BADGER BIGS

Radar Researchers

Among the estimated top 20 per cent of the nation's best physicists who were called upon to do work in the development of radar during the war were four Wisconsin faculty members, three of whom are UW alumni. They are Raymond D. Herb, '31, professor of physics; Ragnar Rollefson, '26, associate professor of physics; Albert E. Whitford, '28, assistant professor of astronomy; and Henry E. Guerlac, assistant professor of the history of science, who recently resigned from the faculty here to teach at Cornell university.

These four faculty members who were on wartime leave from their teaching duties worked at the Radiation Laboratory at Cambridge, Mass. The tremendous projects developed through the laboratory's combined efforts included night-fighter radar which was an improvement over the 1940 British models, a radar set that could follow aircraft with sufficient accuracy to permit effective blind anti-aircraft fire, mobile radar equipment to track enemy aircraft automatically, the famed "Mickey" sets for bombing by radar and the GCA set which enabled planes to land with very low ceilings.

When the story of how United States scientists found an answer to the enemy's radar equipment and rendered this powerful weapon useless against our army and navy was released recently, it was disclosed that four alumni played important parts in this great work also.

Prof. John H. Van Vleck, '20, now chairman of the physics department at Harvard university, was head of the research and analysis division at Radio Research laboratory where these radar countermeasures were developed, serving in that capacity for almost two years.

Prof. Edwin A. Yunker, '30, now returned to his post on the faculty of Oregon State college, was head of the transmitter division of the laboratory, consequently being one of those responsible for the development of carpet transmitters. He spent over three years with the laboratory on this project.

Dr. Alfred T. Goble, '29, while on leave from Alfred university, was a member of the group responsible for the development of Window, (the aluminum foil counter-radar device). He spent ten months in England as head of the Window group at the branch Radio Research laboratory which was set up there.

Dr. James D. Cobine, '31, who is now associated with the Research Laboratory of General Electric, was in charge of the group which was responsible for the development of noise tubes designed to interfere with the enemy's radar scope screen. He spent almost two years on the work.

University's Birthday

Three More Years To UW Centennial

WHEN the University of Wisconsin celebrates her 97th birthday on February 5, 1946, she will be lighting just one more of the candles which will aid the state, nation, and world in recognizing her as an unflinching source of learning of the highest.

Wisconsin's centennial year, the academic year of 1948-49, now less than three years away, will mark the greatest event in the history of the University. Because this event toward which the true Wisconsin spirit has been leading for so long comes so soon, loyal Badgers the world over are finding inspiration in their alma mater's anniversary this next month. It was in a period of less than three years at the beginning of the University of Wisconsin century that the institution overcame its initial trials, passed through its beginner's crisis, and established its first solid footing. Now it must be in a period of like duration at the end of the one hundred year stretch that Wisconsin's crowning glories be brought forth and solidified as evidences of the University's lasting greatness.

It was in 1846, just three years before the first UW class met that the people of Wisconsin met to frame their state constitution. It was then that the delegates found themselves embroiled in a heated debate over the subject of higher education in the state, all because it had to be decided what should be done with revenues arising from the land-grants for education which the federal government was about to give to the State.

A Mr. Randall suggested "that all public moneys would go to the common district schools." Mineral Point's Nathaniel F. Myer objected to this proposal, declaring that all public moneys "except the moneys arising from the university lands" go to the common district schools. Then Edward G. Ryan of Racine, conscious of the competition which a state university would give his own local "seminary of learning" suggested that "until a university shall be established, the net income from the university lands shall be appropriated to the support of the normal schools." But in voting on Ryan's amendment the next day, 51 delegates vetoed his idea, defeating the proposal by a margin of only three votes.

Thus, only three years before the actual founding of the university, Wisconsin's first major crisis passed. So also, in the last three years before the celebration of the University of Wisconsin centennial must great things be accomplished.

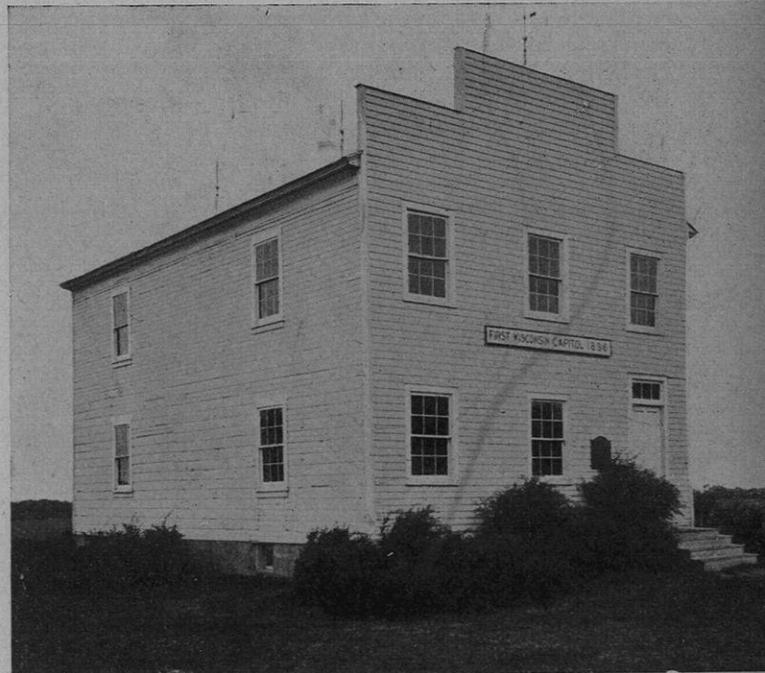

This Founders' Day, as in each year past, alumni alone and in groups must take the opportunity of revitalizing their Wisconsin heritage. More than ever before is there need this year for expression of the unified loyalty to the University which combined alumni effort can display. The 27 alumni clubs scattered through the State of Wisconsin and the 47 clubs located elsewhere in the world are organizational evidences of the "Wisconsin-ness" that is in the heart of each alumnus. These 74 groups of alumni and former students who meet only on the common grounds of indebtedness to their alma mater and responsibility to her welfare, will find Founders' Day 1946 an occasion upon which to give some open consideration. Meetings of members at this time will renew the Badger sentiments at a time when increasing feeling can mean constructive action.

During this interim preceding the centennial, alumni can be conscious of the program toward which the faculty and administration are guiding the 1948-49 plans. The Centennial committee, of which Prof. W. H. Kiekhofer is chairman, is planning out a full year of activity for the University which will mark the year one of distinguished scholarship for not only interested Badgers and Wisconsin citizens, but for education-conscious people the world over.

Support of the program of the University of Wisconsin Foundation is one specific activity upon which energies can well be channeled. The plan for expansion of the lower campus which has been fathered by William G. Hagenah, executive director of the Foundation, is one which aims toward the centennial. With cooperative alumni support the main portions of the plan can be realized within the three year deadline date set by the University's centennial.

In order to round out the last decade of the University of Wisconsin's first century, alumni everywhere must take advantage of the source of pride in their alma mater which is evidenced at Founders' Day. To back the worthwhile programs which leaders of the University are hoping to round out by 1948-49, alumni must not coast along until that great year. We must accept the challenge which will be offered once more this February 5 when we reflect on the great strides undertaken during Wisconsin's first three years. These next three must be at least equally productive.

University Uses Truax Hospital

THE move from active duty with the armed forces to civilian duty studying at the University of Wisconsin will take some 500 students right back to quarters on an army post, according to the most recent development in housing arrangements for veteran students at Wisconsin.

The University has been issued permission to use the Truax Field hospital on the outskirts of Madison for housing for some of the hundreds of veterans who are flocking to the campus for study under the GI Bill's educational provisions.

A. W. Peterson, director of business and finance, has been negotiating with army and government authorities for some months in order to complete plans for University leasing of the hospital facilities in time for second semester occupancy. In keeping with the ruling by Congress that all housing now declared surplus to the armed forces be transferred to the jurisdiction of the National Housing Agency, Truax's "surplus" army air forces hospital has become available through this government agency. The War department has released the hospital to the Federal Public Housing Authority, a department of the National Housing Agency, and the FPHA has now issued a "Permit to Enter" to the University.

Facilities in the hospital area will accommodate 80 married couples, and 420 single veterans. It is available only to veterans attending the university and to their immediate families. Complete dormitory service will be available to these veterans, with a cafeteria and kitchen set up for their use and with meals served in the mess halls there. There will be no housekeeping facilities available for the 80 married couples, who will have to take their meals in the cafeteria just as the single veterans. No families with children will be admitted because of the lack of cooking facilities. Student veterans living at Truax will receive bus service to the University.

S. Lee Burns, director of residence halls for the University, will serve as director of the University Truax Field project and D. L. Halverson, associate director of business and finance, will serve as acting director of the Division of Residence Halls there. Both men were appointed by the Regents.

Occupancy by University students will be possible in time for the start of second semester and already the bulk of available quarters have been rented. All rooms for married students have been filled and almost all of the quarters for single students have been rented in advance.

The field hospital is located at the main gate to Truax Field just beyond Madison's city limits on the east side and near the junction of highways 51 and 151. The hospital has a central heating system and separate nurses' quarters.

Might Use Badger Village

Peterson also is working on the possibility of obtaining some of the housing facilities available at Badger Ordnance Works for the use of veterans attending the university and their immediate families. If arrangements can be completed satisfactorily here, living quarters will not be available until well after the second semester begins. The Regents have informally authorized Pres. E. B. Fred and Peterson to secure all available facilities at the Badger Ordnance village for the housing and teaching of students. The University has already made application with the FPHA in Chicago for these facilities.

BOW facilities would include some apartments, some regular barracks, and some barracks with single rooms.

Surplus Army Hospital Houses Campus Veterans

A. W. Peterson

They could accommodate 955 single men and 483 married couples as well as some of the faculty.

Housing here also falls under the jurisdiction of the Federal Public Housing Authority. During the full use of the Badger Ordnance Works this housing was developed by the War Department, and now since the plant has closed the rooms and apartments have been declared surplus.

Because of the location of Badger Village, as the housing area there is known, there would be a rather complicated transportation problem. Just south of Baraboo, Wis., this settlement would be almost 40 miles from University of Wisconsin classrooms.

If the University is able to obtain the Badger Ordnance units, they may do some University teaching up there, rather than transport all of the students the entire distance to Madison every day. A number of class rooms are available right at Badger Village.

It is being assumed that since these quarters will not be ready by the start of second semester, they will be used for a special eight-weeks terms for veterans comparable to the term held during the second half of the first semester. If classes are taught there, they will probably be limited to basic courses and freshman subjects, such as English, mathematics, languages, and economics.

The university has already received permission from the Federal Public Housing authority to use vacant houses in the first unit built for Badger Ordnance workers which is located in Baraboo. About 15 married veteran students already are living there, but they must furnish their own transportation to Madison. Each round trip costs them $1.30.

The WISCONSIN ALUMNUS is published monthly, October through July, by the Wisconsin Alumni association and is entered as second class matter at the post office at Madison, Wis., under the act of March 3, 1879. Subscription to the ALUMNUS (included in the membership dues of the Wisconsin Alumni association) is $2. a year; subscription to non-members is $4. per year.

UNIVERSITY NEWS

Who Shall Study Here?

When the overcrowding of the University's facilities became a matter of some concern to authorities here, steps had to be taken to curtail and direct the student population. Last fall the first restrictions were placed upon registration privileges of out-of-town state women because of the lack of housing available.

Now a special committee has been called by Pres. E. B. Fred to make a complete study of the admission policies of the University. The committee will work with the faculties of the various schools and colleges in making their study and report the results to the entire faculty.

Members of the committee are Profs. M. O. Withey, H. L. Ahlgren, Paul F. Clark, Katherine L. Cronin, J. H. Herriott, M. H. Ingraham, Paul Knaplund, Kenneth Little, and William G. Rice.

Formulation of this new committee is the result of a look toward the future and the realization that the 1946-47 enrollment will break previous records. 13,000 to 15,000 students are expected here, as compared with the 9,209 in attendance this semester. War veterans from all over the nation will be accommodated by the University. Some kind of admission policy will have to be adopted by the University to make sure that Wisconsin men and women are not crowded out of their own school.

Some of the factors which will enter into the study made by this new faculty committee are the proportion of men and women enrolling, the proportion of state-residents to out-of-state students, and the distribution of out-of-state students throughout the nation. Last year Illinois and New York led the other states, with about 17% of the student population coming from these two states. Wisconsin supplied 65% of the total enrollment.

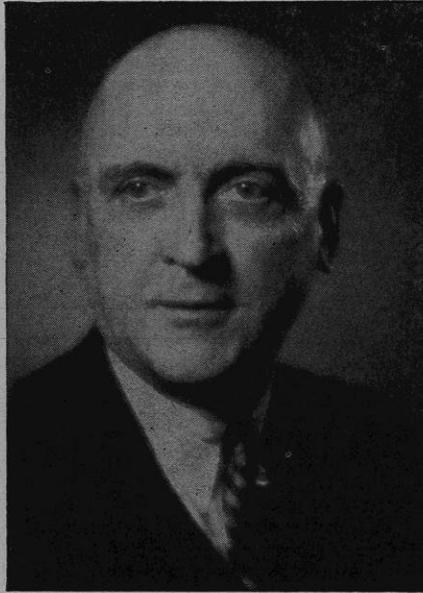

During the war there was a tremendous increase in the number of women students who came to the University. Institutions throughout the nation have experienced the same increase in co-ed population, and many anticipate that this trend will not subside or decline, but merely indicate that future enrollments will be higher than expected.

Housing Conference

The University of Wisconsin was designated as a temporary central clearing house for all social and economic research throughout the country by delegates to a national housing research conference which was held at the University late last month. Prof. Richard U. Ratcliff, professor of land economics in the school of commerce and chairman of the conference, was appointed temporary coordinator of research for the governmental, institutional and university bodies represented at the conference.

About 25 representatives of various groups interested in the general field of housing research came to the campus for the two day conference.

Ratcliff was instructed to appoint a small advisory committee to work with him on coordinating the research in the field of housing. He was also appointed to head a committee to seek to persuade the Social Science Research Council, New York, to set up a housing research committee which would have a permanent staff and would take over the task of stimulating and coordinating housing research.

The conference was called to determine a manner by which housing research could be stimulated and coordinated in order to learn the causes of the current national housing problem and to prevent the recurrence of such problems in the future.

"One of the greatest obstacles to be overcome before research in the field will be adequate," Prof. Ratcliff declared, "is the lack of trained personnel. We are interested in finding a way by which research can be expanded—and it was generally agreed that one of the best methods would be to increase the numbers of trained researchers. The first step will be to develop opportunities for graduate work in the field within a few of the nation's schools."

The conference, which revealed the job opportunities in the field, demonstrated that there are more funds and jobs available than trained personnel to do the work.

The findings of the conference will be published in the Journal of Land and Public Utility Economics, published at Wisconsin, and in addition will include an elaborate list of research proposals.

The speakers at the conference included Prof. Svend Reimer, of the department of sociology, Lawrence Bloomberg, of the Federal Public Housing Authority, J. Bion Philipson, of the National Housing Administration, Prof. Pearce H. Leipziger, of the University of Texas, and L. J. Markwardt, of the Forest Products Laboratory.

Board of Visitors

Otto A. Oestreich, '97, has just been appointed to membership on the Board of Visitors, serving there as one of the six members chosen by the Wisconsin Alumni association.

Mr. Oestreich is an attorney with the firm of Jeffris, Mouat, Oestreich, Avery and Wood in Janesville. He is a past president of the Wisconsin State Bar association.

Veterans

Fewer war veterans are withdrawing from the university than civilian students, in proportion to their numbers, according to Prof. E. E. Milligan of the office of veterans' affairs. Speaking before a Student Town Hall meeting last month, Professor Milligan belittled rumors that an excessive number of veterans are dropping out of classes and stated that he considers veteran withdrawals merely "normal."

Although upperclass vets are making somewhat lower average grades than civilian students, he does not find it feasible to recommend refresher courses for the relatively small numbers who need them in any given subject. Professor Milligan said further that freshman vets are excelling their civilian classmates by a narrow margin in average grades.

Veterans' lack of interest in campus extra-curricular activities was attributed to the fact that 40 percent of them are married, when this topic was brought up in further discussion of student veterans' problems at the Town Hall meeting. Many believed that they will later take a more active part in these affairs.

Ex-soldiers of World War II will comprise 90 percent of male enrollment within a few semesters, Professor Milligan stated. At present, some 40 percent of the total student body are men.

Nearly 100 students belong to the campus veterans' organization, University of Wisconsin Veterans of World War II, which soon enters its fourth semester of activity. The group maintains an office in the Memorial Union building, and holds weekly meetings to discuss veteran-students' matters. Two representatives of the office of veterans' affairs addressed its first meeting early in the fall. James Melli, Kenosha senior, is president, assisted by Leonard Sherr, New York, vice-president, and Verlin Hardy, Wisconsin Rapids, treasurer.

Mary Huntley, co-ed from Grand Rapids, Mich., who personified the 10 women vets now on the campus, was elected secretary of the World War II veterans' club. She expects the other WAC, WAVE and SPAR veterans soon to become active in the group also. Miss Huntley, herself a former SPAR, states that women vets have not found as many personal re-adjustment problems as male veterans on the campus. However, since most of them are older than civilian co-eds and all have had service experience tending to make them more mature, they are sometimes a bit resentful of dormitory regulations and they have relatively little interest in most of the extra-curricular activities. She is very anxious to see all the other women vets active just as the men are, and resents "men only" rules of some of the national veterans' societies.

Many of the married vets at Wisconsin are living in the Randall Park trailer camp, and they have elected Clifford J. Hicks, Wauwatosa, president. He was a student here before the war, and was wounded and captured in Europe. Mrs. Howard T. Timian, Milwaukee, wife of a student vet, is secretary and James Ross, Elgin, Manitoba, Canada, treasurer. Emory Lee Person, Kenosha, is chairman of the trailer camp council.

This is the cover of an illustrated brochure which has recently been published to explain the purpose and plans of the University of Wisconsin Foundation. Appearance of this booklet marks the initial step in a campaign by the Foundation to promote gifts and bequests to the University.

Sections of the publication are devoted to the plan for expansion of the lower campus which the Foundation is backing, and to plans for other projects such as the obtaining of certain equipment for the University and the establishment of scholarships.

Copies of this booklet may be obtained by writing to the University of Wisconsin Foundation, 905 University avenue, Madison 5, or to the Wisconsin Alumni Association, Memorial Union, Madison 6.

Foundations Merge

To combine activities in soliciting funds for university advancement, the University of Wisconsin Foundation has now absorbed the Wisconsin Educational Foundation. Both organizations were founded during the last academic year, the former in April and the latter in November 1944.

The University of Wisconsin Foundation has its purpose, the encouragement of gifts and bequests to the University of Wisconsin, the money to be used for buildings, scholarships and other purposes. The Wisconsin Educational Foundation had sought money only for the establishment of scholarships.

The merger of the two organizations was announced by Arthur E. Timm, secretary of the Wisconsin Educational Foundation. This move will eliminate the general confusion which has been created in the minds of some alumni and state residents, concerning the two foundations, and it will also prevent duplication in soliciting funds.

Space Survey

To guide planning for anticipated increases in enrollment and expanding programs of research and public service, a building survey now being made on the university campus will show the present use of every inch of space available. Every room on the campus will be checked, to compile an up-to-date record of its use and capabilities.

A special faculty committee headed by William B. Sarles, assistant to the president, has been appointed by President Fred. The committee is being aided by custodians of 35 university buildings. Profs. Richard Evans, John Guy Fowlkes, Philip G. Fox, Vincent E. Kivlin, Roland A. Ragatz and Alden W. White are the other committee members.

Wisconsin Loyalty

The University of Wisconsin was founded on faith—faith in the future of the state, faith in the thirst for knowledge of coming generations, faith in the place of education in building a democracy. That faith has been justified in the development of the university during the ninety-seven years of its existence, and by the achievement of the men and women who have gone out from the Wisconsin campus into many different fields of activity, into the professions and business, into agriculture, science, and the arts. Wisconsin alumni are grateful to their university for the practical knowledge and rigorous training gained within its walls, for the inspiration gathered from creative teachers, for the enduring friendships established in student days.

Let us, too, have faith in the future, in the marvelous scientific discoveries that are sure to come, in the higher educational standards that will obtain in the world of the future, and in the part that the University of Wisconsin will have in these discoveries and the social, economic, and governmental developments that will follow.—HARRY A. BULLIS, '17, President, General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Teacher Efficiency

That teachers' efficiency is best judged by the actual achievements of their pupils is the conclusion of Prof. Frederic D. Cheydleur of the department of French and Italian in a new study just published as a special University bulletin after years of preparation by Professor Cheydleur and his assistant, Ethel A. Schenck.

The purpose of the investigation was to discover an effective formula to gauge the relative efficiency of teachers, especially in large institutions with many students and different instructors teaching the same subjects. The work of some 175 instructors and 36,000 University of Wisconsin French students from 1919 through 1943 was used as the basis of the analysis, although the principles developed are applicable to other fields. The new principles explained in Professor Cheydleur's publication are strictly objective and are believed to be much more reliable, clearer, and more convincing than the usual subjective methods of rating teacher effectiveness. The study is titled "Criteria of Effective Teaching in Basic French Courses."

Important conclusions reached by the study were: 1. teachers are more effective if they do not do graduate study while instructing, 2. professors are more effective than teachers of lower rank, 3. men and women teachers are almost equally effective, 4. American-born teachers excel foreign-born, 5. small classes increase teaching efficiency, 6. grade-point averages in all subjects and sectioning of students into upper and lower classes are more determinant factors in final grades than teaching efficiency or class size, and 7. strong teachers show high efficiency both in departmental tests and highly standardized language examinations.

Ag Short Course

Eleanor Holland climbs the steps of Ag hall to enroll in the short course.

Wisconsin's famed farm short course has just entered its second term of the 1945-46 school year with over 150 students enrolled, about a third of whom are veterans.

The 15 weeks course begins in November and ends in March so that students can return to the spring work on the farms from which they came. It is divided into three five week terms.

Two thirds of the total enrolling in the second term are veterans and they represent all branches of service. Fourteen of the entire group are foreign students, six coming from Colombia, South America, two each from Chile, Mexico and Iceland, and one each from Guatemala and the Philippines. This year one co-ed has invaded the usually all-male class.

Philosophy

Visiting professor in the philosophy department during the second semester will be the noted negro educator and philosopher, Dr. Alain L. Locke.

Dr. Locke will teach a course on "The Philosophy of the Arts" and a seminar on "Value" as well as conduct one of the regular courses on logic for the department.

A graduate of Harvard and holder of a Ph. D. from there, Dr. Locke has been a member of the faculty of Howard university and has also written a number of books on the negro and problems of both race and culture.

Sevringhaus

Dr. Elmer L. Sevringhaus, '16, member of the university medical school faculty since 1921, will leave Wisconsin in March to become director of clinical research for Hoffman La Roche, Inc., Swiss drug firm with American laboratories at Nutley, N. J.

As professor of medicine on the university faculty and physician at Wisconsin General hospital, Dr. Sevringhaus' major field of research, practice and teaching has been metabolic medicine. He has specialized in such subjects as treatment of diabetes mellitus, human nutrition, and endocrine disorders. He has written numerous articles for medical journals and has published several books on these and related phases of medicine.

Last year he spent several months in Italy as co-leader of a privately-sponsored nutritional relief unit in Italy, operating under the UNRRA. Dr. Sevringhaus is governor of the College of Physicians for Wisconsin, member of the council on pharmacy and chemistry of the American Medical association, and a former national president of the Association for the Study of Internal Secretions.

Dr. Sevringhaus received his bachelor of arts degree in 1916 and his master's degree in 1919, both from the University of Wisconsin. He attended Harvard to obtain his doctor of medicine degree.

The Wisconsin professor's new post will see him directing the work of a staff of medical scientists and physicians in the Hoffman La Roche Laboratories. President of this drug firm is L. Dave Barney, '27, who resigned as business manager of the Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation in the fall of 1945 to take that position.

Feinsinger

Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger of the Law School is now back on the campus preparing to teach second semester classes. Just before returning he served on a three-man fact-finding board which Pres. Truman appointed to study the situation behind the scheduled nationwide steel strike of mid-January. Feinsinger has been serving as a public member of the War Labor Board.

Seth Richardson, '03, is holding a key position in the Pearl Harbor investigation these days. He is now serving as the new chief counsel for the Pearl Harbor Investigating committee. A former assistant attorney general during the Hoover administration, Richardson is a member of the law firm of Davies, Richberg, Beebe, Busick, and Richardson in Washington, D. C.

BADGER BOOKSHELF

Edward Heth, '32

ANY NUMBER CAN PLAY, by Edward Harris Heth, '32. Harper and Brothers. $2.

This intense novel tells the story of one night in the "house" of Charley King, the big-time gambler, whose fascination for the feverish plunges of a world of cards, dice, and wheels barely surpasses his devotion to his wife. Time magazine's review states, "Of that momentous night when Charley had his triumph—and his come-uppance—Wisconsin born Author Heth has made a fast-moving short novel."

Because the role of Charley is one which commands the reader's total sympathy in spite of his weaknesses, the story of his struggle against the inevitable consequences—family disgrace and an untimely death for himself—is particularly moving. The screen rights to this story have been purchased by the movies, and Charles Boyer is to be cast as Charley. This is Heth's fourth novel.

THE LONELY STEEPLE, by Victor Wolfson, '31. Simon and Shuster. $2.50.

In this first novel, Wolfson tells the story of Addie Eldredge in a confession she writes from behind the bars of an asylum. In simple language and in a style at times almost hypnotic, Addie delves deep into the how and why behind the act which sent her to the institution.

In a Milwaukee Journal review, Frances Stover writes, "It is a little book of somber tragedy, so carefully composed, so economically written, so perfectly literal, that you at once think of the Greeks . . . This is a notable book; it is fiercely frightful. The tragedy holds you with its skinny hand; you cannot let it go."

Wolfson, a student of the Meiklejohn experimental college at the University, is famous for his play, "Excursion".

A MAN AGAINST TIME. By William Ellery Leonard. D. Appleton-Century. $2.

This love story in sonnet form was published almost a year and a half after the death of Prof. Leonard. It is autobiographical in some degree at least, but it treats the story of a love of an old man for a young woman in classical form, with each sonnet containing both classical allusions and references to love as an age-old poetic theme.

The appearance of this book has brought reviews of varying shades of praise from critics throughout the country. Leonard's treatment of the anatomy of love is thought by some to be somewhat outspoken and overly frank.

Clara Leiser, '24, is Leonard's literary executor, who arranged for publication of these sonnets. Miss Leiser is working on a biography of Leonard.

"YOU'LL BE SORRY!" by Prof. Samuel Rogers, faculty. Harper and Brothers. $2.

The second mystery story by Prof. Rogers, this one again deals with murder and again permits little Prof. Hatfield, the ornithologist, psychologist and chemist, to bring order and the solution to the fore. Kate Archer almost refused to visit the family of one of her former boarding school classmates for the summer because of her ominous forebodings upon being invited, but she did go and the situation developed. This second mystery is more satisfying than was Rogers' first mystery published a year ago. He is working on a third Prof. Hatfield mystery now.

HOW A BABY GROWS, by Arnold Gesell, '03, Harper and Brothers. $2.

In over 800 photographs and probably less than 8,000 words Dr. Gesell here traces the growth of a baby, enabling the reader to view the whole process in perspective. The pictures are arranged in two parts, showing first the growth and development of the baby's body, and second the growth and development of his mental abilities and personality. The text is written to point out the significance in the pictures and also to convey extreme respect for the individuality of each infant. The total effect is in line with the developmental philosophy of all of Dr. Gesell's other works, but is presented in a much simpler form than in his other books.

Dr. Gesell is director of the Clinic of Child Development, Yale university.

HOW TO SPEAK AND WRITE FOR RADIO, by Alice Keith, '16. Harper and Brothers. $3.

This reference manual covers the full range of subject matter implied in its title, discussing the many details of broadcasting technique and how to prepare material for broadcasting. Miss Keith prepared this book originally as a text for students at the National Academy of Broadcasting, of which she is the director. Sample scripts of all types of programs and commercials are included, and one section deals with putting the message on the air. Exercises for improvement in voice quality and diction are included in this chapter.

Winter weather came to the campus somewhat craftily this season. First a beautiful snow covered everything and left every tree and every building looking like a painting. Then the thermometer dipped and a spell of eight to eleven below kept veterans who had recently returned from the Pacific shivering. By Christmas it had warmed up somewhat, but by the time school started again in 1946 the sheet of ice covering everything made travel of all sorts—whether it be the trip from home to Madison or the trip from dorm to Bascom—a dangerous excursion. Just before the home stretch enabled exam-cramming students to complain about something other than the weather, a wet atmosphere poured forth buckets and buckets of real rain, completely camouflaging ice with water and producing not only damp stadium boots but also gloomy spirits.

SPORTS

Basketball

Basketball climbed into the limelight on the sport scene as December rolled around and Coach Bud Foster brushed up on his '45-46 edition of Badger basketball.

The squad is an inexperienced one but has put up a game battle in every contest engaged to date. Bob Cook, a naval reserve, leads the squad in scoring and also Big Ten scorers in non-conference games.

Twenty-two years old, 5' 11" Cook is in his third year. Bob Smith, 17-year old freshman has also shown promise. Rounding out the starting line-up are Exner Menzel, forward, Wally Niemuth, 6' 3" center, and Dick Bunke, freshman forward.

Coach Foster's quintet fared well in the first two warm-up tilts as the Cardinals defeated Carroll college, 67-25, and Ripon college, 59-24. The first sizeable victory came against Marquette at the Fieldhouse on December 8 as forward Exner Menzel sparked the Badgers to a 43-32 win.

In the first game away from home, Notre Dame played host and handed the Foster outfit a 65-51 setback. Cook came into his own as he led the scoring with 26 points, one up on Leo Klier of the Irish.

The Badgers returned to the Fieldhouse on December 17 to face Great Lakes and the Bluejackets triumphed easily, 54-47. Foster's men couldn't match the Tars' deadly set shooting and a late Badger surge fell short of the mark. Cook again topped the Cards with 13 points.

The Cardinals met Marquette again on December 22, this time on the latter's home court and an overconfident Badger five was upset to the tune of 62-41. This was the first defeat Wisconsin has suffered at the hands of Marquette in three seasons. The series now stands 24 victories for Wisconsin and 14 for the Blue and Gold.

The Badgers continued their travels and losing ways when they stopped at Great Lakes December 30 and were downed by the Bluejackets, 53-39. Bob Cook continued his torrid pace with 20 points.

On New Year's night the quintet resumed activity after the Christmas recess but there was no cause for celebration as Illinois downed the Cards 38-31. The Illini broke away with six minutes left to play, scoring nine points while holding the Badgers scoreless.

Football

Shadows of the '45 football season were still passing along the sport scene as honors were doled out to those meriting them this month.

Jack Mead, right end, who recently completed his third season with the gridders, was named by his teammates to the honorary captaincy. Mead, a graduate student majoring in physical education, attained this goal despite injuries to both knees in the past three years. He participated in the '45 Shrine game at San Francisco, scoring the only touchdown for the East, snagging a pass from Notre Dame's Frank Dancewitz.

Right tackle Clarence Esser, native of Madison, was Wisconsin's nomination for the best player in Big Ten. In the league voting that followed the big tackle placed fifth. Ollie Cline, Ohio State fullback claimed top honors. Esser also placed on the Associated Press "All Big Ten" grid squad. Jack Mead, Hal Faverty, center, and Big Ben Bendrick, fullback also received honorable mention by AP.

Athletic director Harry Stuhldreher was chosen to preside over the Western conference athletic directors for the next year, it was announced at a meeting of the conference heads in Chicago. He succeeds Guy Mackey of Purdue.

At the meeting it was decided that football, basketball, and baseball championships would be designated in the future and not merely left as a mythical title. Hopes that something new would arise concerning Big Ten activities in Rose Bowl contests were not realized.

Boxing

Lt. De Witt Portal took over the mentorship of the Badger belters after his discharge from the Navy in mid-November. Formerly of San Jose State college, and Navy Pre-flight schools at Athens, Ga., and Iowa City, Ia., Portal ranks among the topnotchers in college boxing circles.

Early in December it was announced that Johnny Walsh, former boxing coach, has received his discharge from the armed forces and will soon join Portal in guiding the boxers. Walsh amassed a total of 56 wins against five losses in his stay at the university from '33 to '44.

The annual boxing tourney was held on December 20 at the Fieldhouse and the pugilists impressed in their first showing. Pete Monfore of the 175-pound class claimed the title of fightin'est fighter. Dick Arndt, a 165-pounder looked exceptionally good in his bout. Bill Weiss copped the heavyweight bout.

Marlin "Pat" Harder, '44, Milwaukee, has signed a contract to play professional football with the Chicago Cardinals. Pat has recently been discharged from the Marine Corps after serving 30 months.

Male Supremacy? Elections

Wisconsin student elections this year, though as lively and hotly contested as usual, were at least consistent in their outcome. Three students named Jim, all of whom are World War II veterans, now hold the reins of student government. Jim Melli, Kenosha, was elected president of the senior class; Jim Moore, Watertown, was elected chairman of the junior prom; and Jim Allen, Oshkosh, was elected permanent president of the Men's Halls association.

Melli was one of the founders of the UW Veterans' organization and is also president of that club. Moore, a student politician before his days with the 15th Air Force in Italy, had been chairman of pre-prom in 1943. Allen, a newcomer to the university, represents all the residents of the men's university dormitories.

It has been noted by many a co-ed that the return of many men to the campus has changed the activity scene. Beginning in 1942 and on through '43 and '44, women gradually took over nearly all important campus positions. In the past two years they have held the presidencies of Student Board, the Union, and the senior class as well as editorship of both the Daily Cardinal and the Badger.

This year, however, men are taking over. At the helm of Student Board this year is Herb Bisno, succeeding Bill Rodiger, '45, who in turn followed Kay Schindler, '44. The Union is now headed by Jerry Wulk, last year's prom chairman, who follows Anne Boegholt, '45. After several semesters headed by women editors, the Daily Cardinal now is being headed by John McNelly, another veteran. Likewise the Badger changes from two years of management by women to one of editorship by Bob Engle, '46.

There is still vague talk of the revival of Haresfoot, though alumni of the peak Haresfoot days declare that no show could be done with less than a full year's practice. Some of the ex-Haresfooters who played in "The Women", the last pre-war Haresfoot show, are back in school now and are agitating for a '46 production.

Kiekhofer's Wall

The news has finally broken and it is now fact instead of mere rumor. The famous "Kiekhofer's wall" property has been sold. The Wisconsin B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, inc. has purchased the site for a proposed new Jewish student center.

Last summer when the first rumors of the sale of this property hit the campus there began much talk of preserving the wall as a Badger tradition and moving it to some university-owned property where it could remain ever available to student painters and pranksters. Letters from Fighting Badgers the world over urged that this step be taken.

Now it appears that no special steps will be necessary to preserve the 61-year-old wall as a scene of the traditional painting at present and that only alarmists worry that the tradition might be broken. An editorial recently appeared in the Daily Cardinal reading as follows:

"The tradition of Kiekhofer's wall is as much a part of Wisconsin's history as Milwaukee beer. For more than 60 years the stone wall on Langdon street has been an unofficial campus billboard. It has dripped colorful announcements for every conceivable type of party, rally, election, and school function. It is now doubtful where the stone ends and the layers of paint begin.

"In respect of the tradition and school spirit which has made the wall a local shrine, all students are being urged to continue using it as they please. Hillel's recent purchase of the property including Kiekhofer's wall does not in any way interfere with the tradition that makes it a campus monument. A plan has been in process for the last two years regarding the removal of the wall. As yet, it has not been decided where and how to remove it.

"In any case, whether we find Kiekhofer's wall spread across Langdon street or on the steps of Bascom hall, it is a good example of how a school can maintain its colorful customs and make way for progress at the same time."

There is talk that the proposed Jewish student center will be begun before the school year is over and that by summer the wall will be either moved or torn down, but to date there is no official word concerning its exact disposal.

It was not until 20 years ago that the undergraduates began their daubing and slogan-writing on the brick surface, but during that first decade of painting, there was nothing very legal about such student pranks. It has only been an official and accepted past-time for students during the last two university generations. As time passed students became more and more daring with their brushes, and this fall the co-eds took their turns, stealing out by night to paint advertisements of sorority open houses and dormitory teas.

The property upon which the wall is located originally belonged to the late Prof. Edward T. Owen. The wall enclosed the backyard of the Owens' mid-Victorian home. In recent years the property was managed by Prof. William Kiekhofer of the department of economics, so students have come to call the wall "Kiekhofer's wall". Prof. Kiekhofer is credited with being the first person to recognize that wall-painting was not just a prank to be frowned upon, but was an interesting student tradition to be permitted. It was through his policy of "ignoring" the prank that students received silent approval of their wall board art.

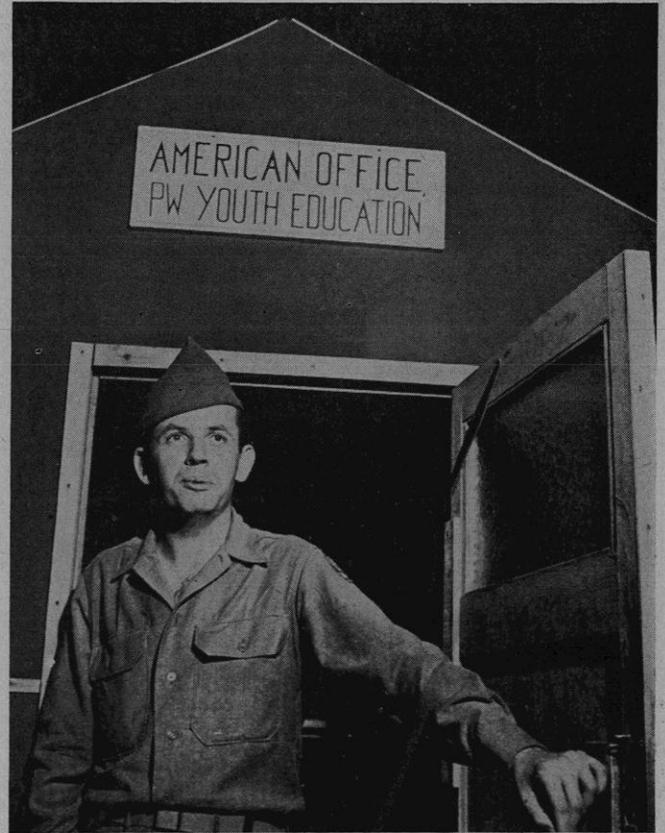

But the co-eds won't be deprived of all their wartime privileges. To the great regret of alumni of years gone by is the news that the Rathskeller, for so long a hang-out for men exclusively, is still maintaining its wartime policy of admitting women at any and all times. A year ago the students tried to reserve the Rathskeller solely for men one night a week, but the "Men's night" program didn't work out and the attempt was abandoned.

Right: One of the highest honors in the scientific world, the Cyrus B. Comstock prize of the National Academy of Sciences was recently awarded to Dr. Donald W. Kerst, '34, for his development of the betatron, the world's most powerful X-ray machine. The award, which is presented only once every five years, was given to Kerst in 1943, but because of the wartime secrecy involving the nuclear physics he was engaged in, its presentation was not announced until recently. During the war Kerst was on the staff of the Los Alamos atomic bomb laboratory, and he has now returned to the physics department of the University of Illinois.

Champion De-Nazifier

Pfc. Francis Tourtellot, '42, is principal of one of the most unique schools in the world, the American army's youth education camp for young German prisoners of war. Here by means of re-education the young boys who were brought up under the Nazi regime are de-Nazified. Some 7,000 German youth attend the school, and 144 teachers are on the faculty.

Tourtellot, who is in charge of the school, and consequently holds a key post in the post-war handling of Germany, was an assistant in the German department here while studying for his doctor's degree from 1939 to 1942. He intends to write his doctor's thesis on the camp.

ALUMNI CLUB NEWS

California Alumni Visit USS Wisconsin

In one of the most unusual and greatly enjoyed alumni activities of the year, Southern California alumni visited the battleship named after their state.

Approximately 2,000 former residents of the State of Wisconsin, members of the Wisconsin Alumni Club of Southern California, and their guests gathered at 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 16, at the Long Beach Navy Landing preparatory to visiting the U. S. S. Wisconsin.

Edward Schildhauer of Westwood Village, Los Angeles, president of the Wisconsin Alumni Club, made the arrangements for the tour of the ship.

As the guests assembled, they were taken aboard five waiting LCI's for the trip out to where the ship was anchored. The LCI's departed from the landing in a miniature convoy, making a 45-minute tour of the harbor before disembarking their passengers aboard the Wisconsin. As each LCI approached the huge battleship, the ship's band enthusiastically repeated "On Wisconsin."

Once aboard, all the guests were requested, via ship's loudspeakers to assemble at the stern for a brief program. Lieut. Peter F. Hays, chaplain, gave the invocation, following which Comdr. C. C. Kirkpatrick, USN, ship's executive officer, welcomed the guests aboard and introduced the commanding officer, Capt. J. W. Roper, USN.

Captain Roper, who told the former residents of Wisconsin that his ship was proud to merit the State's name, shortly will become one of the youngest admirals in the United States Navy. He was released from duty aboard the Wisconsin early this month, and was succeeded by Capt. Lawrence Clark Green.

During the ceremonies Sunday, Captain Roper introduced Mr. Schildhauer, who said that "through grapevine channels we discovered that the U. S. S. Wisconsin did not possess a State flag." Schildhauer explained that W. K. Murphy, regional governor of the Wisconsin Alumni Association telephoned John Berge, executive secretary of the Association at Madison, to see if he could obtain a State flag. After some difficulties and through the assistance of Edward Doan, Gov. Goodland's press secretary, and F. X. Ritger, state purchasing agent, Berge secured a flag and shipped it by air express in time for Schildhauer to present it to Roper.

Upon accepting the blue and gold flag from Schildhauer, Captain Roper said "We will guard it carefully and will consider it one of our proudest trophies." He announced that the ship's battle flag, used during the Pacific campaign, shortly will be sent to the governor of Wisconsin, to be kept as a State trophy.

At the conclusion of the program, the band played several selections while the visitors were started on a tour of the ship, conducted by the ship's officers and men.

When the tour of the ship was completed, the guests were taken below for refreshments. On display in the ward room was the $30,000 silver service which had been presented to the ship by the State of Wisconsin at ceremonies held last month in San Francisco Bay. Guarding the service were three Marine MP's.

Capt. J. W. Roper and Edward Schildhauer, '97

The Wisconsin state flag was presented to Capt. J. W. Roper, captain of the battleship USS Wisconsin by Edward Schildhauer, president of the Wisconsin Alumni Club of Southern California. Approximately 2,000 Badgers recently visited the ship while it was in port at Long Beach, California.

At 4 p. m. the visitors again boarded the LCI's for the return to the landing station.

Among the Wisconsin Alumni Club officers who were present besides President Schildhauer and Regional Governor Murphy were Raymond J. Stipek, vice-president; Mrs. Mark Jones, secretary; Arthur Chase, treasurer; and Sam C. Wright, L. Brittingham, John C. Carey, Mark Jones and Mrs. D. E. Simpson, directors.

Southern California

Mrs. David E. Simpson was speaker at the November 30 luncheon meeting of the Southern California Alumnae club. Her subject was, "Presidential Powers", a study of the increase of such power that has come, particularly through eight of the 31 presidents.

Guests present at the meeting included Mrs. Alice Evans Field, Los Angeles; Mrs. W. D. Crocker, Pasadena; and Mrs. W. R. Phillips, Baton Rouge, La.

Chicago Alumnae

Mrs. Aneta Tidball, director of Travelers Aid, was the guest speaker at the January meeting of the University of Wisconsin Alumnae club of Chicago.

Mrs. Tidball discussed the work of her agency. She was presented by Mrs. Harold Downing, program chairman of the club. Miss Dorothy Wilcox is club president.

Pittsburgh

Newly elected officers of the Pittsburgh Alumni Club, are John B. Seastone, '26, president; Mrs. W. McClean Work, '22, vice president; Rolf Griem, '17, secretary; and Mrs. Robert Simpson, '39, treasurer.

These officers were elected by the board of directors at the December meeting. The directors also discussed general plans for club activity for the year.

It sounds like there's a budding alumni club out in Shanghai these days. Maj. Roger D. Wolcott, '13, is assistant executive officer of the Port Command there, while Carl Neprud, '12, is Customs Commissioner and Jay Oliver, '13, is in the YMCA.

Eau Claire

Alumni from Eau Claire heard Coach Harry Stuhldreher and saw movies of the Wisconsin-Minnesota football game last month at a meeting sponsored by the Wisconsin Alumni club of Eau Claire.

Before the meeting, which was held in the high school auditorium, a banquet was held for the Eau Claire high school football teams. Stuhldreher was speaker at the banquet.

FOUNDERS' DAY—FEBRUARY 5th

On February 5, 1946, loyal Badgers all over the world will celebrate the 97th birthday of the University of Wisconsin: ninety-seven years of productive educational service to the people of Wisconsin and the nation.

Founders' Day is always a red-letter event for all Wisconsin alumni. This year, however, two factors give it special significance. In the first place, the University's centennial is just around the corner. Centennial activities will get under way in the fall of 1948 and continue throughout the academic year. These activities include educational conferences and conventions, symposia, publication of a history of the University, exhibits which visualize the University's contributions in teaching, research and public service.

For a whole year all University activities will reflect this Centennial atmosphere. This includes Badger football plans for 1948. For several months coach Harry S. Stuhldreher has been working on a deluxe gridiron schedule for the 1948 season. His plans include at least one Eastern team that should fill every seat at Camp Randall. (It would be very nice, Harry, if you'd provide a championship team in '48. Another team like the '42 aggregation would do.)

The Centennial committee, with Prof. William H. Kiehofer as chairman, is mapping out an impressive schedule of events for this anniversary. These events, however, will do more than merely commemorate a century of consistent achievement. With an eye to the future, the committee is considering plans which will be helpful to the University as it starts its second century of educational service. Such planning is highly essential if the University of Wisconsin is to do its full share in building our post-war world.

The second factor which adds special significance to this year's Founders' Day is the University of Wisconsin Foundation. An attractive brochure just published outlines the purpose of this new organization in these words:

The University of Wisconsin has a great task before it. Possibilities for service are almost limitless. But the University can never be the great institution which it should be if it must depend solely on appropriations from the State.

Alumni and friends of the University everywhere must be given an opportunity to assist in developing the University to meet its growing needs.

Never before has the University faced such great responsibilities. The service men returning from the war will look to the University to train him for the future. The University will be responsible for bringing thousands of young lives back into focus, and fit these men for new, non-military careers.

But everyone who looks back to his college days will recall that there is something more than classrooms and lectures in his education. The student should meet people. He should have recreation.

He must have access to the broadest cultural influences. The University should provide something more than the bare essentials for teaching.

Nevertheless, the State Legislature's appropriations, substantial as these have been, can at present take care of little more than bare essentials in education. That is why the University of Wisconsin Foundation was organized. It was incorporated, and a Board of Directors elected, for the purpose of securing gifts and bequests.

Gifts and bequests are not sought for the ordinary operational expenditures of the University nor for academic buildings and equipment which the legislature may be expected to provide.

But special funds should be made available to the University for such purposes as industrial and engineering research; scholarships and fellowships; special purpose buildings and equipment; and a proper war memorial. Many additional needs of the University could be listed.

Funds collected by the Foundation will be transferred to the University Board of Regents which will administer these funds. Foundation officials hope that most of the funds will be unrestricted so that the Regents may allocate funds where most needed. In this way all colleges and departments will benefit from funds collected by the Foundation.

Projects under consideration cover many fields. For example, the College of Agriculture needs food processing facilities for intensive research in the field of food technology. The Physics Department needs new equipment for electronics research. The College of Engineering needs an aircraft engine laboratory.

Apparatus for advanced study is necessary for students performing advanced research. For example, a Psychometric Room for the study of air conditions and effects at various pressures and temperatures; Cartographic Laboratory; Knorr-Albers Recording Photo Densitometer; Phillips Geiger X-Ray Diffraction Apparatus; Svedberg Equilibrium Ultracentrifuge and two Hilger Spectroscopes and auxiliary equipment.

As its part in the Centennial program, the Foundation hopes to secure at least $5,000,000 in gifts and bequests before the University celebrates its hundredth birthday.

For obvious reasons, Founders' Day meetings in 1946 should include a discussion of the Foundation's program of activities. In the first place, alumni are keenly interested in this new organization for promoting the University's welfare. They want to know how the Foundation operates and how its activities dovetail with the activities of the Wisconsin Alumni Association which initiated it.

Secondly, Badgers are genuinely interested in the University's progress. Accordingly, they are genuinely interested in any organization that promotes this progress. In short, the University of Wisconsin Foundation is a "natural" for your 1946 Founders' Day meeting.—JOHN BERGE.

Malcolm P. Hanson

Because the late Commander Malcolm P. Hanson, '24, had many University of Wisconsin friends, we are herewith publishing a message he left for his friends, to be read after his death.

Comdr. Hanson was killed in line of duty in an airplane crash in the States on August 12, 1942, leaving his wife and five children as survivors.

Comdr. Hanson's life was extremely full and his career marked him one of the University's most outstanding alumni. Before the first World War Hanson aided in the construction of radio station WHA, serving as its first operator and one of the first radio announcers in the country. After the war started he served in the navy for two years, later carrying on this service as a ranking communications officer in the second World War.

Recognized as one of the top authorities on radio in the country, Hanson designed and installed the radio equipment for the Byrd expeditions to both the north pole and to the south pole. He served as chief radio operator with both expeditions, spending many months in the Arctic and Antarctic.

His letter, is as follows:

"To All My Friends:

I regard my forthcoming trip as a great experience and opportunity to show what I can do and to contribute my own share to the all-important effort to stem mental and physical bondage and brutality from enslaving the world. I am thankful for this opportunity and will always do my duty as I see it, regardless of what happens; and regardless, my one request of you all is to Carry On, faithfully and sincerely, to make this World a better place for all mankind to live in.

As regards myself, I embark without hesitation or fear, even though, first 2½ years ago, and at several times since, I've had a premonition that I wouldn't quite see the end of 1941. THAT may explain the downcast way in which I entered this year, as my family and friends may remember. Well, I've never been superstitious, and if, God willing, I live through the year, then I know I can laugh at superstition forever. But, if not—then let it be recorded that there is a clairvoyant almighty sense, and that for me it has fixed the time repeatedly and consistently, for the past 2½ years.

I proceed unafraid. God be with you. Au Revoir."

Siamese Soldiers

Alumni are often curious to know what becomes of the foreign students who were their class-mates, whether they returned to their homeland, whether they became settled down Wisconsin residents, or whether they embarked upon careers of travel. This curiosity is particularly strong during wartime.

Murray Sheehan, '20, of the Royal Thai Legation passes along some news of the Siamese students here in recent years, telling of the unusual military careers of three of them.

Chalong Puntragul, '42, Boonrod Binson, '42, and Pisoot Sudasna, '44, were all officers of the Free Thai Military Unit. Puntragul was inducted into the army and became a paratrooper before being commissioned. He and Binson both served overseas and penetrated into Siam while it was under Japanese occupation. They helped in the organization of the Siamese underground movement and in transmitting valuable military information to the Allies.

Sudasna, who as "Pete" was written up in a recent article on the OSS which appeared in Cosmopolitan, was one of the first to establish connections between the Siamese underground movement and the Allies. He undertook a secret mission from southern China into Siam, going more than 200 miles on foot through northern Burma and Indo-China, largely through almost uncharted mountainous areas.

Badger "Twins": Sorenson and Sommers

A standing joke among Badger air corps men comes from the fact that many of them enlisted as "Flying Badgers" only to be set out upon a busy course of flight training which kept them, not only out of Wisconsin, but also out of touch with any of their fellow enlistees.

Richard H. Sorenson, '45, and Ralph W. Sommers, '44, however, can't join in the joke, for although they did not know each other at the time they enlisted in May 1942, they promptly met when they were called to active duty in March 1943 and they have been together ever since.

They stuck together like twins through all the phases of training, often having the same instructors, always being stationed at the same fields. They were commissioned at the same time, their serial numbers being only two digits apart. When they left the country in September 1944, they found themselves in the same squadron of the 15th Air Force, often even flying together on combat missions. Both were promoted to first lieutenant at the same time, and with the end of the war, both flew home from Italy together. Both wear the DFC and Air Medal with clusters. Ralph was forced to ditch his B-17 in the Adriatic sea after his engines were shot out on a mission last March, and so he was still hospitalized when Richard was promoted to captain two months later.

This unusual record carried these two Badgers through 18 permanent changes of station together. Only one flaw marks their careers. When Richard was married in May, 1944, did Ralph take a bride too? No, he was satisfied with the role of best man.

1st Lt. Osmon Fox, Jr., '45, Pfc. Charles R. Fox, '47, and his twin brother Pfc. William Fox, '47.

The rule of three must hold some meaning to the three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Osmon C. The twins, Chuck and Bill, both pre-med students when called into service, are serving as medics with a field artillery unit now located in Liege, Belgium. Shortly before the end of the war in Germany, Lt. Fox was traveling around Germany leading convoys of prisoners and displaced persons for the Military Govt. when he "found" his twin brothers in western Germany.

Then on V-J Day the three brothers had a second reunion in Liege. At present Bill is attending an eight-weeks term at the American University in Biarritz, France where he is a member of the University band. While en route there he accidentally met Chuck in Paris as the latter was returning from a furlough in England and Scotland, for the third brotherly meeting.

Oz plans to finish his work in chemical engineering and the twins will continue their pre-med course when they get back to Wisconsin.

Lunts, '41, Play Union Theater

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, loyal Wisconsin residents who received honorary degrees in 1941, established some kind of a record at the Wisconsin Union Theater when they played to full houses for a solid week early in January.

"O Mistress Mine" opened on New Year's Eve before an audience which had ordered tickets by mail almost a month before the show. Each night for a week they played before capacity houses. Overseas Badgers stationed in London saw the same show under the title, "Love in Idleness".

The Lunts completed a showing in Milwaukee during the Christmas week and requested that they be scheduled to play Madison from New Year's Eve on. They figured that if such a schedule could be worked out they might spend the holidays in their Genesee Depot, Wis., home. Icy roads changed the plans however, and the Lunts lived in the Union during their week in Madison.

After training native intelligence agents in Burma, Hanks volunteered to escort these agents to the intended scenes of operation well behind enemy lines. His citation reads in part as follows:*

*"Lucien M. Hanks, American civilian employed by OSS from January 1945 to April 1945 as a training officer for infiltration and exfiltration of native intelligence agents in Burma, volunteered despite his civilian status and the foreknowledge of the consequences were he to be captured, to escort these agents. . . . ## Research: Studies in Anaesthesia

Wisconsin General Hospital

The University School of Medicine, through the studies of anaesthesia during the past few years, had made important contributions to the world of medicine, in that new techniques and drugs for the administering of anaesthetics have been developed and improved there. Other accomplishments in anaesthetics at the University include improvement in the care of patients at Wisconsin General hospital, the teaching of students, and the development of fundamental concepts of anaesthesia.

Work in anaesthesia at the University of Wisconsin has been developed under the direction of Dr. Ralph M. Waters, who founded the department in 1927 when he came to the University. Dr. Waters was recently awarded the Henry Hill Hickman medal of the Royal Society of Medicine in London for his original work of outstanding merit in anaesthetics. This award is given every three years and has been given four times to date. Dr. Waters was the second American to receive the award.

One of the outstanding contributions in anaesthesia at the University of Wisconsin is found in the department's insistence on keeping all details of each case, including pre-operative, operative, and post-operative conditions. Records are kept for each patient; these records are coded on punch cards; and once a year the information thus recorded is gathered up and correlated. This method of correlating the results and records of each administration of an anaesthetic has been used here since 1932, and has been taken up by the American Society of Anaesthetists.

The department of anaesthesia at the University has helped work out the details of inhalation therapy, which is gently blowing oxygen directly into the throat of the patient. This method, which is applicable in a majority of cases, eliminates the necessity for chambers and tents which are expensive in original upkeep and equipment. It is now in extensive use in many parts of the world.

In Worldwide Use

The practical application of the carbon dioxide absorption technique has been forwarded largely following work done at Wisconsin and is rapidly coming into world-wide use. This method is based on the principle that anaesthetic or therapeutic atmosphere which a patient breathes may be very limited in volume when once the body is saturated with the anaesthetic agent. The absorption technique makes it possible for the agent to be used over and over again because carbon dioxide produced by the patient is removed from it and because oxygen is added in the small quantities constantly being used. Existence in submarine ships is dependent upon this fact. By means of the carbon dioxide absorption technique the quantity of agents used is reduced to less than 10 per cent of the amount used by older techniques.

University of Wisconsin research workers have also studied and are continuing to work on the physiological problems which are involved when some means other than the patient's own efforts are used to ventilate the lungs, and various mechanical gadgets have been tested in the laboratories and in the hospital.

Because of their familiarity with the carbon dioxide absorption technique, it has been possible for University scientists to study new gaseous and volatile agents. Of the numerous drugs studied at Wisconsin in this connection, cyclopropane has proved the most important and is now familiar to anaesthetists in nearly all parts of the world. Cyclopropane was administered to man for the first time in 1930 at the University of Wisconsin, and the clinical introduction of the drug was done mostly at the University.

Some research work has also been done on the fundamental concepts, the "why" and "what" of anaesthesia. It is hoped that after the war, when more personnel is available, the University will be able to progress further with the knowledge of these concepts.

Studies in anaesthesia at the State University have been made possible partly through contributions from the Wisconsin Alumni Research foundation, which has been ready to lend needed financial support whenever necessary, while a large part of the expense has been borne by the hospital and by individual University departments.

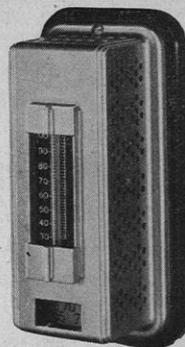

Medical students at the University of Wisconsin are taught to administer a simple anaesthetic safely and to perform artificial respiration safely and efficiently. Graduates from Wisconsin are directors of anaesthesia in large hospitals in Stockholm and Bombay, in several university hospitals in this country, and in the armed services. Nineteen officers have been trained in anaesthesia at the University at the request of the armed forces of the country.

"We have an excellent set-up here at Irumagawa Air Base. We have even rigged up hot showers. Our barracks was full of holes where some of our local boys made good with 50 calibre wing guns, but we have most of them patched now. The Japs here in the village don't give us any trouble.

We are about 25 miles from Tokyo. Take it from me the place is a wreck. I drive through it quite often.

I thank you for all the magazines and papers I have received.

Le Havre, France

"In Paris it was an exciting life—especially the work on Stars and Stripes. S & S was almost ideal. It was a real live-wire paper, cocky, liberal, and a good deal freer than most civilian newspapers I've known. And it was a swell bunch . . . most of the staff men were topnotchers. I'll enclose some of my by-lined stories. Most of the time I was doing rewrite work in the office. We got five different press services, AP, UP, INS, Reuter and Army News Service and when a rewrite man did a story for instance on the United Nations, the Big Three, Patton, China, Java, etc., the result in reality was a round-up of all the different angles contributed by the various news services. Sometimes I've found my stories being featured in the European Edition of the Herald-Tribune, as was the case the other day on the opening of the Big Three meeting in Moscow. None of the press services had much to offer so I dreamed up a grandiloquent piece which S & S used as No. 1 play in that particular issue. Next morning I saw the same story (with an AP credit line) top-lined in the Paris Herald. Apparently their copy desk too found that the press services had little to offer and rather than go through the trouble of blowing up a story by themselves, they took mine, lock, stock and barrel.

In one of my last nights in Paris I saw Maurice Chevalier for the third time. I could never tire of him. Even though he's silver-haired now (57) he still had a dazzling personality. When he comes out on the stage he doesn't trot out like an emcee or American song and dance man, but merely walks to the edge of the stage and smiles, and the audience goes wild.

EPO, San Francisco

"Was with the 3rd Marine Division on Guam for nine months and was transferred to the 5th. Flew in C-54 by way of Iwo Jima, Tokyo, and Sasebo. The last lap in a Navy PBM. Now I am with the 2nd Marine division at Nagasaki, Kyushu, Japan.

Have seen the atom Bombed area and although it did a good job I frankly was disappointed. I guess I had built up too great a mental picture from the press accounts. On the other hand I had been surprised at the amount of damage done to Tokyo. The LIFE pictures were very good but did not give the picture of the extent of the rubble.

These people are either fifty to one hundred years behind the times or they are doing their best—and succeeding—to act like it. Cannot believe that they were able to accomplish so much by the methods and equipment I am able to see. However, what they did is a matter of history.
