

Foreign relations of the United States, 1951. The Near East and Africa. Volume V 1951

United States Department of State
Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1951

https://digital.library.wisc.edu/1711.dl/G5OAT7XT7HRHX84

As a work of the United States government, this material is in the public domain.

For information on re-use see: http://digital.library.wisc.edu/1711.dl/Copyright

The libraries provide public access to a wide range of material, including online exhibits, digitized collections, archival finding aids, our catalog, online articles, and a growing range of materials in many media.

When possible, we provide rights information in catalog records, finding aids, and other metadata that accompanies collections or items. However, it is always the user's obligation to evaluate copyright and rights issues in light of their own use.

Foreign Relations of the United States

1951

Volume V

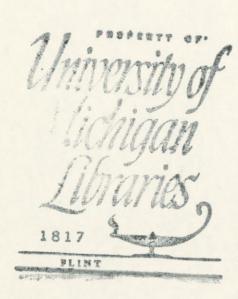

THE NEAR EAST AND AFRICA

> JX 233 .A1 1951 v.5

Department of State Washington

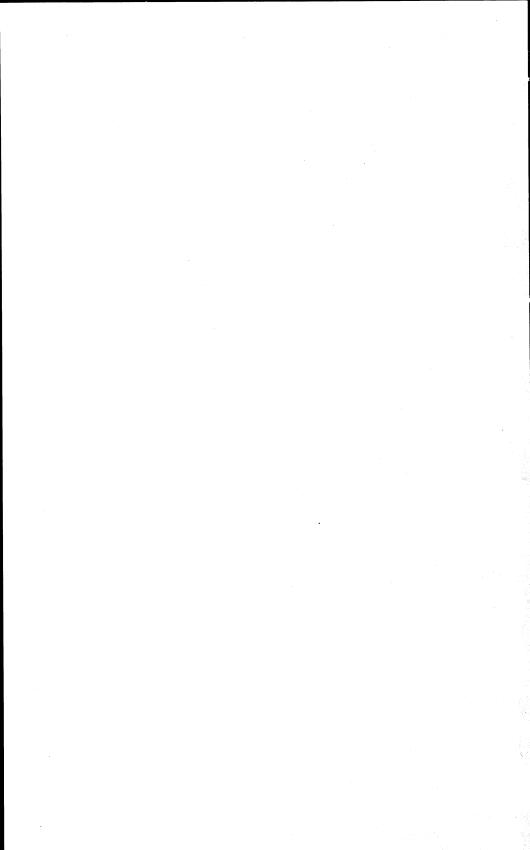

JAN 07 1983

DOCUMENT

Foreign Relations of the United States 1951

Volume V

The Near East and Africa

General Editor
William Z. Slany

Editors

John A. Bernbaum Joan M. Lee Carl N. Raether Charles S. Sampson Paul Claussen David W. Mabon Lisle A. Rose David H. Stauffer

United States
Government Printing Office
Washington: 1982

DEPARTMENT OF STATE PUBLICATION 9114

OFFICE OF THE HISTORIAN

BUREAU OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS

For sale by the U.S. Government Book Store
Department of State
Washington, D.C. 20520—Price $00.00 (Buckram)
Stock Number 0000-00000

PREFACE

The publication Foreign Relations of the United States constitutes the official record of the foreign policy of the United States. The volumes in the series include, subject to necessary security considerations, all documents needed to give a comprehensive record of the major foreign policy decisions of the United States together with appropriate materials concerning the facts which contributed to the formulation of policies. Documents in the files of the Department of State are supplemented by papers from other government agencies involved in the formulation of foreign policy.

The basic documentary diplomatic record printed in the volumes of the series Foreign Relations of the United States is edited by the Office of the Historian, Bureau of Public Affairs, Department of State. The editing is guided by the principles of historical objectivity and in accordance with the following official guidance first promulgated by Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg on March 26, 1925.

There may be no alteration of the text, no deletions without indicating where in the text the deletion is made, and no omission of facts which were of major importance in reaching a decision. Nothing may be omitted for the purpose of concealing or glossing over what might be regarded by some as a defect of policy. However, certain omissions of documents are permissible for the following reasons:

a. To avoid publication of matters which would tend to impede current diplomatic negotiations or other business.

b. To condense the record and avoid repetition of needless details.

c. To preserve the confidence reposed in the Department by individuals and by foreign governments.

d. To avoid giving needless offense to other nationalities or individuals.

e. To eliminate personal opinions presented in despatches and not acted upon by the Department. To this consideration there is one qualification—in connection with major decisions it is desirable, where possible, to show the alternative presented to the Department before the decision was made.

Documents selected for publication in the Foreign Relations volumes are referred to the Department of State Classification/Declassification Center for declassification clearance. The Center reviews the documents, makes declassification decisions, and obtains the clearance of geographic and functional bureaus of the Department of State, as well as of other appropriate agencies of the government.

The Center, in coordination with the geographic bureaus of the Department of State, conducts communications with foreign governments regarding documents or information of those governments proposed for inclusion in Foreign Relations volumes.

This volume was initially prepared under the general supervision of Frederick Aandahl and, at a later stage, of William Z. Slany, his successor as General Editor of the Foreign Relations series. Paul Claussen provided detailed research and review for the volume and was responsible for the final stages of publication.

The following members of the Office of the Historian prepared sections of this volume: Lisle A. Rose (military and economic policies in the Near and Middle East; relations with Egypt and Greece); Charles S. Sampson (Morocco); Joan M. Lee (Middle Eastern petroleum; relations with Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Ethiopia, and Libya); David H. Stauffer (Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria); David W. Mabon (Israel, January-June); Paul Claussen (Israel, July-December); Carl N. Raether (Turkey); John A. Bernbaum (Yemen); and William Z. Slany (general policies with respect to Africa; relations with the Gold Coast, Liberia, Tunisia, and the Union of South Africa).

Anne K. Pond, formerly Chief of the Documentary Editing Section, performed most of the technical editing on the volume. The work was completed under the supervision of Margie R. Wilber in the Publishing Services Division (Paul M. Washington, Chief). Francis C. Prescott compiled the index.

WILLIAM Z. SLANY The Historian Bureau of Public Affairs

CONTENT	$\Gamma S$
---------	------------

Page

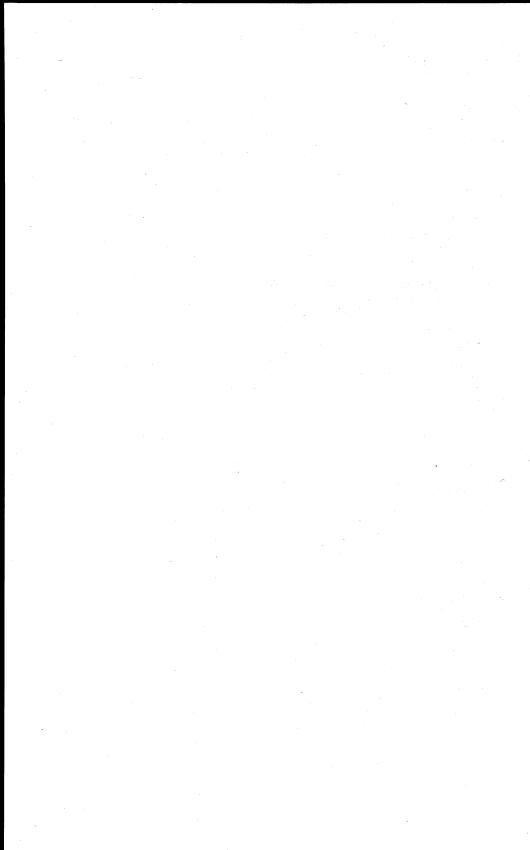

Preface	ш
List of Abbreviations and Symbols	IX
List of Persons	xv
List of Sources	XIII
THE NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST:
MULTILATERAL RELATIONS:
United States military and economic policies with respect to the Near and Middle East: The drafting and implementation of United States policy toward the Arab States and Israel; the Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission at Istanbul, February 14-21; the origins and development of plans to establish a Middle East Command	1 268
EGYPT:
Interest of the United States in Anglo-Egyptian negotiations over the future status of the Suez Canal Zone and the Sudan; concern of the United States over Egyptian abrogation of the 1936 Anglo-Egyptian Defense Treaty and the 1899 Condominium Agreement regarding the Sudan	343
Greece:
Relations of the United States with Greece:  A. Political and economic relations	445 528 543
Iran: Position of the United States with respect to Iran; the question of economic assistance to Iran; interest of the United States in the settlement of the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute	544
Iraq:
Interest of the United States in Iraq's policy concerning cooperation with the West; the development of United States technical and military assistance to Iraq	545 558
Israel:
Relations of the United States with Israel; interest of the United States in the Palestine question	559 976

THE NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST—Continued

JORDAN:
Interest of the United States in the international relations of Jordan following the assassination of King Abdullah  Agreements between the United States and Jordan
Kuwait:
Establishment of a United States Consulate in Kuwait	998
LEBANON:
Interest of the United States in improving its relations with Lebanon. Agreements between the United States and Lebanon	1002 1016
SAUDI ARABIA:
United States relations with Saudi Arabia; conclusion of agreements for United States tenancy at the Dhahran Airfield and military assistance to Saudi Arabia  Agreements between the United States and States are seen to be under the same of the sa
Agreements between the United States and Saudi Arabia	1017 1072
Syria:
Policy of the United States toward development of technical and military assistance to Syria; question involving diplomatic recognition following a military coup d'etat	1073
Turkey:
Principal policies and problems in relations with Turkey Agreements between the United States and Turkey	1100 1191
YEMEN:
United States policy toward Yemen	1192
Africa:
MULTILATERAL RELATIONS:
General policies of the United States toward Africa	1199
Етніоріа:	1100
Principal aspects of relations of the United States with Ethiopia; the question of providing United States military equipment to Ethiopia; interest of the United States in the former Italian colony of Eritrea
Eritrea	1237 1265
GOLD COAST:
Interest of the United States in developments in the Gold Coast	1266

Africa—Continued

Liberia:
Principal policies and problems in relations with Liberia	12 74 1312
Libya:
Interest of the United States in the establishment of the Independent Kingdom of Libya	1313
Morocco:
United States policies toward the French Protectorate in Morocco .	1368
Tunisia:
Interest of the United States in the evolution of Tunisia toward self- government	1396
Union of South Africa:
Principal pólicies and problems in relations with the Union of South Africa	1427 1464
INDEX	1467

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS AND SYMBOLS

EDITOR'S NOTE:—This list does not include standard abbreviations in common usage; unusual abbreviations of rare occurrence which are clarified at appropriate points; and those abbreviations and contractions which, although uncommon, are understandable from the context.

A, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration

A/PER, Office of Personnel, Office of the Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration

Actel, series indicator for telegrams from Secretary of State Acheson while away from Washington

ADC, Aide-de-Camp

AdCom, Advisory Commission to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

AF, Air Force

AF, Office of African Affairs, Department of State; African

AFL, American Federation of Labor AFOPD, Office of the Director of Plans, United States Air Force

Plans, United States Air Force AIOC, Anglo-Iranian Oil Company

AKEL, Anorthotikon Komma Ergazomenou Laou (Progressive Party of the Working People), the Communist Party of Cyprus

AL, Arab League

Amb, Ambassador

AMC, Additional Measures Committee of the United Nations

Aminoil, American Independent Oil Company

ANC, African National Congress, the principal black African political group in South Africa

ANZUS, Australia, New Zealand, and the United States

AP, Associated Press

Aramco, Arabian-American Oil Company

ARC(S), Air Resupply and Communication (Service)

ARMISH, American Military Mission with the Iranian Army

Att, Attaché

AUB, American University at Beirut BBC, British Broadcasting Corporation

BIS, Bank for International Settlements

BNA, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State

BOB, Bureau of the Budget

BPC, Basra Petroleum Company

BPD, barrels per day

BSL, Banque de Syrie et du Liban (Bank of Syria and the Lebanon)

C/S, Chief of Staff

Caltex (Cal-Tex), California Texas
Oil Company, Limited

CCC, Commodity Credit Corporation CFM, Council of Foreign Ministers

CG, Commanding General

CG/CoCom, Paris Consultative Group of nations working to control export of strategic goods to Communist countries, Coordinating Committee of the Paris Consultative Group

CGT, Confédération Générale du Travail (General Confederation of Labor), in France

CIA, Central Intelligence Agency c.i.f., cost, insurance, and freight

CINCNELM (C-in-C NELM), Commander in Chief, United States Naval Forces, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean

CIO, Congress of Industrial Organizations

cirgram, circular airgram CNO, Chief of Naval Operations CO, Commanding Officer CoCom, Coordinating Committee of the Paris Consultative Group of nations working to control export of strategic goods to Communist countries

Cominform, Communist Information Bureau

ConGen, Consulate General

C.O.S., Chief(s) of Staff (British)

CP, Commercial Policy Staff, Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy, Department of State

CPP, Convention People's Party, a Gold Coast political party

cpt, counterpart

DAF, Dhahran Airfield

Def, Department of Defense; defense

DefMin, Defense Minister

Delga, series indicator for telegrams from the United States Delegation at the United Nations General Assembly

Delli, series indicator for telegrams to the United States Representative on the United Nations Advisory Council for Libya

Depcirtel, Department of State circular telegram

Depintel, Department of State circular information telegram

Depreftel, Department of State reference telegram

Deptel, Department of State telegram DirGen, Director General

DMPA, Defense Materials Procurement Agency

D.O.T., Dependent Overseas TerritoryD.P.B., Defense Production Board,North Atlantic Treaty Organization

DRN, Division of Research for Near East and Africa, Department of State

E, Office of the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs

E/L, Labor Adviser, Office of the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs

EAL, Ethiopian Air Lines

ECA, Economic Cooperation Administration

ECA/F, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission to France

ECA/G, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission to Greece

ECA/T, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission to Turkey

ECA/W, headquarters of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Washington

Ecato, series indicator for telegrams from the Economic Cooperation Administration in Washington to its missions abroad

ED, Investment and Economic Development Staff, Office of Financial and Development Policy, Department of State

EDA, Eniaia Demokratiki Aristera (United Democratic Left), Greek political party

EE, Office of Eastern European Affairs, Department of State

Embdes, Embassy despatch

Emboff, Embassy office

Embtel, Embassy telegram

EPD/ECA, European Program Division, Economic Cooperation Administration

EPEK, Ethniki Prodeftiki Enosis Kendrou (National Progressive Union of the Center), Greek political coalition

EPU, European Payments Union

ETS, exploratory talks with the Soviet Union; also a series designation for United States position papers prepared for the exploratory talks with the Soviets

EUR, Bureau of European Affairs, Department of State; Europe

Exim (Ex-Im) Bank (Eximbank), Export-Import Bank of Washington

FAC, Foreign Aid Committee

FAO, Food and Agriculture Organization

FBO, Division of Foreign Buildings Operations, Department of State

FCN, Friendship, Commerce and Navigation (treaty)

FE, Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs, Department of State; Far East

F.E.B., Financial and Economic Board, North Atlantic Treaty Organization

FEC (FECOM), Far East Command FinMin, Finance Minister FM, Foreign Minister FMACC, Foreign Military Assistance Coordinating Committee FOB, free on board

FonAff, Foreign Affairs

FonMin, Foreign Minister (Ministry)

FonOff, Foreign Office

FonSecy, Foreign Secretary

FRBNY, Federal Reserve Bank of New York

FSO, Foreign Service Officer

FSR, Foreign Service Reserve Officer

FY, fiscal year

FYI, for your information

G, Office of the Deputy Under Secretary of State

GA, General Assembly of the United Nations

GADel, United States Delegation at the United Nations General Assembly; also Gadel, series indicator for telegrams to the United States Delegation

GATT, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

GEA, Office of German Economic Affairs, Department of State

GER, Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State

GNA, Grand National Assembly (Turkey)

Gov-Gen, Governor-General

GTI, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State

Histadrut, HaHistadrut Hak'lalit shel Ha'Ovdim Ha'Ivrim B'Eretz Yisrael (General Federation of Workers in Israel)

HM, His Majesty

HMG, His Majesty's Government

HRH, His Royal Highness

IAD, Division of Acquisition and Distribution, Department of State

IBRD, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development

ICFTU, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions

ICJ, International Court of Justice IG, Iranian Government

IMF, International Monetary Fund

IO, Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State

IPC, Iraq Petroleum Company

ISA, Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State

ISAC, International Security Affairs Committee

Istiqlal, Moroccan Independence Party ITO, International Trade Organization

JAMMAT, Joint American Military Mission for Aid to Turkey

JCS, Joint Chiefs of Staff

JUSMAG, Joint United States Military Advisory Group

JUSSGSA, Joint United States Survey Group to Saudi Arabia

KOC (Kuoco), Kuwait Oil Company L, Legal Adviser, Department of State LA, Latin America

L/ARA, Assistant Legal Adviser for Inter-American Affairs, Department of State

L/E, Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, Department of State

L/EUR, Assistant Legal Adviser for European Affairs, Department of State

L/NEA, Assistant Legal Adviser for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State

L/T, Office of the Assistant for Treaty Affairs in the Office of the Legal Adviser, Department of State

L/UNA, Assistant Legal Adviser for United Nations Affairs, Department of State

Legdesp, Legation despatch Legtel, Legation telegram

Lib, Liberia (n)

LibGovt, Liberian Government

Lidel, series indicator for telegrams from the United States Representative on the United Nations Advisory Council for Libya

LOC, lines of communication

LS, Syrian pound

MAAG, Military Assistance Advisory Group

MAC, Mixed Armistice Commission

Mapam, Mifleget HaPo'alim HaM'uhedet (United Workers Party), Israeli political party

MATS, Military Air Transport Service MD, Munitions Division, Department of State MDA, Mutual Defense Assistance MDAA, Mutual Defense Assistance Act

MDAP, Mutual Defense Assistance Program

ME, Middle East

MEC, Middle East Command

Medreco, Mediterranean Refining Company

MilAtt, Military Attaché

Min, Minister (Ministry)

MinFin, Minister (Ministry) of Finance

MinFonAff, Ministry of Foreign Affairs

MMS, Metals and Minerals Staff, Office of International Materials Policy, Department of State

MN, Monetary Affairs Staff, Office of Financial and Development Policy, Department of State

MPC, Mosul Petroleum Company MRP, Mouvement Républicain Populaire, a French political party

MSA, Mutual Security Agency MSP, Mutual Security Program

MTDP, Medium Term Defense Plan mytel, my telegram

NAC, National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems

NAT(0), North Atlantic Treaty (Organization)

NCO, noncommissioned officer

NE, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State; Near East

NEA, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State; Near East and Asia

NEA/P, Officer in Charge of Public Affairs, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State

NEAT, Near East Air Transport Company

NECDB, Near East Cooperative Defense Board

niact, night action, communications indicator requiring attention by the recipient at any hour of the day or night

NIE, National Intelligence Estimate NIOC, National Iranian Oil Company NSC, National Security Council NSRB, National Security Resources Board

NYT, The New York Times

OCI, Overseas Consultants, Inc.

OIF, Office of International Finance, Department of the Treasury

OII, Office of International Information, Department of State

OIR/GE, Special Adviser on Geography, Office of Intelligence Research, Department of State

OMA, Office of Military Assistance, Office of the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense (International Security Affairs)

OMP, Office of International Materials Policy, Department of State

OSAF, Office of the Secretary of the Air Force

OSD, Office of the Secretary of Defense

OSR, Office of the United States Special Representative in Europe under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948

ourtel, our telegram

P. Office of the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs

P/POL, Public Affairs Policy Advisory Staff in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs

P-51, piston engine fighter aircraft

PA, procurement authorization

Pak, Pakistan

Palun, series indicator for telegrams from the United States Representative on the Conciliation Commission for Palestine

PC, participating country

PCC, Palestine Conciliation Commission (United Nations)

PED, Petroleum Policy Staff, Office of International Materials Policy, Department of State

P.L., Public Law

PLDC, Palestine Land Development Company

PM, Prime Minister

POC, Peace Observation Commission POL, petroleum, oil, and lubricants

P.P.S., Parti Populaire Syrien, the Syrian National Party PRA, United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

PriMin, Prime Minister

PRS, Program Planning and Evaluation Staff, Department of State PSB, Psychological Strategy Board PWOC, Pacific Western Oil Company

RA, Office of European Regional Affairs, Department of State

Rapun, series indicator for telegrams from or concerning the United States Member of the Advisory Commission to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

RDA, Rassemblement démocratique africain, a West African nationalist political movement reDeptel, regarding Department of State telegram reftel, reference telegram

remytel, regarding my telegram

Repto, series indicator for messages to the Economic Cooperation Administration headquarters in Washington from the United States Special Representative in Europe under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948

S, Office of the Secretary of State
S/A, Office of the Ambassador at Large, Department of State

S/ISA, Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State

S/MSA, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State (Mutual Security Affairs)

S/P, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State

S/S, Executive Secretariat, Department of State

S/S-CR, Correspondence Review Staff, Executive Secretariat, Department of State

S/S-PR, Protocol Staff, Executive Secretariat, Department of State SA, Saudi Arabia

SACEUR, Supreme Allied Commander, Europe

SACLANT, Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic

SACME, Supreme Allied Commander, Middle East

SAG, Saudi Arabian Government

SC (SECCO), Security Council of the United Nations

SecGen, Secretary-General

Secto, series indicator for telegrams to the Department of State from the Secretary of State or his delegation in connection with conferences of Foreign Ministers

SHAPE, Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers, Europe

SOAFR, Union of South Africa

Socony, Standard Oil Company of New York

SYG, Secretary-General

TA, trade agreement

Tapline, Trans-Arabian Pipeline Company

TCA, Technical Cooperation Administration, Department of State

TCO, Technical Cooperation Officer Telac, series indicator for telegrams to Secretary of State Acheson while away from Washington

Telecon, telecommunication conference

TIAS, Treaties and Other International Acts Series

TL. Turkish lira

Toeca, series indicator for telegrams to the Economic Cooperation Administration in Washington from its missions abroad

Toisa, designation for telegrams dealing with matters within the responsibility of the Director, International Security Affairs, Department of State

Tomap, designation for telegrams concerned with the Mutual Defense Assistance Program

TopSec, top secret

Torep, series indicator for messages from the Economic Cooperation Administration headquarters in Washington to the United States Special Representative in Europe under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948

Tosec, series indicator for telegrams from the Department of State to the Secretary of State or his delegation in connection with conferences of Foreign Ministers

Totec, designation for telegrams dealing with technical assistance

TSO, Truce Supervisory Organization of the United Nations
TVA, Tennessee Valley Authority
TWA, Trans-World Airlines, Inc.
U, Under Secretary of State
U/FW, Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State (Fisheries and Wildlife)

UGCC, United Gold Coast Convention, a Gold Coast political party UGTT, Union Générale des Travailleurs Tunisiens, a Tunisian nationalist trade union organization

UKDel, United Kingdom Delegation UKFO, United Kingdom Foreign Office

UN, United Nations

UNA, Bureau of United Nations Affairs, Department of State

UNCCP, United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine

UND, Office of Dependent Area Affairs, Department of State

UNE, Office of United Nations Economic and Social Affairs, Department of State

UNGA, United Nations General Assembly

UNO, United Nations Organization UNP, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State

Unpal, series indicator for telegrams to the United States Representative on the Conciliation Commission for Palestine

Unrap, series indicator for telegrams to or concerning the United States Member of the Advisory Commission to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

UNRWAPNE (UNRWA, UNRWAP), United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

UNSC, United Nations Security Council

UNSCOB, United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans

UNTS, United Nations Treaty Series UNTSO, United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization

UP, United Press urdesp, your despatch urtel, your telegram USA, United States Army

USAF, United States Air Force USDel, United States Delegation USG, United States Government

USIE, United States Information and Educational Exchange Program

USIS, United States Information Service

USN, United States Navy

UST, United States Treaties and Other International Agreements

USUN, United States Mission at the United Nations

VOA, Voice of America

WE, Office of Western European Affairs, Department of State

WFTU, World Federation of Trade Unions

WHO, World Health Organization
WPC, World Peace Congress (Conference)

LIST OF PERSONS

EDITOR'S NOTE: - The identification of persons in this list is limited to circumstances and positions under reference in this volume. Historical personages alluded to in the volume and certain minor officials are not identified. All titles and positions are American unless there is an indication to the contrary.

In this list and in other editorial material throughout the volume (document headings, footnotes, and editorial notes), every effort has been made to provide recognizable and consistent transliterations of names of individuals from countries using non-roman alphabets. The transliterations adopted for proper names were those most commonly used by the Department of State at the time, or in documents or official publications of the countries concerned. (In the case of Arabic names, differences arise in the transliteration of vowels. The editors have generally rendered the definite article as al- rather than el-, and have omitted diacritical marks.) The editors have in all cases retained the spelling used in the original documents.

Abboud Pasha, Ahmed, Egyptian financier and industrialist.

Abdul Ilah, Amir, Crown Prince and Regent of Iraq.

Abdul, Monem, Egyptian Minister in Switzerland; Egyptian Representative at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Abdullah al-Salim al-Sabah, Shaikh of Kuwait.

Abdullah ibn Abdul Aziz al-Saud, Prince of Saudi Arabia.

Abdullah ibn Hussein, King of Jordan; assassinated July 20, 1951.

Abul Huda (Abul al-Huda), Tawfiq, Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Jordan, from July 25, 1951.

Acheson, Dean G., Secretary of State.

Adams, General Donald B., USA (Ret.), U.S. Point Four Representative to the Iraqi Development Board until July 1951.

Adenauer, Konrad, Chancellor and, from March 1951, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Ahmad ibn Yahya. See Yahya.

Alamanis, Stelios, former EPEK Member of the Greek Parliament; Greek Minister of Agriculture, from October 1951.

Alexander, Archibald S., Under Secretary of the Army.

Allen, Roger, Head, African Department, British Foreign Office.

Allen, Ward P., Special Assistant on United Nations Affairs, Bureau of European Affairs, Department of State; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly, from November 1951.

Alpar, Nahit, Financial Counselor of the Turkish Embassy. Alphand, Hervé, Director General of Economic, Financial and Technical Affairs, French Foreign Ministry.

Amr, P. H., Egyptian Ambassador to the United Kingdom.

Andersen, Holger, Director, Refugee Office, United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

Anschuetz, Norbert L., Officer in Charge of Greek Affairs, Department of State, until September 1951; First Secretary of the Embassy in Greece, from October 1951.

Aras, Tevfir Rustu, Turkish Representative on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

Arnold, Major General William H., USA, Chief of the Joint Military Mission for Aid to Turkey.

Asha, Rafiq, Syrian Consul General at New York.

Atasi, Adnan, Syrian Minister in France.

al-Atasi, Faydi, Syrian Foreign Minister. August-November 1951.

al-Atasi, Hashim, President of Syria until December 1951.

Attlee, Clement R., British Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury, July 1945-October 1951.

Auriol, Vincent, President of the French Republic.

Austin, Warren R., Representative at the United Nations and Representative on the Security Council; President of the Security Council in August 1951.

Averoff, Evangelos, Liberal Member of the Greek Parliament; Greek Foreign Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, from October 1951.

Avner, Gershon, Director, West European Department, Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Awalt, Fred H., Officer in Charge of Arabian Peninsula Affairs, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Azcarate, Pablo de, Principal Secretary of the Palestine Conciliation Commisal-Azm, Khalid, Syrian Prime Minister, March-August 1951.

Azzam Pasha, Abdul Rahman, Secretary General of the League of Arab States. Badra, Mohamed, Tunisian Minister of Social Affairs.

Bakr, Abdullah, Iraqi Minister in the United States.

Balluseck, Daniel J. von, Netherlands Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in April 1951.

Bancroft, Harding F., Bureau of United Nations Affairs, Department of State; Deputy United States Representative on the United Nations Collective Measures Committee.

Barbour, Walworth, Counselor of the Embassy in the Soviet Union.

Barco, James W., Acting Deputy Representative on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Barrow, John Raiph, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State; Political Officer at the Embassy in Iraq, from September 1951; Second Secretary of the Embassy and Counselor, from October 1951.

Baxter, William O., First Secretary of the Embassy in Turkey.

Bayar, Celal, President of the Republic of Turkey.

Beale, Wilson Thomas Moore, Jr., Officer in Charge, Economic Affairs, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, from April 15, 1951. Bebler, Ales, Yugoslav Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in September 1951.

Bechhoefer, Bernhard G., Officer in Charge of International Security Affairs, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State.

Bele, General Refet, Turkish member on the Advisory Committee of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. Bell, John O., Assistant Director, International Security Affairs, Office of the Secretary.

Ben Gurion, David, Israeli Prime Minister and Minister of Defense.

Ben Youssef, Salah, Tunisian Minister of Justice; Secretary General of the Néo-Destour Party.

Benard, Jean-Pierre, First-Secretary of the French Embassy in the United Bendor, Shmuel, Director, United States Department, Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Bennsky, George M., Jr., Office of International Finance, Department of the Treasury.

Bergus, Donald C., Second Secretary and Consul at the Legation in Lebanon; assigned also to Cairo, Tehran, Baghdad, Amman, Jerusalem, Jidda, Damascus, and Sana'a.

Berry, Burton Y., Deputy Assistant Secretary of the State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, from August 1950; Acting Assistant Secretary, from December 11, 1951.

Bethune, Mrs. Mary Macleod. Founder and President-Emeritus, National Council of Negro Women and Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona, Florida.

Bevin, Ernest, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs until March 1951. Bingham, Jonathan B., Assistant Director for Non-European Affairs, Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State; after October 1951, Deputy Administrator, Technical Cooperation Administration.

Bishop, Max W., Department of State Member on the National Security Council Staff, July 1949-July 1951: Consul at Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, from July 1951; Consul General at Dhahran, from September 1951. Bissell, Richard M., Jr., Deputy Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration.

Blaisdell, William M., Deputy Chief, Mediterranean Branch, European Program Division, Economic Cooperation Administration.

Bland, Lieutenant Colonel Edwin A., Jr., USAF, Air Attaché at the Embassy in the Union of South Africa.

Blandford, John B., Jr., U.S. Representative on the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), assigned at Beirut with the personal rank of Ambassador, March 17, 1951; Director of UNRWA, from July 1951.

Blandy, Admiral William H. P., USN (Ret.), Former Commander in Chief, Atlantic, and U.S. Atlantic Fleet until February 1, 1950.

Blaustein, Jacob, President, American Jewish Committee.

de Blesson, Jacques, French Deputy Resident General in Morocco.

Bloom, Hyman, Consul at Accra, Gold Coast.

Boggs, Samuel W., Special Adviser on Geography in the Office of Intelligence Research, Department of State.

Bohlen, Charles E., Minister of the Embassy in France until March 1951; thereafter, Counselor of the Department of State.

de Boisanger, Claude Bréart, French Representative on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, until July 1951.

Bolte, Major General Charles L., USA, Assistant Chief of Staff for Operations, U.S. Army, until February 12, 1951; promoted to Lieutenant General and appointed Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, U.S. Army, February 13, 1951. Bonbright, James C. H., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs.

Bonnet, Henri, French Ambassador to the United States.

Bonsal, Philip, Minister of the Embassy in France.

Bossavy, Colonel Georges, Chairman of the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission.

Botsio, Kojo, Gold Coast Minister of Education and Social Welfare.

Boudali, Nouri, Assistant Secretary General, Union Général Tunsiens du Travail (Tunisian Nationalist Trade Union Federation).

Bouhafa, El Abed, Executive Secretary of the Committee for Freedom of North Africa in the United States. Bourgerie, Elmer H., Director of the Office of African Affairs, Department of State. Bourguiba (Bourghiba), Habib, President of the Néo-Destour Party in Tunisia. Bowker, Sir Reginald James, Superintending Under Secretary of State of the Eastern Department, British Foreign Office. Bradley, General of the Army Omar N., Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Brannan, Charles F., Secretary of Agriculture.

Bray, William H., Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State. Brougham, Robert I., Vice-President and Treasurer, Arabian-American Oil Company.

Browdy, Benjamin G., President, Zionist Organization of America. Brown, Ben H., Jr., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional

Brown, Constantine., Reporter and Columnist for the Washington Star. Brownell, George A., Special Adviser to Secretary of the Air Force, 1950.

Bruce, David K. E., Ambassador to France.

Bruins, John H., Counselor of the Legation in Lebanon.

Bunche, Ralph J., Director, Department of Trusteeship, Unite. Nations; formerly Acting U.N. Mediator in Palestine, 1948-1949.

Burns, Major General James H., USA (Ret.), Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Foreign Military Affairs and Military Assistance, until January 11, 1951; thereafter, Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs.

Burns, Norman, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Burns, Robert L., Office of Near Eastern Affairs. Department of State.

Burrows, Bernard A. B., Counselor of the British Embassy in the United States. Busson, Rene, President and Director General, Banque de Syrie et du Liban until June 1951.

Butler, Victor S., Under-Secretary, British Ministry of Fuel and Power.

Butrick, Richard P., Director General of the Foreign Service.

Byington, Homer M., Deputy Director, Office of Western European Affairs, Department of State.

Byrd, Richard W., Counselor of the Embassy in Australia.

Cabell, Major General Charles P., USA, Director, Joint Staff, Joint Chiefs of Cabot, Thomas D., Director, International Security Affairs, Department of State. Jaffery, Jefferson, Ambassador to Egypt.

Cameron, Warde M., Assistant Legal Adviser for Administration and Foreign Service, Department of State.

Campbell, John C., Officer in Charge of Balkan Affairs, Department of State. Cannelloupoulos. See Kanellopoulos.

Cannon, Cavendish W., Minister in Syria.

Cardozo, Michael H., Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, Department of State.

Carney, Admiral Robert B., USN, Commander in Chief United States Naval Forces Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean.

Carns, Colonel Edwin H. J., USA, Deputy Secretary, Joint Chiefs of Staff. Casabianca, Marcel, Head of the French Section of the Tunisian Grand Council.

Case, John C., Vice President and Director, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc. Cassell, C. Abayomi, Liberian Attorney General.

Chapman, Alec, Washington Representative, Arabian-American Oil Company.

Charles, Sir Noel Hughes Havelock, British Ambassador to Turkey.

Chenik, Sidi Mohamed, Tunisian Prime Minister.

Cherine Bey, Ismail, Commander of the Egyptian Frontier; Egyptian Government Liaison Officer with UNRWA.

Childs, Archie W., Consul General at Lagos, Nigeria, from April 1951.

Childs, J. Rives, Ambassador to Ethiopia, from May 14, 1951.

Churchill, Winston Leonard Spencer, Leader of the Conservative Party in the British House of Commons until October 1951; Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury, from October 26, 1951.

Clapp, Gordon R., Chairman of the United Nations Economic Survey Mission for the Middle East, 1949.

Clark, Harlan B., Officer in Charge of Lebanon-Syria-Iraq Affairs, Department of State, from October 1949; First Secretary and Consul of the Legation in Syria, from March 1951.

Clark, Lewis, United States Representative on the United Nations Advisory Council for Libya, with the personal rank of Ambassador.

Cochran, H. Merrill, Ambassador to Indonesia.

Coe, Robert D., Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State.

Collins, General J. Lawton, USA, Chief of Staff, United States Army.

Comay, Michael, Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Connally, Tom, Democratic Senator from Texas and Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Connelly, Bernard C., First Secretary of the Embassy in the Union of South Africa. Conrad. William E. F., Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State. Contee, Lieutenant Colonel Raymond E., USA, Member of the United States Military Training Mission in Liberia.

Cordier, Andrew W., Executive Secretary to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Coulson, J. E., United Kingdom Alternate Representative at the United Nations. Crawford, Boyd, Staff Administrator and Committee Clerk, House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Crocker, Edward S., Ambassador to Iraq.

Crowe, Smith N., Jr., Office of the Legal Adviser, Department of State.

Cyr, Leo G., Officer in Charge of Northern African Affairs, Department of State. Czyzak, John J., Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, Department of State.

Dafni, Reuven, Israeli Consul at Los Angeles until early 1951; thereafter, Press Officer and Spokesman, Israeli Foreign Ministry.

Daridan, Jean, Minister Counselor of the French Embassy in the United States. Davies, Ralph K., President, American Independent Oil Company.

Davis, Rear Admiral Arthur C., USN (promoted to Vice Admiral, February 1951), Director, Joint Staff, Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Davis, Lieutenant Colonel John J., USA, Army Attaché at the Embassy in the Union of South Africa.

Davis, Monnett B., Ambassador to Israel, from February 26, 1951.

Davis, Owen, First Secretary of the Australian Embassy in the United States until autumn 1951.

Davis, Richard H., Officer in Charge of U.S.S.R. Affairs, Office of Eastern European Affairs, Department of State.

Davis, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas R., USA, Operations Division, Mediterranean and Middle East Branch.

al-Dawalibi, Maruf, Leader of the Syrian People's Party; President of the Syrian Chamber of Deputies until November 1951; designated Syrian Prime Minister on November 28 and deposed that same day; formally resigned on Decem-

Day, Brigadier General Edwin M., USAF, Commanding General, Dhahran Airfield, from February 1951.

de Blesson. See Blesson.

Delaney, Peter, Office of International Finance, Department of the Treasury.

de Margerie. See Jacquin de Margerie.

Dembo, Morris, Third Secretary of the Embassy in the Union of South Africa.

Dennis, Gabriel L., Liberian Secretary of State. Dennis, William E., Liberian Secretary of the Treasury; Chairman of the Joint (U.S.-Liberian) Commission on Economic Development. de Paul, Carter N., Jr., Chief, Mediterranean Branch, European Program Division, Economic Cooperation Administration.

de Ridder, Bennett L., Colonel, Belgian Army; Deputy and sometime Acting Chief of Staff, United Nations Truce Supervision Organization for Palestine. Dixon, Ben Franklin, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Dixon, Sir Pierson John, British Deputy Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; British Representative on the Brussels Treaty Permanent Commission.

Dondero, Raphael, Assistant Comptroller, Budget Execution, Office of the Director for Mutual Security.

Dönges, Theophilius Ebenhaezer, Minister of Interior of the Union of South Africa.

Dorman, John, Consul at Tunis.

Dorr, Russell H., Chief of the Economic Cooperation Administration, Mission to Turkey. Dorsey, Stephen P., Officer in Charge of Economic Affairs, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State. Dorsz, Edmund J., Deputy Director, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Drake, J. Frank, Chairman of the Board, Gulf Oil Corporation.

Drew, Gerald A., Minister in Jordan.

Du Bois, Jean E. S., Belgian Minister to Israel.

Duce, James Terry, Executive Vice President, Arabian-American Oil Company. Dudley, A.A., Head of United Nations (Economic and Social) Department, British Foreign Office.

Dudley, Edward R., Ambassador to Liberia.

Dulles, Allen W., Deputy Director, Central Intelligence Agency.

Duncan, Admiral Donald B., USN, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations (Operations), from March 1, 1950; promoted to Admiral and appointed Vice Chief of Naval Operations, August 10, 1951.

Duncan, Enoch S., Consul at Kuwait.

Duncan, Henry B., Liberian Secretary of Public Works and Utilities.

Durnan, James J., Desk Officer for British Territories in Africa, Office of African Affairs, Department of State.

Du Toit, Major General Christian L., Chief of the General Staff, Union of South Africa.

Eakens, Robert H.S., Chief, Petroleum Policy Staff, Department of State.

Eban, Abba, Israeli Ambassador to the United States.

Eddy, Colonel William A., USMC (Ret.), Consultant to the Arabian-American Oil Company. Ede, James C., British Home Secretary and Leader of the House of Commons until October 1951.

Eden, Anthony, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, from October 27, 1951.

Efteland, Robert G., Secretary, International Security Affairs Committee, Department of State.

Egeli, General Yusuf Adil, Commanding General of the Turkish Fifth Army Corps. Eisenhower, General of the Army Dwight David, Supreme Commander, Allied

Powers, Europe. Elliot, Air Chief Marshal Sir William, RAF, Chairman, British Joint Services

Mission. Emery, George H., Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State. Erasmus, François Christiaan, South African Minister of Defense.

Erhardt, John G., Ambassador to the Union of South Africa, 1950-1951; died February 18, 1951.

Erkin, Feridun C., Turkish Ambassador to the United States.

Erskine, Lieutenant Colonel Sir George W. E. J., G.O.C. British Troops Egypt, and Mediterranean Command.

Esenbel, Melih, Counselor of Turkish Embassy in the United States.

Esin, Seyfullah, Turkish Minister to Israel.

Evans, Trefor E., Joint Secretary of the Middle East (Official) Committee, Middle East Secretariat, Eastern Department, British Foreign Office.

Evans, Major General Vernon, USA, Chief of the U.S. Military Mission to the Iranian Army.

Eytan, Walter, Director General, Israeli Foreign Ministry.

Faisal II, King of Iraq.

Faisal ibn Abdul Aziz, Prince, Saudi Arabian Minister for Foreign Affairs and Viceroy of Hejaz.

al-Faqih, Shaikh Asad, Saudi Arabian Ambassador to the United States. Farag, Ibrahim, Egyptian Minister of Municipal and Rural Affairs. Farmer, Garland R., Jr., Office of African Affairs, Department of State. Farouk I, King of Egypt.

Farra, Jamal E. D., Secretary General, Syrian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Fawzi Bey, Mahmoud, Egyptian Representative at the United Nations.

Feinberg, Abraham, President, Development Corporation for Israel. Feisal. See Faisal.

Feld, Nicholas, Officer in Charge of West Central and East African Affairs, Department of State, from September 1951.

Ferguson, C. Vaughan, Jr., Acting Officer in Charge of Iranian Affairs, Department of State, from January 1951.

Ferguson, John H., Deputy Director, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State. Fife, Vice Admiral James, Jr., Deputy Chief of Naval Operations.

Finletter, Thomas K., Secretary of the Air Force.

Fischer, Maurice, Israeli Minister in France; Israeli Representative at the United Nations.

Flett, Martin Teall, British Under Secretary of the Treasury.

Ford, Richard, Counselor of the Embassy in Israel until February 1951. Forrestal, James V., Secretary of Defense, 1947-1949.

Forsyth, Douglas D., Secretary of the Department of External Affairs of the Union of South Africa.

Foster, William C., Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration until September 1951; thereafter, Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Fowler, Robert William Doughty, British Commonwealth Relations Office; Member of the United Kingdom Delegation to the United Nations.

Franks, Sir Oliver S., British Ambassador to the United States. Fraser, Sir William, Chairman of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

Frederick, Major General Robert, USA, Chief of the U.S. Joint Military Aid Group in Greece, from May 1951; assigned to the Office of the Chief of Staff of the Army, October 1951.

Frisbie, Bryan R., Minerals Attaché at the Embassy in the Union of South Africa.

Fritzlan, A. David, First Secretary of the Legation and Consul in Jordan. Fryer, E. Reeseman, Chief, Health, Manpower, and Education Division, Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA), from February 1951; Assistant Administrator, Near East Field Operations, TCA, from October 1951. Fuhrman, Osmond C.W., Australian Minister to Israel.

Funkhouser, Richard, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State, from January 1951.

Furlonge, Geoffrey W., Head of the Eastern Department, British Foreign Office. Gaitskell, Hugh T.N., British Chancellor of the Exchequer until October 23, Gallad (Galal-Eddine) Bey, Ahmed, Director General of the Egyptian Foreign Ministry.

Gallman, Waldemar, J., Ambassador in the Union of South Africa, from October 18, 1951.

Gardiner, Arthur Z., Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

Gargoni, Khalid, Counsellor to the King of Saudi Arabia. Geren, Paul, Second Secretary of the Legation in Syria.

Gerig, O. Benjamin, Director, Office of Dependent Area Affairs, Department of Ghiardi, John F.L., Assistant U.S. Treasury Representative at Cairo.

Gibson, Sir Horace Stephen, Manager Director, Iraq Petroleum Company, Ltd. Gifford, Walter S., Ambassador to the United Kingdom.

Giustiniani, Raimondo, Italian Minister to Israel.

Gleason, S. Everett, Deputy Executive Secretary, National Security Council. Glubb, Lieutenant General John Bagot, British Officer Commanding the Arab

Legion in Jordan. Gnade, Richard E., Officer in Charge, Lebanon-Syria-Iraq Affairs, Department of State, from October 5, 1951.

Godley, G. McMurtie II, Office of Western European Affairs, Department of State.

Goldmann, Nahum, Chairman, American Section, Jewish Agency for Palestine. Gordon, David L., Economist with the Economic Cooperation Administration Mission in France. Gorlitz, Samuel J., Assistant Chief for Public Loans, Investment and Economic Development Staff, Department of State.

Grady, Henry F., Ambassador to Iran until September 1951.

Greenhill, Denis A., First Secretary of the British Embassy in the United States. Grigoropoulos, Lieutenant General Theodoros, Head of the Greek National Army General Staff, March-May 1951; Head of the Greek National Defense Staff, from June 1951. Gromyko, Andrey Andreyevich, Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister.

Gross, Ernest A., Deputy Representative at the United Nations and Deputy Representative on the Security Council.

Gulick, Clarence Swift, European Program Division, Economic Cooperation

Administration.

Guyon, Edouard-Felix, French Minister in Israel.

Hachad, Farhat, Secretary General of the Union Général Tunisiens du Travail. Hadraba, Theodore, Counselor of the Embassy in Turkey.

Haikal, Yusuf, Minister of Jordan in the United States.

Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia.

Hains, Colonel Peter C., USA, Deputy Director of the Office of Military Assistance, Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Hakim, George, Counselor of the Lebanese Legation in the United States; Charge d'Affaires ad interim, from November 10, 1951.

al-Hakim, Hassan, Syrian Prime Minister, from August 1951.

Halaby, Najeeb E., Jr., Assistant for International Security Affairs to the Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Hamilton, Charles W., Vice-President (Foreign Production Division), Gulf Oil

Corporation. Hamilton, Brigadier General Pierpont M., USAF, Chief of Policy Division, Directorate of Plans and Operations, U.S. Air Force. Hamilton, William L., Jr., Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State.

Hamza, Fuad Bey, Counselor to King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia.

Handley, William J., Labor Adviser, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Harding, Charles L., Director, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc.,

Hare, Raymond A., Ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

Harriman, W. Averell, Special Assistant to the President; Chairman of the NATO Temporary Council Committee, from September 1951; Director for Mutual Security, from October 1951. Haselton, George H., Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Hassett, William D., Secretary to President Truman.

Havenga, Nicolaas C., Minister of Finance and leader of the Afrikaner Party in the Union of South Africa.

Hay, Lieutenant Colonel Sir Rupert, British Political Representative at Bahrein.

Helm, Sir Knox, British Minister in Israel.

Helou (Hilou), Charles, Lebanese Minister of Foreign Affairs, after July 1951.

Hemba, Alton W., Staff Assistant, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State. Henderson, Loy W., Ambassador to India (accredited also to Nepal), until September 1951; thereafter, Ambassador to Iran. Herlitz, Esther, First Secretary of the Israeli Embassy in the United States. Herzog, Colonel Chaim, Military, Naval, and Air Attaché, Israeli Embassy in the United States.

Hewitt, Warren E., Office of the Legal Adviser, Department of State.

Hickerson, John D., Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs.

Hill, C. Reed, Technical Cooperation Officer in Liberia; member of the Joint (U.S.-Liberian) Commission on Economic Development; Chief of the Liberian Economic Mission.

Hill, W. Martin, Deputy Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

al-Hinnawi, Colonel Sami, Syrian military officer; leader of coup d'état in August 1951.

Holmes, Julius C., Minister in the United Kingdom.

Hope, Mary E., Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Hopkinson, Daniel K., Director, European Program Division, Economic Cooperation Administration.

Horowitz, David, Director-General, Israeli Ministry of Finance.

Hoskins, Harold B., Consultant to the Department of State.

Hourani (Haurani, Hawrani), Akram, Syrian member of Parliament, Founder of the Arab Socialist Resurrection (Ba'th) Party, and former Syrian Minister of Defense.

Howard, Harry N., United Nations Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Howard, John B., Regional Planning Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

abul-Huda, Tawfiq. See Abul Huda (Abu al-Huda), Tawfiq. Hudson, Manley O., international law counsel to the Saudi Arabian Government. Hull, Lieutenant General John E., USA, Deputy Chief of Staff for Administration,

U.S. Army, January-July 1951. Humelsine, Carlisle H., Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, Hussein ibn Talal, Prince of Jordan.

Hyman, Semah Cecil, Economic Counselor of the Israeli Embassy in the United States.

Ibn Saud, Abdul Aziz, King of Saudi Arabia.

Idris I (Sayyid Muhammad Idris al-Sanussi), King of Libya, from December 24, Ilah, Amir Abdul. See Abdul Ilah, Amir.

Imlay, Dorothy W., Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, Department of State.

Ingersoll, Rear Admiral S.H., USN, Director, Strategic Plans, Office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

Jackson, Basil, Vice Chairman of the Board of Directors, Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

Jacquet, Raymond, Director General of Political and Administrative Service, French Residency General in Tunisia. Jacquin de Margerie, Roland, Assistant Director General for Political and Economic Affairs, French Foreign Ministry. Jaddid, Major G., Chief, Syrian Delegation, Syria-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission. Jago, John W., Executive Director, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State. Jakins, H.G., British Political Agent in Kuwait.

al-Jamali, Mohamed Fadhil, Iraqi Representative at the United Nations, Jamieson, K.D., Second Secretary of the British Embassy in the United States. Jansen, Ernest George, Governor General for the Union of South Africa.

al-Jarbi (Jerbi), Ali Bey, Libyan Foreign Minister, March-December 1951. Jarvie, Basil J., Counselor of the South African Embassy in the United States.

Jebb, Sir Hubert Miles Gladwyn, British Permanent Representative at the United Nations, President of the United Nations Security Council in July 1951.

Jenkins, Major General Reuben E., Chief of the Joint United States Military Aid Group to Greece.

Jessup, Philip C., Ambassador at Large; Representative at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Johnson, Louis A., Secretary of Defense until September 1950.

Johnson, U. Alexis, Director of the Office of Northeast Asian Affairs, Department of State, from February 4, 1951; Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, from November 30, 1951.

Jones, G. Lewis, Jr., Director, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Jones, J. Jefferson III, Deputy Director, Office of Dependent Area Affairs, Department of State. Jones, Owen T., First Secretary of the Embassy in Israel.

Jooste, Gerhardus Petrus, South African Ambassador to the United States.

Juin, General Pierre Alphonse, French Resident General in Morocco, until January 1951; Inspector General, French Armed Forces, from January 1951. Kanellopoulos, Panayotis, joint leader of the Populist-Unionist (LEK) Party in Greece.

Kaplan, Eliezer, Israeli Minister of Finance.

Karaosmanoğlu, Fevzi Lutfi, Turkish Minister of State for Marshall Plan Affairs until March 9, 1951. Kartalis, George, former EPEK Member of the Greek Parliament; Greek Minister of Coordination, from October 1951.

Katz, Milton, United States Special Representative in Europe under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, until September 1951.

Keeler, Erwin P., First Secretary of the Embassy in Israel, from April 1951.

Keren, Moshe, Counselor, Israeli Embassy in the United States.

Khalil, Akmar, Senior Jordanian Representative on the Jordan-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission.

el-Khouri, Faiz, Syrian Minister in the United States; President of the Syrian Delegation at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

al-Khuri, Bishara, President of Lebanon.

Kiefer, Alexander F., Office of German Economic Affairs, Department of State. King, Charles D. B., former President of Liberia, 1923-1930; Liberian Ambassador to the United States, from 1949.

Kirkbride, Sir Alec, British Minister in Jordan.

Knight, Sir Henry, British Representative on the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Knight, Ridgway B., Acting Officer in Charge of Political-Military Affairs, Office of European Regional Affairs, Department of State, from March 1950; subsequently, Officer in Charge; Acting Deputy Director, from February 16, 1951; Adviser on NATO Affairs, Office of European Regional Affairs, from July 1951.

Kollek, Theodore (Teddy), Minister of the Israeli Embassy in the United States. Kopper, Samuel K. C., Deputy Director, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Köprülü, Fuad, Turkish Foreign Minister.

Köymen, Hulusi, Turkish Minister of National Defense.

Kuter, Major General Laurence S., USAF (promoted to Lieutenant General April 10, 1951), Commander, Military Air Transport Service, Andrews Air Force Base.

Kyrou, Alexis, Greek Representative at the United Nations.

Labonne, Eirik, French Resident General in Morocco, 1946-1947. Labouisse, Henry R., Director of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State, until March 1951; Director, Planning Staff, Bureau of European Affairs, from March 1951.

Lacoste, Francis, French Alternate Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in February 1951.

Lalor, Rear Admiral William G., USN (Ret.), Secretary, Joint Chiefs of Staff. Lambrakis, Demetrius, publisher of the Athens newspapers To Vima and Ta Nea. Landon, Major General Truman H., USAF, Director of Plans, Headquarters, United States Air Force, until February 1951.

Lapham, Roger D., Chief, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission to

Greece. Laskey, Denis S., United Kingdom Alternate Representative on the United Nations Security Council.

La Tour du Pin Verclause, Geoffrey, Division of African-Levant Affairs, French Foreign Ministry, until October 1951; on special mission in Morocco, from October 1951.

Lavon, Pinhas, Israeli Minister of Agriculture.

Lawton, Frederick J., Director, Bureau of the Budget.

Lay, James S., Jr., Executive Secretary, National Security Council.

Lecheres, General Charles, Chief of Staff, French Air Force; Chairman, French Joint Chiefs of Staff, French Representative, Military Committee, North Atlantic Council.

Lee, Major General Robert M., USAF, Director of Plans, Headquarters, United States Air Force.

Le Roy de la Tournelle, Guy, Director General of Political and Economic Affairs, French Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Lescuyer, Jean, French Ambassador to Turkey.

Levy, Walter J., Petroleum Consultant.

Lewis, Charles W., Jr., Consul General in Istanbul.

Lewis, Geoffrey W., Deputy Director, Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State.

Liaquat Ali Khan, Pakistani Prime Minister.

Lie, Trygve H., Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Lincoln, Francis F., Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Linder, Harold F., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs. Loftus, John A., Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Lourie, Arthur, Israeli Consul General at New York; Israeli Deputy Representative at the United Nations.

Lovett, Robert A., Deputy Secretary of Defense, until September 1951; thereafter Secretary of Defense.

Luc, Robert, Head of the Near East Division, French Foreign Ministry.

Ludlow, James M., Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State.

Lynch, Andrew G., Consul General at Tripoli.

Lynch, Thomas J., General Counsel, Department of the Treasury.

MacArthur, Douglas II, Deputy Director, Office of European Regional Affairs, Department of Sta's, until February 1951; thereafter Counselor of the Embassy in France and Adviser on International Affairs to the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe.

Macatee, Robert B., United States Representative on the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Macgregor, Gordon, Technical Cooperation Administration.

Maffitt, Edward P., Adviser for Security Council and General Affairs, United States Mission to the United Nations.

Makleff, Brigadier General Mordechai, Israel Defense Army.

Maktos, John, Assistant Legal Adviser for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Malan, Daniel François, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa.

Malania, Leo, Executive Office of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Malcolm, Colonel Marion, USAF, Head of the Military Rights Division, Assistant for Air Bases, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, Department of Defense.

Malik, Charles, Lebanese Minister in the United States.

Malik, Yakov Aleksandrovich, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister; Soviet Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in June 1951.

Mangano, Philip A., Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Maniadakis, Constantine, joint leader of the Greek Politike Anexartetos Parataxis (Independent Political Array).

Mansfield, Michael J., Democratic Congressman from Montana; Representative at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Mansur (Mansour), Prince, Saudi Arabian Minister of Defense until May 1, 1951.

Marchal, Léon, French Representative on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, from July 15, 1951.

Marei Bey, Ali, Director of Protocol, Egyptian Foreign Ministry.

Margolies, Daniel F., Deputy Director, Office of German Economic Affairs, Department of State.

Margrave, Robert, Munitions Division, Office of Security and Consular Affairs, Department of State. Marjolin, Robert Ernest, Secretary General of the Organization for European Cooperation.

Markezinis, Spyros B., leader of the New Party in Greece.

Marshall, Charles Burton, Member, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State.

Marshall, George C., Secretary of Defense until September 17, 1951.

Martin, Edwin M., Director, Office of European Regional Affairs, Department of State. Mathews, Elbert G., Director, Office of South Asian Affairs, Department of State;

Consul at Istanbul, from June 18, 1951, Consul General at Istanbul, from September 20, 1951.

Matienzo, Eduardo Anze, United Nations Commissioner for Eritrea.

Matthews, H. Freeman, Deputy Under Secretary of State.

Mattison, Gordon H., Counselor of the Embassy in Egypt.

Mavros, George, Greek Minister of Finance, from February 2, 1951.

McBride, Harry C., Administrator, National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C. McBride, John W., Office of African Affairs, Department of State.

McBride, Robert Henry, United States Consul at Rabat, Morocco until September 1951; with the Embassy in France, from September 1951.

McCloy, John J., United States High Commissioner for Germany.

McDaniel, Bruce W., Appointed Chief of the Technical Cooperation Administration Mission to Israel, October 14, 1951.

McDermott, Michael J., Special Assistant for Press Relations to the Secretary of McFall, Jack K., Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations.

McGhee, George C., Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, from October 1949; Ambassador to Turkey, from December 1951. McJunkins, Orren R., Deputy Chief of the Economic Cooperation Administration

Mission to Turkey.

McWilliams, William J., Director, Executive Secretariat, Department of State. Meeker, Leonard C., Assistant Legal Adviser for United Nations Affairs; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Meier, Oscar W., Officer in Charge of African Economic Affairs, Department of State, from March 1951; Chief of the Economic Mission in Liberia, 1946-1950. Melas, Leonidas, Greek Ambassador to the United Kingdom. Meloy, Francis E., Jr., Assistant to the Director of the Executive Secretariat, Department of State.

Memminger, Robert B., First Secretary of the Embassy in Greece.

Menderes, Adnan, Turkish Prime Minister.

Menzies, Robert G., Australian Prime Minister.

Merchant, Livingston T., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, until November 1951; thereafter, Special Assistant for Mutual Security Affairs.

Meron, Gershon, Director, Economic Division, Israeli Foreign Ministry.

Merrell, George R., Ambassador to Ethiopia until March 17, 1951.

Milicević, Nikola, Yugoslav Minister to Israel.

Milne, Matilda L., Assistant Chief, Exchange Rates, Monetary Affairs Staff, Office of Financial and Development Policy, Department of State.

Minor, Harold B., Minister in Lebanon, from September 1951.

Misha'al al-Saud, Amir, Saudi Arabian Minister of Defense and Aviation, from May 1951. Mitchell, William, Special Adviser to the Secretary of the Air Force.

Moatsis, John, former Chef de Cabinet in the Government of Greek Prime Minister Nicholas Plastiris, April-November 1951.

Mohammed al Amin, Sidi (Sidi Mohammed Lamine Pasha), Bey of Tunisia.

Mohammed ben Youssef, Sidi, Sultan of Morocco.

Moline, Edwin G., Acting Chief, Economic Defense Staff, Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy, Department of State, from April 10, 1951; Chief, from November 21, 1951.

Monem, Abdul Mostafa Bey. See Abdul Monem, Mostafa Bey.

Monsma, George R., Officer in Charge of International Organization Affairs, Office of Regional American Affairs, Department of State.

Moodie, Colin T., Counselor of the Australian Embassy in the United States. Moore, C. Robert, Officer in Charge of Turkish Affairs, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Moore, W. F., President, Arabian-American Oil Company.

Moreland, William D., Consul in the Consulate General at Dakar, French West Africa.

Morrison, Herbert, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, March-October, Morse, Peter K., Office of the General Counsel, Economic Cooperation Administration.

Mosadeq (Mossadegh), Mohammad, Chairman of the Iranian Majlis oil commission and leader of the Iranian National Front; Iranian Prime Minister from April 29, 1951.

al-Mulki (Mulqi), Fawzi, Jordanian Minister of Defense until December 1950.

Muniz, João Carlos, Brazilian Representative at the United Nations: President of the United Nations Security Council in October 1951.

Muntasir, Mahmud, Libyan Prime Minister, from March 1951.

Murphy, Carl, President of the Afro-American newspapers.

el-Nahas Pasha, Mustafa, Egyptian Prime Minister and President of the Wafd Party.

Naif, Emir, Regent of Jordon, July 20-September 6, 1951.

Nash, Frank C., Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense, until July 1951; thereafter, Assistant for International Security Affairs to the Secretary of Nashashibi, Azmi, Senior Jordanian representative on the Jordan-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission; Under Secretary in the Jordanian Foreign Ministry.

Nehru, Jawaharlal, Indian Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations.

Newell, George T., Vice President, Manufacturers Trust Company. Newton, James D., Petroleum Policy Staff, Department of State.

Nitze, Paul H., Director, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State.

Nkrumah, Kwame, Leader of Government Business (Prime Minister) of the Legislative Assembly of the Gold Coast; leader of Gold Coast Convention People's Party.

Noble, Donald, Assistant Legal Counsel, Arabian American Oil Company.

Norton, Sir Clifford John, British Ambassador to Greece.

Nuri al-Said. See al-Said, Nuri.

Ofsthun, Colonel Sidney A., USAF, Chief, Plans and Programs Division, Office of Military Assistance, Department of Defense.

Ohliger, Floyd W., Vice President in Charge of Government Liaison in Saudi Arabia, Arabian American Oil Company.

Ohly, John H., Deputy Director of Mutual Defense Assistance, until January 8, 1951: thereafter, with International Security Affairs (ISA), Department of State; from October 1951, Assistant Director for Policy and Program Development, ISA.

O'Keefe, Brigadier General Richard J., USAF, Commanding General, Dhahran

Ordonneau, Pierre, Member of the French Delegation at the United Nations. Oudot, Emile, Senior Director and, after June 10, 1951, temporary President and Director General of the Banque de Syrie et du Liban in Lebanon.

Pace, Frank, Jr., Secretary of the Army.

Packard, Major General Sir Charles Douglas, Commander, British Military Mission in Greece, 1949-1951; Chief of Staff, General Headquarters, Middle East Land Forces, 1951–1953

Pahlevi, Mohammad Reza Shah, Shah of Iran.

Paige, Robert D., Foreign Program Officer, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission to Greece.

Palmer, Ely E., United States Representative and Chairman, United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

Palmer, Joseph 2d, First Secretary of the Embassy in the United Kingdom; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Papagos. Field Marshal Alexander, Commander in Chief of Greek Armed Forces until May 1951; Head of the political movement known as "Greek Rally", from August 1951.

Papandreou, George, Greek Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Coordination, and Minister of Religion and National Education, until July 1951; leader of the George Papandreou Party.

Papapolitis, Savvas, EPEK Member of the Greek Parliament, 1951; Greek Minister of Commerce, from October 1951.

Papaspyrou, Demitrios, former EPEK Member of the Greek Parliament; Greek Minister of Justice, from October 1951.

Parker, Paul C., U.S. Treasury Representative in the Middle East.

Parsons, J. Graham, Deputy Director, Office of European Regional Affairs, Department of State.

Patrick, Captain G. Serpell, USN, Office of Foreign Military Affairs, Office of International Security Affairs, Department of Defense.

Patterson, Jefferson, United States Representative on the United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans.

Paul, Norman S., Deputy Assistant for International Security Affairs to the Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration. Pelt, Adrian, United Nations Commissioner in Libya.

Penfield, James K., Counselor of the Embassy in the United Kingdom.

Perillier, Louis, French Resident General in Tunisia.

Perkins, George W., Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs.

Peurifoy, John E., Ambassador to Greece and Chief of the American Mission for Aid to Greece.

Phelps, Vernon L., Chief, Trade Agreements Branch, Commercial Policy Staff, Department of State.

Pinder, Frank E., United States Agricultural Adviser in Liberia.

Pinkerton, Lowell C., Minister in Lebanon.

Pipinelis, Panayotis, former Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Plakias, John N., Consul General at Dakar, French West Africa. Plastiras, General Nicholas, Prime Minister of Greece, from October 1951; joint leader with Emmanuel Tsouderos of the National Progressive Union of the Center (EPEK).

Plitt, Edwin A., Diplomatic Agent and Consul General at Tangier until April 1951; thereafter, Senior United Nations Adviser to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State; member of the U.S. Delegation Staff of Advisers at the Sixth Session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Politis, Athanase G., Greek Ambassador to the United States.

Politis, John, Greek Permanent Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs until August 1951; Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs, August-September 1951. Polk, Judd, Chief, British Commonwealth and Middle East Division, Office of International Finance, Department of the Treasury.

Popper, David H., Deputy Director, International Organization Affairs, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs. Porter, Paul R., Assistant Administrator for Program, Economic Cooperation Administration; Acting United States Special Representative in Europe under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, from September 1951.

Porter, William J., Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Potamianos, Haralambos, Private Secretary to Paul, King of the Hellenes and Honorary General Aide to the King.

Power, Thomas F., Jr., Principal Secretary, United Nations Mission in Libya; Personal Representative in Libya of the United Nations Secretary-General. Proctor, David, Vice President and General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation.

Puaux, François, Deputy Director of the Protectorates, French Foreign Ministry.

Puaux, Gabriel, French Resident General in Morocco, 1943-1946.

al-Qudsi, Nazim, Syrian Prime Minister, until March 1951.

Quevedo, Antonio, Ecuadorian Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in January and December 1951. al-Quwatli, Shukri, former President of Syria, 1943-1949.

Rafael, Gideon, Israeli Alternate Representative at the United Nations.

Rahim, Mohamed Kamil Abdul, Egyptian Ambassador to the United States. Ramati, Colonel Shaoul, Israel Defense Forces; Officer in Charge, Israeli Delegations to the Mixed Armistice Commissions.

Ranney, Frederic G., Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State.

al-Rawi, Ahmad Eban Said Ibrahim, Under Secretary, Iraqi Foreign Office, 1949-1951; Iraqi Minister to Jordan, from March 3, 1951.

Ray, George W., Jr., General Counsel, Arabian-American Oil Company.

Raynor, G. Hayden, Adviser, Bureau of European Affairs, Department of State, until March 1951; Director, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State, from March 1951. Razmara, General Ali, Iranian Prime Minister, from June 26, 1950 until his assassination on March 7, 1951.

Redecker, Sydney, Consul General at Johannesburg.

Reinhardt, G. Frederick, Director, Office of Eastern European Affairs, Department of State.

Reinstein, Jacques J., Special Assistant to the Director, Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State, from August 1951.

Rendis, Constantine, Greek Minister of Interior, from October 1951.

Rhoades, Ralph O., Vice President, Gulf Oil Corporation.

Richards, Arthur L., Counselor of the Embassy in Iran.

Richardson, W. Garland, First Secretary of the Embassy in Liberia.

Richey, Earle J., Office of African Affairs, Department of State.

al-Rifai, Samir, Jordanian Prime Minister until July 1951.

Riley, Major General William E., USMC (promoted to Lieutenant General, May 1951), Chief of Staff, United Nations Truce Supervision Organization. Ritter, Paul, Swiss Consul General at Tel Aviv.

Rives, James H., United States Public Works Adviser in Liberia.

Robertson, General Sir Brian H., Commander in Chief, British Middle East Land Forces.

Rockefeller, Nelson A., Chairman of the Presidential Council on Technical Assistance.

Rockwell, Stuart W., Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs, Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Roosevelt, Anna Eleanor (Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt), United States Representative to the Commission on Human Rights, United Nations Economic and Social Council; Representative at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Root, John Frick, Second Secretary of the Embassy in the United Kingdom.

Rosaz, Gabriel, Attaché, French Embassy.

Rosenson, Alexander M., Associate Chief (Chief from October 1951), Monetary Affairs Staff, Department of State.

Ross, John C., Deputy Representative on the Security Council; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Rountree, William M., Director of the Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs, Department of State.

Ruffner, Major General Clark L., USA, Deputy Assistant for International Security Affairs to the Secretary of Defense.

Rusk, Dean, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs. al-Sabban, Muhmmad Surur, Saudi Arabian Minister of State.

Sadawi, Bashir, Leader of the National Congress Party in Libya. al-Said, Nuri, Iraqi Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior.

Sakellariou, Vice Admiral Alexander, Royal Hellenic Navy (Ret.), member of the Greek Parliament as co-leader of the National Re-Creation Front until 1951; Greek Minister of National Defense, from October 1951.

Saleh, Abdullah Mulla, Personal Secretary to the Shaikh of Kuwait.

de St. Hardouin, J. Tarbe, French Representative on the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Salaheddin Bey, Mohamed, Egyptian Foreign Minister.

Saleh, Alayar, Chairman of the Iranian National Oil Company, National Front Deputy, and President of the Joint Oil Committee.

Salha, Najib Bey, Saudi Arabian Deputy Assistant Minister of Finance.

Sandifer, Durward V., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly. Sands, William L., Jr., Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Sanjabi, Karim, Iranian Minister of Education, from May 1951.

al-Sanussi, Sayyid Muhammad Idris, Amir of Cyrenaica; King Idris I of Libya, from December 24, 1951.

Sarper, Selim, Turkish Permanent Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in May 1951.

Satterthwaite, Livingston, Deputy Director, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State.

Saud. See Ibn Saud.

Saud ibn Abdul Aziz, Crown Prince of Saudi Arabia.

Sauer, Paul O., Minister of Transport of the Union of South Africa.

Savut, Ilhan, Turkish Alternate Representative on the United Nations Security

Schuman, Robert, French Foreign Minister.

Scott, Major General Stanley L., USA, Director, Office of Military Assistance, Department of Defense.

Selo, Colonel Fawzi, Syrian Minister of Defense in the Cabinet of Nazim al-Qudsi, until March 1951; in the Cabinet of Khalid al-Azm, March-July 1951; and in the Cabinet of Hasan al-Hakim, August-November 1951. Syrian Chief of State, Prime Minister, and Minister of Defense, from December 1951.

Seraggedin (Sirag el Din), Fuad Pasha, Egyptian Minister of Interior and Finance and Secretary General of the Wafd Party.

Setser, Vernon G., Commercial Policy Staff, Department of State; Chief, Economic Treaties Branch, Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy, after July 30, 1951.

Shalit, Meir, First Secretary of the Israeli Embassy in the United States. Sharett, Moshe, Israeli Minister of Foreign Affairs; President of the Israeli Delegation at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Shaw, Barkley, Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Air Force. Sherman, Charles B., Liberian Treasury Economist; Economic Adviser to the Liberian Government.

Sherman, Admiral Forrest P., Chief of Naval Operations.

Shiloah, Reuven, Special Adviser to the Israeli Foreign Minister.

al-Shishakli (Shishikli), Colonel Adib, Chief of Staff of the Syrian Army, from May 31, 1951; temporary Syrian Chief of State, December 1951.

Shukairy, Ahmad, Syrian Representative at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly; Assistant Secretary General of the League of the League of Arab States.

Shullaw, J. Harold, Dominion Affairs Officer, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State.

Silaw. See Selo.

Silver, Solomon, Technical Cooperation Administration.

Silver, Warren A., Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State. Sims, Harold, Officer in Charge of West, Central and East African Affairs until August 1951; thereafter, Consul General at Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia.

Sirry Pasha, Hussein, Egyptian Prime Minister until January 1951.

Slessor, Sir John C., Marshal of the British Royal Air Force.

Slim, Field Marshal Sir William J., Chief, British Imperial General Staff.

Smith, Mary L., Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State.

Smith, Lieutenant General Walter Bedell, USA (General from July 27, 1951), Director of Central Intelligence.

Snoy et d'Oppuers, Baron Jean-Charles, former Chairman of the Council of the Organization for European Cooperation.

Snyder, John, Secretary of the Treasury.

Snyder, Lucille, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs.

Sofianopoulos (Sophianopoulos), John, joint leader of the Democratic Camp, a coalition of political parties of the extreme left in the Greek parliamentary elections of March 1950.

el-Solh, Riad, Prime Minister of Lebanon until February 1951; assassinated on July 16, 1951.

Soulie, Gaston, Assistant Chief of the Cabinet of the French Residency General in Morocco. Spalding, Major General Sidney P., USA (Ret.), assistant to Major General

James H. Burns during World War II. Sparks, Joseph S., First Secretary of the Embassy in Egypt.

Spencer, John, Adviser to the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry.

Spofford, Charles M., United States Deputy Representative on the North Atlantic Council; Chairman of the North Atlantic Council Deputies and of the European Coordinating Committee.

Stabler, Wells, Officer in Charge of Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs,

Department of State.

Stanton, William Q., Consul General at Lagos, Nigeria, until April 1951.

Steel, Christopher E., British Minister in the United States.

Stein, Eric, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General

Stephanopoulos, Stephen, joint leader of the Greek Populist-Unionist Party, incorporated into the Greek Rally in August 1951; member of the Greek Parliament.

Stevenson, Sir Ralph Clarmont Skrine, British Ambassador to Egypt.

Stinebower, Leroy D., Director, Office of Financial and Development Policy, Department of State.

Stowell, Major General James S., USAF, Commanding General, Continental Division, Military Air Transport Service.

Strang, Sir William, British Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Sturgill, Robert G., Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State, from August 1951.

Stutesman, John H., Second Secretary of the Embassy in Iran from June 1949; Counselor of Embassy in addition to Second Secretary, from June 20, 1951.

Sulaiman, Abdullah, Saudi Arabian Minister of Finance.

Sulaiman, Hamad, Saudi Arabian Deputy Minister of Finance. Surur (Suroor) al-Sabban, Muhammad. See al-Sabban, Muhammad Surur.

Swayzee. Cleon O., Labor Adviser to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

Sweeney, Joseph, Attaché at the Embassy in the Union of South Africa.

Swett, Trevor W., Office of International Security Affairs, Department of State. Tabet, Kerim, Egyptian journalist and writer; former Press Adviser to the Egyptian Royal Cabinet; Adviser, Egyptian State Broadcasting.

Takla, Philip, Lebanese Minister of Finance, from June 1951.

Talal ibn Abdullah al-Hussein, Crown Prince of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan; proclaimed King on September 5, 1951.

Tate, Jack B., Deputy Legal Adviser, Department of State.

Taxis, Colonel Samuel G., USMC, Chairman, Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission.

Taylor, Fred E., Office of the Special Assistant for Fisheries and Wildlife to the Under Secretary of State. Taylor, Major General Maxwell D., USA, Assistant Chief of Staff, G-3, U.S.

Army, February-July 1951.

Tenney, E. Paul, First Secretary of the Embassy in Iraq until May 1951. Thayer, Robert A., Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State. Thornburg, Max W., foreign industrial consultant.

Thorp, Willard L., Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs. Tibbetts, Margaret Joy, Attaché at the Embassy in the United Kingdom.

Tobin, Maurice J., Secretary of Labor.

Tomlinson, J. D., Adviser in the Office of United Nations Economic and Social Affairs, Department of State.

La Tournelle. See Le Roy de la Tournelle.

Trott, Alan Charles, British Ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

Truman, Harry S., President of the United States.

Tsakalotos, Lieutenant General Thrasyvoulos, Chief of the Greek Army General Staff, from June 1951.

Tsaldaris, Constantine, leader of the Populist Party in Greece; member of the Greek Parliament. Tsarapkin, Semyen Konstantinovich, Soviet Alternate Representative at the United Nations.

Tsiang, Tingfu F., Chinese Representative at the United Nations; President of the United Nations Security Council in November 1951.

Tsouderos, Emmanuel, Greek Minister of Coordination; joint leader with General Nicholas Plastiris of EPEK, the National Progressive Union of the Center.

Tubman, William V. S., President of Liberia.

Tufts, Robert W., Member, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State. Tuqan, Ahmad Bey, Jordanian Foreign Minister, March 1-April 17, 1951.

Turkel, Harry R., Counselor for Economic Affairs of the Embassy in Greece, from June 5, 1951.

Twe, Didwo, leader of the Liberian United People's Party, 1949-1951, and the Liberian Reformation Party, from April 1951; candidate for President of Liberia in May 1951.

Twining, General Nathan F., USAF, Vice Chief of Staff, U.S. Air Force.

Tyler, S. Roger, Jr., Consul at Jerusalem.

Ustun, Gündoğdu, Acting Secretary General of the Turkish Foreign Ministry. Vallat, Francis, member of the United Kingdom Delegation at the United Nations.

Vandenberg, General Hoyt S., USAF, Chief of Staff, U.S. Air Force.

Van Fleet, Lieutenant General James A., USA, former Director, Joint U.S. Military Advisory and Planning Group in Greece, 1948-1950, and Chief, Joint U.S. Military Aid Group to Greece, until July 17, 1950.

van Laethem, Gabriel, Second Secretary of the French Embassy in the United States.

Venizelos, Sophocles, Greek Prime Minister, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Provisional Minister of National Defense, until October 1951; thereafter, Greek Deputy Prime Minister.

Ventiris, Lieutenant General Constantine, Inspector General of the Greek National Army, 1949-March 1951; thereafter, Honorary General Aide to Paul, King of the Hellenes.

Vigier, Henri, United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization.

Villard, Henry S., Member of the Policy Planning Staff, Department of State. Vimont, Jacques, Secretary General of the Tunisian Government (French Residency General in Tunisia) until March 1951.

Voizard, Pierre, Minister of State for Monaco, until December 1951; French Resident General in Tunisia, from December 1951. Vorys, John M., Republican Congressman from Ohio; Representative at the

Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly. Waddell, Major E. L., Jr., USA, Office of Military Assistance, Office of the Secretary of Defense.

al-Wadi, Shakr, Acting Iraqi Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Wadsworth, George, Ambassador to Turkey.

Wagner, Joseph J., Consul at Nicosia, Cyprus. Wainhouse, David W., Director, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State; Adviser at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Waldo, John A., Jr., Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Walmsley, Walter N., Jr., Special Assistant to the Ambassador at Large. Ward, Angus, Consul General at Nairobi.

Warren, Avra M., Ambassador to Pakistan.

Watts, Philip H., Member, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State. Webb, James E., Under Secretary of State.

Wellons, Alfred E., Office of African Affairs, Department of State.

White, Lincoln, Deputy Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for Press Relations.

White, Major General Thomas D., USAF, Director of Plans, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, from February 1951.

Whiteman, Marjorie M., Assistant Legal Adviser for Inter-American Affairs, Department of State.

Wiens, Henry, Program Review Officer, Economic Cooperation Administration Mission in Turkey.

Winslow, Richard S., Secretary General, United States Mission at the United Nations.

Wooldridge, Rear Admiral Edmund T., USN, Deputy Director for Politico-Military Affairs, Joint Chiefs of Staff; Representative of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Senior Staff of the National Security Council.

Worcester, Douglas J., Office of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State. Wright, Vice Admiral Jerauld, USN, Deputy United States Representative, NATO Standing Group.

Yadin, Major General Yigael, Chief of Staff, Defense Army of Israel.

ibn Yahya, Ahmad, Imam of Yemen.

Yamut, General Nuri, Chief of Staff, Turkish General Staff, Turkish Army.

Yassin, Shaikh Yusef, Saudi Arabian Deputy Foreign Minister.

Yingling, Raymund T., Assistant Legal Adviser for European Affairs, Department of State.

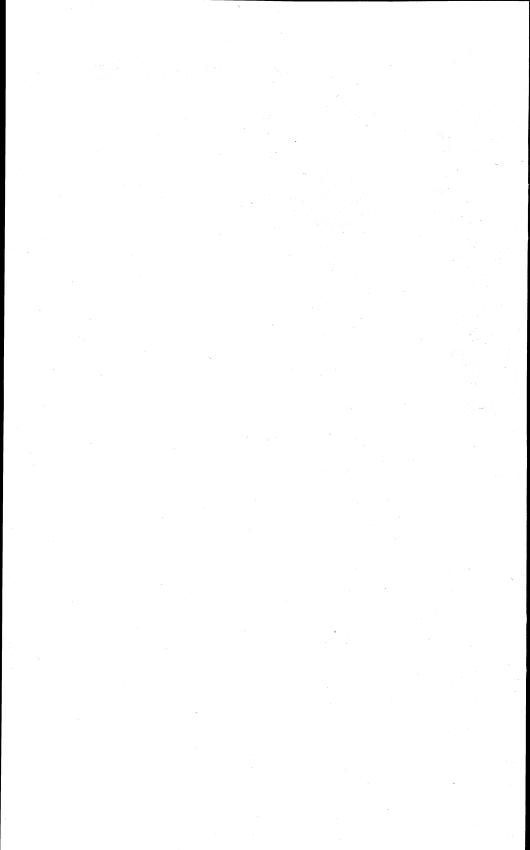

Yost, Charles W., Minister at the Embassy in Greece. Young, Richard, International Law Counsel to the Saudi Arabian Government. al-Za'im, Husni, Former Syrian Prime Minister (April-June 1949).

Zain, Queen of Jordan.

Zeineddine, Farid, Syrian Representative at the United Nations.

Zigdis, John (Ioannis), Liberal and later EPEK party Member of the Greek Parliament; Greek Minister without Portfolio, from October 1951.

Zorlu, Fatin Rüstü, Assistant Secretary General for Economic Affairs, Turkish Foreign Ministry.

LIST OF SOURCES

The principal source of documentation for this volume was the indexed central (decimal) files of the Department of State. Documents from the central files were supplemented by materials from Department of State "lot" files (retired decentralized office files) and post files (records retired by United States missions overseas). The editors also examined files of the Economic Cooperation Administration located in the Federal Records Center at Suitland, Maryland. Presidential papers in the Harry S. Truman Library at Independence, Missouri became available only after this volume had been compiled.

A list of lot files used in the preparation of this volume follows, with information concerning their origin, scope, and size.

CFM Files, Lot M 88

Consolidated master collection of the records of conferences of heads of state, Council of Foreign Ministers and ancillary bodies, North Atlantic Council, other meetings of the Secretary of State with the Foreign Ministers of European powers, and materials on the Austrian and German peace settlements for the years 1943–1955, prepared by the Records Service Center, Department of State. (249 feet)

Conference Files, Lot 59 D 95

Collection of documentation on official visits by European heads of government and foreign ministers to the United States and on major international conferences, including North Atlantic Council sessions, attended by the Secretary of State during the years 1949–1955, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (13 feet)

Daily TS Summary, Lot 52-242

Master set of the Department of State internal publication Daily Top Secret Summary for the years 1945-1951, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat. (4 feet)

ECA Telegram Files, FRC Acc. No. 53 A 278

Serial telegram files of incoming and outgoing Economic Cooperation Administration telegrams for the years 1948–1951, as maintained by the Administrative Services Division of ECA and subsequently retired by the Mutual Security Agency. These files, now administered by the Agency for International Development, are located in the Federal Records Center at Suitland, Maryland. (249 feet)

INR-NIE Files

File of National Intelligence Estimates and Special Estimates retained by the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the Department of State.

XXXIII

IO Files

Master files of the Reference and Documents Section, Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State, comprising official United Nations documentation and classified Department of State records on United States policy in the United Nations Security Council, Trusteeship Council, Economic and Social Council, and various special and ad hoc committees for the period from 1946 to date. (More than 100 feet)

IO Files, Lot 71 D 440

Master file of classified records and correspondence of United States Delegations to sessions of the United Nations General Assembly for the years 1945–1965, as maintained by the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State. (48 feet)

ISAC Files, Lot 53 D 443

Files of the International Security Affairs Committee, Department of State, 1951. (2 feet)

McGhee Files, Lot 53 D 468

Copies of memoranda and correspondence of Assistant Secretary of States for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs George C. McGhee for the years 1949–1951.

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137

Master file of documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs of the Department of State.

NE Files, Lot 57 D 177

Files of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs of the Department of State, 1928-1953, particularly concerning Arabian Peninsula and Iraq. (2 feet)

NE Files, Lot 58 D 332

Files of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs of the Department of State, 1949-1956, particularly concerning the Arabian Peninsula and Iraq. (2 feet)

PPS Files, Lot 64 D 563

Master file of documents, drafts, records of meetings, memoranda, and related correspondence of the Policy Planning Staff of the Department of State, covering the years 1947-1953. (42 feet)

S/ISA Files, Lot 52-26

Records of the Office of the Director, International Security Affairs, Department of State, covering the years 1949–1951; part of Accession No. 62 A 613 of the Federal Records Center at Suitland, Maryland.

S/P-NSC Files, Lot 61 D 167

Serial file of memoranda relating to National Security Council questions for the years 1950-1961, as maintained by the Policy Planning Staff of the Department of State. (17 feet)

S/P-NSC Files, Lot 62 D 1

Serial and subject master file of National Security Council documents and correspondence for the years 1948-1961, as maintained by the Policy Planning Staff of the Department of State. (43 feet)

S/S-NSC Files, Lot 63 D 351

Serial master file of National Security Council documents and correspondence, and related Department of State memoranda, for the years 1947-1961, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (20 feet)

S/S-NSC (Miscellaneous) Files, Lot 66 D 95

Administrative and miscellaneous National Security Council documentation, including NSC Records of Action, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State for the years 1947–1963. (9 feet)

Secretary's Letters, Lot 56 D 459

Serial master file of correspondence of the Secretary of State for the years 1945–1956, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat. (3 $\frac{1}{3}$  feet)

Secretary's Memoranda, Lot 53 D 444

Comprehensive chronological collection of the Secretary of State's memoranda and memoranda of conversation for the years 1947–1953, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (15 feet)

Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation, Lot 65 D 238

Chronological collection of the Secretary of State's memoranda of conversation with the President for the years 1949–1952, memoranda of the Secretary of State and Under Secretary of State for the years 1951–1952, and the Secretary of State's memoranda of conversations with Senator Tom Connally of Texas for the years 1950–1951, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (1 foot)

State-JCS Meetings, Lot 61 D 417

Records of meetings between representatives of the Department of State and the Joint Chiefs of Staff for the period 1951–1959, and selected problem files on the Middle East for the period 1954–1956, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (3 feet)

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250

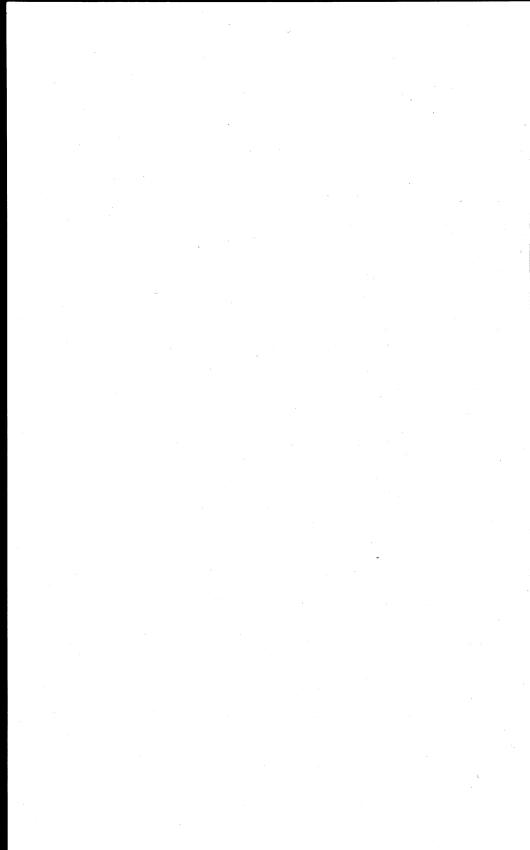

Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State. (3 feet)

UNP Files, Lot 58 D 224

Miscellaneous subject files of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State, covering the years 1943-1956. (8 feet)

UNP Files, Lot 59 D 237

Subject files of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State, covering the years 1946-1957. (3 feet)

THE NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST 1

UNITED STATES MILITARY AND ECONOMIC POLICIES WITH RESPECT TO THE NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST: THE DRAFTING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL; THE CONFERENCE OF MIDDLE EAST CHIEFS OF MISSION AT ISTANBUL, FEBRUARY 14-21; THE ORIGINS AND DEVELOPMENT OF PLANS TO ESTABLISH A MIDDLE EAST COMMAND

Editorial Note

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, in a memorandum dated August 5, 1948, to the Secretary of Defense which the latter circulated to the National Security Council (NSC 19/3; Foreign Relations, 1948, volume III, page 933) on the subject "Disposition of the Former Italian Colonies in Africa", stated that, in formulating a statement of the requirements of the United States with regard to the former Italian Colonies, they found it necessary to appraise the position and security interests of the United States not only with respect to those territories, but to the entire area of the Middle East and Eastern Mediterranean. The appraisal by the Joint Chiefs of Staff of United States security interests in the entire area indicated the following strategic requirements:

a. Denial to any potentially hostile power of any foothold in this

b. Maintenance of friendly relationships which could be promoted by social and economic assistance, together with such military assistance as might be practicable in order to insure collaboration by the peoples of the region in the common defense of the area.

c. Development of the oil resources in the area by the United States and such other countries as had or could be expected to have a friendly attitude toward the United States.

d. Assurance of the right of military forces of the United States to enter militarily essential areas upon a threat of war.

e. Assurance of the right to develop and maintain those facilities which were required to implement d (Memorandum by Secretary of Defense Forrestal for the Executive Secretary, National Security Council, 2 August, 1948, S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East").

&lt;sup>1</sup> For previous documentation on United States policy regarding this region, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 1 ff. Policy respecting Greece and Turkey in 1951 is largely treated in context of the NATO Pact in vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

A memorandum for the files, August 5, 1948, by Max Bishop of S/P, indicates that the Forrestal memorandum was circulated in the NSC, then placed in National Security Council custody without any further action being taken (S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East"). The National Security Council produced no papers dealing with the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East regions as a strategic entity prior to the close of 1950.

On November 29, 1950, however, Assistant Secretary of State McGhee sent a memorandum to Ambassador at Large Philip Jessup informing him of the "strong belief in NEA that an NSC paper on the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East would be very useful in helping to coordinate State and Defense and U.S. and U.K. planning in relation to that area and possibly to reorient somewhat our political, economic, and military programs in the countries of the area." McGhee described the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East area as embracing the following countries: Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel, and the Arab States, including Egypt and Libya. He added that the country-by-country approach to the problems of the area which, by implication, had superseded any regional planning of importance, had "repeatedly proved inadequate as a basis for the formulation or expression of our policies". McGhee concluded by offering a brief, rough outline of the contents of a possible National Security Council paper on the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East (S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East").

On December 11, Jessup incorporated McGhee's memorandum in a draft memorandum to James S. Lay, Jr., the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council, and the following day Lay submitted the Jessup memorandum to the Senior Staff of the National Security Council for consideration (S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East"). There is no record in the Department of State files as to the action taken by the Senior Staff of the National Security Council, but presumably they directed the Department of State to draft a paper along the lines initially outlined by McGhee on November 29; and on December 27, 1950, McGhee submitted to the Secretary of State the memorandum on "Proposed US Political and Military Actions Required to Assist the Countries of the Middle East in the Defense of the Area Against Aggression", printed infra.

The subject of the Eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East was considered at the Senior National Security Council Staff meeting on December 29, 1950; and in a memorandum of January 3, 1951, Walter N. Walmsley, Jr., Special Assistant to Ambassador at Large Jessup, informed McGhee that the Senior Staff had agreed that (a) the Central Intelligence Agency should prepare an intelligence estimate on local attitudes and conditions in the region which affected the protection of United States interests and the realization of United States objectives, and (b) the Department of State should prepare the initial draft of a policy paper on the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East for consideration by the Senior Staff (S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East").

On April 5, 1951, George H. Haselton of the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, submitted to Max Bishop, then serving as National Security Council Staff Member under Ambassador at Large Jessup, the first draft of a paper entitled "Statement of Policy With Respect to the Eastern Mediterranean-Iran Area." A copy of this draft paper along with an enclosed military analysis for the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East is in S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East". On May 2, 1951, Intelligence Estimate Number 17, "Estimate of Reactions to Varying Degrees of U.S. Military Commitment and Activity in the Near East," prepared by the Intelligence Estimates Group, Department of State, was circulated to various interested Bureaus and Agencies within the Department. A copy of this estimate is in S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East". On May 25, the first draft of a National Security Council Staff Study on "The Position of the United States With Respect to the General Area of the Eastern Mediterranean, Red Sea and Persian Gulf" (which for National Security Council Staff Study planning purposes included Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel, the Arab States, Aden, Ethiopia, Eritrea, the Sudan, Libya, and the waters and islands of the area) was circulated to various interested Bureaus and Agencies in the Department of State by Haselton. A copy of this draft study is in S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East".

Throughout the remainder of 1951 and well into 1952, the Departments of State and Defense as well as the Central Intelligence Agency worked on a series of draft papers dealing with this problem (in S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East"), with a number of other executive agencies, including the Office of Defense Management, the Psychological Strategy Board, and the National Security Council, submitting or receiving draft comments. No final agreed paper on the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East emerged during 1951, and indeed the scope and scale of the study was steadily reduced to focus upon Iran, Israel, and the Arab States, particularly in light of the admission of Greece and Turkey to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The final Department of State paper submitted to the National Security Council Staff in 1951, "The Position of the United States With Respect to the General Area of the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East", December 27, is printed on page 257.

S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East"

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

Washington, December 27, 1950.

Subject: Proposed US Political and Military Actions Required to Assist the Countries of the Middle East in the Defense of the Area Against Aggression

In the light of present world events, it is believed that more positive US political and military action is required if the Middle East* is to be successfully defended, and the US and its Western Allies are to make war-time use of Middle Eastern oil, bases and manpower.

Justification for Review of Policy

Among the basic elements justifying a review of US policy and actions in the Middle East at this time are:

(1) US actions have not adequately reflected the NSC findings that the defense of the Middle East is "vital" to the defense of the US.

(2) The UK, which has primary responsibility for the defense of the area, lacks both manpower and resources successfully to defend the area and has no plans for defense of the Saudi Arabian oil fields and the Dhahran Air Base.

(3) Loss of the Middle East to the USSR would be a great psychological loss to the free world generally, and particularly to Western Europe and the members of the British Commonwealth who attach special importance to the sea, land and air routes of the area.

(4) Access to Middle Eastern oil is essential to Europe and would be essential to the US in a long war. Russia could never consolidate a European conquest without Middle Eastern oil.

(5) Important naval, land and strategic air routes and bases exist in the area. Dhahran and Wheelus Fields would be put to immediate strike and post-strike use by the USAF, in the event of global war.

(6) If the West does not participate effectively in defense of the Middle East, it is doubtful that the support of the Middle East countries could be regained after a war. If the US itself does not participate, American prestige in the area would be lost and American firms might not be permitted to resume their oil concessions and other interests following "liberation".

(7) Turkey's fighting power, potentially the greatest in free Europe outside the United Kingdom, could not be effectively realized if Soviet forces surround it from the East and South.

Proposals:

The following proposals seek to maximize, at minimal cost to the US, the will of the people of the area to cooperate with the West in resistance to the USSR; to translate that will into a coordinated indigenous effort to resist the Soviet advance; and, if the area is overrun, to harry and sabotage the invader, to aid downed Allied airmen and to assist in liberation.

*&quot;Middle East" in this paper includes the Eastern Mediterranean, Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel and the Arab States including Egypt and Libya. [Footnote in the source text.]

The key proposal around which other steps will center is:

A US decision and unilateral public statement that the US has a vital security interest in the defense of the Middle East as a whole, and that the US, consistent with its obligations under the UN and with our other commitments, is prepared to assist the countries of the Middle East in the defense of the area against aggression.<sup>1</sup>

Within the framework of the overall declaration described above, it is proposed:

(1) To let it be known informally to the governments of each country in the area that an overt Soviet aggression in the area would lead inevitably to global war.

(2) To continue to supply military equipment to Greece, Turkey, and Iran. In the case of Turkey, substantially to increase military supplies as conditions permit, and to consider other forms of assistance, economic and otherwise, as are required to permit Turkey to increase the size of the regular army and to have stand-by equipment for maximum mobilization of reserves. (A separate memorandum on the subject of support for expanded Turkish military strength is being prepared.)

(3) In conjunction with the UK, to embark upon a policy of strengthening the indigenous defense forces in the other countries of the Middle East who will participate in the defense of the area, on the basis of equal-to-equal partnership. If necessary to achieve the cooperation of the Arabs, we should urge the UK to offer to renounce its existing treaty rights in Egypt, Jordan and Iraq, if and when alternative and adequate security arrangements can be made.

(4) To deliver at an early date token amounts of US arms to Middle Eastern states not now receiving them, who will participate in the defense of the area. To advise these states that when supply and global priorities permit, more substantive quantities of arms would be delivered, for needs not met from the UK or other sources.

(5) As proof of US determination, to station at an early date a battalion of US Marines at Dhahran Airfield in defense of the air field and oil fields, as a means of meeting Ibn Saud's needs for American assurances, and for the morale effect upon the Near East generally.

(6) To supply promptly small US and/or UK training missions and individual service technicians to states asking for them.

(7) To arrange "show-the-flag" visits by USAF planes and Navy vessels in friendly countries, in agreement with the Governments concerned.

(8) The US, UK and Commonwealth to agree, in conjunction with inhabitants of the area (Turkey in particular) to plan and to attempt to hold as close as possible to the "outer ring" (the Turkish-Iranian mountain line which will protect the maximum defensible area of the Middle East with its oil, manpower, and strategic facilities). The defense of the "outer ring" would thus become the target for which provision would be made in the Allied power build-up, once more pressing needs elsewhere are met.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See editorial note, p. 150.

(9) To establish (for political as well as military reasons) a combined US-UK command structure in the Middle East which would stimulate basic cooperation among the states of the area not now possible through indigenous organizations or groupings such as the Arab League. This structure would not alter the fact that the UK and Commonwealth have primary responsibility for the defense of the area. It would, however, make much more attractive to the Arab States and Israel the establishment of a direct relationship between the US-UK command and the respective military authorities in each country. The US-UK command structure would include the naming of a British Commanding Officer, the naming of a US Deputy Commander and, if possible, the naming of US country advisers or commanders for the combined US-UK structures in Greece, Turkey, Iran and Saudi Arabia. The US Deputy Commander should have a political adviser supplied by the Department. If and when shipping and supply conditions necessitate, the US-UK command structure should have a supply counterpart along the lines of MESC in World War II.

(10) To streamline Washington procedures so that reasonable requests for aid within the capability of the US to supply are met promptly. To the wavering states in the Middle East, delay in action is considered evidence of disinterest: the maxim "he gives twice who gives quickly" is particularly applicable to this area.

(11) Through technical and economic assistance, both directly and through the UN, to make it clear to the peoples of the Middle East that they as individuals will benefit from the victory of the West; many poverty-crushed Middle Easterners feel that life under the USSR could not be worse than the life they are now leading.

(12) By the early placing of orders for raw materials and manufactures for war purposes (notably in Egypt and Israel), to get such industry as exists in the Middle East behind the Allied war effort and to expand such industry where practicable.

[Annex 1]

Paper Drafted in the Department of State 2

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

RE-EVALUATION OF US PLANS FOR THE MIDDLE EAST

1. US SECURITY INTERESTS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The following US Government policy was approved on November 24, 1947:3

"... The security of the Eastern Mediterranean and of the Middle East is vital to the security of the United States.... In carrying out this policy the United States should be prepared to make full use of its political, economic, and, if necessary, military power in such manner as may be found most effective. . . . One of the greatest dangers to world peace may be the failure of the Soviet Union to understand the extent to which the United States is prepared to go in order to maintain the security of the Eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East. It should, therefore, be the policy of this Government to make evident in a firm but non-provocative manner the extent of the determination of the United States to assist in preserving in the interest of world peace the security of the area."

<sup>3</sup> For the full text of the Department of State memorandum from which this passage was taken, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. v, pp. 575-576.

&lt;sup>2</sup> The source text does not indicate the identity of the drafting officer(s) nor the date prepared.

Although the Defense Department, or branches of the armed forces, have at times indicated a preference for the designation "critical" rather than "vital", nevertheless the US and UK Joint Chiefs of Staff as recently as October 26, 1950 <sup>4</sup> agreed that "the Middle East in war is of importance second only to Western Europe".

The security interests of the United States in the Middle East † are primarily:

(1) The oil resources of Arabia, Iraq and Iran.

(2) Important naval and strategic and tactical air bases.

(3) Communications and transportation between the West and the

(4) The political and military importance of the Middle East bridge between the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa.

United States security interests in the Middle East, especially when viewed in their interrelationship with the similar British security interests, involve the region as a whole. For this reason a country-by-country approach is inadequate as a basis for the formulation of area plans and our policies and actions toward any one country must be framed in the light of our objectives with respect to the area as a whole.

2. OCTOBER CONCLUSIONS OF US-UK JOINT CHIEFS

In the October discussions of the US and UK Joint Chiefs, the following conclusions were reached:

US and UK military representatives in the Middle East will be directed to undertake a joint fact-finding review of present capabilities and projected requirements for the defense of the so-called "outer ring". The "outer ring" is anchored on Turkey in the west and runs southeastwards along the Zagros Mountains of Iran, thus embracing most of the Middle East and giving some protection to the oil fields in southern Iran and Arabia. This plan goes far beyond the limited concept of defending the Suez Canal area which the British proposed

†The term Middle East, as used herein, refers to the Eastern Mediterranean, Greece, Turkey and Iran, Israel and the Arab States including Egypt and Libya.

[Footnote in the source text.]

For documentation on the Middle East discussions between the U.S. and British Chiefs of Staff in October 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 188 ff. For documentation on the entire range of discussions undertaken by the Chiefs in October 1950, see ibid., vol. III, pp. 1686 ff.

as the most feasible plan considering probable British and US capabilities in the foreseeable future. It is noteworthy that even the defense of the Suez area is, according to the British, beyond the probable capability of the UK and the Commonwealth and involves a deficit which only US forces, particularly air forces, can meet.

Noting that there is "growing evidence pointing toward the requirement for at least a portion of the Middle East oil throughout the war", the US and UK Chiefs concluded that further study should be given to this question. Present US planning is based on the assumption that Middle East oil would not be essential for the Allied war effort for the first two war years of a global war. Should the study ordered by the US and UK Chiefs reveal that some Middle Eastern oil is indispensible throughout the war, US plans for defense of the area would have to be altered significantly. In this connection Soviet and European oil resources are so limited that the USSR could not consolidate a victory in Europe without Middle Eastern oil.

3. DISPARITY BETWEEN US PLANNING AND US INTERESTS

The US Joint Chiefs informed the UK Joint Chiefs in October 1950 that the US "will be unable to commit forces to [the Middle East] <sup>5</sup> during, at least, the first two years of war." In view of the limited British capability in the area and the limited defensive capabilities in being on the part of the countries of the area, this statement clearly implies that the United States contemplates the abandonment, without even a token defense effort, of most if not all of the Middle East in time of global war.

The JCS decision rests, of course, on the unpleasant fact that United States capabilities are inadequate to protect our vital interests everywhere at the same time: the Middle East has been written off reluctantly in favor of theaters of higher priority. Since last October, however, major changes have occurred in the world situation: the rate of US buildup has been increased; organizational progress has been achieved in Western Europe and the chances of the Middle East remaining tranquilly on the side of the West without some practical evidence of Western interest have greatly declined.

No one will challenge the fact that plans to abandon the Middle East fail to provide for our security interests there: we believe that a re-evaluation of our Middle East plans is called for in the light of the US program for increased military stature and preparedness.

The present unfavorable trends in the world arise according to NSC 68/2 6 "from the inadequacy of current programs and plans rather than from any error in our objectives and aims". In the development of adequate programs and plans a balance must be maintained between global and regional plans and between areas of differing priorities. "Commitments in one area must not be permitted to jeopardize capabilities to act in other areas. Anxiety for the general position must not prevent adequate actions in particular situations." (November 10 draft of Annex 8 to NSC 68/1)<sup>7</sup>

&lt;sup>5</sup> Brackets in the source text.

&lt;sup>6</sup> NSC 68/2, "United States Objectives and Programs for National Security," dated September 30, 1950, is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. 1, p. 400.

Abandonment of the Middle East without defense in time of war cannot be justified on the ground that the USSR and its satellites have the capability through an all-out effort to occupy the entire Middle East. By such reasoning the United States would not be justified in defending the Japan-Ryukyus-Philippine chain of bases in the Western Pacific, part or all of which the USSR and Communist China could either neutralize or occupy through an all-out effort in time of war. Instead, our plans should be based on our estimate of the probable effort which the Soviets are likely to exert in the area and on our judgment as to the extent to which our interests in the area justify the commitments which may be necessary to deter or defeat the estimated Soviet effort. NSC 68/1 states that the Defense Department, in determining military requirements, has proceeded on the bases that "the US should have a military strength sufficient to meet her two fundamental obligations: (a) Protection against disaster; (b) Support of our foreign policy". In weighing what military action may be required for survival itself, account must be taken of the disastrous effect which the abandonment of the Middle East without an effort at defense would have upon the political position of the United States in its relations with the peoples of the Middle East in the post-war period. The likelihood cannot be ignored that, even in advance of war, the inevitable knowledge of the Middle East peoples that the US plans to abandon them can, under an intensified Soviet war of nerves, cause political deterioration and defection throughout most of the Middle East with worldwide political repercussions.

It is our belief that a small fraction of the total US military production and manpower can, if properly applied, produce results far out of proportion to the magnitude of the effort expended.

4. DISPARITY BETWEEN US AND UK PLANNING

In the Middle East the US and UK have similar security interests. All the more striking, therefore, is the absence of any similarity between US and UK plans for the protection of their interests in the Middle East. UK plans, in spite of heavy commitments in other areas, call for the commitment of British forces to defend part of the Middle East. US plans envisage no commitment of American forces to the Middle East for at least the first two years of war. This disparity between US and UK plans had some justification under the World War II concept of British primary responsibility for the defense of the area. Yet, while UK plans envisage (and US plans endorse) British defense of the Suez area and protection of the Iranian oil fields in which British interests are paramount, neither US nor UK plans call for—nor would we probably consider desirable without US local command—British defense of Dhahran Air Field and the oil fields of Arabia in which American interests are paramount.

&lt;sup>7</sup> NSC 68/1, not printed, was an interim report. For documentation on the NSC 68 series, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. 1, pp. 126 ff.

5. IMPORTANT FACTORS IN RE-EVALUATION OF PLANS

In addition to the factors noted above there are other important reasons why our Middle East plans should be reappraised. To follow the time-honored assumption that the US can rely upon the UK to defend the Middle East is to indulge in wishful thinking: British capabilities are too small to be a sound basis for the defense of the US interests in the area. The military weakness of the UK is well known throughout the area; this adversely affects the political position of the UK in negotiating with local governments regarding key defense facilities in the area. Most local governments, if they had to choose, would prefer to rely on American rather than British aid; alternatively they would much prefer joint US-UK support.

There are two important post-war consequences to be considered in connection with our present plans. First, if our total oil requirements for a global war of several years duration were to be obtained solely from Western Hemisphere sources, the over-production of the oil wells would damage the fields so as to delay significantly, if not preclude resumption of normal production in the post-war period. Second, if the British alone put up a token resistance in defense of the Middle East and the protection of the oil fields of Iran while the US withdraws after demolition of the oil fields in Saudi Arabia without firing a shot, the local political reactions might be so adverse to the US as to severely handicap American re-entry into the area and to give the UK a strong commercial and political advantage in their postwar relations with the local governments. The peoples we plan to abandon in war are the same peoples we must continue to work with upon liberation and in the post-war period, when access to local resources and facilities would have to be re-negotiated in an adverse atmosphere.

The protracted debate between the State and Defense Departments and among the three branches of the armed service over the issue of whether the Middle East is "vital" or merely "critical" for purposes of US strategic planning has an interesting sidelight. The position of the Defense Department is motivated in part by two tactical considerations. In the first place, Defense hopes that by adopting a lower priority for the area than the British do, the result will be that the UK will exert itself to do more for the defense of the Middle East than would otherwise be the case. In the second place, the priority assigned to the Middle East substantially affects the inter-service competition between the branches of the armed services for their quotas of the military appropriations. Thus, if the Middle East is deemed "vital" and ground forces are committed to its defense, the Navy would require very considerable equipment and facilities to supply and defend the sea and air lanes on which such ground forces would be dependent. Such an increase in the Navy's share of appropriations would be at the expense of the other service branches.

Whatever role these tactical considerations may play in relations between the US and UK or among the US armed services, it is obvious that they must not be mistaken for the principles which should govern

US strategic planning.

6. DIRECTION OF RE-EVALUATION

We believe that a re-evaluation of US plans in relation to the Middle East is urgently required in connection with the accelerated military build-up in which the United States is now engaged.

The direction of such a re-evaluation should be, in our judgment, away from the concept of primary British responsibility and toward the concept of combined US-UK responsibility and active US-UK cooperation in the development and implementation of plans.

[Annex 2]

Paper Prepared in the Department of State 8

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

THE POTENTIAL MILITARY MANPOWER IN THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

I. AVAILABLE MANPOWER IN THE NEAR EASTERN AREA

The Arab states (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Libya, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen) contain about 40,000,000 people. Approximately 9,000,000 are males between the ages of 15 and 49 of whom 4,430,000 would be physically fit for military service under Western standards. Israel's population is about 1,056,000. 342,000 of these are males between 15 and 49 of whom 255,000 are physically fit for military service.

II. THE CONDITIONS AND ATTITUDES OF THE NEAR EASTERN PEOPLE

Literacy and living standards are low among the larger part of the Arab population. Certain areas such as Yemen are quite backward.

<sup>A notation on the source text indicates that this paper was drafted by Samuel K. C. Kopper of NEA on December 27, 1950.
Footnote in the source text reads: "See Appendix A." Appendix A. which</sup>

&lt;sup>9</sup> Footnote in the source text reads: "See Appendix A." Appendix A. which gives a tabular breakdown of available manpower in the Near Eastern area, is not printed.

The morale of the people differs in the several Arab states. However, it cannot be considered high at the moment, although its potentialities are good. The Arab populations have, in general, a common language, religion, heritage, culture, and similar problems. For the most part the Arabs, particularly the governmental leaders, have a basic antipathy towards communism, although communism could make inroads among the poorer classes. However, while the Arab is fundamentally more inclined toward the West, his feelings are colored by his oppositions to imperialism and his dislike of the policy of the West (particularly the United States) on Palestine.<sup>10</sup>

Israel has a higher standard of living and literacy than the Arab states. The morale of the people is high. The economy of the country is precarious, however. The people are for the most part of European extraction and differ greatly from the peoples of the surrounding Arab states in temperament, outlook, energy and approach to their problems. Their approach is essentially western, although it has not as yet been possible to detect any deep friendly attitude toward the West.

III. THE MILITARY POTENTIALITIES OF NEAR EASTERN MANPOWER

a. The Arab has had little chance during the past 30 years to demonstrate whether or not he can be molded into an effective fighting man. Prior to the end of the first World War, people of Arab stock had demonstrated from time to time over the centuries a capacity to perform military service in a competent and efficient manner under most arduous conditions. Since 1919 there has been little real effort made to build up strong, well-trained and well-equipped military units in the Arab states except for the development of the Arab Legion and the Transjordan Frontier Force in Jordan by the United Kingdom. However, during World War II almost a million people were used for activities in support of the military. This constituted an important source of support manpower. Nevertheless, there has been a lack of competent military leadership throughout the Arab world. Training facilities have been almost non-existent. Governments have been beset by internal bickerings and lack of experience. On the other hand, it would be possible to mold an effective fighting unit in each of the Arab states or among the states as a whole provided: (1) The peoples of Arab states believe they are striving for something basic and real to their families, homes and countries; (2) the government and peoples of the Arab states feel that they are being treated as partners and not as pawns; (3) competent leadership and training is provided and (4) equipment and matériel are supplied as they become available. It is generally agreed that the absence of training, leadership, matériel and cooperation was the cause of the Arab debacle in Palestine. Jordan clearly indicates that military units can be built up. It would take time, but NE believes that within a two-year period much could be accomplished.

&lt;sup>10</sup> For documentation on the Palestine question, see pp. 559 ff.

b. Israel stands in contrast to the Arab states. There is a higher proportion of trained manpower of military age in Israel, much of which was trained by the UK or in Central European armies. Though far less in number than in the Arab states, the manpower of Israel could be more quickly developed for military purposes. A political problem of first magnitude would exist in the deployment of Israeli forces in other parts of the Near East. Israel would need matériel and probably some training assistance. Just as in the Arab states, the people must understand that from their participation in an allied effort they would be fighting for things which are essential to their survival. There is little evidence that there is any general realization of this in Israel as yet.

IV. THE USE OF MILITARY MANPOWER

The best methods of using military manpower would be (1) to stimulate the effective buildup of armies in the friendly countries and (2) to develop units for support purposes, labor battalions and the like. The training of foreign units to serve with our troops might be the next best alternative. It would not be desirable to establish a Foreign Legion under American leadership. The development of a Foreign Legion in the Arab world would probably be difficult because of (a) the bad connotation of the concept of a Foreign Legion (i.e., French Foreign Legion in Arabic North Africa) and (b) the lack of something national in its composition. Under present circumstances Arabs would make good mercenaries. The admission of volunteers to our Armed Forces is not as satisfactory as the building up of armies in individual countries or the area as a whole. The difficulties of adjustment are too great. Finally, it is possible that the potentialities of the Arab world and Israel might well be realized by the development of collective forces under the UN Uniting for Peace Resolution.

V. POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS INVOLVED IN THE USE OF NEAR EASTERN MANPOWER

The United States' prestige in the Arab states of the Near East, while probably not as low as it was in 1947 and 1948 is nevertheless not as high as it was in 1945. In Libya and Israel our prestige is still fairly high.

The NSC has stated that the area is of critical importance to the security of the United States. The strategic location of the Near East, the importance of the vast oil reserves and the value of the bases in Tripoli, the Cairo-Suez area, Dhahran and Iraq are recognized.

The Near Eastern nations are at a point of decision as to whether to cast their lot irrevocably with the West, to remain neutral or to drift into the Soviet orbit.

At the present time any decision to make more use of Near Eastern manpower must take into account the fact that for the time being there would have to be separate programs for Israel on the one hand and the Arab states on the other.

The development of the use of manpower in the Arab states might well have a beneficial effect in other parts of the Moslem world, i.e., Pakistan, Iran, etc.

If the United States and the Western nations could clearly demonstrate now to the Near Eastern nations our interest in their survival, it is believed that we could align them with the West against the communist threat and that the manpower resources could become of increasing value over the next several years. If, however, there is no real interest demonstrated in the fate of the Near Eastern peoples, the area with its manpower potential may be lost to the West for many years to come.

VI. CONCLUSIONS

- A. There exists in the Near East military and quasi-military manpower potential which would be of great value to the United States.
- B. This manpower potential, to be effective, will require leadership, training and equipment.
- C. Before use can be made of the manpower the Near Eastern states will want to be sure that:
  - (1) the Western nations are really interested in their survival; (2) the Western nations will treat the Near Eastern states as partners and not as lackeys;

(3) help in the form of training and equipment, etc., will be made available over a period of time, and

- (4) in the post-hostilities period, should war come, the wishes and views of the states will be taken into full account.
- D. If the West does not demonstrate an interest in the fate of the Near East, the manpower potential of the area and the position of the West (oil wells, bases, cultural institutions, etc.) may be irretrievably lost for many years to come.

780.5/1-551: Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Barbour) to the Department of State

тор secret Moscow, January 5, 1951—1 р. m.

1292. Embassy believes that desire Israel to be included in development western plans Near Eastern Defense (Depintel January 3, 1 a. m.) should not be considered in isolation from general context regional Near Eastern security requirements.

It would appear prudent at this stage to consider danger that with our major attention focused Far East and Europe, Soviets may be planning to disturb relatively quiet and neglected Near Eastern garden this year. Form which such Soviet moves may take range from stepping up internal subversive programs and creating mass unrest through activity local Communist groups to armed revolts supported by Kurdish and Azerbaijan "volunteers" from Soviet Union. Further, should Soviets be determined on precipitating World War III this year, it is possible that major Soviet military moves elsewhere might be accompanied by outright invasion certain Near Eastern areas by Soviet military forces primarily with view to denying to West strategic and petroleum assets of this region. Not to be overlooked is question whether Soviets would undertake large-scale war of sustained duration without including in plans maneuvers calculated to assure for themselves access to Near Eastern oil. Soviet invasion Near East would, of course, be characterized by them as defensive step to prevent Anglo-American aggressors from using Near East as place d'armes against Soviet motherland. Whether contingency that we may face in Near East during coming year falls in first or second category, it is clear that present obviously weak and defenseless condition Near Eastern countries constitutes open invitation to Soviets to indulge in direct or indirect aggression that area.

As pointed out in Moscow's despatch 294, December 11 <sup>1</sup> Soviets have in past months followed position ostensible friendliness towards most Near Eastern countries. Softening-up process particularly noticeable in Iran but trade agreement concluded with Afghanistan early 1950 may fall in same category. Sociability displayed by Vyshinski at recent UNGA session towards Arab delegations was part of pattern. Such lulling of suspicions may well be prelude to surprise expansionist moves in area. Embassy believes time has come to establish working relationship between NATO and non-Communist Near Eastern countries as recommended Embtel 651, September 8. Israeli bid for US military support affords us some leverage bring about at least degree rapprochement between Israel and Arab states which would make possible taking positive steps towards Near Eastern regional collective security arrangements.

Merely to associate Israel with present Greek-Turkish defense pattern would be futile gesture in view unprotected character Arab hinterland surrounding Israel. Furthermore, to give Israel priority in this matter over Arab states would obviously exacerbate Arab emotional antipathy towards US and West generally and play directly into Soviet hands. What is required in Embassy's view is larger regional security organization embracing in addition to Israel and Arab states, Greece, Turkey, Iran and perhaps Afghanistan and Pakistan.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed.

Embassy appreciates heavy burden now resting on US in terms Far Eastern and European commitments and problems but believes that our positions in both these areas would be seriously jeopardized if we permitted ourselves to be outflanked through Soviet incursion into vital Near East middle region.

Department pass London, Paris. Sent Department 1292, repeated information London 239, Paris 306.

BARBOUR

641.74/1-551: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

London, January 5, 1951—7 p. m.

3766. In conversation today, Furlonge told EmbOff that FonOff remains convinced for present at least, that it would be unwise move to attempt solve Anglo-Egypt proposal within framework NE defense arrangement. FonOff continues believe that UK requirements in area can best be obtained through bilateral arrangements with states concerned, although alternative suggestions (such as UK-Egypt-Turkish pact) continue to receive attention. In foregoing context, Furlonge went on to say that attention also being given present time to possibility of some kind defense arrangement with Israel and that there had been number of recent indications that Israel might be willing enter into arrangement involving cooperation in war time and possibly even in peace time. FonOff and War Office now examining rights and facilities which UK might require in Israel and Furlonge mentioned specifically use of Israeli ports, right of passage for British. troops through Israel and possibly right station troops in Israel. He emphasized whole question in most embryonic stage and that there are many political and military problems which must be studied further before it is decided whether or not proceed with proposal.

We asked Furlonge if FonOff was concerned with effect which such an arrangement might have on UK relations with Arab states. Furlonge replied FonOff had naturally given this question intensive thought and was continuing to do so. Inevitably there would be howls from Arab states, but he thought there was good possibility that UK might be able calm them by emphasizing that close association of this kind between UK and Israel would represent security gain to Arabs in view of restraining influence it would give UK on Israelis. We also asked if there might not be danger that Arabs would interpret such an arrangement as indication that Israeli troops might be used to supplement British forces operating in Arab states in event of hostilities. Furlonge said FonOff had this problem very much in mind and had strongly emphasized to military that there could never be any question of treaty provision for utilizing Israeli troops in Arab states in time of war and that it would be necessary give Arabs firm assurance on this score.

General Robertson planning visit Israel February 17 and Furlonge himself will be there shortly before that time if his present plans for trip through area are approved. Furlonge indicated FonOff hopes that thinking on this question may be developed before that time to point where, if favorable decision taken, Robertson may be able take preliminary soundings with Israeli authorities.

Department pass Amman; sent Department 3766, repeated Ankara 12, Baghdad 43, Cairo 8, Jidda 40, Amman 40, Beirut 24, Damascus 17.

GIFFORD

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the Executive Secretary, National Security Council (Lay)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] January 26, 1951.

Subject: Third Progress Report on NSC 47/2:1 "United States Policy Toward Israel and the Arab States."

NSC 47/2 was approved as Governmental policy on October 20, 1949. It is requested that this Progress Report as of December 26, 1950, be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

1. Israel-Arab Attitude Toward the United States:

The outlook for maintaining the good-will and Western orientation of the peoples of the Near East improved during the period under review in both Israel and the Arab states. The severe anti-American campaign in the latter countries, especially virulent in Syria and Egypt, ceased almost entirely. While considerable bitterness toward the US remains in the Arab states as a result of the Palestine hostilities,<sup>2</sup> the formerly active expression of it subsided late in the summer. This resulted in part from initial UN successes in Korea,<sup>3</sup> and from Arab absorption with problems unrelated to Palestine. There was a volume vII.

<sup>1</sup> Dated October 17, 1949; Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, p. 1430.

<sup>3</sup> For documentation on Korea, see volume vII and Foreign Relations, 1950,

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on the Arab-Israeli controversy of 1948–1949 over the future status of Palestine, see ibid., 1948, vol. v, pt. 2, pp. 533 ff. and ibid., 1949, vol. vI, pp. 594 ff.

growing Arab realization of the seriousness of the international situation. United States efforts to convince the Arabs of its impartiality as between them and Israel were also partly responsible.

The Government of Israel has shown an increasing willingness to depart from its policy of "non-identification" with East or West and to support the West. Indications of this tendency have been Israel's support for the UN Korean effort, anti-Communist speeches by Government officials, and confidential offers of mutual assistance arrangements with the United States. In this Israel has probably been prompted primarily by great economic need, which only the United States can fill, by the decline of the pro-Soviet opposition within the country, by the continued refusal of the USSR to permit Russian Jews to emigrate to Israel, and by the realization that in the event of a major war Israel would be completely cut off from the Western sources of supply upon which it so greatly depends.

2. US-UK-French Cooperation:

United States-United Kingdom cooperation in matters relating to the Near East has continued. Discussions have been carried on in Washington by British and American military officials regarding, among other things, Near Eastern defense.4 Assistant Secretary McGhee held conversations in London with British officials on a wide range of subjects concerning the Near East.<sup>5</sup> In the area, American and British representatives have on several occasions concerted their approaches to the local governments and continue their routine consultations on all matters of interest.

Discussions of Near Eastern problems have also been held with the French Government, and cooperation with that Government in such matters as exchange of information on arms shipments continues.

3. Arab Refugees:

The situation of the Arab refugees has not moved significantly toward a permanent solution. Since the United Nations Relief and Works Agency did not receive the full financial support of UN members, its efforts were perforce confined chiefly to relief measures and to very limited works projects. The Agency therefore recommended to the fifth session of the General Assembly that an additional fund be established, for use only for projects involving permanent reintegration of the refugees. A resolution to this effect was adopted on December 2, 1950. By their public acceptance of this resolution, and by private statements, Arab representatives have indicated that at London in September 1950, see ibid., pp. 192 ff.

<sup>5</sup> For documentation on Mr. McGhee's discussions with Foreign Office officials

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on United States-United Kingdom military and political talks regarding the Near East held in July and October 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 188 ff.

they regard resettlement of most of the refugees in Arab territory as inevitable. The US Government is prepared to ask Congress for a contribution of sixty percent, or $30 million of the $50 million authorized under the resolution.

4. Arab-Israel Relations:

Meanwhile, Israel-Arab relations have been strained by a series of border incidents, some of which have been brought before the UN Security Council. A resolution was adopted by the Security Council on November 17, 1950, which expressed the hope that the Mixed Armistice Commissions would be able to resolve such problems, and recommended that the parties refer their disputes to the Mixed Armistice Commissions. Discussion of the Arab item on repatriation of Palestine refugees and the conclusions of the Palestine Conciliation Commission report in the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly provoked considerable Arab-Jewish bitterness. A joint resolution was finally passed by the General Assembly on December 14, which urges the parties to seek agreement by negotiations either with the PCC or directly and establishes an office under the PCC to deal with the problems of refugee compensation, repatriation and resettlement. This resolution may represent the beginning of an improvement in Arab-Israel relations, since it is the first resolution recommending negotiations that has been supported by the Arab states. All of the Arab states voted in its favor, with the exception of Iraq, which, with Israel, abstained.

5. Jerusalem:

The fifth session of the General Assembly was unable to reach agreement on any resolution for the Jerusalem area. Thus, the respective parts of the City continue in the de facto control of Israel and Jordan. In view of the failure of the Assembly to take definitive action, the likelihood of the establishment by the UN of a regime involving territorial internationalization has receded further. However, the UN will probably consider the problem again next year. Its failure to act this year does not materially affect the situation in the Near East.

6. Point IV Aid:

An important step has been taken toward raising the economic level in the Near East countries. Funds have been appropriated for Point IV technical assistance, and the necessary administrative organization is being established. Point IV agreements are in various stages of negotiation between the countries of the Near East and the US.

7. Israeli Economic Situation:

In Israel, meanwhile, the economic situation has steadily worsened. The continued high rate of immigration, coupled with declining gift funds from abroad and a consequent shortage of foreign exchange, has occasioned further austerity measures within the country. There is also a shortage of investment capital, which is particularly serious in view of Israel's expectation to absorb its increasing population through industrialization. As a result goods are in short supply, making for high prices, and the growing labor force cannot be fully employed.

Besides the imposition of domestic economic controls, the Government has sought to encourage investment by foreign capital through the creation of favorable terms for it, and has initiated an intensive drive for funds in the United States and Israel. It hopes to raise one billion dollars in the United States by various means, including US Government grants, and an additional five hundred million, chiefly in Israel.

So long as immigration continues at its present rate (approximately 12,000 monthly), and the Arab economic blockade is maintained, it is evident that Israel will depend for its financial support largely upon United States Jewry. Decreasing returns from the annual drives of the United Jewish Appeal would seem to indicate that there will be considerable difficulty in reaching the present goal. As a result, it is likely that living standards will have to be sharply reduced in Israel and immigration will, in one way or another, have to be cut back, if only because of lack of funds to finance it.

8. Instability in the Arab States:

All of the Arab states with the exception of Saudi Arabia and Yemen contain significant elements of unrest and instability. Until recently an exception could have been made of Jordan, but with the annexation of Arab Palestine, elements have been introduced into the country which may well cause increasing instability.

During recent months there have been marked evidences of unrest in Egypt. This has been due to the strong and bitter conflict between the Government party and the opposition parties, the failure of the Government to carry out its election promises, and growing dissatisfaction with the King himself, and in particular with his personal advisers. While the King and the Government made certain concessions in order to placate the dissatisfied elements, currents of unrest continue to exist. In addition public feeling against the continued presence of the British in the Suez Canal Zone has run high and there were a number of disturbances during November. The Government is making particular efforts to maintain public order while discussions between the British and the Egyptians continue on the revision of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936. It should be noted that failure of these discussions would probably lead to widespread civil disorder.

Fundamentally Iraq and Lebanon are unstable in the sense that popular unrest is widespread and deeply rooted. In both countries dissatisfaction with the government is rife; in Lebanon chiefly because of the flagrant corruption of officials, in Iraq because of generally reactionary policies of the Government and Palace and the impression that the UK is in real control. In both, however, the governments have been successful in preventing effective organized opposition through bribery, political patronage, and other political maneuvers including outright suppression at times.

In Syria instability has been more overt than in other Arab states, but has been confined mainly to the Army and top political leaders without severe repercussions among the populace. Actually the population of Syria is relatively advanced and stable in comparison with other NE countries. Intrigue among army officers and political leaders has led to several military coups in the last eighteen months, but it appears now that Syria has a government soundly based constitutionally and controlled by the most progressive and popular group in the country. The army is willing to restrain itself somewhat from intervention in affairs of state, except where matters apparently affect its vital interests. The Prime Minister, Nazim Qudsi, is an able and constructive leader who seems to enjoy the army's confidence. However, there is evidence of considerable intrigue in Syria, fomented in part by other Arab states, and further violent changes of government are an omnipresent possibility.

9. Evaluation

Developments affecting the implementation of NSC 47/2 have been about equally balanced between the favorable and the unfavorable, while over-all progress in achieving the objectives of this policy has been disappointingly slow. While the policies recommended in NSC 47/2 are generally still applicable, it is believed that changed world conditions possibly warrant a reconsideration and redraft of the paper. The Department is giving the matter careful and continuous consideration.

JAMES E. WEBB

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Military Assistance"

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] January 27, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: United States plans in relation to the Middle East have been the subject of several recent discussions between Department representatives and top officials of the Department of Defense, including the Joint Chiefs individually and the Operations Deputies as a group.<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by John B. Howard, Regional Planning Adviser, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

The position of the Department in these discussions has been that more affirmative United States action is required to safeguard our vital security interests in the Middle East. The need for such action is made urgent by the political deterioration which has taken place in the area to such an extent that it is questionable whether the United States, without taking more affirmative action, can continue to count on the support of many of the Middle East countries.

I wish to make it clear at the outset that the proposals advanced by the Department do not involve the United States in a Middle East security pact or in a commitment of combat forces in the Middle East. I understand the Joint Chiefs of Staff feel such steps are not possible under present circumstances because our main effort must be in Western Europe and because of our commitments in the Far East. Nor do our proposals affect the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom and British Commonwealth to provide armed forces for the defense of the Middle East. Within these limits, however, we believe that the considerable assistance which the United States is now furnishing to certain individual countries of the Middle East can be made more effective, and British primary military responsibility for the area can be made more meaningful, through the coordination of American, British and indigenous efforts under a concept of the defense of the Middle East as a whole.

The programs of military aid to Greece, Turkey, Iran and Saudi Arabia are currently under review by our Departments. Apart from the problems relating to those individual programs, I wish to ask for the views of the Department of Defense on the following proposals:

1. That the United States make it clear to all of the countries of the Middle East that the United States in coordination with the United Kingdom is prepared to assist them in strengthening their capabilities to defend the area as a whole against aggression.

&lt;sup>2</sup> On January 2 and again on January 4, 1951, McGhee held discussions with members of the Department of Defense, including General Hamilton of the Air Force, General Collins of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Secretaries Finletter of the Air Force and Pace of the Army as well as with Averell Harriman on the subject of reevaluation of Middle East plans (memorandum of conversation, January 2, 1951; memorandum by McGhee for Deputy Under Secretary of State Matthews, January 4, 1951, 780.5/1–451). On January 23, 1951, Messrs. Matthews, McGhee, Cabot, Howard, Villard, and Emery of the Department of State met with Generals Burns, Bolté, Spalding, and Landon and Admirals Davis and Ingersoll to discuss military assistance to the Middle East. During the course of this conversation, General Bolté reiterated the position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that they would "insist" on the implementation of the U.S.–U.K. agreement of October 26, 1950, "to the effect that the Middle East is the primary responsibility of the British." Bolté added that "an extremely difficult supply situation" precluded shipment of the kind of military equipment to the Near Eastern countries which McGhee was pressing for (Memorandum of conversation, January 23, 1951; S/ISA Files: Lot 52–26: "Mideast General").

2. That the United States furnish small training missions and individual service technicians to the Arab States and Israel to assist them in the development of fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain and to the defense of the Middle East as a whole.

3. That the number of Arab and Israeli trainees in the United States military schools be increased.

4. That the United States furnish, in conjunction with the training in paragraph 2, token quantities of arms and ammunition (of the order of magnitude of $5-10 million) to the Arab States and Israel on a cash reimbursable basis, making it very clear that greater quantities cannot be made available for another 12-18 months.

These token quantities could be diverted from the programs for Greece, Turkey and Iran by delaying deliveries to these countries: if such a course is absolutely necessary, we believe on political grounds that the diversion should be made.

5. That the United States discuss with the United Kingdom the establishment in the Middle East of a combined military mission, or establishment of a separate United States military mission for the purposes of:

a. stimulating and coordinating the military efforts of all of the Middle East countries for the defense of the Middle East as a whole;

b. creating stability in depth in the Arab States and Israel so as to enable Greece, Turkey and Iran to make the most effective use of the fighting power we are developing there;

c. coordinating in terms of the concept of area defense the activities of the United States and United Kingdom military missions in the individual countries; and

d. stimulating and coordinating, with appropriate backstopping in Washington and London, United States and United Kingdom planning to make the maximum effective use of available resources for the defense of the area.

I am enclosing a document which contains further information explaining the views of the Department. It has been suggested that it would be useful to hold, and we would welcome, a discussion of our proposals with the Joint Chiefs of Staff as a group as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

ACHESON

[Annex]

Paper Drafted in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs <sup>3</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

THE MIDDLE EAST

In the light of present world events and the projected U.S. build-up in military strength, it is believed that more affirmative U.S. action to safeguard the vital security interests of the U.S. in the Middle East* is necessary, and can be accomplished without making any guarantees of combat forces. The present paper approaches the problems of U.S. security in relation to the Middle East as a whole from a political standpoint. It takes into consideration the absence of any adequate indigenous political basis for joint action by the countries of the area, and their increasing desire for U.S. participation in Middle East defense.

JUSTIFICATION FOR REVIEW OF OUR MIDDLE EAST PLANS

(1) U.S. actions have not adequately reflected U.S. policy that the security of the Middle East is vital to U.S. security. U.S. plans are inadequate to protect our important security interests in the oil, the air and naval bases, the communication and transportation facilities, and the general strategic location of the Middle East.

(2) The benefits of our present efforts in Greece, Turkey, Iran, and Saudi Arabia can be more fully realized, and indigenous defenses in the Middle East as a whole can be maximized through relatively small additional U.S. efforts in the area.

(3) The U.K., which by agreement with the U.S. has assumed primary military responsibility in the Middle East, is in a position of declining political influence in the area and lacks the capability of successfully defending the area even with probable Commonwealth support. The U.K. has no plans for the defense of Saudi Arabia, in which U.S. interests are predominent, and lacks the intimate working relations with the Turkish, Greek and Iranian armed forces which

*"Middle East" in this paper includes the Eastern Mediterranean, Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel, and the Arab States including Egypt and Libya. [Footnote in the U.S. enjoys through the military missions and aid programs in those countries.

the source text.]

&lt;sup>3</sup> An initial draft of this paper was submitted with a covering memorandum, neither printed, to McGhee on January 12 by John B. Howard, regional planning adviser of NEA (780.5/1–1251). On January 15, McGhee sent the revised version, herein printed, to the Secretary of State with a covering memorandum, not printed, requesting approval of the revised paper as a statement which could serve as a basis for a discussion with the Joint Chiefs of Staff by Jessup, Cabot, Matthews, and himself. McGhee also included a draft of the letter from Acheson to Marshall, to serve as a memorandum of transmission to the Department of Defense (780.5/1–1551). The source text was subsequently used as the basis of discussion of Middle East policy during the State–JCS meeting of January 30, intra

(4) The lack of a positive U.S. approach to the area and the increasing suspicion of the Middle East peoples that the U.S. has left the defense of the area to the British and will play no part in the event of war, is producing political disaffection and deterioration. The risk is increasing that if the U.S. does not take a more positive attitude important areas of the Middle East will swing away from the West and toward the U.S.S.R., with the resulting encirclement of Turkey and the loss of her full military effectiveness, even without war or in advance of war. Only direct U.S. participation in building up the defenses of the area as a whole can provide the confidence required to halt this adverse trend and prepare the Middle East for allied military use in the event of war.

(5) If the West does not participate determinedly in defense of the Middle East, it is doubtful that the support of the Middle East countries could be regained after the war. If the U.S. itself does not participate, American prestige in the area would be lost and it is doubtful whether American firms would be permitted to resume their oil concessions and other interests following liberation.

(6) It must be assumed that the Kremlin is fully aware that Soviet denial of Middle East oil to the West would profoundly affect the economic and strategic power of Western Europe and, conversely, that Soviet control of Middle East oil would not only greatly enhance Soviet power but would be indispensable to Soviet consolidation of a conquest of Western Europe.

PROPOSALS

The following proposals seek to maximize, at minimal cost to the U.S., the will of the people of the Middle East to cooperate with the West in resistance to the U.S.S.R. both now and in event of war; to translate that will into a coordinated indigenous effort to resist the Soviet advance; and, if the area is nevertheless overrun, to harry and sabotage the invader and to assist in liberation. The basic features of the proposals are a radical strengthening of Turkey's armed forces, which is currently being considered independently; the development of stability-in-depth in the Arab States and Israel; and the stimulation and coordination of local area defense efforts through combined U.S.-U.K. leadership in the area.

(1) Turkey's fighting power, the keystone of the defense of the Middle East, should be more fully developed. Military and economic assistance to Turkey should be increased as conditions permit so as to give Turkey a greater war reserve, permit it to increase the size of the regular army, and provide stand-by equipment for mobilization of reserves. Turkish participation in the defense of Greece and Iran should be explored. Military and economic aid to Greece and Iran should be moderately expanded.

- (2) The U.S. should make it clear that because of vital U.S. security interests in the Middle East, the U.S., consistent with its U.N. obligations and its other commitments, is prepared to assist the countries of the Middle East in strengthening their capabilities to defend the area as a whole against aggression.<sup>4</sup> (This does not mean any guarantee of forces to the countries concerned and no such inference should be given.)
- (3) The U.S. and U.K. should concurrently strengthen the forces of the Arab States and Israel, on a basis of partnership with us, in such a way as to promote their stability and pro-Western orientation. The U.S. and U.K. should undertake and accelerate such measures as:
- (a) Technical and economic assistance that will help convince the peoples of the Middle East that they will benefit as individuals as well as states, from the victory of the west;

(b) Development of fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain;

(c) Initiating limited arms supply programs, required to achieve (b), to certain of the Arab States and Israel by early delivery of token quantities.

(d) Furnishing on request small U.S. and U.K. training missions and individual service technicians, increased training of local military personnel in U.S. and U.K. schools;

(e) Making, in agreement with local governments, "show-the-flag" visits by air force planes and naval vessels; and

(f) Placing of orders in local industries for needed raw materials and war material.

(4) The U.S. should join the U.K. in establishing a combined military mission, or a closely coordinated separate U.S. military mission, for the Middle East as a whole. Such a mission would stimulate cooperation among the states not now possible through indigenous groupings in the absence of a U.S. underwriting commitment. A direct relationship should be developed between the chiefs-of-staff in each country and the U.S.- . . .,5 or U.S., Middle East mission. The chiefs of the U.S. military missions in Greece, Turkey, Iran, and Saudi Arabia would act as U.S. country advisers within the U.S.-U.K., or U.S., Middle East structure. The establishment of the U.S.-U.K. or U.S. mission for the Middle East would not alter the fact that the U.K. and Commonwealth have primary responsibility for the defense of the area and the provision of forces therefor. It would, however, make much more attractive to the Arab States and Israel, through the establishment of a direct relationship of each to the Middle East mission, the development of a regional pattern of military planning.

&lt;sup>4</sup> See editorial note, p. 150. <sup>5</sup> Omission in the source text.

(5) The defense of the "outer ring" (the Turkish-Iranian mountain line), if militarily feasible, is politically the most desirable line of defense of the Middle East and should become the target for which provision would be made when the U.S. and allied power build-up makes this practicable.

(6) Contingent upon a resolution of the Kashmir dispute, the participation of Pakistan in the defense of Iran should be explored. Consideration should also be given to the military cooperation, as soon as political conditions permit, of Yugoslavia with Greece and Turkey.

State-JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417

State Department Draft Minutes of Discussions at the State-Joint Chiefs of Staff Meeting, January 30, 1951

[Extract]

TOP SECRET

Washington, February 6, 1951.

Participants:	General Bradley
	Admiral Sherman
	General Collins
	General Twining
	Admiral Davis
	Admiral Wooldridge
	Admiral Lalor
	General White
	General Landon
	Admiral Blandy
	General Bolte

Mr. Matthews
Mr. Nitze
Mr. Lay
Mr. Gleason
Mr. Tufts
Mr. Marshall
Mr. McGhee
Mr. Rusk
Mr. Jones

GENERAL BRADLEY: We agreed to discuss the Far East today, but it has been suggested that we have a brief discussion of the Middle East in view of the fact that Mr. McGhee is about to leave on a trip to the area.<sup>2</sup> We have just received the State Department paper,<sup>3</sup> and have, therefore, not had an opportunity to study it. I note that the paper suggests that the United States should make clear to all countries in the Middle East that the U.S. and the U.K. would give them assistance. One of the French officers here for the Pleven talks <sup>4</sup> told me that he had heard of a secret Mediterranean conference on the Middle East between the U.S. and the U.K.<sup>5</sup> He was much disturbed about this, and I told him that probably the conference to which he referred was merely a regular meeting between Admiral Carney and the Middle East Commander.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Robert W. Tufts of the Policy Planning Staff. The discussion of McGhee's paper (Annex, supra) on the Middle East comprises pp. 1–23 of the source text. Thereafter, the remainder of the meeting (pp. 24–37) was taken up with a discussion of NSC 101/1 "Avoidance of Extension of Hostilities in Korea"; for a memorandum of a portion of this discussion dealing with China, see vol. vII, p. 1566.

&lt;sup>2</sup>McGhee traveled to Istanbul for the meeting of the Middle East Chiefs of Mission, February 14–21 and from there to Nuwara Eliya, Ceylon, for the South Asian Regional Conference of United States Diplomatic and Consular Officers, February 26–March 2. For documentation on the Istanbul meeting, see pp. 50 ff. Regarding the South Asian Regional Conference at Nuwara Eliya, see vol. vr, pt. 2, p. 1664. A partial itinerary of McGhee's tour through the Near East may be found in the editorial note, p. 49.

Reference is to paper entitled "The Middle East"; see annex, supra.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Would it perhaps be fair to suggest that the U.K. may have deliberately given the French the impression that the U.S. and the U.K. were collaborating on Middle Eastern problems?

GENERAL BRADLEY: I think that is probably so. I know that the British have told the French about previous discussions with us.

Mr. Matthews: I also have the impression that the British give these indications to the French of U.S.-U.K. collaboration.

Mr. McGhee: The French Ambassador came in to see me two weeks ago to suggest that the U.S., U.K., and France should have talks on Middle East security problems. I did what I could to discourage him.

Mr. Rusk: The French have also approached me with the same suggestion concerning Far Eastern problems.

Mr. Matthews: The French are afraid that we will set up a Combined Chiefs of Staff with the British and will leave them out.

General Collins: I think we should take a definite stand that we will discuss with the U.K. matters of mutual interest to the U.K. and the U.S., and that we will likewise discuss with the French matters of mutual interest to France and the United States, but that we will not set up a global organization of the three powers to discuss all problems.

Admiral Sherman: I agree with that. We should tell the British and the French the same thing: we are not going to have a three cornered world outfit.

General Bradley: I think that we have got to take that attitude. Mr. Nitze: If it makes sense to have an arrangement with the U.K. in the Middle East, I think we should do it and tell the French that we are doing it. We should not shy away from it simply because it worries the French.

<sup>4</sup> For documentation on the visit of Prime Minister Henri Pleven to Washington, January 29-31, see the compilation on France in volume IV.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Reference is to the talks at Malta on January 23–24 between Admiral Carney, Commander in Chief U.S. Naval Forces Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean, and Sir Brian Hubert Robertson. British Commander in Chief Middle East Forces. No record of these conversations has been found in Department of State files. However, at the close of a second series of conversations at Malta between Carney and the three British service chiefs responsible for the Middle Eastern area which took place March 10–13, a letter, designated Mil/3039/ME, was sent both to the British Chiefs of Staff and to the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. This letter is printed, p. 94.

General Bradley: We have got to come to that. Ambassador Bonnet comes over here all the time to complain about one thing or another. I think our reply should be, "so what?"

Mr. Matthews: The French believe that we are cooking things up every day with the British.

MR. McGHEE: I am sorry to take up the problems dealt with in our paper on such short notice. We have had discussions of these problems with your operational deputies. The paper stems from our growing concern over the deteriorating political situation in the Middle East. We have understood your objectives in the Middle East and your position that the United States cannot assume large new commitments in the area.

We have recently found evidence that the smaller states in the area are becoming increasingly concerned about their future and want some assurances about their defense. There is a danger that they might defect—not only in the event of a shooting war, but perhaps even in the cold war.

Nothing in the paper involves guarantees with respect to U.S. military forces. The paper raises no question of a pact or of guarantees to defend. Neither does it question the primary responsibility of the U.K. for the defense of the area. We would, of course, hope that the U.K. could get in position to exercise this responsibility.

Our principal objective in these recommendations is to make sure that our major investments in Greece, Turkey, and Iran are effective. I regard the proposals now before you as a kind of insurance that the investment will be effective. What we are after is not so much defense in depth as it is stability in depth. Turkey must not be upset by a defection in Syria, which would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the Turkish armies to fight effectively.

We fully agree that Turkey should be our major reliance in the Middle East. We want to give separate consideration to the question of whether we should not now increase our rate of investment in Turkey—and perhaps also in Greece and Iran, but we also believe that a regional approach to the problem of Middle Eastern defenses is called for. Such a regional approach is the objective towards which we should strive in the Middle East.

The U.K. has grudgingly accepted responsibility for this theater; but it has only 11,000 combat troops in the area and is planning only for the defense of the Suez Canal. It could not do much to help Greece, Turkey and Iran. We have recently had some questions raised in Athens between the American and British Ambassadors, because neither of them was clear on who, as between the U.S. and U.K., was responsible for Greece and what this meant. I think there has not been a full realization of the implications of British responsibility for the area. I understand your view that the U.K. and the Commonwealth should bring up their troop strength in the Middle East. I believe, however, that there should be some mechanism—some organization—for coordinating with the British just in case we may want it at some later time to build up forces in the area.

As you know, the British position in the Middle East rests on treaties with a number of the Middle East countries, the treaties with Turkey, Egypt, Jordan, and Iraq. Lately, the British have been under strong criticism and attack because of certain of these treaties. They admit they must give way to the strong nationalist sentiments, particularly in Egypt. It is very difficult for them to get the cooperation of the Arab States. This cooperation would be much easier to obtain if the United States could participate in coordinated activities along the lines suggested in this paper.

We have to remember that there is no indigenous political basis for cooperation among the countries in the area. The divisive elements in the Middle East situation exceed the integrative forces. Therefore, if cooperation is to be achieved, it must be under the stimulus of external influences. The United States or the U.S. and U.K. could provide that stimulus but the U.K. cannot do it alone.

The people in the area are more and more concerned about their security. They have serious doubts about the ability of the U.K. to defend them. Not much effort would be required of us to increase greatly their sense of security. It would involve only a small amount of material assistance, and a few countries, really only Syria, Lebanon, and Israel; since the other countries in the area are already receiving assistance under other programs or are being taken care of by the British, as, for example, Egypt, Jordan and Iraq. Only token shipments would be required from us at this time. These would stimulate hope in the area, and encourage these countries to play a constructive part in the collective defense of the area. It is perhaps worth noting that the Iraqis assert that the U.K. is holding back their efforts. I think that Lebanon—under the arrangements here proposed—might be willing to participate in the defense of their mountain chain. Of course, the forces which any of these countries could raise would be small, but they would be at least adequate for internal security. At present we have very large military missions in Greece, Turkey, and Iran, and will shortly in Saudi Arabia, and are investing about $400,000,000 annually in these countries. However, we have avoided the concept of a regional defense system, and I think we all recognize that the Greek, Turkish and Iranian forces are not yet strong enough to be decisive in any theater-wide conflict.

U.S.-U.K. cooperation could be carried out in individual countries by our military missions to those countries—such as those now in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. Our missions are now engaged in some joint planning. We are, I recognize, not in a position to exercise theater responsibility. What is here proposed is not a command organization, but rather a U.K.-U.S. coordinating mechanism which could be related to the defense effort not only in Greece, Turkey, and Iran, but also in Israel, Syria, Lebanon and the other Arab countries in the area. In time, perhaps, enough defensive capabilities could be built up to hold the mountain line. We all know the importance of this objective—it is not necessary here to discuss the significance to us of the area's strategic position, and petroleum and the air installations. We need to retain these assets if we possibly can. I also think that the psychological importance of the Middle East is very great in world eyes.

It is a hard political fact, in my opinion, that if the United States does not make a determined effort to assist in the defense of the area, the U.S. will not be welcomed back to the area after another war. We have got to make a good show or we will lose any hope of postwar influence. U.S. participation in the defense of the area is necessary if only to regain our substantial oil interests after a war. In summary, we in the State Department feel that the time has arrived for more positive action in the Middle East on our part.

General Bradley: I do not differ with you on much that you have said. We have felt that it was important to be clear on the U.K. responsibility for the area. There are certain difficulties in an attempt to coordinate with the U.K. I would like to ask you whether it is your impression that the Turks are not willing to plan with the U.K. and that they would be ready to plan with us. We have a difficult situation if they are not willing to accept U.K. participation.

Mr. McGhee: That is correct; that is the present situation. I believe the Turks would, however, talk with a joint U.S.-U.K. mission.

General Bradley: We have, of course, had discussions with the U.K. Chiefs on those problems and have been trying to get together with them on our plans for the area. We also called in representatives from Greece, Turkey, and Iran in an effort to achieve coordination with these countries first. It is very difficult to persuade the Turks to engage in any planning with Greece and Iran. The Turks have a very simple mobilization plan—everyone turns out to fight and that is all the plan amounts to. We will get into difficulties trying to furnish leadership in the area and to persuade the U.K. to go along with us and to secure the coordination of all the other states. I am not sure how far we could get with an effort of this kind.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: With reference to the whole general problem, I think we should remember that the U.S. is the only country that is doing much in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. We alone have a position of leadership in these countries. If we turn leadership over to the U.K., they will get nowhere, and in the process will derogate from our own position. The relationships between the U.K. and the U.S. in Greece are very complicated. Norton has been on the sidelines and has criticized Van Fleet. Now if we talk about a U.S.-U.K. coordinating outfit in Cairo which would stand above the Greeks, that will make the Greeks very unhappy. So far as coordination of U.S. strategy is concerned, we have already provided that in some degree by the authority we have given Admiral Carney. We should strengthen that coordination—with the local U.S. missions coordinating plans in the individual countries and with Carney providing the coordination of strategic advice for the theater.

The question of responsibility and the position of these countries are not isolated problems and cannot be considered only in terms of the Middle East. All of these countries are also Mediterranean countries. In Yugoslavia, Greece, Turkey, and Iran, we now have soldiers in quantity. They are not only the northern flank of the Mediterranean as a theater and as a line of communications, but they also tie in to the problems of Western Europe. We have responsibilities through NATO in Western Europe. Greece and Turkey are now associated with the NATO effort and are, therefore, tied in with the Western European theater. Greece, Turkey, and Iran cover the Mediterranean and also the Middle East-Persian Gulf area. I find it difficult to compartmentalize these problems by arbitrary lines on a map. I agree that coordinated advice and effort on the part of the U.S. military missions are necessary. We can use existing machinery to improve this, and can strengthen the machinery for this purpose. Then if we were to establish small missions in Syria, Lebanon, etc., they could tie up with that machinery. I do not believe that this can be tied into Cairo. Greece and Turkey are reluctant to get involved with the U.K. in Cairo.

We should reserve judgment, in my opinion, on the degree to which Greece and Turkey and Yugoslavia should be tied into our plans for Western Europe, and we should not make any substantial changes in our organization for these countries until it is clear what organization we will have for the Mediterranean area in the NATO setup. We have a terrific organizational problem ahead of us. In my judgment, General Eisenhower has got to build from the inside out—from Western Europe to the Middle East. I, therefore, think that we should not try to do this organizational job for the Middle East now. I admit that this is to advise delay, but the time factor is such that the delay will not be long. It seems to me that we may want a close link to General Eisenhower's command. There will be nothing but difficulty in Greece and Turkey if we try to tie up with the U.K. in Cairo now. I recognize that this line of thought will not be of much help to you (addressing McGhee) on your trip except perhaps as a statement of principles. I do recognize the importance of the problem. It is clear that we cannot commit U.S. troops to the Middle East when we are so short of troops elsewhere. In fact, the proportion of troops available to the need for them is probably better in that part of the world than elsewhere. For the time being, we will have to content ourselves, at best, with naval and air support in this area until we have succeeded in building up Western Europe and can give, at a later time, due recognition to the potential strength of Yugoslavia, Greece, and Turkey.

Mr. Matthews: Would you (addressing Admiral Sherman) favor small missions in Syria and Lebanon?

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I am not sure. I have not given much thought to that question. Let's talk about France for a minute. As you know the Lebanese forces are all French trained. It might be politically wise to have relations with France on the problem of Lebanese defense.

Mr. McGhee: Of course, there is a strong feeling against French troops in Lebanon. They are not well thought of there.

GENERAL BRADLEY: Would they object to a French military mission?

MR. McGHEE: I don't think so.

GENERAL COLLINS: The U.S. is now on the outside periphery of the Middle East. Greece is the bridge between that area and Western Europe. The Russians can overrun Greece in the event of war—in fact, they can do this more easily, in my opinion, than the Germans did. The U.S. has large missions in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. We are not in the center of the Middle East—in the Cairo-Suez area. For my part, I am very dubious about the wisdom of a military mission in Saudi Arabia, let alone Syria, Lebanon and Israel. There are two reasons why the people in the Middle East want U.S. leadership: (1) we will furnish equipment and pay the bills; and (2) in the event of war, they think, we will send troops and aircraft to the Middle East. We are kidding ourselves and kidding them if we do anything which indicates that we are going to put forces in that area. The forces to do that are just not in sight. This is a U.K. responsibility. The U.K. would like very much to have us take this responsibility, but it is a job which the U.K. and the Commonwealth have got to do. We must stick to the periphery. If that breaks, then, of course, Cairo-Suez is the place from which to run the area. If we take responsibility for this job now, we are assuming a responsibility which we cannot meet in time of war. I am unalterably opposed to putting forces in that area. I think we should reevaluate the importance of the Dhahran airfield. It just provides us with a way out. I think an alternate field on Cyprus would be just as good and perhaps better—we could use it at all times and it would also enable us to get out of the area. The Chiefs are studying the military aspects of these problems now, but we have not reached conclusions. For one thing, we have not yet had an adequate report on what the capabilities for defense are in that area. In my opinion, we should stay on the periphery and not get down inside.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: In reviewing this paper in my shop this morning we felt that the prospect of getting something out of Greece and Turkey was such that we should not agree to reducing their programs in order to finance other programs. General Collins thinks that Greece would be overrun in the event of war. However, what will happen in the Balkans and Turkey cannot be predicted far in advance—the situation there may change rapidly. In my opinion, we would be pushed back, but, even so, we might soak up enough Russian effort to make this worth while. I have been more optimistic about Greece since it has been possible to consider the Greek and Yugoslav problems together. As to U.K. responsibility, the more I study this question, the more I feel that when we speak of U.K. responsibility. we are just getting the responsibility off our shoulders, and are not putting it elsewhere. The U.K. cannot send enough to the area to defend it, nor can the Dominions. I place a very low estimate on the U.K.'s capabilities for this job.

GENERAL COLLINS: I do not disagree with that; however, low as the U.K. capabilities are, ours are even lower.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I agree, but it is not profitable to think of transferring any real responsibility to them.

GENERAL BRADLEY: Well, I am not sure that I am in full agreement. It is true that we are just on the periphery and that we are in the places that will count the most, but my question is, "How much more would it take to send small missions to the other countries?" What we would send to them would detract in some measure from our effort in Greece, Turkey and Iran. However, it would tend to increase our influence in depth.

General Collins: My point is simply that in doing this we would inevitably assume more responsibility.

General Bradley: I think that is right, but it does not seem to me that we would be assuming much more responsibility than we already have.

Mr. Nitze: In the Planning Staff in State we have been considering the question of the priority which we should be giving to the various theaters. We have been looking at this question in light of the fact that we can by no means be sure that the Soviet Union is not going to move against sometime in the near future; for various reasons, it seems to us that if it does move soon, a probable move would be one against Yugoslavia. For the time being, Western Europe is protected by NATO—with all the implications involved therein. It seems to us that the most serious threat of future Soviet action is in this area which we have been discussing. The real deterrent to such a Soviet move can only be, it seems to us, the possibility of our reaction to a Soviet move in this area. This also gears into our consideration of Far Eastern problems. The question is what disposition of our forces in the Far East would be most advantageous to us in the event of general war. Therefore, we thought it would be useful to raise the question of priorities for this area as against other areas in which we have responsibilities and important interests.

General Collins: It is a far cry from Yugoslavia to Iran and Saudi Arabia. We have much more interest in our over-all position in Western Europe than we do in our positions in Iran and Saudi Arabia and these other Middle Eastern countries. The Army is very much interested in Yugoslavia. We can't do anything about the Middle East, but Yugoslavia is a different story, and a more important one.

Mr. Matthews: We had hoped that we could get into a discussion of Yugoslavia at our next meeting.

General Bradley: However, when we talk about Greece we have also got to talk about Yugoslavia. I am much concerned about the Middle East. The oil there is important to us and it might be very important to the Russians, although they would have a great deal of trouble in getting it home. The Middle East is the gateway to Africa. If we lose Asia, which we seem to be in danger of doing, and lose Africa, then we will be confined to the Western Hemisphere, and that is why I am concerned about the Middle East.

At the same time, there is a limit to how many responsibilities we can take on. Our friends in Western Europe ask what, supposing we hold there for 90 days, we will do thereafter, and that is a good question. At any rate, we are committed in Western Europe and the Far East. We have just received today another new demand for assistance to Indo-China,<sup>6</sup> and the Philippines are a big problem. This boils down to a problem of priorities. It is a question of priorities on limited supplies of equipment that worries the Army. Where is all the equipment needed around the world to come from? Perhaps in 18 to 24 months we could allocate some to this area.

General Collins: In the event of general war, Australia and New Zealand will not be invaded. They can produce good fighters—they have done it before and they can do it again. The Australian Prime Minister told me that the Australians could send some forces to the Middle East—he didn't say how many or when. But they can do it and the U.K. has got to put the squeeze on the Commonwealth.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I think the U.S. is going to have to put the squeeze on the Commonwealth.

GENERAL COLLINS: Well, I would be willing to join with the British in that.

&lt;sup>6</sup> For documentation on Indochina, see vol. vi, pt. 1, pp. 332 ff.

Mr. McGhee: The defensive capabilities that we have been concerned about in this paper are those against an attack from the Caucasus out-flanking Turkey and striking towards the Cairo-Suez area, and those against an attack from the Dardanelles toward the Cairo-Suez area. As to the question of U.S. forces, I want to emphasize that our proposals will not involve the stationing of U.S. forces in this area or their commitment in event of war. I believe that the proposals should be regarded as an insurance policy which would protect our substantial investments in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. Only assistance in the order of $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 is involved, but this assistance, small though it is, might be the cement which would hold this area together.

Another question altogether is the question of whether we should increase our effort in Turkey. It is our view that we should. However, the subtraction of this small amount of $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 from even the present Turkish program would be worthwhile, in any event, as insurance to protect our investment in Turkey.

I should not have used the term "United States leadership." That does not accurately describe what we had in mind. Rather, it is that the U.S. should fit into this picture, in a subordinate role, and that the U.S. and U.K. should form an interlocking base for a regional defense effort. The proposals before us involve only a small effort on our part. They do not raise the question whether we are coming to the defense of this area in the event of war nearly as much as our present programs in Greece, Turkey and Iran raise this question already. In fact, what is involved might be described as merely a rationalization of our efforts in the area as a whole.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Personally, I look at Yugoslavia, Greece, Turkey, and Iran not as an area into which we should put forces, but as an area in which we can find forces.

Mr. McGhee: I agree that our proposals should reduce the need for U.S. forces. It would be advantageous to us, for example, if the Turks would move across to help Iran in the event of trouble. The Russians will find that area one in which they will have very difficult line of communications problems. I know that I would not want to be a Russian Commander on the far end of a line of communications running back to the Soviet Union through country as rough as that.

General Collins: We can do a lot on this problem in Iran and we are already working on it.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: There is nothing more atrocious in my view than for the U.K. Ambassador in Greece to talk about British responsibility there because Britain has some kind of general responsibility in the Middle East. Greece is a Balkan country and Western Turkey must also be regarded as a factor in the Balkan situation. It is the U.S. which is carrying out defense programs in these two countries, and there must be no question of U.K. control.

Mr. McGhee: The U.K. is responsible in the event of war. That is the basis of our present agreement with the U.K., which was arrived at in the September <sup>7</sup> conversations.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I was not a party to any such agreement.

GENERAL BRADLEY: That is a problem that we should straighten out. I do not recall any such agreement.

ADMIRAL WOOLDRIDGE: Mr. McGhee is right in saying that that is what the minutes show. Such an agreement was arrived at in the September conversations according to the minutes.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Who wrote those minutes?

ADMIRAL WOOLDRIDGE: I do not know who wrote the minutes. It was only my privilege to read them.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: We should disavow those minutes.

General Bradley: The basic trouble is the lack of organization in the Mediterranean area. This is a problem which General Eisenhower has got to study. He should determine what the relation of the Mediterranean theater is to his theater. Until this problem has been worked out, it does not much matter what we or the British say about the defense of this area for neither one of us can send any troops.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: We are providing assistance now and must do whatever is done in the event of war.

GENERAL COLLINS: We are also giving assistance to Iran.

MR. McGHEE: The question is who is responsible.

GENERAL COLLINS: We are responsible initially. Neither we nor the British can send more in the event of war.

Mr. McGhee: It does seem necessary to have some kind of a theater command.

General Collins: The U.K. has got to be responsible for the over-all position in the Middle East.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: This is largely a question of definition. The Middle East does not include Greece, the Dardanelles, and Western Turkey.

Mr. McGHEE: But I think you will agree that Turkey has to be included in the Middle East.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: No, I think Turkey has to be divided for planning purposes. It is a big country, and it borders on the Mediterranean and it borders on the Middle East. It is just like the United States which has Atlantic and Pacific frontiers. We should confine our discussion of the Middle East to an area which excludes Greece and we should hold Turkey in abeyance for the time being. Western &lt;sup>7</sup>Reference is to Mr. McGhee's discussions with Foreign Office officials at London in September; for documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 192 ff.

Turkey is not in the Middle East and Eastern Turkey is. Turkey has to be fitted into both areas.

GENERAL COLLINS: From the standpoint of the Turkish army, Turkey is a part of the Middle East.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Yes, but we cannot dissociate Turkey from the Mediterranean theater.

General Collins: In the event of trouble, the Turkish army will have to pull out from European Turkey almost at once. It can probably hold the Gallipoli Peninsula for a while and deny the Dardanelles for a while. Then it will fall back into South Eastern Turkey. It will be under constant threat of a flanking movement in that area.

MR. McGhee: Yes, an attack aimed at Cairo-Suez around Turkey. General Collins: The Turks will fight and they should be of considerable help. We should persuade the Turks and the Iranians to do some joint planning. The Iranian mountains are really just an eastward extension of the mountains in Eastern Turkey. Evans in Tehran and Arnold in Ankara are stressing this need for joint planning to the Iranians and the Turks, and they were not unreceptive to the idea.

Mr. McGhee: One reason for our proposals is that at the time we were considering the Turkish request to join NATO, it was thought that an extension of NATO to this area would place excessive requirements and organizational problems on NATO. If this is true, the same reasoning would apply to extension of NATO to the land defense of the Middle East.

Admiral Sherman: I recall that the U.K. was urging us to regard Tripolitania as a part of the Middle East. We took a dim view of that. It is too far west.

Mr. McGhee: I do want to emphasize that these countries in the Middle East will not be willing to wait long for a rationalization of their defense problems.

Admiral Sherman: We have been talking about the facts of life in the event of war. It seems to me that we should separate these problems into two groups: (1) the problems we will encounter in the period of the cold war, such as the maintenance of stability in the area; and (2) the problems of defense in the event of a shooting war. This is a very delicate line to walk. Our job in dealing with these countries is to keep them on the rails now without giving them definite commitments at this time about what we can do for them in the event of war.

Mr. McGhee: I agree. It is our view that we cannot hold our position in the cold war much longer without more action. A little extra effort at this time would be well worth while in terms of our cold war problem. It is feared that our actions would imply commitment to come to the defense of the area, and we should keep in mind the degree to which we are already committed by our large programs in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. The additional proposals and the small effort they involve would not increase our commitments.

GENERAL BRADLEY: As I understand your position, it is to send them a little more assistance, to establish some small missions, to give them some places in our technical schools, and so forth. That is one question. The question of U.S. leadership is another question altogether. Could the Army furnish men for these missions?

General Collins: If the missions were small we could do it, but our schools are already full and it would be very difficult to find places for officers from these countries in our schools at this time. We have got a lot of production started, and we have got to train cadres of specialists; that is what we are using the schools for.

Mr. McGhee: We would not want our proposals to stand or fall on the question of schooling, for that is a very small and insignificant part of our program. At any rate, we are only talking about 30 to 40 men.

General Collins: My basic trouble is not in the smallness or largeness of our undertaking. It is the psychological problem—the assumption of responsibility—the notion that the United States will come to the aid of these countries. We cannot do that. The U.K. must do it. We should not deal in illusions, but in realities, and we are kidding them and kidding ourselves if we take on such responsibilities.

MR. McGHEE: We are already running this risk by our programs in Greece, Turkey and Iran, and it does seem to us that we could make this small additional effort as a form of insurance and as evidence of our faith.

General Collins: I cannot agree. In my opinion, it would be an act of bad faith, not of good faith. I favor putting our effort into places where the people will fight, where the terrain is suited for defense, etc.

GENERAL BRADLEY: There may not be mountains in this area, but the desert is very tough, and in some ways well suited for defense. The real question is whether 200 men in Ankara will accomplish more per man than five men will accomplish per man in Baghdad. The five men might be helpful in developing the ability of the Iraqis to exploit the defensive potentialities of that country.

Mr. McGhee: I agree that the U.K. should do whatever it can, but we feel that the U.S. should do some more in its own interest.

GENERAL COLLINS: We have got to win the battle in Western Europe. First, last, and always, that is the big job. Even if we lose temporarily in the Middle East and hold on to Western Europe, we will be in a satisfactory position. Once the job is done in Western Europe, we can go down later to the Middle East and clean up whatever problems we find there.

GENERAL BRADLEY: Have we (addressing McGhee) covered all your questions? I do not want to interrupt this discussion, but we do have a lot of other ground to cover and I fear that we are getting into a range of questions which you would not want to take up in your forthcoming meetings in any event.

I think it is important to consider your proposals from the cold war point of view—the problems you raise are more a cold war problem than a hot war problem. The more solid we can keep an area, the better off we are. I can see great advantages in this.

Mr. Rusk: I think that we are "kidding" in Western Europe also for some little time to come.

GENERAL COLLINS: However, we should not water down our efforts in Western Europe, for this would only make the job tougher.

Mr. McGhee: I would rather give the people in the Middle East a few illusions at this time than to leave them in their present frame of mind.

GENERAL BRADLEY: Clearly, we are not going to resolve these issues before Mr. McGhee leaves on Sunday.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Can we agree that we do not want to tie in with the U.K. in Cairo in any way, so far as Greece, Turkey, and Iran are concerned. Can we also agree that Greece should be regarded as part of the Balkans.

Mr. McGhee: That is difficult because we are operating on a different basis now.

General Bradley: This "agreement" must have gotten into the minutes as a result of a misunderstanding of some kind. Of course, I recognize that in the event of war the United States will not furnish a ground commander for this theater. That will be a U.K. responsibility.

Mr. McGhee: Isn't there some inconsistency here? This raises a problem of coordinating our efforts prior to a war with the U.K. responsibilities after war breaks out. Some kind of preparation would seem to be necessary if our activities at present are to gear in with the U.K.'s activities at a later date.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: The strategic coordination of military missions in Greece and Turkey is the mission of Admiral Carney.

General Bradley: However, we do not have a theater commander in this area and the U.K. does. There is a problem here which needs to be straightened out.

Mr. McGhee: The coordination of supply activities and, in general, of economic support to these areas would seem to be quite a problem in view of the divided responsibility as between a cold war situation and a war situation.

General Collins: No one has any logistic responsibilities in the event of war in this area.

MR. McGHEE: Do you mean that we are just going to cut them off? GENERAL COLLINS: We will not be able to send them any supplies.

General Bradley: I agree. Our present plans call for furnishing these countries something like two months' reserve supplies. After they have exhausted those, they are on their own.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I do not understand why it is necessary to have any discussion at this time of theater organization in the event of war.

Mr. McGhee: I am talking about joint planning activities. These have now been stopped.

GENERAL BRADLEY: The Greeks will be fighting in Greece, and the Turks will be fighting in Turkey. There really isn't much of a problem of coordination, even in the planning field. Possibly we can help by dropping a few bombs here and there, but that job won't be supervised by a theater commander in that area. It is hard to visualize the role of a theater commander in this area.

Mr. McGHEE: There is a problem of coordinating what our own people are advising these countries to do.

Mr. Matthews: Admiral Sherman says that that is Admiral Carney's mission.

Mr. McGHEE: But, in carrying out this mission, no account is being taken of what the U.K. is doing in the area.

GENERAL COLLINS: We are advising the Turks about what they should do in the event of war. We have pointed out to them the need for joint planning with Iran. In the event of war, the Turks plan to hold certain areas and to yield certain others. The Iranian plan involves withdrawal to the mountains. At some time, in the event of war, it will be necessary, I grant, to make plans for the entire area back in Cairo. That is the only place from which the job for the entire area can be successfully done. But here we are dealing with couverture forces—the Turks are not going to fall back and defend Cairo. We do not know at this time what the potentialities are. The Cairo job in the event of war is a U.K. responsibility.

GENERAL BRADLEY: You (addressing McGhee) will not want to discuss these problems anyway, will you?

MR. McGHEE: No, not at these meetings.

GENERAL BRADLEY: I feel that we should consider this problem from the cold war viewpoint. I think we need an NSC paper on this. We have to get a governmental position. Of course, the cold war problem is related to the possibility of general war for we cannot make too many promises during the cold war period.

Mr. McGhee: We will undertake to prepare a paper for NSC consideration. I suggest that we take up separately the misunderstanding with the U.K. on the question of responsibility in this area.

Mr. NITZE: I fear that we may confront three types of situations in the period ahead: (1) There is the cold war situation which presents the kind of problems we are now concerned with in Western Europe and the Middle East. (2) There is the situation of global war.

(3) There is an in-between situation in which we might face establish

(3) There is an in-between situation in which we might face satellite action in specific countries or areas—this is not quite a cold war or a hot war situation.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I think we should re-group our areas a bit. We should start thinking about the Balkans as an entity and not link them up with the Middle East. It may be wise to group Italy, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey for planning purposes.

Mr. Matthews: The danger Mr. Nitze referred to may now be very close.

General Collins: The basic problem here is a land mass problem—what is the Soviet Union going to move over the ground. Greece can be overrun as it has been overrun before.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: We got into the habit of thinking about Greece as a Middle Eastern area closely tied up with Turkey when Yugoslavia was in the Soviet camp. Now I think we have to regard Greece and Yugoslavia as an area which can furnish converture for Italy.

General Collins: I agree. The defection of Yugoslavia—if we can make the most effective use of it—can save Italy. I believe that our forces together with the Yugoslav and Italian forces can hold a short line in northern Italy.

Mr. NITZE: Of course, no one of us knows just how to assess the risk of action this spring. Some of our people think there is a 30 percent chance, some a 50 percent chance, some a 60 percent chance that the Soviets will move somewhere in this area this spring.

General Collins: I would be all in favor of doing everything we can before the event. I would be ready to talk about a mission to Yugoslavia right now. From our point of view, it would be an excellent idea.

Mr. Matthews: I hope we can spend our next meeting on this problem.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: The Navy would also like to see some action on the Yugoslav problem.

780.5/2-1051 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

SECRET

London, February 10, 1951—1 p. m.

4370. Following emerged from meeting February 6 Palmer and Jones with Foreign Office representatives under Bowker chairmanship:

- 1. FonOff deeply concerned re problem providing defense for Arab States and Israel as well as by deep fears pervading NE countries that west disinterested their fate and prepared to do little or nothing to save them. FonOff believes this anxiety provides fertile field Communist exploitation.
- 2. Bowker said British Government anxious reassure Arab States and Israel and to this end General Robertson has been making series of visits designed give each state picture overall NE defense problem, an idea of its role in event war and to render all British help practicable to assist states play assigned roles. FonOff and General Robertson believe "slow but steady progress" being made.
- 3. FonOff representatives explained demand for arms is loud in each country and supply of arms is considered gauge of western interest. UK faces everywhere in NE demands for jets and modern tanks which are not available now nor likely to be for some time. FonOff believes bare arms cupboard makes desirable maximum political, psychological and other means to steady apprehensive NE.
- 4. As effective political measure, Bowker put forward idea that display US-UK solidarity re NE defense would be highly desirable. He believed it would help if US would explain to Arab States and Israel that (a) US interested in defense of NE; (b) that by US-UK agreement UK has primary responsibility for defense NE and (c) in carrying out this responsibility UK has the support of US which will render all assistance in its power.
- 5. Bowker then suggested that following might be among other practical steps which might be taken to emphasize US-UK interest in NE defense: (1) top US military representative and top British military representative in each NE country might sit side by side with local military on committee organized for the discussion local and area defense matters; (2) "training teams" on which US personnel would be associated with British personnel. When requested, such teams would be sent to NE countries for as long as might be necessary to "teach them the job we think they should do in war". Bowker said obvious parent organization for training teams would be GHQ-MELF.

- 6. Re nature training, FonOff representatives concurred idea that simple weapons probably more effective Arab hands than complicated tanks, jets, et cetera.
- 7. Several references were made to recent Malta convention <sup>1</sup> from which it was evident UK hopes that ultimately US and UK military will agree on clear definition command responsibility. Specifically, re Arab States and Israel, British representatives indicated that program to increase indigenous confidence and resistance power must be conducted on coordinated basis under general direction commander assigned primary responsibility.
- 8. Bowker emphasized foregoing principally FonOff thinking. He said ideas paragraphs 4, 5, 6 above would be referred by FonOff to British service chiefs. He put them forward informally and tentatively now in light Department's concern re deterioration NE political situation as result Arab and Israeli fears that they are virtually defenseless. US representatives promised refer his ideas to Department this tentative basis.<sup>2</sup>

GIFFORD

<sup>1</sup> Reference is to the talks at Malta on January 23–24; see footnote 5, p. 28.
<sup>2</sup> In telegram 4796 from London, March 7, not printed, Gifford informed the Secretary of State that the British Chiefs of Staff would probably instruct Robertson to inquire of Carney at the Malta talks of March 10–13 whether there was a possibility of some U.S. action "along lines reported Embtel 4370 February 10. Admiral Carney informed." (780.5/3–751)

S/P-NSC Files: Lot 61 D 167: "Arab States, Israel, Iran"

Paper Prepared in the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington, February 10, 1951.]

OUTLINE OF PROPOSED NSC PAPER ON US POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

THE PROBLEM

1. To define and assess the policy which the United States should follow towards the Arab states and Israel, particularly in the light

&lt;sup>1</sup>This paper was drafted by Kopper (NEA/NE). The source text is labeled "Revision No. 1", and it bears a covering sheet, dated February 12 which reads as follows:

&quot;The attached revision of the proposed NSC paper on U.S. policy toward the Arab States and Israel contains suggestions informally received from the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The paper as revised has NEA's complete approval. It is hoped that it can be presented to the NSC at the end of this week. Please let me have any comments you desire to make by Wednesday afternoon, February 14."

The source text appears to be the copy submitted to Bishop (S/A). Other copies may have gone to Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Berry and Frank Nash, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense. For the later version of this paper submitted to the National Security Council on February 28, see p. 88. The original version of this paper is included in the McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Military Assistance".

of the growing tendency in the area toward neutralism and the decline of an attitude favorable to the United States and other countries of the West.

ANALYSIS

- 2. NSC 47/2, October 17, 1949, covering U.S. policy toward Israel and the Arab states and NSC 65/3, May 17, 1950 3 on U.S. policy toward arms shipments to this area set forth policies which should now be reviewed in the light of the material changes in the international situation.
- 3. The political and economic stability of the Arab states and Israel were determined in NSC 47/2 to be of critical importance to the security of the United States, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff of both the United States and the United Kingdom have as recently as October 26, 1950 4 agreed that "the Middle East in war is of importance second only to Europe". The security interests of the United States in the area are primarily:
- (a) Political and military importance of the area in view of its geographic position with respect to western Europe; 5

(b) Oil resources;(c) Military bases; and

- (d) Communications and facilities.
- 4. United States objectives in the Arab states and Israel are:

(a) To preserve and strengthen the orientation of the nations in the area toward the West;

(b) To create political stability in depth as a contribution to the stability of the Middle East as a whole;

(c) To induce the countries to increase their indigenous defensive capabilities against the USSR and Soviet satellites; and

- (d) To obtain the right to deploy, base and operate forces in the territories of the nations of the areas upon threat of and during general hostilities, and to lay the political ground for us to regain access to the territories of the nations of the area in event of their loss during general hostilities.6
- 5. The increasing belief, particularly in the Arab states, that the U.S. will not help the countries to prepare to defend themselves, is producing marked political disaffection and deterioration. The risk is increasing that important areas will swing away from the West toward neutrality, or even toward the U.S.S.R. It is important that this adverse trend be halted.

<sup>3</sup> For text, see ibid., 1950, vol. v, p. 163.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For text, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, p. 1430.

For documentation on the talks under reference, see ibid., pp. 233 ff.
The words "Africa and European and Asiatic Russia" were included in the original version of this paper.

&lt;sup>6</sup>The original version contained the following sentence at the close of paragraph 4(d): "Our actions until now have not been sufficiently positive to achieve these objectives."

- 6. It is now in the interest of the U.S. that the U.K. maintain primary responsibility in the Arab states, other than Saudi Arabia, and Israel. However, the political influence of the U.K. in the area is declining and appropriate cooperation between the U.S. and the U.K. would be in our mutual interest.
- 7. The indigenous defenses in the Arab states and Israel can be increased through relatively small US and UK efforts in the area.8
- 8. If the Arab states and Israel do not become oriented toward the West during the cold war period, it is doubtful that the support of these countries could be obtained during a global war or regained after the war.<sup>9</sup>

CONCLUSIONS

- 9. It is in our interest to maximize the will of the governments and peoples in the Arab states and Israel to cooperate with the West in resistance to the U.S.S.R. both now and in the event of war; to translate that will into indigenous efforts to strengthen internal security to resist the Soviet advance to grant the western powers necessary military rights therein; and, if the area is nevertheless overrun, to harass and sabotage the invader and to assist in liberation.
- 10.10 Steps should be taken on a combined U.K.-U.S. politicomilitary level to clarify the role of the U.S. and the U.K. in strengthening the Arab states and Israel.
- 11. Following agreements reached in the discussions held in accordance above paragraph 10. The U.K. and the U.S. should, on a coordinated basis undertake and accelerate the following measures with respect to the Arab States, excluding Saudi Arabia.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>8</sup>The original version contains the added phrase: "particularly in the difficult terrain of the Arabian peninsula where American operated desert facilities, engineering equipment and American experience already exist."

The original version contains a brief paragraph (9) at this point which reads: "Retention and use of even a part of Middle East oil production or even delayed loss of it would contribute importantly and perhaps critically to an allied war effort."

10 In the original version, this paragraph begins with the following words: "Taking cognizance of the fact that it is in the US interest that the United Kingdom have primary military responsibility for Israel and the Arab states excepting Saudi Arabia".

"The original version of this paragraph substitutes the word "All" for "Following" in the opening phrase, and the words "Arab states and Israel" for "the Arab States, excluding Saudi Arabia" in the final phrase.

&lt;sup>7</sup> Paragraph 6 of the original version reads: "It is now in the interest of the U.S. that the U.K. maintain primary military responsibility in Israel and the Arab states, other than Saudi Arabia. Although the political influence of the U.K. in the area has been declining in certain parts of the area, it is nevertheless still stronger than that of any other country in other parts, and it is in our mutual interest that there be cooperation between the U.S. and the U.K. in order that the maximum benefit may be derived from our respective efforts in the area. The JCS has submitted a program involving [$]76,000,000 cash reimbursable assistance to Saudi Arabia. Therefore primary military responsibility for that area should rest with the U.S. but there should nevertheless, be coordination with the U.K. The Israeli Government is aware that the U.K. has primary military responsibility with regard to the area in the environs of Israel."

(a) Obtaining the right to deploy, base, and operate forces in the territories of the nations of the area upon threat of and during general hostilities:

(b) Development of fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain;

(c) Initiating limited arms supply programs, required to achieve (a), to certain of the Arab states and Israel by early delivery of token quantities:

(d) Furnishing on request small U.S. advisory groups and individual service technicians, and consider requests for training for local military personnel in U.S. and U.K. schools;

(e) Making, in agreement with local governments, "show-the-flag" visits by air force planes and naval vessels; and

(f) Placing of orders in local industries for needed raw materials and war materials.

- 12. The United States should unilaterally for Saudi Arabia and Israel undertake and accelerate all of the measures listed under paragraph 11 above, such actions to be without prejudice to measures otherwise arranged with or contemplated for these two states. In this connection the United States should keep the United Kingdom informed, as appropriate, regarding measures taken with respect to Saudi Arabia and Israel.12
- 13. Subject to the enactment by the Congress of legislation providing military assistance for Middle East States other than Saudi Arabia, Turkey, and Iran during fiscal year 1952, appropriate authorities of the United States should develop the necessary arms supply programs in consonance therewith in order that immediate military assistance to the ground forces of the Arab States and Israel may be provided if the need for such assistance becomes urgent.

14. The United States should undertake and accelerate technical and economic assistance 13 that will help convince the peoples of the Arab States and Israel that they will benefit as individuals as well as States, from the victory of the West.14

13 Original version contains at this point the added phrase: "coordinated with action in para 13 above".

&lt;sup>13</sup> This paragraph not in original version.

&lt;sup>14</sup> Original version contains a paragraph 15 which reads: "The U.S. should accelerate the developments of its information program in the Arab states and Israel".

611.86/2-1251

Memorandum by Robert A. Thayer of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs to the Deputy Director of That Office (Kopper)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] February 12, 1951.

Subject: Proposed NSC Paper on U.S. Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel

I have the following comments in regard to your paper.1

- (1) The "sphere of influence" concept of letting the U.K. have primary responsibility in the Arab states while the U.S. devotes itself in particular to assisting Saudi Arabia and Israel seems to play into the hands of those Arabs who for their own reasons wish to continue to make political capital out of U.S. "favoritism" for Israel. The effectiveness of any program based upon this concept would appear to be in doubt without continuous coordination between the U.S. and the U.K. on the operating level. Certainly the self defense of the area must become mutual if it is to be a significant factor. To what extent will the U.S. and the British programs reflect different techniques, different weapons, etc.? If one assumes that the area as a whole must be defended and that the U.S. and the U.K. must cooperate in affecting this, what is the reason for continuing the "sphere of influence" concept with its air of colonialism? I do not understand the reasons which lead us to advocate this policy.
- (2) I would like to suggest a clarification of the security interests of the U.S. as set forth in the paper. Does not (a) really mean that the area is important in terms of oil and in terms of transport and communications? The area is vital in that it lies across air and shipping routes between Europe and Asia. I suggest also that the area provides access to the continent of Africa which in turn is so important as a source of strategic and other raw materials. I would suggest spelling out (d) to read "The security of air and surface transport and communications routes and facilities." If possible, I think you might be specific in this regard in referring to (a) air routes to and from South Asia and the Far East lying across the area as well as the facilities needed to support them; (b) dependence of shipping routes upon the Suez Canal; (c) importance of the Near East in enemy hands as a base for attacks upon these routes and facilities.
- (3) No mention is made in the paper of what measures, if any, are to be taken to prevent the Arabs and Israel from using the arms received against one another. This becomes of particular significance if the "sphere of influence" concept is applied in that it may place the U.S. and U.K. in competition to meet demands on the part of the Near

&lt;sup>1</sup>Presumably reference to Department of State Draft Paper on U.S. Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel, February 10, supra.

Eastern States for arms intended to be used perhaps for purposes other than to resist aggression from the north.

(4) Lastly, while I recognize that arms aid could bring important political benefits in terms of our interests, it seems to me that arms aid will be to a large extent 2 pouring critical material down the rat hole unless you have training programs as well as control over the use to which the arms will be put. This country gave a vast amount of material assistance to China to no avail, largely because the Chinese did not have either the knowledge, skill or will to put those arms to effective use. I suggest therefore that if we are to go into an arms aid program for the Near East that it should be an effective one designed to insure that the aid will be properly utilized. Otherwise such aid will in no way deter Soviet aggression and will merely result in a matériel loss to the West. In this sense a small program might be useless and wasteful while a larger well conceived organized program might bring the results intended.

Editorial Note

Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee toured the Near Eastern and South Asian regions during February and March 1951. He first attended the Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission at Istanbul, February 14–21, then proceeded to Nuwara Eliya, Ceylon, via Cairo and Bombay for the South Asian Regional Conference of United States Diplomatic and Consular Officers, February 26–March 2. For the report of the Istanbul meeting, see Agreed Conclusions and Recommendations of the Conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission, infra. For information on McGhee's brief stop-over in Cairo, see editorial note, page 347. For information on the South Asian Regional Conference, see volume VI, part 2, page 1664.

Thereafter, McGhee was scheduled to arrive in Baghdad on March 20. He entered Israel from Jordan on March 27, and returned to Jordan from Israel on March 28. He arrived in Cairo on March 29, and in London on March 31. He returned to Washington on April 3. Information on his itinerary may be found in file 780.00, especially in telegram 412 to Baghdad, March 20; telegram 594 from Tel Aviv, March 29; telegram 933 to Cairo, March 29; and telegram 4456 to London, March 31. For information on McGhee's talks with Egyptian officials at Cairo at the end of March, see telegram 1001, priority, from Cairo, April 1, page 352. For information on McGhee's talks at London with British officials regarding Near Eastern matters on April 2–3, see page 356.

&lt;sup>2</sup>The handwritten words "consist of" were added to the source text at this point, presumably by Mr. Thayer.

120.4382/3-1551

Agreed Conclusions and Recommendations of the Conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission, Istanbul, February 14-21, 1951

TOP SECRET

PARTICIPANTS

From the Department of State:

Hon. George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian and African Affairs, Chairman.

William M. Rountree, Director, Office of Greek, Turkish and Iranian Affairs.

G. Lewis Jones, Director, Office of Near Eastern Affairs.

Representing the National Military Establishment:

Hon. Thomas K. Finletter, Secretary of the Air Force.

Admiral Robert B. Carney, Commander-in-Chief, United States Naval Forces, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean.

From the Field:

Hon. John E. Peurifoy, American Ambassador, Athens, Greece.

Hon. George Wadsworth, American Ambassador, Ankara, Turkey.

Hon. Henry F. Grady, American Ambassador, Tehran, Iran.

Hon. Edward S. Crocker, American Ambassador, Baghdad, Iraq. Hon. Raymond A. Hare, American Ambassador, Jidda, Saudi Arabia.

Hon. Avra M. Warren, American Ambassador, Karachi, Pakistan.

Hon. Monnett B. Davis, American Ambassador, Tel Aviv, Israel.

Hon. Ely E. Palmer, United States representative, United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine.

Hon. John B. Blandford, United States representative, Advisory Commission, United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees.

Hon. Lowell C. Pinkerton, American Minister, Beirut, Lebanon.

Hon. Cavendish W. Cannon, American Minister, Damascus, Syria. Gordon H. Mattison, Counsellor, American Embassy, Cairo, Egypt.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Authorship not indicated on source text. This was one of a series of such meetings held periodically by American diplomatic officers in various regions of the world. The previous conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission had been held at Cairo, March 7–11, 1950; for documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 1 ff. Detailed records of the Istanbul Conference, including actual transactions of the several meetings, have not been found in Department of State files. However, several telegrams sent from the Conference, McGhee's Opening Statement, and a Regional Policy Statement on Greece, Turkey, and Iran are in the Ankara Post Files: Lot 57 F 72: "120 Istanbul Conferences". McGhee released a Statement to the press on February 23 outlining the various problems discussed at Istanbul. The Statement is published in the Department of State Bulletin, March 12, 1951, p. 423.

A. David Fritzlan, Chargé d' Affaires, American Legation, Amman, Jordan.

Joseph Palmer, 2nd, First Secretary, American Embassy, London, England.

Ι

STRATEGIC INTERESTS AND ROLES OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED KINGDOM IN THE MIDDLE EAST,* AND THE PROBLEM OF ACHIEVING MORE POSITIVE COOPERATION FROM THE AREA IN SUPPORT OF UNITED STATES OBJECTIVES

A. Conclusions

1. The Conference concluded that, in the cold war period, the United States has the following military-political objectives in the Middle East: (a) to mobilize strength for the containment of communism; (b) to restore and/or to strengthen confidence in the West on the part of the Middle Eastern states; (c) to build sufficient military strength in each country so that it can maintain internal security and contribute appropriately to general area defense; (d) to construct and insure the availability of Allied air, naval, and army bases; (e) to organize joint staff planning for the defense of the area as a whole or of such parts of the area as may be dictated by strength availabilities; and (f) to make preparations to insure effective demolition and intelligence services against the possibility of withdrawals in the event of war. In the event of war, the Conference agreed that it is the objective of the United States to insure in the Middle East maximum support of the Allied war effort as directed by the designated Allied agency.

2. All Middle Eastern states are, if not already working in cooperation with the West, moving in that direction. However, Iran, although basically oriented towards the West, has shown recent signs of adapting to the Soviet power position on her border. As regards the obstacles to greater cooperation with the West, it was agreed that the fear of Soviet reprisal for such cooperation is not at the moment a dominant factor, except in Iran. In addition, resentment over the Palestine issue is not today an insuperable obstacle in relations with the West.

3. All states in the region recognize Turkey's exposed situation and its importance to Middle East defense. They would approve further aid and support to Turkey. Most of them would be expected to view with approval a special, formalized security commitment to Turkey even if it were not extended to them, although such action would doubtless lead to increased demands on their part. It is probable that the Middle Eastern states, or at least those adjacent to Turkey, would be receptive to the principle of building up Turkey in the role of a "center of attraction" around which closer regional military cooperation could be built.

*The term "Middle East" as employed herein, denotes the entire area comprising Greece, Turkey, Iran, and the Arab states, and Israel. The term "Near East" applies only to the Arab states and Israel. [Footnote in the source text.]

4. With respect to Greece and Turkey, the Conference concluded that

(a) The political situation in Turkey at present reveals such a strong popular as well as official demand for a security commitment as to assure the United States of maximum flexibility in the arrangement offered and the minimum commitments required;

(b) If an offer is not made soon, there is reason to believe that Turkey will veer towards a policy of neutralism, which will always have a strong basic appeal; and, until a commitment is extended to Turkey, there is no assurance that Turkey will declare war unless it is attacked;

(c) In order to assure Turkey's immediate cobelligerency, utilization in collective security action of the military potential which Turkey is building, and immediate United States and Allied utilization of Turkish bases in the event that the United States is engaged in hostilities, a commitment on the part of the United States is required;

(d) If a security arrangement is offered Turkey, it must at the same time be offered to Greece; apart from this important political consideration, Greece can contribute strong defensive forces and bases;

(e) The moral commitments which the United States has already made to Greece and Turkey, both through the United States aid programs and through the United Nations, and the advantages accruing to the United States, would probably dictate that we take the same line of action, with or without prior legal commitment, to support them in the event of attack. If such be the case, the United States should move to get credit with Greece and Turkey now, and to make clear its support of both, as a deterrent to the Soviet Union;

(f) The price which the United States would have to pay for a security commitment to Greece and Turkey would consist of practicable naval and air support plus practicable resupply support, and would not involve commitment of ground forces.

Greek and Turkish accession to the NATO would not have a seriously harmful effect on United States relations with Iran, provided some separate assurance (not a commitment) is given the latter. Egypt should not be invited to associate herself with the NATO at this time, since this might well raise concurrently the question of the association by other southwestern Mediterranean nations and thus delay positive action on the major proposal for a commitment to Greece and Turkey.

5. The Conference examined the outline of the proposed NSC paper on United States policy toward the Arab states and Israel,<sup>2</sup> and gave it general endorsement. The Conference concluded that an essential condition to restoring stability in the Arab states and Israel in cooperation with the West is a clarification and a positive demonstration of United States-United Kingdom responsibilities for the area. This may be achieved through a unilateral United States statement of policy or through regional arrangements. In any such arrangements, it is desirable that the present leading position of the United States in Turkey and Greece be maintained. Any arrangement with the United Kingdom concerning the Arab countries should preserve the United States special interest and position in Saudi Arabia. Questions concerning the apportionment of United States-United Kingdom responsibilities in Iran, and the means of relating Iran defense problems to an eventual regional grouping were left unresolved.

 $<sup>^2\,\</sup>mathrm{NSC}$  47/4 adopted March 14, 1951. For a discussion of this document, see NSC 47/5, p. 95.

6. The importance of Israel in the defense picture of the Middle East is recognized. The Arab states would not countenance the use of Israeli troops in their territories; would not like to see an armament industry being built up in Israel; and would in no circumstances use such arms. However, eventual use of the Israeli small arms production outside the Arab states would be politically practicable. The Arab states either would not object to, or would acquiesce in, a regional defense program, sponsored and supported by the United States and United Kingdom, which included participation of Israel, provided the Arabs were not required to deal directly with Israel.

7. The Conference reviewed existing collective security arrangements in the Middle East. It noted that, although the validity of the Anglo-French-Turkish treaty of mutual assistance of 1939 was reaffirmed to Turkey by both the United Kingdom and France last year, it can have little substantive value unless its secret military annex, which is wholly out-of-date, can be rewritten. The 1937 Saadabad Pact between Turkey, Iraq, Iran and Afghanistan, is of negligible current interest to any of the signatory states. The Arab League, even if strengthened by the recently initialled League collective security pact, offers little if any basis for Arab-Allied military collaboration. While the tripartite declaration of 1950,3 promulgated by the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, has been a useful factor in stabilizing the Near East, it is not deemed to be of importance in the field of military and strategic consideration. With reference to joint Turkish-Greek staff planning talks, both Greece and Turkey believe that such talks can be profitably continued only within the framework of broad NATO planning for the defense of the Mediterranean region.

8. It is apparent that there are better prospects for real progress, both for defense and for essential economic programs, from bilateral or regional arrangements, outside of but not necessarily unconnected with the United Nations, than from arrangements directly under the United Nations.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. III, pp. 828 ff., and ibid., vol. v, pp. 122 ff.

- 9. The relationship of the Middle Eastern states to the United Nations has two aspects, immediate necessities and long-range international cooperation.
- (a) For the first, emphasis is on the defense problem. It was agreed that, although the efficacy of the United Nations in the conduct of hostilities should not be over-rated, there would be a definite advantage to Middle Eastern security in following the precedent of United Nations action with respect to Korea 4 in the event of aggressive action against Turkey, Greece, or Yugoslavia, and probably in the case of Iran. In the event of such aggressive action, the Conference recognized that the United States would have to take the lead and bear the major part of the load.

(b) From the long-range aspect, operations under the United Nations would be helpful in promoting the achievement of economic and social objectives, since over a period of years the United States would probably not wish to assume a major responsibility for the Middle East, in view of our heavy commitments elsewhere.

10. Even in areas under predominant British influence, the demand for increased United States aid is growing.

- 11. The Conference noted that the administrative organization of the three Title II military aid programs, those of Greece, Turkey, and Iran, is of the highest standard, as are the training capacities of the members of the United States military missions in the three countries.
- 12. With respect to our policy towards cash reimbursable and military grant aid, the latter facilitates materially the obtaining of reciprocal benefits, which is not the case with cash reimbursable aid. Moreover, it was noted that the singling out of a given country, such as Saudi Arabia, for cash reimbursable aid rather than military grant aid, because of its relatively sounder fiscal position, would react unfavorably on United States political relations with that country in the event that other countries receive grant aid.

B. Recommendations

1. The Conference, having concluded that the attainment of United States political and military objectives in Turkey and Greece, and consequently in the entire Middle Eastern area, required that the United States enter at the earliest possible moment into reciprocal security arrangements with Turkey and Greece, recommended that the following alternative methods of securing such an arrangement, listed in order of preference, be considered urgently by the Department:

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on United Nations action with respect to the North Korean invasion of the Republic of Korea in June 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. vii, pp. 125 ff.

- (a) Through adherence by Turkey and Greece to NATO,5 either
  - (1) As a separate regional grouping, or

(2) Directly;

(b) Through bilateral arrangements between the United States and Turkey, and the United States and Greece;

(c) Through a multilateral arrangement among the United States,

United Kingdom, Turkey, and Greece;

(d) Through some other plan which, taking into account the complex political, military, and administrative problems involved, would still accomplish the purpose of bilateral security undertakings as between the United States and Greece and Turkey, having always in mind the factor of urgency.

Moreover, if it should be deemed urgently essential to the security of the United States that a military commitment be obtained from Turkey before the normal processes for its accession to the NATO could be accomplished, it was recommended that the Departments of State and Defense consider such steps as might legally be taken to that end.

2. It was further recommended that Greece, for military planning purposes, be considered as belonging to a Western or Mediterranean region rather than to the Middle East; that it continue to receive military aid substantially as at present, with necessary supporting economic aid; and that it be encouraged to seek appropriate arrangements for military cooperation with Yugoslavia and Turkev.

3. Turkey should be considered as having a dual interest in the Mediterranean and the Middle East regions; conversely, plans for both Mediterranean and Middle Eastern defense should take Turkey into consideration; and Turkey's military strength should be increased as an independent operation as a matter of urgency, through the extension of appropriately increased military aid and economic support for the military effort.

4. Joint staff planning with Greece and Turkey should be conducted within the framework of Allied Mediterranean defense planning. Separate Turkish-Middle Eastern defense planning should be encouraged, under the principle of Turkey's dual interest in the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

5. Iran should be considered as an element of the Middle East. It should continue to receive military aid substantially as at present, and necessary economic aid, but a continuing reappraisal of the Iranian situation should be made, with a view to a possible increase in military assistance in the light of changing circumstances. In addition, the possibility of Pakistani support for Iran should be explored. Providing such exploration warrants further action, steps should be taken to endeavor to assure Pakistani support, in the event that Iran is attacked and offers serious resistance, as a possible major contribution to area security.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on the adherence of Greece and Turkey to NATO, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

- 6. The United States should seek an early clarification of the United States-United Kingdom military responsibilities for the Middle East, However, even though performance under such an agreement with the United Kingdom as to responsibilities be achieved through some regional arrangement, the present leading position of the United States in Turkey and Greece should be maintained, and the United States special interests and position in Saudi Arabia should be preserved.
- 7. The United States should issue a unilateral public statement making known its willingness, in coordination with the United Kingdom, to assist the Near Eastern states to strengthen their capabilities to defend themselves against aggression. Such a statement would constitute an important contribution to restoration of confidence in the West; a manifestation of United States confidence in and support of the British military position; and an expression of the continuing interest of the West in the defense of the area.
- 8. After agreement with the United Kingdom as to the appropriate division of military responsibility, there should be developed, in collaboration with the United Kingdom, a system of military staff discussions and a system of military aid programs under which the United States would provide immediately on request small training missions, individual service technicians, and token arms deliveries to the Near Eastern states.
- 9. There should be no attempt at this time, because of foreseeable and obvious difficulties, to organize a Near Eastern-Middle Eastern regional security pact. However, useful orientation could be achieved and useful planning efforts undertaken, in such a manner as to be adaptable to the expected wartime theater organization. Mobilization of resources and coordination of planning should be carried out through the medium of coordinated aid programs and a closely related system of military discussions, on the basis of close United States-United Kingdom collaboration.
- 10. While recognizing the strategic importance of Egypt, the Conference recommended that it be brought into the general scheme of defense planning by other means than through a possible association with the NATO.
- 11. While the Turkish-Iranian mountain barrier cannot be regarded at the present time as a realistic defense line, it should be deemed the ultimate defense objective of the United States in the Middle East, with a view, apart from strategic considerations, to strengthening the morale of the Middle Eastern states.
- 12. In the event of satellite military action against Greece, Turkey, or Iran, the United States should participate as strongly as circumstances permit in a line of collective action under the United Nations.

13. With respect to the division of military assistance between Greece, Turkey, and Iran, the Conference recommended the following:

(a) Owing to limited Greek manpower and Greece's defensive military potential, United States military aid should be predicated on plans for reasonable defense against overwhelming assault, and ultimately on holding and securing Crete as an essential base for Mediterrean-Middle Eastern operations;

(b) Military aid to Turkey should be the most extensive; predicated on assurances that Turkey will not be neutral, such aid should be designed both (1) to strengthen and accelerate the training of existing forces with a view to increasing Turkey's substantial capacity to pose serious opposition to direct attack, and (2) to generate offensive power;

(c) For the present, military aid to Iran should be considered primarily as a cold-war measure and should not be of such volume as to be of material benefit to the enemy if Iran were overrun; but steps should continue to be taken systematically to build up a strong defensive army and to supply equipment as rapidly as it can effectively be absorbed.

14. With respect to United States policy towards cash reimbursable and military grant aid, it was recommended that all assistance should be granted on the basis of United States or Allied interests, and that reciprocal benefits should always be sought; that henceforth arms aid should be extended on the same terms to Israel and the Arab states, including Saudi Arabia, to prevent damaging charges of favoritism; that conversion of the Saudi program to a grant basis would facilitate the obtaining by the United States of long-term air-base rights at Dhahran; that arms to the other Arab states and Israel should also be on a grant basis; and that cash reimbursable assistance should be considered only as a useful supplement to military grant aid.

15. Continuing effort should be exerted to clarify the respective roles of the United States, United Kingdom, France and the United Nations in connection with economic and military assistance, both for short-term and for long-term programs in the area.

16. The United States should promote operations under the United Nations for the achievement of long-range economic and social objectives in the Middle East; however, with respect to programs which would involve large financial commitments on the part of the United States, preference should be given to the concept of bilateral arrangements, in order to reserve to the United States a greater flexibility in the execution of such programs.

17. Means should be sought to encourage the conviction in the countries of the Middle East that United States motivation for cooperation is not limited to seeking security and economic benefits, but that it represents also a fundamental desire to assist in general development.

II

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC REGIONAL TRENDS AND COOPERATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

- 1. Cooperation between Turkey and Greece on the economic side is not extensive, but is adequate to the relatively minor common problems which exist. There is, however, a conscious effort on the part of both countries to achieve political cooperation, although the success of such efforts has been limited by lack of development of mutual security arrangements.
- 2. As between Turkey and Iran, cooperation is more in the economic field, particularly in use by Iran of Turkish transportation facilities, than in the political field.
- 3. The one regional political arrangement which has a bearing on Turkey and Iran, the Saadabad Pact, which also includes Iraq and Afghanistan, is of negligible importance.
- 4. The Arab League has a ten-year history of frustration because of its almost complete concentration on negative political objectives. Only lip service has been paid to constructive economic and social matters, but there is limited hope for progress along those lines. British disparagement of the Arab League probably stems to a considerable degree from the United Kingdom's inability to control what it regards as an organism of its own creation.
- 5. Although there is traditional desire on the part of the Arab peoples for some form of Arab union, the Greater Syria and Fertile Crescent schemes for Arab union are essentially dynastic in character, and encounter opposition both from those opposed to the dynastic system and from rival dynastic regimes. Syrian Prime Minister Qudsi's Arab union proposal differs in the sense that it would apply to all the Arab states and it is not dynastic in motivation, but there seems to be little receptivity to the idea either at present or in prospect. The conclusions regarding Arab Union reached at the 1949 Istanbul conference are still valid, i.e., that, in existing circumstances, Arab Union would pose more problems than it would solve, particularly since we regard short-term stability as essential.
- 6. Except for certain bilateral arrangements arising from special circumstances or interests, the Greece-Turkey-Iran group and the Near Eastern group have not yet evinced interest in inter-regional cooperation with one another. However, Turkey would probably be prepared to play a role of leadership in the Near East if, as preliminary conditions, the Near Eastern states were sufficiently strengthened and Turkey itself were formally associated with the West.

&lt;sup>6</sup> For documentation on the Conference at Istanbul, Turkey, of American Chiefs of Mission in the Near East, November 26–29, 1949, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, pp. 165 ff.

- 7. Such interest as exists with respect to cooperation between the countries of the Middle East and of South Asia arises from the initiative of the Pakistan Government. Pakistan has an interest in creation of a regional arrangement to include Turkey, Iran, the Arab states, and Afghanistan, but is handicapped by her difficulties with India and by the potential if not present jealousy of Egypt. The international Islamic Economic Organization, largely the personal creation of the Pakistani Minister of Finance, has opened a channel for at least limited Middle Eastern-South Asian cooperation in the field of economic and social reform. Pakistan cultivates closer cultural ties with Iran, and at the same time neglects no opportunity to promote pan-Islamic cultural conferences. Pakistan's basic orientation is, however, to the West.
- 8. The initiation of economic and political cooperation has characterized the recent relations of Yugoslavia on the one hand and Greece and Turkey on the other. Thus far this cooperation has been only on a bilateral basis.

B. Recommendations

1. Cooperation between the Middle Eastern states in the military field should be encouraged as a contribution to increased political cooperation, and in this connection the positive results to be achieved from a regional security pact should be stressed as a supporting if not overriding justification for such a pact.

2. In its economic relations with Greece, Turkey and Iran, the United States should deal with these countries separately rather than as a group.

3. The United States should oppose creation of any new United Nations regional economic organization for the Middle East.

4. With full appreciation of the Arab League's inexperience and limitations, further effort should be made to encourage and assist the League to engage in constructive social and economic activities.

5. The United States, while not opposing, should give no encouragement to any Arab union proposals, and should inject a note of caution and concern into any consideration of this question.

6. Turkey should be supported as a more positive base for United States efforts in the Middle East, and should be actively encouraged to become a natural focal point for the Arab states, Israel, and Iran in political, economic and military matters. To this end, Turkey should be consulted by the United States on Middle Eastern matters on much the same basis as such consultation exists between the United States and the United Kingdom. In addition, Turkey and Pakistan should be encouraged to form an axis of cooperation on Middle Eastern matters.

- 7. Although the concept of Pakistan playing a role of any importance in the Middle East is still in the nebulous stage, it presents possibilities from the economic, social, and political viewpoints, as well as from the point of view of regional security, which should be encouraged.
- 8. Although it would be premature to attempt to encourage regional economic and political planning between Yugoslavia and Greece and Turkey, bilateral cooperation should be stimulated. Military cooperation should be stimulated as soon as a decision is reached regarding the division of responsibility and relations between the NAT and a possible Mediterranean security grouping.

III

APPRAISAL OF THE UNITED KINGDOM POWER POSITION IN THE MIDDLE EAST, AND THE ADEQUACY OF ANGLO-AMERICAN COOPERATION

A. Conclusions

- 1. The United Kingdom power position in the Greek-Turkish-Iranian and Near Eastern areas has weakened. It is in the United States' interest that the United Kingdom position be maintained in the Middle East, and strengthened where it serves our interest. This is particularly true with respect to Egypt.
- 2. Cooperation in the political and economic fields between the United Kingdom and the United States in the Middle East has been satisfactory, with the single exception of questions relating to the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company (see below, section X).

B. Recommendations

- 1. The United States should endeavor to bolster the United Kingdom position in the Middle East where this can most effectively serve the United States' interest (see above, section I, concerning support for the British military position in the Middle East).
- 2. The Conference should go on record as expressing appreciation for the generally fine cooperation from the United Kingdom during the past year in the political and economic field (with the exception of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company problem, see below, section X).

IV

APPRAISAL OF COMMUNIST STRENGTH AND INFLUENCE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

- 1. For the short term, Soviet and communist influence are kept under fairly effective control through police action in the various states of the Middle East.
- 2. American aid to Greece and Turkey has been effective in enabling those countries to combat communist influence. However, the delay in extending aid to Iran has been made the basis of effective communist propaganda in that country. In addition, the policy of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company has been a handicap in the control of communism in Iran (see below, section X).

3. The basic defects of the economic and social structure in the Arab States which are responsible for the comparatively large communist potential in that area are either not recognized or are neglected by the Governments of the Arab states.

B. Recommendations

- 1. It was recommended that the Middle Eastern Governments be encouraged to maintain and strengthen their police controls against communism.
- 2. It was further recommended that, in formulating programs of economic and technical assistance to the countries of the area pursuant to other recommendations of the Conference, full consideration should be given to the need for the correction of economic and social defects as an indispensable element in efforts to control the spread of communism.

APPRAISAL OF RIGHTIST AND ULTRA-NATIONALIST STRENGTH AND INFLUENCE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

1. It was agreed that all political regimes in the Middle East, with the exception of Israel, are reactionary or rightist in comparison with our own. Note was taken of the . . . influence of Islam and of the various vested interests in the area.

2. In the area comprising Greece, Turkey, and Iran, a political trend from the right to the center is apparent, and this is due in large measure to the more extensive influence and association of the United States with these countries. There is a reformist trend in Iran, exemplified by the land distribution and other reform policies followed of the Shah and the present Government.

3. The Conference found little real evidence of liberal trends in the Arab states, although the growing power of the parliament over the executive in Syria was recognized. However, the force of public opinion in these states, exemplified by the growing influence of Palestinians in Jordan, is becoming increasingly a factor which the Governments of the area have to take into account. In general, genuine trends towards liberalization in the Arab world are less evident in the dynastic states than in the republics.

B. Recommendations

1. It was recommended that United States representatives in the Middle East, using all agencies at their disposal, give appropriate encouragement to liberal and moderate elements with a view to broadening the base of consent of the governed and producing desired reforms, suited to the culture of the particular country, which will contribute to well being and stability in the long run. From a short term standpoint, however, it is not desirable that the present degree of stability existing in the Middle East be undermined by too rapid change.

VI

REVIEW AND EVALUATION OF UNITED NATIONS ACTION DURING 1950 WITH RESPECT TO THE PALESTINE PROBLEM

A. Conclusions

Palestine Conciliation Commission

- 1. Lack of appreciable progress toward solution of the Palestine refugee problem continues to prejudice chances of improvement in relations between the Arab states and Israel. Essential to such progress are (a) clarification of the present position of the Government of Israel in relation to the question of repatriation, and (b) a clear understanding of Israel's conception of, and proposals for dealing with, compensation as an alternative to repatriation.
- 2. Some hope for possible progress in 1951 may be found in the fact that, during 1950, the Arabs moved away from their earlier insistence on implementation of the General Assembly partition plan, which they have repeatedly claimed under the Lausanne protocol of May 12, 1949 s as the basis for solution of the Palestine problem. Although the Arabs have not abandoned the principle of repatriation, and may be expected to continue to reaffirm it, they show signs of becoming more realistic as to the obstacles to any satisfactory implementation of this principle, and are giving serious thought to the alternative of compensation and to the concept of reintegration.
- 3. During 1950 the Government of Israel also relaxed its position somewhat as regards the question of compensation, and has given assurance of cooperation with the Palestine Conciliation Commission and its compensation committee and with the new office established under the 1950 General Assembly resolution. The Government of Israel has also shown some disposition to give further consideration to the question of blocked accounts. Some progress had already been made during 1950 on this latter question, but it is still the subject of Palestine Conciliation Commission discussions with the Government of Israel. These discussions are seeking to persuade the Israelis to recognize that these accounts offer them an opportunity to give evidence of good will, and so contribute to improvement of the general atmosphere in their own interest and to the immediate benefit of refugees concerned, by settling a recognized obligation with little actual sacrifice on their part.

 $<sup>^{7}</sup>$  For further documentation on the Palestine Conciliation Commission, see pp. 559 ff.

&lt;sup>8</sup> For documentation on the Lausanne protocol, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, pp. 996 ff.

4. Arab-Israeli negotiations, either directly or through the Palestine Conciliation Commission, for settlement of other outstanding questions cannot be expected before there has been some evident progress toward solution of the refugee problem, with reasonable assurance of continuance of effective efforts toward its final settlement.

United Nations Relief & Works Agency for Palestine Refugees 9

5. The hard core of approximately 800,000 refugees, on relief and in temporary shelter, constitutes a serious threat to stability, and an important impediment to peace between the Arab states and Israel. On a minimum basis, these refugees cost the international community

$25 million a year for relief.

6. Reintegration of 800,000 refugees is a major economic enterprise of the order of several hundred million dollars of economic investment over a period of perhaps five years. The Agency can spearhead the task through direct reintegration, especially in rural areas, financed by international funds. Many refugees of urban background and special skills should be picked up in a program of general economic development financed through other funds.

7. The United Nations has endorsed a program of reintegration, and the Arab states, notably Syria, finally have agreed to cooperate. However, the capacity of the Near Eastern countries to contribute to such a program is limited, and they desire some indication of adequate and sustained financial assistance.

8. Reintegration should be approached as an economic undertaking and service to the refugees, and political issues should be kept to a minimum. There is great need to prepare the minds of 600,000 refugees to move from present locations near Palestine to new countries, new climates and new economies, and to encourage their acceptance by the public of the countries to which they must move.

B. Recommendations

Palestine Conciliation Commission

1. The Commission should direct its efforts through its new office and its compensation committee toward clarification of the attitude of the Government of Israel as regards repatriation, and toward determination of a reasonable compensation total and a proposal of the basis and procedure for compensation payments. The Commission should make every effort to get Israel to make maximum concessions in both of these respects. These efforts should be expedited to provide essential information for early Commission consideration and eventual discussions with the Governments of Israel and the Arab states, and communication to the refugees at an opportune time with a view to encouraging their recognition of the desirability of settling in the Arab states. It is important to maintain as a basic principle for compensation individual property rights and individual property losses, even though compensation may finally be set up in the form of lump-sum payments under some trusteeship control.

&lt;sup>o</sup> For further documentation on the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees, see pp. 559 ff.

- 2. Simultaneously the Commission should pursue discussions with the Government of Israel with the objective of effecting complete settlement of blocked accounts without further delay.
- 3. It should continue to seek a basis for negotiations to settle other outstanding questions, and to encourage such negotiations between Israel and the Arab states.
- 4. The United States in support of the Commission should point out to Israel that it has the territory, and the Arabs have the refugees, and that concessions have to be made by Israel. Israel needs peace more than the Arabs do, since it is now completely dependent upon air and sea communications which can be completely severed in time of war. Consequently, Israel must in some way, through unilateral, partial, or overall negotiations, make substantial concessions in the fields of territorial adjustments or refugee repatriation.
- 5. United States diplomatic representatives at their discretion should take advantage of appropriate occasions to encourage the parties to enter into direct talks looking towards negotiation of final peace.

United Nations Relief & Works Agency for Palestine Refugees

- 6. The Relief and Works Agency channel of the United Nations should continue to be utilized for direct reintegration of the refugees, with closely coordinated supporting effort by the Palestine Conciliation Commission.
- 7. On the basis of the new evidence of cooperation on the part of the Arab states, increased efforts should be made to finance the refugee program contemplated in the United Nations resolution, as a minimum approach to the speedy liquidation of the problem.
- 8. The multilateral grant aid program for refugee reintegration should be supplemented by and coordinated with economic development projects financed by local Government funds, loans, the proposed new program of United States grant aid and any other outside aid available.
- 9. The Relief and Works Agency should, both in administration of relief and integration programs, rely to the maximum extent possible on the local governments.

VII

REAPPRAISAL OF THE TRIPARTITE DECLARATION ON NEAR EASTERN ARMS AND SECURITY

A. Conclusions

1. The tripartite declaration has proved a useful stabilizing factor in the Near East. The declaration was handicapped initially by the inference given through the mechanics of its issuance that the three powers were creating new areas of influence. However, it has acquired more prestige with time, particularly as a result of United States and United Nations collective action in Korea.

2. The declaration is handicapped, although it may in other ways be helped, by inclusion of the French.

3. The Near Eastern states have shown a tendency to raise the question of application of the declaration in connection with minor and irrelevant matters, most of which fall within the competence of the Mixed Armistice Commissions.10

4. The proposed new program for United States-United Kingdom military cooperation with the Arab states and Israel, and for United States arms supply thereto, could be presented as flowing logically from the purposes of the declaration, and could assure the latter's implementation.

B. Recommendations

1. Without raising the declaration in any new light, United States representatives should on appropriate occasions reaffirm continued United States support for the declaration and our determination to take effective action within and without the United Nations in event of violation of the declaration, pointing out in this connection prompt United States and United Nations action in Korea.

2. References to French participation in the declaration should be minimized, and accusations of creation of spheres of influence should be countered by statement of the facts.

3. Although each reported infringement should be considered most seriously, application of the declaration to minor and irrelevant issues should be refused. All infringements under the competence of the Mixed Armistice Commissions should be promptly referred to those bodies, not investigated independently.

4. In the event of reported or impending infringement, the United States should, in consultation with the United Kingdom and France, investigate the case immediately and, in the event it appears substantiated by the facts, take immediate action in the United Nations along the lines of that with respect to Korea and whatever other unilateral or joint action the situation calls for.

&lt;sup>10</sup> For documentation on the Mixed Armistice Commissions, see pp. 559 ff.

VIII

ROLE OF THE UNITED STATES IN ENCOURAGING POLITICAL AND SOCIAL PROGRESS, AND MEANS OF EXTENDING OUR CONTACTS TO THE POPULA-TION AT LARGE

A. Conclusions

- 1. The United States has a high responsibility and a delicate political role to perform in those countries to which it is giving extensive economic aid. We are required to develop techniques of more or less open intervention which will insure not only that our own aid is used wisely and effectively, but that the general economic policies of the recipient governments are sound and public spirited and, if necessary, that political and governmental reforms are undertaken which will make it possible to carry out these policies.
  - 2. The Conference noted great dangers in such intervention:

(a) Our programs may offend national pride;

- (b) There are frequent attempts at wholesale transfer of American practices and institutions which may be inappropriate to the local situation;
- (c) There is the danger of trying to change ancient habits overnight; the danger of building up a living standard which cannot be maintained in the long run on the basis of local resources; the danger of carrying reforms to their logical extremes before the intermediate steps have been assimilated; the danger of assuming such wide responsibility that the local authorities and population lose initiative and relax into total dependence;
- (d) United States intervention is certain to arouse resentment because it attacks vested interests and infringes the authority of the recipient government.

- 3. In administering our aid programs, we must follow a middle course: we should not insist on perfectionism; we should not try to impose our will; we can only advise and influence in the direction of achievements of permanent value, if we are to build the capacity of the people to do things in a democratic way. In addition, our approach depends not only on adopting the proper attitude, but on careful choice of personnel, and on ingenious and patient adaptation.
- 4. To the maximum extent possible, we have to support influences corresponding to our own, since our moral force is our greatest asset. We cannot be opportunistic. By our moral force we must attempt to persuade or dissuade. Where it is possible in our aid programs to adopt the servicio principle, with Americans working side by side with the nationals of the recipient country, there is an opportunity to infuse our spirit into the people.
- 5. The "grass roots" program set forth by the Department is a positive and constructive approach to meeting one of the greatest needs of the area, namely, broadening the base of contact between the United States and the people of the Middle East. This need is intensified by the success of Communist tactics within the several countries.

- 6. The program's success will depend in large measure upon the existence of substantive aid which demonstrates in concrete form the interest of the United States in the welfare of the people. Thus in Greece and Turkey, and to a lesser extent in Iran, the existence of economic and military aid adds great weight to the approach; Point Four and other aid to the Near East will provide some such tangible evidence.
- 7. The success of the program also depends in large measure upon the leadership of the Chiefs of Mission, and upon the effectiveness of efforts to orientate Mission officers in the objectives, purposes and methods of the approach. Wives of officials can be of great value in pursuing the objectives of the program and should be made an important part of the effort.
- 8. Private American citizens, including Americans of foreign extraction returning to their home lands, can if properly oriented have an important impact upon the development of opinions favorable to the United States. In some countries it would be advantageous to create informal committees comprised of influential Americans to guide this aspect of the program.

9. Knowledge among the local peoples and Governments of conscious efforts on our part to organize sources of American influence would have an adverse effect upon the program.

10. Private American institutions, American schools and American-country societies, represent some of our most effective tools for influencing public opinion in the Middle East.

11. Naval visits, particularly to Greece and Turkey, have been of great "grass roots" value, and could be put to even greater use.

- 12. The oil companies in the Middle East can, by following increasingly progressive labor policies and more effective public relations programs, exercise a more constructive influence upon the peoples of the several countries and assist in their orientation toward the West.
- 13. Special national sensitivities make it necessary to develop "grass roots" programs in light of the situation prevailing in each country, since methods which might be effective in one country might not work in another.

B. Recommendations

1. In endeavoring to encourage political and social progress in the Middle East, we should pursue the middle road of persuasion, mutual cooperation, and development of indigenous leadership. The technique of intervention employed should be directed to two ends:

(a) To limiting United States intervention to the most vital issues and resisting the temptation to become involved in subsidiary issues wherein reform would be desirable but is not immediately essential;

(b) To development of indigenous political leadership.

- 2. In selection of Chiefs of Mission and key personnel, particular emphasis should be given to individuals capable of leading the peoples of Greece, Turkey, Iran and the Near East, without appearing to impose their will. The timing factor is of great importance in determining how and when we should use our influence.
- 3. With respect to the problem of extending our contacts to the population at large, it was recommended that the Department and Foreign Service pursue the various elements of the "grass roots" approach along the lines outlined in the Department's memorandum.<sup>11</sup>
- 4. The United States should provide, to the extent possible, substantive aid to the countries of the area to demonstrate in concrete form the interest of the United States in the welfare of the people, and thereby to give substance to the "grass roots" approach.
- 5. Each Chief of Mission should consider that one of his most important responsibilities is to provide leadership for the "grass roots" program in the country to which he is accredited.
- 6. Private American citizens should be used to the maximum extent possible, including Americans of foreign extraction returning to their home lands; moreover, in countries where it would be appropriate to do so, the Mission should bring about creation of informal committees comprised of influential Americans to guide this aspect of the program.
- 7. The United States should render all possible assistance to private American institutions in the Middle East, as one of the most effective tools for influencing public opinion, and should encourage the creation of or support for American schools and American-country societies.
- 8. Naval visits, where and when appropriate, should be encouraged for their "grass roots" value, and even more effective use made of them.
- 9. Every effort should be made to encourage oil companies in the Middle East to follow increasingly progressive labor policies, and in their own self interest to be more active in the field of public relations.
- 10. In developing programs for individual countries, careful attention should be given to special national sensitivities and attitudes.
- 11. Every effort should be made to expedite the assignment of adequate USIE personnel to the Middle East.

&quot; Not further identified.

IX

APPRAISAL OF ECONOMIC POLICIES AND PROGRAMS FOR THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

1. Present economic policies are in general successful in Greece and Turkey, but it is now desirable that increased emphasis be given to support of the military effort and to short-term economic goals and economic self-sufficiency rather than long-term projects.

2. In Iran, the approach to economic assistance through loans has not been successful, either through the International Bank or the Export-Import Bank. A real need for economic assistance still exists.

- 3. In the Near East, the government budgets and foreign exchange needs are in general balanced, and private capital is accumulating. Grant economic assistance is needed, however, in varying degrees in all of the Arab countries, if the internal economic level is to be raised, because of (a) extraordinary expenditures for military requirements; (b) genuine capital needs in both the government and private sectors; (c) the present failure of capital to direct itself into enterprises for public benefit; (d) and the need for acceleration through United States technical assistance and administration of development projects, which can only be insured through United States grant assistance. There can, moreover, in many countries result a more general benefit to the economy through United States influence in governmental budget and financial policy, etcetera, as a result of the influence gained through this assistance.
- 4. The question of grants-versus-loans hinges not only on ability of the individual country to repay, but on urgency of need, psychological background, and the possibility of the country meeting banking requirements, both in presentation and administration. Loans are available in larger quantities; they serve to make demands more realistic; and they assure more careful use. However, some Arab states and Iran have difficulty in meeting banking requirements, and delays occur which result in disillusionment. Loans give less leverage to assure general objectives with the country concerned and do not generate counterpart to achieve specific objectives.
- 5. Loan assistance should in general be given first priority where the project and country qualify and the time factor is not important. Loans should in many cases fit well into a background of grants, which can get under way quickly and can provide more favorable bases for the loans. Any tendency to resist loans so as to obtain grants should be opposed.
- 6. Reactions by and between states as to what they may consider inequitable distribution of grants can be minimized by a regional approach which conceals country allocations. Allocations might then be on a project basis that minimizes the dollar component and maximizes technical assistance components to countries best able to pay or borrow.

B. Recommendations

- 1. In Greece, economic aid should continue substantially as at present, and should not be reduced below a level which could, through inflation, result in the loss of economic stability which has been achieved to date under the aid program, or hazard the attainment of hard-core economic goals. It is expected that the need for such aid will continue at least through 1954.
- 2. Economic aid to Turkey should be continued within the general framework of present policies, with emphasis on support of the military effort, on short-term as against long-term economic goals, and on countering inflationary forces.
- 3. A program of giant aid for economic development should be undertaken in the Near East and Iran as an essential supplement to loan assistance and local governmental funds.
- 4. Loan assistance in general should be given first priority where the project and country qualify and the time factor is not important. Loans should in many cases follow grants, which can get under way quickly and can provide more favorable bases for loans. Any tendency on the part of the governments of the Middle East to resist legitimate loan opportunities for grants should be opposed.
- 5. An integrated assistance program, whether loan, grant, or technical aid, should be worked out for each country, taking into account its special circumstances. Coordination among all agencies given assistance, whether governmental, international or private, is essential.
- 6. In extending grant aid, even though modest in volume, emphasis should be placed on technical assistance as the best form of economic stimulation for underdeveloped areas.
- 7. The procedures of the Export-Import Bank and the International Bank should be simplified in the interest of effectiveness and speed, and adapted to the particular problems of the underdeveloped countries.
- 8. Procedures relating to the extension of grant aid, particularly technical assistance under the Point Four program, should be simplified to permit implementation on a rapid, emergency basis as required.

X

APPRAISAL OF POLICIES OF FOREIGN OIL COMPANIES IN THE MIDDLE EAST, IN RELATION TO UNITED STATES POLICIES AND INTERESTS

A. Conclusions

1. The Conference reviewed the operation of foreign oil companies in the Middle East in the light of the fact that oil is the most important single factor in United States relations with the area. Economic and political stability in the area is dependent upon realistic policies with respect to oil, and stability is being threatened by the failure of certain oil companies, in particular by the British companies, to act in conformity with and in support of the joint United States-

United Kingdom policy in the Middle East.

2. The low royalty pattern followed in the past by the Iraq Petroleum Company and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, the failure in the past of the former company to develop adequate production rates, and the continuation by both companies of colonial methods in dealing with local governments have led to increasing hatred of foreign oil operations. While on the one hand the British Government has agreed with the United States on the necessity for stability of the area, on the other hand, agencies of the British Government have not in fact been able to assure that British oil companies are acting in conformity with that policy.

3. The recent agreement between the Arabian-American Oil Company and the Saudi Arab Government represents a significant step forward in the development of a proper relationship between oil companies and local governments, although it is recognized that increased royalties may in fact come in part, though indirectly, from the United States Treasury. The company has considerably improved its employee welfare program, including education and training. While much is yet to be done before an ideal situation has been created, the company is headed in the right direction.

4. The policies of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company in Iran are regarded as highly unsatisfactory, and are responsible to a great degree for the present economic problems and lowered Western prestige in that country, and throughout the entire Middle East. The British Foreign Office has had scant influence upon the company, although the British Government is the majority shareholder. While there has been some indication that the company has finally recognized that it cannot force through the Iranian parliament the supplementary oil agreement without further concessions, and has agreed to advance some 35 million pounds to help meet the immediate financial crisis with which the Iranian Government is confronted, the Conference was not optimistic as to the likelihood that there had been any fundamental change in company policy, nor that there would be so long as it is under its present management. Under present circumstances the company is one of the greatest political liabilities affecting United States-United Kingdom interests in the Middle Eastern area, since it reflects the dominant control of the Iraq Petroleum Company by the minority British interests represented by the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

5. In Iraq the situation is also regarded as highly unsatisfactory. Royalties paid by the Iraq Petroleum Company in the past have been so low that the Iraqi Government has never received more than $10 million per annum for its tremendous oil resources, which could produce quantities comparable to the present Iranian and Saudi Arabian output. The country resents the fact that it has oil and is getting little for it.

B. Recommendations

1. In view of the Conference findings that certain oil companies, in particular British companies, have in the past threatened stability in the Middle East through reactionary and out-moded policies with respect to the countries concerned, vigorous representations should be made to the Foreign Office to the end that henceforth British companies be brought to conform to the existing joint United States-United Kingdom policies designed to promote stability in the Middle East.

XI

APPRAISAL OF EFFECTIVENESS OF INTELLIGENCE OPERATIONS AND COVERAGE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

- 1. Admiral Carney outlined a series of military intelligence requirements which are not being adequately met at the present time, namely:
- (a) Reporting on ship cargoes entering and leaving Iron Curtain countries;
- (b) More complete and prompt coverage of all merchant shipping in the Middle East, which is essential to the initiation of effective shipping control measures;

(c) More voluminous and accurate target and logistical data;

(d) Maps and air photograph coverage;

(e) . . . ;

- (f) Extension and modernization of dossiers on important personages;
  - (g) Speeding up of intelligence reporting and dissemination.
- 2. Proper coordination of intelligence operations in Washington and the field is essential to avoid overlapping or conflict of directives and operations. The Conferences assumed that the Central Intelligence Agency under its present leadership will now be able to provide coordination in Washington, and noted that individual Chiefs of Mission clearly have the responsibility for field coordination. While effective field coordination depends largely on personal relationships, most delegates to the Conference seem to favor a general supervision (a) to keep informed on important intelligence activities, (b) to resolve problems, and (c) to prevent difficulties which could militate against United States interests.

3. . . .

4. The effectiveness of intelligence-collection activities of service attachés has been affected adversely because of too frequent rotation, apparent absence of any consistent policy of regional specialization, and their heavy burden of administrative duties.

B. Recommendations

1. It was recommended that the adequacy of present United States-United Kingdom intelligence cooperation in the various countries of the Middle East be explored by each Chief of Mission, with a view to formulation of further recommendations on this subject.

2. The Department should, through Central Intelligence Agency and the other intelligence agencies, seek better coordination in Washington of intelligence objectives and directives, and keep all Chiefs of Mission currently informed as to such objectives, directives and indications for his area.

3. The Chief of Mission, either personally or through his deputy or representative, should discharge fully his coordinating responsibilities, and should keep generally informed of all intelligence activities in his area.

4. Central Intelligence Agency should instruct its representatives to cooperate more fully with the Chief of Mission in order that he may advise them fully with respect to their plans and activities; and to be guided by the advice received.

5. Central Intelligence Agency should coordinate its activities in a given country by designation of an existing representative as coordinator, not by introduction of new coordinating personnel not engaged in substantive work.

6. Administrative demands on service attachés should be simplified, and country or area specialization should be encouraged.

7. . . .

8. The Department should find means of apprising the field of the use made of reports from the field, with frank notations where necessary as to the adequacy of such reports.

$\mathbf{x}\mathbf{n}$

APPRAISAL OF USIE OPERATIONS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

1. USIE operations in the Middle East are in general adequately staffed, provided the present tables of organization are filled.

2. USIE programs generally support the objectives of US foreign policy in the conference area, although their degree of success varies from country to country. Iran presents a special problem in this regard, because of the attitude of the population, the difficulties created by the Iranian Government, and the virtual propaganda monopoly of the Soviets in northern Iran. The lack of success of the USIE program in Egypt is largely due to inadequate staffing.

- 3. The effectiveness of media varies from country to country. In general, mobile units are one of the most effective media, in countries where the rate of illiteracy is relatively high, and in rural areas generally. Printed matter is a less effective medium, save in countries of relatively high literacy or with important concentrations of literate elements, such as Greece, Lebanon, and Pakistan. The exchange of persons programs are of high importance. In the Near East, the Voice of America has not yet achieved satisfactory effectiveness because of inexperience, irrelevant or ill-chosen programs, "high pressure" tactics, and lack of medium-wave broadcasting facilities.
- 4. In most cases, USIE has been effectively integrated into our missions. However, in countries which have ECA programs, difficulties are noted in achieving successful correlation between USIE programs and the public information programs of ECA.
- 5. It would be a grave error to remove the public information program from the policy control of the State Department, because of the necessity for integrating the program with our foreign policy objectives.
- 6. It was suggested that the possibility be explored of collecting local cultural patterns and activities, to send back to the United States, as an experiment in the sharing of technical cooperation and a means of expressing our interest in the area. However, the difficulty of organizing such a program on a reciprocal basis was recognized.

B. Recommendations

- 1. USIE should refrain from too rapid expansion and should avoid direct pressure or salesmanship tactics. The USIE staffing pattern should be examined critically, with a view to avoiding its over-expansion or placing undue emphasis upon its operations in the minds of the Middle Eastern Governments and people.
- 2. In ECA countries, the Chief of Mission (or his Public Affairs Officer) should be given a specific directive authorizing him to coordinate all public information activities in the country of his responsibility, in order effectively to integrate USIE and ECA public relations programs.
- 3. In the light of the present international situation, the possibility should be explored of preparing in Washington a USIE fortnightly newsreel for dissemination abroad through mobile units and, if possible, dissemination to commercial movie houses.
- 4. The possibility of producing periodical news bulletins on a regional basis should be explored, since publication of news bulletins by small diplomatic missions is too complex an operation.

5. We should explore the possibility of making greater use of posters, which have been found to be highly effective in areas where there is a high rate of illiteracy.

6. The Voice of America should endeavor to obtain more time on local stations.

7. We should attempt to facilitate the supply of newsprint to the Middle East where direct public relations advantages can be obtained.

8. It was strongly recommended that the public information program remain under the policy control of the Department, in the interests of its effective integration with United States foreign policy objectives.

9. The possibility of initiating collection of local cultural patterns and activities should be explored, with a view to creating a greater measure of reciprocity in this regard.

XIII

ADMINISTRATIVE PROBLEMS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A. Conclusions

- 1. Adequate housing for missions and mission personnel is indispensable for efficient operations. Although the Division of Foreign Building Operations has made some progress in the conference area during the past year, the Conference noted that much remains to be done, particularly in decentralization of authority and improvement of the organization of FBO, and expressed the hope that, by speeding up action, FBO will be able to prevent the newly created shortages of building materials from delaying its building program in the NEA area.
- 2. The frequency of transfer of officer and clerical personnel works to the disadvantage of continuity in the operations of our missions. Although there has been a slight improvement in the calibre of Foreign Service and other personnel supplied by the Department, more than half of the missions in the conference area are not only under strength on their tables of organization but, more important, in personnel on the spot. It was noted that leading sources of personnel problems in order of importance are health; homesickness; pay and allowances; lack of adaptability; lack of outside interests; poor housing; inadequate qualifications; family troubles; and mental misfits.
- 3. Reporting officers who might be spending their time on intelligence and political work connected with the stepped-up urgency of the cold war are burdened with the requirement of submitting unnecessary economic and commercial reports. The complex of administrative and budget reports required by the Department is also a heavy burden.

B. Recommendations

- 1. FBO should pursue its program in the NEA area with all possible speed.
- 2. The Department should avoid too frequent transfers and, as far as key officers are concerned, should consider lengthening tours of duty to approximately three years even in posts previously considered hardship posts.
- 3. Until the Department is able to fill all the positions on a post's table of organization, demands on the mission should be reduced in a realistic manner, to the end that some aspects of the work can be jettisoned and the remainder be redistributed.
- 4. The Department should work out with the Department of Commerce and other interested agencies a streamlined schedule of required reports; by the same token the needs of the intelligence agencies in Washington should be made more fully comprehensible to the missions in order that voluntary reporting will be along the most useful lines. Chiefs of Mission should be encouraged to recommend deletions from the schedule of required reports.12

780.5/2-1751: Telegram

The Consul General at Istanbul (Lewis) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

ISTANBUL, February 17, 1951-6 p. m.

- 287. From McGhee 1 for Berry NEA. Timely arrival Department's 386 February 16 2 permitted conference consider latest draft with following results.
- 1. Underline general comments: Conference concurs paragraphs A, B and C part one reference Deptel. Necessity rationalize respective roles US-UK in NE seen most important. Re paragraph D agree states must be strengthened individually but action taken in each will have repercussions other states and consequently efforts must be coordinated. Only Saudi Arabia entitled preferred US treatment.

<sup>1</sup> McGhee was at Istanbul for the Conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission, February 14-21; for documentation, see pp. 49 ff.

&lt;sup>12</sup> A memorandum of conversation by Acting Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs Wells Stabler, dated March 5, not printed (120.4382/3-551), indicates that a "Summary of Conclusions for the Confidential Guidance of Chiefs of Mission in Oral Presentation to Governments" regarding the results of the Istanbul Conference had been prepared either by the Department of State or by the Chiefs of Mission before their departure from the Istanbul Conference. No record of this "Summary" has been found in Department of State files.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not found in Department of State files; presumably it transmitted a further draft of the proposed NSC paper on U.S. policy toward the Arab states and Israel. However, it will be noted that McGhee was herein discussing various points which had been raised in the original undated draft outline submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff on February 6, printed p. 24.

2. Re paragraph E we agree increased dollar program Arab States and Israel desirable but early shipment more important consideration. Conference unanimous arms aid must be extended on same term to Israel and all Arab States including Saudi Arabia to prevent damaging charges favoritism et cetera. DAF negotiation has shown limited appeal cash reimbursable aid and SAG appears likely hold out for real quid for very important Dhahran quo. Consequently conference believes Saudi program should be converted grant basis and arms other Arab States and Israel likewise grant. Cash reimbursable facilities would be useful supplement only.

3. Conference felt deletion paragraph 10 conclusions re US making clear its intention jeopardizes program since anxiety NE peoples for reassurance has been reiterated time and again at conference. Conference submits below redraft this paragraph with strong recommendation that it be incorporated NSC document.

4. Underline recommended text changes.

Paragraph 6 delete "US has recently decided make available dollars". Substitute: "US joint chiefs have submitted program involving".

- 5. Delete paragraph 13. Substitute "the appropriate authorities of the US should develop the necessary arms supply programs for Arab States and Israel and should seek enactment of legislation providing grant military assistance for Arab States (including Saudi Arabia) and Israel during fiscal year 1952 in order that under the legislation immediate military assistance to ground forces of Arab States and Israel may be provided on grant basis".
- 6. Delete paragraph 14. Substitute "program of military assistance assumes and relies upon parallel and coordinated programs of technical and economic assistance of such scope and acceleration as will convince peoples of Arab States and Israel that they will benefit as individuals through survival of their states as result of victory of the west."
  - 7. Add following as new final paragraph.
- "As an integral part of the foregoing program, the US should make it clear in manner best calculated to produce maximum effect upon peoples of area, some of whom do not feel represented by their governments that because of vital US security interests the US, consistent with its UN obligations and its other commitments, is prepared in coordination with the UK to assist Arab States and Israeli strengthening their capabilities to defend areas as whole against aggression".
- 8. All mission chiefs recommend strongly foregoing program as essential meet deteriorating situation. Mission chiefs believe Arab-Israel differences no bar program if conducted on balanced basis but without associating two parties.

- 9. Admiral Carney concurs generally and is sending military comments to Defense.
- 10. Above reply reference Deptel and only part recommendations conference will formulate.

Lewis

611.86/2-1951

Memorandum by the Director, International Security Affairs (Cabot), to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] February 19, 1951.

Subject: Proposed NSC Paper on U.S. Policy toward the Arab States and Israel

We transmit without concurrence attached paper. If the purpose were merely to suggest reimbursable aid we would approve. Further legislation and the reference thereto (Paragraph 6a) then would be unnecessary. We believe such aid should be given when arms become available beyond the needs of other allies deserving priority. But, if the purpose is to justify grant aid, we feel that a legislative request for such a doubtful area requires further study in view of the jeopardy to our aid program as a whole from including such a doubtful area.

We feel that if we extend grant aid to areas not presently threatened there is danger of becoming extended beyond our resources.

While the paper does not state with any preciseness the exact purposes that would be achieved by supplying military assistance to the Arab States or Israel, presumably this would be done to accomplish one or more of the following objectives:

- 1. To provide weapons which these nations need and presently do not have in order to preserve their internal security, i.e., to deal with dissident or potentially dissident elements.
- 2. To provide weapons for existing or projected forces of these nations on the theory that such forces, if so equipped, would in fact contribute substantially in a defense against Soviet military aggression, either on their own or in conjunction with Allied forces committed to the area.
- 3. To provide weapons with which military or paramilitary forces located in these nations could, in the event of Soviet conquest of the area, harass supply lines, conduct guerrilla warfare and otherwise prevent consolidation of the Soviet position.

4. To "buy" strategic bases, rights of access, etc., by providing something which these nations uniformly appear to want, i.e., weapons.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not found. The document under reference was a later version of the paper prepared in the Department of State, February 10 (see p. 44), and submitted, after further revision, to the NSC on February 28 (see p. 88).

5. To foster the Western orientation of these countries, and, conversely, to prevent their drift toward neutralism or toward the Soviet orbit by indicating through the provision of arms that the United States (and the United Kingdom) has a friendly feeling toward them and is prepared to come to their support in the event of Soviet military aggression.

The mere statement of these possible objectives raise a series of questions which should be answered before a decision is reached to supply arms. Among these questions are the following:

1. Which of these objectives are the objectives sought?

2. In what ways could an arms program in fact contribute to the attainment of these objectives?

3. What is the proper size and character of the arms program to attain such objectives?

4. Is token assistance enough?

5. Would cash reimbursable aid succeed in its purpose?

6. Would the program be based on a plan for the area as a whole, or handled as a matter of individual political expediency or individual requirements?

7. When can the types and quantities of arms which would be required be made available?

8. What will be the impact of furnishing these weapons on other MDAP programs?

9. Is the program, if it is adopted, to be a continuing program, and, if so, what are likely to be its eventual dimensions?

10. Would the effort to secure authority to provide grant aid to this area have adverse Congressional or public effects in terms of securing the passage of the FY 1952 foreign aid bill and, if so, should they nonetheless be risked?

11. What adverse effects might flow from the furnishing of arms to this area under the circumstances contemplated in the paper? What effect would it have on the negotiations for the Dhahran airbase? Would it increase the likelihood, either immediately or in the event of increased international tension, of a resumption of Arab-Israeli hostilities?

12. How soon would it be possible to make any deliveries to these countries and would the delay preceding the first deliveries, or the delay following such first deliveries and preceding further deliveries, have adverse repercussions which would outweigh any advantages?

Since earlier discussions of this matter with Mr. McGhee and others our ISAC Committee has been organized and we believe this matter might well be placed on its agenda. We would welcome your thoughts as to this.

ISAC Files: Lot 53 D 443: ISAC D-6

Paper Prepared in the International Security Affairs Committee, Department of State 1

[Extract]

TOP SECRET ISAC D-6

[Washington,] February 20, 1951.

STATEMENT OF CONSIDERATIONS INVOLVED IN A DISCUSSION CONCERNING THE FEASIBILITY OF: (A) INCREASING TURKISH MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT; (B) EXPEDITING DELIVERY OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO GREECE, TURKEY AND YUGOSLAVIA DURING CALENDAR YEAR 1951; (C) FORMULATING MILITARY ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR ISRAEL AND THE ARAB STATES

C. ISRAEL AND THE ARAB STATES, INCLUDING EGYPT AND LIBYA (Supporting Data-Tab C)<sup>2</sup>

Background:

The Department of State has recommended that more affirmative U.S. action is required to safeguard our vital security interests in the Middle East. In the Department's view the need for such action is made urgent by the political deterioration which has taken place in the area. In order to clarify some of the issues involved, the views of the Department of Defense have been requested on the following proposals:

"1. That the United States make it clear to all of the countries of the Middle East that the United States in coordination with the United Kingdom is prepared to assist them in strengthening their capabilities to defend the area as a whole against aggression.

"2. That the United States furnish small training missions and individual service technicians to the Arab States and Israel to assist them in the development of fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain and to the defense of the Middle East as a whole.

"3. That the number of Arab and Israeli trainees in the United States military schools be increased.

A covering memorandum from ISA Committee Secretary Robert G. Efteland stated that this paper was prepared in ISAC and was intended to serve as a basis for discussion and judgment on the problems enumerated in the "Statement of Considerations". Appended to the source text, but neither printed, are, as Tab A, a problem paper prepared in ISAC on increasing the Turkish military establishment, and, as Tab B, a memorandum from the Ambassador to Greece transmitting a paper on expediting the delivery of military equipment to Greece, Turkey, and Yugoslavia. Also appended to the source text, as Tab C, is a copy of the letter from Secretary Acheson to Secretary Marshall, with annex, dated January 27, p. 21. Pages 1–6 of this paper, not printed, deal with the increase in the Turkish military establishment and the delivery of military equipment to Greece, Turkey, and Yugoslavia during 1951.

2 Not printed; see footnote 1 above.

"4. That the United States furnish, in conjunction with the training in paragraph 2, token quantities of arms and ammunition (of the order of magnitude of $5-10 million) to the Arab States and Israel on a cash reimbursable basis, making it very clear that greater quantities cannot be made available for another 12-18 months.

"These token quantities could be diverted from the programs for Greece, Turkey and Iran by delaying deliveries to these countries: if such a course is absolutely necessary, we believe on political grounds that the diversion should be made.

"5. That the United States discuss with the United Kingdom the establishment in the Middle East of a combined military mission, or establishment of a separate United States military mission for the purposes of:

"a. stimulating and coordinating the military efforts of all of the Middle East countries for the defense of the Middle East as a whole:

"b. creating stability in depth in the Arab States and Israel so as to enable Greece, Turkey and Iran to make the most effective use of the fighting power we are developing there;

"c. coordinating in terms of the concept of area defense the activities of the United States and United Kingdom military missions in the individual countries; and

"d. stimulating and coordinating, with appropriate back-stopping in Washington and London, United States and United Kingdom planning to make the maximum effective use of available resources for the defense of the area."

As the result of subsequent conversations in the Department of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff informally have transmitted their views with respect to the Middle East as follows:

"Political and military conditions in ME are of such significance to the security interest of the Western nations that provision should be made for grant aid to the other countries comprising the ME area. Firm programs of assistance for these countries cannot be developed at the present time but it is highly desirable that a contingency fund be provided that will permit immediate military assistance to the ground forces of these countries if such need for assistance becomes urgent.

"Accordingly legislation should be sought which will provide a contingency fund that will permit additional grant military assistance in the amount of $50,000,000 to countries in the ME area."

Discussion:

It is recognized that, politically, the situation in the Arab States and Israel has deteriorated in recent months. That steps should be taken to counter this trend is also recognized. Partially to accomplish this end, an economic assistance program is planned for the area and a program of reimbursable military assistance to the extent of five to ten million dollars has been recommended by the Department of State. However, the form in which this assistance should be provided is a question which remains to be resolved.

One method which is within the framework of present legislative authority would provide military equipment on a cash reimbursable basis under Section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act as amended. In order to provide such assistance a determination would have to be made that each country in the area "whose ability to defend itself or to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part is important to the security of the United States". Assuming that such determinations are made, the countries in question could then request procurement assistance from the United States for the required equipment for which they would agree to pay. Negotiations for such an agreement with Saudi Arabia, which has been declared eligible under this Act, are now under way.

Another method, which would require new legislative authority, would involve a series of grant aid programs for the countries in the area. Under this method surveys would have to be made to determine equipment deficiencies, assumptions would have to be made that the recipient countries were unable to pay for the needed equipment and complete justifications would have to be provided for the appropriations requested for this purpose.

Still another method, also involving the steps described in the previous paragraph, would be the creation of a contingency fund within the appropriation provided for Title II countries (Greece, Turkey and Iran) which could be used in the general area upon a determination by the President that the use of the funds in the country or countries in question would be important to the security of the United States. This latter method probably would provide more flexibility in channeling equipment into the countries where maximum benefits would accrue.

If deliveries of equipment can be limited to small quantities they probably would not interfere to any greater extent with the programs under way in countries of higher strategic importance unless given a high priority. However, if major quantities of equipment are to be involved and if deliveries of that equipment are to be expedited in order to achieve our objectives in the area, the programs will have to be worked out against a background of all other MDA countries. It is inconsistent, for instance, to suggest that there be a build up of strength in Greece and Turkey as in problems A and B above, and at the same time to embark upon a program of military assistance for the Arab States and Israel by diverting equipment from Greece and Turkey as has been suggested as a possibility.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on these negotiations, see pp. 1017 ff.

Present availabilities of military equipment are strictly limited and the demands upon U.S. productive capacity are of such magnitude that deliveries of presently-programmed equipment for MDAP countries will be long delayed for certain types of matériel. The only result which can come from adding new recipients will be to further aggravate an already difficult position unless production of the needed items is stepped up substantially. Therefore, a great deal of study must be given to questions involving the relative importance of the Middle East, NATO, and the Far East; the types and quantities of equipment that would have to be provided to the Arab States and Israel in order to accomplish our objectives; and whether or not assistance in the form of military equipment is a necessary method to accomplish those objectives.

Also, study will have to be given to possible developments between the Arab States and Israel if military equipment to increase their war potential is provided.

Recommendations:

1. ISAC should determine if the security interests of the U.S. require military assistance programs for the Arab States and Israel.

2. If military assistance programs are to be instituted for the Arab States and Israel, the Department of Defense should recommend to ISAC specific country programs in terms of quantities and types of equipment.

3. If military assistance programs are to be instituted for the Arab States and Israel, ISAC should determine whether such assistance should be provided on a reimbursable basis, on a grant basis with a specific program for each country, or on a "contingency fund" basis.

S/ISA Files: Lot 52-26: NSC General

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry) to the Director, International Security Affairs (Cabot)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] February 21, 1951.

PROPOSED NSC PAPER ON U.S. POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

I. I have read with interest your memorandum of February 192 commenting on the paper on U.S. policy toward the Arab States and Israel which NEA had prepared for NSC consideration. I believe that the questions which you have raised are very much to the point and that they should and can be clarified. In addition, I think that a number of the points would be valuable additions to the proposed NSC paper.

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 78.

<sup>1</sup> Drafted by Kopper.

II. With regard to the opening paragraph of your memorandum, NEA came to the conclusion the day before Mr. McGhee left for Istanbul, February 8,3 that it would be necessary to have some form of grant aid in the Arab States and Israel to achieve the desired objectives. For reasons which are set forth in detail in paragraph IX below, NEA now believes that a combination grant aid-cash reimbursable program should be instituted. We concur with you that aid should be given on a priority basis. We certainly do not believe that a large grant aid program should be established which would adversely affect our program in Western Europe. We have in mind a grant aid program of $50,000,000 and a cash reimbursable program of $76,000,000 (this includes the $76,000,000 cash reimbursable program already approved for Saudi Arabia) for all of the Arab States and Israel to be put into operation by July 1, 1952.

III. NEA is puzzled over the fact that you have described the area in which the Arab States and Israel are located as "doubtful". We would very much appreciate a clarification of what is meant by this. As you know, the National Security Council has determined the Arab States and Israel to be of critical importance to the security of the United States. In addition, the Joint Chiefs of Staff of both the United Kingdom and the United States have as recently as October 26, 1950 agreed that "the Middle East in war is of importance second only to Europe". If by "doubtful" you mean that its political orientation is a question mark, I would point out that one of our objectives in assisting this area, just as in others, is to strengthen its orientation towards the West. Obviously a small program of grant aid assistance could not be expected to build up the Arab States and Israel as a major military force, but we believe much could be accomplished in aligning this area solidly with the West.

IV. With regard to paragraph 2 of your memorandum, it has long since been determined that Greece, Turkey and Iran are very much on the front line. The position of Syria, Iraq, Lebanon, Jordan and Saudi Arabia in relation to Turkey and Iran is quite clear. The north-eastern border of Syria is less than 200 miles from the Soviet Union. Iraq is barely 150 miles. The geographic importance of the area with respect to Western Europe, Africa and European and Asiatic Russia is quite obvious. Its importance during World War I and World War II was clearly demonstrated. If Turkey and Iran are in danger, we believe it almost axiomatic that the Arab States are in a similar position. It is assumed that the USSR would be deficient in oil during war and would not only attempt to deprive the Western powers of Middle Eastern oil but would also seek to obtain it for her own use. The great debate going on in the Arab world now is whether it should align with the west or try to steer a neutral course. Basically, this stems from a fear of the USSR and a lack of confidence and military strength.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission held at Istanbul February 14–21 and attended by McGhee, see pp. 49 ff.

V. The objectives of supplying military assistance to the Arab States and Israel include all of the five points mentioned in paragraph 3 of your memorandum, with some modifications on point two. We had not envisaged that it would be possible to provide weapons in such quantity that the Near Eastern states could contribute substantially in the defense against a major Soviet military aggression. On the assumption that it might be possible to supply grant aid in the amount of $50,000,000 in cash reimbursable aid up to another $76,000,000 over the next several years and finally on the assumption that the UK would also be assisting this area, it is conceivable that 18 months or two years after the program was commenced the Arab States and Israel would be in a far better position to defend themselves, and thereby to assist in the allied effort. In this connection, I would call your attention to the fact that during the first World War the central powers were forced to divert considerable strength to the Near Eastern area to take care of underground and harassing operations.

I believe it would be useful to incorporate in the NSC paper the objectives mentioned in your memorandum.

VI. In response to question 2, MPA believes that an arms program would go a long way toward obtaining the objectives. In particular, we feel that the attitude towards the United States would change markedly for the better.

VII. At the present time we believe that the effort to build up the strength of the Arab States and Israel should, of course, be dovetailed with other efforts to build up strength in other areas. We believe that the effort should be well planned on a simple but effective basis. The proper size over a period of time would depend to some extent on what can be done during the next two years. We believe that it would not be too much to expect to aim at a $126,000,000 aid program ($50,000,000 on grant aid and $76,000,000 cash reimbursable) to be launched in the fiscal year 1952 and carried on as expeditiously as possible, taking into account priorities in other areas. Such a program would not be large and could be absorbed. We do believe that early token assistance would be highly desirable.

VIII. Early token assistance would help towards achieving several of the objectives which you have enumerated; specifically Nos. 1, 4 and 5 and possibly 3. Over a period of time token assistance would not be adequate.

IX. I do not believe that cash reimbursable aid alone will succeed in achieving what we desire to achieve. In this connection your attention is called to paragraph 2 of Telegram #287 from Istanbul, February 17.4 This paragraph clearly indicates that we may have great difficulty in obtaining the rights we desire in Saudi Arabia unless we give some grant aid assistance. It was because we had reached the conclusion in NEA on February 8 that cash reimbursable assistance was not sufficient that we decided we should seek grant aid also. The ability to pay is conspicuously lacking in all of the states in the area except Saudi Arabia and Egypt. With respect to the two latter countries, NEA feels that partial grant assistance is essential to achieve our strategic interests.

X. We would contemplate that the program should be handled with individual states, but there should be a coordination of the assistance so that the area as a whole would benefit. We believe that the types and quantities of arms would be largely for Infantry use, Light Artillery and light tanks to become available in the next 15 to 18 months. There would also be some air and navy assistance. During this period there would be an opportunity for us to make thorough and complete plans as to how the types and quantities could be best used in the individual countries and in the area as a whole.

XI. NEA is not in a position to decide what impact the furnishing of weapons would have on the other MDAP plans. However, since we are not suggesting that the contemplated assistance be given immediately, but rather over a period of time. In addition, since the program we are suggesting is relatively small in comparison with other programs, it is difficult to see how the other MDAP programs could be adversely affected to even a small degree.

XII. As far as question 9 is concerned, we are unable to state specifically what the eventual dimensions of a program in the NE are likely to be. You will recall that it was difficult in 1947 to predict how much aid we were going to give to Greece and Turkey. At the present time, however, we do not contemplate more that $50,000,000 grant aid through June 30, 1952. Much will depend on developments in the international situation during the next year as to whether a supplementary program in the NE will be required for fiscal '53 or '54. At the present time, NEA does not believe that the Arab States and Israel would be capable of handling a program which involved more than $50,000,000 grant aid, plus $76,000,000 cash reimbursable between now and July 1, 1952. It does not seem to me that grant aid to the Arab States and Israel would have adverse Congressional or public effects in terms of securing passage of FY 1952 Foreign Aid Bill. Since the area is of critical importance to the security of the United States, NEA believes that we have an obligation to strengthen it as much as it is capable of being strengthened and, in so far as it is possible for us to do so without jeopardizing other important efforts for our own resources. We do not anticipate adverse effects flowing from the furnishing of arms to the Arab States and Israel. We believe that it would assist in negotiations for the Dhahran Air Base and for the securing of other facilities. In so far as the resumption of Arab-Israeli hostilities is concerned, the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950 5 makes very clear the position of the US, UN and France with regard to any aggression by either Israel or any of the Arab States towards each other. All of the information we have received from the Arab States since that time indicates that they recognize the futility of a second round; however, in the absence of normal political relations between the Arab States towards Israel, it is necessary to be quite candid and state that the strengthening of either side is a calculated risk. However, the same can be said for West Germany and Japan.

&lt;sup>4</sup> In telegram 287, February 17, from Istanbul, McGhee reported from the Chiefs of Mission Conference that "we agree increased dollar program Arab States and Israel desirable but early shipment more important consideration. Conference unanimous arms aid must be extended on same term to Israel and all Arab States including Saudi Arabia to prevent damaging charges favoritism et cetera. DAF negotiation has shown limited appeal cash reimbursable aid and SAG appears likely hold out for real quid for very important Dhahran quo. Consequently conference believes Saudi program should be converted grant basis and arms other Arab States and Israel likewise grant. Cash reimbursable facilities would be useful supplement only." (780.5/2–1751)

XIII. In response to Question 12, we understand from the JCS that it would be difficult to make deliveries of any quantity for some time to come. However, we believe our declaration of intention to make future deliveries would have such a pronounced beneficial effect in the Arab States and Israel that there is little danger that a lapse of time would cause any serious adverse repercussions, certainly none which would outweigh the advantages. We believe that the period of time between the passage of legislation authorizing grant aid assistance and the time of the actual first major deliveries could be most profitably utilized in developing sound programs. We do believe that certain token assistance should be sent as soon as possible.

XIV. NEA understands that the JCS has approved a $50,000,000 grant aid program for the Near East. The details have not as yet been worked out. It is difficult to work them out until a general policy determination approving the principle has been made. Finally, NEA quite willingly concurs in your suggestion that this item be placed on the agenda of the ISAC Committee if you feel it desirable. We should like a firm departmental position worked out first, however.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on the Tripartite Declaration regarding arms shipments to the Arab States and Israel, issued by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France on May 25, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. III, pp. 975–990 and 1027–1031; and ibid., vol. v, pp. 131–168. The text of the declaration is in Department of State Bulletin, June 5, 1950, p. 886.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the Executive Secretary, National Security Council (Lay)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] February 28, 1951.

Subject: United States Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel
The enclosed proposed Statement of Policy on the Arab States and Israel and the accompanying Staff Study were prepared by the Department of State after consultation with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and officials of the Department of Defense. It is requested that the proposed statement and Staff Study be circulated to the members of the National Security Council for their consideration and comment or approval. Certain of the proposed policies require legislative action.
I hope therefore that this question will be considered by the Council

JAMES E. WEBB

[Enclosure 1]

Statement of Policy Proposed by the National Security Council 2

TOP SECRET

as soon as possible.

[Washington, undated.]

THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

- 1. The stability of the Arab States and Israel continue to be of critical importance to the security of the United States. The factors which make the area of such importance to the security interests of the United States are primarily:
- a. The geographic position of the area with respect to Western Europe, Africa and European and Asiatic Russia;

b. Oil resources;

- c. Military bases; andd. Communications and facilities.
- 2. It is in the U.S. interest to maximize the will of the Arab States and Israel to cooperate with the United States and friendly countries in resistance to the USSR both now and in the event of war.
- 3. Finally, it is in the U.S. interest that the United Kingdom have primary military responsibility for Israel and the Arab States except Saudi Arabia.
  - 4. Accordingly, the U.S. should:
- a. Take steps, in cooperation with the United Kingdom, to strengthen the Arab States and Israel internally and against the threat of USSR expansionism;

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Kopper; cleared by S/A, S/ISA, BNA, and G. <sup>2</sup> The text of this document was subsequently circulated to the NSC as NSC 47/3; see the editorial note, infra.

- b. Hold politico-military discussions with the United Kingdom to clarify the respective roles and responsibilities of each country in strengthening the Arab States and Israel;
- 5. The United States and the United Kingdom should, on an individual but coordinated basis:
- a. Obtain the right to operate in the various nations upon the threat of or during general hostilities;

b. Develop local fighting groups and techniques;

c. Furnish small advisory groups and individual technicians and consider requests for training;

d. Initiate when possible limited arms supply programs;

e. Make "show-the-flag" visits;

- f. Where feasible, place orders in local industries for needed raw materials and equipment.
  - 6. Finally, the United States should:
- a. Take legislative action which will permit the development of appropriate arms supply programs.

b. Undertake and accelerate technical and economic assistance; and c. Expand and intensify the United States psychological effort toward the area.

d. Make clear, in a manner best calculated to produce maximum effect, the fact that the United States is prepared to assist the Arab States and Israel to strengthen their capabilities to defend themselves against aggression.

[Enclosure 2]

National Security Council Staff Study

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

THE PROBLEM

1. To define and assess the policy which the United States should follow towards the Arab States* and Israel, particularly in the light of the growing tendency in the area toward neutralism and the decline of an attitude favorable to the United States and other friendly countries.

ANALYSIS

2. NSC 47/2, October 17, 1949, covering United States policy toward Israel and the Arab States and NSC 65/3, May 17, 1950, on United States policy toward arms shipments to this area set forth policies which now require supplementing in light of the material changes in the international situation.

*Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Yemen. [Footnote in the source text.1

- 3. The political and economic stability of the Arab States and Israel were determined in NSC 47/2 to be of critical importance to the security of the United States, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff of both the United States and the United Kingdom have as recently as October 26, 1950 agreed that "The Middle East in war is of importance second only to Europe". The factors which make the area critically important to the security interests of the United States are primarily:
- (a) The geographic position of the area with respect to Western Europe, Africa and European and Asiatic Russia;

(b) Oil resources;

(c) Military bases; and

- (d) Communications and facilities.
- 4. United States objectives in the Arab States and Israel are:

(a) To preserve and strengthen the orientation of the nations in the area toward the United States and other nations friendly to us:

(b) To create political stability in depth for the benefit of Greece, Turkey and Iran and as a contribution to the stability of the Middle East as a whole:

(c) To induce the countries to increase their indigenous defensive capabilities against the USSR and Soviet satellites; and

- (d) To obtain the right to deploy, base and operate forces in the territories of the nations of the areas upon threat of and during general hostilities, and to lay the political groundwork for us to regain access to the territories of the nations of the area in event of their loss during general hostilities.
- 5. The increasing belief, particularly in the Arab States, that the United States will not help the countries to prepare to defend themselves, is producing marked political disaffection and deterioration. The risk is increasing that important areas will swing away from the West toward neutrality, or even toward the USSR. It is important that this adverse trend be halted.
- 6. Retention and use of even a part of Middle East oil production or even delayed loss of it would contribute importantly and perhaps critically to an allied war effort.
- 7. It is in the interest of the United States that the United Kingdom maintain primary military responsibility in Israel and the Arab States, other than Saudi Arabia. Although the political influence of the United Kingdom has been declining in certain parts of the area, it is, nevertheless, still stronger than that of any other country in other parts, and it is in our mutual interest that there be cooperation between the United States and the United Kingdom in order that the maximum benefit may be derived from our respective efforts. The United States has recently decided to make available $76,000,000 cash reimbursable assistance to Saudi Arabia. It is in our interest that primary military responsibility for this area should rest with the United States; but there should, nevertheless, be coordination with the United Kingdom. Israel is aware that the United Kingdom has primary military responsibility with regard to the area in which Israel is located.

8. The indigenous defenses in the Arab States and Israel can be increased through relatively small United States and United Kingdom efforts in the area, particularly in the difficult terrain of the Arabian Peninsula where American-operated desert facilities, engineering equipment and American experience already exist.

9. If military assistance were supplied to the Arab States and Israel, these states would (a) become more closely oriented towards the United States; (b) be better able to preserve internal security; (c) contribute after a time to the defense of the area; (d) be able to conduct guerilla warfare and harassing operations in the event the area or part of it is overrun; and (e) be more amenable to the granting of strategic rights.

10. If the Arab States and Israel do not become firmly oriented toward the United States and countries friendly to us during the coldwar period, it is doubtful that the support of these countries could be obtained during a global war or regained after the war.

CONCLUSIONS

11. It is in United States interest to maximize the will of the governments and peoples in the Arab States and Israel to cooperate in resistance to the USSR both now and in the event of war; to translate that will into indigenous efforts to strengthen internal security; to resist the Soviet advance; to grant the Western Powers necessary military rights therein; and, if the area is nevertheless overrun, to harass and sabotage the invader and to assist in liberation.

12. Taking cognizance of the fact that it is in the United States interest that the United Kingdom have primary military responsibility for Israel and the Arab States excepting Saudi Arabia, discussions should be held on a combined United Kingdom-United States politicomilitary level to clarify the respective roles and responsibilities of the United States and the United Kingdom in strengthening the Arab States and Israel.

- 13. Following agreements reached in the discussions held in accordance with paragraph 12, above, the United Kingdom and the United States should, on an individual but coordinated basis undertake and accelerate the following measures with respect to the Arab States and Israel:
- (a) Obtaining the right to deploy, base and operate forces in the territories of the nations of the area upon threat of and during general hostilities;

(b) Development of fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain;

(c) Initiating when possible limited arms supply programs, required to achieve (a) and (b) above by early delivery of token quantities;

(d) Furnishing on request small advisory groups and individual service technicians, and consider requests for training of national military personnel in service schools;

(e) Making, in agreement with local governments, "show-the-flag"

visits by air force planes and naval vessels; and

- (f) Placing of orders in local industries for needed raw materials and war materials.
- 14. The United States should take legislative action which will permit the development of appropriate arms supply programs. Subject to the enactment of such legislation, appropriate authorities of the United States should develop the necessary programs.
- 15. The United States should undertake and accelerate technical and economic assistance that will help convince the peoples of the Arab States and Israel that they will benefit as individuals as well as States, from the victory of the Free World.
- 16. The United States should expand and intensify the United States psychological effort toward the area.
- 17. The United States should make it clear in the manner best calculated to produce the maximum effect upon the peoples of the area that it is prepared to assist the Arab States and Israel in strengthening their capabilities to defend themselves against aggression.

Editorial Note

Lay transmitted the proposed Statement of Policy on the Arab States and Israel to the National Security Council on March 1 as NSC 47/3. The Staff Study on the subject was also enclosed for the information of the Council. In his note of transmittal, Lay also took note of Acting Secretary Webb's observation that as certain of the proposed policies would require legislative action, the Council should consider the draft Statement "as soon as possible". Therefore, Council consideration of NSC 47/3 was scheduled for the next regular meeting on March 7 (Note by the Executive Secretary to the National Security Council on United States Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel (NSC 47/3), March 1, 1951, S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series).

In a memorandum for the National Security Council on March 2, Lay reported that by agreement between the Departments of State and Defense, NSC 47/3 had been removed from the Council agenda for March 7 and was being referred to the Senior NSC Staff in anticipation of Council consideration of March 14 (S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series). On March 6, the NSC Staff submitted as NSC 47/4 a revision, not printed, of the Statement of Policy, and on the following day, the Staff submitted as NSC 47/4 Annex a revision, not printed, of the Staff Study which had been enclosed with NSC 47/3. Copies of NSC 47/4 and NSC 47/4 Annex are in S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series. On March 13, at the request of the Secretary of Defense, Lay circulated to the National Security Council, in connection with consideration of NSC 47/4 at its March 14 meeting, a memorandum of March 13 by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of Defense. In the memorandum the Joint Chiefs of Staff proposed certain amendments to NSC 47/4 and expressed the view that, with the amendments, they perceived no objection from the military point of view to the draft statement of policy in NSC 47/4.

At its 86th meeting on March 14, the National Security Council, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization adopted the proposed statement of policy in NSC 47/4 subject to the amendments recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as revised in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of State. (For amendments to NSC 47/4, see footnotes to NSC 47/5, page 95.) The Council also noted the following statement of the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Joint Secretaries (Army, Navy, and Air Force), read at the meeting by the Secretary of Defense:

"That any proposed resultant legislation be discussed, prior to submission to Congress, with prominent senators and congressmen interested in the Israel problem and that after such discussions conferences be held with the leaders of the various Zionistic and other Jewish-American groups having an interest with this problem.

"That prior to inclusion of the Arab and Israel states in MDAP legislation, serious consideration be given to the effect of such inclusion on the total presentation. The Mutual Defense Program may have tough sledding legislatively, and from a Defense viewpoint, care must be taken not to jeopardize obtaining sufficient funds for critical areas by utilizing the forum of congressional committees for diplomatic and political purposes." (NSC Action No. 451)

The draft statement of policy in NSC 47/4 and the annex as amended were designated NSC 47/5 (page 95), and were submitted to the President on March 14 for consideration. For documentation on the drafting changes proposed for NSC 47/4 and the annex to it and on the 86th meeting of the National Security Council, see S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series.

Secretary's Letters: Lot 56 D 459: "Middle East Defense"

CINCNELM and Cs-in-C, Middle East, to the British Chiefs of Staff and the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET
Mil/3039/ME

[MALTA,] 13 March 1951.

- 1. During our combined study of Allied capabilities for the defence of the Persian/Iraq Sector of the Outer Ring, we were continually faced with the problems of how we would overcome the weakness in the democratic front in Persia and also of how we could find both the forces required in war to meet the Soviet threat through Persia in the crucial early stages and those required to meet the over-all deficiency as the threat develops later on. Some of these forces are required to be stationed in or near Iraq in peace.
- 2. We recalled that in the past it had been accepted that the security of the Mesopotamian Valley and of the Persian Gulf directly concerned the safety of the Indian Subcontinent and that Indian troops had fought there at intervals through the last century.
- 3. It is our view that there has been no change in the strategic importance of this area to India and particularly to Pakistan nor to their mutual interests in it. Both Pakistan and India have strong land forces which are well placed to intervene promptly in this area. Pakistan is a Moslem country and is proposing to adopt the Arab language. The presence of Pakistani troops in Iraq in peace would raise less difficulties than would European troops.
- 4. We consider that every effort should be made to draw the attention of these two Commonwealth countries to their interests and responsibilities for the maintenance of the stability of this area, with a view to their joining us in arrangements for its defence. It is also for consideration whether Pakistan should be encouraged to enter

&lt;sup>1</sup>This combined letter was issued on the final day of the second round of the so-called "Malta talks" between British and U.S. military officials. The first round had taken place on January 23–24 and the second, and final, round between March 10–13. It was signed by Adm. Robert B. Carney, Commander in Chief, U.S. Naval Forces Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean; Adm. Sir John Hereward Edelston. Commander in Chief of the British Mediterranean Station; Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, Commander in Chief, British Land Forces Middle East; and Air Chief Marshal Sir John Wakeling Baker, Commander in Chief, Royal Middle East Air Force.

Chief. Royal Middle East Air Force.

The source text was Enclosure "C" to a memorandum dated April 24 from Col. Edwin H. J. Carns, Deputy Secretary. Joint Chiefs of Staff, to Mr. McGhee. Enclosure "B" was a memorandum by the British Joint Services Mission to the Secretary, Joint Chiefs of Staff, dated April 6, and entitled "Middle East Defence," not printed. Enclosure "A" was an undated report by the Joint Strategic Survey Committee to the Joint Chiefs of Staff containing a noncommittal draft reply the Representatives of the British Chiefs of Staff, not printed. For further information regarding the memorandum of April 6 by the British Joint Services Mission, see the editorial note, p. 109.

into a treaty of mutual assistance with Persia and Iraq; from the military point of view this would have great advantages.2

> R. B. CARNEY J. H. EDELSTON B. H. ROBERTSON J. W. BAKER

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series

Statement of Policy Proposed by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET NSC 47/5

[Washington, March 14, 1951.]

THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

- 1. The political and economic stability of the Arab States* and Israel continues to be of critical importance to the security of the United States. The factors which make the area of such importance to the security interests of the United States are primarily:
- a. The geographic position of the area with respect to the Mediterranean, Western Europe, Africa, and European and Asiatic Russia.
  - b. Oil resources.
  - c. Military bases.
  - d. Communications and facilities.
- 2. It is in the U.S. interest to offset the recently evidenced trend toward neutrality and to maximize the will of the several Arab States and Israel to cooperate with the United States and friendly countries in resisting penetration by the USSR.

*Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Yemen. [Footnote in

the source text.]

&lt;sup>2</sup> In a memorandum of April 6 entitled "Middle East Defense", the British Joint Services Mission informed the Joint Chiefs of Staff, inter alia, that the British Chiefs of Staff had considered the combined letter and were in full agreement that it was a matter of the highest importance that both Pakistan and India should assist in the defense of the Persian-Iraqi sector of the Middle East. An approach should be made to these two countries to achieve this end as soon as would be opportune; however, the British Chiefs of Staff were appreciative of the fact that owing to the Kashmir dispute, an early approach would almost certainly do more harm than good (Secretary's Letters: † t 56 D 459: "Middle East Defense").

In a covering note dated March 14, 1951, Lay stated, inter alia, that the National Security Council, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization "recommend that the President approve the enclosed statement of policy, to supplement but not supersede NSC 47/2 and NSC 65/3." President Truman subsequently approved the statement of policy in NSC 47/5 on March 17, 1951 and directed its implementation by all appropriate departments and agencies of the United States Government under coordination of the Secretary of State (Memorandum by the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council for the National Security Council, March 22, 1951, S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series).

- 3. Because of U.S. commitments in other areas it is in the U.S. interest that the United Kingdom have primary military responsibility for Israel and the Arab States.2 However, the special United States-Saudi Arabia arrangements now existing should continue.
  - 4. Accordingly, the United States should:

a. Hold politico-military discussion with the United Kingdom to clarify the respective participation and responsibilities of each country in strengthening the several Arab States and Israel; and

- b. Take steps, correlated with the United Kingdom as far as practicable, to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel to improve their political and economic stability and to increase their will and ability to resist penetration by the USSR.3
- 5. The United States and the United Kingdom should, on an individual basis, but correlating their actions as far as practicable, and without partiality but consistent with strategic considerations as between Israel and the several Arab States: 4
- a. Attempt to resolve local differences in order that the several Arab States and Israel may be able to meet the greater threat of international communism.

b. Obtain as soon as practicable the right to deploy, base, and, upon the threat of and during general hostilities, to operate, forces in the territories of the various nations of the area.

c. Develop fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain.

d. Initiate when possible a limited arms supply program and provide early delivery of token quantities.

e. Furnish supervisory and technical personnel for the arms supply program.

f. Make "show-the-flag" visits.

<sup>2</sup> In NSC 47/4 the words "except Saudi Arabia" appeared at the end of the first sentence of paragraph 3. The Joint Chiefs of Staff on March 13 recommended that the words "except Saudi Arabia" be deleted and that the following sentence be added: "However, the special United States—Saudi Arabia arrangements now origing should continue during the cold way region?" At the March 14. ments now existing should continue during the cold-war period." At the March 14 NSC meeting the Council adopted the JCS recommendation with the omission of the words "during the cold-war period" as recommended by the Secretary of

 $^3$  In NSC 47/4 paragraph 4b read as follows: "b. Take steps, in correlation with the United Kingdom to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel to improve their political and economic stability and to increase their will and ability to resist penetration by the USSR." The Joint Chiefs of Staff on March 13 recommended that the first part of the sentence be amended to read: "Take steps, correlated with the United Kingdom as far as practicable, to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel." At the March 14 NSC meeting the Council adopted the amendment proposed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

4 Paragraph 5 in NSC 47/4 began as follows: "The United States and the United Chiefs of Staff."

Kingdom should, on an individual but correlated basis and without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab States:". The Joint Chiefs of Staff on March 13 recommended the following revision: "The United States and the United Kingdom should, on an individual basis, but correlating their actions as far as practicable, and without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab States." At the NSC meeting on March 14 the Council adopted the JCS recommendation after adding the phrase "but consistent with strategic considerations" following the word "partiality" as recommended by the Secretary of State.

- g. Where feasible and desirable, place orders locally for needed raw materials and equipment.
- 6. Also, the United States should, without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab States:
- a. Seek legislative action which will permit the development of appropriate arms supply programs.

b. Undertake and accelerate planned technical and economic assistance.5

c. Expand and intensify the U.S. psychological effort to attain the objectives set forth in paragraph 2 above.

d. Make clear, in a manner best calculated to produce the desired effect, the fact that the United States is prepared to assist the several Arab States and Israel to strengthen their capabilities to defend themselves against aggression.

In NSC 47/4 paragraph 6b read as follows: "Undertake and accelerate planned technical and economic assistance without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab States." The Joint Chiefs of Staff on March 13 recommended that the phrase "without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab States" be deleted from paragraph 6b and inserted at the end of the first sentence of paragraph 6 after the words "Also, the United States should". The National Security Council at its meeting on March 14 adopted the JCS recommendation.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series

Staff Study by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington, March 14, 1951.]

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

THE PROBLEM

1. To define and assess the policy which the United States should follow towards the Arab States* and Israel, particularly in the light of the growing tendency in the area toward neutralism and the decline of an attitude favorable to the United States and other friendly countries.

ANALYSIS

2. NSC 47/2, October 17, 1949, covering United States policy toward Israel and the Arab States, and NSC 65/3, May 17, 1950, on United States policy toward arms shipments to this area, set forth policies which now require supplementing (but should not be superseded) in light of the material changes in the international situation.

in the source text.]

&lt;sup>1</sup>The source text is the annex to NSC 47/4 amended in accordance with the amendments to the draft statement of policy in NSC 47/4 adopted by the National Security Council at its 86th meeting on March 14. See editorial note, p. 92. It was circulated to the Council with the Statement of Policy, NSC 47/5, supra. * Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Yemen. [Footnote

- 3. The political and economic stability of the Arab States and Israel were determined in NSC 47/2 to be of critical importance to the security of the United States, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff of both the United States and the United Kingdom have as recently as October 26, 1950 agreed that "The Middle East in war is of importance second only to Europe". The factors which make the area critically important to the security interests of the United States are primarily:
- a. The geographic position of the area with respect to the Mediterranean, Western Europe, Africa and European and Asiatic Russia;

b. Oil resources;

c. Military bases; and

- d. Communications and facilities.
- 4. United States objectives in the Arab States and Israel are:

a. To preserve and strengthen the orientation of the nations in the area toward the United States and other nations friendly to us;

b. To create political stability in depth for the benefit of Greece, Turkey and Iran and as a contribution to the stability of the Middle East as a whole;

c. To induce the countries to increase their indigenous defensive capabilities against the USSR and Soviet satellites;

d. To obtain the right to deploy, base, and, upon the threat of and during general hostilities, to operate, forces in the territories of the nations of the area and to lay the political groundwork for us to regain access to the territories of the nations of the area in event of their loss during general hostilities; and

e. To provide a correlated approach to the individual countries of the area with the purpose of reducing rivalries and furthering acceptance of a spirit of mutuality of interest among all of the countries concerned.

- 5. The increasing belief, particularly in the Arab States, that the United States will not help the countries to prepare to defend themselves, is producing marked political disaffection and deterioration. The risk is increasing that important areas will swing away from the nations of the free world toward neutrality, or even toward the USSR.
- 6. Since the beginning of the Korean conflict there has been growing awareness on the part of the Arab States and Israel of their vulnerability vis-à-vis the USSR and, in most cases, of their almost total lack of an ability to defend themselves. In view of these feelings, particularly in the Arab States, there has been extreme hesitancy to give any significant support to the United States program in the United Nations to combat communist aggression. The voting record of the Near East States on the United Nations resolution condemning Communist China as an aggressor in Korea shows that only Lebanon, Israel and Iraq supported the resolution, with Syria, Egypt, Yemen and Saudi Arabia abstaining. There is a definite fear that support of the United States program will provoke retaliatory measures by the USSR. It is also evident that the bitterness toward the United States policy on the Palestine question has contributed to an attitude of indifference on Korea.

- 7. The failure of the United States to make concrete offers of military assistance to these states in response to their repeated requests for aid with which to defend themselves has given added impetus to the already existing attitude that neutrality in the present conflict may present the best opportunity for their survival in an all-out war. The fact that neither the United States alone nor the nations of the free world as a group have made any clear cut declaration concerning the defense of the Arab States and Israel has given further weight to this tendency towards neutralism. In the absence of information to the contrary, these peoples assume that the nations of the free world do not intend to come to their defense. Leaders throughout the area have voiced the opinion that they are hard put to defend policies sympathetic to the free world in their countries when their countries are exposed, weak, and uncertain of the prospects of practical and effective support from the nations of the free world in the event of a further deterioration in the international situation. It is important that this adverse trend be halted.
- 8. Retention and use by the free world of even a part of Middle East oil production and even a delay in the loss thereof to an enemy would contribute importantly and perhaps critically to an allied war effort.
- 9. Because of United States commitments in other areas, it is in the interest of the United States that the United Kingdom maintain primary military responsibility in Israel and the Arab States. However, the special United States-Saudi Arabia arrangements now existing should continue.2 Although the political influence of the United Kingdom has been declining in certain parts of the area, it is, nevertheless, still stronger than that of any other country in other parts, and it is in our mutual interest that there be cooperation between the United States and the United Kingdom in order that the maximum benefit may be derived from our respective efforts. The United States has recently decided to make available $76,000,000 cash reimbursable assistance to Saudi Arabia. It is in our interest that primary military responsibility for this area should rest with the United States; but there should, nevertheless, be coordination with the United Kingdom. Israel is aware that the United Kingdom has primary military responsibility with regard to the area in which Israel is located.

&lt;sup>2</sup>The words "other than Saudi Arabia" appeared at the end of the first sentence of paragraph 9 in the annex to NSC 47/4. These words were deleted and the sentence "However, the special United States-Saudi Arabia arrangements now existing should continue." was added to conform to the amendments to the Statement of Policy in NSC 47/4 adopted by the National Security Council at its meeting of March 14.

- 10. The weak indigenous defenses in the Arab States and Israel can be somewhat increased through relatively small United States and United Kingdom efforts in the area, particularly in the difficult terrain of the Arabian Peninsula where American-operated desert facilities, engineering equipment and American experience already exist.
- 11. If military assistance were supplied to the several Arab States and Israel, these states would (a) tend to become more closely oriented towards the United States; (b) be better able to preserve internal security; (c) contribute after a time to the defense of the area; (d) be able to conduct guerrilla warfare and harassing operations in the event the area or part of it is overrun; and (e) be more amenable to the granting of strategic rights.
- 12. If the Arab States and Israel do not become firmly oriented toward the United States and countries friendly to us during the coldwar period, it is doubtful that the support of these countries could be obtained during a global war.

CONCLUSIONS

- 13. It is in United States interest to maximize the will of the governments and peoples in the Arab States and Israel to cooperate in resistance to the USSR both now and in the event of war; to translate that will into indigenous efforts to strengthen internal security; to resist the Soviet advance; to grant the Western Powers necessary military rights therein; and, if the area is nevertheless overrun, to harass and sabotage the invader and to assist in liberation.
- 14. Because of United States commitments in other areas it is in the United States interest that the United Kingdom have primary military responsibility for Israel and the Arab States. However, the special United States-Saudi Arabia arrangements now existing should continue. Accordingly early discussions should be held on a combined United Kingdom-United States politico-military level to clarify the respective participation and responsibilities of the United States and the United Kingdom in strengthening the several Arab States and Israel.
- 15. Following agreements reached in the discussions held in accordance with paragraph 14, above, the United States and the United Kingdom should, on an individual basis, but correlating their actions as far as practicable, and without partiality but consistent with strategic considerations as between Israel and the several Arab States: 4 a. Attempting to resolve local differences in order that the several Arab States and Israel may be able to meet the greater threat of international communism;

&lt;sup>3</sup> The words "excepting Saudi Arabia" appeared at the end of the first sentence of paragraph 14 in the annex to NSC 47/4. The words were deleted, and the sentence added as follows: "However, the special United States-Saudi Arabia arrangements now existing should continue." This was added to conform to the amendments to the Statement of Policy in NSC 47/4 adopted by the National Security Council at its meeting of March 14.

b. Obtaining the right to deploy, base, and, upon the threat of and during general hostilities, to operate forces in the territories of the nations of the area;

c. Developing fighting groups and techniques which are best suited to local capabilities and terrain;

d. Initiating when possible a limited arms supply program and providing early delivery of token quantities;

e. Furnishing supervisory and technical personnel for the arms supply program;

f. Making, in agreement with local governments, "show-the-flag" visits by air force planes and naval vessels; and

g. Where feasible and desirable, placing orders in local industries for needed raw materials and war materials.

16. The United States should seek legislative action which will permit the development of appropriate arms supply programs. Subject to the enactment of such legislation, appropriate authorities of the United States should develop the necessary programs, and establish suitable area coordinating machinery in the field for administering the program.

17. The United States should undertake and accelerate planned technical and economic assistance that will help convince the peoples of the Arab States and Israel that they will benefit as individuals as well as States, from the victory of the free world.

18. The United States should expand and intensify the United States psychological effort toward the area.

19. The United States should make it clear in the manner best calculated to produce the desired effect upon the peoples of the area that it is prepared to assist the Arab States and Israel in strengthening their capabilities to defend themselves against aggression.

 $<sup>^{4}</sup>$  In the annex to NSC 47/4, paragraph 15 began as follows:

&quot;15. Following agreements reached in the discussions held in accordance with paragraph 14, above, the United Kingdom and the United States should, on an individual but correlated basis and without partiality among the several Arab States and Israel, undertake and accelerate the following measures with respect to the Arab States and Israel:"

The wording of the first sentence of paragraph 15 was revised to conform to the amended wording of paragraph 5 of the draft Statement of Policy in NSC 47/4 adopted by the National Security Council at its meeting on March 14; see footnote 4, p. 96.

120.4382/3-1551

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, March 15, 1951.

Subject: Conclusions and Recommendations of the Middle East Chiefs of Mission Conference, Istanbul

The Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission, which was held in Istanbul, Turkey, from February 14 through February 21, 1951 under the chairmanship of Assistant Secretary McGhee, was attended by the United States Chiefs of Mission in Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel, the Arab states, and Pakistan, and the United States representatives on the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees. The conferees had the benefit of Secretary Finletter's views on the air aspects of the Middle Eastern situation, during his brief attendance at the conference. Moreover, the presence throughout the entire conference of Admiral Robert B. Carney, Commander-in-Chief, United States Naval Forces, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean, contributed significantly to its success.

The major recommendations arising from the conference have been the subject of separate action telegrams to the Department: (1) the recommendation for extension of reciprocal security arrangements to Greece and Turkey,<sup>2</sup> of which you are aware and on which NEA is taking further action; (2) military assistance to the Arab states and Israel <sup>3</sup> on the basis of a coordinated United States-United Kingdom effort, which has now been incorporated into NSC 47/4, approved by the NSC on March 14; and (3) the recommendation concerning the desirability of bringing the policy of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company into conformity with our foreign policy objectives in the Middle East,<sup>4</sup> which is being studied by NEA in the light of the present situation in Iran.

In addition, you may also be interested in the attached documents: (1) the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the conference (Tab A),<sup>5</sup> with special reference to section I thereof, entitled "Strategic interests and roles of the United States and the United Kingdom in the Middle East, and the problem of achieving more positive cooperation from the area in support of United States objectives";

Drafted by Mary E. Hope of NEA.

Telegram 305 from Istanbul, February 21, not printed (782.5/2-2151).

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 287 from Istanbul, February 17, p. 76. <sup>4</sup> Telegram 296 from Istanbul, February 19, not printed (120.43/2-1951) and telegrams 303 and 307 from Istanbul, February 21, not printed (888.2553/2-2151).

&lt;sup>6</sup>Same as Agreed Conclusions and Recommendations of the Conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission, Istanbul, February 14-21, 1951, p. 50.

and (2) a summary by Admiral Carney of the strategic implications of the Istanbul conference agenda (Tab B). Since the latter represents in part Admiral Carney's personal views, he has requested that it be given no distribution.

Upon his return, Mr. McGhee will give an oral summary of the conference conclusions and recommendations at the Under Secretary's meeting.6

Tab B

Summary of the Strategic Implications of the Istanbul Conference Agenda by Admiral Robert B. Carney, Commander in Chief, United States Naval Forces, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean

I. Every element of democratic strength must be mobilized for the containment of communism.

II. The control of the Mediterranean is one single task of vital importance to the defense of Western Europe.

III. Every element bordering on the Mediterranean will play a part in the control of the Mediterranean.

IV. The potential strengths of Turkey, Greece, and Yugoslavia are important to SACEUR in that they would undoubtedly involve the commitment of significant Russian forces.

V. Greece belongs in a West Mediterranean region rather than in the Middle East.

VI. Turkey has a dual interest in the Mediterranean and the Middle East and, conversely, both the Mediterranean plans and Middle East plans must take Turkey into consideration.

VII. Iran must be considered solely as an element of the Middle East and cannot effectively be incorporated into any Western defense structure.

VIII. Division of MDAP funds between Greece, Turkey, and Iran should be on the following basis:

(a) Greece's manpower is limited, her military potential is defensive only, and military aid should not be in excess of that required to develop defensive capacity to a reasonable degree.

(b) Military aid to Turkey should be the most extensive and should be predicated on the Turkish capacity for great resistance and the possibility of generating some limited Turkish offensive.

McGhee made a brief report of his trip, not printed, at the Under Secretary's meeting on April 6. He stressed the usefulness of regional conferences as a forum of interaction between Department representatives and field officers, noted the unsettled condition of countries in the Near Eastern region whom he characterized as "colonials in a transitory phase", preoccupied mainly with security rather than economic problems, argued that "the philosophy of neutralism is predominate in this area and is a most dangerous condition", and concluded that "Iran is the danger point in this area" (Under Secretary's Meetings: Lot 53 D 250: UM N-328). For McGhee's subsequent report on his trip to the State-JCS meeting of May 2, see p. 113.

- (c) Military aid to Iran should be considered as a cold-war measure and should not be in such degree as to benefit the enemy.
- IX. Assistance to Middle East countries is desirable as a means of holding their Western orientation but there can be no universal policy as to cash-reimbursable versus grant-aid. Assistance should be granted on the basis of Allied or U.S. interests and reciprocal benefits should always be sought.
- X. As soon as a Mediterranean regional structure has been determined, Greece should be included in that structure.
- XI. The question of commitments to Turkey should be re-examined with a view toward possible satisfaction of her desires for association with NATO. It is possible that assurance of material assistance plus an expressed intent with respect to minor naval and air cooperation might be sufficient.
- XII. Security discussions, at the military staff level, should be encouraged among all elements of the Middle East with a view toward:
- (a) Developing sensible and workable interim coordinated plans, and
- (b) Ultimate authoritative coordination by some collective security arrangement.

(Note: The foregoing represents in part agreed United States military positions, in part current British-United States military opinion at Admiral Carney's level, and in part the latter's personal views which currently have no sanction.)

788.00/4-1051

Memorandum of Informal United States-United Kingdom Discussions, in Connection With the Visit to London of The Honorable George C. McGhee, April 2-3, 1951

TOP SECRET

London, April 2, 1951.

Participants: Foreign

R. J. Bowker, Assistant Under-Secretary of

Office: State

G. W. Furlonge, Head, Eastern Department

U.S.A.:

George McGhee, Department of State

James K. Penfield, American Embassy, London

John Frick Root, American Embassy, London

Subject: Near East Defense

Mr. McGhee outlined the latest US thinking on problems of defense in the Near East. Any tendency to neutralism in the Near East seemed to result mainly from a feeling of insecurity. The greatest danger to the area seemed to lie in the 18 months immediately ahead during the period when the West was gathering its strength. Therefore, our problem seemed to be primarily a short-range one and to consist mainly of restoring confidence to the countries of the area. We probably could not expect from most of them strong fighting allies and our goal was rather to build up stability and determination to resist aggression, to equip and train the countries for what limited military role they were capable of playing in defense of the area, and to establish the conditions which would enable the Turks to play their proper part in military operations. Also, we should aim to lay the groundwork and create the morale which would assure us of internal underground support should the area be lost to the enemy and one day have to be re-won. For these purposes, it would appear that we should help to build up the indigenous armed forces and to give them some sense of being associated in the overall arrangements for the area's protection.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Mr. McGhee was en route to Washington via London at the conclusion of lis tour through the Near East and South Asia that included the Conference

US officials had been considering recently what more our country could do in achieving the necessary sense of security among the Arab States and Israel. In this area we considered that the UK should have primary responsibility, save in Saudi Arabia where we felt that our associations indicated that we should have a special position. It would be unwise to advertise our relationship or give any suggestion of "spheres of influence", but the problem seemed to boil down to determining to what extent the US can supplement British efforts. Between us we should try to decide what is needed to be done in each country and to determine how arrangements should be organized on an area basis. In this connection, Mr. McGhee remarked that he very definitely hoped the French would not insist in playing a role. We felt they had nothing to offer in this area and it seemed perfectly clear that coun-of Middle East Chiefs of Mission at Istanbul, February 14–21 and the South Asian Regional Conference of United States Diplomatic and Consular Officers at Nuwara Eliya, Ceylon, February 26–March 2. See footnote 2, p. 27. McGhee had to come to London at the close of his tour apparently in response to telegram 5003 from London to the Department of State, March 20, reporting the hopes of the Foreign Office that McGhee would be able to stop briefly on his way back to Washington for general consultations on Iran (888.2553/3–2051). The source text was transmitted to the Department of State as enclosure 5 to despatch 4832 from London, April 10, not printed. In all, eight enclosures were sent with despatch 4832 including memoranda of conversations between McGhee and the Foreign Office concerning Iran, Arab refugees, Palestine refugees, Egypt, Libya, and neutralism in the Near East, and South Asia, as well as a memorandum of conversation between McGhee and Gulf Oil officials and a copy of a British Foreign Office despatch to the British Embassy in Washington covering discussions between McGhee and Foreign Secretary Herbert Morrison. For the conversation concerning Egypt, Libya, and neutralism in the Near East, see p. 356; for the conversation on South Asia, see vol. vi, pt. 2, p. 1689. A summary of the discussion reported in the source text was sent to the Secretary of State by Ambassador Gifford in telegram 5247 from London, April 5, not printed (780.00/4–551).

tries like Syria and the Lebanon would under no circumstances accept the return of French forces.

The area comprising Greece, Turkey and Iran had to be dealt with as a somewhat separate problem. Greece did not belong in the Near East at all. Turkey on the other hand had a very definite role in Near East defense but might prefer to retain a considerable degree of autonomy in area arrangements. Its position as a link between the Near East on the one hand and the Mediterranean and European defense areas on the other was a special factor to be remembered. Iran was a particularly difficult problem. It was weak and Iranians were not good fighters; moreover it was beset with serious internal difficulties. This raised the question of the part Pakistan might play in Near Eastern defense, particularly in the mountain line facing Russia. The contribution that Pakistan could make was obvious and would probably be the decisive factor in ensuring defense of the area.

It now appeared to us desirable that Greece and Turkey should be admitted to NATO. Beyond this we had no plans for defense commitments to any of the other states. Even without commitments or guarantees, however, it seemed to us that if they realized they were part of an area scheme they would acquire a considerable degree of confidence. The problem in its details was a military one. It was merely for us on the political side to set the framework. We already had military missions in Greece, Turkey and Iran and were supplying them with arms. The type of assistance we now had in mind for the Arab States and Israel was to grant them some arms, to send out technicians, to establish military missions where desirable and, with the UK, to help in weaving the whole area into a coordinated defense plan.

The great complicating factor at the moment was the dispute between the UK and Egypt on defense arrangements.<sup>2</sup> Mr. McGhee remarked again that the critical period lay in the next 18 months or so while the West was rearming and that in Egypt the political advantages of an acceptable settlement seemed to outweigh the strategic advantages of what might be ideal arrangements from a military standpoint. We had earlier been encouraged by learning of the compromise formula we understood Mr. Bevin had suggested but now we feared the UK might be withdrawing from such a progressive position because of Parliamentary difficulties. Mr. McGhee had gained the impression from his conversations in Cairo <sup>3</sup> that the Egyptians would insist on the withdrawal of all British troops within 18 months (although possibly they might allow a little more than this). We have always taken the position with Egypt that the removal of all British troops at this juncture in world affairs is undesirable, but Mr. McGhee had been impressed in Egypt with the extent to which Egyptian demands had become a political issue and also with the sympathy shown for the Egyptian position in other Arab countries.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on the dispute between the United Kingdom and Egypt concerning the British military presence at Suez and the issue of the Sudan, see pp. 343 ff.
<sup>3</sup> See telegram 1001 from Cairo, April 1, p. 352.

Mr. Bowker said that the UK had very much in mind the desirability of giving to the Near Eastern countries a sense of partnership in defense arrangements for the area. The purpose of General Robertson's recent visits had largely been to give just such a feeling. In most places the problem came down to a question of arms and the UK was very much limited in what it could supply. It would warmly welcome any possibility of coordinating efforts with the US and any cooperation or interest we could show in meeting the problem. The British were inclined to believe that the defense of the Near East was probably not possible without the effective support of Pakistan but realized this could not be won without providing Pakistan some guarantee against India. Mr. McGhee said that it seemed to him that what really worried Pakistan was not so much the danger of Indian aggression against Pakistan's present territory as the possibility of a fait accompli in Kashmir.4 He had been wondering therefore whether it would be possible for the US and UK to win Pakistan support for Near Eastern defense by giving them some assurance that we would never recognize any unilateral action taken by India in Kashmir. Mr. Bowker agreed that this was a possibility well worth exploring.

Mr. McGhee went on to say that we were considering whether and how we might make some public declaration of US interest in the Near East as a whole. We had no plans to commit troops and such assistance as we might now be in a position to provide in the event of hostilities would probably be limited to air and naval action.

Reviewing the problem as it applied to individual countries, Mr. Furlonge said that the Iraqis had plans for the expansion of their armed forces and had been told to submit to the UK a list of the arms they required. This had been two months ago and the list had still not been received. However, the UK was encouraged by the resolve of the Iraqis to strengthen their defenses and was anxious to be of help. Syria wanted arms, but pretty largely on its own terms and no doubt to have them available for use not so much against the USSR as against the Jews. Lebanon was getting practically everything it had asked the UK for and had offered its fullest cooperation. Mr. McGhee noted that Arab hostility to Israel put a limit on the fighting contribution that country could make. Its efforts in its own defense would, however, be valuable and its cooperation in providing a line of communications was likely to be essential. Mr. Bowker said that on the whole General Robertson had been encouraged by what he had found on his tour throughout the Near East.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on the Kashmir dispute, see vol. vi, pt. 2, pp. 1699 ff.

Mr. Bowker then went on to note that the proposed US policy which Mr. McGhee had been describing pertained to the assistance which the US might provide Israel and the Arab states. The UK was of course very much interested in learning about these efforts and sincerely hoped that there would be close consultation between the US and UK before any decisions or action in pursuance of the policy were taken. He understood that the US was proposing that in the next month or so there should be politico-military talks between our two countries and he wished to point out that the major problem which the UK would have hoped to work out in such talks was the question of command responsibility and the coordination of our respective efforts throughout the whole of Mediterranean and Near Eastern areas. This problem seemed to him to be a somewhat separate one from simply determining how the US might best supplement British assistance to the area comprised by the Arab states and Israel.

Mr. McGhee said that the implementation of our policy towards Israel and the Arab states really depended on two steps which had first to be taken within our own government; (1) obtaining approval of the Bureau of the Budget for the proposed arms assistance and. (2) Congressional authorization of the program. We hoped to be in a position to make token shipments of arms at the earliest possible moment. Mr. McGhee agreed that the initiative for arranging the time for the talks with the UK now lay with us and would probably depend largely on the progress in Washington in obtaining the necessary implementing legislation. He agreed that if the problem of command responsibility in the Mediterranean and Near East had not meanwhile been settled by our Chiefs of Staff, this question might be discussed in the proposed politico-military talks now under reference. He noted, however, that in Greece, Turkey and Iran it had been possible to go ahead with the military build-up without raising the question of the command and planning responsibility. Mr. Bowker reiterated the UK's belief that Anglo-American coordination in the Near East was very much tied up with the question of commands and emphasized the UK's anxiety to get an agreement on this issue.

In referring to France's sensitivity at being left out of the Near East,<sup>5</sup> Mr. McGhee said that it was obvious that France had no role to play in the land defense of the Near East and he and Mr. Bowker agreed on the desirability of trying to divert France's attention to the Mediterranean.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on French concern at being excluded from the Malta talks between Admiral Carney and Sir Brian Robertson, January 23-24 and March 10-13, see the French compilation in volume rv.

Another problem noted was that raised by the US proposal to make an outright grant of arms to Near Eastern countries while the British continued to sell whatever arms they could make available. Mr. Mc-Ghee appreciated the problem this might raise but said that we had concluded that to achieve the proper psychological benefits, which was our principal objective, a direct gift of US arms was preferable to any other arrangement.

In summary, the immediate importance of Anglo-American coordination in arrangements for the defense of the Near East, and a determination of the respective roles the US and UK should play area-wise and in each country, was acknowledged.6

Editorial Note

The British Joint Services Mission, in its memorandum of April 6, informed the Joint Chiefs of Staff that the British Chiefs of Staff had considered the combined letter of March 13 and were in full agreement that it was a matter of the greatest importance that both Pakistan and India should assist in the defense of the Persian-Iraqi Sector of the Middle East. An approach should be made to these two countries to achieve this end as soon as it would be opportune, although the British Chiefs of Staff appreciated that because of the Kashmir dispute, an early approach would almost certainly do more harm than good. The British Chiefs of Staff had asked that their views be furnished to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and had requested JCS comments or agreement.

After reviewing the noncommittal draft reply to be made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Mr. McGhee, in a memorandum to Vice Admiral Arthur C. Davis, Director, Joint Staff, dated April 30, urged that the Joint Chiefs of Staff give a more positive response. He explained:

"In doing so, I reflect the views of our chiefs of diplomatic missions in the Near East and South Asia. I recently met with these chiefs of mission at Istanbul and at Nuwara Eliya in Ceylon. Admiral R. B. Carney, Commander-in-Chief, NELM, participated in the Istanbul meeting and Captain Ernest M. Eller, USN, Commander Middle East Force, in the Nuwara Eliya meeting. It was agreed at both meetings that Pakistan, particularly, and India could play an important role in the defense of Iran and the Near East if the Kashmir dispute could be settled or its effects neutralized."

Ouring the course of a conversation on April 27 with Lewis Jones and Wells Stabler of NE concerning British defense proposals for Egypt, Denis A. Greenhill, First Secretary of the British Embassy, stated that the Foreign Office was concerned by the impression it had received from McGhee in London that the United States valued Egyptian cooperation more highly than it did the retention of strategic facilities for defense of the Middle East. Stabler replied that such an impression was "not correct" but that the United States was "considerably concerned" about the lack of progress in Anglo-Egyptian negotiations (McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Egypt").

Mr. McGhee suggested that in the first paragraph of the draft JCS reply the words "of major importance" be substituted for "desirable" or, as a less satisfactory alternative, the word "highly" should be inserted before "desirable". If the change in wording should present serious difficulties "from the strictly military point of view," Mr. McGhee suggested that the words "from the military point of view" might be deleted. He expressed concern over the wording of the second paragraph of the draft reply, noting that he did not believe that "we can or should defer so completely to British political judgments in the Near Eastern and South Asian area." He proposed a new second paragraph:

"The United States Chiefs of Staff also agree that at the present time, owing to the Kashmir dispute, an attempt to enlist Indian and Pakistani support for the defense of Iran and Iraq would be inadvisable. They are of the opinion, however, that the British Chiefs of Staff and the United States Chiefs of Staff should keep the politicomilitary situation in the subcontinent under continuing review in order that advantage may be taken of any opportunity that may arise to secure the participation of India or Pakistan or both in the defense of Iran and Iraq." (Secretary's Letters: Lot 56 D 459: "Middle East Defense")

The Joint Chiefs of Staff on May 10, 1951, in a memorandum to the Representatives of the British Chiefs of Staff, replied as follows:

"1. The United States Chiefs of Staff have considered your memorandum, RDC 1/16, dated 6 April 1951, and its attachment [the combined letter of 13 March], and are in agreement that, from the military point of view, it would be highly desirable for India and Pakistan to contribute forces to the defense of the Middle East.

"2. The United States Chiefs of Staff are of the opinion that they and the British Chiefs of Staff should each, respectively, advise the appropriate agencies of their governments of the advantages, which from the military view, would result from the participation of India or Pakistan, or both, in the defense of Iran and Iraq in order that every opportunity may be seized by those agencies to further such participation." (JCS Files)

Editorial Note

On April 17, Mr. McGhee submitted a memorandum to the Secretary suggesting action on a program of economic aid to the Near East (see page 642). This memorandum was in light of a request from the Government of Israel for a fiscal year 1952 grant of $150 million, which had generated a great deal of discussion within the United States Government. For documentation regarding the Israeli request and United States reaction to it through the end of April, see pages 559 ff.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 47 Series

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)1

TOP SECRET

Washington, April 26, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: You will recall that NSC 47/5, "United States Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel", approved by the President March 17, 1951, contained the following paragraph in the Statement of Policy:

"4. Accordingly, the United States should:

a. Hold politico-military discussions with the United Kingdom to clarify the respective participation and responsibilities of each country in strengthening the several Arab States and Israel; and

b. Take steps, correlated with the United Kingdom as far as practicable, to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel to improve their political and economic stability and to increase their will and ability to resist penetration by the USSR."

Paragraph 5 of the Statement of Policy set forth certain specific lines of action to be followed by this Government in correlation with the United Kingdom.

As you know, the Departments of State and Defense are proposing, pursuant to the policy set forth in NSC 47/5, that there be legislation enacted which will make possible a limited Military Aid Program for the Arab States and Israel during the coming fiscal year. It is understood that this program may become a matter of public knowledge about the 15th of May, at which time the Congressional hearings are now scheduled to commence. This Department is apprehensive of the political and military consequences to the position of the United States and the United Kingdom in the Middle East if the first news that the United States is contemplating a grant aid program reaches the area without the proper groundwork and coordination being completed in advance with the United Kingdom.

Since the purpose of the program envisaged in NSC 47/5 is to strengthen the countries of the Middle East in correlation with the efforts of the United Kingdom, it seems to us important that we work out with the United Kingdom between now and May 15, the broad outlines of the program which will best further United States interests and those the United States shares with the United Kingdom. The attached memorandum develops the reasoning upon which this view is based and also deals with the problem of informing the French Government at a later stage of our intentions.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Kopper and G. Lewis Jones; cleared by NEA, EUR, WE, BNA, S/ISA. S/S, and G.

I hope, therefore, that you will: (a) designate in the very near future the Defense side of a small State-Defense Working Group to discuss the implementation of those parts of NSC 47/5 which call for correlated United States-United Kingdom action and (b) agree to United States-United Kingdom politico-military talks to be held here on a Top Secret basis, commencing during the week of April 30.2

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

<sup>2</sup> Enclosed with this letter was a copy of an undated memorandum prepared in the Department of State entitled "United States-United Kingdom Politico-Military Discussions Regarding the Arab States and Israel". This memorandum and a covering one of April 20 from McGhee to Acheson were not declassified in time for publication. (McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "General")

120.4382/5-151

The Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency (Dulles) to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry)

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 1, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Berry: We have read with interest and appreciation the report of the Conference of the Middle East Chiefs of Mission which you forwarded to General Smith on 14 March 1951.

In accordance with your request I am transmitting our comments upon those recommendations of the Conference which relate to the Central Intelligence Agency. These recommendations appear in Section XI B of the report.

It goes without saying that we are in hearty sympathy with the sentiment expressed in recommendation 2 (on the same page). We feel, as I understand you do, that great progress has been made in this direction during recent months.

As to recommendation 4, our representatives have always been instructed to cooperate fully with the Chief of Mission and to be guided by the advice received from him. If there are any specific comments on this matter we should like to be informed so that we may be able to take remedial action.

Concerning recommendation 5, it is, as you know, our intention that the senior CIA representatives assigned to stations where there is a recognized need for coordination should have substantive responsibility for all CIA operations in their area and be authorized to deal

&lt;sup>1</sup> Reference is to the Agreed Conclusions and Recommendations of the Istanbul Conference, p. 50.

accordingly with the Chief of Mission and other properly concerned officials.2

ALLEN W. DULLES

State-JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417

State Department Draft Minutes of Discussions at the State-Joint Chiefs of Staff Meeting, May 2, 1951 1

[Extract]

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON.

Participants:

General Bradley General Collins General Vandenberg Admiral Sherman General Bolte General White

Admiral 2 Admiral Wooldridge

General<sup>2</sup> Admiral Lalor Colonel Carnes

Mr. Matthews

Mr. Ferguson

[Mr. McGhee]

Mr. Nitze

Mr. Tufts

Mr. Gleason

Mr. Perkins

[Subject:] Report on Mr. McGhee's Tour

Mr. McGhee: As you know, I have just returned from a meeting of our Ambassadors. Admiral Carney was at this meeting and he was very helpful. The meeting covered a wide range of problems and I would like to report on them briefly. I would like to get your judgment on a number of matters.

The Security of the Area

As a result of my trip I can re-affirm the need for a more positive policy in relation to the Arab States along the lines indicated in NSC 47/5. The basic justification for this is political. The great preoccupation in the area is the problem of security. These countries do not have arms and do not have means of developing strength. For example, Iraq wants arms. It has two divisions in the North and would like to place two more divisions in the North if the arms could be made available. The Syrian Prime Minister also told me that Syria wants arms although Syria has taken a neutralist position. The Lebanese Prime Minister told me that we can use their bases in time of war but that there must be no French involved. The Israelis also want arms. They are disappointed that the attitude of the Arab States will not permit them to play a role outside Israel. The Egyptians also want arms and are aware of the great significance of the present impasse with the British. The Egyptians have just turned down the U.K. proposal regarding the treaty. The problem is in large measure the pariamentary situation in the U.K. Bevin made a reasonable proposal, namely a phased withdrawal by 1956. The British position stiffened because of the parliamentary reaction. Egypt wants the British out in 18 months. The Egyptians are solid on the Sudan problem.3 If the British do not accede to their wishes, the Egyptians are prepared for an impasse and for forcing the British out. They could withdraw the labor employed by the British. They could cut off the water supplies. The King and the Prime Minister do not want an impasse but public sentiment is so high that no Egyptian Government can accept the U.K. proposal. I am not sure that any agreement can be obtained. There is not much possibility of cooperation with Egypt while this problem is unsolved. The lack of cooperation may negate the value of keeping troops in Egypt. The U.K. Command does not attach much importance to keeping a striking force in Egypt. The Command does think it important to keep the headquarters in Egypt and the Command is largely responsible for the stiff British attitude.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Mr. Berry acknowledged receipt of Mr. Dulles' letter in a note to the Deputy Director of the CIA dated May 29. Mr. Berry expressed pleasure "that there is such a large area of agreement in our point of view" and stated his intention to send copies of Mr. Dulles' letter to those Chiefs of Mission who were present at Istanbul in order to inform them of CIA concurrence with the conclusions of the Conference (120.4382/5-151).

&lt;sup>1</sup> A note on the source text reads: "State Draft. Not cleared with any of the participants." There is no indication of the drafter's identity. McGhee's report on his tour of the Middle East and South Asia comprises pages 17-29 of the source text. The first half of the meeting (pp. 1-17) was devoted to discussions of Yugoslavia, Atlantic Command, Korea, Iceland, and Israel. For the portion on Israel, see p. 655. The final portion of the meeting (pp. 29-31) was devoted to a brief discussion of the current world situation. <sup>2</sup> Surname not indicated in the source text.

Nationalism.

There is a rising tide of nationalism throughout the area. We must consider carefully whether we can support British policy in the Middle East. Because Britain is opposed to this nationalist development, the British are increasingly unpopular in the area and are a liability to us. This liability is such that it may exceed the military value of cooperating with them in the area.

Regional Approach

The regional approach to the problem of defense was fully justified by what I found on my visit. I am sure that there should be a small flow of arms to the area. I think we must coordinate our efforts with the British. One problem will be to reconcile our policy of giving arms with the British policy of selling arms. A second problem is what relationship should there be between the U.K. and the U.S. in peacetime in this area. We may as well face the fact that there isn't a complete meeting of the minds between you and the British Chiefs regarding the division of responsibility in the area. The Turks do not want to accept the idea of U.K. responsibility. The Greeks and the Iranians won't even discuss it. The British are primarily responsible in the Arab States although Saudi Arabia is our responsibility. However, the U.K. wants, and thinks they have, responsibility in Saudi Arabia. There has been some friction with Robertson 4 on this matter. The rest of the Arab States and Israel have been a British sphere of influence. If both we and the British provide arms, who will have responsibility? Some decision is necessary about who is to take the major initiative with Syria, Lebanon and Israel. In the rest of the Arab States the U.K. has to take the initiative. There is a question about how this should be related to the Turkish, Greek and Iranian programs.

 $<sup>^3\</sup>mathrm{For}$  documentation on the Anglo-Egyptian dispute over the Sudan, see pp. 343 ff.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: There is no question of Greece is in the Balkans.

Mr. McGhee: I agree. But there is a question about Turkey and Iran.

General Collins: You say that these people are all worked up. Are they worked up to resist Communism or are they worked up about the problem of Israel?

MR. McGHEE: They are worked up about the need to resist Communism. For example, Iraq voted to declare the Chinese Communists an aggressor. They want to build up a defense line against a Soviet attack.

General Collins: You also said that the animosity against the British is such that the British are detrimental to our interests in the Middle East.

Mr. McGhee: I should have said animosity against the West. Our interests are the same as the Western interests in the Middle East. We want to prevent the defection of these countries in the cold war et cetera. The antagonism against the British extends to the West as a whole. If we could solve that problem we would have a plus factor in the Middle East. That would outweigh the present advantages of the British position.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I note that you have not mentioned the French. Is this just a U.S.-U.K. problem or are the French in? My personal view is that the problem is partly the growth of national feelings and partly a shrewd estimate by these countries that the U.K. is no longer a great Power. If the U.K. agrees to one change, then these countries will demand more changes. The question for us is whether we inject ourselves into this situation and try to pick up the pieces so that the Soviet Union won't be able to pick them up or do we act as a group of nations of whom the French could be one?

&lt;sup>4</sup> Sir Brian Robertson, Commander in Chief, British Middle East Land Forces.

Mr. McGhee: Syria and Lebanon will never have French troops. The reactions in the Middle East to the French action in Morocco 5 were very severe. The French are a complete liability. There was a half day's agitation in Pakistan about the Moroccan situation. The French are selling arms on a considerable scale in this area.

GENERAL COLLINS: In that case, why should we give arms?

Mr. McGhee: They cannot obtain arms at the level of shipments which they need. The basic problem is a cold-war problem. They do not feel that they have any support from the French in this problem.

GENERAL COLLINS: They cannot at one and the same time want the French in and want them out.

MR. McGHEE: They do not want the French in.

GENERAL COLLINS: All that you have said this morning indicates to me that you have concluded that we should take over in the Middle East.

Mr. McGhee: That depends on how much we want to do in the area. If we had the necessary forces, it might be desirable for us to take over but I understand we do not have the strength.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: In terms of the drain on our economic and financial resources, do we not have to consider whether these grant programs of military assistance are an obstacle to doing something effective militarily? I don't think we kid the Russians much by these programs. The people who are receiving these weapons are never going to use them. Therefore, we decrease our own military capabilities by these programs.

GENERAL COLLINS: What is the explanation of the low rate of MDAP deliveries which Mr. Nitze mentioned? I take it that the combined drain of our assistance programs and our own defense program exceeds our productive capabilities consistent with the maintenance of a civilian economy. Therefore, we have to ask where this assistance is coming from; what programs will we cut to provide this assistance to the Middle East?

GENERAL BRADLEY: I remember that the Shah of Iran casually asked us for 150 tanks on his visit 18 months ago.6

General Vandenberg: I think that there is a solution but it is one of an old-fashioned kind. It is based on the factor which Admiral Sherman brought out. All these countries are turning to the U.S. as the dominant power. In many respects they understand the use of power better than we do. Our entire history has been opposed to the playing of power politics. When anyone puts pressure on us, we resist because that is our way of life. These other countries are used to pressure. We are trying in effect to achieve our purposes in the area by bribery; bribery will bankrupt us and, furthermore, it will prevent us from exercising power. Perhaps we should get tough and use our power. Perhaps we should tell these countries what to do. We might get farther by using old-fashioned power politics than by using assistance programs. By sending our fleet and by flying our bombers around, we would get more cooperation at less cost.

For documentation on French activities in Morocco, see pp. 1368 ff.
 For documentation on the visit of the Shah of Iran to the United States in November 1949, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, pp. 471 ff.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Another factor is that we supply not only equipment but the best equipment. With the development of these integrated forces and the adoption of the principle of standardization, every little NATO country wants the best equipment there is. We and the British were dominant in the 19th Century because technology was superior to human muscle power.

GENERAL BRADLEY: We have got to recognize that times have changed and that it is no longer wise to play power politics in the old way.

MR. MATTHEWS: We are in a new era and the forces of nationalism are such that power politics of the old-fashioned variety won't do the job.

GENERAL BRADLEY: I agree, however, that we cannot equip everyone.

MR. MATTHEWS: We have got to balance local advantages versus broad disadvantages.

GENERAL COLLINS: I am afraid that we are not getting forward in helping Mr. McGhee.

MR. McGHEE: I fully agree that the basic problem is the strength of the U.S. Once these countries see that we are the most powerful nation, we will be in a much better position to influence developments. Now, however, they see that we are weak. The Iranians attribute their present great difficulties to the fact that we did not provide enough aid.

Turning to Greece and Turkey, I am glad to learn that it has been decided to seek their admission into NATO. I feel very strongly that we need to give a security commitment to Turkey. Turkey is our greatest asset in the Middle East. There is a real danger that the Turks will chose neutrality if they cannot obtain a security commitment. We cannot be sure that we will have Turkey as an ally unless we extend a security commitment. They are ready to build 25 additional divisions if we will help them.

GENERAL COLLINS: With what will we equip them? Where are we going to find the equipment? We could afford to provide additional aid in the form of assistance in training et cetera and we should do this but I don't know how to solve the equipment problem.

Mr. McGhee: We should at least bring them into NATO.

Saudi Arabia

If we reduce the period for which we want access to Dhahran to 10 years and if we can get about $15,000,000 worth of aid, I think we can get the rights we want in Dhahran. I think everyone is agreed that 25 years is a longer period than we need.

Iran

The situation in Iran is very uncertain. Mossadeq is a violent Nationalist and is against all foreigners, particularly the British but including the Russians and ourselves. He is an unknown quantity. He has been the leader of the opposition party in the Majlis. Ambassador Grady is going to see him for the first time today. The vital question is, of course, the future of AIOC. We could not take the loss of the Abadan refinery. The driving force here is Nationalism. The British could have accommodated themselves to this situation but they did not meet the question when they should. As things now stand, they have lost the concession. I am not even sure that an arrangement can be made under which they would continue to run the property. The law provides and the policy is that the oil should flow to the old customers. I think that much could still be achieved. It might also be possible to get a deal by which the British would operate the property and dispose of the oil in the old markets. Mossadeq is the key to this situation. Razmara, Ala and the Shah have been dominated by the Majlis. The Shah could not run the Majlis as his father did. It is an irresponsible Parliament which could and did stymie the efforts of Razmara and Ala to govern in a constitutional way. Mossadeq, however, is master of the Majlis. He was criticized strongly during the May Day riots. I think we do not need to worry about his attitude toward the Soviet Union. If we can get on a solid basis with him, perhaps we will be able to work with him. If we can't work with him, we are indeed in a bad situation. I think we must take positive action in this situation and must specifically provide aid. Iran can stand up to the Soviet Union only to the extent that it is backed up by the U.K. and the U.S. Teheran and most of the important cities are north of the mountains. The fact that we have not extended aid to Iran accounts for the tendency to accommodate to the Soviet Union. If this tendency is to be overcome, we must provide physical evidence of aid, both military and economic.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: Can you tell us where to take this aid from? I think we have reached the position where it is necessary to budget our total aid program. It is my own view that when we have prepared such a budget we will conclude that the Middle East is a very important area. But right now if we are to provide additional aid to the Middle East, we have got to take it from the Philippine Program or the Indochina Program or from some program.

Mr. McGhee: This is a cold-war problem we are dealing with, not a shooting-war problem. We aren't asking for very much aid.

General Collins: The basic point on which I part with you is that we have to furnish aid in every such situation. It seems to me that we ought to bring whatever pressure we can on the U.K. Foreign Office so that it will bring pressure on AIOC. I think that is the point at which to apply pressure. If the British had forced the AIOC to make a compromise settlement, we would not be in this difficulty now and the Iranians would have had dollars with which to buy the equipment they want. I disagree with you that the difficulties in Iran are our fault.

Mr. Matthews: We have been trying to do just that. We have brought pressure to bear on the U.K. Foreign Office to do these things.

Mr. McGhee: We have to remember that we are dealing with Britain's most important economic asset abroad. We cannot effectively bring pressure on the U.K. in this matter. I appeared before the AIOC Board and told them about the dangers of nationalization et cetera. We talked at length with the British Ambassador here in Washington. We told him that the British were not going far enough. I regret to say that what we told him was right. When we seek a positive basis, we find time and again that a positive line on our part turns on the question of aid. Ambassador Wiley, when he was in Iran, always said that he had no tools with which to work. Ambassador Grady has said the same thing. Iran has gone down-hill. The only means I know of stopping this is to provide aid.

GENERAL COLLINS: We can send some aid. Of course the problem is not so much financial as it is a problem of production.

Mr. McGhee: We are only asking for $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. I know that this all adds up to a large sum but Iran is a weak spot.

ADMIRAL SHERMAN: I agree but we have got to find the place to take it away from.

MR. McGhee: The Secretary has not yet approved our proposals but I think he will. We are going to ask Congress for a special program of $50,000,000 of economic aid if he approves. I also feel that they need a larger flow of military equipment. Tanks stopped the strike in Abadan.

General Vandenberg: We cannot solve this problem until State determines the allocation of resources.

Mr. McGhee: I understand that. I will have to be a claimant with Mr. Cabot.

Pakistan

Pakistan wants to play a role in the Middle East. Public opinion in Pakistan would demand resistance to an attack on Iran. They would do almost anything if the Kashmir problem could be settled. Liaquat is strongly on our side. He has burned his bridges behind him. Pakistanis are good fighters and they can raise almost any number of men. Again, however, there is an equipment problem to be solved. With Pakistan, the Middle East could be defended; without Pakistan, I don't see any way to defend the Middle East. Of course it is hard for us to give Pakistan any guaranty against India since India is a friendly country.

General Bradley: Perhaps we should throw civilian production in the ashcan and arm these countries—Pakistan, Turkey and Western Europe.

General Collins: We have not yet taken an overall look at the Middle East in these discussions. I think we have got to do that.

Secretary's Memoranda: Lot 53 D 444: April-June, 1951

The Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget (Lawton)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, May 2, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Lawton: The Department has presented to the Bureau of the Budget a program for economic aid to Near East and African countries and to Iran in the amount of $88 million. The Iran segment in this program, not yet considered by the Bureau, amounts to $24 million. The balance of the program of $64 million was marked by the Bureau to $50.3 million. New factors have arisen since the preparation of this program.

1. We were advised on April 20 by our Missions in Damascus, Beirut and Cairo that the Arab League have gone on record as favoring a massive program of resettlement of Palestinian refugees in the Arab states. The Arab League points out that the amount of the reintegration fund ($30 million for 1952 fiscal), established by resolution of the General Assembly, is entirely inadequate for the purposes intended. They have made the views of their members clear that they do not wish to embark on an enterprise of this magnitude without reasonable assurance from the United States and the United Kingdom of our intentions to continue such a program to conclusion. The report of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East has estimated that reintegration of refugees will require at least $150 million over a five or ten-year period. The figure of $150 million is a minimal estimate based on an average cost of a thousand dollars per family.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Arthur Z. Gardiner, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

2. The relief budget for fiscal 1952 for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency as approved by the Assembly was prepared in the autumn of 1950. Since its preparation, prices of food and related articles have risen steeply. It is now estimated that the unit costs of relief (per refugee per month) have risen from an average of $1.75 in mid-1950 to a figure of $2.50 today. Therefore, it is most unlikely that the relief operation can be carried out in fiscal 1952 at the cost of $20 million budgeted by the General Assembly.

3. There are then two grounds for reconsideration of our approach to relief and reintegration of the Arab refugees from Palestine. In view of the difficulty and delicacy of negotiations which have been patiently carried out for many months by the United Nations agency and by United States Chiefs of Mission in the Arab states in efforts to persuade Arab governments to accept the principle of resettlement, there is every reason now to attempt to meet the Arabs by indicating cur intentions to carry on with this program. It is obvious that the sooner reintegration takes place, the sooner will costs of direct relief be diminished pro tanto.

There is some reason to believe that the United Kingdom will follow our lead if we embark on a program of this magnitude. United Kingdom authorities have indicated in the past that they were prepared to contribute to this endeavor in a ratio of $1 to every $3 contributed by the United States.

4. The Export-Import Bank has indicated that it intends to make no further loans to Israel beyond the $135 million loan already established. In the rationale of our original Israeli program, it was made clear that the program of assistance to Israel was limited to technical assistance in view of Israel's lines of credit from the Export-Import Bank, as well as Israel's ability to raise funds from private sources to balance its international accounts.

5. Israel has formally indicated to the Department its need for grant assistance. While it is very difficult to assess the appropriate magnitude of an aid program to Israel, in view of unknown factors in Israeli balance of payments probabilities, a case can be made for direct assistance to Israel. Most appropriately, this assistance should take the form of projects otherwise bankable which cannot now be so financed in view of the fact that Israel's future credit appears already fully pledged for the servicing of loans already made.

6. An overriding consideration of United States Government policy, as determined by the National Security Council, is the need to treat the countries of the Near East on an impartial basis. Senator Connally has already been informed in a letter from the Secretary that it is the Department's intention in the light of this policy to include consideration for assistance to Israel in a regional program.

In the light of the foregoing, we wish to revise the program in accordance with the following tabulation:

Items already marked by the Bureau of the Budget, including $25,000,000 for Palestine refugees — $50,000,000 Additional assistance for Palestine refugees — $50,000,000 Grant aid to Israel — $25,000,000

The Department proposes to seek only $50,000,000 appropriations at this time for Palestine refugees out of the total $75,000,000 authorization.

In justification of the item relating to the Arab refugees, it should be made clear that the magnitude of this problem has already been sketched in the report of the United Nations Palestine Relief Agency submitted to the General Assembly in October 1950. It was then made clear that reintegration of refugees should involve a sum of at least $150 million and that a program would require from five to ten years to complete.

Settlement of the refugees is an essential element in the stability of the Near East. Inaction would seriously impair the security interests of the United States. Assistance in solving the problem of the refugees will contribute in the long run to improvement of Israel's relations with her Arab neighbors; assistance to the Arab refugees is in a real sense direct assistance to Israel.

The action of the Arab states referred to in the paragraph numbered (1) above makes it clear that if we are to move forward we must do so in bold and decisive terms.

Expenditures for resettlement will involve, among other categories, cost of road construction, housing, tools, seed, livestock and other agricultural facilities for the rural population among the refugees. It will include housing and light industrial equipment for the non-rural refugees.

Funds made available for resettlement will not be disbursed unless there is a clear and definite understanding with the government concerned and with the refugee himself that, following the expenditure of these funds, relief operations in respect to the resettled population cease finally on a date to be agreed upon.

While Israel has formally admitted its obligations to the refugees, the financial condition of Israel will not permit Israel from its own resources to make any substantial contribution to this program for many years to come. The case on humanitarian grounds and on grounds of United States security to take prompt measures to assist the refugees in their present plight is so strong that we cannot afford to wait until Israel accumulates the funds to pay its debt.

That portion of the fund required for direct relief can of course be thoroughly documented in concrete terms based on the experience of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees.

The case for grant aid to Israel in the amount of $25 million is justified on balance of payments grounds. It is further justified for illustrative purposes on a project basis, and a revised list of projects, including technical assistance projects already marked by the Bureau, can be made available to you promptly.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. WEBB

611.86/5-451

The Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews) to Major General James H. Burns, Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] May 4, 1951.

Dear General Burns: As you know, the State-Defense Working Group established to discuss the implementation of those parts of NSC 47/5 which called for correlated U.S.-U.K. action met Thursday, April 26. The results of this meeting are embodied in a memorandum entitled "Assumptions, Criteria and Objectives of NSC 47/5, United States Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel", a copy of which is enclosed. I now wish to inform you that with the few changes of language indicated this paper has the approval of the Department of State as a general basis for the politico-military discussion with the United Kingdom called for in NSC 47/5.

You will note that the Working Group directed attention in Section VII of the memorandum to the need for the formulation of answers to several major questions of policy. I hope that it will be possible for the Department of Defense to consider these questions prior to discussions with the British.

As Secretary Acheson pointed out in his letter of April 26 <sup>2</sup> to Secretary Marshall, it is desirable that the groundwork and coordination between the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the contemplated U.S. Aid Programs to the Arab States and Israel be completed before these programs become public knowledge about May 15. It is also desirable that the French Government be appropriately informed prior to that date. I do not think it necessary, however, that the U.S. and the U.K. reach agreement on all phases of our programs prior to May 15; it should be sufficient to establish lines of policy and general directives for later implementation.

I believe that it would be desirable for the discussion with the U.K. to be handled at the same level and with the same security as the politico-military talks with the U.K. which took place in the Pentagon on October 26, 1950. In the absence of Ambassador Jessup, we propose to designate Mr. Paul Nitze and Assistant Secretary of State McGhee to represent this Department. I will appreciate knowing your thoughts on this matter.

Sincerely yours,

H. Freeman Matthews

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 111.

Drafted by Messrs. Kopper and Jones of NE, and Frederick E. Nolting of G.

[Annex]

Memorandum Prepared by the State-Defense Working Group Established To Discuss the Implementation of NSC 47/5

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

Assumptions, Criteria and Objectives of NSC 47/5, "United States Policy Toward the Arab States and Israel"

(This memorandum contains the results of discussions of the State-Defense Working Group on April 26, 1951 set up at the request of the same date from the Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense.)

I. AREA CONCERNED AND INTERESTS OF THE U.S. AND THE U.K. THEREIN

The Arab States and Israel in which the United States and the United Kingdom have an overall common strategic interest as well as special interests as follows:

Saudi Arabia: Special U.S. interests in Dhahran Airfield and oil. Special (secondary) U.K. interests in training mission in Taif; protection Persian Gulf Sheikhdoms.

Egypt: Special U.K. interest in Anglo-Egyptian treaty (bases); Sudan; Suez Canal movement; Egyptian cotton. Special (secondary) U.S. interest: wartime use of British bases in Egypt; Suez Canal movement. French interest in Canal also.

Israel: Shared U.S.-U.K. interests in land communications via Israel in war; use Israeli manpower; settlement Arab-Israeli differences; naval facilities Haifa; Haifa refinery; policy of impartiality between Arabs and Jews.

Jordan: Special U.K. interest in Anglo-Jordan treaty (bases); U.K.-supported Arab Legion; opportunity Arab refugee resettlement. Special (secondary) U.S. interests similar those U.K.

Iraq: Special U.K. interest in Anglo-Iraqi Treaty (bases); IPC oil. Special (secondary) U.S. interests similar those U.K. French interest in IPC.

Syria: Neither U.S. nor U.K. possess special interests; French special interests: sale of arms; cultural and economic.

Lebanon: Neither U.S. nor U.K. possess important special interests but U.S. interested in the pipeline outlet and refinery at Tripoli, and AUB as cultural center; French special interests largely cultural and economic.

Recapitulation:

Special US Interest	$egin{array}{c} Special \ UK \ Interest \end{array}$	US–UK Shared Interest	$French \\ Interest$	US-UK-France Interest
Saudi Arabia	Egypt Jordan Iraq	Syria Israel Lebanon	Syria Lebanon	Implementation of Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950

Note: During the early stages of the development of the program envisaged in NSC 47/5 the area concerned must be carefully restricted to states named; at a later stage the Persian Gulf Sheikhdoms, Libya-Yemen and other peripheral areas may be considered for inclusion.

II. THE NATURE OF THE NSC 47/5 PROGRAM

Program is primarily a political weapon designed to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel; to improve their political and economic stability and to increase their will and ability to resist penetration by the USSR. It follows that political grounds must be accepted as justification for aid. As plans develop regarding the defense of Arabian peninsular oil, the program will take on a more positive aspect for the U.S. in Saudi Arabia.

III. FORM OF AID ENVISAGED IN NSC 47/5

Aid under the program will have the following forms:

A. Economic

1. IBRD Loans

2. Exim Bank Loans 3. Point IV and related

4. Grant Aid

5. Procurement assistance

6. Refugee resettlement

7. Emergency oil conservation

B. Propaganda and Information

Source

International

U.S.u.s.

U.S. for all countries

U.K. for Jordan

U.S. and U.K.

U.S., U.K. and France within U.N. (possibly U.S. outside U.N.)

U.S. and U.K.

C. Arms Supply—Cash and Grant

1. U.S. arms aid must be in accord with statutory requirements; i.e., President must find arms so furnished contribute to the security of the U.S.

2. It must be assured that arms will not be used contrary to Bilateral Agreements with U.S. (i.e., Tripartite Declaration protected).

3. Impartiality consistent with strategic considerations must be preserved between the Arab States and Israel.

4. Impartiality will have to be preserved in character of arms supplied.

5. Arms aid should be associated with political quid pro quos that are of general benefit to the West in the Cold War; for example, the British effort in Jordan and the U.S. at DAF must be conceived as of general benefit to the West.

6. Arms aid must be handled so that the countries of the area will not neglect expenditures on economic and social betterment.

- 7. Arms aid can be accorded only in response to a governmental request; i.e., governments must be prepared to back their military in making requests.
- 8. Governments receiving U.S. aid must abide by all MDA requirements re inspection and supervision of end use.
- 9. Any arms aid will be within the framework of a correlated program for each country; . . .
- 10. Procurement assistance is the most valuable part of the program since global arms requirements will continue to exceed availabilities.
- 11. To conform to U.K. and French practice as well as to save U.S. funds and effort the rule will be cash reimbursable assistance; U.S. grant aid will be employed to achieve general Western political objectives; U.S. Grant arms aid will be a supplement.
- 12. Types of existing arms will be important factor in the supply of new arms.
- 13. To avoid inter-country jealousies in the area re arms aid, detailed country programs will be made known only to the countries receiving the aid and in the U.S.-U.K.-France correlation process.
- 14. Arms supply of all kinds from the U.S., U.K. or France should be susceptible of being shut off at short notice in the event of developments contrary to the Tripartite Declaration, coups d'états or riots.

IV. CORRELATION OF ARMS SUPPLY

Principal suppliers of arms will be the U.K., France and the U.S. To meet the above criteria (including the criteria imposed by U.S. legislation) a tripartite system of correlation is required. This system should not be publicized and should work so far as possible under cover.

The functions of such a tripartite system would be:

A. A means for sharing information regarding the armaments of the Arab States and Israel.

- B. To provide for consultation on U.S., U.K. and French plans to fill arms requirements of individual countries on either a cash or a grant basis. Advance knowledge of plans will:
  - 1. Avoid embarrassments.
  - 2. Permit arms supplies to be fitted into programs of other countries.

3. Permit consideration re character of arms.

4. Help prevent over-expenditures on arms by individual states.

C. Keep records of arms supplied.

- D. Be the system to assure arms are not used contrary to tripartite declaration.
- E. Focal point for emergency shut-off of arms supplies (see Criterion 13, above).

Such a system would not possess authority to stop arms supply by any of the three members; would endeavor to operate on the grounds of common sense and honest dealing between members. Instances of serious dispute would be referred to governments for diplomatic handling.

V. U.S.-U.K. CORRELATION ON MATTERS OTHER THAN THE SUPPLY OF ARMS

NSC 47/5 indicates a number of lines of action in which the U.S. and the U.K. should correlate their activities:

A. In efforts to resolve Arab-Israel differences.

B. To secure base rights.C. To develop fighting groups and techniques suitable to local capabilities and terrain.

D. In one of supply supervisory and technical personnel for Near East military establishments.

E. To make "show-the-flag" visits.

F. To place orders for needed raw materials and equipment.

G. Expand and intensify U.S. psychological effort to offset trend towards neutrality.

VI. CORRELATION WITH FRANCE

NSC 47/5 does not specifically envisage a correlation between the U.S., the U.K. and France on matters set forth in the preceding paragraph. However, NSC 47/5 supplements NSC 47/2 and NSC 65/3 which envisaged (a) collaboration between the U.S. and France, where desirable, to obtain basic objectives in the Near East, and (b) cooperation on regulating the flow of arms to the area. To what extent collaboration and correlation with France is feasible and desirable is a matter for early discussion with the U.K.

VII. U.S.-U.K. RESPECTIVE RESPONSIBILITIES WITH REGARD TO THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

Paragraph 3 of the Statement of Policy in NSC 47/5 does not make clear the nature of the responsibility which the U.S. should have with regard to Saudi Arabia. This should be clarified prior to U.S.-U.K. politico-military conversations. There must also be a clarification of the nature of the respective participation and responsibilities of the U.S. and the U.K. in strengthening the several Arab States and Israel. The recent conversations between the U.S. and the U.K. military leaders at Malta undoubtedly have some bearing on these questions. The settlement of the Mediterranean Command question with the British and the French is tied in closely. The State-Defense Working Group did not attempt to determine the answers to these questions.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. In preparation for politico-military talks with the U.K. in the near future, answers should be formulated to the unresolved questions in the immediately preceding paragraph (Section VII).

- 2. Departmental clearance in Defense and State should be sought for the conclusions of the Working Group as set forth above.
- 3. State should be asked to approach the British Embassy to arrange the U.S.-U.K. politico-military talks in the near future, having in mind the fact that these talks should take place before the program becomes public knowledge in the Budget hearings.
- 4. An important item on the U.S.-U.K. agenda should be discussion of the role of France in the entire program with a view to the French Government being advised of appropriate phases of the program as soon as possible and definitely in advance of it becoming public knowledge.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 65 Series

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the Executive Secretary, National Security Council (Lay)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 8, 1951.

Subject: Third Progress Report on NSC 65/3, "United States Policy Toward Arms Shipments to the Near East." <sup>2</sup>

NSC 65/3 was approved as Governmental policy on May 19, 1950. It is requested that this Progress Report, as of May 8, 1951, be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

1. Important Action and Developments Affecting NSC 65/3

Negotiations between the United Kingdom and Frypt are continuing concerning a revision of the Anglo-Egyptian T paty of 1936 under which British forces are presently stationed in the Suez Canal zone. In view of the lack of success to date of these negotiations, the generally tight arms situation, and political conditions in the United Kingdom, the British Government has been unable to agree to meet Egyptian requests for shipments of arms of a relatively high military potential. The United Kingdom, the United States, and France continue to allow the export of limited amounts of arms of low military potential to the Near East.

A special problem has arisen, however, in connection with acute border tension which has developed within the past few months in the Demilitarized Zone between Israel and Syria.3 As a result, the United States has been carefully restricting exports of arms from this country to those two states. This modification of NSC 65/3 should be continued until the situation in the Demilitarized Zone has been cleared up.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Robert L. Burns and John A. Waldo of NE, cleared by Ranney of BNA and Deputy Under Secretary Matthews.

<sup>2</sup> For text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, p. 163.

<sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Syrian-Israeli border conflict, see pp. 559 ff.

An important action recently taken in accord with the policies set forth in NSC 65/3 was the approval by the President of NSC 47/5 on March 17, 1951 which established as government policy the need for instituting an impartial program of limited military assistance, both cash reimbursable and grant, to the states of the Near East to assist these countries to be able to play their part in the defense of the area. At the present time this Government is preparing a request to the Congress for the necessary enabling legislation authorizing an allocation up to ten percent of the funds of the Greek-Turkish program, or funds transferred to that title, to permit this government to carry out the policy set forth in NSC 47/5.

2. General Implementation of NSC 65/3

Close cooperation continues between the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the maintenance of peace and stability in the Near East and regarding the shipment of arms to the states in the area. Collaboration with the French Government regarding the shipment of arms to the Near East continues, but to a lesser degree than in previous periods. In connection with the Syria-Israel dispute, the United States has cooperated with the United Kingdom and France on this question within the framework established by the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, but without specifically invoking the Declaration itself.

3. Evaluation of the Policy

The implementation of the policy set forth in NSC 65/3 has been carried out under generally favorable conditions. Note must be taken, however, of the increasing number and severity of incidents between Israel and the neighboring Arab states which may necessitate recourse to action under the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950. The Syria-Israel dispute, which is presently before the Security Council, at one point in early April seriously threatened peace in the Near East. The shooting of seven Israel armed policemen and the subsequent retaliatory bombing of Syrian territory by the Israel air force emphasizes the desirability of proceeding with caution in any United States arms program for the Near East.

The policy contained in NSC 65/3 continues to be valid. Critical developments in the international situation, however, have made it necessary for this government to reexamine the policies regarding the defense of the area and have resulted in the adoption of NSC 47/5 on March 17, 1951, which will enable this country to increase the defensive capabilities of the states of the area to the extent that they are prepared to cooperate in the defense of the area as opposed to using such arms against one another.

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: "Near and Middle East"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 17, 1951.

Participants: U.S.:

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, USN (Representing the Joint Chiefs of Staff)

Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee, NEA Assistant Secretary of State George W. Perkins, EUR Mr. Paul H. Nitze, Director, Policy Planning Staff

Mr. G. Lewis Jones, Director, NE

Mr. Samuel K. C. Kopper, Deputy Director, NE

Colonel P. C. Hains, OSD

Mr. John Bingham, S/ISA

French:

M. Henri Bonnet, Ambassador of France

Rear Admiral Georges Cabanier

M. Jean-Pierre Benard, First Secretary, French Embassy

Ambassador Bonnet was asked by the Department of State to attend a Top Secret meeting in Admiral Sherman's Office this morning. He was accompanied by Admiral Cabanier and M. Benard.

Admiral Sherman commenced the conversation by informing the French representatives that the purpose of the meeting was to inform them of a U.S. program of aid and assistance to the Arab States and Israel. Admiral Sherman explained that the Departments of Defense and State had been working on a program for assistance to the Near East for some time. This program was now being considered by the Bureau of the Budget and would be submitted to the Congress in the near future. The two U.S. Departments wished to inform the French of the general nature of the program prior to its becoming public knowledge. Admiral Sherman then asked Assistant Secretary McGhee to explain the details of the program.

Mr. McGhee spoke along the following lines: The United States has been concerned about deterioration of the situation in the Near East for some time, just as we know the French have. We are particularly worried about the trend toward neutralism. He had recently been impressed by this trend during his trip through the area. There was a "plague on both your houses" sentiment in the Near East. This had been evidenced by the voting of certain of the Near Eastern States in the United Nations on the question of action toward Communist China. In addition to the reaction toward the Western nations which had grown up during the past several years, there also seemed to be a general feeling of insecurity in the Near East. The States in the area believed that aside from the limited British commitments, there did not seem to be any plans or programs to protect the area. The Near East feels that it is being ignored. They have noticed that while other areas have received much assistance they have obtained virtually nothing and there has been no grant aid. They are acutely aware of the aid which we have given to Greece and Turkey. The fact that their northern neighbors are being strengthened does not make the Near East feel more secure. The United States had developed a program of assistance for Saudi Arabia, however, the plans for Saudi Arabia which we have developed will now be a part of the new program.

&lt;sup>1</sup>A note on the source text reads: "(This memorandum was agreed to in its present form by Jean-Pierre Benard of the French Embassy.)" An attachment entitled "Notes For Discussion With The French Re NSC 47/5 May 17, 1951" is not printed.

The U.S. Government now believes that it is necessary to give more affirmative evidence that we are interested in strengthening the area and in creating a greater will to resist any threat from the Soviet Union. The program which we have in mind is designed for the most part to obtain political rather than military objectives. At the present time, we do not anticipate that there would be a military build-up comparable to that in Turkey. Our program is essentially to obtain cold war objectives and to stimulate a feeling of security in the area.

We are seeking authority from Congress which will permit $25 to $50 million in military grant aid to the Arab States and Israel if certain conditions are met and priorities and allocations will permit. We do not desire to compete with France and the United Kingdom in developing this program. We should like them to continue their efforts in the area. We do not wish in any way to take away any of the incentive in the area to buy military equipment from France or the United Kingdom. Our program is to supplement their efforts and will in the first instance be of a cash reimbursable nature. Grant assistance will be used only where necessary. We are informing the French of our intentions within the [framework?] of the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950. We hope the efforts of the United States, the United Kingdom and France will be coordinated.

There is also an economic phase to the U.S. program. It is contemplated that we shall seek Congressional appropriations for economic assistance in an amount somewhat in excess of 100 million dollars. This program will be partially for economic aid to the individual states and also to assist the Arab refugees. The amount which we are seeking for aiding the latter is much more than before. We believe this will help both the Arab States and Israel. We hope that France and the United Kingdom will also be able to give more since there is now an indication that the Arab States are willing to talk openly about the resettlement of the refugees. In developing the economic program as a whole, we wish to achieve a balance and to maintain impartiality as between the Arab States and Israel. We hope that this assistance will increase the incentive of the area to cooperate with the West. Congressional approval is, of course, necessary. The details of the program will have to be talked out with the French and the British later on.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on the Arab refugee problem, see pp. 559 ff.

Ambassador Bonnet inquired whether we are thinking of just Saudi Arabia or all of the States. Mr. McGhee replied that we are considering all of the States but that Saudi Arabia was the only one for which we had so far developed a program. He repeated that the program was within the spirit of the Tripartite Declaration and that there should be a coordination of French, British and American efforts.

Ambassador Bonnet then asked what machinery we had in mind to handle the economic side of the program. Would we anticipate utilizing the United Nations? Mr. McGhee said that we had not worked out all of the details of our plans. We felt, however, that the United Nations should continue the actual feeding and relief of the refugees. With regard to the resettlement projects, our present informal thinking is that there should be more direct American supervision. There should be somebody in each country, possibly from ECA, who would head the country mission and supervise the projects which might be developed. Ambassador Bonnet then observed that this appeared to be a program designed to give more than relief to the refugees; it provided for substantial economic rehabilitation. Admiral Sherman stated that this was the only way to get the very difficult problem settled. Mr. McGhee reiterated that rehabilitating refugees would help both the Arab States and Israel.

Ambassador Bonnet inquired whether ECA would be the agency administering the assistance. Mr. McGhee said that this had not been firmly decided but the assumption was that ECA would be the agency. The Ambassador then asked how we envisaged economic cooperation with the United Kingdom and France. Mr. McGhee responded that he thought there could be coordination between the United States Mission Head and those who were performing similar tasks for the French and British or with the Chiefs of Mission of France and the United Kingdom in the particular country. Ambassador Bonnet then stated that the U.S. would undoubtedly be able to supply more funds; however, France had done a lot of planning in certain of the states in the area. He stressed that real cooperation was needed. Mr. McGhee said that there was so much to be done that he did not think there should be any concern about competition. He agreed that real cooperation was needed and informed the Ambassador that we were very glad to note that France has been giving more thought to technical assistance in Syria and Lebanon.

Admiral Sherman then said that a degree of assistance to the countries in the Near East should bring that area toward the West. He added that the importance of the Near East strategically was self-evident and that it was not necessary for him to elaborate. Ambassador Bonnet agreed completely with this. The Ambassador did not think there should be big machinery to carry out programs. The essential thing was to plan in advance on the basis of real cooperation.

Mr. Benard then expressed the view that the usefulness of a program depends in part on the evolution of peaceful relations between Israel and the Arab States. He wondered whether we had any plans to bring about more peaceful conditions. Was there any way in which we could push these states into more normal relations? Mr. McGhee replied that our objective was, of course, to achieve peace and stability in the area as well as to strengthen it. However, he said that peaceful conditions would be a by-product of improved economic conditions. He did not feel that peace could be bought and, at the present time, it was obvious that the situation was not too favorable. He cited the trend away from settlement between Israel and Jordan; the fact that we had been informed by our Embassy in Cairo recently that there were no immediate signs that any peace settlement could be worked out between Egypt and Israel, and the fact that it would be extremely difficult to get any arrangement between Syria and Israel in light of the recent difficulties. However, we must continue to try to obtain more peaceful conditions whenever possible. This was the spirit of the Tripartite Declaration. We would, of course, exact as a condition to any arms assistance a commitment that there would not be any aggression on the part of the recipient state. Ambassador Bonnet agreed and said that we could not allow any steps toward war in the area. This must be realized in advance because the temptation to use the arms would be great. Mr. McGhee said that there would be a number of conditions attached to prevent aggressive use.

In response to a question from the French Ambassador as to whether Israel would be upset by U.S. supply of weapons to the Arab States, Mr. McGhee stated that the program was based on impartiality and within the framework of the Tripartite Declaration. Colonel Hains observed that we desired to maintain a balance. Under the law, we will have to have provisions for inspecting and controlling the flow of materials. There will be a group which will coordinate the supply for each country.

The Ambassador asked Admiral Sherman whether the program of military assistance would have any bearing on strategic planning for Mediterranean and Near Eastern Defense. Admiral Sherman said that it would not have any bearing; these were two distinct questions; it would be some time before the Arab States and Israel could be built up. For the time being, we did not wish to have too many voices discussing the program. The French Ambassador then thanked Admiral Sherman and Mr. McGhee for informing him of the nature of our proposed program. He understood that we would be in touch with the French Government later when our thoughts for the implementation of the program are further advanced.

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: "Near and Middle East"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 17, 1951.

Participants:

United States:

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, USN (Representing Joint Chiefs of Staff)

Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee, NEA Assistant Secretary of State George W. Perkins, EUR Mr. Paul H. Nitze, Director, Policy Planning Staff

Mr. G. Lewis Jones, Director, NE

Mr. Samuel K. C. Kopper, Deputy Director, NE

Colonel P. C. Hains, OSD Mr. John Bingham, S/ISA

United Kingdom:

Sir Oliver Franks, Ambassador

Air Chief Marshal Elliot, British Joint Services Mission

Brigadier Barry, British Joint Services Mission

Mr. Bernard Burrows, Counselor, British Embassy Mr. Denis A. B. Greenhill, First Secretary, British

Embassy

The British Ambassador was asked by the Department of State to attend a Top Secret meeting in Admiral Sherman's office this morning. He was accompanied by Air Chief Marshal Elliot, Mr. Burrows and Mr. Greenhill.

Admiral Sherman commenced the conversation by informing the British representatives that we had asked them to meet today in order to discuss a U.S. program of aid and assistance to the Arab States and Israel. Admiral Sherman explained that the program we had in mind was a modest one but that we wished to talk it over with the British before it became a matter of public knowledge next week. He informed the British that we had already told the French of the program but that we had not discussed it as extensively as we intended to do with the British. Admiral Sherman then asked Assistant Secretary McGhee to explain the details of the program.

 $<sup>^1\</sup>mathrm{A}$  note on the source text reads: "(This has been read by Mr. Greenhill, who agrees with its general contents.)"

Mr. McGhee spoke along the following lines: The collaboration between the United Kingdom and the United States in the Middle East, which goes back several years, has been very good. It is obvious that the United Kingdom had done more in the Near East over a period of years than the United States, and that there is a traditional British interest in the area. Anything which we could do at this time would be designed to help, not replace British assistance and prestige in the area. However, the United States is concerned about several things in the Near East. The trend toward neutrality had been clearly indicated recently. Egypt and Syria by their voting in the United Nations on Far Eastern issues, had demonstrated an international attitude which was highly unsatisfactory to the West. In addition, while there is now a momentary period of prosperity, the economic structures of the states in the Near East are basically unsound. A feeling of insecurity was clearly developing in the Near Eastern States. While the United Kingdom had been doing a considerable amount in places such as Iraq and Egypt and Jordan, this did not seem enough, particularly in the case of those who were not receiving any aid at all. Dr. Jamali of Iraq had stated in Washington at the time the United Nations was discussing the question of Chinese aggression in Korea 2 that it was exceedingly difficult for the Arab States to line up definitely with the Western States in opposition to the USSR when so little had been done by the West to assist these states in their problem of security vis-à-vis the Soviet Union. With regard to the economic problems of the Near East as long as the question of the Arab refugees exists, resentment will continue in the Arab States toward the West. More has to be done to settle the refugee question effectively.

The overall program which we now contemplate is designed to supplement the United Kingdom program and not compete with it. Whatever is done should be coordinated with the United Kingdom. The program is an integrated economic and military plan. The economic grant aid will be somewhat in excess of $100 million. It will consist of expanded Point IV activities and greater assistance designed to settle the problem of the Arab refugees. The subsistence portion of the refugee program would continue under the United Nations. The development projects portion should be under the United States, and we would cooperate with the United Kingdom. We anticipate that there would be something in the nature of an ECA administration for the development program. We hope that it will be possible for the United Kingdom to contribute more to the settlement of the Arab refugees. We feel that we have reached the stage where it is essential to take advantage of the recently expressed willingness of the Arab States to discuss resettlement. This will involve more funds.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on United Nations discussion of Chinese aggression in Korea, see vol. vII, pp. 1 ff., and Foreign Relations, 1950, volume vII.

With respect to the military program, a percentage of the Greek-Turkish program would be available for grant aid to the Arab States and Israel. This will be roughly from $25 to $50 million. We realize that the United Kingdom and France have been selling arms to some of the states in this area. Our program would be essentially on a cash reimbursable basis. The grant aspect would be designed to assist where there is no possibility of cash reimbursable being used. We hope to guard against any embarrassment to the United Kingdom and France when giving grant aid, but we may have to give grant aid, for instance, in Saudi Arabia to obtain facilities we very much want. We have been criticized because we have given arms everywhere else excepting in the Near East. They see the assistance given to Greece and Turkey. The objective of our arms program is not necessarily defense in depth, but rather stability in depth. It is designed to strengthen the whole Near Eastern will to defend itself and to join with the West. Insofar as possible, we wish to instill a sense of partnership in the countries of the area but without too many voices participating. It is recognized that the United Kingdom has a problem of how a partnership relationship could be worked out in Egypt.

At this point and at Admiral Sherman's suggestion, Mr. McGhee informed the British of what we said to the French about the proposed program.

Mr. McGhee then continued as follows: It is not possible to have the same degree of cooperation with France since it was our belief that the United Kingdom has the primary responsibility for the area, and we do not have any desire to bring France into a position which they do not now occupy. We expect to discuss plans for each country with the United Kingdom so that there will not be any competition. There are other problems such as command relationship which must be discussed. The basic thought behind our program is that we intend to play a more positive role. We are not, however, going to make any military commitment. We simply wish to seek, in cooperation with the United Kingdom and where practicable, with France, to build up the will of the area to resist Communism. There are other problems of the Arab States of trying to obtain a more normal relationship between the Arab States and Israel and related questions. We wish to pursue a policy of impartiality within the framework of the Tripartite Declaration. In some cases we may wish to seek quid pro quos such as in Saudi Arabia. We have in mind establishing a working group in coordination with the French to discuss the implementation of a number of details.

Sir Oliver Franks then responded by thanking Admiral Sherman for arranging the meeting. The United Kingdom "positively welcomes the positive evidence of this United States interest in the Near East". He hoped that there would be "no shadow of doubt about this. We are very glad that the United States is able to evince this interest. We look forward to the strengthening of our common interests in the area." The United Kingdom effort had been limited in the Near East but it would grow larger now that British strength was increasing. In any case, the United Kingdom will not regard the United States program as supplanting but rather as supplementing what the United Kingdom is doing. There is so much to be done that all we both do will not be enough. Nevertheless, the program would have to be quite carefully coordinated. There were a number of points such as the one Mr. McGhee had made about the effect of grant aid on the position of France and the United Kingdom.

At Sir Oliver's request, Mr. Burrows said that there were several questions which had come up not necessarily in order of importance.

1. The question of standardization and supply; there should not be too much diversity of equipment.

2. There was an obvious difficulty about Egypt. Whether supplies could be made available to Egypt from the United States when the United Kingdom was withholding them while Egypt was "being tiresome" was something which would have to be looked into.

3. The role of training groups and missions would have to be examined. Should there be two military missions, joint missions or specialized missions? This was a problem in regard to the present United Kingdom mission in Saudi Arabia which the United Kingdom wished to maintain there.

4. The United Kingdom believes that the supply of arms is often very useful in obtaining base rights. An important question arising from this is whether the provision of equipment by one government should or should not be used to assist another government in getting bases.

5. With regard to the spirit of partnership of the countries in the area referred to by Mr. McGhee, the United Kingdom generally shares Mr. McGhee's idea. However, it has found that the price for partnership has usually been a demand for high priority on arms and a share in strategic planning. This was a difficulty which General Robertson had experienced during his swing through the Near East recently.

6. Machinery—the United Kingdom welcomes the idea very warmly of having some system to work out details and plans of arms assistance. Without being particularly wedded to the form or location of machinery, the United Kingdom suggests that it might be a Board located in the Middle East to sift applications for arms, determine their justification, etc. He then asked to what extent the Near Eastern program would affect the Greek-Turkish plan.

Admiral Sherman said that we have not as yet made any decisions on missions. He personally felt that it was extremely important to have joint missions where there were activities of more than one country. This would be one way to stop any attempt to bargain one supplying country off against another, and it would strengthen the position of the countries composing the joint mission. Admiral Sherman went on to say that the question of partnership was a difficult one. Having representatives from a number of different countries discussing plans would not be too useful at the present time, but something had to be done to stimulate this feeling of partnership.

Air Chief Marshal Elliot said that he personally endorsed most heartily Admiral Sherman's idea of joint missions. He said that during his experience in the Near East (which has been quite extensive) he was particularly impressed by the unfortunate effects of the rivalry between the United Kingdom and France because they were not joint. This was true during the twenties. Marshal Elliot then said that he thought it most important that the civil side be associated in this bold program and that missions should be more than commodity dispensers.

Admiral Sherman agreed with the latter thought and cited our experience in Greece where, after we had established a well-rounded organization, we had much more success.

Mr. Nitze said he thought the association of the civil side was essential since we are basically trying to create a political impact in the area.

Sir Oliver Franks agreed and repeated that the United Kingdom was "not going to take a small view of this program. It is a common effort."

Mr. McGhee said that the armed supply program was part of a broader program which covers such questions as Israeli-Arab relations; the problem of the refugees; development of fighting groups, technical personnel for joint groups; which country should bear the greater responsibility; showing the flag by visits of naval officers and high officials, and like problems. These problems would have to be discussed in greater detail.

Mr. Nitze said he was somewhat worried about having a Board in the Middle East. He thought that questions could be raised as to the effectiveness of a Board located there. Admiral Sherman agreed with this. He said that a feeling might arise that the country in which the Board was located would be getting the plums. Mr. Burrows said that he had simply raised the question for discussion purposes only. He felt, however, that there should be a permanent organization of reasonably high-ranking personnel.

Mr. McGhee reiterated that we were interested in instilling the feeling of partnership insofar as possible. Since the effort is political, we must overcome the nationalist-type of reaction. He felt that the program might help the United Kingdom out in Egypt because of mutuality aspects. Sir Oliver Franks said that this was possible.

In response to a question from Mr. Burrows as to how much publicity we planned to give to the program, Mr. McGhee said that we would have to make some positive statement. This would probably take place after the program had been submitted to Congress.

Sir Oliver Franks expressed his appreciation for the information given to his Government. It was agreed that a working group would be established to look into the questions raised by the meeting. Mr. McGhee gave Sir Oliver Franks a copy of the attached paper <sup>3</sup> setting forth a number of the points which had occurred to us.

[Enclosure A]

Paper Drafted in the Department of State 4

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

[Subject:] Notes Re Arms Supply to Arab States and Israel, For US-UK Discussions May 17, 1951

A. Nature of U.S. Arms Aid Program:

Program is primarily a political weapon designed to strengthen the several Arab states and Israel; to improve their political and economic stability and to increase their will and ability to resist penetration by the USSR.

B. Arms Supply—Cash and Grant:

- 1. U.S. arms aid must be in accord with statutory requirements; i.e., President must find arms so furnished contribute to the security of the U.S.
- 2. It must be assured that arms will not be used contrary to Bilateral Agreements with U.S. (i.e., Tripartite Declaration protected).
- 3. Impartiality consistent with strategic considerations must be preserved between the Arab States and Israel.
- 4. Impartiality will have to be preserved in character of arms supplied.
- 5. Arms aid should be associated with political quid pro quos that are of general benefit to the West in the Cold war; for example, the British effort in Jordan and the U.S. at DAF <sup>5</sup> must be conceived as of general benefit to the West.
- 6. Arms aid must be handled so that the countries of the area will not neglect expenditures on economic and social betterment.
- 7. Arms aid can be accorded only in response to a governmental request; i.e., governments must be prepared to back their military in making requests.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See Enclosure A, below.

&#x27;Source text indicates neither the identity of the drafting officer(s) nor the date of preparation.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Dhahran Airfield, Saudi Arabia.

- 8. Governments receiving U.S. aid must abide by all MDA requirements re inspection and supervision of end use.
- 9. Any arms aid will be within the framework of a correlated program for each country; clandestine purchases of extra arms will affect receipts.
- 10. Procurement assistance is the most valuable part of the program since global arms requirements will continue to exceed availabilities.
- 11. To conform to U.K. and French practice as well as to save U.S. funds and effort the rule will be cash reimbursable assistance: U.S. grant aid will be employed to achieve general Western political objectives: U.S. Grant arms aid will be a supplement.
- 12. Types of existing arms will be important factor in the supply of new arms.
- 13. To avoid inter-country jealousies in the area re arms aid, detailed country programs will be made known only to the countries receiving the aid and in the US-UK-France correlation process.
- 14. Arms supply of all kinds from the US, UK or France should be susceptible of being shut off at short notice in the event of developments contrary to the Tripartite Declaration, coups d'états or riots. C. Correlation of Arms Supply:

Principal suppliers of arms will be the UK, France and the US. To meet the above criteria (including the criteria imposed by US legislation) a tripartite system of correlation is required. This system should not be publicized and should work so far as possible under cover.

The functions of such a tripartite system would be:

- 1. A means for sharing information regarding the armaments of the Arab States and Israel.
- 2. To provide for consultation on US, UK, and French plans to fill arms requirements of individual countries on either a cash or a grant basis. Advance knowledge of plans will:
  - (a) Avoid embarrassments.
  - (b) Permit arms supplies to be fitted into programs of other countries.

(c) Permit consideration re character of arms.

(d) Help prevent over-expenditures on arms by individual states.

3. Keep records of arms supplied.

- 4. Be the system to assure arms are not used contrary to tripartite declaration.
- 5. Focal point for emergency shut-off of arms supplies (see Criterion 13, above).

Such a system would not possess authority to stop arms supply by any of the three members; it would endeavor to operate on the grounds of common sense and honest dealing between members. Instances of serious dispute would be referred to governments for diplomatic handling.

S/ISA Files: Lot 52-26: "Near East": Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

SECRET

Washington, May 22, 1951—6 p. m.

727. You have been informed (Deptel 4093 to London Mar 9 2 rptd Arabs caps and Israel) of proposed NSC statement of US policy toward Arab States and Israel to supplement but not supersede previous policies.3 Pres approved this as national policy Mar 17.

Subsequently Dept has been formulating with Def and ECA comprehensive program to implement the new policies which are basically designed to (1) offset trend toward neutrality in certain parts area and (2) maximize will of states to cooperate with US and friendly countries to resist USSR penetration. Program now has Presidential approval and will shortly be presented publicly Congress. Underlying philosophy is so important success program that fol provided on secret basis for ur discreet use in taking Govt to which you are accredited into our confidence prior publication now scheduled about May 23 or 24.

1. USG has deep desire within limits its capabilities to help friendly countries to strengthen themselves, develop their resources, improve standards of living and facilitate participation in UN programs for collective security.

2. Prominent among factors contributing "soft" situation Arab States and Israel are (a) econ and social disabilities; (b) Arab refugees which constitute incubus on peace prospects; (c) despair and frustration resulting from feeling that Western nations have no interest in or plans for defense area, and (d) the absence of normal relations between Israel and the Arab States.

3. New program about to be submitted to Congress <sup>4</sup> has econ, social and mil components but does not involve formal defense commitments to Arab States and Israel. US continues back Tripartite Declaration.

4. Social component program well advanced with recent sig contracts for Point IV assistance in all Arab States and Israel.

5. Econ component consists of massive attack on Arab refugee problem solution of which will be major contribution to both Arab Drafted by G. Lewis Jones, Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs, and Samuel Kopper. Approved by Mr. Jones and cleared by Mr. McGhee. Sent priority to Baghdad, Cairo, Tel Aviv, Amman, Beirut, niact to Jidda and Damascus, and to London, Paris, Moscow, and Jerusalem for Ambassador Palmer.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed. <sup>3</sup> NSC 47/5, p. 95.

&lt;sup>4</sup>Reference is to the Mutual Security Program of 1951, submitted to Congress by President Truman on May 24, 1951. See editorial note, p. 150.

States and Israel. Reintegration program (probably partly conducted for US directly by ECA under "banner of UN") will be major contribution Syria, Jordan and Egypt as well as to Israel. For this purpose Dept seeking $50 million in hope that comparable increases Brit and Fr contributions will permit energetic and forthright handling of problem which Arab League members stated to be susceptible solution provided Western Powers give evidence determination push reintegration through to successful conclusion.

- 6. In keeping policy impartiality and as element balanced program, Dept seeking $25 million econ grant aid for all Arab States and an additional $25 million grant aid for Israel alone. Israel figure will be made public but apportionment between Arab States will be kept as confidential as possible to avoid jealousies. Needs Israel fully justify $25 million.
- 7. Mil aid component is new departure for US in area. It is undertaken at time when arms needs our Allies have never been greater. Consequently limited quantities arms will have to suffice for time being. Arms will be made available in correlation with UK and Fr. US mil aid will of course be subject bilateral agreements. FYI only we must extract from token deliveries mil hardware maximum psychological value in terms of indigenous will to resist aggression and where necessary polit and mil advantages which may be needed by Western nations.
- 8. Of first importance re mil aid is fact that if program goes through Arab States and Israel will be eligible (a) for procurement assistance re arms; (b) services of US personnel in training and advisory capacity and (c) to supplement purchases grant arms aid for all of the Arab States and Israel not to exceed $40 million. FYI approx $15 million of this tentatively earmarked for Saudi program. Grant aid will be used to supplement direct purchases and cash reimbursable programs. Dept well aware fact that grant arms assistance to states which have been purchasing supplies from UK and France cld adversely affect position and prestige those nations. For this reason Dept has recently informed UK and France general lines program we contemplate submitting to Congress in order that plans may be made to correlate all assistance to area and to obtain maximum benefit of both cash and grant aid irrespective its origin. (Dept Memos Conversation this subject with UK and Fr May 17 5 airpouched to you).
- 9. In presenting foregoing as advance notice of hoped-for but not certain program of USG you shld make it clear that this is not US bid to assume paramount power position in ME at expense Brit or Fr interests. Both these Govts given assurances this score and US hopes all phases its program can be correlated with the UK and Fr as well as with all states of the area. FYI some US-UK-Fr correlating agency will be required handle arms requests. Nature location this now under study.

 $<sup>^{5}</sup>$  See the memoranda of conversation by Mr. Kopper, pp. 130 and 134.

10. Legislative uncertainties plus fact many operational details yet to be resolved make it impossible describe what final form program will be or when it will be approved by Congress. However, important that Govt leaders understand that this represents major US policy development. It is based on concept of balanced area approach and will be so administered. Also based on concept of impartiality and its formulation has resulted in part from careful and sympathetic appraisal of needs and desires of ME states as communicated by their leaders. Success of program, if and when it receives Congressional approval, will depend in large measure on willingness all interested states implement it in cooperative spirit.

11. Dept believes it important that Govt leaders be informed outlines program by US Chiefs of Mission before inaccurate reports gain any circulation. Where necessary you shld carefully explain Congressional machinery through which program must go before it receives final approval, thus minimizing over expectations leading to dangerous disappointments.

12. Contents this tel except Saudi mil aid figure shld be given ur Brit and Fr colleagues promptly. Dept informing UK and Fr here.

13. Leg Damascus requested inform Azzam Pasha personally and solicit his counsel re important step making outline program known to significant dels Arab League mtg even though their home Govts will be informed directly. Text pertinent portions bill to be submitted Congress will be sent soon as finalized.

14. Report action.6

ACHESON

Editorial Note

Throughout 1951, the strategic and political problems of the Eastern Mediterranean area continued to preoccupy and perplex responsible officials within NATO and the United States Government. Should NATO be extended to the fringes of the Middle East to include Greece and Turkey, and if so, should a separate command arrangement be established to cover the defense needs of these countries or should their armed forces and strategic interests be fully accommodated within the existing NATO structure? The answer to these questions gradually emerged during the course of debate and discussion both within the NATO Standing Group and between United States and United Kingdom civil and military officials in Washington and London. Greece and Turkey would be invited to join NATO as full partners. Concurrently, negotiations would begin between the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey to establish a Middle East Command which would be expanded to include Egypt and, possibly later, other countries of the Near East as well. For documentation on the admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO and on the development of the Middle East Command concept as it related to the problem of expanding and rationalizing the NATO command structure, see volume III, part 1, pages 460 ff. Documentation on the Middle East Command as it related to the interest of the United States in Near Eastern security matters is presented in the following pages.

&lt;sup>6</sup> See memorandum by Mr. Villard to Nitze, June 1, p. 152.

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: 723 Near and Middle East

Working Paper Drafted by the Policy Planning Staff 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 23, 1951.

COMMAND STRUCTURE IN THE MIDDLE EAST THE PROBLEM

To devise a command set-up for the Middle East which will:

- 1. Meet pressing U.K. need for participation in command arrangements in Europe and the Middle East.
- 2. Be consistent with a Mediterranean Command protecting Eisenhower's southern flank and responsible for all communications through the Mediterranean.
- 3. Integrate Turkey into Middle East land defense, Turkey being at the same time a full member of NATO with double responsibilities:
  (a) Balkan, Dardanelles and Aegean defense, and (b) defense of its Eastern frontier.

- 4. Attract the voluntary support of the Arab States, Israel, Iran, Pakistan, and contiguous land areas as a development contributing to area security.
- 5. Take into account French insistence to be consulted on all Middle East matters and to participate in the affairs of Syria and Lebanon.
- 6. Take into account the special U.S. training and supply relationship with Turkey, Iran, and Saudi Arabia.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This paper was drafted the week following the first of the United States-United Kingdom military conversations on questions of regional command, during the course of which General Collins and Admiral Sherman first seriously raised the issue of a separate Middle East Command associated with NATO and including, at a minimum, Turkish and British military units under British command. For information on these meetings, see the editorial note, vol. III, pt. 1, p. 522. Copies of this paper were sent to Bradley, Nitze, Matthews, Jefferson, Jones, McGhee, Martin, Perkins, General Taylor, Spofford, Knight, Sherman, Hull, Vandenberg, White, Admirals Duncan and Davis, and G. Lewis Jones.

7. Take into account British treaties with Egypt, Jordan, and Iraq.

8. Take into account the requirement to keep Middle East oil flowing to the West.

9. Take into account the requirements for bases in the area available for immediate Allied use from D Day.

10. Recognize unlikelihood U.S. ground forces being available for deployment in the area for a considerable period.

11. Make use of the psychological force of a practical display of U.S.-U.K. (and secondarily French) cooperation and unity re Middle East defense problems.

12. Recognize that, while U.S. association with the U.K. and France will expose it to the charges of imperialism based on the records of the U.K. and France in the area, the over-all gain to area defensive capability is worth the risk.

13. Recognize the fact that strengthening the will of the peoples of the Middle East to resist will be primarily a political task until the Western power potential is greater than at present.

14. Recognize that the U.S. is not prepared to give a formal defense commitment at this time to Iran, Pakistan, the Arab States and Israel, but that it is prepared in conjunction with the U.K., France, and these states themselves to help plan and prepare the defense of the area.

15. Take into account the U.S.-U.K.-French Tripartite Declaration re Israel.

16. Recognize the British Commonwealth interest in Middle East defense.

17. Gradually obviate Egyptian and Iraqi difficulties with the U.K.

arising out of their treaties.

18. Contribute to the establishment of a practical modus vivendi between the Arab States and Israel.

19. Capitalize upon the new U.S. economic, refugee, and military aid programs for the Middle East as well as other U.S. and U.K.

development efforts such as Point IV, etc.

20. Take into account the need for careful time-phasing in developing Middle East security arrangements so that these will not outrun the desire of the inhabitants for the benefit of area-coordinated defense; be provocative to the U.S.S.R.; or involve the Western industrial potential in unfulfillable demands for arms.

TIMING

As indicated in paragraph 20 above, the establishment of a Middle East command structure must be carefully time-phased. The following three periods are envisaged:

1. The present (announcement, diplomatic support, etc.)

2. Cold war build-up

3. Hot war

THE PRESENT

There is a need for an early announcement of Allied interest in Middle East defense because:

1. U.K. domestic political pressure for participation in European and Middle East command arrangements.

2. The new U.S. approach to the Arab States and Israel is based on correlation with U.K. efforts and coordination with France; therefore, public emphasis is timely.

3. The Arab League is presently considering inconclusively its own defense structure in light of Syrian-Israeli dispute.

4. A new element might assist in solving current U.K. difficulties in Egypt.

BRITISH ANNOUNCEMENT

The following announcement by the U.K. is suggested:

"The defense of the Middle East* is an integral part of the world defense problem for which NATO has been instituted to handle the European, Atlantic, and Mediterranean aspects. The U.K. has been in consultation with its NATO allies generally, and the U.S. and France in particular, and announces with their concurrence that, in the event of concerted action under the U.N. to repel aggression against that area, the U.K. is prepared to offer the British Commander in the Middle East to serve as 'Supreme Allied Commander' for such Allied land and air forces as can be placed at his disposal to repel the aggressor. He would have similar responsibility for naval operations in the Red Sea, Persian Gulf, and Southeastern Mediterranean. The U.S. and France have stated that they will support this appointment.

"The capability of many countries of the area to defend themselves even with the assistance of outside forces, leaves much to be desired. The U.K. is therefore assigning to the Commander in Chief, British Middle East land forces, the additional title and responsibility of 'Director, Middle East Cooperative Defense Board'. The CINCMELF will establish a Middle East Cooperative Defense Board to serve the states of the area having an interest in mutual defense and interested in receiving strategic guidance, training and procurement assistance. In this endeavor, the U.K. has been assured of the active support of the Commonwealth countries, Turkey, the U.S., and France. The Middle East Cooperative Defense Board is designed to assist in the creation of adequate resistance capability in the area. The 'Director, Middle East Cooperative Defense Board' will have attached to him a special advisory staff representing the states of the area interested in collaboration for area defense as well as representatives of the U.S., France, and members of the British Commonwealth most concerned."

A declaration of this kind would fit in very well with the new U.S. economic-military approach to the Middle East under NSC 47/5.2

*Conceived for this purpose as the area comprising Cyprus, Eastern Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, the Arab States, Libya, and Israel. The U.K. might wish to leave this vague in order to avoid arousing further Iranian reaction. [Footnote in the source text.]

2 Ante, p. 95.

The U.S. Secretary of State would lose no time in publicly concurring in the British announcement; the Turkish, French and Commonwealth governments would take similar action, both publicly and through diplomatic channels.

Underlying this British announcement (the British should take the lead in order to derive the most prestige benefit) would be firm U.S. concurrence in the concept of a British "Supreme Allied Commander" for the period of Hot War. Once this concept is accepted, there should be no difficulty about the U.S. correlating its activities with the U.K. during the period of the "Middle East Cooperative Defense Board".

The "Middle East Cooperative Defense Board" is conceived as a "new look" for Middle East defense arrangements, which hitherto have rested largely on bilateral British treaties with Egypt, Jordan, and Iraq. The concept of this "Defense Board" might help to distract attention from the Anglo-Egyptian impasse, particularly if U.S. interest and activity clearly take place under the aegis of the Board.

It is assumed that in a period of Hot War the U.S. would appoint a Deputy to the Supreme Allied Commander; there would be no objection, after our economic-military program gets under way, to the U.S. occupying the post of "Deputy Director, Middle East Cooperative Defense Board". At some stage it might be politically desirable to appoint a Turk or an Arab Deputy Director also. To integrate Israel into the area defense pattern, it would be necessary at the start for the Board to offer Israel a special Israel branch; the ultimate objective would be full Israel participation in the central Cooperative Defense Board.

AREA OF RESPONSIBILITY

The area of responsibility for the "Supreme Allied Commander, Middle East" whether he wears that hat, or his hat as "Director, Middle East Cooperative Defense Board", should be meshed with the command area for the Mediterranean under NATO. Careful coordination would be required at two points:

1. Mediterranean supply line

2. Turkey

The Middle East theatre is dependent upon the Mediterranean supply route and consequently the NATO Commander in the Mediterranean will have the heavy responsibility for keeping the Middle East theatre supplied, convoy protection, etc.

Turkey (presumed to have become a member of NATO) will be in both the NATO and Middle East camp. The Turks would be asked, with respect to the employment of their forces and operations in relation to the Middle East theatre, to accept the planning guidance and wartime strategic direction of the Supreme Allied Commander, Middle East, who should have a Turkish Deputy. This is necessary because Turkey is the anchor of the outer defense ring of the Middle East. The NATO part of Turkey's activity will be the defense of the Dardanelles, European Turkey and activities in the Aegean and Black Sea, under a NATO command organization. It is believed that this philosophy could be sold to the Turks.

Special provision must be made to protect the special U.S. position in Saudi Arabia where we hope to secure the Dhahran air field. It would be disastrous for the Middle East command structure proposed in this paper if the U.S. should insist that Saudi Arabia must be excluded from the Supreme Commander's purview. Whichever hat the British Commander is wearing, the U.S. should acknowledge his authority so far as plans and the general character of the training program are concerned. We would assume, however, that the commander of U.S. activities in Saudi Arabia would represent the prospective Supreme Allied Commander with the function of supervising the training conducted by all training missions working in that country.

If the French insist on a positive role in the program (they may be content only to kibitz) this could only be in Syria and Lebanon. If these countries do not concur in France having a role comparable to that of the U.S. in Saudi Arabia, the question is dead because we cannot afford to jeopardize the program by forcing the French on either of these countries. If Syria and Lebanon are willing to have the French, arrangements could be made comparable to that of the U.S. in Saudi Arabia.

For obvious reasons, the U.K. would take the lead in Egypt, Iraq, and Jordan.

Nothing in the Middle East Command Structure would change U.S. supply and training responsibilities for Turkey; these two functions had best fall within the ambit of Turkey's NATO membership.

Iran represents a special problem regarding which little progress appears possible at the present time; our ultimate objective should be to have the Commander of the U.S. training mission hold some form of mandate from the British Supreme Commander. The present political situation in Iran is so critical, however, that any public suggestion of such a relationship would cause strong reaction in Iran and might jeopardize the continuance of the U.S. mission.

Pakistan is deliberately included because of expressed Pakistan interests in the defense of this area, because it is a Moslem country, and because it constitutes a direct link with the British Commonwealth. The British would take the lead in Pakistan.

Where country leadership does not fall into a natural pattern as regards the U.S. or the U.K. (e.g., Libya, Lebanon, Syria) there would be advantages in having joint U.S.-U.K. training and supply missions work in these countries.

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: 723 Near and Middle East

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones) to the Director of the Policy Planning Staff (Nitze)

TOP SECRET

Washington, May 23, 1951.

Subject: Working Paper re Command Structure in the Middle East 1

I think we will get further faster with the British if we make it very clear that our ideas with regard to the Middle East Cooperative Defense Board are put forward only as a basis for discussion. The NECDB<sup>2</sup> represents an ideal toward which we might work in correlation with the British if the British buy the general cooperative concept.

At this stage of NE politics, NE cannot assert that even one of the Arab States would at the outset jump on the NECDB bandwagon. We know that most of them would like to do so, but Arab League solidarity is such that a snap reaction might be to boycott the NECDB, and it would take a long time to unstick this boycott.

It will obviously be highly desirable to have the British announcement (page 4 of Working Paper) refer to the concurrence of Turkey, Pakistan, the Arab States and Israel in the appointment of a British "Supreme Allied Commander". These are the states vitally concerned and they will be quick to resent the imposition of a command structure prior to consultation with them.

If the British show themselves willing to study seriously the idea of the NECDB, the following action would be indicated:

1. U.S. and UK should seek from their Missions in the area an estimate of the reaction in each country to the ideas in the Working Paper without a direct approach to the governments concerned.

2. Reactions from Missions should be pooled with a view to tailoring the concept more precisely to the political problems in the area.

3. The revised U.S.-UK Working Paper should be discussed with the French.

4. U.S., UK and French should begin in concert to lay a careful diplomatic and military foundation in each of the states of the area in order to assure in advance their favorable reaction both to the Supreme Allied Commander and the NECDB. This stage managing in advance is of the utmost importance.

5. UK announcement would be made.

Time is an important element, but this, in the light of inter-Arab frictions as well as Arab-Israeli frictions, is going to be a delicate political operation which could fail abysmally unless it is well handled.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Near East Cooperative Defense Board (NECDB) appears to be used here and elsewhere in this memorandum as an alternative usage to Middle East Cooperative Defense Board.

I doubt whether the program we suggest in the Working Paper could be brought into being in much less than two to three months.<sup>3</sup>

Editorial Note

On May 24, President Truman submitted to Congress a Special Message on the Mutual Security Program in which, among other requests, he recommended $415 million in military aid for Greece, Turkey, and Iran, a portion of which would be available for other Middle Eastern nations if necessary. The President also recommended $125 million in economic aid for Middle Eastern countries, exclusive of Greece and Turkey for whom economic aid was provided as part of the aid program for Europe. The economic aid program for the Middle East also included programs of technical assistance to Libya, Liberia, and Ethiopia "whose economic problems are similar to those of the Middle Eastern countries."

In recommending his program of Middle East aid under the Mutual Security Act, the President said, inter alia, "The countries of the Middle East are, for the most part, less developed industrially than those of Europe. They are, nevertheless, of great importance to the security of the entire free world. This region is a vital link of land, sea, and air communications between Europe, Asia, and Africa. In the free nations of the Middle East, lie half of the oil reserves of the world. No part of the world is more directly exposed to Soviet pressure. The Kremlin has lost no opportunity to stir these troubled waters, as the post-war record amply demonstrates. . . . There is no simple formula for increasing stability and security in the Middle East. . . . But the pressure against the Middle East is unremitting. It can be overcome only by a continued build-up of armed defenses and the fostering of economic development." The President's Message on the Mutual Security Program is printed in full in Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1951, (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1965), pages 302-313. Documentation on the formulation and implementation of the Mutual Security Program may be found in volume I, pages 266 ff.

&lt;sup>3</sup> The establishment of a Middle East Command within the overall NATO command structure became the subject of intense debate and discussion between United States, British, and French civil and military officials during the latter half of 1951. For documentation on the development of the Middle East Command proposal within the NATO framework, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

S/ISA Files: Lot 52-26: "Near East": Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

SECRET

Washington, May 26, 1951—4 p. m.

741. 1. Asst Secy McGhee closely fol Depoirtel 727 May 22 <sup>2</sup> briefed reps Arab states and Israel May 24 re proposed program. Pres's statement to Congress containing totals but not breakdowns made public May 24. Reps asked keep breakdowns confidential until figs emerged hearings. No ref made earmarking for Saudi Arabia.

2. Queried by Egypt Amb re justification 25-25 apportionment

Arab states and Israel McGhee replied:

a. Arab states wld benefit economically from most of refugee 50 million—consequently Arab share more nearly 75 million.

b. Absorptive capacity and not population must be criterion economic aid: e.g. Populationwise India could absorb unlimited aid.

c. Certain Arab states well off financially due high export commodity prices and increased royalties: some states (Egypt, Iraq and Saudi Arabia) have elected not to take up all credits available to them in lending institutions.

d. Worthwhile programs (e.g. Wadi Thar Thar) require years to plan US program for one year only: 25 million figure in conjunction refugee 50 million believed about right for existing Arab absorptive capacity.

e. Israel has produced carefully documented projects in excess 25 million

- f. U.S. grant economic aid can only be supplement indigenous development efforts taking into account other sources funds and resources.
- 3. McGhee reminded Arabs that US is final judge of how much it gives and where it gives: US is not forcing grant aid on any NE state. If NE state elects seek US grant aid its request will be considered in light all factors.
- 4. Re mil assistance cash reimbursable and grant McGhee emphasized US wld require assurances and safeguards arms not misemployed in intra area aggression contrary Tripartite Declaration. Arms supply wld be correlated with UK and France.
- 5. McGhee emphasized to Arab Chiefs of Mission that Dept relying on them make clear home Govts various Congressional stages through which program must pass. It is liable to attack from many groups. Program cld be thrown out of balance, nullified or completely destroyed by statements from Arab world labeling program with

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Jones, Kopper, and Wells Stabler, Officer in Charge, Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs. Approved by Elbert G. Mathews, Director, Office of South Asian Affairs, and cleared by Frederic G. Ranney of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs. Sent to all posts in the Arab states and to Tel Aviv, London, Paris, and Moscow.

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 141.

Communist-type clichés: "biased", "imperialist", "inadequate", "unbalanced", etc. If Pres's program to assist Arab states and Israel impartially with their economic and defense problems and to settle refugee problems on sound basis is subjected undue criticism it is unlikely Congress will approve program. No balanced and impartial US program cld possibly meet all the desires of all the Arab states and Israel: if this attempt at such a program fails for lack of support in area prospects dark for anything comparable in foreseeable future.

- 6. Helpful if foregoing facts sit appreciated by responsible Govt officials and Arab leaders such as Azzam Pasha. UK and French colleagues might help propagate idea. (Dept wld be interested receive reports on attitude and activities ur UK and French colleagues re US program). Pro-program statements preferably public wld assist greatly. NE section Pres's foreign aid statement offers good peg. Report prospects such public statements.
- 7. Israel rep polite re idea area approach but from other sources Dept understands drive for $150,000,000 grant aid Israel is being pressed vigorously in Congress and publicly.

ACHESON

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: "Near & Middle East, 1949-1951"

Memorandum by Henry S. Villard of the Policy Planning Staff to the Director of the Policy Planning Staff (Nitze)

SECRET

[Washington,] June 1, 1951.

REACTION TO PROPOSED AID UNDER NSC 47/5 UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD THE ARAB STATES AND ISRAEL

- 1. Our telegrams from the Near East indicate that preliminary reaction to the "bold new policy" of economic and military aid to the Arab States and Israel, based on NSC 47/5 as approved by the President March 17, 1951, is anything but favorable. While in some instances it is admitted that the program is a step in the right direction, Arab officials are in general highly critical because Israel would receive the same amount (25 millions) as all the Arab States together. In addition, the Arabs look at the 50 million earmarked for refugee resettlement as simply a means to get Israel off the hook in regard to this problem.
- 2. To illustrate, the Egyptian Foreign Minister told Caffery he was "shocked" at the proposal for 25 millions for Israel and 25 millions for the Arabs; the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Jordan expressed "surprise and dismay"; the Iraqi Foreign Minister took great exception to the "imbalance" in the projected appropriation and was "extraordinarily critical" of our policy of assistance to Israel; and the Syrian press regards the program with suspicion as designed to favor Israel or as an "apology" for our past "mistreatment" of the Arabs. The only feature that seems to be acceptable is that relating to arms aid, and even this is looked on with some skepticism as to the benefits the Arab States might gain in comparison with Israel.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See memorandum from Mr. Villard to Nitze, June 1, infra.

- 3. British and French reaction in the field so far seems to be full approval by the British representatives and something less than that by the French. In Syria there are indications that the French are concerned over the possible conflict between our economic aid and established French banking and other interests. In Paris, the Foreign Office says it thinks the Arab States are not in a mood to accept offers which might tie them too closely to the West, because their neutralist attitude is growing and they tend to adopt a "blackmailing" attitude in dealing with the Western Powers. The British Minister in Tel Aviv foreshadowed that our "area approach" would not be particularly welcome in Israel, and the press there has now expressed dissatisfaction at Israel's share of the aid and its potential effect on the 150 million aid to Israel bill.
- 4. I have no doubt that when the good things are ready to be served up on the platter, the Arabs as well as Israel will find a way to make use of their share regardless of the apportionment. No Arab Government would be able to take the risk of passing up aid of any kind, once the appropriations are actually in sight. But I think there are at least a couple of lessons and two or three warnings to be found in the disappointing reception with which the proposed implementation of NSC 47/5 has met:
- a) There is no such thing as "impartiality" in the mind of the Arab when it comes to U.S. policy toward the Arab States and Israel. The original and fundamental bitterness in regard to our Israel policy remains the same and colors all Arab thinking. An "area approach" is too likely to stir up jealousies and may only boomerang in the long run.
- b) Even the prospect of assistance running into millions of dollars is insufficient to purchase, at least at first blush, the high-sounding objective of NSC 47/5: "The U.S. should undertake and accelerate planned technical and economic assistance that will help convince the peoples of the Arab States and Israel that they will benefit as individuals as well as States, from the victory of the free world."

c) The willingness of the Arabs to accept the possibility of getting arms from us, as distinct from economic or social aid, should make us especially careful that we don't arm them for a war against Israel instead of to resist Communist aggression.

d) If the disposition to look a prospective gift horse in the mouth should become generally known here, Congress would scarcely be enthusiastic about appropriating the money—at least for the Arabs. There is danger therefore that the whole program may fail of enactment unless a more appreciative attitude develops among the recipients.

e) While we can probably work successfully with the British in carrying out plans for the area, we must be on our guard that the French won't try to undermine the project somewhere along the line.

French won't try to undermine the project somewhere along the line.

f) We should probably embark on an information campaign, at the appropriate time, to explain the motives of our assistance. In general, the cool attitude displayed by the Arabs reflects what I think is a basic characteristic: suspicion of anyone who offers them anything for free. They don't really understand how or why they should be offered economic aid—there must be some strings attached somewhere. The distrust in this instance jumps quickly to the question of Israel and what Israel is getting out of it. From here on out, I think we should be particularly careful to see that the aid we dish out is going to produce the expected returns.

HENRY S. VILLARD

780.5/6-2951: Despatch

An Attaché in the United Kingdom (Tibbetts) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET AIR PRIORITY

London, June 29, 1951.

No. 6403

Ref: Embtel 6752, June 22, 1951 1

Subject: Commonwealth Defense Discussions

There is enclosed a copy of "Conclusions on Strategy",<sup>2</sup> which was given to the Embassy by the Foreign Office, a summary of the results of the recent meeting on Commonwealth Defense. This paper was agreed to by the Commonwealth Defense Ministers present (the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia; Canada sent an observer) although the Defense Ministers did not have full powers to commit their governments. In fact, however, the Foreign Office said this "Heads of Agreement" was about as firm a commitment as the Commonwealth nations use among themselves. This document is also being sent to the British Embassy in Washington; the Embassy was asked not to transmit by telegram lest the Department be informed before the British Embassy. It is being furnished to the Department as an "oral communication" for information purposes and it was tactfully made clear that it would be appreciated if the Department's representatives would not raise points from the "Conclusions" with representatives of other Commonwealth Governments although the Conference agreed that the United States should be informed. If the Department wishes, after study of the document, to elicit further information, the Foreign Office said that it would do its best to oblige.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Not printed; it informed the State Department that the Commonwealth Defense meeting had decided that the United States should be told of its discussions after their conclusion. It also mentioned that the first session of the meetings had taken place June 21 and were expected to end on June 26 (780.5/6-2251).

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; the "Conclusions on Strategy" stated in part that the defense of the Middle East was vital to the security of the Commonwealth nations and that effective measures had to be taken for protection of the area, including the dispatch of Commonwealth forces in the event of aggression against the free nations of the world.

Other points which the Foreign Office made on the conference are: [Here follow detailed comments on the "Conclusions on Strategy"; see footnote 2 above.]

A copy of the press release issued at the conclusion of the conference is also enclosed.<sup>3</sup> There was little discussion of the conference in the press because Shinwell told the correspondents that they would not receive any additional information and that he did not want much publicity.

MARGARET JOY TIBBETTS

Editorial Note

On July 3, British Foreign Secretary Herbert Morrison sent Turkish Foreign Minister Fuad Köprülü a memorandum proposing a "package deal" in which British support for Turkish membership in NATO was "contingent upon" Turkey's willingness to associate itself with the United States, United Kingdom, and France in establishing an integrated allied command headquarters in the Middle East and that subsequently this command be enlarged to include Egypt and the Commonwealth countries, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. The Turkish response was affirmative and British officials in Washington subsequently requested United States aid in further "pressuring the Turks along this line" if necessary. See memorandum of conversation, by Mr. Bonbright, July 6, volume III, part 1, page 554.

780.5/8-251

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs (Raynor)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] August 2, 1951.

Participants: Mr. Burrows, British Embassy

Mr. H. Raynor, Director, BNA

Mr. Burrows handed to me this morning the attached summary <sup>1</sup> of the Commonwealth Defense Ministers meeting in London in June.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed here.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed.

He said he knew we had received a report on this meeting through our Embassy <sup>2</sup> and that this might add but little to it but nevertheless he hoped it would be useful to us.

He said the significant portion of the summary related to the position of Australia. I said, as I read it, it indicated that the Australians were continuing to hedge with respect to the Middle Eastern commitment. He said this was a correct interpretation and spoke of the importance attached by his government to obtaining an all-out comment from Australia for defense assistance in the Middle East. He said he thought this was going to depend to a considerable extent or the assurances which the Australians received from us with respect to the Pacific. I said the new Pacific Pact 3 should be helpful in this respect. He agreed but said that this would depend on how the pact operated. I indicated that this was, of course, true and that it was too early to forecast what the operation would be although I could say that the State Department desired to make something out of this organization. I said that this government was fully conscious of the importance to the British and to the general situation of the Commonwealth contributions to the Middle Eastern defense and I said that as he knew this had been taken into account in connection with the matter of troops for Korea.

Mr. Burrows closed the conversation by reiterating the hope that we would continue to keep the importance of this matter very much in mind.

<sup>2</sup> See despatch 6403 from London, June 29, p. 154.

780.5/8-351

Statement by George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, in Support of the Mutual Security Program Before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate, August 3, 1951

SECRET

[Washington,] August 3, 1951.

MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM

THE NEAR EAST AND INDEPENDENT AFRICA

Mr. Chairman, I want to present the case for the Near Eastern and independent African countries for consideration under the Mutual Security Program. Specifically, I should like to discuss the problems which we face in Greece, Turkey and Iran, Israel and the Arab nations, and Libya, Ethiopia and Liberia. Programs for grant economic aid are proposed for these countries as indicated on our chart, and programs of military assistance are proposed for Greece, Turkey, Iran, Israel and the Arab nations. The sum involved for military assistance is $415 million. We also request Congressional authority to transfer 10% of the funds available for military aid to Greece, Turkey, and Iran, for assistance to Israel and the Arab States, under conditions laid down in the draft legislation which you have under consideration.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the ANZUS Pact; for documentation, see vol. vi, pt. 1, pp. 132 ff.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

I shall deal only briefly with the problems of military assistance to Greece and Turkey, since this committee is very familiar with them, and devote most of my time to a consideration of the requirements of the other countries. The Greek and Turkish programs, military and economic, have been proved by performance over the past four years. Both countries have abundantly demonstrated that they are among our staunchest allies. They have stood firm in defense of the integrity of their own territories. They have supported us in major policy issues in the United Nations. They have made noteworthy contributions to the cause of collective security in Korea. Representatives of the Department of Defense will explain the need for the military programs proposed for 1952, and representatives of ECA have already demonstrated the need for continued economic assistance.

Military assistance to Iran represents a continuation of an essential program already underway. While the Iranian situation poses special difficulties for us today, the impelling fact remains that Iran represents tempting bait to Russia in its attempt to forge a chain of satellites along its periphery. Iran's loss to the free world would jeopardize the security of the entire Middle East. Our purpose is to strengthen Iran's will to resist aggression, and to enable the Government to maintain internal stability. I should like to discuss the Iranian situation further in dealing with the economic programs which we propose in the area.

The proposal that military assistance may, under certain circumstances, be extended to Israel and the Arab States is a new one. The Department of Defense is not yet in a position to submit precise programs for the use of the funds which might be available for this purpose. Specifically, it is suggested that up to 10% of the funds made available for Greece, Turkey, and Iran might be used to provide military assistance to countries of the Near East whenever the President determines that "(1) the strategic location of the recipient country makes it of direct importance to the defense of the Near East area; (2) such assistance is of critical importance to the defense of the free nations and (3) the immediate increased ability of the recipient country to defend itself contributes to the preservation of the peace and the security of the area and is important to the security of the United States."

Events in the Middle East are moving with such alarming rapidity that it may well prove necessary to have authority of this character for use in the very near future. We cannot allow the forces of neutralism and extremism to gain further ground in the Near East. The strategic position of the Middle East is too important to allow its conquest through Soviet subversion as a result of our indifference or inaction. The Soviet intention of dominating this area, a goal expressly stated in documents exchanged between Nazi Germany and the Soviets in 1940 <sup>2</sup> and implicit in communist efforts to aggravate existing tensions, is all too clear. We must counter prevailing dissaffection in the Arab States and dispel their belief that the United States and other free countries have no interest in helping them to defend themselves. The provision of military assistance is the most concrete method of demonstrating our real interest in their security. In Israel, no comparable disaffection exists, but this new State, hard-pressed financially, is seeking assistance from us, and our help in providing military equipment would tend to ease its economic burdens.

Throughout the Near East, the proposed program will increase the will of governments and peoples to cooperate in resisting Soviet pressures both now and in the event of war. The program will bolster political stability and security, and thereby reduce area rivalries and tensions. It will also tend to create a favorable attitude in these countries towards requests which we may make for bases and other facilities important to United States security. Moreover, the introduction of modern training methods and reasonable quantities of up-to-date equipment, primarily small arms, is a condition precedent to the effective performance by these countries of their proper role in the defense of the Near East. Their forces could, if properly equipped, participate in the defense of their territories and in protection of lines of communication and vital installations. While these countries could not withstand an all-out Soviet attack, their ability to harass the enemy's lines of communication over exceedingly difficult terrain could be of inestimable value in the event of general hostilities.

Economic Aid

The program of economic aid represents a significant extension of the Point Four operations that have been conducted during the past year in the Near East. It is designed to complement the proposed military program and to help build "stability in depth" by bolstering the economies of the countries of the Middle East.

&lt;sup>2</sup>Reference is presumably to a German draft treaty, dated November 9, 1940, providing for the adherence of the Soviet Union to the Three-Power Pact and including two secret protocols, one of which defined the sphere of influence of each power. The draft treaty is printed as document 309 in Documents on German Foreign Policy, 1918–1945, series D, vol. xi: The War Years, 1940–1941 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1960), pp. 508–510.

Iran 3

The Iranian program, which was prepared before events in Iran had reached the present stage of crisis, is designed to meet the country's long-range problems by increasing agricultural production and attacking poverty and disease in that country at the "grass-roots" levels. Basic to the program is the concept that the Iranian government will assume a substantial share of the expense of jointly-administered projects, with revenues anticipated from oil operations.

This program provides for expert teams of Americans and Iranians specializing in agriculture, sanitation, vocational training and public health, working at the village level. It provides for improvement in the water supply systems in the smaller towns. It looks also to the development of basic water resources for irrigation. It provides for a group of experts from the United States Public Roads Administration, which is making such a notable contribution in Turkey, with a view to improving Iran's road network. We continue to regard this as a good program, and we hope that a solution of the current difficulties between the British and the Iranians will permit the Iranian government to do their full share in carrying it out. With the dispatch of a British Minister to Iran, we are hopeful that the negotiations which Mr. Harriman has worked so hard to reestablish will achieve the objective of restoring the flow of crude and refined petroleum from Iran on terms satisfactory to the Iranian government and to the commercial interests involved.

The amount proposed for economic assistance to Iran is $24,050,000.

Arab States and Israel

Israel, as you know, has requested $150,000,000 in grant aid from the United States for the current year. The Israeli request is based on three principal factors: its stated requirements for defense; its desire to provide for an additional 200,000 immigrants in the fiscal year 1952; and the obligation which the Israeli government states that it is prepared to assume in compensating the Arab refugees who left their homes in territory now under Israel's control, during the hostilities which broke out in 1948.

An analysis of the Israeli request, which includes an illustrative program of imports to be financed by the $150 million, has led the Executive Branch of the Government to apply a different approach to Israel's requirements. In cooperation with technicians of the Treasury Department, an analysis has been made of Israel's balance of payments. We have taken into account Israel's import requirements and its probable sources of foreign exchange, including $50,000,000 still available under the Export-Import Bank loans, which totalled

 $^{\rm s}$  Documentation concerning Iran for the year 1951 is scheduled for publication in Foreign Relations, 1952–1954, volume x.

$135,000,000. This leaves a dollar gap that will amount to somewhat less than $25 million in fiscal 1952. We have accordingly prepared an illustrative program of grant aid totalling $23,500,000.

The illustrative program for Israel is directed toward projects similar to those now being undertaken through funds available to Israel from the Export-Import Bank, namely, the production of food and the strengthening of the industrial potential of the new nation. As I have already mentioned, the program also includes authority to make grant military assistance available to Israel in addition to the proposed economic aid.

In the case of the Arab states, the problem is not so much the "dollar gap" as that of increasing the general level of production and living standards. For the wealthier Arab states which enjoy substantial foreign exchange earnings through the export of petroleum or cotton, we propose only minor technical assistance. For the poorer states in the North-Syria, Jordan, Lebanon-faced with the problems of assimilating hundreds of thousands of Palestine refugees, we propose programs very similar to those planned for Iran. We are suggesting "grass-roots" projects looking to increased food production, improved public health, and better use of water resources, together with a small component of industrial equipment. The list of worthwhile projects for these countries which can be undertaken in 1952 fiscal totals approximately $24,000,000—the same figure as the requirement for Israel based on a study of Israel's financial position. For presentation purposes, we propose identical amounts of aid for Israel on the one hand and the Arab States on the other. Although Israel, with its plans for development well under way and with its large corps of highly-skilled people, can assimilate assistance more rapidly than the Arab states, it is nevertheless in the interest of the United States that Israel and the Arab States be extended aid on an impartial basis. While impartiality does not necessarily mean equality, the illustrative division of aid for 1952 is realistic in terms of our objectives, which are to assure the cooperation of Israel and the Arab states with us in creating a situation of strength in the area.

Palestine Refugees

You are familiar with the problem of the Arab refugees from Palestine, which is the principal source of tension today in the Near East. The numbers of refugees on relief have been reduced from a peak of 1,019,000 to approximately 875,000. Little repatriation or resettlement of the refugees has taken place, however, although reports from the field indicate that we may expect further progress in areas where some of the refugees are now living. Furthermore, a substantial political advance has been made with the acceptance by the Arab states of the principle of resettlement for those refugees who do not choose to be repatriated to Israel. This acceptance is subject to the condition that the rights of the refugees to compensation, or to eventual repatriation if that should prove feasible, are not prejudiced, and to an undertaking by the international community to assure that adequate funds are available to carry resettlement projects to completion.

With this background, we propose to expand the refugee program to permit massive resettlement. From the point of view of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, relief needs for the current fiscal year will total about $25 million, and funds available for resettlement are likely to prove the sole limitation on large-scale resettlement. Resettlement funds, however, will not be spent unless they offer a definite cure for a proportionate amount of the relief burden. We can be quite certain that no resettlement can take place unless funds are available, and the $50,000,000 requested as the United States contribution will go far toward solving the problem.

It has been estimated that $150 million will be required over a three-to five-year period to resettle the bulk of the 150,000 families now on relief. Recognition by the Congress of the long-term nature of this extremely difficult problem will be helpful to the Executive Branch and to those authorities in the United Nations who are struggling with the great difficulties which this mass of homeless people represent. We are hopeful that other countries will contribute a sizable amount. To date, the United States share of the cost of the program has been approximately 55%.

Independent Africa

Assistance is also requested for Liberia, Libya and Ethiopia. Total aid for these three countries is proposed in the amount of $4 million. Programs for these countries are largely limited to technical assistance, and in the cases of Ethiopia and Liberia, these programs will dovetail into the operations of the International Bank and the Export-Import Bank, respectively. Libya will be a new nation on January 1, 1952. Libya will require assistance from the international community to become a viable, self-sustaining nation. Our interest in Libya is enhanced by its strategic location. We anticipate that, in our assistance program to Libya, we shall be cooperating with both the British and the French.

740.5/8-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs (Dorsz) <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] August 10, 1951.

Subject: Middle East Command

Participants: Vice Admiral J. Wright, Department of Defense

Mr. Cabot, S/ISA Mr. Ferguson, S/P Mr. Martin, EUR/RA Mr. Dorsz, NEA/GTI

At Admiral Wright's invitation, several State Department officers visited him at the Pentagon to discuss the problems involved in establishing a Middle East command structure which might be acceptable to the parties concerned.

Admiral Wright reviewed our difficulties with the British arising from the designation of an American to serve as SACLANT.2 In seeking compensation for their acquiescence to SACLANT, the UK originally made strong demands for a UK commander for the Eastern Mediterranean and later pressed for the top spot in a Middle East command structure. As a bargaining tool to obtain our and eventually Turkey's concurrence, the UK has linked their support for Greek-Turkish admission into NATO to that of resolution of the Middle East command structure. The command structure question has been discussed in the NATO Standing Group. The UK insists that it have the top command. We have been inclined to look with favor on a UK national serving as Supreme Allied Commander Middle East (SACME) but have not committed ourselves. The French have suggested that Greece and Turkey be under SHAPE and serve as the right flank of SACEUR. The Turks are primarily interested in obtaining a security commitment from the USA and a responsible position in the command structure. The question of their admission to NATO is secondary (State Department representatives observed that this was the case six months ago; now, however, the question of their admission to NATO is an emotional-psychological one and the Turks would be deeply embittered if their application is denied).

Admiral Wright exhibited a chart which he had prepared for possible consideration by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on August 13. According to this chart, authority would flow from a Middle East Defense Board (MEDB)—a counterpart of the NAT Council—through a Middle East Standing Group (US/UK/France) aided by a Middle East Military Committee (Turkey, Commonwealth, and Middle East countries as appropriate) and SACME, headed by a UK national with US, French, Turkish and possibly Commonwealth deputies. SACME would have air and naval component commands and area commands designated as CINCLEVANT and CINCTURKEY. The Commander-in-Chief Turkey would be a Turkish national and he would be in command of all naval, air and land forces used in Turkey. CINCLEVANT (a UK or Commonwealth national) would command such troops as SACME would make available.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Copies to Matthews, McGhee, Bonbright, Parsons, and Jones of NEA.
<sup>2</sup> For documentation on this subject, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

On the chart, MEDB was followed by a questionmark and Admiral Wright expressed uncertainty about the purpose of the Board. The State Department representatives indicated that their conception of the Board was that it would be an organization separate from SACME and with no authority over the Standing Group or SACME's component arms. SACME, however, would be chairman. In this capacity he would accept and consider requests from the Middle East countries for assistance in the defense field and would make such recommendations and extend such assistance as might be appropriate and feasible. In the light of this explanation, to which thesis he agreed, Admiral Wright thought that as the Board would have to negotiate with governments, it should be a political organization. The NEA representative indicated that NEA's view was that the Board should be a military one and that its contact should be with the defense establishments of the Middle East countries seeking aid and guidance. Otherwise, we might find ourselves participants in an ineffective political organization such as the Arab League. No final position was developed.

Admiral Wright said that after the JCS passes upon his paper,3 which will be revised to reflect the idea that the MEDB is functionally disassociated from SACME, Defense will discuss the matter with the Department with a view to working out a definitive United States Government position. When such a position is reached, we might then inform the British: (1) We favor that command structure but as we are not conditioning Turkish admission into NATO on its acceptance of any specific command formula we must insist that this understanding be regarded as tentative; 4 and (2) we will exert our best efforts to get the Turks to accept this formula after they are admitted into NATO. On this basis we would hope that the British would recede from their current position and would join with us in exerting every possible effort to get Turkey into NATO at the September 15 Council meeting.

3 Not found in Department of State files.

At this point in the document a handwritten notation was appended in the margin, possibly by Bonbright, which reads as follows: "I don't think we can count on firm UK support on NAT admission unless we reach a firm agreement with at least UK on command."

786.56/8-1451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones)

TOP SECRET

Washington, August 14, 1951.

Participants:

State Department:

BNA—Mr. William Hamilton MD—Mr. Robert Margrave NE—Mr. G. Lewis Jones S/ISA—Mr. George Emery —Mr. Jonathan Bingham

WE—Mr. G. McMurtrie Godley

Department of Defense: Captain G. S. Patrick, OSD

Lt. Col. R. N. Lipscomb, AFOPD

Lt. Col. P. J. Camp, Dept. of Army, G-3

Major Ruth Briggs, Office of Military Assistance

British Embassy, Washington:

Mr. Denis Greenhill Wing-Commander Wiles

Mr. Lewis Jones (Chairman) opened the meeting with the explanation that on May 17, 1951 the British Ambassador had been handed an informal paper entitled "Notes re Arms Supply to the Arab States and Israel" (Enclosure A),¹ with the understanding that informal British comments on this paper would be forthcoming. When this happened, a "Working Group" would be established. The British Embassy advised the Department on August 10 that it was ready to comment and this meeting had been assembled to hear the British views.

Mr. Greenhill distributed "Informal British Comments on Notes on Arms Supply" (Enclosure B)<sup>2</sup> and after going through this briefly, Mr. Greenhill inquired whether those present could elucidate US paragraph B.11 regarding US preference for cash reimbursable assistance. He was told that this paragraph speaks for itself, since the US must restrict the amount of its grant assistance to the greatest extent possible as well as keep in step with the UK and France.

For the information of the British representatives, Major Briggs explained the procedures used in connection with current military assistance programs. She said that the first step in connection with aiding a country is the dispatch from Washington of an Army-Navy-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Same as Enclosure A to memorandum of conversation by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs, May 17, p. 139.

<sup>2</sup> Printed below.

Air Force-State-ECA Survey Group to draw up a list of the country's forces and needs. The Survey Group then returns to Washington, where a tentative program is prepared and approved through established procedures. When a Bilateral Agreement has been signed with the recipient country, an "initial increment" of a Military Assistance Advisory Group (MAAG) is sent to the country. Major Briggs said that MAAGs are tailored to the nature of the aid and the situation in the receiving country; that MAAGs have certain statutary functions involving the maintenance and proper use of arms supplied.

Mr. Greenhill inquired whether the US would be willing to operate in countries which, for security or other reasons, withheld information regarding their military establishments. He thought this situation might arise in Syria, for example. The sense of the meeting voiced by Mr. Bingham was that if a country wants US assistance, frankness with the US was a gauge of its sincerity.

Mr. Bingham stated that he did not think that the present pattern of MAAGs need necessarily be followed slavishly: the NE program is directed towards a new area in which the regional approach is desirable. Consequently, while we must preserve all of the statutary requirements involving MAAGs, he thought there could be a good deal of flexibility and that MAAGs could be small and inconspicuous if this were politically advisable. Mr. Bingham said that one MAAG conceivably could be assigned responsibilities involving the staffing of two or more countries. Colonel Lipscomb assured the group that MAAGs presented great manpower difficulties for the Services, and he was sure that Defense did not desire a proliferation of MAAGs.

Location Tripartite Agency

The next subject discussed was the location of the Tripartite correlation mechanism. The sense of the meeting was that it is premature at this time, before consultation with the French to attempt to settle on a location: if a command structure involving the US, UK, France and Turkey were established in the area, this headquarters might be the logical seat of the agency; on the other hand, a basis for deciding on a location might be the country supplying the most arms to the area.

French Participation

Mr. Greenhill, in expansion of paragraph C. of the British paper, stated that the British Government had considered the past difficulties experienced in dealing with the French on arms matters and certain objections on security grounds; nevertheless the UK felt that these risks should be accepted and the French must be in on the Tripartite agency on a completely equal basis.

It was agreed that as a next step the Department should hand a copy of its "Notes re Arms Supply" (brought up to date and clarified by some British drafting improvements [paragraph D.ii] of British paper dealing with procedure) to the French Embassy in the near future. The French would be asked to provide their comments promptly. The French would thus be brought level with the UK on this question. It was hoped that after the French had submitted their comments, the next move might be a US-UK-French Working Group.

It was agreed that the high level discussions of a "Middle East Command Structure" should not delay pressing forward on the question of the Tripartite Agency since the volume of arms sales to the Arab States and Israel is large enough to justify a Tripartite Agency starting to work immediately.

[Enclosure B]

Paper Prepared in the British Embassy

SECRET

Washington, August 14, 1951.

Informal British Comment on "Note on Arms Supply", Handed Over by U.S. Representatives—at Meeting Held on May 17th

A. Nature of U.S. Arms Programme.

We welcome the political purpose of the U.S. programme and agree to the validity of the conception which has prompted it.

B. Conditions of Supply.

We are generally in agreement with the points listed in paragraph b. of the U.S. "Note on Arms Supply". In particular it is necessary to see that the arms are not to be used in a manner inconsistent with the Tripartite Declaration. We should also wish to be reasonably satisfied on the attitude of the recipient country in the event of war and its capacity to put the arms to use in the common cause. We also greatly appreciate the intention of the U.S. to require payment for arms supply and to limit grant aid to special cases.

C. Co-relation of Arms Supply.

We agree on the necessity for a Tripartite coordination agency of which the French would be full and equal members. Such an agency should, in our view, form part of, or be associated with, any Allied Command organization that may be established in the Middle East.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Brackets in the source text.

&lt;sup>4</sup> A typewritten note on the source text reads: "The U.S. 'Notes re Arms Supply' will be handed to the representatives of the French Embassy on August 17." See memorandum of conversation, by Mr. Godley, August 17, infra.

We feel that the coordinating agency would be best located with or close to the Commanders-in-Chief, Middle East who are in the best position to advise on the strategic aspects of supply. Alternative site for the agency would be London.

D. Functions of a Tripartite Agency.

(i) We agree in general with the sense of Section C of the American "Note on Arms Supply". As we see it the Agency would make recommendations on the desirability, both on strategic and on technical grounds, of meeting request for arms submitted by the Middle East States. Its functions would be essentially advisory and its recommendations would not be binding on the three supplying governments.

(ii) Procedure

We do not envisage any direct contact between the Agency and the Middle East States; and we agree that so far as possible it should work under cover. We would suggest the adoption of a unified procedure whereby:

(a) States applying for arms would submit their requests to the Government of the supplying country concerned;

(b) The Government of the supplying country would despatch a copy to its own representative on the Tripartite Agency;

(c) The appropriate representative on the Agency would submit the recommendations of the Agency to his own Government.

(iii) Clandestine Purchases

We agree with paragraph 9 of U.S. Note on Arms Supply of 17th May. It should be borne in mind, however, that apart from clandestine purchases there are a considerable number of above-board purchases from sources other than the United Kingdom, United States and French Governments. These should presumably also be taken into account.

We agree that instances of dispute should be referred to Governments for settlement through diplomatic channels.

Secretary's Letters: Lot 56 D 459: "Palestine"

Memorandum of Conversation, by G. McMurtrie Godley of the Office of Western European Affairs

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] August 17, 1951.

Participants: French Embassy-Mr. Daridan

Mr. van Laethem

Mr. Rosaz

Lt. Col. Maniard from Gen. Ely's staff

Defense Department—Capt. G. S. Patrick—OSD State Department—Mr. G. Lewis Jones—NE Mr. G. M. Godley—WE

Mr. Lewis Jones opened the meeting by referring to the discussion, on May 17, 1951, in Admiral Sherman's office,¹ between the French Ambassador, Admiral Sherman and Mr. McGhee at which time the proposed American program to assist the Near East economically and militarily was discussed in general terms. A part of this discussion dealt with the question of the supply of arms to the Arab States and Israel. Since that time the Department of State and the Department of Defense have been giving considerable thought to this problem and have put down on paper some preliminary thoughts on how the supply of arms to the Arab States and Israel might be correlated between the U.S., France and the U.K. Mr. Jones gave a copy of this paper (enclosure A)² to Mr. Daridan and said that we would be extremely interested in receiving at an early date the reactions of the French Government. Meanwhile did Mr. Daridan have any questions?

After reading the document carefully, Mr. Daridan thanked Mr. Jones for making it available and said that he would refer it immediately to Paris. He continued that neither he nor the other French representatives present were in a position to make any substantive comments on the points set forth but that there might be a few paragraphs on which they would like further information. In this connection he referred to paragraph B(2) which indicated that

&lt;sup>1</sup> See memorandum of conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs, May 17, p. 130.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Same as Enclosure A to memorandum of conversation, May 17, p. 139, with the addition of the following sentences to the end of the final paragraph:

&quot;The procedure under which the tripartite agency would operate would be:

&quot;1. States applying for arms would submit their requests to the government of the supplying country concerned;

&quot;2. The government of the supplying country would dispatch a copy to its own representative on the tripartite agency;

&quot;3. That representative, after giving copies to the other representatives on the agency, would obtain an agency recommendation on the request;

&quot;4. The appropriate representative on the agency would submit the recommendation of the agency to his government."

impartiality consistent with strategic considerations must be preserved between the Arab States and Israel. Reverting to Admiral Sherman's discussion with Ambassador Bonnet Mr. Daridan asked if we were thinking of a 50–50 distribution between Israel on the one hand and the Arab States on the other.

Mr. Jones replied that this, of course, was an extremely delicate and difficult matter which would have to be examined with great care and discretion. We, therefore, proposed a tripartite exchange of views as outlined in Section C of the paper, for not only must we maintain strategic balance in the area but also it was felt necessary to arm the area as a whole for the reasons set forth in paragraph A.

Mr. Jones offered to explain to Mr. Daridan the criteria we considered in determining the amount of economic aid in the M.S.P. and Mr. Daridan said he would be grateful if Mr. Jones would do so.

Mr. Jones continued that we envisaged 23.5 million dollars to the Arab States, 23.5 million dollars to Israel, plus 50 million dollars to be accorded to the Arab refugees which latter sum would be largely spent in the Arab States. This would permit us to point out to the Arab States that they would be receiving 23.5 million dollars plus 50 million dollars to be spent on refugees. At the same time Israel could be advised that it would receive 23.5 million dollars and that 50 million dollars would be spent on the Arab refugees who constitute a direct threat to Israel's security. In addition to these sums the House of Representatives had recently, on its own, added 50 million dollars to be spent as the President deemed advisable on behalf of refugees entering Israel. As this figure was not included in the administration's request, we did not know whether it would survive further Congressional processes.

As regards economic assistance, Mr. Jones said this could not be granted on the basis of population; a much sounder basis is the capacity of countries to absorb economic assistance and this bears little or no relation to the number of their inhabitants. While we do not believe the Arab States could absorb more than 23.5 million dollars in aid Israel had asked for 150 million dollars. On the basis, however, of balance-of-payments factors we judged that 23.5 million dollars is the correct figure for Israel.

Mr. Daridan then referred to the question of correlating our military assistance and alluded to the rather special military and political relation that exists between France on the one hand and Syria and Lebanon on the other. He added that his Government was more and more aware of the necessity of tripartite cooperation in the area and that only by such collaboration could a serious crisis be averted.

Mr. Jones concurred with these views and stressed that this collaboration must be with rather than against the States involved and that the undercover nature of the collaboration was essential. Mr. Daridan concurred. Mr. Jones again referred to the political objective of our aid program, pointing out that it must be clear to recipients that we are trying to assist them rather than "gang up" against them.

Lt. Col. Maniard inquired whether Mr. Jones would elaborate on the question of the control or exchange of information organization, to which Mr. Jones replied that it is intentionally left vague in that we desire to receive French and British thoughts on the question and also their views as to where the body might be located most usefully. Speaking purely for himself Mr. Jones said he personally thought the mechanism might be quite simple and might consist of one or two officers from each of the countries, keeping records, exchanging information, and making recommendations. He and Mr. Daridan agreed that this would be a delicate matter in that under no circumstances should either the Arabs or the Israeli suspect that information regarding their arms requests were being exchanged: security would have to be strictly maintained.

Mr. van Laethem asked whether we envisaged any tie-in between the correlation agency and the Standing Group.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Jones and Capt. Patrick replied that there are obviously many theater, command, and regional decisions to be made: at this meeting we were interested principally in having the tripartite arms agency established as soon as possible. It might be adopted as a going concern by some larger command set-up.

Colonel Maniard inquired what arms we thought of giving and to whom and Mr. Jones said that this obviously had not yet been decided. We were principally concerned with improving the political and economic stability of the area, partly as a means of checking Soviet infiltration of the area but mostly for its own sake. It was necessary to reduce the gulf created by the Palestine problem. Our principal object now was to get ahead with the job of establishing some sort of a tripartite arms body.

In concluding Mr. Jones emphasized that the paper given to the French was in no way rigid and that it was merely meant to serve as a basis for future discussions and exchange of ideas with the French and British.

Mr. Daridan thanked Mr. Jones for what he called "an extremely interesting document" and said he hoped to have views of his Government in the near future.

Mr. van Laethem subsequently asked Mr. Godley what control mechanism we envisaged establishing in recipient countries. He was informed that this would depend no doubt on provisions of the legislation and also on the size and types of military equipment made available to the various nations. Some type of MAAG arrangements might be established but this would depend not only on the legislative provisions but also the results of the tripartite discussions.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the Standing Group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

740.5/8-2051

Memorandum by John H. Ferguson of the Policy Planning Staff

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] August 20, 1951.

STATE-JCS MEETING AUGUST 20, 1951 ON MIDDLE EAST COMMAND ARRANGEMENTS

OUTLINE FOR DISCUSSION

1. It is not entirely clear what the precise nature of the proposals now are in the Standing Group. The paper filed last week by Admiral Wright¹ contemplates arrangements under which there would be a British Supreme Allied Commander for the Middle East, with two Commanders-in-Chief under him; one of these would be the Commander-in-Chief of all forces in Turkey and the other Commander-in-Chief of all forces in the rest of the Middle East assigned to SACME. The Supreme Allied Commander would receive guidance and direction with respect to Turkey from the NATO Standing Group, and with respect to the rest of the Middle East from a Middle East Standing Group, whose members would be the same as those of the NATO Standing Group.

2. The State Department does not have any particular objections to such a proposed command arrangement but it is difficult to say now whether these arrangements will be wholly satisfactory to the other NATO members or to Turkey. Therefore we would urge that any agreements reached in the Standing Group be subject to such changes as might be necessary when discussions occur with the other NATO members and Turkey, after its admission to NATO.

- 3. The important points, so far as the State Department is concerned, are that it be clearly understood by the Standing Group and the other NATO members that satisfactory command arrangements in the Middle East are not a precondition of Turkish membership in NATO and that any preliminary agreement on the command arrangements in the Middle East not be handled in such a way as to suggest any U.S. commitment in advance of Turkish admission to NATO.
- 4. It is possible that certain French and British views as to the nature of the command arrangements in the Middle East will alter the proposal tabled by Admiral Wright last week. We should try to find out if we can whether Admiral Wright's proposal has been altered over the week end by the Working Group of the Standing Group.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not found in Department of State files, but see memorandum of conversation by Dorsz, August 10, p. 162.

5. The other major point to be dealt with is the question of the Middle East Defense Board. It is the position of the Department of State that the Middle East Defense Board is a necessary concomitant of the Middle East Command arrangements and it must therefore be understood that such a Board would be established simultaneously with any command. It is possible that the Pentagon will resist the idea of a military defense board, since many of the questions with which it will deal are political. If necessary, it is suggested that the State Department propose that the question of the type of representation on the Board be left open until there has been an opportunity to discuss the most appropriate type of representation with the countries in the area.<sup>2</sup>

740.5/8 - 2951

Memorandum by John H. Ferguson of the Policy Planning Staff

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] August 29, 1951.

OUTLINE FOR STATE-JCS DISCUSSION, AUGUST 29, 1951

1. Middle East Command arrangements.

There is no necessity for discussing the substance of this question but it is desirable to clear with the Joint Chiefs the appropriate tactics for handling the command problem.

A. The British may feel that some announcement of the tentative command structure should be made in Ottawa.¹ This seems unwise because it would prevent adequate consultation with the Turks in advance and would inevitably give the impression that the matter had been finally decided and was in some sense a precondition to Turkish membership in NATO.

&lt;sup>2</sup> At the State—JCS meeting of August 20, it was agreed to instruct Admiral Wright, the United States Representative, NATO Standing Group, that command arrangements for the Middle East could not be considered a precondition to the admission of Turkey to NATO, and that whatever arrangements would be concluded prior to Turkish admission would be subject to revision after consultation with Turkey. It was also agreed to instruct Wright to suggest consultations with the Arab States and Israel before any announcement of command arrangements was made. State Department officials also advanced the idea of a military rather than civilian Middle East Defense Board which would be established simultaneously with a Middle East Command, would be outside the Command structure, and would, in the words of Deputy Under Secretary of State Matthews, "be bait to get the countries of the area to do more." It was decided to defer consideration of the proposed Defense Board and to concentrate initially on the establishment of a Middle East Command (State—JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Reference is to the Seventh Session of the North Atlantic Council which met at Ottawa between September 15–20, 1951. Documentation on this session is in vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 616 ff.

B. The State Department feels that it may be necessary to talk to the Egyptians about the Middle East arrangements in an effort to internationalize the headquarters in Egypt and avoid the difficulties of the present bilateral arrangements between the British and Egyptians. It will not be possible to work with the Egyptians on this matter prior to the Ottawa meeting.

C. The State Department also believes that the question of some form of board or organization to secure cooperation in the Middle East on defense problems should be established at the time the command is announced, and here again it would appear better tactics to have discussions, particularly with the Egyptians, in order to determine the most effective type of organization for achieving the purpose we have in mind.<sup>2</sup>

[Here follow topics dealing with Egypt, Korea, and MTDP force requirements.]

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: 723 Near and Middle East

Paper Prepared in the British Embassy 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 1, 1951.

GREECE, TURKEY, AND THE MIDDLE EAST COMMAND

The Turkish Ambassador in London has told the Foreign Office that as the Turkish Government had said in their reply to an earlier communication from the British Government and as Mr. Koprulu had repeated to Mr. Morrison at Strasbourg Turkey had already accepted the principle of her participation with the United Kingdom and the United States and France in an integrated Middle Eastern Organisation. There was no doubt about that. The Turkish Government would be willing to repeat this statement to us and to the United States and French Governments and to any other of the North Atlantic Treaty Governments, if they wished to put the question. Turkey was not willing however to take part in conversations with the United Kingdom, United States and French Governments about the detailed working out of this organisation until she could do so as a party to the North Atlantic Treaty. As soon as Turkey became a party, talks among the Four Powers could take place; and those could be followed by talks with other powers such as Egypt.

&lt;sup>2</sup> At the State–JCS meeting on August 29, it was quickly agreed to discourage any effort at Ottawa to announce tentatively agreed upon command arrangements. Perkins added that recent telegrams from Cairo reporting a steady deterioration in Anglo-Egyptian relations had made it clear "that a premature announcement of Middle East Command arrangements might prejudice current maneuvers to bring Egypt to cooperate in a Middle East defense arrangement." Matthews stated that the hope of averting a crisis in Anglo-Egyptian affairs "lay in getting the command arrangements established in time and in such a way as to satisfy the British strategic needs and Egyptian pride" (State–JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417). Documentation on Anglo-Egyptian tensions over the Suez Canal Zone and the political future of the Sudan is on pp. 343 ff.

¹ In a covering memorandum to this document, Dorsz informed Matthews that the paper and "the text of a communication which gives the gist of instructions from Foreign Secretary Morrison to the British Ambassador at Ankara" had been handed to Perkins by Burrows on September 1. The instructions to the British Ambassador, not printed, were to ask the Turkish Government if it would agree to hold discussions with the Standing Group powers at the end of September in order that some sort of approach could be made to Egypt for the purpose of obtaining Egyptian participation in a Middle East Command. (PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: 723 Near and Middle East)

2. In the light of this communication the Foreign Office have decided that some modification will be necessary in the procedure they had envisaged for dealing with the joint problem of Turkey's admission to N.A.T.O. and the setting up of a Middle East Command Organisation. They have considered various alternatives and have come to the conclusion that the best course would be as follows:

Agreement at Ottawa to invite Turkey and Greece to join N.A.T.O. and notification to both countries that it was now open to them to accede to the Treaty, coupled with some sort of statement that they would be regarded as "members elect". On the strength of this the United Kingdom, United States and France (if agreed among themselves) should be able to persuade the Turks to join them immediately in conversations about the Middle East Command, stressing that they would take part in the talks in this capacity. It would have to be explained to them that the reason why they were not full members of N.A.T.O. was not connected with the Middle East question but with the formalities of their assumption of the obligations under N.A.T.O. etc. Meanwhile, they might possibly begin to sit in as "members elect" at meetings of Deputies and other N.A.T.O. bodies immediately after Ottawa if they wish.

- 3. This means in fact that the Foreign Office agree to the entry of Greece and Turkey into N.A.T.O. without attaching any "strings" to the invitation and that they content themselves with the formal undertaking given by the Turkish Ambassador that "Turkey had already accepted the principle of participation with the United Kingdom, United States and France in an integrated Middle Eastern Command Organisation." In these circumstances the Foreign Office have instructed His Majesty's Ambassador at Ankara to make a communication to the Turkish Government on the lines of the Annex to this paper, which gives the gist of Mr. Morrison's instructions.
- 4. The Foreign Office wish the State Department to know of their conclusions on this subject and of the action they have taken in Ankara. In order to summarise and clarify the position they have stated that the programme as they see it should now be as follows:
- (i) The Three Powers should reach firm agreement at the Tripartite conversations in Washington on the broad principle that they will organise an integrated Allied Command in the Middle East in which they will seek Turkish participation as soon as Turkey has been invited to join N.A.T.O. and in which they will seek to secure Egyptian participation as a price for a settlement of the base and headquarters problems in Egypt. (The sort of arrangements we have in mind for this will be discussed in the forthcoming talks on Egypt in Washington).

(ii) At the Ottawa meeting the Three Powers will simply inform the Council of their intention to make an announcement of this kind and there need not be any discussion in the Council. We agree therefore not to press any further for the inclusion of Command questions in the Agenda.

(iii) The announcement would then be made by the Three Powers with an indication that they would propose to discuss the whole matter as soon as possible with the Turkish and Egyptian Governments and at a later stage with other interested Governments in the Middle East. There would of course have to be some preparation of the Egyptian and other Middle East Governments in advance. The form of the announcement would have to be very carefully considered in order to meet the various susceptibilities of the Parties involved.

(iv) We are prepared, subject to (v) below, to agree that the announcement should not mention the nationality of the Supreme Commander since the statement that it was to be a British officer might create an unfavorable initial reaction in Egypt and prevent them agreeing even to discuss the matter. This of course does not mean that we in any way retract from the position (with which the United States Government have agreed) that Supreme Allied Commander Middle East should be a British officer.

(v) We should, however, be obliged to insist on a public statement to this effect if the final appointment of an American Admiral as Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic were to be announced. We would rather see the Atlantic appointment even further delayed than prejudice in any way the prospects of selling the Allied Command idea to the Egyptians.

Conference Files: Lot 59 D 95: "WFM Mtg. 1951"

Paper Prepared in the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] September 6, 1951.

[WFM T-3/1a]

MIDDLE EAST SITUATION—TRIPARTITE COOPERATION

PROBLEM

(1) To appraise the Middle East situation, and (2) to determine to what extent a Tripartite approach should be used regarding problems of peace and security in the Middle East.

&lt;sup>1</sup>A cover sheet indicates that this paper was drafted, and then revised on September 4, for use in tripartite talks at the forthcoming Washington Foreign Ministers Meetings held September 10–14, 1951. The source text was given the designation WFM T–3/1a. For documentation on the Washington Foreign Ministers Meetings, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

US OBJECTIVES

NSC 47/5 approved March 17, 1951, stated that the political and economic stability of the Arab States and Israel continues to be of critical importance to the security of the US; and that it is in the US interest to offset the recently evidenced trend toward neutrality (which continues) and to maximize the will of those states to cooperate with the US and friendly countries in resisting penetration by the USSR. The present US objectives are therefore:

(1) to strengthen the several Arab States and Israel politically, economically, and militarily. To this end there has been submitted to the Congress a Mutual Security Program for the Middle East;

(2) to carry out the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, and to utilize whenever practicable and desirable a Tripartite approach to Middle East problems of peace and security;

(3) without prejudice to our relations with the United Kingdom and to the states in the area, to strengthen the concept of Tripartite efforts looking toward preservation of peace and security;

(4) in collaboration with the United Kingdom and France to develop overall area security arrangements which have the general acceptance of the states in the area;

(5) to take due recognition of (a) nationalist sentiments in the area with a view to harmonizing them in so far as is possible with the basic objectives of the United States in the preservation of peace, and (b) the desire of the nations in the area to be treated as equal members of the family of nations; and

(6) to support UN efforts to bring peace and stability to the area including (a) the UN Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA); (b) the Palestine Conciliation Commission (PCC), and the UN Truce Supervisory Organization (UNTSO).

BRITISH POSITION

- 1. The Middle East is an area of vital importance to the British Commonwealth and of primary responsibility to the United Kingdom.
- 2. In common interest of Free World, British position and prestige in Middle East should be maintained.
- 3. Willing to participate in tripartite efforts to maintain peace and security in the area, but strongly desirous of avoiding any arrangements which will cause any diminution of British influence.
- 4. Cooperating in present tripartite efforts such as: the control of arms supplies, the establishment of a Middle East Command, the carrying out of the Tripartite Declaration, and UNRWA.

FRENCH POSITION

- 1. Believes that the Middle East is of great importance to the security of the Free World and that the situation there is explosive.
- 2. Believes there are advantages in using tripartite approach to problems of peace and security in the area. Attaches considerable importance to the value of the Tripartite Declaration and maintains that as a general rule initiatives relating to problems of peace and security should be on a tripartite basis since individual initiatives furnish opportunities to countries in the area to endeavor to exploit alleged differences between the US, UK and France. French sensitivity about their role in the Near East was highlighted by their adverse reaction at being left out of the Malta talks in the late winter of 1950–1951 <sup>2</sup>

- 3. Has a special interest in strengthening its influence in Syria and Lebanon, and is anxious to restore French prestige in the Eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East as a whole.
- 4. Cooperating reasonably well in present tripartite efforts such as: the control of arms supplies, the establishment of a Middle East Command, the carrying out of the Tripartite Declaration, PCC, UNTSO, and UNRWA, although its financial contribution to the latter is not as large as we should like to see it.

POSITION TO BE PRESENTED

1. The US believes the general situation is such that energetic action must be taken to prevent this vital area from becoming dangerously unstable. We are taking steps both in the UN and in cooperation with others, particularly the UK and France to meet the problems.

2. The US reaffirms its complete support of the Tripartite Declaration. The US believes that this Declaration has made an important contribution to the strengthening of peace and stability in the Middle East.

- 3. The US wishes to utilize wherever practicable and desirable a Tripartite approach in handling problems of peace and security in the area. Nevertheless, there will probably be instances where it may be more satisfactory for the US, the UK, and France to act individually. This should not, however, do away with the desirability of the three governments keeping each other informed of their respective efforts.
- 4. The US believes that the growing importance of Turkey in the area requires that we consult with that government as occasion may necessitate. (NSC 47/2 ³ approved October 17, 1949, states "There should also be close United States-United Kingdom collaboration wherever possible to achieve the basic objectives. In addition, the United States should bear in mind the desirability of collaborating with France and with Turkey and other Moslem non-Arab states in the area for the same purpose whenever it is feasible and practicable".)
- 5. US is gratified that there has been increasing collaboration between the three governments in handling arms shipments to the Near

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on French reaction to the Malta talks of January 23–24 and March 10–13, see the compilation on France in volume IV.

<sup>3</sup> See Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vI, p. 1430.

East. (NSC 65/3 <sup>4</sup> approved May 19, 1950 called for collaboration between the three governments and was the basis for US adherence to the Tripartite Declaration.)

- 6. We believe that it is essential that efforts to strengthen the security of the Near East, particularly with reference to training missions, supply of military equipment and the like, should be adequately coordinated through some mechanism.
- 7. In the establishment of Middle East Defense arrangements we believe that due account must be taken of the attitudes of the States in the area and their desire to be treated as equal members of the family of nations.
- 8. US hopes that there will be strong support given to the UN efforts in the PCC, UNRWA and UNTSO to bring stability to the area. We especially hope that their financial support for UNRWA can be assured on a ratio of 3–1–1/2 or 6–3–1 for the US, UK, and French contributions respectively, in order to give affirmative evidence to the Arab States of the willingness of the major contributors to carry through the reintegration program. The ratio is about the same as that prevailing between the three in their contributions to the UN regular budget. (We have recently in collaboration with the UK and France supported firm and impartial Security Council action with regard to the Huleh situation involving Israel and Syria,<sup>5</sup> and in the Suez Canal restrictions question involving Israel and Egypt.<sup>6</sup> In addition we are seeking to strengthen PCC, and UNTSO and UNRWA.)

786.00/9-851: Circular airgram

The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices 1

SECRET WASHINGTON, September 8, 1951—10:50 a.m.

The Department believes that recent events in the Arab world necessitate a reappraisal of the potentialities of the Arab League as a stabilizing influence in Near Eastern affairs.

There are quoted below for background purposes excerpts from conclusions reached by (1) Assistant Secretary McGhee and the British Foreign Office in September 1950 and (2) the Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission at Istanbul in February 1951:

&lt;sup>4</sup> For text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, p. 163.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on the Huleh situation, see pp. 559 ff.

&lt;sup>6</sup> For documentation on Suez Canal restrictions involving Israel and Egypt, see ibid.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Robert L. Burns of NE. Signed for the Acting Secretary by Samuel K. C. Kopper. Transmitted for action to Cairo, Baghdad, Jidda, Tel Aviv, Beirut, Damascus, and Amman. Transmitted for information to London, Moscow, Paris, Ankara, Tehran, Karachi, and Tripoli.

(1) "The Role of the Arab League in Future Area Programs

The United States felt that there was little possibility of taking action to strengthen the Arab League in the political field, but that it might be desirable to do something to strengthen it in the economic and social fields. The United Kingdom did not feel that it was by any means certain that the League would revive after the various shocks it had recently sustained. There was, moreover, danger that the League might develop as undesirably in the economic and social fields as it had in the political. It was agreed that it would be necessary to keep an open mind. If there seemed to be some chance of the League occupying itself in the economic and social fields, the two Governments might concert together." <sup>2</sup>

[Here follow the conclusions on the Arab League reached by the Conference of Middle Eastern Chiefs of Mission at Istanbul, February 14–21; see page 50.]

In the course of the visit to the United States in late 1950 of Azzam Pasha, Secretary General of the League, efforts were made to convince Azzam that the League could play a valuable role in Near Eastern affairs by fostering Arab cooperation in the fields of economic and social matters. The United States Government would seriously consider the possibilities of rendering assistance in the implementation of any programs developed along these lines by the League. It was hoped that the League, heretofore held together solely by virtue of a common opposition to a realistic solution of the Palestine problem, could become a positive factor to "do good" in the area by re-directing its energies away from the politico-military arena. Experience has shown that the Arab's ability to work out problems on a multilateral basis will have to progress appreciably before these states are capable of coping with politics and military affairs on a regional basis.

It now appears that the League's tendency to create and compound problems in the area is increasing rather than decreasing. The meeting of the League's Political Committee in Damascus in the Spring of 1951 failed to take any constructive steps, and moreover fanned the Arabs' antagonistic attitude regarding the Huleh dispute. There is little evidence to indicate that the League is more than a tool which Egypt and various other Arab states use for their own purposes. Egypt finds the League useful in maintaining its hegemony in the Arab world and in gaining support for its own policies. In the latter connection it is recalled that Egypt requested a League meeting in the summer of 1950 in order to obtain support for the position which Egypt had taken in the Security Council of the United Nations regarding Korea. Egypt also found it convenient to obtain the support of the League on the Suez restrictions question, about which the Security Council has passed a condemnatory resolution. This support will only serve to make Egypt more intransigent in connection with the lifting of the restrictions.

&lt;sup>2</sup>These conclusions were reached after a discussion of the Arab League on September 21, 1950; for documentation on McGhee's talks in London, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 192 ff.

In the case of Syria, the League was utilized to obtain support for the former's position in the Huleh dispute.<sup>3</sup>

There are set forth below two of the various alternative positions regarding the Arab League which are open to the United States.

(1) In the hope of seeing the League die on the vine, this Government could, officially and unofficially, give the League—including Azzam Pasha—a cold shoulder and encourage other nations to do the same. (2) An attempt could be made to convince Egypt that the League is of little or no value to her and is in fact a burden to her development as a major international power; this could be done by extending offers of special economic and/or military assistance to Egypt, as opposed to the other states in the area, and by emphasizing to her government that Egypt is a country of much more advanced stature than the other Arab states. This would deprive the League of its main source of strength and allow internal dissention to disrupt the organization. (3) Recognizing the usefulness of regional arrangements where common interests exist, further efforts could be made to encourage the League to concentrate its activities in the technical, scientific and cultural fields.

The addressee missions are requested to furnish the Department with their comments regarding the thoughts outlined above, together with any suggestions or recommendations concerning United States policy toward the Arab League which this airgram may stimulate.<sup>4</sup>

 $W_{EBB}$

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Huleh boundary dispute between Israel and Syria, see pp. 559 ff.

&#x27;În despatch 748 from Cairo, September 20, Ambassador Caffery recommended recognizing the usefulness of the League and attempting to encourage its concentration on technical, scientific, and cultural fields. Harrison M. Symmes, the Second Secretary of Legation at Damascus agreed with this conclusion in despatch 176 from Damascus, September 28, as did Chargé John H. Bruins in despatch 181 from Beirut of October 4. However, Counselor of Embassy Glenn A. Abbey recommended in despatch 117 from Jidda of October 1 that a blend of suggestions 1 and 2 might prove the most "helpful and productive" since the Arab League was not a constructive force in the Middle East as its Political Committee, which was its only active arm, "customarily" became a "mere sounding board for Egyptian policy and deluded speeches destined solely for home consumption, with the result that far greater rigidity characterizes the foreign policies of the seven member states of the Arab League than might otherwise be the case". The above despatches are all in file 786.00. Throughout 1951, the Department continued to observe the activities of the Arab League, including the meetings of its Political Committee and the development of its Collective Security Pact without formulating an action policy. Documentation on the Arab League may be found in files 786.00 and 786.5.

780.5/9 - 851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

TOP SECRET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, September 8, 1951—4 p. m.

339. Verbatim text. Fol is text paper dated Sep 8 "Proposals to Egypt on its Participation in ME Command:" 2

"It was agreed that proposals for Egypt's participation in the ME Command shid be made to Egypt in accordance with the agreed timetable.<sup>3</sup> The precise nature of the presentation wild be left for further discussion and decision, but it was agreed that the proposals wild be within the framework of the fol:

The defense of the ME and specifically of Egypt is vital to the security of the free world. Similarly, the defense of Egypt can only be assured through the effective defense of the ME area as a whole. Egypt is therefore invited to participate as a founder member on the basis of full equality and partnership in an allied ME Command in the follmanner:

(a) Egypt to be a member of the ME Chiefs of Staff Comite and therefore a member of the ME Mil Rep(s) Comite.

(b) Hdqrs of the Supreme Allied Command, ME, shld include

Egypt Officers on the integrated staff.

(c) Egypt to be a member of the ME Liaison Section of the Supreme Command Hdqrs. This Section shld provide the Mil link between the Command on the one hand and on the other the participating countries and such countries in the areas which wish to coop with the Command.

(d) Egypt to be persuaded to invite the location of the Hdqs of the Supreme Command in her territory.

(e) Egypt to be given a position of high auth and responsibility within the ME Command Structure.

(f) Facilities to train and equip her forces to be given to Egypt by those participating members of the Command in a position to do so.

(g) The present Brit base in Egypt to be formally handed over to the Egypt(s) on the understanding that it will simultaneously become an Allied base under SACME with full Egypt participation in the running of this base in peace and war.

(h) All Brit forces not allocated to SACME will be withdrawn from Egypt starting forthwith.

<sup>3</sup> Outlined in telegram 183 to Ankara, infra.

<sup>1</sup> Drafted and signed for the Acting Secretary by Stabler. Also sent to Ankara as 182, London as 1410, and Paris as 1469.

The paper in question emerged from a series of meetings during the first week in September between British civil and military leaders, headed by Under Secretary of State Sir Reginald Bowker and Air Chief Marshal Elliot, and members of the State Department's Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs. The meetings dealt with the mounting crisis in Anglo-Egyptian affairs. Following these meetings, the French were informed of the decisions and timing regarding the invitation to Egypt and Turkey (memorandum of conversation by Jones, August 30, 780.5/8–3051 and memorandum of conversation by Perkins, September 7, 780.5/9–751). No record of the United States-United Kingdom meetings has been found in Department of State files:

(i) All Brit forces stationed in Egypt in peace and war will form part of the Allied Integrated Command of SACME.

(j) The number of Allied Forces to be stationed in Egypt in peacetime to be determined by SACME in agreement with the Egypt Govt.

(k) In the event of war, imminent menace of war or apprehended Internat emergency Egypt wld grant to the Allied forces all necessary facilities and assistance including the use of Egypt ports, aerodromes and means of communication."

Webb

780.5/9 - 851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 8, 1951—4 p. m.

183. Verbatim text. Fol is text dated Sept 8 "Proposed Timetable for Approach to Turkey and Egypt." 2

- "1. Tripartite Agreement in Washington."
- 2. Agreement at Ottawa 4 to recommend invitation of Turkey and Greece subject to constitutional procedures in NATO countries.
- 3. Greece and Turkey to be advised of decision at Ottawa by Chairman of Atlantic Council.
- 4. Immediately after (3) full information to the Turkish Government on proposed Middle East Command by US-UK and French (?) Ambassadors with the immediate object of securing Turkish agreement to an approach to the King of Egypt. The Ambassadors might convey to the Turkish President high level messages from the President 5 and the Prime Minister. If Turkish reaction to initial approach is favorable, agreement should be sought for immediate arrival of a special US-UK (and French?) military or politico-military mission to continue discussions.
- 5. Simultaneously with (4) the Australian, New Zealand, and South African Governments to be informed by the UK of the command proposals and the proposed approach to the King of Egypt.
- S. As soon as Turkish concurrence is obtained a confidential approach to the King of Egypt by the UK, and subsequently the US, Ambassadors, in order to determine the best form and manner of discussions with the Egyptian leaders on the new approach. Approach to the Egyptian Government in light of the King's advice with assistance possibly being sought from the Turks and French.

Drafted and signed for the Acting Secretary by Stabler. Repeated to Cairo as 340, London as 1411, and Paris as 1470.

 &lt;sup>2</sup> See footnote 2, supra.
 <sup>3</sup> Reference is to the Meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10-14; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

*Reference is to the Seventh Session of the North Atlantic Council, Ottawa, September 15-20; for documentation, see ibid., pp. 616 ff.

See editorial note, p. 187.

- 7. Subject to (4), military or politico-military mission will go to Turkey and subject to reaction of Egypt at the time of the completion of its work in Turkey, the mission will then proceed to Egypt.
- 8. As soon as possible after the approach to Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Israel to be informed of the general terms of the plans under consideration.
- 9. Shortly prior to the public announcement other interested states to be informed of the forthcoming establishment of a Middle East Command.
- 10. As soon as consultations with Turkey and Egypt have reached the stage where public announcement would not be prejudicial, a public statement regarding the command structure, including the nationality of SACME, should be made.
- 11. Discussions in Washington on the details of the Middle East Command between the Standing Group and Turkey, Egypt, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa leading to final agreement on the Command Structure." <sup>6</sup>

Webb

<sup>6</sup> Telegram 184 to Ankara, repeated to Cairo as 341, London as 1412, and Paris as 1471, reported the text of the timetable as handed to the French, which included the following variations: Paragraph 4 of the timetable given to the French read: "Full Info to Turk Govt on ME Command through Dipl channels with the immed object of securing Turk agreement to an approach to the King of Egypt". Paragraph 6 read: "As soon as Turk concurrence is obtained a confidential approach to the King of Egypt in order to determine the best form and manner of discussions with the Egypt leaders on the new approach. Approach to the Egypt Govt in light of the King's advice". Paragraph 7 of source text deleted from timetable handed to French. Paragraph 8 of source text modified in timetable handed to French to read "At an appropriate time" an approach would be made to Iraq, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia (780.5/9–851).

780.5/9-1151

Position Paper Drafted in the Department of Defense 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington, September 1951.]

THREE POWER ACTION REGARDING AN ALLIED MIDDLE EAST COMMAND

THE PROBLEM

To reach agreement with the French and the British prior to the Ottawa Council meeting on the actions to be taken to develop an Allied Command in the Middle East.

¹The source text was sent to the Department of State as an enclosure to a memorandum from Secretary Marshall to Acheson, dated September 11 which read: "The Joint Chiefs of Staff have recommended that the enclosed paper be accepted as the United States position concerning lines of action by the United States, United Kingdom and France to create an Allied Middle East Command. I concur with their recommendation and request your agreement to the actions contemplated. This position paper is considered to be in harmony with recent detailed conversations with United Kingdom representatives concerning Egypt and its relation to a Middle East Command."

UNITED STATES OBJECTIVES

- 1. The Three Powers should reach firm agreement at the tripartite conversations in Washington on the broad principle that they will organize an integrated Allied Command in the Middle East with Turkish participation, and in which they will seek to secure Egyptian participation. Such action to begin upon the invitation to Turkey to join NATO.
- 2. The United States is basically opposed to establishing any formal political association between the countries participating in an Allied Middle East Command. The United States seeks only the improvement of military defense arrangements. In the event that some political structure in the Middle East might have to be agreed to as a condition to successful arrangements, the development of such a structure, including its relationship to NATO, should not prevent reaching early military recommendations as to the command relationship between NATO and such a Middle East Allied Command.
- 3. The United States is agreeable to a British officer's being appointed as the Supreme Allied Commander Middle East.
- 4. Those aspects of the higher military direction for the Allied Middle East Command which relate to the defense of Turkey will primarily be the concern of NATO.
- 5. At the Ottawa meeting the Three Powers will simply inform the Council of their intention to seek an harmonious defense arrangement in the Middle East with the countries concerned. There should be no conclusive action on this matter in the Council.
- 6. Following Ottawa the matter of forming a Middle East Command and its relationship to NATO would be discussed as soon as possible initially with the Turkish and Egyptian Governments, and, at a later stage, with other interested governments. A representative of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, acting in behalf of the Chiefs of Staff of the United States, United Kingdom and France, would carry out the initial discussions as arranged by diplomatic representatives.
- 7. The United States military representative would also invite representatives of the Turkish and Egyptian Governments to participate in discussions with the North Atlantic Treaty Standing Group on these matters with the objective of agreeing to a Middle East Command and of recommending at the next NATO Military Committee meeting a relationship between NATO and an Allied Middle East Command.
- 8. As soon as consultations with Turkey and Egypt have reached the stage where public announcement would not be prejudicial to negotiations, a public statement regarding the command structure, including the nationality of SACME, should be made.

9. For reasons of military necessity it is the United States' objective to appoint SACLANT <sup>2</sup> by the conclusion of the next Council meeting, now scheduled for the last of October. Prior to this time, if sufficient progress concerning the Allied Middle East Command is not reached so as to receive United Kingdom agreement to the appointment of SACLANT, it is the intent of the United States to propose reconsideration of the North Atlantic Ocean Command.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> For documentation on matters relating to the appointment of a Supreme Commander, Atlantic, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

<sup>8</sup> On October 19, G. Lewis Jones informed Frank C. Nash, Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs, that the State Department had "carefully considered this paper" and concurred in general with the stated position, adding that the Department was already in touch with Defense "on plans and action connected with the Middle East Command" and that certain steps which the two Departments had agreed upon were "already in progress". (780.5/9-1151)

740.5/9-1251

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the President 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 12, 1951.

Subject: Importance of Egypt to the Middle East Command Structure

You are aware that informal politico-military talks were held September 5–7 with representatives of the British Government in Washington with a view to aligning US-UK policies towards Egypt in preparation for my talks with Messrs. Morrison and Schuman, and as a foundation for the establishment of a Supreme Allied Commander Middle East, in whose headquarters American, French, and, it is hoped, Turkish and Egyptian officers will participate. A prerequisite to an approach to Egypt on this question is an invitation to Turkey to join NATO. If all goes well, an approach to Egypt by the US, UK, France (and, we hope, Turkey) will take place during the last week in September.

In order to assure the continued availability to the West of the vital British base in the Suez Canal area and, at the same time, to meet the strongly-voiced demands of Egyptian nationalists for "evacuation" and "unity of the Nile Valley" (the Sudan Problem), the UK, in conjunction with the US and France, will propose to Egypt that the Suez base be transferred from UK auspices to the multilateral auspices of a Supreme Allied Commander, Middle East (SACME). To make the proposed new arrangement acceptable to the Egyptian Government will require that a number of concessions and incentives be given Egypt. While these will come primarily from the UK, the US share of the effort will be [to] give procurement and training assistance, grant arms aid and very limited economic aid, all under MSP. The Defense Department considers that there is no adequate substitute for the Egyptian base; consequently, provided Egypt is willing to cooperate with SACME, it will be necessary to give Egypt preferred treatment in arms and other ways as the price of securing our objectives. If Egypt does not elect to cooperate with SACME, we will go through with the establishment of the Middle East Allied Command (with headquarters elsewhere than in Egypt) but at the same time we will wish to withhold favors from Egypt.

¹ Drafted by G. Lewis Jones, Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs. A covering memorandum written by Wells Stabler, Officer in Charge of Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs, urged that the points raised in the source text should be discussed with President Truman as soon as possible so that he might be aware of some of the problems involved in creating a Middle East Command structure and the position of Israel with regard to it. The source text and Stabler's covering memorandum were concurred with by EUR and the Policy Planning Staff and sent to Acheson via the Executive Secretariat and Matthews.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For further documentation on this problem, see pp. 343 ff.

The singling out of Egypt for preferred treatment in exchange for its cooperation is likely to cause certain other Arab States to seek comparable treatment. Saudi Arabia is already receiving considerable assistance from us. Within the limited scope of the MSP, we would like to meet these demands to the extent possible but with the proviso that recipient states cooperate with SACME.

Israel presents a special problem in connection with SACME. The mission of SACME is to defend the Middle East as a whole, and thus the defense of Israel is clearly one of its responsibilities. There is little doubt that Israel will be prepared to cooperate fully with SACME. On the other hand, the Arab refugees and the creation of Israel has in large measure brought into being the neutralist tendencies in the Arab States which, it is hoped the establishment of SACME will overcome. Whether Egypt and the other Arab States will cooperate with SACME is still in grave doubt. One of the ways to influence the Arab States against SACME is the public association of Israel with the Allied Command at this formative stage. In consequence, the US, UK, France (and possibly Turkey) may find it desirable to remind Israel that its security vis-à-vis the Arab States is still protected by the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, and to ask Israel not to insist upon a prominent role in the new Allied Command until it is firmly established with the Arabs.

This will require considerable forebearance on the part of Israel, particularly when matériel US and Allied aid is given Egypt as a part of the buildup of Egypt to play a major role in the defense of the Middle East. On the other hand, Prime Minister Ben Gurion and the other important Israelis have always asserted that Egypt is the key to peace between the Arab States and Israel, i.e., if Egypt will sign a peace treaty, the other Arab States will do likewise. One of the important objectives behind the establishment of the Allied Command structure is that it will give Egypt and the other Arab States something more productive to think about than their feud with Israel and thus pave the way for an eventual peace settlement.

It is provided that SACME through his liaison organization will work closely but quietly with Israel from the establishment of his Command. Israel will not, however, be offered the same status in the Command that Turkey and Egypt will enjoy if they accept the proposals which the UK, US and France will make to them.

The foregoing is set forth in the expectation that you may be approached by people who will state that Egypt, which still claims to be at war with Israel, is receiving treatment in the new Command structure preferential to that accorded Israel. The answer is that the new Command, with Egypt in full and equal partnership with the US, UK, France and Turkey does not alter Israel's security position; provision has been made for Israel's participation in the work of the Command, the existence of which offers Israel increased hope for an eventual peace settlement with Egypt and the other Arab States.

It is recommended that you approve the policy set forth above.3

Editorial Note

Near Eastern regional problems, including the Middle East Command, were discussed at the Meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France at Washington, September 10–14. On September 20, the North Atlantic Council, meeting in its Seventh Session at Ottawa, recommended the admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO. For documentation on the Washington Foreign Ministers meeting and on the Seventh Session of the North Atlantic Council, see volume III, part 1, pages 1163 ff. and 616 ff., respectively.

Telegram 214 to Ankara of September 20 contained the text of a message from President Truman to President Bayar informing Bayar that Turkey's accession to NATO "will give rise to many practical problems" of regional command, and Truman proposed "conversations of a purely preliminary nature between your Govt and Reps of some of the members of the NATO" with regard to the possible establishment of a Middle East Command which was conceived as a possible adjunct to NATO. Truman added that he would be glad to send General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "our highest Mil Rep," perhaps accompanied by high British and French military representatives to Ankara to discuss various NATO organizational problems including the Middle East Command.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Acting Secretary of State Webb handed this memorandum to President Truman on September 17. On September 24, Mr. Truman informed Secretary Acheson that he had read the memorandum and that it seemed entirely appropriate to him. He instructed Secretary Acheson to take whatever action was deemed necessary to carry out the plan. (Memorandum of conversation between the President and Acting Secretary Webb, September 17; memorandum of conversation with the President, September 24, Secretary's Memoranda: Lot 53 D 444: Sept-Oct, 1951)

In telegram 283 from Ankara of September 24, Ambassador Wadsworth reported that he had handed the message contained in telegram 214 to Bayar and had added "A new question;" to wit: Would Turkey be willing to join the United States and United Kingdom "in urging on Egypt acceptance of a similar invitation that it too participate as a founding member in setting up MEC." In telegram 289 from Ankara of September 25, Wadsworth reported that Foreign Minister Köprülü had indicated in a subsequent meeting that while he viewed with skepticism the dispatch to Ankara of a formal tripartite military mission, an informal group headed by General Bradley would be welcome and that Turkey "very warmly" accepted the invitation to cooperate with the United States and United Kingdom in approaching Egypt at an early date regarding membership in a Middle East Command. For telegrams 214, 283, and 289, see volume III, part 1, pages 576, 578, and 580.

780.5/9-2451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs (Stabler)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] September 24, 1951.

Participants:

Mr. Colin Moodie, Counselor of Australian Embassy Mr. Owen Davis, First Secretary of Australian Embassy

NE—Mr. G. Lewis Jones BNA—Mr. Shullaw NE—Mr. Stabler

Summary

Mr. Moodie and Mr. Davis were requested to call at the Department this afternoon. Mr. Jones informed them that the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Australia was delivering an invitation today to the Australian Government on behalf of the United Kingdom, the United States, and France requesting it to participate in the Middle East Command structure. We had instructed our Embassy in Canberra <sup>1</sup> to inform the Australian Government that we considered the establishment of a Middle East Command of great importance to the defense of the Middle East and the free world, and to express the hope that Australia would be able to accept the invitation. Mr. Jones pointed out that although the action on this matter was being taken in Canberra, we wished to keep the Embassy here advised. He emphasized the top secret character of this information.

 $<sup>^{1}</sup>$  In telegram 64, priority to Canberra, September 22, not printed (780.5/9-2251).

Mr. Moodie said that his Government and Embassy had received a general indication of this development but that they were not aware that the invitation was to be issued so soon. He was unable to give any idea as to what his Government's reaction would be to this invitation since he had received no word from Canberra on this matter. He asked a number of questions regarding participation in the Command, its structure, the position of Israel, and the attitude of Turkey. Mr. Jones gave him general information on these subjects but pointed out that many of the details could only be worked out on a military, technical level, and that this could be done only at such time as it was possible to go ahead with the formal establishment of a Middle East Command. Mr. Moodie recalled that Australia might not be very popular in Egypt as a result of certain incidents during World War II. He wondered whether this would in any way affect the Egyptian attitude.

Mr. Moodie said that he would like to keep in close touch with us on this matter.<sup>2</sup>

The same day, September 24, Jones informed representatives of New Zealand and the Union of South Africa that invitations were then being extended to their respective governments to join the Middle East Command structure (Memoranda of conversation: 780.5/9–2451). In telegram 85 from Pretoria of September 29, Ambassador Gallman reported that the Union of South Africa accepted the invitation to participate in the establishment of a Middle East Command subject to the "clear understanding" that the Union would not dispatch troops to the Middle East "until called upon do so in interest Union's obligations in event war" (780.5/9–2851). In telegram 106 from Wellington of October 2, Ambassador Scotten informed the Secretary of State that the New Zealand Government accepted the proposal to participate in the Middle East Command and would send a delegation to take part in discussions, "but indicated apprehension lest inclusion Egypt have adverse results" (780.5/10–251). In telegram 122 of October 3 from Canberra, Richard Byrd reported that the Australian Government had agreed to take part in discussions concerning the MEC and agreed in principle to participate in the Command with the stipulation that terms of announcement were to be agreed in advance by Australia. "PriMin [Menzies] made clear ultimate government position will be affected substantially by arrangements made for higher political direction by MEC." The Prime Minister also "emphasized participation MEC means substantial political problem for government which will have to maintain position after announcement that Australia has no troop commitment" (780.5/10–351).

740.5/9-2551: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

TOP SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, September 26, 1951—9 p. m. 247. Dept most appreciative prompt and understanding response Turks as outlined Embtel 289 Sept 25.<sup>2</sup>

Dept can appreciate reluctance Turk Govt to discuss mil and Command arrangements prior to action by legislative bodies of present NATO members to formally accept Turkey in NATO. We believe Turks shld know, however, that NATO members were informed at Ottawa that we were considering sending high milit officer to discuss milit arrangements with Turks on informal basis and that UK and France might do likewise. Hence we do not feel that smaller NATO nations wld react unfavorably to informal Tripartite mission.

We have taken position that no command setup can be prepared for prelim consideration by present NATO nations until matter is discussed with Greece and Turkey. Furthermore no NATO command structure involving Grk-Turk participation can be approved by NATO until Grk and Turk Reps are officially sitting as members of the Milit Comite and Council, fol their acceptance into NATO. It was our idea that the top milit reps of the US, UK and France, were the ones who shld discuss command arrangements with the highest Turk authorities. We considered this arrangement as being the one which wld indicate to the Turks and the Grks our appreciation of their importance in the org and that it warranted a visit by our highest milit auths.

The procedure wld be that after discussions on the NATO command arrangements, the ideas of the Turks and Grks wld be incorporated, along with the ideas of the other nations concerned, into a staff study which wld then be presented to the milit reps of all the countries concerned including Greece and Turkey. After further comments from these nations, the paper wld then be amended as necessary and resubmitted to those nations, in order that all NATO nations, including Greece and Turkey can be prepared to act on it in the Milit Comite and Council mtgs after the formal admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO.

While we believe the above to be important, we also believe it is urgent that MEC arrangements be worked out earliest and we do not see how this can be done without discussions between representatives of the US, UK and France and Turkey. While Turkey may feel that Gen Bradley can appropriately discuss ME Command arrangements informally with Turks on behalf all three, Dept requests you pt out to Turk FonMin why we feel Bradley–Slim–Fr Mission is so important. UK will lead in presenting proposals to Egypt. If Bradley alone visits Turkey this likely be interpreted by Egypt as reflecting adversely UK status MEC in which Brits will play major role. Slim–Bradley–Fr visit designed originally emphasize solidarity powers and multilateral character proposals partly as background for approach Egypt. Thus while we fully understand reasons why Turk desire to restrict visit to Bradley, we are nevertheless confronted with above dilemma and wld appreciate Turks giving matter most serious consideration. We believe another important factor from Turk viewpoint is that tripartite mission wld give Turks valuable opportunity to present their views on MEC to highest level mil reps of three countries.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by G. Lewis Jones, Wells Stabler, and C. Robert Moore of GTI. Cleared by Perkins and by Colonel Storke of Defense. Approved for transmission and signed for the Secretary by Burton Y. Berry. Repeated to Paris, Cairo, and London.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Summarized in editorial note, p. 187. See vol. III, pt. 1, p. 580, for full text of telegram.

Re Arab states, we agree with Turk Govt that we must proceed with caution and careful preparation. While undoubtedly there will be elements in those states opposed to any form of collaboration with Western powers, we believe that MEC will gain support, perhaps gradual at first, because (1) it may be basis for settlement Anglo-Egypt question and (2) it provides structure for ME defense in which Arabs are vitally concerned. We consider that multilateral nature of MEC, including Turkish participation, has important appeal and shld be stressed. On balance therefore we believe tripartite milit mission to Turkey wld have desirable impact on Arab States and set stage for multilateral coop.

Due other pressing commitments, it may be ten days before Bradley or tripartite mission can arrive in Turkey. Despite this delay we wld welcome Turk reaction on above earliest.

Pls keep Brit colleague fully and simultaneously informed on all developments (urtel 290 Sept 26).<sup>3</sup>

ACHESON

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

780.5/9-2851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

TOP SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, September 28, 1951—noon. 252. Fact Bradley unavailable visit Turkey for approx 10 days (Deptel 247 Sept 26)<sup>2</sup> provides additional time persuade Turks desirability Tripartite mil visit and goes some way toward meeting Turk views re hasty consideration such important matters. At same time we are faced with dilemma re Egypt Govt which, unless substantive proposals are received in very near future, may find itself forced abrogate treaty on short notice.<sup>3</sup> Current developments Iran <sup>4</sup> might bring matter to head rapidly.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Jones and Stabler, and signed for the Under Secretary by Burton Y. Berry, cleared by GTI and EUR. Repeated to Cairo, London, and Paris.

We wild greatly prefer more leisurely course of action (Plan A) now proposed i.e. Tripartite mil visit to Turkey and full discussion with Turks re NATO and MEC, followed by multilateral approach to Egypt led by UK and including Turkey. However, in view possibility sudden deterioration Egypt situation, it wild be desirable have agreed emergency course of action (Plan B) which wild permit substantive approach to Egypt re MEC before or during mil visit Turkey.

Main difficulty Plan B is that in order succeed we wild have to give Egypts as much substance re MEC as possible if Egypt Govt were to use Plan B disclosures to keep lid on rising popular pressure for abrogation. However, to give Egypts substance MEC or even outline without Turk agreement wild to some extent freeze MEC proposals and thus wild seriously prejudice consultations with Turks on this matter. We have discussed Plan B tentatively with Brit Emb, Wash, in order to ascertain FonOff views re possibility you and Brit colleague might approach Turk Govt to obtain its suggestions re way out this Egypt dilemma and its views what might properly be said to Egypts re MEC and Turk participation therein, bearing in mind that once we approach Egypt, we must have some broad details and not generalities in hand. Obviously Plan B not feasible without Turk agreement. In addition, their participation would enhance its success.

Dept wld appreciate your urgent views re feasibility Plan B for consideration along with Brit FonOff comments.

FYI Press of events in Egypt stressed today in Dept conversation with Turk Emb Rep.

Webb

<sup>4</sup> Reference is to the nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company by Mosadeq; see p. 544.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the 1936 Anglo-Egyptian Treaty regarding British military rights in Egypt. For further documentation on Anglo-Egyptian disputes over this treaty and also the Sudan, see pp. 343 ff.

Secretary's Letters: Lot 56 D 459: "Near & Middle East"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Turkish Affairs (Moore)

TOP SECRET [Washington,] September 28, 1951.

Participants: Mr. Feridun C. Erkin-Turkish Ambassador

Mr. George C. McGhee—Assistant Secretary, NEA

Mr. C. Robert Moore—GTI

Ambassador Erkin expressed his warm thanks to Mr. McGhee for his helpfulness in working for the action taken by the North Atlantic Council at Ottawa with respect to the admission of Turkey to NATO. While indicating great pleasure at the decision, he also indicated concern that Turkey's admission to NATO is apparently being linked to its participation in the Middle East Command. He knew that we had sponsored Turkey's admission to NATO on an unconditional basis, but he felt that the British associated the two actions very closely. Newspaper comment and other events since Ottawa were stimulating Turkish suspicions that there are indeed conditions to its formal admission to NATO.

Mr. McGhee replied that there was no question about the action taken at Ottawa—Turkey's admission to NATO is to be unconditional. Apart from that, however, we and the British have been giving a great deal of thought to the creation of a Middle East Command with Turkish, Egyptian and Commonwealth participation. We want to discuss our ideas with the Turks very soon and are hopeful that we can all agree on the form of the Command to be set up. We feel it logical that there should be a British Supreme Commander. The British have troops and bases in the Middle East. Some of the Commonwealth countries will make contributions to the Command. We would not want the Supreme Command, nor we were sure, would the Turks. However, these are all problems to be discussed and worked out together.

Ambassador Erkin commented that he had very limited information as to the nature of the proposed Middle East Command, particularly with reference to Turkey's obligations. Mr. McGhee emphasized that the plans for the Command are sketchy and that they will be developed more fully after the talks with the Turks, which is one of the purposes of the proposed Bradley–Slim–French visit. The Generals will also wish to discuss with the Turks the NATO command structure and their membership in the various NATO bodies. The NATO Command arrangements resulting from Greece and Turkey's inclusion in NATO will have to be submitted to the Military Committee of NATO and ultimately for approval to the North Atlantic Council on which Turkey and Greece will be represented. In view of the influence which the British and French have on some of the other NATO members, Mr. McGhee felt that the Turkish Government would find it useful for the high British and French military representatives to accompany General Bradley to Turkey as NATO Command arrangements discussed with all three would be assured sympathetic consideration and approval by the Council.

The conversation then turned to Egypt. Mr. McGhee pointed out that the situation there impels us to act quickly in seeking agreement with all interested governments, including Egypt on the creation of a Middle East Command in the hope that such action may avert unilateral abrogation by Egypt of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936. Information from the very highest sources leads us to fear that some substantive proposals with respect to the Command have to be made to the Egyptian Government within the next ten days or so, in fact, probably before the visit of the three Generals to Turkey, if abrogation is to be averted.

Ambassador Erkin referred to his conversation with Ambassador Rahim at San Francisco several weeks ago. At that time the latter had indicated that the Egyptian Government would take no action on abrogation before the third week in November, in view of the various hints that some satisfactory multilateral formula would be proposed to it very soon. Ambassador Erkin stated he had seen Ambassador Rahim again yesterday but no change in the time schedule had been suggested. He expressed the opinion that the Egyptians would be delighted to have some formula suggested to them that will bring a solution to the Treaty problem as well as to their security problem.

The Ambassador asked if we had had any report on President Bayar's reaction to President Truman's messages. Mr. McGhee referred to Ambassador Wadsworth's very interesting and helpful conversation with President Bayar at the time the messages were delivered and to the President's very favorable reaction to these messages, later confirmed by Ambassador Wadsworth's subsequent conversations with the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. Mr. McGhee commented that the Turkish Government apparently welcomed a visit by General Bradley but felt the time was not appropriate for a visit by the British and French Generals. We have since asked Ambassador Wadsworth to explain in more detail why we think an informal visit by the highest military representatives of these countries is important and we are hopeful that the Turkish Government will agree with us as to the advantages of such a visit. A visit to Turkey by General Bradley alone might be interpreted by Egypt as reflecting adversely on the British status in the Middle East Command in which the British will play a major role. A visit by the three Generals would emphasize the solidarity of the Powers and the multilateral character of the proposals to be made to Egypt. In fact, it might be very difficult for General Bradley to make the trip to Turkey alone because of the complications that might be created.

Ambassador Erkin reiterated at this point two difficulties, which in his personal view, may complicate the solution of the Middle East Command problem. First is the apparent relationship between Turkey's participation in the Middle East Command and its membership in NATO. Regardless of the true facts, discussion on the proposed Middle East Command before Turkey's formal admission to NATO will be interpreted by the Turkish public as confirming that admission is conditional. The second difficulty arises through the proposed appointment of a British General as Supreme Commander. The Ambassador feared that a British Supreme Commander would be unacceptable to the Egyptians and, in fact, that the Egyptians would object to any British troops on Egyptian soil. They might, however, accept the idea of mixed troops.

Mr. McGhee emphasized that Turkey as a NATO member will enjoy all the rights and privileges of full membership and that there should be no concern over the possibility that NATO membership will be conditional. He added that he recognized the difficulties involved in obtaining Egyptian acceptance of the Middle East Command idea and a British Supreme Commander. We were, however, counting on the Turks to help us to convince them of the desirability of this proposed solution. Obviously the details of the Middle East Command have to be discussed with all of the proposed participants. As they are primarily military in nature, our qualified military men should sit down together, and we hope very soon, to work them out.

In closing the interview, the Ambassador stated that President Bayar's reply to President Truman's public message had been sent from Ankara and he hoped to receive it in a few days. He believed there would also be a second message replying to President Truman's secret message and that he would like very much to deliver both messages in person to President Truman. He will, however, let us know when he is prepared to do this.

 $780.5/9 - 2951: \mathbf{Telegram}$

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

TOP SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, September 29, 1951—3 p. m. 258. 1. Brit Emb Wash informed Dept Sept 28 that FonOff believes that because delay Bradley and info Cairo tel 364 Sept 26,² some approach to Egypt along lines Plan B (Deptel 252, Sept 28)³ will have to be made before tripartite mil visit and that consequently FonOff now sees program in three stages "First stage: Immed appeal Egypts by US and (we hope) Turkish Govts to do nothing precipitate;

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by G. Lewis Jones and Stabler. Cleared by McGhee, Perkins, Dorsz, and Moore of GTI, Admiral Wright and Colonel Storke of Defense. Approved for transmission by Jones. Repeated to Cairo, London, and Paris.

Second stage: attempt by US and Brit Ambs in Ankara to get Turk concurrence within next few days in broad approach to Egypts about future MEC and what it offers for Egypt, in a form which will not prejudge details of Turkey's participation in Command;

Third stage: visit by Gen Bradley and Field Marshal Slim (and Fr Gen) to Ankara and perhaps Cairo in which we hope agreement wld be reached on gen shape of Command."

- 2. Re first stage above Dept stated Cairo already instructed this sense and that we concur re desirability Turk approach Egypts (Deptel 253, Sept 28 to Ankara).<sup>4</sup>
- 3. Re Second stage above Dept advised Brit Emb that Plan A (Deptel 252 Sept 28) preferable and shld be carried out if Egypt sit permits. We hoped combined approaches Egypt (para 2 above) wld provide additional time needed. However, Dept considers it prudent to have Plan B agreed in advance with Turks and available for emergency use if sit Egypt suddenly deteriorates before tripartite mil visit. Turk acquiescence is essential Plan B approach to Egypts which wld be greatly enhanced if Turks act in concert with US, UK and we hope Fr.
- 4. We pointed out that Turks before acquiescing Plan B wld want to know in some detail what wld be told Egypts. Consequently, in consultation with Brit Emb fol draft (for submission to you and ur Brit colleague for comment and Brit FonOff for approval) was approved jointly as representing maximum which Turks and later Egypts might be told prior tripartite mil visit.

"Points for use by UK and US Ambassadors, Ankara in securing cooperation of Turkish Govt in approach to the Egyptians and later for use by UK, US and possibly Turkish Ambassadors, Cairo.

1. The defense of the ME and specifically of Egypt is vital to the security of the free world.

2. The defense of Egypt and of other countries in the Middle East against aggression from outside the area can only be secured through the cooperation of the interested powers including those not territorially part of the area.

3. The defense of Egypt or any other part of the Middle East can only be assured through the effective defense of the area as a whole and the coordination of this defense with that of adjacent areas.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; it reported an interview between Egyptian King Farouk and British Ambassador Stevenson at Cairo in which the King stated that domestic pressures for an early abrogation of the 1936 Treaty were becoming irresistable (641.74/9-2551).

&lt;sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 191. <sup>4</sup> Not printed.

4. It therefore seems desirable to establish an Allied Middle East Command (MEC) in which the countries able and willing to contribute to the defense of the area should participate. France, Turkey, UK and USA are prepared to participate with other interested countries in establishing such a Command.

5. Egypt is invited to participate as a founder member of the Middle East Command on a basis of full equality and partnership with other founding members.

6. Similar invitations are being issued to Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa, who have indicated their interest in the defense of the area.

7. Egypt will be given a position of high authority and responsibility within MEC and the MEC HQ will include Egyptian officers on the integrated staff.

8. Facilities to train and equip her forces to be given to Egypt by those participating members of the Command in a position to do so.

9. The present British base in Egypt to be formally handed over to the Egyptians on the understanding that it will simultaneously become an Allied base within MEC with full Egyptian participation in the running of this base in peace and war.

10. All British forces not allocated to MEC will be withdrawn from Egypt starting forthwith.

11. All British forces stationed in Egypt in peace and war will form part of the MEC.

- 12. The number of Allied forces to be stationed in Egypt in peacetime to be determined by MEC in agreement with the Egyptian Government.
- 13. In the event of war, imminent menace of war or apprehended international emergency, Egypt would grant to the allied forces all necessary facilities and assistance including the use of Egyptian ports, aerodromes and means of communications.
- 14. The structure and organization of MEC will be worked out in the near future by representatives of the founding members."
- 5. You will note that above is based on Deptel 182 Sept 8<sup>5</sup> and that by telescoping first part attempt has been made avoid introducing Command Structure details which must remain for mil talks.
  - 6. Concert your comments re above with your British colleague.
- 7. Re third stage above Dept view is that visit Bradley, Slim and French General to Turkey (and possibly later to Egypt) still key element to MEC success and that use Plan B in emergency would in no way detract from importance tripartite military visit.

WEBB

&lt;sup>5</sup> Same as telegram 339 to Cairo, p. 181.

780.5/9-2951: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in France 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 29, 1951—3 p.m.

1890. Re Middle East Command (Deptel 1468 Sept 8 and subsequent).<sup>2</sup>

- 1. Since President's message to Greece and Turkey were shown Schuman at Ottawa (Ottawa Secto 22 Sept 19 to Dept rptd Paris unn)<sup>3</sup> there has been no direct contact with Fr re MEC, although UK has advised Fr associated itself with MEC invitations to Austral, NZ and So Afr (Deptel 1753, Sept 22).<sup>2</sup>
- 2. Deterioration sit Egypt and lack of Fr decision re MEC have caused US and UK proceed up to this point without Fr (except in Commonwealth approach). However, view multilateral character MEC and Fr agreement in principle to MEC we believe Fr shld be kept informed in gen of devels and given opportunity of associating itself with US, UK and possibly Turks in steps now in execution or under contemplation.
  - 3. Pls take fol action vis-à-vis Fr:

(1) inform FonOff in gen of steps which have been taken since Presidential messages;

(2) invite Fr participation in approach to Egypt re no precipitate action (Deptels 1766, Sept 24; 1797, Sept 25; and 1856 Sept 28); 4

- (3) inform Fr re Plan A and Plan B (Deptels 1852, 5 Sept 28; 1889 Sept 29 6) and indicate that we shid be glad have their collaboration in formulation Plan B and its discussion with Turks.
- 4. Brit Emb Wash recommending FonOff instruct Brit Amb Paris take similar action and you shld concert with Brit colleague.

 $W_{EBB}$

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler, cleared by NEA, EUR, GTI, WE, and signed for the Acting Secretary by G. Lewis Jones. Repeated to London, Ankara, and Cairo.

<sup>2</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed, but see summary of telegram 214 to Ankara in editorial note, p. 187. The complete text of telegram 214 is in vol. III, pt. 1, p. 576.

Same as telegram 252 to Ankara, September 28, p. 191.
 Same as telegram 258 to Ankara, supra.

780.5/9-2951: Telegram

The Ambassador in Turkey (Wadsworth) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET NIACT ANKARA, September 29, 1951—6 p. m.

310. Supplementing para 4 mytel 305 Sept 28<sup>1</sup> (rptd Paris 8, London 5, Cairo 11):

- (1) FonMin again phoned this morning to say PriMin with himself attending would receive me at noon. They had carefully studied my memo of Sept 27 (a close paraphrase of Deptel 247 Sept 26) and had had second meeting with Brit Amb Sept 28.
- (2) Brit Emb had already told us of that mtg. Its details were reported to London by tel dated Sept 28 rptd to Brit Emb Wash. In brief, Turk PriMin agreed to instruct Turk Amb Cairo to support current Brit and US démarches designed to deter Egypt Govt from denouncing 1939 treaty.<sup>2</sup>
- (3) PriMin opened our meeting by saying in substance: "I appreciate very particularly your Depts prompt and detailed reply to my request for its views as given us in your memo. I have read it most carefully myself. It is clear and to the point. The FonMin and I will submit it to Turk Cabinet today for formal action; but as of now I can tell you with one hundred percent certainty that we accept all its proposals."
- (4) In ensuing conversation both Mins spoke fully by way of elaboration this assurance. On question of Turk démarche to Egypt, highlights of their remarks were: (a) As they had yesterday assured Brit Amb, they were prepared immediately to support UK and US representations to King Farouk and to Egypt Govt. This they could do as of now on grounds of vital common interest in defense of ME. Their démarche would be wholly friendly, but at same time firm and wld indicate Turk solidarity with three great powers (assuming France too made similar démarche).
- (b) Turk view was that such démarches shid "help elucidate Egypt's own difficulties while insisting always on nefast [?] results of treaty denunciation" and shid "not avoid any character of exercising pressure on Egypt independence, but positively expressed particular interest in strengthening Egypt as a collaborator of great powers."
- (c) Turk recommendations to Egypt can however be much more effective if Turk Govt knows what Brit and US Ambs have already Mistaken reference to the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936.

¹Not printed; it reported on a conversation with the British Ambassador as to the views outlined to him the previous day by the Turkish Foreign Minister Köprülü regarding an early approach to Egypt. Paragraph 4 of this telegram informed the Department that the Embassy had prepared and submitted to the Turkish Government a "closely reasoned" memorandum setting forth the arguments for the early establishment of a Middle East Command along lines suggested in telegram 247 to Ankara of September 26. (780.5/9-2851) said to King and Nahas and what UK and US Govts propose to instruct them to say in elaboration thereof. In short Turk Govt too is most keenly interested to know, at earliest date agreeable to US and UK, at least basic premises and general outline of specific proposals to be made to Egypt.

- (5) I replied that two most important major premises appeared to be, first, that Anglo-Egyptian differences could best be settled if taken above plane of bilateral negotiations and put within framework of multilateral agreement for defense of ME and, second, that, viewing matter realistically, this could best be done by org of MEC in which Egypt and Turkey, together with three Brit Dominions, could participate on equal footing as founding members together with the three principal NATO powers—in short establishment of an Allied command for ME defense supplementing and not, as some Turk opinion feared, independent of, NATO.
- (6) PriMin commented that that much he had understood and had already represented to his own cabinet. On that premise, he was prepared to proceed. He hoped, however, to learn more. What, for instance, was to be relationship between MEC and commands already established for defense of NA community, and what were our ideas as to position and role of Turkey in such commands and relationship?
- (7) I was able finesse this question by saying that it was exactly for purpose of preliminary discussion and frank exchange of views on such highly important matters that we had proposed early visit of mil mission made up of highest NATO mil reps, including Gens Bradley and Slim.
- (8) Except for incidental comment touching chiefly on emotional susceptibilities of other Arab Govts and peoples any need for careful dipl and psychological preparation before approaching them in matter of MEC, our conversation ended on this note, with PriMin assuring me early visit of NATO mil mission would be most welcome.
- (9) I shid much appreciate early insts, as detailed as presently possible, in re PriMins comment and query in para 4 (c) above.

Sent Dept 310, rptd info Cairo 12, London 6, Paris 9 (for MacArthur).

Wadsworth

780.5/10-151: Telegram

The Ambassador in France (Bruce) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

Paris, October 1, 1951—2 p. m.

1946. From MacArthur. US element SHAPE fully shares deep concern (set forth Deptel 252 to Ankara <sup>1</sup> rptd Paris 1852 and other tels exchanged between Dept and Ankara and Cairo) re possibility of sudden deterioration Egypt situation resulting in Egypt taking rigid position vis-à-vis UK which would involve denunciation Anglo-Egypt treaty and prevent satisfactory solution to Middle East Command. Thinking here is that we (US, UK, Turks, and we hope French) should approach Egypt soonest possible and suggest talks (even if not going into details of MEC) so that King and moderate elements Egypt would be in position to oppose any sudden move by extremists on grounds that conversations re MEC must first be held.<sup>2</sup> Sent Dept 1946; rptd info Ankara 19, London 479, Cairo 36.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dated September 28, p. 191.

BRUCE

Editorial Note

The Embassy in France was informed by Webb in telegram 1915, niact, to Paris, October 1 that the French Government should not be informed of the contemplated quadripartite approach to Egypt until the United States and United Kingdom had reached full agreement on the Plan B proposals, and the Embassy was explicitly requested not to approach the French Government regarding telegrams 1889 (printed as telegram 258 to Ankara, page 195) and 1890 (page 198) until further instruction. The Embassy in France informed the Secretary of State in telegram 1976, niact, October 2, that the British Embassy had telephoned to state that the British Foreign Office had just revealed the outline of Plans A and B to French officials in London and had instructed the Embassy in Paris to "follow up here" with the French Government. In telegram 274 to Ankara, October 2, repeated to Paris as 1943, Cairo as 487, and London as 1789, Webb reported that present arrangements called for General Bradley and a small American military party to visit Ankara between October 12 and 15, and the recipients were authorized to inform the governments to whom they were accredited accordingly. Ambassador Wadsworth reported from Ankara in telegram 318, niact, October 3, that he had informed the Turkish Foreign Office that day of the contents of telegram 274. The same day, Webb instructed the Embassy in France in telegram 1955 that in view of the British action taken as reported in telegram 1976 from Paris, the French Foreign Office should be brought up to date "on general developments re MEC since President's messages to Turk President [Bayar] including our recent approach to Egypt re no precipitate action." Ambassador Bruce was also instructed to "outline Plan B (but not furnish text) and reasons underlying it, emphasizing, however, that precise nature proposals under this plan not yet finalized."

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 1636 from London, October 4, Ambassador Gifford reported that after receipt of telegram 1808 from the Department "and phone call from MacArthur expressing Eisenhower's concern delay in approaching Turkey and Egypt" the matter was again taken up with the Foreign Office and that only "final flash of Cabinet clearance" remained before the United Kingdom would join the United States in approaching Egypt on the MEC (780.5/10–451).

Thereafter, British and American officials in both Paris and Washington seem to have conferred and agreed upon a firm proposal for implementing Plan B based upon British Foreign Office cables 4691 of October 1 and 4751 of October 3 to the Embassy in Washington, neither of which is found in Department of State files (telegrams 1982 and 2016, niact, from Paris, October 3), but see a summary of telegram 283 to Ankara, October 4, in the editorial note, infra. On October 4, Ambassador Bruce reported that the British Embassy had presented to the French Foreign Office that day a new paper on the MEC based upon Foreign Office cable 4751 to the Embassy in Washington. Bruce added that "On reading new Brit suggestions Margerie told Brit Min French shld have little difficulty in accepting them." All other telegrams cited above are in file 780.00.

Editorial Note

On October 4, 1951 Acting Secretary of State Webb transmitted to the Embassy in Turkey in telegram 283 the verbatim text of a British Cabinet Paper approved that day and sent to the Department of State via the British Embassy. This Cabinet Paper dealt with points to be used by the Ambassadors of the United Kingdom, United States, and France in Turkey in securing the cooperation of the Government of Turkey in a joint approach to the Government of Egypt regarding establishment of a Middle East Command. The points included: stress on the need for joint defense of the Middle East area against outside aggression and the establishment of a Middle East Command as the best means of accomplishing such an end; the expressed interest of, and subsequent invitations to, the Governments of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa to join the Governments of France, the United Kingdom, United States, Turkey, and Egypt in establishing such a Command; direct invitation to Egypt to become a founding member of such a Command structure; the willingness of the United Kingdom to supersede the 1936 Treaty and to retain in Egypt only such troops as were allocated to a Middle East Command should Egypt decide to become a founding member; the necessity for Egypt to provide base rights and other facilities and assistance to such a Middle East Command; that in exchange for the stationing of "Allied" troops on Egyptian soil, Egypt would enjoy a position of "high authority" within the Middle East Command; and, finally, that the detailed organization of the proposed Command and its precise relationship to NATO remained to be worked out. A copy of telegram 283 to the Embassy in Turkey, October 4, 1951 is in Department of State file 780.5/10-451.

In telegram 325 from Ankara, October 6, 1951, top secret, priority, Ambassador Wadsworth reported that he had received telegram 283 and that his British and French colleagues had received similar instructions. As a consequence, the three Ambassadors had called on the Turkish Prime Minister who read the text of the British paper contained in telegram 283 with satisfaction and promised to submit it to the Turkish Cabinet with strongest recommendations that instructions be telegraphed to the Turkish Ambassador at Cairo "to support our govts' representations there." The Prime Minister "added that he personally believed suggested approach was 'only possible one today' and should be made immed." Telegram 325 is in file 780.5/10-651.

780.5/10-551

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones) and the Deputy Director, Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs (Dorsz) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, October 5, 1951.

Subject: Points for Talks with General Bradley, October 5, 1951, 12:15 p. m.<sup>2</sup>

1. Would General Bradley be willing for a State Department Representative to Accompany Him?—

The United States Ambassadors at Ankara and Cairo must be the principal political representatives in the talks which will be held with Turkey and which may be held with Egypt. The State Department representative would provide background information and assistance to Ambassador Wadsworth and Ambassador Caffery and might be able to answer questions of General Bradley's staff. The British are sending to Ankara their Egyptian expert—the head of the African Department of the Foreign Office. The French also contemplate sending advisors from their Foreign Office: we do not know at what level.

2. Visit to Egypt—

The political approach may have to be made to Egypt before or during the visit of the General to Turkey. If the Egyptians respond favorably to the political approaches, it might be most helpful for the three Generals to visit Egypt after Turkey. However, this must depend upon developments in Egypt and upon the recommendations which are made by the Ambassadors in Egypt.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler of NE and Moore of GTI.

&lt;sup>2</sup> No record of this conversation has been found in Department of State files.

3. Comparison Between Egypt and Iran-

The situation in Egypt on the surface is calm but this calm is illusory. The Egyptians are fully aware of Iran's success vis-à-vis the British.<sup>3</sup> Abrogation of the 1936 Treaty <sup>4</sup> could touch off the powder keg in Egypt and the position of the British and other foreigners would become most difficult. There is much comment in the Egyptian press and elsewhere regarding possible measures against the British should the Treaty be abrogated. We must act as soon as possible.

4. New Deal for Egypt in MEC-

If MEC is to be accepted by Egypt, the United States, UK and France must make a genuine effort to make the Egyptians feel that they are given a genuinely New Deal and that they will henceforward be treated as equals. Already there is some evidence that the British Chiefs of Staff are thinking in terms of "whittling down" the proposals worked out with Defense and State early last month. <sup>5</sup> General Bradley will have to check efforts of this kind on the part of the British and remind them that the New Deal must not be vitiated by wishful thinking.

5. Turkish Preoccupation With Eisenhower Command—

General Bradley should be reminded of the symbolic importance to the Turks of falling under the Eisenhower Command. Under present plans Turkey would be the only NATO country not falling under that Command and it may be very difficult for the Government to accept an important role in the Middle East Command without being able to show to the Turkish people that it is likewise participating in NATO in the same manner as all other NATO countries.

6. NATO Status Unconditional—

The Turkish press and Turkish public opinion are sensitive to suggestions that Turkey's formal admission to NATO is contingent upon its willingness to participate in the Middle East Command. Extreme care should be taken to make clear that Turkey's admission to NATO is not conditional, but that the urgency of the Egyptian problem impels the countries interested in the security of the Middle East to move ahead rapidly in setting up a Middle East Command.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Regarding the Iranian situation, see p. 544.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on the Anglo-Egyptian dispute over the 1936 Treaty regarding British rights at Suez, see pp. 343 ff.

The reference proposals are contained in telegram 339, to the Embassy in Egypt, September 8, p. 181.

7. Turks Collaborators—

The Turks should be made to feel that they are collaborators with us (and the British and French) in working out the details of the Command. They feel that they have considerable to offer, not only militarily but through their own experience in dealing with Middle Eastern countries.

8. Turkey and the Middle East Standing Group—

Turkey will undoubtedly seek membership on the Middle East Standing Group as the one country in that area which is contributing strength to the Command. The presence on the proposed Standing Group of France, which is contributing virtually no strength, will make it difficult for the Turks for internal political reasons to accept a lesser status in the Command. Therefore, good sound practical reasons must be advanced as to why the Middle East Standing Group should comprise only the United States, the United Kingdom and France.

9. British Supreme Commander—

The Turks will not welcome the idea of a British Supreme Commander. They would prefer an American Supreme Commander. Again the problem is one of convincing them of the logic and practicability of a British Commander.

10 Formal Understanding Re MEC Must Await Formal NATO Status—

The Turks will undoubtedly be unwilling to enter into any formal understandings on a Middle East Command until their inclusion in NATO has been formalized.

11. Egypt and Turkey Equal in MEC-

Ancient associations and rivalries will make Egypt unwilling to accept a status inferior to that of Turkey in MEC (see paragraph 8 above). This is a sound reason against British suggestion transmitted to Admiral Wright this morning. EUR has a number of other reasons against the British proposal.

12. Press Release—

A Department of Defense release on Bradley's visit is now needed in view of press reports from London and Paris. We would like to have this cleared with the Department before it is issued.

Editorial Note

On October 6, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Herbert Morrison, cabled the Egyptian Government that he confidently hoped to be able to advance definite defense proposals by October 10. However, on October 7, the Egyptian Government of Nahas Pasha submitted to King Farouk its Bills declaring abrogation of both the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936 and the Sudan Condominium Agreements of 1899. The following day, October 8, Nahas Pasha placed these Bills before the Egyptian Parliament and cited 18 precedents justifying unilateral abrogation. The Bills were enacted on October 15 (Survey of International Affairs, 1951, pages 281–282).

In telegram 532 sent niact to Cairo on October 9 and repeated niact to London, Paris, and Ankara, G. Lewis Jones, signing for Secretary Acheson, reported that the British Government "feels strongly" that the Egyptian action toward abrogation "should not deter presentation new proposals as they stand", and that publication of these proposals should reveal their "reasonable" nature to the world at large. Jones added that the Department of State supported the British position both with respect to presentation and publication of the proposals (780.5/10–951).

However, in telegram 1762, niact, from London of October 10, Ambassador Gifford reported that Stevenson, the British Ambassador in Cairo, "recommends delay of several months in putting MEC proposals to Egyptian Govt." Gifford added that the Foreign Office had rejected this recommendation for the reasons already advanced to Washington and also because "chances Egyptian acceptance of proposals will probably be even less in several months time since by then Egyptian Parliament will probably have completed work on legislation thus further freezing situation" (780.5/10-1051). But that same day, Ambassador Caffery in Cairo lent his support to Stevenson's recommendation. In telegram 447 he reported "We 4 Ambassadors are firmly of opinion . . . that if we were to present proposals now they wld be rejected by Egypt Govt with great popular applause. They wld be pulled to pieces in the press and Parliament. Publication without presentation would be almost as bad." Caffery added that "My 3 colleagues are telephoning along these lines to their respective govts . . . We all 4 are very positive about this" (780.5/10-1051).

Wells Stabler, signing for Acheson, replied to Caffery's views in telegram 547, niact to Cairo, of October 11. Stabler informed Caffery that the Department of State had carefully considered telegram 447 from Cairo and had been informed of Stevenson's views by the British Embassy in Washington. But the Department continued to agree with the reasoning set forth in Ambassador Gifford's telegram 1762 from London of October 10, and, moreover, "need for MEC is urgent, and has importance on its own merits beyond current Anglo-Egypt dispute. We had hoped MEC wld serve as vehicle settle this dispute but always intended proceed with MEC whether Egypt participated or not" (780.5/10-1051). In telegram 2126 from Paris, October 11, Ambassador Bruce reported that "Despite misgivings on successful outcome," French Foreign Minister "Schuman has agreed that out of solidarity with British and ourselves," Ambassador Couve de Murville "will be instructed to associate himself with démarche to Egyptians" (780.5/10-1151). In telegram 560, niact to Cairo, of October 12, McGhee informed Caffery that the instructions contained in telegram 547 to Cairo of October 11 were confirmed "and we consider four Ambs shld proceed with approach to Egypt Govt without further delay" (780.5/10-1251). Ambassador Wadsworth informed the Department of State in telegram 345 from Ankara, October 12, that "Turkish Govt still of opinion that presentation of proposals to Egyptian Govt should not be postponed" (780.5/10-1251).

480.008/10-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] October 10, 1951.

M. Jean Pierre Benard, First Secretary of French Participants: Embassv

Mr. S. K. C. Kopper, Deputy Director of NE

Mr. George Emery, S/ISA

M. Benard called at his request this afternoon to inform the Department of France's reactions to the proposals Mr. Lewis Jones had submitted to M. Daridan in mid August regarding arms supplies to the Arab States and Israel. M. Benard said that the French Government agreed to the general principles and appreciated the motives of the United States in making the suggestions to enable the countries in the Near East to become stronger. He said that France felt the program should be carried out. Furthermore, France, from its experience in Syria and Lebanon, believed that the well regulated supply of arms in the area contributed to the integrity and independence of the area.

His comments on the specific paragraphs of the August memorandum were as follows:

Para B-5. France agrees to the principle that supplies should be made available on the basis of mutual interest. However, France does not believe political prices should be placed on supplies. Commitments may cause difficulties. France believes that we should be cautious in trying to obtain specific quid pro quos.

Para B-8. Detailed requirements imposed on the supply of arms might provide difficulties.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See memorandum of conversation, by Mr. Godley, August 17, p. 168; for the paper regarding the proposals, see p. 139.

Para B-13. France concurs. Our individual countries benefits should not be known. Implementation should be on a bilateral basis. It should not appear that shipments of arms are coordinated.

With regard to the tripartite organization, M. Benard said that France believed it should be an advisory group and not an executive board with power to make decisions. The organization should conduct its business with as little disclosure of its business as possible. It should not act as a "red tape" organization which would delay the implementation of arms policies. The organization should be small. It might be composed of three military officers and three political officers. Since it would presumably be located in Washington, the three military officers might well come from the staff of the Standing Group and the political officers from the State Department and British and French Embassies.

With regard to the operation of the organization, M. Benard felt that proposed arms contracts should be placed before the group which would then pass or reject them. The tripartite group should not take any retroactive action except in extreme cases or where political conditions had changed radically.

M. Benard referred to the Anglo-French non-substitution agreement of 1945. Nothing done by the Tripartite arms organization group should give rise to the suspicion that the non-substitution agreement was being changed. I said this was a matter between the United Kingdom and France. We were interested in getting the Tripartite machinery working.

Editorial Note

On October 12, Morrison sent a personal message to Acheson in which he urged, inter alia, that the abrogation of the 1899 and 1936 agreements should not deflect the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey from presenting the Middle East Command proposals to Egypt. "The support of the United States with that of France and Turkey in presenting these proposals will do more than anything else at the present time to convince Egypt of their value to her and to bring her as we hope she will be brought to play her part with us all in this great task." Should Egypt decisively reject the Middle East Command proposals, and should she then seek to force Britain out of the Suez base by pressure, force, blockade, or other harassment, then, Morrison assured Acheson, British forces would determinedly hold the base for the use of whatever Middle East defense forces might be raised under the Middle East Command. "The plain fact will be that the British as I have said intend to hold the Egyptian base. If the Egyptians agree to participate in the Middle East Command well and good and the base would become an Allied base. But if there is no agreement with Egypt we still intend to hold the base so that it may be available for use by the Allies." For Morrison's message to Acheson, see page 398.

780.5/10-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET NIACT

Cairo, October 12, 1951—9 p. m.

463. Fol is precise text to be delivered tomorrow:

- "1. Egypt belongs to free world and in consequence her defence and that of Middle East in general is equally vital to other democratic nations.
- "2. Defence of Egypt and of other countries in Middle East against aggression from without can only be secured by cooperation of all interested powers.
- "3. Defence of Egypt can only be assured through effective defence of Middle East area and coordination of this defence with that of adjacent areas.
- "4. It therefore seems desirable to establish an Allied Middle East Command in which countries able and willing to contribute to the defence of the area shld participate. The United Kingdom, the US, France and Turkey are prepared to participate with the other interested countries in establishing such a command. Austral, New Zealand and Union of South Africa have moreover indicated their interest in the defence of the area and have agreed in principle to participate in the command.
- "5. Egypt is invited to participate as a founder member of Allied Middle East Command on basis equality and partnership with other founder members.
- "6. If Egypt is prepared to cooperate fully in the Allied Middle East Command organization, on the lines described in annex, his Majesty's Govt for their part wld be willing to agree to the supersession of the 1936 treaty and wld also be willing to agree to withdraw from Egypt such Brit forces as are not allocated to the Allied Middle East Command by agreement between Egypt Govt and the govts of other countries also participating as founder members in Allied Middle East Command organization.
- "7. As regards the armed forces to be placed at disposal of Allied Middle East Command the provision to that command of necessary strategic defence facilities such as military and air bases, communications, ports etc., Egypt will be expected to make her contribution on same footing as other participating powers.

- "8. In keeping with spirit of these arrangements Egypt wld be invited to accept position of high authority and responsibility within Allied Middle East Command and to designate Egypt officers for integration in Allied MEC headquarters staff.
- "9. Facilities to train and equip her force will be given Egypt by those participating members of the Allied command in position to give them.
- "10. The detailed organization of Allied Middle East defense organization and its exact relationship with North Atlantic Treaty organization have yet to be worked out in consultation between all powers concerned. For this purpose it is proposed that all founding members of the Allied MEC shld send mil reps to mtg to be held in near future with object of preparing detailed proposals for submission to govts concerned.

"Technical Annex:

- "1. In view of Egypt's importance to Middle East defence it is expected that, in common with other participating powers who are making similar contribution to defence of area.
  - "(a) Egypt will agree to furnish to the proposed Allied MEC organization such strategic defence and other facilities on her soil as are indispensable for organization peacetime of defence of Middle East, and
  - "(b) She will undertake to grant forces of Allied MEC all necessary facilities and assistance in event of war, the imminent menace of war, or apprehended international emergency—including the use of Egypt ports, airfields and means of communication.
- "2. It wild also be hoped that Egypt wild agree to Allied Supreme Commander's headquarters being located in her territory.
- "3. In keeping with spirit of these arrangements it wld be understood:
  - "(a) That the present Brit base in Egypt wld be formally handed over to Egypt on understanding that it wld simultaneously become Allied base within the Allied Middle East Command with full Egyptian participation in the running of this base in peace and war.
  - "(b) That the strength of the Allied forces of participating nations to be stationed in Egypt in peacetime wld be determined between participating nations including Egypt, from time to time as progress is made in building up forces of Allied MEC." <sup>1</sup>

¹In telegram 473 from Cairo of October 13, Caffery informed the Secretary of State that he had just seen the Egyptian Minister of Foreign Affairs to present the contents of the source text. Caffery added, inter alia, "He took careful note of what I had to say, thanked me and said that of course he had not yet read proposals but he hoped that it was not a gang-up against Egypt. I assured him to contrary. He said he expected necessary laws to be voted Monday in Parliament for treaty abrogation Sudan, etc." (780.5/10–1351)

Sent Dept niact 463, rptd info London priority 176, Paris priority 60, Ankara priority 45.

CAFFERY

Editorial Note

In telegram 2095 from Paris, October 9, Ambassador Bruce reported that at a meeting that morning at SHAPE, General Bradley and British and French military officials unanimously and strongly agreed that if the tripartite military mission could proceed from Ankara to Cairo to make presentations to Egypt regarding the Middle East Command, assisted by Turkish representations, "such action might be most helpful in preventing present Egypt situation from deteriorating further . . ." (780.5/10-951). In telegram 446 from Cairo of October 12, Ambassador Caffery stated that as of that day, the four Ambassadors (United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey) were very uncertain as to the repercussions of a visit from Generals Bradley and Lecheres and Field Marshal Slim to Cairo "especially as discussions on bills abrogating treaty, etc. will begin in Parliament on Monday" (780.5/10-1251). In telegram 472 of October 13, Caffery informed the Department of State that he had asked the Egyptian Minister of Foreign Affairs about the possibility of a visit by General Bradley and had been told that "visit wld not be expedient now" (780.5/10-1351). In telegram 337 of October 13 to Ankara, repeated niact to Cairo, London, and Paris, Wells Stabler, signing for Secretary Acheson, informed Wadsworth and Bradley that in view of telegram 472 from Cairo, the State and Defense Departments concurred that "Gen Bradley and other Gens shld not proceed Egypt" (780.5/10-1351).

Editorial Note

General Bradley arrived in Athens on October 10, accompanied by Field Marshal Slim and General Lecheres for discussions with Greek officials concerning Greek accession to NATO. For information on the talks in Athens, see telegram 1707 from Athens, October 12, and telegram 349 from Ankara, October 12, in volume III, part 1, pages 594 and 596. On October 12, the three-man mission and its accompanying staffs arrived in Ankara for talks with Turkish governmental and military officials concerning Turkey's role in NATO and in the proposed Middle East Command.

Ankara Embassy Files: Lot 57 F 72: 320 NATO/MEC 1951 Oct-Dec

Record of the Conference of United States, United Kingdom, and French Representatives With Turkish Prime Minister and Staff at Ankara on October 13 and 14, 1951.

TOP SECRET

[ANKARA?, undated.]

Present were:

U.S.:

Ambassador Wadsworth General Bradley General Arnold

U.K.:

Ambassador Sir Noel Charles Field Marshal Slim Major General Packard Brigadier General Swynnerton

French:

Ambassador Jean Lescuyer General Lecheres General Vernoux Vice Admiral Misoffe

Turkey:

Prime Minister Menderes Foreign Minister Koprulu Defense Minister Yalnan General Yamut General Okan General Egeli Admiral Ulusan and Staff Officers

The Prime Minister convened the conference at 10:10 with brief words of welcome to the U.S., U.K. and French representatives.

General Lecheres explained briefly the purpose of the visit to Ankara, pointing out that it was of an exploratory nature in connection with the admission of Turkey to full membership in NATO, that the meeting would be mainly concerned with the military aspects of the membership of Turkey in NATO, particularly the question of the proper command arrangements which would be made with respect to Turkey, and that it was not intended that any decisions be made at this conference but that the discussions and exchanges of views would be used later in the preparation of a staff study or an initial draft paper on the command arrangements for Turkey.

Marshal SLIM then gave an explanation of the NATO organization, referring to a wall chart on which the organization was set out diagrammatically. He explained the places in which there would be a Turkish representative following the formal admission of Turkey to NATO. He emphasized the three nation character of the Standing Group and pointed out that the main purpose of the Standing Group was to conduct the strategic direction of NATO and to issue commands to the several military commands of NATO.

&lt;sup>1</sup>The source text does not indicate the author of this document, the date on which it was drafted, whether the minutes were formal or informal, or whether they were the agreed record or simply a U.S. draft.

General Bradley then gave an exposition explaining in more detail the various commands (supreme commanders) of NATO and the strategic problems which influence NATO. First, he reviewed the threat which demanded a common pact to prepare to defend against possible aggression. Soviet Russia has 175 divisions in existence and can expand to over 300. Their Satellites in the West can furnish 60 to 65 divisions, China 200 to 300 divisions, with varying degrees of efficiency, training and equipment. The Soviet Air Force has an estimated 20,000 planes of various types available. The Soviet Navy is not so formidable, but is placing its main emphasis on submarines designed to threaten LOC's.

He then discussed the Pacific Area generally, admitting that the Russian threat in the Pacific did not directly involve NATO but was of interest to NATO in view of present U.S. commitments there to meet the threats, particularly in Japan, Okinawa and Korea. Although the war in Korea is serious, the U.S. has allocated there only the bare minimum of forces needed. In FEC, U.S. has approximately 250,000 Army troops, 70,000 Navy personnel and 90,000 Airmen; of course, part of these forces could be shifted quickly to other theaters, such as the NATO area, if necessary. In the rest of the Pacific, he pointed out the Naval Command at Honolulu which commands all naval vessels in the Pacific not allocated to FECOM. Also, the U.S. has recently entered into bilateral pacts with the Philippines, New Zealand and Australia.<sup>2</sup>

General Bradley also pointed out present commitments of the French in Indo China and the U.K. in Hongkong, Singapore, Malaya and Borneo, all of which sap the overall strength of those nations.

General Bradley then discussed general relations between the U.S. and its western hemisphere neighbors, including the close coordination with Canada and the Interamerican Defense Board,<sup>3</sup> handling U.S. relations with South America.

In discussing the Canada-U.S. Regional Planning Group,<sup>4</sup> General Bradley pointed out that in the last two world wars the U.S. had joined late, but in a third world war, an aggressor might well hit the U.S. first, using air to knock out the U.S. production capacity so important to NATO and the world, if Russia has several hundred planes which might be so used, on two-way missions, or on one-way non-return or refueling missions. A main feature of our defense arrangement with Canada, therefore, involves defense against this long range air as well as U.S. bases from which we can hit back, as, for instance, in Alaska. Also the U.S. and Canada closely coordinate coastal patrols against possible hostile submarines.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on bilateral pacts between the United States and the Philippines, New Zealand, and Australia, see vol. vi, pt. 1, pp. 132 ff.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Inter-American Defense Board, see vol. II, pp. 970 ff. <sup>4</sup> For documentation on the Canada-U.S. Regional Planning Group, see ibid., pp. 870 ff.

The North Atlantic Ocean Command (SACLANT) is, except for a few bases, almost entirely a naval command, and as such is closely tied in with the U.K. Home Command and all other NATO nations bordering on the Atlantic.

The European Command under General Eisenhower, stretching from Norway to the Mediterranean, is designed to meet aggression through the Baltic, Germany, or through the Alps into Italy. Until Turkey and Greece join NATO, SACEUR's right flank will be protected only by the independent forces of Turkey, Greece, Egypt and the Middle East. Also, Yugoslavia may be on our side, thus permitting close coordination of the NATO right flank with the rest of the NATO forces in Europe. This is very important because of the possible routes of attack through the Black Sea and through the Middle East, which would threats [sic] against the whole Mediterranean, North Africa and the rest of the African Continent. A suitable organization against those threats is necessary not only in hot war but also in the cold war. Also the U.S. needs certain North African bases for its long range strategic bombers.

General Bradley stated that the question before the conference was how to best meet those problems in fitting Greece and Turkey into NATO. He emphasized that no decisions were to be made here, but that we should discuss all angles of the problems, setting out their various advantages and disadvantages.

For example, maybe it would be advantageous to extend SACEUR's right flank. We must coordinate the defense of the Black Sea exits. On the other hand, that extension presented some serious disadvantages. SACEUR already has a front of maximum effective width. General Bradley stated that at the end of World War II he had a 600 mile front under his command (narrow compared to SACEUR's front) and that was a very serious job for one commander to handle. He was very doubtful that SACEUR's right flank should be overextended to include Greece and Turkey.

He then discussed broadly the need for a command in the Middle East to guard against thrusts to the Middle East and to the Black Sea. We must realize that a Middle East Command involving NATO and also Non-NATO nations would be complicated, mainly because all NATO forces such as U.K. forces must be under NATO, but that Non-NATO nations such as the Commonwealth Nations and other nations in the Middle East should not be under NATO responsibility. But for the maximum unified effect of Army, Navy and Air Forces in the Middle East, those forces must be under some unified command.

Another reason prompting a MEC is the present situation in Egypt. The Egypt-Suez Area is a vital necessity for the defense of North Africa and Africa. Unless Egypt joins a MEC and the forces therein become Middle East forces, not merely U.K. forces, we may at some time be threatened on our and Turkey's right flank and rear. This MEC would certainly offer a mutual defense arrangement for all, and maybe the only way to salvage the present situation in important Egypt.

General Bradley emphasized that whatever command organization is set up, the present method of sending U.S. supplies to Turkey must continue under present arrangements there, not through SACEUR or SACME, both in peace and in war.

Marshal SLIM stated that whatever command Turkey is in, ME security is vital for Turkey's continuing supply. He pointed out that if any Eastern Mediterranean country, such as Palestine, was taken by the enemy, enemy air bases there would very much complicate supply to Turkey.

General Lecheres agreed with all that had been said on the importance of the Middle East, especially the Suez Area, in Turkey's defense of itself.

General Bradley suggested that many ideas had been advanced and that it might be a good idea to adjourn now, in order that the Prime Minister could discuss those ideas in private with his staff. He also made a suggestion, that, in order to consider all possible views, it would be desirable for a Turkish representative to report to the Standing Group in Washington for continuing work with them from day to day. He pointed out that the military representatives there were of about two star rank and suggested that maybe the Turkish Military Attaché could so serve.

Marshal SLIM advised that the Turkish officer sent be the one who would eventually be the official military representative for Turkey, for continuity.

General Lecheres agreed on the necessity for taking time to study from all angles the complicated command aspects.

The Prime Minister concurred in postponing further discussions of such deep matters until this afternoon. He, however, needed some clarification after hearing the various points for and against Turkey joining either MEC or the European Command, and that this presented a unique arrangement which would include both NATO and Non-NATO forces in the MEC. This presented certain difficult legal and political points. He agreed on the need for defense in the Middle East.

Marshal SLIM stated that we had no firm proposal on the MEC structure, but pointed to the necessity for setting up a general MEC first, and then at a later time discussing with Turkey the details of this structure and at the same time consider the complicated legal, political, etc. points which the Prime Minister had mentioned. He stated that he did feel that SACME must be under the Standing Group, which body would have a dual function, both in and out of NATO. Also, he pointed out that in a MEC there should be a military committee similar to that of NATO, with all member chiefs of staff represented. He emphasized the happy position of Turkey in such an arrangement, since it could play a leading part in each military committee. Of course, Turkey, since it would be providing most of the forces for MEC, would have the right to suitable rank in that command.

The Prime Minister then emphasized that two different problems, entirely apart in time and nature, were presented. He explained that the question of Turkey's entry into NATO was different from that of setting up a pact in the Middle East. The first question was of immediate importance, but the question of Turkey in the Middle East could wait.

Marshal SLIM agreed generally but stated that Turkey's entry into NATO is an accomplished fact, and what remained was the question of how best Turkey could support the other nations in NATO. If for her own defense, Turkey can accomplish this best by retaining full NATO membership and at the same time support or join a MEC, this might be the best thing for Turkey and all of us.

The Prime Minister pursued the point. Turkey had already expressed approval of its part in guarding Middle East defense by some MEC. He believed that Turkey's entrance into NATO had strengthened that organization, while on the other hand, by agreeing to set up a MEC Turkey had contributed to the peace of that area, because thus Turkey would be in the position of covering certain vital Arab parts of that area.

Marshal SLIM agreed with the Prime Minister but reminded him of his statement that Turkey would protect some nations south of it, but he pointed out that if those countries were invaded it would be from the east, and therefore best protection for them would involve Turkish forces coming into that area south of Turkey or at least maintaining very close liaison. Therefore, it would be of great advantage to Turkey to be in a MEC, where Turkey could give its full views on the operation of that command. Also, the Prime Minister should consider the undoubted advantages to Turkey of being in NATO, which in no way affects the Middle East. Turkey would also be one of the main and founding members of this MEC.

The Prime Minister replied that Turkey's position offered good defense for any aggression from the north. However, he agreed that Turkey must also consider attacks from the east which might surround her, and was therefore much interested in this MEC. Yet, this was a separate problem from Turk membership in NATO. Apart from that, Turkey could deal with setting up a MEC, and could go carefully into the matter of considering the contractual engagements of the Middle East Non-NATO nations.

Marshal SLIM pointed out that military forces in MEC would be almost entirely from Turkey, U.K. and U.S. U.K. would furnish the bulk of the Navy, U.S. and U.K. the air, and Turkey, U.K and Commonwealth Nations the land forces. He reiterated that the best possible way to get started was to set up a major-nation committee (U.S., U.K., France and Turkey) and then invite other ME nations to join.

General Lecheres stated that he supported Slim's points. There were many preliminary political approaches and démarches to consider with respect to a MEC, but militarily it is urgent that an efficient command be organized in the Middle East, in view of General Bradley's strategic survey. He reemphasized the urgency and pointed out that, if we can all agree to a military solution, we would facilitate and accelerate the political solution which must follow.

The Prime Minister answered simply that we were discussing a project of interest to both NATO and Non-NATO nations in the Middle East and that the major nations specified by Marshal SLIM were all members of NATO. Therefore, the immediate consideration should be separate from a MEC which would contain both NATO and Non-NATO nations. How did NATO plan to set up such an organization? Again he said that the setting up of a command in NATO involving only NATO nations was the immediate problem; the other was a long range problem.

Marshal SLIM stated that he had been trying to say what the Prime Minister had just said but emphasized that it was urgent to set up a MEC. We major nations could set this up quickly with the NATO nations, plus Commonwealth, and then we could invite the others to join.

General Bradley suggested that a question of the Prime Minister was as yet unanswered: What did the other NATO nations think of setting up a MEC?

The Prime Minister explained that he had asked would the other NATO nations agree to this uniting in a MEC.

General Bradley explained that this facet was discussed at length at Ottawa. It had been realized by all there, especially the north flank NATO nations, that the problem presented many difficulties, but all agreed that the best way to protect the right flank of Europe was by a unified command in the Middle East. He suggested that he would be glad to discuss from a blackboard a tentative MEC which had been considered at Ottawa; again he emphasized that this would be on a basis of discussion only, with no agreement intended.

The Prime Minister agreed to General Bradley's suggestion.

It was agreed to adjourn and to reconvene from 1700 to 1900 this evening.

The conference recessed at 1330.

Saturday Afternoon, 13 October

The meeting was called to order at 1700.

Present were those listed above.

General Bradley presented on the blackboard the proposed Command Organization and presented it strictly as a possible basis for discussion. He outlined the various aspects under which the Standing Group would act in a dual capacity, the fact that the Turks would be represented on both military committees, and the difficulties inherent to setting up an ideal solution.

The Foreign Minister stated that it was apparent that the principal difference between the two organizations outlined on the chart resides in the fact that, in its suggested Middle East arrangement, there is no higher political body similar to that in NATO. He stated his belief that all nations participating in such a defense arrangement would express the desire for a similar political body to be set up. He stated his belief that the sooner a command arrangement was set up the better, in view of the important advantage it presented to all concerned. He went on to state that this belief was based on the fact that this arrangement would have to include extra NATO as well as NATO countries. He then said that in view of the fact that the NATO Organization already existed, whereas the Middle East Command was only a project, it would be logical for Turkey, upon admission into NATO, to take her place within an existing Command Organization of NATO. Any other solution would cause Turkey to feel that she was being treated in a different manner.

General Bradley expressed appreciation of the expression of these views and realized the weaknesses of the proposal (no equivalent political body). He went on to explain the manner by which a solution might be arrived at by means of a Mediterranean Pact. He explained the reasons because of which, at this moment, the U.S. did not feel it desirable to participate in such an arrangement. He assured the Turks that no idea existed to give them any position different to that of any other country in view of their key position in the Organization.

He raised the point of the non-responsibility of other NATO nations in respect to the non-NATO countries of the Middle East. He touched on the solution of having the Commander of the Middle East wearing two hats and receiving his directives from the Standing Group for NATO matters and from the Middle East Standing Group for purely Middle East matters, the two Standing Groups comprising the same persons.

The Turks having stated that they would present their observations in a Memorandum,<sup>5</sup> General Bradley stated he would be pleased to take these back and study them carefully during the preparation of the Staff Study.

The Turkish Prime Minister requested clarification on a sentence in the press communiqué with reference to the Athens Conference. The sentence was "Great progress has been made towards the integration of the Greek forces into NATO." As Turkey is anxious to make progress in the same direction, he raised the question as how the result was obtained.

To refer back to a point raised in the morning, he wished to restate that Turkey considers that they are two separate problems: 1) The entrance of Turkey into NATO, and 2) The creation of a Middle East Command comprising NATO and non-NATO nations. He wished to consider these matters in greater detail as he felt there appeared on the part of the U.S., the U.K., and France a tendency to solve these two problems at the same time, whereas, he considered this should be kept separate.

He recognized the urgency of the defense of the Middle East. He stated that the rights and mutual obligations of Turkey and other countries should be clearly set forth before this organization was set up. He stated that the proposal for a Middle East Command arrangement tended to cause a dispersal of Turkish forces and to cause them to "slide" towards the Middle East. He repeated that he considered the integration of Turkey as the first step. He spoke about the key position of Turkey in the Middle East, which placed her in a position to be able to contribute all the more to the defense of the Middle East. He stated that in all collective military arrangements it should be presupposed that each member country should assure its own defense against aggression before expanding its possible frontiers with what forces might remain available. He stated the anomaly of the existence, in a Middle East Command, of non-belligerent nations, and of the difference in contributions and commitments between Turkey and these countries. He repeated that he had no intentions of trying to prove the uselessness of a Middle East Command and enumerated the general lines along which he thought that such a Command should be based; those nations which have already expressed willingness to join the Middle East Command should, as of now, determine the scope and nature of their contributions with regard to area commands and with regard to mutual obligations. He stated the possibility that Egypt might refuse to participate. If the U.S., the U.K. and France were to guarantee the Middle East, the result of this would be to eliminate the weakness which might exist on the southern flank of Turkev outside of her territory. He insisted especially on a guarantee from the U.S. Apparently, to return to the question of the integration of Turkey in the existing NATO Organization, he stated he believed Turkey should be under the command of SACEUR, because Turkey covers directly and indirectly the approaches to the Mediterranean. Turkey was the only nation in such a position as to be able to serve as a base for a counter-offensive against Russia via the Black Sea and the Danube. He pointed out that the Turko-Russian frontier of 2,200 kilometers was an important aspect, that being a neighbor of Russia, Turkey was at the start of the shortest route toward Russian sources of oil, her industry and her raw materials. He stated that Turkey was an element of the defense of Europe against Russia. He felt that if Turkey was separate from Europe, her position in relationship to Europe would be similar to that of the European Command in relationship to the Atlantic Command and that this was not in conformity with realities.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

He then explained that he believed that the shifting of the frontier of SACEUR to include Turkey would not create unwieldiness, in view of the greater improvement of modern communications.

He summed up by repeating the separate nature of the two problems and by stating that he felt that the problem of the integration of Turkey into NATO should take precedence.

He stated that by the rapid solution of this problem Turkey would be in an equal position to that of the other nations desiring to create a Middle East Command.

In connection with the second problem (creation of a Middle East Command) he repeated that the Turkish Government had proved the great importance they attached to this question by declaring formally their agreement in principle to the creation of a Middle East Command in which Turkey would participate as a founding member.

He felt it important to complete these problems separately but felt that time could be saved by broaching the preliminaries of the solution of the second problem at the same time as the first.

General Bradley stated that it was not possible to try to give an answer to all the views that had been expressed. The most important objective had been for us to obtain these views, but would comment briefly on some of these questions.

With reference to the question raised on the communiqué about Athens, General Bradley made the point that he felt that great progress had been accomplished here after this exchange of views. He further stated that he doubted all agree as to the separate nature of the two problems, none of them depended on the ratification by Parliament, which he thought was well under way. (?)

With regard to reference of dispersal of Turkish forces he stated that such a dispersal was not contemplated but that the forces of Turkey in Turkey would need coordination with those of other areas as well as with Naval and Air Force which might have to move in and out of the area.

With reference to the difficulties concerning an additional defense area, he stated that this did not alter in any way the military contributions which the U.S. might make in this area. General Bradley said that both the Departments of State and Defense were agreed that we could operate militarily in this area under a common arrangement as outlined.

The question of the necessity of France, the U.K. and especially the U.S. insuring the security of the Middle East area, he stated that no nation or group of nations could insure the security of other areas, that it was already difficult to insure one's own defense against air attack. It was necessary for us to study the arguments advanced on Command structure while preparing the document. It was true that Commands are set up on the basis of structural areas but, in all cases, it was necessary to have the closest possible liaison with adjoining Commands. It is true that the North Atlantic area is a large one but it is nearly entirely Naval and it is difficult to separate functional responsibilities in the organization routing and protection of convoys in the Atlantic. He repeated his assurance to the Turks that they should have a fully equal position in any agreed Command structure, stated the preparation of any document of this nature is the mission of the Standing Group which was anxious to get the Turkish views as soon as possible as it takes time to get agreement by 14 people.

General Bradley then repeated and expanded upon General Eisenhower's Memorandum <sup>6</sup> and said it would also have to be taken into account in the preparation of the document.

He realized the important of the two legal questions raised in respect to the Middle East Command, i.e.: The responsibility of other NATO nations in the case of a direct attack against Turkey as well as the question of the responsibility of NATO nations in case of attack against non-NATO Middle East countries.

It appeared to General Bradley that we had agreed on two points:

1) the hope of a prompt ratification of the entrance of Greece and

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

Turkey and, 2) a general agreement on the principles of a Middle East Command, this being the object of a necessary and very important study. This study would include the legal questions which had been raised which was partly military and to a large extent political. Progress had been made in this Conference toward the integration of Turkey into NATO.

Field Marshal Slim first assured Turkey it was never the intention of the U.K. that Turkey should be in NATO except as a full, complete and co-equal member, nor was it the idea of having Turkey in the Middle East Command until she were a full member of NATO. He agreed entirely on behalf of his country and his colleagues on the necessity of setting up some Middle East Command as soon as possible. He believed that such an organization would be as much in the interests of Turkey as of the other nations. All efforts of the Standing Group have been directed toward this, in order to see how best Turkey could be fitted into a general defense plan. He quoted from General Eisenhower's Memorandum, which pointed out the great importance of close coordination between SHAPE and the Middle East. He went on to say with regards to political control of the Middle East Command that Turkey be represented on the Council of the Military Committee of Chiefs of Staff, who would thus participate in the political and military directives to the Standing Group. If it were possible (and he quoted General Bradley) to have the Middle East under the Middle East Standing Group, which is equal to the NATO Standing Group, Turkey would be in full control of the Middle East Command.

He stated that the degree of control exercised by Turkey would be equal to that of the U.S., the U.K. and France, with the exception of the Standing Group. He said we cannot contemplate the Middle East Command without Turkey in the Middle East. If Turkey were in the European Command she would be one of many, but if she were in the Middle East she would be one of the most important nations in NATO. But he agreed with General Bradley that these exchanges of views had been satisfactory.

General Lecheres agreed with the U.S. and U.K. about the important progress accomplished in this Conference. France desires Turkey in NATO as soon as possible, as a full member of the first importance, independent of any Command arangement which might be agreed to. He noted with interest the importance attached to the Middle East Command and stated that this point of view was the same as that of France.

He felt it essential to make use of the proposal advanced by General Bradley as a means of supporting a quick solution, i.e.: The proposal that the Standing Group, plus a Turkish representative, undertake to study the Command of the Middle East, giving to this study the scope that it deserves. The importance of coordinating with SACEUR would allow us to arrive at a solution which could satisfy the legitimate preoccupation expressed by the Prime Minister.

A general discussion ensued in which it was decided to defer the questions of Item 6 until Sunday. With regards to the press communiqué it was decided that the Turkish Government would prepare the communiqué for the approval of the others. It was agreed that the communiqué register the fact that important progress had been realized in connection with the integration of Turkey into NATO.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:35 p.m.

Sunday Morning, 14 October

The meeting was reconvened at 1130 hours.

Present were those listed above.

Item 6—Equipment for Turkey.

General Bradley quoted the Memorandum distributed by Turkey the night before. He stated that supplies to Turkey would be continued on the same basis by the same method and that the Mission would be maintained under NATO regardless of Command arrangements. He referred to the equipment which so far had been supplied to Turkey as "capital", that is, initial equipment for new forces. The rate of supply we try to maintain depended on: 1) forces available to receive and use, and 2) the ability to get the necessary funds from Congress. As to the rate of production, he touched on certain categories of equipment as being replacement and maintenance rather than initial. He referred to hopes expressed by Congress that all our Allies will soon be able to undertake the problem of maintenance and spare parts, thus relieving our own industries of this burden. He made reference, also, to the ammunition problem, in which Turkey has already begun to implement the facilities of manufacture. He referred to the role of the nation in advising us on Turkey's requirements. He referred to the 1952-1953 programs, transmitted to Washington, and their objective as being the increase of efficiency of the Turkish Forces. An important point was to assure Turkey the U.S. had no idea of changing its method of supplying equipment.

General Lecheres had little to add. He understood the anxiety of Turkey over external aid, all the more so because France was and still is in the same situation. He referred to General Bradley and stated that the entrance of Turkey will bring clarification, in view of the representation of Turkey on the D.P.B., F.E.B., etc.

Field Marshal SLIM stated that the U.K. is already supplying many other nations of the Dominions and others in the world. In the Middle East area they are supplying all the equipment to Iraq, Trans-Jordan and certain quantities to Egypt. When the Middle East Command will have been set up the deliveries will be increased. If Egypt comes in on a cooperation basis deliveries to the Egyptian Army and Air Force will be increased.

With regards to Turkey the important objective is to see to it that full equipment from the U.S. sources go to the Turkish forces as quickly as possible. He felt that Turkish representation in the D.P.B., and F.E.B. and other NATO bodies would receive the full sympathy of the U.K.

The Prime Minister thanked General Bradley for the declarations, as well as Field Marshal Slim, and stated the important advantages derived from receiving arms and equipment for the Forces. He stated his belief that Aid to Turkey has been well placed. He made compliments to General Arnold and the Ambassador, He touched on economic aid from the U.S. and its influence on economic recovery. He referred to General Lecheres and agreed with what he said. He stated Turkey is in the position of cooperating with the U.S., the U.K. and France in the maintenance of democratic ideals and our common civilization. He stated he was slightly embarrassed (his Memorandum) to appear to be asking for so much, but has no wish to appear to be driving a bargain. Quotes "Turkish self-respect is equal to that of all other nations." Took consolation in the fact that the arming of Turkish forces was in the interest of all nations. Stated then that Turkey has 1½ million fully trained Reserves. Active forces actually in service and also fully trained amount to more than 300,000. The number of officers on active service is 30,000, and Turkev has more than 70,000 Reserve officers. From the above there is, in addition, the geographic situation of Turkey to consider, with great capacity of Turkey to defend the right flank of NATO as well as Arab States and the Middle East, as is obvious. In addition, points out the importance of the strength of Turkey to the defense against possible aggression against the Balkans as well as being a deterrent to aggression against the Balkans. Also points out the possibility of social and political development of the people of Turkey. Points out that Turkey is in a position such as to constitute defense against attack from the north as well as defense against the spreading of aggression to the Mediterranean. As a result of her special situation Turkey has been forced to participate in various wars in this area at the price of many sacrifices. With reference to possible backward aspects of Turkey's economy, including even aspects of misery and poverty, he stated this was not due to the nature of the Turkish people but to her geographic situation and her history.

He stated that evidence of this was available in the fact that Turkey spent more than 50% of her budget on military expenditures. In clarification of this he stated that the Defense Budget equaled 580 million Turkish Lira. This figure equals 40% of the total budget. One must consider, however, the expenditure of 200 million T.L. by other Government Departments for defense (this position can be given in detail) therefore, total defense expenditures amounted to 780 million T.L., i.e.: 50% of the budget. He did not believe any other country has spent so large a proportion of its budget in this manner. He stated that when all other countries demobilized and went on a peace-time footing, Turkey continued her military expenditures. The above are the reasons for the lack of economic development comparable to that of other countries.

He expressed gratitude for Marshall Aid but stated that Turkey only receives 1.1% of total Marshall Aid.

Expressed the desire to repeat the fact that any aid to Turkey in view of her capacity, her qualifications, and her military potential were more important than aid to be given to any other country. With reference to his Memorandum he believed that 30–35 Divisions completely and fully equipped would place Turkey in the position of being able to alleviate the burden of the G.P. [Great Powers?] nations as well as to be able to contribute materially to the peace of the world.

He said that having discussed the question of peace in the Middle Eastern area and the Arab countries, if one were to suppose that Turkey did not exist, it would be easy to see that these countries would now be behind the Iron Curtain. He stated that Turkey would contribute with great enthusiasm as a founding member of the Middle East Command. If this fully equipped force existed in Turkey today, the security of the Middle East area would be insured. The situation on the eastern flank of Turkey and among the Arab countries in Turkey's rear is obvious to all. Do not think it necessary to comment on the Iranian situation. Stated that the Arab countries were divided and without unity, and that their total contribution should they get together would be of the order of 2 or 3 Divisions.

In conclusion, a fully armed and equipped Turkey would not only be effective in the defense of the Middle East but would also be an element in the political security of that area. In making a request for equipment and arms to increase the Turkish forces, we do not only wish to strengthen ourselves but try to be in such a position as to make an increase in the contribution to the general security of all. A strong Turkey would always be an important element of consideration, should Russia contemplate aggression.

Only two points remain: (1) Turkey is inhabited by people anxious to defend themselves by force against aggression and to subdue the aggressor, and 2) while anxious to subdue the aggressor, Turkey is very proud to cooperate with NATO where the U.S., the U.K. and France stand for the highest ideals of democracy and the defense of the liberties of nations and peoples.

In closing Item 6 he requested all Generals to take his views into consideration, and repeated the capabilities and talents of Turkey, as well as the contribution to be made to the common cause. He stated that if a little aid, much aid, or no aid at all were forthcoming, Turkey would not falter in her course.

Field Marshal SLIM said we appreciate and value the strength, determination, resources and potentialities of Turkey. He expressed welcome to NATO.

General Lecheres stated the importance of the entrance of Turkey into NATO, the fact that we had here been able to define the work which must, most urgently, be undertaken in order to arrive at a decision.

General Bradley said he did not wish to talk further, felt that he had said enough for the Turks to realize the high regard of the U.S. He felt it was a good thing to have the Turks statements in our notes, so that all people working on the study could be apprised of them. The Turkish Prime Minister expressed thanks to the 3 governments for sending their highest military representatives. [Thought] this was a good sign for the security of Turkey.

After this exchange of compliments the meeting was closed and a sub-committee convened to consider the communiqué.

780.5/10-1651: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

SECRET WASHINGTON, October 16, 1951—7:46 p. m. 584. You shid deliver note to FonMin immed along fol lines: "The US Govt greatly regrets the decision of the Egypt Govt to reject the proposals which were made to it by the Govts of US, Fr, Turkey and UK.2 It is the sincere belief of the US Govt, which had collaborated closely with the other three Govts in their formulation, that the proposals offer a sound basis for resolving the Anglo-Egypt Treaty Ques in a manner wholly consistent with Egypt's position as an independent and sovereign power.

&lt;sup>7</sup>On October 15, the Turkish Government issued a communiqué which stated that the conversations had resulted in a "complete identity of views"; that, in view of the fact that the security of the Middle East was a matter of common concern, it had been considered necessary and useful that a Middle East Command be established; that the Turkish Government had "recognized in principle the value of such a Command and had of its own accord intimated its views to the Governments concerned"; and that a Turkish military mission headed by a general would visit Washington. Before departing for Paris that day, Generals Bradley and Lecheres and Field Marshal Slim, issued a statement endorsing the Turkish communiqué. For further information on the conference, see telegram Depto 537 from London, October 31, in vol. III, pt. 1, p. 602.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Stabler, cleared by McGhee, Perkins, and Matthews, and personally approved for transmission and signed by Acheson. Repeated to London, Paris, and Ankara.

&lt;sup>3</sup>On October 15, the Government of Egypt notified the U.S. Government of its rejection of the proposals presented to it on October 13 by the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey ("Statement by Secretary Acheson," October 17, 1951, Department of State Bulletin, October 29, 1951, p. 702). For further information on the Egyptian rejection of the four-power proposals, see despatch 921 from Cairo, October 9, p. 392.

The US Govt considers that the recent action of the Egypt Govt with respect to the abrogation of the Anglo-Egypt Treaty of 1936 and the 1899 Agreements concerning the Sudan is not in accord with proper respect for internat obligations and for its part believes it to be without validity. This action must be regarded as a serious retrograde step in the endeavors of the free world to develop systems of cooperative defense and in efforts to promote world law and order.

The US Govt expresses the strong hope that great restraint will be shown by all parties concerned in the present situation. At the same time the US Govt wishes to make clear that it will hold the Egypt Govt responsible for any loss of life, injury or damage to American citizens or property which may occur because of the lack of adequate measures of public security."

Emb urgent comments requested re desirability publication this note after delivery.3

ACHESON

780.5/10-1651: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, October 16, 1951—7:46 p. m.

357. (1) Egypt rejection MEC proposals will raise many ques in Arab States and Israel re future course of action by four powers. Dept considers it of highest importance that four powers continue to show same solidarity as has been evidenced in approach to Egypt and that they make quite clear that Egypt action will not deflect them in any way from determination establish MEC. Consequently Embs Paris, London, Ankara, shld seek concurrence fol line of quadripartite action Jidda, Baghdad, Damascus, Beirut, and Amman without delay. We feel it essential that NE states receive authoritative reply to ques

&lt;sup>3</sup> Ambassador Caffery replied in telegram 506 from Cairo of October 17 that if relations with the British required that the note be published, then he agreed it should be, but if it were more important to "keep the door open" vis-à-vis Egypt, then it would be unwise to publish it at that moment (780.5/10–1751). In telegram 593 to Cairo of October 18, McGhee, signing for Acheson, informed Caffery that the note would not be published (780.5/10–1751). Acheson, meanwhile, released a statement to the press on October 17 which closely paralleled the wording of the note contained in the source text. (Department of State Bulletin, October 29, 1951, p. 702)

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Jones and Stabler, cleared by Perkins, Nitze, Moore, Raynor, and, in substance, by Defense. Personally approved for transmission and signed by Acheson. Sent for action, priority, to Paris, London, Ankara; sent for information, until instructed, to Jidda, Baghdad, Damascus, Beirut, Amman; sent for information only to Cairo, Tel Aviv, Tehran.

"What will four powers do now?" from four powers in manner best suited local circumstances. Answering ques more important than manner presenting ans but important maintain quadripartite aspect.

(2) Fol points wld be made by US, UK, Turk and Fr Reps.

(a) Founders MEC are disappointed by Egypt rejection of proposals after what quite obviously was hasty and casual consideration. We can only conclude that this precipitate action was taken in the heat of a domestic polit situation since the merits inherent in the farreaching proposals are self-evident. Founders must hope as friends of Egypt that future study of the proposals may lead to a change in the Egypt attitude fol a second and more thoughtful look.

(b) Founder members of MEC have always recognized possibility that Egypt wld not be willing to cooperate in MEC at the outset and had decided that need for such coop security enterprise of such importance to the defense of the ME area as a whole that MEC wld be established irrespective of Egypt decision.

(c) US wld say, and other founders wld bring forward their own inducements, that as evidence of US seriousness of purpose with regard to MEC that US will in near future approach Govt to which accredited in connection with possible econ and mil assistance programs under MSP legis. This will be done through Amer Chief of Mission with a view to discussing with state concerned programs of assistance in both fields. From time MSP appropriations authorized NE states will be eligible for arms procurement assistance on a cash reimbursable basis and to supplement such purchases some US grant arms assistance may be available. Supply arms in either category will be coordinated by US, with UK and Fr (principal suppliers) through machinery set up under MEC framework: it will difficult for US to justify aid to states which do not cooperate with MEC. We confid expect econ funds available shortly for firm allotment.

(d) US considers it important that NE states shid consider most seriously giving their agreement in principle to collaborate with MEC. We hope this decision will be taken on basis what MEC has to offer welfare of state concerned and without reference Egypts action. Once a state has indicated its decision in principle its views and needs can be better taken into account in formulating MEC details. FYI Cyprus is being considered for HQ MEC.

(3) If asked whether US backs UK in retaining its forces as at present in the Suez base, US Rep wld be authorized to reply that US considers Brit forces in Egypt by right conferred under the 1936 Treaty which, as the Secy said on Oct 10, the US does not consider subject to unilateral abrogation. You may also make point that purpose of MEC is to build stability and strength in an area where defense capabilities of states are dangerously limited. Consequently, until MEC has succeeded in improving the levels of area defensive capabilities, the US wld consider the evacuation of the Suez Base without adequate substitute for strength withdrawn as a retrograde step from the point of view of the MEC objective. The US does, of course, look forward to the time when the states of the ME, including Egypt, will possess indigenous mil capabilities sufficient to assure the defense of their terrs and the area as a whole. In this event the US believes the role of non-ME powers in time of peace shid be minimal.

- (4) London, Paris and Ankara shld use this tel to ascertain whether these Govts still firm on decision set up MEC and whether they agree approach by Chiefs of Mission suggested above is most effective manner advising ME Govts of this intention. If so, UK, Fr and Turks may wish send comparable instrs (with counterpart considerations Para 2 (c)) to NE capitals in order arrange approaches similar those under Deptel 1976 Oct 11 to London.<sup>2</sup>
- (5) As soon as agreement above approach obtained from UK, Fr and Turk missions Arab caps will be further instructed. Tel Aviv will receive special instructions.

ACHESON

Not printed; it requested Gifford to inform the Foreign Office urgently of the desire of the Department of State that shortly following presentation of the MEC proposals to Egypt, quadripartite approaches should be made to the other Arab states and Israel to inform them in confidence of the MEC concept as embodied in the proposals to Egypt. A united approach by all four ambassadors to the governments to which they were accredited was recommended as the best policy, but if that were impossible, separate approaches made on the same day were strongly urged "Since quadripartite approach is basic in MEC concept" and the Department of State "believes common front four powers shild be apparent all stages." In closing, Acheson stated his particular wish "to avoid approaches giving impression traditional 'spheres of influence' still exist". (780.5/10-1151)

780.5/10-1751: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

London, October 17, 1951—8 p. m.

1891. Depcirtel 357,¹ October 16 discussed with Bowker today. He confirmed HMG still firm in decision set up MEC and felt it important make it clear our determination act vigorously to implement proposals. He seemed doubtful at first re desirability approaching other Arab States at this time, however, on grounds: (1) we did not want give impression of chasing after them; and (2) impression gained as result Ankara talks that Turks much more interested in NATO than MEC. He seemed think this might require further convs with Turks re their role and that it might be better four powers review whole question and determine command structure before going to other ME states.

We pointed out that if we delayed matter this long, other Arab States wild probably be galvanized into common front with Egypt as result Arab League meeting. We said it seemed to us that, although hopes might not be bright, we shid nevertheless strike now in hope obtaining coop other states and possibly isolating Egypt on this question. Insofar as Turkey concerned, we pointed out she was also being asked join this approach which it seemed to us wild have effect, if she agreed, of committing her further to MEC. Bowker seemed impressed with these arguments and, at end of conv, seemed entirely favorable to proceeding along lines suggested by Dept, with following two suggested changes:

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra.

(1) Addition of sentence at end para 2(b) along following lines: "The Egypt rejection has therefore not in any way altered our determination proceed with our plans";

(2) Omission of penultimate sentence para 2(d) beginning "Once a state has indicated.

Effect of foregoing suggested changes wild be to make clear our determination proceed in any event and to remove any implication other ME states can affect shape of command, which Bowker thought wild be most unwise.

Foregoing were prelim reactions only. Bowker promised urgent consideration and will try give us reply tomorrow.

Sent Dept 1891, rptd info Ankara 27, Cairo 59, Paris 744.

GIFFORD

780.5/10-1851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

Cairo, October 18, 1951—3 p. m.

511. When note 1 was delivered (remytel 506, October 17) 2 Under Secretary Ministry Foreign Affairs, who is ordinarily a reasoned individual, spent half hour tearing MEC proposals apart.

I must remind Dept that our Ambassadors expected this type of reaction, and it was for this reason that we so earnestly recommended that proposals not be put forward at this time (mytel 447, October 10).3

Having torn them to pieces, we cannot hope that Egyptians will give any further consideration to proposals as they now stand. If we are to take advantage of crack in door remytel 506 we will have to come up with proposals which at least will have to be reworded. We must realize that Egyptians can only think of the problem in terms of past history, and cannot see the realities of the present World situation. We must not expect them to consider the problem logically. Sent Dept 511, rptd info London 209, Paris 89, Ankara 71.

<sup>3</sup> Not printed, but see editorial note, p. 205.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Contained in telegram 584 to Cairo, October 16, p. 226.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed, but summarized in footnote 3, p. 227.

CAFFERY

780.5/10-1851 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET NIACT

London, October 18, 1951—7 p. m.

1915. Further to Embtel 1891, Oct 17. Following are HMG's views (cleared by PriMin) re further approach to Arab states outlined Depcirtel 357, Oct 16: <sup>2</sup>

- 1. FonOff confirms its desire see two changes contained para 2, Embtel 1891 for reasons stated third para that tel. With respect second change, however, FonOff now goes further and wld prefer delete para 2 (d) altogether on basis it creates too much of an impression we are chasing after states in area and that their attitude may affect our decision re proceeding with MEC. FonOff wld prefer whole tenor of communication to be strong indication our determination go ahead with MEC without exhorting states to cooperate. It thinks such exhortation may be be and maintains it knows of no instance when appeal to reason has prevented undesirable actions in Arab League. We have endeavored persuade FonOff that it wld be wise at this juncture to make every effort to persuade Arab states look at whole question rationally rather than emotionally and that we feel this was burden of Dept's suggested communication. We said we wld agree firmness might be what is required in event we were talking to Egypt, but we are not; we are talking to states where we still have opportunity for rational appeal. We recalled that further explanations in Arab ears at time tripartite declaration had done much prevent precipitate rejection. FonOff unconvinced, however, and feels we must give impression determination to proceed undeterred by any developments in area.
- 2. For reasons similar to foregoing, FonOff hopes we wld agree deletion final two sentences para 3, which it regards as indication of weakness when one of strength required. We have argued these two sentences not essentially different from position taken by Bevin in his plan for phased withdrawal from Suez area and that it wld be wisdom on our part to reassure NE states that we do not intend maintain peacetime forces in area forever, but FonOff continues feel strongly that point. It seemed feel, however, there wld be no objection re making oral replies along lines these two sentences in event we were queried by govts concerned, but felt it wld be mistake volunteer it.

3. FonOff feels different approach required for Jordan, which has already given indication its willingness cooperate. Para 2 (c) in particular raises complications in view treaty and UK supply of Arab

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 229.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 227.

Legion. FonOff maintains Jordan is already getting all the aid it requires thru established channels from UK sources and, while FonOff does not want to suggest what we shld say to Jordan Govt, it nevertheless hopes that communication confined points a and b might be found sufficient, with preface taking cognizance of Jordan's indication of willingness to cooperate.

4. Re Iraq, UK cld not make communication along lines para 2 (c), since UK has treaty obligation supply Iraq with arms. FonOff did not indicate any objection our speaking along this line, however.

5. Most UK cld probably say with respect para 2 (c) to Arab States other than Iraq and Jordan wld be statement along lines fourth sentence re coordination of supply and difficulty of justification aid to noncooperative states. Wording has not yet been worked out.

6. In view fact communications four govts wld probably not be identical in view different treatments para 2 (c), FonOff feels separate approaches preferable. We have urged strongly approaches shld be in order local precedent, but FonOff has not yet reached decision on this point. We suggest, added support on this point by Dept with Brit Amb Washington wld be helpful, as there is still some feeling UK shld go first Iraq and Jordan in view treaty position those two countries.

7. UK strongly in favor proceeding urgently these approaches, as soon as details worked out four capitals and considers report today that Egypt has called for Arab League polit comite mtg enhances necessity fast action.

8. FonOff suggests that approaches should be closely followed by simultaneous public announcements in four capitals re four powers' determination set up MEC.

Tel on foregoing lines being sent Brit Embs Washington, Paris, and Ankara with instructions endeavor coordinate approaches with those countries.

In view fact considerable further coordination apparently necessary, we are not repeating this by tel to NE capitals, but are leaving it Dept's judgment whether repeat this and Embtel 1891 those missions.

Sent Dept 1915, rptd info Ankara 28, Cairo 62, Paris 761, Jidda, Baghdad, Tehran, Tel Aviv, Amman, Damascus, Beirut unn.

GIFFORD

780.5/10-1851: Telegram

The Chargé in France (Bonsal) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET NIACT

Paris, October 18, 1951—8 p. m.

2272. Embtel 2248 Oct 17 <sup>1</sup> rptd London 559, Ankara 39, Cairo 61. La Tournelle has just informed me that FonOff has instructed Bonnet to see Secretary and state Fr position along fol lines re MEC situation in reply to points made in Depoirtel 357, Oct 16: <sup>2</sup>

(1) Fr are in full agreement as to need for continuance closest possible cooperation between four govts concerned in ME defense.

(2) Fr believe it wld be most inopportune at present time and under present circumstances to approach Arab states with a request that they join MEC. Fr feel that in present state of public emotion govts of these countries wld not dare take a stand which wld represent lack of solidarity with Egypt if Egyptian situation quiets down, then matter can be reconsidered. The four govts concerned shld keep in close contact so as to determine earliest possible opportune moment for making approach to Arab States.

(3) Amb Bonnet will reaffirm importance of complete solidarity and exchange of info between US, UK and Fr and will give indication as to undesirability of possible mediation by any one of these three govts in any dispute involving an Arab State and one of the other Western govts.

La Tournelle told me he had no info as to final position Brit Govt wld take in this matter.

I first asked La Tournelle whether FonOff had envisaged possibility of making a démarche to the Arab States indicating to them clearly our determination to continue activities and plans in connection with ME defense without perhaps raising issue of their joining MEC. He replied in negative stating that he thought our public statements and press reports wld be sufficient to make them realize that we wld continue our efforts. I then said that the object of the quadripartite approach which we had suggested had been precisely to counteract the effect in these Arab States of the wave of emotion flowing from Egypt and that we had thought that this type of approach might prevent a crystallization in a negative sense of their attitude. To this he replied that Fr Govt's analysis of situation, based upon its info, was as he had stated.

Sent Dept niact 2272, rptd info London 569, Ankara 41, Cairo 63.

BONSAL

¹Not printed; it reported on a conversation which Bonsal had with Roland Jacquin de Margerie, Assistant Director General for Political and Economic Affairs of the French Foreign Ministry, in which the latter "emphasized French support for immediate continuance efforts to establish MEC regardless Egyptian rejection" and the hope that the Foreign Ministry would complete preparation of a reply to British Foreign Secretary Morrison's message to Foreign Secretary Schuman emphasizing determination to remain at Suez (780.5/10-1751).

780.5/10-1951: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices 1

SECRET

Washington, October 19, 1951—7:42 p. m.

- 371. 1. Dept has considered points in London's 1915 Oct 18 <sup>2</sup> and Paris' 2272 Oct 18 <sup>3</sup> and believes that reaction so far re MEC in Arab States (except Egypt) and Israel requires immed action by four powers in Arab caps and Tel Aviv in order encourage whatever pro-MEC attitude exists. It is obvious from tels from London and Paris that immed agrmt cannot be reached on all points Depcirtel 357 Oct 16.<sup>4</sup>
- 2. Consequently, Dept now proposes that four powers reach immed agrmt on fol approach to Arab States (except Egypt) and Israel and that we continue meanwhile efforts reach agrmt between four powers for future use on certain other points in Depcirtel which have caused difficulty. Dept wishes stress that we did not intend suggest that ME states (except Egypt) be exhorted join MEC. We believe that four powers shld merely inform these states that four powers intend establish MEC and that we hope Arab States and Israel, independently of Egypt attitude, will give most serious consideration to whole ques which involves vitally their security and welfare.
- 3. We propose that UK, Fr, Turkey and US reps Arab caps (except Cairo) make fol pts on quadripartite basis: First, use Para 2(a) Depoirtel 357; Second, use Para 2(b) Depoirtel 357; Third, sponsoring powers MEC hope NE states will give most serious consideration to what MEC means in terms their welfare and security. As sponsoring powers proceed in formulation details and org MEC with a view to its early estabmt, views NE states wild be most welcome and helpful. However, States shid be left in no doubt that four powers intend estab MEC and will not be deflected or retarded in this intention.
- 4. Dept also feels that four powers shid be prepared to reply to queries re UK position in Egypt and for its part US rep wild be authorized reply that US considers Brit forces in Egypt by right conferred under '36 Treaty and to point to Secy's statements of Oct 10 and 17.5 US rep wild also be authorized make other points contained Para 3 Depcirtel 357 including last two sentences as US view.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Stabler and G. Lewis Jones, approved and signed for the Secretary by McGhee, cleared with BNA and WE. Sent niact to London, Paris, and operations priority via military channels to Ankara. Repeated for information to Cairo, Baghdad, Jidda, Amman, Beirut, Damascus, Tel Aviv, and Tehran.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 231. <sup>3</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Ante, p. 227.

&lt;sup>5</sup> On October 10, Secretary Acheson released a statement taking note of the introduction in the Egyptian Chamber of Deputies of draft legislation to abrogate

- 5. Dept strongly hopes that UK, Fr, and Turkey will agree to this greatly simplified approach being made at once. We feel valuable time already lost and such favorable reaction as we have recd from Arab states may change for worse after Arab League mtg if four powers gave impression vacillation.
- 6. Immed fol tel suggests line rep four powers shid take in Tel Aviv for which immed agrmt also requested.
- 7. Emb London shld inform FonOff re Para 8 London reftel that Dept considers further formal statement re MEC not neces since as far US concerned intention proceed with MEC has been made clear.
- 8. Emb Paris shld emphasize to FonOff that above suggested approach has been designed meet Fr views as expressed numbered Para 2 Paris reftel and that we attach great importance earliest action Arab Caps (except Cairo) and Tel Aviv. FYI Fr Amb has not approached Dept.
- 9. Emb Ankara shld urge FonOff give earliest agrmt and so instruct its reps.

ACHESON

the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936 and the Anglo-Egyptian condominium agreements of 1899 providing for joint administration of the Sudan. The Secretary then stated that "None of the agreements in question provides for abrogation. The U.S. Government believes that proper respect for international obligations requires that they be altered by mutual agreement rather than by unilateral action of one of the parties." The full text of the Secretary's statement is in the Department of State Bulletin, October 22, 1951, p. 647. The Secretary's statement of October 17, took note, with "genuine regret" of the Egyptian rejection of proposals for a Middle East Command (ibid., October 29, 1951, p. 702).

780.5/10-1951: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices 1

SECRET

Washington, October 19, 1951—7:42 p. m.

- 372. Addressee missions instructed seek FonOff concurrence fol line to be taken on quadripartite basis in Tel Aviv re substance follow-up approach now contemplated Depoirtel 371 Oct 19.<sup>2</sup> Dept believes method handling approach Israel shld be left to discretion reps Tel Aviv so long solidarity MEC founders apparent Israel Govt.
- 2. Israel shid be informed that approaches being made Jidda, Baghdad, Beirut, Amman, Damascus along lines Depreftel and that we are not going further than Para 3 (third) Depreftel re invitations Arabs because they are unlikely accept this time.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler and G. Lewis Jones, approved and signed for the Secretary by Stabler. Sent for action to London, Paris, Ankara. Sent for information until instructed to Tel Aviv. Sent for information only to Baghdad, Cairo, Jidda, Tehran, Amman, Beirut, and Damascus.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

- 3. In informing Israel Govt, reps wld state that sponsoring powers providing above info enable Israel also have full picture latest devels and to permit Israel on same basis as Arabs carefully consider importance MEC.
- 4. If pressed re ques invitation Israel assoc itself MEC, reps wld be authorized state (a) no invitations yet issued and (b) at present time for obvious reasons it wld be prejudicial MEC if Arab attention were diverted from inherent merits of proposals and distortedly focussed upon idea that through MEC they might be assocd with Israel.
- 5. Reps wild state that as sponsoring powers proceed with discussions re MEC blueprint, Israel's views will be welcomed, i.e. Para 3 (third) Depreftel.

ACHESON

Editorial Note

In telegram 2321, niact, from Paris of October 20, Ambassador Bruce reported that the French Government agreed to the proposed approach to the five Arab governments and Israel, outlined in circular telegrams 371 and 372, "and is tonight dispatching telegraphic instrs to its missions in countries concerned." However, the Foreign Ministry stressed its continuing belief that such an approach had little chance of inducing Arab cooperation at the moment and therefore the representatives of the four powers should "underline" that their approach constituted no more than a notification of intent and not a further invitation (780.5/10-2051). In telegram 1949, niact, from London, October 20, Ambassador Gifford reported that the Foreign Office had discussed circular telegrams 371 and 372 and that while it was "somewhat disappointed new suggestions do not go further towards meeting Brit points" reported in telegram 1915 from London (ante, page 231), nonetheless an approach was desirable. However, the Foreign Office continued to object to the inclusion of any suggestion of a hope that at some future date the countries of the Middle East, including Egypt, would become sufficiently powerful as to assume their own defense burdens and it also expressed the hope that "Ambs can avoid giving impression we want views NE states just at this particular juncture, making it clear we wld expect receive them at later date as Command develops" (780.5/10-2051).

In telegram 357 to Ankara of October 21, Stabler, signing for Acheson, urged that Turkish agreement be immediately obtained for a quadripartite approach to the Arab states and Israel (780.5/10-2151), and Ambassador Wadsworth replied in telegram 383, niact, from Ankara of October 23 that he and his British and French colleagues had submitted nearly identical notes to Turkish Foreign Minister Köprülü, and that after subsequent consultation with Köprülü, Prime Minister Adnan Menderes had replied that a parallel rather than joint approach be made to the Arab governments preceding by approximately a week that made to Israel (780.5/10–2351). Stabler, signing for Acheson, replied in telegram 363 to Ankara of October 24, that parallel approaches were satisfactory to the United States Government but that they should be made simultaneously to Israel and the Arab states and no later than October 27 (780.5/10–2451). Ambassador Wadsworth in telegrams 389 and 390 from Ankara of October 24 and 25, respectively, reported securing Turkish agreement on these points (780.5/10–2451 and 780.5/10–2551).

Arab reactions to this fresh four-power démarche on the Middle East Command were mixed. In telegram 436, niact, from Beirut, October 26, Minister Harold B. Minor reported the Lebanese Foreign Minister as stating that the delicate situation then existing in the country forced Lebanon to assume a "somewhat 'reserved'" attitude toward the MEC (780.5/10-2651). Minister Gerald Drew informed the Secretary of State in telegram 117 from Amman, October 27, that the Jordanian Prime Minister "was cordially uncommunicative" to the quadripartite approach, "merely expressing hope we could have further convers on MEC as plans progressed" (780.5/10-2751). Ambassador Raymond Hare reported from Jidda in telegram 219 of October 27, that Khaireddin Zerelky, the acting head of the Saudi Arabian Foreign Office, had received the four-power presentation in a "friendly fashion, even including reference approach Israel which he said manifestly of serious concern to all Arab States and our examination of reasons for so doing helpful." However, Zerelky added that it was "unfortunate presentation project coincided with Egypt crisis" as this naturally induced the Egyptian Government to "see in proposals new move by Brit to induce others to underwrite their imperialistic designs" (780.5/10-2751). In despatch 428 from Baghdad of November 1, Ambassador Edward S. Crocker reported that in conversation, Iraq's Permanent Ambassador to the United Nations and President of the Chamber of Deputies Mohamed Fadhil al-Jamali had remarked "that Iraquis found two principal obstacles in the way of their adherence to the MEC; one concerned the French and Turkish troops and the other the undefined relation of Israel to the pact" (780.5/11-151).

Conversations between various United States diplomatic officials in the Middle East and representatives of the countries to which they were accredited concerning the Middle East Command took place throughout the remainder of 1951 and were reported in telegrams and despatches which may be found in Department of State file 780.5.

886.00 FA/10-2351: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

RESTRICTED

Washington, October 23, 1951—7:23 p. m.

385. Passage MSA Appropriation Act October 19 makes available $65 million economic aid to Arab States in form contribs to PRA plus bilateral aid.

Now possible make massive approach problem economic development as sketched Clapp report. While delay final Cong action most unfortunate, now must make up for lost time to conduct effective 1952 operations. Legis has set pattern which may be followed subsequent years, and 1953 programming is also matter urgency.

To provide missions and PRA full background for negots propose send Gardiner and Fryer representing McGhee and Bennett to area leaving Washington October 30 to be available brief period concentrating efforts Damascus, Amman and Baghdad where assume best MSA opportunities. They shld arrange see Blandford and Macatee soon. Beirut pls cable if mtg Beirut or Paris October 30 more convenient.

TCA teams described Deptels October 19 will be available work out details program.<sup>2</sup>

ACHESON

780.5/10-3151

The Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews) to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, October 31, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Now that the intention to establish a Middle East Command has been made public knowledge, the Department believes it would be desirable for the founding members (US, UK, France, Turkey and the three Commonwealth nations) to state publicly at an early date the basic political philosophy of the Command and some of the principles under which it will operate with a view to developing pro-MEC sentiments in the Arab states and

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted and transmitted by Mr. Gardiner, cleared by NE, S/ISA, TCA, and UNA. Sent to Cairo, Baghdad, Jidda, Tel Aviv, London, Paris, Beirut, Damascus, Amman.

&lt;sup>2</sup>Reference is to a series of telegrams sent to various Near Eastern missions stating that the projected expanded technical cooperation aid program for the region, beginning with Fiscal Year 1952, required that the Technical Cooperation Administration organize regional operating divisions in Washington to provide line administration for all programs (telegram 141 to Jidda, telegram 155 to Damascus, telegram 359 to Beirut, October 19, in file 880.00 TA/10-1951).

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by G. Lewis Jones and Stabler. Cleared by Nitze, Parsons of RA, Coe of BNA, Hoskins of NEA, and Moore of GTI.

Israel. While MEC is, of course, a military organization created for the defense of the area, we must stimulate a favorable disposition toward the Command on the part of the nations of the area. This in turn is a pressing political problem of considerable difficulty and magnitude as indicated by the Egyptian situation.

At the present time the only knowledge which prospective associates have of MEC is what they have been able to deduce from the proposals made to the Egyptian Government and the statement of our diplomatic representatives in making these proposals known to them. These proposals were prepared specifically for Egypt. Now that Egypt has rejected them it is important for the future of MEC to restate in more general terms, for the other states of the area, the principles underlying the MEC concept. If, after having announced that we intend to proceed with the establishment of MEC, the founder members can say nothing further until January-February when the Congress will be in a position to ratify the entrance of Greece and Turkey into NATO, Egyptian and other hostile propaganda against MEC will have greatly reduced the likelihood of other Arab states being willing to associate themselves with MEC.

MEC has a number of important aspects:

a. 1. Defense of the Middle East (Defense).

2. Definition of MEC area (State-Defense).

MEC relationship to NATO (State-Defense).
 Role of Turkey in MEC (State-Defense).

b. Detailed organizations of MEC, including location of MEC Headquarters (Defense).

c. Steps required to secure association of Arab states, Israel and other interested states with MEC (State-Defense).

The foregoing list emphasizes the very broad range of politicomilitary considerations involved in MEC. The interconnection of State-Defense interests is also brought out in NSC 47/5 of March 14, 1951 and the President's message to Congress in connection with MSP.<sup>2</sup>

This letter is devoted primarily to point c, above, which is among the most important since MEC becomes something of an anomaly if no ME state other than Turkey is willing to be associated with it. Points a and b, above, have sufficiently firm characteristics to be susceptible of solution. Point c, however, involves a complex of hatreds, neutralism, Communism, nationalism, xenophobia, and the aftermath of Western imperialism and will require a painstaking educational campaign with the states concerned.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference is to the President's Special Message to the Congress on the Mutual Security Program, May 24, 1951; see the editorial note, p. 150.

The Department believes that in order for MEC to be accepted by the NE states it must be presented with elements which will capture the imagination of these states as a "New Deal". The difficult point will be to persuade the leaders of the Arab states, in the face of Egyptian-generated hostility, to recognize the importance of MEC to welfare and security of their countries and to lead public opinion to desire association with MEC.

Enclosed is a set of principles largely drawn from previous documentation on MEC, including the proposals to Egypt and the US-UK politico-military talks from which the proposals emerged. These principles also contain a few additional ideas consistent with previous documentation which would enhance the "sales value" of MEC in the area. It would be extremely helpful to have the comments of the Department of Defense upon the enclosed statement in so far as it might affect the ultimate form which MEC will take. It should be emphasized that the wording of the statement is tentative and that in its present form it represents the general thoughts of the Department. It may be desirable to dress up the language from the point of view of public appeal.

When the Defense Department has commented upon the enclosure and, subject to its concurrence on the principles set forth, it is suggested the next step should be to seek the concurrence of the UK, France, Turkey, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa. It is important to the success of MEC that all of us have the same principles in mind. In seeking the concurrence of the other states, it should be made clear that these would be general principles only and that the details of the MEC structure which would be created on the framework of these principles would be worked out at a meeting in Washington as suggested in point X of the proposals to Egypt.

It is doubtful, of course, that Turkey would be willing to make any firm commitment regarding MEC until it is a full-fledged member of NATO and until its aspirations with regard to participation in NATO are satisfied. This being understood, however, we feel that there would be no harm in asking the Turks to consider and comment upon a set of "principles".

If the principles could be agreed among the states named, this in itself would be an achievement. However, we would hope that the states concerned would concur in jointly making these principles public at an agreed time which would have the maximum impact on the Arab states and Israel.

It would be appreciated if you could have urgent attention directed to this question. It would be particularly useful if the Secretary, who is now in Paris, could discuss this matter with the UK and French Foreign Ministers at an early date.<sup>3</sup>

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State: H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS

[Annex]

Draft Statement of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Turkey, Australia, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa on the Basic Principles of the Middle East Command 4

In establishing the Middle East Command, the seven founder countries state that they are guided by the following principles:

- 1. The United Nations is a world response to the principle that peace is indivisible and that the security of all states is jeopardized by breaches of the peace anywhere; at the same time it is incumbent upon the states of any area to be willing and able to undertake the initial defense of their area.
- 2. The defense of the Middle East is vital to the free world and its defense against outside aggression can be secured only by the cooperation of all interested states. (Proposals I and II to Egypt.)
- 3. The Middle East Command is intended to be the center of cooperative efforts for the defense of the area as a whole: the achievement of peace and security in the area through MEC will permit social and economic advancement.
- 4. A function of the Middle East Command will be to assist and support the states associated with it in developing the capacity of each to play a role in the defense of the area as a whole against outside aggression. Problems of an intra-area nature will continue to be handled bilaterally or multilaterally in accordance with the UN

&lt;sup>3</sup> Acting Secretary of Defense William C. Foster, under a covering letter of November 3 to the Secretary of State, transmitted a memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of Defense, dated November 2, in which the Joint Chiefs of Staff expressed general concurrence in the principles of the draft statement but recommended a number of changes in the draft in the interest of accuracy and clarity. They also advised the Secretary of Defense that it had to be recognized that "the establishment of a Middle East Command as has been proposed would be most difficult under current conditions in the Middle East, and that considerable departure from original concepts may have to be made." Acting Secretary Foster, in view of the JCS comment, informed the Secretary of State that he was forwarding the JCS memorandum with the thought that the two departments "should continue to develop new concepts which will meet the changing conditions in the Middle East as they occur." He concurred in the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Department of State did not agree to all of the changes in the draft proposed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the draft statement was discussed informally between representatives of the two departments on November 3. A later agreed version of the draft statement was sent to Secretary Acheson in Paris in telegram Tosec 13 of November 7; see footnote 3, p. 243.

&lt;sup>4</sup>Drafted by G. Lewis Jones and Stabler. Cleared by Parsons, Coe, Hoskins, and Moore.

Charter, the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950, the Armistice Agreements, and the several Treaties of Alliance.

- 5. The task of the Middle East Command at the outset will consist primarily of planning, the provision of advice and training missions to the Middle East states upon request, and the coordination of arms supplies and the training programs for Middle East nationals in foreign countries.
- 6. Facilities to train and equip forces of participating nations will be provided by those participating members of the Middle East Command in a position to do so. (Proposal IX to Egypt.)
- 7. The Supreme Allied Commander, Middle East, will command forces placed at his disposal and will develop plans for the operations of all forces within the area (or to be introduced into the area) in time of war or international emergency. However, the placing of forces under command of SACME in peacetime is not a prerequisite for association with the Middle East Command. Movement of those troops placed under SACME's command within the territories of states associated with the Middle East Command will be made only with the agreement of the associated state concerned.
- 8. It is anticipated, although details have yet to be settled among founder members, that at the outset the Middle East Command will consist of a small headquarters staffed by officers representing the founder members and the Middle East states associated with the Command. The duty of the Middle East Command commander and his staff will be to the corporate defense enterprise represented by the Command. National interests will be represented at M.E.C. HQ. through a Liaison Organization.
- 9. Flags and insignia used by Middle East Command will be of special, non-national design to emphasize its cooperative area character.
- 10. States associated with the Middle East Command will during peacetime have final decision as to the use by Middle East Command of their national territories and resources. SACME, on behalf of states associated with MEC, will reach agreements with the states concerned regarding the rights and obligations which go with MEC association.
- 11. Notwithstanding the wide differences which exist among the states of the area in resources, size, and population, the Middle East Command will preserve the democratic principle of equality of the states associated with it. (Proposal IV to Egypt.)
- 12. The broad mission of MEC and its cooperative character make it necessary that all states, whether territorially or not part of the area, act on the basis of the best interests of the cooperative defense of the area.

13. The creation of the Middle East Command is a response to the present lack in the Middle East of organization, capacity and experience to defend the area. (SG 80/4) <sup>5</sup> When the necessary indigenous organization and capacity for area defense has been created through the efforts of the Middle East Command, the peacetime role in MEC of those countries not territorially part of the Middle East should be minimal.

14. The founder members of MEC do not regard the initial form in which MEC will be organized as unchangeable; they believe MEC should evolve in the manner which will enable it most effectively to provide for the defense of the ME area as a whole.

740.5/11-651: Telegram

The Ambassador in France (Bruce) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY

Paris, November 6, 1951—11 p. m.

Secto 14.<sup>2</sup> I. Fol is text MEC principles as provisionally agreed today between US UK and France (Deps Secto 8) for issuance by US UK France and Turks (possibly joined by South Africa, New Zealand and Australia).<sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>5</sup> Regarding this NATO defense paper, see vol. III, pt. 1, p. 573.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to Ankara, London, Tel Aviv, Cairo, Jidda, Baghdad, Beirut, Damascus, and Amman.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Acheson was in Paris between November 6-24 in connection with the opening of the Sixth Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly. During the course of his stay, he took the opportunity to meet frequently with the Foreign Ministers of France and the United Kingdom to discuss outstanding problems facing the three countries.

&lt;sup>8</sup> Between November 4–8, Acheson, Eden, and Schuman held a series of meetings to define common policy on the establishment of a Middle East Command using as a basis of discussion a draft proposal submitted by Eden on November 4 and transmitted to the Department in telegram Secto 4 on November 5. This proposal was redrafted on November 6 and sent to the Department in telegram Secto 8 of November 6, with Secretary Acheson's editorial comments following the same day in telegram Secto 9 (740.5/11–551).

The Department of State on November 6 informally furnished the Office of the Secretary of Defense with its comment on a revision of the draft statement of principles, supra, prepared subsequent to the receipt of Secretary Acheson's comments. The Secretary of Defense, under a covering letter dated November 7 to the Secretary of State, transmitted the revised draft statement as amended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to which the Joint Chiefs of Staff from the military point of view perceived no objection. The Secretary of Defense concurred in the JCS version of the draft statement. The Joint Chiefs of Staff had deleted paragraph 6 of the Department of State revision and had amended paragraph 5 to read as follows:

&quot;5. The task of the Middle East Command at the outset will be primarily one of planning and providing the Middle East states on their request with assistance in the form of advice and training. It will also coordinate requests for arms and equipment submitted by states in the area willing to join in its defense and will forward such requests, with recommendations of SACME, to

"In proceeding with their announced intention to establish the ME Command, the Govts of the US, UK, France and Turkey state they are guided by fol principles:

1. UN is world response to principle that peace is indivisible and security of all states is jeopardized by breaches of peace anywhere; at same time it is incumbent upon states of any area to be willing and able to undertake the initial defense of their area.

2. Def of the ME is vital to free world and its def against outside aggression can be secured only be cooperation of all interested states.

3. ME is intended to be center of cooperative efforts for def of area as a whole; achievement of peace and security in area thru the MEC will bring with it social and econ advancement.

4. A function of MEC will be to assist and support the states willing to join in the def of the ME and to develop capacity of each to play its proper role in def of area as a whole against outside aggression. It will not interfere in problems and disputes arising within the area.

5. The task of MEC at the outset will be primarily one of planning and providing the ME states on their request with assistance in the form of advice and training. It will also coordinate requests for arms and equipment submitted by states in the area willing to join in its def. Such assistance will be provided upon request by sponsoring states of MEC in a position to do so.

6. Supreme Allied Commander, ME, will command forces placed at his disposal and will develop plans for operations of all forces within area (or to be introduced into area) in time of war or international emergency. However, the placing of forces under command of SACME in peacetime is not prerequisite for joining in common effort for def of the ME. Movement of those troops placed under SACME's command to or within the territories of states joining in def of ME will be made only with the agreement of the state or states concerned and in full accord with their national independence and sovereignty.

7. While details have yet to be formulated by the sponsoring states, at outset MEC will be an integrated Allied command and not a national command. The responsibility of SACME will be to ensure the effectiveness of the corporate def enterprise represented by the command. All states joining in this enterprise will become members on a basis of equality of the Middle East def liaison org which is to be the link between the command and the countries ready to join in the def of this area.

8. Any facilities granted to SACME in peacetime by states joining in the def of the ME will be the subj of specific agreements.

9. The broad mission of MEC and its cooperative character make it necessary that all states, whether territorially or not part of the sponsoring states of the Middle East Command which are in a position to provide such matériel."

Footnote continued from preceding page.

In telegram Tosec 13 of November 7, the Departments of State and Defense sent to Paris their version of the basic principles on the Middle East Command which, with several textual changes, was the same as the "Draft Statement . . . on the Basic Principles of the Middle East Command" submitted to the Department of Defense as the annex to Matthews' letter to Lovett of October 31, supra. Tosec 13 noted that the Joint Chiefs of Staff perceived no objections to this Draft Statement from a military standpoint. (740.5/11-751) area, act on basis of best interests of the cooperative def of area; MEC naturally will not further the national interest of any particular state.

10. Ultimate objective of MEC is to supply such deficiencies as exist at present in org and capacity for defense in the area so that the peacetime role of the states of the area in ME def will progessively increase, thus permitting the role of states not territorially part of ME to be reduced proportionately.

11. Sponsoring states of MEC do not regard initial form in which MEC will be organized as unchangeable; they believe MEC shld evolve in the manner which will enable it most effectively to provide for the def of the ME area as a whole."

II. Above text still subj amendments but we must move fast to meet Nov 10 publication date which means form text by Nov 8. Both UK and France seem firm on wording above and US amendments shid be substantive since each change involves so many time consuming clearances.

III. Also provisionally agreed with UK and France is fol timetable.

1. Agreed draft of principles by Nov 8.

2. Instruct Arab caps (except Egypt) and Israel to arrange quadripartite approaches in most convenient manner to home govts on Nov 9 or as soon thereafter as possible. (Note: since door is still open for Egypt to accept proposals made to her she will not be made object of new quadripartite approach—Egypt will be merely informed principles as courtesy.)

3. Four powers to hand agreed principles to ME FonMins present

Paris simultaneously with second stage above.

4. Four govts arrange publish statements Wash, Paris, Ankara and London.

IV. See Secto 15 for reaction to text by Turks FonMin.4

BRUCE

740.5/11-651: Telegram

The Ambassador in France (Bruce) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Paris, November 6, 1951—11 p. m.

Secto 15. 1. Text MEC principles as quoted para 1 Secto 14, November 6 <sup>2</sup> to Dept handed FonMin Köprülü today as Secy, Eden and Schuman this morning agreed shld be done. Dept reps promised Köprülü Emb Ankara wld get text promptly into hands Sec Gen Turk FonOff. Ankara pls report Dept and Paris when this done.

2. Köprülü discussion lasted 2 hours. He said principles wld have to be cleared Ankara but he did not appear averse to idea statement.

His detailed comments follow.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Infra.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Ankara and London.

- 3. a. FonMin expressed concern re para 4 feeling that final sentence re intra-area probs might be interpreted by Arabs as constituting license for Israel to commit aggression without fear retaliation by MEC members. He laid great stress on necessity reassuring Arabs this score. We asked whether he wld prefer original wording to effect intra-area probs wld continue be handled in accordance UN Charter, Tripartite declaration, armistice agrmts and treaties alliance, but FonMin did not take to this idea presumably because of ref to tripartite declaration to which Turkey not party. FonMin preferred "less detailed formula" which wld at same time reassure Arabs in connection their fears vs. Israel. We agreed attempt find new wording.
- b. FonMin apprehensive association 3 dominions with statement wld have in Arab eyes appearance of "ganging up". He expressed strong preference restricting declaration of principles to four powers.
- c. On several occasions, FonMin referred necessity tailoring new proposals to peculiar psychological atmosphere prevailing Arab states; he showed particular concern re danger rebuff if principles not responsive questions ME states have in mind. He therefore suggested we shld take further soundings with states without indicating in any way we were contemplating issuing new statement. When soundings completed, he thought we cld review them to ensure our replies were responsive in all essential details. We pointed out previous approaches had elicited number reactions and that it was with these in mind we had evolved set principles. They might not be responsive all questions Arabs have but it wld be impossible give them 100 percent satisfactory. Present set principles were honorable, honest and shld commend themselves to Arabs. FonMin expressed himself as satisfied with this explanation.
- d. FonMin emphasized conviction it wld be mistake for us give impression we desire answer from Arab states at this point re association MEC. We expressed complete agrmt, explaining purpose new demarche solely to clarify points which have been bothering Arabs and not to force them to state their position at this time.
- e. FonMin stressed importance of avoiding leaks re principles before they are handed ME govts and ME FonMins here. He also felt simultaneous publication desirable.
- 4. Emb Ankara requested follow up and make certain timetable para 3 Secto reftel understood Ankara. We will give Köprülü and transmit Ankara text changes in response para 3 (a) above.<sup>3</sup>

BRUCE

&lt;sup>3</sup> On November 8 in Secto 23, Secretary Acheson sent to the Department the definitive United States, United Kingdom, French, and Turkish text on the Middle East Command as agreed to that day. The four countries also agreed to a simultaneous release of the text in Washington, London, Paris, and Ankara at 6 p. m. Paris time on November 10 (740.5/11-851). The text is printed in the Department of State Bulletin, November 19, 1951, pp. 817-818.

780.5/11-1151 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

TEL Aviv, November 11, 1951—1 p. m.

466. PriMin Ben Gurion asked me to call on him late yesterday p. m. and in presence of DirGen FonOff Eytan said he wished have preliminary conversation re MEC before Cabinet considers matter formally.

He explained Israel sympathetic with purposes MEC and appreciative great importance of decision defend region. Believes his country can be of real assistance, but feels its assoc can be just as effective and less embarrassing to all concerned if its relationship is informal. He does not exclude possibility of working thru MEC but refers to danger adverse Arab reaction if undue or untimely attention directed to Israelis connection with Command.

As to Israel it has two fears: first, that Jewish immigration from Iron Curtain countries might be stopped as reprisal if Israel's cooperation too much publicized; and second, that Israel might be exposed to aggression by neighbors if they were to know the exact size of Israel's standing army. It wld not have misgivings on the latter score with respect to the US and UK and wld favor arrangements with them rather than MEC, which he feels wld necessitate having to reveal milit secrets to Arabs.

He believes Israel cld make substantial contribution to area defense in (1) manpower (2) repair facilities (3) transport facilities such as air fields, ports, roads, railways (4) manufacturing milit supplies such as small arms, ammunition etc. And (5) stockpiling facilities.

Comment follows.2

DAVIS

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to all Arab capitals, Ankara, London, and Paris.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 467 from Tel Aviv of November 11, Davis reported that Ben Gurion had further stated, inter alia, that Israel could be counted upon to cooperate in any future MEC as 80 percent of the nation approved the current foreign policy; that Israeli manpower was increasing, and training was improving; that he hoped a future MEC would adopt American arms and, finally, that he hoped to see "Amer as well as Brit troops in area for morale and other reasons" (780.5/11-1151). In telegram 356 to Tel Aviv of November 15, Samuel K. C. Kopper, signing for Acting Secretary Webb, requested Davis to inform Ben Gurion that the United States appreciated his views about the MEC "which indicate clearly Israel's full understanding importance MEC to defense NE area." Kopper added that the Department of State recognized that certain regional problems, i.e., a satisfactory method to provide for Israeli-Arab cooperation, would have to be worked out before an MEC could come into true being. "Since MEC is regional Coop enterprise," Kopper concluded, "we naturally look to time when Israel will be able assume proper role in MEC. You may assure PriMin that sponsoring powers will keep Israel informed Re MEC developments and you personally will be glad to continue Pres discussions with PriMin as he may see fit" (780.5/11-1551).

740.5/11-1851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, at Paris 1

SECRET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, November 18, 1951—9 p. m.

Tosec 40. For the Secretary from McGhee. We have been much disturbed by report in Delga 233 Nov 17 <sup>2</sup> that Egypt FonMin is exerting "tremendous pressure" on heads Arab Dels to persuade them issue joint statement or separate statements either Tues or Wed supporting Egypt's rejection MEC as well as its position on Anglo-Egyptian question. Since focal point Arab activities re MEC now seems to be Paris, we believe it wld be most helpful, provided you had opportunity and found it convenient, if you cld talk to heads Arab Dels (except Egypt) and impress upon them great importance which we attach to MEC and grave mistake Arab States wld make if they rejected MEC. We are certain that your personal intervention wld have profound effect at this critical stage.

We have instructed missions Arab caps (except Cairo) approach Govts along lines Deptel 2997 Nov 18<sup>3</sup> and you might desire use this material shld you find it possible see heads Arab Dels. [McGhee.]

Webb

320/11-1751: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in France 1

SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, November 18, 1951—9 p. m. 2997. For Secretary, Amb and GADel.

1. Malik's report of Salaheddin's efforts in Paris (Delga 233 Nov 17)<sup>2</sup> is most disturbing. Although aware that Egypt has been doing its utmost to line up Arab support for its position on Anglo-Egyptian problem and MEC, Malik's report is our first indication that Salaheddin's efforts appear to be meeting with success. Leb suggestion re US approach to Ibn Saud is, of course, not new element since Amb Jidda has had full discussions with SAG and Dept has been in close touch here with Saudis, including DefMin Prince Misha'al, now visiting US. However, view reported trend in Paris, we feel that further endeavors shld be made immed not only with SAG but also with other Arab States which have not yet taken position on

Not printed, but see telegram Tosec 40, supra.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler of NE.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>8</sup> Infrā.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler, cleared in draft with McGhee. Also sent niact to Baghdad, Jidda, Beirut, Amman, Damascus, London, Ankara. Repeated to Tel Aviv and Cairo.

MEC. We shall suggest UK, Fr, and Turks make similar endeavors, but US will take action in any event. Consequently missions Arab Caps (except Cairo) shld approach Govt to which accredited at highest level you believe desirable along fol lines, basing this approach on reports re Egyptian activities which we have recd from Paris and elsewhere (but preserving Leb confidence):

2. US recognizes, as do its allies and friends, that Anglo-Egyptian sit is urgent problem which requires earliest solution and that until solution is found, unrest generated in Egypt will be reflected in NE area as whole. We are anxious to find reasonable and peaceable solution this problem and will leave no possibility for its solution unexplored. We still consider MEC offers hopeful avenue for settlement. However, still more important is what MEC can mean in terms welfare and security NE area. We sincerely believe that rejection MEC by Arab States merely to support Egypt position wld be catastrophe for Arab States and wld be dangerously contrary their own individual interests which, in our view, shid be paramount consideration. In proceeding with our intention to establish MEC we continuously recognize difficulty which wld confront Arab States if sponsors MEC press them state their position until they are prepared to do so and therefore sponsors have made particular point of preserving for Arab States their flexibility of position and opportunity for careful consideration and study MEC developments. Approach made last week re statement of principles is evidence this attitude.

It is with regret we have received reports from Paris and elsewhere that Egypt FonMin in Paris is pressing Arab States to reject MEC forthwith, apparently not on basis its merits, which we steadfastly believe it has but because Egypt wishes support for its precipitate actions, irrespective of individual interests other Arab States. We fully understand Egypt's important position in NE area and natural affinity Arab States toward each other, but we wld find it most difficult to understand action by Arab States which wld freeze their position re MEC, simply to respond to Egyptian FonMin's demands.

We therefore hope that Govt to which you accredited will continue to maintain its fullest flexibility and independence of action vis-à-vis MEC and will consider this question only on its merits.

3. Embs Paris, London and Ankara shld inform FonOff US making above approach and we hope similar instrs will be sent Fr, UK and Turk Dipl reps Arab caps.

4. GADel Paris shid inform Malik in strictest confidence our appreciation his helpful attitude and give him substance above approach.

Editorial Note

On November 21, the Soviet Union dispatched a Note to the Egyptian Government condemning the proposed establishment of a Middle East Command. Similar notes were sent that day to Lebanon, Iraq, and Israel, and on November 22 to Saudi Arabia and the Yemen. The Soviet Note to Egypt is published in full in Denise Folliot (ed.), Documents on International Affairs, 1951 (Royal Institute of International Affairs, London, 1954), pages 429-431, hereafter cited as Documents (R.I.I.A.) for 1951. The Soviet Note to Saudi Arabia of November 22 is paraphrased in telegram 279 fom Jidda, November 27 (780.5/11-2751).

On November 24, the Soviet Union dispatched Notes to the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey condemning the "new aggressive plans, expressed in the establishing of a Middle Eastern Command in an area located not far from the frontiers of the Soviet Union." The Soviet Note is published in full in Documents (R.I.I.A.) for 1951, pages 432–433.

780.5/11-2451: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, November 24, 1951—9 p. m.

459. Re Sov notes US, UK, Fr, Turkey Nov 24 protesting against initiation MEC as subordination countries concerned to aggressive NATO (Moscow's tel 898, Nov. 24)<sup>2</sup> we anticipate inevitable some days elapse before formal reply can be concerted four Govts and in order avoid giving Sov charges unopposed propaganda field that period contemplate release promptly when Sovs publish their notes interim statement fol line.

1. Confirm receipt Sov notes.

2. MEC like NATO is proposed as defensive arrangement accordance UN charter necessitated by Sov aggressive hostility.

3. US Govt will concert with other Govts to determine action to be taken on Sov notes.

Pls inform Br, Fr, Turks accordingly.3

Webb

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted and signed for the Acting Secretary by Walworth Barbour of EE. Cleared by NEA and RA. Sent also to Paris and London, repeated to Moscow and Rome.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed; see editorial note, supra. <sup>3</sup> Between November 27 and December 13, the four governments exchanged a number of draft proposals and notes in reply to the Soviet message of November 24. Documentation on these notes and proposals is in Department of State file 780.5.

Editorial Note

Regional command problems within NATO and the creation of a Middle East Command were discussed at length during the Eighth Session of the North Atlantic Council at Rome, November 24–28, 1951, documentation on which is in volume III, part 1, page 693 ff.

The possibility of "revamping" the Middle East Command proposal in such a way as to "give more flattery to the Egyptian vanity" was raised by Berry during the course of a brief report on conditions in Egypt during the State-Joint Chiefs of Staff meeting of December 12. For the portion of this meeting dealing with Egypt and the Middle East Command, see page 434.

780.5/12-1351: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, December 13, 1951—12:01 p. m. 2889. Dept has now recd texts proposed UK, Fr and Turk replies to Sov note Nov 24 re MEC. Dept believes there is substantial accord and no difference in principle between the notes. Final version of text US reply will be sent to Emb Moscow within next several hours. Dept understands from Brit Emb here that Fr believe note shid be delivered by 14th with publication 24 hours later. Dept agreeable to this. We have suggested to Brit Emb time of release be ten in morning Wash time Sat Dec 15.

- I. Embs London Paris and Ankara requested inform respective FonOffs:
- (a) US believes that there is substantial accord between four Govts on principles contained in respective notes and that notes shid now be presented USSR; (b) US agreeable to presenting notes to USSR Dec 14 if reps four Govts Moscow are able to concert action and obtain appts that day.
- II. Emb Moscow requested concert with UK Fr and Turk colleagues in seeking appt with Sov Fon Ministry Dec 14 to present notes. Dept has agreed with Brit Emb here that notes might be presented in order of dipl precedence. If impossible arrange presentation Dec 14 inform Dept and Embs London, Paris and Ankara immed.

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Kopper of NE, cleared with EE, BNA, WE, S/S, RA, and GTI. Approved and signed for Secretary Acheson by Kopper. Also sent niact to Paris as 3465, Ankara as 510, and Moscow as 408.

780.5/12-1451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Turkey 1

SECLET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, December 14, 1951—8:26 p. m. 522. I. Turk Chargé Esenbel called on Acting Asst Secy Berry today to inform Dept of Turk concern over divergence in tone and substance between proposed US and Turk notes on one hand and Brit and Fr notes on other in reply Sov note Nov 24 re MEC. Esenbel expressed view Brit and Fr drafts did not take "counter-offensive" tone which his Govt felt most desirable. He made same points Acting SecGen Turk FonOff made to Amb Wadsworth Dec 14 (Ankara's 534 Dec 14 2 to Dept, rptd London, Paris and Moscow). He expressed strong hope Brit and Fr notes cld be amended to bring them more into line with US and Turk notes.

II. Dept informed Esenbel that it was our opinion that there was substantial accord between four Powers and no difference in prins between four notes. While there were some differences in tone, four notes did contain substantially same prins. In addition each note contained separate and individual points of strength not contained in other notes. Effort was also made to point out to Esenbel how most of prins in Turk note were covered in Brit and Fr notes even though in different language and in less detail. Esenbel was also reminded that there had originally existed some differences of opinion between Fr and Brit Govts on one hand and US and Turk Govts on other as to manner in which Sov note shld be answered. At time of receipt of Sov note Dept had impression UK and Fr did not wish go into any gt detail but simply wished reject contentions Sov note firmly and without equivocation. Dept said that it had felt orig Brit draft was not sufficiently strong and had therefore made five specific recommendations to Brits, all of which had been incorpd in revised Brit draft. Finally, since US was generally satisfied with all of notes and Turk Govt was satisfied with US note, this seemed be matter between Turk Govt and Brit and Fr Govts. We did feel, however, it was of greatest importance that there be complete accord between all four Govts before notes were presented to Sov Union and Turk views wld be studied most carefully and sympathetically.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Kopper, cleared in substance by NEA and EE, approved and signed for Secretary Acheson by Kopper. Also sent priority to Moscow as 417, London as 2932, and Paris as 3507.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; it reported a conversation between Ambassador Wadsworth and Turkish Acting Secretary General Ustun in which Ustun complained that while the Turkish and United States draft replies to the Soviet note of November 24 were "firm in tone, solid in substances", the French and British drafts were not. Wadsworth added, inter alia, "In short Turk Govt view is that, if US holds to its text, Turk will hold to its on condition Brit and Fr approach our position". (780.5/12–1451)

III. Brit Emb Wash has informed Dept UK considers its present draft quite adequate and sees no necessity for any further change. Recipient missions are aware Fr views as rptd by Emb Paris today (Paristel 3555 Dec 14, rptd Ankara 84, London 956, Moscow 107).

IV. While Dept is of opinion that notes as they now stand constitute entirely adequate replies, and is further of belief that there is consid merit in having differently worded and constructed replies in that it will make clear that responses are those of individ Govts concerned and not "dictated" by any one Govt, we nevertheless believe that Turk views shld be given careful consid partic in light of Turkey's position in ME and vis-à-vis USSR. Whatever changes in present UK, Fr and Turk texts can be worked out between three Govts to bring greater harmony will undoubtedly be entirely satis US. Embs Ankara, Paris and London shld so inform respective FonOffs.

V. We share opinion Fr FonOff that it wld be wise delay presentation notes and that it wld not be desirable ignore their views in view fact Turks are newly acting in close concert with UK, Fr and US. However, as matters stand now we doubt whether it will be poss iron out differences by Monday, Dec. 17. Date presentation is in our opinion not as impt as attainment of gen agrmt. Therefore, Emb Moscow shld not present US note until four Govts concerned have attained this agrmt and four Embs Moscow have been given green light. At that point it might be best for Embs in Moscow to determine exact date, giving us forty-eight hours notice if poss.

ACHESON

780.5/12-1751: Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Cumming) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET NIACT

Moscow, December 17, 1951—1 p. m.

1030. Re para 5 Deptel 417, December 14.2 At meeting this morning with Fr, Brit and Turk Ambs, Turk said instructions from Ankara dated December 15 authorized him deliver MEC note in association with rest of us. We agreed that unless any one of us instructed contrary to deliver notes at half hour intervals beginning 5 p. m. Moscow time Tuesday December 18. Fr Amb suggested texts be released in respective capitals 4 p.m., Paris time Wednesday, December 19.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated niact to Paris, Ankara, and London.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Same as telegram 522 to Ankara, December 14, supra.

Urgent reply requested.3

CUMMING

<sup>3</sup> In telegram 523 to Ankara of December 17, Kopper, signing for Secretary Acheson, requested "Reply in clear urgently affirmative or negative to fol question: 'Is Turk Govt now generally satisfy re dely [delivery] notes on MEC?" (780.5/12–1251) In telegram 546 from Ankara of December 18, Ambassador Wadsworth replied that the Turkish Foreign Office had confirmed that the Turkish Ambassador in Moscow would present Turkey's note "today" provided the Soviet Foreign Office would receive the representatives. In telegram 548 of December 18, from Ankara, Ambassador Wadsworth informed the Department of State of some last minute changes in the Turkish note (780.5/12–1851).

780.5/12-1951: Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Cumming) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET NIACT

Moscow, December 19, 1951—3 p. m.

1048. Re mytel 1041 Dec 18 2 rptd London 168, Paris 404, and Ankara 20. At 1:30 p. m. handed Gromyko note re MEC.3 After reading note carefully he said his preliminary observations were as fols:

Impossible for Sov Govt to agree with contents note: Sov position clearly expressed in notes given to US and other three govts concerned with establishment MEC and this position connected with aggressive policies pursued NATO and the US Govt; the allegations contained in my note were without foundation. I called his careful attention to statements "there has been no aggression whatsoever originating from countries members of NATO and MEC. There will not be any". Gromyko answered that there were other allegations in note which were "inaccurate and out of place" and had no bearing on the issues involved.

Gromyko made his remarks in calm quiet tone without any undue emphasis or heat.

CUMMING

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated niact to London, Paris, and Ankara.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; it reported the arrangements made between senior officials of the United States, United Kingdom, French, and Turkish Embassies and the Soviet Foreign Office to deliver and receive the notes replying to the Soviet Note of November 24 concerning the MEC.

&lt;sup>3</sup> The text of the U.S. reply to the Soviet Note of November 24 was sent to Moscow in telegram 409, niact of December 13 (780.5/12–1351). The reply was subsequently made public and is printed, along with the British Note of the same date, in Documents (R.I.I.A.) for 1951, pp. 433–436, and also in the Department of State Bulletin, December 31, 1951, pp. 1055–1056.

780.5/12-2151: Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the Sixth Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET NIACT

Paris, December 21, 1951—11 p. m.

Delga 780. No distribution GADel or Embassy for eyes only Berry and Jones (NEA) from Ross. Fawzi Bey sent for me very urgently this afternoon. He said he wanted to discuss a non-GA matter with me. He then went on, with considerable intensity of manner, to suggest the possibility of Azzam Pasha seeing Eisenhower informally. The basic purpose of such interview wld be to compare notes and develop an up-to-date picture of the present situation as seen from both sides. By both sides Fawzi Bey explained he meant (a) relationships within the free world family and (b) between the free world and the other side, that is the problem of defense.

In making this suggestion Fawzi said that there has been a very confused situation during recent weeks, in particular since the "untimely" presentation of the 4 power proposals for MEC. The "untimely" presentation plus certain unfortunate features of the substance thereof put a "spoke in the wheel" and caused existing confusion to become more confused.

I asked Fawzi Bey what he meant by unfortunate features and he referred in reply to the way in which the proposals were presented, the preamble and part relating to Sudan. Fawzi emphasized that "we cannot allow existing confusion to stand in the way of the vital necessity of our working together".

By way of further background Fawzi said that Salaheddin was suffering from frustration. He wanted to remain a friend of the US but felt frustrated because he felt his overtures met with rebuffs. Fawzi said Salaheddin was sincere and truthful in this feeling and also sincere and truthful in the feeling of wanting to be a friend "even with the UK". He said Salaheddin had no illusions and no connection of any kind with Moscow.

On the other hand Fawzi went on, Salaheddin has a clearcut but not an obstinate concept of what his country is entitled to not only for the good of Egypt but for the good of the free world.

Fawzi said we must get over the hump which keeps us from seeing things eye to eye. He said this hump is the antiquated approach of "imposition from the outside instead of comradeship". He said that without an approach based on comradeship none of us can be strong or safe. On the basis of comradeship, however, Egypt and the other Arabs will be prepared to put "millions" in the field in def of freedom and our common interests.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram was subsequently sent by the Department of State to Cairo and London. (780.5/12-2151) John C. Ross was Senior Adviser to the United States Delegation to the Sixth Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Fawzi then said he wanted to tell me something "very confidentially" which had not been true until today. He said "we accept withdrawal of the Brit on a gradual basis. For local polit purposes it wld have to be stated that withdrawal was immed but it wld be a scheduled withdrawal". This wld be possible Fawzi said if agreement cld be reached upon a system of common def and on the build up of the econ of the area which is the backbone of the defense of the area. Fawzi said they had a realistic appraisal of all we are doing and of all our difficulties but he said we have come to a time when all of us must "stretch ourselves a little further".

Fawzi said it wld not do simply to return to consideration of the MEC proposals. He said there shld be a real straightforward and not a "tricky" overhauling of these proposals. By "overhauling" it seemed clear Fawzi meant discussion. I asked him what he meant by use of the word "tricky" which seemed a little unfortunate. He said he did not mean tricky in that sense but rather in the sense of vague or diplomatic. He said "let's not try to be clever in regard to such matters".

Against the foregoing background Fawzi said he thought that a talk between Azzam and Eisenhower "cld be helpful" before the Churchill-Truman-Eden-Acheson conversations.<sup>2</sup> At least it wld not be harmful.

Fawzi said they had no idea at all of working behind the backs of the UK or of making things difficult before the Washington talks. On the contrary he said they wld be very happy if agreement cld be reached in the Washington talks on a new approach. He said we must try again and if one thing did not work to keep on trying again.

I asked Fawzi whether I had understood correctly that he was suggesting that Azzam see Eisenhower alone or that Azzam and Salaheddin shld see Eisenhower together. Fawzi said that he was suggesting that Azzam see Eisenhower alone and that this was with the "clear understanding and agreement of Salaheddin". He said that if Eisenhower shld prefer seeing Azzam and Salaheddin together, that, of course, cld be arranged. He went on to say that if Azzam saw Eisenhower it wld thereafter be a good idea for Azzam to have an opportunity to talk with some of Eisenhower's aides.

Referring to all of the foregoing I told Fawzi I was not in a position to make any comment but that I wld commit myself to mention one or two points. First, I observed that since Fawzi had suggested that the purpose of the proposed interviews wld be to compare notes on relationships within the free world and between the free world and the other side, there were, of course, the usual diplomatic channels available for discussion of such matters. Second, Eisenhower was of course a very busy man. Third, I did not know whether Eisenhower wld consider that it was within his competence to discuss the matters ref to by Fawzi.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Scheduled to be held at Washington in January 1952.

Fawzi observed that the last 2 points were of course considerations we wld have to take into account. On my first observation, however, Fawzi said that we cld of course put on frockcoats and deal with matters in that way. He then stressed that he had in mind a mtg of "a very informal character".

I made no further comment. Fawzi asked me to think over his suggestion and said he wanted to keep in close touch with me during next few days.<sup>3</sup> [Ross.]

ROOSEVELT

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 941 to Cairo of December 22, G. Lewis Jones, signing for Secretary Acheson, requested comments on Fawzi's proposals, adding "Depts reaction is that affirmative response Fawzi suggestion wild be further build-up of Salaheddin and wild therefore be contrary to efforts bypass him. Moreover, we doubt very much Eisenhower cld involve himself in question so far removed NATO competence. Subject your comments Dept feels Fawzi shid receive no encouragement on this idea and shid be told that usual Dip channels are available for such discussions Egypts may wish to have or proposals Egypt may wish to make" (780.5/12–2151). Ambassador Caffery replied in telegram 938 from Cairo of December 24 that he concurred in the Department's reaction to the proposed Eisenhower-Azzam meeting (780.5/12–2451). In telegram Gadel 552 to Paris, December 26, Samuel K. C. Kopper, signing for Acheson, informed Ross that in view of Cairo's concurrence with telegram 941, Fawzi should be "tactfully discouraged from pursuing Eisenhower-Azzam Mtg" and Kopper proceeded to make the same subsequent points to Ross as had been made by Jones in telegram 941 to Cairo (780.5/12–2451).

PPS Files: Lot 64 D 563: "Villard"

Draft Study by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, December 27, 1951.

THE Position of the United States With Respect to the General Area of the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East*

PROBLEM

1. To determine U.S. national objectives and policies with respect to the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East countries.

ANALYSIS

2. Geographically the area has great strategic importance. It lies at the land, sea and air crossroads of three continents. It contains important Western military bases, the Suez Canal, Dardanelles and Bosphorus and has natural defensive barriers in its mountains and deserts. It lies close to Soviet centers of industry, population and oil resources.

&lt;sup>1</sup>The source text indicates that this was a draft prepared by Henry S. Villard of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff for the NSC Staff.

* The term "Middle East" is used in this paper to refer to the Arab States, Iran, and Israel. Turkey is excluded because our policy toward Turkey is determined within the NATO-ERP framework. [Footnote in the source text.]

- 3. Approximately half the world's known oil reserves are in the Middle East. Access to these rich oil reserves is of great importance to the Free World in peace and war. Detailed discussion relating to oil in this area may be found in the NSC 97 studies and related papers.<sup>2</sup>
- 4. The maintenance and defense of Western interests in the Middle East is so important to the over-all position of the West that it is in the interest of the United States to take whatever appropriate measures it can, in the light of its other commitments, to maintain and defend these interests.
- 5. The extension of Soviet control over the Middle East would mean a violent shift in the world balance of power. It is necessary to counter efforts in this direction by the Soviet Union—and this is one of the objectives of U.S. policy in the Middle East. There is, however, little danger that the Soviet Union will take aggressive military action against the Middle East as a whole unless it has decided to initiate general war. The problem of preparing for general war, and the measures to be taken in the Middle East should be determined in accordance with strategic plans for conducting a general war with the Soviet Union.
- 6. The major threats to Western interests in the Middle East lie in the growing instability within the Middle Eastern states and in the tensions and hostile attitudes between, first the Arab States and Israel and, second, the Arab States and the Western powers, notably the U.K., and in the prevailing attitude of neutralism. The major problem for the United States in the Middle East is to find ways of dealing with these threats.

The US and UK Roles in the Area

7. In the past the United States has relied primarily on the U.K. for the maintenance and defense of Western interests in the Middle East. However, the rapidly declining ability of the U.K. to maintain and defend Western interests in parts of the Middle East now creates the need for a review and restatement of U.S. policy toward the Middle East. In some countries where the British have been unable to discharge this responsibility, the United States has assumed it. Greece and Turkey are examples of the transfer of major responsibility from the U.K. to the United States in this part of the world. Also, where the United States has major military and economic interests, as in the case of Saudi Arabia, U.S. influence has largely replaced U.K. influence.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on U.S. interest in Near and Middle East petroleum, see pp. 268 ff.

- 8. However, the ability of the U.S. to exercise influence in the area is limited and it is desirable for the U.S. to work closely with the U.K. (and the Commonwealth countries), France and Turkey. To the extent that the exercise of influence requires the use of force by a Western power as a necessary and appropriate means of maintaining and defending Western interests in the area, it is in the U.S. interest that the U.K. provide such force.
- 9. The declining ability of the U.K. to maintain and defend Western interests in the Middle East does not appear to be primarily due to the inadequacy of British military forces in the area. On the contrary, the British probably have sufficient military forces in Cyprus, Egypt, and Iraq to take local military actions that might become necessary in the area. The decline of British capabilities is a complex phenomenon. It is partly a result of the decline of the U.K. as a world power. It is in important measure a reflection of the nationalist aspirations of the Middle Eastern states—accompanied and intensified by the desire to end what they regard as unjust exploitation and by the belief, fostered by the creation of the United Nations and adoption of the UN Charter and by the coming to independence of Pakistan, India, and other Asiatic nations, that a new era has begun in international affairs. It is also traceable in part to the discontent of the peoples of the area with their social and economic conditions—a factor which weakens the grip on power of the ruling classes and which therefore weakens the ability of the West to maintain stability in these states by working through the ruling classes.
- 10. This analysis makes it doubtful that it would be possible for the U.S. or the U.K., or both together to maintain and defend Western interests in the area in the 19th century fashion. In fact, it seems clear that the West must work toward the establishment of a new basis and a new kind of relationship with the Middle Eastern states. The change to a new basis will not, of course, be clean-cut. Western power and prestige, exercised directly and through ruling groups, will continue to be important factors in the maintenance of stability within the area. There may well be occasions, as in Egypt at the present time, when the West will have to be prepared to use force to maintain its interests or to accept the loss of these interests. Whatever the U.S. can do to bolster both generally and locally the power and prestige of the U.K. will assist the U.K. in maintaining stability in the area and will reduce the need for direct action by the U.S. or other Allied powers—provided that the Western posture toward the area comes more and more to be regarded by the states in the area as being in harmony with their basic interests.

THE MIDDLE EAST COMMAND

- 11. Despite the weakness of their military position, the states of the area have learned neither the value of unity nor the collective strength they might attain by banding together. Local rivalries divide the nations, and this political fragmentation militates against the development of any regional cohesion and regional concepts. The Arab League is a weak reed upon which to build any area program, and would be weaker still if it were not held together by its antipathy toward Israel.
- 12. Egypt, Iraqi, Iranian, Jordan and Israeli armed forces have received some equipment from British and American sources and have benefited in the past from military tutelage but, in general their standards are not comparable to Western ones. (The Arab Legion in Jordan is British trained and of higher caliber than its Arab neighbors' forces, but its strength is less than one division.)
- 13. While the foregoing considerations present serious obstacles to a unification of forces for the immediate present, the fact remains that, in the event of failure of efforts to secure coordinated action, as by the establishing of a Middle East Command, the opportunity exists for building up military strength in individual countries and thus enhancing their powers of resistance to aggression. Thus those countries which contain economic, communication or base facilities highly important to our strategic aims may be strengthened unilaterally, and strong political reasons may exist for strengthening the nations of the area. Our most important economic resource of this region is oil, and to protect it, consideration should be given to insuring priorities of military assistance to friendly forces in Iran, Iraq and Saudi Arabia. Important strategic communication routes and bases (the Suez, Bosphorus, Dardanelles, bases in Saudi Arabia) indicate that consideration should be given to insuring priorities of military assistance to friendly forces in Saudi Arabia and Egypt. It has recently been agreed that some military assistance should go to Syria in order to increase its political stability and secure its orientation toward the West.
- 14. The United States maintains hope that some of the various political barriers dividing this area may be gradually lowered by the Middle East states working together against the common threat of aggressive communism through participation in a Middle East Defense arrangement.
- 15. The Middle East Command—assuming that the present obstacles to the participation of the Middle Eastern states in this command can be overcome—if handled adroitly, could help in various ways to deal with the problem of maintaining and defending Western interests in the area:

a. To the extent that fear of Soviet aggression deters the governments of the Middle Eastern countries from taking needed measures, the acknowledgment by the United States of its interest in the security of the area together with its readiness to participate in the MEC should help to overcome that fear. It should thereby help to build internal strength and to strengthen the will of the people to resist any Soviet aggression.

b. To the extent that the decline of British power and prestige is a factor contributing to instability in the area, the association of the U.S. with the U.K. in the MEC should help to demonstrate the joint interests of the U.S. and U.K. and thus lead to an increase of British prestige and respect for Western power. Furthermore, the cooperation of the British and the Middle Eastern states in the MEC should tend to provide increased opportunities in a favorable climate for efforts to settle disputes between them.

c. To the extent that the desire for "equal treatment" is a factor affecting relations between the Middle Eastern states and the Western powers, the principles underlying the MEC and its institutional character should help by assuaging this desire of the Middle Eastern states.

d. To the extent that tensions within the area are a source of instability, cooperation in the MEC on problems related to the defense of the area as a whole against outside aggression should be helpful, for it should tend to be reflected in increased regional cooperation and understanding in other than military matters.

e. To the extent that the weakness of the present governments in the Middle East is a factor contributing to instability, the MEC should be helpful by providing opportunities to the Western powers for bolstering these governments in various ways in order to increase the local power and prestige of the governments.

16. In order to provide a sound foundation for the development of U.S. policy toward the Middle East, it seems desirable, if politically practicable, to obtain a Congressional endorsement of the growing interest of the United States in the security of the Middle East and specifically of U.S. participation in the MEC. The acknowledgment of this interest contained in the quadripartite statement of principles of November 10 and the commitments implied by U.S. participation in the MEC are major developments of U.S. foreign policy, about which the Congress should be consulted and its support, at least for appropriations, will be necessary.<sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>3</sup> There follows at this point in the source text a handwritten addition which reads as follows: "The MSA act now contains a general evaluation of US interest in the security of the Middle East. An amendment of this language to strengthen it and to refer specifically to the MEC appears to be the most desirable form of Congressional action that is most feasible."

- 17. Congressional action, if any is sought, should be such as to:
- a. Make it unnecessary to secure reciprocal commitments from the Middle Eastern States.

b. Avoid raising Arab-Jewish problems, as a treaty would.

- c. Give the U.S. maximum freedom of decision and action in implementing our undertaking and in reacting in the event of an attack on the area.
- d. To avoid, unless we desired it, the proliferation of international institutions on the NATO pattern.<sup>4</sup>
- 18. To bolster the likelihood of success of the Middle East Command it may be desirable to furnish considerable U.S. personnel to advise the staff of this command. Further, in order to help friendly nations who desire to help themselves become stronger it may be desirable to furnish military assistance missions to show U.S. interest and to bolster political, psychological and economic efforts. The U.S. should not undertake to commit forces in the area, but should retain flexibility in this matter and arrive at a decision on the employment of U.S. forces only in the light of particular circumstances as they may exist.

Social and Economic Problems in the Area.

- 19. The low standards of living in the Arab countries and Iran engender mass discontent, perpetuate political and social instability and ferment and increase the vulnerability of these impoverished peoples to the blandishments of communism. A growing awareness of and dissatisfaction with these conditions is apparent. Social revolution may be impossible to prevent but it might be guided to insure friendliness to Western powers. Society is predominantly feudal in character in the majority of states and established governments often appear unable to adapt themselves to changing circumstances and to contribute sufficiently to higher standards of living and the demands of their peoples. Responsibility for the people's lot is often shifted to the colonial and imperialistic practices attributed to the Western powers, and communist propaganda supports this criticism. A strong movement towards neutralism and xenophobia has resulted.
- 20. The establishment of the MEC and the most effective possible use of the MEC as an instrumentality for serving U.S. interests in the area will not alone solve the problems confronting the U.S. in the Middle East. It will be necessary in addition to work with the governments of these states in improving the basic social and economic conditions in the area. In developing and carrying out these programs it will be necessary to make compromises between long-term and short-term considerations. In the long term it is probable that the present ruling groups will lose more of their power—unless they prove able to adjust their outlook and to assume leadership of the changing social and economic and political development of their countries. In the short term, however, the West depends greatly on these groups for the maintenance of stability in the area, and will often find it necessary to work with and through men and groups competent to exercise power, but with whom it is not in full sympathy. It would probably be necessary, however distasteful it may be, to funnel a considerable amount of our economic assistance through these groups in order to bolster their hold on power. Where this is necessary, our attempt should be to modify the policies of these groups in ways desirable from the long-term point of view, but we should not deliberately sacrifice important short-term interests because of our view as to what constitutes the desirable long-term course of development.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Section 17 of the source text is enclosed in handwritten brackets, presumably in light of the textual addition mentioned in footnote 3 above.

21. Insofar as social and economic actions in the Middle East are concerned, the U.S. and the U.K. (and where desirable France) should support each other by concerting their policies so as to make the most effective use of their respective capabilities in the area. It will probably be necessary in the U.S. national interest over the next several years to continue our programs of economic aid to the countries of the Middle East, including the resettlement of refugees, along the lines provided by MSP.5 Somewhat larger sums may be required later on than the $125 million authorized for 1952. In carrying out these programs it may be desirable to concentrate on pilot projects susceptible of having early regional application and on programs productive of tangible benefits at an early date for many people. Such programs should carefully avoid the appearance of partiality to Israel, and in implementing military aid under MSA it will be necessary to give due regard to the dangers of an arms race between the Arabs and the Israelis. We should also explore ways and means of developing consultation and collaboration on social and economic problems among the states associated with MEC in order to promote nonmilitary enterprises of benefit to the region as a whole.

22. The U.S. has been viewed with distrust by the Arab States in the last few years because of the responsibility ascribed to it for the establishment of Israel as a nation. In order to overcome this distrust it will be necessary to intensify present psychological efforts in the area. For this purpose it should be possible to draw upon the reservoir of good will, which is probably still existent, engendered by U.S. philanthropic and educational agencies and by the practices of U.S. oil companies in the area.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on the Middle Eastern refugee problem, see pp. 559 ff.

23. Only in the case of Iran is there a present serious possibility that the communists might be able to come to power by internal action. There is also in the case of Iran the possibility that a Soviet occupation of the northern provinces might occur in certain circumstances. This move would probably not be made by the Soviet Union except to exploit what the Soviet rulers might regard as a safe and favorable opportunity arising from internal chaos in Iran or as a counter to efforts by the West to maintain and defend its interests in Iran. The Iranian case is thus a special one.

24. Excluding an attack via Turkey which will be covered by the NAT commitment, an attack on the Middle East can only be made through Iran. Iran has not yet been invited to join the MEC. The permanent exclusion of Iran from the MEC and more particularly its exclusion from the area covered by the recommended concurrent resolution by the Congress would set Iran apart and indicate that the U.S. and its Western allies might react differently to an attack on Iran than to an attack on the rest of the Middle East. This would increase the dangers in the Iranian situation [and] it is therefore recommended that Iran be included in the area covered by the resolution and as soon as possible after a settlement of the oil problem, in the MEC.

25. The greatest danger in the Iranian situation, however, is that Iran will come under Soviet control through the coming to power in Iran of the Tudeh Party or other extremist groups. The United States should continue its efforts to assist the British and Iranians to settle their dispute and should be prepared to take such financial measures as might be necessary to prevent the collapse of the Iranian Government through the inability of that government to meet its current operating expenses, but such assistance should be kept to a minimum in order to maintain pressure for a settlement of the oil problem.

26. . . .

780.5/12-1951

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)1

TOP SECRET

Washington, December 29, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: The Middle East Command, in which the United States announced its intention to participate along with the Governments of the United Kingdom, France and Turkey, involves many problems, a few of which were outlined as follows in Mr. Matthews' letter to you of October 31, 1951: <sup>2</sup>

"A. 1. Defense of the Middle East (Defense).

2. Definition of MEC area (State-Defense).

3. MEC relationship to NATO (State-Defense).

4. Role of Turkey in MEC (State-Defense).

B. Detailed organization of MEC, including location of MEC head-quarters (Defense).

C. Steps required to secure association of Arab states, Israel and other interested states with MEC (State-Defense)."

Group A of these problems will have to be worked out in such consultations as those which took place in Rome on November 27, 1951 but, as General Bradley and I indicated on that occasion, these problems should not be allowed to impede planning for the establishment of the Middle East Command. This letter is devoted to the desirability of proceeding with the establishment of the Middle East Command (points B and C above).

This Department considers it would be desirable from political point of view that there be established on Cyprus not later than March-April of 1952 a Middle East Command headquarters, as a going institution with United States, United Kingdom, French, Turkish and possibly Commonwealth staff officers in residence. The Four Powers have stated publicly their intention to proceed with the establishment of the Middle East Command. We believe that the United States should use its influence and resources to accelerate the transformation of MEC from a paper enterprise into an established physical entity.

¹ Drafted by G. Lewis Jones, cleared by Matthews, S/P, BNA, GTI, WE, NEA, RA, and S/S. The source text indicates that this letter was signed by Acheson on December 28. A covering memorandum from Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs Burton Y. Berry, of December 19, stated that it was deemed necessary to establish a State-Defense Working Group on MEC in order to assist in developing the advance planning necessary on the United States part prior to discussions with the other proposed founding countries. The proposed Working Group "would study the practical problems of a politico-military character which will have to be faced and formulate recommendations as to the position which the United States should take" (780.5/12-1951).

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 238.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the discussions on the MEC during the meetings of the Eighth Session of the North Atlantic Council at Rome, November 24–28, 1951; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 693 ff.

The MEC is at the very least a quadripartite enterprise with which Australia, New Zealand and South Africa will also be associated. Since MEC headquarters will be located initially on the British territory of Cyprus, it is logical that the United Kingdom should take the initiative in formulating plans for the headquarters. However, the British military authorities are, we understand, still hopeful that it will be possible to locate MEC headquarters in Egypt and, consequently, are inclined to postpone as long as possible preparations and planning for a headquarters on Cyprus. There is no doubt that Egypt would be the best location for the headquarters and it was for this reason that Egypt was offered founder status in the MEC. However, under the present circumstances, this Department sees no possibility of the Anglo-Egyptian impasse being resolved in the course of the next few months in such a way that it will be possible to locate MEC headquarters in Egypt. Since actions have a greater impact than words upon Middle Eastern States, we would like to see the necessary planning undertaken now so that the Cyprus headquarters can be opened in the first part of next year. We believe that the political impact of the early inauguration of the headquarters will be both favorable and profound.

Since the "cold war" objectives of MEC are politico-military in character, we believe that it would be desirable to initiate at this time an informal State-Defense working group to study the various practical problems connected with the establishment of the MEC head-quarters. We suggest that this should be a clearing house for ideas and that the establishment of such a working group would itself be a stimulus to the United Kingdom in getting on with the job.

Subject to your concurrence with the general idea, I suggest that Defense channels be used to advise the United Kingdom of the establishment of this Working Group which at an early meeting would:

- a) set down for consideration by higher authority the unresolved questions such as those discussed at Rome,
  - b) fix its own terms of reference,
- c) prepare a schedule of work which would result in a preliminary statement of the United States position to be advanced in early discussions with the United Kingdom, France and Turkey as well as Australia, New Zealand and South Africa,
- d) work out a suggested time table for discussions with other interested states (c above).

I would be glad to know whether you concur in the foregoing suggestions and your ideas as to how they can be implemented most effectively. It will be desirable, of course, to keep the working group as small as is consistent with the accomplishment of its purpose.<sup>4</sup>

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

Secretary Lovett concurred in the proposal to establish an informal State-Defense Working Group to study the problems connected with the establishment of a Middle East Command, for which the Joint Chiefs of Staff would provide the Department of Defense representation, but he objected to notifying the British:

"Prior to the time that a United States position on the matter of the Middle East Command Headquarters is reached, I do not agree with your suggestion that the United Kingdom be informed of the establishment of the Working Group. When the United States position is reached, it is agreed to use Defense channels to advise the United Kingdom of this Working Group." (780.5/2–1152)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett replied to the Secretary of State in a letter dated February 11, 1952, in which he expressed general agreement with the suggestions for the early establishment of a Middle East Command head-quarters. He emphasized, however, that it was the Department of Defense position that establishment of a Middle East Command "must not be allowed to jeopardize the accession of Greece and Turkey to the North Atlantic Treaty." As for the details of effecting coordination of effort between a Middle East Command and contiguous NATO commands, he stated, they could not be determined until Greece and Turkey had become members of NATO. "Any arrangements which tend toward integration of the two commands (the British 'two-hat' concept) should be opposed."

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE DEVELOP-MENT OF THE PETROLEUM RESOURCES OF THE NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST <sup>1</sup>

INR-NIE Files

National Intelligence Estimate<sup>2</sup>

SECRET NIE-14 [Washington,] 8 January 1951.

THE IMPORTANCE OF IRANIAN AND MIDDLE EAST OIL TO WESTERN EUROPE UNDER PEACETIME CONDITIONS*

THE PROBLEM

To estimate the importance of (a) Iranian oil production and (b) total Middle East oil production to Western Europe in time of peace.

ASSUMPTIONS

That access to (a) Iranian oil production, and (b) total Middle East oil production is denied to the Western Powers by means other than war.

<sup>1</sup> For previous documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 9 ff.

*[Note on the title page.] This estimate has been prepared in response to a request from the Senior Staff of the National Security Council. The basic data were supplied by an interdepartmental ad hoc committee of technical representatives of ECA, the Petroleum Committee of the Munitions Board, the Departments of the Treasury, Commerce, and State, and CIA. The intelligence organizations of the Departments of State, the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Joint Staff participated in the preparation of this estimate and concur in it. This paper is based on information available on 30 December 1950.

&lt;sup>2</sup> This National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) is one of a series of high-level interdepartmental reports first published in the fall of 1950 by the Central Intelligence Agency. Each Estimate was intended to be the most authoritative interpretation and appraisal of a situation available to policymakers and to present the coordinated expression of the best intelligence opinion from among several departments and agencies. The priorities and frames of reference for a proposed Estimate were set by the Intelligence Advisory Committee. This Committee was composed of the Director of Central Intelligence, who served as Chairman; the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for Intelligence; and the Chiefs of Intelligence of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Atomic Energy Commission, and Federal Bureau of Investigation. The organizations represented on the Intelligence Advisory Committee drafted sections of an Estimate in accordance with their respective fields of responsibility; the Department of State provided all political and some economic sections. An integrated draft paper was discussed and revised by interdepartmental working groups under the coordination of the Central Intelligence Agency's Office of National Estimates, then submitted to the Intelligence Advisory Committee for final revision and approval. Provision was made for the notation of dissent where unanimity did not exist. Immediately upon approval, a National Intelligence Estimate was published by the Central Intelligence Agency and forwarded to the President, the appropriate officers of Cabinet level, and the National Security Council.

CONCLUSIONS

- 1. The amount of crude oil and refined products now exported from Iran could be derived from other areas by small increases in crude production and by fuller use of available refining capacity. At the rates of consumption and levels of prices prevailing at the end of 1950, the extra annual dollar charge to Europe of procuring this amount of oil elsewhere would be about $700,000,000.
- 2. Loss of Iranian oil production and of the refinery at Abadan would temporarily have an adverse effect upon Western European economic activity, and would impose severe financial losses particularly upon the British, who control all the oil production of the country. Although the effect of the loss of Iran on the volume of petroleum which could be made available to Western Europe might be overcome in a relatively short time by developing reserves and building refineries elsewhere, the financial effects would be overcome slowly, if at all.
- 3. If all Middle East oil production were to be lost, a cutback of about 10 percent in the total oil consumption of the non-Soviet world would have to be imposed, even after a maximum practicable increase of production from other sources. This would call for substantial rationing in the United States as well as elsewhere. International allocation would be required. At the price level of late 1950 a net increase in dollar requirements of from $1 to $1.2 billion would occur if Western Europe, after a cutback of 10 percent in its consumption, were to procure from alternative sources an amount of oil sufficient to make up for the loss of Middle East imports.
- 4. It is estimated that if a cutback of 10 percent from present levels of oil consumption were imposed on Western Europe, it would permit maintenance of industrial production at approximately the levels of late 1950, and of transportation at the extreme minimum necessary for that purpose. No appreciable expansion of industry, whether for normal economic development or for rearmament, would be possible, unless economies were effected, expansion of industry and transportation facilities were accomplished only with solid fuel-utilizing equipment, and possibly some conversion of existing petroleum-using equipment were made. Rationing even to reduce consumption by 10 percent would present great difficulties in time of peace.

† Figures in this paper representing estimates of extra annual dollar costs and of the extent of oil shortages which would result from a loss of Iranian or Middle Eastern oil are indicative rather than exact. They will hold true as given only as long as oil prices stay at the levels of late 1950, and oil production and consumption continue at the rates currently estimated for the fiscal year 1950–51. The general effect of the rearmament programs in the US and in Western Europe will presumably be to raise the consumption of oil, and probably also to raise its price. These factors would tend to make the oil of the Middle East more important to the western economies, and to cause its loss to be even more severely felt than is indicated by the figures cited in this paper. [Footnote in the source text.]

5. No way can be foreseen at present by which a satisfactory adjustment, over a longer period of time, could be made to the total loss of Middle East oil, unless new reserves are proved elsewhere, or new sources of energy developed. Western Europe therefore would not be able to compensate for the loss of Middle East oil save by profound changes in its currently planned economic structure.

DISCUSSIONS

- 1. Total petroleum requirements of Western Europe (including the UK) for the fiscal year 1950-51 are estimated at 66 million metric tons, of which 42.5 million will be imported as crude and 20 million as refined products; the remaining 3.5 million tons will be derived from indigenous sources. Of the total import requirements, 43.8 million metric tons, representing 70 percent, will come from the Middle East. In addition, international bunkers of 6 million tons and US military supplies aggregating approximately 2.5 million metric tons will be lifted in the Middle East area.
- 2. Of the total requirements of Western Europe, it is estimated that Iran alone will supply the following:

Millions of Metric Tons

Crude Oil 7 Refined Products	$Percent\ of\ WE\ Requirements\ 16$
6.3 (including British Military) Bunkers	31
4	67

3. It is estimated likewise that of total Western European requirements, the entire Middle East area will supply the following:

Millions of Metric Tons

Crude Oil	Percent of WE Requirements 90
Refined Products 8.3 Bunkers	40
6	100

Loss of Iranian Production

4. If Iranian oil should cease to be available, the seven million metric tons of crude oil by which Western Europe would thereby fall short (according to the 1950-51 estimates) could be more than made up by increasing the output of British companies operating elsewhere in the world. Indeed it could all be replaced, at some additional dollar cost, from the other producing areas of the Middle East. Replacement for the balance of Iran's crude oil output (that processed at Abadan) could also be obtained outside the Soviet sphere by releasing shut-in production and by more rapid drilling of known reserves.

- 5. Loss of the Abadan refinery, with its capacity of 27 million metric tons per year, would call for much more difficult adjustments than would the loss of Iranian crude oil output. There is now in the non-Soviet world, outside Iran, enough refining capacity to process an additional amount of crude equal to that now going through the Abadan plant. If Abadan were lost, however, at least six months would be required to place marginal plants in operation, to change the composition of refinery output, to alter tanker routings, and to complete the redistribution of crude oil among the other refineries.
- 6. To acquire from other sources the amounts of crude oil and refined products which Western Europe now imports in one year from Iran would involve an extra dollar expenditure of about $700,000,000, assuming the level of prices remained the same as that prevailing at the end of 1950.
- 7. Loss of Iranian oil production and of the refinery at Abadan would temporarily have an adverse effect upon Western European economic activity, and would impose severe financial losses particularly upon the British, who control all the oil production in the country. Although the effect of the loss of Iran upon the volume of petroleum which could be made available to Western Europe might be overcome in a relatively short time by developing reserves and building refineries elsewhere, the financial effects would be overcome slowly, if at all.

Loss of All Middle East Oil

- 8. The loss of all Middle East oil production would reduce the current supply of crude oil in the non-Soviet world by about 93 million metric tons per year. By increasing production to the greatest degree feasible in areas still accessible, this shortage could be reduced to about 53 million metric tons, which is equivalent to about 10 percent of estimated 1950–51 total oil consumption in the non-Soviet world. Sufficient refining capacity would be available to process the reduced total supply of crude, but the problems of readjustment and allocation mentioned in paragraph 5 above would, of course, be greater, and the time required to carry them out would be longer.
- 9. The maximum cutback in Western European oil consumption which would still permit maintenance of industrial production at approximately the levels of late 1950, and of transportation at the extreme minimum necessary for that purpose, is estimated to be about 10 percent. Such a cutback would permit no appreciable expansion of industry, whether for normal economic development or for purposes of rearmament, unless economies were effected, expansion of industry and transportation facilities were accomplished only with solid fuel-utilizing equipment, and possibly some conversion of existing petroleum-using equipment were made. Moreover, the 10 percent cutback would cover only about 6.6 million metric tons out of the total deficiency of 53 million. Hence it is clear that even if Western Europe were restricted to less than 90 percent of its estimated 1950–51 consumption, the loss of all Middle East oil would make substantial rationing necessary in the United States. Despite the fact that the US is virtually self-sufficient in oil production, it would have to cut its consumption by at least 10 percent. International allocation would immediately become necessary.

- 10. At the price level of late 1950 a net increase in dollar requirements of from $1 to $1.2 billion would occur if Western Europe, after a cutback of 10 percent in its consumption, were to procure from alternative sources an amount of oil sufficient to make up for the loss of Middle East imports.
- 11. No way can be foreseen at present by which a satisfactory adjustment, over a longer period of time, could be made to the total loss of Middle East oil, unless new reserves are proved elsewhere, or new sources of energy developed. Though the Middle East now contributes only 18.4 percent of total non-Soviet production, it contains 44.4 percent of proved reserves outside the Soviet orbit. A very large proportion of the presently contemplated increase in non-Soviet oil supply is expected to come from the Middle East. Western Europe, therefore, would not be able to compensate for the loss of Middle East oil save by profound changes in its currently planned economic structure.

Special Effects Upon the United Kingdom

12. The effects of a loss of Middle East oil upon the UK, though no less adverse, would be somewhat different in nature from the effects upon most other Western European countries, in which the physical shortage of supply and the expenditure of dollars necessary to replace it would be the factors most immediately paramount. Even after the loss of the Middle East, British companies would own about 35 percent of available crude production apart from that in the US and Canada—i.e., they would control more than one-third of the exportable surplus of oil available to the non-Soviet powers. (US companies would own about one-half of crude production outside the US and Canada.) There would be more than enough oil under the control of the British to supply all their domestic requirements, plus bunkers and military liftings, if they chose to give priority to domestic requirements over other markets. Hence, the UK would have a fairly strong bargaining position in the negotiations which would be necessary for the international allocation of available oil supplies, after the loss of Middle Eastern output.

13. On the other hand, the financial setback to the British resulting from the loss of their enormous investments in Middle East oil, especially in Iran, and of the receipts both in dollars and in soft currencies which arise from them, would tend to offset any special advantages which the UK might derive from its ownership of other sources of supply. Loss of the economic (and strategic) power which the UK now possesses by virtue of its control over the production and distribution of Middle East oil would also be a factor of utmost importance. Finally, the effects which a total loss of Middle East oil would indirectly exert upon the general structure of international trade and payments would be especially adverse to the UK because of its extraordinary dependence upon overseas trade.

TABLES

[Here follows a list of the tables printed below.]

Table I ESTIMATED IMPORTS OF CRUDE OIL AND REFINED PRODUCTS INTO OEEC COUNTRIES 1950-51  $(1{,}000~MT/Y)$

From—	Crude	Products	Total	Crude (percent)	Products (percent)	Total (percent)
Eastern Hemisphere: Middle East(Includes US military)	38,065	8, 321	46, 386	89. 69	41. 39	74. 16
		_ 100	100		. 50	16
Total Western Hemisphere:	38, 065	8, 421	46, 486	89. 69	41.89	74. 32
USA	150	1,850	2,000	. 35	9. 20	3. 20
Caribbean	4,067	9,604	13, 671	9.58	47.77	21.86
Other	160	230	3 90	. 38	1.14	. 62
	4, 377	11, 684	16, 061	10. 31	58. 11	25, 68
Grand Total	42, 442	20, 105	62, 547	100.00	100.00	100.00

TABLE II
ESTIMATED INTERNATIONAL BUNKER LIFTINGS (REFINED PRODUCTS) IN THE PERSIAN GULF AREA
(1950-1951)

	1,000 mt/y	Percent
From Iran. From other Middle East.	4,000 2,000	66. 67 33. 33
Total	6,000	100.00

TABLE III
CONTROL OF WORLD CRUDE RESERVES
(1950-1951)

Area	United States		British		Other		Total	Per-
	1,000 mt	Per- cent	1,000 mt	Per- cent	1,000 mt	Per- cent	1,000 mt	of world total
Eastern Hemisphere: Middle East
Iraq Kuwait	170, 445 753, 424	23. 7 50. 0	378, 288	52.6			719, 178	7.
Saudi Arabia	1, 232, 877	100.0	753, 4 24				-,,	15 12
Iran			958, 904	100.0			958, 904	9
Bahrein			21, 917	100.0			21, 917
Total	2, 156, 746		2, 112, 533		170, 445	23.7	4, 439, 725	44
East Indies Islands	62.172	31. 3	136, 45 9	68.7			198, 631	2
OEEC Countries	5,834	20.0	7, 293	25.0	16, 044	55.0	29, 171
TotalVestern Hemisphere;	•		143, 752		16, 044		227, 802
US and Canada	3, 713, 562	100.0					3,713,562	37
Mexico					116, 4 3 8	100.0	116, 438	1
Caribbean Exporting Areas	888, 865	61.5	550, 663	3 8. 1	5,781	0.4	1, 445, 309	14
Total	4, 602, 427		550, 663		122, 219		5, 275, 309
Other						1.4	45, 316
Total World							9, 987, 972

TABLE IV
OWNERSHIP OF WORLD CRUDE PRODUCTION
(1950-1951)

Area	United States		British		Other		Total	Per-
	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	of world total
Eastern Hemisphere: Middle East				·		·
Iraq	1,720	23. 7	3, 810	52.5	1,720	2 3. 7	7, 250	1.4
Kuwait	9, 500	50.0	9, 500	50.0			19,000	3.7
Saudi Arabia		100.0					29,750	5. 9
Iran			35,000	100.0			35,000	6.9
Qatar		23.8	1,048	52.4	476	23.8	2,000	. 4
Bahrein			1,500	100.0			1,500	. 3
Total	41, 446		50, 858		2, 196		94, 500	18.7
East Indies Islands	3, 350	31. 3	7, 350	68.7	_,		10,700	2. 1
OEEC Countries	53 8	20.0	681	25.0	1, 563	55.0	2,782
Total Western Hemisphere:	3,888		8,031		1,563		13, 482
US and Canada	288,750	100.0					288,750	57. 3
					10,000	100.0	10,000	1.9
Caribbean Exporting					10,000	100.0	10,000	1. :
Areas	55, 055	61, 5	34, 108	38.1	3 27	0.4	89, 490	17.7
Total	343, 805		34, 108		10, 327		388, 240
Other						1.4	7, 110	1.4
Total World

Table V
OWNERSHIP OF WORLD REFINING CAPACITY
(1980-1981)

	United S	tates	Britis	h	Oth	er	Total_	Per- cent
Area	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	Per- cent	1,000 MT	of world total astern Hemisphere:
Middle East				400 00			800	. 0
Haifa							1, 250
Kuwait	625	50.00	625				6, 500	1. 3
Saudi Arabia	6, 500	100.00		100.00			27, 500	5. 8
Abadan			27, 500	100.00	173	28.75	600	J. 0
Tripoli	142	23.75	285	42.50		28.75	8,000	1.6
Bahrein	8,000	100.00					8,000	1. (
Total	15 267		29, 210		173		44,650
Total East Indies Islands	3, 200	31.68	6,900	68. 32			10, 100	2. (
South & East Asia	0, 200	021.00					2,500
Australia & New Zealand							650	. (
Northern Africa & Spain							3, 450
OEEC Countries							44, 429	8.9
Total	3, 200		6,900				61, 129
Vestern Hemisphere:							000 000	60.
United States						100.00	300, 000 15, 500	3.
Canada					15,500	100.00		1.
Mexico				·	8,350	100.00	8,3 50	1.
Caribbean Exporting Areas:
Colombia	1,420	100.00					1,420	. :
Colombia Venezuela Peru	7,007	57. 2	5, 243	42.8			12, 250	2.
Peru	1,452	96.8	24	1.6		1.6	1,500	•
Ecuador			230	100.00			230
Trinidad Netherlands W. Indies,			4,750	100.00			4,750	7.
Netherlands W. Indies,	21,000	53. 5	18, 300	46.6			39, 300
Total	30 879		28, 547		23,874		383, 300
Other Latin American			20,011				9, 250	1.
Total	30, 879		28, 547		23, 874		392, 550
Total World							498, 329

TABLE VI LOSS OF IRANIAN OIL (Millions of Units)

a Crude	ohysical quantities (1950–51)	35 MT/Y‡ 25 MT/Y
2. Loss of crude	imports from Iran by Western Europe	7.5 MT/Y
3. Dollar elemen	t of cost in replaced crude	$55
Europe and	d products imported from Iran by Western Sterling Areacost of replacing refined (Item 4)cost of replacing crude and refined (Items 3	25 MT/Y $765-775
and 5)		$820-830
7. Dollar saving 8. Estimated net	s—equipment and servicesdollar cost annually (Item 6 minus Item 7)	$110–120 $710
	TABLE VII LOSS OF ALL MIDDLE EAST OIL (Millions of Units)
a. Crude	physical quantities (1950–51)	94.5 MT/Y 44.7 MT/Y

$MT/Y Metric tons per year. [Footnote in the source text.]

2. Loss of crude imports from Middle East by Western Europe_ 3. Dollar element in replaced crude	43.5 MT/Y $800
4. Loss of refined products imported from Middle East by Western Europe and Sterling Area	38 MT/Y
5. Annual dollar cost of replacing refined (Item 4)	$1,200
6. Gross dollar cost of replacing crude and refined (Items 3
and 5)	$2,000
7. Dollar savings—equipment and supplies, profits to Bahrein Petroleum Co., dollar element in goods furnished Middle
East by Western Europe, etc.	$600
8. Estimated net dollar cost annually assuming no cutback in current requirements (Item 6 minus Item 7)	$1,400 $300

886A.2553/1-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] January 10, 1951.1

Participants: Mr. Terry Duce, Aramco

PED—Mr. Moline NE—Mr. Funkhouser

In discussing the new agreement Mr. Duce stated inter alia:

- 1. Aramco cleared up all 12 outstanding demands of the Saudi Arab Government by the December 30 Agreement.<sup>2</sup> Disagreements over Tapline however were not included in these negotiations and would have to be discussed separately. Mr. Duce was not worried about the latest Saudi Arab demands on Tapline for protection expenses.<sup>3</sup> (Saudi Arabian Government now earns nothing from Tapline directly. 15 years from the completion of the line Tapline must pay transit fees.)
- 2. Under the December 30 Agreement Aramco submits to the two Saudi Arab tax laws: the October 20% profits tax and the December 27 50% profits tax. It was not made clear how the taxes were applied or how they operated with respect to U.S. taxes. It appears that the 20% tax is responsible for the largest bite of Aramco profits since it reportedly is levied before U.S. taxes. The 50% December 27 tax is reportedly levied after U.S. taxes.

<sup>1</sup>This memorandum of conversation was drafted on January 19.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For previous documentation on the Aramco-Saudi Arabian Government Agreement of December 30, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 9 ff. Duce met with Department of State officials so they could obtain details of the Agreement, pending a Washington visit by top Aramco executives who had participated in the negotiations. A memorandum from Funkhouser to McGhee, dated January 25, stated that at a January 26 luncheon top Aramco officials would fill in the gaps that remained in the Department's information after this January 10 discussion. Among points to be raised by the Department at the luncheon were questions about the way Saudi Arabian taxes were to be levied, whether the Saudi Arabians would see the Aramco books, and whether Aramco considered its profit-sharing type of agreement adaptable to the situations in Iran and Iraq. (NEA Files: Lot 57 D 177: Saudi Arabia-Aramco, 1951) No memorandum of conversation of a January 26 Aramco luncheon has been found in Department of State files.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 433 from Jidda, January 10, reported the Saudi Arabian Deputy Minister of Finance had met the previous day with the Aramco-Tapline representative to the Saudi Arabian Government and again raised the question of payments for the protection of Tapline (886A.2553/1-1051).

- 3. Saudi Arab income is calculated by taking 50% of company profits after expenses have been deducted. Mr. Duce gave the following company figures covering 1950. (These figures were given in utmost confidence and should not even be quoted back to Mr. Duce.) Aramco showed 1950 profits $292,000,000, expenses $66,000,000, U.S. taxes $6,000,000. Mr. Duce did not explain the $6,000,000 U.S. tax. Of the remaining $220,000,000 net profit, the Saudi Arabian Government would get $110,000,000: $58,000,000 for royalties and rents, $8,000,000 duties, $32,000,000 as 20% tax and $12,000,000 as 50% tax. These figures would change significantly in 1951, particularly since the royalty would under the new agreement be reduced from the free market rate of gold ($12.00 rate per gold sovereign or 32¢ per barrel) to the legal rate or approximately 21¢ per barrel.
- 4. Mr. Duce stated that the new Saudi Arab tax laws virtually eliminated all U.S. taxes. He however emphasized that the U.S. Government would still receive 8% tax on dividends to parent companies, 30% tax on stockholders dividends and the 10.5–21¢ duty on oil imports from Arabia. If 300,000 barrels a day were imported into the U.S. from Arabia, Mr. Duce added the U.S. Government would earn some $20,000,000. Mr. Moline expressed astonishment that any such rate of imports of Arabian oil into the U.S. might be contemplated.
- 5. Mr. Duce stated that any specific figures on the Aramco Agreement and any interpretation regarding the way the new taxation would work would have to be given the Department by Mr. Brougham, the Financial Vice-President of Aramco. Mr. Duce doubted whether Aramco would request any decision on tax credit from the Treasury Department at this time. He stated that the company would probably file their income tax returns showing taxes paid to the Saudi Arabian Government and await developments.

  6. Mr. Duce calculated that 1950 royalties would come to approxi-
- 6. Mr. Duce calculated that 1950 royalties would come to approximately 56¢ per barrel. Mr. Duce stated that submerged areas would fall under the profit-sharing arrangement with the only difference being that the royalty figure would continue to show a 5¢ per barrel greater return than on the mainland. The total return on any submerged area production would however be 50% of net profits as on the mainland. Mr. Duce seemed to expect that the two concessions might be unified. He had no comments as to whether the drilling obligations on these submerged areas might be eliminated.
- ligations on these submerged areas might be eliminated.

  7. By the new agreement Aramco gained the privilege of paying royalties in any currencies collected from oil sales and/or gold. The company might pay in gold if they could buy gold at IMF prices. Mr.

Duce was asked whether payment in gold would not again be so profitable to the Saudi Arabs that it would be a difficult diet to drop. There was no comment.

- 8. The new agreement also called for elimination of the  $5\phi$  premium on company rial purchases. Mr. Duce was inclined to minimize this feature of the agreement.
- 9. Mr. Duce was informed that the Department was anxious to secure a copy of the new agreement and to have the details explained, particularly the meaning and operation of the two Saudi income taxes. Mr. Duce stated that the agreement was 99% approved by the Aramco Board and that the Department would receive a copy immediately following final approval, expected January 15.4 He asked if a full review by Messrs. Davies, Brougham and other top officials who participated in the negotiations would be desirable from the Department's point of view and was assured that it would be.

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Petroleum"

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET

[Washington,] January 12, 1951.1

Participants:

Assistant Secretary McGhee

Colonel J. F. Drake, Chairman, Gulf Oil Corporation Mr. D. Proctor, Vice President and General Counsel, Gulf Oil Corporation

NE-Mr. Funkhouser

Colonel Drake stated that his company anticipated Kuwait demands for a profit-sharing arrangement following the Aramco model. Although Gulf would expect to stop Kuwait demands considerably short of Aramco royalties (estimated at approximately 56¢ a barrel for 1950) the company would like to put itself in a position to obtain the same U.S. tax credit Aramco expects to get, thus taking major burden of any royalty increase off the company. Any sharing of profits formula as well as the tax credit, according to Colonel Drake, was now prevented by the corporate set up of Kuoco and its non-profit provisions. The Kuwait Oil Company is a British Corporation which sells oil at cost plus one shilling.

&lt;sup>4</sup> On April 17 Duce sent Fred Awalt an Aramco pamphlet entitled "Agreements between Saudi Arab Government and Arabian American Oil Company," containing copies of agreements between Aramco and the Saudi Arabian Government from the original Concession Agreement of May 29, 1933, to the end of 1950. Included were copies of the Agreement of December 30, 1950; the Saudi Arabian Royal Decree of November 4, 1950, imposing an income tax on individuals and companies; and the Royal Decree of December 27, 1950, imposing an income tax of 50 percent of the net operating income of petroleum companies. (886A.2553/4-1751)

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum of conversation was drafted on January 17.

Colonel Drake stated that the company was considering corporate changes whereby the Gulf share of Kuwait oil would be owned directly by an American company with a British subsidiary operating the concession at the present arrangement of cost plus one shilling. U.S. company would sell oil at world prices, show taxable profits and, if Kuwait levied an income tax, would be in the Aramco position of obtaining U.S. tax credit. Colonel Drake indicated that some opposition could be expected from the British to this arrangement but believed that the British would have the same control over Kuwait operations as exist under the present arrangement. Colonel Drake stated that he wished to inform the Department of these ideas and hoped that he could count on the Department's support for making these changes.

Colonel Drake reviewed briefly the background of the Kuwait Oil Company showing acquisition of the Kuwait concession was due exclusively to Gulf's efforts and that they had only been prevented from obtaining a 100% American concession by the Foreign Office. It was at that time that Foreign Office insisted that not only half the concession be given to the Anglo-Iranian Company but that the American share should be worked through a British subsidiary. Mr. Proctor stated that Gulf would approach the Bureau of Internal Revenue on the tax free reorganization which they hoped to effect.

Mr. McGhee in answering different questions stated inter alia that the State Department as in the case of Aramco could not advise oil companies on specific terms which should be offered concessionary countries. In the case of the Aramco contract, the Department did not recommend that the 50-50 arrangement be offered nor was the State Department called to approve the contract once it was signed. He stated that Gulf might be well advised to discuss the tax features with the Treasury Department and particularly pointed out the possible danger of being made a party to any avoidance of U.S. taxation. Mr. McGhee stated that as in the case of Aramco the U.S. Government would be glad to support the company in its negotiations with the Sheikh of Kuwait along general lines should such support become necessary. Mr. McGhee felt however that the British Government was in the best position to assert influence on the Sheikh of Kuwait and could be counted on to do their best to keep the Sheikh's demands within reason.

Mr. McGhee stressed the importance of encouraging the Sheikh of Kuwait to put any increased royalties to capital formation, development of useful facilities, education, etc. Putting these additional royalties to optimum use would also be facilitated by presence of British advisers on the spot.

It was felt that the British could agree to the corporate change suggested by Gulf, particularly in that it appeared that British control would be in no way jeopardized and in that their pressure on the company to give up 50% of their concession and to work through a British subsidiary seemed to place on them an obligation to put the American company in the position to take advantage of any tax benefits which Anglo-Iranian Oil Company would be able to profit by.

Mr. Proctor stated that another reason for Gulf's desire to change the corporate structure of their Kuwait operations was a fear that the British Government might move farther into the nationalization of industry; Gulf would be most reluctant to have its properties in Kuwait taken over by British Government nationalization of Kuwait Oil Company, Ltd.

Colonel Drake stated that in arguing for less than the 50-50 profit sharing deal it would be mentioned that Kuwait oil was of lower quality and value than Saudi Arabian and Iranian oil, that it was recognized by ECA price schedules that transportation of Kuwait oil was more expensive than either Iranian or Saudi Arabian oil; the Trans Arabian pipeline, it was added, made it even more difficult for Kuwait to make the same profits as Aramco. Colonel Drake minimized chances of any early completion of the Middle East pipeline in which he stated Gulf could obtain a position if they so desired.

Colonel Drake stated that he was sailing for London March 2 for talks with AIOC and the U.K. on the above matters, promised to keep the Department informed of any developments, and thanked Mr. McGhee for the informative discussion. Mr. McGhee stated that the Department would give these problems close attention and reaffirmed the Department's interest in assisting Gulf in any foreign problems which developed.

886A.2553/1-1851: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Saudi Arabia 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, January 18, 1951-7 p.m.

254. Brit Emb reps Jan 15 raised question SAG-Sheikdoms boundary dispute <sup>2</sup> and expressed hope Dept wld use its influence keep Aramco out of negots. UK prepared take similar step with Brit oil companies. UK felt oil co meddling overtly or behind scenes wld jeopardize success negots. Specific ref made Fact Finding Boundary Comm as body from which oil co shld be excluded.

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to London.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For previous documentation on the boundary dispute between Saudi Arabia and the Shaikhdoms in the Persian Gulf and the setting up of a factfinding commission to handle the matter, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 9 ff. The British Government handled foreign relations for the Shaikhdoms and was negotiating with Saudi Arabia on their behalf.

Reps stated Brit component Comm wld consist of Pelly, rep Brit Emb Jidda, Brit surveyor and possibly FonOff legal adviser in addition to native guards and reps each Sheikhdom concerned.

Dept pointed out SAG component Comm might feel at disadvantage without Western technicians to match talent Brit component. Dept agreed in principle oil co abstention desirable but as practical matter doubted whether this entirely possible. Re speaking Aramco in sense desired by UK Dept expressed desire consult you since Aramco likely reveal Dept's action to SAG if and when Aramco aid sought and SAG wld take this as evidence indirect US intervention in dispute which US anxious stand aside. Dept stated situation might occur later in which US cld assist its Saudi and Brit friends toward settlement and therefore it might be well keep US capacity for impartial good offices unimpaired.

Recommendations requested.3

ACHESON

886A.2553/1-2351: Telegram

The Ambassador in Saudi Arabia (Hare) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Jidda, January 23, 1951—1 p. m.

466. ReEmbtel 449, January 16.2 While en route Dhahran by Aramco plane January 16, Owen of Aramco told me he had just received letter from Finance Minister re tapline protection. Translation had not been completed but appeared to be ultimatum to meet Saudi demands or face temporary closing of line. Before my de-

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 501 from Jidda, February 2, advised the Department of State that Aramco had been careful to avoid identifying itself directly with the frontier problem and felt none of its personnel should participate in the forthcoming negotiations. Aramco was, however, prepared to make available to the Saudi Arabian Government, for consultation on factual aspects of the tribal question only, a member of its staff who had made a detailed study of the matter. Aramco had also informally suggested Richard Young, a member of its legal staff, for the position of legal counsel to the Saudi Arabian Government. The Ambassador suggested the Department tell the British of Aramco's position, since it would go far to meet the British request without having put the U.S. Government in the position of having imposed the solution. (886A.2553/2–251)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

Not printed; it reported a conversation between Owen and Hare. Owen did not believe the Saudi Arabian Government would close the line down but said Aramco had learned that its offer, reported in telegram 433 from Jidda, January 10, had never been forwarded to Riyadh. He believed the Finance Minister and Salha were trying to hold Aramco up for more money, while merely informing Riyadh that the company was intractable without mentioning its counteroffer. (886A.2553/1-1651) parture from Dhahran yesterday Owen gave me details of contents letter but said had not yet been decided what action to take.

Following are principal points in letter:

1. All blame for delay and inaction placed on tapline;

2. Tapline offer (Embtel 433, January 10)<sup>3</sup> "Absolutely unacceptable".

3. "Final settlement on this subject is", as outlined Embtel 433, on condition commencement construction is not delayed longer than

2 weeks from January 16;

4. If company unable accept number 3 above, "Government suggests" Aramco "pay immediately $4 million on account" in order permit SAG commence building program. Discussions re settlement may then be later resumed "at Government's convenience;"

5. If Aramco unable accept either number 3 or 4 above, "Government will find itself obliged to take administrative measures to stop temporarily the flow of oil through the pipes" until satisfactory solution reached;

6. SAG would greatly regret such action, but Government has waited so long it considers company solely responsible for these consequences;

7. Letter concludes that "Government will not accept company interference with arrangements which Government makes for maintenance of security in its country and protection of company's people and property which Government guarantees to maintain and preserve. However, it is up to Government alone to decide the type of this preservation and method of carrying it out."

HARE

886A.2553/1-2551: Circular airgram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, January 25, 1951—8:05 a.m.

FYI Preliminary views of the Dept regarding the Aramco 50/50 profit-sharing agreement are submitted for general guidance and background as follows:

- (1) Near East oil is so valuable to Western economic, political, and strategic interests that an increased share of the profits for Near East producing states is warranted as a means of providing increased incentive for cooperation by Near East peoples and governments.
- (2) The Venezuelan profit-sharing formula has been known to and demanded by oil producing Persian Gulf states.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 3, p. 276.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram was drafted by Funkhouser and cleared in draft by Moline, G. Lewis Jones, Kopper, Awalt, C. Vaughan Ferguson, Satterthwaite, and Ranney. It was sent to London, Cairo, Tehran, Jidda, Baghdad, Moscow, Paris, Basra, and Dhahran.

(3) The introduction of the partnership principle in Saudi Arabia resulted from the company's own decision.

(4) In the Dept's view it represents an eminently defensible basis on which Near East concessions can be stabilized since it is equivalent to the highest existing formula and appears basically fair.

(5) The introduction of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the partnership principle to the Near East is believed to have been a realistic and dramatic answer to the Communication of the Near East is the Near East in the Near E munist line regarding foreign oil company imperialism.

(6) The rapidity of the Aramco-SAG negotiations eliminated the development of the bitterness, anti-oil company and anti-West feeling evident in Iranian oil negotiations.

- (7) The Dept believes in general that the 50/50 principle will probably increase the basic stability of oil concessions in the Near East, notwithstanding the immediate unsettling effect on other concession contracts in the area and the social problems raised by increased income in areas of limited beneficiaries.
- (8) Until full details are known, the Dept must reserve comment on the tax aspects of the Aramco agreement. Although we can properly publicize and capitalize on the American aspects of the Aramco deal which will bring Saudi Arabia in 1950 approximately 56¢ a barrel payments as opposed to the approximate 33¢ a barrel payments offered Iran and Iraq, we cannot at this point criticize AIOC and IPC as companies less liberal than Aramco because of this profit-sharing arrangement. Aramco hopes for U.S. tax credit for most or all of their Saudi Arab taxes. If this hope is realized, the U.S. Government, not the company, may be the source of increased payments to Saudi Arabia.
- (9) Provisions allowing Aramco to pay in any currencies accruing from oil sales and at IMF exchange rate are welcomed by the Dept and should have a salutary effect in the area.
- (10) Full details of the Aramco agreement have not yet been given the Dept but our further views will be forwarded when details received.

ACHESON

887.2553/2-2851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Iraq 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, February 28, 1951—7 p. m.

372. Dept concerned with unclarified and potentially explosive situation Deptel 341 Feb 8<sup>2</sup> and urtel 469 Feb 21.<sup>3</sup> Action described Deptel, particularly nationalization, wld have unfortunate effects throughout ME oil area at this time. Since IPC denies receipt letter reftel declaring concessions invalid, Ryan interests apparently bid on concession areas validly held by others. Dept wishes forestall any undermining valid concession contracts and make clear its position lest Iraqi interpret silence as tacit approval Ryan actions.

If no objection perceived, you shid hand note to Iraq Govt along fol lines:

"USG has been informed that American oil interests have made an offer to Iraq Govt regarding development of Iraq oil resources. This was reportedly done on the basis of official statements to the effect that Iraq Govt considered Iraq Petroleum Company to have defaulted on their contracted obligations and that concessions were therefore invalid. USG is concerned with this report, particularly since American interests are involved in bidding on concession areas which the

&lt;sup>1</sup> This telegram was drafted by Funkhouser and cleared by Moline.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; it reported information given to the Department of State by a member of the Ryan Oil Company on February 6. He told the Department the Iraqi Government planned to cancel the Basra Petroleum Company concession held by the Iraq Petroleum Company because of a breach of contract, and then form a national company, under the management of the Ryan Company, to develop the Basra concession. He claimed that even if the company were not guilty of a breach of contract the Government would argue that nationalization was a sovereign right of the state and the solution to the slow development of Iraq's oil reserves. (887.2553/2-851)

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed; it advised the Department of State the Embassy was unable to confirm the existence of an alleged letter, mentioned by the Ryan Company, from the Government of Iraq to the Iraq Petroleum Company in the fall of 1950. The letter supposedly declared the company's concessions were invalid because it had failed to fulfill its contract obligations. (887.2553/2–2151)

Later investigation by the Embassy revealed the Government of Iraq did deliver a letter to the company's chairman in August 1950. Telegram 497 from Baghdad, March 3, reported that during the contract negotiations in London the preceding summer the chairman declared the terms of both the Basra Petroleum Company and the Mosul Petroleum Company were too onerous and were impossible to fulfill. A confidential note delivered to him stated that no one had forced the company to sign those contracts, and the government would be delighted to release the Iraq Petroleum Company from any obligations is considered too onerous. The Director General of Oil Affairs, however, told an Embassy representative the present Government of Iraq had no intention of invalidating the contracts, but he could make no promises regarding the future if the British continued to refuse the just claims of Iraq. (887.2553/3-351) Telegram 499 from Baghdad, March 5, reported the Foreign Minister indicated the Government of Iraq did not consider the Iraq Petroleum Company in default of its contract. The Ambassador's impression was that the August 1950 letter was an informal communication, written largely for effect; but at the same time the activities of the Ryan Company were not unwelcome to the Government of Iraq, which hoped to profit from their effect on the Iraq Petroleum Company. (887.2553/8-551)

USG has no reason to believe are not covered by valid contracts. USG wld appreciate clarification of this situation by Iraq Govt."4

<sup>4</sup>Despatch 2084 from Baghdad, May 9, enclosed a copy of the note given to the Government of Iraq on March 3 and the answer received on May 9, which said the authorities had no information on any official contacts on the matter. According to the Ambassador, the evasive answer was based on the theory that conversations with members of the Ryan Company were informal, rather than official. (887.2553/5-951)

887.2553/3-1751: Telegram

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State

SECRET

Baghdad, March 17, 1951—6 p. m.

541. Embassy concerned recent oil developments Iran and Iraq which seriously threaten stability whole ME area and [garble] logical consequences policy British directed AIOC, IPC, and KOC groups. While foregoing was emphasized Istanbul conference, action [garble] is producing situation which may have lamentable results. With nationalization in balance in both countries and with high powered representatives of Ryan group attempting stampede IG into action re Basra concession here (Embtel 512, Mar 9)2 Emb believes highest level consultation between Wash and London shld take place without delay and we feel if nationalization effected at Teheran, it wld strengthen hand of elements here clamoring for similar action. Brit Emb here has recommended IPC send high-ranking IPC representative to Baghdad, so far without result. It wld appear to this Emb that IPC shid take such action without being urged. No evidence that IPC group yet sufficiently aware explosive potentialities situation. Suggest US partners be fully and urgently briefed by Dept.

Was any action taken on telegram from Istanbul conference that Amb London be instructed approach FonOff on AIOC policy? 3

Brit Emb fully aware situation in Iraq and we are fully and frankly consulting together.

Emb believes further inaction by US and UK Govts in pressing oil companies to correct inequity situation existing between IPC and &lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; the Ambassador had informed the Department of State the Ryan Company's legal adviser presented the argument that a sovereign government could invalidate or nationalize the Basra concession for failure to produce oil and that the British Government had set a precedent by nationalizing industries in its own country, therefore it could not logically object. (887.2553/3-951) <sup>3</sup> Telegram 410 from Washington, March 20, reported that consultations with the British had been scheduled (887.2553/3-1751).

&lt;sup>1</sup> For a report of the Istanbul Conference, see "Agreed Conclusions and Recommendations of the Conference of Middle East Chiefs of Mission, Istanbul, February 14-21, 1951," p. 50. In particular see Section X for an appraisal of the policies of foreign oil companies in the Middle East in relation to U.S. policies and interests, p. 70.

IG which may be legally unassailable will have results fatal to stability.

CROCKER

886A.2553/3-1951

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Arabian Peninsula Affairs (Awalt)

RESTRICTED

[Washington,] March 19, 1951.1

Subject: Meeting with Aramco on Boundary Dispute in Southeastern Arabia.

Participants: Judge Manley O. Hudson, International Law Counsel to SAG and Aramco

Mr. Richard Young, Assistant to Judge Hudson

Mr. J. Terry Duce, Executive Vice President of Aramco

Mr. George Ray, Legal Counsel of Aramco

Mr. William Owen, Aramco

L/NEA-Mr. Maktos

PED—Mr. Newton

U/FW-Mr. Taylor

NE—Mr. Kopper

NE-Mr. Awalt

Summary:

This meeting was a continuation of a series of similar meetings held from time to time since January 1949. Like previous meetings this one was characterized on the part of Aramco by outspoken criticism of the general British attitude in the area and Mr. Ray stressed the need of offsetting the British in "throwing their weight around" in the Gulf. Judge Hudson took over the conversations in the early part of the meeting. He said that on February 9 Aramco received a request from the King that it provide information and other assistance to the SAG in preparation for the meeting of the joint fact-finding commission at Bahrein which is expected to be held in the near future. The King specifically asked for the services of Mr. George Rentz whose research forms the principal basis for the Saudi Arabian claims in the area in dispute. Mr. Ray reiterated at this point that Aramco's interests were absolutely non-political and that it had no desire to encourage the SAG to extend its claims to any particular area. He said that they were obliged, however, to do exploratory development work in any area which the SAG considered to be theirs.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum of conversation was prepared on March 21.

Mr. Young is leaving for Saudi Arabia in the next few days to assist the Saudi Arabian Government in preparing for the first session of the fact-finding commission. He said that the commission would devote its attention to geographical features, tribal considerations and to any other factors which either government believes will assist its case. The area in which the commission will interest itself will be the territories in dispute between Saudi Arabia and the Sheikhdoms of Qatar and Abu Dhabi eastward to Buraimi and south to the twenty-second parallel of latitude. It was brought out in connection with the terms of reference of the commission that although the British have gone on record to the effect that zakat and tribal migrations are irrelevant to territorial claims, the commission can investigate these and any other matters without prejudice to the case of either side.

Mr. Ray and Judge Hudson both emphasized again the desirability of direct contact between the SAG and the ruling Sheikhs of the areas concerned. It was explained that the Department was in agreement and had made such a recommendation to the British in London in May 1950. The British refused to entertain the suggestion as damaging to their prestige and position in the Gulf but they did accept the idea of Sheikhal representation in consultative capacity. The occasion was also taken to remind the visitors of other instances where the Department had taken positions which were helpful to the SAG. The Department had suggested mutual restraint upon both sides in order to keep areas in dispute free of any oil company activity which might prejudice the claims of the opposing side or incite sharper rivalry in the area. The Department had also pointed out to the British that it was unfair of them to expect the SAG to provide a justification of its claims to the disputed areas unless both sides did so simultaneously. It was also pointed out that we had suggested to the UK that it cite its authority for negotiating on behalf of the Sultan of Muscat and Oman. It was also explained that we had expressed our disappointment over British action in destroying some of the island markers which had been erected by the Saudi Arabian Government. We did not consider such action conducive to creation of a suitable atmosphere for conducting friendly negotiations for settlement of the disputes in question. Judge Hudson and Aramco representatives were very pleased to know that we were departing from what they considered to be an attitude of aloofness and had assumed one of constructive impartiality.

887.2553/3-2151: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, March 21, 1951—2 p. m.

5029. Ref: London despatch 4403 Mar 15, 1951.2

- 1. FonOff petroleum officer today confirms that Gibson IPC manager director planning visit Baghdad approx April 1 through 10. Anticipate Gibson will be prepared discuss steps for undertaking negots with Iraq Govt aimed at 50–50 profit sharing arrangements similar Aramco plan. IPC apparently prefers that Iraq Govt shld initiate request for royalty agreement along these lines, but FonOff suggested to Gibson it wld be more desirable for IPC make offer to negot on such plan first. Reported Gibson did not give assent immed this suggestion, but FonOff believes he may assume initiative in Baghdad and inform Iraq Govt that IPC is willing commence negots. FonOff rep mentioned Gibson had considered visiting Baghdad sooner, but Brit Amb there advised present situation not serious enough to require this.
- 2. FonOff rep mentioned that while IPC probably cld presumably adjust its corporate structure to permit operation under plan similar Aramco agreement this wld be difficult in view different nationalities of IPC partners. Mentioned US partners cld obtain full relief from US taxes for taxes paid Iraq under profit sharing plan; Brit companies eligible for 50 percent relief; but Fr wld evidently receive no exemption from Fr taxes. Appeared from conversation that IPC now examining various alternatives for complying with 50–50 plan but as yet have not progressed very far in working out actual procedure.<sup>3</sup>

GIFFORD

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Baghdad and Cairo.

Not printed; it advised the Department that the Iraq Petroleum Company was considering the necessity of revising its royalty agreement but had no definite plans for negotiations with the Iraq Government and was under no pressure from it. The director of the company informed the Embassy there had been surprisingly little reaction in Iraq to the recent Aramco agreement in Saudi Arabia, but the company was watching the situation closely and its managing director planned to visit Iraq in April. (887.2553/3-1651)

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 5389 from London, April 12, reported the Iraq Petroleum Company board had heard Gibson's report of his trip to Baghdad and had met that day to begin formulating its position for the forthcoming royalty negotiations with Iraq (887.2553/4-1251).

880.2553/3-2651: Telegram

The Chargé in Jordan (Fritzlan) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY

Amman, March 26, 1951—7 p. m.

- 164. From McGhee. In effort clarify question of future of oil concessions in Middle East, which at present preoccupies not only Iran and Iraq but to a considerable extent all Middle East producing and pipeline transit countries, fol is put forward to Dept as well as to capitals concerned for comment as background for my discussions in London on April 2 and 3. I will naturally not expect go further than informal exchange of views. The fol conclusions are proposed with respect to the issues involved (Egypt being excluded as a special case):
- (1) That the question can only be resolved by establishment of more precise and comprehensive US-UK Middle East oil policy and by closer coordination of future US-UK action.
- (2) That financial receipts, at least by SAG, Iran and Iraq, shld be on the same or on a demonstrably comparable basis. Kuwait, Bahrain and Qatar might be persuaded catch up gradually in light of their lesser needs.
- (3) That the basis for receipt shld be simple enough to be generally understood in the countries concerned, shld provide a return per barrel at least equal to that under the new Aramco contract, and shld not sound less equitable than the 50–50 concept. This is complicated by the fact that Aramco's 50–50 arrangement is after US taxes and consequently can never provide a uniform basis as between US and UK companies. It is difficult, on the other hand, to see how AIOC can settle for less than 50–50 before taxes, which, with profits from other operations even if restricted to those in Iran, wld probably put AIOC ahead of Aramco and weaken Aramco's contract. Organizational structure of IPC does not of course, lend itself to the 50–50 approach.

(4) That over a period of time allocation of production between countries shid be related to their productive capacities and financial needs. Iraq is the only country with any real complaint along this line at present.

(5) That full benefits to peoples of producing countries and consequently full appreciation contributions of US, UK and companies, can only take place if all receipts are invested in sound development projects which will constitute permanent compensation for depletion principal physical asset producing countries possess.

(6) That the present failure of certain producing and transit countries to get refining capacity adequate for their needs and the present pricing system for petroleum products, constitute greater liabilities to the producing companies through irritation which threatens their producing and transit concessions, than can be compensated for by the profit derived by the same countries as marketeers. A "basing point" pricing system is subject to legitimate criticism by both producing and transit countries. One cannot defend the principle that the price of coal in Newcastle shld be that in Pennsylvania plus carriage to Newcastle.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Tehran, Baghdad, Jidda, London, Damascus, and Beirut.

In light of the foregoing, the fol course of action is suggested for consideration:

1) That the US and UK, after consultation with their companies concerned, make at the earliest opportunity a joint statement of Middle East oil policy based insofar as possible on the above conclusions. Such a policy might state at the outset that both govts consider the oil resources of Middle East to be the inalienable and indisputable natural heritage of the peoples of Middle East who must in the final analysis receive the benefits from its exploitation and whose govts are its ultimate owners.

Such a declaration might point out, however, that in light of the unique capital, technical and admin contributions which western oil companies have made and can make and the fact that production of oil in Middle East is dependent on outside markets which have been developed by western companies, a basis exists for fair contracts between Middle East Govts and companies assuring maximum financial realization to Middle East countries and fair returns to companies and at same time permitting both make maximum contribution toward a common effort.

It might be further pointed out that such contracts shid result in working partnership between countries and companies which shid make question of nationalization irrelevant. Since experience all over the world has shown that the principle of sharing of profits between country and company is an equitable arrangement and one conducive to the interests of both parties the US and UK Govts support this principle as a policy in the Middle East.

The proposed declaration might also include some gen statement to the effect that allocation of production between countries shid be on an equitable basis, and that receipts from oil shid, in justice to Middle East peoples whose fast depleting oil is their principle asset, be invested in sound economic development projects.

The declaration might further state that producing and transit countries shld be assured adequate supplies of refined products at fair prices related to actual costs, and that this shld be done in the manner best suited to the desires and interests of the country concerned. It is suggested that nationalization of distribution in those countries desiring it might to a considerable extent relieve pressure for nationalization of production, and that if this proves to be the case the companies might be well advised to assist the govts in developing the necessary marketing facilities.

2) In execution of the foregoing policy, it might be best, at least at the outset, not to attempt to clarify the complex issue of whether the 50-50 split is before or after taxes of the country in which the company is domiciled for reasons previously given. It would appear preferable to either: (a) let each company work out with the country concerned what the 50-50 arrangement actually means in practice and how it shld be implemented, attempting if fair not to exceed the Aramco per barrel figures, or (b) adopt a flat royalty rate per barrel, adjustable from time to time, based on the Aramco formula, which could be offered Iraq and Iran, and possibly later the smaller sheikdoms. Since the Aramco formula appears to be generally regarded in the Middle East as a fair basis and is at present the most favorable in the Middle East, it might be accepted without further clarification of the tax issue and provide a relatively stable base for all countries for an indefinite period. Such action may, however, serve to highlight the tax issue.

3) Since the move for nationalization has gone so far in Iran special measures will probably have to be taken to reflect this fact. Probably, as in Mexico, the word concession must be abandoned. Perhaps the oil resources must be placed ostensibly under the control of some Iranian auth, which in turn will negotiate and supervise an operating agreement with AIOC providing for suitable AIOC technical control and 50-50 division of profits. The solution may take the form of an Iranian company with AIOC represented and having operating, if not ostensible control. It is believed that generous concessions of a formal nature wld be justified if the ultimate objective, which shld be to assure operational control by the companies and adequate profits to reflect their past investment and to justify their continued participation as operator, is achieved. It is hoped that the Brit companies are by now sufficiently chastened to recognize this as a Middle East fact-of-life. It is believed that the US Govt shld not allow itself to get involved in the details of any new agreement such as the extent to which AIOC profits outside Iran are included.

4) The joint US-UK declaration might envisage creation of a neutral commission, with US representation, to arbitrate any points of issue involved in putting into effect the proposed new policy.

5) It is believed that participation in a declaration corresponding to that above might, without getting the US Govt directly into the Iranian and Iraqi negots, provide useful basis upon which AIOC and IPC can have some hope of negotiating a stable agreement with their respective govts. It shld also serve to stabilize the situation in Saudi Arabia, Syria, Lebanon and the Sheikdoms. It is believed that such a declaration shld preferably be made prior to the report of the Majlis Oil Commission now scheduled in about two months.

The comments of all addressees are invited. [McGhee.]

FRITZLAN

880.2553/3-2651: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Cairo 1

SECRET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, March 29, 1951—7 p. m.

933. For McGhee. Dept believes you shid explore in London all possible action recommendations which cld favorably affect unstable ME oil situation and believes Amman 164 Mar 26 <sup>2</sup> subject to fol reservations provides useful background for these discussions. Dept understands FonOff officials and Victor Butler still intending proceed

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram was drafted by Funkhouser and cleared by Moline and Loftus. It was repeated to London, Tehran, Baghdad, Jidda, Beirut, Damascus, Moscow, Dhahran, and Basra.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

Washington after your return at which time more definitive action regarding US-UK ME oil policy can be taken. Reservations are: (a) Dept doubts whether any meaningful US-UK Govt and industry agreement or declaration on basic ME oil policy can be reached, particularly in time to affect pressing situations Iran and Iraq. (b) In view your limited stay London and crowded agenda, Dept believes discussion and development all appropriate specific action recommendations re Iran and Iraq more urgent than action embracing whole ME oil area. (c) Dept fears joint US-UK declaration might convince Irans of united front against their nationalization with further jeopardy to continuing flow of oil and Western orientation of Iran. (d) Anglo-American declaration for ME consumption spotlights US-UK control ME oil which fits Commie line. (e) Production allocation arrangements described in para 4 believed undesirable. (f) Re proposed creation of neutral commission, although Dept advocated this in principle, it was effectively opposed by Brit and US Govt and industry circles and is of questionable applicability at this time to immediate Iran and Iraq situation.

Dept views re specific problems Iran and Iraq subject separate telegram.<sup>3</sup>

ACHESON

887.2553/3-2951: Telegram

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY BAGHDAD, March 29, 1951—4 p. m.

573. Emb highly gratified at initiative reflected by Asst Secy State McGhee in Amman's tel 26 to Dept 164,<sup>2</sup> looking toward high level conversations with UK in effort clarify future oil concessions ME. We have closely studied conclusions and recommendations to which we give gen approval.

Basic motivation US approach to UK is of course to seek cooperation in restoring ME stability which has been dangerously and almost wantonly undermined by anachronistic policies pursued by AIOC leadership supported by portions of Brit Govt and not effectively checked or controlled by Brit FonOff which was thus derelict in its essential duty, namely, intervening to prevent occurrence of unfortunate situation which has now arisen, both in Iran and potentially in Iraq.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 4456 to London, March 31, p. 296.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to Tehran, Jidda, London, Damascus, Beirut, Amman, and Cairo for McGhee.

<sup>2</sup> Dated March 26, p. 289.

If we appear to have labored this point (Embtel 541)<sup>3</sup> somewhat both at and since Istanbul, it is to justify US intervention (especially with ref to Iran) in that superficially wld appear to be a strictly Brit family affair. Fact is in light of cold war joint US-UK policy for stability ME has been sabotaged by UK to extent described foregoing para.

Projected approach to AK [UK] may be expected produce desired results and if understanding reached we believe situation, especially in Iraq will be salvaged. However, essential that public reaction ME countries be kept constantly in mind. Thus simple formula principle is excellent. Necessary to follow upon suggested declaration both from public relations angle and to assure prompt implementation of declaration by companies. It will be fatal to make declaration otherwise.

Evidence that extreme care necessary in both wording and fol thru on declaration. The fol point out some items of especial delicacy.

Conclusion number 4 Amman tel will, of course, be well accepted Iraq. However, there are many obvious complications in application. Moreover, this might well be most vulnerable principle from free enterprise point of view and traditional Amer policy against cartels. Thus it may be attacked at home and by Soviets. Nevertheless, it is basically desirable from angle of justice in eyes of ME countries appraise particular question re desirability mentioning neutral commission in declaration because implies lack of faith in companies working out problem with ME countries. Govt sponsorship recd appear bad public relations.

Provision refinery capacity each country wld tend satisfy national aspirations. This is true in Iraq where IBRD now considering feasibility refinery for loan. Oil companies wld gain popularity by clearly indicating they wld cooperate and assist establishment. Such cooperation essential to success refinery project in Iraq.

Conclusion No. 5 excellent. However, must consider possible public reaction. Cld be attacked ground foreign imperialistic dictation. Nevertheless, believe every reasonable effort short of incurring possible imperialistic charge shld be made to bring on sound development projects. In Iraq, present development board affords likely medium.

Because importance exchange views, quick meeting McGhee and Ambs this area wld be advisable prior London talks.

Crocker

&lt;sup>3</sup> March 17, not printed. It reported the Embassy was concerned about oil developments in Iran and Iraq and believed high-level consultation between London and Washington should take place without delay. (887.2553/3–1751)

880.2553/3-3051: Telegram

The Minister in Syria (Cannon) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY

Damascus, March 30, 1951—6 p. m.

494. Re Amman 164, March 26,<sup>2</sup> from McGhee. Procedures proposed by McGhee for formulating oil policy seem to us excellent as policy and practical as means of facing up to immediate problems.

We suppose proposed declaration to serve double purpose: First, as statement of agreed policy and directive for company negots; and second, as public relations document for polit effect. We wonder if it wld be practicable to have two documents. The first, which perforce must be rather long and technical in language, wld be designed primarily for talks with companies and govts though it need not be withheld from interested segments of the public. The second wld be straightforward statement in simple language for press and popular consumption and to degree possible shld give impression that policy goes beyond declaration of principles and intentions and points up practical operation contemplated under those principles.

As for specific points of recommendations:

1. We assume "neutral commission" to convey idea of breadth and detachment. Way might be found nevertheless for Arab representation.

2. Experts will not overlook fact that passage in fifth para of recommendation (1) regarding "producing in transit countries, et cetera, at fair prices related to actual cost" wld accentuate existing marketing companies' problem in Syria of governmental dissatisfaction with present price structure for petroleum products. Wld seem preferable for US and UK to urge companies involved to make good offer for expeditious solution this problem if possible without implication of pressure under public statement.

3. Syrian special interest at moment is construction of refinery for domestic requirements. Although SPC committed to build refinery within five years provided no other company does so, suggest oil companies might benefit through increased goodwill by cooperation with Syrian Government construction near future.

CANNON

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 289.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Jidda, London, Tehran, and Cairo for McGhee.

880.2553/3-3151: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, March 31, 1951—noon.

5169. Re Amman's 164, March 26.2

- 1. We believe present ME oil problem calls for type of initiative suggested reftel. Concur that some declaration of western position seems desirable to impress on ME producing countries mutuality of ME and western interests and to convince them western govts anxious to insure that ME countries receive greatest possible benefit from development their oil resources.
- 2. To extent UK now greatly alarmed over threat to ME oil resources and anxious work closely with US, time propitious for advancing US ideas re handling ME oil problems and attempting achieve satis agreement on common policy. While we believe it necessary to aim at achieving and implementing common policy soonest, it shid be recognized there may be considerable difficulties and delay since:

(a) UK inclined move more slowly than US in dealing with ME oil problem and will probably hesitate submit their investments to common policy except on their terms;

(b) There appears be divided counsel among Brit about best course action (some UK officials convinced need for far-reaching concessions to Iranian demands, while others together with AIOC apparently hope to salvage maximum from present polit situation by continuing use tactics of applying pressure at proper places);

(c) Detailed consultations with companies will be necessary. Therefore, proposed program probably cannot be achieved quickly enough deal with immed pressing problems Iran and Iraq, which may meanwhile require separate measures.

3. Believe it desirable avoid at present time complex and controversial problem allocation of production among various countries and neutral commission to arbitrate points of issue.

4. Before making policy declaration it appears necessary carefully consider possible psychological reaction from ME countries. In particular question advisability joint US-UK statement which might create impression that US and UK ganging up on ME countries and tend to increase resistance to west. Joint statement might also provide propaganda target claiming US-UK cartel exploitation of ME. Further complicating factor is Dutch and Fr interests in oil resources which altho minor compared US-UK participation are important to those countries and will require acknowledgement. Finally wld emphasize that if it proves advisable to issue any policy declaration

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Tehran, Baghdad, Cairo, Jidda, Amman, Beirut, and Damascus.
<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 289.

it shid be simple, understandable and capable of prompt implementation in order to be effective.3

GIFFORD

888.2553/3-3151: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom<sup>1</sup>

Washington, March 31, 1951—4 p. m. TOP SECRET PRIORITY 4456. For McGhee. Fol for ur background use London are Dept's tentative views on specific action recommendations re Iran and Iraq (Deptel 4418 Mar 29).2

Re Iran Dept believes Brit plan, if as reported Deptel 4392 Mar 28,3 represents dangerous course. (This connection not certain Brit Govt is in fact seriously considering course outlined reftel, altho London's 5142 4 adds weight this possibility.) Whereas Dept fears consequences Iran nationalization of oil co, Dept believes these considerably less serious than those involved in Brit plan. Current Iran oil situation now believed jeopardizing, in order of US natl interests, (a) world peace, (b) stability and Western orientation Iran, ME and perhaps Moslem world, (c) continuance flow of oil essential to West, (d) stability ME and other fon oil concessions and (e) Brit balance of payments position. Strong course Brit appear to be considering wld seriously endanger (a), (b) and (c), whereas if handled as suggested below, Dept believes (a), (b) and (c) interests wld have best chance of being retained with oil still available to free world even assuming spread oil nationalization.

Since US recognizes right of sovereign state to nationalize, provided prompt and adequate payment made, and since Dept believes equitable solution must be predicated upon UK recognition that "nationalization principle has become law of Iran" and "what is done cannot be undone" as already reported as FonOff's view (London's 5044

&lt;sup>3</sup> Additional comments on telegram 164 were received from the Embassies in Cairo, Beirut, Jidda, and Amman. Documentation is in Department of State file 880.2553 and the Tehran Embassy Files: Lot 59 F 17.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram was drafted by Funkhouser and Moline and cleared by Coe, Ranney, and Raynor. It was repeated to Baghdad, Tehran, Jidda, Paris, and Moscow.

Same as telegram 933 to Cairo, p. 291.
 Scheduled for publication in Foreign Relations, 1952–1954, volume x.

Not printed; it reported on the British attitude toward political and oil problems in Iran and advised the Department of State that any complacency which might have existed before the recent crisis in Iran had given way to genuine alarm over the prospect of losing the British investment and oil supplies vital to the British economy. The closing sentence read: "UK Govt will be under strong Parliamentary and domestic pressure do utmost to protect Brit interests in Iran and there seems be no intention within govt or anywhere else allow Iran investment be lost for want of any determined action.'

Mar 21 <sup>5</sup>), Dept suggests alternative plan beginning with UK or AIOC statement issued immed in Iran oil field and population centers that co will abide by decision reached by IranGov will endeavor to maintain unbroken and peak production and employment during Oil Commission studies and endeavor to reach mutually profitable agreement under which the interests of Iran and the Iran people wld be fully protected in the development, operation, and distribution of Iran oil and the flow to world consumers maintained. This move believed required to reverse deteriorating situation, show Iran that West interested in Iran best interests, and protect flow of oil against strikes and shutdowns. Risks to other fon concessions of such publicity believed less important to national interest than allowing Iran situation to drift or attempting reported Brit plan.

With populace convinced strikes and terrorism not required to protect nationalization decision, continued flow of oil shld be assured with atmosphere calmed for proceeding with directives given Oil Commission. In such atmosphere, moderate and rational Iran officials cld operate as recommended Tehran's 2102 Mar 18 6 and cld be more effectively influenced by fon experts including US (DeGolyer, Levy, Thornburg, etc.), Venezuelan or UK nationals.

During transition period action recommendations Amman's 165 Mar 23 <sup>7</sup> should be implemented, particularly well publicized US-UK-IBRD aid and US-UK-Moslem state denunciation of terrorist (USSR) methods. Heavy US-UK publicity should be given benefits earned by 50–50 arrangements by private industry in SA and Venezuela and importance to Iran of stable conditions in oil industry.

AIOC negotiators cld meanwhile endeavor work out "nationalization" formula with degree of Iran control of co depending on ability of negotiators and success of above actions. Strategy wld presumably start by suggestion incorporation in Iran of co, progressively yielding as necessary to permit Irans in management positions, as stockholders, as directors. Final offer might be on basis management contract under Board Iran supervisors.

Problem of preventing USSR from demanding equal treatment might be handled by demonstrating arrangement involved no new

&lt;sup>5</sup> Not printed; it advised the Department of State that it would be advised by the British Embassy in Washington about the results of high-level meetings in the British Government concerning the line of action to be adopted as a result of the recent developments in Iran.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not printed; it reported to the Department of State on a suggested British program of action in Iran.

Presumably this refers to telegram 165 from Amman, March 27, not printed, in which McGhee suggested some possible U.S. lines of action with respect to the situation in Iran. He recommended, among other things, that it might be worthwhile for the Department of State to attempt to obtain public statements of friendly officials in other Muslim countries denouncing acts of violence such as the recent assassinations in Iran.

concession and by strengthening Iran will and ability to resist commercial instruments of USSR.

Brit of course shld understand that any reasonable policy they follow in effort to salvage situation will have our full support.

Re Iraq believe precarious situation existing can be saved by immediate imaginative action IPC. Believe important also this matter not be allowed to drag until Iran case closed if further impetus nationalization Iraq and more costly solution to be avoided. Recognize difficulties solution along Aramco line but understand co considering various solutions this problem. Wld urge that IPC partners examine possibility of package offer including (a) prospective production Kirkuk with some allowance in oil for 20% clause for Mosul concession, (b) increased production Basra with 20% oil clause honored to counter Ryan offers, (c) loan for refinery and management thereof on fee basis and (d) distribution through KOC in Iraq but at price levels in line with Iraq plans for products local refinery. In order reduce Iraq desire to nationalize, wld particularly urge surrender any areas Iraq which co has no present intention develop.

In line with para 6 analysis Amman 164 believe IPC shld recognize inevitability local refineries and low priced petroleum products on nationalized basis in ME producing or transit countries unless co by aggressive action beforehand gives to govts equivalent thereof. ME peoples must be made to feel personally direct benefits of oil by fullest distribution and utilization of cheap fuel. The cost to cos of this type adjustment insignificant in relation total interest in area and cld be acknowledged without enduring the bitterness of nationalization which otherwise threatens.

ACHESON

883.2553/1-2551: Instruction

The Secretary of State to the Legation in Syria 1

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 6, 1951.

No. 24

The Secretary of State refers to the Legation's despatch No. 323 of January 25, 1951 <sup>2</sup> in which the Legation discusses the likelihood that Syria will nationalize petroleum marketing and requests that the Department provide, for use in informal discussions with Syrian officials, background material tending to show the economic disadvantages of nationalization.

The Legation indicates that the Syrian inclination toward nationalization of petroleum marketing is prompted by the problem of high prices. The Syrian attitude toward this problem is but one reflection of the general dissatisfaction of Near East states not only with oil concession development and returns but also with prevailing prices and marketing practices. Ideally the solution would seem to lie in the adoption of a Near East price basis which would result in substantial reductions in retail price levels and would offset much of the prevailing criticism on which interest in nationalization is based.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This instruction was drafted by Newton, and cleared by Fassberg, Funkhouser, and Roberts. It was repeated to Beirut.

<sup>2</sup>Not printed.

The Department has expressed to American interest operating in the area its concern regarding current Near East attitudes to both existing concession contracts and prevailing marketing practices, and the dangers inherent in an indifferent attitude toward them. Whether they and British oil interests might be induced to adopt a more liberal price regimen by a Syrian threat to nationalize petroleum marketing is open to speculation. Although the Department recognizes the right of any nation to nationalize industries assuming adequate compensation for the interests affected, it does not favor nationalization. In the Syrian case it considers nationalization of petroleum marketing to be an undesirable solution to this problem. Nonetheless the Department questions the wisdom, even in informal talks, of putting a one-sided brief-rather than an objective discussion of the proposal to nationalize petroleum marketing-before the Syrians. Such approach to this problem as the Legation makes should not be construable as informal pressure to discourage a decision to nationalize, which would be liable to generate suspicion of United States motives in international economic affairs and increase hostility toward United States and British interests in the Near East.

Informal objective consultation may, however, suffice to discourage Syrian officials contemplating nationalization as a solution to the price problem, particularly if it appears that previously unforeseen consequences and difficulties must be faced. In its informal talks with Syrian officials, the Legation should, therefore, suggest that the following points receive careful study before a decision is made:

A. Effect of Nationalization on Domestic Economy

1. A decision to nationalize petroleum marketing implies that adequate supplies of petroleum products are available. In the case of Syria, given that relations with Lebanon are not further strained, a large share of the domestic requirements may be derived from the IPC refinery at Tripoli. There will, however, be a serious gap between total consumer demand and the availability of supplies from this source. Assuring the adequacy of supply involves, therefore, the availability of foreign exchange to cover import needs, and some thought should be given to the drain on Syria's sterling and dollar reserves which this may occasion.

- 2. If, after nationalization, adequate supplies were not available, what effect would a severe curtailment of supplies have on (a) Syria's industrial development, (b) essential transport, and (c) Syrian economy.
- 3. In the event that adequate supplies cannot be maintained, how would the Syrian public react to a new rationing of petroleum products and how would the reimposition of rationing affect the stability of the Government.

B. Syrian Responsibility in Nationalization Program

Should the Syrian Government decide to nationalize petroleum marketing, consideration must be given to compensating United States, United Kingdom, French and Lebanese interests owning storage and distribution facilities in Syria. Compensation implies either substantial foreign exchange outlay at one time or a prolonged additional drain upon Syrian foreign exchange reserves. Nationalization can, of course, be accomplished without making compensation in foreign currency; or without making any form of compensation. Either of these alternatives leads to strained relations with the nations involved and may have a direct influence on the availability of supplies.

C. Effect of Nationalization on Future Private Investments in Syria

The impact nationalization of petroleum marketing is likely to have on future private investments in Syria should not be overlooked. Due consideration should be given the extent to which private enterprise would be willing to make further capital investments in Syria in view of the nationalization of an important sector of the Syrian economy where private enterprise had substantial investment. An immediate consequence may be the suspension of oil exploration now underway and a reluctance of other possible investors to take up the concession area, if abandoned.

D. What Effect Will Nationalization Have upon the Efficiency of Distribution of Petroleum Products

The decision to nationalize petroleum marketing implies that an organization ready to assume the task of distributing and vending petroleum products has been created. While it is probably true that most of the private companies' service personnel will be willing to accept state employment, it remains for the state to provide competent managerial people. Failure to replace the management of the private companies with a competent administration will almost certainly result in an inefficient—and more costly—system of distribution.

Additional costs, if lack of efficiency cannot be overcome, will be a charge upon the state for both salaries and expenses.

E. How Will Nationalization Affect State Revenues and Prices of Products

The decision to nationalize petroleum marketing implies the State's readiness to assume responsibility for assuring distribution and vending of petroleum products. Should operating expenses prove to be more costly than under private management, so that the profit margin enjoyed by private enterprise were eliminated, a reduction in retail prices could be accomplished only through a reduction in the tax income derived by the State, since the State would be obliged to defray a greater operating overhead while reducing the margin between the cost of products and their sale price.

NE Files: Lot 58 D 332: "Saudi Arabia—Boundaries"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Arabian Peninsula Affairs (Awalt)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 9, 1951.1

Participants:

Mr. Harley Stevens, Aminoil

NE—Mr. Jones

NE-Mr. Funkhouser

NE-Mr. Awalt

Summary:

Mr. Stevens made reference to the letter of March 15, 1951 addressed to the Sheikh of Kuwait by Mr. Ralph K. Davies, President of Aminoil, a copy of which was sent to the Department,2 regarding arbitration of Aminoil's concession covering the three islands of Qaru, Kubbar and Umm al Maradim. He said that he wished no action on the part of the Department but wanted only to keep us informed of the company's position. He gave a brief résumé of the background to the dispute and suggested that the principal difficulty in the matter was the fact that the Sheikh who had been well acquainted with this problem had died in January 1950 and that the new Sheikh had not been sufficiently briefed on the matter. He said that KOC had waived its right of arbitration under Article 18 of its 1934 agreement in favor of making a different approach directly to the Sheikh for adjudication of their claim. This claim was submitted in June 1949 and was rejected by Sheikh Ahmed in July. Having elected to seek a ruling on their claim through that procedure instead of through recourse to Article 18, Aminoil felt that KOC had no right to revert to the said Article simply because the procedure first directed resulted unfavorably for them. Mr. Stevens also said that the present Sheikh Abdullah had agreed to arbitration only because he thought that Article 22 of the Aminol concession made it obligatory. He also said that it was Aminoil's belief that the Sheikh could not abdicate his responsibilities for Sharia' law; . . . and that the acts of his predecessor were binding upon the present Sheikh. Despite the legality of their position, however, Mr. Stevens said that he did not believe that the Sheikh of Kuwait would request KOC to withdraw its request for arbitration.

<sup>2</sup> Copy not found in Department of State files.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum of conversation was drafted on April 10.

Mr. Stevens said that he had heard from two unofficial sources that his company was seeking to obtain from the Iranian Government the managership of the AIOC interests recently nationalized by that Government. He said that he had also heard that the Department had suggested that these interests should have American management. Both Mr. Jones and Mr. Funkhouser disabused him of any idea that this Government endorsed such a development. On the contrary, he was told that to do so would lend substance to Soviet propaganda and would expose this Government to bitter criticism from the British. He said that he had been sure that such would be the case but he was glad to have confirmation. He said, however, that if future events should indicate that the Iranian Government would be receptive to bids from American companies, his company would be interested in making a bid for the managership.

The third subject of conversation Mr. Stevens asked to be completely off the record. During a recent conversation with PWOC representatives in California the subject of delimitation of the submerged area attributing to the Kuwait neutral zone was discussed and it was decided that a joint approach should be made to the Department. He accordingly wished that a meeting with Mr. McGhee could be arranged for representatives of both Aminoil and PWOC jointly. He said that it was the hope of the two firms that the Department would undertake to persuade Aramco to be generous in agreeing with the two firms to a division of the sea bed between their respective areas that would be advantageous to the latter. It was pointed out to Mr. Stevens that a problem of this kind was not one which oil companies could settle between themselves but was a more fundamental problem which could only be settled by an agreement between the sovereign governments concerned on the basis of principles of international law. It was also pointed out to him that settlement of this problem in the Kuwait area was only a part of the picture of the same problem which existed in other parts of the Persian Gulf, all of which would be decided on the basis of common principles and as a part of the same pattern. It was explained, moreover, that Mr. McGhee was very heavily occupied since his return from abroad and that it would be better if the group would settle for a meeting with interested officers of the Department under the chairmanship of

Mr. Berry. Mr. Stevens thought that would be agreeable and hoped the meeting could be arranged for Thursday or Friday of this week.<sup>3</sup>

A final suggestion mentioned by Mr. Stevens was in connection with the DLG program. No details were discussed and it was suggested that Aminoil should communicate on this subject with the political agent in Kuwait who undoubtedly was sufficiently informed on the subject by Sir Rupert Hay.

880.2553/4-1451: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

London, April 14, 1951—1 p. m.

5434. 1. Drake, chairman Gulf, called on me yesterday prior his departure for US to report status Gulf's discussions with Anglo-Iranian Oil Co on problem of increasing Kuwait's oil revenues. Drake says impasse has been reached with Fraser, chairman AIOC, who objects Gulf transferring its 50 percent interest Kuwait concession to separate US corp which Gulf proposed be set up for purposes. Fraser apparently now concedes necessity giving Kuwait benefits comparable Aramco terms, but due to his objection to transferring Gulf interest to US subsidiary, it has not been possible to discuss other details of proposed arrangement for increasing revenues. Drake firmly convinced necessary apply Aramco principle to Kuwait order given Sheik terms which wld compare favorably with those given to Saudi Arabia, permit Gulf take advantage of US tax credit, and avoid necessity raising basic Kuwait royalty rate (thus increasing fixed charges which might make Kuwait oil non-competitive).

2. Order to solve this impasse Drake believes it may be necessary for Dept to make high level approach to Brit Govt in support Gulf's position to HMG will "persuade" Fraser change his stand. Drake plans consult with Dept on this matter next week following his return. Proctor and Hamilton, Gulf Vice Presidents, remaining London until latter part of April to work out detailed arrangements if above problem can be resolved.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Stevens met with Barnabas Hadfield of Pacific Western Oil Company, Berry, and other members of the Department of State on April 12 to ask for the Department's help in persuading Aramco to accept their division of the seabed. Berry said the question of national boundaries was a matter which had to remain with the governments concerned, and he did not believe the Department could properly intercede in the problem. He suggested, however, that the companies might discuss the matter in hope of reaching an agreement which they might present to the respective governments. (Memorandum of conversation; 886D-2553/4-1251)

Altho specifically pressed, Drake cld not explain what valid reasons Fraser has for objecting to Gulf proposal. Drake seems assume that basic reason is Fraser's reluctance to see what he fears is further American penetration into Kuwait.

Drake says Gulf willing continue all safeguards Brit interests now applying under present set-up.

GIFFORD

<sup>1</sup>Telegram 4833 from Washington, April 21, advised the Embassy in London the president of Gulf had assured the Department there was no question of a separate concession. The reorganization was being sought by Gulf "solely secure maximum US tax benefit without altering management status quo." The Department had been discussing the matter with British officials in Washington and suggested the misunderstanding might be resolved by a fuller explanation to the British Foreign Office and further discussion between Gulf and its British partner. (880.2553/4-1451) Telegram 5579 from London, April 24, reported the Foreign Office was reexamining Gulf's proposal, since it appeared that the possible complications involved in transferring the title of Gulf's interest to a U.S. corporation might not be as serious as previously feared. (880.2553/4-2451)

887.2553/4-2351

Memorandum of Conversation, by James Newton of the Petroleum Policy Staff

[Washington,] April 23, 1951.1

Participants: Colonel Guillaumat, Director of Fuels

Mr. Coloniel Bosser, Franch, Frances

Mr. Gabriel Rosaz, French Embassy
Department: Mr. Edwin G. Moline—PED

Mr. Richard Funkhouser—NEA

Mr. James Newton—PED

Invited to expose the views of the French Government regarding a new agreement between the IPC and the Iraq Government, Mr. Guillaumat first mentioned the importance of Iraqi oil to France and French interest in maximizing Iraqi production. He had, however, called to ascertain what views on a settlement in Iraq the United States Government now entertained, particularly in view of the recent Aramco settlement in Saudi Arabia. Mr. Moline said that the United States Government had not altered its previous views, but that, in the light of the Aramco settlement, it was now clear that a new agreement with Iraq of the same magnitude was inevitable and that the key to reading a satisfactory agreement seemed to be increased production. As regards the IPC big inch pipeline the United States Government likewise had not changed its views, and there had been no decision within the Government to alter the rate of licensing despite some criticism on the matter. Any slow down in the rate of pipe delivery, Mr. Moline explained would be due to production problems and probably would not delay completion of the pipeline beyond schedule.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum was drafted on May 10.

With regard to steel for the pipeline, Colonel Guillaumat mentioned French anxiety lest pipeline delivery delays occasion an unfortunate reaction in Iraqi public opinion but expressed his view that the delivery delay was not yet serious. With regard to the Basra concession Colonel Guillaumat explained the delays which had occurred in developing this field and said that these factors would afford the company an excuse valid until next January. He felt, however, that the company should begin producing as early as possible. Mr. Moline concurred and said that while the delay was probably excusable one reached the point where meeting only minimim contractual obligations was not likely to satisfy a highly critical Government. It was his view that IPC would have to promise substantially more than minimum requirements. Colonel Guillaumat said that he hoped that a substantial increase in Basra production would be achieved but mentioned that the French Government was somewhat concerned about the lasting powers of any new agreement, noting that the Iraqis were renewing their demands for increased benefits although IPC-Iraqi negotiations had been concluded only as recently as last August. Mr. Moline noted that the settlement did not apply to Basra and Mosul.

Mr. Moline said that the whole Iranian problem might have been avoided had an imaginative offer been made before the situation was allowed to degenerate and indicated that, in view of the situation in Iran, an early, generous settlement in Iraq was necessary. Colonel Guillaumat said that it was the French Government's desire to see a settlement in Iraq worked out as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Moline said that he did not understand the French concern over American proposals involving changes in the corporate structure of IPC. Colonel Guillaumat explained that the IPC was not like Aramco when the parent companies were of the same nationality, but a company where several national interests were involved. If the IPC were transformed into a profit-making company, returns would presumably be made in dividends payable to the shareholders. The French were not interested in dividends but in oil. Too, if the reorganization were to take place, the French dividends would be subject to foreign (U.K. or Iraqi) regulations.

Mr. Funkhouser inquired whether French interests had attempted to work out a formula with other IPC parent companies. Colonel Guillaumat said they had but without success and indicated that the French company might lose its right to buy oil at cost. Mr. Moline said he thought the cost of production concept need not be a barrier as regards Iraqi oil for it could be very flexible. Imposition of new taxes would, for example, add to production costs and the Iraqis might get their share in that fashion. Colonel Guillaumat said that that, in effect, was what American companies had proposed. Mr. Moline said he thought that the principle of equal participation ought to be recognized and that this should be generally on a 50–50 basis without specific relation to Saudi Arabian revenues. The alternative as proposed by the French would present the difficulty of having to publish Saudi Arabian royalty rates and get comparisons on a cents per barrel basis. Colonel Guillaumat said that the application of the other complex Aramco formula would be impossible but Mr. Funkhouser asked whether a profit-sharing formula would not be a more stable solution and royalties more flexible than a specific per ton rate. Mr. Moline pointed out that Venezuelan revenues were not specifically known. They varied from year to year and on a per barrel basis probably exceeded the Saudi Arabian returns.

Colonel Guillaumat said the solution would be more easily applied by a profit making company and anyway the French feared that discussions prior to reaching a settlement along these lines would be too lengthy. Mr. Moline said the problem was that of convincing the Iraqis that they would be getting a fair deal. Colonel Guillaumat said he thought Middle East Governments would never accept a reduction in revenues which might occur under a profit-sharing formula, particularly if prices rose. Mr. Moline said that a price formula reflecting the increasing importance of Middle East oil was needed and that although it might be difficult to attain, the alternative, with the problems they would create, would be even less attractive.

On two other matters, the bulk terminals in French West Africa and the refinery licenses, Colonel Guillaumat had no comment to make. As the conversation ended he indicated that IPC inter-company talks were scheduled to begin in London this week.

800.2553/5-351: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET

Washington, May 3, 1951—7 p. m.

5027. For Ambassador Gifford from McGhee. Drake expressed great appreciation Emb's support and reported considerable degree understanding with Fuel and Power and FonOff. States approval Gulf plan founders only on point made by Victor Butler that only Commonwealth registered corps can hold concessions in Commonwealth including Brit protected areas.

Pls again approach FonOff at highest level you consider desirable and inquire whether this policy in fact followed and if so on what basis. Shld be made clear that in inquiring re policy and in particular its applicability to Kuwait, as indicated below, Dept shld not be considered as approving such policy on general grounds in view possible discrimination involved. Dept feels that even if alleged policy re commonwealth corps is followed (1) an exception cld be made in case of Kuwait Sheikhdom in view its special relationship to UK, (2) UK cld admit exception as done previously, i.e., Aminol (Kuwait Neutral Zone), Barber Asphalt (Trinidad) without significant effect above policy and (3) general benefits flowing from Commonwealth registration co wld be less than those from specific Gulf proposals. (Deptel 4952 Apr 28.)<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram was drafted by Funkhouser and cleared by Jones, Moline, Raynor, Ranney, and Beale.

Drake convinced personal word from you wild help immeasurably. You are given full discretion to act as forcefully as you feel appropriate and necessary resolve issue. [McGhee.]

ACHESON

<sup>a</sup> Not printed; it stated the contract changes Gulf wanted would be an internal matter only and would not affect the contract with the Sheikh of Kuwait, and Gulf was prepared to sign any binding agreement, for any length of time, guaranteeing no operational, management, or other change affecting Kuwait. The closing paragraph advised the Embassy: "Drake rptd above to Dept Apr 25 with emphasis on securing co from risk UK nationalization, which fact should not of course be communicated to UK. He requested and was promised continued Dept support here and in London." (880.2553/4-2451)

887.2553/5-951: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, May 9, 1951—6 p. m.

5853. Ref: Embtel 5740, rptd Baghdad 64, Paris 2202, Tehran 112, May 3.2 Emb reps talk with Jersey officials reveals fol as status Iraq Petroleum Company position re increasing Iraq oil revenues.

1. All owning groups of IPC are agreed that payments to Iraq shld be approx equivalent per ton with that Saudi Arabia receives from Aramco.

2. Gibson, IPC managing director, authorized negot on either of two alternatives: (a) arrangement for 50-50 profit-sharing or (b) plan to yield identical results but payments to be computed in such a way as to avoid continuing examinations of cost of oil with Iraq, since Fr object to discussion of costs with IG. AIOC, Shell and Amer group wld like use income tax route to increase payments to Iraq and establish Iraq trading companies to be sub taxes. Fr, while more conciliatory to this type plan, still showing reluctance adopt this course,<sup>3</sup> and Gulbenkian continues refuse submit income taxes. Apparently, IG's preference for form which plan shid take will play prominent part in settling differences between owing groups.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Baghdad, Paris, and Tehran.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed; it reported that Gibson was flying to Baghdad on May 3 to begin negotiations with the Government of Iraq, and the Embassy would advise the Department when it had more information on the company's terms. (887.2553/5-351)

3. Under either alternative, Gibson instructed obtain undertaking from IG that oil revenues payable to Iraq may be made by third parties, thus leaving door open for groups to set up their Iraq trading companies to be taxed shid they decide take tax route.

4. Understand IPC will attempt apply same terms finally agreed on its concession to Mosul and Basrah concessions, but otherwise no major changes contemplated in terms MPC and BPC concessions.

5. IPC plans that future royalties to Iraq wld be figured on official London exchange rate, but company willing negot settlement present "gold clause" dispute. Understand company willing pay something over pounds 1 million to settle matter out of court.

6. Reps owning groups remaining London to work out such intercompany matters as may be necessary as Baghdad negots progress.

7. Understand Harding, who has returned States to report Socony Board, also making full report to Dept.<sup>4</sup>

GIFFORD

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 6823 from Paris, May 9, reported the French were cool to the idea of a 50-50 sharing of the profits via the taxation of the Iraq Petroleum Groups, except as a last resort if the other formula for 50-50 sharing proved unacceptable to the Government of Iraq (887.2553/5-951).

to the Government of Iraq (887.2553/5-951).

*Telegram 703 from Baghdad, May 12, advised the Department of State of the first meeting of the Iraq Petroleum Company representatives with the Government of Iraq negotiating committee. Company officials reported that the atmosphere was satisfactory, and they had advanced two proposals based on the Aramco agreement for 50-50 profit sharing. (887.2553/5-1251) Telegram 752 from Baghdad, May 30, reported that negotiations had reached a point where no further progress would be apparent for the time being. The company representatives expected to reach an understanding before they left that would be the basis for a formal agreement to be signed during the summer. (887.2553/5-3051) Despatch 2170 from Baghdad, June 1, advised the Department that the specific terms of the probable agreement were not available, but the agreement would provide for a 50-50 division of the profits. (887.2553/6-151)

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Petroleum"

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET

[Washington,] May 14, 1951.1

Subject: Discussion of AIOC Problem with U.S. Oil Companies Operating in Middle East

Participants: NEA-Assistant Secretary McGhee

Jersey-B. B. Howard, P. Anderson, G. Keogler

Gulf-R. Rhoades, C. Wisner

Aramco-J. T. Duce

Socony-J. C. Case, T. Kelly

Caltex—(Bahrein Petroleum Co.) W. H. Pinckard, M. Lipp

Pacific Western—B. B. Hadfield

Superior—R. Johnson

GTI-Mr. Rountree

GTI-Mr. Ferguson

NE-Mr. Jones

NE-Mr. Funkhouser

PED-Mr. Moline

Mr. McGhee reviewed in particular detail the history of the AIOC controversy in Iran including past and present political developments. Mr. McGhee stated that our objectives in order of importance were to maintain peace, to keep Iran on the side of the West, to maintain the flow of oil, and to protect concession rights in Iran and other parts of the world. He stated that it had been and continued to be the U.S. view that as a minimum nationalization had to be accepted as an accomplished fact. He stated that the U.K. to date had not made an offer which we felt had any chance of being accepted by the Iranians. Unfortunately, our position and activities vis-à-vis either the Iranians or the British could not be profitably made known to the public at this time. If we made it known that we favored British acceptance of nationalization in order to salvage at least an operating contract, the U.K. would believe their position sabotaged. There also could be adverse consequences in other oil producing states to such a public U.S. acceptance of nationalization. On the other hand, if we publicly opposed nationalization, the Iranians would accuse the West of conspiracy and there would be a good chance that they would turn their backs on the West. Mr. McGhee mentioned that we could not oppose on legal grounds the sovereign right of a foreign state to nationalize and even if there were no such legal position and precedent there existed no effective means of persuading Iranians to revoke nationalization other than by the use of force. We considered force no solution even if we were in a position to use it.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum was prepared on May 18.

Mr. McGhee stated that the U.S. position could be expressed in simple terms: We were urging the U.K. to come up with an offer which was capable of being accepted in Iran. This we would support fully. We had reason to believe our course in Iran had placed us in a position where our influence still meant something. We were also forcefully pressing the Iranian Government to sit down with the British to discuss the problem and we were pointing out all the difficulties Iran would face trying to operate the oil fields without AIOC.

Mr. McGhee mentioned that the U.K. press had accused the Department of not supporting the U.K. position, of forcing them to accept nationalization which we ourselves do not favor, of permitting the development of a situation out of which U.S. companies would profit which was the Commie line. Mr. McGhee described how important it was for us to prevent US-UK relations from becoming more strained at this point. Mr. McGhee added that on the other hand Iranians were highly resentful of the US-UK high level discussions on the Iranian oil problem and other indications that the U.S. and U.K. were ganging up on Iran to prevent nationalization. Mr. McGhee mentioned the delicate position which currently obtained in Iran, stressed the deep feeling of xenophobia, and added that nationalism was a force which usually proved successful. The U.S. Government was anxious to keep that nationalistic fervor working at least not counter to aims whereas the activities of the Tudeh were endeavoring to align the Nationalists with their objectives.

Mr. McGhee asked for the individual company reactions to our handling of the Iranian situation, what the industry as a whole felt about the possibility of U.S. companies involving themselves in Iran, what impact Iranian nationalization was having in their concession areas and what could be done to protect their position in their different concession areas. Mr. Keogler expressed the following views (a) The U.S. Government might make a firm stand publicly and privately against nationalization and unilateral cancellation of contracts; (b) it was disadvantageous to have the Iranian Government decide what damages should be paid to the company; (c) Iranian oil was in effect already nationalized so that nothing necessarily need be changed; (d) there would be an adverse impact on all other contracts in the world if Iranian expropriation were successful; (e) American businessmen would be discouraged from operating anywhere in the world if such lawlessness and such legal interpretations proved successful; (f) international law was principally made up of accepted or unaccepted principles which were subject to extremely varied interpretation; (q) it might be necessary to develop the proper international principles to reach a successful solution of this vital international problem and (h) perhaps the U.S. Government or U.S. industry should indicate that they would not handle the oil. Mr. Case stated (a) that this might be a time to use force since such vital oil could not be allowed to be lost; (b) that nationalization in the U.K. was different from Iranian nationalization in that to his best knowledge no foreign interests were directly affected by nationalization in the U.K.; (c) that if international law could not support opposition to nationalization then the matter should be decided on the basis of fundamental principles which should not allow such arbitrary action and disregard for the international obligations and responsibilities which all sovereign states should accept; (d) that Iran would face many difficulties over the years by such action; (e) that Iranian production might fall off drastically and development move ahead faster in other regions in order to make up the loss for Iranian oil; (q) that there were many difficulties involved in attracting technicians, obtaining supplies, equipment, in keeping up with technical improvements, and in paying compensation to AIOC if such in fact were contemplated. Mr. Howard stated that Iranian credit would be seriously impaired and Iran's future adversely affected by the loss of foreign capital. Mr. Brewster felt that some of these fears and reactions might be publicized by industry and that industry might particularly speak its mind on the inadvisability of U.S. companies involving themselves in Iran. Mr. McGhee asked if the other companies represented had similar opinions regarding the inadvisability of working in Iran at this time. Different company representatives stated that this was entirely true as regards their own companies but could not speak for the industry as a whole. It was the consensus that the industry itself could not take steps to dissuade those not represented at this meeting from adopting similar policy. Not only was the expression made that the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission would have objections to this voluntary "restraint of trade" but that any industry ban would be disregarded by any company so interested. Mr. Howard expressed the view that if any U.S. group went in it would amount to cutting the industry's own throat since "concession jumping" would be fatal for concessionaires in other parts of the world. "Highway robbery" was the expression used by Mr. Case and he stated that it could not be possibly considered by responsible companies. Mr. Pinckard added that it would probably be most embarrassing to the U.S. Government at this point as well as to U.S. industry. Mr. Pinckard also stated that the time might conceivably arrive however when it might be advisable to have U.S. technicians rather than technicians of an unfriendly country.

Mr. McGhee asked the group if they knew of any U.S. companies actively discussing operations in Iran. Only negative responses were made to that point. Mr. Howard mentioned that the Ryan group was interested in getting the Basra concession away from the Iraq Petroleum Company and that operations in Iran might similarly have appeal to this group but made it clear that he had no indication that such was the case. Mr. McGhee stated that he had felt that this would be the position that American companies would take and he fully concurred with the thought that aloofness on the part of U.S. industry would seem appropriate at this time. He mentioned that were American interests to offer to run AIOC's installations our relations with the U.K. would be seriously affected and that the opportunity for the U.K. to pick up the pieces from this controversy would be lost. This it was stated was the party line which the Communists were currently exploiting; unfortunately it was being given press support in the U.K. McGhee also agreed however that if it appeared that situation so deteriorated that it became a choice between either Communist technicians or U.S. technicians, the Department undoubtedly with U.K. support would have already urged U.S. companies to take action.

In answer to the varied views and suggestions by industry representatives, Mr. McGhee expressed the following positions. He reiterated and re-emphasized the Department's dilemma with regard to public statements as listed above, i.e. alienation of either the U.K. or Iran with consequent adverse effect on any compromise. Mr. McGhee developed the U.S. position regarding nationalization at considerable length stating that there were many precedents for nationalization, that the government position had been and continued to be in accordance with U.S. international declarations and agreements that we could not oppose the right of sovereign states to nationalize as long as prompt and effective compensation were paid. He referred to the Mexican, Bolivian and Central European expropriations. He mentioned that the oil industry was fully experienced, however unhappily, with the facts and precedents in this regard. He stated our Legal Advisers felt that no court of international law would reverse any Iranian decision to nationalize even if jurisdiction over such a problem were accepted. It was stated to industry representatives that even assuming there had been no contrary body of legal precedent and opinion in this respect, there existed no known method other than the use of force making the Iranians reverse their nationalization decision. This was perhaps the real key to the situation; the legal aspects providing the shadow of the problem, how to apply pressure in any effective way was the substance. "Nationalization" sentiment in Iran was ubiquitous and deep-seated; it was confused with "independence". It was doubted whether even threats to boycott Iran by U.S. companies would be effective or appropriate in view of the fact that Iranian oil, particularly Abadan production, was currently irreplaceable, that Iranian xenophobia went so deep that failure to sell their oil would be preferred to revoking nationalization and that such a boycott would provide an opportunity for Russian action. Mr. McGhee stated that the U.S. Government here and in Iran was continuing to impress the Iranians with the difficulties of developing their oil resources without the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company and specifically mentioned the shortage of technicians, specialized material, tankers and other facilities, the adverse impact on the Iranian economy of inefficiently handled oil development, the tendency for traditional Iranian customers to develop more stable alternative sources of supply to the long run detriment of Iranian oil development, and the difficulties of attracting other foreign capital into Iran following unilateral cancellation of a legitimate contract. Mr. McGhee stated although we could not make a strong stand against the sovereign right of a foreign state to nationalize, we were strongly opposing unilateral cancellation of contracts. Mr. Hadfield expressed the view that this too would appear to be a tenuous position since the sovereign state could divest private individuals of property rights and there was little difference between property rights and contractual rights. He advised against taking refuge in what he considered a weak position.

Mr. Howard stated that it was tragic that there was no solution to this problem. Mr. McGhee stated that he could not concur that there was no solution and indeed felt that there was no reason for the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company not to continue operating in Iran, that it depended on the way the British behaved and how we acted in bringing this situation about. Mr. Howard expressed the view that the next move would appear to be up to the British and that they should make an offer which was capable of being considered favorably by the Iranian Government. Mr. Howard wondered whether the U.S. Government felt that the policies of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company were conducive to such a settlement and specifically asked whether the Department had confidence in Sir William Fraser's ability to facilitate the resolution of this problem. Mr. McGhee declined to state the Department's views on the individuals concerned with AIOC policy and added that it was unnecessary to describe AIOC's method of operating to American industry representatives.

Mr. McGhee stated that the U.S. Government highly valued the prestige which it had developed not only in Iran but in the Middle East area and although we had to be extremely careful about risking this prestige, it was urgent to go as far as we could to support the continued operations of the British oil company. Mr. McGhee described various types of operating arrangements which U.S. Government felt could meet the irresistible Iranian demand for "nationalization". He stated that the government was fully aware and had been for at least the past year of the potential danger which nationalization of AIOC would have on other concession contracts in the world. It was obvious that if Iran won better terms than the profit-sharing agreement or in other words if nationalization proved successful, it would be difficult to prevent other oil producing states from moving the same way. The dilemma was particularly acute since the West might have little alternative but to try to make whatever form of "nationalization" resulted in Iran a success.

There was some discussion of how to resolve the dilemma of opposing sovereign rights of governments to do anything they wanted within their own boundaries. No mention was made of the possible usefulness of some international oil forum to which both countries and companies could turn. Mr. Duce subsequently mentioned that in the last analysis no contract could keep an oil company secure if the foreign state wished to make it difficult for the company to operate and that the only practicable solution was to keep the government satisfied with the company operations.

Mr. Rhoades mentioned that even if a contract violation were established, there would be no apparent means of collecting damages since the Iranian Government had ultimate control in determining the amount of such payments. Mr. McGhee stated that compensation was the last thing AIOC wanted. He reported that there was no satisfactory basis for protecting AIOC against nationalization and that in the view of our lawyers Article 21 did not override the sovereign right of Iran to make that decision. He added that the U.K. did not take the position that Iran could not nationalize. Mr. Pinckard stated that it was probably difficult for the British Government to take a strong stand against nationalization in view of their own actions in this field.

Mr. McGhee stated that the U.S. Government was anxious to employ induction rather than coercion to Iran. He felt that threatening Iran could result in a break with the West. The limitations however which would apply to such a forceful policy in Iran might not necessarily apply however to similar moves in other oil areas. He expressed the view that concessions in other parts of the Middle East and Latin America seemed relatively secure from nationalization. He felt that the example which Aramco had set in its fast, effective negotiations with the Saudi Arabian Government was the way to secure the stability of other concessions by "keeping ahead of the game" and by removing pressures before they became acute.

Different industry comment was made expressing the view that Iranian oil was essential to the West, that Iran was negotiating with an effective gun in the back of AIOC, that the West was not in a position to threaten Iran as effectively as Iran could threaten the West, that the industry had some skepticism over whether or not companies not represented at the meeting would make advances to Iran regarding the development and handling of Iranian oil and made some expressions of criticism regarding reported AIOC moves such as cutting off advanced royalty payments. Regarding a public statement which would serve to protect the validity of concession contracts in other parts of the world, industry representatives expressed various conflicting views which resulted in deferring to whatever decision the Department believed best.

Mr. McGhee stated that if it were possible to find any silver lining to the serious storm which existed, it might be that if any Iranian leader could make an agreement with Anglo-Iranian Oil Company and get away with it, it would have to be a man as popular as Mossadeq. Other favorable features of Mossadeq's current power were that he was honest, he was anti-Russian, he had promised that Iranian oil would continue to its present consumers and that British technicians would continue to be used.

Mr. McGhee ended by expressing the hope that the Department had described to the satisfaction of industry the complexities of the Iranian problem, the merits and demerits of the bad alternatives now open and the policies and action which the Department followed and was contemplating. He apologized for holding the industry representatives for such a long meeting. He hoped to obtain the confidence and continued advice of the oil companies primarily affected by these developments. On behalf of the industry representatives Mr. Pinckard thanked Mr. McGhee for his thorough and detailed explanation of the problems involved in the Iranian issue and expressed sincerest congratulations for what he considered the best possible handling of an "impossible" situation.

886D.2553/6-451

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET

[Washington,] June 4, 1951.

Subject: Gulf Oil Company Difficulties Regarding Kuwait Concession

Participants: Colonel Drake, Chairman, Gulf Oil Corporation

NEA—Mr. McGhee NE—Mr. Funkhouser

Colonel Drake stated that on June 1, 1951 Mr. Jackson, Vice-Chairman, and Mr. Anderson, Comptroller, of Anglo-Iranian Oil Company conferred with the following officials of British Government at joint meeting:

Representative of Foreign Office Representative of Ministry of Fuel and Power Representative of Treasury and Tax Authority Representative of Bank of England Representative of Inland Revenue

Messrs. Jackson and Anderson presented the tentative agreement which Gulf Oil Corporation and AIOC had reached relative to increasing the revenue of the Sheikh of Kuwait from oil concession now in the possession of Kuwait Oil Company, Ltd.

No representative of Gulf was permitted to attend this meeting. After the meeting Mr. Jackson reported to Gulf that at the meeting no objection to the proposal was raised by anyone except the representative of Inland Revenue who made following statement:

1. Kuwait—a British protected state—has no income tax and doesn't need one.

2. If Kuwait is permitted to impose an income tax, such action might have wide repercussions on revenues of British Governmentfor example, similar action might be taken in Iraq and Persia.

3. If Kuwait imposes such a tax, it might not come within the purview of British Finance Act of June 1950, granting tax credit to British corporation operating in foreign countries.

4. Memorandum to above effect is to be delivered to Chancellor of Exchequer by said Inland Revenue representative.

Mr. Jackson told Gulf representative (Mr. Proctor) that he thought Inland Revenue Department could finally be induced to approve proposal of Gulf and AIOC, but that it might take several months to do it and suggested that as a "stop gap", the royalty to Kuwait be increased to about 30¢ per barrel on a temporary basis, without prejudice to a final settlement along lines of Gulf-AIOC proposal.

Mr. Jackson told Mr. Proctor, also, that Inland Revenue representative suggested that U.S. Government be informed of possible harmful effect on British Government revenues that might result from income taxes imposed by British protected states.

Mr. Proctor told Mr. Jackson that Gulf was strongly opposed to any further delay in this matter and therefore could not agree to the proposed "stop gap". This means that an impasse has now been reached unless British Government overrules the Inland Revenue representative.

Mr. Proctor has informed Mr. Palmer and Mr. Penfield of U.S. Embassy in London of what occurred at above meeting of June 1, 1951, and asked that Ambassador Gifford see Mr. Morrison, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, immediately and urge that Gulf-AIOC proposal be pushed through with all possible speed. Mr. Palmer and Mr. Penfield promised to help but doubted if anything further would be done without instructions from Washington.

Mr. Proctor said that Victor Butler of Ministry of Fuel and Power was not at June 1 meeting owing to attendance at the International Petroleum Conference in The Hague, but Mr. Proctor is to see him today (June 4).

Colonel Drake stated that only with the cooperation of Mr. Jackson of AIOC could Gulf have overcome the traditional Fraser stubborness. Colonel Drake stated that Sir William Fraser had openly taken the position that he would not agree to the Gulf proposals. Colonel Drake also stated that Sir William Fraser appeared extremely bitter about the operations of American companies in the Middle East, specifically he blamed Aramco for AIOC difficulties in Iran.

Mr. McGhee thanked Colonel Drake for bringing this information to the attention of the Department and stated that he would ask Ambassador Gifford to intercede again in this matter.¹ Mr. McGhee added that the British Government should be able to resolve the impasse which existed in U.K. Government circles. Colonel Drake made an appointment to see Mr. McGhee on June 6 to learn the results of the action contemplated.

Telegram 6347 from London, June 5, informed McGhee the Embassy had been in close touch with Gulf officials and the British Foreign Office and had been informed that the Anglo Iranian Oil Company would sign a long-term agreement with Gulf that day and meet with the Foreign Office after the signing. Since the Foreign Office had informed the Embassy the Inland Revenue Office should reach a decision within the next week, the Ambassador did not think his personal intercession at the present time would be helpful but promised to continue to watch the situation closely. (886D.2553/6-551)

886D.2553/6-651: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, June 6, 1951—7 p. m.

6402. Gulf reps told us last night that when they went around to see AIOC yesterday to sign agreement on principles of plan to increase Kuwait's oil revenues (Embtel 6374, June 5),<sup>2</sup> Jackson told them that he was sorry that he was unable to sign. He vaguely mentioned necessity putting draft agreement to company's fin comite on July 14, but Gulf reps were unable to get any clear explanation as to why Jackson unable sign agreement then and there. Jackson did, however, state that he regarded document as agreed but just was not able sign it then.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram 5644 from Washington, June 4, advised the Embassy in London of this conversation and reported the Department of State hoped the British Government could make an immediate and favorable disposition of the problem. McGhee believed the Ambassador's personal intercession would be appropriate, and he suggested that early announcement of a new profit-sharing agreement in Kuwait would have a beneficial effect on the negotiations in Iran and Iraq. (886D.2553/6-451)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Basra.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

Moreover, mtg with FonOff, which Victor Butler was arranging, did not take place yesterday and Gulf has not yet been able ascertain reasons therefor or determine whether mtg will be arranged later.

Until inland revenue has formulated its position (which shid be in next few days) and we know its precise nature, it is difficult for us to take further steps.<sup>3</sup> We have, however, spoken to Gaitskell, who has promised to look into matter, and are keeping in close touch with FonOff and Min Fuel and Power.

GIFFORD

<sup>3</sup> Telegram 6568 from London, June 14, reported the British Department of Inland Revenue might not insist on knowing the position of the U.S. Treasury regarding the eligibility of an Aramco-type tax for credit against U.S. taxes before it decided on the Kuwait case. The Ambassador, however, thought it would help to expedite the British decision if the Department of State could obtain a Treasury ruling or inform the British that it was not possible to obtain a Treasury ruling prior to an audit of the tax returns. (886D.2553/6-1451)

886A.2553/6-2051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Arabian Peninsula Affairs (Awalt)

RESTRICTED

[Washington,] June 20, 1951.1

Subject: Meeting with Aramco on Jurisdictional Dispute in Persian Gulf and Southeastern Arabia.

Participants: Mr. Richard Young—International Law Counsel to SAG

Mr. J. Terry Duce—Executive Vice President, Aramco

Mr. George Ray-Legal Counsel, Aramco

Mr. Alec Chapman—Washington Representative, Aramco

OIR/GE—Dr. Boggs

L/NEA—Mr. Maktos

U/FW—Mr. Taylor

PED-Mr. Newton

NE—Mr. Jones

NE-Mr. Awalt

Summary:

Mr. Jones welcomed the opportunity to hear Mr. Young and invited him to open the discussion on the subject as he saw fit. Mr. Young said that he was in Saudi Arabia from the end of March to mid-June where he had discussed extensively with Saudi Arabian officials the problem of the boundary and island disputes and the best means of preparing the case for the Saudi Arabian Government. He said that the British note of April 25, 1951, while friendly and conciliatory on the whole, had broadened the problem to include certain islands over which Saudi Arabian sovereignty had never heretofore been challenged. He said that he had no explanation why this was done because he thought that claims to these islands would tend to weaken the British case inasmuch as their geographic position so strongly supported Saudi Arabia's claim. He suggested that the British may possibly have wished to create an issue upon which they would be willing to give way readily in the hope thereby of creating good will and improving their bargaining position. He said that Sheikh Yusuf Yassin had suggested the advisability of enlarging the boundary discussions to include the area below latitude 22 degrees north and define the frontier between Saudi Arabia and the Hadramaut. Mr. Young said that he had dissuaded Sheikh Yusuf from inclusion of this question until such time as definite facts could be ascertained regarding this

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum was prepared on June 21.

Mr. Young said that it was his impression that the fact finding commission, whose initial session was intended for early fall, would be postponed because of Emir Feisal's visit to London.<sup>2</sup> His reasoning, he said, was based on two points; first, that the subject would probably be discussed in substance in London and secondly, because Sheikh Yusuf had told them that he planned on making no reply to the British to their note of April 25 until after the Feisal conversations in London had taken some form. Meanwhile, he said, he and Judge Hudson had been asked to prepare material on the jurisdictional disputes for the London session. He also said that Sheikh Yusuf and Sheikh Abdullah had expressed the hope on behalf of the SAG that the United States would support Saudi Arabia in its negotiations so that it could deal with the British on an equal basis.

Mr. Jones expressed his surprise that Mr. Young had such a distinct impression that the London visit of Emir Feisal would lead to detailed discussion of specific agenda items. The Department's information, he said, was that the SAG preferred such conversations on the jursidictional problem should rest with the fact finding commission and that Emir Feisal's visit was primarily for the creation of good will for discussions on a very general basis of various outstanding problems. It was hoped thereby to create a friendly atmosphere of broad benefit to general United Kingdom-Saudi Arabian relations. Mr. Ray said he thought it would be very difficult to create a friendly tone without discussion of substance especially in face of the general hatred and suspicion of the British throughout the whole Middle East. He added that it was his belief that the invitation to Emir Feisal was a British effort to delay the meeting of the fact finding commission and he urged that this Government should use its influence with the British to avoid any such delay. Mr. Jones replied that the Department would be disappointed if the London meeting is in fact a delaying tactic because we have consistently urged that the negotiations progress as rapidly as possible and have anticipated an early meeting of the fact finding commission.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Telegram 712 from Jidda, June 4, advised the Department of State that an invitation had been received by Prince Faisal to go to England in August to review Saudi Arabian-British problems, including the matter of the boundary dispute between Saudi Arabia and the Shaikhdoms of the Persian Gulf. The Ambassador reported that he had suggested Faisal accept the invitation, with the understanding that it would be a courtesy visit only, but Faisal could take advantage of the situation to discuss Saudi Arabian concerns on broad lines, rather than negotiating on specific questions. (711.56386A/6-451) Telegram 725 from Jidda, June 7, informed Washington that Faisal had accepted the British invitation to visit London on the understanding there would be general discussions of mutual interests, rather than a specific agenda (711.56386A/6-751). Information on Prince Faisal's visit to London is in the memorandum of conversation of September 25, p. 330.

Mr. Maktos referred to Mr. Young's mention of Saudi Arabia's hope for US support and asked him if there are any legal positions which are so strong that the USG could legitimately take a position or whether it was a case of supporting Saudi Arabia for political reasons. Mr. Young said he thought there might be a strong legal position with respect to some of the islands. Mr. Maktos suggested that even in the case of the islands, jurisdiction might be effected by territorial water and seabed considerations which perhaps should be settled first.

Mr. Jones observed that we are meeting in the shadow of Iran which is the beginning rather than the end of a chapter. During this period, he said, we may need every factor in the picture that is useful to us and one of those is the special British position in the Gulf, generally, including the Sheikhdoms. Mr. Ray said that the British must develop good will in the area for its own salvation and one of the best ways of doing this, he thought, was to allow direct negotiation between King Ibn Saud and the Sheikhal rulers. He said that Britain will have trouble in the area so long as they insist upon being dictators and bulliers rather than negotiators. It was pointed out to Mr. Ray that the Department concurred in his view that direct negotiation between the parties immediately concerned would be very helpful toward a prompter and more friendly solution to the problems and that we had made such a recommendation to the British in London in May 1950. Our recommendation, however, was unacceptable and while we deplored it, it was thought that modifications of British control in the area was something which would have to come slowly and not be forced. Mr. Jones pointed out that the United States must also show solidarity with the British in the Near East, generally, and that we hope the Iranian affair will persuade the British of the wisdom of a fair and friendly approach. Our formal position, he said, must be that we are friends of both parties in these jurisdictional disputes and that we want them to reach agreement as soon as possible. He also observed that in his estimation Saudi Arabia was not in a position where the British could bully it considering the important special interests of the United States in that country as well as its expert legal assistance.

Mr. Ray complained that he had learned that the Department had taken the position in a memorandum it sent to the Embassy at Jidda that Saudi Arabia was overreaching itself in some of its claims. He said that Aramco had always cooperated 100 percent with the Department in making information known to it and Aramco hoped that the Department would similarly cooperate with it. It was pointed out to Mr. Ray that the Department had never made a secret of its attitude toward some of the Saudi Arabian claims or to a similarly exaggerated position assumed by the British. Moreover, he was informed, the Department had frankly told Aramco of its attitude on more than one occasion and in particular it had been so advised at a meeting similar to this on March 19, at which Mr. Ray, himself, was present.

Mr. Young said that he understood that certain work was being done by the British on division of the seabed in the Persian Gulf. He was told that such a division had been worked out between Bahrein and Qatar and was a matter of public property but that no other delineations had been made that the Department was aware of. Mr. Young said that it was also his understanding that a large scale division had been made in the "Boggs-Kennedy Report" and asked whether the Department did not believe Saudi Arabia might object to our collaboration with the British in such a project without reference to Saudi Arabia. It was observed that the Boggs-Kennedy Report had no political implications and that it was strictly technical and explanatory only. He was also informed that it had not been accepted by the Department as an official position. Mr. Boggs confirmed that this was the case and observed further that he had done work of this kind in most other parts of the world also and that his studies had never been the subject of complaint by states concerned.

880.2553/6-2251: Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Holmes) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

London, June 22, 1951—6 p. m.

6765. At mtg yesterday at FonOff Emb was given statement of HMG's position re Kuwait oil negots. FonOff stated that AIOC was now prepared proceed with arrangement for settlement in Kuwait without awaiting decision from inland revenue on question of UK tax relief. HMG considers however, that the two fol alterations in present proposals are desirable.

- a. The provisions for payments to Shaikh shld be revised to allow division of profits before deduction of foreign tax. Stated that HMG did not consider reduction of Shaikh's share net profits on account of foreign tax is justifiable in principle, and it is understood IPC partners have recognized this in their proposals for Iraq.
- b. AIOC has been advised that in HMG's opinion an increase in Kuwait oil royalties is justified in view of gen level of royalties elsewhere and HMG reserves right if necessary to give same advice to Shaikh. FonOff indicates it is matter of decision for Shaikh and HMG will not insist on this point. Reference was made however, to AIOC Gulf agreement of principles, providing that if Shwuh or HMG insist, companies prepared to raise royalty to not more than twice present level.

MinFuel also advised Gulf of foregoing position yesterday. Gulf reps wish maintain principal of splitting profits after deduction of foreign tax, since this is in line with Aramco plan and also serves as check on further royalty increases. Understand Proctor requesting permission from Gulf board to make compromise proposal that unrelieved portion either US or UK tax may be deducted before splitting profits with Kuwait, with such deduction to be calculated on basis which is most favorable to Shaikh. Hence under present US laws allowing full tax relief, there wld actually be no deduction of foreign tax in Kuwait, but principle wld be preserved.

On June 20 Gulf and AIOC signed principles of agreement similar to those pouched Dept in Emb despatch 5905, June 6. It appears therefore if prompt agreement can be achieved on alterations suggested by HMG, companies cld commence negots with Shaikh at early date.

HOLMES

¹ Not printed; it contained a copy of the draft letter of agreement covering the Gulf-Anglo-Iranian plan to increase the oil revenues of the Shaikh of Kuwait, which was to have been signed on June 5 (886D.2553/6-651).

886D.2553/6-2551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Associate Chief, Monetary Affairs Staff (Rosenson)

 ${\bf CONFIDENTIAL}$

Washington, June 25, 1951.

Subject: Kuwait Oil

Participants: Colonel Drake, Gulf Oil Company

NEA-Mr. McGhee

Other Company representatives and Department Officers

The only issue discussed was whether, in the contemplated arrangement with Kuwait for a 50-50 division of the profits, taxes paid in the U.K. (by the AIOC) and in the U.S. (by Gulf) should be deducted from gross profits before the 50-50 split. At the present time it would make no difference to Gulf as the company expects that its payments to Kuwait under the plan would exceed its tax liability to the U.S. and that the U.S. Treasury would offset the payment to Kuwait against its tax liability. However, if taxes here should go up or certain exemptions and depletion allowances which American oil companies are now enjoying should be eliminated, it would be a serious matter for Gulf to have to pay a heavy tax in the U.S. and, on top of that, pay Kuwait 50% of its gross profits.

The U.K. Foreign Office wants the two companies to share profits with Kuwait before deductions for taxes at home. No one at the meeting knew what is behind this position, as the alleged reason—i.e., to help the Sheikh of Kuwait—is not taken seriously. It was surmised that one possible reason was a desire on the part of the U.K. that both companies should pay an equal amount to the Sheikh. At the present time Gulf would pay more if "foreign" taxes were first deducted. This is because Gulf would pay no taxes in the U.S. (now) whereas AIOC, being entitled to only partial credit for its tax payment to Kuwait, would still have a tax liability to the U.K. Thus on the basis of prior "foreign" tax deductibility the profit pie which AIOC would divide with Kuwait would be smaller than the Gulf pie.

In an effort to meet this point the Gulf representatives in London have made a counter-proposal under which (a) the principle of "foreign" tax deductibility would be preserved; (b) the "foreign" tax deducted would be the same for both companies and would be either the U.K. or British tax liability, whichever was smaller.

Mr. McGhee was sympathetic with the company's point of view and thought that the British proposal would endanger the 50-50 arrangement that has already been made between Aramco and Saudi Arabia by encouraging the latter to increase its demands.

He advised the company to stick to its guns and said that in the meantime the Department would inquire from London to see if it is possible to ascertain what the motives of the Foreign Office are.<sup>1</sup>

880.2553/7-1051: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

London, July 10, 1951—4 p. m.

178. Gulf reps report that Shaikh's London rep appeared pleased with company's proposal for 50-50 sharing profits which was presented in mtg July 6. Fol detailed verbal explanation of proposal, during which company reps emphasized plan had been drawn up with idea of making fair offer and avoiding any bargaining over terms. Kemp said his immediate reaction was that plan seemed reasonable. Company stressed that proposals were patterned after Aramco plan and so far Kemp has not questioned inclusion principle deduction foreign taxes. Company has provided Kemp with copies of SA tax provisions and has arranged several subsequent informal mtgs with Kemp and Abdulla Mulla Saleh (Shaikh's rep now here from Kuwait) to offer any explanations required.

Detailed procedure not yet formulated, but presumably proposal will be referred to Shaikh by Kemp. If acceptable, steps will be taken to prepare tax decree and make corporate modifications necessary for implementing plan which company hopes will become effective Oct 1. Since Shaikh's consideration and necessary adjustments may require some time, Proctor and Hamilton departing for States July 11 aboard Niew Amsterdam with tentative plans return London approx early Sept to finalize agreement. Pertinent documents being airpouched.

GIFFORD

$Editorial\ Note$

Despatch 77 from Baghdad, July 23, advised the Department of State of developments in the Iraq Petroleum Company negotiations since the return of the company representatives to Baghdad on July 9.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram 6118 from Washington, June 25, asked the Embassy to find out if the British Government's stated objections to the Gulf proposal represented its true reasons for objecting (880.2553/6-2551). Telegram 40 from London, July 3, reported the Ambassador felt the British position was firm, and was based on what it considered its responsibility to the Shaikh of Kuwait as his protecting power (880.2553/7-351).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Despatch 195 from London, July 11, not printed.

A final agreement was being reduced to writing and the Embassy expected it to be signed as soon as the Prime Minister returned from Amman, where he was attending the funeral of the assassinated King Abdullah of Jordan. Enclosures to the despatch included an undated proposal submitted to the company by the Iraq Government, a copy of the proposals submitted by the company in return, dated July 19, and draft copies of the letters to be exchanged by the Prime Minister and the Managing Director of the company. (887.2553/7–2351) Telegram 69 from Baghdad, July 23, informed the Department the IPC negotiators had left Baghdad that day for London. The Ambassador expected the proposed oil agreement to be approved by the Iraq Council of Ministers the following day, and he reported the terms of the agreement were believed to be the most favorable in the world. (887.2553/7–2351)

Despatch 155 from Baghdad, August 14, reported the Iraq Council of Ministers had approved an agreement with the Iraq Petroleum Company and enclosed the text of an official government communiqué announcing that fact. The agreement, which would become effective after ratification by the Iraq Parliament, was to be retroactive to January 1, 1951. (887.2553/8–1451) Telegram 159 from Baghdad, however, advised the Department that the Prime Minister had not actually signed the letters covering the agreed proposals, and on August 23 he had made one major and three minor demands for the company to satisfy before he would sign. (887.2553/8–2451)

On September 17 the Prime Minister departed for London to reopen negotiations, and on September 20 the Minister of Economics and Director General of Economics joined him (despatch 288 from Baghdad, September 24, 887.2553/9-2451). Telegram 1535 from London, September 26, advised the Department that the Prime Minister and the company had come to an agreement on minimum payments and production, but the Prime Minister wanted assurances from the British Government that Iraq's sterling revenues would not be blocked. The British Foreign Office assured him the Government had no intention of blocking the sterling in question under normal circumstances, but he questioned the phrase "normal circumstances," and planned to consult his Council of Ministers on the matter. (837.2553/9-2651)

Telegram 1578 from London, October 1, advised Washington that the Iraq Minister of Economics had signed an exchange of letters covering the new agreement with the Iraq Petroleum Company on behalf of his government, without raising the question of sterling use (887.2553/10–151). Despatch 357 from Baghdad, October 15, enclosed a translation of a press conference held by the Prime Minister on October 9, in which he reported to the press on the signing of the new agreement. The despatch read, in part, "It would thus appear that the discussions concerning the proposed IPC agreement are now at last concluded, pending final drafting of the text of the agreement and its submission to Parliament for ratification." (887.2553/10–1551)

Despatch 561 from Baghdad, December 15, reported that the proposed oil agreement had not been sent to the Parliament and therefore could not be ratified until after the Parliament reconvened on January 10, 1952. The Embassy at that time anticipated ratification of the agreement when it was presented to the Parliament. (887.2553/12–1551) A number of previous communications from the Embassy had speculated that, although the agreement contained a clause giving Iraq the right to renegotiate the agreement if any neighboring country received a better contract for its oil, the Prime Minister was delaying ratification until he could see the end result of the negotiations between the Government of Iran and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. Despatch 589 from Baghdad, December 31, reported the Prime Minister had informed the local Iraq Petroleum Company representative that he would put the agreement before the Parliament on January 12. (887.2553/12–3151)

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Petroleum"

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington, July 27, 1951.] <sup>2</sup>

Subject: IPC Negotiations in Iraq

Participants: Mr. Charles Brewster, Socony

Mr. Thomas Kelly, Socony

Mr. Paul Anderson, Jersey

NE—Mr. Jones

NE—Mr. Funkhouser

NE-Mr. Barrow

NE—Mr. Kopper PED—Mr. Eakens

On July 27, 1951 Messrs. Brewster and Anderson discussed the IPC offer to the Iraq Government, the main points of which were:

(1) 50/50 profit-sharing before foreign taxation.

(2) Applicable to all three concessions in Iraq.

¹This memorandum of conversation was attachment B to a memorandum from Funkhouser to McGhee, dated October 12, concerning an appointment that afternoon with Ambassador Bonnet, who was expected to discuss the IPC Agreement, among other topics (McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Petroleum"). Attachment A was a copy of an airgram to Paris, not further identified and not found attached, and attachment C was a copy of telegram 1535 from London, September 26. For additional information on telegram 1535, see the editorial note, supra. ¹This memorandum of conversation was prepared on August 13.

(3) Minimum annual royalty never to be less than the value of 25% of the oil produced.

(4) One-eighth of the oil produced payable in kind.

(5) Payments retroactive to January 1, 1951 for IPC concession and January 1, 1952 for MPC and BPC concessions.

(6) If signed by Council of Ministers, agreement to be put immediately into effect.

(7) For payments to continue agreement must be ratified by May 1, 1952, otherwise reversion to present status.

(8) IMF rates used throughout.

(9) Production program of 22 million tons a year by January 1954 from IPC and MPC; 8 million tons a year by December 1955 from BPC.

Other points made included:

(1) New York officials did not know of reported letter exchange allowing the Iraq Government to reopen negotiations if outcome of Iranian problem resulted in more beneficial terms to Iran.

(2) Not known whether oil for the Iraq refinery would be over and above one-eighth now allowed.

(3) Unclear as to terms covering disposal of Iraq share of crude.

(4) IPC promised to step up completion date of 30-inch pipeline to April 1952, at which time 100,000 barrels a day would move through the pipeline. Use would be made of northern half of inoperative Haifa pipelines. Company felt that this move which cost the company $3,000,000 extra had been a help in the negotiations. The company has little concern over export licenses for steel pipe now since all but 60 miles, due in October and November were assured.

(5) IPC partners expect to go through involved reorganization establishing local subsidiaries be established in Iraq to buy crude oil at cost from IPC, to transport the oil to the Iraq border and to sell the oil at international prices back to IPC parents. The profits of this operation will be subject to an Iraqi income tax which will result in the 50/50 profit-sharing on all IPC operations within Iraq exclusively.

(6) IPC calculated its costs at 23 shillings per ton at this time, decreasing to 13 shillings per ton after the 30-inch line is opened. The selling price of crude over the same period is presently calculated at 94 shillings per ton, decreasing to 73 shillings per ton. 94 shillings minus 23 shillings equals 71 shillings or 66¢ a barrel. Thus, it appears that Iraq royalties will be greater than those in Saudi Arabia due primarily to greater benefits resulting from closer proximity to major markets. The profit on Saudi Arabian crude is determined on the basis of Persian Gulf prices or $1.43 whereas Iraq values its crude at $2.41 Sidon minus pipeline charges to Kirkuk. Saudi Arabian authorities can be expected to examine this price question closely.

(7) The view was expressed that the greatest asset in the new agreement would currently lie in its propaganda value, i.e. all major producing states in the world, Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iraq, had now been offered or adopted the Venezuelan 50/50 profitsharing formula. This could be used as a stabilizing platform for the concessions themselves and for the impact on opinion in Iran.

(8) All agreed that many things could prevent final ratification of the agreement, that the two years delay over the AIOC-Iran ministerial agreement in Iran might be paralleled, that events in Iran probably provided the chief determinant as to whether an Iraqi Government and/or Parliament could see their way clear to sign this agreement.

890.2553/8-2351: Circular airgram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

SECRET

Washington, August 23, 1951—8:10 a.m.

It would be useful for all Embassy officers to be well briefed on the status of oil company negotiations throughout the Middle East so that in their conversations with foreign nationals the broadest contribution to the realization of our objectives in oil can be made. The Department seeks inter alia (a) to defend oil company performance against further attack by Commies, xenophobes, etc., (b) to prevail on producing states to make optimum use of royalties. Objective (a) may be gained by stressing (b). The next phase in Middle East oil may well be increased efforts to get more than 50–50 or take over increased control of companies; attack may provide some defense against such developments. The following talking points may be useful in private conversations, particularly for officers who are not in close contact with oil developments:

(1) All major Middle East producing states have either been offered or have accepted the 50–50 "partnership" profit-sharing formula based on the highly lucrative petroleum laws of Venezuela. Venezuela as largest producing country in the world after the U.S.A. earns over $600,000,000 per year by this agreement. Aramco offered this formula to Saudi Arabia last year; SAG now earns well over $100,000,000 per annum on much smaller production. IPC has offered the Iraq Government this formula; with the completion of the 30-inch Mediterranean pipeline within the next eight months Iraq will similarly earn well over a $100,000,000 per year. The Kuwait Oil Company has offered the small and sparsely settled Sheikhdom of Kuwait the exceptional returns from this formula. If Iran would agree to such a profit-sharing arrangement, they could be expected to earn in the neighborhood of $200,000,000 per year.

(2) Middle East states have been carrying out an aggressive campaign to get more money out of foreign oil companies. This has resulted in driving foreign oil companies out of Egypt, Syria and temporarily Iran to the economic disadvantage and also apparently to the regret of the states themselves. Now that foreign oil companies are doing their part by making such large financial concessions, it remains to be seen what good will come from these huge revenues. Middle East states are faced with a great challenge: is this money to be used constructively to raise the standard of living throughout the Middle East and to minimize the incidence of poverty, disease, ignorance and despair and consequently the spread of Communism, revolution and political murder or will this money result in only benefit for the few as heretofore. Foreign oil operations make it possible, for example, for Kuwait to have one of the highest standards of living in the world since Kuwait will earn enough money to pay each Kuwaiti without working approximately $2.50 per day. Contribution of oil producing states to the welfare of all Arab states as well as their own welfare could be much greater, i.e., contributions to Arab Refugee relief, educational institutions, hospitals, etc. Performance to date has not been impressive.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This airgram was drafted by Funkhouser and cleared by Eakens, Dorsz, Meyer, Jones, and Roberts. It was repeated to Ankara, Athens, Tehran, Baghdad, Cairo, Jidda, Tel Aviv, Colombo, Kabul, Karachi, New Delhi, Amman, Beirut, Damascus, Izmir, Nicosia, Salonika, Istanbul, Aden, Basra, Haifa, Port Said, Alexandria, Dhahran, Jerusalem, Dacca, Bombay, Calcutta, Lahore, and Madras.

(3) The Department hopes that comparison of cents per barrel royalties can be generally avoided and the common and equitable principles of the 50–50 profit-sharing stressed instead. The uniformity of the 50–50 principle and its widespread adoption thus provides an opportunity for stability. While profits obviously will vary among the different oil producing states, these can be explained, for example, by transportation distance from major consuming areas. Thus Venezuela earns 65 to 85¢ per barrel, Iraq (proposed) 65 to 75¢ per barrel, Saudi Arabia 55 to 60¢ per barrel, Kuwait (proposed) 45 to 50¢ per barrel. These will vary from year to year and the sooner Middle Easterners can stop making this calculation the better. It is believed that few Venezuelans know the varying cents per barrel rates of return but rather know the gross income.

(4) In the major producing areas such as Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Iran, government leaders have to take the position that they are getting at least as good a deal as their neighbors and preferably better in order to forestall opposition to either existing or pending contracts. Officers at these posts should know of the particularly advantageous terms offered by the local oil concessionaire and should be prepared to stress them where appropriate. The Department, however, in its publicity and propaganda activities must, particularly in view of the Iranian situation, stress the similarity of the 50–50 profit-sharing arrangements adopted or being adopted by the major producing countries of the Middle East and Venezuela. This line will be kept out of Iraq and Kuwait insofar as possible in view of unfinished negotiations which might be adversely affected.

ACHESON

NE Files: Lot 58 D 332: "Saudi Arabian Boundaries"

Memorandum of Conversation, by Robert Sturgill of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] September 25, 1951.2

Subject: The August Conversations in London Between Prince Feisal and the British Foreign Office.

Participants: Aramco—J. Terry Duce, Executive Vice President

Judge Manley O. Hudson, Advisor on International Law

Richard Young, International Law Counsel

to SAG

George W. Ray, Jr., Legal Counsel

Donald Noble, Assistant Legal Counsel

OIR/GE-Sophia A. Saucerman

U/FW-Fred C. Taylor

PED-Robert H. Eakens

L/NEA—John Maktos

BNA—William L. Hamilton

NE-G. Lewis Jones

Richard Funkhouser

Fred H. Awalt

Robert Sturgill

Summary:

Mr. Jones opened the meeting by expressing the Department's gratification that so much progress was apparently made during the talks in London.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Ray said that he went to Taif July 7 to meet with Prince Feisal at which time Feisal requested copies of everything in great detail pertaining to the history of the boundary disputes. This material was prepared by Judge Hudson and George Rentz, and was delivered to His Royal Highness in Paris just prior to the London meeting.

Judge Hudson emphasized that neither he nor Mr. Young had ever asked the SAG to seek any particular boundary, but had merely provided the legal position on claims advanced by the SAG.

With reference to the island disputes, Judge Hudson said that two years ago he had suggested that the SAG place markers on all islands it claimed to substantiate its claim to them. He said that none of the islands involved, except Maqta, was previously claimed for Kuwait in the 1913 or 1923 international discussions. In 1949 4 and during the recent London conversations the British made further claims on these islands to include Farsi, Arabi, Kurain, Karan, Maqta, Harkus, Janah and Juraid. The UK receded from these claims one by one, however, until only Farsi remained, and no grounds for this claim were offered.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Attached to this memorandum of conversation were a translation of an agreed summary of the London talks, a British paper entitled "Anglo-Saudi Arabian Frontier Negotiations," dated August 17, and a memorandum on the division of the seabed between Bahrein and Saudi Arabia, presented by the British Delegation at the London talks on August 10.

&lt;sup>2</sup> This memorandum was prepared on September 28. <sup>3</sup> A Saudi Arabian Delegation, headed by Prince Faisal, and a British Delegation, headed by Herbert Morrison, met in London from August 8 to 24 to discuss boundary problems between Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, Bahrein, and the Trucial Shaikhdoms.

Shifting to the islands in dispute between Saudi Arabia and Bahrein, Judge Hudson said the British claimed both North and South Bainah, whereas the SAG offered to split 50–50 on the two islands based on proximity, the SAG to take North and Bahrein to take South Bainah. With regard to the shoals, the Judge stated that the British ignored the logic of proximity by claiming Fasht Abu Saafa because a possible oil structure existed in the area, and offered Rennie Shoals to Saudi Arabia.

At this point Mr. Young described the British and SAG methods of establishing a median line. The British line is predicated upon a prior delimitation of territorial waters. The Saudis offered a more direct and practical method which involved drawing straight lines from the nearest opposite points in the two territories where sovereignty was not disputed. The mid-points of these lateral lines were then joined in a series of straight line segments which formed the proposed median line. Little variation occurred between the lines determined by these two methods, but the Saudi Arabian proposal had the double advantage of following straight rather than curved lines and could be determined on the basis of points not in dispute.

Mr. Young said Prince Feisal had not wanted Judge Hudson or Saba Habasha Pasha with him. Rentz went along to translate and he (Young) participated only because he happened to be in London on other business and was asked to do so. He said it was his impression that the SAG was much more familiar with the problem than the British and that Feisal's attitude was constructive and moderate while the British were rather pedestrian and unimaginative. But both sides seemed to have a disposition to settle. He also said the water boundary between the Kuwait Neutral Zone and Saudi Arabia was mentioned by the British but was not discussed. Similarly, division of the Kuwait Neutral Zone was suggested by the British as advisable, but no conversations on the subject were conducted.

With reference to land boundaries, Judge Hudson said the British emphasized the importance of sedentary peoples in establishing the boundaries, taking no account of nomadic peoples. They failed to consider that the tribes are both nomadic and sedentary at different seasons. The Saudis, the Judge said, proposed a meeting with the ruling Sheikhs, including both those in special treaty relations with the British and those who are not. He said Prince Feisal insisted that rulers, not deputies, attend. It was observed that it would be unfortunate if participation were not more flexible, for it is not unlikely that some of the rulers could not attend for perfectly good reasons. Judge Hudson said Feisal was hopeful the conferences could be held in January or February, and the British agreed in principle to the meeting. The Judge pointed out that the Fact-Finding Commission might be retained as an adjunct to the conference. The Saudis also proposed that all activities in the areas in dispute be suspended. There was also tacit agreement that the Persian Gulf median line not be discussed because this would raise too many other problems. Judge Hudson also observed that all fishing, pearling, and navigation rights would be preserved on shoals, islands, and submarine areas.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on 1949 negotiations between Saudi Arabia and the British, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vr. pp. 91 ff.

886D.2553/10-451

The Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) to the General Counsel, Department of the Treasury (Lynch)

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, October 4, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Lynch: Although I can in no way comment on the tax features involved in the Gulf Oil Corporation's reorganization of their interest in the Kuwait Oil Company or in the plans of the Kuwait Oil Company to give the Sheikh of Kuwait a 50/50 profit-sharing arrangement, I am glad to submit the following observations arising out of our Middle East policies:

First, the Department of State has generally followed a policy of encouraging American corporations to operate directly in the Middle East area rather than through subsidiaries in third countries. This latter method of operation results in a weakening of United States influence over American interests in the area of operations. While certain undesirable features of Gulf's present contracts with the British Government and interests remain unchanged in the proposed reorganization, the Gulf proposals do envisage the establishment of a direct American ownership of one-half of the assets in the Kuwait concession. Through this reorganization the Company also hopes to protect itself against the possibility of any eventual nationalization of the British oil industry.

Secondly, the stability of oil concessionary arrangements with Middle Eastern states has a direct effect on the stability of the area and the total United States national interest in the area. As you know, developments in Iran have had a seriously disrupting effect on the Middle East oil situation. The Arabian-American Oil Company avoided similar frictions in Saudi Arabia by offering a 50/50 profit-sharing arrangement which followed the concessionary pattern existing in Venezuela. Similar terms have now been offered to Iraq and Kuwait, two areas of vast oil resources and of great interest to the United States. The Department has felt that the establishment of equitable and comparable arrangements in the major producing oil areas of the Middle East would have a beneficial effect on the overall stability of the area. Contrariwise, the prevention of the adoption of such arrangements could, particularly at this time, have an unstabilizing effect on Middle East oil concessions and on our national interest in the area. In so far as this reorganization makes practicable a 50/50 offer by the Kuwait Oil Company, it does contribute to the above policy objectives.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE C. McGHEE

886D.2553/10-2551

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury (Snyder)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, October 25, 1951.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I would like to present for your consideration the Department's position regarding the Kuwait Oil Company's concession contract renegotiation with the Sheikh of Kuwait and its implications on United States foreign policy objectives in the area.

Some 46 billion barrels of oil or half of the world's oil resources lie in the Persian Gulf area. These oil resources are essential to the Western world. Retention and use of a part of this oil is vital to the national security of the United States. The stability of concession contracts in the area are consequently of paramount interest to the State Department and essential to the stability of the Middle East as a whole.

¹This letter was drafted by Funkhouser on October 24 and cleared by McGhee, Jones, and Eakens. It was attached to a memorandum from McGhee to the Secretary of State, dated October 24, recommending that the Secretary sign the letter. The memorandum advised the Secretary that the Treasury Department considered the Department of State letter of October 4 indicated no important interest in the Gulf problem and had suggested that if the Department of State had a position it felt Treasury should take into consideration it should submit that position in a new letter. The closing paragraph of the memorandum read: "It seems obvious that Treasury wants State to take responsibility for any positive decision to Gulf. They refuse to say how soon they will take this decision or what the decision will be without any representations from State. Whereas we cannot tell them what decision to make, we can and should make clear our position that they should make up their minds one way or the other immediately, and the attached letter has been prepared for that purpose."

Developments in Iran have had a seriously disrupting effect on the Middle East oil situation. The Arabian American Oil Company avoided similar frictions in Saudi Arabia by offering a 50/50 profit-sharing arrangement which followed a concessionary pattern existing in Venezuela. Similar terms have now been accepted by the Iraq Council of Ministers. By reorganizing its Kuwait interests under direct American ownership, Gulf Exploration Company would be placed on a similar basis to the companies operating in Saudi Arabia and Iraq in regard to its ability to offer a 50/50 arrangement to Kuwait. I attach great importance to the earliest possible decision by the Treasury Department on this reorganization issue.

It has been estimated that the Sheikhdom of Kuwait contains the largest proven oil reserves in the Persian Gulf. The Burghan Field is considered the largest oil field in the world. Reorganization would give the Gulf Exploration Company a direct rather than indirect interest in these immense oil resources. The Department strongly favors this direct interest. There is only one American oil company producing oil in the whole Persian Gulf region. A direct Gulf interest in Kuwait would mean that 70% of current production of the Middle East would be subject to direct American ownership. Even if Iran were producing at full capacity, American interests would with such reorganization of Gulf interests directly own well over half of Middle East production. By direct ownership the attainment of overall United States foreign policy objectives as well as the removal of certain disadvantageous aspects of the present contract could be better effected. These disadvantageous aspects now include possibility of negotiation of industry by the British Government, pre-emptive purchase rights by the British Government, and restrictive trade arrangement written into the 1933 contract. As you know, the State Department is largely responsible for overcoming original British objections to even indirect American company participation in Kuwait oil development and for most recently securing for Gulf Exploration Company British permission to have a direct American interest in the concession.

I understand the top ranking officials of the Gulf Exploration Company have been in London many weeks awaiting a decision from the Treasury Department on their reorganization application. The earliest possible decision regarding Gulf's application for reorganization would contribute to the resolution of our Middle East oil problems. This is particularly desirable at this time.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. WEBB

NE Files: Lot 57 D 177: "Saudi Arabia, Aramco"

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] October 29, 1951.

Mr. Ohliger has been called back to New York by Aramco to discuss the "recent and drastic" demands by the SAG on the company, the quote being Aramco wording. He and Mr. Duce will undoubtedly wish to review with you <sup>1</sup> the various points raised which may be as follow:

- 1. About February of this year the Saudi Arabian Ambassador stated that if US corporate taxes were raised, the SAG would wish to revise its Aramco agreement so that the Government would not have to share the tax increase out of its profits. The tax increase has now been passed and Aramco is presumably considering some modification in the profit split to meet SAG requirements.
- 2. On August 10 the King went into a tirade with Ambassador Hare re Aramco shortcomings and an alleged insult. Mr. Ohliger went to Riyadh the following week to discuss these issues which were largely emotional but were basically involved in the SAG need for more ready cash. Aramco accounts are normally paid several months behind actual production and the King asked Mr. Moore for a statement of the outstanding amount. The need for cash became increasingly urgent before Mr. Moore had returned to New York to act on the King's request. The King's explosion followed and prompted expeditious action from Aramco which produced a statement and arranged for an advance in funds from Chase National Bank of $25,000,000 at $5,000,000 per month.
- 3. On October 18 Sheikh Abdullah Suleiman objected to royalty payments in sterling in excess of 25 percent. The October sterling payment was 37 percent. Aramco understood the 25 percent maximum applied only to the last half of 1950, but Sheikh Abdullah considers it indefinite. Aramco also says that the SAG is receiving no more actual sterling than before, but that the increase in percentage is due to the reduction in the gold sovereign royalty rate from $12 to $8.25.
- 4. The SAG is dissatisfied with the need of Aramco for referring important decisions to New York. It wants responsible authorities able to make decisions right on the spot.
- 5. In order to be sure it is getting its full 50 percent cut, the SAG wants price information.

&lt;sup>1</sup>The Aramco officers met with McGhee the following day; memorandum of conversation of the October 30 meeting, infra.

6. Prince Faisal wants Aramco to surrender its concession lying west of the Dahana. Presumably he wishes to give some other firm a concession in that area (possibly Alireza) which is not being utilized by Aramco. It will probably be difficult—and inadvisable—for Aramco to avoid turning back this area if it is not going to develop it in the near future.

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Petroleum"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Arabian Peninsula Affairs (Awalt) and Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, October 30, 1951.1

Participants:

Mr. Terry Duce, Executive Vice President, Aramco Mr. Floyd Ohliger, Vice President in Charge of Government Liaison in Arabia, Aramco

Col. Eddy, Special Consultant, Aramco

NEA—Mr. McGhee
NE—Mr. Kopper
Mr. Funkhouser

Mr. Awalt

Summary:

Mr. McGhee expressed his pleasure at seeing Mr. Ohliger back again and hoped that his presence did not mean that there were grave developments in Arabia. Mr. Ohliger said that there were several issues raised recently by the Minister of Finance but that the problem which he thought most important of all had not yet become a demand on the part of the SAG. This, he said, was the growing interest among Saudi Arabs of purchasing stock in Aramco. This was true not only of wealthy merchants but also of some of the royal family including the Crown Prince who wished to invest money for his sons so that they could be financially independent of Government revenues in the future. The Company had suggested, Mr. Ohliger said, that they might invest in the parent companies but this was not acceptable to Saudi Arabs, first because they had less interest in investing abroad than in putting their money in Saudi Arabia, and second because investment in the parent companies would subject them to payment of a thirty percent income tax in the United States. Mr. Duce thought the urge to invest in home industry could be converted to development of satellite industries such as a fertilizer plant, lamp black industry, cement plant and ceramics which could be established in connection with the petroleum industry.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This memorandum was drafted during the period October 31-November 2.

Mr. Ohliger was asked what objection there was to allowing Saudi Arabs to invest in Aramco itself. Mr. Ohliger replied that the sale of stock would offer the possibility of some of it getting into the hands of Jewish investors which would be objectionable to the SAG. He admitted, however, that it would be possible to control initial sales and to restrict transfer of stock by purchasers in such a way as to avoid Jewish investment. The real reason, it developed for Aramco objection to sale of stock was that there was only $11,000,000 of stock outstanding while the value of the firm exclusive of the oil reserves was substantially in excess of this amount. Consequently, any change in its stock position might require revaluation and subject the company to a very heavy capital gains tax.

Mr. McGhee asked whether there was likely to be any impact in Saudi Arabia of the firm's liability to US taxation. Mr. Ohliger replied that there was none as yet but if taxes the company pays the Saudi Arabian Government are determined to be not deductible from US income tax, the SAG would undoubtedly crack down and insist that Aramco be made a Saudi Arabian corporation which would mean that no income tax would be payable in the US at all.

Mr. Ohliger said that there seemed to be developing in Saudi Arabia an urge to have a Saudi Arabian on the Aramco Board of Directors. This was prompted, he said, more by considerations of prestige than by any expectation that such a member could make an important contribution to their deliberations. Mr. McGhee asked why it would not be a good idea to appoint someone because of the good will which will undoubtedly arise from it. Mr. Ohliger disagreed saving that it would only enhance the prestige of the individual and not of the country generally. Mr. McGhee inquired whether the people of Saudi Arabia were generally satisfied with Aramco, Mr. Ohliger said that he was quite sure that such was the case although there was a considerable disappointment in the present loose control the King maintained over the country and his court. He added that these views were representative of about 25 percent of the population who were the more alert and substantial section of the population. He said that for the most part people were satisfied with the prospect of Crown Prince Saud succeeding to the throne. He stated that Aramco would have no difficulty in surviving the transition period when succession occurred even, he added, a forceful one if Saud's succession is contested and if the event occurs in the next year or two. He could not guess what circumstances might prevail beyond that period.

Another demand made by the SAG, Mr. Ohliger said, was that the company relinquish the Dahana area from its concession. He expressed the firm belief that this request which emanated from Prince Faisal was prompted by pressure on the Prince from other interests who coveted the area for a separate oil concession. He suggested that these interests might be the Australian, Mr. Cotton, who spent several months in Arabian waters on his yacht the early part of this year, or the influential Alireza merchant family of Saudi Arabia. Prince Faisal had made the request, he said, on the grounds of the special religious importance of the Dahana area which could not admit non-Muslem enterprise there. Mr. Ohliger said the area had no religious significance whatsoever and the reason advanced was merely a pretext. The company had, therefore, refused the request of Prince Faisal and stated that it would give up areas in its concession only in accordance with the terms of the relinquishment program envisaged in the concession agreement. In this connection Mr. Ohliger said it was interesting to have learned (although he cautioned that no word of this should get back to Saudi Arabs because Aramco was not supposed to have the information) that Sheikh Abdullah Suleiman wrote to the King a week ago suggesting that all areas of Saudi Arabia outside the Aramco concession should be made over to British oil interests since the British had lost so much in Iran. Mr. McGhee expressed surprise that Sheikh Abdullah should be so considerate of British losses and so willing to assist them in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. McGhee inquired whether nationalization of oil in Iran would be likely to embarrass Aramco in Saudi Arabia. Mr. Ohliger replied that it could not do so for if Saudi Arabia wanted to nationalize, they would be glad to hand it over tomorrow and work out an arrangement with the Government for the operation of the company. The biggest ace in the hole for the company in such an event, he said, would be the necessity of the Government assuming the responsibility for operating costs which he said were running at the rate of $150,000,000 a year at present. Under the circumstances, he expressed his confidence that the company could work out an equitable agreement even under the cloak of nationalization. Mr. McGhee left to attend another meeting but remarked that he hoped that the outcome of conversations being conducted with Mr. Mossadegh would not embarrass Aramco.

The rest of the meeting was spent discussing (a) the $1.43 discount price and its effect on SAG-Aramco relations, (b) the possibility of accelerating the Aramco relinquishment program in order to satisfy SAG demands for new concession areas, (c) SAG demands that Aramco's Jidda office be given more authority, and (d) precedents involving participation of local government and private investors in oil companies. Re (a) Aramco representatives stated that SAG had neither been told nor prevented from knowing that Aramco calculated its profit-sharing on a basis of $1.43 rather than the posted price of $1.75. Mr. Ohliger added that SAG was now asking for price information, that they would undoubtedly notice the price difference but that Aramco could explain this difference satisfactorily on the basis of customary discounts for long-term contracts. He admitted it might be more difficult to explain the fact that Aramco parents immediately sold the same oil for $1.75. Re (b) Mr. Duce repeated that the relinquishment program would not be speeded up but would follow the terms of the concession agreement. He added, moreover, that faster exploitation of unused areas could not be accomplished because of the supply problems involved, but agreed that the company might remain under attack for monopolizing so much of undeveloped Saudi Arabia. Re (c) Mr. Duce stated that this problem could probably not be resolved in view of the necessity of clearing important decisions with the four parent companies. Re (d) Mr. Ohliger stated that the Pacific-Western and Aminoil precedents had had no influence on local demand for stock participation in Aramco in that only private investors were involved. Mr. Eddy agreed that the incentive for local participation in oil operations would be difficult to divert to other industries and that the good effects of such industrial development might arrive too late to be of much help to Aramco in any short-run difficulties. Mr. Duce discussed the Venezuelan situation in which the Gomez family and their friends drew considerable personal profit from oil operations only to end up fleeing the country at the dictator's death and the subsequent internal disturbances.

887.2553/11-2351

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard Funkhouser of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, November 23, 1951.

Subject: New IPC Agreement with Iraq

Participants:

Mr. C. S. Brewster, Socony Vacuum Oil Company Mr. Paul Anderson, Standard Oil Company (New Jersev)

Mr. Thomas Kelly, Socony Vacuum Oil Company

NEA-Mr. A. F. Lager

NE-Mr. Kopper

NE-Mr. Gnade

NE-Mr. Funkhouser

PED-Mr. Eakens

Mr. Brewster reviewed developments surrounding the September and October negotiations with the Iraqi officials in London. He described the long hours of work required of the lawyers representing the five groups; he mentioned that the Iraqis showed complete cooperation during the negotiations; he stated that their only preoccupation was to remove points from the new contract which would be seized on with profit by the opposition and to develop phraseology which could be translated comprehensibly into Arabic. Mr. Gibson, IPC General Manager, was the official IPC negotiator whenever Nuri was involved; with Pachachi and Mahmoud, Herridge and Lawson of IPC handled the negotiations. Various representatives of the different groups were brought in when specific problems arose. Herridge and certain IPC lawyers were back in Baghdad putting the legislation, contracts and translations into final shape for the reopening of the Majlis in December. They would remain on hand to answer questions during the debates. Nuri was quoted as being confident of early ratification.

Mr. Brewster stated that the IPC agreement consisted of the original agreement, amendments to the original agreement and a new agreement. He stated that there was no agreement with regard to the passage of the necessary income tax legislation. Whereas the companies desired an income tax passed before the new agreement was ratified, the Iraqis claimed that the opposition would prevent them from passing such legislation without having first debated the merits and demerits of the agreements for which the income taxes were intended. The company was proceeding on the assumption that the tax law had been passed. It developed that IPC would pay its income tax on a current basis. This differed from the Aramco case in Saudi Arabia and was likely to give Aramco trouble.

The company tried to tie the contract to IMF rates but settled on making the contract a sterling agreement in which they were free to deal at prevailing sterling rates. The Iraqis wished to have their sterling payments made only in Baghdad. An agreement was worked out allowing the company to pay pounds to an Iraqi account in London or supply Baghdad banks with London bankers' drafts. The Iraqis tried to get a commitment from the British Government to the effect that the U.K. would never block Iraqi sterling balances as was done in the case of Iran. The U.K. Government was unable to make this guarantee but a compromise was reached with the U.K. Government guaranteeing that sterling involved in oil development would not be blocked.

In case of disagreement over payments the agreement calls for a 90 day cooling off period before the Iraq Government is permitted to suspend shipments. It provides for an additional 90 days before the Iraq Government can cancel the contract. These clauses can only be invoked upon failure of the company to make proper monetary payments. Failure of the company to fulfill any other obligations is not involved in oil suspension or contract cancellation clauses.

To implement the new agreement Socony is forming four subsidiary companies, one U.S. and one U.K. company each with subsidiaries in Iraq. Each of the other partners in IPC will form at least one Iraq subsidiary each; the Iraqi subsidiaries are required in order to take advantage of the income tax route. The U.K. subsidiaries will handle oil trade within the sterling area; the U.S. subsidiaries all other trade. For example, Socony will assign its assets in the Near East Development Company to a new 100% subsidiary, Socony Overseas Supply Company. Socony Overseas Supply Company will have a British subsidiary, Standard Fuel Oil, Ltd. and an Iraq subsidiary as well. Standard Fuel Oil, Ltd. will also have an Iraq subsidiary for sterling area trade. The French on the other hand can avoid French taxation by forming a Moroccan subsidiary and its Iraq incorporated counterpart.

The Iraq subsidiaries of IPC partners will buy Iraq crude at the prevailing rate of "cost plus a shilling", carry the oil to the Iraq border where it will be sold back to the original company at world prices and a profit thus made. It will be on this profit that a 50/50 profit-sharing arrangement will be based. The details of this arrangement include the following points. (Principal details are given in Baghdad and CIA reports.)

Subsidiary No. 1 will deal in "rights" which will be assigned to it for nothing. These rights, which are to buy this oil at the cost of production (plus one shilling) plus transportation within Iraq, will be sold to subsidiary No. 2. The Iraq subsidiary will sell this oil back to subsidiary No. 1 at the Iraq border. This price will be $1.75, the Mediterranean posted price ($2.41) minus (67¢) transportation costs to the Iraq border and a long-term discount. Production and transportation costs in Iraq are estimated at approximately 24¢ leaving the company with a $1.50 profit which will be split 50/50 or 75¢ each. Both subsidiary No. 1 and subsidiary No. 2 will show a profit. (Estimated at 86% for subsidiary No. 2 and 14% for subsidiary No. 1.)

The total payments will be determined first by payments to Iraq of 25% of the value of Kirkuk and Mosul and 33½% of the value of Basra crude. The rest of the 50/50 will be made up by income tax. Iraq is free to take ½% of the oil produced from Iraq in kind and sell it as they desire or force the company to buy the oil without discount. The value of this crude will be posted prices. The profits shared will be made on the basis of a discount price for the company. For Basra oil this discount will be 90½ shillings posted price minus 78½ shillings per long ton (IPC price) or 32¢ per barrel. 32¢ per barrel has been worked out to conform with the 32¢ per barrel Aramco discount. The company argues that this discount follows the normal pattern of international oil trade in which companies merit cut prices for buying large quantities over long periods. The company states it has informed the Iraq Government of the details of this discount arrangement in order that no misunderstanding or accusations develop that the arrangement is not a true 50/50. The company realizes that this point may be a source of conflict in the future. Department officers pointed out at great length the dangers to be anticipated from this 60–40 profit division which went under the name of 50/50. It was mentioned that Venezuela does not allow such discounts. The companies state that in the earlier stages of their 50/50 agreement in Venezuela discounts were allowed.

Other points included: (1) Gulbenkian had caused no serious obstruction to date but was expected to demand that the other companies pay part of his income tax, since he had been accustomed to getting his oil at cost. (2) The company estimates that in 1953, 20¾ million tons will come from the IPC concession, 1¼ million tons from the Mosul areas, and 8 million tons from the Basra concession. The Mosul pipeline is being constructed now to K-2 where it will be tied into the "southern 12 inch line". (3) The minimum payments guarantee is such that if the price of crude oil drops from $2.41 to $1.90 the company will receive less than 50/50. (4) If the tax fails to bring the Iraq share to 50/50, a "make-up" payment will be added. It is anticipated that the "make-up" payment will be needed for 1950, 1951.

Mr. Anderson mentioned that the new agreement might have serious repercussions within the international oil business. He mentioned (a) that the Iraq royalty per barrel was considerably more favorable than any in the Middle East, (b) that IPC was paying income taxes on a current basis unlike Aramco in Saudi Arabia, (c) that price adjustments for gravity would result in two prices being posted in the Persian Gulf.

EGYPT

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN ANGLO-EGYPTIAN NEGOTI-ATIONS OVER THE FUTURE STATUS OF THE SUEZ CANAL ZONE AND THE SUDAN; CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES OVER EGYP-TIAN ABROGATION OF THE 1936 ANGLO-EGYPTIAN DEFENSE TREATY AND THE 1899 CONDOMINIUM AGREEMENT REGARDING THE SUDAN <sup>1</sup>

641.74/2-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

Cairo, February 12, 1951—2 p. m.

860. Review current status of Anglo-Egyptian negotiations with British Embassy reveals following salient points:

1. There is growing Egyptian uneasiness at delay in resumption of negotiations. This is being shown by both Egyptian Ambassador London and Egyptian FonMin.

2. Stevenson is having difficulty quieting this uneasiness and Salahed-Din has told him that Egyptians will face serious difficulties if negotiations not resumed by first week of March.

- 3. FonOff has told Stevenson that British proposals may differ from those that Bevin originally put forward to Egyptians,<sup>2</sup> and that Bevin has still to consider the new proposal which may take several weeks because of his illness.
- 4. Stevenson has not informed Egyptians delay this length in prospect but has pointed out to FonOff:

a. If proposal too much changed from original, Egyptians may well shy off from them;

- b. Something must be done to give Egyptians feeling that progress being made. He suggests early resumption sterling negotiations <sup>3</sup> if political negotiations must wait upon Bevin's recovery. Also that early resumption of certain arms shipments be considered.
- 5. Stevenson feels that Egyptians will never accept agreement on defense matters only, and suggests that FonOff authorize him to start discussions on Sudan. He has formulated certain proposals—which

<sup>1</sup> For previous documentation on these subjects, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 284 ff.

<sup>3</sup> For information concerning the sterling balance negotiations, see despatch

2190 from Cairo, March 16, p. 348.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 3884 from London, January 12, not printed, Ambassador Gifford reported, inter alia and without elaboration, "Bevin's suggestion for progressive withdrawal from Egypt" (641.74/1–1251).

are being reported by despatch.<sup>4</sup> Briefly these provide for exchange of notes between British and Egyptian Governments providing for earliest practicable "self-government" Sudan followed by self-determination by Sudanese as to form government they desire. Agreement might also provide for standing Anglo-Egyptian-Sudanese supervisory council to assist in putting into effect of agreed principles.

6. Stevenson realizes Egyptians may well refuse such proposals but believes such refusal should be made matter of record and would represent moral victory in that Egyptians would be put in position of rejecting principle of self-determination.

7. Current thinking British C.O.S. being included in despatch mentioned paragraph 5. Stevenson believes it would be unrealistic for British to put forth proposals which would provide for any effective British control of bases after 1956.

8. In my opinion Stevenson's concern at delays is much justified.

He cannot hold off Egyptians much longer.

CAFFERY

641.74/2-1351: Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

CAIRO, February 13, 1951.

No. 1942

Ref: Embtel 860 February 12, 1951 <sup>2</sup>

Subject: Current British thinking re Egyptian demands.

The reference telegram described briefly the current situation regarding Anglo-Egyptian negotiations. The following information supplements the reference telegram, and should be read in conjunction therewith.

The British Ambassador's proposals with regard to the Sudan (largely formulated by the Counselor of the British Embassy, J. Wardle-Smith, recently returned from a 6,000 mile trip of the Sudan) are as follows:

The British Government would propose a basic agreement (to be embodied in an exchange of notes). Three principles would be emphasized:

1. The need for close and friendly ties between all peoples of the Nile Valley (Wardle-Smith prefers that this specifically mention Egypt and Sudan, because Nile Valley includes other countries).

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

<sup>4</sup> No. 1942, infra.

Drafted by Counselor of Embassy George H. Mattison. Copy to London.

EGYPT 345

2. It would be agreed that the common aim of the British and Egyptian Governments was the establishment of self-government in the Sudan as soon as practicable. Thereafter, the Sudanese people would have the right to choose freely the form of government under which they desired to live.

3. The wide differences of race, religion and political development requires the closest cooperation between Egypt and Great Britain with the Sudanese.

If these principles were agreed to they would be embodied in an exchange of notes in which the Egyptians would state their views on what they thought the future of the Sudan should be. The British would reply welcoming that system or any other which the people of the Sudan might choose. (Wardle-Smith prefers the word accepting instead of welcoming and hopes to persuade his Ambassador in this sense.)

The agreement might also provide for a standing Anglo-Egyptian Sudanese Supervisory Council which would be established for the specific purpose of putting into effect the principles enumerated in the proposed exchange of notes.

The British Embassy feels that the Egyptians may not find these proposals acceptable. However, it believes that there would be a tactical advantage to having such refusal on record. It would give the British a good moral case as far as world opinion goes, in that the Egyptians would be on record against an arrangement providing for self-determination after the achievement of self-government.

This Embassy is in entire concurrence with the view taken by the British Ambassador, namely that Anglo-Egyptian negotiations cannot be concluded on the basis of a "defense" settlement alone. The Sudan has been far too much of a political issue in Egypt to be totally ignored in a prospective settlement of outstanding Anglo-Egyptian problems. There is a chance, however, that the British proposal outlined above, would prove acceptable. It is essentially a face-saving device for the Egyptians, as it gives very little away of the British position on the Sudan. Self-government must be established as soon as "practicable". The Sudanese would have the right to determine what form of government they desired. The crux of the matter might well rest on such variance of wording as "welcoming" versus "accepting" the Sudanese decision. The Egyptians might well regard the word "accepting" as a form of concomittent which would be sold to the Egyptian public.

The second part of this despatch deals with the current thinking of the British Chiefs of Staff, and what they propose recommending to Foreign Secretary Bevin. (Paragraph 7 of reference telegram)

The Chiefs of Staff have examined the prospect of a "temporary" base in Israel. They found that it would cost approximately 50 million pounds and 8 years to construct.

British Embassy comment: The British Treasury's objection to such a move would be acute, and the political disadvantage of the Egyptian reaction would be obvious.

The Chiefs of Staff think in terms of a phased evacuation, starting immediately, to be effectuated by 1956, with the gradual replacement of essential technical units by civilians (obviously army in civilian dress).

British Embassy comment: The Egyptian government would be ready to accept a certain number of "civilians" but not any really effective number.

The Chiefs of Staff propose that the base be leased from the Egyptians after 1956 for an agreed sum.

British Embassy comment: It would be impossible to negotiate an agreement with the Egyptians for the lease of practically the entire Canal area. Possibly workshop areas, and desert storage could be leased, but nothing as extensive as the area presently occupied by British forces.

The Chiefs of Staff propose that arrangements be concluded with the Egyptian government whereby the administrative control of the base after 1956 remain with the British government, but that the Egyptian government participate with the British government in the joint lease hold.

British Embassy comment: The Egyptian Government would be unlikely to agree to British administration of the base. As far as Egyptian participation in the joint lease hold, the British Embassy "hasn't a clue what the C.O.S. mean".

The Chiefs of Staff propose that the Egyptians be responsible for the policing of the base and that suitable indemnity be arranged for losses sustained from pilferage.

British Embassy comment: This is the height of an unrealistic approach. Admittedly the rate of pilferage is high now, and would be excessively high under Egyptian policing; but, to expect the Egyptian government to indemnify the British government for pilferage from a leased base reflects a total lack of appreciation of the realities of the local situation.

As can be seen from the comments of the British Embassy it did not look with favor on the Chiefs of Staff proposals. The British Ambassador, as indicated in Para 7 of the reference telegram, has expressed the opinion that it would be unrealistic for the British to consider occupation of the base after 1956. Stevenson advocates plans for the progressive evacuation of the Canal area to be completed by 1956. Whatever rights (if any) of reoccupation in the event of war which may be secured will be to the British advantage. To a large extent the effectiveness of such reoccupation rights will depend on the extent to which the concept of "joint defense" is developed. In this connection Stevenson feels that the British are not in a position to talk "joint defense" as long as they are withholding certain essential arms shipments from the Egyptians. The withholding of such shipments implies lack of faith in the possibility of joint defense arrangements and also gives rise to justifiable suspicions of political pressure among Egyptians. This is particularly unfortunate among certain elements of the Egyptian armed forces who have been British trained and are basically friendly. They see, for instance, planes grounded for lack of spare parts and other equipment immobilized through the British embargo.

EGYPT 347

Stevenson recommends certain steps be taken to alleviate this situation. The 208th Squadron (R.A.F.) is about to be converted to jets. The Spitfires which comprise this squadron are now slated for shipment to either India or Pakistan. The Egyptians are anxious for these, and the British Ambassador believes that they should have them. The knowledge that these had been disposed of elsewhere would certainly cause ill feeling. There is also an outstanding question of 20 Bailiol trainers. The British Embassy believes that these should also be delivered. Shipment of certain Meteor jets previously processed for delivery should be allowed.

The British Embassy has yet received no reply to its comments and suggestions to the Foreign Office. Aside from the ever difficult attitude of the Egyptians, it is obvious that Stevenson is worried about the somewhat unrealistic approach of the British Chiefs of Staff to the problem. He also feels that the Foreign Office may be banking too heavily on the previous success of stalling tactics. With these views, this Embassy is in entire concurrence. It is at least a minor miracle that serious disturbances have not already occurred over the long protracted negotiations.<sup>3</sup>

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

Editorial Note

Assistant Secretary of State McGhee visited Cairo on February 22–23, 1951 en route from the Middle East Chiefs of Mission meeting at

&lt;sup>3</sup> In despatch 2042 from Cairo, February 27, Caffery reported, inter alia, that British Ambassador Stevenson had informed him "The British Chiefs of Staff seem to be coming around to a more realistic view of the negotiations with the Egyptians over base rights in the Suez area. Their thinking now tends towards a staged evacuation until 1956, with leasing of base rights thereafter. An annual rental figure of L.E. 2,000,000 is being considered." Caffery added that it was the British hope that these proposals would receive final Cabinet approval by the middle of March and that then the British Ambassador would be in a position to resume negotiations with the Egyptian Government. (641.74/2–2751)

Istanbul, February 14-21, to the South Asian Conference of Diplomatic and Consular Officers at Eliya Nuwara, Ceylon, February 26-March 2. Because of the brevity of his visit, McGhee held only one meeting with Egyptian Minister of Foreign Affairs Salaheddin Bey who "was so much more interested in talking about Egyptian grievances in general and about Anglo-Egyptian negotiations in particular, and to a lesser degree about the Palestine problem, that Mr. McGhee had little opportunity to talk about the Istanbul Conference." With respect to Palestine, Salaheddin "brought out nothing new." With regard to Anglo-Egyptian negotiations, he warned McGhee of waning optimism and "emphasized that in case the negotiations failed he would be faced with a very difficult internal situation." McGhee expressed the opinion that the negotiations would eventually be satisfactorily concluded. (Despatch 2027 from Cairo, February 26,  $110.15~\mathrm{McG/2-2651})$  McGhee also held a press conference on the afternoon of February 22 at the USIE auditorium in Cairo, a transcript of which is in file 110.15 McG/4-351. McGhee and his party departed Cairo at 4:30 a.m. on February 23 for Bombay.

McGhee subsequently revisited Cairo at the end of March on his way to London and Washington, and a summary of his conversations with Egyptian officials were transmitted in telegram 1001, priority, from Cairo, April 1, page 352. A partial itinerary of McGhee's tour through the Near East in February and March 1951 may be found in the editorial note, page 49.

874.10/3-1651: Despatch

 $The \ Ambassador \ in \ Egypt \ (Caffery) \ to \ the \ Department \ of \ State$

CONFIDENTIAL

CAIRO, March 16, 1951.

No. 2190

Ref: Embtel 938 of Mar. 12, 1951 and Embtel 942 of Mar. 13, 1951 Cairo Despatch 1766 of Jan. 26, 1951

Subject: Long-term Settlement of Anglo-Egyptian Financial Negotiations

Mr. Leonard Waight, U.K. Treasury Representative in the Middle East, and Serag el Din Pasha, Egyptian Minister of Finance, signed a letter of understanding on March 11, 1951, signifying that agreement in principle has been reached on a long-term settlement of Egypt's sterling balances. The settlement was announced in a press communiqué issued jointly in Cairo and London on March 15. The actual terms of the new agreement are now being drafted and it will probably be signed by the end of this month or early in April.

&lt;sup>1</sup> None printed.

EGYPT 349

The agreement in principle includes the following points:

(1) Under the arrangements now concluded, Egypt and the United Kingdom mutually consent to consider £80 million as minimum sterling held in the blocked (or Number 2) account at the end of the period of releases; the remaining £150 million of the present holdings (approximately £230 million) in the blocked account will be subject to release;

(2) £25 million will be released immediately following the signing of the agreement; of this sum £14 million will be converted into dollars;

(3) Thereafter, £ 10 million will be released every year for 9 years beginning January 1, 1952.

(4) There will be additional releases commenced in 1951 of £5 million per annum up to a total of £35 million whenever Egypt's sterling holdings in the No. 1 account fall below £45 million.

(5) If at the end of the ten-year period all or part of the £35 million has not been transferred from the Number 2 to the Number 1 account, Great Britain will make annual releases of £10 million, with final release of £ 5 million on July 1, 1963;

(6) The U.K. undertakes to facilitate the supply of petroleum products (excluding dollar lubricants) to Egypt against payment in No. 1 account sterling up to a total of £11 million per annum c.i.f. for 10 years, commencing in 1951.

It will be noted that the settlement represents considerable concessions by both countries from their respective positions of a month ago, which were outlined in Cairo Despatch 1766. Under the circumstances most favorable to the Egyptians, total releases will be completed by January 1, 1960; under circumstances least favorable to Egypt, or in the event of no utilization of the automatic replenishment provision because the No. 1 account total does not fall below £45 million during the life of the agreement, total releases will be completed by July 1, 1963. The U.K. Treasury has provided assurances that the £80 million, which will remain in the No. 2 account after all releases have been made, will not be scaled down unilaterally at any time during the period of the new agreement. Britain also agrees to initiate discussions on settlement of the sterling remaining in the blocked account prior to the termination of the agreement.

Thus, the long-term settlement of the Anglo-Egyptian financial negotiations may be summarized as follows:

	${f \pounds}$ million
Currently blocked sterling (#2 account)	230
Blocked sterling at end of period covered by agreement	80
Total releases from #2 to #1 accounts during term of agreement	150

Releases from #2 to #1 accounts	£ million
Immediate release	25
Of this sum convertible into dollars	14
Annual fixed release, beginning January 1, 1952	10
Automatic replenishment of #1 account whenever it falls below £ 45 million:
annually up to or maximum of	5
or maximum of	35
Period of releases 10–13½ years
U.K. undertakes to facilitate Egypt's imports of petroleum products annually, up to	11

Begin confidential section The successful conclusion of a longterm settlement of Egypt's sterling balances obviates the need for protracted yearly negotiations on the matter of releases and should help the Egyptian Government in financially programming many necessary developmental projects. The outright conversion of £14 million (nearly $40 million) will be a substantial increment to Egypt's currently favorable hard currency position. Furthermore, the undertaking by the United Kingdom to facilitate Egypt's imports of petroleum products (e.g., kerosene, gas, diesel oil, lubricants from sterling sources, etc.) up to a total of £ 11 million annually through 1960 should result in considerable savings in dollar terms for Egypt, inasmuch as Egypt's imports of petroleum products in recent years have been paid for largely with dollars; under the yearly arrangements for 1949 and 1950, the United Kingdom undertook to supply Egypt with petroleum products from sterling area sources up to £5.0 million and £7.5 million, respectively. While the dollar content of petroleum products which Egypt obtains under the terms of this agreement will presumably decrease, Mr. Waight estimates that the average dollar costs borne by the United Kingdom for such products supplied to Egypt will approximate £ 6.5 million annually. In effect, therefore, the United Kingdom may provide Egypt with dollars and dollar products amounting to approximately $220 million during the next ten years. (End confidential)

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

641.74/3-2851: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, March 28, 1951—noon.

5100. We understand full Cab will probably on April 2 consider Egyptian defense proposals drawn up by JCS with advice of

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

EGYPT 351

Stevenson and Fon Off. (We have been unable obtain substance these proposals but suspect they are along lines Cairo despatch 2042, Feb 27.2) Stevenson meanwhile postponing return Cairo.3 Head Fon Off African Dept tends feel Cab will either approve proposals substantially as drafted or drop them altogether as he thinks it unlikely it will feel competent temper with plan which represents much hard work and careful consideration by JCS and top Fon Off officials. Fon Off officials feel Morrison appreciates international implication of problem and note that Bevin while now less influential will be able add his weight in constructive way. Also possibly significant is fact that Parliamentary critics of govt in sterling debate last week avoided specific reference defense negots and are certainly conscious govt's difficulties in dealing with Egypt on this question with all that is at stake for UK national interest.

At same time it is undeniable that Cabinet seriously concerned over obviously difficult Parliamentary situation and danger that further concessions to Egypt may be challenged. Apart from govt's anxiety over possibility of adverse vote is knowledge substantial criticism within Labor ranks of UK policy on Egypt. This is predicament which will have to be worded out by govt according to its own best lights.

Furthermore, Fon Off and Stevenson not at all sanguine Egypt wild accept offer. They fear already difficult situation wild be complicated by Egyptian insistence Sudans aspirations.

In above circumstances I do not believe it wld be wise or constructive for me at this time to approach Morrison as suggested Deptel 4344, Mar 23.4 We are, however, taking every appropriate occasion to stress at Fon Off Departmental level importance US attaches to early satisfactory defense settlement with Egypt. Will review situation with McGhee next Monday with view to determining what helpful further action we can take.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 3, p. 347.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Caffery had reported in telegram 927 from Cairo, March 9, that Stevenson "tells me he is leaving Sunday for London and hopes to see Bevin Monday. [British] Chiefs staff will consider Fayid [the British base in the Suez Canal Zone] business same afternoon and Bevin will probably take him before defense committee on Friday 16th and probably to Cabinet meeting on Monday 19th. Stevenson hopes return Cairo 21st." (641.74/3–951)

&#x27;Not printed; it reported the Department of State's concern that majority opinion in Parliament seemed clearly opposed to any further concessions to Egypt as reported in telegram 5043 from London of March 21 (641.7494/3-2151). It further stated that "While we appreciate difficult situation in which Brit Govt finds itself this time we consider settlement treaty problem with Egypt of urgent importance and earnestly hope there will be no recession from progressive position which UK understood to have adopted in recent months. Situation Iran is having serious repercussions Egypt and other ME countries and we believe it important agreement be reached with Egypt soonest possible, otherwise dangerous and explosive situation might well be created consequences of which wld be difficult counter." Ambassador Gifford was informed that at his own discretion he could "put above views informally to Morrison or anyone else in FonOff you believe appropriate." (641.7494/8-2351) Regarding the Anglo-Iranian dispute over nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, see p. 544.

GIFFORD

641.74/4-151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET PRIORITY

Cairo, April 1, 1951—7 p. m.

1001. Course long discussions McGhee and Egypt FonMin 2 reviewed Anglo-Egypt negots. Salaheddin said Egypt agrees receive Brit forces in Egypt during time of aggression against Brit, Egypt or adjacent countries, but cld not accept Brit forces in peace time. Salaheddin has insisted during negots that Brit evacuation take place within one year allowing what he termed adequate time for raising standards 10,000 Egypt combat troops plus 400 pilots as allowed by the treaty (or 20,000 if necessary) to take over defense job. Fayed to be maintained by Egyptians in good working order. Salaheddin said Bevin had agreed to principle of transfer responsibility but Egyptians concerned new Brit tune after Bevin turned over to Morrison seeming indicate going back on what Bevin agreed to. Egypt FonMin said Egypt had no concern Brit Parliamentary conditions. He said, "I did not speak to Mr. Bevin in his personal capacity but I spoke to him as Secy of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Kingdom". He insisted also Sudan problem inextricably bound with problem evacuation. Re Sudan FonMin stated he had agreed to two year transition period and that though Bevin tried separate questions Egypt cannot accept such separation and is determined agreement is conditional on both situations. He said "our attitude regarding this question is that we and our compatriots the Sudanese are agreed that the Sudan shld have its own govt and parliament in unity with Egypt represented by the Egypt crown for foreign policy, defense and currency and other matters which Egyptians and their compatriots the Sudanese may agree to".

McGhee explained US had not been, and not willing now become, party Anglo-Egypt negots though we had discussed and will continue to discuss problems with both in friendly vein. In this connection McGhee said US recognized (1) "You have certain legitimate nationalistic aspirations which your people feel very deeply about", (2) "The Brit have what they consider certain rights under the treaty and we believe that they have genuine desire to make a contribution to the solution of problem at hand"; and (3) "There is a consideration of defense of Middle East itself both for individual countries concerned and for defense of entire area. Defense of Middle East is an area problem, we have always felt". McGhee said US had welcomed news of progress in Anglo-Egypt negots and hoped retrogression not real. We appreciate Egypt patience, hope it will continue, but believe problems as Suez and Sudan shld not be linked; it is better to keep them separate. He promised discuss problems London.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London and the Arab capitals. <sup>2</sup> McGhee revisited Cairo at the end of March as part of his tour of the Near Eastern and South Asian regions discussed in editorial note, p. 49.

EGYPT 353

Salaheddin said, "I wld like assure you that we wld not limit ourselves to question at hand from the Egypt aspirations point of view by itself; we have looked at it, too, from Brit viewpoint, providing, of course, that they are within reasonable bounds from the point of view of Middle East defense. I think that the Middle East countries shld have the first right in the defense of their own territories but as to the Brit, all others come in as allies when war actually breaks out. This is the basis of what we offer the Brit. We also offered them that we undertake to maintain the base so that they may depend on it at the outbreak of war".

He said also, "There is no doubt that the final result will depend very much on the assistance that is given to these armies and on the economic assistance that is given to these people.

"To sum up, Egypt and the Arab countries, of whose tendencies I know quite a lot, are prepared to contribute their share in the general preparedness to face aggression to maintain peace and unity of the free nations of the world, but they insist that they shld have first say in their own territory and that the help and assistance of other countries comes secondary and when it is needed, but not to leave the whole burden of defense to other countries".

Also, "As to the question of separating the unity of Egypt and Sudan and question of evacuation it is improbable that the Egypt people will accept it in anyway".

Also, "If it is not possible to have these two questions settled on the basis of satisfying our national aspirations the Egypt people can not understand how we can side with the bloc which includes the Brit when they are violating our rights. On the contrary, the Egypt people will be more inclined to take a stand against Brit in defense of these rights".

Salaheddin said Egypt awaiting Brit Amb return from London, that if decision he brought not realization Egypt national aspirations no Egypt Govt cld continue talks as people wld demand stop to talks, and abrogation 1936 treaty and 1889 agreement. This cld only mean quarrel with Brit with no visible end. Salaheddin asked what McGhee cld do to avoid this. He said on his part he was prepared (though not having consulted PriMin or Cabinet) to increase evacuation period to 18 months and Sudanese transition period to three years.

McGhee said, "I accept this as a statement of your policy. Of course I recognize that it is subject to change in light of its submission to the Cabinet but I believe also the PriMin is likely to accept it as his view. We, I think, must deal with it as the views of the Egypt Govt; therefore we take it seriously and will give it every consideration".

Also, "Without any attempt to rebut Your Excellency's position, we wild like to give few comments.

"We entirely approve of the development of the indigenous defensive forces of the Middle East and feel that the Brit themselves fully accept that principle even though they may not appear to do so at times. One of the purposes of the tripartite declaration was to furnish the Middle East an opportunity to play a part in Middle East defenses. We took that decision in the face of considerable criticism in our own country. We took that position in order to make it clear that the furnishing of arms to Egypt for defense purposes was a good thing from the standpoint of our own foreign policy. In Istanbul we discussed the defense of the Middle East and we recognized there are many gaps which shld be filled and we as a govt approached such matters entirely from the standpoint of dealing with countries of the Middle East in the hope that they will maximize their own defense capabilities".

Also, "At Istanbul I felt that our real problem in the Middle East is a relatively short-ranged problem in that the principle danger of Soviet invasion is the relative weakness of the West. We are re-arming and assisting nations elsewhere to re-arm and feel that in a short period of time we will have more than fulfilled that purpose. There is a situation now which is a situation of war. We are fighting in Korea. The type of action which the Greeks knew recently was actually a shooting war and they know that this type of war short of localized action cld break out again. That is why we thought that this present time shld be considered as a state of internal emergency corresponding to a state of war. During that period every effort shld be made to maximize defense efforts. No matter how large an army the Egyptians able to build the Middle East also needs all other foreign troops which cld be brought in. I am certain that Brit realizes that troops in this area cld not be for a colonial type of regime as before but to defend the Middle East against Russia."

"I cannot believe any grievances against the Brit cld be considered even in the same light or aura as the menace which threatens the whole Middle East. And you have a new type of imperialism which demonEGYPT 355 strates itself to be worse than any imperialism the Brit imposed. You have seen what happens when this imperialism is imposed upon a friendly nation.

"I believe that Brit is extricating itself generally from the colonial type of govt. They have given up most of the countries in the world which they had under the old colonialism. I think that they find themselves in an awkward position of international emergency now. They see also all the interests of the Middle East and the friendly world threatened by Russian aggression".

Also, "Can say that in general I hope that the Brit position when it comes to you will find basis for discussion will lead to a settlement of the problem. I think you do realize the dangerous situation the Middle East wild be in if you found yourself in an impasse with Brit".

Also, "I hope you and the PriMin will agree that the leaders of great states shid not only lead but follow public opinion. Go as far as you can toward meeting their point of view and working out a solution which will be satisfactory to both. In light of what has happened in Iran, our govt wild greatly regret if some new drastic situation were brought about which wild bring up nationalist feelings which cld lead no where.

"We can assure you that we cld never revert to colonialism which the world has known in the past. We feel that this calls for an evolutionary type of action for nations who find themselves in a position which have a certain aura of colonialism".

Salaheddin accepted McGhee analogy threat Russian imperialism versus Brit but contended Egypt masses do not. He concluded by asking wthat US attitude wld be in case break between Egypt and Brit. McGhee replied, "cld not possibly answer that question at this time".

CAFFERY

788.00/4-1051

Memorandum of Informal United States-United Kingdom Discussions, in Connection With the Visit to London of The Honorable George C. McGhee, April 2-3, 1951 1

TOP SECRET

London, April 10, 1951.

Participants:

Foreign Office

R. J. Bowker, Assistant Under-Secretary of State

Roger Allen, Head, African Department

M. N. F. Stewart, Assistant Head, Department

D. V. Bendall, African Department

Sir Ralph Skrine Stevenson, British Ambassador to Egypt

U.S.A.

George C. McGhee, Department of State

James K. Penfield American Embassy, London

Mr. Bowker said the UK had been giving intensive thought to what new defense proposals it could offer Egypt. The results were now before the British Cabinet. It was not known when the Cabinet would be able to reach a decision but Ambassador Stevenson was planning to return to Cairo at the end of the week. Mr. Bowker asked that information about these proposals be treated in the strictest confidence. They consisted in substance of the following:

1. The phased withdrawal of all British troops and British headquarters between now and the termination of the present treaty in 1956;

2. A British-staffed civilian base thereafter under overall Anglo-

Egyptian control on the basis of a leasehold agreement;

3. An Air Defense Pact enabling HMG to keep RAF squadrons and ground defense organization in Egypt after 1956;

4. The right of re-entry into Egypt of British and allied forces in event of war.

In addition, the UK would propose to assist in the progressive build-up of the Egyptian armed forces, to whom the responsibility for internal defense and security would fall.

Mr. Bowker said that the UK realized that Egyptian insistence on linking the Sudan with the defense question gravely complicated the whole matter. The UK was ready to discuss the Sudan with Egypt but it was difficult to make the concessions that Egypt was demanding. There could be no question of entering into a bargain over the Sudan. The development of self-government and of national identity in the Sudan had already gone too far to permit any settlement which did not have the approval of the Sudanese, whom the British were convinced by and large were unwilling to accept Egyptian suzerainty.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Root. The source text was transmitted to the Department of State as enclosure 6 to despatch 4832 from London, April 10, not printed. For further information on McGhee's visit to London, April 2-3, see footnote 1, p. 104.

Mr. McGhee explained that the US did not want to become a party to the Egyptian problem. Our military officials agreed on the importance of the Suez base, however, and we had continued to support the British position on every occasion as strongly as we could. Recently, however, we thought we had detected some change in British thinking on the strategic problem.

Mr. McGhee said that on his recent visit to Cairo he had had several meetings with Salah El Din, the final one lasting for two and a half hours. The Egyptian Foreign Minister had insisted that Egypt must have agreement on a phased withdrawal to be completed within one year. Mr. McGhee thought there was some prospect that the Egyptians might extend this to eighteen months or at the maximum perhaps a little more. The Egyptians maintained that during the British withdrawal their own armed forces should be built up to take over the defense responsibility. Salah El Din had said that if hostilities broke out in any of the countries adjacent to Egypt, the British troops and their allies would be allowed to return. Salah El Din had also emphasized that there could be no decision without an agreement on the Sudan. He had acknowledged that the Sudanese should determine their future, but the Egyptian position was that this could not be done while the Sudan was under British control. The Egyptians, said Mr. McGhee, seemed to be convinced that the Sudanese would want to enter into some union with Egypt under the Egyptian Crown, with Egypt perhaps responsible for such matters as foreign affairs, defense and finance. The Egyptians looked on the UK position in the Sudan as one of aggression.

Mr. McGhee said that, in his discussions with Salah El Din, he had made a long and forceful plea stressing the opportunity open to the UK under its treaty with Egypt to contribute to the defense of Egypt in the present critical international situation and the importance of the British role in the defense of the Near East as a whole. He had explained that he understood the nationalist aspirations underlying the Egyptian position but that it should be recognized that British troops in the area were not there for the purpose of restoring any form or degree of colonialism but purely for safeguarding against aggression from without. Our belief was that all the factors involved in the negotiation between Egypt and the UK could be reconciled. We hoped that Egypt would not close the door to an agreement with Britain until at least it had studied the counterproposals we understood the British were preparing. In the judgment of the US (Mr. McGhee had told the Egyptians) we were in a state approximating war. There were already open hostilities in Korea and Iran was exposed to great danger. There was no evidence that Russia would not move into the Near East. Normal peacetime conditions did not prevail and the situation called for exceptional measures. During this critical period every effort should be made to build up the defensive forces in the Near Eastern countries, but nevertheless no matter how large an army the Egyptians might build, Egypt and the Near East would still need the assistance of foreign troops. It would be too late to look for outside help when the invader reached adjacent countries. The US was convinced there was no danger of any reversion to colonialism but rather that the real threat of imperialistic rule came from Russia.

Mr. McGhee said that he had also argued with Salah El Din that the stationing of British troops in the Canal Zone should not be linked with the problem of the Sudan. They were unrelated issues.

Mr. McGhee went on to impress on his British listeners that we considered the situation in the Near East so delicate that one more incident—an impasse between the UK and Egypt for example—could be extremely dangerous and was in fact unthinkable. For this reason he would strongly urge the UK to keep its position on an agreement with Egypt as flexible as possible and not take any final, irrevocable stand. He said that the British Chargé in Cairo had mentioned to him the desirability of sweetening any treaty arrangement with Egypt by obtaining an Egyptian concession on its present Suez Canal embargo. Mr. McGhee urged that these dissimilar problems not be related. He did not very well see how Egypt could back down from its present stand on the Suez Canal question so long as Iraq, foregoing great revenues, continued to maintain its embargo on the flow of oil through the pipeline to Haifa.

Mr. McGhee said he had been greatly impressed at the extent to which the Anglo-Egyptian dispute had become a political issue in Egypt and, indeed, throughout the whole of the Near East. Even Iraq and Jordan, which themselves had close relations with the UK, were sympathetic to Egypt, and there was a general desire throughout the Near Eastern countries to see the Egyptian position met. All this was a very unsettling influence. Along with the Iranian oil problem and Palestine issue, the Anglo-Egyptian dispute was one of the three major foci for dissatisfaction and unrest in the area.

Mr. McGhee said he had the impression that Egypt, by with-holding such essential supplies as labor and water, could render the British position in the Suez Canal Zone very difficult, if not untenable. It would be hard for the UK to justify retaliatory measures and of very doubtful wisdom to try to use force. He thought we must ask ourselves quite seriously whether the liability of political unrest throughout the Near East did not outweigh the military value of adhering to British treaty rights. An impasse with Egypt, he reiterated, could well nigh be fatal and he would again urge the UK to maintain a flexible attitude towards the Egyptian demands perhaps even with a view to meeting them. The critical period in the Near East would come during the next year-and-a-half to two years, while the West was building up its strength, and it was during this time that we must seek to hold the Near East together and to restore its confidence in its internal strength and security.

Mr. McGhee thought that an alternative to complete withdrawal might be the use of forces with some multilateral flavor. Salah El Din did not commit himself on this point but the Egyptians have in the past intimated that such an arrangement might be acceptable. Perhaps some UN complexion could be put on the situation. With the evolution of our own policy it might be possible for the US to play some part, possibly through assigning a US Deputy Commander under General Robertson. Complete withdrawal or some multilateral force seemed to be the only two possibilities. Mr. Bowker and Ambassador Stevenson indicated they were not sanguine about the prospect of Egyptian acceptance of a multinational force. The Egyptian position with them had been that no foreign forces could be stationed on Egyptian soil.

Mr. Bowker noted with interest all Mr. McGhee had said and in reply wished to emphasize that the object of the British proposals was precisely to reconcile all the factors which Mr. McGhee had mentioned, in particular to meet Egyptian aspirations and at the same time to safeguard British and Western interests. The UK was anxious to try to find some means of obtaining Egyptian cooperation, some modus vivendi over the critical period. He thought that the British proposals now under consideration within the UK Government could form the basis for an agreement. Ambassador Stevenson said he would fully agree that the problem at hand was, so far as Egypt was concerned, a sentimental one and required a sentimental solution.

Mr. McGhee then said he had received an indication from some British sources he preferred to leave unnamed that the UK might be prepared to use force should all other measures fail to obtain the modus vivendi over the critical period. He thought that the British forces now in the Suez area could be used to seize Cairo. Mr. McGhee said that in his opinion it would be most unwise to resort to force and he hoped the British were not contemplating such an extreme. Ambassador Stevenson affirmed that force would not be used while he was HMG's representative in Cairo unless there was a danger to British life and limb and Mr. Bowker agreed that the resort to force was the last thing the UK wanted; on the other hand it was obviously the right and duty of the government if the safety of the British citizens was at stake. Mr. Bowker added that, as to Mr. McGhee's reference the undesirability of linking the Suez Canal and treaty questions, the important point for the UK Government to consider was that they were in fact already being linked by the British parliament and public.

Ambassador Stevenson said that with regard to the Sudan, the Sudanese would not give up independence and did not want Egyptian suzerainty. A solution to this difficulty was not easy to see, but he thought that it might be possible to establish a set of principles for governing the determination of the Sudan's future which would be difficult for the Egyptians to refuse publicly.

Mr. McGhee said that we had given Egypt no encouragement that we could supply them with arms and had usually referred them to the UK. Ambassador Stevenson noted in this connection that in the past there had been some difficulty in securing American permission for the release to Egypt of lend-lease equipment held by the UK. He understood that it was now necessary to refer all available supplies of this sort to NATO for any demand which might exist there. Mr. Penfield observed that delay in the past probably arose primarily from the administrative difficulties in arranging for the necessary clearances.

Libya

Mr. McGhee said he was not abreast of the latest developments concerning arrangements for obtaining base rights in Libya. The US had always felt, however, that it would be unwise to link the question of obtaining defense facilities with the provision of economic assistance. Mr. McGhee thought it was dangerous to establish a precedent of making an outright grant (apart from usual land rentals) for the base rights and it seemed to him that the matter of providing Libya with whatever economic aid it required could be kept separate from the defense arrangements. Mr. Allen explained the conviction of Mr. Pelt, the UN Commissioner in Libya, that the Libyans would require some direct payment for defense facilities. Mr. Allen said that the UK had proposed to make up the budgetary and balance payments deficit for the whole of Libya, but, in view of Mr. Pelt's insistence that there must be some fixed guarantee of payment in return for base privileges, the Foreign Office, which could see no overriding objection to this arrangement, was now considering that UK aid to Libya might fall into three parts: one, probably a very substantial proportion, would be earmarked for direct payment for defense rights; one would be a contribution to an economic development fund; the third amount would be a variable sum used to make up the Libyan deficit. Mr. Allen explained that the UK proposed to make up the deficit after US and other outside aid had been absorbed.

Neutralism

Mr. McGhee commented on the special attention he had given to the tendency throughout the Near East and Asia towards taking a neutral stand on issues in the struggle between the free world and Communism. The conversations he had had on his tour, however, had convinced him that government leaders in none of the 12 Near Eastern and South Asian countries he had visited had any real respect or philosophical attachment for the neutralistic policy expounded by Nehru, but to the contrary had a realistic appreciation of the significance of the East-West struggle. The fact that these countries did not take a more forthright stand with the West was due primarily to their sense of insecurity and their preoccupation with problems of immediate self-interest. It was important to try to restore confidence and to alleviate internal stresses throughout the area in order to obtain more open cooperation in the larger world conflict.

641.74/4-1451: Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

CAIRO, April 14, 1951.

No. 2474

Ref: Embtels 1045 April 12, 1040 April 11, 1039 April 9, 1034 April 9, London tel 155 April 6; Embdespatches 2447 April 11, 1942 February 13<sup>2</sup>

Subject: Current Status of Anglo-Egyptian Negotiations.

Stevenson's return and the resumption of the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations have again brought this problem to the forefront of the Egyptian political scene. Interest has been heightened by the uncertainty as to whether Stevenson had received his final instructions and by the atmosphere of secrecy which Salaheddin, with his love of the dramatic, has thrown around the negotiations.

As reported in the reference telegram, the first stage of the negotiations took place in an old palace on Rhoda Island (located in the Nile river near the center of Cairo). This meeting lasted approximately half an hour. Stevenson presented Salaheddin with an outline of the British proposals (along lines indicated in London tel 155 April 6). He also gave Salaheddin a "bit of paper" on the Sudan

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Gordon H. Mattison, Counselor of Embassy in Cairo; copy to London.

<sup>2</sup> None of the references is printed except despatch 1942, p. 344.

The proposals which Ambassador Stevenson presented to the Egyptian Government at this time were communicated to the Department of State by the First Secretary of the British Embassy at Washington, D. A. Greenhill, on April 27. See memorandum by Wells Stabler, infra.

which emphasized that the British government regarded the question of the Sudan as being entirely separate from the question of evacuation, and that in any event, no final decision on the Sudan could be taken without consulting the people themselves.

Salaheddin read through the outline carefully and then stated that, while he would of course have to refer the matter to the Cabinet (meaning in this case the "Little Cabinet" designated for the negotiations: Nahas Pasha, Mohamed Fuad Seraggedin, Salaheddin, and Ibrahim Farag, see EmbDespatch 2447 April 11 and Embtel 1034 April 9), it was his, Salaheddin's personal opinion that the proposals were not acceptable. Shortly after this meeting, Salaheddin telephoned Stevenson personally and again emphasized the desire for secrecy in regard to the meeting—at least until Saturday (April 14). Although a number of Egyptian reporters were aware of the meeting, the government's directives to the press were so strict that not one word appeared in the local press.

In the meantime, the local BBC correspondent had cleared through the British Embassy a story regarding the meeting. (The meeting was so secret that even the Press Section of the British Embassy had been kept in the dark.) The story was broadcast by the BBC at least once before the Embassy was able to get a message in to play down and camouflage the item.

Since Stevenson had been informed that the King had issued instructions that the Cabinet group charged with the negotiations was not to make any decisions without consulting him, Stevenson arranged for copies of the documents which he had given Salaheddin to be sent to the King secretly through Hassan Youssef Pasha, Acting Chief of the Royal Cabinet. To date there has been no reaction from the palace to this move.

As reported in the reference telegram, the British Embassy had just received instructions as to how the question of the Sudan was to be handled. The British proposals with regard to the Sudan are essentially those outlined in the EmbDespatch 1942 of February 13, with the exception that the proposed Anglo-Egyptian-Sudanese Supervisory Council would be a Tripartite Commission which would formulate proposals for the constitutional future of the Sudan.

It is evident that the British still feel that they will be able to maneuver the Egyptians into an uncomfortable position on the Sudan by putting up proposals which, if refused, would place Egypt on record as being opposed to the principle of self-determination.

If we analyze the current status of the negotiations, we find the following situation exists as of the time of writing this despatch:

1. Stevenson has returned with proposals which are not nearly as mild or acceptable as Bevin's "preliminary thinking" which was outlined to Salaheddin before he left London early in the year.

2. Stevenson has been given some of the leeway in handling the negotiations which he desired (Embtel 1039 April 9). However, he has been given the almost incredibly difficult job of selling the Egyptians something that they have repeatedly and publicly announced that they would not accept.

3. Stevenson is also faced with the fact that even if the Egyptians should unexpectedly turn tractable, and agree to the new proposals, there is a distinct possibility that the Labor Government would wish to stall still further because of its fear that no agreement with Egypt could muster sufficient votes to get through Parliament (against a combination of Conservatives and Labor back-benchers). The Labor Government, according to Stevenson is trying desperately to stall off an election until the fall when it believes it will have a better chance.

4. The British Embassy believes that there is a possibility that the stalling tactics may prove successful because of the fact that the present Wafdist government is afraid to stir up local disturbances as it fears that it could not control these disturbances once they were started and that they might turn against the government itself. For this reason it is possible that the Wafdists would prefer "no agreement" to a "bad agreement", which in itself might cause disturbances which the government would be unable to control.

5. Insofar as current threats of "boycott" of the British forces in the Canal Zone and withdrawal of some 40,000 Egyptian workers there, the British Embassy is not overly concerned. It feels that the British forces have a commanding position in that they could retaliate effectively without use of force. For instance, they control the pipeline which supplies Cairo with gasoline and important communication facilities with the outside world. The British Embassy believes that the present government is conscious of the fact that two can play the boycott game, and that it will attempt to control extremist demands for this type of action.

6. In any event, most observers feel that the Egyptian government will go along with the British stalling tactics at least until after the King's wedding on May 6. The King obviously would not wish for untoward disturbances to take place just before his wedding, and he has sufficient influence with the present government to prevent it from taking any precipitate action.

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Egypt"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs (Stabler)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] April 27, 1951.

Participants: Mr. D. A. Greenhill, First Secretary, British Embassy

NE-Mr. Lewis Jones NE-Mr. Stabler

Summary:

Mr. Greenhill called at his request and said that he had been instructed by the Foreign Office to communicate to the Department recent developments in connection with the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations. He said that the Foreign Office had particularly requested that we be apprised of its gratitude for the support which had been given to the UK by the Department and Ambassador Caffery. The Foreign Office believes that this support has been invaluable.

Mr. Greenhill then gave the following details on the British defense proposals:

1. All Army personnel, except anti-aircraft gunners, to be withdrawn from Egypt within the next five years. Headquarters, Middle East Land Forces, and the majority of combat troops to be evacuated from Egypt by the end of three years.

2. The Middle East base would remain under UK ownership with a long-term lease for the land. Control of the base would be through an Anglo-Egyptian Control Board jointly responsible to the British and Egyptian Governments. Approximately 3,500 British civilian technicians would remain on the base.

3. A joint Anglo-Egyptian air defense organization would be established which would remain active after 1956.

4. Egypt would guarantee the re-entry of British and allied forces in the event of war or the imminence of war.

5. Egyptian armed forces would be equipped immediately on a training scale. Thereafter they would be treated on equal priority with nations with which the UK has working defense arrangements.

The British Ambassador in Cairo was instructed to point out to the Egyptian Government that the above were minimum requirements for defense purposes and that it is inconceivable in the present threat of world war and the state of opinion in the UK that the British Government should purchase Egyptian cooperation by acceding to Egyptian demands for immediate evacuation. With respect to the Sudan, the British Government considers this question a separate issue and the British Ambassador had the authority to say that the UK was willing in due course to discuss this issue on the basis that the aim of the British Government is that the Sudanese should obtain self-Government at the earliest possible opportunity. The Ambassador was to emphasize that no arrangement could be reached which would interfere with this aim.

Finally, the British Ambassador was to raise with the Egyptian Government the question of the Suez Canal restrictions. He was instructed to make clear that failure by Egypt to remove these restrictions would make it most difficult for the British Government to obtain public support for a revision of the 1936 Treaty.

Mr. Greenhill added that the Foreign Office was concerned by the impression it had received from Mr. McGhee in London 1 that the United States valued Egyptian cooperation more highly than it did the retention of strategic facilities for the deployment of allied forces in the defense of the Near Eastern area. Mr. Stabler informed Mr. Greenhill that such an impression was not correct, but that we were considerably concerned by the lack of progress in these negotiations. Mr. Jones informed Mr. Greenhill that the Department would probably wish to make certain comments regarding the information which he had communicated on the defense proposals.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See memorandum of informal United States-United Kingdom discussions, April 10, p. 356.

774.00/5-251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

CAIRO, May 2, 1951—1 p. m.

1123. Egyptian Chamber Deputies "got even" last night with Brit Parl for anti-Egyptian statements. In strongest language yet used during Anglo-Egyptian negots Wafd as well as opposition speakers attacked Churchill and Conservative in particular Brit in gen, demanded abrogation 1936 Treaty, boycott to Brit, and treatment to "Brit dogs" in canal zone as "enemies". One speaker went so far as to call for non-aggression treaty with Russia, another melodramatically tore up copy 1936 Treaty to tumultuous applause from house. US attacked as ally Brit ME policy.

In reply FonMin Salaheddin demonstrated maximum self-restraint possible under circumstances, promised any new treaty wild be submitted Parl before signature and that he wild never sign an agreement that did not realize Egypt's national demands to the full. "Either Brit concedes our demands or the result will be what you have suggested".

FonMin made three points in particular: (1) Defending restrictions Suez Canal tankers; <sup>2</sup> (2) Condemning Brit failure permit supply arms including threat to "buy them from the devil if necessary"; and (3) Reiterating usual Sudan stand. Overall effect his speech calming in that no new definite Egyptian action any kind announced.

Altho mtg probably inevitable "escape valve" for pent-up Egyptian feelings, any definite dragging our negots certain become progressively more difficult.

CAFFERY

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London, Beirut for Blandford, and all other Arab capitals.

<sup>2</sup>Reference is to Egyptian restrictions against tankers using the Suez Canal as a passageway to Israel ports. For documentation on this subject, see pp. 559 ff.

Conference Files: Lot 59 D 95: "US-UK Talks, Wash, 9/51, Briefing Book Egypt".

The Department of State to the British Embassy

SECRET

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

- 1. We greatly appreciate British courtesy in keeping us informed regarding developments in the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations, in particular the details of United Kingdom defense proposals to Egypt, and are grateful for references to support given by the Department and Ambassador Caffery.
- 2. We have now been informed that the Government of Egypt has replied to the United Kingdom defense proposals, and that the reply in effect rejects these proposals and restates Egyptian demands in unaltered form.
- 3. While we are disappointed by the Egyptian response, we understand that the Government of Egypt considers the door still open for further negotiations and that it now awaits further communication from the United Kingdom.
- 4. Basic attitude of the United States regarding Anglo-Egyptian issue is that we sincerely hope that the United Kingdom and Egypt as parties to this question will be able to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement which takes into account not only Egyptian national aspirations but also the vital question of security of the Eastern Mediterranean and Near East area. It is on the basis of the latter consideration that we have endeavored to leave no doubt with the Government of Egypt regarding our strong support for maintenance by the United Kingdom of important strategic facilities in Egypt.
- 5. Beginning with politico-military talks between the United Kingdom and the United States in Washington in 1947, and more recently in similar talks held here last October we have sought and, we continue to seek, ways and means to assist the United Kingdom in this situation within the framework of our basic position.
- 6. Following on these recent talks, the United States has studied the entire Near East situation and has formulated a new and more positive approach to the Near East which we wish to carry out in close correlation with the United Kingdom. It is our hope that this approach while not specifically directed at any one Near East problem, will contribute to a solution of the Anglo-Egyptian problem.
- 7. While the United Kingdom may be sure that we shall continue to give every possible support to its position in Egypt, we are apprehensive that a further decline in Anglo-Egyptian relations, with probable attendant disorders and a depreciation of the United Kingdom-United States position, might prejudice the successful execution of the new United States approach and go far to negate it.

8. Although recent reports from Cairo indicate a less intransigent attitude on the part of the Government of Egypt regarding the necessity for action within the next few weeks, we are nonetheless concerned by a general restlessness among the Egyptian people and politicians over what they regard as an unsatisfactory state of affairs and by the analogy which is inevitably drawn between nationalization of oil in Iran and "nationalization" of bases in Egypt.

9. The United States desires, in common with the United Kingdom, to seek to avoid the development of a situation which might add to the tension already existing in the Near and Middle East, and we therefore trust that the following suggestions will be studied by the United Kingdom in the same friendly spirit which has motivated their formulation.

10. We believe that it is essential that the United Kingdom reply should, like the Egyptian communication, leave the door open for a continuance of negotiations. We also suggest that the reply, which it is hoped will be made at an early date, will express the importance and utility of a visit by the Egyptian Foreign Minister to London this summer. Such a visit would, in our opinion, confirm in a public manner that the negotiations have by no means been deadlocked. We feel that this would relieve popular pressure for unilateral abrogation of the treaty.

11. We would also suggest that consideration might be given to positive steps which might be taken to create a more favorable atmosphere for the renewal of the negotiations. In this connection it might be possible for the United Kingdom to resume shipments of a token quantity of arms to Egypt at about the same time as the new United States approach to the Near East becomes public knowledge.

12. In view of the urgency of this problem and its implication regarding the deployment of allied forces for the defense of the area, as well as its intimate relationship to the new United States approach to the Near East, the United States would be willing to consult with the United Kingdom at an early date on an informal and top secret basis in order to discuss any ways and means which in the opinion of the United Kingdom might be helpful in achieving a solution.

Washington, May 21, 1951.

Secretary's Letters: Lot 56 D 459: "Defense"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge, Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs (Stabler)

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] June 19, 1951.

Participants: Mr. Dennis Greenhill, First Secretary, British

Embassy

NE-Mr. Stabler

Summary:

Mr. Greenhill called at his request this afternoon and handed me an aide-mémoire from his Government <sup>1</sup> replying to US aide-mémoire of May 21 <sup>2</sup> on the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations.

In delivering the aide-mémoire Mr. Greenhill said he would like to make a few comments. He said that the Foreign Office was quite concerned by what they felt was an underlying skepticism on the part of the United States regarding the necessity for retaining a base at all in Egypt in peacetime. The Foreign Office believed that if the US did feel this way, there was a fundamental divergence of views between us and it would be difficult to reach a satisfactory understanding.

The Foreign Office hoped that the United States would fully understand the complexity of the Parliamentary situation in the UK at this time. There is a current of feeling in Parliament against any action on the part of the Government which might be called appeasement to Egypt. In this connection, the Government has had difficulties over the Egyptian restrictions on the Suez Canal and the sterling balance question.<sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Attached to source text, not printed. It first expressed appreciation for past U.S. support for the British position with respect to current negotiations with Egypt; it expressed full agreement on the necessity for coordinating United States-United Kingdom policy toward Egypt and to correlating the new U.S. approach to the Near East with Britain's efforts to secure Anglo-Egyptian agreements on Suez and the Sudan; it expressed the desire of the United Kingdom to keep the door open for negotiations with Egypt as long as possible; it defended the British negotiating position vis-à-vis Egypt with regard to Suez and the Sudan and informed the Department of State that instructions had been recently sent to Ambassador Stevenson to propose opening Anglo-Egyptian discussions with respect to the Sudan; it rejected the U.S. suggestion that the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs be invited to London on the grounds that such an invitation would inevitably lead the Egyptian Government and people to expect an early and favorable resolution of outstanding differences; in conclusion, it expressed general agreement with the U.S. position that the entire problem of Anglo-Egyptian relations had major implications in relation to the Western ability to defend the Near East.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In despatch 63 from Cairo, July 13, Ambassador Caffery reported the official signing on July 1 of the Sterling Releases Agreement and the Sterling Payment Agreement by the Governments of the United Kingdom and Egypt in conformity with the letter of understanding of March 11 discussed in despatch 2190 of March 16, p. 348. Caffery enclosed copies of these agreements with his despatch. (874.10/7-1351)

The attitude of Egypt toward the UK and the consequent hardening of the UK position have had as their immediate result the reluctance of the UK to provide arms, etc. to Egypt. However, the general effect has been to rule out even those concessions which in themselves would not have prejudiced the basic position of the UK in Egypt and its responsibility for the defense of the area. Consequently it was generally felt that the lack of mutual confidence made a bilateral solution of the problem nigh impossible.

The Foreign Office wished to emphasize that it was fully aware of the dangers of an open dispute with Egypt. It realized that such a dispute would increase the tension in the area and would probably lead to a discussion of the question in the UN. The UK desired to keep negotiations going and realized that it would be easier if concessions could be made. Since such concessions were out of the question, it was therefore necessary to spin out the negotiations. An attempt was being made to do this with the introduction of the Sudan question.

The Foreign Office was, however, considering a new approach to the defense problem. This approach might be the inclusion of Egypt in an "International Defense Organization for the Middle East." The Foreign Office was not in a position to say at this time whether this would be useful and they were therefore not making any formal approach to us as yet. However, the Foreign Office wished us to know in general terms of their thinking.

I thanked Mr. Greenhill for the aide-mémoire and his comments. I said I was concerned by the Foreign Office belief that we were skeptical about the necessity of a base in peacetime. I said that quite on the contrary we regarded the base as most important. Our fear was that if the UK maintained an inflexible line, the reaction of the Egyptians would be so hostile that the base might become a liability rather than an asset. Certainly grave difficulties would ensue if the UK had to "dig in" in the Canal Zone. Mr. Greenhill said that he appreciated this point and would try to clarify the situation with the Foreign Office. I asked Mr. Greenhill whether he could tell me anything more about the "International Defense Organization for the Middle East." Mr. Greenhill replied that the Foreign Office had not given any further details.

However, he assumed that the new approach would be the subject of the informal and top secret consultations which it was proposed would take place between us. He said that Commonwealth discussions on Middle East defense would take place probably shortly and that following these discussions the UK would be in a better position to formulate the exact nature of the new approach to Egypt. I gathered that the UK would hope to have consultations with us the latter part of the summer.

&lt;sup>4</sup> See editorial note, p. 383.

Finally, I mentioned to Mr. Greenhill the apparent disappointment of the Egyptian Foreign Minister that he was not being asked to visit London this summer. I said that while we realized the UK might not be in a position to do very much for the Foreign Minister, we, nevertheless, thought that such an invitation might help the Foreign Minister in his dealings with the Egyptian public.

641.74/7-751: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

Cairo, July 7, 1951—9 p. m.

16. Brit Amb told me last night he recd Egyptian reply yesterday (one day later than promised) and I read it this morning. It recites again at some length the Egyptian case for early evacuation. For the Sudan it emphasizes the omission in the Brit note of mention of "unity under the Egyptian Crown", recites again at some length the Egyptian case and finally says that Egyptian Govt will accept suggestion for setting up proposed commission on condition the Egyptian Crown be not in question and an election be held within 2 years after the evacuation Brit military and civilian officials.

The really interesting point is the statement that the Egyptian Govt sees no object in further prolongation of convs with no end in sight and therefore insists in effect that unless Egyptian point of view is met in the near future Egyptian Govt will be compelled to do something about it. Stevenson asked MinFonAff what he meant by that. He replied, "it is imperative that before this Parliament adjourns in about 6 weeks we see tangible evidence of real results or we shall break off negotiations." Stevenson doubts that Cabinet authorized him to (go that far) and said so to Kerim Tabet this morning. Kerim Tabet said that as the Grand Chamberlain will be Acting Chief of Cabinet after departure of Hassan Youssef Pasha this afternoon Stevenson shld ask him to request MinFonAff for a record of the minutes of the conv to send to His Majesty in the hope that if the records contain this statement the King will have something to say about it.

I read also Ambs telegram to London transmitting Egyptian note in which he observes that he wld try to keep the ball rolling all summer on the Sudan. It is his present intention to see Min around end of next week and attempt to get him to talk about setting up the Sudan commission.<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London.

CAFFERY

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 43 from Cairo, July 14, Caffery reported that the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs had told him "that Brit negots are 'getting nowhere' and unless something unexpected happens he proposes before the end of the present Parliament session (around middle Aug) to announce the end of the talks and to publish the minutes of conversations with Brit Amb, and finally to renounce the 1936 treaty. I told him I wld deprecate this etc., etc." (641.74/7-1451). In telegram 114 from Cairo, July 27, Caffery reported on further conversations between Ambassador Stevenson and Egyptian Foreign Minister Salaheddin in which Salaheddin contended that unless "Great Britain agreed as basis for discussion that unity of the Sudan and Egypt under the Egyptian Crown would not be in question it was useless to continue conversations." Stevenson "gave him any number of sound reasons why it is not possible at this juncture to make such a commitment but to no avail." Salaheddin then repeated that before the end of the current parliamentary session he would make a statement to the Egyptian Parliament as to whether or not it was worthwhile continuing negotiations. (641.74/7-2751)

Editorial Note

Concurrent with the developing Anglo-Egyptian disputes over Suez and the future of the Sudan, United States and United Kingdom military and diplomatic officials had begun laying plans for the creation of a Middle East Command that would include the United States, United Kingdom, France, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Turkey, Israel, and the Arab States, including Egypt. In part, the emergence of the Middle East Command concept was in response to the practical problems involved in integrating Greece, and especially Turkey, into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization command structure. But by August of 1951, the United Kingdom and United States had also perceived that a Middle East Command might also be the instrument by which the British and Egyptians could resolve their differences over the future of Suez. In telegram 841 from London of August 13, Minister Julius Holmes reported "Further UK proposals on Egypt defense problem are apparently awaiting decisions on ME Command, on which FonOff now seems to be depending almost entirely for exit from present impasse." Holmes concluded that although "FonOff does not anticipate further developments in Egypt before Egyptian Parliament recesses, it does consider explosive nature Egypt issue vital reason for settling ME Command structure without delay." (774.5/8-1351) Thereafter, the connection between Anglo-Egyptian negotiations over Suez and the Sudan and the planning for a Middle East Command became intimate. For documentation on the Middle East Command as it related to the Commonwealth nations and those of the Near East, including Egypt, see pages 1 ff.

780.5/8-1551

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Morrison) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

London, 15 August 1951.

My Dear Acheson: As you know, the question of Anglo-Egyptian relations has been looming large in our minds here recently, and I am disturbed at indications which I have seen that there is some divergence of view between you and us as to what our attitude towards these problems should be. Since I feel that any divergence between us on this issue must surely be avoided, it may be useful if I write now and tell you my own thinking on the whole question. I know you will not mind if I put my ideas quite bluntly in this personal communication, since it is after all between friends that plain speaking can and must take place.

May I say at the outset that, when I speak of divergencies, these are in no sense due to lack of co-operation between your Embassy here and ourselves, our own Embassy in Washington and the State Department, or our two Embassies in Cairo. On the contrary I should like to record that the co-operation between all of us has been constant and cordial, the interchange of ideas entirely free. Indeed, I hope that, in response to a suggestion of the State Department, our Embassies in Cairo will now be able to work out together a joint intelligence appreciation of the Egyptian situation including perhaps the Sudan. But it seems to me that the divergencies between us, if divergencies there are may derive from something deeper than the normal exchange of views on current affairs can put right. It is for this reason that I am writing to you now.

May I first re-state our position? We are in Egypt by virtue of a Treaty freely negotiated with the Egyptian Government in 1936. That Treaty has five years to run before the mechanism provided in it for revision at the request of either party comes into play; there is no provision in it for unilateral denunciation. That is the legal basis for our position although it is true that we have not found it possible to keep quite strictly within the exact terms of the treaty; but even more imporant that the legal basis, perhaps is the underlying reality to which the Treaty gives expression. That reality is that Egypt is not, and never will be able to defend herself against aggression by a major Power. We saw that in the last war, and no doubt we shall see it again if—contrary to all our hopes and efforts—there should be another war. But Egypt is important not only for herself but as the key to defence of the whole of the Middle East. I do not wish to recite again the importance of the Middle East to the defence of the free world: on that I think we are perfectly agreed. But we are advised that we cannot hope to defend the Middle East with the forces now at our disposal, or likely to be at our disposal in the foreseeable future, without the existence of a main base in Egypt. That base must be already there in time of peace, if we are to have a chance of holding the Middle East on the outbreak of war; and it must be there not merely as a dump, but as a live, going concern. We cannot move it out of Egypt, because not only would the expense be prohibitive, but also there is nowhere else where it can conveniently go. This was agreed between our Chiefs of Staff and yours, together with our political representatives, during the discussions last October. Since then we have again considered the matter exhaustively and have come to the conclusion that strategically and logistically the base must be located in Egypt. We must have troops to guard the base, and to be ready for use in an emergency in the Middle East. We are prepared to agree that the Egyptians should in due course take over some of the guard duties, but we should still have to find some alternative location for our troops and this would take time. What the Egyptians cannot do, and of this we are convinced by our many years' experience of dealing with them, is to maintain the base itself as a live organisation. Furthermore, it is useless to have a base and headquarters in Egypt unless there is some air defence organisation to protect them from air attack, and this equally the Egyptians cannot provide in the foreseeable future.

I do not wish to dilate further on this point, because I can hardly believe that, at this time of day, there can be any serious difference between us regarding the general need for bases in advance of the outbreak of any war. After all we are very glad to have United States bomber bases in this country and we do not see why the Egyptians should object to our presence for similar reasons in their country. I should just like to repeat that we do not regard ourselves as being in Egypt simply for the maintenance of our own interests, or those of the Egyptians for that matter, but because we feel that we must bear this responsibility on behalf of all freedom-loving nations. No question of imperialism exists.

We appreciate that the Egyptians may resent this fact, and that their resentment has its roots in the past. But how deep does that resentment go? We know, from many conversations we have had with leading Egyptians and even with members of the present Egyptian Government, that they are to a great extent the prisoners of their own propaganda. Such people realize in their hearts that we have to stay in Egypt, even though some of them may regret it. Others of them say frankly that so long as we are there they will be able to divert on to our heads the wrath that should fall upon them for their corrupt and inefficient form of oligarchial government. Our task, therefore, it seems to me, is to provide if possible some means whereby at any rate those Egyptians who have goodwill towards us can accept the continued presence of British troops in Egypt, and thus avoid a direct clash.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For documentation on the United States-United Kingdom military talks of October 26, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 217 ff.

As you know, we have already made an offer to the Egyptians which goes as far as, or even farther than we can safely afford. On the 11th April last, His Majesty's Ambassador in Cairo proposed to the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs that the 1936 Treaty of Alliance should be revised so as to provide for:—

(a) the phased withdrawal of British troops from Egypt beginning within one year of the conclusion of an agreement on the revision of the Treaty and ending in 1956 (it should be noted that the rate of the withdrawal of the combatant troops and of General Headquarters depends largely on the rate at which accommodation can be provided for them elsewhere);

(b) the progressive civilianisation of the base, which should be concluded by 1956, essential British civilian personnel being introduced as military personnel are withdrawn. The base would thereafter be entrusted to the Egyptian armed forces for security purposes but operated in accordance with British military policy under the overall administrative control of an Anglo-Egyptian Control Board;

(c) the creation of a long-term Anglo-Egyptian coordinated air defence system in which there should be both Egyptian and British components; (d) the provision at an early date of arms and equipment on training scale for the Egyptian forces and thereafter the provision of whatever further arms and equipment may be necessary in equal priority with other nations with whom we have working defence agreements;

(e) in the event of war, imminent menace of war, or apprehended international emergency, Egypt would agree to the return of British forces for the period of the emergency and would grant to them and to our allies all necessary facilities and assistance.

These proposals were flatly rejected by the Egyptians on 24th April, without even any discussion. The Egyptians merely repeated their own demands for total evacuation within a year.

I may add here in parenthesis that we have also been discussing the question of the future of the Sudan with the Egyptians and have tried to formulate certain principles to which both we and they could subscribe, but again we have reached deadlock over the Egyptian insistence on the unity of Egypt and the Sudan under the Egyptian Crown, whatever the wishes of the Sudanese may be. It is our view that these wishes must be the decisive factor on this aspect.

On the 6th August the Egyptian Foreign Minister in a speech in the Senate declared that he considered that negotiations between us were now closed. He chose as the pretext for this my own speech in the foreign affairs debate in the House of Commons on 30th July, in which I had been at particular pains to express our desire for cooperation with Egypt on the basis of equality and partnership.<sup>2</sup> In these circumstances, we must reckon on the possibility that, despite the efforts we have made, the next step by the Egyptians may be the unilateral denunciation of the 1936 Treaty.

Meanwhile, we are trying to work out, with your Government's agreement, the organisation of an Allied Middle East Command. Apart altogether from the general desirability of such an organisation, on which I think we are agreed, I personally am most anxious that the setting up of this Command should afford us an opportunity of a new approach to the Egyptians. If we had to leave Egypt, not only would the establishment of the proposed Allied Command be of little practical value but the effect on the Turks might be most unsettling; apart from this, it is surely in all our interests to see if we cannot offer to Egypt a settlement of the political problems which any reasonable person could hardly reject. The details of the proposed Command, and of the manner in which Egypt should be associated with it, are at present under study. What, however, I have in mind is that the headquarters of the Command should be located in Egypt, provided the latter agrees, and that Egypt should be offered a special position within the Command itself. We are also considering whether the proposals which we have already made to the Egyptian Government could be modified in any way in order to fit in with this conception.

So far I have said little about the divergencies between us. Indeed, I hope that on reading this statement of our views, you will think that they do not amount to much. But if there is anything that you disagree with here, or any suggestion which you have to make, I do hope that you will not hesitate to say so.

The plain fact is that we cannot afford to leave Egypt entirely, and I can assure you that no British Government, of whatever complexion, could offer to do so and hope to remain in office. We cannot afford to leave Egypt, because we need her, and we need her not only for ourselves, but for all of us who are determined to resist any attack upon our way of life. If the Egyptians will recognise the fact, so much the better; but if not, we and they will have to take the consequences of our remaining nonetheless. It is difficult to foresee exactly what those consequences may be, but whatever they are, they can hardly be worse than the abandonment of our essential requirements in Egypt and loss of control of the land bridge to Africa. Moreover, there is at least a chance, in my view, that if we show a firm and united front, while demonstrating our willingness to meet the reasonable wishes of

&lt;sup>2</sup> Extracts of Morrison's July 30 remarks in the House of Commons and of Foreign Minister Salaheddin's speech to the Egyptian Senate of August 6, together with a subsequent exchange of notes between Morrison and Egyptian Prime Minister Nahas Pasha, dated August 17 and 26, respectively, are printed in Documents (R.I.I.A.) for 1951, pp. 455–462.

Egypt, the consequences of a refusal to withdraw may not be so very terrible after all.

In any case, in facing these facts I should like to feel able to count upon American support, both as regards working out now one more line of approach to the Egyptians, and if that fails, in resisting all attempts to dislodge us, whether they be made in the Security Council of the United Nations or elsewhere.

I should, however, be much worried if the Egyptians got the impression (as did the Persians in the earlier days of the present oil discussions)3 that the United States was against us and could be relied upon, therefore, to side with them against the British. Such an impression would give us all the maximum of trouble.

Perhaps we may talk about all this in Washington,4 but I wanted you to know of my views meantime. I hope also that between now and then it may be possible for these thoughts to be considered in the course of further politico-military talks between our representatives in Washington.5

Yours sincerely,

HERBERT MORRISON

<sup>3</sup> Regarding the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute, see p. 544.

Reference is to the forthcoming meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10-14; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

5 In telegram 956 from London, August 21, marked "Eyes only Secretary," Minister Julius Holmes reported "Strength of Brit feeling on Egyptian defense question, which is revealed in Morrison's note to you, was stressed to me at luncheon yesterday by Slessor, Chief Air Staff, who emphasized firm Brit decision, fully concurred in Brit C[hiefs of] S[taff] and Min Def, to remain in Egypt under 1936 Treaty if no other solution to problem cld be worked out." Holmes added that Slessor had informed him that Morrison's letter was in response to a telegram from Ambassador Franks "reporting a conversation with a Dept official in which latter was quoted as saying that if trouble comes over Egypt UK cannot count on US support." (774.5/8-2151)

641.74/8-2151

The Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews) to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)1

TOP SECRET

Washington, August 21, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Department is deeply concerned by the recent trend of events in Egypt arising from the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations for the revision of the 1936 Treaty of Alliance. In recent weeks Anglo-Egyptian relations have deteriorated considerably and the negotiations have reached an impasse with dangerous potentialities. Both sides appear to be in entrenched positions. Unless one of the parties breaks the deadlock by shifting positions, it is the Department's opinion that the intensity of public feeling and opinion in Egypt may soon force the Egyptian Government to adopt certain measures, possibly including the unilateral abrogation of the 1936 Treaty, which will make further negotiations with the UK difficult, if not impossible.<sup>2</sup>

Drafted by Wells Stabler; cleared in draft with Bonbright of EUR, BNA, Cabot of S/ISA, S/P, and S/S.

The Department is fully aware of the great importance which is attached by the Department of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the present British position in Egypt. The Department will continue to make every effort to assist the UK in maintaining this position. However, the question poses itself whether insistence by the UK on the maintenance of its present position beyond that period to which Egypt is willing to acquiesce (estimated to be about 18 months) would render the strategic facilities in Egypt more of a liability than an asset in peacetime and raise serious problems in connection with their employment in wartime.

In view of the situation which now exists between Egypt and the UK, the Department believes that a reassessment should be made of the position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff regarding the importance to the US of the maintenance of the present British troop strength and bases in Egypt, both under present conditions and conditions of war.

In this connection the following questions would appear to arise on which the views of the Department of Defense are of the highest importance:

(1) What is the relative strategic importance attached to the maintenance of present British troop strength in Egypt and the maintenance of base facilities?

(2) Does the Department of Defense believe that:

(a) All of the combat troops could be withdrawn during peacetime if some arrangement could be worked out for the retention of at least a nucleus of the base facilities? Or:

(b) If not all, how many combat troops could be withdrawn?

(3) Does the Department of Defense attach great importance to the British proposal for Joint Anglo-Egyptian Air Defense?

(4) Could General Headquarters, Middle East Land Forces, be moved from Fayid to some location outside of Egypt without prejudicing strategic planning or its operational efficiency in peace?

(5) Bearing in mind 1) the possibility that, irrespective of what plan may be devised, at least some British combat troops may have to leave Egypt and 2) the US position regarding the admission of Turkey to NATO prior to decisive action on the ME Command Structure, could the US at the proper time support a British approach to Egypt along the lines of UK-French-US-Turkish cooperation with Egypt on defense problem?

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 216 from Cairo, August 18, Caffery had reported that the Egyptian Government had determined to abrogate the 1936 Treaty before the next speech from the throne by King Farouk. In telegram 249, August 25, from Cairo, Caffery added that "actual abrogation declaration will probably be made late October." (641.74/8–1851 and 8–2551)

(6) What would the attitude of the Defense Department be towards British military action against Egyptians to retain British troops and base rights in Egypt in peacetime?

(7) Having in mind the rejected British proposals of April 1951, suggesting UK-Egyptian defense cooperation, can the Department of Defense make concrete suggestions regarding feasible British concessions with regard to troops and bases which might satisfy the Egyptian demand for evacuation in 18 months and yet make possible the maintenance of essential base facilities in a state of readiness for immediate use on outbreak of hostilities?

I shall appreciate it if you would have urgent attention directed to this matter in order that I may have the views of the Defense Department prior to my discussions with Mr. Morrison on September 10.3

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:
H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS

641.74/9-451

Memorandum by the Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff (Bradley), to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, 29 August 1951.

Subject: Importance of the British Military Position in Egypt

1. In accordance with the request contained in your memorandum, dated 23 August 1951,<sup>2</sup> the Joint Chiefs of Staff have formulated the following views on the matters raised in the letter from the Secretary of State to you dated 21 August 1951.

2. The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider it to be of extreme importance to the preservation of peace and security in the Middle East as well as the preservation of world peace that the Western Powers have access to certain strategic facilities in Egypt. Because of United States commitments in other areas, it is in the United States interest that the United Kingdom continue to have primary military responsibility in Egypt.

3. In regard to maintaining the present British position in Egypt, the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that a continuation of this position is of very great importance to the United States. Accordingly, if acceptable to the United Kingdom, the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommend that the United States support politically the United Kingdom in the enjoyment of:

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10–14; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Transmitted to the Secretary of State by the Acting Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett on September 4 with a covering note indicating that the source text was in response to the letter of August 21 from Deputy Under Secretary of State Matthews (supra) and that Lovett concurred in the views herein expressed.

<sup>2</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

- a. The right to maintain strategic facilities in Egypt during peacetime in such condition that they could be effectively and speedily used in the event of immediate threat to the security of the Middle East; and
  - b. The right of re-entry in order to make full use of these facilities.
- 4. Current intelligence estimates indicate the following British force deployments in Egypt:

[Here follows a detailed list of British force deployments in Egypt.] The Joint Chiefs of Staff are of the opinion that it would be both unsound and inappropriate for them to attempt an estimate relative to British requirements for specific numbers of armed forces for facilities in Egypt. It should be pointed out, however, that in peacetime the numbers of armed forces at any important facility seldom are adequate for emergency or war purposes. Under the terms of the 1936 Treaty of Alliance between Egypt and the United Kingdom, the British are limited to land forces not to exceed 10,000 and air forces not to exceed 400 pilots, together with the necessary ancillary personnel for administrative and technical duties. The Joint Chiefs of Staff feel that this number of combat personnel is obviously insufficient for emergency or war purposes.

6. In consonance with the foregoing, the responses of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the first three questions raised in the letter from the Under Secretary of State are:

a. The Joint Chiefs of Staff attach very great importance to the British maintaining their base facilities in Egypt;

b. The British must maintain troops at most of their facilities in Egypt if Egyptian bases are to be available immediately and in condition for possible use by the United States and the United Kingdom in the event of war or emergency. From the military point of view, this constitutes an over-riding consideration. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, therefore, could not agree to the stripping of Egyptian bases of their operating personnel to the point where the bases would be militarily reduced to caretaker status;

c. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are aware of the British proposals of 5 April 1951 which were rejected by the Egyptian Government. At that time the British offered to phase out their combat troops over a five-year period beginning late in 1951, provided the base at Fayid remained under leasehold with some 3,500 British civilians retained as maintenance personnel and with Egyptian troops to guard it. It can be inferred from this offer that the British might still find it possible to reduce their armed forces in Egypt if appropriate arrangements for maintaining their base facilities there could be assured. The Joint Chiefs of Staff believe that any decision on this matter must rest with the British who undoubtedly will relate it to the circumstances existing at the time; and

d. From the strictly military point of view, the Joint Chiefs of Staff do not attach importance to any air defense arrangement in Egypt which includes the utilization of Egyptian troops except as such an arrangement may be of assistance in making the retention of British troops in Egypt acceptable to the Government of Egypt.

7. Removal of General Headquarters, Middle East Land Forces, from Fayid to some location outside of Egypt would not necessarily prejudice strategic planning, but it might be prejudicial to operational efficiency in peace. In any event, Egypt is within the area of primary military responsibility of the British and decision on this matter should properly rest with them.

8. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have no objection to United States political support of a British approach to Egypt along the lines of U.K.-French-U.S.-Turkish cooperation. They believe it possible that the Egyptians might be more amenable to such a combined approach. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, however, would have serious objection to such an approach if it involved any commitment of United States forces or interference in any manner with the military command of Middle East forces, either in or outside of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

9. Unless world opinion were first marshalled against the Egyptians, the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that it would be highly detrimental to United States military interests in the Middle East for the British to take military action against the Egyptians in peacetime in order to retain British base rights there. This view is not to be construed as denying British armed forces their inherent right of self-defense against local attacks. The Joint Chiefs of Staff believe that the United Nations is the proper organ to undertake in the first instance such a marshalling of opinion, particularly in view of the provisions of Articles 8 and 16 of the Treaty of Alliance of 1936 between Egypt and the United Kingdom. Once world opinion has been marshalled, the Joint Chiefs of Staff believe that if no suitable arrangement can be achieved with the Egyptians, the United States might support politically the British in such defensive action in Egypt as may be required as a result of Egyptian unilateral abrogation of this

10. The Joint Chiefs of Staff feel that the British should not be offered gratuitously concrete suggestions regarding feasible British military concessions. However, if requested by the British, the following suggestions as a basis for discussion might be used:

a. The British might consider some reduction in the ancillary military personnel for administration and technical duties (or, possibly, in the light of their April proposal to the Egyptians, some reduction of their combat forces). If this action were accompanied by extensive publicity at the time of the departure of the British troops it might have a beneficial effect on the Egyptian-British relations. If it becomes necessary, it might be possible, at a later date, to replace certain of this ancillary personnel with personnel not in uniform;

b. As an inducement the British might offer to assist Egypt in the event of general hostilities in the air defense of certain areas important to the Egyptian Government; and

c. Consideration might be given to garrisoning the Egyptian bases with combined forces to include reduced British and increased Egyptian forces, together with forces of other Mediterranean nations. În this connection it should be made clear that the United States will not commit any United States forces to Egypt in time of peace.

> For the Joint Chiefs of Staff: OMAR N. BRADLEY

Conference Files: Lot 59 D 95: "US-UK Talks, Wash 9/51, Background Book Egypt" The Secretary of State to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Morrison)1

TOP SECRET

Washington, August 30, 1951.

Thank you for ur ltr of Aug 15, 1951,2 on the subj of Anglo-Egypt relations, which I have studied with care. We share your concern over the possible repercussions of the present impasse and the dangers of some precipitate action by the Egypt Govt such as the abrogation of the 1936 Treaty of Alliance between Great Britain and Egypt. I shall be prepared to discuss this problem with you in our forthcoming talks.

I want to tell you at this time, however, that I was especially struck by the remarks in ur ltr concerning the ME command. It seems to me that the most likely way of solving the difficulties with Egypt wld be, as you suggest, through some form of internationalization of the Suez Canal bases under ME command arrangements which might draw Egypt into the picture in a special position. Such a position might give the Egypt Govt and people a considerable measure of satisfaction of their sensibilities and at the same time bring them to realize that they must bear their share of responsibility for protecting the ME against potential Sov aggression. Additionally, if Egypt shld embrace this concept, it wld go far towards creating a healthier atmosphere in both of our relations with other NE States.

In anticipation of our talks, it will be valuable for us to have the results of the exchange of views on this subj between our reps now tentatively scheduled for Sept 4–8 in Wash.<sup>3</sup> Perhaps ur reps can make clearer to us what you have in mind in the way of making the new command arrangement the vehicle for the retention of base rights in Egypt.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Coe of BNA, cleared with Berry and Jones of NEA and with S and EUR. Transmitted to London in telegram 1263 of August 30 with the instruction that it be conveyed to Morrison. <sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 372.

I may add that I am looking forward very much to ur visit and to an exchange of views with you on this and the many other problems facing the world.

641.74/9-151: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, September 1, 1951—1 p. m.

313. During call on McGhee Aug 30 Egypt Amb discussed Anglo-Egypt problem and referring recent exchanges between Morrison and Nahas expressed hope acceptable proposals wld soon be made by UK. Amb said he ready fly Cairo shld anything concrete result from Secy-Morrison mtgs.<sup>2</sup>

McGhee reiterated our view this problem principally Anglo-Egypt and stressed need for continuation negots. He made clear US wld view with disfavor unilateral act by Egypt abrogate 1936 Treaty. McGhee then in most general way indicated consideration being given to possibility some multilateral arrangement to replace bilateral framework Anglo-Egypt defense. Nothing definite yet worked out and US not in position this time be more precise. In response to query re Amer participation such arrangement McGhee said "US giving serious thought." He emphasized US support admission Turk, Greece to NATO 3 and MSP 4 as tangible evidences US concern defense NE area. Amb expressed interest and recalled he had originally suggested such approach as solution Anglo-Egypt problem. He assumed that such multilateral arrangement wld mean evacuation Brit troops. McGhee replied it wld seem mistake to weaken defense arrangements by such evacuation since Egypt forces not present in position assume responsibility. Amb inquired re possible Israel participation in broader arrangement and McGhee expressed hope Israel in due course cld be brought into ME defense arrangement. Amb expressed view this extremely difficult if not impossible at present.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See editorial note, p. 383.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted and transmitted by Stabler. Cleared by Moore of GTI and by S/S. Repeated to London.

Reference is to the forthcoming meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10-14; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO, see ibid.,

pp. 460 ff.

For documentation on the formulation of the Mutual Security Program, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff. For documentation on proposed aid to the Arab states and Israel under the Mutual Security Program, see pp. 1 ff.

McGhee again stressed that no decisions had been taken re such developments, but possibility existed re broadening framework present defense arrangements.

FYI only. Turk Amb was also informed in gen terms re possibility multilateral arrangement and he discussed question later on own initiative with Egypt Amb. He reported latter receptive but determined that Brit troops shld be replaced by others.

Unless FonMin queries you re Amb conversation with McGhee, you shld not discuss above with him at this time.

Webb

Editorial Note

British civil and military officials, led by Under Secretary of State Sir Reginald Bowker and Air Chief Marshal Sir William Elliot, came to Washington September 5-8 for talks on the Anglo-Egyptian problem with members of the Department of State's Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs. Three papers were agreed upon as a basis for the forthcoming bipartite talks between Acheson and Morrison and the tripartite meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10-14. They were: Proposals to Egypt on its Participation in the Middle East Command; Proposed Timetable for Approach to Egypt and Turkey on the Middle East Command; The Sudan. (telegram 338 to Cairo, September 8, 641.74/9-851) No record of these meetings has been found in Department of State files. The text of the paper entitled "Proposals to Egypt on its Participation in ME Command" was sent to the Embassy in Turkey in telegram 182 of September 8 (same as telegram 339, page 181), the text of the paper entitled "Proposed Timetable for Approach to Turkey and Egypt" was sent to the Embassy in Turkey in telegram 183 of September 8 (page 182). The agreed paper on the Sudan is printed infra. For subsequent discussions on the Middle East Command and Egypt at the meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, at Washington, September 10-14, see volume III, part 1, pages 1163 ff.

Conference Files: Lot 59 D 95: "Wash For Min Mtg—Position Papers"

Agreed United States-United Kingdom Paper 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] September 8, 1951.

THE SUDAN

In discussing the defence problem the Conference took particular account of Conclusion (H) of the Joint Appreciation prepared by the United Kingdom and the United States Ambassadors at Alexandria 2 to the effect

&lt;sup>1</sup> See editorial note, supra.

"no Egyptian Government would be ready to enter into a defence agreement without a simultaneous settlement of the Sudan question".

The Conference also took account of the consequential recommendations No. IV, V and VI of the Joint Appreciation as follows:

IV. Renewed consideration should be given to the possibility of according public recognition to the legal and constitutional status of the Egyptian Crown in regard to the Sudan.

V. An early date should be fixed for the attainment of self-government by the Sudan and the principle of self-determination for the Sudanese should be maintained.

VI. Further thought should be given to the possibility of an international guarantee of an Egypto-Sudanese Nile Waters agreement.

The United Kingdom representative pointed out that it was the considered view of the Governor General of the Sudan that the Sudanese make no distinction between the public recognition of the legal and constitutional status of the Egyptian Crown in regard to the Sudan and recognition of Egyptian sovereignty implying the establishment of Egyptian rule. Mr. Bowker went on to say that for this reason he thought it must be accepted as a fact that to attempt now to make some public recognition of the legal and constitutional status of the Egyptian Crown in regard to the Sudan would cause grave disturbances in the Sudan and was impracticable.

The Conference took note of this view but felt that some move with regard to the Sudan is an essential element in the success of proposals about the Command.<sup>3</sup> They therefore considered what other steps could be taken to try to meet Egyptian aspirations over the Sudan. It was pointed out that apart from Egypt's wish for purposes of prestige to establish a constitutional link between Egypt and the Sudan her main preoccupation was the fear that the British were trying to use their position in the Sudan to insure that the Sudan should ultimately be separated from Egypt and to exercise their influence with the Sudanese to that effect. It was agreed that the line which might be best presented as offering satisfactory safeguards to Egypt in this respect was to suggest the appointment of a United Nations or other international commission, on which Egypt would be represented, whose functions would be to keep a watch on constitutional developments in the Sudan and make recommendations on the manner in which the Sudanese should ultimately choose their international status. The commission would be charged specifically with the task of watching the interests both of the Sudanese and Egyptians. It was thought that such a suggestion would at the same time provide the Egyptians with the means of ensuring that their own essential interests were not prejudiced during the final stages of the Sudan's constitutional development and also provide Egypt with an acceptable way of relaxing her present insistence on immediate public recognition of the constitutional position of the Egyptian Crown in regard to the Sudan.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference is to an undated 19-page Joint Intelligence Estimate agreed to by the American and British Embassies in Cairo, not printed. Two copies of this document were transmitted to the Department of State by Ambassador Caffery in despatch 505 from Cairo, August 28, and are in Department file 641.74/8–2851.

<sup>3</sup> Reference is to the Middle East Command.

It was recommended that this suggestion should be accompanied by a reiteration of the United Kingdom's readiness to consider a statement of agreed principles in regard to the Sudan on the lines already put forward in the United Kingdom Ambassador's recent talks with the Egyptian Foreign Minister and to consider some form of international guarantee of an Egypto-Sudanese Nile Waters Agreement on the lines of Recommendation VI of the Joint Appreciation. This might possibly be associated with the formulation of a Nile Valley development authority for which the International Bank might if necessary be asked to provide some financial assistance.

The Conference thought that there would be a considerable advantage in aiming at the possibility of fixing an early date for the attainment of self-government by the Sudan.

The Conference thought that the Egyptians would put themselves in a weak position in regard to international opinion if they were to refuse proposals of this kind and, that provided the new approach on the defence issue were presented in a sufficiently attractive form, there was reason to hope that the Egyptians would hesitate to risk a complete deadlock owing to their attitude over the Sudan.

It was agreed that consideration would be given to any possible further steps which might go some way towards meeting the Egyptian position on the Sudan with the objective of eliminating it as an obstacle to agreement on the defence issue e.g. perhaps the appointment of a "neutral" Governor General.

641.74/9-1851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

Cairo, September 18, 1951—8 p. m.

338. Gallad came to see me last night to talk about situation facing King on his recent return. King is not pleased with way govt has handled Brit negots nor is he satisfied with their handling of internal situation, charges of corruption in govt circles, etc. For that reason has not yet recd Prime Minister but will probably receive him today or tomorrow. All Egypt know and applaud govt's decision to abrogate treaty and they knew that if this is not done it will be King who prevents it. Therefore, His Majesty says that much as he dislikes it, unless Brit can come up soon with some new acceptable proposal, he will be forced to let govt go ahead with abrogation. To do otherwise wld involve dismissing govt, dissolving Parliament and ruling by military force.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London. A handwritten note on the margin reads: "S: repeating to Ottawa. Rptd Ankara 9/19,"

Gallad asked my opinion as to what he shld advise King. I counseled him to advise King to insist with Prime Minister that nothing be done about abrogating treaty until Morrison has time to come forward with something new.

"How long will that be?" asked Gallad. "I do not know", said I, "but say couple of weeks". Gallad said he wld counsel His Majesty to that effect.

Gallad observed that Prime Minister himself is not particularly pleased with situation into which he has been led by his Min FonAff but he can do nothing about it. Min FonAff is only really popular man in govt and furthermore, has practically entire nation behind him. Min FonAff wld be far more dangerous out govt than in govt.

Gallad added, "I must warn you that if Morrison's proposals are not acceptable His Majesty will be unable prevent abrogation of treaty although in any event, he will do his best." <sup>2</sup>

CAFFERY

a In telegram 1477 from London, September 21, Minister Holmes reported that Ambassador Stevenson in Cairo was about "to deliver personal msg from Morrison to Nahas Pasha which says little new but again tries to encourage Egypt patience." Holmes added that Morrison "will make special point, since King has evidenced interest, of necessary consultation with Turkey prior presentation [Middle East Command] proposals to Egypt." (641.74/9-2151) In telegram 355 from Cairo, September 22, Caffery reported that Stevenson had delivered the Morrison message to Nahas who had replied that he must have something before the month's end. Stevenson then suggested that Nahas simply tell the Egyptian Parliament "that new and interesting proposals forthcoming requiring careful study and that govt wld discuss at next session Parliament in Nov." Nahas had replied that this was impossible "as he wld be 'shouted down.'" (641.74/9-2251) Caffery further informed the Secretary of State in telegram 364 from Cairo, September 25, that in a conference with Stevenson the previous day, King Farouk had made it clear "that he is 'on the spot': public opinion solidly backs the Cabinet and demands early abrogation of the treaty and if there is any change in the Egyptian attitude it will be quite clear that it is the King who has brought it about." Farouk expressed interest in the forth-coming Command proposals, "but said, 'whatever you do it is essential to do it quickly. I can not continue to hold them on the leash for two or three weeks more.'" (641.74/9-2551)

641.74/9-2451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 24, 1951—5 p. m.

424. Deptel 338 Sept 8 [18]. Re Sudan paper Sept 8 3 agreed during Dept–FonOff talks and discussed Sept 10 by Secy and Morrison. 4

Brit Emb rep gave Dept Sept 20 fol FonOff comments on points in ref paper:

1. FonOff believed it undesirable establish UN comm. Internatl comm, not operating under UN aegis, preferable as wld provide greater latitude choice membership which might include UK, Egypt, Sudan, US, and possibly "neutral" member. FonOff viewed comm as extension Tripartite Comm proposed by UK to Egypt in June. Some question whether comm shld begin work in near future or be established only at time self-govt elections.

2. FonOff agreeable renewal offer to Egypt of statement of principles.

3. Internatl guarantee Nile Waters Agreement and estab Nile Valley Development Authority desirable, but no thought yet given their formulation or relationship.

4. While UK wld not stand in way self-govt Sudan, fixing definite date most difficult. UK wld contemplate statement soon indicating attainment self-govt Sudan early date Brit aim. Self-govt wld be subject certain safeguards, i.e., advisors and guarantees to South Sudan against possible exploitation by north.

5. Neutral Governor Gen impossible as wld be breach UK pledge not change status Sudan without consulting Sudanese. Sudan civil servants, Brit and Sudanese, wld object serving under neutral Governor.

On Sept 22 Dept informed Brit Emb as fols:

1. US has no objection UK putting Sudan proposals to Egypt as matter concern only UK, Egypt, and Sudan.

2. US does not believe UK proposals re Sudan go far enough to be of any help in securing Egypt cooperation in MEC.

3. In view (2) US must revert to previous position that it does not have substantive position on Sudan. US will, therefore, be unable associate itself with UK on Sudan question as we had originally hoped, although we wild be willing support with Egypt Govt separability base question and Sudan.

4. If present UK proposals shid prove unacceptable to Egypt and appear as stumbling block for estab MEC, we hope UK will have ready second and more liberal set of proposals which might be put forward.

<sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 383.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler, transmitted by G. Lewis Jones, cleared with S/S. Repeated to London, Ankara, and Paris.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For information concerning the bilateral conversations between Acheson and Morrison, see the editorial note, ibid.

5. Notwithstanding above and subject consideration detailed proposals US favorably disposed in principle render assistance reinternat guarantee Nile Waters Agreement and estab Nile Valley Development Authority on condition parties concerned desire US participation.

In response to query whether Dept wished to make further suggestions, Dept said UK in better position determine extent proposals and pointed to last para Sudan paper which stressed necessity eliminating Sudan as obstacle to agreement on defense issue.

ACHESON

641.74/9-2751: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

Cairo, September 27, 1951—8 p. m.

375. Deptel 423, Sept 24.2 Minister Foreign Affairs after recounting at some length reasons why Egyptian Govt must go ahead at once with abrogation 1936 treaty and referring to local press attacks on alleged Anglo-American plans for East Mediterranean finally agreed that he wld endeavor to hold off for say ten days.

Minister Foreign Affairs observed he cordially welcomed our hospitable interest in this question. He said he wld at once inform Prime Minister of this. If I had taken this matter up with Prime Minister rather than Foreign Minister I wld have recd from Prime Minister various declarations of good will but nothing else. He wld have taken no decision on this without consulting his Minister Foreign Affairs.

CAFFERY

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET PRIORITY CAIRO, September 30, 1951—midnight. 387. I saw the King this afternoon. He began conversation by complaining somewhat bitterly about continued attacks against him in American press. He said he was "fed up" and although he understood the reasons for the replies made by officials to his Ambassador in

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London.
<sup>2</sup>Not printed; it requested Caffery to seek an early opportunity to speak to Prime Minister Nahas Pasha and/or Foreign Minister Salaheddin in order to express the hope that no precipitate action would be taken by the Egyptian Government "which wld make difficult calm and considered deliberation new proposals" regarding the MEC (641.74/9-2351).

<sup>641.74/9-3051 :</sup> Telegram

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London and Ankara.

Washington the replies made him feel no better about the campaign which he felt was being waged against him.

Then we talked about Brit negots. I told him merely that we were sincerely and earnestly trying to find way out; that he must give us a little time and that we hope to come up with something soon. I mentioned briefly French and Turks. He said that he warmly welcome our entrance into the ring; without us nothing wld or cld be done.

"You are the only ones who can put it over", he remarked.

I asked if he cld hold off abrogation until we come up with something. He said, "I can hold it off for a brief space more but not for long; and you know why. Also you know my situation and the situation of my govt. I cannot set myself in opposition to the whole country and in this instance the whole country is of the same mind as the govt; although Nahas is old and his mind does not work as well as it did. MinFonAff is young and impulsive and also has other drawbacks, and when I returned he thought I was going to ask for his resignation. I told him I wld ask for nothing of the kind that I did not want him to resign. He is partly responsible for existing situation and he must see it through. If I broke with him I wld stir up a veritable hornets nest, and I do not like hornets.

"If you come up with something that I conscientiously believe my fatherland can accept the govt will accept it too. There is no worry on that score. But it must be something I can conscientiously accept and it must come soon. I am above all a patriotic Egyptian and rest assured that I am not going to accept anything which I consider to be against my country's interest. In any event you must step on it and come out with it soon, and I mean soon.

"I will tell you indiscreetly that I have told the govt that they can go ahead to prepare papers which will be required for abrogating treaty and for taking care of ensuing situation if your proposals are not good enough, but I hope it will never be necessary to use them".

I asked him if we shid bring proposals to him before we communicated them to the govt. He said "it is a question in my own mind. You might let me know quietly when you have something definite and I shall tell you what to do.

"You know because I have told you already that I am whole-heartedly on side of the west and in case of war you can count on me. Having that in mind do not do anything to weaken my position. If I am strong enough I can help you, but if I am weak, I won't be able to help you at all".

In closing he remarked that he did not want any major changes in the govt at this juncture and for that reason he had sanctioned only the two now well known shifts and the two new minor appointments. 641.74/10-851: Telegram

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 387.

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

TOP SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, October 8, 1951—7: 14 p. m. 521. Brit Emb Oct 7 informed Dept Brit Cab has approved fol "new proposals" to Egypt Govt re Sudan:

[Here follow the "new proposals", which included an International Commission resident in but not governing over the Sudan, a Joint Anglo-Egyptian statement of common principles, an international guarantee of the Nile Waters Agreement, establishment of a Development Authority for the Nile, and an agreed date for attainment of self-government by the Sudan.]

Although Stevenson has been instructed hold line re separability Sudan and MEC ques, he has been authorized produce above proposals at time he considers appropriate.

Brit Emb stated FonOff "greatly hopes US will actively support UK in keeping Sudan and Defense issues separate and will support (above) positive proposals to Egypt."

While we believe UK has made effort to move further toward Egypt position, particularly in relation to internatl comm (Deptel 424, Sept 24), we still consider it wild be inadvisable for US to associate itself with UK in presentation substantive proposals re Sudan to Egypt Govt. At same time we wild not wish our silence re substance Sudan ques to cause difficulty vis-à-vis MEC approach. Consequently, you shid from outset strongly support with Egypt Govt separability Sudan and MEC issues and our belief these two ques shid be decided separately on own merits. Time factor different between MEC and Sudan: first is urgent for defense NE and free world; second is evolutionary problem in which solid results best achieved by patient and unhurried deliberation. In addition you authorized make fol points:

1. US has been informed by UK of its proposal to Egypt re Sudan and we are confident Egypt Govt will wish to give them same serious and earnest consideration which we are sure were given to their formulation. We feel that with mutual goodwill and understanding solution adequately guaranteeing interests of all parties concerned can be developed. Fact we are unable comment substantively is because we are not in position, as are UK and Egypt, form independent judgment on complex factors involved.

2. If asked re US participation in internat comm, you shid say that at request parties US wild give matter consideration.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler, transmitted and initialed by Jones. Repeated operation priority to Ankara, London, and Paris.

You shid concert with UK colleague re timing ur approach to Egypt Govt on Sudan.

ACHESON

Editorial Note

At its Seventh Session at Ottawa in September 1951 the North Atlantic Council recommended the admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO. President Truman promptly cabled Turkish President Bayar proposing preliminary conversations between Turkish and United States officials regarding the possible establishment of a Middle East Command. In transmitting this message, Ambassador Wadsworth asked President Bayar if Turkey would be willing to join the United States and United Kingdom in urging on Egypt acceptance of an invitation to participate as a founding member of the MEC. On September 25, Wadsworth reported that President Bayar would welcome the visit of an informal group to study the possible establishment of the MEC and warmly accepted the invitation to join the United States and United Kingdom in approaching Egypt at an early date regarding membership in the Middle East Command. However, the proposed tripartite invitation to Egypt waited upon the despatch to Ankara of a three-man military mission headed by General Bradley and including British Field Marshal Slim and French General Lecheres which was to discuss the proposed MEC with Turkish officials. This mission did not reach Turkey until October 13, by which date the Egyptian Government had formally abrogated the 1899 and 1936 Treaties with the United Kingdom regarding the Sudan and Suez. (See despatch 921 from Cairo, October 9, infra.) British, American, and Turkish officials, joined by the French, determined to press the MEC invitation upon Egypt, and it was formally tendered on October 13. The Egyptian Government formally rejected the invitation on October 15. For documentation regarding the formulation of the MEC invitation to Egypt and Egypt's rejection of the invitation, see pages 1 ff.

641.74/10-951: Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, October 9, 1951.

No. 921

Ref: Embassy despatch 911 of October 9, 1951 <sup>2</sup>

Subject: First twenty-four hours in Egypt after Prime Minister's abrogation speech

The address of Prime Minister Mustapha El Nahas Pasha in Parliament announcing the introduction of four laws in Parliament annulling the Egyptian acceptances of the Condominium Agreement of 1899 and the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936 <sup>3</sup> began just twenty-four hours ago at 6 p. m. on October 8, 1951. It lasted one hour and twenty minutes and was heard by an at first surprised and then almost hysterically delighted personal and radio audience of Senators, Deputies, newspapermen, and, incidentally, the people of Egypt.

When the speech had reached its close: "For the sake of Egypt I signed the 1936 Treaty and for the sake of Egypt I call on you today to abrogate it"; bedlam broke out in the Parliament. Representatives of each of the Opposition parties called for and received the floor to shout wholehearted support of the Government's action. The emotions of the moment were as irrational as the actions which the Prime Minister recommended, but there was no doubt then, and there has not been since, that regardless of the consequences and with no heed to the future, articulate Egypt was behind the Prime Minister to a man.

Throughout the evening of October 8, 1951, correspondents and political analysts were fully occupied, rejoicing, hailing, and prognosticating. Unlike the United States where this process would have occurred in full public view and hearing over television and radio hook-ups, in Egypt it was a front parlour experience—and almost any front parlour would do. Lights were burning most of the night in Political Clubs where in the midst of their enthusiasm Opposition leaders may well have been asking themselves if they had not been a little hasty in embracing a full scale unity behind the Wafd. More than one experienced politician pointed out privately the smoothness with which Nahas Pasha had silenced any possible Opposition criticism by including representatives of every party in the Parliamentary Committee established to study the proposed laws. Participating in that Committee they could certainly not withstand the emotionalism of the moment to do other than vote for the laws. At the same time, once they had voted for them the Opposition Parties stood with the Wafd, jointly responsible for whatever might next develop.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Copies to London, Paris, Moscow, Ankara, Tehran, Tripoli, and the Arab capitals.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.
<sup>3</sup> The complete translated text of the statement in Parliament by Prime Minister Nahas Pasha, Monday, October 8, along with the translated text of the four draft decree laws annuling Egyptian acceptance of the 1899 Condominium Agreement and the 1936 Defense Treaty are in the Green Book issued by Egyptian Ministry of Foreign Affairs entitled Records of Conversations, Notes and Papers Exchanged Between the Royal Egyptian Government and the United Kingdom Government (March 1950-November 1951), Cairo, 1951, pp. 167-179.

A representative group of reasonably objective observers happened to be dining on the night of October 8 at the home of the Public Affairs Officer, Mr. Robert Payne. This group included Dr. Abbas Ammar of the Ministry of Social Affairs; Sami Simaika Bey, Director of the Press Section of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Mohamed Heykal, of the Opposition Akhbar Al Yom; Sami Suki of the United Press; Dr. Salah Al 'Abd, of the Fuad University School of Social Work; prominent engineer, Niaza Mustafa Bey; journalist, Dr. Fuad Sarruf, and others. The majority of the group came directly to Mr. Payne's house from the Parliament meeting.

The immediate consensus of the group was the finality of the Prime Minister's address and in particular the irrevocable nature of the assumption by the Government for the King of the title "King of Egypt and the Sudan". From this consensus divergence arose at once as to the real meaning of the address. The most "Westernized" of the group maintained that this was in fact a "beginning of real Anglo-Egyptian negotiations and relations" while those inclined to be a little more independent in their thinking argued heatedly that to all intent and purposes negotiations between Egypt and Great Britain were now at a complete end and that all that remained was to implement with courage the decisions which had been taken. The group which maintained that the "door is now open" and that the Egyptian people would now feel free to negotiate from strength rather than weakness with anyone whom they chose, including the British, was led by Sami Simaika Bey, Sami Suki and Dr. Abbas Ammar. On the other side were the articulate Mohamed Heykal, Dr. Salah Al 'Abd and Niaza Mustafa Bev.

Interestingly enough, when the conversation swung to the Sudan there was a noticeable realignment of the groups. Sami Suki was of the opinion that the Sudanese would be very pleased by the speech and would rally to Egypt's side. Mohamed Heykal, however, maintained that they would do no such thing. He argued that the Sudan has a better government with less corruption today than Egypt has and that it has "nothing to gain and everything to lose" from a closer association with Egypt. He said that Egypt only takes from the Sudan and gives nothing.

Demonstrations

Immediately following the demonstration within Parliament there was a comparative lull in Cairo while the above "inventory taking" was going on. Early in the morning of October 9, 1951, however, sporadic demonstrations began. They continued throughout the morning to a climax around noon in large crowds at the railroad station to cheer the Prime Minister on his departure for Alexandria.

Demonstrators carried Egyptian flags and banners with slogans such as: "Long Live King of Egypt and the Sudan!" "Long Live Nahas, Hero of Independence!"; and, more ominously: "Get Out of Our Country!" Among slogans shouted was heard: "Long Live Mussadeq 4 and Nahas!"

After touring the main streets demonstrators went to the Abdin Palace Square where they gathered to shout: "Long Live the King of Egypt and the Sudan!" From the Palace they proceeded to the Prime Minister's house where they cheered the Prime Minister "Hero of Independence!" They then moved to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to cheer Mohamed Salaheddin Pasha. To pay tribute to the late Saad Zaghloul Pasha, demonstrators visited his mausoleum and laid wreaths of flowers and recited the opening chapter of the Koran. Press sources estimated that demonstrators in Cairo during the day totalled in the neighborhood of 60,000. This is undoubtedly an exaggerated figure and reflects more onlookers than demonstrators.

The police forces were alerted throughout the day, concentrated particularly on the protection of the approaches to the British and American Embassies. On the whole the demonstrations were reasonably well handled and appeared motivated more by jubilant feelings of demonstrators than by destructive instincts. How long this might continue to be the case could only be a matter of conjecture of dubious value. The temptation to "settle a few scores" in the burst of nationalistic pride might well carry the demonstrations into an entirely different phase.

The only two acts of particular violence which occurred on October 9 were the smashing of a window and a neon sign in the Trans World Airlines office and the rather rough beating received by the driver of a British Embassy car who was so unfortunate as to get the car caught in a crowded street.

On order of the Ministry of Education all government schools in Egypt were closed throughout the day. Despite this fact—or perhaps because of it—students were in little evidence among the demonstrators, most of whom appeared ragged, unorganized and poorly led.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Mohammad Mosadeq, Prime Minister of Iran.

Editorial Reaction

The unanimously enthusiastic editorial reaction to the speech calling for the abrogation of the Treaty is being reported separately. Additional comment will be submitted from time to time.

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

641.74/10-951: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET NIACT

London, October 9, 1951—3 p. m.

1734. We have just talked to Bowker who has been with Morrison all morning re Egyptian situation. Bowker says Foreign Office regards Nahas' action in presenting legislation to Parliament re defense and Sudan questions to be obvious maneuver calculated to enhance his bargaining position in connection new proposals which Egyptian Government knew would be forthcoming. While Foreign Office recognizes this development constitutes something of set-back re our new approach, it nevertheless does not feel it is fatal nor that we should be deterred from presenting our new proposal. It has noted that decrees have been tabled in form of requests for legislation which reinforces their belief that Egyptians regard this as bargaining gambit. Furthermore, they derive some hope from press reports that Nahas' stated action did not preclude consideration new proposals which UK might advance in near future.

Foreign Office is preparing telegrams to Washington, Paris and Ankara along foregoing lines and expressing hope other parties concerned in quadripartite approach will agree that we should carry on with our present plans. It is also drafting instructions to Stevenson to proceed, provided other powers willing, with approach to King and, almost immediately thereafter, to Egyptian Government, putting proposals in writing with view to publication in event their rejection by Egyptian Government. Bowker indicated Foreign Office attaches importance publication under these circumstances so that their reasonable nature will be apparent to world at large in event UK finds it necessary stand on 1936 treaty.

Foreign Office is also drafting press statement deploring Egyptian Government's taking this action at time when it knew new proposals were about to be put to it. Statement will mention in this connection, recent letter Stevenson addressed to Salah El Din informing him proposals would be put by tenth. Statement will conclude by making plain that UK maintains its position with respect 1936 treaty and

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated for information to Paris for MacArthur, to Ankara, and niact to Cairo.

1899 condominium agreement. (Foreign Office, when we left, still uncertain whether it would say "maintains", "stands by" or "reserves" its position with respect to these agreements.)

Bowker asked for our opinion as to how Department would feel re proceeding with approach. We said we had no way of knowing, but recalled that we have always been worried about weakness of UK proposals on Sudan. We said we felt Nahas' action last night made it more doubtful than ever that proposals which UK prepared to put forward would be adequate to meet situation and therefore underline necessity finding something more positive say on this score. Bowker seemed inclined to agree, adding that Robertson, Chief Secretary Sudan, will be in London within next few days and that although Foreign Office has not yet received text of decrees introduced by Nahas re Sudan, examination of these while Robertson is here might result in UK being able find some common ground which would permit formulation proposals which would still be acceptable to Sudanese. He emphasized, however, that proposed decree to amend Farouk's title to make him King of Sudan would be unacceptable to Sudanese, implying he did not see how UK could make any concession on this basic question. Bowker suggested that since any re-examination of Sudan proposals would require time, it might be possible tell Egyptians when approach made on MEC that UK has formulated some proposals on Sudan but that it wished re-examine these in light decrees put forward by Nahas.

At end of conversation we asked Bowker what UK would do in event complete stalemate reached with Egypt on defense question. Bowker replied that he could not say with certainty at this time. UK was again looking urgently into question of alternative locations for headquarters and base. If alternative sites found feasible, it would require time to re-locate facilities and it is HMG's intention to stand firm, resting on treaty rights in meantime. If alternative sites not feasible UK would simply stay put.<sup>2</sup>

GIFFORD

&lt;sup>2</sup> Following a telephone conversation with Prime Minister Attlee, then on an electioneering tour, Morrison issued a statement on the Egyptian abrogation of the 1936 and 1899 treaties late on the afternoon of October 9 which Ambassador Gifford characterized in telegram 1746, niact, from London, as "markedly stronger than that outlined by Bowker earlier today." Gifford added: "Foreign Office tells us Morrison made these changes personally before release 'to season to taste'." (641.74/10–951)

641.74/10-951: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET PRIORITY

Cairo, October 9, 1951—8 p. m.

431. In consideration later events we decided Stevenson shld ask see King which he did and was recd today at noon. King said he had signed necessary papers yesterday at noon "with a heavy heart", but that he had no alternative as he cld not stand against whole country. Stevenson asked him why govt had acted as it did. King said: Primarily for domestic political reasons govt action yesterday has recd unanimous applause and govt has gained new life thereby. Secondly to divert nation's mind from corruption in govt and failure of govt to carry out electoral promises, etc. "However" the King added, "you waited too long. I have been warning you constantly that I cld not hold them off indefinitely".

King then referred with some bitterness to incident 32 years ago when Brit prohibited Egypt King to use title of King of Sudan. "That rankled".

Stevenson assured King that Brit wld do nothing provocative and expressed ardent hope that Egyptians wld show restraint. The King assured him that he had given orders to prevent unseemly demonstrations and "incidents". Stevenson said he hoped Egypt Govt wld not attempt, for instance, to cut off food supplies from Brit troops and King said he wld look into that too. Stevenson asked if King had any further opinion or advice to give and he said absolutely none, that he was up in the air as it was.

My own interpretation is that govt all along has wanted to abrogate treaty and had decided in principle some weeks ago to do so, but in view of MinFonAff's promise to me to wait ten days, they waited until the ten days expired, on Sunday last, and then decided to go ahead immed for fear proposals to be presented on Wednesday might be acceptable to King.

CAFFERY

Editorial Note

On October 10, Secretary Acheson released a statement to the press in which he confirmed the action of the Egyptian Chamber of Deputies (Parliament) abrogating the 1899 and 1936 Anglo-Egyptian agreements regarding the Sudan and Suez, adding:

"None of the agreements in question provides for abrogation. The U.S. Government believes that proper respect for international obligations requires that they be altered by mutual agreement rather than by unilateral action of one of the parties. Furthermore, it should be noted that procedures wholly in accord with such respect for international commitments have already been set in motion."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Paris for MacArthur and to London and Ankara. A typed notation on the source text reads: "Read by Mr. Stabler (NE) 11 p.m., 10/9/51."

Acheson closed his statement with the observation that new proposals to the Egyptian Government had been formulated over the past several months and "were to be presented to it within the next few days. It is the belief of the United States that a solution to the Anglo-Egyptian question can be found through these proposals." The complete text of Acheson's statement, from which the above excerpts have been taken, is in the Department of State Bulletin, October 22, 1951, page 647.

641.74/10-1251

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Morrison) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[London, October 12, 1951.]

May I say how deeply we in this country appreciated your timely declaration <sup>2</sup> on the situation created by the Egyptian Government's move to abrogate the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936 and the Condominium Agreements of 1899 regarding the Sudan? It is a great comfort to know that the United States are at one with us in appraising a situation which is of critical significance to the whole of the free world.

- 2. As you know we were determined that the Egyptian Government's action should not be allowed to deflect us from our intention to present to the Egyptian Government the proposals which we had worked out in the fullest consultation with our Allies not only for the settlement of Anglo-Egyptian differences, but for broadening and strengthening the foundations of the defence of the whole of the Middle East region. The support of the United States with that of France and Turkey in presenting these proposals will do more than anything else at the present time to convince Egypt of their value to her and to bring her as we hope she will be brought to play her part with us all in this great task.
- 3. It may be too much to hope for an early conclusion of a settlement with Egypt on the basis of our proposals. If the atmosphere improves and united firmness by us all is the best means to that end it may be as well that as has already been suggested General Bradley,

&lt;sup>1</sup> A notation on the source text reads: "Recd from Mr. Greenhill 10/12/51 10:30 p. m. Wells Stabler."

<sup>2</sup> See editorial note, supra.

Field Marshal Slim and General Lecheres with a Turkish General should go on from Ankara to Cairo.<sup>3</sup> Given an initial measure of willingness on the Egyptian side they would be able to explain in military terms the full practical implications of our proposals and to answer questions. There would of course be no question of their conducting negotiations.

- 4. Urgent as it is to complete the arrangements for setting up the Allied Middle East Command it is not our intention that the negotiations with Egypt should be rushed. We are prepared to talk patiently but I ought to make it clear that we have reached in the agreed proposals the limit of concessions we could make regarding the position of British troops and the base. It is also out of the question as I am sure you will agree for us to depart from our undertakings to the peoples of the Sudan. These we publicly re-affirmed on the 11th October.
- 5. You will have seen that the statement by His Majesty's Government on the 9th October 4 in which they announced that they maintained their full rights under the Treaty and the Condominium Agreements pending a satisfactory agreement with Egypt on the new proposals carried the implication that until such an agreement were reached our troops would stay in the Canal Zone. This is indeed our intention. You will remember that I informed you to this effect in my personal message of the 15th August 5 and again on the 10th September in the course of our conversations in Washington 6 prior to the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Ottawa.
- 6. We have naturally considered the implications of this decision. Our Commanders-in-Chief in the Middle East have the necessary plans ready. These foresee action by the Egyptian Government together with the appropriate British counter-measures under various stages.
- 7. Stage I can be said to have begun with Nahas Pasha's action on the 8th October. At this stage the Commanders-in-Chief contemplate and have been authorised to institute at their discretion what may be called passive security measures. These involve a formal request to Egyptian local authorities to maintain order, the stopping of leave to Caior [Cairo] and Alexandria (which has already been enforced), the posting of additional security guards and the like.
- 8. Stage II arises if the Egyptian Government resorts to administrative non-cooperation. At this stage the Government might obstruct and delay customs posts, civil aviation, quarantine clearances and the clearance of ships through the Suez Canal and interfere with our labour supply. There might be increased rudeness official and individual to the British personnel. Hostile demonstrations and minor violence might take place. In such a situation our passive security measures would be continued but intensified. Military protective patrols might have to be instituted and families of all ranks in the Canal Zone concentrated into more secure areas. Here again the Commanders-in-Chief have been given authority to take the appropriate counter-measures.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Regarding the visit of Generals Bradley and Lecheres and Field Marshal Slim to Ankara, October 13–14, see the editorial note, p. 211.

&lt;sup>4</sup> See footnote 2, p. 396. <sup>5</sup> Ante, p. 372.

&lt;sup>6</sup> For documentation on the September 10 Acheson-Morrison talks, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 1163 ff.

- 9. Stage III would amount to an Egyptian blockade of our forces. The Egyptian Government would no doubt pretend that our position in Egypt was illegal and would attempt to persuade us by such measures as the withdrawal of labour supplies and port facilities and restriction of movement in and out of the Canal Zone to withdraw. They might refuse the passage of ships through the Canal. We naturally hope that this stage will be averted but if it is forced upon us we should have to take counter-blockade measures. The nature of these would naturally depend on the particular steps which the Egyptian Government took on their side. It would almost certainly be necessary to reinforce our troops in the Canal Zone and might eventually be necessary to take complete control there. In the worst case Egyptian troops might have to be removed by force if necessary. We might also have to take certain additional measures to ensure the passage of shipping through the Canal.
- 10. As I have said we trust that we shall not be faced with Stage III. If it should however be forced on us we shall face it and see it through and I hope not alone. Our Military Advisers are completely confident of our ability to hold and maintain ourselves in the Canal Zone. Much as we should regret the necessity of using force we would not shrink from our responsibilities if the situation demanded it. I am confident that in this course we should have the full moral support of the United States and the other countries to whom as well as to us the freedom of the Middle East region is a vital interest. The consequences of a withdrawal which to us is unthinkable whether from the military, political or moral point of view would be so disastrous not only for this country but for the Western Allies as a whole as to leave us all no alternative but to stand firm together. Indeed if we were to withdraw the whole world would say that Britain had lost not to Egypt but to her Allies.
- 11. None of the counter measures envisaged under Stage III has yet been authorised. It may be some time before the need for this arises. On the other hand it might arise at any moment and without warning. In giving such authority His Majesty's Government would naturally do their utmost to consult the other Governments principally concerned in organising Middle East Defence.

- 12. Should matters come to this pass there would of course be no hope of organising the Middle East Command on the lines agreed and in our view we should be obliged to proceed without Egypt. Indeed that hope would be shattered much sooner if the Egyptian Government definitely reject the agreed proposals. But in either case it would seem all the more urgent to press on with the Command arrangements and we would be strongly in favour of agreeing at least upon the appointment of a Supreme Allied Commander and we would place British forces in the Canal Zone under his command as contemplated in the agreed proposals. In view of Egypt's non-cooperation the Allied Headquarters would no doubt have to be set up outside Egypt, His Majesty's Government for their part would agree to the establishment of the headquarters in Cyprus.
- 13. It might be contended that the existence of a base in Egypt is a cardinal feature of the Allied Middle East Command organization and that if Egypt will not participate there can be no Allied base there. I hope that there will be no thought of listening to such an argument. The plain fact will be that the British as I have said intend to hold the Egyptian base. If the Egyptians agree to participate in the Middle East Command well and good and the base would become an Allied base. But if there is no agreement with Egypt we still intend to hold the base so that it may be available for use by the Allies. And it is in this sense that I think we may regard ourselves as agents acting on behalf of the free world when we say that we intend to stay in Egypt at whatever cost and ask for the support and encouragement of the United States Government in our stand.
- 14. There is one more point. The Turkish attitude I am sure will be profoundly affected by British and American intentions regarding Egypt. The first thing the Turks will want to know is what we are going to do in Egypt and by our answer they will judge whether it is safe for them to come into a Middle East Command. In fact in response to the most urgent representations from Field Marshal Slim who is in Ankara with General Bradley and General Lecheres we have authorized him to assure the Turks that our policy is to stand our ground in Egypt. We shall be explaining our policy to the French and Turkish Governments and appropriate Commonwealth Governments but I wanted to have your reaction first and hope to hear from you urgently.

Editorial Note

Morrison's message was the subject of a brief Department of State-Joint Chiefs of Staff meeting on October 15 which revolved around determining the proper response by the United States Government to the Egyptian abrogation of the 1936 and 1899 treaties. No firm agreements were reached because it was realized that Secretary Acheson and the President would first have to discuss a proper reply to Morrison. However, the possibly harmful repercussions in the Near East to a firm United States condemnation of Egypt were discussed with particular stress on the possible danger to United States relations with Saudi Arabia which was considered a firm friend of Egypt. Nitze closed the meeting "by saying that backing up the British in Egypt may not be the best course of action, but in the absence of anyone else willing to expend their resources and assume responsibility there, he felt that backing the British was the inevitable answer". Egypt was the subject of further brief discussion with respect to a possible Middle East Command at the Department of State-Joint Chiefs of Staff meeting on October 26. (State-JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417)

641.74/10-1551

Memorandum for the Files by the Deputy Under Secretary of State
(Matthews)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] October 15, 1951.

Following the meeting held in my office Saturday morning, October 13, with Sir Oliver Franks and Mr. Burrows, Mr. McGhee, Mr. Perkins and myself, I telephoned the Secretary in the country concerning Mr. Morrison's personal message to him on the Egyptian situation. The Secretary had read Mr. Morrison's message and I outlined to him our thinking concerning an interim reply. The Secretary felt we should take a rather "stout-hearted" attitude. He said the situation in Egypt, involving the unilateral abrogation of treaty rights, and with British forces actually on the ground, was quite a different one from that in Iran. He asked me to telephone Sir Oliver Franks, and referring to our recognition of this difference between the two situations to say that we are in full accord with the British with regard to stages 1 and 2 and these would present us with no problem. Stage 3 might involve far-reaching consequences and therefore would require rather full consultation within our Government, including the Secretary of Defense and the President. However, Mr. Acheson's first impression was not unfavorable.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Copies to S/S, EUR, NEA, S/P.

I reached Sir Oliver by telephone at 3 o'clock and conveyed the foregoing to him. He said he thought this interim reply would meet his requirements for the weekend and expressed his appreciation.

I said our military would probably want more details from the British military as to just what specific steps the British had in mind.

I also asked Sir Oliver if he could ascertain any plans the British Government might have for the protection of British and other foreign lives in Cairo or elsewhere in Egypt if rioting broke out following parliamentary action on the treaty today.<sup>2</sup>

H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS

641.74/10-1651: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET NIACT

London, October 16, 1951—6 p. m.

1857. Bowker has just informed us 16th Paratroop Brigade and 2nd Infantry Brigade being ordered from Cyprus to Canal Zone. Move will probably not be announced until tomorrow, but FonOff anxious let us know.

Reason for foregoing is concern at developing sitn as result of incidents, some by Egyptian Govt (such as interference telephone and railway traffic) and some by mobs and individuals (such as several incidents against Brit soldiers, interference with labor force, stoning school bus with Brit children in Canal Zone, riots Ismailia, etc.). Bowker said that move not intended be in any way provocative and that every attempt will be made emphasize its defensive and protective character.

Brit mil auths are also being auth take certain "negative" actions in present emergency. Bowker listed these as:

1. Removal any road blocks erected by Egyptians in Zone.

2. Putting emergency labor sched into effective (Bowker, while uncertain, thought this meant organization of troops and volunteers into labor force rather than any attempt conscription).

into labor force rather than any attempt conscription).3. Setting up of check points to prevent undesirables from entering zone.

4. Prohibiting aircraft from flying over area except with prior permission. (Bowker said this measure has, of course, internatl aspects which are being urgently looked into.)

&lt;sup>2</sup>The gist of the Matthews-Franks conversation recounted in the source text was sent to Ankara in telegram 336, October 13, repeated niact to Cairo and to London and Paris (641.74/10-1351).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

Fr and Turks will be informed of troop movements, but not of the further measures outlined above.<sup>2</sup>

GIFFORD

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 1862 from London, October 16, Gifford reported that the movement of the two brigades would be by air "beginning tomorrow or possibly tonight" (641.74/10-1651). In telegram 502 from Cairo, October 17, Caffery stated that the U.S. Naval Attaché had reported the arrival of a British light cruiser at Port Said, the concentration of British families in Port Said, and Egyptian interference with British vessels carrying military supplies (641.74/10-1751). In telegram 519 from Cairo, October 18, Caffery reported that an "Unevaluated new source" had stated confidentially that the Muslim Brotherhood had gathered arms and ammunition and was leaving the following morning for Suez "to avenge Egyptians killed by British whose corpses prominently displayed today's Arabic press." The same source had reported that the Brotherhood had taken a resolution to go ahead with its 11-point program of violence, war, and terrorism regardless of subsequent government policy. (641.74/10-1851) In telegram 1990 from London of October 23, Gifford reported that the Foreign Office had informed him that another brigade was being ordered to Suez, from Tripoli, and this report was subsequently confirmed by Consul General Andrew G. Lynch at Tripoli in telegrams 159 of October 25 and 163 of October 26. (641.74/10-2351, 10-2551, 10-2551, 10-2651)

641.74/10-1251

The Secretary of State to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Morrison)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Personal Message From Mr. Acheson to Mr. Morrison

I have received your message of October 12 <sup>2</sup> regarding recent developments in the Anglo-Egyptian dispute and the three stages of action by the Egyptian Government and British counter-measures which you believe may be required in certain eventualities.

As you know, we share your deep concern over the deterioration of the situation in Egypt and deplore the action of the Egyptian Government on October 8 for the unilateral abrogation of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936 and the Condominium Agreements of 1899 regarding the Sudan. We have no doubt that the Egyptian action is contrary to these agreements, which do not provide for unilateral abrogation.

You also know that we deeply regret that the Egyptian Government rejected the Four Power proposals <sup>3</sup> in such summary fashion. It had been our earnest hope that these proposals would make possible closer and more cooperative relations with Egypt and that a new era of international responsibility would develop in the Middle East area, fully compatible with Egypt's position as a sovereign and independent nation.

&lt;sup>1</sup>A handwritten notation on the source text reads: "Handed by Sec. to Burrows British Embassy Counselor at 6:00 p. m. 10/17. Transmitted to London by telegram #2069." A copy of this telegram is in file 641.74/10–1751.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Reference is to the proposals for a Middle East Command presented to the Egyptian Government on October 13 and formally rejected on October 15. See editorial note, p. 391.

I have already sent word to you through Ambassador Franks 4 that we are in full accord with your thinking relating to stages 1 and 2 and we are prepared to render to the United Kingdom full moral support relative thereto. These stages involve Egyptian initiative and we recognize the inherent right of British forces to defend themselves against attacks. The same is true in connection with the protection of British nationals whose lives are placed in jeopardy by Egyptian action.

As you recognize, stage 3 raises more serious problems, including that of world public opinion. The United States believes that the British Government is fully justified in retaining its forces in the Canal Zone under the 1936 Treaty until some substitute is available for this arrangement such as that proposed under MEC. We share your view of the grave consequences to the West of a British withdrawal now from the Suez Base. We also believe that actions which may become necessary to keep open the Suez Canal are justified. We are therefore prepared to give our full political and diplomatic support to measures necessary (but which do not go beyond what is necessary) for the purposes of protecting the Suez Base and keeping the Canal open.

In this connection, I have every confidence that your forces will continue to conduct themselves, even in the face of unreasonable Egyptian actions, with that restraint which is so necessary to retain the support of world opinion. I mention this because of the importance I attach to avoiding the increased difficulties which would face us both if steps should be taken or events occur which would create violent adverse reaction from such opinion.

DEAN ACHESON

Washington, October 17, 1951.

641.74/10-1751 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT CAIRO, October 17, 1951—10 p. m.

507. The Brit Amb showed me this morning reports from Suez about disturbances there yesterday and the consequent measures taken by the Brit mil auths. The mil were forced to fire on mob at Ismailia attacking Brit dependents and killed five persons. At Port Said the

&lt;sup>4</sup> See memorandum for the files by Matthews, October 15, p. 402.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, and Ankara.

Egypt police coop successfully in restoring order. (The Egypt Govt seems desirous of playing down this action because in communiqué they issued last night they mentioned that five persons were killed but did not state that the Brit had done it.) There were cases of looting Brit houses, burning Brit autos, etc. As the situation seemed to be getting out of hand the Brit established roadblocks at all entrances and exits of the canal zone. Brit Amb asked London for auth in case of extreme necessity to cut the Cairo oil pipeline. Suez mil were asking for reinforcements.

The Brit Amb sent a note this morning inviting the attn of the Egyptian Govt to this situation.

There were also cases of difficulties with Egyptian laborers employed at the base and deliveries of food supplies have been interrupted.

The Brit Amb sent report on all this to London and requested it be passed to State Dept.

The Brit Amb showed me a tel from Wash inquiring as to measures contemplated in case of danger to Brit and Amer lives. In conjunction with Brit mil Brit Amb has almost completed a comprehensive report on this which if approved at London will be transmitted to the State Dept. There are 27,000 Brit subjects in Egypt.

Brit Amb sent this morning another note to Egypt MinFonAff protesting against anti-Brit articles appearing in extremist press and against sermons preached in a number of mosques last Friday that it was no crime to kill a Brit subj.

As Dept is aware the hostility to the US prevailing two years ago had diminished very considerably. Of course, recent events have made us again a full target for Egypt popular and press animosity. The govt however up to now has been playing sharply down attempts to be patter US and officials, and the King especially have gone out of their way in the past few days to show public sympathy with this Emb. Of course we will avoid any attempt to drive wedge between us.

The French and Turk Ambs returned to Cairo yesterday, I return today and Brit tomorrow.

The 16th Parachute Brigade is arriving this evening in Suez.2

Caffery

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 510 from Cairo, October 18, Caffery stated that while he believed the British "went beyond what was strictly necessary" in putting down disturbances in the canal zone, "their action has had a very salutary effect. If they had shown any disposition to give ground current situation throughout Egypt might well have become critical." Caffery added that he would, however, "take occasion to tell Stevenson that I hope he will keep a close eye on his military and see that they do nothing which might worsen situation, as animosity against Brit has been considerably increased by happenings on the 16th October." (641.74/10–1851) In telegram 516 from Cairo, October 18, Caffery repeated that British actions had "had very salutary effect in Egypt" and added that American business representatives at Suez confirmed that British forces had taken "practical charge of canal zone" including the Sinai bridge thus cutting Egyptian communications with military forces in Gaza (641.74/10–1851).

641.74/10-1951 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

London, October 19, 1951—8 p. m.

1941. FonOff reaction to events of last few days in Egypt is one of cautious optimism. It feels that on whole measures which UK mil has found necessary take in canal area have had salutary effect. but considers it is too early to judge whether Egyptians will be deterred from taking further provocative steps. FonOff stresses that steps which it has taken thus far have been purely precautionary in intent and that any salutary effect which has flowed from them has been purely coincidental (but no less welcome).

FonOff seems acutely aware necessity proceeding with caution altho equally convinced of need for strength. It places particular importance on necessity avoiding any action which wld result deterioration relationships between UK and Egypt mil which, throughout crisis and despite incidents, have remained surprisingly good.

We understand FonOff is keeping mil plans under close observation and that no major mil decisions will be made without FonOff concurrence. As example, we have been told FonOff has asked mil review question of necessity prohibiting flights over canal area. (Embtel 1857, Oct 16).<sup>2</sup> Also, decision re cutting off flow oil to Cairo (Cairo's 207 Oct 17 <sup>3</sup>) has been held in abeyance until it has been seen how sitn develops.

GIFFORD

641.74/10-2351: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT

Cairo, October 23, 1951—3 p. m.

555. Ref Embtels 553 and 554, October 23.2 I repeat, in my opinion it is important on our side not to do anything to worsen the situation here. It is essential for Brit mil auths in Canal Zone to do everything needful and even go a little beyond that at times to protect their

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 403.

<sup>3</sup> Same as telegram 507 from Cairo, October 17, supra.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London, Paris, Ankara. A typed notation on the source text reads: "Mr. Stabler's office (NE) notified 5: 15 p.m. 10/31/51."

Neither printed; telegram 553 reported the British decision to cut off all fuel oil supplies from Suez to Cairo in retaliation for Egyptian interference with British military trains in the canal zone. Telegram 554 reported on civil disturbances in Cairo and stern police countermeasures including firing into crowds of demonstrators. (641.74/10-2351) position there, and up to now they have done just that. This morning, however, I felt compelled to tell my Brit colleague that in my opinion Brit Zone Commander who this morning cut off fuel oil supplies from Egypt was going a bit too far. Fuel oil is used for electric power, telephones, telegrams, railroads, bakeries, mills, factories and industrial establishments, in general.

When this becomes known reaction of population will be violent. Difficult control and large fon population here will suffer.

Cutting off fuel oil wld be perfectly justifiable in a real emergency. The CG told the Gov of Suez at 6 last night that unless trains in zone were running again this morning at 6 he wld take this action. I told Stevenson that I agree that it is necessary to keep trains running and that the gen wld be perfectly justified in taking measures to force Egypt to do this, and there are plenty of other measures he cld take. But this particular one directed against the whole population simply does not show a sense of proportion.

Stevenson is extremely unhappy about this and said obviously he has no control over the mil; he thanked me and said he wld telegraph urgently on this subj to London.

In meantime, our oil reps, who tell me with careful handling there are stocks for ten days of fuel oil in Egypt, are urgently asking for advice. I told them take it easy for a day or two.

It is plain that if this order is allowed to stand all hell will break loose in Egypt in a very few days. However, I am not suggesting that Dept take this up with London at this juncture. I shld prefer to await the reply from London to Stevenson.

Incidentally I asked Stevenson why since Erskine has taken over the trains he does not run them with Brit personnel. Stevenson did not know the answer.<sup>3</sup>

CAFFERY

&lt;sup>a</sup> Caffery informed the Secretary in telegram 563 of October 24 from Cairo that Ambassador Stevenson "tells me this morning that after our conversation he took up fuel oil embargo with Gen Robertson [Commander in Chief, British Middle East Land Forces] and that Robertson sent him word this morning that he had 'turned on the tap' again this morning at 6, but on day-to-day basis. However, he promised not turn off tap again without consulting Brit Amb who will consult with me." Caffery added that Robertson's action had averted a serious crisis and that the General acted "in view what I said to Stevenson." (641.74/10–2451). In telegram 2024 from London of October 24, Ambassador Gifford informed the Secretary, inter alia, that the Foreign Office "gathers prevention Suez-Cairo oil shipments carried out without realization probable serious econ consequences and has taken view that prohibition shld be withdrawn, especially since it has already served purpose showing Egypts that Brit authorities Canal Zone have available effective countermeasure." (641.74/10–2451)

641.74/10-2451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

Carro, October 24, 1951—9 p. m.

565. Mytel 557, October 24.2 The King said he desired to talk first about cutting off of fuel oil by Brit commanding general. He narrated in great detail all the dire consequences, including eventually revolution, that would entail. I was able to tell him that shipments had recommenced this morning. He went on to criticize with some vehemence the activities in general of Brit military in Canal Zone. I apprehend that he has lost most of his friendly feeling for Brit. He said that they were making it impossible for him or any Egypt Govt ever to accept a satisfactory solution of either defense problem or Sudan question. He again lamented fact that proposals were put forward at so inopportune a moment. He indicated that we and only we would ever be in a position to help find reasonable solutions. He urged us not to do anything on our side to worsen the situation. He then said, "I shall tell you and you only a few secrets that even my govt do not know. First, they think that the Min FonAff will head the delegation at Paris but I have decided that he would do no good there and I shall send Fawzi Bey. Second, if Brit attempt remove my troops out of the Canal Zone I shall order them to resist to the last man. Third, I had a spy a night or two ago at an Ikwan mtg when oaths were taken to kill 13 men; I was first on the list and Nahas second.

He went on to say that he is extremely pessimistic about the way things are going: "It looks like we are headed for real trouble from which only the Commies would profit."

I told him he should understand that Brit military authorities in Canal Zone are having a tough time and that they are justified in going even beyond the strictly necessary in order to defend their position; but I agreed they should do nothing provocative or uselessly irritating.

I reminded him how frivolously his govt handled our proposals and that their only endeavor was to have a domestic political triumph. He agreed.

I believe it is clear he would still like Egypt to take part in an Eastern Medit set-up but in face of inflamed and inflammatory sentiment and passions here he is not optimistic about near future.

CAFFERY

eral Assembly which met at Paris between November 6, 1951, and February 5,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, to Paris for MacArthur, and to Ankara.
<sup>2</sup> Not printed; it read: "King has sent me word he desires to see me urgently today. I am flying to Alexandria." (641.74/10-2451) Reference was to the forthcoming Sixth Session of the United Nations Gen-

641.74/10-2551: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT CAIRO, October 25, 1951—3 p. m.

568. Stevenson was in despair last night. Notwithstanding Gen Robertson's promise to him in the morning he was threatening last night to turn off tap again because he was not sure "Egypts had learned their lesson". I took high exception to this and Stevenson promised to do his best with Brit mil. "Remember, however," he remarked, "We in England are without a govt now". In addition to formidable list consequence set out in mytel 55 [555] I should add important irrigation pumps and domestic cooking. Furthermore, bakeries have fuel oil on hand for about three days. What wld mobs do in dark streets?

Brit Shell manager says cessation fuel oil traffic out of Suez wld force refinery to close within two or three days owing lack storage facilities. This wld immed force shut-down producing fields and deny white refinery products for pipeline transport. Supplies thus lost wld be irremedial inasmuch as transport capacity normally worked at maximum.

Brit mil significantly have informed Stevenson that their position in Canal Zone is untenable unless they receive minimum coop from Egypts. I retorted, "That is not the way to get it".4

CAFFERY

641.74/10-2651: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT CAIRO, October 26, 1951—3 p. m.

575. Mytel 560 Oct 24.2 Serageddin Pasha, Abboud Pasha, and I explored last night practically all angles of Anglo-Egypt sitn. I counselled him to take it easy in his efforts to harass Brit in Canal

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, and Ankara.

&lt;sup>2</sup> General elections were being held throughout the United Kingdom on this day which led to a change of governments, the Conservative Party led by Winston Churchill replacing the Labour Party of Clement Attlee.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Dated October 23, p. 407.

In telegram 569 from Cairo, October 25, Caffery reported that Stevenson was able to persuade the British military not to turn off the oil taps again "and he is proceeding to Suez tomorrow to talk to Robertson and endeavor to persuade him that decision of that category shld be on cabinet level." Caffery added that Stevenson was cabling London "to put whatever govt comes in as result of elections on notice that very grave decisions must be taken soon at London." (641.74/10-2551)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, and Ankara.

Not printed; it reported that at the request of Abboud Pasha and Seraggedin, Caffery would dine with them on the evening of October 25 (641.74/10-2451).

Zone. I chided him for frivolous way they had handled our proposals etc., etc.

He exposed at some length Egypt point of view re Brit in gen and recent activities of Brit in Canal Zone in particular, emphasizing the inherent explosive potentialities of stopping fuel oil shipments, that Brit have still not turned tap all the way on as they promised, etc.

We reviewed the def proposals and in the end Serageddin said he wld like to continue these conversations with end in view of finding a reasonable agmt on them, but solely on the condition that something be done about the Sudan.

He insisted on Egypt side that only he and Abboud know about the conversation and he hoped I wld keep them to myself on our side.

Stevenson proceeds tomorrow to Suez (mytel 569 Oct 25)<sup>3</sup> in endeavor to persuade Robertson to turn tap all the way (it is now running three-fourths way).

CAFFERY

641.74/10-2751: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, October 27, 1951—7 p. m.

589. Now that dust beginning to settle I believe it desirable briefly recapitulate what has happened in Egypt recently and assess, reevaluate our policy.

1. Egyptians have been pursuing blindly fatalistic policy re Anglo-Egyptian negotiations. Their do or die attitude has now passed the "do" stage and they are faced with a possible "die" stage.

- 2. The effective and firm British action in Suez zone has brought this fact most unpleasantly to attention of the Egyptians. Despite all bluster about "British aggression" closest reflection we have of true Egyptian reaction is plaintive newspaper headline "but they evacuated Abadan".<sup>2</sup>
- 3. Egyptians are surprised, hurt and deeply resentful. Their frustration and hatred is primarily focussed on British, but in the thrashings around, US French and Turk and West all came in for their share of abuse.
- 4. Frustration and hatred do not arise so much from fact Egyptians' lives have been lost but more from fact that Egyptians have made such poor showing when put to test.

Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, and Ankara.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference is to the Anglo-Egyptian dispute over nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company; see p. 544.

- 5. The army is not happy that politicians have placed it in unevitable position of having its only effective division "trapped" in Gaza with Israelis on one side and a potentially hostile British force sitting on its supply lines.
- 6. The supply line is virtually exhausted and the hangover stage is not far away. The politicians have a few last weapons, among which is a rumored "declaration of war" against British. However, there is realization that this could only result in quick British occupation of whole country.
- 7. This has resulted in a surprising rash of exhortations to keep calm, typified by the pro-Wafdist Al Misri "Every attack on a foreigner will lead to the loss of the friendship of another nation and provide the enemy with a mortal weapon". Egypt suddenly realizes that she needs friends, and has very few.
- 8. This is accompanied by vengeful note of "Let's make friends with Russia". This is so far not serious threat, and it is believed that on this issue the King could successfully hold line as such a move would not have the irresistable appeal that characterized abrogation.
- 9. There is increasing evidence that King would like to seize the first opportunity to effect a change of government. He cannot easily forget spot which Nahas has put him in nor Nahas's defiance in persisting with abrogation proposals. King will not, however, take positive line until very sure of his ground.
- 10. It is unfortunate that circumstances did not permit our delaying proposals until the change envisaged in (9) took place. Even the most pliable of new governments could not accept the proposals without their being dressed up a bit. We can never get by with less than legal recognition of title "King of the Sudan".
- 11. Our firm support of British has been of great help to them at time they needed help. It has also made our moderating voice more effective with them. It has not yet irreparably damaged us with the Egyptians who still have hope that the US can do something to save them from the mess which they are in. This, plus other pertinent factors mentioned above produce the "crack in the door" mentioned in previous telegrams.

In another telegram I shall recommend how, in my opinion, we can best exploit the situation.

CAFFERY

641.74/10-3051: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, October 30, 1951—2 p. m.

- 609. General recommendations re my telegram 589 October 27<sup>2</sup> on shape of things to come in Egypt:
- 1. We must above all pursue moderation theme (rather than mediation). While this may well come to point where it has to be broached on Washington-London level, we have so far avoided resentments which such approaches are apt to produce. Stevenson has been more than cooperative and I believe that this channel should be exploited to utmost.
- 2. In contrast with moderation we must never give impression that we are deserting our British friends. This would be fatal to us and to them. However, we must at the same time keep path to the crack in the door. Large part of this process will have to be played locally by ear.
- 3. We still have "position" in Egypt, and our prestige is not at too low level. While we must be firm in support of principles we must be careful to avoid punitive measures against Egypt, such as shutting off of present economic (Point Four) aid, etc. This tightrope is not going to be easy to walk. Our British friends will be seeking our support for their actions and the Egyptians will be seeking our good will and intervention against such actions.
- 4. We must seek to restrain British military "trigger happiness" until such time as drastic action is justified. (Such action can be most effective.) We must also seek to restrain Egyptian trigger happiness (not so much on actual military measures, but rather on measures destined to provoke British into abrupt action).
- 5. Our USIE output should stress inherent dangers of those who seek to play ball with the Soviets, and give picture of what has happened in countries which have tried this dangerous game. We should also intensify USIE activities immediately aiming particularly at lower level mass approach as most effective weapon against growing extremist movements.
- 6. We must not only be guided by the factors in the local situation mentioned in the reference telegram but also seek to exploit every hesitation that exists in Arab States re Egypt's actions. This should not, however, at this juncture be directed towards breaking up the Arab League.
- 7. We should proceed set up Middle East Command without Egypt, but continue emphasize regret non-Egyptian participation and leave

2 Supra.

Repeated to London, Ankara, Paris for MacArthur.

door open for eventual Egyptian membership on full partnership basis.

8. Do a little prettying up of Four-Nation proposal but refrain from re-presenting proposals until auspicious moment.

9. It is necessary that we face up to fact proposals will not be accepted without something substantial on Sudan and begin laying groundwork with British to convince them of this. We should be prepared to associate US with Sudan offers if British make them sufficiently substantial.

10. Avoid attempts "push" Egyptians during this period during which such attempts can only boomerang our detriment. In particular avoid any appearance assisting in demise of Wafd power under circumstances which could result throwing Wafd in arms of Reds.

My more explicit where-do-we-go-from-here telegram will follow.<sup>3</sup>

CAFFERY

641.74/10-3051: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, October 30, 1951—7 p. m.

2094. Eden's <sup>2</sup> first action re Egypt will probably be considered policy statement which FonOff now drafting and which if approved will be sent as instruction to Stevenson. It wld be brief and main object wld be set general course from which future decisions wld flow. It will undoubtedly confirm Brit stand to date. FonOff intends inform Dept fully.

In discussing Dept's concern re fuel oil shipments and sending Haifa tankers thru canal, FonOff this afternoon said UK wld of course keep these points fully in mind. It doubted action on either was early prospect, but particularly re former said UK was understandably not in very charitable mood toward Egypt since Min Interior seemed to be doing nothing to make good his promises there wld be no intimidations [garble] or interference with essential supplies for Brit troops. Govt's practice seems to be just the opposite and furthermore terrorist grps are making way to canal zone with at least connivance of govt.

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo. <sup>2</sup> Anthony Eden had replaced Morrison as British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in the Churchill government as a result of the general elections of October 25.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 616, p. 415.

FonOff hopes Sudan commission's appeal to UN will die on vine but recognizes that if internatl interest in Sudan is stirred up UK may have new problem to consider. FonOff definitely dislikes idea of UN comm sticking its nose into Sudan and thinks Sudanese wld be best advised to get on with present program leading to self-govt.3

<sup>3</sup> In telegram 614, niact, from Cairo of October 31, Caffery informed the Secretary, inter alia, that Stevenson had reported the situation in the canal zone was "deteriorating daily" because of an increasing exodus of Egyptian labor and the fact that "Brit mil have again virtually turned off tap" in order to force the Egyptian Government to do something about getting the workers back on the job. Caffery added that he was not encouraged by London's attitude as reported in the source text. "Brit have in mind number of drastic reprisals in zone and I will go along with them as I have gone always in past but I can not go along with an action which if carried out will end only in reoccupation and revolution." (641.74/10-3151)

641.74/10-3151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, October 31, 1951—9 p. m.

616. These are my recommendations on where-do-we-go-from-here. In my opinion measures, reprisals, etc., taken by British up to now in Zone, with exception of fuel oil squeeze, have been justified although at times they have gone little far. For instance, on British side there have been no casualties, but on Egypt side allegedly 19 killed and 125 wounded.

There are three choices and only three choices open to us:

First, let matters drift in hands of British military as they are now and end soon in British re-occupation of Egypt followed by revolution. It is possible that some British military would welcome this. Second, disassociate our responsibility from operations of British military in the Zone;

Third, agree that Britain shall continue reprisals etc as they have in the past with the exception of the fuel oil squeeze; but take out of the hands of British military in Zone the power of decision for re-occupation and measures like cutting off fuel oil, which would inevitably lead to re-occupation. Such decisions should be made by higher-ups. At the same time I continue conversations of the kind I have begun with Serageddin in due course bringing in the King in hope of eventual agreement on defense proposals on condition that Brit do something about Sudan. As Department is aware even now Egypt credentials are made out in name of Sovereign of the Sudan and even British admit there is much to be said for the King's right to title King of Sudan. However every day present British military fuel oil tactics continue hope of eventual agreement grows dimmer and dimmer. One very tiny bright spot is that more and more thinking

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Ankara, Moscow, Paris for MacArthur, and Arab capitals.

Egyptians are asking themselves "where do we go from here?" and are willing at least to examine defense proposals.

Although eventually we may have to get rid of WAFD Government it would be folly to ask King to do it now, for variety of reasons, primarily because he could not find at this juncture government to take its place. Same holds for Salaheddin; as much as King and Prime Minister and others in Cabinet would like to get rid of him they dare not do it now because of possibility of setting at head of an exceedingly dangerous very leftist movement. We shall have to take it easy for while but not as long perhaps as we now think if only British Government will explain facts of life to British Generals at Fayid. There is no problem with British Embassy. I know Department has in mind situation which could arise when British troops in Fayid under MEC command could by intemperate and/or irresponsible action if not controlled from above lead us into dire difficulty.

I have not seen my French and Turk colleagues this evening but from conversations last night with them I believe safe to say they will go along with me on very word of this.

Department pass Moscow.

CAFFERY

641.74/11-251 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 2, 1951—7:40 p. m.

2325. Dept again raised with Brit Emb Nov 1 stoppage overland transport fuel supplies (Cairo's 614 Oct 31, 617 and 624 Nov 1<sup>2</sup> and Deptel 2222 Oct 27<sup>3</sup>). McGhee told Brit Min Steel decision re such stoppage too important to be made by mil auths alone and said in our view stoppage having effect contrary that desired by Brit mil. McGhee also mentioned consequences which such stoppage directed against Egypt civil population might have (Cairo's 614 and 616 Oct 31<sup>4</sup>).

Steel promised report Dept concern to FonOff but said he was sure we did not intend deny to UK means of retaliating to protect its position. McGhee said that only measure Brit have taken so far which causes real concern is stoppage fuel. Steel also said that

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Stabler, approved for transmission and initialed by McGhee. Repeated to Cairo, Paris, and Ankara.

&lt;sup>2</sup> None printed.
<sup>3</sup> Not printed; it reported that Department officials had called in representatives of the British Embassy and had told them of the Department's great concern over recent British measures to cut off the fuel supply between the canal zone and Cairo (641.74/10-2751).

<sup>4</sup> Neither printed.

although London had not instructed Robertson to stop fuel shipments, he felt Robertson cld be counted on to do nothing rash.

Dept hopes Emb will fol closely situation Egypt as reported Cairo's tels and will keep before FonOff our view it is important nothing be permitted which wld cause further deterioration situation.

Webb

641.74/11-451: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

SECRET

Washington, November 3, 1951—4 p. m.

- 689. 1. Department has carefully studied Embtels  $589,^2$   $609,^3$  616 4 which have been most helpful.
- 2. Department agrees that third alternative (Embtel 616) is only possible course of action and that exaggerated measures against Egyptians such as cutting off fuel supplies can only increase Egyptian frustration and hostility with possibility consequences which you foresee. It will be recommended to Secretary now in Paris that he impress upon Eden our view that if Egyptian situation is not to deteriorate further, military authorities must be kept on close rein. We recognize that certain measures are necessary in connection with maintenance by British their position canal zone and we are prepared to continue our support along lines Secretary's letter to Morrison October 17.5 We feel that you have done splendid job with Stevenson re British military and Department appreciates his cooperation.
- 3. Department considers, and will so inform UK, that it would be inappropriate and undesirable under present conditions to regard British troops in Suez base as MEC troops. These troops are in Egypt by virtue 36 treaty and recognition continued validity treaty must extend to both rights and obligations. We strongly believe MEC should not become involved in Anglo-Egyptian controversy.
- 4. Department agrees that for time being we should pursue moderation and toleration theme and that present Egyptian emotions should run their course. We also agree that it would not be desirable to expect King or others take action now which would be counter to popular sentiments. While we realize certain Egyptian actions against British are inevitable, we hope that Serageddin and others in Egyptian

<sup>5</sup> Ante, p. 404.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London, Paris, Ankara, Tel Aviv, Baghdad, Jidda, Beirut, Damascus, and Amman.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Dated October 27, p. 411. <sup>3</sup> Dated October 30, p. 413.

Dated October 31, p. 415.

Government will realize grave dangers to their present efforts maintain order if extremist and terrorist activities are permitted.

5. While we do not intend take punitive measures in sense paragraph 3 Embtel 609, we feel that it is necessary to suspend training re Deptel 683 November 2 6 (and export licenses for military equipment and supplies. Re this, "suspension" is operative word and we would hope that conditions would soon permit at least resumption training.

6. Department believes that we should continue to make clear to Egyptians that door is still open for them to join MEC and that this cooperative defense enterprise is fair, honorable and possibly only way out of present impasse. Obviously MEC will require painstaking explanation as Egyptian press and official comment indicate great lack of comprehension of what MEC means. We recognize that proposals will probably have to be reformulated in form calculated to respond more specifically to Egyptian aspirations and that further efforts may have to be made re Sudan. On latter point Department is considering possible legal and political implications acceptance by US of King's title as "King of Egypt and of Sudan". However, there will undoubtedly be considerable difficulty in moving British on Sudan question.

7. Department has in mind suggesting to UK Foreign Office that you and UK, French, and Turk colleagues make recommendations re reformulation defense proposals which might be acceptable to Egypt. Your advice re desirability this requested. We would also appreciate your comments on desirability similar exercises re Sudan.

8. Department considers that contacts which you have had with Serageddin are most useful and should be continued (Embtel 632 November 2)6 with view gradually enlarging them to include King and possibly others who recognize that continuance present situation benefits nobody and only spells trouble for everyone. Department understands that Aeliasandraos may be proceeding Paris shortly. View his close association Palace would any useful purpose be served by its being suggested that his visit to US would be welcome?

9. Department hopes obtain early approval from UK, French, and Turkey for statement of principles underlying MEC in order Arab States including Egypt and Israel will have better understanding what MEC is intended to be. We hope that such principles made known to Arab States in near future will maintain and increase present tendency those states retain freedom of action of MEC vis-à-vis Egypt.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not printed.

10. Re Embtel 629 November 3  $^7$  Department is recommending that Secretary talk re MEC with heads Arab delegations prior November 10.8

Webb

7 Not printed.

<sup>8</sup> Caffery replied in telegram 651 from Cairo, November 5, that he appreciated the Department's "highly satis telegram" and especially that the Department was recommending to Secretary Acheson, then at Paris for the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly, that he impress upon Eden that "Brit mil auths must be kept in hand." Caffery added that he was not convinced that British military officials in the canal zone "are taking their FonOff admonitions very seriously." Caffery admitted that the British were in a "most difficult position" in the canal zone and that the Egyptians were "doing everything in their power to be disagreeable." Caffery concluded by stating that the British must continue to be supported and that moderation should be continued to be urged on the Egyptians. No useful purpose would be served by suggesting a visit of Egyptian officials to Washington. (641.74/11–551)

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Syria and Lebanon 1948 Memoranda"

Memorandum of Conversation, by Richard E. Gnade of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET

[Washington,] November 9, 1951.

Participants:

Dr. Malik, Minister of Lebanon

Mr. McGhee—NEA Mr. Kopper—NE Mr. Gnade—NE

Dr. Malik came to call on Mr. McGhee at 3:00 p. m. November 9, 1951 for a final talk before departing on the following day for Paris where he will be a member of the Lebanese UNGA delegation.

Dr. Malik opened the conversation by asking what he might tell his Arab colleagues at Paris when they asked for the latest views of Mr. McGhee, of the Department, and of the American Government regarding Middle Eastern affairs. Did Mr. McGhee have a message for them or for Egyptian Foreign Minister Salahuddin?

Mr. McGhee answered that this was a time of crisis in the relations between the Arabs and the West and an opportunity to demonstrate whether enduring relations between the two areas can be built up or not. The Egyptian situation was disillusioning and disappointing. MEC was long planned and thought out. It was a fine opportunity for Egypt to reach a reasonable solution of the Suez problem, but instead, the Egyptians jumped the gun on the MEC proposals and refused to give them any consideration when they were presented. The United States position on Egypt was a fundamental position and not subject to change. Secretary Acheson's statement 1 supporting the view that the treaty cannot be abrogated unilaterally stands as basic American doctrine.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See editorial note, p. 397.

Dr. Malik asked whether there was any way out of the impasse.

Mr. McGhee replied that the multilateral approach envisaged in MEC was a good solution. He and his colleagues had spent months meeting Salahuddin's problems and working to find an adequate solution. Egypt was to be a full partner—but she gave the idea absolutely no consideration and rejected it out of hand. As the MEC concept was being elaborated, he had hoped that Egypt would join in the discussion and planning. The eleven MEC principles show what we have in mind. They offer a broad and flexible "solution with honor" for Egypt. It is the only solution, since the West cannot let Suez lie undefended. The United States will play a full role, and there will be no colonial-type regime such as the Egyptians seem to fear. Initially the British must supply the forces to garrison the Canal because they have them available and the other participating powers do not.

Dr. Malik asked "Where do we go from here? How can Egypt's face be saved?" The United States must face the possibility of talking over with the British a time limit for British withdrawal from Suez. This, in Dr. Malik's eyes, was the only possible ray of hope in the situation.

Mr. McGhee answered that MEC was the real ray of hope. Egypt should take an active role, free from the old British bond.

Dr. Malik questioned what the nationality of SACME would be.

Where would the headquarters be?

Mr. McGhee said that the headquarters would be in Egypt.

Dr. Malik asserted that the Egyptian demand for immediate with-drawal should not be taken too seriously. He thought that they would negotiate a time for withdrawal. A compromise and middle ground must be found, and he felt this could be done by a definite termination of the date of British withdrawal.

Mr. McGhee stated that there was no intention of appearement of Egypt. She had no other way than MEC out of this dilemma.

Dr. Malik admitted that the Egyptians had acted childishly and foolishly. He wondered whether the British would be interested if the Egyptians offered to negotiate a British withdrawal within the period of a year.

Mr. McGhee said that although the West was always receptive to discussion, it would make no commitments on proposals. It was basically interested in discussing only MEC.

Mr. Kopper pointed out the possibilities of a long-term arrangement on Suez within the frame of MEC.

Mr. McGhee reiterated that the Western Powers could not see Suez left undefended and asked where the Egyptian line leads. Dr. Malik replied that the Egyptian line of action meant a satisfaction of Egyptian public opinion that the British were out of the country after 80 years of domination.

Mr. McGhee requested that Dr. Malik tell Salahuddin of his keen personal disappointment at the manner in which Egypt had recently acted regarding MEC, which had been worked out with Salahuddin's ideas in mind. The Egyptians had discarded the proposal without even considering it and had brought Egypt into direct conflict with the West.

Dr. Malik asked what the role of the other Arab States should be. Mr. McGhee replied that we are not pressing the other Arab States to join now but eventually we would like them all to associate themselves with MEC as fully participating members in a cooperative effort at Middle East defense. He hopes that the other Arab States will not follow Egypt's example, and equally hopes that Egypt will change its attitude. The United States has taken the initiative in this vital matter of the Middle Eastern defense since last January, and it was also extensively discussed at the Chiefs of Mission conference at Istanbul. He felt that the principles should be acceptable to Lebanon.

[Here follows a discussion of United States-Lebanese relations quoted in the editorial note, page 1012.]

641.74/11-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Secretary of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT

Cairo, November 12, 1951—noon.

689. I talked again yesterday evening with Serageddin Pasha, the all-powerful SecGen of the Govt Wafd Party. Having in mind all the discounts anyone wld like to make this is what he said after a lengthy preliminary conversation:

We can accept your four power proposals on condition that they do not go further than Stevenson's offer in his conversation with Salaheddin prior to end of last summer. Stevenson agreed that only Brit troops to remain actually in zone wld be "technicians" in Art VI of the MEC proposals you talk of "forces" and not "technicians". I realize of course that a "technician" cld cover various categories. I must be able to say to the Egyptian people that the Brit "forces" will begin immed to evacuate and evacuation of their "forces" will be completed at the end of say a year; and you must not leave behind too many "technicians". I explained was different re our proposals but he stuck to his point. (Salaheddin insisted then that even "technicians" shld evacuate in maximum 18 months. Serageddin yesterday did not mention time-limit.)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Source text was originally transmitted to the Secretary of State only. A handwritten notation on the source text reads: "Repeated info London 315 and Paris 173." Presumably this action was taken in the Department of State.

The second condition covers the airplanes in the zone. The Egyptians had suggested to Stevenson that the airplanes no matter how many wld be "Egyptian" airplanes even if flown by Brit pilots, and even though they realized there might be some camouflage in this.

He said that in any event they wld insist that some Amer "technicians" be included in those stationed at the base. He said that they have confidence in us but have no confidence in anyone else, much as they dislike our present stand.

He insisted and emphasized the importance of extreme secrecy in connection with these conversations, if anything shld leak he cld not proceed with them. Because of this I am not repeating this to other capitals.

CAFFERY

641.74/11-1551: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt 1

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, November 21, 1951—11:57 a.m.

784. Embtel 689 Nov 12.2 Report ur conversation with Serageddin has been read with much interest and we hope this useful contact will be continued. King's reaction these conversations (Embtel 702 Nov 15)3 also of interest, although we regret that to date King has shown no evidence of leadership in finding way out present situation. While it is clearly difficult to forecast at this stage how far Serageddin might be able and willing to go in moving from present contact to negots, fact that he is talking in these terms is significant. We recognize that since at present time Egypt are in no mood to negotiate, it wld not be possible or desirable to make specific suggestions to them re reformulation Four-Power proposals. However, we wonder whether Serageddin wld be willing in near future to put on paper for our eyes only (if he wishes) what he has in mind re possible modifications in def proposals. One of our principal difficulties in working with Egypts has been that while they are always ready to reject proposals made to them, they never produce concrete suggestions which they cld seriously expect US, UK or all Four Powers to consider. Egypts must realize from Four-Power proposals that UK and other three Powers have gone quite far (and might possibly go further) to meet their point of view on def issue, but these negots cannot be a one-way street. If as you report in Embtel 694 4 Nov 12, Nahas is "extremely unhappy" over present state of Anglo-Egypt differences, way is open for him and Serageddin to make concrete comments on the Four-Power proposals. You might feel it desirable in further conversations with Serageddin to stress that while we are anxious to see early solution to the present problem, we will be unable to make any progress if Egypts do not offer constructive comments which can be seriously considered. In this connection, it might be pertinent to remind Serageddin that during entire PD leading up to presentation Four-Power proposals, we had reason to believe from talks with Egypt officials that multilateral approach to problem wld be acceptable to all concerned.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Stabler, approved for transmission and initialed for the Acting Secretary by McGhee. Repeated to London eyes only for Ambassador Gifford, to Paris eyes only for Ambassador Bruce and the Secretary.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Supra.
<sup>3</sup> Not printed; it reported that King Farouk knew of Caffery's conversations with Seraggedin "and highly approves." Caffery added that the Chief of the King's Cabinet had informed him that Farouk was "delighted" that Seraggedin had taken the initiative in the conversations and hoped that they would lead to final acceptance by Egypt of defense plans, "with the usual reservation that Brit do something 'satisfactory' on Sudan." (641.74/11–1551)

Re Sudan, Dept has requested FonOff to take another look at this problem to see what further might be offered. Here again value references by Egypts to 1946 Bevin–Sidky protocol <sup>5</sup> are not particularly helpful in trying to work out compromise arrangement. It difficult for Brit to do something "satisfactory" on Sudan without any specific idea what Egypts want, except for extreme view that Brit shld evacuate Sudan. Dept wld appreciate ur comments as to whether there is any evidence that Brit have discussed Sudan problem with leaders of Sudanese polit parties with object of determining how far UK cld go in direction Egypts and still retain Sudanese support. It is our impression that to date this has not been done. Ur comments wld also be appreciated re Salaheddin's plebiscite proposal made before UNGA Nov 16 and effect on Egypts of Brit announcement re Sudan self-government in 1952.

Re Embtel 703 Nov 15,6 principal criterion which shid determine whether or not change of govt shid be manipulated is more than reasonable degree assurance that new govt will carry out desired program. Based on available info we are doubtful whether in immed future any polit leaders, except from extremist elements, wild be willing or able form Govt which wild have sufficient strength to restore status quo ante. While Brit FonOff looks hopefully to King and Army to provide such new govt, there appears to be no evidence so far that

&lt;sup>4</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>5</sup> For documentation on the Bevin-Sidky protocol on the Sudan, see Foreign Relations, 1946, vol. vii, pp. 69 ff.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not printed; it outlined recommendations submitted by Ambassador Stevenson to London in a "think-piece" concerning Britain's "future course of action in Egypt" (641.74/11-1551).

King cld or wld take this step and some quest may also arise re Army's loyalty. Obviously extremist govt wld be disastrous.

We are also concerned by Stevenson's apparent assumption that ouster of Wafd Govt wld by itself lead to restoration status quo ante. We find it hard to believe sit is that simple.

View above Dept wonders whether better solution might not be offered by working with those elements in present govt, such as Serageddin, who appears anxious re actual and future state of affairs, while at same time fostering purge of rabble-rousers, such as Salaheddin. If approaches by Serageddin mean anything and if he has the power he appears to have, it might not only be unwise but dangerous to embark on "govt-changing" program, particularly when no other polit leadership seems to be in sight. Another factor which shld be borne in mind is diffic sit which wld be created if respons govt change cld be placed on Western powers.

Dept believes that you and Stevenson shld give this whole ques most careful consideration. Ur substantive comments on Stevenson's recommendations and views expressed above wld be welcome.

Webb

641.74/11-2451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET NIACT CAIRO, November 24, 1951—2 p. m.

754. I found Stevenson in black despair yesterday. Events, he said, in canal zone are headed straight for an explosion to be followed by reoccupation of Egypt which inevitably will be followed by the British being thrown out of Egypt forever. I told him that things were not yet quite that bad.

Stevenson who is basically an intelligent man with good sound judgment has been pushed hither and yon by the Generals and one of his advisors and has made various recommendations which he now knows to be unsound and unreal and he hates to face the facts. However, he is now prepared to face them and I believe we may come up with joint approach that will make sense (mytel 749, Nov 23). An example of his difficulties is a new attempt of the military to shut off fuel oil. Stevenson knows that nothing could help the Communists more or hurt the British more than that particular manoeuver. Nevertheless, the military are pressing and are endeavoring to get it again before the London Cabinet.3 As I have remarked before, if the military shut off fuel oil again, let's stop talking about finding a solution.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Rome for Acheson. The Secretary was in Rome to attend the Eighth Session of the North Atlantic Council, November 24–28; for documentation, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 693 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Not printed.

CAFFERY

<sup>3</sup> In telegram 2488 from London, November 24, Ambassador Gifford reported that British military authorities at Suez had been authorized to reinstitute a partial ban on oil shipments to the extent of stopping rail traffic 1 day in 7 and road traffic for 6 hours 1 day in 7. The measure had been authorized by Prime Minister Churchill on the grounds that British personnel checking oil shipments needed a respite from Egyptian terrorism. Gifford added that the Foreign Office had stated that should oil stocks fall to a danger level, the ban would be re-examined. (641.74/11-2451) In telegram 756 from Cairo, November 24, Caffery reported Stevenson's reception of the Churchill decision with the words "'they have defeated me'." Caffery concluded by repeating and emphasizing the last sentence of the source text. (641.74/11-2451)

745W.00/11-2451: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

London, November 24, 1951—8 p. m.

2489. Deptel 2629, Nov 21.2 FonOff thinks Salaheddin's Sudan pleb proposal is a "nonstarter" and proposes to ignore it unless UN shows any interest, whereupon UK wld ask what it considered rhetorical questions of what, why and how. In present form and under present circumstances FonOff considers proposal meaningless and broached insincerely by Egypt FonMin purely for propaganda. To have any significance, Egypt wld first have withdraw its constitution for Sudan. Eden has reproved Lie for appearing support proposal and, according to FonOff, latter was apologetic, saying he had been misunderstood.

First of all, FonOff considers withdrawal Brit and Egypt personnel utterly impractical and wld lead only to breakdown govt admin. Second main objection is that trying to get any meaning out of "vote per head" in country like Sudan, or even trying to hold a vote, is ludicrous.

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo, Paris, Ankara.

&lt;sup>2</sup> On November 16, Salaheddin had delivered a strongly worded speech before the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly at Paris condemning British policies and actions with regard to Egypt and the Sudan. In the course of his remarks, he declared "as a challenge to the United Kingdom that for our part, we accept to withdraw our officials and our armed forces from the Sudan on condition that the United Kingdom do the same, so as to allow the Sudanese freely to express their will through a plebiscite" arranged and supervised with the cooperation of the United Nations. Salaheddin's speech was reprinted in its entirety by the Egyptian Government in its Green Book on the Anglo-Egyptian crisis of 1950-1951, pp. 180-192. In telegram 2629 to London of November 21, Acting Secretary Webb asked to receive "soonest" Foreign Office reaction to Salaheddin's proposal, adding "We believe that if idea has merit, it shid not be allowed die on vine." (745W.00/11-2151)

FonOff admits it is neither happy about present Sudan situation nor sees future clearly. It presently has no good news on subj, but wants Dept know its mind open and that it wld gladly welcome suggestions from US. It does not reject idea that at some time in some form referendum may be necessary.

Under present circumstances, however, FonOff inclined think that the more Sudanese are left alone to work out their own destiny on present lines the better it will be for all, particularly Sudanese. Brit feel UN or other outside intervention now could only heighten internal dissension already alarmingly aroused by Egypt provocation. UK thinks it can handle Egypt attempts penetrate Sudan but has frank doubts about ability maintain law and order shld interference on international scale further foment civil strife. It does not altogether discount possibility of revolt comparable to Mahdist uprising of last century.

FonOff emphasizes (and Emb confirms) strong emotional feeling Brit in general about Sudan. Public and Parliament proud Brit achievement in bringing good admin and element of prosperity to Sudan. To them it is unthinkable that UK shld abandon its responsibility towards Sudanese, and above all unthinkable for Sudan to become prey to Egypt.

While FonOff sees little or no possibility meeting minds with Egypt over attachment Sudan to Egypt monarchy, Emb thinks UK might eventually agree to some compromise on this score provided essential Sudanese freedom protected. FonOff says Egypt FonMin has never at any time given any hope of Egypt agreement simply on symbolic kingship. Egypt wants more than this; they want control over all that matters in Sudan. As for Bevin–Sidky formula, FonOff now finds difficult to say what language means, and in any event knows it wld mean one thing to Egypt and another to UK.

GIFFORD

641.74/11-2651 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY CAIRO, November 26, 1951—1 p. m. 767. Deptel 801 Nov 23.2 "Necessity giving Brit troops rest" formula is not to be taken seriously.

I agree that immed shut-off effects will not be disastrous. Brit generals are having tough time and we shid be indulgent (Deptel 807

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Rome for Acheson.
<sup>2</sup> Not printed.

Nov 25). I suggest that we let them play their game for next 2 weeks altho it is bound to have adverse effect on my Serageddin convs and of course King will be particularly angry.

However, if this state of affairs is allowed to continue "as is" Egypt will eventually fall into lap of my Russian colleague like an overripe plum. Only thing that stands in way of this is our still considerable prestige. Therefore if Brit mil are still playing their game at end of fortnight I reluctantly suggest that there is only one way left for us to protect ourselves and that is the next time after the fortnight they turn off the tap Dept spokesman answer in reply to a planted press question that the US has no responsibility in case of the Brit mil shutting off fuel supplies from Egypt.<sup>4</sup>

CAFFERY

<sup>3</sup> Not printed.

740.5/11-2651: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Rоме, November 26, 1951—10 р. m.

Secto 87. Secretary lunched today with Eden, Butler and Lord De L'Isle and Dudley. Present from US were Lovett and Snyder. Secretary raised question of stoppage of oil in Egypt.<sup>2</sup> Eden showed Secretary cables received from Erskine which made two main points. First point is desire of Brit to keep Egyptian Govt anxious re troop situation. Second point was that troops were under strain and needed rest from inspection duties. Also mentioned were fact that bodies Brit soldiers being dragged from Sweet Water Canal and temper of troops rising. Cables made strong point that Brit cld not remain passive in situation. Oil shut-off results from desire not to remain passive. Secretary took strong position and said that it was clear from these telegrams that fundamental question was not military one. He said object was obviously to keep govt upset and plausible excuse found in difficulty of troops there.

&lt;sup>4</sup> In telegram 847 to Cairo of November 30, Webb informed Caffery that as a result of Acheson's intervention with Eden on the oil cutoff issue, as reported in telegram Secto 87 from Rome, infra, "it will not be necessary consider suggestion re press statement US non-responsibility re oil shutdown." (641.74/11–2951)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London and Cairo.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 2426, niact, to Acheson at Rome, November 25, Acting Secretary Webb stated in part that in light of telegram 754 from Cairo (p. 424), "it wld be helpful Secty mention Eden our gen concern re poss consequences Brit mil exerting pressure against Egypt pop as thru cat and mouse game with oil supplies." A British display of restraint, Webb added, might possibly be "more devastating" to Egyptian political leaders than provocative acts. (641.74/11–2551) In telegram 2315, niact, from Rome of November 25, Ambassador Dunn informed Webb that Acheson was considering speaking to Eden "and stating our concern re Brit Cabinet decision to shut off fuel oil." (641.74/11–2551)

Eden said he had had matter put to him and had agreed to action of Brit Govt. Secretary said Eden was clearly yielding on political matter because of mil pressure. US Govt and his own Amb in Egypt had considered course which Brit followed unproductive.

Secretary said US Govt wld stand firm with Brit on action to protect integrity of Canal Zone but that we cld not stand with them on this action. Secretary told Eden he was wholly wrong and was undermining solidarity of United States and Brit relations in regard this problem. Secretary said in long run Brit must have passive acceptance of Egyptian Govt. Eden asked what US expected of him. Secretary replied that we wanted reversal of Brit decision.

ACHESON

641.74/11-3051 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, November 30, 1951—3 p. m.

788. Deptel 784 Nov 21.2 Our two Embs have devoted great deal of time to preparation of joint evaluation of present situation and are reasonably near agreement on "background" and "conclusions" sections. Stevenson has had consultations with Brit mil but in view of their attitude and London's too, he seems to have trouble in fol through at least to commit himself on paper. Admittedly situation here is complex as well as perplexing and I have sympathy with his difficulties. (Stevenson and I still work in close coop and harmony.)

In view of delay I go ahead with my recommendations as fol:

Palace and Wafd are presently only forces in Egypt with sufficient power to govern.

Brit are prone to believe that somehow or other new govt can be formed with which they can deal. There may well come a time when this will be true and I hope it is soon; but time has not yet come. We shld therefore do our best to hold Brit back on this until time is ripe. We shld agree, however, that Salaheddin should go, preferably while still in Paris: Palace and Serageddin urge this; but they won't act until we agree with Serageddin.

While Serageddin is unwilling to put anything on paper he says that he stands on paras 2 and 3 of mytel 689, Nov 12,<sup>3</sup> in other words that Brit troops left in zone shld be called technicians and that number shld be subj to prior agreement. In regard to the airplanes he wants them to fly Egyptian flag. I asked if he cld get away with this, having in mind the super-inflamed anti-Brit atmosphere hanging over Egypt. He replied, "Yes, but on the condition Brit agree on something satisfactory on the Sudan". I am not convinced that he can get away with it but if anybody in Egypt can he can.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Rome for Acheson.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 422. <sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 421.

EGYPT 429

Everything Dept says in connection with Egypts being always ready to reject proposals made to them but never producing any serious concrete suggestions is only too true and only too logical. However we must face reality, and they won't come up with anything beyond what Serageddin has already said and with which the King is in accord. The Egypts still believe that one way or another they will be able to worry Brit out of the zone and fortunately they don't realize how difficult the Brit position is: and Brit position may be described as "lamentable".

After considerable conversation with Stevenson on the subj he put forth the suggestion in mytel 785, Nov 29,4 "to find some formula in regards to the Egyptian crown which cld be reconciled with the right of eventual self-determination of the Sudanese".

As law offices of the crown have apparently decided that juridically Egypt claim to title of King of Sudan is well-founded, we cld suggest to Egypts to recognize title subj to "referendum" under supervision of three mutually agreed-upon friendly powers. Brit Sudanese officials wld immed bring up multiple arguments why referendum is not practical but that is not pertinent. If we can get Egypts to agree to such a formula we will have progressed considerably and they might find it difficult to reject it. If it is true, as Brit say, that Egypt supporters in Sudan are in a small minority there is no reason for them to win such a referendum. Nor wld it be necessary to have the referendum take place immed. (I apprehend Brit believe Hague Court wld decide against them on title question.) These suggestions, of course, will need a lot of polishing.

With regard to Dept's specific inquiry whether Brit have consulted with Sudanese leaders on how far they cld go to meet Egypt demands, it is not my understanding that there have been any such consultations.

I realize that it will be difficult for the Brit to face facts on the Sudan, first of all for domestic polit reason, but if the Brit maintain their stand as recently set out in London and Paris we must resign ourselves to the fact that the canal zone may, unless something unforeseen turns up, explode with a loud bang at no distant date, an explosion with a potential chain reaction of occupation revolution eventual Commie domination. We must also face the fact that with nothing on the Sudan this govt or any other govt the King might set up cld not agree on any defense proposals we might put forth.

Not printed.

At same time we must do everything possible to encourage Egyptian Govt to take positive steps towards controlling terrorists as this should ease problems of Brit mil and help to avoid situation which might result in their taking drastic (and probably disastrous) reprisals.

CAFFERY

641.74/12-651 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, December 6, 1951—3 p. m.

828. Without ref to the varied causes which have brought Egypts to the white-heated animosity against the Brit mentioned mytel 825, Dec 5 2 it is important in any thinking re current sitn bear fully in mind the fact that this animosity is deeply genuine and permeates the entire society. There are no longer elements of the press, officialdom or the public to whom we can look for rationality on this question. Even the Pasha element shows signs of wavering in the Iron Curtain direction directly against their own vested interests.

Within the last few days over expression this animosity has taken the form of a widespread movement in demonstrations and hysterical edits, not against Brit but against Egypt Govt and Serageddin particular for holding Egypt people in leash. Early Extremist demands for giving free rein to liberation battalions, arming the people, severing all relations with the Brit, etc., have become the gen cry.

Serageddin is not yet beaten, but last evening in closing univs and schools, ordering police to use force in stopping demonstrations and appealing to public for support against "enemies of order and security" he was moving in direction of last resort measures. These measures may result temporary artificial appearance calm but pressure will continue increase toward explosion point unless fundamental change occurs soon including Brit Mil thinking from attitude retaliation to one of conciliation and genuine attempt find a solution; and price for solution is going daily higher.

On Egypt Govt side one important difficulty is that terrorist alleged commandos in zone with govt encouragement have become

¹ Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Ankara.
² Not printed. It reported that because of military requirements arising out of acts of terrorism in the canal zone, British authorities had reimposed severe restrictions on road traffic between Suez and Cairo and a temporary stoppage of oil shipments; "We are therefore," Caffery reported, "for one reason or another back to where we started on the oil question." Caffery concluded: "While I question the [British] Generals good faith I do not recommend making an issue of this yet in view of the awful hole they are in at this juncture but we must face the fact that Egyptian animosity against them has risen to such white heat that a real explosion seems inevitable." (641.74/12–551) natl heroes and the vocal public are calling upon them daily for bigger and better outrages against Brit troops.

EGYPT 431

CAFFERY

641.74/12-751: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, December 7, 1951—6 p. m.

2661. We are concerned by possibility widening difference of opinion between US and UK on how deal with Egypt crisis and believe it wld be helpful set forth what we think is present Brit attitude.

1. Embtels 2489,² 2497³ and 2609³ show that UK is firmly opposed at this juncture to encouraging idea of plebiscite in Sudan, both to avoid feeding Salaheddin's propaganda and because UK considers any sort of referendum now on Sudan wld be impractical and meaningless. Referendum may come later but now Sudanese must concentrate on program self-govt. In any case, FonOff says UK has had no indication whatsoever from Egypt Govt of any serious intentions to allow Sudanese freely choose own place in internatl community and points to designation Farouk as King Sudan and promulgation constitution as evidence to contrary.

2. FonOff attitude towards Sudan problem influenced by Sudanese opinion, Brit public opinion and fears about Egypt intentions. UK will not bargain fate of Sudanese and they must be allowed determine own future. FonOff is unwilling in present circumstances for UK be party to formula having effect acknowledging Egypt's sovereignty over Sudan and it therefore appears doubtful Stevenson will get authority he has requested (last sentence first para Cairo's 785 to Dept). FonOff says in first place Sudanese won't have Egypt King as King Sudan. In second place only contractual basis for Egypt's rights in Sudan 1899 condominium agrmt, which, apart from fact Egypt has denounced it, raises complex legal questions on which opinion divided. Present FonOff view of Bevin-Sidky formula is that it is "incomprehensible" and that 1946 negots broke down precisely because of inability get any common interpretation of formula. UK might in last analysis be persuaded admit theoretical basis for <sup>2</sup> Dated November 24, p. 425.

* Not printed.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo, Paris, Baghdad, Moscow. Jidda, Tel Aviv, Beirut, Amman, Damascus.

*Not printed; dated November 29, it reported that on a trip to the Fayid Base at Suez, Stevenson had learned the British generals had prepared two telegrams to London, one suggested drastic military sanctions and the other economic sanctions of far-reaching extent. Stevenson obtained agreement from the generals to defer dispatch of the cables and then telegraphed London himself requesting permission to tell King Farouk that, unless terrorism in the canal zone ceased, British forces would be forced to take drastic countermeasures in self-defense and asking for specific authority to tell Farouk that an effort would be made to find some formula with regard to the Egyptian crown and Sudan. (641.74/11-2951) recognizing titular sovereignty King Egypt in Sudan, but wld go on to insist that question can not be divorced from present-day realities, foremost of which is Sudanese opposition to any form of Egypt control. In Brit view, Sudanese have been brought too far along road to self-govt and self-determination for process of history to be reversed and if Sudanese fear Egypt domination Egypt has only itself to blame. Gov-Gen Sudan has within past few days warned of violent reaction there if any sort of exclusive Egypt sovereignty recognized.

3. Embtel 2489 stated Brit objections to UN or internatl commission.

4. On defense proposals FonOff appears to think some flexibility at right time possible. FonOff not yet prepared be specific, but "flexibility" cld mean some combination UK's earlier proposal for progressive civilianization of base and MEC offer.

5. However, Brit concern about any new offer to Egypt is almost as much one of timing as of substance. Eden believes no dramatic move possible now and Brit policy for present must be one of patience and firmness. We think Brit consider present test of strength has on whole so far proved fairly successful politically and shld be allowed produce its effects little while longer, at least in absence responsible govt leadership in Egypt with which UK can effectively deal. Primary objective is holding on to base and this so far being accomplished Brit tempted think Egypt govt may be having even tougher time than they and that it cld be fatal show any sign of weakness now.

6. FonOff has great doubts govt headed by Nahas can ever agree to satisfactory settlement (whatever Serageddin thinks he can do about Salaheddin, etc). In any event, Egypt Govt must first come to grips with terrorism. Until govt faces this threat squarely (which FonOff has hopes it will in due time), it is unlikely—feel able negotiate with Brit and in fact will probably feel compelled make greater outward show intransigence towards Brit as terrorism increases. FonOff thinks "liberation battalions" in order gain public sympathy for independent existence may well stimulate further violence in canal zone and elsewhere. But Brit likely view this as further justification for taking safety their troops more and more into their own hands and added reason for putting no trust into govt which shows itself so unable or so unwilling to fulfill its responsibilities. As indicated above, Brits are far from despairing about what may on surface appear be indications imminent disaster and have hope that present Egypt authorities are waking up and will eventually take situation in hand. In any event, Brit probably do not at moment consider that it wld necessarily be unmitigated disaster if Nahas swept from office as result public disturbances. Brit also have in mind that there is still one last means of salvation which has not yet been brought to bear on internal situation, the Egypt army.

7. As counterweight to impression foregoing may give, it can be said that UK all feel unsatisfactory and explosive nature present situation and wld be only too glad to find anything that they feel wld work without sacrificing fundamental objectives and principles. On-the-spot reporting and recommendations of Amb Stevenson will undoubtedly carry weight. But on balance it appears likely Brit

EGYPT 433

Cabinet wld feel that any new approach to Egypt at this particular time wld do more harm than good.

This is Brit position as it appears to us as of today. It may of course change with events and we will watch closely for any such change.

GIFFORD

641.74/12-1151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET NIACT

Cairo, December 11, 1951—midnight.

858. On instrs FonOff Brit Amb called on acting Egypt FonMin tonight to tell him "don't get upset over Suez developments. The real purpose of them was to cut down points of friction. HMG takes full responsibility and will pay compensation immed. We have got to start talking and get to grips as excitement does not reach any sensible conclusion." <sup>2</sup> P. H. Amr <sup>3</sup> came to Eden upset with way things were going and wanted to know what Brit were going to do about it. He agreed with the text of the message which FonOff was sending Stevenson.<sup>4</sup>

CAFFERY

641.74/12-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET NIACT

Cairo, December 12, 1951—2 p. m.

861. I again counseled Acting Min Fon Aff not to break relations with Brit. He said that govt to save its face with Egypt people must do something. He said, "As a friend tell us what to do". I skipped that one. He then said, "The very least we can do is to recall Amr as a protest. Can we do that?" I said, "Do not dare tell anyone that I told you but if you can have your cabinet buy that one I say go ahead; but promise me not to do anything against Stevenson or Embassy here". He replied, "All right".

He then again made his unusual heated appeal for us to do something to hold down Brit mil in zone. I told him that most effective Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Rome, Ankara, Tel Aviv, Tehran, and Arab capitals.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See footnote 4, supra.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Egyptian Ambassador to the United Kingdom.

*Caffery informed the Secretary in telegram 859 from Cairo, December 12, that the British Embassy at Cairo was "thoroughly aroused" over the implications of a possible break in Anglo-Egyptian relations "and is anxious for me to check again on subj with Egyptians. I will do so." (641.74/12-1251)

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Ankara, Tel Aviv, Tehran, Amman, Beirut, Baghdad, Damascus, Jidda.

things Egypts cld do in that connection was to call off their own terrorists.<sup>2</sup>

CAFFERY

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 873, niact, from Cairo, December 13, Caffery reported that the Egyptian Government had just dispatched a note to the British Embassy protesting British "'atrocities'" and ending with the announcement that, in order to publicly show its indignation, Egypt was immediately recalling its Ambassador (Amr) to the United Kingdom. The Egyptian note was accompanied by a public communiqué announcing (1) preparation of legislation establishing sanctions against anyone who collaborated or had transactions with British military forces in the country; (2) modification of existing legislation to permit anyone to carry firearms on condition that the Minister of Interior was notified and did not object within a stated time; and (3) transfer of the Egyptian technical bureau, then in London, to Central Europe, with offices in Switzerland. (641.74/12-1351) In telegram 875 from Cairo, December 13, Caffery added that the actions announced by the Egyptian Cabinet "probably minimum Wafd thought it cld get away with and remain in power." After assessing the impact of these measures, Caffery added that considering the fact the Egyptian Government had considered a complete break in Anglo-Egyptian relations and/or the recall of Stevenson, "we have not come off too badly with tonight's actions." Caffery admitted that he was not certain why Farouk "has gone along with this" but guessed the King was unwilling to throw the Wafd into opposition "at this juncture." (641.74/12-1351)

State-JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417

Colonel Carnes

Substance of Discussions of State-Joint Chiefs of Staff Meeting, December 12, 1951:

[Extract]

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] December 12, 1951.

PRESENT

General Bradley	Mr.	Matthews
General Collins	Mr.	Nitze
General Vandenberg	Mr.	Bohlen
Admiral Duncan	Mr.	${f Johnson}$
General Bolte	Mr.	Bonbright
General Lee	Mr.	Berry
Admiral Fife	Mr.	Ferguson
Admiral Wooldridge	Mr.	Parsons
General Cabell	Mr.	Tufts
Admiral Lalor	Mr.	Gleason

General Ruffner

&lt;sup>1</sup>A note on the source text reads: "State draft. Not cleared with any of the participants." There is no indication from the source text of the identity of the drafting officer. The section on Egypt comprises pages 10–13 of the source text. The first two sections dealt with the questions of Korea and the prisoners of war and the results of the Eighth Session of the North Atlantic Council at Rome. For a brief summary of the discussions on Korea and the prisoners-of-war issue by Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs U. Alexis Johnson, December 12, see vol. VII, p. 1307.

435

EGYPT

Mr. Berry: I have just returned from a visit to Egypt where I found a terrible situation. The British are detested. The hatred against them is general and intense. It is shared by everyone in the country. The result is that the position we desire in Egypt, the area we want for bases, and the influence of Egypt in the Arab world in support of our interests are denied to us. A solution is urgently needed to this exceedingly complex problem. The problem is not simply a problem of British position and influence in Egypt. It has many other deepseated reasons as well. These include the fact that the population of Egypt has increased by one quarter in ten years. This increase has not been accompanied by any measurable increase in the amount of land under cultivation or in yields. It also includes the unequal distribution of wealth. One half of the cultivable land is owned by onehalf of one percent of the land owners. In the cities there is an even more unequal distribution of wealth. It also includes the problem of education. Most of the population is illiterate and its ignorance is unimaginable.

I might give you one example to illustrate the importance of this last factor. During my stay in Egypt there was a riot at Ismailia. The riot started because a British patrol started to pick up a man who was lying in the street. The patrol thought that he was dead. However, he was not dead and when the patrol members picked him up he ran off. An Egyptian policeman saw this and jumped to the conclusion that evil spirits were abroad. He ran through the streets shooting off his revolver and crying out that evil spirits were abroad. He alarmed the 60 policemen in his headquarters and touched off a full-scale riot. It was four hours before the British and Egyptian authorities could restore order.

Another factor is that the Wafd party is the most corrupt party that has ever been in power in recent Egyptian history. A close associate of the Prime Minister arranged to have some valuable land declared as wasteland and then proceeded to arrange for the irrigation of this land at government expense. In this way he gained great wealth. That is just one example of the corruption which spreads throughout the government. No one has any confidence in the honesty of the government. It is also inept. It has not fulfilled any of the promises it made to the Egyptian people. It is also a disunited party except on the one question of the abrogation of the treaty with the U.K. As a matter of fact the Wafd party is happy to have the British troops as a focus of the Egyptian discontent. The party has now developed a campaign which really challenges the U.K. position in Egypt. Eighty-five percent of the labor force working for the British in the Canal Zone has left. When I visited a high British official in the Zone for lunch we ate canned food which he opened at his desk. His servant had gone out to obtain fresh food and had been beaten up and warned that unless he ceased to serve the official he would be tied hand and foot and thrown into the Canal. This kind of terrorism is increasing.

The British are trying to meet the labor problem by flying in labor from outside. However, this does not help—in fact, it introduces an element of confusion. The bases can no longer be regarded as operational bases. This puts us in a precarious position in the Middle East.

The British Ambassador is very depressed. He sees the future as a rapid downward spiral which will probably be set off by incidents in the Canal Zone. There are increasing accounts of violence against British soldiers and they are not a pretty kind. They are sand-bagged in the streets and then cut up. There were eleven such murders during my visit. The British soldiers are highly resentful of British inactivity. The officers believe that they will not be able to control the soldiers very long unless they take active measures to counter these acts of violence. However, if the British strike back the Egyptians will retaliate by cleaning the British out of Cairo and Alexandria. The British will occupy Cairo and Alexandria and that will lead to the eventual loss of Egypt by the British.

I am not quite as depressed as the British Ambassador. There are a number of elements with whom and with which we can work. (1) Our Ambassador is greatly respected. He speaks with a ring of authority. There is no doubt that he is the outstanding foreigner in Egypt. (2) The British Ambassador sees eye to eye with our Ambassador. We can get, and have gotten a joint view of the problem. I regard that as a matter of great importance. (3) Despite the U.S. position on Palestine, the U.S. still has great prestige in Egypt. This prestige can be exploited to our advantage. (4) The King clearly understands the position. He realizes that his position as king depends on our own-in fact, even his life depends on a solution of this problem. (5) There are certain Egyptian groups which are also on our side. For example, the Pashas clearly recognize that their position and wealth will be lost if Western influence is removed from Egypt. Some time this group will have to come out into the open if the terror is to be brought under control.

I think we may have to revamp our concept of the MEC in order to give more flattery to Egyptian vanity. I think we will also have to do something about recognizing the King of Egypt as the King of the Sudan. That should not be difficult as even the British law court recognizes his right to this title.

In conclusion, I would only say that Egypt is rapidly going down the drain and that it will soon be lost unless the trend is soon reversed. EGYPT 437

If this happens we will have to revise our policy toward the whole Arab world. One of the difficulties in finding a solution is that the present government is the only organized political group.

GENERAL BRADLEY: What do you have in mind as regards the revamping of the MEC? We offered them already a very large position.

Mr. Berry: I must admit that we have not thought this one through. The Egyptians desire that the Arab states should all be charter members. It may be necessary to find some role for King Farouk. It may be necessary and possible for the British to withdraw some of their forces. In this connection I might point out that the Egyptians are ready to accept air force personnel on the ground that they are technicians. It is the ground forces which they are unwilling to permit to stay in Egypt. We have no definite and concrete proposal to make but we think something along these lines will have to be explored.

Mr. Ferguson: Did you feel that the Egyptians had understood our MEC proposals? When I was there a short time before your visit I had the feeling that the Egyptians had never read the proposals and had no understanding of them.

Mr. Berry: That is correct. They never saw the proposals. The Foreign Minister was the only cabinet member who had read them prior to their rejection by the cabinet.

Mr. Matthews: Is there any awareness in Egypt of the Communist threat?

Mr. Berry: That is something we can work on of course. Egypt is far from Russia and does not fear Russia; however, there are many Egyptians who fear the coming to power of extremist groups within Egypt. Such groups would be a challenge to the power and position of the wealthy Egyptians. They greatly fear the Moslem brotherhood and its policy of political assassination.

Mr. Bohlen: Did you get any impression about the development of the Communist party strength in Egypt?

Mr. Berry: No specific information. The Soviet Embassy has been conducting itself very circumspectly. The local Communist party is exploiting the discontent with local conditions but it had not been trying to spread the gospel of Marxism.

Mr. Bohlen: Is the Communist party trying the develop a fanatic nationalism which it could then exploit?

Mr. Berry: Yes, it is.

GENERAL BRADLEY: This has been a most interesting report.

641.74/12-1451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET

Washington, December 14, 1951—6 p. m.

2923. 1. Embassy's thoughtful analysis present UK attitude on Egypt and Sudan (Embtel 2661 December 7)<sup>2</sup> most helpful and timely since Department reviewing our position on these questions.

2. We are concerned by tendency UK allow matters drift for time being, in hope that "something" may turn up which will make settlement possible. Since we are apprehensive consequences prolongation this line, we consider important that you discuss Anglo-Egyptian question with Eden soonest making clear our analysis situation and views following paragraphs. If possible, discussion should take place before Eden goes to Paris.

3. As we understand it, UK believes continuation present policy firmness and patience without further move from our side to end impasse may result in Egypt eventually being prepared negotiate settlement along desired lines. UK assumption is that if situation is permitted drift, in time either (A) Wafd Government (with or without Nahas), realizing folly of its ways, will take matters in hand and be prepared negotiate reasonably; or (B) public dissatisfaction and frustration will sweep Nahas and his party out of office and new government will come to power willing suppress disorder, back down on intransigeant Wafd stand and negotiate reasonable settlement.

4. Our analysis situation somewhat different. We consider Egyptian nationalism, which has grown steadily since 1919 is deeply-rooted movement which will neither subside nor alter its course by mere passage of time. Although present high pitch national fervor and emotion, of which UK primary target, may be partially induced artificially, we are convinced that in general it represents substantially accurate expression of popular feeling against UK. We also believe this feeling likely grow as time passes and as incidents and Egyptian deaths affect various parts of country. Danger present state of drift is that while public dissatisfaction and frustration may sweep Nahas and party out of office, Wafd may not be replaced by more reasonable politicians; on the contrary there is good chance it will be replaced by extremist elements which may lead Egypt down road to chaos and anarchy. If this should happen, and it becomes necessary for parts of Egypt to be reoccupied by UK to preserve law and order, we believe that will add such fuel to flames of Egyptian nationalism that West will have in Egypt no long range position and can maintain itself short-range only by force. What we could do in 1882 would not be acceptable to world opinion in 1952. In essence we hope British analysis is right; we doubt that it is and we fear consequences of UK maintaining its present policy too long.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by G. Lewis Jones and Stabler, cleared by BNA, EUR, S/P, and S. Approved for transmission by Deputy Under Secretary of State Matthews. Repeated to Paris, Cairo, Ankara, Baghdad, Jidda, Tel Aviv, Amman, Beirut, Damascus.

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 431.

EGYPT 439

- 5. UK and US share same basic objective in Egypt and although UK bears greater responsibility, US has stood close to UK regarding Egypt since our association with Four-Power defense proposals. We believe that to achieve our objective, namely maintenance strategic facilities in such manner they can be speedily and effectively used in wartime, we must have reasonable degree Egyptian cooperation. Regarding this we are impressed by conclusion reached by US and UK Embassies Cairo and concurred in by British Generals Fayid, that as of now lack Egyptian cooperation has resulted in Canal base being "no longer operative". (Cairo's 799 December 1 and Despatch 1279 December 2).3
- 6. Regarding Sudan we recognize UK more directly involved than US and that UK takes pride in its achievements there. However, we feel unpalatable fact must be faced, that defense issue and Sudan question are linked. Our two Ambassadors Cairo are convinced that we shall make no progress regarding Egyptian cooperation on defense issue if some face-saving move cannot be made regarding Sudan. We also believe that as each day goes by without moves by either side to settle situation, solution becomes increasingly more difficult.
- 7. Department particularly welcomes Eden's statement to Egyptian Ambassador December 11 that UK willing resume talks either Cairo or London. We feel resumption talks (which was one of reasons we suggested UK respond to Salaheddin's Sudan plebiscite proposal) would give Egyptian Government excuse hold tight reign on disturbances. Talks would only be of use if they get down to substance quickly. Department's thinking this connection is along lines of "package deal" in which UK in conjunction US, France, and Turkey recognize title "King of Sudan" on condition (A) that Egyptians at same time agree to some form plebiscite or referendum to guarantee to Sudanese their right to eventual self-determination; and (B) that Egypt agree to substance Four Power defense proposals which might be recast without altering basic concept to make them more saleable Egyptian public.
- 8. Regarding above proposal we make following comments (A) Proposal seems wholly consistent with today's press reports views Eden will expound to Salaheddin in Paris; (B) It is consistent with Cairo joint appreciation that solution defense issue requires some move regarding Sudan; (C) It safeguards UK and Sudanese interests and also gives Egypt face-saving concession; (D) Any agreement

<sup>3</sup> Neither printed.

See footnote 4, infra.

by Egypt on substance Four Power proposals must not only be in form which binds Egypt but must contain provisions for presence in Egypt of allied troops in sufficient strength to assure maintenance MEC rights there since under present conditions new agreement with Egypt without such provisions would inspire no more confidence than 36 treaty.<sup>5</sup>

ACHESON

<sup>5</sup> In telegram 893 from Cairo, niact, December 16, Caffery stated that he agreed with the ideas expressed in the source text, but that the important questions were timing and channels. "This is the time but I question Salaheddin a channel." Caffery added that if the British accepted the package proposals outlined in paragraph 7, Farouk should be approached, and, if he approved, Serageddin should then be contacted in confidence for suggestions regarding the course to be followed. (641.74/12–1651) In telegram 908 from Cairo, December 19, Caffery reported that Stevenson was delighted with the views expressed in the source text and was "as convinced as I am that Dept's suggestions signify only way out." (641.74/12–1951)

641.74/12-1751: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, December 17, 1951—7 p. m.

2769. Deptel 2923 December 14.<sup>2</sup> I saw Eden just before he left for Paris. Strang was also present. Eden agrees that something shid be done and done without delay about Egyptian question. As to our "packaged deal" proposal he particularly likes (B) and as to our comments, he particularly agrees with (D). However, he seemed adamantly opposed to making any concession on Sudan for two reasons: One, that as I stated in Embtel 2609 December 5,<sup>3</sup> he was unwilling to disturb Sudan situation, and second, that he personally did not think it would buy anything from Egypt.

Eden is to see Salah El-Din in Paris <sup>4</sup> although he thinks there is practically no chance of anything constructive coming out of mtg. He felt obligated to agree to see him because Amb asked if he wld and

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Paris, Cairo, Ankara, Baghdad, Jidda, Tel Aviv, Amman, Beirut, Damascus.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>8</sup> Not printed.

&#x27;In telegram 865 from Cairo, December 12, Caffery had reported that Egyptian Ambassador Amr at London had said that Salaheddin had complained that Eden had seen all the Arab foreign ministers at Paris during the Sixth Session of the General Assembly except Salaheddin. Eden subsequently said he would see Salaheddin if he requested it to talk about defense proposals "but not if he wanted to talk the same old lines." (641.74/12-1251) In telegram 922 to Cairo, repeated to London, Acheson reported that the Department of State had been informed by the British Embassy at Washington that if Eden saw Salaheddin in Paris he would talk in the most general terms and would not suggest any "'deal'." (641.74/12-1651)

EGYPT 441

he felt he wld be criticized in UK and especially in US if he refused to do so. He said when he sees Salah El-Din he will certainly do nothing "to build the little man up".<sup>5</sup>

GIFFORD

<sup>5</sup> In telegram 2770 from London, December 17, Gifford reported having just been shown instructions to Stevenson drafted by the Foreign Office at Eden's behest which stated that, subject to Stevenson's comments and anything that might come of the Eden-Salaheddin talks, Stevenson was to approach Farouk and "suggest he throw out govt and install one which will at least talk about MEC proposals." Stevenson was to emphasize to the King that the MEC proposals offered a possibility of Egypt obtaining everything it wished in the canal zone. (641.74/12–1751) At the close of telegram 908, summarized in part in footnote 5, supra, Caffery stated: "I again repeat and emphasize that if FonOff continues to adhere to policies set out in London tel 2769 and 2770, Dec 17 to Dept, we are headed for real trouble."

641.74/12-1851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, December 18, 1951—3 p. m.

904. King has become progressively more angry with Wafd and particularly with way in which it has consistently out-maneuvered him ever since abrogation of the treaty. Determined to break the present govt, he is in need of two things:

(1) An occasion on which he can do so without putting himself in the wrong with people and

(2) An indication from the Brit that they wild be prepared to settle with a successor govt along lines sufficiently acceptable to Egypt people to render successor govts position tenable.

Gallad Pasha tells me that the right occasion arose on the night Dec 8 when the Wafd had failed so miserably in its announced "resist with all available force" move to stop the Brit demolition at Kafr Abdu but that King was unfortunately taken unawares and did not seize his advantage.

King was opposed to any break in relations with Brit and was not prepared accept even Amr recall. Cabinet, realizing this, announced recall in Al Misri before obtaining King's approval. This placed King in impossible position in public eye and he resentfully signed the order.

King is furious over what he terms "blundering tactics" of Brit in arranging Eden-Salaheddin meeting. In his opinion mere fact a mtg is taking place is a victory for Wafd and makes his job of breaking govt more difficult. He believes Salaheddin only anxious for mtg in order to be able publicize "I told Eden so and so". King is of the opinion Salaheddin will reject any proposals made by Brit and that his rejection of them will make it impossible for a successor govt to consider them.<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, Paris for MacArthur, Ankara, Arab capitals, Tripoli, Tehran, Tel Aviv, Rome, and Moscow.

CAFFERY

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 909 of December 19 from Cairo, Caffery reported that he had spoken with Sirry Pasha, "who made it clear he cld not undertake to head a new govt here at this juncture unless Brit FonOff changed its present attitude." Sirry, Caffery added, "is probably the outstanding polit leader here who is basically friendly to Western world." (641.74/12–1951)

641.74/12-1951 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State <sup>1</sup>

SECRET

London, December 19, 1951—8 p. m.

2815. Eden launched hour's discussion with Salaheddin evening 18th by speaking out strongly against attacks two Egypt members Brit Emb, attacks in canal zone by Egypt police and terrorists, anti-Brit propaganda in Brit press and recall Amr deplored present state Anglo-Egypt relations and said business two FonMins set them right. In first place essential that incidents shld cease and present tension be relaxed. He urged most strongly that when this had been brought about Egypt Govt shld study 4-power proposals which UK sincerely believed held basis fair settlement. Salaheddin seemed agree incidents regrettable. He spoke on usual lines about impossibility accepting Brit or any other foreign occupation and said Egypt Govt had rejected 4-power proposals after close study showed little difference from offer Egypt had rejected in April. Eden disagreed. Enumerated specific advantages. Was confident differences cld be ironed out if proposals only discussed. Made it plain UK cld not meet Egypt demand for evacuation and that it was not God Salaheddin expecting it.

Salaheddin said he wld report conv to his govt, putting to it suggestion that efforts shld now be made bring incidents to end (Eden said UK had already done its part by withdrawing troops from Said, Suez and Ismailia) and that thereafter both sides shld consider 4-power proposals without commitment. Eden said he was ready contemplate talks either London or Cairo. No mention of Sudan was made during conv.

Commenting on conv in his report to London, Eden said he cld not tell whether anything wld come of it, that he gave nothing away and that Salaheddin seemed in more reasonable mood than anticipated.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

EGYPT 443

Eden was asked for Stevenson's comments in connection instruction reported Embtel 2770, rptd Cairo 112.2

FonOff also at loss know what to make of Salaheddin's rather surprising moderation, but thinks he may be shrewd enough realize Farouk's state of mind about Wafd Govt and also subdued by lack success Paris. If there is any serious indication from Cairo that suggestion third para might lead to something FonOff likely be willing hold up action on instruction reported Embtel 2770 for at least several days.3

GIFFORD

<sup>2</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 5, p. 441; in telegram 903 from Cairo, December 18, Caffery reported that Stevenson had received his instructions from London which included "lecture King in Miles Lampson way." Stevenson had told Caffery "(most confidentially) this wld have been all right in 1888 or even in 1920 but now it wld only make the King very angry indeed as it wld bring to mind the tanks of 1942." Caffery reported that Stevenson was "thinking up best approach to let FonOff know tactfully how completely unrealistic all this is." (641.74/12-1851)

<sup>3</sup> Caffery reported in telegram 921 from Cairo, December 21, that the Acting Chief of the King's Cabinet had said the previous evening that Farouk "is not thinking presently about any change of government. As matters now stand he considers it more prudent to keep Wafd in power." (641.74 '12-2151)

641.74/12-2251: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

London, December 22, 1951—2 p. m.

2856. Because of strong evidence "something on the Sudan" might break Anglo-Egyptian impasse, we wld perhaps recapitulate why Eden is so dead set against using this avenue. In this connection it is worth remembering that his judgment is probably backed up by considerable confidence in his own knowledge and understanding of Sudan and Anglo-Egyptian affairs. (It must be remembered in this connection that Eden once resigned from Brit Govt on moral issue.) Here are his reasons.

1. If all other reasons discounted, recognizing title Egyptian King wld still be impossible because Sudanese wld not have it and wld probably revolt against it with violence. (This feeling is strongly fortified by recent reports from Governor General Sudan that he cannot be responsible for maintenance law and order if this concession made.)

2. Constitutional and polit obligations which British have undertaken to Sudanese make it morally impossible to recognize Farouk's title without Sudanese consent. Brit, no more than Sudanese, public opinion wld allow it.

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to Cairo.

3. Egyptians wld not be satisfied with recognition mere titular sovereignty and Sudanese know it. Recent proclamations re Farouk's title to Sudan and Sudan Constitution illustrated Egypt's real intentions.

4. At best, Egypt's claim to exclusive sovereignty over Sudan hangs by very slender thread.

1899 condominium agreement is only contractual basis for any

Egypt rights there.

5. Plebiscite now wld be mechanically impractical and if it revealed anything at all, wld only confirm factional splits of which we are already well aware. When Sudanese developed institutions of selfgovt to point where referendum cld have some meaning they can choose whatever future they please but UK cannot agree to recognizing in advance King's title even "subject to referendum," for reasons stated above.

This combination of practical, polit and moral reasons held by Brit against any compromise affecting the Sudan makes it difficult to see how Eden cld be argued out of his convictions.

If discussions on MEC can be initiated and it becomes evident that settlement of zone problem can be achieved if Sudan question solved, Eden might be willing at least to talk Sudan. Even in these circumstances Brit concessions wild be limited to what they felt they cld do without betraying their obligations to Sudanese. Only other possibility that suggests itself to us at moment is that if Sudan question kept to one side for present and real advance towards self-govt is made during coming year as UK contemplates, this might create new situation allowing for try at some arrangement that wild satisfy Egyptians.

FonOff says that is not fair to say UK is unwilling to try meet Egypt point view on Sudan but rather that it is unable to see now any way in which this can be done.

We believe above background shld be kept in mind in developing US position for coming Washington talks.<sup>2</sup>

GIFFORD

&lt;sup>2</sup> Prime Minister Churchill was due to visit Washington in January 1952 for talks with President Truman.

GREECE 1

RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES WITH GREECE<sup>2</sup>

A. Political and Economic Relations

781.00/1-451: Despatch

The Minister in Greece (Yost) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, January 4, 1951.

No. 1008

Subject: Current Status of the "Papagos Solution"

Enclosed is the record of a recent conversation <sup>3</sup> between officer of this Embassy and Spyros Markezinis, leader of the New Party and friend and counselor of Marshal Papagos.

Much of Markezinis' conversation upon this occasion consisted merely of a reiteration of his views on the Papagos solution, along the lines reported in previous telegrams and despatches from this Embassy. It appears from this account and from certain remarks of Papagos himself that the Marshal continues to be averse to becoming Prime Minister except as the result of elections in which he would head a ticket composed of candidates of his own choosing. Some consideration is apparently being given to bringing Papagos and Plastiras together in the political field, and preliminary overtures to this end have been made by some members of EPEK and other left-center elements. The Court is reported to continue to look with disfavor upon the Markezinis version of the Papagos solution and is said to hope that election results satisfactory to the Palace can be achieved in six months time through the assistance of Ellinkon Phos, an organization formed to promote the spiritual and moral uplift of the nation but rapidly, and perhaps inevitably, becoming involved in politics.

The difficult economic situation, the danger from abroad and the uncertainty of the parliamentary majority of the present Govern-

<sup>2</sup> For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp.

335 ff.

<sup>3</sup> Not printed.

Documentation on problems involving the admission of Greece and Turkey into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is presented in vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff. For documentation on a dispute between Greece and Belgium concerning attachment of U.S. Marshall Plan funds for Greece by a Belgian private firm, Socobel (Société Commerciale Belge), see volume IV.

ment have brought again to the fore talk of the necessity for a strong government with the inevitable concomittant of renewed speculation concerning the possible elevation to political power of Marshal Papagos.

As previously reported, the Markezinis version of the Papagos solution has the support of some strong Liberal elements and is not based entirely upon rightists and life-long Royalists. Backing from both these politically diverse forces, however, comes preponderantly from the vested interests, the leaders in industry, finance and business. Markezinis would no doubt assert that the force of this criticism would be largely invalidated by the program of social justice and equality of sacrifice that Papagos would proclaim and follow, by the efforts being made to secure the support of some of the Socialists, and that individual candidates for the Papagos ticket would be drawn from all groups and classes. It is also possible that the tentative overtures for a Papagos-Plastiras combine might result in some agreement that would broaden the economic base of the Papagos front as envisaged by Markezinis, although certainly some of the leading lights of EPEK, such as Tsouderos and Merkouris, are no less representatives of the over privileged Athenians than are many politicians belonging to parties much further to the Right on political matters.

The Embassy is continuing to follow the situation closely with regard to political moves concerning Marshal Papagos and will attempt to keep the Department fully informed on this potentially very important matter.4

CHARLES W. YOST

Memorandum by the Minister in Greece (Yost) to the Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

ATHENS, January 20, 1951.

Subject: The Place of Greece, Yugoslavia and Turkey in Military Planning for the Year 1951

The Problem

The purpose of this memorandum is to suggest a reconsideration of

&#x27;In despatch 1075 from Athens, January 11, Ambassador Peurifoy enclosed a memorandum of conversation between Yost and Papagos on January 10 in which Papagos, under "discreet" probing, remarked, inter alia, that the current government did not enjoy the confidence of the Greek people and that Greece needed a government which enjoyed a solid parliamentary majority and would have the strength and courage to adopt socially progressive measures "which could be described as 'socialist'." (781.00/1–1151)

<sup>781.5/1-2051</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Peurifoy transmitted the source text to the Department of State in despatch 1129, January 20. In a covering note, Peurifoy stated, inter alia, "At least from military planning for Greece and Yugoslavia, and to a lesser extent Turkey, in so far as concerns the calendar year 1951 only.

GREECE 447

Alternative Military Situations in Europe in 1951

Any one of three possible military situations may confront the West in Europe in 1951. First, open hostilities may be confined to the Far East and 1951 can be devoted in Europe to building up strength generally in accordance with overall strategic plans. Second, the Soviets, if they achieve a considerable success with indirect satellite aggression in the Far East, may attempt in Europe in 1951 a similar aggression in which they are not overtly involved, with a view both to strengthening their strategic position and to undermining the Western system of alliances before it becomes too strong. Finally, general war involving Europe may break out in 1951.

It is impossible to predict with any degree of certainty which of these alternatives will occur. The state of Soviet atomic and air defense capabilities is probably such that they would prefer to delay general hostilities until after 1951. On the other hand, they may not feel that they can permit the NATO to develop throughout the year without a counterblow which, if successful, could, without general war, shake the confidence and resolution of its European members. Such a blow might be a satellite attack on European states not members of the NAT.

Obviously, the best possible preparations should be made for each of these alternatives mentioned above, but equally obviously, satisfactory preparations cannot be made for all of them in 1951. If general war breaks out this summer, the manpower of Western Europe will still be largely unorganized and unequipped. Indeed, most of the equipment which had been supplied Western Europe would, under these circumstances, probably be lost. On the other hand, if general war does not break out in 1951, arms despatched to Western Europe during that period will be useful only for training and morale. These purposes are, of course, of great importance, but, in setting up priorities for deliveries of military equipment, they should be balanced against other related purposes.

The Position of Greece, Yugoslavia and Turkey

If the estimate set forth above is correct, there is at least a serious possibility that a satellite attack against a European country may be launched in 1951. If this should occur, Greece or Yugoslavia or both would be the most likely targets.

the point of view of the strategic position of Greece, I believe this memo deserves the Department's careful attention." (781.5/1–2051) On February 2, Philip H. Watts of the Policy Planning Staff circulated the Yost memorandum to Bonbright of EUR, Byington of WE, Reinhardt and Campbell of EE, and Martin and MacArthur of RA. In a covering memorandum, Watts mentioned, inter alia, that Yost had also sent a copy of his memorandum to Policy Planning Staff Director Paul Nitze. (781.5/2–251)

Only a country adjacent to one of the satellites is exposed to such an attack. Of the countries adjacent, West Germany and Austria are occupied by Western troops so that even a satellite attack would raise the immediate question of general war. Yugoslavia and Greece are both physically and politically exposed, the latter because, while it has been the subject of deep US and UK concern, it is not presently protected by binding commitments as are the NAT members. The Korean experience demonstrated that the Soviets will not necessarily respect an area in which the US has taken a primary interest, as long as there are no US troops in occupation and no clear commitments to defend it. Indeed, the Kremlin may well be aware that the US has no present plans to send troops to Greece in case of war, either general or local.

The strategic and political advantages to the USSR of overrunning Yugoslavia and Greece are so clear as to need no elaboration. There is also in each case an emotional factor which might influence the Kremlin's calculations, in the case of Yugoslavia, a desire to punish and exterminate Tito; in the case of Greece, a desire to recoup the humiliating failure of the civil war.

The extensive rearmament of Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary, which has taken place during the last year, is not an idle gesture. Perhaps it is intended only to prepare for general war. There can be no question, however, that these countries now substantially outclass Yugoslavia and Greece in matériel, particularly tanks and artillery. If these preponderances should be supplemented by adequate Soviet air power (Russian planes could easily be given satellite markings), they might prove decisive in spite of the toughness and spirit of the Greek and Yugoslav armies.

It should also be noted that the organs of Cominform propaganda are at present laying great stress on the theme that the Athens-Belgrade axis, linked to Ankara and Rome and directed by the US, is preparing an early aggression against the peoples' democracies. Such allegations have in the past frequently provided the excuse for totalitarian aggression. Similarly, Bulgarian papers are playing up the "oppression" to which their compatriots are allegedly being subjected in Greek Macedonia and Thrace, and are demanding that these areas be liberated. The current ejection of Bulgaria's Turkish minority is another ominous sign. Both the material force and the political case are therefore being zealously prepared.

The Greek, Yugoslav and Turkish Armies

It has been frequently pointed out that, at the moment when we are desperately endeavoring to organize an army for the defense of Western Europe and are confronted by the inescapable fact that this army cannot attain substantial proportions during 1951, there already exist in Southeastern Europe three large armies of tough fighting quality and high morale, the Yugoslav of over 20 divisions, the Greek of 9, and the Turkish of 19, with a large increment of trained reserves mobilizable within a matter of hours.

GREECE 449

It it not within the scope of this memo to discuss the role which these armies could play in case of general war. At the least, they would constitute a threat on the Soviet flank which would immobilize a considerable number of Soviet and satellite divisions. It is conceivable that, if properly equipped, they could even temporarily take the offensive in order to relieve the pressure on Western Europe at a critical time.

While this fact constitutes an important reason for hastening the modernization of their equipment, even more pressing perhaps is the necessity of enabling them to do so in order to meet a satellite attack, the serious possibility of which has been discussed above. This is especially important since the extent and speed with which aid could be rendered them after an attack begins is open to serious question.

What is in fact the present state of their armament? The Yugoslavs have a hodgepodge of obsolete equipment, for much of which ammunition and spare parts are in short supply, lacking any substantial antitank or anti-aircraft defense or any effective air power. The Greeks have an army excellently prepared to fight a guerrilla war but very heavily outclassed, by even the Bulgars alone, in artillery, tanks, antitank guns and aviation, and having on hand only a small fraction of the TNT required for the demolitions and mines which play a vital part in their play of battle. Material to fill most of these deficiences, except aviation, is included in the approved 1950 and 1951 MDAP programs, but almost none has in fact arrived in Greece. Both the Yugoslav and Greek armies might therefore, in case of a satellite attack under present condition, either be knocked out by superior power or at least lose rapidly a very substantial proportion of their forces and territory.

This Embassy is not acquainted in detail with the state of equipment of the Turkish army. Turkey would, moreover, be less likely to be subject to a purely satellite attack than would Greece or Yugoslavia. Nevertheless, the deterrent value of a strong Turkish army, in conjunction with those of Greece and Yugoslavia, not to mention its role in case of general war, would seem to warrant a high priority for the supply to it of modern equipment.

Aid to Greece and Yugoslavia After a Satellite Attack

The very serious strategic and political effects of a successful satellite attack on Greece and/or Yugoslavia have been referred to above. It is very possible that, with adequate equipment, these two armies could alone defend themselves successfully against a satellite attack.

Even in this case, however, at least token forces from outside acting in the name of the UN would be necessary for morale purposes in order to demonstrate concretely to the armed forces and civilian population that the free world stands behind them and that they are not isolated in the face of superior power. It seems highly improbable, moreover, that, even if every practicable effort were made to do so, sufficient equipment to overcome all the indicated deficiencies could be despatched to Yugoslavia and Greece in time to meet an attack this spring. It is believed, therefore, that definite plans should be drawn up and agreed among the Western Powers to supply to Greece and Yugoslavia, in case of satellite attack, at least token ground forces from outside, as well as effective air support.

Conclusions

- 1. Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey represent the most effective force in being in 1951 on the Soviet periphery in Europe. They serve as a deterrent to aggression at the present time and could play at least an important diversive role in case of general war.
- 2. On the other hand, they are more vulnerable to purely satellite aggression than are other nations along the periphery in Europe. Substantial military and political preparations, possibly designed for such aggression, are well under way. A successful satellite attack upon Greece and/or Yugoslavia would have most serious strategic consequences and might deal a fatal blow to the morale of Western European countries.
- 3. A rapid increase, during the next six months, in certain key lines of military equipment of Greece, Yugoslavia, and perhaps Turkey, would multiply their usefulness as deterrents in case of general war, and would enable them to meet a satellite attack with a minimum of direct outside assistance after the attack took place. It is very doubtful whether the same quantity of equipment supplied to other European countries would return equivalent dividends in 1951.
- 4. Particularly in view of the inadequacy of their present equipment, Greece and Yugoslavia would, in case of satellite attack, need some direct assistance from UN air and, to at least a token extent, ground forces.
- 5. Consequently, it is recommended that (1) immediate attention be given to according a higher priority to the delivery of key military equipment to Greece, Yugoslavia, and perhaps Turkey, during the first 6-8 months of 1951, and (2) full agreement be reached among the Western Powers as to what direct assistance in the form of air and ground forces could be supplied Greece and Yugoslavia in case of satellite attack during  $1951.^2$

GREECE 451

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Draft Statement of Policy Proposed by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET NSC 103

Washington, February 6, 1951.

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO GREECE DRAFT STATEMENT OF POLICY PROPOSED BY THE NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL ON GREECE

- 1. It continues to be in the security interest of the United States that Greece not fall under communist domination.
- a. Greece occupies an important strategic position which, in the hands of an enemy, would be a threat to the Eastern Mediterranean, the Suez, Turkey and the Turkish Straits. Communist domination of Greece would serve as a springboard for communist penetration, political and military, into the Eastern Mediterranean and Near East area.
- b. Communist domination of Greece would damage U.S. prestige and weaken the will to resist in other countries threatened with communist domination.
- c. Communist domination of Greece could only be viewed as the first in a series of military and political consequences which would gravely threaten the security of the United States.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 3244 to Athens, March 16, Acheson stated that the proposals advanced in the source text had received careful study by the Departments of State and Defense and that at the ISAC meeting of March 9, Defense Department representatives had presented a report urging that there be no change in priorities for delivery of military equipment during the remainder of 1951. According to Defense Department analysis, the global demands for military equipment were of such magnitude that expedited treatment for one country was possible only at the expense of other countries or of U.S. forces. "Greece, Turkey better position now than other countries because recipients mil equip since '47. To improve that position further during '51 wld involve revised priorities with major impact on NATO which remains area of desired maximum build-up." (781.5/1–2051)

¹A covering note, not printed, by S. Everett Gleason, Acting Executive Secretary of the National Security Council, to the National Security Council, dated February 6, 1951, stated that NSC 103 was comprised of two parts: The draft statement of policy was prepared by the NSC Staff on the basis of an initial draft by the Bureau of near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, Department of State. The NSC Staff Study on the Position of the United States With Respect to Greece printed infra was prepared for the information of the Council in connection with the draft policy statement. Gleason invited attention to the fact that not all members of the Senior NSC Staff had concurred in paragraph 3 of the draft statement of policy, and he concluded with the recommendation that if the Council adopted the draft statement of policy, it be forwarded to the President for his approval. (S/S–NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series)

2. Accordingly, the United States should:

a. Manifest publicly its active interest in the maintenance of the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece and its continued support of the Truman doctrine as applied to Greece.

b. Provide appropriate international political support to Greece.

c. Promote the development of a stable democratic Greek government oriented to the West.

d. Provide economic assistance and advice in order to develop a viable Greek economy.

e. Lend appropriate support to the Greek military establishment to assist it in:

(1) Maintaining internal security.

(2) Resisting effectively an attack by satellite forces augmented by guerrillas.

(3) Causing maximum practicable delay to an attack involving direct Soviet participation.

(4) . . .

- f. Provide Greece, within the limits of existing priorities and availabilites, military matériel, supplies, and guidance necessary to the accomplishment of the objectives listed in e above.
- 3. A Soviet or satellite attack against Greece would threaten the security interests of the United States and so increase the danger of global war that the United States in common prudence should assist in opposition to the attack in a manner and scope to be determined in the light of circumstances then existing, including the following general courses of action:

a. Place itself in the best possible position to meet the increased threat of global war.

b. Seek, by political measures, to stop the aggression, localize the action, and restore the status quo.

c. Provide such military matériel and deploy such forces to the general area as can be made available without jeopardizing the security of the United States or areas of greater strategic importance to the United States.

d. Urge other nations to take similar action, including appropriate measures in the United Nations and NATO.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Staff Study by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington, February 6, 1951.]

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO GREECE

THE PROBLEM

1. To determine the position of the United States with respect to Greece.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See footnote 1, supra.

ANALYSIS

- 2. The threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece derives from the USSR, acting mainly through its various agencies: The Greek Communist Party, the Soviet satellite nations on Greece's northern border, and the international communist movement. The security of the Near East, and as a result the security interests of the United States, would be endangered if the USSR. directly or through any of its agents, obtained control of Greece. Control of Greece would provide access to the Mediterranean Sea as well as a strategic position with respect to the eastern Mediterranean. the Near East, the Suez, Turkey and the Turkish Straits. Western access to the oil of the area would be threatened, as well as U.S. communications and transportation facilities, and U.S. air and naval bases in the area. The control of continental Greece and the Greek Islands would present to the USSR important military and political advantages. Without foreign assistance, Greece is incapable of meeting the threat to its political independence and territorial integrity. It has, therefore, been the policy of the United States to lend political, economic, and military assistance and advice to Greece.
- 3. United States political support to Greece has been both internal and international. Internally, the United States has advocated the implementation of wholesome political and social concepts as a deterrent to communist subversion and has encouraged the observance of democratic, constitutional political practices as well as the protection of civil liberties to the extent compatible with the security of the State. Efforts of the United States to promote enactment and implementation of legislation designed to distribute equitably the incidence of taxation, to improve the efficiency of Greek fiscal and administrative procedures, and to free the Greek economy from monopolistic and stultifying practices have been only partially successful.
- 4. In the international sphere, United States political support to Greece has been extended mainly through the United Nations, which has been seized of the Greek Case since 1946. The United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans is being retained in Greece in order to deter aggression and to authenticate to world opinion the true nature of an aggression should it occur. The United States has endeavored through its information media and diplomatic missions to disseminate the facts of the Greek situation and in so doing to overcome the continuous vicious communist propaganda against Greece. The United States has not hesitated to take direct diplomatic action on behalf of Greece on appropriate occasion. In September 1950, as a manifestation of continuing interest in the independence and integrity of Greece, the United States initiated and strongly supported action which enabled Greece as well as Turkey to become associated with the appropriate phases of the planning work of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization concerned with the defense of the Mediterranean area.

5. The object of United States economic aid to Greece is to assist Greece to restore its economy to a viable position and to assist Greece to develop and maintain a standard of living which will enable the Greek people to offer greater resistance to the blandishments of communist ideology. Although this objective is probably attainable, the economic recovery of Greece from the effects of World War II has nevertheless been seriously retarded because of subsequent guerrilla hostilities, political instability, inflation, and changes in world trade patterns. Moreover, so long as present conditions of international tension continue, Greece will be required to make military expenditures which are in excess of those which could be supported by the Greek economy. In FY 1950 Marshall Plan funds were required to finance 63.5% of the civilian imports into Greece. On the whole there have been substantial gains in reconstruction, production, and public administration, although because of the increase in population, per capita production is still less than prewar. Nevertheless, the United States has not succeeded in evoking the degree of self-help in Greece which is essential for the ultimate solution of Greece's critical economic problems. For this reason, acceptance of maximum responsibility for the rehabilitation and development of Greece by Greek leaders themselves continues to be a basic objective of U.S. policy in Greece. It is now evident Greece will not have achieved economic viability by 1952 and that American aid to Greece cannot be stopped in 1952 without jeopardizing the gains that have been made. Current estimates tend to indicate that Greece might be self-supporting by 1954, providing reduced trade barriers and higher standards of living in other Marshall Plan countries significantly expand the market for Greek products and providing Greek political leaders act courageously and unselfishly. Extension of American economic aid to Greece beyond 1952 does not imply a substantially larger total aid to Greece than has heretofore been considered necessary to make the Greek economy viable. It would involve spreading the contemplated aid over a longer period of time in order to assure that United States assistance will be merely a support for Greek effort rather than a substitute for it. In order to induce the Greek Government to prepare itself for the ultimate termination of American economic aid, American representatives in Greece have continued to encourage the creation of a stable and efficient government based on the freely elected representatives of the Greek people, and have urged that this government should be more responsive to the needs of the poor, that it should pursue a sound fiscal policy, establish an equitable tax system, improve public administration, revitalize local government, encourage GREECE 455 individual initiative, foster more competition in industry and trade, press aggressively for larger earnings from exports, tourism and shipping, husband national resources more carefully, frame and execute a realistic plan of economic development, and cultivate cordial relations with those of its neighbors who are not under the Soviet thumb.

- 6. The original objective of the military assistance program for Greece, initiated in 1947, was to provide the Greek armed forces with supplies, equipment and technical advice required to eliminate the communist guerrilla menace and to restore internal security. This objective was achieved in September 1949. After that date the objective of military assistance to Greece was to provide support to a Greek military establishment which would be capable of maintaining internal security and affording Greece, through certain limited accessories, a modicum of prestige and confidence, and which, in the event of a global war, would be capable of causing some delay to Soviet and/or satellite forces and of assisting in the over-all war effort. After the attack on Korea the scheduled reduction of the Greek armed forces was halted. The Greek armed forces, strengthened by American advice and equipment, are physically tough, well trained and have the will to resist. Minimum essential equipment to resist an armored attack is being provided to Greece as a matter of priority. With the exception of the Greek Air Force, all major items of equipment required by the Greek armed forces are expected to be provided through the FY 1951 and supplementary FY 1951 military assistance program for Greece. Assuming the present approved level of the Greek forces, future military assistance will be devoted principally to the maintenance and training of the Greek armed forces and the replacement of equipment as it becomes obsolete.
- 7. The inherent weakness of the economic and social structure of Greece, the position of Greece on the European and Asian defense perimeters, and the political significance which Greece has acquired as a symbol of the ability of the United States effectively to assist nations threatened with communist domination, all tend to indicate that Greece will continue to be a target of Soviet ambition. Within Greece the outlawed Communist Party is concentrating on repairing the damage suffered by its organization as a result of its complicity in the unsuccessful guerrilla war. It is estimated that the Greek Communist Party and its sympathizers represent probably less than 15% of the Greek people. Nevertheless, with its ruthless conspiratorial methods, its rigid discipline, and the direction which it receives from the powers of international communism, the Greek Communist Party constitutes a dangerous force ready to exploit unsatisfactory internal conditions in Greece and to assist a communist aggressor from without. The Greek guerrilla leaders have not abandoned their aims and have at their disposal for combat purposes at least 20,000 guerrillas presently dispersed in Eastern Europe.

8. Greece is an area in which the Kremlin might consider that an aggression on the Korean pattern (an attack involving only satellite troops) would be successful. Since June 30, 1950, Cominform propaganda agencies have repeatedly charged that the "Athens-Belgrade Axis", under American and British direction, is preparing for aggressive action against Albania and Bulgaria and is menacing the peace of the Balkans. This Cominform propaganda line, coupled with the steady increase in the military potential of the Balkan satellite states, particularly Bulgaria, and the probability that the USSR is willing to risk a general war, has contributed to a disturbing situation.

9. On the one hand, the alleged threat to Bulgaria and Albania resulting from the "Athens-Belgrade Axis" may serve as a pretext for the USSR to send combat troops into Bulgaria at the request of the Bulgarian Government. The presence of Soviet troops in Bulgaria would serve to stabilize conditions within the country and would constitute an immediate threat to Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey.

10. On the other hand, it is possible that the USSR might instigate a Bulgarian (or joint Bulgarian-Albanian) attack against Greece coupled with or in support of a renewal of guerrilla activity. Bulgarian forces are estimated to be the best trained, best equipped and most reliable among the satellite forces in Eastern Europe. The Soviets have for some months been stockpiling war materials in the Balkans, particularly Bulgaria, in excess of the normal needs of the indigenous forces. The Bulgarian forces are known to possess considerable armored equipment, including between 450 and 700 T-34 tanks, and are believed to be capable of invading and overrunning Greece east of the Struma River in a few days time. In a sustained war Bulgarian forces are probably capable of extending their conquest to include all Greek territory east of the mountain line which runs through Edessa to Mount Olympus. It is believed, however, that the Bulgarian forces are not capable of destroying the Greek Army.

11. Bulgarian occupation limited only to Greek Thrace and Greek Macedonia would constitute a substantial success for the Cominform. Bulgarian irredentist aspirations would be satisfied, Salonika and the line of communications into Yugoslavia would be in the hands of the Cominform, and Greece would be deprived of its richest agricultural area. This would lead to the establishment of an "autonomous" Macedonian state in accordance with the aims of the Kremlin. Yugoslavia would be virtually surrounded, even though the Greek Army itself had not been eliminated nor had the existence of Greece as an independent state been extinguished.

12. Albania might attempt to remain neutral in the event of a Bulgarian attack against Greece because of its inability to contribute a substantial military force and because Albanian participation might invite some form of hostile effort from Yugoslavia. Nevertheless, activity by Albanian forces might divert a number of badly needed Greek troops, and it is reasonable to suppose Albania would be prepared at least to support large-scale guerrilla activity against Greece in the event of an attack against Greece by Bulgaria.

- 13. Participation in a satellite attack against Greece would probably be limited to Bulgarian forces, possibly augmented by Albanian troops and Greek guerrilla forces. The promptest augmentation of Greek defensive strength might involve the utilization of British land, sea and air forces in the Near East, and American air and naval units in the Mediterranean area, as well as the military resources of Turkey and Yugoslavia. . . . The U.S. would assist in the most feasible manner. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, with which Greece and Turkey are associated in the appropriate phases of the planning in connection with the defense of the Mediterranean area, provides a possible arrangement for future collective planning for the event of an attack against Greece.
- 14. The international conduct of the USSR in connection with Korea clearly demonstrates a willingness to risk a general war. The USSR must be aware of the deep interest and heavy moral commitment of the United States in Greece. An attack against Greece involving satellite and/or Soviet forces would indicate that a general war is probably imminent. In the event of a general Soviet attack against the West, Greece would probably be indefensible and the requirements of Greece would be subordinated to the global strategic plans of the United States.
- 15. From the liberation of Greece in 1944 until the end of FY 1951 total American aid to Greece will have reached almost $2 billion. Although the material cost has been high, resolute United States policy in Greece has encouraged the resistance to communism in other parts of the world and has avoided the consequences of communist domination of Greece. The Greek people remain essentially anticommunist and are prepared to fight again to maintain their freedom.

ALTERNATIVE COURSES OF ACTION

16. In view of the vulnerability of Greece to communist subversion or aggression, the far-reaching consequences of communist domination of Greece, and the extent to which United States prestige has been committed to the maintenance of a free and independent Greece, continued United States assistance to Greece in the political, economic, and military fields is imperative. Within these fields certain basic alternative courses of action present themselves.

18. Economic. The Greek economy cannot survive at this time without continued United States assistance. It will not be self-supporting by the end of the Marshall Plan in 1952. Consequently, the principal alternatives confronting the United States lie in the determination of whether further economic assistance should be limited to a program of essential items designed to prevent disease and unrest or whether the United States should persist in the objective of developing a viable Greek economy. Although the obstacles to the creation of a selfsupporting Greek economy are formidable, this objective is probably attainable. It holds not only the greatest promise for creating a healthy social structure in Greece, but also the best hope of ultimately divesting the United States of its obligations with regard to the Greek economy. Recent analysis suggests that future economic assistance to Greece must be provided in smaller annual increments in keeping with the limited capacity of Greece to provide sufficient internal investment capital, public or private, to permit a substantial increase in its productive capacity. This assistance must be extended for a number of years, possibly until 1954.

19. Military Assistance. Greece cannot afford to equip or maintain a military establishment of the size which the security requirements of the present international situation demand. The basic alternatives confronting the United States are whether the present Greek military establishment should be maintained primarily to insure internal security, or whether the United States should provide additional assistance which would, in addition, permit the Greek armed forces to resist effectively in the event of an attack by Soviet satellite forces. Particularly in view of the growing military capabilities of Bulgaria, progressive relative inferiority on the part of the Greek armed forces would seem to invite attack. Such an attack would cause serious embarrassment to the United States and might result in the communist domination of Greece. For these reasons, and in recognition of the increased potential of Greece to contribute to the general military strength of the non-communist world resulting from the already substantial United States investment, the United States will provide additional military training and equipment to Greece.

20. In the event of an attack against Greece. By instigating an attack against Greece by satellite forces the USSR would, without involving Soviet troops, place an immediate additional burden on the military resources of the United States. One alternative would be to limit United States action to political measures calculated to stop the aggression and localize the action. Inasmuch as there is little in the conduct of the USSR to indicate that the USSR would accept a political settlement which is not capable of prompt military enforcement, such measures would probably be futile. Moreover, failure of the United States to provide support to prevent Greece from falling into the Soviet orbit would produce political and military consequences of critical importance to the security interests of the United States. The USSR would acquire the strategic advantages to be derived from the possession of Greece. Under these circumstances the USSR might expect that the United States would not respond to subsequent direct Soviet action against Turkey and/or Iran and that those governments and the governments of Western Europe would in time be forced to seek accommodations with the USSR. In light of the vital interest of the United States in Greece and the deep commitment of United States prestige in Greece, the more valid alternative open to the United States in the event of an attack by Soviet and/ or satellite forces would be to provide matériel and deploy United States forces to the extent necessary and available without jeopardizing the security of the United States or of areas of the world of greater strategic importance to the United States, and to urge all other nations to take similar action

CONCLUSIONS

- 21. It continues to be in the security interest of the United States that Greece not fall under communist domination.
- 22. The actions taken by the United States with respect to Greece, together with related factors, have been successful in preventing Greece from falling under communist domination.
- 23. In view of the far-reaching consequences of a communist domination of Greece, the investment of the United States in assistance to Greece has been justified although the cost has been high.
- 24. Greece continues to be a target of Soviet ambition although the threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece has altered in form.
- 25. Greece is one of the areas in which the USSR might consider that an attack involving only satellite troops would be successful.
- 26. The present threat to the security of Greece derives immediately from the growing military potential of Greece's Cominform neighbors (particularly Bulgaria), from the presence of approximately 20,000 hostile Greek guerrillas in Eastern Europe, and from the activities of the Greek Communist Party as an agent of Soviet imperialism.
- 27. The preservation of the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece depends upon continued political, economic, and military assistance from the United States.
- 28. The United States should continue publicly to manifest deep interest in the independence and integrity of Greece in order to deter the USSR and/or its satellites from initiating aggressive action against Greece and, in any case, to prevent them from acting on the assumption that the United States would not provide determined support to Greece in the event of an aggression.

- 29. The United States should assist in every appropriate manner to strengthen Greek society against communist subversion, including the encouragement of democratic political procedures, the acceptance of wholesome social objectives, and the elimination of unimportant differences among Greek political leaders.
- 30. The United States should continue to provide economic assistance and advice with the objective of making Greece economically viable at the earliest possible moment. This will require continued American dollar assistance, possibly until 1954.
- 31. Acceptance of maximum responsibility for the rehabilitation and development of Greece by Greek leaders themselves must continue to be a basic objective of U.S. policy in Greece.
- 32. The United States should lend appropriate support to the Greek military establishment to assist it in:
  - a. Maintaining internal security.

b. Discouraging and, if necessary, resisting effectively an attack by satellite forces augmented by guerrilla forces.

c. Causing maximum practicable delay to an attack involving direct Soviet participation.

d...

33. Within the limits of existing priorities and availabilities of matériel, the United States should provide Greece with such military equipment and supplies as will make possible the accomplishment of the objectives outlined in paragraph 32 above.

34. The United States should develop plans to assist Greece in the event of an attack by satellite forces. In this connection the United States should:

a. . . .

b. Urge at the appropriate time, military planning by the NATO to cover such a contingency and in the meantime encourage Greece and Turkey to explore the possibilities for mutual military cooperation.

c. Consider at an appropriate time, the possibility and desirability of military cooperation between Greece and Yugoslavia.

35. In the event of an attack against Greece by satellite forces, the United States should:

a. Make every effort to stop the aggression, localize the action and restore the status quo by political measures, through the UN, jointly with the UK, and unilaterally.

b. Accelerate and increase military assistance to Greece to the extent appropriate and feasible.

c. If necessary, and to the extent consistent with other security requirements, mobilize available military support to Greece through United Nations action, through implementation of North Atlantic

GREECE 461

Treaty plans, through joint United States-United Kingdom arrangements, and through unlateral United States support, as appropriate.

d. In participating in any military support action for Greece as envisaged in c above, deploy, to the extent necessary, such forces as can be made available without jeopardizing the security of the United States . . . .

e. Place itself in the best possible position to meet the increased threat of global war.

36. In the event of direct Soviet participation in an attack against Greece the United States should take the measures set forth in paragraph 35 above. Such action, however, should be taken in the full knowledge that a general war may nevertheless be unavoidable.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Memorandum by the Ambassador at Large (Jessup) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] February 7, 1951.

Subject: NSC 103—"The Position of the U.S. with Respect to Greece"

You will note from the second paragraph of the covering memorandum from the Acting Executive Secretary 2 that "not all the members of the Senior NSC Staff have concurred in paragraph 3 of the enclosed Statement of Policy". Mr. McGhee will, of course, send you a briefing memorandum on this paper but I thought it might be helpful to highlight briefly for you the differences of view, as we interpret them, which developed in the Senior Staff. This paper was drafted in the Department of State and processed through the NSC Staff Assistants. It reached the Senior Staff in agreed form. Mr. Finletter during the Senior Staff discussions raised questions particularly in regard to the third paragraph which covers the contingency of a Soviet or Satellite attack against Greece. His main argument seemed to be that we should at almost any cost avoid engaging in limited hostilities in connection with such contingency. Mr. Finletter raised the question whether we should decide that an attack on Greece would be a casus belli and argued against any such decision. In the last Senior Staff meeting, Mr. Finletter seemed willing to give some military assistance to Greece if it were attacked thus narrowing the apparent difference of opinion to one of degree. It is our view that the United States should give the maximum practicable assistance to Greece in the event of an attack, recognizing of course that the actual type and scope of military assistance can only be determined in the light of circumstances then existing.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Max W. Bishop, NSC Staff Member assigned to the Ambassador at Large.
<sup>2</sup> See footnote 1. p. 451.

The JCS representative consistently supported our view and the NSRB representative supported Mr. Finletter. The NSRB representative also supported the view that we should make unequivocally clear that any local aggression will be met by denunciation of Soviet Russia as the true aggressor, presumably with "appropriate action to follow".

The issue around which the debate revolves is essentially the question whether we should to the best of our ability and in the most feasible manner meet with military resistance further acts of local aggression.<sup>3</sup>

"Par. 1-c, line 2: Strike out 'the first' and substitute 'one'.

"Par. 2-e-(3), line 2: After the word 'direct' add the words 'or indirect'. "Par. 3-e: Amend the paragraph to read as follows (words to be added underscored):

A copy of this memorandum is in S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series. On February 13, Berry sent a memorandum to the Secretary of State reviewing and analyzing the salient features of NSC 103 and urging its approval. A copy of this memorandum is in S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series.

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Memorandum by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (Bradley) to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

Washington, 12 February 1951.

Subject: The Position of the United States with Respect to Greece

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, from the military point of view, recommend that the following substantive changes be made in the statement of policy contained in NSC 103 "The Position of the United States with Respect to Greece":

- a. Change the numbered subparagraphs (2) and (3) under subparagraph 2e to read as follows:
  - "(2) Repelling an attack by satellite forces augmented by guerrillas;

&lt;sup>3</sup> On February 12, the Senior NSC Staff sent a memorandum to the National Security Council through NSC Executive Secretary James S. Lay recommending for its consideration that the draft statement of policy "be amended as follows in the interest of greater clarity:

&quot;Par. 2-e-(2), line 1: Strike out 'Resisting effectively' and substitute 'Repelling'.

&quot;c. Provide such military matériel and deploy such forces to the general area as can appropriately be made available without jeopardizing the security of the United States or areas of greater strategic importance to the United States, in the light of recommendations by the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the time."

On February 14, Lay, at the request of the Secretary of Defense, circulated this document to the National Security Council for its information in connection with the proposed consideration of NSC 103 at its meeting on February 14 (memorandum for the National Security Council, February 14, S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series).

GREECE 463

"(3) Causing maximum practicable delay to an attack by satellite forces with indirect Soviet assistance or to an attack involving direct Soviet participation;"

These changes would bring the paper into consonance with the current estimate by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as to Greek capabilities.

b. Change the general course of action in subparagraph 3c to read as follows:

"Provide such military matériel and deploy such forces to the general area as may be recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the light of the situation existing at the time."

The Joint Chiefs of Staff feel that it would be militarily unsound to base the provision of military matériel and deployment of United States forces to the general area of Greece only on the criteria that such deployment would not jeopardize the security of the United States or areas of greater strategic importance to us.

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:
OMAR N. BRADLEY

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Statement of Policy Proposed by the National Security Council 1

TOP SECRET NSC 103/1

Washington, February 14, 1951.

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO GREECE

- 1. It continues to be in the security interest of the United States that Greece not fall under communist domination.
- a. Greece occupies an important strategic position which, in the hands of an enemy, would be a threat to the Eastern Mediterranean, the Suez, Turkey and the Turkish Straits. Communist domination of Greece would serve as a springboard for communist penetration, political and military, into the Eastern Mediterranean and Near East area.

&lt;sup>1</sup>A covering note by Executive Secretary James S. Lay states that NSC 103 was considered at the 83d meeting of the National Security Council (NSC Action No. 437) on February 14, with the President presiding and the Acting Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of Defense Mobilization in attendance. The statement of policy contained in NSC 103 was adopted subject to the amendment of paragraphs 2-e-(2) and (3) proposed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on February 12 (supra) and of paragraphs 1-e and 3-e proposed by the Senior NSC Staff on February 12 (see footnote 3, p. 462). Accordingly, the National Security Council, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization forwarded the source text, which was the amended version of the draft policy statement contained in NSC 103, to the President as NSC 103/1 for his consideration. The note is in S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series. In a memorandum to the National Security Council of February 15, the Executive

b. Communist domination of Greece would damage U.S. prestige and weaken the will to resist in other countries threatened with communist domination.

c. Communist domination of Greece could only be viewed as one in a series of military and political consequences which would gravely threaten the security of the United States.

- 2. Accordingly, the United States should:
- a. Manifest publicly its active interest in the maintenance of the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece and its continued support of the Truman doctrine as applied to Greece.

b. Provide appropriate international political support to Greece.

c. Promote the development of a stable democratic Greek government oriented to the West.

d. Provide economic assistance and advice in order to develop a viable Greek economy.

e. Lend appropriate support to the Greek military establishment to assist it in:

(1) Maintaining internal security.

(2) Repelling an attack by satellite forces augmented by guerrillas.

(3) Causing maximum practicable delay to an attack by satellite forces with indirect Soviet assistance or to an attack involving direct Soviet participation.

 $(4) \dots$

- f. Provide Greece, within the limits of existing priorities and availabilities, military matériel, supplies and guidance necessary to the accomplishment of the objectives listed in e above.
  - 3. . . . the United States should: 2

a. Press now for the inclusion of Greece as a full member of NATO, this being the most desirable form of reciprocal security arrangement.3

Footnote continued from preceding page.

Secretary reported that the President had approved the statement of policy contained in NSC 103/1 and directed its implementation by all appropriate executive departments and agencies of the U.S. Government under the coordination of the Secretary of State (S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351, NSC 103 Series).

This paragraph did not appear in the text of NSC 103/1 as approved by the President on February 15, 1951; it was drafted by the Department of State and recommended by the NSC Staff in NSC 109 for incorporation in NSC 103/1. Paragraph 3, approved by the President on May 24, 1951, was added by substitution of

The Executive Secretary of the NSC, in a covering note dated May 11, 1951 to NSC 109 (a draft policy statement on Turkey printed on p. 1148), informed the Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization that the NSC Staff, in preparing the draft statement, had recommended that revisions be made to NSC 103/1 along the lines of paragraph 3 of the draft statement of policy on Turkey. On May 24, 1951, the Executive Secretary informed the National Security Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization that the President had that day approved the revisions to NSC 103/1 as proposed in NSC 109 and had directed their implementation by all appropriate executive departments and agencies of the U.S. Government under coordination of the Secretary of State. The revisions are indicated in subsequent footnotes.

- b. If full membership of Greece in NATO would be unacceptably delayed, conclude alternative security arrangements which would include Greece and would not prejudice Greek membership in NATO at the earliest practicable date.4
- 4. A Soviet or satellite attack against Greece would threaten the security interests of the United States and so increase the danger of global war that the United States in common prudence pending the conclusion of reciprocal security arrangements, including the United States and Greece, should assist in opposition to the attack in a manner and scope to be determined in the light of circumstances then existing, including the following general courses of action: 5
- a. Place itself in the best possible position to meet the increased threat of global war.

b. Seek, by political measures, to stop the aggression, localize the action, and restore the status quo.

c. Provide such military matériel and deploy such forces to the general area as can appropriately be made available without jeopardizing the security of the United States . . . in the light of recommendations by the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the time.

d. Urge other nations to take similar action, including appropriate measures in the United Nations and NATO.

5. After conclusion of reciprocal security arrangements, including the United States and Greece, the United States should respond to a Soviet or satellite attack against Greece in a manner and scope to a revised page to NSC 103/1 circulated to the National Security Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization by the Executive Secretary, NSC, under a covering memorandum dated May 24, 1951.

For the position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff with regard to the statement in paragraph 3b expressed to the Secretary of Defense in a memorandum dated May 22, 1951, and circulated to the National Security Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization that day, see footnote 1, p.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In May of 1951, the Department of State formally broached the subject of Greek and Turkish membership in NATO to its NATO allies as a solution to the various strategic and command problems involved in protecting and possibly expanding the southern flank of the Western defense system. There followed 4 months of extensive debate and diplomacy within NATO and between the United States and various NATO governments until, at its Seventh Session at Ottawa in September 1951, the North Atlantic Council formally extended an invitation to both Greece and Turkey to adhere to the North Atlantic Pact. There followed months of negotiation between the Turkish Government and the United States, United Kingdom, and France concerning the precise command relationship to be established between the original NATO powers and the proposed new members, and this carried question of formal Greek and Turkish membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization beyond the end of the year. For documentation on the question of Greek and Turkish membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 460 ff.

&lt;sup>5</sup> This paragraph was numbered 3 in the text of NSC 103/1 approved by the President on February 15. The phrases "pending the conclusion of reciprocal security arrangements, including the United States and Greece" in lines three to five of the paragraph were added as proposed in NSC 109 in the revised page circulated by the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council, under cover of his memorandum of May 24, 1951. See footnote 2, p. 464.

be determined in the light of the recommendations by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the circumstances then existing, and within the framework of the obligations of the United States under those arrangements.<sup>6</sup>

781.00/3-851: Despatch

The First Secretary of Embassy in Greece (Memminger) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, March 8, 1951.

No. 1402

Ref: Embtel 2761 Feb 24, 1951  $^{\scriptscriptstyle 1}$

Subject: The Greek governmental crisis of February 1951

The vote of confidence of 133 to 91 accorded the Venizelos Government on February 22 terminated a crisis which in the eyes of most participants and observers was no crisis at all, and emphasized more than anything else the current negative and regressive factors in Greek political life. No real issues were settled, or even raised, and the governmental solution which emerged was in effect a throwback to that of a year ago, the tri-partite Center coalition which, however, lacked the virtue of the original combination in that it contained no hope of being a productive one.

Origin of Crisis:

Perhaps the most striking feature of the crisis is that it was precipitated by LEK (Populist-Unionist Party), the off-shoot of the Populist Party headed by Stephanopoulos and Kanellopoulos, and which since its inception had been regarded as an almost certain participant in the Government.

At the first major political rally of LEK held in Salonika February 18, both leaders surprised the political world by the viciousness of their attacks on the Government because of its lack of stability and minority character. Kanellopoulos went a step farther than his partner with a controversial statement, later variously interpreted, which was taken by some to mean that LEK favored an extra-parliamentary solution and by others as a warning that the country might be forced to this unless the Government took steps to strengthen its position.

&lt;sup>6</sup> The text of NSC 103/1 as approved by the President on February 15 did not contain this paragraph 5. Approved by the President on May 24, 1951, as a revision to NSC 103/1 as recommended by the NSC Staff in NSC 109, the paragraph was added in a new page to NSC 103/1 circulated to the National Security Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of Defense Mobilization under cover of a memorandum by the Executive Secretary, NSC, dated May 24, 1951.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed; it reported on the Greek political situation in light of the governmental crisis.

The latter interpretation is the one given by Kanellopoulos himself, and may be taken as the correct one since he was its author.

The remark nevertheless caused a storm in Athens and many indignant protests from leaders of other political parties. Two days later Kanellopoulos interrupted his tour of Northern Greece to return to Athens and announce in the Chamber that LEK was withdrawing its support from the Government, at the same time raising the question of a vote of confidence. In the absence of Prime Minister Venizelos then touring at Yannina, the challenge was taken up by Vice Premier Papandreou who condemned the attitude of LEK as an affront to Parliament and the parliamentary system.

The Solution:

The debate on the confidence question touched on no national issues since none had been raised. For a moment there was some doubt as to whether a debate and vote would take place at all, owing to a disposition of some circles to dismiss the incident as never having taken place. What resulted therefore was merely maneuvering for support to forestall a collapse of the Government. Regardless of what disagreements existed in the Parliament there was general agreement among the Right that the Government must be upheld in order to prevent elections, which would have disastrous results for many deputies and possibly some of the parties.

As the principal supposed support of the Government, LEK, had suddenly been transmuted into the principal opposition, most speculators concluded that Tsaldaris would come to the rescue of Venizelos and Papandreou, since his opposition to them had never been complete and the crisis afforded an opportunity for him to return to power, the one goal of every Greek politician. The Embassy has little doubt that he would have done so if necessary even if the Government refused to accept his solution of a broad coalition embracing Maniadakis' and Sofianopoulos' groups as well as his own. However, EPEK displayed a surprising amenity to our suggestion that it would be irresponsible to overthrow the Government without some concrete alternative to offer and an equally surprising political ingenuity in getting credit for saving the Government while at the same time securing its own ends. Greece had thus returned to the Center coalition created by the March 12, 1950 protocol, but under conditions really providing for its own dissolution.

EPEK did not agree to participate in the Government but only to support it on certain conditions. These were, first, that municipal elections be held on April 15, second, that a national electoral law be prepared as soon as possible, and third, that shortly thereafter general elections should be held if the international situation did not further deteriorate. A fourth, unpublished, item called for the municipal elections to be held on the basis of the electoral register as it was prior to the recent purge which disenfranchised a considerable number of supposedly leftist voters. It is not known whether the Government will adhere to this particular point.

The expedient accepted by Venizelos took nearly everyone by surprise and evoked practically no enthusiasm. The rightist press denounced the Government leaders for bowing to terms which in effect placed the country at the mercy of EPEK, in its opinion nothing more than a society of fellow-travellers. Only a limited number of Center partisans thought the solution the best one under the circumstances, the balance feeling that the present Parliament was sick beyond any possible cure and should be dissolved at once. This situation might have descended into a genuine crisis had it not been for the Katramatos-Metaxas affair 2 a few days later which was much more spectacular by nature and effectively diverted public attention from the real problems the Government faces.

Conclusions:

1. The February crisis provided one further piece of evidence confirming the essential instability of the Venizelos-Papandreou coalition and their inability to create any viable arrangement from the present Parliament. General realization that their Cabinet may be the last step before national elections, and genuine reluctance of all rightist politicians to face the electorate, are again shown to be two dominant factors of the present Greek political world.

2. LEK has emerged from this foray with considerable loss of prestige and as a party with an indecisive leadership and vague program. Kanellopoulos and Stephanopoulos demonstrated distressing irresponsibility and superficiality by provoking a crisis without having any really concrete alternative to offer. A general belief has grown up in political circles that in any genuine test, such as elections, LEK might well collapse and disappear from the political scene.

3. The country has moved closer to national elections. No one believes that EPEK will continue its support for any length of time, even if national elections were postponed indefinitely because of "a deterioration in the international situation" as mentioned in its pledge to support the Cabinet. The Government is apparently going forward with municipal elections in mid-April and many anticipate that the results will provoke a reshuffle or a downfall of the present Government even if the latter should in the meanwhile have adjourned Parliament, a procedure favored by Papandreou. Greek politicians and political memories being what they are, renewal of many of the old combinations may be attempted with temporary success but it is unlikely that any coalition from the present Parliament could long endure.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In telegram 2785 from Athens, February 26, Peurifoy had reported that elements of the extreme right wing press in Athens had charged Col. Aristides Metaxas, Chief of the King's Political Bureau, of using his official position to secure clemency for industrialist John Katramatos convicted in late 1949 of rendering financial assistance to Greek guerrilla forces (781.00/2-2651).

4. If any one party got some advantage out of the crisis it was EPEK. It was EPEK which cleverly exploited a confused situation and succeeded in forcing the Government to go on record against its will for early elections, which Plastiras has been calling for since the Government fell last August. For the other parties the most that can be concluded is that they emerged from the fray with their armor a little more tarnished.

The Embassy is closely following the current situation in the light of this crisis and the conclusions outlined above, and will soon prepare for the Department's consideration recommendations on what the Embassy believes to be the best course it should follow in promoting joint Greek and American interests.

ROBERT B. MEMMINGER

781.00/3-951: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, March 9, 1951—noon.

2942. After thorough canvass political scene following recent crisis, Embassy has reached following tentative conclusions regarding advisable US attitude:

1. Strong probability Left achieve considerable success municipal elections particularly in urban centers largely because of unsatisfactory economic situation and apparent inability Government arrest deterioration. Whether EPEK or extreme Left will reap major profit open to question, but might be latter. Nevertheless, we do not consider Embassy should urge Government again postpone elections unless startling internal or international developments occur prior April 15. Municipal elections not only desirable in principle in line general program democratization and decentralization, but also should give excellent indication whether national elections should be hazarded. Also another postponement after last month's clear commitment might further weaken Government and drive EPEK leftwards.

We do propose, however, (1) urge Government and other nationalist parties adopt common slates in doubtful urban centers in order prevent fragmentation rightist vote to profit of Left and (2) urge EPEK not pick fellow-travelling candidates in hope winning extreme Left support. Some cooperation with these proposals anticipated.

2. Venizelos and Papandreou believe no Government under present chamber could be stable and are working toward national elections

August or September when they hope economic conditions will have improved. Their conclusion based on conviction LEK unreliable partner. Populists under moral cloud EPEK would not enter Government prior elections and municipal Government unstable and ineffective. Other Rightist parties consider elections would produce chamber worse or at best approximately same as present and favor further efforts create new combination without elections. Palace inclines toward latter view. EPEK, of course, intent on elections. We propose urge Government adjourn definitive decision on national elections until outcome municipal elections known. In meantime, explorations currently in progress re broadening present Government can continue. Most feasible project is inclusion LEK, but we agree any combination based on present chamber unstable unless Rightist internecine quarrels should be submerged by strong Leftists wing in municipal elections.

3. Since majority voting system now considered by all parties to favor Papagos' solution national elections would probably be held under proportional system. Papagos' solution has experienced setback as result inept behavior his supporters during recent crisis and current coolness between Marshall and palace which undoubtedly exists despite King's assertion to contrary. Embassy sees no reason encourage Papagos' solution unless international situation worsens or all other means achieve stabler Government fail.

4. Should national elections become necessary, we believe they should be held by present Government perhaps somewhat broadened in order minimize interruption economic program. After election situation, seems probable either Center or Right coalition, preferably former, could be reconstituted and Government based on substantial Parliamentary majority setup.

5. As Department will note, no startling improvement in Greek political scene can be forecast. Prospects are either for: (1) Rightist coalition of three or four parties based on present chamber held together by fear of Leftist gains in elections, or (2) Center coalition based on new chamber not differing essentially from that created by 1950 elections. Nevertheless, we wish to emphasize that though such Government would represent neither competence nor stability we would desire it would nevertheless be best that can be realistically expected in Greece at this time and would be generally responsive to US advice and fully committed to US objectives.

6. In view this fact and of serious danger growth Leftist sentiment in Greece as result deteriorating economic situation Embassy believes Greek Government of character indicated above, despite obvious shortcomings, should receive US support in order bolster its standing with mass Greek public opinion particularly in view upcoming municipal and perhaps national elections. Such support should be manifested in two ways: (1) Sufficient economic aid to check growing political unrest even if this means slight increase in dollar allocations to compensate for rising world prices and to build up small reserves of essential foodstuffs and (2) avoidance public criticism Greek Government and occasional measured praise concrete accomplishments of Government. Latter form of support will not in any way reduce necessary unpublicized pressure on Greeks to exercise fullest possible degree self-help and to implement whatever military or austerity measures required by international developments.

7. I would appreciate receiving Department's reaction to general political approach outlined above.

PEURIFOY

In telegram 3334 to Athens, March 21, Acheson informed Peurifoy that the Department concurred in the general views set forth in the source text: National elections should be deferred pending the outcome of municipal elections, a re-examination of internal Greek economic and political conditions, and the general international situation. Acheson added that the Department endorsed the view that the Papagos solution should not be encouraged except in the event that all other means to achieve a more stable Greek government had failed, and then such a solution should if possible follow constitutional practices. Acheson also reported a growing concern in the Department for the tendency of Greek political leaders to abandon support for a majority system in the event that national elections were held and stated "Dept recognizes Emb may be obliged actively encourage polit solution which we believe best calculated provide stability." In conclusion, Acheson endorsed Peurifoy's views concerning the necessity for economic aid to check growing political unrest. (781.00/3-951)

781.00/3-2151: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, March 29, 1951—7 p. m.

3488. Re Embtel 3098 March 21.<sup>2</sup> Dept keenly interested Venizelos statement Liberal-EPEK merger may become real possibility.

This development may present opportunity effect basic improvement in Grk polit sitn by promoting polarization "nationalist" parties in traditional pattern comprising principally Venizelist groups on one hand and parties Populist derivation on other. Indications of at least temporary abandonment Papagos solution by Palace seems whole-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Norbert L. Anschuetz, officer in charge of Greek Affairs. Cleared with William Rountree, Director of GTI.

Not printed; it reported that Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs Sophocles Venizelos had informed Ambassador Peurifoy that he was exploring the possibility of bringing about "in very near future" a merger of the Liberal and EPEK Parties and a consequent new government based upon this union. According to Venizelos' plan general elections would be held in August. The telegram also recalled for the Department's information that such a union had been envisaged ever since the March 1950 general elections, and that "Many of most influential deputies in both parties have long favored this move." A number of speeches advancing the idea had recently been made by leading figures in both parties, and the Embassy intended to seek out General Plastiras and other EPEK leaders shortly to determine how serious was this "long-mooted scheme." (781.00/3-2151) some development this direction. Nevertheless, irrespective merits reconstituting Populist Party, involvement Palace in movement mend Populist Party might be interpreted as partisan effort restore power and influence traditional source royalist strength and might therefore have dangerous implications (re last sentence penultimate para Embtel 3098).

EPEK-Liberal merger might be advantageous in

(1) accelerating latent tendencies toward consolidation "nationalist" parties into two camps. This wld avoid split in Grk polit life along Right-Left lines.

(2) providing govt with absolute Parliamentary majority (assuming Papandreou induced adhere to govt), thus eliminating necessity natl elections near future. Notwithstanding Venizelos' difficulties with Papandreou Dept has noted reports which tend indicate Papandreou might eventually participate in efforts bring together all former Venizelist factions.

(3) Enhancing prospects Parliamentary adoption majority system in event natl elections required.

Dept recognizes merger EPEK and Liberals wld require solution various difficult personality problems and perhaps frequent sympathetic advice from Emb. Nevertheless moment may have arrived when US shld actively but discreetly encourage consolidation present polit parties and acceptance majority election system. Dept recognizes such course involves serious problems such as possible reaction left wing of EPEK, position of presumably non-communist Left such as Sophianopoulos and Svolos, as well as an examination in light Grk and US interests of consequences revitalization Populist party and possibility Populist dominated govt in event new elections. . . .

Emb's views requested.3

ACHESON

&lt;sup>3</sup> Telegram 3766 from Athens, May 5, reported that it was now expected that the Greek Parliament would be prorogued until August at which time it would be called back into session briefly to proclaim elections unless the international situation was such as to preclude such a move. It also reported that a Parliamentary commission was currently studying an alternative electoral system but that final decision on this matter might well be postponed until August and that Venizelos had stated that endeavors to merge EPEK and Liberal Parties had foundered on the insistence by General Plastiras that he assume the office of Prime Minister and the King's refusal to accept him in that capacity. (781.00/5-551)

781.00/5-1251: Telegram

The Chargé in Greece (Yost) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, May 12, 1951—2 p. m.

3884. PriMin has issued statement effect there is no reason hold new elections unless agreement can be reached on some modification electoral system which will bring about stable govt with substantial majority. Meeting party leaders being held next week attempt reach agreement on system.

Venizelos and EPEK leader inform us they favor variant of proportional system which wld grant to three parties receiving largest popular vote all parliamentary seats not alloted in first distribution. These three parties wld presumably be Liberal, EPEK and Populists and Venizelos is confident support these parties will ensure adoption this system. Papandreou in own interest supports straight proportional system or modification thereof favoring four rather than three main parties. Others oppose latter suggestion, and we believe rightly, on grounds fourth party might be extreme left. In order reconcile Papandreou, Venizelos has proposed their two parties merge. This wld be in line our objective reducing number parties and we are informing two leaders proposal seems sensible to us, but there is serious doubt Papandreou will consent to play second fiddle to Venizelos unless convinced his own electoral chances are very poor.

Venizelos has stated publicly he has no objection holding elections in July if other parties desire shorten electoral period. Present plans remain however recall Parliament late in June pass on budget and electoral system and hold elections late Aug or early Sept. There is still some talk service govt to hold elections, but King informs us he favors keeping present govt in order avoid unnecessary changes and we expressed hearty agreement.

There continues be fair prospect Liberals and EPEK might merge after elections with leader of party receiving larger vote becoming PriMin. In any case two parties plan if they win election to form govt with or without Papandreou. Palace continues adamant opposition Plastiras as PriMin though EPEK leaders including Gen were invited to Palace reception yesterday and talked at length with King. Palace still endeavoring detach Tsouderos from EPEK but he informs us he believes he can be more useful remaining with party fortifying its orientation to center and guiding it toward merger or coalition with libs. . . .

Efforts of Populists absorb smaller rightist parties also continuing but no significant progress as yet.

Yost

&lt;sup>1</sup> See footnote 3, supra.

781.00/5-1251: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, May 17, 1951—1 p. m.

4367. Re Embtels 3766 and 3884.<sup>2</sup> Dept approves views expressed by you to Grk leaders concerning polit situation.

We believe we shid continue advocate adoption majority system. We perceive no justification new elections unless system employed subsequently provides basis for more stable govt. In event spectre Papagos responsible any real degree for current reluctance accept majority system, Palace might be willing suggest to Papagos that he issue statement disclaiming any intention participate forthcoming elections. We have noted lip service which Populists pay to majority system. To what extent does Emb consider this reflects actual Populist views?

If, however, opposition majority system cannot be overcome at this time without creating serious resentment, any proportional system which wld sharply reduce number parties wld represent improvement. System in which second distribution seats limited to three parties receiving largest popular vote wld seem present one effective method reducing fractionalism in Grk parties (Embtel 3884).

We believe Emb shld continue encourage Liberal-EPEK merger. We recognize nevertheless, initiative must come principally from Grks themselves and that Emb cannot place itself in position where it must accept responsibility for consequences such development. Palace cld exercise wholesome influence this situation and we approve your intention point out to King that premiership for Plastiras might well be price worth paying for merger Liberal and EPEK parties. Under circumstances contemplated (Venizelos as party pres and vice premier), we consider Plastiras wld be adequately insulated from undesirable influences.

Any merger which occurs after elections wld seem be little more than coalition, and therefore wld represent only slight progress toward internal polit stability. We are concerned that if nothing accomplished toward reconstitution of Liberal Party in light various favorable factors existing at this time, long period may elapse before conditions will again present opportunity consolidate polit parties in Greece. Liberal-EPEK merger wld probably make possible adoption majority system which, in turn, wld force polarization all other polit parties into traditional Liberal-Populist pattern.

We are pleased learn Parliament will reconvene in June discharge its obligations connection approval of budget. . . .

Peurifoy concurs.3

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Anschuetz, cleared by Rountree.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Telegram 3884, supra; telegram 3766 is summarized in footnote 3, p. 472. <sup>3</sup> Peurifoy was in Washington for consultations with Department of State officials.

Editorial Note

In telegram 4192 from Athens, May 31, Minister Yost reported that at 5 a.m. that morning several companies of the Greek Army had surrounded the Parliament building and the Athens radio station. Venizelos had called Papagos who arrived on the scene at 6 a.m. and ordered the troops returned to their barracks which they did. Yost further reported that an investigation was currently underway to determine who was responsible for this action and whether it was merely an isolated incident. (781.00/5-3151)

Yost reported in telegram 4215 from Athens, May 31, that to all outward appearances the situation was calm with no reports of any public or army disturbances in any part of the country. He added that the morning's incident appeared to be an isolated affair in reaction to the recent resignation of Papagos as Commander in Chief of the armed forces. (781.00/5-3151) King Paul described to Peurifoy the events and reasons leading to Papagos' resignation in an interview on June 4, the substance of which was transmitted by Peurifoy to the Secretary in telegram 4272, from Athens, June 4, not printed. (781.00/6-451)

781.00/6-151: Telegram

The Chargé in Greece (Yost) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, June 1, 1951-6 p. m.

4232. Amb Peurifoy's expedited return <sup>1</sup> will have excellent effect. It is reported in morning press and clearly connected with Papagos' resignation. We have informed Venizelos and he will see Amb immed upon arrival.

Situation continues calm though there was certain amount of ferment among armed forces throughout country yesterday. We anticipate no further manifestations of any importance if govt and gen staff continue to handle situation carefully. Confirmation positions Grigoropoulos, Tsakalotos and Kitrilakis, all Papagos' men, resulting from their new designations has had definitely reassuring effect on armed forces. Gen public of course is deeply distressed and uneasy at loss of Marshal and particularly at fact, now openly discussed in all press, that it resulted from friction with King.

PriMin informs us manifestation yesterday was engineered by two brigadiers and two colonels who are now confined to quarters but not arrest. They belong to secret organization within armed forces called Idea, with which Dept is familiar, which according to Venizelos, has 1500–2000 officers in key positions. He says gradual removal most important these officers from key positions being considered. Also, although Marshal opposed sanctions against those involved in yesterday's manifestation, King feels some action against men who had been false to their oath must be taken. I told PriMin I considered it of utmost importance no sanctions or purges be conducted in armed forces without agreement of Marshal as consequences might be most serious. I believe Amb will wish to emphasize same point to King.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram 4637 to Athens, May 31 reported that Peurifoy was arriving in Rome from Washington at 6:30 p. m., June 1, and instructed that an AMAG aircraft meet him there for his immediate return to Athens. It added that Peurifoy had expressed his desire to speak to Venizelos immediately upon his return. (123 Peurifoy)

Decree issued last night amends decree establishing position of C-in-C to permit King to assume functions, though relieving him of many of its lesser responsibilities. PriMin continues to assure us King will fill position only briefly, though adding King seems to like job. As previously reported, we consider this arrangement open to abuse and believe it shld be terminated quickly.

Another announcement today states King has abolished his civil bureau and created in its place Secretariat General. This presumably means elimination Metaxas. Papagos had two comments to make. First reported to us through Markezinis was that this proved there was plot against him since if action taken 3 days ago he need not have resigned. (This is hardly fair since King presumably felt he cld take action freely which he wld not take under "ultimatum.") Second comment was that Metaxas wld probably be taken back as private Secty in any case. Marshal also exercised that Potamianos might be named SecGen. Venizelos informed us no decision yet on occupant this position.

Papagos, having learned of Ambs return, sent Canellopoulos to inform us his decision continued to be irrevocable. He repeated assurances he will not enter politics. Canellopoulos nevertheless believes it not impossible restoration Marshal might be arranged. I agree and consider that in any case every effort shld be made. Venizelos has idea, which he has discussed with King who agrees, that, if Greece admitted to NAT, important place might be found for Marshal in command structure which wld involve his return to control of Grk armed forces.

Yost

781.00/6-551 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

ATHENS, June 5, 1951—2 p. m. 4293. I opened my two hour conversation with Papagos yesterday by telling him that I had not come to exert any pressure but to tell him as a friend how much my govt and I personally were concerned at the possible effect his resignation might have outside of Greece. I said that abroad in gen only the names of three Grks were known: The King because he was the King, Venizelos as son of his father, and Papagos because of reputation he had won for himself. I referred to high regard that Gen. Marshall, Gen. Eisenhower and Adm. Carney had for Papagos' abilities. It seemed to me that the Marshal's resignation was a great blow to Greece at time when some formal security arrangement for his country was being discussed. I sincerely hoped that some formula cld be found whereby his services cld continue to be utilized.

Papagos then related course his disagreement with King starting from some time back and citing many instances that the Emb had reported on at time such as Adm. Toumbas incident, Katramatos affair, appointment Potamianos and culminating in anti-Papagos activities reported by Gen. Ketseas from Washington. He stressed that as a private citizen Metaxas cld of course say anything he wished about Papagos without arousing the latter's concern but as close adviser to Count Metaxas' words and deeds cld not fail to affect Papagos. The Marshal said that King chose to disagree with him about appointments to the military household. Papagos had no intention of dictating these appointments to King and if asked wld gladly have furnished him long list of suitable candidates. When however the King picked people for military household posts whose honesty and integrity were doubted by Marshal the latter felt it his duty so to inform King. Contemplated appointment of Gen. Ventiris was opposed because it was entirely against regulations to appoint an officer on the inactive list to such a position and because he was convinced that this choice was dictated solely by the Palace's close connections with Ventiris brother and Pipinelis. He then returned to lengthy exposé his objections to Metaxas making clear that none of other sources of disagreement was as important as this. He added significantly that if King had told him at their mtg his intention to abolish political bureau of palace his resignation need never have occurred.

His version of his conversation with King differed considerably from the latter's. He stated that King had not attempted to persuade him to stay on but instead had queried him angrily as to why he had submitted his resignation to govt and not directly and in first instance to King. In other words, Marshal seemed to feel that King had provided no opportunity for arriving at mutual understanding. Truth is probably that two stubborn proud men met head on and neither wld retreat.

Marshal said he saw no way he cld come back to resume his duties as C-in-C. He thought it was best to leave situation as it existed except that he considered it mistake for King to assume post of C-in-C. In his opinion post shld be abolished and Grigoropoulos shld hold top job as Chief of Staff Natl Def. In reply my question, he stated that he considered Grigoropoulos, Tsakalotas and Kitrilakis as able and capable officers but felt latter shld not be subordinate to Tsakalotas and might be made Dep Chief of Staff Natl Def. I told him that Grigoropoulos had recently informed me all three officers anxious that Papagos return and willing step down to facilitate this. He was obviously pleased this manifestation their regard but it did not alter his fundamental position.

In concluding visit I stated that I was extremely sorry that he felt no way cld be found to reconcile him and the King and thus make his return to C-in-C post possible. We discussed briefly necessity my issuing some statement and agreed on gen lines of looking to future and expressing confidence in capable officers now at head of Grk armed forces.

Door seemed to be closed to any other developments until last night's announcement resignation Palace entourage. I now feel that some possibility of renewed effort exists. I have seen PriMin this morning who tells me King will assent to calling Papagos and discussing again question with PriMin and me present. King has also told Venizelos he intends announce today appointment Michael Pesmazoglou as head Palace Secretariat. Venizelos says this appointment shid be helpful in persuading Papagos return as latter has high regard for projected appointee.

¹ Peurifoy had informed the Secretary of State in telegram 4288, priority from Athens, June 5, that "For what appears to have been a dramatic gesture, and perhaps little else, palace announced shortly after midnight that entire court from Grand Marshal Levides to palace veterinarian Alexiou had placed their resignations at disposal of King in view 'rumors' Papagos' resignation due hostile attitude court circles and in order 'second King in his great patriotic work'." Peurifoy added that the initial reaction of most Greek observers was not to take the matter very seriously "believing King may merely refuse resignations and thus in effect confirm court entourage their positions. Some, however feel these pro forma resignations might conceivably provide basis for reconciliation Papagos and court." (781.00/6-551)

<sup>781.00/6-651:</sup> Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET ATHENS, June 6, 1951—3 p. m.

<sup>4317.</sup> Shortly after despatch Embtel 4293, June 5, King called me to palace and he said he felt necessary consult polit leaders before agreeing to take Papagos back. I remarked pointedly that different procedure had been fol in accepting Marshal's resignation. King asked my opinion of possibility Papagos resuming direction Army but not

<sup>1</sup> Supra.

Navy or Air Force. I emphasized my conviction that there was absolutely no use in considering Papagos return if prior conditions were set up by either party and that only useful efforts were those devoted to restoring full confidence between King and Marshal. The King remarked that he did not believe Papagos return possible but that he wld talk to Venizelos on subject. . . .

Venizelos came to see me in evening to say that the King had decided he would not attempt to bring Papagos back because he wld thereby lose face. PriMin added that he believed the King was right. I disagreed, stating that it seemed to me that rather than losing prestige the King wld gain stature by showing himself willing and able to effect reconciliation with the Marshal. However, as this was the King's and the govt's decision, I felt it necessary to accept it as final. I told Venizelos this resolution of matter was most discouraging. I did not intend any threat but I wished him and the King to know that they cld not expect me to continue sympathetic to their personal problems as in past. I wld feel it most necessary to keep the strictest watch on all local developments in order to insure that Grk-Amer cooperation cld continue to be possible.

Conclusion which I have reached and on basis which I issued press statement this morning is fol. Marshal regrets his hasty resignation and wld probably be willing to return if requested by King with assurance his continued confidence and if restored to full powers. King, however, whose mind has been thoroughly poisoned against Marshal by his entourage, including Queen, continues to regard resignation as unfriendly act, to state Marshal has lost his confidence and to refuse to contemplate his recall except under unacceptable conditions. Venizelos believes it useless to contest this attitude and is making no further efforts.

It wld probably be possible to obtain restoration of Marshal by ultimatum to palace but in total absence atmosphere of confidence friction wld immed recur and new crisis probably arise. I have, therefore, thought it best to drop matter for the present rather than prolonging ferment in public opinion.

It is barely possible confidence between King and Marshal may be gradually restored over period of time and without being sanguine we shall work to this end. . . .

781.00/7-651: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, June 8, 1951-7 p. m.

4812. Embtel 4317.<sup>2</sup> We share Emb's disappointment at failure Grks evolve satis solution Papagos affair, although do not pretend fully understand internal implications this matter. Dept will watch for intimation Papagos proposes, move into polit arena with earnest hope he will not do so.

We have noted (Embtel 4234)<sup>3</sup> Venizelos seriously considering possibility avoiding elections. Await your own view re desirability conducting elections near future in light recent developments. Our initial reaction is that in light polit ferment resulting from Papagos affair it becomes all more desirable clarify sitn through new elections. View with apprehension prospects new coalition from present Parl, possibly including LEK or Populists, which wld provide very little promise for further constructive effort by Grk Govt in its basic tasks of rehabilitating Grk economy and society, and improving Grk security measures.

Dept fears as result our conspicuous, unsuccessful effort influence outcome Papagos affair, US ability constructively direct course polit events may be diminished. Grk leaders have undoubtedly noted that US committed substantial portion its influence to proposition restoring Papagos. Measure our effort may be rather accurately gauged through press. In course this operation (objective of which US considered valid) we may have created resentments which will not immed disappear. Your dramatic return Greece and your efforts which followed (both which Dept approved) may have hardened parties in their positions thereby reducing possibility of solution satis to US. In light these facts we shld consider course we shld adopt to recoup our position.

It seems us in light real contribution which monarchy shld make as symbol natl unity and apparent inability Palace exercise this role in most effective manner, it becomes increasingly important fully develop relationship between Emb and Palace which wid enhance our faculty constructively influence Palace, and through it, Grk affairs in gen. We feel as result our strenuous effort in Papagos affair and unambiguous manner in which our position stated that wounds may have been inflicted on most vulnerable area of royal anatomy—its pride.

Dept concurs, as you suggested Embtel 4317, that US shid attempt frustrate any efforts by Palace to purge Grk Armed Forces and discourage renewal polit intervention in Grk Armed Forces from any quarter. This will be delicate task demanding not only US vigilance, but cautious, unobtrusive action when necessary. Your appraisal post Papagos sitn requested.4

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Anschuetz, cleared by Rountree.

Supra.Not printed.

ACHESON

611.81/6-1151 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, June 11, 1951—4 p. m.

4396. Ref Deptel 4812 June 8.1 We are at loss to understand Dept's apparent belief US prestige and influence in Greece weakened by . . . Papagos affair. . . . Having returned in this manner, had I not made vigorous effort to find satis solution, US prestige wld indeed have suffered in view gen expectation that our influence wld be exerted in interests of reconciliation universally felt to be in best interests Greece as well as US.

Far from being resented, exercise our influence . . . was earnestly solicited by mil leaders, most polit leaders and most of press. Even those hostile to Marshal were unwilling to see him go under circumstances which weakened morale of armed forces and reflected on King. Our efforts were generally recognized as friendly and helpful and their failure was received with deep regret and little or no blame. Only resentment engendered was perhaps in palace and even that mitigated by our refraining from pressing matter when King proved unyielding. It is precisely in Palace, moreover, that we consider our action most salutary and necessary since it demonstrated to King extreme seriousness with which we regard tampering with army. . . .

We are sure Dept shares our concern that Grk Army not suffer in morale and efficiency and this is principal danger raised by Papagos affair. Marshal had done excellent job of eliminating polit and Palace influences and creating tightly-knit organization under staff of aggressive and not wholly harmonious leaders. It is questionable whether any other man or group of men can resist these historic influences so successfully and it is realization this fact which has caused widespread apprehension in officer corps. Further purges under inspiration Potamianos and Gen Ventiris are feared and, if carried out, might cause armed forces to revert to unhappy condition of 1948.

Dept may wish to consult Gen Jenkins on this point. . . .

Marshal has repeatedly stated during last two weeks that he will not enter politics and we believe he is wholly sincere. We consider only development which might cause him to change his mind wld be precisely gutting of army by external influences. We understand he is at present considering withdrawal to Switz and believe this might be wisest course, allowing time for tempers to cool and permitting friends to pave way for eventual reconciliation with King.

See telegram 4396 from Athens, June 11, infra.

¹ Supra.

Venizelos has been seriously considering desirability postponing elections until next year and wld probably do so if he cld persuade Plastiras to enter govt now. We consider it very unlikely he can do so. Papandreou and Kanellopoulos are working actively for formation broad natl govt but Tsaldaris Friday issued statement that Populists wld not participate in govt which had not been sanctioned by verdict of people. Fact is that most politicians wld prefer to avoid elections and that mass of population is indifferent and apathetic, [but] momentum toward elections will probably prevail.

We are not inclined to feel at this time that elections wild be dangerous, though there is possibility that Papagos affair and behavior of Palace might become electoral issue and whip up rather than abate ferment. On other hand, we believe we shid be under no illusion that elections at this time wild clarify situation to any appreciable extent. Very little chance exists adoption majority system since apprehensions redoubled it wild be considered invitation to Papagos. Moreover, in present fragmented state polit parties, majority system unlikely to do more than produce unstable electoral alliances. Reconstitution two traditional parties . . . is gradual process which cannot be accomplished overnight by adoption any electoral system. While we agree and have consistently held that any coalition based on present parliament (except in case of critical natl emergency) wld be unstable and unwieldly, we shld not expect that elections under present conditions wld necessary produce marked improvement. Modified proportional system most likely to be adopted will favor three parties, Liberals, Populists and EPEK and probably produce govt formed from combination of two of them. Populist EPEK combination seems implausible. Pop-Lib combination is possible, but wld not provide coherent team and, with EPEK in opposition, wld work against reconstitution enlarged Liberal party. Govt dominated by Plastiras not too attractive since he wld probably attempt reduce size of army and to purge civil service in favor his partisans. Most hopeful prospect is therefore Liberal-EPEK combination dominated by former but there is some question whether even this wld be, except in having parliamentary majority, substantial improvement over present govt. We are inclined to feel therefore that pros and cons re elections this year are sufficiently evenly balanced so that US shld, unless conditions change, continue to maintain that question is one for decision by Greek people and leaders.

In summary, we believe that Papagos affair . . . involved morale and efficiency of armed forces and hence security of Greece and of West. On other hand, we do not believe question of elections or party alignment is proper cause for vigorous US intervention under present circumstances since we consider advantages to be expected from elections highly problematical and US security interests much less directly involved. . . . We shall also work energetically, in cooperation with mission, for least possible interruption, attendant upon elections, in basic tasks of rehabilitating Grk economy and society.

I shld appreciate being informed whether Dept agrees with above analysis and with general course of action proposed.<sup>2</sup>

PEURIFOY

<sup>2</sup> The same day (June 11) Minister Yost sent a "personal and secret" letter to GTI Director Rountree in which he reaffirmed that telegram 4812 "really did set us back on our heels and I think if you will reread it you will agree some of its comments were rather snide or at least excessively bland." Yost reassured Rountree that "the reservoir is not drained, that we are still as much loved as any Sugar Daddy ever is, and that we have rarely taken an action which had such general public support. On the other hand, we have to intervene every week on specific instructions from the Department on matters, ranging from yachts to tobacco, which really do create ill-feeling." After dwelling at some length on current difficulties in dealing with the volatile Greek political situation and on the great patience and competence shown by Ambassador Peurifoy, Yost concluded: "We stand ready to die for dear old Foggy Bottom but we must have our signals straight." (781.00/6-1151)

781.00/6-2551: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, June 25, 1951—7 p. m.

5141. Dept concurs in gen with analysis and course action outlined Embtel 4396.<sup>2</sup> Dept has at all times recognized importance vigorous US effort find solution Papagos affair and necessity protecting GAF from traditional Grk polit manipulation. Dept has never had any reservation whatever on this point. It was at all times Dept's intent and desire Emb shld make forceful presentation US views. On basis Emb reports and survey Grk press reaction Dept has concluded serious damage US prestige, of which Dept apprehensive, has not in fact occurred. Dept's apprehensions doubtless influenced by prominent manner events featured by US press and recollection reaction Grk public and press to other past US actions taken in Grk interest.

Dept concurs vigorous US action has undoubtedly given pause any who may contemplate seeking control Grk Armed Forces for their own ends. Dept tends believe Papagos affair transcends question personalities and probably reflects contest for control GAF which have traditionally been major and sometimes controlling factor in balance polit power in Greece. Papagos incident may well disclose basic feeling insecurity on part Palace as well as Palace conviction acceptable measure control GAF indispensable maintenance its position. Fact Papagos obviously not adequately responsive Palace direction and evidence efforts strengthen Ventiris clique (Embtel 4566)<sup>3</sup> seem lend support this thesis. Moreover, Papagos, as Comdr-in-Chief, was probably one most powerful polit factors in Greece. We have impression that for this reason neither Palace, Venizelos, nor any other important polit leader ardently desired restore Papagos. Inasmuch as full details forces at play will, by their nature, probably be only slowly revealed, we doubt foregoing analysis this para can be tested or implications Papagos affair fully understood at this moment.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Anschuetz, cleared by Rountree.

Dept accepts Emb view US shld maintain position timing new elections question for decision by Grks. However, Dept tends consider question of type election system employed as one basic issues governing polit, social, econ progress in Greece and consequently cardinal factor determining ultimate success US aid program. Greece cannot long bear burden proportional representation in addition other handicaps. Improvement govt stability must of course be regarded as evolutionary process involving, among other things, education Grk public and leaders. However, we find it difficult anticipate situation in which Grk Parl elected under proportional system wld advert to majority system without strong encouragement. . . .

Dept notes Grk leaders have reached virtual agreement re type proportional system to be utilized (Embtel 4525).3 System, if adopted, will represent considerable progress. Nevertheless, if any possibility exists majority system cld be made acceptable to Grk leaders we wld be inclined think Emb wld be justified in giving strongest encouragement such tendencies in line policy Emb has fol in this field. Some convincing public gesture by Papagos establishing beyond doubt his intention not participate forthcoming elections might contribute materially this regard. Moreover, if majority system cld be made more attractive by necessary action make next Parl revisionary, we wld find much merit in such idea both from legis as well polit point view, Dept recognizes consolidated parties created by majority system wld be subject initially various internal contradictions. We wld tend regard this as evolutionary and more than compensated for by establishment majority system pattern. Dept does not nourish high hopes such situation will materialize.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed.

On basis excellent Emb reports this subj Dept under impression substantial agreement exists between Emb and Dept re foregoing. Emb comments invited.<sup>4</sup>

ACHESON

'In telegram 4673 from Athens, June 28, Peurifoy expressed his great appreciation for the comments in the source text. He expressed concurrence with the Department's analysis of the Papagos affair and current Greek political situation and expressed the belief that the immediate repercussions of the Papagos affair "are safely over." The Ambassador also promised to continue advocacy of a majority system "and shall certainly take advantage of any shift in party strategies which might make its immed adoption feasible." (781.00/6-2851)

S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series

Memorandum by the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews) to the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council (Lay)

TOP SECRET

Washington, July 6, 1951.

Subject: First Progress Report on NSC 103/1, "The Position of the United States with Respect to Greece." <sup>1</sup>

NSC 103/1 was approved as governmental policy on February 15, 1951. It is requested that this report, as of June 22, 1951, be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

I Policy Implementation

The United States has continued to manifest publicly its continued support of the Truman doctrine as applied to Greece. The President and other high United States officials have cited Greece as an example of what can be accomplished with United States assistance in the struggle against international communism where the country threatened possesses the will to resist. The Secretary of State has publicly acknowledged that the United States is sympathetic to the desire of Greece (and Turkey) to frame some form of collective security arrangement which would include the United States and that, in the examination of this problem, consideration is being given to the inclusion of Greece (and Turkey) as full members of NATO.

On May 24, 1951 the President approved a revision of the Statement of Policy of NSC 103/1 <sup>2</sup> which provides:

(1) that the United States should press now for the inclusion of Greece as a full member of NATO, this being the most desirable form of reciprocal security arrangement, and

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dated February 14, p. 463. <sup>2</sup> In a memorandum for the National Security Council, dated May 24, not printed, Lay reported that the President had approved revision of NSC 103/1 on the basis of proposals advanced in NSC 109, The Position of the United States With Respect to Turkey (post, p. 1148), looking to an early adherence of both Greece and Turkey to NATO. The May 24 memorandum from Lay to the NSC is in S/S-NSC Files: Lot 63 D 351: NSC 103 Series.

(2) that if full membership in NATO would be unacceptably delayed the United States should conclude alternative security arrangements which would include Greece and would not prejudice Greek membership in NATO at the earliest practicable date.

Accordingly, the United States has proposed that Greece (and Turkey) be accepted in NATO as full members. The matter is now under consideration by the Council of Deputies.<sup>3</sup>

The United States has actively encouraged closer cooperation between Greece and Yugoslavia in recognition of the fact that the security of each country is vitally affected by the security of the other. In response to a Yugoslav inquiry the Greek Government advised Yugoslavia that:

(1) in the event of an attack against Yugoslavia, Greece is prepared to honor her obligations as a member of the United Nations,

(2) Greece presumes that Yugoslavia would do likewise in the event of an attack against Greece,

(3) Greece is prepared to enter into military staff talks with Yugo-slavia at the convenience of the Yugoslav Government.

Yugoslavia has not yet made any move to initiate military staff talks with Greece.

Greek-Turkish staff talks have continued at intervals. Although a more cordial atmosphere may be detected, no substantive results are anticipated pending the conclusion of some type of formal security arrangements between Greece and Turkey, on the one hand, and the United States on the other.

The Greek Government has demonstrated an improved willingness to take measures and to enact legislation calculated to improve basic economic and social conditions. In international affairs Greek policy has been unswervingly anti-communist and has accorded unreserved support to the United Nations and particularly to the United States. In some respects the relations between the Government and United States representatives in Athens have been more satisfactory than in any other period since the inception of the aid program. However, the political situation has not attained a desirable degree of stability. The United States has at every opportunity urged Greek leaders to merge political parties and to make changes in the electoral system which would tend to produce a more stable government. Municipal elections were held April 15 for the first time since 1936. These elections, which were the first in which Greek women have participated, failed to disclose any increase in communist political strength. It may be necessary for the United States to take measures to discourage an increase of political intervention in the affairs of the Greek Armed

<sup>See footnote 3, p. 465.
For documentation on the question of Greek-Yugoslav cooperation, see the compilation on Yugoslavia in volume IV.</sup>

Forces as a result of the resignation of Field Marshal Papagos on May 30, 1951.5

The economic program in Greece is, in general, moving from the reconstruction phase into the development phase. The objective of the development phase is to increase Greece's ability to produce to a level at which foreign assistance will no longer be required. Progress has been made in re-orienting and implementing the economic program to meet changed international and domestic conditions. Emphasis is being placed on an increase in production, particularly foodstuffs, and items of personal equipment required by the Greek Armed Forces. The dangerous inflationary situation generated by menacing international developments has abated somewhat as a result of a drastic restriction of credits, more effective collection of existing taxes and the imposition of new taxes, and a ration program which is now in the process of development. This program is designed to support the standard of living of the population through the supply and rationing of basic essentials at fixed prices.

Cominform propaganda alleging that Greece, along with Yugoslavia and Turkey, is an instrument of aggressive US-UK imperialism in the Balkans has been increasingly virulent. The principal motives for this propaganda appear to be:

(a) to attempt to prepare a moral justification for any eventual aggression by the satellites themselves, and

(b) to divert attention of the Bulgarian and particularly the Albanian people from their increasing hostility to their own Moscowdominated regimes.

The United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans (UNSCOB), which has been active in Greece since late 1947 and on which the United States has consistently played a leading role, has recently issued statements indicating that charges that Greece is making aggressive preparations are without foundation in fact.

Evidence of a continuing increase in the military potential of Bulgaria is a cause of growing concern. United States military estimates concluded that as of April 1951 Bulgarian forces, equipped with between 500-600 T34 tanks, possessed the capability of occupying a substantial portion of north-central and north-eastern Greece and that unless the Greek forces received major logistical support as well as air and possibly naval support the Bulgarian forces could probably eventually occupy the mainland of Greece. Subsequent unconfirmed reports indicate Bulgarian armored strength may now possibly include more than 900 tanks of the T34 type or heavier. In addition to thousands of Russians strategically placed throughout the Bulgarian Government and armed forces, there are continuing unconfirmed reports of the existence of regular Soviet troop units in the Dobrujda area of northeastern Bulgaria.

&lt;sup>5</sup> See editorial note, p. 475.

There has been no significant increase in the military potential of Albania where internal conditions are deteriorating at a rate which must be genuinely alarming to the communist regime and to the Kremlin.

Nevertheless, the Albanian frontier continues to divert substantial Greek forces not only for defensive purposes, but also in anticipation of an opportunity to move into southern Albania in satisfaction of the longstanding Greek claim to the area of Northern Epirus should international developments permit. Recent open Yugoslav support of an Albanian refugee organization constitutes evidence of Yugoslav intent to bring Albania under Yugoslav hegemony if possible. The United States has, since World War II, consistently and strongly advised the Greek Government to employ a moderate and pacific policy regarding Albania. Nevertheless, Greek determination to realize their own territorial claims in Albania will tend to increase as Yugoslav designs in Albania become more apparent. Accordingly, the United States is presently attempting to evolve a clear policy with regard to Albania because of the close connection between such policy and United States policies toward both Greece and Yugoslavia, and particularly in order to make plans for dealing with any aggression in the Balkan area.

As of April 30, 1951 approximately 167 million dollars worth of military equipment approved under the FY 1950 and FY 1951 MDAP programs remains to be delivered. In light of the increasing military capability of the Soviet satellites, particularly Bulgaria, continuing re-examination of the adequacy of the United States military assistance programs for Greece is required.

II Policy Evaluation

United States policy with respect to Greece has continued slowly to increase military, economic, political, and social stability in Greece.

The Greek Government, while it falls far short of the necessary level of stability and efficiency, has nevertheless demonstrated a greater sense of responsibility than any Greek Government since the inception of the United States aid program. Industrial and agricultural production have continued to rise. Conditions exist under which Greece may be able, in the foreseeable future, to realize the most effective advance in economic development since World War II, provided international tensions do not increase.

Nevertheless, the position of Greece is precarious and will remain so until the struggle between the communist and non-communist worlds is resolved. Evidence points incontrovertibly to the fact that Greece remains a target of primary importance to international communism. The success of United States efforts in Greece has undoubtedly added to the difficulties of maintaining Cominform control in Albania and Bulgaria and provided reassurance to the Titoist defection of Yugoslavia.

United States policy with respect to Greece must continue to make provision for the fact that Greece is, and will remain, acutely sensitive to international developments. While there are no conclusive indications of an intention on the part of the Kremlin to bring about hostilies in the Balkans this year, there is also no assurance that such intentions do not exist, particularly in light of the significant increasing capability of the Soviet satellites to engage in offensive operations. Until some security arrangement is concluded with the participation of the United States, Greek morale will suffer and Greek participation in an effective defense of the Balkan area will not be fully assured or adequately planned. Some of the members of NATO have demonstrated reluctance to include Greece (and Turkey) in NATO. Nevertheless, although final NATO action cannot yet be predicted, vigorous U.S. sponsorship will, we hope, result in the admission of Greece. Consequently, there is no reason to seek an alternative form of security arrangement for Greece at this time, particularly in view of the major advantages inherent in NATO membership.

The provisions of the policy of the United States with respect to Greece set forth in NSC 103/1, as amended, continue to be adequate and timely.

H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS

781.00/7-2851 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Athens, July 28, 1951—4 p. m.

501. Following passage rationing law last night on heels final adoption electoral law night before Venizelos pushed by Tsaldaris and Plastiras has taken plunge for elections in near future. Late last night PriMin announced he wld resign shortly, perhaps tonight, and that as chief of Lib Party he had proposed to King dissolution of Parl and elections under political govt. In audience yesterday with King Venizelos declared he agreed with Tsaldaris and Plastiras on impossibility declaring next Chamber revisionary under procedure specified Art 108 of Constitution which wld entail at least one months prolongation life present Parl and consequent extension period political uncertainty. Meeting of political party leaders with King scheduled for 6 p. m. tonight to discuss possible alternative procedures and if no agreement ensues Libs, Populists and EPEK favor dropping plan for next Parl to revise constitution. According his announcement, Venizelos resignation will take place at conclusion this meeting.

Possibility always exists of some last minute attempt to avert or postpone elections by formulation another coalition govt from present Parl but this does not appear very likely. Papandreou early this week told us that palace considered elections inevitable and saw no other practicable solution while Venizelos, keyman in any maneuvers based on existing Parl, now appears determined go ahead with elections. Latter point made this morning to us by MinFin Mavros. He said Libs hope King will give mandate to Venizelos to dissolve Chamber and conduct elections. Lib plan is install service personnel in key electoral posts of Justice and Interior (and perhaps Defense as well) but Libs wld hold all other Cabinet posts. Tsouderos, Mavros stated, has definitely joined Lib Party with his followers and wld be given Cabinet post perhaps as dep PriMin, which might become important if Venizelos carried out his desire to take short holiday abroad.

Other possibility is strictly service govt with Mantzavinos being mentioned as most likely PriMin. Party leaders divided on this question. Plastiras supports plan for Lib Govt to conduct elections but Tsaldaris as well as Papandreou and LEK publicly at least demand service govt.

Emb is inclined welcome latest developments. Prolongation of pol uncertainty most undesirable and for some time it has appeared there was little hope of any stable and effective govt being formed from this Parl. Revision of Constitution may be desirable but is not vital and does not appear of sufficient importance to warrant another month or more of the pol jockeying that has been going on for many months. When asked for Amer views on govt to conduct elections, I have emphasized our interests are that this govt provide necessary continuity in econ policy and in its composition and conduct future holding of free and fair elections results of which will be unchallengeable in Greece or abroad.

PEURIFOY

781.00/7-3151 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

Athens, July 31, 1951—4 p. m.

561. Papagos candidature has provoked varying polit reactions. Tsaldaris issued vehemently bitter statement, obviously anticipates serious polit damage to his party and can be expected use all means fight back including perhaps kind of press campaign he used to smear Markezinis in 1949. LEK which is mtg this morning fully expected dissolve as party and unite under Papagos banner. Plastiras unperturbed, Moatsis assured us and his statement to be published in afternoon press welcomes Papagos candidacy as clearing up doubt on subj and as endorsing EPEK view for necessity of change. Moatsis states new developments have not altered in any way Plastiras refusal to cooperate with extreme left and feels EPEK will run alone and not fuse with Liberals prior to elections. Venizelos says Liberals will stand pat, expects few if any defections, and has some hope Plastiras might, after all unite with Liberals in common electoral campaign. According Venizelos, King, whom he saw this morning, was extremely angry and urged Venizelos make strong statement against Papagos, order immediately full scale investigation alleged Papagos plot in army and to move to divest marshal of his mil title. Venizelos said he had demurred and had urged King to follow moderate course. We strongly endorsed this stand. We put across similar idea to palace SYG Pesmazoglou and to George Ventiris this morning.

Markezinis states Papagos decision came as great surprise to his friends as well as his enemies and electoral plans only in formative stage. Much depends on attitude Lambrakis, powerful backstage Liberal, who is returning hastily from Rome this evening. As Dept aware Lambrakis had been advocate of Papagos solution but recently despairing of marshal's candidacy switched to support of Venizelos. Markezinis hopeful that despite lack advance knowledge Papagos plan Lambrakis will swing his influential papers and his followers in Liberal circles to marshal. According Markezinis, Papagos as reported Embtel 470, July 26 <sup>1</sup> wld endeavor attract candidates from center as well as right tradition and insist on necessity bringing many new men into politics. He wishes put emphasis on constructive program and avoid attacks on other parties and personalities.

Marshal's candidacy introduces entirely new element into political situation and upcoming electoral campaign. Even initial results not yet clear. Emb convinced only practical course for us to fol is one of strict impartiality and nonintervention except in certain possible contingencies which we will discuss in subsequent tel.

PEURIFOY

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed.

781.00/8-151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, August 1, 1951—3 p. m.

574. As stated Embtel 561, Jul 31, we consider Emb shld refrain from intervention or public comment on Papagos entry into politics except as we may wish informally to deny rumors that Amers inspired or encouraged his action. Privately and discreetly however we intend if it seems necessary to attempt to minimize 2 possible effects of marshal's steps.

One wld be unconstitutional maneuvers by palace to eliminate marshal from campaign or call off elections or so to act as to drive marshal into open hostility to monarchy. While we trust wiser counsels will prevail, anger and bitterness of King and Queen might impel them to such action. Ominous symptom was instruction of King to Venizelos to deal henceforth with Potamianos rather than Pesmazoglou. We suspect this is because latter as he indicated mins had advised King to accept sitn calmly and to seek reconciliation with marshal. Ventiris is apparently giving similar advice but others of palace entourage can be counted on to add fuel to flames.

Second untoward development might be polarization polit forces into extreme right-left camps, one behind Papagos and other behind Plastiras. We consider this danger less serious particularly if Papagos continues present effort to develop center rather than rightist constellation and if Plastiras sticks to assurances he will refuse any alliance with Commies. Immed fusion of Libs and EPEK might incline both generals to moderation but we doubt Plastiras will accept unless optimism regarding his prospects severely shaken.

While bulk of Papagos support will probably come from Populists which accts for virulence of Tsaldaris attack we incline to belief marshal will draw strength from all elements of non-Commie electorate. Many of those disgruntled with old polit leadership, who wld previously have gone with Plastiras may now vote for Papagos. Markezinis even with such leading Libs as Mavros, Averoff and Glavanis will switch to marshal and this while unlikely is possible. At all event Papagos practically certain to be one of three largest parties and cld conceivably have or approach absolute majority of Parl seats. Emb will endeavor earliest obtain and report country wide reaction and prospects.

Shld Papagos gain control of govt, admin wld probably become more firm, consistent non-defective and ECA prog wld benefit. Extent to which this wld be true wld however depend on character of principal collaborators marshal chooses. . . .

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra.

Real disadvantage Papagos entry into politics is long term one which has hitherto persuaded Dept and Emb to consider him last card for use only in great emergency. Artificial and probably temporary crystallization of polit forces around marshal will interrupt gradual normalization of Greek polit life and reconstitution 2 traditional parties as predominant powers. Even if he shld succeed in his immed task this most fundamental work will have to be recommenced when he retires, probably after further period of splintering and confusion. This eventuality must conceivably be avoided if Papagos in effect inherited Populist party while Venizelos and Plastiras reconstituted strong Liberal counterweight. It seems unlikely at this writing however that any thing so clean cut will emerge.2

PEURIFOY

U.N. Doc. A/1857

Report of the United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans 1

[Extract]

CHAPTER VI

CONCLUSIONS

205. The dual function of conciliation and observation with which the Special Committee was charged by the General Assembly, and which the latter confirmed by resolution 382 (V) adopted on 1 December 1950, has always remained the Special Committee's constant concern. It has continued to observe the compliance or non-compliance by the Governments of Albania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and Greece with the recommendations of the Assembly.*

206. Full diplomatic representation between Greece and Yugoslavia was restored by an exchange of ministers on 28 November 1950. The two Governments have continued their efforts through diplomatic channels to solve their common problems, and progress is being made in the establishment of normal relations between the two Governments. A series of trade and communications agreements have been signed, and the repatriation of Greek children and other Greek nationals from Yugoslavia to Greece is proceeding. Yugoslavia has co-

&lt;sup>2</sup> The Department concurred "in general in excellent analysis" of this telegram (telegram 565, August 2, to Athens, 781.00/8-151).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Report signed in Geneva, August 15, covering the period August 1, 1950, to August 1, 1951, and submitted to the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly. A copy of this report was forwarded to the Department of State on August 15 by Jefferson Patterson and may be found, along with a number of despatches detailing the ongoing work of drafting the report, in file 357.AE.

*See chapter II, paragraphs 25 to 30. [Footnote in the source text.]

operated with the international Red Cross organisations and the Swedish Red Cross in making possible the progress thus far achieved. The children so far repatriated have been reunited promptly with their parents. In the light of this improvement in the situation the following paragraphs do not concern themselves with Greek-Yugoslav relations.

207. Diplomatic and good-neighbourly relations do not exist between Albania and Bulgaria, on the one hand, and Greece on the other. Whereas the Government of Greece has continued to co-operate with the Special Committee in the latter's efforts to promote the establishment of such relations, the Governments of Albania and Bulgaria have presisted in their refusal to recognize it as a legally constituted body of the United Nations.‡

208. In complete disregard of repeated General Assembly recommendations, those States at present accommodating the large number of Greek guerrillas known to have retreated into Albania and Bulgaria in 1949 have failed to permit any international verification of their disarming and disposition, thereby continuing a situation which constitutes a potential threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece. Similarly, those States detaining Greek military personnel and other Greek nationals taken into the territories of the countries to the north of Greece as a result of the guerrilla warfare, in continued violation of accepted international practice, have made no effort to comply with the General Assembly recommendations concerning the repatriation either of such Greek military personnel, or of those other Greek nationals who desire to return to Greece and live in accordance with the law of the land.§

209. In disregard of fundamental humanitarian principles, and despite the recommendations of the General Assembly in 1948, 1949 and 1950, which sought a solution of the problem on a purely humanitarian basis divorced entirely from political considerations, the States detaining the Greek children, with the exception noted above of Yugoslavia, have made no effort to permit the return to their homes in Greece of the children whose repatriation has been requested.

210. The problem of international refugees in Greece has undergone further development during the course of the past year. In view of the continued movement of political and other refugees across the northern frontiers into Greece, the Special Committee remains of the opinion that it would be desirable that these refugees should be resettled outside Greece.¶

† See chapter II, paragraph 30; chapter IV, paragraphs 175-183. [Footnote in the source text.]

‡ See chapter II, paragraphs 25–30. [Footnote in the source text.] § See chapter III, paragraphs 142–147; chapter IV, paragraphs 165–174. [Footnote in the source text.]

|| See chapter IV, paragraphs 175–183. [Footnote in the source text.] || See chapter IV, paragraphs 155–164. [Footnote in the source text.]

211. Although the Governments of Albania and Bulgaria have consistently disregarded the recommendations made by the General Assembly wih regard to co-operation by them with the Special Committee, those two Governments have continued to submit to the Secretary-General complaints alleging frontier violations. As the submission of these complaints implies recognition of the jurisdiction of the United Nations in the matter, it is the opinion of the Special Committee that action should be taken to draw the attention of the Governments of Albania and Bulgaria to the fact that an appropriate United Nations body, established by the General Assembly, already exists precisely for the examination and investigation of such complaints, and that this investigation can only be carried out if those States will co-operate with the Special Committee.

212. The "Free Greece" radio station of the Greek guerrilla movement has continued to operate from Romanian territory, transmitting instructions to the so-called "fighters" of this movement. The similarity between, on the one hand, the instructions given to guerrilla groups introduced clandestinely into Greece, as revealed by interrogation of members of these groups and, on the other hand, the instructions broadcast by the "Free Greece" station, affords a significant illustration of the fact that the leadership of the guerrilla movement comes from outside Greece.**

213. Furthermore, "Free Greece" broadcasts, accusing Greece of aggressive intentions towards Albania and Bulgaria, have been echoed by the Government-controlled propaganda emanating from certain East and Central European States. The presence of the Special Committee in Greece and the facts which it was able to establish on the spot made it possible for the Committee to affirm the groundlessness of these alarmist allegations and to ensure that they were assessed by world opinion at their true value. ††

214. Since the forced retreat of the guerrilla formations across the northern frontiers of Greece in 1949, the Greek guerrilla movement has changed its tactics and has not attempted to resume large-scale guerrilla warfare. In openly avowed pursuance of the same ultimate aim—the forcible overthrow of the Greek Government—the Greek guerrilla leaders have resorted to subversive agitation carried on in the frontier areas of northern Greece by small armed groups of specially selected and trained guerrillas which are under instructions to effect the underground re-organization of the Greek Communist and "Agrarian" parties, collect intelligence regarding the Greek armed forces, foment discontent, incite to insurrection and generally prepare for a future attempt to overthrow the Greek Government by force.

<sup>**</sup>See chapter V, paragraphs 184-203. [Footnote in the source text.]

†† Ibid. [Footnote in the source text.]

215. The Special Committee has obtained a considerable amount of evidence showing not only that aid to the Greek guerrilla movement has continued to come from Albania and Bulgaria, but also that it is now afforded in varying forms by other Central and East European States, in defiance of the General Assembly's injunction to Albania and Bulgaria to cease rendering any support to the Greek guerrillas, and its recommendation to all States to refrain from any action designed to assist any armed group fighting against Greece.§§

216. There has been ample evidence to show that such guerrilla groups have been trained along parallel lines at special schools for Greek guerrillas in Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary for their subversive work in Greece. By means of a widespread and highly organized network extending from these three countries through Romania to Bulgaria, they are infiltrated secretly into Greece. The groups are instructed, equipped, and frequently also armed, in Bulgaria and then aided by the Bulgarian authorities to cross, and in some cases later to re-cross, the Greek-Bulgarian frontier. There has also been at least one characteristic instance of a similar group from Eastern Europe returning to Greece through Albania with the assistance of the Albanian authorities. Without such assistance from abroad the guerrilla groups now operating in the northern frontier areas of Greece could neither initiate their work nor continue to carry it out. §§

217. The threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece has thus changed in character since the retreat from Greece of the guerrilla forces in 1949. During the past year, this change has resulted in tension in the Balkans, by reason of the actively hostile attitude of certain East and Central European States towards Greece. Thus, the Special Committee has deemed it inadvisable to recommend its own dissolution.

218. It is the considered opinion of the Special Committee, based on its experience since 1947, that the constant vigilance of the United Nations with respect to the political independence and territorial integrity of Greece has been an important element in the maintenance of the peace in the Balkans. However, the situation depicted in the foregoing paragraphs constitutes a continuing threat to Greece and to peace in the Balkans, which can only be removed if the States concerned will act in their relations with Greece in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations Charter and the recommendations of the General Assembly.

‡‡ See chapter III, paragraphs 71-152. [Footnote in the source text.] §§ Ibid. [Footnote in the source text.]

CHAPTER VII

RECOMMENDATIONS

219. In the light of the evidence before it, and of the conclusions it has drawn therefrom, and reserving its right to submit either supplementary or revised recommendations prior to the convening of the sixth session of the General Assembly it deemed advisable or necessary:

The Special Committee recommends:

- 1. That the General Assembly re-assert the importance of maintaining peace in the Balkans, continue its efforts to eliminate the threat to Greece by considering ways and means of achieving peaceful cooperation between Greece and the States from which this threat comes, and to that end re-affirm its recommendations to the appropriate States as to
- —the cessation of all assistance or support to the Greek guerrilla movement in its activities against Greece;
  - -the renewal of diplomatic and good-neighbourly relations;
  - —the renewal, revision or establishment of frontier conventions;
  - -the disarming and disposition of Greek guerrillas;
- —the provision of no arms and materials of war either directly or indirectly to Albania and Bulgaria until it has been determined that the unlawful assistance of these States to the Greek guerrillas has ceased:
- —the repatriation of Greek military personnel, Greek children and other Greek nationals;
- —the co-operation of the States concerned with the appropriate United Nations body, particularly as regards the prompt and impartial investigation of their complaints and allegations.
- 2. That the General Assembly take note of the evidence concerning the existence in Eastern and Central Europe of a network for the training and clandestine re-introduction into Greece of Greek guerrilla agents for the purpose of conducting subversive activities, espionage, sabotage, propaganda and underground reorganization of the Greek guerrilla movement in Greece in preparation for an attempt to overthrow the Greek Government by force.
- 3. That the General Assembly take into account the changed but continuing threat to Greece within the context of the hostile attitude towards Greece of a number of Eastern and Central European States, particularly Bulgaria, and the consequent tension in the Balkans.
- 4. That the General Assembly consider the advisability of maintaining United Nations vigilance over the Balkans in the light of the present nature of the threat to peace in that area.

Done at the Palais des Nations, Geneva, in the English and French languages, this fifteenth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-one.

Representative of:

Australia
Brazil
China
France Mexico
Netherlands
Pakistan
Poland
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland
United States of America

John Ryan Galba Santos Wen Yuan-Ning Emile Charveriat Omar Josefe P. C. Visser Ali Haider Abbasi

W. L. C. KNIGHT JEFFERSON PATTERSON RAOUL AGLION

781.00/8-2251: Telegram

Principal Secretariat

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

Athens, August 22, 1951—5 p. n..

890. I expressed our concern over the recent polit developments to PriMin yesterday, assured him we took decidely dim view of apparent attempts to deprive army from voting . . . .

I told Venizelos frankly that we were much disturbed by Gen Tsakalotos memo (remytel 870, Aug 21)<sup>1</sup> because:

(1) I had learned from Gen Frederick that the special training exercises or maneuvers referred to by Tsakalotos had not been previously scheduled;

(2) Tsakalotos statement that under electoral law, "the soldiers, especially those of the infantry, would not be technically able to vote" seemed incomprehensible in view clear provision for soldiers voting in electoral law;

(3) publication of a secret mil document in local press tended to foster belief that Greek mil security had diminished considerably since Papagos' resignation.

Venizelos answered that he too found Tsakalotos memo somewhat obtuse, but that he understood General referred to insignificant number of men along Bulgarian frontier. In any case we cld rest assured that there wld be no skulduggery and that soldiers wld vote as originally planned. He then declared that he wld have method of document's publication fully investigated.

¹Not printed; it reported that the daily newspaper Athinaiki, controlled by General Zervas, leader of the Greek National Party, had published on August 21 the full text of a memorandum dated August 4 from General Tsakalotos to the King recommending that the Greek armed forces not vote in the forth-coming national elections (981.61/8-2151).

Here I interjected that I wld save him trouble and expense of investigation by telling him without further ado that his close associate Napoleon Zervas had sought to peddle secret memo to Vima and perhaps other papers and failing had published it in his own sheet Athinaiki. His response to this was a rather shamefaced "I am afraid you are right." I then said pointedly that I understood Zervas' friend Boulis Metaxas had returned.

Venizelos said that he had opposed Sedgwick interview and considered its publication untimely although he fully agreed with its content (re Embtel 839, Aug 18). I mentioned fact that he had assumed full responsibility for this as he had several other controversial moves by Palace. This he ruefully admitted, but added categorically that King's polit activities wld cease immed.

Venizelos said he understood there was good chance of cut in ECA aid to Greece. If this were true he pled that no announcement be made until after elections since voters might hold him personally responsible. I told him that matter now under discussion in Congress but that I doubted very much any definite action wld be taken prior to Sept 9.

Although our conversation was friendly I made our concern with current trends eminently clear to Venizelos. In view of apparent determination in Palace circles to beat Papagos at all costs and Venizelos extreme reluctance to resist these forces it might be desirable for Dept to express our concern at turn of events here to some reliable Amer newspapermen. Here I might add that for some inexplicable reason Greek polits seem to fear criticism in US press more than anything else in world.

PEURIFOY

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, August 24, 1951—1 p. m.

919. King received me yesterday. I told him that speaking both as Amb and personal friend, I was gravely concerned by recent partisan polit activities of Palace which boded ill, particularly if Papagos wins election. His Majesty assured me that he wld "engage no more in such activities."

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

<sup>781.00/8-2451:</sup> Telegram

King, who apparently had been thoroughly briefed on our views by Venizelos (Embtel 890, August 22), was nevertheless obviously perturbed when I told him that if Eleftheria serial story "Papagos Affair" did not cease involving American officials and reporting twisted versions of their activities here during earlier polit crises, I might be forced to issue a statement to set record straight. His Majesty said that he sincerely hoped this wld not be necessary.

King then brought up subj of Queen's request to Eleni Vlachos that Kathimerini switch its pro-Papagos line (Embtel 859, Aug 20).<sup>2</sup> He explained that Queen and Miss Vlachos were old friends, that they met to discuss village relief, and that Queen had merely asked how so close a friend could support an enemy of court. (This inquiry according to Miss Vlachos took four hours.)

I told King that since Papagos was favorite in pre-election betting he shld take into account that he might well have to work with Marshal. He answered that if Marshal led field he wld not hesitate to offer him mandate although he fully realized that there might be certain difficulties between them. He said, for example, that Papagos might insist on certain change in army of which he as Commander-in-Chief wld disapprove. If Papagos controlled Parliament he could, of course, effect these changes by legislation and this wld be embarrassing to throne.

I thereupon suggested that King spare himself all possibility of embarrassment in this matter by ridding himself of this title of C-in-C before elections. His Majesty said that as matter of fact he had intended for some time to make someone else supreme commander of armed forces but had simply neglected to do so.

In this connection I said that we had been upset by Tsakalotos memo (Embtel 870, August 21)<sup>3</sup> which was embarrassing not only to King but also to various high army officers. We were even more concerned by current rumors that Grigoropoulos and several others who had openly favored soldier voting were to be eased out of army. This I made clear wld have ill effect both at home and abroad, as wld any measures such as staged maneuvers, to prevent soldiers from exercising right to vote.

King replied that no such moves were contemplated.

I then told His Majesty that I was sure his interest like ours was to give Greece a stable and able govt and consequently if Greek Rally was first party, but did not secure working majority, we hoped he wld use his great influence to persuade other polit groups to cooperate with Papagos and make stable govt possible.

¹ Supra.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Summarized in footnote 1, supra.

I closed audience by telling King that I not only admired really wonderful work which had made his Queen and himself best loved monarchs in Grk history, but that personally I was deeply grateful to them for their kindness to my family. We parted as we met in a spirit of friendship.

While it cannot be expected that extracurricular Palace activities will wholly cease, I believe that this interview and that with Venizelos will have moderating effect and perhaps forestall even more dangerous steps which might otherwise have been taken. It is worth noting that [George Vendiris], who was yesterday named secretary general to King replacing Pesmazoglou, has requested us earnestly to exercise our influence on King in favor of nonintervention and moderation. For contrary influences at work see my conversation with Levides (Embtel 918, August 24).4

PEURIFOY

Athens Embassy Files: Lot 59 F 48: "Top Secret 49-57"

Memorandum by the Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Chief of the United States Joint Military Air Group in Greece (Frederick)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[ATHENS,] August 24, 1951.

I should appreciate it if, in order to assist in supporting the American objective of maintaining political stability in Greece during and immediately after the forthcoming elections, you could take the following steps in relation to the Greek armed forces:

1. Take an early opportunity to point out to General Grigoropoulos and General Tsakalotos, particularly the latter, as I have pointed out to the King and the Prime Minister,<sup>2</sup> the concern with which we regard measures calculated to influence the attitude of the armed forces and their leaders in the elections. You should emphasize the very unfortunate impression which would be created in the United States and elsewhere by any attempt to prevent the soldiers from voting by holding maneuvers or training on or about election day or by any other device of this kind. In this connection you might refer to the unfortunate effect created by General Tsakalotos' memorandum published in Athenaiki, which gave the misleading impression that he and other generals opposed voting by the Army in the present election, whereas it is your understanding that their recommendation referred only to future elections. In view of the misunderstanding created by General Tsakalotos' memorandum, it would be desirable that a circular be sent by the General Staff to all corps and division commanders instructing them to see to it that the soldiers are in no way prevented from voting.

&lt;sup>4</sup>Not printed; it reported on a conversation between Peurifoy and Grand Marshal of the Court Colonel Levides following the Ambassador's interview with the King discussed in the source text. Levides expressed profound concern "with way things were going at Palace and possible disastrous results to throne and country which might occur therefrom." (781.11/8-2451)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Yost.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See telegram 890 from Athens, August 22, p. 498, and telegram 919, August 24, from Athens, supra.

2. You may also wish to point out to General Grigoropoulos and Tsakalotos that, while the ostensible purpose of the measures taken by General Tsakalotos during recent weeks has been to remove or neutralize political influences in the Army, the actual effect has been to create the widespread impression that the High Command has been using its position to oppose and defeat one of the political parties. Such activities cannot help but jeopardize the morale and unity of the armed forces at a time when it is of the utmost importance that they be maintained at their highest pitch.

3. Having made these points to Generals Grigoropoulos and Tsakalotos, I believe you should take every possible precaution to see to it that these recommendations are not ignored. Specifically, you and your staff should be alert to observe and, if possible, forestall any sanctions against any of the officers whose views on soldier voting and related matters differed from those of General Tsakalotos. Most important of all, I hope that your officers in the field will watch for and report immediately to you any indications that substantial units of the Army are, through one device or another, about to be deprived of the possibility of voting, and that they will, insofar as possible, observe the actual situation on election day.

781.00/8-2251: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, August 24, 1951—8 p. m.

956. Dept shares Emb's concern recent polit developments reported urtel 859 Aug 21 <sup>2</sup> and hopes your remarks Venizelos urtel 890 Aug 22 <sup>3</sup> will have salutatory effect. While not too hopeful Venizelos will influence Palace, perhaps he can be persuaded not lend himself to latter's machinations.

Agree you shid seek earliest opportunity discreetly and tactfully reiterate informally to King dangers not only to institution of monarchy, but also stability of country with subsequent possibility nullifying effect of Amer program in Greece, all of which inherent Palace intervention current electoral campaign. While Emb best able determine approach King, might be propitious have talk on grounds that monarchy post-war period has been stabilizing influence and any action taken jeopardizing this position wld have serious consequence to Grk nation. Re urdesp 197 Aug 7 4 as concomitant might be useful Emb take up this subj again with Pipinelis.

¹ Drafted by Ben F. Dixon of GTI, cleared by Edmund J. Dorsz, Deputy Director, GTI.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed. <sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 498.

Dept believes most important fact US seriously concerned this matter shld not become known publicly. Wish not lend any color frequent commie charge US intervention and domination Greece or arouse Grk animosity undue intervention internal affairs. Latter particularly important in view Emb's estimate Papagos prospects as result coming elections and his oft-announced position necessity Grks conduct own affairs. Dept's view any representation made this matter for present shld be informal and anything resembling démarche or formal statement should be avoided.

Since Palace intervention increasingly common knowledge Greece, public knowledge US disapproval Palace participation politics might contribute undermining prestige monarch and might be considered US tacit approval for Grks raise "issue of regime." Similarly, because present Palace polit activities almost entirely anti-Papagos public knowledge US anxious Palace eschew politics this time most probably be construed US support Papagos. Any talks King or Venizelos this matter shld make abundantly clear US impartiality as to consideration but Palace intervention politics inadvisable regardless direction that activity.

View foregoing considerations, Dept considers preferable not discuss this matter Amb Politis or prompt any press comment at this time. Such action might be reserved and employed only if sitn becomes much worse.

Your comments foregoing wld be appreciated.

ACHESON

781.00/8-2851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

Athens, August 28, 1951—4 p. m.

981. I met privately with Papagos and Kanellopoulos yesterday at their request. Marshal seemed serenely confident and in excellent condition both physically and mentally.

Papagos said that he was disturbed by King's continued failure to relinquish position of C-in-C as he feared that if this were not done

&#x27;Not printed: it reported on a conversation between Memminger and Panayotis Pipinelis, former Permanent Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs and occasional counselor to the King, during the course of which Memminger sought to win Pipinelis' support for a policy of Palace neutrality during the election campaign. Memminger told Pipinelis, inter alia, "in as nice a way as I could that we in the Embassy had long had great respect for his ability, intelligence and candor, and that we felt confident he would counsel caution in what might well develop into a very hot political campaign. He got the idea on the first bounce and assured me that he would." (781.00/8-751) prior to elections there wld be considerable embarrassment for all concerned.

Once he controls new Parl, as Papagos said, he can of course strip monarch of all mil auth, but to do this Marshal feels wld be generally regarded as anti-monarchical move and it is certainly one he wld be most reluctant to make. However, Papagos is determined to punish Gen Tsakalotos for what he considers his intensive partisan pol activities, particularly for his "fabricated memo" which misrepresented situation completely (Embtel 870 August 21). Papagos said that he had not decided whether to have Tsakalotos court martialed or simply retired without fanfare.

I mentioned fact that it was Papagos himself, after consultation with Gen Jenkins and me, who switched Tsakalotos from A Corps to Athens. He answered quickly that this was true in a sense, but that he had made Tsakalotos Inspector Gen and not chief of army staff. Tsakalotos, he added, was an able fighting man, but he had proved himself to be without character. Further he was not intelligent and it was obvious that his recent pol antics had been planned for him by palace circles which had no doubt promised him eventual promotion to chief of National Defense Gen Staff.

Papagos then asked that I seek to persuade Venizelos to use his influence to have King abandon his title as C-in-C. As I was non-comittal here, he added that he had been much pleased with our attitude of strict neutrality in local campaign and with our efforts to stop any faction from resorting to extreme tactics.

Papagos made it clear that when elected (it is never if elected with him) he will not as is popularly rumored seek to disturb King's household. In fact he maintains that he has never done so, but merely as life long friend told King that several of palace coterie were dangerous men to have about.

Marshal said that Queen had told Eleni Vlachos that if Papagos was elected he wld soon close Kathimerini since as dictator he wld not tolerate press criticism. Papagos asserted he had assured Miss Vlachos as he was now assuring me that he did not approve of and wld never seek to impose dictatorial govt on Greece. He had, he admitted, served under Metaxas but only as soldier of crown, and had never approved of strong arm methods in govt.

To my specific query as to what wld happen to his bitterest critic Eleftheria Papagos answered that he wld cause prompt investigation as to status of funds used for that daily's support. Personally he has good reason to believe money used to keep Eleftheria functioning through campaign has come from persons close to palace. If these funds were loans, Marshal will see that paper is either forced to pay up or closed with latter alternative strong probability.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Summarized in footnote 1, p. 498.

When new govt is formed Papagos stated he will be Defense Min as well as PriMin so that he can clear up deteriorated mil situation. He maintains hordes of new civilian employees have been placed in Defense Min in past few weeks and these parasites will have to be cleared out. Once Defense situation is again secure he will turn Defense Min over to some one else. Here Marshal made it crystal clear to Kanellopoulos and to me that no inefficient ministers will be long tolerated in his cabinet.

I told Papagos that while we fully appreciated his ability, integrity and understanding, we had a long standing interest in govt stability in Greece, and we hoped that in his anxiety for improvement he wld not upset applecart. He answered that we cld count on him to collaborate with us on closest possible basis.

I told Marshal we had received reports to effect that if rally 2 did not secure absolute majority that he wld resign. He replied that while he wld of course, get majority, these reports were "sheer enemy propaganda".

In this connection Marshal added that the calumnies of his foes created a terrific temptation for him to set record straight. However, wld not answer the slanders of his enemies. To do so, he declared, might well terminate careers of King and Queen in Greece.

In conclusion, Marshal expressed hope that I wld soon see King again and that if I did so he very much hoped Her Majesty wld be present. The Queen, it was tacitly apparent, he considers his most dangerous opponent.

While I said nothing on this point to Papagos I do not propose to seek another audience, since to do so now might be misconstrued.

PEURIFOY

781.00/8-2851: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, September 7, 1951—8 p. m.

1177. Embtel 981 Aug 28.<sup>2</sup> Re ur conv Aug 27 with Papagos in which he stated that if elected he will court martial or retire Gen Tsakalotos at once. Dept Army, including Asst Chief of Staff, G-3, Gen Jenkins, believes that unless Grk mil and civilian opinion universally agree Tsakalotos' actions deserve drastic punishment, pre-

 $<sup>^2</sup>$  In telegram 652 from Athens, August 6, Peurifoy had reported, inter alia, that the Papagos political movement had officially announced its name as the "Greek Rally." (781.00/8-651)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Anschuetz and cleared with General Jenkins, Department of the Army, and Rountree.

<sup>2</sup> Suvra.

cipitate severe action will have serious effects on efficiency and morale Grk Armed Forces and cld even result in internal strife.

Dept recognizes in event Papagos heads new govt series delicate polit problems will arise in which Emb undoubtedly hopes be able exercise moderating influence. In this connection Dept concurs in Army apprehensions set forth above and suggests that, if elected, Papagos be urged, in interest Grk mil forces, to heal breach with Tsakalotos or if that not possible to move slowly against Tsakalotos after achieving backing of mil and public opinion.

 $W_{EBB}$

781.00/9-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

Athens, September 12, 1951—4 p. m.

1219. Altho electoral campaign has wholly preoccupied govt and polit parties, Grk press and articulate elements of public are increasingly concerned by anticipated drastic cut in Amer aid. As soon as new govt constituted, formal and urgent representations to US may be expected.

Emb, mission and JUSMAG are also deeply concerned at probable repercussions of cut if it shld prove to be as extensive as feared. Obviously some few items cld be stricken from import program without grave loss. Most rigid austerity in use of some essentials such as petroleum products cld effect further savings. Some elements of reconstruction program cld be dropped without too much injury to economy. Sum total of these reductions cld not however approach overall percentage cut reflected in Congressional authorization without doing what might prove irreparable damage to Grk recovery so far achieved at such heavy expense and directly undermining mil effort.

Any further reductions over and above those suggested in preceding para wld have to come either from (1) food and other strictly essential consumer goods required for maintenance health and morale of population, (2) raw materials, fuels, fertilizers and equipment required to maintain Grk production employment and transport even at present inadequate level; or (3) very modest reconstruction program designed to permit gradual development in direction of self supporting economy. As to first, it is clear health and morale of population must be maintained in Greece, which lies at such strategic spot and whose standard of living is already so marginal. As to second necessity for even greater import level can be avoided only by keeping Grk production for both civilian and mil needs up at least to current levels. As to one and two, greater scarcity of consumer goods will contribute heavily to inflationary pressures which are already very serious problem. As to third, reconstruction program offers chief hope of lifting

Greece ultimately off back of Amer taxpayer. Moreover as Dept is aware, reconstruction in Greece, having got fully under way only at end of civil war, is three to four years behind reconstruction in other ECA countries and for this and other reasons its abandonment or drastic curtailment wld have most grave effect on Grk morale.

In view small size and potentialities her industry Greece cannot be expected to make substantial contribution to mil production though all possibilities are of course being thoroughly explored. Principal Grk contribution to West mil strength lies in army of eleven divs with large readily mobilizable reserve of trained men, with excellent spirit and with constantly improving equipment. Greece is spending approx 45 percent of her budget for maintenance these disproportionately large force and US is spending more than 150 mil annually for their equipment. It will however be absolutely impossible for Grk Govt to continue to spend this proportion of its budget for mil if US econ aid is substantially cut. Moreover important elements of econ program such as transport communications, maintenance of food and fuel reserves, etc., make direct contribution to mil. Finally it wld be rash to expect morale and effectiveness of armed forces to remain at present pitch if there shld be drastic decline in gen econ welfare affecting, among others, families of soldiers. In short mil contribution of Greece to West def is to unusual degree, because of marginal standard of living and retarded postwar recovery, dependent on maintenance and at least some improvement in econ sitn. To neglect Grk economy while attempting to develop its mil strength wld be self defeating and wld ieopardize gravely US mil objectives in this part of world.

We know Dept is aware of all these factors but believed it might find useful up to minute report by reps all US agencies here. ECA/G is making careful review of entire import program to determine what reductions cld be made without grave econ, polit and mil repercussions but our tentative view is that total reduction cld not safely be over 15 percent. Even such reduction might well require some compensatory assistance to Grks on mil side to relieve large and growing burden on their budget resulting from contd maintenance under arms of 160,000 men. Lapham and Gen Frederick concur.1

PEURIFOY

¹ In telegram 1338 to Athens of September 17, Acting Secretary of State Webb informed Peurifoy that the Department of State shared his concern at the repercussions of an aid cut as foreshadowed by recent Congressional action. "Importance adequate aid will be stressed connection House Senate conference and with appropriations bill. Dept hopes enough aid will finally be allocated to Greece for pursuit objectives but expects reduction. Doubly important Greeks make best use of aid and own resources." (781.00/9–1251)

781.00/9-1551: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, September 15, 1951—1 p. m.

1266. Post-electoral polit sitn may be summarized as fols:

It seems almost certain Papagos cannot have absolute majority though faint possibility exists he might wean sufficient Deps away from other parties.¹ It is still possible that Venizelos and Plastiras together may have bare majority. However EPEK-Lib Govt wld be highly unstable due to slimness majority, distrust between two leaders and violent attacks to be anticipated from Gr Rally which wld feel, as overwhelmingly largest party, it was being cheated of office. Probability is that neither Papagos alone nor EPEK-Lib combination will have enough strength to form stable govt.

Papagos states categorically that he will not collaborate with any other party (since such party wld hamstring implementation his program) and that only solution is immed new elections under majority system. In discussing question with Marshal, Canelloupoulos and Markezinis, we have cited three disadvantages to immed election:

(1) Additional two months neglect of pressing econ problems arising from growing inflation, cut in US aid, etc.;

(2) Prolongation and increased embitterment polit campaign deepening fissure between right and left and perhaps stimulating further unhealthy polit activities in army.

(3) Uncertainty that results of elections wld be improvement over present chamber in which workable conservative majority though split, does exist. While Rally leaders convinced they wld obtain clear majority in new elections, we pointed out that on assumption Lib Party wld break up and Papagos receive one-third its recent vote, Plastiras might receive two-thirds as well as significant proportion EDA vote, resulting perhaps in approx even balance between right and left with cooperation between two rendered impossible by character of campaign. Papagos, however, deaf to these arguments claims election six months from now after he had taken unpopular econ measures but before they had had time to produce beneficial effect will be less favorable to him and demands elections now. He wld

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram 1194 from Athens, September 11, reported that "With almost all civilian votes in there is rather widespread feeling that elections have resulted in impasse." The telegram then reported the election results to that date (781.00/9-1151). The final election returns, as announced by the Greek Ministry of the Interior on September 24 were as follows:

	Votes	Seats
Greek Rally (Papagos)	623,297	114
National Progressive Union (Plastiras)	399,529	74
Liberals (Venizelos)	324,482	57
National Democratic Left	178,325	10
Populist (Tsaldaris)	113,580	2
Democratic Socialist (Papandreou)	37,033
Agrarians	23,186	1
Others	7,469	_

prefer to conduct them himself but might consent to service govt if its composition had his approval.

King and Venizelos strongly oppose immed elections, latter presumably because he foresees further weakening or dissolution his party, former because he wld thereafter be confronted with choice of Papagos or Plastiras. Palace favors three-party govt but this seems out of question. Venizelos cld perhaps be persuaded to accept coalition with Papagos but latter absolutely refuses. Unless, therefore, EPEK and Libs shld be able to form govt which wld be precarious at best we may be confronted next week with no practicable alternative to new elections.

I lay problem at this stage before Dept in order that if it shld feel effect in US or internationally of immed new elections wld be so unfortunate as to warrant further stronger representations on our party, it may immed instruct me to take such action in case need arises. I am far from sure that even very strong representations wld alter stand of Papagos who is deeply embittered by recent campaign against him, wholly distrustful of Palace and Venizelos and obsessed with somewhat Messianic belief that only if free and untrammeled can he save Greece. Further representations might well be, therefore, futile expenditure our credit. I doubt that any public statement on my part such as that recommended by Venizelos or Vendiris wld affect outcome and wld probably serve only to damage relations with Papagos. On the whole, I am inclined unless Dept feels disposed to put our whole weight behind prevention new elections, to let nature take its course reserving our influence to minimize insofar as possible disadvantages and dangers which we foresee that course will entail.2

PEURIFOY

&lt;sup>2</sup> Telegram 1379 to Athens, September 19, stated that the Department generally concurred with the Embassy's analysis of the Greek political situation and likewise doubted if any public statement by the Embassy could substantially advance U.S. interests. "Dept believes dexterous management Emb's position during difficult circumstances past weeks has well protected if not actually enhanced US prestige during this period." The Department added that it was in no way reluctant to commit U.S. influence to any course of action which seemed clearly in the national interests. "However, at this moment in light present delicate, complicated situation and until opportunity presents itself in which US might beneficially and decisively effect developments in Greece, Dept concurs Emb's recommendation let nature take its course while reserving our influence to minimize dangers which apparent to Emb and Dept." (781.00/9–1551)

781.5 MAP/9-2051 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, September 20, 1951—2 p. m.

1395. Toisa. Supplementing Deptel 1338,<sup>2</sup> FY 52 MSP legis in conference comite this week. Appropriations hearings being conducted concurrently. Under circumstances difficult at moment forecast amts available Greece but safe assume econ figure will be substantially lower than 250 originally presented. Shld be remembered, however, that country aid figures used in Cong presentations are illustrative and do not necessarily represent aid level which is still to be determined. Important that Grks understand this procedure.

However, even if illustrative figure for Greece approximates level of econ aid as eventually determined by ECA, mechanisms may exist which will permit supplemental assistance in case of necessity. These involve trans between titles, trans from mil to econ within Title I, off-shore procurement by US, use of mil funds for some common use items.

While above methods may exist their use will be governed on basis strict and substantiated necessity. Cong comites have taken very hard look at econ programs especially those not directly related to mil effort. For this reason and also because 250 million figure conceived from beginning as subj substantial revision after realistic and detailed import program drawn up, wld urge that Grks undertake immed strenuous "hard core" approach to reappraisal present tentative and inadequately justified import program.

Substance above can be used as you see fit in countering possible adverse comment resulting from publicity aid level.

WEBB

Summarized in footnote 1, p. 507.

781.00/9-2451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET ATHENS, September 24, 1951—4 p. m.

1391. Yesterday deputy PriMin handed me a note formally concurred in by three major pol parties appealing against cut in level of aid.

Note outlines as follows effect of any marked reduction in aid:

1. Because of very strong inflationary forces, announcement of cut

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by George H. Emery of S/ISA. Cleared by Rountree, Anschuetz, and Lincoln of GTI; Colonel Waddell of Defense; Mahon of ECA. Signed for the Acting Secretary by Jonathan B. Bingham of the Technical Cooperation Administration.

might easily create panic in gold market and spread to other sectors of economy.

2. Investment program already reduced and necessary for food and raw materials. Further cuts wld result in increased unemployment and undermine hope for future and morale of people latter indispensable for social cohesiveness and fighting spirit of armed force.

3. Reduction of ECA counterpart availabilities wild have shattering effect on govt expenditures, first among civil pensioners, veterans and guerrilla-stricken areas northern Greece. These sectors most vulnerable Commie infiltration. But even drastic economies here cld not prevent substantial reduction mil expenditures and armed forces.

Elaborating last point, note shows 43 percent of budgeted govt expenditures 1951/52 is for natl defense, 14 percent civil pay roll. Even if govt cld resist tremendous pressure for adjustment civil service pay, cut welfare and relief, local governments, a cut in defense expenditure wld be necessary at $250 million level. At lower level, govt revenue wld be reduced by lowered customs revenues and other taxes, and substantial reductions in size of armed forces wld be unavoidable.

Note concludes "it can only assert with all the seriousness at its command that a reduced level of aid will make it impossible to maintain the main lines of its present policy. Retreat wld be rapidly followed by dramatic developments leading to crisis and chaos. For, under those conditions the forces working against peace and social order wld have full opportunity to renew their activities which aim at paralysis of the social structure and the destruction of the defense establishment of Greece." Text and despatch follow.

Emb and USA substantially in accord with arguments presented.

PEURIFOY

781.00/10-1651: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, October 16, 1951-8 a.m.

1735. Essential elements of current political situation are fol:

1. EPEK leaders apparently satisfied with outcome negots with Liberals and eager to set up two-party govt at earliest possible moment. Plastiras has publicly denied he favors elections under majority

&lt;sup>1</sup> The text of the note was transmitted to the Department in despatch 466 from Athens, September 25, a copy of which is in file 881.10/9-2551.

¹ In telegram 1305 from Athens, September 18, Peurifoy had informed the Secretary of State that Plastiras had called that day "to tell me of his long discussion with Venizelos yesterday in which they agreed to form new govt. According to Plastiras it was not yet decided as to whether new govt shld be pure EPEK with Lib support in Parliament or whether Libs wld actively participate." (781.00/9-1851) system but denial appears designed to check pressure for early elections rather than to scuttle majority system which Plastiras privately prefers in spite of contrary view some members his party. Rumors of EPEK flirtation with Rally persist but, even if accurate, seem most unlikely to lead to any alliance.

2. Rally continues adamant opposition to coalition with any other party in present Chamber although Venizelos though intermediary has recently renewed proposal for tripartite govt under neutral PM. Markezinis, however, continues to favor electoral alliance with Liberals and presumably will endeavor [convince Papagos & Ven] desirability this solution.

3. Liberals are in most unhappy frame of mind since, while negots with EPEK proceeding smoothly on surface, Venizelos and other leaders are increasingly disturbed at (1) probability serious friction with EPEK over concrete implementation clemency and econ policies and (2) effect on Liberal fortunes of sharing responsibility for unpopular econ-measures which are now unavoidable. Liberals therefore probing possibility supporting but not participating in EPEK govt, though a withdrawal from public commitments at this late stage may prove impossible. While delay in determination final election returns due in part to complications of system and errors of courts, it is probable Venizelos is deliberating prolonging process in hopes escaping from his predicament. On other hand he obviously does not want new elections which wld strengthen one or both larger parties at his expense.

Emb views are fol:

1. In spite Plastiras vagaries we wld not object to EPEK-Liberal govt with latter exercising restraining influence on former. Frictions between two are, however, such that we doubt govt with majority only three or four can endure more than 60-90 days. Even during this tenure it will be thinking primarily of forthcoming elections and most reluctant to take firm decisions. We inclined to view therefore that new elections are necessary and that sooner they are held the better. It may, however, require experiment with EPEK-Liberal govt to convince two leaders and palace that elections unavoidable.

2. In case of new elections Liberals must enter electoral alliance or risk total annihilation. Majority sentiment within party now favors alliance with EPEK but doubts appearing which will be strengthened if govt coalition with EPEK proves disillusioning. We are inclined to prefer that Liberals enter electoral alliance with Rally for fol reasons: (a) EPEK plus Liberals vs Rally wld be likely, since population very evenly divided between left and right, produce another stalemate with neither party having strong or [stable majority whereas Rally and Libs] wld almost certainly have large majority offering prospect stable govt for one or two years, (b) in spite of outmoded Royalist-Venizelos antagonism, Liberal leadership is closer in spirit and program to Rally than to EPEK and hence less likely to disrupt coalition in early stages. We recognize this solution has disadvantage of leaving EPEK without moderating balance afforded by close association with Liberals, but believe this consideration outweighed by importance providing Greece with strong govt in immed future. It is presumed in any case that some Liberals wld go with EPEK even if bulk of party went with Rally.

3. . . . We of course do not propose to take open position pro or con and will be careful to preserve our present cordial relations with EPEK. Nevertheless, in light our present judgment and in spite unfortunate effects immediate impasse, we do not propose to push Venizelos into EPEK embrace nor discourage his efforts to find other solution. However, balance of probability still is that Liberal-EPEK govt will have to be tried, even though briefly, before another solution becomes feasible.

PEURIFOY

357.AE/10-1951

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs (Rountree) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] October 19, 1951.

Subject: Continuation of UN Vigilance in the Balkans

Beginning in the spring of 1950 the Department began consultation with other interested powers looking toward the abolition of UNSCOB and removal of the item of the threat to the peace of Greece from the General Assembly Agenda. Korean events clearly set forth the fact that the Soviet Union was still willing to resort, through its satellites, to aggression against the free world. Furthermore, Korea demonstrated the effectiveness of prompt and impartial reporting in arousing world opinion and in initiating an incontestable basis for UN action. Consequently, the United States joined with Greece and other nations at the Fifth Assembly to continue UNSCOB for an additional year with the power to recommend its own dissolution before the Sixth Assembly if conditions warranted it. Based on evidence collected throughout the year, UNSCOB in its recent report recommended that United Nations vigilance in the Balkans be maintained. This position was adopted unanimously by UNSCOB and had full support of the Governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom. In supporting this position the interested areas of the Department had three considerations in mind:

1. The threat to Yugoslavia is very real and continuing. The security of Yugoslavia is of direct strategic interest to the United States. This threat has been comprehensively set forth in the Yugoslav White Book, published in February 1951. On September 11 it also circulated to United Nations Members a series of complaints against the Albanian Government. The Yugoslav Government has advised that they intend to propose the Soviet threat to Yugoslavia as an agenda item in the coming General Assembly. For the past six months the Department has been discussing with the Yugoslavs and other interested countries possible means of addressing UN action to the threat to Yugoslavia.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Dixon (GTI).

The Yugoslavs believe that the establishment of a UN body to be concerned solely or directly with the threat to Yugoslavia would be provocative to the USSR. For political reasons the Yugoslavs would not accept UNSCOB but might accept some other body not having UNSCOB's history. They may be willing, however, to consider establishment of a UN body principally concerned with the Greek frontier but which could quickly spread its operation to Yugoslavia should aggressive action be initiated against Yugoslavia.

2. The location of a United Nations Commission or its observers in the sensitive Balkan area has given the West a tactical advantage in the context of the overall strategic relation between the West and the Soviet Bloc; it seems essential to maintain those moral and political deterrents to Soviet expansion. UN vigilance in the Balkans has constituted such an impediment in the international field to Soviet expansion to the Mediterranean. Were this impediment to be removed, the Soviets would gain a very real advantage. While the removal of UN vigilance in this area would probably not be a signal for a Soviet aggressive move toward the Mediterranean, it would, however, relieve the pressure upon them in this area and give them greater freedom of action. The fact that similar tactical advantages are not enjoyed by the West in many other sensitive areas makes it seem essential to retain that advantage in the Balkan area.

3. The threat to Greece, while altered, is nonetheless real. The Department's judgment in reversing its position with regard to the abolition of UNSCOB appears to have been vindicated in view of events since that time. Prior to the summer of 1950 there had been a noticeable increase in the military potential of the satellites. This military buildup increased steadily during the fall of 1950 and became very much accelerated particularly in Bulgaria during the spring and summer of 1950. Along with this, propaganda efforts against Greece increased in almost direct proportion, taking two lines: first, that a Belgrade-Athens-Ankara axis was being formed directed against Albania and Bulgaria; second, US and UK were mounting a Greek offensive against Albania and Bulgaria. The propaganda program went to the lengths of broadcasting the contents of alleged combat operation orders, imputing a purpose to the movements of prominent Greek and American civil and military personalities (including yourself), indicating Greek troop dispositions, in order to give the idea that an attack was imminent. By twisting actual events and adding false statements a very artful picture was presented which confused even some Greeks. Whatever else may have been the effect of this propaganda it undoubtedly has served to heighten the tension in the Balkans and to whip up public feeling in Bulgaria and Albania, which feeling could be exploited if it were decided to make an attack against Greece. It follows that the threat inherent in the satellite military buildup would seem to be directed toward Greece by this propaganda. On two occasions in January and July of 1951 the intensity of such propaganda compelled UNSCOB to report the untruthfulness of these charges to the members of the UN after having conducted an investigation in Greece.

On quite another score it is notable that the satellite governments have been training Greek guerrillas in infiltration, underground, reorganization, and subversive tactics. Groups of these people have constantly been entering Greece clandestinely to collect intelligence of the Greek armed forces, to foment discontent, and to lay a basis for a future attempt to overthrow the Greek Government. While no substantial headway has been made in this direction, it is not impossible for a resurgence of guerrilla activity in Greece to occur. Removal of UN vigilance from Greece would encourage the renewal of guerrilla penetration across the frontiers as is now daily occurring along the Yugoslav satellite frontier. Such a movement could be materially assisted by trained guerrillas now in the satellites amounting to possibly as much as 20,000.

The recent national elections have resulted in a stalemate. While it is possible for an EPEK-Liberal Government to be formed, it would probably be no more effective or durable a government than those of the recent past. The prospect of improvement in political stability is not good. Inflationary pressures are making for considerable latent discontent. In such a situation when a reduction in American assistance is imminent, withdrawal of UN vigilance from Greece might be interpreted as a lessening of American interest in Greece and result in a weakening of Greek morale. While Greece has been invited to join NATO, the effect of this move cannot be fully felt in Greece for quite some time. Furthermore, the NATO guarantee is not adopted to meet the threat to Greek security which could result from a revived guerrilla threat.

UNSCOB, while it has performed a valuable task in the past, is a cumbersome body not well adapted to meet the threat in the Balkans today. UN machinery in this area is in need of freshening up, which could only be accomplished by a new body and a new mechanism better suited to the needs of the situation. While Britain and France, as well as many other governments, are inclined to favor the retention of UNSCOB in a revised form, the Department has, for the past month, been in consultation with other interested nations, in an attempt to convince them of the need of more compact and efficient machinery in the Balkans. The Department proposes the establishment of a subcommission of the POC which would sit in New York and be composed of members of standing delegations there. Its membership would be reliable, since a majority of the POC can be relied upon to make such a selection. A small observer group of 10 to 15 persons would be located in Greece to keep a watch on the Greek borders with Albania and Bulgaria but ready to operate any place in the Balkans. The subcommittee would be empowered to provide for observation in other areas of international tension in the Balkans at the request of any government concerned, and could itself go to the scene of trouble. Perhaps from one-half to two-thirds of the present costs of UNSCOB would be saved through the operation of this new body. This subcommittee, from the point of view of the Greek problem, would be a disengaging process which, if events warranted it, could be removed from the Greek scene. On the other hand, it could be ready to act immediately in case of an emergency anywhere in the Balkans.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> On November 20, John Politis, head of the Greek Delegation to the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly at Paris, informed the Ad Hoc Political Committee that the Greek Government considered that the situation in Greece had been restored to a point where the UNSCOB was no longer necessary and therefore should be dissolved. In view of the opinion given in the last report of the Special Committee that potential Communist danger still existed and that continued vigilance in the Balkans remained necessary, a resolution sponsored by Greece, France, Mexico, the United Kingdom, and the United States was presented which, after expressing deep appreciation of the work of the UNSCOB, recommended its dissolution within 60 days and its supersession by a Balkan subcommission of the Peace Observation Commission (POC). The resolution was adopted by the Ad Hoc Political Committee on November 23 by a vote of 50 to 5, with 3 abstentions after rejection of a Soviet amendment which called on the United Nations to condemn the United States for "interference" in Greek affairs and called also on the Greek Government to declare a general political amnesty and to reestablish "normal diplomatic relations" with her neighbors. The plenary session of the General Assembly upheld the resolution on December 7, by a vote of 48 to 5 to 1. In telegram 3058 from Athens, January 8, 1952, Ambassador Peurifoy informed the Department that a special meeting of the UNSCOB on January 7 had voted to dissolve the organization by formal meeting on February 5 (357.AE/1–852). Documentation on the work of UNSCOB during 1951 and on the negotiations leading to its dissolution may be found in file 357.AE.

781.13/10-3051: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Athens, October 30, 1951—8 p. m.

1972. After considerable last minute bargaining and reshuffling new EPEK-Liberal Cabinet finally formed in time to be sworn in Oct 27. Apparently against his better judgment Venizelos accepted post Deputy PriMin and Min Fon Affairs but obviously withheld some of his best men from Cabinet posts, possibly to use them in future maneuvers. In any event, attitude Liberal leader will probably largely determine length of tenure of office of new govt.

Cabinet as formed appears no worse than expected. EPEK portion is combination of brilliant individualists and party hacks. Rendis shld make good Interior Min while prospects of intelligent but erratic Kartalis as Coordination Min more uncertain due his known incapacity work in harness. Allamanis in Agric is reputedly able and energetic young lawyer with wide knowledge farm problems. Papaspyrou of Justice has good reputation but little is known of him or of Bourdaras of Communications. Zigdis, another bright young man, will be without portfolio for present. He also has reputation of being difficult to work with. Papapolitis, formerly regarded as a Leftist, is reportedly unhappy at being given Commerce Min; however, this appointment was an honor for freshman Deputy, indicating his personal friendship with Plastiras. Evelpides in Fin is well known journalist, professor, author, poet and jack of all trades but generally expressed opinion is that he lacks force and will not succeed as Min.

Cabinets surprise package is, of course, King's "non-polit" man, ex-Admiral Sakellariou, whose post as Defense Min was "recommended" by His Majesty on afternoon Oct 27. Dept will recall Sakellariou was Navy Min in 1947–48 and that he is one of Palace inner social circle. His most recent exploit was to desert Papagos ticket early in election campaign at King's request and to issue strong public statement against Marshal's candidacy. However, Canellopoulos confides that Sakellariou has privately made his peace with Papagos and his appointment is by no means unwelcome to Greek rally.

Full reports on all new Cabinet Mins being pouched.

PEURIFOY

781.00/11-351: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, November 3, 1951—1:55 p.m.

2187. Emb's contd fine reporting apprising Dept difficult postelectoral polit situation appreciated. Although we do not wish prejudge newly installed govt, your reports indicate its lack cohesion and unity in purpose, coupled with polit maneuvers going on between Libs and Rally, gives rise serious doubts that it has real prospect effectiveness and durability. Dept views with grave concern possible repetition polit doldrums as occurred first half 1950 in what is now even more crucial period. Wld appear that most likely indigenous factor which might strengthen present govt wld be vehement Papagos opposition, which might conceivably result in closer EPEK-Lib bond.
Two serious hazards seem inherent in this forced union: At best EPEK-Lib Parl Majority extremely weak, which condition wld inevitably be reflected in its adm. As Emb points out, such union although not permanent might lead to impasse in new elections or result in vesting balance of power in extreme left.

In connection possible new coalition under present Parl, Lib-Rally combination wld have advantage real Parl strength. Moreover as Emb has pointed out a combination of these two elements wld be desirable objective even if new election on majority system were to be held. Dept presumes that in any event, there is little possibility for either EPEK-Lib-Rally or EPEK-Rally coalition in present Parl.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Dixon, approved for transmission by Rountree.

Dept thus concurs, that if obvious difficulties cld be overcome and if they cld be brought together, Papagos-Venizelos coalition wld afford best possibility stable govt under present circumstances. . . .

Webb

881.00/11-1051: Despatch

The Counselor for Economic Affairs of the Embassy in Greece (Turkel) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, November 10, 1951.

No. 662

Subject: Statement on Greek Government Economic Policy in Relation to Military Defense Effort by George Kartalis, Minister of Coordination.

On October 30, 1951 the Chief of the ECA Mission to Greece sent a letter to the Greek Prime Minister advocating that a number of specific matters be dealt with promptly. A copy of this letter is attached as Enclosure No. 1.1

Mr. Kartalis, who was Minister of Finance in the short-lived EPEK Government during the spring of 1950 and who has recently been named Minister of Coordination, replied at a meeting of the Steering Committee on November 3rd. Five copies of a transcript of Mr. Kartalis' statement are attached as Enclosure No. 2.1

Briefly, he indicates that the Government will try vigorously to enforce price control and wage stabilization policies. At the same time efforts will be made to increase tax revenues while cutting budgetary expenses; it may be feasible to reduce the deficit by a couple of hundred billion from the previously estimated 1,200 billion drachmas. Mr. Kartalis indicates that it will be almost impossible to make further savings with military expenses accounting for 43% of the budget and almost 10% of the national income, including aid. Under these circumstances the problem of maintaining financial stability and a minimum level of investment would have been difficult even at the assumed aid level of $250 million. The Government is taking steps to restrict credit but crop concentration for rationing is expected to increase the currency circulation. The Government believes that essential reconstruction projects must be continued, as these are the only permanent solution to Greece's economic problems, and also because of the shattering effect upon the morale of the Greek people if they are faced with the fact that no improvement of their present low standard of living is likely.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed.

Mr. Kartalis suggests that the ordinary budgetary expenses should be provided from Greek resources. Extraordinary and non-recurrent expenses, including basic investment and the cost of maintaining an army strength in excess of 80,000 men should be covered by aid. Therefore the present Government endorses the representations against an aid cut which were made by previous Governments.

Mr. Kartalis' statement that it will be very difficult to make a sizeable budget reduction is probably correct. With one-third of the fiscal year past it will not be feasible to make the savings which might have been possible by an earlier and rigorous survey of the Mavros budget with its estimated 1,200 deficit.

Mr. Kartalis correctly anticipates that the poor state of the Greek civil service will limit some governmental plans. He does not mention the equally weak condition of the present Government, which may not be able to institute strong measures without bringing about its own downfall. For example, even if it should be considered desirable to set maximum as well as minimum wages, it is most improbable that this or any other non-dictatorial Greek Government could enforce such a measure. This limitation may also apply to the badly needed anti-inflationary program which Mr. Kartalis proposes to put into effect.

Mr. Kartalis states that 43% of the budget (presumably the Mavros budget) and 10% of the national income will be spent for defense during the present fiscal year and that this is beyond the ability of the economy. These percentages would be more nearly 36% and 8% if the public security expenditures were not lumped with national defense; public security forces include 23,400 gendarmerie in paramilitary formations but also include large numbers of town police with a tenuous relationship to the national defense establishment.

The most important theme developed in the statement was summed up as follows: "Military expenditure designed to serve wider international defense requirements and objectives should be treated separately and covered by contributions out of the wider resources of the community of nations which it serves." Local newspapers are already hammering this point and it is an argument which will probably commend itself to all Greek political figures during the immediate future.

HARRY R. TURKEL

Editorial Note

In telegram Torep 8737 to Paris, November 19, Acting ECA Administrator Richard Bissell informed Paul Porter, the Acting United States Special Representative in Europe, and W. Averell Harriman,

Chairman of the NATO Temporary Council Committee (see volume III, part 1, pages 1 ff.) that the United States was now prepared to extend a firm commitment of economic aid totaling $486.5 million to six NATO countries and that present plans also called for the opening of "rather similar discussions promptly with non-NATO countries, extent and time at which we would make firm commitment varying with tactical situation." Included in this latter group of countries was Greece, with a projected aid figure of $170 million. Bissell added that existing commitments plus strongly predictable aid requirements for France and the United Kingdom "closely approach and may even exceed total sum that can legally be made available as economic aid. Therefore unless and until it is possible to see where one or more of these requirements can be reduced, it is essential no commitment be made to any one country in excess of the figure shown." (ECA Telegram Files: FRC Acc. No. 53A278: Paris Torep)

881.00 R/11-2051: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDEN'TIAL

ATHENS, November 20, 1951—8 p. m.

2388. For Rountree. Ref Toeca 1432, Nov 19.2 I wish to urge acceptance ECA/G recommendation that Grk level of aid this year be fixed at not less than $200 million and that decision be announced at earliest possible moment.

As Dept knows various spokesmen of present govt, including Venizelos and Kartalis, have announced publicly Grk Army cannot be maintained at present level unless part of burden is borne by NATO or US. While stating govt's formal démarche in this sense has been submitted to Wash, we have inquired what concrete form additional mil aid could take, considering that MDAP equipment and common use supplies already account for the foreign exchange cost (about 50 percent of total expenditures) for Grk armed forces and that, insofar as drachma problem is concerned, ECA is already sterilizing entire budget deficit. Govt replies make clear kind of relief they envisage is import additional consumer or capital goods, thus permitting release additional counterpart for mil or non-mil purposes. Objective of request for further mil assistance is therefore in fact to increase economic aid, or failing that, to provide polit justification for failure govt parties to solve urgent econ problems. Longer govt is left in doubt as to level of econ aid stronger will be momentum behind plea for further mil help and greater disillusionment and recrimination when no further benefits are forthcoming.

1 Repeated to Paris for Riddleberger.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not found in Department of State or ECA telegram files.

Although plea for further mil aid appears in this sense specious, need for at least $200 million econ aid is very real indeed. As Dept knows, margin in Greece between econ and polit stability and instability is extremely narrow and we feel cut of 20 percent from originally proposed program (73 percent of last year) is crowding that margin very closely. Thanks to civil war [Greece has] army already in being comparable, on basis population and resources, to 1953 goal for western Eur armies but maintenance that army in state of effectiveness depends on delicate complex of polit, econ and psychological factors. While further specifically mil aid is not required, sufficient econ help to underpin present abnormal mil establishment is essential if Greece is to play contemplated role in NATO. We feel cut of aid to $170 million likely to break through margin of stability and morale and doubt that saving $30 million warrants running that risk at this critical time. Increased austerity is being and will be demanded of Grk Govt and people, despite their already low standard of living, but we shld not expect to maintain necessary stability and enthusiasm for our cause if aid cuts are too drastic or too sudden.

For these reasons I hope Dept will exert its influence to obtain prompt allocation of at least $200 million to Greece. Projects which all agree are essential are already coming to a standstill throughout Greece and further delay will merely multiply difficulty and waste in getting them underway once more.

Announcement at this time of aid program of less than $200 million, even though ECA/W might be prepared to make additional allocation at later time, wld in our judgment, create a serious psychological reaction which might well set in train a sequence of events seriously aggravating current inflationary situation. Cost of remedying such situation at later date might be more expensive than announcement of more reasonable figure at this time.

PEURIFOY

781.13/11-2151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, November 21, 1951—9 p. m.

2412. Averoff tells me that Plastiras last Monday before second heart attack 1 directed him officially to inform NATO powers that &lt;sup>1</sup> Peurifoy had informed the Secretary of State in telegram 2402 from Athens, November 21, that Plastiras had suffered a second heart attack the previous day and that, while his physicians expected him to recover, he "will however be out of action for at least one month" (781.13/11-2151). In telegram 2551 to Athens, November 27, Acting Secretary Webb replied that the Army had two excellent heart specialists in Germany and had ordered one of them to Greece (781.13/11-2451). In telegram 2528 from Athens, November 30, Peurifoy reported that a Col. William S. George had arrived in Athens, examined Plastiras, and concluded that his condition was as his Greek physicians had described (781.13/11-3051).

Greece wild have to reduce armed forces unless further assistance forthcoming. Upon Averoff protesting unwisdom this step, PriMin agreed only US and UK need be informed. He first proposed forces be reduced about one-third (to 100,000) by Jan 1, but, upon Averoff again demonstrating, agreed reduction to 125,000 sufficient until Jan 1. In view PriMin's illness, Averoff again proposes for present to take no further official action on this matter.

I shall discuss this question again with Plastiras if and when his health permits. While there is considerable degree of bluff and blackmail in this attitude and real objective is to obtain more econ aid (ref Embtel 2388, Nov 20) Plastiras has long felt armed forces cld and shld be reduced and there is no assurance he might not carry out some reduction. In speaking with him on subj, I shld point out that reduction of Grk forces at this time, over and above stimulating effect on neighboring Sov satellites, might jeopardize Senate approval of Grk admission to NATO and in view present Congressional preoccupation with building military strength, wld be more likely to reduce than increase US aid.

I believe such attitude on our part wld probably block reduction but consider position shld be made clear to Plastiras promptly before his campaign acquires further momentum and he gets farther out on limb. I shld therefore appreciate urgent confirmation that it remain firm policy of Dept and JCS that Grk armed forces shld remain at present level. It will also be most helpful in talking with Plastiras if I am able to state definitely what level of US econ and military aid to Greece for current year will be and if I am able to assure him of regular counterpart releases for essential projects provided his govt is taking necessary anti-inflationary measures.

PEURIFOY

781.5/11-2351: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State 1

SECRET PRIORITY ATHENS, November 23, 1951—6 p. m.

2432. In spite of Averoff's statement to us reported Embtel 2412 November 21 <sup>2</sup> that he intended for moment to take no further official action re reduction armed forces, he sent me this morning just before taking off for Rome NATO mtg,<sup>3</sup> draft of note stating inter alia that (1) the Grk Govt came to the decision to reduce expenses for its armed forces, which constitute largest item in budget and which comparatively are the highest mil expenditures in the world and (2) in view of the above the Grk Govt is studying a sharp cut in mil expenses which shall entail a partial discharge of enlisted men as of January 1, 1952.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Rome for Anschuetz.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Eighth Session of the North Atlantic Council at Rome, November 24-28, see vol. III, pt. 1, pp. 693 ff.

Fon Office states it is intention of govt to present note after receipt our comment to US and UK but timing of presentations still uncertain. We think it wld be most desirable forestall presentation formal note along these lines and wld like discuss question informally with govt leaders early next week setting forth fully and vigorously why we think govt proposal to reduce armed forces at this time is unwise and unacceptable. Before doing so, however, we wld wish to be sure as indicated Embtel 2412 that Dept and JCS continue firmly of opinion that present level shld be maintained.

Meanwhile, I am requesting JUSMAG and ECA to join Emb in careful resurvey of Grk mil budget to determine whether substantial economies can not be made without reduction of forces. Basic objective of Grk Govt is of course to prevent serious cuts in US econ aid and definite decision in this field shld go far to check agitation.

Papagos and other Rally leaders have expressed to us indignation at blackmailing tactics of govt on reduction of armed forces and wld probably be prepared to launch offensive on this score in Parl....<sup>4</sup>

PEURIFOY

781.00/11-2951: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 29, 1951—7:12 p. m.

2597. Venizelos called at Dept Nov 28 to pay courtesy visit. During conv Venizelos espoused essentiality continuing econ aid Greece at FY 51 level. Dept pointed out total amt substantially reduced from last year, which wld inevitably be reflected in aid levels to individual countries including Greece. However best possible wld be done for Greece under circumstances. Upon Venizelos' allusion possibility reduction armed forces if econ aid lower, we pointed out most unwise for Greece reduce her armed forces level.

&lt;sup>4</sup> In telegram 2534 to Athens, November 26, Acting Secretary Webb endorsed the Embassy position with respect to maintenance of the current Greek military level and requested Peurifoy to emphasize to Greek officials that the ECA in considering its economic aid program was postulating maintenance of the current level of the Greek armed forces. Webb concluded that until the current ECA detailed economic review was received by the Department and discussions with ECA officials were completed, little else could be said regarding economic aid for Greece. (781.5/11-2351)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Dixon, cleared by S/S, approved for transmission by Dorsz, and signed for the Acting Secretary by Assistant Secretary of State McGhee.

Venizelos said King had requested his return because Plastiras' illness and that he wld return next week. We gained impression from Venizelos discussion of possible polit developments resulting from Plastiras' "retirement" that he believes Plastiras now out of picture. He envisages as logical development that govt will be formed of Libs and Rally. In his view Lib-Rally Govt based on present Parl preferable to electoral union of two parties followed by new elections. Questioned as to workability this cooperation he replied programs of two parties greatly similar and Papagos' attitude greatly changed from orig stand of no collaboration. He also commented that reconciliation had begun between Palace and Papagos. During conv Dept confined its remarks to emphasis need of effective and durable govt without indicating preferences any particular solution. We also stressed necessity putting into effect program outlined by Amb in Propellor Club speech.

Venizelos also raised question of Cyprus. In referring attempts of gun-running into Cyprus stated he wld not like see civil disturbances break out there. Grk and Cypriot emotions at high pitch but wld be calmed if Brit gave indication at this time they wld consider union under more settled internatl conditions. Dept answered generally along lines position previously communicated to Emb. Present time inopportune raise question. Brit statement of willingness consider union in future might be construed as weakness by Cypriot Commies and as such might stimulate them increase agitation. Short-range stability badly needed until West superior to Sovs and raising Enosis issue wld adversely affect stability by disturbing relations between now friendly parties to this issue.

Last para sent info Nicosia and London.

Webb

881.00 R/11-2951 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, December 5, 1951-5:12 p.m.

2691. Comments in Embtel 2515 Nov 292 and earlier tels will be utilized by Dept in emphasizing forthcoming ECA discussions here importance of furnishing adequate amount of econ aid to Greece.

Drafted by William J. Porter of GTI, cleared by S/S, approved for transmission by Rountree.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Telegram 2515 sent by Yost from Athens on November 29, read in part as follows: "We question why, if it is considered that only 10 million cut is justified in each of two succeeding years, it is considered safe to make cut of over 100 million (from 275 actually spent to 170) in current year. We emphasize that this is really nub of our concern which centers in anxiety that ECA/W, pre-occupied with Grk aspect of worldwide inflationary problem and with frailty Grk political leadership (also as Porter notes not an exclusively Grk phenomenon), may attempt to effect overnight cure by drastic surgical operation which could kill patient. Dispute is not actually about objectives but about speed and timing." (881.00 R/11-2951)

We assume Jenkins and Paige will submit fullest possible econ data in their attempt justify on econ grounds earlier recommendations re lowest level aid needed carry out US objectives, and also which specific projects and programs wld have to be cut back if aid lowered. Without such data, Dept has experienced considerable difficulty in attempt give maximum possible support to Emb and ECA/G recommendations, especially in light current heavy demands from other participants of US econ aid programs.

If info can be readily assembled, Dept wild like know which particular projects and programs wild have to be cut or eliminated if ECA decides extended $170 mil econ aid this FY.

Webb

881.00 R/12-851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, December 8, 1951—1 p. m.

2665. Ref Deptel 2691, Dec 5.¹ Believe Paige has very detailed data on cuts which wld be required if level aid fixed at $170 [million?]. These include practical elimination substantial industry and mining programs as well as Ptolemais thermoelectric project. Our particular concern however is with drastic cuts, which wld also be required, in agricultural rehabilitation and land reclamation and perhaps also in power projects already under way. Such severe cut in these fields wld involve serious social and polit repercussions, cld hardly be without effect on milit posture, and wld certainly prolong period during which US wld have to supply large food and other consumption imports. We are also concerned, in view Greece's vulnerable position, in proposed drastic reduction in pipelines.

We fully recognize problem created by heavy new demands from UK and others but nevertheless feel that 35 percent cut in aid this year wld be too sudden shock to Greek economy and to stabilization program on which we are now engaged. Additional $30 million required to taper off more slowly in fields mentioned above wld seem to be, in light existing level Greek milit forces, fully as necessary protection to western defense effort as heavy contributions we are proposing to make to meet new econ difficulties in western Europe.

PEURIFOY

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra.

781.5 MSP/12-2151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, December 21, 1951—5 p. m.

2869. Grk Govt is being officially informed today that level of aid for current year is $182 million. I am issuing to press tomorrow statement explaining how substantial is level US milit and econ aid still being granted and that we are confident this amount if properly used will be sufficient to meet Greece's essential needs.

In spite these assurances designed cushion shock of announcement aid figure below lowest level Grk people had anticipated I am by no means confident $182 million will prove adequate assure basic US objectives. I have in series of tels over past two months pointed out why I considered $200 million to be absolute minimum we cld safely contemplate. Unlike West Eur countries with large resources and developed economies there is extremely little margin for error in Greece and difference between success and failure may depend on sums which seem ridiculously small in comparison with over-all US defense expenditures. Yet in Greece as we have repeatedly pointed out and as Congressional groups visiting Athens have repeatedly noted with satisfaction, we already have armed forces of magnitude which we are spending vast sums in hope of creating in Western Eur.

We understand it is firm US policy (1) that size and efficiency of these forces not be reduced; (2) that drastic anti-inflationary measures be taken in Greece to provide safe econ base for these forces; and (3) that preparation be made for important financial measures intended for the same purpose. While all US representatives in Greece will devote every effort to achieve these objectives I do not feel able assure Dept they will be achieved with aid limited to $182 million.

We shall do everything within our power to make $182 million suffice and earnestly hope it may do so. I intend however to scrutinize effects of aid cut most closely during coming months and will inform Dept promptly if in fact it shld prove that this amount is not adequate to maintain econ base on which abnormal Grk defense effort rests.

PEURIFOY

781.00/12-2651: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

ATHENS, December 26, 1951—3 p. m.

2901. Polit situation is particularly fluid at this moment due to (1) possible repercussions of US aid cut, (2) usual uncertainty as to which way Venizelos will jump, and (3) apparent shift in attitude of rally.

As to last, Markezinis informs us that he personally has become convinced that collaboration with Libs without new elections might be desirable. He emphasises Papagos still believes election essential but we presume he wld not have mentioned matter to us unless he thought Marshal cld be converted. Markezinis did not explain this radical shift in his position but we believe it attributable to conviction that, in view attitude of Palace, reenforced by approval new constitution, it may be impossible for considerable period to bring about elections.

As to Venizelos, he informed me immed after his return he intended to urge Plastiras, in view state of health, to retire from active polit life. If Plastiras shld agree Venizelos wld support immed EPEK-Lib merger with Plastiras as President combined party and Venizelos as PriMin. If this arrangement not possible Venizelos wld seek collaboration with rally to form new govt without elections.

These remarks were made before Venizelos had had much opportunity to bring himself up to date on polit situation. Increasing activity of Plastiras suggests he wld be willing to retire to honorary post unless he has another heart attack. Whether he wld favor merger on other terms, in face opposition most leading members his party, is open question.

It is still too early to assess polit effects of cut in aid but for moment govt, while protesting vigorously against magnitude of cut, is showing no signs of resigning over this issue.

PEURIFOY

781.5 MSP/1-352: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State

SECRET

Athens, January 3, 1952-11 a.m.

3001. Min of Coordination yesterday handed Emb memo dated Dec 29<sup>1</sup> indicating great surprise and deep disappointment at cut in aid level. Alleges this will make it impossible attain three major Greek policy objectives, maintenance (a) present size and strength defense establishment; (b) financial and economic stability; (c) minimum essential investment programs for creation viable economy.

Points to sharp increase in gold sales as result of blow to confidence; reviews familiar arguments of lowest per capita income, highest defense burden in West Europe, and inability to benefit by off-shore procurement. Complains of lack of consultation on setting aid level and pre-emption German market by Virginia tobacco financed in part by ECA.

&lt;sup>1</sup>A copy of the note is in the Athens Embassy Files: Lot 58 F 7:500 ECA (conf).

Concludes with statement that supplementary aid, while minor percentage of total US aid to Europe, of crucial importance to stability and defense effort of Greece. Greek Govt unable to consider $182 million as final and formally requests opportunity detailed restatement for additional assistance this year.

Pursuant to my directions, Emb representative told Min twice in clearest possible terms that, in the light of worldwide US commitments, the allotment must be regarded as final and that no useful purpose wld be served by an attempt to reopen the matter. My view was transmitted that our common task now is to plan the wisest and most difficult use of the $182 million we have.

There was optimism from the Greeks my equally firm conviction that if it proves impossible to live within this level of aid, the question must be reopened.

Despatch with text of note follows.

PEURIFOY

B. Interest of the United States in the Agitation for Union of Cyprus With Greece (Enosis)

781.00/2-2051: Telegram

The Minister in Greece (Yost) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, February 20, 1951—11 a.m.

2701. Re Embtel 2674 February 17.<sup>2</sup> British Embassy understandably irritated by Prime Minister's unexpected demand for Cyprus. Ambassador Norton and his principal assistants have lost no opportunity to express their displeasure in informal talks with Greek Foreign Office officials and politicians but have avoided contact with Prime Minister or other leading Cabinet Ministers.

British seem particularly annoyed with Kanellopoulos who introduced pre-arranged question in Parliament and thus gave Prime Minister opportunity to shift public attention from economic ills to generally popular political matter. British feel introduction Cyprus question at present most unwise and ungracious especially as only few days before Greek representatives at Paris sought English assistance in their attempt to procure equivalent 80 million dollar assistance through EPU.

Foreign Minister Under Secretary Politis maintained to British that popular demand for Cyprus simply could not be held longer in check and now that government has committed itself to introduce matter at next UNGA session British must make some concession to save Greece from having to side with Communist states who are sure to agitate for "Enosis" as embarrassment to West. Norton agrees that great popular pressure on Greek Government being exerted particularly by Orthodox Church.

<sup>1</sup>Repeated to London.
<sup>2</sup>Not printed; it summarized favorable comments in Greek press to Prime Minister Venizelos' demand in the Greek Parliament for a union of Greece and Cyprus (Enosis) (981.61/2–1751).

British have made clear to Politis that further discussion of Cyprus question absolutely useless as certainly British and probably American defense staffs would not tolerate present change in status of strategic Cyprus. However, Norton feels his government must face up to question more realistically than has so far been case. He is inclined believe best policy open to British is to promise Greeks willingness discuss question as soon as international situation permits.

Over weekend, Venizelos and Kanellopoulos have told me they consider indefinite continuation present situation re Cyprus intolerable and British attitude unacceptable. Prime Minister has indicated, however, that he is not inclined take any further steps at this moment and has publicly stated that next move up to British.

Strategic argument characterized by Kanellopoulos as entirely unconvincing since he asserts Greeks have repeatly emphasized that they, if masters of Cyprus, would accord US and UK whatever facilities and bases required.

Without question movement for acquisition of Cyprus has solid popular base in Greece as irredentism deeply ingrained feature Greek nationalism. However, restraint by politicians, press and church could certainly prevent situation from becoming acute. Upon event appropriate occasion, Embassy will continue to counsel leaders these groups to follow course of moderation and patience emphasizing present period international tension most inappropriate for any change in Cyprus status. Nevertheless, we must anticipate continuing and perhaps increasing agitation on this subject.

Yost

647C.81/3-2251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

ATHENS, March 22, 1951—1:08 p.m.

3125. I saw Archbishop Makarios of Cyprus this morning 2 at his

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London and Nicosia.

Repeated to London and Nicosia.

Peurifoy had reported Makarios' arrival in Athens on March 13 "to see leaders all political parties on Cyprus question." Peurifoy added that the Government press bulletin reported mass demonstrations of university and other students scheduled for March 23 to demonstrate for Cyprus union "and approve resolution that will then be delivered to Cyprus union "and approve resolution that will be a delivered to Cyprus union "and approve resolution that will be a delivered to Cyprus union and Particle Embassion". tion that will then be delivered to Government and to US and British Embassies." (647C.81/3-1451) request. Deptel 3258, Mar 16.3 He was accompanied by Loizides, Greek subject member of last year's Cypriot delegation visiting UN and professional propagandist of Cypriot cause.

Archbishop explained ardent desire Cypriots for union with Greece, dismissed as relatively unimportant Turk Govt opposition and expressed opinion Cyprus would be safer military base for western powers if union occurred as this would obviate dangers inherent in disaffected and hostile population. He also stressed that continuation present situation provided most favorable opportunity for Commies propaganda in Cyprus against "imperialist" US as well as UK. In response my question Archbishop replied that Orthodox clergy in Cyprus taking strong line against communism, Loizides adding that Cypriot Communists had been ex-communicated. Markarios stressed his warm friendship for the US and pleasure at friendly reception accorded him there during his last year's visit. Loizides said in his opinion US most favorable to Cypriot cause and referred to conversations with Congressmen and others.

I emphasized our concern that current Cyprus agitation might lead to development another trouble spot at this time of great international crisis. In common struggle which US is leading it is most important for all non-Commie elements to present united front and church should, I felt, be one of the most useful and cooperative elements in this movement.

In reply my question Loizides stated that if no other action taken in meantime, Cypriots intended raise question next GA meeting and would be constrained request assistance some other govts perhaps even eastern European one if Greek Govt would not serve as sponsor. I asked him if he realized what an unpleasant and difficult question this would be in GA and if he were aware that US Govt might well not support Cypriot claim before UN especially if international situation remained tense. Loizides then asked for US mediation between Cypriots and British. I recalled to him answer he had recd on this subject from McFall last autumn (Depairgram 388, Dec 6 1950 4) and stated that I had no reason to believe US position had changed subsequently. I promised, however, to report our conversation to Dept and to inform Archbishop of any additional views Dept might have. In concluding Makarios strongly deprecated British refusal even to discuss question and stated that agitation for Enosis could be quelled if British stated that although international situation precluded any alteration island's status at present they would be willing to discuss question at some specific time in future, perhaps within one or two years. Dept will note that this latter point of Makarios is similar to that made by Venizelos and also by British Ambassador Norton and might be worth exploring.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed; it stated that if Peurifoy perceived no objections, "believe it desirable for Amb seize this opportunity discuss Enosis problem with PriMin and Makarios separately, emphasizing US continues believe agitation Enosis at this time inopportune." It also informed Peurifoy that Greek-American societies were attempting to bring pressure on the United States Senate to adopt a resolution favoring Enosis. (747C.00/3-1451) Peurifoy's report on his meeting with Prime Minister Venizelos on March 19, during the course of which Venizelos "confided his anxiety with growing pressure for Cyprus union with Greece" is in telegram 3074 from Athens, March 19 (747C.00/3-1951).

<sup>4</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

Makarios and Loizides are fully aware I believe that US Govt will not support them in any way. However, they obviously feel that their cause has strong popular appeal in US and hope to bring pressure on Dept through Greek-Amer societies and Congress. I have no confidence that my expression and explanation US views at this first meeting will deter either ethnarchy or Loizides from further agitation for Enosis in Greece, Cyprus, US or elsewhere. It is possible that before leaving Makarios will ask to see me again to inquire whether Dept has any further views on subject. If I can arrange to see him alone on this occasion I have some hope that I may be able to make him see more clearly the harmfulness of Cyprus agitation at present and persuade him to take more helpful attitude.

PEURIFOY

647C.81/5-251: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, May 2, 1951—7 p. m.

4111. Officer Brit Emb informed Dept <sup>2</sup> that Brit Fon Off understands Grk Govt will shortly make proposal to UK Govt re union Cyprus with Greece. If Brit reply considered unfavorable by Grks, Greece will consider raising question at Sixth UNGA. Before doing so, however, Grk Rep UN Kyrou will informally sound out US reaction this move. Brit believe if US reply short of positive rejection, Grks wld accept as tacit approval.

Dept replied Amer Emb Athens has expressed view to Grk Govt on several occasions that present time most inopportune raise this question at UN. Also assured US reply to Kyrou wld indicate strong disapproval of such a Grk move.

Dept believes this type maneuver by Grks will only serve exacerbate present situation particularly if exchange of views made public. It may not be too late anticipate this move by Grks and Emb shld, if no objection perceived, seek suitable means discourage it.

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Dixon, cleared by UNP and BNA, approved for transmission and signed for the Secretary by Rountree.

Reference is to a conversation between Earl Jellicoe, the First Secretary of the British Embassy, and Ben F. Dixon and Joseph J. Wagner of GTI on May 1. A memorandum of this conversation is in file 747C.00/5-151.

747C.00/5-451: Telegram

The Minister in Greece (Yost) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

ATHENS, May 4, 1951—6 p. m.

3759. Subj Deptel 4111 May 2 2 discussed today with Venizelos and Politis. They stated démarche soliciting Brit declaration re future of Cyprus had been made to Morrison within last few days and read to me full text of report on conversation from Greek Amb London. Melas said Morrison had categorically refused to make any declaration, had been unwilling even to admit that question disposition of Cyprus might be discussed between Brit and Grks sometime in future, had repeated well-known arguments concerning inadvisability cause unrest among Cypriots at this time and finally had stressed Turkish interest in question.

Venizelos and Politis expressed considerable indignation at completely negative attitude of Brit. They said they intended to keep Brit reply secret if possible since its publication wld further inflame Cypriot public opinion and, further, that they had no intention of raising question in UN GA. Politis, however, declared Cypriots might endeavor persuade some Arab states to raise question which wld, of course, deeply embarrass Grk Govt. They declared they were doing everything possible to prevent issue from troubling Anglo-Grk relations and were endeavoring to quiet Cypriots but doubted ability to do so indefinitely if no satisfaction whatsoever is forthcoming. They doubted whether, in view present state Cypriot public opinion completely negative attitude is best means of keeping population calm and assuring loyalty in case of emergency. They were both convinced recent statement on subj by Turkish FonMin had been inspired by Brit.<sup>3</sup>

I detailed at some length reasons why Dept and US mil authorities consider present time most inappropriate for any change in status of Cyprus or any public controversy over issue. Venizelos and Politis expressed understanding and agreement but emphasized embarrassment of govt which is under heavy pressure from public opinion and all pol parties, which is likely to increase as electoral campaign gets underway this summer. Venizelos insisted that sitn wld be eased if Brit could be persuaded to make even most vague and general sort of statement which wld indicate their willingness discuss question at some indefinite time in future. He asked that this view be brought to Dept's attention and its good offices solicited. I promised to report report his views but said could give no assurance of any assistance in view of Dept's strong feeling that issue shld not be further raised at this time.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, pouched to Nicosia.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In telegram 3595 from Athens, April 24, Peurifoy reported that nearly all the Athens newspapers had devoted leading comments to the April 23 statement by Turkish Foreign Minister Köprülü to an Istanbul newspaper "to effect Turkey vitally concerned in ultimate fate Cyprus in view island's geographical position and Turk minority and therefore Turkey prefers maintenance status quo." (981.61/4-2451)

While Emb is unaware exact state of public opinion Cyprus, there can be no question repeated visits Cypriot metropolitan to Greece have stirred up feeling here to point where agitation can hardly be dampened down even with best efforts of govt. We are inclined to believe, as previously reported, that some vague, non-committal statement by Brit wld be useful and that in absence action along these lines issue is likely to become increasingly troublesome and perhaps eventually dangerous.

Yost

647C.81/5-451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Greece 1

SECRET

Washington, May 9, 1951—11 a.m.

4224. Re Embtel 3759.<sup>2</sup> You may report to Venizelos that, as you anticipated, in view Dept's conviction Enosis question shld not be raised at this time Dept considers it inappropriate to approach UK to make gen statement indicating willingness discuss Enosis at some future time. Moreover, Dept not prepared discount sincerity Turkish apprehensions re change in status Cyprus.

In further elucidation Dept's gen attitude concerning Enosis, you might in your discretion, point out that in face current world anxieties a serious question arises whether US press and public likely look with sympathy at appearance new internatl issue which wld add present tensions and cause dissension among allies. Enosis question not one which widely understood or capable arousing deep emotion among great majority US population with exception Grk-Amer community. Consequently, unwillingness defer this issue in face common danger now confronting free world might create highly unfavorable impression in minds US Cong and public. For this reason and since Dept cannot provide any encouragement Grk Govt this time, Dept considers Grks wld be prudent exercise every precaution prevent Grk public from becoming unduly excited by this issue, thereby providing acute embarrassment Grk Govt. You might reiterate Dept's strong objection raising issue this time in no way alters Dept's opinion there is no reason believe solution mutually satis all parties cannot ultimately be achieved.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Drafted by Anschuetz; cleared by BNA, UNP, UND, S/S; approved for transmission by McGhee. Repeated to London and Nicosia.

<sup>2</sup> Supra.

FYI question Cyprus has been proposed for agenda Colonial talks which US-UK hope hold in near future. Dept has been informed Brit may be prepared during these talks consider renewal offer of self-govt and possibility dual nationality. However, there is no present indication Brit prepared go beyond point discussion. Brit reluctance express willingness discuss Enosis at some indefinite future date derives from belief such declaration wld in fact encourage proponents of Enosis redouble their efforts rather than tranquilize sitn. Likewise Brit believe impossible realistically determine now some specific future date by which internatl sitn wld permit discussion this topic.

View US interest in maintenance status quo in Cyprus and many current areas friction between US and UK, Dept not prepared press Brit on this issue at this time. For this reason Dept considers it dangerous give any encouragement whatever to Grk Govt re quick solution pending indication Brit willingness make concession this matter.

Peurifoy concurs.3

ACHESON

747C.00/7-2651

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] July 26, 1951.

Participants: NEA-Mr. Burton Y. Berry

Mr. Feridun C. Erkin, Turkish Ambassador

Ambassador Erkin of Turkey called this morning at his own request on what he described over the telephone as a "confidential matter". After the usual preliminaries he said that he wished to discuss Cyprus. On June 29 the Messager d'Athenes is reported to have contained a declaration of a U.S. diplomat, in the course of which, the diplomat

³ Peurifoy was in the United States for consultations at the Department of State. Yost informed the Secretary of State in telegram 3897 from Athens, May 14, that the views conveyed in the source text had been passed on to Venizelos who expressed disappointment but "assures us Govt will continue do what it can dampen agitation for Eno°is." Venizelos added that he would discourage further visits of the Cypriot delegation to Athens but continued to maintain that opposition parties would make much of the issue during the forthcoming electoral campaign. Yost added that Venizelos had told the British that he could not accept their rejection of the recent call for Greek-Cypriot union as final. (647C.81/5–1451) In telegram 6394 from London, June 6, Ambassador Gifford informed the Secretary of State that the British Foreign Office had asked him to express to the Department and to Yost its great appreciation "for 'words of wisdom' given by Yost to Greeks re Cyprus in recent weeks, particularly for his efforts to disabuse Venizelos of idea UK shld make statement at this time re plebiscite." (647C.81/6-651) said that the U.S. agreed with the British to find a solution for the Cyprus question by which the British would administer Cyprus for twenty years and after which Britain and Greece would determine between themselves the future status of Cyprus. The Ambassador asked if I would please look into this report and let him know for the information of his government whether there was any basis for the statements attributed to a U.S. diplomat. He then said that he wished to express his views upon the subject. First, the creation of such a formula in the present state of world tension is a very dangerous action. Second, the Cyprus question is an artificial one as the island currently has a status within the framework of the British commonwealth. Third, the Turkish Government sees no need for a change in the present status of Cyprus but if a change is provoked the Turkish Government wants to be one of the parties that considers any suggested change. Fourth, the attitude of some Greek politicians urging self determination for Cyprus really does not provide a solution as the people of Cyprus called Greeks are not really Greeks but an island people of the Mediterranean who adhere to the Greek orthodox religion. Moreover, should the Greek Government officially sponsor a self determination movement for Cyprus the Greeks would be opening the door to Albania and Yugoslavia to sponsor similar movements to liberate sections of their populations now within the Greek frontiers.

[Here follows a brief discussion of the effects of the French elections on the admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO.]

747C.00/8-1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director, Office of Dependent Area Affairs, Bureau of United Nations Affairs (Gerig)

SECRET

[Washington,] August 14, 1951.

Participants: Mr. C. E. Steel, Minister, British Embassy

Mr. K. D. Jamieson, Second Secretary, British

Embassy

Assistant Secretary Hickerson, UNA

Mr. Benjamin Gerig, UND

Mr. Steel came to Mr. Hickerson's office today to discuss various matters concerning the projected colonial talks in London. In the course of the conversation Mr. Steel referred to the question of Cyprus and presented the attached aide-mémoire.<sup>2</sup> He pointed out that the U.K. Government is of the opinion that strategic considerations require the maintenance of complete sovereignty by His Majesty's Government over Cyprus and that no end can at present be seen to this requirement. He said his government considers that every effort must be made to avoid attention being drawn to the question of Cyprus, and particularly to prevent the question from being raised in the General Assembly this year. Further, that if it should be raised, it should be dealt with along the foregoing lines, having special regard to the long-term strategic requirements involved. He concluded by saying that his government hoped that full agreement could be reached between our two governments on these lines before the discussions on other colonial questions took place.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Colonial policy talks were held in London and Paris during October 1951 in preparation for the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly at Paris, November 1951–February 1952. For documentation on these talks, see vol. II, pp. 623 ff.

Mr. Hickerson said that we would, of course, give most careful consideration to the views expressed. He understood that the question was not being actively pushed by either public or official opinion in Greece. He also thought the Cyprus question would be considerably eased if Greece and Turkey were brought into NATO. He concluded by saying that he would bring the matter to the attention of the appropriate officers of the Department and that we would try to formulate our views as soon as possible.

747C.00/8-3151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Greece (Peurifoy) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

ATHENS, August 31, 1951—4 p. m.

1034. Brit Emb informs us that in forthcoming colonial talks in Washington preparatory for UNGA <sup>2</sup> Brit del will urge no change in current policy re Cyprus. While realizing difficulty of wholly negative response to Grk pretensions Brit Govt sees no possible alternative in light current internatl and strategic situation. It believes proposal for public statement re ultimate attachment Cyprus to Greece wld merely stimulate agitation and that proposal for granting Cypriots dual nationality is impracticable for number of reasons. Offer of more extensive self-govt under Brit Crown remains of course open.

Only positive suggestion which emanated from Brit Emb Athens and which HMG might take up in Wash, was that Greece might be asked in conjunction with its adherence to NAT, to refrain from stirring up issues which might cause difficulties to fellow-members.

* Not printed (747C.00/8-1351).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to London, pouched to Nicosia.

&lt;sup>2</sup>Presumably a reference to the colonial talks held at London and Paris in October 1951. See footnote 1, supra.

GREECE 537

We pointed out Dept's reluctance appear to attach conditions of any kind to Greco-Turk adherence to NATO and presumed this wld apply to any formal change of Grk policy re Cyprus, though we also believed Dept wld continue as in past to urge Grks not to upset status quo at this time.

PEURIFOY

747C.00/8-1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by Ben F. Dixon of the Office of Greek, Turkish, and Iranian Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] October 1, 1951.

Participants:

Mr. K. D. Jamieson, Second Secretary, British Embassy

Mr. J. Jefferson Jones III—UND

Mr. Burton Kitain—BNA Mr. Ben F. Dixon—GTI

Mr. Jamieson called on October 1 at 4 p. m., at the request of the Department, to receive an Aide-Mémoire 1 in answer to the Aide-Mémoire of the British Embassy dated August 13, 1951,2 relating to Cyprus. A copy of the Department's Aide-Mémoire is attached.

Mr. Jamieson, after reading the Aide-Mémoire, remarked that US views seemed closely to parallel those of the United Kingdom. He requested some elaboration on the position set forth in the second paragraph of the Aide-Mémoire. Mr. Dixon then gave an oral exposition of this matter based on Section V beginning on page 4 of the position paper for the use of the US Representative to the Anglo-American Colonial Policy Discussion to be held in London on October 9, 1951 (copy attached).3 The exposition given by Mr. Dixon generally covered the two categories: measures which might be taken to isolate certain issues from the Enosis problem in order to strengthen the position of the United States and the United Kingdom at the General Assembly; and, possible steps which might be taken eventually leading towards abatement of the Enosis agitation. Mr. Jamieson expressed interest in this discussion and the suggestions made. He said that these would be related to his Government. He made specific comment with regard to three of the points made.

Reiterating the Offer of Self-Government

Mr. Jamieson said that the Governor of Cyprus believed that making a formal offer of self-government would probably be inadvisable. To world opinion it would seem to occur so close to the meeting of the General Assembly as to be an obvious move to anticipate possible discussions on this score. Internally such a statement might lead to violent response on the part of the Cypriots, which would be contrary to the result to be hoped for. Furthermore, it might cast some doubt upon the sincerity of the original offer. Mr. Jamieson agreed, however, that discreet and timely public announcements or attempts to point up the fact that the offer is open, would be advisable.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Annex, below.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed, but see memorandum of conversation by Gerig, August 14, p. 535. <sup>3</sup> Not printed (747C.00/8-1351).

Mr. Dixon referred to the fact that the Cypriots constantly maintain that they will not accept self-government because they will only accept Enosis. The Department is of the opinion that this is a fallacious argument, since Enosis is equally precluded under the present form of government as it would be under self-government; therefore, the attainment of self-government actually would have no altered bearing on the Enosis issue.

Anti-Sedition Laws

Mr. Jamieson said that he had only one observation to make with regard to the Department's suggestion of repealing the anti-sedition laws and replacing them with measures having stricter penalties more stringently enforced but devoid of the element of deprivation of civil liberties. Specifically, such a change in the laws would rule out the possibility of being able to anticipate any nationalist or communist moves. Mr. Dixon replied that from the information available to the Department it did not seem that there were any activities of such a serious nature that anticipation would seem to be a necessary element to maintaining peace. In many cases the process of placing persons under bond not to break the peace could easily be replaced by the use of suspended sentences especially where habitual transgressors of the law were concerned. Mr. Jamieson observed that it is sometimes hard to write a water-tight law. The communists are usually good in finding loopholes and circumventing the purposes of the law. In connection with the anti-sedition laws, Mr. Jamieson remarked that the Cyprus Government was particularly interested in using the anti-sedition laws to try to drive a wedge between the nationalists and the communists and insofar as possible remove the communists as active proponents of Enosis, thus removing the pressure on the Ethnarchy. The rivalry between the two in advocating this issue had in good measure accounted for the present heightened stage of agitation.

Dual Nationality

Mr. Jamieson said this posed two practical difficulties; first, would it be necessary to give the Turkish population in Cyprus the same advantages with regard to Turkish citizenship? second, would Cypriots be liable to Greek conscription? He said such a step would in no way pacify the Greeks unless they would be given some authority in Cyprus, which would be unacceptable to the British Government. Furthermore, Mr. Jamieson said that while his Government was prepared to accept divided sentiment, they could not accept a situation leading to divided allegiance. Such a move, he felt, would be interpreted as a sign of weakness and would simply invite more trouble on the Enosis issue. Mr. Dixon replied that the Department had had no opportunity to explore this question in detail with the British. We realized, however, that the Foreign Office had made an extensive study of this matter. The Department's view was simply that moves of this nature were helpful and constructive. In thinking of dualnationality the Department did not have in mind that any far-reaching privileges should be granted to the Cypriots. Rather, the Department's thinking had been in terms of the psychological effect of purely nominal Greek citizenship for those Cypriots who desired it. In answer to the points made by Mr. Jamieson, he said that Cypriots in Cyprus would owe their allegiance to the Government of Cyprus and would be fully subject to Cypriot laws. Although in Greece the allegiance of such Cypriots would be to the Greek Government and they would be constrained to follow Greek law, this would not affect their responsibilities or status at home. Mr. Dixon said he believed that the sentiment of Greek-ethnic Cypriots in Cyprus could know much greater bounds in their desire for union with Greece. Therefore, simple bestowal of Greek citizenship on those Greeks who desired, would be unlikely further to exacerbate the situation.

GREECE 539

[Annex 1]

The Department of State to the British Embassy 4

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Reference is made to the Aide-Mémoire of the British Embassy dated August 13, 1951, relating to Cyprus. The Department of State believes that surrender of British sovereignty over Cyprus would have a most serious effect on the Allied strategic position in the Middle East. The Department of State believes further that agitation for a union between Cyprus and Greece as well as attempts to raise this problem in an international forum are unwise and inopportune at this time. It agrees that every effort should be made to prevent the question from being raised at the United Nations.<sup>5</sup> The Representative of the Department of State who will participate in the Anglo-Drafted by Dixon of GTI; cleared by BNA, UND, and UNP.

The Cyprus question was not formally raised at the Sixth Session of the United Nations General Assembly.

American discussions on colonial questions to be held at London on October 9, 1951, has been authorized to consider with the British Representative possible tactics to be employed in the event that the question is brought to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The Department agrees that there is no step which can be taken and no statement that can be made which would appease, in substantial measure for the immediate future, the Greeks or those who agitate for Enosis in Cyprus. However, the Department believes that this does not necessarily preclude the possibility of making certain helpful adjustments which might strengthen the position of the United Kingdom and of the United States in any possible General Assembly discussion. It would be desirable, if possible, to isolate from the union problem certain issues which might provide material for uses inimical to our common objective as set forth above. Furthermore, it might be possible for certain measures to be taken which, while not immediately appeasing the proponents of union, would in due course lead in the direction of an abatement of the agitation for union.

The Department of State believes it would be inadvisable for this Government to join the United Kingdom in making a statement concerning the retention of British sovereignty over Cyprus. It is believed that the United States can be more helpful by refraining from becoming directly and publicly identified with this issue. On balance the Department is inclined to question whether the issuance of such a statement by the United Kingdom at this time would have a beneficial or salutary effect. It is quite possible that such a statement might cause the advocates of Enosis to feel constrained to challenge this statement and renew their agitation.

Washington, October 1, 1951.

747C.00/11-2951: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Consulate at Nicosia 1

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 29, 1951—7:14 p. m.

99. During courtesy call at Dept Nov 28 Venizelos raised question of Cyprus. In referring attempts gun-running into Cyprus <sup>2</sup> stated he wld not like see civil disturbances break out there. Grk and Cypriot emotions at high pitch but wld be calmed if Brit gave indication at

<sup>1</sup>Drafted by Dixon, cleared by S/S, approved for transmission and signed for the Secretary by Dorsz. Repeated to London.

&lt;sup>2</sup> During the course of a call at the Department of State on November 15, Ambassador Politis had informed McGhee and Dixon that Communist forces had attempted to move 1,500 rifles from Greece into Cyprus for the purpose of creating civil disturbances. Politis emphasized that the Greek Government "would not support any venture of this nature and had taken steps to prevent event." (Memorandum of conversation, by Dixon, November 15, 1951, 747C.00/11-1551)

GREECE 541

this time they wild consider union under more settled international conditions. Dept answered generally along lines position previously communicated to you. Present time inopportune raise question. Brit statement of willingness consider union in future might be construed as weakness by Cypriot Commies and as such might stimulate them increase agitation. Short-range stability badly needed until West superior to Sovs and raising Enosis issue wild adversely affect stability by disturbing relations between now friendly parties to this issue.

Above info transmitted Athens.

WEBB

747C.00/12-751: Despatch

The Consul at Nicosia (Wagner) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Nicosia, December 7, 1951.

No. 172

Subject: The Present State of Enosis

The Department was informed in recent despatches of the situation which surrounded the formation both of the Ethnarchy (Nationalist) and AKEL (Communist) Enosis delegations to Paris, and in particular of the disunity which dominated the Nationalist activity in that regard. The Department also was informed, in the Consulate's telegram No. 116 of December 1, 1951,² of the Consulate's observation that feelings over Enosis were then much more pronounced in Athens than in Cyprus. It is intended, through this brief report, to inform the Department of the additional information which has reached us since the submission of the foregoing communications.

First, there has been a decided lessening, in the local press, of discussion and speculation pertaining to Enosis. In fact, to one on the scene that development seemed to follow upon the heels of the sudden Greek aggressiveness over the question. The arch-conservative Nea, as reported in this week's press summary, even went so far as to lash at those "so-called" Nationalist leaders who suddenly became "tongue-tied" once the Enosis agitation reached a "dangerous" level. In that same connection I again wish to emphasize that the popular emotions over Enosis were not, during the recent past, at the high pitch indicated by Mr. Venizelos.

Yesterday, at a luncheon, I had the opportunity of discussing the present state of the Enosis movement with Mr. Zeno Pierides. Besides being the Honorary Consul for Sweden in Larnaca and a very substantial business-man, Mr. Pierides is also quite an ardent Nationalist and close to Ethnarchy circles. He indicated to me that the Enosis drive, as far as the Cypriot Nationalists are concerned, is "finished" for the time being. He went on to say that the last weeks had been confused and hectic ones in Ethnarchy and Nationalist circles, with the level-headed leaders pleading that this is not the time, given the international situation, to raise strongly the Enosis issue. He expressed the belief that those who espoused moderation and the suspension of increased activity for some time, had won their point. He did not mean to imply, of course, that the usual run of Enosis propaganda would not continue, but simply that measures would return to a normal basis in that regard.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Copies to Athens and London.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

I commented to my friend that I had even noticed a diminution in the number of reports and amount of speculation appearing in the local Nationalist press concerning the subject of union with Greece. He agreed that that was so, and said that it was due to "pressure". I inquired as to what he meant and he replied "diplomatic pressure—upon Greece". I gathered from the tone in which the foregoing was told to me that the local Nationalists may have received word from Greece that this year's show is over.

We are still of the opinion that the key to the present Enosis situation, at least as far as the Ethnarchy and Nationalists are concerned, is to be found in Athens and that the movement will from the point of view of those political elements, return to normal once the Greeks definitely desist from stirring up the matter. Perhaps we should also explain that by normal we mean a state of affairs under which the subject will continue to be an important topic of press and discussion, but not one requiring immediate solution.

One element which we are still studying, however, is the renewed interest of the AKEL (Communists) in the union movement. During the recent Seventh Annual AKEL Congress the Secretary General of the Party, Papaioannou, clearly stated the Communist policy as being in favor of Enosis, and explaining at length that he was setting forth the correct policy in the endeavor to dissipate any lingering effects of the Party's former and mistaken espousal of self-government. Until recently the Communists had been inclined to relegate Enosis to a subordinate position in their propaganda. Perhaps, believing that the objective is without reach under the present world conditions and thus cannot become a source of trouble to them, their renewed attentions are designed to capitalize upon the emotional responses which the words "Enosis" and "Greece" seem to evoke in so many hearts here while at the same time embarrassing the Right-Wing.

The Consulate is, incidentally now in the process of accumulating information bearing upon the recent AKEL Congress, and hopes to be able to submit a comprehensive report in that regard shortly.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREECE AMENDING THE ECONOMIC COOPERATION AGREEMENT OF JULY 2, 1948, AS AMENDED

[For text of agreement effected by exchange of notes signed at Athens March 6 and 30, 1951, entered into force March 30, 1951, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2 (part 1), page 843.]

TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREECE

[For text of Treaty signed at Athens August 1, 1951, entered into force October 13, 1954, and exchange of notes dated at Athens August 3 and December 26, 1951, see 5 UST (pt. 2) 1829.]

IRAN

POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO IRAN; THE QUESTION OF ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE TO IRAN; INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE SETTLEMENT OF THE ANGLO-IRANIAN OIL DISPUTE <sup>1</sup>

 $<sup>^1</sup>$  Documentation concerning Iran for the year 1951 is scheduled for publication in Foreign Relations, 1952–1954, volume x.

IRAQ

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN IRAQ'S POLICY CONCERNING COOPERATION WITH THE WEST; THE DEVELOPMENT OF UNITED STATES TECHNICAL AND MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO IRAQ1

787.00/1-2451: Despatch

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State 2

SECRET No. 744 Baghdad, January 24, 1951.

During course of my first call on Acting Foreign Minister Shakr al-Wadi I was struck by change in atmosphere which had taken place since my departure in late September.

Shakr Pasha made it abundantly clear that Iraqi Government thinking had crystallized to the point where, instead of the fatalistic acceptance of the futility of Soviet aggression in the Middle East, it has been decided that every means will be exerted to meet the issue with such resources, both moral and material, as they may be able to summon from within themselves and their country and from Britain, the United States and any other sources including the Arab States.

There was an atmosphere of grave concern at the rapid deterioration of the international situation following upon the developments in Korea as a result of Moscow-supported Chinese Communist military intervention. This led logically to a re-examination by the Iraq Government of its position and the emergence of a conviction that Iraq must participate actively and positively in whatever defense against Soviet aggression might be forthcoming. He made it clear that there was no acceptance of the "neutralism" such as was reflected in certain circles in Egypt, for instance, and, in fact, that the Prime Minister, Nuri Said, was proceeding to the Arab League meeting at Cairo 3 with the intention of attempting to promote what would amount to a military alliance among the Arab States, thus liquidating any thoughts of "neutralism" in the area. Comment: It is of course highly doubtful that Nuri really expects to accomplish such an alliance. His purpose is probably to try to condition the Arab States to an acceptance of a pro-Western policy and an abandonment of any thoughts of neutralism.

A special session of the Arab League Political Committee, January 20-February 3.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For previous documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 636 ff. Repeated to Amman, Beirut, Damascus, Cairo, Jidda, Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, London, and Moscow.

Most significant, perhaps, was the implication that the problem of Israel must be put into a more realistic perspective which the serious circumstances demanded. In fact, in my succeeding conversation with Ahmad al Rawi, Under Secretary of the Foreign Office, he came right out and said, in effect, that Israel as a danger must no longer be considered at all in the face of the deadly threat of Soviet imperialism.

EDWARD S. CROCKER

787.00/2-1951: Despatch

The Chargé in Iraq (Tenney) to the Department of State<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL No. 843 BAGHDAD, February 19, 1951.

[Here follows section IV which is a continuation of the review of Iraqi political development and political attitudes (sections I, II, and III) presented in despatches 821 and 822 of February 12 (787.00/2–1251). Despatch 821 reported on Nuri al-Sa'id's efforts at the Arab League Meeting, January 23, to secure the alignment of the Arab States and the Arab League with the West. Despatch 822 reported on Sa'id's efforts since early November 1950 to impress on the Iraqi public the necessity of arranging for "joint defense" of the Arab states. The despatch also presented a review, as seen from Iraq, of the principal points of interest in the Arab League meeting of January 20–February 3.]

V. THE GOVERNMENT STRESSES IRAQ'S DEFENSELESSNESS AND NEED OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ASSISTANCE

The general international tension and threat of global war following Chinese Communist military successes in Korea in December and January, and especially the unpleasant necessity for Iraq to come out openly in support of—or opposition to—the United States resolution condemning Chinese Communist aggression, revived in Iraq an acute awareness of the country's defenselessness and a keen desire on the part of Iraqi political and military leaders to get military assistance from the Western powers (compare the Embassy's despatch No. 424, October 23, 1950, p. 5).<sup>2</sup>

The Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Defense (Shakir al-Wadi and Ahmed Rawi) explained at length to the Embassy that the Government was afraid that if Iraq provoked the Soviet Union by following the U.S. line against the Chinese Communists, the Soviets might retaliate through stepped up subversive action in Iraq especially in Iraqi Kurdistan. The Government stressed that the Iraqi Army must have additional arms and equipment in order to deal with the situation on the Iraqi border if a Soviet inspired insurrection should occur in Iranian Azerbaijan and Iranian Kurdistan (or if Mulla Mustafa should return to Iraq backed by Russian arms) and in order to maintain internal security if the U.S.S.R. should take active steps to increase subversive activity in Iraq (compare the Embassy's despatch No. 829, February 17, 1951,3 which transmits a memorandum prepared by the Foreign Office, with the help of the Ministries of Interior and Defense, regarding the factors which make it necessary that Iraq's armed forces be strengthened).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Amman, Ankara, Basra, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, Moscow, Paris, Tehran, and Tel Aviv.

<sup>2</sup> Not printed.

IRAQ 547

Foreign Office Undersecretary (before the final vote on the U.S. resolution on Chinese aggression) summarized the Government's viewpoint as follows:

a) The Government believes that the vote on the Chinese aggression resolution is a turning point in the sense that a vote for the U.S. resolution will be (and will be so considered by the Iraqi public) a definite alignment of Iraq against the Soviet sphere, and that it will "align Iraq with the Western powers" in the event of a third World War.

b) Iraq is afraid that the Russians will regard an Iraqi vote for the resolution as a hostile act and that if Iraq so votes the U.S.S.R. will take action against Iraq probably in the form of greatly expanded subversive activities here.

c) Therefore the Government feels that if Iraq is to take the risk of acting in such a way as to anger the Russians and thus run the danger of a greatly stepped up subversive campaign, Iraq must have some assurance of military and economic aid from the United States (since Britain cannot supply it).

The Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Defense have both taken the line in discussions with Embassy representatives that Britain, which has treaty responsibility for the defense of Iraq, is unable to defend the area or even to supply sufficient arms to enable the Iraq Government to build up the army and the police force sufficiently to maintain internal security should war break out, or should disturbances occur in Northwest Iran. Therefore, they say, the Government must turn to the United States as the only power in a position to supply the needed equipment.

The reasons underlying the Government's desire to increase the strength of its armed forces may be summarized as follows:

It is a principle of Iraqi political life that the Government can maintain order and security in the outlying Kurdish mountain regions and in the southern Arab tribal districts only when it is "strong". The Government's strength depends in the last analysis on its armed forces, the army and the police—and their ability to take quick effective action when disturbances break out. Growing realization that Iraq is in fact defenseless should war break out between the Soviet Union and the Western powers is one of the causes for the widespread feeling in unthinking (or anti-Western) nationalist and leftist circles that Iraq should remain neutral in the event of war and should make public declaration of such a policy. The weakness of Irag's armed forces and the feeling that the country and its government do not have the strong military backing of a first class military power able to cope with a Russian attack (such as Britain used to be but is not now under the present alignment of world forces) also has the effect of reducing the Government's ability to keep the respect of and maintain order among unruly tribesmen or discontented urban elements. Why should the Kurdish mountain chieftain or the Euphrates tribal sheikh, who has, or thinks he has, grievances against the Government remain respectful and submissive if he believes the Government is likely to be swept away?

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed.

For these reasons the Government is most anxious to build up the strength of its armed forces and to seek United States participation, with Britain, in some form of multilateral military arrangement for the defense of the area.

VI. IRAQI-SYRIAN AND IRAQI-JORDANIAN RELATIONS

1. Iraqi-Syrian Relations.

The only development of importance in Iraqi-Syrian relations during the period under review was Prime Minister Qudsi's visit to Baghdad (November 18 to 23). During his five day visit, the principal political matters discussed by Qudsi and Prime Minister Nuri Said were (a) the question of military cooperation with the West; (b) the Arab League's Collective Security Pact; (c) the relations between Syrian and Egypt and (d) Iraqi-Syrian relations and the question of Saudi Arabian interference in Syrian affairs.

The Iraqis seem to have been pleased with results of Qudsi's visit, believing that Nuri Pasha was successful in explaining Iraqi viewpoints on inter-Arab and international affairs,—and to a certain extent winning Qudsi's approval of them.

Despatch 1061, April 10, from Baghdad transmitted a list of military equipment recently released to Iraq by the British Government and commented that although these items would undoubtedly make the Iraqi Army a more effective internal police force, they would not satisfy the needs of the Iraqi Government if it were to be encouraged to play its part in any defense of the area. The despatch closed with the words: "It cannot be sufficiently emphasized that the time is here when material military assistance must be rendered to Iraq if the will to resist is to be encouraged." (787.5/4–1051)

a) The Defense of the Middle East and Military Cooperation with the West.

Nuri Pasha expounded his thesis that Iraq especially, but Syria and Saudi Arabia as well, are dangerously exposed to Soviet invasion in the event of global war, and that therefore the Arab States should seek the military cooperation of Britain and the West in the defense of the Middle East.

b) The Collective Security Pact.

Nuri Pasha asked Qudsi to inform the Egyptian Prime Minister (on his forthcoming visit to Cairo) that Iraq could not sign the Egyptian version of the Collective Security Pact; that Iraq insisted that the Pact be made more practical by providing for a Chiefs of Staff committee and that the Commander in Chief of the combined Arab armies should be either chosen on merit, or [be] a national of the state or the territory on which war occurs.

c) Egyptian-Syrian Relations.

Qudsi (according to Iraqi sources) assured Nuri Pasha that at future Arab League meetings Syria would not follow the Egyptian lead, but would take an independent line, considering each question on its merits.

d) Iraqi-Syrian Relations and the Question of Iraqi, and Saudi Arabian Interference in Syrian Affairs.

According to Iraqi sources, Qudsi did not raise the question of interference in Syrian affairs with the Iraqis (because, the Iraqis maintain, the Syrians are quite aware Iraq has not interfered since Hennawi's downfall),<sup>5</sup> but he did inform Nuri Pasha that he had urged the Saudi Arabians to "stop subsidizing intrigues in Syria".

2. The Iraq-Syria Union Question <sup>6</sup>

As regards the question of Syro-Iraqi union, the Iraq Government's attitude remained the same, during the period under review, as it has been for the past year. The Iraqis take the line that the question as to whether or not Iraq and Syria should unite is now up to the Syrians; Iraq has made its position in favor of union clear—it can do nothing more until the Syrians come to a decision as to whether they desire union with Iraq.

At the time of Qudsi's visit, the Undersecretary of the Iraqi Ministry of Foreign Affairs told the reporting officer that Qudsi was certain that both Saudi Arabia and Egypt were engaging in intrigues in Syria, hoping eventually to arrange for the return of

&lt;sup>5</sup> Col. Sami al-Hinnawi, who led a successful military coup in Syria in August 1949, was in turn removed from power by a military coup on December 14, 1949.
<sup>6</sup> For documentation concerning U.S. policy toward the possibility of a Syro-Iraqi union in 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 1201 ff.

Shukri Quwwatli, since they believe Quwwatli would take a stronger stand against the union of Syria and Iraq than the present Syrian regime.

3. Iraqi-Jordanian Relations

a) King Abdullah Visits Baghdad.

In the period under review there have been no noteworthy developments in relations between Iraq and Jordan. King Abdullah came to Baghdad twice (in October and November) to visit his ailing niece Queen Aliya, and a third time, in December, for her funeral.

During his October visit King Abdullah, in a press interview, stressed the need for the "unity of Iraq, Jordan and Syria", and in November (at the time of Prime Minister Nuri Said's address of November 14 pointing out the impossibility of neutrality for Iraq) he expressed his approval of Nuri's stand against neutrality, telling newspapermen that "neutrality, whether armed or not, is of no avail".

b) Nuri Said Visits Amman.

In January, on his way to the Cairo Arab League meeting, Nuri Said visited Amman to discuss with King Abdullah the forthcoming League meeting, and also to ask the King if he would permit denationalized Iraqi Jews to move by road from Iraq across Jordan to Israel. Nuri had hoped to be able to arrange for the transport of large numbers of Jews by bus to Israel (in an effort to speed up the emigration operation), but King Abdullah wisely refused, realizing that the movement of large numbers of Jews across Jordan would probably cause serious incidents endangering internal security.

E. PAUL TENNEY

887.00 TA/7-751: Despatch

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Baghdad, July 7, 1951.

No. 23

From the referenced Despatch, it will be recalled that Iraqis generally applaud the Point IV Technical Assistance Program. The General Agreement passed the Chamber of Deputies with only seven adverse votes. (It became effective by publication in the official Gazette on June 2, 1951.)<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Repeated to Damascus, Beirut, and Cairo.

&lt;sup>7</sup>The regime of Syrian President Shukri al-Quwatli was overthrown in a coup d'état of March 30, 1949, by Col. Husni Za'im.

&lt;sup>2</sup>A summary of the negotiation of the Point Four Agreement, a comment on its status, a review of the Embassy's experience with the program to date, and enclosed copies of several Embassy and Foreign Office notes exchanged on the agreement, are in despatch 2256, June 25, from Baghdad, in Department of State file 887.00 TA/6-2551. For the text of the Agreement for Technical Cooperation signed at Baghdad on April 10 and entered into force on June 2, see 3 UST (pt. 1) 541.

IRAQ 551

Considerable preparatory work was done prior to the conclusion of the General Agreement so that a number of Point IV projects were in advanced stages of discussion. However, most of these projects (especially leader grants and trainees projects) proved difficult to conclude with official sanction of the Iraqi Government. Thus, full advantage was not taken of the available 1951 fiscal year funds.

In reviewing the course of the discussions with the Iraqis concerning Point IV projects, it seems clear that much more should have been done on the Iraqi side to finalize these projects earlier. It is the feeling of the Embassy that the procrastination of the Iraqis can not be explained merely by inefficiency, but that some delaying tactics were employed.

EDWARD S. CROCKER

787.5 MAP/8-2951

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] August 29, 1951.

Subject: 1) Iraq Acceptance of Military and Economic Assistance Under the Mutual Security Program.

2) Iraq Views on Japanese Peace Treaty

Participants: Mr. Abdullah Bakr, Minister of Iraq, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim

Mr. George C. McGhee—NEA

Mr. John R. Barrow-NE

Discussion:

1) Iraq acceptance of the Mutual Security Program

Pursuant to instructions from his Government, Mr. Bakr stated that the Iraqi Government was ready to "accept" United States military and economic assistance under the Mutual Security Program. He said the Government had emphasized military assistance. (Obviously military and economic assistance would be provided only on the basis of an Iraqi request.)

I congratulated the Government of Iraq for this early and forthright action. I said I thought the emphasis on military assistance was quite correct in the light of the sound economic position which Iraq would attain if all went well with the new IPC Agreement. Economic aid could largely be confined to technical assistance.

I said that I hoped this approach was an indication that Iraq stood ready to cooperate with the West in strengthening the defense of the area since this would naturally make us more interested in sending military aid to Iraq.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For documentation on the Iraq Petroleum Company agreement, see pp. 268 ff.

Mr. Bakr said this point was not specifically included in his instructions but he would mention it to his Government.

[Here follows the remainder of this memorandum which concerns Bakr's imminent departure for San Francisco to attend the Japanese Treaty Conference, and Iraq's views on the stationing of United States troops in Japan. McGhee closed with the information that he and Bakr had discussed in general terms such questions as the Iraq Petroleum Company (IPC) Agreement and Iraq-Jordan union without developing any new thoughts on the questions.]

G[EORGE] C. M[CGHEE]

887.2553/10-1151: Despatch

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Baghdad, October 11, 1951.

No. 349

1. Summary and Introductory Comment.

This Despatch will briefly examine the effects on the Iraqi national economy which may be expected to result from the proposed oil concessions agreement between Iraq and the oil-producing companies (Iraq Petroleum Co., Mosul Petroleum Co., and Basra Petroleum Co.) and to assign approximate magnitudes to the resultant impacts. No attempt is made here to indulge in close economic analysis; time limitations preclude this and the purposes of the Despatch do not require it. Approximations are sufficient to highlight the far-reaching implications of the benefits to be derived by Iraq under the new agreement. Moreover, the Despatch is intended to suggest the general direction and nature of the effects of the new agreement rather than to precisely measure them.

The terms of the agreement, when ratified by Iraq's Parliament, will be retroactive to January 1, 1951. Under the agreement, there will occur a substantial increase in oil production and in oil revenues to the Iraq Government. Both increases will exert attenuated subsidiary effects in addition to the direct impact on the Iraqi economy caused by their own sizeable contributions.

The oil revenues will place Iraq for the foreseeable future in a comfortable net creditor position on balance of international payments account. While means of financing developmental projects will no longer be a problem, the inflationary impact of the greatly increased governmental revenue will create a series of complex financial difficulties with which Iraq is not well prepared to cope. Considerable economic, social and political readjustments are anticipated over the long-term, an obviously painful process fraught with dangers for stability in the area.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to London, Tehran, Amman, Basra, Beirut, Benghazi, Damascus, Jidda, Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, and Tripoli.

[Here follow two sections covering the direct and indirect impacts of the increases in oil production and revenue rate on the Iraqi national economy.]

4. Net Effect.

From the foregoing, several broad conclusions having policy implications may be drawn. Some of these have already been discussed in previous despatches; others will be developed further in future despatches.

a) Oil is predominantly the mainstay of Iraqi economy and the hope of future development to make the economy viable before the oil resource is depleted.

b) Contrary to the usual bankruptcy of backward areas, Iraq has more revenue in sight than projects upon which to spend it.

c) Iraq sorely needs technical assistance, both in personnel and goods.

d) Iraq is faced with a monumental developmental task with only a modicum of helpful institutional aids; thus truly staggering socioeconomic problems (such as inflation and shifts in emphasis on economic groups) arising out of the coming tremendous expansion of economic activity are complicated by the scarcity of executive personnel and the out-moded social-political-economic traditions and customs.

[Here follows a listing of recent despatches concerning the oil agreement, the Technical Assistance and Development Board (see despatch 466, November 10, page 554), and the economic life of Jews and others in Iraq.]

EDWARD S. CROCKER

783.00/11-551

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Lebanon-Syria-Iraq Affairs (Gnade) to the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper)

SECRET

[Washington,] November 5, 1951.

Subject: Weekly Summary

[Here follow the sections on Syria and Lebanon.]

Iraq

The Palace Master of ceremonies, an intimate of the Regent,<sup>1</sup> reported to a US Embassy official that he was extremely worried about the consequences of the present tense situation brought about by extreme nationalist sentiment.<sup>2</sup> He was apparently afraid of a mob uprising. He remarked: "We can depend on the tribes, but are not certain of the Army". This is the first hint the Embassy has received that the Army was not completely reliable. He spoke as if the Regent were convinced that Nuri must go, but he saw no suitable leader in sight to replace Nuri.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Crown Prince Abdul Ilah.

In an unprecedented private interview with Mr. Crocker the Regent let it be known that he was much impressed with the opportunity offered in the form of association with the MEC; <sup>3</sup> that he was unhappy about Egypt's unilateral action with respect thereto; that he was not satisfied that Nuri Said's present one-man government was representative enough to deal with a matter of such importance, and that he wanted to work out in his own mind the best way to prepare Iraq to deal with the MEC in view of Egypt's rejection, the reluctance of any Arab state to take the first step, and the possible opposition of extremist elements. He felt that since Egypt had not consulted the other Arab states in her action they were free to follow their own best interests in this instance. He suggested that the United States should mediate in the Anglo-Egyptian dispute.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> For documentation on the proposed Middle East Command, see pp. 1 ff.

4 For documentation on this subject, see pp. 343 ff.

887.00 TA/11-1051: Despatch

The Ambassador in Iraq (Crocker) to the Department of State

SECRET No. 466 BAGHDAD, November 10, 1951.

Subject: Basic Policy on Technical Assistance for Iraq.

The Embassy has been engaged in discussions with the recently arrived TCA field party which is reviewing and evaluating technical assistance projects in Iraq. It appears opportune to set forth the Embassy's views concerning the most appropriate policy relative to such projects, based, of course, upon experience to date with Point IV in Iraq.

The foremost consideration is that Iraq does not lend itself to being fitted to an over-all pattern of technical aid. Iraq has had the benefit of numerous surveys of her developmental needs (largely British performed) and has already launched on a program of economic development. A special government agency (the Development Board) has been established with high-level personnel and substantial revenues with the specific purposes of determining the nature of the developmental projects to be undertaken and assuring that such projects go forward. The Iraqis would not welcome the arrival of a foreign group which might attempt to present them with plans for the development of their country. It is essential to the acceptability of Point IV aid in Iraq that any central TCA group here avoid even the appearance of such a purpose. Moreover, it is definitely to our interest and that of Iraq to support completely the Development Board and not to detract in any way from its prestige and its functions.

&lt;sup>2</sup> The political atmosphere in Iraq was tense as leftist, nationalist, and anti-Western elements continued to mount pressure for abrogation of the Anglo-Iraqi Treaty of 1930 and adoption of a policy of "neutrality" for the Middle East. The situation was described in despatches 394, October 24, and 432, November 3, from Baghdad: 787.00/10-2451 and /11-351, respectively.

IRAQ 555

In this connection it must be borne in mind that, while a General Point IV Agreement has been signed with Iraq, this by no means indicates that the course of the various projects as requested finally by the Government has been smooth. The Embassy has found it necessary to exercise much tact and forebearance in dealing with the various concerned Iraqi officials, many of whom have private interests in connection with specific technical aid projects which do not always coincide with the objectives of the Point IV program and which, furthermore, sometimes occasion internal conflicts among the Iraqis themselves.

Understanding the Iraqi character is important in actually implementing the technical aid program. To begin with, the Iraqis generally are suspicious of getting something for nothing and this suspicion is not limited to the top-level people; in fact, it is probably least true of the western-educated Iraqis. Nevertheless, there is political danger for Iraqis to appear to be too closely associated with occidental countries and so few Iraqis care to support Point IV with unbounded enthusiasm. Also the Iraqis are a proud people and their leaders are often super-sensitive of their own prerogatives, so that aid projects must be carefully presented. These characteristics make the position of a Point IV project negotiator a delicate one, which is further complicated by the ineptness and administrative inefficiency of the Iraqi authorities.

The Embassy's experience shows that often individual Iraqi officials will grandiosely endorse a project and indicate that the endorsement constitutes practical adoption of the project by the Iraqi Government. However, final approval of a project generally requires slow and devious processes in which even Iraqi personalities who do not appear to have any direct relation to the project under consideration occasionally inject themselves. The Point IV project negotiator must also be leery of the pleasing and deceptively efficient phrases used by the westerneducated Iraqis, since Iraqis usually like to be congenial. Use of the same technical language that we employ does not always mean that the Iraqi has our attitudes of mind nor our customary drive to accomplish objectives.

It is also essential to bear in mind that Iraq, unlike many other backward countries, has now and will have for the foreseeable future more funds (from her oil resources) than she needs for any reasonable developmental program. Thus she does not need financial aid for her economic development. She does need desperately foreign technical assistance. However, she can afford to pay for it. This fact has definite advantages since she can readily finance developmental projects; and thus maximize the benefit to be derived from technical advice; but it also makes the Iraqis feel more independent in accepting technical aid.

To summarize the effect of these considerations on the technical aid program, it is not believed that the most progress can be made in Iraq by attempting too extensive and ambitious Point IV projects too rapidly. Caution seems indicated so as not to lose the ground gained thus far. Furthermore, the projects must be geared to the Iraqi concept of where aid is needed and to Iraqi methods even though those methods are much slower, devious, and inefficient than ours. One of the objectives of our aid here should be precisely to improve gradually those methods.

To pass now to considering the nature of projects feasible in Iraq, it is the Embassy's considered judgment that the Development Board constitutes the principal key to the future of Iraq's development of her resources. This Board has allotted to it all the Iraqi oil revenues (which represent by far the largest source of national income) and is specifically charged with responsibility for measures for economic development.

A golden opportunity for influencing and guiding Iraq's economic future exists in the provision for an American member of this Board. Unfortunately, Gen. Donald Adams who served for a short time as Point IV appointee to the Board, left Iraq in July and a replacement has not yet arrived. This has created a somewhat delicate problem since the Iraqis (and foreign diplomatic circles also) are most anxious to have an American member. In the Embassy's view, this is by far the most important technical aid appointment to be made in Iraq. The American member will sit with the innermost council of the Iraqis in charting Iraq's economic future and in implementing developmental plans by appropriate measures. No other American in Iraq can be in a position to learn so intimately the Iraqi problems and plans for development nor to contribute so largely by counsel to the solution of those problems and the formulation of sound plans.

The position of the American member of the Development Board is so influential and important that the Embassy believes it should be the focal point around which other Point IV activities in Iraq should center. While the American member should have no administrative functions with reference to the rest of the Point IV program in Iraq (essential because he can only maintain the confidence of the Iraqis by concentrating on his duties on the Board), he would be in a unique position to advise the Embassy's Technical Cooperation Officer regarding various technical aid projects. It is believed that in this way a better integrated and practical program for Iraq may be evolved.

IRAQ 557

It is understood that the Department proposes to establish a central TCA group within the Embassy to coordinate the aid program for Iraq. This is a sound proposal; however, the existence of an American member on the Iraqi Development Board will necessitate some difference in the type of operation carried on by the central TCA group from operation of similar groups in other countries. Moreover, the nature of the situation in Iraq is such that no strong central supervision of technical assistance projects in Iraq appears feasible. The fact of a Development Board means that plans must initiate with that Board in order that Iraqi cooperation may be assured. Thus, the central TCA group cannot inject itself into the economic planning activities of the Iraq Government as may be practicable and desirable in some other countries. The American member of the Development Board will do this as a function of his position. Furthermore, the Iraqis would be quick to resent any apparent interference with the Point IV technicians whom they will consider as special advisors and members of the staffs of the Ministries to which assigned. Thus, the central TCA group should not attempt close supervision of the American technicians assigned to Iraq.

The Department will also appreciate that many Iraqis feel that not much aid has been forthcoming under Point IV. Gen. Adams came as American member of the Development Board, but has resigned and his vacancy has not been filled. Dr. Walter C. Price is now here as maternal and child health expert. The Iraqis have had a naive belief that many American technicians would have arrived before now and the Embassy's explanations have not completely reassured them. It is therefore important that at least six or seven of the 21 technicians which the Iraqis have requested be sent to Iraq immediately. Until they arrive, the Embassy considers the time inopportune to discuss any further technical aid projects.

Of less importance than the furnishing of American technicians in the eyes of the Iraqis generally, is the program for training Iraqis abroad. Some progress is being made in this field which seems to be reasonably satisfying to the Iraqis. Of least importance from the Iraqi point-of-view are the various special training projects, such as leader grant projects.

For convenient reference, Enclosure 1 to this Despatch lists the Embassy's major communications to the Department concerning the technical assistance program in Iraq which may be consulted to gain a fuller appreciation of the needs and problems peculiar to Iraq.

The views expressed in this Despatch have been thoroughly discussed with the Point IV field party now at this Embassy.<sup>1</sup>

EDWARD S. CROCKER

AGREEMENT FOR TECHNICAL COOPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND IRAQ

[For text of Agreement signed at Baghdad April 10, 1951, entered into force June 2, 1951, see 3 UST (pt. 1) 541.]

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND IRAQ CONCERNING CONSULAR OFFICERS

[For text of Agreement effected by exchanges of notes dated at Washington March 14, May 15, June 19, and August 8, 1951, entered into force August 8, 1951, see 5 UST (pt. 1) 657.]

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND IRAQ CONCERNING AN EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION

[For text of Agreement signed at Baghdad August 16, 1951, entered into force on that date, see 2 UST (pt. 2) 1908.]

&lt;sup>1</sup> Enclosed in this despatch was a list of despatches of major import on the subject of technical assistance programs in Iraq.

ISRAEL

RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES WITH ISRAEL; INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PALESTINE QUESTION 1

684A.86/1-351

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)

SECRET

[Washington,] January 3, 1951.

Subject: Possible Moves to Improve Relations Between Israel and the Arab States.<sup>2</sup>

We have noted the current Israeli preoccupation over the possibility that in the event of a major war involving the Near East, Israel would be completely cut off from its Western sources of supply for food and fuel. This preoccupation has resulted in the recent Israeli approach to advocate the desirability that the United States stock-pile food and fuel in Israel.

If food and fuel sources of supply in the Arab states were open to Israel, the position of the latter would not be so precarious if its present foreign supply lines were cut. This will not be possible, however, until an improvement takes place in the relations between Israel and the Arab states.

There are submitted hereunder some ideas on moves which Israel might make in an effort to induce the Arab states to adopt a different attitude. These ideas are based on the assumption that Israel needs peace more than do the Arab states, and that it would be Israel, not the Arabs, who would have to make concessions in order to obtain this peace, given the present Arab determination not to come to a settlement with Israel.

1. Israel might publicly accept the UN recommendation that those refugees desiring to return to their homes and to live at peace with their neighbors would be permitted to do so. Israel might then make a genuine effort to take back as many refugees as it possibly could genuine effort to take back as many refugees as it possibly could.

2. Israel might make an offer to give adequate compensation for abandoned refugee property and to begin payment of such compensation, without making this action dependent upon a general peace settlement.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For previous documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, pp. 658 ff.

<sup>2</sup> The following handwritten note appears in the margin of the source text next to the first paragraph: "Dreamy! G[eorge] C. M[cGhee]". Another handwritten note reads: "Let's make George eat his word! [G.] L[ewis] J[ones]".

- 3. Israel might offer to return some of the Arab quarters of Jerusalem. This would have an important effect on the possibility of peace with Jordan.
- 4. Israel might offer to cedesto Egypt and Jordan part of the Southern Negev in order to establish the land bridge between the Arab states so much desired by the Arabs. If this were not possible, Israel might offer the Arabs a corridor across the Southern Negev. Transit rights for Israel across this corridor to Elath could doubtless be arranged.
- 5. Israel might offer to return to Jordan the areas in the "Triangle" region taken over as part of the Armistice Agreement between Israel and Jordan.<sup>3</sup>
- 6. Israel might offer to make Haifa a free port and Lydda a free air-port.
- 7. Israel might offer to the Arab states facilities for rail transit of Israel in sealed cars.
- 8. Israel might offer to make available to the Arab states scientific and medical advice and equipment.
- 9. Israel might return to Jordan the disputed territory in the Rutenberg area.

On the reverse side of the medal the Arabs should be expected to take the following steps:

- 1. To sign non-aggression pacts with Israel if outright peace settlements were out of the question.
  - 2. To begin commercial relations with Israel.
- 3. To permit free passage of persons and goods between Israel and the Arab states.
  - 4. To permit the flow of oil through the Haifa pipeline.
  - 5. To cease boycotts and blockade practices.
- 6. To arrange for full Israeli access to the cultural institutions on Mt. Scopus, and to the Wailing Wall.

In the opinion of NE, peace with Jordan might be achieved if the Israelis could see fit to make some of the moves suggested above. Given the serious international situation, Lebanon might follow Jordan once the ice were broken. However, Israel has always strongly rejected any suggestion that she make concessions of the above nature, on the grounds that this would indicate weakness and would only serve to whet the appetite of the Arabs for more concessions. Conversely, we have no assurance that the steps, if taken would result in countersteps by the Arabs in the direction of better relations with Israel.

Recommendations: 4

&lt;sup>3</sup> Of April 3, 1949; U.N. Doc. S/1302/Rev. 1.

&#x27;The remainder of this memorandum has not been found in Department of State files.

790.5/1-551 : Telegram

The Chargé in Israel (Ford) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET

Tel Aviv, January 5, 1951—9 a. m.

392. Following is Embassy's preliminary response to problems raised by Israel offer have its armament plants produce arms for use of West. Deptel 270, December 29.

Military: Service attachés unable comment pending implementation Herzog's suggestion they be invited inspect Israel munitions factories. If Israel extends facilities, comprehensive report will be submitted soonest.

Political: Reference proposal reflects degree to which Israel leadership now prepared to translate its Western orientation into tangible foreign political commitments. Offer is culmination of gradual change in foreign political thinking of Israel leaders during last six months. Shift in emphasis during that period from official policy of "neutrality" to "nonidentification" to what is now sometimes described as "independent" has prepared ground for shift to more overt ties to West. Recent developments Korea and growing fear that Third World War may be imminent have helped awaken public to danger that as price for neutrality Israel may, in event major hostilities, find itself cut off from West upon whom it is dependent. As result bulk of population now probably ready support complete break with neutrality if such break linked to political and military alliance with West.

Government motivation for reference proposal probably twofold. For one, concern Arabs may take advantage of western preoccupation with USSR to launch second round. Although no fresh evidence here of such Arab intentions, mere logical possibility has kept Israel on guard, and this factor is constantly stressed domestically to keep population alert and psychologically prepared for sacrifice. Probably more basic, however, is genuine conviction of top leaders and informed public that Israel cannot hope emerge from Third World War as independent national state unless firmly allied as active participant with Western powers.

Israel Government undoubtedly views its offer as critical decision at critical time, regardless of whether US accepts or rejects, offer will likely have widespread political consequences. If plan accepted, activities of small Communist party will undoubtedly be intensified. Communists can be expected extend their present efforts propagandize and infiltrate to direct sabotage. Reaction of Mapam members more difficult to predict because of absence any dependable estimate of strength various Mapam factions. Outlook at present is that small Extreme Leftist faction will cooperate with Communists, but that large numbers of rank and file will be bewildered and confused into inaction in early stages. Ultimate response of Mapam membership will probably depend on whether Government skillful enough to split party by convincing rank and file they are making choice for or against national survival. But regardless exact outcome here, Israel Government not likely to have much difficulty controlling Extreme Leftist elements. Mapam's control Histadrut and certainty latter will support government policy would provide effective instrument for maintaining labor discipline.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, p. 1086.

Negative response would be psychological blow to Israel. First reaction likely to be overtures along similar lines to Britain with whom relations conspicuously cordial within last few weeks. Top political circles Israel are known to have speculated that at Truman-Attlee talks <sup>2</sup> Great Britain may have been assigned primary responsibility for Middle East in event of war. Further consequences difficult to forsee, but safe guess is that outright rejection by both US and Britain would weaken position of pro-Western spokesmen in Israel political life and encourage those who advocate salvation through increasingly uneasy neutrality.

In summary, Embassy's preliminary appraisal reference proposal is that it is little short of revolutionary in Israeli thinking, that the very fact Government leaders have made it is vivid proof of their determination to take whatever steps are necessary to insure their survival as national state, and that it is sufficiently significant to our Near Eastern policy to warrant careful top level attention.<sup>3</sup>

FORD

357.AC/1-2351: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Legation in Lebanon 1

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY WASHINGTON, January 23, 1951—6 p. m. 497. For Palmer and Blandford. Reur respective jurisdictions Dept believes only possible areas uncertainty between PCC and UNRWA problems of (1) assessment and payment of compensation; (2) arrangements for repatriation of Arab refugees or (3) their resettlement. By UNGA resolutions 1948 <sup>2</sup> and 1950 <sup>3</sup> PCC has gen polit responsibility handling these problems. By UNGA res 1950 <sup>4</sup> UNRWA has sole responsibility reintegration program.

&lt;sup>2</sup> For documentation on the talks held between Prime Minister Attlee and President Truman in Washington, December 4–8, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. III, pp. 1698 ff. and ibid., vol. vII, pp. 1237 ff.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For additional documentation on the attitude of the United States toward Israeli participation in Middle East defense, see pp. 1 ff.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram drafted by James M. Ludlow of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs and William L. Sands of the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs on January 22. Telegram cleared by NE, NEA, UNE, and UNA.

Compensation: Unless otherwise agreed by Israel Arabs in negots with PCC, PCC's role assessment and payment of compensation understood limited to effecting polit agreement, and essential preliminary arrangements therefor. UNRWA may or may not be agency for settlement compensation claims depending on agreement negotiated by PCC. Dept deems it quite possible UNRWA as result negots may be agency handling large portion compensation claims but largest claims undoubtedly will come from wealthy Arab refugees not dependent on UNRWA in position to obtain governmental support and legal assistance hence may be uninterested or oppose use UNRWA admin compensation settlement.

Repatriation: Polit negots responsibility PCC. Since repatriation best negotiating point vis-à-vis settlement compensation UNRWA shld avoid ref thereto during PCC negots.

Resettlement: While there will no doubt arise at some time in future polit problems in connection with resettlement which are the primary responsibility of PCC, Dept strongly of opinion since reintegration is current topic of negotiation between UNRWA and Arab states and is at a delicate stage with Syria, that new negotiating element injected into this framework at present wld be unfortunate and therefore believes PCC shld not press negots affecting resettlement with Arab states at this time. UNRWA shld keep PCC closely informed on progress of negots and US members shld in particular keep close contact on this phase of problem.

Re gen instrs, McGhee-Blandford ltr April 5, 1950 5 reaffirmed. Jan 2 suggestions to Palmer re desirability possibilities increasing areas Arab-Israeli agreement shld be pressed all appropriate occasions. This connection Dept suggests closer personal relations with Riley wld be helpful. Dept shld be kept advised all possibilities areas and means increasing Arab-Israeli agreement.

ACHESON

<sup>5</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference is to Resolution 194 (III) of December 11, 1948. Text is in U.N. Doc. A/810. For part of the text, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. v, pt. 2, p. 1661.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Resolution 394 (V) of December 14, 1950. For text, see U.N. Doc. A/1775. <sup>4</sup> Resolution 393 (V) of December 2, 1950, is ibid.

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468

Memorandum by the Ambassador-Designate to Israel (Davis)<sup>1</sup> to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] January 26, 1951.

Subject: Call on the President

The President expressed great interest in our relations with Israel, stating that we wished of course to be as helpful as possible. He referred to the Arab refugee problem as the "crux of the matter," saying that the question might tend to resolve itself if a program of aid to the countries where these refugees now find themselves could be worked out on a satisfactory basis. He added, however, that little progress seems to have been possible thus far in this direction.

He stated further that while we take a friendly interest in Israel we have to recognize that the aggressiveness of the Israelis occasionally needs to be restrained. He remarked at this juncture that our principal policy objective was of course to prevent any renewal of hostilities in the Near East, and that anything which I could do to keep the eastern end of the Mediterranean peaceful would be very welcome.

M[ONNETT] B. D[AVIS]

357.AC/1-2751: Telegram

The United States Representative on the Palestine Conciliation Commission (Palmer) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY B

Beirut, January 27, 1951—noon.

408. Palun 370. Joint PCC-UNRWA meeting 25 ended on note of cooperation and understanding. Prior to meeting with UNRWA, USDel had presented to PCC our views on future relations with UNRWA and respective concentration of efforts. PCC accepted readily US views in complete accordance Deptel 497, January 23. These views were communicated to UNRWA in joint meeting in remarks by French Turk and US representatives. While British and French members UNRWA advisory commission expressed concern over possible overlapping with UNRWA reintegration program, PCC statement of understanding its role under GA resolution 2 and intentions as outlined Deptel 497 met no opposition. It was agreed that PCC and UNRWA should communicate regularly and exchange full informa-

¹ President Truman formally appointed Mr. Davis Ambassador to Israel on February 1. He presented his credentials on February 26.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 562.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Presumably that cited in footnote 3, p. 563.

ISRAEL 565

tion on progress respective tasks. Second joint meeting, at which UNRWA will discuss with PCC details of reintegration program, is scheduled for first week following close Istanbul conference.<sup>3</sup>

PCC and UNRWA considered Israel conditional offer to UNRWA reintegration fund.<sup>4</sup> After joint meeting, PCC telegraphed to secretary negotiation committee as follows: "Dear Mr. White: Further to my letter of 10 January,<sup>5</sup> I would like to inform you that the conciliation commission has considered the conditional offer of the government of Israel to the relief and reintegration program for Palestine refugees, both at its meeting of 26 January and at joint meeting of the commission and UNRWA held on the same day.

The commission has asked me to thank the negotiation committee for having brought this matter to its attention. I would like to request the committee to urge upon the government of Israel the importance of making an offer without conditions as to compensation. The Commission believes that such an unconditional offer by Israel would be a demonstration of goodwill that would greatly accelerate the work of the conciliation commission in final settlement of the refugee problem and all other questions outstanding between Israel and Arab states." PCC informed UNRWA its intention forward above telegram and received copy UNRWA's communication to negotiation committee.

[Palmer]

&lt;sup>3</sup> For documentation on the Middle East Chiefs of Mission meeting held in Istanbul February 14-21, see pp. 49 ff.

*On December 13, 1950, the Government of Israel had indicated its readiness to contribute approximately $2,800,000 to a reintegration program for Palestine refugees if it were in return given assurance that the contribution would release it from all individual claims for compensation for abandoned Arab lands. (Information based on part of telegram 78 from Marseilles, January 15; 357.AC/1–1551) The offer had been made to a negotiating committee whose terms of reference are set forth in Resolution 393 (V) of the United Nations General Assembly.

*Not found in Department of State files.

*In telegram 93 to Jerusalem (Unpal 262), February 19, drafted by Mr. Ludlow of UNP and marked "For Palmer," the Department stated in part: "While Dept holds present Israeli compensation proposals to negotiating comite wholly unacceptable Dept believes area for negotiating relationship reintegration fund and Israeli obligation compensate does exist and shid be basis for prompt discussions by PCC with Israeli reps. Dept views as likely basis agreement procedure whereby individual Arab claims wid be cancelled as Israeli ear-marked funds were used to resettle individual, PRA being agency handling such procedure." The Department urged Mr. Palmer to persuade his PCC colleagues to negotiate with Israel "conditions linking compensation and resettlement which might induce Israeli contribution reintegration fund no less than equivalent 5 million dollars first installment." This telegram was cleared by NE, NEA, UNE, and UNA. (357.AC/2-1951) For background to this policy instruction, see Mr. Ludlow's memorandum of March 14 to John D. Hickerson, p. 592.

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] January 29, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Ambassador Eban.

The Ambassador of Israel is calling on you today, at 2:30 p. m., to review certain aspects of Israel's problems before your departure for Istanbul. He has requested one hour of your time for this purpose. The subjects he will discuss fall into three main categories: (1) Defense, (2) Supply, and (3) Peace.

1. Defense

Background: The Israelis have indicated to the Department and the Defense Department on a number of occasions that Israel wished to contribute as effectively as possible to the security of the Near East and that Israel was prepared to participate in possible US-UK defense plans for the area in return for certain considerations.

On December 18, Israel Minister Kollek informed Mr. Rockwell and General Burns that the Israel Government was convinced that the only hope for its salvation lay with the West and it was accordingly prepared to offer the West full cooperation in one form or another in plans for defense of the Near East. Mr. Kollek said that if the UK were considered to have primary responsibility for the defense of the Near East, Israel was perfectly willing to consult with that country in this regard. Although we have not informed the Israeli that the UK has this primary responsibility, it is understood very confidentially from the British Embassy here that the British Foreign Office has so informed the Israel Minister in London, Eliahu Elath. Sir Brian Robertson, Commander in Chief of British Middle East Forces, will visit Israel on February 19 to hold exploratory talks with the Israel Government on the possibilities of UN-Israel military cooperation.

On December 23, Israel Foreign Minister Sharett submitted to Secretary of Defense Marshall a comprehensive memorandum <sup>2</sup> of Israel's military requirements suggesting, among other things, that the US (a) should turn over 150,000 American rifles to the Israel Army for the Czech and other rifles Israel presently possesses, thereby standardizing Israel Army equipment with that of the US, and (b) the US should utilize Israel's excess production capacity in light arms and ammunition for the MDAP program.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by John A. Waldo of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs.
<sup>2</sup> Not found in Department of State files.

567

You may recall that Ambassador Eban first made the latter proposal to you on November 22. It is understood, however, that the Defense Department has decided against this Israel suggestion.

Recommendations: We are glad to note Israel's increasing tendency to cooperate with the West. The Department and the Defense Department will, of course, consider any proposals Israel has to make along these lines. The Israel Government must remember, however, that there are many prior demands on US military assistance these days.

We understand that Sir Brian Robertson is going out to the area shortly to talk with the Israel Government. As far as Israel's proposals to the Defense Department are concerned, we understand that they are under consideration at the present time.

2. Supply

Background: In December Israel Minister Sharett discussed with the Secretary, Mr. Averell Harriman, Secretary of Defense Marshall, and Secretary of Agriculture Brannan the possibility that the US might stockpile wheat and oil in Israel for use by the US in the Near East area in the event world hostilities should interrupt shipping to the Eastern Mediterranean. Meanwhile, Israel would be permitted to purchase the wheat or oil as required for internal consumption. It is understood that the Israel Government has now discarded this proposal as impracticable. Mr. Lavon, Israel Minister of Agriculture, presently in this country, has recently discussed with Mr. Brannan of Agriculture the possibility that the US might ship to Israel a twoyear supply of wheat to be held for the account of the US Government and to be purchased by Israel as required. According to the Embassy here, Israel could not pay for a two-year supply of wheat at the present time but would be able to do so on the installment plan. The Embassy reported that the Secretary of Agriculture "viewed the suggestion with favor." It is believed, however, that the Commodity Credit Corporation might be unwilling to approve a deal of this sort, since it would open the door to similar requests from a great number of other countries.

Recommendation: If the Ambassador should raise this matter, it is recommended that you inform him that the Department is aware of and sympathetic to Israel's supply problems. The Department is glad to consider any proposal which the Israelis may make in this regard and discuss it with other interested Government agencies.

3. Peace

Recommendations: When the Ambassador broaches this subject you might bear the following points in mind in replying to him:

(a) The PCC has had preliminary discussions in Beirut and will shortly take up its residence in Jerusalem where it will be urgently concerned with the question of compensation in addition to that of facilitating a peace settlement. We hope that the Israelis will cooperate fully with the PCC. We feel that the PCC is the UN organization primarily concerned with achieving a peace settlement in the Near East and can usefully continue its work in this regard. Even though no substantial progress has yet been made, the organization represents the continuing interest of the UN in exploring all possible means of reaching such a settlement.

- (b) We are glad to see that as a result of the Security Council Resolution of November 17, 1950 3 the Mixed Armistice Commissions are actively dealing with a variety of problems, some of them political. We hope it will be possible for the Commissions to assist in bringing about expanded areas of agreement between Israel and the Arab states. In that connection, we note with interest that the international boundary has finally been demarcated between Israel and Lebanon, that Egypt and Israel are in the process of discussing Egyptian restrictions on the Suez Canal and that Jordan and Israel have agreed to make every effort to carry out all the provisions of the Jordan-Israel Armistice Agreement. We hope in this regard that Israel will not adopt a too intransigent attitude toward the Arab states. The Commissions are almost the only direct official contact between Israel and the neighboring Arab states and they are valuable to both sides in that regard. We believe, however, that such incidents as the occupation by Israel of the Jisr Majami area and the somewhat aggressive and stubborn attitude of Israel on the issue of the road block between Beersheba and Elath are detrimental to the improvement of Israel-Arab relations. It would appear that Israel is unwilling to make concessions to the Arabs even on matters of no great importance to the Israelis and on which the Arabs may have at least a moral argument in their favor. We believe Israel should reconsider its attitude in this regard.
- (c) The Department welcomes Israel's proposed contribution to the reintegration fund of the UNRWA. We hope, however, that Israel will see fit to make this contribution without insisting on any conditions or identifying it as a charge against compensation. While in the end this might turn out to be the case, it is believed that no such conditions should be made initially until the subcommittee of the PCC has had an opportunity to investigate the entire compensation situation.
- (d) Jerusalem: If the Ambassador raises this question, you might inform him that we are opposed to moving our Embassy to Jerusalem until the GA has had another opportunity to consider the question. We believe that the December 9, 1949 resolution, while impracticable, still remains on the books. We are not unaware of the practical difficulties of the present situation but hope that Israel will not be precipitate in changing the location of the Foreign Office.

&lt;sup>3</sup> For text, see U.N. Doc. S/1907.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Reference is to Resolution 303 (IV) of the United Nations General Assembly. <sup>5</sup> No memorandum has been found in Department of State files of Mr. McGhee's conversation with Mr. Eban held January 29. A telegraphic summary is infra.

974.731/1-2451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, January 31, 1951—1 p.m.

306. Israel Amb Eban Jan 29 had hour-long talk with McGhee. Kollek and Keren also present. Eban reviewed Israel situation re defense, supplies, and peace. Israel position these matters already known to you.

In addition Eban discussed Egypt "blockade" Suez Canal and expressed hope Dept wld support Israel view that Egypt-Israel MAC competent handle Israel complaint against Suez Canal restrictions. McGhee replied we agreed Israel view and informally would so advise UN secretariat. (urtel 429 Jan 24).<sup>2</sup>

McGhee then referred question Israel seizure Nov 23, 1950, of $6,500 worth US aircraft parts destined Syria and pointed out seeming inconsistency Israel position re "blockade" and fact of seizure aircraft parts. Israelis appeared embarrassed and promised tel immed FonOff recommending release aircraft parts to Syria.

Emb may wish inform Bendor Dept's position re "blockade" and take similar position re aircraft parts.<sup>3</sup>

ACHESON

<sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Waldo. Repeated telegraphically to Cairo, Damascus, and Jerusalem, and by air pouch to London.

<sup>2</sup> Not printed. In telegram 1101 from New York, February 1, the U.S. Mission to the United Nations in part indicated that the British Delegation to the United Nations was also preparing to inform the United Nations Secretariat of its view that the Egypt-Israel MAC was competent to handle this question. (974.5301/2-151)

<sup>3</sup> Documents in file 483.118 for 1951 indicate that at least partly as a result of American representations the Israeli authorities by April 15 released the parts in question for shipment back to the United States after having refused to allow their shipment to a nearby non-Arab port (for transshipment to Beirut).

357 AC/2-551: Telegram

The Chargé in Israel (Ford) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Tel Aviv, February 5, 1951—6 p. m.

452. I visited Riley in Jerusalem February 4 to ascertain condition his health and took occasion discuss Suez issue which he says continues plague him because of "conflicting opinions being expressed from all sides." He referred to Deptels 306 and 310 to Tel Aviv¹ (83 and 84 to Jerusalem) and declared vehemently that however much he and others might wish for MAC to be found competent to handle Canal restrictions issue, he still believed armistice terms sufficiently obscure and possibly even inapplicable to warrant careful consideration by UN legal authorities and even refer entire question to SC or other high-level if necessary. Riley made point that Egyptians are insistent on MAC noncompetence and that as neutral arbiter he cannot appear be taking sides unless he is securely supported by concrete legal phrase-ology which he believes is lacking in only terms reference available to him namely Israel-Egypt armistice agreement.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Neither printed.

Comment: Embassy believes Riley's position vis-à-vis Egyptians well taken. This is not so much quibble over words as careful concession to Egyptian sensibilities in interests NE peace generally and Riley's meticulously maintained balance in particular. End comment.

New subject: Riley's health not good and while he not in pain, he is bed-ridden and his doctor insists he must have operation for removal kidneystone within few days. Riley was yesterday undecided whether fly to US for operation or remain here.

FORD

611.84A/2-651

Department of State Policy Statement 1

SECRET

[Washington,] February 6, 1951.

ISRAEL

A. OBJECTIVES

United States policies regarding Israel derive from the following objectives:

1. The achievement and maintenance of peace, general stability and economic progress of the Near East as factors essential to world peace;

2. Acquisition for the United States in particular and the West in general of the friendship and support of people and governments of the area.

B. POLICIES

US objectives toward Israel must be considered in terms of objectives toward the Near East as a whole, because: 1) under present circumstances, the strategic nature of the area as a whole determines to a large extent the policies toward its component parts; and 2) primarily as a result of the Palestine problem, actions taken with regard to Israel are likely to have strong repercussions throughout the area.

Within Israel itself the United States is confronted with two major policy problems: first, Israel's economic viability and hence its political stability; and second, Israel's support of the West as against the Soviet bloc.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Department of State Policy Statements were summaries of policy toward a country or region. They were prepared in the responsible geographic offices of the Department. The Policy Statements, which were intended to provide information and guidance for officers in missions abroad, were referred to appropriate diplomatic missions for comment and criticism. The statements were revised periodically.

ISRAEL 571

The combined circumstances of large-scale immigration and the Arab economic blockade have produced serious economic conditions within Israel. To date the political stability of Israel has not been threatened to any significant degree, but economic pressures are growing inexorably. It is in our interest that Israel's stability be maintained and consequently US policies must be directed to this end. The most obvious means to meet the economic problem in Israel is the extension of financial assistance to Israel by means of loans and other assistance within the framework of economic assistance to the area as a whole. Point IV funds are available and the Israelis should be encouraged to make use of them.2

The United States must support United Nations efforts to persuade Israel and the Arab states to settle their differences, since this would obviate the economic blockade. Consideration should be given to fostering limited agreements of a commercial nature between Israel and the Arab states, although the prospects of such agreement being concluded in the immediate future are not bright.

Meanwhile the economic blockade of Israel prevents that country from obtaining from the neighboring states relatively plentiful and inexpensive supplies of oil and foodstuffs. Oil is essential to Israel's growing economy. If the Iraqi Government would permit oil to flow to Haifa through the Iraq Petroleum Company pipeline or the Egyptian Government would allow goods destined for Israel to move freely through the Suez Canal, significant progress would be made toward alleviating Israel's most serious shortages and improving its precarious economic position. The Egyptian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission is presently considering an Israel complaint against Egypt's "blockade" of the Suez Canal. We believe the Mixed Armistice Commission is competent to deal with this Israel complaint and hope that the Mixed Armistice Commission will be able to persuade the Egyptians to cease their restrictive practices against trade through the Canal.

With respect to immigration, it has been and should continue to be the Department's policy to counsel Israel that the inflow of population should be coordinated with the economic capacity of the state. Consideration should be given to the extent which the United States by loans or other economic assistance is prepared to underwrite the Israel Government's policy of encouraging continuing large-scale immigration into Israel when the absorptive capacity of the country is approaching exhaustion.

There are indications that Israel is departing from its previous policy of strict neutrality and committing itself more openly to sup-

The Department's press release issued on the date of signature is printed in Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, p. 500.

For text of the General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which was signed at Tel Aviv, February 26, 1951, and which entered into force that same day, see 3 UST (pt. 1) 379.

port of the West. Statements by government officials, the Prime Minister in particular, and confidential offers of support made to this country, point in this direction. Another indication is the recent withdrawal of Histadruth, Israel's all-encompassing labor union, from the WFTU. This trend should be encouraged, but care should be taken that the United States is not unduly committed in return to the economic, military or political support of Israel. It would be desirable that Histadruth join the ICFTU, but there should be no overt pressure to this end which might embarrass the pro-West elements in Israel with respect to their opposition.

The presence of five million American Jews in the United States, the majority of whom in varying degrees favor active US economic and political support of Israel, is a factor in our relations with Israel and the Arab states. Political pressure which organized Jewish groups are able to bring to bear upon the United States Government, while not necessarily productive of significant modifications of US policy, nonetheless convinces the Arab states that the United States is primarily interested in Israel's problems to the disadvantage of the Arabs. Unguarded public statements by prominent Americans made at the behest of these groups are cited by the Arabs as evidence of the correctness of their charges. We should attempt to discourage public comparisons between Israel and the Arab states prejudicial to the latter and at the same time work to achieve a balance between statements concerning Israel and statements concerning the Arab states. As the occasion arises, we should demonstrate to the American public, Israel and the Arab states that the policy of the United States Government is one of equal friendship and impartiality as between Israel and the Arab states.

A further US objective with respect to Israel is winning an increasing measure of firm popular support for the American point of view over the significant minority of Israelis who are pro-Soviet in their outlook. Strong left-wing socialist beliefs brought with them from Europe incline this minority toward Soviet propaganda and techniques. USIE by expanding its activities can make available more information about this country to all sections of the Israel population. A special USIE target should be the socialist communal settlements. Personal visits of Americans, both official and unofficial, to these settlements and elsewhere throughout the country should help the informational program.

As measures for the economic improvement of Israel and for encouraging its alignment with the West, Israel should be urged to consider adhering to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 3 and joining the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. A treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation will shortly be signed between Israel and the United States which should facilitate the investment of private US capital in Israel and generally stimulate trade between the two countries.<sup>4</sup>

&lt;sup>3</sup> Concluded at Geneva October 30, 1947. For text, see 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

Fundamental to the achievement of US objectives in Israel is the resolution of the many problems arising from the recent hostilities in Palestine. Although the hostilities themselves were brought to an end during the first half of 1949, with the signing of armistice agreements between Israel and the four neighboring Arab states, the following major problems remain:

1) 800,000 Arab refugees from Palestine still live under intolerable conditions in nearby Arab countries or in parts of Palestine remaining under Arab control. Israel has been willing to permit the return of only very few of these refugees to their homes, and is, in reality, in no position to permit any large degree of repatriation. Israel has only recently given indications of being willing to consider payment of compensation outside the framework of negotiations with the Arab states looking toward a general settlement of all outstanding questions.

2) The Arab governments maintain an economic and political blockade of Israel which not only is having serious effects upon the economy of that country but also prevents the progressive improvement of Arab-Israel relations which more normal intercourse would tend to bring about.

3) Unsettled border conditions lead to frequent incidents which are a continuous cause of ill-feeling and which could develop into more extended conflict.

4) The question of establishing an international authority in the Jerusalem area to provide protection for and free access to the Holy Places is a problem which has been of continuing concern to the United Nations and to the United States as a member of the United Nations. The principal difficulty lies in creating an international regime which will be acceptable to Israel and Jordan by not interfering appreciably in their alleged sovereignty over their respective sections of the City, and which at the same time will satisfy a majority of the international community.

Of these problems, the most serious is that of the refugees. The existence of this large body of homeless and jobless people is not only a continuing cause of Arab bitterness toward Israel and a drain on the local economies, but is a source of unrest and an invitation to Communist infiltration. The United Nations is providing direct relief for the refugees, but the reintegration of these people into the Near East economy has been prevented by Israel's refusal, based on its inability, to permit their return to their former homes and by its refusal until recently to consider the payment of compensation to the refugees outside the context of an over-all peace settlement and the reluctance of all Arab governments, excepting Jordan, to agree to their resettlement elsewhere. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency, set up by the General Assembly in 1949 to administer relief and to undertake development projects for the employment of the refugees, has concluded that the only hope of reintegration for any substantial number of these people lies in resettlement in the Arab countries. The recommendation that the United Nations establish a fund to be used for this purpose and for whatever repatriation proves to be practicable was approved by the General Assembly on December 2, 1950. We should continue to support this approach by contributing to the fund, by emphasizing to the Arab states that resettlement is the only realistic solution and by urging Israel to accept some repatriation, and to compensate, in one way or another and without waiting for a general settlement, those Arabs who do not choose to return to their homes.

For the Department's press statement released the date of signature, see Department of State Bulletin, September 3, 1951, p. 382.

&lt;sup>4</sup>File 611.84A4 for 1951 contains documentation on the negotiations for the Treaty of Friendship. Commerce, and Navigation between the two countries, which was signed in Washington, August 23, and which entered into force April 3, 1954. For text, see 5 UST (pt. 1) 550.

With regard to this and other problems related to the Palestine dispute, the United Nations has attempted to bring the parties into negotiations looking toward a general settlement. Neither side, however, has evidenced a willingness to make the compromises necessary to achieve such a comprehensive agreement. Therefore, while the United States should collaborate in United Nations efforts to urge this course upon Israel and the Arab states, emphasis should be given in our direct relations with these countries and in the United Nations to the gradual extension of areas of cooperation on specific problems as they arise and to the general easing of tensions in the Near East. To this end, every effort should be made to strengthen the machinery which has been established for the purpose of settling disputes of a local character. Of particular importance are the Mixed Armistice Commissions and the Special Committees, established by the Armistice Agreements.

Another aspect of this problem of tension and distrust has been that of the shipment of arms to the countries in the Near East. It was recognized at the time the Security Council lifted the embargo on such arms shipments, on August 11, 1949, that conditions existed which might bring about an arms race in the area, and the representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and France stated the opposition of their governments to competition of this sort. This country subsequently decided to permit the export of reasonable amounts of military material to Israel and the Arab states, with the condition that these shipments should be limited to such equipment as we might consider necessary for the maintenance of internal security and for legitimate defense.

Early in 1950, it was determined that further and more positive measures should be taken to reduce tensions in the Near East. As a result, on May 25, 1950, the governments of the United States, the

&lt;sup>5</sup> Reference is to a provision of Resolution 393 (V).

israel 575

United Kingdom, and France issued a tripartite declaration <sup>6</sup> wherein they redefined their arms policy, and gave certain guarantees and assurances regarding the security of the area. The three governments stated that applications for arms or war material for any of the Arab states or Israel would be considered in the light of the recognized need of these countries to maintain a certain level of armed forces for the purpose of assuring their internal security and their legitimate self-defense and to permit them to play their part in the defense of the area as a whole. In particular they declared that should they find that any of these states was preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines they would, consistent with their obligations as members of the United Nations, immediately take action, both within and outside the United Nations, to prevent such violations. This declaration appears to have done much to stabilize the situation.

Unless a major revision of the general policy set forth in this declaration should be indicated by military considerations, the policy should be continued in an effort to increase the feeling of security and confidence in the future on the part of the states recently party to the Palestine hostilities. Further consideration might well be given to circumstances in which the tripartite declaration should be invoked and to the means of carrying out the guarantees contained therein.

Another problem which has resulted from the establishment of the State of Israel, but which has been dealt with separately, is that of Jerusalem. In recognition of the unique religious character of the city, the United Nations has attempted to provide an international regime for Jerusalem as a corpus separatum, but it has been unsuccessful, due largely to the unwillingness of either Jordan or Israel, the states presently controlling the city, to accept such a plan. In view of the evident impracticability of complete internationalization, the United States has and should continue to support the establishment of a less comprehensive arrangement for an international regime which would still provide for the protection of the legitimate rights of the world community in Jerusalem. While the United States would support any arrangement in Jerusalem which was agreed to by Israel and Jordan and a majority of the international community, it is assumed that such an arrangement would generally conform to one which the United States would consider desirable for the area.

A special policy problem has developed as a result of the United Nations concern with Jerusalem. The Israel Government has proclaimed Jerusalem to be the capital of Israel, an act which, while not specifically prohibited by the United Nations, is in clear violation of the spirit of the special status recommended for the city by the General Assembly. The Department advised the Israel Government against moving its capital to Jerusalem, but without effect. There is thus created the problem of whether the establishment of the capital in this city should be recognized by moving the United States Embassy, which has remained in Tel Aviv, to Jerusalem. Since the UN General Assembly has reach no definite decision on Jerusalem, consideration should be given to moving the Embassy to Jerusalem after consultation with other appropriate nations.

&lt;sup>6</sup> For text of the Tripartite Declaration regarding security in the Middle East, issued May 25, 1950 by the Governments of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States, see Department of State Bulletin, June 5, 1950, p. 886. For documentation regarding its formulation, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. III, pp. 975–990 and 1027–1031; and ibid., vol. v, pp. 131–168.

A difficult factor in the Palestine dispute is that the Arab states regard anything favorable to Israel as being unfavorable to themselves. The Department is endeavoring to convince the Arabs of US impartiality as between them and Israel, and care should be taken in dealing with Israel to avoid giving an impression of favoritism which would be resented by the Arabs. It is, of course, equally important for Israel to realize that the United States intends to treat it with neither more nor less favor than it does the Arabs.

Relations with States other than the Arab Countries:

USSR—Until recently, Israel's policy regarding the USSR on the one hand and the United States on the other has been one of strict neutrality. The Israeli Government's natural sympathies lay in general with the West, but the presence of more than two million prospective Jewish immigrants in the USSR and its satellites, together with well organized pro-Soviet elements in Israel, made neutrality seem the wisest policy. Continued refusal by the Soviet Union to permit Jewish emigration has weakened enthusiasm for the Eastern bloc, however, and while Israel-Russian diplomatic relations are correct, Israel leaders have not hesitated to attack Communism violently on occasion or to indicate general sympathy with Western policies in such instances as the Korean war.

Great Britain—During the past year British relations with Israel have greatly improved, due largely to a substantial change in British policy toward Israel. As a result, Great Britain is in a position to exert its influence usefully upon Israel and has done so on a number of occasions.

Middle Eastern States—Israel has been at considerable pains to develop its relations with the non-Arab states of the Middle East, and has been recognized by Turkey, Greece, Iran and India. Only with Turkey does it enjoy full diplomatic relations, however, although Greece and India are believed to be favorably disposed on this question. Iran, on the other hand, recognized Israel primarily because of the presence of Iranian refugees in the latter country, and is not generally on friendly terms with it.

If Israel is successful in developing its relations with these and other non-Arab states in the area, the economic and political results could be important, though it is doubtful whether such relations could substitute for normal intercourse with Israel's immediate neighbors.

Policy Evaluation:

US policy toward the Palestine dispute has been one, primarily, of urging the parties, through the United Nations, to negotiate in order to reach an agreed solution of all the issues which exist between them. That this policy has been almost completely unsuccessful is due to: 1) the profundity of Arab-Israel disagreement; 2) Israel has so far refused to make any substantial concessions to the Arabs; and 3) the Arab states neither desired nor found it politically expedient to negotiate without at least a promise of such concessions. The United States should take appropriate opportunities to point out to Israel and the Arab states that our policy is one of equal friendship and impartiality toward all of the states in the area; that it is our view that Israel exists and will continue to exist, and that the Arab states should recognize this fact in order that more normal conditions may return to the Near East.

The present emphasis upon gradual improvement of working relations between the countries, coupled with high level negotiations on separate aspects of the Palestine problem, is probably a fruitful one, but certain elements of danger exist as well. As an example, increasing numbers of incidents along the armistice lines and frontiers have brought about a deterioration in Israel-Arab relations recently, particularly between Israel and Jordan. It is thus proposed that the mechanism set up for the handling of such local disputes be strengthened so that the period of armistice may be one of increasing cooperation and trust looking toward the time when all major problems can be resolved. Further consideration must be given to means of providing this mechanism with increased strength and prestige.

A more successful aspect of US policy with respect to Palestine has been that regarding arms and security. A serious arms race has apparently been averted, and fears on the part of Israelis and Arabs that the other side was planning large-scale aggression have greatly diminished over the past few months. Further problems may arise, however, if the decision is made to increase supplies of arms to the Near East for purposes of area defense, and great care should be exercised to insure that instability is not increased by such an operation.

On the economic side, continuing consideration should be given to measures looking to the maintenance of economic stability in Israel and the other states of the Near East.

786.00/2-2751: Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

[Extracts]

SECRET

CAIRO, February 7, 1951.2

No. 1875

Subject: Meetings of the Arab League Political Committee and Council January 20 through February 3, 1951

XVI. Thirteenth and Final Meeting of the Political Committee February 3, 1951

The final meeting of the Arab League Political Committee was held for the purpose of finishing in quick succession the remaining matters still on the original agenda.

A. Decisions Reached (Reference Embtel 836 February 4)3

2. Palestine Refugees. The Committee finally decided that the League Secretariat should prepare a note which would be studied and approved by the member states and would then be sent to the PCC, the UNRWA, and all of the member states thereof. The stated purpose of this note was to place the Arab States on record once again as to their insistence on the rights of the Palestine refugees to be returned to their original homes or to receive adequate compensation if they elected not to return. In addition, however, the real emphasis was to be put on the need for interim programs prior to the implementation of the refugees "rights" and the fact that funds presently available are grossly inadequate to the task at hand.

It is apparent from a number of conversations which representatives of the Embassy have had with Foreign Office, League Officials and others that many hope that the note when completed will be received and interpreted as meaning a good deal more than it actually said. They are, of course, certain in their own minds that the refugees are not ever going to get back and that resettlement work must be started in the countries in which they are now located. Politically they do not dare to admit such a possibility and the very word "resettlement" would be ruinous to their careers. These officials feel that the answer is largely financial and that if adequate sums can be raised a major step will have been taken toward the eventual solution of the problem.

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

Despatch drafted by Joseph S. Sparks, First Secretary of Embassy.

&lt;sup>2</sup> This despatch was not mailed until March 23. It was received in the Department April 2.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed. (786.00/2-451)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Notes similar in substance were prepared by some of the member states; see p. 639.

784A.13/2-751: Telegram

The Chargé in Israel (Ford) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

* Not printed.

Tel Aviv, February 7, 1951—1 p. m.

466. Re Deptel 312, February 1.¹ At roundtable discussion February 6 my home with UK, French, Turk and Australian Ministers,² consensus on Jerusalem was substantially that indicated first paragraph reference telegram to effect each mission favors confining official contact with Israeli Government in Jerusalem to strictly ad hoc basis limiting all such contacts to business of urgent or special technical nature. It was agreed that no statement, formal or otherwise, would be volunteered to Israeli Government in above sense. (Previous informal talks on separate occasion with Ministers Belgium, Italy, Yugoslavia and Swiss Consul General had ³ revealed agreement in principle with foregoing).

In this connection, British Minister said arrangements already made official visit Prime Minister his office Jerusalem and attendance Prime Minister's official dinner Jerusalem by himself and Sir Brian Robertson during latter's forthcoming visit Israel.

Re second and third paragraphs reference telegram Sharett told me during luncheon discussion February 3 that as long as he was Foreign Minister he would neither ask nor expect hundred or more families comprising his Ministry to move to Jerusalem until adequate housing was ready for them. Thus while reiterating that move to Jerusalem had ceased be matter principle and was solely matter physical convenience, (Embdes 398, February 1)<sup>4</sup> he said that since virtually no housing was ready at present and since it would take at least one year prepare such housing, figure of 12 months could be taken as basis for calculations on how soon foreign diplomatic corps might expect be asked set up shop in Jerusalem.

Embassy's opinion is that in normal course events Israeli Foreign Office and hence Diplomatic Corps will not leave Tel Aviv for at least another year to 18 months. Meanwhile, Embassy accepts and will be guided by Department's decision permit occasional official contact government officials Jerusalem at discretion chief of Mission and without prejudice any subsequent UN action on issue.

FORD

&lt;sup>1</sup>This telegram, drafted by Mr. Waldo of NE and cleared also by UNP, reads in part: "Re Jerusalem Dept opposed moving Emb Tel Aviv Jerusalem until GA has considered question at next session. Dept prepared authorize Emb reps go Jerusalem as necessary carry on official business with Israel Govt officials." (784A.5/1-2351)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Sir Knox Helm, Edouard-Felix Guyon, Seyfullah Esin, and O. C. W. Fuhrman, respectively.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Jean E. S. Dubois, Raimondo Giustiniani, Nokola Milicevic, and Dr. Paul Ritter, respectively.

784A.5/2-1451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, February 14, 1951—3 p. m.

340. Re Embtel 466, Feb. 7.2 Emb Tel Aviv and ConGen Jerusalem shld be guided by fol:

1. US does not recognize sovereignty of Israel or Jordan in Jerusalem. UN is still seized of Jerusalem problem, and US attitude toward status of City will continue to be framed in light UN situation.

2. US continues support principle internationalization Jerusalem along lines modified internatl regime since full internationalization impracticable.

3. Without prejudice final UN decision on status Jerusalem, Amb and Emb personnel auth proceed Jerusalem as necessary carry on official business with Israel Govt officials.

4. In discretion Amb, personnel Emb may visit Jerusalem for unofficial purposes often as desired.

5. Officers ConGen Jerusalem may deal with Israel Ministries in Jerusalem on dipl business as well as routine Consular affairs, but shld be guided in this by wishes of Amb.

Inform friendly colleagues foregoing position.3

ACHESON

780.00/2-1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Deputy Director for International Security Affairs (Ohly)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] February 15, 1951.

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban—Ambassador of Israel

Dr. Moshe Keren, Counselor of Embassy

Mr. John H. Ohly—S/ISA

I met with the above named individuals at their request, and the Ambassador stated that the purpose of his call was to acquaint me, as he was endeavoring to acquaint the officials of all agencies of the U.S. government, concerning Israel's belief as to the importance which the

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Mr. Waldo and cleared in NE, L/NEA, and UNP. Repeated for action to Jerusalem and for information to Amman, Haifa, and London.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In telegram 200 from Jerusalem, April 23, the Consulate General in Jerusalem raised the question of whether the Embassy in Tel Aviv had administrative jurisdiction over the Consulate General such as would enable Ambassador Davis on his own initiative to transfer personnel between it and the Embassy. (784A.5/4-2351)

The Department in te'egram 114 to Jerusalem, April 26, answered this question in the affirmative and added: "Does not conflict Deptel 91 Feb 14, setting forth polit relation Israel, Jordan, Jerusalem. Until status Jerusalem resolved, no administrative jurisdiction Amman over any part of Jerusalem being authorized at this time." (784A.5/4-2351) great powers should attach to the Near East and, more particularly, to the potentialities of Israel as a factor in the security situation in that area. History has indicated that this part of the world was almost always involved in any great war, and he was sure that the same would be true in the future. He hoped, therefore, that the United States would attach a higher priority to its security than was apparently presently the case, at least so far as one could tell from the relative emphasis on other parts of the world in statements of American officials and in the public press.

Assuming the correctness of the foregoing hypothesis concerning the essentiality of the Middle East, he said he wished to stress certain factors about Israel which in his opinion indicated that Israel might contribute importantly to international security. He then went through in some detail the various points which were made in the memorandum submitted by Israeli Foreign Minister Sharett to the Secretary of Defense on December 23, 1950. In particular he emphasized the following:

(1) that during the war with the Arab States in 1948, Israel had mobilized 90,000 men out of a total population of 650,000, a degree of mobilization that he did not believe had ever been equalled elsewhere. Since the population had increased to 1,250,000 and would further increase within 3 years to around 2,000,000, it would thus be possible for Israel if necessary to mobilize some 200,000 men. These men would be well prepared, since although the standing army was small, the country had a system of compulsory military service running from 18 months to 2 years.

(2) Israel had industrial potential of two types which should be valuable in the efforts of the free world to build up large stocks of military equipment. In the first place there were facilities engaged in or capable of production of various types of light military equipment up to 6-inch mortars. These facilities had a capacity far in excess of requirements of the Israeli forces and this excess could be made available for MDAP purposes. In the second place, there were certain facilities presently engaged in civilian production which were capable of conversion to military purposes. For example, a factory now manufacturing milk cans could be readily converted for purposes of manufacturing shell cases.

(3) Israel had various services such as ports, installations and airfields which if improved could be of considerable assistance in the event of a conflict which affected the Middle East.

The value of the foregoing manpower, industrial potential and services was dependent in some degree upon outside help. In his opinion, the strengthening of Israel in these respects by a small amount of outside assistance would be of considerable importance in terms of increasing the ability of Israel not only to defend her own territory but in terms of her ability to participate in defense of the Near East as a whole. While feeling that the possibilities of cooperation among the states in the form of a collective security arrangement of any kind were nonexistent at the moment, this did not appear to be a reason for holding back in strengthening those portions of the area which had the vigor, manpower, facilities and will to make a contribution to Middle Eastern defense. In response to a question as to what other portions of the Middle East might in his judgment fall in the same category as Israel, he stated, after some hesitation, that apart from Turkey and Iran he would include Jordan, since British interest in Jordan gave a base of strength on which to build, as was not present in other Arab countries.

The Ambassador then alluded to General Robertson's projected trip to Israel. He said he understood that there must be an allocation of responsibility as among the great powers for the defense of particular areas of the world. It was his opinion, however, that if a decision had been reached that the British should have the responsibility in the Middle East, that this was not wholly realistic because the British could not undertake the task alone. It would be preferable to have a joint Anglo-American scheme for the defense of the area. Psychologically also, because of the past problems of Britain with the Israeli, it would be easier for the latter to cooperate in a defense scheme if the United States was also associated, although he did not wish to give too much emphasis to this point, since the bitterness of several years ago toward the British had to a large extent disappeared. From another psychological standpoint however, United States association would be of considerable importance because, as he put it, a country which feels that it is holding the hand of a giant has a much greater will to resist aggression and to take steps in preparation therefor.

The Ambassador then turned to the general supply situation of his country. This he said was affected by two factors. In the first place, the land isolation of Israel due to the attitude of the bordering Arab States made the country almost wholly dependent for essential materials on continued operation of the sea lanes. In the second place, the vast immigration that had been taking place and would continue to take place for the next few years had made it impossible to build up stocks of material or to increase indigenous agricultural and industrial production at the same rate as the population growth. The country had no substantial stockpiles of crucial materials and would be in a desperate situation if some aggravation in the international situation should cut off its commerce. In the latter event, the effects would be felt in certain segments of the country in a very few weeks and before long serious paralysis of the country's life would commence. In addition, the same results would flow in a less aggravated form whenever the sources upon which Israel depended cease to be open and free. Thus the establishment of control and priority systems by the United States and other countries in connection with the current defense effort was already affecting Israel's ability to obtain several crucial items. In this latter connection he cited the importance of sulphur to the Israeli fertilizer industry and the fact that they were now having difficulty in obtaining the amounts of sulphur required. His government was therefore seeking ways and means for stockpiling a year's supply of certain critical materials such as food (wheat and cattle feed grains), fuel oil, cotton (for its textile industry), etc. In addition his government was seeking some form of assistance in obtaining the priorities and allocations necessary to obtain those particular controlled commodities which were necessary for the life of his country's economy.

&lt;sup>1</sup> General Robertson arrived in Israel February 19.

Summing up his presentation, he argued that the potentially major asset which Israel presented could be realized by a relatively minor effort and that it was thoroughly in the interest of the United States to make a real effort to help Israel help itself.

I reverted to his statements concerning the industrial potential of Israel for arms manufacture and stated that our attachés in Israel who had been asked to learn more about this capacity had some difficulty in obtaining requested information. They could not, without invitation from the proper Israeli officials, visit and inspect the plants which the Israeli government had stated might be available. The Ambassador replied that he felt that Colonel Hertzog, the Military Attaché here, and who is now in Israel in connection with General Robertson's visit, will have some information on this matter when he returns. The Ambassador went on to say that Colonel Hertzog was also bringing back with him an up-to-date list of the specific requirements of the Israeli forces.

In response to a question, the Ambassador said that there was no longer the same degree of danger or the same degree of fear of danger as a year ago that hostilities would be resumed by the Arab States. He stated, moreover, that the flow of arms to these States from other countries had appreciably lessened and that these Arab countries were now receiving virtually no heavy equipment. He felt that the political attitude of the West, coupled with the disunity among the Arab States themselves were the factors which prevented further hostilities, but emphasized that any grave international situation or the outbreak of war would recreate a local danger as opportunists sought to capitalize on the situation.

In the course of the conversation he made several other significant remarks. In the first place he stated that his government had been able to obtain substantial amounts of light equipment but it had been unable to obtain heavy equipment such as artillery, anti-aircraft weapons, jets, tanks or recoilless rifles. In the second place, speaking about the British in Egypt, he expressed the view that it would not be possible at any time over the next few years for the British to work out satisfactory arrangements for the maintenance of military facilities and military forces in Egypt. He considered it remarkable that the British had succeeded in working out the present modus vivendi.

884A.00 TA/2-2451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chief of the Investment and Economic Development Staff (Malenbaum)

RESTRICTED

[Washington,] February 24, 1951.1

Subject: Foreign Assistance for Israel.

Participants: Mr. Hyman—Embassy of Israel Wilfred Malenbaum—ED

In the course of a chance meeting with Mr. Hyman on Saturday evening, I was given the following information on Israeli activities re foreign assistance:

1. Grant aid for $150 million in fiscal 1952.

Apparently this will be initiated by the Congress rather than in the Executive Branch. It will be introduced in the Senate by Senators Taft and Douglas.2 I was told that Senator Taft was the main supporter of the program and welcomed the idea of bipartisan action, indicating only that his Democratic co-sponsor should be an adequately senior Senator. Taft seemed satisfied with the Douglas alignment. I was told that organized efforts are being made by people in appropriate states to enlist Congressional support. It is anticipated that a significant amount of the money is to be used for food imports, that offshore purchases will be necessary, and that explicit mention will be made of the use of these grant funds "to permit Israel to make its proper contribution to the Arab Refugee Resettlement Program".

While I was given no specific time indication, I gathered that this matter was being pushed aggressively. There was no desire on Mr. Hyman's part that his remarks be kept confidential.

2. The Prospective Bond Issue.

Mr. Hyman remarked that he had just come from a meeting called by Ambassador Eban of some 200 leading Jewish businessmen. He indicated that these men were optimistic about the prospects for selling the bonds and that 3 of the businessmen had pledged personal takings of at least one-half million dollars each. I was told that the selling program will begin about May 1, after the hump on the appeal drive. No effort would be made to soft-peddle the oncoming request for bond sales but there was confidence that the issue would not appreciably affect the level of contributions to the appeal.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion is expected to visit this country early in May to spark the opening of the bond drive. I gathered this information was not public.

<sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted February 26.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Senator Douglas introduced the bill to this end, S. 1247, in the Senate on April 2 on behalf of himself, Mr. Taft, and 34 other Senators.

674.84A/3-151

Memorandum by the Special Adviser on Geography (Boggs)<sup>1</sup> to the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Jones)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] March 1, 1951.

Subject: Access to the Ports in the Gulf of Aqaba

This memorandum is in fulfillment of an assurance given at a conference on problems relating to the Gulf of Aqaba held February 21, 1951, in Room 3022 NS. The meeting was attended by Mr. Robert Thayer (NE), Mr. S. N. Crowe (L/NEA), Mr. Victor Wallace (L/E), and Mr. S. W. Boggs and Mrs. Saucerman (OIR/GE). Mr. Wells Stabler (NE) has discussed the matter by telephone with this office.

The Problem of the Gulf of Aqaba

The Gulf of Aqaba lies at the north end of the Red Sea, and is bordered by Egypt (Sinai peninsula), Israel, Jordan and Saudi Arabia. It is nearly 100 nautical miles long in a NNE-SSW direction, with widths of seven to 14 nautical miles toward the middle and lower parts of the gulf. Its relatively steep shores owe their characteristics to its rift valley structure, as the Gulf of Aqaba lies in the extensive fault system that produced the great rift valley to the south through the Red Sea and east Africa, including Lake Tanganyika, and its continuation to the north through the Wadi el Araba, the Dead Sea, and the Jordan River valley.

At the mouth of the Gulf the distance between the Sinai peninsula and the Arabian mainland is approximately eight nautical miles. Tiran Island, in the middle of the entrance to the Gulf, is a little more than three miles from the mainland on either side. The main channel into the Gulf of Aqaba is "Enterprise Passage", close to the Egyptian coast. This Passage lies between the Sinai peninsula and Gordon reef, which are only about % naut. mi. apart. Tiran Island (even without its neighboring islets and reefs) with the territorial sea of Tiran and the mainland shores (assuming a 3-mile limit), thus appears to provide a legal basis for closing the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. (Egypt and Saudi Arabia claim a 6-mi. limit, which is of course not recognized by the United States.)

The sovereignty of Tiran and Senafir Islands seems to be in question. A recent London telegram states: "Claimant to islands since Turks not clear. Foreign Office understood they passed to Saudi Arabia" (No. 4455, Feb. 15, 1951). Certain foreign atlases indicate the islands as belonging to Saudi Arabia. Egypt, however, occupied them in March 1950 and is reported to have mounted guns at Ras Nuzerani on the mainland peninsula, near the entrance to Enterprise Passage. The islands had been reported to be uninhabited.

&lt;sup>1</sup> In the Office of Intelligence Research. <sup>2</sup> Not printed. (674.84A/2-1551)

The head of the Gulf of Aqaba presents a problem distinctly different. Israel and Jordan possess short coasts, between that of Egypt, on the west, and that of Saudi Arabia on the east, both of which extend the full length of the Gulf and beyond into the Red Sea. The exact lengths of the coasts of Israel and Jordan are uncertain, as their boundary termini on the coast have not been clearly defined. But apparently, by ordinary principles and techniques of delimitation, and assuming a 3-mile limit, the territorial waters belonging to Israel and to Jordan would be "pinched off" by the territorial waters of Egypt and Saudi Arabia, which would probably meet just to the south of those of Israel and Jordan.

In an article entitled "Delimitation of Seaward Areas under National Jurisdiction", which will appear in the April issue of The American Journal of International Law, I have dealt systematically with all geographical and geometrical types of delimitation problems which can arise the world over, and have appended the following footnote which specifically refers to the Gulf of Aqaba.

"An additional category was originally planned: Zones of access to the high seas, by surface and air, for states apparently denied access from relatively short coasts on bays or gulfs, because the usual delimitation techniques would pinch them off from the high seas. Problems would have been considered such as those of the Gulf of Aqaba (underscore added), where both Israel and Jordan have very short coasts, between those of Egypt and Saudi Arabia, and where there are differences of navigability by surface ships and maneuverability of airplanes within zones of access that might be delimited by special techniques that should be taken into account. But each case is almost unique; general principles could be stated, but perhaps no techniques of wide applicability could be evolved."

The problems of access through the Gulf of Aqaba are, therefore, apparently unique. They are of interest from both the legal and geographical points of view.

Israel is developing a new port called Elath (Ailat). Jordan has a seaport at the village of Aqaba (sometimes said itself to be the site of biblical Elath). It might be helpful to have fresh, first-hand information regarding the precise location of these two ports, their traffic, and present development and facilities.

Analogous situations

I have considered various possible geographical analogies to passageway to the ports within the Gulf of Aqaba, and have concluded that the most relevant is the passageway to the Baltic Sea and the Gulf of Finland through the waters of the Sound and the Belts between Denmark and Sweden. Here are States bordering the Baltic, whose only access to the high seas is through navigable channels, all less than six miles minimum width, which pass between the mainland of Denmark, islands of Denmark, and the mainland of Sweden. The problems of access through those territorial waters have already been resolved, over a period of many decades. The early initiative of the United States in declaring these channels free passageways by public right is particularly relevant. The history of the Sound and the Belts, as well as the geographical factors involved, are significant in the current problems of the Gulf of Agaba.

&lt;sup>8</sup> Vol. 45, p. 240.

The Sound and the Belts. The principal channels are the Sound (minimum width 2 miles), the Little Belt (least width 600 yards), and the Great Belt (minimum width about 3.5 miles). For more than four centuries Denmark collected dues on traffic passing through these waters, in later decades from "privileged" (treaty) nations. The United States paid such dues under the U.S.-Danish Convention of 1826 (Miller, Treaties 4 . . . Vol. 3, pp. 239-43).

The United States became critical of this "tribute", known as "the Sound dues", as early as 1837, and on October 14, 1848, Secretary of State Buchanan took the position that "Under that law [public law of nations] the navigation of the two seas connected by this Strait [actually the Sound and the Belts] is free to all nations; and therefore the navigation of the channel by which they are connected ought, also, to be free." (Miller, Treaties . . . . Vol. 7, p. 530.)

In 1856 the convention of 1826 was abrogated by the United States. The instructions to Mr. Bedinger, U.S. Chargé d'Affaires to Denmark, dated July 18, 1853, are pertinent in recalling that "the principle upon which those dues are collected, cannot be defended"... "a 'principle' so flagrantly at variance with the established right of each of the nations of the earth to the liberum mare." (Miller, Treaties . . . Vol. 7, p. 534.)

A general treaty for the reduction of the Sound dues was signed by Denmark and 13 other States, including Great Britain and France, March 14, 1857 (English text in Hertslet, Map of Europe by Treaty, Vol. 2, pp. 1301-09.)5

The United States was not a party to this treaty, since negotiations had long been under way for a separate treaty with Denmark. Ratification of the general treaty of March 14, 1857, had been exchanged on the following March 31, and therefore prior to the separate U.S.-Danish treaty of April 11, 1857.6

&lt;sup>4</sup> Hunter Miller (ed.), Treaties and Other International Acts of the United States of America. 8 volumes (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1931-<sup>1948).</sup> All ellipses in this dorument appear in the source text.

<sup>5</sup> Sir Edward Herts'et, The Map of Europe by Treaty, 4 volumes (London, Butterworths (etc.), 1875–1891).

<sup>6</sup> The convention for the discontinuance of the Sound dues, signed at Washington. For text, see 11 Stat. 719.

By the U.S.-Danish treaty concluded April 11, 1857, the United States agreed to pay to Denmark "once and for all" the sum of $393,011 (Art. 3). That sum with interest was paid in London in March 1858. Torben Bille, Danish Chargé d'Affaires, who signed the U.S.-Danish convention for Denmark, wrote that "navigation of the Sound and Belts has thus been rendered as free and open to the shipping of the world as the ocean itself" (D.S., 2 Notes from the Danish Legation, July 4, 1857. See Miller, Treaties . . . Vol. 7, p. 585).

Suggestions

It is respectfully suggested that the United States adopt the viewpoint that access to the ports within the Gulf of Aqaba should be free to all nations—as free as the access to the Baltic Sea and the Gulf of Finland is through the territorial waters of Denmark and Sweden. Egypt and Saudi Arabia should be presented with such an interpretation of the geographical and legal situation. Admittedly, the Gulf of Aqaba is small, and traffic to ports on its shores is extremely small in comparison with that of the Baltic Sea. But the concern of Israel and Jordan, in possessing sea coasts at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, is clearly that they may have access to the high seas through the Red Sea. Israel and Jordan might well be parties to a settlement relating to all questions of access to the Gulf of Aqaba.

It is further suggested that an effort be made to find a principle for the delimitation of the territorial sea of all four countries in the waters at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, so as to give both Israel and Jordan direct access to the high seas portion of the Gulf, if possible. I should be glad to work on that unusual problem, and to show the application of such a principle on a map, if requested to do so.

683.84A/3-551: Telegram

The Consul at Jerusalem (Tyler) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Jerusalem, March 5, 1951—2 р. т.

162. Reference Deptel 94, February 27,<sup>2</sup> General Riley furnished Consulate General following:

"Complaint submitted to MAC by Syria on February 21 alleging that Israelis not inhabitants demilitarized zone as authorized by general armistice agreement <sup>3</sup> commenced important works on or about February 14 along western bank Jordan River [garble] belonging to Arabs in Mansoura sector south Lake Hula.<sup>4</sup> This Israeli project

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Damascus for information.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>8</sup> For text, see U.N. Doc. S/1353/Rev. 1.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For background on the Huleh (Hula) dispute, see the memorandum of April 6 from Mr. Waldo to Mr. Kopper, p. 620.

(Hula concession) is in accordance with original agreement signed in June 1914 between Turkish Minister of Finance and two Beirut businessmen which authorizes individuals to drain marshes in Hula area. Concession agreed to give boundaries of lands on which Society holding concession had right to change, destroy or modify channels, dam up waterways, expropriate lands, buildings, et cetera owned by private individuals in accordance with expropriation law, occupy lands temporarily, indemnities to be paid to owners by Society through Imperial Government.

UN observer Captain Bouteille Belgian army in command with member of Israeli delegation contacted superintendent Palestine Land Development Company in charge of work project who produced photographs copy of certificate given on November 28, 1934 by Syrian-

Ottoman Agricultural Company which read as follows:

'Palestine Land Development Company took possession of Hula concession with all rights pertaining thereof'.

Superintendent then stated that up to now (February 22, 1951) works have been started on ten to twelve dunams of Arab land in Mansoura sector. He also stated that Arab owners can get in touch with Mr. Horowitz (Israel) at Rumishmar Hayarieh police station to discuss and claim compensation for damages to their land thus incurred.

Some five or six months ago Israeli delegate requested and received approval of Syrian delegate to send a water survey team into demilitarized zone. In November Israelis repaired dam at southern end of Lake Hula which has raised slightly level of lake which has caused flooding of small amount of Arab land in northeast sector of lake. At present works project in demilitarized zone is straightening west bank of Jordan for distance about 4 kilos below Lake Hula. Israelis have requested permission from Syrian delegate to cross to east bank of Jordan still in demilitarized zone for purpose of performing similar type on that bank. Syrians refuse to grant permission. I fear Israelis will attempt to force issue which may result in difficult situation. Chairman of MAC has requested on numerous occasions that Israelis cease work now being performed in demilitarized zone until discussions in MAC are completed but Israelis refuse to abide by this request. Not only Colonel Ramati but Major Shoham as well have stated to chairman and one observer that entire matter has been discussed with State Department and that green light was given them to proceed with work. Therefore 'they are not worried about what Syrian Government thinks as US controls UN'.

To my mind there are two problems involved:

(1) Drainage of swamp area north of Lake Hula and drainage of Lake Hula itself which is outside demilitarized zone and

(2) Preliminary work along River Jordan in demilitarized zone which must be accomplished before above project can commence.

These two projects, in my mind, when completed will cause changes in area not visualized at time Syrian-Israeli armistice agreement was signed. However, as this swamp area and Lake Hula are in Israeli controlled territory, I do not believe that Syria has any right to dictate what Israelis do in way of such drainage. When this project is completed Israelis will have reclaimed about 57,000 dunams of excellent farmland and there is no question that Israelis will establish in this reclaimed area many additional settlements.

Syrians maintain that these additional settlements will be inhabited by many ex-Israeli soldiers disguised as farmers and thus will give not only a political but a military advantage to Israelis. Due to the topographical features i.e. extremely high ground on Syrian side of border I am of opinion that Syrian guns will dominate this area to such an extent as to give Syria as much of a military advantage as will be accorded Israel when these settlements are established.

However in view of changed situation I cannot by any stretch of imagination see how Israelis can authorize Palestine Land Development Company to proceed with work in demilitarized zone under agreement given on November 28, 1934, by Syrian-Ottoman Agricultural Company which results in a destruction or expropriation of land, buildings, et cetera owned by private Arab individuals or which justifies them to occupy lands temporarily on understanding that indemnities will be paid to owners through Israeli Government.

Under terms of armistice agreement Israelis maintain that work being performed within demilitarized zone is in accordance with normal restoration of life within demilitarized zone. I agree with Qudsi, Prime Minister Syria that if this work along Jordan River is continued without a mutual agreement being reached between parties concerned, trouble may result.

Prime Minister Qudsi is perfectly correct in his statement that this affair brought out the danger of continuing neutral status of this area. For a number of months Israelis have continued to interfere materially with activities of refugee Arabs in demilitarized zone. In southern part of demilitarized zone Israelis have ploughed some 2,000 dunams of land that belong to Arab refugees. In northern sector of demilitarized zone Israelis in recent months have prevented Syrians who own land in demilitarized zone from crossing boundary and working their land. In central sector Israeli military police have interfered with Arab villagers in that area.

It must be realized only way we were able to complete negotiation of general armistice agreement between Syria and Israel was to propose a compromise plan which involved complete withdrawal of Syrian troops from area west of old international boundary which separated Syria from Palestine. Therefore Qudsi's suggested plan for modus vivendi whereby Syria would administer part of demilitarized zone inhabited by Arabs and Israelis would administer remainder, will not be accepted by Israelis.

If Armistice agreement is carefully examined it will be found that although Syria signed armistice agreement it signed in name of refugee Arabs who under terms of armistice agreement would be returned to demilitarized zone. Under paragraph 5(e) of Article 5, chairman assumed authority that ordinarily would have been vested in hands of Syrian Government. However in view of lack of power chairman has no way of enforcing directive than is contained in that paragraph unless Israelis are willing to abide by his decision. Furthermore within demilitarized zone Arabs and Israelis are in settlements contiguous to each other and any possibility of drawing a line separating Arabs from Israelis within that area is not feasible. As for Qudsi's statement that the Israeli plant to drain Hula will result in raising of level of Lake Tiberias thus flooding land farmed by Arabs is questionable. If this were to occur then Israeli settlement of Ein Gev on eastern bank of Lake Tiberias might also be flooded. I am quite sure that Israelis have checked this possibility.

I plan on discussing problem with Shiloah tomorrow March 5 and will attempt to get Israeli Government to stop work on the straightening of Jordan River until such time as the MAC has completed its discussion and possibly reach mutual agreement between parties themselves",5

General Riley concluded:

"In opinion of Chief of Staff Palestine Land Development Co. Ltd. should be instructed forthwith to cease all operations within demilitarized zone until such time as a mutual agreement is arranged through chairman between Syria and Israel for continuing this project."

U.N. Doc. S/2049 includes full text of this memorandum as well as details of the activities of the Israel-Syria MAC in the first months of 1951.

Additional information regarding the Huleh dispute is in Yearbook of the United Nations, 1951, pp. 286-293.

683.84A/3-251: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Legation in Syria 1

SECRET

Washington, March 8, 1951-7 p.m.

313. ReLegtels 404 <sup>2</sup> Feb 20, 434 Mar 2, <sup>3</sup> and Jerusalem Contel 162 Mar 5 4 suggest you reply to Qudsi along fol lines: "Dept has studied with interest proposal PriMin re demilitarized zone on Syrian-Israel border and appreciates spirit which prompted his suggestion. Study situation reveals that administration in demilitarized zone regulated by terms Syrian-Israel Armistice Agreement. Alteration along lines PriMin's suggestions wld require modification this Agreement. According to art 8 para 3 of agreement, any suggestion for modification Armistice may be introduced by either of parties concerned. Dept con-

<sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Waldo and cleared within NE. Repeated to Jerusalem and Tel Aviv.

&lt;sup>5</sup> At the meeting of the Israel-Syria MAC held March 7 General Riley submitted a memorandum in which he stated that under the Syro-Israeli Armistice Agreement neither party enjoyed rights of sovereignty within the demilitarized zone. Hence concessionaires had no right to expropriate property or to force its owners to accept compensation. "There is no law of expropriation within demilitarized zone."

In this telegram the Legation had informed the Department of Prime Minister Qudsi's proposal to divide the demilitarized zone between Israel and Syria along ethnic lines as a means of eliminating friction in that area. "Both states would agree to continuance demilitarized nature border areas and arrangement would not prejudice final settlement." (683.84A/2-2051)

In this telegram Minister Cannon had endorsed the Syrian proposal summarized in footnote 2 above, and had commented in part: "Legation believes that aside from any easing of friction that might result agreement with Israel in MAC would associate present government more closely with armistice. More important any form voluntary negotiation between Arab States and Israel desirable if only to accustom them to idea." (683.84A/3-251) Supra.

siders, therefore, wld be inappropriate for Chairman MAC introduce proposal suggested by PriMin. Perfectly proper, however, Syrian Rep MAC take up question possible modification Armistice Agreement in MAC.

Dept appreciates interest PriMin in peaceful solution in MAC problems arising between Syria and Israel. Fully agrees with him every effort must be made avoid incidents Syria-Israel border and work out peacefully all problems that arise. Dept assures PriMin it will keep close watch over situation and has full confidence in ability MAC work out satisfactory solution present problem. We are certain Syrian Govt will continue extend close cooperation to MAC since principally through that body difficulties arising between Syria and Israel can be solved".

FYI Dept never gave "green light" to Israelis regarding project for construction in demilitarized zone. Several weeks ago the Israelis informed Dept of project in Huleh area they planned undertake and said Syrian soldiers bordering area were adopting hostile attitude. Dept informed Israelis it would request leg Damascus raise matter informally with Syrian Govt (Deptel 272, Feb 8).

Dept will consider discussing matter with Israel reps after Gen Riley has had opportunity attempt work out solution in Syrian-Israel MAC. Dept strongly of opinion that Arab residents demilitarized zone shld be protected in property rights in event Israel project permitted continue. Dept prepared make subsequent representations this regard.<sup>6</sup>

 $W_{EBB}$

UNP Files: Lot 59 D 237

Memorandum by James M. Ludlow of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, March 14, 1951.

STATUS OF PALESTINE SITUATION

At Harding Bancroft's suggestion I am submitting herewith for your information a brief summary of the problems in the Palestine situation with which UNA is concerned.

1. Activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission. The PCC has reassembled in Jerusalem and its Secretariat has undertaken certain studies on the assessment of compensation due Arab refugees and possible procedures for repatriation of refugees to Israel. Holger Andersen of Denmark has accepted the position of Director of the new office to be established under the PCC pursuant to the General Assembly's resolution of December 14, 1950 to handle problems relating to compensation and repatriation. He will assume his duties about May 1 since he is currently engaged in another assignment for the United Nations.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/2-651)
<sup>6</sup> In telegram 458 from Damascus, March 14, Mr. Cannon in part reported that he had informed the Foreign Ministry of the Department's position as conveyed in telegram 313. (683.84A/3-1451)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum addressed also to Mr. Popper.

The PCC and the UNRWA have held two meetings in Beirut to delineate their respective responsibilities concerning the handling of the Arab refugee problem. The major issue between them presently is the role which the PCC should have with regard to the resettlement of Arab refugees. The PCC believes that political negotiations with the Arab States and Israel may, of necessity, have to deal with certain aspects of resettlement while UNRWA believes that anything related to resettlement is entirely within their jurisdiction. While I share the PCC viewpoint, I believe that any differences on this subject can be satisfactorily ironed out between Ambassador Palmer and Ambassador Blandford.

Another matter of concern affecting the two Commissions is a proposal made by Israel to the United Nations Negotiating Committee on Palestine and Korean relief. The Israelis have made an offer of 1,000,000 Israeli pounds to the Negotiating Committee for Palestine refugee relief on the condition that Israel shall be relieved of individual claims of compensation. This is a distortion of the suggestion made by certain Departmental officers to the Israelis last fall but the unfortunate effect of the proposal has been that if a contribution of any size is now to be expected serious consideration must be given to relating any such contribution to a procedure for satisfying claims of compensation against Israel. Ambassador Palmer quite strongly opposes any such linking of the two, but he has been requested to reconsider the problem, in view of the fact that NEA and UNE are seriously concerned over possible Congressional opposition to any substantial United States contribution if Israel does not make a relatively substantial contribution. I have acceded to NEA's and UNE's wishes on this representation to Ambassador Palmer in view of their greater knowledge of the Congressional problem. Personally I share Palmer's concern and feel that the size of the Israeli offer will have little if any effect on Congressional action on our contribution.2

[Here follow sections concerning the health and responsibilities of General Riley.]

4. Jordan-Israeli Relations. Serious border incidents have occurred in recent months involving Jordan and Israel. One major incident occurred in the Negev where the Israelis were stopped by Jordanian road blocks from using the road which the Israelis built to short cut a road already existent to the extreme south. The short cut as surveyed appeared in part to run through Jordan. A solution agreeable to both sides has been reached in the Mixed Armistice Commission. The tension for some time was quite high between the countries. Another serious incident occurred when Israeli troops raided the small village of Sharafat, clearly within Jordan territory on the road between Jerusalem and Bethlehem. This, too, has been settled although not without acrimony. Some encouraging enorts at private negotiation have been made by secret meetings between King Abdullah and Samir Pasha of Jordan and Reuven Shiloah of Israel. Samir Pasha has been acting both as Jordanian Prime Minister and Foreign Minister but has recently given up the latter post to Admar Tuquan Bey, one of Jordan's observers at the Fifth General Assembly. Samir Pasha is reputed to be generally disposed to assist King Abdullah in reaching some sort of peaceful settlement with Israel but recent border incidents have so embittered him that chances of real progress have been considerably lessened. In an effort apparently to improve the working of the Jordan-Israeli Armistice Commission King Abdullah has replaced the senior Jordan representative, Nashashibi with Akmar Khalil and has in turn made Nashashibi under secretary in the Foreign Ministry. The result of these moves has been to increase the possible resistance at the top level in the Jordan Foreign Office to any further extensive negotiations.

&lt;sup>2</sup>In telegram 207 from Jerusalem (Palun 402), May 9, Ambassador Palmer in substance reiterated his views as outlined by Mr. Ludlow above. (357.AC/5-951)

5. Jerusalem. King Abdullah of Jordan has appointed a curator for the protection of Holy Places in Arab-held Jerusalem. This may be considered to be Jordan's answer to any further United Nations efforts to internationalize the city or protect the Holy Places. We may anticipate therefore that acceptance of any United Nations proposals on Jerusalem by Israel and Jordan in the future will be highly unlikely.

884A.00/3-1551

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] March 15, 1951.

Subject: Grant Aid to Israel

Discussion:

The Department understands that the Israel Government, through its Embassy in Washington, will shortly make a formal request to this Government for a grant-in-aid in the amount of $150,000,000 to assist Israel in its balance of payments problems over a one-year period. In addition, the Department has learned informally from the Israel Embassy here that Senators Taft and Douglas may have agreed to sponsor a Foreign Affairs bill authorizing this grant. It is not known when this bill may be introduced.

These funds would presumably form a part of a $1,500,000,000 Israel three-year program for economic development to consolidate the economy of the State and facilitate the immigration into Israel of the Jews of the Middle East and Eastern Europe, numbering an estimated 500,000. Of this billion and a half, it is proposed to raise $500,000,000 in Israel. It is planned that the remaining billion will be raised in the US through such means as promotion of a $500,000,000 bond issue, increased fund-raising through the United Jewish Appeal, and obtaining grants-in-aid from the United States Government. In the latter connection, fifteen prominent American Jewish leaders visited the White House on November 15, 1950 to present a memorandum 2 to the President which stated that Israel has a special claim for financial support from the US and requested the US to grant Israel loans and other forms of financial support. It is probable that the present request for grant aid, if successful, will be the first in a series of applications by the Israel Government to cover the requirements of its three-year program.

&lt;sup>1</sup>This memorandum was drafted by Mr. Waldo and Mr. Stabler. It was cleared in NE, GTI, NEA, RA, EUR, H, E, and S/P. Routed through G and initialed by Mr. Matthews. Placed in Mr. Acheson's White House Briefing Book on March 23.

The Department has formulated a balanced program of grant aid for the Arab states and Israel. This program, in the amount of $25,000,000, for the states involved, is being submitted for the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and is designed to accelerate the economic development of the Near Eastern states in spheres in which the local governments are unable either to supply the necessary finances themselves or to obtain loans from other countries. (Tab A)

It should also be noted that, in addition to the $25,000,000 proposed under the Department's grant aid program, the Department is seeking legislative authority to contribute $30,000,000 to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. Moreover, the policy toward the Arab States and Israel defined in NSC 47/4 contemplates a military aid program of approximately $45,000,000 to that area. These sums total $100,000,000 of proposed grant aid to the Near Eastern area for the coming fiscal year, from which Israel will receive both direct and indirect benefits.

The anticipated request for grant aid to Israel raises most serious political and strategic questions which may have a profound effect on our relations with the other states of the Near and Middle East.

The United States has endeavored to follow a policy of strict impartiality toward the Arab states and Israel. While US relations with the Arab states have been strained since the end of 1947, a year ago the Department became so concerned at the growing anti-American sentiment in the Arab states that it undertook a specific program to convince them of the sincerity and genuineness of this policy. While the latter approach has had some success, the Arab states still view actions of the US with suspicion and regard any action by the US favorable to Israel as proof that the US follows an anti-Arab policy. In this connection, the Arab states point to the numerous statements of high US Government officials tending to contrast them unfavorably with Israel, to the two Eximbank loans to Israel totalling $135,000,000 <sup>4</sup> and to the fact that Israel has not been obliged to repatriate the Palestine refugees.

Not found in Department of State files.
 NSC 47/4 of March 7 is not printed.

Other factors as well have now entered the picture which have produced a sharp loss of confidence in the US and a resultant tendency toward neutralism in the Arab states. For example, the outbreak of war in Korea and the change in the power position of the US have engendered a growing feeling of neglect and isolation in these states, intensified their awareness of their own military weakness and vulnerability, and resulted in a marked deterioration of morale. This situation has manifested itself in the reluctance of the Arab states to support the UN position on Korea, in anti-West and pro-neutral campaigns in the press, and in the unwillingness of any Arab leader publicly to counter this trend.

We consider, however, that these countries are basically pro-Western and anti-Soviet and are prepared to play their part, in cooperation with the US and the UK, in the defense of the area. Taking into consideration the view expressed in NSC 47/2, dated October 17, 1949,<sup>5</sup> that "The political and economic stability of Israel and the Arab states is of critical importance to the security of the US", the Department, in collaboration with the Defense Department, formulated a revised program toward the Arab states and Israel, contained in NSC 47/4, designed to counteract the growing tendency toward neutralism and to maximize the will of the states to cooperate with the West in resistance to the USSR both now and in the event of war. NSC 47/4 was approved by the NSC on March 14 <sup>6</sup> and is now before the President for his approval.

Since the dominant consideration in US relations with the Near East is that of US security, the subject of grant aid to Israel must be considered in that light. We believe that for Israel to receive priority or exceptional treatment in the matter of grant aid would contravene our established policy of impartiality as set forth in NSC 47/2 and would produce a most violent and hostile reaction in the Arab states. In addition it might negate the policy set forth in NSC 47/4 and result in the complete alienation of the Arab states from the West. These developments could also have the most serious consequences on our strategic interests in Greece and Turkey, and could further prejudice the present critical situation in Iran.

Recommendations:

1. It is recommended that you discuss this question with the President at the earliest possible moment and seek his approval for the position that exceptional grant aid or other special financial assistance to Israel outside of the grant aid program which has already been proposed would contravene our policy toward Israel and the Arab states as set forth in NSC 47/2 and NSC 47/4.

&lt;sup>4</sup> For documentation on the Export-Import Bank's loans to Israel, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. vi, pp. 594 ff., and ibid., 1950, vol. v, pp. 658 ff. <sup>6</sup> For text, see ibid., 1949, vol. vi, p. 1430.

The paper which was approved by NSC March 14 and by President Truman March 17 is NSC 47/5. For text, see p. 95.

_

2. In the event the President is unable to approve the foregoing recommendation, it is recommended that you seek his approval for the position that any program of increased grant aid for Israel should be undertaken only as a part of an integrated and balanced program of grant aid for the area as a whole, on the basis of the impartial grant aid program already formulated by the Department (Tab A).

[Tab A]

Grant Aid

The purpose of grant aid is to accelerate the economic development of the Near Eastern states in spheres which the local governments are unable either to supply the necessary finances themselves or to obtain loans from other countries. The total contemplated for the Near Eastern countries would amount to $25,879,000 in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1951 on the basis of the following illustrative country breakdown:

Illustrative Program	$Thousand \ Dollars$
Syria Lebanon	10, 201 3, 208
Israel Jordan	968 4, 855
Egypt	870
Saudi Arabia Iraq	384 5, 000
Yemen	393
Total	25, 879

These illustrative allocations for each country take account of the ability of Saudi Arabia and Iraq to finance their own economic development from oil royalties, of the sources of finance available to Israel from public and private funds in the United States, of Egypt's relatively favorable financial position resulting from the good world market for cotton. Thus, most of the grant aid would be concentrated in Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq (the latter a large country with vast undeveloped resources).

These countries have not been officially consulted with respect to a proposed grant aid program. However, all of the governments of these countries have expressed a strong need for additional financing in order to carry ahead their development programs at a more rapid rate.

The type of project contemplated here would involve measures to improve public health, engineering surveys of public works (which might become bankable), the establishment of technical laboratories and technical schools, the equipping and improving of existing agricultural experimental and demonstration farms, assistance to land resettlement projects which are designed to help solve the land tenure problem, technical experts on roads, laboratories and hospitals, and local trainees to be sent to the United States. These projects include what we now call Point IV Technical Assistance (which would amount to $1 million to the Near East countries in the current fiscal year) and more extensive grant aid projects involving both equipment and experts.

It is assumed in the grant aid program that strict economic development projects which are bankable would be financed either by the country's own banks or by the IBRD or possible by the EximBank. The grant aid projects are over and above the bankable projects.

784A.00/3-1651: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Tel Aviv, March 16, 1951-1 p. m.

567. During stay of Lewis Jones in Israel <sup>2</sup> we called on PriMin Ben Gurion at Tiberias. He stressed the vital importance to his country of re-establishment of normal relations between Israel and Arab states. He was convinced that key to situation was Egypt because of its position or relative power prestige and leadership in ME. He stated that US and possibly UK cld be of extremely valuable assistance to Israel in this connection.

In developing this point, PriMin stated obviously great powers wld have to depend on persuasion but he felt there was such a good case for making peace with Israel in interests of regional and world peace that there shld be a good chance of getting Egypt to take lead in re-establishing normal relations with Israel. He was confident Jordan and Leb wld be glad follow suit but wld not venture in either case to take lead. He thought Syria and Iraq might be slower but wld eventually follow Egypt's lead.

Discussion then turned to various things Israel might do to improve chances of reaching agreements with neighbors. Mention was made of release of blocked balances, dividing of no-man's land in Jerusalem coupled with immed compensation of owners whose property remains on Israel side of line.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jidda, and London. <sup>2</sup>Information on dates of Mr. Jones' stay in Israel has not been found in Department of State files.

PriMin said he recognized importance of world peace to his country since any major conflict might mean complete destruction of the state.

He confirmed Israel's orientation toward West by saying that Israel and Turkey are 2 countries that can be counted upon to resist any aggression and that it might be a very real advantage to Allies to have his country's trained army in strategic position. He stressed that none of us know how much time we have and urged prompt action to effect peace in ME, pointing out that Israeli force wld not be utilized outside Israel unless this country is at peace with its neighbors.

DAVIS

784A.5 MSA/3-1751

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State 1

TOP SECRET

[Washington, undated.]

CONSIDERATIONS RELATING TO ISRAEL REQUEST FOR GRANT AID

1. Our established policy of impartiality as between the Arab states and Israel, as set forth in NSC 47/5, dated March 17, 1951,² should be carried out. NSC 47/5 sets forth in part: "The political and economic stability of the Arab states and Israel continues to be of critical importance to the security of the US . . . The US should without partiality as between Israel and the several Arab states:

a) Seek legislative action which will permit the development of appropriate arms supply programs, and

b) Undertake and accelerate planned technical and economic assistance."

- 2. The Department has in preparation a carefully integrated program of economic and military assistance for Israel and the Arab states designed to strengthen the capabilities of all countries in the Near Eastern area on an impartial basis.
- 3. Any special treatment for Israel in the matter of grant aid would produce a violent and hostile reaction in the Arab states, which would regard such a grant as proof that the US is following a pro-Israel and an anti-Arab policy. Strenuous objections have already been received from Lebanon, Jordan, Syria, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia.
- 4. Such a grant would have a particularly adverse effect on Egypt and Syria, which are presently on balance in the East-West question, and would probably drive them further into a policy of neutralism.

<sup>2</sup> NSC 47/5 is dated March 14 and was approved by the President March 17.

For text, see p. 95.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This unsigned memorandum is the attachment to another document (which summarizes it) titled "Outline Analysis of Factors Concerning Israel: Grant Aid Request". The latter paper, not printed, bears the handwritten date of March 17.

- 5. This reaction in the Arab states would have serious consequences on our special strategic interests in Greece, Turkey, Iran, and Saudi Arabia, and upon the strategic interests the US shares with the UK in the other Arab states and Israel. The defection of the Arab states would jeopardize any possibility of defense and stability in depth.
- 6. The anticipated reaction in the Arab states might lead to a situation similar to that presently existing in Iran.
- 7. Israel's need for financial aid is unquestionable. However, this request is an open-end liability, both as to amount and duration: it envisages the continued financing by the US of Israel's immigration and internal development program without regard to the economic capabilities of the country. Because of Israel's unlimited immigration policy, no opportunity is afforded for stabilizing Israel economy at any given level.
- 8. This request is for fiscal 1952, and is only a part of Israel's three-year billion and a half dollar program. It is likely that private support will be adversely affected by direct US Government grant assistance, which would further increase the ultimate US vulnerability to requests.
- 9. A positive approach, however, to the Congress, outlining the balanced military and economic aid program which the Department has under consideration and stressing the difficulties involved in unilateral aid to Israel might result in a shifting of present support for the requested grant to support of a policy providing for reasonable grant aid for Israel and the Arab states on an impartial basis; maintenance of our even-handed approach to the area; improved prospects for peace between Israel and the Arabs, which should be a matter of as great importance to Israel and Israel supporters as direct grant-aid to Israel.

683.84A/3-1551: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, March 17, 1951—4 p. m.

386. In informal discussion with Israel Emb Rep Mar 16 Dept gave substance Jlem Contels 162 Mar 5, 2 165 Mar 7, 169 Mar 15, 3 and expressed fol views:

(1) Syrian Govt under Armistice Agreement cld not concern itself with Israel civil operations Huleh area outside demilitarized zones.

(2) Situation demilitarized zones responsibility UN Chairman MAC.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Waldo and cleared in NE and UNP. Repeated to Jerusalem, Damascus, and USUN in New York.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 588. <sup>8</sup> Neither printed.

(3) Syrian Govt through membership in MAC entitled make representations to MAC resituation demilitarized zones.

(4) Israel construction demilitarized zone shld cease pending agreement this matter in MAC.

(5) Armistice Agreement provides that Chairman Israel-Syrian MAC has special duties re admin demilitarized zone including preservation rights Arab and Israel inhabitants. Believe Arabs demilitarized zone shld be fully compensated for any loss of land due civil operations this area preferably by appropriate land compensation elsewhere in demilitarized zone. Arrangements this compensation shld be worked out through Israel-Syrian MAC prior Israel undertaking engineering operations demilitarized zone. Moreover, Dept has doubts re validity in demilitarized zone semi-private arrangements made during Mandate.

(6) Dept hoped Israel wld attend Mar 19 meeting MAC and wld avoid any provocative action.

ACHESON

684A.85/3-1951: Despatch

The Chargé in Jordan (Fritzlan) to the Department of State

SECRET

Amman, March 19, 1951.

No. 223

Subject: Meeting of March 16, 1951 Between Jordan Prime Minister and Shiloah.1

The Department will recall that on February 23, 1951, Samir Pasha Rifa'i met Shiloah at Shuneh in order to explore various means of further implementing the Rhodes Armistice Agreement.2 (Attention is invited in this connection to Legation's telegram 145 of February 27, 1951).3 The discussion centered chiefly around implementation of Paragraph 6 of Article VI and of Article VIII, such implementation being conditioned upon Israeli evacuation of the Naharayim area. At that meeting, on the basis of a request made by Shiloah, both parties agreed to adjourn and draw up within the framework of the subjects discussed certain proposals representing the position of the party in question for further discussion on or about March 9. This meeting was later postponed and took place one week later than originally planned.

During the meeting between Mr. G. Lewis Jones and myself and Sir Alec Kirkbride (see Legation's despatch 219, March 15, 1951),3 the British Minister agreed to make available to me the purport of proposals which might be made by Samir Pasha Rifa'i at his next meeting with Shiloah. I met Kirkbride on March 17 and he showed Documentation concerning those of the Rifai-Shiloah conversations which were held previously in 1951 is not printed. It is in file 684A.85. For general background, see Mr. Ludlow's memorandum of March 14 to Mr. Hickerson, p. 592. Reference is the Israel-Jordan Armistice Agreement of April 3, 1949.

<sup>8</sup> Not printed.

me a copy of Samir's document <sup>4</sup> and gave me the following account of the proceedings of the meeting between the two. I should point out in this connection that the meeting between Samir and Shiloah and the proceedings which transpired were discussed between Samir and Kirkbride in the greatest secrecy and confidence. It is most unlikely that Samir has shared his information with more than one or two of his Cabinet colleagues and it is imperative that the following information not be disclosed to any Israeli authorities or to Jordanian representatives as having been received from Kirkbride.

Although Samir came to the meeting prepared with a document outlining Jordan's position, he found that his Israeli counterpart was equipped with no such paper. Samir's document outlined a broadening of the present degree of agreement between the two parties along the following lines:

(1) Israelis would evacuate the Naharayim area and the boundary at this point would follow the old international line. Whatever crops had been planted by the Israelis in this region would be harvested by them.

(2) Following evacuation of the Naharayim area and after the elapse of two months, but in any case not less than one month, the two parties would proceed to implement Article VI and Article VIII of the Rhodes Agreement.

(3) The Special Committee provided for in Article VIII of the Rhodes Agreement would deal with the following questions in the order indicated:

a. Article VI:

(1) Paragraph 6 of this Article, which states, "Wherever villages may be affected by the establishment of the Armistice Demarcation Line . . . , the inhabitants of such villages shall be entitled to maintain, and shall be protected in their full rights of residence, property and freedom", would be implemented in order to alleviate the distressed condition of the inhabitants of the border-line villages who are separated by the line from their lands and means of livelihood. In particular, such inhabitants would have access to their lands and reap the produce therefrom, although such lands would be considered an integral part of Israeli territory.

b. Article VIII:

(1) Free movement of traffic on the Latrun–Jerusalem road. Resumption of traffic on this road would be agreed to in conjunction with division of no-man's-land in its vicinity. The road itself in the Latrun area and no-man's-land south of the road would go to Israel. That portion of no-man's-land north of the road would go to Jordan.

(2) Resumption of the normal functions of the cultural and humanitarian institutions on Mount Scopus and free access thereto. United Nations control over the Mount Scopus area would be terminated. Free access, under Jordan control, would be assured in order to permit the normal functioning of the University and Hospital on Mount Scopus.

&lt;sup>4</sup>Complete text of a purported copy of this document, dated March 15, furnished the Embassy in Israel by the Israeli Foreign Office, is in despatch 541 from Tel Aviv, March 23, not printed. (684A.85/3-2351)

(3) Free access to the Holy Places and cultural institutions and use of the cemetery on the Mount of Olives. Free access to these areas would be agreed to as a matter of principle and it would be the task of the Special Committee to agree upon a practical method of carrying out this principle. The measure of freedom of access would depend largely upon security considerations.

(4) Resumption of operation of the Latrun pumping station. This would take place in conjunction with opening the Latrun-Jerusalem road.

(5) Resumption of the operation of the railroad to Jerusalem. This has already been done.

(6) Jordan's advantages under Article VIII of the Agreement, opening of the Bethlehem-Jerusalem road and provision of electricity for the Old City, would be renounced.

c. Division of No-Man's-Land:

(1) Division of no-man's-land would be accomplished on the basis of property ownership. Absurdities in the configuration of the land which might result would be worked out on the basis of practical adjustments.

d. Compensation for Arab Property in Israeli-Held Jerusalem:

(1) The Israeli Government would provide financial compensation for Arab property in Israeli-held Jerusalem and the Jordan Government would provide financial compensation for Israeli property in Jordan-held Jerusalem.

e. Release of Frozen Balances:

(1) The Israeli Government would release all Arab balances blocked in Israeli banks.

Shiloah's reactions to this document are stated to have been as follows:

1. He agreed to the provisions of the first point of Samir's statement.

2. He considered that under (2) the elapsed time should be one month instead of two. Samir agreed to this modification.

3. As regards (3)a(1), he did not agree with Samir's interpretation that villages on the Jordan side of the line should benefit from Paragraph 6 of Article VI. However, he recognized the hardships suffered by these villagers and thought some form of compensation or other special arrangement might alleviate the situation. The matter would be studied.

4. He agreed to (3)b(1).

5. As to (3)b(2), he astounded Samir by stating that Israel had always considered the Mount Scopus area to be Israeli territory and that no form of Jordan control could be recognized. Without referring to the official map attached to the Armistice Agreement which clearly shows the Mount Scopus area to be on the Jordan side of the line, Samir said that he would be glad to learn from Shiloah the basis of this claim. Shiloah said he would study the matter further.

6. Shiloah agreed to (3)b(3).

7. As regards (3)b(6), he said that although Jordan might renounce these advantages, the Israelis were still prepared to grant them.

8. The questions raised under (3)c and (3)d would be studied further by Shiloah and his associates. He stated that he did not believe Israel was now in a position to be able to pay compensation for Arab properties in Israeli-held Jerusalem.

9. Shiloah would recommend favorable action on the release of Arab blocked balances mentioned under (3)e.

The Legation believes that the proposals made by Samir represent a constructive step forward and that they should help dispell doubts concerning his intention to implement the Armistice Agreement. It would seem that, as a result of these discussions, the responsibility for making the next move is placed upon the Israelis. For the first time since he assumed office and began discussions with the Israelis, Samir is now in the happy position of being able to relax and allow the other side to take the next step.

It was apparently agreed at the meeting that after further consultation with his superiors, Shiloah would indicate a date on which he was prepared to continue discussions with Samir.

A. DAVID FRITZLAN

262.84A41/3-1951

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of German Economic Affairs (Margolies)

[Washington,] March 19, 1951.

Subject: Israeli Note Concerning Reparation Claims Against Germany

Participants: Mr. Waldo-NE

Mr. Margolies—GEA

Mr. Waldo inquired as to the status of the reply to the Israeli note <sup>1</sup> on the subject of reparation claims against Germany. He said that a representative of the Israeli Embassy was expected in his office that afternoon and he anticipated an inquiry as to when a reply might be expected.

I told Mr. Waldo that GER had sent out a memorandum to the Bureaus of the Department soliciting their views as to how the note might be answered, insofar as it affected their interests. I said that after the Department's position had been worked out, GER would forward a proposed reply to the Intergovernmental Study Group at London to be coordinated there in substance with replies being prepared by the French and British, as is being done in connection with the first Israeli note concerning restitution and looted property.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Of March 12, not printed. In it Israel had requested support of the United States for its claim of $1,500,000,000 in reparations from the German Federal Republic. (262.84A41/3-1251)

Mr. Waldo asked whether I had any views as to the possibility of the Israeli Government obtaining satisfaction of its claims against Germany.

I said that my personal reaction was that it was extremely unlikely that the three Powers would agree to support the Israeli claim for reparation. I said that to do so would open up the possibility of the revival of all sorts of other claims against Germany for reparation from other sources. I also said that it seemed to me that since the U.S. would have to finance the payment of the claims in any event, it would be preferable to make payments directly to the beneficiary countries instead of indirectly through Germany, if we felt such claims should be made.

On the second point, Mr. Waldo said that in the case of Israel this was not the case. There would be a definite political advantage to making a contribution to the Israeli economy indirectly through Germany rather than directly. Direct contributions gave rise to requests from neighboring Arab states. Mr. Waldo said his views, of course, were also preliminary, and did not necessarily reflect the position of his bureau.

Mr. Waldo said that they had before them a request from Israel for economic aid and that before they could answer that request they needed to figure out what might happen in regard to reparations. He said he would like to have a meeting with GER on this point. I suggested that he call Mr. Kiefer and discuss it with him, and said that I thought that such a meeting might perhaps be chaired by Mr. Lewis who had been closely following the Israeli problem.<sup>2</sup>

Secretary's Memoranda: Lot 53 D 444

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] March 22, 1951.

Subject: 1. Israel request for a grant-in-aid of $150 million from the US.

- 2. Israel claim to reparations from Germany of $1,500,000,000.
- 3. Request that Prime Minister Ben-Gurion be extended official invitation to visit the US.

Participants: S—The Secretary

H.E. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel

The Honorable David Horowitz, Director General, Israel Ministry of Finance

NE-Mr. Waldo

&lt;sup>2</sup> Record of such a meeting has not been found in Department of State files.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

1. The Ambassador of Israel called on me, accompanied by Mr. Horowitz, to present and discuss a note 2 requesting a $150 million grant-in-aid from the US for the period July 1, 1951 through June 1, 1952.

The Ambassador reviewed the three points on which the Israel Government based its request for special assistance from the US:

(1) An increase of 510,000 in Israel's population from the proclamation of the State to the present, and an expected increase of 600,000 in the next three years:

(2) The heavy defense expenditures which were required by Israel as a result of the refusal of the Arab states to make peace in the Near

East; and

(3) The financial commitments which arose from Israel's declared willingness to contribute generously to the reintegration fund of the UNRWA in payment of compensation to the Arabs.

The Ambassador reviewed the substance of the note in full and said that he believed that US assistance to Israel was consistent with the objectives of the US aid programs which had already been undertaken. There was some reason to believe that there might be certain unwillingness to assist Israel because of the attitude of Israel's neighbors. The Israel Government felt that this was a negative approach to the problem and thought that, instead, a positive policy of extending aid to both Israel and Israel's neighbors should be followed rather than one of withholding aid from Israel.

Mr. Horowitz said that Israel was tapping every possible source of aid and doing everything feasible to assist itself. He mentioned the $500 million bond issue, the increased activities of the United Jewish Appeal, et cetera.

I asked the Ambassador whether the grant was supposed to assist Israel over the three-year period or was merely a request for one year. He replied that the $150 million covered the estimated additional needs of Israel for this period; he did not know what might be necessary after the year had elapsed.

I informed the Ambassador that I would study the note most carefully.3

2. The Ambassador then said he wished to bring to my attention a note which had been delivered by the Embassy to the Bureau of German Affairs on March 12 requesting US assistance in obtaining

Mr. Acheson made the following reference to the Israeli aid request:

(884A.00/3-1551)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Department of State files contain an Israeli note on this subject dated March 15, not printed. (884A.00 TA/3-1550) No other Israeli note on the aid request has been found in Department of State files.

<sup>3</sup> In a memorandum of a conversation with President Truman on March 23,

&quot;I informed the President of the request made by the Israeli Ambassador of me yesterday and of the proposed bill which some Senators were going to "I explained that no decision was asked of the President at this time."

reparations from Germany of $1,500,000,000. The Ambassador outlined the various reasons why he felt that Israel was entitled to this sum of money from Germany, and requested the Department's sympathetic assistance. I said that I would study the matter.

3. The Ambassador inquired whether it would be possible for the President to extend an invitation to Prime Minister Ben-Gurion to pay an official visit to the US in the near future. The Ambassador said that the Prime Minister was most anxious to come and that such a visit could be most useful. I told the Ambassador that I was pretty sure of the President's thinking in this regard. I was certain, therefore, that it would be impossible to extend such an invitation to the Israel Prime Minister; the President was very busy and had already too many state visits on his calendar for this year. The Ambassador then inquired, if the Prime Minister visited this country in an informal capacity, whether the President and I would be willing to see him. I said that I could not say at this time but would have to consider the matter very carefully.

Editorial Note

Assistant Secretary McGhee arrived in Israel at Jerusalem the morning of March 27 and left the country from the same place the evening of the following day. On March 29 he left Jordan for Cairo.

In Joint Weeka 65 from Tel Aviv, March 30, the Embassy reported that Mr. McGhee had paid courtesy calls on President Weizmann and Foreign Minister Sharett and had dined with Foreign Office officials. (784A.00(W)/3-3051) No other record of his conversations while in Israel has been found in Department of State files.

The Assistant Secretary's visit to Israel was part of his general tour of the Near East and South Asia. For further information on this trip, see the editorial note, page 49.

683.84A/3-2851

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Acting Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waldo)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] March 29, 1951.

Subject: Syria-Israel Border Situation.

Participants: Major General Wm. E. Riley, USMC, Chief of Staff, United Nations Truce Supervision Organization for Palestine.

NE-Mr. Waldo

I telephoned General Riley at the US Naval Hospital in St. Albans, Long Island, New York, concerning the serious situation which has arisen between Israel and Syria in the demilitarized zone of the Hule swamp area. I gave him the substance of Damascus telegram no. 492, March 28.<sup>1</sup> I told him that we had previously discussed this matter with the Israelis on an informal basis, but now felt that the situation had become so serious that a more formal representation should be made by the Department. I asked the General what his views were.

He told me that he agreed that the only way these matters could be handled effectively was for the Department to take an active interest in the workings of the Mixed Armistice Commission. He approved our making representations to the Israelis on the matter, and said that he thought we should also discuss it with the Syrians.

The General considered the Israelis were responsible for the tense military situation on the Syria-Israel border. He said that the Israelis had apparently refused to abide by his memorandum of March 7 in which he had stated: "Until such time as a mutual agreement is reached between the governments of Israel and Syria with respect to work now being conducted in demilitarized zone in connection with drainage of Lake Hule marshes, the Palestine Land Development Company or any successors are, in the opinion of the Chief of Staff, not justified in continuing such work." The General said that he had called into the Hospital Rafiq Asha, Syrian Consul General in New York, and discussed the matter with him and expected to see Gideon Rafael, Israel Counselor and Deputy Representative to the UN, tomorrow.

The General also thought it might be a good idea to inform the French and Belgians of any steps we might take since the Acting Chief of Staff of the UN TSO, Col. de Ridder, is a Belgian.

884A.00/3-1551

Memorandum by Charles B. Marshall of the Policy Planning Staff to the Director of the Staff (Nitze) <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] March 30, 1951.

Subject: Grant to Israel.

Since being called in last week to a short meeting in your office relating to the prospective legislative proposals for a $150,000,000 grant to Israel, I have looked further into the subject. What I have learned prompts me to this initiative.

I do not wish to labor the analysis of the proposal. It has been ably dealt with in a March 15 memorandum from NEA to the Secretary.<sup>2</sup> A few points, however, are worth emphasizing.

<sup>2</sup> Memorandum by Mr. Berry, p. 594.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Not printed. In it the Legation had in part indicated a rising level of tension in Syria as a result of the Huleh conflict. (683.84A/3-2851)

This memorandum bears the typed notation "Cleared with NEA."

The proposed grant would increase by 15,380 per cent Israel's portion of economic aid as contemplated in the foreign assistance program put forth by the Executive.

An increase of contemplated aid for neighboring countries on a proportional scale would entail a grant of more than $40,000,000,000 to the Near East.

The Israeli proposal is based upon an obvious claim for favoritism. The Israeli ambassador's note of March 15 putting the touch on Uncle Sam makes no attempt to conceal this. The plea is based on "special ties" between the two countries and "the maintenance and extension of a traditional relationship firmly established in the hearts of both peoples".

Despite many allusions in the note attempting to pass off the proposed aid as being just the same sort of thing the United States has been doing for a lot of nations, the undertakings envisaged by Israel are quite different. They involve plans for resettlement for undefined numbers of Jews from other countries in years to come. The note attempts to put the United States in the position of being obligated to underwrite these undertakings. The development is envisaged in the note as sharpening the contrast between Israel and neighboring countries. The numbers, the superiority in economic power, and the greater degree of prosperity developed in Israel is envisaged as having a great impact in neighboring states. This impact of contrast is presented as contributing to "the stability of the entire Near East". How it would do so is not clear.

The logical sequel of great expansion of the Israeli population in an enclave of advancement amid an area of lag would be further expansion of the dimensions of Israel. This is made quite articulate in various Zionist pronouncements, though not expressed in the Israeli note.

Obviously the United States could not underwrite the Israeli undertaking without being involved in all its implications. All of our economic assistance must be related to the ends sought. In giving such assistance in such extraordinary degree the United States would become fully associated with Israeli's ambitions. It would become associated with Israeli as an object of Arab fears of attempts to expand the present Israeli holdings to include the entire Fertile Crescent.

This would be virtually fatal to all efforts to enhance support of the United States in the Moslem world. The impact would not be confined to the Arab states. It would probably run all the way to Turkey, Iran and Pakistan.

In that sense, the proposal is in sharp contrast to all preceding economic assistance. It would not conduce to—it would militate against—the security and other interests of the United States not in a slight but in a drastic degree.

The potential impact of this proposal in hurting our position in the Near East is illustrated by the circumstance that four Arab states, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, and Saudi Arabia, have already articulated their protests against it officially, while Italy has made known its fears about the proposal in relation to upsetting the delicate situation bearing on the Mediterranean.

My friends at the Capitol tell me that the points against the plan are not understood up there. They tell me that most of the supporters lined up for the Israeli proposal are under the impression that the Executive branch looks with favor on this plan. I am advised that it is highly advisable to get the word around as rapidly as possible that this proposal involves implications quite counter to our security interests. I am advised that it would be particularly important to get this word right away to the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee lest a number of them be committed to the plan in ignorance of its broad implications. If several of them should be committed as sponsors of the bill it would be virtually impossible to block favorable action in the Committee. My friends at the Capitol tell me that the two leading sponsors of the measure in the Senate are cagey legislators most adept at quietly lining up support in advance of introducing a bill and that it would therefore be well to make the opposing views known without delay.

My recommendations, which underscore and go beyond those in the NEA paper, are that you should urge upon the Secretary and support all action to the following ends:

- a. That the President be fully informed about the implicit dangers.
- b. That the Department seek Presidential clearance, if it is necessary, for actively opposing the proposal.
- c. That the known congressional sponsors be fully and emphatically advised of the basis of opposition.
- d. That the members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate in particular be apprised of the basis of opposition.
- e. That every legitimate effort be made to ensure defeat of the legislation in the Congress.
- f. That the President be urged to veto it if it should be passed as a separate item.
- g. That, in event of enactment, the President be advised to reserve the right to use the funds only in the ways and to the extent compatible with the foreign policy objectives and the security interests of the United States and to make public this position and the underlying reasons.

683.84A/3-3051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] March 30, 1951.

Subject: Border tension between Israel and Syria.

Participants: Moshe Keren, Counselor, Embassy of Israel

Miss Esther Herlitz, First Secretary, Embassy of

Israel

NEA-Mr. Berry

NE-Mr. Waldo

Dr. Keren, Counselor of the Embassy of Israel, and Miss Esther Herlitz, First Secretary, called on me this morning, at my request, in connection with recent incidents in the demilitarized zone between Syria and Israel. Mr. Waldo gave an account of the background of the case and listed the events that had occurred.

I told the Counselor that we had discussed the present problem with General Riley, who is in a hospital in New York, and were in effect backing up his position. I understood that General Riley was discussing the matter with the Israelis and the Syrians in New York.

I told the Counselor and Miss Herlitz that the Department was generally sympathetic to the Israel program for draining and developing the Hule area. We thought such a program would be helpful to the Israelis and also to the Syrians, since it would eliminate malaria from the area. I said we felt that the Syrians had no reason to object to Israel's activities there.

I told the Counselor, further, that we were aware that the drainage of the Hule area was dependent upon certain engineering operations by the Israelis in the demilitarized zone south of Lake Hule. It seemed logical to us that these operations would have to be undertaken. At the same time, we felt that the Israelis could afford to use patience in negotiating with the Syrians, through the Mixed Armistice Commission, a solution of the problem raised by the engineering activities. We understood that these operations resulted in the dispossession of certain Arab landowners and that the Syrians were protesting on their behalf. It also appeared that the Israelis had taken actions in the area which were not fully in accord with the Armistice Agreement and which contributed to instability in the area.

I informed the Israel representatives that we had been much concerned over the increasing number of incidents occurring recently along the Israel frontiers. We hoped that the situation would improve. Otherwise, the continuance of such incidents could have a most deleterious effect on the Department's attitude, and I could not predict what turn this might take. We therefore hoped that the Israelis would use patience and work out this problem in the demilitarized zone through cooperation with the Mixed Armistice Commission. Like the Israelis, the Department was hopeful regarding a settlement of the outstanding problems between Israel and the Arab states. A repetition of incidents like that now occurring in the Hule area could only prejudice possibilities for a peaceful settlement.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

The Israel representatives said it was their understanding that Colonel Ramati and Colonel Bossavy of the Mixed Armistice Commission had reached some agreement in an exchange of letters,<sup>2</sup> but did not pursue this point. They promised to report our views to the Israel Foreign Office.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Information on activities of the Israel-Syria MAC at the end of March is in U.N. Docs. S/2067 and S/2084.

<sup>3</sup> In telegram 407 to Tel Aviv (353 to Damascus), March 31, the Department summarized the representations made to the Israeli representatives the previous day and continued:

"Syrian Min also was requested call same day. We expressed appreciation for moderation shown in Huleh area by Syrian Govt and hoped this moderate attitude would continue. We thought Israel project Huleh area useful... and hoped Syrians wld work out peaceful solution problem in cooperation MAC. We also hoped Syrians wld not take up matter in SC at this time." (684A.85/2-1251)

788.00/4-1051

Memorandum of Informal United States-United Kingdom Discussions, in Connection With the Visit to London of The Honorable George C. McGhee, April 2-3, 1951

CONFIDENTIAL

London, April 2, 1951.

Topic for Discussion: Arab Refugees

Participants: Foreign Office

R. J. Bowker, Assistant Under-Secretary of State

Trefor Evans, Middle East Secretariat

Sir Henry Knight, British Representative on the UNRWA

U.S.A.

George C. McGhee, Department of State James K. Penfield, American Embassy, London John Frick Root, American Embassy, London

Mr. Evans presented a paper (attached herewith) setting forth the problem of the Arab refugees as the British see it. To them there seemed to be, as explained in the paper, three alternatives and they were interested in learning Mr. McGhee's views on the problem. Mr. McGhee said he thought the first of the possibilities suggested was by far the best and he believed that it could be accomplished. He noted that it was the US intention to provide $30 million for Arab refugees as part of its Foreign Aid Program for next year. Mr. Evans said that the UK contribution might vary from $8 to $10 million depending on the contributions from other sources. Mr. McGhee said that he did not at all favor the proposal that Israel should be given a loan with which to provide compensation for the refugees. He thought it was far more desirable to contribute directly to the resettlement of the refugees and perhaps to obtain from them as they were settled a sort of "quit claim" for the compensation to which they had felt entitled. In most cases they would be obtaining in resettlement more than they had left behind. As for the problem of immediate finance raised by Mr. Evans, Mr. McGhee said that Congressional authorization of the proposed contribution for next year would probably make it possible for us to advance some of the funds as early as July 1st.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Drafted by Root. This memorandum and its attachment, not printed, were transmitted to the Department of State as enclosures to despatch 4832 from London, April 10. For information concerning Mr. McGhee's visit to London and his other conversations there with British officials, see footnote 1, p. 104.

Mr. McGhee said that it was extremely disappointing that we were no further ahead in resolving the refugee problem than two years ago and that it seemed to him more should have been accomplished by now in making headway with projects which would provide for the resettlement of refugees. He said the inability of UNRWA to get ahead with the real job at hand had been very discouraging and raised the question of whether any UN organization was competent to do the job. In answer to a question from Mr. McGhee, Sir Henry Knight said that administrative expenses of the agency amounted to about 12% and salaries to another 3%.

Mr. McGhee said that he wondered whether it might not be advisable to give to our Point Four officers sent to the area to supervise U.S. bilateral grant aid the additional responsibility of insuring the proper use of our contribution to the refugee program. Mr. McGhee and Sir Henry Knight agreed on the desirability of pressing for the decentralization of the refugee program and enlisting the cooperation of the individual Arab countries, whose initiative in the matter should be stimulated. Mr. McGhee and Sir Henry recognized that the Arab countries were looking for a guarantee of continued outside interest and financial assistance in the resettlement programs and thought that, while our governments could not commit themselves to a guarantee of funds, it would be possible for the UN on the one hand through the director of the UNRWA, and on the other hand for the British and American representatives on UNRWA on behalf of their respective governments, to give assurances, particularly to Syria where the main resettlement should be carried out, of a desire and intention to see the resettlement problem carried to its completion.

Mr. McGhee thought that it should be possible to carry out an appreciable number of resettlement projects in Jordan, but both Sir Henry and Mr. Evans were much more sceptical and believed that the physical resources there severely limited the development which could be undertaken.

With regard to the actual expenditure of funds, Mr. Evans noted that the Jordan Government had so far been able to spend only a part of the £1 million loan from the U.K. It was recognized that putting money for development into actual use was a fairly slow process.

884A.00/3-1551

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] April 2, 1951.

Subject: Grant Aid to Israel

The following regarding Israel's request for grant aid is for your information and discussion with the President at your meeting with him today, should you consider such desirable.

On March 22 the Israeli Ambassador submitted a request to you for grant aid in the amount of $150,000,000. Friends of Israel had prepared for immediate Congressional action upon this request, but this was forestalled as a result of the Department's suggestion to Congressional leaders that such action on the very day of the submission of Israel's request would have undesirable consequences. You informed the President of Israel's request and proposed Congressional action on March 23 (Tab A).<sup>2</sup>

It now appears that a Bill will be introduced into the Congress today or tomorrow authorizing grant aid to Israel in the amount of $150,000,000. In discussing the proposed Bill with Congressional leaders we plan to say that action in favor of the Israel request at this time would be contrary to the security interests of the United States as it will confirm the Arab states in their belief that the United States is not interested in Arab welfare and development, but is solely concerned with the welfare of Israel. The Department has already received protests in this connection from Saudi Arabia, Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, Egypt and Iraq.

The Department is in the process of preparing a balanced grant aid program for the area as a whole, which will take into consideration

&lt;sup>1</sup> This document bears a notation in an unidentified hand: "This memo was placed in the Secretary's W[hite] H[ouse] Book for 4/2/51."

<sup>2</sup> See footnote 3, p. 606.

Israel's needs, although it will not include the full amount of the request the Israel Government has made. This program will be submitted to the Congress within the next several weeks. Hence, special Congressional action for the benefit of Israel would conflict with and jeopardize the Department's over-all program. Moreover, the bill for the benefit of Israel, planned for introduction this week, would contravene our established policy of objective impartiality toward the States of the Near East as set forth in NSC 47/2 dated October 17, 1949, recently confirmed in NSC 47/5 which received the approval of the President on March 17, 1951. A discussion of this position is contained in my memorandum dated March 15,3 addressed to you (Tab B).

The policy of scrupulous impartiality between Arabs and Jews offers the best hope of bringing about peace and stability in the Near East—to disturb this balance by partial action of the Congress at this time would have serious adverse consequences to the United States, Israel and Arab security.

It is believed that explanation of the foregoing considerations and established policies should now be made to all important officials of the Executive Branch of the Government. NEA believes that it would be helpful if the President would discuss the subject at an early Cabinet meeting and inform the members thereof that aid to Israel must be a part of the balanced program for the Near East as a whole.4

IO Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by James M. Ludlow of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[New York,] April 2, 1951.

US/S/1720

Subject: Egypt Blockade at the Suez Canal
 Huleh Crisis

3) Projected Supplementary Report

&lt;sup>4</sup> On April 2 Secretary Acheson discussed a number of foreign policy issues with President Truman. Mr. Acheson's memorandum of the part of the conversation devoted to Israel follows:

&quot;I went over this matter fully with the President. He is fully aware of the danger to American interests in the Middle East which this proposal poses. He agrees that, subject to further discussion between him and me, the matter should be taken up at the Cabinet and that we should begin careful talks on the Hill, pointing out the full implications of what is proposed.

"He suggested also the possibility of having discussions with some leading Jewish groups. He would be glad to do this if it seems wise to us.

&quot;I think that this matter requires further thought and discussion in the Department. I suggest that Mr. Webb get together a small group to go over the matter with me." (Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation: Lot 65 D 238)

<sup>4)</sup> Possibility of General Riley's Replacement as Chief of Staff

Participants: General William E. Riley-USMC, Chief of Staff, UN Truce Supervision Organization

Mr. James Ludlow—UNP

1) Egyptian Blockade at the Suez Canal—General Riley briefly outlined to me what he considered must be the nature of the opinion which he will give as Chairman of the Special Committee provided for under Article 10 of the Egyptian-Israeli General Armistice Agreement. While this decision is subject to possible revision after consultation with Ralph Bunche and Abe Feller, he contemplates holding that the action by the Egyptian Government in obstructing shipment through the Suez Canal destined for Israel must of necessity be considered as a hostile act, but not necessarily against the General Armistice Agreement because of the limitations imposed on the term "hostile act" in the text of Article 2, Paragraph 2 of the General Armistice Agreement. This paragraph reads "No element of the land, sea or air, military or para-military forces of either party, including non-regular forces shall commit any war-like or hostile act against the military or para-military forces of the other party or against civilians in territory under the control of that party". He will add that the imposition of blockade controls through the Suez Canal is an aggressive action, but again not necessarily against Paragraph 2 of Article 1 of the General Armistice Agreement, in view of the limitation in the text to "armed forces, land, sea or air of either party".

The effect of his decision will be that the MAC does not have the right to demand from the Egyptian Government that it not interfere with the passage of goods to Israel through the Suez Canal while at the same time accusing them of violating the spirit of the Agreement. He believes that it is essential that the decision be so constructed as to insure the possibility of continued cooperation of the two parties to the General Armistice Agreement. We discussed the likelihood of the problem being brought before the Security Council and he indicated that he was cognizant of this likelihood, but felt that any decision he rendered would be challenged by one or both of the parties. I told him that it was our understanding that the British were somewhat concerned by the delay in the decision and that they, of their own accord, might raise the matter of the obstruction of the Canal, possibly in the Security Council.

General Riley stated that he had been somewhat embarrassed by the fact that the Israelis knew that he had asked for comments from the legal department of UN, since he felt that the Israelis would ask that the information, which they understood to state that the MAC did have competence in handling the particular issue, should be made a public record. He stated that he understood from the Israelis that the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Of February 24, 1949. Text is in U.N. Doc. S/1264/ Corr.1 and Add.1.

Department of State had indicated to the Israelis that we believe that the MAC had competence. I told him in reply that his use of UN's legal information was entirely up to him. So far as the Department was concerned, it was our belief that under the November 17, 1950 resolution, the Security Council required a decision from him and that it was implicit in the resolution and in the statements made by the Members of the Council in discussing the resolution, that the MAC had competence to handle the case. However, he should not be concerned with the possibility that his decision would differ with what he understood from the Israelis was the position of this Government with regard to the MAC's competence. He was an agent of the UN and not of the US and was therefore to make a decision as required by the resolution. The important thing to the US was only that the machinery of the Armistice Agreements continue to function as satisfactorily as possible and receive the backing and support of the Security Council.

I asked General Riley about the timing of his decision and he stated that he had no specific date in mind, but that it would be necessary to call together a special committee before a decision could be rendered and he was not sure when this would be done either by himself or by his Deputy. I told him that we would appreciate any indication he might give concerning the time of such decision.

[Here follow discussions of the Huleh conflict, TSO administrative matters, and a replacement for General Riley.]

S/ISA Files: Lot 52-26: "Israel"

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Special Assistant in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Gardiner)

SECRET

[Washington,] April 4, 1951.

Subject: Israeli Request for Grant Aid Fiscal 1952 Participants: Mr. Linder—E

Mr. Linder—E Mr. Stinebower—E

Mr. Johnson-White House 1

Mr. Meloy[?]—S/S Mr. Gardiner—NEA

Mr. Lawton—Budget Bureau

Mr. Lawton had requested the meeting to discuss what plans the Department might have to modify its presentation for economic assistance to the Near East in the light of the introduction of a bill in the House and the Senate to provide $150 million grant aid to Israel. The Department officials made it clear that no position had yet been taken by the Department, and that the matter was having the consideration of the Secretary. It was, however, the belief of the Department representatives present that the Department might wish to amend its presentation to the Budget Bureau to include larger increments of aid for Israel and the Arab states in a balanced program that would accord with a policy of impartiality toward the various countries concerned. Mr. Johnson requested that the matter be further reviewed at the staff level, but it was stated that such further consultation was probably not feasible until a position had been adopted by the Department.<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Presumably Richard N. Johnson of the Office of the Special Assistant to the President.

884A.00 TA/4-451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Tel Aviv, April 4, 1951—5 p. m.

610. Depcirtel 562 Mar 22  $^{\rm 1}$  and Embtel 585 March 27 re Israel request grant in aid.  $^{\rm 2}$

While Emb lacks statistical data necessary to make adequate analysis relationship amount requested to actual econ needs, the fol observations are submitted as of possible interest:

1. Immigration policy is basic in official and public thinking here and there is no doubt govt is committed to maintain present high rate of immigration at least until Iraqi and Rumanian situations liquidated.

2. In absence marked change for better in its relations with Arab countries, Israel will not be inclined lessen present rate expenditures for defense purposes.

3. Although amount requested large for country this size, it is not believed sufficient enable Israel achieve econ equilibrium, but on contrary wld be in nature of stop-gap specifically for next fiscal year. Further requests are accordingly to be expected.

4. Emb believes drains on economy for immigration and mil expenditures together with limited prospective income will make some aid essential if Israel is to maintain roughly present living standards. In other words, decline in such standards is probable if aid not forthcoming despite loans and remittances expected from abroad and anticipated increases in natl income.

<sup>1</sup> Not printed.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In a memorandum of a conversation held April 4 with Mr. Johnson, just subsequent to that above, Mr. Linder stated that "... Mr. Johnson again emphasized the desirability of keeping his office informed as our point of view developed, the purpose being to try to avoid the risk that the Department and the White House points of view would not run completely parallel." (784A.5 MAP/4-451)

&lt;sup>2</sup> In this telegram the Ambassador had in part reported that the Embassy had received a copy of the Israeli note requesting aid (see footnote 2, p. 606) and that the Embassy would comment on the request following discussion of the matter with Mr. McGhee (in Israel). (884A.00 TA/3-2751)

5. Emb believes further that decrease in living standards wld be exploited by extremist opposition elements.

6. Note frankly appeals for help in financing ambitious immigration program, and manner of making request for grant clearly shows that govt believes fate of request depends on public and congressional support which Amer friends of Israel can muster. Subject has not been mentioned since notice given personally by FonMin (Embtel 585 Mar 27) and no further query is anticipated.

Davis

884A.00 R/4-551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 5, 1951.

Subject: Grant-aid to Israel Participants: The Secretary

Mr. Abraham Feinberg

NE-Mr. Waldo

Mr. Feinberg called in accord with a suggestion from the President that he see me so that I could explain to him some of the problems faced by the Department in connection with the Congressional bills of April 2 to authorize grant-in-aid of $150 million for Israel.

I told Mr. Feinberg that the principal problem facing us in the Near East was one of security. Our first line of defense in that area was the states of Greece, Turkey, and Iran; behind these countries the Arab states and Israel provided the only defense in depth. The Arab states, however, were not very secure. At the present time they could not defend themselves against the Soviet Union. A year ago these states had expressed the conviction that Israel was preparing for aggressive action against them. Israel had held similar views with respect to the Arab states. As a result of the uneasiness in the NE the US, the UK, and France had issued a declaration, May 25, 1950, which assured all of the states of the Near East that these three countries would be prepared to supply them with arms adequate for internal security and for necessary self-defense on receiving assurances from the individual states that these arms would not be used against one another. The declaration also indicated that we wished to strengthen these countries and permit them to play their part in the defense of the area. As a further implementation of the policy set forth in the declaration, the Department had been studying means whereby individual states of the Near East could be strengthened in order that they might be in a position to defend themselves against aggression from the Soviet Union. At present none of the states in the Near East, with the possible exception of Israel was in such a position.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

The bill which had been introduced into Congress authorizing $150 million for Israel came at a very inopportune time; Congress was in a difficult mood, and the Department's aid programs would probably encounter considerable resistance. It was probable, moreover, that if 150 million dollars were made available for Israel it would be taken out of the Department's program already contemplated for the area, which included the Near Eastern states and Iran. There was no question but that, if Iran and the Arab states were to fall to the Soviet Union, Israel's position in the Near East would be untenable.

Mr. Feinberg said that the President had talked to him and that he relied on the President's and my views in this matter. He assured me, therefore, that no pressure would be brought to bear in connection with the bills in the House and Senate. He was leaving for Israel in a few days to bring back Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion; and would explain our position to the Prime Minister. Mr. Feinberg appeared certain the Prime Minister would understand the US position. I told Mr. Feinberg that none of the arguments I had made to him would be likely to carry much weight with the Ambassador of Israel, who would feel that he had arguments equally as valid as mine. On the other hand, we could hardly expect Israel's thinking regarding grant aid to be similar to ours or that Israel would propose a program of assistance for the area as a whole in asking for a grant from the United States.<sup>2</sup>

683.84A/4-651

Memorandum by the Acting Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waldo) to the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Kopper)<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

[Washington,] April 6, 1951.

Subject: Summary of Events Relating to the Huleh Lake Controversy.

Background

Huleh Lake lies in the northeastern corner of Israel, hard against part of the border with Syria; it empties into the Jordan at its south-

&lt;sup>2</sup>On April 5, during a discussion with President Truman of several foreign policy issues, the Secretary raised the subject of aid to Israel. Mr. Acheson's account of that part of the conversation follows:

&quot;I reported to the President our analysis of the problems created by the Taft-Douglas bill. He has these very much in mind and will talk with me about the matter again early next week.

&quot;In the meantime, we should proceed with our thinking on various courses which might be pursued, but no one in the Department should express views of any sort outside the Department without further direction from me." (Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation: Lot 65 D 238)

Arrangement of documentation in this lot file indicates that the Secretary's talk with the President occurred after his conversation with Mr. Feinberg.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Worcester.

ern end. Its northern shore is bordered by extensive malarial marshes and a program to drain these has been in mind since before World War I. The Israel Government, in its desire to gain more agricultural land and improve the public health of the area, began in recent months to initiate a project which would straighten the Jordan River bed, lower the water level of Huleh Lake, and thereby drain the marshes.

However, drainage activities must perforce take place within the demilitarized zone below the southern shore of the lake, and political complications between Israel and Syria have become paramount therefore during the last two months. The Israelis claimed rights of construction, alteration and expropriation, stating that compensation would be granted to those Arab landowners whose property was involved. When requested by the MAC chairman to cease work until completion of discussions, the Israeli delegate refused to comply and stated that (1) "entire matter had been discussed with State Department, who gave the green light to proceed, (2) therefore they were not worried about what the Syrian Government thought since the US controls the UN." <sup>2</sup>

February 14:

The Syrian delegation to the MAC complained that the Israeli project was (1) giving the Israelis a military advantage by removing a natural obstacle, (2) preventing many Arabs of the demilitarized zone from resumption of normal civilian life. The Israel delegation did not object to submission of the complaint, and General Riley submitted a memorandum in reply on

March 7:

At this meeting the memorandum was read and in substance opined:

1) Drainage of Lake Huleh would not give Israel any military advantage not equally applicable to Syria, and therefore was not a violation of Article II of the Armistice Agreement.

2) The work was of civilian nature in territory under Israel control, where no Syrian objections could be offered.

3) Flooding of Arab lands at the south shore because of dam construction was an obstacle to normal civilian life, and a violation of Article V of the Armistice Agreement.

4) Neither party had sovereign rights within the demilitarized area, no Mandate or Ottoman concessions could apply. Therefore, construction work and expropriation without full consent of landowners were non-exercisable and detrimental to the gradual restoration of normal civilian life in the area, and constituted a violation of Article V.

General Riley found that all land operations should cease until a mutual agreement was reached by Israel and Syria. The Israel delegation charged General Riley could only deal with Article II, the Syrians replied that he must consider all sides of the problem and that he had not gone beyond his prerogatives. It was agreed to postpone a vote until

&lt;sup>2</sup> The quotation is adapted from telegram 162 from Jerusalem, March 5, p. 588.

March 8:

The Israel delegation did not appear, but sent word that its Government must give the question further and careful consideration. The Syrians protested the delay, asked that the TSO intervene to stop the construction work immediately, and the Chairman of the MAC so requested the Israel delegation on March 10.

March 15:

Jerusalem Tel 169 March 15 <sup>3</sup> reported that Israel delegate Ramati flatly refused a request by UN headquarters to stop Huleh operations immediately. He said problem was outside scope of MAC.

An Israeli patrol crossed to the east bank of the Jordan, and Arabs on the Syrian side opened fire. MAC Chairman Bossavy stopped the gunfire and the Syrian delegate assured him there would not be military intervention except under provocation or orders from higher authorities. Israelis refused to remove the tractor and Bossavy immobilized it.

March 17:

Deptel 386 of March 17 <sup>4</sup> gave the Department's views, which in substance followed General Riley's recommendations, and expressed the hope that Israel would attend the March 19 MAC meeting and avoid provocative acts.

Damascus Tel 470 of March 17 <sup>5</sup> gave the Syrian Government's views, which also paralleled General Riley's; the Syrians contended they had not interfered with force, although Huleh Arab landowners had resisted Israeli operations.

March 18:

The Syrian Minister of Defense stated to Colonel de Ridder that if Israel continued operations, the Syrian army was prepared to take punitive action.

March 19:

Israeli delegate Ramati proposed at the MAC meeting that the question be removed from the MAC and placed in Chairman Bossavy's hand. Bossavy agreed and added the provision that all work should also stop immediately; Syria concurred, but Israel withdrew.

Apparently at some point during this period the operations had ceased, for the Israeli delegate warned that after March 23 work would recommence regardless of whether Bossavy had come to a decision or not.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/3-1551)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Ante, p. 600.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/3–1751)

March 21:

The MAC Chairman reported Huleh Arab landowners were unwilling to accept compensation.

Col. Bossavy was notified by the Palestine Land Development Co. that work would be resumed on March 23.

March 26:

A meeting between Makleff and Shishakli was fruitless. Makleff claimed the MAC Chairman had no power to order work cessation, that he could only so order for a limited period of time and solely to discuss compensation. Syria maintained the operations should be unconditionally stopped to find an overall solution.

March 27:

Israeli tractors resumed work. Israeli army opened fire with mortars and machine guns; the Syrian army did not take action, but the Syrian delegate lodged a strong complaint against the Israeli army for firing small arms and mortars from the demilitarized zone.

The Acting Chief of Staff TSO requested the Israeli defense forces Chief of Staff to: (1) withdraw a paramilitary force that had emplaced mortars in the demilitarized zone, (2) withdraw a military patrol and additional military personnel. Israeli forces were repeatedly firing bursts from automatic weapons.

March 28:

Reports continued of Israeli mortar and automatic fire in demilitarized zone and close to Syrian border. UN observers stated that the Syrian army had apparently not fired a single shot throughout the dispute, although Col. Shishakli had warned that he could not for long restrain his men in the face of repeated provocation. All Arab fire was by Huleh landowners in the demilitarized zone, or by the same Arabs who had retreated over the Syrian border.

The Syrian Air Force and two infantry brigades were alerted for action.

March 30:

The U.S. position was explained to Israel Embassy officials by the Department. Mr. Keren was told that apparently the Israelis had taken action contrary to the armistice agreement, and that continuance of incidents by Israel could have a most deleterious effect upon the Department's attitude.

To the Syrian Minister the Department expressed appreciation for Syria's moderate attitude, and the hope that Syria would continue to exercise restraint and not take any untoward action.

April 1:

Jerusalem Tel 179 of April 1 <sup>6</sup> reported that UN observers had been fired upon by Israelis and sugar put in their gas tanks over recent days. Col. de Ridder of the MAC stated an amicable arrangement of the drainage question could have been made, if the Israelis had not been so insolent and aggressive. He placed much of the blame on the attitude of Israeli delegate Ramati.

April 2:

The tension relaxed somewhat at this point after being at explosive heights for the past few weeks. The Israel Chief of Staff assured Col. Metz of the TSO that: (1) No Israel troops or mortars would be allowed in the demilitarized zone, (2) UN observers would have freedom of movement, (3) The Israeli delegation would attend MAC meetings. April 3:

The Secretary General of the Syrian Foreign Ministry stated to a Legation officer (Damascus Tel 505 April 3) <sup>7</sup> that the Syrian Government's attitude would continue to be one of restraint and moderation, but he failed to comprehend why the MAC was unable to enforce its decisions.

He added that Syria hoped to find a settlement through the MAC, but that meanwhile the Arab landowners had no course of appeal and the Israelis were forcibly making changes unilaterally. The whole question of UN authority seemed at stake; he hoped the MAC would be able to enforce its rulings so that Security Council action would not be necessary.

683.84A/4-651: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

CONFIDENTIAL

NIACT

Washington, April 6, 1951-7 p. m.

595. While Dept does not have complete and accurate factual acct of shooting of seven Israelies by Syrians, subsequent bombing Syrian installations by Israeli Air Force in El Hamma area April 4 and 5, you shid nevertheless make known fol US views to Syrian and Israeli govts at earliest opportunity:

I. US takes serious view trend recent developments between Syria and Israel. Stake which Syria, Israel and UN have in border peace is such that allocation blame and analysis validity of accusations and counter accusations are dwarfed in larger context of peace in area. Use of mil measures to settle differences can only lead to tragic consequences in countries concerned, area as a whole and world at large. US believes UN machinery adequate to settle questions in dispute and that this machinery shld be utilized to maximum. Under circumstances no mil measures can possibly be justified.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/4–151) <sup>7</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/4–351)

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram drafted by Mr. Jones and Mr. Kopper. Cleared with UNP. WE, and BNA. Transmission approved by Mr. McGhee personally. Sent niact to Damascus and Tel Aviv, and repeated for information to Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, Moscow, and Paris.

ISRAEL

II. US believes that Demilitarized Zone shld be immed evacuated by mil forces both sides and Israel civil police within area shld remain close to Israel settlements. Mbrs shld comply with letter and spirit recommendations UN Chairman MAC has made or may make and with terms of armistice agreements.

III. US is consulting with UK and Fr. Unless there is cessation activity, we plan discuss with them what action may be necessary.

Dept today making known above to Syrian and Israeli Chiefs of Mission here.

For Embs Paris and London, Dept informing Brit and Fr Embs here substance above. Dept believes it wld be helpful if UK and Fr govts took similar action vis-à-vis Israel and Syrian govts.<sup>2</sup>

For USUN: If asked you may inform interested dels US position as set forth above. Dept believes it highly desirable that report be recd from UN observers in field quickly as possible.

ACHESON

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 6, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Israel Ambassador

Participants: H. E. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel

Mr. Moshe Keren, Counselor, Embassy of Israel

NEA-Mr. McGhee NEA-Mr. Berry NE-Mr. Lewis Jones

NE-Mr. Waldo

The Israel Ambassador called to discuss the following subjects with me:

1. The Syrian-Israel dispute: The Israel Ambassador outlined the Israel position on the Demilitarized Zone. He said that Israel claimed

 $<sup>^2\,\</sup>rm In$  telegram 6022 from Paris, April 8, the Embassy in part indicated that the British and French Governments both were taking action in the matter similar to that of the United States. (683.84A/4–851) full sovereignty over the Zone and that a letter from Ralph Bunche to Israel military representatives fully confirmed the Israel view. If the Syrians persisted in their attitude of obstruction in the Zone, the Israel Government would be forced to release the letter to the public.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

The Israel Ambassador claimed that Syria had violated the Armistice Agreement in attempting to prevent Israel engineering operations in the Demilitarized Zone. The Armistice Agreement specifically provided for the gradual restoration of normal civilian life in the area. The Hule project had been under consideration for a long time and the draining of the swamps could only be considered as providing for the restoration of ordinary civil life in the zone. The Israel Government could not permit either Syria or the UN to hold up progress in the Demilitarized Zone indefinitely. After a certain length of time one could consider that the Armistice Agreements became obsolete. He was firmly convinced, therefore, that the Arab states should negotiate final peace settlements instead of obstructing legitimate Israel operations in Israel territory. The Israel government took a very serious view of the shooting of the seven Israel policemen in the Demilitarized Zone. He regretted that the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission and the French Colonel Bossavy had not seen fit to go to the scene of the shooting. In the Israel view, Colonel Bossavy was no longer acceptable as Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission. The policemen had been killed on Israel soil while on a routine patrol mission. The Israel government had thereupon undertaken punitive action and bombed Syrian border fortifications.

Mr. Waldo said that a cable from Jerusalem 2 reported that the Israel press release on the killing of the policemen was substantially correct, except that initial reports from UN observers in the area to the Deputy Chief of Staff in Jerusalem appeared to indicate that the Israel policemen might have been shot on Syrian soil.

I informed the Ambassador that since we did not have all the facts on the situation in the Demilitarized Zone we were not in a position to adjudicate the case. We did feel, however, that Israel could not unilaterally interpret the Armistice Agreement. With regard to the shooting of the policemen, however, and the subsequent bombing by Israel of Syrian soil, I informed the Ambassador that, while we deeply regretted the shooting of the policemen, that incident in no way justified the deliberate retaliatory bombing of Syrian positions. It was one thing for incidents to occur on the spot where it was frequently impossible to determine who was at fault, since there might be an exchange of rifle shots from both sides; it was another matter entirely for the government of Israel to undertake reprisals by bombing. We could not over-estimate the gravity of the situation and were taking up the matter of the Syrian-Israel border incidents with the French and with the British.<sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference is to telegram 184 from Jerusalem, April 5, not printed. (683.84A/

Notes which in part embodied the position taken here by Mr. McGhee regarding the Huleh dispute and the incident at El Hamma were delivered to the Embassy of Israel and the Legation of Syria on April 7.

In the note to Israel, the Department also stated in part that the United States "assumed" that Israel would "... cease forthwith military action in the area and [would] act in accord with the findings of the United Nations.

2. The Ambassador then took up the question of the grant-aid bill. He admitted that Israel was a part of the Near East region, but believed there should be no discrimination as between Israel and the Arab states; if the Arabs should appeal to the US for economic assistance, Israel considered such a move a progressive step on their part; if the Arab states did not consider they were justified in asking the US for economic assistance, Israel did not believe that this should deter the US from extending aid to Israel. He thought that the US made somewhat of a fetish of regionalism; Arab needs were less than those of Israel, since Israel had special problems which had to be considered outside of the general framework of plans for the Near East as a whole. The Ambassador considered that the US would be strengthened by assisting Israel and it would improve the special relationship that existed between the US and Israel. He said that Israel representatives were ready to discuss the matter with the Department at any time.

I informed the Ambassador that the US would not expect Israel to submit an overall program for the Near East, since that was a matter which lay within our determination. I told him that the request for grant-aid was being given careful consideration.

3. The Israel Ambassador informed me that Israel has submitted its request for one and a half billion dollars of reparations from Germany, with great seriousness. He said that he doubted that the Germans who supported Hitler would now help defend the democracies and that those Germans must expatiate their sins. Israel opinion on the question of German reparations was very agitated, and Mr. Horowitz planned to meet with officers of the German Affairs Bureau and discuss this problem. I told the Ambassador that this matter was one primarily for consideration by another Bureau of the Department.

&quot;In the long run, the position of Israel in the Near East is dependent upon the development of friendly relations with the Arab States." (Text is contained in telegram 421 to Tel Aviv, April 7; 683.84A/4-751.)

In the note to Syria, the Department recounted the representations made to Israel and also stated in part: "The United States likewise urges the Syrian Government to take immediate steps to assure that there will be no further recourse to violence on the part of Syrian forces." (Text is contained in telegram 366 to Damascus, April 7, repeated to Tel Aviv as number 420; 683.84A/4-751.)

At the Department's press and radio news conference held April 9, at 12:35 p. m., Mr. McDermott verbally made public the substance of the two notes. The transcript of his remarks is included in Department of State "Daily News Conferences", vi, 1951, under date of April 9, pp. 2-5.

774.5/4-1151

The Egyptian Foreign Ministry to the Embassy in Egypt 1

Translation

CONFIDENTIAL

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Israeli advance towards the Gulf of Akaba in violation of the truce 2 imposed by the Security Council and the General Armistice Agreement 3 is a cause of serious concern for Egypt owing to the prevailing tension in the Middle East and the state of war between the Arabs and Jews.

- 2. Measures of safeguard and security have been necessary. One of these measures has been, as is well-known, the occupation of the islets of Tiran and Sinafir to affirm the sovereign rights of the Kingdom of Egypt over these Egyptian islets situated not far from the ingress to the Gulf of Akaba.4
- 3. The appropriate Egyptian authorities have recently had recourse to another measure of security by declaring as a zone forbidden for navigation the maritime surface west of an imaginary line extending straight from Ras Nusrani to Ras Muhammad in the South Eastern part of the Sinai Peninsula and at the ingress to the Gulf of Akaba. By its geographical position this zone is away from the maritime route usually followed by boats wishing to penetrate into the Gulf of Akaba from the Red Sea or vice versa.
- 4. Although sovereign of the Akaba Strait, also called the Tiran Strait and situated entirely within the boundaries of her territorial waters, Egypt does not intend to prohibit the innocent passage of warships or commercial boats of friendly countries, in their capacity as bordering states, without prejudice to Egypt's legitimate rights of control or to the exercise of her exceptional rights of inspection and of seizing contraband articles, by virtue of the provisions of the Decree of February 6, 1950, as long as these provisions remain in force.
- 5. As to enemy boats, a distinction must be made between warships, and commercial boats. The former are forbidden from entering and traversing the territorial waters of the Kingdom of Egypt up to a distance of three nautical miles from the Egyptian coast, and this

&lt;sup>1</sup> Transmitted to Washington as enclosure 1 to despatch 2446 from Cairo, April 11, p. 633.

A copy of the original French text, not printed, forms enclosure 2 to the despatch.

The Security Council had issued its final cease-fire order on July 15, 1948. For text, see U.N. Doc. S/902 or Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. v, pt. 2, p. 1224.

<sup>3</sup> Between Israel and Egypt, signed February 24, 1949. For text, see U.N. Doc. S/1264/Corr. 1 and Add. 1.

For information on this incident, see telegram 102, January 30, in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. v, p. 711.

by virtue of Article 2, paragraph 2 of the General Armistice Agreement signed at Rhodes on February 24, 1949. As to enemy commercial boats, they can only enter any section of the Egyptian territorial waters at their own risk. The least that can be said, without prejudice to the future attitude of the Egyptian Court of Prizes, is that they expose themselves to seizure and detention until their fate is decided by the above Court of Prizes which has always endeavored that its jurisprudence should be in conformity with the international law on this matter.

APRIL 9, 1951.

683.84A/4-1051: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, April 10, 1951—7 p. m.

612. Syria's Min <sup>2</sup> asked Dept Rep today whether USG action on Syro-Israeli frontier dispute taken under tripartite declaration. Dept Rep replied US considered tripartite declaration shld be used only in circumstances more serious than the present. Believed recent dispute cld be resolved in existing UN machinery. Although consulting with UK and Fr because of mutual interest in problem US does not contemplate action under tripartite declaration at this time. Action taken by US thus far prompted by friendship for both Syria and Israel and obligation as member UN do all possible promote peace and stability. Inform FonOff of foregoing and report views re applicability tripartite declaration to frontier incidents.

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Barrow and cleared with UNP. Sent to London and Paris and repeated for information to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, Jidda, and Tel Aviv.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Faiz El-Khouri.

 $<sup>^3</sup>$  During discussion of the Israel-Syria border dispute at the press conference cited in footnote 3, p. 626, the following exchange had taken place:

&quot;Q. Can you explain it just a little, on what aspect we are taking up with the British and French on this?

&quot;A. The discussion of the agreement which was made May 25, 1950. It was provided in it that we should consult should there be any violation or threat to the other nations, arrangements that had been made with reference to fringe and disputed areas between Israel and her neighbors, for the purpose of seeing what should be done immediately if there was trouble, or head off trouble that had not broken out."

262.84A41/4-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Alexander F. Kiefer of the Office of German Economic Affairs

RESTRICTED

[Washington,] April 10, 1951.

Subject: Israeli Reparation Claim Against Germany.

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador

Mr. Horowitz, Israeli Minister of Finance

GER—Henry A. Byroade GEA—Alexander F. Kiefer

The Ambassador and Mr. Horowitz stated that they had come to discuss in greater detail with Mr. Byroade the Israeli reparation claim against Germany, which had been the subject of a note from the Israeli Ambassador on March 12, 1951. Mr. Horowitz stated that the German balance of payments was now greatly improved, and while it was realized that it was still short of equilibrium, it seemed to him that it was sound enough to bear the burden of the Israeli claim. He compared the German balance of payments with that of Israel, having exports of 13 million pounds sterling and imports of 103 million pounds sterling, the latter much larger figure being due entirely to the costs of resettlement which, it was recalled, had entered into the Israeli reparation claim. Mr. Horowitz noted that many restrictions on German production had been removed and that Germany had many exportable commodities in a seller's market; the Israeli Government realized that payment of the reparation claim by Germany would have to take several years and that it probably would have to be in unrequited exports, rather than foreign exchange. This was no problem for Israel because Germany was producing precisely the things which Israel needed most urgently.

The Israelis felt that Germany was actually ready to do something along the lines which the Israeli Government had in mind and Mr. Eban added that the influence of the Occupying Powers under the circumstances might make the difference between readiness to do something and action itself. Mr. Horowitz expressed his conviction that the Israeli claim was entirely feasible from the economic point of view. What was needed was Allied pressure on the Germans to perform. The Israeli claim was not a purely legal one, and possibly there were certain legalistic gaps in it. The circumstances, however, were such that political and moral bridges over these gaps were completely justified. One had to reckon in this connection with the very strong public opinion on this matter in Israel.

Mr. Byroade asked what Mr. Horowitz had meant by a German readiness to do something. Mr. Horowitz replied that there seemed to be a realization in the higher circles in Germany that a measure of additional retribution was called for, but that it was quite possible that this feeling did not prevail among the people.

Mr. Byroade suggested that what the Israelis wanted was really reparation out of current production. It also seemed to him that the Israelis saw the German picture in brighter terms than we did; actually we expected a German trade deficit next year, additional ECA assistance, and a mounting burden on the Germans in connection with the defense effort. Mr. Horowitz admitted the point about reparation out of German production, but stated that he preferred to consider it a measure of necessary retribution. It was realized that the German Government would be faced with certain other obligations which would have to be satisfied out of limited resources. The matter really boiled down to a question of priorities and in considering these, one would have to bear in mind such matters as the comparative standard of living as between Germany and Israel. For the Israelis, the question was whether the Israeli people should be kept on a level of starvation so that the Germans might be permitted to contribute to Allied security while maintaining their present relatively high standard of living. The amount of the Israeli reparation claim was actually relatively insignificant in the total German economic picture. Furthermore, since the matter of the defense of the Western world had come up, it might be well to bear in mind that a strong and well developed Israel was also a very considerable asset to that defense.

Mr. Byroade stated that he agreed that there was a question of priorities here and that he had really wanted to indicate that there would be a German deficit for sometime to come, and that the priority for the support of Allied Forces would place heavy demands on the German economy. He inquired what time period the Israeli Government had in mind for the payment of the Israeli claim. Mr. Horowitz replied that this might be five to seven years, depending on the development of German exports. Mr. Byroade commented that he wished the problem were as easy as the Israeli representatives had made it out. Mr. Eban commented that the impact on the Israeli economy of rehabilitating 500,000 persons was greater than the impact of the necessary assistance on the German economy.

Mr. Horowitz remarked that there were strong psychological considerations. Something had to be done soon by the Germans and gracefully, if this question was not to poison the atmosphere for years to come.

Mr. Byroade stated that the Israeli claim was really an Allied problem. He was sympathetic to the logic of the Israeli position, but he was also acutely conscious of the practical difficulties arising out of the nature of the world in which we live today.

[Here follows discussion of procedural matters.]

683.84A/4-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Berry) <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 10, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Israel Ambassador

Participants: H.E. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel

NEA-Mr. Berry NE-Mr. Lewis Jones NE-Mr. Waldo

The Ambassador called at his own request to make some further remarks on the Israel-Syria border situation.

The Ambassador said that he had recently been in touch with General Riley in New York on the Israel-Syria situation. The General had agreed that it was unfortunate that the dispute should come before the Security Council. The General considered that this problem could be worked out in the Mixed Armistice Commission. Israel was quite willing to negotiate the problem in the MAC providing that Col. Bossavy was replaced as Chairman. Israel had had at least the right to expect a "show of gallantry" from Col. Bossavy at the time of the shooting of the seven policemen.

The Ambassador said that he considered uncalled for the release to the press of Mr. McGhee's remarks as summarized in the aide-mémoire given Mr. Keren on Saturday.<sup>2</sup> When Israel had submitted notes to the Department, Israel representatives made a practice of consulting with the Department before releasing them to the press. He would have hoped that Israel would have merited reciprocal treatment on this occasion. With regard to the press account itself, it had interpreted Mr. McGhee's remarks as a rebuke to Israel in according Israel the largest measure of responsibility for the border situation. He denied that the onus lay with Israel and claimed that continuous Syrian violence along Israel's borders which had culminated in the shooting of the seven policemen, had compelled Israel to take punitive action.

I told the Ambassador that we could only repeat our position as it had been expressed in the aide-mémoire. It had been decided to release our views to the press because of the depth of our concern over the dangerous potentialities of the border situation and because of repeated inquiries from the press. In considering that the shooting of the policemen had not warranted the deliberate retaliatory bombing of Syrian soil, we had not attempted to pass judgment on the question of the dispute over the Demilitarized Zone. It was hoped that a proper discussion of this matter could take place in the SC.

<sup>2</sup> April 7. See footnote 3, p. 626.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

The Ambassador then informed me that there had been another border clash in which Arabs in the village of Nuqueib had shot at Israel civil police while the latter were performing their routine duties.

Mr. Jones said that we would inquire of our missions concerning this incident.

774.5/4-1151 : Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Cairo, April 11, 1951.

No. 2446

Subject: Transmission of Egyptian Foreign Office Aide-Mémoire re Gulf of Aqaba 1

As stated in the reference despatch 2 this Embassy has kept all inquiries of the Government of Egypt concerning an Egyptian naval blockade in the Gulf of Agaba on a highly informal and personal basis with officials of the Egyptian Foreign Office. It was, therefore, somewhat of a surprise recently when the Counselor of the Embassy was handed an Aide-Mémoire on the subject during the course of one of his regular visits to Abdul Rahman Hakki Pasha, Under Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. That Hakki Pasha may have been slightly confused was evidenced by the fact that he apologized to the Counselor for having misplaced the Embassy's Aide-Mémoire on the subject. There had, of course, been no such Aide-Mémoire.

The Embassy is certain that the appropriate legal section of the Department will wish to give the most careful consideration to the contents of the enclosed Aide-Mémoire and would appreciate instructions as to the type of acknowledgment, if any, which should be made of its receipt. That the Government of Egypt is not certain of its own position may be indicated by the facts uncovered by the Office of the Naval Attaché that the "Circular to Shipping" put out by the Egyptian Government in implementation of the reasoning contained in the Aide-Mémoire was dated December 25, 1950, was in Arabic but not in French, was received by only one shipping agent in Alexandria contrary to the normal custom of full circulation, and only two weeks ago was denied by one agency of the Egyptian Government as even being in existence.

Although rejection of the points made in the Aide-Mémoire may present a complicated and even questionable legal problem, if the Aide-Mémoire is received only in silence such silence will be interpreted by the Government of Egypt as acquiescence of the United States Government in the position assumed.

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dated April 9, p. 628. <sup>2</sup> Despatch 2090 of March 5, not printed.

784A.5/4-1151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Tel Aviv, April 11, 1951-6 p. m.

645. Having heard that this govt was planning an official celebration in Jerusalem on May 11, I took occasion recently to review briefly the policy set forth in Deptel 340, February 14 <sup>2</sup> when on a routine visit to the FonOff to make arrangements for the entertainment of official visitors. This was done to forestall if possible receiving an official invitation to celebration or at least prepare a basis for non-attendance shld one nevertheless be recd.

I have now been asked informally whether I wld consider it consistent with our policy to attend such a celebration in Jerusalem and have expressed the view that it wld not be consistent with such policy. I thanked the FonOff spokesman for taking matter up in this way and said I hoped no invitation wld be recd in circumstances. I understand my Brit, French and Belgian colleagues agree this view.

DAVIS

683.84A/4-1251: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

London, April 12, 1951-7 p. m.

5410. Re Deptcirtel 612, April 10, 7 p. m. 1

Asst head eastern San [Eastern Department?] <sup>2</sup> expressed FonOff view that Israel Borderment apparently on Syrian side border as well as in demilitarized zone seemed lift recent Syro-Israeli disputes out of category mere frontier incident, or at least threatened do so. FonOff considered that in expressing UK views and concern to both parties (along lines similar Dept's) and in consultating with US and French it was in fact acting consistently with its obligations under tripartite declaration and so gave to understand Syrian and Israeli dipl reps here. FonOff agrees that it preferable withhold any appearance of calling tripartite declaration into formal operation for more serious sitn but since action to be taken under declaration not defined, sees no reason why we cannot say we have already acted according its spirit.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Amman and Jerusalem.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 580.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 629. <sup>2</sup> In 1951 the Assistant Head of the Eastern Department of the United Kingdom's Foreign Office for the region including Israel and Syria was J. C. Wardrop.

FonOff also agrees present dispute shid be handled by existing UN Luchinery.3

GIFFORD

<sup>3</sup> In telegram 6160 from Paris, April 12, the Embassy reported on its conversation with a Foreign Office official with regard to French representations made to Israel and Syria concerning the Huleh conflict. The Embassy stated in part:

"Luc pointed out that FonOff, while mentioning tripartite declaration as explanation of their démarches, had carefully avoided stating they were taking action thereunder. He agrees that any action under tripartite declaration shid be reserved for graver events than present frontier incidents, which shid be handled by existing UN machinery." (683.84A/4-1251)

330/4-1351: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, April 13, 1951—3 p.m.

845. Re impending SC consideration Syrian-Israeli allegations armistice violations, fol US position shld be transmitted in confidence UKDel and FrDel only. Embassies London, Paris requested do same.

1. View need for establishing facts, parties and Riley shld be heard by SC, and latest field reports from MACs re status Israeli-Syrian disputes shid be required by SC.

2. US Rep's role during presentation in SC by Israel, Syria, Riley and MAC during submission report will be one of attempting elicit all facts and to be sure complaints have thorough airing. However, efforts enlarge scope grievances during course presentation cases to be discouraged by US Rep, privately if such efforts can be anticipated and publicly if necessary in the Council. US will be prepared present its views in SC fol steps in para 1.

3. While facts elicited by SC might affect eventual draft res, on basis of facts now at hand, Dept's thinking on possible res which might be introduced in SC with joint sponsorship generally along fol lines:

a. Reminding parties past concern of SC in achieving final peace in area;

b. Reminding parties of obligations under Art 2, para 4 of UN Charter 2 and commitments under Armistice Agreement that there shall be no resort to mil action against each other and accordingly noting incidents and, if useful purpose will be served, condemning actions of party or parties demonstrated to be at fault 3 as inconsistent with obligations undertaken:

c. Calling upon parties to use available armistice machinery and abide by decisions thereof:

For text of the Charter of the United Nations, signed at San Francisco, &lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Ludlow and cleared by UNA, NE, and NEA. Transmission approved by Mr. Hickerson personally. Repeated for information to Damascus, Jerusalem, London, Paris, and Tel Aviv.

June 26, 1945, see TS No. 993, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1031.

*Between the words "fault" and "as" in the source text the following phrase is crossed out: ", e.g. retaliatory bombing,". The change was initialed by Mr. Hickerson.

d. Endorsing Riley's views that rights of parties are held in abeyance in demilitarized zone and accordingly directives of Chairman MAC pursuant his auth Art 5 Armistice Agreements shid be respected;

e. Declaring that it is SC view that parties cannot refuse participate in MAC mtgs;

f. Reminding parties obligations under Charter and Armistice Agreement to reach a permanent peace;

g. Calling on Chief of Staff UNTSO to report at end of 30 days on compliance given to res.<sup>4</sup>

ACHESO

'In telegram 6228 from Paris, April 14, the Embassy reported in part that officials of the Foreign Office had "expressed entire approval" of the position of the United States outlined above. (683.84A/4-1451)

In telegram 5466 from London, April 17, the Embassy stated in part that the Foreign Office's instructions to the United Kingdom Delegation at the United Nations corresponded to numbered paragraphs 1 and 2 above, but that the United Kingdom had not yet taken a position regarding the substance of the resolution. According to the Embassy the Foreign Office was inclined to regard the question of sovereignty in the demilitarized zone as too complex for consideration in the present resolution. (683.84A/4-1751).

683.84A/4-1551: Telegram

The Minister in Syria (Cannon) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

<sup>8</sup> 1949.

Damascus, April 15, 1951—3 p. m.

536. UN official has discussed with me in strict confidence his views on how UN authority is to be restored in Syro-Israel dispute over demilitarized zone. Summary his remarks follows:

1. Can Israelis bring armed police into the zone? Syrians strongly affirm police may only be recruited from local population pointing to Bunche's reply dated June 26, 1949 <sup>2</sup> to question raised at last meeting Syrian-Israeli armistice comm June 21,<sup>3</sup> heading in part as follows:

"Such civilian administration (referred to in para 5 of armistice agreement) including policing will be on a local basis, without raising general questions of admin, jurisdiction, citizenship, and sovereignty." Israeli place stress however on subsequent passage in same letter stating admin and police in zone wld be "Arab" and "Israeli" respectively. Syrians declare Bunche clearly meant local Jewish population in zone when referring to "Israelis". Only SC with perhaps Bunche as witness can clear this question up. Up to 250 Israeli police now in central zone and number shld be reduced to Mar 15 level. Arab villages shld be policed by Arabs.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman, Ankara, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, Paris, and Tel Aviv.

<sup>2</sup> For text, see U.N. Doc. S/PV.542, p. 31.

2. Does Israel have sovereignty over zone? Acting Chief Staff Truce Observation Comm, has already informed Israelis their claim to sovereignty is untenable under the Armistice Agreement and that Israeli territory ends where zone begins. However only SC can give ruling that will be respected by Israel. In letter to Sharett also dated June 26, 1949 <sup>4</sup> Bunche stated "questions of permanent boundaries, territorial sovereignty, customs, trade relations and the like must be dealt within ultimate peace settlement and not in Armistice Agreement". Israeli official documents before UN asserting zone within Israeli territory should not be allowed to stand in record.

3. Has chairman of MAC authority stopped work on drainage project as MAC asserts it has? Riley's memo on Lake Huleh project (Jerusalem Contel 165, Mar 7)<sup>5</sup> ordered work stoppage but Israel is not only refuse obey it but have resorted to subterfuge to offset memo. Thus, two hours after Riley departed for US Colonel Ramati declared Riley had orally agreed withdraw memo but his political adviser denied this. On Mar 14 Ramati succeeded in getting Bossavy to sign two letters drafted by Ramati in English at variance with directive in Riley's memo. On Apr 12 Shiloah said he had just reed tel from Washington saying Riley had orally concurred in plane set forth in Bossavy's letter. Political adviser refused accept this statement unless direct from Riley.

4. It is essential that Arabs forcibly removed by Israelis from zone be returned to their homes as MAC insists if its authority and terms of armistice agreement are to be upheld. Only 40 to 50 Arabs are left in central zone out of approx 1100 in mid-March. At least 650 now in Israeli custody and remainder fled to Syria. One killed by Israeli police when he resisted removal.

UN official also said urgent temporary need exists for six more trained observers not below the rank of Captain. He preferred these be American and doubted wisdom of recruiting observers of other nationality. In response my query he emphatically said he did not think armed UN escorts shid be assigned to observers.

In conclusion he said SC session wld be farce if it only resulted in "condemnatory resolution" without making clear cut decisions on above specific issues.<sup>6</sup>

CANNON

&lt;sup>4</sup> This message had also been sent to the Syrian Foreign Office. A longer portion is quoted in U.N. Doc. S/PV.542, p. 30.

 $<sup>^5\,\</sup>mathrm{Not}$  printed. (683.84A/3-751) It contains the document quoted in footnote 5, p. 591.

of In telegram 535 from Damascus, April 15, Minister Cannon had stated in part: "Now that Syrian-Israeli dispute is to be debated before SC it seems to us that for evaluating effectiveness MAC machinery henceforth and consequently for determining US policy it is essential that issue of sovereignty in the demilitarized zone be defined at outset. . . . Our concern is lest UN might prefer to seek settlement by handing problem back to MAC with some formula designed to strengthen MAC's prestige instead of grappling with this fundamental issue of sovereignty." (683.84A/4-1551)

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 16, 1951.

Subject: Syrian-Israeli situation.

Participants: Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel

NEA—Mr. McGhee NE—Mr. Kopper NE—Mr. Stabler

Mr. Eban called on me at his request. He said that Mr. Sharett had asked him to take up with the Department the question of jurisdiction in the demilitarized zone. The US delegation to the UN had also suggested that he discuss this question with the Department as it was the delegation's feeling that the Department might not be familiar with some of the points he was going to mention. Mr. Eban said it was unfortunate that this question had come to the SC, since the matter should have been dealt with by the Mixed Armistice Commission. He felt that Israel was the aggrieved party in this question, since the Syrians had invaded Israeli territory and had killed seven Israeli policemen. His government considered that the November 17 resolution of the SC was an injunction to the parties not to bring matters before the SC when they could be resolved in the Mixed Armistice Commission. However, the question was now before the SC. While his government had had no intention of raising the juridical position of the demilitarized zone, since it felt that Israel clearly had jurisdiction over the area, it now appeared that this matter was an issue. General Riley had raised the question by stating that in his opinion the laws and legislation of Israel were in abevance. Originally, he had said that the laws were null and void, but had subsequently changed his mind. His government had admiration for General Riley, but they did not believe he was an expert on Palestine or Israel law. In the view of the Israel government the concession given to the Palestine Land Development Company was still entirely valid and Israel did not believe that either Riley or the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission had any right to assume they could cancel the validity of this concession. His government believed that this action was not in keeping either with the Armistice Agreement or with practice for the last two years. Israel considered that the only difference between the demilitarized zone and the rest of Israel territory was that troops could not be stationed in the former; otherwise, the demilitarized zone was exactly the same as other Israel territory, and Israel law was valid and applicable there. Israel considered that the basic concept of the Armistice Agreement was that there was a contractual arrangement between the two parties and the UN and that the Chairman had no superior rights to the other parties. Israel would like to see the UN and observers abide by the Armistice Agreement and only assume those powers expressly given them by that Agreement. Israel took strong exception to the unilateral action by the Chairman.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Stabler.

Mr. Eban also reviewed certain alleged facts concerning the situation.

I thanked Mr. Eban for these views, but said that the matter was now to be considered by the SC and it was for that body to decide the issues. We considered, however, that Israel had taken unilateral action in this situation and had not recognized the fact that the UN Chairman had requested the Israelis to cease engineering operations and that the Syrians had protested these operations. Since the question was being disputed by the two nations, it would appear that the UN had a supra-national authority and consequently it was not justifiable for Israel to take unilateral action. While we deplored the shooting of the Israeli policemen, we did not think that the Israeli retaliatory action could be justified under any circumstances. I said I was sure that Mr. Eban would understand that these incidents have a cause and effect relationship. With respect to the facts in the case, I wished to point out that the Department also possessed a considerable amount of information from neutral and reliable sources which I could say in all frankness did not bear out much of the information which the Israelis presented. Unfortunately, Israel had not seen fit to permit our Service Attachés to proceed into the area, so our information from the Israeli side did not come from American official observers. However, I emphasized that the US did not prejudge the issue and that we would await determination of the facts as the SC consideration of this case developed.

GEORGE C. McGHEE

320.2 AA/4-1951

The Lebanese Foreign Office to the United Nations Relief and Works

Agency for Palestine Refugees 1

[Translation]

Beirut, 16 April 1951.

The Lebanese Government has examined the refugee problem in the light of the two resolutions adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on December 2 and 14, 1950. It is pleased to note that both &lt;sup>1</sup> Translation of this note was transmitted to the Department as enclosure to despatch 549, April 19.

Telegram 716 to Beirut (Unrap 137), April 21, indicates in part that similar notes had been received by the Embassy in Egypt and the Legation in Syria from their host governments by that date. (844.411/4-2051) these resolutions give evidence of a sincere wish to help the refugees, to confirm their right to return to their homes and for the right to compensation for those who decide not to return. It hopes that the Office to be created by the Conciliation Commission will put into effect Paragraph 11 of the General Assembly Resolution of December 11, 1948.

However, the Lebanese Government cannot avoid expressing its reprobation of the unjust measures taken with regard to the refugees, the effect of which is to impede their repatriation. It is, in particular, against those of the measures which have made it possible for their goods and assets to be disposed of without their permission, whereas thousands of them are at present living under the most difficult conditions, have already passed three winters away from their homes and, in spite of their tragic situation, the Jewish authorities continue to encourage Jews from all over the world to emigrate to Palestine without at all taking into consideration the disastrous effects which may result from this in at one and the same time the political, social and economic fields, and from which the Middle East will not be able to escape.

Since the day when these dramatic happenings took place, the refugee problem has been incessantly brought up before the General Assembly of the United Nations. The General Assembly has continuously made appeals that the rights of the refugees should be respected. The Arab Governments have always had the hope that the United Nations would implement these resolutions and that the great democratic states would make use of the means available to them to facilitate the repatriation of the refugees and their re-installation in Palestine. But this hope has not been realised, the difficulties have continued to increase and the sufferings of the refugees have redoubled.

The Lebanese Government, taking into consideration the tension prevalent in the world today, has examined the attitude which the Arab Government should adopt at the present stage of international affairs. Starting with the fact that the refugee problem is a political, social and human problem of the greatest gravity, and that it calls for an urgent solution motivated by principles of law and justice, and whereas, on the other hand, the international situation requires that this problem should be examined with care and steadfastness, and in view of the fact that the Arab countries cannot devote themselves wholeheartedly to their share of the responsibilities devolving on them in the international scene so long as they have to face up to this serious problem, the Lebanese Government is persuaded of the fact that there should be a united effort to find an immediate solution to the refugee problem in conformity with the provisions of both Paragraph 11 of the General Assembly Resolution of December 11, 1948, and those of the resolutions of December 2 and 14, 1950.

The Lebanese Government considers that the funds destined for the Refugee Relief Programme and the implementation of the works in which the refugees are to take part do not respond to all the existing needs, nor are they sufficient for improving their living conditions, or for assuring the food, clothing and housing which they so greatly need.

In particular, the Lebanese Government considers that the sum of $30,000,000 fixed by the resolution of the General Assembly of December 2, 1950, for the Reintegration Fund is insufficient to remove the numerous difficulties facing the refugees. Resettlement in or out of Palestine can only be carried out if greater funds are dedicated to this end, to assure to approximately 900,000 refugees the peace and security of which they are at present deprived.

The General Assembly recorded, with good reason, in Paragraph 4 of the resolution of December 2, 1950, that resettlement of the refugees in or out of Palestine without prejudging their right to repatriation and compensation would in a large measure contribute to the peace and stability of the Near East. But this resettlement can only succeed if large funds are voted for the realisation of the aims which the United Nations have set themselves.

In this connection, it would be interesting to recall that Paragraph 2 of Article 11 of the General Assembly resolution of December 11. 1948, requested the Conciliation Commission to take the necessary steps with a view to resettling the refugees and facilitating their economic and social rehabilitation. Unfortunately, neither the Conciliation Commission nor the United Nations Relief and Works Agency was able to attain this goal due to the insufficiency of the funds given them.

The refugees certainly expect the United Nations to protect their rights, to help them, to provide relief for them and ensure their return to a normal way of life.

Count Bernadotte, UN Mediator, stressed, in addition to this, in his report submitted to the General Assembly on December 18, 1948, the responsibilities incumbent on the United Nations with regard to the refugees. Far more, the refugees consider that the greater part of these responsibilities is incumbent on the two great democracies, for reasons which there is no occasion to mention here.

The Lebanese Government makes a point of recording in this respect that at no time have the Arab Governments tried to shirk their responsibilities, but that they have made use of all the means at their disposal to help the refugees. These Governments cannot, however, settle the refugee problem as a whole with their means alone. It is an undeniable fact that it is up to the international community to assume this task, in conformity with the aims of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Arab Governments have collaborated with UNRWA and have accepted the implementation of certain works projects in their countries. But the funds available to the Agency have limited its field of activity, and have made it possible for only a very small number of refugees to be given employment.

At the meeting of the Political Committee of the Arab League on February 3, 1951, the Arab Governments gave all their attention to the situation in which the refugees now find themselves and the dangers which may result, particularly in the present state of international tension. They agreed that they should each present this joint note to the Governments concerned, inviting them to spare no effort to answer the appeals of the refugees and to see that their rights are respected in conformity with the above-mentioned General Assembly resolutions. At the same time they agreed that they should confirm that the refugees, being assured of the approval and support of the Arab Governments in this connection, cannot accept any project for resettlement in or out of Palestine before a general programme has been adopted through which it will be possible to assure, in the quickest possible time, the full and entire realisation of such projects, protecting at the same time all their rights as recognized by the General Assembly resolutions.

The Lebanese Government hopes that the other member states of the United Nations will hasten to find a solution to the refugee problem in the above-mentioned direction, so that the Arab States, having been relieved of their preoccupation with the refugee problem and having been assured that it has been settled on a basis of law and justice, may devote themselves to the study of the other problems they have to face, and collaborate effectively to the settlement of general international questions.<sup>2</sup>

&lt;sup>2</sup> In circular telegram 646 of April 24, routed to Beirut, Cairo, and Damascus, drafted by Mr. Sands and cleared by NE and UNP, the Department stated in part: "Ack[nowledgment of] Aide-Mémoire shld note briefly US Govt considers this constructive forward step settlement refugee problem and US other interested govts currently examining ways and means financing reintegration." (320.2AA/4-251)

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: "Economic Assistance"

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] April 17, 1951.

Subject: Suggested action for presentation of a program of economic assistance to the Near East in the light of the Israeli request for a grant in Fiscal 1952 of $150 million.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Gardiner.

Discussion:

(1) We now have "markings" from the Bureau of the Budget on our program for grant aid to the Near East; out of a total of $50,000,000 approved by the Bureau of the Budget for the area, including a contribution which may be as high as $30,000,000 to the United Nations Arab refugee program, $1,000,000 is earmarked for Israel.

(2) Since the preparation of that program, the Israelis have requested a grant of $150,000,000. This request is intended to be the first installment of a three-year program amounting to $1½ billion which Israel will seek from United States grants and other sources. This program will involve the immigration into Israel of 500,000 Jewish people. It has not been demonstrated that it is in our national interest for the United States Government to assume even partial financial responsibility for such immigration.

(3) The items that go to make up the $150 million are set forth in the Note of March 22:

"Approximate List of Purchases to be Financed with Requested Grant-in-Aid

A Matariala fixtures and againment required to be imported for the construction of 70 units	0,000 housing	$30, 000, 000

B. Supplies required to restrain the inflationary pressure of the investment and defense programs
(a) Wheat	$25,000,000
(b) Fodders	15, 000, 000
(c) Oilseeds	10, 000, 000
(d) Fertilizers and seeds	10, 000, 000
(e) Cotton, other fibers, and textile materials	10, 000, 000
(f) Leather, hides, chemicals, and minor materials	10, 000, 000
(g) Petroleum	25, 000, 000	105, 000, 000
C. Shipping and insurance services		15, 000, 000
Total		$150, 000, 000''

The foregoing list, as regards certain items, is clearly excessive, and probably reflects the desire of the Israelis to stockpile basic items. Item A is based on the presumption that the United States will assist in the financing of the immigration policy discussed above. Item B(a), Wheat, represents roughly 50% more than the import requirements of Israel, based on 1950 actual imports and taking Israel's projected population growth into account. Item G, Petroleum, represents per capita requirements double those of the United Kingdom, approximately nine times those of Greece, and 18 times those of Turkey. Similar inflation occurs elsewhere in these figures.

- (4) Balance of payments figures, however, suggest that Israel, even without a large immigration program, is likely to require grant aid in order to prevent a considerable reduction of the living standards of its present population. We cannot justify a figure with precision at this time, but a reasonable amount would appear to be at least $25 million. Such an amount could be justified on a project basis. Israel's requirements for grant aid are of course related to an unknown; the amount that may be subscribed privately for the country's needs.
- (5) Our policy of impartiality requires an adjustment of proposed aid to the Arab states if Israel is to receive a substantial grant. Thus it might be opportune to combine legislative proposals providing for grants to Israel in a regional program which will include proposals looking to a final settlement of the Arab refugee problem.

The Israeli Note refers to Israel's obligations to the refugees. It is most unlikely that a direct settlement by Israel of the refugee claims for compensation can or will be made in any reasonable period of time. If in the long run the United States is to pay this bill, it will be preferable for the United States to provide funds promptly and directly for refugee resettlement and to administer these funds either directly or through United Nations mechanisms.

An indication of United States willingness to make adequate funds available for refugee resettlement could go far to ease local tensions and to make the Arab states themselves take resettlement seriously. This view has been expressed to us by Arab leaders in Syria and elsewhere. We cannot get far with a total reintegration budget of $30 million for 1952. It is therefore suggested that our legislation be written to provide authorization for a further $50 million to be available for refugee resettlement over and above our presently proposed contribution to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency. We recognize that the $50 million could not be disbursed in 1952; however, the availability of such a fund would enable us to move forward vigorously, as we could convince the Arab states that we mean to see the program of refugee resettlement through. Precedents exist for such a fund. The Arabs have demanded such an evidence of our intentions before they will agree to accept the influx of such large numbers of refugees for resettlement.

Such a proposal, presented in conjunction with the program already "marked up" by the Bureau of the Budget, would satisfy our essential criterion—impartiality.

We therefore submit the following recommendation:

Recommendation:

That we be authorized to present a revised program to the Bureau of the Budget for economic aid to the Near East increasing the present figure of $50 million for the Near East by $50 million, $25 million of which is to be earmarked for Israel and $25 million for Arab refugee resettlement, plus a further $25 million to be authorized for Arab refugee resettlement. Appropriations for this final $25 million will not be sought at this time.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> A notation on the source text indicates that this paper was concurred in by H, E, and UNA. "S/FA does not fully concur and is submitting separate comment." The S/FA paper is infra.

Attached to another copy of the memorandum above is a note of April 21 from Mr. Bonesteel to Mr. Bissell which indicates that by that date Mr. Acheson had approved the memorandum for interdepartmental clearance. (S/ISA Files: Lot

52-26: "Israel")

Information on clearance of the specific memorandum above has not been found in Department of State files, but in a memorandum of April 25, to Mr. Gordon, Mr. Bonesteel stated in part that by then an increase in economic aid to Israel and the Arab states had been "cleared" by the Defense and Treasury Departments. (S/ISA Files: Lot 52–26: "Israel")

S/ISA Files: Lot 52-26: "Israel"

Memorandum by the Executive Director, European Coordinating Committee, Mutual Defense Assistance Program (Bonesteel) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] April 18, 1951.

Subject: NEA Memo to the Secretary <sup>1</sup> on additional economic assistance to Middle East in light of Israeli requests for $150 million (Mr. McGhee, 17 April, 1951)

- 1. I have seen and discussed the subject NEA memo.
- 2. The original FY '52 foreign aid program, Title II, included nearly $1.0 million for Israel. This represented the considered estimate of the Executive Branch on aid required for Israel and desirable in the U.S. national interest under the concept of the total foreign aid bill. This should be the position defended by the Administration, unless an estimate of the U.S. internal political situation indicates the separate Israeli request would be substantially approved by Congress, with the explosive effects of such partisanship on the Arab States in the Mid-East.
- 3. If this political estimate indicates that the better way out of a bad situation is to increase our proposed aid for Israel—and the same for the Arab countries—then I agree that a program such as suggested by Mr. McGhee might be put forward.
- 4. In any event, it should informally be made plain to Members of Congress who intend to oppose the Israeli request, that the Israeli request is an outright suggestion for an international WPA which might further involve the U.S. Government in a moral commitment to support the three-year $1.5 billion program of the Israeli Government—a program contemplating further substantial immigration into a country which seems economically incapable of supporting even its present population.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra.

5. A decision on the subject is needed urgently. The Bureau of the Budget "marked" Title II without prejudice to further action on the Israeli request. NEA cannot finalize its programs for Congress until it knows whether or not to increase the present program.

IO Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Edward P. Maffitt of the United States Mission at the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL

[New York,] April 19, 1951.

US/S/1742

Subject: The Syrian-Israeli Dispute

Participants: Major General William E. Riley, Chief of Staff, Truce

Supervision Organization Edward P. Maffitt, US Mission

Last Monday, the 16th, I visited General Riley in the St. Albans Naval Hospital. I took the occasion to inform him that the State Department had finally acceded to General Cates' insistent request that Riley be returned to active Marine Corps duty. We then discussed matters connected with the present Syrian-Israeli dispute.

Riley said Eban and Rafael had come to see him the afternoon of their visit to this office (April 13th) 1 and had appeared somewhat unsettled. Riley was inclined to attribute this to their talk with us and something Dr. Bunche had said to them, and thought that the combination of these incidents and the conversation that had ensued between Riley and themselves might have had something to do with the tone Foreign Minister Sharett took in his press conference on April 15. Bunche had said that he would not like to give testimony at the Council table, but if he did, would not support the Israelis' claim that the Demilitarized Zone is Israeli territory. Riley himself had told Eban that he disagreed with Israel's way of proceeding in the Huleh district and its claim that it had the right to police the Demilitarized Zone. He also had told Eban that he would not recommend the release of Colonel Bossavy because it was the Israeli Delegate Ramati who was requesting it. He had assured Eban that Ramati caused more trouble than the rest of the Israeli Delegates together and had added that for a year he, Riley, had been requesting Ramati's replacement.

At this point General Riley said it seemed to him that the Israelis were trying unilaterally to revise the Armistice Agreement.

&lt;sup>1</sup>The memorandum of this conversation held between Messrs. Eban, Rafael, Gross, and Maffitt is not printed. (IO Files: US/S/1742)

General Riley then mentioned an element that I think will be most important in the Security Council discussion of the case. He referred to an explanatory note <sup>2</sup> Dr. Bunche had sent the parties in transmitting them his draft of Article V of the Armistice Agreement. Among other things, this note said that "Civilian administration, including policing, will be on a local basis without raising the questions of administration, jurisdiction, citizenship and sovereignty." I think it also affirms the competence of the Chairman of the MAC which would be created by the Armistice Agreement, in matters concerning the administration and policing of the Demilitarized Zone. Riley said that both parties to the Syrian-Israeli Armistice Conference had agreed that the explanatory note should be recorded in the Summary Records of the Conference's meetings and that, once it had been so recorded, it would be used as an authentic commentary should any difficulty arise in the interpretation of the Armistice Agreement. The Summary Records of all the Conference meetings were transmitted by Mr. Bigier to the Chief of Staff under covering letter of July 26th and Riley believed that both parties and Dr. Bunche as well as himself had complete sets.

I said I thought these Summary Records, including the explanatory note, should be at the disposal of the Council and General Riley thought that if he should be invited to the table to answer questions, he could bring them to the attention of the Council in reply to an appropriate question.

In reply to my inquiry whether the Chairman's jurisdiction in the Demilitarized Zone had been called into question prior to the present incidents, Riley said it had not. In fact he recalled that in August of 1949 he had caused the Israelis to remove a cluster of houses they had set up over-night near Ein Gev and that before the Israelis removed them to another place they had sought and obtained the Chairman's permission to place them in the new location.

General Riley also recalled that we might find several cases recorded in the Summary Records of the MAC where the Chairman, as agent for the Palestine Arabs, had received complaints against the actions of Israeli police in the Demilitarized Zone.

684A.85/4-2051 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Tel Aviv, April 20, 1951—2 p. m.

667. Re Embtel 579, Mar 22 2 and Embdesp 541, Mar 23.3

&lt;sup>2</sup> See telegram 536 from Damascus, April 15, p. 636.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated to Amman and Jerusalem for information.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Not printed. (68<sup>3</sup>A.85/3-2251) It contains a summary of the Jordanian proposals discussed in despatch 223 from Amman, March 19, p. 601.

<sup>3</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 4, p. 602.

Shiloah has now given me what purports to be copy Israel reply <sup>4</sup> to PriMin Jordan's communication suggesting possible basis implementation Jordan-Israel armistice agreement and settlement certain other outstanding problems. Israel reply (being air mailed today) includes fol:

(1) Best procedure is to implement gen armistice agreement as first step; hence discussion items outside scope armistice agreement shid be excluded from talks for present and may properly be taken up later by special comite mentioned Article VIII after implementation armistice agreement.

(2) Reaffirms Israel willingness hand over Naharayim area but on understanding all outstanding details implementation armistice agreement "will be agreed upon before this area is handed over".

(3) Rejects Jordan suggestion that Article VI be extended to villages east of demarcation line in ex-Iraqi sector but offers compensation to landowners on Israel side who have chosen move to Jordan. Rejects any claim on Israel Govt of landowners on Jordan side armistice line but states such claims may be placed on agenda Article VIII comite after implementation that article. Reaffirms Israel readiness pay for road mentioned Article VI (5) armistice agreement.

(4) Accepts in principle free movement Latrun-Jerusalem road and operation Latrun pumping station be achieved by division no-man's-land. Suggests details be worked out by mil.

(5) Expresses "amazement" suggestion Mt. Scopus be treated as Jordan territory since area held by Israel forces prior to mil agreement July 7, 1948. Entire Mt. Scopus area "is and must remain Israel territory". Only on this understanding can problem be discussed.

(6) Detailed plans for implementation free access to holy places shid be achieved during Pechrut [apparent garble] negots with effective date left to special agreement.

(7) Israel prepared implement Article VIII provisions to Bethlehem road and electricity for old city.

Shiloah reminded me that Jordan plan included four points outside armistice agreements, viz, cession Naharayim area, release of blocked accts, compensation of Arabs owning property in Israel-held Jerusalem, and division of no-man's-land in Jerusalem basis property ownership. He said that despite Israel policy of insistence on implementation armistice agreement before taking up other questions he was authorized agree to transfer Naharayim area; and while making no ref to matter of blocked accts in written communication he delivered oral message that Israel Govt will consider partial release in order to help Jordan officials make settlement more palatable in Arab circles. He indicates his govt not prepared to discuss other compensation outside terms of armistice agreement until that agreement fulfilled. Moreover, suggestion re divisions no-man's-land in Jerusalem regarded as entirely impractical and unacceptable as method of fixing boundary. As to uncompromising attitude re Mt. Scopus, he stated his govt wld not have made any pronouncement on this subj had Jordan not attempted prejudice Israel position.

&#x27;The full text, dated April 16, of this document is enclosed with despatch 623 from Tel Aviv, April 20, not printed. (684A.85/4-2051)

Comment: Emb has impression both sides inclined to be defeatist about success of negots and doubts whether present exchange of correspondence will bring success much, if any, nearer. It believed real Israel position less rigid than text implies.

Davis

320.2 AA/4-2651: Telegram

The Chargé in Lebanon (Bruins) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Выкит, Аргіі 26, 1951—4 р. т.

603. Rapun 143.2 Re Unrap 137.3

Lie arrived Beirut depressed by over-all Arab attitude and confused as to Arab position on reintegration. Shortness of visit did not enable him penetrate repatriation smokescreen nor permit us to obtain adequate press statements despite considerable effort.

On last day of visit Fouad Ammoun agreed with me that Arab countries were defeating their own purpose by talking in language of recent note.<sup>5</sup> Said he wld attempt to give Lie simple statement of real Arab position in interest of obtaining generous and continuing UN support of reintegration.

As result incomplete impressions, Lie straining for new solutions.

On reintegration Lie talked of large loan program. We suggested he first find new director and 50 million grant money.

On over-all UN activity in area Lie considers situation too complicated. Proposes policy board at Lake Success representing all country and functional interests with one man in area to carry out all policies. We reminded him of sovereignty angle, realism of grass root contacts and occasional merit of separating our old issues from new as with PCC and PRA.

Finally we emphasized next reintegration move is UN not Arab and parted good friends.

Bruins

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated to Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem (for Palmer), and Tel Aviv.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Rapuns were apparently from Mr. Blandford in his capacity as United States Representative on the Advisory Committee to UNRWAPNE.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Dated April 21, not printed, but see footnote 1, p. 639.

Department of State files do not indicate inclusive dates of Mr. Lie's visit to Beirut.

&lt;sup>5</sup> In telegram 605 (Rapun 114) from Beirut, April 27, Mr. Blandford stated in part: "For casual reader aggressive language of aide-mémoire consciously conceals Arab intent to cooperate reintegration." (320.2 AA/4-2751)

683.84A/4-2651

Memorandum of Conversation, by Bernhard G. Bechhoefer of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs

SECRET

[New York,] April 26, 1951.

Subject: Controversy between Israel and Syria

Participants: Mr. Gideon Raphael—Israeli Delegation

Mr. Bernhard G. Bechhoefer—Department of State

At the end of yesterday's Security Council meeting, Mr. Raphael approached me and asked my views on Ambassador Eban's speech. I replied that I considered it a very eloquent and persuasive speech and was very anxious to study in detail the legal points which Ambassador Eban had made.

Mr. Raphael then asked me whether, in my opinion, the situation would be helped by Ambassador Eban's admission that Israel was at fault in engaging in the retaliatory bombings. I said that I thought it probably would help, that I could see no possible justification for the retaliatory bombings. Mr. Raphael indicated that, from the legal standpoint, he agreed that there was no justification.

Mr. Raphael then asked my views concerning the outcome of the Security Council proceedings. What were the plans of the United States concerning any action by the Security Council? I stated that the evidence was very complicated, and before coming to any conclusions, the United States wished to hear all the evidence. I pointed out that both Ambassador Eban's speech and General Riley's statement at the April 25th meeting had tended to clarify points which were previously somewhat obscure.

Mr. Raphael then asked whether it was true that the United States wished to stop the Huleh drainage project. I suggested that Mr. McGhee's statement to Ambassador Eban was entirely clear on that point.<sup>2</sup> He replied that in general Mr. McGhee's statement was constructive but that he wondered whether the United States had changed its position since then. I said I had no knowledge of any change.

Mr. Raphael then expressed the hope that General Riley could continue his work in Palestine.<sup>3</sup> He stated that regardless of the ability of any successor, it would take that successor at least a year to work out the cordial working relationships which General Riley had already established with Israel and the Arab States. Ambassador Eban at that moment spoke to me and reiterated Mr. Raphael's strong endorsement of General Riley. It should be noted that this conversation took place after General Riley's statement to the Security Council which was sharply critical of the Israeli position. Mr. Raphael specifically stated to me on a very confidential basis that he did not disagree very sharply with the main lines of General Riley's statement.

&lt;sup>1</sup> For text, see U.N. Doc. S/PV.542, pp. 3-27.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Reference uncertain. For the attitude of the U.S. Government on the drainage project, see the memorandum of conversation by Mr. Berry, March 30, p. 611.

&lt;sup>3</sup>At this time the Department of the Navy wished to return General Riley to active duty with the Marine Corps while the United Nations and the Department of State were trying to obtain an extension of his tour with the Truce Supervisory Organization. The matter was finally resolved late in May when General Riley, after an extension of his tour had been approved by the Navy, accepted a permanent position with the United Nations and applied for retirement from the Corps. Documentation is in file 683.84A for 1951, and UNP Files: Lot 59 D 237.

UNP Files: Lot 59 D 237

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Wainhouse) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] April 30, 1951.

Subject: Attached Draft Resolution.

The attached draft resolution was sent on by NE to Mr. Maffitt, USUN presumably last Thursday.<sup>2</sup> We first became aware of the existence of this draft this morning when Mr. Worcester of NE handed copies to Mr. Bechhoefer and Mr. Ludlow in anticipation of a 2 P M meeting in NE on it.

In a conversation which Mr. Ludlow had with Mr. Maffitt this morning, Mr. Ludlow learned that Mr. Maffitt had been talking to the British and French from this draft resolution. Mr. Ludlow told Mr. Maffitt that UNP had not seen this draft, nor did it know of its existence, and suggested to Mr. Maffitt that he not discuss this draft any further. Mr. Ludlow stated that the Department's position is and remains that which was contained in Deptel 845 to USUN, April 13.3

I telephoned Mr. Kopper and on learning that he was out, talked to Mr. Wells Stabler who told me that this draft was sent on to Mr. Maffitt because the latter was in need of something with which to talk to the British and French; that NE had sought to clear this draft with officers in UNP but was unable to reach those officers!

The draft in substance, you will note, is unacceptable to UNP and is in excess of the Department's position as set forth in Deptel 845.

I have requested Mr. Bechhoefer and Mr. Ludlow to concert with NE on a draft which would be mutually acceptable to both NE and UNA.

D[AVID] W. W[AINHOUSE]

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum directed also to Mr. Sandifer.

&lt;sup>2</sup> April 26.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 635.

[Attachment]

Draft Resolution

[Extracts]

CONFIDENTIAL

[undated.]

A.

- 1. The Security Council,
- 2. Decides that the deterioration of the situation in the Demilitarized Zone provided for by Article 5 of the Israel-Syria Armistice Agreement of July 20, 1949, has resulted primarily from the refusal of the Israel Government to comply with the requests of the Chief of Staff of the UN Truce Supervision Organization regarding the engineering operations of the Palestine Land Development Company in the Demilitarized Zone.
- 3. Considers that this attitude on the part of Israel has resulted in the inability of the Mixed Armistice Commission to deal appropriately with the situation in the Demilitarized Zone.

В.

1. The Security Council deplores the series of incidents which have occurred in the Demilitarized Zone resulting in the loss of Israeli and Arab lives and the bombing of Syrian soil by Israel military forces for which, it is noted, apology has been made by the Israel representative on April 25, 1951.

330/5-151: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

<sup>2</sup> For text, see U.N. Doc. S/1376, I.

Washington, May 1, 1951—7 p. m.

891. Fol Dept's draft res re Syrian and Israel complaints before SC. "The Security Council

1. Recalling its past res of Aug 11, 1949 <sup>2</sup> and Nov 17, 1950 relating to Armistice Agreements between Israel and the neighboring Arab States and to provisions contained therein concerning methods for maintaining Armistice and resolving disputes through Mixed Armistice Commissions participated in by parties to Armistice Agreement; 2. Noting the complaints of Syria and Israel to SC, statements in Council of reps of Syria and Israel, the reports to Secy Gen of UN by Chief of Staff and Act Chief of Staff of UN Truce Supervision Org for Palestine, and statements before Council of the Chief of Staff of UN Truce Supervision Org for Palestine;

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram drafted by Messrs. Bechhoefer, Ludlow, and Waldo, and cleared with NE and UNA. Sent also to Damascus and Tel Aviv, and repeated for information to London and Paris.

3. Declares that in order to promote return of permanent peace in Palestine, it is essential that govts of Israel and Syria observe faithfully Gen Armistice Agreement dated July 20, 1949;

4. Notes that Israel and Syria by Arts 4 and 5 of Armistice Agreement estab a demilitarized zone between them in interest of ensuring maintenance of their Armistice and accordingly agreed upon certain provisions for return of normal civilian life in and internal security of zone;

5. Notes that under Armistice Agreement where interpretation of meaning of a particular provision of the Agreement, other than preamble and Arts I and II, is at issue the Mixed Armistice Commission?

sion's interpretation shall prevail;

6. Calls upon govts of Israel and Syria to bring before Mixed Armistice Commission for its consideration the complaints of which SC is presently seized, except that alluded to in para 9 of this res, and to abide by decisions of Mixed Armistice Com;

7. Reminds Govt of Israel that it is inconsistent with objectives and intent of Armistice Agreement to refuse to participate in meetings of Mixed Armistice Commission or to fail to respect requests of chairman of Mixed Armistice Commission as they relate to his obligations under Art V and calls upon the parties to be represented at all mtgs called by chairman of Commission and to respect such requests.

8. Considers that that Chairman of MAC is entitled to consider disputes concerning extent to which either party to Armistice Agreement is free to undertake civilian activities in demilitarized zone, to determine, where appropriate, the conditions under which such activities shall take place, and to take action to ensure that demilitarized zone shall be respected in accordance with letter and spirit of Armistice Agreement.

9. Brings to atten of govts of Syria and Israel their obligations under Art 2, para 4 of Charter of UN and their commitments under Armistice Agreement not to resort to mil force and finds that aerial action taken by forces of govt of Israel Apr 5, 1951 is violation of terms of Armistice Agreement and inconsistent with obligations of Israel under Charter:

10. Noting complaint with regard to evacuation of Arab residents from demilitarized zone, (a) decides that Arab civilians who have been removed from demil zone without their consent by govt of Israel shld be permitted to return forthwith to their homes and that Mixed Armistice Com shld supervise their return and rehabilitation in manner to be determined by Commission; and (b) holds that no action involving transfer of persons across internatl frontiers, armistice lines, or within demil zone shld be undertaken without the prior decision of the Mixed Armistice Commission;

11. Reminds parties of their obligations under Charter to settle their internatl disputes by peaceful means in such manner that internatl peace and security are not endangered, and expresses its concern at failure of govts of Israel and Syria to achieve progress pursuant to their commitments under Armistice Agreement to promote return of permanent peace to Palestine.

12. Calls upon Chief of Staff of UN Truce Supervision Com to report to SC at end of 30 days on compliance given to this res.

13. Requests the Secy Gen to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as Chief of Staff of Truce Supervision Org may request in carrying out this res and Council's res of Nov 17 1950."

Dept considers inclusion para 10~a desirable but suggests USUN obtain Gen Riley's approval thereto.

Dept wld appreciate comments Emb Tel Aviv and Leg Damascus.<sup>3</sup>
ACHESON

Editorial Note

In a letter of May 2 to Mr. Lawton, Mr. Webb outlined the Department's revised proposals with regard to economic aid to the Arab States and Israel. It is printed on page 120.

For considerable subsequent documentation on aid programs which affected Israel, see pages 1 ff.

Editorial Note

On May 2 fighting broke out in the area of Shamalneh village, in the Syro-Israeli Demilitarized Zone, and the Tel al Mutillah, in Israeli territory to the west of the Zone. Files 683.84A and 330 for May 1951 indicate that the Legation in Damascus initially understood the fighting to involve Israeli police (or soldiers) and Arab civilians resident in the Zone, while the Embassy in Tel Aviv supported the Israeli contention that the combatants included from the beginning regular Syrian troops. As of May 6 the Department accepted the contention that the Arab combatants were civilian. However, by May 9 it was taking note of "... mounting evidence some degree Syrian Army participation in incidents near Tell al Mutilla as reported by Emb Tel Aviv ...". (Telegram 429 to Damascus, May 9, 683.84A/5-351)

&lt;sup>3</sup> In telegram 894 to New York, May 2, drafted by Mr. Ludlow and cleared by UNP and NE, the Department transmitted a paragraph to be added to the resolution:

&quot;Noting with concern the repeated refusal of Israeli authorities to permit UN observers to perform their legitimate functions, calls to the attention of Israel the view of the Council that the parties shid permit access at all times for observers and officials of TSO whenever such access is requested in the pursuance of their functions and to render every facility which may be requested by the Chairman of the MAC in the interests of assuring access to localities subject of a complaint." (357.AC/5–251)

Additional pertinent information regarding the origin of this incident is in file 683.84A for August 1951, especially in telegram 183 from Tel Aviv, August 27; airgram 33 to Damascus, August 30; and telegram 115 from Damascus, August 31.

In a resolution of May 8 (U.N. Doc. S/2130), the Security Council called upon the parties to cease fighting. The fighting ended by May 10.

State-JCS Meetings: Lot 61 D 417

State Department Draft Minutes of Discussions at the State-Joint Chiefs of Staff Meeting, May 2, 1951 <sup>1</sup>

[Extract] 2

TOP SECRET

[Washington.]

PRESENT

es
S
ì

ISRAEL

General Vandenberg: I would like to mention the request by Israel for $150,000,000. From the military point of view I am firmly opposed to any action on behalf of Israel which would jeopardize our position in Saudi Arabia, particularly of course our use of the Dhahran air base. Our prestige in Saudi Arabia was once high and it is now at an all-time low. It will go completely out of sight if we take this action to aid Israel. We have got to have good relations with Saudi Arabia. The Israeli program scares me.

Mr. McGhee: As you know, the Israeli request was made to us and was coordinated with a campaign in the Senate and House by which the Israelis obtained a lot of signatures by the Senators and Congressmen. We have made no response to the Israeli request except to indicate that we are developing a balanced program for the Middle East. We have told them that we would make a single request for the Middle

&lt;sup>1</sup> This memorandum bears the following unsigned notation: "State Draft. Not cleared with any of the participants."

&lt;sup>2</sup> Another extract from this memorandum is printed on p. 113.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Surname not indicated in the source text.

Eastern area and that that request will be balanced from an area standpoint. The purpose of our program will be to ease tensions in the area.

I have just returned, as you know, from a trip through the area. I am convinced that the Israeli program would be disastrous to our relations with the Arab States. We must provide assistance to the Arab States comparable to that which we provide Israel. I would take issue with you, however, General Vandenberg, on the state of our relations with Saudi Arabia. I think that they are now at the highest point at which they have been since the Palestine nadir.

Admiral Sherman: What will happen to our relations with Saudi Arabia if Iraq nationalizes its petroleum industry and the Iraqis in effect take over?

Mr. McGhee: There is no indication that that will happen. I think Iraq could and would make arrangements with the same companies which now hold concession rights.

GENERAL VANDENBERG: Our treaty with Saudi Arabia depends on what we do in the area and our good behavior. The treaty will run for only a short time. This trouble in Iran, this Israeli business and all the other things going on in that part of the world are bound to have an effect on Saudi Arabia, but as long as you people in State agree about the dangers in this program, I feel reassured.

Mr. McGhee: I feel sure that the Israeli program would not pass the Congress without Administration support.

Mr. Nitze: However, 36 Senators have signed the petition.

Mr. McGhee: Some of them signed it on a misunderstanding.

684A.85/5-251: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Tel Aviv, May 2, 1951—5 p. m.

696. Shiloah told us he has had recent conference with King Abdullah at latter's request to discuss Israel reply to PriMin Samir Rifai's written proposal (see Embtel 667 Apr 20).<sup>2</sup> When Shiloah enquired whether the King wished to have Samir present, Abdullah replied he preferred speak to him alone since he was displeased with both Samir and Shiloah over exchange of correspondence. He deplored raising sovereignty issue and Israel's undiplomatic rejoinder saying he wondered whether both govts might not withdraw their respective communications. Shiloah replied that altho such withdrawal wld present some practical difficulties he believed it might nevertheless be done. The King then suggested Israelis disregard any intemperance in Jordan's reply and consider possibility of withdrawing entire correspondence. Shiloah thereupon spoke of possibility that Israel might be prepared release some blocked balances in order to create more favorable atmosphere. He says King Abdullah showed lively interest in this prospect and seemed hopeful it might serve useful purpose. In this connection however Shiloah remarked that while he believes Abdullah means well and has good ideas, he has now become "wishful thinker" and is believed to lack real power to implement views which are his alone.

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 647.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman and Jerusalem.

Davis

Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation: Lot 65 D 238

Memorandum of Meeting With the President, by the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] May 3, 1951.

LUNCHEON FOR THE ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER 1

I went over with the President the information contained in my briefing memorandum,* which the President has in mind.<sup>2</sup> He will not raise the matter and will not permit himself to be committed in any way.

D[EAN] A[CHESON]

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr. Ben Gurion arrived in the United States at Washington, May 3. President Truman gave him a luncheon the following day. On May 4, the Prime Minister also had separate conversations with W. Averell Harriman and Secretary Marshall. The Prime Minister met with President Truman on May 8 at the White House. No primary record of any of these conversations has been found in Department of State files. For what is apparently a summary of the talk held with Mr. Marshall, see the excerpt from the Daily Top Secret Summary of May 17, p. 686.

For the memorandum of the Prime Minister's conversation held with Secretary Acheson, May 8, see p. 667.

During his stay in the United States, Mr. Ben Gurion visited a number of cities in connection with the Israeli bond drive. He left the country from New York on May 31.

* On what to say if Prime Minister raises question of $150,000,000 at luncheon today. [Handwritten, unsigned footnote interpolation in the source text.]

&lt;sup>2</sup> A section devoted to Israel in Mr. McWilliams' briefing memorandum of May 3 to the Secretary follows:

&quot;The President is giving a luncheon for the Israeli Prime Minister tomorrow. Mr. McGhee suggests you discuss with the President the line to be taken in event the question of grant aid comes up. For your information, the Omnibus Aid Bill includes $25 million economic grant aid for Israel, $22.5 million for the Arab States, and $75 million for the UN activities of aid to Arab refugees.

&quot;Of the $75 million we propose to seek only $50 million appropriation at this time. This fund will be supplemented by other contributing nations and will enable relief operations costing about $25 million per annum to be continued and will make possible a substantial start on a program of integration of Arab refugees. This program is of direct benefit to Israel." (Lot 65 D 238)

684A.85/5-351: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Tel Aviv, May 3, 1951—9 a.m.

698. In view Ben Gurion visit, Dept may be interested fol re Embtel 696, May 2.2 Shiloah requested my views exchange of correspondence, and was informed it was my impression ground had been lost rather than gained. I suggested more attention be paid to motivation Arab opposition as prelude to coordinated and sustained Israel effort effect change in Arab attitude; expressed belief his people with their intelligence and determination can accomplish more than heretofore if they consider matter important enough. Cited unnecessarily provocative language in correspondence, generally rough handling of border incidents, and apparent lack of any concerted effort to create better feeling as factors contributing to lack of progress. He agreed imagination needed to avoid phraseology unduly embarrassing other negotiators, and seemed take in good part expression of view he had invited. I stressed nothing wld please us more than see improvement in Israel relations with its neighbors but we are convinced such improvement will have to be achieved by parties directly concerned.

DAVIS

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 656.

357.AC/5-351 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

New York, May 3, 1951—5: 57 p. m.

1485. Re Syrian-Israeli dispute. Following are USUN observations regarding draft res contained in Deptel 891 of May 1.<sup>1</sup> These are based on conversation yesterday with British and French,<sup>2</sup> views of Gen Riley, and opinions developed within mission.

1) Immediately following para 3, a new para 4 might be inserted calling attention of parties to Art. VIII, para 3 of Syrian-Israeli armistice agreement (providing that "either of the parties may call upon the SYG of the UN to convoke a conference of reps of the two parties for the purpose of reviewing, revising or suspending any of the provisions of this agreement other than Articles I and III. Participation in such conferences shall be obligatory upon the parties"). Practice of parties in bringing complaints direct to SC, when agreement is not reached through MAC's, contravenes spirit of this para, since we understand Bunche's design in putting it into armistice agreement was to keep disputes away from SC until all means of settlement provided by armistice agreement were exhausted.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman and Jerusalem.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 652. <sup>2</sup> A memorandum, by Mr. Bechhoefer of the conversation held in New York, March 2, between Representatives of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States to the United Nations is in IO Files: US/S/1750. A further memorandum by Mr. Bechhoefer on the same subject, addressed to Mr. Wainhouse, is in UNP Files: Lot 59 D 237.

2) Drafting of para 6 raises two points:

a) In calling upon parties to bring complaints before MAC, para would provide for MAC consideration of some matters which are primarily or solely concern of chairman in his capacity as agent for Arab residents. This would constitute violation of Art. V of armistice agreement. For instance, firing by Arab civilians in zone is matter for chairman and is no concern of Syria's unless MAC is called upon to make interpretation in connection with decision of Chairman.

b) Some elements in situation created by the retaliatory bombing are fit subjects for MAC consideration and should not be excluded from the request to parties. Therefore mission suggests language of this sort, "requests Govts of Israel and Syria to bring before MAC or its chairman, whichever has the pertinent responsibility under armistice agreement, the complaints of which the SC is presently seized and to abide by the decisions resulting therefrom."

3) Begin para 7 with word "considers" and delete "reminds the Govt of Israel". We feel sure if shoe fits Israelis will put it on and we consider original language is not well calculated to induce reasonable attitude.

4) Regarding para 9, we suggest that the finding by SC entailed in use of word "violation" may be getting SC into MAC's terrain. Furthermore, the retaliatory bombing was violation of cease-fire of July 15, 1948 and was therefore of direct concern to SC under provision of August 11, 1949 res which reads "requests the Chief of Staff mentioned above to report to the SC on the observance of the cease-fire in Palestine in accordance with the terms of this resolution . . .". Council can therefore make finding that bombing violated cease-fire and the last part of the para might read "is a violation of the cease-fire provided in the Security Council resolution of July 15, 1948, and is inconsistent with the terms of the armistice agreement and the obligations of Israel under the Charter of the United Nations."

5) Substitute "considers" for "decides" under para 10A and "considers" for "holds" in 10B on grounds not well calculated to induce reasonable attitude.

6) Omit "at end of 30 days" in para 12. Chief of Staff is submitting periodic reports to Council on continuing authority granted by November 17, 1950 res. We question whether Chief of Staff should be tied down to hard and fast schedule and are inclined to believe he should be given discretion to report when he considers circumstances warrant.

7) With regard to new suggested para in Deptel 894 of May 2,<sup>3</sup> we wish to point out that on at least one occasion Arab villagers refused to give observers access to place where they wished to go.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 3, p. 654.

However, since this refusal may have been based on fact that observers were accompanied by Israeli police (possibly at request of MAC chairman), possible Israeli charge of bias based on their being singled out in para might be met on ground that Arab villagers had right to exclude Israeli police. Please advise your decision after consideration this point.

Riley suggests substituting "required" for "requested" after words "whatever such access is".

AUSTIN

684A.85/5-451: Telegram

The Chargé in Jordan (Fritzlan) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Amman, May 4, 1951—11 a.m.

191. Kirkbride today showed me text PriMin Samir Rifai's reply to recent Israeli communication on implementation Jordan-Israeli armistice agreement (see Tel Aviv tel 667 April 20 to Dept).<sup>2</sup>

Samir's reply made in last two days and in essence states:

(1) Jordan agrees with Israel that first step must be implementation armistice agrmt and then consideration might appropriately be given other matters.

(2) Jordan considers Arts 6 and 8 thus far unimplemented and steps shid be taken rectify this state of affairs.

(3) There appears to be basic difference of interpretation between Jordan and Israel on meaning these articles and especially meaning of Art 8 as regards Mt Scopus institutions.

(4) In view of fact that interpretation of agrmt is legal matter Jordan believes difference shld be submitted to an internat tribunal for clarification.

(5) Jordan proposes matter be submitted by both parties to Internatl Court of Justice and hopes Israel will agree this procedure.

Samir's reply was dispatched after mtg between King Abdullah and Shiloah described in Tel Aviv tel 696 May 2.3 I understand King sought dissuade Samir from sending reply at this juncture stating that Israelis had promised pay Jordan "A lot of money" (presumably he referred to release certain blocked balances). Samir took stand that thus far Israeli concessions had been limited to offer evacuate Naharayim and release some blocked accounts. These were both due Jordan as matter of right and justice and must not be considered Israeli favors.

Kirkbride tells me at recent mtg between King and Shiloah it was latter, not Abdullah, who deplored raising sovereignty issue. He thinks this may indicate Israelis not very sure of legal basis for their contention.4

<sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 647. <sup>3</sup> Ante, p. 656.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated for information to Jerusalem, London, and Tel Aviv.

FRITZLAN

674.84A/5-451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, May 4, 1951—2 p. m.

1130. With regard to proposal that note re Akaba shld be expanded to review and renew our protests on Suez Canal and transport restrictions generally (Deptel 1068 May 2 <sup>2</sup> rptd London 4998, Tel Aviv 481, Jidda 365, Amman 152) I believe reasoning on page 9 Current Fon Relations April 25 <sup>3</sup> outlining basis for Dept's rejection Brit suggestion for renewed protest on Haifa restrictions are also applicable in present instance. Our position is on record with GOE and renewal at this time wld not likely really to contribute to result we desire. In fact it might have opposite tendency since GOE, with considerable justification, I believe, does not consider that Amer commercial interests are being seriously affected by her restrictions. GOE wld probably interpret undue unilateral interest on our part as confirmation that restrictions are of some utility insofar as Israel is concerned and that our interest reflects pro-Israeli policy.

In gen, views on this question are same as outlined in mytel 502, Nov 20, 1950 <sup>4</sup> commenting on similar proposal, namely, that only chance of effective solution lies through MAC and SC.

I wld suggest therefore that Akaba protests be confined to that particular problem.

[CAFFERY]

* Not printed.

&lt;sup>4</sup> In telegram 196 from Amman, May 14, the Legation reported in part that it learned that the proposal to have the two sides withdraw previous correspondence was discussed without result at a meeting held May 11 between the King, Prime Minister Rifai, and Mr. Shiloah. (684A.85/5-1451)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman, Jidda, London, and Tel Aviv. <sup>2</sup> In this telegram the Department had in part suggested:

&quot;Dept agrees reply shld be made to Egypt aide-mémoire re Akaba (Embdes 2446 Apr 11 [p. 633] and Deptel 1020 Apr 18 [not printed]) lest silence be interpreted as US acquiescence in position adopted. . . . We believe reply shld 1) review restrictions which Egypt has adopted and their effect on US natl interests; 2) set forth arguments contained Deptel 432, Nov 14, 1950 [not printed]; 3) cite gen legal principles involved in Akaba situation, (this situation analogous to passageway to Baltic Sea and Gulf Finland through Sound and Belts between Denmark and Sweden); and 4) assert US inability recognize validity Egypt position." (674.84A/5-251)

*Not printed; reference is to Department of State's classified internal publication, Current Foreign Relations.

683.84A/5-451: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Tel Aviv, May 4, 1951—5 p. m.

NIACT

709. 1. Comment to Deptel 480, May 1<sup>2</sup> and intel 1 a.m. May 3<sup>3</sup> following Embtel 704, May 4.<sup>3</sup>

Emb believes that draft res is based on earlier situation which has now changed in important respects, and that if presented in present form wld now be definitely harmful. It does not take into account fundamental change which has taken place in Israel attitude and policy. Earlier subjective attitude and disposition to override UNTSO auth have given way to what appears to be genuine determination to be scrupulously correct in observance terms armistice agreement and coop with UN.

- 2. Developments evidencing change in policy include public expression of regret over retaliatory bombing, agreement FonMin and Col De Ridder (Embtel 706, May 4)<sup>4</sup> to confine work for time being to west bank of Jordan, apparent restraint now being practiced by Israel forces in face of present attacks (Embtel 705, May 4),<sup>5</sup> more coop attitude of Israel auths toward service attachés.
- 3. It ignores more recent breach of peace in Israel-Syrian border area and possible effect thereof on relative position of parties to dispute. Army Attaché, who has just returned from areas where firing now in progress, reports notable restraint on part Israel forces under what he terms extreme provocation, and firing from Syrian positions in volume suggesting mil formations.
- 4. In light of foregoing, singling out of Israel for public rebuke in latter part of Section 9 of draft res without any ref to use of force by Syria cld not but give this country and its sympathizers reason for complaint. If this action is to be mentioned specifically as violation of terms of armistice agreement, they certainly wld not understand failure to criticize Syria for resorting to mil action such as involved killing of Israel police near El Hamma and soldiers north of Sea of Galilee

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram repeated for information to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, and Paris.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Same as telegram 891 to New York, p. 652.

<sup>3</sup> Not printed.

&#x27;This telegram indicated in part that the agreement mentioned had gone into effect some time after April 27. (683.84A/5-451) In telegram 590 from Damascus, May 5, the Legation commented in part: "Confining work west bank of Jordan, even if practicable still fails justify continued disregard MAC chairman's decisions." (683.84A/5-551)

&lt;sup>6</sup>This telegram reads in part: "Army attaché who returned late May 3 from reconnaissance in area recent Israel-Syria fighting reports present behavior Israel Army entirely correct and his impression Israel army determined avoid any action which cld subject them to criticism. Israel Army apparently has instructions to confine all military action to 'nondemilitarization Israel territory.' . . . Service attachés have received full cooperation Israel auths re latest incidents." (683.84A/5-451)

near Tall Al Matilla. There is some question whether one violation shid be mentioned unless all are specified. It may be desirable to criticize both parties for having resorted to any mil action whatsoever.

- 5. It is doubted also whether any useful purpose is served by mentioning Israel by name in Section 7 of the proposed draft since it wld be just as effective and less offensive simply to state that it is inconsistent with objectives and intent of armistice agreement for parties to refuse to participate in meetings.
- 6. Emb inclined favor inclusion subsection (b) para 10 subject Gen Riley's approval without alteration, but suggests amending subsection (a) to take into account that return of Arabs in some cases impossible, because of destruction of homes. Hence Dept may wish include provision for early compensation such cases. Emb believes moreover effort shid be made to avoid if possible stalement produced by few landholders who cld not be persuaded accept compensation and permit development project to proceed. Unreasonably obstructive tactics on part of few persons cld still endanger internatl peace.
- 7. It is suggested also that position of extremely important point (11) be changed to final point in order that document end on note urging peaceful settlement. Emb hopes SC intervention may be so handled as to induce parties to negot permanent peace settlement near future.<sup>6</sup>

DAVIS

UNP Files: Lot 58 D 224

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Officer in Charge of Lebanon-Syria-Iraq Affairs (Barrow)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] May 7, 1951.

Subject: 1) The Iraqi Jews

2) The Huleh Controversy and a Final Settlement of the Palestine Problem

3) Grant Aid to the Near East

Participants: Mr. Jacob Blaustein, President of the American Jewish Committee

NEA—Mr. McGhee

NE-Mr. Barrow

&lt;sup>6</sup> In telegram 584 from Damascus May 4, the Legation commented on the draft Security Council resolution in part as follows:

&quot;Dept's draft SC resolution Deptel 412 [891 to New York] appears to us to meet requirements present situation. We feel moreover urgent need exists for SC to clarify all of issues dealt with in draft plus requirement Israeli provide UN officials full access and facilities parts of zone at all times. Leg believes para 10(A) shld not be deleted and in fact shld affirm obligation Israeli to reconstruct destroyed homes." (683.84A/5-451)

Discussion

1) The Iraqi Jews.

Mr. Blaustein had submitted a letter to Mr. McGhee, copy attached, which, while not criticising the general principle of freezing of assets, took exception to a number of the aspects of Iraqi law and practice in this regard. Mr. McGhee recalled the Department's previous efforts on behalf of the Iraqi Jews, and assured Mr. Blaustein that the Department had and would continue to go about as far as we reasonably could in endeavoring to secure better treatment for them. He had spoken to the Iraqis about it during his recent trip to Baghdad. There were, however, as Mr. Blaustein could appreciate, certain limitations imposed upon any government in involving itself in the details of the internal legislation enacted by another country. Mr. McGhee said that the Indian Government was very much interested in the Negro problem in the United States, but if the Indian Embassy were to endeavor to tell us exactly how we should deal with the problem, we would no doubt resent it.

Moreover, an approach to Iraq on the subject of the frozen assets would invite Iraqi criticisms of the somewhat parallel situation existing in Israeli treatment of not only the assets of Arab refugees but also of Arab inhabitants in Israel. We did not pretend that these parallels necessarily condone the Iraqi actions, but they were nevertheless a factor to be considered.

Mr. McGhee said that we would bring Mr. Blaustein's letter and memorandum to the attention of our Embassy at Baghdad and would request that the Embassy go as far as it felt it could in ameliorating the situation, but the limitations of the action we could take in this regard should be borne in mind. It was further agreed that the Department would authorize the Embassy at Baghdad to approach the Iraqi Government regarding an extension of the May 31 deadline of

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr. Blaustein's letter of April 19 to Mr. McGhee is not printed.

&lt;sup>2</sup> On March 10, the Iraqi Government had frozen the assets of those Iraqi Jews who had registered for emigration from Iraq to Israel. Previous Iraqi legislation had deprived those Jews who registered of their citizenship. Information on these subjects is in files 357.AC, 784A.00, 884A.1887, and 887.411 for 1951.

&lt;sup>3</sup>Mr. McGhee had been in Baghdad during the third week in March. Record has not been found in Department of State files of any representations made to the Iraqi Government on this subject during his visit.

&lt;sup>4</sup> On this ground the U.S. Government had refused an Israeli request of March 20 that it intercede with Iraq in the matter of frozen assets. (Despatch 534 from Tel Aviv, March 21, enclosing Israeli aide-mémoire of March 20, 884A.1887/3-2151; telegram 393 to Tel Aviv, March 23, 357.AC/3-2151; airgram 231 to Tel Aviv, April 17, 884A.1887/3-2151)

The formal reply dated May 1 of the United States to this and other requests of Israel on the subject of Jewish emigration from Iraq forms enclosure 1 to despatch 39, from Tel Aviv, July 12. (884A.1887/7-1251)

Jewish emigration from Iraq in order that the airlift program could be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Mr. Blaustein then asked Mr. McGhee if he had any objection to his publishing the information contained in his letter and memorandum and mentioning his talk with Mr. McGhee without reporting Mr. McGhee's reaction or associating the Department with the information in any way. Mr. Blaustein said that members of his organization who were experts on the Near East believed that giving the Iraqi actions the full light of publicity and bringing public opinion to bear would be one of the best means of convincing Iraq to take a more moderate attitude.

Mr. McGhee said that Mr. Blaustein was certainly entitled to publish the information if he wished to, but voiced doubts that publicity of this kind would seriously influence the Iraqi Government, and, even if so, might influence it adversely. He urged Mr. Blaustein to consider the reaction in Iraq very carefully.

2) The Huleh Controversy and a Final Settlement of the Palestine Problem.

Mr. Blaustein said he was greatly concerned over the Huleh controversy and asked if there was any message that Mr. McGhee would like him to relay to the Government of Israel. Mr. McGhee reviewed in general terms the facts of the controversy stating that it appeared to have its origin in the efforts of the Israel Government to undertake the Huleh drainage scheme in spite of the request of the United Nations Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission that work be halted pending negotiations with the Arab land owners whose property was being expropriated under the scheme. Mr. McGhee said the Security Council was meeting on May 8 to consider the question and made no direct response to Mr. Blaustein's offer to speak with the Israeli authorities.

Mr. Blaustein then said that the Huleh controversy and the situation of the Iraqi Jews were all just symptoms of one fundamental malady, the lack of a final settlement of the Palestine problem. He said that he and his colleagues have been giving a great deal of lem of denationalized Jews left in Iraq." (884A.1887/5-951)

No direct reply to this telegram has been found in Department of State files. Telegram 765 from Baghdad, June 2, reads as follows: "NEAT rep states airlift denationalized Jews to Israel will be completed by end of June. Operations continue monthly; no govt action taken re unofficially mentioned May 31 dead-line nor announcement made of future deadline." (884A.1887/6-251) dead-line nor announcement made of future deadline." (884A.1887/6-251)

*Joint Weeka 79 from Tel Aviv, July 6, reported in part that the movement of 106,662 Jews from Iraq to Israel would be completed in the near future. (784A.00(W)/7-651)

&lt;sup>5</sup> In telegram 549 to Baghdad, May 9, approved for transmission by Kopper, the Department stated it believed on the basis of recently received information that Iraq might extend this time limit on its own initiative. "However, shld Iraqis not act Emb is authorized discreetly pt out at optimum moment: (1) USG believes Israel making max effort complete airlift; (2) inter alia, halt in evacuation process wld impose severe burden upon Iraqi Govt in resolving problem of denationalized Jews left in Iraq." (884A.1887/5-951)

thought to the question, and it was the consensus that Egypt was the key country to bring to a settlement since all the others would probably fall in line if Egypt was the first to conclude peace. Mr. McGhee agreed that Egypt was logically the key country insofar as the Arab side of the problem was concerned, but he said that during his recent visit to Egypt he saw no signs that the Egyptians were ready to make peace unless substantial concessions were offered by Israel.

Mr. Blaustein said he wondered if there was anything he, as a non-Zionist American in no way associated with the Israel Government, could do to bring Egypt and Israel together. If he or someone like him could only talk with the Egyptians to ascertain their conditions for a peaceful settlement, it might be possible for him to persuade friends in Israel to make an offer along these lines.

Mr. McGhee said that he would try to arrange a meeting between Mr. Blaustein and the Egyptian Ambassador. He did not know how productive the meeting would be but thought that it was worth trying.

3) Grant Aid to the Near East.

Mr. Blaustein said that he had seen the President the previous day and had left with him a letter setting forth the views of his organization on the $150 million grant aid bill for Israel now pending in the Congress. In one part of his letter he implied that the State Department was blocking passage of this bill and that the President should overrule the State Department's objections.

Mr. Blaustein said that he was aware of our feeling that the question of grant aid should be approached on a regional basis and that impartiality had to be shown to the Arab States and Israel. He feared, however, that if this area approach to grant aid were adopted (a) the voting of the funds by the Congress would be long delayed, and (b) Israel would not receive an adequate sum to meet its urgent requirements.

Mr. McGhee said that the Department sincerely desired to help Israel out of its economic difficulties, but it would simply not be either fair to other countries or orderly from an administrative standpoint to make grant aid to Israel separate from the omnibus aid program which we had been working on for quite some time, indeed even before the Israel grant aid request had been submitted. In fact, as a matter of procedure, grant aid to the Near East had been made a part of the global omnibus aid bill, since Congress quite reasonably wanted to see just how much our foreign aid bill amounted to and whether it was being apportioned throughout the world on an intelligent basis.

Mr. Blaustein said that he did not object to the area approach in principle, but he was still concerned lest Israel not be given an adequate amount to meet its requirements. He said that if the sum being considered was in the vicinity of $20 or $25 million it would be completely inadequate. Mr. McGhee said that the grant to Israel as well as to other countries would have to be considered primarily in the light of how much foreign aid the United States could afford, taking into account the legitimate needs of all countries. Possibly no country would receive all that it wanted or felt it needed; we would just have to do the best we could.

784A.13/5-851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State 1

SECRET

[Washington,] May 8, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Prime Minister of Israel

Participants: Prime Minister of Israel, David Ben-Gurion

The Secretary

Ambassador of Israel, Abba Eban

NE—Mr. Lewis Jones

NE-Mr. Waldo

The Prime Minister expressed his thanks to me and the US Government for the extensive aid which the US had given to Israel since the founding of that state. The Prime Minister said that this aid was symbolic of the community of ideals which existed between Israel and the United States.

The Prime Minister told me that he had discussed questions of peace and the defense of the Middle East with General Marshall <sup>2</sup> and had informed him of the close relationship which now exists between the UK and Israel. He said this is now on the same basis as it had been "in the old days". On the subject of Middle East defense, there had been no differences of opinion between General Marshall and himself, although he clearly understood that foreign policy was decided in the State Department.

Prime Minister said that Israel has the capacity to defend itself and to take part in the defense of the Middle East; Israel has the manpower and the industrial capacity; the manpower is growing rapidly and is now twice what it had been on the establishment of the State. As a result of the steady inflow of immigrants there is now in Israel a larger proportion of people between the ages of fifteen and forty than in most countries; Israel has a small standing army but has taken measures to train large reserves. The principal feature of this training consists of two years of compulsory service for both men and women. This service includes nine months of agricultural training as well as instruction in Hebrew, history, etc. Such an extensive program of training is a great burden for a little country with a yearly immigration of 200,000 people.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

&lt;sup>2</sup> No memorandum of the conversation held May 4 between the Prime Minister and General Marshall has been found in Department of State files. However, see the extract from the Daily Top Secret Summary of May 17, p. 686.

Israel has followed, and will continue to follow, a policy of unlimited immigration. It is the ideal on which the State is based. The immigration program will have to be carried on as long as it is necessary to provide a haven for oppressed Jews, but such a policy constitutes a tremendous burden for Israel. Israel's prime need, therefore, is to build up its industrial establishment and its defensive capacity, and to do this it needs US assistance; it cannot do it alone. From the point of view of manpower, it is true Israel is not the only country in the Near East; Turkey is also willing and able to contribute to the defense of the area. Israel, however, can be considered the second people of the region, after the Turks. The other countries are not of much use in any plans for the defense of the area.

He knew the US and the UK considered the defense of the Middle East vital and that we would want to defend the Middle East. The Prime Minister hoped for peace, but no one could tell when calamity might come. With regard to the specific steps which might be taken by Israel, he mentioned that his country could produce guns and shells but the necessary raw materials would have to come from outside. He realized that raw materials had to be controlled in the present state of world crisis, but Israel should at least have priority with the other allies of the US for raw materials, machinery, and engineers; Israel had a great deal to learn, and had an urgent need for instructors.

On the basis of Israel's needs, his country had inaugurated a $1.5 billion program over the next three years to assist in the resettlement of immigrants and to enable Israel to play a defensive role in the area. Five hundred million dollars of the required sum would be raised in Israel; the other billion, it was hoped could come from the US, from the bond issue, gifts, and from other sources. It was in this connection that Israel had asked the US for grant aid.

The Prime Minister said he understood that an objection had been raised that a grant to Israel by the US would alienate the Arab states. He considered this an illogical position and said that the British had made the same mistake in the past. The Arab attitude toward the US was not determined by what the US did for the Jews. Persia was an example. Persia was relatively friendly toward Israel and yet he was convinced Persia would not fight for the West. The Arabs were very similar to the Persians; they had an historic inability to stand up in the face of situations like the one presently threatening world peace. He said that what the West did for Israel, therefore, would not change the basic attitude of the Arab states toward the West.

The US was in a position to help Israel greatly. For example, the Germans had taken away Jewish lives and Jewish property, and the Germans should pay a part of the burden of resettling the Jewish emigrants from Europe who had suffered from their excesses. Mr. Adenauer had acknowledged Germany's guilt to certain Israel representatives, expressed the wish to make amends, and admitted the principle of the need for the payment of an indemnity. Adenauer said, however, that he could not pay such an indemnity against the wishes of the US. The US, therefore, could be of great assistance to Israel by permitting and encouraging Germany to pay its just debts.

The Prime Minister said that his talk with me constituted an outline of Israel's present needs and the means whereby they could be filled. I told the Prime Minister that I knew that General Marshall's views were in accord with the Department's.

We had given a great deal of thought to what could be done in the Middle East. The first essential, however, was to get peace in the area, and we hoped Israel would cooperate with the Armistice machinery in working out the present dispute between Syria and Israel. The matter could be settled through the UN, if the Israelis were helpful and cooperative.

I realized two things were needed to build up local production in Israel: machine tools and raw materials. Mr. Wilson had just returned from a trip to Europe and was fully aware of the crisis throughout the world resulting from shortages of these items. The present problem, however, is to establish an international system for the distribution of raw materials which would stimulate production. During the Second World War the US and the UK controlled all raw material sources and were able to establish the necessary priorities throughout the world; now the cooperation of at least seven countries was required to establish similar controls. There was also the question of supplies to be exchanged for raw materials. During the last war prices of raw materials were over controlled and export controls were in effect on manufactured goods from the US to other countries. A problem had then arisen in connection with our neighbors in Latin America. As a result of the tight controls during the war they were unable to obtain their requirements in manufactured goods during the war. When the US took off all export controls and also removed price controls, they were unable to purchase the needed goods with the funds which had accumulated from the sale of raw materials at controlled prices during the war period. International agreement on allocations was therefore urgently necessary at the present time.

I told the Prime Minister that I did not fully understand what was meant by Mr. Adenauer's remarks. I pointed out that any German deficit would have to be made good by the US. We had had trouble with the Russians on this score. The Russians wanted a large indemnity from Germany, but all reparations from Western Germany ultimately came out of the US unless they took the form of a transfer of capital items which had now ceased. We were not in favor of reparations out of current production.

Ambassador Eban interposed the remark that Israel's policy would involve unrequited exports from Germany. He claimed that Germany had a higher standard of living than Israel and could afford to follow such a program.

The Prime Minister said that Israel was lowering its standard of living in order to bring in people from all over the world; it was inconceivable to him, therefore, that the Germans should get away with maintaining a higher standard of living than existed in Israel.

The Prime Minister said that Israel had a great interest in peace in the Near East. He could not say, however, when peace would come, because of the corruption of the Arab governments, competing political factions, etc. In the beginning, the Arabs had believed that they could defeat Israel on the field of battle; they were now aware that this was impossible, and maintained the Israel economy would collapse shortly resulting in Israel's disappearance from the Near East. The Prime Minister claimed that there were many people in Egypt, Jordan, and Lebanon who were friends of Israel and wanted peace. In Syria, however, they had all been liquidated.

The Prime Minister suggested that the best means whereby the US could facilitate peace in the Near East was by extending economic aid to the Israelis. This would constitute proof to the Arabs that their hope for Israel's economic collapse was untenable and would convince them that Israel could not be destroyed. The Arab states would then be prepared to make peace with Israel. The Prime Minister said that Egypt was the keystone for peace in the Near East and that a peace agreement with that country would go a long way to bring about peace agreements with the other neighboring Arab countries. He said there were no problems between Israel and Egypt, and only desert lay between the two countries.

The Prime Minister continued that Israel did not claim an inch of Syrian territory; They had no reason to attack Syria, but they had conclusive evidence that Syrian soldiers had entered the Demilitarized Zone and that the fighting was continuing in the area. He said there was no reason for aggression by Israel, and he could give me the fullest assurances that Israel would cooperate with the UN in bringing about peace in the area and keeping the Armistice Agreement.

The Prime Minister concluded by stating that the West might find that Israel's cooperation would be the decisive factor in the successful defense of the Middle East.

357.AC/5-951: Telegram

The United States Representative on the Palestine Conciliation Commission (Palmer) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PRIORITY

JERUSALEM, May 9, 1951—noon.

208. Palun 403. This tel is in nature of situation report on activities of PCC since first mtg of current year on 25 Jan. It is motivated both by need for better understanding of Dept's present views on problems with which PCC is seized, but also by increasing sense of frustration and futility on part of PC as whole. During past three months there has been no progress made on compensation repatriation blocked accts or peace negots as envisaged in GA res of 14 Dec 1950. Meanwhile Israel-Syrian relations have reached alarming point of deterioration while PCC has been largely out of touch with situation. There now remain six months before opening of next GA session. This wld be sufficient time for carrying out an active program in connection with above problems provided a more vigorous leadership cld be undertaken by USDel. Under present circumstances, I do not feel in a position to assert such leadership in absence of clear understanding of Dept's objective with respect to above-mentioned problems.

On compensation USDel has proceeded in PCC in accordance with Dept's basic instrs contained in document SD/S/C. 1/261 of 6 Sept 1949, Dept memo of Jan 3, 1950 and Unpal 246 of 6 Feb 1950.¹ These documents assume that compensation shld be paid on basis of individual losses and distribution of compensation shld at least in part be made to individual claimants.² We have also assumed that a basis can be worked out for linking compensation and reintegration whereby individual refugees being compensated can use their compensation for resettlement as pointed out in Palun 400 of 6 Mar 1951.³ On these assumptions USDel initiated a work program which was approved by PCC on 10 Mar 1951 (doc Comgen/17/Rev 1) for arriving at an estimate of total value of refugee lost property, consideration of means of linking compensation and reintegration, and study of means of obtaining funds with which compensation might be paid. This program was

&lt;sup>1</sup> None printed.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In his immediately preceding telegram, 207 (Palun 402), also of May 9, (357.AC/5-951), Ambassador Palmer had in substance reiterated his views as outlined by Mr. Ludlow in his memorandum to Mr. Hickerson of March 14, p. 592.

<sup>3</sup> In this telegram Mr. Palmer had stated in part:

&quot;US delegate does believe that a basis for linking compensation and reintegration can be worked out. He does not believe however that this can be done prior to an agreement with Israel as to sum of money to be paid for compensation. Once agreement has been reached as to this sum and as to means of obtaining necessary funds for payment of this sum, US delegate helieves that methods can be devised in cooperation with UNRWA to enable individual refugees being compensated to use their compensation for their own resettlement." (357.AC/3-651) discussed with Wainhouse in Jerusalem prior to adoption by PCC and with Jones and McGhee thereafter. It was also discussed informally with Shiloah by Barco. While an estimate of total Arab losses can be undertaken by PCC's refugee office on arrival of Andersen who is expected end of this month fact remains that consideration of compensation claims is academic unless means can be found for financing compensation payment. Shiloah has expressed an interest to Barco in possibility of a long-term United Nations loan to Israel which wld enable Israel to assume obligation to pay compensation. I have not felt in a position to discuss this question with reps of Israel Govt in absence of a better understanding of Dept's position in this respect. It is fundamental question in my opinion in any consideration with Israel of her compensation obligations. Unless this matter can be negotiated with Israel, I see little for PCC to do on this question prior to its next report to GA.

Repatriation is a dead letter as far as PCC is concerned. Yet under 14 Dec res new refugee office is expected to work out arrangements for repatriation. USDel doubts Andersen will succeed where PCC has failed in this respect.

On blocked accts, Barco's discussion with FonOff in London indicated clearly UK no longer has any control over sterling balances due Israel which wld be required in event Israel was willing release Arab accts. Question of release or non-release of Arab accts thus remains entirely with Israel Govt. In view of negative attitude Israel Govt I have not felt in a position make any proposals in this connection.

On peace negots as envisaged in 14 Dec res there exists no grounds on which PCC cld at present time propose direct or indirect discussions in absence Dept's initiative. Basis for such discussions wld necessarily lie in Israel's willingness consider making concrete offers to Arab States.

Israel's deteriorating relations with Syria have produced a situation within PCC where members feel responsibility to UN and states concerned without having means make any contribution. Boisanger intends to raise problem at next PCC meeting and to propose report to SYG raising question PCC's dilemma. His principal concern is to protect PCC from charges of indifference in event of major Israeli Syrian conflict.

Foregoing indicates sense of futility with which PCC now regards its present task. Active consideration of these problems by members of comm are becoming increasingly infrequent. Boisanger has only last week returned from a month in Paris, is now touring Syria and will leave again for Paris probably early in June. Aras likewise is seldom in Jerusalem. SYG Lie's recent discussions at Govt House with PCC clearly indicated his realization that PCC activities had reached a stalemate and that only remaining function was to include in report to GA recommendations for consolidation of United Nations activities in this area and elimination unproductive organizations. My Fr and Turkish colleagues apparently are in agreement with his views and favor adjournment following Andersen's arrival until time for preparing GA report. USDel hopes for Dept's guidance and support for more positive achievement than this.

In view circumscribed position in which PCC finds itself, this can best be done by Dept's supporting (1) realistic plans for compensation and first and foremost for financing of a fund from which Israel can pay compensation. This in itself wld be important contribution toward political settlement in area. Failure to deal effectively with compensation will encourage new charges by Arab world of emptiness of promises of UN generally and US specifically. (2) Immed direct negots under UN auspices between Israel and Jordan and Israel and Syria on questions best suited to transform armistice arrangements into formal peace. (Shiloah recently admitted that in his opinion continued failure direct Israel-Jordan talks at Shuneh was due to absence of third party to talk as mediator). Under these two categories, new efforts by PCC can be productive, but such efforts required determined US leadership. In absence of such leadership, PCC is becoming symbol of UN failure, and, in minds of Arab world, a cover for US indifference. Time may come when responsible Israel leaders will feel likewise.4

[Palmer]

330/5-1051: Telegram

The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Gross) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

New York, May 10, 1951—12:56 p.m.

PRIORITY

1516. Re Syrian-Israeli dispute: Following is result of US-UK-French consultation at adviser level yesterday afternoon on text of resolution as contained Deptel 891 of May 1 <sup>1</sup> (agreement subject to dels' clearance, but in most cases UK adviser had cleared del position):

Agreement without change on paras 1 through 5, 8, 11, and 13.

&#x27;In telegram 220 from Jerusalem (Palun 405), May 28, Mr. Palmer indicated that no reply to Palun 403 had as yet been received and stated in part: "As was also indicated in Palun 403 my colleagues feel that PCC's early adjournment is necessary. . . . Criticism in press and among public of PCC as irresponsible body and demands for resignation are becoming more frequent." The Ambassador stated that the PCC planned to adjourn its Jerusalem sessions the following week and to reconvene in Geneva no later than August 15. (357.AC/5–2851)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 652.

Paragraph 6 to read: "Calls on Govts of Israel and Syria to bring before MAC or its chairman, whichever has the pertinent responsibility under Armistice Agreement, the complaints of which SC presently seized and to abide by decisions resulting therefrom." UKFO has instructed it wishes words "except that alluded to in para 9 of this resolution" omitted since some details connected with retaliatory bombing may be fit subjects for MAC or chairman's action. French had no strong opinion but inclined toward omitting words.

Paragraph 7: UKFO has instructed del it concurs with our suggested replacement of words "reminds Govt of Israel" by "considers". French preferred original wording but would put our amendment and UK concurrence thereto to Quai d'Orsay.

Paragraph 9: French and British accepted our inclusion of reference to July 15, 1948 cease-fire resolution, but felt some allusion must be made to recent TSO reports of further Israel bombing of Syrian territory and indications Syrian Army may be participating in hostilities. British accordingly suggested following redraft of paragraph 9:

"Brings to the attention of the Governments of Syria and Israel their obligations under Article 2, paragraph 4 of the Charter of the United Nations and their commitments under the Armistice Agreement not to resort to military force:

"finds that

(a) Aerial action taken by forces of the Government of Israel

on April 5, 1951, and

(b) Any aggressive military actions by either of the parties in or around the demilitarized zone, which further investigation by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization into the reports and complaints recently submitted to the Council may establish, constitute a violation of the cease-fire provided in the Security Council Resolution of July 15, 1948 and are inconsistent with the terms of the Armistice Agreement and the obligations assumed under the Charter."

Word "aggressive" suggested by French, as recognition of right of self-defense. When we pointed out language of redraft did not declare present of military or para-military forces in demilitarized zone, if proven, to be violation of Armistice Agreement, French replied numerous other violations, such as reported second aerial bombing of Syrian territory, not cited.

Paragraph 10: Changes suggested mytels 1485 2 (para 5) and 1486 3 (last para) accepted by British and French.

Paragraph 12: Omission of words "at end of thirty days" accepted by British and French.

Re possible new paragraph 4 suggested mytel 1485, neither British nor French liked. UK feared its inclusion might prejudice authority of MAC and French said it does not accord with Quai d'Orsay's desire to throw fullest emphasis possible on authority of MAC. We accordingly dropped it.

<sup>2</sup> Dated May 3, p. 658.

&lt;sup>3</sup> The last paragraph of this telegram, also of May 3, reads as follows: "Further to mytel 1485, Riley approves language para 10 of draft res with following additional modifications: omit 'without their consent' following 'from demilitarized zone' in sub-para A; and insert 'chairman of the' before 'Mixed Armistice Commission' in sub-para B." (357.AC/5-351)

Re new paragraph of urtel 894, May 2: <sup>4</sup> British and French accepted replacement of "calls to the attention of Israel the view of the Council" by "considers" and replacement of "requested" by "required" before "in the pursuance."

New paragraph suggested in beginning urtel 905: <sup>5</sup> British and French had had doubts over Riley's being authorized to make representations to parties while still here, but in view of his imminent departure and his declared liking for paragraph, hoped their governments would accept.

These new paragraphs would be numbered 11 and 13, respectively, and present 11, 12 and 13 would become 12, 14 and 15, respectively.

UK suggested paragraph, reported in revised form by mytel 1498,6 May 7, was withdrawn by UKDel. French concurred in withdrawal.

French propose to submit to colleagues tomorrow two paragraphs embodying desire to "reinforce authority of MAC" and "avoid difficulties of interpretation of Armistice Agreement by parties". They apparently working on paragraph declaring sovereignty not being "exercised" in zone by either party.

Timetable: Results recorded above are subject to review and possible change by governments, but three co-sponsors seem in general to be thinking along same lines. In fact, UKFO has indicated general agreement our thinking, except for new para 9 drafting which, of course, it has not seen. French seem to be concentrating their attention on two points mentioned in immediately preceding para and appear not to feel deeply about rest, although del, at least, seems inclined make faces at Israelis. With luck we may have agreement on resolution by Friday evening or Saturday morning. Co-sponsors might then at once show it in confidence to other SC members seeking del comment (not, however, with view to modification unless sharp divergency arose) so that members would have earliest opportunity seek instructions. We would show resolution to parties Monday, and call

&lt;sup>4</sup> See footnote 3, p. 654.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Dated May 5. The section mentioned reads as follows:

&quot;Dept believes fol new para shid be added to draft res preferably to follow present para 11: 'Directs the Chief of Staff of TSO to take the necessary steps to effect the implementation of this resolution for the purpose of restoring peace in the Area, and authorizes him to make such representations to the govts of Israel and Syria as he may deem necessary'.

&quot;Dept has in mind possibility such authorization will empower Riley to undertake negotiations with Syria and Israel reps here in this country and issue directives to de Ridder in Palestine until such time as Riley may be able return to his post." (330/5-551) for meeting 15th to table resolution, deliver our statements and probably hear from parties. If no important amendments submitted (parties will probably try to have their respective views written in as on May 8) and other members finish speaking, resolution might be voted May 16. If no, we should try to break into Comite 1 AMC deliberations for half-day to finish. Haste is indicated since Riley, who hopes to depart for Palestine 13th, holds that he will be unable to get parties' serious attention to complaints until SC has finished action on present agenda.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Not printed, but see footnote 1, p. 680.

Gross

683.84 A / 5 - 1051: Telegram

The Minister in Syria (Cannon) to the Department of State 1

SECRET NIACT

Damascus, May 10, 1951—10 p. m.

616. ReDepcirtel 676, May 7  $^{\circ}$  (recd this afternoon). Re Amb Eban's request for good offices US on behalf Israel and arguments he presented Legation has fol comment:

1. Since early Mar US counselled Syrian restraint and full cooperation with UN; French and Brit have done likewise; Syrian record of cooperation attested by UN reports. No evidence divergence from this policy despite Israel disregard MAC decisions and steady deterioration situation. See fol tel re Shishikli renewed assurances this regard to me today.

2. Eban's charge of "gross fallacy" is shocking example high pressure campaign apparently designed convince world conflict began May 4 whereas whole series of developments have taken course feared by Syrians as stated Legtels 404, Feb 20, 458, Mar 14. We suspect some assistance from Syria for Arabs fight Tel Aviv tels listed material observed on spot and allegedly left behind when Arabs driven back. Important to note that observers report what they see but do not speculate or interpret one way or other. We have not seen TSO reports indicating Syrian army intervention.

<sup>1</sup> Telegram repeated for information to Amman, Ankara, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, and Paris.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In this telegram the Department had summarized a conversation held May 7 between Mr. Eban, Mr. Berry, and other officials, in which the Ambassador had requested on behalf of Israel the good offices of the United States in restoring peace to the Demilitarized Zone. "He expressed feeling his Govt that big powers not make sufficiently strenuous representations Damascus this question. . . Eban stated our analysis was based on 'gross fallacy' that Arabs involved were civilians." The Ambassador had also stated Israeli belief that France was ". . endeavoring assist Syria obtain water sources. Israel wld display 'special tenacity' re this area as Israel existence wld be threatened without water sources." (683.84A/5-751)

Not printed, but see footnote 2. p. 591.
 Not printed, but see footnote 6, p. 592.
 Not found in Department of State files.

3. As for Eban's concern lest US objectivity be encouraging Syrians in "deception" that only civilians involved, UN reports alone can be considered authoritative. See fuller discussion below.

4. Question water rights opens highly complex problem involving Syria Jordan and Israel. Comments this subject in subsequent msg based on Legation's detailed study available data. Israel "special tenacity" does not alter fact armistice agreement and interpretative documentation show that sovereignty over zone is in dispute and to be decided in final peace settlement. We doubt any French involvement question water rights and regard injection this new charge possible attempt confuse issues. French here have often talked about dispute but never mentioned this aspect.

Gen contention that Syria has launched aggressive attack on Israel is wholly out of keeping with demonstrated Syrian policy of restraint and is not in accord with UN observer reports. Moreover, intense propaganda campaign over Shamalneh incident has tended obscure fact it is but one of series incidents which make pattern of organized Israel campaign to eliminate indigenous Arab inhabitants demilitarized zone to bolster Israel claim to area. Perhaps clearest example is Israel action against Arabs of Samra (Legtel 530, Apr 13 6 and TSO reports) in which no question or charge Syrian involvement. UN reports give clear picture as to Israeli acts at Ghannameh, Khuri Farm, Samra and Nuqeib and leave little doubt as to illegal nature original Israel incursion into Al Hammeh and subsequent bombing. In evaluating available evidence we can not dismiss possibility Shamalneh incident may have been contrived to counteract unfavorable publicity given Israel resistance to UN authority in area.

We believe that US has much at stake in this matter. While we recognize immed problems remain those of obtaining effective cease-fire and strengthening authority and prestige MAC, it seems essential that US take stand reasserting UN responsibilities in zone and return to conditions of armistice (to which we morally committed by assurances given Syrian Govt when we encouraged them to reach agreement) or risk shaking to foundation already precarious US position in Syria and Arab world.

This public stand cld probably best be taken in speech by chairman US del to UN but it shld not be long delayed. Ideally it shld come prior to Arab League Political Comite mtg here May 14, where all-important decisions may be made amidst inflammatory public clamor. We hope at least instructions may be sent our chiefs of mission in Arab countries prior this mtg authorizing them give conference reassurances Arab govts in sense above recommendation.<sup>7</sup>

CANNON

&lt;sup>o</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/5-1151)

<sup>7</sup> In circular telegram 702, May 11, sent to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, and Jidda, and repeated for information to Jerusalem, London, Paris, and Tel Aviv, the Department stated in part: "Damascus tel 616 May 10 most helpful. Dept endeavoring finalize draft [SC] resolution. . . . Best we can hope to do re Arab League Political Comm mtg Damascus May 14 is to supply Arab capitals with draft for confidential disclosure Arab governments." (683.84A/5-1151)

680.84 A / 5 - 1151: Telegram

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Cairo, May 11, 1951—2 p. m.

1159. Re Deptel 1097 May 9.2 I agree thoroughly Dept's estimate key position Egypt in relations between Arab states and Israel, but am not optimistic early Egypt moves towards peace settlement without considerably more incentive than they now believe exists.

As Dept aware, primary concentration Egypt political thinking currently on Anglo-Egypt relations. So far as Israel concerned, I am convinced leaders fed up with the whole question but lack desire or courage to hazard their personal political futures by attempting even initial steps in direction peace settlement. If they cld work for peace without loss of face, they wld probably do so, but none of them see way clear. Popular feeling is less thoughtful, but is roughly comparable to govt's. Any change last six months either people or govt has been toward greater tiredness with problem, but not toward support constructive course doing something about it.

Conviction on part Egypt that attitude Israel has really changed wld certainly be helpful, but the point has long passed at which more "tact" wld contribute anything. Deeply skeptical of "words," the only hope of building a background from which progress wld be possible is clear-cut, genuinely helpful, action.

Status refugees and lack confidence UN or West going to do anything materially relieve their situation form the core of the present Egypt discouragement with over-all problem. Accordingly, cooperation of interested major powers to effect a long-term solution of the refugee problem offers the best opportunity to remove the most important obstacle to Israel-Arab understanding. Such cooperation wld have to include large-scale financial assistance for reintegration. Israeli participation at least to extent making financial contribution and giving up part of Negeb (possibly to Jordan) is imperative to success. Egypt willing evacuate Gaza preferably to Jordan.

Lacking such an approach present situation, though onerous, apt to continue indefinitely. Large-scale US financial assistance to Israel in interim cannot fail mean serious deterioration present all-around relations and such assistance without at least commensurate aid to Arab states wild be disastrous blow to any hopes constructive solution.

CAFFERY

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram repeated for information to London, Tel Aviv, and Arab capitals. <sup>2</sup> In this telegram the Department had in part requested the Embassy to report on the then-present Egyptian attitude towards Israel, to identify any changes in Egyptian popular feeling towards Israel over the preceding six months, and to estimate ". . . Egypt's price for settlement with Israel." (674.84A/5-951)

674.84A/5-1151: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

London, May 11, 1951—5 p. m.

5894. For the Secretary. At reception given by Morrison to King and Queen of Denmark last night, in response to question by me as to how things where going with him, he stated with some feeling that Iran was giving him concern and he hoped for US support. I said I was sure he could count on it in any constructive program UK might have. It seemed significant to me that he held up receiving line to tell me this as I shook hands with him.

Today I had lunch alone with Anthony Eden at his request. He said he had talked with Morrison about Iran with Churchill present. Eden told Morrison he felt oil sit in other parts of Near East wld tend to degenerate if Iran won out which it might unless something constructive were done by UK. Eden suggested to Morrison that UK shld force Suez Canal issue by sending destroyers with tankers thru Suez Canal and insisting on oil being transported freely thru canal. He seemed to believe that UK wld get away with it with Egypt and that it wld convince NE area that UK meant business and wld have salutary effect on Iran. I am not sure that Eden knew all the facts about Suez Canal but what he was saying was that the use of big stick directly in Suez wld be better than directly in Iran which might bring Soviets in from North. I expressed no view on matter but he gave me to understand that he expected me to pass his remarks on to his friend, Dean Acheson.

GIFFORD

McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson) and the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee) to the Secretary of State <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] May 12, 1951.

Subject: Draft Security Council Resolution on the Syrian-Israeli Dispute.

The Security Council has for the past several weeks been seized with the Syrian-Israeli situation. We now propose that the US along with the UK, France and probably Turkey introduce the draft resolution contained in the attached telegram at the next meeting of the Security Council on Tuesday, May 15. All paragraphs but paragraph three have already been agreed upon by the UK and French delegations, and we expect the concurrence of the Turks. Paragraph three is new and has not been considered by the proposed co-sponsors.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Messrs. Kopper, Stabler, and Ludlow.

We are bringing the matter to your attention because paragraph three places the basic responsibility for the present Syrian-Israeli dispute on Israel, which we believe to be thoroughly justified by the facts in this case.

Recommendation:

That you approve the inclusion of paragraph three.2

Attachment:

Draft telegram.3

330/5-1451 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY New York, May 14, 1951—12:01 p. m. 1534. Re Syrian-Israeli dispute: Following are developments of May 12 re draft res: UK received London's comment re latest draft and was instructed to press for inclusion of para along lines reported mytel 1498 of May 7.¹ French del expressed desire for inclusion mention of Huleh project. Fowler (UK) drafted tentative para combining UK idea with the one Dept is considering which Fowler received from us Friday on tentative and informal basis and which at our request he has not given to other dels. His para is: "While recognizing

&lt;sup>2</sup>The Secretary discussed a number of foreign policy issues with the President on May 14. Mr. Acheson's memorandum of the part of the conversation devoted to Israel follows:

&quot;I went over with the President the proposed resolution. Our conversation centered on paragraph 3. The President agreed with the view I expressed, which was that this paragraph, certainly in anything like its present form, is unwise.

&quot;I shall discuss this matter at greater length with Mr. McGhee and Mr. Hickerson." (Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation: Lot 65 D 238) No record has been found in Department of State files of any conversation the Secretary may have held with Messrs. McGhee and Hickerson on this subject.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In light of the conversation quoted in footnote 2 above, draft was not identical to the draft resolution transmitted to New York in telegram 926, May 14, p. 681. However, no copy of a draft resolution with a version of paragraph 3 differing from that in telegram 926 has been found in Department of State files.

¹The paragraph suggested by the United Kingdom and transmitted in telegram 1498 follows: "'While recognizing the general benefit which could result from drainage operations both within and outside demilitarized zone, [SC] recommends that in accordance with memorandum of Chief of Staff to parties, dated March 7, 1951, operations of Palestine Land Development Co. in demilitarized zone should cease pending negotiation of this issue in MAC.'" (330/5–751) general benefit which would result from drainage operations, both within and outside demilitarized zone, is of opinion that failure of Israel to need requests of Chief of Staff and Chairman of MAC re engineering operations of Palestine Land Development Company in demilitarized zone, has contributed in large measure to subsequent deterioration of security in area and recommends that such operations in demilitarized zone cease pending negotiations on this issue in accordance with terms of general armistice agreement."

Fowler thinks UKDel will not insist on inclusion language of para up to "is of opinion" if we feel such mention of Huleh project might cause complications.

Confirming Maffitt telecon with Ludlow and Waldo, following drafting changes have been agreed with UK and French dels:

Para 5 of urtel 891 2—insert "article 7, para 8 of the" between "under" and "armistice" in first line.

Para 8 urtel 891, as amended—Replace "is entitled" by "has authority" between "civilian life" and "to consider."

Para 9 urtel 891—Replace "brings to attention of" by "recalls to" at beginning.

Riley departed for Palestine by air last night urging most expeditious adoption on res as possible to enable him act effectively in MAC chairmanship he will assume upon arrival. He reported Ben-Gurion had indicated to him Israel adamant on claim of sovereignty over Syrian-Israeli demilitarized zone.

AUSTIN

330/5-1451: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations <sup>1</sup>

RESTRICTED

Washington, May 14, 1951—7 p. m.

926. Fol is text tentative draft res to be circulated to UNSC mbrs Tuesday May 15 concerning Syrian-Israeli question. It is anticipated US, UK, Fr and Turkey will co-sponsor res. All paras except 3 and 8 have been agreed to by those countries. Anticipate agreement paras 3 and 8 will be forthcoming prior tabling of res:

"The Security Council:

1. Recalling its past resolutions of July 15, 1948, Aug 11, 1949, Nov 17, 1950 and May 8, 1951 relating to the Armistice Agreements bet Israel and the neighboring Arab States and to the provisions contained therein concerning methods for maintaining the Armistice and resolving disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commissions participated in by the parties to the Armistice Agreement;

&lt;sup>2</sup> Dated May 1, p. 652.

 $^{\rm 1}$  Telegram drafted by Mr. Waldo and Mr. Kopper; transmission approved by Mr. Waldo on behalf of Mr. Jones. Date of drafting does not appear on this telegram.

2. Noting the complaints of Syria and Israel to the SC, statements in the Council of the representatives of Syria and Israel, the reports to the SYG of the UN by the Chief of Staff and the Actg Chief of Staff of the UN Truce Supervision Organization for Palestine, and statements before the Council by the Chief of Staff of the UN Truce

Supervision Organization for Palestine;

3. Noting that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Org in a memo of Mar 7, 1951, and the Chairman of the Syrian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission on a number of occasions have requested the Israel delegation to the Mixed Armistice Commission to insure that the Palestine Land Development Co., Ltd, is instructed to cease all operations in the Demil Zone until such time as an agreement is arranged through the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission for continuing this project, and

Noting further that Article V of the General Armistice Agreement gives to the Chairman the responsibility for the general supervision of the Demil Zone,

Endorses the requests of the Chief of Staff and the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission on this matter and calls upon the Govt of Israel to comply with them.

4. Declares that in order to promote return of permanent peace in Palestine, it is essential that the Govts of Israel and Syria observe faithfully the General Armistice Agreement of July 20, 1949;

5. Notes that under Art 7, para 8, the Armistice Agreement where interpretation of meaning of a particular provision of the Agreement, other than the preamble and Arts I and II, is at issue, the Mixed Armistice Commission's interpretation shall prevail.

6. Calls upon the Govts of Israel and Syria to bring before the Mixed Armistice Commission or its Chairman, whichever has the pertiment responsibility under the Armistice Agreement, their complaints and to abide by the decisions resulting therefrom.

7. Considers that it is inconsistent with objectives and intent of the Armistice Agreement to refuse to participate in meetings of the Mixed Armistice Commission or to fail to respect requests of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission as they relate to his obligations under Art V and calls upon the parties to be represented at all mtgs called by the Chairman of the Commission and to respect such requests.

8. Takes note that the fol excerpt cited by the Chief of Staff of TSO at 542 mtg of the SC on April 25, 1951, as being from the Summary Record of the Syria-Israel Armistice Conference of July 3, 1949 was agreed to by the parties as an authoritative comment on Art V of the

Syria-Israel Armistice Agreement: 2

'The question of civil administration in villages and settlements in the Demil zone is provided for, within the framework of an armistice agreement, in sub-paras 5(b) and 5(f) of the draft Art.

&lt;sup>3</sup> In a memorandum for the files of May 15, Mr. Hickerson indicated that he had agreed during a telephone conversation that evening with Ambassador Gross to changes which brought the language of this sentence to its final form, in order to secure agreement among the cosponsors. Mr. Hickerson stated that the changes were subsequently approved by Mr. Waldo for NE. (UNP Files: Lot 59 D 237)

Such civil administration, including policing, will be on a local basis, without raising general questions of administration, jurisdiction, citizenship, and sovereignty.

'Where Israeli civilians return to or remain in an Israeli village or settlement, the civil administration and policing of that village or settlement will be by Israelis. Similarly, where Arab civilians return to or remain in an Arab village, a local Arab administration and police unit will be authorized.

'As civilian life is gradually restored, administration will take shape on a local basis under the general supervision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

'The Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission, in consultation and cooperation with the local communities, will be in a position to authorize all necessary arrangements for the restoration and protection of civilian life. He will not assume responsibility for direct administration of the zone.'

9. Recalls to the Government of Syria and Israel their obligations under Art II, para 4 of the Charter of the UN and their commitments under the Armistice Agreement not to resort to mil force and finds that: (a) aerial action taken by the forces of the Govt of Israel on Apr 5, 1951 and (b) any aggressive mil actions by either of the parties in or around the Demil zone, which further investigation by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Org into the reports and complaints recently submitted to the Council may establish, constitute a violation of the cease fire provision provided in the SC Res of Jul 15, 1948 and are inconsistent with the terms of the Armistice Agreement and the obligations assumed under the Charter.

10. Noting the complaint with regard to the evacuation of Arab residents from the Demil zone: (a) considers that Arab civilians who have been removed from the Demil zone by the Govt of Israel shld be permitted to return forthwith to their homes and that the Mixed Armistice Commission shld supervise their return and rehabilitation in a manner to be determined by the Commission; and (b) considers that no action involving the transfer of persons across intl frontiers, armistice lines or within the Demil zone shld be undertaken without the prior decision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

11. Noting with concern the refusal on a number of occasions to permit observers and officials of the Truce Supervision Org to enter localities and areas which were subjects of complaints in order to perform their legitimate functions, considers that the parties shld permit such entry at all times whenever this is required, to enable the Truce Supervision Org to fulfill its functions, and shld render every facility which may be requested by the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission for this purpose.

12. Reminds the parties of their obligations under the Charter of the UN to settle their intl disputes by peaceful means in such manner that intl peace and security are not endangered and expresses its concern at the failure of the Govts of Israel and Syria to achieve progress pursuant to their commitments under the Armistice Agreement to promote the return to permanent peace in Palestine.

13. Directs the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Org to take the necessary steps to give effect to this Res for the purpose of restoring peace in the area and authorizes him to take such measures to restore peace in the area and to make such representations to the Govts of Israel and Syria as he may deem necessary.

14. Calls upon the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Org to report to the SC on compliance given to this Res.

15. Requests the SYG to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Org may request in carrying out this Res and the Council's Resolutions of May 8, 1951 and Nov 17, 1950."

While Damascus free use substance above with AL dels, text shld not be made available to them before Dept authorizes.

ACHESON

683.84A/5-1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] May 15, 1951.

Subject: Syrian-Israel Situation

Participants: Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel.

Moshe Keren, Counselor, Embassy of Israel

NEA-Mr. McGhee NE-Mr. Waldo

Mr. Eban called on me at his request. He said the Prime Minister had directed him to inform the Department of a recent order which had been sent to the Director General of the Palestine Land Development Company in Jerusalem by the Chairman of the Syrian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission. The Ambassador quoted the directive which was dated May 12, as follows:

"In accordance with authority vested in the Chairman of the Syrian-Israeli Mixed Armistice Commission under Art. 5 of General Armistice Agreement, I hereby direct immediate cessation of all Lake Hula and Jordan River drainage works in Demilitarized Zone until such time as agreement on such works can be reached under supervision of Chairman or through directives or resolutions of higher authority."

The Ambassador said the Prime Minister had told him to state that the Israel Government considered the language of this directive highly inappropriate and was of the view the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission had no right to issue an order on this subject either to the Palestine Land Development Company or the Israel Government itself. The Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission did not have civil jurisdiction in the Demilitarized Zone nor was he in any way authorized to interfere with the purely civil authority in the Zone. The Israel Government itself could not call on the Palestine Land Development Company to cease its activities because the company and its operations were a purely private concern and Israel law did not empower the Israel Government to interfere in such matters. The Israel Government was not, therefore, in a position to cooperate with the Chairman on this particular subject.

The Ambassador expressed the hope that the Security Council would not attempt to interfere in the matter and that the US would not take a position which might have an unfortunate effect on US-Israel relations. Mr. Eban pointed out that both Syria and Israel had agreed to the SC cease fire of May 8 and he felt that there was no reason why the SC should be called upon to consider the situation further. The Armistice Agreement was a bilateral arrangement between the Israelis and the Syrians and no party outside of those two had a right to interfere with the workings of that agreement. The Ambassador stated that the Prime Minister had said the Israel Government could never order these engineering operations to cease in the Zone as it was something to which the Government was fully committed, and in the light of the recent incidents in the Zone, any Israel Government which attempted to hold up the operations would face great internal difficulties. The Ambassador implied that Israel would be in a difficult position if the SC should attempt to interfere with the Israel operations in the Zone. The Ambassador further said that in the early discussions with the Department Mr. Berry had informed him that the Department considered the drainage operations in the Huleh area a highly desirable activity which should not be stopped by the objections of a handful of Arabs.

I took issue with the Ambassador on this statement, and told him that Mr. Berry and the Department considered the drainage operations in the Huleh area desirable but engineering operations in the Zone should only be carried out after proper arrangements had been made through the Chairman of the MAC. We believed that there was a right way and a wrong way to proceed in the matter and that if the Israel Government proceeded in the right way we believed it would be possible to work out a means whereby drainage operations could be undertaken. Israel, however, had chosen to proceed with the activities in the Zone without the necessary permission of the Chairman of the MAC.

It was further pointed out to the Ambassador that the US hoped that Israel would not put itself in a position of refusing to comply with the SC resolution. It was within the competence of the SC to consider any dispute and in this particular case both of the parties had submitted complaints for SC consideration and were responsible for the fact that the SC was presently considering the problem. Not all of the complaints had been disposed of by the recent cease fire resolution.

I said that I could not anticipate the action which the SC might take since there were other governments concerned in the Council beside the US. We felt that Israel should abide by the findings of the Council and our position would be made clear when the time came.

Daily TS Summary: Lot 52-242

Daily Top Secret Summary

TOP SECRET

[Washington,] May 17, 1951.

Subject: Israel's Role in Middle Eastern Defense

The Israeli Prime Minister recently summarized to the Secretary of Defense <sup>1</sup> Israel's requirements from the United States as (1) assistance in building up industry for the production of military equipment and (2) provision of equipment to the Israeli army to bring it up to U.S. standards. He also wished to know UK and U.S. plans for the defense of the Middle East. He reported that the UK Commander of Middle East Land Forces recently informed him that the role he envisaged for Israel immediately was to utilize its port facilities and right of transit for troops and supplies. The Secretary of Defense expressed the view that the most important contribution that Israel could make to the stability and future defense of the area was to control and prevent the border incidents which continue to occur with its neighbors.

683.84A/5-1751: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL NIACT

Tel Aviv, May 17, 1951—1 p. m.

765. Re Deptel 513, May 14.2 Due my temporary indisposition, Eytan, Dir Gen FonOff called in Keeler this morning and in presence Bendor conveyed on behalf FonMin Sharett, then presiding over Cabinet meeting Jerusalem, Israels reaction to SC res tabled last night. Requested these reactions be conveyed to Dept before vote tomorrow.

It wild be "less than truth", Eytan asserted, to fail to indicate that Israel "extremely upset" by terms of resolution, which he characterized as "not fair" and as one which Israel convinced "will not achieve purpose for which intended".

&lt;sup>1</sup>Probably during their conversation held May 4, of which no primary record has been found in Department of State files.

 &lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, and Paris.
 <sup>2</sup> Same as telegram 926 to New York, p. 681.

When both sides accepted SC cease-fire last week and normal activities in area were resumed, Israel assumed that SC had finished with matter, and that Gen Riley hastening back to settle outstanding issues. Israel suddenly discovered that SC, "under circumstances which to us mysterious", was unexpectedly convened again, with "certain amount of furtiveness" to discuss this resolution. Inasmuch as Israel del and other dels were confronted with document they never seen before, only natural that voting on resolution postponed.

After explaining that he wild not give a detailed analysis, but wild concentrate on 32 points to which Israel took greatest exception, he gave fol analysis of Israel attitude on these points, which set forth in numbered paras 3 and 10 of resolution in reftel. Particularly stress point (1) below.

1. Numbered para 3 reftel. Cessation Huleh work touches Israel population, which has mystic as well as practical approach to development and reconstruction, at most sensitive point.

To date, US has shown sympathetic understanding and given consistent finan and moral support for such projects, for which Israel appreciative. Decision stop work wld come as shock to population and wld have serious internal consequences. Particularly, concerned that US sponsorship and "I fear US initiative in putting this before SC", will operate as gift to Mapamt just before elections, and consequences likely to be unfortunate for democratic cause.

2. Numbered para 10 reftel. Israel regards point calling for return Arabs to their homes as retrograde step from viewpoint peace in area. Recent fighting by Shamalna Arabs "armed, incited and assisted by Syrian Army personnel" is indication consequences returning Arabs to demil zone. Their presence represents danger not only to Israel security, but to peace in region.

In general, Eytan argued, resolution "unfortunate" in that it puts premium on aggression. Not only Syria, but other Arabs will deduce from resolution that they can halt development Israel by aggressive acts similar to most recent incidents and will be encouraged to try again at suitable opportunity.

After Eytan's statement, Bendor added that not only Mapamt, but entire Israel population wld be affected by resolution which in it "careful understatement" (para 9 b reftel), failed to differentiate clearly between Syrian aggression and Israel's "holding back when attacked", for which, he added, Amb Davis had commended Israel. Resolution cld not have been much worse for Israel, he said, if in response last attack Israel Army had moved into demil zone, and hence raises questions about "rewards for virtue".

My comment will follow.4

DAVIS

<sup>Identical to the subparagraph in the final text which begins: "Any aggressive military action . . .". For text of May 18, see p. 693.
See telegram 771 from Tel Aviv, May 18, p. 691.</sup>

683.84A/5-1751: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Iraq 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, May 17, 1951—5 p. m.

PRIORITY

713. While not disputing defensive character Iraqi action in transferring air units Syria, Dept considers it unfortunate action taken while Syria-Israel dispute sub judice in SC. Action, which hardly necessary in view acceptance by Syria and Israel of SC cease-fire resolution of May 9 [8], lends itself to propaganda claims of Arab "aggressive intent" and has already created adverse reaction in US.

Inform FonOff of foregoing emphasizing that it is to interests of Syria <sup>2</sup> and Arabs generally to refrain from precipitate action prejudicing dispassionate consideration of Syria-Israel dispute in SC. Missions in other Arab caps requested to speak to govts to which accredited similarly. London discuss with FonOff and report UK reaction.

Acheson

<sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Barrow and approved for transmission by Mr. Jones. Clearance obtained from Mr. Ludlow for UNP and Mr. Ranney for BNA. Repeated priority to Damascus. Repeated also on routine basis to Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, New York, Paris, and Tel Aviv.

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 645 from Damascus, May 20, Minister Cannon in part indicated that he had discussed the matter with Prime Minister Qudsi. He concluded:

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 645 from Damascus, May 20, Minister Cannon in part indicated that he had discussed the matter with Prime Minister Qudsi. He concluded: "From US viewpoint I wonder if we have much to gain at this stage by pressing further representations. It seems to us what good will we may have accumulated might best be used to bring Arab states round to reasonable settlement of various problems connected with present dispute and requiring Arab concessions." (683.84A/5-2051)

330/5-1751: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations <sup>1</sup>

RESTRICTED

Washington, May 17, 1951—7 p. m.

934. Re Syrian-Israeli dispute. In anticipation Netherlands formal request at next SC meeting for information sponsors views on whether Huleh project can be stopped until after all Arabs affected by engineering operation are satisfied by compensation and removal you may in your discretion point out the following:

1. US believes that any conflict of view over right of Chairman of MAC to authorize continuance of Huleh project in fact of possible solitary Arab opposition is up to MAC pursuant to Art 7, para 8.

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram drafted by Mr. Ludlow; transmission approved by Mr. Wainhouse after clearance in NE and L/UNA.

However, we are of opinion that Chairman of MAC has this right under full implementation clause Art 5, para 5 (c) when taken in consonance with Art 5, para 2 relating to gradual restoration of normal civilian life in zone. Provision for gradual restoration of normal civilian life cld be understood as having same effect as "promotion of the general welfare."

2. We concur UK view that procedure outlined in Art 8 para 3 might be used by Israelis as means for negotiating resumption Huleh project through specific revision of Armistice Agreement. However, US believes that as result of enactment of pending SC res which directs Chief of Staff TSO "to take the necessary steps to give effect to this res for the purpose of restoring peace in the area and authorizes him to take such measures to restore peace in the area, etc". Chief of Staff in our opinion cld at any time direct resumption of Huleh project pursuant to this SC Res if in his opinion such step wld contribute to restoration of peace in area.

With regard to possible allegations from either party that SC cannot impose on either party to agreement acceptance of additional powers of MAC Chairman, USDel can point out that, although Chief of Staff of TSO as Chairman of MACs in various armistice agreements is to assist parties to carry out agreements, by Res Aug 11, 1949, he is also agent of SC. As such SC can give him such powers as are necessary to enable him to discharge his mandate even though such powers were not anticipated by the Armistice Agreements, if in opinion of SC they are consistent and necessary SC's carrying out requirements of UN Charter.

ACHESON

683.84A/5-1951: Telegram

President Weizmann of Israel to President Truman 1

Reнovot, May 18, 1951.

Have learned with deep apprehension proposal by American representative in Security Council to stop drainage of Hule swamp in order to appease Arab League that waged aggressive war against Israel. Drainage of Hule is essential not only for reclamation of largest malarial swamp area in Israel but for agricultural development of arid zones throughout country particularly Negev. To hold up Hule project means perpetuation of desert conditions in vast areas capable of providing homes for tens of thousands of immigrant settlers. Cannot conceive America lending hand to adoption of such calamitous decision which affects very essence of our life. Pray you prevent grievous action. Warmest personal regards.

CHAIM WEIZMANN

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram sent through commercial channels to the White House and transmitted to the Secretary by President Truman under cover of the following memorandum of May 19: "Attached is copy of a telegram that I have just received from the President of Israel. I know nothing about this situation and I'll appreciate it if you will prepare a reply." For President Truman's reply of May 31, see p. 701.

683.84A/5-1851: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations <sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY WASHINGTON, May 18, 1951—1 p. m.

936. Re Syrian-Israeli dispute. Dept considers unacceptable Israel proposals made to Dept and USUN May 17 <sup>2</sup> amend draft Four-Power res with exception para noting Israel regret re bombing. Suggest para on these lines be included immediately after para 11 which starts "Recalls to . . .".<sup>3</sup>

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Waldo. Cleared in NEA with Messrs. Berry, Kopper, and Barrow. Transmission approved by Mr. Wainhouse.

&lt;sup>2</sup>Apparent reference to proposals contained in the following document dated May 17, found attached to telegram 936:

&quot;Replace paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 by the following:

&quot;Noting that the operations of the PLDC for draining the Huleh Marshes in the Demilitarized Zone are reported by the Chief of Staff of the TSO to affect the interests of Arab owners on seven acres of land in the Demilitarized Zone; Requests the Chief of Staff of the TSO to formulate an arrangement for the protection of the interests of the landowners involved, either by fair compensation or by an exchange of land, or both;

&quot;Calls upon the parties to comply with such arrangement that the Chief of Staff may propose.

&quot;Paragraph 9:

&quot;Regarding . . . not to resort to military force,

&quot;(a) Takes note of the statement of the representative of Israel on April 25 expressing regret for the aerial action taken by Israel forces on April 5, 1951; "(b) Finds that . . .

&quot;Paragraph 10:

&quot;Noting the complaint with regard to the evacuation of Arab residents from the Demilitarized Zone,

&quot;(a) Requests the Chief of Staff of the TSO, as a matter of urgency, to investigate this complaint, &quot;(b) Calls upon the parties to comply with the findings of the Chief of Staff in this matter."

The source text of this attachment contains no explanatory information other &lt;sup>3</sup> Record of the Security Council meeting held May 18 (U.N. Doc. S/PV.547) indicates that a revised draft (U.N. Doc. S/2152/Rev. 1) incorporating the substance of the modification to paragraph 9 which had been suggested by Israel was introduced by the sponsoring powers.

There followed a summary by USUN of action taken on the revision: "In noting the insertion in the revised text, Eban had thought it was to have replaced the sub-para condemning the bombing action. As the entire para (11) gave the impression of guilt, Israel was profoundly resentful. After the sponsors stated the revision had been made along the lines they thought had been suggested to them by Israel, Louri (Israel) replied the insertion or omission of the sub-para noting the statement of regret was of no consequence because the condemnation sub-para remained. The sponsors then withdrew Rev. 2 and Rev. 1 [introduced May 16] was adopted 10-0-1 (USSR)." (Quoted from telegram 1549 from New York, May 18, 11 p. m.; 330/5-1851)

683.84A/5-1851: Telegram

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State 1

SECRET NIACT

Tel Aviv, May 18, 1951—2 p. m.

771. Comment on Embtel 765, May 17.2

1. I take extremely serious view Israel's statement ref tel and mood developing here because ultimate solution this area's problem at stake and will be fundamentally affected by res. To understand Israel's psychological reaction to res important to recall:

(1) That Israelis were taken aback (with beneficial effect) by original Dept statements (Deptels 420, 421, April 7)<sup>3</sup> to Israel and Syria re incidents in Huleh and Tiberias areas, and felt rebuke implicit in Dept's statement to Israel bore down more heavily on Israel than Syria;

(2) That Dept and UN silence re Tel Al Mutilla incident, as well as nature UN reporting of incident, were blow to Israel confidence in receiving objective treatment.

Coming on heel these two reactions, SC res understandably confirms Israel suspicion of powers which did not hesitate to criticize Israel sharply in early stages of incident but were not willing render Israel justice due her when she was attacked in her own terr by forces obviously militarily trained and equipped.

2. Problem is complicated by fact that Israel, smarting under conviction injustice has been done her, completely oblivious to how extremely irritating her initial handling of the Huleh incident has been. Moreover, as reported previously, Israelis feel their legal position in carrying on Huleh work was sound, especially since it went unchallenged for several months; and they seem completely incapable of realizing extent to which their gen attitude and actions have annoyed everyone concerned. If therefore SC res is based on assumption that Israelis have guilty conscience and that this firm follow-up will restore their perspective, such is far from case. Result more likely to be wave of cynicism concerning UN throughout country, with earlier sense of guilt felt by Israelis, over statement publicly attributed PriMin to effect that Israel wld not accept UN order to cease work, now likely to be replaced by feeling PriMin knew what he was doing. If res passes in form in which tabled, I wld not be surprised if Israel determinedly resists its implementation. Moreover, in event another attack like Tel Al Mutilla, army voices urging mil reprisals to put end to problems of demilitarized zone will have been strengthened. We must therefore face the fact that we have definitely weakened our position in Israel

&lt;sup>1</sup>Repeated for information to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, and Paris.

Ante, p. 686.
 Neither printed, but see footnote 3, p. 626.

by failing to respond with sufficient flexibility to changes taking place in behavior Israel and Syria in recent border controversy, and by giving Israelis impression we are not willing give them their due even in conspicuous instance where they chanced to be in right.

- 3. I feel strongly that in dealing with these conflicting parties, each of which certain of its righteousness, we dare not underestimate importance of convincing both sides our absolute impartiality and our determination to get at the facts and act upon them. I had hoped therefore that final draft of SC res wld be at greater pains to "give devil his due" in each case. I still believe that it is desirable to make as clear as possible that we consider our disapproval of Israel disregard of request of Chief of Staff TSO in memo March 7, with respect to work on Huleh project, as distinct from and not at all inconsistent with our opinion that project is desirable and shld go forward after an equitable settlement has been reached. I confirm my recommendation that along with strong criticism of forcible removal Arab villagers and landowners from demilitarized zone, and in some cases the subsequent destruction of their homes, we propose a constructive and feasible alternative to simply return to villages, such as payment immed and adequate compensation. This admittedly makes concession to Israel fait accompli, but on other hand it might be one practical means of meeting understandable Israel fear that cessation work "until agreement arranged" will permit indefinite obstruction of project by small determined group of Arabs. This fear, we are convinced, is one of important factors at bottom of Israel's consistently high-handed treatment of Arabs in border region and is basic to Israel's obduracy with regard to stopping work in Huleh. Finally, in attempt regain some lost ground, it might serve useful purpose even belatedly to include in SC res statement censuring recent mil operations against Israel on Israel soil, making clear that UN is concern of an out aggression [apparent garble?] against either party from any source whatsoever.
- 4. Emb believes abortive res shld be avoided at all costs, and that prestige of UN requires that before res is voted in present form, powers involved decide if they are prepared to do what is necessary to implement it.

  Dayis

683.84A/5-1851: Telegram

The Minister in Syria (Cannon) to the Department of State 1

SECRET

Damascus, May 18, 1951—6 p. m.

642. PriMin this morning asked me to call to hear his observations on draft SC res.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Repeated for information to Amman, Ankara, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, Paris, and Tel Aviv.

He said reaction Syrians and other Arab leaders attending AL conference was gen favorable, above all because they felt they now saw translated into action the assurances of real impartiality and justice of which they had hitherto had little evidence in any disputes involving Israel. His three specific points re res were:

1. Gen uneasiness lest reference to suspension work prove ineffectual in light publicized determination Israeli not to be diverted from this project. He fears major attempt will be made to obtain endorsement Israeli program on grounds enlightened development project being held up by handful backward and recalcitrant Arabs. Comment: this "seven acres" argument (Legtel 641, May 18). I said it is up to Syrian del to prove his case. Whole world knows US policy favors and promotes land development, malaria control, etc. and Syrians must prove other factors are fundamental, and that it is not just legalistic obstinacy.

2. He hopes that powers given TSO will not be used too broadly. He has full confidence in present personalities but with changes over period of times some new chief of staff TSO might presume to order all sorts of things "to restore peace" outside framework of armistice agreement. Comment: I assume he refers to para 13. I said context was clear and advised against trying to tinker with formal text.

3. He said some of his Arab colleagues deplore lack of provision for sanctions for non-compliance. He himself was willing to take chance. I said he was quite right; a lot can happen if using this particular dispute Syria shid be induced to become stalking horse for gen Arab griefs against Israel.

CANNON

Resolution Adopted by the United Nations Security Council on May 18, 1951 <sup>1</sup>

The Security Council,

Recalling its past resolutions of 15 July 1948, 11 August 1949, 17 November 1950 and 8 May 1951 relating to the General Armistice Agreements between Israel and the neighbouring Arab States and to the provisions contained therein concerning methods for maintaining the armistice and resolving disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commissions participated in by the parties to the General Armistice Agreements;

Noting the complaints of Syria and Israel to the Security Council, statement in the Council of the representatives of Syria and Israel, the reports to the Secretary-General of the United Nations by the Chief of Staff and the Acting Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization for Palestine and statements before the Council by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization for Palestine,

 $<sup>^2</sup>$  Not printed. (683.84A/5–1851) "'Seven acres' argument" refers to repeated Israeli emphasis on the alleged smallness of the real property under expropriation from Arab holders in the Demilitarized Zone by the Palestine Land Development Company.

 $<sup>^{1}\,\</sup>mathrm{U.N.}$  Doc. S/2157. Approved by a vote of 10 votes to none, with the USSR abstaining.

Noting that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization in a memorandum of 7 March 1951, and the Chairman of the Syrian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission on a number of occasions have requested the Israel Delegation to the Mixed Armistice Commission to ensure that the Palestine Land Development Company, Limited, is instructed to cease all operations in the demilitarized zone until such time as an agreement is arranged through the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission for continuing this project, and,

Noting further that Article V of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Syria gives to the Chairman the responsibility for the general supervision of the demilitarized zone,

Endorses the requests of the Chief of Staff and the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission on this matter and calls upon the Government of Israel to comply with them;

Declares that in order to promote the return of permanent peace in Palestine, it is essential that the Governments of Israel and Syria observe faithfully the General Armistice Agreement of 20 July 1949;

Notes that under Article VII, paragraph 8, of the Armistice Agreement, where interpretation of the meaning of a particular provision of the agreement, other than the preamble and Articles I and II, is at issue, the Mixed Armistice Commission's interpretation shall prevail;

Calls upon the Governments of Israel and Syria to bring before the Mixed Armistice Commission or its Chairman, whichever has the pertinent responsibility under the Armistice Agreement, their complaints and to abide by the decisions resulting therefrom;

Considers that it is inconsistent with the objectives and intent of the Armistice Agreement to refuse to participate in meetings of the Mixed Armistice Commission or to fail to respect requests of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission as they relate to his obligations under Article V and calls upon the parties to be represented at all meetings called by the Chairman of the Commission and to respect such requests;

Calls upon the parties to give effect to the following excerpt cited by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization at the 542nd meeting of the Security Council on 25 April 1951,<sup>2</sup> as being from the summary record of the Syria-Israel Armistice Conference of 3 July 1949, which was agreed to by the parties as an authoritative comment on Article V of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Syria:

&lt;sup>2</sup> U.N. Doc. S/PV.542.

"The question of civil administration in villages and settlements in the demilitarized zone is provided for, within the framework of an Armistice Agreement, in sub-paragraphs 5(b) and 5(f) of the draft article. Such civil administration, including policing, will be on a local basis, without raising general questions of administration, jurisdiction, citizenship, and sovereignty.

"Where Israeli civilians return to or remain in Israeli village or settlement, the civil administration and policing of the village or settlement will be by Israelis. Similarly, where Arab civilians return to or remain in an Arab village, a local Arab administration and police unit will be authorized.

"As civilian life is gradually restored, administration will take shape on a local basis under the general supervision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

"The Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission, in consultation and co-operation with the local communities, will be in a position to authorize all necessary arrangements for the restoration and protection of civilian life. He will not assume responsibility for direct administration of the zone.

Recalls to the Governments of Syria and Israel their obligations under Article 2, paragraph 4 of the Charter of the United Nations and their commitments under the Armistice Agreement not to resort to military force and finds that:

(a) Aerial action taken by the forces of the Government of Israel

on 5 April 1951, and

(b) Any aggressive military action by either of the parties in or around the demilitarized zone, which further investigation by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization into the reports and complaints recently submitted to the Council may establish, constitute a violation of the cease-fire provision provided in the Security Council resolution of 15 July 1948 and are inconsistent with the terms of the Armistice Agreement and the obligations assumed under the Charter;

Noting the complaint with regard to the evacuation of Arab residents from the demilitarized zone;

(a) Decides that Arab civilians who have been removed from the demilitarized zone by the Government of Israel should be permitted to return forthwith to their homes and that the Mixed Armistice Commission should supervise their return and rehabilitation in a manner to be determined by the Commission; and

(b) Holds that no action involving the transfer of persons across international frontiers, armistice lines or within the demilitarized zone should be undertaken without prior decision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

Noting with concern the refusal on a number of occasions to permit observers and officials of the Truce Supervision Organization to enter localities and areas which were subjects of complaints in order to perform their legitimate functions,

Considers that the parties should permit such entry at all times whenever this is required, to enable the Truce Supervision Organization to fulfil its functions, and should render every facility which may be requested by the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission for this purpose:

Reminds the parties of their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such manner that international peace and security are not endangered and expresses its concern at the failure of the Governments of Israel and Syria to achieve progress pursuant to their commitments under the Armistice Agreement to promote the return to permanent peace in Palestine;

Directs the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to take the necessary steps to give effect to this resolution for the purpose of restoring peace in the area and authorizes him to take such measures to restore peace in the area and to make such representations to the Governments of Israel and Syria as he may deem necessary;

Calls upon the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report to the Security Council on compliance given to the present resolution;

Requests the Secretary-General to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization may request in carrying out the present resolution and the Council's resolutions of 8 May 1951 and 17 November 1950.

683.84A/5-2151

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Officer in Charge of Lebanon-Syria-Iraq Affairs (Barrow)

[Extract] 1

SECRET

[Washington,] May 21, 1951.

Subject: 1. Syria-Israel Dispute

2. Military and Economic Aid to Syria

Participants: Faiz El-Khouri, Minister of Syria

NEA-Mr. McGhee NE-Mr. Barrow

Discussion:

1. The Syrian Minister expressed satisfaction at the United Nations Security Council resolution of May 18, 1951 regarding the Syria-Israel dispute, "even though it came a little late". He said that this move was regarded as concrete evidence that the United States was following its announced policy of impartiality.

The material on military and economic aid to Syria is omitted.

When the Syrian Minister alluded to Israeli misbehavior, Mr. McGhee took occasion to mention that Syria had recently taken some actions which were of a minor character but which nevertheless did not help to advance the Syrian case in the eyes of the public. He referred to (a) the transfer of air units from Iraq, (b) the statement of the Syrian Prime Minister that Syria would never make peace with Israel, (c) the creation by the Arab League of an office to strengthen the economic boycott against Israel and (d) the visit of the controversial Grand Mufti to Damascus during the Arab League meetings. Mr. McGhee emphasized that whatever reasons or justification might lie behind these developments he believed they accomplished very little while at the same time evoking adverse reaction toward the Arabs in world public opinion. The Minister, while not admitting that the foregoing actions were unjustified, agreed that it was unwise to have made them public at this time.

The Syrian Minister said that Syria, while pleased with the resolution, was fearful that Israel would not comply and asked what the United States would do in the face of Israel's flouting the Security Council resolution. Mr. McGhee assured Faiz Bey that the United States would press strongly to see that the resolution was implemented.

674.84A/5-2351: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET

Washington, May 23, 1951—7 p. m.

5424. For Ambassador. I believe it unwise in present Brit polit situation for me to reply to Eden's observations (urtel 5894 May 11).<sup>2</sup>

For documentation regarding the attitude of the United States concerning the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations for a revision of the Treaty of 1936, see pp. 343 f

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Stabler and approved for transmission by Mr. Acheson personally.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 679. In a memorandum of May 16 to the Secretary, routed through Mr. Matthews, Mr. McGhee had commented on telegram 5894 in part as follows:

&quot;There has been considerable criticism by the Conservatives and the Labor back-benchers over the manner in which the British Government is conducting the negotiations with Egypt on the revision of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936. The Conservatives believe that the Government is prepared to make too many concessions to Egypt and has demanded that the Government adopt a strong attitude with respect to the restrictions which the Egyptian Government has placed on tankers transitting the Suez Canal bound for Israel. We feel that it is unfortunate that the UK has felt obliged to complicate the already complicated treaty negotiations by the introduction of the Suez Canal issue. We are convinced that if the British should try any such method as suggested by Mr. Eden, it would be impossible to obtain a satisfactory settlement of the Anglo-Egyptian question. It must be admitted that up to the present time little or no progress has been made in the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations but that the door is still open. There can be little doubt that that door would be closed if tactics of force were employed. It should also be emphasized that the consequences of such action on the US position in the Near and Middle East would be extremely serious." (974.531/5–1651)

Suggest you advise Eden of our gen thinking re Anglo-Egypt and Anglo-Iran relations since this will constitute answer and at same time pour cold water upon course he proposes.

We agree it is of utmost importance Iran situation be settled as soon as possible on amicable and reasonable basis and we have informed Morrison of basis on which we wld be prepared support such program as may be put forward. We recognize that great provocation has been presented but believe that situation requires infinite restraint. We feel that same criteria apply in Egypt situation. We consider that any display of force such as use of destroyers with tankers transitting Suez Canal wld have most disastrous repercussions not only in Egypt but throughout entire Near and Middle East and wld play directly into hands of those who have been hoping UK and its friends wld be driven to such measures. We also believe that tactics of force wld prejudice possibility of satis resolution of Egypt question.

FYI: It is hard for Dept to believe Eden seriously entertains these views. Do you consider they prevail widely in Conservative Party leadership?

ACHESON

330/5-2351: Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

New York, May 23, 1951—7:01 p. m.

1575. Israeli-Syria dispute. Malania (UN) told us of confidential cable just received from Riley for informal use by and in discretion of SC president. Substance approximately as follows:

Sharett told Riley <sup>1</sup> it was his understanding that point at issue now is safeguarding of legitimate rights and interests of Arab landowners in that part of demilitarized zone effected by Huleh drainage operations. Immediate task was to explore possibility of agreement with these landowners on basis of compensation or the granting of alternate tracts of land. Israeli Govt had therefore requested Palestine Land Development Company to suspend its operations in affected area for "brief period" necessary to come to understanding with landowners. Suspension effective May 23. On May 24, engineering work would be shifted to other areas of demilitarized zone. Sharett emphasized this would be temporary and partial discontinuance to facilitate understanding with owners. He reasserted "inalienable right" of Israel to complete drainage project.

&lt;sup>1</sup>In a letter transmitted to the General the night of May 22-23, and published in the Jerusalem Post the following morning. Text is in telegram 788 from Tel Aviv, May 23, not printed. (683.84A/5-2351)

In Riley's opinion, Sharett's position raised "dangerous issue" which probably will cause trouble. Riley cannot now authorize commencement of engineering operations elsewhere in demilitarized zone. Investigation must first take place to determine if new sites are in fact in Israeli territory. Riley has therefore requested Israeli Govt to order that work be stopped altogether until continuation can be authorized in proper manner.

Earliest possible date for MAC meeting is Monday, May 28. Riley will be in chair.

AUSTIN

974.531/5-2551 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Gifford) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

London, May 25, 1951—3 p. m.

6159. For the Secretary. In my opinion Eden really feels that UK shld follow tactics re Suez Canal outlined mytel 5894 May 111 (Deptel 5424 May 23).2 He is not the sort of man to make a suggestion of this type without giving it full thought and particularly in a conversation with me. Evidence that he continues to entertain these views found in his Empire Day speech last night when, after referring to progressive deterioration of respect for international obligations, he stated "In Egypt in two years past, our tankers to Haifa have been denied right of passage thru Suez Canal, though under terms of convention, Canal shld be free from blockade in peace and war."

He contd that two months ago there had been debate "when Commons was virtually unanimous, in speech at least, against govt granting facilities to Egypt to acquire oil while Brit tankers were still being denied passage thru canal." Yet when it came to the division, govt had won by three votes, and he supposed that business was still going on and Brit tankers to Haifa were still being stopped. "Giving away just internatl rights does not win peace. That is appeasement at its worst. We have been pushed around a little too much of late. That is bad for us and bad for other countries and it is bad for peace. For sometime past I have thought that we should call halt to that process."

Fact that Churchill was present when Eden discussed his proposal with Morrison indicates that it had former's support. I shall endeavor discreetly to ascertain views other conservative leaders in matter, but I am inclined to feel that those who have given any thought to subj wld be reluctant to take issue with party leader and deputy leader even tho they personally might have some misgivings re wisdom of move this type.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ante, p. 679. <sup>2</sup> Ante, p. 697.

Will advise Eden when opportunity arises as you suggest.

GIFFORD

683.84A/5-2951: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices 1

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, May 29, 1951—6 p. m.

743. On appropriate occasion your discretion you shld remind govts to which accredited fol position which Dept has indicated to Israel and Syria number previous occasions: It was not design of sponsors Res bring about permanent cessation of drainage operations in Huleh area which dependent on work in Demilit Zone. This made clear on May 18 in SC when spokesman for sponsors stated all sponsors agreed Huleh drainage project wld undoubtedly promote gen welfare of area. First objective Res, however, to bring about suspension of drainage operations in Demilit Zone enable Chief of Staff of TSO bring about negotiated settlement between owners of affected land and Palestine Land Development Co. Sponsors did not intend give veto power over drainage swamp to any party but believe that through appropriate UN machinery already established handle problem, rights Arabs in area cld be safeguarded and at same time useful project cld be carried out.

Dept believes Riley shld be given opportunity deal with problem in Demilit Zone (re Damascus Legtel 670, May 26)2 and any action by states members SC to back up Res shld only be undertaken on basis report to UN from Riley that either party is refusing or has failed comply with Res.

You may assure govts to which accredited that US will continue watch situation Demilit Zone carefully and will consider serious matter failure either Syria or Israel comply with SC Res.

Potentially dangerous is idea "this time US siding with Arabs." US action SC was and is strictly impartial and statement to contrary only jeopardize strength US position. Both Arabs and Israelis shld understand this.

ACHESON

&lt;sup>1</sup> Telegram drafted by Mr. Waldo, cleared for UNP by Mr. Ludlow, approved for transmission by Mr. Jones.

Telegram sent for action to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Haifa, Jerusalem, Jidda, and Tel Aviv, and sent for information to Ankara, Paris, and London. <sup>2</sup> Not printed. (683.84A/5-2651)

701

683.84A/5-3151: Telegram

President Truman to President Weizmann of Israel 1

RESTRICTED

Washington, May 31, 1951—7 p. m.

PRIORITY

My Dear Mr. President: I have recd your tel of May 18, 1951 concerning the four-power res regarding the situation in the Demilitarized Zone on the Israel-Syrian border. As you know, this res was adopted by the Security Council on May 18, 1951 by a unanimous vote. I want to assure you, Mr. President, that the United States reps in conjunction with their Brit, Fr, and Turk colleagues considered the matter most carefully before introducing this res in the Council.

As was pointed out in the sponsors' statements before the Security Council on May 16 and 18, the fundamental consideration in this res is the strengthening of the Israel-Syrian Mixed Armistice Comm and of the authority of the United Nations Chief of Staff in dealing with the points at issue regarding the Demilitarized Zone. I can assure you that it was not the design of the sponsors of this res to bring about a permanent cessation of drainage operations in the Huleh marsh area. At the same time, the Security Council has expressed the view that such activities in the Demilitarized Zone should only be carried on in accordance with the procedures established under the Armistice Agreement. The United States will continue to support the position of the United Nations on this matter, noting that if either side is dissatisfied with the terms of the present agreement, the necessary United Nations machinery is always available to permit modifications to be made.

I am very happy to have recd reports that fighting in the Demilitarized Zone has now ceased and both sides are abiding by the terms of the Security Council's cease-fire of May 8. We are also confident that both sides will similarly comply with the terms of the res of May 18.

It is my hope that in the near future the limited arrangements represented by the armistice agreements can be supplanted or expanded by additional agreements between Israel and the Arab states which will result in final peace settlements. Meanwhile, in the absence of more comprehensive settlements, the armistice agreements are the only, and therefore invaluable, instruments safeguarding peace in the area. As such, they must be carefully preserved. It is my belief that only through the scrupulous adherence of both sides to the armistice agreements and Security Council resolutions can a solid foundation be laid for an eventual permanent peace.

¹ The text of this message is printed in the form in which it was transmitted in telegram 535 to Tel Aviv, May 31, which also includes delivery instructions. Mr. Waldo drafted this message on May 25. In a memorandum of May 28, which covers part of his discussion of foreign policy that day with the President, Mr. Acheson stated: "I left the draft telegram with the President, who said that he would study it and let me hear from him." (Secretary's Memoranda of Conversation: Lot 65 D 238) No response from the President has been found in Department of State files. The message as transmitted is unchanged from Mr. Waldo's draft.

I send to you, Mr. President, my warm regards.

HARRY S. TRUMAN<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 833 to Washington, June 4, Ambassador Davis stated he had personally delivered this message to President Weizmann on June 1. He commented in part: "Also said I had impression matter was being permitted to assume more importance in Israel than it merits, and that public was being given idea that resolution indice a unfriendliness on part sponsors, which simply is not true." (683.84A/6-451) In a letter to the Ambassador of June 12, marked "Personal—Confidential", Mr. McGhee commended Mr. Davis for stressing this point. (McGhee Files: Lot 53 D 468: File "D" Letters)

320.2 AA/6-451 : Telegram

The Chargé in Lebanon (Bruins) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

Beirut, June 4, 1951—11 a.m.

714. Rapun 163. From Bergus for Blandford. Fol summarizes sub-committee report now under active consideration AdCom: Begin summary:

1. Indispensable preliminary is tripartite declaration to effect US, UK, Fr intend see reintegration job through and that reintegration will not compromise repatriation compensation rights.

2. Two subjects of relief transfer and reintegration must be linked and problem involves all Arab states.

3. Therefore after tripartite declaration Arab states would be invited joint conference with PRA. At conference PRA wld acquaint Arab leaders with full situation including movement problem. Question whether detailed joint negotiation wld be undertaken then or on bilateral basis later left open. Timing and method similar approach Israel left open.

4. PRA proposals wld include:

(a) Relief wld be handed over by paying cash to local govts in currencies of contributing countries. Usable contributions in kind wld be handed over at fixed rate as part of cash subsidy. Medical education and welfare should not be separated out.

(b) Payments wild be based on present figure of 850,000 refugees with escalator clause based internatl price wheat.

(c) Arab govts wild be encouraged present reintegration projects for PRA consideration. PRA wild offer technical and financial assistance. Relief transfer agreements wild contain provision for reducing relief payments as reintegration projects agreed on. Small subsidy to be paid to govts for stopping relief to refugees already self-reintegrated.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ambassador Blandford had left Beirut for Washington on May 30.

Rapid diminishing availability relief funds wild be emphasized along with major econ advantages accruing from reintegration. End summary.

Wld appreciate your comments.2

Bruins

<sup>2</sup> See footnote 1, p. 717.

683.84A/6-751: Telegram

The Chargé in Lebanon (Bruins) to the Department of State 1

CONFIDENTIAL

BEIRUT, June 7, 1951—3 p. m.

731. Replying Deptel 859, June 6,<sup>2</sup> requesting state of drainage work in demilitarized zone, Gen Riley, now in Beirut, reports that on June 5 he submitted second interim report <sup>3</sup> to Pres SecCo on steps taken to give effect to May 18, 1951 SecCo resolution.

[Part ?] 1 of this report covers Israel Govt agreement for stoppage of all work in demilitarized zone until chairman has opportunity to check on status of lands Israeli-owned, concession-owned and Arabowned, where work must be performed in connection with over-all project. Chairman, as result of his investigation, expects to be in position to authorize Palestine Land Development Co. to resume work on Monday, June 12 on Israeli- or concession-owned lands. No work will be resumed on any Arab-owned land until chairman reaches agreement on payment of compensation and possible exchange of lands within demilitarized zone. If this is not possible (present indications no concurrence possible), then within period two weeks Gen Riley will find it necessary to report back to SecCo results of such endeavors. As Riley sees situation, chairman cannot stop work from proceeding on lands other than Arab-owned for an indefinite period. However, Syria is intent on interpreting SecCo res to mean that work on all lands will be suspended indefinitely. Riley invites attention to fact that at time Mar 7 memo was prepared, he had no knowledge that lands other than Arab-owned were involved. Therefore, he must stand on point that Palestine Land Development Co. does have authority to continue work on land which belongs to Israelis and to concession.

Above is for info only and not for publication.

Gen Riley expects to be mainly in Beirut next two or three weeks. Suggest routing communications for him accordingly.

Bruins

Not printed.
U.N. Doc. S/2185.

Repeated for information to Damascus, Jerusalem, and Tel Aviv.

357.AC/6-751 : Telegram

The United States Representative on the Palestine Conciliation Commission (Palmer) to the Secretary of State

JERUSALEM, June 7, 1951—6 р. т. SECRET

232. Palun 407. Fol Shiloah's invitation to dinner with Sharett 28 May (Palun 405)1 which I had declined, Sharett himself invited Barco and me to dine on Wed June 6. I had meanwhile explained to Shiloah that I had nothing to say to Israel Govt on subject of compensation but that I wld of course be happy hear anything which they had to tell us. It was on this basis that we accepted Sharett's latest invitation and dined with him, Shiloah, Horowitz, and Comay at Sharett's house last night in Jerusalem. Immed after dinner Sharett said that he had been hoping for sometime discuss with USDel subject of Barco's and Shiloah's earlier talks (Palun 403).2 He wanted to say at outset that he was very much interested in line of thinking which had been subject of those talks. He cld not however raise matter with his govt without pursuing it further with USDel. Meanwhile he had recd several requests from Aras, Boisanger, and Andersen for mtgs which he had put off until he had had an opportunity talk to us. He asked Shiloah outline points of his conversation with Barco in order we might all be clear as to exactly what had been said. Shiloah recalled Barco had put forward seven points for consideration:

1. That refugee problem remained greatest obstacle to peace between Israel and her Arab neighbors.

2. That it was unlikely practical means cld be found for refugee repatriation on any large scale.

3. That there remained question of compensation, which if settled satisfactorily might be expected remove refugee problem as grievance against Israel.

4. That settlement of compensation question might be expected pave way to peaceful relations between Israel and her Arab neighbors.

5. That by relating compensation to reintegration, it might be possible avoid waste of compensation funds and encourage resettlement.

6. Assuming Israel was not now in a position undertake large scale financial obligations to refugees, it might be possible obtain internal assistance through UN for such financing.

7. Wld Israel therefore consider it politically advantageous to settle compensation question by assuming large scale financial obligation if such obligation cld be guaranteed or financed with internatl assistance without jeopardizing Israel's economic future, it being understood that settlement of compensation question wld be outside context of any overall peace settlement and without ref to Israel's claims for war damages?

Shiloah explained that the discussions Barco and he had had on these points had always been on basis of personal inquiry and exploration, each party understanding that the other was not in a position to say what attitude his govt might take on matter.

<sup>2</sup> Dated May 9, p. 671.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Not printed; one section of Palun 405 is summarized in footnote 4, p. 673.

Sharett then asked number of questions concerning manner in which compensation wild be carried out if Israel were to agree to assume obligation referred to. His questions related to how compensation funds might be used for reintegration; whether Israel wild be expected to pay to a trustee or to Arab govts; whether Israel having paid cld be regarded as acquitted of responsibility; whether if compensation fund was insufficient to pay all claims in full, refugees wild expect to maintain a claim against Israel for balance; if compensation fund was to be determined on basis of a global estimate but payment was to be made to individual claimants, how and when were individual claims to be examined; etc.

USDel replied to these questions that they had certainly not been overlooked in our thinking but that until discussions of principle had proceeded further, we had not thought it possible find answers to them. We felt however that procedures cld be worked out to answer each question satisfactorily and we had hoped when time came we cld work out answers in collaboration with them and refugee office. Sharett then pointed out that proposal under discussion was distinct departure from orthodox view of compensation as Israel had always understood it. Orthodox view had been that compensation was an incentive to a peace settlement and that as such it had to be played as trump card in overall peace negots. On one hand Israel felt it was prospect of compensation that provided best encouragement to govts of Arab states to talk peace and on other that if compensation were paid without requiring anything in return peace talks might be postponed indefinitely. Proposal under discussion however was based on an opposite theory, that with payment of compensation principal obstacle to peace wld be removed by depriving Arab states of their grievances, and he was personally somewhat sympathetic to this view. At this point USDel added that up to present govts comprising PCC had little persuasive power with Arab states so long as they cld not point to any substantial efforts by Israel to discharge its obligation, but that with payment of compensation by Israel, our govts wld be in much more persuasive position and might be expected have greater success in urging Arabs come to terms.

Sharett then raised problem of public opinion in Israel, pointing out that it wld be difficult for Israelis to accept payment of compensation to Arab refugees, many of whom had fought against them, if at same time Israel's claims for reparations against Germany cld not be satisfied. He felt moreover that question of financing wld prove much less difficult if Israel cld expect repayment for losses Israel citizens had suffered at hands of Germans. He thought this aspect of problem shld be pursued further and intimated that Shiloah, who expected go to Washington at end of month, might take up question again in Washington. Emphasizing however his interest in present line of thinking, he asked whether our intention was take up question officially and privately with Govt of Israel or whether it was our intention to raise question publicly at time of our report to Gen. Assembly. He hoped it wld be possible have discussions of more official nature in near future. In this connection, I told Sharett Barco wld be going back to Dept for consultations and that following his return I hoped such official discussions cld take place.

This morning Sharett saw Aras in Jerusalem, who reported to USDel that for first time he had found Sharett's attitude hopeful. Whereas in past discussions he had been evasive and indirect, in this morning's conv he seemed much more receptive to Aras's argument that with settlement of compensation question Israel wld be taking an important step toward peace with Arab states.

[PALMER]

683.84A/6-951: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom 1

SECRET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, June 9, 1951—5 p. m. 5771. Re Embtel 6451 June 8 2 and approach Brit Emb rep Dept has informed latter as fols:

Dept understands FonOff concern re course of action which Riley intends pursue, but feels that if he were now dissuaded, his position with Israelis wld be undermined and Syrians wld take this as further evidence they can block drainage operations demilitarized zone indefinitely. While we agree that effect Israel compliance SC res May 18 wld have been better if it had been given more promptly and gracefully and if permission resume operations on Israel or concessionowned lands not granted so soon after compliance, facts remain: a) Israel has complied; b) Syria elects ignore sponsors' interpretation SC res; and c) Riley's position technically sound.

In our view SC res designed primarily to strengthen authority chief of Staff TSO and Chairman MAC and nothing shld now be done which wld weaken their authority. We do not think that question of who owned lands cld have affected res one way or other since point at issue was compliance not ownership.

In this telegram the Embassy had described the reaction of the Foreign Office to General Riley's position on the resumption of work on the Huleh drainage project (see telegram 731 from Beirut, June 7, p. 703). Paragraph 3 of telegram 6451 reads as follows:

&lt;sup>1</sup>Telegram drafted by Mr. Stabler, cleared for UNP by Mr. Ludlow, and approved for transmission by Mr. Jones. Repeated for information to Beirut, Damascus, Jerusalem, and Tel Aviv.

&quot;FonOff thinks that correct procedure for Riley to have followed under circumstances wild have been to state that he was afraid SC action might have been based on his erroneous info re actual position but to have called Israel to stop all work until such time as SC cld again consider matter and reaffirm or alter its decision." (683.84A/6-851)

For above reasons we are disposed support Riley in his intended course of action.

Re FonOff thinking correct procedure para three reftel we believe this wld be mistake since it wld have immed reopened entire question in SC thereby vitiating one of the principal objectives SC res-let MAC do the job. However we shld be disposed support further SC action shld Riley so request.

ACHESON

Editorial Note

Some time after June 11, but before June 20, General Riley made available to the Legation in Beirut an analysis, originally prepared for United Nations use, of some of his actions in the Huleh matter following passage of the Security Council resolution of May 18. The last paragraph of this analysis follows:

"When it was learned that Palestine Land Dev Co cld work on certain Israeli lands without infringing on Arab land, Chief of Staff requested Palestine Land Development Co. to again stop all work on June 5, 1951 in demilitarized zone in accordance with S/2157 [the resolution of May 18], until chairman had opportunity to check whether lands on which work resumed May 24 cld be considered as Arab-owned. This investigation was completed and permission granted Palestine Land Dev Co to proceed with work on June 11, 1951, since lands not considered to be Arab-owned. This action based on Art 5 as interpreted by explanatory note." (Summary transmitted to the Department in telegram 786, from Beirut, June 20; 330/6-2051)

784A.00/6-1151

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (McGhee)1

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington,] June 11, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Mr. Jacob Blaustein, President, American Jewish Committee and the American Oil Company.

Participants: Mr. Blaustein

Mr. McGhee—NEA

Mr. Lewis Jones—NE

Mr. Waldo-NE

Mr. Stabler—NE

Mr. Blaustein called on me at his request to discuss his recent interview with the Egyptian Ambassador to the US, as well as certain other items.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Memorandum drafted by Mr. Waldo.

[Here follows a discussion of the situation in Morocco.]

2. Israel: Mr. Blaustein agreed that grant-aid for the Near East should be provided on a regional basis, provided that Israel received enough. He suggested it might be desirable for him to discuss the matter with the Bureau of the Budget and Mr. Foster of ECA with this in mind. I told Mr. Blaustein that under the President's program Israel was scheduled to receive $23.5 million, and that any greater sum under present budgeting would certainly be considered by the Arabs as proof of a complete lack of impartiality. Mr. Blaustein said that Israel could be counted upon as an ally and that, therefore, it should get the same aid as the European countries. I said that it was not possible to increase the amount; the President had already set forth the US position in his message to the Congress.<sup>2</sup> We also felt that $50 million for the refugees was equally of benefit to Israel.

Mr. Blaustein inquired whether the Arabs had agreed to resettlement. I said that these funds were not for the payment of compensation, but were to provide for feeding under the UN and for projects leading to resettlement. I told Mr. Blaustein that two years ago it was clear to me that the refugees would have to be resettled in the Arab states and, if these states agreed, resettlement should be forthcoming soon.

Mr. Blaustein then raised the question of the SC Resolution of May 18, and expressed disappointment in it. He said it might endanger Ben-Gurion's chances in the forthcoming elections in Israel and make the Arabs more difficult to deal with. He admitted, however, that Israel had gone along with the UN decision and that everything I had told him would occur had happened. I said that the resolution had reestablished respect for the UN in the area. We now believed that General Riley should be permitted to have a free hand under the resolution.

3. Discussion with Egyptian Ambassador:

Mr. Blaustein then turned to a discussion of his meeting with the Egyptian Ambassador. He had told the Egyptian Ambassador that he was a non-Zionist, but not an anti-Zionist. He was not a member of any Zionist organization nor a supporter of the more radical aspects of Zionism. He was eager for peace in the Near East area and hoped that the ECA aid could be extended to the area in order to fight Communism. Egypt was the only country south of Turkey which had the necessary industrial capacity to raise the standard of living for the masses.

Mr. Jones said that it was difficult to convince the workers of Egypt and Iraq of the miserable lot of Communist workers. Their own con-

&lt;sup>2</sup> For information on President Truman's message to the Congress of May 24, which deals with a regional aid program to the Near East, see the editorial note, p. 150.

