The libraries provide public access to a wide range of material, including online exhibits, digitized collections, archival finding aids, our catalog, online articles, and a growing range of materials in many media.

When possible, we provide rights information in catalog records, finding aids, and other metadata that accompanies collections or items. However, it is always the user's obligation to evaluate copyright and rights issues in light of their own use.

Doctor-to-doctor . . .
from first page to last

Every medical journal is a communication from doctors to doctors.

Doctors write the articles.

Doctors select and edit the manuscripts.

Doctors check the illustrations for accuracy.

Doctors contribute the news.

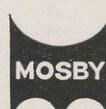

Doctors express their opinions in the "Letters" columns.

That is why your journals are reliable and authoritative. And the rewards are greatest when you read them carefully. Each page contains vital information that broadens your scope and equips you with more knowledge that improves your practice. Each journal can be a valuable reference to be used again and again. Read yours regularly and often.

Medical journals are more interesting to you . . . because they serve your interests better.
