Oscar, Julias, Morris, Anton, Alfred, Thorvold, Odine, Bergil, Minnie and Palmer. Thorvold was one of the first to enlist in Dunn County for World War service, going into the army not long after war was declared on Germany, and being one of the first to leave. He served with an infantry regiment in France and after the armistice was signed he was with the army of occupation in Germany. Bergil is the wife of Carl Nelson, of Juneau, Wis., and Minnie, the wife of Ole Berg, lives in North Dakota. Mrs. Anna Stene, the mother, died in 1912, and Alfred and his wife now keep house for the father. He married Alma Erickson and they have one child. Mr. Stene and family are members of the Lutheran Church.

Simeon S. Denning, a successful farmer and prominent citizen of the town of Weston, was born at Mt. Cory, Hancock County, Ohio, Jan. 21, 1863, son of Robert and Susan (Brown) Denning. He was eight years old when brought to Dunn County by his parents and attended District School No. 4, in the town of Weston, where he acquired his education. After remaining with his parents until arriving at the age of 25 years, in 1888 he settled on 80 acres of land in Section 13, town of Weston, which his father had deeded to him. From time to time he bought additional land until today the farm contains 260 acres. Of this area he has cleared nearly 100 acres, having 84 under the plow, and has erected a complete set of good buildings. He has installed the Delco lighting system on his place and other modern conveniences. On the farm there still remain one and a half miles of split rail fence, which he himself split from oak logs many years ago. Mr. Denning served his town for many years in various public offices, being clerk ten years and treasurer two years; also serving as supervisor and chairman of the town board, thereby becoming a member of the county board. He is a stockholder in and was one of the organizers of the Downsville Cooperative Creamery Co. Fraternally he belongs to the Weston Colony of Beavers. He was married April 26, 1887, in the city of Menomonie, to Mary Ann Knopps, who was born July 2, 1868, in Germany, daughter of Frank and Theresa Knopps. Mr. and Mrs. Denning have been the parents of six children, E. Mabel, Martha E., Ella C., Edna M., Theresa M. and Charles L., whose records in brief are as follows: E. Mabel, who was born Feb. 18. 1888, is now Mrs. Edward Bates of the town of Weston, and the mother of six children, Agnes, Laverne, Clarence, Lawrence, Marie and Angeline. Martha E., born Nov. 22, 1889, died Nov. 24, 1908. Ella C., born Dec. 13, 1891, is the wife of William Schlosser of Pepin County and has seven children, Dennis, Evelyn, Wayne, Blanche, Francis, Monica and Edna. Edna M., born Sept. 22, 1898, is now Mrs. Edwin Schlough of the town of Menomonie and has two children, Eleanor and Geraldine. Theresa M., born Dec. 11, 1903, and Charles L., born April 24, 1908. are living at home with their parents. The family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Congregation in Menomonie.

Alois Wolf, an early settler of Dunn County, now living retired in the village of Eau Galle after a life of worthy endeavor, was born in Germany, May 7, 1842, and was there educated. At Meilham on the Roehr he learned the mason's trade, which he followed in some of the principal cities in his native country until 1864. In that year he came to the United States and for two years followed his trade in Chicago. It was in 1871 that he came to Dunn County and settled on 80 acres of land in Section 22, town of Eau Galle. It was a wild tract with no buildings on it but an old log house, into which he moved with his family, for he had been married in Chicago and all of his three children were already born. The improvement of his farm kept him busily occupied for a number of years and it was a work that was well performed, as in time the old log house gave place to a fine brick one and he had built large barns and all other necessary out buildings. He also bought 160 acres more land, a tract in Section 7, and carried on general farming on his 240 acres until 1914, when he gave his 80-acre farm in Section 2 to his son Peter and moved to the village of Eau Galle. Here he bought four acres and built on it a fine brick residence, in which he took up his abode. Later he sold one and a half acres of this land to his son-in-law, John Herman, which left him with two and a half acres. He has also sold his 160-acre tract in Section No. 7. Both while living on the farm and since coming to the village, Mr. Wolf has at various times worked at his trade of stone mason in Eau Galle and the vicinity, having done altogether a considerable amount of work of this kind. Mr. Wolf's marriage, to which reference has been made, took place in Chicago, on April 23, 1867, and united him with Marie Hoffacker, who was born in Germany,, and who came to America in 1866, locating in Chicago. The three children of this union are: Peter J., born Jan. 4, 1868, now living retired in Eau Galle; Joseph, born May 22, 1869, who lives in Chicago; and Mary, born Oct. 15, 1870, who is now Mrs. John Herman and lives in the town of Eau Galle. Mr. and Mrs. Wolf are members of St. Henry's Catholic Congregation of Eau Galle.

John Decker, a pioneer of the town of Eau Galle, who passed away over 30 years ago, was born in the state of Missouri, whence he came to Wisconsin about 1847, locating at Eau Galle, which was then in Chippowa County, and entering the employ of Carson & Eaton, which firm later became the Carson & Rand Lumber Co. Mr. Decker worked for them many years. In 1865, some years after his marriage, he took a homestead of about 80 acres in Section 14 of what is now the town of Weston and began the development of a farm. He and his family were among the first settlers in this territory, which was then practically a wilderness, they being obliged to follow "tote" roads to reach their land. Mr. Decker's first task was to build a log cabin, which was shingled with "shakes," and from that beginning he went on to develop a farm. For several years he continued to work for the Carson & Rand Lumber Co., and carried his supplies for home packed on his back from Eau Galle or Menomonie, his farm being about equally distant from both places. After continuing its improvement for over 30 years, he died on April 12, 1896. His wife, whose maiden name was Harriet Lemon, died in January, 1899, less than three years after. They were the parents of ten children: Belle, who married George Ballar, but is now deceased; George, of Menomonie; Anthony, of the village of Weston; Harriet, deceased, who was the wife of Ed. Dean; William, the present proprietor of the old home farm; Cyrus, of Rockford, Wash.; Clara, deceased; John, of St. Marie, Ida.; and Nicholas and Theodore of Rockford, Wash. John Decker, the father, was a man widely known through his part of the county and was well liked. Though he took no active part in public life or the affairs of local government, he was always ready to lend a helping hand to new settlers or to any sound project for the general welfare of the community.

William T. Decker, a well known farmer in the town of Weston, who owns and operates the old Decker farm in Section 14, established by his parents, was born in the town of Eau Galle, Dunn County, April 16, 1863, son of John and Harriet (Lemon) Decker. He acquired his education in the district school and has always remained on the home farm, which he took over in 1891, about five years before his father's death. Through the purchase of other land he has increased the size of the farm and at one time owned 220 acres in the town of Weston. In 1918 he gave his son Archie 80 acres in Section 15, which was the old Frank Knopse farm, he, himself, retaining the other 140 acres. In 1912 he replaced the old log buildings with much better ones of modern construction, and he has brought the farm generally into good condition. He has served several terms as a member of the school board of District No. 5, and is fraternally affiliated with the Menomonie Camp of Modern Woodman. William T. Decker was married, Dec. 15, 1888, in Menomonie, Wis., to Belle Styer, who was born May 15, 1869, in Adams County, Wis., daughter of William and Anna S. (Stacia) Styer. Mr. and Mrs. Decker are the parents of eight children, Eva, Archie, Ruth, Louise, Hazel, Earl, Veronica and Paul. Eva, born Sept. 27, 1889, is now Mrs. D. D. Johnson of Fairmont, N. D. and has three children. Theoron, Ronald and Lane; Archie, born June 26, 1891, is now of Fairmont. N. D.; Ruth, born Nov. 8, 1893, is Mrs. Herman Patraw of Rice Lake, Wis., and has been the mother of five children, William, Donald, Darrel, Elaine and James, the last mentioned being now deceased; Louise, born April 28, 1897, is the wife of Ed Ruebish of Fairmont, N. D., and the mother of two children, Gerald and Mildred; Hazel, born June 23, 1899, is Mrs. Cecil Weber of Waverly, Pierce County, and has two children, Isabelle and Jane; Earl, born May 16, 1905, married Marie Coonell and is now operating the farm of his brother Archie in the town of Weston; Veronica, born April 10, 1906, is Mrs. Robert Denning, Jr., of the town of Weston; and Paul, born June 20, 1912, is residing at home. The family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Congregation in Menomonie.

Jesse S. Jensen, engaged in general farming and dairying in the town of Weston, where he is well known and respected, was born in Valle, Denmark, son of Soren and Hansena (Jesson) Jensen. Both parents died in Denmark, which was their native land. Their children included five sons and four daughters. Of the brothers of the subject of this sketch, Fred, Louis and Hans are now living in St. Paul, Minn., while the other brother and the four sisters. Hannah, Dorothy, Carrie and Mary, still reside in Denmark. Jesse S. Jensen was reared in his native land, where he attended school. He began industrial life as a common laborer and so remained until he came to the United States, and to Dunn County, Wis., in 1894. For the next eight years he lived on the Martin Gormanson place in Weston, engaged for some time in learning the mason's trade, which he followed for 12 consecutive years, except for a period of six months, during which he served in the Spanish-American War. It was on June 18, 1898, that he enlisted in Company E, Third Wisconsin Infantry, and he was discharged Dec. 23, 1898, having taken part in the battle of Leech. In 1904 Mr. Jensen purchased 40 acres of land in Section 19, town of Weston, known as the Stewart Homestead, on which he took up his residence in the following year, and later he bought 20 acres in Section 30. He cleared 25 acres of his land and in 1918 erected a fine barn, with a ground plan of $32 \ge 56$ feet. His modern, eight-room stucco house he built in 1922. As a general farmer and dairyman he has met with success. He keeps grade Holstein cattle, with a pure bred sire, and is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Downsville Camp of Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Jensen was married May 10, 1902, in the town of Weston, to Dora Hanson, who was born in Denmark, Feb. 4, 1883, daughter of Jacomb and Christina (Burke) Jensen. Her parents are now residing in Irvington. Mr. and Mrs. Jensen have nine chil-dren, the eldest of whom, Cena, is now Mrs. Therene Ader of the town of Eau Galle. The names of the others, with their birth dates, are respectively as follows: Bonnie' July 2, 1905; Lawrence, July 14, 1907; Mary, April 13, 1909; Pearl, July 6, 1911; Ruth, June 4, 1913; Julia, Aug. 29, 1916; Hans, June 1, 1918, and Dorothy, July 11, The family are affiliated religiously with the Varney Creek Lutheran Church.

Samuel J. Thue, who is actively engaged in farming in Section 4, town of Tainter, was born on the farm which he now owns and operates, on Sept. 9, 1882, son of Elling P. and Carrie (Olman) Thue. The parents were natives of Norway who came to the United States in 1869, first settling in Madison, Wis., where the father worked for four years as a day laborer. In 1873 they came to Dunn County and home-steaded 160 acres of land in Section 4. town of Tainter, our subjects' present farm. The tract was wild, and though white settlers were few there were numerous Indians in the vicinity. The head of the family was so short of money that he had to work out at harvesting and threshing without taking time to build a house, and his wife and children, therefore made their home in the covered wagon they had brought with them until the snow began to fall. It was true pioneer life, in which there was little of comfort and much of anxiety and privation. As soon as there was no longer work for him to do on the neighboring or distant farms, Elling P. Thue put up a log house for himself and family and they took up their winter quarters in it. It remained their home until 1899, by which time Mr. Thue had made such progress that he was able to build a ten-room frame house. He had also erected a number of other buildings, the last barn he built measuring $34 \ge 72$ feet in ground plan. He also cleared 130 acres of his land and bought 145 acres more, owning at the time of his death, April 25, 1920, 305 acres. He did general farming, keeping a herd of good dairy cattle. Mr. and Mrs. Elling P. Thue were the parents of five children, three of whom are now living, namely: Peter J., of California; Lizzie, wife of Daniel Colman of St. Paul, and Samuel J., subject of this sketch. The two deceased are Bertha and Anna. The mother died May 15, 1922. Samuel J. Thue was reared on the home farm, in boyhood attending the local school and helping with the farm work more every year until he was doing a man's work on the place. The farm, containing 305 acres, coming into his possession after the death of his mother, he has continued in the business of general farming and dairying, keeping a herd of 30 to 35 head of high grade Guernsey cattle, and milking eight cows. He also raises from 50 to 60 hogs each year. He has broken more of his land and remodeled some of his buildings and his place may be classed among the good modern farms of the town. On Feb. 7, 1924, Mr. Thue was appointed patrolman of County Highway G, after having served several years as pathmaster. He was married in Kentucky, June 21, 1921, to Bertha Anderson, who had been housekeeper for his mother. She was born March 23, 1881, daughter of Christ and Susie Anderson of North Dakota. Her mother died Aug. 28, 1911, but her father is still living at Donnybrook, N. D.

Julia Jabusch, a well known and respected resident of Menomonie, now living retired, was born at Deer Park, St. Croix County, Wis., June 16, 1866, daughter of Johann August and Louisa (Liining) Jabusch. The father was born Aug. 8, 1824, at Antonien-Hof, Kreis Kocieschen, Preuszen, Germany. He grew to manhood in his native land, where in 1850 he was married to Louise Liining, who was born at Nakel, Kr. Schubin, Posen, Germany. In 1854 Mr. Jabusch brought his family to the Unites States, settling first in Milwaukee, where they remained for about four years. In 1858 they moved to Deer Park, Wis., which place was their home for many years, or until about 1888, when they came to Menomonie. Mr. Jabusch was by that time physically worn out. Through the efforts of Father Horst he had been converted and had joined the Methodist Church, the services of which he loved to attend. On March 6, 1892, while attending evening service, he was taken ill and had to be taken home. He gradually became weaker and suffered much, but was patient and willing to bear his sufferings. On the second of May that year he peacefully passed away, being survived by his wife and seven children, of whom they had had 12 in all. Mrs. Jabusch had joined the church in 1871 and continued to be a hard worker in it until the time of her own death, which occurred some 13 vears after that of her husband, or on Aug. 29, 1905. Three sons and four daughters and also 31 grandchildren were left to mourn her loss. Julia Jabusch was educated in the public schools of Deer Park and resided at home with her parents until she was 20 years of age. In 1886 she came to Dunn County, locating in Menomonie, where, soon afterwards she entered the employ of Mrs. A. W. Stout, whom she served faithfully for 27 years. For about ten years she has lived retired. The residence she occupies, a beautiful bungalow at Lake View, was built for her and furnished throughout with everything for her comfort-including a piano-by Mrs. Stout as an act of appreciation for her faithful services. Miss Jabusch is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Ingvold Mattison, proprietor of Cold Spring Farm in Section 14 of the town of Lucas, was born in Norway, Nov. 14, 1862, son of Mattius and Mathia (Jensen) Mattison. After attending school in his native land, he came in 1880 to the United States and directly to Menomonie, Wis., where he entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, in whose mills he worked subsequently for 18 years. In 1893 he began his career as a farmer in the town of Lucas, in September buying 80 acres of wild land in Section 14, to which he has since added 80 more. His original dwelling here was a small log house, but now he has a full set of good buildings, with 65 acres of his land cleared, and is successfully following general farming and dairying, keeping grade mixed cattle. He is also a stockholder in the Hudson Road Creamery. Mr. Mattison was married Aug. 28, 1885, in North Menomonie, to Anna Eliza Howe, daughter of Christ A. and Ingeborg (Ellingson) Howe. Of this marriage 13 children have been born, namely: Clara M., July 16, 1886; Edwin, April 30, 1888; Melvin, April 12, 1890; Hjlmer, May 13, 1892; Alfred, March 21, 1894; Ida, April 23, 1896; Philip, March 11, 1898; Ellen, May 18, 1901; Hilda, Oct. 30, 1902; Arnold, Nov. 12.1904; Leonard J., June 20, 1906 (died Dec. 8, 1906);

Harry L., April 18, 1908, and Clarence I., Feb. 7, 1910. Clara M. is now Mrs. Fred Brehm of the town of Lucas, and the mother of three children, Cecil, Virgil and Viola. Edwin, is living on the home farm. Melvin, who is a farmer in the town of Stanton, married Gertrude Berg and has two children, Phyllis and Kenneth. Hjlmer, married Minnie Wohl, resides in North Menomonie and has two children, Alene and Martis. Alfred married Helena Skouge and they reside in Menomonie. Ida, who is Mrs. Howard Miller, of the town of Lucas, has three children, Lloyd, Ralph and Marvin. Philip married Ragna Wohl and they reside on the Osmond Gockeram farm while he operates a cream route; they have one child, Ervin. Ellen is now Mrs. Edger Grudt of Milwaukee and has one child, Mildred I. Hilda and Arnold are in Milwaukee and Harry L. and Clarence I. at home. Mr. and Mrs. Mattison and family are affiliated with Our Saviour's Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

Peter A. Johnson, a prominent farmer and esteemed citizen of the town of Lucas. was born in Singaas, Trondhjem, Norway, Oct. 2, 1864, son of John and Guro (Olson) Aungrind. The parents were natives of the same locality and farmers by The father is now dead but the mother is still living on the old home occupation. farm. Their children were five in number, namely: Guro, who married a Mr. Flotum and is now a widow living in Norway; Carrie, who is Mrs. Andrew Singaasbeck and also lives in Norway; Peter A., subject of this sketch; and Ole (first) and Ole (second), both of whom are on the home farm in Norway. Peter A. Johnson, the only member of the family in the United States, attended school in Norway and helped his parents on the home farm until 1883, when, in search of better opportunities, he came to America. Landing at Boston, he came directly to Menomonie, Wis., where his first employment was with the C. M. & St. P. Railway as a section hand. During the following winter he worked for Knapp, Stout & Co. Company and was later with the New Richmond Lumber Co. at Clear Lake, Wis. Then he returned to the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, working in the woods in winter and on the drives in spring, while in summer and fall he worked on farms and in western harvest fields. In 1902 Mr. Johnson went to work for the Hydraulic Brick Co. of Menomonie, and was in their employ for four years; after that he did farm labor for two years. At none of these occupations, however, was there a chance for much self advancement, but in farming Mr. Johnson saw such oppor-tunity. In January, 1908, therefore, he bought the old Alex Bublitz farm of 120 acres in Section 14, town of Lucas. A very small part of it has been cleared, and a small frame house and log barns had been erected. The 16 years that have since elapsed Mr. Johnson has spent in improving the place, and has made excellent progress, having developed a fine farm. In 1914 he built a fine barn of 36 x 72 feet with 16-foot posts, and with the James barn equipment, and in 1917 he erected a substantial eight-room house, partly modern in style and equipment, and he has also put up several out-buildings. He is doing general farming and dairying, keeping mixed grade cattle, and is a stockholder in the New Hudson Road Creamery, the Lucas Cheese Factory, and the Waterman-Ehrhart Co. of Menomonie. Mr. Johnson was married Jan. 1, 1907, to Bertha Hofland, who was born in Norway Aug. 10, 1877 daughter of Andrew E. and Randi Otellie (Aamodt) Hofland. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have one child. Ruth Gladys, who was born July 19, 1908, and is now attending the Dunn County Agricultural School in Menomonie. The family are members of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

James A. Morgan, in former years well known in the towns of Tainter and Lucas as a successful farmer and worthy citizen, was born in the state of Ohio, July 18, 1854. He was educated in his native state and subsequently went to Michigan and thence to Des Moines, Iowa. He came to Dunn County in 1872, taking a homestead in the town of Tainter, which he proved up on and sold. He then took a farm in the town of Lucas, which he operated until his death, which occurred Jan. 23, 1890. Mr. Morgan was married Sept. 5, 1876, in Knapp, Wis., to Mary Grimm, who was born Nov. 18, 1861, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Kickey) Grimm, her father being a native of Germany and her mother of Ireland. Both came to this country when young, Catherine Kickey finding employment in the household of President Van Buren (president of the United States from 1837 to 1841), and it was while thus employed that she was married to Peter Grimm. They came to Wisconsin in the late 50's, settling in Waukesha County, but later they moved to Woodville in St. Croix County, and later to Dunn County, taking a farm in the town of Lucas, where Mr. Grimm died Oct. 3, 1915. His wife, who survived him, is now residing with her daughter, Mrs. Morgan. The children in the Grimm family were: Catherine, who is now Mrs. Alvin Morgan of Menomonie; Mary, the widow of James A. Morgan and Peter H., who is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. James A. Morgan were the parents of six children, as follows: Axey C., born Aug. 14, 1878, now living in Menomonie; Elizabeth M., born Oct. 9, 1880, also of Menomonie; Avery P., born Sept. 2, 1883, now residing a resident of Minot, N. D.; Flora, born Dec. 28, 1886, who married Albert Casson and is now a widow residing at Rugby, N. D.; Guy E., born Aug. 9, 1888, who married Retta Hartman, resides in the town of Lucas, and has three children, Ruby, James R. and Clifford; and Henry, born April 9, 1890, who married Verna Berthman, is now operating the home farm, and has two children, Opal and Mary H. The family attend the M. E. Church in the town of Lucas, and have a good social standing. Winand Erpenbach, of Elk Mound, where he is now living retired, after an active career of many years in different occupations, was born at Colen on the Rhine, Germany, June 16, 1850, son of Winand and Agnes (Hartman) Erpenbach. Though the parents were not born in Germany, they both died in that country. Winand, the subject of this sketch, attended school in his native land and subsequently did farm labor until he came to the United States in 1869. Landing at New York, he proceeded west to Sauk City, Wis., where he remained for two years. He then went to Michigan, where he was engaged in railroad construction work for several months, later being occupied in the same manner for a short time in Texas. He then returned north, resided for a while in Lodine and then at Sauk City, coming to Elk Mound in 1874, just half a century ago. During his first winter here he worked in an elevator operated by his uncle, John Weissenfels, and one year for Then, in 1876, having married, he rented the old Peter Wingen farm, Fred Quilling. which he operated for five years. At the end of that time he gave it up and went to work on the section, and for the next 12 years that was his occupation. In the meanwhile he and his wife had been economical and saved some money, and in 1880 they invested their capital, or some of it, in a new enterprise, building a hotel in Elk Mound, which they conducted for 27 years thereafter. At the end of that time they gave it up and moved on to a place of 20 acres which Mr. Erpenbach had purchased from his wife's parents, and on which he farmed a little until 1919, since which time he has been retired from active work. His marriage, already referred to, took place in Eau Claire, June 13, 1876, and united him with Alice Winger, who was born in Sauk City, Wis., Oct. 18, 1852, daughter of Peter and Mary A. (Knittel) Winger. Her parents, natives of Germany, came from that country to the United States when young and were married in Sauk City, Wis., where they made their home until 1859. They then moved to Eau Claire, and from the latter place came to Elk Mound in 1866, buying a piece of land here, within the village limits, from Mr. Seidenberg, and they made this place their home subsequently until their death. Mr. and Mrs. Erpenbach have been the parents of six children, namely: Mamie, born June 2, 1877, who is the wife of Merton Van Dresser of Elk Mound and had three children, Irene, Joseph and Lyle; Lulu A., born Sept. 26, 1880, who is residing with her parents; William W., born Feb. 12, 1882, who married Ida Jessie and has four children, Lloyd, Doris, Marie and Jerome, the family residing in Elk Mound; Joseph, born April 14, 1884, who died Dec. 9, 1899; Arthur, who died in infancy; and Nina, born Feb. 17, 1893, who is now Mrs. Carl Johnson of Eau Claire and has two children, Vernon and Donald. The family faith is that of the Catholic Church, and Mr. Erpenbach belongs to the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

Robert I. Winter, agent in Menomonie for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, was born in Columbus, Wis., Feb. 28, 1874, son of Joseph and Mary (Smy) Winter. The parents were natives of England, the father born in Hull and the mother in London. The former. Joseph Winter, came to the United States when 21 years of age and after landing at New York City went north to the vicinity of Lake Champlain, where for several years he was engaged in farm work. the late 60's that he came west to Columbus. Wis., where he met and married Mary It was in Smy, and in that place they made their home until 1879. Then they moved to Eau Claire, where they farmed for three years. Their next location was in Pepin County, where they spent 11 years in agricultural pursuits, remaining there until 1891. Joseph Winter then bought a farm a short distance from Eau Claire, and on this place he and his wife spent their last years, Mr. Winter dying in November, 1900, and Mrs. Winter, Sept. 14, 1917. They had eight children: Flora, now Mrs. W. H. Norrish of Rock Falls, Wis.; Edward, a farmer in Eau Claire County; Robert I., whose name begins this record; Jennie, who married Edward Jackson and is now a widow residing in Eau Claire County; Frank, who lives at Fox Lake, Dodge County; William and Lloyd of Eau Claire County, where the former is operating a farm; and Ruth, now Mrs. William Benjamin of Webb, Saskatchewan, Canada. Robert I. Winter as a boy attended district school in Pepin County. For a number of years he remained at home with his parents, helping on the home farm in the spring, summer and early fall and working in the woods in winter as a part of that vast army engaged in felling the forests and clearing the way for other farmers. In February, 1901, he entered the employ of the C. M. & St. P. Railway as operator and warehouse man in Menomonie and as such remained until the spring of 1906, when he went to Eau Claire as cashier in the employ of the same company. After being there for 15 months in that capacity, he was transferred back to Menomonie, where he has since been the company's agent. He is fraternally affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias. Robert I. Winter was married Jan. 15, 1898, in Eau Claire, Wis., to Lottie Norrish, daughter of John and Anna (Powell) Norrish and he and his wife are the parents of three children, Portus, Ethel and Margaret, the latter two of whom are residing with their parents. Portus, is now residing in Missoula, Montana. He married Bernice Rudie and they have two children, Robert R. and Vivian M. The family are members of the Congregational Church.

Lewie O. Solie, who owns and operates Apple Blossom Farm in Section 22, town of Dunn, was born in the city of Eau Claire, Wis., Feb. 10, 1887, son of Martin O. and Anna (Myhren) Solie. The father was born in Grasvik, Frederickstad, Norway, May 31, 1855, and the mother in Modem, Norway, July 6, 1854. They came to this country when young people and were married in Eau Claire in 1883, and there Martin O. Solie worked for several years in the lumber mills. In 1890 he came to Dunn County and bought 80 acres of wild land, without buildings, in Section 32, town of Dunn, and, having made a clearing, built a small frame house. During the two following summers he worked in Eau Claire, but after that he gave his whole attention to developing his farm. In the course of time he put up a good set of buildings, and enlarged the dwelling, converting it into a nine-room house, well arranged and with good fittings, and there he resided until his death on April 10, 1919. He had been for some years a widower, his wife having passed away on Feb. 11, 1913. Their children were five in number: Oscar Harry, born Feb. 5, 1885, who died May 19, 1894; Lewie O., the present owner of the home farm; Mary Hedwig, born Feb. 22, 1890, who is unmarried and resides in Minneapolis; Lydia B., born June 18, 1892, who has always remained at home and acts as housekeeper; and Olga H., born Aug. 29, 1895, who resides in Minneapolis. None of the children have ever married. Lewie O. Solie as a boy attended the district school and grew to manhood on the parental farm, which he helped to develop, in early years clearing, grubbing, and doing other pioneer work. On his father's death he purchased the interests of the other heirs to the estate, becoming sole owner, and he has since improved it considerably. Among his improvements are a 137-foot well, with a windmill attached for pumping water for house and barn, and a basement barn, built in 1923, which has a ground plan of 34 x 54 feet and is equipped with patent stanchions. He has also set out a fine apple orchard of about 70 trees, from which the name of the farm is derived. The situation is good, it being in what is called the Finstad Valley, and the buildings and orchard are protected from high winds by a bluff. Mr. Solie has a herd of grade Guernsey cattle, with a pure bred sire, and also raises Duroc-Jersey swine. He is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery. He and his sister are active members of the Elk Creek Lutheran Church, and he has membership also in the Beavers' Reserve Fund.

Louis Styer, a pioneer of Dunn County now deceased, was in his latter years one of the oldest living residents of the County. He was born in Germany, Jan. 6, 1834, and was therefore in his ninety-first year, at the time of his death April 12, 1924. His early education was acquired in Catholic schools in Germany, and he later attended similar schools in France, to which country he went at the age of 15 years, . on the death of his mother. After he had been there three and a half years, his father, Peter Styer, sent for him to come home as lots were about to be drawn for So he returned and subsequently served four months in the standing army of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg. Then he again returned to France and soldiers. spent another year there. At the end of that time his father sent a neighbor to bring him back as he was going to America; so he .eturned, and the father sold out and crossed the ocean to cast his lot under the stars and stripes. Peter Styer had four sons by his first marriage, and after the death of his first wife in 1849, he married again and of the second marriage seven children were reared. It was in 1854 that they all came to America together and both Louis and his father took out their first citizenship papers so that in 1855, when Louis became of age, he was able to vote. On their arrival in the United States the family came west to Milwaukee, the father and four of the sons finding employment with a man who was operating a stone quarry and lime kiln. They remained thus occupied for three years, during which time Peter, the father, sent Louis to Adams County to buy land. Accordingly he bought two 80-acre tracts there, one of which was for himself. The father and other members of the family at once went to Adams County and established themselves on the other "80" but Louis remained for another year at the quarries. He then went to Adams County and broke 20 acres of his land. On Feb. 2, 1861, being then 27 years old, he was united in marriage with Ellen Gahen, who was born in Canada, March 10, 1839. They farmed the 80 acres but never lived on it. In 1863 they came to Dunn County, and bought 40 acres of timber land in the town of Weston. He worked two years in Downsville, then for three years ran lumber on the Mississippi River. In 1864 he returned to Adams County to get his family, consisting then of his wife and one child, and they drove thence to Dunn County with a pair of four year old steers, taking up their residence on the 40-acre farm in the town of Weston. Then the pioneer task of developing the farm began. The timber had to be cut, the stumps removed, and the land broken. A house and out-buildings were put up and from time to time Mr. Styer enlarged the area of his farm by the purchase of more land until he owned in all 480 acres. He built up a good farm and with the help of his family followed agriculture there until 1897. In that year he rented the farm to his sons and moved to the city of Menomonie, where he built a brick residence of nine rooms at 2001 Broadway. Here he spent the last 26 years of his life, passing away April 12, 1924, in his ninetyfirst year. His wife, Ellen, who had been his faithful companion and helpmate for 63 years, though now 85 years old, enjoys good health and remarkable vigor and occupies a high place in the regard and esteem of her neighbors. During his active period Mr. Styer, in addition to successfully operating his farm, performed some useful public service both as clerk and treasurer of his school district and also for several terms as a member of the town board. He and his wife have been blessed with nine children, namely: W. L., James R., John, Arthur, Sylvester, Louis A., Gertrude, Anna and Mary, the last mentioned of whom died at the age of 10 years. The record of the others is briefly as follows: W. L., who married Mary Ader, is now deceased. He left four children, Benjamin, Edward, Louisa and Lawrence. James R. until 1922 was a farmer in the town of Weston, but then rented out his farm and moved to Menomonie. He first married Caroline Bolle, by whom he had five children, Elmer, Charles, Martha, Florence and Clarence. The mother of these children having died in April. 1906, he married secondly Mrs. Anna Rasler, nee Anna Poehnelt, of which union five children have been born, of whom four are Ruth is the one deceased, the survivors being Robert, Leo, Lawrence and living. John, the third child, a farmer in the town of Menomonie, married Annabelle. Rachel Brehm and has three children. Leonard, Jane and John. Arthur, a farmer in the same town, Menomonie, married Rosa Knopps and has three children, Joseph, Esther and George. Sylvester now deceased, married Emma Lehman by whom he had six children, the survivors of whom are Leona, Grace, Lloyd, Emily and Grant, the other having died in infancy. Louis A., now living in Montana, married Caroline Sherburne. Gertrude is now Mrs. John Doyle of Mankato, Minn., and has four children, Louis, Leo, Desmond and James. Anna is the wife of Thomas Bird of Richland Center, Wis., and has two children, Mary Ellen and William. The record of the family is one; creditable to every member, and typical of the solid and estimable manhood and womanhood that has made the Northwest such a grand and important section of this country.

Albert G. Giese, one of the pioneer lumbermen and farmers of Dunn County, now living retired in the city of Menomonie, was born in Germany, Sept. 29, 1848. He was educated in his native land, where he learned the blacksmith's trade, and and was about 16 years old, or in his 16th year, when he came to the United States in 1864, while the Civil War was still in progress. As he had no immediate interest in that struggle, he at once came west to Wisconsin, locating in Watertown, where he found work at his trade, following it there until 1875. He then came to Dunn County, entering the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co., with whom he remained for eight years. Then buying 120 acres of wild brush land, he began farming. Eighty acres of this land was in the town of Tainter and 40 acres across the line in the town of Red Cedar. He first put up a small frame house and a log barn, then began clearing and breaking the land, going through the usual routine of pioneer development work. His farm assumed a more cultivated appearance every year and in time he built a large barn of 34×74 feet and remodeled the house into a good modern residence, the buildings being electrically lighted. There he followed general farm-ing, making specialties of dairying and hog raising. In 1906, after an agricultural career of 23 years, during which he continually advanced in prosperity, Mr. Giese retired, the farm being taken over by his son Edward, and, moving to Menomonie, he built a fine modern residence at No. 520 Twelfth Street, corner of Sixth Avenue. In 1914 he sold the farm to his son. Mr. Giese helped to organize the Rusk Creamery Company, in which he is now a stockholder. In 1877 he was married in the town of Tainter, Dunn County, to Matilda Albright, who died Dec. 11, 1922, leaving the son Edward above mentioned, who was the only child of the union, and whose biographical record is given under his own name. As much of Mr. Giese's success in life was due to the faithful cooperation and effective work of his wife, a brief review of her personal history and antecedents is a necessary addition to this article. Matilda Albright was born in Germany, Jan. 14, 1853, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Albright, with whom she came to America in 1856 as a young child, scarce out of babyhood. The family resided for a number of years in Watertown, Wis., where she attended school. In 1875 they came to Dunn County, Mr. Albright buying a tract of wild land in the town of Tainter, where in time he cleared and developed a farm of 280 acres. There his wife died in 1880. As he grew older Mr. Albright's eyesight began to fail and for several years previous to his death he was totally blind. He passed away on July 28, 1898, at the age of 85 years. For many years after he had lost his eyesight the farm was conducted by his son Harry; but the latter having died in North Menomonie in 1914, it is now operated by Harry's son Fred, who is a representative of the third generation to reside on it. Matilda Albright remained at home with her parents until her marriage to Albert G. Giese, Oct. 5, 1877. She proved an ideal wife and mother, a type of the noble pioneer women of whom we hear too little today, but whose self-sacrificing devotion, courage, and industry, played perhaps as large a part in the development and civilization of this region as the more conspicuous work of the men. Without desire for self-advertisement, they bravely took up the task nearest at hand and as bravely and efficiently accomplished it, helping their husbands even in the roughest work of pioneer home building, in the care and training of their children, and the extending of help and hospitality to their neighbors, satisfied to earn as their reward the love of those who called them wife or mother, and to leave to them when they laid down the burden of life the rich heritage of a good name; and a place in the memories of their loved ones. Such a woman was Mrs. Matilda Giese. For years during the early period of her married life she might have been seen in the woods or fields with her husband, taking part in the hardest labor and rendering him material assistance, and whatever trials befell them she neverfaltered or grew weary of well doing. To her both husband and son owe a debt of gratitude which in this brief memorial they are glad to pay.

Edward Giese, proprietor of a good farm lying partly in the town of Tainter and partly in that of Red Cedar, which was his boyhood home and the pioneer home of his parents, was born in the city of Menomonie, of which he is now a resident, on Oct. 13, 1878, son of Albert G. and Matilda (Albright) Giese. He acquired hi elementary education in the rural schools, subsequently taking a course in St. Paul College at St. Paul, Minn., atter which he returned home and from that time until 1906 he was associated with his father in the development of the home farm, helping him to break over 40 acres of land. His parents retiring in the year last mentioned, he took over the management of the farm, which he purchased in 1914. After living there until the fall of 1923, during that time operating the place successfully, he took up his residence in Menomonie, and now employs a man to stay on the farm and look after things generally, he himself driving back and forth between it and the city and giving the needed directions. Aside from his agricultural activities, he took an active interest in public affairs and for many years has been an influential man in his community. For two years he was a justice of the peace and for six years a member of the school board. He also took an active part in the organization and establishment of the Rusk Mercantile Co., at Rush in the town of Red Cedar, and served on its first board of directors. He was one of the first men in the community to own an automobile, in 1912 buying a Maxwell, which he drove for eight years. For many years he has been a faithful and supporting member of the Evangelical Church in the town of Tainter, was formerly a member of its board of trustees and served three years as secretary of its Sunday school. Mr. Giese was married April 10, 1907, to Martha Lausted, who was born in the town of Tainter, Dunn County, Wis., Jan. 31, 1881. Of this union there is one child, Marcella Johanna, who was born July 25, 1909, and is now attending the Menomonie High School.

Fred J. Schlottman, who developed a farm in the town of Sherman, which he operated for many years, was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, on July 5, 1852. In his native land he acquired a common school education and came with his parents to the United States in 1869, the family settling in Rochester, N.Y. There he was married on April 13, 1875, to Minnie Tesch, also a native of Mecklenburg, Germany, born Feb. 27, 1850, who had come with her parents to Rochester in 1870. In 1883 Mr. and Mrs. Schlottman came to Dunn County, Wis., settling in Menomonie, where they remained for a year, Mr. Schlottman being employed in the shingle mill of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. At the end of that time he bought 160 acres of land on Section 18, town of Sherman, and in 1884 he and his family moved on to the place. As purchased, it was a wild tract without buildings, and he began improvements by erecting a small frame house and a log barn. In course of time he cleared and developed a considerable portion of this tract, bought another of 40 acres, and erected a complete set of buildings. He won the reputation of an honest, industrious citizen who was an asset to the community and both he and his wife were highly esteemed. The latter died on the home farm on April 22, 1917, and Mr. Schlottman, who survived her nearly four years, passed away March 11, 1921, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Walter Schutts of the town of Sherman. Mr. and Mrs. Schlottman reared a family of four children: Frank D., now proprietor of the old home farm; John, residing in the town of Sherman; William, also of this town; and Emma, wife of Walter Schutts of the town of Sherman. HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY child, Henry, died young. After Mr. Schlottman's death the son, Frank D. was made administrator and in closing up the estate Frank D. and his brother-in-law, Walter Schutts, bought the home farm.

Frank D. Schlottman, a substantial farmer in the town of Stanton, was born in Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 24, 1876, son of Fred J. and Minnie (Tesch) Schlottman. He was seven years old when he accompanied his parents to Dunn County and to Menomonie, Wis., and in the following year, 1884, he moved with them onto their farm in the town of Sherman, a farm that he subsequently helped his father to develop. He was married to Anna K. Smith of the town of Stanton, who was born on a farm in this town on Dec. 25, 1879, daughter of Charles and Anna (Orth) Smith. Her father was born in Kingston, N. Y., in March, 1842, and her mother in Germany, on May 11, 1852. They were married in Eau Claire, Wis., and settled in Dunn County in 1873. Charles Smith died in June, 1908, but his wife Anna is still living and resides on the home farm in Section 1, town of Stanton. They were the parents of 11 children, namely, Henry, Harmon, Joe, Anna, Clara, Mary, Loretta, Rubert, William, Edward and Louis, of whom Clara is now deceased. Mr. Schlottman and wife began home making on their present farm, which was then a tract of wild land containing 80 acres and without buildings, in Section 13, town of Stanton. After conducting it for three or four years he became the owner of it by purchase and by an additional purchase has since increased the area to 120 Of this he now has 90 acres under cultivation, the balance being in timber The first dwelling was a small frame house, which he has since reand pasture. placed by a good two-story ten room house, and he has also erected good barns and other necessary farm buildings, including a good stave silo. The farm is well fenced, the soil good, and the equipment of tools and machinery adequate, and Mr. Schlottman is successfully carrying on general farming and dairying. The location is five miles south of Boyceville and 11 miles northwest of Menomonie. Mr. Schlottman has served 12 years as treasurer of school district No. 2, and politically is a Republican. He and his wife have been the parents of eight children: Estella M., born Jan. 8, 1899, now the wife of Alfred Stephen, a farmer of the town of Sherman, and who has two children, Eleanor and Calvin; Walter R., born Jan. 28, 1900, a farmer in the town of Sherman, who married Mary Dickman and has two children, Lucille and Mildred; Bernard M., born Jan. 16, 1901, associated with his father on the home farm; Harry R., born Nov. 8, 1902, connected with the telephone company at Stevens Point; Chester M., born April 18, 1905, on the home farm; Herbert R., born Jan. 20, 1906, and Norman F., born July 4, 1911, both at home, and Lucille, born Oct. 8, 1909, who died in infancy. The family are members of the Sherman congregation of the German Evangelical Church.

William Westphal, a pioneer farmer in the town of Red Cedar but now retired, was born in Germany, April 12, 1844, son of John and Sophia (Fig) Westphal. The parents also were natives of Germany and came to the United States in 1869, locating at once in Menomonie, Wis., where they remained for a year after their arrival, John Westphal working for Knapp, Stout & Co. He then engaged in farming in the town of Red Cedar, which occupation he followed in that town for the rest of his life, becoming a well known and popular citizen. He died Oct. 6, 1890, and his wife on Feb. 8, 1882. Their children were William, Minnie and Louis. Minnie, who became the wife of William Lemke, died Oct. 30, 1923, leaving five children, Paul, Julius, William, Arnold and Minnie. Louis, now a retired farmer living in Menomonie, married Louise Haase, and their children are Minnie, Anna, Martha, William, Lena and August. William Westphal was in his twenty-sixth year when he accompanied his parents to this country in the fall of 1869. Like his father, he worked a while for Knapp, Stout & Co. and then began farming for himself, buying 80 acres of wild land in the town of Red Cedar. The first building he put up was a granary and he then began to clear and break the land. Barns and other out-buildings were put up later as he needed them. He also increased the area of his farm, buying five acres of timber land, then 20 acres of meadow and later 20 acres more meadow, and after that another 80-acre tract, of which, however, he sold 40, so that his farm finally contained 165 acres. The pioneer work was not accomplished without Mr. Westphal and his wife passing through some hard times, for there was no luxury in the life of the pioneer farmer and often but little of comfort; but the unavoidable hardships were endured with patience and conditions gradually improved until a reasonable measure of comfort was attained. Mr. Westphal served two years as town assessor and also served for some time on the school board of his district. He remained on the farm until October, 1901, at which time he rented it to his son-in-law, John Gallman, who later purchased it. Mr. and Mrs. Westphal taking up their residence at 1018 Eighth Street, in a fine house which he had bought in 1900, and where they are now enjoying a period of well earned leasure and comfort. They were married Nov. 14, 1875, Mrs. Westphal's maiden name being Augusta Louise Windler. She was born in Germany, March 10, 1854, daughter of Ludwig and Dorothy (Teyler) Windler, and came to the United States and Wisconsin in the spring of 1869, the family locating in the town of Red Cedar, Dunn County. There they bought a tract of 80 acres of land which had some slight improvements on it including a log cabin and seven acres of cleared land which had also been broken. The rest was wild. Mr. Windler proceeded to clear more and also bought 40 acres of meadow which he sold to Mr. Westphal. He then bought another tract of 80 acres, whereby his farm now consisted of 160 acres, which place he conducted until 1890. It was then transferred to his son, Louis. Mr. Swindler died Nov. 8, 1891, and was survived by his wife, who passed away many years later, on Dec. 12, 1915. They were the parents of six children: Minnie, of Eau Claire; C roline, deceased; Augusta Louise, now Mrs. William Westphal; Charlotte and Fredericka, deceased; and Louis, who is on the farm. Mr. and Mrs. Westphal have three adopted children, Caroline, Alvina and Erda. Caroline, who is the wife of John Gallman and lives on the old farm formerly belonging to her parents, has ten children, Waldemar, Reinholdt, John, Walter, Rudolph, Edward, Irene, Gerhard, Charlotte and William, of whom William died in October, 1924. Alvina married Charles Harnisch, a farmer in the town of Spring Brook, and her children are Edna, Louis, Loraine and Florence. Erda is the wife of Henry Bergrud, a plumber of Eau Claire and has one child, Marion Augusta. The religious affiliations of the Westphal family are with the German Lutheran Church.

August F. Wagner, a well known and respected citizen of Downing, was born in Germany, Nov. 30, 1866, son of Carl and Augusta (Ritz) Wagner. It was in 1869 that the family came to the United States from Germany, locating in Menomonie, Wis., where Carl Wagner found employment with Knapp, Stout & Co., in whose lumber yards he worked until 1875. He then took a homestead in the town of Hay River, three miles northeast of Boyceville, and set to work to develop a farm. The land being wild, and covered with timber and brush, he had a hard task before him, but accomplished it in time, and he and his wife resided on that place for 35 years, or until 1910, when they sold it and took up their residence in Boyceville in a house that he built here. Here they lived for about seven years, both passing away in the year 1917, Mrs. Augusta Wagner in March and Mr. Wagner in November. Thev were the parents of eight children, all now living, except one, namely: August F., who is section foreman for the "Soo" road at Downing; Charles, occupying a similar position at Boyceville; William, of St. Paul; Bertha, now Mrs. Charles Appleby of Boyceville; Matilda, of Chippewa Falls, wife of George Whetstone, a railroad engineer; Frank H., who for many years was a conductor on the "Soo" line, residing at Chippewa Falls, and was accidently killed Jan. 25, 1925; Otto, of St. Paul, and Mary, now Mrs. Ingwald Saeger of New Richmond. August F. Wagner attended public school in Menomonie and also a district school in the town of Hay River, as well as a German school in Menomonie, which he attended in the winter. He remained on the home farm until he was 16 years old and for three years was connected with the lumber industry, working in the sawmills and in the woods. In 1887 he began his career as a railroad man, as section hand at Boyceville for the Wisconsin Central, now the "Soo" road. In 1891 he was transferred to Somerset and made section foreman, and in the following year the company transferred him to Downing, in the same capacity, and he remained here until 1915. He then went to Superior, Wis., and became yard foreman for the Great Northern, with which road he continued for five years, during one of which he was road master. In 1920 he returned to Downing and again became foreman of the section here, which position he still holds, having always proved himself capable. Aside from his occupation, he takes an active interest in the welfare of the community in which he lives, and for eight years served as treasurer of the Downing schools. He is a member of the Railway Protective Association, also of the Modern Woodmen Camp in Downing, and the Masonic lodge at Glenwood City. Mr. Wagner was married May 5, 1889, to Minnie C. Krug, then of Boyceville, who was born in Germany, May 8, 1865, and who after an exemplary life of 33 years as wife and mother, died in Downing on Nov. 28, 1922. She left six children, as follows: Emma, born Jan. 29, 1890; Ella, Aug. 15, 1891; Amelia, Dec. 18, 1892; Frances, March 29, 1899; Edward C., June 9, 1897, and Arthur, March 19, 1908. Emma is now the wife of Herman Goetkin, of Osceola, conducting a cream station, and has two children, Harold and Dolores. Ella is the wife of Carl Dickinson, a dentist of Boyd, Chippewa County, and has one child, "Jack;" Amelia, residing in Minneapolis, is the wife of Ray McReavy, who is connected with the meat business; Frances is the wife of Edward Ellison, manager of a creamery in Superior, and has two children, Donald and Douglass; Edward C., who married Ilah Williams, is cashier of the Bank of Downing; Arthur, residing at home with his father, is a pupil in the Downing High School. In 1894 Mr. Wagner purchased his present home property in Downing, which he has since improved, practically rebuilding the house. He is an earnest member of the German Lutheran Church.

William A. Whinnery, for many years one of the most active farmers of Dunn County, and who was also among the most successful, was born at Fort Madison, Iowa, Oct. 8, 1854, son of George and Mary (Pratt) Whinnery. The parents were early settlers in Dunn County, to which they came in 1857, though they subsequently returned to Iowa, and it was after their return that their son William was born. Later they again came to Dunn County and for a while were residents of Menomonie, but subsequently settled on a farm at Downsville, where Mrs. Mary Whinnery died in April, 1872. William A. acquired his education in the common school. He was 17 years old when he lost his mother. For some time after that bereavement he continued to reside in the family home at Downsville, where for one summer he worked in the mill, spending the following winter in the woods. At the age of 21 he began his career as a farmer, buying 40 acres of land in the town It was wild with no improvements, and instead of starting at once to of Dunn. put in the latter, he rented the Thomas Massee farm, which he conducted for several He then built on his 40 acres and cleared and broke a part of the land, after vears. which he bought 40 acres more of Henry George, and still later added another 40 to his property, the last purchase joining all three forties together and making a farm There he carried on general farming making rapid progress in prosof 120 acres. perity, so that in time he still further increased his holdings by the purchase of 160 acres north of the road, which gave him a farm of 280 acres, which he worked effectively and with good financial results. He then bought the Dell Sherburne farm on Rusk Prairie, consisting of 160 acres in the town of Red Cedar and south of the village of Rusk. This he rented out for six years, he and his family continuing to reside for five years longer on the farm in the town of Dunn. At the end of that time he sold that farm to Frank Baker and bought from Jacobson a 160-acre farm in the town of Red Cedar, the latter place being the family home until Mr. and Mrs. Whinnery sold it to their son-in-law, Albert Peterson, moving on to the Dell Sherburne farm sough of Rusk, which they had bought six years before. On this latter farm they lived for ten years, at the end of which time they rented it and moved to the city of Menomonie and in 1911 retired, purchasing a fine residence at 1417 Main Street. In this house Mr. Whinnery spent the last 11 years of his life, which came to a close July 7, 1922. He had made a good record, not only as a farmer but also as a useful and public spirited citizen, having served efficiently at various times as a member of his town board, as member of the school board and as town assessor. Mr. Whinnery was married March 15, 1876, to Matilda Smith, who was born in Cameron County, Pennsylvania, April 22, 1857, daughter of Jacob D. and Harriet (Stuttler) Smith. Her parents were settlers in Dunn County for more than half a century ago, coming here from Pennsylvania, their native state, in the spring of 1868, when their daughter Matilda was ten years old, and locating on 160 acres of land in the town of Dunn which Mr. Smith had bought in 1861. There he made a clearing, built a dwelling and out-buildings, and subsequently added to his holdings until he owned 780 acres, all in the town of Dunn. He was one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens in this county. He and his wife have both passed away. Mr. and Mrs. William A. Whinnery were the parents of six children, namely, Charles A., Jennie E., Clarence, Alice, John and Mabel, of whom only the first two are living, the others all having died in infancy. Charles A., born Aug. 9, 1879, is unmarried and is residing with his mother in Menomonie. Jennie E., born June 2, 1881, is now Mrs. Albert Peterson and lives on a farm in St. Croix County. She has three children, Jesse, Lois and Edna.

Charles E. Wolfe, who is engaged in the transfer and dray business in the village of Knapp, and who is also president of the village board, was born in the town of Muskego, Wauke ha County, Wis., Jan. 13, 1880, son of Fred and Sarah J. (Miller) Wolfe. The father was a native of Germany who came to America with his parents when five years old, the family settling in the town of New Berlin, Waukesha County, Wis. His wife Sarah, whom he married in that county, was born there near Prospect Hill. After their marriage they conducted a farm in Waukesha County until 1885. They then moved to Elk Horn, buying a farm near the Lauderdale Lakes, which Fred Wolfe is still operating, in addition to which he has a large ice house and cuts ice from the lake which he sells in summer to tourists and campers. His wife died Dec. 22, 1922. They had five children: Charles E., now of Knapp; David E., who resides with his parents; Florence E., now Mrs. James E. Trippe of Minneapolis; William C., deceased; and Roy F., who is conducting a grocery store in Knapp. Charles E. Wolfe acquired his education in district schools and in the high school at Elkhorn. After remaining at home until the age of 19, he worked one summer at a resort on Lauderdale Lakes, and in 1899 he bought the Highland Grove resort there, which he subsequently conducted for five years, selling out in Then coming to Knapp, he rented a farm one mile west of the village, which 1903. he operated for two years, subsequently renting another farm two miles west of the village. In the fall of 1906 he purchased the James Colburn farm, of which he took possession March 30, 1907, and he was engaged in operating it until the fall of 1918, after which he rented it out for a year and then sold it. It was in the fall of 1918, on giving up his farm, that he moved to the village of Knapp, where for a year he conducted an agricultural implement business, at the end of that time selling out to the Knapp Equity Exchange, whose manager he was for the next two In March, 1922, he purchased the transfer and dray business of John Scott years. which he has since conducted. Such in outline has been his business career, but he has also been more or less active in public affairs. He served several years as director and treasurer of the school board of Joint District No. 4 in the town of Stanton, and for two years was road superintendent. In the spring of 1919 he was appointed to fill a vacancy on the village board and at the spring election the same year was elected president of the village, in which office he is still serving. He is also a town supervisor and represents the village on the county board. In all these positions of trust he has shown good capacity and public spirit and has won the confidence of his fellow citizens. He has taken the initiative in one or two important movements for the improvements of the village, including the installation of the electric lighting system in 1919, and the laying out of several new streets, besides improvement of the old ones. He belongs to the local Masonic lodge, also to the M. W. of A. Mr. Wolfe was married at Lauderdale Lakes, Wis., May 4, 1898, to Ella A. Ketchpaw, who was born in Elkhorn, Walworth County, Wis., Dec. 15, 1876, daughter of Grove and Martha J. (Comstock) Ketchpaw. Her father was a native of Wisconsin and her mother of New York State, the latter coming to Wisconsin when 18 years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Ketchpaw were married in Elk Horn, Wis., and later lived in Racine and Chicago, he being a harness maker • .

by trade; but later he became a wagon salesman for the Staver & Abbott Wagon Co. Their last years were spent in Knapp, to which place they came in 1905, and here Mrs. Ketchpaw died on Nov. 13, 1913, and Mr. Ketchpaw over nine years later, on May 28, 1923. They were the parents of three children: . Leven G., now residing in Knapp; Augusta, wife of H. B. McCurdy of Chicago, and Ella M., now Mrs. Charles E. Wolfe. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe have one child, Florence E., who was born Feb. 22, 1910. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mrs. Wolfe being also a member of its Ladies' Society and of the Rebekah lodge, I. O. O. F.

Christ Uggen, manager of the Colfax Produce Co., and who was for 34 years an active and prominent farmer in the town of Colfax, was born in Norway, March 29, 1857, son of Eran and Marie Uggen. Both the parents died in Norway, their native land. Christ Uggen, after attending common school, where he acquired the elements of knowledge, became clerk in a general store, in which he was employed for five years. During the next four years and a half he attended the army officers' training school in Christiania, Norway, receiving his discharge in 1882. He then worked two years for the Grovebergert estate, and in the spring of 1884 came to the United States, landing at New York. From that city he came direct to Elk Mound, Dunn County, Wis., where during that summer he was engaged in farm It was in the spring of 1885 that he began his independent career as a farmer, labor. buying 80 acres of wild land in section 35, town of Colfax, on which he built a shack and began operations. From that modest beginning he advanced steadily, from time to time buying more land, clearing and cultivating it and erecting buildings, until he had a large and fine farm. There he lived and worked until 1918, in which year he rented the place and took up his residence in Colfax village. Here also he has proved himself a forceful man of affairs. While on the farm he was a large potato raiser, growing the tubers in such quantities and so successfully that he was called the "Potato King." He also served as pathmaster and for one year was chairman of the town board of Colfax, and therefore a member of the county board. In 1910 Mr. Uggen organized the Colfax Produce Co., a concern of which he has been the manager since he came to the village, the store of the company being started in 1918. He is also a stockholder in the Peoples Bank and in the Colfax Cooperative Creamery. A good business man and reliable and useful citizen, he stands high in regard of his fellow citizens.

Christopher M. Whistler, who spent nearly 40 years of his life in the development of a farm in the town of New Haven, was born in the state of Indiana, Dec. 3, 1854, son of Andrew and Delilah (Creveston) Whistler. In 1863, when in his ninth year, he was brought to Dunn County by his parents, who took land in the town of New Haven, subsequently becoming prosperous and representative farmers there. Both father and mother have passed away. Christopher M. attended the rural school and grew to manhood on his parents' farm, where he remained until 1881. He then began an independent career, buying 80 acres of wild land in Section Making a small clearing, he built a log house and barns and began his agricul-16. tural career in primitive fashion. Step by step he advanced from a condition of poverty and hardship to one of financial independence and comfort, though the way was long and at first progress was slow. Mr. Whistler, however, knew the value of persistent application and in time gained his reward in an excellent and highly cultivated farm, on which he had a fine frame residence, a large basement barn, and other substantial buildings. Until 1920 he continued his operations, and then, selling the place, moved to the village of Connersville, where he bought a small, nine-acre farm. But his life was drawing near to its close and he died on Jan. 28, 1922, leaving behind him the record of a man who had well performed his part in life and earned the respect of his neighbors and acquaintances and the love of his family. Mr. Whistler was married in November, 1872, to Mrs. Mary Etta Whistler, the widow of his brother James, and who was born in Adams County, Wisconsin, Dec. 9, 1855, daughter of George and Electa (Hutchinson) Green. Her father, who had enlisted in the Federal army for Civil War service, died while in the army from being kicked by a mule, and her mother subsequently marrying John Sly, came with him in 1868 to a farm near Boyceville, Dunn County, where they spent the rest of their lives as farmers, both being now deceased. The daughter, Mary Etta, by her first husband, James Whistler, who died in March, 1876, had three children: Sidney, Alan and Lorenzo. Sidney, born June 5, 1874, and now of Boyceville, married Dora Johnson and has three children, Marion, Ardys and Berye. Alana, born May 17, 1876, who is the wife of Henry Gallati of Stanton, St. Croix County, Wis., has eight children, Gladys, May, Lilah, Hazel, Irene, Vivian, James and Loren. Lorenzo died at the age of four years. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher M. Whistler were Laura and Mabel. Laura, born July 28, 1883, is now the wife of Elwin Benner of Boyceville, and the mother of five children, Lowina, Marvel, Valorine, Clebourn and Loraine. Mabel, born Jan. 14, 1892, married Arthur L. Hedlund, whom she survives. She has two children, Joyselle and Dalton. (See biography of Mr. Hedlund).

Arthur L. Hedlund, whose untimely death at Boyceville on March 15, 1923, caused deep grief throughout the community, was born in Minneapolis, Minn., May 18, 1888. He moved to Dunn County with his parents when he was four years old and resided for years subsequently in the vincinity. For ten years before his death he was identified with the contracting business and was one of the most successful builders in this section of the county. In the spring of 1921 he moved to Where he built a beautiful home and was just in the midst of happiness the city. and success when death called him. His death was unexpected and came as a great shock to all who knew him. He had had an attack of influenza and was apparently recovering except for trouble with his ear. Going to Menomonie, he called on Dr. Grannis, a specialist—this being on March 15— and had just entered the Doctors' office when he was taken seriously ill. He was removed to the Elwyn Benner home in Menomonie, where he soon became unconscious, the death following the next day at 10:30 a.m. Infection from the ear had affected his brain and the best medical aid was unable to save him. His career of success and happiness had ended in his thirty-fifth year. Mr. Hedlund was married June 28, 1913, to Mabel May Whistler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher M. Whistler of Boyceville. She was born in the town of New Haven, Dunn County, Jan. 14, 1892, and acquired her education in the common and high schools, also taking a course to fit her for the profession of a teacher, though she never followed that profession. To Mr. and Mrs. Hedlund two children were born: Joyselle, on Dec. 11, 1914, and Dalton Lavone, on Oct. 12, The family life was an ideal one, Mr. Hedlund being devoted to his family 1921. and his affection being fully reciprocated. Mrs. Hedlund still resides in the fine bungalow of kellystone, which he built in 1921. She is a member of Trinity Lutheran Church and of its Ladies' Aid Society, being an active worker in both, and she also belongs to the local lodge of Rebeccas, the camp of Royal Neighbors and to the Woman's Club. Her friends are many throughout this part of the county.

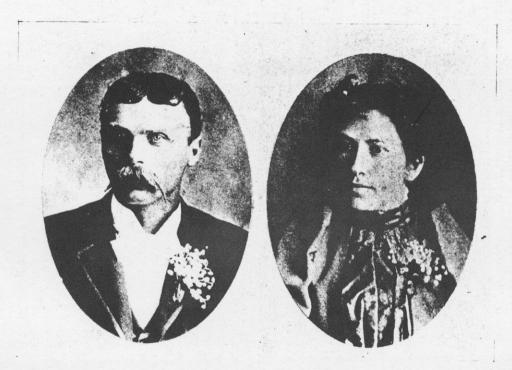

Ole Walseth, who has been engaged in agricultural pursuits in the town of Menomonie for the last 36 years and has made a good record in his chosen occupation, was born in Norway, July 29, 1860, son of Andrew and Mary (Ijstad) Walseth. His parents, natives of Norway, died in their native land. It was there that Ole was educated and afterwards was employed on a railroad and also did farm labor. In April, 1882, while still under 17 years of age, he embarked on a steamer for Quebec, Canada, whence he came direct to Menomonie, Wis. During his first two summers in Dunn County he worked on the Ligga Wilson farm in the town of Spring Brook, finding employment in the woods during the winters. He then worked four years at Adar Falls as a teamster for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, also being employed for a time in the lath mills. But ambitious to work for himself rather than for others, he awaited his opportunity, which came in 1888, when he purchased 40 acres of stump land in Section 5, town of Menomonie. Later he bought 40 more and built up a farm there, which he sold in 1903. He then purchased his present farm of 120 acres in Section 33 and has since cleared and improved the land, rebuilt the house and erected a new barn of $36 \ge 80$ feet, with a full basement and with the Hudson equipment. He has won success as a dairyman, keeping grade Holstein cattle, of which, in addition to a pure bred sire, he has a herd of 30 cows, with a milking strain of 20 head. He is a stockholder in the new Hudson Road Creamery. Mr. Walseth was married in the city of Menomonie, to Sigred Mitlyng, who was born in Norway, Aug. 11, 1865, daughter of Andrew and Mary Mitlyng, the mother's maiden name also being Mitlyng. Mrs. Walseth, with her sister Anna, who is now Mrs. Martin Fladoes of Menomonie, came to this country in 1883. Mrs. Walseth worked for the Wilson and McLean families before her marriage. She and her husband are the parents of ten children, as follows: Mary, born June 4, 1885, who is the wife of Amond Bakke and has five children, Inez, Orval, Marjorie, Gerhart and Ardes; Albert, born Aug. 14, 1887, who married Angie Hecklinger and has four children, Oliver, Gerald, Albert and Genevieve; Anna, born Aug. 9, 1889, who is the wife of Edwin Hughes of Anacortes, Wash., and has a daughter named Grace; Andrew, born Aug. 20, 1891, who died Oct. 1, 1895; Jennie, born Jan. 29, 1894, now Mrs. John Mallory of International Falls, Minn., and the mother of one child, Genevieve; Tena, born May 7, 1896, who is the wife of Leopold Rudiger and has two children. Eugene and Phyllis; Emma, born Aug. 12, 1898, a teacher in Chetek, Wis.; Stella, born Nov. 22, 1900, who is a teacher at Knapp; Ruby, born March 27, 1902, now in the employ of the La Pointe Lumber Co. at Menomonie; Theodore, born June 19, 1905, who is residing at home with his parents; and Esther, born March 18, 1909, who is attending high school in Menomonie. Mr. Walseth and his family are members of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

Hans Larson, who has added to the agricultural importance of the town of Dunn by developing a good farm from wild land, and is still operating it, was born in Denmark, Feb. 27, 1860, son of Lewis Peter Hanson and Kirsten Jenson. The parents died in Denmark, the father in 1902 and the mother in 1904. As a boy, Hans attended grammar school in his native land and remained there until he was 23 years old. Then in 1883 he came to the United States, landing in this country on July 27, and proceeding westward in the fall to Dunn County, Wisconsin. It was on November, 14, that he located in the town of Dunn and for somewhat over a year thereafter he worked out for others. He then entered the ranks of the pioneer farmers of the county, for, though not an early arrival, he had to begin in the same way and go through practically the same experiences as those who had come into the county 25 or 30 years before. Not having the means to secure an improved farm, he bought 40 acres of wild land in Section 21, the tract being in such an isolated situation that he had to cut a path through the woods to get ot it. Then came the task of building a log house and barns, of grubbing the stumps and breaking the land, all involving great labor and requiring considerable time to accomplish. But Mr. Larson was a good worker and by 1905 had advanced so far that he was able to build a good frame residence. In 1913 he erected a basement barn of 36 x 64 feet, provided with running water and drinking cups for the stock; and in addition to these improvements, he has put up a good set of out-buildings. He has later added 40 acres more to his farm, and in 1924 added another 80 acres, so that it now contains 160 acres. In 1920 he built a neat little bungalow residence for himself and wife, the farm house, which stands in the same yard, being occupied by his son, Jens C., who is his chief assistant. The Larson farm occupies a picturesque situation overlooking the valley of Varney Creek, and its general aspect is one indicative of thrift, good management and prosperity. Mr. Larson is giving his chief attention to dairying and keeps a herd of grade Guernsey cattle with a pure bred sire. He is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville and in the New Richmond Packing Co. Mr. Larson was married Nov. 13, 1883, to Sena Jensen, who was born in Denmark, Feb. 5, 1858. He and his wife are the parents of three children, Johanna Christina, born May 21, 1885; Louis Peter, born Nov. 1887, and Jens C., born July 1, 1894. Johanna Christina is now the wife of Daniel Nelson, who is in the banking business at Willow City, N. D. Louis Peter is a railroad engineer on the Great Northern Railway and lives in Minneapolis. He married Anna Johnson and has two children, Harry and Leonard. Jens C., who is on the home farm with his father, married Josie Torgerson of the town of Red Cedar and has one child, Jean, born Aug. 31, 1922. The Larson family are members of the Lutheran Church.

Gabriel E. Sorenson, proprietor of an excellent farm in the town of Elk Mound, was born on this farm July 12, 1866, son of Engebreth and Anna (Larson) Sorenson, further mention of whom may be found in the biography of Lauris E. Sorenson. He acquired his education in the rural schools and a practical knowledge of agriculture on the home farm. When he was not there he was employed in the pine woods or was doing carpenter work. In 1892 he bought his parents' farm, situated in Section 14, and on November 26, that year, he was married to Hattie Tilleson, and with bright hopes they set out on the journey of life together. The parental farm was not a well improved piece of property, the buildings being in poor condition and only 19 acres of the land having been cleared and broken. It was necessarv to live close and work hard. Several years passed in this manner and then, on Jan. 18, 1895, Mrs. Hattie Tilleson died, leaving a son, Helmer Guy, who survived his mother little over a year, dying March 12, 1896. In the following year, or on March 26, 1897, Mr. Sorenson married Betsey Julia Monson, which was a fortunate union in every way, as she proved strong and capable and was a decisive factor in the success they have achieved, helping him to clear the land, besides taking care of her housework and rearing a family of eight children. The development of the farm to its present condition has been for Mr. Sorenson a task of over 30 years and has been well done. By an additional purchase of 80 acres he increased its area to 200 acres, and now has 65 acres of the original farm under cultivation and 45 acres of the 80-acre tract. He rebuilt the house, making a fine residence of it, and in 1902 he erected a large dairy barn of 34 x 56 feet in ground plan, with a full basement and modern equipment. He has also put up various good out-buildings, has installed an individual gas plant for illuminating purposes, has kept his fences in good condition, and has not been stingy with paint, so that his buildings present a bright and attractive appearance, enhanced by well planned lawns and other ornamental features. He is engaged in mixed crop farming and dairying, having a herd of grade Guernsey cattle with a pure sire. He is a stockholder in the cooperative creamery at Elk Mound, and for nine years he served as treasurer of his school district. Mrs. Sorenson was born in the town of Westbrook, Cottonwood County, Minn., Jan. 3, 1875, daughter of Joseph and Tolena (Hanson) Monson, the parents being natives of Norway. Mr. Monson died in 1882, but Mrs. Monson is still living, being now a resident of Stutsman County, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Sorenson are the parents of eight children, all living, who were born And Mills. Borlison and the bare of particular of the second seco Sept. 17, 1910; Gina J., Jan. 24, 1914, and Selmer L., Oct. 17, 1916. affiliations of the family are with the Lutheran Church of America.

J. S. Govin, a well known resident of Menomonie now retired from active work though closely interested in agricultural and stock development, is a native of Dunn County, having been born in the town of Spring Brook, Feb. 7, 1864, son of Theodore and Olive (Taylor) Govin. The father was born in the city of Quebec, Canada, Oct. 30, 1830, and was reared and educated in the Dominion, while the mother was born in the state of Maine, Nov. 6, 1838. Their marriage was celebrated in that state on Sept. 17, 1855, and in the spring of the following year they came west to Wisconsin, locating on a tract of 160 acres in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County. This was about two years after the creation of the county, which had been set off from Chippewa in 1854, and until 1858 included what is now Pepin The land on which Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Govin settled was all wild, County. as was most of the land in the county at that time, and for years they lived the life of pioneers, patiently enduring all hardships and inconveniences. Mr. Govin's first task was to make a clearing on which he built a frame house and out-buildings, adding to the latter as they were needed and as soon as he had the means. He gradually increased in prosperity, became known as one of the representative citizens of his county and continued actively engaged in agriculture until his death on Jan. 9, 1902, a period of 56 years from the time he settled here. His wife who survived him, moved to Menomonie and bought a residence on Sixth Street, where she passed away some 15 years later on May 14, 1917. It was she who gave the name to Fall City. It was when first settling in the town of Spring Brook that one day the name was suggested to her from the fact that there was a waterfall in Mud Creek which flowed through their place, the latter part of the name being added to give dignity and because she had formerly lived in the city and perhaps hoped that the rural place she thus christened, more in a joke than seriously, was destined some day to develop into a considerable community. The name stuck to the place and has ever since been retained in honor of her memory. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Govin were the parents of 12 children, of whom ten are now living, the full list being as follows: Theodore, a retired farmer now living in Menomonie; Olive. who is Mrs. William Yates of Rice Lake, Wis.; Frank, an insurance man living in Menomonie; J. S., subject of this sketch; C. O., a stock buyer and owner of the Menomonie Guernsey Farm, and who resides in Menomonie; Edward, also a resident of this city, who is engaged in the insurance business; Julia, who is a Sister of Charity stationed in Buffalo, N. Y.; Phoebe, Grace and Leah, who reside in Menomonie; Matilda, who died at the age of 14 years; and Alice, who married A. H. Grover and died June 10, 1898. J. S. Govin was reared in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County, where he attended rural school, also helping his parents to clear and develop the home farm. After living at home until reaching the age of 22, he came to Menomonie, where he learned the carpenter's trade, following it as a journeyman for three years. He then launched out in business as a general contractor and builder, in which line of activity he soon made an enviable reputation for thorough and conscientious work and fidelity in carrying out his contracts without trickery or deceit. Among the many examples of his work in Menomonie may be mentioned the Catholic Church and parsonage, the Mabel Tainter Annex, the Hintzman Block, the Arcade Block and many more business blocks. acted as superintendent for the state on the Stout Institute Trades building, built He also many of the best modern dwellings in the city ,and was engaged to superintend the building of, and the purchasing of the material for, the famous Stout farms at Mikana in Barron County. In 1916 Mr. Govin retired from business as a contractor. He has for many years, however, been interested in agriculture in Dunn County, or, more particularly, in dairy farming, being proprietor of the widely known Dunn County Guernsey Farm of 210 acres in the town of Spring Brook, which he has himself built up from a modest beginning. It is thoroughly modern in plan and execution, being provided with substantial barns and out-buildings and a fine residence. The main barn is 36 x 104 feet, with 25-foot posts, and is furnished with the James equipment, drinking cups, and everything essential for the health and comfort of the cattle. The horse barn, 18 x 40 feet, is a separate building and is equally planned and equipped, and among the out-buildings should be mentioned Mr. Govin has installed an electric light plant which provides light the large silo. for all the buildings, and he has also laid water-pipes to the pastures so they can be readily supplied. He has been a leader in the introduction and development of Guernsey stock in the county, having imported five different lots directly from the Guernsey Islands, and thus has been the founder of many of the valuable herds in Dunn and neighboring counties. His importations also include the foundation Guernsey herd on the F. D. Stout farms at Mikana, already referred to. from his own personal interests Mr. Govin has been active more or less in the affairs of local government. He was a member of the county board for six years, and has served as alderman from the third and fourth wards of Menomonie about six years in all. On April 30, 1888 Mr. Govin was united in marriage with Elizabeth Waterston, who was born in Canada, July 23, 1864. Of this union four children have been born: LaVerne A., Dec. 16, 1889; Helen E., April 13, 1894; Stephen C., March 25, 1899, and J. Wilbur, March 2, 1902. The eldest son LaVerne is now financially interested in the Dunn County Guernsey Farm, which he is operating. He married Susie Cramer and has five children, James L., Jeanette, John C., Helen M., and Neil R. Helen E. married A. B. Caughlin of La Crosse and resides in Baraboo, Wis., she has three children, Virginia, Joseph and James W. Stephen C., who was graduated from the Stout Institute. is now a director of manual training at Ely, Minn. On March 2, 1924, he was united in marriage with Ann Lucille Flaherty of Duluth, Minn, I. Wilbur, who was graduated from the Stout Institute in the four-year course, and was a director of manual training at East Chicago. died Feb. 1, 1923, the news of his untimely death casting a gloom over the community. The local press spoke of him as follows: "Wilbur Govin was a bright and vivacious young man. He possessed a keen intellect and brilliant mind. His early education was gained from St. Joseph's parochial School and Menomonie High School. The latter he finished with the class of 1920. Teeming with the exuberance of youth, he was ever ready for learning. After graduating from high school he spent one year in Marquette University: but his mechanical trend of mind led him back to him home technical school, the Stout Institute, from which he received his bachelor of science degree last June. In September, 1923 Wilbur Govin entered upon his duties as instructor of mechanical training in the East Chicago High School, a responsible position for one so young, but there was no fiber of fail in his make-up. It was while performing the duties of his first appointment very successfully that he was stricken with the fatal illness, typhoid fever. On January, 24 he was taken to St. Margaret's Hospital, Hammond, Ind. One week later, Febuary 1, the soul of this noble and manly lad passed from its earthly home. He was truly a christian character, a devoted and affectionate son, with always a though for mother and father. These characteristics manifested themselves in his last hours when he bade his parents not to grieve for him, for he was ready to meet his Heavenly Father." Into all homes at times such bitter sorrows come, but, as truly said the poet; "'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all," for the memory of happy days remains and love softens and humanizes the heart. All the members of the Govin family have performed a worthy part in life and the new generation on the scene is competent to carry on the work laid down by the elders and bring it to still higher perfection.

John J. Lowe, for many years a prosperous farmer in the town of Weston, where he was highly esteemed as a man and citizen, was born in Pakenham, Lanark County, Canada, son of David and Rebecca (Owens) Lowe. The father was a native of Ontario, Canada, born Dec. 22, 1833, and it was there that he married Rebecca Owens, who was born in Ireland, Oct. 22, 1833, she being, therefore, just two months older than himself. In 1868 they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, locating first on Knight's Creek, where they lived for four years. Then in 1872 they went to Manitoba, Canada, but not liking that region after they got there, returned in the same year to Dunn County and settled on 80 acres of wild land in the town of Weston. There they began the work of home building and farm development, David Lowe continuing active until his somewhat premature death on Sept. 29, 1880. His wife is still residing on the old farm, with her daughter-in-law, Mrs. John J. Lowe, and is now 92 years of age. Mr. and Mrs. David Lowe were the parents of four children: John J., subject of this sketch and now deceased; Alfred, also deceased; Martha, who married David Adams and is now a widow residing in Downsville; and Jesse W. of Venice, Calif. John J. Lowe was ten years old when he accompanied his parents to Dunn County. He began farm work at an early age, but was only in his twelfth year when he lost his father. He helped his mother to the best of his ability and owing to the necessities of the case the management of the farm soon came into his hands, and he continued during his subsequent career to build it up and improve it, also enlarging its area by the purchase of additional land. He was respected by his fellow citizens for his industry, capacity, and sterling personal qualities, including an amiable and neighborly disposition. John J. Lowe was married March 6, 1892, to Emma Lauderdale of the town of Dunn, Dunn County, who was born June 12, 1870, in this town, the daughter of John and Mary (Mackey) Lauderdale. Her father was born in Greenville, Tenn., Dec. 25, 1837, her mother being a native of Pennsylvania. In the early 50's John Lauderdale settled in Iowa; where he remained for a few years. Then, about 1859, he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, where he was married, taking land in the town of Dunn. Here in time with the assistance of his wife and family he built up a good farm, on which Mrs. Lauderdale is still living with her son, Fred. Mr. Lauderdale died Aug. 14, 1909. They had four children: Martha, now deceased; Sherman, a farmer in the town of Dunn; Emma, wife of John J. Lowe; and Fred, operating the old Lauderdale farm. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. John J. Lowe, namely, one that died a babe, and Jesse A., now 17 years of age. Since her husband's death Mrs. Lowe has continued to live on the farm, but rents out the land to the Hanson brothers. She is a lady with a wide circle of friends and acquaintances by whom she is highly esteemed.

Ira C. Graff, a prominent farmer of the town of Lucas, who is now serving that town as chairman of its board of supervisors, was born in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, on Nov. 9, 1878, son of Christ and Mary (Brown) Graff. The parents were also born in that county, and were reared and married there. The father, Christ Graff, who in his younger days was a mining engineer, employed about coal mines, in later life took up farming, which he followed for a while in Pennsylvania. In 1897 he and his wife came west and settled in South Dakota, but after a short residence there, moved to Minneapolis, and then, in the spring in 1898 to Dunn County. Here, during their first two years' residence they rented the old George Thum farm in the town of Lucas, afterwards buying the Freeman Showerman farm, a tract of 40 acres in Section 23, the same town, which he operated subsequently until his death on June 24, 1917. His wife did not long survive him, passing away Nov. 18, 1918. Their children were: Ida, now Mrs. Öwen Krueger of Duluth, Minn.; Barbara, deceased; Ira C., of the town of Lucas, Dunn County; Anna, deceased; Laura, wife of S. B. Cook of Cumberland, Wis.; Bertha, who is Mrs. H. F. Schultz of Menomonie; Clyde, a farmer near Ridgeland, and George of Duluth. Ira C. Graff acquired his education in a district school in the town of Lucas and began industrial life on the farm. He continued to work as an ordinary laborer, on farms and elsewhere, until 1906, in which year he went back to his native state, and at Lewiston, Mifflin County, Penn., found employment with the Standard Steel Co., with whom he remained for five years. He then came west to Minneapolis, and accepted a position with the Minneapolis Gas Tractor Co., which later became the property of the Emerson-Brantingham Co. In 1913 he went to Glen Flora, Rusk County, Wis., having a few years before bought a tract of land there, on which he made some improvements, selling it the following year. It was in that year, 1914, that he returned home to take charge of his parents' farm, his father having been forced to retire on account of poor health. His mother also was failing, and, as already seen, they lived but a few years longer. The farm, having been deeded to him, became his property and he has since resided on and operated it. He has increased its area by 60 acres, besides making other considerable improvements, among the latter being the erection in 1921 of a fine barn, $36 \ge 72$ feet in ground plan, installed with the Star equipment. He is engaged in general farming and dairying, keeping Jersey cattle, with a pure bred sire in the herd and is a member of the Dunn County Jersey Breeders' Association. Before being elected chairman of the town board in 1923, he had served as assessor and clerk of the town of Lucas. On Nov. 7, 1917, Mr. Graff was united in marriage in St. Paul, Minn., to Marjory Morgan, who was born at Dodge Center, Dodge County, Minn., Sept. 2, 1896, daughter of Fred and Blanche (Foster) Morgan. Her parents are now farmers in the town of Lucas, Dunn County, Wis. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Graff has been blessed by the birth of two children: Cleborne, born Sept. 24, 1918, and Clayton, born Feb. 4, 1920.

E. A. Halfhide, a well known and respected resident of the city of Menomonie, where he is now engaged in light occupations after a long career of more active work, was born in Oshkosh, Aug. 1, 1858, son of Mark and Mary (Reed) Halfhide. The parents were natives of England, in which country they were married. They came to the United States in 1858, stopping for a while in Oshkosh, Wis., whence they went to Pepin in Pepin County, in which latter place they remained for about two years. In 1861 they came to Dunn County, locating first at Downsville, then two years later moving to Menomonie, where Mark Halfhide found employment with Knapp, Stout & Company, working for them subsequently for 17 years as wagon-maker and wheelwright. At the end of that time he went to Mitchell, S. D., where he established himself professionally as an eye doctor, having pursued the necessary studies under Dr. Curtis of Eau Claire. He followed that profession for a good many years, passing away at Dell Rapids, S. D., Dec. 28, 1924, at the age of 93 years and 11 months. His wife, Mrs. Mary Halfhide, died in St. Louis, at the home of her daughter, at the age of 69 years. They had five children: Mark, born in England, now deceased; Mary, also born in England, who is now Mrs. John Ore of Mitchell, S. D.; E. A., subject of this sketch; Alvin, born in Pepin, Wis., but now deceased; and Clarence, born in Menomonie, now a resident of Mason City, Iowa. E. A. Halfhide as a boy attended public school in Menomonie, after which he learned the wagon-making business with Stevens & Goodman of Menomonie, which firm later became Goodman & Wilcox. In 1879 he started in business for himself, being associated with Quinn & Noble, they conducting the blacksmith department and Mr. Halfhide the wagon-making and repairing department, and this arrangement lasted for several years. After that Mr. Halfhide became associated with George Cook, now chief of police of Menomonie, Mr. Cook taking charge of the blacksmith end of the business. They were partners for two years, Mr. Halfhide being engaged for several years subsequently in carpenter work and build-In 1898 he bought a 40-acre farm at Irvington of Charles Moore, which he ing. conducted as a poultry farm, raising chiefly Brown Leghorns and Black Minorcas, and at the same time he conducted a wagon shop. In 1914 he sold that place and bought from Sampson Bros. an 80-acre farm on the Irvington Road, just beyond the southern limits of the city, which was generally known as the "Shoemaker Johnson Place." This he conducted until 1920, when he sold it and bought his present property on Broadway, occupied by himself and wife. Here he has two lots and has built a fine stucco residence, and he and his wife are spending their declining years in well earned comfort and leisure. Mr. Halfhide has also bought two and a half acres just across the road from his residence, where he does light farming and poultry raising. His present specialties in the poultry line are Silver Campines and Buff Leghorns. During the many years that he has been engaged in the poultry business he has taken many general prizes and some special ones. He still keeps a horse, and has always maintained a shop for wagon and wood work. He has been a member of the Northwestern Poultry Association since its organization, has served as director and vice president, and is now superintendent of exhibits. His religious affiliations are with the Baptist Church, of which he is a member and trustee. Mr. Halfhide was first married Sept. 27, 1880, to Julia J. Cowing, who died Aug. 19, 1882, leaving one child, Nellie. The latter became Mrs. Walter Sax of Pepin County, Wis., and died about 15 years ago leaving two children, Ethel and Dorothy. On Sept. 27, 1883, Mr. Halfhide married Cynthia J. Drake, who was born at McGregor, Iowa, Jan. 23, 1863. Of this union five children have been born: Charles, Nov. 27, 1884; Clarence W., Oct. 12, 1893; Ralph A., March 11, 1896; Eunice May, March 11, 1898; and Evelyn Helen, July 19, 1900. In regard to these children the following is a further record. Charles Halfhide enlisted in the U. S. army on Feb. 7, 1916, becoming a member of Company H, 128th Infantry, 32d Division, and was sent to Camp Douglas. On June 23, 1916, he was rejected on account of physical disability and received his discharge; but wishing to serve his country, he went to Minnesota and enlisted in the First Minnesota Field Artillery, being accepted. On Oct. 1, 1916, he left Fort Snelling for the Mexican border, arriving at Lonegrand, Texas, October 7. There he served until March, 1917, and on April 4, he was honorably discharged and mustered out of the service. The same day he enlisted in Company H, 128th Infantry, 32d Division, being accepted as a first class private. He trained for World War service at Waco, Texas, left for overseas in March, 1918, and at once was sent with his division to the front, where for 65 days he remained, taking part in the terrible fighting amid awful scenes of bloodshed and not knowing but that the next moment might be his last. He was twice severely gassed. After recovering from the first attack he was transferred to the First Division, with which he spent much time at the front. He was one of the stretcher bearers and received citations for bravery. In April, 1919 he returned to the United States and was discharged at Camp Grant. He is now in a hospital at Maywood, Illinois, undergoing treatment for troubles due to his having been gassed in the war. Clarence W. Halfhide, who is now living in Williston, N. D., married Mabel Meyer and has four children, Raymond, Alvin, Mark and Evelyn. Ralph A. Halfhide was also in the war, entering the service in March, 1918, in the veterinary corps. He trained at Camp Greenleaf, Oglethorpe, Ga., and went overseas Oct. 27, 1918. He had charge of horses until his return to the United States, June 14, 1919. He was discharged at Mitchell Field, Long Island, N. Y., June 21, 1919. He is now residing in Menomonie, Dunn County. Eunice M., who is a graduate of Stout University, is now teaching school at Prairie du Chien, Wis. Evelyn Helen is a student in the Northwestern Bible School in Minneapolis. Mrs. Halfhide is a member of Company H, Mothers' Club and is a lady of good social standing with many friends. The family home is at No. 2020 Broadway, Menomonie.

Frank Schleusner, who for 36 years has been engaged in agricultural pursuits in the town of Spring Brook and has built up a good farm in Secrion 6, was born in Posen, Germany, Feb. 16, 1858, son of Ernst and Henrietta (Schank) Schleusner. The father died in 1862 and the mother in March 3, 1905. Frank Schleusner was educated in his native land and came to America with his sister, Augusta, in 1872, landing at New York and coming west to Menomonie, where they had an elder sister living, Mrs. William Swant. During the remainder of that year Frank remained in Menomonie and then went to work for John Rank in the town of Red Cedar, with whom he remained for three years and a half. After that he worked for Archie Dickson, Samuel Harshman and others in the town of Spring Brook. It was in 1888 that he settled on his present farm in Section 6, town of Spring Brook, first buying 80 acres of it, to which he later added, its present size being 132 acres. There was a small clearing but no buildings, so he found himself confronted by a More than 30 years of hard work have made a notable difference in pioneer's job. the aspect of the place. Eighty acres of the land are now cleared and under cultivation and the farm has a fine set of buildings, including a barn of $34 \ge 60$ feet, a granary 18 x 28 feet, a machine shed 24 x 28 feet and a fine nine-room house. Mr. Schleusner carries on general farming and dairying, keeping high grade Holstein cattle with a pure bred sire in the herd. Though he now does little or no active work on the place, it is all under his management. It was on Dec. 4, 1889, in the year after he settled here, that Mr. Schleusner was united in marriage with Anna Tyler, who was born in the town of Spring Brook, Sept. 14, 1867, daughter of Charles and Mamie (Schulte) Tyler. Her parents who came from Germany in 1864, settled in the town of Spring Brook, this county, where they developed a farm, the mother dying in 1893 and the father in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Schleusner have been the parents of six children, five sons and one daughter, of whom three of the sons were in the United States' service in the World War, one losing his life through sickness. These children were, Otto H., Emil R., Walter, Albert, Frank and Matilda, their further record being briefly as follows: Otto H., born June 5, 1890, was educated in the district school and has always remained on the home farm assisting his father except during his absence in the army. He saw some real war service, being drafted July 23, 1918 and sent to Camp Grant, where he was assigned to the "Black Hawk" Division. Later he was transferred to Company H, 128th Division, with which he went overseas. For two weeks he was in the front line trenches at St. Mihiel, and was then transferred to Company G., 111th Division and sent to the He returned to the States, May 3, 1919, and was discharged, May 21, Metz front. since which time he has assisted in the operation of the home farm, besides operating an "80" which he bought in Section 7. Emil R., born April 4, 1893, entered the U.S. service at the same time as Otto and was in the same divisions until he was He died in the hospital on Oct. 24, 1918. Walter, born April 9, 1895 taken sick. was also in the army. He married Anna Kaiser and has two children, Lester and Albert, born June 17, 1898, is operating a farm with Walter near Ridge-Evelvn. land. Frank, born March 7, 1900, is on the home farm. Matilda, born Dec. 14, 1902, is the wife of Casper Kaiser, who operated a farm near Ridgeland. She has three children, Esther, Alice and Jane. Religiously the Schleusner family are affiliated with the St. Luke Lutheran Church in the town of Spring Brook.

Ludvig E. Nelson, who is engaged in general and dairy farming in Section 12 of the town of Elk Mound, of which he is a substantial and useful citizen, was born in this town Sept. 4, 1873, son of Tille and Anna (Tilleson) Nelson. The parents were natives of Barrum, Norway, who came to this country as young people and were married in Elk Mound, this county, settling on 160 acres of wild land in Section This was a wild tract without any buildings on it, but Mr. Nelson put up a 27 log house and one or two log barns and began the creation of a farm. He made gradual but steady progress, and when in 1885 the log house burned down, he replaced it by a better one of frame construction, and about the same time he erected other good buildings so as to form a complete set. Here he continued farming for many years or until his own death on Oct. 14, 1912. His first wife Anna had died when the son Ludvig was nine years old and he subsequently married Emma Arne-The children of the first marriage, seven in number, were: Henry, now of son. the village of Wheeler; Nellie, who is Mrs. Martin Sorenson of Elk Mound; Martha, who is Mrs. John Sorenson of the same town; Ludvig, subject of this sketch; Jessel, deceased; Rudolph of the town of Grant, and Eugene, deceased. The children of the second marriage were: Louis, of Elk Mound; Johanna, now Mrs. Albert Sorenson of St. Paul, Minn.; Helma, who is Mrs. Nels Olson and lives in Chicago; Arthur, deceased; and Tilla, now Mrs. Carl Sneen of St. Paul. Ludvig E. Nelson acquired a public school education and remained on the home farm until he was 18 He then began working out and supporting himself, continuing thus vears old. until 1908, when he began farming on his own account on a rented farm in the town of Elk Mound, which he operated for six years. He then bought his present farm of 80 acres in Section 12, which was an improved farm with a good residence and barn and a fine set of out-buildings. Several of the latter, however, he has remodeled, and he has also refenced the place and built a tile silo 12 x 40 feet. He follows general farming, giving close attention to dairying and is a stockholder in the cooperative creamery at Elk Mound. Mr. Nelson was married Dec. 23, 1908, to Anna Benson, who was born in the town of Wheaton, Chippewa County, Wis., daughter of Peter and Christina (Anderson) Benson, her parents being natives of Denmark who came to America as young people and engaged in farming in Chippewa County, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Benson are no longer living, the former having died Nov. 15, 1903, and the latter April 15, 1913. Their children were: Christ of Cadott, Wis.; Johanas of Eau Claire; Margaret, deceased in infancy; Margaret (second), now of Eau Claire; Anna, now Mrs. Ludvig E. Nelson; William, of Albertville, Wis., and Matilda, who is Mrs. Martin Hanson of Elk Mr. and Mrs. Ludvig E. Nelson are the parents of five children, who were Mound. born as follows: Alfred P., Nov. 21, 1909; Gilman T., Dec. 7, 1911; Mildred C., Dec. 16, 1913; Emil M., Sept. 4, 1916; and Ernest H., Nov. 27, 1918. The religious faith of the family is that of the Lutheran Church, and for one year Mr. Nelson has been trustee of the Baerum congregation.

Jabez H. Norton, a good type of the Northwestern farmer, residing in the town of Sherman, where he has built up an excellent farm, was born in Breckenridge County, Kentucky, Dec. 20, 1861, son of Aaron and Anna P. (Barons) Norton. The parents were both born at Hartford, N. Y., in 1832, the father's family being of English and the mother's of Irish origin. They were married in New York State in 1856 and soon afterwards went to Kentucky and settled on a farm of 202 acres, where they engaged in agriculture and fruit raising. Being also school teachers, they followed that profession at times and thereby earned the money to pay for their farm, on which they died, the father in 1912 and the mother in 1915. Their children were: George A., now in San Diego, Calif.; Jabez H., subject of this sketch; Enoch B., in San Diego, Calif.; Lola M., wife of Abraham Richardson of SanDiego, Calif.; and Mary, who was the wife of Thomas McCoy but is now deceased. Jabez H. Norton was educated by his parents and remained with them until the spring of 1880, when he left home for Illinois, in which state for several years he followed the carpenter's trade. In 1883 he entered the employ of the Chicago&Northwestern Railway in the civil engineering department, being attached to the Elk Horn & Missouri Valley Division, with headquarters at Fremont, Nebr.

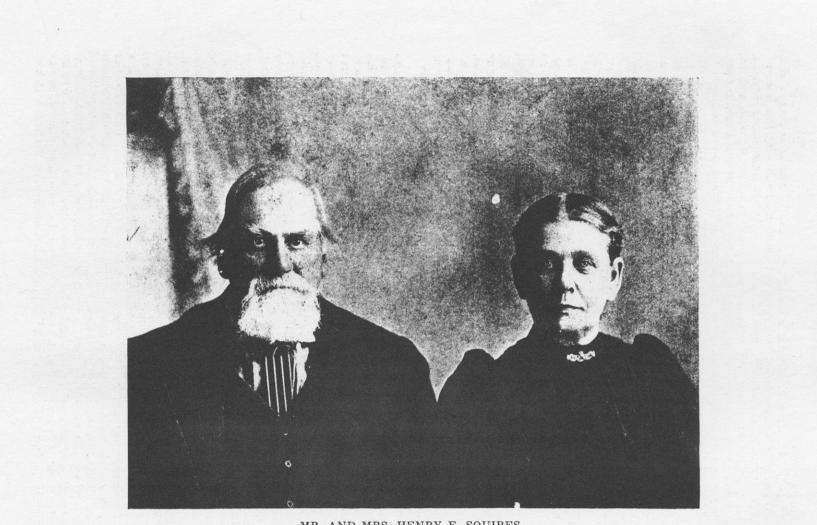

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

In the second week of his service he was promoted to the position of "scratch foreman," his duties being chiefly to lay out the blue prints of all timber used in the division for bridge and other construction work. At the end of the first year he was again promoted, being made general foreman, and he continued in the employ of that road until late in the fall of 1901. In Lecenter that year he came to Dunn County and began farming, settling on 120 acres in Section $_{20}$, town of Sherman, the place being known as the R. B. Wilson farm. At that time but ten acres of it had been improved and the only buildings on it were of log construction. By an additional land purchase he has since increased the area of the farm to over 300 acres, of which he has 125 under the plow, the balance being in timber and pasture. Up to 1918 he did a general farming and dairying business, but while he has still continued to do general crop farming, he now raises cattle for shipping purposes instead of dairying. He has two convenient markets, his farm lying ten miles north of Menomonie and six and a half miles southeast of Boyceville. In 1889 Mr. Norton made the acquaintance of Lucretia E. Wilson, who was born on a farm just north of Boyceville, this county, in 1865, daughter of Ransome Wilson. Her parents had moved to that vicinity from Minnesota several years before at the time of the New Ulm Indian massacre, arriving three weeks before the birth of their daughter Lucretia. They had stopped a brief while at Menomonie until the father could locate a place and then came on to Boyceville with an ox team. In 1874 Ransome Wilson bought 40 acres on Section 20, town of Sherman and moved to it. There in due time he died and that farm is now owned by the subject of this sketch, he having bought it. After his marriage, Mr. Norton and wife settled in Blair, Nebr., he having returned to Fremont, and later came to Wisconsin. His family then consisted of his wife and four children in addition to himself, and his possessions were four cows and a few household goods. Starting with such a small capital, he notwithstanding made a success through energy and perseverance, and the help of his sons as they grew up. On May 14, 1924, he was bereaved by the death of his wife, who had suffered from paralysis. They had had seven children, George A., Jabez H., Elbert V. and Enoch B. (twins), Aaron, Ransome and Wilson; of whom the following is a further record. George A., born June 30, 1890, is now living on the home with his father. In July, 1918 he entered the U.S. service, was assigned to Company B, Tenth Division Machine Gun Battalion, and trained at Camp Funston. Jabez H., born in 1892, at Ainsworth, Nebr., also entered the war service in July, 1918 and was sent to Camp Taylor, Ky. Libert V. and Enoch B. were born Dec. 29, 1895, at Lone Pine, Nebr. The former is now in Michigan and the latter is residing in Menomonie, where he follows the occupation of an auto mechanic. These two entered the U.S. service in April, 1918. Aaron, born in November, 1902, in the town of Sherman, Dunn County, is an auto mechanic in San Diego, Calif. Ransome, born in the town of Sherman, Aug. 18, 1905, is on the home farm. Wilson, born Feb. 7, 1909, in the town of Sherman, lives on the home farm and is attending school. Of the four brothers who entered the army for World War service, Elbert was the only one to go over-seas. He was in the "Lightning Division." After his return home he was discharged at Ft. Snelling. Mr. Norton on various occasions has served efficiently in town office. He was chairman of the board of supervisors for several terms, and therefore a member of the county board, and he is a man with a wide acquaintance and many friends.

Fred Schrader, Sr., now living retired in Menomonie, after a residence in Dunn County of over half a century, during which time he was active in several lines of industry, in particular farming, was born in Maglenbusch, Germany, March 23, 1852. He was educated in the public schools of his native land, and came to America at the age of 17 years in 1869, being for two years thereafter located in Buffalo, N. Y. It was in 1871 that he came to Dunn County, and during his first two years here he worked for James Galloway, a farmer. After that he worked for Mr. Galloway's son, George, on the dray line between Menomonie Junction and the city, a position in which he remained for three years. He then entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Company, and for seven years subsequently was working in From that position he was placed in their sawmill and for their lumber yards. 15 years was setter for the big rotary saw. In 1894 Mr. Schrader gave up mill work and started in agriculture for himself, buying 113 acres of land in the town of There was a small house on the land and 20 acres of the latter had Menomonie. been broken. On that place Mr. Schrader made his home for 18 years, or until 1912, during which time he made great improvements on it, among them being the erection of a good farm residence; a barn 34 x 60 feet, with full basement; an ice house; grain sheds; and chicken and hay houses, besides other necessary structures. He also cleared and broke 55 acres of land, leaving the rest (except what had been orinally cleared) in pasture and timber. In 1912 his son Ludwig died, who had been his main-stay on the farm, and as he himself was getting along in years, and being hardly able, or not caring to conduct the farm alone, he sold it, and returning to Menomonie, bought his present residence at No. 1320 Sixth Street. Not satisfied to remain entirely idle, he did mason work for a year, and then entered the employ of the C. F. Michaels Fuel Co., with whom he remained until they sold out to the City Fuel Co. After that he remained with the latter company as yard man until they too sold out in 1922, at which time he ceased working and has since been at leisure, being one of the well known members of the "retired" colony of Menomonie. Mr. Schrader was married Oct. 4, 1877, in Menomonie, to Eliza Everman, who was born in the town of Menomonie, Dunn County, Nov. 23, 1858, daughter of John and Mary (Everman) Everman. Her parents settled in Menomonie in 1853, the father working for a short time in the mill. He then bought land in the town of Menomonie, and started to develop a farm, but was not destined to complete his labors nor to reach the goal he had marked out for himself, as he died in 1866. He was survived many years by his wife, who passed away in 1902. To. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schrader have been born 11 children, as follows: Eda M., May 19, 1879; Mary S., July 14, 1882; Eliza D., Aug. 19, 1885; Magdalena B., Feb. 3, 1888; Bertha H., Aug. 16, 1890; Frederick M., April 25, 1893; Esther J., Aug. 31, 1894; Ludwig H., Jan. 3, 1896; Carrol O., Sept. 8, 1899; Ruth L., Feb. 21, 1901; and Rudolph W., Nov. 26, 1903. Eda M. is now Mrs. Louis Carney of Faribault, Minn., and has two children, Winnifred and Phillip. Mary S., is Mrs. William Mary S., is Mrs. William Keck of Menomonie and has two children, Merle and Grace. Eliza D. is the wife of Albert Ponto of the town of Menomonie and her children are Gerhard, Gertrude, Agnes, Dorothy, Vera, Lawrence, Helen, Gilbert and Donald. Magdalena B., now Mrs. William Voightschild of Menomonie, has three children, Margaret, Leonard and Wilmar. Bertha H. married Louis Miller of Menomonie and her children are Luverne, Lauren and Anker. Frederick M. married Helen Mathias and has two children, Carol and Eugene. Esther J. is now Mrs. Peter Repseth of North Menomonie, and has two children, Eliza and Mernice. Ludwig H. died at the age of 16 years and five months on June 1, 1912. Carrol O. married Ruth Schultz and resides in Menomonie; they have two children, Robert and Phyllis Gene. Ruth L., a graduate of the Menomonie High School, now of Minneapolis, employed in a beauty parlor. Rudolph M. is residing at home. The family faith is that of the German Lutheran Church.

Frank D. Smith, who spent his entire life, with the exception of a few months in babyhood, on a farm in the town of Dunn, was born in Cameron County, Pennsylvania, Dec. 26, 1867, son of Jacob D. and Harriet (Stuttler) Smith. It was in the spring of 1868 that he accompanied his parents to Dunn County and the town of Dunn, where they took land and started their farm. When old enough to acquire knowledge he was sent to District School No. 7, and later began to work on the farm helping his father. The money he earned as a young man was carefully saved. In 1893 he took over the management of his parents' farm, or of what might be designated as the home part of it, consisting of 210 acres, which, with 80 acres he had previously received from his mother, gave him a farm of 290 acres, situated in Sections 26, 29 and 30, the house and farm buildings being in Section 26. This property he further improved, erecting a fine barn and a complete set of out-buildings and his operations were so ably conducted that he became one of the leading farmers in his town. He was a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and in the Downsville Telephone Co., and was fraternally affiliated with the Beavers' Reserve Fund and Modern Woodmen of America. His death occurred on Sept. 29, 1908, when he was not quite 41 years old and might have been expected to have many more years of activity before him. In his passing the town of Dunn lost one of its foremost and most respected citizens. Frank D. Smith was married, April 5, 1893, to Eva Rands, who was born in Michigan, Aug. 25, 1851, daughter of Thomas and Lovina (Evans) Rands, her parents having come to Dunn County about 50 years ago. The mother died in 1875 and the father on July 29, 1924. After the death of her husband Mrs. Smith for some years continued to carry on the farm, but is now renting it to her son Paul. She still resides on it, however, her aged father residing with her. During her active career as proprietor of the farm, she showed that she possessed a thorough practical knowledge of agriculture and also had a good share of business ability making her fully competent for the task she had undertaken. Her personal qualities and manners have also rendered her popular in the community and she has a wide circle of friends. She is an active member of the Beaver Queens and Royal Neighbors and also of the Community Club. Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Smith were the parents of eight children, namely, Thomas, Jacob, Paul, Clarence, Grace, Clark, Elizabeth and Frank, of whom the following is a further record. Thomas, who was born June 15, 1894, is now a resident of Colfax, his occupation being that of a milk tester. Jacob, born Dec. 15, 1896, entered the U.S. army for service in the World War, was a member of Company M, 28th Infantry, and was killed May 29, 1918. Paul, born Oct. 3, 1898, is renting and managing the home farm. Clarence, born April 6, 1900, resides in St. Charles, Ill. Grace, born May 13, 1901, is now Mrs. Wayne Thibado of the town of Dunn. Clark, born Nov. 14, 1903, is in Chicago. Elizabeth, born Feb. 5, 1905, is a student i the Menomonie High School. Frank, born Dec. 20, 1908, lived but a few days, dying December 26. The Smith family is one that is well known and held in high esteem in the town of Dunn and vicinity.

Henry E. Squires, a pioneer of Dunn County now deceased, was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, Feb. 28, 1832, and was there reared and attended school. As a young man he followed logging and lumbering until the age of 24 years, at which time he came west to Dunn County, Wisconsin, settling in the town of Spring Brook, where he operated different farms on rental. It was in 1863 or 1864 that he settled on a tract of land in Section 16, which was unimproved, and which he began to to develop into a farm, a task that he finally completed after many years of toil, and that place remained his home until his death, which took place Jan. 29, Mr. Squires was married June 21, 1855, to Eda J. Curtis, who was born in 1902. Ohio, July 7, 1836, and who passed away Feb. 6, 1920. Her parents were Nelson and Mary Ann (Horton) Curtis, the father born Sept. 3, 1806 and the mother May 21, 1810. Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Squires were the parents of seven children, namely: Arwilda, born May 31, 1857, who was Mrs. Chas. Way and is now Mrs. Harrison Walker of Glenwood City, Pierce County; Nelson E., born May 2, 1859, who married Anna Lee and has four children, Clyde, Harry, Lyle and Georgia; Eunice, born March 10, 1866, now Mrs. Ell Livingston of the town of Spring Brook; William, born March 13, 1868, who is the present proprietor of the old home farm; Isa, born Aug. 21, 1870, who became the wife of Andrew Stephens and died Sept. 11, 1919; Samuel, born Dec. 13, 1871, who died in September, 1872; Hattie, born Dec. 17, 1875, now Mrs. John Lilly of the town of Spring Brook and the mother of five children, John, Viva and Voda (twins), Woodrow and Lyle. Of these children, William, the present owner of the farm, was born on it and acquired his education in the district school. As he grew up he became his father's assistant on the homestead, helping him to improve it, and in time it was deeded to him in recognition of his services. He has added to the land and has today 209 acres, all in the town of Spring Brook, besides 10 acres of timber land in the town of Elk Mound. After the father's death William cared for his aged mother until she also died, since which time hissister Eunice and her husband, Ell Livingston, have resided on the farm with him.

Ell Livingston, who came to Dunn County with his parents nearly 70 years ago and is now a resident of the town of Spring Brook, was born in the state of Vermont, Oct. 2, 1845, son of Ahira and Orilla (Mead) Livingston. The parents were natives of New York State, who after living in Vermont for a while came west in the late 40's to Indiana and then to Wisconsin, settling in Reedsburg, Sauk County, where they remained until 1855. In that year they came to Dunn County, which had been set off and organized the year before, and took up 160 acres of wild land in Section 11 of the town of Spring Brook. Ahira Livingston was a blacksmith by trade and while in Indiana he had bought or acquired 40 acres of land which he traded for a team of horses. After keeping them for a while he traded them for a yoke of oxen, including a yoke and chain. When he came to Dunn County he was accompanied by a man named James Rork, who took a piece of land next to him, and he and Mr. Rork together bought five yoke of oxen with which they did breaking for new settlers in the town of Spring Brook. Mr. Livingston built a small blacksmith's shop on his land and kept the breaking tools in repair, while Mr. Rork and his son Ell went out breaking, Mr. Rork holding the plow and Ell driving the oxen. In 1863 Mr. Livingston enlisted in the army to serve as a blacksmith, and he seems to have lost his life in some way, as he never returned. His wife died soon after the close of the war, leaving a family of four children, Ell, Clara, Mary and Van, of whom Clara and Mary are now deceased, while Van and Ell are still living in the town of Spring Brook. Ell, who was only ten years old when he came with his parents to Dunn County, and almost immediately he had to make himself useful in the manner already described, so he had little chance to obtain an education. In 1863, the year in which his father went to the war, he began working in the Summermeyer mill, which was located on what is now the Liza Wilson farm, and where he was employed for three years, during which time his mother died and the home was broken up. After leaving the mill he rented and operated farms in the town of Spring Brook for two years. Then in 1868 he homesteaded 160 acres in Barron County, near New Auburn, but after proving up and doing some clearing he found the land very stoney; so he sold it and returning to the town of Spring Brook, bought 76 acres in Section 15, which proved a better investment, as in time he developed a good farm there on which he resided until 1919, since which time he has lived on the Squire farm. Mr. Livingston was first married to Alwilda Coates, who was born in Pennsylvania, Sept. 6, 1844, and died July 13, 1876. Of this union three children were born: Julius, on Nov. 8, 1868, who died June 13, 1871; Ahira, on Sept. 29, 1870, who died June 5, 1871, within eight days of his brother Julius; and Agnes O., on May 10, 1872, who died Feb. 3, 1873, all passing away in infancy. Mr. Livingston was married secondly, to Belle Greenfield, who was born June 25, 1855, and died June 22, 1884. Three children were born of this union also: Guy, on Sept. 10, 1879, who is now living in North Dakota; Ray, on Dec. 31, 1880, now living in Montana; and Allie Belle, April 22, 1883, now Mrs. Bert Foster of Eau Claire, Wis. On Dec. 21, 1893, Mr. Livingston married Mrs. Francis Knott, who in maiden life was Eunice Squires. She has a son Lloyd, a child by her first husband.

Amos Smith, a well to do farmer now retired and living at Downsville, is a native of Dunn County, having been born in the town of Dunn, Jan. 29, 1861, son of George and Louvisa (Bess) Smith. The parents were natives of Pennsylvania who came to Dunn County, Wisconsin in 1855. The first land they took up was in the town of Dunn. Later, in 1861, they moved across the Red Cedar River in the same town and settled on railroad land. This land later came into the market, when George Smith purchased 160 acres of it or more, which he developed into a farm, residing thereon until his death in January, 1872. His wife Louvisa survived him but a short time, dying in August the same year. They had 13 children, four of whom— Mary, Melinda, Lucretia and Flora—are now deceased. Those still living are: Ann, who married Joseph Haynes and is now a widow residing in the town of Dunn; Catherine, who is Mrs. Henry Stettler of the town of Tainter; Sophronia, who married Robert Creaser and is now a widow residing in Downsville; Dolly, the widow of William Irish, residing in Washburn, Bayfield County, Wis.; May, widow of Richard Greenwood, also living in Washburn, where she holds the position of public librarian; Amos and Daniel, twins, the former of whom lives in Downsville, Dunn County, Wis., and the latter in the state of Montana; George, of the town of Otter Creek, Dunn County, and Walter, who is in Canada. Amos Smith was educated in the public schools of Downsville and remained at home with his parents until their death in 1872. Like most others, in the early days he became connected with the lumber industry, working for Knapp, Stout & Co. in the pine woods, and on the river drives in spring. He was with that company two years, during the summers, however, working on farms. He then worked two winters for A. R. Hall. 21 years old, or in 1882, he bought 80 acres of land, paying $100 down, the balance When bearing interest at 8 per cent, which he paid with money he earned working out at $16 per month. In 1886-87 he built a house and barn on his land, and then, having taken up his residence on it, began the work of clearing and developing, in which he made reasonable progress. There he followed farming until the fall of 1890, when he sold the property and he and his father-in-law, Thomas Rands, bought a large tract consisting of nine "forties," or 360 acres, a mile and a half north of Downsville, and which was known as the Swisherville farm. This property had a few scattered improvements on it but needed a great deal of work to make it a desirable Mr. Smith cultivated all the land, paying rent to his father-in-law. Later farm. he bought all of it but three "forties," whereby he acquired a farm of 240 acres. He later increased that area by buying 60 more from the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, but still later sold 18 acres. This left him with 282 acres, which he farmed until the fall of 1921, when he retired from active work, at the same time buying his present place in Section 34, town of Dunn. This is a tract of 40 acres bordering on the village of Downsville. Here he built a good bungalow house of kellystone finish, which he occupies. For many years he has taken a prominent part in the affairs of local government, being a man whom his fellow townsmen can trust to act in such capacity for them. For 20 years he has been chairman of the board of supervisors of the town of Dunn, and also, therefore, a member of the county board, and he has been chairman of the road and bridge committee since it was created. For an equal length of time he has served as treasurer of the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, which he took an active part in organizing, spending a considerable amount of his time in getting it started. He is also a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Downsville. On April 12, 1886, Amos Smith was united in marriage with Clara May Rands, daughter of Thomas and Lovina (Evans) Rands, and who was born in Michigan on Dec. 8, 1865. The parents came to Dunn County about 50 years ago and the mother died soon after, in The father died July 29, 1924. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of 13 children, all of whom are now living, and whose record in brief is as follows: Rosa, born May 27, 1887, is residing at home with her parents. Lavinia May, born Aug. 8, 1889, is the wife of Clinton Whinnery and resides in Minneapolis. She has three children, Marshall, Lavinia and Nathan. Lillian, born Jan. 4, 1891. is in Iowa doing missionary work. Amos, Jr., born Aug. 21, 1892, and who is on the old Smith farm, married Jennie Thibado and has a son, Glenn. Pearl, born Oct. 24, 1894, is the wife of Anker Simonson and resides at Askov, Minn. Gilbert, born Jan. 12, 1897, is farming in Pierce County, Wis. He married Florence Wood and has a son, Clifford. Mabel, born Nov. 28, 1898, was graduated from the Downsville school, and the Dunn County Normal School, and also attended teachers' summer schools. She is now supervising teacher for Dunn County. Ralph, March 18, 1901, is now living in Montana. Doris, born Jan. 20, 1903, is a stenographer and bookkeeper in the Henry Ford Hospital at Detroit, Mich. Clare, born May 3, 1905, is the present proprietor of the home farm. Daniel, born March 2, 1907, Violet, born May 21, 1910, and Myron, born May 6, 1913, are residing at home with their parents. The family are affiliated religiously with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Herman Jacobson, a prominent farmer of the town of Red Cedar, was born on his parents' farm in this town (now owned by his brother Anton) on Feb. 11, 1870, son of Knute and Randi (Dahl) Jacobson. As a boy he attended District School

No. 4 in this town and remained on the parental homestead subsequently until 1917, having in 1904, with his four brothers, taken it over, and together they operated it until 1909. In that year he and his brother Anton bought the interests of the other brothers, Jacob, Hans and Christ, and continued to operate the place under the name of Jacobson Bros., until 1917. Herman then reserving 85 acres as his share of the farm, sold the remaining part to Anton, including the stock and machinery. His own tract is situated in the northeast corner of the old Jacobson farm and he is building it up as a separate farm, having rebuilt the house, which was formerly the parsonage of the Little Elk Creek Church (located in Section 18). He has installed a Delco Electric plant, and is carrying on general farming and dairying, having a small herd of pure bred Holstein cattle. He is also a member of the state and national Holstein-Freisian associations. Mr. Jacobson was married May 10, 1919, to Helga Tweiten, who was born June 13, 1892, daughter of Ole and Gunhild (Dahl) Tweiten. Her parents, natives of Norway, came to America in 1880, first settling near Racine, Wis., but later coming to Dunn County, and locating near Sand Creek, where, however, they remained but a short time. From there they moved to the town of Elk Mound, where they settled on land and built up a fine farm, operating it until Mr. 'I weiten's death, which occurred May 19, 1917. Since then the farm has been operated by the son Ole, with whom his mother resides. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson are the parents of one child, Herlane, who was born June 19, 1920. The family are members of Little Elk Creek Church, and Mrs. Jacobson is now serving as clerk of School District No. 4, town of Red Cedar.

Arthur Medtlie, who is conducting a good mercantile business in North Menomonie, was born in this place April 10, 1896, son of Eilef and Gertrude (Rogstad) The parents were natives of Norway. In 1883 the father came to Medtlie. the United States to establish a home in a land of greater opportunity. The children born of this union were six, as follows: Isaac, manager for the Anderson Electrical Co. of Menomonie; Gena, wife of Oscar Evenson of North Menomonie; Arthur of North Menomonie; Emma, who married Alvin Anderson of Menomonie; Selma, residing at home with her parents; and Jennie, who is deceased. Arthur Medtlie was educated in the schools of Menomonie and in 1910 entered the employ of George Hovlid, with whom he remained for ten years. He then worked one year for the Farmers' Store Co. in Menomonie. In April, 1921, he established his present store at 325 Tainter Street, North Menomonie, and is conducting it on a profitable basis. He carries a fine line of groceries, flour and feed, tobacco, candy, and other commodities in popular demand, and has proved himself enterprising and far-sighted. On Jan. 1, 1917, he was married in Menomonie to Edna Sipple, daughter of Peter and Emma Sipple, and he and his wife have three children. The family are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Marlys, Janet and Arthur J. Church of North Menomonie.

Bendict Tollefson, engaged in general farming and dairying in the town of Grant, is the son of Jacob and Ingeborg Tollefson, and was born on the farm he is now operating on June 5, 1869. The parents came to the United States from Norway in the early 60's, residing for a while in La Crosse, Wis. From there in 1862 Jacob Tollefson walked to Dunn County and took a government homestead of 160 acres in Sections 28 and 33, town of Grant, after which he returned on foot to La Crosse to get his family, whom he brought to Dunn County in a covered wagon drawn by oxen. The land was wild and covered with timber and Mr. Tollefson cut down some trees, hewed out some logs and built a log house and barn as the first step in the improvement of the property. Then he began clearing and breaking the land and continued his operations until his death in 1882. His first wife, who had accompanied him from Norway, died soon after they settled in Dunn County, and it was after her decease that he married Mrs. Ingeborg Johnson, the mother of the subject of this sketch, who was the widow of Michael Johnson, by whom she had three children, Ben, Christ and Nettie, the last mentioned of whom is now residing at Grand Forks, N. D. By Mr. Tollefson she had one child, Bendict. She died in 1909. In early days the family used to trade with the Indians, who were numerous in the vicinity. Bendict Tollefson was reared on the home farm, on which he did regular work after attending school, helping his father to clear and improve it. After the father's death the management fell into his own hands. and when his mother died the farm, then containing 80 acres, became his property. He remodeled and improved the log house, sheathing and plastering it, and also erected a new barn, granary, silo and other buildings. He has added 40 acres more to the farm, having now 120 of which 102 are under the plow, and his herd of grade Holstein cattle now numbers 17 head. During his industrial career he had some experience in the lumber business, at one time working as cook in logging camps. He is a stockholder and director in the Colfax Cooperative Creamery. Mr. Tollefson was married in 1894, in the town of Grant, to Anna Berg, daughter of Hans and Bergeta Berg, her parents, natives of Norway, being early settlers in this town. Both are now deceased, as also is Mrs. Tollefson, who passed away in December, 1911. She left seven children, all now living, namely: Inga, Selma, Oscar, Alba, Nora, Gilma and Arthur. Selma is the wife of Martin Peterson of the town of The daughters are keeping house for the family, while the sons work on Grant. Herman A. Micheels, who for a number of years past has been prominent in the business circles of Menomonie as proprietor of a successful clothing store, was born in Germany, Aug. 12, 1879, son of August and Minnie (Tale) Micheels. The family came to America in 1880, settling at once in Menomonie, Wis., which place they reached on July 4, Independence Day. August Micheels, having learned the trade of tailor in his native land, found employment at once in the tailor shop of Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, but after a short time left that place and went to work for Peter Lammer, with whom he remained for ten or twelve years. At the end of that time, desiring to try his hand at farming, he bought a farm, or tract of land in the town of Menomonie, three miles north of Irvington, where he and his family resided for six years, during which time he cleared about 40 acres and made other improvements. He then gave up the farm, returned to Menomonie, and for a short time worked again for Peter Lammer, after which he retired. He and his wife spent their subsequent years in this city, the first to pass away being Mrs. Micheels, who died July 3, 1908. The death of Mr. Micheels occurred in May, 1922. These worthy, hard-working and successful people had a family of six children, namely: Augusta, now Mrs. William Ninas of Menomonie; Amelia, wife of Steve Herman and a resident of Cleveland, Ohio; Ida, who is Mrs. Henry Binzer of Raymond, Wash.; Albert, of Menomonie; Mary, deceased, and Herman A., of Menomonie. Herman A. Micheels' school days were spent in the town of Menomonie, but at the age of 13 he had to relinquish his books and go to work. He became an employee of Coffin's Box&Lumber Co. at Irvington, and so continued In 1901 he entered the employ of the Kraft Mercantile Co. of for nine vears. Menomonie as delivery boy and clerk, but after remaining with that concern for eight months he left it to become clerk in the clothing department of the A. H. Johnson Co. and rose to be manager of the department. He finally resigned his position there to become an employee of the Schutte-Quilling Mercantile Co., which he remained until 1907, after which he worked two years for the new proprietor of the business, B. H. Waterman. In 1909 Mr. Micheels, with F. F. Volp, Frank Hosman and E. C. Waller, formed a company and started two stores, the People's Grocery and the Crescent Clothing Co., Mr. Waller and Mr. Micheels conducting the clothing business and Messrs. Hosman and Volp the grocery. year later the company was dissolved, Mr. Hosman and Mr. Micheels taking the clothing business, which they conducted together for nine months. Then Mr. Hosman sold his interest to C. T. Ogden, and in 1911 Mr. Micheels sold his interest and established his present clothing store at the corner of Main Street and Broad-He carries a large and well selected stock, handling the Kuppenheimer wav clothing, the Wilson Bros.' furnishing goods and the Mallory hats, and has built up a large trade, his customers being largely those whose confidence he has gained through square dealing. Mr. Micheels was married in Menomonie, Aug. 12, 1903, to Anna Panck, daughter of Louis and Recka (Schultz) Panck. The mother is now deceased, the the father, who survived her, is residing in Menomonie. Mr. and Mrs. Micheels have four children, who were born as follows: Margaret, Sept. 25, 1907; Irene, Oct. 2, 1909; Bernice, Oct. 10, 1911, and Doris M., Feb. 13, 1916, all of whom are attending school. The family are members of the German Lutheran Church, of which Mr. Micheels is treasurer and a trustee, Mrs. Micheels being an active member of the Ladies' Aid and other societies.

Emil J. Jensen, the enterprising proprietor of Sedgeley Farm in Section 12, town of Spring Brook, was born in Denmark, May 6, 1887, son of Jens and Karen (Peterson) Jensen. The father came to this country from Denmark in 1893 and his wife and children in the following year. Settling in Colfax, Dunn County Wis., they resided there for a year and then took a farm near Albertville in Chippewa County, where Jens Jensen in time developed a fine farm, where he has since made his home, though it is now operated by his son, George. He and his wife have been the parents of nine children: Emil J., whose name begins this memoir; Marie, who is Mrs. Charles Anderson of Eau Claire; Christ, a farmer near Albertville, Chippewa County; Katherine, now Mrs. Jacob Dahl of the town of Elk Mound; William, a herdsman on the Elk Lake Farm; George, operating the home farm; Edna, at home with her parents, and Bertha and Morris, who are attending the Dunn County Agricultural School in Menomonie. Emil J. Jensen as a boy attended common school in Chippewa County, and subsequently the Dunn County Agricultural School from which he was graduated with the class of 1911. He then went to Hinsdale, Ill., to take a position as herdsman on the E. M. Barton farm, on which at that time was the largest herd of Brown Swiss cattle in the United States. After holding that position for three years Mr. Jensen was made manager of the farm and continued as such for six years, or until the death of Mr. Barton, at which time the herd was sold. Mr. Jensen then rented the farm for a year—it containing 1,160 acres-and restocked it with Brown Swiss cattle, but sold most of the herd before coming to Dunn County, which he did in the fall of 1920, buying the old Andrew Stephens farm in Section 12 of the town of Spring Brook. Here he has built up a fine herd of pure bred Brown Swiss cattle, having at the present time 30 head; and this year (1924) he exhibited several head of local fairs, and entered one at the National Dairy Show in Milwaukee. He is a member of the Illinois State and the National Brown Swiss Breeders' Associations, the Dunn County Fair Association, and is now endeavoring to organize a Brown Swiss Association in this County. On his farm he has built a new barn, machine shed and silo, and is busily engaged in improving the land. In 1924 he was elected town supervisor and chairman of the town in April, 1925. He is fraterna ly a member of the Mod-ern Woodmen Camp No. 6050 at Fall City. Mr. Jensen was married June 30, 1914, in the town of Spring Brook to Bertha H. Dodge, who was born on the Lyndale farm in this town, on Nov. 9, 1891, daughter of Jackson and Climena (Stephens) Dodge. She is a graduate of the Dunn County Agricultural School and the Dunn County Normal School, and prior to her marriage taught rural school in the town of Spring Brook. Mr. and Mrs. Jensen have been the parents of three children: Robert, born Dec. 16, 1916, who died Feb. 13, 1918; Raymond, born Jan. 31, 1920, and Mildred, born May 21, 1923. The religious affiliations of the family are with the M. E. Church.

Minick K. Johnson, a type of the enterprising modern farmer of Dunn County and the present chairman of the Spring Brook town board, was born in the town of Wiota, Lafayette County, Wis., March 3, 1869, son of Ole and Bertha M. (Hanson) Johnson. The parents, who came to this country from Norway in the early 50's, . .

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

were among the first settlers in Lafayette County; but previous to their settlement there, and before his marriage, Ole Johnson had come to Menomonie and worked here a while as a millwright. His marriage to Bertha M. Hanson took place in Lafayette County, and it was there that they spent the remainder of their lives, he dying Aug. 8, 1875, at the age of 55 years, 11 months and 18 days, and his wife over 26 years later, on May 11, 1902, at the age of 62 years. Their children, nine in number, were: John, now an electrician in Rockford, Ill.; Olof, deceased; Martha, who died Dec. 23, 1880; Russell, who died Oct. 23, 1924; Henry, who died May 26, 1898; Gust, now living in Western Canada; Minick, subject of this sketch; Anna, who is Mrs. Peter Olson of Wiota, Lafayette County, Wis.; and Oscar, who died Dec. 23, 1880. Minick K. Johnson acquired his education in a district school in the town of Wiota, Lafayette County, and remained at home until attaining his majority. For the next three and a half years he did farm labor in Rock County. Then returning to Lafayette County, he operated the old home farm for three years. After that he spent a year as representative of the International Harvester Co. in the village of Wiota, where he subsequently conducted a blacksmith's shop for 16 years. In March, 1914, Mr. Johnson came to Dunn County and began farming here, buying 265 acres in Section 31, town of Spring Brook and here he has since followed general farming and dairying with good results. He has erected a good barn and silo and improved his other buildings. In Lafayette County Mr. Johnson served seven years as treasurer of the town of Wiota and was clerk of his school district for two years. In 1923 and again in 1924 he was elected chairman of the town board of Spring Brook, and he is also serving in his second term as treasurer of the Fall City School. His selection for these offices-the office of town chairman carrying with it that of membership on the county board-proves that Mr. Johnson's fellow citizens have recognized in him a man of good business ability and one who can be trusted in matters of importance to the community, and it may be said that he has made a very satisfactory record. In 1893, Minick K. Johnson was married in Rock County, Wisconsin, to Augusta Foslien, who was born in Norway, Aug. 22, 1869, daughter of Amond and Agnete (Nelson) Foslien, the parents being farmers who had come to this country in 1883. They spent the remainder of their lives in Rock County, Mrs. Foslien dying there on Nov. 4, 1910, and Mr. Foslien on Aug. 11, 1920. Their ten children were: Christ, now a farmer in Rock County; Mary, wife of Martin Reynolds of that county; Lena, who is Mrs. Hans Aggen of Rock County; Nels, a farmer in Rock County; Bertha, wife of Henry Harshstadt of Rock County; Edward, a farmer in the same county; Augusta, now Mrs. Minick K. Johnson; Pauline, who is Mrs. Ole Savire of Rock County; Julia, wife of Olof Olson of that county; and Hans, who is a farmer there. Mr. and Mrs. Minick K. Johnson have also had ten children, who were born as follows: Edward, Dec. 2, 1893; Mabel C., Oct. 27, 1895; Alvina O., Oct. 13, 1897; Ruth V., May 20, 1900; Robert H., Nov. 2, 1902; Oscar M., May 31, 1905; Julia, April 28, 1908; Sherman L., May 26, 1910; Lloyd H., April 5, 1912, and Melva A., Feb. 16, 1915. The five last mentioned are residing on the home farm. Edward, who is operating a garage at Wiota, Wis., married Emma Blaser and has three children, Elinor, Dorothy and a babe at last accounts unnamed. Mabel C., who is the wife of Sevem Olson of Woodford, Lafayette County, Wis., has three children, Amy, Mildred and Clayton. Alvina O., is Mrs. Herman Olson of the town of Spring Brook and has a daughter, Harriett. Ruth V. is Mrs. Theodore Ableman of Woodford, Wis. Robert H. also lives in Woodford. Mr. Johnson and family are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

John F. Stallman, a substantial farmer and prominent citizen of the town of Spring Brook, proprietor of Elk Meadow Farm, was born on this farm April 22, 1879, son of Adolph and Helen (Proud) Stallman. Adolph Stallman was a native of Germany, born in Hanover, Dec. 5, 1836, and came to the United States with his parents when 12 years old, the family settling in Milwaukee. There Adolph was educated and grew to manhood. He was 25 years old when the Civil War broke, and on Sept. 26, 1861, he enlisted at Eau Claire, Wis., in Company C, Eighth Wis. Vol. Inf., and was mustered in at Camp Randall, Madison, Wis. On Oct. 3, 1862, he was wounded at the siege of Corinth and after being discharged from the hospital filled out the remainder of his service as a cook, being honorably discharged Sept. 26, 1864, after being in the army three years. He then returned to Wisconsin, locating at Eau Claire and during a short time worked successively for several lumber The next event of importance in his life was his marriage, which took companies. place in 1866, uniting him to Helen Proud, who was born March 30, 1839, in Glas-When five years old she had accompanied her parents to London gow, Scotland. and about a year later to Southampton, England, and had come with them to America at the age of nine, living four years in New York, and then coming west to Madison, Wis. Immediately after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Stallman established a boarding-house in Eau Claire, which they conducted for about three years. In 1868 they came to Dunn County, buying 160 acres of wild land in Section 1, town of Spring Brook, which was a homestead that had been originally taken up by a Mr. Black. He has not got very far with his improvements, but had built a small shack for a dwelling, into which Mr. and Mrs. Stallman moved with their daughter Marion, then a babe. For a few years many hardships were suffered by this pioneer family, but Mr. Stallman went on developing his farm and in time brought it into good condition, also buying 80 acres more land, which gave him a farm of 240 acres. Of this total area he cleared and broke 175 acres-a good performance—and also erected a substantial set of buildings. After a residence of 33 years on this place he died Jan. 1, 1902, being survived by his wife, who passed away May 13, 1906. He was a typical pioneer of this county, spending some 30 winters as cook in logging camps for different lumber companies, and improving his farm in summer as he found opportunity. The greater part of Dunn County was transformed from a wild to a civilized state by just such men as Mr. Stallman and in just such a manner; and while credit is thus given to the men the women must not be forgotten, for their work was almost if not quite as hard and was as faithfully and successfully performed, they suffering the same hardships and taking the same risks. Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Stallman were the parents of eight children, Marion, Archie, Anna, Clara, John F., Bernice, one who died a babe unnamed, and Ernest. In regard to those who grew up the following data is available. Marion, born Jan. 2, 1868, is now Mrs. John Connars of Red Deer, Alberta, Canada, and has five children, Guy, Helen, Mildred, Gertrude and Lucille. Archie, born Sept. 27, 1872, and now living in Yates, Mo., first married Anna Hommand, by whom he had four children, Earl, George, Helen and Myrtle. After the death of his wife Anna he married Julia Ausman. Anna, the third child in the Adolph Stallman family, born Dec. 14, 1874, married Daniel Connars and now lives at Coeur d'Alene, Ida. She has had five children, Florence, Lela, John, Robert and Raymond, the last mentioned being deceased. Clara, born Sept. 21, 1876, is now Mrs. Thomas Connars of Seattle and the mother of three children, Mary, Frances and Ralph. Bernice, born June 30, 1882, is the wife of Charles Ludvigson of Barron, Wis., and her children are James, Guy, Lerau, Winnifred, Howard, Helen and Dean.

John F. Stallman as a boy attended district school in the town of Spring Brook, and as he grew up became his father's assistant on the home farm. After the father's death in 1902 he operated the farm for his mother until her death, taking over the farm in 1907. He has improved the buildings, rebuilding when necessary, has erected a silo, and has installed an electric lighting system on his place. In 1914 he went into the pure bred stock business, and now keeps a herd of about 30 pure bred Guernseys, selling off the surplus stock. He is a member of the Dunn County Guernsey Breeders' Association, a life member of the Northern Wisconsin State Fair Association and a member of the Eau Claire Guernsey Association, which he has served as president and is now serving as vice president. He is also a stockholder in the Bank of Elk Mound and the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery, and is fraternally affiliated with Elk Mound Camp No. 5952, M. W. A. At Chippewa Falls, Wis., on July 10, 1907, John F. Stallman was united in marriage with Martha Ehlers, who was born July 14, 1884, in that place, daughter of Jacob and Christina (Weidemann) Ehlers. Of this marriage there are five children: Claire E., born April 10, 1908, and now a senior in the Elk Mound High School; Kermit J., born June 14, 1909, also attending high school; Marion H., born March 10, 1914; Gladys R., born Oct. 8, 1915, who is attending grade school at Elk Mound, and Raymond J., born Nov. 5, 1919, and not yet old enough to begin his education. Both Claire and Kermit are members of calf clubs, and this year (1924) made exhibits at the Dunn County Fair, also at the Chippewa County Fair and at the National Stock The Stallmans are a prominent family in the town of Spring Show in Milwaukee. Brook and enjoy a high social standing. Jacob Ehlers, father of Mrs. John F. Stallman, was born in Holstein, Germany, Oct. 25, 1854, and his wife Martha in the same state on April 20, 1862. They came to America with their respective parents, when young, both families locating at Chippewa Falls, Wis., where Jacob and Christina were married in the month of September, 1883. There they have since made their home, Mr. Ehlers being a member of the Grossman Tailoring Co., having learned his trade in Germany. They have had three children: Martha, now Mrs. John F. Stallman, who taught school four years before her marriage; Bertha, born Sept. 10, 1885, who married William Hendricks and is now a widow residing in Cadott, Wis.; and Elsie, born June 6, 1896, who married Roscoe Smith of Cadott and became the mother of one child, Don; she passed away Nov. 9, 1924.

Edward B. Rosenberg, partner in the firm of Hammer & Rosenberg, engaged in the garage business in the village of Colfax, was born in Eau Claire, Wis., Oct. 14, 1873, son of Anton and Sophie Rosenberg. The parents were natives of Norway, where the father followed the blacksmith's trade. Coming to the United States in 1868, he located first in Eau Claire, where for two years he was employed in the blacksmithing department of the Daniel Shaw Lumber Company. He then moved with his family to Cedar Falls, where he opened and conducted a black-In 1878 he moved to Elk Mound and opened a shop there, being smith's shop. engaged in general blacksmithing there until 1912. In that year he started on a trip to Norway and was lost at sea. His wife survived him until the fall of 1924, when she, too, passed away. All of their six children are now living, namely: Mae, wife of Gabe Howe of Colfax; Edward B., of Colfax; Bertha, who is Mrs. Joseph Manshute of Eau Claire; George, a traveling salesman with headquarters at Iowa Falls, Iowa; Carl, operating a blacksmith shop and garage at Elk Mound; and Anna, wife of James Peterson of La Crosse. Edward B. Rosenberg spent his boyhood days at Cedar Falls and Elk Mound, attending school in the latter place. At Elk Mound he learned the blacksmith's trade from his father, for whom he worked until he was 22 years old. He then came to Colfax where he was employed in the blacksmith's shop of Rosenberg & Vold, and finally, buying Vold's interest, formed a partnership with his uncle under the name of Rosenberg & Rosenberg. Later he bought his uncle's interest and continued to operate the business for 11 Then with C. A. Paul he engaged in the livery business and in 1916 they vears. went into the automobile business under the firm name of Paul & Rosenberg. They remodeled the garage, rebuilding it of cement blocks and operating it under that name until 1922, when Gerhart Hammer bought Paul's interest, the firm becoming Hammer & Rosenberg, under which style it is now operated. Mr. Rosenberg was married in Colfax on Oct. 23, 1901, to Mary Jane Paul, daughter of John and Mary Paul, her parents, of English and Welsh ancestry respectively, having been early settlers in the vicinity of Colfax, where they were engaged in farming. Both are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Rosenberg are the parents of two children: Vera, a school teacher at Wittenberg, Shawano County, Wis., and Paul, who is attending the River Falls Normal School.

Gerhart Hammer, a member of the firm of Hammer & Rosenberg, proprietors of a successful garage in Colfax, and now president of this village, was born at Spring Valley, Wis., Aug. 18, 1882. His parents, Martin and Siri (Krispenberg) Hammer, were natives of Trungum, Norway and farmers by occupation. Martin was reared on the home farm, on which later he began to earn his living. He came to the United States in 1865, locating in Menomonie and entering the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. as cook in their logging camps, in which occupation he continued for ten winters. In the meanwhile he bought 120 acres of land in Spring Valley, covered with heavy hardwood timber. On this he built a log house and barn, and with the aid of oxen cleared and broke the land. For half a century he continued to improve and cultivate that farm, and he and his wife are still living on it, he at the age of 87 years and she at that of 79. They are the parents of five children: John, of Milltown, Wis.; Julius, a merchant in Sanford, Mont., in part-nership with W. F. Flitcroft, formerly with the Colfax Store Co.; Melvin of Great Falls, Mont.; Gerhart, of Colfax; and Emma, who married Selmer Gunderson of Colfax and lives on the home farm, taking care of her father and mother. Gerhart Hammer remained at home until arriving at the age of 16 years, attending school and working on the farm. He then went to Spring Valley, where for two years he was employed in the creamery and learned the art of butter making. . He was 18 when he came to Colfax to become butter maker and acting manager of the creamery here, and he was thus occupied for nine years. In the meanwhile, in 1908, he bought the Albertville creamery, which he operated until 1921, when he sold it. He owned and operated the Colfax elevator for two years, handling grain flour and feed, but sold out the business in 1913. He also for some time conducted a plumbing and steam fitting business in Colfar laying in all the village watermains and pipes, and putting in all the sewers except five blocks; also doing most of the plumbing in the village. In 1922 Mr. Hammer bought Charlie Paul's interest in the Paul & Rosenberg garage, the style of the firm being then changed to Hammer & Rosenberg. They carry a full line of auto accessories, handle the Buick cars, and do a general repairing business, having a good modern building properly equipped, and aiming to give the public first class service at all times. Since locating in Colfax Mr. Hammer has identified himself closely with local affairs and has been called upon on several occasions to serve in public office. He was for four years a member of the Colfax village council, was clerk of schools for three years, and in the spring of 1924 was elected president of the village board. In 1904 he was married in Colfax to Clara Moen, daughter of Ole and Josephine Moen, her parents, who came to this country from Norway, being early settlers in Chippewa County at a locality close to the Dunn County line. The mother, who is still living, is making her home with a daughter in Colfax, the father being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hammer have four children-three sons and a daughter -namely: Le Roy, John, Earl and Irene, all of whom are acquiring their education Le Roy and John being high school pupils in Colfax.

Robert N. Peterson, a well known and respected farmer, proprietor of Elm Lawn Farm in Section 19, town of Dunn, was born on this farm, May 1, 1896, son of Adolph and Julia (Christopherson) Peterson. He acquired his elementary education in the district school and afterwards attended the Dunn County Normal School in Menomonie. Then until 1920 he worked for his father on the home farm, and in that year purchased it. It contained 120 acres, 80 acres of which, with the buildings, are located in Section 19 and 40 acres in Section 24, the two tracts adjoining each other. This farm he is now operating according to modern methods, having at the present time 35 head of grade Holstein cattle, with a pure bred sire, and also raising annually a drove of Duroc-Jersey hogs. He also follows diversified farming in raising grain crops and has achieved good results. The farm is nicely situated, the buildings facing the highway, but well set back, and the house fronted by a beautiful lawn, the grounds being beautified by a number of large elm trees, from which the place takes its name. The house, barns and out buildings, erected by Mr. Peterson's father, are of good size, well planned and substantially built, and by the subject of this sketch are kept in the best of condition. For a number of years Mr. Peterson was treasurer of School District No. 7. In 1922 he rented the farm to his brother Walter and went to California, where he worked eight months for the MacBattey Co., after which he returned home and resumed his operation of the farm. He is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery, said to be the best creamery and the most successful in Dunn County. On Aug. 21, 1920, Mr. Peterson was married to Hazel Johnson, who was born in the city of Menomonie, Nov. 11, 1896, daughter of John P. and Amelia (Holstein) Johnson. Her father is now a resident of Menomonie, her mother having died in February, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson are members of the Elk Creek Lutheran Church and are people of good social standing in their neighborhood, having a wide circle of friends.

Louis P. Peterson, who achieved success as proprietor of a tonsorial parlor in Menomonie, in which city he is now living, was born here Feb. 1, 1874, son of Peter and Carrie (Swenson) Peterson. The parents were married in Norway, of which country they were natives, the father having been born in 1831 and the mother, Oct. 25, 1832. They settled in Menomonie in 1869, the year in which they came to the United States, Peter Peterson entering the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. (subsequently Knapp, Stout & Co. Company), in which he remained until his death on March 4, 1881. The mother died on March 9, 1917. Their children were: Peter, born in Norway in 1859, who died in 1884; Bursven, born in 1864, who died April 6, 1881; and Louis P., born, as above mentioned, Feb. 1, 1874. Louis P. Peterson acquired his education in the public schools of Menomonie. As an industrial pursuit he first took up photography, which he followed for two years, but not finding any great reward in that line of effort, he abandoned it and for a year subsequently worked in the printing office. Here againd he found that there was much to do and little to get, so he then took up and learned the barber's trade, working four years for A. J. Josephson. In 1896 he engaged in business for himself in the old concert building on Main Street. He fitted out a fine place, putting in four chairs, and there he conducted a profitable business for 23 years, having some of the best patronage in town. He then sold the business, but still to some extent follows the trade for old acquaintance's sake, working in other shops. In 1889 he built himself a fine residence at the corner of Fourth Street and Eleventh Avenue, with entrance at 1101 Fourth Street. It contains ten rooms and bath and is finished in modern style. Mr. Peterson was married Dec. 28, 1897, to Margaret Jacob, who was born Oct. 24, 1876, in Menomonie, daughter of Sebastian and Catherine Jacob, who were natives of Germany but were married in Menomonie, where Mr. Jacob worked some years for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. He later engaged in farming in the town of Sherman and after being occupied for a number of years, retired and took up his residence in Menomonie, where he died in June, 1920. His wife Catherine died July 23, 1877. Mrs. Peterson have had three children, of whom only one is now living. Mr. and first born, Arthur, born Jan. 12, 1898, died Sept. 4, 1899; while Howard, the second child, was born Aug. 1, 1899, and died May 13, 1920. The surviving son, Clifford, born Oct. 19, 1903, was graduated from the high school with the class of 1923, and, having taken a term of summer school, entered the Stout Institute in 1924. While a pupil in the high school he was a member of the basket ball team. He is now a member of the basket ball team of the Stout Institute. family are affiliated religiously with the Congregational Church. For over 20 years Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have furnished room accommodations to students at the Stout Institute and in this way have not only augmented their income but have made the acquaintance of some very bright and agreeable young people.

Frank J. Basner, a veteran merchant of the village of Wheeler, his career as such having extended over a period of 38 years, and who is well known as one of Wheeler's most useful and public spirited citizens, was born in Detroit, Mich., Feb. 27, 1857. He was educated in the public schools of that city, and subsequently worked in the pine woods at logging until 1875, when he went to Eau Claire, Wis., entering the employ of the Drummond Packing Co., for whom he worked five years. He then engaged in the retail meat business in Eau Claire, conducting a market there until 1876. In that year he came to Wheeler and established himself in the general mercantile business here, at first renting a building. Before long, however, he erected his present store building, a frame structure of one story and basement, measuring 22×80 feet in ground dimensions. For many years he has enjoyed a good trade and conducted a reliable store. He has also taken part in many other things closely connected with the life of the village. Under President Cleveland's second administration (1892-1896) he was appointed postmaster of Wheeler and served four years and three months. He has also served as town treasurer and school treasurer, and in 1920, he and other private citizens purchased at their own expense a chemical fire engine which they presented to the village, and which has been the means of extinguishing several dangerous fires before they had gathered sufficient headway to do serious damage. In addition to his own store interests, Mr. Basner is a stockholder in the W. M. Savage Co., of Minneapolis; the United Switch Co. of Eau Claire, and the Creasy Corporation, wholesale grocers, of La Crosse. He was married Dec. 25, 1882, to Rose Nooney, and is the father of one child, Catherine, who married Martin Anderson and is the mother of three children: Rosella, a student in the Stout Institute; and Geraldine and Kenneth, who are pupils in the Menomonie High School. Mrs. Anderson and her children reside with Mr. Basner, who is strongly interested in seeing that the latter are given a good education.

Thomas Running, one of the best known citizens now living in the village of Colfax, where he has been concerned with business and public affairs for a number of years, was born in Viroqua, Vernon County, Wis., July 10, 1853, son of Ole A. and Bergetta (Thompson) Running. The father, who came to this country from Norway in 1843, first settled in Dane County, Wisconsin, and later in Vernon County, in which latter he married Bergetta 'i hompson. There they remained until 1862, when they came to Dunn County, making the trip with an ox team and arriving here on June 9. They were then the parents of nine children, who came with them, and they had but nine dollars in cash when they halted their team in Running Valley (named after Ole A. Running) in that part of the town of Red Cedar which is now the town of Colfax. They were the first settlers in the valley and proceeded to make themselves at home, Mr. Running starting at once to build a log house. Improvements were made slowly, and to earn the necessary household expenses he and his eldest son Alex worked for others in the fields during the harvest season and at logging or on logging drives at Eau Claire and other towns. The task of home building thus hopefully and industriously commenced by Mr. and Mrs. Ole A. Running was not destined to be fully completed by them, as death interfered with their labors, Mr. Running dying in April, 1867, and his wife in April, 1868, a year later. They had had nine children, four of whom are now living, the record being as follows: Alex, who died in 1893; Ellen, who died in 1879; Anna, now Mrs. E. O. Larson of Colfax; Thomas, subject of this sketch; Tolena, deceased; Peter, who died in 1898; Samuel, who died in New Orleans in 1890; Olaus, living in California; and Theodore, who is professor of mathematics in the university at Ann Arbor, Mich. Thomas Running, after attending district school in Running Valley, was a pupil for one year in Eau Claire Seminary. He then followed various employments until 1873, when he began teaching rural school and was thus engaged in Dunn and Chippewa counties for 11 terms. In 1882 he was elected clerk of court for Dunn County, a position in which he served for two terms or four years. From 1886 to the fall of 1909 he worked as salesman and collector for the Deering & McCormick Harvester Co., residing in Menomonie until 1899, when he was transferred to Michigan territory. On leaving the service of that company he returned to Colfax, Wis. and for two years subsequently was with the Colfax Store Co. He then spent two years with the Running & Martin hardware concern. He served the village of Colfax for eight years as police justice and is now serving in his eighth year as village clerk, besides conducting a real estate and collecting business. On April 10, 1877, Thomas Running was united in marriage, in Menomonie, with Betsy Johnson, daughter of Peter and Ingeborg Johnson. Her parents, natives of Norway, on coming to this country first settled in Dane County, Wisconsin, whence in 1875 they came to Dunn County, settling in the town of Tainter, where they made their home for the rest of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Running are the parents of three children: Theodore William, born April 7, 1878, now foreman of a night crew on the Minneapolis Tribune, who married Anna Irmatinger and has two children, Charles Kennedy and Elizabeth; A Howard, born July 1, 1880, a railroad engineer running out of Traverse City, Mich., who married Christina Swanson and has two children, Harry and Robert; and Henry Irwin, born Sept. 25, 1896, who is in the employ of the Colfax Power Com-

Louis Oebser, proprietor of a good farm of 205 acres in the town of Weston, a part of which is the old home farm of his parents, who settled on it some 40 years ago, was born in the province of Brandenberg, Germany, March 24, 1864, son of Louis, Sr. and Sophia (Ruhel) Oebser. The parents also were natives of Germany and were reared and married there. Coming to America in 1880, they landed at Baltimore, whence they came directly to Dodge County, Wisconsin. The father's anticipations of a new and prosperous career in this country were not destined to be fulfilled, as he died on June 19, 1881. His wife later became the wife of John Hofschulze and with him resided in Dodge County until 1885. Then they came to Dunn County, buying 80 acres of wild land in Section 6, town of Weston from the Fox River Company and living in a neighbor's log cabin until they could build one of their own. The latter, when completed, was $18 \ge 26$ feet in ground plan and had the addition of a small lean-to. The path of the pioneer was a hard one to tread but they traversed it bravely and in time reached the hoped-for goal of independence and a moderate competence, being the owners of a good farm on which good horses had replaced the oxen of early days and adequate modern buildings the primitive cabins and sheds. On this farm Mrs. Hofschulze passed away in February, 1917, being survived by her second husband but a few months, as he died in June the same year. Of her first marriage with Louis Oebser, Sr., there were five children: Louis, Jr., subject of this sketch; Anna, who is Mrs. William Gehn of the town of Weston; Mary, who married Herman Yonker but is now deceased; Frank, deceased; and Fred, residing in Pierce County. Louis Oebser (Jr.) as a boy had some schooling in Germany, and was 17 years of age when he accompanied his parents to America. During the five years' residence of the family in Dodge County, this state, he worked as a section hand for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and after they came to Dunn County, being the eldest child and son, it devolved upon him to work out and earn money to keep them all in necessary supplies of food and clothing. He was employed by the old Caldwell Brick Company of Menomonie, also for a while by the Davis Lumber Co. and at the Wilson Lime Kilns, and then during the summer months he helped to clear his parents' farm. In 1891 he took over its management, and after his mother and step-father had passed away he bought the interests of the other heirs and became sole proprietor. It contained 80 acres and to this area he has added until he has built it up to 205 acres. The present modern buildings on the place were erected by him and he has 60 acres of the land under the plow. As a general farmer and dairyman he has made a good record, his cattle being Red Pole and Durham. He served several years as a member of the school board and for the last 18 years has been a trustee of St. John's English Lutheran Church, in the town of Weston, to which all the members of the family belong. Mr. Oebser was married July 1, 1897, in the city of Menomonie, to Louise Graf, who was born in the town of Menononie, Feb. 19, 1879, daughter of Frederick and Augusta (Atracht) Graf, who came here from Germany in 1875 and subsequently died here. Mr. and Mrs. Oebser are the parents of three children: Otto J., Louis, and John. Otto J., born March 9, 1888, married Louise Lueben and they reside in Pierce County and have one child, Irving.

ing. Louis, born Oct. 6, 1902, and John, born April 23, 1911, live on the home farm. Albert J. Olson, secretary and treasurer of the Knapp Cooperative Creamery, at Knapp, was born in the town of Weston, July 2, 1894, son of Andrew and Anna (Johnson) Olson. He was educated in the district school and the Dunn County Normal in Menomonie, from which he was graduated with the class of 1911. During the following six years he taught rural school in Dunn County and worked at the carpenter's trade during his summer vacations. In 1917 he went to Colfax and was supervisor of grade schools there until June, 1923, and during the summer months of that period he completed a bookkeeping course, and others, in the University of Wisconsin at Madison. In January, 1923, in partnership with Edgar H. Close, Mr. Olson purchased the Knapp Cooperative Creamery in Knapp, and is now secretary and treasurer of the concern. He acted in the capacity of Supervising Teacher in Dunn County for six months, beginning Jan. 1, 1923, Mr. Close operating the creamery in the meanwhile. They have since added the manufacture of ice cream to their business, which they sell under the name of "Hom-Aid" Ice Cream, and for this branch of the business they installed all new machinery, including a mixing-box, ice crusher and homogenizer. The product is disposed of locally and in neighboring towns. The creamery is equipped with one large churn and two large ripening vats, a large refrigerator and other necessary machinery or appliances, all motor-driven. They have also erected a large icehouse 23 x 40 feet in size, with 12-foot posts. They are manufacturing the Gilt Edge creamery butter, operating a large truck and one team, and have increased the number of customers from 35 to 135. They also sell the Melotte separator, a Belgium-made machine. Mr. Olson was married in Menomonie, Wis., Aug. 20, 1917, to Martha Tietz, daughter of August and Caroline (Newman) Tietz. He and his wife have four children, who were born as follows: Lorraine, July 4, 1918; Vernon, March 26, 1920; Elfreda, May 11, 1922; and Raymond, Dec. 11, 1923. Mr. Olson and family are members of the United Lutheran Church in Colfax.

Edgar H. Close, a partner with A. J. Olson in the Knapp Creamery Co., was born in the town of Chippewa, Chippewa County, Wis., Feb. 13, 1896, son of Myron and Anna (Hopkins) Close, the parents being prominent farmers in that county. Acquiring his education in the district school, he remained at home until 1915, in which he went to Colfax, Wis., as a herdsman for F. J. Holmes. In 1916 he went to Madison and took a dairy course at the University of Wisconsin. On April 8, 1917, he enlisted at Minneapolis in the U. S. navy, and was sent to Great Lakes, where he remained two weeks. Thence he was transferred to Hampton Roads, Va., and four days later was assigned to the U. S. S. New Hampshire, a convoy ship, in which he subsequently made seven trips round between the United States and Europe. He was discharged from the navy in December, 1919, and returned to Colfax, Wis., where for the next four years he was butter maker in the Colfax creamery. In January, 1923, he purchased a half interest in the Knapp Creamery Co., his partner being Albert J. Olson. They are doing a good business and have greatly improved the plant. Mr. Close is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge in Knapp. He was married April 2, 1921, in Eau Claire, Wis., to Selma Olson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Olson of Colfax, and of this union three children have been born: Phyllis Ann, born May 25, 1922; Joy E., born Sept. 27, 1923; and Shirley Maxine, born Jan. 23, 1925.

Howard Crosby, an enterprising farmer on Section 21, town of Sherman, was born in this town on June 14, 1892, son of Joshua and Luella (Newell) Crosby. He acquired a common school education and at the age of 16 began working out at farm labor, for some years rendering financial assistance to his parents. In 1917 he bought a partly improved farm of 60 acres on Section 21 and began farming on his own account here. It was known as the Tom Parker farm and had a fair set of frame buildings. Mr. Crosby now has 45 acres under the plow. He has erected a cement silo, and is carrying on general farming successfully, keeping grade Holstein cattle and giving close attention to dairying with good results. The farm is nine miles north of Menomonie and about seven southeast of Boyceville, either place being a convenient source of supplies. Mr. Crosby was married Aug. 24, 1918, to Mabel E. Shafer, who was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, Aug. 16, 1898, daughter of Fred E. and Mary (Jones) Shafer. Having come to Dunn County with her parents when young, she attended school in Menomonie, and subsequently the Dunn County Normal School, from which she was graduated in 1913. She has since spent a considerable part of her time teaching in rural schools and is doing so now in the Wood District. Mr. and Mrs. Crosby are the parents of one child, Lyle H., who was born March 16, 1920. They affiliate with and help to support the M. E. Church in Boyceville In political matters Mr. Crosby is not party-bound but exercises his own independent judgment in casting his vote.

Theron N. Clough, of Boyceville, a member of the Clough Auto Co., was born in Necedah, Wis., April 27, 1874, son of Daniel W. and Lavina A. (Baker) Clough. In 1877 he accompanied his parents to Dunn County and subsequently acquired his education in the district schools of the towns of Tiffany and New Haven. Until the age of 18 he remained at home with his parents, then left home and followed various occupations for a time, until he located in Boyceville, where for 15 years he was engaged in the real estate business. In 1907 he took the Ford agency, conducting it alone until 1914, in which year he took in R. J. Ullen as partner. In 1918 Walter S. Clough, a brother of the subject of this sketch, bought Mr. Ullen's interest, and the Clough Brothers then sold an interest in the business to W. W. Bordett. In 1915 they erected a garage, 46 x 90 feet, and a work shop of 20 x 46 feet, also a battery room, office, and accessories room, and the concern is now well established and successful. Mr. Clough is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Odd Fellows. On Nov. 6, 1918 he was united in marriage with Aleda Nelson, who died April 9, 1923. He and his wife have two children, Orlean and Douglas. Mr. Clough has also two sons by a previous marriage, namely, Harold and Richard.

Walter S. Clough, an active business man of Boyceville, interested in several local enterprises, but who is most widely known, perhaps, as an auctioneer, was born in Necedah, Wis., son of Daniel W. and Lavina A. (Baker) Clough. He came to Dunn County with his parents when 11 years old and subsequently attended district schools in the towns of Tiffany and New Haven. At the age of 21 he left home and for about five years thereafter followed various occupations. In the town of New Haven, in 1902, he began operating a farm and was thus engaged for six years. In 1908 he went to Chicago and took a course in auctioneering, since which time he has devoted most of his time to that business, having conducted sales in various states to the extent of 100 to 170 per season. These sales cover all kinds of merchandise, as he has no specialty. He is now a partner in the auctioneering business with Charles Rasmussen of Glenwood City, the firm being known as Clough & Rasmussen. When the Boyceville Store Co. was incorporated. Mr. Clough became vice president and served as such until 1918, when he sold his stock in the concern and purchased an interest in the Clough Auto Co., controlling the Ford agency. He is also a stockholder in the Bank of Boyceville. He is fraternally affiliated with the Modern Woodmen, Royal Neighbors and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On March 27, 1902, Mr. Clough was united in marriage, in Boyceville, with Libbie Icher, daughter of Peter and Margaret (Blakely) Icher, who are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Clough have two children: Herbert, born Sept. 8, 1907; and Gale, born April 27, 1915.

Christ O. Christopherson, proprietor of Sunny View Guernsey Farm, in Sections 27 and 28, town of Elk Mound, was born on his parents' farm in Section 23. this town on Feb. 6, 1874, son of Ole and Betsy (Gavic) Christopherson. The parents were natives of Totan, Norway, and came to the United States while yet single, the father in 1866 and the mother two years later. Both settled in Menomonie, where they were married and where Ole Christopherson was employed for seven years by Knapp, Stout & Co. He then came to the town of Elk Mound and bought 160 acres of land in Section 23, about 20 acres of which had been broken. A log house and log barns were also on the farm. At once he began its development, adding improvements each year and farming there until 1902, by which time he had built up a fine place. In that year he rented it to his son Christ O., and, retiring from active work took up his residence in the village of Elk Mound. where he died June 25, 1923. His wife, who survived him, is now living with the subject of this sketch. Mr. and Mrs. Ole Christopherson had six children: Christ O., subject of this sketch; Martin, who now lives in Hillsdale, Ore.; Helen, who is Mrs. Charlie Hoel of Baldwin, Wis.; John, who died in infancy; Julia, wife of Sever Lokken, of Baldwin; and Paulina, who is Mrs. James Hoel of Baldwin, Wis. Christ O. Christopherson was educated in the Elk Mound public schools and grew up on the home farm in the improvement and cultivation of which he took an active and effective part. The summer of 1897, however, he spent in Colorado, after which he returned home and continued to assist his parents until 1902. From that year to 1913 he operated the farm under rental, buying it in the latter year, when it contained 160 acres. Mr. Christopherson continued the improvements started by his father. He built a fine basement barn of 38 x 70 feet, and also a machine shed and farmed there successfully until 1919. He then sold that farm and bought his present one of 120 acres, of which 80 acres lie in Section 27, and 40 in Section 28, the latter tract being considered the best 40-acre tract in the town of Elk Mound. During his first year on this place Mr. Christopherson remodeled the residence at an expense of $1,200, making a fine house of it. He has also built a wagon shed, has installed waterworks in the house and barns and put up new fencing. His barn, measuring 36 x 54 feet in ground plan, is provided with a full basement, and has modern equipment, and there is a large grain shed attached on the north side, 20 x 36 feet in ground plan, and on the south end a tile silo of 12 x 35 feet. All the out-buildings are substantial and neat-appearing, being kept in good repair and well painted, all of which makes Sunny View Farm one to attract attention and favorable comment. Mr. Christopherson has a fine head of grade Guernsey cattle with a pure-bred sire at the head, and also raises good Duroc-Jersey hogs. He is a stockholder in the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery and is in every respect a prosperous and up-to-date farmer. Mr. Christopherson was married Oct. 24, 1900, to Christine Eisenhuth, who was born in the state of Washington, July 24, 1877, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Peckmiller) Eisenhuth. To this union two children have been born: Boyd Elmer, Nov. 12, 1901, and Helen Orine, Dec. 16, 1906. Bovd Elmer, who is a graduate of the Elk Mound High and River Falls State Normal School, and is now a teacher in the Gillett (Wis.) High School. Helen Orine is a pupil in the Elk Mound High School. Mr. Christopherson and family are members of the Lutheran Church, he being a trustee of the congregation.

Augustus T. Smith, who died April 27, 1924, was born in Clinton County, Penn., Dec. 29, 1850, son of James E. and Mary L. (Wertz) Smith. Both parents died in Pennsylvania. Their home and his birthplace was on the banks of the Susquehanna River. As a boy Augustus attended rural school in the Blue Ridge mountain region and until he was 27 years old remained at home. He then came west, locating in Aurora, Ill., but not liking the city he worked two months on a farm, at the end of which time, in September, 1878, he came to Menomonie, Wis., being a fellow passenger on the train with Gov. William E. Smith (of Wisconsin), who was on his way to be present at an important demonstration here. He ararrived in Menomonie without money, but managed go get out to the Louisville settlement, where he remained for a short time. He then went to Knapp, this county, where he cut cordwood and stave bolts through the winter. In the following spring-that of 1789-he went to St. Croix County, finding work on a farm on the banks of Kinnickinic River, and there he remained for nine months, or until winter set in again, when he came back to Knapp, Dunn County. The same winter saw him again in the Louisville settlement, after which he bought 80 acres of land on the Chippewa bottoms in the town of Dunn, on which stood an old shanty built by a previous settler. In addition to this small improvement, 60 acres of the land had been broken. Mr. Smith did not take up his abode on the land but boarded out while putting in his first crop. The location proved an unfortunate choice, however, as the heavy freshets covered the land with logs, muck and other debris, and the crop was poor. Thus balked in his first attempt to establish himself as an independent farmer, he worked out for a while at $18 a month, as he found himself in need of capital. In the fall of 1880, he again started out an on agricultural career, this time, profiting by former experience, choosing a higher and dryer location where he no longer had the river to contend with, though it adjoined his first property, which he still owned. As his new purchase was also one of 80 acres, he owned a farm of 160 acres in all, only about half of which, however, was favorably situated, for the reason above mentioned, though the soil of the first 80 was sufficiently rich, being reinforced, as it was every season, by new deposits of river muck. His second "80" Mr. Smith had bought from a Mr. Nichols on contract, paying $10 down, the balance to be paid in yearly payments, an obligation that he liquidated in time. On March 14, 1882, occurred perhaps the most important event of his life, when he was united in marriage with Joanna Smith, who was like himself a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Cameron County, that state, Nov. 26, 1863, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob D. Smith. He and his wife then began housekeeping on the farm. Their dwelling was but a poor house, but there was a convenient well and they had fair chances for success as compared with others. All successful farming involves hard work, and this was especially true in pioneer days; but Mr. and Mrs. Smith were young and strong and not afraid of toil. Gradual progress was made, the farm looking better every year, and the time came when it presented a good appearance indeed, the buildings being neat. substantial and commodious, and all of the land broken but three acres. There Mr. Smith followed diversified farming for over 40 years, or until June 13, 1913, his wife proving a good helpmate and children growing up around them. Thev then sold the farm and, having retired, took up their residence in the city of Menomonie, first buying a house on Ninth Street, which they occupied for a year. They then sold that house and bought a residence at 2019 Fifth Strreet, the gound on which it stands consisting of four lots. At times during his active career in the town of Dunn, Mr. Smith was called on by his fellow citizens to take an active part in town affairs, which he did, serving both on the town board and on the school board of his district. He was fraternally affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and Mrs. Smith with the woman's auxiliary of that order, known as the Royal Neighbors; she also belongs to the Beavers, in which she has held the office of queen. For nine years she was a practical nurse. Together they attended the Methodist Episcopal Church. They had two children: James E., born June 9, 1884; and Bertha M., born March 30, 1889. James E. was educated in Dunn County, being graduated with the Normal class of 1906, and he has since been engaged in teaching school, his present location being Balsam Lake, Polk County, Wis. He is a member of the Beavers and M. W. A. He married Catherine Harding and has one child, Robert H., born June 20, 1920. Bertha M. is now Mrs. Lloyd Lobdell of Durand, Wis., Mr. Lodbell being engaged in the oil business and also being overseer of the telephone system of that city. She, like her brother, was graduated from the Dunn County Normal School in 1906, after which she taught for four years. She is a member of the Royal Neighbors. They have one child, Edna May, born Dec. 12, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Augustus T. Smith may be rightfully classed as among the builders of Dunn County along agricultural lines, and their children are highly favorable representatives of the new generation.

Helge O. Helgeson, who is conducting the old Helgeson farm in Section 11, town of Colfax, was born on this farm Nov. 3, 1878, son of Ole M. and Mary (Severson) Helgeson. The parents came to this country from Norway in 1862, and to the town of Colfax, Dunn County, Wis., homesteading 160 acres of land, to which Ole M. Helgeson added from time to time until he had 360 acres. When they came here they made the last stage of their journey-that from Eau Claireon foot and began their agricultural career on wild land, having to be satisfied for years with log buildings, and using oxen for the plowing and other farm work. Later Mr. Helgeson was enabled to put up some frame buildings and he carried on general farming successfully here until he sold out and went to California. But after a time he returned to Dunn County and bought back 160 acres of his old farm, where he resided until his death on Feb. 24, 1925. His wife Mary had passed away in 1916. They had three children, two of whom are living now, Thie and Helge O. Thie married Ingraham Israelson and has been the mother of 12 children. Helge O. Helgeson grew up on the home farm and as a boy attended the public schools. When old enough to work he helped his father to develop the land and otherwise improve the place. During the latter years of his father's life he was the mainstay of the family and conducted the farm on his own resources. The father divided the land between his two children, each getting 160 acres. Helge has sold 80 acres of his share, retaining the other 80 acres, on which he follows general and dairy farming, being recognized as one of the capable and progressive farmers of this county. He keeps a herd of grade Holstein and Durham cattle and raises general crops. He was married in Colfax, Dec. 19, 1916, to Julia M. Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lee, and he and his wife are the parents of two sons, Orrin and Selmer, and their family includes a step-son, John.

Henry H. Smith, a practical farmer and veteran dairyman, now living retired in Menomonie, where he has many acquaintances who, like himself, have done a yeoman's part in the upbuilding of Dunn County, was born in Cameron County, Pennsylvania, Oct. 22, 1848, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob D. Smith. As a boy he attended rural school to a limited extent. It was in the spring of 1867 that he accompanied his parents to Dunn County, Wisconsin, the family arriving May 1. The father had a farm of 160 acres north of Downsville, with 105 acres broken, which he had bought in 1861, and before he came here he had had the entire farm fenced. The only building on the place, however, was a granary, in which the family lived until a house could be erected. Jacob D. Smith became a very prosperous and influential citizen of this county and has established an reputation as one of its pioneer agriculturists. At one time he owned several hundred acres of Henry H. Smith remained at home until he was 23 years old, and it may land. be incidentally remarked that after coming to Dunn County he attended school for about four months in Menomonie. During a part of his time he farmed a part of his father's land on shares. Then at the age of 23 he bought 40 acres in Section 32, town of Dunn and two years later he bought another 40, cornering the This land he farmed and at the same time first one, the latter being in Section 25. worked another farm on shares, living on the latter. His 80 acres he later traded for another farm of 160 acres in Section 27 which had a few improvements, including a small house in which he and his wife-for he had by this time marriedresided for four years, when he erected a better and more commodious dwelling. He also built a cow barn 26 x 48 feet, a horse barn 30 x 40 feet and other necessary or desirable buildings. Among the latter was a fine silo, built later and measuring 14 x 40 feet, which was of concrete. He broke up and cultivated his land, adding to it until his farm contained 240 acres. In the early days grain was raised, but later came the change to dairy farming, Mr. Smith keeping abreast with the times and owning a fine herd of grade Guernsey and Holstein cattle with a good There he continued farming until 1914, in which year he rented sire at the head. the farm and retired to Downsville, where he bought a house and lived for a few Then he and his wife sold out their place there and came to Menomonie, vears. purchasing their present residence at No. 2104 Fourth Street. Mr. Smith still owns his farm, however, it being at present rented and conducted by his son Harry. As one of the leading dairymen in the county, he helped to organize the Downs-ville Co-operative Creamery and is still one of its stockholders, and as a member of the I. O. O. F. he helped to build the hall of that society in Downsville. Henry M. Smith was first married Nov. 9, 1873, to Lucretia M. Smith, who was born in Dunn County, July 18, 1858, her parents being early settlers here. She died July 20, 1897, leaving three children: Harry J., born April 10, 1875 now, as above men-tioned, conducting the old home farm, and who married Anna Williamson; Elmer L., born April 9, 1882, now in North Dakota; and Effie G., born Aug. 4, 1884, who is the wife of Charles Ockler of the town of Menomonie, Dunn County. On June 18, 1900, Mr. Smith was married to Mrs. Matilda Fisher, whose maiden name was Matilda Preafer and who was born in Germany. She was first married to Charles Fisher, of which union five children were born, Henry of Menomonie, Wis., Paul, Fred and Amelia of Anacortes, Wash., and Anna of Sioux City, Iowa.

Adrian L. Mitten, dealer in farm implements at 420 Main Street, Menomonie, was born in Muskego, Waukesha County, Wis., Sept. 12, 1897, son of James J. and Marietta (Loughney) Mitten. The parents were born, reared and married in that county, and were prominent farmers there. After retiring Mr. Mitten moved his family to Milwaukee, where he is still living with his children. Mrs. Mayetta Mitten being deceased. They had six children: Adrian L., subject of this sketch; Cecil, a clerk in the office of the C., M. & St. P. Railway Co., in Milwaukee; Olive, of Milwaukee, who is private secretary to the president of the Bankers' Finance Corporation at Milwaukee; Juliette, a teacher in the public schools; and Kathryn and Elizabeth, who are attending school. Adrian L. Mitten attended the grade and high schools in Milwaukee and subsequently the Whitewater Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1917. After that he taught school for two years at Tomah. Wis. On Sept. 1, 1919, he went to Owen, Wis., and until Jan. 1, 1922, was manager of a lumber yard for the O. & N. Lumber Co., and after that was with the Hutte Construction Co. of Fond du Lac for a year. It was on Feb. 6, 1923 that Mr. Mitten came to Menomonie and established himself in the farm implement business under the style of the A. L. Mitten Farm Implement Co. He deals in farm implements for agricultural work, Melotte cream separators, Pine Tree milking machines and gas engines, and repairs on all implements and machinery. Though his enterprise is among the new ones of the town, it has been received with favor and gives promise of a healthy growth. In September, 1918, Mr. Witten enlisted for officers' training, but was never called, being discharged Nov. 11, 1918. He is commander of Hosford Chase Post No. 32, A. L., a director in the Menomonie Golf Club, and a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Rotary Club and the Commercial Club. Mr. Mitten was married Aug. 27, 1919, in the city of Menomonie to Jessie K. McLean, daughter of W. C. and Mary F. (Kirby) McLean. He and his wife are members of St. Joseph s Catholic Congregation of Menomonie. W. C. McLean, father of Mrs. Mitten, is now deceased.

Andrew Olson, for many years a well-known resident of the town of Weston, where he made a good record as a farmer and reliable citizen, but who is now deceased, was born in Varmland, Sweden, son of Mr. and Mrs. Olof Anderson. Both parents died in Sweden, where Andrew was reared and educated. He later took up farm labor and also learned the carpenter's trade, becoming a very good work-man. On Oct. 9, 1885, he was married in his native land to Anna K. Johnson, who was born in Varmland, April 20, 1862, daughter of Jonas and Anna (Anderson) Peterson. Her father died in Sweden and her mother subsequently came to the United States and is now living with her daughter Marie in St. Paul. In 1886. the year after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Olson emigrated to America, landing at New York on July 21, and at once coming west to Red Wing, Minn. Thence they moved to Pierce County, Wisconsin, where, however, they remained but a short time, coming in the fall of the same year, 1886, to Dunn County. During the following winter Mr. Olson worked in the pineries for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. It was in the spring of 1887 that he began farming, having bought 80 acres of wild land in Section 29, town of Weston. The only building on the land was a shack that had been used by a woodcutter, and this Mr. Olson built over and made weather-proof, he and his wife taking up their abode in it. He then began to build up his farm. This was sufficiently hard work, but perhaps easier to him than to many other pioneers, owing to his skill as a carpenter, which enabled him to earn money and thereby make faster progress, as he could apply some of it in developing his farm. During that period he built quite a number of farm houses and barns throughout his neighborhood. About 1909 he added 80 acres to his land, and at the close of his career he had cleared about 90 acres and erected a fine set of buildings. He met an accidental death while in Canada and died July 19, 1917, his untimely end when only in his fifty-sixth year, being much deplored by his family, relations and friends. He was a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and the New Richmond Packing Co. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Olson became the parents of nine children: Nels G., O. Oscar, Clara G., Ellen E., Albert J., Alton J., Walter, Agnes A. and Alice C. Nels G., the first born, died in infancy. O. Oscar, born July 20, 1888, is now helping to operate the home farm. Clara G., born July 12, 1890 became the wife of Walter Wood and died Dec. 15, 1918. She was the mother of six children, Cyril, Carl, Viola, Ethel, William and Andrew. Ellen E., born March 20, 1892, is now Mrs. Knute Damgard of the town of Weston and has two children, Frederick and Carroll. Mrs. Damgard taught school in Dunn County before her marriage. Albert J., born July 2, 1894, is now residing in Knapp, Dunn County; he married Martha Tietz and has four children, Loraine, Vernon, Alfreda and Elmer. Alton J., born April 29, 1896, is helping his brother Oscar to operate the home farm. Walter, born Dec. 30, 1900, operates a confectionary and ice cream parlor in Knapp.

Agnes A., born Sept. 12, 1902, is a graduate of the Dunn County Normal School and for the past five years has taught rural schools in the towns of Menomonie and Weston. Alice C., born Dec. 10, 1904, was graduated from the Dunn County Normal School in 1924, and is now teaching the Beaver Creek School. The Olson family are members of Varney Creek Lutheran Church in Menomonie. They enjoy a good social standing and have a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Archibald C. Morrell, a prominent farmer in the town of Stanton, was born in Monroe County, Ohio, Jan. 24, 1866, son of George J. and Catherine C. (Edwards) Morrell. The father, of English-Irish ancestry, was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, Jan. 14, 1820, while the mother, whose ancestry was English-Welch, was born in Washington County, Ohio, Nov. 7, 1822. They were married in Washington County, Ohio, May 2, 1843, and for a number of years thereafter resided in Monroe County, Ohio. From 1880 to 1884 they resided in West Virginia. They came west to Dunn County, Wisconsin in 1884, settling in the village of Knapp. In 1888 the family moved to St. Croix County, where George J. Morrell rented and operated a farm. He died at Roberts, that county, Jan. 18, 1898. His wife survived him over 14 years, passing away at the home of her son Archibald on Aug. 2, 1912. They were the parents of 13 children, but six of whom grew to maturity, as follows, those living in addition to Archibald being: James L, who resides in Roberts; and Martha A, who is Mrs. Christ Link of Minong, Wis. The other three who grew to maturity were John Wm. and Mary Jane, who resided in Ohio and died both in the fall of 1924; and Geo. T. of Minong, Wis., who died in June, 1922. Archibald C. Morrell, who had somewhat limited educational opportunities, was 22 years old when he arrived with his parents in Knapp, and he remained with them for some years, or until his marriage on Sept. 21, 1890, to Emma Beatty of Knapp who was born at Fremont, Ohio, Oct. 16, 1869, daughter of Stephen and Matilda (Merrill) Beatty.

She had come to Knapp with her parents when seven years old, her father, a shoemaker by trade, buying a farm in the town of Stanton, near the village, and for a number of years he both operated his farm and followed his trade in Knapp. He was born in Canada, Aug. 16, 1839, and died in Knapp, Dec. 29, 1904. His wife, born in Canada, March 8, 1840, died Feb. 3, 1925. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Beatty were: George and Harry (twins), of whom George is deceased and Harry is living in Webster, Wis.; Stephen, deceased; Matilda, now Mrs. James Casey of Knapp; Reuben, of Milwaukee; and Emma, wife of A. C. Morrell of Stanton. Matilda was born in Dunn County, Wisconsin, Reuben in Canada, and the others in Ohio. Mr. Morrell's active acreer has been devoted to agriculture and he owns and operates the farm in Section 29, town of Stanton, on which his wife's parents settled. It is a farm of 125 acres, of which 70 are now under the plow. There is a fair set of buildings and Mr. Morrell is successfully engaged in general farming and dairying. He has also owned two other farms in the town of Stanton, each of 120 acres, one on Section 20 and the other on Section These two farms he sold. He also owns property in the village of Knapp. 30. From 1911 to 1918 Mr. Morrell was rural mail carrier on Route No. 2 out of Knapp, living on and operating his present farm at the same time. At several different periods, however, the family has resided in the village for a while-altogether for about five years. Mr. Morrell is a Republican in politics but in local elections votes for the man rather than with any particular party. At one time he was a member of the Knapp village board. He was on the school board of Joint District No. 4 for three years and clerk and treasurer for two years. He was one of the organizers of the Forest Hill Cemetery Association and its president for five years, and is still a member of the board, besides being treasurer. In 1905 he joined the Odd Fellows, becoming a member of Ridgley Lodge No. 64 at Knapp, and he has passed all the chairs and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Morrell are the parents of four children: Elsie M., born Sept. $\overline{2}6$, 1891; Edward S., Dec. 5, 1892; Alton A., Feb. 1, 1899; and Grace V., Aug. 17, 1901. Elsie M. is the wife of Burton Christianson, a farmer in the town of Stanton, and has two children, Grace E. and Shirley R.; Edward S., who resides in Minneapolis, being connected with the Community Amusement Association, has a son, Robert E., who resides with his grandparents: Alton A., a telephone operator and manager for the Knapp Telephone Co.; and Grace V., who lives at home with her parents. On Feb. 15, 1918, Alton C. Morrell entered the U. S. service as a mechanic in the aviation department and was sent to San Antonio, Texas, for training. Being attacked by a severe sickness while there, he was given a furlough and came home, where he remained until he had recovered. He then returned to the army and was sent to San Diego, Calif. He was discharged at Camp Dodge, Iowa, on April 3, 1919.

CHARLES MAVES AND FAMILY

HISTORY OF DUNN COUNTY

Charles Maves, now living retired in the town of Elk Mound after a life of agricultural achievement worthy of record, was born in Germany, Sept. 18. 1848, son of Gottleib and Caroline (Yoekes) Maves. The family came to the United States in 1855, proceeding west to Milwaukee and for some years making their home in the country not far from that place. In 1859 they moved to St. Croix County and for one year thereafter worked a rented farm. During the next year Gottleib Mayes worked for a man named Charles Parker, and then he and his family moved to the bluffs near Alma in Buffalo County, where they spent a win-Then they moved to Dunn County, of which Mr. Maves had received a ter. favorable impression on a previous visit, when he had been accompanied by Christopher Blume. This removal was made in 1861 and for the first year the family rented what was known as the Tyler farm. In the second year Mr. Maves bought 160 acres of wild land on Iron Creek in the town of Red Cedar. This was railroad land and had just come into the market. He now began the development of a farm, putting up log buildings and going through all the usual routine of a pioneer settler, making slow but gradual progress until he had a good piece of his land cleared and under the plow and had replaced his log buildings with others of frame construction. After conducting the farm until about 1885, he sold it to a nephew, Albert Maves, he and his wife giving up active work and taking up their residence in Eau Claire, which was their home for some years. But finding themselves getting old they left the city and moved to the farm of their son Charles in Section 7, town of Elk Mound, Dunn County, where Mrs. Caroline Maves died in January, 1895. Her husband survived her some years, finally dying in a hospital at Superior in March, 1907. Charles Mayes acquired a public school education and grew to manhood on his parents' farm on Iron Creek. At the age of 17 he started out for himself, going to work on the farm of Ausman Bros. in the town of Elk Later he spent a summer as an employee in the shingle mill in Menomo-Mound. rie, and afterwards worked in a mill in Cedar Falls. In the mean while he had bought a farm of 120 acres in Section 7, town of Elk Mound, all wild land onto which he now moved, building a log house and log stables on it and beginning the development of the land. From time to time he bought other land until he had ten 40-acre tracts—six forties in Section 7, one in Section 6, and three in Section 8. In 1915 he built a fine barn of 36×98 feet with full basement and modern equipment including a good water supply system. His log house gave way to a fine modern dwelling and he had provided a good set of out-buildings. He kept Holstein-Friesian cattle and prospered as a farmer and dairyman until 1916, when he sold the place to his son Herbert A., and, putting up a residence and fine set of buildings on his 120-acre tract in Section 8, he moved to it and farmed it until 1921. He then sold it to his son Bert T., who in turn sold it two years later to his brother Victor, the latter new bains its province of the section of the s Victor, the latter now being its proprietor. Our subject then returned to his old home, where he is now living with his son Herbert. For many years during his active period he served his district as school treasurer, and he is a man well known and respected throughout this region for his ability and integrity. Charles Maves was married Jan. 19, 1869, to Augusta Heim, who was born in Germany Sept. 20, 1849, and who came to America when ten years old, her parents settling in Illinois, but later moving to Eau Galle, Dunn County, Wis. After more than half a cen-tury of happy wedlock, she passed away Oct. 31, 1920. They had been blessed with nine children, namely: Lydia, Albert, Carl, Bert, Max, Victor, Herbert A., Nellie and Coorres. Lydia is now looping house for her herether Victor. Albert Nellie and George. Lydia is now keeping house for her brother Victor. Albert, who has a blacksmith shop at Rusk, married Linda Albright and has three children, Harold A., Florence and Grace. Carl, who resides in Madison, where he is presiding elder of the Evangelical Church, married Emma Hohlbine and has two children, Wilbur and Ruth. Bert, T. now in Salem, Ore., married Hulda Schultz and has two children, Lawrence and Stanley. Max, a farmer in Spring Brook township, married Ida Schafer and has six children, Stella, Loraine, Irving, Verne, Willard and Irene. Victor is a farmer in the town of Blk Mound. Herbert A., owner of the old home farm, and now town supervisor, married Dorothy Luethe and has three children, Paul and Phyllis (twins) and Hazel. Nellie is the wife of Edward Laustad, a farmer in the town of Tainter, and has one child, Edward Charles. George, who is farming at Baraboo, Wis., first married Ella Haldemann, by whom he had one child, Melvin. After the death of his first wife he married Alma Gasser. Charles Maves and family are members of the Evangelical Church, and he has been a very active worker in the congregation in the town of Tainter.

Dugald McIntyre, an early settler in the town of Hay River, now deceased, was a native of Scotland and went to Canada when young, and was later married in the Dominion to Janet Morrison, who was also of Scotch birth and ancestry and was young when she crossed the water to this continent. In 1870 they came to the United States, settling in Milwaukee, Wis., or in the close vicinity of that city, where they remained for some two years, Mr. McIntyre being engaged in farm labor. It was in 1872 that they came to Dunn County, traveling by rail as far as Menomonie Junction, where they were met by friends who guided them to the homestead which they had previously secured, and which was located on Beaver Creek in the town of Hay River. It consisted of 160 acres of wild land, mostly timbered, and Mr. McIntyre subsequently purchased 15 acres more, which gave him a tract of 175 acres out of which to develop a farm. During the early years he worked in the lumber camps near Knapp, for money had to be earned until he could make a living from his land. In short, he followed the familiar pioneer path of long and patient industry, working for others until he could work for himself, and making slow but gradual progress. As soon as he was able he began cutting the timber on his land and turning it into logs, which he sold to the Knapp Stout & Co. Company, being paid at the rate of $5 per thousand feet. As the timber cut amounted to 100,000 feet, he received $500 for it, which was a much larger sum in those days than it is today. It took him about five years to do this, He used oxen for the hauling and delivered the logs on Hay River, however. which was stipulated in the agreement with his company. His provisions he used to "pack," or carry on his back, from Menomonie. It was in a similar manner that much of the county was cleared and the way opened up for the farmer. In the meanwhile, assisted by his elder sons, he proceeded with the development of his farm, and he had made considerable progress with the work when, in 1889, he turned over the management of it to his third son, Dugald W., and went to the state of Washington, where he remained for some seven years, engaged in farming. Soon after his return home he sold the farm, retiring from active work and taking up his residence in Lochiel, Dunn County, where he spent the rest of his life, dying Jan. 26, 1915. His wife had passed away about two years and nine months previously, on March 20, 1912. Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre had a family of 12 children, all of whom are now living save one, their record in brief being as follows: Kate, who became the wife of Robert St. Clair and is now a widow residing in Redding, Calif.; Neil, deceased; Anna, now Mrs. Hannibal Trumble of Burnett County, Wisconsin; Duncan, who is now in British Columbia; Jessie, who married Charles Brown, and is now a widow residing in the town of Hay River, Dunn County; Mary, who is Mrs. James Waterbury and lives in Oregon; Dugald W., now retired and a resident of Boyceville; Donald and James, who are farmers in the town of Hay River; Margaret, a twin sister of James, who married Matthew Allen and lives in Oregon; Archibald, or "Archie," of the state of Washington; and Gilbert, who is in Alaska.

Dugald W. McIntyre, a retired farmer living in the village of Boyceville, was born in County Grey, Ontario, Canada, Feb. 19, 1865, son of Dugald and Janet (Morrison) McIntyre. He was a child of five years when he accompanied his parents to Milwaukee, Wis., and was seven when, in 1872, they settled in the town of Hay River, Dunn County. There he attended the district school and, after he was old enough, began helping his father on the home farm. At the age of 21 he began working for others and for several years did common labor. When in 1889 his father went to the state of Washington, he took charge of his parents' farm, which he operated for two years. He then went to Barron County, where he was employed for a year in the mill of the Owen Lumber Company northwest of Bar-After his return to Dunn County he owned and operated in succession several farms, finally settling on one in the town of Hay River, where he remained until March, 1920, when he sold it and took up his residence in Boyceville, where he has since made his home. He was one of the prominent citizens of his town, serving as supervisor for some years, and since coming to Boyceville he has been for most of the time a member of the village council, now serving in his third year. In addition to his farming interests, he was for 15 years a stockholder in the Little Beaver cheese factory and he is now a stockholder in the Boyceville Telephone Company. Mr. McIntyre was married in Menomonie, Wis., July 3, 1889, to Edith E. Smith, who was born in Noble County, Indiana, June 25, 1867, daughter of John R. and Melinda (Albright) Smith. Her parents were natives of Ohio who, after residing for some time in Indiana, came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, in 1873, settling in the town of Sheridan. Mr. Smith's first wife, the mother of Mrs. Mc-Intyre, died in 1867, and he, after having survived her for about 48 years, passed away on Jan. 11, 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Dugald W. McIntyre have been the parents of three children: Catherine, born June 10, 1891; Floyd, born Nov. 28, 1893; and Mabel, born Dec. 28, 1895. Catherine, called "Kate," in the home circle, is now the wife of Martin Olson, of Prairie Farm, Barron County, and has five children, Svlvia, Edith, Marshall, Coral and Elda. Floyd, who is farming within the village 1 nits of Boyceville, married Leona Schlough, and has three children, Wilmar, Iona and Douglas. Mabel is now Mrs. Vincent Zebro of the town of Hay River, Dunn County, and the mother of two children, Dennis and Dorothy.

Fred Maves, a well known and highly esteemed resident of the village of Cedar Falls, where he is now living retired, and who was one of the early settlers in the town of Elk Mound, was born in Germany, Aug. 16, 1850, son of Gottlieb and Carolina (Yoeks) Maves. The parents were natives of Germany who emigrated to the United States in 1855, crossing the ocean in a sailing vessel. Settling first in Milwaukee, they moved thence to Baldwin in Pierce County, Wis., from the latter place to Buffalo County, and from Buffalo County to Dunn County, arriving here in 1861 and locating on Iron Creek in the town of Red Cedar, where they engaged in farming. Later they sold that farm to Albert Maves, a nephew of Gottlieb, and moved to Eau Claire, where they resided for a few years. They then returned to Dunn County to make their home with their son Charles in the town of Elk Mound. There Mrs. Carolina Maves died in 1895, being survived by her husband, whose death occurred some 12 years later, in a hospital in Superior in 1907. They were the parents of nine children, Charles, Fred, William, Theodore, John, Edward, Sarah, Henry and August Fred Maves was a child of about five years when he came with his parents to America and was about 11 or nearly when he arrived in Dunn County with them. He grew to manhood on their farm in the town of Red Cedar, which he helped to improve, and on which he resided until 1871. In 1872 he began farming for himself, buying a farm of 200 acres in the town of Elk Mound. The land was wild and he had to make a clearing before he could find a suitable place on which to build a log house and barns. He had been married in the previous year-on Oct. 19, 1871-to Amelia Lemke, a native of Germany, born April 26, 1851, who had come to America in 1868, settling at Portage, Wis., and arriving in Dunn County on Nov. 3, 1870. Having erected his buildings, Mr. Maves, with the assistance of his good wife, set to work to improve his property and make a farm of it. Early in his active career he received a sunstroke, which handicapped him at times for 14 years, and his wife often put on overalls and did a man's work in the fields, in the woods, or around the barns.

With this hearty co-operation, they prospered and gradually advanced their fortunes, the farm assuming a more attractive appearance year by year, and in time it was recognized as one of the finest farms in what was known as the "Beyer Set-The year 1913 saw the erection of a fine new residence containing eight tlement." rooms, with a full basement, and with a ground plan of 24 x 28 feet. Mr. Maves also erected a fine basement barn of 34 x 74 feet, equipped with the best modern appliances; and among his other buildings was one of the finest hog sties in the county, and also a large silo. In front of the house was a beautiful lawn, and flower beds and shrubbery were tastefully laid out to enhance the picturesqueness of the surroundings and give a thoroughly home aspect to the place. But the time came when Mr. and Mrs. Maves felt that they had done their part, and that it was due to them to retire and let the younger generation carry on the work, and so in 1917 they sold the farm to their son Walter and took up their residence in the village of Cedar Falls, where they have since lived. At the time they did so, Mr. Maves had 40 head of fine Holstein cattle, 80 hogs and 10 horses, besides a large flock of poultry and a full equipment of tools and machinery. On settling in the village he bought a good house, with four lots, and here he and his wife are enjoying a well earned period of restful ease. The date of Oct. 19, 1921, marked a notable event in their life history, as on that day they celebrated their golden wedding, 250 guests being present on the occasion. They were the recipients of a number of useful and beautiful gifts, with $200 in money, $120 of which was in gold coin. In addition to their property in the village of Cedar Falls Mr. and Mrs. Maves own an acre of ground in the Elmwood addition to Menomonie. They are members of the Evangelical Church, in which they have always been active workers, Mr. Maves serving for 25 years as superintendent of the Sunday school. They have had 12 children, all of whom with the exception of one now dead and two who are on the home farm, have their own homes and are working out successful careers. A full list of these children shows the names of Carl Benjamin, Amanda, Emma, Lillie, William, Frederick, Ida, Frank A., Otto, Walter, Esther, and Edwin, of whom the following is a further record. Carl Benjamin, born March 12, 1873, who went to California and was a merchant in that state, died Oct. 20, 1923. He married Elizabeth Haase and left three children, Clarence, Edith and Helen. Amanda, born Dec. 4, 1874, married Fred Anderson and is now living in Minneapolis. She has six children, Herbert, Esther, Amos, Earl, Elmer, and Ray. Emma, born May 2, 1876, is practicing the profession of a trained nurse at Los Angeles, Calif. Lillie, born Feb. 4, 1878, who is the wife of Henry Hohlbine of Cedar Falls, has five children, Laura, Nellie, William, Sophronia and Ida. William, born Aug. 10, 1879, resides in the town of Elk Mound, Dunn County, married Amanda Schroeder, and is the father of ten living children, Lucille, Marvin, Raymond, Wilmar, Evelyn, Emil, Harry, Vera, Wesley and Mildred. Two others Frederick, born March 19, 1881, is now a contractor and (twins) died unnamed. He married Edna John and has four children, Caroline, builder in California. Grace, George and Melvin. Ida, born July 30, 1882, married Peter Anderson and lives in the village of Cedar Falls. She has two children, Russell and Ilah. Otto, born July 26, 1884, is now a farmer at Shiocton; he married Emma Schroeder and has one child, Weldon. Frank A., born Nov. 8, 1885, met a sudden and unexpected death at the age of 21, being killed by lightning on Thanksgiving eve, Nov. 25, 1908, on the farm of his brother William in the town of Elk Mound. He had been helping his brother with the chores during the progress of an electric storm. Having opened the barn door to observe the atmospheric conditions, he made the remark, "It is going to strike here," and an instant later the bolt struck him. The barn caught fire and was burned to the ground, the brother William, however, with remarkable presence of mind, saving 14 head of stock and six horses. Walter, born Dec. 9, 1887, who is on the home farm in the town of Elk Mound, married Margaret Wieman. Esther, born June 22, 1889, is now Mrs. Henry Schroeder of Green County and her children are Eleanor, Vera, Nelda, Dorothy, Walter, Irene and Harold. Edwin, born March 6, 1891, and who lives in St. Paul, Minn., married Myrtle Yoeks. The Maves family history is one that may be regarded as descriptive of the best class of Dunn County citizens. In its pioneer beginnings, the patience, industry, thrift, and mutual cooperation practiced for the common advancement, and the neighborly kindness and hospitality always observed in the household; and, moreover, the striving after a higher standard of living, shown in the esthetic taste that prompted the beautifying of the home surroundings by flower beds, lawns and shrubbery; in all these things and others lie the evidence of those deep springs of character that, exercised on a wider scale, have raised mankind from barbarism to civilization.

Ole Ray, for many years a well known and respected citizen of the town of Spring Brook, was born Sept. 28, 1845, in Soknedalen, Norway, the son of Ole and Marin Ray. The family came to this country in 1868 and direct to Dunn County, Wis., settling in the town of Peru, where Ole Ray, Sr., secured employment with the lumber company at old Meridean. For them, however, he worked but a short time, soon taking land and starting a farm, in the town of Spring Brook on 80 acres of raw land in Section 4 on the Chippewa bottoms. There he and his wife spent the rest of their lives. Being among the first families to settle there, they had to go through many hardships during pioneer days. They had ten sons, all now deceased except one, Nels, who is now living in Washburn, Wis. These deceased sons are Ole, Severt, Ole, Peter, Jens, Erick, Severt, Andres and Ole. Ole Ray, the subject of this sketch, was educated in Norway and came to this country with his parents when 23 years old. The year after the family arrived in Dunn County he taught school at Elk Creek, after which he was employed in the lumber mills at Chippewa Falls for a while. On his return to Dunn County he was employed in the Bryce saw and shingle mills. In 1874 he settled on a farm in Section 35, town of Spring Brook, buying 80 acres of unimproved land, which he proceeded to develop into a farm. This long and arduous task was in time successfully accomplished, his career being one of gradual but steady progress. He erected two successive sets of buildings, those now standing being a great improvement over the first, and was active as a general farmer until a short time before his death, which occurred Feb. 18, 1923. For many years he was an active mem-ber of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. Ole Ray was married in August, 1868, to Margaret Sophia Humstad. They had been the parents of 15 children, namely: Marie, now Mrs. Ole Meyers of Eau Claire; Olof, who is on the home farm; Christina, who is Mrs. John Lee of Proctor, Minn.; Anna, wife of Peter Erickson of Eau Claire; Ida, now Mrs. George Davis, living on the home farm; Sophia, deceased; Emma, deceased; Ole and Severt (twins), of whom Ole is at home and Severt deceased; Emil, of Outlook, Mont.; Jens, deceased; Olga, now Mrs. Sever Running of Menomonie; Harry and Herman (twins), of whom Harry lives in Minneapolis, and Herman is on the home farm; and Sigward of Minneapolis.

Albert Maves, one of the men who achieved a success along agricultural lines in Dunn County and is now enjoying the fruits of his former industry as a well to do resident of Menomonie, was born in Germany, Dec. 7, 1854, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Maves. He was educated in his native land and in 1881 came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, buying an improved farm of 160 acres in the town of Red There he remained for about 16 years engaged in agriculture. He then Cedar. sold that farm and bought a larger one—one of 400 acres in the town of Tainter. The land had been improved but there were no buildings on it. Mr. Maves put up a fine frame residence, also a full basement barn of 40×80 feet, both buildings with thorough modern equipment, and he also erected such other buildings as were needed. There he spent some 21 years, all the time improving the place until he had developed it into a large and splendid farm. Then in 1921 he divided it into two farms, building another fine house and a large basement barn of 36 x100 feet, besides other structures. On both places he has running water for the house and barns, and on each a Delco electric lighting plant with all other conveniences that are either necessary or desirable. These two farms he rents to his sons, he, himself, having been practically retired since 1918. During his active career on the farm he served as a member of the district school board. Persistent industry intelligently planned made Mr. Maves a successful man and he is now in easy circumstances able to take his leisure in town and with his mind free from worry. He is a stockholder in the Rusk creamery and for six years was one of its directors. He owns a nice residence at 1009 Eighth Street. Mr. Maves was first married in June, 1884, to Elizabeth Tyler, who was born in the town of Spring Brook, Dunn County. She died in 1904, leaving four children, namely: Otto, of Cedar Falls, in the town of Red Cedar; who married Theresa Breitzman and has six children, Laona, Luverne, Dorothy, Edna, Leonard and Arthur. William, a farmer on one of his father's farms in the town of Tainter, who married Mary Hazen and has three children, Evelyn, Lawrence and Violet; Wilhelmina, now Mrs. Emil Seilke of the town of Tainter; and Martin, operating the other farm of his father in the town of Tainter, who married Amelia Price. Mr. Maves was married secondly in 1910 to Mrs. Augusta Borchart, who in maidenhood was Augusta Scheel. He and his family are members of the German Lutheran Church.

Herman Ernst Kuesel, whose record as a pioneer of the town of Weston demands a place in this volume, was born near Stargard, in Pommern, Germany, Aug. 15, 1848, son of Ernst and Frederica (Ukker) Kuesel. The parents spent their lives in their native land. Herman Ernst as a youth attended school in Hansfielde, near Stargard, and was afterwards engaged in Jarin labor until he came to America in 1869 on the ship Baltimore, which landed him at Baltimore, Md., on October tenth. From that port he came west directly to Milwaukee and thence to Iron Ridge in Dodge County to visit an aunt. There he was employed for a year by a man named John Wagner and afterwards worked for nearly two years in the sawmill of Bates Brothers. The next summer he spent in Madison County, Illinois. He was married in Dodge County, Wisconsin, on Feb. 5, 1872, to Mary Frank of Germany, daughter of Conrad and Catherine (Zichner) Frank. After the summer spent in Madison County he spent a short time in Highland, Ill., and had some thoughts of settling there, but did not on account of his wife's health, instead returning to Dodge County, where he remained until the spring of 1877. Then, with Charles Frank and Louis Naseband, he came to Dunn County, each buying 80 acres of heavy timber land in Section 18, town of Weston. They were the first three settlers south of Hatchville in this county. It was here that Mr. Kuesel began his career as a pioneer farmer. His first dwelling was a small log shack, after building which he began taking out the immense stumps which were the chief obstacle to his cultivation of the land. For the first few years he carried on his work with the aid of oxen, as did most of the pioneers, oxen for some purposes being better than horses, as they were very hardy and could survive with less care; but in time Mr. Kuesel got good horses. He developed a fine farm, with good buildings, including an excellent frame house and he had his land well cultivated. After carrying on general farming until 1911 he turned the management of the place over to his son Samuel, and in 1921 he sold the farm to him. Some sections of the original fences which Mr. Kuesel built of rails which he cut from logs, may still be seen on the farm. On Sept. 18, 1891, Mr. Kuesel was bereaved by the death of his wife Mary, who had been a faithful companion and helpmate to him through many toilsome years. They had been the parents of eight children, namely: Ernest, who married Mary Henkel and is now proprietor of a fine farm in Pierce County; Herman, who resides on the home farm and is a carpenter by trade; Emil, now a carpenter living in the state of Washington; Anna, who is Mrs. William Werner of the town of Weston; Mary, who is Mrs. Fred Krueger of Wrightstown, Bright County, Wis.; Emma, who married Gust Zuehl and lives in South St. Paul; Samuel, the present owner of the old home farm; and Ida, who is Mrs. Henry Paul of Milwaukee.

Samuel H. Kuesel, who owns and conducts the old Kuesel farm in Section 18, town of Weston, was born on this farm, Jan. 8, 1885, son of Herman E. and Mary (Frank) Kuesel. As a boy he acquired the elements of knowledge in the Joint District School No. 6 of Weston and Spring Lake. He has always remained at home with his father, whose assistant he was until 1911, when he rented the farm from him, and in the same year bought 80 acres of adjoining land. In 1921 he bought the home farm, which is well stocked with grade Holstein cattle, including a pure bred sire, and he now ranks as one of the leading farmers of his town. He was clerk of the school district for five years, then treasurer for three years, and is now serving in his third year in his second term as clerk. He was also for seven years a member of the board of supervisors, and has been active in various matters concerning the welfare of the community. The Elmwood creamery company numbers him among its stockholders. Samuel H. Kuesel was married Sept. 16, 1911, at Granite Falls, Minn., to Eva A. Lange, who was born at Wood Lake, Minn., Sept. 13, 1890, daughter of Fred and Augusta (Luhm) Lange. Her father is now deceased but her mother living and a resident of Wood Lake, Minn. Mr. and Mrs. Kuesel are the parents of three children: Alfred, born Feb. 1, 1915; Gertrude, Nov. 20, 1919; and Eila, Oct. 17, 1922. The family are members of St. John's Lutheran Church in the town of Weston.

George A. Meyers, in the employ of the Omaha railroad at Knapp, was born in Peru, Miami County, Ind., Feb. 25, 1869, son of Lewis and Rachel (Daggy) The father died in 1873, being survived by his wife, who is still living Mevers. and now residing at Fairmont, Ind. The subject of this sketch as a boy attended school in Indiana and subsequently worked on farms and at other occupations in that state until 1891. He then went to Lesueur County, Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming until September, 1898, when he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, locating at Knapp. Soon after arriving here he rented the William Robinson farm in the town of Stanton, which he operated subsequently for two years, at the end of that time entering the employ of the Omaha railroad. He has charge of the pumping station and of the helper engine when the crew is not working. He is actively interested in everything making for the improvement of the village, and belongs to several fraternal societies, including the Masons, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Meyers was married March 15, 1891, to Ida Philliabaum of Peru, Ind., and he and his wife are the parents of two children: Hortense, born Dec. 16, 1891, and Roger, born Dec. 8, 1894. Hortense, a graduate of the Menomonie High School in the class of 1912, also took one season's summer course of the Mankato Normal School, and two seasons of theRiver Falls Normal School's summer course. Before her marriage she taught school two years in Burnett County, two years in Dunn County, and one year in North Dakota, and subsequently (after marriage) one year in Douglas County and two years in Dunn County. She was married June 26, 1918, to Fred Caffery of Hammond. Roger Myers was graduated from the Menomonie High School with the class of 1913 and then taught school one year in North Dakota. On May 10, 1917, he enlisted for World War service, becoming a member of Co. D, 2d Engineers' Corps. After training at El Paso, Texas, until August, 1917, he was transferred to Washington, D. C., and left for overseas on Sept. 10, 1917, landing in Glasgow, Scotland, Sept. 28. He thence went to Southampton remaining there a short time and then going to La Havre, France. With the rest of his company, or outfit to which he belonged, he was engaged for a while in constructing barracks in northern France, after which they were moved to the Toulon Troyon sector, where they trained for a month. In May, 1918, they entered into the Chateau Thierry drive, during which, on June 12, Roger was wounded. He was taken to Base Hospital No. 1, where he remained until Oct. 8, 1918, at that time rejoining his company. He was in the battle at Mons Argonne, after which he entered Germany with the army of occupation. He returned to the United States in August, 1919, and was discharged on the fifteenth of that month. Two months after his return home, or on Oct. 15, 1919, he became rural mail carrier on Route No. 1 attached to the Knapp post office. He resides at home with his parents.

Carl S. Rosenberg, proprietor of the Rosenberg Garage, Elk Mound, was born in the house in which he now resides, in the village of Elk Mound, May 18, 1882, son of Anton and Sophia (Evenson) Rosenberg. The parents were natives of Norway who came to the United States in 1868, locating first in Eau Claire, Wis., where Anton Rosenberg followed the trade of blacksmith which he had learned in Norway. In 1869 he came with his family to Dunn County, and for a year worked for Knapp, Stout & Co. in Menomonie. At the end of that time the company transferred him to Cedar Falls, where he remained about three years. He then came to Elk Mound and engaged in the blacksmith business for himself, conducting his shop successfully until 1910. In that year he started on a trip to Norway, but he never reached his native land, as he disappeared from the ship on which he took passage during the voyage. The mystery of his death has never been solved, so it is not known whether it was accidental or due to foul play. His wife is still living in Elk Mound village. They had six children, as follows: Mary, now Mrs. Gabriel Howe of Colfax, Wis.; Edward, who is in the garage business in Colfax; Bertha, wife of Joseph Wachute of Eau Claire; George, a traveling salesman with headquarters at Iowa Falls, Iowa; Carl S., of Elk Mound; and Anna, who is now Mrs. James G. Peterson of La Crosse. Carl S. Rosenberg acquired his education in the public schools of Elk Mound and then entered his father's blacksmith shop, where he learned the trade, finally becoming his father's partner. The business was conducted under the name of Rosenberg & Son, and comprised general blacksmith's work, including horse shoeing. For 18 years a livery business was also conducted with it. After the loss of his father Carl S. continued the blacksmith business alone but dropped the livery, substituting for it an automobile business. In 1917 he erected his fine cement garage, 50 x 70 feet, connection with which he has a fine office and salesroom, good storage space, and a fully equipped repair department, where he employs two skilled mechanics. This business is now on a good financial basis and is steadily growing. Mr. Rosenberg handles the Buick and Ford cars and specializes in the Goodyear tires. He is one of the trustees of the village of Elk Mound and is fraternally affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the local colony of Beavers. He was married Dec. 7, 1911, to Emma Solberg of the town of Elk Mound, and he and his wife are the parents of three children: Dora M., born Feb. 2, 1914; Eva G., born May 21, 1915, and David, born June 14, 1919. The family are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church.

Leopold Rudiger, a pioneer settler in the town of Menomonie, who passed away some 30 years ago, was born in Germany, where he grew up and was married in time to Berniteen Oberlinder. It was in 1856 that he emigrated with his family to the United States, landing at New York and going thence to Menomonee, Mich., where Mr. Rudiger found work in the tanneries. In 1860 he came to Menomonie, Dunn County, Wis., and for two years was in the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. At the end of that time, in 1862, he pre-empted 160 acres of wild land covered with timber, situated in Section 21, town of Menomonie, and here began the development of a farm, his first step being the construction of some log buildings. To obtain a little ready cash Mr. Rudiger cut cordwood, for which, however, he received very little, for both wood and labor were cheap. Many hardships had to be endured by the family before conditions got better, but they gradually improved. Other settlers began to come in, railroads and wagon roads were built, and new villages sprang up, so that markets were brought nearer, and the pioneer settler no longer had to pack supplies on his back and carry them for a distance of 10 to 20 Mr. Rudiger helped in some of these improvements, especially in regard miles. to the building of roads and schools and in helping new settlers to get started. He was also constantly improving his own place, both as to the land and buildings, and in time he became quite a prominent citizen of his town, serving on the board of supervisors. At last, after some 32 years of useful toil, he passed away on Oct. 5, 1894. His wife, who survived him a number of years, died May 6, 1908. Their children, seven in number, were as follows: Phillipine, now Mrs. Fred Wagner of Tacoma, Wash.; Josephine, who is Mrs. Fred Schultz of Tacoma, Wash.; John and Mary (twins), the first mentioned of whom is now in Sascatchewan, Canada, the latter being deceased; Theresa, who married Peter Baker and is now a widow residing in Menomonie; Emil, a dairy farmer in the town of Menomonie; and Selvina, who is Mrs. Samuel Percher of Menomonie.

Emil Rudiger, proprietor of the Hudson Road Dairy farm in Section 21, town of Menomonie, was born in this town July 19, 1867, son of Leopold and Berniteen (Oberlinder) Rudiger. His education was acquired in district school No. 4 and at an early age he had to make himself useful on his parents' farm, the family dwelling being a rude log house and the surroundings but little improved beyond the state of nature. In the development of the farm and the gradual attainment of the conveniences and comforts of civilization, he had his share, helping his father until the latter's death, in 1894, at which time the farm was deeded to him and he has ever since operated it. He has also greatly improved it, having put up a fine residence and outbuildings and rebuilt the log barn which his father had Up to 1921 Mr. Rudiger carried on general farming and dairyput up in 1875. ing, but since then has confined his attention to dairying, his farm being known as the Hudson Road Dairy. He has a herd of 29 or 20 high grade Guernsey cattle, including 20 milch cows and a pure bred Guernsey sire. He is also a stockholder in the Hudson Road Creamery and since 1920 has been a member of the town board of supervisors. Mr. Rudiger was first married in Menomonie, on Oct. 12, 1894, to Barbara Simmer, who died June 12, 1904, leaving five children: Leopold, born Nov. 1, 1895, who married Tena Walseth and lives in the city of Menomonie; Peter, born March 23, 1898, now attending the Stout Institute; Helen, born Jan. 22, 1900, who is a telephone operator in Minneapolis; Arthur, born March 23,1902, who is working with his father; and Emil, born March 27, 1904, who died in April, 1905. Of Mr. Rudiger's second marriage in 1905, to Lena Hess, four children have been born: Mildred, Feb. 12, 1906; Harvey, June 11, 1909; Winnifred, June 10, 1911; and Elmer, June 19, 1920. The family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic congregation in Menomonie.

Jesse T. Rogers, who is well and favorably known in the town of Weston as a good practical and successful farmer, and who has served acceptably in public office, was born in West Virginia, Jan. 3, 1873, son of Morton and Virginia (McElfresh) Rogers. The parents were both born in West Virginia, when it was a part of the original state of Virginia, known as the "Old Dominion," the father on Dec. 12, 1844, and the mother on Aug. 15, 1851. They were reared to manhood and womanhood in the same state, that is to say, in that part of Virginia which became the new state of West Virginia in June, 1863, being admitted as a Union state, opposed to secession, in the very middle of the Civil War period. There also they were married and remained until 1877, in which year they moved to Missouri; but after staying there somewhat less than three years, they came in 1880 to Dunn County, Wisconsin and became farmers here. For the first five years they operated rented farms, and then in the fall of 1885 Morton Rogers bought a tract of 80 acres of partly improved land in Section 1, town of Weston, and began to im-In that task he spent 14 years and, having made a good farm out of it, prove it. he sold it in 1899 and retired, taking up his residence in Menomonie. His life was spared but a short time longer, however, as he died on Jan. 20, 1900. His wife survived him 20 years, passing away on March 4, 1920. Their family numbered nine children: Walter A., now a farmer in the town of Menomonie, this county; Nancy L., who married L. J. Stark and lives in New York; Jesse T., subject of this sketch; Minnie, who died at the age of 14 years; James L., who died in infancy; Hurley J., of New York; Waitman, who died in 1906; Charles, who died in 1908; and Alice, who died in 1920, thus leaving but four members of the family living. Jesse T. Rogers had some schooling in Missouri, but for the most part acquired his education in the towns of Lucas and Weston, Dunn County, Wis. He grew up on the home farm, on which he remained until 1904. In that year he bought 80 acres of land in Section 36, town of Lucas, and resided there for five years making improvements. Then in 1909 he sold it and bough 40 acres in Section 2 of the town of Weston, to which he added another 40 acres in 1913. It is on the latter place that he has since resided, and where he is carrying on general farming and dairying. His cattle are Guernseys, with a pure bred sire in the herd. Besides having broken a considerable portion of his farm, Mr. Rogers has rebuilt the house and barn and erected several out-buildings. He is a stockholder in the new Hudson Road Creamery, and has rendered six years' service as treasurer of the Palmer In 1901 he was married in Menomonie to Mollie Born, who was born school. July 13, 1876, in Menomonie, daughter of August and Lena (Lauber) Born. Her parents came to this country when young, settling in Menomonie after their marriage, where the mother died in April, 1914. The father, August Born, is now in Leeds, N. D. Their children were: Frank, who was drowned at the age of 14 years; John, who died in April, 1924; Mollie, who is Mrs. Jesse T. Rogers; and Herman, of Menomonie. To Mr. and Mrs. Rogers 11 children have been born, three of whom died in infancy. The others are as follows: Helen, June 3, 1902; Genevieve, July 21, 1904; Herman, March 4, 1906; Leroy, Jan. 2, 1909; Angeline, April 26, 1911; John, May 29, 1913; Frances May, Jan. 11, 1919; and Reuben, Nov. 1, 1921. Helen is now employed at the Dr. Butler home, and Genevieve is Mrs. Walter Hintzman of the town of Menomonie.

Halvor O. Kvool, a veteran railroad track man, for 40 years in the employ of the "Omaha" road, and section foreman at Knapp for the last 34, was born in Melhus, near Trondhjem, Norway, Feb. 23, 1858, son of Ole and Maret (Halvorson) Kvool. The father was a deep sea diver who died at Spisburgen, Norway, in 1883. In the following year his widow came to the United States, first locating at Roberts, St. Croix County, Wis., and later at Baldwin, in the same county. She died at the home of her son, Halvor O., in Knapp, on Aug. 24, 1903. Halvor O. Kvool, after attending public school in Norway, had subsequently learned the mason's trade, which he followed in his native land until 1882, which was the year of his emigration to this country. He arrived in Baldwin, Wis., on April 17 and during the next two years was employed in sawmills there. It was at the end of that period that he entered the employ of the Omaha railroad, becoming a member of the extra gang employed on light construction work. In 1885 he was made a section hand at Roberts and in the following year was promoted to the position of section foreman and was transferred to River Falls, Wis., where he remained two years. From there he went to Ellsworth, where he remained until Nov. 1, 1889, when he was transferred to Knapp, where he is now and has been ever since. For 19 years after first coming here he was sent out every summer to superintend the extra construction force, at the same time attending to his duties as foreman of the section. He belongs to a number of societies, being a member of the Omaha Railway Benefit Association, the All Railway Employees Association, the Veterans' Union, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Rebekahs, and the Modern Woodmen of America. Naturally he is a man of wide acquaintance, and it may be said that most of his acquaintances are also his friends. Mr. Kvool was married at Baldwin, Wis., Feb. 27, 1883, to Gertrude Larson, who was born in Norway Oct. 2, 1852, and who, after a married life of 29 years, died Feb. 1, 1912. Of this union was born six children: Oscar L., Aug. 12, 1885; Benny Michael, Sept. 16, 1886; Anna Marie, March 8, 1888; Herman Gustave, March 20, 1890; Olga Amanda, Nov. 10, 1895; and Alfred D., Sept. 10, 1898. Oscar L., who is now employed in the general offices of the Omaha road at St. Paul, married Marie Stockman and Benny Michael is a locomotive engineer on the Omaha road, has one child, Alta. living at Hudson. He married Eva Gunter, and is the father of three children, Donavan, Norman and Loretta. Anna Marie is the wife of Dr. L. B. Langen-derfer of St. Paul and has a son, Phillip. Herman Gustave, who is station agent at Humbird, Wis., married Alice Hessel and has had two children, Doris and Oral, of whom the latter is now deceased. Olga Amanda is the wife of Willis Mitchell of the town of Lucas, Dunn County, and the mother of three children, Robert, James and Anna. Alfred D., who is manager of the State Theatre in Minneapolis, married Lola Knapp. For several years after the death of his first wife, Mr. Kvool remained a widower, but on Nov. 10, 1915, he married Mrs. Lillian Ida Cole, whose own family name was Steadman, she having been born at Cedar Falls, Dunn County, June 21, 1861, daughter of Henry and Mary (Fletcher) Steadman. She was first married to Samuel W. Coates, a very early settler in Dunn County connected with the lumber interests, and who was well and favorably known, not only in Dunn County, but throughout the lumber section of the Northwest generally. Mr. Coates died June 11, 1895, after he had his wife had been the parents of five children, namely, Ray Warren, born March 23, 1881; Jesse Wilford, June 26, 1883; Mary Ethel, April 19, 1889 (died July 12, 1894); Glenn W., Sept. 16, 1891 (died Dec. 28, 1892); and Naomi A., Nov. 15, 1893. survivors, Ray Warren, is now state deputy probate commissioner and lives in Ashland, Wis. He married Mabel Harris and has five children, Crystal, Flossie, Raymond, Robert and Marjorie. Jesse Wilford, now residing in Hammond, Wis., is with the Heinrich Medical Co. He married Nettie Scott and their children are Elizabeth, Mildred and Myrtle (twins), Naomi and Ida. Naomi A. married Carleton Thompson of MacMasterville, Province of Quebec, Canada, where he is mine superintendent for the Dupont Company, manufacturers of nitro-glycerine and gelatine. She has three children, George, Jack and Naomi. On June 3, 1900, Mrs. Coates became the wife of George Cole, who died Oct. 10, 1902; and on Feb. 1, 1903, a son was born of this marriage, who is named George, and resides with his mother and step-father, Mr. Kvool. Mr. Kvool was reared a Lutheran and Mrs. Kvool a Methodist. The latter belongs to the Reberghs and Powel Naighter

The latter belongs to the Rebekahs and Royal Neighbors. Fred R. Ross, for the last 38 years a business man in the village of Rusk, and the present postmaster of this village, was born in Catteraugus County, New York, on April 24, 1854, son of Reuben and Emeline (Herrick) Ross. Both parents were natives of New York State, the father being a farmer and also owner of a string of 14 cheese factories, and as such, and for other reasons, he was a very prominent The mother of the subject of this sketch died in 1885. and influential citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Ross had three children: Fred R. of Rusk; Addis M., and Frank C., the two latter being deceased. Fred R. Ross was educated in the state of New York, and in time became overseer of his father's line of cheese factories, remaining thus occupied until 1880, when he came west to Wisconsin, stopping first at Milwaukee, then at Stevens Point, and then locating in Dunn County. But in the same year that he arrived here he was called back east on account of his father's death, and remained there until 1882, when he again came west, and, stopping in Dunn County, Wis., on his way, went on nearly to the Pacific coast. Then, returning to Wisconsin, he became buyer for the Hill & Kenzie line of elevators along the Omaha road, being thus occupied for two years, with headquarquarters at Roberts. In 1886 Mr. Ross came to Rusk as buyer for and manager of the firm's elevator here, and in the following year he bought the general store in the village, which he conducted in connection with his elevator business. He also bought 70 acres which adjoined the 240 acres owned by Mrs. Ross, making a total of 310 acres, on which they erected a complete set of fine buildings. This farm he has never worked himself but has rented out. He had charge of the elevator for 26 years. Later he sold a half interest in his store to A. B. Webert, after which for two years the business was conducted under the name of Ross and Webert. At the end of that time Mr. Ross sold his remaining interest to his partner. 20 years during his mercantile career he served the village as postmaster, and he is For now serving another term, having been appointed to the office by the late President Harding. When he got out of the store he resumed his former occupation of grain buyer and continued in it for two years. He was one of the organizers of the local creamery, served as its first treasurer, and since 1910 has been its secreary; in fact, ever since coming to Rusk, Mr. Ross has been a very active factor in promoting the prosperity of the village, and there have been few enterprises of importance started here that he has not been connected with, either directly or indirectly. He has also taken a helpful and prominent part in town and county affairs. For 19 years he was treasurer of the town of Red Cedar and for three years chairman of the town board and a member of the county board, and he is now serving as town treasurer, having been elected to that office three years ago. In short, it may be said that he is today one of the best known men in Dunn County, and on his personal record there is no stain. Mr. Ross was married March 8, 1887, to Mary J. Sherburne, who was born Feb. 12, 1860, daughter of Andrew M. and Caroline (Ross) Sherburne, who were pioneers of Dunn County. Mrs. Ross have had no children of their own, but have reared and educated three children of her brother, W. R. Sherburne, namely: Andrew M., who is now deceased; Vernon K., who lives in Grantsburg, Wis.; and Lois, who is now Mrs.M. H. Underwood of Minneapolis.

Andrew Miller Sherburne, a pioneer of Dunn County, was born in the state of Maine, Aug. 1, 1817, son of Andrew and Betsy (Miller) Sherburne. The father. who at the age of 14 years had enlisted for service in the War of 1812, later in life became a Baptist minister and so remained for the rest of his life. Andrew Miller Sherburne was reared in Oneida County, New York, and afterwards moved to Catteraugus County, that state, where he married Caroline Ross, who was born in Broome County, New York, in 1920. In 1846 they moved to Dane County, Wisconsin, and engaged in farming. In 1852 they moved to Burnham Valley, La Crosse County, but afterwards returned to Dane County. In October, 1855, they came to Dunn County, Mr. Sherburne pre-empting a quarter section of land on Section 9, town of Red Cedar. To this he soon added and he kept on accumulating land until he was the owner of 1500 acres all in one body, the tract becoming known locally as "Sherburne's Prairie." He also bought land in other parts of Dunn County and some in Buffalo County, and before many years he had become one of the wealthiest farmers in this region. He was scarcely past middle life when he died on May 29, 1875, leaving his wife and five children, the latter being Caroline M., Sayles Andrew, Adelbert C., Willshire and Mary Jane. Mrs. Caroline Sherburne, the wife and mother, died on Aug. 1, 1899.

John T. Kingsley, a well known farmer in the town of Weston, who has resided on his present farm in Section 30 for the last 43 years, was born in New York State, Nov. 30, 1849, son of John and Elizabeth (Willie) Kingsley. John Kingsley dying in 1850, his widow subsequently married Lafayette Lamson, with whom she came to Wisconsin in 1856. They settled in Columbia County, where they remained until 1869, when they came to Dunn County, and here they spent the remainder of their lives. John T. Kingsley, who accompanied his mother and step-father to Columbia County, Wisconsin, completed his school studies there and subsequently came with them to Menomonie, Dunn County, where for four years he was in the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co. Then going to Wilson, St. Croix County, he helped to build the first sawmill there and resided there for a while. Later he spent some time in Roberts, Wis., then operated rented farms at Forest Center. About 1881 he came to the town of Weston, where he bought 40 acres of wild land in Section 30, which is the farm on which he has lived so many years. He has cleared 30 acres of the land and erected a complete set of buildings. Mr. Kingsley was married in Eau Claire, Wis., May 18, 1874, to Mary J. Mitchell, who was born in New York State, Aug. 12, 1850, daughter of Charles H. and Clarice A. (Dunn) Mitchell. Three children are the issue of this marriage, Minnie, Myrtle and Leonard. Minnie, who married Elsworth Washburn, resides in the town of Eau Galle and has three children, Delcena, Alva and Myron. Myrtle is now Mrs. Hiram Pickering of the town of Eau Galle and has five children, Leo, Archie, Stanley, John and Dorothy. Leonard, who assists his father on the home farm, is also town clerk of Weston and clerk of School District No. 2. He married Grace Washburn and he and his wife are the parents of five children, Frances, Rayola, Lynn, Irma and Betty.

Edwin R. Buffington, who has been engaged in farming and dairying in the town of Colfax for the last 27 years and is one of the best known citizens of that town, was born in Eau Claire, Wis., Jan. 3, 1875, son of Edwin and Nancy (Crockett) Buffington. The father was a native of Catteraugus County, N. Y., born in 1840, and of English ancestry, while the mother was a native of the state of Maine. They came to Eau Claire, Wis., when it was a small lumber town, with only a few buildings on Water Street, and when there was a ferry for crossing the river. There they went into the hotel business, conducting the old Monongahela House, and Edwin Buffington also running a livery stable at the corner of Water Street and Second Avenue, and in addition to that a saw mill and lumber business. Both lived to a good old age, Mr. Buffington dying in Eau Claire Feb. 5, 1907, and Mrs. Buffington on May 11, 1911. They had three children, Mabel E., George Alvin and Edwin R. Mabel E., who married Frank J. Hones, is now deceased. Edwin R. Buffington was reared and educated in the city of Eau Claire, where he subsequently learned the printer's trade and worked on the Eau Claire Leader. In 1897 he left Eau Claire and came to Dunn County with the intention of opening a print shop, but instead of doing so he changed his mind and engaged in agriculture on the F. J. Hones farm, which he conducted on shares. There he remained until 1910, in which year he bought an 80-acre farm in Section 10, town of Colfax, which place was improved but had an old barn and house. Mr. Buffington continued the improvements, cutting timber, clearing away brush, and remodeling the house. In 1922 he built a good modern barn of 36×60 feet and installed the James equipment, with running water. He has also put a water system into the house and has built a corn crib, tobacco shed and machine shed. He has now 75 acres under the plow and does general farming, raising potatoes as well as tobacco, and keeping 24 head of grade cattle with a pure bred sire. Mr. Buffington was married at Elk Mound, this county, on Dec. 16, 1903, to Mary Jacobson, daughter of Jacob and Carrie Jacobson. Her parents were natives of Norway who came to this country in 1886, settling in Eau Claire, where Mr. Jacobson got work as a In the Jacobson family there were seven children, one of whom, filer in the mills. Those living are Carrol, Ann, Sam, Sema, Bert and Gertrude, is now deceased. Sena is the wife of Ellis Huntsinger or Eau Claire. Sam was a soldier in Marv. the great World War, enlisting for service in 1917 in the heavy artillery. He took part in some of the hardest fighting, including that in the Argonne and at Chateau Thierry, returning home after the armistice and receiving his discharge in the spring of 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Buffington have one son, Earl, who is now helping on the farm.

Adolph C. Anderson, who for some years has been engaged in general farming and dairving in Section 32, town of Otter Creek, was born in South Dakota in 1883, son of Andrew and Mattie Anderson. The parents were natives of Norway, in which country the father did farm labor. They came to the United States about 1877, first locating in Minnesota, where they remained for a short time, and moving from there to South Dakota. Taking a homestead of 160 acres, Mr. Anderson erected buildings, broke the land, and farmed there until 1892. He then moved to Monroe County, Wis., where he bought 200 acres on Fish Creek Ridge, a property partly improved. Having remodeled the buildings and erected new ones, he farmed there until about 1910. In 1904 his wife Mattie died and he subsequently remarried and went to Saskatchewan, Canada, where he is now living. He and his first wife had eight children: Mary, George, Martin, Carrie, Anna, Sarah, Melvin and Adolph, all of whom are living. Sarah, who is married and lives in Saskatchewan, as also does Martin and George; Anna is the wife of Otto Gilbertson of Monroe County, Wis.; Carrie is the wife of Mack Halverson of La Crosse, and Mary is the wife of Melvin Dahl of La Crosse. Adolph C. Anderson, who accompanied his parents to La Crosse and Monroe counties attended local schools and worked on the home farm until 20 years old. After that he began working out, and in 1906 was married in Monroe County to Elsie Jenson, daughter of Gullick and Sarah Jenson, her parents being natives of Norway who are living at Portland, Monroe County. About the time of his marriage Mr. Anderson went to Cashton, that county, where he worked a short time on the section for the C., M. & St. P. Railway. His next move was to Portland, Wis., where he lived for two years, then going to Barron County, where he bought 40 acres of land in the town of Barron, which later he sold, in 1914 moving to Dunn County. Here he bought 80 acres in Section 32, town of Otter Creek, to which he later added 80 more. This was all wild land without any buildings on it. Mr. Anderson erected a good frame house and a barn $34 \ge 60$ feet with full basement. He has kept up his improvements and now has 80 acres under the plow. He does general farming and dairying, his herd at present numbering 24 grade Holstein cattle. He also raises tobacco. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of five children: Gladys, Lila, Mabel, Pearl and Ernest. Gladys married Carl Bronson and they reside on a farm in Monroe County, Wisconsin.

Ole Peterson, a resident of the village of Wheeler, of which he is the present clerk, and who has had an active career of many years as lumberjack, merchant and farmer, but is now retired, was born in Trondhjem, Norway, Dec. 23, 1855, son of Peter and Isabel Peterson. The mother died in Norway in 1870, and in 1882 Peter Peterson came to America, two years after his son Ole, and located in Menomonie, where he worked a short time for the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company. He then went to Pierce County, and died at Brookville in 1886. Ole Peterson as a boy attended school in his native land and there learned the harness maker's In 1880 he came to this country, locating in Menomonie and entering the trade. employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company and working for them subsequently in the woods and mills and also in their harness shop. That service came to an end in 1889 when Mr. Peterson went to work in the general store of Erick Fonus at North Menomonie, where he was employed until 1894. In June of the latter year he gave up the mercantile avocation to engage in farming, buying a farm of 120 acres in the town of Sherman, the size of which he later increased by the purchase of 40 acres more, thus making a farm of 160 acres. He cleared and improved the land, put up a new set of buildings and followed general farming and dairying there until the fall of 1909, when he moved to Wheeler. Here he bought a dwelling and for four years conducted a general store. He then traded the store for a farm of 160 acres in the town of Hay River, which four months later he exchanged for his present residence property in Wheeler, also getting 40 acres of land on the Later he acquired another tract, of 80 acres, which he traded for a fine deal. brick residence on the Stout Road in the city of Menomonie, and which he still owns. He has rendered good service on the school board and in 1915 became town clerk, in which position he served until 1922, when the village of Wheeler was incorporated. He then became village clerk and has since continued to perform the duties of that office. Thus it is seen that for over 40 years Mr. Peterson has been an active factor in the development of Dunn County, either as an industrial worker, business man, farmer, or public official, and his reliability in every situation is well known to his fellow citizens. He was married in Norway, Dec. 26, 1877, to Emma Josephine Groseth, who was born in Trondhjem, that country, Jan. 15, 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have had ten children, as follows: Inga, deceased; Arnold, deceased; Carl, now in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Anton, of Poplar, Mont., where he is following the carpenter's trade; Inga (second), now Mrs. Edward Tischman of Eau Claire; Alice, wife of Harry Wilson of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Regna, who also lives in Cedar Rapids and is the wife of Hans Hanson; Rosa, deceased; Oscar, a farmer in the town of Sand Creek, Dunn County, Wis., who married Borghild Downs, and Clarence of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who married Claudie Wilson. In addition to their own children, above enumerated, Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have reared a grandson, Richard Sholden, who is the son of their deceased They are sincere and consistent members of the Lutheran Church. daughter Rosa.

Arthur O. Quilling, county clerk of Dunn County, was born in the town of Red Cedar, Dunn County, Feb. 19, 1881, son of Otto and Augusta (Miller) Quill-The father, Otto Quilling, was also a native of Dunn County, having been ing born in the town of Spring Brook. He remained at home until 18 years of age, at which time his father deeded to him an 80-acre tract in the town of Red Cedar. Moving an old log cabin onto his land, he took up his residence there and began to make improvements. After a year he married and he and his wife resided on that farm until about 1890, when they moved to Menomonie and for two years thereafter were residents of the city. At the end of that time Otto Quilling sold his farm and bought what is now known as the Crescent Hill farm in the town of Red Cedar, where he subsequently made his home until his death on Aug. 19, 1896. He had built up a good farm which his wife and sons operated thereafter until Mrs. Quilling's death, Oct. 27, 1922. It is now being conducted by the youngest son, Raymond R. Arthur O. Quilling attended the public schools until reaching the age of nine years. He then had the misfortune to step on a nail, which caused blood poisoning from the effects of which he has been a cripple ever since. He spent three years in bed and then had to spend three more in a wheel chair before he was able to walk again, and he has never fully recovered his full powers of locomotion as he has ever since been obliged to use a crutch. As he was unable after his accident to attend school, he studied at home, and also helped his mother in her household duties, washing dishes, sewing, mending, and doing similar work usually performed by the girls in a family. When he had recovered sufficiently to get about a little, he studied drawing and decorative painting but the painting caused lead poisoning and he had to give it up. He then took up clerical work, and in 1920 was elected to his present office as county clerk, the duties of which he began Jan. 1, 1921. In November, 1923, he was elected to his second term, poling the largest vote of any county officer on the ticket, and in November, 1924, was again reelected with the same result. He has proved himself thoroughly efficient and is highly esteemed among a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He makes his home with his brother Raymond on the old home farm, driving to and from his office daily when the roads permit. His fraternal society affiliations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the

Ralph Ryder, an early settler in the town of Dunn, where he started a good farm, now being operated by his son, George John, was born in England, where he grew up and married Mary Shepardson. In 1844 he came alone to the United States, being joined by his wife and five children in New York in the following They settled in the town of Marcey, Oneida County, N. Y., where they remained until 1861, in which year they came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, locating in the town of Dunn and engaging in agriculture. For three years Mr. Ryder operated rented farms; then he bought 40 acres of government land in Section 30 and took a railroad claim of 80 acres adjoining. This was all wild land and there were no buildings, but it had one advantage in that the land was mostly open and not encumbered with timber, so that much labor was thereby saved. Mr. Ryder built a frame house and log barns and began the work of improvement. greatest handicap of the family at first was the lack of domestic water, which had to be hauled a distance of three miles until Mr. Ryder dug a 90-foot well. In May, 1871, Mrs. Mary Ryder died and 17 years later, in May, 1888, Ralph Ryder himself passed away after an active career as a farmer in the town of Dunn of some 27 years. They were the parents of ten children, namely: Jane, Ann, Eunice, Charlotte, Eliza, Ralph, Mary, Alice, Martha and George John. All of them except the last mentioned are now deceased, and it is curious to note that they died either quite young or in comparatively early life, none of them reaching the age of 40 years. George John, now 75 years old, is the owner of the parental farm and homestead.

George John Ryder, who owns and operates the old Ryder farm in Section 31, town of Dunn, which was started by his parents 60 years ago, was born in Oneida County, New York, Aug. 14, 1849, son of Ralph and Mary (Shepardson) Ryder. His parents, immigrants from England, had then been in this country but three or four years. They remained in Oneida County until 1861, when they came with their family to Dunn County, Wisconsin, locating in the town of Dunn, where three years later, after operating rented farms, they settled on the land in Section 31 that constitutes the present farm of their son, George John. Of this farm he became the active manager when 19 years old, and in 1878, ten years before his father's death, he took it over as his own property, paying the railroad claim after it came on the market. He has made many improvements on the place, having replaced the old log barns with good frame structures in modern style and of ample size, and in 1900 he built the neat residence that he now occupies. He has for the most part followed general farming, in the early years giving his chief attention to grain raising, but later to dairying, which is now his principal occupation. A a resident of the town of Dunn for 63 years, Mr. Ryder has good claims to be regarded as a pioneer, and he has a very wide acquaintance and is esteemed by all who know him. He is a stockholder in the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville, and he formerly served two years as a member of the town board. Mr. Ryder has been twice married, first on July 4, 1874, to Clara Billings of the town of Eau Galle, who died 34 years later on Nov. 8, 1908. She left two children Claude and Jesse. Claude, born April 26, 1875, and who is a farmer in Eau Claire County, married first Edith Barden, who died leaving one child, Blanche. He then married Rena Potter, of which union there is one son, George. Jesse, the other son by Mr. Ryder's first marriage, was born Sept. 10, 1883, and is now a farmer in the town of Dunn, having a 160-acre farm which adjoins his father's. He married Catherine Cosgrove of the town of Dunn and has five children, Marion, Lawrence, Stephen, Ralph and Margaret Rosa. On Sept. 1 1914, George John Ryder married secondly Florence Copeland, who was born in Dover, Vt., Oct. 1, 1865, daughter of Leland and Nellie (Pease) Copeland. She accompanied her parents from the state of her birth to Columbia County, Wisconsin, and from there in May, 1870, to Dunn County, the family settling in the village of Eau Galle, where Mr. Copeland became assistant millwright in the Carson-Rand mills, being thus occupied for eight years. He then took up farming near the village and was thus engaged for ten years, death putting an end to his labors in 1888. His wife, who survived him, remained on the farm until 1908, after which until 1924 she resided with her children. She is now living in Durand, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Leland Copeland had four children, Florence, May, Lula and Ernest. Florence, now Mrs. George J. Ryder, as a girl acquired a good education, and for a number of years was a teacher, for ten years in the school in Menomonie. May is now Mrs. Fred Blair of the town cf Eau Galle; Lula, who married D. J. Eyer, lives in Minnesota. Ernest is a Presbyterian minister now stationed at Lethbridge, Canada.

Osmond Cockeram, a notable pioneer of Dunn County whose life story is well worthy of record in the county's annals, was a native of England, where he was reared to manhood and in due time married Ann Rick. It was in 1851 that they emigrated to the United States, and for five years after arriving in this country they resided in Brooklyn, N. Y. At the end of that time they came west to Waukesha County, Wisconsin, where also they remained for five years, their next removal being to Dunn County, in 1861. During the ten years they had resided in this country they had accumulated so little earthly wealth that when they arrived at Menomonie, after a three weeks' journey in a wagon drawn by oxen, Mr. Cockeram had but 40 cents in his pocket, and this he was obliged to give to the ferryman to take them across the river, landing on the opposite bank without a penny. What they did in this emergency-whether Mr. Cockeram found some good angel from whom to effect a loan, or whether he stayed awhile in Menomonie and worked until he had earned a few dollars-has not been told the present writer; but it seems that they did not remain there long but soon took the trail west of town now known as the "Old Hudson Road," and followed it until they arrived in what is now the town of Lucas, and in Section 13 of that town, where it seems Mr. Cockeram had bought 40 acres of wild land from the Fox River company. On arriving at the selected spot he set about the task of building some sort of a dwelling, the family in the meanwhile making their home in the wagon. Of whatever funds he had been able to procure at Menomonie he had but $7 left, but once more he was equal to the emergency, and by means which only an old pioneer would understand, he succeeded in making a successful start. A log house was the first dwelling he erected and after that he put up other buildings as fast as he could, and cleared and broke his land, of which he acquired more as time went on until he had $400 acres, all in the town of Lucas. In time, also, a fine set of frame buildings replaced the original log structures, and he became known throughout the western part of the county as a man of substance, not only active in advancing his own personal interests, but also a leader in affairs that concerned the general community. He was one of the men who had the town of Lucas set off and it was he who suggested He was clerk and treasurer of it for many years, he helped in the work its name. of road construction-always an important thing in a pioneer settlement-and when new settlers arrived he aided them to make a start. In short, during his active period, there was little of public nature going on in the town of Lucas in which he was not concerned directly or indirectly, and his help and influence were always sure to advance the enterprise. Blessed with a strong constitution, he enjoyed a long life and was able to continue his activities until a short time before his death, which took place on Jan. 8, 1917, when he was 86 years old. His wife died Aug. 7, 1919. Both were laid to their final rest in Evergreen cemetery, in Menonomie. They had been the parents of ten children, namely: Herbert, who was killed by accident in Waukesha County; Ralph, now deceased; Henrietta, who is Mrs. John Sherwood of Menomonie; Hannah, deceased; Osmond, Jr., of the town of Lucas; Theresa, now Mrs. Charles Stewart of the town of Lucas; Alfred, also of this town; Fanny, who is Mrs. Wesley Vasey of Menomonie; and Emily and Arthur, who are deceased.

Osmond Cockeram, Jr., a well known farmer and stock raiser in the town of Lucas, was born in this town Jan. 26, 1862, son of Osmond and Ann (Rick) Cockeram, the story of whose life as pioneers of this region has already been narrated. As a boy he attended the old Simon school, and when older assisted his father, remaining with his parents until he was 33 years old. Since that time he has resided on and operated his present farm, which was deeded to him by his father. He has put 29 years of hard work into it, and has good results to show, both with respect to land cultivation and buildings. His barn, which measures 40 x 106 feet, is installed with the Mitchell barn equipment, supplied with running water and illuminated by electric light, the latter conditions applying also to the house. His other buildings are all substantial and adequate, his fences in good condition, and the farm as a whole ranks well up with the good modern farms in this part of the For many years Mr. Cockeram was a breeder of Shorthorn cattle, but county. in 1923 changed to Guernseys and now keeps a pure blooded sire of that breed at the head of his herd. He was first married Dec. 19, 1895, to Edith Olson, who died Dec. 24, 1909, after having been the mother of four children, two of whom died in infancy. Of the other two, Wesley died of the "flu" in 1918, and Willis is living on the home farm with his father. On April 12, 1911, Mr. Cockeram was married to Molesia Drew of Durand, who died May 16, 1920, leaving four children, Willard, Herbert, Harry and Nellie.

Dick Crosby, proprietor and operator of the old Crosby farm in Section 21, town of Sherman, was born on this farm Oct. 28, 1895, son of Joshua and Luella A. (Newell) Crosby. The farher, a native of Illinois, born in 1837, came to Dunn County in 1861, in the same year pre-empting the 160 acres now, with buildings, constituting the Crosby farm. He died in 1915 after having been twice married (see separate biography). Dick Crosby acquired his education in the rural school and remained with his parents, caring for his mother after the father's death and becoming owner of the property in November, 1924. He is engaged in general farming and dairying, having a herd of grade Holstein cattle. The farm contains 100 acres, of which about 60 are under the plow. On April 29, 1918, Mr. Crosby was drafted for the World War service and sent to the camp at Eagle Pass, Texas, for training. He was a member of Co. L, Third U. S. Infantry, and was not sent overseas, but was discharged at Eagle Pass Sept. 13, 1919. Mr. Crosby's brother Oris, who resides on the farm with him, was drafted July 23, 1918, and trained with Company 29 at Camp Olgethorp, Chickamauga, Ga. He went overseas Sept. 26, 1918, and in France was assigned to base hospital No. 41, A. P. O. 702, where he served until April 13, 1919, when he sailed for home landing at Newport News April 25, 1919. After his return to this country he was discharged at Camp Grant, May 13, 1919.

Henry Schoeder, now living retired in the village of Elmwood, Pierce County, who has a record of 28 years devoted to farm development in the town of Eau Galle, Dunn County, was born in Antwerp, Belgium, May 18, 1847, son of Dominick and Margaret (Scholer) Schoeder. When he was less than two years old his mother died, and his father later took another wife, whose maiden name was Mary Schuler. In 1856, when Henry was only nine years old he was brought to the United States by his father and step-mother, who settled in Sheboygan County, Wisconsin. He resided with them until his marriage on May 31, 1874, to Catherine Bartol, who was born in Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, Dec. 12, 1848. He then began farming for himself at Random Lake, Sheboygan County, where he remained until 1884, in which year he came to Dunn County. Here he bought 160 acres of land in Section 7, town of Eau Galle, situated on the elevation known as Morton Hill. About 130 acres of it was covered with heavy virgin timber; the other 30 acres had been logged by an earlier settler, who had taken the land as a homestead, and on it stood a small log house and some log barns in the midst of a small clearing. He and his wife having taken up their abode in the house, he began to log the standing timber, much of which he burned as there was no ready market for it. Then came the grubbing out of the stumps and the breaking of the soil, all hard work, which kept him busy from dawn to dark and sent him indoors at night tired in every muscle and ready for bed, his only immediate reward being the pride of achievement and seeing every day a little more open space and a little less forest than there had been on the day before. Perhaps also, a vision of the future presented itself to his eyes in the shape of a fruitful farm with neat, commodious buildings, fields of waving grain, and green pastures wherein roamed herds of sleek cattle, all his own and his wife's property. Such visions were well calculated to strengthen his muscles and harden his powers of endurance; and so he cut and chopped, and cleared and plowed, and sowed and reaped, and erected new buildings from time to time, when patching and repairs would no longer serve to render the old ones adequate to his purpose, and at the same time he grew in the estimation of his fellow townsmen, who saw in him a man after their own hearts, themselves familiar with the work, and, too, busily engaged in it. An old proverb savs, "Everything comes to him who waits," but man must work as well as wait, and Mr. Schoeder knew how to do both; and he got results, realizing his most cherished ambitions. At his behest, and under the work of his hands, the fields vielded in bountiful crops the riches that were in the soil; his stock increased like, of old time, the cattle of Jacob in the land of Canaan; and substantial buildings of modern construction, and with all necessary conveniences, replaced the discarded log sheds of the early days. All this can one see who passes the farm today; and not only this but more, for, side by side with the evidences of utility are the signs of an artistic taste and love of the beautiful in the well-kept lawns, ornamented with shrubbery and flowers that frame in the house and give to it much of its appearance of domestic comfort and joy. Doubtless some credit for this is due to Mrs. Schoeder, for to woman usually comes first the craving for refinement and beauty, those ultimate resources of civilization, that soften the asperities of life, and differentiate man from the lower animals, many of whom, indeed, like the beaver, can build homes, but none of whom ever go beyond the bounds of utility and think of making them beautiful. But not only did Mrs. Schoeder contribute her part in this direction, but she also did much hard work in the care of the household and in bringing up her children in the right way. She and her husband resided on the farm until April 1, 1912, when they rented it out and retired from active work to live in the village of Elmwood. Doubtless it was hard to leave the old place, where they had passed so many happy years, but their work there was done and future improvements must be left to younger and stronger hands. After all, it is doubtful if any future owner will derive as much pleasure and inward satisfaction from the operation of this highly developed farm as Mr. and Mrs. Schoeder did in building it up from its wild state to what it is today. Mr. and Mrs. Schoeder have had in all seven children, five sons and two daughters. They have suffered two bereavements, but only one child died in infancy. The others all proved useful to their parents and some credit must be given them for the aid they rendered in building up the old home. The first child was a son, Nicklaus, born Aug. 9, 1875, who was prematurely cut off from life at the age of 23 years. Margaret C., the second child, was born April 17, 1877, and is now Mrs. James Mulhollam of Elmwood, her husband being station agent of the village. They have one child, Juanita, born Feb. 4, 1918. John, the third child, was the one who died in infancy. The fourth was also named John. He was born Oct. 28, 1880, and is now living in Los Angeles, Calif. The next, Anna, born Feb. 22, 1884, is the wife of Harcourt Weaver, a prominent farmer of Waukesha County, Wisconsin. Henry, born March 6, 1886, is now proprietor of a ranch at Desart, Adams County, N. D. He married Evelyn Murphy and they have two children, Luverne and Floyd. William, the seventh and youngest child, born June 21, 1887, is now manager of a lumber yard at Brodus, Mont. He married

MR. AND MRS. FREDERICK ROTH

Gladys Clark of Miles City, Mont. During his active career on the farm, or for a part of the time. Mr. Schoeder rendered public service as road commissioner and as a member of the school board of his district, and he and his family were often engaged in social activities. When they left the old place to come to their present home they were followed by the good wishes of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Henry W. Roth, a respected farmer of Secion 16, town of Dunn, who owns and operates in partnership with his sister the original farm of their parents, was born on this farm Feb. 7, 1885, son of Frederick and Marguerite (Michael) Roth. Tt. was in the previous year, 1884, that the family had settled here on their arrival from Switzerland. When Henry W. was old enough he attended District School No. 4 and later he acquired a practical knowledge of agriculture while helping his In 1911 he took over the entire management of the farm and conducted father. it for his mother until April 8, 1917, when she died. He and his sister Margaret then became the owners of the property and have remained so up to the present Margaret presides over the household and is a very competent housekeeper. time. They have a nice-looking and well-kept residence, the other buildings also being good, while Henry W. carries on diversified farming, giving considerable attention to dairving. They are stockholders in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and in the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Downsville, and are members of St. Iacob's Lutheran Church at Downsville, of which Henry is one of the trustees. The Roth family through its various members has done much to advance the agricultural interests of the town of Dunn and, in addition, occupies a high social standing.

Even Thompson, an early settler in the town of Grant, where he developed a farm, but who is now deceased, was a native of Norway, where he was educated, grew to manhood and married Ingeborg Gjeimundson. In 1861 he came with his family to America, landing at Quebec, Canada, and thence coming west to Houston County, Minnesota, where for two years he remained, being engaged in ordinary labor. In 1863 he came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, where he had relatives, and the same year took a homestead of 160 acres in the town of Grant, near the Red The family occupied a log dwelling and Mr. Thompson, having Cedar River. practically no cash capital, had to work out for others in order to support his family, being employed by Captain Moore, who operated a large farm in the town of Taintor. It was some years before Mr. Thompson was able to make an effective start in clearing and developing his own land, but finally he was able to do so and in time he made a good farm out of it, and was known and respected as an industrious and worthy citizen. He died Aug. 16, 1906, and his wife Ingeborg Dec. They were the parents of five children, namely: Gjermund, who died 24, 1882. at the age of 24 years; Thore, wife of Tollef Thompson, a farmer near Ridgeland; T. E., subject of this sketch; Marie, now Mrs. O. H. Strand of the town of Grant, Dunn County; and Gunnil, wife of Ole Peterson, operating the old Thompson farm in the town of Grant.

T. E. Thompson, owner and manager of the Colfax Telephone Exchange and a representative of one of the pioneer families of Dunn County, was born in Houston County, Minnesota, July 12, 1862, son of Even and Ingeborg (Gjeimundson) He was a very young infant when he accompanied his parents to Thompson. Dunn County, Wisconsin, and his childhood was spent on their farm in the town of Grant, where he attended district school. When he was 16 years old his brother Gjermun died, which obliged him to relinquish his studies for a while in order to assist his father on the farm. His education was, however, not yet completed, and in 1887 and 1888 he was a student in Gale College at Galesville, Wis. In the fall of 1888 he went to North Dakota to work in the harvest fields and with threshing crews, after which he taught school for nine months in Griggs County, North Dakota. He then returned home for a visit, in 1891 going to Minneapolis, where for one term he attended the Curtiss College. Then returning again to Dunn County, he worked for six months as clerk in a store in Colfax, and after that operated his father's farm for two years. In the spring of 1894 Mr. Thompson entered into business a partnership with Christ Solid and they established a meat market and grocery in Colfax, the location of their store being that of the present Root & Hovland market. After conducting business for nearly two years, Mr. Solid sold his interest to W. C. Flitcroft, who, thereupon became Mr. Thompson's partner, and the store was operated until 1904 under the style of Flitcroft & Thomp-In the previous year, however, a consolidation had been effected by three son. firms, those of Flitcroft & Thompson, J. D. Burns and the Kinney Mercantile Co., who took the name of the Colfax Store and erected a building into which they moved on Jan. 1, 1904, the consolidated business being carried on successfully Mr. Thompson remained in the concern until Jan. 1, 1908, when he exthere. changed his interest in the company for a feed mill-the mill now owned by Carl Larson—and the electric power plant, both of which he operated until 1909, when he sold out. In the fall of 1908 he went to Whitehall, Wis., where he bought a feed and flour mill which he operated for one year and then sold. In 1910 he returned to Colfax and in partnership with J. D. Burns bought the Pioneer elevator, which they operated for a year. Then on Jan. 1, 1911, Mr. Thompson purchased the Colfax Telephone Exchange, which then included 200 phones. Since then he has given practically all his time to the building up and improvement of the telephone system, and it now includes 475 phones. In 1917 he erected the telephone building, which in 1919 he traded in on a farm—the old Peder Anderson homestead, known as the Oldsborg farm in the town of Colfax. In 1921 he bought the Highlands farm, a 260-acre tract adjoining the other, provided with good buildings and installed with modern machinery, and the two farms have been since operated under his management. Since 1920 he has been vice president of the Peoples State Bank of Colfax. It will thus be seen that Mr. Thompson's business interests are sufficiently comprehensive to keep him busy, but in addition to them he has also at various times rendered efficient public service as a member of the school board, a trustee of the village board, and as a member of the building committee during the construction of the Colfax Community hall. At the time the city waterworks were installed he was serving as a director of the village. He also was mayor of the village in 1920, 1921 and 1923. Mr. Thompson was married Oct. 22, 1892, in Eau Claire, Wis., to Minnie Isakson, who was born in the town of Grant, Dunn County, May 27, 1869, daughter of Martin and Sophie (Peterson) Isakson. Her mother is now deceased but her father is living and resides with her and Mr. Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of nine children, as follows: Elmer I., born July 22, 1893, who works for his father, and who married Agnes Thompson and has one child Paul; Matilda, born May 19, 1895, an operator in the telephone office; G. Harvey, born March 14, 1897, who married Ruth Swan and is cashier of the Cable State Bank of Cable, Wis.; J. Morris, born Feb. 23, 1900, now working for his father, and who married Rose Borgen and has one child, Earl; Emilia H., born Nov. 23, 1898, who is a graduate of Stevens Point Normal School and is now teaching in the town of Grant; Harold E., born Aug. 22, 1903, who was a student for two years at St. Olaf College at Northfield, Minn., but is now at home; Ruth, born Oct. 18, 1901, a graduate of Stevens Point Normal School now teaching in the high school at Hawkins, Wis.; Theodore Marcel, born Aug. 18, 1906, a pupil in the Colfax High School; and Rolph, born June 17, 1912. who is attending public school. Mr. Thompson and his family are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church in Colfax and occupy a high social position.

Martin Roth, proprietor of Round Hill Farm in Section 9, town of Dunn, was born in Canton Bern, Switzerland, Aug. 15, 1876, son of Frederick and Marguerite (Michael) Roth. For a short time in early boyhood he attended school in his native land, and then in 1884 accompanied his parents to the United States. Coming directly to Dunn County, Wisconsin, they took land in Section 16, town of Dunn, where Martin completed his schooling, in the district school nearest to their farm. For many years he remained on the home place, helping his father, and later taking over the management and operation of the farm. In 1911, at the age of 35, he moved on to his present farm, then consisting of 200 acres and forming a part of certain tracts that had been purchased some years before by himself and

To this brother 40 acres of it later reverted, leaving him with his brother John. the 160 acres that he owns at present, all of it being valuable land. When it came into his possession it was partly improved, there being a good residence on it and some out-buildings, and in 1912 Mr. Roth erected a fine basement barn of 36 x 64 feet. He has also considerably improved his out-buildings by reconstructing them or otherwise, and has 75 acres of his land under cultivation. He follows diversified farming, giving special attention to dairying, and has a herd of high grade Holsteins with a pure bred sire. His operations have been conducted successfully and he takes rank among the leading farmers of his town. In addition to his agricultural activities, Mr. Roth helped to organize the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Downsville, in which he is a stockholder, and he is also a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and the Eau Galle Telephone Company. Mr. Roth was married June 20, 1911, to Emma Stalder, who was born in Switzerland, June 8, 1888, and came to America in 1910. He and his wife have been the parents of five children, the first of whom, Hilda Marie, born April 20, 1912, died in infancy The others, all living, were born as follows: Vivian Margaret, on June 22, 1912. Aug. 29, 1914; Virginia May, Oct. 24, 1916; Mabel Elizabeth, Jan. 8, 1919, and Irene Emma, Dec. 12, 1921. The family are members of St. Jacob's Lutheran Church at Downsville.

Mrs. Anna Elsie Madsen, who for nine years successfully operated a farm in the town of Weston, making an excellent record, was born in Denmark, Oct. 4, 1858. daughter of Jens and Christina (Peterson) Christiansen. The parents, natives of Denmark, are both deceased. Their daughter, Anna Elsie, was reared and educated in her native land, where she remained until 1885. She then came to the United States, landing at New York and proceeding west to Dunn County, Wisconsin, after her arrival making her home with the Hans Larsen family in the town of Dunn. On March 23, 1887, she was united in marriage with Soren Madsen and they settled on land in Section 20, town of Weston, where they built up a good farm, with a fine residence, excellent barn and numerous out-buildings. This farm was managed from 1913 to 1922 by Mrs. Madsen, and very successfully, she then rented it to her son-in-law, Einer Steinmeyer. There is a fine herd of Guernsey cattle on the Mrs. Madsen is the mother of six children, namely: Jesse, who died while farm. in the United States' service in the war with Germany; Clara, residing in Minneapolis; Matilda, now Mrs. George Smith of Irving Creek, Dunn County; Jensina, who is Mrs. Einer Steinmeyer; Jens, of Minneapolis, and Anna D., now Mrs. Soren Gormanson of St. Paul.

Einer Steinmeyer, a prominent young farmer in the town of Weston, engaged in general farming and dairying, was born in the town of Dunn, Dunn County, Wis., April 2, 1893, son of Henry R. and Anna (Nelson) Steinmeyer. The father was born Sept. 24, 1867, in Veile, Denmark, son of Nels and Cena (Johnson) Steinmeyer, the latter both natives of Denmark and both now deceased. Henry R. Steinmeyer, father of Einer, was reared and educated in Denmark and after leaving school was employed for some years as a farm laborer; but, seeking better opportunities for self advancement, in 1887 he came to the United States, landing at New York on April 3, and proceeding directly west to Dunn County, Wisconsin. During the next two years he was employed by John Kittleson on his farm on Little Elk Creek in the town of Menomonie. In 1889 he purchased 40 acres of wild land in Section 28, town of Dunn. This he sold two years later, when he bought 80 acres in Section 20, town of Weston, the farm that is now the property of Holm Jenson. This he sold nine years later. In 1909 he came to his present farm in Section 29, town of Weston, where he has since been engaged in general farming and dairying with good success. Henry R. Steinmeyer was married Sept. 24, 1888, in the city of Menomonie, to Anna Nelson, who, after nearly 20 years of married life, passed away Sept. 2, 1908. She had been the mother of five children, namely: Gena, who is the wife of Lou Hendricks of the town of Menomonie and the mother of three children, William, Raymond and Mabel; Oscar, now a farmer in the town of Weston, who married Lena Schwartz; Einer, the direct subject of this sketch; Anna C., now Mrs. Thomas Gibbons of Los Angeles, California, and Myrtle, who was Mrs. Alfred Kunz, now deceased. On Sept. 24, 1909, Henry R. Stienmeyer married Sophia Mant, daughter of Ole and Tonia (Felland) Mant. Both her parrents are now deceased. Four children are the issue of this second union, namely, Ole, Telmer, Harold and Levina. Einer Steinmeyer was married Dec. 8, 1920 to Jensena Madson, and they have one child, Arlene M., born May 3, 1923.

Ray W. Howison, a practical and successful farmer in the town of Weston, member of a well known family, was born in this town April 26, 1888, son of Charles E. and Deborah (Dean) Howison. As a boy he attended school in Menomonie and district school in the town of Weston, and acquired a knowledge of agriculture on his parents' farm in Section 31, which he has operated since 1912. He is doing general farming and dairying, the cattle on the farm being high grade and pure bred Holstein. In addition to this, Mr. Howison is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and the Downsville Telephone Company. He was married Oct. 18, 1912, in the town of Dunn, to Dora M. Adams, who was born in that town on Oct. 29, 1889, daughter of David and Martha W. (Lowe) Adams. In girlhood she attended school in Downsville, and subsequently the Dunn County Normal School, from which she was graduated in 1906. She then taught for five years in Dunn County and for one year in the grade school at Centuria, Polk County. She is a lady of social activities, being a member of the Weston Country Life Club and the Helping Hand Club of Weston. She also served eight years as clerk of the Howison School. Mr. and Mrs. Ray W. Howison are the parents of two children: Ruth B., born April 18, 1913; and Dorothy R., born Feb. 5, 1919. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church in Lower Weston.

David Adams, an early settler in the town of Dunn, where he did good pioneer work in building up a farm, was born in Ontario, Canada, June 13, 1847, his parents being natives of Scotland. He was reared and educated in Canada and came to the States in 1868, settling at once in the town of Dunn, Dunn County, Wis., where he took a homestead. This, after hard labor for many years, he developed into a fine farm, which he continued to operate until his death on June 2, 1903, he being killed while assisting his brother Issac in the raising of a new barn. He was married in Durand, Wis., Feb. 14, 1884, to Martha W. Lowe, daughter of David and Rebecca (Owens) Lowe, and of this union four children were born: Elmer J., Nov. 3, 1885; Agnes, Aug. 2, 1887; Dora M., Oct. 29, 1889, and Rebecca, Jan. 24, 1891. Elmer J., who is now principal of the high school at Grantsburg, Burnett County, Wis., married Gertrude Anderson of Weyerhauser and they have one child, James G. Agnes, who became the wife of Walter Flick, died May 23, 1919, leaving three children, Margaret, Donald and Agnes. Dora M., as elsewhere mentioned, is the wife of Ray W. Howison of the town of Weston, and has two children, Ruth and Dorothy. Rebecca is the wife of Clate Hart of Meridean, Dunn County, and the mother of two children, Vera and Robert.

John Roth, an enterprising and successful farmer of Section 9, town of Dunn, who is chairman of the present town board, and therefore a member of the county board, was born in Canton Bern, Switzerland, Dec. 29, 1872, son of Frederick and Marguerite (Michael) Roth. He was in his twelfth year when he accompanied his parents to America, having previously attended school in his native land. The family having settled on land in Section 16, town of Dunn, this county, he attended district school here and continued to do so until he was 16 years old. He then entered the employ of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company at Downsville, working in the woods in winter and in the Downsville mills in summer until the company ceased operations in that locality in 1900. From that year until 1911 he resided on the home farm with his mother, his father having died in 1899. In 1911 he moved on to a 240-acre tract of land in Section 9, which forms the greater part of his present farm, and which he had purchased some years before. He increased its size in 1913 by buying 80 acres more, so that he now owns 320 acres, or the entire west half of Section 9. He has a considerable portion of his land under cultivation, the balance being in timber and pasture. The farm is provided with a set of substantial and commodious buildings, with adquate sanitary arrangements, and the general appearance of the place denotes thrift, enterprise and good management. During his early years as an independent farmer Mr. Roth kept cattle of the Poll Durham breed, but of late years, having changed to dairy farming, he provided himself with a herd of good Holsteins, having a pure bred sire. He also breeds Chester-White hogs. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank at Downsville, in which he is a stockholder; and he also holds stock in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery and the Eau Galle Telephone Co. Mr. Roth's enterprise and general capability made an impression on his fellow townsmen and he was recognized as a suitable man to help in the management of town and county affairs. As a consequence, in 1917 he was elected chairman of the town board, which gave him a seat on the county board, and as such he served for two years. During the next two years he was out of office, but in 1921 and 1923 he was again elected chairman and is still serving, being a member of the highway committee of the county He is also clerk of Joint School District No. 4 of Eau Galle and Dunn. board. Formerly he served four years as a supervisor on the town board under Amos Smith, and in all these official positions he has justified the choice of the people as one of their representatives in public affairs. Mr. Roth was married March 8, 1906, to Elizabeth Flick, who was born in the town of Dunn, Dunn County, Wis., Feb. 16, 1872. He and his wife have three children: Margaret, born Oct. 11, 1907, and now attending the Menomonie High School; and Ernest and Esther, (twins), who were born Aug. 25, 1909. The religious affiliations of the family are with St. Jacob's Lutheran Church at Downsville.

Christian F. Henkel, Jr., a prominent farmer and respected citizen of the town of Weston, was born in Dodge County, Wis., Aug. 19, 1886, son of Christian and Henrietta (Hofschultz) Henkel. The parents were natives of Brandenburg, Germany, where they were married April 9, 1874. It was in 1879 that they emigrated to the United States, settling in Dodge County, where Christian Henkel was employed for ten years by the Van Brunt Seeder Manufacturing Co., his residence during that time being at Horican. In 1890 he came to the town of Weston, buying 80 acres of wild land in Section 19, of which in time he made a well improved farm, successfully operating it until a few years before his death, which event occurred Dec. 23, 1922. His wife still resides on it with her son Christian, being still physically strong and mentally bright at the age of 73 years. They had four children: Mary, now Mrs. Ernst Kuesel of Pierce County, Wis.; Lizzie, who is deceased; William, of Wood Lake, Minn., and Christian, whose name appears at the head of this record. Christian F. Henkel acquired a district school education in the town of Weston and as he grew up became useful on the parental farm, where he has always made his home. For two years in early manhood he followed the carpenter's trade. In 1914 he purchased 40 acres of land in the town of Spring Lake, Pierce County but later sold all but $22\frac{1}{2}$ acres of it, and since his fathers' death he has operated the home farm, which is well stocked with Holstein cattle. As a member of the school board of his district, he has served six years as clerk and one year as Mr. Henkel was married Oct. 14, 1909, to Emma Fuhrman, daughter treasurer. of William and Otellia (Kelm) Fuhrman and four children have since come to enlarge and brighten their family circle, who were born as follows: Emma, Aug. 23, 1910; Herman, June 12, 1911; Walter, Dec. 27, 1915; and Ellda, March 22, 1920. Mr. Henkel and his family are members of St. Johns Lutheran Church in the town of Weston.

John Heintz, who owns and operates the Gilbert Creek Farm in Section 24, town of Lucas, was born in Dodge County, Wisconsin, March 16, 1861, son of Nicholas and Anna (Cowdey) Heintz. The parents came to this country from Germany in the early 50's, settling in Dodge County, Wisconsin on a farm, where they spent the rest of their lives. Their children were: Kate, deceased; Mary, who is Mrs. Joseph Mutter of Dunn County and resides with her daughter, Mrs. Adolph Tetzloff; Peter, deceased; Matthew, of Marshfield, Wis.; John, subject of this sketch; Lizzie, who is Mrs. Nicholas Hubbard of Dodge County, and Nicholas, also of Dodge County. John Heintz was reared in Dodge County, where he attended school for a while, but he was obliged to begin earning his own living at the early age of 12 years working on farms. In 1881, at the age of 20, he came to Menomonie, Dunn County and for several years thereafter worked on the Thomas Kelly farm. In 1885 he began the development of his present farm by buying 40 acres of land in Section 24, town of Lucas, a wild tract on which Mr. Heintz built a log house. He was at the same time beginning his own domestic home life, as he was married that year to Amelia Finder, and they took possession of the log dwelling above mentioned. For some time Mr. Heintz worked for others at intervals in order to earn money for running expenses. About 1895 he bought another tract of 40 acres, lying in Section 25, and, altogether he has cleared 70 acres and put up a complete set of buildings. As a general farmer and dairyman, he keeps grade Holstein cattle with a pure bred sire and is a stockholder in the New Hudson Road Creamery, which he helped to organize. He has been a resident of his town and of the same locality for nearly 40 years, has made steady progress through industry and thrift, and is both well known and respected. Mr. Heintz's first wife Amelia, died in 1894, having been the mother of four children, namely: Freddie, who died at the age of 21 years; Victor, now in Colorado; William, who died at the age of six years; and Clara, who married Carl Holtz and lives in Sashkatchewan, Canada. On Dec. 23, 1895, Mr. Heintz married Dora Woinowski, of which union there have been nine children, who were born as follows: Edna, Kov. 24, 1896; Arthur, Sept. 5, 1898; Norman, Jan. 10, 1901; Alfred, Dec. 25, 1902; Francis, June 24, 1905; Ruby, March 24, 1907; Thomas, in April, 1909; John, May 31, 1911, and Bertha, March 12, 1913. The family are members of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Menomonie.

Oliver H. Herdahl, a well known and respected citizen of the village of Downing. where he was formerly a merchant, but is now proprietor of an undertaking establishment, was born in Norway, Sept. 9, 1872, son of Ole and Marie (Larson) Herdahl. It was in 1885 that the family came to the United States, locating in Wilson, St Croix County, Wis. In 1887 they came to Dunn County and took a tract of wild land in the town of Stanton, which Ole Herdahl began to improve. During the following 22 years, terminating with his death in December, 1909, he made a great advance from primitive conditions and had developed a good farm with substantial buildings and many acres of well cultivated land, besides pasture. At the time of his death he had been for some years a widower, his wife having passed away on Nov. 5, 1903. Oliver H. Herdahl attended school for several years, at least, in his native land, as he was 11 years old when he came to America, which was in 1883 with his sister Inga. Having a brother at Wilson, Wis., they made their way to that place, and there the subject of this sketch re-entered school and continued his studies until the age of seventeen. He then began work as clerk in the large general store of the Wisconsin Manufacturing Co. in Wilson and continued in their employ until 1907. For a year after that he was manager of the J. P. Johnson department store at McIntosh, Minn. Then returning to Wilson, Wis., he was employed in Col. La Pointe's general store, three years later he entered the employ of Stockman Bros., at Woodville, working in their general store until 1903, when he returned to Wilson to become manager of the store for the G. W. La Pointe Co. In 1907 he came to Downing, and, with his brother, Nels I., purchased the old company store, which they conducted for one year under the firm name of Herdahl Bros. On May 11, 1908, the concern was incorporated as the Herdahl Company. In 1909 O. C. Nelson purchased an interest in it, and later Nels O. Herdahl sold his interest to Walter Clark of Menomonie, after which during the life of the concern there were no further changes in the company. A large general mercantile business was conducted, including dry goods, clothing, hardware, furniture, and an undertaking department, and everything was going prosperously until Oct. 21, 1922, when the building and its contents were completely destroyed by fire. The affairs of the company were settled up, but Mr. Herdahl has since continued in the undertaking business, his parlors being located in the Zeisinger building on Main Street. He has the confidence of the community, and on those sad occasions when death visits it, he is "a very present help in trouble." He is a stockholder in the Knapp Telephone Co., is fraternally affiliated with the Masonic lodge at Glenwood City, the camp of Modern Woodmen in Downing, and the Odd Fellows' lodge of Downing, and is an • active member of the Downing Union Church, being secretary and treasurer of the Mr. Herdahl was married Dec. 29, 1897, at Crookston, Minn., to Isabelle society. F. Kyle, who was born in Meaford, Ontario, Canada, July 28, 1873, daughter of William and Margaret (Armstrong) Kyle. Mr. and Mrs. Herdahl are the parents of two children: W. Merrill, born March 14, 1900, and Kyle, born Oct. 4, 1904, the latter of whom is still residing at home. W. Merrill Herdahl, who was graduated from the McPhail School of Music in Minneapolis, is now a member of the faculty. Mrs. Isabelle F. Herdahl acquired her early education in the grade and high schools of Crookston, Minn., being graduated from the latter with the class of 1889. She then took summer school training in the University of Minnesota and completed her preparation for the profession of teacher in the State Normal School at Crookston. After that she spent eight years in teaching school in Crookston and McIntosh, Minn., and was principal of the Wilson schools for one year. She has also done substitute work in the Downing school. She is a very active member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for which she does lecture work, and she is now president of its Dunn County branch and one of the vice presidents of the state board. A family record such as this is one that helps to raise the citizenship of this county to a high plane.

William Robinson, railroad man and bank president, and for nearly 40 years a resident of the village of Knapp, Dunn County, but now deceased, was born in Ireland, Feb. 25, 1851, son of Edward and Mary Robinson. As a babe of six months he accompanied his parents to Canada, and later to Augusta, Eau Claire County, For many years thereafter his father was a section foreman on the Omaha Wis. William attended school both in Canada and in Augusta, Wis. He was road. only 14 years old when he began railroad work as water boy on his father's section. Later he was for a while baggageman on a train running between St. Paul and Elroy. In 1876 he became a fireman on the road, and after two years in that position was made engineer of the Knapp helping engine. As such he served for 36 years, and altogether was in the employ of the company for 48 consecutive years, becoming well and favorably known to the travelling public. In 1918, on account of failing health, he was retired on a pension, but continued to take an interest in the road until death summoned him on March 24, 1922. From St. Paul, where he lived for a while, he had moved to Eau Claire, and from the latter place to Knapp, arriving here April 1, 1882. For a number of years prior to his death he had been president of the First National Bank of Knapp. He was an enthusiastic member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he had advanced as far as the commandery, being a Knight Templar, and so far as known he was the last of the charter members of the local lodge, which he helped to organize in 1888. He was also a member of the Veteran Engineers' Association. He had a very wide circle of friends and acquaintances and was popular with all, living his life in accordance with the Golden He was also the father of a family, having been united in marriage, July 21, Rule. 1874, with Mary E. Dindorf, who was born at Pottsville, Penn., Oct. 12, 1856, daughter of Charles and Susan (De Coursey) Dindorf. When she was 12 years old, her parents moved with their family to Lakeville, Minn., and in the following year to St. Paul, where she was reared and educated, and where her father was for many years a blacksmith in the employ of the old St. Paul & Duluth railroad. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were the parents of six children, May R., Charles E., Ralph L., Arthur L., Earl and Catherine F., of whom the following is a further record. May R., born Dec. 21, 1876, is now Mrs. T. P. Jewell of St. Paul and the mother of one child, Marjorie. Charles E., born Dec. 17, 1878, died in his fourth year, on Aug. 31, 1882. Ralph L., born July 24, 1881, is now conducting a farm owned by his mother in the town of Stanton. He married Florence Proud and they have three children, Florence, Charlotte and William. Arthur L., born March 31, 1885, was accidentally drowned June 3, 1923. He had married Mabel Gross and left four children, Earl, Ruth, Herbert and Norman. Earl, born May 8, 1887, like his brother Charles died in his fourth year, on Jan. 21, 1891. Catherine F., born Sept. 18, 1905, married Charles D. Carter of Berlin, Wis., her husband being cashier of the First National Bank of that place. She has two children, Mildred and Robert E. Mrs. Mary Ella Robinson, after being a resident of Knapp for many years, died March 31, 1925, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. P. Jewell, in St. Paul. She had undergone a serious operation in the previous October and never fully regained her health. She was a lady well known and held in high esteem. She was a member of the Eastern Star in Knapp, having held the office of Martha for a number of years. She was also a member of the White Shrine of Jerusalem in St. Paul and was a great worker in the Merriam Park Presbyterian Church in St. Paul, where her interests were centered. She excelled as a homemaker and was always kind and thoughtful of others.

Dr. Charles T. Kyle, engaged in the practice of osteopathy in Menomonie, in which city he has been established professionally since 1906, was born in Downsville, Dunn County, Wis., Jan. 10, 1874, son of John and Nettie (Macailey) Kyle. As a boy and youth he attended common school at Read's Landing, Minn., where the family was located for some years, and the high school at Wabasha, Minn., where he was a pupil for two years. Then for one year he was a student in the University of Wisconsin at Madison. After that he spent a year working for his father and uncle, rafting lumber on the Mississippi River. In the fall of 1896 he went to Kirksville, Mo., and enrolled himself as a student in the America School of Osteopathy, after a two years' course being graduated with the class of 1898. Opening offices at Evansville, Ind., he practiced there for two years, at the end of that time going to Kansas City, Mo., where he practiced for three years. Then on account of poor health, he gave up his profession and went to Duluth, Minn., to recuperate, and in that city he remained until 1906, during that period being in the employ of the Marshall-Wells Hardware Co. In 1906 Dr. Kyle came to Menomonie and resumed practice, and he has since remained here. During the first six years he had his office at his residence, but since 1912 they have been in the Arcade Block; they include a reception room and two operating rooms. Dr. Kyle enjoys a fine practice and has a high social standing. He is a member of the Wisconsin Oste-pathy Association and the American Osteopathic Association, also of the Menomonie Commercial Club, the local Blue Lodge and chapter of the Masonic order, The Knights of Phythias lodge, the D. O. K. K. of Eau Claire, and the Menomonie Rotary Člub. On June 27, 1907, Dr. Kyle was married in Menomonie, Wis., to Eula Mae Smith, daughter of George W. and Hattie (Lawrence) Smith, the former of whom is now deceased, the latter, who has remarried, being now Mrs. H. M. Steves of Menomonie. Dr. and Mrs. Kyle are the parents of three children: Ronald H., born March 7, 1908; Janet G., born May 12, 1911, and John L., born May 15, 1913. The family are affiliated by membership with the Episcopal Church.

John Kyle, who spent 55 years of his life in Dunn County, to which he came as a pioneer settler 67 years ago, and who quite recently joined the great and silent majority, was born in the province of New Brunswick, Feb. 27, 1842, the sixth child of Samuel and Nancy (Rankin) Kyle. When about eight years old he moved with his parents to Waukesha County, and in June, 1855, accompanied them to Downsville, Dunn County. There he grew to manhood, engaged in agriculture, and up to 1905 spent most of his life on his farm, with the exception of 12 years spent at Read's Landing, Minn., where he and his brother had charge of all the lumber from the Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls Lumber & Boom, the Dells Lumber, the Daniel Shaw Lumber and the Northwestern Lumber companies. After his return to Downsville he continued to run his farm, in addition to a general store in the village, until November, 1905, when he retired and took up his residence in Menomonie, where his death occurred on July 30, 1922. John Kyle was married, July 30, 1871, to Annette Macauley, who died Feb. 24, 1880. In April ,1883, he married Mary Isabella Nesbitt. The children born to these two unions were eight in number, five of whom now survive, namely: Charles T. and Mrs. Maude Lanckton of Menomonie; Harry of Downsville; Mrs. Jane Taylor of Chicago, and John Clarence of Hurley. Mr. Kyle was also survived by a sister, Mrs. Mary Jefferson of Page, N. D., one brother, Samuel, of Menomonie, and eight grandchildren. In the strenuous days of the Civil War period, John Kyle, though not a native of this country, showed his devotion to it by risking his life in the defense of the Union.

He enlisted Aug. 14, 1862, in Company K, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, and served with his regiment until it was mustered out June 20, 1865. During his three years' service in the Army of the Potomac he took part in many of the great battles in that department-Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, and other and minor engagements. When Williams Evans Post, G. A. R. was organized, Jan. 6, 1883, Mr. Kyle was one of the charter members and during the 40 years of his membership was a zealous and loyal comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Kyle served many years on the county board as chairman of the town of Dunn and as supervisor of the third ward until failing health caused him Such in brief outline was the life of this notable pioneer, but it remains to resign. to add a tribute to his personal character, which deserved to be called "sterling." Gustave P. Hong, proprietor of a good farm of 200 acres in the town of Otter Creek, was born on a farm on Coon Prairie, in Vernon County, Wis., on April 10, 1870, son of Peter and Martha (Guttormson) Hong. The parents were both from Gudbrandsdalen, Norway, the father being a carpenter by trade and working as such in his native land until he came to the United States in 1864. It was then that he settled on Coon Prairie in Vernon County, Wis., buying there a farm or tract of 120 acres of land, which he cultivated, besides doing carpenter work, until 1900. He then moved to a farm in Barron County, where he died on May 6, 1907. wife, who survived him, is still residing there. They had eight children, of whom six are now living, namely: Cecelia, wife of Nels Gyland of Barron County; Pauline, wife of Martin Foss of Barron; Clara, wife of George Gilbertson of Barron; Lewis, on the home farm; Gustave P., and Matt, of Barron. Anna, who married Reinhart Larson, and Ida, who married Andrew G. Boe, are the two deceased. Gustave P. Hong was reared in Vernon County, where he went to school and also worked on his parents' farm. In 1900 he accompanied the family to Barron County, where he bought a farm adjoining his father's. In 1910 he sold it and moved to one near Cumberland in the same county, where he remained four years. Coming to Dunn County in 1914, he began farming here on 80 acres which he bought in Section 32, town of Otter Creek, to which he has since added until he has now 200 When he took this farm but a few acres had been broken, aside from which it was a wild tract. He built a small frame shanty for a temporary shelter, which he occupied while he cleared the land. He then built a good frame house of eight rooms with bath, and also put up a barn and sheds, doing all the carpenter work on them himself, and he has spent his time since in improving and cultivating this place, now having 100 acres under the plow. He carries on general farming and dairying, keeping 16 head of cattle. He has been a town treasurer for ten years, and while in Barron County was a member of the board of supervisors of his town. Mr. Hong was married in Barron, June 2, 1903, to Mary Juve, daughter of Halvor and Martha (Everson) Juve, her parents being natives of Norway who came to the United States in 1852, settling in Dane County, Wisconsin. Thence they later moved to Juneau County and from there to Barron County, where Mr. Juve is still living, Mrs. Juve having died in 1918. Of their seven children six are living, namely, Henry, Isabel, Mary, Oscar, Helena and Sarah. The one deceased was Helena (first), a twin sister of Isabel. Mr. and Mrs. Hong have four children: Esther M., born Nov. 14, 1905; Ruth E. and Joseph H., (twins), born May 24, 1908, and Stephen, born Nov. 7, 1913. Esther M., who was graduated from the Colfax High School with the class of 1922, and took the rural course at the Eau Claire Normal, is now a teacher in the town of Otter Creek. Ruth E. was graduated from the Colfax High School with the class of 1924 and is now holding a position with the Thomas Implement Co. at Colfax. The family belong to the United Norwegian Lutheran Church at Wheeler, of which Mr. Hong is secretary. Socially they stand high, and as creator of one of the good farms in the town of Otter Creek,

Mr. Hong's record deserves to be perpetuated.

Fred Timm, a former resident of the town of Weston, not long deceased, was a man who steadily fought his way to success through difficulties and discouragements that might have prevented one of weaker fibre from achieving anything. He was born in Rogason, Poland (now Germany), July 21, 1854, as a boy attended school there and subsequently learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed continuously until 1876. He then entered the army, in which he served two years as a gun maker, and after receiving his discharge he resumed the blacksmith's trade and followed it for two years more. In June, 1880, seeking a field of better opportunities, he emigrated to America, landed at Castle Garden, New York, and came west directly to Beaver Dam, in Dodge County, Wis., where he remained for a while. It was in the following year that he was married, March 13, 1881, to Augusta Rautenberg, who was born in Pommern, Germany, July 20, 1858, daughter of Christian F. and Regina (Hammling) Rautenberg. His next removal was to Horicon, Dodge County, where for four years he was in the employ of the Van Brunt Seeder Co. In the spring of 1885 he, with his wife and three small children, came to Dunn County, where he purchased 80 acres of timber land in Section 6 of the town of Weston, and until he could built on the place he and his family lived in a small log house just south of the present home. A short time after settling on his farm he met with a severe discouragement, losing his only team of horses, and being obliged to dispose of 40 acres of his original 80 to get the money with which to buy a new But in spite of this set-back he went ahead making improvements on his team. farm, though for a few years he and his family had to endure more or less privation and the hardships incident to pioneer life. During that period his trade of blacksmith proved of use to him, for he set up a small shop on his land and was thus able to earn a dollar or two occasionally doing work for his neighbors. The shop proved a valuable aid, but though he was often found employed there, he kept in mind his main business, that of developing his farm. After making a fair amount of progress on his tract of 40 acres he bought another tract of 60 in the same section, and still later a tract of 80 in Section 31, town of Lucas. In 1901 he was so well advanced on the road of prosperity that he built a fine brick house, besides new barns and outbuildings, and from that time on he was a man of mark among the prominent farmers of his town. He helped to organize the Hatchville Creamery Company and sold to it the three acres of land which forms the site of the building. He also served three years as a member of his district school board. His death, which occurred Jan. 10, 1923, was an event much deplored in the community. To Mr. and Mrs. Fred Timm six children were born, Cecelia, Theodore F., Teofiel, Alexander, Ella and Andrew, whose further records in brief are as follows. Cecelia, who was graduated from the River Falls Normal School, and subsequently taught school for many years, now owns and operates a farm of 160 acres, of which 80 acres lie in St. Croix County, and the other 80 in Section 31 of the town of Lucas. Theodore F. and Teofiel are deceased. Alexander, now a farmer near Wheeler. married Kate Lilly. Ella is Mrs. Walter Kaskie of Dodge County and has one child, Cecelia. Andrew, who remained at home with his parents, after his father's death took charge of the farm and is now operating it for his mother. Both are members of St. John's Church in Weston.

Edward S. Roach, proprietor of 640 acres of farm property in the town of Tainter, was born in the town of Sherman, Dunn County, Wis., Dec. 25, 1864, son of Henry W. and Mary A. (Harding) Roach. The father, who was a native of Tioga County, Pennsylvania, came to Wisconsin with his parents, the family first settling in Milwaukee, whence they later moved to Jefferson County. In 1858 Henry W. Roach came to Dunn County on a prospecting trip, but returned soon to Jefferson County. In 1861 he came back to Dunn County, this time for permanent settlement, taking 160 acres of government land in the town of Sherman, on which he settled with his family, and which in time he improved into a good farm, also increasing its acreage considerably by additional land purchases. He put up a good set of buildings. including a comfortable residence, and there he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives, being numbered among the most prominent and respected residents of the town. Mr. Roach during his active period often serving in town or county They had eight children, four of whom are now living, namely: office. John. Edward, Clarence and Leon. The four deceased are Delmer, Ida, Henry and Imo-Edward S. Roach, who made his entry into this world as a Christmas present gene. to his parents, was reared on the home farm in Section 26, town of Sherman, on arriving at suitable age attending the district school, and subsequently helping his father to clear and cultivate the land. At the age of 21 he became an independent farmer and during his first year as such operated a rented farm. Then he bought 120 acres in Section 29, town of Tainter, a place that was partly improved but which he proceeded to develop to a much higher degree, erecting a good residence, barn, and other buildings. He also greatly increased its area by the purchase of additional land until he now owns 640 acres, a tract equal to a full section, or square mile, situated in the three towns of Tainter, Sherman and New Haven. He has installed a Delco lighting plant for the illumination of his house and barns, and he carried on general farming along modern lines until 1908, when he retired, renting the farm to a tenant. On retiring from the farm he moved to the city of Menomonie, where he resided until 1914, when he built a good modern residence on his 120 acres in Section 30, town of Tainter, where he has since made his home. He is a stockholder in the Rusk Co-operative Creamery, the Litnum Bronze Co. of Menomonie, of which he is a director and in the Security Loan & Trust Co. of Menomonie. Mr. Roach has spent many years in public office, having been repeatedly elected thereto by his fellow citizens, who recognized his ability as a man of affairs. For ten years he was treasurer of the town of Tainter, and for 14 years chairman of the town board of supervisors, being for the same period, therefore, a member of the county board and taking a personal part in all its official transactions. He is now serving in his second year as a trustee of the asylum board, having been elected for a three years' term in 1922, and is also a member of the board of supervisors of the town of He has given the same care to the performance of his public duties that he Tainter. has to the building up of his private interests and has proved a useful man in the In fact, it may be said that he is one of the best known men in Dunn community. County and has a record that will bear close inspection in every detail. It should be added that he served for some time as school director at Cedar Falls. He is affiliated fraternally with the Odd Fellows' and Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Roach was married in the town of Tainter, on July 6, 1886, to Libbie J. Barber, daughter of Samuel C. and Derinda (Houghtaling) Barber, her parents, now deceased, being early settlers in Dunn County. The children in the Barber family were: James, now of Stanley, Chippewa County, Wis.; Amy, who married Albert Brown and lives in the state of Washington, and Libbie J. Mr. and Mrs. Roach have two daughters, Alta M. and Mildred, who were graduated from the Cedar Falls school and the Menomonie High School, and are both residing at home.

Carl G. Tilleson, for many years one of the leading merchants of Menomonie, was born in the town of Elk Mound, Dunn County, July 17, 1867, son of Ole and Louise (Ludvigson) Tilleson. Both parents were natives of Norway, Ole Tilleson coming to America when 17 years of age, and Mrs. Louise Tilleson as a child with They were all pioneer settlers in the town of Elk Mound, where the her parents. Tillesons located in the early 60's, buying a tract of government land which in time they developed into a fine farm. After residing on it for many years they sold it and built a home in the village of Elk Mound, where they resided until the death of Mrs. Tilleson. Mr. Tilleson then went to Eau Claire where until his death he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. George Harsh. Ole and Louise Tilleson had six children: Carl G., the direct subject of this sketch; Hilda, wife of George Harsh of Eau Claire; Ludwig, of Phillips, Wis.; Edwin, of Chetek, Wis.; Gabriel, of Irvington, Dunn County, and Myrtle of Minneapolis. Carl G. Tilleson as a boy attended district school in the town of Elk Mound and lived on his parents' farm until he was 20 years old. In 1887 he came to Menomonie and learned the butcher's business from his uncle, A. O. Strand, with whom he remained for four years. After that he worked four years for Samuel Moen, and in 1895 went to Eau Claire, in which city he spent two years. Then returning to Menomonie, he engaged in the meat business in partnership with James Holstein, they operating a market for five years on Main Street. In 1904 Mr. Tilleson purchased his present market at 526 Broadway from Samuel Moen, and he has since remained at this stand, enjoying a large patronage and establishing a reputation as a reliable man in his line of trade. He is a member of the Menomonie Commercial Club, being well imbued with a commendable public spirit, and he is also fraternally associated with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Tilleson was married Oct. 26, 1895, in the city of Menomonie, to Nettie Lien, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Lien, who are now deceased. Their daughter Nettie followed them to the land beyond the grave on July 11, 1900, after less than five years of married life. She left two children: Orvil, proprietor of the meat market, his father having turned it over to him in May, 1924; and Nettie, who is teaching school in Eau Claire.

Henry W. Rudow, formerly district attorney and who for eight years has been engaged in the practice of law in Menomonie, was born in Osceola, St. Croix County, Wis., April 28, 1888, son of William and Anna (Brandt) Rudow. The father was a native of Germany and the mother of Wisconsin. Married in Minnesota, they settled in Osceola, Wis., in 1875, and there for some 15 years William Rudow was engaged in milling. He then moved to Star Prairie, Wis., and buying a mill there, operated it for four years. From that place he went to Boyceville, Dunn County, and conducted a flour and feed mill at Hayestown, remaining proprietor and manager of it until 1900. Then moving to Downing, this county, he lived there for some five years retired. But his active career was not yet finished, for at the end of that time he went to River Falls, Pierce County, Wis., and for the next eight years was engaged in operating the Cascade Mills. It was at the end of that time that he finally retired and took up his residence in Menomonie, where he and his wife are now living. Henry W. Rudow after acquiring his preliminary education, attended the high school at Downing, Dunn County, and subsequently entered the River Falls State Normal School, from which he was graduated with the class of 1908. In 1909 he taught school at Stanley, Wis., and in 1910 and 1911 he was principal of the high school at West Bend, Wis. Then entering the law department of the state university, he prepared himself carefully for his chosen profession and was graduated with the class of 1913. In the same year he was admitted to the bar and entered into practice at Hudson, Wis., being associated until Oct. 1, 1915, with Spencer Haven. Then moving to Menomonie, he opened offices here and in this city and county has since followed his profession, meeting with good success. He held the office of district attorney for six consecutive years Taking a warm interest in the general welfare of the community, from Jan. 1, 1917. he has united with the Commercial Club and is also affiliated with several other societies. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and belongs also to the Knights of Pythias and its auxilliary order, the D. O. K. K. Mr. Rudow was married May 25, 1918, to Eva Parker White of River Falls, Wis., who was born at Hector, Minn. He and his wife are the parents of one child, Ann Southworth, born Nov. 19, 1920. Mr. and Mrs. Rudow are members of the Congregational Church. They have a pleasant home at 1202 Twelfth Street, Menomonie, Mr. Rudow's offices being in the Madsen Block.

Martin Jensen, a representative citizen of the village of Downing, was born in Jutland, Denmark, May 17, 1877, son of S. C. and Marit Jensen. The parents are still residing in Denmark, the father being now 84 years old and the mother 79. Martin was educated in the public schools of his native land and was reared to agricultural pursuits on a large dairy farm. While still in Denmark he turned his attention to the creamery and butter-making trade, of which he acquired a fairly good knowledge there. He was obliged, however, to serve 16 months in the Danish army. On Nov. 30, 1897, he was married in Denmark to Hannah Thirup, who was born in that country, May 5, 1873, daughter of Peter and Anna Margaret (Sorenson) Thirup, and whose parents died in Denmark. Of this union two children were born, both in Denmark, namely: Peter, on Sept. 13, 1898, who is now engaged in construction business in St. Paul, Minn; and Sivert, on Jan. 20. 1901, who lives in Downing, Wis., and is in the employ of the Downing Manufacturing Co. In 1905

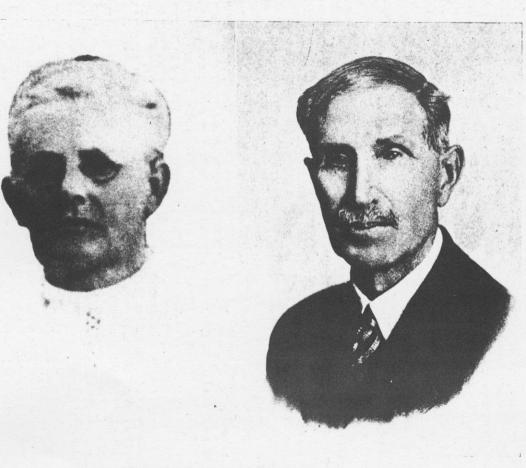

Mr. and Mrs. Jensen came with their two sons to America, locating first in Glenwood Citv, St. Croix County, Wis., where Mr. Jensen worked out for about six months. He then moved with his family to New Richmond, in the same county, and for two years thereafter was herdsman at the county asylum, his wife during that period being matron of the poor house. Then returning to Glenwood City, they rented a farm, which they operated for two years, at the end of that time coming to Downing, Mr. Jensen becoming foreman on the noted Fairnook dairy farms for D. C. Coolidge. After holding that position for some time, he went to St. Paul. as pasteurizer for the dairy farms, doing this in order to refamiliarize himself with the work, of which he had gained some knowledge in Denmark. Having done so. he returned to Downing and entered the employ of the Ripon Produce Co. as pasteurizer, also taking charge of the butter making, which position he held until the fall of 1924, having proved himself thoroughly expert and efficient. In 1920 Mr. Jensen purchased the large dwelling house, which he and his family now occupy -the son Sivert living with him and his wife-and remodeled it into a first class hostelry, which is now known far and wide as the Hotel Summit. This hotel, which is under Mrs. Jensen's management, is nicely stiuated on elevated ground, and is well heated, clean and sanitary. It has gained a reputation for the excellent meals served, which are prepared by the hostess. Mr. Jensen is thoroughly American in sentiment, realizing that this country has furnished him with the opportunity for advancement and enjoying the prosperity he has attained. As he puts it, he "would rather have one foot of American soil than the whole of Europe," He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he and his family are members of the Lutheran Church, Mrs. Jensen also belonging to the Ladies' branch of the Odd Fellows, known as the Rebekahs, and to the auxilliary of the Downing post of the American Legion. Mr. Jensen served two years as a member of the town board of Tiffany. The son, Peter Jensen, has a military record, as follows: En-ter 1 the United States' service Aug. 5, 1917; became a member of Battery E, 151st Minnesota Field Artillery; trained at Camp Riley, Kansas; left for overseas from Camp Mills, Long Island, N. Y.; arrived in Brest, France, Nov. 2, 1917; took part with his battery in much of the heavy fighting, including the operations known as the Champagne-Marne, the Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, the Meuse-Argonne, on the defensive sector, and was at Coblenz with the army of occupation; received three service stripes; returned to the United States in April, 1919, and was discharged at Camp Dodge, Iowa, May 10, 1919, with the rank of corporal. He is a member of Downing Post No. 232, American Legion.

Fred L. Curran, supervisor of practice teaching in Stout Institute, Menomonie. was born in Marquette County, Wis., Nov. 20, 1879, son of James and Lydia The family came from England about 1840, settling near Mil-(Bixby) Curran. waukee, Wis., and going from there to Marquette County, where James Curran became a prominent farmer. He is now living retired in East Troy, Wis., and is a widower, his wife Lydia having died in May, 1922. They had five children: William F., who is conducting a retail hardware store at Coloma, Wis.; Fred L., of Menomonie; Walter, a farmer in Walworth County, Wis.; Jessie, wife of Edward Timm, a farmer near Pine Island, Minn.; and Myrtle, who resides in Rochester, Fred L. Curran as a boy attended rural schools in Marquette County, Minn. Wisconsin, and subsequently taught rural school in that county until 1903. He then became a student at Stevens Point Normal School, where he was graduated with the class of 1905. During the next two years he was school principal at Bundy, Lincoln County, then in 1907 he came to Menomonie and for a year following was a student at Stout Institute. In 1908 he began teaching bench wood work and elementary hand work, and at the present time is teaching methods in industrial arts and is supervisor in practical teaching classes. He is also director of vocational work for the Menomonie board of vocational education. He is a member of and director in the Menomonie Commercial Club and secretary and treasurer of the Oakwood Improvement Association, a corporation for improving city resident property, of which he was one of the organizers. On Dec. 21, 1909 Mr. Curran was married in Menomonie to Ada May Kelsev, daughter of Lorenzo and Cordelia (Webster) Kelsey, which parents are now deceased. The family life of Mr. and Mrs. Curran has been perfected by the birth of three children: Elizabeth, March 29, 1911; Frederick, June 8, 1913, and Mary, Jan. 4, 1916. The Curran family are members of the Unitarian Church, which Mr. Curran is now serving as secretary, Mrs. Curran being very active in the Ladies' Aid Society and other church work.

Omar Cole, the first settler in the town of Stanton, Dunn County, was born in the town of Conneaut, Erie County, Penn, on May 16, 1822, son of Andrew and Polly (Keep) Cole. He was a grandson of Barnabus Cole, who was born in Barnstable County, Massachusetts, on March 20, 1751, of English ancestry. Barnabus fought for American freedom seven years in the Revolutionary War, and survived the war nearly half a century, as he died in 1831 during the administration of President Andrew Jackson. He married Sarah Alworth, a native of Ireland, who died at the advanced age of 92 years. They had a considerable family, as Andrew was their ninth child. He was born in New York State, March 3, 1798, and married Polly Keep, who was born Feb. 11, 1799. They settled at Conneaut, Penn., where he subsequently followed farming until his death in 1862. His wife had died previously, in 1851. Omar Cole remained on the parental homestead at Conneaut until he was 21 years old. Then, being his own master and withing to try his fortunes farther west, he came to Wisconsin, settling first at La Grange, Walworth County, where he remained for five years. He then moved to Columbia County, this state, and about a year afterwards, in 1849, he was married at Watertown, Wis., to Mary Ross, a native of Scotland, born in Glasgow, Dec. 13, 1823. Thev resided in Columbia County until 1861, in which year they came to Dunn County, settling on a tract of wild land near Colfax, where they lived until 1863. Then Mr. Cole homesteaded 160 acres of wild land in the town of Stanton, two miles east of what is now the site of Knapp, as that village was not settled until the construction of the Western Wisconsin Railway (now the "Omaha"), about seven or eight years That part of the county was then very wild and the Coles were the first later. family to settle in it. For years thereafter Mr. Cole was busily engaged in developing his farm and in time he erected a good set of frame buildings on it. As a farmer he was very successful, but in another business venture he was not so fortunate. After the village of Knapp was started, about 1870 or 1871, he engaged in a sawmill business there, at first in partnership with A. K. Humphrey, but the latter dying not long afterwards, Mr. Cole took A. C. Poor as partner. The firm met with reverses, however, and he lost some, if not most, of his money. After four or five years the mill was closed down. Notwithstanding this, however, Mr. Cole remained to the end of his life one of the most prominent men in the town of Stanton, a position achieved through his inmate force of character. It was he who took the first steps to establish the first district school in the town and for several years subsequently he held the office of school clerk. This first schoolhouse was erected close to his own log house and instruction was given the children before any tax had been levied to pay for it. Afterwards Mr. Cole built a new schoolhouse, which was paid for by a regular school tax, the amount to be raised being $100, of which his own share was $50, or 13 per cent of the assessed valuation of his property. Mr. Cole was a Republican in politics and in religion a Spiritualist. He died on his farm in the town of Stanton on Nov. 19, 1899. His wife Mary also died there, but some 12 years later, on July 15, 1911. They were the parents of seven children, as follows: Theodore C., born April 30, 1850, who died at the age of 19 years in 1869; Owen F., born Aug. 14, 1851, who is now residing in Knapp; Charles E., born March 3, 1853, also a resident of Knapp; Charlotte E. (a twin sister of Charles E.), who became the wife of Oscar C. Poor, son of A. C. Poor, and is now a widow resid-ing in Knapp; Colonel F., born Jan. 22, 1856, now living in the town of Stanton; Major A., born May 17, 1858, who resides at Teegarden, this county; and George A., born July 7, 1861, who died at the age of 41 years on Oct. 10, 1902. Colonel F. Cole, president of the Knapp Telephone Co. and a prosperous farmer whose farm lies close to the village of Knapp, and who is following agriculture in partnership with his son, Chauncey F., was born in the town of Hampden, Columbia County, Wis., Jan. 22, 1856, son of Omar and Mary (Ross) Cole. His parents, as elsewhere stated, were the first settlers in the town of Stanton, taking land there in 1863, when all this part of the country was wild. The first school in the town was held in his parents' dwelling, and was taught for the first two terms by Lydia C. Cole, a sister of Omar Cole, who had come here from Pennsylvania on a visit and was persuaded to remain. It was that school that the subject of this sketch first attended, receiving his first lessons from his aunt; and a log schoolhouse being built some time afterwards, his education was continued there. At an early age, however, he had to work, as none of the pioneer settlers had much money in the early days, and every dollar-nay, every quarter-counted. Our subject's first attempt to earn a little cash was when he was quite a young boy by digging wild ginseng in the woods, of which there was a fairly plentiful supply. It could be sold for 25 cents a pound, and when young Colonel succeeded in securing a pound the first day he felt that he had struck a road to sudden wealth, not for himself but for the family. Up to the age of 21 he remained on the home farm and helped his father, and after that began working away from home, hauling logs in the woods and cutting cord wood. On Jan. 23, 1889, he was married to Chrissie I. Darling, and for a while they lived on Section 22. Then Mr. Cole bought 40 acres of wild land in Section 27, town of Stanton. There he built a small frame house and began to improve the property and lay the foundations for a farm. In 1893 he bought an additional tract of 80 acres, which had been partly cleared and on which stood some fair frame buildings. It is his present place and lies just outside the village of Knapp, and adjacent to it, on Section 28, is a tract of 40 acres owned by his son, Chauncey F., the father and son working the combined place of 120 acres in partnership, carrying on general farming and dairying, for which purpose they keep high grade Guernsey cattle, with a pure bred sire. They also have a goodly number of sheep and hogs and a full equipment of tools and machinery. Mr. Cole has remodeled and improved the buildings. In 1922 he had the house stuccoed and made into a modern dwelling of eight rooms with hot water heat, bath and hot and cold water. The barns are provided with running water and lighted with a carbide gas plant. A Republican, like his father, he also follows the latter's example in religion, being a Spiritualist. He has served the town of Stanton as treasurer nine years, was treasurer of Joint School District No. 3 of Stanton and Knapp 18 years, and for several years has been president of the Knapp Telephone Co. His fraternal society affiliations are with the Modern Woodmen and Odd Fellows in Knapp, in both of which local organizations he has passed the chairs, and for five years he was consul of the Modern Woodmen camp. On March 19, 1924, Mr. Cole sustained a severe bereavement in the loss of his wife, concerning whom something more needs to be said. Chrissie I. Darling was born at Big Bend, Waukesha County, Wis. Feb. 11, 1863, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Purvis) Darling. She acquired her education in Big Bend and in Carroll Academy, Waukesha, and taught for several years in the schools of that county. Having come to Knapp with her parents in 1885, she continued teaching for several years, being in charge of the primary department of the Knapp graded school. Then on Jan. 23, 1889, as already recorded, occurred her marriage to Colonel F. Cole and for 35 years she and her husband led a home life singularly full of mutual love and respect. Mrs. Cole enjoyed to a high degree the esteem and confidence of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Of a kindly and charitable nature, she was alive to all their vitrues and good qualities, not caring to see nor judge their faults, but taking an optimistic outlook on human nature, her relations with individuals being kindly and sym-She was an active and positive force in the life of the community; pathetic. a sincere member and useful worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and active in the friendly work of the Royal Neighbors and of the Daughters of Rebekah, rising to the highest office in each, namely, oracle of the former and noble grand of the latter. In her home love reigned and hospitality abounded. One who knew her, thus summed up a brief sketch of her life: "Her labors are finished, but the influence of her unselfish life and her unblemished character will remain as a blessed heritage and a benediction to those who have known her and who follow after." Mr. and Mrs. Cole had but the one child, Chauncey F., already mentioned, and who was educated in the Knapp graded school. He has always remained at home and is one of the active and successful young farmers of the town of Stanton.

Ernest W. Douglas, a prominent farmer and esteemed citizen of the town of Spring Brook, which he is now serving as clerk, was born on the farm that he now owns in Section 20, on Sept. 20, 1878, son of Charles E. and Adelia C. (Wiggins) The father was born June 22, 1853, in Ontario, Canada, son of James A. Douglas. and Mary Ann Douglas, and on the paternal side the subject of this sketch is a scion of the Scotch family of Douglas renowed in Scottish history. His mother was of Pennsylvania Dutch extraction. When Charles E. Douglas was eight years old, his parents with their two children moved to a locality near Grand Rapids, Mich., where they resided for several years. In 1870 they moved still farther west until they reached Dunn County, Wisconsin, where they established a new home in the town of Spring Brook, buying 160 acres of land in Section 20, which Mr. Douglas subsequently developed into a good farm. There his parents died and there he spent the balance of his life until his last sickness, dying March 3, 1924, in Sacred Heart Hospital in Eau Claire. He was a man highly thought of, and of more than average intelligence, keeping in touch with current events, well read in history and the Bible. His knowledge and agreeable conversation made him a welcome visitor in the homes of the people. For ten years he served as town treasurer and for 23 years was treasurer of School District No. 2. His marriage to Adelia C. Wiggins took place in the town of Spring Brook, Sept. 19, 1875. She was born near Columbus, Columbia County, Wis., on Dec. 18, 1852, daughter of Henry B. and Sarah (Weisman) Wiggins. She passed away nine years before her husband, on Feb. 27, 1915, sincerely mourned as a good wife and mother, and agreeable and hospitable neighbor. They were the parents of one child, Ernest W. Ernest W. Douglas was reared in the town of Spring Brook, attending common school in Fall City. Until the year 1900 he remained on the home farm assisting his father in its operation. He then went to Miloma, Minn., where he learned telegraphy and for about 18 months worked on the M. & I. Division of the "Omaha" railroad. At the end of that time he returned to the town of Spring Brook and for the next four years was engaged in operating the J. S. Govin farm. He then bought 80 acres in Section 29, town of Spring Brook, which he farmed until June, 1924, at which time he moved In 1920 he rented the home farm, which he back to the place of his birth. operated in connection with his own for four years. He is a stockholder in the Elk Mound Cooperative Creamery, a member of the Farmers Mutual Insurance Company and vice president and a director of the Menomonie Farm Loan Association. He has also rendered efficient and satisfactory public service, both as clerk of the school boards of Joint District No. 10 and District No. 2, and for over 21 years he has served as clerk of the town of Spring Brook, having been first elected to that office in April, 1903. He is a member of Spring Brook Camp, No. 6050, M. W. A., and for many years served it in the office of counsel. Mr. Douglas was married March 16, 1903, in Louisville, Dunn County, to Ethel M. Miller, daughter of Harris and Permelia (Johnson) Miller, and of this union four children have been born: Wilbur F., Feb. 2, 1904; Raymond E., March 27, 1905; Howard M., July 30, 1913, and Willard S., April 21, 1916, all as yet residing on the home farm. The record of such a man as Mr. Douglas needs no eulogy, as it speaks for itself, but it is very fitting that it should be inscribed on the annals of the county as an item in the history of its general progress.

William F. Micheels, one of the prominent merchants of the city of Menomonie, was born in Pommerania, Germany, Aug. 3, 1869, son of Ferdinand and Ernestine (Jordan) Micheels. The father, who was coachman for a German nobleman, came to the United States in 1881, locating at once in Menomonie, Wis. After a year's residence and work here, he sent for his family, who joined him. He was an employee of the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, working in their mills in summer and in the woods in winter. He died in 1904, being survived by his wife, who still lives in Menomonie, and by their seven children. These children are William F., of Menomonie; Louise, wife of Fred Schoenoff of Menomonie; Tena, who is Mrs. Carl Roen of Chippewa Falls; Amelia, now Mrs. Henry Werth of Menomonie; Bertha, wife of Louis Husby of Menomonie; Emma, who resides with her mother, and Herman of Menomonie. William F. Micheels first attended school in his native land and after coming to America in 1882, being then a boy of 13 years, he attended the grade and high schools here. He then learned the trade of cigar-making from John Schmidt, whose factory was located in the building now occupied by the Royal In 1887 Mr. Micheels became manager of a cigar factory for David Stori and cafe. was thus occupied for a year. At the end of that time he became connected with the mercantile business, going to work in the grocery and hardware departments in the general merchandise store of A. H. Johnson, with whom he remained for four In 1892 he went to Winona, Minn., and took a course in business college. vears. After his return he again went to work for the A. H. Johnson Co., but this time as cashier and bookkeeper, in which position he served until 1897. In that year he and C. O. Sandvig formed a partnership and opened a new general store, located in the building now occupied by the Diedrich Harness shop on Main Street. Later they moved to the Moody building and still later to the A. H. Johnson building. In 1905 they merged their business with that of Mr. Krafts and founded the Dunn County Mercantile Co., doing business under that name until 1907, when they sold out to the Waterman-Ehrhart Co. With this company Mr. Micheels remained for a short time, and then he and Mr. Sandvig opened their present store at No. 620 Main Street, where they are doing a good business. Mr. Micheels not only occupies a prominent position in the business world, but has been well known in Dunn County for many years through other connections. He formerly served two terms, or four years, as county treasurer, being first elected in 1899. In 1903 he became bookkeeper and secretary of the Dunn County asylum, a position which he has held for the last 20 years and still holds. For 30 years he has been a member of the Ludington Guard Band, and is today one of its oldest members. His fraternal affiliations are with the Masonic blue lodge, the D. O. K. K and the Knights of Mr. Micheels was married in Meridean, Dunn County, on March 12, Pythias. To Mr. and Mrs. Micheels four children have been born: Lucille, March 10, 1899. who is now Mrs. M. J. Pannell of Chicago; Esther, born Nov. 25, 1901, wife of Oscar Lyders of Forest City, Iowa; Valeria, born Oct. 3, 1904, now attending St. Olaf's College; and William J., born Jan. 28, 1911, who is attending high school. The family are members of Our Saviour's Lutheran Church, Mrs. Micheels being one of its active society workers.

Fredinand Sell, well known as a member of the "retired" colony of Menomonie, after a life of agriculture achievement, was born in Onswold, Germany, Dec. 26. 1858, son of August and Augusta (Reichart) Sell, the parents being also natives of that country. Coming to America in 1876 they located in the town of Red Cedar, Dunn County, Wisconsin, buying 80 acres of heavy timber land, to which August Sell later added another 40. He cut the timber, grubbed the stumps, and broke and cultivated the land, which he farmed until his death, he and his wife passing away in the same year. They had four children: Fritz, now deceased Carl, a farmer in the town of Red Cedar; Ferdinand of Menomonie; and Augusta, now Mrs. William Fritz of the town of Red Cedar. Ferdinand Sell was a sturdy youth of 18 years when he accompanied his parents to America and he did good work in helping to clear the farm on which they settled, and in the neighborhood of which he attended school for a while. He also worked for the Knapp-Stout Lumber Company a part of the time, earning $18 per month, which he gave to his parents to help them pay for the farm. In 1889 he came into possession of the home place, where for 30 years thereafter he followed diversified farming, giving particular attention to dairy-He greatly improved the property and remodeled or rebuilt all the buildings. These included a fine frame house, a large barn 30 x 60 feet, a granary, a garage and a machine shed, the last mentioned building measuring 24×60 feet. At home in every branch of agriculture, Mr. Sell worked hard and was very prosperous. In 1919 he rented the farm to his son and moved to Menomonie, where he bought a house and an acre of land at No. 500 Thirteenth Street, where he has since made his home, enjoying a comfortable leisure. Mr. Sell was married March 17, 1889 to Minnie Schultz, who was born in Honey Creek, Sauk County, Wis., May 24, 1858, daughter of Carl and Elizabeth (Kruger) Schultz. Her parents were natives of Germany who came to the United States when young and were married in Sauk County, this state, where they followed farming. They later moved to Olmstead County, Minnesota, where they continued in agricultural pursuits for a number of Both are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Sell are the parents of vears. three children, as follows: Clara, born Feb. 22, 1890, is now Mrs. Charles Berndt, her husband being a shoe merchant in Mencmonie; they have one child, James; Mary, born March 25, 1891, is the wife of Ole A. Bradseth, a mail carrier of Me-Louis, born Nov. 13, 1892, married Olga Hyland of North Mencmonie. nomonie. He is now conducting the old home farm. The family are members of the Lutheran church and are good representatives of the class of men and women who have changed the face of the country by the development of the soil and laid the foundations of present civilization and future prosperity.

Sanford Cummings, an early settler in the town of Spring Brook, but now deceased, was born in the state of New York, May 30, 1831. After his mother's death, which took place before the breaking out of the Civil War, he came west accompanying his father and his brother Leander, all three settling in Dunn County. Buying 40 acres of railroad land in Section 35, town of Spring Brook, Sanford lived a bachelor's life until 1864. Then on March 26, that year, he was united in marriage with Martha Brown, who was born on Hay River, Dunn County, March 25, 1848, daughter of Elisha and Phoebe Brown, her mother being the first white woman to settle in Dunn County. Elisha Brown was a partner with Levi Vance in the early fur trading post at Vanceburg, and later they bought a tract of land together on Little Elk Creek, being the first white men to buy land in that locality. After a while Mr. Vance sold out to Mr. Brown, and the latter, after operating a farm there for several years, also sold out, and went to Atwater, Minn., where he spent the remainder of his life. To return to the subject of this sketch, in November, 1864, the year of his marriage, and scarcely eight months after that event, he c_1 listed for service in the Civil War, perhaps because being very poor, he saw no other way of supporting himself and wife but by risking his life for the sure but scanty pay of a soldier. He was fortunate enough to return in good physical condition, being discharged on July 31, 1865, and on his farm he spent the remainder of his life, in time adding 80 acres to its area and bringing it into fairly good condition. They were the parents He died in 1894; his wife still resides on the old home farm. of eight children: Olie, now Mrs. John French of Conroth, Rusk County; Edward, on the home farm; Mary, now Mrs. Ed Eighmy of the town of Spring Brook; Phoebe, who is Mrs. A. Fred Witt of the town of Spring Brook; Etta, wife of Bert Peterson of the town of Spring Brook; Peter, of Ojibawa, Wis.; Bert S., of the town of Spring Brook; and Lillie, who married Ed Curren and is now a widow residing on the home farm with her aged mother.

Bert S. Cummings, who owns and operates a good farm in Section 26 west, town of Spring Brook, was born in this town Feb. 11, 1879, son of Sanford and Martha He was educated in the Forest Center School and took over (Brown) Cummings. the management of the home farm in Section 35, at the early age of 15 years, owing to his father's death. The farm was later deeded to him and he operated it successfully until 1924, in which year he settled on the farm of 161 acres which he is now operating in Section 26. This, which was the old Leander Cummings farm, he had purchased in 1914. In 1916 Mr. Cummings erected a fine modern bungalow on the place, which is provided with the Lally electric light system. He is actively engaged in general farming and dairying and is also interested in the raising of silver Mr. Cummings was first married June 8, 1895 to Birdie Wilson, who black foxes. died in October the same year, leaving one child, Ray. The latter on growing to manhood married Luda Saxton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Saxton, and has two children, Orville and Ione. On Dec. 11, 1924, Bert S. Cummings married Mrs. Edward Bucher, who in maiden life was Mabel Fuller, daughter of Edward and Georgia (Scott) Fuller. The father is now deceased but the mother is living and is a resident of Marathon County, Wisconsin. By her first marriage to Edward Bucher, Mrs. Cummings has a son, Ronald. The family are affiliated religiously with the Forest Center M. E. Church.

Thomas McKanna, a pioneer of Dunn County, now deceased, was born in County Monaghan, Ireland, Nov. 1, 1829, son of Peter and Catherine McKanna. His mother dying when he was very young, he had but a limited education and had to make his own way in the world at an early age. Going to England, he worked there as a common laborer, but, as may be imagined, did not advance himself very far on the road to fortune in either of the old countries. To do so he came ir the early 50's to the United States, locating first in Iowa, where he remained until It was about that time, probably, that he heard of the activity in the lumber industry at Menomonie, Wis., which attracted him to that place, and after his arrival he obtained employment with Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, not in connection with their lumber business, however, but as a worker in their stone In time he was promoted to the position of foreman, which he held until 1880, in which year he turned his attention to farming, buying the Overlander farm in the town of Lucas, a tract of 120 acres in Section 24. A small clearing had been made and a small log house stood in it. From that beginning Mr. McKanna proceeded to build up a farm and in the course of time developed a very good one. He was popular as a man and citizen, always ready to do a kind or neighborly act, and he proved himself a factor in the development of his town and county. He spent 26 years as a farmer, passing away April 13, 1906. Mr. McKanna was married in 1878 in Menomonie to Mary Kenny, who was born in Racine County, Wisconsin, Jan. 6, 1859, and who came to Dunn County with her parents when five years old, residing near Downsville until her marriage. After Mr. McKanna's death she took charge of the farm and carried it on with the help of her children, continuing to reside on it until her death on March 19, 1918. Mrs. McKanna was a woman of sterling character, who had a host of friends, and will long be remembered for her kind and generous disposition. She and her husband were the parents of seven children, as follows: Peter, now in the employ of the Standard Oil Co., at Page, N. D.; John, a farmer in the town of Menomonie; Agnes, residing with her brother John; William, now operating the home farm; Rose, wife of Julius Lemke of the town of Menomonie, and the mother of two children, Mary and Gertrude; Mary, who died at the age of 18 years; and Owen, who died at the age of eight years. The McKanna family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Congregation in Menomonie.

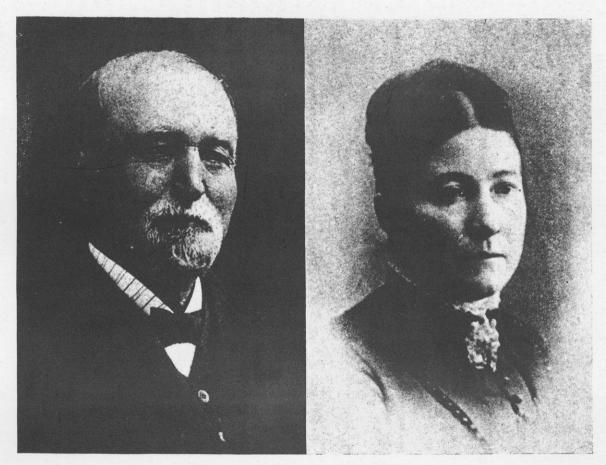

John McKanna, a substantial farmer of the town of Menomonie, was born in the town of Lucas, Dunn County, Wis., Dec. 22, 1880, son of Thomas and Mary (Kenny) McKanna. As a boy he acquired the elements of knowledge in the old Simon school, and remained at home assisting his parents to improve the home farm. He also operated a cream route for five years up to 1913 for the Hudson Road Creamery. In 1913 Mr. McKanna bought the old Ed Groundkeiper farm in Section 18, a farm of 160 acres which he has since operated and greatly improved. In 1919 he built a new barn of 40×80 feet, installing the West Bend barn equipment, and he is successfully following general farming and dairying, keeping high grade Holstein cattle with a pure bred sire in his herd. He is a stockholder in and president of the New Hudson Road Creamery, having held the latter office since 1919. His sister Agnes resides with him and attends to the household duties.

Alva Markham, now living retired in North Menomonie, is a man of pioneer experiences, who until quite recently was active along agricultural lines. He was born in New York State, Aug. 13, 1848, son of H. J. and Emily (Sharpe) Markham, and came west with his parents in 1853, the family settling first in Dodge County, Wisconsin. In 1858 they came to Dunn County and for four years H. J. Markham was engaged in farming in the town of Peru. Then selling out there, he came to the town of Menomonie, settling on government land two miles north of Menomonie Junction. After remaining there for several years they went to the state of Washington, making their home near Spokane, where they both passed away. Alva Markham acquired his education in the district school, and remained at home assisting his parents until he was 28 years old. He then bought 40 acres of railroad land in Section 3 in the town of Menomonie. It was heavily covered with timber and there were no buildings nor other improvements, so that the task of converting a farm out of it was a considerable one; but he set to work, made a clearing, built a small house, and then began the arduous work of cutting the timber, grubbing out the stumps and breaking the soil. As soon as possible he began general farming, which he kept up on his original place, and then rented and worked another 40 acres adjoining. Thus was he occupied for many years or until 1914, when he temporarily retired, renting our his farm and moving to North Menomonie, where he bought a house which he and his wife lived in for four years. He then returned to his farm, which he operated for another four years, or until 1922. In that year he finally retired and resumed his residence in North Menomonie, renting the farm to his son Earl C. He is a stockholder in the New Hudson Road Creamery. For many years Mr. Markham was one of the leading men of his town, which he served for 25 years as assessor. For six years he was not only a member but chairman of the town board, which made him a member of the county board, and as such he had a hand in shaping the destinies of Dunn County. As clerk of School District No. 2 he rendered useful service for 21 years. Naturally, he is a man very well known, and his record is one to which the fellow townsmen can point with pride. Alva Markham was married March 28, 1876, to Emily Racey, who was born in London, England, Nov. 9, 1849. For 48 years she has been his faithful friend and ccmpanion, and in less than two years, if both their lives are spared, they will be able to celebrate their Golden Wedding. They are the parents of five children, all living, namely, Lily Belle, Alice, Bertha, Racey and Earl C. Lily Belle is now Mrs. Arthur Finley of Menomonie and the mother of three children, Inez, Ethel and Jeanette. Alice has been twice married; first to Anton Schneider, by whom she had two sons, Roland C. and Alva A., both living. She is now the wife of Albert Larson of the town of Menomonie. Bertha, who is the wife of George Miller of Seattle, Wash., has one child, Henry. Racey, a farmer in the town of Menomonie, married Lena Coonley and has one child, Agnes. Earl C. is now operating the home farm.

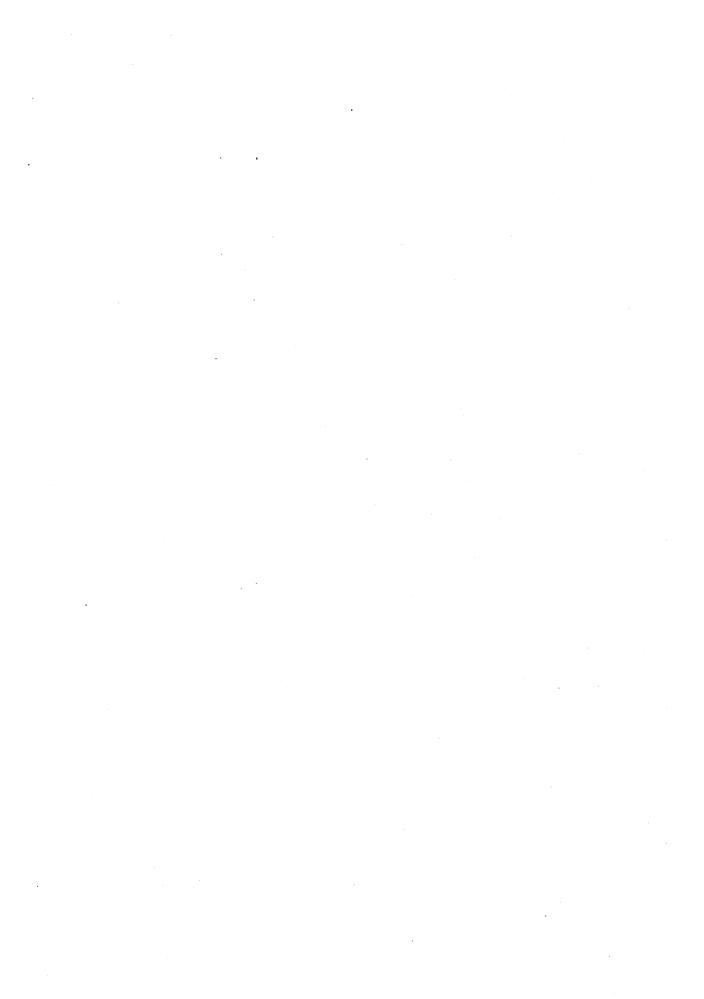

Earl C. Markham, recognized as a progressive and successful farmer, was born in the town of Menomonie, Oct. 28, 1890, son of Alva and Emily (Racey) Markham. He acquired his education in the District School No. 2, and as he grew up became his father's assistant in the task of developing the parental homestead, whereby he acquired that general knowledge of agriculture which is now serving him in good stead. He has always remained on the home place with the exception of a period of six years, which he spent on the Pacific coast. Since 1918 he has steadily worked on the farm, which he is keeping in good condition. He was married April 29, 1922, in the city of Menomonie, to Emma Maves, who was born Jan. 1, 1890, daughter of Carl and Bertha (Burant) Maves. Her parents are both now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Earl C. Markham are the parents of one child, Florence, born March 17, 1923.

Torger Hansen, a notable pioneer of Dunn County, now passed away, was born in Gudbransdalen, Norway, March 12, 1840. The first 17 years of his life were spent in his native land and then in 1857, seeking a larger field of opportunity, he set out for the United States. The ship in which he crossed the ocean met with severe storms and the voyage was a long one, taking 14 weeks. It may be assumed that young Hansen was glad to set his foot on dry land again. Proceeding west to Wisconsin, he located first at Coon Prairie, Vernon County, where he remained for a year. He then came to Menomonie, in which place he made his permanent home, his residence here covering a period of 65 years and terminating only with his death. During his first nine years in Menomonie Mr. Hansen was in the employ of Knapp, Stout & Co., first as a cook and "shanty boss" in the woods and the last four years as head cook in the company's kitchen in Menomonie. His service with the lumber company was, however, interrupted for a short time in 1861, when he enlisted in Captain Sherman's company. Second Wisconsin Cavalry, of which the late C. C. Washburn was colonel. He went to Milwaukee, where he was examined and rejected on account of a supposed physical disability. However, he followed the company to St. Louis and cooked for the soldiers for some time. In 1867 Mr. Hasnen built the Scandanaven Hotel, the name of which was afterwards changed to the Central House. In the same year, on July 27, he was married to Susan Mooney, who was born in Indiana, June 10, 1850, and together they opened the hotel which they conducted thereafter for 38 years, making it a favorite stop-They retired from the business in 1905, Mr. Hansen leasing the propping-place. erty to Alonzo Gray. About five years prior to his retirement Mr. Hansen had built a beautiful private residence on Tower Hill, surrounded by large and sightly grounds, and which he spent much time and money in improving, planting rare trees and shrubs, and here he and his wife spent their latter years. In the vicinity is the famous Hanson Grove, for many years a favorite resort for picnic parties. Mr. Hansen was a great admirer of landscape beauty and showed much public spirit in beautifying the parks and public grounds of Menomonie. In 1899, when the Knapp, Stout & Co. Company turned over Riverside park to the city, he and the late "Mike" Brooks were appointed by the city as a park commission. They worked hard and secured remarkable results with the small appropriations at their disposal, and the park was improved year by year until it is today one of the prettiest spots in Dunn County. For half a century Mr. Hansen was a conspicuous figure in northwestern Wisconsin. He took an active interest in public affairs and was a prominent factor in the development of the region. He was for many years a member of Menomonie Lodge No. 164 F. & A. M. At the time of his retirement from the hotel business, he was a fine looking man of 65 years, with a face to inspire confidence, and an erect sturdy figure, and he changed but slowly with the passing years. In 1870 he made a trip to Norway, where he saw his aged parents for the last time. He and his wife Susan lived an ideal home life, which lasted over 47 years, or until her death on Jan. 14, 1915. This was a sad blow, not only to Mr. Hansen, but also to their surviving children and to a wide circle of friends, as she was not only one of the best known women in Menomonie but also one of the best beloved for her fine womanly qualities which made all who came into contact with her highly value her friendship. They had seven children, two of whom died before the mother, the full list being as follows: Herman, born Oct. 1, 1868, now living in Menomonie; Mary, born Jan. 23, 1870, who is the wife of Peter Robertson of Seattle, Wash.; John T., born May 26, 1871, who died Oct. 17, 1894; William, born Aug. 9, 1874, who died Oct. 9, 1922; Susie, born Aug. 29, 1879, now a resident of Menomonie; Nellie, born March 2, 1883, who died Oct. 22, 1908; and Joy T., born Nov. 28, 1894, who lives in Menomonie. Mr. Hansen survived his wife for some eight years or more, finally passing away on Thursday, June 7, 1923, at the city hospital, after an illness of seven weeks. He was 83 years old. Thus ended a long and useful career that brought him recognition from the best people in the community in which he lived, and which illustrated in a high degree those sterling qualities possessed by the best class of European immigrants that have been the most potent factor in the development of the Northwest and other parts of this country. His record and that of his admirable wife are worthy of preservation as an example to the present and future generations.

Charles Haffelder, proprietor of Rose Hill Farm in Section 23, town of Lucas, who has been a resident of Dunn County for 56 years, was born in New Braunfels, Texas, on June 6, 1861, son of Phillip and Barbara (Schneider) Haffelder. The parents were natives of Germany, where they were reared and educated. The father came first to America, in 1845 or 1846, and the mother later, and, having settled in New Braunfels. Phillip Haffelder conducted a butcher shop there through the greater part of the Civil War period and up to 1868. He then sold out and came north to Wisconsin, settling first in Waukesha, where he and his family resided, however, for a short time only. While still there, early in the fall of the same year, he bought land in Dunn County, a tract of 40 acres in Section 22, town of Lucas. A little later, in the month of November, his wife and children came to Menomonie and were met by Joseph Brehm, who had guilded him to the land he had bought in the town of Lucas. There being a small log house and barn on it, he and his family took possession of the former, and thus he began a career of 25 years as a citizen and farmer of Dunn County. The early years of that period were years of hard work and some privation, common to all the pioneers of this county; but each year saw his farm in better condition, and in time the work became easier and he and his family enjoyed more of the comfort and prosperity. After he had made good progress on his original 40-acre tract, he bought an additional tract of 80 acres in Section 23 and continued his labors until his death on Dec. 23, 1903. He had then been a widower for over 12 years, his wife having passed away on Sept. 8, 1891. Such, in too brief outline, was the career of this worthy couple, who may be justly regarded as among the pioneers of Dunn County. Their son Charles, the direct subject of this sketch, was their only child. Living in New Braunfels, Texas, until he was seven years old, he had some slight schooling there, and was surrounded by a very different class of people from those whom he met when he came north with his parents, people of very different ideas and sentiments. But with change of scene such impressions are soon thrown off in childhood, and play little part in shaping the future man. He attended for a few years the old Simons school in the town of Lucas and subsequently remained with his parents, while they lived, after his father's death coming into possession of the home property. On doing so he sold the original tract of 40 acres on which they had made their home and since continued to improve the rest of the farm in Section 23, supplying it with a complete set of fine buildings. He also bought 80 acres more so as to have a 160-acre farm, and has placed 50 acres under cultivation. He does general farming and dairying, keeping Pole Durham cattle, with a high grade Guernsey sire in his herd, and he is a stockholder in the Hudson Road Creamery. Aside from his business interests he has given some time to the affairs of local government, rendering service in several different offices. He was for several years clerk of the school board of his district, treasurer of the town of Lucas for five years, and chairman of the town board for several years. He belongs to the Beavers in Menomonie. It was on April 26, 1886, that Mr. Haffelder began domestic life, aside from the parental home, being united in marriage in the city of Menomonie to Hulda E. Voelker. She was born June 8, 1868, in Germany, daughter of Julius and Julia (Sabotka) Voelker, and had accompanied her parents to this country in 1870, the family first settling in Ripon, A year later they moved to Menomonie, where Mr. Voelker entered the em-Wis. ploy of Knapp, Stout & Co., and was with them until 1875. He then settled on a a farm in Section 28, town of Menomonie, where he and his wife spent their remaining years, Mr. Voelker dying July 2, 1900 and Mrs. Voelker Oct. 12, 1912. The former, having been born Dec. 11, 1830, was in his seventy-first year, and the latter, born June 4, 1836, was 76 years old. They were married Dec. 6, 1861, and were the parents of six children, namely: Ernest, now a resident of Menomonie; Fred, a farmer in the town of New Haven; Hulda E., who is Mrs. Charles Haffelder; Pauline, now Mrs. Charles Ebert of Milwaukee; Alvina, wife of Frank Buss of Menomonie, and Anna, who is Mrs. Charles Walter of the town of Weston. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Haeffelder, as follows: Bertha A., born July 5, 1887, now Mrs. Charles Forester of San Antonio, Texas, and the mother of three children, Viola, Charlotte and Charles; William F., born Sept. 5, 1889, residing on the home farm; Clara M., born Oct. 20, 1891, who is Mrs. Melvin Williams of San Antonio, Texas; Hulda E., born June 22, 1895, now Mrs. Sever Hovind of Tramway, Dunn County; Charlotte J., born March 21, 1897, who is now Mrs. Charlotte Berg of Menomonie; Edna M., born Aug. 30, 1899, now in the employ of the Wisconsin Telephone Co. at Menomonie; and Charles J. to clear. He also worked 15 winters in the woods making his home until 31 years old with his parents. He then bought 80 acres in Section 29, town of Wilson, and after building a house and barn on the tract and clearing and breaking some of the land, he sold it and moved to the farm on which he is now living, of 160 acres in Section 29, which he already owned, having obtained it some time previous. He has since made many improvements on this place, both in the clearing and cultivation of the land and the erection of buildings, having 60 acres under the plow, and having a good cement-block house of eight rooms, with barns and necessary sheds. He does general farming and dairying, keeping mixed grade cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs and is a stockholder in the Ridgeland creamery. Mr. Moen was married in the town of Wilson in 1894 to Carrie Knutson, daughter of Jacob and Anna Knut-Her parents were natives of Norway who came to Dunn County, Wisconsin, son. in 1879, and spent the remainder of their lives here. They had two children, both of whom, Matt and Carrie, are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Moen have had six children, one of whom, Henry, is deceased. The five living are Mabel, Julius, Oscar, Malcolm and Alma. The four last mentioned are on the home farm. Mabel is now Mrs. Edwin Losness of the town of Colfax, and has three children, Leonard, Mildred and Loraine.

Andrew Shafer, a pioneer of Dunn County who passed away some 20 years ago, was born in Pennsylvania, where he grew to manhood and married Joan Ingalls. It was in the year 1851 or 1852 that they came west and settled in what is now Pepin County, but which was then a part of Dunn County. There they obtained land and started to build a home. To obtain supplies Mr. Shafer had to go to Read's Landing on the west bank of the Mississippi, pack them on his back, and then, recrossing the river by boat or ferry, carry them home along trails that passed through the wilderness. When about 1857 Capt. B. B. Downs started a sawmill at Downsville, which led to the settlement of that village, Mr. Shafer deciding that mill employment was better than struggling for a living where he was, gave up his place in Pepin County and came to Downsville to work for Capt. Downs. He and his wife remained in the town of Dunn until 1893 in which year they came to the town of Weston, where Mr. Shafer and his son Alvin took over a 180-acre farm in Section 31 and 32 then owned by Simon Shafer, a brother of Andrew. On this farm he made extensive improvements, erecting a complete set of buildings, and it was here that he and his wife spent the rest of their lives, Mr. Shafer dying Feb. 19, 1905 and Mrs. Shafer some years later, on Jan. 28, 1917. They were the parents of two children: Alice, who became the wife of Orman Laughlin, and Alvin, of the town of Weston.

Alvin Shafer, engaged in farming in Section 34, town of Weston, was born in the town of Dunn, this county, June 26, 1867, son of Andrew and Joan (Ingalls) Shafer. He was reared in that town, where as a boy he attended school. When old enough he became his father's assistant, and so continued for many years, helping to develop and improve the farm, of which in time he became the owner, caring for his parents until their death. With the exception of a short period to be later mentioned, he has continued to operate the farm. He has been successful and is a stockholder in the Downsville Cooperative Creamery. He also belongs to the Odd Fellows' and Beavers' lodges in Downsville. On Aug. 29, 1912, Alvin Shafer was united in marriage in Pepin County, with Mrs. Alto Ogden, who was born in Pepin County, Wis., on Oct. 19, 1880, daughter of Joseph and Amelia Hight, her parents being early settlers in Pepin County. Mrs. Shafer was first married to Jerard Ogden, by whom she had one son, Lynn, now residing at home. Of her union with Mr. Shafer, a daughter, Joyce, was born, On Aug. 21, 1915. In 1918 Mr. and Mrs. Shafer rented their farm and went to Menomonie, where they resided until the spring of 1923, when they returned to the farm. They own a good residence at 602 12th Avenue, and are members of the Congregational Church in the city

William H. Woods, a good representative of the farming industry in the town of Sherman, where he has been settled for the last 61 years, was born in Adams County, Wisconsin, Oct. 12, 1863, son of James and Eliza J. (Harper) Woods. The father
