SECOND VERSE.

A TIGER wanted, one that don't A-ny qualms of concience feel;
 No gross feeder,- one that won't On board wages eat a deal; On board wages eat a deal. With him no grumbl'ing there must be, When his daily toil is o'er, If he goes to bed at three To be up a-gain by four!
 He must rise the maids be-fore hand, Rub and dust and sweep each place;
 Clean the brass-plate on the door, and Polish that next on his face. A TIGER, &c.

THIRD VERSE.

A TIGER wanted, if out late His master's staying with some friends, He mustn't to the mistress prate, Nor tell her how the time he spends; Nor tell her how the time he spends. If she at four hear him come in, And ask what out so late was done, Then he must swere thro' thick and thin, "Really 'twasn't more than one!"
 He must take care not to mention, - "Cider = cel-lars," songs and wine; The Knockers wrench'd, nor the detention, Po-lice, nor forty = shil-ling fine. A TIGER, &c.

FOURTH VERSE.

A TIGER wanted, he must wait At ta-ble, nor dare to re-fuse, Or dig the garden- rub the grate, Then leave off work, and clean the shoes. Then leave off work and clean the shoes. If he from illness e'er should sink He mustn't fly to gin or malt, But copiously of brandy drink, Sweetened well, of course with salt.
 And if peace he wouldn't mar it, Nor strict punc-til-li-o of-fend, If Master ever orders Claret, Let him no black bottle send. A TIGER, &c.

FIFTH VERSE.

A TIGER wanted, mo-rals won't Do un-less they're strict-ly pure, None will do whose do-ings don't All the strictest search endure, All the strictest search endure. To one who'd lead a good-ly life, Al-most one in fact of ease, Free from trouble, care and strife, Quickly on this chance he'll seize, Tho' the place of la-bor's shorter, The pay's more li-be-ral, odd zounds! For if he takes it by the Quarter, The a-mount will be Three Pounds! A TIGER, &c
