In 1889 she entered into the study of physical training in Minneapolis, and in 1891 attended Dr. Sargent's School of Physical Education at Cambridge. In the spring of 1892 she was appointed Physical Director in the Young Women's Christian Association of Minneapolis, where she remained until the summer of 1897. In 1894 she took the summer course in Physical Training under Dr. W. G. Anderson, of Yale, at Chautauqua.

Last summer she accepted her present position of Principal of Ladies' Hall and Instructor in Gymnastics for Women.

William L. Carlyle, B. S. Agr.

WILLIAM LEVI CARLYLE, Professor of Animal Husbandry, was born at Chesterville, Ont., September 22, 1870. His early life was spent on a farm. In 1889 he entered Guelph Agricultural College at Guelph, Ont., received a diploma and gold medal in June, 1891, on the subjects of live stock judging and dairying, and in 1892 was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. In the following winter he began work in connection with the Ontario Farmers' Institutes. 1893 was spent in the Guelph Dairy School and as a director of one of the Traveling Dairy Schools of Ontario. Since the winter of 1893 Prof. Carlyle has been connected with the Farmers' Institutes of Minnesota until his appointment in November, 1897, to his present position at the University of Wisconsin.

Joseph H. Jeffery, B. S. Agr.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER JEFFERY, Assistant Professor of Agricultural Physics, was born September 11, 1859, at Cornwall, Lebanon County, Pa. In 1861 he came with his parents to Wisconsin, where the greater part of his life has been spent. At the age of twenty-two he left the farm, and in 1886 was graduated from the State Normal School at Platteville. Seven years were spent as principal of high schools, three years at Cadott, Wis., and four years at Shell Lake, Wis. In 1893 he entered the University of Wisconsin, and in 1896 received the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. One year was spent at the Notre Dame Agricultural College and Experimental Station as Assistant Professor of Agriculture, and on November 1, 1897, Prof. Jeffery entered upon the duties of his present position at the University of Wisconsin.

Patrick Walsh.

ONE night, many years ago, in old Hesperia, when the motion before the house embodied a request on one of the professors for his picture to hang on the walls, somebody observed that "we hadn't Pat's picture." Whereupon honest featured Alex. Flemington arose to add to the motion a request on the genial janitor for his picture also.

We sat around in tolerant and amused groups, while some over-wise but erring youth raised the objection that the dignity of the Faculty was concerned in this indiscriminate selection. But when the motion was put it was carried with such acclaim that the secretary recorded it as unanimous. The boys had not yet gone out into the world of petty social distinctions, where they were constrained to think at times otherwise than that

"The man's the govd for a' that."

This was always the attitude of the students and the alumni toward our old janitor. They had him classed with the best beloved of the professors, not thinking at all of the position of the janitor, but always of the sterling qualities of the man.

When I read in the accounts of Pat's funeral last November that all University exercises were suspended; that President Adams and forty members of the Faculty and many students marched in a body from Library Hall and attended the funeral; that the pall-bearers were Professors Birge, Gregory, Parkinson, Daniells and Williams and E. F. Riley, Secretary of the Board of Regents, I felt that, after all, the University but honored itself in paying such honors to its old janitor. Indeed, it is gratifying to note, in these times, when we are said to be losing our democratic sturdiness, the sincerity of this tribute to a man, whatever his position, and to a blameless life rather than to great possessions.

Patrick Walsh was with the university from 1861 to 1897; he bade farewell to the students who left their classes to go to the war, welcomed them back under Johnson's administration, and saw their sons and daughters graduate in the 90's. He was the link that bound the old with the new, a more than honorary member of every class, a personal friend of every former student who wandered back over the old hill. Every graduate and thousands of the old students of the University knew "Pat" and always paid him their respects on visiting the University. He never forgot the boys who left the University; and his welcome to them was that kindly, genial Irish greeting that the returning student does not forget. I am told that the alumni never sent out a notice that had a heartier response than that for the fund which gave old Pat his jaunt to Ireland in 1893.

When we come together and talk of the familiar and kindly memory of Patrick Walsh, the old boys are always reminded of incidents; and one anecdote suggests another. Particularly the lads who inhabited the former dormitories are full of these yarns, many of which, I am forced to say, would not look as funny in print as they seem to the narrators thereof. But I suppose there could be set down and preserved from oblivion dozens of "Pat answers" that were not half bad. Pat's wit had nothing acerbic in it. It was always naivety, such as the student mind likes because it is "so different."

"We used to judge a new comer in the faculty very largely by the way he got on with Patrick," says one of the present faculty of the university. The few students who could not get along with Pat were usually those who were in danger of being hazed on general principles. The boys recognized that when Pat interfered with their sport it was always because the rules obliged him to do so; like a former governor of Wisconsin, he might declare: "I seen my duty and I done it." "He was popular with the girls because he was a gentleman," said one of the fair alumnae to the writer. Without seeking to be profound or to find an ethnological basis for the natural courtesy which always characterized Pat, I think there is at least something apropos in the following passage from a chapter on "the Irish" in Louise Imogene Guiney's new book, "Patrins:" "Time, which was expected to bring about no Ireland, has in reality engendered a national life more intense than ever. The physical strength, the patience and passion of the common people, the grace, loyalty and play of thought of gentlemen, have in that national life come together. Unique patrician wit, delicacy of feeling, knightly courtesy, have run out of their allotted conduits, and they color the speech of beggars. Distinction of all sorts sprouts in the unlikely places. Violent Erin produces ever and anon the gentlest philosopher; reclusive Erin sends forth the consummate cosmopolitan; hunted and jealous Erin holds up on its top stalk the open lily of liberality,

"courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride."

HUMPHREY J. DESMOND, U. W., '81.

James M. Ashby.

To quote the words of a fellow classmate: "There is scarcely a landmark to recall the old time;" and of no part of the University is this more true than of Ladies' Hall. While rejoicing over the improvements that marked the growth of the University, the "old girls" could not but feel many pangs of regret as they read of the bay windows that had been added to adorn the beloved old building and of the elevators put in to make life easy for the fourth-floor students.

These with other changes have created for many of us a new Ladies' Hall and a new University. To the girls of early Hall days, there seemed but one tie left to bind the old life to the new—Mr. Ashby; and we found consolation in the thought that the venerable janitor was still a part of what was most dear to us—that when we should return to pay a visit to our Alma Mater he would be there to give us the welcoming handshake and to recall delightful reminiscences of the "coal-stove" days.

But the tie that bound is broken, and it is with genuine sorrow that we bow our heads in submission to the Divine will. Noble man that he was, he became an integral part of the Hall, and of the life of the Hall girls. Industrious, upright, generous, kindly, sympathetic, and above all a thorough gentleman; such was the man we, a decade ago, knew in Mr. Ashby.

He was a man of decidedly social propensities, yet he never neglected his work.

Often did we marvel then, and often have we marveled since, that his visits to our rooms, coal-hod in hand, should be so regular, varying scarcely by a minute, when he seemingly lingered at pleasure over a bit of University gossip or some adventure of the girls of early days.

Is there a Hall girl who does not remember the lectures that he used to deliver on the evils of gossiping, and which he would follow up with a tale of how the girls of number seven dropped down from their windows the night before, adding, "That's what I heard, but I don't know anything about it; I don't suppose it's true"?

We soon learned that the way to win Mr. Ashby's favors was to appeal to his profound respect for ancestry—ancestry that consisted of a long line of sisters, and the girl who could boast of the greatest number that had preceded her in Hall residence and of sisters that were full of fun to the point of playing practical jokes, was certain to stand first in the good graces of Mr. Ashby.

We presume he told the girls of the nineties of his failure to persuade any of us to accept his offer of the key, but also of his leaving it in the side door, thus making it possible for the girls of '89 to slip out unobserved between three and four o'clock in the morning to build the wonderful fences with which they adorned the campus.

So long as life lasts and there remains with us the power of recalling the good old days, two pictures will come up before us: One of a grey-haired man, bent with work, uncomplainingly carrying his hods of coal from room to room, with a bright and cheerful "Good morning" to each girl; the other, of the same man, all smiles, coming forward in his sincere, almost fatherly manner, to welcome his charges after a long vacation. The joy of such meetings! As one of the "old girls" remarked but yesterday: "No one, who has never experienced the awful homesick feeling that used to come over us as we approached the great empty hall after a summer vacation, can appreciate the happiness that Mr. Ashby brought to us by his cordial welcome, his cheerful words of greeting: 'How are you? Had a good time? How's your father and your mother? Is your sister married yet?'" And this latter picture is the most tender of our recollections.

It is with a feeling of reverence and love for the man that we pay this slight tribute to his memory. He has gone from us, but he will live forever in the hearts of the old hall girls.

 '99 CLASS CREW.

Minutes of a Junior Class Meeting.

Meeting opened with prayer by Chaplain Becker. Reading of minutes. Petition from Mr. Jacobson, asking that the class buy and have framed a life-size portrait of Ex-President and Dictator Strass, of South Milwaukee, referred to Committee on Slates and Machines.

Petition from Mr. Fox, asking that the class insert in the Badger a cut of those who were "turned down" in the '99 Badger Board election, referred to Committee on Harbors and Bulkheads.

Secretary announced the receipt of the 110th bill for balance due on Freshman class party. He was instructed to have all such bills bound in book form and presented to the Library.

The Secretary read the following resolutions from the Faculty:

Whereas: We, the Faculty of the University of Wisconsin, have viewed with satisfaction and amazement the phenomenal success of the class of '99 in all departments of University life; therefore be it

Resolved: That we entreat the said class to make early preparation, that their Commencement exercises may be a fitting close for the most brilliant era the University of Wisconsin can ever hope to see.

A discussion followed, and it seemed to be the sense of the meeting that the Faculty was becoming altogether too intimate with the class, and that it was high time that body was turned down. However, the resolutions were approved by a vote of 33 $\frac{2}{3}$ to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$.

Updegraff smacked his lips and Tratt awoke.

Mr. Philip Allen here secured the floor and stated that it was customary at this time for the Junior Class to elect a Pipe Custodian; that he had been in active training for the position, and as there were no objections, he would request that the Secretary cast a unanimous ballot for him as Pipe Custodian.

Mr. Meeker jumped to his feet and objected to such high-handed action, adding that he desired to state in this connection that his friend Jay Baldwin was again a candidate for office; that he had been a candidate for office ever since the class entered the institution; that not only was Mr. Baldwin a candidate for the office of Pipe Custodian, but for any other old thing.

Mr. Becker nominated Mr. Pahlow, who, he said, had always taken great interest in class affairs, especially at election time; he had also served as tax-collector, and was therefore well fitted for the office.

Mr. Curtis demanded that the young ladies be given their rights in this matter. He understood that the New Woman's Club of Ladies' Hall had its eye on the office, and as the club was not represented at the meeting, he moved that the election be postponed. The motion was carried, and the meeting adjourned.

Philomathia vs. Hesperia, December 10, 1897.

Library Hall.

Presiding Officer, PROF. DAVID B. FRANKENBURGER.

Question.

Is the present system of private ownership and operation of the telegraph in the United States preferable to government ownership and operation?

Interpretation: It being conceded that the latter system is constitutional; that under it employes would be appointed for efficiency only, and that the government might lease lines to railroads in a manner similar to that employed at present. It being further conceded that the second concession shall be construed to mean the elimination of all political corruption in the appointment and removal of employes.

Affirmative—Philomathia.

OTTO PATZER, '98.

Negative—Hesperia.

FINALS, Miss Cloes beat Miss Sylvester, 6-1, 6-1, 6-0.

Literature is not the proper term.
It makes us wildly weep, and writhe, and squirm
To hear these products of our feeble pen
Endowed with such high-sounding names, but then
Really there was no other that would do.
A medley, "potpourri," "olio,"
This might be called, or "hash," or "Irish stew,"
Useless and "hodge-podge," as it seems to you.
Racking our brains for months, we've had to choose
Exactly what all other Badgers use.

My College Room.

I have woven well at Fortune's loom,
 And many a house my own I call.
 But for you, my dear old college room,
 I would freely give them all.

For there, within four narrow walls,
 Were held a young life's hopes and dreams.

How fondly memory oft recalls!
 How very dear that old room seems!

I can see the pennant over the door,
 The banjo with its ribbons bright,
 The warm red rug upon the floor,
 The soft, green glow of the study light—

Aye, I've woven well at Fortune's loom,
 And many a house my own I call.
 But to live as I lived in that fourth floor room
 I would freely give them all.

The Effect of Beauty.

I once escorted to a hop
 A very, very pretty girl,
 And there I met with such good luck,
 It set me simply in a whirl,

There was a sergeant at the door,
 Determined, stiff, and straight and tall,
 He only stood and stared at her—
 I never had to pay at all,

A Sentimental Journey.

JOHN HARWOOD BACON.

HERE'S no use talking; a freshman's intellect is certainly a very peculiar article," and Phil, with the air of a philosopher who had evolved a theory requiring years of thought, leaned back in his chair and puffed contentedly at his huge briar.

We had happened into Burton's room, Phil and I, and were somewhat shocked to find the owner hard at work on his mathematics, or, as Phil expressed it, in a disgraceful state of studiousness. Nevertheless, with the thoughtfulness proverbial of college men, we carefully made ourselves at home and considerably appropriated tobacco and pillows. Comfortably provided for, the question of entertainment naturally arose, and, as Billy most obstinately persisted in "juggling sines and cosines," our only source of amusement lay in making him the playground for that keen sense of humor which sophomores in general, and we in particular, possess in a marked degree.

Finally, after five minutes of utter disregard for either our presence or our wit, Billy slowly closed his book, as if reluctant to leave the pleasures of study, and giving a slight start as he pretended to see us for the first time, cheerfully bade us "good evening."

"By the way," I remarked, after the conversation had passed through the various college topics (studies excepted) from football to tennis, and from tobacco to Welsh rarebits, "what did you do in Chicago last week? Anything exciting?"

"No," answered Billy, "nothing particularly so in the city, as I had to pilot my sister around." "But," he added as if struck with a sudden thought, "while coming home, I did have rather a queer experience, and if you fellows wish to fill your pipes again—I don't need to tell you where the tobacco is—I'll spring the strangest thing that has happened to W. A. B. for some time."

We are used to Billy's "strange experiences," but as no better subject presented itself, we merely appeared bored and waited for the story. No actual protest being given, Billy stretched out on the bed and began the account of his adventure.

"When I took the train at seven o'clock," began Billy, "I was in anything but a happy mood. All that I had gained on my trip consisted of five cuts and a liberal supply of that tired feeling. To add to my discomfort, the sleepers were crowded, and I had to be content with an alleged parlor car. After finding a seat—one of those uncomfortable reclining affairs which seem to be inclined for the express purpose of permitting a graceful slide to the floor—I pulled out a paper and tried to bury my ‘grouch’ in the news. The car was close and uncomfortable, and the train was late in starting.

“I had digested several catastrophes and a murder or two, when my attention was attracted by the appearance of a mighty pretty girl at the other end of the car. She took a seat several places in front of me. I naturally looked at her, as any fellow would, and it didn’t require a blackboard demonstration to convince me that she was the daintiest and dearest little creature conceivable. I am not a sophomore—or even a poet—but I have never seen a fem. so completely and hopelessly pretty as this one! “Wondering how the man in front of me would stand the ordeal, and gaining some consolation from the thought of his embarrassment, I raised my eyes, only to let them fall again and, incidentally, to turn on another cardinal blush. She was still looking at me! I tried to look unconcerned, but a peculiar pounding in my left pulmonary was the only noticeable effect of my efforts. But almost immediately the pounding stopped, and my breathing also, when I saw my fair gazer rise and without hesitation walk directly toward my seat. By this time, of course, I had braced up and had regained possession of myself; and though wondering what in the world she wished, I mentally congratulated myself on being the favored person.

“Without pausing, though blushing beautifully, she came straight to my section, and said in the sweetest voice imaginable: ‘I beg your pardon, sir, but will you please come over to my chair?’ Her look was simply captivating, and her tone had an authoritative quality which I couldn’t have resisted had I desired to—which I assure you I did not! She turned back, and I meekly followed, vaguely conscious that every passenger in the car was interested in the proceedings.

“‘Sit down, please,’ she said—and I sat. ‘Now,’ she continued, looking me frankly in the face, but nevertheless greatly embarrassed, ‘I realize what a strange and improper thing I have done, but I assure you it was absolutely necessary, and you were the only man in the car who would answer my purpose. I will postpone my apology until after my story, and begin at once to explain the meaning of my strange conduct.’

“I quickly assured her that no apology was necessary, that I should be charmed, etc., but disregarding my remarks she continued, now smiling a little: ‘Let me warn you in the first place that I am going to ask you a favor—and now for my story.

“‘My name is—well, never mind what my name is—but I am a student at the Cumnock School at Evanston, and my home is at Stoughton, a little town a few miles this side of Madison. I have a brother, a Cornell man, who has lately decided to leave college and join a surveying party in Montana. Brother has been away a year, and now he will probably be out West for a long time. He found that he could not visit home before joining the excursion, but planned to meet me in Chicago to-day, and to say good-bye to papa this evening as the train stops at Stoughton. But this morning he learned that even this must be given up, and he left at four o’clock on the other division, by way of Milwaukee. Consequently, papa (who is somewhat of an invalid and awfully fond of George) will be terribly disappointed when he learns that even the pleasure of seeing his son for a minute will be denied him.

“When I got on the train at Chicago, I was pondering upon some plan for cheering papa, when the happy idea of a substitute for George occurred to me. Don’t you see? All I did was to look around the car for some one resembling

George, and ask him to assist me in my plan. I don't wonder you look startled! I know it is quite unusual and improper, but if you only knew how disappointed papa will be!

"My charming companion paused. She was quite breathless by this time, and in her earnestness had rested her hand on my arm. There was just a suspicion of tears in those big blue eyes, and an irresistible little tremor on those red lips. If she had asked me to jump off the train, I should have looked around for a convenient window. I hastily assured her that I should be delighted to be of assistance, and then suggested that a few more details of her plan might be well.

"'Oh yes,' she cried, almost clapping her hands in her enthusiasm, 'I forgot that you do not know your role. Now, you don't look much like George, but you are of about the same size, and you wear a long ulster. All college men look alike with their long coats and—and cigarettes. It will be dark at the depot, and the train stops but a moment. We will get off, and I will rush up to papa, who will probably be alone on the platform, while you will follow. There will be just time for you to greet papa and return to the train; but that there may be no suspicion, I suppose you must also bid me good-bye—and in a brotherly way. This will be the reward for your kindness.'

"As she said this last, she blushed furiously, though the presence of a timid little smile did not detract from the effect. Again my 'actio cordis' was tremendously accelerated, and I considered myself the most favored of men (sophomores included). The bargain was struck without any demurrer on my part, and I settled back to enjoy the two hours remaining before the train was due at Stoughton. My companion proved a charming entertainer, and the time passed only too rapidly. We discussed our ruse at some length, and finally turned to other subjects—fellows whom she knew at the 'Varsity, and girls whom I knew at Evanston. But the train had unfortunately made up its lost time, and soon a long whistle warned us that we were approaching Stoughton.

"'Here we are,' I said, trying to assume a look of unconcern, but failing miserably. My companion appeared a trifle pale, but determined, as a woman always is when her mind is once made up. 'Come!' she whispered, as the bell rang and the brakes grated—and we started for the door.

"I felt queer, and rather uncomfortable, too, for the possibility of discovery was anything but cheerful for either of us. We reached the door, and there on the platform a little old man was waiting all alone. Almost immediately I heard my companion cry 'Papa!' and while I stood feeling decidedly foolish, she rushed into his arms.

"And now came my turn! I realized that the only thing for me to do was to put on a bold front and brace right up to 'papa;' so up I went with outstretched arms. Nothing could have been more successful. He grasped my hand and in a tremulous voice told me how I had grown and changed. (My natural modesty forbids me to give in detail the vast improvement which he noticed.) I turned up my coat collar and remained in the shadow.

"But there was no time to lose! The train was ready to start. 'Papa' grasped my hand again, and then I turned quickly to receive my 'reward'. She stood there smiling and complacent, and, as the light from the car windows struck her sweet face, I noticed a roguish look in those beautiful eyes.

"'Good-bye, George,' she said, reaching out her hand and puckering up those pretty red lips, 'be a good boy!'

"I seized her hands and bent over to kiss her, when—just then the brakeman yelled 'Madison,' and disentangling myself from the fond embrace which I had on the back of the seat, I collected my baggage in a bewildered way, and took a cab up town."

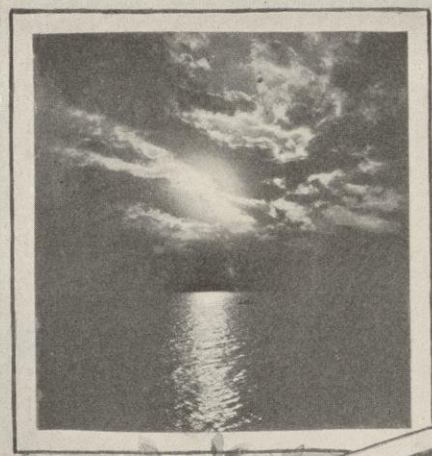

There was a long silence. Then Phil, with a disgusted look, as he knocked the cold ashes from his pipe, said dryly: "There's no use talking; a freshman's intellect is certainly a peculiar article!"

The Freshman's Disappointment.

I met her at the Hall one night;
She seemed so sweet and kind,
She joshed me, and she jollied me.
I loved her, rash and blind.

I met her on the Hill next day—
How graceful, and how fair!
I blushed and bowed, face wreathed in smiles,
And got—a Klondike stare.

In Times of Pan.

In times of Pan, the laughing maid
Thro' grottoes green and forests strayed,
Played hide and seek o'er grassy leas
With nymphs and dryads of the trees—
In times of Pan.

And, haply, from the fountain's brim
Fled, half in jest, the satyrs grim;
Or, pausing by some waterfall,
With joyous shout woke Echo's call—
In times of Pan.

Our modern nymph prefers for sport
The golf-links and the tennis-court;
Tiller and helm her hand obey,
She laughs at all the simple play
Of times of Pan.

In jaunty cap and dress of tweed
She stalks the deer, and draws a bead
With any man;
And, since my claim she does not scorn
To share the sport of each new morn,
I'm thankful that I wasn't born
In times of Pan.

A pinch-bug has lit
In Alice's hair.
He hasn't yet bit,
But a pinch-bug has lit,
So she wants him to "Git!"
And she's in despair—
For a pinch-bug has lit
In Alice's hair.

Concerning Accidents.

ZONA GALE.

R. RICHARD RUGGLES hurriedly lighted his pipe. A man argues that he looks inscrutable when his eyes are on his pipe bowl or on the far end of his cigar. He had just rounded the curve on Langdon Street and sighted Burke and Lushington on their way from the Gym, and he had no mind to come under their scrutiny, or anybody's. Ruggles, being greatly aggrieved, did not crave miscellaneous sympathy, and though Burke was not particularly miscellaneous, Jack Lushington was. So it was Lushington who stopped when he met him.

"I was waiting to see you," he said.

Ruggles considered the space between Lushington's eyes. He could look down on the other; he was a born center-rush, the new coach repeatedly assured him; a guiltless Cromwell yet, however, since he never played. His eyes were deep set, and his head was well back.

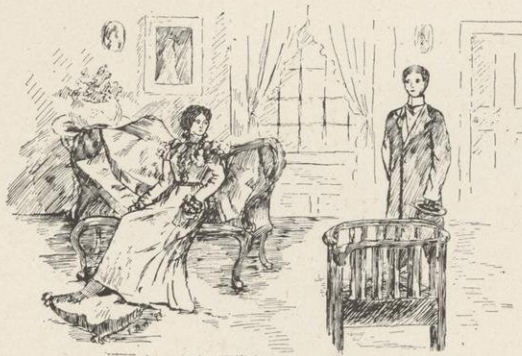

"I'm late to my 4 o'clock now," he said briefly, pushing on. "Try me later."

Lushington considered his receding back.

"Well, I'll be —" he began, disconsolately. "Cheer up, Rug-rug!" he called suddenly. "Don't you care if you are tardy and won't get your half holiday?"

The incident did not accent the peace of mind of Ruggles, though he felt somehow well satisfied at having done something rather unpardonable in him.

He kept on his way to his 4 o'clock, grimly pleased that the clock had struck the hour, and pleased at nothing else in the world. It was an extra matinee anyway, he told himself discontentedly, the course having run over one hour into examination week. But going up the steps of Science Hall he found that he was without his note-book, and he faced about and started back up the street.

"I don't know but my luck is on after all," he told himself hopefully. "I'll go and see Billy."

Presently he was in the parlor at Billy's house and she was on the red divan. Billy was Miss Wilhelmina Dugdale. Miss Dugdale's dearest wish was to be tall, and she was tiny; her next dearest wish was to be called Wilhelmina, and not many of her friends knew that that was her name. She came down stairs with a huge yellow note-book.

"You are to stay five minutes, counting putting on your coat," she announced. "I have thirty pages to read yet, and nineteen to review. Physiology examination comes at 8, you know. Did you have any to-day? When is your first one?"

Ruggles raised the roaming cat to his shoulder.

"Hail, Lucifer!" he greeted it. "If I were sure of your component parts in their proper relations, I should go forth to do battle to-morrow grandly. Biology comes at 2. Couldn't you lend me Lucifer to set me straight when in doubt, Billy?"

Miss Dugdale turned the leaves of her yellow note-book aimlessly.

"Here's a whole lecture gone," she said anxiously, "I'll have to borrow somebody's notes."

"I never do that," volunteered Ruggles, "I lay claim to the grace and wit of the Sphinx without dealing in riddles. Besides I like my riddles straight. That kind is only dry."

Miss Dugdale looked at him doubtfully.

"I think that was allusive," she said; "it was, wasn't it? Dick," she asked suddenly, "what is the matter?"

Ruggles laughed shortly.

"Why?" he asked.

"Don't play conventional," she said severely. "If you don't want me to know, tell me so. Everybody looks naturally worried this week. But you look other ways, too. No, don't tell me."

"I may as well," said Ruggles doggedly. "It's a hundred to one I don't come back next semester. I mean, I don't get back."

Billy laughed. "Oh, well," she said cheerily, "is that all? None of us would offer many odds just now, you know."

"Nonsense," said Ruggles. "We both know, you and I, that much of this scare-head business is made up, to add atmosphere. Do you think I'm that sort?"

In his freshman year Ruggles had been on the Cardinal, and as chairman of next year's Badger board, newspaper metaphor came trippingly.

"What I mean is," he went on, that I was no more cut out for the law than our friend Lucifer here. That our success—his and mine—would be about even. That I have argued and half begged to be let throw it up and get on a newspaper. And now—"

"Well?" said Billy.

"If I get sent home—sent 'down,' as Lush would say, my father will never send me 'up' another day. And that's what I'm working for!" finished Ruggles.

The yellow note book went down on the red divan, and Billy sat up very straight.

"Do you want to know," she asked slowly, "what I think?"

"Why, yes," said Ruggles, "you know I do."

"Well, I think," she said deliberately, "that you are the most selfish man I ever knew."

Ruggles pulled at a loose strand of willow on the arm of his chair.

"Well, of course," he said dryly, "I thought you knew that. I thought everybody knew that."

"No," said Miss Dugdale, "you didn't think so. And I didn't, and nobody does—and you're not, really. You don't understand. Dick, you see—I know your mother."

"Well?" questioned Ruggles a little defiantly.

She looked at him squarely for a moment and opened her lips to speak; he was moodily bringing the ears of Lucifer to a common point and did not see; presently he raised his eyes, a trifle defiant still, and she was looking past him to the window.

"I went home for over Sunday," she was saying evenly, "for Charlotte's wedding, Saturday. Did I tell you?"

Ruggles looked at her curiously. Anyway she was not going to scold, he thought with relief; then he wondered with a touch of animosity if, after all, she cared so little for his plans.

"No," said Ruggles indifferently, "you didn't tell me."

They had lived in the same little Wisconsin town ever since they were children, and were good friends at the University in spite of that. "I saw your mother," Billy went on quietly, still looking out the window. "She was at church Sunday morning; she sat alone in your pew, and had on her gray silk gown. She came over right after the sermon to ask about you. She said your last letter mentioned that you might run down to Chicago. That was when you went three weeks ago, was it?"

Ruggles stole a covert glance at her.

"Yes," he said uneasily.

"I can see how you, more than anybody, would worry about getting through," she said sympathetically. "Everything she had planned for Gerhard she plans now for you—they both do. The rest of us have to look up our own missions," she added, with a little laugh, "and yours is made for you."

"Yes," said Ruggles dully.

"Every bit of your five minutes is up," finished Billy. "Put on your coat."

In the hall he stopped.

"Of course you will be at the Prom," he said. "And may I have the fifth or the eighth, or both?"

"I think," said Miss Dugdale then, steadily meeting his look, "I will wait till I am sure that you are back, Dick. It would be embarrassing to have two dances left open."

When he stepped in the street it had begun to snow, and he faced a nasty, biting wind.

Was it all as she had told him? he wondered angrily. He remembered when he was a little fellow how much the two at home had planned for Gerhard, who was in college then, and was to have been a civil engineer, and for him in the law. Then Gerhard died. He thought of the bit of a town in which their days were spent, and how narrow were her interests and other hopes, even as the wife of a well-to-do physician. Sentiment, he told himself angrily; mere sentiment! He was sure to make a failure of the law. He knew that now as well as he would in twenty years, only now he had not twenty years of failure behind him. He to have the burden of two futures, and his own! What right had she, or anyone, to put that on him? Then he stopped, someway a little awed, and bit viciously at the stem of his fireless pipe, scowling.

At the house everything was in confusion. When he let himself in at the front door he came upon Hartley and Burke on the stairs, reciting something to each other monotonously; Burke was going out and had his coat on.

"You get to work," he paused to recommend Ruggles. "You will want coffee at twelve, won't you? The latter ganglia, you know," he went on conversationally, "are not —"

"Go to thunder," directed Ruggles without expression, as he mounted the stairs. "No, I won't have any coffee, I thank you."

He looked in the music room; a group of four was before the smouldering fire.

"We were hunting you up, Rug-rug, the whole afternoon," called Grant. "We borrowed the trot till ten—then it goes further east. Any information you want now about the happy man who has escaped from the storm at sea and found a port—"

"No, thank you," said Ruggles shortly, and shut the door for punctuation.

He locked the door of his own room, secretly hoping that Grant would stay on downstairs. He began aimlessly to straighten things a bit until the absurdity of the occupation struck him, and then he stood by the window looking out over Mendota, morose and blue-gray in the storm. He felt so out of it all—the hope and the worry and the rush of the day. There came to him suddenly the memory of a certain red-haired little sophomore named Brady, who was forever striking some one's shoulder in intimation of fellowship, and forever seeking to make conversation by inane questions—and some way now he struck Ruggles as pathetic. And it seemed so unnatural for him—Ruggles—to be actually hoping for something to happen which the others were cheerily dreading together. From somewhere on the floor above there came down to him the snatch of song of somebody's stolen intermission, roared out to "Lightly May the Boat Row":

"Oh, fill us up the brimming cup,
And sing us courage while we sup,
And help us keep our courage up,
There's rigor in the rods.
The time will pass the faster
That heralds our disaster
When pony goes to pasture—
The twilight of the gods.

Chorus—

"Lightly may they strike us
With the tricks that like us,

Have they heart to strike us—
So, so, so?
Little son and daughter,
Pounded to a mortar;
Lambies to a slaughter
See us g——o!”

He smiled grimly as it ceased. “I’m going to miss the house terribly,” he told himself. Then he thought it all over from the time he came there, knowing nobody, angry at having been put between four walls when anything from a night brawl assignment to war correspondence was what he longed for. And smaller men than he had done it without having had a day at college. Why, every man had his own way to make in the world, and his first duty—yes, duty, was to make it. And merely from the accident that he, instead of Burke or Lushington, was their child—the child of the two at home—why should they look to him as an individual to shape their future? Why, he was grateful, yes; but how far could a man’s gratitude extend and be real?

Downstairs the lamps were lighted. He could see their reflection on the snow. Some one was “strumming,” and a voice in the hall took up the refrain of the song again—

“Lambies to the slaughter
See us go ——” then a door slammed sharply, and he found himself saying over the absurd words mechanically.

He let the curtain fall over the window and turned away—a soft knitted curtain of bright silks; his mother had made them for her own room and had sent them over only a few weeks before. He glanced at them as he turned on the light, and his eye chanced on a bit of the gray silk like her gown—the one Billy had said she wore at church. On his dressing table were the muslin covers she had made, and as he looked a score of things she had fashioned marshalled themselves—the denim valance and bolster and the spread to his bed, a dozen trifles about his desk, all the cushions on the window seat except the red one Billy made; and somehow or other, he thought vaguely, they all seemed interrogative; they all needed periods.

“Sentiment!” he told himself angrily. “Why, no mother would do less! The mere accident of relationship accounts for that.”

Then he laughed angrily, suddenly furious with himself. Had it come to this, that he could argue for and against with the same inanities? The mere accident of his birth demanded knit curtains, but the mere accident of his birth did not demand a fraction from him!

“You are a miserable cad,” he told himself deliberately. “And I am ashamed to be you. And I am ashamed to have to help you out,” he added, “for you are a sentimental cad besides.”

“Supper?” roared Lushington interrogatively, pounding on the door in half an hour. “Ready, Ruggie?”

“Not going,” said Ruggles, without lifting his eyes from his book. “And say—count me in on that coffee deal at twelve, you know.”

"Pounded to a mortar," hummed Jack as he moved on. "All right. Go, go, go it!"

Everybody remembers that biology examination. Ruggles, in common with half the class, did not get through, but the condition was worked off before June. And that was the only one wrong.

On the Sunday of the mid-winter recess, Billy, from her pew by the pillar, noted after service how well he folded the wrap about his elegant little mother in her gray gown.

"Yes," his mother was saying confidentially to the woman back of her, whose face was like crepe paper, "so nice to have Ruggles at home. And he has come off so well in everything. Oh, yes. We are all proud of him naturally."

As soon as the smallest incident arose like this, she passed grandly over the pitiful time when she could only rehearse old triumphs and wait for the letter that had not come.

Ruggles was standing by Billy.

"If you don't think it's wicked," he said, meeting her eyes, "will you give me the fifth and the eighth right now?"

And what he said to himself all the way home with his mother and going back on the train next morning, was:

"Was it confounded sentiment? Or what was it?"

A Conditional Tragedy.

We met in the lab,
Biological lab,
By the tanks where the hydras swim;
Where Marshall rules
And swears none but fools
Would fire such questions at him.

We were hopelessly green,
As could plainly be seen
From the imbecile sketches we drew.
But she sat over there
In the opposite chair,
And reproofs quickly faded from view.

We searched through the 'scopes
Hour by hour without hopes
For Amoeba's wobbly form.
Weary eyes then would meet
In long glances and sweet,
Though Marshall's frown threatened a storm.

By-and-by came the week
Of exams, cold and bleak,
When our faces grew haggard and wan,
Bucking early and late
To escape a dread fate;
I pulled through, but—she got a con.

Still I work in the lab,
Biological lab,
And I squint through the 'scope as of yore.
But sometimes I stare
At a vacant chair—
Then I don't feel like work any more.

A Song of the Sea.

WHENEVER I embark upon the up and downy sea,
I feel most awful sorts of pains in my anatomy.
And those that seem to render me especially distressed
Are concentrated in the region covered by my vest.

Repetition.

TURNED and asked me a question ;
 The chance I could hardly miss.
 I leaned in a thoughtless second
 And stole the sweetest kiss !

I waited for angry pouting,
 For tears and freezing—in vain ;
 And when we reached the door-step,
 She turned and asked me again !

The Difference.

In ninety-eight and ninety-eight
 He hastes him forth to war,
 With Victory perched upon his { helm,

 His banners stream afar.

In ninety-eight in stalwart might
 He never knew to yield.
 He fought, he conquered, died, and left
 His bones upon the field.

In ninety-eight with brawn and brain
 He fights and never yields ;
 He conquers, lives — but sometimes leaves
 His bones on several fields.

A Tale for Youth.

WARDON A. CURTIS.

ONCE there was a little boy named Halfred James Jenkins, who lived at Buckingham Center, a locality which most cartographers omit from their maps of Wisconsin. The early part of his life was as peaceful as a dream—not the kind of dream that follows a Christmas dinner, but that which follows frugal fare and abstemiousness. However, that is neither here nor there, as they say in fairy tales; so let us get to the point as soon as we can, my dears.

Halfred was a good little boy, and at the age of seven received a forty cent Bible for reciting two thousand verses at one lick in the Sunday-School, and when he graduated, at the age of eight, from the public schools, his oration, beginning with those immortal words, "This is an age of progress," won the mysterious box which the local druggists, Bowbell & Twomey, had given for first prize, a box containing six dozen bottles of an unsalable cough-cure, manufactured by an unenterprising individual who neglected to advertise in Wisconsin dailies and other periodicals of this glorious land—long may it wave!—thereby ruining what might have been a lucrative business. Such evidence of youthful precocity influenced our hero's parents to give him a liberal education.

Accordingly, at the age of nine years, Halfred James Jenkins entered as an adult special the University of Wisconsin, an institution pleasantly located in a beautiful lake country, in the midst of a cultured, kindly, refined, large and remarkably intelligent community. Thinking to make it easier for him, his venerable parents, with a foresight beyond their years, placed him to room with Mr. Edward H. Hodkinson of their neighborhood.

Mr. Hodkinson was a very estimable young man who attended the University Law School and to the affairs of the people who composed the extensive and select circle of his warm personal friends.

The first two weeks in college were pleasant ones to Halfred. In that time he ran the Professor of Conchology up a stump, put a crust upon the Professor of Kinematics, and knocked an eye out of the Professor of Phlebotomy. He was elected president of his class; but this high distinction did not turn his head, and he continued to write the regular postal card to the loved ones at home.

Mr. Hodkinson, my dear children, was a studious young man. In the room which he occupied with Halfred were large piles of yellow law books, and with one open before him and three or four more within easy reach, you could usually find him at work, a severe frown sitting upon his features.

Now, Mr. Hodkinson was, as I have said, a very estimable young man; in fact, when he was a small boy he pumped the organ in the Campbellite church at Buckingham Center for three years without receiving other compensation than ten cents a week and the good-will of the pious, and during the time of his service he was only twice known to spend his stipend for tobacco; that is, his weekly ten cents, for the rest of his salary cannot be reckoned in worldly coin or expended for secular weeds like tobacco.

As he studied those thick books and stored away in his cavernous brain acre after acre of useful information concerning torts, bailments, and such strange and abstruse subjects—which I will not try to explain to you, my dears, for several million judges, lawyers and shysters throughout our broad country are daily endeavoring to do it without success—he wished very much that he could impart this knowledge.

No one asking Mr. Hodkinson for any of his knowledge, he generously resolved to give it without being asked. He determined to watch Halfred, and the first time he found him breaking the finely spun, theoretical letter of the law, inform him of it. He had not long to wait. Halfred came in one day and said:

“You ought to have seen me put a crust on Prof. Dusenberry to-day. I ran Prof. Baegler up a stump in phlebotomy.”

“Halfred, Halfred, did you know that what you have just said was slander?” said Mr. Hodkinson, as his long, sharp tongue swept his lower lip reflectively, and his gray eyes snapped, with kindness I hope; but really I could not say.

“Why, how?” asked the surprised Halfred.

“You said you ran Prof. Baegler up a stump and put a crust on Prof. Dusenberry. All of what you said was slander. Anything calculated to injure a person by bringing him into public contempt and disrepute is regarded as slander. The public, upon hearing you speak in that way, would immediately think of Prof. Dusenberry as a crusty old chap, or as a ridiculous object covered by a crust; and it would imagine Doctor Baegler scrambling up a stump, his Prince Albert coat-tails flapping in the wind, his low shoes and white stockings digging into the bark. You have brought these men into contempt, and I might make it very disagreeable for you.”

“Oh, Mr. Hodkinson, please don't. Those were only college expressions for making a good recitation that I used, and I didn't mean anything bad by it. Please don't get me into trouble.”

“You have been warned and had better look out,” said Mr. Hodkinson, as he took his hat and departed to talk law with a friend.

It happened that Halfred had formed a friendship with one Mr. Wakefield Flack, a tall dude senior, who, having been conditioned regularly in algebra for three years, was taking it again with Halfred's class. Halfred was a good scholar, and Mr. Flack took a great interest in him and delighted to spend hours in his company, whistling the latest operatic airs and smoking cigarettes—the horrid creature—while Halfred worked examples for him.

These examples Mr. Flack copied in a small, neat hand upon slips of paper, and by occasionally refreshing his memory with them managed to make creditable recitations.

If you ever go to college, my dears, I trust you will not imitate the custom of Mr. Flack, for he came to a bad end, as you shall see later. Soon after Mr. Hodkinson left, Mr. Flack entered, and Halfred told him his fears of being arrested for slander.

"Pay no attention to him," said Mr. Flack. "He is only trying to air his knowledge. When we study a new subject we think we are the only people who have ever studied it. Delighted with the novelty of the thing, we think that everybody else will be as much interested in it as ourselves. Everybody talks shop. In college we talk foot-ball and chemistry, psychology, Latin and German, and the last joke of the favorite professor. At the Law School they talk law, law, law, until they become as dry and stuffy as those portly tomes they study. It is a disagreeable thing to be told by a jay law student that you are in danger of being arrested for assault and battery if you look cross-eyed, but we must bear with them."

Mr. Flack wiped Halfred's fevered brow, and while doing so deftly picked his pocket of a chunk of gum.

The morning after the important events just narrated, Halfred and Mr. Hodkinson were going to breakfast, the former skillfully balancing a silver dollar upon his chin. Suddenly the dollar fell off, bounded along the sidewalk and leaped into a crack. Without ado, Halfred seized a board of the walk, and with a mighty wrench ripped it up and recovered his coin. But when he tried replace the board he met with ill success, for the nails which he endeavored to drive with a cobble stone either bent or went awry, and in the end the board lay loose and unsecured.

"Halfred, Halfred, what are you doing?" said Mr. Hodkinson, with a fine judicial frown. "Look," and he stepped upon one end of the board, whereupon the other end flew up and promptly hit him a slap which was a little more severe than was necessary to illustrate the point he was to make. "Halfred, a man comes along here, steps on this board, it flies up, he breaks—er—er—a limb. He sues the city for damages. The city comes back on the property-owner, and the property-owner comes back on you. This is a most dangerous trap. You are liable under a multiplicity of statutes and ordinances."

"Oh, I will fix it after breakfast," cried Halfred.

"A valuable life may be lost in that time. If I did my duty I should turn you over to the police; but I will be lenient this time," said the excellent Hodkinson.

I will not harrow your minds with a longer recital of the instances in which Mr. Hodkinson hurled the thunderbolts of the law at poor Halfred. He continued to do so on every possible occasion, until at last fright and terror caused the delicate system of the unfortunate little fellow to give way completely, and he went to bed with nervous prostration.

Mr. Flack was exceedingly vexed with Mr. Hodkinson. He missed his little friend's help very much, and feared that he might get conditioned in algebra for the fourth and last time. So he made frequent visits to Halfred, cheered him all he could, told him not to mind Mr. Hodkinson, bolstered him up in bed, put a pencil in his trembling fingers and got several valuable suggestions on mathematical work.

Mr. Hodkinson did not cease his persecutions of Halfred. He listened for anything the lad might say that could be twisted into an excuse for legal advice.

At length, matters reached a crisis. Little Halfred lay at death's door, his mind wandering in a delirium. Mr. Hodkinson sat by him, studying his everlasting law. As Halfred's mind wandered, he lived over the scenes of his life again. Once more he was reciting verses in Sunday school, and chapter after chapter of Isaiah was repeated; once more he was delivering his graduating oration at the high school; once more he was president of his class, and weighty opinions on class hats and canes fell from his lips. Hark, what is that he says? The lamp burns low, his lips part; Mr. Hodkinson strains to hear. These words are uttered:

"You ought to have seen me run Doctor Baegler up a stump to-day."

Mr. Hodkinson hesitates; his cold grey eyes glitter; the lamp flickers. He bends over the sick boy and whispers in his ear:

"What you said just now was slander."

The cruel words wander through the labyrinthine paths of the delirium and reach Halfred's mind. He utters a shriek; the lamp goes out. At this moment the door opens and Mr. Flack enters. He lights a match. Halfred is forever beyond the reach of Hodkinson. The law of man can trouble him no more.

Mr. Hodkinson was arrested for murder. He used all the legal quips and quirks to avoid his just fate, but was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. When the sentence was announced, Mr. Flack went to Mr. Hodkinson's room and, taking his law books, sold them to a second-hand store man, after which he went to the Silver Eagle Restaurant and bought four bottles of champagne with the money he had received for them. Becoming somewhat exhausted and weak in the knees from having transferred the contents of the bottles to his stomach, he slept in the gutter all night, thereby contracting a severe cold that developed into a number of other diseases, and he died within a week.

There are several morals to this tale, and I leave to you the diverting task of discovering them.

L'Envoy.

[Since writing the foregoing, the divinity that shapes our ends (so that a pair of number ten shoes and a five-and-a-quarter hat sometimes adorn the extremities of one and the same person) has decreed that I study law, and in that interesting work, the Wisconsin Statutes, I have discovered that our state prohibits capital punishment. I make no charge for this legal information and trust that no right-minded person will let this slight discrepancy interfere with the lesson of the tale. At all events, if Mr. Hodkinson is not yet hanged, he deserves to be, and I am ready at any unoccupied moment to assist a committee of our best citizens in lynching him.—W. A. C.]

While he in his blazer and stiffly starched "trou"
Was holding the oars in a seat near the bow.

As he, 'neath the brim of his new yachting cap,
Looked up at the fancy-work heaped in her lap,
And discussed every subject from books down to weather,
He couldn't but wish they were nearer together.

It's getting too dark to embroider, and now

But the cool evening breeze does not chill him, because
His head now reclines where her fancy-work was.

Or shall I go to church for comfort and peace of the spirit?
Exes will follow perhaps, if I work here all morning and evening;

That is the question—shall I go to church or buck physics?—
That is the old, old struggle, of Science opposed to Religion.

BOARDMAN ENG. MIL.

The Championship Game.

NEELY A. PARDEE, '01.

(Won first prize in Badger short story contest.)

TOM sat on the topmost seat of the bleachers. Before him were row upon row of people reaching almost to the side-lines, and back of him stretched the big grand stand, tier above tier of crowded, animated humanity. Thousands of people filled Camp Randall, and carriages and gaily decorated turn-outs stretched along the outer side of the "gridiron." The 'Varsity band was playing Wisconsin's stirring battle song, and when the chorus was reached the crowd took up the strain and sang the "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," with an enthusiasm that would terrorize our mightiest foe. Everybody was full of the spirit of the hour. And well was there need of it, for this was to be the decisive game of the year; the game that must give us the championship.

But Tom could not feel the general enthusiasm. Certainly he was no stranger there, for he could look over the audience and count his acquaintances by the dozens. Yet he was lonely. He did not feel as if he were a part of the great crowd. He knew he should not have this feeling; it came from his own selfishness, he was certain. Yet he could not argue it down and could not acquire the enthusiasm of the rest. Yes, there was no denying it—he missed Joe. In fact, ever since the season had opened Joe and he had been gradually growing apart, not because of any ill-feeling, but because of the manner in which circumstances had shaped themselves. Before this, Joe and he had been good friends. They were still, of course, but Joe had found other companions than Tom and had chosen other associations. It is true he had benefited himself, and Tom should feel glad that he had done so. But it had hurt their friendship, and Tom thought they would never be quite the same chums again.

Two foot-ball enthusiasts on the seat below him were talking loudly, and Tom could not help hearing what they were saying.

"I tell you what," said one, "we've got the strongest team this year that we ever had. Look at our line-up—can you beat that? Look at our full-back, look at our ends! Why, we've got the championship 'cinched.'"

"Yes, and look at our half-backs," said the other. "There's that new man, Higgins—Joe Higgins—he's one of the strongest men we ever had. Have you seen him play? Ain't he a wonder? Next year he'll be the best man on the team."

"Where did he come from?"

"Oh, I don't know. Some little town, probably—no matter where, anyway. There he goes now—just come out on the gridiron. Hasn't he a great build?"

The game was just about to be called, and the "U, Rah, Rah!" was shouted out by hundreds of loyal throats. Tom yelled with the rest and waved his pennant enthusiastically, but it was not for eleven, it was for one. Joe looked so handsome and strong and hopeful as he walked across the field to his position, that all Tom's pride in his friend came up again, and he became as excited as the rest.

Now all are ready and the crowd is silent with interest, waiting for the kick-off. The ball goes sailing gracefully down the field, and the two opposing lines rush together. One of our men has caught the ball, but he is soon downed and the hard, close work of the game begins. Back and forth the two lines struggle with little gain for either. Man against man they work like tigers, straining every muscle, using every device, but gaining little. How eagerly the crowd watches, growing impatient as the minutes pass that so little decisive work is done. The players are now on Wisconsin's forty-yard line, and not many minutes more are left before the first half will end.

Suddenly our men seem to receive irresistible strength, and the ball is forced far over into the enemy's territory. What a play that was! The "rooters" show their approval with the loudest yell yet given. Now the crisis is reached, and the players line up again. The ball has scarcely been snapped when Joe has it, and almost before one can realize it, he has carried the pigskin right through the enemy's center and has placed it fifteen yards nearer the goal. But now we are checked! Checked, and so near the goal! The opposing line stands its ground stubbornly, and not an inch is made either way. The time is almost up; something must be done. For a last time we get the ball. No power can resist us now, and with stupendous force we strike their line, and Joe Higgins, our half-back, plants the ball back of the goal.

The shouting now is intense, and in the grandstand everyone is waving a pennant or blowing a horn. The crowds can with difficulty be kept off the "gridiron." Not a minute more, and time is called. The noise is still kept up; Joe is shouldered and carried in triumph off the field.

The intermission comes as a pleasant change after the excitement of the first half. But the noise hardly grows less, for the band starts up and the 'Varsity song is sung again. Tom is now almost as excited as the rest, for he feels an interest in Joe's triumph as if it were his own. Joe is talked about by everyone. Everyone wants to know about him; he is the hero of the hour.

Tom settles back in his place, and his excitement gradually subsides. Why should he be so aroused? It is true Joe is his friend, but now Joe will grow even farther away from him. The gulf between them will widen, and their total separation will surely follow. These are the thoughts that fill Tom's mind during the intermission, and when the second half begins he looks up just in time to see the kick-off.

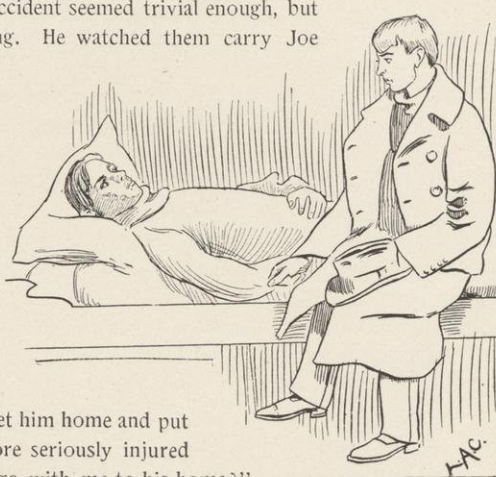

All the men have become rested during the intermission, and the contest starts in again with renewed vigor. How hard they struggle! There is little chance for those brilliant plays that marked the close of the first half. Back and forth the two teams work, each trying its hardest. Every means is used to break Wisconsin's line, but to no avail, for that line could almost withstand a locomotive. And now our men make ready for their great play, a play they have reserved for the most critical part of the game.

With what force they strike their opponent's line! Does it fail? No, not really fail, but the players gather in a group around someone who is hurt. It is the half back, it is Joe! No one can tell exactly how it happened, but there he lies on the brown earth with his hands clenched in pain. A surgeon quickly runs forward and kneels beside him. Then two men take him up, and, supporting him between them, carry him from the field. The incident is of only a moment's duration, and when a substitute steps forward to take Joe's place, the game goes on again.

To the spectators the accident seemed trivial enough, but to Tom it meant everything. He watched them carry Joe around to one of the dressing rooms, and, unable to stay in his place, he left his seat and followed them. He looked into the door; there lay Joe on a cot. He was in a faint, and the doctor was examining him.

"He has been hurt in the back," said the doctor to an attendant, "and quite badly, too, I should judge.

The best thing to do is to get him home and put him to bed. He may be more seriously injured than it appears. Who will go with me to his home?"

"Let me go," said Tom. "He was my roommate awhile ago, and I think he will wish to be with me again. He is my chum, and I can take care of him better than anyone else."

* * * * *

Joe stirred on the cot and presently opened his eyes.

"Is that you, Tom?" he asked, stretching out his hand.

"Yes, Joe."

"I guess I am through with foot-ball. Will you take me home again?"

And Tom answered with a grip of the hand.

The game? Oh, you know very well how it resulted.

—KNOTT INNIT.

On Picnic Point.

C. FLOYD McCLURE.

IN a crisp October morning, Carmichael and Denslow were lounging out from Frawley's just as "Hank" Sanborn came down Langdon.

"Shake it up, you fellows! Square your chest and stretch a leg. This air is a bracer."

"The Point, or the Walk?" demanded Denslow. "I say the Walk. If we get tired over that way, refreshments are available, and we can catch a yellow chariot home."

"Who is thinking of getting tired on such a morning as this? Besides, there is more real country this way."

"And it is our ain coundree," said Carmichael.

Denslow's tone became argumentative. "There is just this difference," he said. "At the end of the Willow Walk there stands a beverage factory. There you may pay your money and take your Hausmann. Over on Picnic Point there is nothing to take in tow, save a crazy cow with crumpled horn."

Sanborn shook his head in despair. Carmichael started toward the Chemical Laboratory.

"Come on, thou mouther of words. Wilt go the milky way, and thou shalt be lord high cow-chaser."

"Neither titled distinction nor emoluments of office can compensate my lacerated sensibilities," returned Denslow. "We will repent of this decision, but by the sign of the ex-bean-can, we will strive to conquer. Vorwaerts, Komraden!"

The trio of truants went on toward the lake together.

Ah, that October day! The flaming banners of the frost-burned wood! The quiet expanse of shining wave; the eager air; the crackle of twigs under foot; the rustle of leaves; the chirp of chipmunk; the whir-r-r of wings of the beavies of saucy sparrows startled from the brush—and hark!—The boom of the tower clock, signaling stolen freedom!

"There is the Stephens herd of cows," said Denslow, just as they were leaving the road for the cut across the fields. "There is nothing for us but the lake, if they should take after us."

"Poor, timid child," said Carmichael.

"It may not be such a killingly funny matter," Denslow returned. "You don't happen to know that there is a nice, large gentleman cow on this plantation, do you?"

"Is it the one that chased 'Hoppy' Moseley into the lake?" asked Carmichael.

"Mebbe not," said Denslow, airily.

"They will be beyond the rise if we hug the shore," said Sanborn. "We must make the Point anyway."

"Only co-eds and Kappa Sigs are afraid of cows," observed Carmichael.

Denslow straightway proceeded to pick his way across the water-soaked and trembling hummocks, when a shout from the fellows caused him to miss his footing and plunge one leg deep into the mire of the marsh.

"What is the matter with you batty idiots!" he shouted, supplementing the outburst with other audible but irrelevant comments.

He regained the hummock, and looked to learn the cause of the alarm.

"The bull! The bull!" shouted Carmichael and Sanborn, pointing wildly toward the higher ground.

Denslow looked in that direction and saw that the cattle had come over the hill. The cows were grazing quietly near the summit. A bull, with erect head and uneasy tail, stood somewhat in advance. He was regarding with unmistakable interest the maneuvers of the trespasser in the quagmire.

As the import of the bull's attitude dawned upon Denslow, the animal emphasized the dramatic possibilities of the moment by pawing a cloud of dirt into the air, and giving vent to a rich, grumbling bellow. It was a handsome challenge. Every cow on the hillside raised her head and rolled her eyes toward the bull in silent and loving admiration. But Denslow, the valiant, in the lull immediately following the defiance, ignominiously scrambled from the slough and followed in the footsteps of Carmichael and Sanborn at no mean pace.

"Not that I was afraid of him," he said, when the fellows had gained the vantage ground at the extremity of the Point, and were stretched at length beneath the trees. "Not that. Rehearsals are a bore. Now, if it had been a regular bill, with the band and the ladies out, there would have been some point in it."

"Do you think he will follow us up here?"

"Who?"

"The bull."

"Likely as not," said Sanborn. "He seemed rather fond of Denslow. If he comes, there will be no retreat. We'll have to jump in the lake, or climb a tree."

"Humiliating alternative," observed Denslow, scraping the mud from his trousers.

"Oh, they won't come down here," said Carmichael.

"But how are we going to get back to town?" sighed Denslow. "We are obliged to cross the pasture. Now, if we had gone by the Willow Walk—"

The clank of a cow bell became audible.

"By Jove! They are coming down here!" exclaimed Sanborn.

Sated with the morning's feeding, and thirsty, the cattle were coming to the portage on the Point to drink. The bull was leading the expedition, and seemed rather proud of it.

"Excuse me while I climb a tree," said Denslow.

Whether the bull had led the drove to the Point for the purpose of beating in his quarry, or whether they really came for water, and the animal only happened to catch sight of Denslow's waving legs as they assisted their owner to the lower limb of the tree, it remains a fact that the unwelcome visitor came stalking toward the trio in a most determined and business-like manner. Denslow sought a higher limb. Sanborn and Carmichael, deeming the position of spectator superior to that of toreador, reached elevated positions with incredible agility.

The bull seemed fairly well satisfied with the situation. He pawed the dust about the roots of the tree, rubbed his broad shoulders against it, grumbled about it, hooked off a few sections of bark, then turned and issued a polite invitation to the lady cows to come up and see what sort of long-legged things he had cornered. The cows found more of interest at the portage, and the boys' caller, to keep up the interest, elevated his head in the direction of his hosts, and made a sound that was a cheerful compromise between a sneeze and a bellow.

"Nice, good Mr. Cowie!" said Denslow, soothingly. "Sneeze again for the gentie, can't you? That's nice man cow—there!"

"I see a cow," began Carmichael, in the vernacular of the primer class. "Is it a nice cow? No, it is not a nice cow. It is a naughty cow! Go away, cow!"

"Does the gentleman cow come to see me? Yes, the gentleman cow does come to see me. But I do not like the gentleman cow. No, sir. Go away, cow! Scat, sir! I do not like you."

"This is cheerful," wailed Sanborn.

"How many rounds at this bull fight?"

"Bring on another horse!"

"Yes, and how much of a horse do you think this will be, when the fellows get to riding it?" asked Denslow.

"We will swear each other to eternal secrecy, when we get out of it," Carmichael ventured.

"Yes—when we get out of it," echoed Denslow, in a doleful voice.

Sanborn uneasily changed his position.

"This limb isn't as broad as Sired's jokes, nor as soft as a two-fifths English Lit. neither," he grumbled.

The bull continued to paw around beneath the tree.

"What time is it?" asked Denslow.

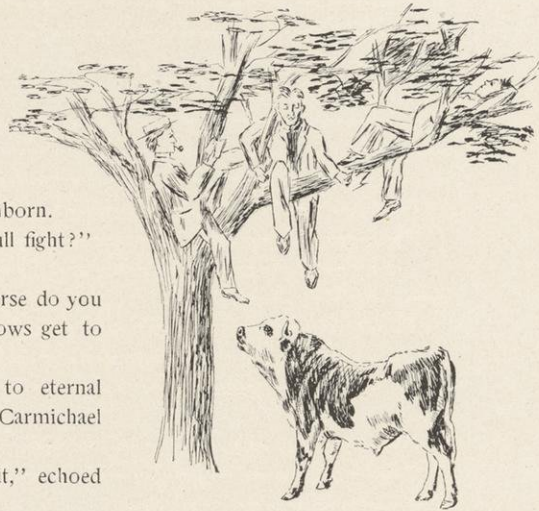

"Half past eleven," Sanborn replied. "I wish we'd come in a boat. We might make a run for it."

"One is enough, thank you," observed Carmichael. "We can't row the one we are in."

"We may live to 'rue' it," Sanborn returned, snapping a lighted match at the bull, who had paused in his circlings, and was looking off at the lake on the town side.

"What does the nice cow see?" asked Denslow, relapsing into primer talk.

"Boats, as I'm up a tree!" shouted Carmichael. "Three row boats, and coming this way!"

"And a boy and a girl in each of 'em!" cried Sanborn.

A shout went up from the trio, and, in real or pretended alarm, the old fellow beneath the tree snapped his hoofs in eager flight. Rejoining his family, the caprice spread among them, and the entire herd, with uplifted tails and kicking heels, climbed the slight slope toward the mainland, disappearing among the scrub-oak that crowned the rise.

"Miraculous deliverance!" exclaimed Denslow, dropping from the tree.

"Good riddance," growled Carmichael, rubbing his stiff legs.

"Deliverance indeed!" Sanborn exulted. "And I scent another! Three boats are one too many for six people. Three people are not too many for one boat! When that party lands, which it is bound to do, there will be nine people and three boats on this point. Three people from nine leaves six; one boat from three leaves two; three people and one boat leave Picnic Point."

"And six people with two boats make a roar," said Denslow.

"Which is all the good it will do them," said Carmichael.

The picnic party of truant Junior Laws, with their "girls," for such it was, came on toward the Point. The three boats were beached in a cove not a hundred yards from the three conspirators. The party of six burdened with baskets and bundles, packages and pails, made their deliberate way beyond the portage, and in the wake of the late departed gentleman cow and his harem. They had not fastened the boats, nor had they even taken the precaution to hide their oars.

"Such trusting simplicity," simpered Denslow.

"Now for the boat!" said Sanborn. "We must do this thing in a gentlemanly way."

"Yes—steal a man's boat like a gentleman," suggested Carmichael.

"Well, what I intend is," Sanborn explained, "that we write 'em some sort of a message, telling them how much obliged we are for the use of their boat, or something of the kind."

"Yes, that ought to please them," observed Denslow, demurely.

"I'll tell you what," suggested Carmichael. "They are Laws—say we draw 'em up a legal document on the subject."

Sanborn produced several sheets of sermon paper from his note book, and the triumvirate proceeded to collaborate. At the end of a busy ten minutes, the following gem had been added to the existing triumphs of (il)legal literature:

"STATE OF NECESSITY, }
BULL COUNTY. } SS.

"'Censor' M. Carmichael and Henry P. Sanborn, being severally duly sworn each for himself, deposes and says:

"That it is a mighty long way back to town by land; that affiant is foot-sore and weary; that he is boatless, and bull-chased, and sick at heart, and in no suitable state of mind to withstand temptation in the shape of a beached boat; that, to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief, a certain Junior Law is trusting Providence, et al., beyond the bounds of reason, when he, the aforesaid Junior Law, leaves, or causes to be left, unguarded, unfastened, unchained, uncovered, and unconcealed from the light of day and the greedy gaze of the now desperate affiant, that certain gondola in which the aforesaid Junior Law and his inamorata hope to return from this far shore.

"Affiant further says, in a burst of confidence and loving gratitude, that he don't care tuppence if he do propel the aforesaid gondola of the aforesaid Junior Law across the pellucid pond to the keeper of 'Varsity boat house.

"Affiant, for himself and his co-workers in this labor of love, further says, that he hopes the aforesaid Junior Law and his inamorata and the parlicepts criminis may have a bully time; and, to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief, he thinks they will.

"Further deposing, affiant sayeth not.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of October, A. D. 189—.

TEDDY DENSLOW,

Bull County, Necessity.'"

This collaboration, neatly folded and endorsed, was filed by Sanborn, as of the day and date thereof, on the seat of one of the remaining boats, with a rock for a paper-weight. Boarding the skiff that boasted an extra pair of oars, the collaborating conspirators pushed out into the lake.

Forms on Picnic Point were seen running towards the cove where the boats lay.

"Dear me! Can some one have taken one of their boats, or has it drifted away?"

"Or can a bull be chasing them?" asked Denslow in effusive interest.

"They're not going to give chase with this handicap!" Sanborn exclaimed, as the men on the Point were seen to enter the boats and row out from the shore.

"Nope," said Denslow. "They're going to take the boats down where the party are picnicking, so they can keep an eye on them. If they'd only done that in the first place, what a lot of trouble they'd have saved themselves."

"And what a lot of trouble they'd have made us," said Carmichael.

Types of Fair Women

SURELY, to an observer of human nature as exemplified at a horse show or a county fair, nothing is more patent than the fact that in the production of prize beauties, as of high-grade tobacco and full cream cheese, our own state takes the lead. Hitherto, nothing has been done to convince a skeptical world of this truth. We have, however, at great expense to the victims, collected for our readers' delectation a large assortment of portraits of Wisconsin's fairest charmers, of which a few are exhibited below. Should circumstances and the public permit, this series may be continued in a future Badger.

Beautiful and surrounded by hosts of admiring satellites, the lot of Miss Fredrika Peterson is indeed a happy one. The only fault detractors can find in her nature is what some term an excessive prudishness, which, however, contrasts most pleasingly with her coquettish features. Miss Peterson is an artistic dresser, and her green costumes of the present season have been the wonder of the town.

Miss Fannie Van Kirk, of Janesville, is a type of the industrious, self-denying young woman of the modern day. Her energies show themselves in public form in the management of the local W. C. T. U. and of the Girls' Prohibition Club. Miss Van Kirk allows herself only an occasional sally among the lighter interests of life. Her sole hobby is the collection of souvenir spoons, of which she is said to possess some rare and valuable specimens.

Shapely as a Venus and vivacious as a butterfly, Miss Josephine Davies is yet most remarkable for her modesty and self-depreciation. The report of her engagement to a leading member of the House of Lords proved unfounded, but it is rumored that she is not unresponsive to the advances of a certain German count. Miss Davies has the responsible position of Chairman of the House Committee and Superintendent of Parlors in Ladies' Hall, and she is the present holder of the long distance telephone osculatory record.

A young and blushing debutante at first sight seems out of place among so much older company, but the precocity and unusual promise of Miss Hattie Crandall well entitle her to the distinction. Miss Crandall is extremely mature and well developed for her age, and she is already noted for a sweetness and a beauty that are certain in years to come to place her at the helm in all social affairs.

A most lovable product of the Cream City, whose breezes and beverages are so conducive to charm of face and form, is Miss Johanna Barr. She is one of the few who combine business success with social prestige. Miss Barr is during office hours a most expert manipulator of typewriter keys; but in leisure moments her beauty, her frolicsomeness and her tact have won for her an enviable position. She has even aspired, and not in vain, to membership in that most exclusive of organizations, the Engineers' Club.

Mrs. J. Claudia Elsom is one whose youthful gaiety responsibility cannot quench nor the cares of family life diminish. Little as a casual observer might guess it, Mrs. Elsom possesses many of the characteristics of the "New Woman." It is even rumored that she has appeared in public in bifurcated attire, but this her friends indignantly deny. For the accompanying excellent likeness, our thanks are due to our esteemed yellow contemporary, the Chicago Chronicle.

By her acquaintances Miss Henrietta Cochems is idolized, but outside this select circle her demure and retiring nature renders her almost wholly unknown. So great is her diffidence that only after the utmost persuasion would she allow her portrait to appear. It is doubtless from her iceberg-like demeanor, as well as from her simple nobility of character, that she has gained the sobriquet of "The Klondike Nugget."

The illustration at the head of this article is a portrait of the famous antipodean vaudeville star, Miss "Patty" O'Dea, who is now touring America. Wherever music hall art is appreciated, there has spread the fame of Patty's Parisian accent and of Patty's wondrous kicks. Miss O'Dea first achieved fame in her connection with King & Jerry's circus, where her feat of kicking over the end poles, repeated at each performance, invariably brought down the tent.

ELIZABETH G. TICKNOR, MADISON.

(Won second prize in Badger high school contest.)

Came a hero, mighty hero,
Clad in armor, strong and heavy—
Nose-guard, ear guard, head-guard, shin-guard—
Ready for a conflict gory.
Brave, invincible, my hero,
Yet to me he bowed his proud head,
Bowed his proud head in the dust.
He who quailed not at the onslaught
Of Herschberger's husky fighters,
Of the Gophers' vaunted giants,
Of Van Doozer's purple-wearers,
Down he bowed his head before me,
Bowed his head and bent his knee.
Cold, indifferent, unfeeling,
Do I see him stretch his hands out,
Stretch his hands out so beseeching,
Do I feel his tight'ning hand-clasp;
Yet I move to him as drawn there
By an impulse unresisted.
Then I see him bend down o'er me,
Then I feel his lips touch my lips.
Life is in that touch, and vict'ry!
Then he leaves me, leaves me standing
On the side lines, all forsaken.
Do I weep, or do I mourn him?
Do I wail, or pine in sorrow?
Nay, I turn to greet another,
Turn to greet another hero.
Fickle am I in my loving,
Fickle in my fond caressing—
I, the players' water-pail!

To Dr. Austin's Dog.

O, be thou atomized, electrolyzed or fused,
Great beast with hide reflecting naught of solar ray,
Thy caudal part to hyperbolic curve induced,
Thy great specific weight forever in the way!
Would many ergs accelerate thy lazy bulk
To vacate now these hallways once for all,
Which were not built that thou might'st crawl and sulk
And generate caloric as we o'er thee fall?
Infernal brute! get out!

THERE was a weary Freshman,
All on a winter's day,
Who went to sleep in German
To while the time away.

The gong, the joy of every heart,
Was hanging o'er his head—
He heeded not the flying time,
Thro' paths of dreamland led;

When all at once it started,
He thought it was the clock,
And made a spring to stop it,
Aber! — —

Ye Episode.

MARION E. RYAN, Wausau.

(Won first prize in Badger high school contest.)

Ye athletic young Man and ye tall, lithe Maiden stroll down ye woodland Lane (vulgarly yclept "Cow-path"). He expoundeth upon hys wondrous Feats of strength (she wondereth at ye size of hys Feet).

Ye Scholar joining them, expounde h upon Prizes he hath taken in Latin and Greek. Ye Maiden walketh silent while ye Scholar and ye Athlete fill ye air with praises of themselves. If ye truth be known, each loveth ye Maiden fair.

"How can she care for hym, short, thin and bandy-legged?" thinketh ye Athlete.

Ye Scholar thinketh:

"What careth she for hym? He knoweth not Greek roots, neither conjugateth in Latin. Hys Hair groweth like Weeds in ye Garden."

"These Men be Fools," saith ye Maiden to hyrself. "Better I like ye Man which thinketh not of hymself but of me!"

Ye Trio reacheth ye Forest-edge, crosseth ye Style and entereth ye Pasture.

"Were it best for us to go?" querieth ye Scholar. "Yonder standeth that limb of Satan, Farmer Brown's Bull."

"Oh! Faint Heart!" quothe ye Athlete. "Would'st flee before yon paltry Beast? 'Tis but ye Ancient Cow."

With quaking limbs ye Scholar entereth ye field; ye Athlete advanceth gayly, albeit hys Heart beateth loudly; and ye Maiden followeth them. Ye Trio gaze affrighted at ye Animal which ye Scholar calleth "Bull," and ye Athlete, "Cow." Ye Beast becometh angry, lowereth hys head, and boundeth toward them, fire in hys eye, his tail in air.

Wyth swift strides, ye Athlete reacheth ye Fence; ye infuriated Beast assisteth hym over. Ye Scholar climbeth ye Tree with agility hardly to be expected in one so erudite, and ye Maiden followeth hym.

Ye Maiden laugheth, and thinketh how shocked hyr Mother will be; she enjoyeth ye Episode. Hyr mind returneth to ye Scholar, and she looketh upward. There sitteth ye Pedant atremble.

"Parallelograms! Isosceles Triangles!" he murmereth, "Thys be a strange, unseemly Predicament." Then he shrieketh:

"Miser, miseri, misero, miserum, miser—!" he looketh down at ye Bull.

"What if thys be ye Mad-Man!" thinketh ye Maiden. Hyr Heart sinketh and then boundeth into hyr prettie Throat. Ye Scholar seeth ye distant Farmer wyth pitch-fork in hand. He crieth at ye pinnacle of hys voice:

"Prithee, hither, Farmer!" Ye Farmer heareth not. Ye Scholar curseth in Italian, Latin and Greek. Ye Maiden calleth ye Farmer. He heareth and runneth to ye Rescue.

“Audit! Amatur! Bonus Vie!” cryeth ye Scho’ar. He repeateth it in Greek and Spanish, which it be not in ye Writer’s power to set forth, for he knoweth not these Tongues.

Ye Bull retreateth, and watcheth ye Captives descend. First cometh ye blushing Maiden and thanketh ye Farmer prettily; next ye trembling Scholar expresseth hys thanks in Latin. Ye Farmer, surprised, whispereth to ye Maiden:

“Methinks he be crazy;” then addeth boldly, “wilt walk wyth me?”

Ye Maiden answereth sweetly, “Yes!”

The Hero of Observatory Hill.

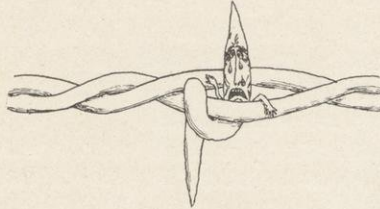

N the brow of the hill, ’mongst cannon grim,
The raw recruits looking up at him,
Proud, calm and stern in their midst stands he,
Bold Captain Mehl of Company B.

In the belt at his side hangs an ancient gun,
A pistol from which the French did run
When Kaiser Wilhelm marched to Paris—
Long years ere Mehl ruled Company B.

Now the battle is on—from hill to shore
The rifles crack, the cannon roar.
Like a thunderbolt falls the enemy
On Captain Mehl and Company B.

He fires his pistol, and fires again,
And at every shot the enemy’s men
Fall headlong, and still with awful glee
Fires Captain Mehl of Company B.

But might was right, and numbers won,
Yet not in vain did he wield that gun;
For we long shall recount and in fancy see
The deeds of brave Mehl of Company B.

THE BARB’S LAMENT.

(Illustration omitted from '98 Badger.)

Stenographic Report of a Meeting of the '98

Badger Board,

Wednesday Evening, March 10, 1897.

Time Set for Meeting, 7:00 P. M.

R. SCHMIDTMAN (arriving at 7:29)—I wish strenuously to insist upon the importance of promptness. The secretary not being present, we will dispense with the reading of the minutes.

Mr. Smith—I guess we'd better. We know just what we did—met and adjourned. (Smiles sweetly. Girls giggle.)

Miss Scribner—The Literary Committee reports progress.

We have compiled our own biographies for the Sentinel, written three Cardinal leaders on the novel features of the '98 Badger, and have sent articles to all the local papers in the state, telling what an honor it is to be on the Badger Board. We have received eight jokes on Pyre, ten on Snow, and three and one-half yards of poetry from Andrew Sexton. We do not think it advisable as yet, however, to spend any time in considering the contents of the book. I am going to write some verses next month.

Mr. Gay—I beg leave to offer an original story entitled, "A Journey to the Center of Nowhere on Astrocentrifugalical Lines."

The Chair—Mr. Gay will do well to confine his attention for the present to advertising the Badger. It doesn't matter what we put in it. Nobody will read it, and if they should they wouldn't under—

Mr. Thomas—MR. CHAIRMAN—

The Chair (trembling)—Mr. Thomas has the floor, but will please leave the ceiling intact.

Mr. Thomas—It's all right to advertise, but I tell you we've got to have a few roasts. There are people in this institution who need roasting and need it bad. They think they're the whole thing.

(Mr. Davies winks at Miss Merrill.)

The Chair—Mr. Thomas is out of order. I will decide what goes into the Badger. The business of this Board is to advertise, and especially to advertise ME.

Mr. Heine—The Art Committee has two letters received from Mr. Moses in Chicago. He has thought that we should to work go. But we have at work already been. We have two posters to stick on the telephone poles drawn.

ON AND ABOUT LAKE SALTONSTALL.

Mr. Thomas—I want to know if the Art Committee has illustrated my “Agrarian Feast.”

The Chair—I shall not publish the “Agrarian Feast.” It is too pointed, and the '98 Badger must be utterly without point. The report of the Business Committee is in order.

Mr. Van Kirk (awakening from a half hour's nap)—The—ah—Business Committee has worked hard. I have been at Chicago and Milwaukee nineteen times in the last two months, for which I desire to present an expense account of three hundred sixteen dollars. I had a good time. Each time I left town I put a personal in the Cardinal and thus advertised the Badger. We haven't obtained any ads, but have two promised. I know the sale of the book will be large, because seven persons have asked me when it was coming out.

The Chair—Now that Mr. McGee has arrived, I should like to ask if the Chronicle Committee is in existence.

Mr. McGee—Mr. Chairman—ahem!—I believe so. We had a meeting last spring, but since then I have been combating the insidious free silver heresy, and the committee had entirely slipped my mind. We furnished all the papers with the names of the Board. I think there are one or two other matters that come within our province, and they will be attended to some day. Our watchword is accuracy, Mr. Chairman, absolute accuracy.

The Chair—Those things are all right, but they are too trifling for discussion.

Miss Merrill—The chairman of the Photo Committee is neglecting his duty. He hasn't collected anything but pictures of senior girls, and it makes me rather tired.

Mr. Smith—Mr. Chairman, that is a mistake. The committee has seventeen photos, and two of them are of instructors. Of course I divided the work, and I took the girls because nobody else could get their pictures.

(Great sensation.)

Mr. Burns—Mr. Chairman, I object. There are five senior girls that told me—

The Chair—You are out of order. The discussion is wandering. We can get along without photos and literary matter, but we must be advertised.

Mr. Davies—Mr. Chairman, there is a great moral principle involved here.

We owe it to ourselves, to our class, and to the world at large to let our merits and the glories of our Badger shine resplendent, refulgent and sublime. [Prolonged applause.]

The Chair—Next week we will discuss methods of pulling the alumni and the Regents. The meeting stands adjourned.

VOL. IV.

ADAMSVILLE, ALASKA, JANUARY 20, 1920.

No. 16:

AFTER TWENTY YEARS

Old Settlers are Soon to Organize.

Brief Sketch of Two of the City's Pioneers.

Mayor Cochems and Messrs. McGee and Hewitt, the pioneers of the town, are considering the formation of an OLD SETTLERS' CLUB. These citizens, it will be remembered, were first to leave college for Klondike. When they said good bye to their friends in '97 they were not expected to be seen alive again, but with characteristic push and nerve they conquered the difficulties and withstood the hardships of those venturesome days. Mr. McGee, who was always considered as destined for fame, has twice served our fair city as street-cleaning commissioner and is now a candidate for alderman in the 5th ward. Mr. Cochems, famed as a stump speaker in his college days, is now serving his second term as Mayor of the city he helped to create.

Methodist Lecture Course.

Remember the lecture to-night at the M. E. Church. "Uncle Jerry" will tell the youths of the snowy Klondike "How we did it in '97." The next in the course will be by Dr. Hjalmar Rued, who recently punctured the tire of his arctic velocipede on the projecting point of the north pole.

Gerhard M. Dahl, the reformed ward politician, will lecture in the Lyceum, Wednesday, on "Echoes from My Past."

Our esteemed fellow-townsmen, Mr. Marcus Jacobson, is about to organize a Kronshagian Society among the writers of our city. An extended study of the works of this great author will be undertaken.

It is rumored that Mr. Robert J. Gay will soon publish a "Key to the Jokes of the '98 Badger."

SCATTERED SNOW FLAKES

Patronize David, the last of the Pierponts, the successor to Blind Timothy, the cigar-store man. Fine pipes, tobaccos, and cigarettes.

Stephen C. Stuntz, the celebrated local author, has just published the twenty-sixth volume of "Mary in Wonderland," or "You May Josh but Don't Joke."

Would you be warmed? Come and hear the heated conversation between Cochems and Bosshard at the Corner Grocery.

Read S. L. Emery's new book, "How to Make a Successful Failure." Facts drawn from personal experience.

Recent advices from the States are cheering indeed. Paul Tratt is at last making a success of life. He is traveling as the slow man with Ringling Bros.

H. A. Harding, fashionable barber. Latest Parisian cuts always on hand.

Chief Templar Jay Page, of the Honey Creek lodge, will be present at the session of the local cold waters next Tuesday night.

Schmidt and Schmidtman, joint authors of "Philomathian Reminiscences" respectfully request people to help them out. Buy a book for charity's sake, since sales do not seem overly rapid and they may come out behind.

Rev. Forrest will give a theatre party Tuesday evening. Rev. Forrest is one of the most popular pulpit orators of the city.

The newly-elected Y. M. C. A. secretary, Mr. Hans Otto Bosshard, is making every possible effort to bring that institution to a condition of prosperity.

At the dime museum, beginning to-morrow, callers may have the opportunity of a life-time to see the world-famed Alexander, surnamed Schmidt, whose upper story is reputed to have attained a size never before equalled in the ages of evolution through which the race has passed.

OPERA HOUSE ATTRACTIONS

WILD'S TRAGEDY.

The Coming Vaudeville

All Varieties of Amusement for Those who Would Be Amused.

Next week, Robert Cicero Wild will play a series of engagements at the Frankenburger Opera House in his original Greek tragedy, "The Villain Stole my Pork and Beans." Frank Watson will appear in his world-famed role of Venus. Ehlman's orchestra will furnish music.

Vaudeville with a Vengeance.

The opening of the new Alhambra to-morrow evening bids fair to draw the largest crowd that has ever been assembled within theatrical walls. The aged but still agile Hugo F. Mehl will perform all the complicated manoeuvres of competitive drill and company front. Lieutenant Monahan will assist with the order "Ready, aim, shoot!" Miss Jessamine Lee promises to convulse the audience by the latest popular melody, "My Father was the Terror of a Small Dakota Town."

The far-famed Spooneretti sisters, Burntonetti, Ramsayello, and Scribnerino, imported at endless expense, never fail to take away the breath of the audience by their marvelous feats of pulling weights and other things. The handsome juggler and snake charmer, Daviesidio, will captivate the ladies.

The curtain falls upon the imposing figure of E. Hildebrand Kronsiago, gracefully posing as the woman-hater. Surely theatre-goers cannot resist a program so attractive as this one.

Editor Wigdale, of the Circle City "Tornado," was recently tendered a banquet by the Arctic Press Association, at which he responded to the toast, "Modern Horace Greeleys."

The Semi-Daily Whirlwind.

Published at Adamsville, Alaska, by the Whirlwind Publishing Company.
CHAS. H. BECKER, - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

Address all business communications to CHAS. F. HAGEMANN, Manager

The long contemplated reorganization of the United States Army is at last accomplished. Under the capable management of Captain and Adjutant O. Cole, Junior, the commissary department has been placed on a firmer footing than ever before, and the other departments have received equal attention. Commander-in-chief Allard Smith has announced the formation of two new companies and a fife and drum corps, the latter to be under the direction of Mr. Orin W. Joslin, who has so long superintended the blowing of the fire-alarm whistles at Circle City. Among the residents of our own fair metropolis, the Athens of Alaska, we notice with pride the names of Hugo F. Mehl, who we are sure will carry all before him in his new vocation, Lieutenant-Colonel Heine, our present efficient Chief of Police, and Lieutenant Mofahan of the Icicle Guards. With such men as these at the head of its military affairs our nation cannot but be successful in whatever engagements it undertakes.

O joyous spring, what a fine thing
Thou really art.

That moves the heart.

Green things are found.

BOOK NOTICES.

The Fox and the Miner: A tale of Life at Wisconsin, by Chas. A. Vilas. 23 cents.

The story deals with the life of the primitive community of the four-lake country. It opens with the discovery of a rich pocket upon University Hill and from this dramatic opening naturally develops the thrilling denouement.

Badger Hunting, or sport with pen and ink, a narrative of personal experience by Schmidtman, Van Kirk, McGee, Scribner and others. Privately printed. This book will be distributed gratis, a copy of the '98 Badger being thrown in with every purchase.

Manual of English Literature: by Hjalmar Rued. A most valuable handbook specially intended for the counsel and guidance of university professors of this subject.

What to do, and Why: A manual for the use of students, by Prof. M. V. O'Shea. This work has been in process of construction for 22 years. Many of the chapters are of absorbing interest, the article treating the effects of Welsh rarebit upon classical studies being especially valuable. Also the chapter on the epistemological effects of the practice of betting boarding-house pie.

Church's Dictionary of Jaw-breakers. All words within the range of ordinary people have been carefully omitted.

Miss Flora one day on moving was bent;
 She was able and willing to pay higher rent,
 So up to fourth floor she delib'rately went.
 She threw out the things that there met her gaze,
 For she's a fresh Freshman whom nothing can phase.
 May she live there in peace to the end of her days!

From "The New Handbook of Collegiate Heraldry," page 298.

ENT to field day, yesterday;
 Sat behind her there;
 Stunningest girl on the hill—
 Bright eyes, jet-black hair.

I was a spectator there,
 No athlete at all;
 But another fellow entered
 Who rushed her all last fall.

She kept looking down at him—
 Made me mad to see her—
 Rubbered at him all the time;
 Acted deuced queer.

He felt sure of winning out
 In the hammer throw.
 Swung the thing around his head,
 Then he let it go.

Didn't go so very far;
 Tried it twice again;
 Never won a single point.
 I felt better then.

A Modest Man.

Mr. Stagg is a modest man. He never blows or blusters and he seldom talks. In fact, Mr. Stagg is famous for the amount of talking he does not do. He can keep silent in all the living and dead languages. He keeps up a head of thinking, though, and in those two particulars—silence and thought—he shows his greatest points of difference from the ordinary athletic manager.—Chicago Times Herald.

He doesn't talk, he doesn't blow,
 This hero modest and shy.
 Tho' the game to the {poorer
 other} team may go,
 He doesn't talk, he doesn't blow.
 Pure college sport he loves, we know,
 But five thousand plunks for a game's not high.
 He doesn't talk, he doesn't blow,
 This hero modest and shy.

ESTERLY — Come on, fellows, it's time to go up to Parkie's Constitutional Rest class.

PAUL R. WRIGHT.

Horace, Odes, I., 5.

O PYRRHA, pray, what perfumed stripling woos thee now?
For whom, beneath thy rosied grotto, dost thou bind
Thy golden hair, in artful sweet simplicity?

Alas, full frequent will he weep, dear innocent,
His former faith and changeful gods, and marvel how
The cruel waters rage, 'neath black and wrathful winds.

Thy charms he now enjoys, and dreams thou art all gold,
And ever free of heart and ever kind, he hopes,
Nor knows that fitful breeze, thy fancy's fickleness.

Unhappy they on whom thy bright eyes gleam untried—
The sea I've fled, and to Poseidon consecrate
On temple wall these lines and garments stained by storm.

Physics Club.

SESSION OF NOV. 18, 1897.

Subject under discussion: "Shall the Club picture be inserted in the Badger?"
Request from Art Committee of B. B. read. Discussion opened by Prof. Snow. "Let me say, I can only hope that you'll all see this. If we should refuse, the Art Committee would feel bad. Just imagine them feeling as bad as you please, and then think of them feeling a thousand times as bad as that. I can only hope that the picture will be a success, and, let me tell you, since I do the work—"

"Ay think it would be a goot thing myself," interrupted Prof. Kahlenberg. "The aferige Padger is a ferry tilute soluzion of poor chokes, and it might be well to haf something more substantial. Ergo, I think we'd better show 'em the pigchur."

But the '99 Board heard of this, and being an exception, in not having the "tilute soluzion of poor chokes," the request was withdrawn.

MISS MASHEK, in elocution, finishes her recitation after the bell has rung:

"But know, if you haven't got riches,
And are poor, dearest Joe, and all that,
That my heart's somewhere there in the ditches,
And you've struck it—on Poverty Flat."

Mr. Caskey—I will meet Miss Mashek privately; the others may be excused.
Prolonged applause follows, Mr. Caskey turning very near the U. W. color.
After it has somewhat lessened, he adds, modestly, "If I may."

“Elevation” at the Hall.

THE after-supper meeting called to discuss the latest phase of self-government has adjourned, and with the importance of regular study hours thoroughly impressed upon them, the co-eds at once seek their rooms by the quickest route—the elevator.

Into it they crowd, four-and-twenty strong. Breathing room is at a premium, and she who is tallest and strongest fares best. They start. Slowly they climb to second floor, more and more slowly toward third, and then—alas! the elevator—most longed for, most praised, and most recent acquisition to our college life—relapses into its chronic condition—a condition of repose.

What a dilemma! Away down there is the second floor; above their heads, just below the top of their prison, the third. And there these brave members of executive boards, these proctors and ex-proctors and proctors-to-be, stand and squeal. Their friends peer in at them from above and declare that such animals are most charming when securely caged. No mechanical persuasion avails against the stubbornness of the elevator. But a man comes to the rescue and hands down a chair. One by one the prisoners mount upon it, and at last by the aid of vigorous pushing, hard pulling, and a few energetic backward kicks they are saved.

Later there appears the familiar sign, “Please take the freight elevator,” while underneath it may be read: “Please take this elevator and give us another.”

All the Year.

AILY over the ice we glide,
Hand in hand, side by side,
Careless of wind and weather;
When frosts are sharp, and winds are strong,
When stars are bright, and nights are long—
Bessie and I together.

Under the arching summer blue
Gently we float in a frail canoe,
Light as a fallen feather;
Under the willows that arch o’er the stream,
Drifting, and dreaming a summer dream—
Bessie and I together.

LOUISE HINKLEY—Prof. Haskins, are you going to ask us everything we don’t know in examination?

PROF. HASKINS—Impossible! You have only two hours to write.

Minnesota calcem pilae remittit et membrana porci vela per aerem dat, quae ab Peele capitur. Ille currit triginta pedes et cum Gophero luctatur.

III. Deinde P. O'Dies, maximus cum pedibus ex finibus figuram ovatam mittit, quam relatam arbiter Minnesotae dat. Plena pars posterior illorum per mediam mergit sed pilam amittit. (Si pronuntiavisset in Cotidiam Rubro, eam invenisset.)

IV. Arbiter pilam Badgeris dat. Gopheri disputant et Harrisunculus legatos ad arbitrem mittit qui dicant si non pilam Minnesotae det, caput fracturum. Arbiter dicit: "Frangat," eodem tempore intuens horologium. Gopheri ad ludendum redintegrant. Wisconsinensis frequentia in dealbatis sedibus cum multis facetiis deridet.

Notes.

(This passage is from the "Historia Collegii Wisconsinensis" of one Wildocates, a noted writer of the nineteenth century. The manuscript of this work was lost for many centuries, but was at last found during excavations of the Adamopolis at Madison. The extract printed is the beginning of Book VI., an account of a battle between two picked sets of champions from Wisconsin and Minnesota respectively. The scientific name applied to this contest is pes pila, lit. "foot ball." It was a favorite method of warfare among this prehistoric people.)

Canes:—A term of contempt. Cf. chap. 10, line 32. Beginners often translate this "sticks" (and not without reason), as though canes were the same in Lat. and Eng.

Rubri fautores:—"The Cardinal enthusiasts." Do not tr. "the red-haired enthusiasts."

Jerrius Riordanus:—The commander of the Wisconsin army.

Harrisunculus:—A diminutive. A. 164, a, H. 216, 3. H. was evidently an inferior general. He is mentioned by W. but three times.

Nummi:—Any sort of a coin, though probably a penny. This practice of tossing up a coin was one of the relics of barbarism that the Americans seemed unable to get rid of.

Metam:—Two sticks stuck in the ground with a cross-bar ten feet from the ground.

Calcem:—"Kick" a la mule (Fr.)

Membrana porci:—Metaphor for foot-ball. The word "pork," Lat. porcus, is found exactly 12 times in "The Lives of Twelve Chicago University Students."

Peele:—One of Riordanus' most trustworthy officers, especially strong in storming a wall.

Luctatur:—Lit., "held a wrestling match." The word used by the Americans was "tackle," but W. was evidently unable to find a corresponding Latin word, save the word for "fishing tackle," which would hardly do.

Publius O' Dies:—A world-renowned warrior, whose name and portrait have been discovered in many Sunday newspapers, historical essays, etc., found by excavators at Madison.

Maximus cum pedibus:—Caution: do not tr. "with very great feet."

Arbiter:—An unfortunate wretch who had been beguiled into umpiring. By careful research among ancient volumes of Life, Puck, etc., we find that these referees seldom escaped with their lives.

Plena pars posterior:—Technical term meaning "full-back," i. e. "he who kicks the ball." There is no connection here with the state of intoxication.

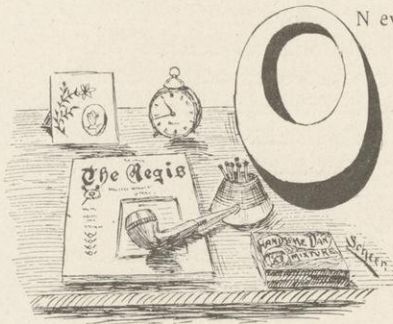

Si—invenisset:—This passage is believed to be a mediæval interpolation, though some editors claim that Hageman bribed W. to insert it as an "ad" for the Cardinal.

Horologium:—Tr. "Waterbury."

Dealbatis:—Lit., "making white." Tr. "bleachers." A slang expression developed from the effects of sitting in the sun.

"Joshes:—The ancients were very fond of this amusement. The facetiae included everything from first-class Badger jokes down to Noah's Ark puns, and were frequently accompanied by pop bottles, cushions, etc.

(NOTE ON WILDOCRATES' STYLE: W. is very fond of the historical present. No reason has yet been assigned, except that it is usually the easiest part of the verb to form.)

fudges.

YOU! You can't sing, man!"

"Can't sing! Just let me tell you an instance. You know down on Langdon?—Well, they keep a stock of fudges on hand at the house all the time. Jack and I bet cigars on stealing some. We went to call one afternoon, and Jack found a box full under the piano. That was mighty strange, but I couldn't let him get ahead of me, so I determined on a bold move. 'The pantry!' thought I.

"Harry and two Juniors came down that evening. It was 11 o'clock. Say, it was dark! We crept around the house and looked up longingly at the windows. I thought I heard a slight laugh, but Harry assured me all was clear. I knew where the pantry was, and the window was rather high, I admit, but the lower sash was up. Harry gave me an awful shove—and it was one of those small windows, you know! Close fit! Talk about squirming—Say! I got in! It was awful still; I struck a match and it sounded like a bomb. I found a pan of fudges. It didn't strike me as peculiar either. I picked it up and leaned out to hand it to the boys. Not a soul in sight—I whispered, 'Boys—Harry!' Silence! Heavens!

"All at once I heard a girl coming down the hall! Swish! Swish! It was Grace! I knew her step! Desperate! Despairing! I started out that window head first. I think I meant to make a mid-air somersault as Paul does when he gets through a quiz. I had that pan in my hands, too! I stuck! I kicked frantically, hopelessly! The door opened! A faint humming tone—! A slight shriek—! 'Oh, girls, come and look at it!' 'A man!' 'Who is he?' 'Oh, dear!' There were about twenty of them!

"Suddenly I felt myself slipping through. Ah, Mother Earth, how I longed for your rocky arms! Some one stepped forward and quickly dropped the sash upon me. If it were a man—!

"Some one chirrups, 'Sing "Farewell Marie."' 'Yes,' in a chorus, 'sing and we'll let you go.' You wouldn't have done it? Well, I rather think you would. Oh, Roy, I sang that song clear through.

"Good-night, ladies!' I waved my feet frantically.

"Sing,' came an imperious voice—and I sang.

"I sang very softly at first, but it echoed against every tree and stone, and the lake vibrated with it.

"Au Revoir,' some one suggested. I remained silent.

"Oh! well'—went on those familiar tones—'We'll lock the door and you can hang there until morning, if you prefer.'

"I didn't prefer. I don't care, it was dark anyway, and I sang out loud. I was rather pleased. Say you never noticed what fine chest tones you can make when your head is hanging parallel to a window sill, did you? They put the window up. They drew me in. They put the lights out, and a dainty hand on each arm piloted me through those well-known halls. When they had launched me on the front porch, one said: 'Good-night, dear. If the reception committee had been on hand sooner, you might have enjoyed the evening better.'

"I had the fudges, and when I fell into our room, Jack and Harry were bucking French together.

"Can I sing?"

The freshie and the Soph.

WILL you walk into my parlor?" said the Sophomore, very sly;
 "'Tis the most distracted looking place that ever you did spy!
 The walls are hung with trophies from ball and game and crew;
 The place is such a nightmare that I'd like to show it you."
 "Nay, nay," said the Freshman, "you know not what you ask!
 For trapping 'nineteen-hundred-one' is not an easy task."

"I'll show you how to dance," he said, "and give you all my strings,
 I'll sell my uniform half-price, or any other things;
 I'll put you on the foot-ball team!—I own the 'Varsity,
 And all the people on the hill they fairly worship me!
 I'll give you all the benefit my influence may gain;
 If this is not enough for you, I'll let you have my cane!"

He went! There was a battle of water, yells and men;
 And you should have seen that Freshman when he came out again!
 'Twas tempting, golden offers got this one in such a fix!
 For a Freshman isn't in it with a Sophomore and his tricks!

"Is jostlin' bad in a hop at the Gym?"
 An Agric asked of me.
 "O, he's not bad, he's a pretty nice boy,
 But his playing's as bad as can be."

Badger War Bulletins.

APRIL 28, 10:29 A. M.—Great uprising in Madison. Railway station stormed. A concerted movement on the Campus is feared.

11:47 A. M.—Worst fears realized. Anarchy prevails. The authorities are in despair. The Premier addressed the mob, urging moderation, but with no effect. Senor Rosa escaped by hiding in the attic.

APRIL 29.—Capt.-Gen. Mehl authorizes the statement that a large fleet of schooners has departed, presumably on a warlike mission.

APRIL 30.—The authorities provided magnificent spectacles this evening to allay popular excitement. Senor Pyre, as Othello Condensed, has become a popular idol.

[Special to The Chicago Record.]

MADISON, WIS., May 18.—Considerable excitement was caused among the students of the University of Wisconsin, to-day, by the publication of the long looked-for University annual, the Badger. The first copies were placed on sale at ten A. M., and within three hours the entire edition was sold. A good deal of interest was taken in the book. At about two P. M., the students began to gather in large numbers on the lower campus. Here they were harangued by Mr. H. H. Thomas and some others who were prominent victims of Badger "roasts." On the campus there was considerable talk of violence toward the members of the editorial board, but no one seemed at first willing to take the leadership in such a task. At length, however, Mr. Marcus Jacobson, of Waukesha, stepped to the front and offered to lead the mob while they took summary vengeance upon the Badger Board. With half a dozen powerful lieutenants to aid him, Mr. Jacobson started in search of the editors. The first capture was Mr. Charles Allen, who was found hiding in the basement of Ladies' Hall. He was dragged from his hiding place and promptly hanged from one of the second story bay-windows. His colleagues on the Badger Board were somewhat alarmed by the fate of their Chairman, and were anxious to seek safer shelter. Mr. Chamberlain defended himself manfully for nearly two hours, disabling many of the attacking party, but was finally overpowered and stabbed with Mr. Jacobson's stiletto. Mr. Philip Allen was dislodged from his position in the tower of the boat house and was obliged to make a dash for his life. He did not prove very successful as a runner, but succeeded in reaching the roof of the Gymnasium. Before he could close the window, however, his pursuers were upon him and he was overpowered. After a short deliberation the leaders of the mob decided to throw him from the battlements. This was done. Mr. Allen fell rapidly, lighting upon the cement sidewalk below, and was instantly crushed to a pulp.

During the afternoon, a large majority of the members of the Badger Board were similarly treated. No little ingenuity was employed by the mob in the treatment of their prisoners. Major Schroeder was impaled upon his sword and hoisted by halliards to the top of the Gymnasium flag-staff, where he still hangs, presenting rather a ghastly spectacle. The young lady members of the board were drowned in a workmanlike and becoming manner in Lake Mendota. A good part of the others were either electrocuted, beheaded, or blown from a cannon. In this way a pleasant and profitable afternoon was spent. The people of Madison and the University authorities made no attempt to stop the massacre, in fact their sympathy seemed to be entirely on the side of the rioters. Opinions were openly expressed that the Badger Board had brought it all upon themselves and deserved what they got. The members of the board met their fate with becoming fortitude and occasionally excited the pity of the great crowd assembled to watch their deaths.

LATER.—It is given on good authority that only one member of the Badger Board, Mr. A. M. Churchill, still survives. He had succeeded in slipping out of the crowd unnoticed and boarding the next train for Canada. The leaders of the vigilantes are confident that he will be intercepted on the train, and that he will share the well-deserved fate of his unfortunate colleagues. The town has quieted down, and the stirring events of the day are already nearly forgotten.

The University of Wisconsin.

Situation.

In point of situation, the University of Wisconsin is unsurpassed. The main body of its grounds, including more than two hundred and forty acres, extends for one mile along the picturesque shores of Lake Mendota. The Athletic Field, known as Camp Randall, consists of forty-two acres, and is adapted to every form of athletic sports. The Lower Campus, fronting the Gymnasium, affords opportunity for daily practice in college games.

Staff of Instruction.

In the College of Letters and Science there are seventy-nine professors and instructors; in the College of Mechanics and Engineering, forty-two; in the College of Agriculture, twenty-five; in the College of Law, fourteen; in the School of Pharmacy, twenty-three; in the School of Economics, seventeen; in the School of Music, ten; in the School of Education, seven. The different colleges and schools are somewhat interwoven, and instruction is given in more than one department by some of the instructors. The Faculty consists of one hundred and thirteen members, not including special lecturers and fellows.

Library and Laboratory Facilities.

Besides the general University Library, students have free use of the University Law Library, of the State Law Library, of the Library of the Wisconsin Academy of Sciences, and of the State Historical Library, in all consisting of about 250,000 volumes. The action of the Legislature during the session of 1897 enables the Building Commissioners to complete the new building for the Historical Society Library and the University Library at an early day. This building, situated on the Lower Campus, will be one of the largest and most commodious in the country. The laboratories in all the departments of science are equipped with apparatus of the newest and most approved patterns. For advanced work, seminary facilities with special libraries have been provided.

Facilities for Physical Training.

The Gymnasium is 200 feet long, 100 feet wide and three stories high. Besides offices, locker-rooms, lecture-rooms, shower and tub baths, bowling alleys and rooms for other special gymnastics, it contains a natatorium 80 feet long and 28 feet wide, a running-track of eleven laps to the mile, a ball cage 165 feet long by 36 wide, and a general gymnasium hall 96 feet wide and 165 feet in length. The building is fitted with modern apparatus, is warmed exclusively by indirect radiation, and is ventilated by means of a very large Sturtevant fan. In Ladies' Hall separate facilities are provided for the physical training of young women. Class work in gymnastics is required of all undergraduate students twice a week during the first two years of the course. This work is in charge of the professor of physical culture and two instructors.

Conditions of Admission.

Students are admitted to the University either by certificate of graduation from an accredited high school or college, or upon examination. For detailed information in regard to the requirements for admission, as well as in regard to fees, reference is made to the catalogue, which will be furnished on application to the Registrar of the University.

Reader, we pray you, do not look
Too harshly on this little book.
Think, as you lay it on the shelf,
You might have written it yourself.
