"HAUS- u. BAUERNFREUND" (Agricultural), Milwaukee,	75,000
Total Weekly Issue,	-	-	195,000

All of the above papers occupy a high position in American Journalism. They are unobjectionable family papers, edited in accordance with Christian Principles, and for this reason patronized by a large class of religious people.

The first three named papers circulate in every section of the West, the "Buffalo Volksblatt," mainly in the East, the "Haus- und Bauernfreund," throughout the country. This unrivaled popular paper, devoted to farming and manufacturing interests, is edited by a most distinguished practical agriculturist.

The "GERMANIA," and "HAUS- UND BAUERNFREUND," have a much larger circulation than any other German Weekly in the United States.

All classes of mechanics and dealers seeking German trade will through our papers reach a larger number of readers than by any other channel.

Advertising rates comparatively lower than those of probably any other paper.

N. B.—The attention of Students and Graduates of the University and of the Literary Colleges, Academies and High Schools, is respectfully invited to the practical benefits which they may derive from a few months spent in the SPENCERIAN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, taking a business course, before entering upon the real business of life in which success depends largely upon business qualifications.

Young men and women from the higher institutions of learning cannot over-estimate the importance to themselves of such a course of business instruction and training as can be obtained in the SPENCERIAN BUSINESS COLLEGE at a comparatively small expenditure of time and money. Indeed it will tend to greatly enhance the pecuniary value and practical utility of other acquirements, and promote general efficiency and success in the affairs of life.

Connected with this College is an excellent Short Hand and Type Writing Department, for the instruction of those who wish to qualify for amanuensis work and for stenographic reporting.

MILWAUKEE HYDRAULIC CEMENT.

PLANT OF MILWAUKEE CEMENT COMPANY.

The annual amount of cement manufactured and sold by this company is about 500,000 barrels. The sales are divided between seventeen States and a part of the British Dominions. Among the purchasers of the cement are included all of the principal railway companies in the West and Northwest. A large quantity is also used for government work, water works, bridges, etc. This cement is recently applied largely in the construction of foundations for pavements, woods, stone and asphalt, and pavements of this kind are now becoming general in the larger cities of this country, as well as those of Europe. The ordinary production in a day of ten hours is over 4,000 barrels, or about 100,000 barrels per month. The works are the largest under one superintendence in the United States, and the cement is of a quality as perfect as first-class machinery and business skill can make it.

Prices and References Furnished on Application. Correspondence Solicited. Send for our Book on Hydraulic Cement. Mailed free.

To the Reader.

THE Annual comes before you as gold thrice purified by fire. The fire that the Board of Editors has had to pass through cannot be excelled by any this side of Jordan. By their fellow-students they are held as all-avenging gods and are therefore favored and feasted, petted and purred over by those who wish not to see themselves as others see them. By the pugilistic element in College society, they are told of dark and dire deeds, of breaking hearts and broken heads, of all things that freeze the blood and paralyze the muscles, so that the hand refuses to record a flunk or a joke.

However, the Annual Board of '89 have passed through the fire unscathed and now proclaim to you, with this the first "BADGER," their glorious victim.

The way in which '89 established their power in the U. W. is best learned from a historian now dead, whose manuscript was found in the attic of Ladies' Hall. Says this historian: "The early history of the class of '89 is confined to local traditions and myths. Our first knowledge of them begins about the time of the Autumnal Equinox in 1884, when a few of their number took up their abode in the Greek Preparatory. A year later the entire class came en masse and pitched their tents on the shores of the beautiful Mendota.

From time immemorial the classes in U. W. had been laid waste by the Hydra-headed monster, whose power was equalled only by that of the Chief of Rhetoricals. Scarcely had the Eighty-nines pitched their tents on the shores of the beautiful lake, when this monster swooped down upon them and carried off their young men, who, except where grim death or a class officer interfered, were held prisoners for two years.

At sunset the girls used sometimes to go to their prison, which was called in classic language the 'Gym,' but which meant 'A Hen-coop,' and weep and lament and —— the officers conducted the fair squadron home.

In the year 1887, the Eighty-nines were the support and glory of the college. Their power extended from the little Freshie to the be-plugged and be-whiskered Senior. In this year, they took possession of a class fence which had been erected by a prehistoric people. They used to sit on this fence and —— study ——. The Juniors and Seniors used also to sit on the fence, and after they had made a recitation in 'Psyc', they would come out of the class-room and lean up against the fence to rest.

In June, 1887, there was a great gathering together of the class, and eleven of the noblest and brightest were chosen to go into the wilderness and capture a 'Trochos.'

This 'Trochos' was an almighty somewhat, no one knew what, that was supposed to contain all the wit and wisdom of the age. Some of the people worshipped the 'Trochos,' and they did no sin in so doing, for there was nothing in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth like it.

The Eighty-nines determined to solve the mystery of the 'Trochos,' and after much search and debate it was found to be a 'BADGER,' wild and wily.

Owing to the fact that the chestnut-trees had been stripped of their luscious fruit by student-raids and professor-invasions, and that chestnuts were the only food that the 'BADGER' would eat, the task was a hard one. It was made more difficult by the crusade against Phi Delta Theta, in which were joined Beta Theta Pi, Phi Kappa Psi, Chi Psi and Sigma Chi. Just what the trouble was no one knew, but it was believed that Phi Delta Theta had fallen from grace and the others hoped to redeem them by the potent method. Finding that open warfare but augmented the trouble, a treaty of peace was finally negotiated between these Turks and Fair-weather Christians. Shortly after this treaty, the 'BADGER' hunters set out and have not been heard from since."

* * * * *

The manuscript at this point was much blotted and could not be deciphered. The "BADGER" hunters have, however, returned and bring with them the fattest, sleekest "BADGER" that ever was caught with time-honored chestnuts.

Should the language of this production seem at fault remember that Truth was the one end the editors had in view, and "Truth loveth simplicity and plainness." Again, should Truth appear to be in a state of extension, remember that the editors followed the scheme of an eminent Englishman, who said of his book :

"I take good heed that there be in my book nothing false, so if there be anything doubtful, I will rather tell a lie than make a lie, because I had rather be good than wily."

Praying, gentle reader, that you may be blessed with a continuance of health and a daily increase in all virtue and honor, the Editorial Board makes the very best bow that so stiff a piece of old lumber is able to make, and retires to private life.

Biographies

Of Members of the Faculty Who Have Come to the University Since the Publication of the Last Annual.

CHARLES REID BARNES, A. B., A. M., Ph. D., was born at Madison, Indiana, Sept. 7, 1858. His early education was received under his father, Charles Barnes, who at that time was conducting a private school. At the age of thirteen he entered the Madison High School and was graduated, in 1874, with second honors. The same year he entered Hanover College, at Hanover, Ind., as a Sophomore, graduating with highest honors in 1877. The next three years he taught school, and during the summers of 1879 and 1880, he attended the Summer School of Botany at Harvard. Since 1880 he has filled the chair of Botany and Geology at Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind., except the years 1885-86, when he was absent on leave at Harvard. In 1887 he was elected Professor of Botany at the University of Wisconsin. He was co-author of the "Hand-book of Plant Dissection," in 1886, and published the key to "Genera of Mosses" the same year, and in 1887 the "Revision of Genus Fissidens," and has, in addition, been co-editor of the Botanical Gazette since 1883.

S. M. BABCOCK, A. M., Ph. D., was born at Bridgewater, Oneida Co., New York, in October, 1843. He was prepared for college at Clinton, in the same county, and then entered Tufts College from which he was graduated in 1866. From 1872 to 1875 he took special studies in advanced Chemistry at Cornell, and then held a position as instructor in Analytical Chemistry in the same institution until 1877. He resigned this position to go to Germany to pursue special studies in Chemistry at Goettingen, and there, in 1879, he received the degree, Ph. D. He was again instructor at Cornell during the year 1881-82, and at the close of the year was appointed Chemist of the New York Experiment Station, where he remained until called, in 1887, to fill the chair of Agricultural Chemistry at the University of Wisconsin. His chief experiments have been with milk, and he is the inventor of the Viscometer, an instrument used to measure the richness of milk and to detect adulteration in oils. He is a frequent contributor to newspapers and agricultural periodicals, and while at Cornell, in connection with Dr. Caldron, published a manual of Analytical Chemistry.

GEORGE C. COMSTOCK, Ph. D., LL. D., was born at Madison, Wis., in 1855. He entered the University of Michigan in 1873 and was graduated in 1877. During the last three years of his course he spent a portion of each year in field work of the United States Lake Survey. The first year after graduation he was an assistant in the Observatory at Ann Arbor, and the following year an assistant engineer on the improvement of the upper Mississippi. In 1879 he was appointed an assistant in the Washburn Observatory, and held the position until 1883. During this time he also took a course in the College of Law in this University, from which he was graduated in 1883. From this time until 1885 he was engaged in astronomical work at the Washburn Observatory; at Washington, for the Montreal Almanac Office, and with the Northwestern Trans-Continental Survey. In 1885 he was elected Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy in the Ohio State University, and in 1887 he came to the University of Wisconsin as Professor of Astronomy and Director of the Washburn Observatory.

CHARLES E. ESTABROOK was born near Platteville, Grant Co., Wis., Oct. 31, 1847. His youth was spent on the farm where he worked in summer and attended district school in winter. Afterwards he attended the Platteville Academy and Normal School. In 1864, although not yet 17 years old, he enlisted in Co. B., Forty-third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. In 1871 he removed to Manitowoc, where he engaged in teaching school, and in 1874 began the practice of law. He has held the office of City Attorney of Manitowoc, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1884, and a member of the Legislatures of 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1885. He is the author of the Farmers' Institute Law, the law providing for a board of examiners to examine candidates for admission to the bar and the law providing for the preservation and recounting of ballots. He was elected Attorney General in 1886, and in 1887 was elected Professor of Law in University of Wisconsin. He lectures on the following subjects: "Municipal Corporations," "Juries," "Justice Court Procedure" and "Sales."

PROF. ASAPH HALL was born at Goshen, Conn., Oct. 15, 1829. Until he reached the age of sixteen he worked on a farm and then for seven years he worked at the carpenter's trade. In 1852 he began the study of algebra and geometry at Norfolk, Conn., and then spent a year and a half at college in Central New York. He then came to Wisconsin and applied for a school at Elkhorn, which he failed to get. He was married at this place in 1856. At this time he was nearly out of money, he had failed to get his school and his wife was in poor health, but it decided the future course of his life. He went to the University of Michigan, intending to study Astronomy with Dr. Brunnon, but he remained here only one term, and after teaching school for a year in Chateauville, Ohio, he entered the Harvard College Observatory as a student and aid, for which he received a salary of three dollars per week, which was afterwards raised to $600 a year. Since his entrance in the Harvard Observatory his work has been almost wholly astronomical. In August, 1862, he was appointed an aid in the Naval Observatory at Washington, and in May of the next year was appointed Professor in the Navy, which position he still holds. In 1887, he was appointed Consulting Director of the Washburn Observatory, where he will spend a portion of his time each year.

The Alumni Association of the University of Wisconsin was organized on the evening of Commencement Day, June 26, 1861, with C. T. Wakeley as president; J. F. Smith, vice-president; J. M. Flower, corresponding secretary; W. F. Vilas, recording secretary, and T. D. Coryell, treasurer. Excepting a brief period during the war, the Association has since held an annual meeting at commencement time. The first literary exercises were given in the City Hall, June 24, 1862, when C. T. Wakeley delivered an address, and R. W. Hubbell read a poem. The literary exercises of the Association are regularly held on the evening before commencement. The regular business meeting was, until 1887, held immediately after the graduating exercises, but since the faculty have set aside an alumni day, this meeting will hereafter take place at 3 o'clock P. M., on the Tuesday before Commencement Day. The social event of commencement week is the alumni reception given on the evening of Commencement Day.

A very pleasant feature of last Alumni Day, June 20, 1887, was the banquet given by the Association in honor of President Bascom and President-elect Chamberlin. This was the most successful event in the history of the Association. It was a fitting tribute to President Bascom and a kindly welcome to President Chamberlin. About three hundred alumni participated. The toasts and responses were made as follows:

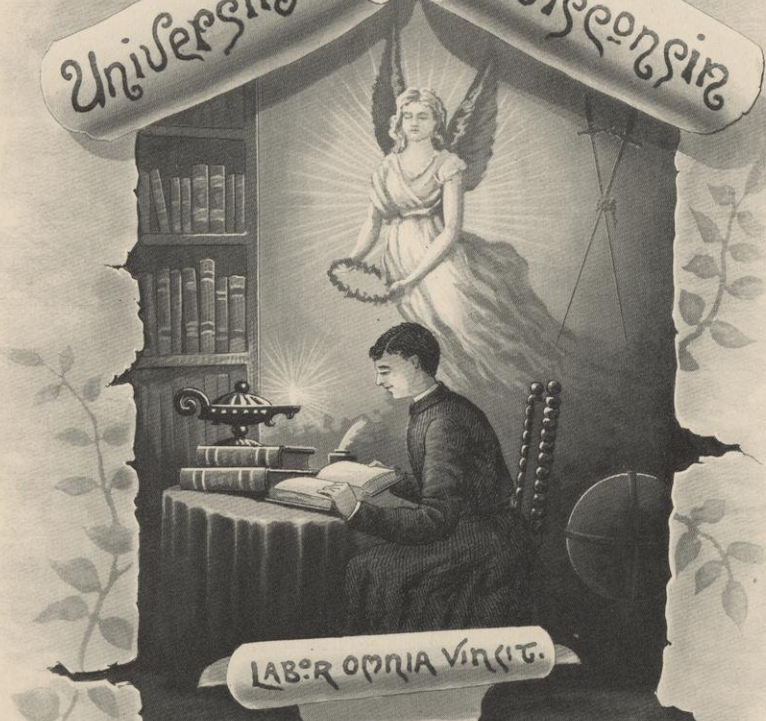

"The Faculty,"	-	-	-	-	-	Prof. J. C. Freeman.
"The University,"	-	-	-	-	-	Pres. John Bascom.
"The Class of '87,"	-	-	-	-	-	Harry E. Briggs, '87.

There has been a strong feeling prevalent among the alumni that they should in some way be regularly represented on the Board of Regents. On June 22, 1886, Judge Geo. H. Noyes, of Milwaukee, delivered an address before the Association on the subject, "How should the Boards of Control of State Universities be Constituted?" This address, which the Association ordered printed in pamphlet form for distribution among the alumni, gave much valuable information, and was an urgent appeal for alumni representation on the Board of Regents. Mr. Noyes had, at the annual meeting in 1885, introduced a resolution providing that a committee of five be appointed to take into consideration the plan of a representation of the alumni on the Board. The following committee was appointed: Geo. H. Noyes, Chas. N. Gregory, R. M. Bashford, Mrs. R. M. La Folette and A. S. Ritchie. At the succeeding meeting of the Association, 1886, this committee submitted a favorable report on the question, after the adoption of which a committee on legislation was appointed to draft a bill on the basis of the report and take such steps as might be necessary to secure its passage in the legislature. This committee consisted of Geo. H. Noyes, Chas. N. Gregory and A. S. Ritchie. (At the meeting of 1887 it was continued with Judge E. O.

Hand in place of A. S. Ritchie, resigned.) The bill drawn by the committee was introduced in the Assembly of 1887 by James C. Bartholf, and passed unanimously. In the Senate it was first reported back favorably, but was re-referred to the committee by special request, when the committee reported a substitute providing for the election of regents by the people. The substitute passed both the Senate and the Assembly but was vetoed by the Governor on the ground of technical defects. The Ægvis for April 29, 1887, gives an interesting history of this bill and the substitute.

Freshman History.

The class of '91 has but just begun to work in the mine of knowledge. Its history, though so brief, is filled with memorable incidents; the pleasant (?) recollections connected with some of them will, doubtless, never be erased from our memory, or from the court records.

To ever forget the eventful morning of Sept. 8, 1887, when, two hundred and fifty strong, we marched up the campus to meet the gaze (or guys) of the "hazy" *Soph. and to try the rigid examinations held by the Juniors, would be as impossible, as to forget that we are Freshmen while in the presence of our next higher classmates, who deem it their duty to constantly remind us of our inferiority.

Our first class meeting was not exactly a success, owing, doubtless, to the following causes, viz.: 1st, defects in "Ryan's Rules of Order;" 2d, interruptions by a few Sophomores; 3d, something not exactly known what, but said by some to be H 2 S. We, however, had the satisfaction of seeing a number of '90's coat-tails in a horizontal position, when Prex. and Pat appeared upon the scene.

When for the first time we heard the soul-stirring music of the conch, and learned, on inquiry, that "Dormitory Court" was to convene, we took the advice of those "who had been there," and stayed in our rooms. One unlucky member of '91, however, happened to be out, but was immediately taken in (the Gym.) and allowed to dance for a long time.

Dormitory Court intended to convene again in a short time, but the defendant that time was stoutly defended, and a battle ensued. Cannon were used freely, but for small arms the combatants were compelled to use cord-wood sticks (owing to the extra heavy lock on the armory, placed there since the rifle band episode). Both parties evacuated the Gym., or rather the remains of the Gym., sometime during the night and went back the next morning to find their hats, coats, eyeglasses, etc.

Halloween night was celebrated by all classes and by all the members of every class. That was the night the street cars acquired the habit of running on the sidewalks and the gas refused to perform its accustomed duty and the farm machinery, cannon, wagons (loaded with experimental cabbage), etc., as is customary on such occasions, all assembled at Ladies' Hall to be baptized with dishwater. A carriage was seen on the front steps and shortly after, the signs, "Cheap Rooms to Rent," "Gas Factory" and "No Trespassers Allowed" were affixed to the door.

This week, so illustriously began, ended in the famous "War of the Roses," when Madison's brave police displayed their veracity and honor, and when that whole-souled judge proved his generosity by giving wholesale rates to students. It was during a siege in the fore part of this war that a visitor was baptized by his hostess, and that the besiegers soon after began to think of home, father and pocket-book.

This war was closed by the treaty of Library Hall, and, since that time all has been quiet, and '91 has undertaken to prove her motto, "Labor Omnia Vincit." May she succeed.

Class History '90.

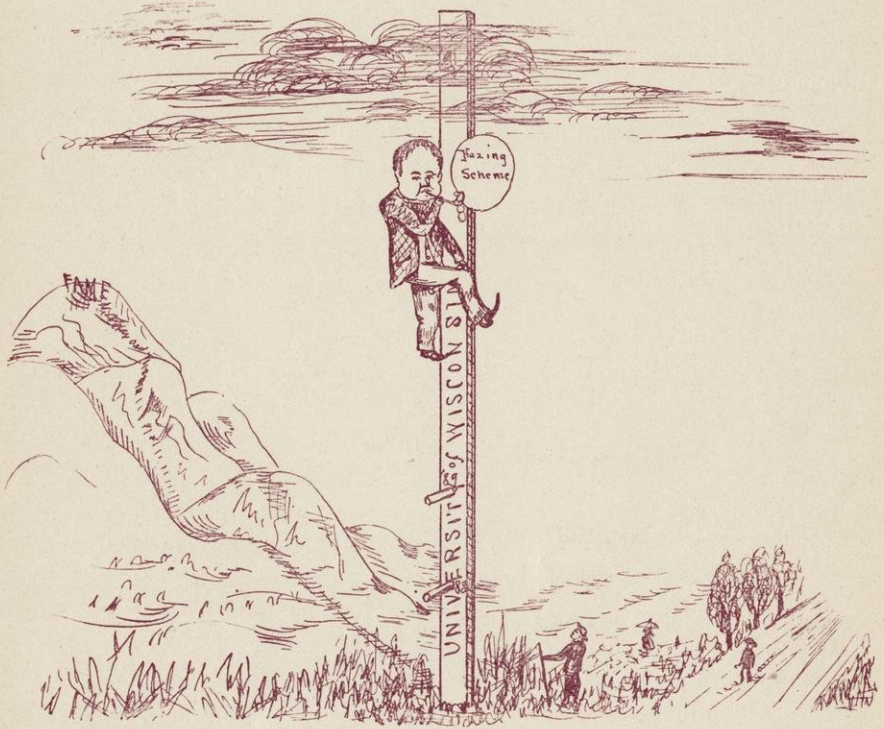

The Sophomore has always been credited with being able to blow his own horn. A Sophomore class history then, to lie within the traditional grooves, must be rather a class eulogy. And what a fertile theme for the pen of the eulogist our glorious class furnishes! Without the least hesitation we pronounce '90 the most brilliant galaxy of stars that has ever shone in the U. W. firmament. Our scintillant brilliancy will ever add new luster to Alma Mater's fame and attract hither those athirst for knowledge, from all quarters of the universe. In explanation of this seemingly rash statement, we would say in brief, "Necessity is the Mother of Invention." After its advent into the world of action it will be a slight work for potent '90 to bring about the much-dreamed-of Golden Age, when musty statute books shall be forgotten but the Golden Rule shall be inscribed in the hearts of the nations. Then will modern science and modern enterprise surpass all their former achievements in establishing a grand system of inter-planetary communication, because indomitable '90 must have new worlds to conquer.

We well remember the day when we first breathed the invigorating atmosphere of University Hill. How we were overawed by the varied accomplishments of the upper classmen! But the time soon came when the knowledge of our own superior endowments dawned upon us. The first class-meeting with its startling revelations of power was close followed by the series of valorous deeds with which the word "fence" will ever be linked in our memory. Event followed event. Before the close of the fall term our organization was perfected and we had learned to wear the Tam O'Shanter with jaunty grace.

During the winter term our first class-party occurred, and it won for us not only social prestige but an unrivalled reputation for generosity. We also distinguished ourselves at '89's party. The remnants of the banner with which we decorated Library Hall will ever be treasured as mementoes of that eventful night. At the class-picnic, near the close of our first year, Freshman jollity reigned supreme and the general good time was contributed to in no small degree by the efforts of the jovial chaperones.

We looked forward to the opening of our Sophomore year with pleasant anticipation. We might well have been content to rest on our laurels and to yield the palm to '91. But there has been no need. Notwithstanding the overwhelming numbers of the incoming class, we have maintained our supremacy through power of mind. With quiet dignity we have pursued the even tenor of our way, looking upon Freshman broils with due disdain. Our Sophomore party fully maintained our reputation and the black and orange neckties gave it a charm all its own.

May our past achievements and our present attainments be crowned by a future as bright in reality as it is in anticipation. Long live '90! Long live the U. W.!

History of '89.

Class Histories are a time-honored feature of college annuals, where merit consists chiefly in the display of humor upon subjects almost or quite devoid of humor.

Let us roll back the curtain and look into the past. 'Tis midnight, the drifting clouds sweep across a stormy sky; the rain falls steadily, dimly; the wind sighs and soughs among the swaying branches. Up, stealing over the campus, slowly, cautiously, creeps a chosen band. Manfully are axe and lever plied, and that so late a thing of pride that stood in all its angular grace and wooden beauty, the Junior fence has become a prey of tossing waves.

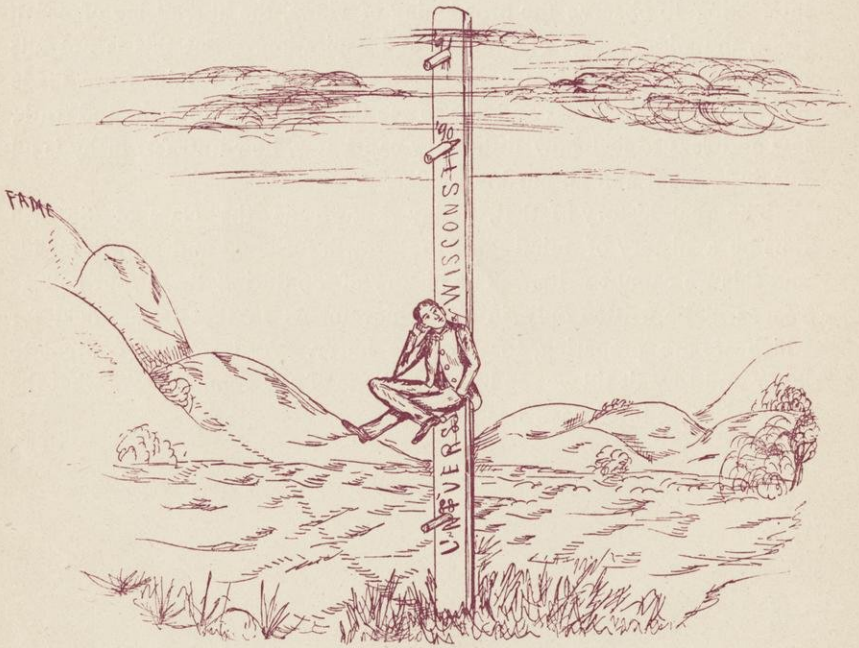

The scene shifts. The gray dawn sees shadowy forms, hears low mutterings, catches the echoes of a hammer's blow. The risen sun looks down upon fluttering flag and streaming banner. Here, spread to the bright air of heaven, amid fallen leaves and autumn's glorious coloring, stands the tribute of the fair—the fence of the girls of '89.

Let the curtain drop. The history of '89 is not a record of heroic deeds but of plain, matter-of-fact doings, and we contemplate with superior and cynical indifference the follies of the Freshman and Sophomore.

The history of college classes has been often written yet never written; for it is a record of individual growth and of individual development. The excellence of college life lies in this, that it takes the person and makes the man. The history of a college class to be told truly, therefore, would be a story of individual progress. It would be interesting to observe the broadening of views, the liberalizing of sentiment, the wider range of thought and aspiration. But this is not all; prejudice grows to bigotry and intolerance, narrow minds are made narrower, men grow less and less to see the infinity of thought and truth, less and less to feel how little they can know, how untrustworthy is all our judgement and all our knowledge.

The real history of that, to-day known as the class of '89, will thus be a history of mind growth—growth for good and growth for ill; and this we cannot write. The history of '89 during these four college years will be written only in the achievements in that larger field for which we are preparing, to which we hurry. And we are content to labor and to wait till we see by the fruitage of the coming years what the work of these brief days has been.

"Happy are the people who have no annals." This quotation from Mr. T. Carlyle was given in last year's Annual. We wish distinctly to re-affirm that this year. The events of the past year warrant our saying not only this, but also, "Great are the people who have no annals." We expect to graduate next spring.

The principle of work I despise,
Who works with his hands is a fool;

Are a pretty good sort of a tool.

History.

There is but little of a startling nature to record in the history of the Law Department of the University during the year that has passed since the publication of the last Annual.

In age the students of this department range from blooming eighteen to sedate forty-five, in height from five feet two to six feet six, and in weight from 100 pounds to 280 pounds. But comparisons are odious if carried too far, hence no statement of comparative mental power will be here ventured.

At the beginning of the present college year the senior class left the "elegant and commodious apartments" (see catalogue) where they had wrestled with Common Law Pleading, Domestic Relations, Juniors, Vol. 1 of Washburn on Real Property and such other light reading as seemed best suited to their budding powers.

In their new lecture room they may be seen and heard daily from 10 to 11 A. M. dilating in a would-be easy and exhaustive manner upon

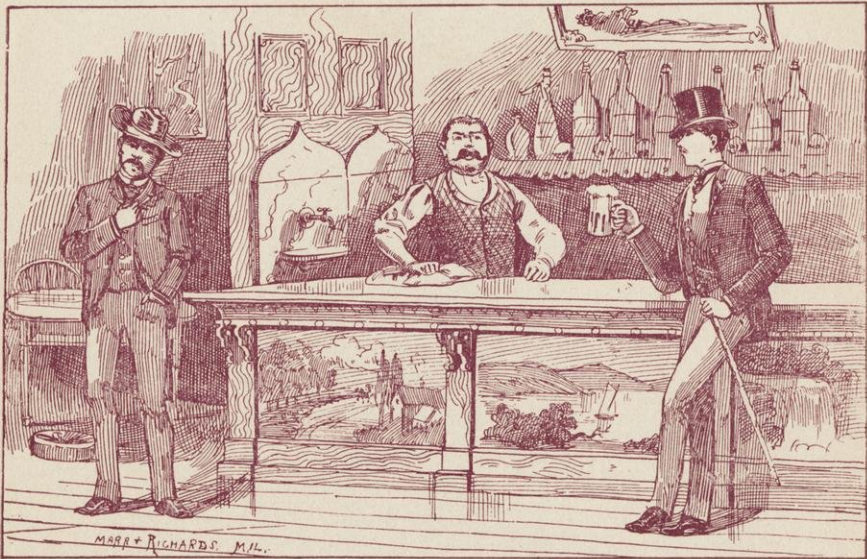

D. REEA, PHILA.

Contingent Remainders, Evidence, Notes and Bills (not their own property, by the way), Municipal Corporations and Wills.

In addition to this they are making a special study of certain specimens of composition which are declared by high authority to be valuable "not only as clear and concise statements of law, but also as models of fine and classic English." A few of the more timid are undertaking even more work. They are secretly making excavations in the class-worn walls with intent to hide therein during a practical demonstration of the efficiency of "the power of physical force," which is solemnly promised in case a dreaded emergency should arise. It was found necessary for the vindication of offended dignity to make our student from the wild west defendant in a class moot court trial. It is rumored that nearly every student has registered a vow to fall upon his sword rather than personally undergo such an ordeal as that kind of a trial seems to be. As a rule harmony and good feeling have reigned supreme among the students during the year.

It is to be hoped that their starving time may be shortened and society at large benefited, by these years spent in an earnest effort to be worthy of success.

CLASS SONG.

Air.—"How Can I Leave Thee."

Now in the Western sky
 Low sinks the summer's sun;
 Shadows of evening fall;
 The day is done.
 Amid the fragrant flowers,
 Dew of the evening lies;
 One last fond glance we take
 Ere daylight dies.

So of our student life,
 Fade the last glimmering rays.
 Now comes the end apace
 Of college days.
 Sadly farewell we sing
 To Alma Mater's joys.
 And all the happy scenes,
 No pain alloys.

Of in our future life,
 Mem'ry will hither fly.
 These sacred college walls
 Rising on high,
 Shall still be blazoned o'er
 With visions of the past,
 The happy days of yore,
 Our hearts hold fast.

NEW SCIENCE HALL.

Science Hall.

When the class of '87 entered the University this building had just been begun and now it is almost ready for occupancy as we are about to issue our BADGER.

The new Science Hall occupies practically the site of the old Science Hall. It covers an area with a frontage of 116 feet and a depth of 122 feet. The building is three stories high, with the main part carried up into a tower. The basement is of granite from Berlin, Wis., the superstructure is of red pressed brick and is covered with a steep pitched roof of slate.

While there has been no attempt at architectural display, the general effect of the building is pleasing, whether seen from the street, the lake or from any of the hills of the city. The stone steps at the main entrance add materially to the appearance of the building, and while they are not lacking in beauty, their most striking effect is strength and durability.

The floors are of hard wood except those of the corridors, which are inlaid tile. The wood work is of Georgia pine, oiled and in its natural color.

The interior is finished throughout in hollow tile and pressed brick. The low wainscoating of red tile is surmounted by cream colored tile which is also used for the ceiling. All girders and columns are covered with the same material. In the walls surrounding the main stairway red and cream colored pressed brick take the place of tile.

The use of hollow tile to so great an extent is peculiar to this building, although it is employed in buildings in the East, no where is it used so extensively as here. It has many advantages, besides making a handsome wall, it is absolutely fire proof and possesses great durability. It is impossible for a fire to spread in this building, the only wood used in the entire building is that used in finishing the rooms and if that should catch fire, the fire-proof walls and the tiled corridors would confine the fire to the room in which it started. To make a strong, durable building was the constant aim in its erection and the result is a structure that seems absolutely indestructible.

The interior arrangement is most convenient. The departments of Physics and Engineering will each occupy one half of the first floor and of the basement; Geology is on the second floor, and Botany and Zoology on the third. As there are about thirteen rooms on each floor, each department has ample room at its disposal, giving to each lecture rooms, general laboratories, special laboratories for advanced work, and extensive cabinets and museums. There is not a great superfluity of room, however, although there is room for growth, all the space will be occupied.

The building will be suitably equipped. Each department has received an allowance to purchase all the necessary apparatus and material. Forty thousand dollars were appropriated for the purpose and the greater part of the forty-one thousand dollars received as insurance on the old building will also be used, so that at least seventy-five thousand dollars will be expended for apparatus and supplies.

In all its appointments it is first-class. Gas and water are conducted through the entire building. It is heated by steam which is generated in the boiler house.

The entire steam heating of the Science Hall is controlled by thermostats situated in the various rooms. These thermostats are set at about 70 degrees and are connected by wires with electro-pneumatic valves which control compressed air so that when the temperature of a room rises to the desired point of 70 degrees, an electric circuit is formed which turns the electro-pneumatic valve. This allows the compressed air, which passes through all parts of the building through pipes hidden beneath the floors and walls, to enter diaphragm chambers connected with the stems of steam valves. The expansion of these chambers by the means of compressed air admitted to them, pushes the valve shut, and, so long as the temperature of the room is at 70 degrees no steam can enter the pipes leading to that room, as it is held from doing so by the pressure of the air acting in an opposite direction to the pressure of steam. When the temperature of the room falls about one degree an opposing electric circuit is formed which turns the electro-pneumatic valve in the opposite direction and allows the compressed air holding the steam valves closed to escape into the open air. The pressure of steam, aided by a spring, now opens the steam valves and the room again obtains heat, but when the temperature again rises to 70 degrees the steam is again excluded as before. Thus the apparatus automatically keeps the desired temperature without the attention of professors, students or janitors. The apparatus is quite simple and thoroughly scientific in its proportions and relations of one part to another. The air pressure which is used at about a pressure of 10 pounds per square inch, is furnished by automatic hydraulic air compressors which are connected with the water system in the basement of the building. The battery used is the ordinary Leclanché open circuit battery, five cells of which are sufficient to control the steam heating of an entire building. The service is put in by the Johnson Electric Service Company, of Milwaukee, who are introducing it throughout the United States to a large extent.

That such a building involved a large expenditure of money is natural. About $275,000 have been expended in the building itself and with the $10,000 for furniture, and $75,000 for apparatus, Science Hall represents an expenditure of over $360,000. But with the increased advantages it gives our University, we must agree that it is money well spent, and especially when we take into consideration that we have a building that is proof against such a calamity as destroyed our old Science Hall.

Joint Debates

BETWEEN

↔ The Literary Societies ↔

For the Championship of the University.

The debating societies connected with the University of Wisconsin rank second to none in the land. The skill gained by constant practice, the variety of useful knowledge on all of the leading questions of the day, acquired in the course of preparations for debate, and a perfect familiarity with parliamentary law, have been the means by which many of the Alumni of the University have risen to distinction in public life.

Since 1867 the various societies have had annual contests in debate. No college exercise is hailed with greater enthusiasm by the students than is the joint debate. The outbursts of oratory on these occasions serve as a powerful stimulus to greater exertion in society work. To be elected a "joint debater" is the greatest honor a society can confer upon one of its members, indeed, it is an honor more highly prized by many students than any other in the University.

The following is a list of the questions debated and of the debaters of the different societies:

Junior Exhibition.

For many years it has been the custom to have an annual oratorical contest, the contestants being selected from the following Literary Societies: Castalia, Laurea, Hesperia, Adelpia and Athena; each society has one representative chosen from the members of the junior class in the society. In 1882 Senator G. W. Burrows, of Madison, offered, as a prize, a costly steel engraving, to be given to the society whose representative should first have won it twice. In 1882 and 1883 Hesperia did not compete. The victors have been the following: In 1882, Emma J. Sarles, Castalia; in 1883, Fred. J. Turner, Adelpia; in 1884, A. C. Hullinger, Hesperia; in 1885, Florence T. Griswold, Laurea; in 1886, Flora L. Lawson, Castalia. Thus Castalia received the Burrows' prize.

In 1887 Mr. J. E. Mosely offered as a prize a complete set of George Elliot's Works. The prize was awarded to Louise M. McMynn, of Laurea.

The orators for this year are: J. H. Powers, Hesperia; Florence W. Waldo, Laurea; W. R. Smith, Adelpia; Nettie Smith, Castalia; A. E. Buckmaster, Athena.

HISTORY.

A historian is, at very best, that kind of worm known as a borer. He eats his way into the tree and through the path he makes you try to examine the pith—the heart. But it is merely a little spot of the heart that you see—moreover, the withered, worn-out heart, and not what the heart once was—the little, thriving sprig in which the tree first started. If you would judge of what the tree has been, you can do so best by seeing what it now is, or by examining other small specimens of like kind.

By boring back into Athena's past we find that we cross thirty-seven concentric rings; thirty-seven times has she added a fresh layer to the stalwart timber of her trunk; thirty-seven times has she shaken fruit from her branches, and still she lives full of fruitful vigor. The little tree was planted by Charles T. Wakely, Levi Booth, G. W. Stone, D. K. Tenney, Francis A. Ogden and Geo. Woodward, Jr. The seed was furnished by the lamented vice-president and father of the University, J. W. Sterling. North dormitory for ten years served as a flower-pot for the sapling, but in 1860 it was transplanted to its present place in main building.

What would we not give to be able to see it in one of those old times—its leaves rustling in the wind, its branches shaking with emphatic motion! No doubt the critic then—as now—found that “the gentleman confined himself too closely to his notes;” or that “he did not take a firm position on the floor,” or—if it was the speaker’s first debate—that “with practice he promises to become one of our best debaters.” No doubt the censor felt the awful weight of responsibility resting upon him as he locked the door, or put a chair against it, when, in those by-gone nights, the mysterious announcement was made, “The society will now go into secret session,” and doubtless then, as to-night, the face of the newly-initiated member was suffused with modest blushes at the startling round of applause elicited by the announcement, “I declare the gentleman a member of the Athenæan Society”—applause more vigorous than he will ever again receive in Athena’s halls. And so with every week the work went on.

Early in its existence the society started a library, which was successfully maintained until some time after the University library was started. The books were then placed in the latter. Sometimes it enjoyed lectures; but for quite a period these had been omitted, until the winter of 1886-7, when Athena joined with its sister societies in their very attractive lecture course.

New societies were soon organized and then came rivalry—joint-debates, junior exhibitions of oratory, Sophomore semi-publics and the like. In Hesperia, Athena found a rival, to contend with whom required effort, yet pleasant effort. Many a time their champions have met in joint-debate, and though always very evenly matched, the chanticleer that roosts in Athena’s branches has loudly crowed over five more victories than the rival. Orators, Athena has, and fine ones; but debating has always been her chief work.

Thus with her winged words of wisdom has Athena’s tree taken Zeus’ prerogative inasmuch as it is a talking-oak. Thus may it flourish and bear oratorical fruit, growing in strength from week to week, from year to year, until the University of Wisconsin shall be known throughout the world, of which University Athena feels herself to be no insignificant part.

HISTORY.

The history of Hesperia has been so fully presented in former Annuals that it is not necessary to repeat much of her early history in the present sketch. Hesperia was founded in 1853; she has admitted to membership more than eight hundred persons. She has lost seven joint debates and won five.

The past year has been a most successful one with Hesperia. Since the publication of the Annual last year she has been under the administration of Messrs. Buckley, Richmond, McConnell, Murphy, Rice and Wheeler. Early this year it was wisely voted to restrict the membership of the society to sixty. That limit was reached about the middle of the fall term. Hesperia's new members are unusually able and they have greatly strengthened the society. The customary banquet in honor of the departing Seniors was held last June. A large number of alumni were present and the occasion was most enjoyable.

A healthier tone never pervaded a society than now pervades

Hesperia. It is the endeavor of all to do good work, zealously to perform every duty. Hesperia is the most hopeful of societies; conscious of her strength, absolute and relative, she looks confidently to the future, knowing that "there are remedies for all things but death." So we are marching on with our motto of Magna Parens Virum full high advanced, trusting that Hesperia will prove to be in the future what she has been in the past—the parens magnorum virum.

HISTORY.

One of the proofs of the success of co-education in our University is the earnestness and efficiency of the work of the young ladies' literary societies.

Of these societies the older is Castalia, founded in 1864 and incorporated in 1877.

For nine years—until the advent of her friendly rival, Laurea—Castalia remained the only ladies' literary society in the University. Consequently her membership was large; forty-one at first, and nearly double that number before the end of the first year. Her present membership is forty-six.

Until about 1870, the society's sessions were held in the chapel of the old South Hall, since which time they have been held every alternate Friday evening in the chapel at Ladies' Hall.

The exercises consist of debates, music, orations, essays, declamations, reviews, papers, etc. An advance made this year has been the division of the members into two sections which alternate in furnishing the programme.

Of the quality of the work done that shown in open sessions, joint anniversaries and Junior Exhibitions furnishes a fair criterion. Castalia Juniors have twice won the Burrows' prize and her Seniors have twice received the Lewis' prize. The present year the annual open sessions will be replaced by a joint session with Laurea.

In the twenty-three years since its formation the society has afforded literary training to some five hundred young ladies. Judging from her worthy record in the past, and her prosperous condition at present, we may safely predict for Castalia even greater success in the future.

For more than fourteen years the Laurean Literary Society has afforded opportunity to the young women of the University of Wisconsin for extended and practical literary work. When the society was organized in October, 1873, it had a membership of twenty-four. At present thirty-two names comprise its roll of members.

Every alternate Friday evening the meetings are held in the chapel of Ladies Hall, which offers a pleasant and attractive place of meeting.

Laurea has participated in six Junior Exhibitions. Twice have her representatives been victorious. Miss Florence T. Griswold carried off the honors for Laurea in the exhibition of 1885, and Miss Louise McMynn in that of 1887.

In 1879 the Lewis Prize was awarded to a Laurean, Miss Belle Case (Mrs. R. M. La Follette), and in 1883 to Miss Alice Jane Sanborn.

Laurea is at present doing earnest, faithful work and gives promise of an extremely successful future.

HISTORY.

The Adelpian Society was formed by the union of the Linonian and Calliopean Societies, April 29, 1881. These two societies had become so reduced in numbers that they deemed a union advisable.

Immediately after the organization of Adelpia a room was secured in the Capitol and here for two years the society held its meetings. In the spring of 1883 a change was thought desirable and the society moved to its present quarters in University Hall.

The history of Adelpia is hardly more than the records of the routine of literary society work. It has engaged in one joint debate and was defeated, but then great geniuses are always misunderstood. The society is small and the opportunity for practice in debate is therefore better than in larger societies. Choosing only a few it is able to choose the best. The past has shown the wisdom of its policy, and, as history repeats itself, the future will do likewise.

HISTORY.

There was a great influx of new students in the fall of '86. The existing literary societies soon received all the new members they could profitably take, and yet there were many students without the advantages of debate and parliamentary practice.

To supply their want a number of students met on Sept. 17 and formed the Philomathian Literary Society, with a charter membership of fourteen. Within a year new names have been added to the roll, and now the society numbers twenty-nine active, enthusiastic members.

Though disturbed for a time by internal dissensions, Philomathia has now an assured position. She is making rapid progress and is fast diminishing the distance between herself and the older societies.

HISTORY.

The "Bildungsverein" was organized in 1881. Its object is to afford students an opportunity of making practical use of their German, acquired in the class-room, through practice in debates, essays, declamations and conversation. The benefits to be derived from such practice, supplementary to class-room work, are so obvious as to hardly need mentioning. A large portion of the population of our country, especially of the Northwest, are natives of Germany, and to a person entering a professional or business life it is highly important to be able to communicate with this element.

But, aside from the practical character, there is another feature of our work. A few meetings of each term are set apart for the presentation of papers upon the life and times of the great German poets and the character of their chief works. Thus the student's class-room acquaintance with Goethe, Schiller, Lessing and others is extended and deepened, and the great wealth of German literature more fully opened to him. Particularly valuable in this connection are the lectures of Professor Rosenstengel upon literary, educational and historical topics.

With the beginning of next term the society hopes to be able to hold its meetings in more commodious quarters, and it is our hope that its meetings in the future may be characterized by the same zeal, the same earnestness of purpose as in the past.

HISTORY.

In October, 1883, the Scandinavian students at the University, recognizing the importance of being able to speak their mother-tongue and of becoming better acquainted with Scandinavian literature and history, organized a literary society, which was called Nora Samlag.

Ever since the organization of the society it has been in a prosperous condition. Although its membership has never been very large, there has always been an active, earnest spirit of work among its members.

The society meets every other Saturday afternoon during the fall and winter terms.

The exercises of the society consist of debates, essays, declamations and select readings. Considerable time and attention is also given to the study of the lives and works of the most prominent Scandinavian authors. The prosperity of the society is due in a large measure to Professor Olson, who has untiringly aided and directed the work. This year he is giving a series of lectures before the society on Scandinavian literature. The utility of the society becomes evident when we remember that in our own and neighboring states a large proportion of the population speaks some one of the Scandinavian languages.

Let no one suppose, however, because the members of Nora Samlag are solicitous for the welfare of the society that they consider its work of equal importance with that of the literary societies where English is spoken. The society is not maintained to foster any spirit of clannishness, but on the principle that it is better to speak two languages than to speak one. Furthermore, Norse is so closely allied with English, and the political history and institutions of the Scandinavian peoples are of such interest and importance to students of English history and institutions, that whatever knowledge of Norse may be acquired is of direct and positive value from an English or American point of view.

This alone ought certainly to justify the existence of a Scandinavian society at the University.

Hitherto only students of Scandinavian parentage have taken part in the exercises. There are now, however, others in the University that are learning to speak Norse who are desirous of becoming active members. Such will receive a cordial welcome.

HISTORY.

At a special meeting of the law students held October 16th, 1883, the constitution and by-laws of the E. G. Ryan Society were drafted and adopted, and the organization of the first permanent literary society of the law department of the University was duly perfected. During the four years that have since elapsed the society has been an element of interest and of strength among the students whom it was designed to benefit. Discussions of the fundamental questions of society and of the age form the principal part of the literary work of the members, while papers on the history of great legal enactments, and sketches of the lives of eminent lawyers add interest and variety to nearly every programme. The officers of the society are a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer and Sergeant-at-Arms.

The regular sessions of the society are held on Friday evening of each week during the college year. Only students of the law department are eligible as active members. There are at present about fifty members in good standing, and their regular attendance and manifest interest in the work speak well for their own and the society's future usefulness. A picture of the Late Chief Justice Ryan, from whom the society takes its name, now hangs upon the wall of the room where the regular society meetings are held. The society takes pleasure in here acknowledging its debt of thanks to Attorney-General Estabrook, the donor of the gift.

HISTORY.

The Natural History Club was established in 1882, for the purpose of encouraging original and independent research in the natural sciences.

At its regular meetings, which are held on every other Saturday during the school year, papers on Zoology, Botany, Histology, Anatomy, Geology and Chemistry are presented by the members. Lectures by the professors of these departments are also given from time to time. During the present year President Chamberlin, Professors Irving and Van Hise will deliver a course of lectures to the Club, on the "Geology of Wisconsin."

A preliminary list of the phaenogams and the vascular cryptogams, found in the vicinity of Madison, was made by the Club last year, and a complete list will be made as soon as possible.

The Club subscribes for "the Journal of the Royal Society of Microscopy," which may be found on file at the University Library.

HISTORY.

The University Christian Association began its existence in 1871—a time when the University had a reputation throughout the state as a hot-bed of heresy and infidelity. It has never been more than a “little leaven;” yet its influence has extended through the College as a wholesome religious force. Ex-President Bascom was intimately related to it, and, by his Sunday lectures, which he gave for thirteen years, was a source of great helpfulness and power. In connection with the organization, Professor Birge has for a long time conducted a Bible Class. Two years ago the association started a Sunday school in East Madison. This has been found helpful, not only to the members of the association, but also, it is hoped, to the children attending. The U. C. A., as it is usually called, admits both young men and young women to active membership; it has no associate members.

The conditions of membership are: a belief in the power of Christ's life and example to better the world and to save men, and a desire to be more like Him. In helping its members to become more Christ-like lies the association's first work, though it strives to extend its influence to all the students. At its meetings are freely discussed active measures for bettering men rather than theological dogma. No theological test beyond a belief in Christ is required for membership. Its aim is to reach up to Christ and down to men, and thus form a spiritual ladder to higher and better things.

HISTORY.

The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations are so closely allied in their work that their history has many things in common. While the work of the Y. W. C. A. is by and for young women of the University and the work of the Y. M. C. A. is by and for the young men, yet the work, as a whole, is by and for the students and has been prospered in a remarkable degree.

The Y. M. C. A. was organized in June, 1881, and gradually grew in numbers and efficiency. In the fall of '84 a union was made with the University Christian Association, but this was of short duration and the Young Men's Christian Association was reorganized in January, 1885. At the same time the Young Women's Christian Association was organized. Since this time their history has been one of very flattering success. Now they maintain, besides the regular meetings, a Sunday School in the Fifth Ward, which has an average attendance of 35; also eight Bible Training Classes whose object is to so familiarize each member with the Bible that he may use it as the "Sword of the Spirit." Last winter there was held by the association, in connection with the city association, a series of Local Conferences, that were very successful in creating more interest in Christian work in the neighboring towns, besides laying the way for the organizing of Young Men's Christian Associations in Stoughton and Reedsburg. The same work is being carried on this winter.

The Associations are in full connection with the State and International Committees, from whom they derive great good, and the work here, as all over the world, is in full accord with Evangelical Christianity. Therefore they require that active members be members of some Evangelical Church. But anyone not a member, who is willing to join hands with them in Christian work, may do so as an Associate Member.

HISTORY.

The University Channing Club was organized on Sunday evening, Oct. 26, 1885. Its meetings are held fortnightly, in the parlors of the Unitarian Church. The objects of the Club are:

1. Mutual religious helpfulness.
2. Distribution of religious literature.
3. Cultivation of the social nature.

The following systematic courses of study have been pursued during the past two years:

1. The Writings of Eminent Unitarians.
2. Unitarianism in Europe.
3. Origin and Growth of Unitarianism.
4. Unitarians in the Humanities.
5. Social Science. This, in its various phases, forms the subject of study for the entire current school year.

One or more papers are prepared for presentation at each meeting, and the work of the Club is occasionally supplemented by lectures.

For the readier and more effective distribution of Unitarian literature, the Club maintains correspondence with former members of the University. These, dispersed over the entire Northwest, afford the best means of information as to where missionary work may be most profitably performed. The Club has welcomed to its meetings all those connected with the University that are interested in its work, and the result has been a large active membership.

The Ægis.

The Ægis Association was formed by the adoption of its constitution June 17, 1886. The Ægis—the only college paper in the University—is owned and controlled exclusively by the students, and it rests on a sound financial basis. It is issued weekly during the college year. Its present management is as follows:

Our Championship for '87.

The career of the U. W. base ball team during the season of '87 was, undoubtedly, the most interesting (to U. W. students at least) of any season ever known in the history of the college league.

At the opening of the ball season we had an excellent team, eager for the contest, and we felt confident, perhaps a trifle too confident, of victory. Before our nine was fairly organized it faced the Milwaukee Team (professional) and compelled them to play desperately in order to escape defeat, which fact gave us confidence from the beginning.

The first game of the series, for the championship of the Northwestern League, was with the Belois, who readily convinced us, with a great amount of unnecessary exertion on their part, that they were no match for us.

The next game was played with the Racines, on our own diamond. The day was bright and warm; the ball grounds were surrounded by a dense throng of eager spectators and hundreds of carriages, filled with ardent admirers of the home team; from the amphitheater beamed the happy faces of the fair co-eds; expectation ran higher than our handsome pennant, which was fluttering triumphantly from the topmost end of fifty feet of perpendicular gas pipe—that is, everybody expected to see the home team dish up nine consecutive courses of goose-eggs to the visitors, at a Chinese death-rate. But alas, how uncertain are all earthly things! The home team became rattled, fell to wrangling among themselves, and suffered an ignominious defeat. It taught the nine a lesson however, and they settled down to careful, steady practice, as they began to realize that they had some powerful adversaries to cope with.

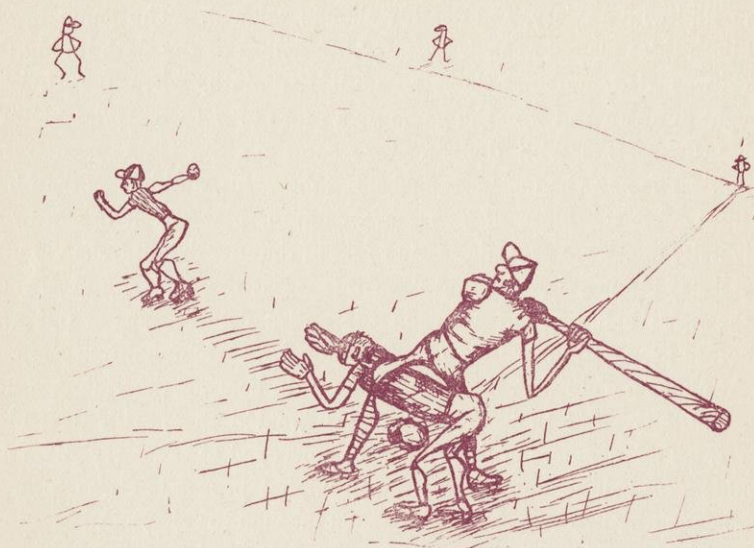

The hardest part of the struggle was yet to come, for during a four days' trip to Evanston, Lake Forest and Racine, our team must play and win three games in succession to make good our chances for the championship. This they determined to do, and they succeeded, though all the games were closely contested. The last of the three, the Racine game, was perhaps the most intensely exciting ever played in the league. Both nines regarded it as the decisive game. Our adversaries had for weeks been undergoing a rigid coaching from a professional trainer.

They were confident, we determined. When all was ready and "play ball" rang out from the stentorian throat of the umpire every spectator was pallid with anxiety, and deathly silence reigned. The game began and both sides played at their best. At the close of the sixth inning the score was tied, and remained so until the ninth, when the U. W.'s brought in a run and won the game by a score of 7 to 6. The victors, beside themselves with delight, were soon on the train homeward-bound. The news had been flashed along the wires, and in less than half an hour after the close of the game, cannon, planted on the brow of University hill, were proclaiming in tones of thunder the glorious victory.

All day long excitement had been intense at the U. W., and as soon as the news had reached Madison the entire college turned out and elaborate preparations were hurriedly made for a triumphal reception.

At about 9 o'clock in the evening the train bearing the victors rolled into the city, and thousands of voices greeted them with deafening cheers. The members of the nine were conveyed to the carry-all on the shoulders of their school-fellows; the triumphal procession was formed, and, headed by two brass bands, marched through the city. All Madison joined the procession; trumpets, horns, conchshells, tinpans, and all other musical machinery available, were brought into use. The business houses and private dwelling throughout the city were brilliantly illuminated; sky rockets shot through the heavens in every direction, the whole combining to make an ovation of which a Roman conqueror might have been proud. As the procession approached the College grounds, amid the boom of cannon, it halted in front of Ladies' Hall, where the ladies greeted the victors with the College yell. The nine was then banqueted by the ladies at the Hall, and thus ended the grandest ovation ever witnessed in Wisconsin's capital city.

Two more easy victories, won on our own grounds, a few weeks later, closed the season for the U. W.'s., and we still remain the college baseball champions of the northwest.

The following are the records of the League for the season of 1887:

HISTORY.

"The University of Wisconsin Tennis Association" was organized April 27, 1886. It was the outgrowth of a plan formed by several students, who desired to see the game enrolled among the regular college sports.

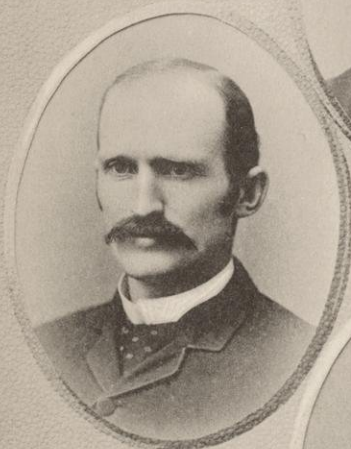

Immediately upon the organization of the Association the necessary steps were taken for the laying out and equipping two courts on the lower campus. By the fifteenth of May the courts were in active use. From a charter membership of fourteen it has increased to twenty-three. Its present grounds will soon be enlarged by laying out a third court.

On April 23, 1887, a Northwestern Inter-Collegiate Tennis League was organized with the University of Wisconsin and Beloit College as a nucleus under the auspices of this league, three inter-collegiate tournaments have already taken place, as a result of which the University holds the championship for 1887, in doubles, and Beloit the championship in singles.

Editor's Soliloquy.

If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly; if this publication
Could trammel up its consequences, and bring
In the end good will. But that this book
Might be the be-all and the end-all here;
But here in wisdom's halls, this school of arts,
We'd skip the wrath to come; but with these students
We still have business here. That we but write
Stale jokes and chestnuts, which being read
Return to plague the writers. This grave duty
Commends the ingredients of this hard-wrought mixture
To our own lips. We're here in double trust;
First, as we are students, and their classmates,
Strong both to urge us on; then, as we're chosen
To do this business, we must 'gainst others wield the pen.
Not bear the jokes ourselves. Besides, these students
Have been so marked in their peculiar traits; the profs.
So noticed in their eccentricities, that their faults
Will plead like little demons trumpet-tongued
For recognition 'mong their many virtues.
And mischief, like a restless, well-fed cur,
Coursing the streets, and fondled by every hand,
Shall howl these puns and jests in every ear
That mirth shall check their wrath. We have no spur
To prick the sides of our intent, but only
Stern duty; which begins not with ourselves
But with these others.

Editor's Experience.

An Annual editor was peacefully studying his lesson in the South Chapel when he heard "lafter" in the hallway and Dobbin entered, handed him a folded paper, and, remarking between thick slabs of "lafter," "for the Annual," rushed out of the door with a mighty cachinnation.

The editor opened the paper and read—

Prof. H.—"Mr. M., if the main spring of a steam engine gets caught on the whiffletree, and the steam gauge registers 90° in the shade, what do you do?"

Mr. M.—"What?"

A loud explosion of "lafter" shook the room and a hunk of gum and a vest button hit the editor in the face. "Pretty good isn't it?" said Dobbin who had been behind the door waiting to see the success of his joke. "Yes." "Going to put it in?" "Yes, I'll put it in—the waste-paper basket," mentally reserved the editor. He resumed studying but more "lafter" rumbled up the hall and Butter came in. "Is the Annual full?" "No," said the editor, "are you?" "I have something for it, did Budweiser tell you about it?" "No." "You see it was in the literature class, professor said to Brown, 'What kind of a looking fellow was Chaucer?' and Brown said, 'I have forgotten.' All-fired good joke. You orter heard the class laff."

Butter melted away, but yet again the distant ripple of "lafter" surged up to the door and Bunker entered. "Is there room for any more stuff in the Annual?" "No. There is stuff enough in already and mighty rubbishy stuff too. Everybody in the institution seems to think himself called upon to propose all sorts of stuff to put in the Annual." "You needn't get huffy. This is a good joke. Down to our Club the other day one of the fellows was eating salt pork and I said, why is Jenkins like Keely? Because he is fond of Bacon." Before Bunker had left Dicer appeared. "I have something for the Annual, why is Green like grass—" "Hold," cried the editor, "Prof. Bangs is a perambulating asylum for old and decrepit jokes but you are a charitable institution for poor ones. Like cures like; here, read this;" and he handed him the engineering joke. The effect was instantaneous. He swooned away. The editor stretched him out on the floor and hearing more "lafter" in the distance, escaped through the window.

The Junior Plugs.

Three Juniors ordered junior plugs,
 With full and firm intent to wear them;
 The other Juniors turned and fled,
 Because these monstrous hats did scare them.

Now Hanks determined he would wear,
 This badge of Junior glory, never;
 And so, afraid to put it on,
 He cast his plug aside forever.

The other two, with courage strong,
 A month did wear their hats undaunted;
 Though both with jests were oft assailed,
 And oft with Senior jokes were taunted.

Soon Warner left the college halls,
 And took son chapeau ridicule;
 While Langdon now oft sighs and says,
 "Il faut que je porte mon chapeau seul."

Charge of the Police Brigade.

I.

Half a mile, half a mile,
 Half a mile onward,
 All in a hazing scrape
 Were the two hundred.
 "Forward, Police Brigade!"
 "Charge for the boys!" he said,
 "Somewhere on Lake or State
 Are the two hundred."

II.

"Forward, Police Brigade."
 Was there a man dismayed?
 Not though policemen knew
 Students had blundered.
 Theirs not to make requests;
 Theirs to obey behests;
 Theirs but to make arrests.
 Right for the crowd they went,
 Toward the two hundred.

III.

Students to right of them,
 Students in front of them
 Clamored and thundered.
 Stormed at with hoot and yell,
 Boldly they ran and well,
 After the boys, pell-mell;
 After two hundred.

IV.

Flashed their revolvers bare,
 Flashed as they turned in air,
 Threat'ning the students there.
 Quelling a racket, while
 All the town wondered.
 Not one policeman spoke,
 While for the boys they broke.
 Sophomore and Freshman
 Dodged from the "billy" stroke,
 Scattered and sundered.
 Stormed at with hoot and yell,
 While two poor Freshmen fell,
 Two who behaved so well ;
 Came from their rooms so late,
 Just why, no one could tell.
 Two of that noisy crowd,
 Two of two hundred.

V.

Back toward the station flew,
 Taking their prisoners two;
 The boys knew not what to do;
 Swore they would get them out,
 Swore they would "see them through,"
 Back the policemen went,
 Followed, two hundred.

VI.

Students to right of them,
 Students to left of them,
 Students behind them,
 Clamored and thundered.
 Stormed at with hoot and yell,
 Boldly they ran and well ;
 They who had caught their prey,
 Down to the station cell ;
 Followed, two hundred.

VII.

Plunged in tobacco smoke,
 In at the door they broke ;
 Sophomore and Freshman
 Stopped as the chieftain spoke,
 Listened and wondered.
 " Let more arrests be made."
 " Close all the doors," he said.
 Twelve of the students stayed,
 Twelve of two hundred.

VIII.

Soon the grave lawyers neared,
 Then the poor students feared ;
 Sophomore and Freshman
 Shook as the judge appeared,
 Trembled and wondered.
 Theirs not to make request,
 Theirs to obey behest ;
 Unjust was their arrest ;
 Up to the bars they stepped,
 Twelve of two hundred.

IX.

Lawyers to right of them,
 Lawyers to left of them,
 Braley* in front of them
 Bawled at and thundered ;
 Stormed at with legal yell,
 Boldly they stood and well,
 Stood there their fines to pay,—
 How much, no one could tell.
 All that were caught of them,
 Caught of two hundred.

X.

Oh, the Police Brigade ! !
 When can their glory (? ?) fade ! !
 Oh, the wild charge† they made ! !
 All the boys wondered.
 Scorn the Police Brigade!
 Honor the boys that paid ;
 Honor the students' raid!
 Noble two hundred.

The Spectral Horse-Car.

One cold December night of the year 1895 five students were sitting together spinning yarns about one thing and another. Four had told a story apiece and now it was the turn of the fifth, a long, melancholy youth. Knocking the ashes from his pipe, he began, "I suppose that some of you may have heard the story of the Spectral Horse-Car. It was commonly told when I was a Freshman but I haven't heard it for the last two years. In the year 1887 there were in the University two students of erratic actions. Their names, which are of slight importance to the story, were Gifford and Swain. They were afflicted with a strange malady. They went to every party or reception, haunted the toboggan slide, and ice-boated—provided girls were there. Every Saturday they called on girls at Ladies' Hall, they talked to girls in the rotunda of Main Hall between classes, went to church with them. If you were talking with one of them in front of Main Hall, upon a subject, however important, and a young lady passed his head would turn, he would fidget and without a word of warning he would start off with an agonized smile on his features and walk down with her. The doctors were all puzzled at this strange malady. It had no precedent in the annals of medicine. Every one took an interest in the strange case, every one but Gifford and Swain themselves, for like many a sick person they knew nothing of their distemper. At last the professor of physics solved the problem as follows. Anything charged with positive electricity is attracted towards anything negatively electrified. When reciprocally charged they separate. The charge dissipates in a little while and they again exert an attraction upon each other. Thus it was with these boys. The girls exerted a negative, or to speak more correctly, though less scientifically, a positive attraction upon them. In the company of the young ladies this magnetic force gradually weakened and they were once more able to go whither they pleased. When this hypothesis had been put forth many felt pity for their sad condition but a few played many practical jokes upon them. Indeed the poor fellows were harassed continually. One night they were at the observatory, star-gazing with a couple of young ladies. It was one of the nights upon which the observatory was open to the public, and it so happened that some of their chief persecutors were there also. When the hour for closing came, the mischief-makers seized them, in spite of the screams of the girls, and ran down the hill to the terminus of the horse-car line. A horse-car stood there just ready to start. They captured it, took the driver off by force, tied Gifford and Swain to the seats, locked the doors and whipped up the mules. It was ten o'clock and this was the last car for the night. The conspirators thought that the mules would run straight on to the horse-car barn and there the captives would be liberated. The car sped on until it came to the corner by Ladies' Hall, it passed the front of the building and stopped. Gifford and Swain had not been with any girls that day excepting the short time at the observatory. The magnetic force of the forty girls in the halls exerted a tremendous attraction upon them. They were tied to the car and could not get out. The side of the car was toward the hall. They were pressed tightly against the side by the magnetic force. The mules tugged and tugged but the car never budged. It was a fearfully cold night. The driver had gone home along the railroad and the perpetrators of the joke had gone over the hill. The poor prisoners screamed, but no one was on the street to hear their cries for help and in the morning they were found there frozen stiff, they and the mules.

"What was done about it?" said one of the auditors, "Nothing. No one knew who did it except the guilty ones. Every year on the anniversary of that night, just after ten o'clock, when the last horse-car has passed down the line, a driverless car containing two persons comes rushing down the incline above Ladies' Hall, stops at the corner, shrieks are heard, and what farther takes place I don't know for nobody ever stopped long enough to see." "Well," resumed the one who had questioned him before, "I would like to investigate the matter. I am sure I should not run." "You will have a chance to put your courage to trial to-night. It is the anniversary of the accident to-night. It is a quarter to ten. If traditions be true, in half an hour the spectre will be seen." "Let us investigate," said the bold one. Donning their overcoats they set out for Ladies' Hall. It was a very cold night, much such a one as it had been eight years ago upon that date. As they passed Assembly Hall the clock tolled the hour. "Hurry, hurry," said the bold one. Horse-car bells were already jingling in the distance as they hastened toward the corner. A driverless horse-car was rushing down the incline. Two persons were seated within it. Before the frightened boys could stop, the horse-car turned the corner, stopped, the mules struggled, a wild shriek arose on the air. Four turned and fled. The bold one always said that he investigated and found that the car had one passenger and the driver had gone in to get warm, that accounted for the car being driverless, and for the two seated within it. At the corner, the car had run off the track, that accounted for the car's stopping. The shriek they heard was the driver yelling at the mules to make them pull the car back on to the track. But they did not believe him and neither do I.

AMBITION.

H. E. Briggs won the "Lewis Prize" in '87, and not content with that, he is now trying to win the Lewis prize of '88.

Stealing the Records.

One balmy night in autumn, as the moon was going down,
A band of "funny Sophomores" went out to "paint the town."

The night was so inviting for the ventures of "Old Nick,"
Cute Ninety thought it policy to play a wilful trick.

They did not have the "sand" to play upon a hateful foe,
But played upon their truest friend, a trick both mean and low.

In drill and tactics these cadets were reported for soiled boots,
For rusty gun, unshaven face, for dirty gloves and suits.

Their collars ne'er were quite so clean, their shoes did never shine
So brightly when at class or drill, as those of Eighty-Nine.

The commandant ought to be thanked for duty nobly done,
But Ninety thought it an affront, and "Vengeance!" cried each one.

So on this night they sought revenge, and broke into South Hall,
And in the Colonel's door they cut a hole through which to crawl.

They stole the records and reports of their great indolence,
And took them to the Avenue and hid them 'neath a fence.

They reveled greatly to be free from melancholy fates,
But soon the wary commandant displayed his duplicates.

This squelched the spirit of the class and ended all their booms.
They took the records from the fence and hid them in their rooms.

Then not content with this exploit, again they took them out,
And o'er the campus far and wide they scattered them about.

And there upon the campus green, the fearful records lay
Till Patrick kindly picked them up and carried them away.

But Ninety never tried again, by tricks or otherwise,
To steal reports, or draw the wool down o'er the colonel's eyes.

The Hall Girl's Prayer.

Come zephyrs sweet with sun-shine,
Awaken now my soul;
Melt the woodland music
And reduce the price of coal.

THE SENIOR GIRL'S LOVER.

"My dearest, sweetest love
Is pretty as an elf;
With eyes lit from above—
It is my darling self."

THE AGRICULTURAL STUDENT.

He rises with the rooster,
To him all glory's "bosh;"
He merely wants a booster
Of a pig or Hubbard squash.

Retiring with the setting sun,
He cares not for the clocks;
Content, though matted be his hair,
With hayseed or burlocks.

To Forget.

Thou strong though invisible Power,
 That Freshman and Senior doth endower
 With such a supremely important air
 That nothing on earth can with them compare;
 We demand of Thee a reason why
 Thou dost elevate these few so high.

Oh tell us why a Smith W-ill R-ise
 By thy great power above the skies,
 Why to him on his lofty throne
 All earthly mortals remain unknown;
 Why a Johnson with E-ternal R-ed
 Is known afar by his airy tread.

Thou strong though invisible Power,
 That Freshman and Senior doth endower,
 We pray Thee includé in thy wonderous tale
 A pharmitic so bold, wise, conceited and pale
 Who believes, though you hunt the whole world around,
 A man like Dodson can never be found.

Contributed.

Do you ask me whence these Freshmen,
 Whence these students and these workers,
 With the eloquence of Webster,
 With the wisdom of Minerva,
 With the aspiring minds of Seniors,
 With the reasoning of Plato,
 With their great and many virtues,
 And their grave confabulations,
 As of wise men in the mountains?
 I should answer, I should tell you,
 From the counties and the districts,
 From the small lakes of Wisconsin,
 From the noted land of Sparta,
 From the Brooks and Hills of Portage,
 From the cities, towns and hamlets,
 Where the Millers and the Bakers
 Hold their own as good Bunn makers.

Full of wonder was our Freshman
 When he first came to the College;
 Found the students in confusion,
 Heard of all the misdemeanors,
 Of the malice and the mischief
 Of the Sophomore so wily.
 Hard his breath came through his nostrils,
 Through his teeth he hissed and muttered
 Words of anger and resentment,
 Hot and humming like a hornet.
 "I will slay this man of Ninety,
 Slay this mischief-maker," said he.
 With his club he beat and bruised him,
 Beat to death this man of Ninety.
 Pounded him, as maize is pounded,
 Till his conch was crushed to pieces;
 But his soul, his ghost, his shadow,
 Still survives as shade of Ninety.

Sing, Oh Muse, of jolly Freshmen;
 Of the happy days that followed
 In the land where stays the student,
 In the pleasant land and peaceful.
 Sing Old Halloween's dark secrets!
 Sing the dragging of the cannon!
 Busy was the stolen hatchet,
 Busy was the hard green cabbage.

Busy were all warlike weapons,
 Nor was college yell forgotten.
 But the artful Freshman Hall girl,
 Ever thoughtful, careful, watchful,
 Had o'erheard the scornful laughter
 When they mocked her from the campus.
 Students, thought she, mischief-makers,
 Sophomores—the kings of mischief,
 I will teach you all a lesson
 That shall not be soon forgotten.
 She had waited for their coming,
 She had carried to the porches,
 Water which should damp their ardor,
 And was lying now in ambush
 In the neighboring rooms of Juniors;
 "Laying" for the Sophs. and Seniors;
 "Laying" for the lofty lawyers.

Soon they came, with shout and clamor,
 Burst of horns and cry of voices,
 To this work of devastation.
 They perceived no danger near them
 Till they heard the plashing, splashing,
 Till they found themselves all dripping
 With the first descending shower.
 "Unto Ninety-one all honor!"
 Cried the Junior, cried the Senior,
 When we came in triumph homeward
 With the conquered conch of Ninety.
 From the region of South Chapel,
 From the kingdom of the Juniors,
 From the land of hazing Sophomores.
 Poor deluded man of Ninety!
 We had stolen his conch so famous
 And he mourns its loss, repenting
 That he e'er had hoped to conquer
 Men of Ninety-one so stalwart,
 Men of Ninety-one so valiant,
 Oh, deluded man of Ninety!

Thus came Ninety-one to college—
 E'en the President came with us
 To the ancient seat of learning.
 Came the famous Ninety-one men,
 Came the brightest of the Nation,
 Nine y-one, the class of Freshmen.
 Wisest they of all the students
 In the province of the learner,
 In the land of fun and wisdom.

In Memoriam.

Refrain.

Down on the campus,
Hear that mournful sound;
Ah! the students are interring,
Something in the cold, cold ground.

The subject of this sketch came into existence during the spring of 1887, but passed away in the Rosy flush of youth, full of "honors," and was with due ceremony interred on the campus, January 25, 1888.

The lamented was ever to be found where the Storm was raging, and with all its good qualities it was known to have but one fault: It was turned by a crank with weak bearings.

The funeral was well attended, and the ceremony though short, was very impressive. Shortly before nine o'clock, the procession of engineers, bearing the mutilated remains, filed slowly out of North Hall and proceeded to the middle of the campus opposite the main building. Here a grave was hastily dug and the pall-bearers, consisting of Messrs. Case, Richter, Nethercut, and Harriman, gently lowered the defunct into its last resting place. About the grave stood many sympathizing friends, who, with bowed, uncovered heads, took a final view of the remains. It was a very affecting scene. Even the spectators could not conceal their emotion. An agonizing wail went up from every heart as Chaplain Van Ornum pronounced the following touching oration:

FELLOW SUFFERERS: We are assembled to bury out of our sight the product of the brain of one of our mechanical engineers. As we view the remains let us be thankful that such a model has been set before us. Let us not be afraid to show our sorrow if we have any. By doing our duty toward the living we thus show our respect for the dead. Alas, my brethren, what are "honors" anyway! They flourish for a season, but in a few months where are they? They are gone where the grape-vine climbeth and the whangdoodle mourneth for his first born. Therefore let us weep and be sorry. Fill in, brethren, fill in. Let us depart.

The procession moved slowly away toward the drafting-room and the choir, consisting of Mr. Stevens, struck up,

Rosenstengel's model lies a moldering in the grave,
And we go marching on.

Not a conch was heard, not a sob of grief,
As away to the campus they hurried,
But each engineer gave a sigh of relief,
O'er the grave where the "model" was buried.

They buried it quickly at nine A. M.,
The snow with their shovels upheaving;
The model that Rosy had thought such a gem,
That his brain had so long been conceiving.

No useless framework enclosed its wheel,
Not in sheet nor in shroud they wound it;
But it lay like a useless piece of steel,
With the students laughing 'round it.

Few and short were the prayers they breathed,
And they spoke not a word of sorrow;
But the breasts of the Freshmen in trembling heaved,
As they thought of "Dutch class" on the morrow.

They thought, as they hollowed its narrow bed
And smoothed down its snowy pillow,
How in years gone by its inventor's head
Had been soaked in Mendota's billow.

Lightly they'll talk of the model that's passed
Away from the genius (?) who made it;
Deep under the snow until spring it will rest,
In the grave where the engineers laid it.

But half their pleasant task was done
When the clock tolled the hour for going;
But heedless of time they continued their fun
While the cold winds around them were blowing.

Slowly and sadly they heeded the call
To "draughting," in North Dormitory;
They stuck up a shovel to point out to all
Where the model reposes in glory.

Just ask the Profs., ask one, ask all
 For the brightest student in College Hall ;
 They'll show you a record, grand and great,
 That was made by a man of '88.
 When we asked the name of him so wise,
 The Prof. looked up with great surprise;
 "Where have you been since here you came
 That you've not heard of this great name?"
 The Prof. leaned back in his easy chair
 And smoothed his girlish parted hair.
 "Be seated, please, and I will tell
 Some anecdotes before the bell
 Rings for my class in Rhetoric.
 They say he is always playing a trick,
 And that is how he gets this name
 That's flown so far on wings of fame.
 If previous Freshmen strut around
 And seem to think themselves profound,
 This man renowned, this man of men,
 Thinks up a scheme to rope them in.
 Then to the Gym. the Sophomores take
 The Fresh. who always tries to make Himself like Julius Caesar shine;
 And there this man, with power sublime,
 Sits on a savage tool of war
 And hears the facts just as they are.
 His countenance firm as a stone,
 He cares not for the Freshman's groan.
 With appetite and judgment great,
 He tells the Freshman of his fate,
 And swears by all the holy chapels,

He must fine the Fresh. a bushel of apples.
A different 'Cut' soon has his face
As he eats the fruit with pleased grimace;
He eats away till all are gone,
Each apple, a bushel, every one.
Not even this does tranquilize
The appetite of him so wise.
So to the vineyard on the farm
He lures his classmates by the charm
Of his description of the grapes.
When all were jumping around like apes,
And stuffing themselves with luscious fruit,
Prof. H. came out and swore he'd shoot
Each one he saw around his yard ;
And 'twas not long before his guard
Had run six Seniors up a tree.
The Prof. went through his vines to see
How much they'd eaten of the fruit
That he could collect for in a suit.
In the police court did they pay
Full fifty dollars to defray
The cost of grapes which they did eat
And scattered about in their retreat.
This made them vexed to have to pay
For fruit, which, if what they say
Be true, they did not eat at all.
But this man, this man of gall,
Ate the grapes and then escaped."
"What ! Professor, can you state
That he is so degenerate
And cares so little for his fate,
And hygienic laws so grave
That he's to Appetite a slave?"
"He eat ! And slave to appetite !
Why at the club with all his might
He hooks around, both left and right,
And swallows all that he can gripe;
Belogna sausage, ham, and tripe,
Potatoes, beans, turnips and bread
Are all as quickly annihilated.
Plates and platters are all swept clean;
If nothing's left then they're thrown in."
Just then the bell began to ring.
So ended the tale of the gr-dy thing.

May 12. Glee and Banjo Clubs' Concert. "Let Her Go Gallop," by the Banjo Club, held the audience spell-bound.

May 12. Olsen gave advice to the faculty in rhetorical. Advice discarded. Olsen nearly, too.

May 13. Private Whitman objects to being bulldozed in the ranks by the Colonel. Detailed for private drill the next day before Prex. and the Colonel. Honorably discharged.

May 16. Ball Nine roasted Evanston and its "Board of Trade."

May 23. Ball Nine returns victorious from Lake Forest, Evanston and Racine. Williams and Waldo all right. Triumphant procession. Pandemonium, tinpanum, tinhornum and tincanum.

May 30. Memorial day. Battalion and band march down town. Jim Kerr comes a currish trick on the band.

June 3. Junior exhibition.

June 4. Simpson thinks he will be a success as a business manager of the BADGER.

June 5. Battalion records stolen. No rewards offered, consequently no records returned.

June 8. Two students had their clothes stolen while bathing in Mendota at ten o'clock at night. When returning home they encountered several watch dogs, wire fences and brush piles, and found their clothes in their room.

June 13. At College rhetorical President Bascom presented with memorial etchings.

June 14. Freshman generosity displayed itself by hanging a beautifully engraved silver cup on the well curb.

"Drink hearty from this cup,
The class of '90 set it up."

June 16. Choral Club concert.

June 17. Hesperian and Athenean blow-out. Lemonade, ice-cream, toast, etc., with "bones to break, and skulls to crack, and blood to drink, and souls to burn, give old Mory another turn."

June 17. Numerous infants seen in several of the professors' rooms—Freshmen taking entrance examinations.

June 18. Field-day. Murphy, Buckley and Jim Kerr only ones present. Kerr and Murphy carry off the laurels.

June 20. Class-day. Prof. Watson's portrait presented to the U. W. by the class of '87.

June 21. Alumni banquet to ex-President Bascom and President Chamberlin.

June 22. Commencement exercises. Briggs carries off the "Lewis" prize.

June 23. Tra-la-la '87.

Sept. 7. Fall term begins. Professors overcrowded with entrance examinations. Hutch volunteers to assist. Discharged on account of severity—conditioned all.

Sept. 8. Prex. writes excuses with a lead pencil. Students think it a snap.

Sept. 11. Simpson continues to think he will be a success as a business manager of the BADGER.

Sept. 17. First Freshman class meeting. Merritt, by the advice of a Senior assumes command. The class discarded both Merritt and the advice.

Sept. 18. Merritt hazed.

Sept. 19. Prof. Henry, by the aid of five policemen, gets six students into his course.

Sept. 20. Millard goes to a fire.

Feb. 17. Bill Nye lectures at Library Hall.

Backward, turn backward, Oh, Time, in your flight,
Make me a Soph again, just for to-night!
Give me a mask—I am thirsting for gore;
Bring me a Freshman to haze as of yore.
I have grown weary of logic and psych,
Weary of balls and orations alike—
Backward, Oh, Time, in thy hurrying flight,
Make me a Soph again, just for to-night!

DURING the last Twenty years we have endeavored to perfect a Steam Heating Apparatus that would meet the requirements of Health, Comfort, Safety, Durability and Economy in fuel and attention. Many persons have availed themselves of its benefits, and by influencing others the use of the Apparatus has been largely increased. Our facilities for manufacturing the Apparatus have kept pace with the demand, so that we can now furnish it quickly and in great perfection, and at considerably less cost than formerly. This Apparatus enables us to get pure, fresh air through registers into our Apartments. The value of fresh air is stated by Doctor Hall as follows: "The object of breathing is to make a change in the condition of the blood. It is sufficiently precise for all practical purposes to say that a man takes into the lungs in twenty-four hours about sixty hogsheads of air. During the same time there passes through the lungs an amount of blood equal to twenty-four hogsheads; with this blood the sixty hogsheads of air come in virtual contact and a great change takes place in both the blood and the air; for the oxygen, the life of the air, is taken from it as such and becomes in a measure incorporated with the blood, so as to give life to it. At the same time the impurities of the blood are taken up by the breath of air just taken into the lungs, so that when expired, when passed out of the lungs, it is so loaded with these impurities that it is utterly unfit for being breathed again; so much so that, as already stated, if rebreathed without the admixture of some fresh air it would cause an instantaneous destruction of life from its entire destitution of nutritious particles."

WANTED

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AND TEACHERS, who are energetic, to represent our association. We prefer those who have had experience in canvassing for books, or other kind of soliciting. We have over 100 Teachers, School Superintendents and Principals of Schools now engaged in selling memberships, and they average to earn over $100 per month, each, where they devote their whole time to this work. A few earn as high as $300 and $400 per month. The business is much pleasanter than canvassing for books. Many Teachers say they will never again enter the school work so long as we will give them employment. We give either salary or commission. Best of references required. We have many testimonials like the following:

"I take pleasure in testifying to the merits of the National Library Association. I have had many dealings with the firm and have always found them just and honorable. Everything I have purchased of them has been equal to their representations, and I have implicit confidence in their willingness and ability to do all they promise."—C. M. ARNOLD, Late Pres. of Kentucky Classical and Business College, North Middleton, Kentucky.

"After an examination of the Catalogue and the gift books of the National Library Association of Chicago, I accord it my hearty approval."—GEO. W. RYLAND, Lieut.-Gov. Wisconsin.

"The National Library Association dispenses with 'middle men' and brings the reading public nearer to publishers. I think the plan an excellent one."—J. W. AKERS, Supt. Public Instruction, Des Moines, Iowa.
