My clients, however, who are on the spot, have reason to believe that if we refuse to place this claim with those to which it has no relation Colombia will settle it and was prepared to do so. This arises from a Government offense, and I respectfully urge that whether it arose from misapprehension or error of judgment, we may fairly call upon Colombia to make redress without waiting for the ascertainment of claims founded upon the actions of her citizens.

I beg that you will instruct our minister to make this distinction and to use his best endeavors for the settlement of the Star and Herald claim.

I am, with regards, very respectfully, yours,

LEONARD MYERS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Bogotá, May 30, 1888.

SIR: The undersigned, chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States, presents his compliments to his excellency the minister of foreign affairs, and invites his attention to the following statement:

It has been brought officially to the knowledge of the undersigned that the local government of the department of Panama has ordered the levy and collection of a capitation tax on citizens of the United States residing in that department from which the subjects of Great Britain are exempt.

The undersigned is therefore directed by his Government to call the attention of that of Colombia to these facts, and to say that it "insists that there shall be no discrimination against the citizens of the United States, wherever they may reside," since such discrimination is in violation of the provisions of the 7th article of the treaty of 1846, and of the general principle of the law of nations.

The undersigned trusts, therefore, that the supreme Government of Colombia will take early measures to remove this just cause of complaint.

The compliments of the minister of foreign affairs to the honorable chargé d' affaires of the United States, and he has the honor to reply, by means of the present communication, to your polite note of the 2d of May last.

As there are no antecedents in the ministry of foreign affairs which enable it to determine the nature of the contribution of which you speak, and which you say has been levied upon the citizens of the United States in Panama, it is necessary to make inquiry of the administrative authorities of that department.

With this object, the undersigned has just dispatched a telegram to the administrator of customs at Buenaventura, directing him to send, by the first mail steamer, a dispatch to the governor of Panama, requesting information as to the character of the tax, upon whom levied, under what form, and all the circumstances, which will enable us to determine its compatibility or incompatibility with treaties, and with the universal rules of the law of nations.

I promise your honor that as soon as this information is received it shall be communicated to the honorable legation of the United States, together with the resolution in the case.

The undersigned has the honor to renew, etc.,

At the present time we are running the danger of sacrificing our sovereignty, in the inmost sense of this word, as, on more than one occasion, our impatience has decided to try the expedient of prodigal concessions, which being in reality beyond our means, open a wide avenue to the cupidity of foreign speculators, supported by governments which are often not inspired by the wholesome principles of justice.

SIR: I have just seen the following passage which occurs in the message published in the Diario Oficial, No. 7457, from the most excellent President of Colombia to the National Congress which assembled on the 20th instant:

"Hoy corremos hasta el peligro de sacrificios de soberania, en el sentido intimo de esta palabra, porque, en mas de una ocasion, la impaciencia se decide á tentar el expediente de prodigas concesiones que, siendo en realidad impracticables, abren ancha avenida a la codicia de especuladores extraños, amparados por Gobiernos que no a menudo se inspiran en los sanos consejos de la justicia."

REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA, MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Bogotá, July 30, 1888.

Monsieur Le Ministre: Referring to the note of the 24th instant, with which your excellency has honored me, I must inform you that I fail to find in the late message of the President of the Republic to the congress any passage from which it can be logically inferred that that high magistrate imputes to the Government of the United States, or to any other government in special, intentions or acts of an unjust nature. The words quoted by your excellency do not suggest any reason for such a supposition, as they do not state whether they refer to native or foreign governments; whether to governments existing past, or to come; these words do no more than state an existing and undeniable fact, namely, that as amongst human beings there are individuals who are often not inspired by the wholesome principles of justice, so there are governments which act in a similar manner. It is clear that the statement of such a fact gives no grounds for any special persons to consider that reference is made to themno international character, even if they were less abstract than they actually are.

And if to all this is added the solemn, spontaneous, and frequent proofs of friendship which the most availant Refeal Names. President of Calambia, has given to your ship which the most excellent Rafael Nunez, President of Colombia, has given to your excellency's Government, and the very high appreciation in which he holds this friendship, such a supposition must, I think, be considered as absolutely groundless.

SIR: With reference to my No. 133, of the 1st instant, I have the honor to inform you that some general disapproval of the passage in President Nuñez' message has been evinced.

On the 2d instant a discussion took place in the Colombian senate on a proposition being made to send a congratulatory reply to President Nuñez. This was opposed by a number of senators who stated their disapproval to President Nuñez' insulting reference to foreign governments, and on the motion of the president of the senate the proposition to send a congratulatory reply was withdrawn.

On the 6th instant Dr. Nuñez went away, transferring the executive power to Señor Doctor Cárlos Holguin, who had been elected by congress to that post in the absence of Dr. Nuñez. #### DR. CARLOS HOLGUIN'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

Your Excellency. I consider that the exceptional proof of confidence which the body over which you so worthily preside has just given me, binds me almost as much as the oath which in my capacity as a Christian magistrate I have just taken to act as an honorable guardian and faithful executor of the constitution and the laws. I do not remember any other occasion on which the unanimous vote of the representatives of the nation has been obtained for so important a post. Pardon me therefore if at the risk of appearing egotistic I avail myself of so solemn a moment to express my gratitude and offer it to the nation as a pledge of my fidelity and respect. For it seems as if that august body had intended to supplement my lack of ability and merit by its authority, and that the chosen of the people had lent their crown of light and strength to my modest personality as if to raise and render it fit for the position for which it is destined.

It is a universal custom, on occasions like the present, for those who are assuming the chief command of a nation, to give some sketch of the measures they propose to carry out during their period of government.

Although from the fact that I am about to occupy the presidential chair temporarily only I might consider myself exempted from this duty, I think that both the congress and the nation would consider a few words said by me, for the purpose of showing my opinions on the most essential points of government, as a mark of def-

With respect to foreign politics I shall continue to cultivate the good relations of the Republic with friendly nations, religiously fulfilling our treaties and endeavoring to present Colombia before their eyes more worthy every day of their consideration This will be an easy task, since we have no grave international question pending, since the nations with whom we have common boundaries are ruled by just and friendly governments, and since, so far as concerns foreign powers, the wellchosen members of the diplomatic corps which they have sent to honor us by their presence here are a pledge of sympathy with us and of peace and harmony in the future.

My line of conduct in internal politics is duly traced out by the constitution. not intend to depart either from the constitution or from those laws which have been or may be issued in the work of its development. My own wish is that the government over which it is my duty to preside shall be distinguished by a moderate, conciliatory, honorable, and just but at the same time energetic and unvacillating policy when public order and peace are at stake, that under its shelter this exhausted people may seek repose; a government that may be looked upon as a protector to all legitimate interests, but also as a bridle upon all manifestations of disorder and a sword

Promises of liberty would be superfluous. We are all her sons, nursed at her breast, nourished with her spirit, accustomed to her conflicts. She holds an empire of love in all our hearts, and we look forward to see all the germs of welfare and progress spring up and develop under her protecting shield, in this land of her con-quest, on some day like this, for the cause of civilization. This is the reason why men of the political school to which I belong are little alarmed when we hear talk of the dangers which some few and salutary constitutional checks are supposed to cause We reserve our anxieties for the time when it is a question of carrying her to the public square, clad as a Bacchanal, to preside over scandalous and revolution-

Jealous of their honor and friends of truth, the conservative parties everywhere disdain to seduce the multitude by attractive promises impossible to realize and limit themselves to offering and granting in their codes what they are legally and morally able to fulfill.

I shall try to give such support to the works of material progress already begun, and to the new ones which we may initiate as the condition of the resources of the country may justify.

Everything which tends to increase, open up, and rationally protect commerce and industry, to consolidate the credit of the country, and to facilitate transactions between private persons, demands in my judgment especial attention on the part of the Government and very careful study. I believe that we ought, as we have done hitherto, to pay the greatest attention to the education of youth, taking care to multiply institutions destined for such a noble object, but acting, at the same time, with the prudence which your excellency recommends, that they shall be always under the charge of men of good intentions and religious spirit, who will form in the fear of God the hearts of the generations called upon to replace us.

I will cause that discipline and morality to be maintained in the army which have made it the safeguard of our institutions and the guaranty of the integrity and honor of the country.

And, finally, I will protect the religion of our fathers, as the constitution has ordered me to do, and will cultivate with special care the relations so happily re-established between the head of the church and this Catholic nation, accustomed always to seek from the blessings of heaven the realization of its honorable hopes on earth.

These, in short, are the propositions which I have in my mind on taking possession of the exalted position to which I have been called. I shall be happy if I can, in any respect, fulfill the hopes you have shown of me, founded, no doubt, on the opinions to the triumph of which I have devoted the best years of my life. I know that the labor which awaits me is arduous and the responsibility great, but be assured that I will devote to the service of my country all my strength and every hour of my life.

Besides, I have good will and full faith. The active help which I am sure to find in this Congress, which abounds with patriotism, experience, and talent, inspires me with faith. I trust that the political elements which have fought together in parliaments, in the press, and in battle-fields, until the final establishment of the new order of things to day existing in Colombia, will not be dissolved during my administration; but, above all, I trust in the good feelings of the nation, which has given so many proofs that it well understands its own interests, which, in fact, are the only ones which this Government will bear always in mind.

The task which awaits me is, I repeat, arduous; but when it is considered whence we came and where we find ourselves now, one can not help feeling encouraged to continue the march, sure of arriving happily at the end of the journey. What remains to be done is very little compared to what has already been done. To bring Colombia safely out of the difficulties with which it has been struggling for a quarter of a century after a horrible shipwreck; to reunite its dissevered members and give to them cohesion so as to form a nationality with a life of its own; to give it institutions, laws, administration of justice, an army; to put God above all, restoring Him to His dominion and acknowledging His divine authority—all this must be done in order to base liberty on justice and security on order; and after this has been done what can turn us hack or appear to us beyond our power? turn us back or appear to us beyond our power?

Well, then, in order to obtain these benefits the irresistible will of one man (Nunez) and the protection of Providence, of which we ought always to take account, have and the protection of Provinence, of which we ought always to take account, have sufficed. I for my part will pledge myself to follow the luminous track which I find traced out, and I shall descend with pride from this post if whilst I occupy it I so act that my fellow-citizens judge me to be a worthy co-worker with the illustrious chief chosen by God to carry out the greatest political transformation of our history.

These are my aspirations, and there is one more: That not one drop of blood, not one tear may be shad in Colombia through the fault of the Government of which I one tear may be shed in Colombia through the fault of the Government of which I to-day assume the Presidency.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 27, 1888.

SIR: I desire to bring to your notice the complaint of the Boston Ice Company, an American corporation, against the Government of Colombia, which has received the renewed attention of this Department and a fuller examination than it was heretofore possible to make.

As you are well aware, this company has for a number of years supplied ice to the Isthmus of Panama. Its business has been very large, and has been conducted so satisfactorily that there has been and is now no complaint made against it, nor against the character or price of the commodity it sells; nor has there been any rival system of ice selling introduced on the Isthmus to share with it public favor, though there has been the freest opportunity for such competition. Encouraged by this heavy business, developed both from the necessities of trade and by its own good conduct, the Boston Ice Company has invested large sums of money in its works and buildings on the Isthmus, and has established a business the plant and good-will of which may be estimated at $1,000,000.

By the decree of the Colombian Government, as to which you have already been instructed, a monopoly in the sale of ice in the Isthmus, and in Colombia generally, is to be granted to the highest bidder, it being a condition of the sale that those obtaining the proposed monopoly shall renounce their right, if they be citizens of a foreign country, to call on the sovereign of that country to procure redress in case wrong be done them.

I have now to instruct you that the decree is, in the opinion of this Department, in contravention not merely of treaty stipulations, but of the fundamental sanctions of international law. The condition of renunciation of political rights which it imposes on the purchaser of the proposed monopoly is one to which the members of the Boston Ice Company, all of them respectable and responsible citizens of Massachusetts, must refuse their assent, not merely from loyalty but from policy. No citizen of the United States doing business in a foreign land can, with due self-respect, or with due respect to his own country, make such a renunciation.

In Article II of the treaty of 1846, which is still in force, between the United States and Colombia, the respective parties thereto "engage mutually not to grant any particular favor to other nations, in respect of commerce and navigation, which shall not immediately become common to the other party, who shall enjoy the same freely, if the concession was freely made."

The "favored nation" clause takes us to the third article of the treaties between the Republic of Colombia and Sardinia and France, respectively, and to the second article of the treaties between the Republics of Colombia and Peru, Portugal and Great Britain, respectively, in which there is granted to the citizens of the respective countries an unlimited liberty of trade to the cities of the contracting parties.

Article III of the treaty of 1846, as aforesaid, provides that-

The two high contracting parties, being likewise desirous of placing the commerce and navigation of their respective countries on the liberal basis of perfect equality and reciprocity, mutually agree that the citizens of each may frequent all the coasts and countries of the other, and reside and trade there in all kinds of produce, manufactures, and merchandise.

It is further provided that such citizens "shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, and exemptions in navigation and commerce which native citizens do or shall enjoy, submitting themselves to the laws, decrees, and usages there established, to which native citizens are subjected."

Article VII of the same treaty provides:

It is likewise agreed that it shall be wholly free for all merchants, commanders of ships, and other citizens of both countries, to manage by themselves or agents their own business in all the ports and places subject to the jurisdiction of each other, as well with respect to the consignments and sale of their goods and merchandise by wholesale or retail, * * they being in all these cases to be treated as citizens of the country in which they reside, or at least to be placed on an equality with the subjects or citizens of the most favored nation.

These stipulations are re-affirmed in the first division of Article

XXXV, with particular reference to the Isthmus.

In Article XVII, certain articles are specified as comprehended under "contraband," among which ice is not included.

Article XVIII provides that—

All other merchandise, and things not comprehended in the articles of contraband, explicitly enumerated and classified as above, shall be held and considered as free, and subjects of free and lawful commerce, so that they may be carried and transported in the freest manner by the citizens of both the contracting parties, even to places belonging to an enemy. * * *

Article XXXV provides that-

The citizens, vessels and merchandise of the United States shall enjoy in the ports of New Granada, including those of the part of Granadian territory generally denominated Isthmus of Panama from its southernmost extremity until the boundary of Costa Rica, all the exemptions, privileges and immunities concerning commerce and navigation, which are now or may hereafter be enjoyed by Granadian citizens, their vessels and merchandise, and that this equality of favors shall be made to extend to the passengers, correspondence and merchandise of the United States, in their transit across the said territory, from one sea to the other. The Government of New Granada guar-the Isthmus of Panama zens of the United States, and for the transportation of any articles of produce, manufactures or merchandise * * * belonging to the citizens of the United States; that no other tolls or charges shall be levied or collected upon the citizens of the United States, or their said merchandise thus passing over any road or canal that may be made by the Government of New Granada, or by the authority of the same, than is, under like circumstances, levied upon and collected from the Granadian citizens; that any lawful produce, manufactures or merchandise belonging to citizens of the United States, thus passing from one sea to the other, in either direction, for the purpose of exportation to any other foreign country, shall not be liable to any import dunor shall the citizens of the United States be liable to any ties whatever; duties, tolls, or charges of any kind to which native citizens are not subjected for thus passing the Isthmus.

It was to secure these guaranties—to protect investments in Colombia by American citizens from exactions such as that now complained of—that this Government, as is stated by President Polk in his message of February 10, 1847, transmitting this treaty to the Senate, consented to the insertion therein of the guaranty by the United States of "the perfect neutrality of the before mentioned Isthmus."

The condition now sought to be imposed upon the Boston Ice Company would be in derogation of the spirit of the treaty, and it should require the citation of no especial stipulation to induce the Government of Colombia to abstain from any measures the practical effect of which is manifestly the destruction of American property—property bought and established by American enterprise and capital, and productive of so much profitable business in Panama.

The prompt relief given by the United States in pursuance of its treaty guaranties to the Colombian Government, when in such great difficulties in 1885, should never be forgotten; and our citizens in Panama should feel the benefit of it in the justly favorable treatment of that Government.

The imposition of such a condition as that here adverted to is wholly useless as a means to the attainment of any beneficial results. And this Department can not suppose that the Government of Colombia intends to employ it, or to permit it, to work injury to foreigners who may be subject to its laws, or desires to impute to the United States or other powers the design of obtaining for their citizens or subjects, by the protection they afford, anything more than can in justice be demanded.

The creation of such a monopoly as that set up by the decree would be in conflict with that unlimited liberty of trade which is secured to the United States by the treaty of 1846. It will be a serious blow to the friendly relations of the people and Government of the United States with Colombia, and to their desire for closer commercial intercourse, if, under color of laws granting exclusive and monopolistic privileges, such disastrous interference with the natural course of trade in Colombia is attempted, and the effect of such action will be most severely felt along the route of the transit across the Isthmus of Panama, the unembarrassed use of which it was the main object of the United States in the treaty of 1846 to secure.

The effect of excluding American citizens from the free and equal opportunity to carry on "unlimited trade" would not be merely to nullify the most favored nation clause of the treaty. It would be a most unfriendly and destructive act against the citizens of a friendly power, the beneficial effect of whose prompt action on so recent an occasion Colombia has attested by her expressions of thanks.

It is the duty of Colombia to protect against extortion or unequal treatment American citizens who have carried their capital and property to Panama and invested them permanently under the guardianship of her laws. The United States look for a generous and friendly construction of treaty obligations and of the duties of international comity towards their citizens in Colombia, and have a right to expect it.

It is believed that these representations being frankly and distinctly made, will suffice to prevent disfavor being shown to the Boston Ice Company, which has been so especially useful to citizens and travelers in Panama, and it is hoped that you will receive assurances which will relieve this Government of all further apprehensions of such injurious

In this way it is believed that the necessity of a formal protest will be obviated. The United States should not be compelled to proceed further in vindication of the rights of its citizens to just and friendly treatment, and the Department entertains no doubt that when the attention of the Government of Colombia is called to the true nature of the case, it will afford prompt relief.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 53.] Seoul, Corea, September 30, 1887. (Received November 10.)

SIR: To-day at 3 o'clock p. m. I had the honor to dispatch to you a telegram reporting that the departure of the recently appointed Corean envoy to the United States had been interfered with by the Chinese minister at Seoul, acting under the instructions of the Emperor of China.

It was publicly announced in Seoul in the official gazette on that date that Mr. Pak Chun Yang had been appointed by His Majesty the King of Corea envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United Since that time Mr. Pak and his friends have been very active making preparations to set out on the mission, the King taking the greatest interest in the matter. The minister's suite was fully formed, all the secretaries and interpreters being appointed.

At the King's urgent request, Dr. H. N. Allen, one of our best and most useful American residents, was induced to accept the second place in the mission with the title of American secretary. Dr. Allen repaired with his family to Chemulpo, there to join the minister and sail on the 27th instant, and two other members of the mission had gone overland to Fusan there to attach themselves to the suite, when on Saturday last the minister, having taken formal leave of His Majesty, retired immediately without the walls, as is their custom, to leave his capital city for Washington.

The Chinese minister, since his visit to Chemulpo professedly to leave for China in August last, as reported in my number 51 of August 23, has been in seclusion almost the whole of the time, but within the last ten days he has made his presence known by his efforts to interfere with the mission to America.

He importuned the King, as I am informed, to change his purpose, but the King insisted that the minister should go, even after Mr. Yuan, the Chinese minister, had reported to him a telegram received by him from the Viceroy Li Hung Chang.

Thave obtained a reliable translation of Mr. Yuan's note communicating this message, and have the honor to inclose a copy herein, and a second telegram reported as having been received from the Viceroy, by order of the Emperor, demanding that Corea must first obtain China's consent before she sends ministers abroad.

A correct translation of Mr. Yuan's note, containing a copy of this telegram, is also inclosed herewith.

When Mr. Pak had gone out of the city gate he was met by Chinese officers, it is said, and was induced to delay his departure. Heremained outside of the walls, I am informed by Coreans, two or three days, when he was summoned back by the King, who is extremely anxious to have his minister go, and has sent me messages every day that he would send him; but he has been led to believe that China will make war on him, and he knows that without assistance he could offer but a weak defense.

On Tuesday, accordingly, I wrote a note to Mr. Yuan, in respectful terms, expressing my surprise at what I had learned to be his course in the matter of the Corean mission to the United States, citing the terms of the treaty and the instrumentality of the Viceroy in effecting the treaty and his knowledge of its provisions, and asking why he should discriminate unfavorably against us as between the United States and Japan; that no objection had been urged to a minister going from Corea to the latter country. Inclosed I transmit a copy of my note.

On my return to the legation from the telegraph office I found an official letter in answer, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, setting forth what he understands to be the facts, and denying that he prevented the departure of the minister, but setting up the claim of the suzerainty of China and the necessity of her consent before Corea may send mis-

SEPTEMBER 23.

To-day at 9 o'clock I received from his excellency the Viceroy Li Hung Chang the following telegram:

"I have received by telegram, through Tsung-li Yamen, the following imperial order: Corea is sending ministers to western countries. She has certainly first to ask our permission, and after getting it, to send them.

"This would be the way for a dependent State to act.
"Let the Corean Government know this as soon as possible, so that it may be able to act in accord with the imperial order."

Having received this, I feel it my duty to officially inform the Corean Government. Please kindly take notice of this and carry out the imperial order.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES Seoul, Corea, September 27, 1887.

SIR: More than a month ago it was publicly and officially announced by the Corean authorities in Seoul that Mr. Pak Chun Yang had been appointed by His Majesty the King of Corea minister plenipotentiary to the United States. On the 16th instant I received a dispatch from the Corean foreign office, informing me officially of the appointment, and saying that the minister would proceed at once to Washington. The minister's suite was completely formed, the secretaries duly appointed, one of whom is Dr. H. N. Allen, an American citizen, who, in pursuance of his appointment, has disposed of all his property in Seoul at a sacrifice and left the capital with his family for the port of Chemulpo, where he expected to join the minister and sail immediately for America. I am advised that his excellency the minister had taken formal leave of his sovereign, preparatory to departure, when, at the last moment, I learn to my surprise that he is not to depart, and that the cause is interference of your excellency, acting officially under authority of His Imperial Chinese Majesty's Govern-

Will you kindly inform me whether it be true that you have prevented the sending of the minister to the United States, as His Majesty the King of Corea was about to

of the minister to the United States, as his majesty the king of Corea was about to do, and whether you have been directed by your Government to do so? Such a course on the part of the Chinese Government could not but be surprising, when we consider that the treaty between the United States and Corea, largely brought about through the kindly instrumentality of his excellency the Viceroy Li Hung Chang, to whom all its terms were fully known, expressly provides that it the high contracting newspapers are a consisted dislocation respectively. "the high contracting powers may each appoint diplomatic representatives to reside at the court of the other, and may each appoint consular representatives at the ports of the other which are open to foreign commerce at their own convenience.

Again, I am unable to conceive upon what ground China would make a discrimination between the United States and Japan unfriendly to the former Government. A minister was sent by His Majesty the King of Corea to reside at the court of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Japan, without objection from the Chinese Government. It is difficult to believe that the Imperial Chinese Government has adopted a course towards the United States in this matter so at variance with its friendly and considerate conduct in the past, and with the expressions contained in their treaty of friendship which have been so long observed.

I have, etc.,

HUGH A. DINSMORE, Minister Resident of the United States.

HIS IMPERIAL CHINESE MAJESTY'S RESIDENCY, Seoul, 30 September, 1887 (14th day, 8th moon, 13th year, Kwang Sü).

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your dispatch No. 28 of the 27th instant, in which the contents have been carefully noted.

In reply I beg to say that I have heard all along about the same that you did with reference to the official announcement of Mr. Pak Chun Yang as having been appointed minister plenipotentiary to the United States, and that the secretaries and the minister's suite were completely formed.

But as to your statement that "when, at the last moment, you learned with surprise that the minister was not to depart, and that the cause was my interference, acting under instructions from His Imperial Chinese Majesty's Government," I can not explain your surprise otherwise but that you are not acquainted with its full particulars, which I will hereafter explain to you.

In the year of 1882, and the eighth year of His Imperial Majesty, the reign of Kwang Sii, my Imperial Government granted special permission to the King of Corea to estabkish a treaty of peace and friendship with the United States, and wherein it distinctly declares, and your Government acknowledges, Corea as a vassal State to China, and that any of her obligations to China shall be carried out without the slightest interference from other treaty powers, and I presume that you were aware of this before your arrival in Corea.

At the present circumstance, Corea sends missions abroad to all foreign courts when she has complied with such obligations that are binding her to China, and such obligations shall be performed without the slightest interference on the part of your Government.

Further, permit me to say that when Corea sent the minister to Japan my Government were informed of its proceedings after the mission had left Corea, and my Government had not but more than received the information, and had not even time to give it a reply, when again we hear that a minister plenipotentiary had been appointed to the United States. Therefore my Government, thinking that Corea had no longer remembered her obligations to China, telegraphically instructed me to inform the Corean Government to perform her duties and abide with the etiquette of a tributary state. I am not aware that the mission had been prevented, and moreover I am not aware that I prevented the sending of the minister to the United States.

It is the sincere desire of my Government to be on the friendliest of terms with all powers, and hope that you will be convinced that we make no discrimination between one country and another, and as to your statement that China makes a discrimina-tion between the United States and Japan, it is only because your excellency is not aware of the full details of its proceedings and has been caused a most unnecessary uneasiness and surprise.

SIR: I have received your dispatches Nos. 48, 49, and 51, of August 20, 21, and 25, 1887, and your telegram of the 5th instant, the purport of which is not clearly understood, concerning the appointment of Corean envoys to the United States and Europe, and the political situation in Seoul in consequence of the King's action.

While, as I have already observed, your telegram is not wholly intelligible, yet when taken in conjunction with your dispatches Nos. 48, 49, and 51, enough is known to warrant an expression through the United States legation at Peking of surprise and regret at any obstruction by the Chinese Government to the sending of a Corean envoy to the United States under article 2 of the treaty between the United States and Corea, concluded May 22, 1882.

Further developments are awaited. Meanwhile you should advise

No. 63.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Seoul, Corea, October 15, 1887. (Received November 25.)

SIR: Referring to the matters reported to you in my No. 53 of September 30, it may appear to you that I acted indiscreetly in addressing the Chinese minister, and by that means eliciting the discussion or correspondence which followed, making a positive issue between us, but to me it seemed unavoidable.

In the first place, I was aware that Mr. Yuan and his coadjutors were using the arguments set up in his dispatches to me with reference to our recognition of Corea as a dependent State, for the purpose of affecting the public mind, both foreign and Corean, favorably to the pretensions of his country, pretensions not authorized by the past history of the countries of Corea and China, to assist in bringing about a relation which has never before existed. A printed document has been circulated, I do not know by whom, purporting to be the text of the American Corean treaty, in the first paragraph of which appears the statement that "the United States recognizes Corea as a dependency of China." I saw one of these in the possession of the acting consul-general for Great Britain.

During the spring and summer I was several times spoken to by the Coreans with reference to their intention of sending a minister to the United States, but did not encourage it; at the same time I offered no discouragement. After the minister was sent to Japan, however, without the slightest objection from China, and I had met the Chinese minister at entertainments given in honor of the envoy to Japan, and I saw him take final leave of him with demonstrative congratulations, I confess I was taken by surprise when the mission to the United States was interfered with. The King informs me, through messengers, that the minister will certainly go in a few days; his son is quite ill at present, and is in imminent danger. If there are evidences of convalescence, I am informed that the minister will leave for America within a fortnight.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that on the 30th August I left Nagasaki in the flag-ship for Chemulpo, Corea. I had previously informed our minister to Corea, Hon. Hugh A. Dinsmore, of my intended visit, and he wrote me that as the King of Corea had never heard a foreign band, he had expressed a desire for me to take our band to the capital when we arrived at Chemulpo. I arrived there on the 1st September. The only way of reaching Seoul overland is in chairs, carried by four coolies, over a very rough road. I therefore hired two junks, one for myself and officers, and the other for the band, and, in tow of the steam-barge and steam-gig, started by river for Seoul at 1 p. m. on the 5th instant. The trip would have been made in nine hours if we had not been stopped by a sand-bar. At 11 a. m. of the 6th instant we arrived at Mapu, 3 miles from Seoul, and at the head of navigation of the Seoul River. Mapu is the port of entry for the capital. Chairs for the officers were sent down from Seoul and horses for the band, and we reached Seoul at 3 p. m. of the 6th instant, where most of the officers and the band were quartered at

On Thursday, September 8, at 3 p. m., an andience was had with His Majesty and the Crown Prince, at which the King expressed the highest appreciation of the United States and the cordial manner in which his visiting countrymen were received and treated on their arrival in the United States in September, 1883. His Majesty and treated on their arrival cases and Bale Chap Vanca a ministent a represent Chapen the United States legation. informed me that he would soon send Pak-Chun Yang as minister to represent Chosen at Washington. In reply I stated to him that our Government and people felt a great interest in the progress and welfare of Chosen and would welcome his representative most cordially. His Majesty and people always speak of their country as Chosen, not Corea. Our band accompanied us to the palace and played for two hours much to the delight of the King. The reception was followed by a banquet, the much to the delight of the King. The reception was followed by a banquet, the dances of the country by boys, accompanied by a native band with string and reed instruments. The cordiality of the King, the banquet, and the dancing that followed were novel and interesting and lasted until after 10 p. m. The King is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, progressive in all his ideas, and anxious to adopt our customs, fostering trade with us, and encouraging his subjects, who seem to be a docile, good-natured people, to advancement in their different trades and callings. So far as I could learn foreigners are as safe and as well treated in Chosen as they would be in their own countries. would be in their own countries.

We started on our return by river at 11 a. m. on the 10th September, and reached the ship at 4 p. m. on the 11th instant, and left Chemulpo for this port on the 15th, where we arrived at 2.30 p. m. on the 17th September. I can not close my communication without expressing my obligation to Hon. Hugh A. Dinsmore, our charge. He has been ill for some time, but accompanied and introduced us to His Majesty and remained until the close of the evening's entertainment. His hospitality was unbounded, and his genial and cordial welcome will long be remembered by myself and all who accompanied me. The following is a list of officers who went with me to Seoul:

Captain Matthews, Lieutenants West, Mason, and Wadhams, Captain Mannix, Lieutenant Badger, Passed Assistant Engineer Denig, Ensign Hoogewerff, Assistant Surgeon Norton, Ensign Shoemaker, and Naval Cadet Dodd, of the Brooklyn; and Lieutenant-Commander Bicknell, Passed Assistant Paymaster Smith, First Lieutenant of Marines Wainwright, and Ensign Poundstone, of the Essex.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Seoul, Corea, November 11, 1887. (Received December 22.) SIR: As reported to you in my disparch of October 15, 1887 (No. 63), Hon. O. N. Denny, vice-president of the Corean home office and foreign adviser to the King, left Seoul some days before that date for Tientsin, the place of the Viceroy Li Hung Chang's official residence. He returned after an absence of some two weeks, and shortly after his arrival in Seoul I was invited, with Mr. Woeber, the Russian chargé d'affaires, by Mr. Denny to an interview with him upon the subject of the missions which His Majesty the King of Corea has undertaken to establish in the United States and in Europe. At this interview Mr. Denny kindly gave us a history of his conference with the Viceroy Li, at Tientsin, upon the subject of the missions already referred to, as well as the proposed opening of a port by the Government of Corea at Pyong An, in the north of Corea, which is greatly needed to develop and enlarge the commerce of the country and prevent the extensive smuggling that is practiced in that part of the Kingdom, principally by Chinese.

The position of the viceroy in behalf of China and of the Tsung-li Yamên as expressed by him is substantially as I have reported to you hitherto, namely, that China's permission should first have been sought and obtained.

In this connection I have the honor to inclose a translation of a communication made by Yuan Sii Kwai on the 21st ultimo to the Corean foreign office, setting forth the language of a telegram received by him from the viceroy Li Hung Chang reporting the orders telegraphed to him by the Peking Government, expressing assent to the establishment of legations abroad with ministers resident only, and upon compliance with certain supposed forms, but arguing against it.

I have the pleasure to inform you that the minister will sail from Chemulpo on the 13th instant on the U.S.S. Omaha, for Nagasaki, at which port he will take passage on mail steamer, via Yokohama, to the United States, and that he will bear credentials from His Majesty the King of Corea as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipoten-

SEOUL, COREA, October 21, 1887.

Yuan Sü Kwai makes official communication to the Corean foreign office. On the 21st of October I received from the viceroy Li Hung Chang a telegram stating that on October 19 he had received instructions from the Imperial Government of China, saying: "The Corean Government has notified us of the circumstances of the affair, and have expressed their disposition to obey. We are very glad. As Corea has concluded treaties with foreign powers, the treaty powers have mutually the right to send ministers, so if the Coreans appoint ministers and send them they may do so. But on the other side the financial resources of Corea are not great. Her trade is not in a prosperous condition, and the needs of the country grow year by year, and thereby the country may become by and by involved. If, therefore, they are going to send ministers to foreign countries who will have but little to do, it will be necessary to increase more and more the public expenditures; therefore if expenses are not curtailed it may happen that it may be necessary to recall them or seek to secure loans. The debts and the poverty will increase daily, and the Government may not have the means to meet its liabilities. If this news should reach foreign countries they certainly would laugh at the Corean representatives, and thereby a spot would be placed upon the honor of the country. Certainly they have not considered

With regard to the appointment of the ministers and their position the forms must be observed which apply to Corea as a dependent State.

"Li Hung Chang has already reported by telegram that Corea will act according to the regulations. At the same time Corea must address itself to Li Hung Chang in other matters which may arise in the future, to consult with him and obey his instructions, then all will be well.

"Besides the instructions I have received from the minister of ceremonies I must say myself (Li Hung Chang) that when Corea has firmly decided to send ministers, they must be ministers resident only, and in no event ministers plenipotentiary; the rank must be of diplomatic agents of the third class as laid down in international law, to show by this means the difference between Corea and China. In this way I do not object. I have told this to Mr. Denny in a personal interview that he may inform the

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 73.] Seoul, Corea, November 17, 1887. (Received January 4, 1888.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a translation of copy of an extract of a telegraphic message from the viceroy Li Hung Chang to Yuan Sü Kwai, the Chinese representative in Seoul.

It will be seen that in this telegram Mr. Yuan is directed to instruct the Corean Government, through the foreign office, that their representatives abroad must first present themselves to the Chinese minister and be introduced by him at the foreign office. That in all official and social assemblies the Corean "representative" shall yield precedence to the Chinese "minister;" and that upon affairs of importance touching the business of the service, the Corean "representative" shall always advise with the Chinese minister "secretly" before taking action.

In this connection I take occasion to inform you that the Corean minister to the United States sailed yesterday morning with his suite

First. After arrival at his post, the Corean minister must go first to the Chinese legation and ask the Chinese minister's assistance, and call together at the foreign office. After which, he may call at his pleasure and convenience.

Second. If there should be any reception, or official assembly or dinner, or toasts drunk, or any mutual meeting, the Corean representative must take a lower place than the Chinese representative.

Third. If there happens to be any serious question, the Corean representative must consult secretly with the Chinese representative, and discuss the affair with him. This rule is absolutely required according to the rules of a vassal State. It does not concern the other Governments, and they will not be able to know of it.

Now, this question has not yet been decided by imperial decree; but I must advise it in the spirit of our friendly relations. China and Corea must nourish a kindred feeling for each other and assist each other. Ministers being selected from Corean dignitaries, they should always show confidence and respect to each other. should be the proper course for the Corean representative.

This you shall first communicate to the Corean foreign office, and it may hand it over to the King, who may order his proper officers to act accordingly.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 3, 1888.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of the temporary regulations for the prevention of the introduction of infectious diseases at the treaty ports of Corea which has been handed to me by the German chargé d'affaires here.*

The German Government considers these regulations as on the whole acceptable, but takes exception to two of the provisions.

(1) There is no clear definition given of what is meant by the words "infectious diseases" used repeatedly in the regulations. They might literally cover various diseases, such as syphilis, which are not within the intent of the regulations. Germany suggests an additional clause defining infectious diseases as being cholera, plague, yellow fever, and small-pox, and nothing else.

(2) Disinfection of crews and passengers as provided in article 6 is not now considered of much value by the best authorities. man chargé d'affaires suggests that this article either be omitted or else modified so as to show exactly what kind of disinfection is intended, e.g., hot bath and simultaneous disinfection of clothing by steam, etc., the object being to avoid vexatious and unnecessary delays.

The criticisms of the German legation appear reasonable, and correspond nearly with the diseases which were recognized as infectious or contagious by our former National Board of Health, as published on page 480 of our Consular Regulations for 1881, the latter, however, containing typhoid fever, which in the form of ship fever might be very impor-It might also be well to consider whether scarlet fever might not advantageously be added to the list.

A consultation on your part with your diplomatic colleagues and a mutual exchange of views in regard to this question might lead to an advantageous modification by the Corean Government of the regulations in question, which I should be glad to be promptly informed of, together with any opinions on the subject which you may be able to obtain.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 73, diplomatic series, of the 17th of November last, touching the confidential communication to you of a telegraphic message from the Viceroy Li Hung Chang to the Chinese representative at Seoul in regard to the formalities prescribed for the presentation of the new Corean minister in the United States, was received here on the 4th instant about the time the Corean minister and suite landed at San Francisco, where every courtesy was shown them by the officials of the Treasury.

Mr. Pak Chung Yang arrived in this capital on the 9th instant, and on the next day addressed me a note asking an interview to arrange for the presentation of his credentials to the President, to which I replied the same day, assenting to his wish.

On the previous day I had received from the Chinese minister a note reciting his instructions with regard to his relations with the Corean envoy, agreeing in the main with the statements of your dispatch, except that Mr. Chang Yen Hoon makes no reference whatever to the order of procedure to be observed on ceremonial occasions, but this is immaterial, inasmuch as the rule of this Department arranges diplomatic agents in the order of seniority according to the date of their formal reception.

The Chinese minister called on me the day before that agreed upon by me and the Corean envey for the latter's visit, and made abundant expression of his satisfaction and that of his Government with the manner in which the Corean minister had been received by us. He indicated no desire or intention whatever to control or interfere with the Corean envoy's action or official reception here, excepting by the implication of the tender of the thanks of China for courtesy toward what she claims to be her vassal.

Therefore as the United States have no privity with the inter-relations of China and Corea, we shall treat both as separate governments customarily represented here by their respective and independent agents.

Upon the appointed day, Mr. Pak Chung Yang, with his secretaries and suite, was received by me at this Department and the delivery of his credentials arranged for the 17th instant, when, at 11 o'clock, the Corean envoy was presented by me to the President, and the customary ceremonial addresses were made.

I inclose for your information copies of the correspondence* on the subject exchanged with the Corean and Chinese envoys, as well as of the address of the Corean minister and the President's reply, adding a printed copy of the recently issued diplomatic list of this Department, showing the relative position of Mr. Pak with regard to precedence.

A diplomatic dinner was given by the President on the 19th instant, after the Corean minister's presentation, but as the invitations had been issued some time before his arrival in the United States, Mr. Pak's name was necessarily omitted. I mention this for your information merely, so that in the event of any reference being made to this omission by the Corean foreign office in conversation with you, you may understand that no possible significance can attach to the fact.

Our efforts will not be wanting, Mr. Minister, to strengthen the ties of friendship and to develop relations beneficial to both countries.

As the worthy representative of a friendly nation I bid you, Mr. Minister, a cordial welcome to this capital, where I trust you may find health and comfort in your resi-

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Seoul, Corea, April 21, 1888. (Received June 4.)

SIR: Mr. Rockhill, in his No. 58 of February 5, 1887, called the attention of the Department of State to the efforts on the part of the missionaries in Corea in the prosecution of evangelical work. The matter is of growing importance.

At various times I have gently remonstrated against imprudence and called attention to the danger of injury to the cause they seek to promote from an exhibition of premature zeal.

My admonitions have been kindly and respectfully received by these very worthy people.

In the beginning assemblies for religious worship were only held for the foreign residents, but attended more or less by Coreans without exciting objection from the authorities; now prayer meetings are held for the natives and, as I infer, the services conducted in the Corean language.

Moreover, occasional journeys are made into remote parts of the country, upon passports, with a view, as is now confessed, of religious teaching and administering baptism and other rites. The natives show a high appreciation of the benefits resulting from schools and hospitals, and with the exercise of patience and regard for the laws and wishes of the people on the part of those engaged in them I think they will furnish a sure avenue to religious freedom.

The Methodist mission have a school which is doing excellent work. Although a mission school and entirely independent of government patronage, it has had a name bestowed upon it by the Government ir token of its recognition.

For the purposes of this school a large and handsome building, or cupying a sightly eminence and built after the western style of architect ure, has been erected at an expenditure of several thousand dollars. The Coreans watched its progress of construction with great interest and with anxiety. I was frequently asked if the building was intended for a church.

I have been approached to know if the foreign residents would be authorized in erecting a building purely for a house of worship avow edly for the use only of foreigners. If our people have a right to build churches it must be derived by virtue of "the most favored nation clause of our treaty, from the provision in the English treaty, and per haps the German and Russian granting "free exercise of their religion." The subjects of neither of these powers have as yet undertaken the building of houses of public worship and the opening of Seoul (Han Yang) to foreign commerce is liable upon the happening of a future contingency to be suspended or rendered inoperative.

The matters herein presented will doubtless have discussion very soon between the Corean and French authorities.

The French missionaries have purchased elevated ground overlook ing the palace and in close proximity to an old temple, and are proceed ing to erect a building, it is said, for school and religious uses. Because of the two facts mentioned in connection with the location, the Coreans are greatly exercised and have protested against the occupation of the ground. For two months the matter has been under discussion and the King has offered, if the missionaries will recede from their purpose, that he will refund the money they have paid for the lots and present them with other ground, to be selected by themselves in the city without price. All overtures, however, have been repulsed thus far and the work is still in progress.

The Coreans look anxiously to the arrival of Monsieur Colin de Plancy, the French representative, who is expected to arrive in June next, for an amicable settlement of the affair.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, with translation, a copy of a note received from the foreign office on the 25th instant informing me of the knowledge of the Corean Government that Americans employed as teachers in the schools are engaged in evangelical work not only in the schools but amongst the people throughout the country as well, protesting against it, and requesting my official interference to prevent it.

It is claimed that schools and religious teaching are not authorized by the treaty, and the Government claims the right to restrict schools to such as may be sanctioned by it.

It is my opinion that there is no desire to interfere with the schools already established further than to prevent the inculcation of the Chris-In this connection I would respectfully call attention to tian religion. the French Corean treaty, in which the right to study and teach laws, arts, and sciences is accorded by the latter Government. (I have not a copy of the treaty in the legation.)

In my reply to the note from the Corean foreign office I wrote that I would exercise my fullest influence and authority to effect an observance of the rights of the Corean Government on the part of our citizens and to inspire them with respectful consideration of its wishes. (A copy of my note is inclosed.)

Mr. Appenzeller and Mr. Underwood, of the Methodist and Presbyterian missions, respectively, having left Seoul some days before for the north of Corea with the purpose of evangelical work, I sent them a note advising them of the correspondence herein reported and requested that they would accede to the Corean Government's demands at least until such time as their right to engage in the work of Christianizing the natives shall appear established. My note was accompanied by requests from their respective boards for their return to Seoul.

cation to the American minister.

The Corean Government understands perfectly well that the teachers staying in Seoul are teaching the Christian religion in the schools, and spreading the same over His Majesty's Government and imparting it to His Majesty's people. Teaching religion and opening schools of any kind are not authorized by the treaty, therefore we forbid severely any school whatever except it be authorized by our Government, and we will not allow religion taught to our people.

Will your excellency kindly advise the American citizens, who deliver their religion, to consent to what our Government demands, that there may be no trouble.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Seoul, Corea, April 25, 1888.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's dispatch concerning the teaching of the Christian religion by Americans in Corea, and I have carefully considered its contents.

Before receiving your dispatch I have at different times talked with our people and have enjoined upon them a respectful consideration of the wishes of His Majesty, the King, and of the laws and established customs of His Majesty's country.

I beg your excellency to be assured that I will exercise my fullest influence and authority to effect upon the part of American residents a careful observance of the rights of the Corean Government under the treaty and to restrict their conduct to the exercise of privileges and rights granted by its provisions.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Dinsmore.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 15, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatches Nos. 105 and 106, diplomatic series, dated the 21st and 28th of April, respectively, have been received and your statements concerning the tendency of foreign missionary organizations in Corea to extend their operations into the interior and to claim increasing privileges in the way of public worship and teaching, have been read with

I am generally disposed to approve your cautious intimations to the missionaries discouraging any aggressive attempt to enlarge the boundaries of their privileges.

In dealing with a country like Corea, where the traditional policy for centuries has been the exclusion of all foreign intercourse and influence, the change which has taken place within the last few years, and the entrance of Corea into the family of modern nations, necessarily involves large consequences. And while those who are engaged in the effort to implant new principles there are naturally animated with the desire to accomplish much for the cause they represent, yet it should be remembered that the attempt on their part to extend their privileges by acts of aggression, without due regard to treaty limitations and the feelings of the people, might tend to defeat their efforts and to raise opposition to their labors.

Since you state in your No. 106 that you have no copy of the Franco-Corean treaty, a copy in the possession of the Department has been examined for your information; and in relation to the holding of property and the exercise of religious and kindred privileges, the following passages may be quoted:

Article IV, section 2, reads as follows:

In the localities above named Frenchmen shall have the right to lease or buy grounds and houses, to erect buildings thereon, and to establish warehouses and manufactories. They shall have the liberty to practice their religion. All arrangements relative to the choice of boundaries and the regulation of the foreign concessions, as well as the sale of lands in the different ports or cities open to foreign commerce, shall be concerted between the Corean authorities and the competent French authorities.

Section 4 of the same article reads:

Frenchmen may lease or buy grounds and houses outside of the limits of the foreign concessions and within a zone of ten Corean lis beyond those limits; but the grounds so occupied shall be subject to local regulations and fiscal taxes under such conditions as the Corean authorities may deem proper to fix.

Article IX, section 2, reads as follows:

Frenchmen resorting to Corea for the purpose of there studying or teaching the written or spoken language, sciences, laws or arts, shall, in testimony of the sentiments of good friendship which animate the high contracting parties always receive aid and assistance. The Coreans resorting to France shall there enjoy the same advantages.

In the absence of knowledge of the construction put by France and Corea on these treaty stipulations and of any explicit grant therein of such rights, the Department would not be warranted in instructing you to claim as derivative from the French treaty the extended privileges of religious teaching among the natives which are sought to be exercised and against which, as indicated by its protest inclosed with your No. 106, the animosities of the Corean Government appear to be roused.

It would certainly be unfortunate for the cause which the worthy and zealous men to whom you refer seek to promote, if by indiscretion and the assertion of privileges not accorded by the treaties, and in opposition to the distinct protests of the Corean Government, they should render their well-meant efforts a ground of hostility on the part of the natives.

Mr. Dinsmore to Mr. Bayard.

No. 115.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Seoul, Corea, June 25, 1888. (Received August 8.)

SIR: I have the honor to report the occurrence, within the past ten days, of serious disturbance in Seoul, which has given rise to grave apprehensions and alarm to the foreign residents. The disturbance had its beginning some weeks ago, when it was rumored among the common class of natives that young children were being stolen from their parents. The excitement continued to grow, until last yeek it reached a point of intensity that culminated in the killing on the streets by the populace of native men at different times and places upon a charge of being engaged in the stealing of children. The accusation took form also involving foreigners, it being declared by the people that the children were being stolen and sold to foreigners to be eaten by them and converted into medicine and material to be used in the making of photographs. In all, it is said, seven men have been killed. We know of some certainly; at least one was seen by reliable foreigners lying on the street mutilated and dead, where he had been slain by the mob.

Among the killed there were doubtless innocent persons, as it has been definitely ascertained that innocent people were attacked, carrying their own children in their arms.

The most absurd and unreasonable stories were circulated, supported, it seems, by persons who claimed to be eye-witnesses of boiling of children in the houses of foreigners. It was declared that the schools of

for the purposes above mentioned.

The accusations seemed to be chiefly against the American missionaries and the Japanese generally. On Monday of last week (June 18), I learned from various sources, apparently reliable, that threats were being made of an attack on "Chong Tong," the locality in which the Americans reside and the legation is situated.

The natives employed by our residents seemed greatly alarmed, in some instances refusing to go upon the streets and in others declaring their intention to quit their service, as it was said employers and servants were to be killed alike.

Feeling that the circumstances were of sufficiently serious character to justify decided action, I telegraphed to Commander T. F. Jewell, commanding the U. S. S. Essex, then in port at Chemulpo, on Tuesday (June 19), to send a detachment of twenty men for the protection of our people, at the same time sending by courier an explanation in writing to reach him before the departure of the troops. On Wednesday morning (June 20), at 10 o'clock, in compliance with with my request, a company consisting of three officers, twelve men, and thirteen marines, Lieut. C. D. Galloway, commanding, arrived quietly at the legation having made a night march from Chemulpo in twelve hours; similar detachments were sent from the Russian corvette Bobre, and the French gun-boat Aspic upon requests of Mr. Woeber and Monsieur Colin de Plancy, respectively.

As was anticipated by me the arrival of the forces has had the most salutary effect, the excitement having begun immediately to subside until at this time comparative quiet prevails.

The coming of the troops seems to have met with the full approval of the Corean Government. His Majesty the King sent a messenger to me to commend my action as timely and judicious.

At present there is a public examination of students gathered in the city from all parts of the country contesting for degrees, and I think it best to retain the guard until these people have returned to their homes, when Lieutenant Galloway will return with his command to his vessel.

During the disturbance I was in constant communication with the foreign office and with my colleagues. Not having time to make a full report by the present mail I reserve a detailed account to be forwarded hereafter.

At present there seems to be no ground for further alarm.

Mr. Dinsmore to Mr. Bayard.

No. 116.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Seoul, Corea, July 1, 1888. (Received August 20.)

SIR: For further information with regard to the recent critical disturbance in Seoul, reported in my No. 115, dated June 25, I have the honor to state that on Friday, the 29th instant, at 4 o'clock, Lieutenant C. D. Galloway, U. S. Navy, left this legation with the force under his command to return to the United States steamer Essex, at Chemulpo, there appearing to exist no further necessity for their presence. The forces sent from the French and Russian vessels have also returned.

I beg to make favorable mention of the cheerful and energetic promptness with which Commander Jewell and the officers of his command responded to the request of the legation for necessary assistance and of the perfect deportment of the men during the whole period of their landing.

I am aware of the Department's objections to the landing of a naval force ordinarily, and was reluctant to ask it without express permission, but the emergency in the situation I have reported seemed to fully justify it and not to admit of the delay necessary to receive instructions by cable.

No objection has been made by the Corean Government and I am firmly convinced that much good has resulted which will extend beyond the present time. Having been informed of portentous threats against our people made by the populace, I addressed a communication on the 18th ultimo to the president of the foreign office, of which I inclose a copy, urging the necessity for action on the part of the Govenment to allay the excitement and remove the unjust suspicions against foreigners, and suggested the publication of a proclamation asserting the falsity of the rumors. On the following night, at 12 o'clock, I received a short note in reply submitting a proclamation proposed for publication.

Its terms were such as would tend to increase rather than cause a

On the 19th, by common consent, all the foreign representatives except Mr. Yuan Sü Kwai, the representative of China, who had been ill since the beginning of the excitement, met at this legation and formulated such a proclamation as seemed required by the situation, and in a joint note to the foreign office respectfully submitted it for publication, if approved. On that night it was posted on the city gates and in other public places. It was first read by the people on Wednesday morning, the date of the arrival of the different naval detachments, and doubtless produced a good effect. A copy of this proclamation, with English translation, is inclosed.

His Majesty the King also caused to be published, over the royal seal, a very practical and effective proclamation denying that foreigners had any participancy in the taking of children, and offering liberal rewards for the capture and conviction by satisfactory evidence of the kidnapers; but upon the condition that he would impose a fine equal in amount to the reward offered against any person causing an arrest without evidence.

It is generally believed that innocent persons were killed by the mob and that if abduction of children was practiced at all the facts were greatly exaggerated.

The incidents of the affair are identical with those precedent to the massacre of foreigners at Tientsin, China, in June, 1870, in which the French consul and more than twenty foreign residents were murdered. Thursday, the 21st ultimo, was the anniversary of the Tientsin massacre. On Tuesday, the 19th, the excitement reached its highest point accompanied by threats of attacks on foreigners and a disposition of panic on the part of natives in the service of our residents. The marines left Chemulpo in the evening of this day, arriving here the next morning as heretofore reported.

The general disposition of the native masses towards foreigners as manifested by their universal respect and kindness in the past is wholly inconsistent with the recent events. 'Our people have traveled in the interior of the kingdom singly and in small parties and have been invariably treated with kindness and hospitality.

We go through the city at all hours of the day or night, frequently unattended and without hesitation.

I have, myself, in the daytime frequently gone on foot and without an attendant into the remotest and most unfrequented quarters of the city and have never received the slightest indignity, but on the contrary kindness and cheerful respect. There is still a feeling of ancient origin against the Japanese, and the inhabitants of the interior, unfamiliar with Western people, sometimes mistake them for Japanese. was that confusion which caused the attack upon and pursuit of Lieutenant Foulke in 1884. In that affair only the Coreans, Chinese, and Japanese were involved. There were no accusations against Americans nor Europeans.

Quiet seems now to be fully restored. The U.S.S. Essex sails to-day from Chemulpo, leaving the U.S.S. Juniata on duty there.

I have the honor, etc.,

HUGH A. DINSMORE.

PROCLAMATION ISSUED BY THE COREAN GOVERNMENT.

Of late certain evil-disposed persons have, to serve their own base purposes, been circulating rumors to the effect that Corean children are being stolen and sold to foreigners, to be eaten by them.

These rumors are false and absurd in the extreme. Foreigners have now been living in our midst for five years, and have always been on friendly terms with our people. How is it that now we first hear them charged with wicked practices?

In consequence of these rumors being believed by ignorant people, several persons have been killed on the streets on suspicion of being kidnappers.

This plan of taking upon yourselves to attack people in the streets is foolish and wicked. It endangers the lives of the innocent. If children are stolen, the Government will punish the kidnappers, who (when caught) should be brought before this office (or the board of punishments) for examination. Now, this proclamation is issued to recent the ment to propose grainst believing or reporting these false reports and also to be the proposed as a state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the contract and also to be the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of omce (or the board of punishments) for examination. There are three intermediate stations between Seoul and Fusan, the length of the route being about 400 miles. The rate fixed for transmission of messages between the termini of the line is 22 sen per English word.

mala on the 24th day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, between the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, whereby it was agreed that the question pending between the contracting Governments in regard to the validity of their Treaty of Limits of the 15th day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, should be submitted to the arbitration of the President of the United States of America; that if the arbitrator's award should determine that the treaty was valid, the same award should also declare whether Costa Rica has the right of navigation of the river San Juan with vessels of war or of the revenue service; and that in the same manner the arbitrator should decide, in case of the validity of the treaty, upon all the other points of doubtful interpretation which either of the parties might find in the treaty and should communicate to the other party within thirty days after the exchange of the ratifications of the said treaty of the 24th day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

And the Republic of Nicaragua having duly communicated to the Republic of Costa Rica eleven points of doubtful interpretation found in the said Treaty of Limits of the 15th day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight; and the Republic of Costa Rica having failed to communicate to the Republic of Nicaragua any points of doubtful interpretation found in the said last-mentioned treaty;

And both parties having duly presented their allegations and documents to the arbitrator, and having thereafter duly presented their respective answers to the allegations of the other party as provided in the treaty of the 24th day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six:

And the arbitrator pursuant to the fifth clause of said last-named treaty having delegated his powers to the honorable George L. Rives, Assistant Secretary of State, who, after examining and considering the said allegations, documents and answers, has made his report in writing thereon to the arbitrator;

Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, do hereby make the following decision and award:

First. The above mentioned Treaty of Limits, signed on the 15th day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, is valid.

Second. The Republic of Costa Rica under said treaty and the stipulations contained in the sixth article thereof, has not the right of navigation of the river San Juan with vessels of war; but she may navigate said river with such vessels of the revenue service as may be related to and connected with her enjoyment of the "purposes of commerce" accorded to her in said article, or as may be necessary to the protection of said enjoyment.

Third. With respect to the points of doubtful interpretation communicated as aforesaid by the Republic of Nicaragua, I decide as follows:

1. The boundary line between the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, on the Atlantic side, begins at the extremity of Punta de Castilla at the mouth of the San Juan de Nicaragua River, as they both existed on the 15th day of April, 1858. The ownership of any accretion to said Punta de Castilla is to be governed by the laws applicable to that subject.

2. The central point of the Salinas Bay is to be fixed by drawing a straight line across the mouth of the bay and determining mathematically the centre of the closed geometrical figure formed by such straight line and the shore of the bay at low-water mark.

3. By the central point of Salinas Bay is to be understood the centre of the geometrical figure formed as above stated. The limit of the bay towards the ocean is a straight line drawn from the extremity of Punta Arranca Barba, nearly true south to the westernmost portion of the land about Punta Sacate.

4. The Republic of Costa Rica is not bound to concur with the Republic of Nicaragua in the expenses necessary to prevent the bay of San Juan del Norte from being obstructed; to keep the navigation of the river or port free and unembarrassed, or to improve it for the common benefit.

5. The Republic of Costa Rica is not bound to contribute any proportion of the expenses that may be incurred by the Republic of Nicaragua for any of the purposes above mentioned.

6. The Republic of Costa Rica can not prevent the Republic of Nicaragua from executing at her own expense and within her own territory such works of improvement, provided such works of improvement do not result in the occupation or flooding or damage of Costa Rica territory, or in the destruction or serious impairment of the navigation of the said river or any of its branches at any point where Costa Rica is entitled to navigate the same. The Republic of Costa Rica has the right to demand indemnification for any places belonging to her on the right bank of the river San Juan which may be occupied without her consent, and for any lands on the same bank which may be flooded or damaged in any other way in consequence of works of improvement.

7. The branch of the river San Juan known as the Colorado River must not be considered as the boundary between the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua in any part of its course.

8. The right of the Republic of Costa Rica to the navigation of the river San Juan with men-of war or revenue cutters is determined and defined in the second article of this aread.

defined in the second article of this award.

9. The Republic of Costa Rica can deny to the Republic of Nicaragua the right of deviating the waters of the river San Juan in case such deviation will result in the destruction or serious impairment of the navigation of the said river or any of its branches at any point where Costa Rica is entitled to navigate the same.

10. The Republic of Nicaragua remains bound not to make any grants for canal purposes across her territory without first asking the opinion of the Republic of Costa Rica, as provided in Article VIII of the Treaty of Limits of the 15th day of April, one thousand eight hundred and The natural rights of the Republic of Costa Rica alluded to in the said stipulation are the rights which, in view of the boundaries fixed by the said Treaty of Limits, she possesses in the soil thereby recognized as belonging exclusively to her; the rights which she possesses in the harbors of San Juan del Norte and Salinas Bay; and the rights which she possesses in so much of the river San Juan as lies more than three English miles below Castillo Viejo, measuring from the exterior fortifications of the said castle as the same existed in the year 1858; and perhaps other rights not here particularly specified. These rights are to be deemed injured in any case where the territory belonging to the Republic of Costa Rica is occupied or flooded; where there is an encroachment upon either of the said harbors injurious to Costa Rica; or where there is such an obstruction or deviation of the River San Juan as to destroy or seriously impair the navigation of the said river or any of its branches at any point where Costa Rica is entitled to navigate the same.

11. The Treaty of Limits of the 15th day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty eight, does not give to the Republic of Costa Rica the right to be a party to grants which Nicaragua may make for interoceanic canals; though in cases where the construction of the canal will involve an injury to the natural rights of Costa Rica, her opinion or advice, as mentioned in Article VIII of the treaty, should be more than "advisory" or "consultative." It would seem in such cases that her consent is necessary, and that she may thereupon demand compensation for the concessions she is asked to make; but she is not entitled as a right to share in the profits that the Republic of Nicaragua may reserve for herself as a compensation for such favors and privileges as she, in her turn, may concede.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done in triplicate at the city of Washington, on the twenty-second day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eightyeight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twelfth.

Arbitration between the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua in relation to the validity of the treaty of the 15th April, 1858.—Report to the arbitrator, the President of the United States, by George L. Rives, Assistant Secretary of State.

To the President:

SIR: On the 24th day of December, 1886, the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, by a treaty signed on that day, agreed that the question pending between the contracting Governments in regard to the validity of the "Treaty of Limits" of the 15th April, 1858, should be submitted to arbitration. It was further agreed that the arbitrator of that question should be the President of the United States of America; that within sixty days from the ratification of the treaty of arbitration the contracting Governments should solicit of the arbitrator his acceptance of the charge; that within ninety days from the notification to the parties of the acceptance of the arbitrator they should present to him their allegations and documents; that the arbitrator should communicate to the representative of each Government, within eight days after their presentation, the allegations of the opposing party, in order that the opposing party might be able to answer them within thirty days following that upon which the same should have been communicated; that the decision of the arbitrator must be pronounced within six months from the date upon which the term allowed for the answers to the allegations should have expired; and that the arbitrator might delegate his powers, provided he did not fail to intervene directly in pronouncing the final decision. It was further provided that if the arbitrator's award should determine that the treaty of the 15th April, 1858, was valid, the same award should also declare whether Costa Rica has the right of navigation of the river San Juan with vessels of war or of the revenue service; and that he should in the same manner decide, in case of the validity of the treaty, upon all the other points of doubtful interpretation which either of the parties might find in the treaty and communicate to the other within thirty days after the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of arbitra-

In accordance with the procedure thus agreed on, the Republic of Nicaragua communicated to the Republic of Costa Rica a statement of eleven points of doubtful interpretation in the treaty of the 15th April, 1858, which it proposed to submit to the decision of the arbitrator. The Government of Costa Rica did not communicate any corresponding statement, and now declares that it finds nothing in that treaty which is not perfectly clear and intelligible.

The two Governments having thereafter solicited your acceptance of the charge, you were pleased, on the 30th day of July, 1887, to signify your acceptance of it, and the representatives of both Governments were duly notified of that fact.

On the 27th day of October, 1887, both Governments presented to you their allegations These were duly communicated to the opposing parties, and on the and documents.

3d day of December, 1887, they both presented answers to the allegations of their ponents. The Spanish documents were subsequently translated and printed. On the 16th day of January, 1888, by an instrument in writing, you were pleased to delegate your powers as arbitrator to me, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the last sentence of Article V of the Treaty of Arbitration, and to direct me to examine into the questions at issue and report my conclusions to you.

In accordance with these directions, and after a careful consideration of the allegations of the respective parties, of their answers, and of the documents submitted by each, I have now the honor to submit the following:

REPORT.

The questions to be passed upon by the arbitrator, as will be observed from the foregoing statement of the Treaty of Arbitration, are capable of being classified under

First. Whether the Treaty of Limits of the 15th of April, 1858, is valid.

Second. If valid, what is its true meaning in respect of the right of Costa Rica to navigate the river San Juan with vessels of war or the revenue service, and also in respect of the eleven points submitted for decision by the Government of Nicaragua? If the first of these questions is decided in the negative—that is, if the Treaty of Limits is decided to be invalid—it will not be necessary to consider at all the questions under the second head.

Before discussing the grounds urged by the Government of Nicaragua, on the one hand, as proving the invalidity of the Treaty of Limits, and those urged by the Government of Costa Rica on the other, as establishing its validity, it will be essential to consider briefly the evidence submitted to show what were the recognized boundaries prior to the date of the treaty, and what were the powers of the respective Governments in regard to it. This historical inquiry, it must be remembered, is not a matter of immediate concern, nor is it directly involved in the decision of the questions now submitted to arbitration; but it is important as elucidating the nature of the principal controversy, and as showing the facts upon which the parties base their respective arguments.

Two questions, essentially distinct in their character, were in discussion in 1858 touching the boundary of the two Republics. The first of these was the question whether the district of Nicoya lawfully belonged to Costa Rica or to Nicaragua; the second, as to the true boundary line between the Republics from the Caribbean Sea to the borders of Nicoya. The evidence in regard to each of these disputed questions must be reviewed in its order.

The district of Nicoya lies on the Pacific side of the continent, and—roughly speaking—is triangular in shape, its apex lying toward the south. It is bounded on the westward by the Pacific Ocean, and on the eastward by the Gulf of Nicoya and the Rio del Salto, or Tempisque, a small stream emptying into the head of the Gulf and having its sources not far from the southerly shore of Lake Nicaragua. The northerly boundary, or base of the triangle, seems to have never been accurately fixed, and its position is a matter of dispute between the Governments of Costa Rica and Nica-The argument of Nicaragua, submitted to the arbitrator, cites the authority of Don Antonia Alcedo and the historian Juarros to the effect that it is bounded by the Lake of Nicaragua on the north, which seems to imply a further boundary line running from the southern end of the lake to the Pacific Ocean. The arguments of the Costa Rican Government, on the other hand, place the northern boundary as far up as the La Flor River; and the records of land titles, and the statements of Stephens and Baily, are cited in support of this view. It is wholly unimportant, however, for the present purpose, to decide which of these opposing views is correct. It is only needful to point out that a diversity of opinion exists, and that there is no grant or agreement precisely fixing the boundaries of the district

As to the title to the district, the facts are plainer. Nicoya, or, as it is sometimes called, Guanacaste, was undoubtedly recognized as a part of Nicaragua prior to 1826. It is asserted by Costa Rica that at times Nicoya was temporarily united with it, or placed under the control of its authorities; and some evidence is produced tending to show that such a change was made in 1573, 1593, 1692, the middle of the 18th century, and even as late as 1812. But any such connection with Costa Rica can have been but temporary, and it may be regarded as settled that at the time of the declaration of independence from Spain in September, 1821, Nicoya formed a part of Nicaragua. This condition of things seems to be distinctly recognized in the constitution of Costa Rica, adopted 21st January, 1825, in which it is stated that "the territory of the state extends at present from west to east, from the Rio del Salto, which divides it from

It would seem, however, that about 1824 the inhabitants of Nicoya, or some of them, asked to be annexed to Costa Rica. This question was referred to the Federal Congress of Central America, the Federal Republic of Central America having been theretofore formed and its constitution adopted 22nd November, 1824, and that body on the 9th December, 1825, passed the following decree:

"The Federal Congress of the Republic of Central America, taking into consideration, firstly, the reiterated petitions of the authorities and municipal bodies of the towns of the District of Nicosa, asking for their separation from Nicaragua and their annexation to Costa Rica; and, secondly, that the said towns and people actually annexed themselves to Costa Rica at the time in which the political troubles of Nicaragua took place; and, thirdly, the topographical situation of the same district has been pleased to decree, and does hereby decree:

"ART. 1. For the time being, and until the demarkation of the territory of each State, provided by Article VII of the Constitution is made, the District of Nicoya shall continue to be separated from Nicaragua, and annexed to Costa Rica.

"ART. 2. In consequence thereof, the District of Nicoya shall recognize its dependence upon the authorities of Costa Rica, and shall have, in the legislature of the latter, such representation as corresponds to it."

It further appears that the Government of Costa Rica thereupon took possession of Nicoya, and has been continuously in possession of it ever since; and was so at the date of the treaty of 1858.

The Government of Nicaragua, however, has not always acquiesced in the validity of this act of annexation. It has, on the contrary, on several occasions protested against it; and in its arguments, now before the arbitrator, it contends that the decree above referred to was not recognized at the time; that Nicaragua was not then represented in the Federal Congress; that the decree was, by its terms, only temporary; and that the municipalities of Nicoya as well as the legislature of Nicaragua protested against the action of Congress as soon as they were aware of it.

Here, again, it is not necessary for the arbitrator to decide the question of title.

But it is clear that in 1858 Costa Rica had been continuously in possession of the district of Nicoya, under a claim of title, for more than thirty-two years.

As to the boundary live between the Rio del Salto and the Caribbean Sea, the question was purely one of fact; and it can hardly be said that any very clear or satisfactory answer was possible.

The Government of Costa Rica, in the arguments submitted to the arbitrator has presented an elaborate historical review of the two provinces of Costa Rica and Nicaragua under Spanish rule, which, it may be assumed, contains a reference to all the important documents bearing upon the question of boundaries. Passing over the history of the discovery and first settlement of this region in the early part of the XVIth century, it appears that in 1541 the Emperor Charles V decreed that the upper fifteen leagues of the San Juan River should belong to the province of Nicaragua; that the lower or remaining portion of the river should belong to the Government of Costa Rica; and that the use of the river and lake, for purposes of navigation and fishing, should be common to both provinces. In 1561, King Philip II appointed Licentiate Don Juan Cavallon to be "alcalde mayor" of the province of New Cartago and Costa Rica, describing it in the preamble of the letter of appointment as extending along the Northern Sea "up to the outlet, this being included" (hasta et Desaguadero inclusive). In 1573, by articles of agreement between the Spanish Crown and Diego de Artieda, who was appointed governor and captain-general of Costa Rica, the boundaries of that province were defined substantially as they continued to be down to 1821. The limits of Artieda's jurisdiction are thus defined:

"From the Northern to the Southern Seain width; and in length, from the boundary of Nicaragua, on the side of Nicoya, right to the valleys of Chiriqui, as far as the province of Veragua on the southern side; and on the northern side, from the mouths of the outlet, which is towards Nicaragua (desde las bocas del Desaguadero, que es à las partes de Nicaragua), the whole tract of land as far as the province of Veragua."

No subsequent grant or decree by the Spanish Crown is cited, and, apart from some evidence of acts of possession by the respective Government, there is nothing further to define the boundaries of the two provinces.

Soon after the declaration of independence, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, then States of the Republic of Central America, adopted constitutions defining generally their re-

The constitution of Costa Rica, adopted the 21st January, 1825, provides as follows: "ARTICLE 15. The territory of the State extends at present from west to east, from the river del Salto, which divides it from that of Nicaragua, up to the river Chiriqui, the boundary of the Republic of Colombia; and north and south from one to the other sea, the limits being on the north [sea] the mouth of the San Juan River and the Escudo de Veraguas, and on the south [sea] the mouth of the river Alvarado and that of the Chiriqui.

Nicaragua, by the constitution adopted the 8th of April, 1826, defines her bounda-

"On the east, the sea of the Antilles; on the north, the State of Honduras; on the west, the gulf of Conchagua; on the south, the Pacific Ocean; and on the southeast the free State of Costa Rica.

These are the last declarations ante litem motam. It will be observed that all these documents leave the precise boundary vague and undetermined. Indeed the line to be followed between the Rio del Salto and the "mouths of the Outlet," is nowhere laid Nicaragua contends that a straight line from the mouth of the Rio del Salto to the mouth of the Colorado, the most southerly of the three mouths of the San Juan, is intended. This is met by the argument that as the Rio del Salto was the boundary, that river in its whole length, and not the mouth or any other part of it, was the dividing line; and that the San Juan River proper—the northernmost of the three channels at the mouth of that stream—formed the end of the line on the Caribbean Sea. Costa Rica further contends that the boundary line was not straight, but that it followed the course of the San Juan in its whole length and the southern shore of Lake Nicaragua; and she alleges that she was in possession of the territory up to that line-an allegation not admitted by Nicaragua.

In my judgment the evidence establishes that the boundary of Costa Rica, under the terms of the Spanish grants (leaving Nicoya out of the question), began at the head of the Gulf of Nicoya, ran northerly along the river del Salto to its source, and thence ran to the mouth of the San Juan River, at the port of San Juan del Norte this being at the time the mouth of the principal channel or outlet of the stream. But the evidence is not sufficient to form the basis for any satisfactory judgment as to how this line was to be drawn between the source of the del Salto and the mouth of the San Juan. I perceive no reason for thinking that it should have been a straight line.

No decision of this question is, however, necessary: for it is only important, for present purposes, to point out that no precise line of demarkation can be found in any of the earlier documents. Nor is this surprising in view of the fact, to be indensely wooded and thinly settled country, where no need was felt of any exact delimitation in the days of the Spanish dominion.

But with the establishment of the Federal Republic, and, still more, with its dissolution, the questions of boundary began to assume importance.

The Federal Constitution seems to have provided by its Article VII for the demarkation of each State; but nevertheless nothing was done towards the establishment of the line between Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

In 1838 Costa Rica seems to have urged upon Nicaragua—then assuming the rank of an independent State upon her withdrawal from the federation—a desire for a recognition of the annexation of Nicoya. In 1846, 1848, and 1852 other fruitless negotiations were undertaken with a view to settling the boundary; and in 1858, when the Treaty of Limits was signed, the question, in one form or another, had been before the two Governments for at least twenty years.

That the documentary evidence was slight and unsatisfactory, has been already shown; and that Costa Rica had for nearly the same period of twenty years laid claim to more territory than she obtained under the Treaty of Limits, fully appears from her decree of "Basis and Guaranties" of the 8th March, 1841, which asserts as the boundaries of Costa Rica the line of the river La Flor, the shore of Lake Nicaragua, and the river San Juan.

I now proceed to state the history of the negotiations which resulted in the treaty in question, and of the executive and legislative acts which are relied on by Costa Rica as constituting a sufficient ratification.

The long and bitter struggle in which Nicaragua and other Central American States had been involved, and of which the part played by Walker and the filibusters was the most notorious incident, came to an end in 1857. The Republic of Costa Rica had taken part in that struggle, and her case states as a fact that at the close of the contest the Costa Rican troops held military positions on both sides of the San Juan. The argument of Nicaragua seems to imply that such possession was not taken until after the close of the war; but the fact itself is not in dispute. It was regarded by Nicaragua at the time as constituting a casus belli; and Costa Rica having failed to withdraw her troops, war was declared by Nicaragua on the 25th November, 1857, although negotiations for a settlement of the difficulty still continued, but without success

In this posture of affairs the Republic of San Salvador offered mediation through its minister Col. Don Pedro Rómulo Negrete. Owing principally, as it would seem, to Colonel Negrete's earnest efforts, the opposing Governments appointed ministers plenipotentiary, who met with the Salvadorian minister at San José de Costa Rica, and there concluded the Treaty of Limits, the validity of which is now under exami-

By that instrument the boundary line is made to begin at Punta de Castilla, at the mouth of the San Juan River; thence it follows the right or southern bank of that stream to a point 3 miles below the Castillo Viejo; thence it runs along the circumference of a circle drawn round the outworks of the castle as a center, with a radius of 3 miles to a point on the western side of the castle, distant 2 miles from the river; thence parallel to the San Juan and the lake, at a distance of 2 miles therefrom to the Sapoa River; and thence in a straight line to the center of Salinas Bay on the Pacific, Ocean. The treaty further provides that surveys shall be made to locate the boundary; that the Bay of San Juan del Norte and Salinas Bay shall be common to both Republics; and that Nicaragua shall have, exclusively, dominion and supreme control of the waters of the San Juan-Costa Rica having the right of free navigation for the purposes of commerce in that part of the river on which she is bounded. It was further agreed that in the event of war between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, no act of hostility was to be practiced in the port or river of San Juan, or on the Lake of Nicaragua; and the observance of this article of the treaty was guarantied by the Republic of San Salvador.

It is admitted by the parties to the present arbitration that the treaty was duly ratified by Costa Rica on the 16th April, 1858; and that it was not ratified at all by It is further established that there was some ratification by repre-San Salvador. sentatives of Nicaragua-but whether or not such ratification was sufficient is one of the points now in controversy, and it is therefore necessary to examine fully the powers and the proceedings of the Nicaraguan authorities.

The Republic of Nicaragua, as appears from the evidence, was a constitutional government of limited powers, which were defined by a written constitution. Nicaragua, as one of the States of the Central American Republic, adopted her first constitution on the 8th April, 1826. Upon the dissolution of the Federal Republic she assumed the rank of an independent nation; and in 1838 adopted a new constitution, which her representatives now contend was in full force and vigor at the time of the execution of the Treaty of Limits. The full text of the Nicaraguan constitution of 1838 is not contained in the arguments which have been laid before the arbitrator; but it sufficiently appears that power was vested in an elective President and a Con-It also appears that by article 2 (cited in full below), the boundaries of the State were defined; and that by article 194, quoted in the argument of Nicaragua, a complicated method of amendment was provided, of which the only feature now necessary to notice is that no proposed amendment shall take effect until it has been approved by two successive legislatures.

In 1857 the necessity for a complete revision of the constitution of 1838 seems to have been generally recognized. The long and exhausting conflicts which had been waged from 1854 to 1857, and the existence, during the greater part of that time, of two hostile governments, each claiming to exercise constitutional and supreme power throughout the country, had demonstrated, to the satisfaction of the inhabitants, the importance of changes in the organic law. Accordingly a constituent assembly, with ample powers, was duly elected. The due election, and the full constituent assembly this believes the constituent assembly that the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent as a constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent assembly the constituent as a constituent assembly the constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a constituent as a consti powers of this body, are facts not disputed in the arguments now submitted on behalf

In November, 1857, the constituent assembly met, and addressed itself at once to the task of framing a new constitution for Nicaragua, as well as of legislating upon the ordinary affairs of the nation.

On the 18th of January, 1858, the previous negotiation with Costa Rica having failed, the assembly ordered new commissioners to be appointed to negotiate treaties of peace, limits, friendship, and alliance between Nicaragua and Costa Rica.
On the 5th February, 1858, a further and supplemental decree on the same subject was adopted, which is as follows:

"The constituent assembly of the Republic of Nicaragua, in use of the legislative faculties with which it is invested, decrees:

"ART. 1. For the purpose that the executive may comply with the decree of January 18 instant, the said executive is hereby amply authorized to act in the settlement of the difficulties with Costa Rica in such manner as it may deem best for the interest of both countries, and for the independence of Central America, without the necessity of ratification by the legislative power.

"ART. 2. Such treaties of limits as it may adjust shall be final, if adjusted in accordance with the bases which separately will be given to it; but, if not, they shall be subject to the ratification of the assembly."

What were the separate bases of negotiation given to the Nicaraguan Executive does not appear from any of the documents submitted to the arbitrator. But it is not distinctly asserted by the representatives of Nicaragua that such instructions were disregarded in the negotiation of the treaty, the arguments relied on to prove its invalidity resting upon entirely different grounds, which will be stated hereafter.

On the 15th April, 1858, the treaty of limits was signed by the plenipotentiaries of Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and San Salvador; and on the 26th April, 1858, ratifications were personally exchanged by the Presidents of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, who met for the purpose on Nicaraguan territory at the city of Rivas. The treaty had not then been passed upon by the assembly, the decree of ratification being by the Presi-It is as follows:

And the additional act of the same date is likewise ratified."

On the 28th May, 1858, thirty-two days after the ratification, and forty-three days after the signature of the treaty of limits, the following decree was passed by the constituent assembly:

"The constituent assembly of the Republic of Nicaragua, in use of the legislative powers vested in it, decrees:

"Sole Article. The treaty of limits concluded at San José on the 15th of April, instant, between General Don Maximo Jerez, minister plenipotentiary from this Republic, and General Don José Maria Cañas, minister plenipotentiary from the Republic of Costa Rica, with the intervention of Colonel Don Pedro Romulo Negrete, minister plenipotentiary from Salvador, is hereby approved."

On the 19th August, 1858, the constituent assembly adopted the new constitution, of which it is only needful to cite the first article, viz:

"The Republic of Nicaragua is the same which was, in ancient times, called the Province of Nicaragua, and, after the independence, State of Nicaragua. Its territory is bounded on the east and northeast by the Sea of the Antilles; on the north and northwest by the State of Honduras; on the west and south by the Pacific Ocean, and on the southeast by the Republic of Costa Rica. The laws on special limits form part of the constitution."

No further formal ratification of the treaty of limits was ever had; but the arguments submitted by Costa Rica cite a number of instances in which the Government of Nicaragua, during the period between 1858 and 1870, recognized the treaty as a valid and binding instrument.

Since 1870 the Government of Nicaragua has contended that the treaty is invalid; and that view is now urged upon three distinct grounds, which are stated as follows in the argument submitted on its behalf:

"The Government of Nicaragua affirms the invalidity of the treaty of 1858, and insists that it ought not to be bound thereby, for the reason-

"First. That it has not received that sanction which the constitution of the state of Nicaragua requires to give effect to, and validate, a treaty of its character.

"Second. It has not been ratified by the Government of San Salvador, so as to give effect to the guaranties on behalf of that Government of the tenth article of the treaty

"Third. That the pretended ratifications of the treaty were exchanged before the treaty had been submitted to the Congress of Nicaragua, and it was not approved by the first Congress of Nicaragua until after the expiration of the forty days provided for the exchange of ratifications in Article XII."

I shall consider each of these three reasons in order.

The argument very forcibly presented on behalf of Nicaragua to establish the first ground of objection—the lack of such a sanction as was required by the constitution to give effect to, and validate, a treaty of the character of the one in question—is as follows: The constitution of 1838 was in full force on the 15th of April, 1858; that constitution fixed the boundaries of Nicaragua; the treaty of limits curtailed the boundaries so fixed by the constitution; it was therefore, "in direct and flagrant violation of the fundamental law of the state, and to have validity must receive the same formal ratification that an amendment to the constitution itself demands;" the constitution provides that an amendment adopted by one legislature in the manner prescribed, by two-thirds vote of both houses, "shall not be considered as valid nor form part of the constitution until it has received the sanction of the next legislature; the treaty of limits was never sanctioned by a second legislature; therefore it

This argument, it will be perceived, rests wholly upon the fundamental assumptions that the constitution of 1838 was in force, and that it fixed the boundaries of Nicaragua. If, as a matter of fact, that constitution was not in force, or if the boundaries were not definitely fixed by its provisions, then the whole argument falls; for the treaty is then a mere treaty of limits, settling disputed boundaries, and is not one involving a cession of territory and an amendment to the constitution. It is not pretended that a treaty fixing boundaries requires, on general principles, any extraordinary sanction.

The general doctrine that in determining the validity of a treaty made in the name of a state, the fundamental laws of such state must furnish the guide for determination, has been fully and ably discussed on the part of Nicaragua, and its correctness may certainly be admitted. But it is also certain that where a treaty has been approved by a government, and an effort is subsequently made to avoid it for the lack of some formality, the burden is upon the party who alleges invalidity to show clearly that the requirements of the fundamental law have not been complied ith. In my judgment, Nicaragua has failed in establishing a case under this rule, In the first place, it may well be doubted whether the constitution of 1838 can be said to have been in full force and effect at the time of the execution of the treaty on the 15th April, 1858. The legislative power was then vested in a constituent assemble. bly—a body, it would seem, expressly chosen for the purpose of amending the constitution in any way it saw fit. To say that such a body could not adopt a decree which in effect modified the constitution, is to deny to it the power to carry out the very ob-

Moreover, the constitution framed by the assembly, and promulgated on the 19th August, 1858, defining the boundaries of Nicaragua, adds that "the laws on special limits form part of the constitution." If therefore the decree of the 28th May, 1858, and the other acts of the assembly, were in any respect insufficient as involving some unconstitutionality, the defect was supplied by practically embodying the treaty of limits, and the decree approving it, in the new constitution, thus giving the highest sanction possible to this legislation.

But whether or not the constitution of 1838 was in full force in April and May, 1858, I am clearly of opinion that it did not definitely fix the boundaries of the state. The power of defining absolute boundaries by a constitution is not denied. The question is merely whether the constitution of 1838 did in fact contain such a definition of the boundaries of Nicaragua as to preclude their adjustment by any ordinary treaty.

The provisions of that constitution respecting boundaries are as follows:

"ARTICLE 2. The territory of the State is the same as was formerly given to the Province of Nicaragua; its limits being on the east and northeast the Sea of the Antilles; on the north and northwest the State of Honduras; on the west and south the Pacific Ocean; and on the southeast the State of Costa Rica. The dividing lines with the The dividing lines with the bordering States shall be marked by a law which will make a part of the constitution."

Thus it appears that "the dividing lines with the bordering States" were expressly It was plainly the intention to leave the constitution incomplete in this respect, though a means of completing it was provided by allowing the passage of an ordinary law by a single legislature. It is not pretended that any law marking the boundary on the side of Costa Rica was passed before the execution of the treaty of limits. The decree approving the treaty is the only attempt, so far as appears, to comply with this provision of the constitution. The statement that the boundary is "on the southeast the State of Costa Rica" defines nothing. What were the limits "on the southeast the State of Costa Rica" defines nothing. What were the limits of Costa Rica in 1838 was a matter of dispute. No precise decision was possible, and I have already expressed my opinion that the evidence laid before the arbitrator is altogether too vague to afford grounds for any satisfactory judgment. tion of 1838, therefore, did not fix the boundaries of Nicaragua definitely

These views are strengthened by a consideration of the evidence adduced on the part of Costa Rica to prove acquiescence by Nicaragua for ten or twelve years in the validity of the treaty. I do not regard such acquiescence as a substitute for ratification by a second legislature, if such had been needed. But it is strong evidence of that contemporaneous exposition which has ever been thought valuable as a guide in determining doubtful questions of interpretation.

I conclude, therefore, that the first ground of objection stated by Nicaragua is untenable.

The second ground of objection urged by Nicaragua to the validity of the treaty is that it has not been ratified by the Government at San Salvador, so as to give effect to the guaranties on behalf of that Government of the tenth article of the treaty.

It is argued, in support of this objection, that the guaranty of the mediating government against hostilities on the river and lake was of great importance to Nicara-gua; that it might well have been the controlling consideration in the mind of the negotiator of the treaty that led him to agree to the relinquishment of claims to great tracts of territory; that the failure of San Salvador to ratify this treaty took from it one of the chief considerations moving to Nicaragua; and that, the consideration never having taken effect, the treaty never became of valid or binding force. It is added that this was in effect a tripartite treaty, and unless all the parties became bound neither of them was.

In my opinion this argument is unsound. The treaty was not tripartite, but was between Costa Rica and Nicaragua only, with an independent and separable clause of guaranty as to a single feature of the arrangement on the part of San Salvador. Without the guaranty the treaty was complete as between the two principals, if they saw fit to accept it in that shape. The non-ratification by the Republic of San Salvador was known to the Government of Nicaragua when ratifications were exchanged with Costa Rica. It follows therefore that Nicaragua never lost any of the considerations which induced her to consummate, by an exchange of ratifications,

The facts may be briefly recalled. On the 15th April, 1858, the treaty of limits was signed. In form it is a convention agreed upon by the representatives of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and declares that they having exchanged their respective powers, "which were examined by Hon. Senor Don Pedro R. Negrete, exercising the function of fraternal mediator in these negotiations," had agreed to and adjusted the terms of the treaty. The treaty itself, after reciting the desire of Costa Rica and Nicaragua for peace, fixes the boundary line between them; provides for a survey of the line, and for the common use and defense of the Bay of San Juan del Norte and Salinas Bay, and of that portion of the San Juan River on which Costa Rica borders; grants the use in common of the Punta de Castilla until Nicaragua recovers full possession of all her rights in the port of San Juan del Norte; forbids the levying of custom duties at Punta de Castilla while San Juan del Norte remains a free port; defines the jurisdiction over and right of navigation on the waters of the San Juan River; secures existing contracts of canalization or public transit made by the Government of Nicaragua and regulates the execution of future contracts; and neutralizes the port and river of San Juan and the Lake of Nicaragua in the event of war between Costa Rica and Nicaragua. Then follows this:

"ARTICLE X. The stipulation of the foregoing article (that relating to neutrality) being essentially important for the proper custody of both the port and the river against foreign aggression, which would affect the general interests of the country, the strict performance thereof is left under the special guaranty, which in the name of the mediator government its minister plenipotentiary herein present is ready to give and does hereby give in use of the faculties vested in him for that purpose by his Government."

Finally, Costa Rica and Nicaragua mutually give up all claims against each other, and "the two contracting parties" waive all claims for damages which either have against the other.

This instrument is plainly neither in form nor in substance tripartite. The "two Governments," the "two contracting parties" spoken of in the treaty, are always Costa Rica and Nicaragua, never San Salvador. San Salvador is not in form a contracting party at all. And in substance that Government is not a party to the agreement, the clause containing the guaranty being entirely separable from all the

As a proposition of international law, it may be regarded as settled that a guaranty is always merely subsidiary to the principal contract.

"Le traité par lequel un état se porte garant d'un traité conclu entre deux autres puissances, est un traité accessoire destiné à assurer l'exécution du traité principal." (Bluntschli, 430 note, Lardy's trans.)

"La garantie peut être comprise dans les stipulations annexées au traité principal qu'on veut garantir, et devient alors une obligation accessoire." (Vattel, Droit des Gens. Ed. 1863, Liv. II, ch. 16, § 240; note by Pradier Fodere, the editor.)

"Lorsque la garantie est destinée à assurer l'inviolabilité d'un traité, elle forme toujours une obligation et un traité accessoire (pactum accessorium), même quand elle ferait partie de l'acte principal." (Klüber, Droit des Gens., § 158.)

It follows that the clause of guaranty in the treaty of limits is no part of the principal agreement, and that on general principles the rest of the treaty would not stand or fall with this subsidiary or accessory contract.

The necessity for ratification by contracting powers may be fully admitted. But even conceding to it as high an importance as the execution of deeds by individuals, the failure of a guarantying State to ratify will not necessarily invalidate a treaty which the principal contracting parties have concluded by an exchange of ratifications as between themselves.

The analogy of individual deeds may serve to illustrate the point now under discussion. The case may readily be imagined of a deed between two parties as principals, with a third party as guarantor. Leases of this character are not infrequent. If such a deed were prepared by the agents of the three parties, and if the two principal parties were to sign, seal, acknowledge, and formally deliver to each other duly-executed duplicates of the deed, without waiting for the signature of the guarantor, it is too plain for argument that neither could subsequently object, and claim the right to rescind, because the deed had not been executed and delivered by the guarantor.

So in this case. The Presidents of Costa Rica and Nicaragua in person, on the 26th April, 1858, formally exchanged ratifications of the treaty, without waiting for San Salvador. The arguments now advanced by Nicaragua as establishing the invalidity of the treaty might perhaps have been urged as reasons for refusing to exchange the ratifications until San Salvador was ready to unite in the act. But the Government of Nicaragua was silent when it ought to have spoken, and so waived the objection now made. It saw fit to proceed to the exchange of ratifications without waiting for San Salvador. The treaty was complete without Article X. To all the other articles and stipulations it contained Costa Rica and Nicaragua alone might fully bind themselves. They did so, irrevocably, by a formal exchange of ratifications; and neither may now be heard to allege, as reasons for rescinding this completed treaty, and facts which existed and were known at the time of its consummation.

I conclude, therefore, that the second ground of objection stated by Nicaragua is untenable.

III.

The third ground of objection urged by Nicaragua to the validity of the treaty is "that the pretended ratifications of the treaty were exchanged before the treaty had been submitted to the Congress of Nicaragua, and it was not approved by the first Congress of Nicaragua until after the expiration of the forty days provided for the exchange of ratifications in Article XII."

It will be remembered that on the 5th February, 1858, the constituent assembly of Nicaragua passed a decree by which the Executive was "amply authorized" to treat with Costa Rica "without the necessity of ratification by the legislative power;" and that it was further decreed that such treaties of limits as the Executive might adjust should be final, if in accordance with certain separate instructions. Acting under this grant of power, the President of Nicaragua concluded and ratified the present treaty on the 26th April, 1858, eleven days after its signature by the plenipotentiaries, without "ratification by the legislative power." On the 28th of May, 1858, the constituent assembly adopted a decree approving the treaty; and this decree was signed by the President on the 4th June, 1858.

The argument now presented by Nicaragua is twofold, and raises two points, first, that the treaty is invalid because ratifications were exchanged before approval by the assembly, and, second, that it is invalid because such approval was given more

As to the first of these points, it would perhaps be enough to say that Nicaragua can not now seek to invalidate the treaty on any mere ground of irregularity in the order of its own proceedings. If its legislature did in fact approve the treaty that is enough for the present purpose. Whether such approval was expressed before or after the exchange of ratifications is an immaterial matter now, certainly so far as

But it does not appear that there was any real irregularity in these proceedings. The full text of the Nicaraguan constitution of 1838 not being contained in the arguments submitted to the arbitrator, it is not made clear just what restrictions upon the treaty-making power that instrument imposed. Ratification by legislative authority is not always required, even in constitutional governments. The necessity for legislative ratification is not to be presumed, but must be established as a fact. Still less can there be any presumption as to the form and manner in which the legislative sanction is to be expressed. In the present instance the constituent assembly, a body of extensive powers, expressed in advance its approval of any treaty of limits that might be concluded by the Executive upon certain bases. It is not shown that the authority so given was exceeded, and it can not be said, in the absence of an express prohibition, that this mode of dealing with the subject was improper.

Again, the fact of the subsequent approval of the treaty by the assembly is satisfactory proof that that body approved not only the terms of the instrument, but also the manner in which the Executive had exercised the authority conferred by the decree of the 5th February, 1858. The time and manner of exchange of ratifications was before the assembly, and it was fully aware that the time agreed upon for exchange had passed. Its action, under these circumstances, shows that it was of the opinion that the treaty had been legally and in due time ratified by the President, in pursuance of the special powers conferred upon him.

In any event, all irregularities would seem to have been effectually cured by this subsequent approval of the constituent assembly. Ratinaptitio retrotrantiur, et mandato equiparatur, is a recognized maxim of municipal law; and the reasons of that rule may fairly be regarded as applying to cases like the present.

That irregularities and defects in the formalities of ratification may be supplied and made good by subsequent acquiescence in and approval of the treaty, is laid down by Heffter (Droit International, § 87 fin.):

"Mais il est constant qu'elle (i. e., ratification) peut être suppléée par des actes équivalents, et notamment par l'exécution tacite des stipulations arrêtées."

The second point—that the legislative sanction was not given until after the expiration of the forty days fixed by the treaty for the exchange of the ratifications—seems clearly untenable. Costa Rica, and not Nicaragua, might have complained of this delay. Assuming that subsequent legislative approval was needed, Costa Rica might, if it had desired to do so, have declared the negotiations at an end on the expiration of the forty days. But it was not bound to do so. It had a perfect right to waive this limitation of time. Either party to a treaty may extend the time of the other, either by express agreement or by acts indicating acquiescence. Nicaragua can not be permitted to say, as she does in effect say, in this branch of her argument, "it is true that this treaty was approved unreservedly by both executive and legislative branches of the Government; but such an approval is worthless, as it was expressed not forty but forty-three days after the signature of the treaty."

The fact of approval being established, the time of approval is immaterial, provided the other party by its acquiescence has seen fit to waive delay.

I conclude, therefore, that the third ground of objection stated by Nicaragua is untenable.

And having examined in detail the three reasons urged by Nicaragua for holding the treaty invalid, and finding all these reasons untenable, I conclude that the arbitrator should decide in favor of the validity of this treaty.

LEGATION OF COSTA RICA, Washington, March 26, 1888. (Received March 27.)

SIE: On Saturday, the 24th instant, at 12 o'clock noon, in pursuance of the intimation conveyed in your excellency's highly esteemed note of the 22d of the same month, I had the honor to present myself in person in the Department of State and to receive the copy intended for my Government of the decision pronounced by the President of the United States of America, which definitively settles the questions raised by Nicaragua with respect to the validity of the boundary treaty of April 15, 1858, between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and the interpretation to be given to its several clauses.

On previous occasions the honor had devolved upon me of stating to your excellency and to the President through you the profound sentiment of gratitude which my Government felt, and which I personally shared in the largest possible degree, because of the goodness wherewith the Chief Magistrate of this great Republic accepted the extremely burdensome task which two Central American Republics, anxious for the avoidance of disputes, had begged him to take upon himself.

Only, in truth, a strongly accentuated sentiment of personal benevolence, and a full consciousness of the importance to the interests of civilization of causing the system of international arbitration to become firmly rooted in the world, and especially in America, could have induced the President to add, as he did so wisely and so well, to the great and grave cares which constantly occupy his mind.

Now that the question has been disposed of, and from the horizon of the two Republics has been forever dispelled every cloud which could affect their relations, and obstruct [obstaculizar] their progress, the sentiment of gratitude to which I have referred increases in its intensity,

In the name of my country and of my Government, Mr. Secretary, I pray your excellency to be pleased to convey to the President of the United States the assurance that the benefit he has graciously conferred upon them in accepting the arbitral office which was intrusted to him by the treaty of Guatemala, of the 24th o' December, 1886, between Costa Rica and Nicaragua is so great and positive that neither Costa Rica nor any other of the peoples of Central America can ever forget it; and that this sentiment of profound respect and thankfulness toward his elevated personality includes your excellency as Secretary of State, the distinguished officer who as delegate of the arbitrator assisted by his luminous report upon the matter in question, and the whole nation whereof your excellencies are worthy representatives, which by its greatness, its prudence, and the wisdom of its laws and institutions influences in a manner as efficient as it is beneficial the progress of the other peoples of America.

LEGATION OF COSTA RICA, Washington, September 19, 1888. (Received September 20.)

SIR: The newspapers of this capital publish in their numbers of yesterday and the day before the news that the Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to collectors of customs, in which, after stating that he has been informed by the Department of State that various lines of foreign and Costa Rican vessels plying between Costa Rica and New York, New Orleans, and other United States ports, and likewise between Costa Rica and European ports, enjoy a rebate of 5 per cent. in the payment of import duties, and also certain privileges as regards the payment of port charges, and that said rebate is not granted to United States vessels, he instructs them, in consequence, to subject cargoes of Costa Rican vessels entering United States ports to the discriminating duties established by section 2501 of the Revised Statutes, as incorporated in the act of March 3, 1883.

On the supposition that the notice published is correct, I have the honor to call your attention to the true state of the case in Costa Rica.

It is true that some navigation companies, in virtue of a special concession, enjoy a reduction of 5 per cent. in the payment of import duties on goods imported in their vessels.

By way of compensation for this, these companies agree that their vessels shall enter the ports of the Republic a certain number of times each month, that they shall carry the mails of Costa Rica to foreign countries, and vice versa, and allow a number of free passages each year, the same being at the disposal of the Government.

It is thus seen that the concessions are reciprocal, and that those of the nation to the companies are not granted by way of groundless preference, but in exchange for services rendered by said companies.

The law, moreover, which authorizes the executive to conclude with the navigation companies the contracts on which is based the reduction of duties enjoyed by some of them empowers him to conclude similar agreements with any company that may desire it, and that may be willing to contract the same obligations which have been required of those with which arrangements have already been made.

In my humble opinion, the United States Government would have acted with perfect justice in adopting the measure which it has, if that of Costa Rica had granted the reduction of duties in favor of all goods imported into the Republic in all vessels of other nations, except those of the United States, or even in all vessels belonging to one particular nation, and perhaps even if, the favor being restricted to one particular company, the benefit were exclusive and gratuitous; in view, however, of the circumstances mentioned, which show that the advantages obtained by some companies are fully accessible to those of this Republic, I think that the decision of your Government has been adopted on the basis of inaccurate information.

If this is true, and if the reasons which I have had the honor to state in this communication should lead to a modification of your judgment, my Government would be much pleased to see a corresponding change made in the order of the Secretary of the Treasury to which this note has reference.

I have, etc.,

No. 317.

Mr. Bayard to Señor Volio.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 19th instant, in which you advert to the statement published in the newspapers of this capital that, in view of the fact that various lines of foreign and Costa Rican vessels enjoy in the ports of Costa Rica a rebate of 5 per cent. in customs duties and certain other exemptions not granted to vessels of the United States in those ports, the Secretary of the Treasury has instructed collectors of customs in the United States to levy upon the cargoes of Costa Rican vessels entering ports of the United States the discriminating duties provided for in section 2501 of the Revised Statutes, as incorporated in the act of March 3, 1883, in respect to cargoes imported in the vessels of countries that discriminate against vessels of the United States. Assuming this report to be correct, you question the justice of the instructions upon the following grounds:

It is admitted that certain navigation companies, by virtue of a special concession, enjoy in the ports of Costa Rica a reduction of 5 per cent. in the payment of customs duties on goods imported in their vessels.

But this is justified as not being a discrimination against vessels of the United States, because the vessels above mentioned agree, in consideration of the reduction, to enter the ports of the Republic a certain number of times each month, to carry the mails of Costa Rica to and from foreign countries and to be at the disposal of the Government of Costa Rica, all of which together constitute a compensation for the privileges and exemptions; thus giving to the arrangement a reciprocal character, which places it outside of any treaty stipulations based upon favor. And it is further stated that the Executive of Costa Rica is authorized by law to conclude similar contracts with any company that may desire it, and that may be willing to take upon itself the same obligations as have been assumed by the companies with which arrangements have already been made.

While fully appreciating the ingenuity and force of the argument set forth in your note, I am compelled to say that this Department is not persuaded that the privileges and exemptions accorded to the lines of vessels in question do not constitute a real and substantial discrimination against vessels of the United States. Even upon the assumption, which I do not think it now necessary to discuss, that those privileges and exemptions do not violate the most favored nation clause in the treaty of commerce between the United States and Costa Rica, the discrimination is yet thought to be obnoxious to the treaties between the two countries, as well as to the act of Congress to which you have referred.

By Article VI of the treaty concluded between the United States and Costa Rica on the 10th of July, 1851, provision is made for an absolute equality of duties on any article being the growth, produce, or manufacture of the one country imported into the territories of the other country, whether the importation be in the vessels of the latter or of the exporting country. It is obvious that, by reason of the privileges and exemptions above stated, such an equality does not at present ex-

It does not appear to the Department to be any answer to this objection, to say that the vessels of the United States may secure similar or the same privileges by assuming the same obligations. It could not have been stipulations of Article VI are not conditional. contemplated by the contracting parties, in employing the unqualified language adopted by them, that either side would be at liberty at any time to suspend the operation of the convention in its own territories by exacting the assumption of such obligations as it might see fit to impose upon the citizens of the other party as a condition precedent to their further enjoyment of the guarantied equality. Still less could the contracting parties have contemplated that, in order to secure such equality, the citizens of either party could be required to agree, as is done in the arrangements now under consideration, that their vessels should be at the disposal of the other party. This is a condition which may not be regarded as onerous to the citizens of the country which exacts it; but it is not a condition to which other governments are likely to agree in order that their vessels may receive equality of treat-

This Government is always glad to witness the prosperity of the Republics of Central America, and has sought in certain ways to ameliorate the conditions of commerce between its own and their territories; and it is regretted that it should be compelled to regard any of the means deemed by any of those Republics to be conducive to the development of its commerce and strength as a discrimination against vessels of the United States.

A BILL TO REGULATE THE TRADE IN PETROLEUM, ETC.

[Introduced in the Danish legislature by the ministry of justice.]

SEC. 1. Petroleum which under the test prescribed in section 2, in an atmosphere represented by a barometer height of 760 millimeters, gives off ignitible vapors at a temperature lower than 23° Celsius, shall not be sold for use in quantities less than the minimum prescribed for its sale at wholesale.

In larger quantities it shall only be sold in packages plainly marked with the word "Explosive" in letters proportionate to the size of the package.

SEC. 2. The temperature at which petroleum first gives off ignitible vapors shall be determined by tests in the so-called "Abel's apparatus."

By a special ordinance rules will be given for the making of these tests, and a ratio fixed for the raising or lowering of the temperature spoken of in section 1, according as the barometer is below or above 760 millimeters.

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 1, second part, apply also to naphtha and benzine as well as to other products obtained from petroleum by distillation which, under the test mentioned in section 1, give off ignitible vapors at a temperature less than 23° Celsius. When sold for use in quantities less than the minimum prescribed for their sale at wholesale, their packages, besides being marked as above, shall bear in legible letters the words "Must not be brought near an open light."

The provisions of this paragraph may, by special ordinance, be extended so as to include other liquid hydrocarbons.

Persons accused of infringement of this law shall, when tests in connection with the case are to be made under police inspection, be given due notice to be present at the same.

SEC. 5. This law, which does not apply to the Faroe Islands, goes into effect three months after its publication in the "Law Tidings" (Lovtidenden).

From the same time the "law governing the trade in petroleum and other illuminating liquids" of November 12, 1870, is repealed.

Regular session, 1886-'87 (2).

GOVERNMENT'S REMARKS ON THE PRECEDING BILL.

By a law of November 26, 1870, section 1, it is ordained that petroleum and other illuminating liquids giving off ignitible vapors at a temperature lower than  $40^\circ$  Celsius shall, under a fine of from 20 to 200 rigsdalers, be not sold for use except in holders which, in legible letters proportionate to the holder's size, shall be marked with the word "Dangerous" (Farlig).

In conformity with this paragraph's second part, there are, by a royal ordinance of September 4, 1871 (see the proclamation of September 8, that year), given rules for the construction of that apparatus with which tests of the temperature at which petroleum and other illuminating liquids give off ignitible vapors are to be made, as are also rules for the making of such tests.

In the years which have elapsed since this law was passed, the use of petroleum as an illuminating agent has, as is well known, greatly increased.

At the same time its production has, of course, kept pace; but, inasmuch as the raw petroleum, besides the illuminating oil proper (kerosene), contains a very considerable quantity—as high as 45 per cent—of other sile, which are of a comparesiderable quantity—as high as 45 per cent.—of other oils which are of a comparatively low value, attempts have been made to mix these with the illuminating oil, thus producing an article of much greater ignitibility, and therefore far more dangerous than the unadulterated oil.

As a natural consequence of this the attention of the authorities in the various countries has steadily been devoted toward the passing of such regulations as would secure consumers against these dangers, and experience has of late years led to the passage of new laws governing the trade in petroleum and similar explosive liquids in several countries, among them both of our neighbors, Germany (1882) and Sweden (1885).

Now, as the tests upon which these newer laws are based have shown that the laws in force with us do not insure sufficient security, the ministry, whose attention was called to the matter by a lecture given before the Insurance Companies' Union, required an opinion in the matter from the Polytechnic Institute, and in pursuance of the explanation and the recommendations therein made, have deemed it necessary to propose radical changes in the present legislation upon the subject, looking toward the establishment of greater security against the dangers arising from the use of petroleum and its relative oils, as well as more perfect agreement with similar legislation in our nearest neighboring countries.

The law of November 26, 1870, in fixing the "test" of petroleum at 40° C. had reference to the open apparatus then in use for testing; but later experiments have demonstrated that no open apparatus can give sufficiently reliable results, and least of all the one there authorized.

This tester far from satisfies the demands made upon it to-day, (1) because it does not give results which agree with each other, inasmuch as tests with the same oil can often vary as much as 3° C., and even this exactness can only be attained after considerable experience; (2) because the law fixes 40° as the lowest limit for the lamitant of the review which six that expendence in the same of the review of the results of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review of the review ignition of the vapors, while oil that scarcely satisfies tests which in reality demonstrate a safe article shows a temperature of 53°, so that a dealer whose object was alone his pecuniary advantage might, without breach of law, import an oil of 13° lower test, which in use would prove extremely dangerous. This latter defect might easily be remedied administratively by simply ordering a few minor changes in the dimensions of the tester's various parts, but the first difficulty can only be removed by ordering the tests to be made in a closed apparatus.

This, however, can not be accomplished unless a change be made in the legal test temperature, which in such case must be set considerably lower (210-230 Celsius), and the ministry of justice has therefore, as was also advised by the Polytechnic Institute, deemed it most advisable to introduce a bill to alter the law, the more as such a step is indicated by the wish, above all, to seek the exclusion of dangerous petroleum from the retail trade, and thus from daily use.

Thus the present bill has been prepared. While ordering that tests shall be made in a certain closed apparatus it fixes the test at 23° Celsius.

In this connection it is to be remarked that the test is not fixed at the same point in the various countries. In Germany it is 21° C.; it is 22° in Sweden, and about 230 in England.

In Germany, however, there seems to be great dissatisfaction with the too low limit, inasmuch as rather poor oil can stand the test, and a movement has been set on foot, seconded by the Polytechnic Institute, to have the test raised to 23°.

As regards the testing apparatus which it is proposed to introduce, the so-called "Abel's" apparatus, it is that which is commonly regarded as the most exact and best, and is authorized by law, both in Germany and Sweden, as well as being used in the United States for testing all oil destined for the English market. therefore, in the opinion of the ministry, be no doubt as to the advisability of choos-

True, it is somewhat dearer than the Danish tester now in use; but this fact, it would seem, should prove no hinderance to its acceptance, as it is more especially would seem, should prove no hinderance appointed. For private use designed for use in the official control where experts are appointed. For private use much cheaper apparatus might be procured, which could be used, some directly on their own merits (Doxrud's apparatus), and some after once for all having been compared with Abel's. That more detailed rules for the use of the authorized apparatus, and among them provisions for changes in the test temperature, according as the barometer varies, should be given by special ordinance, will, it is to be presumed, be deemed natural, and fully coincides with the institutions of Germany and Sweden.

deemed natural, and runy coincides with the institutions of Germany and Sweden.

Besides the already-mentioned regulations as to petroleum temperature test, the bill contains, as will be noticed, a prohibition of the sale at retail of petroleum, which does not satisfy the provisions of the bill.

The law of November 26, 1870, allowed, as is known, the sale at retail of such petroleum, providing its holders were marked with the word "Dangerous" (Farlig). The ministry supposes, however, that the uses which can be made of such explosive petroleum in the arts are only of such patrons that the act of forcing its users to The ministry supposes, nowever, that the uses which can be made of such explosive petroleum in the arts are only of such nature that the act of forcing its users to buy their supplies at wholesale can not be productive of any inconvenience, and by thus entirely excluding this product from the retail trade an advantage is undeniably gained in a much stronger guaranty that it will not be purposely or carelessly used for illuminating purposes than if its sale at retail were allowed, even under limited conditions. Still it has been deemed most advisable to retain the abovementioned rules at the marking of the preferres of such oil when sold at wholesale. mentioned rule as to the marking of the packages of such oil when sold at wholesale. In addition, section 3 of the bill contains provisions as to the trade in naphtha, benzine, and similar products obtained by the distillation of raw petroleum.

The reason for these liquids not being included under the same rules as petroleum, as is the case in the law of November 12, 1870, is that they naturally give off ignitible vapors at a temperature far below 23° Celsius, and at the same time, although only to a small degree used as illuminating agents, they have such varied uses in the household as would render it impossible to exclude them from the retail

It is necessary therefore to limit restrictions in this regard to the simple maintenance of the provisions of the law of November 12, 1870, i. e., that all packages of such liquids should bear a warning label.

The other provisions of the bill, which, in the main, are the same as those contained in the law of November 12, 1870, need, it is believed, no explanation.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 156.] Copenhagen, October 12, 1887. (Received October 26.)

SIR: Last Thursday I was informed of a movement on the part of the German Government, which seems to be the beginning of an attempt on the part of Germany to influence or compel Denmark to exclude American pork. The fact is, that much American pork is at present imported into Denmark where, after its arrival, it is repacked and shipped to Germany as a Danish product. A few days ago representations were made to the Danish Government through the German minister in Copenhagen that several cases of trichinosis in Hamburg had been traced to the eating of pork imported from Denmark and claimed to have been an American article. The German Government desires to know whether American pork is admitted in Denmark. Thus the matter rests for the present, but I have the best reason to believe that the intention is to request Denmark to exclude American pork. I shall not fail to report any further developments. While reports of trichinosis are frequent from Germany, I am able to state that not a single case has been known in Denmark since my arrival here, two and a half years

But in Denmark the pork is thoroughly cooked before it is eaten, while the Germans eat it raw.

No. 159.7 LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Copenhagen, October 18, 1887. (Received November 2.)

SIR: The representations to the Department in regard to Denmark's sending ex convicts to the United States, and the articles in the American newspapers seem to be based on an article which appeared last spring in the Danish "Morgenbladet." It was stated that a counterfeiter, by name Riemenschneider, had been released from prison on the condition that he should go to the United States; that he had been sent by one of the Thingvalla ships, and that the ship's officers had been instructed not to let him go ashore before they reached New York. at once made careful inquiry, both at the steam-ship office and everywhere else where I thought information might be obtained, and according to the best information I could get, Riemenschneider had taken passage by an English steamer for Scotland. I had no doubt in my own mind that he had gone to America, but I saw no way of stopping him, especially as he traveled under an assumed name. The Danish Government sometimes pardons convicts on the condition that they leave the country, but it is left for the criminal himself to determine where to go. He may go to Germany, England, Australia, South America, Canada, the United States, or to any other crountry. this manner of pardoning is reprehensible, but I understand that it is practiced by several European countries.

It is presumed that the majority of the ex-convicts go to the United States, where they hope to be lost in the large population, and where they expect to find an opportunity of beginning a new life. This Riemenschneider above mentioned was in partnership with one Salomansen in the book trade. Having a large note to pay and no assets, Riemenschneider, who was a clever engraver, struck off several Danish bills in 1,000 kroner notes. These were so skillfully made that had they been given a little more time to dry before being presented they might not have been detected for a long time. As it was the parties were arrested and sentenced to prison, where Riemenschneider further showed his ingenuity and, as it seems, earned considerable money by constructing a system of bills for use in the building where he was confined. Some months before the expiration of their terms both the convicts were offered pardon upon the usual condition that they would leave Denmark forever. Riemenschneider accepted these terms, while Salomansen declined to leave his native land and is serving out his term of imprison-It has, as stated, been reported that Riemenschneider went to America with his wife, and that he is now in the United States.

1 am inclined to deem it most probable that if he went to America at all he went via Germany or England.

In this way he would sooner escape notice and avoid a long voyage in company with people who knew his past.

Since I came here, two and a half years ago, I have heard some reports of paupers going to America under rather suspicious circumstances, but the particulars have been so difficult to secure that I have not reported them, and I am now unable to give any more than a general, superficial statement.

Last winter it was said that a man, with his wife and children, had for a long time been supported by the community. Suddenly he disappeared from the poor-house, and in course of time a letter came from him He requested that his wife and children be sent to him. from America.

These accordingly disappeared in two installments, but where the money for their passage came from no one knows. It is hardly probable that the husband furnished the means. Of course, the Government of Denmark can in no wise be blamed for such things, as they happen without its knowledge, but I suppose that there are poor house boards that do not shrink from disposing of their paupers in this manner. I do not know what measures could be taken by our Government to guard our society from the infliction of European outcasts, to which it has been so long subjected. Perhaps the inspection at our American ports of entrance might be made more rigid, but, as our foreign service is now organized, it is, in my opinion, impossible to do much on this side of the Atlantic. Certainly our ministers and consuls could not examine the half million of Europeans who emigrate annually, nor could we well demand passports from all those who wish to land in American ports.

SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your dispatch No. 62, dated November 1, and referring to my No. 156, I have the honor to report the following: A prominent pork-packer here in very good standing sent two cargoes of pork to Paris, where the article found a ready market at a good price. Encouraged by this he sent a cargo to Bordeaux, but this was confiscated, after a specimen of it had been sent to Paris for examination and it had been decided that it was American pork, a fact which occasioned the confiscation.

The Danish exporter declares, upon his honor, that the hogs were not American and were slaughtered by himself. He is willing to support this statement by his oath. A complaint has been made at the Danish foreign office and a correspondence is now being carried on between the Danish and French Governments anent the matter. A pork plague is now raging in southern Sweden and about Copenhagen, a fact which may lead to an exclusion of Danish pork from Germany and other countries. It may be that after this exclusion has taken place, Germany will not again open her doors to Danish pork unless Denmark shuts her doors against the American product. I have read your inclosures accompanying your dispatch No. 62, concerning the pork question between the United States and Germany and France, and had a conversation yesterday with the director-general of the Danish foreign office. He assured me that there was no disposition whatever on the part of Denmark to exclude American pork, and that no arguments pro or contra, were necessary. The Danish export of pork to Germany amounts to about $5,333,000 annually.

It is apparent that Denmark can not sacrifice the $5,333,000 of export for the sake of admitting American pork.

No. 199. LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Copenhagen, February 1, 1888. (Received February 15.)

SIR: I have the honor to report that John A. Benson, the person indicted in the United States circuit court of California for conspiracy and extensive land frauds, arrested in Copenhagen December 8, 1887, and held by the Danish Government at your request, left here on Monday evening, January 30, for New York via Bremen in charge of United States Marshal J. C. Franks, of San Francisco. They were to sail today on the steamer Lahn, of the North German Lloyd line, and may be expected to arrive in New York about the 9th or 10th.

At the police station the prisoners gave their names as John D. Pomeroy, of Montreal, and William B. Franks, of Victoria, British Columbia. They stated that they had come to England for the purpose of buying cattle and were in Denmark on a pleasure trip. The following day two scrapbooks, found in their trunks, and filled with newspaper clippings relating to the "Benson" and allied cases, and strongly tending to excite suspicion that these men were in some way connected with such cases and fugitives from justice, were sent to me by the police authorities, this being the first intimation I had of the affair. By this time the prisoners had confessed their real identity. After an interview with the royal Danish minister of foreign affairs I sent you my telegram of December 9, in which I stated Denmark's willingness to extradite the men, if desired by the United States, even in the absence of a treaty. Not hearing from you during the two days following, and having been informed that the prisoners could not be held much longer, except upon specific request from me, I cabled you again on December 11 that I must have an answer before the 12th at noon or the persons would be sent out of the country. A telegram received from you early in the morning of the 12th instructed me to request the detention of the prisoners and notified me that I should receive full instructions on the day following. On the 13th came your telegram describing Benson and requesting that he be held until an officer should come for him, stating also that his brother was not indicted. I carefully followed your instructions, and orders were issued for the detention of John A. Benson. while his brother Frank was sent to America by the Thingvalla steamer Thingvalla, as I informed you in my dispatch No. 184, of December 16.

The indictments in the cases were duly received by me, and United States Marshal J. C. Franks arrived here on Thursday, January 26, upon which arrangements for the prisoner's conveyance were made as soon as Marshal Franks suggested that a Danish officer be allowed to accompany him and the prisoner to Bremen, but to this the authorities could not consent, as they wished to avoid any complications with Germany and did not know how that Government would look upon this act of transporting a prisoner through its territory without first obtaining its permission. I have been positively informed that the Governments of Germany, Sweden, and Norway have threatened to refuse to admit pork from Denmark unless the latter country accedes to their demands. I will add, that those engaged in pork raising in Denmark are doing all in their power to induce the Danish Government to prohibit the importation of American pork. In this they are of course pecuniarily interested, as it will raise the price of pork. It is being urged in many quarters by those interested that the swine epidemic (which I have reported) comes from America, although no live pork has ever been brought to Denmark or to Europe so far as I know. The advocates of prohibition claim that the large wooden casks in which American hams are shipped are afterward used as pens or sties, in which pigs are fattened in Scandanavia, and that in this manner the disease is conveyed from America to the live Scandinavian hogs. This theory seems to me the height of absurdity, and yet the advocates of prohibition are using it most vigorously and seemingly with success.

Mr. MINISTER: In a note dated August 11 of last year you desire to ascertain whether, in the ports of Denmark or any dependency thereof, any discrimination exists against vessels of the United States as compared with the vessels of Denmark (other than those engaged in the coasting or colonial trade), or the vessels of any third country.

In reply I have the honor to make the following statement: According to article 3 of the treaty of April 26, 1926, between Denmark and the United States, United States vessels engaged in the Danish foreign carrying trade are in the ports of Denmark to be treated in every respect the same as Danish ves-

Ship dues, which in Denmark have replaced the former tonnage, light-house, and clearance dues, and are the only ones collected, are therefore exacted of United States vessels according to the same rules as of Danish vessels, and in the royal and municipal harbors they pay the same harbor and wharf dues as the Danish ships (at least in case the Danish vessel does not belong in the harbor concerned, as in some municipal harbors—Copenhagen excepted—the harbor dues are lower for such vessels than for other Danish vessels.)

In the above-mentioned note you did not include vessels engaged in the coasting In the above-mentioned note you did not include vessels engaged in the coasting trade. I would, however, state for your information upon this point that His Majesty's Government is willing, in case of reciprocal action on the part of the United States, to grant United States vessels the right of free coast trade between the harbors of the kingdom upon an equal footing with Danish vessels.

According to article 6 of the treaty of 1826, the provisions of that treaty are not to apply to Iceland, the Farce Islands, Greenland, or the Danish West Indies.

By independent, larislation in Iceland, no restrictions or discriminations in the

By independent legislation in Iceland no restrictions or discriminations in the treatment of United States vessels are provided for, save those in regard to the coasting trade, and the trade between Iceland and this Kingdom and His Majesty's Government is willing, in case of reciprocity on the part of the United States, to remove this discrimination against United States vessels.

The laws governing the Faroe Islands require of United States vessels visiting these islands for purposes of trade, besides the usual tonnage dues, the supplementary charge of 2 kroner per ton of the vessel's tonnage, and in addition thereto the above-mentioned restriction in regard to the coasting trade and the trade between the islands and the Kingdom is in force. But inasmuch as this supplementary charge has by treaty already been removed in regard to vessels of various other nations, His Majesty's Government is willing to extend this favor to those of the United States, and also, in case of reciprocity, to extend to them the privileges of the coasting trade among these islands as well as of the trade between the islands and the Kingdom.

In the Danish West Indies United States vessels are, upon the whole, treated in all respects the same as Danish vessels.

Finally, I may call your attention to the fact that the trade of Greenland is no more open to Danish vessels than to foreign vessels, that trade being reserved exclusively for the Crown.

I seize, etc.

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 208, dated February 24, 1888, I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that I divided your circular of July 9, and made it a subject of two notes to the royal Danish minister of foreign affairs. In the first I simply asked for the information required by the latter part of the circular, and the note from the minister of foreign affairs, which I transmitted with my No. 208, is an answer to the same. In my second note I embodied the invitation to the Government of Denmark to co-operate with the Government of the United States toward the ends contemplated by the circular.

To this second note I have not yet received a reply, but I am informed that an effort is being made to abolish all tonnage and equivalent charges on navigation. The foreign office is daily expecting information from the minister of finance on the subject, and as soon as that is at hand I am promised an answer to my second note. Count Sponneck, the Danish minister in Washington, has, I understand, been fully instructed in regard to the position of the Government of Denmark anent this subject.

No. 344.

Count Sponneck to Mr. Bayard.

[Translation.]

Washington, March 26, 1888. (Received March 27.)

Mr. Secretary of State: In laying before you the inclosed petition of C. A. B. Johnson, which has been forwarded to me for this purpose by the ministry of foreign affairs, I have the honor to add the following remarks:

From the certificate of baptism, which is appended to the petition, and which I beg you to be pleased to return to me, it appears that Johnson, who was born September 27, 1855, was baptized by the Rev. Charles R. Fisher, on the 28th day of September, 1856, in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Hartford, Conn. His parents, however, were Danes, and although he is by birth a citizen of the United States, he has lived uninterruptedly ever since he was two years old in Denmark, in which country he intends to remain, and in which, by a special law, he was admitted on the 10th of February last to the enjoyment of the rights of a native of Denmark. Such a law is necessary to enable any foreigner to enjoy the rights of a citizen among us, but before it can take effect the interested party is invariably required to furnish evidence before the expiration of one year that he has been released from his foreign citizenship.

With a view to obtaining for Johnson an official document, showing that he has ceased to be an American citizen, I take the liberty, Mr. Secretary of State, of asking your kind mediation with the competent authorities. Nevertheless, in case such a formal declaration should be incompatible with the laws of the United States, the petitioner might arrange matters by furnishing a declaration from the competent American authorities of a less categorical nature, merely stating that the United States Government has no objection to Johnson's becoming a Danish citizen, in which case I should be glad if you would, if possible, send me such a document.

Be pleased to accept, etc.,

Mr. Bayard to Count Sponneck.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 10, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 26th ultimo, inclosing the petition of Charly A. B. Johnson, soliciting release from the duties of American citizenship on the ground of having been granted Danish protection.

From the explanatory statement in your note it appears that Mr. Johnson, while born in the United States of Danish parents in 1855, has lived uninterruptedly since he was two years old in Denmark, animo manendi, and was by a special law admitted on the 10th of February last to the enjoyment of the rights of a native of Denmark; and, further, that before the law referred to can take effect the interested party is required to furnish evidence (before the expiration of one year) that he has been released from his foreign citizenship. To this end you ask for the official certificate of such release or some equivalent declaration.

While it is not competent, under existing statutes, for the Department of State to issue at their request certificates to particular citizens admitting the renunciation of their allegiance, I have no hesitation in saying that the Government of the United States recognizes the right of expatriation, and this Department has frequently declared, as a general principle, that when a citizen of the United States voluntarily becomes naturalized or renaturalized in a foreign country, he is to be regarded as having lost his rights as a citizen of the United States.

In the particular case you present a special doctrine is applicable besides the general one thus announced; and that is that a child born abroad of American parents, or in the United States of foreign parents, although subject to the parental domicil during minority, has, on becoming sui juris, the right of election of citizenship; and, in the event of choosing American nationality, the best proof of such election is to be furnished by continued residence in the United States, or by return hither, if abroad, and the discharge of the duties and obligations of the elected citizenship. The converse of this proposition would seem to meet Mr. Johnson's case on the facts as stated by you.

Sir: I inclose herewith an instruction addressed to Mr. J. G. Walker, now at Quito on a special mission to the Government of Ecuador.

The instruction relates to the law recently passed by the Ecuadorian Congress for the purpose of exempting the Government of the country from diplomatic claims growing out of the acts and omissions of its authorities. If, at the time of the reception by you of this document, Mr. Walker is still at Quito, you will at once forward it to him, retaining a copy for your files.

If not, you are instructed to retain the original and to execute its directions by writing to the Ecuadorian minister for foreign affairs the following note:

I am instructed by my Government to inform you that it has had brought to its attention a law recently passed by the Ecuadorian Congress in relation to the responsibility of the Government of Ecuador for losses and injuries suffered by foreigners in this country by reason of the acts and omissions of its authorities. In this law it is declared that Ecuador is not responsible for losses and damages caused by the enemy, either in a civil or international war, or by mobs, riots, or mutinies; or for losses and damage caused by the Government in its military operations, or in the measures it may adopt for the restoration of public order; that the country is not liable for losses or damages consequent upon measures adopted by the Government towards natives or foreigners, involving their arrest, banishment, imprisonment, etc., whenever the exigencies of public order or a compliance with treaties with neighboring nations may require such action.

My Government regards these provisions as generally and substantially subversive of the principles of international law by which, and not by domestic legislation, the ultimate liability of Governments to one another must be determined. Should any case calling for such action hereafter unhappily arise, my Government could not admit that its diplomatic intervention could be forestalled by an internal legislative limitation of liability imposed by the Ecuadorian Congress.

Entertaining a friendly interest in the prosperity and development of the Ecuador ian Republic, my Government can not but hope that that of Ecuador will perceive the impolicy of legislation in regard to international matters which is not compatible with cordial relations with foreign states, and which can not fail to be injurious to Ecuador's commercial interests.

SPECIAL MISSION TO ECUADOR, Quito, September 19, 1888. (Received October 15.)

SIR: Although the subject of this communication is not entirely pertinent to the objects of my special mission, I think it proper to forward you a translation of the law recently adopted by the Ecuadorian Congress, as the execution of it in the future may give rise to other complications between our two Governments such as I am now engaged in settling.

This law was passed by the Congress just before the inauguration of President Flores, and upon his assuming power he sent a special message to the two houses advising its repeal, but they refused, and it is now the law.

The foreign diplomatic corps here protested against the act as contrary to the law of nations, and I was asked to join them, but I declined on the ground that my mission here was confined to a specific subject. In my conversations, however, with President Flores and other members of the Government, I have dwelt upon the danger to Ecuador, so far as foreigners are concerned, the execution of such a law would entail. The refusal of Congress to follow his recommendation in this case and its rejection of his projet for the abolition of church tithes so disheartened President Flores that he sent in his resignation, which, however, it unanimously refused to accept.

I am, etc.,

JNO. G. WALKER.

The Ecuadorian Congress decrees as follows:

ART. I. The nation is not responsible for losses and damages caused by the enemy, either in a civil or international war, or by mobs, riots, or mutinies; or for those which may be caused by the Government in its military operations, or in the measures it may adopt for the restoration of public order. ART. II. action.

ART. III. The payment of indemnities not excluded by the foregoing articles can not be made except in conformity with the law of public credit, and after a previous judgment by a competent judicial officer.

ART. IV. Neither foreigner nor native shall have the right of presenting claims to the legislature which were previously rejected by a former congress.

No. 6. 7

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 23, 1888.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch, No. 11, of the 19th ultimo, in which you inclose a translation of a law, lately passed by the Ecuadorian Congress, to exempt the country from any liability to foreigners for losses therein suffered in peace or in war at the hands of the Government or its enemies.

You state that the foreign diplomatic corps at Quito protested against the law, and that President Flores sent a special message to the two houses recommending its repeal. This they refused to do; and it appears that the President, discouraged by this refusal and the rejection by the Congress of his projet for the abolition of church tithes, sent in his resignation, which, however, the Congress declined to accept.

The extraordinary law referred to declares that Ecuador is not responsible for losses and damages caused by the enemy, either in a civil or international war, or by mobs, riots, or mutinies; or for losses and damages caused by the Government in its military operations or in the measures it may adopt for the restoration of public order; that the country is not liable for losses or damages consequent upon measures adopted by the Government toward natives or foreigners, involving their arrest, banishment, imprisonment, etc., whenever the exigencies of public order or a compliance with treaties with neighboring nations may require such action.

It is unnecessary to quote further provisions of the statute to show that it is subversive of all the principles of international law. This is so plain that it does not require or admit of argument. By such a declaration of rules for the guidance of her conduct in international relations, Ecuador places herself outside of the pale of international intercourse. It can not be supposed that she will persevere in such a course, which would be destructive of her commerce and render amicable relations with her impossible.

You are therefore instructed to say to the Ecuadorian Government that the provisions of the law in question have been read by this Department with regret, and that the United States could never acquiesce in any attempt on the part of that Government to use such a statute as an answer to a claim which this Government had presented.

Mr. Vignaud to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. No. 519.] Paris, December 16, 1887. (Received December 27.)

SIR: I have to acquaint you with the circumstances of the case of Albert F. Gendrot, an American citizen, who has been summoned to perform military service in France, and whose discharge, firmly and repeatedly demanded by this legation, seems more difficult to obtain than at first supposed.

Gendrot was born at Cambridge, Mass., April 29, 1866. His father, Pierre Gendrot, is a Frenchman, who emigrated to the United States in 1847, and who continued to live there, at Boston, or near by, until 1870, when he returned to France, where he remained a few years, after which he again resumed his domicile near Boston until 1885. In that year he came back to France with his family.

Albert Gendrot, then aged nineteen, accompanied his father and mother, with the view of learning French and studying art. He procured before he left an American passport.

A few months ago he was notified that, being the son of a Frenchman, he was liable to military duty in France. He protested that he was a native born American citizen, temporarily residing in France, and declared that he would perform no military service in any other country but his own. He was, nevertheless, put on the recruiting list of the village where his father lived, and ordered to join the regiment to which he had been assigned. Upon being informed of this fact Mr. McLane addressed the following note to Mr. Flourens:

> LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, October 25, 1887.

Sir: I have the honor to call your kind attention to the case of Albert F. Gendrot, an American citizen, who has been placed on the military lists, in spite of his protest, by the mayor of the village of Torcé, near Bonnetable (Sarthe), where his father lives, and who has just received orders to join the corps to which he has been assigned.

Gendrot is not a naturalized American; he is a native American, born and brought up in the United States, where he received his education. He speaks French badly, and only came to France to perfect himself in that language. He is the bearer of an American passport and proposes soon to return to his country.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Minister, I trust you will have no objections to ask the minister of war to be good enough to give urgent orders that Gendrot, who has never been French, may not be impressed into a service the honors and obligations of which belong to Frenchmen alone.

This case being one of those which can hardly be postponed, I would be under still another obligation to you if you would be kind enough to take it immedately into consideration.

I avail, etc.,

ROBERT M. MCLANE.

On the 8th of November Gendrot was arrested and imprisoned for having failed to comply with the military order he had received. He telegraphed at once to the legation, and on the same day Mr. McLane again called the attention of Mr. Flourens to the matter in the short note herewith:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, November 8, 1887.

SIR: I am advised by a telegram from Savigné Levèque that Albert Felix Gendrot to whose case I have called your excellency's attention on the 25th ultimo, has just been arrested to be incorporated in the army. Mr. Gendrot being a natural American, that is to say, an American born and brought up in the United States, his case is a very simple one, and I beg your excellency to intervene at once in order that be released.

I avail, etc.,

This request was complied with. Gendrot was released temporarily after one week's confinement, that is to say, November 17, and Mr. Flourens informed Mr. McLane of the fact in these lines:

Paris, November 11, 1887.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 8th of this month, I hasten to inform you that the minister of war is only waiting, to decide upon the case of Gendrot, for the arrival of certain information which he has been obliged to ask for from the prefect of the Sarthe and the commander of the recruiting bureau of Mamers.

Orders have, moreover, been given by my colleague that the departure for the regiment of the individual in question should be temporarily delayed.

Accept, etc.,

FLOURENS.

This note, although not quite satisfactory, led us to hope that Gendrot would finally be discharged. But to my surprise he called yesterday at the legation and stated that he had received another notice to join his corps, and that he would be again arrested if he did not comply with the order. He said he had come to the legation to be advised, and asked if we were able to protect him or if he had to take care of himsef. I assured him that the legation would exert all means to obtain his final discharge, but added that, judging from my experince of the delays attending in France the consideration of cases of this class, I feared no definite result could be reached before many weeks, perhaps months, during which time he might be subjected to annoying and vexatious proceedings.

I nevertheless promised him to communicate again with Mr. Flourens with reference to his case, and did so at once in the following note:

> LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, December 15, 1887.

SIR: Albert F. Gendrot, a natural-born American, who has been erroneously inscribed on the recruiting list of the French army, advises this legation that, notwithstanding Mr. McLane's interposition, he has received the order to join the twenty-eighth regiment of the line at Rouen. I can hardly admit that this information is correct. The two communications which Mr. McLane had the honor of addressing you with reference to this subject, October 25 and November 8, show so clearly the right of the United States Government to claim Gendrot, who was neither born nor brought up in France, and who is not domiciled there, that I must believe in a misunderstanding.

I beg your excellency to give your immediate attention to this case, which, in point of view of principle, has for us much more importance than it can have for you, and to take such action as will bring about the only solution dictated by reason and justice, if not by the strict letter of law.

I avail, etc.,

HENRY VIGNAUD, Chargé.

The experience we have had in this legation with reference to cases of this kind is so little encouraging that I will not venture now to express any hope of succeeding in the present application; but, even with the knowledge or belief that it would be denied, it had to be made, and I trust that the manner in which this has been done will meet with your approval.

On that very day Mr. Flourens had written me that no irregularity had been committed in the case of Gendrot, who, being the son of a Frenchman, was liable to military service in France although born in

SIR: On the 11th of November last I informed Mr. McLane that the minister of war was only waiting, to decide upon the case of Gendrot, for the arrival of certain information from the prefect of the Sarthe and the officer in charge of the recruiting office of Mamers, which he had asked for.

General Logerot announces to me to-day that it appears from information trans-General Logerot announces to me to-day that it appears from information transmitted to his department that the interested party was, as a matter of course, and by the application of articles 8 and 10 of the law of the 27th of July, 1872, placed upon the recruiting list in the commune of Torcé, where his father is domiciled, who there has the enjoyment of his civil and political rights. In support of the protest which Gendrot has made against this enrollment he has produced only a certificate showing that he was born the 29th of April, 1866, at Cambridge, State of Massachusetts. By the French law the person born abroad of French parents is French, and it is for this reason that the enrollment of Gendrot has been maintained by the council of revision.

In this state of things my colleague is of the opinion that no irregularity has been committed to Gendrot's prejudice, and begs me to express to you his regrets that he is not in a position to delay any longer calling this young man to serve under our flag.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, December 17, 1887.

SIR: I have read with surprise and regret your communication of the 15th instant, concerning the Gendrot case, which crossed mine of the same date.

I might understand that the Government of the Republic should claim those who, born in France, have changed their nationality before complying with the French military laws, but that it should claim as Frenchmen native-born Americans who happen to be temporarily in France is a contention which the United States Government will refuse to admit, I have no doubt. I therefore beg your excellency to suspend the decision taken with reference to Gendrot, and to examine again in a conciliatory spirit the questions of principle involved in this case.

The information transmitted to the minister of war, and communicated to me by your excellency, adds no new element to the question. Mr. McLane knew that it was in accordance with law that Gendrot's name was inscribed on the recruiting list; he knew also that no irregularity had been committed with reference to French law, and so he did not base his remonstrance on such a ground, but on the higher ground of the consideration which is due by friendly governments to their respective sovereignties. To claim as a Frenchman a man in the situation of Gendrot is to seek to take away from the legitimate jurisdiction of the United States a natural-born American, to place him, against his will and against the protest of the United States, under the jurisdiction of France, where he accidentally finds himself, and to which he is bound by no other tie save the nationality of his father.

It is to this consideration that I call your attention. Gendrot's case is not one to which the doctrine of jus sanguinis can be strictly applied. Gendrot was not born in the United States by accident. His father was not passing through the country. He was, on the contrary, regularly domiciled, and lived there for thirty years; he brought up his son there and gave him an American education. Gendrot, jr., did not come to France to establish himself, but to pursue certain studies, after which he proposed to return to the country of his birth, a country of which he has the manners, of which he speaks the language, which he considers as, and which really is, his own.

Your excellency says that, in support of his plea against his inscription on the recruiting list, Gendrot produced nothing but a certificate showing that he was born April 29, 1866, at Cambridge, Mass. But he produced also his passport, and what more could he have done? Besides his certificate of birth and his passport what other paper can a Frenchman traveling abroad produce to establish his nationality?

I venture to hope that, if your excellency will give his attention to these considerations, he will spare this legation the mortification of having to inform the United States Government that it has failed in a demand which will strike every American as well founded, and to which they all attach great importance.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 520, of the 16th instant, reporting your intervention in behalf of Mr. Albert F. Gendrot, an American citizen im-

Your course in regard to this case is approved, and you are instructed to continue to use your good offices to obtain his relief from any claims that may be made on him for military service in France. You will, however, advise him that his remaining in France after he becomes of age may be regarded as an election of French nationality (see Wharton's Digest, Vol. II, § 183, pp. 396-7, 2d edition), and that his only method of electing and maintaining an American nationality is by a prompt return to this country.

SIR: I have the honor to send herewith a copy and translation of Mr. Flourens' reply to my last communication, insisting upon the discharge of Gendrot. Mr. Flourens says the minister of war can not comply with the request, and repeats the usual reply made by his department to applications of this kind having reference to French naturalized Americans, viz, that Gendrot can apply to the courts of justice, and that if he secures a judgment declaring that he is not a Frenchman he will be discharged.

Mr. Flourens is undoubtedly aware that the remedy he suggests here is, in this peculiar case, illusive. The French courts of justice can adjudge that a Frenchman who has been naturalized abroad has lost his original national character, because French law so states it. But Gendrot being a natural born American, son of a Frenchman, remains a Frenchman according to French law. His application to the courts can not therefore be successful. It seems that he has so understood his case, for I am informed by his father that, being about to be arrested again and imprisoned, he has left France.

SIR: On the 17th of this month you were good enough to write to me again upon the subject of the young man Gendrot, born in the United States of French parents. You insisted in that communication upon obtaining the exemption of that person from military service under our flag.

The minister of war, to whom I had not failed to refer your letter, recalls the fact that Gendrot, born abroad of a French father, since the latter is in the enjoyment at that Gendrot, oorn abroad of a French father, since the latter is in the enjoyment at Torce (Sarthe) of his civil and political rights, is a Frenchman by the terms of article 10 of the civil code, his position from the point of view of military service is therefore not doubtful and would be the same, as far as France is concerned, whatever might be the country where the interested party was born.

My colleague adds that if Gendrot insists upon claiming American citizenship, he is at liberty in order to establish his true position, to apply to the civil courts, which is at liberty, in order to establish his true position, to apply to the civil courts, which are alone competent, according to the rules of our law, to decide upon questions relating to the status of persons. The subject has lost none of its interest here; it is the wish of the Department that no efforts may be omitted on the part of your legation to induce the withdrawal of the apparently needless, and, in some aspects, almost unfriendly policy pursued by France in relation to one of the greatest and most necessary export staples of the United States.

Sir: In the kaleidoscope of French ministerial changes appears the latest, and quite recently, as prime minister and president of the council, Mr. Tirard, the same who, on February 18, 1881, as minister of agriculture and commerce, issued the famous edict of prohibition of American salted pork being imported into France, on the ground of its consumption being against public health.

How unfounded this pretense was, and what efforts have since been made by chambers of commerce, deputations of workingmen, etc., to induce the numerous intervening ministers of commerce, need not be repeated.

I am sure our people would not care what import duty France might levy on hog preduce, provided all nations be treated equally; but to admit German, Belgium,

MR. TIRARD AND AMERICAN SALTED MEATS.

Mr. Tirard, the new president of the council, was minister of agriculture and commerce in 1881.

It was he who, in a report which we find in the Official Journal of the 19th February of 1881, asked the president of the Republic to sign a decree prohibiting the importation into France of salted pork, bacon, ham, etc., coming from the United States of America. The president of the Republic in effect signed a decree bearing date of the 18th February, 1881.

According to the judgment of Mr. Tirard, the consumption of this meat was dangerous to the public health. In the report alluded to, Mr. Tirard remarks that the importation of these meats through the port of Havre alone, the most important in France, was from 29,000,000 to 30,000,000 kilogrammes (2.2 pounds each) or 2,500 tons a month. By a single stroke of the pen this important branch of commerce, this element of prosperity of Havre, was suppressed. It deprived the carrying trade of an amount of freight not to be despised and which has not been replaced.

On November 27, 1883, Mr. Herisson, then minister of commerce, submitted to the president of the Republic another decree, withdrawing the edict of the 18th February, 1881, and Mr. Tirard, who had become minister of finance, countersigned the decree

No time however, was given to rejoice over this good measure; indeed, in consequence of a manifestation in the chamber of deputies, a third decree was launched on December 28, putting off the execution of the decree of the 27th of November preceding.

This was Havre's new year's gift. Ever since then we have lived under the rule of prohibition. Not only one branch of industry suffered thereby, not only our merchant marine suffered serious loss, but the entire trade of France was struck at.

The United States of America, when they saw the French market closed to this produce, used reprisals, raising in their turn obstacles against the import of our articles and placing our products at a disadvantage in the American markets.

The prohibition of American salted pork articles, produced immediately a falling off in our exports of 125,000,000 francs (75,000,000 in 1884, and 50,000,000 in 1885), the falling off continuing ever since.

The efforts and representations which have been made, the steps which have been taken by representatives of Havre, deputies and members of the chamber of commerce, to reverse this unlucky measure reducing our trade movement by 40,000 tons and more than 50,000,000 in value, have not succeeded.

and more than 50,000,000 in value, have not succeeded.

Succeeding ministers have given (holy water) promises, but that was all.

The return of Mr. Tirard to power as chief of the cabinet furnishes, perhaps, an opportunity for renewed attempts. No doubt the chamber of commerce will be disposed to new endeavors. Mr. de Querhoënt will go into harness again, and Messrs. Siegfried and Faure will give renewed assistance. (Mr. Seigfried, formerly mayor of Havre, was to form part of a Goblet ministry as minister of commerce, but the formation fell through.) The same united action as formerly will be found again all through

Mr. Tirard must have at heart to repair in 1887 the fault which he committed in 1881, and which had such disastrous consequences.

Mr. Dautresme, again minister of commerce, will doubtless encourage him in such efforts, whilst the message of the President of the Republic, in advance of the ministerial programme, promises serious fiscal reforms for the benefit of the whole community, bringing back revenues into the coffers of the state, enriching private purses, furnishing the middle classes and workingmen with a substantial and cheap food, whose harmlessness has been attested not less by facts than by searching and intelligent analysis.

We complained, with perfect reason, of Great Britain prohibiting the importation of French cattle into her territory under the pretext that there had been a mouth disease in 1870. Do not let us give the English the chance to say that they are not ess ridiculous than we are in prohibiting the importation of American hog produce for fear of imaginary trichinosis.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, January 24, 1888. (Received February 7.)

SIR: I have the honor to send herewith copy of a note addressed to Mr. Flourens, on the 11th instant, with reference to the vexed question of the protection of American citizens of French origin, from whom military service is claimed when they visit France.

As you have been made aware by previous correspondence from this legation, there are now two American citizens of French parentage serving in the French army—Pierre Arbios, of California, and John Fruchier, of Nevada. If there is not a third (Albert F. Gendrot) it is because he has escaped after being arrested. You are also aware that when this legation applies for the discharge of an American of this category, the French Government requires that proof be made of his foreign citizenship before a court of justice, and admits that if such proof is made the man is entitled to his discharge.

In my note to Mr. Flourens I contend that when the United States Government claims an individual as a naturalized American citizen the evidence of this fact is established, and I decline to go before any court of justice to furnish a proof which is already in the possession of the Government and which it is at liberty to accept if willing to do so. I therefore renewed formally my application for the discharge of the two naturalized Americans now in the French army, and I asked for the release from all military obligation of the natural-born American claimed as French, demanding for the latter the same rights of citizenship conceded by the French Government to the naturalized American.

My note closes with an effort to impress upon Mr. Flourens the necessity of coming to some equitable arrangement with reference to cases of this kind, and I have pledged myself to consider in a friendly spirit any proposition he may be disposed to make to reach that end.

The conversations I have had with him on this subject, and the information furnished to the legation by the foreign office, lead me to believe that some kind of agreement may be made as to the mode of establishing the naturalization of those claimed as Americans. Mr. Flourens admitted to me that there should be some other means of making known to the war department that a man claiming to have renounced his French citizenship has really done so than by appealing to the courts; but he stated that in matters of this kind the Government had to defer greatly to the opinion of the minister of war.

With reference to American-born citizens whose fathers were French, Mr. Flourens showed no disposition to yield; the ruling principle of France, he said, was that the nationality was derived from parentage and not from the place of birth. I did not press him upon this point, because I am satisfied that if he makes any concession concerning naturalized French Americans he will have also to concede something concerning natural born Americans of French parentage.

An early reply to my communication can hardly be expected.

I have, etc.,

ROBERT M. MCLANE.

[Inclosure in No. 538.]

Mr. McLane to Mr. Flourens.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, January 11, 1888.

SIR: I had just read your excellency's communication to Mr. Vignaud, of the 28th of December last, in reply to his reiterated request that Albert Gendrot, a naturalborn citizen of the United States, be recognized as such. Your excellency declines to do so, and refers me to the courts of justice.

I had hoped that, owing to the circumstances of the case, the Government of the French Republic would have responded in a more liberal spirit to this request, and I must not conceal from your excellency that this decision is for me a cause of profound regret. I could let the matter rest there, but it would then be the painful duty of my Government to advise its citizens of French origin that it is powerless to prevent their being arrested and impressed into the French military service should they visit France, and that alone among all natural-born Americans those who happen to have a French father do not find under the jurisdiction of the French Republic the protection extended everywhere to every American citizen. But I owe it to myself, as well as to the Government of the French Republic, with which I desire to entertain the most cordial relations, to make another effort to conciliate you, or at least to invite your attention to the attitude taken towards the United States.

Moreover, it is necessary that our respective situations be clearly defined in this Gendrot is not the only American impressed into the French military service. Pierre Arbios and John Fruchier, in reference to whom this legation has already addressed your department, are in the same case; and since your excellency furnishes me with an occasion of so doing, I propose to examine the treatment to which Americans of this class are subjected in France.

It is impossible that two friendly and enlightened Governments, such as yours and mine, should be compelled to exchange an entire correspondence each time an American of French origin, claimed to be liable to military service, ventures to set his foot in France. There must be some equitable mode of settling the position of those who are thus situated, and if you are disposed to discuss this matter with the conciliatory spirit which guides me, we should not fail to come to a satisfactory and necessary

As the case now stands, he that is born of a French father in the United States, or the Frenchman who has emigrated there while young and has been naturalized, can not return to France without being immediately arrested, imprisoned, and sometimes roughly treated for having failed to perform military service. In vain he protests and produces his papers; he is not listened to; no attention is paid either to his passport, given by a friendly nation, or to his naturalization certificate, duly viséed by this legation, and he is brought before a court-martial, which leaves him no other alternative than to submit himself to the obligations of the military service of a country which is not his own, or to apply to a civil tribunal to have his foreign nationality established.

Reduced to this extremity, and very often having neither the means nor the knowledge necessary to bring his case before a court of justice, this American submits to the outrage, and allows himself to be conducted to the regiment.

One resource remains to him, however. Having come to France relying upon a passport promising him the protection of his Government and that of friendly countries, he appeals to his diplomatic representative at Paris, who, after having satisfied himself that he has to do with one of his countrymen whose rights are incontestable, demands of you that his name be struck from the French military rolls.

Unfortunately your excellency always replies that questions of personal status do not belong to the jurisdiction of the administration, but to that of the judiciary. Thus, for example, on the 9th of November, 1886, I asked for the discharge of Pierre Arbios, a Frenchman by origin but an American by naturalization, who, notwithstanding this character, was enrolled in the army. The 5th of May last (1887) I made a similar demand in behalf of John Fruchier, and October 25 I applied in the same manner for Gendrot. same manner for Gendrot.

The cases of the two first named are almost identical. Both emigrated to the United States when minors; both established themselves there in a permanent manner and regularly acquired American citizenship, although in different ways; Arbios by the fact of the naturalization of his father; Fruchier by direct naturalization. As for Gendrot, he is a natural-born Amercan, whose father is a Frenchman. Coming to France provided with all their papers and with the purpose of making only a temporary sojourn there, they were arrested, imprisoned, and brought before the military authorities, who sent them all three to the army; Arbios to the One Hundredth Regiment, and Fruchier to the Seventh, where they still are, and Gendrot to another. To the complaints which I addressed to you respecting these three Americans your excellency, in behalf of the minister of war, gave me the reply which I spoke of above, and which is invariably made me in cases of this kind-namely, that the

Your excellency could not have meant to tell me that the Government of the Republic is incompetent to decide whether an individual is or is not French; for although all questions of personal status might not come within the jurisdiction of the administration, those which refer to nationality are particularly within this jurisdiction, especially when they arise between two governments.

When a simple individual claims to be a foreigner before the military authorities, it is reasonable that he should be required to prove this before judicial authorities, for soldiers are not ordinarily jurisconsults, and they may not be in a position to decide upon the proofs of foreign nationality which are presented to them.

But when it is a government which makes the claim on another government this manner of proceeding can no longer be justified, for a government might be offended at being asked to prove judicially the fact which it affirms, and, furthermore, the very character of the fact in question is such that it is not possible to establish it by a more direct proof than the affirmation of the government.

When the Government of the United States declares that Pierre Arbios, John Fruchier, and Albert Gendrot are American citizens, and claims them as such, the proof of their foreign nationality ought to be considered as conclusive. A French tribunal can never contest this proof nor add anything to it, because it is an admitted principle that the government which grants the naturalization is the only judge of the conditions upon which it does so.

I beg you to remark that I do not contest the principle, equally sound, that each government is the only judge of the conditions upon which citizenship is lost. I admit then perfectly that the Government of the Republic may make to me one or the other of these two replies: Arbios, Fruchier, and Gendrot remain for us French, in spite of their American citizenship, as determined by American law; or, again, Arbios, Fruchier, and Gendrot are under the obligation of performing military service in France, although they may be French no longer. But you give me neither the one nor the other of these answers. You tell me, on the contrary, very clearly that it is sufficient to prove the foreign nationality of these three men to free them from military service. This proof being at hand, I ask myself why your excellency sends me to a judicial tribunal?

No legislation that I know of makes this procedure obligatory. No law obliges the war department to insist that he who claims to be a foreigner should produce this particular proof of his foreign nationality.

I fully admit that the foreign nationality must be established to the satisfaction of the war department, but it does not follow that this fact can not be established in another manner than by the production of a judgment of a French civil tribunal. The minister of war says that he can not act otherwise, but that is plainly a form of

The minister means that it is the rule which he has laid down to cover his responsibility, and that he does not think he can depart from it. What he has the right to insist upon is that the exemption claimed should be clearly proved, and if he sends the person claiming it to civil courts, it is because in most cases it is a means, easy and efficacious, of covering his own responsibility. But he can act otherwise; and he does act otherwise; it is not only he who has this authority; the general commanding the corps in which the foreigner has been enrolled can order his discharge; the court-martial before which the interested party is brought can do the same thing, and has done it.

The only question, then, for the superior military authorities is to have the certainty that the person who asserts his foreign nationality in order to avoid military service is really a foreigner. Now, this certainty is acquired when the Government of the Republic is confronted by an official demand of another Government claiming

To a demand of this kind it can be replied, as I have said, that the person claimed preserves, in spite of his foreign naturalization, his original nationality; or, again, that his foreign nationality does not exempt him from military service; but it must not and can not be said that the proof of the foreign nationality is still to be made, since this demand itself is a proof of it.

Shall I dare add that not only nothing compels the war department to adopt the attitude which it does adopt, but that the law seems, on the contrary, to prescribe a different one. In fact, the law says no one but a Frenchman is allowed to enter the French army.

There is here a peremptory rule which does not admit of exception, and you can not consider it wrong that my Government should claim the benefit of it.

The cases of Arbios, Fruchier, and Gendrot fall exactly within the scope of this law. Since the 9th November, 1886, in the case of the former; since the 5th May, 1887, in the case of the second; and since October 25 as for the third, the Government of the Republic possesses the official and certain knowledge that these three men are foreigners; and yet, notwithstanding the friendly but formal and precise claim of the American Government, two of them are kept in the ranks of the French national army, where their presence is at the same time contrary to the principle which does not permit the flag of France to be defended by any but Frenchmen, and derogatory to the dignity of the United States, whose sovereignty is disowned in the persons of these American citizens impressed into the service of a country which is not their

Perhaps I will be told that it is not only to make proof of his foreign citizenship that the person claimed by another Government is sent before the civil tribunal, but that it is also to decide whether, according to the law of the country of his origin, he has legally lost his original national character. This is a proposition that I will not dispute, for it is founded on the principle that I have already admitted, to wit, that the country of origin is the only judge of the conditions upon which its citizens lose that for proposition that I have noted that for Covernments like owner which do not admit that character; but please note that for Governments like ours, which do not admit perpetual allegiance, this rule only finds its application in one single case—where the liberty and free will of the individual claimed as a foreigner has not been re-For the same reason that it is not admitted in free countries that a man can be retained against his will and forever in the bonds of the nationality in which accident has caused him to be born, it can not be admitted that this same man can be deprived of his original nationality and vested with another without his consent. cases of this kind the refusal of the country of origin to recognize the naturalization thus conferred becomes a duty.

Let us take two hypothetical cases. A son of a Frenchman who is born in France and who became an American while still a minor by the fact of the naturalization of his father, desires to assume the original nationality of his father.

You refuse to give him up. The United States claim him as an American.

A son of a Frenchman born in the United States desires to remain of the nationality of the country of his birth. You claim him as a Frenchman; the United States refuse to admit that you can do so. It is the same thing if he was born in the United States. The accident of his birth on American soil can not bind him indefinitely to America, and he ought to preserve the right of adhering to the nationality of his father if he so desires. The reverse proposition is of necessity also quite true.

If this son of a Frenchman afterwards approves, with full knowledge of what he is doing, the change of citizenship made by his father, or if he accepts the natural allegiance due to the country of birth until it has been formally renounced, nothing ought to interfere with his liberty of action.

When the naturalized American or the natural-born American belonging to this category claims in France to be an alien, and does so in full accord with the American Government, the element necessary to the validity of contracts—freedom of action—is present. There is consent, sanction, acquiescence, and thenceforth the country of origin can only ground its claim upon that man on the doctrine of perpetual allegiance; that is to say, in denying the inalienable rights that the French Revolution and the American Revolution have forever consecrated, the one possessed by every man, of choosing another country wherever he may find the conditions of happiness and prosperity.

I do not apprehend that you will take such an attitude. The country which received from America the "bill of rights," to make of it a beacon light for the world, can not tell them to-day that it does not recognize the validity of the proceedings by which a Frenchman has become American of his own free will.

I know very well that there exists an old decree inflicting certain penalties upon Frenchmen who abandon their nationality without the authorization of the Government; but this decree allows, nevertheless, the naturalizations thus acquired to stand;

it is not therefore applicable under existing circumstances.

Thus, while it is admitted that the country of origin is the only judge of the terms upon which its citizens lose this character, the tribunal to which your excellency refers me to establish the nationality of those I claim as Americans, can not deny to them this character, because it is not denied that the Frenchman who, with or without the authorization of his Government, is naturalized abroad, loses his original nationality and becomes thereby unfit to perform military service, nor can that tribunal assume to pass upon the conditions on which this naturalization was acquired, because it is equally unquestioned that the country which grants citizenship, freely accepted, does so in its sovereign capacity and upon terms of which it is the sole

It is therefore true to say that, in referring me to the courts, as your excellency does each time I present a claim of this kind, the Government of the Republic holds me to a useless procedure which is not prescribed by law, and to which I can not lend myself, because it might lead to unpleasant consequences.

Let us suppose that I proceed in such a way and that the court to which I apply decides that proof is not made of the American naturalization of the party I claim: What will then be the situation of our respective Governments? Mine will be obliged.

either to acknowledge that its affirmation is not sufficient to establish the validity of a naturalization title granted by itself, or to refuse formally to allow such a pretension. Yours must defend this exorbitant pretension or disavow the tribunal which has made it. For my part I shall not expose my Government to be placed in such a position, and I respectfully decline to take the responsibility of engaging it in such a

The Government of the United States is entitled to expect from the Government of the French Republic a treatment more equitable, more friendly, more liberal, and particularly more in harmony with the great principles of political freedom which they represent in the world. Does not the consideration that civilized nations owe to each other as well as to their reciprocal interests command respect for the naturalization granted by one of them?

Why retain, against his will, the man who of his own accord has severed the ties which bound him to the country of his origin and contracted others? Such a man could make neither a good citizen nor a good soldier. To compel him to perform military and the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man according to the man a itary service is to violate in his person one of the undeniable rights of man and to have slight regard for what is due to the nation which has received him.

I dare hope that your excellency will take into serious consideration the friendly representations which I have just made, and that, appreciating the rights and duties which are incumbent upon our two Governments, respectively, in the present circumstances, you will accord to the United States that which I again have the honor of

(1) The discharge of Pierre Arbios and of John Fruchier, American citizens wrongfully detained to-day under the French flag; one in the Hundredth Regiment of Infantry and the other in the Seventh.

(2) The erasure from the military rolls of the name of Albert Gendrot, a naturalborn American, invested with French citizenship without his consent and knowledge.

The Government of the Republic would put an end to complaints of this kind, which I am frequently called upon to make, if it would consent to come to some agreement with me as to the line of conduct to follow in order to regulate the situation of Frenchmen who have become Americans.

Would it not be possible, for instance, to fix a time after which Frenchmen who become naturalized in the United States might visit France without being molested, and to come to some agreement with respect to the papers they would have to produce to establish that they are Americans? I am disposed to consider favorably any suggestion which may be made with reference to this matter, and your excellency can rest assured that I shall willingly lend myself to any arrangement which would protect the rights and dignity of our two Governments, and that I shall never attempt to extend the protection of the United States to persons who have not legitimately acquired a right to it. My Government has no more sympathy than I have myself for those citizens who throw off their nationality solely in order to escape the just obligations which it entails, and who would make no better Americans than Frenchmen. M. Nouet, governor of New Caledonia and dependencies, to the minister of marine and colonies:

NOUMEA, November 9, 1887.

Mr. MINISTER: In a dispatch of the 13th of August last, No. 629, you did me the honor to transmit to me a copy of a letter from Mr. McLane, Minister of the United States in France, in reference to the facilities said to have been granted by the local government to liberated convicts for going to San Francisco, and you ask me to give you explanations on that subject.

The commercial agent of the United States would appear to me to have transmitted erroneous information to his Government, resulting, undoubtedly, from an incomplete knowledge of the regulations in regard to the authorizations of departure granted to liberated convicts.

In fact, persons of this category, compelled to reside in New Caledonia, obtain, in certain cases, permissions to depart for the countries which they designate; some among them have been thus authorized, upon their demand, to proceed to San Francisco, but not only nobody has been encouraged to go to that city, or anywhere else for that matter, but as far as San Francisco is concerned I have refused permission for the voyage on several occasions.

There has never been a question of appropriating a part of the local budget for the transportation of liberated convicts to the United States.

According to the American representative at Noumea, the French Government of fers a subsidy for a line of steamers from Noumea to Tahiti and San Francisco. Morgan seems to have neglected to procure his information from sufficiently authoritative sources. I believe, in fact, that several inhabitants of Papeete have expressed the desire of seeing a regular service established between New Caledonia and Tahiri and that the council general of the latter colony has voted a certain sum destined to encourage and to aid that enterprise; but there has not, to my knowledge, been any question of prolonging this line to San Francisco.

Whatever may be the case, however, I have taken note of the instructions contained in your dispatch above mentioned of the 13th of August, and no liberated convicts shall be hereafter authorized to depart for the United States.

I am, etc.,

No. 545.1

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, February 9, 1888. (Received February 20.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your instruction No. 289, concerning the decree of the French Government prohibiting the importation of American pork into France, and I have read carefully the dispatch from Mr. Dufais, our consul at Havre, relative to alleged renewed efforts at Havre to bring about a repeal of the decree

I can not hear of any effort that has been made in that direction beyoud the newspaper article, translation of which was communicated to you by Mr. Dufais, but which has not as yet attracted the attention of the Government here. I addressed a note, however, yesterday to M. Flourens, advising him that I had heard from you under date of January 23, recalling my attention to this long pending question and reminding me that it had lost none of its interest, and that it was your desire that no effort should be omitted to induce a favorable change in the apparently needless, and in some aspects unfriendly, policy pursued by France in relation to one of the greatest export staples of the United I reminded him that, under date of September 23, 1885, in a note to the foreign office, I had reviewed very fully the case which had been, even then, fully considered by my predecessor. I reminded him further that I had never ceased to urge upon the French Government a repeal of the prohibitory decree, and, more particularly, that I had recently left with him verbal notes summing up its history and requesting that it be disposed of in a liberal spirit.

In this connection it is of some interest to advise you that when I presented the President's letter to President Carnot, upon his election as President of the French Republic, I embraced the opportunity of calling his attention to this question and noting to him the fact that I had pressed the matter upon M. Grevy's attention in 1885, and that I had reason to believe that the cabinet over which M. de Freycinet presided was well disposed to submit for the President's consideration a decree repealing the prohibition, but refrained from doing so in the face of the very strenuous opposition of the protectionists in the Chamber of Deputies, who were chiefly represented at that time by M. Dautresme, now minister of commerce. The President expressed his desire to satisfy the complaint I addressed to him upon the exclusive discrimination against the United States contained in this prohibitory decree. The President knew that I had recently conferred with M. Flourens on the subject and also with the late prime minister, M. Rouvier, before his resignation, and that I had frankly communicated to both my own opinion that, notwithstanding the good feeling of my Government to the French Republic, whenever this question should become the subject of debate in Congress it would excite a very bad feeling, and would be accepted either as unfriendly to the United States or as the evidence of a very illiberal and selfish policy, as no one now in either country believed that the sanitary considerations which were the origin of this prohibition now existed.

I would be happy to conclude this dispatch with the expression of my opinion that the efforts which I have not ceased to make since I assumed charge of this mission would be successful. I dare not do so, however, for we are in the midst of great political agitation in France in reference to the policy of having excluded French meats.

I beg to refer you to my series of dispatches, Nos. 24, 36, 53, 58, 73, 108, 202, and 403,* giving a full history of my action in this matter and of my intercourse with the French Government in regard to it. I have not thought it my duty to recommend retaliation as a remedy, which would necessarily cause great derangement of all our commercial relations with France.

In conclusion, I have to assure you that I will not cease my efforts to obtain from the Executive, even without the concurrence of the Chamber of Deputies, a decree substituting an inspection of American pork and its admission into France at the rate of duty to which all pork is subject in lieu of the original prohibitory decree, and I am not without hope of succeeding, as this question of inspecting foreign meats is now under consideration by the minister of commerce and agriculture, and an opportunity is offered, in my opinion, for at least a temporary arrangement until the Chamber shall vote upon the bill for the inspection of meats, which has been protecting almost to the prohibitory point all agricultural products, an agitation which controls the legislature and the Executive and very recently caused the failure of negotiations with Italy for a commercial treaty.

Referring to my No. 24, under date of June 16, 1885, in which I advised you that I thought my predecessor was over sanguine in his expectation that the legislature would concur with the Executive in providing a law of inspection as a substitute for the prohibitory decree, I can assure you that there has never been a period since, when any cabinet minister here encouraged me to hope for a satisfactory result from the present Chamber, though they always disclaimed any unfriendly intention. M. Flourens even contended that European countries did not consider the exclusion of a particular import as unfriendly, but rather as a domestic question, connected with its economic or health policy, and referred especially to Great Britain, as pending since 1883.

SIR: On the 2d of December last Messrs. The practice here being not to take any notice of such letters unless they come through the diplomatic channel, Mr. Rathbone handed them to this legation, and on the 19th of December they were transmitted to the foreign office in the usual manner.

On the 11th instant they were returned with a request for the precise address of the parties to be examined, and with the inquiry whether our Government would be in a position to have letters of this character, issued by a French court of justice, executed by American courts.

I have returned the papers to Mr. Rathbone, who will communicate with Messrs. Black and King with reference to the addresses applied for; but as the main information desired by the French judiciary can not be furnished through that channel, I submit the matter for proper consideration to the Department.

No. 364.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 298.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 15, 1888.

SIR: I have before me your No. 538, of January 24, 1888, inclosing your note of January 11, 1888, to Mr. Flourens, and I am happy to acknowledge the zeal and ability which this note displays.

Your remarks in this note are directed in turn to three distinct phases of fact: (1) That of native-born citizens of the United States not of French parentage; (2) that of persons born in the United States of French parentage; (3) that of naturalized citizens of the United States who were born in France.

As to the first class, no question as to military duty in France could arise unless they should voluntarily become French citizens by expa-

As to the second class (persons born in the United States of French parents), the rule is that while such persons remain in the United States they are citizens of the United States; but that should they go to France, and there, when they arrive at the age of twenty-one, elect to be French citizens, they lose all claim to the protection of the United States.

It has further been repeatedly held by us, as you are aware, that when a person thus born in the United States arrives at twenty one in a foreign country the mode of expressing his election to be a citizen of the United States is by promptly returning to the United States. The same distinction is applied to children born abroad to the citizens of the United States. There is, in both these cases, what is called double allegiance; and by the law of nations the nationality of such persons is to be determined by their own election of nationality at their majority, which election is evidenced by placing themselves in the country they elect. Should such persons after electing the United States, and here taking up their domicil, go to France for a transient visit, it will be your duty to protect them as citizens of the United States.

As to the third class (French citizens by birth, who are naturalized in the United States), to whom your note chiefly relates, I have simply to say that the Department sustains the position taken by you, on the ground that when it presents a certificate of naturalization to a foreign government, such a presentation is a certificate of such naturalization, putting it on the basis of a judgment of a competent domestic court, certified as such by the executive. It is a well-settled principle that judgments duly entered in a competent court having jurisdiction, duly certified to be such by the executive, are ubiquitous in their effect; and eminently is this the case with judgments of naturalization, which are bound up so intimately with national honor and polity. Hence it is that it has been uniformly held by this Department that while, on the application of a foreign government, it will cause inquiries to be made as to whether a judgment of naturalization was improvidently granted, and while it will never permit itself to grant protection based upon a naturalization decree which is shown to it to be fraudulent, it will not recognize a foreign government's right to impeach such decrees. set up by it as the basis of its action towards a foreign state, it can not recognize the right of any foreign executive or court to determine as to That determination must be made, so far as concerns their validity. foreign governments, exclusively by itself.

Whether, in case the validity of naturalization in the last-mentioned cases is admitted, the person so naturalized is subject to penalties on returning to France for offenses or neglects of duty with which he was chargeable before he left France, is a question dependent upon many conditions which it is not necessary here to discuss, and which can only be determined in relation to each particular case as it arises.

It will be your duty, therefore, to inform Mr. Flourens that the Government of the United States holds that a decree of naturalization granted by it to a French citizen is not open to impeachment by the French Government, either in its executive or its judicial branch, and that if it is alleged to have been improvidently issued the remedy is by application to this Department. You will further say that if the subjection to forced military service of the citizens whose case you report is based upon an assumption that they are not citizens of the United States, this Department asks for their immediate release, and for a proper compensation for the losses which they have received by such detention.

A further consideration, which might be urged upon the French Government in relation to this subject is the great importance which this Department attaches to summary action in these cases. It can not be admitted that American citizens, not charged with any crime, should be detained under arrest for even a single day after their proofs of citizenship have been presented. In cases like this the United States can never admit the propriety of submitting to the ordinary delays of judicial action. The redress which it thus asks the United States Government, when appealed to by foreign Governments under similar circumstances, has always been promptly given.

In our late civil war, when the Government of the United States was compelled to use every just effort to put down the insurrection by which its existence was assailed, and when in the application of its conscription acts it was compelled to consider many cases of aliens on its shores, there is not a single instance in which an alien was held to military duty when his Government called for his release. There are very few naturalized citizens of the United States of French birth in France. Of their aid as soldiers, France, with her immense resources, can not claim the need.

Again, the trade between France and the United States, so far as concerns the selection of French goods, is largely conducted by merchants of French birth, naturalized in the United States, who are in the habit of paying frequent visits to France in the course of their business, for the purpose of placing orders with French manufacturers. Yet, those very men, if the principle I protest against is applied, will be shut off from the visits to France, which their peculiar gifts have enabled them to use with results so beneficial both to France and the United States. Therefore I can not but think that France, who now accepts as fully as does the United States those principles of liberty of which the right of expatriation is part, will not, in view both of her past and her present relations to the United States, take a position conflicting with these free principles, with the business interests of both countries, with international comity, and with a system on which the Government of the United States is based.

You will call on the minister for foreign affairs, read this instruction to him, and, should he desire it, leave a copy.

SIR: I had taken care to transmit to the president of the council minister of finances the memorandum you kindly sent me on the 9th of December last, by which a great number of notable merchants from the large cities of the United States call the attention of different European powers to the propriety of using for the expedition of the mails, as the United States Post-Office does, the fastest steamers, without any regard to the nationality of the ship or to any other consideration.

In acknowledging reception of this communication Mr. Tirard remarks that his department has always concerned itself with the means of insuring the most rapid transmission of the mails intended for abroad. Thus the French administration sends regularly the mail bags to the United States, five times a week by all steamers, whatever their nationality may be, which seem to offer any advantage to postal re-

My colleague adds that the expedition of the normal mail, addressed to the New York office, is regulated at present in such a way as to secure successive departures through the lines considered to be the most regular and most rapid, viz:

DEPARTURES FROM PARIS.

Tuesday evening by the Inman Line. (English.)
Wednesday morning by the White Star Line. (English.)
Wednesday evening by the North (G.) Lloyd. (German.)
Friday evening by the Transatlantic Line. (French.)

Besides, as Mr. Tirard remarks, mail matter bearing the indication of any other ship (Guion Line, Hamburg Line, etc.) is always forwarded in conformity with the desire expressed by the sender.

I have the honor, sir, to communicate this information to you, which you will perhaps judge to be of such a character as will interest the Post-Office Department of the United States.

Governor Stevenson to Mr. Stewart, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Woodburn.

CARSON CITY, NEV., February 7, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: John Fruchier, a native of France, was naturalized in the district court of this State, in Douglas County. Ex-State Senator H. F. Dangberg and Assemblyman H. Springmeyer were his witnesses when he obtained his final papers; and he was in Mr. Dangberg's employ as a farm hand some years.

In November, 1886, he concluded to visit his relatives in France, and arrived there in December, 1886, when he was at once pressed into the military service of France, and there remains.

My attention was called to this matter by Mr. Dangberg last March, and on the 24th of that month I wrote to Hon. T. F. Bayard, Secretary of State, and (inclosing a certified copy of Mr. Fruchier's naturalization certificate and the affidavits of Messrs. Dangberg and Springmeyer as to identity) laid the matter before him as fully as it was in my power to do, and urged that appropriate action be taken in the premises. On April 16, 1887, Acting Secretary A. A. Adee wrote me that the papers had been received, and "Mr. McLane, our minister at Paris, had been instructed to bring the matter to the attention of the French Government with a view to securing the discharge of Mr. Fruchier from the French army if possible."

I wrote Mr. Bayard on the subject again on June 9, and still again on October 11, 1887, but the above is all the definite information received to date from Mr. Bayard. Mr. Fruchier has many and warm friends in Nevada, who naturally feel indignant that he, an American citizen, has been now nearly fourteen months in the constrained military service of a foreign government.

Will you not, gentlemen, look into this matter, and see if something can be done for our wronged fellow-citizen?

I am, etc.,

C. C. STEVENSON, Governor.

Hons. W. M. STEWART and JOHN P. JONES, U. S. Senate, and Hon. WM. WOODBURN, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. [Inclosure 3 in No. 302.]

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Stewart.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, February 24, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant. inclosing a communication addressed to you and your colleague, Senator Jones, jointly, by the governor of the State of Nevada, relative to the case of John Fruchier, a naturalized citizen of the United States, of French birth, who, on returning to France on a visit to his relatives some fourteen months ago, was pressed into the military service of France.

The case having been brought to the attention of this Department by Governor Stevenson's letter of March 24, the papers submitted by him, including certified copy of the decree of the competent court of record naturalizing Mr. Fruchier, were sent to the United States minister at Paris, with instructions to effect the release of Mr.

Fruchier from military service, if possible.

On the 20th of October last, not having heard from Mr. McLane on the subject, and in view of Governor Stevenson's letter of October 11, I called upon the legation in Paris to report its action in the premises and the result, and received a reply from our minister, dated November 4, 1887, stating that, as usual in such cases, the French Government had declined to take any action in the matter on the ground that a Frenchman who claims to have acquired foreign citizenship can not be discharged from the military reals until he produces a independent of a French distillation reals until he produces a independent of a French distillation reals until he produces a independent of a French distillation reals until he produces a independent of a French distillation reals until the produces a independent of a French distillation reals are action in the matter on the ground state. from the military rolls until he produces a judgment of a French civil court recognizing that he has lost his original nationality.

The case of Mr. Fruchier belongs to a class which has for some years been the occasion of controversy with the Government of France. The nature of the French claim in this regard is reviewed by Mr. Vignaud, then charge d'affaires ad interim, in a dispatch No. 665, of November 13, 1884, printed in the volume of Foreign Relations for that year, pages 176, 182

The United States minister at Paris has recently, under the Department's sanction and approval, addressed the French Government, taking the ground that, according and approval, addressed the french Government, taking the ground that, according to the often enunciated doctrine of this country, a certificate of naturalization is of force ubiquitous by and sufficient evidence of the judicial decree it sets forth, and its validity is not open to impeachment by the French Government, either in its executive or judicial branch; and that if it is alleged to have been improvidently issued the remedy is to be sought through the diplomatic channel.

Whether in this class of cases, where validity of the individual's naturalization is admitted, he is subject to any penalty, on returning to France, for offenses or neglects of duty with which he may have been chargeable before he left France, is a question dependent upon many conditions, which can only be determined in relation to each particular case as it arises. In Mr. Fruchier's case the opportunity for examination and discussion of such conditions has not been afforded. In its initial and most important stage it is amply covered in the pending controversy, and Mr. McLane will be instructed to bear it especially in mind and, if necessary, make it a test issue in common with others of the same nature.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, February 24, 1888. (Received March 6.)

SIR: Referring to your No. 287 of January 12, 1888, instructing me to obtain from the French foreign office a statement of the relations now subsisting between the French Republic and the King of Johanna (or Anjouan), one of the Comoro Islands, I inclose a copy and a translation of a note from Mr. Flourens, stating that the French Republic has assumed the protectorate of that island by virtue of two treaties, signed April 21, 1886, and October 15, 1887. A copy and a translation of those treaties are also herewith inclosed.

I have, etc.,

Mr. Flourens to Mr. McLane.

Paris, February 21, 1888.

Sir: You were good enough by your letter of the 30th January last to point out to me the interest that your Government would have in knowing the exact state of the relations which the Government of the Republic entertain at present with the Sultan of Anjouan, and you expressed the desire of having communicated to you the treaties concluded by France with that native chief, with the view of being exactly informed as to the rights reserved by these arrangements to American citizens residing in the Comoro Islands.

In order to respond to the desire which you were good enough to bring to my notice on this subject, I hasten to send you herewith copies of the text of the two treaties which were concluded with the Sultan of Anjouan the 21st April, 1886, and the 15th October, 1887, for the purpose of placing that island under the French protectorate.

Convention of April 21, 1886, between the Sultan of Anjouan and the French Republic.

The Government of the French Republic, duly represented by Mr. Gerville-Réache, commandant of Mayotte, and His Highness Aballah ben Sultan Salim, Sultan of Anjouan, intervening directly, anxious for the development and for the prosperity of the Sultanate of Anjouan, have decided to consecrate by the following conventions the relations of friendship which have existed for a long time between them and to assure the preponderance of France at Anjouan.

ART. 1. His Highness, together with his council of ministers, declares that he places the Island of Anjouan under the protection of France. He binds himself and his successors never to make a treaty with any other nation and to grant no privileges to foreigners without the consent of France.

ART. 2. The subjects of h s highness shall with entire freedom reside, travel, and trade in France or in French colonies on the same conditions as French colonists; on the other hand, Frenchmen shall enjoy the same freedom in the States of his highness.

ART. 3. The Sultan agrees to furnish to French business men who might desire to establish themselves at Anjouan the lands of which they shall have need for their operations within the limit of the domain over which he has power of disposal.

ART. 4. Difficulties which may arise between French citizens and Anjouanese shall be settled by French tribunals.

ART. 5. The rights of foreigners at present established in the island remain reserved without in any case the French Government being responsible for the execution of previous deeds and conventions. If there should be disputes on the subject of these deeds and conventions, the Government of the Republic shall be taken for arbitrator.

ART. 6. Anjouanese vessels shall be treated in French ports as French ships. The same advantages shall be granted to the ships of the Republic which shall enter a port dependent upon the States of his highness.

ART. 7. In the view of assuring the tranquillity of Anjouan and of allowing the regular succession to the throne, in conformity to the usages of the country, the Sultan chooses for his successor the Prince Salim ben Abdallah, his eldest son, and in case of the death of the latter before his accession to the sultanate, of Abdallah ben Salim, eldest son of Salim. Finally, the French Government shall regulate the succession to the throne in case that the provisions made by his highness can not have their full effect and that there should be no direct and immediate heir in his family.

ART. 8. The Sultan promises to continue to assure to each of his brothers the means of existence.

ART. 9. To put an end to the civil wars which for long years desolated Anjouan, the French Government and his highness declare that every person who shall have taken up arms against a constituted power shall be considered as a rebel, and tried according to the laws of the country.

ART. 10. The Government of the Republic engages itself not to give asylum to any subject of Anjouan who, recognized by it as in state of rebellion, may come to seek refuge in France, at Mayotte, or in any other French possession.

ART. 11. His highness binds himself not to carry arms in any of the Comoro Islands, and not to lend aid and assistance to anybody without the approval of the commandant of Mayotte.

dant of Mayotte.

ART. 12. The Sultan declares that there does not exist between his Kingdom and any other power any act which could vitiate the character of the present convention.

ART. 13. The Sultan pledges himself to take the necessary steps for the abolition of slavery in his States.

ART. 14. The present contract, which shall be definite after the approval of the Government of the Republic, has been signed in presence, on one side, of Messrs. Brion, naval lieutenant, commanding the Jackal; de Lestrac, sous-commissaire of the navy; Gauthier and Lesquivet, ensigns; Deslandes, physician of second class of the navy; on the other side, of Salim ben Sultan Abdallah, Mohammed ben Sultan Salim, Saïd Outonmani ben Sultan Salim, Saïd Ali ben Sultan Salim, Abdallah Mohomed, dit Diamond, prime minister. (The names of the other ministers follow.)

[Inclosure 3 in No. 554.]

Convention of October 15, 1887, between the Sultan of Anjouan and the French Republic.

The Government of the French Republic, duly represented by Mr. Edward Hibou, commandant of Mayotte, P. I. representative of the French protectorate in the Comoro Islands, and His Highness Abdallah ben Sultan Salim, Sultan of Anjouan, intervening directly, have recognized as definitive the provisional conventions agreed upon on the date of the 8th of October, 1887, between Mr. Theodore Troupel, resident of France at Anjouan, acting pursuant to the instructions of the commandant of Mayotte, and His Highness Abdallah ben Sultan Salim, the tenor of which is as follows:

ART. 1. The conventions signed on the 26th of March, 1887, and exchanged between Captain Dorlodot des Essarts, commanding the naval division of the Indian Ocean, and His Highness Abdallah ben Sultan Salim, are annulled and can in no case be appealed to.

ART. 2. The treaty of the 21st April, 1886 (French text) is definitely recognized and adopted, except article 4 of said act, which is replaced by article 4 as given below, and with the addition of articles 3 and 5 of the present treaty.

ART. 3. The president shall be accompanied by his secretaries, interpreters, or other employés necessary to insure his service.

ART. 4. Disputes of any kind which may arise between French citizens residing at Anjouan and Anjouanese shall be tried and settled by a court composed of the resident or his delegate president, of a French assessor, and of an Anjouanese assessor.

ART. 5. A French school directed by one or several lay instructors is founded at Montsamondou by the French Government.

The school establishment shall be provided, paid, and kept up by His Highness Ab-dallah ben Sultan Salim.

The present treaty, which shall be definitive after the approval of the Government of the Republic, has been signed in triplicate at the palace of Bambao the 15th of October, 1887.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 1, 1888.

SIR: With reference to your despatch No. 550, of the 15th ultimo, relative to the legislation by this Government stipulated for by article 12 of the international convention for the protection of submarine cables, I now inclose herewith, for official communication to the French Government, the text of the act of Congress approved February 29, 1888, which contains the required provisions for the protection of submarine cables.

I also inclose a copy of the President's ratification of the declaration and final protocol of the international convention for the protection of submarine cables, which I will thank you to transmit to the foreign office, to be deposited with the other instruments relating to the subject.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure in No. 306-Public-No. 14.]

AN ACT to carry into effect the International Convention of the fourteenth of March, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, for the protection of submarine cables.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person who shall willfuly and wrongfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet, or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable, in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person who by culpable negligence shall break or injure a submarine cable in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the foregoing sections shall not apply to a person who breaks or injures a cable in an effort to save the life or limb of himself or of any other person, or to save his own or any other vessel: Provided, That he takes reasonable precautions to avoid such breaking or injury

SEC. 4. That the master of any vessel which, while engaged in laying or repairing submarine cables, shall fail to observe the rules concerning signals that have been or shall hereafter be adopted by the parties to the convention with a view to preventing collisions at sea; or the master of any vessel that, perceiving, or being able to perceive the said signals displayed upon a telegraph ship engaged in repairing a cable, shall not withdraw to or keep at a distance of at least one nautical mile; or the master of any vessel that seeing or being able to see buoys intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid or when out of order or broken, shall not keep at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, or to a fine of not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Sec. 5. That the master of any fishing vessel who shall not keep his implements or nets at a distance of at least one nautical mile from a vessel engaged in laying or repairing a cable; or the master of any fishing vessel who shall not keep his implements or nets at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile from a buoy or buoys intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid or when out of order or broken, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten days, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or to both such fire and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: Provided, however, That fishing vessels, on perceiving or being able to perceive the said signals displayed on a telegraph ship, shall be allowed such time as may be necessary to obey the notice thus given; not exceeding twenty-four hours, during which period no obstacle shall be placed in the way of their operations.

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the convention, a person commanding a ship of war of the United States or of any foreign state for the time being bound by the convention, or a ship specially commissioned by the Government of the United States or by the Government of such foreign state, may exercise and perform the duties vested in and imposed on such officer by the convention.

SEC. 7. That any person having the custody of the papers necessary for the preparation of the statements provided for in article ten of the convention who shall refuse to exhibit them, or shall violently resist persons having authority according to article ten of said convention to draw up statements of facts in the exercise of their functions, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. That the penalties provided in this act for the breaking or injury of a submarine cable shall not be a bar to a suit for damages on account of such breaking or

SEC. 9. That when an offense against this act shall have been committed by means of a vessel, or of any boat belonging to a vessel, the master of such vessel shall, unless some other person is shown to have been in charge of and navigating such vessel or boat, be deemed to have been in charge of and navigating the same, and be liable to be punished accordingly.

SEC. 10. That unless the context of this act otherwise requires, the term "vessel" shall be taken to mean every description of vessel used in navigation, in whatever way it is propelled; the term "master" shall be taken to include every person having command or charge of a vessel; and the term "person" to include a body of persons, corporate or incorporate. The term "convention" shall be taken to mean the International Convention for the Protection of Submarine Cables, made at Paris on the fourteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the twenty-second day of May, eighteen hundred and eighty-five.

SEC. 11. That the provisions of the Revised Statutes from section forty-three hundred to section forty-three hundred and five, inclusive, for the summary trial of offenses against the navigation laws of the United States, shall extend to the trial of offenses against the provisions of sections four and five of this act.

SEC. 12. That the provisions of this act shall be held to apply only to cables to which the convention for the time being applies.

SEC. 13. That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all offenses against this act and of all suits of a civil nature arising thereunder, whether the infraction complained of shall have been committed within the territorial waters of the United States or outside of the said waters: Provided, That in case such infraction is committed outside of the territorial waters of the United States the vessel on board of which it has been committed is a vessel of the United States. From the decrees and judgments of the district courts in actions and suits arising under this act appeals and writs of error shall be allowed as now provided by law in other cases. Criminal actions and proceedings for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be commenced and prosecuted in the district court for the district within which the offense was committed, and when not committed within any judicial district, then in the district court for the district within which the offender may be found; and suits of a civil nature may be commenced in the district court for any district within which the defendant may be found and shall be served with process. Approved, February 29, 1888.

No. 560.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, March 2, 1888. (Received March 13.)

SIR: I have received your No. 298, of February 15, with reference to American citizens of French parentage summoned to perform military service in France, and I have complied with your instructions by calling on Mr. Flourens and by leaving with him a copy of your dispatch, which he promised to read with attention.

I have pressed upon him the point made by you that if a citizen of the United States is subjected to forced military service on the assumption that he is not such a citizen, he must be released and a compensation given him for the loss he may have incurred through such detention.

The two American citizens, however, now in the French army, Arbios and Fruchier, are not detained on the ground that they are "not" American citizens, but on the ground that the statement of my Government or mine to that effect is not sufficient, no evidence of such a fact being satisfactory to the French authorities but a judgment of a French court of justice. Practically, therefore, the one question runs into the other, yet your dispatch is subject to the construction that the demand for an immediate release is confined to the single contingency that their retention in the service is based upon an assumption that

My dispatch to Mr. Flourens, a copy of which I sent you, had no other object but to remonstrate against this pretension of the French Government to compel me, or the parties interested, to go before a court of justice to jurnish evidence of a fact which is already established by my official declaration. In this position I am fully sustained by your dispatch, but it may be doubted whether it goes as far as to authorize me to make a demand for immediate release and pecuniary compensation in cases like those of Arbios and Fruchier, who are held subject to a judicial decision as to their citizenship. At all events I am afraid that Mr. Flourens will so construe your dispatch, and it is for this reason, and to avoid the possibility of embarrassing you, that I call your attention to the distinction here taken, and also to the further fact that these two men who are now in the French military service will be detained there until released by a French court of justice upon their own solicitation.

I have no observation to make as to the first phase of fact treated in your dispatch to me, "that of natural-born citizens of the United States, not of French parentage," nor did I invite Mr. Flourens to consider that point, as in such cases, as you will observe, "no question of military service in France could arise."

I have, etc.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 6, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch, No. 549, of the 14th ultimo, relative to the application of Messrs. Black and King, of New York City, to have certain letters rogatory executed by the civil tribunal of the first instance at Paris, and to the request of the French foreign office for information touching the execution of like documents in the United States, has been received.

I will thank you to inform the French Government that letters rogatory from courts of foreign countries are executed in our courts under the provisions of the statutes of the United States, as explained in the Department circular of March 25, 1887, copies of which are herewith inclosed for communication to the foreign office.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD

[Inclosure in No. 308.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 25, 1887.

To the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States:

Letters rogatory for the purpose of taking the testimony of persons residing in the United States, which may be material in suits pending in the courts of foreign countries, are frequently sent to this Department, usually with a note from the minister for foreign affairs of the foreign country or from its diplomatic representative here, requesting that the business may be attended to. It is not, however, the province of the Department of State to dispose of matters of this kind. Frequently witnesses whose testimony is sought reside in places far from this city, rendering it impracticable to have the testimony taken within the time at which it is required in order to make it available.

It is, therefore, deemed advisable to issue this circular, to which are appended the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating the taking of testimony in such cases. Other information upon the subject, which will be found useful to persons interested, is contained in the following

DIRECTIONS.

Both circuit and district courts of the United States are held in each of the States at the following points:

SECTIONS OF THE REVISED STATUTES RELATING TO LETTERS ROGATORY.

SEC. 4071. The testimony of any witness residing within the United States, to be used in any suit for the recovery of money or property depending in any court in any foreign country with which the United States are at peace, and in which the government of such foreign country shall be a party or shall have an interest, may be obtained, to be used in such suit. If a commission or letters rogatory to take such testimony, together with specific written interrogatories, accompanying the same, and addressed to such witness, shall have been issued from the court in which such suit is pending, on producing the same before the district judge of any district where the witness resides or shall be found, and on due proof being made to such judge that the testimony of any witness is material to the party desiring the same, such judge shall issue a summons to such witness requiring him to appear before the officer or commissioner named in such commission or letters rogatory, to testify in such suit. And no witness shall be compelled to appear or to testify under this section except for the purpose of answering such interrogatories so issued and accompanying such commission or letters: Provided, That when counsel for all the parties attend the examination, they may consent that questions in addition to those accompanying the commission or letters rogatory may be put to the witness, unless the commission or letters rogatory exclude such additional interrogatories. The summons shall specify the time and place at which the witness is required to attend, which place shall be within one hundred miles of the place where the witness resides or shall be served with such summons.

SEC. 4072. No witness shall be required on such examination or any other, under letters rogatory, to make any disclosure or discovery which shall tend to criminate him either under the laws of the State or Territory within which such examination is had, or any other, or any foreign state.

SEC. 4073. If any person shall refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons issued, in accordance with section forty hundred and seventyone, or if upon his appearance he shall refuse to testify, he shall be liable to the same penalties as would be incurred for a like offense on the trial of a suit in the district court of the United States.

SEC. 4074. Every witness who shall so appear and testify shall be allowed, and shall receive from the party at whose instance he shall have been summoned, the same fees and mileage as are allowed to witnesses in suits depending in the district courts of the United States.

Sec. 875. When any commission or letter rogatory, issued to take the testimony of any witness in a foreign country, in any suit in which the United States are parties or have an interest, is executed by the court or the commissioner to whom it is directed, it shall be returned by such court or commissioner to the minister or consul of the United States nearest the place where it is executed. On receiving the same, the said minister or consul shall indorse thereon a certificate, stating when and where the same was received, and that the said deposition is in the same condition as when he received it; and he shall thereupon transmit the said letter or commission, so executed and certified, by mail, to the clerk of the court from which the same issued, in the manner in which his official dispatches are transmitted to the Government. And the testimony of witnesses so taken and returned shall be read as evidence on the trial of the suit in which it was taken, without objection as to the method of returning the same. [When letters rogatory are addressed from any court of a foreign country to any circuit court of the United States, a commissioner of such circuit court designated by said court to make the examination of the witnesses mentioned in said letters, shall have power to compel the witnesses to appear and depose in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in courts.]

Many other dispatches from the French office, couched in the same language, can be found in the correspondence of this legation with reference to American citizens of French origin called to perform military service in France, all of which have been duly forwarded and commented upon by this legation.

I agree with you that the case of Fruchier is one of those well adapted to test the question of the right of American citizens of French parentage to visit France without being subjected to forced military service. The question has been plainly and fairly put to the French Government in my note of January 11, to which no answer has yet been made, and in which, as you can see by referring to it, I have formally demanded the discharge of Fruchier and Arbios.

The copy of your No. 298, which I left with Mr. Flourens, has, I trust, strengthened my position; but, for the reasons stated in my No. 560, I did not feel myself authorized to make a new demand for the release of these two men, and until a reply is received to my demand of January 11 I do not believe that it is advisable to press the matter.

FLOURENS.

SIR: On the 5th May, you did me the honor of writing to me with the view of obtaining the release from military service of John Fruchier, French by origin, American by naturalization in 1880, who, having lately returned to our territory, was arrested and enrolled in the seventh regiment of infantry.

The minister of war, to whom I hastened to transmit this request, informs me that the interested party, after having undergone the punishment of eight days of prison to which he was condemned on the charge of disobedience to orders, the 14th January last, by the court-martial of the fifteenth army corps has been in fact enrolled under our flag. General Ferron adds that the claim made in Fruchier's behalf raises a question of personal status which the administration is not competent to decide and which the civil courts are alone in a position to settle; this young man, therefore, can only be struck off our military rolls upon the production by him of a judgment rendered by a French court of justice and recognizing in him the status of a foreigner. LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, March 23, 1888. (Received April 2.)

SIR: Referring again to your No. 302, under date February 24, inclosing for my information copy of a letter to you from Senator William M. Stewart, with its inclosures, "all having reference to the case of Mr. Fruchier, an American citizen constrained to service in the armies of France," together with a copy of your reply to Mr. Stewart's letter, I have to note that on February 15 I addressed Mr. Flourens a personal note, informing him that you had again called my attention to the case of Fruchier, which you thought was a proper case to test the principle at issue between the two Governments, and that I had called on him the day before to urge him in person to give me, as early as his convenience would permit, an answer to my note of January 11.

Although I had advised you that I should not further discuss the matter with him until I was in possession of his reply to this note, I changed my mind, foreseeing that this would be delayed longer than I expected.

Day before yesterday, it being the regular day of reception of the diplomatic corps at the foreign office, I called again and drew his attention to the importance of disposing promptly of Fruchier's case, and urged upon him the immediate release of Fruchier and Arbios from the military service on my affirmation that they were American citizens, and that they ought not to be held in the army while the two Governments were engaged in the discussion of the general principles involved Mr. Flourens in reply promised me to recommend the release of Fruchier, but he again referred to the difficulty he had encountered by reason of the regulations which had been established by the war department submitting such cases to civil courts, and which have been in force for a long while, and which were now maintained as against all soldiers in the French army who claimed to be subjects or citizens of some other country. He promised further to bring the case to the attention of the council of ministers at an early day.

No. 575.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, March 29, 1888. (Received April 10.)

SIR: With a view of dispelling any misunderstanding with reference to the Boulanger incident, I sent you on the 19th instant a telegram to the effect that the Boulanger incident had been considerably exaggerated by the public press, that the Government would be amply sustained in its determination to rebuke him, and that the tendency of the incident was to augment the dissensions already apparent among the Republicans of France.

The press continued to exaggerate the original incident itself, and gave to it an exclusively partisan character, the Government being strongly urged to inflict further punishment upon General Boulanger, and if the political agitation connected with his name was continued, to strike him from the army rolls. To these counsels the Government yielded an apparently cordial consent, and summoned what is called a "conseil dienquête," somewhat similar to our military courts of inquiry, to which was submitted two principal points of inquiry, to wit, whether the publication of his confidential letter to the minister of war and his leaving the headquarters of the army corps, from the command of which he had been relieved, without the permission of the minister of war, were not violations of military discipline. All other grounds of complaint against him were withheld, and the court of inquiry rendered a prompt judgment in the affirmative by a unanimous vote. The effect of such judgment under existing laws authorizes the President to retire him from active service, the law leaving him, however, with his pension, and subject to the call of the Government for military service at any time during the next five years.

Although the Chamber of Deputies was well-nigh unanimous in sustaining the Government in its original action against General Boulanger, it was manifest that a large section of the Republican party, while it condemned General Boulanger's violation of military discipline and the encouragement he gave to those who sought a popular demonstration in his behalf at the off elections, nevertheless desired to protect him against the severity of the Government and of that section of the chamber to which it was specially allied, known as the "opportunists," of which Mr. Ferry is the recognized chief.

This sympathy has greatly increased since the judgment of the court of inquiry was rendered, and although General Boulanger may not immediately profit by it, and though he may still continue to direct a political agitation before the country independent of all parties, the ministry itself will find it impossible to remain in power. At least two hundred members of the chamber are now engaged in conference to organize a parliamentary assault upon it as soon as the vote is taken on the annual appropriation bill called the "budget." It seems to me that this assault will be successful, and the dissension in the Republican party in and out of the chamber to which I referred in my telegram will be complete, for the assault upon the ministry will have reference not only to its policy in the administration of the Government but to proposed reforms in the constitution itself. Such an agitation in the chambers will be accompanied by a greater agitation in the country at large by the "reformers" of the Republican party, as they already call themselves, and I think these latter will be closely associated with the friends of General Boulanger, and the general himself seems well disposed to direct such an agitation. It is my opinion that he is far more likely to pursue this policy and maintain his association with the Republicans than to yield to either monarchical or imperial solicitations. Meanwhile the anticipations of my telegram as to the dissension in the Republican party are more than realized, and I know no one of any party at this moment who pretends even to foresee its effect upon those who are in possession of the Government.

SIR: I think I may fully confirm the views submitted in my No. 575, Those in charge of the political canvass in support of of March 29 last. General Boulanger profess most earnestly their intention to respect the constitutional laws in their efforts to revise the same, but neither of the great sections of the Republican party is willing to support him or assume any responsibility in his behalf, nor can I perceive that the monarchical party as such confide in him. Nevertheless, he has very decided partisans heretofore connected with the right as well as the left in the Chamber of Deputies, who profess an intention to secure his election as an Independent Republican. General Boulanger himself professes to consider the Republic as a great force politically, and as the only form of Government which can give France strength and independence, and this profession he can well make in view of the weakness of those in or out of the chamber who seek to restore either the monarchy or the empire.

It is difficult for one unaccustomed to the exaggeration of the French press to understand its violence and misrepresentation. Mr. Floquet, in accepting the responsibility of forming a cabinet, did only what Mr. de Freycinet and Mr. Goblet in turn attempted during the past year, to wit, to unite in the same cabinet four members of each section of the Republican party as represented in the chamber, with a tendency to a liberal, if not a radical, solution of the political questions now at issue. Mr. Rouvier and Mr. Tirard in turn attempted the same concentration so far as individuals were concerned, but with a tendency to prevent the radical solution of those questions, and secure what might be termed a conservative or moderate adjustment thereof.

Mr. Floquet, however, is credited with great political tact and ability, and for some time past it has been pretty well understood that he would be the successor of Mr. Tirard, and that he would succeed in holding power long enough to dissolve the chamber or superintend the elections at the constitutional period of dissolution in 1889. I account for the unusual and extraordinary violence and exaggeration of the opposition press by their fear of such success on his part, and by their desire to unite the moderate Republicans and monarchists in support of a conservative ministry prior to such dissolution.

The selection by Mr. Floquet of Mr. de Freycinet and Mr. Goblet together with Mr. Ricard and Mr. Loubet is quite sufficient to satisfy any impartial observer that he desired to concentrate the support of the entire Republican party, and all four of these gentlemen accepted office under him; two of them, Mr. Ricard and Mr. Loubet, withdrew because of their dissatisfaction with the programme submitted for their consideration, but it was not to the principle thereof they objected and Mr. Rouvier, a former president of the council and minister of finance, who was invited by Mr. Floquet to form part of his cabinet, declined to do so more on personal than political grounds. Indeed his own programme submitted to the chamber in May last covered substantially all the points involved and now at issue, and Mr. Floquet has replaced these three gentlemen with men of like opinion and equal merits. I do not therefore think it impossible that even the three gentlemen to whom I have referred, and certainly some of their friends, will support Mr. Floquet when the chamber meets on the 20th of April. This is by no means the general opinion; but I am accustomed to find the public men of this country, though vehement and impulsive, very reasonable, and persistent in their political action, and I do not anticipate any material diversion from the Republican party in support of a ministry dependent upon or in coalition with the Monarchists.

Entertaining this view I have frequently noted to you my conviction that the dissolution of the chamber and an appeal to the country would be the final means adopted to secure support for a Republican ministry, and it is this same conviction which induces me to think that General Boulanger himself will not undertake the direction of any revolutionary movement against the Government, but will advocate the policy of revision of the constitutional laws and a dissolution of the chamber in conformity therewith.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 6, 1888.

SIR: Referring to your No. 554 of February 24 last, inclosing copies of the treaties between France and Anjouan (Johanna) by which the former has assumed a protectorate over the latter and has established a resident in the island, I call your attention to article 5 of the treaty of April 21, 1886, which reads as follows in your translation:

The rights of foreigners at present established in the island remain reserved without in any case the French Government being responsible for the execution of previous deeds and conventions (faits et conventions). If there should be disputes on the subject of these deeds and conventions, the Government of the Republic shall be taken as arbitrator.

There is at present an American citizen resident in the island of Johanna, Dr. B. F. Wilson, who now claims damages against the Sultan for injuries growing out of violation by the Sultan of contracts entered into between them. At various times, beginning with 1871, contracts were made by which the Sultan was to furnish certain labor to enable Dr. Wilson to work a sugar plantation called Patsy. In 1878, a lease for thirty years was granted, the Sultan furnishing certain slave labor and permitting his free subjects to work for hire. Under this lease Dr. Wilson expended large sums of money, and the plantation was rapidly improving, the production of sugar increasing each year from 1879 till 1882, when difficulties arose between the Sultan and Dr. Wilson.

The latter was subjected to a series of annoyances and violations of contract, the Sultan taking away his slaves, terrorizing the freedmen so that they refused to work, sending soldiers to kill Dr. Wilson, firing into his house, and destroying a small vessel owned by him. Dr. Wilson claims that his sugar crop, during the years 1882 and 1883 was much diminished, and the estate so injured that he has never since been able to increase its production as he would have done but for this interference; and in this he is sustained by independent and apparently impartial testimony.

It is alleged in reply that Dr. Wilson had aided and abetted the Sultan's brother, Prince Mohammed, who in the year 1882 was in a state of open rebellion against his authority. This Dr. Wilson denies, and his denial is supported by the testimony of Prince Mohammed's principal officer in that rebellion, who declares that although Dr. Wilson's assistance was solicited by the rebels, it was distinctly and positively refused.

It would seem therefore that Dr. Wilson has been seriously injured in his planting operations by the Sultan's violation of his contract; that even his life has been in jeopardy, and that a claim for damages properly arises. The Sultan, who had corresponded directly with this Department, was so informed, but he has not replied to this communica-I am of opinion that the case is such as may be submitted to the arbitration of the French Government, under the article of the treaty of 1886, above quoted, if Dr. Wilson shall think it to his interest to adopt that course.

You are instructed therefore to bring the case verbally to the attention of the French Government, stating its general features, and to ask whether it will direct the resident in Anjouan to receive all the proofs which may be offered by both the parties to the controversy, and whether, having these before it, it will arbitrate the claim, or whether some other way may be more proper for obtaining for Dr. Wilson the benefit of French arbitration.

SIR: In my dispatches Nos. 575 and 579 I explained very fully the relations which General Boulanger held to the political campaign in favor of revision of the constitution, in favor of which Mr. Floquet had fully organized his cabinet. The hope I expressed in my No. 575 that General Boulanger would maintain his association with the Republicans was, I thought, well founded, but the violence with which he has been assailed by them tends greatly to dispose him to yield to the solicitations of the Imperialists, most of whom supported him in the late elec-Meanwhile Mr. Floquet has with great tact succeeded in uniting the entire Republican party in favor of revision under his direction. which he promises to undertake with the support of the Republican party and without any coalition with or concession to either the Monarchists or Imperialists.

Although the very large vote cast for General Boulanger at the recent election admonished the Republicans that harmony in their ranks was indispensable, and thus secured a vote of confidence for Mr. Floquet by an overwhelming majority, yet it is not difficult to perceive that this union was an enforced union, and may not be continued when the chamber is engaged in the discussion of the questions of revision and dissolution, nor can it be foreseen at this time how parties will divide upon the proposition of General Boulanger to revise the constitution by a constituent assembly or convention, rather than by the action of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies in Congress assembled. This question will be considered at an early day, though there are many Republicans who would like to defer its consideration indefinitely, fearing that the work of reform once undertaken will involve the election of the President as well as the senate by a popular vote, to which all the prominent Republicans who assisted Mr. Theirs in forming the present Government are earnestly opposed.

SIR: It occasionally happens that an application is made to this legation for a passport by the son of a naturalized American citizen born abroad after his father's naturalization, but who has never gone to the United States and who expresses no intention of going there to reside. I have in several instances of this kind decided to issue a qualified passport, but having some doubt as to the propriety of giving any passport in such cases, I have the honor to ask for your instructions on the subject.

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1——34

I yesterday issued a qualified passport to Henry Asché, the son, boru abroad, of Julius Asché, a native of Germany, who became an American citizen by naturalization in 1854, received a passport from the Department of State the same year, and a few years afterwards left the United States and settled at Bassorah, Turkish Arabia, where he engaged in business and died in 1870.

The son, Henry Asché, was born in Bassorah in 1866; has resided in that place and in Germany and France, but has never gone to the United States and has no intention of going there.

If the father, after acquiring American citizenship, had returned to reside in his native country, such a presumption might arise of his abandonment of his American citizenship and of his return to his original allegiance that his son, born there, could not be considered a citizen of the United States. In this case, however, the father, originally a German, after being naturalized an American, removed to Turkish possessions; there is no evidence that he had any intention of abandoning his American nationality, and the son born there was by our law at his birth technically a citizen of the United States.

Is this young man, who has never been in the United States, has never performed and has no intention of performing any of the duties of American citizenship, entitled to the protection of the United States Government?

I have given him the benefit of the doubt, and as no country but Turkey could claim him I have given him a passport in which his right to demand protection of the United States is qualified by any claims Turkey may have upon him.

For my guidance in the future I beg to be informed whether my action is approved by you, as the instructions of the Department heretofore issued are not very clear to me upon this point.

No. 594.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Paris, April 27, 1888. (Received May 8.)

SIR: With my No. 538 of January 24th last, I sent you copy of a note addressed to the French foreign office remonstrating against the treatment to which American citizens of French origin were subjected in France when visiting that country, if they had failed to perform military service, and insisting that they should be recognized and treated as American citizens when I had officially certified that they had such a character. At the same time I formally demanded the discharge from all military obligations of three American citizens of that class—John Arbios and John Fruchier, actually in the French army, and Gendrot, summoned to perform the same service (but who had returned to the United States, having fortunately made his escape).

This morning I have received a reply to this note, a copy and a translation of which are herewith inclosed.

After stating that the French Government does not presume to question the validity of any act of naturalization issued by the United States, Mr. Goblet remarks that, on the other hand, it belongs to the Government does not presume to question the validity of any act of naturalization issued by the United States, Mr. Goblet remarks that, on the other hand, it belongs to the Government.

ment of origin to ascertain if the Frenchman who obtained naturalization abroad is free from any obligations towards the mother country.

Waiving, however, the discussion of this point, but reserving expressly his opinion thereon, Mr. Goblet informs me that the minister of war has agreed as a favor-" à titre gracieux"-to let Arbios and Fruchier off on furlough, which is practically equivalent to a discharge, except that it is still held, notwithstanding my official declaration to that effect, that their American citizenship is not yet established. and Fruchier are therefore still considered as French, and, although orders have been issued to release them from their present military obligations, they are still technically liable to military service in the re-

PARIS, April 26, 1888.

SIR: My department, in concert with the war department, has submitted to an attentive examination the considerations stated in your communication of the 11th of January, in regard to the men Fruchier, Arbios, and Gendrot, the two first born in France and afterwards naturalized in the United States, the third born in that country of a French father, whose discharge from service under our flags you asked

The war department had at first expressed the opinion that these individuals should answer before French justice for the offense of disobedience to orders, with which they were charged, and that the claim made in their behalf raised a question of status that the civil courts were alone competent to settle.

Refusing to accept, in regard to this last point, this manner of looking at the case, you endeavor to establish that "when the Government of the United States declares that these persons are American citizens and claims them as such, the proof of their foreign nationality ought to be considered as conclusive. A French tribunal can neither contest this proof nor add anything to it, because it is an admitted principle that the government which grants the naturalization is the only judge of the conditions upon which it does so."

Permit me to point out to you that it has never occurred to the French authorities to question the value of the act of naturalization by virtue of which a Frenchman by birth has become an American. But you will agree with me that, if the Government of the United States is in fact the only judge of the conditions under which it ment of the Officer States is in 1200 the only judge of the conditions under which it grants naturalization to a foreigner, it is the right, on the other hand, of the government under whose jurisdiction this foreigner is, and of it alone, to decide whether the aforesaid foreigner has complied with the law of his country of origin, for, if consent is, as you very justly remark, an indispensable element to the validity of the contract conferring nationality, other conditions can be required as well. Hence the conflicts of request as you know, which arise in these matters, not call between creates her so frequent, as you know, which arise in these matters, not only between states having different laws, but also between those which have laws identically the same. Numerous examples might be cited to prove this.

Nevertheless, while keeping entirely in reserve the question of principle involved, my colleague, the minister of war, consents, as an act of courtesy, to grant leave of abserce until the time of the expiration of the term of active service which they owe

(1) Fruchier, a delinquent of the class of 1874, enrolled the 22d January, 1887, in the Seventh Regiment of Infantry, after having undergone the punishment of eight days' imprisonment.

(2) Arbios, condemned also as a delinquent of the class 1883, and enrolled in the One hundredth Regiment of Infantry since the 29th September, 1886.

Instructions have consequently been transmitted to the generals commanding the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Army Corps.

As to the agreement which it may be possible to establish between the two governments for the settlement in a general manner of situations of the nature of these to which you have called my attention, the minister of war and myself are quite ready to examine any propositions which may be presented to us upon that subject. No. 595.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, April 27, 1888. (Received May 8.)

SIR: As anticipated, almost the entire Republican party in the chamber has been united in support of the Floquet ministry upon its assurance that it would suppress all manifestations in support of General Boulanger which had the character of a "plebiscite" or which looked to the establishment of any unconstitutional form of government. Monarchists and Imperialists in the chamber as well as in the country at large gave great support to the popular manifestations in favor of General Boulanger giving to their action an unconstitutional character.

The immediate friends of General Boulanger earnestly professed their sincere attachment to the Republic and a desire to revise the constitution in a democratic sense. These professions have not been accepted by any section of the Republican party, and popular counter manifestations were organized in Paris and elsewhere before which the friends of General Boulanger were glad to yield and accept even the protection

Efforts are still made to reconcile the general to his Republican friends in the chamber, and they may possibly succeed, but only on condition of his public and absolute renunciation of all association with the Monarchists or Imperialists. Meanwhile the movement in his support and the attack involved in it upon parliamentary government has united the Republican party in the senate as well as in the chamber, and an understanding in both houses is now established between the ministry and a majority thereof, for the revision and reform of the constitution and a dissolution of Parliament in the course of the year 1889.

Although this understanding may be disturbed and even abandoned. since nothing of this kind can be considered absolutely stable, I am of opinion that the political crisis caused by the Boulanger incident has lost its importance, and unless he cordially unites with the Republican party in the chamber of deputies he will not be formidable in opposition either in the chamber or as a candidate.

Neither the Monarchists nor the Imperialists have strengthened their hold upon the country by their readiness to unite with the revolutionary proceedings which contemplated the suspension of the existing constitutional government, and the substitution for it of a constituent convention before which they were both willing to compete with General Boulanger for the executive power of the state; indeed, it is conceded by all the best informed and most serious men that I know, that their action has had for its immediate result the union of the Republican party in the chamber, and the strengthening of it with the people who are now manifesting their attachment to it by addresses to the Government, and Mr. Floquet seems to me to have all the tact necessary to avail of these manifestations and to so strengthen his ministry that any opposition from either the center or the extreme left of the chamber would be greatly discouraged by the constituencies who are now declaring in his favor.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 7, 1888.

SIR: The question of American citizenship and the correspondent duties of support and allegiance of the citizen on the one side and protection by this Government on the other is one of great importance, and demands careful consideration, especially in such cases as that of Henry Asché, mentioned in your dispatch No. 589.

I have therefore to request that you will transmit a statement of the qualifications attached to the passport issued by you to Henry Asché, as it is not understood how he can be so certified to be a citizen of the United States and yet be subject to any claims of a like nature by the Government of Turkey.

Section 4076 of the Revised Statutes expressly limits the grant or issue of passports to citizens of the United States, who must be held to be actual citizens only, so that there is no authority for the issue of passports certifying a qualified or restricted citizenship.

According to the facts recited in your dispatch, the individual in question, being of full age and sui juris in 1888, having been born in Bassorah in 1866, and resided there, and also in Germany and France, but never having been in the United States, and having no intention of ever coming here, applied to you in Paris for a passport.

His claim is through his father, who was a native of Germany, and emigrated to the United States and was here naturalized in 1854, in which year he obtained a passport, and a few years later left the United States and settled at Bassorah, in Turkey, where he continued to live, apparently without intention to return to the United States, and died in 1870.

It is to be doubted whether the father, under these circumstances of such continuous abandonment of his American residence and all the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship, could have been entitled to a passport without having a well-established intention on his part of returning to the country whose protection he so sought, and for which he proposed to render no equivalent. But the son of such a person born abroad, always living abroad, in Turkey, in Germany, and in France, never having been in the United States, and having no intention ever to come here, being of full age, is not entitled to receive the certification of the citizenship of a country towards whom he sustains none of the relations of a citizen. (The principles above stated will be found in the case of Landau in the second volume of Wharton's Int.

Whatever might have been the right of the Asches, father and son, if their continuous residence in Turkey as American citizens had been alleged and established, is not necessary to be here considered because no such case is shown, but on the contrary the voluntary residence of the son in Germany (the country of his father's origin) and in France coupled by his election when upwards of twenty-two years of age there to reside, without any intention ever to come to the United States, proves abundantly his abandonment of American citizenship.

I regret, therefore, that a passport should under the circumstances have been issued to Henry Asché, and if it were practicable it is desirable that it should be recalled and canceled.

It is advisable that in doubtful cases of citizenship the questions should be submitted to the Department before passports are issued.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. (Received June 4.) Paris, May 24, 1888.

SIR: Mr. W. Lalanne, an American citizen of French origin, now residing at Bordeaux, having applied to this legation for a certificate of "exemption" from French military service, I have the honor of inclosing herewith a copy of the correspondence exchanged between him and myself on this occasion.

The circumstances of the case are as follows:

On March 30, 1874, Mr. Lalanne was born in France April 3, 1855. being then under age, he procured a French passport and went to America, where he traveled for some time. On or about June 25, 1876, he arrived at Los Angeles, Cal.; on October 2, of the same year, with the assistance of an interpreter, he applied to the city and county court of that place to declare his intention of becoming an American citizen; that same day he obtained a certificate of naturalization. He established himself in the United States, registered for the first time at the last Presidential election, and voted. In 1888 he determined to make a short visit to France, and having lost his original papers he applied for (See inclosure a copy, which he obtained under date of April 2 last. Shortly after his arrival in France he was summoned to perform military service, and applied to the legation for the certificate of exemption above mentioned.

I replied that no such certificate could be issued by this legation, and that he could be relieved from his military obligations towards France only by establishing before a French court of justice that he was no longer a French citizen.

Under ordinary circumstances I would have authenticated Mr. Lalanne's certificate, because without such authentication he can not use it in court; but as he seems to have obtained this certificate only a little over two months after his arrival at Los Angeles, and only two years and a half after he had left France, I abstained from so doing, for the moment at least.

Considering, however, that Mr. Lalanne arrived in the United States while being a minor, and that having lived there until he was thirtythree years of age he could easily have obtained another certificate, I informed him that I would submit his case to you, and ask for instructions as to the propriety of authenticating his papers or of interfering in his behalf if necessary.

Trusting that you will kindly advise me in this respect,

I have, etc.,

HENRY VIGNAUD.

You inclose your certificate of naturalization, with a notice from the French military authorities to report for military service, and after having stated that you left France in 1874, when eighteen years of age, that you resided four-teen years in the United States, and that you came back to France a few months ago on business, you ask for instructions to obtain, once for all, a certificate of exemption from molestation of the kind referred to.

I regret to say, sir, that the legation is not in a position to furnish you with a certificate of this kind.

The French Government holds that every natural-born Frenchman is liable to military service until he has produced evidence that he is no longer a French citizen, and is therefore disqualified to perform any military service in the French national army. after the legal means of redress have been exhausted.

I return herewith the notice you have received from the French military authorities. Before returning the certificate of naturalization, with the authentication of this legation, I desire some information. This paper is evidently a copy, although it does not state so, delivered April 2, 1888, of your original act of naturalization issued October 2, 1876, by the superior court of Los Angeles County, Cal. BORDEAUX, May 18, 1888.

HONORABLE SIR: Answering to your favor of the 16th instant, I have the honor to submit my case to you as far as I can remember the circumstances.

I was born on the 3d day of April, 1855. On the 30th day of March, 1874, I took a passport at the prefecture of Bordeaux, and after traveling over America I went to

Los Angeles, (Cal.), with the idea to settle, on or about the 25th day of June, 1876. On the 2d day of October, 1876, I, with the aid of an interpreter, applied to the county clerk of the city and county of Los Angeles in order to make a verbal declaration of my intention to become a citizen of the United States of America.

My request was granted and a certificate of naturalization delivered to me.

Having lost this first certificate I can not affirm if I were considered to be a United States citizen ever since the day of its delivery, or if it was only to acknowledge the fact of my intention to become a citizen.

I must say that I had no trouble whatever when, for the first time, I registered and voted for actual President, Grover Cleveland.

I obtained the copy you have now in your possession from the county clerk at Los Angeles, (Cal.).

I shall wait for instructions from you before I take any steps in regard to the French military authorities, and

I remain, etc.,

W. LALANNE.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Paris, May 23, 1888.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of May 18, stating that you were born April 3, 1855; that you left France in 1874; that, after traveling in America, you arrived on or about June 25, 1876, at Los Angeles, where on October 2, of the same year you made in the city and county court your declaration of intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, and obtained a "certificate of naturalization."

You add that, having lost this first certificate, you can not affirm whether you were considered to be an American citizen since the day of its delivery (October 2, 1876), or if that paper was only to acknowledge the fact of your intention to become a citizen, but that you had no difficulty, when, for the first time, you registered, in voting for our present President.

Having arrived in the United States before being of age, you were entitled to citizen papers from the moment you had resided there five years. You could therefore have applied for such papers at any time after the expiration of these five years, but it seems that you did not, and that you contented yourself with the paper delivered to you October 2, 1876. Under these circumstances it is not possible for me to affix any certificate with the seal of this legation to this paper, which is returned herewith.

For the steps you are to take in regard to the military authorities, I refer you to my letter of the 16th instant. I hope you will be able to obtain your discharge without the assistance of this legation, but as a contingency might arise when you may need this assistance, I shall report your case to the Department of State, and ask for instructions.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Paris, May 25, 1888. (Received June 4, 1888.)

SIR: I am in receipt of your No. 335, of May 7, disapproving the issue of a qualified passport to Mr. Asché, a gentleman claiming to be an American citizen under section 1993 of the Revised Statutes.

The Department states that there is no authority for the issue of "passports certifying a qualified or restricted citizenship," and requests a statement of the qualifications attached to the one delivered to Mr. Asché, "as it is not understood how he can be so certified to be a citizen of the United States and yet be subjected to any claims of a like nature by the Government of Turkey." It desires furthermore that this passport be recalled, if practicable, and canceled.

In compliance with your instructions, and in justification of the action of this legation, I respectfully beg leave to make the following

(1) The authority upon which Mr. Asché's passport was delivered is paragraph 173 of the Consular Regulations of 1881, which refers to persons born abroad of an American father, and says that "if such a person who remains a resident in the country of his or her birth applies for a passport as a citizen of the United States such passport will be issued in the qualified form shown in Form No. 11.

(2) The qualifications attached to the said passport are those enunciated in the form above mentioned (see page 515 of the Regulations), which are to the effect that the right of Mr. Asché to the protection of, the United States "is limited and qualified by the obligations and duties which attach to him under the laws of the Empire of Turkey in which he was born."

No dispatch or circular from the Department having to our knowledge canceled this instruction, I trust the legation will not be blamed for having supposed that it was still in force. It is true that in the new edition of the Consular Regulations both the instruction and the form relative to qualified passports are left out, but this new edition, received here on the 7th of April, had only been in our hands twelve days when Mr. Asché made his application, and its contents had not yet been carefully examined.

Mr. Asché I believe is not in Paris at present; I have written to him, however, and shall endeavor to have his passport returned. For my part I am satisfied that he is not a bona fide American citizen, and would not have advised the issuing of the passport had I not supposed that he was technically entitled to it.

He remarked, however, that this ruling placed him in the position of a man having no nationality, as he had no right to claim either German or Turkish citizenship, whereas there was an American statute recognizing him as a citizen of the United States. LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, May 31, 1888. (Received June 12.)

SIR: Owing to the great number of applications made for passports since the publication of the regulations requiring all foreigners entering the German Empire by way of Alsace-Lorraine to be provided with such papers, I have asked you by telegraph to send an additional supply of blanks.

A large proportion of those making these applications are naturalized American citizens, and I find that only in a few cases I can enforce strictly the instructions of the Department with regard to passports. With a view of avoiding any possible error or misapplication of the instructions, I beg you to kindly enlighten me more fully on the following points:

Is a passport to be refused—
(1) To the wife or widow of a naturalized citizen, who has not the naturalization papers of her husband?

(2) To a naturalized citizen who has left his naturalization papers at home, or who has lost them?

(3) To a naturalized citizen residing abroad who has no intention at present of returning to the United States and who is unable to state whether he will do so or not or when he may do so?

I take it to be a settled point that the children of naturalized citizens born abroad, who have never been in the United States, and whose fathers are or were permanently residing abroad, are not entitled to a passport.

The case may be different for children of native Americans born abroad; in such cases I shall, according to circumstances, use my own discretion or consult the Department before taking any action.

The new German regulations above referred to state substantially that from May 31 foreigners entering Germany by way of Alsace-Lorraine must be provided with passports which are to be visaed at the German embassy at Paris. The visas, which formerly cost 1.90 francs, have been raised to 12.50 francs, and are good for one year only. French passports must await ten or twelve days before they can be visaed. Foreign passports are visaed at once.

That the citizenship of the father descends to the children born to him when abroad is a generally calrowledged principle of international born to him when abroad is a generally acknowledged principle of international law.

No. 389.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Vignaud.

No. 342.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 8, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 608, of the 24th ultimo, has been received. You therein report the case of Mr. W. Lalanne, a person of French origin, holding a certificate of naturalization, granted by the city and county court of Los Angeles, Cal., October 20, 1876, who had applied to your legation for a certificate of "exemption" from French military service, and was informed by you that no such certificate would be issued by your legation, and further "that he could be relieved from his military obligations towards France only by establishing before a French court of justice that he was no longer a French citizen."

The language you employ in your letter of May 16, 1888, to Mr.

Lalanne, is as follows:

I regret to say, sir, that the legation is not in a position to furnish you with a certificate of this kind.

The French Government holds that every natural-born Frenchman is liable to military service until he has produced evidence that he is no longer a French citizen and is therefore disqualified to perform any military service in the French national army. Under the existing rule, it is for you to furnish the evidence, and no other will satisfy the French Government but a judgment of a French civil court declaring that you have lost your original character.

Your mode of redress is therefore to apply to the "tribunal civil" of your arrondissement for a judgment stating that you are no longer a French citizen. In support of this application you will produce your certificate of naturalization, duly legalized by this legation, and the court will, I have no doubt, grant your request. You will then take a copy of the judgment of the court to the military authorities and they will discharge you.

It appears that you wrote thus to Mr. Lalanne, having before you his statement that he left France in 1874, when eighteen years of age, and a certified copy of his record of naturalization, showing that he was admitted to citizenship October 20, 1876, when he must have resided in the United States less than three years. In view of this you asked Mr. Lalanne for further particulars, which were promptly furnished to you, and which confirm the fact of illegal naturalization.

From Mr. Lalanne's statements in his letter of May 18, there would seem to be some doubt in his mind whether the certified transcript of his record of naturalization is in fact correct. He says that on the 2d (20th?) day of October, 1876, he applied to the court at Los Angeles in order to make declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and that a certificate of naturalization was forthwith granted to him, which "first certificate" he has lost. The one now submitted appears to be merely a certified transcript.

On the 2d (20th) October, 1876, Mr. Lalanne could lawfully have made declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and complete naturalization would have followed after completing the statutory term of residence of five years. But the transcript furnished is not of the record of Mr. Lalanne's declaration of intention; it pur-

Inquiry will be made of the court at Los Angeles to determine whether the transcript is in error. If it be a correct certificate of the record of the court, and Mr. Lalanne's statement of his arrival in the United States in April, or perhaps May, 1874, when he was eighteen years old, is also correct, it is clear that Mr. Lalanne has not been lawfully naturalized, and is not a citizen of the United States.

Under all the circumstances known to you, it would have sufficed had you informed Mr. Lalanne that the legation could not intervene in his behalf, because of the evident showing that he could not have been lawfully naturalized.

Your elaborate statement to Mr. Lalanne of the position held by the French Government in regard to proof of loss of French citizenship would therefore appear to have been somewhat superfluous, especially as the point is actually at issue between the two Governments. It is not objectionable if regarded as simply explaining what you understand to be the attitude of the French authorities.

It might, however, be construed as in some measure an acquiescence on the part of the United States Government, through its responsible agent in France, in the very objectionable pretensions of the French Government, touching proof of loss of French status; and, inasmuch as it fails to state the distinct and positive repudiation by this Government of such pretension, as contained in the Department's instructions No. 298 of 15th of February, 1888, it does not call for special approval.

You will, of course, always be careful not to let it be supposed, even by indirection or implication, that the Government of the United States will ever admit the right of any foreign Government to arrest or detain our citizens if not charged with crime.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 390.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Vignaud.

No. 343.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 13, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 617, of the 31st ultimo, has been received. In it you state that the publication of the regulations requiring all foreigners entering the German Empire by the way of Alsace-Lorraine to be provided with passports has greatly increased the number of applications for such papers, and may raise new questions to be decided by the legation.

You therefore ask that you may be instructed by the Department as to the following points, viz:

(1) Is a passport to be refused to the wife or widow of a naturalized citizen who has not the naturalization papers of her husband?

(2) Is a passport to be refused to a naturalized citizen who has left his naturalization papers at home, or who has lost them?

(3) Is a passport to be refused to a naturalized citizen residing abroad who has no intention at present of returning to the United States, and who is unable to state whether he will do so or not, or when he may do so?

(4) Should not passports be refused to the children of naturalized citizens born abroad, who have never been in the United States, and whose fathers are or were permanently residing abroad?

In all cases arising under the first and second questions as quoted above the legation should require the original certificate or a duly certified copy thereof to be produced as the best evidence of citizenship. If the applicant shall be unable to produce a certificate of naturalization or a certified copy thereof, then the naturalization certificate, like all other records, may be proved by parol, but to admit parol proof of it the following conditions must exist:

(a) The prior existence of the certificate must be shown.

(b) If burned or otherwise destroyed, such destruction of the certificate must be proved.

(c) If lost, diligent but ineffectual search for it must be shown.

(d) Parol proof of a lost or destroyed certificate should not be received if the original record of naturalization, of which a certified copy could be procured, is attainable. A party who can not produce his naturalization certificate can not supply it by parol proof unless he also prove that the original record of naturalization is unattainable and can not be reproduced by a certified copy.

As to the third question the Department holds that in such cases passports should be refused.

As to the fourth question the answer is in the affirmative, with the qualification that the exclusion does not apply to cases in which the applicant, when arriving at majority, seeks the passport in order to return to the United States with the avowed intention of taking upon himself the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship. however, clear proof exists of the father's renunciation of American citizenship prior to the son's birth, then a passport should not be granted to the son.

reply to Mr. Jacob.

In the present aspect of the question between this Government and that of France, concerning the establishment of the status of American citizenship on the part of those who by birth or descent may also be claimed as French citizens, it does not seem necessary or proper for this Government to make any formal application in the sense of either of the alternatives suggested by Mr. Ferry in his note of May 1, 1884, to Mr. Morton, but in view of the fact that no practical issue remains in this particular case, inasmuch as Mr. Jacob has served his term, and in view, moreover, of the good disposition shown by Mr. Ferry and by the then minister of war, in 1884, it is hoped that the French Government will erase Mr. Jacob's name from the list of reserves, and to this end you are instructed to employ your good offices.

PHILADELPHIA, May 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: About four years ago on returning to the United States after my release from the French army, into which I had been forced notwithstanding my rights as an American citizen, I applied to the Government at Washington in order to have the matter settled.

The following is a summary of my statements: I was born at Philadelphia on July 10, 1858, and my father was naturalized when I was a boy; I remained in said city until the age of nineteen, when I sailed for France with my parents intending to remain there several years to acquire experience in my profession of civil engineer.

While at Paris I was drafted and forced into the army despite the protests of the American minister at Paris.

After completing the required time of four years I returned to my native country and complained to the Government of the way in which I had been treated abroad, asking that immediate steps be taken to have my name erased from the army rolls.

In reply to my letter of January 9, 1884, I received from the Department of State a letter dated January 22, 1884, and a second letter dated May 28, 1884, which informed me that I had only two ways of establishing in France my change of na-

(1) By applying directly to the French Government for permission to acquire another citizenship.

(2) By obtaining from a court of justice a declaration that I had lost my French citizenship.

To this I replied by letter of July 12, 1884, that I did not consider that I should be obliged to ask the permission of a foreign government to acquire that which had long since been acquired by right of birth, and that I did not ask for a change of nationality but for a recognition of my rights as a citizen of the United States.

I received in reply a letter dated July 22, 1884, in which I was informed that, being an American citizen this Government did not down it necessary for med that, being an American citizen, this Government did not deem it necessary for me to take any steps in France to establish my American citizenship, but would extend to me as such all proper protection. And that is where the matter new stands; my name is still on the army rolls, and I am therefore still liable to military duty. to be called upon to represent American interests at the Paris Exhibition; can I safely do so? And will the Government of the United States have the power to extend to me the proper protection due to citizens abroad?

It seems to me that, under the existing circumstances, unless my name is definitely erased from the rolls, I will have trouble.

Since my return to this country I have, of course, ignored everything concerning military duty in France.

You will greatly oblige me by securing the erasure of my name from the rolls and the recognition of my citizenship.

I am, etc.,

You ask this in view of the fact that you are about to be called upon to represent American interests at the Paris Exhibition and desire to know whether you can safely do so.

Upon an examination of the facts in your case, which sufficiently appear in the published correspondence found in the "Foreign Relations" for 1884, a copy of which I herewith send you, it will be seen that having served out your full term of conscription in the French army, no practical issue remains beyond the circumstance of your name being borne upon the rolls of the reserves. Ûnder date of June 12, our consul at Marseilles addressed me a note inclosing a regular application from Mr. Cipriani for a passport and a letter from Consular Agent Damiani supporting the application.

After taking cognizance of these papers, I concluded to issue a passport to Mr. Cipriani, and informed Consul Mason of my reasons for so doing in the following letter, which states the circumstances of the case:

and was a member of nominating conventions.

The fact that Mr. Cipriani was born in the United States, and is domiciled there, makes him an American citizen. If he had expatriated himself, or had taken any steps or accepted any position involving possibly a practical abandonment of his original nationality, his right to a passport might be questioned. Such not being the case, however, I send it to you herewith. As for the certificate of citizenship, the rule is that no such paper can be given in lieu of a passport; but when a passport is issued, and there is a special and good reason for giving such a certificate, which seems to be the case with Mr. Cipriani, who, it is stated, can not settle the estate of his father without this paper, I am of opinion that it can be given. The consular agent might state therefore, that, according to to the laws of the United States, Mr. Cipriani is an American citizen. I would not advise him to go any further. He must not commit himself or commit the United States Government with regard to what might be done in case Mr. Cipriani should go to Italy and went to he allow upon to perform military sequing. to Italy and were to be called upon to perform military service.

Yours, very respectfully,

HENRY VIGNAUD, Chargé. I inclose herewith Mr. Cipriani's application and a copy of his note to Mr. McLane, and also a copy of a letter from Mr. Damiani to the consulate at Marseilles.

Very respectfully, etc.,

HENRY VIGNAUD.

Mr. Damiani to Mr. Martin.

CONSULAR AGENCY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Bastia, 18 Rue de l'Opera, June 6, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your esteemed favor of the 11th

May last, for which I extend very respectful thanks.

I wish now to submit you a case which I was asked to address to you, and that you would refer same to his excellency our minister resident at Paris, if thought necessary. There is at present at Bastia, for personal affairs concerning the estate of his deceased father, the Count General Cipriani, who died at Centuri, Corsica, about a month ago, Mr. Leonetto Cipriani, of Baltimore, and it has been announced to him that he is not in a position to inherit, etc., owing to the fact that his father, being an Italian subject, a senator of that country, etc., constituted him an Italian citizen, and that he would be liable to five years' service in the Italian army.

His father, in 1859, married in Baltimore his mother, Miss Mary Tolly Worthington, and had by her one son, the mentioned Leonetto. He was born in the city of Baltimore, on St. Paul street, and has lived in America, voted there, and has always enjoyed every right accorded to American citizens.

The Italian consul at Bastia insists that he does not gain American nationality, save by having renounced to Italian citizenship when he reached the age of twenty-one years. As he never considered himself an Italian subject, it being a well-known law of our country that a child born of American mother on American ground was an American, and as such he enjoyed all privileges accorded to American citizens.

Now, I would wish to know the construction of this law, and whether he is or not an American citizen? Is he entitled to American citizenship or is he not? If so, could not our chief diplomatic representative, who is invested with such power, deliver Mr. Cipriani a passport, based upon the gentleman's certificate of birth, of which I herein inclose a certified copy?

The gentleman is to inherit a pretty wealthy estate, and thus far it is controlled by the Italian consul, who don't seem to be willing to abandon the administration of the said estate unless it is proved to him by the American authorities that Mr. Cipriani is an American citizen. The Italian consul, here cites international law, and places his own construction on what, in this case, seems far from being applicable. I will be very thankful to you to prescribe me the best course to pursue in the interest of this gentleman; and being born in the United States, where he has lived until now—that is, to the age of twenty-eight—where he has voted, served on the jury, and even nominated delegate to conventions, etc., what papers would he have to furnish te prove his American nationality?

When his father died, about a month ago, he was telegraphed, and he came in great hurry, without thinking or supposing necessary any papers as to his citizenship, as he never supposed himself anything else but American, and only brought along with him his certificate of birth.

It is well to inform you that, the greater portions of the estate being in Italy, he would very much need to go there, but can not do so, for the reason that the Italian authorities would get hold of him and make him serve in the army. It would therefore be a valuable service under the circumstances to Mr. Cipriani if anything could be done to help him out of it, and in his behalf I beg to ask you what is in your power to do.

I beg to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIMON DAMIANI, United States Consular Agent.

S. D.

N. B.—After writing this letter I got a notice from the consul-general of Italy that a certificate issued by me, setting forth the American citizenship of Mr. Cipriani, would satisfy him, and he would let him free on his estate. If you judge that I can safely do so, please wire me on receipt of this; will pay telegram and greatly oblige, Respectfully, etc.,

CONSULAR AGENCY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA Bastia, June 11, 1888.

Your Excellency: The application which is accompanied by this letter, for a passport for myself, also certificate which our United States consular agent at Bastia, Mr. Damiani, incloses, I have been obliged to ask for, as I am about to inherit my father's estate, Count Cipriani (deceased). Your excellency will perhaps remember my mother, Miss Mary Tolly Worthington, of Baltimore County, Md. I never imagined my American citizenship to be questioned, as I have lived, was born in Baltimore, voted there, and enjoyed all privileges.

Trusting that I may have the passport at an early day,

SIR: A telegram was received from you yesterday, expressing your desire to be authorized to exercise your discretion in accepting parol proof of the existence of a certificate of naturalization if the applicant should be unable to produce it in original or certified copy, and adding that applicants experience considerable difficulty in complying with the requirements of the Department's previous instructions in the matter.

To the above Mr. Bayard immediately replied that he did not feel justified in enlarging your discretion beyond the limits laid down in his instruction No. 343 of the 13th instant.

That instruction contained a statement prepared with care of the rules of law applicable to the case of parol proofs of the contents of a missing record. It is obvious that where the fact of naturalization can be proved by the production of the record, that course should always be preferred, and parol proof should never be allowed but in exceptional cases.

The rules laid down in No. 343 are, it is believed, sufficiently liberal to cover every proper case of inability to produce the certificate of nat-Too much care can not be used to see that a passport, which is the official recognition of American citizenship abroad, is not issued to persons who are not entitled thereto.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 631. Paris, July 2, 1888. (Received July 16.)

Sin: I have your telegram in reply to mine of this instant, to the effect that you do not feel justified in enlarging my discretion as to parol proof of the existence of naturalization certificates beyond that which is conferred in your No. 343.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to paragraph 120, article 12, personal instructions to the diplomatic agents of the United States,* and to ask whether the last paragraph thereof dispenses with the necessity of producing other evidence of citizenship.

It has been the practice of this legation to accept passports from the State Department within two years from their date as sufficient evidence of citizenship to authorize the issuing of a new passport in lieu of the one issued by the Department of State, notwithstanding paragraph 127 of these same instructions.

The conditions under which your No. 343 permits parol proof of naturalization are difficult to comply with by very many applicants and excite great dissatisfaction on the part of many very respectable and well known naturalized citizens, who find themselves in Europe without their naturalization certificate, but who could easily establish to the satisfaction of the minister their citizenship, as the native-born citizen

I thought it my duty to call your attention to this matter in anticipation of complaints which will certainly be addressed to you and to the public as to the practical discrimination made between naturalized and native-born citizens seeking passports from the diplomatic agents of the United States in Europe.

Many of these complaints come from well known naturalized American citizens who have passed the whole period of their lives in the United States engaged in commerce and business, and who have not had occasion to produce their certificates of naturalization abroad, since most of the civilized countries of Europe have not of late years exacted the production of such passports. Even now, Germany only exacts their production on the frontier of Alsace Lorraine and France. It was in view of such cases that I suggested by my telegram of June 29 the propriety of leaving to me some discretion in establishing the citizenship of applicants for passports when the certificate of naturalization. has been left in America, and when it can not be procured in time to meet the necessities of the case. Though I have inadvertently strained, in one or two cases, your instructions in No. 343, where well known naturalized citizens and their children are concerned, I shall accept them for the government of this legation unless you direct their modification.

I have, etc.,

ROBT. M. McLANE.

^{*}When an application is made for a passport by a native citizen, before it be granted the applicant must make a written declaration under oath, stating his name in full, age, and place of birth, supported also, if possible, by the affidavit of a creditable person, to whom the applicant is personally known, and to the best of whose knowledge and belief the declaration is true, and the minister or consul may require such other evidence as he may deem necessary to establish the applicant's citizenship. If the applicant claims to be a naturalized citizen, he shall also produce the original or certified copy of the decree of the court by which he was declared to be a citizen, and it is the duty of the minister or consul, at the close of each quarter, to transmit to the Department a statement of the evidence on which all such passports were issued or granted. The applicant should also, in both cases, be required to take the oath of allegiance, and the oath should be transmitted to the Department with the quarterly return. A passport issued from this Department, coupled with the proof that the person in whose behalf it is presented is the person named therein, may be taken as prima facie evidence of the citizenship of the applicant, within two years from its date.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, July 6, 1888. (Received July 16.)

SIR: On the 3d instant I issued a passport to Felix Poyard and his minor children, who has been residing in Bordeaux since May, 1860, and who declared that it was his intention to return to the United States in a year or so. I felt that I strained somewhat the 4th point of your instruction No. 343, as the declaration of intention to return was rather vague, especially in view of the thirty years' residence in France, his native home, after being naturalized.

I have now received an application from one of his children, aged seventeen, who is already included in the father's passport. I hesitate to issue it in the separate form requested fearing the possibility of some future call upon him for military service, and I submit the matter for your instruction, as the long residence of the father in France may be considered as constituting the permanent residence referred to in the 4th point of your instruction.

SIR: Mr. Vignaud's dispatch No. 629 of the 25th ultimo, relative to the citizenship of Leonetto Cipriani, has been received.

The Department approves Mr. Vignaud's course in granting a passport to Mr. Cipriani. The facts of the case, as stated, his birth in the United States, continued residence here during minority, option of status on obtaining legal majority, domicil, and exercise of the rights and duties of citizenship, combine to constitute him a lawful citizen of the United States.

His status in this regard does not appear to have been questioned in any way by the authorities of France, and the only question raised by the Italian consular representative seems to be as to the form in which satisfactory proof of Mr. Cipriani's American citizenship is to be furnished for the purpose of settling the inheritance due him. The Department has no information of interference with any rights or privileges of Mr. Cipriani, under Italian law.

It is difficult, in view of Mr. Vignaud's report of the actual circumstances, to understand the alarming statements in regard to Mr. Cipriani which obtained credence in the public press, and to which Mr. Vignaud's report of the actual circumstances.

Paris, June 28, 1888.

SIR: I have just been refused a renewal of passport No. 12333, issued to me May 8, 1879. Mr. McLane informs me he can not issue a new passport to a naturalized citizen unless he has in his possession the original naturalization papers. It seems to me that my old passport is as much prima facie evidence that I am a citizen of the United States as my original naturalization papers would be, and I consider it a hardship that I am refused a new one. I wish to go to Nürnberg, Bavaria, and shall be obliged to make a detour via Cologne to get there, because our minister to France refuses to accept what I consider very good proof that I am a citizen of the United States and entitled to the protection of its flag. I earned my citizenship through three years or more of fighting the rebellion and consider myself just as good a citizen as if I had been born in the United States. I write this because I suppose our minister is acting under instructions of the Department, and attention being called to what I think is wrong, you may, after investigation, change your instructions to our ministers abroad.

For identification I refer you to the Congressman of my district, Hen. S. V. White. Respectfully,

Mr. Adee to Mr. Twyeffort.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 13, 1888.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, in which you complain of the refusal of the United States legation at Paris to renew your passport from this Department, No. 12333, dated May 8, 1879, because of your failure to produce a certificate of naturalization to prove your title to a passport as an American citizen.

In reply, I have to inform you that by a regulation of this Department in force for many years passports are good only for two years, on or before the expiration of which period they are required to be renewed. This regulation has the double effect of enabling the Government to keep trace of those claiming its protection abroad and of requiring from them a small contribution to the expenses of the Government whose protection they enjoy.

It is for these reasons and because of the regulation fixing two years as the period of vitality of a passport that diplomatic officers have contemporaneously been forbidden to accept a passport more than two years old as sufficient evidence of citizenship to warrant the issuance of a new passport. This rule applies to native and naturalized citizens of the United States impartially, and where a citizen of the United States presents himself to a legation for the renewal of a passport more than two years old he is required, whether a native or naturalized citizen, to present the same sort of evidence of citizenship as that upon which his passport was originally obtained.

I am, etc.,

ALVEY A. ADEE, Second Assistant Secretary.

No. 399.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 359.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 20, 1888.

SIR: In the case of Mr. Felix Poyard, reported in your No. 633 of the 6th instant, a settled and continuous residence of thirty years in France, the country of his origin, to which he had voluntarily returned and where he had made his domicil, would seem in all reason to have indicated his abandonment of his acquired American citizenship, unless satisfactorily rebutted by proof of special countervailing circumstances. In that long period it does not appear he had ever performed any duty of an American citizen, although during a portion of the time the resources of the country were strained to the utmost; and yet by a vague oral declaration of his intention at some future time to return here, he is to be held entitled to all the privileges and protection for which he has not rendered the slightest equivalent.

In all such cases I hold that very strict inquiry should be instituted, and if the French domicil has been established, and the usual evidence of a continuing intent to live and die in that country is found, then there can be no pretext for certifying by means of an American passport a correlative allegiance and protection which do not exist.

As to the minor children of such a person born abroad, who were never in the United States, and not being sui juris, can not elect their domicil or citizenship, the objection to issuing passports to them is even stronger; and during minority they can claim nothing more at least than their parent. The minor does not require a passport to enable him to come to the United States, to which country he can resort whenever he chooses.

It must not be forgotten that in such cases it is always in the power of the applicant, by a return to the United States, or by the performance of some act affirmative of citizenship in this country, to relieve his case of doubt.

Neglect of rights and duties often involves loss, but the maxim applies in respect of rights of citizenship as much as to other rights—" vigilantibus non dormientibus subvenient jura."

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 400.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 360.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 20, 1888.

SIR: Your No. 631, of the 2d instant, has been received. In it you confirm your telegram of June 29, acknowledge the receipt of my reply thereto, and reiterate your desire to be permitted, in your discretion, to dispense with the production of certificates of naturalization by persons asserting themselves to be naturalized citizens of the United States and desiring to obtain passports from your legation.

In instruction No. 350 of June 30 last, the Department briefly stated the reasons why this discretion could not be extended; but in view of the earnest representations which you have made to the Department, it may be well to state my views more in detail.

You suggest that a discrimination is made, under the instructions recently given to you, between natives and naturalized citizens of the United States, or at least that applicants for passports may allege the existence of such a discrimination. The answer to this suggestion seems to me plain. The rule of proof applied to each class of citizens is the same; and it is the well known legal rule, universally adopted, that in all cases the proof to be submitted of the existence of a fact must be the best proof of which the case is in its nature susceptible. case of native citizens of the United States, as there is no system in existence of individual registration, such as exists in some other countries, the best proof is by affidavit and personal identification to the satisfaction of the legation. But in the case of naturalized citizens additional and other facts essentially different must be established.

By the laws of the United States naturalization of a foreign-born person to be an American citizen is intrusted to the courts of record, both of the several States and of the United States. By the rules of evidence, as universally administered here, the record of such court can be proved either by an inspection of the records themselves or by a certified copy under the seal of the court; and such evidence is the conclusive and sole proof of the action of the court.

Whenever the question of citizenship is brought in issue within the United States the certified abstract from the record of the court is required to establish the fact of naturalization. In cases of loss or destruction of the original records an exception is made, but then the ground for the introduction of secondary evidence must be laid by proofs in the usual mode.

It is not perceived how a less stringent rule could properly be laid down for the guidance of the agents of the Government residing in foreign countries. The expediency of increased strictness is rather apparent, when the serious nature and consequences of the guarantees of national protection which are to accompany the issue of a passport are taken into consideration. At the present time, questions of allegiance and citizenship are undergoing unusually serious examination in Europe, especially in the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, lately part of the territory of France, but in which German power is now maintained in consequence of cession under the duress of war. tions of the Government to its citizens are of the most far reaching nature, and the United States expect to perform their full duty in protecting their citizens abroad, but the fact of such citizenship must be established before our intervention can be appealed to. It is not competent for this Department to alter the law which makes naturalization the act of a judicial court of record, and for that reason to be proven like other records.

The hardships of the enforcement of the rule here insisted upon, and which is not, as you seem to suppose, of recent origin, are more apparent than real. The procurement of a certificate of naturalization under the seal of the court is easy and inexpensive, and duplicates can always be obtained before going abroad, or within a fortnight, by telegraphing, by any one now in Europe.

The instructions heretofore given (No. 343) have thus been reviewed in the light of your recent representations, and it is not perceived how this Department, consistently with public interests or duty, can dispense with the customary and reasonable proof of American naturalized citizenship.

The present time appears opportune to inform that portion of the public who propose in their residence in foreign countries to enjoy all the privileges of American citizenship, that at least they must establish their right to do so by the usual and easily-acquired proofs.

The special question you present, whether the last paragraph of section 120 of the printed personal instructions dispenses with the necessity of producing other proof of citizenship than a duly executed passport less than two years old, the renewal of which is applied for, has been anticipated by my instruction No. 358, of the 16th instant, which transmitted for your information copies of the Department's correspondence with Mr. Twyeffort.

His case was very urgent as to time, and he promised to produce to me his certificate of naturalization later on. He is perfectly well known to me, and he has been naturalized thirty years, and he exhibited passports heretofore issued to him from the State Department, and also from this legation.

Concurring with you in this view of the case, I have nevertheless accepted from applicants the general declaration that it was their intention to return to the United States without requiring them to indicate any specific time for such return, which in many cases they can not do; especially is this the case with very respectable and honorable natural

Mr. Poyard's declaration that he intended to return as soon as he could was certainly as vague as any that I have received, and I would not have accepted his application if I had not been of opinion that it was his intention to return and perform his duties of citizenship. Your instructions, as contained in these Nos. 358 and 360, shall be duly accepted for the government of this legation in the future, as, indeed, with a few exceptions, they have been in the past; but it is only within a recent period that passports have been required by any of the

I reported to you in my No. 643 one of these exceptions, where the applicant was well known to me to be a naturalized citizen of the United States, who had already received passports from the Department of State and from this legation, and who promised to write to the United States for his certificate of naturalization, but who was under argent necessity to leave Paris immediately.

It would not be respectful, I think, for me to press further upon your attention the views submitted in my No. 631 as to the propriety of authorizing me to exercise discretion in the matter of issuing passports to naturalized citizens who are unable at the moment to produce the technical legal proof of naturalization by a court of record, nor did I require instruction as to what was the strict legal proof of naturalization, and in my No. 631 I indicated the class of cases in which I thought my discretion might be exercised. I might, indeed, have called your attention more specifically than I did to the individuals who found themselves in Europe without their certificates of naturalization and without having the time to procure them from the United States to meet their present necessity.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, August 16, 1888. (Received August 27.)

Sir: In accordance with your instruction of June 14 I brought again the case of Alfred Jacob to the attention of the French foreign office. Jacob, as you will remember, is a native American of French origin, now residing at Philadelphia, who, after having been compelled to perform military service in France, some years ago, was placed on the military rolls of the reserve, where his name now stands. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, I was instructed to obtain, if possible, that he be finally discharged and recognized as an American citizen.

Under date of the 4th instant, Mr. Goblet replied that the French military authorities have been and are still willing to fully discharge Jacob as soon as he will have obtained permission from the French Government to assume American citizenship. A copy of my note to Mr. Goblet, and of his reply, with a translation of the same, are herewith

I have abstained from making remarks upon this refusal, but in order to ascertain what the exact position of the French Government is with reference to the special authorization mentioned in Mr. Goblet's dispatch and occasionally in other dispatches from his department, I have addressed him a note to inquire if the French Government held that a Frenchman could not lawfully become an American citizen without being previously authorized to do so, and, if such is the case, how he is to proceed to secure such an authorization.

I have made this inquiry because the French Government sets up this pretension in general terms applicable to naturalized citizens of French origin, as well as to those who were born in the United States of French parents and remained there, as did Jacob and Gendrot, both of whom have been the subject of correspondence with the French Government and whose final discharge from military service was requested.

I have taken this occasion to invite Mr. Goblet's attention to the appeal already made to him to agree upon some reasonable adjustment of these constantly recurring controversies as to the right of the French Government to impress American citizens of French origin into the French military service. I shall send a copy of this note, with the reply thereto, as soon as it is received.

Jacob, French by origin, American by naturalization, who has been at different times the subject of a correspondence between your legation and my predecessors.

The minister of war, to whom I had immediately presented the question, recalls the fact that in 1884 the military authorities declared themselves ready to discharge the person in question from the military service as soon as he should be authorized by the French Government to acquire American citizenship. General Campenon added at the time that he would be fully disposed in that case to support the request which should be presented for that purpose to the keeper of the seals (minister of justice). Mr. de Freycinet observes that the new request which has been sent to him, does not show any evidence that this authorization has been obtained or even asked for. Under these circumstances, my colleague requests me to inform you that he can only at present recommend Jacob to hasten the fulfillment of the formality in question.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, August 24, 1888. (Received September 5.)

SIR: The recent elections on the 19th of August in the three French departments known as the "Nord," "Somme," and "Charente-Inférieure" resulted in the election in each of General Boulanger, on the issue of revision of the constitution and a dissolution of the existing chambers.

This result has taken the country somewhat by surprise, and as usual in such cases, is the occasion of much exaggeration and speculation. The simple truth is that the great mass of the conservatives, both royalists and imperialists, are in favor of revision and dissolution; some looking to the return of the monarchy, and some to that of the Empire, but all ready to vote at any time to embarrass the existing Government. It was thus that Mr. Clémenceau was able at any time, with radicals in the Chamber, to secure the support of the conservatives for the overthrow of any Kepublican ministry. Both Mr. Goblet and Mr. de Freycinet, whom he had assisted to elevate, were overthrown when he and his friends were discontented with their policy. At the present time General Boulanger has adopted the same tactics, and, supported by radical republicans, he has sought the support of the conservatives, presenting only the issue of revision and dissolution, which is as popular with radical republicans as it is with monarchists or imperialists, each having, however, different objects in view.

I am prepared for some change in the relation of the Republicans in the chamber to the Floquet ministry, but I do not think there is any change in the general political situation of the country, unless it be to note that while the republicans continue to hold a majority of the chamber as well as of the people, the radical element in their organization increases in force and promises never to rest until it secures full possession of the Government, and naturally the activity of General Boulanger and his association with the conservatives stimulates the republicans to increased zeal and vigor in support of their principles and of the republican government without much reference to its "per-

I have therefore to offer no material modification of the opinions heretofore expressed to you in reference to the action of General Boulanger or of its influence on the political condition of the country, for if he passes to the conservatives he will lose all republican support, and naturally if he adheres to the latter he will not be able to maintain his association with the former. He still insists, as do his immediate friends, that he is as fully as Mr. Clémenceau ever was in harmony with the republicans, and that the support he now receives from the conservatives is upon the simple issue of revision and dissolution, to which he insists the great mass of the republican party is favorable.

I have, etc.,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, October 4, 1888. (Received October 15.)

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy and a translation of a decree concerning aliens residing in France, which was issued on the 2d instant, and which has created quite a sensation in the large foreign population of It obliges every alien residing or intending to reside in France, either permanently or for a certain length of time, to register, within fifteen days or a month, according to circumstances, and to furnish evidence of his nationality. Travelers are exempted from this formality. Aliens domiciled in France having already complied with this regulation are also excepted from the operation of the order, but it should be noted that according to French law there is a great difference between residence and domicil. One may be residing for twenty years in France without having a domicil, whereas the right to domicile can be obtained immediately after arrival in France. Formerly there were important differences between the alien residing in France who had not obtained the right of domicil and the one who had. At present the difference is slight. For instance, the latter can have charge of a primary school; the former can not. The ordinary alien can be summarily expelled; the other can not. The judicatum solvi bond is exacted from the former and not from the latter.

By referring to the decree you will see that the statement required from each alien as to his nationality, date, and place of birth is to be supported by papers or documents. Exactly what kind of documentary evidence will be required does not appear, but a passport, I suppose, will be asked for in each case. I anticipate, therefore, that a great number of applications will be made for passports by Americans residing in France, and that these applications will increase the embarrassment under which this legation is now laboring with reference to this matter, especially as to applications for passports from native or naturalized Americans residing in France who have at present no domicil or occupation in the United States, and who may belong to either of the follow-

Those who have no intention of returning to the United States.

Those who can not state whether they will do so or not.

Those who have the intention of returning home but who are unable to say when.

According to the instruction now in force passports would certainly be refused to all those belonging to the two first classes and perhaps to the third. But as such refusal may involve serious consequences to many respectable Americans, such as fines and expulsion, I have deemed it my duty to call your attention to the subject.

I have, etc.,

ROBERT M. MCLANE.

THE MINISTER'S REPORT.

The statistical returns show that the number of foreigners residing in France, already considerable—is continually on the increase, owing to a progressive movement of immigration from neighboring countries.

This state of things has appeared to me to call for the special attention of the government, and I have arrived at the conclusion that, as is already done by most other nations, it has become necessary to enable the Administration to become cognizant of the conditions under which foreigners come to establish themselves on our soil.

To this end I have the honor to submit for your signature the subjoined decree, whereby foreigners already established in France, as well as those who may take up their residence here in future, are required to make to the local authorities a declaration of their identity and nationality, and produce documents in proof thereof. This requirement can afford no ground for legitimate protest on the basis of our treaty obligations, inasmuch as the fulfillment of the prescribed formalities will be accompanied by no charge or tax of any kind. Moreover, it must of course be clearly understood that these regulations will apply only to foreigners definitively dominically in France or who propose mobiling a long stay so that persons visiting the country ciled in France or who propose making a long stay, so that persons visiting the country on business or pleasure will be in no way affected.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 684-Translation.]

THE PRESIDENTIAL DECREE.

ART. I. Every foreigner not admitted to domicile, but who purposes taking up his residence in France, must, within fifteen days of his arrival, make, at the mairie of the commune in which he intends to establish himself, a declaration setting forth:

1) His family and baptismal names, as well as those of his father and mother; (2) His nationality; (3) The place and date of his birth; (4) His last place of domicil; (5) His profession and means of existence; (6) The name, age, and nationality of his wife and children under age when he is accompanied by them.

He must produce all necessary documents in support of his declaration. Should he not possess these documents, the mayor may, with the approval of the prefect of the department, accord him a delay in order to procure them.

A formal receipt in acknowledgment of this declaration will be delivered without charge

ART. II. In Paris the declaration must be addressed to the prefect of police, and in Lyons to the prefect of the Rhône. ART. III. In case of a change of residence, a fresh declaration must be made before the mayor of the commune where the foreigner has elected his new domicil.

ART. IV. Foreigners actually residing in France, but who have not been admitted to legal domicil, are allowed a month to comply with the foregoing regulations.

ART. V. Infractions of the formalities established by the present decree will be subject to the penalties of "simple police," without prejudice to the right of expulsions and the interior of the law of the 3d of December 1. sion possessed by the minister of the interior in virtue of the law of the 3d of December, 1849.

ART. VI. The president of the council and minister of the interior are intrusted with the execution of this decree.

Given at Paris the 2d of October, 1888. The President of the Republic signed the decree, in accordance with the premier's

SIR: On the 16th instant I sent you a telegram as follows, the object of which was simply to confirm the views expressed in my previous political communication:

Referring to my No. 665, and confirming it, find explanation of the vote of confidence obtained by the Floquet ministry yesterday in the Chambers.

I advised you, in my No. 665, that Mr. Floquet had determined to make the question of revision a cabinet question when the Chambers met, and that though he had reserved this question when he thought its presentation was calculated to assist the opposition concentrating itself against the Government, he was not willing to surrender the programme on which he and his colleagues had organized the present cabinet. The moderate Republicans, as I advised you, opposed bitterly all concession to those in favor of revision, and for some time it was doubtful whether Mr. Floquet would be able to unite his cabinet in support of the programme referred to. He resolutely maintained his purpose and executed it with great parliamentary tact, uniting a large majority of the Republicans in the Chambers and putting the entire opposition of every hue in the minority and apparently against revision, as he contrived to consolidate the vote into one of confidence as well as one favorable to revision.

General Boulanger voted with the opposition, but he took with him only four or five of his adherents, and Mr. Ferry, with his principal adherents, abstained from voting, leaving Mr. Floquet in possession of the tember 30, 1888, has been received.

On examination of the applications therewith forwarded, a serious irregularity is discovered in No. 786, dated July 23, 1888. The applicant, Jules Jacobs, therein avers under oath that he was born at Metz, in Lorraine, on the 29th day of August, 1852, and that he was naturalized before the superior court of New York City on the 17th day of October, 1872. The latter date, being taken from the certificate of naturalization exhibited to you, is presumed to be correct.

If the date of Mr. Jacobs's birth is also correctly given, it follows that he was naturalized some ten months before coming of age, which could only be accomplished by perpetrating a fraud upon the court granting the decree. The facts in the case should be carefully investigated; and if the presumption of fraud be not clearly dispelled the passport thus improvidently granted should be promptly withdrawn and cancelled.

The greatest care should be exercised in accurately ascertaining the several dates to be inserted in a passport application, and especially those which purport to establish the validity of the applicant's claim to citizenship.

No. 411.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 394.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 29, 1888.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 684 of the 4th instant in relation to the decree of the French Government of the 2d ultimo, requiring foreign residents in the Republic to register themselves within fifteen days from the date of the decree, unless they should have done so previously. It is understood by the Department that the difficulties which it was anticipated the decree would produce for foreign residents in France have not been realized owing to an amelioration of the apparent requirements of the decrees by the French Government.

It seems therefore unnecessary to enter into an elaborate discussion of the points mentioned in your dispatch, but it is proper to notice the suggestion therein made in regard to the question of domicil as connected with applications made to you for passports. Persons who have no intention of ever returning to the United States, or, what is the same thing, who do not know their own minds on the subject, are not, as you have been already instructed, entitled to the evidence of protection by the United States which is afforded by a passport. On the other hand, those who can not name a precise date for their return are not necessarily to be denied the possession of such evidence, for a distinction, which should be carefully borne in mind, exists between a fixed intention to return and an intention to return at a fixed date. The existence of the former state of mind must be established by competent evidence, to your satisfaction, before you may issue a passport; the existence of the latter intention is merely cumulative evidence on the point.

Upon these conclusions, already fully communicated to you, it is not necessary to enlarge. The Department adheres to its former instructions upon the subject, and can not strike out of its printed passport applications those inquiries which go to test the question of abandonment of American citizenship.

But it is not to be understood that the Department in so instructing you intends to introduce any novel doctrines or to extend its instructions in any respect beyond the precise point involved—the issuance of passports by our legations abroad. While resolute in claiming for domicil all the rights attached to it by the law of nations this Department is equally resolut in insisting that the term "domicil" should not be enlarged so as to make it convertible with "residence." Important reasons may be assigned for this, which will at once suggest themselves to you.

I am, sir, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 412.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 395.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 30, 1888.

SIR: Supplementing the Department's instruction to you, No. 393, of the 26th instant, in relation to the evidence upon which passports were issued by your legation during the past quarter, I have to invite your attention to the application of Mr. Stephen L. Heidenheimer, No. 773, upon which a passport was issued July 20, 1888.

Mr. Heidenheimer therein swears that he was born at Offenbach, Germany, on or about the 16th day of August, 1848; that he emigrated to the United States by the Australasia in 1866 (date of voyage not given); that he resided in the United States five years uninterruptedly, from 1866 to 1871; that he was naturalized before the court of common pleas of New York City on the 26th of April, 1871, as shown by his certificate of naturalization duly exhibited; that six days thereafter, to wit, on the 2d day of May, 1871, he received passport No. 11,314 from the Department of State; that he left the United States on the Java in 1871 (date of departure not given); that he has resided at No. 14, rue Martel, in Paris, since 1871; and that he intends to return to the United States "in or about a few years." The accompanying certificate of identification is signed by Mr. J. L. Rathbone, consul-general.

The facts as above stated, disclosing naturalization early in the fifth year of residence in the United States and immediate removal from this country, followed by a continuous residence abroad for some seventeen years, coupled with the vague and wholly unsatisfactory declaration of the essential intention to return, suggest a very doubtful case of title to protection as an American citizen during such extended residence,

The Department has consequently made inquiry with a view to supplying the dates omitted from Mr. Heidenheimer's affidavit and thus removing or confirming the doubts suggested, with the following results:

(1) The surveyor of the port of New York reports in a letter dated the 26th instant that the steamship Australasia arrived at New York four times in 1866, and that on none of those voyages does Stephen E. Heidenheimer appear as a passenger, but that "the passenger list of the voyage ending November 1 shows the name of Edward Heidenheim, aged 18; occupation, gentleman; country, Germany." The age so given agrees with that of Stephen E. Heidenheimer, who was born as stated, August 16, 1848.

(2) The passenger list of the steamship Java, leaving New York May 10, 1871, as found printed in the New York Times of May 11, 1871, contains the name of E. Heidenhimser.

(3) The place, court, and date of naturalization, and incidentally the date of birth of Mr. Stephen E. Heidenheimer, are found verified by the Department's record of the issuance of a passport to him on the 2d day of May, 1871.

The application in question is apparently filled up, except the phrase "or about a few years," in the handwriting of Mr. Augustus Jay, who signs as having administered the prescribed oath to Mr. Heidenheimer; and while the discrepancy as to the name of the vessel by which the applicant came to the United States, given in the application as Australasia and in the surveyor's report as Australasian, remains unexplained, it is reasonable to attribute an error to the perfunctory filling up of the blank.

The inference from the facts, as thus stated and verified, is that Mr. Heidenheimer arrived in the United States November 1, 1866; was naturalized April 26, 1871, after a residence in the United States of only four years five months and twenty-six days; obtained a passport immediately thereafter; within fourteen days from the date of his naturalization departed from the United States, and has since resided seventeent years abroad, with no apparent intention whatever of returning.

Unless this inference and the testimony upon which it rests is disproved, the case is one of unlawful naturalization obtained by fraud upon the court, for the sole purpose of securing in a foreign land permanent protection as a citizen of the United States.

The circumstance of Mr. Heidenheimer's immediate departure from the United States and complete evasion of the duties and burdens of our citizenship would of itself have enjoined caution in issuing to him legal evidence of a continued right to our protection; while the omission to furnish important dates essential to a judgment as to the validity of his claim to lawful citizenship should have excited suspicion and caused investigation.

On the facts before your legation, the passport in question was improvidently issued. On the facts as now collected by the Department,

Mr. Heidenheimer has no right to a passport.

You should at once investigate the case, which you can readily do in view of Mr. Heidenheimer's permanent residence in Paris and his identification by the consul-general, and unless it should be conclusively established, by evidence of judicial value, that he arrived in the United States on or prior to the 26th day of April, 1866, and that his residence abroad is not in abuse of the high right of protection as an American citizen which he claims, you will withdraw the passport.

To show the bona fides of Mr. Heidenheimer's claim, very positive evidence should be forthcoming to explain his sojourn abroad for seventeen years without renewing his passport, as contemplated by the regulations in force all that time.

Your prompt report in this case will be awaited with interest.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. McLane to Mr. Bayard.

No. 707.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Paris, November 12, 1888. (Received November 26.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 395 in reference to the passport issued to Mr. Stephen E. Heidenheimer by this legation on July 20, 1888. If the fact stated in your dispatch is correct that Mr. Heidenheimer was fraudulently naturalized, and it certainly appears to be so, I will promptly withdraw the passport in question, but I beg your attention to the declaration made by him to this legation, which did not, to my mind, suggest the idea that he did not reside uninterruptedly five years in the United States and which, therefore, did not raise presumption that the naturalization was fraudulent, while the exhibition of a passport received from the Department of State naturally confirmed Mr. Heidenheimer's declaration as to his naturalization, of which the Department of State must have assured itself before issuing the passport on the 2d of May, 1871, to which state of facts the identification by Consul-General Rathbone gave further confidence.

Mr. Jay, whose handwriting you recognize in the declaration, reports to me that he remembers this case; that he noted Mr. Heidenheimer's inability to fix the exact date of his arrival in the United States, but as Mr. Heidenheimer told him it was some time in the early part of the year 1866, he attributed this inability to simple forgetfulness after the lapse of twenty-two years. Of course he was influenced by Mr. Heidenheimer's oath that he had resided five years uninterruptedly in the United States, by his exhibition of his certificate of naturalization and of the passport from the Department of State, and by his obtaining a proper identification, to all of which I have just referred.

Mr. Jay also reminds me that he called my attention to the fact that Mr. Heidenheimer had left the United States very soon after naturalization and had resided seventeen years abroad, but as that residence had been in France, and not in Germany, the country of his origin, and as he swore to his bona fide intention to return to the United States, he was considered to be entitled to a passport.

As to the phrase in the declaration indicating his intention to return to the United States, it is certainly vague, and I will impress upon the legation that while we may not be able to fix the time of return specifically, we will endeavor not only to satisfy ourselves that it is the real intention of the applicant to return, but will seek as much certainty as possible in the phrase indicating this intention.

In this connection I have considered your No. 394, and have replied thereto assuring you that though I may not be able to fix the time of an applicant's return, I would satisfy myself that he really intends to return.

I have, etc.,

ROBERT M. McLANE.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing dispatch Mr. Heidenheimer has returned his passport and has promised to obtain evidence that he went to the United States in the beginning of 1866, and was therefore entitled to his certificate of naturalization. I will address you further on the subject if I receive such evidence.

No. 710.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Paris, November 17, 1888. (Received November 28.)

SIR: Referring to the postscript of my No. 707, I have to report that Mr. Heidenheimer called at the legation this morning according to his promise, and made substantially the following declaration:

He states that he has made inquiries of his friends in Germany as to the time of his original departure from that country and arrival in New York, these friends being at that time in New York in the business house of L. Heidenheimer & Co., and he now recognizes the fact that he was the Heidenheimer who arrived in New York the 1st of November, 1866. His proper name is Stephen Emil Heidenheimer. He is now, however, and always has been in the habit of calling himself and signing his name Emil Heidenheimer, and, though he can not explain it, he readily acknowledges that the Edward Heidenheimer on the passenger list of the Australasian must have been himself.

He alleges that when he applied to the court for naturalization in 1871, it was with a view of leaving the United States for Germany on account of his health which was very much shattered by a surgical operation and illness in 1870, Dr. L. Weber, of New York City, being his physician, who is now living in the city of New York.

He alleges further that it was his intention to return to the United States as soon as his health would permit, and he affirms that at this time he had no intention of defrauding or misleading the court. He says he can not remember the circumstances connected with his naturalization, or whether his applying in April arose from ignorance of the requirements of the law or a mistake as to the date of his arrival.

Mr. Heidenheimer states that he was employed in the house of L. Heidenheimer & Co., of New York, composed of his uncle and father, an importing house of high character, established in New York as early as 1848, and which from that time forth stood very high in the community, and was frequently called on by the United States Treasury Department and by the collector of the port of New York to act as experts in disputed cases, and paid large sums itself into the Treasury of the United States as duties, both before and after the civil war.

He earnestly appeals to me to ask you to accept his affirmation that when he made his application to be admitted as a citizen of the United States he had no intention of perpetrating a fraud upon the court, and that he was sincere in representing to this legation that he had arrived early enough in the year 1866 to constitute a residence therein of five years, and he alleges that it was his illness in 1870 and in 1871 which incapacitated him from a correct understanding of his case at that time, and which must account for his alleged ignorance as to the law and facts connected with the time of his arrival in the United States.

I have explained to Mr. Heidenheimer the distinction which I think exists between his right to a passport and his right to claim American citizenship, the former being entirely subject to the discretion of the Department of State, the latter subject to the jurisdiction of the court authorized by law to issue certificates of naturalization, and that the first question should be promptly submitted by me to your judgment upon the foregoing statement of his case. I have informed him further that I would hold in my possession the passport issued to him by this legation until I could receive your instructions in the premises, which I beg you to send me at your convenience.

As to his naturalization itself I have informed him that he should make application to the court that issued the certificate, stating that he has been informed that his citizenship was invalid or open to question and that he desired it by a new proceeding to establish his citizenship beyond a doubt.

I shall withhold from Mr. Heidenheimer, until I hear further from you, the passport he received in 1871 from the Department of State and which he was required to surrender to this legation by the terms of the declaration made when he applied for a passport here.

I am, etc.,

ROBERT M. MCLANE.

No. 415.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. McLane.

No. 406.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 8, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 710, of the 17th ultimo, in relation to the issuing of a passport to Mr. Stephen Emil Heidenheimer has been received. You therein report that after inquiries for the purpose of refreshing his memory on the subject, Mr. Heidenheimer now recognizes and admits the fact that the "Edward Heidenheimer" who arrived in New York on board the Australasian on the 1st of November, 1866, was in fact himself, notwithstanding the error in the name as it appears on the steamer's passenger list. Mr. Heidenheimer further states that when he applied to the court for naturalization in 1871, it was "with a view of leaving the United States for Germany on account of his health," that he then intended to return to the United States when his health would permit, and that he had no intention of defrauding or misleading the court which naturalized him, but is, at this lapse of time, unable to state whether his application six months before the earliest legal date arose from ignorance of the law or a mistake as to the date of his arrival. Mr. Heidenheimer does not explain why he has never carried out his intention of returning to the United States, or why he supposed he needed to be naturalized in order to return to Germany, but he contents himself with appealing to have his affirmation accepted, that he had no intention of perpetrating a fraud when he applied for naturalization, and was sincere in representing to your legation that he had resided for five years in the United States. His ignorance of the law and facts in regard to the time of his arrival in the United States he attributed to his illness in 1870 and 1871.

You have properly explained to Mr. Heidenheimer the distinction between the right to receive a passport and the right to become natural ized under the laws of the United States.

The duty of the courts is imperative (see section 2170, Revised Statutes), and they have, therefore, no discretion in the matter, and Mr. Heidenheimer's protestations of innocent intent can not confer jurisdiction upon the court to validate the act of naturalization which was admittedly obtained by false representations.

The discretion of the Secretary of State in issuing passports does not permit issuance to a person not a citizen, which is expressly prohibited by section 4076 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that-

No passport shall be granted or issued to, or verified for any other persons than citizens of the United States.

In the present case Mr. Heidenheimer has confessed that his certificate of naturalization was obtained by means of false statements to the court, whether ignorantly made or not is immaterial. He is not a citizen of the United States, and there in no authority for the issuance to him of a passport or other certificate that he is such citizen.

The Department can exercise no authority and express no opinion as to the judicial methods by which the defects in Mr. Heidenheimer's naturalization, now fully admitted, can be cured after seventeen years' interruption of that continued residence which the law makes a condition precedent.

You will cancel the passport heretofore issued by you to Mr. Heidenheimer, and you will return hither the passport issued to him in 1871 by this Department.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

Washington, December 20, 1887. (Received December 21.)

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: By order of my Government I have the honor to inform the Government of the United States that Mr. Jules Grévy having sent in his resignation, the senate and chamber of deputies, united in national assembly at Versailles the 3d of this month, have elected and proclaimed Mr. Carnot President of the French Republic.

The firm resolve of the new President and his cabinet is to maintain the good relations existing between the Government of the Republic and foreign powers, and thus to contribute to the assurance of peace; but I am charged, Mr. Secretary of State, to express to you in a peculiar manner the value which France attaches to the bonds of cordial amity which exist between our two countries.

Be pleased, etc.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 24, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 20th instant, in which, by direction of your Government, you inform the Government of the United States that Mr. Jules Grévy having resigned, the senate and chamber of deputies, in national assembly at Versailles, on the 3d instant, elected and proclaimed Mr. Carnot as President of the French Republic.

The peculiarily friendly relations which have so long subsisted between our two countries have caused the progress of the French Republic to be watched with special interest and satisfaction by the Government and people of the United States. And the resolution, to which your note gives expression, of the new President and his cabinet to maintain the good relations between the Government of the Republic and foreign powers, and thus contribute to the assurance of peace, serves only to confirm and make more confident the cordial wishes of this Government for the peaceful development and prosperity of France.

Accept, sir, etc.,

LEGATION OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC IN THE UNITED STATES. Washington, April 26, 1888. (Received April 27.)

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor to transmit to you copy of the annexed circular, by which my Government informs me that all the powers signing the convention of March 14, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables, have adopted the measures of legislation or regulation contemplated by article 12 of that international instrument.

You will also find hereto annexed in addition to the list of all the States which have ratified the convention, ten copies of a pamphlet containing a translation of the measures adopted subsequently to the adjournment of the conference by the Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Brazil, the United States, and Roumania.

I am, moreover, advised, and I have the honor to inform you that by a decree published in the Journal Officiel of the 25th of April, instant, the international convention for the protection of submarine cables has been put into operation to date from the 1st of May.

Accept, etc.,

Mr. Flourens, minister for foreign affairs, to Mr. Roustan, minister of France at Washington.

Paris, March 30, 1888.

MONSIEUR: By my circular of the 22d of September last I requested you to communicate to the Government to which you are accredited the proces-verbaux at the last meeting of the international conference held at Paris, to the end of putting into operation the convention of March 14, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables.

As I explained to you in that communication, the powers signing the convention in question agreed in a protocol drawn up by their plenipotentiaries on the 7th of July last, that the international instrument of the 14th March, 1884, should take effect the 1st of May, 1888, under the condition, however, that at that date such of the contracting governments as had not yet adopted the measures contemplated by the 12th article of the aforesaid international instrument should have conformed to that

It appeared, moreover, to the conference (see the proces-verbaux, page 204) that it only remained for five States, the Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Brazil, the United States, and Roumania, to adopt the measures in question.

Conformably to the stipulation numbered II, of the above mentioned protocol of the 7th of last July, the Government of the French Republic has received from these five powers, since the closure of the conference, the text of the laws or regulations adopted by them in execution of article 12; and after the examination of the tenor thereof, it is found that these measures of legislation or regulation respond fully to the stipulations of the convention.

I have the honor to transmit to you, herewith, ten copies of a pamphlet containing the translation of these measures, and would be obliged to you if you would cause them to reach the Government of the United States in communicating to it a copy of

The condition whereunto the contracting powers had subordinated the taking effect of the international convention of the 14th March, 1884, on the 1st of May next, being fulfilled, that convention is therefore to be put into operation on the date stipulated. I would beg of you, to this end, to ask the Government to which you are accredited to be pleased to take the necessary steps, so far as it is concerned, and I would attach importance, moreover, to knowing as promptly as possible the result of your communication.

Accept, sir, etc.,

P. S.—I would call to mind, on this occasion, that Japan has, subsequently to the signature of this international instrument, acceded to the convention of 1884, and also that the Government of the Republic gave notice thereof to the different governments by its circular of the 29th of April, 1884.

In further execution of your instruction I addressed, under date of the 17th instant, a communication to Mr. von Versen, our vice and acting consul-general here, requesting him to cause the legation to be furnished with reports from the consular officers of the United States residing at the German sea ports, showing what discrimination, if any, with respect to tonnage or equivalent dues, existed at their respective ports against our vessels as compared with those of Germany or of any third coun-In response to my request Mr. von Versen has written as follows:

In reply permit me to state that on the question under consideration repeatedly reports have been rendered to the Department of State, as you will see from the inclosed copy of a report from this office to the Department of State (dated July 5, 1887), and that all reports having passed through this office from our consuls at German sea-ports, dwelling on the same subject, have answered the same question in the negative.

I await, therefore, your directions whether or not under such circumstances you still desire me to address the consuls with reference thereto.

In answer to his communication I informed Mr. von Versen that it would not be necessary to address the consuls on the subject again at present.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA Berlin, August 25, 1887.

The undersigned, charge d' affaires ad interim of the United States of America, has the honor, acting under instructions from his Government, to invite the attention of Count Berchem, acting imperial secretary of state for foreign affairs, to an act of Congress, approved June 19, 1886, entitled "An act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," of which act, as also of the prior act of June 26, 1884, therein referred to, copies are herewith inclosed, and to extend to the Imperial Government the invitation authorized by section 12 of the act of June 19, 1886, to co-operate with the Government of the United States toward the contemplated ends.

[Here were quoted sections 11, 14, 12, and 17, as found in the circular instruction of the Department of State of July 9, 1887.]

It will be seen that the provisions of the sections above quoted are broad enough to cover either a reduction or a complete abolition, by reciprocal action, of tonnage and equivalent charges on navigation; and it is open to any foreign country in all or any of whose ports a less charge is made than that now imposed in the ports of the United States to obtain forthwith a reduction of the charge in the United States on vessels coming from such port or ports to an equality with that levied in the port or ports designated. An example of this is furnished by the arrangement lately entered into between the Government of the United States and that of the Netherlands, as shown by the inclosed copy of the President's proclamation of April 22, 1887, whereby complete exemption from tonnage dues is secured to all vessels, of whatever nationality, entering ports of the United States from the ports of the Netherlands, in Europe, or from certain named ports of the Dutch East Indies.

It is to be observed that the invitation herein contained is extended equally to all countries, both those having ports within the geographical zone to which, under the shipping acts of 1884 and 1886, the rate of 3 to 15 cents per ton applies, and to those which have no ports within that zone, and to which the rate of 6 to 30 cents per ton now applies. The rate of 3 to 15 cents per ton was geographical, and involved no text of flow. now applies. The rate of 3 to 15 cents per ton was geographical, and involved no test of flag.

The object and intent of the present invitation is to deal, on the basis of reciprocity, with countries as nationalities, whether situated within or without the geographical limits referred to.

In communicating the invitation herein contained, the undersigned is instructed to convey to the acting imperial secretary of state for foreign affairs the fullest assurance of its entire friendliness, and of the desire of the United States to treat the commerce and flag of Germany on the footing of the most complete reciprocity in those matters to which the invitation relates.

The undersigned avails himself, etc.,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 502.] Berlin, September 12, 1887. (Received September 24.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith certain correspondence relating to the case of Peter Mackeprang, a naturalized citizen of the United States, whose application for the intervention of this legation for the purpose of securing the withdrawal of an order of expulsion issued against him by the Prussian authorities I have felt constrained

Our consul at Hamburg presented Mackeprang's application to this legation in a communication of the 11th of July last, which with its inclosures furnished the following facts:

Mackeprang was born April 24, 1848, at New Gellingsdorf, in Prussia, and emigrated in the fall of 1868, at the age of liability to perform active military duty, to the United States, where he claims to have been naturalized in 1873, submitting in proof of his American citizenship passport No. 7403 issued by the Department of State, under date of July 15, 1886. Early in June of the present year he returned to his native place with the intention, judging by his subsequent action, of remaining there permanently, since, on the occasion of an earlier visit made to that place about a year ago, he stated in response to the announcement that he had become liable to a fine of 300 marks that he would return again in a year to pay the fine and renew his allegiance to Prussia.

Under date of June 18 last, the royal government of Schleswig Holstein informed Mackeprang, in reply to his verbal application of the 4th of that month for re-admission to Prussian nationality, that his wish could not be granted; and under date of the 29th of that month he received, to a further application he is presumed to have made, a notification from the authorities confirming the refusal to re-admit him to Prossian nationality, but informing him that he would be permitted to continue his sojourn in that country until the 31st of July following, provided he demeaned himself properly. Finally, on the 18th of August last, he received a peremptory order to leave Prussia on the 31st of that month under penalty of forcible transportation beyond the frontier.

Such explanation as Mackeprang has furnished after long delay, in response to a request from the minister, in a letter accompanying a communication of the 1st instant from Consul Lang, at Hamburg, I have not found satisfactory, and have so stated in a communication addressed to that officer on the 3d instant, in which I inform him that in view of the circumstances of the case I should not feel justified in intervening for Mackeprang.

I have waited some days before reporting this case, in order that I might transmit with my report any further communication Mackeprang, who, I am informed by Consul Lang, has been awaiting the decision of the legation at Hamburg, to which place the order of expulsion does not apply, might see fit to make. No further communication has, however, been received from him.

In reply I received the inclosed letter, dated July 16, which in no way answered your question regarding his application for re-admission to Prussian allegiance.

After an extensive correspondence with Mr. Mackeprang, which led to nothing, he this morning appeared at the consulate in person and presented the inclosed order from the royal Kirchspielvogtei at Burgdorf a. Fehmarn.

He states his case as follows:

About a year ago, when visiting his home (Gellingdorf a. Fehmarn), he was informed that he had become liable to a fine of 300 marks. He said that he would return in a year (1887), pay the fine, and renew his allegiance to Prussia. When he returned some months ago to carry out this intention he was informed by the authorities that they would not permit him to renew his allegiance, and handed the order which I transmitted to you in my respects of July 11.

They will neither inform him at Bergdorf nor at Schleswig why he is ordered to .leave Prussia.

He states that he is an invalid, and that he desires to reside in Germany about a year, by the advice of his American physician.

At present he is residing in Hamburg, awaiting the result of your intervention in securing a withdrawal of the order expelling him.

Mr. Mackeprang has endeavored to divest himself of his American citizenship, has formally applied for re-admission to German nationality, and his application has been as formally refused. His reasons for taking such course, if he can indeed be regarded as having furnished any are not considered satisfactory.

The circumstances of his case, and especially the facts of a prolongation of stay having been once granted him, and of the rejection of his application for re-admission into German nationality, indicate that in all probability intervention in his behalf, if it were proper to intervene, would not be successful.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 11, 1887.

Mr. Bayard informs Mr. Pendleton that from the reports of Mr. Sewall, United States consul general at Apia, it appears that the state of affairs in Samoa is very distressing and that it can only be made worse by a continuance of the war. Mr. Sewall has been instructed to preserve a strict neutrality, but this Government is anxious in pursuance of its treaty with Samoa, to secure a peaceful adjustment of the difficulties and a considerate treatment of Samoans.

Mr. Pendleton is requested to suggest to the German Government the advisability of the immediate election of a king and vice-king, as agreed to in conference, and the issuance of identical instructions to the representatives of the treaty powers at Apia to favor such an election, leaving other matters discussed in conference for subsequent con-

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, October 13, 1887. (Received October 13.)

Mr. Pendleton informs Mr. Bayard that he has submitted the latter's proposal of October 11 to the consideration of Count von Bismarck, who showed him a telegram, dated September 17, from the German consul at Apia, which stated that all the important chiefs, who had assembled, after notice, on September 15, had formally recognized Tamasese as king; that the islands were quiet; but that the German men-of-war would remain for a few weeks in order, by the moral effect of their presence, to prevent any outbreak. The Count stated these statements were confirmed by a telegram dated September 20 from the German commodore.

Count von Bismarck seemed not to know that any definite agreement had been reached in conference in relation to the election of a king and vice-king.

No. 518.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Berlin, October 13, 1887. (Received October 26.)

SIR: On the receipt yesterday of your telegram of the 11th instant, I called on Count Bismarck, secretary of state for foreign affairs, at 6 o'clock in the evening, the hour which he had appointed to receive me. Without reading to him the telegram, I explained to him that the latest advices of the Department from Samoa represented the condition of affairs in the islands to be very bad, indeed, only to be made worse by the prolongation of the war there existing; that the consul of the United States had been instructed to preserve a strict neutrality, and was believed to have observed his instructions, but that the Government of the United States was anxious, in the spirit of its treaty with Samoa, to urge peaceful adjustment and fair treatment of the Samoans, and that in this spirit I was instructed to propose to the German Government an immediate election of a king and vice-king as agreed in the conference, and that the three powers should issue identical instructions to their representatives to promote such election. I told him that a like suggestion on your behalf would be made to the British Government by the minister of the United States at London. He listened, as he always does, with an attention almost painfully strained, to catch each word, and immediately replied that there had already been an election of king; that the last telegram from Apia had notified him of the fact. I expressed some astonishment, saying that I had no intimation of the fact from the Department, or in the newspapers, and that the knowledge of the fact by the Department seemed inconsistent with the proposal which I had just been instructed by telegraph that day to present to him. He rang for the telegrams, but as it was a late hour, and the person in charge of them had left the office, he asked me to return this morning at 11 o'clock, when I should see them.

He then fell into general conversation on the subject, saying that the conduct of Malietoa had become unbearable, maltreating the Germans, seizing and confiscating their property, and finally permitting, if not stimulating, outrages upon those who were properly celebrating the birthday of the Emperor; that the German Government had determined to deal with him personally, making war, so to speak, against his person, but not attacking the Government or people, or violating in any respect the rights or interests of foreigners, and especially the citizens of either of the other powers, the United States or Great Britain; that this determination had been notified to these powers, and seemed to be received, if not with approval, at least with acquiescence; that when the crisis actually came, Malietoa was received on a German ship with an assurance of protection and good treatment, and very much more to the same He also said that the conference in Washington had not reached final conclusion, and had, he was advised, adjourned its sessions for a time, Alvensleben having obtained and entered upon his usual leave, and being now either on the ocean or already arrived in Germany. also said that the German Government desired to maintain the good entente between the powers in regard to Samoa, upon the principles so well known to them all, and that while he does not conceive that the change of King can make any change in the relations of the three Governments to each other, or to Samoa, or the course they had adopted, the German Government would be prepared to consider in the most friendly spirit any suggestion which might be made.

Returning at 11 o'clock this morning, Count Bismarck showed to me a dispatch from the consul at Apia, dated September 17, 1887, saying that all the important chiefs had been called to meet on the 15th of September, and that coming together they had recognized Tamasese as King, established and submitted to his authority; that quiet reigned on the island; there were no more disorders.

He showed me also a telegram from the German commodore at Apia of the 20th September, repeating somewhat in detail and generally the statements of the earlier telegram from the consul, and adding that the fleet would remain in those waters for several weeks, by the moral effect of its presence to restrain any tendency to outbreak or disorder, of which there was then, however, no symptoms.

I took the opportunity to repeat the tenor of your proposal, that there should be an immediate election of a King and Vice-King, as agreed by the conference, and that identical instructions should be given by the three powers to promote this end, laying some stress upon the words as had been agreed by the conference, and the propriety of identical instructions, etc.

The idea of a Vice-King seemed to be new to him. He said of course if the Samoans desired such an officer the German authorities would be too happy that they should be gratified, but that the suggestion should perhaps come from them. He repeated quite at length that the conference had not yet reached definite results, but had adjourned for a season, adding that this course was perhaps quite as well, as it would give an opportunity to observe how the new order of things would work, and with this additional knowledge the threads of discussion could be taken up where they had been broken; that there seemed to be no reason for haste just now, and that with new light on the status as it should then appear, all the Governments would go forward in the same spirit which had actuated them heretofore. He rather felicitated me that the laudable purpose of my Government in proposing the immediate election of a King, as a means of preserving the peace and order of the islands, had been anticipated by the Samoans, and that this having been so readily accomplished, and with happy results, there was nothing for the Governments to do in that direction.

On the occasion of the attack of the German fleet on Samoa, about the end of August, the Sydney Morning Herald published the following observations, which are worthy of consideration:

"It has not escaped observers that the Germans support an uncommonly strong "It has not escaped observers that the Germans support an uncommonly strong fleet in the Australian waters—a fleet which bears no proportion to the interests which they have to protect—and even if one believes that they will not at present attempt to oppose the wishes of England in reference to the scheme of South Sea annexation, nevertheless the fact that they are represented with such a force must occupy the attention not otherwise than very seriously of all interested parties. Taken ship for ship, they surpass the English fleet in these waters, and control a greater number of men. The Nelson, our strongest ship, has a speed of about 14 knots, and is partially armored. In the Bismarck, Olga, Carola, and Sophie, the Germans possess a quartette which can reach a speed of 13 to 14 knots, and is armed with modern Krupp's breech-loaders. All the ships of the royal navy which are here, with the exception of the Rapid, carry old-fashioned muzzle-loaders, and not a single one of them could contend with the Germans under even tolerably equal conditions. Besides the ships already named the Germans have in these waters also the ditions. Besides the ships already named the Germans have in these waters also the corvette Adler and the gun-boat Albatross, so that their force consists of six ships, which carry about 52 guns and 2,000 men."

[Inclosure 2 in No. 71. Nord-Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, October 23, 1887.]

The New York Herald of the 10th instant published an original letter from Apia, dated 1st September of this year, which, calculating on the necessity for sensational news on the part of the American public, puts forth untrue statements about the pretended excesses of the German marines in Apia.

The correspondent, who without doubt is a sympathizer with the former consular officer of German extraction, removed by the American Government because of his odious conduct, indulges in anti-German inventions, which are in part malicious and in part silly. His statements of the German occupation of Samoa show of themselves to every one acquainted with the model description of the imperial merine, that they are the agreeable distortions and products of a fancy excited by the descriptions of the Indian battles in America. The conduct of the German troops landed in Apia has, in fact, given in nowise-cause of complaint, and all the individual instances of outrages and threats against the imperitures of Apia related by the American reoutrages and threats against the inhabitants of Apia related by the American reporter are idle inventions. According to the reports which have reached here from Apia of those proceedings, the facts are simply these:

On the 24th of August last only the neighborhood of the government building in Mulinuu was taken into military possession, after the landing of the detachment of German marines, in consequence of the refusal of Malietoa to afford the satisfaction demanded. In order to insure the protection of the white inhabitants and foreign property, a guard was transferred to Apia and stationed on the property of the German hospital. Every injury to the foreigners or to the peaceably-disposed natives was carefully avoided. As no disturbance occurred among the populace, the guard which had been at first stationed before the government building was removed on the 25th of August. A further occupation of Samoan territory has not taken place. In the town of Apia trade was suspended partially only for an hour immediately after

When the correspondent of the American journal undertakes to prophesy of the future that the condition of things in Samoa will continue to be threatening and the outbreak of a "fierce and bloody war" is probable, these groundless predictions found as settlement in the surrender of Malietoa without bloodshed and without violence, and the recognition of Tamasese as King on the part of all the influential chiefs.

Besides, it can be concluded, with satisfaction, from all the discussions of the American press over the proceedings in Samoa, that it is on all sides recognized that not the least occasion exists for an intervention by the United States, since the Imperial Government voluntarily declared that it desired scrupulously to observe all the treaty rights of America in the Samoan Islands.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. No. 538.] Berlin, November, 15, 1887. (Received December 3.)

SIR: I have the honor to report that in pursuance of instruction No. 214, of the 5th of May last, in reference to the arrest and eventual release of three Americans, Charles Schwalb, A. C. Postel, and Julius Postel, at Zurich, in consequence of a request to that effect by telegraph from the authorities of the Grand Duchy of Baden, I addressed a note to the foreign office, under date of May 31, 1887, and that on the 14th of this present month I received an answer from Count Berchem, temporarily in charge.

A copy of my note to the foreign office and the answer, with translation of the latter, are herewith inclosed.

It will be observed that the recital of the facts contained in the response of the foreign office gives the grounds for the suspicion on which the authorities of Baden asked the arrest of the parties implicated, and states that while in view of these grounds of suspicion no valid objection to the action of those authorities can be taken, nevertheless it is greatly regretted that an unhappy combination of circumstances subjected these citizens of the United States to such painful suspicions and to the consequent sufferings at Zurich.

F. O. No. 291.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, May 31, 1887.

The undersigned, envoy, etc., of the United States of America, has the honor to lay before His Excellency Count Bismarck-Schönhausen, imperial secretary of state for foreign affairs, the following statement of facts as they are alleged to exist. It is represented that on the 27th day of July, in the year 1886, three citizens of the United States, named, respectively, Charles Schwalb, A. C. Postel, and Julius Postel, were arrested at the railroad station in the city of Zurich, in Switzerland, about 10 o'clock in the morning, and were detained in custody until 6 o'clock in the evening of the same day; that they were persons of good character and reputation innocent of any the same day; that they were persons of good character and reputation, innocent of any crime, or complicity therein, or knowledge thereof, traveling for improvement and pleasure, and supplied with passports of the United States; that they had gone to the railroad station for the purpose of taking their departure from the city of Zurich, and were there arrested wholly without cause in the presence of a great number of people, and were detained as suspected felons. They were consequently prevented from continuing their journey for many hours, and, in addition to this great inconvenience, were subjected to suspicions mortifying to them, and injuriously affecting their reputation, as if they had been guilty of crime and were justly subject to arrest and imprisonment as criminals. After being kept in custody for the whole day they were discharged without any explanation from the police authorities of Zurich of the cause of their arrest and detention, except that they must look for redress, if any could be had, to the power which had demanded their arrest.

When application was made to the Federal Government of Switzerland for explanation of these grave offenses against the rights and liberty of these innocent and inoffensive citizens, that Government very distinctly answered that these three men had been arrested solely at the demand of the attorney-general of the Grand Duchy of Baden at Mannheim, describing them as suspicious characters, giving their names and minute description of their persons, and requiring their arrest and detention, which demand, under the extradition treaty between Germany and Switzerland, must be in the first place complied with by Switzerland; that immediately after the arrest notice thereof was sent by telegraph to the authorities of Baden, and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon an answer was received saying the extradition of these men would not be demanded, and thereupon they were released from custody.

The Federal Government of Switzerland expressed great regret that the very unpleasant incident had occurred and the wrong had been done, but insisted that the authorities of the Grand Duchy of Baden were alone responsible for it, inasmuch as the police of Zurich acted in entire good faith, and wholly on the demand of the authorities of Baden in pursuance of the obligatory provisions of the treaty of extradi-

The undersigned is instructed by his Government to bring this statement to the notice of His Excellency Count Bismarck, and to request that he will kindly cause an investigation to be made, and advise the undersigned of the circumstances connected with this treatment, on the part of the authorities of Baden, of innocent and respectable citizens of the United States.

The undersigned avails, etc.

Count Berchem to Mr. Pendleton.

Berlin, November 11, 1887.

The undersigned does himself the honor to inform the envoy extraordinary, and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, Mr. George H. Pendleton, that the case, mentioned in the note of the 31st of May last, of the three citizens of the United States who were arrested in Zurich at the request of the grand ducal authorities of Baden, has been made the subject of searching inquiry, whose result is to be found in the annexed report. As it appears from this report, the citizens of the United States in question, Karl Schwalb, A. C. Postel, and Julius Postel, were suspected of complicity in a theft at Heidelberg, and, in consequence of this suspicion, a prosecution was commenced against them, which led to their arrest in Zurich. Although the Grand Ducal Government has been able to find, on examination of the case, no ground on which the proceedings on the part of the grand ducal authorities, under the circumstances, can be objected to, nevertheless it regrets greatly that the said citizens of the United States have been involved in so painful a suspicion by reason of an unhappy concurrence of circumstances, and been exposed thereby to the inconveniences which they suffered in Zurich.

Whilst the undersigned unites in this expression of regret, he avails, etc.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 538.—Translation.]

Accompaniment to the foregoing inclosure.

Berlin, November 11, 1887.

On the 12th July, 1886, a pocket-book was stolen from a Mr. A. Bodenstein on his journey from Darmstadt to Herrenalb, which contained 650 marks, in four 100-mark and five 50-mark notes. The theft was committed, as was supposed, at the railroad station in Heidelberg, and therefore inquiries were made especially in Heidelberg, which were conducted by the grand ducal prosecuting attorneys of that city. Suspicion of the theft attached itself to three persons who lived in the hotel "Wiener Hof" at Heidelberg from the 17th to the 20th July, 1886, whose conduct appeared suspicious to the proprietor of the hotel, to his wife, and his servants. It appeared remarkable that the three guests arrived separately at the hotel, and departed from it separately, and bore themselves toward each other as if they stood in no connection with each other, although in fact they were traveling together. The observation of a waiter appeared particularly to give rise to suspicion, who noticed that they, in a moment when they were apparently unobserved, divided among themselves a number of bank-notes of exactly 100 marks each, and they hurriedly put away their pocket-books and separated as soon as they were aware that they were seen by the witness. The authorities of Heidelberg ascertained immediately afterwards that these said guests, Karl Schwalb, A. C. Postel, and Julius Postel, had left Heidelberg in the mean time and betaken themselves to Zurich. The grand ducal Baden prosecuting attorneys at Heidelberg requested the Zurich police to observe and eventually to arrest the parties concerned, having communicated the grounds of suspicion. In consequence the arrest took place on the 27th July of last year. Inasmuch as these grounds of suspicion were not further confirmed, an answer was sent on the same day to the inquiry by telegraph of the Zurich authorities, that the delivery of the prisoners was not demanded, only that before their discharge their personal description, the object of their journey, and their money, should be ascertained. This examination removed all suspicion from them, and the prosecution was thereupon discontinued.

The grand ducal authorities held themselves bound, after suspicion had been directed against these men, to investigate this suspicion in so searching a manner, as the city of Heidelberg at that time—July, 1886—on the occasion of the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the existence of the university, was frequented by a number of swindlers and pickpockets, whose appearance there made a sharp treatment and a close watch of all suspicious strangers necessary.

Not less than one hundred and fifty persons in Unterhainsdorf, near Reichenbach, have been attacked by trichinosis, and, alas, nearly all of them must die after endless sufferings. With greatly swollen bodies, earth-colored faces, lamed in all of their members, the unhappy ones await their release. Among the few who escaped the contagion is the teacher of the village, who strenuously insisted on the examination of the meat, which the host, who had slaughtered the hogs, refused, because he did not believe in trichina. The last victim up to this time (the thirty-third) is the tradesman Seifert in Unterhainsdorf. He was persuaded, on leaving the Malz Hotel, to buy a small sausage for 12 pfennigs, because it was delicate, followed the advice, and ate death in the sausage.

No. 547.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Berlin, December 3, 1887. (Received December 19.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt to-day of your instruction No. 265, of the 18th ultimo, in reference to the case of Hans Jacobsen, arrested on the Island of Alsen, and lately confined in Flensburg, on the charge of being a deserter from the German army.

I inclose the correspondence had with the consul at Hamburg, by whom the attention of this legation was called to this case in October last.

The facts and the question are stated in the letter of Mr. Coleman, under date of October 12, 1887, written by my direction, and the reply of Consul Lang of October 20, with its inclosure.

From these papers, as well as from the statements made in writing to the consul by the friends of Jacobsen before the consul called my attention to the subject, it clearly appears that prior to his emigration to the United States, to wit, in the month of October, 1878, Jacobsen was summoned for military service; that he had presented himself, was examined, was accepted and enlisted. After enlistment he was allowed to return for a few days to his home, being ordered to report on the 5th November next ensuing. In the interval he left Germany without leave, going to the United States.

The case falls plainly within the definition of desertion "committed before emigration," as understood by the German authorities and by this legation, as shown by a practice unbroken, as I am advised, since the making of the treaty of 1868. By Article II of that treaty a naturalized citizen of one country returning to the other country remains liable to trial and punishment for an action committed before emigration. I therefore declined to intervene.

It will be observed that the case of Jacobsen after his arrest was sent to a military tribunal, which is never done in the case of mere offense against the civil law, as would be unlawful emigration. It will be also observed that in the inclosure of Consul Lang's letter of October 20 last I was given to understand that Jacobsen's own version of the facts in his case would be forwarded to me. As this has never been done, it is to be assumed that he is satisfied with the statement made in his behalf.

I note the instruction to present Jacobsen's case to the foreign office, but in view of the facts as herein stated, and of my former decision not to intervene, and the reasons for such decision, of which the Department was necessarily ignorant at the time when the instruction was written, I shall respectfully take the liberty to suspend compliance therewith until further instructed by telegraph or otherwise.

Hoping that my action in both respects may meet the approval of the Department.

LYSABBEL PR. SCHAUBY AUF ALSEN, September 29, 1887.

The undersigned respectfully begs to place the following request before the esteemed consulate, at the solicitation of the house-owner, Andreas Jacobsen, of Lysabbelholz: Hans Jacobsen, a son of the above-mentioned Andreas Jacobsen, emigrated from here to the United States about nine years ago, after having been enlisted as a soldier, and without asking for leave. He has remained uninterruptedly in the United States until August 25, 1887, when he returned as an American citizen. The day previous (August 24) he produced his passport (citizen papers) at the esteemed consulate. Soon after his returning home, on August 31, was, by direction of the military authorities, arrested and transported to prison in Flensburg. He is still there, and the probabilities are that the court-martial will punish him for his above-mentioned emigration. It is possible that he has already been sentenced.

Such a measure on the part of the military authorities, however, can not agree with the treaty of February 22, 1868, between the United States and Prussia regarding the citizenship of such persons who have emigrated from here to the United States, nor with the instructions per aining thereto of the minister of justice of July 5, 1868.

According to these decrees the said Hans Jacobsen can certainly not now be punished on account of his emigration. In the name of the said Andreas Jacobsen, father of the American citizen, Hans Jacobsen, I would most respectfully request the esteemed consulate to intervene in the behalf of Hans Jacobsen with the proper authorities and see that his rights are protected, and, if possible, his liberation effected.

Having received the esteemed communication of the 15th instant of the highly honored consulate, I have to state in a preliminary way that the said Hans Jacobsen emigrated to America on the 21st of October, 1878, after he had been recruited for military service. Pursuant to an order received by him before his departure he was, however, not to enter upon service until the 5th of November following.

Upon the question, whether, under these circumstances, before his emigration he could be regarded as having been placed in the military service, I will not pass judg-

SIR: Your dispatch No. 547, of the 3d instant, relative to the case of Hans Jacobsen, arrested and confined for desertion from military service prior to emigration, has been received and considered.

In view of the apparently conclusive evidence furnished to the Department by you that Hans Jacobsen, when he came to America at the age of twenty years, deserted from the German army, and is now, after trial and conviction therefor, under sentence for such desertion, the Department approves your course in not presenting the case to the German Government, without instructions to do so. The second article of the naturalization treaty of 1868 expressly provides that a naturalized citizen of the one party, on his return to the country of his origin, remains liable to trial and punishment for offenses committed against its laws prior to his emigration, saving always the limitations established by the laws of his original country.

As now before the Department, the complaint of Jacobsen seems clearly to be based on a penal prosecution expressly permitted by the treaty.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 555.] Berlin, December 26, 1887. (Received January 10, 1888.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose for your information copies of a correspondence relating to Mr. Manny Ehrenbacher's application for a passport, which recently took place between this legation and our consul at Nuremberg.

You will perceive that I offered to issue the desired passport upon the condition that Ehrenbacher should at once return to the United States to perform the duties of citizenship there, and that he withdrew his application, expressing the intention of going shortly to America and applying for a passport there.

You will observe from the inclosures that Mr. Bancroft Davis declined to issue a passport to the father, and that the son has been ever since that time in Germany under his control.

Hoping you will approve my course in this case,

I have, etc.,

United States Consulate, Nuremberg, December 10, 1887.

SIR: Inclosed please find passport application of Manny Ehrenbacher, together with his birth certificate and the citizen paper of his father. You will notice that the name in the birth certificate is spelled "Mannie," but he spells it in the application "Manny;" he explains that difference by saying that the former was the way it was spelled by his family at the time of his birth, but he has himself changed it to the present spelling. Jacob Ehrenbacher, the father of Manny Ehrenbacher, applied through this office in March, 1875, to the legation at Berlin, for a passport, but the then minister, the Hon. J. C. Bancroft Davis, in a letter dated April 2, 1875, refused it upon the grounds that Ehrenbacher had lived here since July, 1869, with his family, and he was engaged in business, and there was no apparent intention of his returning to the United States. The matter was then submitted to the Department of State at Washington, and the course pursued by the minister was sustained in a communication dated June 2, 1875, addressed to Mr. Ehrenbacher, a copy of which is on file in this office.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, December 13, 1887.

SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, transmitting the passport application of Mr. Manny Ehrenbacher, is received.

Mr. Jacob Ehrenbacher, the father of the applicant, returned after naturalization in the United States to his native country, Germany, in 1869, with the latter and with his entire family.

In 1875 Mr. Bancroft Davis, at that time the American minister at this post, declined to issue a passport to the father for the reason that he could not be regarded as having an intent to return to the United States within the meaning of the treaty, which decision was subsequently approved by the Department of State.

Since then a further period of twelve years has elapsed, making in all one of about eighteen years, during which the father has resided in Germany with his family, his son, the present applicant for a passport, included, without either father or son having at any time been in the United States since the return of the father and his family in

In view of these facts and of the circumstances that Mr. Manny Ehrenbacher, who has spent about eighteen of the twenty-one years of his life in Germany, manifests no intent to return to the United States and to elect to become a citizen of the United States by taking up his residence there, and performing the duties of citizenship, the legation feels constrained to decline to issue the passport for which he has applied, except on the condition that he at once return to the United States for the purpose aforesaid, and to enable him to do so.

Mr. Ehrenbacher's birth certificate, his father's certificate of naturalization, and the passport application forms are herewith returned, the latter to be transmitted here

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, Nuremberg, December 15, 1887.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 13th instant, I have the honor to inform you that I notified Manny Ehrenbacher that the legation declines to issue the passport to him, except on the condition that he at once returns to the United States and performs there the duties of citizenship. His father has notified me to-day that his son withdraws his application for passport, and as he intends going to the United States shortly he will make application for one there.

Manny Ehrenbacher told me, when he first made his application, that he was going to travel for a wine house in Frankfort-on-the-Main, and that he expects to travel for that house in the United States for four months. If he does, therefore, apply for a passport in the United States, it will be merely to overcome the objections made to issuing him one here, and I am fully satisfied that he has no bona fide intention of ever permanently residing in the United States and performing the duties of citizenship there.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, January 10, 1888. (Received January 31.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, with translation, a narrative published in the Kreuzzeitung, a leading conservative newspaper of this city, of the election of Tamasese as king of the Samoan Islands, and of other events occurring there in the months of August and September last. The narrative of these events is from the pen of a marine chaplain on board the German war vessel Sophie.

THE ROYAL FESTIVAL AT LEÜLUMOENGA, SAMOAN ISLANDS.

[By the Marine Chaplain Wangemann, on board Her Majesty's ship Sophie.]

Leülumoënga is the principal village of Aana, the western province of the island of Upolu. This is the second in size, by far the most cultivated of the three principal islands of the Samoan group, and has a area of 16 square miles (German).

Westward of Upolu lies Savaii, with an area of 31 square miles, but almost without a harbor; to the eastward, Tutuila, only 2 or 3 square miles in size, but distinguished the statement of the same second size.

guished by its excellent harbor Pango-Pango King Tamasese lived in the village of Lei lumoënga, until August 23, 1887. Descended from the oldest and most distinguished Samoan family, he and his family have during decades stood in opposition to the family of Malietoa, who, by the expulsion of the Tongans from Upolu in the second decade of this century, achieved under his leadership, had placed most of the districts of the Archipelago under his rule. When, on the 24th of August last, Commodore Heusner, commanding the German squadron, had, in the name of His Majesty the German Emperor, declared war against the reigning King Malietoa, a descendant of the one first named, because Malietoa, the reigning Amineton, a descendant of the one first named, because Maneton, as was announced in the declaration of the commodore, had been guilty of insulting the German Emperor; had further, by disregard of the treaties concluded with the German Government, and by refusing protection to the Germans living in Samon, manifested the purpose of not observing those treaties; and finally because he had refused to furnish the guaranties considered necessary by the German Government for the protection of the live and preparate of the German Government for the protection of the lives and property of the Germans living in Samoa, His Majesty's corvette Carola had been dispatched from Apia, the principal port of Upolu and the chief place of the entire Samoan group, to Leülumoënga, situated to the westward at a distance of six hours, to inform the rival king, Tamasese, that the German Government recognized and would support his claims to the royal sovernights. ment recognized and would support his claims to the royal sovereignty over all Samoa, summoning him to embark, in consequence, for Apia on board His Majesty's ship Carola.

On the morning of the 25th of August following, the Carola steamed into the harbor Apia flying Tamasese's flag at the mast-head. The field of the same is divided by a of Apia flying Tamasese's flag at the mast-head. cross into four equal parts, of which three are white, the left upper one being red. In the middle of the red field is the white five-pointed star of Samoa, intended to represent the five more important islands of the group-Savaii, Manono, Upolu, Tutuila, and Tau. Seen at a distance, this flag can hardly be distinguished from the German H. M. frigate Bismarck saluted the new flag of Samoa with the customary twenty-one guns. Tamasese at once paid his visit to the commodore on board H. M. S. Bismarck, and later, at about noon, went ashore with the latter to repair to his new capital, at Mulinuu, which lies on the western side of the harbor of Apia, on a low, narrow tongue of land extending from the south to the north, where the King has since lived in his Samoan hut, under palm and bread-fruit trees, after the man-

Tamasese is a tall, imposing-looking personage. His hair and short mustache have already turned gray. The upper part of his light-brown body and his feet are always uncovered; about his loins he wears, wrapped around him several times, according to the Samon custom a large piece of alath, signs, of a brown and black pottom. to the Samoan custom, a large piece of cloth-siapo-of a brown-and-black pattern, which the Samoan women know how to manufacture out of the bark of the papermulberry tree. In addition to the garland of flowers customary in the country, his neck and breast are adorned by a silver chain with the five-pointed star of Samoa. He carries in his hand an immense black umbrella, whether there be rain or sunshine. He sits in his hut, as is the custom at Samoa, with his legs crossed beneath him, holding a fly-brush in his hand, which he swings to and fro, especially when speaking. The umbrella and chain are of European manufacture; the fly-brush, made of cocoa fibers, is Samoan work.

On the day before the arrival of Tamasese hostilities had been inaugurated by an armed landing. Our sailors, however, met with no resistance. The Samoan Government building, a shed-like structure of wood, was arranged as the chief guard-house, and a second guard was placed in the German vice-consulate, at the time unoccupied. Malietoa had, however, with some of his adherents, fled into the interior of the island, his other adherents remaining quietly in their huts. This state of war, proclaimed over Samoa, lasted for several weeks still, until finally, on September 17, Malietoa decided to quit his hiding-place in the brush and surrender to the German power. No fighting whatever ensued. Malietoa, with his few followers, had several times been driven out of his hiding-place by small detachments of sailors sent in pursuit of him, but had rever allowed himself to be captured, the interior of Upolu being so impassable, so full of ravines, masses of lava, and intertwined roots, and covered with so dense a forest, that hardly the few roads connecting the northern with the southern coast, leaving the jungle out of consideration, are available for

The former King had already, on September 18, sailed on the cruiser Adler for his place of banishment, after having manifested the magnitude of his grief to his people in touching letters, which have been published in the Australian journals. The adherents of Malietoa in other parts of the country had, by repeated visits by our war vessels, been made acquainted with the situation of affairs. H. M. S. Carola visited several of the ports of Upolu, and in particular Safata, situated on the southern coast, a chief stronghold of the opposing party; Her Majesty's corvette Olga went to Tutuila, and finally Her Majesty's corvette Sophie touched at all of the larger places of Savaii, sending regularly a deputation of two chiefs of the Tamasese party, who were on board, under the conduct of Lieutenant Kalan von Hofe, ashore, who, by printed proclamation and speeches, summoned their country people to submit to Tamasese's rule. At the beginning several places maintained a very cool attitude toward these visits, Satupaitea, on the southern coast, going so far as to refuse to receive the chiefs. But when this village had been destroyed by fire for its disobedience, its inhabitants had fled precipitately to the bush before the landing of the armed boats; all who had at first exhibited coolness, upon a second visit of the Sophie hastened to manifest their entire loyalty.

Tamasese was now the sole ruler of all Samoa, for on the occasion of the assemblage of the people, held at Mulinuu on September 15, the chiefs of all the places of the archipelago had appeared, and had, although in many a case with a trembling hand, subscribed the document in which they recognized Tamasese as the sole and rightful King of Samoa. This document read, translated into German: "We make rightful King of Samoa has known to all the people of all Samoa the following: 'The Government of Samoa has known to all the people of all Samoa the following: 'The document of Samoa has known to all the people of all Samoa the following: 'The document of Samoa has known to all the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same of the same o been assumed by His Majesty King Tamasese. It was an interesting spectacle as this stately fleet came around Matautu, the eastern point of the harbor of Apia, passing through the same in beautiful order, with uniform strokes of the oars, and singing in unison. The well-built brown figures in the boats had hung garlands of leaves and flowers about themselves, and had wound broad fire-red ribbons, in token of their being Tamasese's warriors, about their black hair. The other items of their uniforms consisted of the enstomary lavalaya (the waist-cloth), of a Spider rifle, and alarge leather sisted of the customary lavalava (the waist-cloth), of a Snider rifle, and a large leather cartridge-box. It is said of these people, by the way, that they know how to use their rifles well, although they have been instructed in their use but a short time as yet. Their organization has been effected by the former artillery captain of Baden, Herr Brandeis, who, as long ago as January, 1887, was appointed by King Tamasses president of the state council, "o le alii fili o le vasenga o le tupu," as the title reads in Samoan, and had in that capacity exercised the widest influence in the Kingdom of Samoa. Herr Brandeis also conducted the proceeding of the people's assemblance or this der blage on this day. It was Tamasese's purpose to inaugurate his new rule by a grand festival. To this end he commanded his subjects to send large deputations from their villages to Leulumoënga, and to have them make their appearance handsomely adorned. At the same time he also requested Commodore Heusner and Captains Kuhn, Strauch, Cochins, and Aschman, as well as the corps of officers of the cruising squadron, to attend the festival as guests of honor. A festival of such dimensions could, however, not be held at Mulinuu. The tongue of land but four weeks before had been uninhabited, Malietoa then living at Afenga, a village situated three hours west of Apia. When Tamasese moved into the old royal hut, his followers built themselves huts in the paighborhood in order that they might at least find some shelter from the rain the neighborhood in order that they might at least find some shelter from the rain and sun, but this settlement did not as yet suffice for the accommodation of thousands of guests. Moreover there grow at Mulinuu only a few cocoa and banana palms; and there is no spring water, thus the journey to Leülumoënga became the business of the whole archipelago. In Samoa, the natives travel long distances almost solely in canoes, Europeans sometimes on horseback; on foot, people travel rarely, the roads being too bad, the streams that have to be waded too numerous and swift and deep, the heights and declivities too difficult to ascend. Traveling in boats, however, presents but little difficulty, owing to the regularity of the winds and the security presents but little difficulty, owing to the regularity of the winds and the security of the water within the coral reefs which surround these islands as with wide rings.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Pendleton.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 17, 1888-

Sir: On the 9th ultimo Baron von Zedtwitz, German chargé d'affaires at this capital, called at the Department of State and read to me a translation of an instruction to him, dated November 18, 1887, from Prince Bismarck, a copy of which is herewith inclosed.*

This communication of Prince Bismarck, after stating that it had been necessary on a former occasion to draw my attention to the anti-German attitude assumed by the American consul-general at Apia, Mr. Sewall, during the recent German hostilities against King Malietoa, complains of similar experience with the predecessors of Mr. Sewall on all occasions when Germany has endeavored, in view of the unsettled state of affairs in Samoa, to obtain better guaranties for the protection of the German subjects there living, and of their commercial interests: declaring, also, that the reports of the German representatives in Apia during the last seven years repeatedly contain the complaint that their American consular colleagues show a tendency to interfere in the relations between Germany and the Samoan government, and to infuse into the latter distrust of Germany, whose efforts in the interest of the establishment of a lawful and orderly condition of affairs in those islands have, without exception, he insists, met with the opposition of the American consular representatives. As an instance of this alleged opposition, the communication of Prince Bismarck states that when, in 1881, upon the outbreak of armed strife among the natives, the commander of His Imperial Majesty's ship Möwe, on the request of the German consul at Apia, and in agreement with the municipal administration, occupied Apia in order to protect the foreign settlement, the then American consul, Mr. Dawson, protested against that measure and caused the editor of an Apia paper to publish injurious articles against the German vice-consul and the commander of the Möwe.

As another instance it is stated that Consul Canisius has been pointed out as the author of two letters which Malietoa addressed to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany on the Imperial representative in Apia, and demanding his recall, with an insulting criticism of German military measures. Another instance cited is the action of Mr. Greenebaum, who, it is said, besides acting in opposition to the German representative, and encouraging Malietoa in his provoking attitude towards Germany, arbitrarily announced, in a proclamation issued on May 14, 1886, an American protectorate over the Samoan Islands, and hoisted as a sign thereof the American flag over the Samoan; a proceeding which, as the communication states, was disavowed by this Government, and resulted in Mr. Greenebaum's recall. Prince Bismarck observes that it is remarkable that on the remote islands in question, where neither America nor Germany has any political interests to defend, the latter should be exposed to the continual ill-will of a series of American representatives, there being, to explain the fact, no local commercial rivalries, such as exist in many quarters of the globe, and even in proximity to the region of the present difficulties between Germany and Great Britain. He then proceeds to show the preponderance of German over American commercial interests in the islands, notwithstanding which, it is said, Germany has always maintained the principle of equality of rights of nations in Samoa and aspired to no political advantage. Germany, it is said, has never made use of her mercantile preponderance in Samoa to secure commercial privileges as the United States have recently done in Hawaii by the ratification of the recently renewed reciprocity treaty of January 30, 1875. And on the occasion of the recent action against Malietoa, the continuance of whose Government was incompatible with the dignity of Germany, she gave, Prince Bismarck further claims, to both the English and American Governments, before his deposition, the assurance that it was not her intention to change anything with regard to the relation of the treaty powers

Failing to find any reason "in the facts themselves" to explain the continued ill-will shown towards Germany in Samoa by the American representatives in the past and present, Prince Bismarck says he would be thankful if I would lend him my assistance in the investigation of this strange fact, and should his supposition be right that the difficulties referred to have their origin in the personal disposition of the American representatives in Apia, and not in their instructions, he is convinced the American Government will cause the necessary redress to take place, as it can not be conceived that consular officers, who do not respect the limits of their task, and who, by their conduct, and without reason, cause ill-feeling between countries entertaining friendly relations to each other, act in accordance with the wishes of the Government of the United States, with which Germany, since the foundation of the American Union, has been connected by traditional friendship.

I am instructed by the President to say that he fully participates in the regrets of Prince Bismarck that the relations of traditional friendship which have subsisted between the United States and Germany unbroken for so many years should be, in any way or degree, disturbed or affected by occurrences in remote islands in which the material interests of both Governments are comparatively insignificant.

This Government has manifested in the most unmistakable manner its desire to avoid all possibilities of difference with the other treaty powers in Samoa, alike by its action in respect to its consular representation there, and by the exercise of its moral influence to discountenance and prevent those native dissensions which, assuming the form of disaffection towards existing government, have stood as a constant invitation and incentive (of which interested foreigners in the islands have not been slow to avail themselves) to intrigue with native factions to obtain commercial and political supremacy. This policy it has pursued with consistency and good faith, actuated not so much by the idea of any present or probable future commercial interest in that quarter of the globe in which the islands in question lie, as by a benevolent desire to promote the development and secure the independence of one of the

Had the Government of the United States entertained any designs of territorial aggrandizement or of political control in Samoa, they could have been accomplished, it is believed, with much satisfaction to a majority of the natives, and with little opposition from any of them, long prior to the date of either the British or the German treaty. But another and widely different policy has guided the action of the United States in respect to the native communities in the Southern Pacific, and it is not, I apprehend, claiming too much credit for this Government to express the opinion that the example it exhibited of treating with Samoa as an independent state led to a similar course and a similar acknowledgment of native independence in that island group by Germany and Great Britain.

Since that time a regard for the subsequently acquired conventional rights of Germany and Great Britain has been an additional reason for continuing the policy of this Government of respect for native inde-The disinterested position of the United States is strongly emphasized by the promptitude with which the action of Mr. Greenebaum was disavowed by this Government, when he proclaimed an American protectorate over Samoa, in order to counteract the disintegrating and destructive effect upon the then native government, not only of prior acts of the German consul, Dr. Stuebel, which had been protested against by the British consul as well as by Mr. Greenebaum, and some of which, at least, I understood, were not sustained by the Imperial Government, but also of the active and substantial support given by German subjects there resident to those in arms against the govern-Without waiting for representation or remonstrance, ment of Malietoa. I at once caused both Germany and Great Britain to be informed of this Government's entire disapproval of Mr. Greenebaum's action, as being unauthorized and at variance with his instructions, and he was soon after recalled.

This Department has never been furnished with evidence as to the reported authorship of the two letters of Malietoa to the Emperor of Germany of the 18th and 28th of May, 1885, nor as to the alleged origin of certain articles in Samoan newspapers, which I have never seen; but in respect to the alleged action of the American consul, Mr. Dawson, in 1881, on the occasion of the landing of a force from His Imperial Majesty's ship Möwe, the documents in the possession of this Department lead to a very different impression of that incident from that which Prince Bismarck has been led to entertain. Not only was the action of the German consul on that occasion, as I am informed, not in agreement with the Samoan Government and the municipal administration, but it was taken without consultation with the acting head of the municipal government, after the disturbance had actually been quelled by the local police, and was complained against by the Samoan King, a copy of whose complaint, dated July 14, 1881, and addressed to Mr. Dawson, as the acting head of the consular and municipal body, is herewith inclosed. But, whatever may be the precise circumstances of the affair, it appears at most merely to involve a personal difference of opinion as to the measures required by an unforseen but brief commotion, and to have had no connection whatever with subsequent disorders in the islands.

While it is doubtless true that the German and American consuls at Apia have not always been found acting in concert, yet unless the information derived from various sources and in the possession of this Department is wholly unreliable, the absence of harmony in consular action has not in any respect been due to hostility to Germany on the part of the consuls of the United States. This fact is strongly illustrated by recalling certain incidents which preceded the landing of the forces from the Möwe, when it is alleged the American consul exhibited an attitude of hostility to Germany.

When Sir Arthur Gordon, in August, 1879, came to negotiate the treaty between Great Britain and Samoa, which was concluded on the 28th of that month, and consulted the foreign consuls and captains of men of war then present upon the point whether he ought to treat with Malietoa as King of Samoa, they unanimously advised him to do so, which he did; and among the foreign representatives who concurred in that advice was Mr. Theo. Weber, then German consul at Apia, but now the leading representative of German commercial and landed interests there, and, as such, long an active promoter of the native opposition under Tamasese to the government of Malietoa. On the following day the German and American consuls joined with Sir Arthur Gordon in proclaiming the government of Malietoa as the only real government in the islands. At the same time the municipality convention was entered into by the American, British, and German consuls with Malietoa as representing the Government of Samoa. The consular representative of the United States then consistently supported the government of Malietoa, and it is understood that the German consul was under instructions from his Government to pursue the same course. And yet, in November, 1880, the American consul, Mr. Dawson, advised the Department that the then German consul-general, Captain Zempsch (of whose overbearing and inconsiderate conduct towards himself personally he frequently complained), was openly advocating a division of the kingdom, and thus contributing to weaken the native government of Malietoa, to whom personally, so far as this Department is advised, the Government of Germany made at that time no objection. About this time the native opposition to the government of Malietoa had begun to assume a warlike attitude, which the expressed views of the German consul-general encouraged.

Judging by the past I am led to conclude that the instability of the native Government of Samoa, and the tendency exhibited in a marked degree during the past two years towards civil commotions there, can not be justly imputed to any action on the part of the consular representative of the United States, but is to be attributed, among other important causes, to the failure of the German consular representatives to give consistent support to existing native government. This, I am led to suppose, has not been owing to hostility to the United States on the part of the German representatives, but rather to a natural susceptibility on their part to the desire of the local German element for such a native government as would be disposed to advance its commercial and landed On no other hypothesis am I able to account for the support given, especially during the past two years, to the natives in rebellion against the existing government; for, whatever may have been the grounds of complaint on the part of Germany against Malietoa personally, the support of Tamasese, or of any other opposing chief, could cer-

Another important cause of native unrest and dissension in Samoa has been the agitation in certain neighboring British colonies, and especially in New Zealand, for the annexation of the islands to Great Britain.

Moreover, I am wholly unable to share in Prince Bismarck's impression that the efforts of Germany to establish a lawful and orderly condition of affairs in Samoa have generally, not to say without exception, met with the opposition of American consular representatives.

I could readily point to many instances of co-operation of American consular representatives with those of Germany, when the efforts of the representatives of the latter were directed simply to the maintenance of peace and order. As an instance of such co-operation reference may be made to the important incident of the treaty of peace signed in December, 1879, on board of His Imperial German Majesty's ship Bismarck, between contending native parties, in which the co-operation of the consular representatives of the United States and Great Britain with Captain Deinhardt, the German commander, is expressly Again, as late as the 8th of June, 1886, we find the consuls of the United States, Germany, and Great Britain witnessing an agreement of peace between the "representatives of Malietoa and his Government," and the "representatives of Tamasese and his And in the intervening seven years, during which Prince Bismarck has found a few incidents which seem to him to contain evidence of enmity on the part of the consular representatives of the United States toward Germany, there were frequent acts of co-operation of those representatives with the consular representatives of Germany and Great Britain, with a view to the maintenance of a lawful and orderly condition of affairs under an autonomous native government.

Should the opinion which has been expressed as to the part taken by the United States in seeking to preserve the independence of the Samoan Islands seem in any degree extravagant, it will no longer appear to be so when what has taken place in the last three years in regard to other island groups in the Pacific is considered.

Prior to that period Spain was holding the Ladrone or Marianne and the Phillipine Islands, and had also laid the basis of a claim of title to the Caroline Islands, although she did not maintain an active government there.

Between the years 1842 and 1847 France established a protectorate over the Marquesas, Society, and Paumota groups, and in 1853 occupied New Caledonia. In 1864 she formerly assumed control of the Loyalty Islands, and in 1880 added Tahiti to the list of her colonies in the Pacific.

In addition to the continent of Australia, to which Great Britain holds a comparatively ancient title, that Government had also acquired the Fiji Islands and New Zealand, the sovereignty of the latter being ceded in 1840 and that of the former on the 10th of October, 1874.

Germany had not then entered upon her present active policy of colonization in the Pacific, although her subjects had carried on a considerable commerce there, and had established places of trade on various islands, including the Samoan.

Such was the condition of affairs at the beginning of the present decade, nor was there observable at that time any marked evidence of the desire for new territorial acquisitions; but, beginning in 1884, numerous island groups have, in rapid succession, passed in whole or in part under the control of various European powers, until almost the last vestige of native autonomy in the islands of the Pacific has been obliterated.

The year 1884 witnessed the occupation by Germany of the northern side of New Guinea, from Cape King William to Astrolabe Bay, the Imperial flag being hoisted at twelve different points. Almost coincidently Great Britain occupied the south coast of the island, and in the months of November and December, in the same year, seized and occupied the Louisiade group, Woodlark Island, and Long and Rook Islands

In the following year arose the dispute between Germany and Spain over the Carolines, which was terminated by the protocol signed at Rome on the 17th of December, 1885, under which Germany acknowledged the sovereignty of Spain over these islands and the Pelew group; and they have now passed finally under Spanish control.

But these events were merely the precursors of others, of which the seizure by France in 1886 of the New Hebrides was not the most significant. On the 6th of April of that year a joint declaration was made by Germany and Great Britain, which contemplated the absorption by those two powers of almost all the independent territory in that part of the Pacific Ocean called the West Pacific, lying between the the 15th degree of north and the 30th degree of south latitude, and between the 165th degree of longitude west and the 130th degree of longitude east of Greenwich, which had not already been occupied by some foreign power. Through that part of the Pacific included in those bounds of latitude and longitude a line of division was drawn to mark the respective spheres of British and German influence and annexation; and each joint declarant agreed not to make any acquisitions of territory, nor to establish protectorates, nor to oppose the operations of the other in the sphere of action respectively assigned to it.

Under this declaration and agreement, from which Samoa, Tonga, and Niné Island were excepted, and by the line of division drawn as above stated, New Ireland, New Britain, and the adjacent western half of the Solomon group passed under the dominion of Germany, and certain islands west of the line to Great Britain.

On the 1st of August, in the same year, the latter Government took possession of the Kermadec Islands, and by the imperial decree of the 13th of the ensuing month the Marshall, Brown, and Providence Islands and groups were occupied by Germany.

As the result of what has been above detailed, of the vast aggregate of territory in the Pacific Ocean, but a few island groups, containing a few thousand square miles, remain to-day as independent and autonomons.

Long anterior the United States had acquired, by discovery and occupation, the uninhabited island, or ocean reef, of Midway, as a possible realism station ble coaling station.

In view of these facts, it is unnecessary to emphasize the importance attached by this Government to the maintenance of the rights to which the United States has become entitled in any of the few remaining regions now under independent and autonomous native governments in the Pacific Ocean.

Prince Bismarck has referred to this Government's treaty with Hawaii of the 30th of January, 1875, which has lately been renewed, and which is said by him to give the United States commercial advantages in those islands superior to those possessed by any other foreign power. In respect to this it needs only to be observed that that treaty was one of special reciprocity which both the contracting parties were alone competent to make, and that the United States has at no time, since the convention was concluded, sought to use it to control the native government of the islands or to regulate their internal affairs against the wishes of the inhabitants, although the geographical and historical relations of the group to the United States necessarily give this Government an interest in the future of the islands such as no other foreign Government can possible possess.

In Samoa, on the contrary, the action of the German representatives, especially during the last three years, has been such as to raise grave doubts in regard to the future relations of the treaty powers respecting the islands, and these doubts have only been relieved by expected assurances from Berlin of the absence of any intention on the part of Germany to unsettle former understandings, and take control of the native Government and assume a protectorate. As an example of this may be cited the signing on the 10th of November, 1884, by Dr. Stuebel, then German consul-general at Apia, with Mr. Theo. Weber, whose connections in the islands have been above described, as witness, and by Malietoa as King of Samoa, of a treaty under which substantially the entire control of Samoan affairs was to be handed over to the Ger-It has never been maintained, so far as I am aware, that the Samoan King's signature of this treaty was a voluntary act. On the contrary, I am informed that it was executed by him under duress; that it was read to him only once by an interpreter; that the German consular representative refused to give him a copy for consideration; and that on the day following the signature of the instrument, Malietoa secretly renewed an urgent petition to the Government of Great Britain for annexation. Against this convention the British Government protested, and the Government of Germany has not insisted upon its execution.

In January, 1885, less than three months after the incident above narrated, Dr. Stuebel, under the form of reprisal for certain acts of the native Government, among which was its refusal to execute the instrument of the 10th of the preceding November, seized or attached the sovereign rights of the King in the municipality of Apia, and raised the German flag on Mulinuu point, the seat of the native Government. Coincidently, the flag of the native faction hostile to the then existing Government was displayed a few miles down the coast, and the Vice-King, Tamasese, left the Government of Malietoa to put himself at the head of the movement.

This action of the German consul was not sustained by his Government; but the causal connection of the act, and of the long existing and active local influences by which it was doubtless inspired, with subsequent disorders in the islands, needs no argumentative exposition.

The earnest desire of the Government of the United States to perpetuate the native Government of the Samoan Islands and to place it on a secure basis is further evidenced, and its views upon the present situation may be more clearly understood by a review of its action subsequently to the proclamation by Mr. Greenebaum, United States consul, of a protectorate over the islands.

Immediately upon being informed of the consul's action, identical instructions were sent by telegraph, on the 1st of June, 1886, both to yourself and to our minister at London, to say to the Governments to which you were respectively accredited, that the claim of an American protectorate over Samoa by the United States consult here was wholly unauthorized and disapproved, no protectorate by any foreign nation being desired; and further, to suggest to those Governments to authorize their ministers at this capital to confer with me with a view to the establishment of order. Following this were certain practical suggestions which it is unnecessary here to enumerate, the last of which, however, was that a joint declaration should be made by the three powers against annexation or the assumption of a protectorate by any of them.

On the 2d of June Mr. Phelps, United States minister at London, telegraphed that Lord Rosebery had authorized him to say that he would assent to the proposed conference if Germany also would, his lordship promising at the same time to confer with the German ambassador on the subject; and on the following day Mr. Coleman, charge d'affaires of the United States at Berlin, informed me by telegraph that my proposal had been received at Berlin ad referendum. On the 7th of the same month Mr. Coleman wrote me that in conversation with Count Berchem, he was informed that Prince Bismarck, with whom ·Count Berchem had been in correspondence respecting the suggestion made in my telegram of the 1st of June, had accepted those suggestions as tendered; and Count Berchem added that it could not be decided as yet when the proposed discussion at Washington could take place, as owing to the lack of telegraphic communication with Samoa some time must elapse before the German Government could instruct its consul there to avoid further complications, and to preserve the status quo. would also, he said, be necessary to obtain full information as to the existing situation on those islands.

In the suggestion that time should be allowed to gather information, I at once concurred; and when, a few days later, a proposal was communicated to me by the German minister that agents or commissioners should be sent out by the three powers to Samoa to obtain information respecting the situation there, as a preliminary to the discussion to take place at Washington, I at once accepted the plan as being in the line of the suggestion originally made by this Government, that the then representatives of the three Governments at Apia should be replaced by persons having no connection with past events there, and be the more

In pursuance of this understanding, and with no other impression on the part of this Government than that the three powers were perfectly in accord that the status quo should be maintained pending the execution of their common benevolent purpose of assisting the natives of Samoa to form and administer their Government, agents were respectively sent at once to the islands, and in due time made their reports, which were exchanged by the three treaty powers.

On the 25th of June last the first formal session of the conference was held in this city, the British and German ministers and myself being present as the representatives of our respective Governments.

Other sessions were held from time to time during the following month, and some points of agreement reached; but owing to my inability to concur in the German proposition, which was substantially assented to, though not in all respects explicitly supported, by the British minister, the conference was, on the 26th of July, adjourned by unanimous consent until the autumn, in order that the members might consult their respective Governments with a view to an agreement on some other scheme of co-operative action.

In substance, the German Government proposed to commit the actual control of the islands to a person to be appointed for a term of five years by the power having the preponderating commercial interests there, the appointment to be renewed on the same terms, and the other powers merely to have the concurrent privilege of approving or refusing to approve the nominee.

The plan proposed by me on behalf of this Government was to commit the administration of the laws to an executive council, to be composed of the Samoan King and vice-King and three foreigners, of whom one was to be designated by each of the treaty powers, but who were to hold their commissions and receive their compensation from the native Government, so as to be independent of the control and influence of the powers designating them.

This proposal was based upon the recommendation of the British commissioner sent to investigate and report on the condition of the islands, a gentleman of long and extensive experience in Oceania, and seemed to me to meet the requirements of toreign assistance, and at the same time to be consistent with that equality of rights of the treaty powers which was the admitted basis of the conference. My opposition to the German plan, as I stated at the time it was presented, was not due in any degree to the fact that under it the appointment of the actual governor of the islands would be given to Germany. My objection to the plan was based upon the opinion, which was confirmed as the scheme was unfolded and discussed in the conference, that it was inherently defective and objectionable in that it involved the union of complete political control with commercial preponderance in the same hands, and, by supplanting instead of aiding the native government, tended to diminish rather than to develop the capacity of the native inhabitants of the islands for the management of their affairs.

This objection was not supported by the British representative, but in view of the desire so often previously expressed by Great Britain to uphold an actual native government in Samoa, I am utterly unable to account for her instructing her representative in the conference to advocate a plan which gave to the representative of a single foreign power much greater control over the native government than was contemplated by the German-Samoan treaty of the 10th of November, 1884, to which Great Britain so strenuously objected. In a note of the 16th of February, 1885, to the embassador of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Germany at London, Earl Granville, then Her Britannie Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, referring to that convention, said:

If, M. l'Ambassadeur, this agreement had been confined to the establishment of a court, and of the procedure to be observed in civil and criminal cases, and the punishment of offenses in which German subjects are connected, for which alone Article VII of the German treaty in 1879 provides, its provisions would not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, have been open to criticism; but the creation of a state council, the appointment of a German officer of the Samoan Government, and the enrollment of a German police to protect the plantations of German subjects, appear to place Her Majesty's subjects at a disadvantage, and will prevent the Samoan Government from acting independently in matters which affect the whole community. The arrangement seems in fact to give to Germany alone much of the influence with which in 1880 it was proposed to invest an executive council, to be composed of one English, one German, and one United States member. To this arrangement Her Majesty's Government declined to accede on the ground that it involved too great an interference with the government of the island(s) to allow of its being assumed by the representatives of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States conjointly.

It will not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to accept a position of less influence and consideration than is given to Gormany by the agreement under discussions.

fluence and consideration than is given to Germany by the agreement under discussion.

It is not necessary further to discuss the plans of settlement proposed in the conference, as I am informed that the German Government, while declining the plan proposed by me, does not insist upon its own, and I am therefore not without hope that a satisfactory solution may yet be found.

I have already stated that when the conference was suspended in July last until the autumn, it was done with the concurrence of all the members, and solely for the purpose of enabling the representatives of Germany and Great Britain to consult their respective Governments. No intimation was then given that the status quo would be changed, or that any acts of hostility against the Samoan Government, or King

Malietoa personally, were in contemplation.

With this understanding, which had not changed from the moment the proposal for a conference was made and accepted, at the suggestion of the British and German ministers, I renewed, on the very eve of the formal opening of the conference, the instructions already given theretofore to the consul of the United States at Apia to use his influence to prevent violence between the native factions. The text of these instructions, which were telegraphic, and bore date the 20th of June last, was as follows:

Treaty powers endeavoring to secure permanent native government for Samoa. Strongly advise natives to avoid resort to force, which would endanger Samoa's best interests.

That the Government of Her Britannic Majesty fully concurred in the importance of a careful maintenance of the status quo, and in the understanding that no step should be taken to change it, appears from the declaration of the British minister at the first session of the conference, when, in presenting the plan of his Government, he said that, in view of the native dissensions, a new election of King seemed to be "imperatively called for," and that Her Majesty's Government expressed "no opinion, favorably or adversely, to the election of Malie-ioa."

On the same subject the German minister said:

King Malietoa having notoriously violated his treaty obligations towards Germany, and having even among the natives comparatively but few partisans, while a completely organized counter-government has been formed under Tamasese, a new election of King will have to take place according to the customs of the country. This election is to be freely made by the chiefs and the people of Samoa.

It is unnecessary to cite other statements, equally pertinent, to show the apparently complete concurrence of view as to the peaceful and benevolent purpose of the conference.

It is not strange, therefore, that I was taken wholly by surprise when the German minister called at this Department on the 29th of August last, and left with me a memorandum stating that his Government proposed to independently protect its own interests and rights in Samoa and obtain the satisfaction and reparation deemed to be due to its national honor, and, in case Malietoa was either not willing or not powerful enough to give the necessary satisfaction for the past and sufficient guaranties for the future, to declare war against him and refuse to recognize his Government.

Coupled with this declaration was an assurance that the Imperial Government was far from intending to bring about any change in the political relations which the three powers represented there entertained to Samoa; that, on the contrary, it maintained unaltered the existing treaties and stipulations between Germany, Great Britain, and the United States with regard to Samoa, as well as the equality of the three treaty powers, and proposed to continue its endeavors to arrive at an understanding as to the reforms necessary to establish lasting peace in these islands.

On the 23d of September the German minister called again and left-a memorandum stating that Germany had declared war "against Malietoa personally," and that as soon as she had obtained by his abdication due satisfaction the state of war would cease.

It is not my purpose to enter into an examination of the question how far hostilities of this type can be reconciled with settled principles of international law, or with the independence and autonomy of the country against which such measures are aimed. But it may be stated, as a matter well known, that on the 23d of August last, in less than a month from the date of the adjournment of the conference till the autumn, and before any notification to this Government of such resolve on the part of Germany, the German consul at Apia demanded of Malietoa satisfaction in the form of an apology and indemnity, together with the punishment of alleged Samoan offenders, for certain injuries said to have been suffered by German subjects at the hands of Samoans on the evening of the 22d of March preceding, during the celebration by the former of the anniversary of the birth of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, as well as a considerable pecuniary indemnity for robberies alleged to have been committed on German plantations during the past four years.

To these demands the King was notified to make reply on the following day, which he did by asking that he be given until the 27th of the month, three days, in order that he might have time to consult his Government and chiefs and make a formal answer.

To this request no reply was made by the German consul, and on the same day, the 24th of August, war was declared.

On the following day Tamasese was proclaimed by the German consul as King of Samoa, against the formal and public protest of the American and British consuls. And on the 17th of September, after having been, since the declaration of war against him, a fugitive, Malietoa gave himself up to the German consul, and was taken on board of the Bismarck, the flag ship of the German squadron.

It is not my purpose to comment upon the grounds of the recent German action in Samoa, as they have been above stated, although I regret that the powerful Government of Germany did not find it possible to take a more liberal view of the conditions of Samoan life and civilization, and the unfortunate situation of the native King, who, in regarding himself as the rightful ruler of the islands, could point, in confirmation of his title, to a long series of acknowledgments of his authority by all three treaty powers.

But it is impossible to ignore the fact that all the grounds for hostile action on the part of Germany above stated existed long prior to the meeting of the conference in this city, and some of them even anterior to its proposal, the acceptance of which was followed, as I was informed, by appropriate action to maintain the status quo in the islands. During all the sessions of the conference nothing was said to disturb this impression, nor was intimation given of any other course being contemplated when the conference was temporarily adjourned. first intimation of belligerent intent on the part of Germany against Malietoa was, as I have already stated, given to me by the German minister on the 29th of August last, five days after war was actually declared against him, and necessarily several weeks after it was determined upon; and my first notification that war had been declared and that Germany intended to depose Malietoa was also post factum, being given to me by the German minister on the 23d of September last, six days after the Samoan King was taken on board of the Bismarck.

This statement of recent occurrences should suffice to exhibit the earnest efforts of this Government to effect a peaceable settlement of Samoan affairs, honorable to all concerned, and just and equitable not only as between the treaty powers, but also as between them and the natives; and, further, to show that if those efforts have, after acceptance, been suddenly disregarded and defeated, the fact is one for which this Government can not be regarded as in any degree responsible.

Being solicitous, however, still to accomplish in the direction indicated all that the altered situation in Samoa would admit of, I sent identical telegraphic instructions on the 11th of October last to yourself and the United States minister at London stating that the United States consul-general at Apia reported a most distressing condition of affairs, which continued war would only make worse; that the consul had been instructed to observe strict neutrality, but this Government was anxious, pursuant to its treaty with Samoa, to urge a peaceful adjustment and considerate treatment of Samoans. You were further instructed to propose to the Governments to which you were respectively accredited the immediate election of a King and a Vice-King as agreed on in conference, and the issuance by the treaty powers of identical instructions to their representatives in the islands to promote such an election, leaving other measures which had been discussed, but not agreed upon, to be hereafter arranged.

Two days later I received from you a report that it was not understood at Berlin that a new election had been agreed on in conference, but that a new election had actually taken place.

Subsequently, I was informed by the United States minister at London that he had submitted my proposal to the British Government, but had withdrawn it, before receiving a reply thereto from Lord Salisbury, upon a report from you that an election had occurred.

How this misconception on the part of the German Government arose I am at a loss to understand. For at the first session of the conference the British and German ministers both proposed a new election of a King. The plan submitted by me, which was drawn up after a careful consideration of the report of the American special agent to Samoa, suggested the continued recognition of Malietoa, as most likely to insure a native Government at once stable and acceptable to the natives. But after hearing the objections of the German minister to that course, and his statements to show that Malietoa was supported only by a minority of the natives, I readily assented, at the second session of the conference, to the proposal made on the part of Germany, and concurred in on the part of Great Britain, that a new election of King should be held.

As proposed by the German minister, this election was "to be freely made by the chiefs and the people of Samoa." As put forward by the British minister the view of his Government was "that a fresh appeal should be made to the native population for the election of a new King." As assented to by me, the new election was to be a "native election, free and unawed." At the fifth session of the conference, the election also of a Vice-King was, by unanimous consent, placed among the agreed points, with a view to consulting native customs. And by reference to the protocols it will appear that throughout all the discussions the fundamental principle was kept in view and distinctly agreed upon and maintained that the election should be made freely by the natives themselves without the interference of any of the treaty powers or their representatives.

The recent installation of a new Government by the German consul is not considered by this Government as satisfying the conditions of that acknowledged principle; nor are they regarded as having been fulfilled by the subsequent signature, on the 15th of September, by Samoan chiefs, under the eye and direction of German representatives, of a paper acknowledging the Government which had been so set up, and which, as information derived from various sources has led me to conclude, is still upheld and controlled by those who brought it into existence.

In its general features it appears to be far more objectionable than the plan of government proposed by the German minister at the conference in this city. For, although that plan was one of foreign control of the islands, yet it carried with it the guaranties of the Imperial But the Government of Tamasese can be regarded as nothing else than the government of the islands by the local German commercial and landed interests, through Herr Brandeis, Tamasese's sole minister.

On the 1st of November last Baron von Zedtwitz, the German chargé d'affaires, called at this Department and made complaint that the American consul at Apia gave active expression to an anti-German policy by conduct in excess of his powers and competency, incompatible with neutrality, having, under the form of reference to municipal institutions "recognized by Germany and England, but not by the United States," arbitrarily intervened and liberated prisoners, and consequently compelled the commander of the German squadron to occupy Apia. the complaint closed with the request that the consul-general be set straight, and also instructed to observe a strictly neutral attitude in order that the evacuation of Apia by the German forces might be effected.

This reference to the idea of neutrality was not clear to me, as the deposition of Malietoa, which was the avowed purpose of Germany's declaration of war against him "personally," had already been accomplished.

He had not only been deposed, but was then actually a prisoner on a German ship of war, and a new government had been set up by the German consul in the place of that which had been maintained by Malietoa. The German occupation of Apia was, as then and now stated on German authority, at the request of the new government, for its own purposes, and not as an act of war on the part of Germany.

But the point that caused my greatest surprise was the objection made to the consul of the United States taking any part in the municipal government of Apia, and the statement that the municipal institutions were not recognized by the United States.

Less than a month previously complaint had been made to me by the German chargé d'affaires that the consul of the United States, in his capacity as member of this municipal board, had claimed jurisdiction for that body in a suit not properly belonging to it, but to the German consul independently; and I telegraphed instructions to the American eonsul not to assume control in that case, the jurisdiction of the municipal court over it being questionable.

While it is true that the United States had not become formally a party to the municipality convention, with the advice and consent of the Senate, yet, although this Government was not bound by treaty obligation in the matter, it had always given the municipal organization the fullest practical support and recognition, as an existent local government; and the American consul, being clothed by the laws of the United States and our original treaty with Samoa with judicial powers, had discharged through that organization, from its commencement eight years ago, judicial functions for the common advantage of all the treaty powers, and with their full assent and co-operation. Americans, as well as the members of other foreign nationalities represented in Apia, had paid taxes to support the municipal government. It is therefore difficult to understand why complaint against the grounds above stated.

At the present time the municipal government has been declared in abeyance by the German consul. It does not, however, appear to be disputed that the only reason avowed for the consul's action was the fact that the American consul, Mr. Sewall, was fifteen or twenty minutes late at a special meeting of the board, which was called for the hour of ten o'clock in the morning instead of the customary hour in the afternoon, and that when the government was so declared to be in abeyance for the alleged refusal of Mr. Sewall to attend he was on his way to and already near the place of meeting. It is admitted that the British consul stated to His Imperial Majesty's consul his "impression" that Mr. Sewall was coming to the meeting, and I have reason to believe that Her Majesty's consul might authoritatively have stated from Mr. Sewall himself a positive assurance that he was coming.

Immediately upon the municipal government being so declared in abeyance by the German consul, the German naval forces took possession of Apia upon the request of Tamasese, and on the ground of the absence just then, and in such manner created, of the regular form of government of the municipality.

The conclusion at which I am forced to arrive from this review of recent events in Samoa is that the present unfortunate situation there is due not to any action on the part of the representatives of the United States, but to the fomentation by interested foreigners of native dissensions, and to the desire exhibited in a marked degree by those in charge of local German interests to obtain personal and commercial advantages and political supremacy.

But this communication ought not to be concluded without the statement that, in the opinion of this Government, the course taken by Germany in respect to Samoa upon the temporary adjournment of the conference in this city, as above detailed, can not be regarded as having been marked by that just consideration which the ancient friendship between the United States and Germany entitles this Government to expect; that the present condition of affairs in the islands can not, in view of the circumstances under which it was brought about and is still maintained, be regarded by the United States as satisfactory; and that, to the end of creating a more acceptable situation in the islands, the native Government should be placed upon a basis more compatible with independence and impartiality in the discharge of its duties to all the treaty powers.

Prince Bismarck has referred in his note, as the German minister did in the conference, to "guaranties." to be demanded and obtained from the Samoan Government. Whenever these guaranties have been explained they have been found virtually to involve the foreign control of that Government, as was proposed in the German-Samoan convention of the 10th of November, 1884, and also in the plan presented by the Ger-

The ground upon which such control has been deemed essential is the weakness of the native Government. And it can not be doubted that if the Government of Samoa were now administered by any one of the treaty powers the islands would be governed more nearly in accordance with the forms and usages of civilized states, and order be better assured.

But, for the very reason that the native Government of Samoa is weak, it has seemed all the more clear to the United States that the control of the islands by any strong foreign power, or its representatives, would defeat the great object of securing native independence and autonomy, and the practical neutralization of the group. Under such control a native government would necessarily cease to have more than a nominal existence; the native element in the islands, deprived of voice and influence in the management of their affairs, would quickly succumb to the aggressive and exclusive tendencies of the foreign residents; and, under these circumstances, the islands would inevitably become a colony of the foreign power by which, or by whose representatives, the Government was actually administered. These general observations are made because, notwithstanding the efforts of the Government to state its views in respect to Samoa in a spirit of entire frankness, it has sometimes seemed that they had not been fully apprehended; or else that the Governments of the United States and Germany, while agreeing to the same general principles, differed as to their relative importance and the order in which they should be applied. Owing, doubtless, to her commercial preponderance in the islands, to Germany the primary object has seemed to be the establishment of a stronger government. To the United States, the object first in importance has seemed to be the preservation of native independence and autonomy. And so regarding the matter, this Government, while not questioning Germany's assurances of the absence of any intention on her part to annex or establish a protectorate over the islands, has been compelled to dissent from propositions which seemed to subordinate all other considerations to the strengthening of the German commercial and landed interests in the islands, and correspondingly to diminish, if not entirely to destroy, the probability of the establishment of a Samoan Government, and of the neutralization of the group, at least in respect to the powers now immediately concerned.

You are at liberty to communicate a copy of this instruction to the German Government.

I am, etc.,

Complaint of Malietoa.

Capital of Samoa, Mulinuu, July 14, 1881.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have now to inform your excellency of my present opinion, because there is peace in these islands on account of the United States man-of-war, and all the war parties have dispersed and gone to their respective homes. There is peace in Samoa. All Samoa is united in this peace, and joined with the Vice-King. But I now inquire of you, what is the meaning of the thing done by the German man-of war last night—the violent seizure of guns and the putting of men in prison?

It is the custom in Samoa when peace is proclaimed that there is peace in all things, and all men are free, as though Samoan imprisonment were prohibited, and they are released, and all Samoa is caused to rejoice; but the thing done last night meant persecution, and not love and joy. That thing was bad, when Samoa had peace through America, by which Samoa has been joined together.

May you live! I am,

MALIETOA, The King of Samoa.

To His Excellency Thomas M. Dawson, United States Consul.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, January 30, 1888. (Received February 13.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 545, of the 1st ultimo, relating to an outbreak of trichinosis in Germany, I have now the honor to transmit herewith, accompanied by translations, two articles, taken from Berlin newspapers, containing reports, which have not been contradicted, of further alarming outbreaks in this country of the disease referred to. Some one hundred and ninety persons appear to have been thus far attacked by the disease in the present outbreaks, and there is no allegation that they have been occasioned by the consumption of other than domestic pork.

I have, etc.,

GEO. H. PENDLETON.

GÖRLITZ, January 23.

Trichinosis has continued to spread in the Saxon boundary region. The attacks of the disease are no longer confined to Obercunewalde, but have also occurred in Oppach, Lawalde, Beiersdorf, Lauba, Halbau, etc. The number of persons attacked is already over one hundred; but three cases have as yet resulted fatally. As regards the origin of the disease it is said that a butcher of Obercunewalde, on Christmas Eve, made to his customers a present of smoked sausages, in the preparation of which meat containing trichinæ had been used. In all the families which had received and eaten those sausages attacks of the disease occurred.

SAXONY, January 26. (Own correspondence.) In view of the visitations of epidemics of the trichinosis with which several places in Saxony have of late been afflicted, the local authorities (Amtshauptmannschaft) at Plauen, i. V., have recently issued a decree urgently recommending to the individual communities of the district the introduction of obligatory examination for trichinosis. In Ober-Cunewalde the persons attacked by the disease have attained to the number of about 170, and 9 deaths have hitherto occurred. At the village of Obersachsenfeld, near Schwarzenberg, a new epidemic of trichinosis has broken out, resulting as yet in the occurrence of 20 cases of the disease. At Ober-Cunewalde a committee has been formed to aid the poor among the persons attacked.

translation, of the original law as it finally passed the Reichstag. It has been prolonged several times without material change in its provisions. The amendments propose to give the additional power to deprive offenders of the rights of citizens and to expel them from the Empire, and also to affix a punishment to the offense of a German who, in a foreign country, participates in an assembly held for the purpose of promoting socialistic ends. The prevalent opinion, as expressed by the press of Berlin, is that the additional powers and punishments will not be granted by the Reichstag, but that the law substantially in its present form will be extended.

[Inclosure in No. 574.—Translation.]

Law concerning the prolongation of the period of activity of the law of October 21, 1878, against the endeavors, constituting a common danger, of the social democracy. We, William, by the grace of God German Emperor, King of Prussia, etc., decree in the name of the Empire, the assent of the Bundesrath and of the Reichstag having been first obtained, as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The duration of the law of October 21, 1878, against the endeavors, constituting a common danger, of the social democracy (Imperial Law Gazette, page 351), is hereby prolonged until September 30, 1893.

ARTICLE II.

The sections 19 and 22, subdivision 1, are amended as these provisions are below stated under the figures heretofore used:

Sec. 19. Whoever circulates, continues, or reprints a prohibited printed document (sections 11, 12), or a printed document provisionally seized (section 15), is punishable with a pecuniary fine up to 1,000 marks or with imprisonment up to a year.

It will be considered equivalent to circulation when a prohibited printed document is exposed or kept ready for the use of persons sojourning there, in a place of sale, in a drinking saloon, or in any other open place.

SEC. 22. Subdivision 1. Persons who make a business of agitation in behalf of the endeavors designated in section 1, subdivision 2, shall, in case of conviction for contraventions of sections 17 to 20, be punished with imprisonment of not less than two years. In addition to the imprisonment the admissibility of limitation of sojourn may be adjudged.

ARTICLE III.

After the sections 22 and '25 of the law of October 21, 1878, the following sections, 22a and 25a, shall be inserted: SEC. 22a. The admissibility of the limitation of sojourn under the conditions and with the effects provided in section 22, subdivision 2 and 3, can be adjudged when a judgment on the basis of section 129 of the penal code ensues, and it is established that the condemned has participated in an association having for one of its purposes and occupations to prevent or make ineffectual the execution of this law, or of measures of the administration relating to its execution.

In the above-designated case, as also in the case of section 22, subdivision 1, when judgment has ensued on account of contravention of section 19, or participation as a member in a prohibited association (section 17, subdivision 1), the admissibility of the deprivation of state citizenship may be also adjudged.

Such judgment confers upon the central authority of the state to which the condemned belongs the right to declare the latter to have forfeited his citizenship and to expel him from the territory of the Empire. Such judgment at the same time confers upon the police authority of the country the right to limit the sojourn of the condemned under the conditions and with the effect designated in section 22, subdivisions 2 and 3.

Persons who, pursuant to the foregoing provisions, have been declared to have forfeited their citizenship in one of the states of the Empire also lose the same in every other such state, and can not without the assent of the Bundesrath, re-acquire state citizenship in any state of the Empire.

Whoever having, pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 3, been expelled from the territory of the Empire, shall return to the same without permission, is punishable with imprisonment of from one month to three years.

SEC. 25a. The participation of a German in an assemblage which takes place without the territory of the Empire for the purpose of promoting the endeavors designated in section 1, subdivision 2, is punishable with imprisonment. In addition to imprisonment, the admissibility of deprivation of state citizenship may be adjudged (section 22a, subdivision 3 to 5).

The real motives producing this publication now, after about nine years, are very much discussed all over the continent and in Great The suggestions are as numerous and different as the writers. The peace party is of the opinion that the publication will aid the cause of peace by showing how purely defensive the alliance really was and is, and yet how closely it will bring together the allied Governments in case of attack, thus at the same time ministering to the susceptibilities of the Czar, and warning him of the magnitude of the contest he will enter upon. The Reichs und Staats-Anzeiger publishes to-day the following:

The Governments of Germany and the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy have determined to publish their treaty of alliance, concluded on the 7th of October, 1879, in order to to publish their treaty of alliance, concluded on the 7th of October, 1879, in order to put an end to the doubts as to its purely defensive objects, which are entertained in various quarters, and which are made to serve divers purposes. The policy of both the allied Governments is guided by the desire to preserve peace, and obviate breaches thereof to the best of their ability. They are convinced that the divulgation of the contents of their treaty of alliance will dispel every doubt on the subject, and therefore they have resolved to publish it. The text is as follows:

Whereas their Majesties the German Emperor, King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, must regard it as their imperative duty as monarchs to have a care in all circumstances for the security of their realms, and the repose of

have a care in all circumstances for the security of their realms, and the repose of their peoples; and whereas both monarchs—as during the federal relationship which previously existed between them—will be enabled to fulfill this duty more easily and effectually by the steadfast co operation of both their Empires; and whereas, finally, such a close connection between Germany and Austria-Hungary can threaten no one, but is rather calculated to consolidate the peace of Europe, as it was established by the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin:

Now, therefore, their Majesties the Emperor of Germany and the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, while solemnly promising to each other that they will never attach an aggressive meaning in any direction to their purely defensive agreement, have resolved to conclude a pact of peace and a mutual defense, and for this purpose they have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

His Majesty the German Emperor, his envoy extraordinary and ambassador plenipotentiary Lieutenant-General Prince Henry VII Reuss, etc.;
His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, his actual privy councillor, minister of the imperial house and of foreign affairs, Field-Marshal Lieut. Julius Count Andrassy, of Csik-Szent-Király and Kraszna-Horka, etc.;
Who have met this day at Vienna and after exchange of their full powers, which were found good and sufficient, have agreed as follows, to wit:

ARTICLE I.

If, contrary to the hope and against the sincere wish of both the high contracting parties, one of the two Empires should be attacked by Russia then the high contracting parties bind themselves to assist each other with the entire military power of their Empires, and accordingly only to conclude peace by common agreement.

ARTICLE II.

Should one of the high contracting parties be attacked by another power, then the other high contracting party hereby binds itself not only not to assist the assailant of its high ally, but also at least to observe an attitude of benevolent neutrality towards its high co-party. But if, nevertheless, in such an event the attacking power should be supported by Russia, whether in the form of active co-operation or by military measures involving menace to the attacked, then the obligation of mutual assistance with full military power, stipulated for in Article I of this treaty, shall in this case immediately come into force, and then, also, the military operations of both the high contracting parties shall be conducted in common until they conclude a peace in common.

ARTICLE III.

In consideration of its pacific character and in order to obviate all misunderstanding, this treaty shall be kept secret by the high contracting parties, and be communicated to a third power by agreement of both sides only, and on the strength of a special understanding. In view of the sentiments expressed by the Emperor Alexander on the occasion of the meeting at Alexandrovo, both the high contracting parties surrender themselves to the hope that the armaments of Russia will in reality not prove to be menacing to them, and for the present, therefore, they have no occasion to make a communication. But should this hope, contrary to expectation, turn out to be erroneous, then the high contracting parties would look upon it as a duty of loyalty to give the Emperor Alexander, confidentially at least, to understand that they would consider an attack against one of them as directed against them both.

In witness whereof the plenipotentiaries have hereto affixed their signatures and seals.

Mr. Pendleton to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, February 21, 1888. (Received March 12.)

SIR: Referring to your instruction No. 284 of the 30th ultimo, I beg to state that no German law appears to exist which prohibits the manufacture of "Spielmarken," as such, alleged in the inclosures accompanying your instruction to be largely imported into the United States, and there used for fraudulent purposes. Pieces of metal having a superficial resemblance to the coins of this country, and called "Spielmarken," are in very general use here as counters or tokens in card playing and in other games, and it does not appear that any objection to their manufacture has been raised by the authorities. With respect to the "Spielmarken" referred to in your instruction and its inclosures as representing closely in size, color, and partly in design the several gold coins of the United States, different views as to the permissibility of their manufacture might be taken by the German authorities if an opportunity to inspect the particular ones complained of were afforded them.

From an examination of the laws, it would appear that liability to punishment for the manufacture in this country of "Spielmarken" would depend upon the exactness of the imitation and the intent with which they were made; in short, a case of counterfeiting of coinage would have to be made out.

Under the title of "Crimes and misdemeanors affecting coinage," sections 146 to 152, inclusive, of the Imperial Penal Code, make what would appear to be ample provision for the punishment of counterfeiting, imitating with fraudulent intent all domestic and foreign coinage, paper money, and a large variety of securities regarded as the equivalent of paper money, as well as for the punishment of the making of and procuring and having in possession with fraudulent intent, dies, plates, etc., to be used in manufacturing the same. Section 4 of that code even goes so far as to declare a foreigner counterfeiting foreign money in a foreign country liable to the penalties imposed for the crimes (not for the misdemeanors) affecting coinage in the sections above cited.

As regards the inquiry relating to postage-stamps: Under the title of "Forgery of documents," sections 275 and 276 of the code referred to impose punishment for the use of counterfeited postage, revenue, and other stamps, provided the person using them does so with the knowledge that they are counterfeits, and also for the manufacture of the same with the purpose of using them as genuine. The word "foreign" is not used in the statute in this instance, and there seems to be some doubt as to the intention of the law in this case and the liability to punishment for the act as affecting foreign stamps, although, as I am informed, one judicial decision (not by the supreme court) has been had declaring such liability to exist.

Under the title of "Trespasses (Übertretungen)," subdivision 4 of section 360 of the same code imposes punishment upon persons who, without being thereto empowered in writing by competent authority, manufacture or deliver to any one other than such competent authority dies, plates, etc., which may serve for the production of metallic or paper money, and of other values, among which postage stamps are, however, not included, designated as equivalent to paper money in section 149 of the code. Subdivision 5 of section 360, above mentioned, imposes the same penalty upon persons making impressions from such dies, plates, etc., or delivering such impressions to any one except the competent authority. The following subdivision, No. 6 of the same section, imposes the same punishment upon persons who manufacture or put in circulation cards recommending wares, announcements, or other printed matter, or representations which in form or ornamentation resemble paper money, or the values designated as paper money in section 149, or who manufacture dies, plates, etc., which may serve for the production of the articles enumerated. It will be observed that the statute here speaks of representations which in form and color resemble paper money and its equivalent only, and not of such as resemble metallic money-"Spielmarken," for instance.

To recapitulate: The manufacture of "Spielmarken," as such, is not prohibited; the counterfeiting of foreign as well as of domestic metallic and paper money, and of values to be regarded as the equivalent of paper money, is prohibited; the use, with the knowledge of their being counterfeits, and the manufacture, with the purpose of using them as genuine, of domestic and (in the light afforded by one judicial decision) of foreign postage stamps is prohibited; the manufacture of cards, etc., which in form and ornamentation resemble paper money or its equivalent, is prohibited with respect to domestic and, presumably, with respect to foreign paper money and its equivalent, although no judicial interpretation of the statute on the latter point is known to the lega-

In conclusion, I beg to suggest that, if feasible, samples of the "Spielmarken" and of the "imitations of coins, postage stamps, and other obligations of foreign governments and of our own, in full size and in miniature and of exactappearance of genuine issues', which are stated in an inclosure to your instruction to be imported into the United States from Germany, their importation leading to great abuse and injury, to be furnished for the purpose by the chief of the secret service division of the Treasury Department, be transmitted to this legation, together with such representations as may be deemed necessary and appropriate, for submission to this Government.

Such action would, perhaps, lead to the prosecution of offenders; to the testing of the intendment, where doubtful, of the German laws relating to this subject; to their amendment if found necessary in the interest of justice; and to the ultimate punishment of the manufacturers and suppression of the manufactures complained of, if the latter are found to be unlawful.

I have, etc.,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 585.] Berlin, February 22, 1888. (Received March 12.)

SIR: There appeared at this legation yesterday a passport applicant, bearing a "minor's certificate of citizenship" issued by the probate court of Montgomery County, at Dayton, Ohio, on October 20, 1887, to one Frank Kessel, and made under oath the usual statements exacted from all naturalized passport applicants.

In his affidavit, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, together with a copy of the "minor's certificate of citizenship" above mentioned, the applicant in question swears that he was born in Germany on June 13, 1855; that he emigrated to the United States in 1882, arriving at Baltimore in May of that year; that he was naturalized as a citizen of the United States before the probate court of Montgomery County, at Dayton, Ohio, on the 20th day of October, 1887, as shown by the certificate of naturalization submitted by him; that he is "the identical person referred to in said certificate;" that he last left America in November, 1887, and that he intends to return to the United States in about one year, with a purpose of residing and performing the duties of citizenship there. He desires the passport for the purpose of satisfying the police authorities here, who require passports of almost all foreigners who remain in Berlin for more than a few weeks.

By comparing Kessel's affidavit and his citizen papers it will be observed that one or the other must be wrong, for in his affidavit he swears to having emigrated to the United States in 1882, when he was nearly twenty-seven years of age; whereas in his certificate of naturalization it is stated that it was proven to the satisfaction of the court by the oaths of two men, therein named, "that he (Frank Kessel) resided in said United States three years next preceding his arrival at the age of twenty-one years," which would have rendered unnecessary a previous "declaration of intention."

Kessel maintains that this statement in his citizen paper is a mistake. He claims that he himself never swore to any such fact wittingly, and did not even know that it was so stated in his certificate. He claims also to have taken out a "first paper" naturalization at the same court at which he received his final paper, two years after his arrival in the United States, but that the said "first paper" was retained by that court on the delivery to him of his second or final paper.

Kessel appears to be an honest man and perfectly sincere and frank in his statements made at this office. I have advised him to write personally to some friend in Dayton, Ohio, or to the clerk of the probate court there, for certified copies of both of his papers of naturalization, or of the record of the court of his "declaration of intention" and of the decree of his final naturalization. This course was advised in view of the possibility of a clerical mistake having been made by the filling in of a wrong form of certificate of naturalization.

In view of the above facts, I have deemed it advisable to submit to you this application, with the accompanying documents, before issuing a passport to Kessel, in order that, after causing such inquiries to be made as you may think proper, you may instruct me in regard thereto, and also as to the disposition to be made of Kessel's original certificate of naturalization, at present retained by the legation.

Mr. Pendleton to Mr. Bayard.

No. 586.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Berlin, February 22, 1888. (Received March 12.)

SIR: Referring to my recent dispatches, Nos. 557 and 576,* relating to the then pending bill for the increase of the effective strength of the German army, I beg now to inform you that the measure which had, at the date of my last-mentioned dispatch, been adopted on its second reading has since been enacted en bloc and published as a law under date of the 11th instant.

Since the latter date a pamphlet has been published in this city, which contains, in addition to the law itself, heretofore transmitted to the Department, certain decrees of even date therewith, issued by the Emperor in execution of its provisions, and also an assortment of the blank forms to be used in its application.

With my dispatch No. 557, above referred to, I transmitted a tabular statement of the changes contemplated by the bill. In the light of the ordinances decreed in execution of the measure as since enacted, a better appreciation than was then possible is afforded of the bearing of the changes which have been made, and which, as stated by Prince Bismarck in his recent speech in the Reichstag, are expected to add some 700,000 men to the effective strength of the German army in time of war.

Military service in this country may be conveniently considered under three principal heads: (1) Service in the standing army, with its two grand subdivisions of service "with the flag," active present service and service with the reserves; (2) service with the Landwehr; and (3) service with the Landsturm.

In addition to the three above-enumerated phases of service there is that of the Ersatz-Reservisten (Replacement Reserves), consisting of men wholly or partially dispensed from present service on account of physical or mental unfitness or peculiar domestic relations; for instance, the dependency for her support of a widowed mother upon her only son. This exemption and the consequent assignment to the Ersatz-Reservisten may have existed from the time when the individual concerned first became liable to military service in general, or may have arisen, and such assignment taken place in the course of his service.

With respect to liability to service in the standing army as above defined the new law has made no changes whatever. Hence, hereafter, as has been the case heretofore, every capable German is required to serve in the standing army for the period of seven years, a period as a rule embraced between the completion of the twentieth and the commencement of the twenty-eighth year of his age, the first three years of such service being with the "flag;" the remaining four with the reserves. The new law has, on the other hand, materially modified the provisions heretofore existing with respect to service with the Landwehr, the Landsturm, and the Ersatz-Reservisten.

As regards the Landwehr, heretofore liability to this service existed as a rule for the period of five years, beginning with the completion of the service in the standing army and ending with the commencement of the thirty-second year of age. For the future this liability has been extended by a period of six years, by the creation of a Landwehr of the second levy (Zweites Aufgebot), so that a man henceforth remains liable to service in one or the other of the Landwehr levies until the 31st of March of that year in which he completes the thirty-ninth year of his age. In case the army is entered before the completion of the twentieth year, liability to service ceases at a correspondingly earlier age. To recapit. ulate, there are three years with the "flag," tour with the reserves, five with the Landwehr of the first, and six with the Landwehr of the second levy; in all, eighteen years thus far. The conditions of Landwehr service prescribed by the old are declared by the new law to apply to the Landwehr of the first levy as now constituted, whereas the propriety and necessity of securing to the members of the second levy certain advantages over the younger men composing the first levy has found expression in the new law and in the ordinances decreed pursuant to its provisions. Of these advantages the following are the principal: The men of the second Landwehr levy can not be required to appear for exercises or musters. Such reports respecting themselves as are necessary may be made in their behalf by members of their families, except in the case of the issue of a particular ordinance becoming necessary in time of war, or of danger of an outbreak of war. They need no permission to emigrate, but are only required to notify the appropriate military authority of their intention to do so, and if able to show by consular certificate that they have acquired, in a country situated outside of Europe, positions which assure them a livelihood, as merchants, artisans, etc., the leave of absence granted may be enlarged to an entire release from further military duty and the obligation of re-

As regards the Landsturm, heretofore all men not belonging to the army or the navy were liable to service with the Landsturm from their completed seventeenth to their completed forty-second year. By the new law liability to this service is extended over a further period of three years, until the completion of the forty-fifth year of age. vision of the Landsturm into two levies, as in the case of the Landwehr, has now also ensued. To the first levy belong for a period of seven years all owing Landsturm duty until the 31st of March of that year in which they complete the thirty-ninth year of their age. It may in this connection be remarked as strange that the Landsturm of the first levy and the Landwehr of the second levy remain liable for duty until the same period, viz, for the seven years preceding the completion of the thirty-ninth year of age. This is accounted for, however, by the different purpose which the two subserve. While the latter constitutes a part of the army taking the field, the Landsturm of the first levy, to which the whole mass of the imperfectly trained Ersatz-Reservisten and other disposable untrained men belong, is used solely to fill up the ranks of the army when necessary. To the second levy of the Landsturm belong the remaining six-year classes of older men; that is to say, all who have completed their Landwehr service with a total of eighteen years of liability up to that time, as before stated, enter at once into liability to serve in the second levy of the Landsturm, to be released from the same after the expiration of a further period of six years, the forty-fifth year of their age and the entire period of twenty five years of liability to any military service being then completed. The Landsturm, intended mainly to be used for defensive purposes, to repel invasion, could heretofore be employed only after all the year classes of the Landwehr and the available men belonging to the Ersatz Reservisten had been called out; now they may, in extraordinary emergencies, be used to supplement the strength of the army proper. Except when the Landsturm has been called out, those owing duty in the same are hereafter not to be subjected to any sort of military control or exercise. In case it is called out, however, which it may be under the new law by commanding generals in the contingency of immediate danger, otherwise only by imperial decree, its members are subjected to military, penal, and disciplinary laws. calling out of the first levy ensues by year classes, beginning, in so far as military necessities permit, with the youngest. Men owing Landsturm duty who are sojourning abroad must return home in case that body is called out unless they have been expressly exempted therefrom, which may be effected by consular certificates, as in the case of the Landwehr men. All who had completed their Landsturm period of duty before the entry into effect of the new law, as well as all Alsace-Lorraines born before 1851, although otherwise liable under that law, are expressly exempted from its operation, and are freed from Landsturm duty.

As regards the Ersatz-Reservisten, in the earlier part of this report these were defined as men exempted from present service on account of physical or mental unfitness, peculiar domestic relations, and other grounds. Heretofore they were divided into two classes. The first consisted of partially trained men who had not completed the thirty-second year of their age, of which category an aggregate of the classes for five years sufficed to fill the ranks of the army on a war footing in case of The second class consisted of men wholly dispensed from service in time of peace on account of imperfect physical or mental ability. Under the new law there will hereafter be but one class of Ersatz-Reservisten, which will consist of the men belonging to the first class under the old law as above defined, whereas those belonging to the second class as heretofore constituted are in future to be assigned to the Landsturm of the first levy. Liability to service as Ersatz-Reservisten extends over a period of twelve years, reckoned from the 1st of October of the year when liability begins, from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of age. At the first annual spring "control-muster" following the expiration of this period those Ersatz-Reservisten who have had the benefit of military training are assigned to the Landwehr of the second levy, the rest to the Landsturm of the first levy.

GERMANY.

From the preceding statements respecting the newly established military system, it will be perceived that a German will henceforth be liable to serve in one or another phase of the performance of military duty for the period of twenty-five years, embraced as a rule, between his completed twentieth and his completed forty fifth year of age. In time of peace it is, however, it should be borne in mind, a question of liability to service, and not of service itself, except as regards the initial three-year period of active performance of duty with the "flag" and a few subsequent periods of not more than two weeks duration each, when he is called out for military exercises. If there be no war and no mobilization during the period of liability to service of the individual German, he will perform no service other than as above stated. If, however, there be war throughout that entire period he will, while capable, perform service throughout that entire period.

The increase in the number of men that will be available for military purposes under the new law has been estimated, as before stated, at Of this number some 500,000, derived from the extension of Landwehr duty by the creation of a second levy, embracing six-year classes of trained men, will be available for service with the armies The remaining 200,000, representing three year classes taking the field. of trained men available for defensive purposes, will accrue from the extension of liability to Landsturm service, from the forty-second to the forty-fifth year of age. The amount of some 278,000,000 marks, appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the new law, will be largely used in equipping and arming the Landsturm men, with respect to whom the chancellor of the Empire declared, in his recent speech, that these fathers of families, men of over thirty years of age, this best human material afforded by the German nation, should be clad in the best clothing and armed with the very best arms, and not sent to battle, as had heretofore sometimes been the case, with arms that were not good enough for their younger brethren, the troops of the

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the originals and translations of a proclamation to the people of Germany, and an open letter to Prince Bismarck, as the head of the ministry, both made public last Monday by the Emperor Frederick III, immediately after his arrival at Charlottenburg last Sunday evening. It seems to me that there is a noble frankness about both documents, delineating a policy to be pursued by the acceding Emperor, full of promise for the German people, and extremely creditable to him.

Proclamation of the Emperor.

TO MY PEOPLE:

The Emperor has completed his glorious life.

In the much-beloved father whom I weep, and whom, with me, my royal house mourns with profoundest grief, Prussia's faithful people has lost its fame-crowned King, the German nation the founder of its unity, the re-established Empire the first

His revered name will remain inseparably connected with the greatness of the German fatherland, in whose recreation the persevering labor of Prussia's people and prince has found its brightest reward.

In elevating with never-tiring sovereign care the Prussian army to the height of its grave mission, King William laid the sure foundation for the victories won by German arms under his guidance, which led to national unity. He assured thereby to the Empire a position for which every German, until then, yearned, but hardly dared to hope.

What he achieved for his people in hot, sacrifice-entailing conflicts, it was vouchsafed to him to strengthen and promote by long years of laborious work in times of

Secure in the consciousness of her own strength, Germany stands respected in the council of the nations, craving only to be permitted to enjoy the peaceful development of what he has achieved.

The accomplishment of this we owe to Emperor William-to his never-wavering fidelity to duty, to his unceasing activity, consecrated only to the welfare of the fatherland, supported by the self-sacrificing, undeviating devotion shown by the Prussian people, and shared by all branches of the German race.

Upon me have now devolved all the rights and duties which are connected with the crown of my house, and which, during such time as God's will may allot to my reign,

I am determined to faithfully observe.

Profoundly impressed with the magnitude of my task, my sole endeavor will be to continue the work in the sense in which it was begun; to make Germany a stronghold of peace, and in accord with the united Governments as well as the constitutional bodies of the Empire and Prussia to promote the welfare of the German land.

In my faithful people, which, throughout centuries of history, in good as in evil days, has stood by my house, I place my unreserved trust. For I am conviced that upon the foundations of the unseparable bond between prince and people, which, independently of all changes in the life of the state, constitutes the imperishable inheritance of the Hohenzollern race, my crown will ever as securely rest as does the prosperity of the country to whose government I have been called, and to which I promise to be a just and faithful King, in joy as in sorrow.

May God grant me blessing and strength for this work to which my life shall henceforth be dedicated.

Emperor Frederick III to Prince Bismarck.

MY DEAR PRINCE: At the commencement of my reign it is a necessity for me to turn to you, the first servant, well tried through many years, of my father, who now rests in God.

You are the true and courageous counselor who gave form to the aims of his policy and secured their successful accomplishment.

To you, I and my house remain indebted with warmest thanks.

You, above all, have therefore the right to know the stand-points which will be the guiding principle in the conduct of my Government.

The constitution and laws of the Empire and of Prussia must above all rest on the veneration and morals of the nation. The concussions which frequent changes in State institutions and laws produce are, therefore, to be avoided when possible.

The promotion of the aims of the Imperial Government must leave undisturbed the firm foundation upon which the Prussian state has hitherto securely rested.

In the Empire the constitutional rights of all the united governments must be as conscientiously respected as those of the Reichstag; but from both the same respect for the rights of the Emperor are to be expected. At the same time it must be borne in mind that these reciprocal rights are intended only to promote the public welfare, which remains the supreme law, and that newly appearing undoubted national needs must always receive the full measure of attention they deserve.

The necessary and surest guaranty of the unimpeded execution of these tasks I see in the undiminished maintenance of the defensive power of the country, of my tried army, and of the promising navy, upon which important duties devolve in consequence of our acquisition of possessions beyond seas; both must at all times be at the height of excellence and of porfection in consequence. height of excellence and of perfection in organization, which has founded their fame

I am determined to conduct the Government in the Empire, as in Prussia, with a conscientious observance of the provisions of the constitutions of each. These have been founded by my predecessors on the throne in a wise appreciation of the unquestionable needs and of the difficult problem of social and state existence, and must be respected by all in order that their strength and efficacy may be assured.

I intend that the principles of religious toleration which have been for centuries held sacred by my house shall continue to protect all my subjects, to whatever religious sect or confession they may belong. Each of them stands equally near to my heart; have not all equally shown complete devotion in times of danger?

In unison with the views of my Imperial father, I shall warmly support all efforts calculated to further the economic prosperity of the various classes of society, to reconcile conflicting interests, to alleviate to the best of my ability unavoidable evils, without, however, encouraging the idea of the possibility of putting an end to the ills of society by the intervention of the State,

As closely connected with the social questions, I regard that of the education of youth. If, on the other hand, higher culture is to be made accessible to larger circles, we must avoid the creation of serious dangers by superficial education, which gives rise to ambitions which the economic resources of the nation can not satisfy, and at the same time take care that misdirected efforts for higher culture do not lead to neglect of suitable education.

Only a generation growing up on the basis of the fear of God, with simplicity of morals, will possess sufficient powers of resistance to overcome the dangers which, in a time of rapid economic activity, arise for the entire community through the examples of habits of exaggerated luxury in individuals. It is my will that no opportunity be less to express in the approximate the terminate of the standard disconnection to tunity be lost to oppose in the public service the temptation to disproportionate

The right of self-government accorded to the greater and lesser communities in the state I regard as beneficial; on the other hand, I submit for consideration whether the right to impose taxes conferred on these communities, and exercised by them, without sufficient regard for the burdens imposed at the same time by the Empire and state, may not disproportionately bear upon individuals.

It will in like manner have to be considered whether, in the organization of authorities, a simplifying change appears admissible through which a diminution of the number of the employed would make an increase in their compensation possible.

Should we succeed in preserving in their strength the foundations of state and social existence, it will afford me peculiar satisfaction to promote to full development the richest flowers which German art and science put forth.

For the realization of these my intentions I reckon on your oft-proven devotion and the assistance of your tried experience.

May it thus be vouchsafed to me, acting in unison with the Imperial bodies, with the devoted activity of the representatives of the people and of all the authorities, and with the trustful co-operation of all classes of the population, to lead Germany and Prussia to new honors in the domain of peaceful development.

Regardless of glory, of renown-bringing deeds, I shall be content if it can be some

No. 595.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, March 20, 1888. (Received April 2.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith and to submit for your consideration the entire correspondence* with the consul-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main, and with Mr. Samuel R. Honey, of Rhode Island, touching the income tax levied upon the wife of Mr. Honey, temporarily residing with her daughter at Frankfort-on-the-Main.

It appears that Mrs. Honey is in receipt of a monthly allowance from her husband to defray her own and her daughter's expenses.

The collection of the tax first levied was successfully resisted by the consul-general on the ground that the residence in Frankfort permitted by the law with freedom from taxation had not then been continued for the year.

When the second levy was made, the consul-general contested the legality of the tax on the several grounds that Mrs. Honey was a married woman; that she had no independent income or property, and that the allowance of a monthly sum by her husband for her support could not be called her income. The position and argument appear to have been stated with such force and zeal by Mr. Mueller that he was partially or wholly successful, but as the lady was residing in Germany and the money for her expenditure, by whatever name called, came within the jurisdiction periodically, the assessment seems to have been somewhat changed, and now to appear as made against either the money or Mr. Honey. To this, objection is made that Mr. Honey is not domiciled, or even temporarily sojourning in Germany, and that he and his property of all kinds are taxed in Rhode Island.

It seemed to me that all the questions involved were judicial ones, proper for the consideration of the legal tribunals of Germany, and that, as grave differences of opinion as to the proper interpretation of the law existed between the consul-general and Mr. Honey on the one side and the tax-assessing officials on the other, it was a case in which those tribunals should be at least primarily invoked for an authoritative interpretation, and that at this stage the subject was not one for diplomatic intervention. I therefore advised the consul-general and Mr. Honey to exhaust the legal remedies by proper proceedings in the courts. For some reason, not very clearly expressed, this course has seemed distasteful to Mr. Honey, and, as I should infer from his last two letters, to have been rejected. Those letters seem also to close his correspondence with the legation. There is no reason to doubt the intelligence and impartiality of these courts. If their decision should accord with the contention on the part of the consul-general and Mr. Honey, the whole subject would be satisfactorily and finally disposed of. If they should affirm the validity of the assessment, the facts as found and the law as authoritatively stated might be reported to the Department for such action as it might deem proper.

I beg to express the hope that my course in this case will meet the approval of the Department. There has not been time in preparing the copies of the correspondence for this mail to translate the accompaniments to inclosures Nos. 5 and 9, which are in German. I shall inform Mr. Honey that I have submitted the whole correspondence in this case to the Department.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Frankfort-on-the-Main, February 25, 1887.

SIR: I beg to say that I am well acquainted with Mrs. Honey, and that she has consulted me some weeks ago about the tax question; and upon the views expressed to her by me she felt satisfied that nothing was to fear on that account during the first year of her stay in Frankfort. No demand for the listment or payment of taxes has been made upon her, and it is not likely that the attempt will be made to exact income or other taxes from her before expiration of one year at least. The rule has been generally practiced by the fiscal authorities in Frankfort and southern German States that taxation of foreigners should begin after a residence of one year, and whenever efforts to the contrary have been made within my jurisdiction I have always succeeded to check and counteract them.

In the case of Mrs. Honey I am inclined to hold that she can not be held to pay taxes even after the lapse of one year. Her husband's home in Rhode Island is her legal domicile, and her residence here is a mere temporary and transitory one, conferring no right upon fiscal authorities to subject her to the payment of income taxes. Other arguments are that no income-tax law prevails in the United States, and that Mrs. Honey has no income. The money expended by her is her husband's money, and constitutes a part of his and not of her income.

You may be assured that I shall protect Mrs. Honey against any and all encroachments upon her rights as an American citizen.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Frankfort-on-the-Main, January 30, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to your consideration a letter just received from Mrs. Honey, dated this day.

The tax matter, referred to by Mrs. Honey in her letter, has occupied my attention for some time. The local tax-assessing officials at first intended to levy an income tax against Mrs. Honey, upon the ground that she had lived in Frankfort more than a year, and after I had demonstrated to them that under the income tax law a married woman, native or foreign, could not be taxed, they, in admitting that fact, turned around and levied an income tax against Mr. Honey, although he, as conceded, has never resided in Germany. Against this levy, preposterous as it seems to me, I availed myself, in the name of Mr. Honey, of the remedy provided for in the tax law by filing a remonstrance with the "Einkommensteuer-Einschätzungs-Kommission," and upon their decision of December, adverse to Mr. Honey's protest, I, in the name of Mr. Honey, addressed a "remonstrance" to the "Bezirks-Commission" on January 14 last, but have failed as yet to obtain a decision thereon.

It was my purpose first to exhaust the remedies under the income-tax law, before I should lay the case before you, but Mrs. Honey has become exceedingly irritated and excited by the tribulation and intrusions of the tax collector that I felt in duty bound to accede to her request, and to respectfully ask for your advice and assist-

To show the disposition of these tax-collecting officials toward Mrs. Honey, it will be sufficient to refer to the fact that said officials entered, as I think unwarrantably, rooms occupied by Mrs. Honey and her daughter, and then and there made a levy upon the furniture owned by the house mistress and only in use and possession of Mrs.

Honey as tenant thereof.

The inclosed copies of my correspondence* with the proper fiscal authorities and the answer of the Einschätzungs Commission of December 21 last, show distinctly that the proper authorities had distinct knowledge of the fact that a reclamation was pending and that Mr. Honey, against whom the tax execution was issued, was an American citizen and an actual resident of Rhode Island, and not of Frankfort, and that neither Mrs. Honey nor her personal property could under any circumstances be made liable to the payment of an alleged tax debt of her husband.

In conclusion, dear sir, permit me to say that Mr. Honey, attorney at law and lieutenant-governor of Rhode Island, when he was here on a visit last summer, made it his special request that any attempt to levy an income tax against him or his wife should be resisted for financial reasons as well as on account of the great principle

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA Berlin, January 31, 1888.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 30th instant, relating to the income tax assessed by the Frankfort authorities against the supplies of money transmitted by Mr. Samuel R. Honey to his wife for the maintenance of herself and daughter in that city, after a period of residence there exceeding one year, the legation informs you as follows:

You are quite right in adopting the remedies against supposed improper assessment provided by German law, and they should be exhausted if necessary, in order that it may be definitely ascertained what the latter, as applied to the particular case is.

This legation has been heretofore informed by the Department of State, in an instruction relating to the liability to taxation of Americans in Germany, that "as a general rule the power to impose taxes is an attribute of sovereignty, and when the person or the property in question is a proper subject of taxation, the species of tax and the amount which should be collected may fairly be left to the state or government exercising this power."

I remain, etc.,

C. COLEMAN.

P. S.—We beg to add, that as the laws regarding taxation in this country are understood at this legation, a protest against an assessment does not suffice to arrest proceedings for the collection of the tax imposed, but that the collected tax is refunded when the party protesting is successful on appeal.

In regard to the seal attached by the authorities to the sofa belonging to Mrs. Honey's landlady, it seems clear that the same must be removed, if this has not already taken place, upon the demand of the latter.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Berlin, February 1, 1888.

SIR: Following up my letter of vesterday the minister desires me to say to you again that in his opinion you have taken the proper view of this tax question as regards Mr. and Mrs. Honey, viz, that the question is purely one of Prussian law; that if by Prussian law either Mr. or Mrs. Honey is liable to assessment for income tax, and the property of either coming within the Prussian jurisdiction may be seized for the satisfaction of the tax, there does not thus far appear to be any valid objection to such law as a breach of international law.

You seem also to have presented with force and cogency your view of the proper interpretation of the income-tax law.

The minister would advise that the case should be presented to the legal tribunals in the most effective manner, by very competent attorneys, in order that the true interpretation may in the last resort be judicially and finally determined. Then if a case shall be made proper for diplomatic intervention, the Department of State at Washington will doubtless instruct this legation to take such course as to it shall seem best.

If Mrs. Honey has no ownership or other legal interest in the furniture already seized or proposed to be seized, it would seem that an intervention on behalf of the real owner not charged to be implicated in the tax claim would surely be effective for its release. It can scarcely be the desire of this Government to attach or jeopard the property of a person in nowise liable to the tax.

The whole subject of income taxation was maturely considered and acted on by the Government of the United States during the years of the war, and precedents for the taxation of non-residents and aliens, and levies on property or moneys within the jurisdiction may be found.

I trust most sincerely that your view of the meaning of the law may be sustained by the judicial tribunals and the case in this way satisfactorily adjusted.

Your obedient servant,

uning.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Berlin, February 1, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I have received your telegram of the date of yesterday. I had already had some correspondence with the consul-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main on the subject, and to-day sent him an additional letter, of which I take the liberty to inclose a copy. Obviously the first thing necessary is to have an authoritative interpretation of the income-tax law of Prussia, and afterwards to determine whether the law so interpreted is in conflict with the international law. If it shall appear to be so, the Department of State will doubtless instruct me.

The effect of a protest or reclamation here, as in most other countries, I imagine, is not to stop the enforcement of the law as the officials understand it, but to lay the foundation for a reversal or revision of their decision and the refunding of the money, if it shall appear that too large a sum has been paid.

I notice you speak of the furniture attached as being that of your wife, whilst in the statement of Mr. Mueller it is constantly spoken of as being not her's, but her landlady's.

You may rest assured that I will with great pleasure do whatever I can to secure justice to Mrs. Honey.

Consul-General Mueller appears to have been very prompt and intelligent in presenting Mrs. Honey's case.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Pendleton.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 30, 1888.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of a dispatch from the United States consul-general at Apia of the 24th of February last, in relation to the seizure by the German consul of the pilot-house there, which is built on land the right to the possession of which is in a citizen of the United States, named William Coe.

It appears that the land was leased to Coe by Chief Patiole, on August 6, 1884, for a period of fifteen years. The title to the land had previously been recognized by the municipal government to be in Patiole, and after the making of the lease referred to, the then municipal board treated Coe as the rightful possessor and paid rent to him for the use of the land as a site for the pilot station. It further appears that subsequently, on the 19th of March, 1885, Coe received a regular deed of the property from Patiole.

These facts are undisputed and seem to make the title of Mr. Coe clear and incontestable. It appears, however, that the German consul, Mr. Becker, not being able to obtain a satisfactory lease of the pilothouse from Coe to the Tamasese Government, in place of the lease that Coe had made to the late municipal government, has taken possession of the premises and set up a title to them in the German company, of which Mr. Weber is the head. The only basis for this pretended title is a general mortgage on Patiole's land (of which he had considerable in addition to that now in controversy) given by him to the German company in February, 1885, to run for three years. Such a lien clearly ought not to be made the basis of a denial of Mr. Coe's prior title to the possession of the land, a title to which has been undisputed and which the German consul, far from questioning, expressly acknowledged until he suddenly took possession of the property. Admitting what is by no means clear, that the general mortgage, which was subsequent to the lease, applied, or was understood to apply, to the land in the possession of Mr. Coe, such a lien could form no justification for the action of the German consul in dispossessing Mr. Coe, whose prior title and possession, derived from the person who afterwards made a mortgage to the German company, could not be affected by such a transaction.

As a fact, it is doubtful whether the mortgage ever applied in any sense to the land in the possession of Mr. Coe, and this doubt is confirmed by the circumstance that when Chief Patiole died in January last, and the German company gave notice of its claim by posting pla-cards on his lands, none was given in reference to the pilot-house property, and Mr. Coe's title was unchallenged.

You are instructed to bring this case at once to the attention of the Imperial Government and to endeavor to obtain a speedy settlement of the difficulty created by the German consul's action.

No. 93.1

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Apia, Samoa, February 24, 1888.

SIR: Referring to my dispatch numbered 91, dated February 1, I have the honor to inclose copies of further correspondence* with the German consul relative to the pilot station, and to report as follows:

After my letters to Mr. Becker of January 31 and February 1, it was brought to my After my letters to Mr. Becker of January 31 and reordary 1, it was brought to my attention by the legal representative of Mr. Coe that among certain properties deeded to me by Coe on the 27th of December last, pending the settlement of matters in dispute between him and Messrs. McArthur & Co., then about to be submitted to arbitration, was the land in question. I was also informed that Mr. Coe claimed the house as part of the freehold, the municipality having expired without assigning, and further, that the Tamasese Government intended to remove the house shortly.

Accordingly, for the protection of the property, I addressed a letter to Mr. Becker.

Accordingly, for the protection of the property, I addressed a letter to Mr. Becker, February 13, declining the propositions made by him on behalf of the Samoan Government in his letter of January 31, and requesting him to notify the occupant to quit. On the same day Mr. Becker replied that the "Samoan Government" had vacated the premises, and that, as the representative of the Germans, in the name of the Imperial German Government, he had taken possession of the house and installed therein his consular clerk.

The house was now sealed with the seal of the German consulate.

The house was now sealed with the seal of the German consulate.

On the 14th I replied to Mr. Becker, stating the American claim and denying his right to the possession of the house, either his former position on the municipal board or any assumed preponderance of German interests—the reasons given in his letter. On the same day Mr. Becker informed me that the German firm had taken possession of the land, under a mortgage made by the chief Patiole and registered in the German consulate on the 19th of February, 1885.

The deed to Coe, deposited with me, is dated the 19th of March, 1885, and registered at this office the 16th of September following. It is made by the chief Poomalatai. A declaration by Patiole, made the 2d of October, 1885, that Poomalatai had a right to sell the land. accompanies this.

to sell the land, accompanies this.

But the title of Coe, upon which the municipal board relied when making the lease, is a lease from Patiole to Coe for fifteen years, dated August 16, 1884, and recorded at this office the 18th of September following. The lease to the municipality was executed on its behalf by the members of the municipal board after a careful investigation of the title of Mr. Coe, and after a declaration by Patiole before the municipal magistrate that Mr. Coe had the right to make the lease.

On the 16th of February I wrote Mr. Becker setting forth these facts, and adding that, inasmuch as the lease to the municipality contained a covenant by the members of the municipal board that the land should be quickly and peaceably surrendered to Mr. Coe, good faith demanded that this be done.

On the same day Mr. Becker replied. Not denying the title set up by me, he stated that he was not authorized to make the German firm quit the land; that the question was a legal one, which, after arrangements between the Governments, might be decided by arbitration.

As to the house, he suggested that the decision of the Governments be awaited. With my acknowledgment of the receipt of this letter, the correspondence closed. For some days a keeper had charge of the premises, which were later guarded by German marines from the war ships Olga and Adler, who have now been withdrawn. The danger to American interests here by the German land claims which are being pushed in every direction, I pointed out in my dispatch numbered 35, dated October 8, 1887, in which I reported the seizure of Mr. Moors' land by Mr. Weber.

The case of the pilot station makes the danger the more apparent, because in this instance the German action had the official countenance of the German consul, if indeed it was not conducted under his direction.

The American title to the land has the comprobation of the municipal board, and was not disputed by Mr. Becker himself until, two weeks after our correspondence had begun, I informed him that the removal of the house could not be allowed.

I respectfully submit that the possession of this property by German subjects, secured as it was through the instrumentality of the German consul, and maintained by force, presents the most important issue yet arisen here, which, if not met promptly and effectively, will be the cause of humiliation to our citizens and of discouragement to all American interests in Samoa.

It is telegraphed from Washington on the 27th March:

President Cleveland has sent a message to Congress, in which legislative measures are recommended for the prevention of the importation of swine and products of swine from France and Germany, inasmuch as, according to reports of the American envoy in Berlin and the American consul at Marseilles, a disease prevails among the swine in these countries which makes the use of swine's meat unhealthy.

In Germany it is not known that the danger from trichina—and this alone can be intended—has increased lately. On the contrary, the microscopic examination for trichina increases more and more. One can see that the proposal of President Cleveland has rather to do with the establishment of reprisals against the prohibition of American products of swine-breeding than with a sanitary regulation. So far as German prohibition is concerned, whilst in the beginning in America it was referred to the protective tariff-system tendencies, with time even these judges have come to admit that the manner of slaughtering in America for exportation has offered good grounds for it. Even in the technical works of Germany, concerning the agricultural competition of North America, a while ago mentioned by us, there are descriptions of that slaughtering, which support the supposition that, with this wholesale business, sick or dead swine are worked off for food. By the abolition of this evil the Americans will sooner effect the removal of the German prohibition than by the threats of reprisals. The German exportation to America consists mainly in the finer kind of sausages, and in their manufacture in Germany the greatest care is taken.

A copy of your dispatch was communicated to the probate judge of Montgomery County, who has furnished a corrected certificate, with the statement that the clerical error in the paper furnished to Mr. Kessel was caused by the accidental use of a wrong form of certificate.

SIR: Your No. 595, submitting the correspondence between your legation and the consul-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main, and with Mr. Samuel R. Honey, of Rhode Island, in reference to the income-tax levied upon Mr. Honey's wife, who is temporarily residing with her daughter at Frankfort-on-the-Main, is received.

The matter had already been brought to the attention of the Department by Mr. Honey himself in a letter dated the 14th of March, 1887, a copy of which, with my reply to the same, is herewith inclosed.

As your course and your advice to Mr. Honey, which are entirely approved, coincide with what was written to him from this Department on the 21st of March of last year, and as Mr. Honey has not again addressed the Department on the subject, there seems to be nothing more to be done now than to await the decision of the courts in case Mr. Honey decides to appeal to them.

NEWPORT, R. I., March 14, 1887.

SIR: I am a resident and domiciled inhabitant of this city and a practicing lawyer here. My wife and daughter are temporarily residing in the city of Frankfort-on-the-Main, in Germany, where they expect to remain, perhaps, for two years. My wife has no income or estate of any kind, and all the money she spends is derived from me, and is almost exclusively the proceeds of my professional income.

I am informed that the authorities of the city of Frankfort propose to assess her for a personal property tax. May I ask you to do me the favor of informing me whether or not I am bound to pay such a tax? My wife has no property with her except necessary clothing, and is living in a furnished apartment, which she rents by the month.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 21, 1887.

SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant, in regard to the proposal of the city authorities of Frankfort, Germany, to assess your wife, who is temporarily residing there, for a personal property tax, has been received.

Your wife, being resident in Germany, is subject from the nature of things to any laws which the Government of Germany may impose as to taxes. If such impositions appear to you to be unjust, the proper course is to pay the amount under protest, taking care that the character of such payment should be so evidenced as to make it the subject of subsequent action.

If the enforcement of payment should appear to you to be in violation of international law, you can then present the facts in detail to this Department, which will then consider whether the case is one which will sustain an appeal to the German Government for redress.

This report has received my approval and is transmitted to you to be filed in the legation.

Claim of Albert Bernhard against the Imperial German Government for arrest and imprisonment at Mülhausen, in Alsace and Lorraine, for participation in a seditious conspiracy. APRIL 19, 1888.

It appears by the documents in possession of the Department that Bernhard was born at Mülhausen, in Alsace, September 28, 1845. His father was a wine merchant. In May, 1872, being then nearly twenty-seven years of age, Bernhard left his native country and came to the United States, landing in New York. He remained there for three days, and then went to Omaha, where he was employed as a book-keeper until December, 1872, when, in consequence, as it is alleged, of ill health, he removed to Saint Louis, in which city he obtained a position as salesman on the 1st of April, 1873.

On the 23d of October, 1878, he was admitted as a citizen of the United States in the circuit court of Saint Louis.

In August, 1880, he returned to Mülhausen, his native place.

A question has been raised in correspondence as to whether Bernhard originally left Alsace with an intention to expatriate himself. In a statement made on April 30, 1887, before the Imperial prosecutor at Mülhausen, he said he "ausgewandert" to America in 1872; and it has been suggested that that term signifies temporary absence and not emigration with a view to a permanent settlement in a foreign country. This interpretation of the word does not appear to be sustained; but, however this may be, it is not necessary to resort to such an inquiry.

Whatever may have been the view with which he left his home, we may concede for the purposes of this case that he left with an intention permanently to settle

As has already been stated, Bernhard returned to Mülhausen, his native place, in August, 1880. On the 13th of February, 1887, he was arrested on a charge of seditious conspiracy for alleged membership in, or connection with, an organization called the "Ligue des Patriotes," and was detained till the 27th of the same month, in all, fourteen days. Other persons were arrested at or about the same time on the same

In a letter to the Department bearing date the 8th of September last, Mr. Philip J. Joachimsen, of 45 William street, New York City, Bernhard's attorney, referring to the organization in question, says:

"The circumstances of this case as developed on the trial of Koechlin and others with whom Mr. Bernhard was in the commencement jointly proceeded against, deweloped that a turn, fencing, and rifle society has been formed in Alsace-Lorraine. Such societies are prima facie lawful. This society sent out circulars and solicited members. This proceeding was lawful. It was not prohibited. It was permitted to exist without objection until recently when it became 'suspect' that in case of war between France and Germany, in the opinion of the witness, such organization might become dangerous to Germany."

It appears by the proceedings in the prosecution referred to, of Koechlin and others in June, 1887, that the "prima facie lawful" society above referred to was the "Ligue des Patriotes" already adverted to.

In a letter dated the 29th of September last, Mr. Joachimsen transmitted to the Department a copy of an extract from "Le Drapeau," the official organ of the "Ligue des Patriotes," a copy of which extract, which was a circular of the "Ligue," was found in Bernhard's house when it was searched. In the same letter Mr. Joachimsen, in order to prove that Bernhard did not belong to the "Ligue des Patriotes," sends a copy of the statutes of the society in which it is provided that the organization shall be composed exclusively of Frenchmen.

Remembering that in his argument of the 8th of September last, Mr. Joachimsen contends for the legality of the society which he says "sent out circulars and solicited members," it is remarkable to find in the secret statutes referred to and inclosed with his letter of the 29th of September last, the explicit statement in the second article of the code that the object of the "Ligue" is the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, and that for that purpose military and gymnastic exercises are to be cultivated by the organization. It is needless to say that the papers circulated in the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of in Alsace-Lorraine, and of which a copy was found in Mr. Bernhard's house, contained no declaration of the true object of the "Ligue." But it is clear beyond question that the suspicions of the German authorities as to the real character and purpose of the society were well founded.

This disposes of the allegation of Bernhard's counsel in his argument of the 8th of September last that the prosecution of the persons suspected of connection with the "Ligue" was a proceeding against persons for pursuing an innocent object. It is possible that a person may have been brought into the "Ligue" without at first knowing its real purpose, but that the organization was pursuing a treasonable end of their regularity and legality.

On this point it clearly appears by the statement of the imperial German Government as well as by copies of records which have been furnished to this Department that the proceedings against Bernhard and others for alleged complicity in the unlawful and treasonable designs of the "Ligue des Patriotes" were conducted under the supervision of the supreme court of the Empire at Leipsic, and in strict conformity with the German law.

It is a settled and necessary rule of international law that in countries where there is an organized administration of justice from which foreigners are not exempted, they as well as citizens are amenable to the law, and the government of the country is not to be held liable as for a tort for criminal prosecutions undertaken by the authorities bana fide under the law, although the proceedings may not result in the conviction of the persons accused. It would be impossible to administer criminal justice if any other rule prevailed; at least it would be impossible as to foreigners, who, if the rule were otherwise, would enjoy practical immunity from criminal actions. In the United States, as well as in other countries, criminal proceedings are set aside every day for some irregularity and the defendant either discharged or remanded for a new trial, which may result in his conviction or acquittal. It can not be supposed that such an irregularity would form ground for an appeal to diplomatic intervention. Hence, when it is shown that criminal proceedings were instituted by competent authority pursuant to law, they are presumed to be regular and valid and do not afford a basis for a diplomatic claim. In Bernhard's case, however, it does not appear that there was even an irregularity in the prosecution.

But Bernhard's counsel contends that his client was "treated with great rigor; denied access to his family; his correspondence interrupted," etc. All this may be true, and it is understood that such methods of procedure are authorized by the German law and are commonly resorted to. But it does not belong to the United States either to prescribe or criticise the ordinary judicial and administrative procedure of foreign On the contrary, no government would contend more strenuously than that of the United States for the amenability of foreigners to the local law; Mr. Bernhard went to Alsace of his own free will; he elected to make it his place of residence; he was not going to a strange country but was returning to his former home and to his family. Having thus voluntarily placed himself within the jurisdiction of German law, he can not complain that when he was arrested on a criminal charge he was secluded from his family and his mails interrupted and inspected, such methods of procedure being authorized by that law.

There is, however, another feature of Mr. Bernhard's case to be considered. In an instruction to Mr. Pendleton, dated the 27th of June last, the Department, referring to that case, said:

"There is, however, a serious obstacle, not heretofore noticed, to the intervention If a naturalized citizen of the United States of his of the Department on his behalf. own free will leaves his adopted country and returns to his native land, settles him-self in business there in his own right and not merely as the agent for an American house, withdraws himself from all the duties of citizenship in his adopted country and voluntarily resides abroad, as a matter of choice, for such a period as reasonably leads to the inference of the animus manendi, which constitutes domicil, then he renounces his right to call on the United States to protect him against the government under whose control he had so chosen to place himself.

"In the case before us Mr. Bernhard returned in 1880 (and in less than two years after he had acquired American citizenship) to his native home at Mülhausen, where he regularly entered into business and established himself with every customary surrounding proof of an intention there to remain, in which no change is yet apparent, or if any intention to remove therefrom appears, it is to settle in France, and not in the United States."

After this was written the Department was furnished by Bernhard's counsel with various papers which accompany his argument of the 8th of September, to which reference has already been made.

Among these papers are some letters which throw strong light on the animus with which Bernhard returned to Alsace.

It is to be observed that although he returned to his native country in 1880, there is no evidence of any subsequent assertion by him of his American citizenship till the 8th of March, 1887, when, after his arrest and discharge as above detailed, he obtained from the United States consul at Kehl a blank form of application for a passport, which he duly filled up, alleging that he intended to return to the United States in eighteen months. This was done nine days after his release.

The application was forwarded to the legation at Berlin and a passport issued. No investigation of the case was made, nor was the legation, as Mr. Pendleton states in his No. 486 of the 28th of July, 1887, informed either by Bernhard or by the consul of the actual circumstances of the case until the passport had been issued and was in Bernhard's hands, and a claim against the German Government had been lodged by him with the legation, so that its action in issuing the passport in no sense involved or implied a judgment upon the facts now disclosed.

The first of the letters above referred to bears date October 7, 1878, and was written in reply to a letter of his brother entreating him to return to Alsace. In his letter

Bernhard says:

"For nearly two years they have been constantly talking to me of a return to Al-You have not forgotten my various letters, in which I gave a plain statement of the conditions on which I would return home; well, what have you done? I have generally received the answer, that everything would be arranged at the proper time to my entire satisfaction! I always supposed, from your formal declarations, that our dear father was perfectly willing; in the first place, in October, 1877, that as soon as the business of the old firm should be settled up, I was to return as partner. Well, in January, 1878, a change took place; our dear Emilie got married, and a stranger took the place that was intended for me, or rather that rightfully belonged to me. When the new articles of partnership were drawn up, a special clause, it is said, designated me as a special attorney (mandataire) in case of the illness or death of our dear father. I long doubted this, but in view of your many earnest declarations, I finally believed it. At length came your famous letter of July 29, which told me that I should receive by the next mail: (1) A contract or agreement signed by our dear father; (2) An extract from the new articles of partnership, in which my name was to appear as an attorney (mandataire).

"After so many letters, and so much expectation, anxiety, annoyance, and trouble in my business, what happened?

"I received your letter of August 29, which summarily announced to me that the whole thing was broken up, and that our honored father, in a moment of anger, had ignominiously driven me from his presence!!!

"At last I received your letter of September 11; everything was then changed; the storm had been of short duration; however, another kind of tactics was then announced; I was attacked; yes, I was reproached with my lack of readiness to return home when summoned by you! I was even told that it was no evidence of filial love on my part to remain where I was without having sufficient affection to return, in a disinterested manner, to comfort my aged father.
"And yet it would have been so easy to change all that why did you not keep your promise?

"Do you think that I would ever have accepted your offers, and that I would have agreed to return if you had at the outset plainly given me to understand that I was to return unconditionally and act according to the good pleasure of our dear father? I can certainly say that no correspondence on this subject would then have passed between us.

"I know what business is and this return is a matter in which considerations of filial love must be set aside; for thus far I have not seen that you propose to supply the funds for this journey; consequently the question to be discussed is simply one of interest.

"I have not forgotten my former homeward journeys, particularly that made in July, 1867, when I gave up a good situation in Paris, on the strength of the promises that you made that I should have employment at home; what came of it? In two months I was obliged to return to the place which I had left. Why did you not then keep me at home !

"But I must be brief, for there is no need of any longer discussion. If I require guaranties, it is because I desire to protect not only my interests, but my future and that of my children. What will be the consequence if I return home disinterestedly without any guaranties?

"Our father, who is violent at times, will make a great fuss about nothing, and will drive me away, as he has already done several times. What shall I have after

"At my age one can no longer be content to be treated like a boy. I have lived too independent a life in America ever to be willing to put my neck in the yoke again. "What would the filial love that you talk about have to do in such a case? Our father might long ago have acted differently with his sons, but he did not do so. Why? Probably because he did not see that he could directly advance his own interest by doing so.

"He says somewhere that he is trying to make a man of me; all right; I have never tried to do as much for him; he would not accept it.

"It is not, moreover, my business to manage his affairs; that is his business. If I came it would be only as an assistant. He need not fear, therefore, that I desire to become better acquainted with his affairs than he is himself.

"Now, my dear Emile, you do not do right. Every time that there is a difficulty between us you rudely demand your money of me. Let us see; shall I not be free, in the face of my father's selfishness, to act as I please in regard to marriage? He cares a vast deal for my children. Why do you say that I will 'fly' to my aunt in Paris rather than to you? I shall require exactly the same guaranties before making another move. Business is business; that is all I know.
"I have often repeated this proverb to you, 'A burnt child dreads the fire.'"

This correspondence reveals in the first place that the cause of Bernhard's leaving his home and coming to the United States was the difficulty he found in maintaining amicable relations with his father; and that his only objection to returning home was his uncertainty as to his ability to make such arrangement with his father as would secure satisfactory and permanent business relations. In the second place, it appears that during the time intervening between his declaration of intention and his naturalization he was engaged in correspondence with his family in regard to the abandonment of his residence in the United States and a return to Alsace. The refusal of Bernhard to return to Alsace unless he could settle himself permanently in business is clearly declared. The letter above quoted was written shortly before his naturalization and shows that long anterior to that time he had been discussing terms with his father under which he could abandon his American residence and, returning to Mülhausen, become a member of the wine firm.

In a letter of the 29th of July, 1878, Bernhard's brother Emile says:

"From all these considerations (i. e., being made a partner, given a home, and being put in a position to marry again, etc.), we must conclude that a brilliant future lies before you in Alsace," etc.

From this correspondence no other idea is derivable than that the return of Bernhard to Alsace was animo manendi.

By the treaty of naturalization with Germany, as well as by various other treaties, it is provided that a renewed residence of two years in the country of origin shall be treated as prima facie evidence of an intention permanently to remain, and consequently of a renunciation of acquired citizenship. Bernhard, when arrested, had maintained a continuous residence of seven years at the place of his origin, to which he returned in less than two years after the date of his naturalization in the United States. There is no evidence whatever that he entertained at any time during these seven years any intention to return to the United States, or even that he entertains such an intention now. Indeed, it appears that he has sought employment in Paris, in the land of his original nationality.

On the whole, the case does not appear to be one in which the Department would be justified in intervening.

Respectfully submitted.

J. B. MOORE, Third Assistant Secretary.

[Extract.]

No. 622.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, June 1, 1888. (Received June 18.)

SIR: I have to day sent you a telegram to the effect that from this date passports bearing the visa of the German embassy at Paris will be required of all foreigners entering Alsace-Lorraine from France.

The decree upon which the foregoing telegram is based, and which is inclosed herewith in its official form, together with a translation, was promulgated by the Alsace-Lorraine authorities on the 22d ultimo, to take effect from to-day. Strenuous efforts have been made in the interval in various quarters to secure the repeal or modification of this measure, but in vain.

On calling yesterday at the foreign office to secure a copy of the official publication of the decree, I was informed that it would certainly be upheld, but that the visa of the German embassy at Paris would be furnished to all foreigners other than Frenchmen applying for the same at once and without question upon the payment of a fee of 10 marks. To Frenchmen the visa would, however, not be given until after correspondence between the German embassy and Alsace-Lorraine authorities.

This information, thus officially authenticated, I at once conveyed to our legation at Paris. I have been told that the object of the measure in question was to discourage and restrict intercourse between the French and the inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine. This is corroborative of statements contained in an article published on the 29th ultimo, in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, a journal generally understood to be inspired by the chancellor of the Empire with respect to questions of political importance discussed in its columns. A copy, with translation, of this interesting article, pronounced in German press comments to be amazingly frank in its declarations, is herewith inclosed.

I also transmit herewith a cutting,* taken from the same number of the above-mentioned journal, which contains the new rules governing the sojourn of Frenchmen in Alsace-Lorraine, as prescribed by the authorities of that territory, under date of the 23d ultimo. rules do not directly affect American citizens, they may, in connection with the subject of this dispatch, nevertheless be found useful for reference on the files of the Department.

I have, etc.,

CHAPMAN COLEMAN.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 622.—Translation.—Central and District Gazette for Alsace-Lorraine.]

Decree requiring foreigners entering Alsace-Lorraine from France to produce passports.

Upon the basis of the law of October 2, 1795 (10 Vendémiaire of the year IV), and

Opon the basis of the law of October 2, 1750 (10 vendemiaire of the year 17), and of October 19, 1797 (28 Vendémiaire of the year VI), as well as of the ordinance of April 20, 1814, the following is hereby decreed:

I. From Thursday, May 31, 1888, all foreigners crossing the French frontier, regardless of the distinction of their journey being in the nature of a transit or for the purpose of sojourn in the country, must be in possession of a passport provided with the visa of the German embassy at Paris. The visa must not be more than a year old.

Cards showing the avocation of foreign commercial travelers (proclamation of the Imperial chancellor of October 31, 1883, Central Gazette for the German Empire, page 305) do not replace the necessary passport.

Foreigners not in possession of a regular passport are to be prevented from continuing their journey, and in case of necessity to be conducted across the frontier.

German subjects crossing the French frontier do not require a passport.

II. From the requirement of having a passport are excepted the inhabitants of the French frontier communities, in so far as they may be repairing for business purposes to a neighboring German frontier community, and satisfy the frontier police officials that such is the case.

STUDT.

Inclosure 2 in No. 622.—Extract from Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of May 29, 1888.—Translation.

An incorrect significance would be attributed to the German passport measures at the French frontier if they were regarded as reprisals on account of particular occurrences such as those at Avricourt or at Belfort. Those and many other similar ones have no immediate significance in connection with the measures of the German Government, but have importance only indirectly as symptoms of the situation. The pass-port measures, like those adopted to strengthen our defensive power, have no rela-tion to particular events but constitute a result of our collective policy. German policy and the administration of the Reichslande (Alsace-Lorraine) in particular must necessarily aim to consolidate the re-acquisition of Alsace by vivifying and strengthening the relations of that country with Germany. A principal obstacle in the way of the solution of this task consists in the continuance of the social and economic relations with France which naturally existed when the reunion with Germany took place. The effect of this condition of affairs is essentially increased and attains to international acuteness in consequence of the excitations and baitings resulting from anti-German sentiment and the preparations for the war of revenge, for the re-acquisition of Alsace by means of espionage and agitation among the inhabitants of the country through associations and all sorts of other devices. As a consequence of these incitations, the hostile bearing of the French people towards us has not only remained undiminished during the last seventeen years, but has become more acute, as the occurrences at Belfort demonstrate.

The hope that a French Government would ultimately find itself strong enough to oppose this course, which jeopardizes the peace of both nations, has not been verified. Even with peaceful intentions the French Government have heretofore found the means to strengthen themselves in promoting, rather than in soothing, the national hatred. The feeling of the French population in the provinces remains continuously at a height of hatred of us which does not permit Germans to show themselves anywhere in France without danger of life and limb, and the initiative of a few gamins, suffices to cause outbreaks of this dangerous feeling. Neither the reserve of German policy nor the accommodating spirit shown by it in great and small political questions has been able to produce a change in that feeling. In the wars of 1813–1815 France relatively sustained greater loss and was treated with greater violence than in that of 1870. Nevertheless, within a period of only ten years after the Treaty of Paris in 1825, the French annals will be searched in vain for a trace of similar hatred on the part of France of her neighbors, of similar lust for revenge for lost battles such as those of Leipsic and Waterloo, as is manifested to-day in the columns of all French papers, and in the demeanor of the population of the provinces of France. The futility of the reserve and caution hitherto observed by Germany with the attendant barelespace of bringing should a change in Franch sentiment excites in Car. ant hopelessness of bringing about a change in French sentiment excites in Germany no warlike plans and feeling. We carry respect for the independence of our neighbors to the degree of complete toleration of even the most unjust hatred of us. We desire no war, we desire only more remote relations with France, and as we are tied to our vicinage we must content ourselves with becoming more reserved in our intercourse with France, and to restrict it more than heretofore on the frontier, where it is made use of to agitate the population of German Alsace. We wish that the French should be more moderate in their intercourse with Alsace, and shall feel no regret if France shall, in consequence, adopt measures tending in an analogous manner to restrict the visits to French territory of our German people. This course is free from enmity; we only employ permitted international means to promote the historic process of the regermanization of the German imperial lands and the dissolution of their connection with France. The international frictions made possible and furthered by the heretofore existing intercourse of the French with Alsace would in the long run be more dangerous to the maintenance of peace than a sharper emphasizing of the frontier and its separating effect could be. We therefore believe that the Imperial Government is serving the interests of peace when it meets France in the endeavor to closely control frontier intercourse and sets limits to its intimacy, thereby excluding as far as possible political frictions.

SIR: I have had the honor to transmit to you with my dispatch No-627, of the 16th instant, the text of my telegram announcing the death of His Majesty, the Emperor Frederick, and of your telegram conveying the sympathy of the President and people of the United States for the German nation.

I now transmit herewith a copy of my note, under date of the 16th instant, addressed to Count Bismarck, in execution of your telegraphic instructions, and a copy and translation of an answering note of the same date, in which the Imperial secretary of state informs me that-

He has not failed to communicate to His Majesty, the ruling Emperor, the warm words in which were clothed the sentiments of the President and his Government for the Imperial family and the German people.

The touching incidents connected with the last illness of the late Emperor, his gentleness, fortitude, patience, and his zealous, unwearying performance of his sovereign duties during the protracted period of his suffering from a terrible incurable disease, had greatly moved the hearts of his subjects, in whose affections he already held an exalted place; and his death has caused profound regret and sorrow throughout the entire Empire.

In accordance with the expressed wish of the late Emperor and the widowed Empress, his body was, at an early hour this morning, laid to rest with all practicable quietness and avoidance of ceremony, and with a restricted attendance on account of the limited space afforded by the place of interment in the "Friedens" church at Potsdam.

No. 329.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 19, 1888.

SIR: In the session of the 15th instant, and on motion of Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky, the House of Representatives agreed to a resolution expressing profound sorrow for the death of the Emperor Frederick III and sympathy with the German nation in the loss of their great and renowned ruler.

This resolution contained no request or direction as to its communication to the Government of Germany, but appeared simply as an expressive tribute to the memory of one whose heroic endurance and admirable bearing amid sufferings and in the very article of death has endeared his memory to the hearts of all men.

The German minister at this capital, Count von Arco-Valley, hastened to communicate the text of this resolution to his Government as soon as it was made public, and has since addressed me a note* requesting me to convey to the House of Representatives the thanks which His Majesty the Emperor has instructed him to express for this manifestation of regard. I have accordingly addressed the Speaker of the House communicating the desired message.

I transmit an engrossed copy of the resolution, which you may deliver to his excellency the Imperial minister for foreign affairs.

Expressing much gratification at the cordial response vouchsafed to this spontaneous tribute of the popular branch of the national legislature to the worth of the lamented sovereign,

I am, etc.,

PROCLAMATION TO THE GERMAN ARMY.

While the army has only just put off the outward signs of mourning for its late Emperor-King William I, my highly revered grandfather, whose memory will live forever in its heart, to day it has sustained another heavy blow in the death, at 5 minutes past 11 o'clock in the forenoon, of my deeply loved father, His Majesty the Emperor-King Frederick III. Truly these are solemn days of affliction, in which God's providence has placed me at the head of the army, and it is indeed from a deeply moved heart that I address my soldiers for the first time.

The confidence, however, with which I assume the position to which God's will has called me is firm and unshakable, for I am aware of that enthusiastic feeling for honor and duty which has been implanted in the army by my glorious predecessors, and of the elevation at which this sentiment has ever and at all times been main-

In the army a fixed, unswerving devotion to the sovereign is the inheritance which passes from father to son, from generation to generation; and for my part I may call your attention to the figure of my grandfather, which stands in the sight of each one of you, the picture of a glorious and venerable sovereign. A picture more beautiful, or one which speaks more plainly to the heart, can not be conceived. There is also my dear father, who, as Crown Prince, had already won for himself a place of honor, in the annals of the army, and finally there is a long line of illustrious ancestors whose names shine bright in history and whose hearts beat warm for their soldiers.

Thus we belong to each other, I and the army; thus were we born for one another; and firmly and inseparably will we hold together, whether God's will give us peace or storm. You are now about to swear the oath of fidelity and obedience to me, and I vow ever to bear in mind that the eyes of my forefathers are looking down upon me from the other world, and that to them I must one day render account of your fame and honor.

PROCLAMATION TO THE NAVY.

With a deeply-moved heart I have to inform the navy that to-day my dear father, His Majesty the German Emperor and King of Prussia, Frederick III, gently fell asleep in the Lord at five minutes past 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and that I, passing to the station destined for me by the will of God, have taken over the government of my ancestral land, and with it the chief command of the navy.

Truly this is a deeply solemn time at which my first words to the navy are addressed. The outward signs of mourning have just been put off which were assumed for my dear and never-to-be-forgotten grandfather, the Emperor William I, who only last year, on the occasion of his visit to Kiel, expressed in the warmest terms his lively continued for the progress made by the pavy during his glorious rast year, on the occasion of his visit to Kiel, expressed in the warmest terms his lively satisfaction in and gratitude for the progress made by the navy during his glorious reign; and already the flags are being once more hauled down for my much loved father, who felt so great a pleasure and interest in the navy's growth and advancement. Times of solemn and genuine grief, however, strengthen the feelings and render stanch the hearts of men; and so, while faithfully preserving in our hearts my grandfather's and father's memories, let us look forward with consolation to the future

The navy knows that I have not only derived great pleasure from being connected with it as an officer, but that a warm and lively interest, which I share in the fullest harmony with my dear brother, Prince Henry, of Prussia, has attached me to it ever since my earliest youth. I have learnt to know how high is that feeling for honor and the faithful fulfillment of duty which exists in the navy. I know that each sailor is willing joyfully to sacrifice his life for the honor of the German flag wherever or whenever occasion demands, and so I am enabled at this solemn hour to declare with absolute assurance that we will stand firmly and surely together, in good or bad times, in storm or sunshine, ever mindful of the fame of the German Fatherland, and ever ready to shed our heart's blood for the honor of the German flag. With these aspirations God's blessing will be ours.

PROCLAMATION TO THE GERMAN PEOPLE.

TO MY PEOPLE:

God's decree has once more plunged us into the most poignant sorrow. The tomb has scarcely closed over the mortal remains of my never-to-be-forgotten grandfather, when His Majesty, my warmly-loved father, has also been called from this life into everlasting peace. The heroic energy, prompted by Christian self-sacrifice, with which, despite his sufferings, he knew how to fulfill his kingly duties, seemed to justify the hope that he would be preserved to the Fatherland still longer. God has willed differently.

The royal sufferer, whose heart beat responsively to all that was great and beautiful, only had a few months granted him to display on the throne also the noble qualities of mind and heart which have won for him the love of his people. The virtues which adorned him, the victories which he achieved on the battle-field, will remain in grateful remembrance as long as German hearts shall beat, and imperishable glory will illumine his chivalrous figure in the history of the Fatherland.

Called to the throne of my fathers, I have assumed the government, looking up to the King of Kings, and have vowed to God that, after the example of my fathers, I will be a just and clement prince to my people, that I will foster piety and the fear will be a just and element prince to my people, that I will foster piety and the fear of God, and that I will protect peace, promote the welfare of the country, be a helper of the poor and distressed, and a true guardian of the right.

In praying God for strength to fulfill these kingly duties which His will imposes upon me I am supported by the confidence in the Prussian people, which a glance at our past history gives me. In good and in evil days the Prussian people have always stood faithfully by their King. Upon this fidelity, which my fathers have found to be an indissoluble bond in all times of difficulty and danger, I, too, count, with the consciousness of returning it from the bottom of my heart as the faithful prince of a faithful people, both equally strong in daystion to their common Fatherland. faithful people, both equally strong in devotion to their common Fatherland.

From this consciousness of the reciprocated love which unites me with my people I derive the confidence that God will vouchsafe to me strength and wisdom to exercise my kingly office for the welfare of the Fatherland.

You will perceive by perusal of the papers that the remedies provided for by the income tax law have been exhausted, and that no course is left to be pursued except an appeal to the minister of finance, which, as competent lawyers inform me, is permitted and frequently resorted to.

I have no doubt in my mind, and lawyers concur in my opinion, that the tax assessment is not warranted or authorized by the income-tax law, and that the holdings of the assessing board and district commission are clearly erroneous and untenable; and inasmuch as the question involved is of great consequence to married ladies temporarily staying in Germany, and as the Honey matter presents all the disputed points in the case, I can not help thinking that it is worth the best efforts to invoke a decision of the highest administrative tribunal thereon.

APPEAL TO PRUSSIAN MINISTER OF FINANCE.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Frankfort-on-the-Main, June 30, 1888.

At the request of Mr. Honey, attorney at law, of Newport, R. I., United States of America, I have the honor to appeal to the high ministry against the decision, of which a copy is inclosed, of the income-tax district commission at Wiesbaden of February 29, 1888, according to which the classified income tax assessed against Mr. Honey is declared to be just and his remonstrance against the same unfounded.

The grounds upon which objection was made to the lawfulness of that tax assessment before the assessment and district commission will be found stated in the inclosures 1, 2, and 3, which I beg to recapitulate here. They are the following:

(1) That it is not contested that Mr. Honey is an American citizen, conducting his law practice at Newport, R. I., United States of America, and having there his actual and lawful domicile.

(2) That Mr. Honey never had a residence in Germany, and that in the Kingdom of Prussia he has never had either property, business, or income.

(3) That the temporary sojourn of Mrs. Honey and daughter at Frankfort can not change the domicile of her husband in Rhode Island.

(4) That Mrs. Honey has neither business, property, or income of any description in Germany; that rather her support and the expenditure of herself and daughter, who is attending the school of music, are met and defrayed exclusively with pecuniary means which are earned by her husband at his American home, taxed there, and sent here at his pleasure.

The decision of the royal district commission is based on the theory that Mr. Honey has a domicile at Frankfort in the sense of the law applying to the subject, because the dwelling occupied and arranged by them for permanent sojourn afforded his wife and daughter a shelter corresponding with their circumstances, and I beg to remark with respect to this supposition that it is an erroneous one, as Mrs. Honey has not arranged any dwelling, but has simply rented furnished rooms for a short period, and that all the furniture belongs to the landlady and owner of the house.

In conclusion, I beg to add to this appeal the request that the high ministry may be pleased to direct that the sum of 111 marks 60 pfenning, which, pursuant to the inclosed receipt, Mrs. Honey has paid to the Royal kreis treasury, in order that she might no longer be exposed to annoyances from the tax collector, be returned.

I have the honor to subscribe myself, with distinguished consideration, JACOB MUELLER. Consul-General.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you kindly ascertain for me this, at the quarters of Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State?

Can American citizens traveling in foreign countries be married in American forms and by an American clergyman? The case is this: Two Poughkeepsians wish to be married at Antwerp or Berlin by their own pastor. Please do me the favor to make this inquiry of Mr. Bayard, whether such marriage can be consummated at the house of the American legation, according to home forms. An early answer is requested, if consistent with your engagements.

Very truly, yours,

FRANCIS B. WHEELER.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 333.]

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Ketcham.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, July 2, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication and the letter of F. B. Wheeler, D. D., of Poughkeepsie, inclosed therewith, inquiring whether American citizens can be validly married in foreign countries and whether validity would attach to such marriages if solemnized at the house of the American legation at Antwerp or Berlin "according to home form." In reply I have to say that it is a settled rule of international law that the solemnization of marriages, to have ubiquitous validity, must be in conformity with the law of the place of celebration, if such place be in a civilized land, and unless the law of such place prescribes conditions repugnant to conscience.

It is also, I apprehend, settled law that a marriage not solemnized in conformity with the law of the place of celebration is not validated, so far as concerns its effect in places where there is not a statute validating it by the mere fact of its having been solemnized at the legation of the country to which the parties belong and in conformity with the form held valid in such latter country.

Whether a marriage solemnized abroad in the presence of a consular officer of the United States is validated so far as concerns this country, under the act of Congress of June 22, 1860, by the fact of the presence of the consul depends upon whether the parties are domiciled in the District of Columbia or in one of the Territories of the United States. If they are not, but are domiciled in one of the States of the Union, then the question, so far as concerns such State, would depend upon the law of that State. So far, however, as concerns foreign countries, e. g., Belgium or Germany, the question of the validity of the solemnization would depend upon their own law; and that law is understood to incorporate the general principle above stated, that a solemnization of marriage to be valid must be in conformity with the law of the place of celebration. I have, however, now to add that the question you propose is one ultimately to be determined by courts of justice under the circumstances of each particular case; and that my duty is not to predict what would be the action of such courts, but to give in response to inquiries such cautions as may induce American citizens proposing to be married abroad to take every step which may be necessary to give validity to an act whose invalidity would be fraught with consequences serious both to themselves and to the community.

I have the honor, etc.,

No. 467.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Coleman.

No. 334.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 10, 1888.

SIR: Your No. 631 of 22d ultimo has been received. You therewith submit the application of Charles Stein for a passport, said application being accompanied by an original passport, No. 24717, dated March 27, 1866, and signed by Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, in which the bearer is described as "Charles Stein, who is lawfully liable to military duty in this country, and who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States."

No evidence is furnished that Mr. Stein has since been naturalized. You state that you find no warrant of law for the issuance of a passport, so modified, to a person who has only declared his intention to become a citizen, and you accordingly ask instructions in the premises.

During our civil war, and when persons of toreign origin, domiciled in the United States, or who had taken out their first citizen-papers were subject to military service, a statute was enacted providing:

That so much of the act approved the eighteenth of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States" as prohibits the granting of passports to any other than citizens of the United States, shall be, and is hereby, repealed, so far as that prohibition may embrace any class of persons liable to military duty, by the laws of the United States. (Act March 3, 1863, section 23, 12 U. S. Stats., 754.)

Mr. Stein's old passport was issued in conformity with that provision, and is not a certificate of citizenship, but merely a permit to leave the country. This special enactment was repealed by the act approved May 30, 1866 (14 U. S. Stats., 54), which further provided as follows: "And hereafter passports shall be issued only to citizens of the United States." This is the existing law (section 4076, Revised Statutes), and under it no passport can be issued to a person who has merely declared his intention to become a citizen.

It is observed that Mr. Stein's old passport bears the following indorsement:

Renewed at the American legation at Berlin June 15, 1869, for one year from date, good for Russia.

ALEXANDER BLISS, Secretary of Legation.

As the statute under which the original passport was issued had been repealed for more than three years, that indorsement, so far as it purports to renew the said passport, is wholly without authority of law and void. A note to this effect should be made opposite any record of such "renewal" which exists in your legation.

I am glad to note the adjustment of the controve sy in a manner satisfactory to all parties. In regard to the disposition of the pilot house, the views of this Department coincide with those of the Imperial Government, that the building, which was erected out of the municipal funds while the land was leased by the late municipality, should be treated as part of its assets. The complaint of this Government related solely to the question of title to the land; and if the position of Mr. Sewall is correctly understood by the Imperial Government to have been that, upon the termination of the lease, the building became the absolute property of the lessor, such a contention was not authorized by this Department.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the difficulty caused by the conflicting claims to the property known as the pilot station, which formed the subject of my dispatch numbered 93, dated February 24, has been satisfactorily adjusted.

By the terms of the indenture made between Coe and myself, of even date with the deed transferring to me his interest in the property in question, it is provided that, in case he should be found indebted to Messrs. McArthur & Co. in the matters in dispute between him and that firm, then about to be submitted to arbitration on a commission issuing from this consular court, I should sell the land within three months of the publication of the award. This was made March 15. Accordingly on the 11th of this month, the award remaining unsatisfied, I had sold at public auction all the interest in the above-mentioned property which Coe deeded to me. This was bought by Brandeis for $2,500, which was the highest amount bid.

The American claim to the land is thus disposed of, and all personal claim to the house as a part of the freehold. The German consul maintains that the house is the joint property of the tax-payers of the former municipality. The British consul awaits instructions in the premises. Should he assume the position of the German consul, I shall of course claim for the American tax-payers their proportionate share

Since the sale I have received from Brandeis a letter, a copy of which is inclosed, in which he asks if I have objections to the port pilot in the interest of the pilot service using the house, which has been unoccupied since it was scaled with the scal of the German consulate. The German and British consuls having previously given their consent, I replied that I had no objections to the course proposed.

I have, etc.,

HAROLD MARSH SEWALL.

MULINUU, June 13, 1888.

Sir: Having bought to-day, in auction held by order of your consular court, the land of the former pilot station, with all appurtenances thereunto belonging, I have the intention to install the pilot for the port of Apia in the house erected upon the said land and to make use of the same in the interest of the pilot service.

The Imperial German and Her Britannic Majesty's consuls having already given their consent, I have the honor most respectfully to ask you if you have any objection against the carrying out of my intention concerning the pilot-house.

I have, etc.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, July 23, 1888. (Received August 4.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt to day of your instruction No. 333 of the 7th instant, inclosing a correspondence between the Hon. J. H. Ketcham, of the House of Representatives, and yourself, relative to the validity attaching under certain specified conditions to marriages of American citizens in foreign countries.

Your succinctly stated views as communicated in your reply to Mr. Ketcham will constitute a valuable addition to the archives of this legation, and enable it to answer with greater precision and better authority than heretofore the numerous inquiries addressed to it on this subject. In your reply you state:

So far, however, as concerns foreign countries, e. g., Belgium or Germany, the question of the validity of the solemnization would depend upon their own law, and that law is understood to incorporate the general principle above stated, that a solemnization of marriage to be valid must be in conformity with the law of the place of cele-

The principle stated in the above passage is in entire conformity, as far as this country is concerned, with statutory provisions, the law declaring that a marriage within the German Empire can only be validly concluded before the designated civil official, the "Standesbeamter," and imposing a penalty upon any clergyman or other minister of religion who solemnizes a marriage before it has been proven to him that the marriage has been concluded before the civil official.

In order to supply to the Department, in a form convenient for reference, the pertinent provisions of German law, I transmit herewith the copies and carefully prepared translations of the statutory declarations

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence relating to Mr. Samuel R. Honey's contention with the Prussian authorities with regard to the liability to pay a tax on income expended by his wife and daughter at Frankfort on-the Main, I have the honor to state that the foreign office has informed this legation under date of the 10th instant, in a communication of which I inclose herewith a copy, with translation, that the Prussian minister of finance has directed that the imposition of the tax in question shall be discontinued and the amount already paid refunded.

The legation is also informed that the question of Mr. Honey's liability to a communal tax has been referred to the Prussian minister of the interior, and that a further communication relating thereto will be made to the legation.

I will remark in this connection that Mr. Honey's complaints to this legation have been hitherto understood to relate solely to the imposition of income tax.

The legation has notified Mr. Honey through the consulate general at Frankfort on the Main of the favorable decision and action of the min-

FOREIGN OFFICE. Berlin, August 10, 1888.

Referring to the note of the 2d ultimo, foreign office No. 376, the undersigned has the honor to inform the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, Mr. George H. Pendleton, that the royal Prussian minister of finance has directed that the state income tax assessed against the lawyer, Honey, of Newport, R. I., at Franfort-on-the-Main, since September 1, 1887, be discontinued, and the tax already paid be refunded. In so far as Mr. Honey's complaint relates to the communal tax demanded of him, the royal Prussian minister of the interior has been requested to give the matter further consideration.

No. 473.

Mr. Coleman to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 672.] Berlin, October 1, 1888. (Received October 13.)

SIR: With respect to the events reported by telegraph to the London Times as having recently occurred in the Samoan Islands, and which appear likely to culminate in the entire overthrow of Tamasese, installed there as ruler since the removal of King Malietoa by the Germans, the press of this country has had surprisingly little to say, the various papers considered to be in a measure governmental less, and the especial organ of the chancellor of the Empire, the North German Gazette, as far as I have been able to discover, not even reproducing the London telegrams.

Such brief allusions as I have found in newspapers of this city are in the nature of comments upon the telegrams referred to and upon an editorial relating to Samoan affairs published in the London Times of the 17th ultimo. I therefore inclose this editorial, the articles in question, and a letter to the Times relating to the same subject, which appeared in its number of the 28th ultimo.

Commenting on the outbreak announced as having occurred in Samoa, the Vossische Zeitung, a liberal Berlin paper, remarks in its issue of the 18th altimo:

From Samoa intelligence of the outbreak of a rebellion for the purpose of over-throwing the present King Tamasese has been received. The reports state that the final deposition of Tamasese was regarded as inevitable unless Germany should give him support. The consideration of this possibility seems to cause great disquiet in the English press. A telegram received by us to-day reads: "In connection with the reports from Samoa and the demand for German support for Tamasese, the Times remarks that the Governments of England and America would make representations at Berlin with a view to the restoration of Malietoa. This restoration would serve as a basis of union between the three Governments, and the predominance of German influence in Samoa, which is the just consequence of the preponderance of German trade there, would then be welcomed by all concerned."

As is known, it is true that Malietoa, after having been liberated in Germany, is now on his way back to his home, but it is far from certain that it was intended to thereby open up the way to the throne for him. It was the practices of Malietoa, hostile to Germany, which first disturbed peace and tranquillity at Samoa. In case the conflicts and agitation should really threaten the position of the present King, the three powers primarily interested will undoubtedly seek to arrive at an understanding respecting the secure establishment of power there, without the independence of the islands, guarantied by treaty, being called in question by any party, or without Germany being compelled to re-admit to authority a chief manifestly hostile to it, and whom it has removed in the interests of peace.

The same paper remarks in its issue of the 28th ultimo:

In Samoa events have taken the course that was feared. [Here the London telegrams reporting defeat in battle of Tamasese are quoted.] In accordance herewith it would seem that serious and difficult tasks await the Empire in the South Sea as well as in East Africa.

The National Gazette, the principal organ of the national liberal party, published yesterday, remarks:

With respect to the disturbances at Samoa the Government, pursuant to a communication we have received, awaits fuller information, the intelligence thus far received being too meager. In any event there need be no apprehension that the good understanding of the three interested Governments of Germany, England, and America would be in any way impaired on account of Samoa. It seemed that diplomatic negotiations concerning joint action to be taken by the three powers were impending.

I shall not fail to report to you promptly any authoritative information I may be able to obtain concerning the attitude of this Government toward Samoa in view of the altered aspect of affairs resulting from the revolution against Tamasese, which appears to have recently occurred there.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We have received the following telegrams through Reuter's agency:

REBELLION IN SAMOA.

AUCKLAND, September 15.

Advices received here from Samoa state that a rebellion has broken out there owing to Herr Brandeis having made an attempt to induce the natives to confer on Tamasese, the present King, the name of Malietoa, and also on account of the excessive taxation to which the people are subjected by the existing government.

Herr Brandeis placed himself at the head of a body of Samoans loyal to King Tamasese and went out to meet the rebels, whom he encountered in the bush. In the conflict which ensued seven of the supporters of Tamasese and three of the rebels were killed, while the number of wounded on both sides was large. Herr Brandeis' force now numbers 1,400 men. A thousand Savaii natives have flocked to the camp of the partisans of the dethroned King Malietoa, bringing their total effective force up to 3,000 men.

The ultimate deposition of Tamasese is regarded as inevitable unless support is rendered him by the Germans.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 672.—From London Times of September 17, 1888.]

Rather more than a week ago a telegram from Berlin announced that Malietoa, the ex-King of Samoa, had been released from captivity and was about to return to his native land. Hardly have people ceased to wonder what this move on the part of Prince Bismarck portends, when news arrives by way of Auckland, New Zealand, that an insurrection is in progress in Samoa against the new King Tamasese, and that it promises to be successful, unless the Germans interfere vigorously on behalf of their nominee. Malietoa, it will be remembered, was deposed by an armed force of Germans in August of last year, and, according to report, was exiled to New Guinea, although we are not in a position to say that New Guinea has been throughout the place of his imprisonment. Tamasese, his rival of long standing for the sovereignty of the Samoan group of islands, was created King in his place.

But the position of this puppet became precarious as soon as the German ironclads left Apia. In the days before Malietoa's deposition Tamasese had never been more than a rebel, incapable of making head against Malietoa, and only shielded from his vengeance by German influence. The proceedings of the King and of the German agent have not been calculated to win popularity for the new dynasty. One step in particular on the part of Herr Brandeis seems to have provoked much resentment among the clansmen of Malietoa. He caused the ruler, whom the majority of the Samoans probably regard as a usurper, to assume the hereditary name of Malietoa, thus wounding the tenderest sentiments of the old loyalists. Oppressive taxation, besides, has filled to overflowing the cup of Tamasese's offending, and the result of it is a full-blown insurrection, in which the insurgents have more than held their own and are twice as numerous as the force of the government. Thus Samoa plunges once more into the anarchy and bloodshed which have prevailed there, with few interruptions, since time out of mind, and to which it was fondly believed that German intervention had put an end.

It remains to be seen whether Germany regards herself as responsible for the maintenance of the status quo in Samoa. If Prince Bismarck could see his way to allowing matters to take their course without any interference on the part of Germany, the rest of the world would probably be satisfied; roughly speaking, justice would be done, and the return of order would quickly come with the overthrow of Tamasese and the restoration of Malietoa. It would be too much to assume that Malietoa's release at this juncture, and his impending return to Apia, represent anything more than elemency on the part of the German Government, or that they signify any intention to substitute him for the weakling Tamasese.

Yet it is difficult to say why so unsentimental a person as Prince Bismarck should do the thing of all others most calculated to upset his work in Samoa by letting loose Malietoa among his former subjects. The Germans have certainly not much to congratulate themselves upon in their recent connection with Samoa. They have for many years kept, or greatly contributed to keep, the islanders in hot water, and they have derived next to no advantage from so doing. In selecting Samoa as a field for German activity the German Government was acting upon the well-known maxim of Prince Bismarck, that the flag ought to follow the trade. By far the most important trading firm in the islands is a German company. The case of Samoa, however, is a proof that the maxim is capable of great abuse. Whatever the German foreign office might think, it has throughout been made a tool of by Messrs. Godeffroy and the company which has stepped into their shoes. All the intrigues of this firm with Tamasese against Malietoa have been consciously or unconsciously adopted by the German Government in defiance of all the dictates of justice, and, what is very unusual for Germany, without much regard for treaties with other countries which were interested in Samoa. The Germans, in formal declarations, recognized the authority of Malietoa, and accredited their consul to him. Yet they never lost an opportunity of inflicting humiliation upon him or of backing up the rebel Tamasese. It was a perfectly understood thing that any attempt upon the part of Malietoa to enforce his authority against Tamasese would be resented by the Germans and probably treated as a At the same time it must be admitted that the British Government showed casus belli. a lamentable want of firmness in abandoning Malietoa and allowing their own treaty rights to be evaded. In 1884 a treaty was entered into between Germany and England to respect the independence of Samoa. That agreement has been in several instances ignored by the Germans. It was ignored when, in November of the same year, the German consul forced King Malietoa to sign a treaty giving Germany a virtual protectorate. It was again superseded when Malietoa was deposed by way of punishment for imaginary insults to Germany, and another ruler installed in his place, under the complete control of a German official. Germany, indeed, seems to recognize no obligation in Samoa except that of not in terms annexing the islands.

The Germans, apparently, will find that their responsibilities in Samoa were far from ended by the substitution of one ruler for another. They are now face to face with a difficult state of things. On the one hand, they are debarred by international pledges from annexation out and out. On the other, they are probably beginning to realize that nothing short of the permanent maintenance of an armed force of Germans in Samoa will preserve King Tamasese against his subjects. But any proposal to take this course might excite determined protests from England and the United States, the powers which are chiefly concerned in preserving the independence of the Samoan group. This country, however, can have no wish to obstruct the restoration of order in Samoa. Yet we should not be sorry to see King Malietoa come to his own again. Both the British and the United States Governments behaved shabbily to this The British and United States consuls dissuaded him from offering any resistance to the German force which demanded his surrender, and Malietoa naturally interpreted their advice as meaning that their Governments would see that he got his rights. In point of fact, Malietoa was left to his fate. We can not resist a hope that, even at this late hour, the British and United States Governments will appeal to Germany in his behalf. His restoration would serve as a basis of union between the three Governments, and the predominance of German influence in his councils, which is the just consequence of the preponderance of German in trade in Samoa, would then be welcomed by all parties.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We have received the following telegrams through Reuter's agency:

THE REBELLION IN SAMOA.

AUCKLAND, September 27.

Advices received to-day from Samoa announce that Tamasese, the king set up and supported by the Germans after the defeat and capture of King Malietoa, has been totally defeated by the partisans of Malietoa, after severe fighting.

The troops of King Tamasese have been led in the recent fighting by Herr Brandeis, the German vice-consul.

The latest intelligence, dated the 18th instant, received here from Samoa, states that part of the force supporting the present king, Tamasese, being allowed to leave the neutral territory, went to Vaielils (†), whither they were being hotly pursued by the partisans of Mataafa, the newly proclaimed king. Another battle was consequently regarded as imminent.

SYDNEY, September 27.

The latest intelligence received here regarding the rebellion in Samoa states that an engagement took place on the 12th instant, in which, after several hours hard fighting, the supporters of Tamasese were completely defeated by the partisans of Malietoa, who thereupon occupied Apia and proclaimed Mataafa king.

The captain of the steamer Vindex was shot while attempting to reach the British consulate, but, with this exception, foreigners were not molested.

Tamasese's men had withdrawn to neutral ground, which was occupied by the Germans.

The German and American war vessels maintained neutrality during the disturbances.

SAMOA .- A SUGGESTION.

To the Editor of the Times:

SIR: The news received to-day from Auckland will scarcely surprise any one acquainted with Samoan affairs; nor, indeed, will the defeat of the German nominee be altogether unexpected either in London or Berlin. In spite of the influence possessed by Germany in Samoa, the natives dislike the rule and resent the high-handed proceedings of German officials. This fact is known to Prince Bismarck and Lord Salisbury, and yet the former minister insists upon following the German trade with the German flag, and the latter apparently acquiesces in the tactics employed. It would scarcely seem probable in these days of advanced civilization that such prominent powers as Germany, America, and Great Britain should enter into treaties of friend-ship and reciprocity with a native king and then allow one nation to upset the Government and establish upon the throne the representative of a dynasty in rebellion to the recognized sovereign, and yet this is what America and Great Britain have done in the case of Malietoa. To escape from an awkward position into which these two powers allowed themselves to drift, they abandoned the man to whom they had pledged the honor of their respective countries, and looked on with impunity while the lawful king was an exile in a far-off land and his rebellious rival reigned in his stead. But while this was the line taken by the greater powers, the chiefs of Samoa, true to native instinct, continued to harbor in their breasts that loyalty to their king which foreign nations had tried in vain to upset, and in spite of so-called royal proclamations signed and countersigned thus:

"Tuiaana Tamasese,
"King of Samoa.
"Brandeis."

the rule of Tamasese has been overthrown and the advance of Germany in Samoa received a check. But I do not wish to dwell on the past; the past speaks for itself, and what is done can not be undone. It is with the future that we are concerned, both as a people and as a great power, and with the future I would deal. Now, certain treaties and understandings exist between Germany and Great Britain respecting spheres of influence in the Western Pacific, which division of the Pacific Ocean, according to the understanding entered into between those two countries in April, 1886, includes the groups of Tonga and Samoa. These groups, however, are especially excluded from the benefits of that understanding; hence the not unnatural surmise that a secret arrangement with regard to those groups exists between this country and Germany, which arrangement stands in the way of any activity on our part in Samoa. Whether such an understanding exists or not it is not my part to say, but it is very clear that advantage might be taken of the present position of affairs to amend the 1886 understanding with a view to utilizing the amendment as a diplomatic solution of the Samoan difficulty.

I am, sir, yours, obediently,

C. KINLOCH COOKE.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, October 11, 1888. (Received October 29.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a report of a so called "military cases," requiring intervention with the foreign office, which I have prepared for the period included between November 8, 1887, and the date of this dispatch. Seven such cases, Nos. 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, and 189 have been submitted and decided—all favorably during the period referred to. One case, No. 176, designated as unfinished in the report of November 8, 1887, is reported herewith. There are three cases, all relating to fines, presented during that period which are still pending.

The marked decrease in the number of cases occurring during the past year as compared with previous periods of the same length, and their favorable settlement, would seem to afford just grounds for satis-

Report on military cases.

176. Albert Bernhard:

Born at Mülhausen, Alsace, September 28, 1845; emigrated to the United States in May, 1872; naturalized October 23, 1878; returned in August, 1880, to his native place, where he still resided at last accounts, the circumstances indicating it to be his intention to reside there permanently. Bernhard has claimed indemnification of the German Government for losses sustained in consequence of his arrest and imprisonment in Alsace in 1887, on a charge of participation in a seditious conspiracy. This case has been the subject of laborious and painstaking investigation on the part of the Department of State and the legation, and the records of the latter contain forty-six communications exchanged in the course of the correspondence relating to the same. In the last report of the so-called military cases made by the legation, under date of November 8, 1887, Bernhard's case was designated as unfinished. It may now be regarded as finished in view of the report thereon prepared by the Department of State, under date of April 19, 1888, and transmitted to this legation for its files with instruction No. 315, of April 28, 1888. The completeness of the latter report, which concludes with the statement: "On the whole the case does not appear to be one to which the Department would be justified in intervening," seems to render it unnecessary to further discuss the same here. Since the receipt of that report nothing further respecting Bernhard has been heard at the legation.

182. Jean Adam Brunner.

Born at Schorbach, in Alsace-Lorraine, January 21, 1861; emigrated September 18, 1878; naturalized March 28, 1884; returned to his native place in September, 1887. 18, 18/8; naturalized March 28, 1804; returned to his native place in September, 1807. On the 17th of October following he was arrested at Schorbach in consequence of a sentence to a fine of 600 marks or forty days' imprisonment, imposed for avoidance of military service by the penal chamber of the land court at Saargemünd, and was, in default of payment of the fine, conveyed to prison at the last named place. The attention of the legation was within a brief period called to this case by Brunner himself, by his father, his brother, a friend in the United States, and also by the Department of States to whom his friends had applied for instructions in his healf to this ment of State, to whom his friends had applied for instructions in his behalf to this legation. Having, on October 19 received the first intimation of Brunner's situation, the legation on the same day applied at Schorbach for the further necessary information in the case, received the same on the 24th of that month, and on the same date intervened with the foreign office in his behalf, submitting the facts in the case, inviting attention to the bona fide character of his emigration and naturalization, and to the circumstance that he had only returned to his native place on a visit, and asking that in the event of the facts being found upon investigation to be as represented he be released and the fine remitted. The evidence of Brunner's American citizenship was transmitted to the foreign office with the note of intervention. On Novem ber 24, following, Brunner reported to the legation his release on the 20th of that month. It is remarked in this connection that he might have secured the same at any time by the payment, under protest, of the amount of the fine imposed, the recovery of which for him by the legation would have caused no greater difficulty than the obtaining of his release. Referring to the instruction No. 259, of October 28, 1887, of the Department relative to the case, the legation, with dispatch No. 542, of November 27, following, reported proceedings therein and Brunner's release. On the 9th of December following, a note, dated the 8th of that month, was received from the foreign office in reply to the note of intervention confirming the statement received from Brunner of his release, and further informing the legation that the remainder of the punishment adjudged and the costs in the case would be remitted. This intelligence was at once communicated to Brunner, and with dispatch No. 548 of December 12, 1887, to the Department of State, which, with instruction No. 278, of the 31st of that month, expressed gratification with the result reached. Brunner returned to the United States shortly after his release. As illustrating the amount of labor caused by such cases in some instances it is remarked that twenty-four communications relating thereto were exchanged by the legation with its correspondents in the course of the proceedings.

183. Andrew Byczik.

Born at Rosko, Prussia, November 13, 1866; emigrated to the United States in November, 1881; naturalized January 30, 1888. On January 13, 1888, the legation received a communication from Byczik, dated the 26th of the preceding month, written from the United States relative to his case, and having on the same day written him for the further necessary facts and papers, received the same on the 6th of February following, with a letter dated the 2d of March preceding. On the same day the legation intervened with the foreign office in Byczik's behalf, inclosing with its communication the evidence of his American nationality, and asking that an attachment to secure a fine imposed for avoidance of military duty by a court at Czarnikow be removed from an inheritance accruing to him from his father, the essential facts as above stated being upon investigation found to be true. On the same day the legation informed Byczik that intervention had been made in his behalf. In an answering note, dated the 23d of April, the foreign office informed the legation that no penal proceedings of the character referred to had been taken against Byczik, and no attachment laid on his inheritance, and that the mistake had probably arisen owing to an attachment having been imposed upon similar grounds on an inheritance accruing to his brother. On the day of the receipt of this note the legation communicated the intelligence it conveyed to Byczik, who has not since been heard from.

184. George Nielsen.

Born at Stubbak, Schleswig-Holstein, February 20, 1862; emigrated to the United States April 4, 1881; naturalized September 23, 1887; returned to his native place about the end of November following. This case was brought to the attention of the legation by instruction from the Department of State No. 296, of March 15, 1888, upon the receipt of which the legation intervened in behalf of Nielsen with the foreign office, presenting the facts and his complaint, which was that within about a week after his arrival on a visit to his old home he was arrested, taken before a court, detained in custody for an hour and a half, told he must pay a fine of 160 marks, the grounds therefor not being stated, further informed that he would have to serve in the German army, and his citizen paper and American passport taken from him. Being then allowed to go to his home, he left the country on the following night and returned to the United States without having regained his papers.

The legation requested the foreign office to cause the judgment, imposed presumably for violation of military duty, to be removed, his papers to be returned to him, and all proceedings against him to be desisted from, if the facts should, upon investigation, be found to be as stated. In an answering note from the foreign office dated August 16, following, and received on the 18th of that month, the legation was informed that the judgment of the 13th of May, 1886, imposing on Nielsen a fine of 160 marks for violation of military duty had been remitted, and the collection of the judgicial costs incurred desisted from, and further, that Nielsen's papers had on the 2d of January, 1888, been handed to his father for return to the son.

185. Julius Diamond.

Born about the year 1843, at Wreschen, Prussia, presumably; emigrated thence in 1857, at the age of fourteen years, to the United States; naturalized (?) In a communication dated June 6, 1888, received on the following day, Diamond presented to the legation the facts in the case, which were immediately communicated to the for-eign office, and were as follows: He returned to Wreschen on a visit about the 1st of June, and was at once requested to identify himself before the burgomaster, which he did, leaving with that official his citizen papers. On the 5th of that month he was again called before that officer, who returned to him his papers, but at the same time handed him an order from the "Landrath" requiring him to leave Prussia within eight days. Immediately thereafter Diamond called on the official who had issued the order complained of, and urged the withdrawal of the same, informing him at the same time that he had always conducted himself peaceably; that he was not engaged in any business in this country, but had simply returned to it on a visit to his family and friends; that he intended to remain here but a short time, and that he knew of no reason why such order had been served on him. His request was, however, not complied with, although his American citizenship was acknowledged. view of these circumstances the legation expressed its confident hope that, the facts being found upon investigation to be as stated, the foreign office would cause the order of expulsion to be withdrawn, and the proceedings taken against Diamond to be suspended by telegraph or otherwise pending such investigation. Diamond's American passport was inclosed, with the statement that his certificate of naturalization was understood to be at Wreschen, and that, to its regret, the legation had not, owing to the urgency of the case, been able to present as full a statement of the facts as it could desire. On the same day the legation informed Diamond of the action taken in his behalf, and also reported the case to the Department of State with dispatch No. 623, of June 7, 1888. With instruction No. 331, of June 27, 1888, the Department expressed its satisfaction with the action taken by the legation in Diamond's behalf. After some further correspondence between the legation and Diamond relative to his case, from which it appeared that he was being subjected to no further molestation, the foreign office, in an answering communication, dated June 15 and received on the 17th of that month, informed the legation that it was considered admissible to permit to Diamond a further sojourn at Wreschen, and that the appropriate authorities had been instructed to desist for the present from carrying out the measure complained of. Diamond was at once informed of the favorable decision reached in his case, as was also the Department of State with dispatch No. 642, of July 18, 1888. With instruction No. 348 of August 6, 1888, received on the 18th of that month, the Department expressed its satisfaction with the decision reached in this case. On the occasion of a visit paid by Diamond to this city, he called at the legation to express his thanks for the measures taken in his behalf and his great gratification at the result attained. Nothing further has been heard from him, and if not at Wreschen still, he is presumed to have remained there as long as he found it convenient to do so.

186. Hermann Oertel.

Born at Burgstadt, Saxony, September 21, 1865; emigrated to the United States in April, 1882; naturalized December 29, 1887. The necessary information having been secured, after some correspondence with the consulate of the United States at Chemnitz, through which attention was called first to the case, the legation, on the 3d of July, 1888, intervened in Oertel's behalf, communicating to the foreign office, in addition to the above-mentioned facts, the following statements and complaints: On the 10th of June, 1888, Oertel returned to Germany to visit his parents residing near Chemnitz, with the intention of returning to the United States in about a month. On July 2, following, a court at Chemnitz condemned him to pay a fine of 150 marks or suffer imprisonment for the period of thirty days for alleged violation of military duty. The local authorities had since informed Oertel that he might expect to be arrested and imprisoned at any moment in default of payment of the fine, although he had protested against the course taken against him both before and since his condemnation referred to, appealing for immunity from the punishment adjudged to his rights as an American citizen, and submitting the evidence of such citizenship. The legation inclosed Oertel's certificate of naturalization and asked that the case be investigated and the fine canceled, if the essential facts should be found to be as stated, and that, in view of the urgency of the case, Oertel being liable to be arrested and imprisoned at any moment, telegraphic instructions might be considerately sent to the local authorities at Chemnitz, directing the suspension of proceedings against him pending the investigation. The legation on the same day informed Oertel through the consulate at Chemnitz that intervention had been made in his behalf. In an answering note, dated July 28, and received on the 30th of that month, the foreign office informed the legation that the appropriate local authorities had been instructed to desist from the collection of the fine and costs imposed. Oertel, who had in the meantime been subjected to no further annoyance, was on the same day informed by the legation of this favorable decision, as was also, with dispatch No. 647, the Department of State, which thereafter, with instruction No. 354, of August 14, 1888, expressed its satisfaction with the result reached in the case.

187. August Klein.

Born at Kaiserslautern, Bavaria, December 27, 1862; emigrated to the United States about the year 1870; naturalized October 10, 1884. The attention of the legation was called to this case by the American consul-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main on July 4, 1888.

On the same day the legation applied to him for the necessary facts, which were supplied on the 12th of that month, when the legation intervened with the foreign office in Klein's behalf, inclosing his certificate of naturalization, and submitting his further statements and complaint, which were as follows: On the 29th of May, 1888, Klein came to his native place on a brief visit intending to return to the United States about the 15th of July following. On the 29th of the preceding month he was arrested by the authorities at Kaiserslautern, and notwithstanding his appeal to his treatyrights as a citizen of the United States, and the submission of the evidence of such citizenship, compelled to pay a fine of 300 marks for avoidance of military duty, adjudged by the land-court at that place. As the facts submitted showed clearly the bona fide character of the emigration and naturalization of Klein, the legation expressed the hope that the fine would be remitted, and the amount paid returned to Klein as speedily as possible as he needed it to defray the expenses of his return to America, which he must otherwise defer, to his great inconvenience. The legation on the same day notified Klein that it had intervened in his behalf. In an answering note, dated the 20th and received on the 21st of August following, the foreign office informed the legation that instructions had been given to the local authorities to desist from collecting the amount of the fine and costs in the case, adding that Klein's statements to the legation were inaccurate, the fine having been judicially adjudged before his return from America. That, while he had been arrested, he had been immediately discharged after proving his American citizenship. Nor had he been compelled to pay the fine of 300 marks. The amount, since returned to them, had been voluntarily deposited with the authorities by his relatives in the Palatinate as security for the fine. On the same day the legation notified Klein through the censulate-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main of the result reached, and called his attention to the inaccuracy of his statements to the legation. Under date of 23d of that month the consul-general at Frankfort-on-the-Main informed the legation that its notification had been forwarded to Klein, who had in the meantime returned to the United States.

188. John Goldschmidt.

189. Henry (Hans) F. Jessen.

Born at Tyrstrup, Schleswig-Holstein, September 19, 1863; emigrated to the United States in August, 1880; naturalized October 21, 1885. The above facts and the further statements and complaint submitted by Jessen on the occasion of a personal and complaint submitted by Jessen on the occasion of a personal call on August 15, 1888, and on the same day presented, together with the evidence of his American citizenship, to the foreign office, by the legation, were as follows: Jessen returned on the 27th of June, 1888, to his native country to make a brief visit to his parents at Tagkjer, in North Schleswig. He at once notified the local authorities of his arrival and of the purpose of his visit, presenting to them at the same time the evidence of his American citizenship, which was, he subsequently learned tenesmitted to the Reval Covargement at Schleswig. Within two works learned, transmitted to the Royal Government at Schleswig. Within two weeks from the time of his arrival he was ordered to leave Schleswig-Holstein within twenty-four hours, no cause being assigned for such action. With this order he immediately complied, and now requests permission to return to Tagkjer for the brief period of from one to two weeks, in order that he may see his parents once more before his return, early in September next, to the United States. Jessen declares that he has by his personal demeanor given no cause of offense to the authorities of his native country. In view of these circumstances, of the great distance he has come to visit his parents, it is hoped that his request will not be refused, if upon investigation the essential facts are found to be as stated. As the granting of the permission sought would, in view of Jessen's early return to the United States, prove illusory unless soon granted, the legation requested that it might at an early day be informed of the result of his application. With dispatch No. 659, of August 20, 1888, the legation of the result of his application. gation reported to the Department of State its action taken in behalf of Jessen. Under date of September 7 following, Jessen informed the legation that he was back at Tagkjer with his parents, the authorities having granted him an extension of sojourn in accordance with his wish. He thanked the legation warmly for its successful action in his behalf. On the 19th of that month, in an answering note, dated the preceding day, the foreign office confirmed this intelligence, which was communicated to the Department by the legation with dispatch No. 666, of September 19, 1888, and also to Jessen who renewed his thanks to the legation.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, November 9, 1888. (Received November 26.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the application, together with the correspondence, between this legation and Mr. Black, our consul at Nuremberg, relating thereto, of Mr. Solomon H. Ulmer, a naturalized citizen of the United States, for a passport, to include his wife and minor son, Milton.

The propriety of issuing the passport applied for seems so doubtful, in view of all the circumstances set forth in the application and correspondence referred to, and especially in view of the strongly-expressed opinion of Consul Black that the applicant has no intention of returning, and his son, born in Germany, of going to the United States with a purpose of residing and performing the duties of citizenship there, that I deem it best to refer the case to the Department of State for its consideration and decision.

The case of Ehrenbacher, to which Consul Black refers in inclosure No. 1, will be found reported in dispatch No. 111, of May 10, 1875, and that of his son in dispatch No. 555, of December 26, 1887, of this legation.

I have the honor to be, etc.,

United States Consulate, Nuremberg, November 7, 1888.

SIR: Inclosed I beg to hand you application of Solomon H. Ulmer for a passport for himself, wife, and son Milton, aged seventeen years. Under this cover I also inclose Ulmer's citizen papers, and he informs me that his old passport has been mislaid, which ulmer, you will notice, left the United States in 1858, came direct to Nuremberg, where he has ever since resided. His son Milton was born here, as you see, and he has never been to the United States and in my opinion never will go their and in the contraction has

Ulmer, of course, has no domicile in our country, and this part of his application he could not fill out. He declares he desires this passport for the purpose of going to the United States. I am satisfied in my own mind be does not intend going there. You can see he is a man of seventy years of age, who has lived in Germany all his life, excepting the twelve years he was in the United States, making enough money to return here and reside, and it is very unlikely that he would return there at this late date to take up a permanent abode in the midst of strangers and leave all his friends here. The fact is, he really wants this passport to exempt his son from the military. He told me, the first time he came to see me about it, that his son was now coming to military age, and he wanted to get for him a passport, as he was an American citizen by reason of his father's citizenship. I told him this when he signed this paper; but he stammered out, No, he wanted to go to the United States to put his son with Edison. I asked him when he would start; he said he thought he would go over in the course of one or two years. This, coupled with the fact of his claiming thirty years as a temporary residence in Nuremberg, struck me as so absurd, that I was on the point of refusing his affidavit; but I thought it best to refer it to you. He was here a few days before he made this application to sign these papers, but the gentleman whom he brought as a witness, after reading his affidavit, refused positively to certify that to the best of his knowledge and belief the facts set forth were true, and the one, Schmidt, who has signed it, said that he could only say as to the facts from what Ulmer had told him

This man is not entitled to a passport as much as Ehrenbacher, who certainly had no claim, and who was refused one in 1875, after having been living here but six years. He belongs to a class who in my estimation value their citizenship only for the benefits it may bring them, contributing nothing to the support of our Government, and possessed of no sympathy for us as a nation or as a people.

The fee of 4.20 marks I have transmitted by postal money-order.

I have, etc.,

No. 478.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Coleman.

No. 387.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 4, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 690, of the 9th ultimo, in relation to the application of Mr. Solomon H. Ulmer for a passport, has been received.

It appears by Mr. Ulmer's sworn statement that he was born in Bavaria in 1819, and came to the United States in 1846, when twenty-seven years of age. He was naturalized in 1853, and in 1858, less than five years after his naturalization and less than twelve after his coming to the United States, he returned to his native land, where he has since continuously resided for more than thirty years, without exhibiting any sign of an intention ever to return to this country.

Now, however, when his son, born in Germany, and who has apparently never been in the United States, has arrived at the age of nineteen years and is subject to call for military service, Mr. Ulmer applies for a passport as a citizen of the United States, to include his son, for the alleged purpose of going to the United States "in the course of one or

By the treaty of naturalization between the United States and Bavaria it is provided that if a citizen or subject of one of the contracting parties, naturalized in the dominions of the other party, return to his country of origin without the intention to go back to the country of his adoption, he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization, and a two years' residence in the country of origin, after return thereto, is made prima facie evidence of such renunciation.

Upon the facts stated the Department is of opinion that Mr. Ulmer long since renounced his American citizenship, and that to grant a passport to him, as now requested, would be to promote an obvious abuse of our naturalization, and to commit a breach of that fair dealing which should characterize the observance of treaty obligations.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE LEGATION OF GERMANY AT WASHINGTON.

No. 479.

Prince von Bismarck to Baron von Zedtwitz.

BERLIN, November 18, 1887.

You have already been instructed on a former occasion to draw the attention of the Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard, to the anti-German attitude observed by the American consul-general at Apia, Mr. Sewall, during our action against the Samoan King Malietoa. We have had a similar experience with the predecessors of Mr. Sewall on all occasions whenever we endeavored, in view of the unsettled state of affairs on the Samoan Islands, to obtain better guaranties for the protection of the there living German subjects and of their commercial interests. The reports of our representatives in Apia of the last seven years repeatedly contain the complaint that their American colleagues show a tendency to interfere with our relations to the Samoan Government and to imbue the latter with distrust of Germany. The endeavors made by Germany in the interest of the establishment of a lawful and orderly condition of affairs on those islands have, without exception, met with the opposition of the American consular representatives.

At the outbreak of hostilities amongst the natives in 1881, when the commander of His Imperial Majesty's ship Möwe, on the requisition of the German consul at Apia and in agreement with the Samoan Government, as well as with the municipal administration, occupied Apia in order to protect the foreign settlement, the American consul, Mr. Dawson, protested against that measure, and caused the editor of an Apia paper, with whom he was connected by friendship, to publish a series of

and the commander of His Imperial Majesty's ship Möwe.

The American Consul Canisius has been pointed out to us as the author of two letters which Malietoa addressed to His Majesty the Emperor, under the 18th and 25th of May, 1885. These letters contained complaints with regard to the imperial representative in Apia, the demand of his recall, and an insulting critique of German military measures. The successor of Dr. Canisius, Mr. Greenebaum, made opposition to the German representative in everything, encouraging at the same time Chief Malietoa and his provoking attitude towards Germany. He arbitrarily announced, in a proclamation issued on the 14th of May, 1886, the American protectorate over the Samoan Islands, and hoisted, as a sign thereof, the American flag over the Samoan flag, a proceeding which was disavowed by his Government. The enroachments of the present representative of the United States in Apia have, as you know, repeatedly given occasion to me to complain of his conduct to Mr. Bayard.

In view of the so friendly relations which have continued undisturbed for more than a century between Germany and the United States, it is remarkable that on that remote realm of islands, where neither America nor Germany has any political interests to defend, we are exposed to the continual ill-will of a series of American representatives. There are no local commercial rivalries which could explain such a fact.

In this regard our relations to Great Britain are by far more difficult. The contiguity of the English and German possessions at the Cape, in Zanzibar, in West Africa, New Guinea, and in different parts of the South Sea leads to rivalries which can not always remain free from Great Britain has much more occasion to be jealous of the extension of German influence, and has, besides, to take into consideration the claims and prejudices of her colonies, which, grown up under the idea of a British monopoly of ruling in transatlantic countries, are inclined to look upon foreign neighborship as an interference with the sphere of their interests, or as a menace to their security. Especially in the case of Samoa the British Government has, on account of the covetousness repeatedly shown by the New Zealanders of obtaining possession of those islands, to contend with unusually great difficulties with regard to a just and benevolent settlement of the there existing difficulties with us. Nevertheless we are there in much better relations to England than to America, although the commercial interests of Great Britain in Samoa, though smaller than ours, are more considerable than those of the United States.

The American element has not aspired to a considerable commercial success on the Samoa Islands. The value of imports in Apia which have gone through the hands of American merchants amounts, according to the last statistical statements of 1885, to $92,000; that of German imports to $292,000. In the exports the German merchants participated with $280,000, the American merchants with only $31,000.

The only large American firm in Apia, Grevesmühl, Crawford & Co., is now under the management of two Germans, the American partner, who lives in San Francisco, having lately withdrawn. At the end of the last year the staff of the German firms in Apia consisted of forty-six employés, that of the American firms only of seven. The German firms had established, outside of Apia, in Upolu, and on the other islands of the Samoan group, fifty commercial stations and smaller trading places—the American firms not a single one. The German firms in Apia owned, in 1885, 21 ships, with 1,519 tons, for the trade in the South

Sea, while the American firms had no vessels of their own. The subjects of the Empire had brought, by systematical establishment of plantations, 7,985 acres under culture, while American plantations do not exist, and only about 100 acres of the property owned by American subjects are cultivated. At the beginning of 1886 there were eighty-one Germans and twinty-four Americans residing within the municipal district of Apia. Houses and property owned by German subjects represent, as shown by the list of assessments of municipal taxes, a value of

Germany has never made use of this mercantile preponderance of her subjects in Samoa to secure commercial privileges, as the United States have recently done in Hawaii by the ratification of the lately renewed reciprocity treaty of January 30, 1875. We have always maintained the principle of equality of rights of nations in Samoa, and never aspired to political advantages. Moreover, on the occasion of the latest action against Malietoa, the continuation of whose government was incompatible with our dignity, we have given, before the deposition of said chief, to both the English and the American Governments the assurance, against which no doubt has been raised, that it is not our intention to change anything with regard to the relations of the treaty powers to Samoa.

I fail therefore to find in the facts themselves any reasons that could explain the continual ill-will shown towards us in Samoa by the American representatives of the past and of the present, and I should be thankful to Mr. Bayard if he would lend me his assistance in the investigation of this strange fact. Should my supposition be right that those difficulties have their origin in the personal disposition of the American representatives in Apia, and not in their instructions, I am convinced that the American Government will cause the necessary redress to take place.

It can not be conceived that consular officers who do not respect the limits of their task, and who cause by their conduct without reason international ill-feeling (verstimmung) between countries entertaining friendly relations to each other, act in the sense of their Government, with which Germany since the foundation of the American Union has been connected by traditional friendship.

We come, therefore, readily to the conviction that it will suffice to submit to the attention of his excellency the Secretary of State a coherent review of the attitude observed by the different American consuls in Samoa in order to be enabled to hope for the redress of a misunderstanding which has no foundation in the actual reciprocal friendly relations.

You are requested to read this instruction to the Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard, and to leave him a copy of it.

V. BISMARCK.

[Incleaure 1.]

Account of proceedings in Samoa.

After the declaration of war against Malietoa by the imperial consul at Apla the American consul-general, Mr. Sewall, offered his services to cause Malietoa to voluntarily surrender himself.

Consul Becker entered therefore in communication with Mr. Sewall, but declared at the same time that the military measures would not be suspended by the negotiations. Mr. Sewall, however, did not take any further steps to effectuate Malietoa's surrender, who consequently gained considerable time, and his further attitude corresponded in no way to the friendly disposition which he had manifested by the said offer. He issued a proclamation by which he emphatically declared, in the name of his Government, that he continued to consider Malietoa to be King of Samoa.

This proclamation naturally encouraged Malietoa, who was then, according to reliable information, just about to surrender himself, and he consequently desisted from his decision.

Moreover, the natives were cautioned not to recognize Tamasese and not to send delegates to the assembly called by the latter to a meeting on the 15th of September. Meetings of followers of Malietoa have taken place in Mr. Sewall's house, and Malietoa is said to have been there several times at night.

Mr. Sewall protested in the name of the United States against all measures taken by German officials in the interest of the maintenance of peace and order as against violations of the treaties.

On the 26th of August the regular meeting of the municipal council was going to take place. Mr. Sewall ordered, with reference to Article VIII of the municipal convention, Municipal Judge Martin to hoist the flag of Malietoa, and declared at the same time that the municipal council could only meet under that flag. Consul Becker pointed out that Article VIII gave a right to the Samoan Government, but not to the consuls, to hoist the Samoan flag, and that he could, of course, not attend a meeting under the flag of a chief who was in war with Germany. He referred to the fact that never at any meeting held in the course of this year, a flag had been hoisted on the municipal building. As Mr. Sewall insisted upon his order being carried out, no more municipal sessions could take place.

Even the establishment of Tamasese in Mulinuu, the former seat of government of Malietoa, was declared by the American consul-general as a violation of the municipal convention. Moreover, he protested against the proclamation issued on the 27th of August by the commander of the German squadron, and subjecting, in the interest of general security, the circulation on public streets to certain restrictions. Inciting false rumors were put into circulation that the Germans intended to burn down Apia; a considerable part of the population was induced by these rumors to abandon their huts and to flee into the forests.

[October 9.]

The American consul-general has lowered the flag of the consulate after Malietoa's surrender. Municipal sessions have not taken place. English and American subjects, especially the representatives of the firm McArthur & Co., of New Zealand, avail themselves, assisted by their consular agents, of every opportunity to create conflicts with the Samoan Government and with the Germans. Englishmen and Amerconflicts with the Samoan Government and with the Germans. icans have, in cases where the ownership of real estate was disputed between them and Germans, surrounded such property with fences and tried to secure to themselves the possession thereof by hoisting the national flags; the same has been done on several roads, even at the sea-shore, both of which are to be considered as public prop-

Consul-General Sewall has asserted in a general way, and also in conversation with our consul, that it was his intention to hold Tamasese responsible for the violation of the treaties, which he thinks has taken place, as soon as he would have the power to do so.

[Apia, October 13.]

On the request of the Samoan Government, Mr. Martin has arrested, on the 11th of October, a Samoan subject named Tamasen, who was accused to have stolen the line of the flag-mast before the Government building in Apia. On the evening of the same day, after 10 o'clock, Consul-General Sewall proceeded to the municipal building and demanded from the guardians that the prisoner be set at liberty. As the latter refused to comply with his demand, he put himself into the possession of the keys of the prison and liberated said Tamasen in person. On the next morning Mr. Sewall informed Mr. Martin that he was no longer entitled to act as magistrate, and that he had to leave the municipal building. Mr. Sewall has not informed our consul of his The municipality is consequently suspended.

A continuation of such a state of affairs would have greatly endangered life and property of the German subjects. There was no protection by the police, the foreigners did not recognize the native government, and the latter is not strong enough to maintain order. If the American consul-general arbitrarily liberates a prisoner, there seems to be good reasons for expecting excesses of a more serious character.

Mr. Sherwood to Selu, Samoan Secretary of State.*

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, February 25, 1887.

MY DEAR SELU: I have much pleasure in writing to you to let you know my thoughts and to inform you how matters are progressing. the particulars of the securities in re the loan. They have just come to hand, and I I have been waiting for the particulars of the securities in retine ioan. They have just come to hand, and to can now proceed with the business and will have it completed as speedily as possible. Upon this head you will soon hear from me again. I have had many interviews with your great friend, Sir George Grey, and he is much pleased with your actions with regard to myself; he is highly pleased that you have placed your trust in me. Sir George desires me to inform His Majesty King Malietoa that he is much pleased with what he has done and is of opinion that it will be the best thing for the King, the Government and people of Samoa. Sir George desires me inscally to inform you the Government and people of Samoa. Sir George desires me specially to inform you that he sees no reason to alter his opinion as to what position Samoa should occupy and which he, Sir George, communicated to His Majesty in a letter some time ago. Sir George further wishes me to state that no convention or agreement of any description should be entered into with any nation or state, as the great days are coming for Samoa and nothing should be done to in any way hinder it.

Sir George is earnestly desirous of the welfare of the Samoan nation. In him you have a true and powerful friend. And you will soon feel the good benefit of his great friendship. He further desires me to ask you to write to the President of the United States of America and to thank him for his kindly allusions to Samoa, made in the Presidential message, delivered in America on January of this year. I send you a draught of the letter to send; please let it be signed by His Majesty and sealed.

Sir George brought to me Lord Sandhurst, who is a great man from England. has been with me several times and is taking great interest in all matters affecting Samoa and will do everything to help me for your good; he is very powerful and wealthy and will be another great friend of Samoa.

I have made most of the arrangements about the loan, and I want to get the purchase of Weber's land completed, as upon that land the new Government buildings will have to be erected. I have had plans made for these buildings, which will be large, handsome, and convenient, and worthy of the Samoan Government. I have had patterns of uniforms for police and troops, and they will be forwarded for your approval; I am now having a design for new coinage. I intend to take a steamer to Samoa, which will be useful to the Government for rapidly visiting any part of the islands when such necessity arises. This vessel will be of great service in carrying out the laws of the Samoan Kingdom. All these things will be done and well done, and without trouble to you, but, of course, you must be prepared to exercise some patience. Great works can not be done rapidly. My great desire and intention is that all shall be done well, so that you, as a nation, will have the greatest benefit from it all and that your nation may be locked up to and represented from it all, and that your nation may be looked up to and respected. Sir George Grey informs me that he has heard of the visit of the Hawaiian embassy to your Kingdom, and expresses the hope that no convention may be made with them. I assured him that you would not do so; as while matters were in their present state you would enter into no arrangements. He was much pleased, and said if such a thing were attempted it would seriously interfere with your future prospects, and it would be most unwise for you in any way to be attached to a weak nation. No matter how glowing the prospects might be represented, it could only end in disaster to you. All this Sir George desired me to tell you. I informed him that I would do so, though I had no fear of your doing anything that would bring trouble to you. I said I should rely upon your honor as chiefs and rulers to do nothing so foolish. Sir George said: "Yes; I know the bonor and pride of the chiefs of Samoa is great, and you do well to rely upon it." He then requested me to convey to His Majesty King Malietoa and to his chiefs his warmest regards, and to tell you to remain firm in your independence; that good and powerful friends are interesting themselves in your welfare, and that their efforts will soon bear good fruits, and that all trouble in and about Samoa will cease, and that you will all soon take the great position you are naturally entitled to.

I need not tell you how thoroughly I concur in these sentiments, and I am earnestly looking to bring all these matters about. Will you kindly convey to His Majesty my profound regard and an earnest wish for his welfare? Will you also give my best regards to all the members of the Government, and tell them I shall be with them all again as soon as I have your business arranged?

With best wishes, I am, etc.,

Mr. Secretary of State: According to advices which I have just received from the Imperial Government, Mr. Pendleton, the envoy of the United States at Berlin, has communicated to the Chancellor of the Empire the instructions received by him to express to His Majesty the Emperor the sympathy felt with the Imperial family by the President and people of the United States on account of the severe illness of His Imperial Highness the Crown Prince.

His Majesty is deeply moved by the fervent and touching words in which the friendly sentiments and good wishes for the Imperial house and for Germany are expressed.

In pursuance of instructions transmitted to me by the Chancellor of the Empire in obedience to the command of His Imperial Majesty, I have the honor, Mr. Secretary of State, to convey to you the expression of His Majesty's heartfelt gratitude for the sympathy felt by the President and people of the United States of America with our Royal House and the whole country in the deep grief which rests upon both. His Majesty was much gratified to be informed of the sentiments entertained by the great nation with which we are so closely allied.

IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION, Washington, December 23, 1887. (Received December 27.)

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: During the period between June 1 and October 31, 1888, the Third International Exhibition of Art will be held by the Artists' Association of Munich, under the patronage of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and with the co-operation of the Royal Bavarian Government.

As the first exhibition of art at Munich was held a century ago, the exhibition of the coming year will be a jubilee exhibition, and the Artists' Association of Munich is consequently very desirous that it shall prove a great success.

The experience which the promoters of the exhibition have had, the improvement in art, as well as the material success achieved, and the world-wide reputation enjoyed by Munich as an art center, furnish ground for the hope that the zealous efforts and the earnest co-operation of all concerned will, on this occasion, also achieve an encouraging result and promote the general welfare.

The co-operation of the non-German governments is of special importance to the successful accomplishment of this international enterprise, and the Association of Artists of Munich has, therefore, requested that the enterprise may be brought to the notice of foreign governments, and warmly commended to their favorable consideration.

In obedience to instructions received, I have the honor hereby to convey the request addressed by the Royal Bavarian Government to the Government of the United States, that the latter will bring this exhibition to the notice of academies and artists in the United States, and urge them to send their productions to it; and that it will, on its part, encourage the enterprise in every way possible.

I have the honor herewith to send twenty copies of the programme* of the exhibition, together with their annexes, and I avail, etc.

DEAR MR. RIVES: With reference to our conversation of yesterday, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the "Temporary regulations for the prevention of the introduction of infectious diseases at the Corean treaty ports."

These regulations have been provisionally accepted by the representatives of the treaty powers at Seôul. The modifications we would desire to make I had the pleasure of pointing out to you yesterday.

Believe me, etc.,

V. ZEDTWITZ.

[Inclosure.]

Temporary regulations for the prevention of the introduction of infectious diseases at the Corean treaty ports.

1. Any vessel, Corean or foreign, arriving from a locality where infectious disease exists, shall temporarily anchor outside the harbor limits and fly a yellow flag at the fore.

2. Such vessel is not to communicate with the shore, or with other vessels, nor to land crew or passengers, peuding the arrival on board of the customs quarantine officer.

^{*}Inclosure, being a programme of the projected exhibition, not printed herewith.

3. Should the quarantine officer be satisfied that there are no cases of infectious disease on board from the commencement of and during the voyage hither, he will grant permission to the vessel to proceed to the usual anchorage, where she will receive free pratique.

4. Vessels which have had cases of infectious disease on board during the voyage to a Corean treaty port, shall be required to anchor at such place as shall be indicated by the quarantine officer, at a safe distance from the land; and no communication with the shore, or with other vessels, shall be allowed, except with the sanction of the customs authorities charged with the carrying out of these regulations.

Subjects of infectious disease shall be sent either to a cholera hospital on shore, to such other suitable place as the quarantine officer may indicate. The bodies of or to such other suitable place as the quarantine officer may indicate. the dead shall be buried at such time and place and in such manner as the quarantine officer shall point out.

6. After final disposal of patients and dead bodies, as indicated above, the quarantine officer shall disinfect both crew and passengers, who may then receive written permission to land through him. That officer will also advise the commissioner of customs as to the vessel's admission to free pratique.

7. The captain, passengers, or crew of vessels placed in quarantine shall be given every facility by the customs to appeal in writing to their national representatives against the measures taken by the quarantine officer; but pending the inquiry and decision of the foreign representative in the case these regulations must be observed.

8. Any vessel or person infringing these rules shall be dealt with, at the instance of the commissioner of customs, by the proper consular authorities.

9. It shall rest with the superintendent of trade and the commissioner of customs, in conference with the consuls of the treaty powers, to decide whether or not the port from which any vessel comes is infected, the decision of the majority ruling. any port has been declared infected by its own government, these rules shall be enforced by the commissioners of customs at Corean ports against all vessels coming from such port.

10. The cost of establishing a hospital for infectious diseases and its daily expenses shall be defrayed by the Corean customs. But a daily charge for food, medicine, and attendance for patients shall be made against the vessels concerned through their respective consuls.

11. These regulations are experimental, and may be revised or amended by the Corean Government in concert with the foreign representatives. If discontinued by the Corean Government, two months' notice will be given to the foreign representatives who have given their consent to them.

IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION, Washington, January 24, 1888.

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE:

On the 25th of August, 1887, the chargé d'affaires of the United States at Berlin, acting under instructions from his Government, invited the attention of the Imperial Government to an act of Congress approved June 19, 1886, entitled "An act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes."

In the letter which he addressed to Count Berchem, then acting imperial secretary of state for foreign affairs, the chargé d'affaires of the United States pointed out that the provisions of said act were broad enough to cover either a reduction or a complete abolition by reciprocal action of tonnage and equivalent charges on navigation, and that it was open to any foreign country in all or any of whose ports a less charge is made than that now imposed in the ports of the United States, to obtain forthwith a reduction of the charge in the United States on vessels coming from such port or ports to an equality with that levied in

In accordance with instructions which I have received from my Government, I now have the honor to state, Mr. Secretary, that no tonnage or light house dues, or any equivalent tax or taxes whatever, as referred to in said act of Congress of June 19, 1886, are imposed upon American vessels entering the ports of Germany, either by the Imperial Government or by the governments of the German maritime states, and that vessels belonging to the United States of America and their cargoes are not required, in German ports, to pay any fee or due of any kind or nature, or any import due higher or other than is payable by German vessels or their cargoes.

I have, consequently, the honor to respectfully ask that you may be pleased, Mr. Secretary of State, to cause a proclamation to be issued by the President of the United States, similar to that issued on the 22d of April, 1887, in favor of the navigation of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, and setting forth that the collection of the whole of the duty of 6 cents per ton, not to exceed 30 cents per ton per annum (which is imposed by section 11 of the act of Congress of June 19, 1886), upon vessels entered in the ports of the United States from any of the ports of Germany, shall be suspended, and that such suspension shall continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States and their cargoes shall be continued in the ports of Germany.

At the same time I beg to state, while presenting the above declaration, that the Imperial Government reserves to itself all rights and privileges heretofore claimed under treaty stipulations, with regard to the treatment of German vessels entering American ports.

The careful examination of the laws and regulations relating to navigation of the different German states bordering on the sea having delayed the reply of the Imperial Government to the invitation of the United States Government, although the same state of affairs with regard to the treatment of vessels entering German ports was, as I had the honor to point out in my letter of February 15, 1886, already in existence on and before the date of the approval of the act of Congress of June 19, 1886, I trust that the United States Government will deem it proper that the tonnage dues or equivalent taxes imposed upon and levied from German ships in American ports since that date be refunded.

Accept, etc.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 26, 1888.

SIR: With reference to previous correspondence on the subject, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 24th instant, in which you inform this Department that your Government does not levy upon American shipping any tonnage or light-house dues, or any equivalent tax or taxes whatever as referred to in the act of Congress of June 19, 1886, and in which you ask that a proclamation may be issued by the President suspending the collection of tonnage duties upon vessels from the ports of Germany similar to that which was issued in the case of vessels coming from the Netherlands on the 22d of April

last.

I take pleasure in informing you, in reply, that in view of the statement contained in your note to the effect that vessels of the United States are exempt from tonnage dues and other charges in German ports, the President will at once issue a proclamation suspending the operation of the act of June 19, 1886, as to vessels coming from the ports of your country, in the matter of tonnage dues.

Adding that the Department reserves for consideration your request to have the tonnage duties levied upon German ships, in American ports, since June 19, 1886, refunded, I beg you to accept, etc.

Whereas satisfactory proof has been given to me by the Government of the Empire of Germany that no tonnage or light-house dues, or any equivalent tax or taxes whatever, are imposed upon American vessels entering the ports of the Empire of Germany, either by the Imperial Government or by the Governments of the German maritime states, and that vessels belonging to the United States of America, and their cargoes, are not required, in German ports, to pay any fee or due of any kind or nature, or any import due higher or other than is payable by German vessels or their

Provided, That there shall be excluded from the benefits of the suspension hereby declared and proclaimed the vessels of any foreign country in whose ports the fees or dues of any kind or nature imposed on vessels of the United States, or the import or export duties on their cargoes, are in excess of the fees, dues, or duties imposed on the vessels of such foreign country, or their cargoes, or of the fees, dues, or duties imposed on the vessels of Germany or the cargoes of such vessels.

And the suspension hereby declared and proclaimed shall continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and their cargoes, shall be continued in the said ports of the Empire of Germany, and no longer. IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION. Washington, January 30, 1888. (Received February 1.)

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: The central committee of the International and Jubilee Art Exhibition, which is to be held this year at Munich, and to which the note of Baron von Zedtwitz, of the 23d ultimo, had reference, has petitioned the Royal Bavarian Government to cause a request to be made diplomatically, of the United States Government, for an appropriation in behalf of the participation of American artists.

Such an appropriation would especially facilitate the formation of an American collective group, whereby the most conclusive evidence could be furnished of the progress and distinctive character which are securing to America an honorable place in the artistic world.

The relations existing between Munich and the United States in the field of art, which are constantly still further developed by the large attendance of young Americans at the Munich Academy of Arts, and by the extensive exportation of paintings might be adduced in support of the greatest possible encouragement on the part of the Government to the participation of American artists in the exhibition. Finally, moreover, the interests of American artists themselves might seem to be directly concerned, since the world wide fame enjoyed by the International Art Exhibitions of Munich, and the concourse of foreigners of all nations that may be expected on this occasion, will afford them an opportunity to dispose of their productions to advantage, and to acquire celebrity in Europe.

In view of these important advantages, the outlay of public money involved will be the less felt, inasmuch as a small amount will be sufficient for the attainment of the object in view.

The aforesaid central committee has also requested that gratuitous return transportation may be obtained both by other means of conveyance and via the railways of the United States of America, for articles placed on exhibition which may not be sold, and which it may be desired to send home, and the Royal Bavarian Government would be particularly gratified if such gratuitous transportation, which has already been granted by the state railways of Bavaria, and which will probably be granted by the other German railways and by those of other large continental countries, could also be secured on the railways of the United States of America.

I have the honor, in compliance with the desire of the Royal Bavarian Government, to commend the foregoing petition of the committee of the Munich Exhibition to your kind consideration, and I avail, etc.,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, Washington, D. C., February 1, 1888.

To collectors of customs and others:

The attention of officers of the customs is invited to the appended proclamation by the President, dated the 26th ultimo, declaring that vessels may be entered in the ports of the United States from any of the ports of the Empire of Germany, without the payment of tonnage dues at the rate of 6 cents per ton, under section 11 of the act of June 19, 1886.

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1-43

Vessels arriving from any of said ports will hereafter be admitted to entry without the payment of said dues, unless the vessel shall belong to a foreign country in whose ports the fees or dues imposed on American vessels or the duties on their cargoes exceed (1) those imposed on its own vessels or their cargoes, or exceed (2) those imposed on the vessels of Germany or their cargoes.

Certified statements may be forwarded for a refund of the dues on tonnage aforesaid, paid on the entry from German ports, of vessels exempted from the tax, and which were entered at any port of the United States on or since the 26th ultimo.

The proclamation does not apply to vessels which entered before that date, and the dues on such vessels were lawfully levied, and will be retained.

You are requested to notify this office of any tonnage tax or other equivalent tax or taxes which may be imposed hereafter on vessels of the United States in any port of the German Empire, and you will exercise care to levy tonnage dues on all vessels from said ports of any foreign country which discriminates in its own ports against vessels of the United States or their cargoes in favor of its own vessels or of the vessels of Germany.

Information has been received showing that vessels belonging to Great Britain, France, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Belgium, and Portugal arriving in the United States directly from the ports of the German Empire may be admitted under the proclamation without the payment of the dues therein mentioned.

Baron von Zedtwitz to Mr. Bayard.

IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION, Washington, June 2, 1888. (Received June 6.)

SIR: Mr. Pendleton, envoy of the United States of America at Berlin, addressed a note to the Imperial Government on the 10th of April last, in which a question of law was discussed in connection with the use of a piece of property as a pilot station by the former municipality of Apia, and complaint was made of the course pursued in this matter by Mr.

Becker, the imperial consul.

In reply the undersigned has the honor to inform the Hon. Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, that the information received by the Imperial Government in regard to the legal questions connected with the property agrees, in the main, with the statements contained in Mr. Pendleton's note. The property has hitherto belonged to Chief Patiole, who, on the 6th of August, 1884, leased it to William Coe, who is mentioned in the aforesaid note, and who sublet it to the municipality of Apia. Chief Patiole, moreover, mortgaged the property in question, together with other real estate, by a contract dated February 7, 1885, to the German Trade and Plantation Company of the South Sea Islands, in satisfaction of a debt of $1,800, and a condition of this mortgage was that, in case the debt should not be paid within three years, the property mortgaged should come into the possession of the creditor.

With regard to the course pursued by the imperial consul at Apia in this matter, it appears from the inclosed copy of the correspondence between him and Mr. Sewall, the United States consul-general, that: After the imperial consul had given notice of the desire of his Government to abrogate the municipal convention Mr. Sewall claimed the land, together with the pilot-house which had been erected thereon by the former municipality. Consul Becker did not dispute the claim to the land, but simply stated that the party who was entitled to the piece of land could not claim the surrender of the pilot-house, inasmuch as that belonged to the former municipality, and consequently must be considered as a part of its property, which was still subject to liqui-The Trade and Plantation Company took possession of the property in February last, in pursuance of the above-mentioned con-When Mr. Sewall demanded the surrender of the land by the imperial consul the latter declared that he could not summarily dispossess the Trade and Plantation Company, and that he must suggest that the claim to the property be judicially decided.

In the opinion of the Imperial Government Consul Becker's action in this matter was right, for, however the question of law in regard to the ownership of the property might have been decided, he could by no means act arbitrarily against the possessor of the property before any judicial action had been taken.

It is, however, another question whether the American consul-general was authorized to assert a claim to the property. As appears from the inclosed correspondence, he claimed the land, in the first place, for an anonymous citizen of the United States, and subsequently for him-The distinct statement is first made in Mr. Pendleton's note that the claim was made in behalf of the above-named William Coe. Since, however, Mr. Coe has expressly declared, in a written statement, which is now in possession of the Imperial Government (bearing date of March 2, 1888), that he never asked the American consul-general for his protection in the matter in question, it looks as if Mr. Sewall had acted without authority, and from motives not in harmony with Mr. With regard to the question whether the German Coe's interests. Trade and Plantation Company or William Coe is entitled to the possession of the land, it is admitted that the decision of this point may be doubtful, in view of the fact that it is uncertain which law is to be en-According to the common law which prevails in Germany the question would have to be decided in favor of the Trade and Plantation Company, because, according to it, the right of a lessee can not be paramount to that of a mortgagee, and a lessee, when dispossessed, is simply entitled to an action for damages against the lessor. The legal question may, however, remain undiscussed, since William Coe, on the 17th of March last, made an arrangement with the Plantation Company and transferred to that company, in consideration of a certain sum of money, to him in hand paid, all his rights to the property now in question. In point of fact, therefore, the question raised in this matter may be considered as settled.

According to the view taken by Mr. Sewall, and also in Mr. Pendle ton's note, the pilot-house erected by the former municipality now belongs to the Trade and Plantation Company. The Imperial Government, on the other hand, still considers the house as belonging to the former municipality, and is consequently of the opinion that the three treaty powers properly have control over it. Since it seems desirable that the building in question should still be devoted to its original purpose, and since the pilot system established by the municipality is still continued by the Samoan Government, the Imperial Government proposes that the pilot-house be turned over to the latter (the Samoan Government) until the establishment of a new communal administration (municipal government?), on condition that the aforesaid Samoan Government bind itself to keep the said pilot-house in proper repair. view of the efforts made by Tamasese's government to maintain the communal regulations at Apia, the Imperial Government thinks this proposition a reasonable one, and hopes that it will be accepted by the Government of the United States.

The undersigned, etc.,

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APIA, SAMOA, Apia, January 31, 1888.

SIR: Referring to your communication of 18th January, I have to state that while the position of Her Britannic Majesty's vice-consul, Mr. Wilson, renders the negotiations proposed by you impossible, yet that in my opinion it is advisable that some understanding be reached by ourselves respecting the pilot station, the house of which is occupied by a German subject and the land owned by a citizen of the United States. IMPERIAL GERMAN CONSULATE FOR THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS Apia, January 31, 1888.

I have had the honor to receive your polite note of this date, and, having made inquiry of the Samoan Government in relation to the matter, I have the honor to make the following reply:

1. The Samoan Government is prepared to become a party to the contract concluded between the owner of the land on which the pilot-house stands and the former municipality and to continue to be the lessee of the property, or to conclude a new contract of lease with the owner of the property. Billie Coe (Pele Toe), the colored man who concluded the contract for the lease with the municipality and who still claims to be the owner of the land, has for a week past been negotiating with Judge Martin for an extension of the contract.

2. If the owner of the land will not extend the lease and will not conclude a new contract with the Samoan Government, the latter will vacate the land without delay, and will remove the pilot-house to another place.

3. With regard to the pilot-house itself, I respectfully suggest that the sale of that building and the division of the proceeds thereof be postponed until a general arrangement is adopted concerning the property of the municipality. In view of the smallness of the amount involved, it would not seem as if there could be any objections to such a postponement. The value of the pilot-house certainly does not exceed $1,000, and you, as the representative of the Americans here, could not, in any event, claim more than one-third of that sum. The Samoan Government will be obliged to pay a suitable rent for the intervening time.

4. If you are unwilling to accept the proposition made by me in the foregoing paragraph, and do not feel disposed to permit the present occupant of the house to occupy it any longer, the Samoan Government is prepared to vacate the pilot-house also without delay.

I beg you to let me know the name of the owner of the land in question in case it no longer belongs to Billy Coe, and I respectfully ask to be informed which of my proposals you and the owner of the land feel disposed to accept.

Accept, sir, etc.,

IMPERIAL GERMAN CONSULATE FOR THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, Apia, February 13, 1888.

SIR: I have communicated the contents of your note of this date to the Samoan Government without delay. The Samoan Government has vacated both the land and the house of the pilotstation, and has intrusted the care of the house to me, as the last president of the municipality.

In the name of the Imperial German Government I lay claim to a share in the ownership of the aforesaid pilot-house. As the Germans residing here paid more than one-half of the municipal taxes, which afforded the means of defraying the expense one-nair of the municipal taxes, which altorided the means of deriving the expense of erecting the pilot-house, I am especially entitled to the possession and control of the pilot-house. I have therefore placed Mr. Johannsen, my consular clerk, in the pilot-house, in order that he may take care of the building until the adoption of a definitive arrangement with regard to the property of the municipality. This German officer will remove the house, of which the Imperial German Government is a solution when from the lend over which you do not relied as a consistency possible (in three decimals). joint owner, from the land over which you claim control as soon as possible (in three days at the latest), and will care for it elsewhere.

Accept, sir, etc.,

Mr. Sewall to Mr. Becker.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL, Apia, February 14, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date. In my letter of the same date I requested you to notify the German occupant of my land to quit. Your reply is to install there your consular clerk, who will, you state, as a German public officer, remove the house on it to another place.

I have to inform you that the right of this officer to possession is not admitted, and that the removal of the house can not be allowed. The house is a part of the freehold, and by the disruption of the municipality to which it was leased, without assigning, it has become the property of the owner of the freehold. It could never have been removed by the municipality itself, and even if removable, this must have nave been removed by the municipality itself, and even if removable, this flust have been done before the termination of the municipality's tenancy. If, as intimated by you, the house is the property of the rate-payers of the community, how, I may ask, have you been authorized to act as custodian on their behalf? The organization termed by you the "Samoan Government," from which you state you have received the care of the house, could not give you this authority for it had not this to give, never having succeeded to the rights of the municipality, and therefore in this case never having had legal possession of the house in question.

You allude to yourself as the last president of the municipality, but I need not remind you that your claim to the presidency of the municipal board and court of appeals was not recognized for the six months preceding the withdrawal of your government from the municipality convention; and even had this not been the case, I am not prepared to admit that the fact that you once held this position gives you any power superior to that of your consular colleagues over the municipal property when the municipality has ceased to exist. And equally inadmissible in my opinion is any claim to a special control over the pilot-house, because, as you state, the Germans have paid more than one-half of the municipal dues out of which the building of the pilot-house was defrayed, a statement which does not accord with the belief of American and English residents.

The rights of the subjects of the three treaty powers in the municipal government, as in participation in the municipal government, have been treated uniformly as equal.

Regarded as the property of these, the rights of their consular representatives in the pilot-house are therefore the same, excepting that the house being on my land, it would seem proper that if there is to be any custodian of it pending the division of the municipal, that custodian should be myself.

And, finally, without criticising your action in interrupting the course of orderly negotiations by an undue measure, calculated to forestall their results, I have to inform you that these negotiations can proceed no further until the property in question is vacated, and in the name of my Government I ask that this be done without de-

Mr. Becker to Mr. Sewall.

IMPERIAL GERMAN CONSULATE FOR THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, Apia, February 14, 1888.

I hereby acknowledge the receipt of your polite note of the 14th instant, relative to the pilot-station.

I regret to say that I am unable to find any reasons in your note why I should take a different course from that which has already been taken by me in this matter.

In the mean time, however, the case has reached a new phase, and, in connection therewith, I beg to be allowed to make the following remarks:

In our previous correspondence, since no claim was raised by the German Government to the land of the pilot-station, I had no occasion to examine the titles on which you base your claim to the land. Your claim to the land in question having now become known at Apia, Mr. Edward Weber, as the representative here of the principal agency of the German Trade and Plantation Company, called upon me to-day, and showed me a contract concluded between Chief Laiafi Patiole and the aforesaid principal agency. According to this contract, which was recorded in the register of principal agency. According to this contract, which was recorded in the register of the German consulate on the 19th of February, 1885, Chief Patiole mortgaged a number of pieces of land, among them that on which the pilot-house stands, to the aforesaid principal agency, and the said pieces of land have, according to the provisions of the contract, inasmuch as the amount of the mortgage was not paid at the time fixed, become the property of the German Trade and Plantation Company. That company asserts its right to the land in question, and has taken possession thereof.

Under these circumstances I can not admit that the land of the pilot-station is the property of a citizen of the United States of America, and can only suggest that you assert your claim against the above-named company by an appeal to the courts.

As to the pilot-house, I have not thought it necessary, in view of this change in the state of the case, to have it removed from the place where it now stands.

Accept, sir,

BECKER, Imperial Consul.

[Inclosure 8.]

Mr. Sewall to Mr. Becker.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES. Apia, February 16, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt yesterday of your favor dated the 14th instant, in which you inform me that the German firm has taken possession of the land of the pilot-station under a mortgage exhibited to you by Mr. E. Weber, made by the chief Patiole and registered in the Imperial German consulate on the 19th February, 1885.

In reply I have to inform you that the chief Patiole, by an indenture dated August 6, 1884, and recorded at this office the 18th of September following, leased this land to Mr. William Coe for fifteen years.

At the time, therefore, that it is claimed the mortgage was made to the German firm the land was already leased to Mr. Coe and could not have been mortgaged, excepting subject to the terms of the lease.

The action of the German firm is a trespass upon American property which can not be acquiesced in, and I have to renew my request, made in my letters of the 13th and 14th instant, that the land be speedily vacated by its German occupant.

It is more than two weeks ago that I first addressed you on this subject and stated that this land was owned by a citizen of the United States, and not until yesterday did you question this title; on the contrary, in your letter of the 31st January, you write that the German magistrate has been negotiating for a week to secure from Mr. Coe a renewal of the lease, and request me to let you know the owner in case the land no longer belongs to him.

The title to this land may be taken to have been definitely settled by the lease by Patiole to Mr. Coe and by the subsequent lease executed to the municipality after investigation by the municipal board. Mr. Coe made this lease as lessee under Patiole, and on the day it was executed the latter appeared before the municipal magistrate, and the contents of the lease having been made known to him, declared that Mr. Coe had a right to lease the land and consented to it. A copy of the acknowledgment of this lease certified by the then United States consul, Dr. Canisius, is now in this office.

The municipal board, satisfied with Mr. Coe's title, leased the land and the lease was signed by all the members of the board; your predecessor, Dr. Stuebel, and H. Martin Ruge, esq., being the German representatives. This lease is dated five months before the alleged mortgage to the German firm.

From this time the rent has been paid to Mr. Coe, and his title has been fully recognized. For the past year, as you are aware, Mr. E. Weber has been a member of the board, without whose approval this payment could not have been made

With the terms of the lease to the municipality you are doubtless familiar. It covenants that the land after the expiration of the lease shall be "peaceably and quickly" surrendered to Mr. Coe.

The lease is now terminated and this covenant unfulfilled.

The question thus presented is not one simply of conflicting claims between private parties, the settlement of which might perhaps, as you suggest, be left to legal action, but it involves the good faith of the former municipality and of every member of this community.

The obligations of the municipality should be fulfilled, and these demand that the land should be surrendered [as] covenanted in the lease.

An early adjustment of this matter is desired by me, as it is one of great importance.

I am, etc.,

HAROLD MARSH SEWALL, Consul-General.

IMPERIAL GERMAN CONSULATE FOR THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, Apia, February 16, 1888.

In reply to your favor of this day's date, I have the honor to state that the principal agency of the German Trade and Plantation Company, although it has been made acquainted with the contents of your communications, still asserts its right to the possession and ownership of the land of the pilot-station. According to German law. I am not authorized to dispossess the aforesaid company of a piece of land which it now holds, unless an executory decision pronounced against it by a German court is exhibited to me.

The question who is entitled to the possession of the land in dispute is one of a legal character, and can be decided by a competent court only, or, if there is no such court, by an agreement between our Governments, by arbitration, for instance.

I do not, therefore, think it necessary for me here to discuss any further the legal points referred to in your polite note. I merely take the liberty to state that before the point at issue is decided the question should be settled which law (German or American) is to be taken as the basis of the decision. I can not admit that a dispute between a German and an American concerning a piece of land situated in Samoa should be decided wholly in accordance with the principles of law which prevail in the United States, as you appear to think that it should.

As to the reasons why I did not think it necessary sooner to discuss the question of

With regard to the pilot-house, I can only likewise suggest to you to await the decision of our Governments. No one can suffer any appreciable detriment from a post-ponement of the decision of this whole matter. The interests of the American citizens concerned seem to be fully protected, since all the ready money that belonged to the former municipality is now in the custody of Mr. Hamilton, the American vice-consul. IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION, Washington, June 4, 1888. (Received June 6.)

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor, in obedience to instructions received from the Imperial Government, most respectfully to inform you that it is proposed to hold during the months of April, May, and June, 1889, in the Exhibition Palace at Berlin, a general German exhibition of devices for the prevention of accidents.

The initiative in this enterprise has been taken by parties interested in the manufacture of such articles, and its object is to disseminate a knowledge of the apparatus and devices that have been invented for the prevention of accidents among those engaged in the various branches of industry, and also to promote the improvement and multiplication of such inventions.

The accomplishment of this enterprise will, it is believed, not only facilitate the fulfillment of the duties incumbent upon employers, but at the same time secure to the employed increased protection against the dangers to which their work exposes them.

The Government of His Majesty the Emperor recognizes the enterprise as a means of benefiting the workingman, and will strive to promote its success.

Foreign exhibitors also are invited to take part in the exhibition.

I inclose a number of copies of the programme, which has been issued in the name of the committee of arrangements, remarking at the same time that additional copies of this document will be furnished, if desired, and that the management of the exhibition intends, if it shall be found necessary, to have an English edition of the programme prepared.

SIR: Referring to my note of the 7th instant, in which I returned to you certain documents (left by you with me informally for my consideration), relative to the subject of the validity of marriages in China between Chinese subjects and foreigners, I now have the honor to inclose herewith a memorandum, which embodies the views of the Department in relation to the matter.

MEMORANDUM.

By the common law of Christendom, brought with them to this country by its European colonists and built upon as the basis of its political institutions, it is essential to marriage that it should be a "voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others;" and it is by such marriages alone that the family is constituted as an integer of the State. Such being the case, it is not within the province of this Department to admit extraterritorial validity for any foreign legislation which does not give a similar definition, and make such exclusiveness an essential element of marriage.

The Department, therefore, can not regard the status of citizens of the United States, though resident in China, as in any way affected by such legislation; and if by the Chinese law controlling marriage such exclusiveness, as it is generally understood, is not imposed, this Department can not take any steps towards recognizing as marriages such sexual unions as are based on such polygamous law. At the same time the Department will interpose no objection to police regulations requiring notice to Chinese authorities of all consensual marriages in China of citizens of the United States.

It is proper to add that the matrimonial status of a person who is a citizen of and domiciled in a particular State of the American Union is determinable by the law of such State and not by the laws of the Federal Government of the United States.

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 17, 1887.

SIR: I lost no time in referring to the board of trade your letter of August 15, inviting the co-operation of Her Majesty's Government with that of the United States with a view to lightening the burdens on shipping and amending the laws relating to shipping, etc., and also asking for information as to whether any, and, if so, what discrimination exists in this country against vessels of the United States as compared with British vessels or the vessels of any other country. I have now the honor to state to you that I am informed by the board of trade that there are no such discriminating duties on United States vessels as compared with British vessels in ports of the United Kingdom. Such indeed would be contrary to the convention of commerce between this country and the United States of July 3, 1815, clause ii of which stipulates that "no higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States, nor in the ports of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels."

This stipulation, so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, was carried into effect by the Act 59, George III, chapter 54, clause viii.

It is, moreover, the general and long established policy of the United Kingdom, apart from treaties, not to impose discriminating duties of any kind, whether on ships or cargoes; and even the coasting trade of the United Kingdom is freely open to vessels of the United States as to other foreign vessels, although the United States does not admit British vessels to reciprocal privileges in her coasting trade.

The board of trade are also making inquiries as to whether there are any ports in the United Kingdom where the light-house dues in the trade with the United States are lower than the tonnage dues now leviable in the United States, so that, as regards these ports, British vessels would be entitled to the reciprocal treatment promised in the circular which accompanied your note; and as soon as I shall have heard the result of those inquiries, I shall have the honor of addressing a further communication to you.

SIR: Since the date of my note to you of the 31st ultimo I have been in telegraphic communication with Her Majesty's minister at Peking regarding the question of the collection at Hong-Kong by Chinese officials of lekin on kerosene oil shipped thence to Canton.

sir J. Walsham informs me that the private lekin collectorate at Hong-Kong, of which complaint was made, has ceased since Sir Robert Hart took charge of the Chinese customs stations, which, except in regard to opium, have no concern with foreign trade ships or foreigners at Hong-Kong.

Kerosene oil shipped from Hong-Kong in Chinese crafts to a treaty port is subjected to a lekin duty which the Chinese customs service collects at Hong-Kong for the account of the Chinese provincial authorities of the port of destination, in addition to the native tariff duty; but if the oil is conveyed in a foreign vessel, the foreign importer pays import duty according to maritime tariff at the port of entry and the lekin duty is not levied until it passes into the hands of the Chinese dealer, and is then collected not by the maritime customs service. but by native officials.

then collected, not by the maritime customs service, but by native officials.

Sir J. Walsham further states that lekin on the oil in the Canton province has been considerably reduced, and that the import duties collected under the native tariff may perhaps shortly be so also.

Under the circumstances described by Sir J. Walsham, it does not appear that there is any ground for representations to the Chinese Government based on treaty rights, as there is no interference with foreign shipping, and the lekin is not levied on the oil so long as it remains in foreign hands.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES London, December 28, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acquaint you that in accordance with the instructions contained in your telegram to the minister of the 10th instant, I attended the fourth and subsequent meetings of the international conference on the sugar bounties question, until its adjournment on the 19th of this month; and I inclose herewith (inclosure A) the copy of a printed document embodying the minutes of its proceedings, together with other papers of interest connected with the same, to which I shall refer here-

Upon my arrival at the foreign office on Monday, the 12th instant, to attend the meeting fixed for that day, I informed the president, Baron Henry de Worms, that I had been authorized by you to represent the United States in a friendly way at the conference, and to report its proceedings to my Government, but not to participate in its deliberations, nor to commit the United States to any of the conclusions which might be arrived at.

Baron de Worms expressed great pleasure at the presence of a representative from the United States, and the other delegates were good enough to assure me that their sentiments were in complete accord with those to which the president had given utterance, many of them coupling with this assurance an expression of regret that my Government was not officially represented, upon the ground that no conference on the sugar industry could be complete without the formal participation therein of the United States.

Baron de Worms also read to the conference a French translation of Mr. Phelps' note to Lord Salisbury (inclosure A, page 51) of December 12, a copy of which has been already sent to you in dispatch No. 643, of the 17th instant, from this legation.

The French language was exclusively used in the deliberations of the conference, at which the following nations were represented: Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Russia, Spain, and Sweden.

Brigil also sent a delegate but instead of putting in an approximate at the conference.

Brazil also sent a delegate, but instead of putting in an appearance at the conference, he remained at Paris, and from there addressed a letter to the president (inclosure A, p. 44), transmitting a brief statement with regard to the sugar industry in Brazil and to the legislation of that country affecting the same, together with an intination that, in his opinion, the conference would be devoid of practical results, owing to the conflicting interests of the countries represented, which would prevent their coming to any agreement.

France sent five delegates and a secretary; Holland and Great Britain four each (of the latter, Lord Onslow, colonial under-secretary of state, represented the British colonies); Belgium sent three delegates; Spain and Germany two each, and the other powers a single delegate. Most of these gentlemen, whose names are transmitted herewith (inclosure A, p. 31) are connected with the ministries of finance or with the customs departments of their respective countries. They are thoroughly conversant with every detail in regard to the sugar industry, and some of them had been at previous conferences in reference thereto.

The senior French and British and the second Spanish delegates are, however, members of parliament in their respective countries, and the Austro-Hungarian, the senior Spanish, the Italian, and the second French delegates are diplomatists; the two latter being first secretaries, respectively, of the Italian and French embassies accredited to this court, and Mr. Dupuy de Lôme, of Spain, having been formerly secretary of legation at Washington.

The whole of the beet-sugar interest of the world, save our own, which is insigificant, and about four-fifths of that of cane-sugar, were thus officially represented at the conference, which was convoked for reasons set forth in the Marquis of Salisbury's circular dispatch of July 2 last (inclosure A, p. 1), to Her Majesty's representatives accredited to the governments invited to participate, a copy of which is doubtless on file at the Department of State.

According to the terms of this dispatch, the attention of the proposed conference would be particularly called to the following points, without, however, excluding others bearing on the sugar industry which the delegates might wish to consider:

(1) The means of remedying the unsettled condition of the sugar trade.

(2) The possibility of adoption by the Governments represented of a system of refining and manufacturing in bond.

(3) The elaboration of a system of duties and drawbacks, which should render any difference between them in favor of exporters of sugar an impossibility.

(4) The examination of any proposals tending to guaranty the abolition of bounties which might be made.

It has long been obvious here that the sugar industry of Great Britain has been seriously impaired by the heavy bounties given by certain Governments (France and Germany in particular) to their exporters, who were thereby enabled, with profit to themselves, to place sugar on the London market at a lower rate than it could possibly be produced in this country save at a considerable loss.

That this has been the case for some time past with regard to sugar imported from the United States is well known, and the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was called last year to the fact that our Government was giving bounties, to the extent of thousands of dollars annually, in the shape of drawbacks, by Mr. Phelps' dispatch No. 300, of June 19, 1886, which was based upon information furnished to him by an American resident of London, to the effect that by means of the excess of draw-backs received upon sugar exported from New York over the duty originally paid upon the importation of the raw material from the West Indies, the refiners of that city were able to sell their sugar, with profit, in the London market at a lower price than that originally paid for the raw material.

The drawback has since been reduced, but it still affords a bounty to our exporters. Urgent representations, which are fully set forth in the accompanying Blue Book on sugar bounties, issued in 1884 by the board of trade (inclosure B), have been made on the subject at different times to successive British ministries, and there have been attempts by this country since 1880 to persuade certain Governments to take part in a conference, with a view to the abolition of bounties; but it is only this year that these efforts have met with success.

As it can not be supposed that any of the Governments, in consenting to send delegates to the conference, were actuated by other motives than self-interest, it must be assumed that they have found the system of giving bounties, which in certain countries, from motives of self-protection, have been steadily increasing in amount, more than their budgets would stand, and that they have consequently arrived at the conclusion that it is contrary to their interests to continue the disbursement annually of large sums, the chief effect of which is to cheapen the price of sugar to the British consumer.

The question of bounties in our own and certain other countries is treated so fully in a very interesting pamphlet by Dr. W. H. Wiley on the sugar industry of the United States, published by the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, in 1885 (Bulletin No. 5, Chemical Division), that I deem it unnecessary to dwell at length upon the subject.

The manner is therein set forth in which the exportation of sugar is encouraged by the payment of Government bounties, usually in the excess of drawbacks over duties. These drawbacks are supposed to be exactly equal in amount to the duties, but as a matter of fact this is not the case; for the reason that it is often difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the exact quantity of sugar which can be obtained from a given amount of beets or cane; as this depends not only upon the quality of the machinery, but also upon that of the raw material used. In Belgium, for instance, where there is a fixed legal yield (prise en charge), it appears that the beet is much richer in the north, and consequently productive of more sugar than in the south.

The first sitting of the conference was devoted to the election of officers, the senior British delegate, Baron Henry de Worms, M. P., parliamentary secretary of the board of trade, being chosen president, and the Comte de Kuefstein, representing Austria-

Hungary, vice-president.

Papers embodying statistics of the sugar trade, and also the systems of taxation, duties, and drawbacks prevalent in each of the countries represented, were laid before the conference at this meeting. The details contained in these documents, which were furnished by the different powers at the request of the British Government, are of much interest, and are transmitted herewith (inclosure A, pp. 2-29).

After the expression in happily worded speeches (inclosure A. p. 31) by the president and vice-president of a hope, in which M. Guillaume, of Belgium, concurred, that the conference might be able to agree upon means for carrying into effect the object for which it had come together, namely, the abolition of bounties, direct and indirect, upon the exportation of sugar, an adjournment was voted to Monday, November 28, on the understanding that meanwhile the delegates should acquaint themselves with the memoranda contained in the papers to which I have already referred.

At the second meeting of the conference the questions at issue were seriously broached, as will be seen by the minutes (inclosure A, pp. 34-40), in which the positions assumed by the delegates of each country are fully set forth. Upon the suggestion of M. Kamensky, of Russia, the representatives of the powers were requested to state in turn the views of their respective Governments, and especially, whether and to what extent the latter favor the exportation of sugar by granting direct or indirect bounties, and whether they really desire to abolish the same.

From the statements made in reply to this suggestion, which are given so fully in the minutes that I deem any description of them other than a brief summary uncecessary, it appeared that the recent legislation of Austria-Hungary and that of Germany tend to the abolition of bounties; that France, while compelled in self-defense to give very high bounties to her exporters, earnestly hopes that by their abolition elsewhere she may be enabled to do away with them; that in Russia they had already been abolished, save on the Asiatic frontier (where they would also cease to exist in 1891); that Spain practically gives no bounties; and that Holland, Belgium, Italy, Sweden, and Denmark would cheerfully join in their abolition with the other

In the course of their statements a variety of interesting statistics were gone into by the delegates, the accuracy of some of the figures quoted and the conclusions of certain members of the conference based thereupon being occasionally called in question by others.

The discussion was continued at the third meeting of the conference, which took place on Wednesday, November 30, and it soon became evident that the delegates, while apparently agreed upon the principle of abolishing bounties, were far from unanimous as to the means of attaining that end. The majority appeared to favor the proposal of a tax in each country upon the quantity of sugar produced and intended for consumption therein, the raw material being admitted free of duty, and all necessity for a drawback being thereby obviated. But the Belgian delegates, under instructions from their Government, objected strongly to this system, giving as reasons that (1) no uniform method for abolishing bounties would be, in their opinion, possible, owing to the difference between the fiscal systems and the customs of the trade of different countries; and (2) that a system of refining and manufacturing in bond would be ont of the question in Belgium (where it had been tried for a short time), owing to the unpopularity and to the expense to the state of the strict excise supervision which would become necessary, and would be injurious to the trade.

It was eventually decided to appoint a committee to consider the different proposals, and to recommend the best means to be adopted for the abolition of the bounties.

In this connection, M. Sans-Leroy, who represented French interests with marked ability at the conference, raised the question of saccharometry, stating that in his opinion the exact saccharine value of the product to be taxed (under the system to which I have just referred) should be determined before the appointment of a committee to consider and recommend a general system of taxation; but after some discussion this question was referred to the committee, which was composed of the Comte de Kuefstein (Austria-Hungary), Messrs. Jachnigen (Germany), Guillaume (Belgium), Sans-Leroy (France), Verkerk Pistorius (Holland), and Walpole (Great Britain).

The conference then adjourned until the committee should be in a position to report.

On Monday, December 12, the conference, at which, as already stated, I was present that day for the first time, held its fourth sitting to receive the report of the committee (inclosure A, p. 51), which recommends:

(1) A system of taxation based upon the quantities of sugar produced and ready for consumption, including glucose and sugar extracted from molasses, as the sole means of abolishing bounties. (Belgium, while assenting to the principle of the abolition of bounties, makes formal reservations in a second paragraph of this clause with regard to the method suggested by the other members of the committee.)

(2) That the extent to which saccharometry shall be used in the proposed system of taxation upon the quantities of sugar produced be referred to each Government.

Uniformity of method in its use is suggested as desirable.

(3) That the different Governments communicate to each other their respective views upon the aforesaid suggestions before March 1, and if favorable to the same, that they be requested to formulate and transmit to each other a project for the taxation of quantities of sugar produced, which project should state the extent to which saccharometry should be employed.

The report of the committee led to a protracted discussion; most of the delegates being in favor of its adoption, save as respects the clause affecting Belgium. The senior Belgian delegate repeated the objections of his Government to a system of refining and manufacturing in bond, and then proceeded to explain the concessions proposed in its stead as guaranties for the suppression of bounties. These consisted of modifications in the system now in force in Belgium. This is based upon the volume and the density of the juice, which the Belgian Government believes to be ascertained with accuracy by means of an apparatus provided with an automatic meter, a drawing and description of which will be found herewith (inclosure A, p. 10). It is now assumed, for purposes of taxation, that for every hectoliter of volume, and for every degree of density registered by this apparatus 1,500 grams of sugar are obtained, and this is taxed at 45 francs per 100 kilograms; but it is well known that the actual yield of sugar is much greater. With a view to doing away with the difference between the legal and the actual yield, M. Guillaume proposed to raise the former (prise en charge) to 1,700 grams, and to reduce the tax from 45 to 25 francs per 100 kilograms. He claimed that these modifications, if adopted, would afford complete guaranties for the abolition of bounties, and gave his reasons at considerable length; but they were not deemed satisfactory, such abolition being impossible, in the opinion of most of the delegates, of accomplishment by the means proposed by M. Guillaume, for the reason that no fixed legal yield could be settled upon as an equivalent of the actual yield, which must vary, as already stated, in accordance with the richness of the beet. Full particulars of the discussion on this subject will be found in the minutes (inclosure A, pp. 45-50).

The delegates promised to submit to their respective Governments the Belgian proposals, intimating clearly, however, that they would not be considered satisfactory.

After adopting the report of the committee the conference adjourned until Wednesday, December 14, when its fifth sitting (inclosure A, page 52) was held.

An ineffectual attempt was made on this occasion by the French and Dutch delegates to induce their Belgian colleague to modify the position assumed by him at the last meeting.

Mr. Dupuy de Lôme, of Spain, then raised a question of importance, especially to countries not belonging to the sugar union, which it is hoped (and in my opinion not without reason) will be the outcome of the conference, namely, as to the guaranties to be given to countries within the union against the importation from those not parties thereto of bounty-fed sugar, which he maintained would, if allowed, be equivalent to the imposition of a discriminating duty upon non-bounfied sugar, and would be a violation of the most favored nation clause in many treaties of commerce.

This question, although it evoked no general expression of opinion, was deemed worthy of serious consideration, and it is to be submitted during the adjournment to the various Governments represented. It will undoubtedly be again brought forward when the conference re-assembles in April next, and a penal clause will not improbably be inserted in the treaty.

M. Verkerk Pistorius, of Holland, also raised the question of "surtaxes," which he explained to be the difference between the tax levied in a country upon homemade sugar and the duty charged upon sugar imported from abroad. a desire to have a clause inserted in the treaty prohibiting "surtaxes," on the ground that any country, by allowing an import duty in excess of the internal tax on sugar, could at once create protection for its home market, and that such protection might, by developing the manufacture of sugar, enable a country of the union largely to increase its exports of that commodity.

There was some discussion of this question, which was eventually dropped, most of the delegates stating that they were without instructions on the subject, as their respective Governments had not deemed "surtaxes" to be within the range of the deliberations of the conference; the more so, as no rule could be laid down in the matter without interfering with the right of each nation to impose such import duties as it might deem advantageous or desirable. It was, moreover, distinctly intimated that certain countries—France and Russia among the number—would not undertake to abolish "surtaxes," as such a step would deprive them of the right to reserve their home markets to their own sugar, should they wish to do so. I do not think this subject will be again brought forward upon the re-assembling of the conference; certainly not with any chances of success; but it is to be submitted by the delegates to their Governments

The Earl of Onslow, before the adjournment of the conference, in reply to a suggestion of the French delegate that it would be impossible to conclude any arrangement on the sugar-bounties question without including therein the British colonies, stated that of all the self-governing colonies of this Empire Victoria and New Zealand alone give bounties; the former grants one of a half penny per pound, which has thus far never been claimed or paid, and in the latter a bounty of 3s. 6d. per hundred-weight exists, but he hoped that before March 1 these two colonies and all the others excluded by Article VIII of the proposed convention would have agreed to become parties thereto.

The proceedings of the seventh and last meeting of the conference, which took place on Monday, December 19, were chiefly formal.

The Spanish delegates presented a memorandum of their proposal with regard to a penal clause (inclosure A, p. 58.)

The protocol, of which I inclose an original copy (inclosure C) herewith (it is also to be found in inclosure A, p. 63), was signed by the delegates of all the powers officially represented at the conference, it being understood that Belgium made express reservations as to the last paragraph, relative to Article III of the "projet de convention," which formally records the reservations made by the French, Austro-Hungarian, German, Spanish, Italian, Dutch, and Russian delegates as to the Belgian proposals.

I transmit herewith a translation of the protocol and "projet de convention"

After the signature of the protocol a letter was read by the president from Lord Salisbury (inclosure A, p. 64) congratulating the members of the conference upon the successful issue of their labors; which were then brought to a close by Baron Henry de Worms in a speech summarizing the results that had been accomplished, and thanking the delegates for their co-operation. To this the vice-president and M. Sans Leroy, of France, replied. The conference then adjourned to Thursday, April 5,

It was undoubtedly successful in its results, beyond the expectation of those who took part in it; and I ought to add that, in my opinion, this was largely due to the ability and tact of the president, Baron Henry de Worms; although, of course, his services would have been of no avail, had not the Governments represented been anxious to do away with bounties if possible.

It is scarcely necessary for me to call attention to the fact that by signing the protocol on the 19th instant the delegates are only bound to submit to their respective Governments the "projet de convention," and that the latter will only become binding upon its ratification, which is expected to take place in April next.

Of course, it is quite possible that the convention may not be ratified, but I infer from what I heard at the conference, and from frequent conversations with the leading delegates, who were in constant telegraphic communication with their Governments, that a sugar union will be formed next year, having for its basis the abolition of export bounties.

Belgium can hardly afford to be excluded from such a union, if the other powers represented at the conference unite in forming it; it will certainly not be admitted on the terms proposed by the Belgian delegates. It is therefore probable that these proposals will be modified in such a manner as to furnish the guaranties required by the other powers.

I have already stated that a very earnest desire was evinced at the conference that the United States should become a party to the proposed sugar union and should sign the convention in April next.

I do not conceive it to be a part of my duty to express an opinion as to the propriety of our adopting such a course or otherwise; but I observe that the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to Congress on the state of the finances for this year (page xviii) recommends that "our drawback laws be so framed as to insure the payment of no more than the amounts actually collected in duties (i. e., that bounties be abolished)."

It may be well, however, to point out in this connection— First. That under Article IV any Government may become a party to the convention without necessarily adopting the principle of refining and manufacturing in bond, by undertaking to impose no duties on sugars or not to allow any drawback or reimbursement of duties upon imported sugars.

Second. That, by joining the proposed sugar union, a nation will not, according to present indications, be compelled to forego the right to protect its home market by import duties to any extent that it may consider advantageous.

Third. That should a Government not deem it advisable to join the union at the time of its formation it may do so hereafter, under Article VII of the convention, by notifying the British Government.

Fourth. That sugar imported into the union from bounty-giving countries will, in all probability, be subjected, should the penal clause previously mentioned be inserted in the convention, to a duty whereby any advantages derived from such bounties will be annulled.

I have delayed sending this report for a few days in the hope of obtaining an English translation of inclosure A; but I am informed that this will only be ready for the opening of Parliament in February.

I should have been happy to translate it myself had the clerical assistance allowed to this legation been adequate; but it would have been impossible, under the circumstances, for me to undertake any such work, consistently with my other duties, without greatly retarding the transmission of this report. As soon as a translation can le obtained it shall be forwarded to you.

It is understood that Her Majesty's Government will communicate to all the others who have participated in the conference, through the usual diplomatic channels, any expression of the views of the powers with respect to the principles adopted by the conference, and any proposals as to the application of the system of taxation upon quantities of sugar produced, which may reach the foreign office here.

Copies of any such documents which may be received at this legation shall be immediately forwarded to you.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY WHITE.

Note.—Inclosures A, B, and C are not printed herewith.

[Inclosure D in Mr. White's report. ]

The sugar bounties conference.—Proposed convention.

The members of the International Conference on Sugar Bounties met yesterday afternoon at the foreign office for the last time before adjourning. Baron Henry de Worms presided, and all the representatives attended. The sitting occupied overthree hours, and on rising the conference adjourned to April 5.

The following letter was read to the members of the conference by Baron Henry de Worms:

"Foreign Office, December 17.

"MY DEAR BARON DE WORMS: A political engagement of long standing will take me away from London, and will, to my great regret, prevent me from having the opportunity of meeting the delegates to the sugar conference at their final sitting. Will you kindly be the bearer of my apologies, and, at the same time, of my sincere congratulation on the success which has attended their labors? The present suspension of their labors is only an adjournment. I shall hope to have the honor of welcoming them on their re-assembling in March, when I trust they will return armed with the powers necessary to give practical effect to their valuable deliberations. "Believe me, yours, very truly,

"SALISBURY.

"To the Baron HENRY DE WORMS, M. P."

The following protocol was signed yesterday by the delegates of the various States represented at the conference:

"The undersigned delegates of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, Russia, and Sweden met in London on the 24th of November, 1887, in order to study the bases of an understanding with regard to the suppression of bounties on the exportation of sugars. After the deliberations recorded in the 'proces verbaux' of the sittings, they arrived at an agreement upon the principles enunciated in the report of the commission. In order agreement upon the principles enunciated in the report of the commission. In order to give a practical application to this enunciation, the president of the conference communicated to them a proposal of convention, which they have examined and undertake to submit to the consideration of their Governments, praying them to make known to her Britannic Majesty before the 1st March, if they adhere to the principles of this proposed convention which is annexed to the present protocol. In case of agreement each Government shall communicate with the British Government before the said date a proposal indicating the bases of the application of the system of taxing the quantities of sugar produced. This proposal is to state with what limitations and in what cases saccharometry will be employed. Each Government will at the same time make known if, for the sake of uniformity, it may be disposed to admit what is called the French method generally employed in the commerce of several nations. With regard to Article III of the said proposed convention, the French delegates, not considering that the system proposed by Belgium presents for the suppression of bounties the guaranties with which the high contracting parties ought to be furnished, make the most express reserves as to this article. The delegates of Germany, Austria-Hungary Spain, Italy, the Netherlands, and Russia adhere to the reserves made by the French delegates.

"Done at London, 19th December, 1887."

The following is the annex to the above protocol:

"The high contracting parties, desiring to insure the total suppression of premiums, open or disguised, on the export of sugars, have resolved to conclude a convention to this effect, and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries the following: who, after having exhibited their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

"(1) The high contracting parties undertake to take or to propose to their respective legislatures measures which shall constitute an absolute and complete guaranty that there shall not be granted any premium, open or disguised, on the export of sugars.

"(2) The high contracting parties undertake to adopt, or to propose to their respective legislatures, a system of taxation of the quantities of sugar produced, and ready for consumption, as the only plan which permits of the suppression of the premiums in question, and to submit to the same arrangement the factories of glucose and factories for the extraction of sugar from molasses.

"(3) Belgium not being under the same conditions with regard to the application of the system of taxing the quantities of sugar produced, the system at present in force in that Kingdom may be maintained with the following modifications: The assessment of the tax shall be reduced from 45 francs to 25 francs, from the time the present convention shall be put in force. The capacities of the compounding factories shall be increased from 1,500 to 1,700 grams.

"(4) States or colonies and foreign possessions of the high contracting parties, who, though not adopting the system mentioned in Article II, do not levy taxes on sugars, or who agree not to allow upon raw or refined sugars which are being exported any drawback, re-imbursement, or reduction of charge of dues or quantities, shall also be admitted to the convention.

"(5) In case a State which does not levy duties on sugar shall impose them, this State must levy those duties upon the quantities of sugar produced and intended for consumption, or at least must not give any drawback, re-imbursement, or discharge of duties or quantities.

"(6) The high contracting parties shall communicate the laws which may have been already adopted, or which are about to be enacted, in their respective States with reference to the object of the present convention.

"(7) States which have not taken part in the present convention are admitted to adhere to it on their demand. This adhesion shall be notified in diplomatic course to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, and by them to other contracting pow-

"(8) The stipulations of the present convention shall be applicable to the colonies and possessions of her Britannic Majesty, with the exception of those here named, that is to say, the East Indies, Canada, Newfoundland, the Cape, Natal, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia, Western Australia, and New

"In any case the stipulations of the present convention shall be applicable to any of the colonies above indicated from the time when the British Government shall notify the adhesion of that colony or possession to the other contracting powers. Each of the colonies or possessions above named which may have adhered to the present convention preserves the power of retiring in the same manner as the contracting powers. In case one of the colonies or possessions alluded to should desire to withdraw from the convention, a notification to this effect shall be given by the British Government to the other contracting parties.

"(9) The present convention shall be put in force from—

"(9) The present convention shall be put in force from —. It shall remain in force for ten years from that day, and in case none of the high contracting parties shall have notified twelve months before the expiration of the said period of ten years its intention to put an end to it, it shall continue in force for a year, and thus from year to year. In case one of the signatory powers shall denounce the convention, this denunciation shall have no effect save with respect to that power.

"(10) The present convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in London within — months or sooner, if possible."

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, February 1, 1288.

My Lord: I have the honor to acquaint you that I have just received a cable dispatch from my Government informing me that the consul-general of the United States at Halifax has reported that two American vessels laden with fresh fish have been compelled to put into that port for repairs, and that their cargoes will rot unless allowed to be landed, which the Canadian authorities have forbidden as being a violation of the treaty and of British statutes. The consul-general adds that if this refusal be persisted in the fish must be thrown overboard, serious loss being thereby inflicted upon the owners of the vessels.

I am instructed to bring your lordship's attention to this transaction, which is regarded by my Government as a fresh violation of the provisions of the existing treaty between Great Britain and the United States as well as of the ordinary comity that should subsist between two friendly nations. It is made more pointed by having occurred while the representatives of the two countries are actually engaged at Washington in an effort to adjust the questions in dispute touching the fisheries felt by my Government to be an attempt on the part of the Canadian authorities to bring to bear upon the negotiations a pressure similar to that which they have previously employed to obtain from the United States an alteration of its revenue laws.

I venture to add, my lord, the expression of my opinion that this transaction, if persisted in, will have very grave consequences in its probable effect on the negotiations now pending at Washington.

No. 791.7

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 17, 1888.

SIR: I transmit herewith translation of a note received by me on the 15th instant, wherein the Venezuelan minister sets forth the information lately supplied to him, to the effect that the legislature of Demerara has recently asserted a claim to British jurisdiction over the gold-mining district of Caratal, on the headwaters of the Yuruari River, and that by a decree of the governor of British Guiana, dated December 31, 1887, formal denial is made of the validity of a grant by the Venezuelan Government for the construction of a railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipaté, a city in the Caratal district, on the ground that it passes "in and over certain territories and lands within and forming part of the colony of British Guiana."

No other foundation for the minister's statement appears than the article in the Financier of January 24, to which Mr. Olavarria's inform-

The Government of the United States has hitherto taken an earnest and friendly interest in the question of boundaries so long in dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, and, so far as its disinterested counsels were admissible, has advocated an amicable, final, and honorable settlement of the dispute. We have followed this course on the assumption that the issue was one of historical fact, eminently adaptable for admitting arbitration, and that the territorial claims of each party had a fixed limit, the right to which would without difficulty be determined according to the evidence.

The claim now stated to have been put forth by the authorities of British Guiana necessarily gives rise to grave disquietude, and creates an apprehension that the territorial claim does not follow historical traditions or evidence, but is apparently indefinite. At no time hitherto does it appear that the district of which Guacipatí is the center has been claimed as British territory or that such jurisdiction has ever been asserted over its inhabitants, and if the reported decree of the governor of British Guiana be indeed genuine it is not apparent how any line of railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipatí could enter or traverse territory within the control of Great Britain.

It is true that the line claimed by Great Britain as the western boundary of British Guiana is uncertain and vague. It is only necessary to examine the British colonial office list for a few years back to perceive this. In the issue for 1877, for instance, the line runs nearly southwardly from the mouth of the Amacuro to the junction of the Cotinga and Takutu Rivers. In the issue for 1887, ten years later, it makes a wide detour to the westward, following the Yuruari. Guacipatí lies considerably to the westward of the line officially claimed in 1887; and it may perhaps be instructive to compare with it the map which doubtless will be found in the colonial office list for the present year.

It may be well for you to express anew to Lord Salisbury the great gratification it would afford this Government to see the Venezuelan dispute amicably and honorably settled, by arbitration or otherwise, and our readiness to do anything we properly can to assist in that end.

In the course of your conversation you may refer to the publication in the London Financier of January 24 (a copy of which you can procure and exhibit to Lord Salisbury), and express apprehension lest the widening pretensions of British Guiana to possess territory over which Venezuelan jurisdiction has never heretofore been disputed may not diminish the chances for a practical settlement.

If, indeed, it should appear that there is no fixed limit to the British boundary claim, our good disposition to aid in a settlement might not only be defeated, but be obliged to give place to a feeling of grave concern.

I append, for your information, a copy of the map recently printed, with the boundary correspondence, by Venezuela, on which are roughly penciled the situation of Guacipatí and the line of demarkation according to the colonial office list for 1887. The line for 1877 nearly follows that shown on the map as "Sir Robert Schomburgk's line."

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF VENEZUELA, Washington, D. C., February 15, 1888.

EXCELLENCY: I have just received from the legation of Venezuela in Paris the important dispatch which I have the honor to transcribe to your excellency, as follows:

"Paris, February 3, 1888.

"SIR: I send you, herewith inclosed, a cutting from the Financier, of London, the number for January 24. You will thereby see that the English invasions of Venezuelan territory not only continue but are being boldly extended, and are about to reach the territory of the Yuruari.

"On the 29th of November there was proposed to the colonial legislature of Demerara the construction of a railway which, crossing the Mazaruni and Cuyuni Rivers, will extend to the boundaries of the colony. In the course of the discussion it was said that the Yuruari district was included within those boundaries. It was the Queen's proctor who alleged this and who demanded urgency in the consideration of the measure.

"By the inclosed paper you will perceive that the bill was approved; that an armed force has been dispatched to the Yuruari; and that no resistance was there apprehended, because the Venezuelan inhabitants barely reached one hundred in number, the rest being English. In the same paper is copied a decree of the governor of Demerara, dated December 31, 1887, denying the validity of a contract entered into by the Government of Venezuela for opening a railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipati. It thus appears that they content themselves with no less than the possession of the mining district of the Yuruari, as well as the Orinoco, not merely as far as the Amacuro, but up to Ciudad Bolivar. I deem it urgent that you should lay these facts before Mr. Bayard and represent to him the scandalous progress of the British usurpations in Yenezuelan territory."

With these facts before you your excellency must be convinced that the British Government in such proceedings follows a preconceived plan with the object of gaining possession in the shortest time possible of the whole of the territory of Venezuelan Guiana and of the most important of South America rivers.

Already this movement is no longer concealed under pretended boundary rights; it is no longer confined to the capricious lines mapped out by adventurous engineers upon the charts of that important region in obedience to the will which pays them. England has at last declared emphatically that her rights are without limit and embrace whatever regions may be suggested to her by her insatiable thirst for conquest. She even goes so far as to deny the validity of railway grants comprised within territory where not even the wildest dreams of fancy had ever conceived that the day would come when Venezuela's right thereto could be disputed.

The fact is, that until now England has relied upon impunity; she beholds us a weak and unfriended nation, and seeks to make the Venezuelan coast and territories the base of a conquest which, if circumstances are not altered, will have no other bounds than the dictates of her own will.

And I can see no reason for such indifference on the part of the sole Government to whom it belongs, if only for its own convenience, to put a stop to such pretensions. I do not see why we are to be denied the inestimable intervention which with such success has been vouchsafed to others. I again implore the Government of the United States, through your excellency, in the trust that this time, in view of the evident and shameless (descarada) intention of the English Government, your excellency will find it opportune and necessary to put an end to so great an abuse.

I renew, etc.,

J. A. OLAVARRIA.

THE BRITISH GUIANA BOUNDARY QUESTION.

By advices just received from Demerara, regarding an official proclamation by the British Guiana Government, a copy of which we publish in another portion of our present issue, it would appear that the promoters and friends of the once illustrious and powerful General Guzman Blanco have met with a severe check in connection with their proposed railway from the Orinoco to the Yuruari district.

The proclamation in question has not been arrived at without full and good consideration by Her Majesty's Government, extending over a period which persons interested consider has been unduly prolonged. Such being the case, it is not likely, as a Georgetown contemporary states, that the Imperial Government, having arrived at certain conclusions, are otherwise than in earnest to settle once and for all this longpending boundary question. The question has now remained in statu quo for nearly half a century, necessarily to the great detriment of the colony, and has retarded, as might have been expected, the internal growth and development of British Guiana. We need hardly say that the moving spirit in bringing all the facts to the knowledge of the British Government has been Mr. Hugh Watt, to whom, therefore, the colony are infinitely indebted for the happy issue which has been tardily but at last arrived

A review of the history of the colony since its formation in 1570 leaves, we think, no room for doubt that the Venezuelans have gradually extended their jurisdiction mile by mile to the south until they have become trespassers upon a large amount of British territory. That they should have done so is not astonishing, in view of the rich discoveries of gold which were made about 1870.

Since that date it has been amply proven by the large and increasing monthly exportation of gold which has taken place from Las Tablas, the shipping port heretofore for the Yuruari mines, that the region in question is one of the richest gold-producing territories in the world.

The town of Guacipati was formerly the seat of government, and is situated about 15 miles to the north of the Yuruari River. The British Government, therefore, apparently mean to lay claim to the line indicated by Humboldt, and which has since been ably advocated by Mr. Watt as the northwest boundary between British Guiana and the States of Venezuela.

The energetic action of the colony in dispatching an armed force is worthy of commendation, and we quite agree with a local contemporary, who states that no resistance need be feared, looking at the fact that hardly one hundred of the residents south of the Yuruari are Venezuelans, and that nearly all the better class of those as earnestly desire the change of rule as the British or German inhabitants. We understand that nearly all the mines in the district belong to English subjects, and with regard to the population, at least three-fourths, if not a larger percentage, are British subjects, the German element constituting a comparatively small section of the community, and a majority of those being store-keepers or their assistants. We notice that the colony have already taken active steps for the formation of a road to the Yuruari, and that the court of policy have unanimously approved the action.

It now, therefore, only remains to cement this connection by the establishment of railway and telegraphic communication with the mines, which will then place Demerara and the English mining properties, in which from first to last nearly ten millions of money have been sunk, in communication day by day with their superintendents and managers at the mines. It is hardly necessary to add that such communication will once and for all put an end to the difficulties which have arisen from time to time, owing to the fact that the managers at the mines are virtually their own masters, being under no adequate control, and as such were recognized by the Venezue-lan code, which declined to recognize the proprietors of these mines, but looked to and held responsible exclusively the resident attorney, who was invariably the superintendent.

The New Chili Gold Mining Company, Limited .- A British Government proclamation.

We are informed by the secretary that this company have received the following telegram from the mines:

"Guacipati, fifth; 900 ounces; nineteen days' work; twenty-five stamps. Strike Works stopped. Ackman."

The agents at Trinidad add the following to the cablegram: "Above was delayed. Letter 14th advises work resumed 16th. Harriman."

The official memorandum states:

"The manager confirms the recent opinions he expressed with regard to the quartz, and in a private letter states that, provided sufficient miners can be obtained to raise quartz enough to keep the sixty stamps running, the return ought now to be as high as during any past period. The miners having again resumed work, there ought therefore to be no difficulty with regard to this.

"The mail just to hand being the mid-monthly mail, and leaving the mines a day sooner than was anticipated, the manager's letter is a hurried one."

And the secretary adds the following important intelligence:
"It will be gratifying information to the shareholders of this company to learn by a public proclamation to the following effect, the territory in which the mines are situated may now be looked upon as British property. This in time will have a revolutionizing effect upon all charges connected with the mines, and, with the prospects at last before the company of good paying quartz, even under the old Venezuelan régime, the directors see no reason why this company should not shortly be in a flourishing condition.

" Copy of proclamation.

"BRITISH GUIANA:

"By his excellency Charles Bruce, esquire, companion of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief in

"Whereas it has come to the knowledge of the Government of British Guiana that certain concessions have been granted by the President and by and with the sanction of the Government of the United States of Venezuela, purporting to give and grant certain rights and privileges for constructing a railway to Guacipati, and in and over certain territories and lands within and forming part of the colony of British Guiana; "Now, therefore, I do hereby intimate to all whom it may concern that no alleged rights purporting to be claimed under any such concession will be recognized within the said colony of British Guiana, and that all persons found trespassing on or occupying the lands of the colony without the authority of the Government of this colony will be dealt with as the law directs.

Mr. Bayard to Señor Olavarria.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 15th instant, in which you communicate to me information furnished to you by the Venezuelan legation at Paris, to the effect that the legislature of Demerara has recently asserted a claim to British jurisdiction over the country along the Yuruari River; and that by a decree of the governor of British Guiana dated December 31, 1887, denial is made of the validity of a grant by the Venezuelan Government for the construction of a railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipatí, a city in the Caratal mining district, on the ground that the road in question passes "in and over certain territories and lands within and forming part of the colour of British Griene". within, and forming part of, the colony of British Guiana."

No other foundation for the statement made to you by the representative of Venezuela, at Paris, appears than the article in the London Financier of January 24, of which you give me a copy. If you have any further information touching the railway grant mentioned, showing whether the projected road runs only from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipatí, or branches eastward from the latter point, it might aid in rightly understanding the claim now put forth by the authorities of British Guiana.

Meanwhile I have deemed it proper to send a confidential copy of your note and its inclosure to the United States minister in London, in order that, with fuller information, he might continue to urge an amicable settlement and be better enabled to continue his disinterested representations to secure abstinence from unjust or injurious proceedings by the British Government against the interests or jurisdiction of the Republic of Venezuela.

Accept, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 798.—Translation.]

Mr. Olavarria to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF VENEZUELA, Washington, February 20, 1888.

EXCELLENCY: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's note dated the 18th instant, in which, while acknowledging the receipt of mine of the 15th of the same month, your excellency is pleased to request of me any other information I may possess touching the grant of the projected railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipati which may help to a better understanding of the objection raised by the authorities of British Guiana.

I have likewise read with the greatest thankfulness—a sentiment which I have the honor to express to your excellency in the name of my Government as well as in my own—the information you are pleased to give me that you have instructed his excellency the minister of the United States in London in the sense that he is to endeavor to bring about a friendly settlement, and to continue his disinterested offices to insure the cessation of unjust and prejudicial proceedings on the part of the British Government against the interests and the jurisdiction of the Republic of Venezuela.

The grant for the railway from Ciudad Bolivar to Guacipati does not fix in advance the line of transit, but it is enough to east a glance at the map of Venezuela to be immediately convinced that the natural line can not embrace any part of the territory of British Guiana, even accepting as legitimate the most advanced frontier line of the three which have been claimed in succession by the British Government from 1840 to 1881.

The grant in question is one to private individuals, who will certainly have no intention, in undertaking the work, to deviate from the most direct and nearest line to the prejudice of their own interests, since nothing else can enter into their calculations than the reduction, as far as possible, of the distance and the cost of the work.

This is why attention is being drawn to the claim of invaded rights put forth by the authorities of British Guiana, a claim that can spring from no justified right, but rests solely on the very recent pretension of extending their frontiers far enough to enable them to seize the rich mining region of the Yuruari. All the steps and invasions of the usurper lead to this end, and only thus can be explained the circumstances of his attempting in advance to judge of a grant so far away from his borders that the act can only be regarded as a confirmation of his new usurpation. And thus will he continue, your excellency, to advance more and more, day by day, ever claiming to be within his boundaries.

Disastrous and fatal consequences would ensue for the independence of South America-if, under the pretext of a question of boundaries, Great Britain should succeed in consummating the usurpation of a third part of our territory and therewith a river so important as the Orinoco. Under the pretext of a mere question of boundaries, which began on the banks of the Essequibo, we now find ourselves on the verge of losing regions lying more than five degrees away from that river; and under the same pretext a stride has been made from Cape Nassau to the seizure of the island of Barima at the mouth of the Orinoco.

I greatly rely on the friendly and disinterested offices of the Government of the United States; but in the supposition that the British Government will continue to regard the case as a simple question of frontiers, and will keep on protesting that she is operating within her territory, it occurs to me to respectfully suggest to your excellency that the opportunity has come for the Government of the United States, in view of the recent occurrences, to regard the question under a different aspect which will allow of a speedy and definitive settlement through the means of its effective intervention. I am sure that its authoritative voice would be heard with respect.

With the assurance, etc.,

No. 809.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 1, 1888.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive, under date of the 8th ultimo, a note from Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital, in relation to a case of criminal assault of a German upon a British subject at Apia, in which there was a contest between the German consul and the municipal court as to jurisdiction.

The defendant, named Marquardt, being a German, and the offense being a criminal assault, the Imperial German consul claimed the right to try the case as coming within his exclusive jurisdiction, and denied the right of the municipal judge, before whom the prosecution had been pending, to take further cognizance of it.

In October last the controversy above stated was brought by the German chargé at this capital to the notice of the Department, the consul of the United States in Apia having as president of the municipal board taken the lead in asserting its jurisdiction. Upon an examination of the case, the Department came to the conclusion that the jurisdiction of the municipality was doubtful and instructed the American consul not to press the controversy further.

Her Majesty's Government having learned the opinion of this Department, the British minister here was instructed to inquire whether, upon an examination of the facts which he communicated in his note above referred to, this Government still concurred in the views of the German Government from which Her Majesty's Government dissented. receiving this note of the British minister the Department had received information which seemed to render superfluous any further discussion as to the jurisdiction of the municipal court.

For on the 14th of October last the German consul, with the assent of the British consul, declared the municipal government to be in abeyance because of an alleged refusal of the American consulto attend on that day a special meeting of the municipal board. As the Department is informed, the American consul was already near the place of meeting at the time the German consul took the course stated, and had accompanied the British consul three fourths of the way to the court house, when, recollecting some papers which he had intended to bring with him from his office, he returned thither for them and was thus delayed.

On the 27th ultimo the Department received a dispatch from the Americal consul, Mr. Sewall, dated January 28, 1888, copy of which is inclosed, in which he communicated to the Department copy of a note of the 18th of January from the German consul at Apia, declaring the formal withdrawal of the Imperial German Government from the municipality convention of the 2d of September, 1879, and offering to enter into negotiations with the American and British consuls for a division of the property of the municipality.

To this dispatch of the American consul a reply was made, copy of which is inclosed.

You are instructed to bring the matter to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and inquire whether they have accepted the notice of Germany's withdrawal from the municipality convention, and if so, whether they have instructed their consular representative at Apia, as to the course he shall pursue in regard to the municipal property and funds.

SIR: I have received your No. 83 of the 28th ultimo inclosing a copy of a note from the Imperial German consul at Apia, in which he gives notice of the withdrawal of his Government from the municipality convention of September 2, 1879, and states his Government from the municipality convention of September 2, 1879, and states that he is ready to enter into negotiations with yourself and the British consul for a division of the property of the municipality. As you are aware, the United States is not formally a party to that convention, and is therefore not in a position to discuss with Germany the right of her withdrawing therefrom. It is understood, however, that the parties to the convention, Germany and Great Britain, each reserved the right of withdrawing at pleasure. And if Her Britannic Majesty's consul is instructed by his Government to treat the convention as at an end, it will be regarded by this Government as no longer existing. In such case, it will be necessary for this Government to secure its share in the property belonging to the municipality, which ernment to secure its share in the property belonging to the municipality, which received the practical support of the United States and the substantial support of its citizens in Apia.

In regard to entering into a negotiation for such a division it will be proper for you to consult the British consul, who will be guided in his action by the instructions of his Government. Should he be instructed to enter into a negotiation for the division of the property in question, you are instructed to pursue the same course, as there would then be no doubt as to the municipality having been abandoned by the contracting parties.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 22, 1888.

SIR: Your dispatch, No. 652, of 7th January last, transmitting Mr. White's interesting and valuable report of the proceedings at the International Sugar Bounties Conference, held at London between the 24th November and 19th December, 1887, inclusive, was duly received; also your later dispatches on the same general subject, Nos. 666, of 21st January; 672, of 28th January; 678, of 11th February; 684, of 14th February, 1888.

Action on the subject has been delayed, awaiting the receipt of the printed English translation of the voluminous proces-verbaux of the conference, which, from Mr. White's report, it was supposed would be issued early in February, but has not yet reached me. In the absence of such translation and in view of the impossibility of preparing one in this Department with the limited force at command, the matter has not been in shape either for consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury or for communication to Congress.

My attention is, however, urgently drawn to the subject by a note addressed to me by Sir Lionel West, the British minister, received on the 20th instant, representing the great importance which Her Majesty's Government attaches to the presence of a delegate from the United States Government at the approaching sugar conference, which opens on the 5th of April, proximo, and that "the negotiations can not be carried to a successful issue unless the United States take part in

I have replied to Sir Lionel, stating the reasons why this Government is at this time unprepared to take part in the approaching conference to the extent of signing the projected convention, or indeed, I may say, any convention calculated to affect the constitutional right of the House of Representatives to originate measures for raising revenue, but expressing willingness, if desired by Her Majesty's Government, to direct the attendance of Mr. White at the second conference as the delegate of the United States, under the reserve stated. A copy of Sir Lionel's note and of my reply is herewith inclosed.

If the response to my inquiry be favorable, a telegram, with the correspondence now transmitted, will enable you to instruct Mr. White concerning his duties as a delegate and the limitation of his powers.

By the protocol of the 19th December it was provided that governments contemplating adhesion to the proposed convention should give notice of such intention before March 1 instant, communicating at the same time the system of taxation they may propose for carrying out its provisions, and the method and limits of employing saccharometric tests. As this Government is at present unprepared to accept the convention itself, it is likewise unprepared to give the detailed statements suggested, especially as the nature of the sugar tests and the scheme of tax collection in this country are pending subjects of legislation.

I also transmit for your legation files, copy of a note addressed to me by Sir Lionel on January 14 last, expressing the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the attendance of Mr. White at the conference, also a copy of a memorandum handed to me by Sir Lionel West, on the

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

PHELPS,

Minister, London:

Washington, March 27, 1888.

Bounties are opposed by this Government, and no subsidies of any kind are paid by it.

The revision of the tariff is now pending in Congress, and the Treasury recommends an adjustment of rebates.

Excise on domestic sugar production can not be established by the United States, nor can it abolish impost duties by treaty, nor sign the convention proposed, but reserves the right to conform to international arrangements hereafter by independent legislation.

The British minister has been asked if, with this understanding, attendance of delegates is desirable. On 23d, mailed instructions. Your

Sir J. Pauncefote to Mr. Phelps.

Foreign Office, March 24, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 14th instant, in which you inform me that the United States consul at Apia has received from the German consul at that place a dispatch notifying him of the formal withdrawal of Germany from the Apia municipal convention of September 2, 1879, and you inquire whether Her Majesty's Government have accepted the notice of Germany's withdrawal from the convention in question, and, if so, whether they have instructed the British consular representative at Apia as to the course he shall pursue with regard to the municipal property and funds.

I have to acquaint you that in reply to a representation of the German Government that the continuance of the municipal government of Apia had become impracticable, Her Majesty's ambassador at Berlin was directed, on the 24th ultimo, to suggest its termination. No reply has yet, however, been received to that communication from the German Government, who have also been asked for their views as to how the property of the Apia municipality should be divided.

Pending a further and definite agreement between the treaty powers upon the subject, the acting British consul in Samoa has been directed to consider the convention of 1879 as suspended; to recognize the jurisdiction of the Samoan Government as that of the de facto Government in the district in question; and in the mean time to revert to the exercise of his ordinary consular jurisdiction in Apia, as well as in the rest of the Navigator's Islands.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, April 14, 1888. (Received April 23.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 719, of 6th instant, I have the honor to acquaint you that there have been two sittings this week (on the 10th and 13th) of the International Sugar Conference, at both of which I was present; and I inclose herewith the English translation of a brief statement, based upon your recent instructions, which I made at the first of these meetings, and of which I venture to hope that you will approve.

The conference adopted on the 10th instant the preamble and Article I of the draught convention, as signed in December last, the words "and to propose to their respective legislatures" being omitted from the latter for reasons set forth in the procès verbal.

Yesterday's sitting, which lasted three hours, was chiefly occupied in discussing the method of procedure with regard to the remaining articles of the convention, especially Article II, which is likely to give rise to a large number of technical details, and it was finally decided to appoint a committee to consider these points and to report thereupon from time to time to the conference.

I shall hope to forward next week the printed minutes of these two sittings, and also the replies made by the different powers who signed the protocol in December last to this Government respecting the same.

I also inclose herewith the copy of a telegram, which appeared two days ago in the London papers, from Lille, where an important election to the French Chamber of Deputies is now pending. From this it would seem that the French delegates to the conference are not authorized to ratify the convention unless all the sugar-producing countries agree to do likewise.

Translation of statement made by Mr. White at the meeting of the sugar conference on the 10th April, 1888.

My Government is opposed to bounties of all kinds.

The United States pays no direct bounties, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in his last report to Congress upon the condition of the national finances, recommended the abolition of the small indirect bounty occasioned by the slight difference which still exists between drawbacks and the import duties.

It is impossible, however, for my Government to adhere to the proposed convention for several reasons.

In the first place, the signature of any such convention would interfere with the right reserved by the Constitution to the House of Representatives of originating all measures affecting the public revenue; neither would it be possible in the United States to establish an excise tax upon the domestic production of sugar, nor to abolish import duties by treaty.

But my Government reserves to itself the full right to conform by legislation hereafter to the international arrangements which may be adopted for the abolition of export bounties on sugar.

Sugar bounties.

LILLE, April 11.

To-day, during the sitting of the council-general of the Nord, the prefect read a telegram from the minister of finance contradicting the report that the French delegate at the sugar conference in London had accepted in the name of the French Government the proposal for the suppression of the bounties on sugar. The minister explains that the delegate received instructions to adhere to the suppression of the bounties only in the case of an understanding being arrived at among all the interested countries.

SIR: Referring to my dispatches Nos. 719 and 722, I have the honor to inclose herewith three copies of the procès-verbaux of the eighth and of the ninth sittings of the international sugar conference.

You will observe that at the latter the United States occupied a considerable portion of the attention of the delegates, who were exceedingly desirous, after my statement (page 3), to ascertain what prospects there might be of our joining the convention hereafter.

Austria-Hungary, France, and Germany are exceedingly anxious as to our probable course should the convention be ratified, and the delegates of those countries appeared to consider as unfavorable to the hopes of the conference in the matter the report to the effect that the Committee of Ways and Means, before reporting the tariff bill to the House of Representatives, had withdrawn the clause suppressing drawbacks on sugar.

There have been two sittings of the conference during the past week, both of which I have attended; but the revised proces-verbaux have not yet reached me, and I shall only be able to forward them next week.

I have the honor furthermore to inclose the memoranda* furnished to the British Government by the powers represented at the previous session of the conference, and embodying their views with respect to its conclusions and to the draught convention.

You will observe that Brazil and Sweden are not now represented at the conference, but the inclosed memoranda from those Governments show that the former will adhere when the convention, as formally ratified, is received; and that the latter is in entire sympathy with the proposed abolition of bounties, but deems it unnecessary to send a delegate to the conference, as the quantity of sugar exported from Sweden is so small.

The Belgian proposals, referred to at length in my report of last January, have not yet been discussed, but strong objection is made to them in the memoranda of Holland, Austria, and Germany, and they will have to be modified, all the principal powers being opposed to them.

The Austro-Hungarian memorandum distinctly states that the convention will be without effect unless the United States be a party thereto, and the same is implied in that of Germany. Such is also the opinion of the French Government, and I think it very doubtful whether these three powers will allow a convention for the abolition of sugar bounties to come into force until the United States shall have agreed to adhere to its provisions, unless the Spanish proposal to insert a penal clause, which certain Governments now appear to consider impracticable, should turn out to be feasible.

I have, etc.,

SIR: With reference to my dispatch No. 726, and to previous correspondence on the sugar-bounties question, I have the honor to inclose herewith a memorandum which I have received from Mr. Walpole, director of Her Majesty's customs at Dublin, and one of the British delegates to the international sugar conference.

This memorandum contains a computation made here of the present indirect bounty on sugar in the United States, caused by excess of drawback over duty, and several members of the conference are very desirous of ascertaining whether the figures therein contained are correct.

I shall be much obliged if you will be so good as to cause this memorandum to be referred to the proper department of the Treasury, with a view to obtaining an expression of opinion on the subject.

[Inclosure in No. 729.]

Memorandum on the indirect bounty granted on sugar exported from the United States.

The duty on raw sugar is now levied in proportion to the pure sugar contained in it, the scale beginning at the bottom with sugar containing 75 per cent. of pure sugar, which is charged with duty of 1.40 cents per pound, and going up at the rate of 0.04 cent per pound for every additional percentage of pure sugar, so that 100 per cent. of pure sugar, i. e., pure sugar, would pay 2.40 cents per pound. The drawback granted on the exportation of pure sugar is 2.60 cents per pound. It is evident according to this scale of duties, that a raw sugar containing 76 per cent. of pure sugar is estimated to yield  $\frac{1.44}{2.40} \times 600$ , or 60 per cent. of pure sugar, and so on up the scale, which therefore runs thus:

							Per ce	ent.
Raw sugar	containing	76 per ce	nt. of pu	ire sugar	is estimated	l to yield.		60
Raw sugar	containing	79 per ce	nt. of pi	ire sugar	is estimated	l to yield.		65
Raw sugar	containing	82 per ce	at. of p	ire sugar	is estimated	l to yield.		70
Raw sugar	containing	85 per ce	nt. of p	ıre sugar	is estimated	d to yield		75
Raw sugar	containing	88 per ce	nt. of p	ire sugar	is estimated	d to yield.		80
Raw sugar	containing	91 per ce	nt. of p	ıre sugar	is estimated	d to yield.		85 is estimated
Raw sugar	containing	97 per ce	nt. of pr	ire sugar	is estimated	d to yield.		95

The excess of drawback is therefore fully proved as follows:

Percentage of pure sugar con- tained in the raw sugar.	Equivalent yield of ex- tractable pure sugar as calculated from the scale.	Drawback allowed on this yield at the present rate of 2.60 cents per 100 pounds.	Duty paid on the raw sugar.	Excess of draw- back.	Excess per 100 pounds of pure sugar.
76 79 82 85 88 91 91	60 65 70 75 80 85 90	Cents. 1, 560 1, 690 1, 820 1, 950 2, 080 2, 297 2, 370 2, 470	Cents. 1.44 1.56 1.68 1.80 1.92 2.04 2.16 2.28	Cents 120 . 130 . 140 . 150 . 160 . 170 . 180 . 190	Cents 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 2

But it may urged that because the refiner converts his raw sugar into various proportions of hard and soft sugar, sirup, and waste, therefore the above calculation does not apply in all cases. Let us see if this is so. The refiners say that they get out of 100 pounds of raw sugar 60 pounds of hard sugar, 24 pounds of soft sugar, 11½ pounds of sirup, and 4½ pounds loss of weight. According to the yield on which the scale of duties is based, as previously shown, this yield stands as follows:

60 pounds hard		Per cent. of pure sugar.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 30, 1888.

SIR: A dispatch recently received from Mr. Merrill, United States minister resident at Honolulu, advises the Department that Her Britannic Majesty's ship Caroline, commanded by Sir William Wiseman, had returned to Honolulu, after three weeks' cruise, in the course of which her commander had taken possession, on behalf of the Government of Great Britain, of the three islands known as Fanning, Christmas, and Penrhyn, lying from 1,000 to 1,800 miles southerly from Oahu.

In view of this intelligence, it is proper to recall to Her Majesty's Government the correspondence exchanged with my predecessor, Secretary Evarts, by Sir Edward Thornton, in 1879, relative to the possessory right to Christmas Island, "situated in 1° 40′ 30" north latitude and 157° 14′ 77" [sic] west longitude," which is presumed to be the same Christmas Island of which the British occupation is now reported.

Copy of the correspondence referred to is herewith inclosed for your information.

It seems proper, under the circumstances, and in default of more precise information, to reserve all other questions which may grow out of the reported occupation of the island.

Sir Edward Thornton to Mr. Evarts.

WASHINGTON, January 29, 1879.

Sir: I have been instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to make some inquiries of you with regard to Christmas Island, which is situated in 1° 40′ 30″ north latitude, and 157° 14′ 77″ west longitude.

This island was discovered by Captain Cook in 1777. In 1865, an application hav ing been made by certain British subjects for leases of various islands in the Pacific, including that island, to enable them to export guano therefrom, the question of the sovereignty of Christmas Island was investigated, and it was decided that it might be considered as accruing to the Crown.

Licenses for that island and two others were accordingly issued to Dr. Crowther, of Tasmania, who occupied them, but as he found them unproductive, the license was canceled at his request in 1869.

Fresh licenses for the same island were granted on the 9th of June, 1871, to Mr. Alfred Houlder, for the term of nine years. But two of the islands were found to have no guano upon them, and with regard to Christmas Island, when a gentleman, Dr. Weston, went down to survey the deposits thereon, he found on his arrival (July 5, 1872) that the island had a few days previously been taken formal possession of by the United States ship Narragansett, a notice to that effect having been fixed to a board erected on the shore; and that it was then in the occupation of three men in the employ of Mr. C. A. Williams, of Honolulu.

Under these circumstances Mr. Houlder made application that his licenses might be canceled and Her Majesty's Government, although it considered that it had exercised sufficient possessorial rights to support its claim to the sovereignty of the island, complied with Mr. Houlder's request, and his lease was canceled. He now writes, however, that he learns that Mr. Williams has given up the occupation of the island, and he solicits a fresh license. Before, however, taking this new application into consideration, Her Majesty's Government would be glad to be informed, with a view to avoid any question as to the right of sovereignty over Christmas Island, whether the Government of the United States has finally abandoned and withdrawn its claim to the island in question. Lord Salisbury has consequently instructed me to invite you in a friendly way to communicate to me, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, the views of your Government upon this subject.

I have, etc.,

EDWARD THORNTON.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 862.]

Mr. Evarts to Sir Edward Thornton.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 1, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 29th of January last, in regard to the possessory right to Christmas Island, situated in the Pacific Ocean in 1° 40′ 30″ north latitude and 157° 14′ 77″ west longitude, and discovered by Captain Cook in 1777.

It is stated that upon application being made in 1865 by certain British subjects for leases of various islands in the Pacific, including this one, to enable them to export guano therefrom, it was decided after investigation that the sovereignty of the island might be considered as accruing to the Crown.

Accordingly a license was issued to Dr. Crowther, of Tasmania, for Christmas and two other islands, which he occupied, but finding them unprofitable his license was cancelled at his request in 1869. A new license was granted on the 9th of June, 1871, to Mr. Alfred Houlder, for a term of nine years.

Two of the islands were found to have no guano upon them, and when Dr. Weston went to survey the deposits on Christmas Island, he found on his arrival there, July 5, 1872, that the island had a few days previously been taken possession of by the United States ship Narragansett, a notice to this effect having been fixed to a board erected on the shore, and that it was then in the occupation of three men in the employ of Mr. C. A. Williams, of Honolulu. Under these circumstances Mr. Houlder applied to have his license canceled and Her Majesty's Government, notwithstanding its opinion that it had exercised sufficient possessorial right to support its claim of sovereignty over this island, complied with Mr. Houlder's request. This gentleman, having since learned that Mr. Williams had given up the occupation of the island, now solicits a new license. But before acting upon this application Her Majesty's Government, in order to avoid any question as to the right of sovereignty over Christmas Island, inquires whether the United States has finally abandoned and withdrawn its claim to the island in question.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that, upon an examination of the files of the Department of State, it is ascertained that the American claim to the guano deposits on Christmas Island vested primarily in Mr. A. G. Benson, of New York, under the following circumstances: Mr. Benson having obtained from Capt. John Stetson, of New Haven, Conn., who is stated to have discovered deposits of guano on the island at some time prior to 1857, a deed of conveyance of all possessory right in the John Marshall, of New York, to take possession of the island, which was accordingly done on the 20th of June, 1858, by Captain Pendleton, in the name and on behalf of Alfred G. Benson, of New York, and his associates, in conformity with the act of Congress of August 16, 1856.

The United States Guano Company, the present owners of the guano deposits of Christmas Island, have acquired their title—

First. By the quit-claim deed of assignment, dated May 11, 1857, made prior to the taking possession by John Stetson and wife, of New Haven, Conn., to Alfred G. Benson, of New York, conveying all their right, title, and interest in and to the guano deposits discovered on Christmas Island.

Second. By the act of taking possession on the 20th of June, in the name and on behalf of Alfred G. Benson, this possession complies fully with the act of August 16, 1856, and of itself carries title; the deed of conveyance from Stetson and wife serving, however, to quiet any prior claim on their part arising founded on discovery.

Third. By deed dated May 13, 1857, from A. G. Benson, aforesaid, to G. W. Benson, of New York, granting all of his right, title, and interest therein, conveyed to him by deed from John Stetson and wife.

Fourth. By deed dated November 24, 1858, from George W. Benson, aforementioned, to the United States Guano Company, of New York, conveying all of his right, title, and interest in said discoveries, ceded to him by deed from A. G. Benson.

And it further appears that the United States Guano Company have given an approved bond in accordance with the requirements of the act of Congress referred to, the provisions of which law are now embraced in Title LXXII of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There being no other papers touching the question of ownership to the guano deposits on said island than those mentioned above, and no notification that said company have abandoned the island on file in the Department, they are still considered to be entitled to the protection guarantied by the laws of the United States in their possessory right, so far as such occupation may be necessary to secure the company or its assigns the deposits of guano found thereon.

I have, etc.,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Mr. W. McArthur asked the under secretary of state for foreign affairs whether the convention of 1881 between Great Britain, Germany, and the United States of America, with regard to Samoa, had ceased to exist, and whether the Government intended to recognize Tamasese as King of Samoa.

Sir J. Fergusson. There was no such convention contracted in 1881. A convention was concluded in 1879 between Great Britain and Samoa, to which Germany and the United States subsequently became parties, providing for good order in the district of Apia and for the maintenance of neutrality in case of internal disturbances; and a further convention between the same powers in 1883 continuing the last. The German Government have announced their withdrawal from that convention, and Her Majesty's Government have assented to the district of Apia being replaced under the control of the Samoan Government subject to the rights of the treaty powers.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, May 5, 1888. (Received May 15.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 726 of April 21, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of the proces-verbaux of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth sittings of the International Sugar Conference.*

In the former (page 3, last paragraph, and page 4), a question was asked by one of the French delegates and answered by me, with regard to the exportation from the United States of sugar from Louisiana and from the Sandwich Islands. On this occasion also a committee was appointed at the suggestion of a French delegate, M. Catusse, to consider and report upon the technical details bearing upon Article II of the convention. The composition of this committee will be found at page 12 of the procès verbal of April 13.

The eleventh sitting, Monday, April 16, was chiefly taken up with the discussion of those articles of the convention in respect to which there was little difference of opinion.

At the twelfth sitting of the conference, April 18, M. Pallain, of France, made a speech with regard to the United States, which will be found at pages 5 to 9 of the procès-verbal. He began by calling attention to our absence from the list of high contracting powers, and stated that it was indispensable, in the opinion of his Government, that we should be among them. M. Pallain quoted at length from a speech made by Mr. McCreary, of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, in reference to the proposed conference of American powers for the purpose of promoting commercial relations between each other, and stated that, in view of the fact that the Argentine Republic is one of the principal markets for French sugar, and in view of the apparent probability of an American customs union, he thought the French Government perfectly right not only in desiring the inclusion of the United States in the convention, but in considering such inclusion absolutely indispensable to that of France.

On the same occasion the German delegate called attention to the United States, and after expressing the earnest wish of his Government that we should become a party to the convention, he said that, failing our adhesion thereto, if the conference were to have any practical results, a penal clause such as that proposed by the Spanish delegates would be necessary. This is also the opinion of the French, Austrian,

Spanish, and Russian Governments.

At the thirteenth sitting of the conference, revised copies of the procès-verhal of which have not yet reached me, M. Pallain, of France, again spoke at length with respect to the United States, his remarks being this time based upon a speech made by Senator Wilson, of Iowa, on the 5th April, in the Senate, in which "a reasonable bounty for the production of sugar in the United States" is suggested.

The French delegate concluded by saying that, from Senator Wilson's speech, and from other documents which he had read, he inferred that the United States are drifting away from, rather than towards, a

angar union

There have been further sittings of the conference on the 23d and 28th April, on the 1st and 3d instants, and to day; in reference to all of International Sugar Conference. Protocol of tenth meeting, Friday, 13th April, 1888.

M. Catusse inquired whether a note had been received from the Government of the United States touching its system of imposts [on sugars]. It would be of interest to know how the Louisiana and Sandwich Islands sugars are treated upon being exported.

Mr. White stated that those sugars do not enjoy a drawback. Sugar which has paid no customs duty of importation is not admitted to the benefit of the drawback. He submitted, in this relation, an extract from the customs regulations governing the application of the drawback, and asked that this document be annexed to the minutes of the meeting.

Mr. W. McArthur asked the under-secretary of state for foreign affairs whether the agreements of 1879 and 1883 between Great Britain, Germany, the United States, and Samoa were all signed by Malietoa as King of Samoa; whether the Government had ever had any reason to complain of the non-fulfillment by Malietoa of any part of those agreements; whether the attention of the Government had been called to a proclamation issued to the Samoans on the 25th of August, 1887, and signed by the British pro-consul, Mr. H. Wilson, in which occurred these words: "Now, therefore, we, the undersigned representatives of the United States of America and Great Britain, hereby give notice that we and our Governments do not and never have recognized Tamasese as King of Samoa, but continue as heretofore to recognize Malietoa;" whether the consent of the British and United States Governments was asked for by Germany prior to the seizure and deportation of Malietoa by a German ship-of-war; whether the Government proposed to acquiesce in the action of Germany; whether they knew that a large majority of the Samoan people were in favor of Malietoa as against Tamasese; whether Malietoa had repeatedly wished to take measures with regard to Tamasese, but had been restrained by the repeated assurances of the English consul that if peace were kept in the island the influence of England should always be used to preserve Malietoa's right to the throne; whether the British Government had ceased to recognize Malietoa as King of Samoa; if so, when and why; and whether the Government regarded the convention as being still in force as between Great Britain, the United States, and Samoa.

Sir J. Fergusson. The first, second, and fourth questions of the honorable gentleman must be answered in the negative. Her Majesty's Government have seen no cause to take part on either side in the differences between King Malietoa and the Emperor of Germany. At present, Tamasese is the King de facto, and will be recognized as such in practice by Her Majesty's Government according to the ordinary rules. No change has taken place in the treaty relations between England, Germany, and the United States in regard to Samoa.

Mr. W. McArthur. Do I understand the right honorable gentleman to say Her Majesty's Government have no information as to paragraph 4?

Sir J. FERGUSSON. Her Majesty's Government have not been consulted on the matter by the Government of Germany.

Mr. W. McArthur. Does Her Majesty's Government propose to disavow the action of their agent? [Hear, hear.]

Sir J. FERGUSSON. Owing to the delay in the telegraph, our agent took action on his own responsibility and without communication from us.

Samoa.

Mr. W. McArthur asked the under-secretary of state for foreign affairs whether he would give the date on which the English Government agreed to sanction the abandonment by Germany of the convention respecting Samoa.

Sir J. Fergusson. No formal agreement has been entered into for the abrogation of the convention of 1879 respecting the municipal board of Apia, but as the continuance of that board had become impracticable, orders were, on the 24th of February, sent to the acting British consul to consider the convention as suspended. The district has accordingly passed under the control of the de facto Samoan Government, as provided by article 10 of the convention in case of its termination.

In reply to further questions from Mr. W. McArthur, Sir J. Fergusson said: "In the reply which I gave on May 3, the date which I mentioned refers to the present I then stated accurately that the German Government had informed Her Majesty's Government that it was their intention to demand reparation from Malietoa, which, of course, might involve further proceedings. The telegram informing the British consul was delayed because no vessel was immediately available to forward it from New Zealand, and the consul, in the absence of instructions, acted on his own responsibility."

Mr. McArthur. Are we to understand that the German Government gave such short notice that there was no time for inquiry? [Hear, hear.]

Sir J. Fergusson. We are now coming to a different and complicated matter, and I ought to have notice of the question. [Hear, hear.]

Mr. CONYBEARE. Will the right honorable gentleman lay a return upon the table showing the grounds upon which consuls can act without instructions from their superiors?

Sir J. FERGUSSON. There can be no possible reason why notice of a question of that kind should not be given. [Hear, hear.]

No. 752.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, May 14, 1888. (Received May 26.)

SIR: I have the honor to acquaint you that on the 12th instant the delegates to the international sugar conference from Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, Holland, and Russia signed at the foreign office the "protocole de clôture," of which and of the "projet de convention," annexed thereto, I inclose three copies herewith.

I shall have the honor of addressing to you a few observations with respect to this document and to those proces verbaux of the late session of the conference, which have not yet been forwarded, as soon as I shall have received the latter.

I have, etc.,

Final protocol.

The undersigned, delegates of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, and Russia, have re-assembled at London on the 5th day of April, 1888, for the purpose of preparing a draught of a convention having for its object the abolition of bounties on the exportation of sugar.

After the deliberations, of which an account is given in the reports of the sessions, they have adopted the draught of a convention, which is appended to this protocol, and which they pledge themselves to submit to the consideration of their respective Governments, with the reservations mentioned in the inclosed reports.

They pledge themselves, moreover, to request their respective Governments to communicate to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty their opinions concerning the draught of a convention before the 5th of July next.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government proposes to convoke, on the 16th of August, at the latest, a conference of plenipotentiaries to sign the convention.

Done at London, May the 12th, 1888.

Draught of a convention.

The high contracting parties, desiring to secure, by reciprocal engagements, the entire abolition of bounties, either open or disguised, on the exportation of sugar, have resolved to conclude a convention to that effect, and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries, to wit:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; the Right Honorable Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil, Marquis of Salisbury, Earl of Salisbury, Viscount Cranborne, Baron Cecil, Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Her Majesty's Chief Secretary of State in the Department of Foreign Affairs, etc., and Baron Henry de Worms, member of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Colonial Under-Secretary of State, etc.; His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia;
His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, etc., and Apostolic King of His Majesty the King of the Belgians; Baron Solvyns, his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; Mr. Guillaume, director-general of his ministry of finance; and Mr. Du Jardin, inspector-general of his ministry of finance; His Majesty the King of Denmark; Mr. de Barner, his chamberlain, inspector-general

eral of custom-houses;

His Majesty the King of Spain, and in his name the Queen Regent of the Kingdom; Mr. del Mazo, his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary; Mr. Batanero, deputy, and Mr. Dupuy de Lôme, his minister resident;

The President of the French Republic, Mr. Waudington, his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary, and Mr. Sans Leroy, deputy;
His Majesty the King of Italy, the Chevalier Catalani, his chargé d'affaires;
His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxemburg;
His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, the Chevalier de Staal, his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary, and Mr. Kamensky, his actual counsellor of state;
Who, after having exchanged their full powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties pledge themselves to adopt measures which shall constitute an absolute and full guaranty that no bounty, either open or disguised, shall be allowed on the manufacture or exportation of sugar,

ARTICLE II.

The high contracting parties pledge themselves:

To collect the tax on such quantities of sugar as may be intended for consumption, without allowing, when such sugar is exported, any drawback or return of duties or any rebate that can be considered as equivalent to a bounty of any kind whatever.

To this end, they agree to subject sugar factories and refineries, together with factories for the extraction of sugar from molasses, to the warehousing system, under the permanent surveillance both by night and by day of the revenue officers.

To this effect the sugar works shall be constructed in such a manner as to furnish every guaranty against the clandestine removal of the sugar, and the aforesaid officers shall be at liberty to enter all parts of the said works.

Registers shall be kept concerning one or more stages of the manufacture, and the sugar, when finished, shall be deposited in special warehouses offering every desirable guaranty of security.

By way of exception to the first paragraph of this article, the duties on sugar used in the manufacture of chocolate and other productions intended for exportation may be refunded or remitted, provided that no bounty result therefrom.

ARTICLE III.

The high contracting parties agree to subject sugar refineries to the same system

as sugar factories.

Nevertheless, each country may keep a refining account on the score of surveillance, by means of saccharometry; or it may use any other means of surveillance that may seem to it to be best adapted to prevent the allowance of a bounty on exportation.

Proposition of the delegates of the Netherlands.

The high contracting parties agree to subject sugar refineries to the same system

as sugar factories.

Nevertheless, they reserve the right of determining by saccharometric methods, the quantity of refined that is represented by the raw sugar admitted into refineries without payment of duties, on condition that it shall be exported after being refined, without prejudice to the collection of duties on such surplusage as may be discovered by the permanent surveillance on exportation, and as may be shown by the inventory of sugar and sirup in the refinery. This inventory shall be taken at least once a vear.

ARTICLE IV.

As Belgium is not in the same circumstances as regards the enforcement of the system of taxation of quantities of sugar already produced, the system now established in that Kingdom may be maintained, with the following modifications:

The amount of the tax shall be reduced from 45 francs to 22 francs 50 centimes at the time when this convention shall take effect. The prise en charge* of the subscribing factories shall be raised from 1,500 to 1,750 grams when this convention goes into operation, and to 1,800 grams two years afterwards.

ARTICLE V.

The high contracting parties and their transmarine provinces, colonies, or foreign possessions which do not collect any tax on sugar, or which do not allow on the exportation of raw or refined sugar, molasses, or glucose any drawback, return, or remission of duties or quantities, shall be exempted from complying with the provisions of Articles II and III, provided that they pledge themselves to maintain one of those systems while the convention shall remain in force, or, in case of a change to adopt the system established in Articles II and III.

Russia, which levies a tax at a special rate on the total amount of sugar manufactured, and which allows on the exportation of all kinds of sugar a return not exceeding that rate, shall, so long as she maintains her present system, be assimilated to the powers designated in the foregoing paragraph.

ARTICLE VI.

The high contracting parties agree to appoint an international sugar commission, whose duty it shall be to take care that the provisions of this convention be executed.

^{*} Estimated saccharine yield.

This commission shall be composed of delegates of the different powers, and a permanent bureau shall be placed under its control.

The duties of the delegates shall be:

(a) To examine whether the laws, orders, and regulations relating to the taxing of sugar are in conformity with the principles laid down in the foregoing articles, and to inquire whether, in practice, no bounty, either open or disguised, is allowed upon the exportation of sugar, molasses, or glucose.

(b) To express their opinion concerning questions in dispute.

(c) To examine applications for admission into the union of states that have not taken part in this convention.

It shall be the duty of the permanent bureau to collect, translate, arrange, and publish information of all kinds relative to the laws and statistics concerning sugar, not only in the contracting countries, but also in all other countries.

With a view to securing the execution of the foregoing provisions, the high contracting parties shall communicate, diplomatically, to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, which shall transmit them to the commission, such laws, orders, and regulations concerning the taxation of sugar as are or shall be in force in their respective countries, together with such statistical information as may relate to the subject of this convention.

Each of the high contracting parties may be represented in the commission by a delegate, or by a delegate and an assistant delegate (an adjunct).

The first meeting of the commission shall take place at London, in the month following the ratification of this convention.

It shall be the duty of the commission to prepare, at its first meeting, a draught of a set of regulations fixing the place and the time of its subsequent meetings, together with the seat of the permanent bureau.

The commission shall, at its first meeting, prepare its by-laws, and also a report concerning the laws or bills that shall have been submitted to it by Her Britannic

Majesty's Government

The commission shall have no power save to inspect and examine. It shall make, on all questions that shall be submitted to it, a report, which it shall address to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which Government shall communicate it to the interested powers, and shall, if this be requested by one of the high contracting parties, cause a conference to be convoked, which shall adopt such decisions or measures as the circumstances may require.

The expense entailed by the organization and the work of the permanent bureau and the commission-excepting the salaries or compensation of the delegates, which shall be paid by their respective countries-shall be borne by all the contracting countries, and shall be apportioned among them in a manner to be hereafter determined by the commission.

ARTICLE VII.

After this convention shall have gone into operation all raw or refined sugar, molasses, or glucose from countries, transmarine provinces, colonies, or foreign possessions that shall maintain the system of open or disguised bounties on the manufacture or exportation of sugar shall be excluded from the territories of the high contracting parties.

Any contracting power, in order to exclude from its territory raw or refined sugar, molasses or glucose, on which open or disguised bounties have been allowed, may either prohibit such productions absolutely or may levy a duty upon them exceeding the amount of the bounty.

The high contracting parties pledge themselves to adopt the measures necessary to secure these results.

The fact of the existence in a country, transmarine province, colony, or foreign possession, of a system allowing open or disguised bounties on raw or refined sugar, molasses, or glucose, shall be decided by a vote of the signatory powers of this convention.

ARTICLE VIII.

States that have not taken part in this convention shall be allowed to adhere thereto at their request, on condition that their laws and regulations on the subject of sugar are in accord with the principles of this convention, and have been previously submitted to the approval of the high contracting parties in the manner prescribed in Article VI.

ARTICLE IX.

This convention shall go into operation on the 1st day of August, 1890. It shall remain in force for ten years from that day, and in case none of the high contracting parties shall have given notice, ten months before the expiration of the said period of ten years, of its intention to cause the effects thereof to cease, it shall remain in force for one year longer, and so on from year to year.

In case one of the signatory powers shall give notice of its desire for the cessation of the effects of the convention, such notice shall have no effect except as regards that power; but the other powers shall have the privilege, until the 31st day of October of the year in which such notice is given, to give notice of their intention to withdraw, in their turn, on and after the 1st day of August of the year following.

Nevertheless, each of the high contracting parties may, by giving notice twelve months in advance of its desire for the cessation of the effects of the convention, put an end thereto, so far as it is concerned, at the expiration of the second, fifth, and eighth years of the said period of ten years.

If more than one power shall desire to withdraw, a conference of the signatory powers shall meet at London within three months, for the purpose of deliberating with regard to the measures to be adopted.

ARTICLE X.

The stipulations of this convention shall be applicable to the transmarine provinces, colonies, and foreign possessions of the high contracting parties.

In case one of these transmarine provinces, colonies, and foreign possessions of the high contracting parties shall desire to withdraw separately from the convention, a notification to that effect shall be communicated to the contracting parties by the Government of its mother country, in the manner and with the consequences mentioned in Article IX.

ARTICLE XI.

The execution of the reciprocal engagements contained in this convention shall be subordinate, so far as may be necessary, to compliance with the formalities and rules established by the constitutional laws of each of the contracting countries.

This convention shall be ratified and its ratifications shall be exchanged at London on the 30th day of August, or sooner, if possible.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, May 18, 1888. (Received May 29.)

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 747, of May 5, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of the process verbaux of the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second sittings of the international sugar conference,* the present session of which was brought to a close by the signature, on the 12th of May, of the protocol transmitted in my dispatch No. 752, of the 14th instant.

These documents are so well drawn up and give such full and accurate reports of the proceeding of the conference that I deem it necessary only to call your attention to a few of the more important questions which came under discussion.

At pages 4, 5, and 6, of the proces verbal of the thirteenth sitting, will be found M. Pallain's remarks, referred to in my dispatch No. 747, with reference to the speech (vide also Congressional Record of April 6) of Senator Wilson, of Iowa. At the same sitting a discussion of some length, initiated by M. Jordan, of Germany, and continued by M. Dupuy de Lôme, of Spain, took place with regard to the penal clause question (pages 10, 11.)

The United States occupied a considerable portion of the attention of the conference at its fourteenth sitting. M. Pallain concluded an able speech, in which he gave an interesting account of the growth of the French bounty system by stating that France had been compelled to adopt bounties in self-defense and against her will, but that she would not give her final assent to their abolition until that of the United States had been given also. He added that the latter might at any moment become a great sugar-producing country, and not only close its markets to the world, but invade those of other nations; consequently any international agreement for the abolition of sugar bounties in which the United States should not be included would, in his opinion, be productive at no distant day of very disagreeable surprises for Europe.

M. Dupuy de Lôme, formerly of the Spanish legation at Washington, replied that the French knew, before coming to the conference, that the United States would not be officially represented, and he stated the reasons which, in his opinion, rendered such official representation impossible (page 6), adding that, to his mind, the fact that the United States had sent to the conference an unofficial delegate was a marked proof of our country's good will and intentions in the matter.

The whole of the fifteenth sitting was taken up with the discussion of a clause (Article VI of the Projet de Convention) providing for the creation of an international commission, whose functions shall be to see that the provisions of the convention are carried out, and to report to the powers interested any infraction thereof.

At the sixteenth sitting the report of the committee appointed on the 13th of April was laid on the table, and its recommendations with regard to the wording of Article II were eventually adopted.

Brief allusion to the penal clause question was made at the close of this sitting, the Spanish delegate stating that, in his opinion, no convention would be possible without such a clause; to which "serious declaration" the senior French delegate called the particular attention of the conference.

The Belgian proposals for insuring the abolition of bounties in that country (Article IV of the new draught convention) came under discussion at the seventeenth sitting of the conference. M. Guillaume defended these in an able speech (pages 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6), upon which comments were subsequently made by various delegates; the opposition evinced at the previous session of the conference to the Belgian project being fully maintained, notwithstanding further modifications proposed as a compromise by Belgium, i. e., an increase of the "prise en charge" from 1,700 to 1,750 grams (at once, and in two years to 1,800) and a reduction of the tax from 25 francs to 22 francs 50 centimes.

To the surprise of all the other delegates, the French refused to take part in this discussion or to commit themselves to any future course with regard to the Belgian proposals.

At the eighteenth sitting, however, M. Sans-Leroy stated that instructions had been received from France since the conference last met, and that his Government would insist upon the non-acceptance of the Belgian project.

The Spanish proposal, known as the penal-clause question, was also discussed at this sitting (pages 10 to 14.)

It had been supposed that England would not agree to a penal clause, but this turned out not to be the case, as Baron de Worms made a statement in behalf of his Government (page 14) assenting unreservedly to its insertion. M. Sans-Leroy's remarks in connection with this discussion (page 13) should be noted, to the effect that France can not admit the necessity for a penal clause affecting non-contracting powers, as she had said from the beginning that she would only assent to the convention upon the condition that all the sugar-producing powers of the world should be parties thereto.

The nineteenth sitting was chiefly taken up with a discussion of the "surtaxes" question, which was raised by the Dutch delegates at the previous session of the conference, and is referred to in my report of its deliberations. The question was again discussed as a matter of courtesy to the Dutch delegates; but it was well known that a large majority of the powers represented at the conference considered this matter to be beyond its scope, and would not allow any clause bearing on the subject to be inserted in the convention. In rejecting the clause proposed by the Dutch delegates, the conference re-asserted the principle laid down at its last session, viz, that there should be no interference with the right of all the powers signing the convention to establish such customs duties as they might think expedient. The discussion was chiefly remarkable for an unsuccessful attempt to obtain a promise from the British Government not to establish any duties on sugar during the period of the convention's duration.

Upon the rejection of the clause proposed by the Dutch delegates they announced that they felt compelled to reserve to their Government full liberty of action with respect to the entire convention.

The period during which the convention should remain in vigor was also discussed at this sitting, at which Article X, fixing the period in question, was adopted.

At the twenty-first sitting a discussion took place as to the date at which the delegates should assemble here for the final signature of the convention; and M. Jordan, of Germany, having in connection with this subject again alluded to the absence of the United States from the list of contracting powers, and expressed the opinion that by postponing the date of signature the adhesion of the United States might perhaps be obtained, I deemed it proper (page 2) to inform the conference that I had nothing to add to my previous statements with respect to the attitude assumed by my Government. I took occasion also to read a translation of our present drawback law, with which the delegates were for the most part unacquainted.

This sitting was marked by Baron H. de Worms' statement, in behalf of the British Government, to the effect that the latter can not postpone doing all that lies within its power to abolish bounties longer than August 16 next, and in the event of the convention's failure that the responsibility for this would rest, not with Her Majesty's Government, but elsewhere.

The Dutch delegate thereupon stated that it must be distinctly understood that the signature by himself and his colleague of the protocol would in no way commit his Government to the convention or fetter its liberty of action with reference thereto.

I was not present at the signature of the protocol, which took place at the twenty-second and last sitting of the conference.

You will observe from the procès verbal that, in deference to the desire of the British Government, it was decided not to make public for the present the proceedings of the second session of the conference.* I inclose an extract from the Times newspaper of to-day, containing an interpellation on this subject which took place yesterday in the French Chamber of Deputies.

In the process verbal of this sitting will also be found the closing speech of Baron Henry de Worms, who draws a distinction between a policy of protection which has the effect of closing the markets of a country against all foreign competition and "protection in the real sense of the word," which merely serves to protect national industries. To the latter he intimated that all free-trade countries might soon find themselves compelled by the force of public opinion to revert.

The most important clause of the convention, so far as the United States are concerned, is Article VII, the effect of which will be to prohibit the importation of our sugar into this country, should the present draught convention be ratified, and should the small indirect bounty which is said to exist in the United States not be made to disappear prior to the date at which the convention comes into force.

It is as yet uncertain whether the convention will be ratified, and whether, even should such ratification take place, the parliaments of the different signatory powers will pass the legislation necessary to carry its provisions into effect.

I have reason to believe that when the penal clause (Article VII) comes before the Parliament of this country it will meet with strong opposi-It is already announced in the Daily News (the leading Gladstonian Liberal paper) that immediately after Whitsuntide a meeting of Liberal members will be held for the purpose of discussing the question, with a view to the inauguration of an extensive agitation in the constituencies against the prohibition of the importation of bounty-fed sugar as being injurious to the British consumer; and the Times, in concluding a leading article on the sugar-bounties conference, says:

We must acknowledge that, though the prohibition of bounty-fed imports of sugar is not at all as objectionable as the expedient of a countervailing duty, we look upon it with great misgiving, fearing that it will be used to justify much less defensible proposals.

On the other hand, strong pressure was brought to bear upon the Government in favor of the prohibition of bounty fed sugar, resolutions to that effect being passed by the London Trades Council, by meetings of the workingmen of Liverpool and Bristol, by a meeting of workmen of the London sugar refineries, by the Birmingham Trades Council, and by a number of other similar associations. I inclose herewith, for your information, a report of the proceedings at the Liverpool workingmen's meeting.*

I am clearly of the opinion that unless the British Government had consented to the adoption of Article VII, or an equally stringent penal clause, the conference would have been brought to a speedy termination, for the obvious reason that most of the powers represented would have declined to sign a convention for the abolition of bounties unless effectually guarantied against the importation of bounty-fed sugar from without the union.

You will observe from the inclosed proces-verbaux that a great many reservations have been made by the different delegates, and, consequently, it is doubtful whether the convention will be ratified as at present drafted. Particularly is this the case with regard to Article IV (the Belgian clause), which will not improbably be dropped before the final signature of the convention.

I have no doubt whatever that a decided majority of the governments represented at the conference are sincerely desirous that the bounty system should disappear, but each is naturally anxious, before committing itself to this course, to leave no loop-hole by means of which another power may maintain a bounty. It remains to be seen whether this can be accomplished. The difficulties to be overcome are still considerable, but I am disposed to think that no power will care to assume the responsibility of the failure of the convention, and that to this fact its ratification, if accomplished, will perhaps be due.

I am informed that translations of the proces-verbaux of the late session of the conference are now being made, copies of which will be forwarded as soon as received.

I have, etc.,

HENRY WHITE.

The sugar conference.

PARIS, May 18.

In the chamber to-day M. Delisse, on behalf of the beet-root sugar refiners, asked the minister for foreign affairs to distribute among the deputies, as his predecessor had done, the reports of the deliberations at the sugar conference in London.

M. Goblet, in reply, said that he could assure M. Delisse that the interests of France

M. Goblet, in reply, said that he could assure M. Delisse that the interests of France were very manfully and usefully defended by her delegates at the second session of the sugar conference in London. A draught convention had been signed on May 12, but it was accompanied by very important reservations as to the most important articles. After the first session in November the protocols had been published at the request of the English Government, who had referred to parliamentary rules; but, contrary to what had occurred at the first session, at the last sitting of the second session the English Government had asked, through the president of the conference, that the minutes of that session might not be published, and to obtain this concession an appeal was made to the courtesy of the other governments interested. On the one hand parliamentary rules could be appealed to, but on the other it was the custom, when a convention was in the course of negotiation, not to publish the proceedings.

M. Goblet added that he did not place the question on this ground. When an appeal was made to their courtesy, it appeared to him difficult, unless there were need to the contrary, not to reply favorably. All the more was this the case, because at this moment they were conducting with England delicate negotiations, which it was to their interest to continue until a favorable solution was reached. No engagement had been entered into in London and he himself had entered into none, but, unless indiscretions had been committed, which made it necessary, he had no intention of publishing what had been mentioned.

M. Delisse replied that on this occasion the degree of courtesy due to foreign nations had been exceeded. He had, perhaps, a right to say so, considering the measures which England had recently taken with regard to French wines, and the difficulties which she had placed in the way of the importation of French cattle. He had no desire to place the foreign minister in a difficult position. He wanted only to ask him to keep in mind, with reference to efforts that would be made between this time and July 5, the almost unanimous demonstrations in all the provinces concerned. These demonstrations showed to what an extent their commerce, industry, and agriculture were interested in not following up this London conference, which by the abolition of bounties would place France in a highly undesirable situation.

The president said that the incident was closed.

Mr. Lubbock to Mr. White.

THE WEST INDIA COMMITTEE, 51 Lime street, E. C., May 18, 1888.

Sir: Referring to the conversation I had with you some days ago, I have now the pleasure to report to you, as promised, upon the present position of the American sugar industries in reference to the bounties granted upon sugar by various European Governments.

The sugar industries of the United States may be divided into three categories. There is, first of all, the interest of the producers, in the main carried on in Louisiana, where the production last year was about 140,000 tons of cane sugar. Endeavors are being made in other parts of the United States to produce sugar from sorghum and from beet, but it is still largely a matter of doubt whether, unless large subsidies are accorded to this industry by the United States, they are ever likely to become of any considerable importance.

The second category includes the refining industry of the United States. This is a gigantic industry, and, in view of the annually increasing consumption of the United States, is one which is likely to increase.

The third category is a somewhat peculiar one. It consists of the sugar industry of the Sandwich Islands, which, for some reason or other, the United States seems to think it worth their while to subsidize to an enormous extent. The production of the Sandwich Islands, which under the influence of these subsidies is rapidly increasing, was last year about 100,000 tons, and must have cost the United States tax-payers not less than $5,000,000. What advantage the United States gain by this enormous subsidy is not obvious to outsiders. The amount of it, however, is so great that the question of bounties or no bounties in Europe is one which is quite immaterial, so far as this industry is concerned. Should this subsidy, for any reason, be terminated, it is obvious that the interests of the Sandwich Islands would be identical with those of the producers in Louisiana. It will be evident that any influence which forces the price of a commodity below its natural price—that is to say, below the price at which it can be produced and sold at, with a reasonable amount of profit, without artificial assistance from Governments—must be detrimental to all those engaged in the industry of production who are not in receipt of such a subsidy as will enable them to compete, on equal terms, with those who are more fortunate.

In the case of Louisiana, the duties levied in the United States at present operate as a powerful protection—a protection which amounts to £10 per ton, sugar being worth £15 to £18 per ton ex duty—so that the injury caused to the industry by the European bounties is hardly appreciable. In the event, however, of the sugar duties in the United States being largely reduced or abolished altogether, the depreciation of price caused by the European bounties would inevitably seriously cripple the sugar industry of Louisiana. It seems, therefore, to be to the advantage of this industry that the bounty system of the European Continent should be brought to an end.

Coming now to the question as it affects the refiners of the United States. In one respect they are in a similar position to the producers of Louisiana, inasmuch as the existing duties prevent any competition from outside upon United States markets. The only competition, apparently, which they have to fear is the competition which is obviously arising out of the large subsidies granted to the Sandwich Islands on the production of sugar. As this production increases in size, it will evidently enable the refiners of the Western States to undersell the refiners of the East. In the event, however, of the duties being abolished in the United States, if the European bounties should be continued, as they at present exist, there can be no doubt that, at once, large quantities of bounty-fed refined sugar would be exported from European countries to the United States. Of course, it would be open to the United States Government to accord bounties to their own refiners equivalent to or even in excess of those granted by European countries, but, under the present law of the United States, such bounties are illegal, and it would, therefore, appear that the interests of the refining industry of the United States, no less than those of the producing industry, would be promoted by a general convention putting an end to all bounties whatsoever.

SIR: Referring to your instruction numbered 862, of the 30th ultimo, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of the note which I addressed to the Marquis of Salisbury with respect to the correspondence between Mr. Evarts and Sir Edward Thornton relative to the possessory right to Christmas Island, and of his lordship's reply to the same.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, May 4, 1888.

My Lord: I have the honor to acquaint you that the Secretary of State has been informed by the United States minister at Honolulu that Sir William Wiseman, commanding Her Majesty's ship Caroline, had, during a recent cruise of that vessel, taken possession, in behalf of Great Britain, of the three islands known as Fanning, Christpossession, in benair of Great Bertain, of the three Islands known as raining, Christmas, and Penrhyn, lying from 1,000 to 1,800 miles from Oahu; and I beg to add that, in view of this intelligence, my Government deems it proper to recall to your lord-ship's recollection the note addressed on the 29th of January, 1879, by Sir Edward Thornton, Her Majesty's minister at Washington, with regard to the possessory rights to Christmas Island, to Mr. Evarts, at that time Secretary of State of the United States, and the latter's reply to the same dated April 1, 1879.

The Christmas Island referred to in this correspondence is "situated in 1° 40′ 30″ north latitude, and 157° 14′ 77″ (sic) west longitude," and is presumed to be the island bearing that name of which the British occupation is now reported.

FOREIGN OFFICE, May 24, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 14th instant, in regard to the recent annexation by Great Britain of Christmas and other islands in the Pacific, and in reply thereto I beg to furnish you with the following statement of facts in connection therewith.

I would observe that it appears from the correspondence to which you refer as having passed in the year 1879 between Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Evarts, upon the subject of Christmas Island, in connection with the right of extracting guano therefrom, that the United States Government were then asked, in a friendly manner, whether they had finally abandoned and withdrawn their claim to the island in question. The reply made was that, as the American company to whom the grant had originally been made in 1858 to take possession of this island, "in conformity with the act of Congress of the 18th of August, 1856" (that is to say, for the sole purpose of extracting guano), "had not notified their abandonment of the island, they were still considered to be entitled to the protection guarantied by the laws of the United States in their possessory rights, so far as such occupation might be necessary

But although the American company would appear to have omitted to notify officially to the United States Government the fact that they had abandoned Christmas Island, it is evident that it had been abandoned before the 17th of April, 1882, now six years ago, for when the master of the ship Regno, belonging to Messrs. Henderson & Macfarlane, of Auckland, landed on the island on that day they found it unoccupied, and accordingly proceeded to hoist the British flag and to take possession of it in the name of the firm.

Again, when, in October, 1884, the captain of Her Majesty's ship Constance visited Christmas Island, he reported that it was then owned by Messrs. Henderson & Macfarlane, of Auckland, and he described it as "English." So again in November, 1885, when the captain of Her Majesty's ship Satellite then visited it, he reported that he had, on his arrival, communicated with the only white man there, Mr. Freeman, agent of Messrs. Henderson & Macfarlane; and in conclusion I am to say that Capt. Sir W. Wiseman reported, on the 3d of April last, that he had not taken formal possession of the island on the 17th of the preceding month until he had communicated with the agent of Messrs. Henderson & Macfarlane and had satisfied himself that there was no evidence on the spot of the island being still claimed by the United States or that it was occupied by United States citizens.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Thursday, May 31.

Samoa.

Mr. W. McArthur said that, if we were to maintain a close and intimate connection for the purposes of defense between the colonies and England, it must be made clear by English members that the policy of England was to be a peace policy. The colonists would willingly respond to any call for aid if England were attacked, but they would be quick to see the folly of allowing themselves to be mixed up with quarrels with which they had no concern. They did not care a button about any dynasty or country in Europe except so far as they were themselves affected; and to insure their co-operation our ministers must not act as if they were merely the ministers of their particular part of the Empire. If we did not pay adequate regard to the interests of the whole Empire we should run a risk of the ultimate separation of many of the English-speaking communities of the British Empire. We had lately shamed seriously the loyalty of some colonists by the attitude we had taken on questions affecting their interests, and the results of our indifference and neglect were seen in our present position with regard to Samoa. These islands were in the direct track of mail communication between western North America and New Zealand, and they were the center of a large trade in the Pacific.

English interests in the islands were not to be measured by trade only. with, we discovered the islands, and our men-of war made the charts which rendered the trade safe. The London Missionary Society had been there fifty years, and had established there a training college, from which missionaries were sent to all parts of the Pacific. Seven or eight years ago domestic affairs were in a state of confusion, and Sir Arthur Gordon established the late King Malietoa on the throne. As Her Majesty's commissioner in the Western Pacific, Sir A. Gordon issued a proclamation in which he said that he had resolved to resume official relations with the party which had been for three years in undisputed possession of the seat of government and supported by a majority of the people. This was followed by a treaty with Malietoa dated August 18, 1879, and by a convention in September, 1879, between Great Brit-In 1884 King Malietoa made a treaty ain, Germany, the United States, and Samoa. with the German Government under protest, that power having for ten years previously made persistent attempts to obtain dominion over the natives of Samoa, and subsequently he sent a petition to the German Emperor, setting forth that the means by which the treaty was accepted were unjust, and protesting against the action of the German agent in Samoa. Following that protest of the Samoan king there was sent through the then governor of New Zealand a petition to Her Majesty the Queen, signed by nearly all the Samoan chiefs, praying for annexation to Great Britain, on the ground, among others, that they were afraid of being forcibly annexed by the Germans. The treaty was not pressed by the German Government, probably in consequence of the remonstrances of the American and British Governments. In 1885, and again in 1886, further attempts were made by Germany to seize the sovereignty of these islands, and each time the attempt was successfully resisted by the British and American representatives. In 1887, however, there arrived a German squadron of four or five ships, and the German consul four days later wrote to King Malietoa, complaining that German settlers had been attacked by the natives on the 22d of March of that year, and that from time to time during the previous four years the German plantations had been damaged to the amount of some thousands of dollars a year, and declaring that it was necessary that the Samoan Government should be more severe in the judgments given in the police courts. A heavy demand for compensation was made for the damage to the plantations, without a single item of particulars being given to the Samoan king, while the punishment of offenders had absolutely nothing to do with the Samoan Government, seeing that the cases were dealt with by the consular sourt. The monstrous demand was made that the sum claimed for the compensatior should be paid the next day—a demand which in such a country it was practically impossible to meet. The King wrote, promising an answer in three days, and the raply given by the German commander was that on the next day he landed seven hundred troops from his squadron and issued a proclamation in the name of the Government of Germany, declaring King Tamasese to be King of Samoa. He wanted to know what earthly right the Germans had to declare anybody King of Samoa. It was possible that by this time—August, 1887—we had given mandatory powers to the Germans as regards Samoan affairs, but surely such mandatory powers, if any, did not reach to the extent of allowing Germany to nominate anybody she pleased as King of Samoa. [Hear, hear.]

Sir J. Fergusson pointed out to the honorable member that he did not say we had given the German Government a mandatory power. It was proposed that one of the powers should exercise influence on behalf of the rest, but the proposal was not car

Mr. W. McArthur submitted that that made the case so much the worse, and surely it was a monstrous thing for the English Government to allow such an outrage to take place without a word of remonstrance. And if Germany had no mandatory power, he wished to know why our consul was not supported in the proclamation he then issued to the Samoans. Why was it said to him a month ago in this House that our consul made that proclamation simply because he was not informed of the result of the negotiations between Great Britain and Germany?

Sir J. Fergusson was understood to say that as the honorable member referred to a previous answer of his it would be more convenient that he should remind him of what that answer was. He had said that instructions had been sent to the consul to preserve neutrality in the quarrel between the German Government and Malietoa, but the telegraphic message requiring to be forwarded by vessel from New Zealand did not reach him in time, and he did not receive his instructions till after.

Mr. W. McArthur again thought the explanation made the case worse. If Germany had made up her mind to make an attack on Samoa, did the right honorable baronet mean to say that she only gave the English Government so short notice that they had no time to notify our consul on the subject, and give him his instructions in time? Germany, in this matter, had acted in disregard of our rights and with great disrespect to this country. King Malietoa had placed himself under the protection of the British and American consuls, who promised assistance against the rebel Tamasese. the unfortunate King had been deposed by the action of Germany. He had surrendered himsif to the Germans, who had actually deported him to the Cameroons, 8,000 miles away, and so far were the English Government from carrying out the undertaking given by our consul that six weeks ago they did not actually know whither the German Government had carried the unfortunate King. But he believed that in fact the whole setion of the Common Government and the result of the whole setion of the Common Government. in fact the whole action of the German Government was the result of agreement between them and our own Government, made at a much earlier date than 1887. In 1886 and the beginning of last year the relations of this country and Germany had become somewhat strained on account of our policy in Egypt, and he supposed that we had made some concession to Germany on this Samoan question to conciliate that This was not the first time that the interests of our colonies had been sacrificed to our foreign policy at home. The references in the minutes of the conference of last year were obscure and meager, and he did not hear that the delegates were accurately apprised of the facts of German intervention in Samoa. There was a strong feeling on the subject in our Australian colonies, and also in New Zealand. There was ample time to communicate with our consul at Samoa as to the action which he should take and the action which was being taken by the Government. The Germans failed also to communicate their plans to the American Government, and Mr. Secretary Bayard had, in dignified language, protested against the course taken by the German Government. He could tell the committee the secret of Germany's action in the matter. Certain German traders had largely engaged in operations which had been rightly forbidden in the island, viz, the sale of guns and liquor to the natives. In return they obtained large grants of land from the natives. These grants were not valid without the consent of the King, and, the King rightly refusing his consent, the German Government espoused the cause of the rebel Tamasese, whom they appointed King in place of Malietoa, and to whom they assigned a German prime minister, who, of course, dictated the King's policy. It was monstrous that the interests of our Australian colonies, who had hitborte been a level to the Priviled Characteristics. of our Australian colonies, who had hitherto been so loyal to the British Crown, should be thus sacrificed to considerations and policy at home. He did not propose to move a reduction of the vote, but desired to enter his earnest protest against the most scandalous violation of an agreement made by a representative of this country with a native monarch against whom we had no cause of complaint. [Hear, hear.]

Sir J, Fergusson * * *. He apprehended it was the sense of the world-wide interests which this country possessed that ought to make Her Majesty's Government very careful not to make rash declarations and that ought to make them not indifferent to the peace of the world. He would like to know how long we should retain our colonial empire if we had not friends in the world. We went to an enormous expense in making ourselves a military power. We were a member of the comity of nations, and respected other nations too much to make rash declarations about their interests. We were a great power, and we had the sympathies of other nations in maintaining the empire we had inherited. The honorable member for the St. Austell division of Cornwall had referred to the Samoan question, and had said that the colonies ought to be largely consulted in regard to our policy, because they had very large interests involved. The honorable member asked whether the Australian colonies had been He thought he might say that, generally speaking, the interests of our world-wide empire ought to be our first consideration, but though they should be more prominent in the mind of the Government of this country than the interests of any other country, it would certainly not do to allow any of the colonies to dictate to the Government of this country what their foreign policy should be. [Hear, hear.] He could well believe that there were British subjects in Samoa of the highest standing and respectability who had suffered, and as far as Her Majesty's Government could control events their interests should not be neglected. By the treaty rights of this country it was intended that the rights of British subjects should be fully protected. orable member had referred to a guaranty which he said had been given to Malietoa. Her Majesty's Government never guarantied any rights to Malietoa. They recognized Malietoa, and he bound himself to govern in conformity with the principles of good government, but no agreement was entered into with him by Her Majesty's Government to protect him against any other government. He was sure the House would recognize that it was not proper for Her Majesty's Government to comment in the house on the conduct of another government. The German Government had a quarrel with Malietoa. They considered the German power had been insulted on a certain occasion, he believed the Emperor's birthday, by subjects of Malietoa, and they demanded a complete apology and redress in the form of compensation for outrages committed on German subjects. There was nothing in any treaty made by Her Majesty's Government with Malietoa which made it incumbent on them to protect him against

Mr. McArthur said that what he complained of was that the Government entered into a convention not only with Malietoa but with the United States and Germany also.

Sir J. Fergusson said that those conventions were for the good government of Samoa and the safety of Europeans in that country. Then the honorable member complained that there was some sort of derogation from the dignity of Her Majesty's Government in their not receiving an intimation of the intention of the German Government to require reparation from Malietoa in time to communicate with their consuls, but he thought it would be manifest to the House that if acts of war were justifiable it was impossible for a government who contemplated them to wait until they had warned all their friends that they found it necessary to undertake them before they commenced operations. He did not know that there was anything that he could add on this subject. All he could say was that Her Majesty's Government would never shrink from any duty that was imposed upon them, and he trusted that they would never be slow to fulfill their engagements in any part of the world where they really existed in a manner that befitted the Government of a great power. [Hear, hear.]

Mr. Bryce thought the committee would receive with satisfaction the assurance of the right honorable gentleman that the engagements and liabilities of Her Majesty's Government among European powers were strictly limited to engagements already known to Parliament

Sir J. Fergusson. The words I used to-night were precisely the same that I used on two previous occasions. [Hear, hear.]

Mr. Bryce said that, although the right honorable gentleman used some similar words on a former occasion, he had qualified those words by the context, and he thought they had obtained a somewhat stronger declaration that night than they had yet had from the right honorable gentleman. Taking the case as it was presented by his honorable friend, and taking the answer of the right honorable gentleman opposite, he certainly did think that the Government had played a sorry partin Samoa. [Hear, It seemed to him that Malietoa had been harshly treated and that Her Majesty's Government had not played a very dignified part in the matter. No doubt there was a very good reason why the Government should not remonstrate with Germany, even if they thought the action of Germany somewhat harsh. It would be easy for Germany to retort that Her Majesty's Government had not given proper treatment to King Ja Ja. [Hear, hear.] He would not go into earlier matters, nor would he consider how far Ja Ja had kept the terms of the treaty, although a good case might be made out on that point, because the one person in England who might be taken as knowing the facts of the case was of opinion that the King had been hardly dealt with, but he submitted that, unless some better defense could be made of the treatment of King Ja Ja than that which they had heard from the under secretary for foreign affairs, the committee must conclude that the fairness and consideration in dealing with native races, which ought to characterize this country, had on this occasion not been observed, and that the great power which the Government exercised had been violated and disgraced. [Hear, hear.] He hoped that the opinion of the committee on this subject would be strongly expressed, and expressed in such a way that the Government would be induced to reconsider the case of King Ja Ja and give him justice. [Hear, hear.]

Dr. Clark observed that it was unfair, when the judge appointed by the Government to consider this case had decided that King Ja Ja was not guilty, that the under secretary for foreign affairs should come down and repeat the charge. [Hear, hear.] The fact was that we had sacrificed Australian for European interests. [Hear,

Sir R. Fowler, while believing that no very favorable opinion had been entertained by previous governments of King Ja Ja, thought that that petty potentate had been very harshly treated by Vice-Consul Johnson. [Hear, hear.] After all, King Ja Ja had been a faithful ally of the Brithish Government, and he trusted that when his case came to be further considered he would be leniently dealt with. [Hear, hear.] He did not think, however, that a case had been made out that would justify the committee in refusing to sanction the payment of Vice-Consul Johnson's salary.

[Hear, hear.]
Mr. Heaton thought that the action of England in the scramble that was taking by the Period world not annear in a favorable light in history. place for the islands of the Pacific would not appear in a favorable light in history. Every step which we had taken with regard to those islands had been taken without our having consulted the Australian Government, and against the wishes of our col-Unless we determine to alter our course of action we should very soon have to part company with our Australian colonies.

Mr. Anderson, in order to afford those members of the committee who objected to the course which had been adopted with regard to King Ja Ja an opportunity of expressing their views on the subject, moved the reduction of the vote by the sum of £1,000

The committee divided, and the numbers were: For the reduction of the vote, 62; against, 111; majority, 49.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 18, 1888.

SIR: Mr. White's several dispatches reporting the progress and transmitting protocols of the proceedings of the second international conference on the sugar bounties question recently held at London, have been received and duly considered.

The question to which they relate being primarily one affecting the revenue, and therefore within the cognizance of the Secretary of the Treasury, it became necessary to communicate those dispatches and publications to that officer, calling his attention to the temporary reserve under which the protocols had been communicated, and asking his views concerning the requested adhesion of the Government of the United States to the project of a convention submitted, in season for conveying the result to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, as desired, before the 5th of July.

A copy of Acting Secretary Thompson's reply* is herewith inclosed, from which it will be seen that the conclusions are reached that the objects of the conference are foreign to the interests of this Government; that, in fact, no bounties are paid, either upon the exportation of imported sugar or upon the production and manufacture of sugar in the United States; that the rate of drawback which is now allowed by law upon the exportation of refined sugar, manufactured from imported raw sugars, is not believed to be excessive and does not constitute an indirect bounty as has been claimed; that frequent investigations have shown that the present rates of the said drawback are substantially correct and represent the duties collected on the importation of the raw material, less the legal retention of 1 per centum, and that the question as to whether any bounty or subsidy should be allowed in connection with the production, manufacture, or exportation of sugars, is one which can not be determined by the executive branch of the Government, the legislative branch having sole and exclusive jurisdiction in such matters.

These views of my colleague entirely confirm the declarations made in my telegraphic instructions to you of March 27 and April 3 last, and justify the attitude of reserve which the delegate of the United States was instructed to announce as the condition of his friendly attendance at the sittings of the second conference. They are to be taken as the matured views of the Government of the United States in the premises and as precluding the participation of the United States in the projected international agreement as a signatory of the proposed convention, or of any convention following the same lines, unless the action of the legislative branch of this Government should render such adhesion feasible.

Your discretion is trusted as to the fittest mode of conveying to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, before the date named, an intimation of our inability to sign, for the present at least, the project in question.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, June 20, 1888. (Received June 30.)

SIR: I have the honor to acquaint you that upon the reception of your instruction No. 876 of May 17 I communicated to Mr. Walpole and to Mr. Bateman (a very able statistician at the board of trade, to whom I am indebted for much valuable information on the sugar bounty question) copies of the letter from our assistant secretary of the Treasury to yourself, dated May 14, with an intimation that I should be happy to receive any expression of opinion with reference to the view therein expressed which they might see fit to send me; and I beg to inclose herewith, for your information, the copy of a letter, with the accompanying memorandum, which Mr. Walpole has sent me in reply; also a memorandum, from Mr. Bateman on the same subject. You will observe that the latter is based entirely upon our own and the French official statements, and ignores any unofficial yield of refined sugar. Mr. Bateman in a private note, however, tells me "that it is quite a personal statement."

In view of Article VII of the draught convention, signed in April last at the International Sugar Conference, I venture to think it of great importance, not only that our Treasury, but also that the Governments represented at the conference should be satisfied that there is at present no excess of drawback over duty in the United States.

That such is not the present conviction of the delegates by whom these powers were represented at the conference there is no doubt whatever, and I may add that until the receipt of Mr. Thompson's letter I was under the same impression, the more so as no exception was taken in your instruction No. 830 of March 22, acknowledging the receipt of my report upon the first session of the conference, to the statement therein contained, that the drawback in the United States "still affords a bounty to our exporters."

I have the honor to acquaint you, in connection with the sugar-bounties question, that on the 16th instant a deputation from the "Workmen's National Association for the Abolition of Foreign Sugar Bounties" called upon me for the purpose of expressing the earnest hope of that body that the United States would not be a barrier to the abolition of bounties by refusing to sign the proposed convention. They argued that the American workingman would not be at all injured by the abolition of export bounties, whereas the British workingman would be thereby greatly benefited. I replied that it was impossible for me to say what course my Government would eventually pursue with regard to this question; but that if they would put their views in writing I should be happy to forward the document to you. They have not deemed it necessary, however, to adopt this course.

I have, etc.,

HENRY WHITE.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 785.]

Mr. Walpole to Mr. White.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, DUBLIN, June 11, 1888.

DEAR MR. WHITE: I inclose a memorandum in answer to the United States Treasury letter of the 14th of May last.

I hope you will understand that I have no wish to set up my views as against very competent authorities in the United States; indeed my desire would be to agree with the United States Government that there is no bounty on export, and you may recollect that I was glad to bring under your notice at the conference statistics showing the enormous falling off of the exports of refined sugar to Great Britain since the reduction of the drawback in 1886, but the letter of the 14th ultimo from the United States Treasury does not, I fear, dispose of the fact that there is still a bounty on export. Practically the position is as follows: A quantity of raw sugar, yielding 100 pounds pure sugar, pays duty 2.40 cents per pound, but on this 100 pounds the refiner receives 2.60 cents per pound. Now, I think that since the reduction of drawbacks in 1886, so far as the British refiners are concerned, the United States are not an important factor in the matter; but as regards foreign producers, the United States bounty, however small, may be used by them, unduly, for the purpose of defeating the convention. You will recollect that almost all the foreign delegates alleged that their Governments were ready to abolish bounties, subject to the condition that all other countries did likewise.

Foreign refiners and producers will say we like our bounties, and we think we ought to keep them; but at all events, if you are going to deprive us of them, obtain for us fair play all round.

I believe that the United States can not move in the matter at present, and I must apologize for sending you so long a memorandum. I only do so because ultimately it may be of advantage that an as exact appreciation of the matter as is possible should be arrived at; moreover, Louisiana producers may be benefited by a convention.

You will understand that the memorandum and these observations emanate from me personally, and that if I have made any mistake in the memorandum I alone am to blame, for I have not been in communication with Baron de Worms or my colleagues on the subject.

Yours, etc.,

Memorandum on letter from United States Treasury, dated 14th May, 1888.

The scale of duties, according to polarization, presupposes a scale of yield of each grade of sugar. The scale begins at sugars polarizing 75 per cent., on which a duty of 1.40 cents per pound is levied. The duty increases .04 cent per pound with every degree of polarization, so that sugars polarizing 90 per cent are charged 2 cents per pound, and the top of the scale, 100 per cent. polarization, is equivalent to a duty of 2.40 cents per pound. That being so, it is clear that sugar polarizing 90 per cent. is assumed, according to the scale, to yield  $\frac{2}{\sqrt{40}} \times 100$  or 83.3 per cent. of pure sugar. As it appears that the average polarization of raw sugar used by refiners is about 90 degrees, we can calculate what the drawback on hard sugar should be when extracted from that class of sugar. The calculation will give the same result whatever proportion of hard and soft sugar we take, but I will adhere to the proportion given by the United States refiners themselves. The scale of duties, as I have pointed out, assumes that a polarization of 90 degrees is equivalent to a yield of 83.3 per cent. of pure sugar. The figures therefore stand thus:

65 pounds hard sugar =	Pure sugar. 65. sugar) 18. 3
Total yield of pure sugar	83.3
The drawback and duty received by the refiner are:  65 pounds hard (drawback 2.60)	ollars per 100 pounds
Total duty returned	2.13
Duty paid on the raw sugar: 90 polarization = 83.3 yield	2.
Excess

The refiner really gains more than this because he receives a drawback on sirup. Why he should receive that drawback it is difficult to understand, as he has already received in drawback on sugar what professes to be the full repayment of the duty he has paid on the raw, though really an excess payment of 20 cents per 100 pounds. It is erroneous to urge, because the calculation in the former memorandum (based on a yield furnished by the United States refiners) showed that the raw sugar which gave such a yield must have polarized 87, whereas the average polarization of raw sugar used by refiners is 90, that therefore this discrepancy accounts for the difference between the drawback shown by calculation and that fixed by the Government. Every raw sugar gives a yield in accordance with its strength, and every yield arrived at must presuppose a corresponding strength in the raw sugar from which it is obtained. It is not asserted nor is it probable that the refiners are charged upon an excessive yield. It is impossible for a sugar polarizing 87 to give the yield of one which polarizes 90; and it is equally impossible to impute a yield of 87 to one which should give 90, or vice versa. The figures taken in the former memorandum showed on calculation that they come from sugar polarizing 87. They are, therefore, no guide to the drawback which would be obtained from sugars polarizing 90.

There is no need, however, to go into any hypothetical yield because the scale of duties indicates in itself that the drawback should be on each grade of sugar, and even this calculation is unnecessary, for it is clear that the scale of duties is equivalent to a duty of 2.40 cents per pound on pure sugar and that therefore that is the correct drawback to allow on pure sugar.

The calculation of the drawback which should be allowed on each grade is as follows:

The duty on raw sugar is now levied in proportion to the pure sugar contained in it, the scale beginning at the bottom with sugar containing 75 per cent. of pure sugar, which is charged with a duty of 1.40 cents per pound, and going up at the rate of .04 cent per pound for every additional percentage of pure sugar, so that 100 per cent. of pure sugar, i. e., pure sugar, would pay 2.40 cents per pound. It is evident, according to this scale of duties, that a raw sugar containing 76 per cent. of pure sugar is estimated to yield  $\frac{1.44}{2.40} \times 100$ , or 60 per cent. of pure sugar, and so on up the scale, which therefore runs thus:

			per cent.
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	76 per cent. of	pure sugar	60
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing.	79 per cent. of	pure sugar	65
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	82 per cent. of	pure sugar	70
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	85 per cent. of	pure sugar	75
kaw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	88 per cent. of	pure sugar	80
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	91 per cent. of	pure sugar
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	94 per cent. of	pure sugar.	90
Raw sugar polarizing, i. e., containing,	97 per cent. of	pure sugar	95

The excess of drawback is therefore fully proved as follows:

Per cent. of pure sugar contained in the raw sugar.	Equiva- lent yield of ex- tractable pure sugar.	drawback	Drawback actually allowed (2.60 per 100 pounds).	Excess of draw- back.	Excess per 100 pounds of pure sugar.
76 79 82 85 88 91 94	60 65 70 75 80 85 90	1. 44 1. 56 1. 68 1. 8 1. 92 2. 04 2. 16 2. 28	1. 56 1. 69 1. 82 1. 95 2. 08 2. 21 2. 34 2. 47	. 12 . 13 . 14 . 15 . 16 . 17 . 18	. 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20 . 20

In short, the higher a sugar polarizes the higher the yield. The variety is infinite, but whatever holds good in one particular must be equally true of every other.

Sugar drawback in United States.

Taking the average polarization of raw sugar used by United States refiners at 89.50 degrees, I turn to the French statement of cane sugar yields for 1887 (Journal Officiel, May 30, p. 2232) and find the corresponding effective yield in refined sugar polarizing 89.50 was taken at 78.52 per cent. Taking the import duty at 2 cents per pound, this would make the true drawback 2.55 cents, or .05 less than the present United States drawback of 2.60; but there is no doubt that the French system is too favorable to their refiners, as is very clearly stated in a United States Government Report, Department of Agriculture, Bulletin No. 5. At. p. 36 Mr. Wiley says: "The method of co-efficients described and used in France for the commercial valua-

"The method of co-efficients described and used in France for the commercial valuation of raw sugars, though doubtless justified for certain beet and high-grade cane sugars, is open to serious objection. The results given by it necessarily vary a great deal, approaching near the truth for some, but falling far short for others, being generally too low. In cane sugar (almost the only raw sugar imported into this country) the ash is a much less disturbing factor than in sugar from beets. In this latter case the ash is largely soluble and thus produces a maximum melassigenic action, while the ash of cane sugar is largely insoluble, and therefore excites a much less injurious effect."

If, then, the deduction for ash is taken with the co-efficient 2 instead of 4, as the United States Government chemist suggests, the sugar I have described would show a yield in refined sugar of 80.96 instead of 78.52, and the corresponding drawback would be 2.47 cents. Mr. Wiley further adds: "Under the present regulations of the tariff this amount (i. e., the drawback) would be found, I believe, to be nearly 2.50 cents per pound of pure sugar."

There is little doubt, then, that, taking the calculations of the United States and the French officials, these latter being notoriously very favorable to the refiners, the present export drawback in the United States of 2.60 cents is considerably in excess of the true amount.

In making the above calculation I have been careful to take sugar of 89 plus polarization, in accordance with the Secretary of the Treasury's letter to the Secretary of State of the 14th ultimo, which states that number to be the average used by refiners. I find, however, from the last trade volume of United States, for the year 1886–'87, that the No. 94 plus was the one under which most raw sugar was imported, namely, more than 11 hundred million pounds, compared with 525 million pounds at 89 plus degrees.

degrees. At the French equivalent the refined yield of raw sugar at 94.75 would be 89.61 per cent., which is equivalent to a drawback of 2.45 cents— $\left(\frac{2.20}{.8961}-2.45\right)$ —thus more than confirming my calculation that 2.60 is too high.

Sugar bounties.

Mr. Picton asked the under secretary of state for foreign affairs whether the negotiations for the abolition of foreign sugar bounties extended to the abolition or the reduction of the protective duties levied by foreign nations on British sugar or on British manufactures in which sugar was used.

Sir J. Fergusson. No; these negotiations relate solely to the abolition of sugar bounties, and do not enter into questions of duties on sugar or on manufactures in which sugar is used.

Mr. Illingworth asked whether the Government of the United States had taken a part in the conference on sugar bounties in the same manner and on the same footing as the governments of the other countries concerned; and whether the under secretary for foreign affairs was able to give the House any information concerning the probability of the United States Government joining in and adopting the conclusions of the conference.

Sir J. Fergusson. The representative of the United States attended the sugar conference to listen to its proceedings and report the same, but without committing his Government. I am not able to inform the House concerning the course which the Government of the United States may take at future stages.

Mr. Phelps to the Marquis of Salisbury.

United States Legation, London, July 3, 1888.

MY LORD: In view of the desire expressed in the protocole de clôture of the second session of the international conference on the sugar bounties question, that the opinions of the powers represented at the conference with respect to the draught convention for the abolition of export bounties should be communicated to Her Majesty's Government before the 5th instant, I have the honor, in accordance with instructions to that effect, to acquaint your lordship of the conclusions at which my Government has arrived in the matter.

You are aware that no legal bounty exists in the United States upon the exportation of imported sugar, or upon the production and manufacture of sugar; and the Secretary of the Treasury considers that the rate of drawback which is now allowed by law upon the exportation of refined sugars manufactured from imported sugars is not excessive, and does not constitute an indirect bounty, as claimed, frequent investigations having shown that the present rates of the said drawback are substantially correct, and represent the duties collected on the importation of the raw material, less the retention of 1 per cent.

The objects of the conference are, however, in the opinion of my Government, foreign to the interests of the United States, and, moreover, the question as to whether any bounty or subsidy should be allowed in connection with the production or manufacture of sugar is one which can not be determined by the executive branch of the United States Government, Congress having sole and exclusive jurisdiction in such matters.

Under these circumstances my Government considers itself precluded from giving its adhesion, for the present at least, to the proposed convention, or to any convention following the same lines, unless Congress should take action of a nature to render such adhesion possible.

Treaty between Germany and Samoa.

Under the provisions of article 8 of the treaty of friendship concluded between the German Empire and Samoa on the 24th of January, 1879, the imperial German consul, Becker, and the representative of the Samoan Government, Brandeis, have deliberated concerning the following agreement, and have concluded it conditionally upon the ratification by both Governments.

The Samoan Government engages with the Imperial German Government to maintain and to improve the public institutions in Apia which have been under the administration of the former municipality, such as ways, roads, bridges, lights, quarantine, pilotage, and harbor constructions. For its part the German Government agrees that the Germans, and those under German protection residing within the former municipal district, be subjected to the regulations enumerated below, and declared to be laws of Samoa by the Samoan Government on the 18th of January, 1888, and that they shall be liable to pay to the Samoan Government the dues and taxes as fixed by the same.

The regulations referred to are:

Regulations 8 to 13, 15 and 108, concerning the selling of spirits; concerning the right to sell spirits; concerning the license to sell spirits; concerning drunkenness.

Regulation 16, concerning the sale of fire-arms.

Regulations 17, 19, 20, 74, concerning licenses for trades and professions. Regulations 30, 31, concerning aiding deserters from ships. Regulation 33, concerning real-property tax.

Regulation 34, concerning poll-tax.

Regulations 64 to 69, concerning harbor police.

Regulation 75, regulation for building.

Regulation 84, concerning the so-called trading ships.
Regulation 109, concerning quarantine.
Regulation 110, concerning the prevention of contagious diseases.

Regulation 111, concerning pilotage.

Regulation 114, concerning dynamite and its prohibition.

Regulation 120, concerning public roads.
Regulation 124, concerning public nuisances.
Regulation 127, concerning the Mulivai bridge.

Regulation 128, concerning riding without a bridle.

Regulation 129, concerning dog-tax.

Regulation 131, concerning slaughtering. Regulation 132, concerning supplying intoxicating liquors to policemen.

Regulation 133, concerning playing cricket.

Regulation 134, concerning delinquent tax-payers.

Regulations 135, 136, concerning new buildings.

Regulation 137, concerning fire-works. Regulation 138, concerning public bathing.

ARTICLE II.

The German Government agrees further that the Germans, and those under German protection in Samoa living outside the former municipal district, shall pay the same poll-tax to the Samoan Government as the Samoans pay. But no German nor any one under German protection shall be required to pay a higher amount per year than $5 for himself and family.

ARTICLE III.

If Germans, or those under German protection, feel that they have to complain about taxes or dues imposed upon them by the Samoan Government, such cases shall be tried and decided before the German consul, or his representative, together with an official of the Samoan Government.

ARTICLE IV.

By Article I the German consular jurisdiction shall not be restricted only in such cases of police offenses as are not provided for in the imperial German law. penalties contained in the regulations mentioned in Article I and the jurisdiction of the judge in Apia nominated by the Samoan Government to judge such cases shall be applied to German subjects and those under German protection. Appeals from the decision of the judge above mentioned, so far as concerns Germans and those under German protection, shall lie to a court composed of the German consul, or his representative, and an official of the Samoan Government.

ARTICLE V.

This agreement shall come in force after it is ratified by both Governments. BRANDEIS.

BECKER, Imperial German Consul.

APIA, January 24, 1888.

The imperial consul, Becker, and the representative of the Samoan Government, Brandeis, have agreed, by order of both their Governments, to the following addition to the treaty of the 24th of January, 1888:

SOLE ARTICLE.

It is left with the discretion of the imperial German consul at any time to declare the withdrawal of the Imperial German Government from the treaty concluded with the Samoan Government on the 24th of January, 1888.

> BRANDEIS. BECKER, Imperial German Consul.

APIA, May 28, 1888.

After the deliberation of the Taimua and Faipule, I give my consent to the above treaty, concluded on the 24th of January, 1888, with the Imperial German Government and to the additional agreement of the 28th May, 1888. TUIAANA TUIATUA TAMASESE.

No. 936.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 30, 1888.

SIR: The Congress of the United States has passed an act, which received the President's approval on the 9th of the present month, providing for an international marine conference, to secure greater safety for life and property at sea. By this act the President is requested to invite the other maritime powers of the world to take part in a conference, the objects of which are, in brief, to revise the present international regulations for preventing collisions at sea, especially with reference to signaling in fog; to revise the existing code of flag signals; to compare and discuss the various systems employed for the saving of life and property from shipwreck; to devise methods of reporting, marking, and removing dangerous wrecks and obstructions to navigation; and to establish uniform means of conveying to mariners warnings of storms and other information.

The great interest and importance of this subject justifies an extended reference to the principal objects of the proposed conference and to the steps already taken in the same direction.

In 1863 the Government of Great Britain invited the other maritime nations, in the interest of commerce at large, to examine the code of laws adopted by it in 1862 for preventing collisions at sea, and if found suitable to legalize them.

In the course of the next two years thirty-four of the principal maritime nations of the world had approved and adopted these laws.

In 1877, it having been found that the laws so adopted did not fulfill the requirements of marine commerce, the British Government took steps, by the appointment of a commission, to frame a revised set of laws. These, when formulated, were submitted to all the maritime nations, and, after sixteen of these powers had signified their approval, they went into effect on the 1st of September, 1880.

These regulations, however, are believed to be inadequate to the present needs of commerce, in respect especially to the sound-signals, for use in fog, mist, or falling snow. The increasing number and speed of steam-vessels has greatly added to the dangers of collision in thick weather, and the opinion has recently been expressed by the best authorities that the present system of signals for steam-vessels is insuffi-

The present code of flag-signals is also believed to stand in need of careful revision. This system originated in Great Britain in 1856, and experience has shown the necessity of extending the list of names of places and words and phrases, as well as of considering whether greater rapidity and accuracy in signaling can not be attained. With respect to the protection of life and property from shipwreck no general international agreement in regard to on and off shore signaling or as to the modus operandi of the life-saving service of the different nations is known to exist. In spite of the utmost effort of those engaged in the Life-Saving Service of the United States, lives have been lost from foreign vessels stranded on our coasts because of a misunderstanding of our methods, and it is believed that the experience of other countries in this regard is similar to our own.

The destruction, or at least the frequent and accurate reporting, of dangerous derelicts is also a matter of the highest importance; and it is obvious that this work can be thoroughly done only by means of the hearty co-operation of the principal maritime nations. Closely connected with the subject of reported derelicts is that of conveying warnings of storms, and of giving information of recently-discovered dangers to navigation, and changes in lights, buoys, and other day or night marks, which can probably best be undertaken by the adoption of some carefully-considered international system.

Another important topic, although not enumerated in the act of Congress, which gives rise to the present invitation, is that of a uniform system for the loading of vessels. This subject has recently attracted earnest attention in Great Britain, and a royal commission on the loss of life at sea, appointed in 1884, reported in August, 1887, recommending that Her Majesty's Government should take steps to invite a conference of maritime states to consider how far it might be possible to agree upon such rules and upon regulations for their enforcement. Additional force would attach to the recommendations of the projected conference were the British view in regard to overloading at sea to be brought up by Her Majesty's delegates as pertinent to the general objects of the conference rather than as matter for an independent comparison of international views.

This review of the general purposes of the conference indicates the great interest and the active measures which Great Britain has always taken in the arbitate to the little of the conference indicates the great interest and the active measures which Great Britain has always taken in the subjects to which I have referred.

In view of this, as well as of the importance and extent of British maritime interests, the President recognizes the necessity of the adhesion of Her Majesty's Government to the plan of the proposed conference, and indeed of its active co-operation therein, if the labors of that body are to meet with general acceptance and success.

By direction therefore of the President of the United States, you will tender to the Government of Great Britian a cordial invitation to be represented, by such number of delegates as may seem to it convenient, at an international conference to be convened at the city of Washington on Wednesday, the 17th day of April, 1889, the purposes of such conference being "to revise and amend the rules, regulations, and practice concerning vessels at sea and navigation generally, and the international code of flag and night signals; to adopt a uniform system of marine signals, or other means of plainly indicating the direction in which vessels are moving in fog, mist, falling snow, and thick weather, and at night; to compare and discuss the various systems employed for the saving of life and property from shipwreck; for reporting, marking, and removing dangerous wrecks or obstructions to navigation; for designating vessels; for conveying to mariners and persons interested in shipping warnings of approaching storms; of dangers to navigation; of changes in lights, buoys, and other day and night marks and other important information; and to formulate and submit for ratification to the governments of all maritime nations proper international regulations for the prevention of collisions and other avoidable marine disasters."

It will be understood by all states taking part in this conference that no questions relating to the regulation of trade and commerce are within the scope of the discussion, and that in the disposition of questions to come before the conference no State shall be entitled to more than one vote, whatever be the number of delegates it may send.

You will make this invitation known by reading this instruction to Lord Salisbury, and by leaving a copy with him should he desire to possess it.

Your own discretion will doubtless suggest to you the most effective manner of making known the great interest taken by the President in the benevolent purposes of the projected conference, and his desire and expectation that in the universal interest of sea-faring humanity Her Majesty's Government will receive and respond to our invitation in the same spirit in which it is extended.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 30, 1888.

SIR: Referring to my instruction of this date, touching the invitation to the Government of Great Britain to be represented at an international marine conference, to secure greater safety for life and property at sea, to be held at Washington on the 17th day of April of next year, I inclose herewith for your information copies of the act of Congress in pursuance of which such invitation was given, and of the President's message to Congress commending the subject to their favorable attention and transmitting numerous documents in relation thereto.

I also inclose for your information copies of the circular invitation addressed to our ministers in the other maritime nations, which, as you will observe, is similar in tone to that addressed through you to the Government of Great Britain, but emphasizes rather the alacrity and unanimity with which the maritime powers have responded to ascertained needs of navigation, than the particular initiative of Her Britannic Majesty's Government in bringing about desirable reforms, upon which it has been thought well to lay stress in inviting the concurrence of Great Britain in a more extended scheme of revision.

It has also seemed advisable in the general invitation to omit reference to the load-line question, inasmuch as it is not included in the purposes for which the conference is called as enumerated in the act; but in view of the great interest felt in Great Britain in regard to this subject of legislation, and the numerous efforts there made to deal effectively with the general question of sending ships to sea in an unseaworthy state, it is hoped that the question shall be brought before the conference through the initiative of the British delegates and exhaustively considered.

It will be well for you to bear in mind, in such negotiations as you have in regard to this matter with Her Majesty's Government, that the invitation addressed to it has been much more specific than that addressed to other Governments, in view, of course, of the very peculiar importance of securing the cordial co-operation of Great Britain in the proposed conference.

I inclose also a copy of the treaty† in English.

It provides that German subjects in the municipality shall be amenable to certain of the former municipal regulations converted into Samoan laws by the proclamation of the Samoan Government of the 18th of January last, and shall pay to the Samoan Government the taxes and contributions therein specified.

It provides that German consular jurisdiction in Samoa shall not be in any way restricted by the foregoing provisions. Nevertheless, they are to be enforced in the first instance by a judge appointed by the Samoan Government, from whose decision an appeal is to lie to the German consul at Apia, or his locum tenens. Outside of the municipality of Apia, German subjects and those under German protection are to be required to pay the same poll-tax to the Samoan Government as Samoans, provided it does not exceed $5 a year for a person and his family.

This is a substantial outline of the treaty.

As you will perceive by the inclosed note, Her Majesty's Government are disposed to conclude a similar treaty with Samoa, on condition that the regulations referred to be embodied in a British regulation of Her Majesty's high commission under the Western Pacific orders in council, 1877–1880, and enforced exclusively by the British consul as deputy commissioner.

There is one clause in the note, the scope of which I do not fully comprehend. It is said that it must be stipulated in the British-Samoan agreement that British subjects shall be under the "exclusive jurisdiction" of the British consul as deputy commissioner. I understand this to have reference only to the enforcement of the regulations.

This being so, I find it necessary to inquire whether Her Majesty's Government propose to consider the question into whose hands the taxes thus levied and the fines thus imposed shall be paid, and how the moneys so obtained shall be expended.

So far as the adoption of the regulations is concerned, my views coincide with those expressed by the Marquis of Salisbury, that it is expedient to put them in force; and, as I find in the German agreement no conventional guaranty in respect to the Samoan official, who is to enforce them, I do not perceive, at present, any reason why the United States should yield any part of its existing exclusive consular jurisdiction over Americans in Samoa. But, before expressing further concurrence with the views of Her Majesty's Government, I should be glad to learn whether it would not be thought advisable in thus converting the late municipal regulations into American or British regulations to make some further provision in any future British or American convention with Samoa, which would afford guaranties in respect to the disposition and application of such revenues.

This is a question of practical administration in respect to which Germany appears to possess at present such influence as to render it in her judgment unnecessary to exact nominal guaranties, which may, however, be essential to the United States and Great Britain.

The inclosure referred to in the note of the British chargé is a confidential paper printed for the use of the foreign office June, 1888, and entitled "Apia municipal regulations referred to in Article I of German agreement with Samoa."

Third. The date at which the convention shall be put in force is postponed to Sep-

It will be seen from the documents herewith transmitted that Denmark is unable to sign the convention, owing to a belief that Article VII (the "penal clause" referred to at length in my reports of the first and second sessions of the conference) conflicts with the most-favored-nation clause in several of her treaties; that France is unwilling to commit herself to the abolition of bounties until all the sugar-producing countries of the world have agreed to do likewise; that Austria-Hungary only signed the convention on the understanding that if all the European sugar-producing countries have not become parties thereto before September 1, 1891, she shall have the right of deciding whether or not she will then put it into force; that Brazil adheres in principle, and reserves the right to join the convention after its adoption by the signatory powers; and that Sweden maintains an attitude of reserve.

It will be observed that under Article VI any country which levies no duty on sugar or which gives no drawback may become a party to the convention without being compelled to adopt the system of manufacturing and refining in bond provided for by Articles II and III; and that the permanent commission created by Article VI, to see that the terms of the convention are carried out, is to "collect, translate, arrange, and publish information of all kinds respecting legislation on and statistics of sugar, not only in contracting countries, but in all other countries as well." the latter it is quite certain that the United States will come in for an important share of the commission's attention.

I inclose herewith leading articles from the Times, Daily News, Standard, and Daily Telegraph newspapers* with reference to the convention; and letters on the same subject from Mr. Webster, member of Parliament for one of the St. Pancras divisions of London; from Sir Thomas Farrer, late permanent secretary to the board of trade; from Mr. Martineau, and from Mr. Neville Lubbock (whose letter to me on the sugar-bounties question was transmitted to you in my dispatch No. 757). These articles and letters set forth the views of those who are in favor of and of those who are opposed to the abolition of sugar bounties in this country.

United States; and in this connection I venture to refer to my dispatch No. 785 of June 20 last.

It is provided by Article VII of the convention that "the fact of the existence in any country" of a system of open or disguised bounties on sugar shall be established by the decision of a majority of the signatory powers; and I feel convinced from what I observed at the two sessions of the conference which I attended that if any such vote were taken at the present moment it would be to the effect that a disguised bounty exists in the United States. Moreover, I doubt very much whether, so long as our system is maintained of charging duty on the raw material and of giving a drawback on the exportation of the manufactured article, it would be possible to obtain a majority of the Governments represented at the conference to vote otherwise, even if our rate of drawback were still further reduced; as most of them believe it to be impossible to fix any rate of drawback which would be the exact equivalent of the duty levied on the raw material. The reasons for this are stated in my report upon the first session of the conference.

The proceedings of the two last sessions having been made public, my dispatches Nos. 722, 726, 729, 747, 752, 754, 760, and 785 need no longer be considered as con-

In the translation herewith forwarded, I am reported, by a clerical error, to have referred, at the ninth meeting of the conference, to a report of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the national "defenses." It should be, and is in the French original and reasury upon the national "derenses." It should be, and is in the French original and in the translation of what I said on that occasion, inclosed in my dispatch No. 722, "finances." It will also be found upon reference to the procès-verbal in French, of the same meeting (forwarded in my dispatch No. 726), that I did not say that our rate of drawback had been reduced in consequence of "representations made by this legation," as stated in the translation, but "after" such representations had been made.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 827.—London Times, Monday, August 27, 1888.]

Mr. Webster to the editor of the Times.

SIR: No one can doubt that before long a great deal of attention will be given to the result of the conference now being held respecting sugar bounties, and that the vast majority of those who have carefully considered this question sincerely trust that the result of this conference may be the termination of the present pernicious system, which it appears evident all foreign governments themselves are almost ashamed of as a system at once rotten in itself and a large drain on the national exchange.

In the first instance no doubt they did not know they were giving bounties to their sugar refiners, and at the present time, although the United States Government is giving a bounty equal to about 50 shillings a ton, the fact of such being the case is not openly avowed. The reason that they profess not to be giving bounties is the manner in which they levy the duties. Our competitors in the industrial markets of the world, as most of us are aware, put a tax upon sugar, and at the same time they say to the sugar refiners and sugar growers, if you send any sugar out of the country we shall give you the tax back again and call it a drawback. The original idea was, if you pay £4 or £6 per ton duty upon the sugar you produce, we will give you back an equivalent sum if you sell this article to foreign consumers.

In precisely the same way our own malt tax used to be levied, the tax upon British beer being then levied not on the beer but on the malt, and the drawback the British farmers used to receive for feeding cattle was equal to the amount of the tax.

Precisely the same thing is done in France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland in regard to sugar. Instead of taxing the sugar they tax the roots from which the sugar is made, and they, when the sugar is exported, pay a drawback upon the actual sugar. In fixing the quantity of sugar which it is arbitrarily considered can be extracted from the beet-root care is taken by the sugar refiners that the estimated yield is calculated on as small a basis as possible, and in Germany the quantity is 8½ tons in 100 tons of beet-root. The refiner on purchasing the beet-root pays the duty on this estimated with the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the statement of the state tons of peet-root. The renner on purchasing the peet-root pays the duty of this estimate on every 100 tons. But as a matter of fact, owing to improved modes of cultivation and improved machinery, the actual yield, instead of being only 8½ tons in 100 tons of beet, is often 12 tons and even, it is said, higher. Therefore, as the tax on the domestic sugar is £6 a ton, the grower will pay for 100 tons of beet £51 of taxes, and when he exports it will receive from the Government £75 back, by which means he with the grower will be got to the grower to be got to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to the grower to gains as nearly as may be £24; in reality about £2 per ton upon every ton of sugar exported.

Now, the argument may be adduced by some: If you are getting sugar £2 cheaper per ton-that is, for £18 instead of £20 per ton-is not that a great gain to the country, and ought we not, therefore, to encourage this system instead of seeking to abolish it? To that I would reply, what is good in one occupation is good in all, and that, as the majority of the inhabitants of these islands are engaged in industrial occupations, if all the various industries in this country were subject to this bounty system, what would be the good of cheap sugar or any other commodity if you had not the money to buy it with? Now, let us carefully consider why the foreigner pursues this aggressive protective system within our shores. Does he do it for philanthropic motives; to give us sugar more cheaply? Not a bit of it. The object in the first instance is to cripple the industry, and, if possible, to destroy it within our borders.

Take for instance the possibility that these bounties are kept on for twenty years. The chances are that by that time our colonial and British sugar trade would cease to exist. Some might say if they were taken off you would have a chance of getting the trade back. To any one who understands what the loss of a connection means this argument is without force. There are many firms in this country making large profits on the reputation acquired by their predecessors. If the foreigner gets the business completely in his hands he will take the bounty off and the price of sugar will rise enormously.

At present it is only calculated to give us sugar at one-fourth pence per pound neaper. If, indeed, it does that, and if a free-trade market was established in this country for the sale of sugar, and not a protected one in favor of the produce of the foreigner and against the British colonial producer, the British manufacturer, and workingman, competition would soon keep the price of sugar at its present level; but the produce would come from British colonies and give from that fact tenfold the employment to British industries than is the case by our purchasing this artificially bolstered-up industry from the beet-root sugar-producing countries.

We are told that the French alone are throwing difficulties in the removal of these Whether that is so or not the papers which will in due course be presented duties. to Parliament will alone show. The English market I find is rather an important factor in French external commerce, and France can not afford to trifle with us if we are really in earnest in determining to abolish by the best practical means at our command this insidious system of veiled bribes, which has already partially destroyed an important industry in the British Empire. France on an average of years exports £32,000,000 of her products to the United Kingdom; we send to France annually of our goods less than half that annual value, or about £15,000,000. Of the goods of Germany, Holland, and Belgium, we purchase £63,000,000, and sell to them somewhere about £30,000,000. But, taking France alone, our imports of manufactured goods and goods partly manufactured, leaving out breadstuffs and other alimentary substances, are about £23,000,000 per annum; while our exports to France are about £13,000,000. These facts give me scope for imagining, if we are only firm, that the French nation will see the desirability of at some time taking off their own shoulders the heavy impost they now have in the payment of these sugar bounties, and not needlessly causing irritation in the minds of a nation whose commercial dealings with them are of such magnitude, and whose statesmen unanimously condemn the present system of bounties; and not only is the feeling against this secret protective system strongly felt by ministers and ex-ministers of the Crown, but also by the great bulk of the working classes of the country.

Now, sir, what do the working classes of this country say would be the best remedy to prevent the continuance of this system. Some say, let them continue their bounties if they are foolish enough to do so, and pay annually away (mainly to their manufacturers) £7,000,000 or £8,000,000 a year. We will stand at the port of entry of this commodity into this country and simply demand an equivalent in the shape of a countervailing duty, equivalent to the actual bounty received, and give this sum in aid of the taxation in the United Kingdom. Others, again, say the best way to deal with the bounty-protected commodities sent to our shores, which destroy the principles of free trade, that is, equality of competition, is to keep them out. To put it in the words of one of the delegates at an important conference recently held of the London Trades' Council at the Westminster Palace Hotel, who thus put it: "We will say to France, we do not want your sugar; keep it. But we will not trench upon your free-trade principles and practices, whether you or others do so. We have the your free-trade principles and practices, whether you or others do so. We have the right and power to prevent your bounty-fed goods from coming into Great Britain, and that power we will use in self-defense." This, he said, was the way out of the difficulty, and while he sympathized with the idea that we should not do anything to harass any other nations, it seemed to him the only possible alternative, and on this line a unanimously carried addendum to a resolution on the subject was proposed by Mr. Shipton, as follows: "That, without attempting to prejudge the opinion of any organization, this conference believes the policy of total prohibition of bounty-fed products to be the most acceptable remedy to bring about the abolition of foreign state bounties."

That this question has been for a long time rankling in the minds of many of those who have given their attention to it as a burning injustice to British industry I think few can dispute. It is not my intention to here dwell at length on the great loss it is to many industries besides the industry immediately concerned, such as the shipping, the engineering, the colliery interest, the sack-making, etc., and which have indirectly been to some extent the sufferers by this pernicious system. Nor do I here propose to deal at any length with the vast displacement of capital which has resulted by our allowing the great cane-producing industries in our colonies to be unfairly attacked, and practically in many instances completely abolished by means of these bounties paid by foreign governments in British markets. These facts are known too well. It seems to me time the question was grappled with in earnest, and I believe, and believe with confidence, that it is now in the hands of ministers of the Crown who are determined to spare no effort to solve the question satisfactorily, who will not enter into the subject brimful of antediluvian theories of political economy, but who will not shrink from their determination to give equality of competition to British labor and fair play to this or any other industry which is attacked in an insidious and underhand manner.

I am, sir, etc.,

ROBERT GRANT WEBSTER.

BLACKFORD, PERTHSHIRE, N. B.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 827.—London Times, Wednesday, September 5, 1888.]

Sir Thomas Farrer to the editor of the Times.

SIR: The result of Baron de Worms' labors is before us. The mountain has brought forth!

All the nations who joined in the conference pronounce sugar bounties to be bad things, except the United States, who maintain a cautious silence. England, Germany, Belgium, Spain, Italy, and Russia promise one another that they will be bounty-fed sugar, wherever it comes from.

The United States hold aloof altogether; Austria reserves her final adherence until all European sugar-producing and consuming countries also adhere; Brazil reserves her freedom; Denmark refuses to boycott because it would be a breach of treaties; France reserves her adherence until all sugar-producing and consuming countries adhere, and until she is satisfied with their laws; Sweden refuses to bind herself in any way.

France, Austria, and Brazil are great sugar-producing countries. Except ourselves, the United States are the largest consumers of sugar in the world, and they are also large producers.

Consequently, the effect of our boycotting bounty-fed sugar will not be to prevent its being made or sold, but only to prevent our own people from getting the benefit of it. France, Austria, Brazil, the United States, or other sugar-producing countries, may continue to give bounties, and the only effect or tendency of the convention will be to make it dearer here than it is now, and cheaper in non-boycotting countries. Any countries which still choose to give bounties will find markets in the United States and elsewhere.

The convention is to be worked as follows: The countries which are really parties to it are, besides ourselves, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Russia, Spain, and Italy, of which Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Russia are large sugar-producers. Egypt may be left out of the question.

These six nations, with ourselves, are to constitute a commission, which is to sit in London. This commission is to report what sugar in any country is bounty-fed, and, if bounty-fed, to what extent. This is one of the most perplexing technical questions which financial necessities have ever inflicted upon legislators—a question which all the cleverest experts of the ablest governments have hitherto been unable to solve. Upon reports thus obtained a majority of the signatories to the convention is to decide, and their decision is to rule the action of the Governments parties to the convention, and to bind those Governments to boycott sugar, from whatever country or colony it may come, which is that determined to be bounty-fed. In other words, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Russia, Spain, and Italy, or any four of them, being themselves competitors in our markets for the sale of their own sugars, are to determine whether we shall buy sugar from the United States and Sweden, who will certainly not be parties to the convention, or from France, Denmark, Austria, and Brazil, who at present reserve their adherence and may probably not be parties to it, or from any other sugar-producing countries. Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Russia get from us a promise that we will boycott any sugar from other countries which they or a majority of the parties to the convention for the time being pronounce to be bounty-fed, the only consideration which they give us for this mischievous and embarrassing obligation being a promise on their part that they will not themselves send us cheap bounty-fed sugar or receive it themselves.

Further, the parties to the convention undertake that the most-favored-nation clause, which is, of course, an obstacle to boycotting, "shall not be pleaded with a view to evading the consequences of the stipulation for the exclusion of bounty-fed sugar." This is all very well as regards the signatories to the convention; but as regards other countries who are not parties to it, it has no effect at all, and since we have most-favored-nation treaties with many of such countries, we shall expose ourselves to just complaint and retaliation on their part if we boycott their sugars at the instance of competing nations who are parties to the convention. According to a return made in 1879, we have most-favored-nation treaties with the Argentine Republic, Austria, Chili, China, Denmark, Portugal, Sweden, Turkey, and the United States, not to mention less important countries.

Further, there are in the convention stipulations binding our colonies to adhere to it, but providing for their withdrawal. The operation of these clauses is obscure, and may not be unimportant if, as I believe to be the case, some of them do now give bounties. It would be a curious operation of the convention if we were forced by it to boycott our own colonies. But, however this may be, one thing is quite clear, viz, that we promise, both for ourselves and for all our colonies, that we and they will not, under any circumstances, show any favor to the sugars of our West Indian and other colonies or possessions over that shown to the beet sugars of their rivals in Eu-

I might go further and show how the convention will operate in throwing upon us and upon the other Governments parties to the convention the obligation, not only of examining and supervising the management of all sugar factories and refineries in countries parties to the convention, but also of forming a judgment on the operations of manufacture in countries not parties to the convention. But it is scarcely necessary to go further. It is obvious that the stipulations noticed above will entangle us in a web of complicated and embarrassing commercial and financial restrictions. They will not put an end to bounties; but they will tend to make sugar cheaper to non-boycotting nations and dearer to ourselves; they will involve us in vexatious prohibitory legislation; and will probably also involve us in breaches of valuable commercial treaties.

These observations on the details of the convention leave almost untouched the larger question, whether under any circumstances it can be right for this country to retaliate upon foreign bounties for the purpose of putting an end to them. Foreign bounties are very bad things, but foreign protective duties are worse. We do not retaliate upon foreign protective duties, which have no compensatory advantages for us, because it is not our interest to do so. And a fortiori, it is not to our interest to retaliate upon bounties the compensatory advantages of which to us are very great, and probably in the conformation of the compensatory advantages of which to us are very great, and probably, in the case of sugar, preponderate over the disadvantages.

Putting aside for the moment this larger question, on which there is a great deal to be said, it is obvious that this convention, while it may help some other countries to improve their own foolish systems of taxation, must embarrass and injure us. It restricts our freedom, it is the first great departure from the wise policy of the last fifty years, and it throws doubt on our advocacy of the principle of free imports. It does not put an end to bounty-fed sugar, but it diverts the stream from countries which are foolish enough to boycott it to countries which are wise enough to receive it, and thus tends to make sugar cheaper to our neighbors and rivals and dearer to ourselves.

It is well that the ratification of such a convention should be delayed for two years. Much may happen in that time. If this and no more than this is the result of Baron de Worms' much betrumpeted exertions, we may conclude that their real object is rather to produce an effect on certain constituencies than to form a ground for practical legislation. But, even if no further harm ensues, we may be peimitted to regret the somewhat undignified spectacle of an English minister making the round of Europe, cap in hand, teaching foreign finance ministers their business, advising them not to tax their own people for our benefit, and humbly beseeching them not to make us a present of cheap sugar. What wonder if they make such a minister their cat's-paw. Bounties, like protective duties, are bad things; but this is not the way to get rid of them.

ABINGER HALL, September 3.

T. H. FARRER.

[Inclosure 4 in No. 827.—London Times, Tuesday, September 11, 1888.]

Mr. Lubbock to the editor of the Times.

SIR: The letter in your columns of yesterday on the subject of the sugar bounties convention from Sir T. H. Farrer will be read with the attention to which anything coming from the pen of the late permanent chief of the board of trade is naturally entitled. That the convention should be as gall and w rmwood to him will cause no surprise to those who have for years past watched the intense—I have almost said the acrimonious—zeal which he has displayed in preventing anything whatever being done to bring about a cessation of bounties.

Sir Thomas Farrer says: "Bounties, like protective duties, are bad things; but this is not the way to get rid of them." Perhaps he then would explain how he would get rid of them. The doctrine was preached many years ago that foreign Governments, if left alone, would abolish bounties themselves. This has been tested for twentyfive years, with the result that the policy of giving bounties, so far from being abandoned, has been largely extended. Your correspondent taunts the Government with going cap in hand to foreign powers, but this has been rendered necessary by the commercial policy of this country for the last half century. Would he have wished the Government to follow the example of Spain, who, when she wished us to reduce the duties on her wines, did not come to us cap in hand, but imposed 30 per cent. extra duty on English goods going into Spain? Although this measure was successful, it was one which Sir Thomas Farrer would hardly wish to see imitated by our

Your correspondent speaks more than once of cheap bounty-fed sugar in such a way as to lead any one who was excessively ignorant into the belief that bounty-fed sugar is cheaper than non-bounty-fed sugar. I need hardly say that this is not, and never can be, the case, either with or without the convention. Sugar, bounty-fed, or otherwise, will sell at the same price in the same market relatively to its value at all times.

Sir Thomas Farrer fears that we may possibly under the convention be prevented from buying sugar from the United States and Sweden. The United States produce less than 200,000 tons, and consume more than 1,200,000 tons, so that they are not likely to have any surplus sugar to send us for some time to come. Sweden may or may not export sugar, but if she does the quantity is so small that it finds no place in any published returns available to those interested in the sugar industry. throws out some doubts respecting France, Austria, Brazil, and Denmark. He also quantities of sugar we received from France and Austria are comparatively small, while from Denmark we receive none at all. But as regards Austria and Brazil, there can hardly be a doubt as to their adhesion to the convention, and I believe it will be found that France will also come in. But even if these powers remain outside, the total amount of sugar available for export from France and Austria is hardly one-twentieth of the world's supply, and the effect of excluding their sugar would con-sequently be absolutely inappreciable upon the price. Moreover it must be borne in mind that it is only sugar receiving a bounty that will be boycotted. Brazil does not give a bounty, so that her sugar would in no case be shut out, and as for France and Austria, these powers are solemnly committed by their declarations in the protocol to the policy of suppressing bounties.

Further, a complaint is made that the process of ascertaining whether sugar is bounty-fed or not is one of the most perplexing technical questions which financial necessities have ever inflicted upon legislators, a question which all the cleverest experts of the ablest governments have hitherto been unable to solve. But this is a complete mistake. It is quite true that some of the authorities of the board of trade, while Sir T. Farrer was its chief, professed to find great difficulty in ascertaining whether bounties were granted or not in certain countries, but no such difficulty has been found by foreign officials, and the countries giving bounties are perfectly well known not only to them but to all concerned in the industry. I should be sorry to think that the officials of our own board of trade, under their late chief, were lacking in intelligence as compared with foreign officials; but if Sir T. Farrer, when alluding to "the cleverest experts of the ablest governments," meant to refer to his own department, there is, I fear, no other conclusion to be arrived at.

Further, some alarm is expressed at the possible effect the convention may have in preventing our colonies from giving bounties, and that we may have to boycott their sugar. It is really quite amusing to see Sir Thomas Farrer possing as the friend of our colonial sugar industries, and professing alarm on their account, but I am happy to be able to reassure him. The colonies are included in the convention, and all their sugar industries are fully represented upon the British and Colonial Anti-Bounty Association, of which I am the chairman, and I am in a position to say that there is not the slightest fear of our having to boycott any colonial sugar whatever. It is not for me to say whether Sir T. Farrer's allusions to Baron Henry de Worms are in good taste; but I do know that those who are practically acquainted with the subject are best able to appreciate the great ability shown by the baron in overcoming the difficulties he has had to contend against—difficulties which Sir T. Farrer, in spite of his condemnation of bounties, has certainly not assisted to remove. I believe the services rendered by Baron de Worms will be more generously appreciated by an unprejudiced public, as I know they are by our sugar-growing colonies and the home industries connected with sugar.

I am, etc.,

N. Lubbock

Chairman of the British and Colonial Anti-Bounty Association.

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 1, 1888.

PHELPS, Minister, London:

It is reported by a telegram of the 14th instant that Tamasese has been overthrown by Mataafa. The latter has been declared King by nearly the whole population and is constantly gaining strength. Ascertain whether the foreign office has received the news. The choice of the Samoan people will be respected, it is assumed, by the treaty powers, in accordance with the understanding. This Government intends to do so. Similar instructions have been sent to our minister at Berlin.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 9, 1888.

SIR: I have to inclose herewith for your information and to ask your special attention to copies of two dispatches from the United States vice-consul at Apia, dated respectively the 11th and 14th of September, 1888, in which an account is given of the recent hostilities among the natives in Samoa, resulting in the complete overthrow of the Brandeis-Tamasese Government.

The Imperial German Government has given us the assurance that it does not propose to interfere in the strife between the natives for the purpose of controlling their choice of a Government.

It is proper to say that in their recent course which seems to have been in a great measure unanticipated by the foreign element in the Islands, the Samoan natives have shown a spirit and resolution that appeal most strongly to our sense of humanity.

I am, etc.,

No. 150.7

CONSULATE-GENERAL, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Apia, Samoa, September 11, 1888. (Received October 8.)

SIR: Affairs in Samoa have taken a decided change since last mail; then all was apparently quiet and peaceful, but now everything is excitement and trouble. The whole of Samoa is in open rebellion against Tamasese, and you will see from the record of current events inclosed that the Tamasese Government is in a bad state.

I have, etc.,

W. BLACKLOCK, U. S. Vice-Consul-General, [Inclosure 2 in No. 973.]

Record of current events.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Apia, Samoa, August 27.

Talolo from Tuamasaga chiefs to Tamasese, and the ceremony of giving away a name to Tamasese.

Her Britannic Majesty's consul, H. de Coetlogon calls.

August 28.—Another or a continuation of yesterday's doings; dissatisfaction brewing on account of Brandeis breaking into the native customs and also insisting that the name of Malietoa be given to Tamasese.

August 29.—A repetition of yesterday, and a report that several hundred natives have taken to the bush; also that Brandeis proposes to disarm the Malietoa natives.

The French corvette Fabert arrives from Tahiti.

August 30.—Great excitement last night among the natives on Mulinuu, and the Germans, owing to the natives in revolt against Tamasese, threatening a raid on the point.

August 31.—Early this morning Brandeis, at the head of about 600 natives, goes inland to put down the revolt.

Natives just arrived from the bush report a skirmish, and a dead body is brought in. Great numbers from both parties are taking to the bush. • Things are beginning to look serious. The engagement took place about 3 miles behind Apia; five reported killed; one chief from Mulinuu killed, and a chief of the Malietoa party killed also. The other deaths were common people.

Although the Tamasese people make the attack and surprise the others, they return without accomplishing anything. Reported that a number of the Tamasese people are now leaving the point and joining the opposition.

To night everything deathly still; all native houses have their blinds down. Men all sleeping, and in every house two old women are watching and keeping guard to prevent a surprise being made on them. The men are all armed; every one has his gun alongside of him.

The people on the point are very uneasy, expecting the Malietoa party are going to make a raid on them.

Sep'ember 1.—Nothing serious happened last night. This morning Tamasese's people are returning home to their different villages. The Tuamasaga people got orders yesterday to report at Mulinuu in the afternoon, but they took no notice of it, and not a single man went. In yesterday's engagement Tamasese's force was about six hundred and the bush party about forty; merely a skirmish squad.

The killed and wounded on both sides were about equal. Brandeis was certainly not victorious, as he came back without doing anything, and the other party killed as many as he did.

September 2.—Great preparations on both sides for a renewal of hostilities on Tuesday next. Many of Tamasese's people leaving and joining the Malietoa people. All Tuamasaga people take to the bush.

September 3.—Tamasese's people are fortifying Mulinuu. Natives are arriving from Savaii and joining both parties.

This afternoon the German man-of-war Adler lands a squad of men armed at Muli-

The excitement increases and an engagement is expected either to-night or to-morrow morning.

September 4.—Before daylight this morning a German man-of-war boat boards an English boat coming round Mulinuu point and examines the cargo. Natives from Mulinuu go to Matautu, Vaialu, and Matafagatele and take up their quarters in the houses vacated by the Malietoa people. They commence depredations on Hamilton's property, notwithstanding his having notices and American flags on same, but on Hamilton's going to them and letting them know that a force would be landed from the Adams if they did not desist, they knocked off.

Great excitement on account of a report that the Malietoa party are going to make a raid on Mulinuu at 5 o'clock this evening.

A letter is sent from the Malietoa people asking if there is any neutral territory to the three consuls; the British consul calls on the German, who says he respects no neutral territory.

September 5.—The German man-of-war Adler leaves for the westward with several native boats in tow, and a lot of armed natives: Brandeis having given the revolutionists notice in writing that the Adler was going to burn Manono.

Mataafa reported to be chosen as king of Samoa by the revolutionists, and the whole population, both Malietoa and Tamasese people, said to be well pleased,

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1—48

Several white people go from town on horseback to Falcula to visit the revolutionary army and return in the evening. They report the natives in good spirits, and in large numbers, well armed, and strongly fortified. The Adler returns and one of her sailors reports the shelling of Manono and the attempt of the Tamasese boats to land, but they were driven back by the people on shore.

September 6.—Great quantities of pigs, chickens, and all kinds of native food coming in from Matafagatele and vicinity. The Tamasese people are cleaning everything out belonging to the other side who are in the bush.

A number of natives come in from the bush and sleep at Mulinuu to-night; they intend to try and get Seumanatafu away, who is at present closely watched. The captain of Adams sends a protest to the captain of the Adler.

September 7.—Seumanatafu did not get away last night. All the natives on the point are anxious to leave and join the revolutionists. Only four chiefs left with Tamasese—Seumanatafu, Suatele, Too, and Mataia.

The captain of the Adler replies to the Adams' protest that he is acting under Becker's orders.

Aana people all leave Mulinuu and return home to consider whether they will remain neutral or join Malietoa.

Mataia and Too leave Mulinuu and go to Falcula with their people to-night. September 8. —Yesterday the Tamasese people, who are living at Vailele, killed all the pigs and chickens and burned two houses. This village only contains women and children left by Malietoa people who have gone to Falcula. Suatele goes to Savaii to try and raise recruits for Tamasese.

Lanati also goes from Falcula to bring over the Malietoa people. They are expected to arrive on Monday.

A number of people, camped in Vailele and Matafagatele, cleared to-night and joined the Falcula party.

September 9.—Notice received from the Falcula Government that Mataafa has been made king with the name of Malietoa Tooa Mataafa.

Notices are sent to the three consuls, the French priest, and to Tamasese.

Yesterday Safu, a chief of Manono, was shot by his people for being a traitor.

A great many people from Apia go down to Faleula and visit the Malietoa people.

In the afternoon about six hundred of the Malietoa people come in towards Apia and In the afternoon about six hundred of the Malieloa people come in towards Apia and pitch their camp at Vaimoso. They got word that the few Tamasese people left at Mulinuu were going to build a fort at Vaimoso, and they came in to prevent it.

September 10.-A letter in German just received from the German consulate.

Having had it translated, it states that the Adler, by request of the German consul, has landed troops near Mulinuu to protect German property and others on account of armed mobs being in the vicinity of Apia.

Captain Hamilton has just come in and reports the Tamasese people have pulled down four houses on his property and cut down his trees and committed all sorts of depredations on his property.

Another letter just received from Mataafa, addressed to the British consul and myself, inquiring about neutral territory.

Proclamation of Brandeis.

GOVERNMENT OF SAMOA Mulinuu, September 5, 1888.

To the chiefs and rulers of Tuamasaga, Manono, and le Faasaleleaga in the bush:

CHIEFS: By authority of His Majesty Tamasese, the King of Samoa, I make known unto you all that the German man-of-war is about to go, together with a Samoan fleet, for the purpose of burning Manono, on account of their secret actions. After this island Manono is all burnt, 'tis good, if the people return to Manono and live quiet. If they obey, then no other punishment will come upon them or added to above.

To the people of le Faasaleleaga I say return to your homes and stop there; the same to those belonging to Tuamasaga.

If you obey this instruction, then you will all be forgiven. If you do not obey, then all your villages will be burnt down the same as Manono.

These instructions were made or set forth in truth. In sight of God in the heaven. Chiefs, I am,

U. S. S. ADAMS, Apia Harbor, Samoa, September 6, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that information was received yesterday stating that the German war vessel (Adler) under your command would on that date proceed to the island of Manono with a Samoan fleet, and there burn the homes and villages of the Manono men who are now on this island (Upolu) in open revolt against Tamasese. It is reported that those homes were occupied by the defenseless wives and children of the aforesaid Manono men. The information further stated that after burning Manono the Faasaleleaga and the Tuamasaga would also be burned unless the men in revolt would surrender to Tamassas and return to their homes. It is a fact that yesterday morning an armed force of natives embarked in the corvette Adler, and the ship proceeded with the natives' boats in tow towards Manono, and later in the day the firing of heavy guns was reported in that direction, furnishing thereby presumptive evidence that the above-mentioned mission was about to be accomplished.

The present Samoon result is about to be

The present Samoan revolt is almost, if not quite, general, and the revolutionists had an armed force for warlike purposes in the field within a few hours' march of this harbor when the vessel under your command transported the Tamasese troops to a neighboring island, with the avowed intention of making war on the isolated homes of the women and children of the enemy.

Such action, especially after the Tamasese party having been represented as a strong government, not needing the armed support of a foreign power, appears to be a violation of the principles of international law, as well as a violation of the generally-recognized laws of humanity.

Being the only other representative of a naval power now present in this harbor, for the sake of humanity I hereby respectfully and solemnly protest in the name of the United States of America and of the civilized world in general against the use of a national war vessel for such service as was yesterday rendered by the German corvette Adler.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES. Apia, Samoa, September 11, 1888.

SIR: Capt. E. L. Hamilton, an American citizen, has just reported to me that natives belonging to the Brandeis-Tamasese party have been committing depredations on his property, which is in charge of some Samoan families. They have pulled down and removed therefrom four Samoan-built houses, turning the people in charge out of doors; also cut down some banana trees (wanton destruction). Their attention was called to the fact that it was American property and the American flag was flying on same. The natives only laughed at this, and said they did not care for that.

I hope you will see your way clear to interfere in this matter and have these houses returned from where they were taken, for if this is allowed to pass there will be no end of insults to the American flag and depredation committed on American property. Even American lives will be in danger if this outrage is quietly winked at.

Hamilton, an American citizen, and to inform you that I have this afternoon visited the said locality in company with the owner, and caused the national flag, that had been taken down, to be replaced by the native chief in charge of the encampment. I also informed the said native chief that the houses removed from the American property must be returned and put in order for occupation by the families who were put out of them, and that I would allow him until 12 o'clock to-morrow (noon) to comply with my commands.

GENTLEMEN: I write this letter to you two, very humbly and entreatingly, on account of this difficulty that has come before me.

I desire to know from you two gentlemen to-day the truth where the boundaries of the neutral territory are.

You will observe that I am now at Vaimoso, and I have stopped here till I know what you say regarding the neutral territory. I wish to know where I can go and where the forbidden ground is, for I do not wish to go on any neutral territory or on any foreigner's property.

I do not want to offend any of the great powers.

Please excuse trouble and send me an answer to this question.

Another thing I want to inform you. Yesterday I sent a letter to the German consul, asking where the neutral territory was, but I have heard he did not get it. I suppose some scheming people got hold of it.

Now I wish to ask: Would you two gentlemen have a talk with the German consul about the neutral territory and let me know your decision?

Another thing I'd like. Would it be possible for you three consuls to make Tamasese remove from (Mulinuu) German property to some other place, for I am in awe of going onto German land.

I hope that you two gentlemen will receive this letter of mine kindly.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Apia, Samoa, September 14, 1888.

September 11.—A report that the Malietoa party are advancing on Mulinuu and Matafagatele.

Capt. E. L. Hamilton called to-day to say that the natives had taken back the houses they removed from his land and replaced them where they took them from.

September 12.—Great excitement this morning. The Malietoa people, with Mataafa at their head, are marching towards Matautu and Matafagatele to attack the Tamasese forts which are there. An engagement is expected every minute.

The fight has opened. Things are lively. Immense excitement. The Malietoa people carrying everything before them. The Tamasese people take refuge under the German man-of-war Adler's quarter.

Captain Bissett, a British subject, master of the British schooner Vindex, killed on his way to the British consul's office. A good many coming in wounded.

A German sailor shot on board the Adler in the mouth while watching the fight. It is getting dark, but the fighting still continues. There is one more fort to be taken to-night. Two nearest Apia were taken early in the afternoon. Fighting continues all night till 3 o'clock in the morning.

Everything taken by the Malietoa people. The enemy completely routed.

About 12 o'clock at night a great scare took place, a report that the people from Mulinuu and the black boys, laborers of the German firm, were on their way to attack the Apia natives in their houses. The state of affairs is dreadful, and from all accounts this is merely a commencement.

Before next mail goes the place may be all in ashes. The natives are desperate and will fight to the very last.

September 13.—The Malietoa people in possession of Apia this morning. Two villages, who were the principals in the fight yesterday, march through town triumphantly, but quietly and orderly. The Apia boys are all coming in and returning to their houses with Seumanatafu at their head, he having been taken again into their The German consul, captain of the Adler, and Brandeis met in Mulinuu on official business.

The Adler has moved into the small harbor close to Mulinuu Point.

The people of Vailele, Matafagatele, Vailoa, and other Malietoa villages along the beach return to their homes, such as they are now. The loss of life is quite small in proportion to the numbers engaged, I suppose not over forty on both sides, but a great number wounded. Numbers of English and Americans visit the battle-ground and are astonished at the strength of the fort, in some places 10 feet high, and the danger the white residents are placed in.

September 14.—Every thing apparently quiet this morning. I have just heard that the German consul wants to meet Mataafa to-day.

No. 999.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 23, 1888.

SIR: On the fifteenth ultimo Dr. Horacio Guzman, the minister of Nicaragua at this capital, in pursuance of instructions received from his Government, left at this Department a copy of a note addressed by Mr. J. P. H. Gastrell, the British minister in Central America, to the minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Nicaragua, a copy of which

I inclose herewith.

In this note Mr. Gastrell complains that the Government of Nicaragua "has established a post-office at Bluefields, thus intervening in the domestic affairs of the reservation;" that "troops and a police force have been stationed, and forts, arsenals, and military posts have been established, or are about to be established, by Nicaragua" within the Mosquito Reservation, and that the Nicaraguan commissioner residing in the reservation sustains these acts. He states that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the erection of forts, arsenals, or military posts, the establishment of post-offices by Nicaragua, or the exercise of military or police authority within the territory of the reservation can not be reconciled with the spirit of the treaty of Managua of 1860, as interpreted by the award of the Emperor of Austria. And he refers to certain questions touching the precise boundary of the reservation, as to which some dispute still exists.

Touching the inquiry in regard to the demarkation of the boundaries of the reservation, I have no observations to offer. The matter is one in which the Government of the United States feels at least an equal interest with that of Great Britain, inasmuch as a number of our citizens are now engaged in business within the reservation and by far the larger part of the foreign commerce of that region is at present carried on between the ports of Bluefields and New Orleans.

But with respect to the other subjects mentioned by Mr. Gastrell the case is different. The subjects involved are, as you know, of deep interest to the people of the United States, and have heretofore been the subject of prolonged and voluminous correspondence between this Government and that of Great Britain. It is not needful to recapitulate at this time the whole of the earnest and protracted discussion in which the questions relating to the Mosquito territory constitute an important part; but it will be conducive to a clear understanding of the President's views in regard to the particular points suggested by Mr. Gastrell's note if a statement of these views be prefaced with a brief historical review of the acts and declarations of the several powers concerned.

The Mosquito coast was a name bestowed in the last century upon a tract of country of considerable but imperfectly defined extent, stretching along the shores of the Caribbean Sea to the southward and westward of Cape Gracias à Dios, and was inhabited by a sparse population of wholly uncivilized Indians, between whom and the inhabitants of the British colony of Jamaica some relations are said to have early existed. The meaning and character of these relations have been the subject of elaborate and careful consideration in correspondence between my predecessors and the ministers of the United States in England and Central America, especially in a dispatch from Mr. Abbott Lawrence to Mr. Clayton, of April 19, 1850, and in numerous other documents long since given to the world by the Governments both of the United States and of Great Britain. It is enough for my present purpose to point out that this Government has at all times maintained that the title to the whole of the Mosquito coast was, in the last century, vested in the Crown of Spain; that the native inhabitants were never more than a mere savage tribe, having at best only possessory rights in the region they occupied; that the sovereignty of Spain was distinctly recognized by Great Britain in the treaties concluded with the Spanish Government in 1783 and 1786; and that the rights of Spain became vested in her revolting colonies when they secured their independence.

These views were not accepted by the British Government, which insisted upon regarding the Mosquito Indians as an independent nation, entitled to full recognition as such. The chief of the tribe was described in the British correspondence as the Mosquito King, and Great Britain was designated as his protecting ally. Acting upon this view of the case, two British frigates, on January 1, 1848, took forcible possession of the town of San Juan del Norte-subsequently known as Greytownwhich had a peculiar importance to the people of the United States as being situated at the Atlantic mouth of the projected Nicaragua interoceanic canal. For upward of twelve years the protectorate of Great

These pretensions on the part of Great Britain excited marked interest and opposition in the United States, and, together with other circumstances, became the cause of the negotiation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of April 19, 1850. By the terms of that instrument, as you will remember, the Governments of the United States and Great Britain agree that they will never "occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have to or with any state or people, for the * * occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same."

Into the irritating controversies to which this treaty gave rise I do not desire to re-enter, but it is enough to point out that the continuance of the protectorate of Great Britain over the Mosquito territory was regarded throughout by the United States as being in conflict with the provisions of that agreement.

The arrangements to be entered into upon the cessation of this Mosquito protectorate were, however, the cause of considerable embarrassment to the British Government, as was frankly pointed out in two instructions addressed by Lord John Russell to Mr. Crampton, under date of January 19, 1853, from which I quote the following passages:

It is evident that since Great Britain first assumed the protection and defense of the Mosquito Indians the position of all parties has changed.

First. Spain, instead of exercising absolute sovereignty over Central America and prohibiting all commerce on the coasts under her sway, has entirely lost her dominion over the continent from Cape Horn to Florida.

Second. The Mosquito Indians, instead of governing their own tribe according to their own customs, furnish a name and a title to Europeans and Americans, who carry on trade at Greytown and along the coast of Mosquito according to the usages of civilized nations.

Third. Great Britain, instead of having an interest in the defense of the Mosquito Indians for the sake of rescuing part of the territory of Central America from Spanish control, and obtaining an outlet for her commerce, has no other interest in Mosquito than that which is derived from an honorable regard for her old connection with the Indian nation of Mosquito.

Her Majesty's Government has for several years endeavored to suit its engagements to the altered circumstances of the case.

The committee of government of Greytown are, in fact, the real power which excrises authority in that part of Central America. To Her Majesty's Government it would be a matter of indifference whether that authority was exercised in the name of the King of Mosquito or in the name of Greytown itself; but it is desirable that what is apparent should be made to conform, as far as possible, to what is real. What is apparent is, that the King of Mosquito exercises sovereignty over Greytown; what is real is, that he has no authority whatever, but that a committee of Europeans and Americans carry on the government at that port.

It is the object of Her Majesty's Government to make Mosquito a reality instead

It is the object of Her Majesty's Government to make Mosquito a reality instead of a fiction, which it has hitherto been; and provided we save our honor and credit in our treatment of the King of that country, whose title and power are, in truth, little more than nominal, it is a matter of comparative indifference to us how this object is carried out, whether by constituting Greytown as the head and pivot of the new territorial establishment which we desire to see formed, or by any other liberal and practical arrangement which may be thought preferable, on discussing the matter with the United States.

Her Majesty's Government consider that so large and fertile a country as the extensive region denominated the Mosquito territory, a region extending from the River Roman on the north to the River San Juan de Nicaragua on the south, and whose western boundary is also of vast, though undefined extent, ought no longer to be allowed to lie waste, with thirty or forty thousand wandering Indians forming its only native population, and a few hundred foreigners of various races located, for the purposes of commerce, at different points along its extended line of sea-coast. Neither would it consist with our notions of expediency that such States as Nicaragua, Honduras, or even Costa Rica, should obtain possession of the Mosquito territory.

The plans of settlement thus suggested by Lord John Russell were not approved by the United States, and prolonged but fruitless negotiations were undertaken in the hope of arriving at an arrangment with respect not only to the Mosquito coast, but also to the British claims over certain islands off the coast of Honduras. Ultimately the Government of Great Britain sent Sir William Gore Ouseley as its representative to Central America, with the purpose of concluding separate agreements with the several countries interested. This mission was carried on and brought to a successful conclusion by Mr. Wyke.

It is interesting to observe that the plan adopted in regard to the mode of dealing with the Mosquito Indians seems to have been first suggested by General Cass in a conversation with Lord Napier, which is related as follows by the latter in a dispatch to Lord Clarendon of March 12, 1857:

General Cass then passed some reflections on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; he had voted for it, and in doing so he believed that it abrogated all intervention on the part of England in the Central American territory. The British Government had put a different construction on the treaty, and he regretted the vote he had given in its favor. He did not, however, pretend that the British Government should now unconditionally abandon the Mosquitos, with whom they had relations of an ancient date; it was just and consistent with the practice of the United States that those Indians should be secured in the separate possession of lands, the sale of which should be prohibited, and in the enjoyment of rights and franchises, though in a condition of dependency and protection. The British Government had already removed one impediment to the execution of the Bulwer-Clayton treaty by the cession of their claims on Ruatan. Two difficulties now remained—the frontier of Belize and the delimitation and settlement of the Mosquito tribe. If the frontier could be defined, and if the Mosquitos could be placed in the enjoyment of their territory by treaty between Great Britain and Nicaragua, in which the concessions and guaranties of the latter in favor of the Indians should be associated with the recognition of the sovereignty of Nicaragua—so I understood the general—then the Bulwer-Clayton treaty might be a permanent and satisfactory settlement between the contracting parties. The United States desired nothing else than an absolute and entire neutrality and independence of the Central American region, free from the exercise of any exclusive influence or ascendancy whatever.

On January 28, 1860, a convention, sometimes known as the Zeledon-Wyke treaty, was signed at Managua by the representatives of Great Britain and Nicaragua. By the terms of this treaty Her Britannic Majesty, subject to the conditions and engagements specified therein, agreed to recognize as belonging to and under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua, the country theretofore occupied or claimed by the Mosquito Indians within the frontier of that Republic. ish protectorate was to cease three months after the exchange of ratifications, in order to enable Her Majesty's Government to give the necessary instructions for carrying out the stipulations of the treaty. district, now commonly known as the Mosquito Reservation, was to be assigned to the Indians, within which they were to enjoy certain rights of local autonomy. The Republic of Nicaragua was to pay to the Indians $5,000 a year for ten years. The port of Greytown, which was not included in the Mosquito Reservation, was to be constituted a free port. And certain grants of land, if made bona fide, in the name and by the authority of the Mosquito Indians, since January 1, 1848, lying outside the reservation, were to be confirmed.

Articles II, III, and VI of this treaty may be quoted in full as fol-

ART. 2. A district within the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua shall be assigned to the Mosquito Indians; which district shall remain, as above stipulated, under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua. Such district shall be comprised in a line which shall begin at the mouth of the River Rama, in the Caribbean Sea; thence it shall run up the mid-course of that river to its source, and from such source proceed in a line due west to the meridian of 84° 15′ longitude west from Greenwich; thence due north up the said meridian until it strikes the River Hueso, and down the mid-course of that river to its mouth in the sea, as laid down in Baily's map, at about latitude from 14° to 15° north and longitude 83° west from the meridian of Greenwich; and thence southerly along the shore of the Caribbean Sea to the mouth of the River Rama, the point of commencement. But the district thus assigned to the Mosquito Indians may not be ceded by them to any foreign person or state, but shall be and remain under the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua.

ART. 3. The Mosquito Indians, within the district designated in the preceding

ART. 3. The Mosquito Indians, within the district designated in the preceding article, shall enjoy the right of governing, according to their own customs and according to any regulations which may from time to time be adopted by them, not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua, themselves and all persons residing within such district. Subject to the above-mentioned reserve, the Republic of Nicaragua agrees to respect and not to interfere with such customs and regulations so established or to be established within the said district.

ART. 6. Her Britannic Majesty engages to use her good offices with the chief of the Mosquito Indians, so that he shall accept the stipulations which are contained in this convention.

The conclusion of this arrangement was officially communicated to the Government of the United States, which, regarding it as a final withdrawal of British influence from the Mosquito country, expressed its satisfaction at a settlement that appeared to put an end to the disputes to which the Clayton Bulwer treaty had given rise.

The treaty of Managua was at least as favorable to Great Britain as that Government had any right to expect. As pointed out by Mr. Fish in his instructions to General Schenck of April 26, 1873, this instrument "assigned boundaries to the Mosquito Reservation probably beyond the limits which any member of that tribe had ever seen, even when in chase of wild animals. Worst of all, however, it confirmed the grants of land previously made in the Mosquito territory. The similar stipulation on this subject in the Dallas Clarendon treaty was, perhaps, the most objectionable of any, as it violated the cardinal rule of all European colonists in America, including Great Britain herself, that the aborigines had no title to the soil which they could confer upon individuals."

The Government of the United States had not, however, anticipated that under cover of this treaty the Government of Great Britain would continue to attempt any interference with the affairs of the Mosquito It is superfluous to say that if it had been supposed by the United States that the treaty of Managua was understood by the Government of Great Britain to give that country a right of influence, direction, or control over the destinies of the Mosquito territory as against the State of Nicaragua, that convention, far from being hailed by this Government as a solution and termination of disputes concerning the British protectorate over the Mosquito Indians, would have been regarded as a serious obstacle to any such settlement. Under Article VI of the treaty of Managua, Her Britannic Majesty was bound to use her good offices with the chief of the Mosquito Indians, so that he should accept the stipulations of that convention; and it might have been naturally assumed that upon such acceptance by the Mosquito chief, Her Majesty's right to further interference was at an end.

That this Government was justified in so assuming, may amply be demonstrated not only by the consideration of the expressed design of the convention, but also by its particular provisions. may be designated as of unequivocal significance, the fourth article of the treaty, by which it is provided that nothing in the treaty shall be construed to prevent the Mosquito Indians at any future time from agreeing to absolute incorporation into the Republic of Nicaragua on the same footing as other citizens of the Republic, and from subjecting themselves to be governed by the general laws and regulations of the Republic, instead of by their customs and regulations. This provision merely emphasizes the fact of the actual, substantial incorporation of the Mosquito Indians into the Republic of Nicaragua, and clearly contemplates the ultimate and absolute extinguishment of their semi-segregated existence.

It appears, however, that differences subsequently arose between the Governments of Great Britain and Nicaragua in relation to the free port of Greytown, the payment of the annuity to Mosquito Indians, and the precise extent of the rights of Nicaragua within the Indian By an exchange of diplomatic notes between the representatives of Great Britain and Nicaragua, it was agreed that all of these questions should be submitted to the arbitration of the Emperor of Austria; and he in the month of April, 1879, consented to act as arbitrator upon the differences of opinion which had arisen "as to the true interpretation of the treaty of Managua of 1860."

To this agreement of arbitration the Government of the United States was not a party, and it is not bound by the award of the arbitrator, nor committed in any way to an admission of the right of Great Britain to interfere in disputes between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Indians living within her borders.

The decision of the Emperor was announced in July, 1881, and the first six articles of the award, which deal with the rights of Nicaragua within the Mosquito Reservation, are as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua, which was recognized by Articles 1 and 2 of the treaty of Managua, of the 28th January, 1860, is not full and unlimited with regard to the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians, but is limited by the self-government conceded to the Mosquito Indians in Article 3 of this

ART. 2. The Republic of Nicaragua, as a mark of its sovereignty, is entitled to hoist the flag of the Republic throughout the territory assigned to the Mosquito In-

ART. 3. The Republic of Nicaragua is entitled to appoint a commissioner for the protection of its sovereign rights throughout the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians.

ART. 4. The Mosquito Indians are also to be allowed to hoist their flag henceforward, but they must at the same time attach to it some emblem of the sovereignty of the Republic of Nicaragua.

ART. 5 The Republic of Nicaragua is not entitled to grant concessions for the acquisition of natural products in the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians. That right belongs to the Mosquito Government.

ART. 6. The Republic of Nicaragua is not entitled to regulate the trade of the Mosquito Indians, or to levy duties on goods imported into or exported from the territory reserved to the Mosquito Indians. That right belongs to the Mosquito Indians.

This award, as it will be perceived, does not by any means go to the lengths to which the British Government now seeks to proceed, under the recent note of Mr. Gastrell to the Nicaraguan authorities. The award declares that the Republic of Nicaragua may hoist its flag throughout the reservation, and may appoint a commissioner for the protection of its sovereign rights; but that it may not grant concessions for the acquisition of natural products within the territory, may not regulate the trade of the Indians, and may not levy import or export dues in the reservation. Beyond this no limitation is declared upon the sovereign rights of Nicaragua, nor is the extent of its sovereignty further defined.

Without entering now into the consideration of the correctness of this award, it may be pointed out that neither in it, nor in Article III of the treaty of Managua, which provided that the Indians were to enjoy the right of governing, according to their own customs, and according to any regulations which may from time to time be adopted by them not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua, themselves and all persons residing within such district, is there anything incompatible with the right of Nicaragua to establish post offices, and still more with the right to establish military posts for the common defense. Such a right is an essential incident of paramount sovereignty, and can properly be exercised by no other agency. The award refers to the right of the Republic of Nicaragua as a mark of its sovereignty to hoist the flag of the Republic throughout the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians. That such is the case does not appear to admit of doubt. Yet it seems idle to speak of a government having the right to hoist a flag as the emblem of a sovereignty which it is not to be permitted to defend.

The analogy of the relations of the Federal Government of the United States to theseveral States and to the Indian tribes within its borders seems clear and applicable. To establish post-offices, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, to exercise exclusive legislation over all places purchased for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, and dock-yards, and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, are powers expressly vested by our Constitution in the Federal Congress; and it is obvious that wherever there is a central government these powers, or something like these, must be vested in it, whatever degree of autonomy in other respects may be accorded to local administrations.

It is, of course, well known that in some cases dependent autonomous communities have the privilege of exercising some of the rights above mentioned; but this is due usually either to the circumstance of great distance from the central authority, as in the case of the British colonies in Australia, or to special and precise stipulations. In a case where the inhabitants of a district are simply to enjoy a right of local self-government, "but shall be and remain under the sovereignty of" the power within whose borders their district lies, there can be no room for implication granting to such inhabitants extraordinary privileges which do not properly pertain to the regulation of strictly local affairs.

To the United States, in common with all other powers, it is important that Nicaraguan sovereignty should exist in fact as well as in name within the Mosquito reservation. With the sovereign alone can we maintain diplomatic relations, and we have a right to look to that sovereign for redress in the event of wrongs being inflicted upon any of our citizens. If the Republic of Nicaragua is to be limited to the mere formal right of hoisting a flag and maintaining a commissioner within the reservation, how can it be called upon to perform any of its international obligations?

Nor is it consistent with the general views and policy of the United States to look with favor upon the establishment of such an imperium in imperio in Central America. General Cass, in a note addressed to Lord Napier on May 29, 1857, in discussing the draught of a proposed treaty relative to the Bay Islands off the coast of Honduras, alluded in the following language to certain clauses which, by their express terms, were remarkably similar to the interpretation now sought to be put by the British Government on the treaty of Managua. He wrote:

That provision, whilst declaring the Bay Islands to be "a free territory under the sovereignty of the Republic of Honduras," deprived that country of rights without which its sovereignty over them could scarcely be said to exist. It separated them from the remainder of Honduras and gave them a government of their own, with their own legislative, executive, and judicial officers, elected by themselves. It deprived the Government of Honduras of the taxing power in every form, and exempted the people of the Bay Islands from the performance of military duty, except for their own defense, and it prohibited the Republic from providing for the protection of these islands by the construction of any fortifications whatsoever, leaving them open to invasion from any quarter. Had Honduras ratified this treaty, she would have ratified the establishment of an "independent" state within her own limits, and a state at all times liable to foreign influence and control.

And these objections Mr. Cass thought were so serious as to make it impossible for the President to sanction such an arrangement.

But even more important than a determination of the precise extent of the Nicaraguan authority within the Mosquito reservation is the general question of the right of Her Britannic Majesty to intervene in disputes between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Indians or other inhabitants of that district.

The question was presented by the Nicaraguan representatives to the Emperor of Austria, but his award is silent upon the point. It is, however, discussed in the opinion or report upon which the award is based,

and in the following terms:

In regard, however, to the affairs of the Mosquito Indians, it is true that England, in the treaty of Managua, has acknowledged the sovereignty of Nicaragua and renounced the protectorate, but this still only on condition, set forth in the treaty, of certain political and pecuniary advantages for the Mosquitos ("subject to the conditions and engagements specified in the treaty, Article I"). England has an interest of its own in the fulfillment of these conditions stipulated in favor of those who were formerly under its protection, and therefore also a right of its own to insist upon the fulfillment of those promises as well as of all other clauses of the treaty. The Government of Nicaragua is wrong in calling this an inadmissible "intervention," inasmuch as pressing for the fulfillment of engagements undertaken by treaty on the part of a foreign state is not to be classified as intermeddling with the internal affairs of that state, which intermeddling has unquestionably been prohibited under penalty. No less unjustly does the Government of Nicaragua seek to qualify this insistence on treaty claims as a continued exercise of the relinquished protectorate, and on that ground wish to declare England's interposition inadmissible.

From this view of the case I find myself compelled to dissent. It can not be admitted that Great Britain has a right to intervene in every dispute that may arise between the Mosquito Indians and their sovereign. And if Great Britain can not intervene in every case, how are the cases of admissible intervention to be defined? Certainly the vague language of the treaty of Managua can afford no criterion, for in every case of dispute it may be argued that the rights of self-government on the one hand, or of sovereignty on the other, are invaded.

The case is not without analogies. In the treaty with France of April 30, 1803, for the cession of Louisiana it is provided that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the mean time they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion they profess." In the treaty with Spain of February 22, 1819, for the cession of Florida, it was stipulaced that "the inhabitants of the ceded territories shall be secured in the free exercise of their religion, without any restriction," and that they should be "admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States." By the terms of the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, for the cession of Alaska, the inhabitants, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, are to be admitted to citizenship, "and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes will be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that In all these cases, as will be observed, the ceding Government has received assurances of the treatment to be accorded to the inhabitants of the ceded territory; but in no case in our diplomatic history has any one of these Governments asserted a right to intervene in our domestic affairs. Difficulties have at times arisen between the Federal Government and the inhabitants of Louisiana and Florida, but neither France nor Spain ever pretended that our treaty stipulations gave them a right to take part in the settlement of such disputes. The laws affecting the Territory of Alaska may be, and in some respects now are, unlike those governing the other Territories of the United States. But it must be apparent that were the Indians inhabiting those possessions to protest against alleged discriminations to the Czar of Russia. the treaty of 1867 would not authorize His Imperial Majesty to demand of the United States a different treatment of our Indian wards; and that such interposition, if-made, would certainly not be regarded favorably by this Government.

The ceding government in such cases retains, and can retain, no right of control or supervision over the conduct of the guardian to whom it commits the inhabitants whose allegiance is changed.

And so in the case under consideration. The stipulations of the treaty of Managua relative to the privileges to be accorded to the Mosquito Indians were not for the benefit of Great Britain, and are not enforceable by her. They were solely made for the benefit of those Indians, who were regarded by the express language of the treaty as at liberty to accept or reject its stipulations. Through their chief they did deliberately accept them, and on the withdrawal of British protection placed themselves under the sovereign power of the Republic of Nicaragua, and agreed to accept her public pledges as a sufficient guaranty that the agreements therein contained touching their right of self-government would be carried out in good faith.

The President can not but regard the continued exercise of the claim on the part of Great Britain to interfere on behalf of these Indians as the assertion of a British protectorate in another form; more especially when this effort is directed to prohibiting Nicaragua from exercising military jurisdiction in the immediate neighborhood of the Atlantic mouth of the projected canal.

The United States can never see with indifference the re establishment of such a protectorate. Not only would the extension of European influence upon this continent be contrary to the traditional and frequently expressed policy of the United States, but the course of Great Britain in assuming or exercising any dominion over the Mosquito coast, or making use of any protection it may afford or any alliance it may have to or with any people for the purpose of assuming or exercising any dominion over that territory, would be in violation of the express stipulations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, whose binding force Great Britain has up to the present time so emphatically asserted.

It is not needful in this communication to consider the temporary or perpetual existence of the various provisions of that treaty. My immediate predecessors have with great fullness expressed their views upon that head, and I do not now comment upon them. But it is proper to refer to these conventional engagements of Great Britain, as exhibiting the measure of her admitted obligations.

Whether the interference of the British Government be regarded as a breach of existing treaty engagements, or whether it be looked upon simply as an effort, not prohibited by express agreement, to extend her influence in this continent—in either case the Government of the United States can not look upon such acts without concern. The circumstances of the particular locality render the subject one of peculiar interest and importance to the people of this country, and I should be wanting in my duty to them should I fail to bring the matter directly and frankly, and in a spirit of sincere friendship, to the notice of Her Majesty's Government.

The history of the former controversies in regard to the same subject should admonish those who are charged with the conduct of the affairs of the two countries to spare no effort to avoid misunderstandings and promote cordial co-operation and good intelligence between them. With this purpose in view, and animated by the strongest desire to escape possible future causes of difference, I address you these instructions.

You will read this dispatch to the Marquis of Salisbury, and, should he desire it, you may furnish him with a copy.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure in No. 999.]

Mr. Gastrell to Señor Zavala.

British Legation in Central America, Guatemala, September 10, 1888.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE: I have the honor to state to your excellency that information has reached Her Majesty's Government to the effect that certain proceedings of the authorities of your excellency's Government in connection with the Mosquito reservation would not seem to be in accordance with the provisions and spirit of the treaty of Managua, under which the Republic of Nicaragua became the over sovereign of that territory.

It is alleged that in defining the limits of the new district of Siquia an encroachment upon the territory of the Mosquito reserve has taken place; that a Nicaraguan post-office has been established at Bluefields, thus interfering with the internal affairs of the Reserve, contrary to the treaty; and that Nicaraguan troops and police have been stationed, and Nicaraguan forts and arsenals or military stations are being established, or about to be established, east of longitude 84° 15′; the presence of the former and the creation of the latter being directly contrary to that treaty. And it further appears that the commissioner of your excellency's Government at Bluefields defends these proceedings.

I am therefore instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to, through your excellency, draw the attention of the Nicaraguan Government to the wording of the treaty and to the interpretation given to it by the award of the Emperor of Austria.

The treaty lays down that the district of the reservation "shall be comprised in a line which shall begin at the mouth of the river Rama in the Caribbeau Sea; thence it shall run up the mid-course of that river to its source, and from such source proceed in a line due west to the meridian of 84° 15′ longitude west from Greenwic'; thence due north up the said meridian until it strikes the river Hueso, and down the mid-course of the river to its mouth in the sea, as laid down in Baily's map, at about latitude from 14° to 15° north and longitude 83° west from the meridian of Greenwich; and thence southerly along the shore of the Caribbean Sea to the mouth of the river Rama, the point of commencement."

It now appears, according to a statement of the Nicaraguan commissioner, that the map referred to in the treaty, but not annexed to it as believed by him, is incorrect in respect to the length of the course of the river Rama and that that river's source is west and not east of the meridian of 84° 15′ longitude west from Greenwich. If this is the case it can not be contended on behalf of the Mosquito Indians that the western limit of their territory should extend beyond that meridian, but the river to the east of that meridian is, undoubtedly, the southern boundary of the reserve, and there never has been, hitherto, any question of any other southern limit. It is named in the treaty and it is distinctly marked in Baily's map, whereas no such river as the "Siquia," which has been referred to by the Nicaraguan commissioner, appears on that map.

As regards the point whether or not the confluence of the other river, Rama, with the Siquia to form the Bluefields River (in Baily's map apparently the Escondido River), is to the east or west of the western frontier of the reservation, that is of the, meridian of 84° 15′, Her Majesty's Government have not sufficient information; but Lord Salisbury would be glad to know what are the astronomical observations of Mr.

Climie, on which the Government of Nicaragua relies.

I am also instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to point out to your excellency, for the information of the Government of Nicaragua, that in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the erection of forts, arsenals, or military posts, the establishment of Nicaraguan post-offices, or the exercise of military or police authority by Nicaragua within the territory of the reservation would be inconsistent with the spirit of the treaty, as interpreted by the arbitrator's award, the first article of which says that—"The sovereignty of Nicaragua is not full and unlimited with regard to the territory assigned to the Mosquito Indians, but is limited by the self-government conceded to the Mosquito Indians by the treaty of Managua."

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

J. P. H. GASTRELL.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE LEGATION OF GREAT BRITAIN AT WASHINGTON.

No. 540.

Sir L. S. Sackville West to Mr. Bayard.

Washington, September 14, 1887. (Received September 14, 1887.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose to you herewith a memorandum calling the attention of the United States Government to certain points in the report made by Lieutenaut Schwatka, of the U. S. Army, of a reconnaissance made by him in Alaska, and to observe at the same time that he traversed British territory for a considerable distance without any intimation having been given to the British authorities of his intention of so doing. I may add, however, that Her Majesty's Government do not attach any importance to this fact, and that no doubt had their acquiescence been asked it would not have been refused.

I have the honor, etc.,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST,

[Inclosure.]

Memorandum on Lieutenant Schwatka's report.

In the wording of the resolution* adopted by the United States Senate on the 18th of April, 1884, the reconnaissance of Lieutenant Schwatka is described as extending from Chilkoot Inlet, Alaska, to Fort Selkirk, on Yukon River, Alaska. But, as is shown in sheet 5 attached to Lieutenant Schwatka's report, part 2 of the map of the routes followed by him extends from Fort Selkirk, B. C. (standing for British Columbia), and at page 22 of his report the latitude and the page 32 of his report the latitude and provided of Fort Selkirk. Columbia); and at page 33 of his report the latitude and longitude of Fort Selkirk is given as 62° 45′ 30″ north and 137° 22′ 45″ west, which is well within the territory belonging to Great Britain, which extends as far as 141° west.

It will also be seen on referring to pages 20 and 47 of the report that Lieutenant Schwatka has indicated two points, viz, Perrier Pass and 141° west longitude, which he has determined as defining the international boundary.

Although Her Majesty's Government have agreed in principle to take part in a preliminary investigation of the Alaska boundary question, they are not prepared to admit that the points referred to by Lieutenant Schwatka in any way fix where the line should be drawn.

It is not sought to raise any discussion at the present moment in regard to the position of the boundary between Alaska and British Columbia, but, in order that it may not be prejudiced hereafter by absence of remark on the points alluded to above, Her Majesty's Government have thought it expedient to call the attention of the United States Government to the foregoing observations.

Washington, September 21, 1887. (Received September 22.)

SIR: With reference to your note of the 22d of June last I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of the minister of marine and fisheries, dealing with the statement of Messrs. S. H. Davis & Co. relative to the seizure of their property by Dominion officials.

I have the honor, etc.,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

[Inclosure.]

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on the 9th September, 1887.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch, dated June 23, 1887, from Her Majesty's minister at Washington transmitting a statement of Messrs. S. H. Davis & Co., of Detroit, Mich., relative to the seizure of their property by Canadian officials in Canadian territory, and requesting that inquiry be made into the matter.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the matter was referred, reports the circumstances under which the seizures complained of were made, as follows:

It having come to the knowledge of the officers of the fisheries department in June last that a large number of nets were being illegally set in the Georgian Bay by two fishermen named, respectively, McLean and Lincoln (the former a British and the latter an American subject) an official was sent to ascertain the facts. Upon his arrival it was found that fishing was being carried on in a most extensive manner, and ^{*} Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the official report by Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, U. S. Army, of his military reconnaissance of 1883, from Chilkoot Inlet, Alaska, to Fort Selkirk, on Yukon River, Alaska.

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1——49

that neither of the parties engaged therein had a license from the department of marine and fisheries.

The minister states that although interim receipts appear to have been issued by Fishery Overseer James, purporting to cover the cost of a license for six boats, very conflicting statements are made as to the conditions under which these receipts were given by the overseer.

This phase of the case is, however, unimportant, as upon inspection of the nets in use, and in which the seized fish were taken, it was ascertained that the mesh in every net was of illegal size; neither is the fact essential, though a reference thereto should not be omitted, as throwing some light on the extent of the illegal proceedings, resulting in the seizure of the fish purchased by the Messrs. Davis, that nearly 70 miles or over 122,000 yards of these illegal nets were in use, being at least 87,000 yards in excess of the quantity the six boats would have been entitled to use under a license from the department of fisheries.

The minister observes that subsection 3 of section 10, cap. 95 of the Revised Statutes of Canada provides as follows:

"Gill-nets for catching salmon trout or white fish shall have meshes of at least 5 inches, extension measure." Subsection 3 of section 18 of the act referred to further provides that "all materials, implements, or appliances used, and all fish taken or killed in violation of this act or any regulation under it, snall be confiscated to Her Majesty, and may be seized and confiscated on view by any fishery officer, or taken and removed by any person for delivery to any justice of the peace, and the proceeds arising from the disposal thereof may be applied towards defraying expenses under this act."

The claim therefore of Messrs. Davis & Co. that the fish, having been bought and paid for by them, should not have been seized, is clearly untenable.

The minister remarks that if it be admitted that fish illegally caught, but disposed of to a second party, are exempt from seizure, the law would become inoperative and incapable of effectual enforcement. In this case Messrs. Davis & Co.'s complaint should be directed against the parties who sold them the fish which had been illegally caught and not against the department of fisheries, which simply enforced the laws of the country in the interest of one of its industries deserving the most careful protection.

The minister further observes that the question of citizenship was not raised or considered by his officers in this matter, nor has any prejudice existed against Messrs.

Davis & Co. on account of their nationality.

The law has been enforced altogether irrespective of any considerations as to the individuals interested. Citizens of the United States trading in Canada have a welldefined status, with perfect freedom to transact business in all legal commodities, of which legally-caught fish is one, and the minister is not aware, in the action under consideration, of having permitted in the least degree any infringement of that status.

The minister deems it unnecessary to refer to the alleged threat of seizure on the part of Canadian officers of the steamer Remora, as no such seizure was made, and if the vessel was, as it is presumed she was, legally within her right in being at French River for the purpose of taking on board the fish, no improper detention would have been permitted.

The fish cars to which Messrs. Davis & Co.'s claim refers, being no part of the apparatus used in taking the confiscated fish, the officer of the fisheries department at Victoria Harbor was instructed on the 9th of July last to return them to the agent of the Messrs. Davis, at French River.

The committee concurring in the report of the ministry of marine and fisheries advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute to Her Majesty's minister at Washington.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. McGre, Clerk Privy Council.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 17, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a report made by the consul of the United States at Kingston, Ontario, to this Department, in response to its inquiries in relation to the fees charged on vessels of the United States in the ports of Ontario, Dominion of Canada.

By a proclamation bearing date the 31st of January, 1885, the President, upon information that no duty was imposed as tonnage tax or as light house money, and that no other equivalent tax or taxes were imposed on vessels of the United States in the ports of Ontario, suspended, under section 14 of the act of June 26, 1884, the collection of the tonnage tax of 3 cents per ton therein imposed on vessels coming from these ports.

By the report above referred to it appears that there is imposed on vessels of the United States in the port of Kingston a fee of 50 cents for entrance and of the same amount for clearance on vessels of less than 50 tons burden and of $1 for each of the same purposes on vessels of 50 tons burden or over. Canadian vessels having taken out a coasting license, which costs nothing, are, even if coming from or bound to ports in the United States, stated to be exempt from these taxes, which thus appear to constitute a discriminating duty upon vessels of the United States in the port of Kingston, and unless removed to require some modification of the proclamation of the 31st of January, 1885.

But before taking any step in this direction, it is desired to bring the matter to the attention of the proper authorities, with a view to ascertaining whether the discriminating duty may not be removed.

To the best of ry information all Canadian vessels take out the coasting license, which costs them nothing. Report of a committee of the privy council of Canada, approved October 27, 1887.

The committee of the privy council for Canada have had under consideration a dispatch, dated the 9th of September, 1886, from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, transmitting a copy of a communication from the foreign office, together with a note from Mr. Secretary Bayard, protesting against the action of the commander of the Canadian cruiser F. E. Conrad in forbidding the master of the United States fishing schooner Golden Hind to enter the Baie des Chaleurs for the purpose of renewing his supply of fresh water.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosure were referred, submits herewith Captain Smeltzer's statement of what occurred on the day the schooner Golden Hind is stated to have been at Baie des Chaleurs.

The minister observes that Captain Smeltzer denies that the master of the Golden Hind mentioned any desire to enter the bay for water, but that he asked for a copy of the "warning," which had been issued by the fisheries department to the masters of United States fishing vessels, which was given him. This "warning" states distinctly the purposes for which United States fishing vessels can enter Canadian

The minister further observes that there are no grounds to substantiate the charge of a violation of the treaty and the common rights of hospitality, to which Mr. Bayard gives expression.

GOVERNMENT SCHOONER F. E. CONRAD, Souris, Prince Edward Island, October 5, 1886.

SIR: I am this day in receipt of your letter, dated 27th of September, concerning a complaint made by Reuben Cameron, master of the American fishing schooner Golden Hind, of Gloucester. In reply, referring to my boarding books, I find I boarded the said vessel on the 22d July, 1886, near the entrance to the Baie des Chaleurs. On boarding him I asked for his report, etc., which he gave me. I then told him my orders were not to allow any American fisherman to enter the bay, and warned him not to do so. He then asked me if I had any printed "warnings" to give him; I told him I had. He then sent his boat to my vessel for the same. I gave him one, and to impress my orders on his mind, I wrote on the back, "Don't enter the Baie des Chaleurs." He did not say he wanted water, nor did he say he wanted to go into Port Daniel. He merely asked me about the headlands of the bay. The foregoing particulars are exactly what occurred with reference to my boarding the said schooner Golden Hind.

I am, etc.,

Memorandum handed to Mr. Bayard by Sir L. S. Sackville West.

Washington, December 23, 1887.

England and France by the convention of November 28, 1-43, are bound to consider the Sandwich Islands as an independent state and never to take possession, either directly or under the title of a protectorate or any other form, of any part of the territory of which they are composed.

The best way to secure this object would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be that the powers chiefly interested in the trade of the Pacific should join in making a formal declaration similar to that of 1843 above alluded to, and that the United States Government should, with England and Germany, guaranty the neutrality and equal accessibility of the islands and their harbors to the ships of all nations without preference.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on the 12th January, 1888.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch, dated 19th November, 1887, from Sir Lionel Sackville S. West, British minister at Washington, inclosing copy of a dispatch from the Hon. T. F. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, bearing date 17th November, 1887, in which he called the attention of the Canadian government to a proclamation issued by the President of the United States, bearing date the 31st January, 1885, in which it is stated that the President, "upon information that no duty was imposed as tonnage tax or as light-house money, and that no other equivalent tax or taxes were imposed on vessels of the United States in the ports of Ontario, suspended, under section 14 of the act of June 26, 1884, the collection of the tonnage tax of three cents per ton therein imposed on vessels coming from those ports;" such dispatch further reciting that it appeared from a report received at Washington from the United States consulat Kingston on tario, "that there is imposed on vessels of the United States in the port of Kingston a fee of 50 cents for entrance and of the same amount for clearance, on vessels of less than 50 tons burden, and of $1 for each of the same purposes on vessels of 50 tons burden or over. and that Canadian vessels having taken out a coasting license, which costs nothing, are, even if coming from or bound to ports in the United States, stated to be exempt from these taxes, which thus appear to constitute a discriminating duty upon vessels of the United States in the port of Kingston."

The minister of customs, to whom the matter was referred, reports as follows:

The statement that "there is imposed on vessels of the United States a fee of 50 cents for entrance and the same amount for clearance on vessels of less than 50 tons burden, and of a dollar for each of the same purposes on vessels of 50 tons burden or over," is correct as far as it relates to the ports above Montreal; and such fees are imposed under section 234 of the act 46 Vic., cap. 12, sec. 112.

This act provides that all ressels navigating the inland waters of Canada above Montreal, "not having a coasting license, shall; on entering any port in Canada with such vessel," pay the fees above mentioned; this provision applies to all vessels, whether British or foreign. The coasting laws of Canada, however, provide that foreign vessels can not take out a coasting license unless a British register shall have been first obtained, excepting only in the case of vessels belonging to countries wherein Canadian ships have been by treaty admitted to all the privileges of the coasting trade of such foreign country, and allowed to carry goods and passengers from one port or place to another in such country.

In the proclamation by the President of the United States, under date 5th February, 1-85, it is admitted that at ports in the province of Ontario "no duty is imposed by the ton as tonnage-tax or as light money, and that no other equivalent tax on vessels of the United States is imposed at said ports," and accordingly he declares and proclaims "that on and after the first Tuesday in February, 1885, the collection of said tonnage duty of 3 cents per ton shall be suspended as it regards all vessels arriving in any port of the United States from any port in the province of Ontario," from which it appears that when issuing the said proclamation the President did not consider the clearing and reporting fees in question to be a tonnage tax, or an equivalent tax on vessels of the United States; and the minister submits that the said clearing and reporting fees are not the equivalent of a tax of 3 cents per ton, either in principle or amount, nor were they imposed as a discriminating duty upon vessels of the United States, as the terms of the act clearly show, the full text of section 234, already referred to being as follows: ferred, to being as follows:

"The governor in council may grant yearly coasting licenses to British vessels navigating the inland waters of Canada above Montreal, and may direct that a fee of fifty cents shall be payable for each such license, and that the master or person in charge of any vessel navigating the said waters and not having a coasting license, shall, on entering any port in Canada with such vessel, pay a fee of fifty cents if such vessel is not over fifty tons burden, and of one dollar if she is more than fifty tons burden, to the collector on each entry, and a like fee of fifty cents or one dollar, according to the burthen of the vessel, on each clearance at any port; and such fee shall be payable accordingly before such vessel shall be entered or cleared, provided, that the governor in council may reduce or re-adjust such fees, but may not increase them beyond the amount hereby fixed; and provided also, that vessels merely passing through any Canadian canals, without breaking bulk, shall not be liable to such fees.'

The adoption of this provision by the parliament of Canada was intended to be an equivalent for all custom-house fees which otherwise might be charged in detail, and since the act was passed such fees form the only customs charge of that kind which vessels from the United States have been called upon to pay in Ontario ports.

On reference to part 9 of the Treasury regulation dated 12th July, 1884, chapter 2 (which are still in force so far as the minister is aware), under the heading "Table of custom-house fees to be collected at ports and places in the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States," it will be seen that Ontario vessels are subject to be charged with a variety of fees in United States ports for which there is no other equivalent in Canada than the clearing and reporting fees now in question.

The fees which might be directly applicable to Ontario vessels are as follows: Under item 10. For certifying a manifest, including master's oath, and granting a permit for a vessel under 50 tons to go from district to district, whether belonging to a citizen of the United States or otherwise.

Item 11. For certifying a manifest, including master's oath, and granting a ..... $0.10 permit for a vessel over 50 tons to go from district to district, whether belonging to citizens of the United States or otherwise..... . 10 Item 12. For receiving a manifest, including oath of master, on arrival of a vessel under 50 tons from one collection district at another, whether touching at an intermediate foreign port or not ..... . 10 Item 13. For receiving a manifest, including master's oath, on arrival of a vessel of 50 tons or over from one collection district to another, whether touching at an intermediate foreign port or not ..... . 10

Item 17. For the entry of a vessel directly from a foreign port or not	$0.50
Item 18. For the clearance of a vessel sailing directly to a foreign port other-	F 0
wise than by the sea	. 50
Item 19. For a port entry	2,00
Item 20. For a permit to land or deliver imported goods not included in any entry  Item 21. For a bond officially taken, not otherwise provided for	. 20
Item 21. For a bond officially taken, not otherwise provided for	. 50 ttem 99 For a nermit or order to load goods for exportation, whether for benefit of drawback or otherwise	. 30

Attention is also drawn to item 34 of the same schedule, which reads as follows:

"The fees above mentioned are applicable in the case of all vessels (so far as they concern vessels) navigating the waters of the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers, otherwise than by the sea, and no fees other than those above specially enumerated can be legally collected from the owners or masters, as such, of vessels (not being steamers) enrolled or licensed on said frontiers."

In another part of the said table are found the fees to be collected from steam-vessels plying between Canada and the United States, which fees are as follows:

Clearance of a vessel for a foreign port....

With a view of showing the actual payment of fees by Ontario's vessels, both sailing and steam, at present trading between Canada and the northern frontier of the United States, the minister begs to insert the following correspondence:

I have, however, procured statements in the form of declarations from the captains of two sailing vessels trading to United States lake ports, and also a statement from Captain Robertson, of the United Empire, showing what fees are exacted from Canadian vessels in United States ports.

I have also got from the Port Huron custom-house a corroboration of the captain's statement, the total amount of fees in and out being $1.30; 50 cents fees inward, and 10 cents for blank; and 50 cents out, 20 cents for blanks.

Statement of Capt. Patrick Kirwan, master of the Canadian schooner Sligo, of St. Catherine.

I have been in command of Canadian vessels trading to the United States lake ports for five years past, and was master of the schooner Sligo since 1886. I have had occasion to become conversant with the customs charges exacted from Canadian vessels at United States ports. Since the tonnage tax of 30 cents a ton was done away with I have to pay on reporting at Buffalo 80 cents and 60 cents for clearing; in going to Chicago all Canadian vessels must report inward at Cheboygan before entering Lake Michigan, for which a fee of 70 cents is charged, and on arrival at Chicago an additional fee of 10 cents is exacted; on clearing from Chicago a fee of 50 cents is paid. These fees are the same at all ports, as far as I am aware, and no other fees are charged, to the best of my knowledge.

I hereby declare the above statement to be true to the best of my knowledge and bellet.

P. KIRWAN.

Declared before me at Sarnia, in the province of Ontario, this 15th day of December, 1887.

JOHN COWAN, A. Com., etc.

The minister observes that, while the President's proclamation dated 31st January, 1885, did in terms order the suspension of the collection of the tonnage tax of 3 cents per ton as regards all vessels arriving in any of the ports of the United States from any port in the province of Ontario, it would yet appear that a tax of 15 cents per ton, which prior to the issue of such proclamation was the maximum annual tax collected from Ontario vessels, was, as late as February, 1886, exacted by some United States collectors of customs, as is established by the following correspondence:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, Cornwall, February 6, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. Barnhart, the owner of the small American steamer Minnie K., which plies between Barnhart's Island and the Canadian shore, requesting permission to run his steamer without having to pay the usual landing fees, between Massena, in New York State, and Cornwall, making two trips a day, for the accommodation of passengers going to and coming from Massena Springs durantee.

There is a Canadian boat running on this route, and I have informed Mr. Barnhart that I would not permit him to run his boat between the points named without paying the usual landing fee demanded from foreign boats; however, Mr. Barnhart says that the American Government allows a Canadian steamer to run from Cornwall to Massena during the season the springs are frequented, without paying daily a landing fee, and he thinks that if the matter were to be laid before this Department he would be allowed a similar privilege.

Please let me have your decision in the matter, and oblige,

Your obedient servant,

A. V. McMillan, Collector.

The Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

Upon the receipt of Mr. Collector McMillan's letter by the department of customs the following reply was addressed to that officer:

OTTAWA, February 10, 1886.

A. V. McMillan, Esq.,

Collector of Customs, Port of Cornwall, Ontario:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, asking permission on behalf of the small American steamer Minnie K., running between Barnhart's Island and the port of Cornwall, to perform her regular trips without payment of the fee for reporting and clearing; and as it is stated that the American Government allows a Canadian steamer to run from Cornwall to Massena without paying a landing fee, I have to instruct, in the first place, to charge the reporting and clearing fees only in cases where the steamer reports goods or merchandise of any kind, and to make inquiries as to whether or not the statement with reference to the action of the United States customs is correct, and report the same.

I have, etc.,

I. JOHNSON, Commissioner.

In reply to the above the following communication from the collector was received:

Custom-House, Cornwall, February 20, 1886. (See File No. 577.)

SIR: Referring to your letter of February 10, with regard to application of American steamer Minnie K. to run between Massena and this port without paying the regular landing fees demanded from foreign boats, I beg to inclose herewith a letter from the collector at the port of Massena, giving a detailed statement of the fees paid at that port by the Canadian steamer Princess Louise during the year.

From this it appears that after paying the tonnage dues the Canadian boat has only to pay one entry fee inward and one outward.

Awaiting further instructions in the matter,

I am, etc.,

A. V. McMillan, Collector.

The COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS, Ottawa, Ontario.

The following letter is the inclosure above referred to:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, Massena, February 18, 1886.

A. V. McMillan, Esq.,

Collector of Customs, Cornwall, Ontario:

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 10th instant at hand. Total fees charged the Princess Louise as follows:

First entry, tonnage tax for the year, 31 tons, 15 cents per ton
	5, 95

The Princess Louise, although a British bottom, or foreign vessel, while running daily between Cornwall, Ontario, and Massena, United States, as a ferry, is exempt from all fees except as above named.

Hoping this may satisfactorily meet your inquiry,

I am, etc.,

U. J. P. GAINE, Collector.

There are numerous other fees provided for in the same regulations, which may be imposed upon Ontario vessels under certain special circumstances, but the above is sufficient to show that the charge of 50 cents and $1, respectively, as fees for clearing and reporting vessels, are not an unfair equivalent for the fees required by the United States customs from Canadian vessels in United States ports.

The committee, concurring in the foregoing report of the minister of customs, advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy hereof to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, requesting that the attention of the honorable the Secretary of State for the United States be drawn to the provisions of the fifth clause of "an act respecting the coasting trade of Canada," which reads as follows:

"The governor in council may, from time to time, declare that the foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to the ships or vessels of any foreign country in which British ships are admitted to the coasting trade of such country, and to carry goods and passengers from one port or place to another, in such country (33 Vic., C. 14, S. 2; 38 V., C. 27, S. 2, part)."

The committee further advise your excellency to convey to the United States Government the desire of the Canadian government for the adoption of a more liberal policy by both countries in relation to coasting in order that the restrictions to trade in the inland waters of Canada and the United States may be removed, and the Dominion be placed in a position to carry out fully the provisions of the section of the coasting law already recited herein.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE, Clerk Privy Council.

GERMAN EMBASSY, London, November 25, 1887. (Received November 29.)

My Lord: With reference to your lordship's note of the 14th instant, on the subject of the competence of the municipal judge at Apia, in the case of Gurr v. Marquardt, I am instructed by my Government to make the following communication to your lordship:

German subjects in Samoa are, according to practice and the terms of the treaty of friendship between Germany and Samoa of the 24th January, 1879, subject to the the German consular jurisdiction. This consular jurisdiction is not restricted by the municipal convention of the 2d September, 1879, but is expressly upheld in Article ions contained in the regulations and the jurisdiction of the municipal judge do not affect German subjects, except in the case of offenses not contemplated by the German criminal code.

This view has always been held by the German Government, and it was only on the above understanding that the German consul was empowered to give his assent to the regulations issued by the municipal authorities.

From the communications made to the German representative at Apia by his British colleague, the Imperial Government had inferred that the British Government did not recognize the competence of the municipal judge in criminal offenses of a grave character, and that they accordingly held, on the whole, the same view as the German Government in the matter.

The Imperial Government have hitherto not thought it necessary to make any express statement of their views in regard to the regulations to Her Majesty's Government.

The Secretary of State of the United States, having examined the provisions of the convention which bear upon the case in question, has instructed the American representative at Apia not to claim jurisdiction in the case, but to leave it to be dealt with by the German consul.

This particular case is therefore practically settled.

FOREIGN OFFICE, January 19, 1888.

M. L'Ambassadeur: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's letter of the 25th of November, in reply to mine of the 14th of the same month, upon the subject of the competence of the municipal judge at Apia in the case of Gurr v. Marquardt.

Your excellency observes that German subjects are, according to practice and to the terms of the treaty of friendship between Germany and Samoa of the 24th January, 1879, subject to the German consular jurisdiction, and that this latter is not restricted by the municipal convention of the 2d September, 1879, but is expressly upheld in Article VI of that convention, as you proceed to explain.

Her Majesty's Government have since received a full report of the proceedings in the case, an examination of which has entirely confirmed them in the views expressed in my note of the 14th November last.

The municipal magistrate is empowered by the convention of 1879 to try all offenses against the regulations of the municipal board by whomsoever committed.

The municipal board is empowered to make and enforce regulations and by-laws with regard to "police and good order."

Clause 76 of the municipal regulations provided that any person who shall be guilty of an assault (with certain exceptions not affecting the present case) shall be liable, on conviction before the municipal magistrate, to the punishment therein prescribed.

That regulation was assented to by the representatives of the three treaty powers, and it in no way conflicts with the general exterritorial jurisdiction reserved to the Imperial German Government over German subjects. The intervention of the German consul was based on the ground that the offense charged was not "a common police offense"; but it is abundantly clear from the evidence that such a contention can not be supported.

It was a case of common assault, such as is summarily dealt with by police magistrates in all countries, and Her Majesty's Government can only express their regret at the failure of justice which has unfortunately occurred.

I have, etc.,

My LORD: I have the honor to inclose copy of a dispatch which I have received from Mr. W. Wilson, acting vice-consul at Samoa, reporting the action taken by M. VI of that convention. According to the terms of that article, that penal provis-

Becker, the imperial German consul-general, in declaring that the municipal regulations are not applicable in the case of a German subject charged with committing an assault on premises situated within the municipal district of Apia, and that such German subject is liable in respect of the alleged offense to the jurisdiction of the German consular court only.

The case in question does not appear to me to be an important one; but the difference of opinion among the consular members of the municipal board may, perhaps, cause some embarrassment. I have therefore taken the opinion of the acting chief judicial commissioner on the matter, of which I inclose a copy; and, in accordance with this opinion, I have sent to Mr. Wilson the instructions contained in a letter, of which a copy is inclosed, together with a copy of Mr. Berkeley's opinion.

SAMOA, August 25, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor most respectfully to report, for your excellency's information, particulars of a case which have come before my notice as proconsul and as a member of the appellate court of the municipality of Apia.

Mr. E. W. Gurr, a British subject, lodged a complaint against M. Marquardt, a German, in the municipal court, for a common assault.

The case was heard before Mr. Martin, the municipal magistrate, on the 29th ultimo.

I am informed by Consul-General Sewall, who was present, as well as others who watched the case, that the interruptions caused by the Germans present were of such a nature that had they taken place in any other court the majority of Germans would have been committed for contempt.

At one time the defendant left the court and went to the German consulate, but was sent back by orders of the German consult to the court-house. At 2.30 p. m. a letter (copy inclosed) was read from the German consul, in which he withdrew M. Marquardt from the jurisdiction of the municipal court, affirming that he was only liable to that of the German consular court. On receipt of Consul Becker's letter

Mr. Martin dismissed the case.

An appeal was lodged by Mr. Gurr with Consul-General Sewall, president of the appellate court, against the dismissal of the case by the municipal magistrate.

Believing that this case was within the jurisdiction of the municipal court as per regulation 76, and that Mr. Gurr was entitled to appeal as per regulation 87 of the municipality of Apia, I requested Consul-General Sewall to call a meeting of the appellate court. M. Consul Becker refused to assist; therefore the appellate court could not sit, and Mr. Gurr's appeal remains unheard.

I have the honor to inclose for your excellency copy of the notes of the trial as given by the municipal magistrate.

The German consul at Apia to the municipal magistrate.

APIA, July 29, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, with regard to those of the municipal regulations which, like the greater part of regulation No. 76, provide for the punishment of criminal offenses, I am directed by instruction received from my Government that they are not applicable to German subjects.

I am of opinion that assault in the case of "Gurr v. Marquardt" is of the nature of a criminal and not only of a common police offense. M. Marquardt being a German subject, he is in the said case liable to the jurisdiction of the German consular court only.

I have, etc.,

BECKER, Imperial German Consul.

I hereby certify the above to be an exact copy.

OTTO MARTIN, Municipal Magistrate.

[Inclosure 6.]

Appeal to the appellate court of the municipality of Apia, in the matter of the complaint of E. W. Gurr against M Marquardt.

The appellant states that he lodged a complaint against the respondent for having committed upon him a common assault.

That afterwards the respondent was examined, but the counsel of the appellant was not permitted to cross-examine the respondent, and an adjournment was granted by the court until the hour of 2 p. m. That the appellant duly appeared at such time, but by consent the case was further adjourned until the hour of 2.30 p. m.

That upon the opening of the court the case being called on for hearing, and opened as the said hour, a letter was read from His Imperial German Majesty's consul, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed. Whereupon the municipal magistrate summarily refused to proceed further with the hearing of the appellant's case of common assault. That the appellant complains that the municipal magistrate had no authority to dismiss the said case in the manner hereinbefore stated.

That the municipal court of Apia of Samoa is a court of Samoa, and is not amenable to the interference of other powers or authorities save within certain treaty limits.

That the case in question was one of common assault, and could have been adjudicated upon by the municipal magistrate, and was within his reasonable jurisdiction, and that the action of His Imperial German Majesty's [consul] was, in so prohibiting the said case being heard, contrary to the convention whereunder the municipal regulations are now carried out.

And the appellant further says that His Imperial German Majesty's consul has no right to interfere with regard to police offenses.

And the appellant claims that this case shall be remitted to the municipal magistrate from the time of the interruption thereof.

And that the municipal magistrate be instructed to proceed with the further hearing and final decision of the said case.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL, Apia, Samoa, August 13, 1887.

SIR: An appeal from the magistrate's action in the case "Gurr v. Marquardt" has been placed in my hands as president of the municipal court of appeal.

Municipal regulation numbered 87 provides that an appeal shall be heard as soon as possible after the date of the notice of appeal. The hearing of this appeal has already been delayed over two weeks, and I would name Monday at 2 o'clock as a suitable time at which to set down the hearing.

Will you let me know, at your earliest convenience, if this time is satisfactory to you, in order that notices may be sent to the parties concerned?

Police vs. Marquardt (German), in the employment of Deutscher Handels-und Plantagen-Gesellschaft, etc., July 29, 1887.

Mr. Hetherington for complainant, Mr. E. W. Gurr.

Charge, assault and battery, committed yesterday afternoon on the ground of the Deutscher Handels-und Plantagen-Gesellschaft, where E. W. Gurr went for the purpose of taking delivery of goods. The person in charge of establishment promised to deliver goods. E. W. Gurr signed a receipt for these goods; then E. W. Gurr went to take delivery of goods; but then, regarding the goods, it was declared that delivery could not be given. Seeing the receipts in the hands of Marquardt he seized the receipts and was about to leave the premises of the Deutscher Handels, etc., when E. W. Gurr received a violent blow on the head from the defendant.

E. W. Gurr, sworn:

"Went to the Deutscher Handels- und Plantagen-Gesellschaft's premises at 2 p. m.; saw some clerks; went into the goods' shed and asked Marquardt about the goods; signed receipts for goods (delivery of which was promised) for the delivery of same, intending to take them away afterwards; heard then that goods would not be delivered, although signed for; had some conversation with Marquardt, and afterwards seized receipts; then turned away to leave premises; received a blow from defendant; did not threaten before, and received the blow from behind."

Witness Charles Taylor, in the employ of E. W. Gurr:
"Was yesterday on the premises of the Deutscher Handels- und Plantagen-Gesellschaft; saw E. W. Gurr and Marquardt; heard them talk together; saw E. W. Gurr seize the receipts from Marquardt; then E. W. Gurr turned to go away; then Marquardt ran after E. W. Gurr; saw him strike E. W. Gurr from behind."

Asked by Marquardt:
"Was close by when conversation went on; saw Marquardt strike from behind forcibly."

Marquardt, defendant, sworn:

States, with regard to the receipts, that he requested E. W. Gurr to cancel the receipts either by scratching out his signature or writing not received; then E. W. Gurr seized the receipts from him and said, "If you don't give me the receipts, then I will take them." Then E. W. Gurr struck him on the nose; after that he returned the blow, and Charles Taylor struck him too.

Then M. Krause took up M. Marquardt's case, pleading as a friend.

Decision.

Case being taken up by German consulate, as per letter of the 29th July, was then dismissed from magistrate's jurisdiction. Certified this to be a true copy of the magistrate's notes.

OTTO MARTIN. Municipal Magistrate.

OPINION BY MR. H. S. BERKELEY.

In this case one Gurr, a British subject, charges one Marquardt, a German subject (both parties being resident within the municipality of Apia, Samoa), with having committed an assault upon him in the business premises of a firm of German subjects trading within the municipality.

The charge was laid, by way of complaint, before the magistrate of the municipality of Apia, an officer appointed by the municipal board of Apia, under article 5 of the municipal convention of the 2d of September, 1879, to try "all offenses against the regulations of the municipal board by whomsoever committed."

The municipal board of Apia, which by article 2 of the municipal convention of 1879 consists inter alias of "those foreign consuls resident in Apia whose nations have entered into treaty relations with Samoa" is by article 3 empowered inter alia to entered into treaty relations with Samoa," is by article 3 empowered inter alia to make and "enforce regulations and by-laws with regard to police and good order."

By clause 76 of the municipal regulations, any person who shall be convicted of an assault (except an assault coming within the provisions of regulations 22 and 41) is liable on conviction before the magistrate to the punishment prescribed for such offense in the schedule to that clause. The assault charged is not such an assault as comes within the exception in the schedule to clause 76, and it is claimed by Gurr that it was an assault within regulation 76, and that as such the municipal magistrate had power and jurisdiction to try and determine the charge as laid. The complaint of Gurr was received by the magistrate, and the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses and that of the defendant was taken.

At this stage the Imperial German consul appears to have intervened, and to have excepted to the jurisdiction of the magistrate to try Marquardt for the offense for which he was charged. The grounds of the exception taken by the Imperial German consul being that the assault complained of in this case is "of the nature of a criminal and not of a common police offense," and that "M. Marquardt being a German subject is consequently liable to the jurisdiction of the German consular court only." Upon this exception to his jurisdiction being taken the municipal magistrate dismissed the case without coming to any decision upon the evidence taken before him. An appeal to the appellate court of the municipality of Apia of which each of the consuls resident in Apia is a member, was subsequently lodged by Gurr against the dismissal of the case by the municipal magistrate. Notices of the appeal were sent by the president the United States cancellate the Consult to the Decision of the case of the appeal were sent by the president, the United States consul, to the Imperial German consul, with a suggestion for fixing a day for hearing the appeal. In reply to this notice the Imperial German consul stated that he could not "assist at any meeting of the municipal court of appeal concerning the case of 'Gurr v. Marquardt.'"

This refusal on the part of the Imperial German consul was consistent with the position which he had previously advanced, viz, that the offense with which Marquardt was charged was not an offense cognizable in the court of the municipal magistrate of Apia. If the Imperial German consul is right in the view he takes of the jurisdiction of the municipal magistrate in cases of this description, then no appeal would lie to the appellate court. Indeed, in my opinion there is in no case a right of appeal against the dismissal of a case by the municipal magistrate, whether such dismissal be on the ground of want of jurisdiction or on any other ground. The right of appeal is the creation of statute, or, as in this case, of regulation, and the words creating this right are to be construed strictly, and not extended beyond their ordinary meaning. The regulation which confers the right of appealing in certain cases against the decisions of the municipal magistrate is the eighty-seventh. By that regulation every person against whom judgment is rendered shall be entitled to apregulation every person against whom judgment is rendered shall be entitled to appeal from such decision to the consular members of the municipal board. It is not from every decision of the magistrate that an appeal may be made, but only from such decisions as are judgments. In this case there was no judgment given, but the complaint was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

In England or in a British colony the propriety of the magistrate's refusal to entertain the charge would be determined not by way of appeal, but on an application to the high or supreme court for an order directing the magistrate to hear and determine the complaint. On such an application the question of the jurisdiction of the magistrate would be raised and settled, and if it appeared that the magistrate had invisidation he would be ordered to proceed to judgment.

jurisdiction he would be ordered to proceed to judgment.

There is in Samoa no jurisdiction corresponding to a high or supreme court to which application could be made for mandatory directions to the municipal magistrate; and consequently, as there is no right of appeal in the ordinary course, the remedy, if the municipal magistrate has wrongfully refused to hear this complaint, can only be obtained by convincing the magistrate himself that he has jurisdiction in the case of

So much for the right to appeal. German subjects.

The question whether the municipal magistrate had, under the municipal regulations passed under the authority of the convention of 1879, jurisdiction to entertain this complaint, is one of greater difficulty, and depends upon the meaning to be assigned to the words "regulations and by-laws with regard to police and good order," in Article III of the convention, and upon the powers and authority to affect German subjects conferred thereby, and by Article V upon the municipality and the municipal magistrate of Apia. The Imperial German consul contends, upon his reading of instructions from his Government, that these words do not confer upon the municipal board power to make regulations which will in their turn confer power upon the municipal magistrate to inflict punishment upon a German subject for the commission of a criminal offense within the municipality; and he further contends that such words limit the powers of the municipal board to the making of regulations concerning what he terms "common police offenses," and he states it as his opinion that the offense with which M. Marquardt was charged was not a common police offense" within the meaning of the words "police and good order" as used in Article III, but that it is rather in the nature of a "criminal offense" for the commission of which a German subject is answerable to the German consular court only.

It seems to me that the interpretation placed by the Imperial German consul upon the meaning of the words "police and good order" in Article III, while it may in cases where serious criminal offenses are charged against German subjects be the correct one, is not applicable, on the facts proved and admitted, to this case. The offense charged here is a simple police case, where on a dispute arising between two persons one, it is charged, commits upon the other a common and apparently slight assault, and is thereby guilty of a breach of the peace and order of the municipality. The offense charged is one which would, both in Germany and in Great Britain, be heard and determined by a magistrate; it is nothing more than a common brawl, in which, apparently, both parties lost temper, and in which one may or may not be more to be blamed than the other. Such a case is one which is most properly settled as soon as may be before a magistrate, and, if not dismissed, would probably be met by the infliction of a fine of a few shillings upon the party most to blame. If the offense charged here may properly be regarded as an offense against "the peace and order" of the municipality, then it might have been tried by the municipal magistrate, notwithstanding that one of the parties was a German and the other a British subject; for, by Article V of the convention, all such offenses may be tried by such magistrate, by whomsoever such offense may be committed.

It seems to me that the interference of the imperial German consul was uncalled for, and that the municipal magistrate was wrong in coming to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. As I have before pointed out, however, there is no legal machinery by which the municipal magistrate can be ordered to hear the complaint should he still continue to refuse to do so. It therefore seems to me that if Gurr conceives that he has been wronged by the alleged assault, his simplest course would be to lay complaint against Marquardt in the imperial German consular court, where he will, on proving his case, be sure to receive any reparation to which he may show himself entitled, for, while Article III of the convention confers jurisdiction on the municipal board of Apia to deal by regulations with cases such as this, there is nothing in that article which deprives the imperial German consular court of any jurisdiction which it may have over German which subjects.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of the 25th August, respecting the complaint of Mr. W. Gurr against M. Marquardt, a German subject, and to the action of the German consul-general in declaring that the offense with which M. Marquardt was charged was not triable by the municipal magistrate.

I have submitted these papers to the acting chief judicial commissioner, of whose opinion I inclose a copy. You will advise Mr. Gurr, if he wishes to proceed against M. Marquardt, to do so in the German consular court. You will also inform the German consul-general that you have recommended this course, adding at the same time that I am advised that the case is one in which the municipal magistrate should properly have considered he had jurisdiction to entertain the complaint, but that there is nothing in the convention which deprives the imperial German consular court of any jurisdiction which it may have over German subjects.

NORFOLK, VA., February 3, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 2d instant Reynolds Bros., of Norfolk, Va., sued out a libel in the United States district court of this judicial district against the steamer North Erin, a British vessel bound to Liverpool, England, for the sum of $14,231, in the cause of contract, civil and maritime.

On the same day an attachment was sued out of said court against said vessel, and was placed in the hands of John I. Sullivan, special deputy United States marshal eastern district, Virginia. This vessel then being on her way to some foreign port, the deputy marshal chartered a tug-boat and proceeded the same evening to Cape Henry, Virginia, to intercept the vessel and levy the attachment. As the steamer was nearing the cape the deputy marshal went to her in a boat, hailed the captain, and told him he wished to go aboard. As he got alongside of the steamer the captain gave orders to increase her speed and threw out a ladder to enable the pilot then on board the steamer to leave her and go in the boat in which the deputy marshal was. The deputy marshal started up the ladder and told the pilot that he was a deputy United States marshal and wanted to see the captain on business. One of the crew called out to the captain that a United States officer wanted to board his vessel. The captain ordered his crew to throw the marshal off. As the marshal tried to climb the ship the crew lowered him down. This movement was twice repeated. On his third attempt to board, the marshal reached and grasped the ship's railing with his hand. The rope was then untied, the ladder was thrown over, and the marshal was pushed from the vessel. The marshal fell some 20 or 30 feet, and fortunately fell into a boat of the pilot-boat William Graves. Had he not done so the suction of the moving steamer would almost inevitably have drawn him under. The pilot was carried off in the captain's steamer.

The name of the captain of the steamer was John Owens. His vessel was loaded at West Point, Va., with cotton for Liverpool.

Very respectfully,

J. C. GIBSON, United States Attorney.

Memorandum handed to Mr. Bayard by Sir L. S. Sackville West, March 7, 1888.

The object of Article VIII of the draught of convention annexed to the protocol of December 19, 1887, respecting sugar bounties, has not been fully or correctly understood in some quarters.

A copy of this article is annexed. Its object is not, as appears in some instances to have been erroneously held, to exclude certain British colonies and foreign possessions from the convention which Her Majesty's Government trust will be entered into for the purpose of suppressing bounties on the exportation of sugar. The British colonies mentioned in this article possess responsible government, and it is necessary, and is now the usage of Her Majesty's Government in concluding treaties of a commercial character to except these colonies in the first instance from the operation of such treaties in terms similar to those employed in the article above referred to. India is also included in the article which reserves the liberty of action of the self-governing colonies, in order to enable the government of the viceroy to consiner the stipulations of commercial treaties, and whether they are applicable to the peculiar circumstances of the Indian empire.

In the sitting of the conference in London, held on the 16th of December last, the under secretary of state for the colonies stated the expectation of Her Majesty's Government that all the British possessions named in Article VIII of the draught of convention will become parties to its engagements.

The stipulations of the present convention will apply to the colonies and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty with the exception of those named below, to wit:

The East Indies, Canada, Newfoundland, the Cape, Natal, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, Southern Australia, Western Australia, New Zealand.

However, the stipulations of the present convention will apply to one of the colonies or possessions above indicated from the date on which the British Government shall notify the other contracting powers of the adhesion of the said colony or possession.

Each one of the colonies or possessions above named which shall have adhered to the present convention maintains the faculty to withdraw in the same manner as

In case one of the colonies or possessions in question should desire to withdraw from the convention, a notice to this effect shall be given by the British Government to the other contracting powers.

Circular instructions relative to Red Sea lights.

FOREIGN OFFICE, February 29, 1888.

In the year 1881 the Porte granted to Messrs. Collas and Michel a concession for the erection and maintenance of thirty lights in the Red Sea, on the southeastern coast of Arabia and in the Persian Gulf.

Copy of this document is inclosed for your information. Her Majesty's Government have objected to the terms of the concession, and in August last a meeting to discuss it took place at this office between Sir James Fergusson, Mr. Henry G. Calcraft, Mr. Kennedy, and Rear-Admiral Sir G. Nares, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and Morel Bey and M. Collas, as representing the Porte and the concessionaires; but the Porte, in the note from Rustem Pasha of the 15th of that month, while agreeing to certain modifications, declined to admit all the objections of Her Majesty's Government.

I inclose copy of his excellency's note, together with copy of a memorandum prepared by the board of trade, which enters fully into the details of the scheme, and the objections which Her Majesty's Government consider exist to it.

It will be seen from this memorandum that, as regards the portion of the concession which relates to the lighting of the Red Sea, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, eight out of the twelve proposed fairway lights are not required for the protection of ships passing through that sea, and that six of them would not, in ordinary circumstances, even be sighted; that two more are not absolutely necessary for the safety of shipping carefully navigated; and that the establishment of these two can well be deferred for the present. Also that the dues authorized under the concession are inordinately high.

It is shown that by omitting the erection of the lights which are considered unnecessary, it would be possible to provide for the erection of all the lights in the neighborhood which are needed, at a smaller expense to the shipping trade than is proposed under the concession.

The dues leviable under the concession for the twelve Red Sea fairway lights alone. would, as shown in the memorandum, amount to about £38 for each voyage on a vessel of 3,200 net tonnage, in addition to the charges for supporting the Egyptian lights already established, and which amount to about £38 for a vessel of the same tonnage. The dues, moreover, for the lights authorized by the concession, if once agreed to by the maritime powers, are to be continued for forty years. No provision is made for their revision in the event of trade increasing, or in that of the cost of erection being previously paid off.
On the other hand, the cost of maintaining the existing Red Sea lights, establishing the additional ones that are absolutely necessary within the Egyptian, Turkish, and Guardafui districts, and providing a sinking fund for the repayment of the cost of their erection, can, it is expected, be met as soon as a reduction can be made in the Egyptian light-house dues, by a tariff of about the amount now levied for the Egyptian Red Sea lights alone.

It will be seen from Rustem Pasha's note referred to, that, notwithstanding the objections raised by Her Majesty's Government to the concession, the Porte holds in the main to its terms, and says that the separation of the Abu Ail and Mocha shoal lights from the general concession is impossible.

It is indeed stated that the scheme is open to modification, but, looking to the above-mentioned expression of opinion and to the fact that a high fixed tariff is proposed, Her Majesty's Government conclude that the modification can only refer to the number of lights being slightly reduced or the sites somewhat altered. But, besides the objections held by Her Majesty's Government to the proposed fairway lights and the scale of dues, they consider that the following points are of great importance and should be firmly maintained in dealing with the concession.

(1) That the Red Sea fair-way lights erected for the benefit of and supported by dues levied on the passing foreign trade should be in no way coupled financially with any other lights or with Government funds applicable to other purposes.

(2) That whatever country provides lights should levy dues only in strict proportion to the actual cost of the service, and that the expenses should be kept as low as possible with due regard to efficiency.

(3) That provision should be made for the periodical revision of the tariff, and that yearly accounts should be published for the information of the countries whose trade is taxed, as is already done by Egypt in connection with the lights in the northern part of the Red Sea, and by Great Britain in connection with lights in the Indian Ocean and on the south coast of Ceylon.

The accompanying extract of a letter from the board of trade, dated the 22d February, 1886, points out the undesirability of acknowledging or admitting the fresh establishment in practice of a right on the part of any power to benefit financially through taxes levied on a foreign passing trade in connection with lights on its coast or on off-lying dangers, a line of policy for the abolition of which the several maritime powers have made great effort, and for the abandonment of which, when prescribed by long usage, a large sum was paid by them to Denmark in 1857, when the sound duties were done away with.

At the present time, although many countries exercise their undoubted right to levy local light dues on ships entering their ports, no country, except Turkey (who taxes the Black Sea trade on passing the Dardanelles), so far as Her Majesty's Government are aware, in any way levies light dues on the foreign trade passing their general coast lights, unless it enters one of their ports, much less does any other foreign government benefit financially through levying such dues.

If the Collas concession were agreed to, a further precedent would be created in opposition to the principle on which action was taken regarding the sound duties. by thus taxing a foreign passing trade, immediately benefit to the extent of some £7,000 a year over and above the cost of the light-house service.

With reference to the statements made in Rustem Pasha's letter of August 15, I with reference to the statements made in Kustem Pasna's letter or August 10, 1 have to observe that the proposed Turkish Red Sea light dues and the Egyptian Red Sea light dues are in no way comparable, the accounts of the latter being published for general information, and the tariff being subject to revision. The statement that Turkey will light an area of 325 miles with twenty-three lights for the same amount of dues as is now charged by Egypt for lighting 100 miles by means of seven lights is incorrect, for the eleven Turkish coast and harbor lights included in the above

In consideration of these circumstances, and as the concurrence of the maritime powers in the tariff is necessary before the concession can come into force, Her Majesty's Government propose to inform the Porte that they can not agree that the trade of this country which passes through the Red Sea without touching at a Turkish port should be taxed except to such an extent as may be found necessary to pay the actual cost of erecting and maintaining such lights as are absolutely necessary for that trade. But before doing so they would be glad to know the views of other powers interested in the matter.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 21, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 19th instant, whereby you inform me that the Marquis of Salisbury has requested you by telegraph to represent to me the very great importance which Her Majesty's Government attaches to the presence of a delegate from the United States Government at the approaching sugar conference which opens on the 5th of April next, and that the negotiations can not be carried to a successful issue unless the United States take part in them.

It appears from the report of Mr. Henry White, who, under certain declared reserves, represented this Government at the late conference which met in London to consider the sugar bounties question, that the object of the conference now about to meet is the signature of an international convention, whereby the contracting parties agree to take legislative measures to abolish or prevent any direct or indirect bounty on exported sugars, and to adopt or propose the adoption by legislation of "a system of imposts upon the amounts of sugar produced and ready for consumption, as the sole means of accomplishing the abolition of the bounties in question, and to submit to the same régime the factories of glucose and of sugar from molasses."

As the question of general tariff and revenue revision is now pending in the House of Representatives, and a bill has been reported from the committee in charge which deals with the duties on sugars and sugar-producing molasses, this Government is not prepared at this time to become a party to the proposed convention, as presented by the late conference. Article VII of that draught, however, provides for the subsequent adhesion of states not originally signing the convention, so that an attitude of reserve in this regard does not prejudice the liberty of subsequent action by this Government in the premises.

If your Government will be satisfied with the attendance of a delegate of the United States, under the reserve that he is not empowered to sign a convention or otherwise commit the Government of the United States to the results of the conference, I shall be pleased to telegraph instructions to the United States minister at London to direct Mr. White to attend the adjourned meeting of the conference, as before.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. S. Sackville West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 24, 1888.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your note of the 2d ultimo, transmitting a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of the minister of customs in relation to certain fees charged on vessels of the United States in the ports of Ontario.

Judging by the tenor of the report of the minister of customs, it would appear that the main argument of my note of the 17th of November last, to which the report is a reply, has not been correctly apprehended. It was not my purpose to argue that the entrance and clearance fees charged on American vessels in certain ports of Ontario are an equivalent of the tonnage duty of 3-15 cents, which was suspended by the President's proclamation of January 31, 1885, as to vessels coming to the United States from ports in Ontario. Upon this point it is not proposed now to express any opinion.

The purpose of my note was to point out that the entrance and clearance fees referred to constitute a discriminating duty upon vessels of the United States entering at and clearing from ports of Ontario. In reply to this the minister of customs refers to certain fees charged on Canadian vessels in lake ports of the United States, as equivalent to the fees charged in the ports of Ontario. It is not shown, however, that these fees are in any respect discriminating.

In my note of the 17th of November last it was stated that the Department had been informed that the charge of 50 cents for entrance and for clearance on United States vessels of less than 50 tons burden, and of $1 for each of the same purposes on United States vessels of 50 tons burden or over in certain ports of Ontario, was not charged on Canadian vessels entering the same ports from the United States, provided such vessels had taken out a coasting license, which is granted to them free or for a nominal charge, and which they all possess.

The report of the minister of customs appears to admit this difference in treatment, which amounts to a discriminating tax imposed on vessels of the United States in the ports of Ontario referred to.

It is stated in the report of the minister of customs that by the law of Canada the governor in council may, from time to time, throw open the privileges of the coasting trade of the Dominion to the ships or vessels of any foreign country in which British ships are admitted to the coasting trade, and it is also stated that the Canadian government desires "the adoption of a more liberal policy by both countries in relation to coasting, in order that the restrictions to trade in the inland waters of Canada and the United States may be removed, and the Dominion placed in a position to carry out fully the provisions of the section of the coasting law" referred to.

In view of this statement, it is proper to observe that the present question is not understood by this Department to involve a claim that American vessels should be admitted to any privilege of the coasting trade of Canada.

The allegation is that vessels of Canada licensed for the coasting trade of that country are also given advantages over vessels of the United States in the trade between this country and the Dominion. It is not seen that this allegation is answered by saying that vessels of the United States may be admitted to the coasting trade of Canada and thereby secure equality of treatment with Canadian vessels in trade with the United States if the United States will throw open its coasting trade to British vessels.

It seems to the Department that the direct and proper remedy for the present inequality of treatment is to be found in the Dominion act cited by the minister of customs, in which the fees now in question are imposed, but in which it is also provided that the governor in council may reduce or re-adjust them.

[Extract.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD, Washington, April 3, 1888.

SIR: The Board has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Department letter, dated April 2, 1888, transmitting a letter from the State Department, dated March 30, 1888, with its inclosure, a note from the British minister at this capital, asking the views of this Government as to a proposal made by the Government of Turkey as to the erection and maintenance of thirty lights in the Red Sea, on the coast of Arabia, and in the Persian Gulf. This Government is asked as to whether the Turkish proposals should, in its opinion, be agreed to, and if not as to what lights its trade requires, and what dues this Government is prepared to pay for them.

In reply, the Board begs leave to say that our trade in those waters is exceedingly It appears from the current report of the Commissioner of Navigation (see page 207) that but three American vessels used the Suez canal during the year 1885, and it is surmised that a part of these were naval vessels.

From this it would appear that the trade of the United States, at least at present, requires few, if any lights in those waters.

It has been the policy of this Government to exact no light dues for vessels entering its ports. The stand was taken in the early days that civilization required that America should, by her Light-House Establishment, her harbor improvements, her Coast Survey, and her Life-Saving Service, do what she could as a duty to humanity at large to insure safety to those who sought her shores. No reason is seen by the Board for changing the policy at this day.

Now the United States maintains 914 light-houses, 23 light-ships, 77 steam or hotair fog-signals, 140 clock-work fog-signals, 361 day beacons, 3,886 buoys of all kinds, on its 9,959 miles of its ocean, gulf, and lake coast-line, besides its 1,107 stake lights on its long line of rivers, at a cost, last year, of $2,597,400, without mentioning the cost of their establishment.

This Government has been rective under the claim of other Covernment that its

This Government has been restive under the claim of other Governments that its commerce should pay light dues. How much has been paid by American ships for light dues it is hard to say. But it was stated by Mr. Abbott Lawrence, our minister to England in 1851, in his discussion with Lord Palmerston, that in the previous three years the light dues collected by Great Britain amounted to between £400,000 and £500,000, and that the United States had paid one-fourteenth of all. This and £500,000, and that the United States had paid one-iotheristic of all. This would make our payment, say, $160,000 for that year. As an instance it may be well to state that the American Steamship Line of Philadelphia paid as light dues on its four steamers during the years 1875, 1876, and 1877, $36,000, being at the rate of $250 per voyage for each of the one hundred and forty-six voyages made by them; but the amount paid directly as light dues is only a small proportion of what has been paid

This Government has from time to time made efforts to extinguish the light due paid in foreign countries by its commerce. It has, from time to time, represented to the British Government the impropriety of these exactions, and it has always been listened to with respectful consideration, but has been put off with promises that the matter shall receive further and favorable attention in the future. It has been more successful with other countries.

Under the treaty of Washington, of April 11, 1857, it was agreed that $393,011 bo paid to Denmark to extinguish what were known as sound dues.

Under the treaty of Berlin, of 1861, it was agreed that about $36,000 should be paid to Hanover to extinguish what were known as the stade dues theretofore levied on our trade on the Elbe River.

Under the treaty with the Belgians, made at Brussels July 20, 1863, it was agreed that the United States should participate in the benefits of the treaty made on April 19, 1839, between the King of the Belgians and the King of the Netherlands, by which it was agreed that $550,000 should be paid to the King of the Netherlands in annual installments in return for the extinguishment of the Scheldt dues. Of this sum the United States agreed to pay its proper share, and doubtless the payment to Belgium of $61,584 mentioned in the disbursement for 1872 for the extinguishment of the Scheldt dues closes the account. While the dues thus extinguished were of various kinds, light dues in each case entered into them as one of their items, and the Governments to which the dues were paid bound themselves by the treaties requiring their payment to keep the lights and aids to navigation in good order thereafter. In conclusion, the Board begs leave to say that it is of opinion that it should be the policy of this country to refrain from entering into any treaties by which it should be required to pay any further light dues, and also that it would be the part of wisdom for this country to take all proper measures to have the light dues now exacted against its commerce by any Government extinguished as soon as practicable. I am, etc.,

> S. C. ROWAN, Vice-Admiral, U. S. Navy, Chairman.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on the 4th April, 1888.

The committee of the privy council has had under consideration a dispatch dated March 21, 1888, from Her Majesty's minister at Washington, transmitting copy of a dispatch which he had addressed to the Marquis of Salisbury relative to action on the part of the Canadian Government, which it is sought to obtain under the Canadian statute (42 Vic., chap. 15, sec. 6), which provides that certain articles may be admitted into Canada free of duty whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the governor in council that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty.

The minister of finance, to whom the dispatch and inclosure were referred, observes that it appears therefrom that the under secretary of state of the United States had informed Sir L. S. Sackville West that the Department had lately had under consideration the Canadian statute above mentioned, with the view of obtaining, if possible the application of its provisions to contain a compactition reconstitution and the contains and the contains of the provisions to contain a compactition reconstitution and the contains of the contains of the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contains and the contai sible, the application of its provisions to certain commodities recently placed upon the free list of imports entering the United States, but still subject to duty when entering the Dominion of Canada; that he had sent Sir L. S. Sackville West a memorandum on the subject, and had asked Sir L. West if he thought the I ominion Government could be induced to take action in the matter, to which Sir L. West replied that he would submit the memorandum to Her Majesty's Government.

The memorandum inclosed is as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

The tariff act of 3d March, 1883, puts in the free list:—
I. Fruits, green, ripe, or dried, not especially enumerated or provided for in the said act, 22 Statutes, p. 519.

II. Plants, trees, shrubs, and vines of all kinds, and seeds of all kinds except medicinal seeds not specially enumerated or provided for in said act, 22 Statutes, p. 520.

For exceptions see titles "Fruits" and "Seeds" in Heyl's Import Duties, 1887, Part III, pages 32 and 79.

The Canadian statute of 42 Vic., chap. 15, section 6 (Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, vol. 1, chap. 33, sec. 9) provides that green fruits, seeds of all kinds, plants, trees, and shrubs may be admitted into Canada free of duty upon proclamation by governor in council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty.

The minister recommends that, as the attention of the governor in council has been called to the provision of the sixth section of the Canadian tariff act, 42 Vic., cap. 15, above referred to (Rev. Stat. Canada, cap. 33, sec. 9), and as it has been shown to his satisfaction that the articles hereinafter specified are admitted into the United States free of customs duty, a proclamation of the governor in council be issued placing the same upon the list of articles which may be imported into Canada free of customs duty, viz:

Green fruits, viz: Bananas, olives, pine-apples, plaintains, tamarinds, apples, blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, cherries, cranberries, peaches, plums, quinces, apricots, lichi fruit, mangoes, and melons.

Seeds, viz: Auise, anise-star, canary, caraway, coriander (crude), cardamon (crude), chia, cinnamon (crude), fenugreek (crude), fennel (crude), jute, mustard (brown or white), sugar-beet, seeds of fruit trees, sesame plants.

Trees and shrubs, viz: Apple, peach, pear, plum, cherry, quince, and all other fruit trees; gooseberry, raspberry, blackberry, currant, and rose bushes; grape-vines, shade, lawn, and ornamental trees, shrubs, and plants.

The committee advise that a proclamation do issue, as recommended by the minister of finance.

The committee further advise that your excellency be moved to transmit copies of the proclamation as well as copies of this minute to the right honorable the secretary the proclamation as well as copies of this minutes of the same for the colonies, and also to Her Majesty's minister at Washington.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

Report of a committee of the privy council approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on 8th March, 1888.

On a report dated 24th February, 1888, from the minister of justice submitting for your excellency's consideration the cases of the United States fishing-vessels David J. Adams and E. M. Doughty, the minister of justice observes that these vessels were libeled in the vice-admiralty court at Halifax for violation of the statutes relating to "fishing by foreign vessels," and relating to the convention between Great Britain and the United States of October 20, 1888.

The proceedings were understood by the counsel on the part of the Crown to be closed early in the year 1886, but an application was made by the counsel for the defense for a protracted adjournment in order that further evidence might be taken.

That the effect of the adjournment which was granted on this application was that the causes were not heard until June, 1887, when they were heard by the Hon. J. McDonald, judge of the vice-admiralty court for the Province of Nova Scotia.

Judgment was reserved and has not yet been delivered.

The minister desires to remind your excellency that these proceedings were taken for the purpose of asserting and establishing the right of Canada, under the convention of 1818, to prevent the purchase of bait and other fishing supplies in Canadian ports by United States fishing vessels and to prevent such vessels from entering such ports for the shipping of crews.

As, however, the result of the negotiations recently concluded at Washington has been to show that no further difference of opinion between the two Governments upon the points is to be apprehended, it appears to the minister of justice unnecessary that a judicial decision should be sought to affirm the right above mentioned.

The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to discontinue the proceedings against the vessels above mentioned, provided the owners or their representatives give an undertaking which will prevent such a step being made the basis for a claim for damages or expenses.

The committee, concurring in the recommendation of the minister of justice, advise that a copy of this minute be forwarded to the secretary of state for the colonies in order that the reasons for this action above recommended may be in possession of Her Majesty's Government.

Messrs. Roberts & Sons to the Assistant Secretary of the Marine Department of the Board of Trade.

> BALTIC CHAMBERS, 75 QUAYSIDE, Newcastle-on-Tyne, March 27, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We duly received your letter of the 22d instant forwarding a complaint from the United States Government against Captain Owens, of our steam-ship North Erin. This matter was thoroughly investigated by us on the ship's arrival in Liverpool, and we inclose copy of a letter forwarded by us through the United States consul in Liverpool to the American authorities; this letter will explain the course we took in the matter. We are convinced that if the judge had known the facts of the case he would not have granted the order for the arrest of the steamer.

The fact with respect to the incident of the marshal as stated in the copy which you sent to us, we believe to be totally incorrect. Captain Owens assures us that the man who came alongside his ship in the pilot yawl was not in uniform, that he never declared who he was nor what he wanted. All the ship's crew and also the American pilot confirm the captain's statement on this point. In the statement made by the pilot to the American consul in Liverpool, we believe he distinctly states that the deputy of the United States marked who he was alongside the steam of the liverpool. deputy of the United States marshal when he was alongside the steamer in the yawl did not declare to him or anybody else on board the ship who he was.

The statement that the marshal fell some 20 or 30 feet is absolutely untrue. The ship's rail would not be more than 10 feet out of the water, but as a matter of fact the man did not fall at all, neither was he pushed from the side of the vessel.

These statements are evidently made by some one who bears malice towards Captain Owens and with a view of doing him injury.

Captain Owens has been in command of our ships and steamers for the last seventeer years and during that time we have found him to be a steady, sober (having never tasted liquor in his life), and a thoroughly reliable and cautious man. We believe him we have found him to be a steady, sober (having never tasted liquor in his life), and a thoroughly reliable and two do not have do not also the control of the control of the steady with the pilot and we do not the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the co lieve his version of the affair as confirmed by the crew and the pilot, and we do not blame him in the slightest degree for what occurred. Captain Owens left the North Erin to be married and is now in Paris, on his honeymoon. A letter addressed to 28 Windsor Place, Cardiff, would probably be forwarded to him.

We are, etc.,

We also inclose a cutting from the Norfolk Evening Telegram of March 6, 1888, which goes somewhat to confirm the captain's story, as the marshal therein admits that he told no one belonging to the ship who he was.

Please return the newspaper cutting after perusal.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE. March 26, 1888.

SIR: Our attention was drawn by a paragraph in one of the United States newspapers to an alleged attempt on the part of the master of our steam-ship North Erin to avoid the arrest of his ship after she had left West Point for Liverpool.

Immediately on arrival of the ship at Liverpool we investigated the circumstances, and the master has assured us that he was not aware that the boat from the pilotcutter, which came alongside of his ship whilst she was under weigh, contained any officer of the United States courts, or that in proceeding on his voyage with his ship he was evading the service of any process from the courts; he states if he had been aware that the boat contained an officer to arrest his ship he would have at once submitted to the arrest.

We feel deeply that any apparent attempt should have been made by the master of our ship to evade the service of any process or to treat with apparent slight any order issued by a judge of one of the United States courts.

The act was unauthorized by us, and if we had known that any action had been commenced against the ship we would have instructed our agents to have given bail and obtained the release of the ship.

To show that we are most anxious to treat the courts of the United States with the respect to which they are entitled, we are willing to admit that the process of the court was served and to take such steps for defending the action as if process had been served in the usual manner. We shall feel personally greatly obliged if you will forward this letter to the proper authorities in the United States.

John Owens, late master of the steam-ship North Erin, to the assistant secretary of marine department, board of trade, Whitehall Gardens, London.

> 28 WINDSOR PLACE Cardiff, April 12, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, together with a copy of a complaint against me from the Government of the United States, concerning my action whilst in command of the steam-ship North Erin, on the 2d of February last, off Cape Henry, Virginia.

I had strong reasons for refusing to sign the charterer's draft for the amount demanded, viz, $14,231, as they insisted on my signing their bills of lading with freight payable on weight delivered in Liverpool, instead of upon the same weight as that upon which they were calculating the freight for their draft, viz, the weight inserted in the bill of lading by themselves.

Fearing that the cargo might turn out at Liverpool short of the weight indicated by the bills of lading, whereby the ship would lose freight, I objected to sign the draft unless charterers would undertake to make the chartered amount good to the owners of the ship, as their bill of lading gave the ship no lien on the cargo for anything, the charterer's responsibility, conformably with the conditions of the charter party, having ceased as soon as the cargo was shipped.

The clause in the charter party covering this latter point was as follows:

"Charterer's responsibility under this charter to cease on cargo being shipped; but the owners or master to have an absolute charge and lien upon the cargo and goods laden for the recovery and payment of all freight, dead freight, and demurrage." This provise they refused to insert in the bills of lading, and they would not allow me to add above my signature the words, "and all other conditions as per charter party," or to make any reference whatever to the terms of the charter party, but demanded that their bills of lading should be signed as presented.

I signed a draft for the amount of disbursements as required by the terms of the The draft for the difference in freight bound the freight, ship, and charter-party. owners for its payment whilst the charter-party gave a lien on the freight alone. Messrs. Reynolds Brothers gave me all the documents necessary to enable me to sail, viz, the ship's register, articles, and customs to the clearances; and being put in possession of these papers I had therefore no reason to suspect that anyone would come to detain the ship after leaving West Point. I remained at West Point forty-eight hours after loading for the purpose of getting a settlement, which afforded them ample time to stop the ship. After failing in my object, I told them that I should protest against signing the draft and proceed to sea. I went to a notary and made a protest, handed the same to Messrs. Reynolds Brothers, and thereafter sailed, the steamer being in charge of Mr. W. Face, pilot for the capes, which was reached about 7 p. m., and where the ship was stopped by order of the pilot, for the purpose of allowing him to enter his own boat. The engines were never moved after the pilot stopped them until after the ladder was cast off.

When the pilot-boat was coming alongside a man from it called out, "I have a paper for your captain." To this announcement I replied, "I want no paper, I have no time." Finding that the man was coming up the ladder I went to the gangway and reminded him that I had no time; the only words uttered by him were, "I want to see the captain," which request he repeated, and I told him to go down, and I also to see the captain," which request he repeated, and I told him to go down, and I also warned him that if he did not move to allow the pilot (who was standing on the rail) to get off, I would be compelled to lower the ladder with him, whereupon as he did not move, the ladder was lowered until the man reached the rail of the small-boat and consequently was in no danger whatever. This man wore no uniform whereby one might recognize his official position, nor did he mention his business, of which I was totally unaware. Had he indicated what the nature of his errand was, or who he was, or had he been in uniform or come in some revenue-cutter or other obviously official boat, I would have at once submitted to the warrant. No words were exchanged between him and myself, excepting what has been related above. No force whatever was employed other than that indicated by the lowering of the ladder. The man made only an attempt to board and he did not have his hands on the ship's rail, and consequently it is untrue that he was pushed from the vessel. The height of the rail has been stated inaccurately, as the steamer's rail was not more than 10 feet from the water where the ladder was hung. Consequently to say the man fell 20 or 30 feet is obviously untrue, as from this 10 feet at most must be deducted the height of the man.

Having been accustomed to the American trade for many years and knowing that I should be likely to return to that country again, I would never have wittingly interfered to prevent the law of the United States taking its due course. Had the person, whom I am now informed was a deputy marshal of the United States, advised me of his official capacity or what his business was, I should have submitted to him at once. I can only add that I most deeply regret what has taken place and especially any apparent slight or contempt of the United States courts on my part. If I am in default in any way I am willing and anxious to make ample apology.

I have, etc.,

JOHN OWENS.

[Inclosure 4.—From Norfolk Evening Telegram, March 6, 1888.]

The "North Erin"—Her captain pleads ignorance of the marshal's presence—The arrival of Capt. George Face from Liverpool to-day and the ship's ladder in the United States court-room here would seem to point to a different conclusion.

Our readers will recall the North Erin incident of the early part of February, in which United States Deputy Marshal J. J. Sullivan, of this city, who had gone down to the capes to attach said vessel (a British merchantman), was thrown off the side of the ship into a yawl alongside and narrowly escaped with his life. A libel suit was about to be entered against the ship by Messrs. Reynolds Brothers, of Norfolk, because her captain would not sign their draft for the insurance and freight on cotton with which they had loaded the North Erin.

They applied to Judge Hughes and he dispatched Mr. Sullivan down in a tug to overhaul the vessel before she passed out of the capes. On returning to the city Mr. S. reported that he had attempted to board the ship, but that the ladder had been cut and he thrown off, the vessel in the meantime making her escape and carrying off the Virginia pilot, Capt. George Face, who had brought her down the York River from West Point.

United States Marshal Thomas W. Scott has received a letter from the American consulate at Liverpool, inclosing the following letter from the owners of the North Erin:

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, February 23, 1888.

We are, etc.,

HUGH ROBERTS & SONS.

CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Esq., United States Consul, Liverpool.

The carrying off of Captain Face, the pilot, would seem to indicate that the departure of the North Erin was somewhat unusual, and it does not look probable that his being carried off and Mr. Sallivan and the ladder dropping from the ship's side was all accidental.

[Mr. Sullivan has the ladder in the United States court-room here.]

CAPTAIN FACE'S ARRIVAL.

Capt. George Face, above referred to, arrived home from Liverpool via New York this morning, and went at once to his home in Atlantic City, being anxious, after his enforced absence of a month, to get back to his family. During the day the Telegram sent a reporter over to Atlantic City to interview him; was found at his cozy, comfortable home in that suburb, but was entirely too full of "getting home" to talk about the trip. Captain F. is a robust, heavy man, every inch a sailor, and when the Telegram met him he had much the appearance of having just gotten home after a three years' cruise. He was surrounded by his children, and it seemed indeed a gladsome time. He had too much to tell them to tell the Telegram anything, except that he had not suffered by the trip. Judging from his good nature, and the prime physical condition in which we found him, we should say that he had had a royal time. Beside, there was according to the should say that he had had a royal time. Beside, there was something he promised to tell us later, which he wanted the people across the water to see, and we think he wanted to say how well they had treated him. He would not talk about the captain of the North Erin, saying that "that is his (the captain of the North Erin, saying that "that is his (the captain of the North Erin's) business and I do not care to interfere."

Finding that he was so absorbed in his family, we only intruded upon him for a few minutes and retired.

NOTES.

Deputy Marshal Sullivan was seen again by the Telegram to-day in regard to the matter, and he is of the opinion that the officers of the ship suspected who he was when he was first seen to approach the vessel; says Pilot Face was standing beside the rail of the ship when he, Sullivan, started up; that he told Mr. Face who he was, but didn't tell anyone else. All others about the side of the ship looked like sailors. United States Marshal Scott will turn the above letter over to the district attorney, who will forward it to Washington.

No. 586.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Edwardes.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 22, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to bring to the attention of Her Majesty's Government the case of the American ship Bridgewater, which was seized by the customs authorities at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, on the 27th of July, 1887, and detained in custody until the 15th of the following October, a period of eighty-one days, when she was unconditionally released.

The facts in the case are that the Bridgewater cleared from St. John, New Brunswick, on the 1st of April, 1887, with a cargo of deals for Penarth Roads, Great Britain. On the 5th of the same month, having been disabled by a storm and extensively damaged, she put into Shelburne, Nova Scotia, for repairs, was surveyed and condemned and her cargo discharged.

In the mean time, however, Capt. John H. Allen, the agent for Mary Warren Allen, the owner of the vessel, having arrived, refused to accept the survey of condemnation and advertised the vessel for sale.

On the 8th of June the ship was put up at public sale, but as no bid was made or none that was acceptable she was bid in by Captain Allen as agent of the owner; and having been thus unable to effect a sale of the ship he proceeded to repair her.

The repairs were proceeding and, as is alleged, were nearly completed when, on the 27th of July, the vessel was seized by Collector Atwood, of Shelburne, for non-payment of duty as for goods entered and sold under the Dominion statute 46 Victoria, cap. 12, sections 41 and 60, which read as follows:

41. The person entering any goods inwards shall deliver to the collector or other proper officer an invoice of such goods, showing the place and date of purchase, and the name or style of the firm or person from whom the goods were purchased, and a full description thereof in detail circuit the continuous three purchased, and a full description thereof in detail, giving the quantity and value of each kind of goods so imported, and a bill of the entry thereof, in such form as shall be appointed by competent authority, fairly written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, and in duplicate, containing the name of the importer, and if imported by water, the name of the vessel and the master, and of the place to which bound and of the place, within the port, where the goods are to be unladen, and the description of the goods, and the marks and numbers and the contents of the packages, and the place from which the goods are imported, and of what country or place such goods are the growth, produce, or manufacture.

60. Goods derelict, flotsam, jetsam, or wreck, or landed or saved from any vessel, wrecked, stranded, or lost, brought or coming into Canada shall be subject to the same duties and regulations as goods of the like kind imported are subject to.

It is unnecessary for me to give a construction to these provisions in order to show that they could have no relation to the case of the Bridgewater, a vessel compelled to enter in distress and undergo repairs by her owners, out of whose hands she had never passed up to the time of her seizure for non-payment of duties, because that such is the clear opinion of the Canadian authorities unmistakeably appears.

Captain Allen formally protested against the seizure of the ship, but without avail until the 16th of September, when the consul of the United States at Shelburne received from the acting minister of customs at Ottawa the following telegram:

Allen can repair and take vessel away. If he requires Canadian register, will have to pay duty.

A. W. McLelan, Acting Minister of Customs.

On the 22d of September Collector Atwood offered to release the vessel on condition that her owner abandon all claim against the Canadian Government or its officials, for the seizure and detention. This, Captain Allen, acting for the owner, refused to do.

The vessel was not released till the 15th of October, and then uncon-No Canadian register was ever applied for or issued, and she sailed from Shelburne under American papers.

The owner has since presented a claim for damages by reason of the wrongful seizure and detention of the ship, amounting to something over $20,000, to the Government at Ottawa, but has failed to secure its recognition; and Captain Allen has been informed by the minister of customs that his principal has no redress in the courts against any of the officers of the Crown.

Should the facts as herein stated be ascertained to be correct (and there appears to be little room for doubt), it is hoped that the justice of the claim now presented will be recognized and proper compensation

I have not thought it necessary to enter into any elaborate argument in regard to the law of the case, as it appears to be admitted that there was no warrant for the seizure and detention of the Bridgewater under the customs laws of Canada, and since no government has more readily accorded or more consistently contended for the right of vessels in distress to seek shelter and repairs than that of Her Majesty.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Edwardes.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 2, 1888.

SIR: Referring to my reply of the 11th of April last, to Sir Lionel West's note of the 19th of March, 1888, relative to the proposed establishment by the Turkish Government of certain lights in the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, I now have the honor to inform you that I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, in which he expresses the opinion that it would be inexpedient for this Government to assent to the Turkish proposal.

My colleague, moreover, observes that apart from the general inexpediency of assenting in any new case to the imposition of light dues upon passing vessels, the present proposal is open to specific objection in this, that out of the twelve coast lights proposed only four can be considered as in any sense necessary or desirable, namely, Jebel Tier (16), Zebayr (18), Abou Ail (21), and Mocha (23); secondly, the tolls which it is proposed to levy are excessive and apparently combine in one system of charges the maintenance of coast lights and harbor lights; and thirdly, no provision is made for the publication of accounts of light dues, or for any measures looking to their early reduction and ultimate abolition, but on the contrary it is provided in the concession that they are to continue in force for forty years after a certain number of lights shall have been erected.

The Secretary of the Navy is therefore of the opinion that the proposal in its present form would be extremely burdensome and should not be agreed to, but that this Government might safely assent to a properly guarded arrangement providing for the erection of the four above-mentioned lights, and for the collection of reasonable tolls for their maintenance, with the understanding that the tolls should cease at an early date.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 21, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Treasury Department, of the 10th instant, in relation to an alleged discrimination against American vessels passing through the Welland Canal.

By the twenty-seventh article of the treaty of Washington, Her Majesty's Government undertook to urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada to grant citizens of the United States the use of the Welland and other canals on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion. On the other hand, the Government of the United States promised to secure as far as possible reciprocally equal treatment of inhabitants of the Dominion using canals in the United States connected with the lake system of transportation. The Department is informed that such equality of treatment now exists in the United States.

I will thank you to bring the matter to the attention of the Canadian Government.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 10, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information and for such action as you may deem proper, an extract from the last annual report addressed to me by the Commissioner of Navigation, relating to an alleged discrimination by the Canadian Government, in the matter of the navigation of the Welland Canal, against American ports, American railroads, canals, and American vessels.

It is understood that the discrimination still exists.

The British Government undertook, in article 27 of the treaty of Washington, to urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion. But such equality does not now exist in all respects.

Would it not be advisable to bring the matter to the attention of the British Government with a view to securing, if practicable, the abrogation of the objectionable regulations now existing upon the subject?

I am, etc.,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

THE WELLAND CANAL.

Some complaint has been made in regard to an order of the governor-general of Canada levying tax or toll on all wheat, Indian corn, maize, barley, and rye passing through the Welland Canal in American bottoms.

It was alleged that the toll on grain is fixed at 20 cents per ton on all American vessels passing through the St. Lawrence system of canals from one American port to another, but that on grain from a Canadian port destined to another Canadian port the tolls have been reduced the entire length of the canal system. On the other hand, Canadian vessels passing through the Sault Canal are allowed all the privileges of American vessels and are absolutely free of toll. Reciprocity seems to demand similar action on the part of the Canadian Government, or at least that American vessels should be admitted through Canadian canals without the payment of any fees or taxes in excess of the fees and taxes levied on Canadian vessels under similar

The complaint as to discrimination against American vessels has been investigated by this office, through the several collectors of customs on the northern frontier. The substance of the statements received is to the effect that discrimination does not exist, except in the case of grain passing through the Welland Canal destined for American ports on Lake Ontario.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, Newfoundland, May 28, 1888.

My LORD: With reference to my dispatch, confidential, of the 16th instant, I have the honor to inform your lordship that a difference having arisen between Mr. Prowse and the Government as to the amount of his remuneration, he has withdrawn from the position assigned to him in the preventive service under the bait act, and his position has been accepted by Commander Robinson, R. N., port officer, in whose discretion I place very great confidence.

Commander Robinson is to proceed on Wednesday or Thursday next, when the Lady Glover comes off the dock. He will receive instructions to exercise the utmost care to avoid any unnecessary friction with foreigners in carrying out his duties.

I inclose a report written by Mr. Prowse, stating that certain breaches of the law had taken place, and detailing the steps taken by him; among others, the order to Mr. Sullivan to prosecute the master and crew of an American schooner.

I had been informed of this on the 22d, and wrote at once to the attorney-general requesting him to telegraph instructions to Mr. Sullivan to suspend action until further orders, as I wished the matter to be considered in council next day.

On the 23d I brought the subject before the executive council, and found a strong inclination to exact the punishment under the provisions of the law. I pointed out that, putting aside the possibility of any question arising, and accepting the legal right of this colony to impose and recover the penalty, it was not advisable just now to give to American politicians adverse to the treaty grounds, however slight, for the working up of public feeling against its acceptance, and suggested that this Government might secure the co-operation of the United States Government in preventing breaches of the act by a more conciliatory policy, and, at the same time, take more effective means to prevent the American fishing schooners from obtaining in future more bait than was necessary for their own use.

To this, after some discussion, the council agreed, with one dissentient, and orders were given that the proceedings should go no further than taking the evidence in the case, which will be forwarded to your lordship.

I would beg to draw your lordship's attention to the statement made by Mr. Prowse that the principal instigator of the breaches of our local law is the United States consul at St. Pierre. My Government earnestly hope that your lordship may be able to induce the Government of the United States to instruct their except of the United States. be able to induce the Government of the United States to instruct their consul at St. Pierre to abstain from such unfriendly action towards this colony. The fishermen of the United States have experienced no difficulty whatever in obtaining their bait, and are treated with the greatest consideration. Any further attempt, however, to evade our bait act and to trade in herrings with the French under the plea of their fishing privilege will be bitterly resented here, and may lead to undesirable complications

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, May 22, 1888.

SIR: For the information of his excellency the governor in council, I have the honor to make the following report respecting American fishery and the bait protection service.

We met the first American schooner at Harbor Breton, on the 29th March; her master, Greenleaf, was halibut fishing, and he wanted to get twenty-five barrels of herring for bait to complete his voyage. Although the protocol of the Washington treaty was not in force, I gave him permission to get the bait required.

When the American fishing vessels began to arrive in Fortune Bay, and I had received definite instructions to grant license under the protocol, I explained the law and operation of the protocol to them. Many of their vessels being large, I did not restrict them to the limits of the local law, 65 barrels of bait for each schooner, but gave them to the extent of 10 barrels per dory, and even more if necessary. I examined each master on oath as to his vessel being a bona-fide banker, and each declared that the bait he received was solely for the use of his vessel in the catching of cod-fish, and he swore not to export same to St. Pierre nor elsewhere.

I believed from former experience in dealing with American masters that they would act honorably. I did not consider it necessary or desirable to follow the vessels about; I did not for a moment believe that the masters would perjure themselves and sell their bait at St. Pierre. I knew that they had received orders from their owners to obey the Newfoundland laws, etc., and I judged, from the American masters. I had not with they would not set so dishonerably and there was no four of ters I had met with, they would not act so dishonorably, and there was no fear of their carrying bait to the French in defiance of our laws. In all ways that lay in my power I was extremely courteous to the Americans. About the 4th May I heard rumors that American bankers had been selling their bait in St. Pierre, but there were so many lying statements going about the bay that I thought it was only another idle rumor concocted in St. Pierre. On Saturday, the 5th May, Thomas Farrell, of St. Jacques, and Andrew Heckey, of Bay du Nord, came aboard the Lady Glover off Bru-From them I obtained the following statement on oath: That they knew that the American schooners Ambrose H. Knight, John William Bray, Ellen U. Adams, J. W. Campbell, and Monitor, sold in St. Peters to the French herrings obtained in Fortune Bay; they also believed that the American schooner Daniel Morey sold some of her All the masters of these vessels had been sworn, and all declared on oath that the bait they required under their licenses was solely for the use of their crews in catching codfish on the banks, and they would not export any of said bait to St. Peters or elsewhere or permit any of their crew to do so. After getting the statement I went at once to the hauling-places at the head of the bay and dispatched Mr. Hubert, J. P., in the Greyhound, to ascertain what amount of bait each of these vessels had obtained. He obtained clear evidence that the first-named American schooner, Ambrose H. Knight, had obtained twenty dory-loads of herring under the pretense that he was going to the Magdalen Islands and that he wanted a large quantity to toll (or entice) the fish. The seine-master, Williams, has been bound to appear. The rest of the vessels named were chiefly baited by servants of Burkes, of St. Jacques, who have been our principal opponents in the bay, and in each case a larger quantity than required was fraudulently given them. All these vessels will have to return to Fortune Bay for a second baiting, and I have deferred proceeding against the seine-masters until all the facts could be brought out on trial.

I am aware that these unlawful acts were done by the American masters and their crews in direct defiance of their owners' distinct orders to obey the laws of Newfoundland, and in the case of the J. W. Campbell, now in the bay, and who has been probably caught by Mr. Hubert and the subinspector to-day, my instructions are to fine the master and crew if duly convicted, but not to imprison them, and to do nothing to either the vessel or cargo.

The masters of these delinquent vessels were mostly Cape Breton men, and not native-born American masters. The other American captains condemned their conduct in most emphatic terms. Of course, after this occurrence, I used extra precautions, bound each seine-master not to deliver to any vessel more than 10 barrels per dory, and overhauled each ship leaving the bay to see that she had only her authorized quantity of bait; and I explained to the masters why I was, unfortunately, obliged to adopt this extreme precaution. We all felt extremely annoyed at the rascally conduct of these five masters. I believe the American consul at St. Pierre, who is an extreme opponent of our Government in this measure, gave the American masters bad advice, and did all in his power to induce the Americans to take the French side on this question, and I had continually to fight against his influence.

All the intelligent Americans agreed that our Government had always treated them most liberally, and that it was directly against their best interests to violate our laws and aid the French. The parties who have been loudest in condemning this occurrence have been the chief persons to sell the Americans extra bait.

In conclusion, the whole amount of herring sold by the Americans in St. Pierre did not amount to 300 barrels herring, so far as I could ascertain with certainty; and out of over thirty masters five only have been guilty of dishonorable conduct.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, Newfoundland, May 16, 1888.

My Lord: With reference to your lordship's dispatch, confidential, of the 25th April, I have the honor to inform your lordship that no instructions were given to Judge Prowse, the officer charged with the enforcement of the bait act, beyond the letter a copy of which I inclose.

The first information that I received of steamers being hired and a force placed on board for the enforcement of the act was from Judge Prowse, who called upon me immediately before his sailing. This was previous to the arrangement made by my ministers on my remonstrance, as detailed in my dispatch, confidential, of the 6th April.

Before he set out, I now learn that the attorney-general had advised him to secure, if possible, the services of an agent at St. Pierre, who would give him private information as to breaches of the bait act by the fishermen of Fortune Bay. Mr. Prowse evidently interpreted the advice of the attorney-general in a wider sense than was intended, for early last week he telegraphed to the attorney-general that the was intended, for early last week he telegraphed to the attorney-general that the French governor would consent to our having an agent at St. Pierre, and that the services of Mr. Sheehan, a native of Newfoundland, long resident in St. Pierre, could be secured for $100 per month. This was followed by a statement that the French were prepared to make an arrangement about the bait bill that would cover the treaty shore difficulty. The attorney-general informed me of this, and by my desire he telegraphed to Mr. Prowse to confine himself to his duties of preventing the expect of beit port of bait.

A further telegram was received from him by Sir R. Thorburn, stating that the governor of St. Pierre had telegraphed to M. des Isles, the French consul (who, though not acknowledged officially, practically performs here his duty as consul), requesting him to approach this Government, and Mr. Prowse requested that no answer should be given to M. des Isles until his return in the Lady Glover, which was coming here for repairs. As I felt that much mischief might arise from unauthorized attempts at an arrangement by a public officer in Mr. Prowse's position, I thorized attempts at an arrangement by a public officer in all directed that he should be telegraphed to again, in the strongest terms, informing directed that he should be telegraphed to again, in the strongest terms, informing directed that he should be telegraphed to again, in the strongest terms, informing directed that he should be telegraphed to again, in the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms, informing the strongest terms and the strongest terms and the strongest terms are strongest terms. Thorburn showed me a private letter from him stating terms of arrangement that would not be accepted by this Government.

On Sunday, the 13th, Mr. Prowse returned, and I received from him the letter and "draught of terms," copies of which I inclose. On Monday Mr. Prowse called upon me, when I told him that I entirely disapproved of his conduct in having ventured to approach the matter without authority, and that I should hear from him before the executive council in the afternoon what explanation he had to offer. told me that he had never approached the French authorities further than by trying to procure an agent at St. Pierre, and that the "draught of terms" was simply his own views of what terms might be obtained, written without communication with any person. He repeated this before the council in the afternoon, when he was closely questioned as to his proceedings. His statement was that the French merchants of St. Pierre are in great straits for bait, that their first bank fishery is completely lost, and that they are now sending ships to St. George's Bay and the Magdalen Islands to look for bait. He was asked how he knew that the governor of St. Pierre had telegraphed to M. des Isles, and he answered that he had heard it from Mr. Sheehan.

While the members of the executive council felt that Mr. Prowse's action had been unguarded in discussing even with Mr. Sheehan possible terms that would not be accepted here, and that might, if communicated to the French authorities, seriously mislead them as to what would satisfy Newfoundland, he had, on the whole, performed the difficult duty in connection with the bait act very well, and it was decided that he should return, receiving careful instructions for his guidance.

That some communication between the French governor and Mr. Prowse had taken place seemed likely, from Mr. Prowse's knowledge of the telegram sent to M. des Isles by the governor; and certain passages in Mr. Prowse's letter and the "draught of terms" would seem to indicate something more of an attempt at effecting an agreement than the mere jotting down of his own ideas for submission to the government.

M. des Isles is a very shrewd and wary agent, and I feel certain that he would not come to me with any proposition from the governor of St. Pierre, but would connot come to me with any proposition from the governor of St. Pierre, but would confine himself to sounding me indirectly, to see if Mr. Prowse had any authority from this Government, or if the suggestions made would be likely to be accepted here. M. des Isles called upon me to-day, ostensibly for the purpose of returning a book, and we had a long and desultory conversation. He approached the subject of the fisheries cautiously, but acknowledged that the bank fishing had been bad so far, which he attributed to bad weather. He made no proposal of any kind to me, nor did he mention the French governor beyond a statement that he was hampered in St. Pierre by a local legislature, but in the course of conversation, we exphanged views to a certain a local legislature, but in the course of conversation we exchanged views to a certain extent. He regretted the difficulty with Fortune Bay. I said I should be heartily glad to see the whole difficulty settled; but no arrangement seemed possible, as the consent of this Government was necessary, and this Government would not listen to any arrangement that did not include the reduction of bounties.

He said the French Government would not touch the question of bounties, which were considered necessary.

I answered that I was under the impression that the French Government had modified the sugar bounties. We spoke about the armateurs and I observed that, as regards the armateurs, if the increased expense of his fishing in consequence of bait difficulties here amounts to 3s. or 4s. per quintal, he would be in the same position if bounties were reduced to that extent, and he could obtain his bait as heretofore. This would apply to the metropolitan armateur; but the question is more serious for the St. Pierre merchants, as the stoppage of their trade as middle-men between the bait sellers and metropolitan armateurs meant ruin. He acknowledged this. I said that if the price of fish were raised by 4s. a quintal by the operation of the bait act it would realize £300,000 for this colony, and it could not be expected that a government of merchants would consent to giving away such an advantage without equivalent. He said that the fisherman of Fortune Bay were losing £50,000 a year. I acknowledged this, but said that probably a regular trade in properly barreled herring would spring up there which would pay the fisherman much better than selling the herring for bait. He said he did not see any difficulty in effecting an arrangement, outside the bait, so far as the shore was concerned. I answered that I did not see how difficulties ought to arise, as it is palpable that the shore fishery is failing; and, as a matter of fact, the western and northern shores are being gradually abandoned by the French, who find they are not making their expenses. The fishing of the future will be the bank fishery, and probably the French could make satisfactory arrangements to procure bait from Norway or elsewhere. Of course St. Pierre would suffer. He acknowledged this, and said the merchants of St. Pierre would be ruined; that he had advised them to go to St. George's Bay and try to establish a trade there with the people, exchanging French goods for farm produce. After some further conversa-

I mentioned this conversation at length, as I think it not improbable, now that it has been demonstrated to the merchants at St. Pierre that the loss of the bait from Fortune Bay and the stoppage of the illicit trade with the southern shore by which the bait has been procured, means financial disaster to them, while the cost of obtaining their fish must be largely increased to the metropolitan armateurs, that the French Government may be moved to approach Her Majesty's Government with a view to renewed negotiations; and it is desirable that your lordship should know exactly what has taken place here.

The hopes of the French have been centered upon St. George's Bay, but this year the herrings have struck in for a few days, and have gone, possibly on account of severe netting, for when the herring are much disturbed in shallow waters they are sometimes driven away, while in deep waters like Fortune Bay they only go down This year the seasons have singularly favored Newfoundland, and, in my opinion, the time is more favorable for a satisfactory settlement of the whole difficulty than later on, when the first shock of the dislocation of trade arrangements has passed, and possibly a different mode of baiting or fishing may be devised by the French. At present the mercantile community here are so elated at the success of the bait act that it is difficult to say what would satisfy them. But if good terms, including substantial reduction of bounty, could be procured, I should not despair of inducing my Government and the legislature to accept them.

The shore fishery has been declining for some years, and does not now even pay the fishermen of Newfoundland, with their inexpensive gear, while the French armateurs have been losing heavily. The best part of the shore fishery is that from Cape teurs have been losing heavily. The best part of the shore fishery is that from Cape St. John on the east coast to Quirpon on the north. I inclose a return, received from a reliable source, of the number of French vessels and men employed on that portion of the coast for the year 1886-187, with the number of quintals of fish taken. The decrease in the number last year is very considerable, and it is evident that even with the bounties on fish and premiums on men employed, 18 quintals per man in 1886 and 7 quintals in 1887 could not pay the merchants.

While writing this dispatch I have received from the colonial secretary a report from Mr. Prowse detailing his proceedings in Fortune Bay. I inclose a copy for your lordship's information.

As I feel that it is important that the governor of this colony should know from personal observation the conditions existing round the coasts, I propose to request the admiral to afford me accommodation in one of Her Majesty's ships for that purpose.

I have, etc.,

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, May 13, 1888.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I inclose for your excellency's perusal the rough draft of the terms we would probably obtain from the French, now that they are in sore straits for bait. I have sent a copy to Sir Robert. If this arrangement were carried out we should gain a great diplomatic triumph, virtually settle the vexed questions of the consul at St. Pierre, and the bad treatment of our fishermen by French officers, get a large increase of revenue, and greatly benefit Fortune Bay.

The bait act is a two-edged sword that cuts into our finances and ruins the Fortune Bay men; to keep it up indefinitely is bad policy. I have carefully studied the question, and I am sure you will never compel the French to give up their bounties; your pressure on them will have directly opposite (?); if we persecute them the home Government will help them; you know the French character, and will see that I am right; the French are very anxious to negotiate just now; later on the pressure may be removed; supplies of bait may turn up; therefore I think when I first asked Government was the year heat time as then were in a papir. I also know that there is ernment was the very best time, as they were in a panic. I also know that through St. Pierre is the best way to negotiate; the colony is really interested, and its views will rule with the home country. I have carefully worded these paragraphs, so as not to touch French pride.

They really amount to giving us a consul and concurrent rights, but I have not so worded it.

Paragraph 5 might run:

"French and English subjects on parts of Newfoundland where French have treaty rights shall possess and enjoy equal and concurrent rights in the cod fishery on those coasts."

I shall call some time early and discuss the points with your excellency. I try my best to follow your directions "to bait the French."

Mr. Justice Prowse to Mr. Fenelon.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, May 14, 1888.

SIR: Having been requested by the Government on the 8th March, 1888, to take charge of the arrangements for enforcement of the provisions of the bait act of 1887 against the exportation of bait to St. Pierre, I have the honor to make the following report of my proceedings to this date:

I received a very brief letter of instructions from the Government at 1 p. m. on the 8th March; at 2.30, having to wait an hour for the police, I started from St. John's in company with the steam-ship Hercules, with a party of police, under the command of Subinspector Sullivan. After being detained by ice for two days, we arrived at St. Lawrence on the 12th. Immediately proceeded to Lamalim and Grand Bank, and thence to Belloram. I found feeling running high in the district against the act, and that there would be determined opposition to its enforcement. The people had been led to believe by interested parties in St. Pierre that the act was made entirely in the interests of St. John's merchants: that the British Government did not an in the interests of St. John's merchants; that the British Government did not approve of it; that the St. John's government, as the French call the colonial administration, wished to starve Fortune Bay, and, finally, that a large number of schooner owners had bound themselves together by a mutual written agreement to break the law in a body after the 18th April.

During all the month of March and the next month I was busy going about in the steamer Lady Glover, visiting every settlement in Fortune Bay, Bay Despoir, Hermitage, and Placentia Bays. I explained to the people the nature of the measure, that it was intended to protect our interests, that by its enforcement we would compel the French to come into our bays to buy their bait, and then obtain for the people better prices for their herring, and prevent the reckless waste that now goes on, and generally to obtain fair terms from the French.

In two large settlements of Fortune and Grand Bank the people, having heard my views, generally agreed with me, and they have always loyally obeyed the law. also found that from the scarcity of herring in Placentia Bay there would be no disobedience to the law, and that I was free to give my undivided attention to Fortune Bay. In the smaller harbors the fishermen were so afraid of punishment that I found generally there was not much danger to be apprehended from them. So from the 15th April on I had to give my undivided attention to fighting the opponents of the measure at Rencontre, St. Jacques, Belloram, Bay de North, and English Harbor.

In the mean time I kept the Hercules on guard all the time at the mouth of the bay, relieving her from time to time with the Lady Glover.

On the 15th Government engaged Greybound, and I put Mr. Hubert, resident magistrate for Fortune Bay, in charge of her. I had received information of when the meetings were to be held, and I was always present to combat objections, to explain the act, and generally to fight my opponents.

The 18th April was the legal time under the old law for carrying herrings to St. Pierre, and on the 19th the combined schooner owners had agreed to haul. The merchants The merchants of St. Pierre fully expected on that day a supply of bait, as their friends in Fortune Bay had promised to break the blockade, but from the 19th to the 22d active preparations were made for a meeting at Bay de North on the 23d.

On Sunday evening, 22d, there was a disturbance at Rencontre; the police were resisted in searching a vessel for herrings, stones thrown at them, and the small force had to retire. They recognized the ringleader, and after taking depositions and issuing warrants I proceeded to Bay de North, to meet the Hercules, with the subinspector and the rest of the police. By 2 a. m. we had arrested the ringleaders in their hads taken the principal conspirator an Helian paped Giovannini as a witness beds, taken the principal conspirator, an Italian named Giovannini, as a witness, and then proceeded to Bay de North, where between forty and fifty schooners were at anchor. The appearance of Giovannini aboard our steamer, and the news of the arrest of their leader, Thomas Vallance, exaggerated accounts of the number of other prisoners on board, struck terror into the members of the combination. Mr. Hubert want amongst them, advised them to show the law, and one by one they went away went amongst them, advised them to obey the law, and one by one they went away. From this time forward we were continually employed with the four steamers enforcing the act and it has been done so effectually, that by the 4th May the French, out of 52,000barrels of herring required for their first baiting, had only obtained 4,000 barrels. The largest portion of this supply was received by them before our arrival in Fortune Bay, and only a small portion by smuggling. Some of this quantity was received from American bankers, who, having obtained bait by license under protocol of Washington treaty solely for their of Washington treaty solely for their own use, and under a solemn obligation not to export to St. Pierre, nevertheless, about five out of over thirty perjured themselves and sold bait. I was particular in dealing with the Americans, had treated them all very courteously, and all the rest of the American masters condemned in vigorous language the conduct of these five skippers. By this time the French, having realized that bait could not be obtained from Fortune Bay, turned their attention to other sources of supply; sent first one portion of their fleet to Bay St. George, whilst another went to Magdalen Islands. In neither of these places have they been successful in obtaining the desired supply, and the experiments tried with purse-seines have been equally unsuccessful. The French have realized that they can not do without the supply of bait from Fortune Bay; it was always cheap, convenient, and fresh, three passessary incredicate in each a traffic three necessary ingredients in such a traffic.

I have, etc.,

D. W. PROWSE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 4, 1888.

SIR: I have been unavoidably delayed in the presentation to you of an application made to this Department by a large number of citizens of New York importantly engaged in trade with Canada in relation to a feature of Canadian laws which is alleged to contain an especial discrimination against importations of merchandise, "the product of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope," coming into Canada by the way of the United States.

I transmit a copy of the body of the memorial, in order that the signers may explain their own object.

As it is my purpose to ameliorate the trade relations of the neighboring countries, I will ask you to bring the subject to the attention of the Canadian authorities.

Messrs. Howell, Son & Co., and others, to Mr. Bayard.

NEW YORK, April 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We beg to call your attention to the fact that about the year 1875 the Canadian government passed a law creating a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. advalurem to be imposed on all merchandise "the product of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope," imported from points west of the Cape of Good Hope, except Cape of Good grope imported from points west of the Cape of Good grope, except Great Britain, and virtually made a promise that as this measure was of a retaliatory nature, they would remove this discriminating duty whenever the United States Government should take off a similar duty which was at that time in force.

By act of Congress passed May 4, 1882 (Department circular dated May 16, 1882), the United States repealed their discriminating duty, to take effect January 1, 1883; but the Canadian government has not yet removed their 10 per cent. retaliatory or discriminating duty.

Semi-

discriminating duty.

We ask that you bring this matter before the Canadian government, and try to have their discriminating duty against the United States removed.

In case of removal of this duty, there would be sure to be a large trade brought about between the two countries, and doubtless to their mutual benefit, but certainly to the benefit of the United States.

We would especially call your attention to the fact that the Canadian 10 per cent. retaliatory duty is against the United States only.

We are, dear sir, yours truly,

DEAR MR. BAYARD: With reference to your private communication on the question of rendering aid to vessels wrecked in the waters lying between the United States and Canada, I inclose extract from a committee of the privy council thereupon.

Yours, etc.,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Extract from a report of a committee of the privy council of Canada.

The minister of customs reports that no refusal has ever been made on the part of the government of Canada to applications made by United States vessels for permission to assist in the saving of lives of United States citizens when in danger in Canadian waters.

The minister also observes that authority has always been readily granted, on application to the minister of customs, when United States vessels and cargoes have been in imminent peril in Canadian waters, to use the services of United States tugs when no Canadian tugs were immediately available to render services. The Dominion government is now ready, and has been at all previous times, to enter into reciprocal arrangements with the Government of the United States for the coasting trade in the respective waters of the United States and Canada, which would also include the wrecking privileges and towing business of each of these countries.

The minister observes further that the recent action of the house of commons of Canada in rejecting a bill brought before it during the present session with a view of States supports the position hitherto maintained by the government in declining to entertain the proposition for a measure of reciprocity in coasting and wrecking, but partial in its character.

At the present time the tolls chargeable on all goods and merchandise passing through the Welland Canal bound for any Lake Ontario port are the same, whether, for example, the destination of such merchandise be Toronto or Prescott on the north, or Oswego or Ogdensburg on the south.

Wheat and certain other cereals pay 2 cents per ton for passage through both the Welland and St. Lawrence Canal system to Montreal, or to any point on the St. Lawrence Canal system short of Montreal, without discrimination, whether to ports on north or south shore, and that the same cereals shipped from any port on Lake Ontario, whether American or Canadian, to Montreal pay 2 cents per ton for passage through the whole of the St. Lawrence Canals.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Marquis of Salisbury has requested me to bring the following case to the notice of the United States Government:

Her Majesty's high commissioner in the western Pacific reports, under date of the 28th of May last, illegal recruitment of native laborers in the New Hebrides on board a vessel named the Mary Anderson, "flying the British flag, although alleged to belong to an American citizen named Eugene Wilbur." It would appear from Mr. Wilbur's own statement that he has recruited labor on board a vessel flying the British flag, such vessel being owned by him and therefore not qualified to carry the said flag. .

In this case the vessel would, it is believed, be legally liable to forfeit-But if the ownership had not yet passed to Mr. Wilbur and he was as he stated in command, he has committed an offense under the Pacific islanders protection act of 1872-75. As, however, Mr. Wilbur is an American citizen and not within Her Majesty's dominions, Sir John Thurston has not taken proceedings against him. But whether he is legally liable or not, he has been a party to illegal recruiting under the British flag, while his purchase and sailing of a British-built vessel under the American flag, which is now carried, is, Sir John Thurston believes, contrary to the laws of his own country, and he therefore submits that the matter may be brought to the knowledge of the United States Government, with a view to such action being taken as may be necessary to prevent the commission of such irregularities; and he deems that the question of the authority of the United States citizens to fly their national colors at their own discretion in these seas over British vessels which they may have actually or only nominally purchased may be one of interest to the Government of the United States.

SIR: With reference to your note of the 3d of September, relative to irregular recruiting on board the Mary Anderson in the New Hebrides, I have the honor to inclose herewith extract from a dispatch from the high commissioner in the Western Pacific, which the Marquis of Salisbury has requested me to communicate to you.

I have, etc.,

SACKVILLE.

[Inclosure.]

Extract from a dispatch of the high commissioner of the Western Pacific.

I have ascertained from Mr. Layard, Her Majesty's consul at Nouméa, that the vessel was still British owned when the illegal recruiting took place, and that her registered master was George Facio, a French half caste. Mr. Wilbur was on board and in practical control, having chartered the vessel pending the receipt by the owner's agent of authority to sell.

It would thus appear that, while Mr. Wilbur was the real offender, the only person legally liable in respect of the unlicensed recruiting was the master of the vessel, George Facio. As this person is not a British subject, and is not resident in British to take territory, or at present employed in British vessels, I do not think it advisable to take steps against him. There is, I may mention, no reason to believe that the laborers engaged otherwise than of their own free-will.

WASHINGTON, November 11, 1888. (Received November 12.) SIR: With reference to the previous correspondence which has taken place between this legation and the Department of State relative to the establishment of a reciprocal arrangement between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States for rendering aid to vessels wrecked in the waters lying between Canada and the United States, I am instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to call your attention to an offer on the part of the Canadian Government, contained in a minute of council passed on the 6th of June, 1879, to make reciprocal arrangements in regard to the coasting trade of the inland waters only of the two countries to include wrecking and towing privileges.

This offer is a standing one, and Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that it would be to the advantage of the two countries if some arrangement of the kind could be made, as it is important in connection with the questions relating to wrecking that are continually arising.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 16, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 11th instant, in which, referring to the proposals heretofore made looking to some reciprocal arrangement to facilitate the saving of life and property in cases of wreck and stranding in the waters between the United States and Canada, you call my attention, under instructions from the Marquis of Salisbury, to an offer on the part of the Canadian government contained in a minute of council passed on the 6th of June, 1879, to make reciprocal arrangements in regard to the coasting trade of the inland waters only of the two countries, to include wrecking and You add that this is a standing offer, and that Her towing privileges. Majesty's Government is of opinion that it would be to the advantage of the two countries if some arrangement of the kind could be made.

The standing offer in question appears to be the same as that referred to in the extract from a report of a committee of the privy council of Canada, dated 1st June, 1888, which was communicated to me with a letter from Sir Lionel West, written from Beverly, Mass., of the 13th of August last. The text of the minute of 6th June, 1879, was communicated to one of my predecessors by a note of Sir Edward Thornton, dated Newburyport, June 18, of that year.

I may be permitted, in view of the revival of the Canadian declaration that no partial arrangement of reciprocity in this regard will be permitted, to repeat the same surprise which was expressed in this Department's reply of August 11, 1879, to Sir Edward Thornton's communication of the original declaration, that any such expression as is contained in the report referred to should have been made in view of the act of the Congress of the United States, approved June 19, 1878, entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters coterminous to the United States and the Dominion of Can-That act followed in the line of the concurrent legislation which has done so much in the last seventy years to expand the good intercourse of the United States with the British North American possessions, and gave outright to Canadian vessels the right to render aid or assistance to Canadian vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters of the United States contiguous to the Dominion of Canada, on the sole condition that vessels of the United States should be admitted to perform identical humane services in the waters of the Dominion contiguous to the United States. It appears, from the several declarations of the Government of Her Majesty, made through its authorities in Canada, that the vessels of the Dominion will not be permitted to avail themselves of the privilege granted by the act referred to, except in the case of the reciprocal arrangement which it contemplates being a mere incident to the removal of all "restrictions upon the movements of the vessels of either nation" upon their inland waters, or, as appears to be stated in the report of June 1, 1888, that any arrangement for the mutual saving of life and property from the perils of the inland waters must be extended so as to include full participation in the coasting trade and towing business therein.

Should I, however, be mistaken in this supposition, and it should be merely the wish of the authorities of Her Majesty's Dominion of Canada to ameliorate those restrictions upon the movements of vessels in the coterminous inland waters which are found in practice to be "unpleasant and inconvenient," I should be most ready to receive a counter proposition setting forth the ameliorations which they may be disposed to suggest, in order to meet the generous offer of the act of June 19,

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE LEGATION OF GUATEMALA AT WASHINGTON.

No. 600.

Mr. Lainfiesta to Mr. Bayard.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF GUATEMALA, New York, October 25, 1887. (Received October 26.)

SIR: The Government of the Swiss Confederation in Europe obtained and maintains from the Government of the United States of America a concession which is an evidence of frank and generous friendship, and is, moreover, for that Republic, an act which gives it especial respect and consideration among other countries.

I refer to the fact that where Switzerland is without consular or diplomatic representation, the consuls or ministers of the United States lend their friendly offices, in the name of Switzerland, temporarily exercising consular or diplomatic functions.

A like exchange of friendly services is found concerted among other nations, and is a measure which greatly favors the course of international relations and rights in the case of a proper representative being wanting to forward and sustain them.

By agreement between France and Spain, on the recent withdrawal from Guatemala of the Spanish legation, the French minister repaired to the Department of State to announce that the relations with Spain would be attended to for the time being by the French legation.

The Republic of Guatemala aspires to the honor of being granted by your excellency's Government the same prerogative as that enjoyed by Switzerland, and indulges the hope that this desire may be fully favored by the friendship and sympathy it has always evinced for the small Republics of America.

For the Republic of Guatemala it would be a concession of great value, as well as a high distinction, to have the representatives of the United States lend it their friendly good offices in countries where Guatemalan representation may be wanting; and my Government, desirous to obtain said concession, has sent me special instructions to solicit this in its name from the Government of your excellency, with the understanding that whenever the consuls and ministers of Guatemala, notwithstanding their humble significance, may correspond in like manner by lending their friendly services in the name of the American Government they shall be instructed by my Government to do so with all earnestness, and to hold it an honor to practice that reciprocity.

Praying your excellency to be good enough to entertain this matter kindly, I have, etc.,

FRANCO. LAINFIESTA.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the note of the 25th of October last, intimating a wish on the part of the Government of the Republic of Guatemala that this Government should allow its diplomatic and consular representatives to lend their friendly good offices in countries where Guatemala is without consular or diplomatic representatives on behalf of its citizens in the same way in which the aid of United States officials is extended to citizens of the Swiss Republic.

Lest this assistance should be less comprehensive and powerful than you may have been led to expect, I inclose you a copy of portions of my note* of the 1st of July last to the representative of the Swiss Republic at this capital.

Should your Government, after knowing the terms of this note, still desire the friendly offices of our foreign representatives, I shall be most happy to send circular instructions to our diplomatic and consular agents similar to those contained in the circular of the 15th of December, 1871, in reference to Swiss citizens.

LEGATION OF GUATEMALA, Washington, December 27, 1887. (Received January 9.)

Mr. MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's esteemed letter of the 24th instant, in which you are pleased to reply to the one addressed by Señor Lainfiesta on the 25th of October last, to the Department under your worthy charge. I also received the copies your excellency was kind enough to send of the documents relative to the instructions which, at different periods, were forwarded to the diplomatic and consular agents of this Republic, in regard to what they are permitted to do in behalf of Swiss citizens as directed by the circular of December 15, 1871; all of which is perfectly explained in your dispatch of July 1, of this year, to Major Karl Kloss, the representative of Switzerland at this capital.

Your excellency is kind enough to state to me that should my Government, on learning the terms of the document to which your esteemed communication refers, desire still the friendly good offices of the representatives abroad of the United States, you will be pleased to issue to them, with reference to the citizens of Guatemala, a circular similar to that of December 15, 1871.

The extraordinary greatness of this prosperous nation, its principles, its liberties, and its republican form caused the Government of Guatemala to profess profound sympathy with that of your excellency, and to endeavor to extend day by day their commercial relations, which are in truth continually assuming larger proportions, to the benefit of both nations.

This is demonstrated by the increase at New York of importations and exportations from and to the ports of my country, and also by the fact of all the great enterprises of Guatemala being in the hands of American companies, to which my Government lends every kind of facility.

These circumstances will make evident to your excellency that my Government endeavors to render more intimate the happy ties of friendship which bind it to that of your excellency, and by very special instructions from the state department of Guatemala, to this end is directed the communication of Señor Lainfiesta, to which your excellency has so kindly replied.

Perhaps going into the details of the subject with your excellency, a treaty of friendship and commerce could be made between Guatemala and the United States in which your excellency, as explained in the penultimate paragraph of your note to Don Karl Kloss, could not authorize more than the Constitution allows, obtaining at the same time favorable advantages, beneficial to our respective countries.

Until my Government is made acquainted, as your excellency desires, with the documents you have been pleased to transmit to me, I take the liberty of calling your illustrious attention to the views (conceptos) of the anterior paragraph, which your excellency will doubtless note.

I offer your excellency most earnest and sincere thanks for the sentiments of friendship for my Government expressed in your esteemed letter. This is a new evidence of regard for Guatemala which will be duly appreciated, and in the name of the Government of my country I testify the deepest gratitude.

No. 138.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Honolulu, August 26, 1887. (Received September 14.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of an "intermediate report of the minister of finance,"* containing a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Hawaiian treasury for the fifteen months ending June 30, 1887, when the present minister assumed office.

The statement shows that of the two million loan authorized by the last legislature, $1,000,000 have been borrowed in London and $500,000 in Honolulu, only $1,264,699.26 of which has been netted the Government in Honolulu and San Francisco, the balance, amounting to $235,300.74, having been absorbed for expenses of floating the loan and interest retained by the London syndicate.

The syndicate in London, it appears, has charged interest on $1,000,000 for six months ending June 30, 1887, whereas the money was not paid until May and June last.

The loan act authorizes the expenditure of only $100,000 for floating the entire loan of $2,000,000, while there has already been charged against the Government $205,300.74 on account of loan of $1,500,000, besides the $30,000 interest retained in London.

I am reliably informed that it is the intention of the present ministers to allow to the London syndicate only the 2 per cent. discount and 5 per cent. commission authorized by the loan act and interest on amount borrowed from the date of its reception by the Hawaiian Government, and, further, that it is not the intention to place any more of the two million loan in London, but to borrow here as needed.

For a detailed statement of the transactions concerning the amount borrowed under the loan act I respectfully refer to pages 2 and 27 of the inclosed report. The indebtedness of Hawaii on the 30th of June last, including the new loan of $1,500,000, amounted to $1,721,000, one million of which is owing in London.

I also most respectfully call attention to the statement, on page 6, of the minister of finance, concerning cable communications with America. The Mr. Coate therein referred to remained here about one week last month while en route to Australia, and it is with the intention of making cable connection between these islands and Victoria, and in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, that he asks for the three years' exclusive privilege of landing a cable and the subsidy of $20,000 per annum.

The annual subsidy of $20,000 for maintaining telegraphic communication between these islands and the North American continent, was authorized by the last legislature and referred to in my dispatch No. 78, of September 2, 1886.

No. 141.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolulu, September 19, 1887. (Received October 6.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the first election for members of the Hawaiian legislature under the new constitution was held throughout the Kingdom on the 12th instant, and resulted in a complete victory for the reform or new constitution party there being only two opposition condidates elected.

Election day was very quiet and orderly in Honolulu, and no disturbance is reported in any part of the Kingdom.

So far as I have been able to ascertain the elected members of the legislature are men of property, and fully identified with the progress and prosperity of the country.

The returns indicate a large native Hawaiian vote in favor of the reform party, and that the race issue, which a few endeavored to bring prominently forward, did not meet with favor. Especially is this noticeable in the case of Mr. Aholo, late minister of the interior, who, being a candidate for the legislature from Lahaina, Mani, is said to have made race prejudice the basis of his campaign, yet, in a community largely composed of native Hawaiians, he was defeated by a large majority.

In fact there was no formidable opposition party, and all candidates publicly accepted and extolled the new constitution, excepting the provisions requiring property qualifications, in voting for nobles, which formed the basis of what little opposition was exhibited.

Whether a session of the legislature will be called before the regular session, provided by the constitution to assemble in May, is not fully determined, although it is quite probable it will be convened in extra session some time in November.

Since the election failed to create any undue commotion business affairs move along in the usual channels, and confidence in the continued peace and prosperity of the Kingdom is generally expressed.

pears evident from the last sentence of the oath, which reads:

Not hereby renouncing, but expressly reserving all allegiance and citizenship now owing or held by me.

This Department is informed that this oath is indiscriminately required of citizens of other nations, who are nevertheless understood by their own governments to retain their own nationality of origin. Inasmuch also as this oath is a requisite condition for exercising any political privileges on the island, it is evident that a refusal on the part of this Government of the assent to taking it granted by other governments to their citizens would result in the destruction of any political power previously possessed by our citizens and its transfer to citizens of other assenting nations.

The Department, therefore, desires that you will consider the above instruction as addressed to yourself, and that you will relieve the minds of all bona fide American citizens who, while honestly desiring to retain their American nationality, are, in order to obtain the privileges necessary for a residence in the islands, obliged under local law to take an oath to support the constitution of the Hawaiian Kingdom.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose the report of the inspector-general of immigration, lately published in the daily papers of Honolulu.

The inspector-general has visited all the sugar-producing plantations of this kingdom employing immigrant laborers and has embodied in his report the number and nationality of the employés; also their sanitary condition and the preference of each plantation manager for laborers of the several nationalities.

It will be observed that the total number of immigrant laborers employed on the several plantations is 13,517, while of the 59 plantations visited 23 prefer the Japanese and the remaining 36 are about equally divided in a preference for Portuguese and Chinese.

My observation coincides with the statement in the report that "the general impression is there are enough Chinese in the country."

No. 149.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolulu, October 22, 1887. (Received November 9.)

SIR: Referring to the supplementary convention mentioned in your unnumbered dispatch of the 26th ultimo, I have the honor to advise you that I am informed that the supplementary convention, as amended by the Senate, has been ratified by His Majesty the King, and that Mr. Carter, the Hawaiian minister at Washington, was so advised per mail by the steamer touching at this port last night en route from Australia to San Francisco.

On learning, through the press of this city, that His Majesty's Government was disposed to consider favorably the amended supplementary convention, the British commissioner resident here addressed a note to the Hawaiian minister of foreign affairs, and after reciting that England and France by the treaty of November 28, 1843, had guarantied the independence of Hawaii, he makes the following statement:

But the acquisition by the United States of a harbor or preferential concession in any part of the Hawaiian Kingdom would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, infallibly lead to the loss of its independence and the extinction of the Hawaiian nationality.

In reply to this note, the Hawaiian minister of foreign affairs stated in substance that the United States being a new and friendly power, with which this country is necessarily intimately connected commercially, and having granted the original treaty of reciprocity at a loss to its revenue to the great advantage of Hawaii, it would seem that, consulting the best interests of the people of Hawaii, and for the purpose of continuing intimate commercial relations, it was a proper and patriotic policy for His Majesty's ministers to advise the ratification of the supplementary convention as amended while it did not appear that the autonomy of Hawaii was invaded.

The British commissioner replied to the minister of foreign affairs, intimating his dissatisfaction and objecting at length to a preferential concession to the United States.

To this last note of the British commissioner the minister of foreign affairs will reply the coming week.

As yet, the commissioner is not aware that His Majesty the King has ratified the supplementary convention.

At intervals during the past few weeks, the Bulletin and Gazette, daily newspapers published in this city, have been engaged in a controversy concerning the Senate amendment, coupled with a discussion of the independence of Hawaii.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on the 3d instant the Hawaiian legislature convened in Aliiolani Hall, Honolulu, and was opened by His Majesty in person.

On this occasion the King was accompanied by Her Majesty the Queen, Her Royal Highness Princess Liliuokalani, and Her Royal Highness Princess Kaiulani.

I inclose a newspaper account of the opening ceremonies, also a copy of the speech of His Majesty the King in formally opening the session, and the reply thereto as reported to and adopted by the legislature.

Nobles and representatives:

You have been called together in extraordinary session at the earliest practicable moment after your election under the new constitution, in order that you may revise and amend certain acts which have been found to be inoperative, unconstitutional, or conflicting in their terms. Amongst these are the opium bill and the act to organize the military forces of the Kingdom; also the law relating to notaries public and that relating to corporations.

Another reason is that you may consider the advisability of changing the method of administration of certain departments of the public service which do not now secure to the country the efficiency which is desirable.

The circumstances connected with the negotiation of the loan in London, which seems not to have been effected strictly in accordance with the loan act of 1886, will probably also necessitate some amendments thereto. A somewhat different distribution of the amounts appropriated for the objects named in that act may also be necessary, some of them being insufficient, whilst others are larger than required.

I also commend to your consideration the revision of the law regulating the police department in such a manner as to insure more efficient results and a more responsible administration.

My ministers will also propose to you some amendments to the appropriation bill of 1886, which seems to have been drawn up without due regard to the probable revenue, and you will see the necessity of curtailing salaries and other expenditures wherever practicable, as well as of abolishing all unnecessary offices, in order that the proper relation between the receipts and expenditures of the treasury may be preserved.

I take great pleasure in informing you that the treaty of reciprocity with the United States of America has been definitely extended for seven years upon the same terms as those in the original treaty, with the addition of a clause granting to national vessels of the United States the exclusive privilege of entering Pearl River Harbor and establishing there a coaling and repair station. This has been done after mature deliberation, and the interchange between my Government and that of the United States of an interpretation of the said clause whereby it is agreed and understood that it does not cede any territory, or part with or impair any right of sovereignty or jurisdiction on the part of the Hawaiian Kingdom, and that such exclusive privilege is coterminous with the treaty.

I regard this as one of the most important events of my reign, and I sincerely believe that it will re-establish the commercial progress and prosperity which began with the reciprocity treaty.

Nobles and representatives, I now declare the legislature of the Kingdom opened.

REPLY TO HIS MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

Noble Dole, from the special committee of three, presented the following reply to His Majesty's speech:

Your Majesty, sire: We, the nobles and representatives of the Kingdom, have listened with pleasure to the sentiments which fell from Your Majesty's lips in the speech from the throne on the opening of the legislature, and we beg to assure Your Majesty that the opium bill, the act to organize the military forces of the Kingdom, the law relating to notaries public and to corporations and other matters to which Your Majesty calls our attention, shall receive our careful consideration and action.

The circumstances connected with the negotiation of the loan in London shall be thoroughly investigated, and our decision be such as shall in the premises appear right and equitable and in strict conformity with the provision of the statutes. It shall also be our duty, in compliance with suggestions from the throne, to make such revisions and amendments in the law regulating the police department, and also in the appropriation bill of 1886, as shall secure a more responsible administration and a suitable regard for the national revenue.

Your Majesty may rest assured that the matter of an economical administration of the public service shall always be kept in mind in our deliberations and that our conclusions shall be such as an unselfish patriotism may dictate.

We desire to congratulate Your Majesty upon the successful issue of the negotiations of Your Majesty's Government with the United States of America, which have resulted in the definite renewal of the treaty of reciprocity for a period of seven years, and we take pleasure in expressing on this occasion our approval of the granting to the United States Government the exclusive privilege of entering Pearl River Harbor and establishing there a coaling and repairing station, it being a necessary condition for the securing of this valuable concession, while guarantying to the country a renewal of commercial prosperity. We feel great satisfaction in the assurance that it is without prejudice to Hawaiian jurisdiction, and we agree with Your Majesty that this event will ever be regarded as one of the most important of those which have signalized Your Majesty's reign.

The report was signed by the three members of the committee, George H. Dole, Dr. J. Wight, and A. P. Kalaukoa.

On motion of Representative C. Brown the reply was adopted and ordered to be engrossed.

[Extract.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 158.] Honolulu, December 15, 1887. (Received December 31.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on the 12th instant quite an animated discussion occurred in the legislature regarding the right of His Majesty the King to veto bills passed by the legislature and presented to him for approval unless the veto be countersigned by a member of the cabinet.

On the 9th instant His Majesty, acting under authority of article 48 of the new constitution, which confers the veto power, returned to the legislature certain bills without his signature, giving his reasons therefor, notwithstanding the advice of his ministers to approve them.

The discussion arose on the question of adopting resolutions, introduced by Noble Castle, declaring it to be the sense of the legislature that the royal assent to the bills had not been refused, according to the intent and meaning of the constitution, for the reason that the message accompanying them was an act performed without the advice and consent of the cabinet and was not countersigned by a minister.

The resolution was finally adopted and a committee of thirteen was appointed, with the cabinet, to wait upon His Majesty and inform him of the action of the legislature.

During the day, and while the matter was under discussion in the legislature, His Majesty sent a communication to the justices of the supreme court inviting their opinions as to his constitutional rights in the premises, as in article 70 of the new constitution it is provided he may do.

The opinions of the justices will probably be given on the 17th instant. Considerable feeling over the subject has been engendered in the community, and during the pendency of the matter before the members of the supreme court the veto is the absorbing topic of newspaper and street discussion, accompanied with the usual variety of opinions and arguments for and against the right of the King.

What may be termed the radical element of the reform party insist that it never was the intention of the framers of the constitution to grant the King the right of veto independent of the cabinet, and that this position must be maintained in any event, otherwise the new constitution and the so-called revolution of June and July last accomplished nothing.

The advocates of the independent right of veto by His Majesty insist, on the contrary, that the restraining clauses of the constitution refer to executive acts only.

The articles of the constitution bearing upon the subject are 41-48, and 78.

While there are some insinuations of a determination to maintain the views expressed in the resolutions adopted by the legislature, regardless of the decision of the justices of the supreme court, yet, in quietly conversing with prominent business men and some members of the legislature, I find the general impression is that any attempt by the extremists to force a construction of the constitution in opposition to the views of the judges would not meet with public approval.

I feel quite confident that any attempt to repeat the demonstrations which brought about the promulgation of the present constitution would not receive the popular support given the leaders in June and July last.

In order that the Department may have a complete understanding of the temper of the discussion here, I inclose extracts of the proceedings of the legislature giving the resolutions presented by Noble Castle and the remarks thereon.

By the steamer leaving here on Tuesday next, the 20th instant, I hope to be able to forward you the decision of the judges of the supreme court on the questions at issue and acquaint you with the manner in which it is received by the legislature and the people.

I have, etc.,

GEO. W. MERRILL.

Extract of legislative proceedings, December 12, 1887 .- Resolutions on the veto.

Noble Castle moved the following:

Whereas it appears by the records of the legislature of the 9th of December, 1887, instant, that the message of His Majesty the King accompanying the bills and forming the act whereby the royal assent was refused to the bills entitled, respectively, "An act to abolish the office of governor," and "An act to provide for the discharge of certain duties heretofore performed by the governors," which said bills have been dark needed by the logistores in the total control of the said bills have been duly passed by the legislature, is not countersigned by a minister; and

Whereas his majesty's ministers have stated to the legislature that such message and the action based thereon were made without the advice and consent of the cabinet; and

Resolved, That said bills, with the message accompanying them, shall be, and are hereby, through the cabinet forthwith referred back to his majesty for such further or final action as may be necessary; and be it further

Resolved, That a committee of thirteen members of this assembly be appointed to wait upon his majesty with the cabinet, and inform him respectfully of the action of the legislature in the premises.

The resolution was seconded by Noble Waterhouse.

Noble Baldwin moved the resolution be adopted. Seconded by Noble Dole.

Representative Nakaleka moved indefinite postponement.

Noble Castle said: The issue presented is very grave and must be decided only after careful and exhaustive discussion and examination. It calls for a construction by the legislature of the true intent and meaning of the constitution. regretted that so many important matters have been brought forward at this session, when the constitution is young, the legislature inexperienced, and the government hardly in full grasp of the reins of control under the new order of things. But, have it as we would, the issue has arisen and must be decided.

The question is placed before us and we must indicate what, in our opinion, are the limitations upon the power of the King? What are the limitations upon the legislative power? Whose is the legislative power of the kingdom? The honorable member for Molokai, Mr. Nakaleka, resents this as a thrust at the King. He says that we can not compel the King to do or not to do anything. The honorable member must be reminded that in this matter the legislature is not the inferior of the It stands as his equal, and may express its opinion as to the legality and con-

In this country we have had a government which, in the short space of a generation, has progressed from an irresponsible monarchy to the constitutional government of a free people. The constitution and laws of 1839 were a recognition of the exist-ence of rights inherent in the people. The constitution of 1852 admitted still more ence of rights inherent in the people. The constitution of 1852 admitted still more of those rights. The constitution of 1864 was an attempt to abridge and curtail them, and, so long as the administration under that constitution was for the general good of the public, no one suffered and the abridgment of public right was not appreciable. But when the powers and abuse of popular right possible thereunder began to press upon the people, they arose and demanded reformation and recognition of public right. The constitution of July, 1887, is the answer, and by it we have obtained and intend to retain the right to make our own laws and to have a true representative and responsible government.

While our system of constitutional government is in many respects peculiar to ourselves, yet we can not avoid comparison with other countries under the reign of constitutional law. Our system resembles that of Great Britain, the mother of all freedom, rather than that of the United States of America. In the latter no cabinet, as of constitutional right, sits with and as a part of the legislature or Congress. Executive is not represented in any respect in the legislative department. In this country, as in England, the cabinet forms a part of the legislature and is responsible Here the cabinet is not elective, but our present fundamental law expressly, makes the cabinet responsible to the House, and if not in accord, the King must remove them upon a vote of want of confidence. In England the cabinet is composed of elective members of the Parliament, at least as to a portion of them. No cabinet in the United States can be removed by the law-making power. Hish Empire the cabinets are made and unmade by the legislature Here and in the Brit-

The veto power is given by the constitution of each of the United States to the governors, and by that of the Federal Union to the President. That power is frequently exercised. It can be overcome by a two-thirds vote of the legislature, and if such vote can not be obtained and the veto power is exercised contrary to public policy, the people simply wait for a short term, until the expiration of the term of office of the President or governor when another man is elected whose views are in accord with such policy. But no such relief can be had in a constitutional monarchy; the sovereign reigns till death ensues, and in some senses this might be called for-

In England the veto power may be said to exist as one of the prerogatives of the crown, but it has not been exercised since 1707, during the reign of Queen Anne, and, in fact, the power is obsolete. No sovereign of England would dare to nullify the act of the Parliament. It will not and can not be done so long as the principle of responsibility exists. This principle is what our constitution establishes. It is for this that the country arose as one man in June last, and compelled the recognition of these principles in the grant of the new constitution.

Without a review of the growth of this principle of responsible government, we now come to the question of what is the proper construction of our constitution.

Does it not appear to conflict in any of its clauses? The rule of construction must be so exercised as to give force to all of its points if possible. If this requires the limitation of any part, such limitation will be placed upon such part in order that it may have effect. If parts are totally repugnant, the clauses last in time and place will control. These laws are recognized in England and the United States, and are admirable being any in Colorie Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitutions of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the Constitution of the mirably laid down in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, p. 71, etc. With these rules in view, we find that the act of withholding of assent to a bill by the King can be performed by and with the advice and consent of the cabinet, and that without such advice and consent such act can not be exercised without violence to the letter and spirit of the constitution. If the King can by his acts, without the advice of his cabinet, which is responsible, or contrary to such advice, render null the act of the legislature, then we return to the condition from which we escaped in July last, and all of our trouble returns to us again. If our constitution means anything; if responsible government is not a delusion; if we gained anything by our new system, it is that the King acts by and with the advice and consent of the cabinet, and for these reasons I introduced the resolution and advocate its passage.

Representative Paehaole saw nothing in the constitution requiring the King's veto to be countersigned by one of his ministers. He was of opinion that the King had complied with the constitution, and that the ministers were to blame.

Noble Widemann said the introducer of the resolution had evidently convinced himself that his views were correct; but he had failed to convince him, the speaker. veto was a judicial act. Article 41 was intended for executive and not for judicial acts. This resolution is an uncertain solution of the question. When they get the supreme court decision we shall have a full solution of the question.

Representative Pachaole opposed the resolution.

Noble Townsend said: All political power emanates from the people. This is the Anglo-Saxon idea. It is the idea which first developed into political liberty in England. It is the idea which animated the revolutionary fathers in America. idea which led to the downfall of the despotism of the Bourbons of France. It is the idea which has been shaking all Europe periodically for generations. It is the idea which aroused unbounded enthusiasm in the greatest people's meeting ever held in these islands, on the 30th day of last June. This idea is prevailing and has been prevailing over all opposing ideas for ages. Sometimes it prevails quietly, and sometimes amid commotion, as when an unwilling King signed the first great Charter of English liberty at Runnymede. In form King John granted this measure of liberty to the people. In reality he signed the charter as it was presented to him, and that to save his throne, if not to save his life. In early days the opposite feudal idea, that all political power emanates from the throne, was acknowledged as the foundation of the government of these islands. That theory of utter irresponsibility to the people developed the state of affairs which prevailed here just before the memorable mass-meeting. Then the people arose in their might and put down that state of affairs. They not only demanded that incompetent and bad officials be dismissed, but they struck deep at the root of the evil. They demanded that the whole system be changed from its very They demanded of the King-for their request was nothing less than a demand—"(1) That he will not in the future interfere either directly or indirectly with the election of representatives; (2) that he will not interfere with or attempt to unduly influence legislation or legislators; (3) that he will not interfere with the constitutional administration of his cabinet." On the 1st day of July His Majesty answered the people, granting all that they asked. He consented also, specifically, to a new constitution. And why did the people want a new constitution? They wanted the principles which they had demanded so earnestly incorporated into the organic law of the land. We all remember what enthusiasm was displayed on that occasion. Even the most extravagant speeches were applauded, as speeches were never before applauded in this land.

The constitution was promised and the excitement subsided somewhat. But we remember with what deep interest all awaited the appearance of that document. It is an open secret that the work of framing the constitution was given to some of our wisest and shrewdest men, to embody in it the principles which the people had contended for. And they did it. And it was eagerly that the people looked for the result of their work. I remember when the constitution was first printed. I seized a copy of it and spread it on the table and read it through, eagerly looking to see if we had gained our point. I read on and on, seeing little changes—some good, some doubtful. As I approached the end my heart sank within me. At last I came to article 78. It was a shock to me. We had it after all. I felt like the wag who read it through with complaints and maledictions till he came to article 78, when he started up with the exclamation, "I didn't know it was loaded!" It was loaded, Mr. President, and it is loaded yet.

I looked back over the sections and read:

"The King convenes the legislature, etc." "The King has the power to make treaties." "The King coins money, etc." But I found article 30 different in wording from all others. It reads: "It is the King's prerogative to receive and acknowledge public ministers; to inform the legislature by royal message, from time to time, of the state of the Kingdom; and to recommend to its consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." Here are three acts which are said to be the King's prerogative. Now, prerogative simply means irresponsible power. These, then, are the powers for the exercise of which no one can be held responsible. These are the exceptions referred to in article 78. And it is the plain inference from this statement that other powers spoken of are not prerogative.

Article 44 says, "The legislative power of the Kingdom is vested in the King and the legislature, which shall consist of the nobles and representatives sitting together." How comes it that four gentlemen (the ministers) sit opposite me and join in the How comes it that four gentlemen (the ministers) sit opposite me and join in the actions of this house? Are they nobles? Are they representatives? No, they are the cabinet. They have a right to sit in this house under article 42. Does article 42, then, contradict article 44, or does it explain it? It certainly does one or the other. I hold that it simply explains. The gentlemen before me sit as representatives of His Msjesty. It is through them that he exercises his legislative power.

Again, article 42 says "The cabinet hold seats ex officio, in the legislature, with the right to vote, except on a question of want of confidence in them." There is absolutely only one class of questions, then on which they may not yote and the tembraces.

lutely only one class of questions, then, on which they may not vote, and that embraces questions of want of confidence in them and nothing more. Yet article 48 plainly implies that they may not vote on the passage of a bill without the royal signature. The natural and necessary inference from this is that the cabinet is responsible for the exercise of the so-called veto power. If they exercise that power and the legislature votes them down on it, two to one, then it is certainly time for them to step down and out. Article 78 explains how they can be held responsible; for it is utterly unreasonable to hold any set of men responsible for acts not their own. "Wherever by the constitution any act is to be done or performed by the King or the sovereign it shall unless otherwise expressed, mean that such act shall be done and performed by the sovereign by and with the advice and consent of his cabinet." This is the key to the whole constitutional question, and I shall not discuss it further.

Mr. President, nearly all of us are representatives of those who took part in and carried forward the movement of the 30th of June and the early days of July. Those who spoke so fervently and those who applauded so heartily at "the great massmeeting," and those who sustained the movement in other districts, are our constituents. To-day they demand of us that we maintain the principles which they then established. We must not prove false to our great trust. Only one thing more. Where political power is exercised the people will hold the person who exercises it responsible, no matter what a written constitution or written law may say about it. We had an illustration of that on the 30th of June. A man who by the constitution could not be held accountable for his actions, was then and there called to account at the bar of public opinion. And whoever wields political power in this land will be held responsible for it, either at the bar of this house, or in the courts of justice, or at the bar of public opinion. We can not have another 30th of June. We can not have another 1st of July. The occurrences of those days will never be repeated. Any attempt in that line will bring about results disastrous in the extreme. We must guard against whatever looks toward such a thing. For the sake of our constituents, and for the sake of our King, we ought to take a firm stand now and avert future disaster and maintain the peace of the land.

Noble Smith said: This is a question of the right of the King to act in defiance of his cabinet and of the majority of the legislature; of acting on a vital matter. He has attempted to exercise the "veto" power against the advice of his ministers. This is clearly contrary to the constitution. The veto power of the President of the United States has been referred to. Mr. President, the President of the United States has no such irresponsible power as the King seeks to exercise. The President of the United States is elected by the people for a definite period of four years, and if he has not satisfied the people he is not permitted to occupy the Executive seat again.

While he is the President he is the Executive. But how is his power held responsible to the people? Not only by the power of Congress to pass the law over a veto by a two-thirds vote, but he is liable to impeachment at any time.

Our King is not liable to impeachment. His power "is inviolable and sacred." He can not be held responsible in a court. The President of that Great Republic of sixty millions is liable as any citizen.

We have placed our King above responsibility, but for the protection of the people we have given him authority only in conjunction with ministers who are responsible, ministers whom the people can remove at any time.

It is the highest loyalty to seek to save the King from the result of the bad advice he has received.

It is loyalty to the throne, loyalty to the people, and loyalty to ourselves. Those who desire to perpetuate the autonomy and independence of this Kingdom must demand that responsible government be maintained. Responsible government means accountability to the people.

The King is accountable only through the ministers. His person "is inviolable and sacred." His ministers "are responsible."

If he has the power to veto a bill in defiance of his ministers, he has the power to do every other act in defiance of them, and article 78 of the constitution is meaningless.

He can suspend the writ of habeas corpus, make treaties, coin money, etc., and becomes the sole executive power notwithstanding article 31 of the constitution, which states, "To the King and the cabinet belongs the executive power."

It is the old conflict of the throne reaching after prerogatives in opposition to Par-It is the hopeless contest which arbitrary and despotic rulers have waged with the people.

It is hopeless, for the people will prevail in the end.

The King has been influenced by unwise and irresponsible advisers.

It is the height of folly and madness. If the certain as the triumph of right and freedom. If this course is persisted in, the result is as

Of all persons, the Hawaiians in this house should pause and ponder, and with every power seek to influence the King to reconsider his action and recall his ill-advised Their hope, the national existence of the Hawaiian people, depends on the preservation of responsible government.

The merits of the bills which were returned to the house are lost from view in the magnitude of the issue involved in the course adopted by the King.

There was no uncertainty as to the meaning of the demand of the people on the 30th of June, "that he will not interfere with the constitutional administration of his cabinet."

There was no uncertainty in the King's response: "We reply that the specific pledges required of us are each severally acceded to."

There is no uncertainty as to the meaning of article 78 of the constitution, requiring the "advice and consent of the cabinet" to every act to be "done or performed by the King," and there is no uncertainty as to the final result of the issue now raised by the King and his unwise advisers.

The people had power to make the new constitution, but if they have not the power to maintain it in its integrity and purity, the independence of these islands is doomed-

Not by way of threat, but to call attention to one of the peaceable remedies which the people, through their representatives, may be compelled to assert, I say that if the reasonable request of this resolution is not heeded, this house will have to consider the course to pursue in regard to the appropriation bill at the regular session. The rights of the people must be preserved.

had the "divine right" to do as he pleased.

The minister reviewed the history of prerogative down to the constitution of 1852, and the kings who ruled under it until the beginning of the present reign. People did not feel the weight of prerogative until then. Even since the accession of the present monarch the prerogative has been gaining ground. Session after session of the legislature produced new laws enlarging the King's powers, until at length the majority of the legislature became a set of puppets.

Coming to the present constitution, his excellency stated that the golden thread running through the whole document was "responsible government." His idea of responsible government was that no one could be invested with any power whatever unless he was responsible for his acts to the people. It is absurd for us to assert that we have a responsible government if our legislative acts are to be abrogated by a personal veto

The honorable member referred to the tremendous opposition in the British Islands to the coercion act, but there was no veto heard of in connection with it. The New England colonies resisted the King's power on the principle of "No representation, no taxation," although the whole amount of their tax was only £80 a year. Our rallying cry must be, "No responsibility, no power," and we must insist upon that idea being carried out.

The principles contended for by the American revolutionists are the same principles that we are called upon to maintain to-day. The question before us is as important to us as the issue of the Revolution of 1776 was to those engaged in it.

The gauntlet of prerogative was thrown down to us about the first of the year, when we were asked, "What are you going to do about it?" We took it up and showed what we meant to do about it. Now the gauntlet is thrown down again, and it remains to be seen what we can do about it.

HAWAII. 843

Noble Widemann said that there is no use in our discussing what we would like to have in the constitution. The matter ought to be referred to the supreme court; that was the proper place to have it settled. He moved the question "Whether the King has the right of veto without the advice of his ministers" be referred to the supreme court.

Representative Kauhi could see nothing in the constitution or laws requiring the appointment of a committee as proposed in this resolution.

Minister Green said that for the past six years there had been constant trouble caused by the King acting contrary to his ministers and to the legislature. Legislatures had indorsed ministers and the King had next day turned them out. He is prevented from doing this to-day, but he is vetoing a bill contrary to the cabinet and the legislature together. It might be said that he ought not to speak in this way, being a minister, but there were times when one ought not to keep back what ought to be said. He wished to be friendly with the King, as he had always been. But there was no friendship in not telling him the whole truth and placing before him the facts as they stand. If there are friends of the King in the house, he would say to them that there are difficulties ahead of his majesty which he does not foresee if he takes a position opposed to the legislature and rejects the advice of his ministers. His taking a position of antagonism to the legislature and the ministers is fraught with the greatest danger to the whole country. Whether the step proposed in this resolution is the best one to take he was not prepared to say, but he hoped the legislature would take some means of effectively advising his majesty to take a course different from that he had taken.

Representative Kinney said that the house had committed itself and the ministers had committed themselves. We are all in the stream. Let us carry this thing through. About submitting this question to the supreme court; whatever the supreme court may decide this house is equal to them and must give its voice on the question. If we draw back from this resolution, we indicate that his majesty is equal to two-thirds of the house and two-thirds of the country. By this resolution we give advice as to how his Kingdom can go on. The committee of thirteen can go to his majesty and present this resolution as the will of this house, from which the house will not go back. How do honorable members who oppose the appointment of a committee propose to send this resolution; in a wheelbarrow? He would not vote for the resolution if it meant for the committee to go over to the palace and wrangle. It is a weak, pitiable, and miserable move for the house to attempt to hide itself behind the supreme court. The judges of the supreme court can not help us. He did not want to indulge in personalities about the King, nor he did not believe in currying favor with the King. He would acknowledge all the rights of the King, but he would expect the King to treat us like men. If this thing goes on there will be a continuous personal friction between the King and the people. If his majesty means by this act that he has the right of veto as in former years, it means that the will of the King will be the will of any rascal that can sneak in at the back door and gain the King's ear. The King has not heard much of a rumble yet, but if this and other bills are vetoed and the vetoes can not be overcome by a two-thirds vote, there will be a noise that will be a torment to King and people. We mean that the King shall stay on his throne and we will settle our own affairs.

Noble Young said it was all but impossible to get twelve men to agree on a small matter, and it is no wonder if all the members of this house can not agree on a great matter. He thanked God he had not so much legal education as some lawyers. Any one can see what this constitution means, but no one can see it who does not want to. He wished to say to Hawaiians in the house that it was his desire to maintain them in their rights. He wanted to make it impossible for any miserable sneaks to be continually crawling about the King, to overturn the throne and the King with it. Until within the past few days his majesty understood this article of the constitution precisely as we did. If God would take care of the King's false friends he might take care of his enemies himself. About abiding by the decisions of the supreme court; if this were given to two lawyers, one would say it was white, the other that it was black. But this pamphlet, the constitution, is plain reading. The object of the revolution was to prevent King Kalakaua from running this nation to destruction without putting some break upon him. The intention of the reform was that the King reign over us by the advice of his ministers. It was to put him in such a position as to prevent him from perpetrating acts such as those of late years, which would have involved the destruction of the county and himself. His majesty has the respect of the community only so long as he will abide by the constitution.

Dr. Wight said: If he was not strongly opposed to the previous question he should have moved it heretofore. The longer they talked the hotter they became. He deprecated the intemperate language that had been used. Civility was a cheap commodity, and it was with profound regret he heard the language used by the member for Hamakua.

Representative Kinney rose to a question of privilege, saying he was unaware that his language was intemperate.

Noble Wight considered the honorable member's language partook of a threat. Civility was a cheap commodity; therefore, the question should be put as soon as possible. He did not consider the King was singular in the construction he put upon the constitution. He looked upon the matter in the same light as his majesty. It would be extremely hard to come down upon the King for standing up for his privileges. He was quite in accord with the mover of the resolutions as to sending a committee to represent, if it was so deemed, that the King had been maladvised.

The motion to indefinitely postpone the resolution was put and lost.

The motion to refer to the supreme court was lost.

The resolution was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Green G. Brown, Thurston, Ashford, Robinson, Young, Jaeger, Castle, Smith, Waterhouse, Foster, Wight, Notly, Wall, Townsend, Baldwin, Bailey, G. N. Wilcox, Dole, Hustace, Dowsett, jr.; Kalaukoa, Kinney, Helekunihi, Kawainui, A. S. Wilcox, Rice, and Gay—28.

Noes—Richardson, Campbell, Widemann, Naone, Kauhi, C. Brown, F. Brown, Kamai, Kamauoha, Nakaleka, and Paehaole—11.

The following were appointed committee of thirteen: Nobles Castle, Baldwin, Wilcox, Wight, Robinson, and Representatives Kinney, Kamauoha, Rice, F. Brown, Naone, Kamai, Gay, Dowsett, jr.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolula, December 16, 1887. (Received January 3.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that on the 26th ultimo the announcement by His Excellency Godfrey Brown, His High Majesty's minister of foreign affairs, to the legislative assembly that the supplementary convention extending the reciprocity treaty for a term of seven years had been concluded, was received with marked manifestations of approval.

On the 7th instant a member of the legislature propounded several questions to his majesty's cabinet, principally directed to the ascertainment of the facts upon which was based the statement, in the speech of his majesty at the opening of the legislature, to the effect that article 2 of the supplementary convention is conterminous with the treaty of reciprocity, to which the minister of foreign affairs replied at length on the following day.

The question and the reply thereto I inclose herewith.

I have, etc.,

GEO. W. MERRILL.

Extract from legislative proceedings December 7, 1887.—Pearl River Harbor.

Representative Daniels propounded the following questions to the cabinet: In His Majesty's address to the legislature it is stated that the exclusive privilege granted to the United States of maintaining a coaling station at Pearl River Harbor is coterminal with the reciprocity treaty. Was the information given to His Majesty by the cabinet ministers?

If not, by whom was it given?

Which clause of the treaty warrants the making of such statement?

If no clause of the treaty warrants the statement, will the minister of foreign affairs explain to the house upon what facts it is founded?

Did the minister of foreign affairs state to Her Britannic Majesty's commissioner that such cession of privilege was coterminal with the reciprocity treaty?

Is the action of the cabinet in respect of this cession not calculated to create treaty complications with the other great powers?

Does the ratification by the Hawaiian Government of the treaty contain any saving clause against misconstruction of Article II of the same, so as to show that the cession of Pearl River Harbor is not perpetual?

At 12 o'clock the house took a recess.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 159.]

Extract from legislative proceedings December 8, 1887.—Pearl River Harbor.

Minister Brown presented the following statement:

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS. Honolulu, December 8, 1887.

Hon. S. G. WILDER,

President Legislature, 1887:

SIR: In reply to the honorable member for Wailuku (Hon. W. H. Daniels) I have the honor to state that the paragraph in His Majesty's address to the legislature was founded upon the information received and the advice given to His Majesty by His Majesty's ministers. The paragraph referred to says that "after mature deliberation and the interchange between my Government and that of the United States of an interpretation of the said clause whereby it is agreed and understood that it does not cede any territory or part with or impair any right of sovereignty or jurisdiction on the part of the Hawaiian Kingdom, and that such exclusive privilege is coterminous with the treaty," and that "the treaty of reciprocity with the United States of America had been definitely extended for seven years upon the same terms as those in the original treaty.

The notes exchanged between Mr. Carter and Mr. Bayard in regard to the construction and interpretation of the United States Senate amendment were accepted as sufficient to justify His Majesty's Government, relying upon the good faith of the United States in adopting the amendment. These notes are hereafter referred to.

On October 19, 1887, I had the honor to state to Her Britannic Majesty's commissioner, in a dispatch to him on this subject, that "all rights, the sovereignty and independence of this Kingdom are to be conserved, and moreover the privilege sought for by the so-called Pearl Harbor clause is to be coterminous with the reciprocity treaty."

Since, under article 4 of the original convention of 1875, such a privilege could not have been conceded to any other power, the status of other nations possessing treaties with Hawaii is unchanged by the preferential character of the article, and in no other respect has any preference been given which has not hitherto been enjoyed by the United States.

There is no "saving clause" in the ratification by the Hawaiian Government against "misconstruction." The reliance is placed upon the good faith of the United States Government to adhere to the notes of interpretation through which the exchange of ratifications was agreed upon. In the event of any doubt appearing as to the true intent and meaning of any clause or part of a treaty notes explanatory thereof have been exchanged prior to ratification, and these notes have afterwards been held to give the true interpretation of the clause held to be vague or ambiguous. There are precedents for this course and in the notes exchanged between His Majesty's minister plenipotentiary at Washington and the honorable Secretary of State prior to the exchange of ratifications, which I have had the honor to place before the legislature, Mr. Carter says: "The amendment which you now officially communicate to me was inserted into the convention in secret session of the Senate, and no opportunity was given for mutual consultation and consideration of its terms; consequently my Government has had no part in its construction, and could not have suggested any changes in its wording to guard against misapprehension. Under these circumstances it becomes proper in me, before transmitting it to my Government, to ascertain the views of the Government of the United States as to the construction proper to be put upon the interpolated article,

"The first question of construction has reference to the effect of the license or right to enter the harbor of Pearl River upon the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian Government over the harbor. It would seem to be clear that the question of Hawaiian jurisdiction is left untouched by the article, and that in the event of the United States availing itself of the right stipulated for, the autonomous control of the Hawaiian Government remains the same as its control over other harbors in the group where national vessels may be, except that the article, in accordance with Article IV of the existing convention, prevents the Hawaiian Government from granting similar exclusive privileges during the continuance of the convention to any other nation."

"As no especial jurisdiction is stipulated for in the article inserted by the Senate it can not be inferred from anything in the article that it was the intention of the Senate to invade the autonomous jurisdiction of Hawaii, and to transfer the absolute property in and jurisdiction over the harbor to the United States.

"To satisfy the natural and proper susceptibilities of Hawaiians, of which I have heretofore informed you strong intimations have emanated from those charged with the administration of my Government with their communications to me, I take occasion to say that I consider it probable that my Government will desire that its understanding of the article in this respect shall be made known to the Government of the United States.

"Another point which to some minds may be left in doubt would be the duration of the license or right granted by the interpolated article.

"The article mentions no special term for continuance of the privileges, but as the whole and only purpose of the convention into which the article was inserted was, as stated in its preamble, to fix the definite limitation of the duration of the existing convention providing for the reciprocal exchange of privileges, to which this privilege is added by virtue of this interpolated article, it follows in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary that its term of duration would be the same as that fixed for the other privileges given by the original convention.

"The only excuse for the insertion of such an article into a treaty of this nature would be its relevancy to the privileges stipulated for in the original convention of 1875, to which this is supplementary, and the duration of which this convention is intended to limit and define.

No separate single article or part of a treaty can be held to have a continuing power apart from the rest of the treaty unless provided for in specific terms. supplementary provisions and the original provisions which they effect are necessarily merged into one instrument, to be dealt with throughout as a whole.

"It could not have been expected in the Senate that Hawaii would consent to a perpetual grant of the privilege sought in return for a seven years' extension of the treaty of 1875, especially in view of the danger of a material lessening of the advantages to Hawaii by changes in the tariff laws of the United States, and it must be apparent that if any different term of duration was intended it would have been stipulated for, as it can not be thought that the Senate had any other intent than that plainly set forth.

"Therefore the conclusion which I have reached, and which I think is the obvious conclusion to be drawn from the words of the interpolated article, is that it does not and is not intended to invade or diminish in any way autonomous jurisdiction of Hawaii, while giving to the United States the exclusive rights of use in Pearl Harbor stipulated therein for the sole purposes stated in the article, and further, that the Article II of the convention and the privilege conveyed by it will cease and determine with the termination of the treaty of 1875, under the conditions fixed by this conven-

"I apprehend that my Government will agree with my conclusions, and that in considering the advisability of ratifying the convention with this amendment inserted by the United States Senate, my sovereign will doubtless be aided in coming to a favorable conclusion if it shall be found that on these questions in interpretation of the convention the two Governments do not differ, and the Hawaiian Government will doubtless desire that their understanding, which I believe I have set forth in this note, shall be fully understood by the Government of the United States before ratifications are exchanged."

To which note Secretary Bayard replied as follows:

"The amendment relating to the harbor of Pearl River was adopted in the executive session by the Senate, and I have no other means of arriving at its extent and meaning than the words employed naturally import.

No ambiguity or obscurity in that amendment is observable, and I can discern therein no subtraction from Hawaiian sovereignty over the harbor to which it relates, nor any language importing a longer duration for the interpolated Article II than is provided for in Article I of the supplementary convention.

"The limitations of my official powers do not make it competent for me in this connection to qualify, expand, or explain the amendments ingrafted on that convention by the Senate, but in the present case I am unable to perceive any need for auxiliary interpretation or ground for doubt as to the plain scope and meaning thereof, and as the President desires a ratification of the supplementary convention in its present shape I can see no cause for misapprehension by your Government for the manifest effect and meaning of the amendment in question.

"I therefore trust that it will be treated as it is tendered, in simple good faith, and accepted without doubt or hesitation."

As the notes above referred to are regarded as being a correct interpretation of the construction of the amendment His Majesty's Government have accepted them in reliance that the United States Government will sustain the expressions of opinion of the present Secretary of State.

Respectfully submitted.

GODFREY BROWN. Minister of Foreign Affairs.

[Extract ]

No. 160.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolulu, December 17, 1887. (Received January 3, 1888.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of a bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Hawaiian Government to contract for the construction of international and interisland submarine telegraph cables," which has passed the legislature and received the approval of His Majesty the King.

The printed text is the original bill and the interlineations, in red ink,* represent the amendments adopted.

The original bill was in the interest of Mr. Audley Coote and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it being suggested that it might be desirable to have a cable reach these islands from some point on the coast of the United States, the exclusive right and privilege to land a cable reaching to or from any foreign nation was stricken out and confined to British territory, which, with other amendments adopted, it is now stated by the friends of the original bill render it valueless to Mr. Coote, and it is probable he will not care to enter into a contract with the Hawaiian Government under the provisions of this bill.

There is a strong popular feeling here in favor of connecting these islands with the North American continent by cable and of rendering financial aid in the work.

My observations convince me that a telegraph cable, under the control of American citizens, connecting these islands and America, with a terminus on the coast of the United States, would be of great value to this country and our interests here, by reason of its influence in quieting the unrest natural to a segregated, ocean-bound community, confined to a limited area, and by bringing the people in daily contact with affairs in the United States and the world at large.

I have, etc.,

GEO. W. MERRILL.

AN ACT to authorize the [Hawaiian Government] to contract for the construction of international and interisland submarine electric telegraph cables.

Whereas it is desirable to establish, as soon as practicable, telegraphic communication between this Kingdom and the North American continent, and the Australasian colonies of Great Britain, and between the different islands of this Kingdom;

And whereas [certain persons are] now engaged in the perfecting of plans for the construction and maintenance of a telepraphic cable or cables from some point on the North American continent, through the Pacific Ocean, to certain of the Australasian colonies of Great Britain:

And whereas it seems necessary to the speedy establishment of such communication with foreign shores that the parties establishing the same shall be granted certain exclusive rights as to the landing of telegraphic cables on our shores: Now, therefore.

Be it enacted by the King and the legislature of the Hawaiian Kingdom, Sec. 1. The minister of finance, [with the concurrence of all the members of the cabinet, ] is hereby authorized to enter into a contract with the honorable Audley Coote, of Tasmania, his associates and assigns, [or with any other persons or corporations,] for the construction and laying of a submarine electric cable, from and between some point on the North American continent and some point upon one of the islands of this Kingdom, and for the construction and laying of a like cable or cables between the different islands of this Kingdom, in substance as hereinafter provided.

ferent islands of this Kingdom, in substance as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. Such contract may by its terms provide for the grant, concession, and confirmation by the Hawaiian Government, to the honorable Audley Coote, his associates and assigns, [or any other persons or corporations] (hereinafter named and referred to as said constructors), of the sole and exclusive right and privilege to construct or and a submarine telegraph cable or cables which shall reach to or from any [British possession or colony] upon the shores of any island of the Hawaiian group for or during a period not exceeding three years from the first day of [January, 1888.]

ing a period not exceeding three years from the first day of [January, 1888.]

Provided, however, That if the said minister of finance, at any time after the first day of August, 1889, shall [require] assurances from such constructors that such cable shall be completed from some point on the North American continent to some island of the Hawaiian group, not later than the first day of August, 1890, and the said constructors, upon such request being made, shall fail to give such assurances in that behalf as shall be satisfactory to the Hawaiian Government, then the exclusive right and privilege, the grant of which is hereinbefore authorized, shall, at the option of the said [cabinet,] at once, or at any time thereafter, lapse and become void, upon notice to that effect being given to the said constructors.

notice to that effect being given to the said constructors.

And further provided, That the concession and grant hereinbefore authorized shall not be so construed as to disable, prevent, or preclude the Hawaiian Government from consenting to the laying or landing through its waters, or upon its shores, of any submarine telegraph or other electric cable or cables which, during the period of three years hereinbefore mentioned, shall be constructed or laid, or sought to be constructed or laid, or landed upon Hawaiian shores, by or on behalf of any foreign nation or power.

SEC. 3. Such contract may further provide for the payment by the Hawaiian Government to said constructors of an annual subsidy not to exceed twenty thousand dollars in legal tender of the Hawaiian Kingdom, for and during a period not to exceed fifteen years from the date of the establishment, over such cable, of telegraphic communication between the city of Honolulu and some point on the North American continent: Provided, That such communication shall be established not later than the first day of [January, 1891.]

Sec. 4. The grant of any of the rights or privileges and the payment of any subsidy hereinbefore authorized shall be conditioned upon the covenants of said constructors, to be expressed in such contract. [that is to say]—

ors, to be expressed in such contract, [that is to say]—
(1) That during such period after the establishment of telegraphic communication by and over such cable between Honolulu and the North American continent as the minister of finance shall pay such subsidy as is hereinbefore authorized, the messages of or for the Hawaiian Government shall be received and transmitted and delivered by and over such cable free of charge: Provided, kowever, That if the expense of so receiving, transmitting, and delivering such messages, when computed at [half] the rate at which, when such messages shall be transmitted, ordinary press messages shall be transmitted over such cable, shall exceed the amount of the annual subsidy paid or contracted to be paid as hereinbefore authorized for any year, then the excess of such expense shall be paid by the said minister of finance to said constructors.

(2) That said constructors shall not make or form or permit any combination, pool, or other agreement with any other person, body, company, or syndicate who or which shall hereafter own or operate any cable or cables through or across either the Indian or Pacific Ocean to or from the Australasian colonies of Great Britain, or to or from the Hawaiian Kingdom, the effect or purpose of which combination, pool, or other agreement shall be to advance or increase the rates of telegraphy to or from the Hawaiian Islands, by or over any cable which shall be laid or constructed to or from the Hawaiian Islands by the said constructors.

(3) That the rates for the transmission of messages to and from the Hawaiian Islands by and over any cable which shall be laid or constructed by said constructors shall not exceed the following-described limit, that is to say:

(4) For all messages other than Hawaiian Government and press messages, to or fro between the point of such cable's connection with the American telegraph system and Honolulu, not more than forty per cent. of the rates which shall be charged for like messages over such cable to or fro between said American point and any point in New Zealand or Australia.

(5) For like messages to or fro between Honolulu and the point or points of such cable's connection with either the New Zealand or the Australian telegraph systems not more than sixty per cent. of the rate which shall be charged for like message, over such cable to or fro between either said New Zealand point or said Australian point and said American point.

(6) The rates for ordinary messages or items of news to any newspaper or news bureau of the Hawaiian Kingdom (commonly known as press messages) [shall not exceed one-half the rate which shall be charged for other messages, excepting] messages to or from the Hawaiian Government or any [officer] thereof, in his official capacity.

(7) All messages other than Hawaiian Government and press messages shall be transmitted at and for one and the same rate.

(8) In no case or instance shall any message over such cable, to or fro between the Hawaiian Islands and any foreign port or point, be charged for at a greater or higher rate than shall prevail in the case of a like message over such cable to or from any other point equally or more remote from Honolulu.

SEC. 5. Such contract shall further provide and contain, as a part of the considera-tion for the grants and subsidy hereinbefore authorized, a covenant on the part of said constructors to furnish, and within six months after the completion of said cable [and the] establishment of telegraphic communication thereover to any American or Australasian point or port, at their own proper charge and expense to lay and construct a cable or series of cables to connect the islands of the Hawaiian group from Hawaii to Kauai, as follows, to wit: From Hawaii to Maui, from Maui to Oahu with a landing on Molokai, and from Oahu to Kauai.

SEC. 6. Such interisland cable or cables shall be landed upon such islands, in such reasonable manner, and at such points as shall be designated by the cabinet and when so laid, constructed, and landed, shall be delivered to the minister of the interior for and to the use of the Hawaiian Government, at a price not to exceed the actual cost of such cable or cables delivered on board ship at the place of its or their manufact-

Sec. 7. Said constructors shall be entitled to the use, at a rate not to exceed the usual local rates, of any such interisland cable or cables, together with any and all shore-lines connecting the same, for transmission of messages to and fro between Hon-olulu and the point or points of the landing of their international cable or cables.

SEC. 8. Upon the construction and delivery to the minister of [the interior] of such interisland cable or cables as provided by sections 5 and 6 of this act, and the establishment of telegraphic communication thereover, the minister [of finance] shall be authorized to pay said contractors the actual cost price thereof, to be computed as provided in section 6 of this act.

No. 161.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolulu, December 20, 1887. (Received January 3, 1888.)

SIR: Regarding the question of the constitutional right of his majesty the King to exercise the veto power, submitted to the justices of the supreme court, and referred to in my dispatch No. 158, of the 15th instant, I have the honor to inform you that the four judges are equally divided in opinion, and have informed his majesty that they are unable to advise him in the matter, thus leaving the Legislature and the King directly opposed in the interpretation of the constitution regarding the veto power.

On yesterday, the 19th instant, the King, still adhering to his interpretation of the constitution, returned to the Legistature two more bills. with his objections thereto, which the Legislature decided to treat as only an attempt to veto, claiming that all bills returned unsigned without the consent of the cabinet ministers would become laws by virtue of not being legitimately returned to the Legislature within ten days after presentation to his majesty for approval.

There was no discussion on the subject yesterday, and the matter was quietly disposed of when the Legislature proceeded to consider other

Judging from information received, I am of the opinion that it is the purpose of the adherents of the doctrine promulgated by the Legislature to solve the constitutional problem by the appointment of a fifth judge, filling a vacancy caused by the death of Judge Fornander.

Although there is considerable feeling in the community concerning the differences between the King and the Legislature, yet at this time the indications are that a peaceful settlement through the courts will be obtained.

Every precaution possible is taken, by quietly providing for any emergency; but it is now believed that the special session of the Legislature will adjourn sine die to-night, or to-morrow at the latest, and when the vacancy in the supreme court is filled doubtless the legality of the acts vetoed by the King will be constitutionally tested.

I inclose herewith extracts of legislative proceedings of the 19th instant, giving in full the messages of the King accompanying the returned bills and legislative action thereon.

Extract from legislative proceedings December 19, 1887.—More vetoed bills.

The president reported the following messages from the King:

The Hon. S. G. WILDER,

President of the Legislative Assembly of the Kingdom:

SIR: The "act to render unlawful the granting of license for the vending of spirituous liquors at retail in any district of the Hawaiian kingdom, other than Honolulu, in the island of Oahu," I have returned without my signature, for the following

(1) This measure is not calculated to prohibit or restrict the sale of spirituous liquors throughout the kingdom; it will simply re-establish the illicit traffic in such liquors which existed before the issuing of country licenses, and impose on some sections of the country a restraint from which another is free.

(2) Whatever evils may result from allowing such sales, legislation should not make a distinction between one place and another in any general measure, such as sanctioning the sale of liquor, but if it is deemed that the country will be benefited thereby, such sales should be prohibited throughout the kingdom, so that all appearance of class legislation may be avoided.

(3) If the people of a district in this kingdom desire such legislation, provision should be made for them to signify that desire by a vote regularly east as in other elections, and the will of the majority in such district should direct the policy of the Government as to the issuing or withholding a license.

In view of the foregoing we withhold our signature from this bill.

Done at our palace at Iolani Hale this — of December, A. D. 1887.

KALAKAUA REX.

851 HAWAII.

The Hon. S. G. WILDER,

President of the Legislative Assembly of the Kingdom:

SIR: The objection I have to "An act to provide for the regulation of the internal police of the kingdom" is as follows:

First. It is not particularly necessary that the attorney-general shall have the care, supervision, and control of the entire internal police of the kingdom further than is provided under the present statutes of the kingdom.

Second. Neither is it politic that the appointment of the marshal should be through so many ramifications of offices and place it under approval, first, of the executive, and finally the judiciary, instead of its proper place, the executive. A more serious objection to the bill is that of the power of dismissal given to the attorney-general, but no authority of appointment; such authority, being distributed, places the attorneygeneral and the execution of his power in this respect in an anomalous position, and renders the office of command over the police nugatory.

Third. The enjoyment of emoluments or fees by the marshal or sheriffs, other than their salaries, should have been discontinued.

Fourth. No provision is provided for the responsibility of the police under the attorney-general as a reponsible head; neither are there codes or regulations for a more perfect system of administration and discipline, as intended by the policy of the Government, expressed in the address from the throne.

Fifth. A more careful consideration is necessary to carry out the full intent and policy of the Government, and it is advisable that the bill should lie over for the next regular session of the Legislature, so as to give time for further and more ample deliberation upon a law of so much importance.

I have therefore withheld my signature from this bill.

Done at our palace at Iolani Hale this — day of December, A. D. 1887.

KALAKAUA REX.

The president read a further communication from his majesty, in which he stated that the constitutional question of his right to an absolute veto had been submitted to the supreme court, but that the justices had been unable to agree; that he still adhered to the terms of his former message of the 2d instant, and that the acts in question were again returned to the house to take such further action thereon as might be deemed advisable.

Noble Baldwin asked the ministers if the veto message was countersigned by a minister, or if the action taken by the King thereon was by and with the advice of Minister Green answered that the ministers had advised the signing of all the bills passed; no minister's name is countersigned on the veto; the ministers knew nothing about this veto and were not consulted.

Noble Castle regretted that the supreme court has not given a decision on this nestion. The house, however, had declared its opinion. He moved the following: Resolved, That the message of the King accompanying the bills en itled respectively as below specified be laid upon the table; and that said bills, under the principle declared in the resolution adopted by this Legislature on Monday, 12th instant, do go upon their usual and ordinary course, becoming law at the expiration of ten days from the date of presentation to the King.

Specification .- An act to render unlawful the granting of licenses for the vending of spirituous liquors at retail in any district of the Hawaiian Kingdom other than Honolulu, in the island of Oahu; an act to provide for and regulate the internal police of the kingdom.

Representative C. Brown asked for a ruling of the chair if this mode of procedure is within the rules of the house, citing rule 70.

Noble Castle said that according to the resolution of Monday the message from the King is no veto.

The chair said that no rule of the house particularly applies to the position in which it is now placed. Rule 70 does not. It is in the power of the house to say what course shall be taken.

Noble Young moved that the resolution be adopted.

Representative Kamauoha moved indefinite postponement.

Noble Dole moved the previous question.

Indefinite postponement was put and lost.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Noble Castle moved the following:

Resolved, That the order of the day assigned for to-day, the same being the consideration of his majesty's message relating to the bills entitled "An act to abolish the office of governor," and "An act to provide for the discharge of certain duties heretofore performed by the governors of the different islands," be laid upon the table, said matter having been disposed of by resolution adopted on Monday, the 12th instant, and that said bills do take their usual course, becoming law at the expiration of ten days from the date of presentation to the King.

Representative Paehaole moved that the vetoed bills be taken from the table and considered. Lost, 14 to 22.

Noble Castle's motion was adopted.

ANOTHER VETO.

The president read the following message:

The Hon. S. G. WILDER,

President of the Legislative Assembly of the Kingdom:

SIR: My objection to an "act relating to the military forces of the kingdom" is as follows, viz:

First. The King being commander-in-chief of the army and navy under the constitution, he, with the advice and consent of his ministers, frames and creates the organization of the military force. What is required of the Legislature is to authorize It can not be intended that the Legislature is to deprive the Executive of this special function.

Second. The present law, as passed by the assembly, is an anomaly in many respects. No provision is made for authorizing courts-martial; for the declaration of martial law; and as many incongruities exist therein, it will render the law inoperative.

Third. Volunteer organizations are not an integral part of a government institution, and consequently can not be admitted as being within the purview of the constitution. Such organizations are better placed under the supervision of the governors than under the officers of the regular military organization.

Fourth. I do not deem it desirable or advisable that an organization of the military forces of the kingdom be done hastily and by direct organization of the Legislature without consultation or deliberation with the Executive, under whose charge the department belongs. It is advisable that this bill lie over for the next regular session of the Legislature. A measure of such importance should have careful consideration.

We therefore withhold our signature from this bill. Done at our palace at Iolani Hale this 19th day of December, A. D. 1887.

KALAKAUA REX.

Noble Castle asked if the royal assent to this bill had been refused by and with the advice of the cabinet.

Minister Green said it was not. The cabinet had not been consulted in the matter. Noble Castle then moved a resolution of precisely the same terms as the resolution on the veto messages in the forenoon.

The ayes and noes were called on the resolution, when there appeared:
Ayes—Green, Thurston, Ashford, Robinson, Young, Jaeger, Castle, Smith, Waterhouse, Foster, Wight, Notley, Wall, Townsend, Hitchcock, Baldwin, Bailey, G. N. Wilcox, Bertelmann, Dole, Hustace, Dowsett jr., Deacon, Kinney, Paris, Horner, Kawainui, A. S. Wilcox, Rice, Gay—30.

Noes—Luhiau, Naone, Kauhi, C. Brown, F. Brown, Maguire, Kamauoha, Daniels, Helekunihi, Paehaole—10.

The resolution was adopted. The house adjourned to 10 o'clock Tuesday morning.

No. 613.

Mr. Merrill to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. No. 168.] Honolulu, February 10, 1888. (Received February 27.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of the decision of the supreme court of Hawaii, rendered on the 6th instant, sustaining the personal independent right of veto, as claimed under the constitution by his majesty the King.

Four of the judges concur in the opinion, and the late appointee, Judge S. B. Dole, dissents.

HAWAII. 853

The decision was received by the community without much comment, and has not created any unusual agitation.

Contrary to the predictions of some, who desired a different decision, the political affairs of the country are quiet, and no valid reason now appears why the present condition should not continue.

I am informed that the Legislature will not assemble until May next, when it will convene in regular session.

I have, etc.

GEO. W. MERRILL.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 168.]

Supreme court decision.

The supreme court sat in banco yesterday, and rendered judgment in the cause of T. W. Everett vs. Hoapili Baker. The decision, in which Associate Justices McCully, Preston, and Bickerton concurred, was read by Chief-Justice Judd. Associate Justice Dole read a dissenting opinion.

The preamble of the court's finding sets forth that Thomas W. Everett, of Wailuku, in the Island of Maui, respectfully represents unto this honorable court as follows, to wit:

(1) That he is sheriff of the said Island of Maui, duly appointed and commissioned, and in the discharge of the duties of said office.

(2) That the above-named defendant, Robert Hoapili Baker, was, prior to and during the 31st day of December, 1887, the duly commissioned governor of the said island of Maui, and in the discharge of the duties and in the possession of all books and records theretofore and then preserved in and as a part of and belonging to the said office of governor.

(3) That by virtue of a statute passed by the Hawaiian Legislature at its extraordinary session in 1887, entitled, "An act to provide for the discharge of certain duties heretofore performed by the governors of the different islands," it became the duty of the defendant to transfer and deliver to the sheriff of the said island of Maui certain records of the office of said governor of Maui, to wit, the records relating to the administration of oaths and the taking of depositions; the selection and construction of pounds and the appointment and removal of pound-masters; the certification of impressions of brands and marks; the control, preservation, and disposition of wrecks and wreckages; the shipping and discharge of seamen, and the testing certification of weights and measures.

(4) That demand has been made upon said defendant at divers times since the 31st day of December, 1887, to so transfer and deliver to this plaintiff the records aforementioned, but that the said defendant utterly neglected and refused, and doth still, although said records are now detained by him, the said defendant, neglect and refuse to transfer and deliver the same, or any thereof, to this plaintiff.

(5) That plaintiff is advised and believes that the possession of said records by this plaintiff is necessary to the due administration of the duties of his said office, and if plaintiff should be confined to the ordinary legal forms for the purpose of obtaining the custody of such said records, the slowness of such ordinary legal forms would be likely to produce such delay that the public good and the administration of the law would suffer therefrom.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays that there issue out of and under the seal of this honorable court an alternative writ of mandamus, to be directed to the said defendant, Robert Hoapili Baker, commanding him, within a certain time to be therein named, to transfer and deliver to this plaintiff the records aforesaid, or that in default of such delivery he shall show cause to this honorable court, at a time to be in said writ specified, why a peremptory writ of mandate should not issue against him, peremptorily commanding him to transfer and deliver the said records to this-plaintiff; and that in default of defendant's showing such cause such peremptory writ, as aforesaid, may issue to and against said defendant.

The answer to the foregoing avers that now comes Robert Hoapili Baker, the abovenamed defendant, and makes this his answer and return to the writ in the above-entitled cause, and says:

(1) That he admits that Thomas W. Everett is sheriff of the island of Maui, duly appointed and commissioned, and in the discharge of the duties of said office.

(2) That he admits that he was, prior to the 31st of December, 1887, and says he now is, the duly-commissioned governor of the island of Maui, and in possession of the records of said office.

(3) That he denies that there is in existence any law of this Kingdom which requires him to transfer and deliver to the sheriff of the said island of Maui certain records of the office of said governor of Maui, to wit, the records relating to the administration of oaths and the taking of depositions, the selection and construction of pounds and the appointment and removal of pound-masters, the certification of impressions of brands and marks, the control, preservation, and disposition of wrecks and wreckages, the shipping and discharge of seamen, and the testing and certification of weights and measures.

(4) That he admits that the demand has been made since the 31st day of December, 1887, to so transfer and deliver to the plaintiff the records aforementioned.

And this defendant further answering, says that he was commissioned as governor of said island of Maui on the 4th day of October, A. D. 1886, and can only be removed from said office by impeachment.

Wherefore he prays that said petition be dismissed, with costs.

DECISION.

The certificate attached to the act under consideration makes it known that the act was returned by the King unsigned, with a message setting forth certain reasons why he refused to sign the same, and that such message was not countersigned by a minister, and that His Majesty's act in so returning the same was done without the advice and consent of the cabinet, and that the legislature considered that this was not a refusal, or veto as popularly styled, within the meaning of article 48 of the constitu-

If there had been a constitutional veto of the act or bill, it is clear that by the provisions of article 48 it was left for the legislature to reconsider and make the bill a law by a two-thirds vote of the elective members, and that failing this the bill remained vetoed.

The controlling question, then, is whether the refusal of the King to sign a bill which has been passed by a majority of the legislature requires for its validity to be done by the advice and consent of his cabinet, evinced by the counter-signature of a minister, or is the individual right of the King.

We are thus led to consider what is the meaning of article 48 of the constitution, and whether the power of the King in approving or disapproving of bills passed by the legislature is controlled by article 78, and to determine whether article 48 is an exception to the general words of article 78. The words in this article, which provide for the exceptions to which they shall not apply, are "unless otherwise expressed."

This means that any act which the constitution requires to be done by the King shall be done by him by and with the consent of the cabinet, unless the article defining the act to be done shall of itself show that the concurrence of the cabinet is not required. An illustration of this is found in article 70, where the King, his cabinet, and the legislature have the authority to require opinions of the justices of the supreme The context shows that as the cabinet have this authority, and the King also has it, the concurrence of the cabinet is not necessary to enable the King to procure such opinion.

So also in article 41, where the power is given to the King to appoint and commission his cabinet and to remove them upon a vote of want of confidence by the legis-From the nature of the act of removal the cabinet could not withhold their consent to the King's act in removing them. It is here expressed otherwise than that this act requires the advice and consent of the cabinet.

In article 48, which prescribes the method by which a bill passed by the legislature may become law, it is required that such bill shall, as a condition-precedent, be presented to the King. His mind must then act upon it, for "if he approve of it he shall sign it and it shall thereby become a law." This act of approval implies that he has become acquainted with its contents, and that in the exercise of his judgment he deems it advisable that it become law. The nature of this act requires his receipting feasible to be evented as to the preceipt and wisdom of the measures. his reasoning faculties to be exerted as to the necessity and wisdom of the measure. In arriving at his conclusions he may and ought to ask and receive the advice of his cabinet, but at the final moment of decision he must settle for himself whether the measure shall become law or not, and if this decision can be prevented by the cabinet, then it is not his act, but their act.

Suppose the case of a bill passing the legislature which the cabinet thought should not receive the King's approval, but which the King was desirous of approving, could the cabinet veto such a bill? If so, in what way should their failure to concur be manifested? By omitting to countersign the King's signature? Countersigning by a minister is not required by article 48 of the constitution, which designates the steps to be taken whereby a bill shall become effectual as a law. A construction which would make the ministerial counter-signature of a law essential to its validity would render invalid every statute passed by the legislature of this Kingdom's ince the constitution of 1864, up to the special session of 1887, including the whole penal code, and throw the nation into the direct confusion.

Article 48 also provides that a bill may become a law if the King shall withhold it from the legislature after the lapse of ten days from the time of its presentation to him. In this case the king does no overtact to the bill. He neither signs the bill nor returns it with his objections. Will it be contended that this constructive approval of the King requires the consent of the cabinet? If so, how shall it be expressed? By the signature of a minister when the King's name has not been affixed

We think that the plain and obvious meaning of the whole context of article 48 is that the power of the King to approve or disapprove a bill is a personal, individual right, and this article standing alone would never have given rise to doubt. Since the 78th article contains the words, "unless otherwise expressed," therefore, any act of the King which does not, by force of the article which defines the act, require the consent of the cabinet, is excepted from the operation of the general rule laid down in article 78. By this reasoning we do not find article 78 to be repugnant to article 48. Force and effect is given to both articles, which is the proper method of con-And in this view it is not necessary to discuss the question whether artistruction. cle 78, being later in the instrument, should control an earlier article.

What is the nature of the act of the King in approving or disapproving a bill? Is it an executive or legislative function? It is to be noticed that article 48, defining this function, is identical with the corresponding article from the Constitution of the United States, altered only so far as to conform to the nature of our legislature, which consists of one house.

Pomeroy, in section 174 of his Constitutional Law, says: "Although the Constitution, in its general language, vests the legislative power in a Congress which is declared to consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives, yet a reference to other portions of the organic law shows that this Congress does not in fact possess the sole legislative function. No law can be passed without the consent of the Executive, unless two-thirds of both houses shall finally concur therein. The assent of the President is as necessary to the enactment of any measure having the nature of a law as that of a majority of both branches of Congress. In this the President legislates. His affirmative or negative decision is a step in the process of creating and not of executing laws. By virtue of the various provisions of the Constitution, the Congress is in fact, though not formally and in terms, composed of three distinct bodies-President, Senate, and House of Representatives-and all must concur, with the single exception just noticed, that a two-thirds vote of both the other branches avails against the dissent of the Executive."

In Fowler vs. Pierce, 2 Cal., 165, it was held that in approving a statute the executive acts as a component part of the law-making power, and his power of approval ceases on the adjournment of the legislature.

We understand that Von Holst, a German writer, holds a different opinion. whereas in the United States since the legislative power is vested by the Constitution in the "Congress of the United States," there may be differences of opinion as to the character of the President's act, the question admits of no doubt as regards the King of these islands, for article 44 reads: "The legislative power of the Kingdom is vested in the King and the legislature, which shall consist of the nobles and representatives sitting together."

The King's act in approving or disapproving bills is the exercise of a legislative function, for he is by the organic law a constituent of the law-making body. It can not be seriously contended that article 44, above quoted, should be coupled with article 78, and that without article 42, which gives the cabinet seats in the legislature, they would be vested with legislative power. That the King is a part of the law-making power is further evidenced by article 76 of the constitution, which declares that the enacting style in making and passing all acts and laws shall be: "Be it enacted by the King and the legislature of the Hawaiian Kingdom."

Article 41 of the constitution defines the cabinet, and prescribes that "they shall be His Majesty's special advisers in the executive affairs of the Kingdom." Reading this article with article 78 leads to the conclusion, which is not a forced one, that the "acts" of the King, which require the advice and consent of the cabinet, are confined to executive acts and do not include legislative functions. If article 41 had made the cabinet the special advisers of the King on all affairs of the Kingdom there would be more room for the contention that the "acts" referred to in article 78 included legislative as well as executive.

It may well be contended that as by the 41st article the cabinet are His Majesty's special advisers in the executive affairs of the Kingdom, and that no act of the King shall have any effect unless it be countersigned by a member of the cabinet, who by that signature makes himself responsible, the effect of article 78 is to require in addition the consent of the whole cabinet, and thus the responsibility is thrown upon the whole, and the inconveniences of a divided cabinet obviated. The countersignature of a minister to a legislative act of the King is not required, because a minister could not be subjected to impeachment for such an act.

Since the argument the Attorney-General has filed a brief in which he says: "It has not hitherto been considered, and I do not think it is necessary that the King's signature to laws be attested by any minister."

On the argument, the Attorney-General strenuously insisted upon such necessity, and quoted from Webster's Dictionary and other authorities as to the meaning of the word "act" in support of his contention.

It seems to us, it being thus conceded that the signature of the King to an act of the legislature is not an "act of the King," within the meaning of article 41, requiring countersigning by a minister, it follows that the message declining to sign must come under the same rule, and therefore the substantial part of the Attorney-General's position fails.

But it is urged that there is no analogy between the veto power of the President of the United States, which is individual and irresponsible, and that of the King of these islands, because the President's term of office is limited and he is subject to impeachment, and in these methods the will of the people may find expression against a vicious use of this power. This argument, as it seems to us, is good reasoning why the framers of the Constitution of the United States were willing to trust the President with this power; but it is no argument against the view that the articles in both the American and Hawaiian constitutions which define the veto power of the Chief Executive, being identical in language, do not in both cases intrust them with a power of veto which can be exercised according to individual judgment.

Great Britain is held up as the great exemplar. In that Kingdom, by its unwritten constitution, the sovereign has the veto power; but, as the historian Macaulay says, "It is hardly possible to conceive circumstances in which a sovereign so situated can refuse to assent to a bill which has been approved by both branches of the legisla-Such a refusal would necessarily imply one of two things; that the sovereign acted in opposition to the advice of the ministry, or that the ministry was at issue, on a question of vital importance, with a majority both of the Commons and of the Lords. On either supposition the country would be in a most critical state, in a state which, if long continued, must end in a revolution." (Macaulay's "History of England," Vol. IV, p. 137.)

But this concedes that the naked right of veto exists in the sovereign of Great Britain, though it would be dangerous to exercise it. Burke, in his letter to the sheriff of Bristol, says: "The King's negative to bills is one of the most indisputed of the royal prerogatives, and it extends to all cases whatsoever. I am far from certain that if several laws, which I know, had fallen under the stroke of that scepter, that the public would have had a very heavy loss. But it is not the propriety of the exercise which is in question. The exercise itself is wisely forborne. Its repose may be the preservation of its existence, and its existence may be the means of saving the constitution itself on an occasion worthy of bringing it forth."

The parallelism between Hawaii and Great Britain is not perfect, because the latter country has a government by parliament; the ministry must have seats in one house or the other, and must be taken from the party who are in the majority.

The Hawaiian constitution has features resembling that of Great Britain in some respects, and in other respects resembling that of the United States, and has many features differing from both; and where the parallelism fails the argument by analogy We are therefore obliged to construe the Hawaiian constitution by its fails with it. intrinsic features.

The arguments drawn from English history would have cogency if addressed to a body that were framing a constitution for Hawaii, but they are of little weight in ascertaining the true intent and meaning of the instrument now formed and in force as the fundamental law of the land. This court sits not as a legislature to make or amend the constitution, but to discharge the judicial duty cast upon it by the law of interpreting the constitution.

The preamble of the constitution, which reads-

"Whereas the constitution of this Kingdom heretofore in force contains many provisions subversive of civil rights and incompatible with enlightened constitutional

"And whereas it has become imperative in order to restore order and tranquillity, and the confidence necessary to a further maintenance of the present Government, that a new constitution should be at once promulgated:

"Now, therefore, I, Kalakaua, King of the Hawaiian Islands, in my capacity as sovereign of this Kingdom, and as the representative of the people hereunto by them duly authorized and empowered, do annul and abrogate the constitution promulgated by Kamehameha the Fifth, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1864, and do proclaim and promulgate this constitution," is urged as a strong reason why we should interpret the constitution to mean that the veto is an act of the King which must have the consent of the cabinet.

It is evident from the whole scope of the constitution of 1887 that it was the intention of its framers to curtail the King's power in the Government. For example, article 31 of the constitution of 1864 read: "To the King belongs the executive power." This article in the constitution of 1887 reads: "To the King and the cabinet belongs the executive power." By article 49 of the old constitution the King's power of veto was absolute and final. By returning a bill to the legislature unsigned and unaccompanied by any objections it failed to become law and could not be brought forward thereafter during the same session. By article 48 of the present constitution this vetc is limited and can be evercome by a two-thirds vote of the legislature, thus accomplishing a substantial abridgment of the royal power.

It is urged by the Attorney-General that this limitation is ineffective, and at least thirty-two out of a house of forty-eight members must vote in favor of a vetoed bill to make it law, so that as some sixteen members may absent themselves from the house, practically a vetoed bill can only become a law by unanimous consent of the elective members. But the house has the power to compel the attendance of members, and the same difficulties would stand in the way of the passage of a bill if vetoed by the cabinet.

If the power of veto is vested in the cabinet the practical result would be that no measure which they should oppose and vote against could become a law unless two-thirds of the elective members favored it. This would give to ministers a power unknown in any other country, and completely obliterate the legislative power of the King.

The 48th article requires of the King that, if he disapprove of a bill, he send to the house his objections to it, which are to be entered upon the journal, presumably in order that they may be the subject of discussion when the bill is reconsidered.

Now, if these objections are the cabinet's objections and not the King's, it would be an idle ceremony for the cabinet to reiterate, in the form of a royal message, objections which they have already urged during the discussion in the legislature against the passage of the bill.

It is urged that as the 48th article allows only the elective members of the legislature to vote upon a bill that has been vetoed by the King, and thus the cabinet are excluded from this privilege, this was so framed in order that the cabinet should not back up a measure vetoed by themselves, through the King, by their own votes. Other reasons more satisfactory to us are that the cabinet were not allowed to vote on a vetoed bill in order that they might not place themselves in a position of open antagonism to the King, and that a measure which the King disapproved of should, in order to become law, have sufficient merits to secure the approval of two thirds of the house, who represent the people, not including the special advisers of the King.

It was said at the argument that a decision contrary to the views of the Government would lead to results most disastrous to the present and future welfare of this Kingdom.

We do not anticipate such results, but as judges sworn to discharge our duties conscientiously and fearlessly we are not moved by such considerations, if we can arrive at conclusions which commend themselves to our consciences and our judgment as we have in this case.

The judgment of the court is that the act entitled "An act to provide for the discharge of certain duties heretofore performed by the governors of the different islands" has not become a law, having been disapproved of by the King in the manner provided for by the constitution.

We deem the cause shown by the respondent is sufficient and the rule is discharged. A. F. JUDD.

L. McCully. EDWARD PRESTON. RICH. F. BICKERTON.

DISSENTING OPINION BY ASSOCIATE JUSTICE S. B. DOLE.

The legislative bill entitled "An act to provide for the discharge of certain duties heretofore performed by governors of the different islands" was presented to the King. Before the lapse of ten days he returned it to the legislature, unsigned, accompanied with a communication setting forth his objections to the bill. This communication was not countersigned by a member of the cabinet, and it is in evidence that such return of the bill with the statement of the King's objections thereto was without the advice or consent of the cabinet.

The issue raised by the pleadings in the case before the court is whether this bill became a law upon the lapse of ten days from the time it was presented to the King, according to the provisions of article 48 of the constitution.

Article 48 reads as follows: "Every bill which shall have passed the legislature shall, before it become a law, be presented to the King. If he approve, he shall sign it and it shall thereby become a law, but if not, he shall return it with his objections to the legislature, which shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, it shall be approved by a two-thirds vote of all the elective members of the legislature, it shall become a law. In all such cases the vote shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of the legislature. If any bill shall not be returned by the King within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it unless presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be

The respondent claims that the bill in question, having been returned unsigned by His Majesty, with his objections, to the legislature, and there having been no reconsideration thereof by the legislature, it has failed to become law by virtue of article 48. The complainant, on the other hand, contends that article 48 is qualified and controlled by the latter clause of article 41, which reads:

"No act of the King shall have any effect unless it be countersigned by a member of the cabinet, who by that signature makes himself responsible," and by article 78 which reads as follows:

"Wherever by this constitution any act is to be done or performed by the King or the sovereign, it shall, unless otherwise expressed, mean that such act shall be done or performed by the sovereign by and with the advice and consent of the cabinet," and therefore that the King's act in returning the bill in question to the legislature with his objections thereto, without the advice and consent of the cabinet, and without the signature of a member of the cabinet upon the statement of the King's objections to the bill, was invalid and not an objection to the bill requiring a reconsid-eration as contemplated by the constitution.

This position is met by the respondent with the argument that the act of returning a bill to the legislature by the King with his objections, popularly termed a veto, is a legislative act, and not an executive one, and that the above quotation from article 41 refers only to executive acts. In support of this view he refers to article 31, which says: "The person of the King is inviolable and sacred. His ministers are responsible. To the King and the cabinet belongs the executive power. All laws that have passed the legislature shall require His Majesty's signature in order to their validity, except as provided in article 48," and to article 41, the first part of which has the following: "The cabinet shall consist of the minister of foreign affairs, the minister of the interior, the minister of finance, and the attorney-general, and they shall be His Majesty's special advisers in the executive affairs of the Kingdom."

The respondent offers the further proposition that the expression of article 48 in

The respondent offers the further proposition that the expression of article 48 in reference to the application of the royal signature to legislative bills, and the refusal thereof, withdraws such acts from the rule laid down in article 78, that is, that the approval and veto of bills by the King are not required to be by the advice and consent of the cabinet, because it is "otherwise expressed" or provided in article 48.

The conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the constitution, brought to the attention of the court by this case, arises partly from the support given by articles 31 and 41 of the constitution above quoted in favor of the theory that the ministers are the advisers of the King only "in the executive affairs of the Kingdom," and therefore that they are not his advisers in legislative matters; and, it is argued by the respondent, that when a veto message is sent to the legislature, it being a legislative act, it is not covered by the provision of article 41, that "no act of the King shall have any effect unless it be countersigned by a member of the cabinet, who, by that signature, makes himself responsible." There is nothing in the context which tends directly to show that this provision is limited to executive acts, and this conclusion must be arrived at, if received at all, through the mental process of argument. If it is necessary to consider it in the light of the whole of article 41 and of article 31, it is equally necessary to consider it in the light of article 78, which comes after the others, and thereby has the greater force, which is sweeping in its terms, and which admits of no exception to its application, unless such exception is expressed in the statement of the act to be performed by the King.

Chief-Justice Story, in the one hundred and ninetieth section of his Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, says: "A constitution of government founded by the people for themselves and their posterity, and for objects of the most momentous nature, for perpetual union, for the establishment of justice, for the general welfare, and for a perpetuation of the blessings of liberty necessarily requires that every interpretation of its powers should have a constant reference to these objects. No interpretation of the words in which those powers are granted can be a sound one which narrows down their ordinary import so as to defeat those objects. That would be to destroy the spirit and cramp the letter." This statement of one of the principles upon which the Constitution of the United States should be interpreted is applicable to our constitution, which, we learn from its preamble, was founded by the people of the Hawaiian Islands and proclaimed by the King, as their representative, for the securing of civil rights and enlightened constitutional government, and for the restoration of order, tranquillity, and necessary public confidence. The constitution signifies a new departure, it abrogates the old constitution, which it declares subversive of civil rights and incompatible with enlightened constitutional government. Our constitution, then, must be interpreted with a constant reference to civil rights and enlightened constitutional government. Reading it carefully through and considering it as a whole, we find that it exhibits a definite and consistent purpose to attach responsibility to power in every case. I understand by the constitution that all powers not expressly given are reserved by the people, the source now of all political power, and that they intended that government should be conducted solely for the benefit of the people and not for the benefit of rulers. We find, upon an examination of its provisions, that the King may appoint an heir with the consent of the nobles, that he may proclaim war by consent of the legislature, that he may, with the advice of the privy council, convene the legislature to extraordinary sessions; that he may make treaties affecting the tariff, with the approval of the legislature; that he may coin money and regulate the currency by law, that is, through a legislative enactment; that he may remove members of the cabinet upon a vote of want of confidence by the legislature or upon their conviction of felony. In all these cases he acts without prerogative, and by virtue of the advice, consent, or conclusions of responsible officers or departments of government. Then, in regard to the rest of the constitutional acts of the sovereign, some fifteen in number, we have the sweeping provisions of article 78, which it seems to me may be reasonably said to apply to all constitutional acts of the sovereign, whether executive or legislative, unless an exception is made in the definition of the act itself or of the method of performing it. The cases that I have referred to, in which the King's performance depends upon the action of responsible officers or departments of government, would seem to be the exception contemplated in article 78 in its proviso, "unless otherwise expressed."

This brings us to the question whether article 48 contains expressions which take the act of vetoing a legislative bill out of the rule laid down by article 78. will here refer again to Judge Story's rules of interpretation:

"Constitutions are not designed for metaphysical or logical subtleties, for niceties of expression, for critical propriety, for elaborate shades of meaning, or for the exercise of philosophical acuteness or juridical research. They are instruments of a practical nature, founded on the common business of human life, adapted to common wants, designed for common use, and fitted for common understandings. The people make them, the people adopt them, the people must be supposed to read them with the help of common sense, and can not be presumed to admit in them any recondite meaning." (Story's Com., sec. 210.)

Also to Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (5 ed., 72): "Narrow and technical reaching in mindless of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the soning is misplaced when it is brought to bear upon an instrument framed by the people themselves for themselves, and designed as a chart upon which every man, learned and unlearned, may be able to trace the leading principles of government."

The proviso of article 78 is: "Unless otherwise expressed." In the case of exceptions above referred to, it is provided that the act shall be done by the King by virtue of some other authority, as, for instance, it is provided in article 28 that "in any great emergency he (the King) may, with the advice of the privy council, convene the legislature in extraordinary session."

In article 48 the provision in regard to the act of veto is as follows: prove he shall sign it and it shall thereby become a law, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to the legislature." I fail to see any language here which excepts the veto act from the rule of article 78, or which appears to do so. Such exception must be unequivocally expressed in words. It is not sufficient that a skillful logician might base a respectable argument upon the above quoted words in favor of the theory of the respondent. If the words taken in their common, plain, everyday meaning do not express an exception on their face then none can be inferred or forced from them by subtle reasoning. There is no more difficulty in the proposition that the King approves or disapproves by and with the advice of the cabinet than in the other proposition that he signs or refuses to sign by and with the consent of the cabinet. We may go further than this and be strictly within the principles of interpretation, if the words are fairly susceptible of both interpretations, which I do not admit, that one must be adhered to which is in sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the constitution, the object of the constitution is the securing of civil rights and enlightened constitutional government. It seems to me that the grant of the power of veto to the King, independent of all advice or responsible authority, would be an obstacle to the securing of civil rights, a cause of division and conflict between the Crown and the cabinet, and a menace to public tranquility, and therefore inconsistent with the spirit and objects of the constitution, and unlikely to have been intended by its framers. Is the power of veto as a royal prerogative, and which can only be overridden by a two-thirds vote of all the elective members of the legislature, consistent with enlightened constitutional government? This is a matter of opinion, but the slaves of the two greatest constitutional governments on earth, those of England and the United States of America, give an unqualified negative to this question. The development of the principle of government by the House of Commons has rendered obsolete the veto power of the English sovereign. (Cooley's Continuous Line 1997) In America the President, holding office for a brief term and liable to impeachment, may, at his own discretion, veto a bill from Congress, but it may be passed over his veto by two-thirds of a quorum of each house of Congress.

The contention of the respondent, if correct, makes the veto act a royal prerogative; but the constitution, in article 30, has defined the royal prerogative as follows: "It is the King's prerogative to receive and acknowledge public ministers; to inform the legislature by royal message from time to time of the state of the Kingdom, and to recommend to its consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." This, being an affirmative grant of prerogatives to the King, implies an exclusion of all others, and is especially decisive against the admission by means of the interpretation of doubtful expressions of another prerogative of serious consequence and not in sympathy with the general tenor of the constitution. tive, as used in reference to the powers of a sovereign, has a definite meaning, gained through the great conflict between the Crown and Parliaments of England. It may The word prerogabe said to have no other meaning than given by Webster's Dictionary in the following definitions: "An exclusive or peculiar privilege; prior and indefeasible right; fundamental and essential possession; used generally of an official and hereditary right, which may be asserted without question, and for the exercise of which there is no responsibility or accountability as to the fact and the manner of its exercise." If the respondent is right in his theory of the case the sovereign is entitled to a prerogative in addition to those enumerated in article 30, and of great importance and far-reaching consequences. I am unable to arrive at this interpretation. The question whether the act of veto is executive or legislative in its nature might be of importance in this case if the seventy-eighth article did not exist, and the forty-first and thirty-first articles remained unaffected by other explanatory words; but there can be no question that the seventy-eighth article makes the cabinet the advisers of the Crown, with a controlling authority in all matters of state, legislative as well as executive, except as to those matters which the constitution otherwise provides for the forty-eighth article is not controlled by the seventy-eighth article it can only be because its own language distinctly makes it an exception, which, as I have more fully stated above, it does not do.

It may not be necessary that the veto message should be countersigned by a member of the cabinet, but it is necessary that it should be by and with the advice and consent of the cabinet, however such consent may be evidenced.

It seems to me therefore that the law in question is valid, and that under its provisions the respondent is bound to deliver to the complainant the records referred to in the complaint.

No. 169.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Honolulu, February 13, 1888. (Received February 29.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that during an informal interview with His Majesty's minister of foreign affairs I ascertained that, since the arrival of the mail on the 8th instant, the British commissioner resident here has transmitted to His Hawaiian Majesty's minister of foreign affairs a communication in the nature of a protest against the exclusive right to Pearl River Harbor granted by article 2 of the supplementary convention extending the commercial reciprocity treaty between Hawaii and the United States.

I am also informed that the principal objections are based on article 2 of the treaty between Hawaii and Great Britain, ratified on May 6, 1852, the full text of which will be found by reference to page 31 of the pamphlet containing the "treaties and conventions concluded between the Hawaiian Kingdom and other powers since 1825," accompanying my dispatch No. 131, of July 15, 1887, and that the particular paragraph relied upon is the following:

In like manner the ships of war of each contracting party, respectively, shall have liberty to enter into all harbors, rivers, and places within the territories of the other, to which the ships of war of other nations are or may be permitted to come, to anchor there and to remain and refit, subject always to the laws and regulations of the two countries, respectively.

The minister of foreign affairs has not yet made any reply to the communication of the British commissioner, but will do so in a few days, and I hope to be able to transmit copies of the correspondence by the next mail.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 173.]

Mr. Wodehouse to Mr. Austin.

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S CONSULATE-GENERAL, Honolulu, February 9, 1888.

SIR: With reference to my previous correspondence with your excellency's department on the subject of the cession of "Pearl River Harbor" to the United States Government, I am now instructed to inform the Government of His Hawaiian Majesty that Her Majesty's Government have received from Her Majesty's minister at Washington a copy of a proclamation by the President of the United States announcing the ratification of the supplementary convention concluded with the Hawaiian Islands on the 6th of December, 1884.

By Article II of the convention, "the King of these islands grants to the Government of the United States the exclusive right to enter the harbor of "Pearl River," in the island of Oahu, and to establish and maintain there a coaling and repair station for the use of vessels of the United States, and to that end the United States may improve the entrance to said harbor and do all other things needful to the purpose aforesaid."

Under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, I have already pointed out to the Government of His Hawaiian Majesty that the acquisition by a foreign power of a harbor or preferential concession in the Hawaiian Islands would infallibly lead to a hardor or preferential concession in the Hawaiian Islands would inflamely, lead to the loss of the independence of the islands, but this consideration has not prevented His Hawaiian Majesty's Government from proceeding to the ratification of the supplementary convention with the United States; and although Her Majesty's Government are informed that by an exchange of notes between the Hawaiian minister at Washington and Mr. Bayard, it is declared that the article in question (No. II) does not subtract from Hawaiian jurisdiction; that it gives no right of property in the harbor or cession of territory; that no exclusive right is conferred commercially, and that it terminates with the original treaty of 1875 whenever notice of such a termination is given; in fact, that it does not confer any exclusive right to "Pearl River Harbor" further than the right of the United States under it to establish a coaling station: yet in view of the actual text of the convention, and of the fact of the non-publication of these notes as forming part of the treaty, I am desired to remind His Majesty's Government of the terms of the treaty between Great Britain and these islands of the 10th of July, 1851.

these islands of the 10th of July, 1851.

The second article of that treaty stipulates that the subjects of each of the two "contracting parties, respectively, shall have liberty freely and securely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, and rivers in the territories of the other where trade with other nations is permitted," and it is stated that "in like manner the ships of war of such contracting parties, respectively, shall have liberty to enter into all harbors, rivers, and places within the territories of the other to which the ships of war of other nations are or may be permitted to come to anchor there and to remain and refit."

The growing importance of the Hawaiian Islands as a coaling and provision station for ships navigating the Pacific make it highly desirable that the harbors of the group should at all times be open equally to the ships of all nations, and as Her Majesty's Government can not consent to forego the rights and privileges which were expressly conceded to them by the above-mentioned treaty of 1851, they must still look to the Government of the Hawaiian Islands to maintain unimpaired the rights accorded to Great Britain by that treaty.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFPAIRS, Honolulu, February 16, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch dated February 9, 1888, wherein you refer to your previous correspondence with this department on the subject of the "cession of Pearl River Harbor to the United States Government," and state that you are now instructed to inform the Government of His Hawaiian Majesty that Her Britannic Majesty's Government have received from Her Majesty's minister at Washington a copy of a proclamation by the President of the United States announcing the ratification of the supplementary convention concluded with the Hawaiian Islands on the 6th December, 1884. You also quote Article II of the said convention, and add that, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, you have already pointed out to the Government of His Hawaiian Majesty that the acquisition by a foreign power of a harbor, or a preferential concession, in the Hawaiian Islands, would infallibly lead to the loss of the independence of the islands, and allude to the notes interchanged between the Hawaiian minister at Washington and Mr. Bayard, declaring that the article in question does not subtract from Hawaiian jurisdiction, and gives no right of property in the harbor, or cession of territory; that no exclusive right is conferred commercially, and that it terminates with the original treaty of 1875 whenever notice of such termination is given, and state that, in view of the actual text of the convention and of the non-publication of these notes as forming part of the treaty, you are desired to remind His Majesty's Government of the terms of the treaty between Great Britain and these islands, of the 10th day of July, 1851, quoting a portion of the second article of that treaty, and stating that Her Majesty's Government can not consent to forego the rights and privileges which were expressly conceded to them by the said treaty of 1851, and must still look to the Government of the Hawaiian Islands to maintain unimpaired the rights accorded to Great Britain by that treaty.

In reply, I beg to say that the term "cession of Pearl River Harbor" used in your dispatch does not occur in the convention under consideration, and does not, in the opinion of His Majesty's ministers, accurately describe the effect of that convention; for no cession of territory has been made, and in reality there is no such thing as Pearl River Harbor in the sense of its being a place available to ships of war or to any deep-water vessels.

The only thing which has been granted to the Government of the United States is the right to make a harbor at its own expense at a place called Pearl River Harbor, and, having so made it, the exclusive privilege of using it during the continuance of the treaty.

It can hardly be said that the treaty of 1851, referred to in your dispatch, whereby the right is granted to Her Majesty's ships of war to "enter all harbors, rivers, and places," would extend to the right to use harbors created by a third party at its own expense, under an agreement with His Majesty's Government, whereby such third party has paid a valuable consideration for the privilege of so creating such harbor. His Majesty's Government is of opinion that the convention with the United States Government does not involve any cession of territory to the United States or any re-lease of sovereignty or jurisdiction by this Government, and that therefore the said convention does not in any manner affect the independence of this Kingdom; and, furthermore, that the privileges granted by that instrument to the United States Government in return for the reciprocal privileges granted by it to this Kingdom are compensatory and expire with the termination of the treaty, and that this construction of the convention is also that adopted by the United States Government.

In regard to the non-publication of the notes exchanged between the Hawaiian minister at Washington and Mr. Bayard, I beg to point out to you that they were published with the amended treaty in the proclamation of ratification by His Maj-

His Majesty's Government regards the question of preferential concessions in reciprocal treaties as one which has been thoroughly settled in favor of the right to grant such concessions in return for grants of similar value; indeed Article III of the treaty of 1851, to which treaty you make reference, distinctly recognizes that right.

In the convention under consideration the renewal for a definite period of privileges which have been of such great value to this country is certainly ample compensation for the very slight privilege of allowing the United States Government to create and enter a harbor and establish a coaling station at Pearl River Harbor (where, in reality, no practical harbor exists), during, and only during, the existence of the treaty.

If the Government of the United States should see fit to expend the large amount of money which would be required to be expended before it would be possible that any war ship could enter Pearl River, the compensation by the United States Government for the privileges granted by His Majesty's Government would be greatly increased, and should the United States Government desire to secure the use of any of the territory or lands adjoining the waters of Pearl River, it would be obliged to acquire them by lease or purchase from the private individuals who are their sole pro-

The growing importance of the Hawaiian Islands as a coaling station and provision depot for ships navigating the Pacific, as mentioned in your dispatch, is largely the result of the beneficial influence of the treaty of reciprocity between the Governments of the United States and Hawaiian Kingdom, through the compensatory admission into the United States free of duties of certain of our products.

I venture to express the hope that Her Majesty's Government, in consideration of the foregoing statement, will appreciate that it is not the wish His Majesty's Government that His Majesty's Government shall consent to forego any of the rights and privileges accorded to it by the treaty of 1851, and that it is the intention of His Majesty's Government to maintain unimpaired the rights accorded to Great Britain by that treaty.

Both these notes, and that one from Mr. Carter to Mr. Bayard, which was the occasion of Mr. Bayard's of Secrember 22, were embedded in a statement proceeded by the

I inclose, however, herewith a copy of Mr. Carter's note to Mr. Bayard of September 23, in case you may not have noticed its publication.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose two copies of regulations regarding the immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Kingdom officially published on the 21st instant.

There is a strong, increasing sentiment in this country, especially among the laboring class and merchants not directly interested in sugar plantations, that immigration shall be so regulated as to prevent any permanent increase of the Asiatic population of these islands.

To this end a society, known as the Anti-Asiatic Union, has been recently organized with the avowed purpose of procuring such legislation as will restrict the importation of Chinese and Japanese to the actual requirements of the planters, and to compel the return to their native country of those shipped contract laborers not willing to renew their labor contracts on the expiration of the original contract. Also to procure the enactment of laws prohibiting the granting of any new licenses for any trade or commerce to Asiatics.

The indications now are that immigration will be one of the important questions for the consideration of the legislature in May next.

AN ACT to authorize the Hawaiian Government to contract for the construction of inter-island submarine electric telegraph cables.

Be it enacted by the King and the legislature of the Hawaiian Kingdom: Sec. 1. The minister of the interior, with the unanimous concurrence of the cabinet, is hereby authorized to enter into a contract with J. Sherman Bartholomew, residing in Honolulu, H. all or any points on the Hawaiian Islands. Sec. 2. Such contract may, by its terms, provide for the grant, concession, and confirmation by the Hawaiian Government to the said J. Sherman Bartholomew, his associates and assigns, or any other persons or corporation (hereinafter named and referred to as the constructors), of the sole and exclusive right and privilege to construct and lay submarine electric telegraph cables to connect the islands of the Hawaiian group, from Hawaii to Kauai, by the way of Maui, Molokai, and Oahu, together with lines of land telegraph, to connect the same for and during a period not to exceed ten (10) years from the first day of January, A. D. 1889; provided, however, that if the said lines of submarine electric telegraph cable shall not be laid ready for use on or before the first day of July, 1889, then the exclusive right and privilege, the granting of which is hereinbefore authorized, shall, at the option of the cabinet, at once, or at any time thereafter, lapse and become void upon three (3) months' notice to that effect being given to the constructors. And provided also, that if any of the lines of land telegraph to connect with the said submarine cables shall not be constructed and ready for operation on or before the first day of January, A. D. 1891, then or at any time thereafter upon three months' notice to the constructors, the minister of the interior, with the approval of the cabinet, may declare the exclusive right and privilege granted for the construction and maintaining of any such land line to be void and forfeited, and such exclusive right and privi-And provided also, that the rights and privileges lege shall thereupon be void. granted by virtue of this act shall not operate to prevent or preclude the Hawaiian Government from consenting to the landing, laying, or maintaining upon the Hawaiian Islands, or any of said islands, or in any Hawaiian waters, of any submarine telegraph or other electric cable or cables which shall serve to connect the said islands, or any of them, with any foreign country, or to interfere with the vested rights of any existing Hawaiian telephone or telegraph corporation.

SEC. 3. Such contract may further provide for the payment by the Hawaiian Government to the said constructors of the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) in the manner following, that is to say: Upon the completion of the said line in good working condition between Oahu and Maui, the sum of eight thousand dollars ($8,000); upon the completion of the said line in good working condition between Oahu and Hawaii, eight thousand dollars ($8,000), and upon the completion of the said line in good working condition between Oahu and Kauai, nine thousand dollars ($9,000).

SEC. 4. The granting of any of the rights or privileges and the payment of any of the money authorized by this act shall be conditioned upon the following additional covenants, that is to say: All messages other than Hawaiian Government messages or press messages shall be received and transmitted over any or all of said lines at the rate of not more than ten cents for each word, and all messages to or from the Hawaiian Government or any officer thereof in his official capacity and all press messages shall be received and transmitted over said lines for one-half of the rates charged for messages other than Hawaiian Government messages or press mes-

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Honolulu, August 25, 1888. (Received September 12.)

SIR: I have the honor to inclose two copies of the "report of special committee on the Chinese question," submitted to the Hawaiian Legislature on the 7th instant, also two copies of a proposed amendment to the constitution recommended by the committee granting enlarged legislative powers regarding the Chinese.

Doubtless the proposed amendment will receive the support of a majority of the members of the present Legislature, but the principal contest will occur at the election two years hence, when the proposed amendment must be agreed to by two-thirds of all the members of Legislature then elected before it shall become part of the constitution.

The bill referred to on page 6 of the report of the committee, requiring laborers to procure a license, was referred to and has been considered by a newly-appointed special committee, and the committee this day returned the bill, accompanied by an adverse report, but recommend the adoption of the proposed amendment to the constitution and stringent restrictive measures against the further influx of Chinese pending the adoption of the amendment.

Restricting the immigration of Chinese to this Kingdom, and the proper legislation touching those resident here, while conserving the interests of the planters and the white laboring classes, are vexed questions for the Legislature to determine.

The Chinese residents of the Kingdom will use all influence possible to prevent any legislation in the premises.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON THE CHINESE QUESTION.

The Hon. W. R. CASTLE,

President of the legislative assembly, A. D. 1888:

Sir: The undersigned, a special committee to whom was referred several matters relating to Chinese and Chinese and Asiatic immigration, beg leave to submit their Three petitions and one constitutional amendment were referred to them, to wit: First. Petition number 12 merely commending the course of the legislature in attempting to control Chinese immigration, and which, therefore, we here recommend be received and laid on the table.

Second. Petition number 93 from certain prominent Chinese merchants, praying that the law requiring photographs of persons seeking return permits may be repealed and that the fee for return permits be reduced to two dollars.

Third. Petition number 55 from a large number of citizens and residents, relative to Asiatic immigration and containing fourteen specific prayers relating thereto and to Asiatic residents in this Kingdom; and Fourth. A constitutional amendment numbered bill 57, relating to Chinese.

In regard to petition number 93 from prominent Chinese merchants, your committee recommend that the same be laid on the table. This petition prays that the regulation be abolished requiring that Chinese departing the Kingdom and desiring return permits shall be photographed as a means of identification. The frauds perpetrated upon the Government in regard to Chinese return permits when it retained no means of identifying those who received them showed that Chinese could not be allowed the same freedom in this respect as other citizens and residents without abusing it, so that the Government was compelled either to adopt some means of identification in issuing return permits or to become the sport of those who received them. The Chinese have compelled this regulation in regard to photographs by their own conduct. By Chinese we do not mean all Chinese, but Chinese as a class. If there was any practical way of relaxing this regulation in individual cases where it was clearly unnecessary, the committee would recommend it, but, in their opinion, there is no way to do this without seriously impairing the law. While your committee sincerely believe that the Chinese merchants in this Kingdom as a class have many admirable qualities, yet your committee are compelled to say that in too many cases many of them render but scant assistance or information to the Government in its necessary efforts to control the mass of their countrymen residing here.

The same wholesale evasions of law in regard to passports exist, it is believed, in still greater degree in the matter of taxation and the vagrancy law, and the Government receives so little assistance from the abiding Chinese in these respects, that it is time the Government protected itself, and while the Government would undoubtedly fain give Chinese all the immunities enjoyed by other citizens it can not safely do so until they themselves learn better to use them. In justice to the Chinese, however the committee wish to say that undoubtedly the main reason that Chinese as a class evade the revenue taxation and kindred laws more than other races, is that there is far greater opportunity and therefore more temptation for them to do so, owing to the fact that the mass of them can not be identified or individualized.

This petition also prays that the $5 fee for return permits be reduced to $2. The committee believe that the extra expense to the Government necessitated by this class of passports will about offset the extra fee charged therefor; therefore think it unwise to reduce the same.

Petition No. 55 with fourteen specific prayers relating to Asiatics.

Instead of entering into a detailed recital and consideration of each prayer of this petition, your committee consider that the same results can be obtained by giving in brief the findings of facts and conclusions the committee has come to after having very carefully canvassed the whole subject of Asiatic immigration, and having taken evidence and consulted with many persons of different views on this subject.

Your committee find that the classification and identification of Japanese with Chinese is not justified by the facts; that the habits, traits of character, and tendencies of the two races are radically different and therefore recommend that the consideration of Japanese in the issue now before us be eliminated.

Undoubtedly some legislation in regard to Japanese immigration may from time to time be required, but it will be of a class entirely different from that required in regard to Chinese. Japanese immigration under proper restrictions should be encouraged as the best partial substitute for Chinese labor in this Kingdom, bringing as it does a class who are willing to adopt western civilization and who can be incorporated into our industrial system without seriously disjointing it.

In regard to the Chinese your committee find the following facts: Chinese labor in company with other labor is needed for field work on rice and sugar plantations in this Kingdom, it not being safe to rely exclusively on Japanese labor, the same being liable to recall by the Japanese Government, and Portuguese with large families needing wages that can only be permanently assured to them in the higher class of labor on plantations, and in the minor or middle industries of the Kingdom.

The committee, on the other hand, find that the competition of other races with Chinese is impossible, and that whenever other races are forced into such competition the result is not competition, but substitution of the Chinese for their competitors. That the Chinese are absorbing the different minor industries, mechanical, agricultural, and commercial in this Kingdom, and your committee see nothing to prevent them ultimately reducing the Kingdom practically to a Chinese colony, with scattering people of other nationalities here and there among them, and this even though no more Chinese are introduced for the present, because outside of the sugar and rice industries very few comparatively find employment, but what there is of such employment serves to retain in the country the higher class of artisans and middlemen upon whom the Government must rely to preserve constitutional representative government in average purity, and there are enough Chinese now in the country to swallow up such employments unless checked by law.

How to remedy this evil is a most serious question, and one that has been very fully discussed by the committee.

After mature deliberation the committee believe the Government should adopt the following policy in regard to Chinese:

First. That no Chinese shall hereafter be allowed to immigrate to this Kingdom except such as are needed to supply labor for the rice and sugar industries, and all who are allowed to enter for that purpose shall be prohibited by law from engaging in any other occupation whatsoever, and shall stay for a term of years only, to return home thereafter unless an extension of time is granted upon like conditions.

Second. As to Chinese already in the Kingdom, that Government shall by law prevent those now employed as day laborers from engaging in any other occupation. And, as to those who are already engaged in other occupations, that the power be given to the legislature of abridging from time to time their rights to continue in the same, more particularly the trades, whenever opportunity offers of so doing without undue injustice or infringement of vested rights, and the exigencies and needs of people of other nationalities demand it.

To carry out such a policy the constitution needs to be amended, and the committee therefore recommend that the proposed constitutional amendment, numbered bill number 57, and referred to this committee with certain amendments, do pass and be submitted to the elections in 1890. A copy of such constitutional amendment as modified by the committee is hereto attached and made a part hereof. The house is already acquainted with its main points. It has been modified in some respects and widened in others by the committee, but as it now stands will, it is believed, if ultimately adopted, give the legislature power to deal with the Chinese question along the line of the policy above outlined.

The only other legislation that your committee can recommend is a bill hereto attached requiring laborers to take out a license before authorized to do common labor in this Kingdom, such license to be given as a matter of right for a nominal fee, to be good only for two years and only for the district in which it is granted. This bill it is believed is constitutional and necessary as a police regulation, serving to identify, individualize, and locate laborers, thus doing much to prevent evasion of taxation, vagrancy, and other laws and to eliminate that class of semi-idle perambulatory labor that is now floating around the country and congregating in the towns.

In conclusion, your committee consider that, in recommending the passage of the constitutional amendment and bill in question, they have granted the main relief asked for in petition numbered 55, popularly known as the anti-Chinese petition, and therefore recommend that the same be laid upon the table, to be considered with the report and the bill and constitutional amendment accompanying the same.

Respectfully submitted.

W. E. Foster. W. A. KINNEY. J. MAGUIRE. GEO. H. DOLE. Jos. U. KAWAINUI.

The undersigned concur in the recommendations of the above report and the legislation therein proposed.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Be it resolved by the legislature of the Hawaiian Kingdom, That the following article be and thereby is, proposed as an amendment to the constitution:

The legislature may by law name or limit the occupation or employment of every kind whatsoever in which Chinese, or any body or class of Chinese, may lawfully engage or continue to pursue; the estate and interest in land they may acquire, or acquiring, hold, and the duration thereof; and the number of years, not less than six, during which any Chinese may lawfully reside in the Hawaiian Kingdom; and may provide for the registration and identification of Chinese: Provided, however, That no low chell concepts to make it understand the control of the registration and identification of Chinese. law shall operate to make it unlawful for any Chinese to engage in the cultivation or manufacture of rice or sugar: And provided, further, That no Chinese in the Hawaiian Kingdom, when this amendment becomes a part of the constitution, shall thereafter be compelled to depart the same, except such Chinese as shall be legally sentenced to transportation or deportation for felony.

The legislature may enforce the provisions of this amendment by appropriate legislation; and no such legislation shall be declared unconstitutional because confined in its operation to Chinese, or any body or class thereof.

In this amendment "Chinese" means any person or persons, male or female, wholly of Chinese or Mongolian birth or descent, whether born in China or elsewhere, and whether citizens or subjects of China or any other country, and shall include and apply to all and every person or persons wholly of Chinese or Mongolian birth or descent. who now are or hereafter may be a citizen or citizens, subject or subjects of the Hawaiian Kingdom: Provided, however, That the provisions of this amendment shall not be construed to include or apply to persons of Japanese birth or descent.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of an act passed by the legislature of Hawaii and approved on the 10th instant, amending the law of 1887 relating to the regulation of Chinese immigration.

I have, etc.,

GEO. W. MERRILL.

[Inclosure in No. 204.]

By authority.

AN ACT to amend Chapter XXVIII of the laws of 1887, relating to the regulation of Chinese immigration.

Be it enacted by the King and the legislature of the Hawaiian Kingdom-Sec. 1. Section 2 of Chapter XXVIII of the laws of 1887, being an act entitled "An act to regulate Chinese immigration," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC 2. From and after the passage of this act no Chinese coming from parts beyond the Hawaiian Islands shall land, be landed, or permitted to land in or upon the Hawaiian Islands, except such Chinese as shall, at the time of his arrival at any port of this Kingdom from abroad, have a permit personal to himself to enter the Kingdom, granted, signed, and sealed by the minister of foreign affairs of the Hawaiian Kingdom under and subject to regulations to be prepared and published by him, by and with the consent of the cabinet, excepting as hereinafter provided, and excepting all Chinese to whom or for whom such personal permit to enter the Kingdom has heretofore been granted, as shall be shown by the records of the office of the minister of foreign affairs: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be held to conflict with the provisions of an act to limit the time within which permits for Chinese to enter the Kingdom may be used, approved July 4, 1888."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of said Chapter XXVIII is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. If any master of a vessel shall bring any Chinese without such permit into any port of this Kingdom from abroad with intent to land such Chinese in this Kingdom, or if such master shall land or attempt to land any Chinese in this Kingdom without such permit, or if such master or any other officer of such vessel shall permit such Chinese to escape from such vessel while within Hawaiian jurisdiction, such master (or other officer in fault in the premises in case of an escape) shall be liable on conviction to a penalty of two hundred dollars for each Chinese so brought into any port of this Kingdom, or landed, or attempted to be landed, or who shall escape from such vessel within Hawaiian jurisdiction; and the master of such vessel shall be compelled to re-embark such Chinese as shall unlawfully land, or escape, or be landed from such vessel, and upon his neglect or refusal to do so, after notification by the minister of foreign affairs, the marshal, any sheriff, the collector-general of customs, or any officer of customs, he may be forthwith arrested without warrant, and upon conviction of such neglect or refusal, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of two hundred dollars in respect of each Chinese whom he shall have so refused or neglected to re-embark."

SEC. 3. There are hereby added to said Chapter XXVIII four new sections, to be numbered sections 3 A, 3 B, 3 C, 3 D, respectively, to read as follows:

"Sec. 3 A. Any Chinese, whether a passenger on or a member of the crew of any vessel arriving in Hawaiian waters from abroad, who shall land, or attempt to land, upon Hawaiian shores, except he be provided with a personal permit to enter the Kingdom, as provided in section 2 of this act, shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a penalty of two hundred dollars. If any Chinese shall, with intent and purpose to gain access to this Kingdom, tender or present, or cause to be tendered or presented to any officer of customs or other officer of the Hawaiian Government, any ticket, permit, passport, or other document other than a valid permit personal to himself for such Chinese to enter the Kingdom, the fact of such tender or presentation shall be deemed conclusive evidence of an attempt on the part of such Chinese to land in this kingdom without a permit.

"SEC. 3 B. No vessel which shall have brought any Chinese into any port of this Kingdom with intent on the part of the master or owners of such vessel to land them on the these shores, such Chinese being unprovided with valid personal permits, as in this act provided, shall be granted a clearance from any custom-house, or permitted to leave any port of this Kingdom while any of the Chinese so brought into such port by or upon such vessel shall be in custody of any officer of this Government, not upon such vessel, or on bail awaiting any judicial proceedings as to the right of any of such Chinese to land in this Kingdom: Provided, That if the master, owners, or authorized agents of such vessel shall execute and deliver to the collector-general or any collector of customs a good and sufficient bond or bonds, with sufficient sureties, in a sum of not less than three hundred dollars in respect of each such Chinese so in custody, or on bail, conditioned for the prompt deportation from this Kingdom of all such Chinese as shall be, upon such proceedings, denied the right to land in this Kingdom, together with all costs and expenses incident to the custody of such Chinese while awaiting such deportation, such vessel shall be allowed to depart the Kingdom. All bonds in this section provided for shall be deemed forfeited, and suit may be sustained thereon unless within thirty days from the rendition of final judgment denying the right of any Chinese in respect of whom such bond shall have been given to land in this Kingdom, such Chinese shall be deported from this Kingdom by the obligor in such bond.

"SEC. 3 C. No court of this Kingdom shall release or permit to land, or go abroad in this Kingdom, upon habeas corpus or other proceedings, any Chinese who shall have come from ports beyond the Hawaiian Islands, unless such Chinese shall show affirmatively that he possessed and presented a valid permit, personal to himself to enter

"Sec. 3 D. Any vessel by or upon which any Chinese shall be brought into any port of this Kingdom without a permit personal to such Chinese to land in this Kingdom shall be liable for any penalty that shall be adjudged against any officer of such vessel in respect of the bringing of such Chinese to Hawaiian ports, or landing or attempting to lead, on possibling to lead, on the Chinese when the property and the property of the lead who Chinese when the property and the property of the lead who Chinese when the property and the property of the lead who Chinese who have in the property of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of the lead of t tempting to land, or permitting to land such Chinese upon Hawaiian shores, or permitting such Chinese to escape from such vessel within the Hawaiian jurisdiction, or for refusal of such officer to re-embark or deport such Chinese, and such penalty may be enforced by the seizure and sale of such vessel, or any of her apparel or furniture, after rendition of a decree to that effect in any court of competent jurisdiction. Whenever in the course of any prosecution or other suit under this act, any person shall allege in defense of such prosecution or suit, the possession by himself or any other person or persons of a permit or permits to enter this Kingdom, it shall be incumbent upon the person so alleging such possession to prove the validity of such permit or permits, to allow the person or persons so possessing the same to enter this Kingdom."

Mr. Merrill to Mr. Bayard.

[Extract.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, No. 211.] Honclulu, September 29, 1888. (Received November 3.)

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, as instructed by the Government of Great Britain, the British commissioner resident here recently addressed a communication to the Hawaiian minister of foreign affairs protesting against the Hawaiian Government granting to Audley Coote or any other person the "exclusive right and privilege to construct or land a submarine electric telegraph cable or cables, which shall reach to or from any British possession or colony upon the shores of any island of the Hawaiian group," as provided in section 2 of an act relating to submarine cables, approved December 16, 1887, and published on page 46 of "session laws, 1887," forwarded to the Department with my No. 177, of March 29, 1888.

On the 28th instant, in reply to the protest, the minister of foreign affairs in substance stated that His Majesty's Government regarded the granting of such a privilege as entirely within the control of the Government, and an inherent right of sovereignty pertaining to Hawaii as an independent state.

In this connection I will state that, in several interviews with His Majesty's minister of foreign affairs I learn that it is quite improbable that Mr. Coote by the 1st of August next will be able to give assurances that the cable will be completed by the 1st day of August, 1890, as required by the submarine cable act.

In fact, Mr. Coote is not meeting with that encouragement at one time anticipated by him, and it is confidently believed here that the projected cable between British Columbia and Australia via Hawaii, under his contract, will not be completed.

I am assured that for this Government to render all the financial aid possible in the laying of an electric telegraph cable between some point in the United States and the Hawaiian Islands would meet the hearty support of His Majesty's Cabinet, and be generally approved by residents and those interested in the welfare of this Kingdom.

While the sentiment here is largely in favor of some cable to connect these islands with the outer world, yet at the present time the popular feeling is without doubt in favor of a terminus on United States territory, and the hope is often expressed that such an enterprise may receive such practical encouragement from the United States or citizens thereof as will insure its success.

It is believed that such an enterprise completed would greatly strengthen the material commercial interests of the two countries, and by daily contact firmly cement to the United States the kindly feeling of those who are to control the political future of Hawaii, and largely assist in preserving the autonomy of this Kingdom. Agents of English capitalists are seeking investments in the different islands, and now are contemplating the purchase of large tracts of land suitable for agricultural purposes, on the islands of Kauai and Hawaii, while an English company owns an exclusive right to build and operate a street railway throughout Honolulu and suburbs for a term of years, and which at the present time is in course of construction, and soon will be in full operation.

So far as possible these and similar enterprises direct trade and influence through English channels, encourage British lines of commerce, and readily assist any enterprise which tends to bind British interests to those of Hawaii.

With a steam-ship line and cable connection with the British possessions in North America the people of this island Kingdom would naturally become imbued with the opinions of their commercial connections and imperceptibly absorb the sentiments and feelings of those controlling the source of their daily intelligence.

The people here are earnestly desirous of and doubtless will eventually obtain cable communication with the coast of North America, and it is hoped that it may terminate on United States soil, thus strengthening what ought to be an indissoluble commercial and political bond.

The laying of a cable between these islands and America I consider no longer problematical, but when, by whose aid, and on what part of the continental coast it shall terminate, I conceive to be of vast importance to the United States, as by bringing these people in daily contact with the world through United States sources, would largely and imperceptibly aid in the natural gravitation of commerce and political influence to our country, and would silently yet strongly tend to quiet the periodical unrest natural to a segregated, ocean bound community.

I have, etc.,

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that H. B. M. S. Hyacinth, Captain Bourke commanding, left this harbor on the 3d instant on a cruise in the south.

While the impression prevails here that the captain has departed for Samoa, yet, in fact, I am reliably informed, he goes direct to Raratonga, one of the group of "Cook's Islands" or "Harvey Archipelago," situated about 20 degrees south latitude, and 157 degrees west longitude.

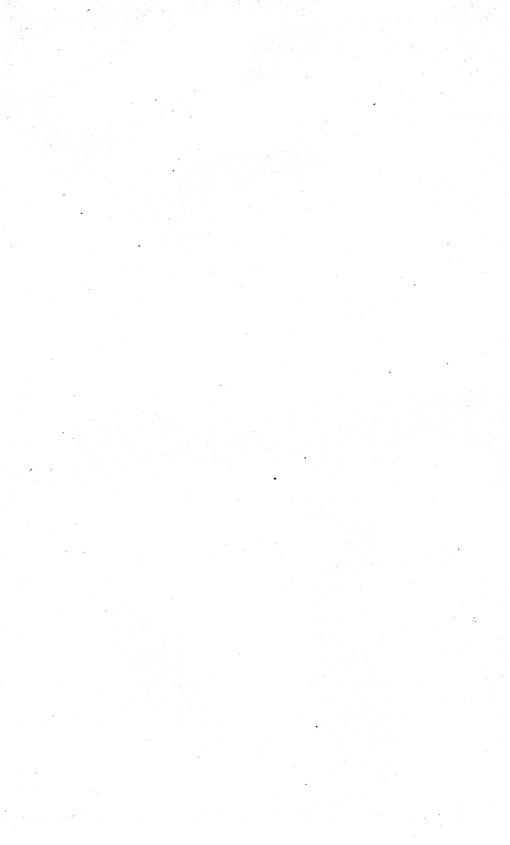

The cruise is for the purpose of taking possession of, or establishing a protectorate over, the group on behalf of Great Britain.

This action is alleged to be in response to a request of the authorities at Raratonga, who, it is claimed, fear occupation by the French.

HAYTI.

No. 626.

Mr. Thompson to Mr. Bayard.

No. 153.) LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Port au Prince, Hayti, November 14, 1887. (Received November 29.)

SIR: On the 19th ultimo the National Assembly was called in extraordinary session, which ended the 10th instant; the members were called together in order that they might examine and ratify certain arrangements made by the minister of finance and the National Bank of Hayti on his recent visit to Paris. These were the projects:

(1) A law to establish a new treasury service.

(2) A law to substitute new paper money for that in circulation.

(3) Law converting the exterior debt and consolidating the floating lebt.

(4) Law regulating the interior debt (caisse d'amortissement), also the back floating debt. All of these laws were passed.

By the first, a contract has been sanctioned between the National Bank and the Government to the effect that the sum of $283,333.33 is to be paid by the bank to the treasury department at the end of each month for the purpose of paying the current service, as employés, pensions, rations to the army, etc. The bank takes entire charge as guaranty, and pays out from the sum of all duties on imports into the Republic, receiving as compensation 2 per cent. per month on the amount paid out by them, and 9 per cent. per year on advances made. This contract is for five years.

In the second law the Government paper money in circulation at present will be replaced by bank paper, simply an interchange.

It is the third and fourth laws that are interesting to us, and particularly the latter, as affecting the value of the bonds held by American citizens, viz, those of Heuvelmann Haven & Arci, and of Mrs.

Fanny Oaksmith.

I inclose herein, marked A, with translation B, copies of the law above named. You will observe that these bonds in value have been reduced 20 per cent., from $100 each to $80 each, and the interest from 6 per cent. to 5 per cent. per annum; and, furthermore, all back interest due thereon, and up to December 31, 1887, instead of being liquidated, is to be converted into the new $80 bonds.

As there is but little time for action (six weeks) before these bonds are to be changed, without losing six months' interest, and in view of the fact that the above cited bonds were obtained for our citizens by instructions from the Department, and through the good offices of my predecessors, and believing I am only anticipating instructions had time permitted them to have been requested by me and received in the premises, I have addressed dispatches to the secretary of state of foreign affairs relating to these bonds, as to their value and the back interest. Copies of such dispatches are herein inclosed, marked, respectively, C and D. There are many thousands of dollars' worth of similar bonds held by merchants and brokers here who have bought the same from time to time for a mere bagatelle, while our citizens received these bonds for their face value, probably with implicit confidence; therefore, I do not believe they should be placed in the same category with commercial speculators in this city. True, these were not international debts, but at the time the Department was interested in their payment, and the minister accredited here was instructed to occupy himself with their settlement; this is the reason for the action I have taken.

As soon as I can state anything relating to this subject, and at all events continuing the same line of argument unless instructed otherwise, I will inform you of the result when obtained from the foreign office.

I have, etc.,

JOHN E. W. THOMPSON.

Law regulating causes d'amortissement bonds and floating debt—regulating the interior debt, called the sinking fund, as well as the back floating debt.

Salomon, President of Hayti:

Whereas (1) That the definite regulating of the interior debt of the country becomes obligatory for the order and the regularity of our financial administration.

(2) That it is necessary to appropriate in payment of the interest and the sinking fund of this debt special and sure resources, so as to assure hereafter the reimbursement, at fixed dates and on simple presentation at the wicket of the National Bank, of the shares due, or of the titles to be withdrawn after the drawing by lot.

(3) That under these conditions of the regularity of payments a light sacrifice, the same as the holders of the exterior debt have made, imposes itself on those of the interior debt, who will no longer be exposed to the long delays or the exactions of a too onerous brokerage.

Considering (1) The law of November 17, 1876, tending to the creation into a sinking fund of the arreared public debt; (2) the additional of August 26, 1877; (3) the contract signed at Paris, August 11, 1887, between the delegate of the Government and the National Bank.

From the advice of the council of the secretaries of state has proposed and the legislative body has voted the following law:

ART. 1. The interior debt in arrear is composed hereafter of the old titles of 100 gourdes of articles 6, 7, and 9 of the sinking fund bearing 6 per cent. per year; (2) of all pay orders for salary whatever drawn up monthly and unpaid up to September 30 last; (3) of the interests due on the titles of the sinking fund up to December 31, 1887; (4) of all the public effects suffering; (5) of the amount of the commission of 2 per cent. allowed to the National Bank on the nominal capital of the debt to be converted and consolidated.

In that which concerns the special titles bearing 18 per cent. it is left to the Government the faculty to take in their regard all just and lawful measures so as to safeguard the interest of the State.

ART. 2. Commissions, in which the bank shall always be represented, shall be instituted by the Government for the verification of all the categories of title spoken of in the preceding article.

ART. 3. For each of the old titles of articles 6, 7, and 9 of the sinking fund verified and recognized as valuable there will be delivered through the agency of the National Bank to the party entitled thereto a new title of 80 gourdes; the titles of the other categories shall be of 100 gourdes each.

They shall bring 5 per cent. interest per year; they shall be of different colors numbered by categories, have attached half-yearly coupons and bearing three signatures—that of the one encharged with the service of the sinking fund, that of a member delegated from the chief comptroller's office, and for control that of the director of the National Bank.

ART. 4. The fractions resulting from the couponing of the values shall be inscribed on a special register of the bank; a receipt shall be given, and a public regulating commission will make known what shall be decided in regard to them.

ART 5. The old titles of public effects, and whatever withdrawn from circulation, shall be canceled under the care of the bank, with mention made of the respective numbers that shall replace them, classified and bundled up to be remitted to the secretary of state of finances.

ART. 6. The interests on the old titles of the sinking fund shall cease from January

The holders who exchange their titles before that date will alone have the right to receive interest for the first semester. After that delay the others will have right only to interest of the following semester that comes after that of the exchange of

ART. 7. After the 1st of January, 1889, no titles whatever will be exchanged, and all reclamation in this regard will be null and of no account.

ART. 8. The service of the interest on the new titles shall take place on the 1st of January and the 1st of July of each year, at the wicket of the National Bank at Port au Prince in return for the expired coupon. In consequence, and as it is stipulated in article 6, the first coupon shall be paid the first of July of the same year.

ART. 9. Independently of the service of interest there shall be operated on the capital of the new titles a sinking fund of 1 per cent. per year, the said sinking fund augmenting itself each year gradually from the interest of the canceled titles of the preceding year.

The sinking fund shall be annual and shall take place by drawing by lot the 1st of June of each year for the re-imbursement of the titles to be made on the 1st of July

The titles coming from the wheel in the drawing that shall take place publicly at the National Bank, under the care of the latter and in the presence of a delegate of the secretary of state of finances and of the one encharged with the sinking fund, cease to have any right to interest from July 1st.

The first drawing will take place on the 1st of June, 1888.

ART. 10. As soon as the work of conversion and consolidation shall be finished by the exchange of the titles there shall be drawn up a table for each category of the interior debt, fixed as is stated in articles 1 and 2.

The total extinction of the debt, after the basis laid down in article 9, shall be fixed later.

ART. 11. To assure the service established by the present, the Government delegates to the National Bank from January 1, 1888, and as specially affected title, a sum of fifty-hundredths of a dollar in gold per 100 pounds of coffee, to be raised on the exportation dues, and the amount shall be converted into national money at the market rate and for the account of the Government.

ART. 12. By means of this declaration the bank engages itself to perform the service of which it is question, and to open in its books a special account to that effect in accumulating the receipts effectuated to apply the amount to the payment of the half-yearly coupons and the sinking-fund titles.

The Government on its part forbids the touching of the funds for any motive what-

ART. 13. In case that this amount set apart is not sufficient to secure at the end of a half year, or of one year, the payment of the interests due and the liquidation, the Government engages itself, so as to avoid all interruption in the payments to be made, to make good the deficiency by means of other resources; if there is an excess it will be entered by right to the credit of the account opened for that purpose.

ART. 14. There shall be allowed to the bank a commission of 11 per cent. on the service of the interests and of the interior debt converted or consolidated.

ART. 15. The present law abrogates all laws or provisions of laws that are contrary thereto; it shall be printed, published, and executed at the diligence of the secretary of state of finance and of commerce.

No. 56.1

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 12, 1887.

Mr. Minister: The undersigned minister resident of the United States of America has the honor to invite the attention of the Hon. Brutus St. Victor, secretary of state of foreign relations, to the law passed the 9th instant relative to the bonds of the Caisse d'Amortissement, as bearing connection with such of those bonds held by this legation for American citizens.

The undersigned allows himself to remark that since the aforesaid bonds held at this legation are not such as were obtained by purchase at low rates as a speculation, but were given by the Haytien Government in payment of claims in lieu of advancing the same amounts in specie currency to settle these ascertained claims, it is not just to lower their face value and diminish by 1 per cent. the interest they should by law call for annually.

The undersigned feels certain that the Haytien Government, in its equitableness, will discriminate between the bonds herein-above mentioned and those obtained by purchase as a commercial transaction.

It may be well to state that the bonds intrusted to the custody of this legation were obtained by agreement between the representative of the United States on one side, and the secretary of state of foreign affairs of Hayti on the other; consequently each bond in comparison to those obtained otherwise may safely be considered a bond sui generis, and this may be well illustrated by the fact that there has been uo traffic whatever in the interest payments.

The undersigned requests most respectfully of the honorable minister for foreign affairs to examine the particular cases herein stated, and to agree that there should in no way be a change in the value of obligations when given internationally, by diplomatic intervention and arrangement. Relying on a response to this dispatch at an early day, I avail, etc.,

No. 155.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 26, 1887.

(Received December 12.)

SIR: Referring to my antecedent dispatch, No. 163, of the 14th instant, I have the honor to call to your attention inclosure A, with translation B, the reply from the honorable minister for foreign affairs relative to the new law governing the bonds of the Caisse d'Amortissement and those of such bonds held at this legation for our citizens; also the back interest due on the bonds. You will observe the honorable secretary of state refers me to his colleague of finance, after the question had been discussed at a cabinet meeting. I made haste to send a note to the minister of finance, and in reply thereto received a letter from him, wherein he regretted being unable to meet me before Tuesday, the 22d At 4 p. m. that day I called at his city residence; was received most cordially, and we entered into the discussion, first, as to the manner the bonds were received by our citizens; secondly, as to the back interest, one year three months and fifteen days' interest being due December 31, 1887.

I may here state that after the promulgation of the law regarding a diminution in the value of these bonds, I was called upon by the French chargé d'affaires at one time, and by the German diplomatic consul at another time, both of whom wished to find out my views as to the acceptation of or protestation against such law. I could give them no advice on the subject whatever, particularly as I have cause to believe that our citizens' bonds are the only bonds that were in payment of contractual claims and settled through the good offices of this legation; but it is now generally understood by foreigners here that their Governments can not legally make this law a question for international claims, for if foreigners take risks outside of their own country they must run the risk of loss or gain; hence all are making the best of it.

By my argument in my private character, I was able to convince the Hon. Calesthenes Fouchard that the arrangement he had made was an injustice to my countrymen; that with such a precedent they later might again reduce the bonds until their intrinsic value became nil, and that a proper discrimination should have been made in their case. Our argument was long, and the details many, but I surpassed my most sanguine anticipations in an equitable conclusion, which was:

First. That the sum of interest due to October 15, 1887, be paid in full on the 20th of December proximo.

Second. That the three months and fifteen days' interest (to December 31, 1887) be converted into the new bonds.

Third. That in the exchange of the bonds for new ones we should simply make an interchange; that is to say, they will be exchanged for their face value, dollar for dollar, and bear the same title as at present, viz, cent piasters fortes, but will draw interest as the new law states, 5 per cent. per annum. In this manner, as there are at this legation bonds to the value of $176,800, our citizens have been saved, on the capital alone, $35,360.

By the new law all back interest and up to December 31, 1887, is to be converted into bonds; now, instead of our citizens having all of their interest, which amounts to $12,818, converted into bonds, they will receive $10,608 interest to October 15, 1887, cash, December 20, 1887; and the remaining interest from October 15 to December 31, 1887, $2,210, alone will be converted into bonds; in fact, their loss will be simply nominal compared with the other holders, and for the future a loss of 1 per cent. per year on the interest is all they will have to sustain. I inclose herein, marked C, with translation D, the dispatch from the honorable Brutus St. Victor, confirming the agreement between his colleague and myself, to which I sent a reply immediately, and in accordance to his request, copy of which reply is herein transmitted, marked E.

According to the verbal instructions received from the Department last year, I notified all parties holding bonds (after receiving instructions that I could use my good offices for them) that the interest could not be collected unless the bonds were here. Some sent their bonds; the loss to the others is their own fault, and I can see no means of assisting them should they request, for I could only use my personal efforts to the utmost for those citizens who had deposited bonds at this legation. In making such an arrangement with the minister of finance, and I am confident none other will be so successful, I used every endeavor to save from pecuniary loss those who had placed bonds in my custody. Another fact is this: Many of the holders of such bonds, American citizens, have used them as means of commercial transactions in Hayti, while the bonds at this legation have been here solely for the purpose of collecting the interest thereon; consequently I think their holders should have received all of the protection possible, and flatter myself that they have been protected from material loss. I therefore respectfully submit this to the Department's consideration, laying particular stress upon the fact that had no action with a profound earnestness been taken, our citizens, with implicit confidence in the integrity of the Haytian Government recognizing their debt, would have lost 20 per cent. of their capital and one year's interest, aggregating nearly $50,000.

I have, etc.,

Mr. Minister: I have the honor of acknowledging receipt of yours of this date, and in response thereto beg most respectfully to remark that in the article speaking of the interest to be paid December 20 proximo, it would be well to note the amount as being 10,608 gourdes, instead of 10,000, "sauf vérification."

In the second case we are in accord that the interest from October 15 ultimo to December 31 proximo, amounting to 2010 pringters be converted into the came bonds.

In the second case we are in accord that the interest from October 15 utilmo to December 31 proximo, amounting to 2,210 piastres, be converted into the same bonds as in the third and last case, viz, that the new bonds will be made out the same in face value as the "anciens titres," which call for "cent piastres fortes."

Expressing to you, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my most distinguished consideration, I allow myself to remark that in such equitable manner it is certain the representatives of our respective countries may always be enabled to conserve the most condict relations between the two Covenness. cordial relations between the two Governments.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Port au Prince, Hayti, December 24, 1887. (Received January 11, 1888.)

SIR: It is now reported here that in pursuance of a law passed by the Legislature and sanctioned by the President of Hayti, the contract passed between the Government of Hayti and the Count d'Oksza, who has obtained the concession to lay a submarine cable between the Mole St. Nicholas and Santiago de Cuba, has been sanctioned, and he is to commence his labors in that direction by Christmas.

The cable is to connect with a line of telegraphy from the Mole St. Nicholas to the capital and other important cities in Hayti, and also to be continued to the Dominican frontier. The concession is granted Law bearing on the sanctioning of a contract for the establishment of a submarine cable.

Salomon, President of Hayti:

Considering that it imports to place the country in rapid communication with the nations of Europe, the two Americas, and the other Antilles by submarine cable in view of facilitating our political and commercial relations;

Considering that it imports to join together the principal cities of the Republic by a line of telegraph that shall be stretched to the Dominican frontier on the proposition of the secretary of state of the interior, and from the advice of the council of the secretaries of state;

Has proposed, and the legislative body has voted, the following law:

ARTICLE 1. Is and remains sanctioned the hereto annexed contract, passed between the Government of Hayti, represented by Mr. Etienne Charles Laforesterie, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti near the Government of the French Republic, and Mr. the Count d'Oksza, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor of Isabella the Catholic of the Conception, etc., etc., who has the concession of several telegraphic, lines in Europe, Africa, and America, residing at Paris, No. 22 rue Beaune, for the establishment and working of one or more submarine cables, joining Hayti to Santiago de Cuba by the Mole St. Nicholas.

ARTICLE 2. The present law abrogates all laws or provisions of laws that may be contrary thereto, and shall be executed at the diligence of the secretaries of state of the interior and of finance and commerce.

No. 181.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Port au Prince, Hayti, May 26, 1888. (Received June 18.)

SIR: Rumors of political troubles have been spreading over this Republic ever since the report some two months ago that President Salomon was mortally ill and would request of Congress a congé in order to leave Hayti and receive medical treatment abroad; and notwithstanding repeated open denials of the verity of these stories by the President they were retailed as truths.

Lately it has been said that the minister of France and myself had each sent for war vessels to assist the President in escaping from the country should civil troubles arise, the feeling being that his health would prevent him combating enemies that attempted to overthrow him.

885HAYTI.

Wednesday, the 23d instant, in an audience with President Salomon, when speaking of the situation, he assured me that everything was per-feetly quiet, and that he had no anxiety.

Thursday morning a great commotion occurred in this city. Business houses were quickly closed; people were running here and there, seeking refuge in legations and consulates; the troops were called out; private citizens and soldiers were going about most conspicuously armed. I immediately left the legation to discover the cause of the Arriving at the office of the commandant of the "Place," I found the soldiers in great numbers loading their rifles with ball-cartridge and bringing out boxes of ammunition. I met my colleagues of France and Great Britain at the latter's legation, and we determined to use every means in our power to keep peace and tranquillity in the city for the benefit of protecting the lives and property of foreign citizens should the apparently serious turn of events continue. for our horses and rode around the city, meeting at the post-office President Salomon, his ministers, many officers, and aids-de-camp. We were particular to approach him. After shaking hands with each, he said words to the effect that it was not a serious affair, as he had been forewarned; it only appeared that some people were tired of living. This sounded sufficiently serious to us, sustained by the looks of bellig-

The city was declared in a state of siege by the publication of the following order:

DECREE.

Salomon, President of Hayti, in view of articles 197 and 198 of the constitution and the law of April 13 on the state of siege, with the advice of the council of the secretaries of state, has decreed and decrees what follows:

ART. 1. The arrondissement of Port an Prince is declared to be in a state of siege.

ART. 2. The present decree shall be printed, published, and executed at the diligence of the secretaries of state, each in what concerns him.

Given at the National Palace the 24th of May, 1888, the eighty-fifth year of the independence.

SALOMON.

By the President:

The secretary of state of war and of marine,

T. A. S. SAM.

The secretary of state of the interior and of agriculture,

M. MONTASSE.

The secretary of state of public instruction and justice,

ARTEAUD.

At the arsenal a piece of cannon guarded the street, and sentinels were stationed all about the city. The two Haytian war vessels were hauled around, presenting their broadsides to the city.

The report through the city was that Senator F. D. Légitime, exsecretary of the interior and of agriculture, was suspected of being at the head of the movement. A guard was placed around his house, which was said to contain many armed men, who would resist should an attempt be made to arrest him. At this legation I was informed by several-all serious men, some in politics, others that were not-that if Senator Légitime was arrested, as they knew him to be an honorable man and not a conspirator, they, too, would return to their homes, arm themselves, and resist against such arrest. I again mounted my horse and went to confer with my two colleagues. They also had heard of these threats that were being openly made all over the city. Understanding that at midday troops would be sent to his house to arrest him or fire upon him, we determined to go to the palace, confer with President Salomon, and, if possible, alleviate the peril of the situation. there a few minutes before noon, we found the grounds literally crowded with soldiers and armed citizens; a large mitrailleuse stood beside a heavy cannon, each fully equipped and menacing the entrance to the palace. The President was in council with his ministers, and requested us to ascend there without any delay. The French minister, the Count de Sesmaisons, dean of the diplomatic body, explained that we were not there to interfere in the least with the internal affairs or politics of Hayti, but in order to foster tranquillity in the city and pacify threatening danger we had felt it our duty to come before him and point out facts that we believed to be true, and which we also believed we could, with his permission, modify, so that they would have a less aspect of approaching warfare. While we were in this council I saw the steamyacht of the Transatlantic Company, which is always under the French minister's orders, steaming out of the harbor, bound for the Mole St. Nicholas, carrying, among cablegrams from the French and British representatives, one from me, as follows:

SECRETARY OF STATE,

Washington, U. S. A.,

Send war vessel; revolution imminent.

THOMPSON,

Hayti.

I felt then we must use every endeavor to pacify matters for a few days; anything legal to gain time.

The President said at the moment we entered they were trying to formulate some manner of having Senator Légitime brought to the palace without any disturbance. We then proposed to accompany him there and act as bondsmen of his word of honor, if he declared that he would not by any method employ means of a revolutionary character or otherwise to upset, interfere with, or embitter the government of President Salomon. Some of the ministers objected to this, and finally, after rehearing the whole affair, the President said:

I assure you, gentlemen, that Senator Légitime will come to this palace and depart therefrom in safety. I wish to talk with him; three of his friends and colleagues, the Minister St. Victor, the president of the senate, and Senator Pierre, my brother-in-law, will bring him here and return with him.

We could well appreciate the calming effect that would be produced upon the populace when seeing a suspected man they nearly all appear to honor quietly riding to the palace in such company. Our intervention had had its effect. That afternoon I received, as did my two colleagues, a card from Mr. Légitime, which, translated, read as follows:

Mr. MINISTER:

I will write to-morrow to the diplomatic body. In the interval permit me to express my thanks for your intervention during this day.

The following morning I received the letter (copy herein transmitted, with translation) marked, respectively, "B" and "C."

The city remains in a "state of siege," and a feverish, latent uneasiness seems to pervade the thoughts and actions of every one.

[Extract.]

No. 186.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, June 11, 1888. (Received June 20.)

SIR: Saturday, the 2d instant, I believe was only the end of the prologue in what might be called a political drama that commenced here the 24th ultimo, causing great excitement and trepidation in this city, and which, sooner or later, must begin again, but with increased vigor. The facts of the whole movement appear to be as follows: As reported in my No. 181, trouble has been brewing in Hayti since the wide-spread belief in the illness of President Salomon. From utterances lately attributed to him it was thought, should he retire, he would cast such an influence for ex-Minister of the Interior General François Manigat, a deputy of the people, that he would become his successor. To counteract this influence those remaining of the Liberal party joined with others of the National party, in order to be prepared when the opportunity arrived to combat the candidature of General Manigat; they had consequently chosen as their candidate General F. D. Légitime, a senator of the Republic.

Comparisons had been drawn between the two abovementioned, Senator Legitime being eulogized as a humane man, honorable, brave, and without any prejudice as to color. Deputy Manigat, by his action when commander of the Government forces at Jacmel, in 1883, has been called barbarous, blood-thirsty, and accused of great hatred toward the whites and mulattoes, yet generous to a fault towards his friends. Both of them are black men. I have known Mr. Manigat intimately ever since my arrival here. Mr. Légitime I knew by reputation only.

Referring to my No. 181, I can say, from observation on May 24 last, from facts gleaned in consular dispatch No. 313, dated September 25, 1885, to the Department from Vice-Consul-General John B. Terres, from inquiries made by me and statements given by foreigners and natives, that the general opinion is, that the same tactics were about to be employed on May 24 past as were so disastrously put in force September 22 and 23, 1883. In such dispatch above quoted you will observe how all the fearful disasters of September, 1883, resulted from an attack of some young men to the number of sixteen or twenty; then the President had said how he could not control the friends of his government against his enemies. The mob, furious in their drunken frenzy and lust, burned down stores and private dwellings, pillaged them, and placed in danger, by their constant use of fire-arms, the lives of men, women, and children.

Mr. Burdel, minister of France, was at that time dean of the diplomatic body, and, had he used decision of character, firmness, and moral influence at the beginning of the disorders, very likely he could have materially bettered the situation; for when the ultimatum was sent to the palace the effects might be said to have been magical. Inclosed herein, marked "A," with translation "B," I transmit copy of the speech made by President Salomon in public audience on May 27 last. It is noticeable that while his excellency assures the people that all is perfectly quiet, nevertheless he says he will take measures to chastise the propagators and authors; and, furthermore, he alleges to have known something concerning a conspiracy menacing public peace, hence martial law is proclaimed in this city and at this date it remains in vigor.

Also inclosed, marked "C," with translation "D," is an editorial from La Vérité, an independent newspaper, treating of the situation on the 2d instant.

As I reported in my No. 185, Senator Légitime and Deputy Manigat each had a separate vessel placed at his disposal by the Government to convey him from Hayti, the former to Kingston, Jamaica, the latter to Europe via Santiago de Cuba.

This treatment of men thought to be conspirators is somewhat novel and rare in the history of Hayti; but had either one or the other been summarily dealt with, and particularly Légitime, the great probability is that now we would be in the midst of a most savage and sanguinary warfare. I transmit, herein, with translation, respectively marked E and F, copy of a published letter sent to the editor of the Courrier d'Haïti from Mr. Légitime, while on board the steamer in which he took his departure. Sending away the leaders of these opposing factions has calmed the people and we may hope for a short respite from civil troubles. No doubt President Salomon in his wisdom had to oppose by an iron will the opinions of his councilors regarding the action he has taken in not executing either of these men, but by so doing he has shown that he fully appreciated the necessity, in order to keep from civil strife, of following out a line of conduct to pacify the dual political factions and likewise tranquilize factions and the non-politic natives. As a question of our present peaceableness, he has done well, but the fear must be entertained that it is momentary, so to speak, for the danger does not lie in any outside party; treason is being fostered in his own camp. All depends upon the President's health. Let him remain sound in body as at present; all is likely then to go well.

Consul General Zohrab, of Great Britain, proposed to the French minister and myself the practicability of having always here an American, French, or English man-of war, one or the other, on hand in case of an emergency, as either in a moment of peril would be equally interested to protect the interests of the other. I believe such would be a good thing as giving a certain confidence to foreign residents, for the moment they see a war vessel of one of the great powers enter here each one feels out of danger. Commander Heyerman, of the Yantic, informed me that should he not receive orders to the contrary at Santiago de Cuba he would return to Port au Prince, as, having been here and made inquiries into the status of affairs, he thought we would certainly lose nothing by such representation. Her majesty's steam-ship Ready is expected here shortly to relieve the Wrangler, and it is likely we shall have constantly for a while a French or British war vessel.

THE AUDIENCE OF MAY 27.-SPEECH OF PRESIDENT SALOMON.

Here are the words of the Chief of State to the audience of Sunday, May 27, last: GENTLEMEN: I begin my audience in saying to you that order and tranquillity is maintained and will continue to maintain itself whatever be done. The country reclaims peace. There is only a panic. Everybody is in an emotion, and it sufficed for a nothing that everybody became frightened. Thus the same thing happened in 1843, when it was question of the overthrow of the government of President Boyer, I myself, who speak to you, being in church I saw the gun of a soldier fall and the charge went off; on going into the street, as I saw everybody run, I also started off and ran.

But I will own that I was frightened. [Laughter.] Therefore, my friends of Port au Prince, I invite you to be calm. I take all precaution, all measures so as to chastise the propagators and authors of the rumors of the other day. My government expected that rumor; we have even talked it over in the council, my ministers and myself, the day when it was decided to suppress the discounting (of Government paper). I knew that once the public employés were regularly paid there would be some discontented—those who live by the discounting, the favored of yesterday. [Here there are cries of "Long live the President of Hayti."]

The public mind is for peace—that peace that I have given to the country at the cost of so many sacrifices. I will maintain it by all means. If a shot is fired, which is not impossible, for there are persons who are crazy and foolish everywhere, the sun shall not go down without peace being restored. Avoid that, for bullets have no eyes; they may strike any one. It is not the merchants and people who work who are trying to disturb public order; it is the unclassified people who possess, nothing and are jealous of the position of others. I say it, and I repeat it again, never has the country enjoyed so much liberty and security; never has property been so well respected and requited.

To-day every poor one is putting a post in the ground; this is a sign of the security that the country enjoys. I was eleven years minister of the Emperor Soulouque, and I was reduced during all that time not to be able to cross the portal. They came to me and made me thousands of propositions against the Emperor, and I never lent ear to them. It is only lately that I have come to know "Oakwood" and "The Martyr's Cross." I am acquinted with all that is going on. There is this difference between the Emperor Soulouque and myself; it is this: The police informed him of all that was going on, while it is I who give instructions to the police to watch the conduct of such or such other individual.

Before coming to a last extremity I take all my precautions. Therefore let them not try to disturb the public peace, my friends! They say that I am about to leave the country; to go and be treated in Europe. Nothing is more false. I solemnly declare that I am not going away. If I have consecrated all my life to the well being of my fellow-citizens, as there remains, I will not say a few years, but a few days to live, why should I not sacrifice them to the country? If I went away it would be a flight, a desertion, a cowardice. On returning to Hayti I have sworn to leave my bones here.

The situation is good, my friends; yes, it is good, because everybody to-day is a partisan of peace. I am alive and they are disputing about the power! They covet my heritage. [Laughter among the audience.] It is also to me a question of pride, of self-esteem, and of dignity to conserve that power. I am, above all, chief of state, and I will not permit that they vilify the power in my hands. I have taken it from no one.

To-day is not an audience day, but on account of the rumors that they circulate and of all that has taken place at Port au Prince the few days past only, I felt bound to entertain you on the state of affairs.

Order and tranquillity, I repeat it, reigns on all points of the Republic!

[Inclosure 2 in No. 186.—Extract from "La Vérité."—Translation.]

THE SITUATION.

Still droll. That is all that can be said. On the whole no one knows much what there is. Only minds are uneasy; very unquiet even. We have seen last week a nothing but the population in a flurry. Last Saturday the report of a gun caused a great panic. Unfortunately, it seems to methat no great precautions have been taken to prevent these reports. The military and even individuals not belonging to the army are circulating with carbines on their shoulders. All have cartridges and sometimes their guns are loaded. It depends on the first comer to frighten families. It would be more prudent not to allow the soldiers to go about with their arms, and ammunition, particularly, should not be distributed to them only at the last minute. Too much precaution can not be taken to prevent that order be not disturbed.

Our article of last Saturday has produced a good effect. We warmly thank our readers for the kindly reception that they gave to it. The paper will be strong and will end in imposing itself, if it always marches in accord with the numerous public that reads it. We remain calm and moderate because we know that one imprudent word may occasion a great evil. We continue, therefore, to relate the facts with impartiality and to exhort our fellow-citizens to avoid all bloodshed. The country has need of the aid of all its children and of all without distinction. We will never urge on brothers to arm themselves against each other.

This language must astonish the authorities who detest us because we have never hesitated to examine their acts with independence.

The truth arrives to chiefs of state with difficulty. They are most often surrounded by persons interested in hiding it from them. They are therefore always inclined to consider as enemies those who from afar dare to make them hear it. As for ourselves, faithful to our programme, we will continue to tell the truth. According to all appearances the Chief of State was ignorant of the true state of affairs of the country, or at least of Port au Prince. He must be very badly informed. The panie of the few days past has doubtlessly revealed to him some curious things. Now that he is in condition to appreciate the situation we are certain that he will make all efforts to maintain peace.

He has declared solemnly that he did not intend going away; that he will not go away. This assurance has tranquilized those who feared anarchy and the disorders that might follow. It has produced a report very necessary, a report more accentuated by the news of the near departure of the two chiefs of parties.

The rumor is current that Messrs. Légitime and Manigat are about to take a short voyage of pleasure. They were advised to take this change of air. Mr. Manigat has already asked for a leave of absence, which the house of deputies has granted to him, in its session of May 28. Will the departure of Mr. Manigat suffice to completely reassure the public mind? Here we do but echo the opinions; we do but relate what is said. It is with the power to hunt out the truth in what is being spread about. Well they pretend, the public, that they are persons, functionaries, who are preparing a blow in favor of the deputy, Manigat. And these functionaries will continue to cause uneasiness to families. Mr. Manigat in leaving the country certainly makes a sacrifice, for which they will be thankful to him. This sacrifice should not be use-It should at least serve to calm, to entirely assure the public mind. imitated by those who, wrongly or rightly, they render responsible for the panic? That is what is being asked in a whisper.

HAYTI.

On the whole, the horizon is clearing off. Thanks to the good-will of all, they will avoid the frightful catastrophe of which the perspective so frightened the families. And we think that our fellow-citizens will be wise enough not to cut each other's throats. It would be fine to prove to our detractors that we know how to get out of a critical situation without violence, without cannon-shot! What a joyful spectacle for the country, if at the expiration of the power of the present chief we name a new one without putting the country in blood and ashes.

Is it an unrealizable dream? We do not think so. We address ourselves to all those who sincerely love Hayti; to all the good citizens. They will encourage certainly the efforts that we attempt to make the law triumph. No more bloody struggles, no more gunshots. Peaceful struggles, lawful but sincere. We want to see now where true patriotism is to be found.

LAST HOUR.

We make it our duty to stop our press to publish the following letter received only at 4 o'clock at our office:

Mr. GEORGES DAUZON,

Director of Le Courrier d'Haiti:

Mr. DIRECTOR: Before embarking for a foreign country and take the irrevocable decision to which I am condemned from a situation that I have not created and events of which I leave the responsibility to those who have provoked it, I believe it due to my honor and my dignity to make known to you that the Government, without doubt to give me a proof of its high deference, offered me a subsidy to defray the expenses of my voyage.

I accept the ostracism, but I do not accept the money, for when there is cause to make a sacrifice for his country the citizen should push self-denial to the extreme.

It is with regret that I separate myself from my fellow-citizens, but I esteem that the example of the sacrifice that I accept without murmuring will give all to understand that one must at certain moments know how to immolate his personal interests and his most sacred affections on the altar of his country.

I leave, confiding in their wisdom, happy if the sacrifice that is imposed on me, and to which I resign myself, could prevent new misfortunes to my country already so rudely tried. I am not one of those who have no scruples of trying to raise themselves to power on the bodies of their fellow citizens and the smoking ruins of their country. All true citizens, all men of honor, will understand and approve me.

Strong in my conscience and above all of sacrifices and devotion to the Republic in the past, I feel happy to give it this last pledge of my love. I am proud to bear to my retreat the harsh satisfaction of having fulfilled, up to the end, my duty.

Accept, Mr. Director, the assurance of my esteem and of my high consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 11, 1888.

SIR: A telegram having been received at this Department on the 26th ultimo from our consul at Santiago de Cuba, stating that you considered a revolution to be imminent and desired the presence of a United States war vessel, the Navy Department was so advised and this Department was informed on the same day that Admiral Luce had been ordered to send one of his vessels from Port Royal to Port au Prince.

The Department has since received information that the Yantic, the vessel so sent, had reached Port au Prince and reports that there is now no apparent apprehension of revolutionary disturbances in Hayti.

It is hoped that full confirmation of this gratifying intelligence will be received from you.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, June 11, 1888.

SIR: I received a note from the honorable C. Fouchard, secretary of the treasury of the Haytien Government, on Sunday, the 2d instant, requesting an interview with me. We met the same day and remained together several hours. He assured me at first that all was perfectly quiet politically, but later on, to accomplish his desire, had to show by his conversation that his ideas "in toto" regarding political quietude were greatly at variance, for he acknowledged the anxiety he felt, and believing something would happen, begged me to promise to give him refuge should he be pushed too hard.

Not feeling able to give a promise of such a kind in advance of a case that could be considered only on its merits, and at the time, I simply reiterated to him his previous words that all was quiet and over, and while being sympathetic with him remained absolutely non-committal.

This would not be of such importance if I had not been informed a few days later by the French minister that he had been visited by the honorable Brutus St. Victor, and on a similar mission. This seemed to be evidence that even those who should be the most intimate with the actual Government had forebodings for the near future.

The general of the place has informed me, but with the request that I guard the secret, that the order had been given to arrest Senator Legitime or bombard his house in case of resistance on the 24th ultimo at midday, and had it not been for the diplomatic body such order would have been carried out, and then he with his soldiers would probably have been forced to attack the general of the arrondissement and his forces, for, as nearly all here, he was in sympathy with Legitime.

This information will, I presume, show you that for some days the situation was exceedingly critical.

I also transmit herein copy, with translation, marked C and D, respectively, of an article that appeared in the Courrier d'Haïti in reply to an editorial published in the semi-official journal, L'Oeil, wherein it was most distinctly averred that there was nothing in the political movements that have lately taken place.

The article is sufficiently well put to call for some attention, as indicating the steps taken by this Government, which showed plainly that trouble of a serious nature was at hand.

EXTRACT FROM THE MONITOR OF JUNE 14, 1888.

The journals La Vérité and L'Avenir National, in their number of June 9 instant, have reproduced, very inexactly in several places, the words that his excellency the President of the Republic pronounced in his audience of Sunday, June 3. We cite among others the two following from La Vérité, where the thoughts of the President are quite falsely rendered. In the first place it is question of what his excellency said about the arrival of foreign vessels of war in our harbor:

"I see with regret, the presence in our waters of foreign war vessels. It is for me a cause of shame, a humiliation. They have come to protect the interests of their compatriots. My Government is strong enough to be at any hour master of all commotion, of all disorder. Foreign and Haytian interest will be watched over."

Far from that, here are the proper words of the chief of state on that subject:

"What is sad to see is, that the uneasiness that reigned in Port au Prince has caused to come to our harbor foreign vessels of war. It would be a shame, a humiliation for me if those vessels came to protect the interest of their compatriots, for my Government is sufficiently strong to be at any hour master of any disorder and to protect the interest of Haytians and of the foreigners who are in the country.'

The other passage relates to what the President said of the proposals that were made to him during the time of the government of President Salnave. Here again the thoughts of the President are not the less distorted.

To show this it suffices to reproduce the text of La Vérité and the words of the President. In fact we read in the journal La Vérité:

"I come to power without the aid of any person, by the free choice of the national assembly. They who reach it by the force of arms do not keep it a long time. General Anselme Prophète, here present, made me proposals, under Salnave, tending to place the vessels of the Government at my order. I refused becasue I was the representative of the government of Salnave in Europe. Many would not have acted as I did.'

But here is what the President said in this regard:

"I came to power without the assistance of any person by the free choice of the national assembly. Those who arrive to power by the force of arms do not keep it a long time. I would never conspire to become chief of state. General Anselme, here present, knows something of this. He knows what he wrote to me one time, and what I answered him. Proposals were made to me under Salnave tending to place at my order the vessels that the Government had ordered in the United States to combat the insurrection at that time. I refused, being incapable of treason."

Here an explanation is necessary.

General Anselme Prophète when in exile, at New York, after the fall and death of President Salnave, whom he had served with devotion and fidelity, wrote to General Salomon, transmitting to him the grievances of friends who complained that the latter did nothing to alleviate their fate. General Salomon answered to General Anselme Prophète that he had nothing to do for friends, who if they could not oppose the execution of his brother, of his parents, and of his friends, should have protested by their abstention. It is to this that the President of the Republic made allusion in the passage of his discourse concerning General Anselme Prophète, who is an honorable officer and has never betrayed any of the governments in whose service he found himself. The offer of the vessels was made at a time when President Salnave was still in power. Therefore it could have no relation to General Anselme, who was at the time in the country

L'Avenir National on its side, relating a passage of the same discourse concerning

General Jeanty, lends to the President the following words:

"They have a project now to have General Jeanty dismissed. I will not do it. Jeanty is with Prudo and Jean Jumeau, the man who renders the greatest service to my Government. It is, thanks to these three generals, that I am able to maintain peace, etc."

His excellency expressed himself thus:

"They want me to dismiss General Jeanty. I will not do it. General Jeanty has my full confidence. Dismiss General Jeanty, what confidence would I inspire to Generals Prudo, Jean Jumeau, Turenne Jn. Gilles, and all my other commandants of arrondissements, who aid me so powerfully and, without exception, maintain order and tranquillity?'

To say differently would be to hurt the feelings gratuitously of the other commandants of arrondissements, who all make the same efforts, showing an equal devotion to maintain and consolidate more and more the public peace. He cited but two or three, because he could not name them all at once. And that is why, assured of the devotion of his lieutenants and of the assistance of all good citizens, the chief of state says, and will not cease repeating, that his government is strong. And so it is really.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 188.—Extract from "L'Courrier d'Haïti."—Translation.]

WHOM DO THEY WANT TO DECEIVE?

In its number of to-day, L'Oeil journal, subventioned by the Government of the Republic of Hayti, strives in an article, grotesque enough, to prove that the 24th and 25th May past there was no movement, there was no disorder—briefly, that there was nothing.

If there was nothing, why was the state of siege proclaimed?

Does not article 187 of the constitution forbid the Government to declare in a state of siege any portion of the territory of the Republic, except in case of civil troubles and that of imminent invasion on the part of a foreign army?

If there was nothing, why has not the executive power, notwithstanding the desire expressed by the chambers and by the independent press, raised that exceptional measure? Why?

Do they declare a state of siege in Hayti frivolously and when there is nothing? If there was nothing, why place cannons in the streets? Why 8,000 armed men, with loaded guns, dispersed over the city?

If there was nothing, why for more than ten days respectable people could not close their eyes during the night on account of real howls uttered by the armed posts at the corner of each square?

If there was nothing, why did the eminent men, representative of foreign powers in Hayti, with all haste, have come into the harbor of Port au Prince war vessels to protect their compatriots?

If there was nothing, why these words of the President of the Republic addressed to General Anselme, words that the President begged that general to transmit to the troops:

"I have but praise to address to the army for its conduct during the last events. Every one did his duty, and I am convinced that everybody will do so to the end."

If there was nothing, why did his excellency say, sufficiently loud to be heard by all the assistants, first at the palace, that since they forced him to it, he was going to shoot a heap of people, and afterward, on the sea-side, that there were people tired of living?

If there was nothing, why, then, send off two honorable elects of the people? When the journal L'Oeil says that it is of their own will that these two honorable citizens have left the sacred territory of their country, it says knowingly the contrary of the truth. The letter of the honorable Senator Legitime proves this in a sufficiently clear manner.

Would to God that on the eve of the bloody events of September (1883) the diplomatic body had acted with the same firmness. What massacres, what crimes, what reprisals without name, would have been avoided; and yet on the eve of incendiary, pillage, they cry everywhere: There is nothing. The Courrier d'Haiti maintains its saying.

The firm and categoric attitude, as much on the part of the Government as of the diplomatic body, has prevented a crisis the issue of which at this hour remains still a mystery for everybody.

That that energetic attitude has deranged the little financial combinations of certain ones, destroyed more than one unhealthy hope, is a thing acknowledged.

As for ourselves, we can but thank, and from the depth of our heart, those who have placed the tranquillity of the country, human existence, and their duty above the infamous traffic of money.

SIR: I have received your Nos. 181, 185, and 186 (Dip. series), of the 26th ultimo and 6th and 11th instant, in which you narrate the circumstances which led you to telegraph to the Department on the 24th ultimo, your fear that a revolution in Hayti was imminent, and which thus caused the prompt dispatch of the U.S. S. Yantic to Port au Prince.

The difficulties to which you advert appear to have grown out of the opposing candidacy of Senator Légitime and Deputy Manigat, supposed aspirants for the presidency; but these gentlemen having voluntarily quitted the island, as reported in your dispatch No. 185, quiet would seem to be assured for the present.

It is observed that in the interview held by yourself and certain of your diplomatic colleagues with President Salomon you report as follows:

We then proposed to accompany him [Senator Légitime] there [to the palace] and act as bondsmen of his word of honor if he declared that he would not by any method employ means of a revolutionary character or otherwise, to upset, interfere with, or embitter the Government of President Salomon.

While it is always gratifying to see the good offices of representatives of the United States enlisted in behalf of preserving public tranquillity the means thus suggested may perhaps be open to question.

The nature and responsibility of the very comprehensive guaranty offered are not apparent. It is not understood how the diplomatic agent of the United States in Hayti could "act as bondsman" of the word of honor of a native Haytian charged with being concerned in movements to "upset, interfere with, or embitter" the titular Government, or where accountability would have lain had the sweeping terms of such a guaranty been evaded or not complied with. No responsibility in that case could even remotely have attached to this Government.

But speculation on this point is fortunately set aside by the fact that the offered guaranty was apparently not accepted, being replaced by President Salomon's personal engagement to insure Senator Légitime's safety on his visiting the palace.

The speculators, who are accustomed to seek their fortune in civil troubles, and who can not resign themselves to gain their living by honest labor, have recommenced, since a few days, their criminal campaign against the public peace. To assist in the success of their absurd propagandas, that have remained without effect up to this moment (thanks to the good sense of the people), but they have conceived to throw uneasiness in the minds of families by the firing of shots at night at intervals in different quarters of the city.

[Extract.]

No. 192.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Port au Prince, Hayti, July 8, 1888. (Received July 19.)

SIR: During the session of the chamber of deputies, Wednesday, the 4th instant, at noon, fire was set on the upper floor of the building by some one yet unknown, and in a few minutes the chambers were leveled to the ground. A stiff breeze was blowing toward the sea, and the fire continued, consuming, as it went, about one-tenth of the city. building of the department of the interior on this street, about ten houses from this legation, was totally destroyed, and I accepted much of their archives, at their risk, until the next day. The military department of the place totally destroyed; also the private dwelling of the minister of war, the Protestant Episcopal church and dwelling of the bishop of Hayti, the new law-school building, inaugurated the evening before; the civil court house, the Government printing-office; in all it is estimated that at least four hundred buildings were consumed by the flames that completely gutted that portion of the city and with all fury were blown towards the sea-shore, directly on the arsenal, causing all to fear that it would blow up; but, fortunately, the street dividing those burning buildings from the arsenal was so wide that by the proper precautions that were taken the fire stopped there, having no further means of sustaining itself.

Yesterday, at 10 o'clock in the morning, fire was set by some one to the private residence of the minister of justice. Again a terrible wind was blowing and the fire, continuing, arrived at one place directly to the sea-shore. Every house in that quarter was totally destroyed and the flames were only arrested by having nothing more to feed upon, after reaching a portion of that part of the city already burned.

The French man-of-war Bisson being in the harbor, the French minister had a squad of sailors to come ashore with implements to assist in stopping the progress of the fire, and they certainly worked bravely and by their persistent efforts succeeded in saving several valuable dwellings. I may say that at least one-fifth of the city is now in ruins.

Guards are placed during the day and at night at nearly every corner, and in the middle of the street a post to prevent unknown persons passing without scrutiny.

The French minister has a guard placed at his legation and gave a certain number of sailors to do guard at the British legation. He offered to do the same by this legation, but I assured him with thanks that I felt we could do very well without any such display here.

There have been a few arrests made. Should those arrested be found guilty and be executed, what will be the result? Will their friends take other means to revenge themselves, and thus place in greater jeopardy the lives and property of people? Is not the Government sufficiently strong to take rigid action in the premises? These and many other questions are now agitating the mind of every one.

Speaking with President Salomon yesterday evening, accompanied by the representatives of France and Great Britain, he said to us he had determined to take certain measures which he thought would without doubt re-establish order; that from all the other cities there were reports of peace and quietness, at Port au Prince alone there was disorder; he said he knew from facts, now, that some foreigners were pushing on these actions, considering themselves safe; they were conspiring against his Government and public order, but he would expel them from Haytian territory the same as he was forced to leave Kingston, Jamaica, when the Haytian Government then in power charged him with conspiring while living in a country in friendly relations with Hayti.

I think it a necessary measure to request that a war vessel be dispatched at once to this city, as every one is on the qui vive, expecting at any moment that some new or more dreadful catastrophe will happen. First, a fire set on the upper floor of the chamber of deputies, which, in consequence of proximity, destroyed the residence of the minister of war; three days later, at the upper part of the house of the minister of justice, and it is rumored that only by vigilant watching has the minister of the interior's private dwelling, situated at the other end of the city, thus far been secured from the work of a political incendiary. At the fire yesterday the smell of petroleum was noticed by all who inspected the disaster.

It is reported that several were caught with proofs in their possession showing their complicity in the events of the past few days; also several others who were found in the act of setting fire will be tried, and, if found guilty, shot to morrow or Tuesday. The President in his public audience to-day said he would now take the severest measures to protect public order.

Port au Prince, Hayti, July 16, 1888. (Received July 26.)

SIR: Tuesday night, of the 10th instant, the carriage-house of General Brenor Prophète, ex-minister of war and marine, situated almost directly opposite to my residence at Turgeau, was totally destroyed by the work of an incendiary between 11 and 12 o'clock.

The day previous a man named Romulus

The day previous a man named Romulus Romain, alleged to have been caught in the act of putting fire to a building, was arrested by the police, and after an interrogation, shot by the soldiers. It is now said he was an innocent man. The fact is, before any one was even imprisoned since these past fires occurred every one blamed President Salomon as being too lenient; now they blame him for executing the above named, and also for imprisoning those suspected; no matter what he does now, he is harshly criticised.

Two regiments were sent for by the Government from the north, one from Gonaïves and the other from St. Marc, and at this writing are marching through the city to the quarters assigned to them, having arrived by the Haytian corvette Dessalines.

The discontented now demand that President Salomon shall revoke his private secretary, who is also secretary to the cabinet; the President accepted General Jeanty's resignation as commander of the arrondissement on demand from certain people, and if he accedes now to the popular demand for the dismissal of his secretary they will certainly clamor for further concessions, The discourse of the President at his public audience yesterday has been distorted to cause rancor to enter into the hearts of many who have until now remained calm; public opinion here is unfortunately for a change, and, by reports from other cities, I fear, like a malignant disease, dissatisfaction is spreading.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 16, 1888.

SIR: On the 11th instant a telegraphic dispatch was received from you by way of Jamaica, as follows:

JAMAICA, July 11, 1888.

STATE DEPARTMENT, Washington:

Send war vessel; political incendiarism; situation critical.

THOMPSON, Hayti.

This is the third time within a very few months that the situation of affairs in Hayti has been such, in your judgment, as to call for the immediate dispatch of war vessels of the United States to Haytian waters, for the protection of American interests there in the event of anticipated civil disturbance.

On the former occasions it was found conveniently practicable to have certain of our vessels, at the time cruising or preparing to cruise in the West Indies, directed to call at Port au Prince, and both times the apprehended danger has been happily averted by the evident ability of the constituted authorities of Hayti to preserve peace. It is true that your full reports of the occurrences disclosed a very disquieting condition of affairs, which, in the light of past events in the island, might well give rise to alarm, but the event in each case afforded no ground for doubting the competence of the Government to maintain order.

Urgent calls for the presence of foreign war ships in Haytian ports, especially when frequently repeated in times of political excitement, necessarily form a somewhat conspicuous expression of distrust of the local government on the part of the diplomatic representative making such requests, and the prompt resort of naval armaments thither may not unnaturally convey an impression that the envoy's government shares such distrust. It is desirable in the intercourse of independent States that such an impression should not, without grave reason, be suffered to arise.

Moreover, at the present season of the year, when risk of yellow-fever contagion is always imminent in West Indian ports, it is the aim of this Government to employ its vessels in more salubrious service, so that the lives of its officers and men may not be endangered, except in case of absolute need. Such necessity must be thoroughly understood to justify the dispatch of a vessel of the Navy to unhealthy waters in the season of contagion.

For these reasons I have been constrained to answer your telegram

No. 199.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Port au Prince, Hayti, August 1, 1888. (Received August 24.)

SIR: The Haytian Government, in order to relieve the victims of the late fires, have passed a law contributing $250,000, payable in four installments, to be distributed according to the loss sustained by each sufferer. I inclose herein, with translation, copy of such law, marked, respectively, A and B.

The soap factory (a concession granted to a British subject, but which has been carried on lately under the supervision of Mr. N. B. Walker, a citizen of the United States and attorney for a certain New York firm) having been totally destroyed, Mr. Walker placed a protest in the hands of the British consul-general, who in turn communicated with the Haytian foreign office.

I had a casual glance at the copy held by Mr. Walker of the reply from the minister of foreign affairs, which, one must admit, in a legal point of view, appears worthy of the most serious attention. Of course the protest was but the forerunner of a claim to be made against this Government, and the reply thereto, although it ignored any allusion to the object of the protest in that light, expressed the surprise of the minister at its reception, and also at certain allegations it contained, as if holding the Government responsible for the loss of property, notwithstanding the efforts of the fire brigade, with the assistance of foreigners and every means possible employed to stop the progress of the flames, which spread with surprising rapidity, owing to the wind that was blowing with great violence toward the sea. It further said that Hayti was an independent country, made so by suffering and blood;

903 HAYTI.

that other countries were also harassed some by their commoners, by dynamiters; that a man caught trying to fire a building was immediately taken and shot; it was the work of incendiaries; but during all of that exciting time not a shot was fired against the Government forces; that the Government had through Congress voted a certain amount to be divided among the victims of the disaster, and that the soap factory would be considered exactly as the others, and it appeared to me he meant under no circumstances with any more advantages than

I understand that the representatives of England and France and Spain have informed their compatriots to send to them lists of their losses, preparatory to making claims against the Government. I have particularly abstained from giving any opinion pro or con on the subject of claims in the cases alluded to.

I believe those gentlemen above named hold that the fact of this city being under "martial law" since the 24th of May last renders the authorities liable, no matter by what means a misfortune happened.

I have the honor, etc.,

LAW GIVING ASSISTANCE TO THE VICTIMS OF THE FIRES OF JULY 4 AND 7, 1888.

Salomon, President of Hayti, using the initiative conferred on him by article 79 of the constitution.

Whereas that, in presence of the many unfortunates occasioned by the fires of which the city of Port au Prince has become the theater during the 4th and 7th days of July instant, it is the duty of the Government to lend succor to the victims of that public calamity, as the President of Hayti has, moreover, announced in his proclamation of July 4 instant:

Whereas that to be efficacious the succor should be given in money, on the basis of an equitable repartition and according to the means that the financial situation of the country may offer.

From the advice of the council of the secretaries of state, has proposed, and the legislative body voted, the urgency of the following law:

ART. 1. An extraordinary credit of $250,000, to be raised from the overplus estimated on the custom-house dues, both of importations and exportations, is opened to the Government, to enable it to aid the victims of the fires of July 4 and 7 instant. This credit shall be divided as follows: $50,000 to be deducted from the receipts 1887-'88; $50,000 to be deducted from the receipts 1888-'89; $75,000 to be deducted from the receipts 1889-'90; $75,000 to be deducted from the receipts 1890-'91.

ART. 2. A commission, with the object of putting in execution the present law, shall be appointed by the executive power.

ART. 3. The amount to be distributed under the title of assistance to the victims of the fires of the 4th and 7th of July, 1888, shall be unseizable. In consequence, the creditors of the victims of the two fires can not, from any motive whatever, seize or stop the values that may become due to their debtors from the distribution that shall be made in virtue of this present law.

ART. 4. The proprietors and merchants, victims of the aforementioned fires, shall be exonerated from all license dues and from all house or land taxes from the 1st of October, 1888, up to the 30th of September, 1889.

ART. 5. The present law shall be printed, published, and executed at the diligence of the secretaries of state of the intain and of figures. of the secretaries of state of the interior and of finances, each in what may concern

No. 201.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, August 18, 1888. (Received August 25.)

SIR: Various reports having been received from Cape Hayti touching upon revolutionary topics, on Saturday, the 4th instant, General Anselme Prophète, commander of the four corps of the guard stationed at Port au Prince, was sent by the Government on board of the man-Two hours after his of-war Toussaint l'Ouverture direct to Cape Hayti. departure an express brought news to the Government that General Séide Thélémaque, commanding the arrondissement of Cape Hayti, and perhaps the most popular general in the Haytian army, was at the head of a movement against the Government. On reception of this news one of Rivière's fast steamers was sent to overtake General Prophète with instructions for him to use every caution and reconnoiter well before entering into the harbor of Cape Hayti. General Prophète went to Port de Paix and found that everything was true concerning the insurrectionary movements under General Thélémaque. From there General Prophète went to Gonaives, gave certain orders, and returned to this city. On the 9th instant I received a dispatch from Consular Agent Dupuy, of Gonaives, copy of which I inclose herein, marked A.

Rivière's steamer that left here Wednesday, the 1st instant, for the north, was taken possession of by the rebels, and it is said armed for warfare

On Wednesday, the 8th of this month, General Tirésias Sam, minister of war and marine, left here for St. Marc and Gonaives by the war vessel Toussaint l'Ouverture, taking with him one battalion of the St. Marc regiment that arrived here the 16th ultimo. Before his departure Mr. Brutus St. Victor called here and requested me to accompany him to the palace, as the President wished to talk with me. I went there with him, and then his excellency requested me to send for two war vessels, as the revolutionary party appeared to be gaining power.

Finding myself asked by the chief of state of the country to which I am accredited to send for war vessels for his dependence morally, if not physically, and knowing that outside of a tropical climate this country is in a perfectly healthy state, I felt the situation such in our relations with a friendly Government as to justify the following cable dispatch, which was taken to the Mole St. Nicholas by the minister of war and marine, and which read:

STATE DEPARTMENT,

Washington:

Your 114. Urgent. Two immediately. One pass Cape Hayti. Reply. Details 18 instant.

Thompson.

On Thursday President Salomon again sent for me and informed me that he had made up his mind to quit the presidency.

Friday morning, the 10th instant, occurred the closing event in the presidential career of General Salomon. At 9.20 a.m. a messenger arrived in all haste at this legation requesting me to go immediately to the palace, as President Salomon desired to see me on a matter of the utmost importance. I commenced to prepare myself to answer the request, when a gentleman, Mr. Charles Heraux, rushed into the front office crying out, "Mr. Thompson, Mr. Thompson, they have taken up arms against the Government; for God's sake go to the palace and save the old man's life." Naturally this hurried me. My horse not being in the city and a carriage unable to be found, I immediately started for the palace on foot. I was ushered into the President's presence. He informed me that bad news had come in from the north telling of the success of the insurgents in their march toward Port au Prince, and since our war vessels were not here his intention was to ask the British consul-general to allow him to go aboard H. M. S. Canada, in preference to the French vessel, there await an American war vessel or the Dutch steamer for New York on the 18th instant. He then asked me if I would accompany him aboard that night. I put myself at his disposition, and the plan was that Vice-Consul-General Terres and myself were to go to him with two half-closed carriages at the back of the palace grounds, and thus quietly we would be conveyed to the wharf, and he would embark on board the steamer that he would take for the United States, where he intended stopping for a month or so.

During the time that I was there the generals of the arrondissement and Place both arrived before him, explaining that there was a panic in the city.

In returning to this legation I noticed a great amount of commotion, which continued to augment, from the irregular firing of guns at all points of the city; armed companies of men took stations along this street, half hiding themselves behind any available pillars or posts. The arsenal was attacked and resistance made. A little later Mr. Huttinot, employé at the French legation, coming here, informed me that General Herard Laforest, commanding the arrondissement, had joined the revolutionary party. I waited awhile, then descended to the arrondissement, carrying a small flag in my hand, anxious to see if such was a fact; after awhile General Laforest passing, I heard the soldiers crying out, "Vive la révolution," "A bas Salomon," "Vive Varrondissement." I rode up to Laforest, and taking him aside from the rabble and confusion, inquired most seriously if his men were with the revolution. He replied, "It seems so, Mr. Minister, and I, alone, am incapable of doing anything." Ex-President Boisrond Canal at that moment was descending the street on horseback and we met him opposite the French legation. General Laforest said: "Let us enter here and see what can be done to change the situation." We entered. The French minister was there, General Laforest, and myself. After discussing the aspect of affairs, General Laforest having said he could keep the soldiers in order for an hour or an hour and a half, but not for two hours, continued, "I propose that Minister Thompson go to the palace. explain to the President my inability to keep order among the soldiers longer than an hour or so, and as they demand that he (the President) leave, it will be best that he do so within an hour, as after that I fear he will run great personal danger." About this time the British consul-general came in and said he would attend to the bringing of boats for the occasion. As there were frequent small skirmishes in the direcнауті. 907

tion of the palace I knew danger surrounded the enterprise; but without hesitation I accepted, mounted my horse, and started on my mission. When on the rue du Peuple, while in the middle of the block, I found myself between two rival parties, who were blazing away at each other; my horse was almost unmanageable, but I succeeded in turning through an alley that led to another street. Sharpshooters were stationed behind every pillar in the palace grounds, and it was only by waving my flag, while shouting my title at each one, that they refrained from firing upon me. I arrived at the palace. The President informed me he was entirely at my disposition; that his confidence in me was such that if I thought it best he would depart immediately.

I immediately left him, ordered three carriages, and descended by the rue Miracles, where the shots were whistling so rapidly over my head, coming from another street and over some low houses, that I felt obliged to ride into Mr. Metzger's, an American's house, until they ceased. After remaining there a few moments, I again remounted and arrived at the arrondissement. All being ready, a ruse to send a great number of soldiers in other directions than we would take, was made, and the French minister, with the consul-general of Great Britain, the Spanish consul, and myself, rode to the palace, having in front of us, some 10 yards, more or less, a man carrying a large French flag. I carried all the time my small American flag. We descended from the palace, the President leaning on my arm. I placed him in the first carriage, where was also Lafontant, his private secretary, and Madame Salomon. Mounting my horse, I rode on the left side of the carriage. The French minister rode ahead; the Spanish consul, who was a little later joined by General Laforest, rode on the right side of the carriage. Thus we continued to Rivièré's wharf, an enormous populace and mob following us, some ready to defend, others anxious to molest. At the wharf, with the President on my right arm, Lafontant on my left, General Laforest on the right of the President, the French minister ahead, the English consul-general behind, we proceeded to the boats that were waiting, having to force our way through an immense crowd, some yelling "A bas Salomon," "Vive la révolution," and other incendiary cries. They were safely embarked. A squad of British marines probably gave such weight to the occasion that no real effort was made to molest the refugees.

It appears that after arriving on board H. M's. S. Canada there were no rooms to put at their disposal; at all events they were conveyed upon a disabled Atlas steamer, the Alps, lying in the harbor.

After the departure of the Presidential party for the Canada, ex-President Boisrond Canal immediately had published an address to the people and the army, copy of which I inclose with translation, B and C.

The day following, Saturday, I took a boat in order to go aboard the Alps, and on arrival an officer informed me that no one could come on board without a permit from the consul-general of Great Britain or the captain of the Canada. The ex-President and Madame Salomon came to the side of the ship; he requested me to bring little Ida to him, but conversation was impossible on account of the wind and waves, and was scarcely attempted by either of us.

Obtaining the permit from Mr. Sohrab Sunday morning I took the little girl on board; my reception was so cordial that it became painful when the idea came to my mind under what different circumstances I had always before met those people. Mr. Lafontant came forward and, with tears in his eyes, said before them all, "Mr. Minister, to you I owe my life; I can never repay you, and can never forget your acts of humanity." The President said, "We owe you a debt of gratitude from the heart that must always be warm in your praise, and that will last with life."

Sunday evening, the 12th, the Atlas Steam-ship Company's steamer Atlas left here directly for Kingston, Jamaica, to bring Senator Légitime and, I presume, any other of the political refugees there to this city. The ship returned with Légitime about 4 p. m., the 15th instant. An immense crowd was at the "Bureau de Port" to meet him, and the appearance of rejoicing was extreme; shots were fired so that the uninformed thought that it must be an attack on some point or other of the city. Légitime allowed himself to be placed in a carriage and driven through several of the principal streets of the city, hundreds of pedestrians and horsemen following. The city was a perfect bedlam for some hours. One or two men were killed by the carelessness of those using fire-arms and some twenty wounded.

On the 13th instant I received two dispatches from Consul Goutier, at Cape Hayti, copies of which I inclose, marked, respectively, G and H; also copies, with translation, of General Séide Thélémaque's declaration to the people and the army, dated the 5th instant; his proclamation, dated the 7th instant, and several "orders of the day," showing the adhesion of several different arrondissements to the revolution, marked, with translations, respectively, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P.

The minister of finance is at the British legation; the minister of justice at the French legation with the President's brother-in-law, Emile Pierre, the ex-commander of the place, General Molière, and many others; the minister of the interior at his residence.

The minister of foreign affairs has remained at home in his fire-proof building ever since the departure of the President. The French legation opened its doors freely to any refugees, and there are many. I have invited no one here, but had made a determination that should any find themselves under this roof they would receive the same protection as is offered at other legations.

Sunday night, the 12th, General T. Sam, minister of war, returned from the north, where General Jean Jumeau, having repulsed the insurrectionists, captured stores, and in a battle killed several, and was aiding the Government when the news came of Salomon's abdication. The minister of war immediately went on board the Toussaint V Ouverture and started for this city. General Jumeau had them beat the roll-call, fired the alarm-guns, and proclaimed the revolution triumphant.

I found General Sam in the upper part of this building, over the legation, Monday morning. He asked my protection. I did not put him out. Before coming ashore he went to Her Majesty's ship Canada. They said they could not take him aboard without certain formalities; the French war vessel made the same reply. He was landed at a point distant from the wharves and made his way during the night to this building. As I wished to communicate facts to the Department, although it was after 9 o'clock, I succeeded in stopping the Canada, and requested Captain Beaumont to deliver a note to our consul at Santiago de Cuba, instructing him to cable immediately on receipt the following:

STATE DEPARTMENT, Washington:

Salomon abdicated 10th instant. Anarchy.

On the afternoon of the 14th I, in common with all foreign representatives, received a dispatch from General Boisrond Canel, copy inclosed, marked Q, with translation marked R, to which I made reply, inclosure S,

On the evening of the 16th it is reported that the French minister. accompanied by Mr. B. Rivière, a Haytien, went to St. Marc to confer with General Séide Thélémaque and persuade him not to come to Portau-Prince with his army, but only with the members of the committee from the north.

The report is now that General Thélémaque is expected this evening.

CONSULAR AGENCY, Gonaives, August 7, 1888.

SIR: Yesterday, about 10 a.m., General Jean Jumeau delivered a speech in which we were informed that the Cape had taken arms and was marching on Gonaives.

Immediately on the conclusion of his speech he ordered the assemblée générale to be sounded, and all available men were drafted into service. Early in the afternoon the general left with his army.

He is said to have marched as far as Biloret (a village a short distance the other side of Plaisance) and to have encountered the insurgents, before whom he fell back on Poteau, a place some 9 miles from here.

The consular agents here have held a meeting, at which it was decided that the situation was sufficiently serious to warrant their asking for a man-of-war to be sent here. With this end in view each consular agent has written to his chief at Port-au-Prince in the hope that some one of them will be able to comply with the request. I hope to write you more fully on Thursday. Just at this moment I am very much pressed for time, our express leaving immediately.

I am, etc.,

BOISROND CANAL TO THE PEOPLE AND TO THE ARMY.

HAYTIANS: When, three years after having been called to the first magistrature of the State, I resolved on the morrow of an insurrection over which I had triumphed to descend from power to spare the country from new evils that seemed to menace it, I made to myself the promise to remain one of the supports of the Haytian society, and to defend it if ever it had need of my sword.

To-day, that painful events have unveiled the imminence of the danger, I present myself to accomplish that engagement that I have taken to myself and that I have always considered as sacred.

I have not to retrace the dark years that we have just passed; I have not to show you the hideous spectacle of adventurers greedy after the public fortune and finishing by the aid of unnamable maneuvers in inflicting on the population of Port au Prince catastrophes without precedent. The shame of these last hours you know—that anarchy which ended in a monstrous despotism only but yesterday; only but yesterday it was spread before your eyes.

Therefore, understanding that the Haytian nation was tired of so many ignominies,

I come to help break that cruel servitude in which it is crouching to recover its public liberties trodden under foot by Salomon the tyrant.

Faithful to my past, I come to make myself the servant of a revolution that has been for a long time in all hearts.

You know, Haytians, I am not an ambitious one; I am pushed only by the legitimate desire to contribute, in the measure of my action, to the return of concord and to the loyal and regular working of the institutions.

Our motto to all should be union; no more effusion of blood, no more of those hec-atombs that only impoverish our country, in depriving it the more often of its best children.

It is for the safeguard of that idea of appeasement that they will proceed presently to the formation of a provisional government, responding to the aspirations of the people. For myself, Haytians, I am not a candidate for the Presidency. When one has known those elevated regions where the confidence of a people places you, when one has had the redoubtable honor of being the first citizen of a nation, the consciousness of the responsibilities of power does not make it again desired.

From the day when the people by the voice of its representatives shall make known its choice we will be happy to remit to that one the power that a necessity of social preservation makes us provisionally the depositors.

In the mean while, with the concourse of all the persons of good will, I swear to safeguard the public interests, and you know I am not a man to perjure myself.

Haytians! Live peace! Live the reign of the laws! Live the union of the Hay-

ON BOARD THE ALPS. HARBOR OF PORT AU PRINCE, August 11, 1888.

Mr. MINISTER: You have contributed with the dean of the diplomatic corps and the consuls of Spain and England to my embarkation yesterday, for which I am infinitely grateful to all. But it seems to me that since then I, with my wife and my sister, who accompany me, are actual prisoners, mis au secret, for in fact no communication with the land, with Port au Prince, where we have left our child Ida, who was to have joined us on board—apart from that, no news from our luggage; so that, since yesterday, we are with the same clothing with which we embarked; clothing soiled, soaked with perspiration. If this is hard for me, a man, it is harder still for ladies. Are we prisoners? I have nothing to do with the news of what is passing on shore; but I need my baggage, I want my child. I embarked suffering; I still suffer; I need the advice of and remedies from my doctor, even that this advice be sent to me open, so that everybody can read it before it reaches me.

If my present position and that in which Madame Salomon is placed is not to end soon, I ask myself, would it not have been better for me to run the risks on shore, in the presidential palace, of the dangers that it was feared threatened me. I prefer death, without phrases, to an agony shared by women who are dear to me. In the name of God, Mr. Minister, make your colleagues well understand that I do not want to know what is going on, what is passing on shore and in the country.

In the mean while my respects, and the salutations of my wife to the Mesdames Thompson; we embrace our little Ida that we long to see again.

Robert Olliver, the attendant of the palace; my servants, Leon, George, and the governess Celine, that I have left with my child, will give you information about my affairs.
Very affectionately,

SALOMON.

CAPE HAYTIEN, August 9, 1888.

MY DEAR COMPÈRE: The Haytian steamer Grande Rivière arrived here on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock (the 3d instant) and by 8, same evening, was seized by order of the arrondissement.

Saturday at noon the consular corps was invited to call at the arrondissement at General Séide said that President Salomon had committed so many arbitrary actions, besides allowing the public money to be squandered by his favorites, and his administration is ruinous to the country, consequently his commandants d'arrondissements that are maintaining him in office are likewise responsible for his faults and bad administration; he can no longer continue to serve a chief who, after all his faithful service, sends for him to go to Port an Prince to arrest him; consequently he wished to inform the consuls that he would take up arms against the Government the next morning (Sunday, 5th instant). That the strictest order would be maintained he gave the assurance.

Sunday, 5th instant, at 6 a. m., in presence of the army, the alarm gun was fired, and the revolution proclaimed amid cries of "Vive la révolution!" A bas Salomou!" Delegations were sent to different places and Grande Rivière, Au Trou, Fort Liberté, Limbé, as well as St. Fleur Paul, have sent their adhesion to the revolution.

It was said that Jean Jumeau of Gonaïves sent for Séide to confer with him, and Tuesday morning Séide left for Plaisance to meet him. A corps d'armée left Sunday afternoon, another Monday afternoon, and the cavalry with Seide.

As I do not know when the Du Couëdic will leave, I must close by saying that order reigns here.

In haste, but truly yours,

CAPE HAYTIEN, August 10, 1888.

MY DEAR COMPÈRE: Au Borgne has joined the revolution, which now counts seven arrondissements in its ranks.

General Séide left Limbé yesterday on his way to Gonaïves. We do not know whether Jean Jumeau has or will accept the revolution. If he does it will be well; if not, Séide has 4,000 men and will give him battle. Here out of 15,000 inhabitants you may count about 500 Salomonists. There has been but very little drawback in this revolutionary movement. The merchants have lent money in furtherance of the movement. The German steamer last Saturday took a large amount of coffee, and all the duties were paid to the revolutionary committee. Monday the Ozama arrived from New York and the duties were paid also to the committee. This steamer likewise brings goods, the duties on which will be paid to the committee. No more money will be paid to the bank. They will not take a cent from the bank, and since Friday a guard of fifteen to twenty men are stationed in front of the bank night and day for its protection.

The people here are quite sanguine of success. They feel confident that the south will take up arms next week and that when the different armies will appear near Port au Prince the representatives of foreign powers, in view of the great interests of their countrymen at stake, will bring pressure to bear on the President and make him understand that he has no right to wish to maintain himself even at the risk of destroying a portion of his country and merchandise valued at millions of dollars belonging to foreigners.

The revolutionary committee inclose a package for you, containing acts, etc., by this steamer.

The French war steamer arrived here yesterday morning at 9; the consular agent went on board at 10. At 11.30 he has not returned to inform us whether the steamer would leave the same day or remain until the morrow. I remained until near 1 o'clock; he had not come on shore. I went home; wrote you. I took my letter to the French consular agent; he was not at home. I went to the "port" to get a boat to take my letter on board; the steamer was out of sight! Politesse français. I inclose it by this German steamer. Everything is quiet. Were it not for the soldiers and armed men that you meet one would never think that we are in the midst of a formidable revolution.

The papers say that the commander of the Yantic found that everything was quiet, perfectly quiet, in Hayti; that it was useless to have deranged him to come here; so quiet that he left immediately; that shows that the Yantic knew less than the British of Haytian affairs; as they have always had at least one vessel at Port au Prince.

Ever since that affair in Port au Prince, when you and your colleagues so opportunely interposed between the authorities and Légitime, thereby saving his life and the lives of some others, all those who could read the sign of the times, with the vast conspiracies which were going on throughout the whole country, could not fail to see "que c'était le commencement de la fin."

Yours, truly,

DECLARATION TO THE PEOPLE AND THE ARMY.

CITIZENS AND SOLDIERS: At the moment that I free myself from the word that I have given to General Salomon to support his government up to the last limits possible, I feel the need of enlightening the country and my fellow-citizens on the motive of my public conduct.

In accepting to serve the government of General Salomon, I took the solemn engagement to aid him to realize the greatest possible good for the benefit of our dear Unfortunately abusing the feeling of military fidelity that caused his lieutenants to close their eyes on many points, to think only of the obligations that they have to maintain him in power, the Chief of State has, to the contrary of his lying programme, but plunged the Republic in an abyss of evils by the corruption of political morals, by the perversion of ideas, and by wasting the public money unheard of in our administrative annals.

Perhaps from the first years of the rule of General Salomon one could feel the ruinous declivity of a political system in which individual liberty has been but a vain word; in which the constitution became as elastic as the caprices of the chief; has never been respected, to such a point that senators and deputies were none the more exempt from the prison than the commonest of citizens. But besides that I have always groaned in my heart of an honest man in seeing the arbitrary proceedings so well calculated to demoralize a people, I have continued to support the government, thinking that, as we had just traversed a period of trouble and of anarchy, we should not draw back before any sacrifice to replace the country on a footing of real and fruitful peace—sole condition of progress for a young state like ours.

It was in the meanwhile that the famous insurrection of 1883 broke out, which was but the crisis of a long agitation. It is needless to say how it was suppressed.

Outside of and unbeknown to the commandants of arrondissements who appear responsible for the situation, the General Salomon entertains a crowd of hidden agents intentionally drawn from the worst classes, and who have more discredit than their immediate chief. It is thus that one could not attempt any enterprise of a certain utility without receiving order to discontinue, under the pretext of making the people dissatisfied, who are represented in the eyes of the despot only by these vile agents.

To fill up the measure, this government, which showed itself so energetic to do evil, seemed to have no power to do good. Nearly the half of the city of Port au Prince, the capital of the Republic, has disappeared in flames. Public edifices of the highest importance, such as the chamber of deputies, the comptroller's office, the civil court, etc., have been burned. Well, no serious inquiry bas ever been made, and to crown the scandal with a new crime, they have executed, without judging, an unfortunate that all seems to make one think was innocent.

To the eyes of all clear-seeing men the consequences of such a system can not but lead to the loss of our autonomy; for when all social tie is broken, when there is no security either for persons or for property; when the title of foreigner is become an advantage to be envied in one's own country, nothing can further maintain the love of national independence.

An officer of honor can not continue to support an order of affairs so ruinous without violating his conscience as a man and as a citizen, without becoming culpable towards the country in the service of which he should draw his sword in the face of and against all.

It is therefore the sentiment of my duty as a Haytien and patriot that dictated to me what I have done.

In proclaiming the revolution I am guided by no personal feeling. I have given more than forty years of active service to the benefit of my country, either under General Salnave, under General Dominique, under General Boisrond Canal, and under General Salomon even. No one has more right than myself to aspire to the first magistrature of the State.

Nevertheless I love my country too much to place myself on egotistical ground. The revolution has for its sole object the overthrow of a rule of tyranny and dilapidation.

When the tyrant shall have disappeared from the presidential seat the people will be called to name freely their representatives, who will, in their turn, revise the constitution and name a Chief of State. If the free choice of that assembly calls me to power, I will accept, with the formal engagement to re-establish order in the finances, to raise up again agricultural and industrial labor, and to allow to my fellow-citizens all the liberties necessary the same; if the choice falls on another as worthy of the national confidence, I will be the first to lend him my assistance all the time that the interest of the country and public liberties shall not be in danger.

I loyally declare my opinion and the motives that have led me to raise the revolutionary standard in the noble and valorous city of the cape. I hope that all the true patriots, without mental reservation, will unite with me for the raising up again of our dear country. When the fatherland gasps under a yoke that ruins and debases, it is not permissible for any citizen to remain deaf to its voice.

Cry from one end of the Republic to the other: Down with Genera. Salomon! Down with despotism! Live the institutions! Live liberty! Live progress! Live order!

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI.-PROCLAMATION-THE REVOLUTIONARY COMMITTEE OF CAPE HAYTIEN.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: The revolution proclaimed at the cape against the government of General Salomon has gained immediately all the departments of the north. It will go from triumph to triumph up to the capital.

The hour marked for the fall of the tyrant has sounded, and there is not one single Haytian who can remain deaf to its echo.

Since nine years we have lived under a shameful and debasing rule. After our fathers had accomplished such great deeds to preserve to us a fatherland, where we could live and develop our aptitudes in the shade of liverty; after that we have struggled so much to draw our country from the claws of despotism, a man arose with a mask of hypocrisy, who, by deceiving enemies and friends in a moment of confusion, had himself elected to the first magistrature of the state.

The country, fatigued with sterile movements and unseasonable revolts, was thirsty for peace, and every one, frankly forgetting the past, showed confidence in a chief who, to a reputation of capacity—usurped, it is true—joined a large experience and a long practice in European civilization.

That confidence seemed to be justified by the programme that General Salomon published on taking the reins of government, but it was but a glimmer.

Instead of the fusion that this chief promised to the country in declaring that he belonged to no party, we have seen little by little infused in the Republic a spirit of distrust and of terror, that is the death of all social relation. The moneys of the state, turned aside from their national destination, defrayed the expense of a system of spying carried so far that no citizens had any confidence even in a friend to dare to complain of a situation that made every one groan in silence.

To perpetuate in power and to use it as a master, General Salomon perjured the oath that he had taken to observe faithfully the constitution, already modified to his will, has from his entry in affairs commenced to exercise arbitrary acts, illegal to all liberties. On all points of the Republic peaceful citizens have been uneasy; imprisoned without being judged.

The greater part have groaned for years in the prison cells of Port au Prince, until the time when the good pleasure of the tyrant decided to free them. Deputies, senators even, have been illegally arrested and imprisoned, without other justification than the despotic will of General Salomon.

Never has there been seen more political crimes committed with the power to call

General Salomon, to be able to commit with impunity so many and so flagrant iniquities, has above all used the public revenues, that he has always considered as personal property.

To blind the people he promised to organize a national bank, that he announced as an administrative, economic, and financial panacea.

But that bank, the institution of which might have been seriously useful to the development of the public credit among us, has become purely and simply a house of speculations, becoming to the commerce of the country a disloyal rival, giving to the Government the means of disposing of the public funds with the greatest secrecy, and receiving, without counting the interest and other unknown profits, more than $200,000 per year for the insignificant service of receiving the values that belong to the state and remitting them to the payees.

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1——58

By the aid of this system the finances of the Republic are conducted with a looseness equaled only by the spirit of prevarication that dominates the administration of General Salomon.

We have seen in the single exercise 1885-1886 unjustified expenses amounting to more than $700,000. It is already notorious that for the exercise 1886-1887 the unjustified expenses amount to $500,000. From the discussions that have recently taken place in the chamber of deputies it appears that more than $700,000 have been drawn out of the public funds without the Government being able to give any explanations of the going out of these large sums.

Let them say, "Fellow-citizens, at what time have we ever seen so scandalous a waste of the people's money?"

Finding himself cramped by the circulation of a metallic currency not easily falsified at will, the General Salemon, who in 1882 had declared that paper money was an evil, did not hesitate before an emission of paper money in 1884 without any serious reason to justify a measure so ruinous to the economic advancement of the country. Fellow-citizens, while the General Salomon thus dilapidated the public fundstraitorously swallowed up in the coffers of the bank-all the great public services remained suffering.

During more than four years the employes of the Government were not able to obtain their salaries only by a ruinous discount oscillating between 45 and 60 per cent.

The public highways, the keeping in order of which is of capital importance for the development of the public wealth, have been completely abandoned. We have no public edifices, our cities are not cleaned nor lighted, and it is thanks to a clement nature that we have not been poisoned by noxious miasms.

To feel all the blackness of such carelessness, one must know that the government of General Salomon, in augmenting incessantly the customs duties, has arrived at disposing more than six millions of the receipts, while before this the country paid not more than about four millions.

At the sight of all these depredations one would say that Hayti is one of those savage countries where the chief of state is master of property and persons, or of an absolute monarchy where the monarch is all and the people nothing.

We have in fact a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate, but it is but the parody of a parliamentary system. Never has the legislative body put aside a law or a proposition of the Government, however unconstitutional or however ruinous that it might be.

A people reduced to a state of affairs so miserable and who would do nothing to come out of it would be considered as unworthy to be a free nation. Fellow-citizens, in the name of liberty we make a solemn appeal to all our compatriots from one end of the Republic to the other.

After having suffered for a long time, under a despotic and humiliating yoke, we at last reach the day of deliverance. It is in uniting ourselves without rancor, without party spirit, having for sole tie the love of country, that we can arrive at not only overthrowing the tyrant, but again raising our country from the state of moral abasement and material impoverishment where that fatal man of the 23d of October has thrown it.

Remember that next year, 1889, that noble country, France, will celebrate with a splendor without precedence the great centenary of liberty.

The immortal principles of the French revolution, of which the echo of old crossed the ocean to transform our chains in revenging arms, will be applauded, cheered by a hundred million voices everywhere where there lives a people worthy and free. What shame for us if the presence of a cynical, lying old man suffice to curb all heads in shame and humiliation and prevent our loudly proclaiming those regenerating principles that are the beacon of civilization! What irremissible condemnation for the black race!

Arise, then, fellow-citizens! Dilate our hearts and our breasts, too long compressed under the weight of despotism, and let us cry, Down with Salomon. Live the revolution! Live public liberties! Live order! Live union! Live progress and civilization.

No. 204.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, August 25, 1888. (Received September 20.)

SIR: General Séide Thélémaque, commander in chief of the army of the revolution, arrived here the morning of the 23d instant at the head of soldiers from the north to the number of seven or eight thousand. Arriving at Gonaïves the French minister sent word that the "corps diplomatique" wished to confer with the general. An hour was arranged and General Thélémaque with many generals awaited, expecting to receive some important favorable news from such a quarter, probably that he had been proclaimed President. He was astonished to see but one man arrive, who, introducing himself, requested a private interview. This being accorded, he said he had come with a verbal message from Boisrond Canal to advise him (Thélémaque) not to march to this city with his army. He asked, "Why?" "Because a part of the city being burned down, there was no place to lodge the troops, and so many men in the city might lead to sickness." It is said that General Thélémaque expressed his surprise at a foreign representative so interesting himself in Haytian politics. On inquiry he was told there were about five thousand soldiers here; he ended by saying, "Since you came to me with a verbal message from General Boisrond Canal I return by you a verbal reply: tell General Boisrond as there are five thousand soldiers at Port au Prince, I should go there with ten thousand—I will bring my entire army."

Later letters were sent to General Thélémaque by some of his partisans, saying, "If you do not come with your army you had better return to the cape."

A fact that must not be lost sight of is, that there has never been a feeling between the cities of the north and those of the south concerning political honors, and it was the belief here that although General Thélémaque took up arms against the Government, those revolutionists here, since through their action Salomon abdicated, felt themselves the masters of the situation, and proposed rushing their candidate into the executive seat. Thélémaque, quietly waiting until he could consolidate his army and march into the city, frustrated their plans on that score.

Yesterday a provisional government was formed, composed of the following members: Messrs. Boisrond Canal, Séide Thélémaque, Légitime, St. Armand, Hyppolite, E. Claude, and C. Archin. The first act of such provisional government was to proclaim the dissolution of the chamber of deputies and the senate. Now the intriguing will commence, and even at this writing dissatisfaction is being openly expressed against some of the members chosen.

Your dispatch No. 120 has been received this morning, and the information that the Galena is on her way to Haytian waters is highly appreciated by this legation.

No. 206.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, September 6, 1888. (Received September 20.)

SIR: August 29 last I received for my signature a circular dispatch from the French minister, who, as dean of the diplomatic and consular body, constituted himself an authority to write to the provisional government in the name of all foreign representatives at this capital that, having heard there were cases of yellow fever, he wished that the soldiers brought to this city be returned to their homes, as the streets were dirty and so many men present would lead to great danger in case of the fever spreading. Then, in the body of the dispatch, he said words to this effect: If our request to send away the troops is not complied with, we shall be obliged to refuse giving clean bills of health to vessels leaving for foreign countries, which will certainly be detrimental to Hayti in her foreign relations abroad. I refused to sign such document because, in my opinion, it is not an affair of the Governmentvis a vis of bills of health. If yellow fever or any other contagious disease exists to that extent that I can not conscientiously give a clean bill of health, I would never enter into a compact with the Government, saying if they complied with an hygienic idea of mine, then I would in return give clean bills of health even if pestilence existed.

Now, this dispatch, signed by all the foreign representatives but myself, is the talk of the city; they say it is but political capital, a ruse, to insist on the sending away of Thélémaque's army, and thus weaken Thélémaque and strengthen Légitime. It is admitted by all as being simply a political move.

It is known that there were cases of fever brought here by a French sailing vessel from Marseilles, probably yellow fever. Of the eleven cases three died; the rest of the crew are at the French hospital, while the ship has been placed outside of communication in quarantine. The disease has not spread from whence it commenced and the other sufferers appear to be convalescent.

There have been no other cases reported since; in fact, doubt exists as to the nature of the disease.

No. 207.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, September 5, 1888. (Received September 20.)

SIR: The commander and three officers of the U.S.S. Galena, accompanied by myself, paid an official call on the members of the provisional government by appointment at 10 o'clock this morning and were received most cordially. It was the intention of the members of the provisional government to return the call, but as the Galena would leave to day they found it would be impossible, so sent me a courteous dispatch to that effect.

The Galena left about 4 p. m. for Kingston, Jamaica, to coal in order to proceed directly after to New York.

No. 208.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, September 8, 1888. (Received September 20.)

SIR: On Friday, the 7th instant, I, in common with the other members of the diplomatic and consular corps, received for my signature a circular dispatch from the Count de Sesmaisons, minister of France, and dean of that body, requesting a meeting at his legation the day following to discuss an important question.

The day following, at 10 a.m., the meeting was held, when the French minister read the reply he had received from the provisional government (his dispatch referred to in my No. 206), wherein they said the subject was taken note of, and when they deemed it the necessary time it would be discussed among them. As reported before, the disease was local, and, according to Dr. Contraras, whom the dean had invited to attend our meeting, was in a benign state. Many sanitary features were discussed, and it was decided that, owing to the bad sanitary condition along the wharves, we as consular agents would advise all vessels during the continuation of the present excessive heat to lie further out in the harbor, where they will have more air, and not inhale the miasma arising from the low water along the shore. This will certainly cause them more trouble in discharging their cargoes, but as we feared during this extreme heat that whatever sickness they had might become contagious, for the preservation of life and safety toward those who arrived here well, it would be a precautionary measure and show the provisional government that to avert such danger, even at the inconvenience of our vessels, we were willing to take the initiative by advising captains in order to prevent contagion. I objected that any official communication be addressed to the government dictating in any way the measures to take, but accepted that a delegation be sent them to confer unofficially as to sanitary reforms. This was acceded to by all the members present, and a delegation named consisting of the French minister, the British consul-general, and myself. The members of the provisional government arranged to meet us this morning at 10 o'clock, and we enjoyed a very pleasant call, talked over the situation, and it was agreed that a sanitary commission be formed to keep the streets in better condition, to visit and ameliorate to their utmost any sources of contagion, even should the few cases of fever increase or diminish; in fine, our mission was both successful and accepted as amicable.

Of the cases of fever, it is said three or four were yellow fever imported here. They were isolated, but a form of intermittent fever has been contracted on a couple of vessels—on the American brig Water Witch, two cases, one of which is well, the other convalescent. There is no spread of the disease, and with these measures of precaution it is deemed that the city will continue in its normal state of healthfulness.

Owing to all conditions, the consular body consider themselves justified in giving clean bills of health up to the present, but we are watching scrupulously the status of each case of illness, and at the first alarming sign will carry out the duty of warning our respective Governments.

No. 124.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 22, 1888.

SIR: I have received your No. 206 of the 6th instant, informing me that the French minister at Port au Prince had written a circular note to the provisional government, which was signed by all the representatives of the foreign Governments, except yourself, asking the government to withdraw the troops from the city on the ground of health, and declaring that, in case of refusal to comply with their request, they would decline to give clean bills of health to vessels sailing for foreign ports.

Your position that, by joining in the protest of the French minister, you would have bound yourself, in the event of compliance with the demand for the removal of the troops, to give clean bills of health in any case, even if pestilence existed, is not well understood, and the soundness of your conclusion in that regard is not apparent. You do not send a copy of the French minister's note, and the Department is unable to decide whether the protest did in terms amount to so extraordinary and irrational a compact. But the Department approves the ground taken by you, that the issuance of clean bills of health must depend on the ascertained healthfulness of the port at the time of a vessel's departure.

If the ascertainment of such a condition is rendered doubtful by the presence of a large body of men, under circumstances peculiarly favorable to the germination of disease at an unhealthy season, and preventing any intelligent or trustworthy investigation of their sanitary condition, you would be entirely justified in withholding a clean bill of health, and in certifying the state of things to the health officers at the port of the vessel's destina ion, in order that all proper precaution should be there taken.

The remedy, therefore, is as completely within your reach as if you had signed the protest in question, and you not only reserve a fuller liberty of action in the premises, but also avoid connection with an incident to which a political character appears to have been imputed in some quarters.

Your statement of the introduction of cases of what is supposed to have been yellow fever, by a French sailing vessel from Marseilles, and the precautions adopted in the case, has been communicated to the health officers of the Treasury Department for their information.

Commander Chester to Mr. Whitney.

U. S. S. GALENA (3d Rate), At sea, making passage to New York, September 18, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to report the result of the recent cruise of the Galena to Hayti, in pursuance of the instructions from the rear-admiral commanding naval forces,

North Atlantic Station, of August 17 ultimo, as follows:

The Galena left Norfolk August 25 and arrived at Port au Prince the 31st ultimo. I immediately put myself in communication with the United States consul-general and minister resident at this port, Mr. J. E. W. Thompson, and through him and other sources learned the condition of affairs on the island. Although the State Department has been given quite a complete record of the disturbances which have recently occurred at Port au Prince, I believe a brief history of them will not be inappropriate for the files of the Navy Department, and therefore present it.

It appears that the late President Salomon through various causes began to lose the power so long and intelligently held by him some time before the disturbance of May 24 ultimo. This rebellion being quelled and the two principal instigators banished (Légitime and Manigat), quiet reigned for some time. On July 4 ultimo a fire broke out in the city of Port au Prince, evidently incendiary in character, and the instigation of it charged by many to the President. Much damage being done, the feeling of rebellion was agumented and it was soon apparent that a crisis was imminent. The President about this time, foreseeing the result, sent for the American minister, who appears to have been on intimate terms with his excellency, told him his fears, and urged him to send for two men-of-war. The result was a cablegram to the State Department, Washington, asking for vessels and stating "situation critical." H. B. M. S. Canada and Wrangler, as well as two French men-of-war (the Bisson and Du Couedic), were in port at this time, but the President evidently preferred to rely on the friendship of the United States Government in this emergency. The climax was hastended by reported disturbances in the north, as well as a growing disaffection among the troops of General Hérard Laforest, commanding the arrondissement of Port au Prince.

The representatives of foreign governments were evidently prepared for the decision made known to them by the President of his intention to leave the country. A passage was offered him by the captain of H. B. M. steamer Canada, and on the morning of the 10th August he quitely left the palace in company with the several diplomatic and consular representatives and was escorted by General Laforest to the shore and embarked on the Canada. I learned his departure was unmolested and occurred with the knowledge of the troops through which he passed. Owing to want of quarters, the President was removed to the British steamer Atlas, then lying disabled in the port, until the final departure the morning of the 14th. The Canada arrived at Santiago the 15th, with the ex-President on board.

When the condition of affairs was made known, Boisrond Canal, an ex-President of the Republic, quietly took charge of the reins of government, his authority being recognized by common consent. Ex-Senator Légitime was recalled from Jamaica, whither he had been banished by Salomon, and put in nomination for the Presidency by his constituency of the southern portion of the island.

As far as I can learn the only real danger to life or property occurred during the "feu de joie" of the troops on the lauding of this exile. Then a grand salute took place from all arms. There being no blank cartridges for the muskets, fixed ammunition was used for an indefinite period, the firing generally taking place in the air. The result can be well imagined. The smallest estimate, I believe, was five killed and twenty-five wounded. Even the men-of-war in the harbor came in for their share of the danger, several shots having struck their decks.

In the mean time a strong rival candidate presented himself for the Presidency in General Séide Thélémaque, the commander of the Army of the North. With his corps of about 8,000 men he marched to Port au Prince and there urged his claims.

The various interests, however, were quickly harmonized into a scheme for a provisional government representing the five districts of the island, with ex-President

Canal and M. C. Archin at large.

The seven members were arranged in the following order: B. Canal, President provisional government; S. Thélémaque, war and marine; C. Archin, interior; S. U. St. Armand, finance and commerce; F. D. Légitime, foreign relations and worship; E. Claude, justice and public instruction; General Hyppolite, agriculture and police. The portfolio slate was published on Monday, the 3d instant, and, through the American minister, I made arrangements to pay my respects to the provisional President. On the 5th instant I was accorded an interview, and, with three other officers of the Galena and the American minister, was received with marked respect by the President and cabinet assembled. The President referred to the pleasant relations which had existed between his Government and that of the United States, and hoped for their continuance. He stated that, owing to maladministration, it became necessary to depose the ex-President, but it had been done quietly and without bloodshed; that the question of a new President and a change in the constitution had been submitted to the people, and an election would take place on October 10; that in the mean time everything was quiet in the Republic, and, he felt assured, would remain so. In reciprocating the kindly sentiments expressed for the United States, I remarked I believed I expressed the sentiments of my Government in congratulating the people of Hayti on the fact that such an important event had occurred without

It is believed that had the Galena been in the harbor on the 10th of August a request would have been made me to transport the ex-President to Cuba; otherwise than this I doubt if much good would have resulted from her presence. Of course the moral effect of a man-of-war at such times is always advantageous.

The abdication seems to have been a quiet affair, and foreigners had little to fear from any quarter. In fact great deference has been shown foreigners, and I learned of no American citizen whose interests had been seriously threatened.

I was told by the commander of H. B. M. steamer Ready that the British and French senior naval officers, in consultation with the diplomats, had decided that only in an extreme emergency should men be landed from their vessels of war, and only then with the smallest force necessary to protect the legations. I am convinced this was a wise policy and a necessary one, sanitarily considered, and I should probably have favored it. The respect for the legations, however, was marked and there appeared no necessity for even this force.

Some uneasiness existed in Port au Prince after the arrival of General Thélémaque with his army, but time and his strong pronunciamento to secure the Presidency by peaceful measures or not at all soon made matters as quiet as they ordinarily are

A call for the election of delegates to a national convention was made for the 17th of September. The convention is to meet on October 10 for the election of the President and revision of the constitution. At this latter date it might seem advisable for the United States to be represented by a man-of-war, but I believe that a resort to arms would be such an unpopular move as to prevent trouble at any time, until the history of this island should take its natural course and repeat itself.

Concluding, from the facts presented above, that the proper interpretation of my instructions required me to return north, I left Port au Prince on September 5 for New York, stopping at Port Royal, Jamaica, for coal, from which place we took our departure on the 8th.

The following vessels were in Port au Prince on the 5th: H. B. M. S. Wrangler, Spanish gun-boat Sanchez Barca, and Haytian gun-boats Dessalines and Toussaint.

Very respectfully, etc.,

C. M. CHESTER, Commander, U. S. Navg, Commanding Galena.

No. 212.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, October 16, 1888. (Received October 26.)

SIR: Nearly every leaf read in Haytian history since the independence of the country is marred by accounts of political strife, where the result has numbered more or less mortality; but never has this history exhibited so baneful a page as that which will recount the causes and effects that must follow the sanguinary conflict of Friday evening, the 28th ultimo, which resulted in the death of General Seide Télémaque and the massacre of many of the bravest men in the Haytian army. On the 17th ultimo commenced the election of constituents from all communes in Hayti, who were to unite at the capital the 10th of this month to elect a President. All other candidates had withdrawn, and there were but two looked upon by the people at large, viz, General Seide Telémaque, of Cape Haytien, and General Denis Légitime, of Jérémie, but a resident of Port au Prince. It appears that on Thursday, the 27th ultimo, news came from different portions of the country that the north, the northwest, and the Artibonite would send a solid delegation in favor of General Séide Télémaque, and that the greater part of the south would be with him. I am informed that already he had the two-third majority which is necessary to elect. This news disconcerted the followers of General Légitime; in fact, it seems that enthusiasm for him was only shown in this city. Since the entry of the army of the north rumors have been abroad that there would be a conflict; in fact, it was pushed on by many ordinary people who desired nothing better than confusion. General Thélémaque sent away nearly all of the volunteers that came with him, and remained with a small division from Cape Haytien, from Grand Rivière du Nord under General Bottex, from Limbé under General Rosa, from St. Marc under General Prudo, from St. Michel under General St. Fleur Paul, and from Dessalines under General Boisrond, and these divisions were stationed in different portions of the city. His own command he removed from the corner of this street (rue de Centre and rue de Bonnesois) because it appeared there might be some misunderstanding between his officers and those of the "National Guard," stationed very near them. keep from any collision General Thélémaque took a station on "la Place Pétion," diagonally situated to the Presidential palace. The palace has been ever since the fall of the Salomon Government under the protection of General Anselme Prophète. Although General Thélémaque came into this city followed by an army of nearly ten thousand men, and later took the portfolio of war and navy of the provisional government, so much had the journals teemed with, and the Port au Princiens talked of, this invasion from the north as an attempted menace and furtherance of General Thélémaque's candidature, that he willingly allowed the greater part of his followers to return to From the time of his arrival in this city and the showing of his conciliatory attitude toward all political parties, with an apparent endeavor to palliate all past wrongs and to consolidate all factions for the good and well-being of the Republic, he gained most wonderfully the esteem of the highest class of society, and they became his strongest partisans. Notwithstanding the daily reports that he would be attacked, and so forth, although minister of war and navy. he made no preparations for defense and held in with an iron will his adherents from making any demonstration or arrangements for an assault. On Friday evening the disastrous affair occurred. Riding to my residence on the 28th ultimo I passed by that of the provisional minister of the interior, Mr. C Archin, and there in his presence metand saluted General Légitime, who, followed by many friends, said he was going to call on General Boisrond Canal. When he left us the brother in law of Mr. Archin requested me to remain at the legation during the night, as he believed in case of trouble my moral influence would count for a great deal. Not believing that the matter was of consequence, I tried to evade his request, when he said:

начті. 925

Not only as a foreign representative, but as a friend to peace and good order and as our friend I pray you to remain to night.

I consented then so to do, but felt obliged to go home first, and with such understanding I left them. Arriving at my house I gave the necessary orders for the night and returned toward the city.

I passed the palace and was hailed by sentinels stationed behind its walls, but this being no unusual thing and in a country where at one moment or another military movements are made, I thought nothing of the coincidence. Passing the senate, at the side of which was General Bottex's headquarters, I observed that commander stretched out upon a cot before the door. He was an acquaintance of mine, when senator two years ago, and it was my habit in passing to salute him; it must have been then 7.28 p. m. I stopped, saying in French "Well, general, you are a real military man, I see, quietly reposing before your door." "Oh, Mr. Minister," replied he, "dismount a minute; I am glad to see you." Wishing to question him about the rumors, I dismounted; a soldier held the bridle of my horse; giving my hand to the general, I said:

Tell me, seriously, do you think there is anything in the reports of a movement to-night?

He answered:

I do not believe there will be anything, but I received orders that if we were attacked we must defend ourselves.

Three shots were then fired. I jumped toward my horse to seize the bridle, but the soldier who had been holding him had let go in order to arrange his rifle. I missed the bridle, and as the three shots were followed by a fusillade, the horse, at liberty and frightened, started off, leaving me helpless at General Bottex's headquarters. There had been a stampede for a few seconds during this irregular but continuous fire, yet above it all could be heard, in a tone low but penetrating, the voice of General Bottex saying: "Courage, mes amis; pas courrir, mes amis." He advised me to enter the house, saying he thought it would be over in a few minutes, and then I could make my way to my office; but in the excitement of the moment I found it impossible to remain under cover, so went outside again, when a couple of wounded were brought there. Having some ideas of surgery, but having no instruments, I devoted myself simply to dressing their wounds. This continued until I heard the order given for all the companies to descend the street. Thinking then, should Bottex in an engagement be driven back to his headquarters and a direct attack be made on him there, that my position would become more dangerous, and seeing a light in the upper part of a house on the side, I made my way in such direction amid bullets whistling and falling like hailstones around, but was fortunate enough to reach there, and after some minutes was enabled to enter. There, under fire from the mitrailleuse of the palace, which commenced its death dealing and destructive work about 9 p. m., I passed the night. The heavy cannon from "Fort National" was discharged at intervals during the night in the direction of General Thélémaque's headquarters, and did considerable damage to people and places near there.

Early in the morning bands of men crying "Vive Légitime" passed through the streets, and there being apparently a suspension of hostilities I started for the legation, and on the route was informed that General Séide Thélémaque had been killed. The following is the narration of General Thélémaque's death as given me by his friend and private secretary: Friday, in the afternoon, after having made a tour of the city, General Séide Thélémaque entered his quarters, ate a little in company with Generals Jean Jumeau, Jean Gilles, and Mr. Desroches; after this he made a call on General Bottex, followed by several officers of his staff and some volunteers, passed the palace, where the guard turned out giving him the honors due his position; on his return General Boisrond-Canal rode up to him and proposed that he take a turn in the city, but he declined, having recently returned, being fatigued, and his horse being already unsaddled. General Canal expressed his regret and started off in the direction of the division of General Rosa. Thélémaque went up to his chamber, descended a few moments after; the table was prepared for supper as ordinarily; certain demonstrations of hostility had been made all the afternoon by those at the palace, which caused General Thélémaque to send for General Anselme Prophète three times, but who in turn paid no attention to his request. At 7.30 p. m. exactly, the first shots were fired, which continued all night. About 9 p. m. General Thélémaque came out and approached the palace, trying to pierce the darkness, in order to perceive the situation of those firing upon him, when the mitrailleuse belched forth a volume of fire and lead; he pressed his hands to his abdomen and said, "Nelson, they have cut through my entrails." He was assisted into the house, where all care was taken of him until they were forced to leave there on account of the terribly destructive fire of the mitrailleuse. He died in Mr. Desroches's arms. I must here remark that it seems a fact that all of Thélémaque's generals charged with divisions turned against him, with the exception of General Bottex, who, with his men, fought all night long and against great odds, being surrounded on all sides. The result of so many slain will re-open that ancient hatred between the North and South of Hayti.

Saturday, the 29th ultimo, I sent via Santiago de Cuba, in care of our consul there, the following cablegram:

STATE DEPARTMENT,
Washington:

Partisans of Thélémaque and Légitime in battle from 7.30 p. m. to 6.30 a. m., 28th instant. Thélémaque killed. We fear immediate vengeance from the Northerners.

THOMPSON.

A great question is made regarding who was the attacking party, who was the attacked; yet every one knows perfectly well, in the first place, it would have been foolhardy for an ordinary military man to take and remain in such a position as Thélémaque had if he would resort to arms. The palace is surrounded by a high stone wall, on top of which are high iron pickets; a piece of cannon would have been necessary to open up an entrance, and Thélémaque had no cannon. Many were killed and a great many badly wounded; there are no reliable statistics. Mr. G. G. Taylor, an American citizen, found himself between the palace and the forces of General St. Fleur Paul; he took refuge in a house, and while standing behind the door hoping for a lull in the firing, a bullet coming from the direction of the palace passed through the door, struck him in the leg, glancing off the tibia bone, and making a severe and painful wound.

The minister of the interior of the provisional government gave his resignation Monday, October 1, and notwithstanding the entreaties of the other members he maintained it, for a general amnesty was proclaimed by the members of the provisional government on Saturday, the 29th ultimo, but on Monday, the 1st instant, armed parties went around paying up old political and personal grudges, and several people were murdered and others forced to flee to legations and consulates to save their lives.

The minister of agriculture and police, General Hyppolite, a citizen of Cape Haytien and intimate friend of the deceased Thélémaque, remained in office until he could distribute permits of departure to as many of the Northerners as possible; then he quietly went on board the German steamer as if to see his nephew off for the cape, wrote his resignation and sent it ashore.

We are in a most dreadful state of anarchy, and at any moment the situation may become as a reign of terror. To-day, in Hayti, particularly in Port au Prince, is likened to France in 1789. Already dissensions are talked of between Boisrond Canal, Légitime, and Anselme Prophète. The North has sent a proclamation laying the death of Thélemaque and his followers to the personal account of Légitime.

The afternoon before the battle Légitime sent his family from his house, closed it, and went to the office of arrondissement, where he spent the night.

Saturday after the disaster the French minister, in company with the British consul-general, called upon General Légitime, and it is reported that they congratulated him on his success.

It is reported that from Cape Haytien, the northwest, the Artibonite to Gonaïves have taken up arms, it is presumed, with the intention of marching on to Port au Prince. October 4, news came from Jacmel that one named Merisier, with a band of mountaineers, drove away the generals of the arrondissement and place, who took refuge in consula*es. Merisier and his men proclaimed themselves in revolution against those remaining in the provisional government. Daily one is affrighted by narratives of some homicide or other atrocity, and accidents causing death are of daily occurrence. No life is without great danger in the city or near the city limits. No one can foresee when this terrible state of affairs will cease. Everybody is anxious, and many have left here, while others have sent their families to the neighboring islands so as to be in places of security.

On the evening of the 11th instant the Haytian man-of war Toussaint l'Ouverture left this port for Gonaïves and St. Marc, taking soldiers and volunteers on board, also General Jean Jumeau, ex-commander of the arrondissement of Gonaïves, and General Prudo, who had been governor of St. Marc; there were rumors concerning the latter city also, which they consider the key to the north, the northwest, and the Artibonite, being in arms against the provisional government. On the vessel arriving at St. Marc the people on shore fired the alarm, gave adhesion to the revolution proclaimed at Cape Haytien, and when those on board the war vessel attempted to disembark they were chased back with cries "à bas les Port au Princiens." The vessels returned here, and during the night of the 13th a dispatch was sent me to Vice-Cousul General Terres, from the foreign office, which I did not receive until the following morning, Sunday; copy of such dispatch I herein inclose marked with translation A and B, respectively. You will observe therein that the intentional departure of these two war vessels was to bombard Gonaïves and St. Marc.

On the 16th instant I received a dispatch from the Haytian foreign office informing me that the cities of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc had been placed in a state of blockade; inclose copy with translation of such dispatch marked, respectively, D and E, also my reply, wherein I accept such information, but with all reserve as to the detriment of United States citizens by such measures being taken, marked F.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE OF FOREIGN RELATIONS, SECTION No. _____, Port au Prince, October 13, 1888.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to bring to your knowledge that on account of the recent taking up of arms that has taken place at St. Marc and at Gonaïves, the provisional government has judged it indispensable to authorize the bombardment of those two rebel cities.

I beg you, in consequence, to have the kindness to take the necessary measures for the preservation of your fellow-citizens from the evils that may result from this urgent decision.

The two ships of war of the Government will leave forthwith this night.

PROTESTATION.

HAYTIENS: Some men, whose public conscience resents the tendencies, have endeavored to reach, during the night of the 28th to 29th of last September, against the revolution, which is the work of us all, and which is being pursued for the definite triumph of the sense of order, justice, and liberty.

H. Ex. 1, pt. 1——59

In the actuality, I thought that I needed not to write to give a new confirmation to the principles that I have constantly upheld and practiced. Disposed to draw from the last events some useful lesson for the future, I have decided not to comment publicly; but unjustly attacked by disloyal adversaries, I prepare my defense for history. In an odious proclamation of an unexpected committee which has established itself at Cape Haytien, the events of the 28th of September have been ignominiously misinterpreted. An egregious piece of ill-faith wishes to make of me and of the population of Port au Prince the assassins of General Seide Thélémaque. I energetically protest against that audacious and abominable assertion, as I have protested all my life against the policy of coup d'état. General Séide Thélémaque is the victim of his own temerity, and of the interested excitation of his partisans, impatient to seize the power by physical force derogatory to national sovereignty. This is the truth, such as it is seen in the depositions of the chiefs of divisions of the unfortunate reactionist.

They are alarmed at the cape. Is it sincerely through sorrow for General Seide's death, or through regret for the money they have foolishly spent in favor of his can-

Citizens, those are calumniators unworthy to bear the title of patriots who try to impose themselves upon you and to sacrifice the country to their impudent egotism.

When will they cease to make of you a herd that the ambitious ones can lead after them? When will they cease to deceive you? Yes, I protest in your name, in the name of the country, against this indignity. To-day you ought to be only free men. Ought I to be responsible, I, of the doings or of the consequence of the doings that

I condemn?

In politics my hand is unblemished. The country has not to ask me account of her misfortunes. Few Haytiens, I believe, have the right to say as much as myself. It can not then belong to any faction to request that I should be laid aside. I am in my right; I stay there.

Haytiens, you will stop your ears against all the lying and calculated charges. You will understand that it is time that they think of the general interests of the country, and that it is time that the country be heard. You will understand that the nation is tired out and can not bear any longer new commotions without running the risk of irretrievable anarchy and of complete disorganization.

Listen to the patriotic advice and the exhortation of all those that think of the future of our race.

SIR: I have just received from General Légitime a private letter informing me that by a decree of the national assembly of constituents yesterday, the 16th instant, he has been elected "chief of the executive power." Of the eighty-four constituents representing all parts of Hayti there were but thirty-three that have remained on arriving at the capital, since the affair of the 28th ultimo. I inclose herein copy of the decree with translation marked, respectively, A and B. It is to be observed that the second article expresses the object of the provisional executive powers, in view of national defense. This act of yesterday will be as fuel to the fire of rage that those in the north have for General Légitime, whose candidature, since the death of General Thélémaque, they have openly protested against, in order, they affirm, to prevent civil war. War is inevitable; already the frontier of St. Marc is guarded by troops from the north, and the chief of the "executive power" will in all probability attempt to subdue them. Vengeance is the cry of the north. The future is indeed gloomy.

By publications of this kind you will observe already a foundation for the fears I expressed in my former dispatch of the compromising action displayed by my colleague, which may tend to make the diplomatic body

To-day, the 6th of October, 1888, at 11 o'clock in the morning, in the presence of Messrs. Blanchard Célestin, Normil Barbos, and Nemours Débrosse, living and residing at Gonaives, present in the office of the arrondissement of that city, the citizen Jean Baptiste Nelson Desroches met Sublieutenant Assistant Instructor Navares Klain, of the Fourth Regiment of Artillery, who was in Port au Prince in the army of General Séide Thélémaque. Mr. Desroches asked Lieut. Navarès Klain "What took place between you and the minister of France, the Comte de Sesmaisons?"

Lieut. Navarès Klain answered in the presence of all those present:

General Jean Jumeau came in the office of the arrondissement of Port au Prince, where I was, and said to me, "There are some foreigners who are coming in to talk with you." Half an hour later I saw the Comte de Sesmaisons, Mr. Solon Menos, and several others come in. General Hérard Laforest was there.

General Jean Jumeau declared in my presence that General Séide had distributed ammunition to the soldiers in the afternoon and had himself led the Thirtieth Regiment to attack the palace. I denied that assertion in the presence of General Jean

For my part, when I was questioned by those gentlemen, I said to General Jean Jumeau himself that I found it incomprehensible that General Séide could have caused a distribution of ammunition to the soldiers without my knowing it, and that I could appeal to him that I never made a step away from General Seide since his arrival at Port au Prince, and that if General Seide had made this distribution of ammunition I would have received my share, and that what proved that this assertion was false was that I received none.

General Jean Jumeau declared, speaking to the Comte de Sesmaisons personally, that it was General Seide who urged the Thirtieth Regiment to give the first assault on the palace. I declared such an assertion to be a lie in his face.

Some minutes after, General Jean Jumeau arose and called the Comte de Sesmaisons by a sign, and told him to call me in order to talk with me.

The Comte de Sesmaisons and General Jean Jumeau were coming back to their seats when the Comte de Sesmaisons patted me on the shoulder and led me to a corner where he said to me:

"According to what General Jean Jumeau has told me you are a young man who can furnish us with good information, but I am speaking to you strictly in private. I offer you $1,000, $500 in American gold and the rest in silver and paper money, for your expenses." I answered to the Comte de Sesmaisons that I could not do that. Then he said that this was for the purpose of my writing with my own hand a decl tration tending to show that it was General Séide Thélémaque himself who had distributed and the strictly of the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said that the said the said that the said the said the said the said the sai uted ammunition and ordered to attack the palace, and furthermore that he left me to fix the amount. I wanted to write that declaration with my own hand.

Being unable to obtain anything from me he withdrew and joined his companions. After this declaration the present deposition was drawn up and signed by the witnesses, Mr. Desroches and the Sublieutenant Navarès Klain, the day, month, and

No. 217.1 LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES. Port au Prince, Hayti, October 29, 1888. (Received November 7.)

SIR: Late Sunday afternoon, the 21st instant, I received a note from Mr. J. D. Metzger, agent of the Diamond Mail Line of steamers, informing me that the steamer Haytian Republic had been seized by the Haytian war vessel Dessalines, and brought into this harbor, and that my presence at the port office was absolutely necessary. I immediately went down to the city and observed at the port office a great quantity of men and considerable confusion. In the office I found Mr. Smith, first officer of the Haytian Republic, whom they seemed to regard as a prisoner. After questioning him I thought it advisable to go on board, but was informed by the captain of the port that no one could visit the ship without a permit from the acting minister of foreign af-

933HAYTI.

It was then growing dark; and noticing the excitement of the common people around there, I determined to call upon General Légitime and request him to allow the first officer to return on board as a measure for his personal safety. I found General Légitime with his counselors, made my request, which was granted, and then I refused to have anything whatever to say about the affair that evening. The next morning, Monday, I received a dispatch from Mr. Piquant, acting minster of foreign affairs, copy inclosed herein. In reply to such I sent the inclosed reply.

General Anselme Prophète, in charge of the portfolio of war and navy, called upon me the same morning and appeared to be anxious to arrange the matter; "any friendly arrangement," said he. I could give him no satisfaction, not yet having visited the ship. About noon went on board, examined the ship's papers, and the following is Captain Compton's narrative of the affair, as taken directly from his statement:

Left Jacmel October 19 and arrived at St. Marc on the 20th at 5.30 p. m.; when entering the harbor we sighted a steamer to the northwest, 7 miles distance, but were unable to make her out; took pilot on board and came to anchor; pilot informed us that the steamer outside was a Haytian gun-boat trying to blockade the harbor.

Saw the American consul, and he informed me that he had received letters from the American minister at Port au Prince in which there was no mention of any blockade at St. Marc.

Left St. Marc at daylight, October 21, with the American flag flying, and when out clear of the buoy we were stopped by the gun-boat, and the commander ordered me on board. I refused to leave my ship, and sent my first officer on board with my passenger-list and declaration of the steamer's destination.

The commander kept my first officer a prisoner on board and sent a boat-load of armed men to take charge. I let two men on board, but refused to allow the others to board. The commander ordered me to proceed to Port au Prince, which we did under protest.

We arrived at Port au Prince at 2.30 p.m., and came to anchor in the outer harbor; at 6.30 the commander of the port sent a verbal message to us to take my ship to the inside harbor, which I refused to do, not having seen the American minister.

The commander of the gun-boat came on board and wished me to go on shore, but I refused to go, unless by force, until I had seen the American minister; he then took my first officer on shore, and returned at 9 p. m. with my first officer and a detachment of soldiers, who have taken charge of my ship.

I now protest and deny the right of the Haytian gun-boat to detain my ship from proceeding on her voyage, as I knew nothing of any blockade at Haytian ports, and I consider it an insult to the American flag, and will so represent it to the United States through the American minister.

The notification of the blockade was made the 16th instant, and from that time I had no means of communication with our agent in the north.

There being ten passengers on board and four of them constituents going to join the others in the north, the authorities here wished to have them brought to the shore, but I protested against such action, declaring that their persons were guarantied by the flag covering the vessel, even more so, as passengers, than the crew of such vessel. Had they been brought to shore at that time, undoubtedly their lives would have been forfeited.

General Prophète, returning in the afternoon, had an entirely different attitude than in the morning, and nothing could be done. lowing day the three counselors present at the capitol called upon me with an idea of arranging the matter. I was conciliant and asked but three things:

(1) That the passengers be permitted to continue their voyage to a port not under blockade.

(2) That the United States flag receive a salute of twenty one guns for the insults received.

(3) That an indemnity, the amount to be settled between the authorities and myself, be granted the ship at a certain rate each day of detention.

The gentlemen appeared to have a certain belief in their culpability, and anxiety to avert any trouble between the United States and Hayti; but later they sent to me the chargé of finance and commerce, who wished to argue about the first and second stipulations made by me; wished the four constituents landed to remain under my protection, etc.; could not comprehend the insult to our flag; feared it would look like humiliating themselves to salute.

I made no argument with him, but remained firm in my convictions. To show exactly the situation of to-day it must be explained that Hayti is divided into five departments, the North, the Northwest, the Artibonite, the West, and the South. Now, the three first-named departments are entirely against Légitime, and demand that he retire as candidate and protest against his election as "Chef du Pouvoir Executif" by the minority of the constituents of the country. Of the West, Port au Prince appears to be Légitime's stronghold, yet they are at this moment conspiring against him, which is taking rapid progress; at Jacmel, also in the West, they have declared against him and have taken up arms to that effect, the two constituents of Jacmel, the one of Bainet being on board of the Haytien Republic. In the South the principal city, Aux Cayes, is said to be simply waiting for the word. Hence it can be easily seen that almost the entire country is against Légitime, and even had he the departments of the West and South solid in his favor the majority of the departments would be against him.

This country is now in a state of anarchy. They had lately a defective provisional government, which was in charge of affairs when the few constituents elected General Légitime as "Chef du Pouvoir Exécutif." There were of the eighty-four constituents eighty-four elected to represent to all parts of Hayti, to form a new constitution, and elect a President. Now, the North, Northwest, and Artibonite alone have forty-three constituents, and by the blank votes cast it appears now that there were but twenty-seven of the thirty-three present that voted for Légitime. Hence a small minority is attempting to represent the whole people.

Since the seizure of the steamer Haytien Republic, in a printed sheet published by an unknown committee, it has greatly commented upon us Americans and tried to show us up in a very bad light. Hence our citizens have become alarmed, and, owing to the condition of affairs, are anxious to see at least one of our war vessels. I am afraid for the lives of those Haytians under our protection in the steamer, to say nothing of our own lives; and, as above remarked, the desperate position in which those in this city are placed is such that any extravagance, if they find themselves cornered, may be feared.

I send to-day, by way of Kingston, Jamaica, the following cablegram in care of the United States consul, advising him to send such dispatch in cipher, if possible:

STATE DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C.:

American steamer and schooner seized by Haytian war vessels; flag insulted; life and property in danger. War vessel necessary immediately.

I received word from Captain Compton on the 25th instant that he was ordered to bring his ship, which was in the outer harbor, into the inper harbor within an hour, or the authorities themselves would bring her in. On account of the outer harbor being the more healthy place, I addressed a note to the chargé of foreign affairs (inclosure 3), but not even has its reception been acknowledged, and the same evening they sent aboard and took out certain portions of the ship's machinery, which is deposited at the post-office. Saturday the ship was hauled into the inner harbor.

HAYTI. 935

The blockade established is not effective. Consequently in law it is null, because there were three cities blockaded—Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc—and but two vessels to make such blockade, and I take into consideration that on the 19th instant I received a dispatch from the chargé of foreign affairs stating that, notwithstanding the notification of the blockade given the foreign representatives at this city on the 16th instant, on the 17th instant the steamer Haytian Republic made a voyage from Gonaïves to St. Marc. In my reply I said succinctly that certainly I could not enter into the question of the blockade being efficient, since he said in his dispatch that the steamer Haytian Republic continued her regular trips from Gonaïves to St. Marc.

On Monday, the 22d instant, both of the Haytian war vessels were in this harbor. What vessels, then, were making the blockade? Saturday, the 27th instant, the German steamer, direct from Cape Haytien, arrived at Port au Prince. No vessel stopped her on her way. Hence there is no serious blockade.

Sunday, the 28th instant, the Mole St. Nicholas, Port de Paix, and Jacmel, by a decree, were put under blockade.

We have in the harbor the French war vessel Bisson.

The Haytian war vessel Toussaint L'Ouverture brought in here Sunday evening, the 21st instant, the American schooner William Jones. The William Jones was bound for Gonaïves, having left Boston October 3. When off Gonaïves she was spoken by the Haytian war vessel Toussaint L'Ouverture and told to proceed to Port au Prince, as Gonaïves was under blockade. The captain immediately shaped his course for this port, but later the vessel was taken in tow, soldiers put on board while at sea, and at this writing are in charge of the vessel, which has a perishable cargo.

In the name of all our citizens I pray you to insist upon the Secretary of the Navy sending us a vessel of war.

That instruction, including your dispatch to the Department of October 14, 1885, No. 757, which called it forth, is printed in the volume of Foreign Relations for 1886; pages 530-531, but in case you should not possess the book, a copy of the correspondence referred to is attached hereto for your convenient information.

The position of this Government, briefly summarized, is this: We do not regard extraterritorial asylum, either in a legation or a consulate, as a right to be claimed under international law. We do not sanction or invite the exercise of asylum in those countries where it actually exists as a usage, but in such cases we recognize and admit its existence, and should circumstances bring about the uninvited resort of a political refugee for shelter to a consulate or legation of the United States, we should expect equal toleration and privilege in this regard with that allowed by such local usage to any other consulate or legation.

This statement shows the error into which you have fallen in instructing the consular agents that, should they receive political refugees, and difficulty arise in consequence, they would "in that case have forfeited all claims to the support of the Government of the United States." Only the reported facts of an actual case arising could enable the Department to determine whether an abuse of the local usage had been committed.

The present instruction taken in connection with the memorandum on the subject communicated to you with the Department's No. 185 of August 23, 1884, will doubtless make this complex and delicate question sufficiently clear for your guidance.

A copy of this correspondence will be sent to the legation at Port au Prince for its information.

G. L. RIVES. Assistant Secretary.

No. 29.1

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 7, 1885.

SIR: The subject of asylum in Hayti, to which reference was made in my instruction No. 28 of the 3d instant, is again brought to the Department's attention by the representations of Mr. Goutier, United States consul at Cape Haytien, a copy of whose dispatch, No. 757, of the 14th ultimo, is herewith inclosed for your information.

Mr. Goutier sets out with an erroneous summing up of the position taken by this Government in the premises. He says in one place that "the United States does not recognize the right of asylum in her consulates;" and, further, that "it is plainly set forth that this right is not admitted."

The statement properly should be that the Government of the United States does not claim for its legations abroad any extraterritorial privileges of asylum, and consequently makes no such claim in respect of consular offices, or private residences of American citizens, or American merchant vessels in port. If, as a custom, in any country, the practice of asylum prevails, and is tacitly or explicitly recognized by the local authorities in respect of least constant and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided and provided an the local authorities in respect of legations, consulates, private dwellings, or vessels of another nationality, the exercise of the consuctudinary privilege by Americans could not be deemed exceptional; and if, under any circumstances, refugees find their way to places of shelter under the American flag, or in the domicile of American civilzens, we should certainly expect such privileges as would be accorded were the like shelter under the flag or domicile of another power. But we claim no right or privilege of asylum; on the contrary, we discountenance it, especially when it may tend to obstruct the direct operation of law and justice.

науті. 939

Mr. Goutier next refers to the case of the insurgent who took refuge on the French bark Panama, and says that with the Department's instructions in view he would have been much perplexed had the vessel been American, for, says he, "it would have been my duty to allow the authorities to go on board and arrest that Haytian insurgent." And Mr. Goutier goes on to argue that if any other power claims the right of asylum in a given case, the United States could not forego a similar claim without loss of prestige.

As we understand the case of the Panama, the local authorities applied to the consul for permission to go on board and take the fugitive. In a case which recently arose in Cuba, where application was made to a consul to order the delivery of a person then on board an American vessel in port, who was accused of common crimes, and where the consul, after examining the charge against the person, ordered the captain to deliver him up, this Department held that the consul had no authority to order such surrender.

It does not seem pertinent to the present instruction to discuss the ethics of humanity, to which Mr. Goutier adverts. Section 48 of the Department's lately issued personal instructions to its diplomatic agents abroad is abundant evidence that the principles of common humanity, where arbitrary pursuit of merely political offenders is concerned, have not been overlooked in its ruling.

This instruction will enable you to answer Mr. Goutier, and you are requested to do so. It will also serve for your guidance in dealing with questions of this nature which may hereafter arise.

I am, sir, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 757.]

United States Consulate, Cape Haytien, October 14, 1885.

SIR: We have been instructed that the Government of the United States does not recognize the right of asylum in her consulates, and in the confidential memorandum sent last year to the German minister at Washington in relation to the views of our Government on the right of asylum in Hayti, it is plainly set forth that this right is not admitted.

If that Haytian insurgent who had taken refuge on board of the French bark Panama, as related in my No. 756 of the 12th instant, and the French vice-consul would not permit the authorities to go on board for the purpose of arresting him, had taken refuge on board of an American vessel, with these instructions in view, I would have been much perplexed, for it would have been my duty to allow the authorities to go on board and arrest that Haytian insurgent.

His doom would have been sealed! Still it seems to me that a consul of the United States ought to occupy in Hayti the same position as that occupied by the consuls of the other great powers. For such a difference in affording protection in this country would be looked upon by the ignorant masses as a mark of inferiority, and would give a certain prestige, even to consuls of second-class powers, not enjoyed by those of the American nation.

I know that the action of the French vice-consul in refusing to permit the authorities to go on board the French bark Panama to arrest that Haytian insurgent, as well as the so called right of asylum in Hayti, are in direct violation of international law and usage.

Still * * * we can not be surprised to find the great powers rather reluctant to relinquish a course of action which, in some instances, has been abused; but these abuses fade to insignificance when placed beside the countless good they have accomplished. * * I shall endeavor to keep my consulate free of refugees, without it be in exceptional cases where human life is wantonly destroyed. Then, as consul of a great Christian nation, obeying the supreme law of humanity, I would be impelled to save as many lives as I possibly could.

I would be thankful should the Department be pleased to outline some general instructions, in order that I might act knowingly, especially should Haytians seek protection on board of American vessels in this port.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, November 2, 1888.

SIR: Mr. Stanislas Goutier, the consul of the United States at Cape Haytien, reports to the Department a letter* addressed by him to you on the 8th ultimo, whereby he appears to concur in and express the suggestion of the consular body at Cape Haytien that Senator Légitime should withdraw his candidacy for the Presidency of Hayti in the interest of peace. The Department, while recognizing the good motives which induced Mr. Goutier to join in this proceeding, has felt called upon to rebuke his action, as at variance alike with the policy of this Government and the sound principles of international comity, which forbid any interference of its representatives, however remotely, with the free exercise of sovereign rights by foreign communities in the control of their domestic affairs. A copy of the instruction sent to Mr. Goutier is herewith inclosed for your information.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 1, 1888.

Sir: Your dispatches numbered 910, 912, 913, and 914, bearing the respective dates of October 4, 8, 13, and 15, 1888, have been received.

The interesting and effective recital they give of the recent revolutionary occur-reness at Cape Haytien and the movement against the capital is commended.

The Department can not, however, so commend your reported letter of October 8 to Mr. Thompson, in which, referring to the excited feelings of the inhabitants of northern Hayti and their avowed purpose to avenge the death of General Thélémaque, you say:

"In view of this impending fratricidal war and its disastrous result, the consuls here are of opinion that the diplomatic and consular corps at Port au Prince might, by using such means as they deem proper, by appealing to the patriotism of the members of the provisional government or the existing authorities, induce them to have General Légitime's name withdrawn from the list of candidates for the Presidency, being that alone can save Hayti from all the horrors of civil war, with its direful conse-

Fully recognizing the humane and honest motives which inspired you in thus addressing the United States minister at the Haytian capital, this Government can not lend the approbation of silence to the extraordinary suggestion of interference with the free exercise of the franchise by the Haytian people which is involved in the recommendation you make on behalf of your consular associates and in your own name. This Department is clearly and decidedly of the opinion that the expression of individual views by any representative of the United States in regard to a pending election by the citizens of the country to which he is accredited is a gross impropriety, which in a proper case entirely warrants his recall or dismissal from his post. In the present instance the apparent urgency of the case and your laudable desire to prevent bloodshed are sufficient to relieve you from any severer mark of the President's displeasure than the course hereby conveyed. Indeed, I am quite sure that had you been prompted less by the instant impulses of humanity and the desire to avert imminent disaster, reflection would have led you to withhold assent from the proposal of your colleagues.

SIR: Having been informed by Captain Compton, of the steam-ship Haytian Republic, yesterday, the 2d instant, that his ten passengers had voluntarily consented to the authorities request that they come ashore, and that they had consequently left the ship; furthermore, that the tribunal had rendered a verdict of confiscation of the vessel by the Haytian authorities and a payment to be made them of $50,000 by the Hayti Mail Line for damage done, and that those on board must leave the ship at once, I immediately addressed a dispatch to the chargé of foreign affairs (copy herein transmitted, marked A), you will please notice that in conformity with my previous dispatch on the subject (inclosure No. 3 to dispatch No. 217) I ignored the object and validity of the tribunal formed, and that in this last dispatch I only speak of "a verdict and a tribunal," as it has been but a mockery, the tribunal they established as a court of admiralty.

I am certain you will agree it was absolutely necessary that I send an energetic protest about this matter, as Captain Compton has been ordered several times to leave his ship, but, following my instructions, he will not do so unless those giving the order first pull down the flags over the vessel and force him off.

No. 133.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 16, 1888.

SIR: I transmit herewith for your information copy of a note* received from Mr. Preston, the Haytian minister in this country, with its inclosure, being a ceremonial letter addressed to the President of the United States by General Légitime, touching the latter's elevation to the executive power of Hayti, and also copy of my reply,† deferring the reception of such a missive by the President until the course of events shall have given reasonable stability to General Légitime's government in that Republic.

This course was rendered necessary by the fact that the titular Government of President Salomon has been forcibly overthrown and that claim to recognition on the part of any successor must await events.

The position of the United States in this regard is well presented in an instruction, sent March 9, 1863, to the representative of the United States at Caracas, and called forth by a condition of affairs in Venezuela not unlike that now existing in Hayti, as follows:

This Government has, and it must insist on, the right to determine for itself when new authorities, established in a foreign State, can claim from it a formal recognition of them as an established power.

This Government has at the same time, under the law of nations and by treaty, a clear right to have its properly appointed agents residing in Venezuela, although the authorities with which it has heretofore treated have been subverted more or less completely, and to communicate with the new authorities upon international matters affecting either the Government of the United States or its citizens. During the period, which, in case of any domestic revolution, may be either short or long, the agents of this Government have a right to confer upon such matters with the actual authorities who are conducting the affairs of Venezuela, and while the agent is bound to avoid all interformers in the deposition of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state to avoid all interference in the domestic questions of that State, he is entitled to be heard as the representative of the United States, without a previous recognition of the existing authorities in place of those which have been either more or less effectively supplanted.

During the events of the winter 1886-'87, when Peru was under the control of a provisional government, pending the action of the people upon the rival claims of Generals Iglesias and Cáceres, this Government, while continuing intercourse with the authorities in possession, deferred formal recognition until it became evident that the assent of the Peruvian nation had been indicated.

You have already been instructed to steer a careful course, and your discretion is relied upon not to interfere in Haytian domestic affairs or take sides in the internecine struggles in which the people of Hayti are now unhappily engaged. Your business intercourse with the local authorities, so far as the interests of this Government and its citizens are concerned, will be necessarily with the party de facto in control, but such action on your part can not imply any determination or the expression of opinion on the part of this Government as to the question of formal recognition.

We now await reports from the commander of the Boston and yourself, after the reception of which you will again receive instructions.

SIR: Referring to my No. 217, wherein the case of the schooner William Jones, of Boston, Mass., is alluded to as having been captured when sailing for Gonaïves on the 20th ultimo, I have the honor to inform you that to day I have terminated the affair, having succeeded in proving to the authorities of this city that such ship was not legally notified of the blockade, because no notification was inscribed on her papers as law requires; that she was ordered to Port au Prince arbitrarily, for after the notification that a port is blockaded the ship should have been allowed to proceed to any other open port of her choice; that having been brought to this harbor notwithstanding my protests in the premises, a guard was kept on board and the captain and crew treated as prisoners for some twenty days. Being ordered by the Haytian gunboat Toussaint L'Ouverture, she proceeded to this harbor and accepted the treatment of a prisoner. I claimed damages to the amount of $10,000, and the ship is allowed to enter this port free of duties on her cargo and for her tonnage. In fact, in round numbers, the indemnity with these privileges amounts to about $20,000. I have paid over the sum of $10,000 to Captain Collins, who is the principal owner of the ship. I have his receipt in duplicate for the amount. The ship is now being unloaded at the wharf.

[Inclosure 6 in No. 222.—Translation.]

PROTEST AGAINST THE CONDEMNATION OF AMERICAN STEAMER HAYTIAN REPUBLIC.

The Haytian Republic, an American ship of the "Haytian Mail Steam-ship Line," the head offices of company being in Boston, Mass., had quitted the port of St. Marc when she was captured by the Haytian gun-boat Dessalines, in execution of a blockade decreed on the 15th of October, 1888, by the provisional government of Hayti.

By circular of the "chief of the executive power," dated the 21st of October, a prize court (tribunal des prises) was soon instituted at Port au Prince. After a preliminary investigation, which was a mere mockery, inasmuch as the witnesses called were not even subjected to the formality of an oath, the captain and agent of the proprietors of the captured vessel were summoned (by subpænas dated the 27th of October) to a public trial by which the validity of the capture was to be established, the confiscation of the vessel and cargo was to be pronounced, and damages were to be awarded.

Mr. John D. Metzger, the agent of the Haytian Mail Steam-ship Company, alone appeared on behalf of the company, and petitioned for a brief delay necessary to prepare his defense. But this delay was promptly and categorically refused him, upon which he entered a protest and withdrew, leaving the court to pronounce judgment by default.

It is held that the steam-ship Haytian Republic, arriving at the capes when this city was already in a state of insurrection against the provisional government, had landed a cannon (6-pounder), mounted on a carriage; that she had taken on board not only a delegation of the revolutionary committee of the cape, commissioned (they say) to arouse the departments of the Northwest, the Artibonite, and the South, but also soldiers, and eighty cases of ammunition; that she had transported soldiers from Port de Paix to Gonaïves and from Gonaïves to St. Mare: that from the latter places she had proceeded to Petit Goave, to Miragoane, and to Cayes, where the delegation sent a manifesto and other printed matter to the military authorities; that at Jacmel, which the delegation had succeeded in arousing to arms, the Haytian Republic had taken on board the two constituents (i. e., members elected to the constitutional assembly) of that city, one from Bainet, and other Haytians, to carry them, as it appears, to the North; but that in the waters of St. Marc she met the Dessalines; that signals of various kinds—among them a blank charge of powder from a cannon, followed by six charges with balls—were given, but that these did not succeed in preventing her superior speed from entering the port, and that she was captured whilst coming out on the 21st of October, 1888.

Such are the circumstances, real or supposed, upon which the prize court (tribunal des prises) have based their judgment of the 31st of October last, by which they have declared the capture of the Haytian Republic good and valid, ordered the confiscation of this vessel to the benefit of the Government of Hayti, and have condemned jointly and severally the captain and owner thereof to pay to this Government $50,000 damages.

One thing is certain, viz, that, excepting a return once from Gonaïves to Port de Paix, the Haytian Republic did not deviate from her habitual route to serve the insurgents.

A circular letter of General Légitime, the "chief of the executive power," under date the 21st of October, 1833, announced to Messrs. H. Léchaud, J. N. Léger, Justin Dévot, M. Laforest, and Dantès Fortunat that, acting with the advice of his council, he had constituted them a special prize court (tribunal spécial des prises) for the purpose of adjudicating on the cases of contraband of war which should present themselves throughout the duration of the insurrectionary movements of the North and of the Artibonite.

Now, no law, no fext of a constitution of Hayti, nor even of the treaty of the 3d November, 1864, having admitted a special prize court (tribunal special des prises) side by side with the ordinary tribunals of the Republic of Hayti, it follows inevitably that the "chief of the executive power" has, by this act, forced and confounded into one two powers or functions altogether distinct from each other, viz, the creation of a new jurisdiction, and the designation of the functionaries who are to exercise it.*

A parallel case presented itself to the attention of the United States Government during the Mexican war, in which the Supreme Court decided that neither the President of the United States nor any functionary acting under his authority has the power to confer jurisdiction in the matter of prizes to courts or tribunals whose authority does not emanate from the law or from the Constitution. (See Calvo, vol.

4, sec. 2862 in fine.)

In Hayti there has existed, ever since the foundation of the Republic, the same separation of the legislative from the executive power. It is either the constitution or the law only (being the work of the former of these powers) which institutes jurisdictions. Since 1816 the executive has not had, in a matter of this kind, any other power except that of appointing to judicial functions already created by the legislat-

If, therefore, the present "chief of the executive power" had the right to name the members of the prize court (tribunal des prises), his action would not, and could not, be legal until after a law enacted by the legislature had decreed the existence, determined the powers, and fixed the composition of this tribunal. It is therefore in violation of the invariable principles of Haytian law and right that General Légitime assumed the authority to give to the persons whom he had chosen the commission to adjudicate on the case of the Haytian Republic.

To meet this grave difficulty, some pretend that before the judgment of the prize court was pronounced—i. e., before the 31st of October—the unauthorized and illegal circular by which General Légitime, on the 21st of October, 1888, created the said prize court had been approved in the deliberations of the constitutional assembly in session at Port au Prince.

If this be true, it is nothing else and nothing less than a solemn avowal of the illegality of the act by which General Légitime created his prize court. It can not be proved that such a ratification can have the effect of effacing this radical defect, the existence of which it so clearly recognizes. But, as a fact, this allegation is not true. In the month of September eighty persons were elected to compose the constitutional assembly (assemblée constituante). The principle of the majority, which has always governed, and which still governs, the workings of the Haytian chambers of legislature, exacted the presence of forty-one members (constituents) at least, in order to render valid the acts and deliberations of any session of this body. Now, the number of citizens elected to the "assemblée constituante," and who have taken their seats in the legislative halls since the 15th of October, 1888, has never exceeded thirty-six, and therefore the decision by which they sanctioned the circular of the 31st of October must be null and void, being the act of a powerless minority.

According to Bluntschli, whose work is standard on this matter, "the form of proceeding before the prize court or councils not being regulated by international law, recourse must be had to the forms in use in the State from which the council derives its powers." (See Droit International Codifié, No. 848.)

Admitting the creation of the prize court or council, such as was decreed in October, 1888, it is still inadmissible that, in the absence of any law, such prize court should proceed according to caprice or arbitrary pleasure, for the reason that neutral parties have the right of untrammeled defense, and they have need of rules by which they shall be guarantied that the prosecution is conducted with impartiality.

Of all the forms of trial in use in Hayti, that which might have been chosen as of more adaptability in the premises is the form of the code of criminal instruction (code d'instruction criminelle), because the character of the facts judged by the prize court or council is confined to infractions of the penal code. Neither the solemn procedure before the jury nor the too-hasty procedure of the police courts is adapted to our case. It is rather to the mode of procedure before the correctional courts that recourse should be had, if the object is to reconcile that promptness which the public interests claim with the respect due to the defense of neutral parties.

Now, in the trial of simple misdemeanors (i.e., offenses punishable by fine and imprisonment) before the correctional court, the law grants to the accused a delay of three full days to prepare his defense. If, for example, the subpœna is served upon him on the 27th, the trial can not be ordered to take place before the 31st.

But in the case of the Haytian Republic, such was the haste to close the affair even at the sacrifice of justice, that although the summons were served on Messrs. Metzger and Compton only on the 27th of October, the 30th was fixed for the trial. Mr. Metzger, who presented himself on behalf of the ship and owners on the day fixed, prayed in vain for the delay necessary to prepare his defense. The prize court refused to entertain his prayer, and passed an adverse judgment on the case.

TV.

According to this judgment, pronounced on October 31, 1888, the facts upon which is based the conviction of the Haytian Republic are of two categories, viz: That at the cape she had sold a cannon with its carriage,* had given passage to armed insurgents and emissaries of the insurrectionary party, and had transported ammunitions from one port to another; in a word, that she had violated the blockade.

V.

It is not satisfactorily proved from the papers and declarations of the witnesses that a cannon with its carriage had been landed at Cape Hayti. Neither Mr. Victor Jean Pierre, nor Mr. Vital Alcide Charlemagne, nor Mr. Léon Nicolet, nor even Mr. Solon Ménos—in fine, none of the witnesses called by the prosecution has testified to this fact. The numerous letters from functionaries or from ordinary Haytian citizens mentioned in the judgment say nothing on this subject, and (what is especially worthy of notice) neither the captain nor the agent of the vessel has been challenged or compelled to give any explanation. It is said that a letter was written by the French consular agent to his minister at Port an Prince on the subject, and it is upon this simple letter, which possesses no judicial value whatever, that this count in the accusation is based.

But the prize-court or council ought to have perceived that the author of this letter, not being an avowed or ostensible agent of the Government of Port au Prince, his reports, although written, perhaps, in accordance with the mind of the Government, are worth nothing in the eyes of justice, and that what is necessary is the affirmation, not of a person who writes from a distance, but of a witness who appears in person, and who does not testify except under oath.

As to the arms, they were probably those which the individuals taking passage either from the cape or from Port de Paix habitually carry about with them. But even upon this point the depositions do not agree.

Doubtless the French consular agent, whose letter has been shown to be valueless as testimony, speaks of 256 men well armed with Remington or repeating rifles. Mr. Léon Nicolet mentions 300 armed men who had landed at Gonaïves; but Mr. Vital Alcide Charlemagne had seen only 125 men, more or less armed, land at Gonaïves, whilst Mr. Victor Jean Pierre affirmed that, when during the voyage which preceded the capture the Haytian Republic landed at St. Marc the volunteers from the Cape and Gonaïves, these volunteers were not armed. If in the depositions of the same witness there is mention of arms during the return voyage from Jacmel to St. Marc—i. e., the voyage when the vessel was captured—it is necessary to weigh attentively the terms which he used, viz: "They say that she (the vessel) had landed these arms on Saturday." Thus it is not certain that the persons transported from the cape to St. Marc were armed, if we except a half dozen whom Captain Compton admits to have had arms.

But, however this may be, neither the sale of the cannon nor the transportation of the eighty cases of ammunition (which, besides, is not attested by any one but the French consular agent at the cape), nor the passage given to the volunteers from that city and from Port de Paix, can serve as a legal basis for a judgment against the Haytian Republic. In fact, the restrictions to the liberty of the commerce of neutrals with an enemy are (1) interdiction from carrying to such enemy contraband of war, and (2) interdiction from giving passage to the officers and soldiers actually in his (the enemy's) service.

There is no doubt that this cannon and the eighty cases of ammunition are contraband of war according to article 20 of the treaty of the 3d of November, 1864, existing between the United States and the Republic of Hayti, and that the volunteers from the cape, from Port de Paix, and from Gonaïves were soldiers in the service of the enemy. But when it is a question of prohibited articles or of hostile persons, that which constitutes the misdemeanor of contraband of war on the part of the neutral party is the actual presence of arms or soldiers on board the vessel. After they have arrived at their destination, after they have been landed, the offense is fix shed, the misdemeanor ceases, and at the same time the right of investigating or prosecuting it.

^{*}This is a small cannon, which was used for firing salutes on board, and which was absolutely useless for purposes of war.

Bluntschli says (see No. 818):

"Vessels which transport hostile troops become neutral again as soon as the transportation has been effected, and they can not be captured after the landing has taken

Calvo says (see Drait International, § 2467):

"In strict equity the misdemeanor of contraband being successfully accomplished in the voyage going, the vessel is not subject to capture in returning.

Wheaton agrees with Sir William Scott, whose opinions he cites as follows: "The general rule relative to articles which are contraband of war is, as Sir William Scott defines, that the articles must be captured in delicto, and during the actual pursuit of the voyage to the hostile port."

"If," says Sir William Scott, "the goods are not captured in delicto, and during the actual pursuit of the voyage, no penalty is at the present day attached."

When the Haytian Republic was captured at St. Marc she had quitted Jacmel and was on her return voyage.

Several days had elapsed since she had accomplished her voyage going to the hostile ports, and since she had landed the arms, ammunitions, and troops, she was free therefore from all legal prosecution under this head.

But the opinions of authors, though favorable, go for little in presence of an argument of conventional law. The Haytian Republic assuredly belongs to citizens of a neutral power. If other proofs of this were wanting the judgment of the prize-court rendered 31st October, in which this fact is recognized, would supply them. according to the last paragraph of article 28 of the treaty of the 3d November, 1864, existing between the United States and the Republic of Hayti-

"If it be evident from other documents, whether a passport or certificates or other proofs admissible according to the customs and usages of nations, that the vessel belongs to citizens or subjects of the neutral power, she shall not be confiscated, but shall be released, with her cargo, the contraband articles excepted, and shall be set free to pursue her voyage."

Article 10 of the same treaty declares with reference to persons found on board a neutral vessel:

"They can not be taken unless they are officers or soldiers in the actual service of the enemy."

Thus, not only was the Haytian Republic free from all legal prosecution from the very moment she had landed the articles and soldiers accounted contraband, but what is more, even had she been taken in delicto with all these actually on board, the Government of Port au Prince would have had no legal right, neither to arrest her nor to break up her voyage, nor to confiscate her to their benefit. All that this Government could legally have done is to have seized the contraband articles, and to have made prisoners of the soldiers and officers.

It is proved that on board the Haytian Republic were two emissaries from the cape bound on a political mission to the south and to Jacmel. Nothing, however, justifies the belief that Captain Compton knew the object of their vogage. Two passengers, viz, Messrs. Léon Nicolet and Charlemagne, who made the voyage with them, had not been aware of their presence, because, without doubt, no special mark nor avowed title had disclosed their capacity or mission.

If, at Cayes, the delegation from the cape sent a manifesto and other printed matter to the commandant of the arrondissement, there exists a letter from the latter functionary, dated the 19th October, 1888, and addressed to provisional government, which proves that it was not the captain of the vessel, but a stranger from the land, who took the said manifesto and printed matter ashore.

If the delegation did the same thing at Petit Goave and at Miragoane, the silence of the local authorities about the matter does not justify the belief that Captain

Compton was the intermediary at those places any more than at Cayes.

It is pitiful to see with what lack of consistency the judgment of the prize-court (October 31, 1888) has endeavored to make Captain Compton the instigator of the insurrection at Jacmel, when, as a fact, his ship entered and left that port on the very day that the population had risen against the government of Port au Prince.

What is true, what alone is true, in spite of the unfounded conjectures inspired by political passion is, that the Haytian Republic carried, as passengers, from the cape to Jacmel, and from Jacmel to St. Marc, two delegates of the department of the North, two emissaries of the insurrection, enemies of the power which dominates at Port au Prince; but these were neither officers nor soldiers in the service of the enemy.

Did this vessel, by that act, disregard the obligations of neutrality? Not at all. The second paragraph of article 19 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, existing between the United States and Hayti, says plainly:

"The same neutrality extends to the persons found on board, although these persons may be the enemies of the two parties or of one of them, unless they are officers or soldiers in the actual service of the enemy."

VI.

In contempt of international practice (see Calvo, vol. 4, sec. 2882), the commander of the Dessalines did not affirm, under oath, the truth of the report which he made concerning the capture of the Haytian Republic. This report, therefore, presents nothing but mere allegations, without any guaranty of exactitude, declarations which nothing recommends as worthy of credit—in fact, to employ any expression used in criminal procedure-nothing but simple statements (not evidence), which may or may not aid a judge in forming a general idea.

Mr. Gaillard (the commander) has not been heard as a sworn witness, neither before the prize-court nor at the preliminary inquiry.

The following is a copy of his report, which, after three days of toil and disappointment, Mr. John D. Metzger finally obtained from the prize-court:

PORT AU PRINCE, October 21, 1888.

"To the Chief of the Executive Power:

"I have the honor to report to you that yesterday, the 20th instant, about 4.45 o'clock in the afternoon, as we were at the point of La Grande Saline, otherwise called Grande Pierre Baie, a distance of 6 miles from St. Marc, we perceived a steamer in the direction south by west half west a distance of 12 or 13 miles, under the island of La Gonare. We immediately ran down upon her. Little by little as we advanced towards her, she directed her course toward the bay of St. Marc. Having approached a distance of 3 miles from the vessel we hoisted our flag of rendez-vous, sounded the whistle; nothing was able to stop her. We were obliged, therefore, to fire a blank charge from the cannon in order to stop her. Seeing that she did not comply, we sent six balls at her, which did not reach her, the last falling in the direction of her two masts, at the distance of a quarter of a mile. We were then a mile and a half from the vessel. She had already reached the bay of St. Marc. We took up our position to watch her all the night. The next day, Sunday, towards 7.30 o'clock, she attempted to quit the bay. I whistled to her; I ran down upon her. Seeing that she would not stop I fired a cannon, and then only she changed her course."

But, fortunately, a journal of Port au Prince, Le Progrès, in its issue of the 26th

October, 1888, had already published the same report in the following terms:

"PORT AU PRINCE, October 21, 1888.

"PRESIDENT: I have the honor to report to you that yesterday, the 20th instant, about 4.45 o'clock in the afternoon, we perceived a steamer going toward the island of La Gonaïve, steering in the direction of the bay of St. Marc. We gave pursuit immediately. Notwithstanding our signals and the reports of our cannon she dared to enter into the latter city, where she remained until next day. At 7.30 o'clock in the morning she prepared herself and came out. Always on our guard we blew the whistle and fired a gun so as to oblige her to surrender at our demand. Indeed the Haytian Republic, for it was certainly she, stopped, etc."

Of these two versions of one and the same document there is one which must be apocryphal. This important fact must not be lost sight of, viz, that the text of the journal Le Progrès was published anteriorly to the adverse judgment and at a moment when they had no fears as to the issue of the affair; whereas the copy delivered to Mr. Metzger is posterior to the arrival at Port au Prince of a United States war ship sent expressly to investigate the case of the Haytian Republic. Is it going too far if one concludes from this that the numerous variations which this copy bears, over and above the statements contained in the journal, are due to the present necessity, recognized by those in fault, of justifying themselves elsewhere than before the Haytian functionaries of the prize-court?

Whatever may be thought of this supposition, the decided difference in the two texts of the reports in question does none the less demonstrate how little credit is to be given to the declarations of Commander Gaillard. According to one of these texts he had only seen a merchant ship appear, which ship steered in the direction of St. Marc, but he has not attempted to say whereabouts he himself was, and by so doing aid us in finding out whether he actually guarded the port or not. According to the other he specifies the point from which he discovered the Haytian Republic and goes as far as to determine the distance between the two vessels, viz, 12 or 13 miles. With all due deference to the commander of the Dessalines, however, it is clear either that he is not very well skilled in the calculation of distances or that he wantonly deceives himself, because if, in reality, he had been 6 miles north of St. Marc (the bay being 10 miles in width from one extreme point to the other), a vessel which would be under the island of La Gonaïve, outside of the southern extreme point of the bay, would be distant from the Dessalines not 12 or 13 miles only, but 16 miles and upwards.

Of the cannon-balls which failed to reach he says: "The last fell in the direction of the two masts of the Haytian Republic, at the distance of a quarter of a mile. We were then a mile and a half from the vessel." That is mathematically false. Two thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight meters are equivalent to 1½ marine miles; the cannon of the Dessalines can project a ball to a distance of 3,500 meters; a ball thrown from the Dessalines in the direction of the Haytian Republic at a distance of a mile and a half would, therefore, have gone beyond rather than have fallen short (on this side) of the latter vessel.

After that, when Commander Gaillard declares that it was at a distance of 3 miles from the Haytian Republic that he hoisted his flag of rendez-vous, blew the whistle, and fired a blank charge of powder, nothing guaranties that his figure is exact; nothing guaranties that he did not fix upon it by a mere guess or that he did not prepare it expressly, wishing to make it believed that the vessel pursued was in a position to observe the signals from the Dessalines.

The truth is that this gun-boat, cruising a long time in the direction of Gonaïves, had left the northern promontory of the bay of St. Marc, known as "La Table du Diable," a long distance behind when she perceived the Haytian Republic, who was entering in the bay of St. Marc. If Commander Gaillard, then returning, hoisted a flag, this signal, which the distance rendered invisible to the naked eye, had not been seen, and nothing else in the direction of the Salines had attracted the attention of Captain Compton and his crew. If the whistle had been sounded and cannon discharged it would be necessary first to ascertain unmistakably the distance, the state of the atmosphere, and the force and direction of the wind before it could be proved that they had been heard. In any case the Haytian Republic, whom the judgment of the prize court extelled for the superiority of her speed, had already entered far into the bay, whose entrance she found absolutely free, and was able then to await at her anchorage, which she had nearly reached, an explanation of the signal.

There is one fact, however, which no one has thought of doubting, which is that on the 20th of October last the Haytian Republic entered the port of St. Marc and the next day quitted it, at a time when this port was declared blockaded. This fact is not calculated to legalize the capture of this vessel.

Two elements, in fact, are necessary to constitute the violation of a blockade on the part of a vessel who has entered into and quitted a hostile port; (1) a knowledge of the blockade, and (2) the effectiveness of the blockade.

If one or the other of these conditions is wanting, the neutral vessel is not subject to capture, and this in virtue of the general principle of the liberty of commerce with hostile ports.

It is true that by a decree dated the 15th of October, 1888, the provisional government of Hayti declared that the ports of St. Marc, Gonaïves, and Cape Hayti were blockaded, but such declaration has no binding force for strangers if it has not been brought to their knowledge by proper notification.

There are three kinds of notification, viz, (1) the general or diplomatic notification, which is given to neutral governments; (2) the special notification which the commander cruising gives to vessels sailing in the line of the blockade or are there found; and (3) the notification which, in order to mark the commencement and to circumscribe the action of the blockade, the commander of the blockading forces signifies to the authorities of the places whose outside communications he is charged to intercept.

The necessity of the first is indisputable. General Légitime, recognizing this obligation, notified, by a dispatch dated the 16th October, 1888, the United States minister at Port au Prince of the proclamation of the blockade decreed by the provisional government.

Notwithstanding the diplomatic notification the special notification is always indispensable. This principle is avowed by the prosecuting officer (commissaire du gouvernement) of the prize court at Port au Prince. In his summing up he said, "Commander Gaillard did everything which he possibly could to stop the vessel and to give to her the special notification necessary in such cases." This doctrine has been proclaimed also in the judgment of the prize court (31st October, 1888), which judgment says, "Considering that a blockade is regular when this blockade has been preceded by a general notification and by a special notification."

There is here no error on the part of those who formed the prize court of Port au Prince. They have had recourse to the French jurisprudence, which is authority in Hayti in all matters where said jurisprudence is not in direct opposition to a text of law, and without perceiving it, perhaps, they have adopted the decision of President Lincoln, of the United States of America, contained in his proclamation issued on the 19th of April, 1861.

Charles Calvo, who, in the sense of his opinion, quotes a considerable number of treaties, says, "We do not think that it is going too far to regard the special notification as an essential formality of a blockade." (See Calvo, vol. 4, secs. 2582, 2583, 2584, 2589.)

The Haytian Republic had no special notification of the blockade of St. Marc. mander Gaillard pretends to have sounded the whistle, to have hoisted intentionally a flag of rendez-vous, and to have fired at her six or seven times, and the prize court have considered these warnings as establishing sufficiently the special notification.

But, besides the fact that the mere blowing of a whistle has no precise signification, that it is possible for the motion or hoisting of a flag not to be remarked, and that the cannon was fired after the Haytian Republic had entered the port; besides these facts, we say, there is one circumstance which proves that these warnings did not signify the pursuit of the Dessalines and the existence of the blockade. On board of the Haytian Republic were the delegation of the insurrectionists of the North, returning from Jacmel, together with the constituents of that city, the constituents of Bainet, and other passengers who could not delude themselves nor hope to delude others with respect to their true character as enemies of the Government of Port au Prince, and who certainly were not anxious to be captured unnecessarily, having it in their power at the same time to avoid such a misfortune. Very well! If, on the Haytian Republic, they had been able to see or to hear the signals given by the Dessalines, if, above all, they had been able to understand the signification of these signals, is it not irresistibly clear that the delegates, the constituents, and the Haytian passengers would, on arriving at St. Marc, have abandoned the sea altogether and have continued their voyage by land, seeing, too, that all the territory from this point to Cape Hayti was in favor of the insurrection? If they acted otherwise, if they quitted St. Mare again immediately on the same vessel (as they unquestionably did, it is certainly because the signals did not warn them in an unmistakable manner that the port was blockaded by the Dessalines.

But the sounds of a whistle, the motion of a flag, the distant reports of cannon—are these, properly speaking, the "special notification" of a blockade? Although in general the form of individual warning is not determined, it is not by signals that the French practice has decided that it shall be given. These signals are equivocal. The "special notification" must be made in writing and must be registered on the muster-roll of the neutral vessel. (See Comte Molé, Dépèche du 17 Mai, 1838; French treaty with Brazil, Bolivia, Venezuela, Ecuador, New Grenada; years 1828, 1835, 1843,

Thus, also, the conseil d'état (council of state) annulled the capture of the Louisa because it was not sufficient that the blockade had been notified to foreign powers; it was necessary, besides, that the vessel should have been specially notified of the existence and extent of the blockade, and that the announcement of this notification should have been written on her muster-roll. (See Calvo, Vol. 4, sec. 2661.)

The Government of the United States has recently adopted a rule of conduct which assimilates itself to the French practice. The declaration of the blockade of the ports of the Southern States, made by President Lincoln, on the 19th of April, 1861, contains the following:

"If, with the intention of violating this blockade, any vessel whatever attempts to enter or to leave these ports, she shall be notified by the commander of one of the ships of the blockading squadron, who shall record in the ship's journal the fact, and the date of the notification."

Hayti receives, and holds, her customs, her legislation, and her jurisprudence from France. The treaty of the 3d of November, 1861, has established a communion of international principles between her and the United States. How, then, can she escape from the obligation of adopting the rules and principles which obtain in both countries?

A viva voce announcement of the blockade must assuredly be received with much more favor than signals made at a great distance which, possibly, may not be remarked, and the meaning of which may need interpretation. For this reason, the conseil d'état of France, on the 17th of July, 1843, pronouncing as a prize court (tribunal des prises) declared null and void the capture of the Joséphine by the Ectair, a ship of the blockading squadron, because, in that particular case, although it had been shown in the report prepared by the commander of the Ectair that notification of the blockade had been given verbally to the captain, on the day preceding the capture, it was not shown at the investigation that the captain of the Joséphine had understood the notification, nor that the commander of the Ectair had supplemented this deficiency by registering the notification on the muster-roll of the captured vessel.

Another observation will demonstrate the emptiness of this pretension of the judgment of the prize court of Port au Prince to make the signal of the Dessatines pass for the special notification of the blockade. What is to be obtained by these signals? At the most, they invite the passing vessel to stop and to await the cruiser who makes the signals. This is only in order that (if the neutral vessel obeys the summons and allows the cruiser to reach her) the officer of the blockading ship should have the occasion and the means of giving the notification required. The prize court of Port au Prince have, therefore, confounded two things absolutely distinct and different. It is not to be thought that a special notification would have been an idle formality.

It is not to be thought that a special notification would have been an idle formality. The Haytian Republic could not have been able otherwise to know of the existence of the blockade. On this point Mr. John D. Metzger wished to have the fullest knowledge, and he applied to official sources, demanding to be informed if the decree of the 15th of October, proclaiming the blockade, had been published at Jacmel. direct and formal reply would have been of great value to him, but the councilor of the interior studiously avoided giving him such a reply, stating simply, in his dispatch of the 30th October, that Jacmel being in a state of rebellion against the Government, no acknowledgment of the receipt of the decree had been made. It is easy however to fill up the gap which ministerial discretion has left open. The decree of the blockade was published in Le Moniteur of the 18th of October, 1888. This journal not having been sent to the provinces, except by the ordinary courier on Saturday, it was therefore on the 20th that it left the capital. Now the Haytian Republic spent the 17th at Miragoane, the 18th at Cayes, the 19th at Jacmel. She had been in advance of the decree in each of the cities which she visited before returning to St. Marc; therefore she was necessarily ignorant of the blockade. From that time she was in the position contemplated by article 18 of the treaty of 1864 between the United States and the Republic of Hayti, to wit:

"ART. 18. As it frequently happens that vessels leaving for a port or a place belonging to the enemy, without knowing that these points are besieged, blockaded, or invested, it is here agreed that every vessel that shall be found in such case shall be sent away from these ports or places, but shall not be detained, unless after notice of such blockade or investment, the same vessel should attempt again to enter."

Thus, supposing that the Haytian Republic had been reached by the Dessalines, she could not have been legally captured in attempting to enter the port of St. Marc; she could not have been even momentarily stopped, except for the purpose of giving notification of the blockade. It is therefore conclusive, that the Haytian Republic, who had entered into the harbor before the Dessalines had arrived to forbid access to it, and above all, before she had received a special notification of the blockade, has not violated the obligations of neutrality; on the contrary, she has exercised and enjoyed the right of free commerce.

But it was not in attempting to enter a port declared to be blockaded that the Haytian Republic was captured; it was in leaving the port. If (as we think we have demonstrated) this vessel has exercised her right in entering this port, because the blockade had not been notified to her (a fact which is clear, since she had never been in a position to know it), the Haytian Republic, as regards her leaving the port, was, to all intents and purposes, in the same situation as a vessel on station. In such a case, before the capture can be valid, it is necessary that the commander of the blockading forces should previously signify the decree of the blockade to the authorities of the place whose communications he has been commissioned to intercept.

"This is," says Calvo, "a preliminary rigorously exacted, and the omission of which nullifies absolutely the capture of vessels leaving a port." (See Calvo, vol. 4, § 2580.)

A delay must be accorded for the free retirement or exit of neutral vessels. was the principle followed by Denmark in 1848, by England and France during the war in the East, by France during her struggle with Germany in 1870, and by the United States of America in 1861.

In our particular case no notification had been made to the authorities of St. Marc. They had not been able from that time to notify the vessels lying in the port, and the Haytian Republic, who had no knowledge of the blockade when she entered that port, was equally ignorant of it when she attempted to leave.

There are three versions of the capture:
(1) According to the copy of the report of Mr. Gaillard, the commander of the Dessalines, which has been delivered to Mr. John D. Metzger by the prize court, this officer, speaking of the Sunday morning when the Haytian Republic weighed anchor to that she would not stop I fired a cannon, and it was not until then that she changed

(2) By the report published in "Le Progrès," and which Mr. Gaillard has not disavowed, the commander said: "We blew the whistle and fired a cannon, so as to oblige her to surrender at our demand. At last the Haytian Republic, for it was certainly she, stopped."

(3) Mr. Solon Ménos, who repeats a recital of the same commander, says in his depo-"The Dessalines cruised before the blockaded port to arrest the refractory boat on ner return; the next day, very early in the morning, the capture took place."

By this deposition, one does not know what were really the circumstances which accompanied the capture. But whether one or the other text of this report is accepted, the commander of the Dessalines recognizes that after the blowing of the whistle and ^{*} Nothing can more clearly show the character of Haytian justice than this deposition. Mr. Solon Ménos, who was all the while in Port au Prince, was called upon to testify, and was permitted to testify to an occurrence which took place at St. Marc whilst he was in Port au Prince. What right had this man to testify to what he did not know? This alone proves the predetermination of the prize court to convict the Haytian Republic whether she was guilty or not.

the report of the cannon, the Haytian Republic, who had good reason to flee on account of the character of her passengers, stopped, however, or what is tantamount to that, changed her course doubtlessly so as to meet the Dessalines; that, in a word, she did not attempt to escape from the Dessalines. Can it be said, then, that there was an attempt to violate the blockade? Assuredly not, and this conclusion has the respectable authority of Calvo in favor of it. He says: "The fact of not stopping immediately after the signals and invitation have been made is not to be regarded as an attempt to violate the blockade." (See Calvo, vol. 4, § 2626 in fine.)

VII.

The blockade must be real and effective; otherwise neutral vessels are not obliged The Haytian authorities seem to persuade themselves, by dint of reto respect it. peating that the blockade of St. Marc is effective, that finally the use of the word will dispense them from the necessity of having that which it designates. But the effectiveness of a blockade is something besides the proclamation and notification of any kind which may be made concerning it. According to the maritime convention of 1801 between Great Britain and Russia, which convention is the basis of the modern doctrine, no port is accounted as blockaded except one into which, owing to the measures taken by the powers attacking with ships, either stationed or sufficiently near, there is evident danger in entering. Civilized powers agree in recognizing the principle that a blockade, to be effective, must be maintained by a force really sufficient to recognize the terms of the best of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of t cient to prevent access to the hostile coast.

The provisional government, by their decree of the 15th October, 1888, have placed simultaneously in a state of blockade the ports of St. Marc, Gonaïves, and Cape Hayti. To perform the service of the blockade they had only two war ships, the Dessalines and the Toussaint L'Ouverture, not having yet armed with cannon the merchant vessels which they have since employed. How can they pretend, without shamelessly inviting ridicule, that two ships were a force sufficient to prevent access to three different ports at the same time, especially when, as in the case under consideration, these three ports are situated at a great distance from each other and when the configuration of the coast to be guarded prevents these ports from being in view at the same time? In this way the Dessalines, not being obliged to remain fixed (on station), was not guarding the port of St. Marc when the Haylian Republic presented herself. According to the "report," she was at the point of the "Grande Salines," or "Grande Pierre Baie," a distance of 6 miles from St. Marc; that is to say, very far beyond the "Table à Diable," on the route to Gonaïves. How, then, was the entrance of the port of St. Marc intercepted by her? It is necessary for the blockading ships either to station themselves before the port or at least to be sufficiently near to it. But the Dessalines had placed between St. Marc and herself a promontory (the "Table à Diable") from which she was distant 6 miles. It was from this great distance that she started when she saw on the horizon the uncertain smoke of the Haytian Republic.

There must be evident danger in entering. But the Dessalines, at a distance of 6 miles north of the bay, with her slowness of motion and her cannon of feeble projectile powers, did not constitute an "evident danger" for a vessel which was entering under the southern point or "Point of St. Marc." From one point to the other there is a distance of 10 miles or 18,520 meters. Let us suppose that, in returning, the war ship had had time to arrive at the "Table a Diable;" even then it is impossible that her cannon, which threw 3,500 meters, should have menaced efficaciously, or in an evident manner the vessel entering at a distance of about 18,000 meters, under the opposite promontory. Thus Commander Gaillard, who, with a suspicious complacency, curtails the distance, has not been able to prevent himself from admitting, at least, that his sixth and last cannon-ball, which could not reach his object any more than the others, had fallen a quarter of a mile short of the Haytian Republic.

Neither is it held that the capture effected on the 21st October furnishes an argument in favor of the effectiveness of the blockade. Not at all. According to the practice of maritime nations, attested to by Calvo, the accidental capture of a neutral vessel by a cruiser does not suffice to render a blockade effective. (See Calvo, vol. 4, § 2578.)

It is, therefore, nothing but an empty semblance of a blockade which they had placed before the port of St. Marc.

One last observation. They have severely blamed Captain Compton for having refused to reply to questions customary on similar occasions and to show his papers, and they have quoted in this connection the case of the Perle, a French corvette, who, for the same reason, captured two American brigs in the month of March, 1839; but they have omitted to declare the conclusion of that affair, which is that, on the demand of the commander of the United States squadron, the French admiral ordered the surrender of the captured vessels to their owners. (Calvo, vol. 4. § 2683.)

VIII.

Political passions have the disastrous effect of obscuring the soundest intellects and of untuning the most upright consciences. To this must be attributed the unjustifiable conviction and judgment pronounced against the Haytian Republic, her captain, and owners. But Mr. John D. Metzger, who can not be expected to place the great interests which he represents at the discretion of his opponents, protests against the conviction and judgment, because it is the work of a jurisdiction illegally instituted; because this jurisdiction has disregarded his indisputable right to a lawful defense; because under the circumstances of the case no cause of action exists for the transportation of contraband of war, of soldiers, and adherents of the insurrectionists; because the blockade of St. Marc had not been notified, either to the captain of the Haytian Republic or to the authorities of the place said to be blockaded; because, in fine, this blockade was not effective.

ANNEXES TO MR. METZGER'S PROTEST.

(1.) Mr. Metzger to Mr. Léon.

PORT AU PRINCE, November 8, 1888.

DEAR SIR: At last this afternoon I have received the copy of the report of Commander Gaillard, but I am not able to conceal my astonishment on discovering that the tenor of this important document is not at all the same as that of the document published by the same Commander Gaillard in Le Progrès of the 20th ultimo.

I am desirous also of having copy of the judgment pronounced on my petition for a delay, which judgment I beg that you would have the goodness to cause to be delivered to me without further delay. In the mean time, believe me to be, dear sir, your very devoted servant,

JOHN D. METZGER.

EMANUEL LEON. Advocate of the Government, Present.

N. B.—To this letter, which points out a fact calculated to destroy the authority of the judgment of the prize court rendered the 31st October last, the advocate of the Government has been unable to reply.

(2.) Text of the strange judgment in which the petition of Mr. John Metzger, praying for the legal delay, was rejected.

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI-IN THE NAME OF THE REPUBLIC.

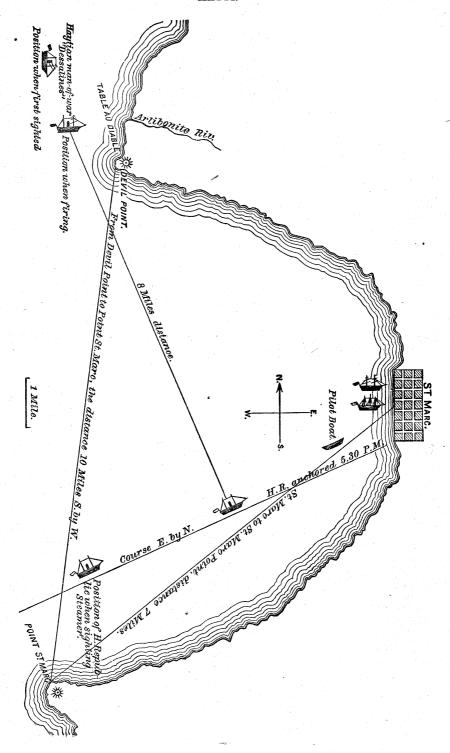

The prize court sitting at Port au Prince and competently assembled in the rooms of the commercial court of this city has, in public session, rendered the following

Mr. Emanuel Léon explained the affair of the capture of the steamer Haytian Republic, and Mr. John D. Metzger, agent of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line, replied by the following counter-plea:

"The undersigned, agent of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line, has the honor of praying the prize court for a postponement of the affair of the Haytian Republic to Saturday, the 3d November (unless there occur an unforeseen prevention, which will be satisfactorily explained), seeing that, in an affair so important, it is impossible for him to prepare his means of defense in the brief delay of one full day only, the Government of Hayti, who is the chief witness for the defense, having been the first to fail in giving him some simple information which he has demanded of them since Saturday, the 28th instant.

"JOHN D. METZGER.

[&]quot;PORT AU PRINCE, October 30, 1888."

Mr. Léon opposed the petition for a delay.

On the petition for a delay made by Mr. John D. Metzger, agent of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line:

Having seen the counter-plea ad hoc deposited by Mr. John D. Metzger in the aforesaid capacity;

Having heard Mr. Emanuel Léon, prosecuting officer, in his verbal opposition; Considering that the Haytian Republic arrived captured in our waters Sunday, the 21st instant;

That from the next day the preliminary investigation of her affair had commenced;

That Mr. John D. Metzger had a knowledge of it;

That therefore he had the time necessary to prepare his defense; Considering, besides, that in such cases the process is summary;

That by reason of the importance of the interest involved it is necessary to arrive at a decision promptly;

For these reasons the court, after having deliberated on them, rejects the petition for a delay made by Mr. John D. Metzger in his aforesaid capacity, and orders the continuation of the affair.

Pronounced by us, Hugon Lechaud, president; Maximilian Laforest, Justin Dévot, Jacques Nicolas Léger, Dantès Fortunat, aided by Mr. Christian Duchatellier, clerk, this 30th October, 1888.

It is written and ordered, etc.

H. LECHAUD. JUSTIN DÉVOT. DANTÈS FORTUNAT. MAX LAFOREST. J. N. LÉGER. CH. DUCHATELLIER.

Thus it is because the process is summary and because Mr. John D. Metzger had a knowledge of it before the summons; it is for these reasons that his petition for a delay was rejected. Are these judges of the prize court ignorant of the fact that the summary character of a process, and above all when it is connected with or results from a criminal investigation, does not permit a judge to shorten the delay which the law grants to the defendant to prepare his defense? It is an illogical pretense to object to this defendant that the investigation of his affairs having commenced on the day following the capture he had time to prepare his defense. Not at all. The delay prescribed by law for one to prepare his defense begins only from the day when he is summoned, because it is by this act only that the party knows both the irrevocable intention of judging the affair and the terms of the accusation. The time which precedes the summons has never entered into the computation of the delay allowed for the defense.

A view of the Bay of St. Marc (according to authentic information) is herewith given, showing the respective positions of the ships Dessalines and Haytian Republic, t5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 20th October, 1888.

No. 116.] CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 19, 1888. (Received December 1.)

SIR: Owing to the death of one of the seamen on board of the steamer Haytian Republic, captured by the Haytian war vessel on the 21st ultimo, and new an international question, and being aware that the settlement of such case may be after an interval of more or less time, also fearing that so many men being clustered on board of a ship so near the land sickness may take root, as the heat is unusually severe this fall, after consultation with Captain Ramsay, of the United States ship Boston, and with Dr. J. B. Terres, our vice-consul-general, on these points, I determined, since the presence of the crew was not essential here, to obtain for them passage by the first outgoing ship to the United States, and to day have done so, booking them on the Dutch steamer Prins Frederick Henricks, at the reduced rate of $30 each, and have drawn a draft on the Treasury Department for $720, the passage for the twenty-four seamen. Captain Compton will remain in Port au Prince with the agent of the company.

I inclose herein, marked A and B, copies of letters received by me from Captain Compton, telling of the death of one his crew. I also transmit, marked C, copy of the names of the seamen shipped, as taken directly from the shipping articles made out in the State and county of New York, E. W. Kingsbury, United States shipping commissioner.

I have, etc.,

NOVEMBER 15, 1888.

SIR: It is my painful duty to report to you the death of seaman Neil Olsen, who died last night at 8.20 p. m. of fever, after an illness of four days. Everything was done for him that was possible on board, and he appeared to be getting better until yesterday, when he was taken with a relapse and died unconscious. I had sent for a doctor by pilot in the afternoon, but none came, and I have had no communication with any agent since Monday.

Please notify me what you wish to have done with the dead man's effects.

NOVEMBER 15, 1888.

SIR: I respectfully request that you call the attention of the commander of the Boston to our situation at this moment. We are here and allowed no communication with the shore. Can send no letters on shore, nor allowed to send a boat on shore.

One man is dead with fever, and the chances are that others will go the same way. If I have done anything against the laws I am willing to take my punishment, but it seems hard that my whole crew should lay here and die like dogs without any assistance, and an American man-of-war in the harbor.

Therefore I request that this guard be taken off the ship, and that we be towed to the outer harbor, where the lives of my crew will be in less danger.

Respectfully, etc.,

No. 134.1

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 20, 1888.

SIR: I inclose copy of a letter from Mr. W. C. Haskins, of Boston, managing owner of the schooner William Jones, in relation to the arrest of that vessel while on a voyage from Boston to Gonaïves, Hayti, by Haytian man-of-war, on the ground that the latter port was blockaded. I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure in No. 134.]

Mr. Haskins to Mr. Bayard.

Boston, November 14, 1888.

SIR: The schooner William Jones, Capt. R. S. Collins, sailed from the port of Boston October 4, 1888, loaded with a general cargo, such as fish, pork, flour, etc., for the port of Gonaïves, in the island of Hayti, West Indies. On the 20th of October, about 5 o'clock p. m., the vessel was spoken by a Haytian man-of-war, and was told that Gonaïves was blockaded and that the vessel would have to go to Port au Prince. At about 6.30 o'clock a. m. October 21, the William Jones was spoken again by the same man-of-war, asking for the William Jones's hawser, but was told by the captain that the William Jones had no hawser to tow by. At 7 o'clock a. m., the same 21st October, the same man-of-war came up again and ordered the William Jones to heave to and he would take the William Jones's hawser, but was told again that the vessel had no hawser, and Captain Collins then asked if the man-of-war had one, and was answered no. The man-of-war thereupon sent eleven armed marines aboard the William Jones, and she proceeded towards Port au Prince. At 10.30 o'clock a.m. the man-of-war came up again and ordered the William Jones to heave to and he would send his hawser aboard. This was done and hawser sent aboard and the man-of-war took the William Jones in tow and at about 9 o'clock p. m. was anchored in Port au Prince Bay, with eleven marines aboard. On Monday, October 22, at about 4 o'clock p. m., the American minister came on board to see what the trouble was, and found no fault on the part of the William Jones.

Tuesday morning, October 23, the chief of the navy of Hayti came on board. Captain Collins asked him of what he was accused; his reply was, "For trying to run the blockade and having arms and ammunition on board." These accusations were then and there declared false by Captain Collins to the chief of the Haytian navy, and the captain also informed him he should hold the Haytian Government responsible for the damage, as his cargo was perishable, and for demurrage.

The schooner William Jones is an American vessel and registered at the port of oston. The captain had no notice of any blockade at port of Gonaïves. The vessel obeyed all orders of the man-of-war, and when taken in tow was about 17 miles distant from land.

The writer is managing owner of the William Jones, and has no knowledge of any arms or ammunition being aboard, and believes there were none; nor at the time of the clearance and sailing of the William Jones of any blockade on the Haytian coast. His knowledge of the facts above detailed is derived from letters received from captain of the William Jones.

The writer will cause full particulars to be furnished as this case may require, and now requests that his claim may be placed on file and his interests and those of the schooner William Jones may be fairly and fully protected, and that the Haytian Government may be required to answer in just damages for the injury caused by its unlawful proceedings with said vessel and her cargo. l proceedings with said vessel and her coago.

Trusting this matter may have due attention, I remain, etc.,

No. 223.1 LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 24, 1888. (Received Dec. 10.)

SIR: I inclose herein the duplicate of a protest made by Capt. Angus McRitchie, master of the American schooner Winnie Lawry, against the authorities of Port au Prince, for refusing his vessel a clearance to the port of Port de Paix, where he was chartered to take a cargo of log-wood to Philadelphia, Pa.

I may here inform you that the notification of the blockade of Port de Paix was received at this legation on the 30th ultimo, and it stated therein that by a decree of the National Assembly of Constituents, dated October 26, 1888, such port was placed under blockade. Captain Mc-Ritchie was refused clearance the 25th ultimo, and leaves here this evening for New York direct, in ballast, having been unable to get cargo.

I have the honor to request your opinion and instructions in this case.

I am, sir, etc.,

[Inclosure in No. 223.]

Protest of Captain McRitchie.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, October 27, 1888.

I, Angus McRitchie, master of the schooner Winnie Lawry, of Boston, Mass., recently arrived in this port of Port au Prince, from New York, do hereby enter a formal protest at the consulate-general of the United States of America at Port au Prince, under date of the 27th day of October, A. D. 1888, against the authorities of Port au Prince, or the Government of Hayti, for the refusal on their part to give a clearance to said schooner Winnie Lawry to the port of Port de Paix.

The said schooner Winnie Lawry having been chartered on September 8, 1888, to take a cargo of logwood from Port de Paix, Hayti, to New York, by Messrs. H. Kainer & Co., this cargo was ready for shipment, according to advices, in the month of September last, and is still awaiting shipment.

Whereas, on the 25th day of October, application was made to the custom-house at Port au Prince for a clearance of the said schooner Winnie Lawry from Port au Prince for Port de Paix, and such clearance being refused by such refusel on the port of the for Port de Paix, and such clearance being refused, by such refusal on the part of the authorities the master of the said schooner Winnie Lawry is unable to fulfill his agreement according to charter-party drawn up and signed at the date of September 8, 1888, whereby he incurs, first, the loss of his freight, amounting to the sum of $3,000; second, the liability of an action at law on the part of Messrs. H. Kainer & Co. for the non-fulfillment of his contract; and, third, the loss of the expenses of his vessel for each and every day of detention since October 25, instant, when, having finished discharging his cargo at Port au Prince, he has been ready and willing to sail for Port de Paix, amounting to $100 per day.

With these statements of my case I hereby submit my claim, as a citizen of the United States of America, looking to our Government for fair and proper protection.

Respectfully, yours,

A. MCRITCHIE.

No. 682.

Mr. Thompson to Mr. Bayard.

No. 225.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 24, 1888. (Received Dec. 10.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, as herein inclosed, all of the documents on which the "prize-court" (?) of Port au Prince based its decision of condemnation of the steam-ship Haytian Republic, as per list of inclosures

During the visit of the U. S. S. Boston Captain Ramsay and myself consented to two conferences with General Légitime and Mr. Margron, his counselor of foreign affairs, but while they would not admit our argument they signally failed to refute it. My No. 222 shows that the case is in abeyance, awaiting the decision of the department, while the inclosure "protestation against the condemnation of the steam-ship Haytian Republic" in such dispatch treats on many points that were brought out on the so-called trial.

Admit that the Haytian Republic brought arms and ammunition from New York to Cape Haytien (which she did not do), and according to law she had every right so to do.

Admit that the Haytian Republic carried troops from Cape Haytien to Gonaïves and from Port de Paix and Gonaïves to St. Marc. If she was engaged in contraband traffic she, to be guilty, must be caught in delicto.

In our conferences it was pointed out by the authorities that the forcing of the blockade was of secondary consideration, although it was the sole charge made at this office against her. They admitted that the Haytian war vessel was ordered to pay strict attention to the actions of the Haytian Republic long before her capture; and it is noticeable that in his report the commander of the Dessalines gives no reason why he captured the Haytian Republic. From first to last the testimony is absolutely worthless, none of the witnesses appearing to know anything important as evidence in the case, while Mr. Solon Ménos was not subpænaed. He is a constituent and can not be called as a witness unless he first signified his desire to be called, and in this case he appeared simply because of a pre-arranged plan for him to bring in as evidence the letter given him by the French minister, who appeared greatly interested in the affair; it is perfectly clear from his own words that Mr. Ménos knew nothing, personally, about the case.

There is no doubt but that the Haytian Republic was condemned in the minds of those interested from the moment of her entry into this harbor; and after the action taken and condemnation, owing to the political situation of Hayti, a belief became current in authoritative circles that if any weakness was manifested, unless they were made to do so, their political cause would suffer; and being looked upon in derision by their enemies, a reaction might take place, pushed on by their lukewarm friends.

Hoping to have decisive instructions on this case, presuming the report of the Boston, with my dispatches and their inclosures, have given all details in the premises,

I am, etc.,

JOHN E. W. THOMPSON.

Minutes of the prize court.

Before us, Justin Dévot and Jacques Nicolas Léger, members of the prize court, delegated to investigate the case of the steamer Haytian Republic, assisted by Mr. Felix Richiez, commissary of the Government near the civil court of Port au Prince, by Mr. Charles B. Martin, sworn interpreter, and by Mr. Christian Duchatellier, clerk ad hoc. The two last took the oath prescribed by law. Appeared on board of the Haytian Republic this 22d day of October, 1888, Mr. David T. Compton, captain of the said vessel; aged forty-six years; born at Boston (United States of America), who was interrogated as follows:

Q. In what passage were you on Saturday between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon?—A. I was entering into the bay of St. Marc, returning from Jacmel.

Q. Who had sent you to Jacmel ?—A. I had 75 tons of merchandise and the mail, all expedited from New York.

Q. What are the other ports of Hayti that you had touched at in coming from New Yook ?-A. Cape Haytien, Port de Paix, Gonaïves, St. Marc, Miragoane, Aux Cayes, Jacmel.

Q. What did you take from the Cape for Gonaïves ?-A. The correspondence and passengers for Gonaïves.

Q. How many passengers from the Cape to Gonaïves?—A. About two hundred, whom I judged to have been Haytians, without being certain of their nationality. a half dozen with rifles.

Q. Does your register bear the names of these passengers?—A. I have not their names, but the agent at the Cape has them.

Q. Those passengers, did they not have tickets?—A. There was one ticket for all. Q. Is it usual with the company to give one ticket for so many passengers ?—A. Yes; excepting for first-class passengers.

Here the interrogated refused to answer further questions without first receiving instructions from his minister concerning the matter.

On the observation being made to him that his minister had nothing to do with the questions for the present, and that it had reference to an investigation purely judicial, the interrogated persists in his refusal.

Requested to sign the present minutes, he has done so with us.

The year 1888 and the 23d of October. Before us, Justin Dévot and Jacques Nicolas Léger, members of the prize court delegated to investigate the case of the steamer Haytian Republic, assisted by Christian Duchatellier, clerk ad hoc, appeared in virtue of our letter of this day addressed to him, Mr. J. D. Metzger, who was interrogated as follows:

Q. What are your names, surnames, age, profession, place of birth, and place of residence ?-A. I am named John D. Metzger; aged thirty-nine years; born in Germany; residing in Boston, and dwelling at Port au Prince; agent of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Company.

Q. What is the nationality of the steamer Haytian Republic?—A. American.

Q. What is that of the company?—A. American, also; having its principal office at Boston.

Q. What is the usual itinerary of the steamers of this line? -A. The steamers leave New York or Boston for Turk's Island and all the open ports of the Republic of Hayti both in going and in returning.

Q. What are the ports where the steamer touches most generally ?-A. They are the ports of Cape Haytien, Port de Paix, Gonaïves, St. Marc, Jérémie, and Aux Cayes.

Q. Does it touch each time at Port au Prince ?-A. No; only at times.

Q. Do they go sometimes to Miragoane as well as to Jacmel?—A. They do some-

Q. When the steamer leaves New York does the company notify you of the itinerary that she will follow during the voyage? -A. Very rarely; usually the captain follows the instructions received directly from the company without giving me knowledge thereof.

Q. Did they write to you this time to tell you the date of the departure of the Haytian Republic and the itinerary that she should follow ?-A. Not at all; generally the steamer bears her own news.

Q. Is this a line that makes regular trips?—A. The steamers do not leave at a fixed date either the ports of the United States or those of Hayti, but they touch regularly the island of Hayti on on average each steamer every six weeks.

Q. How long does each steamer remain in Hayti?—A. On an average from fifteen days to three weeks.

Q. How many steamers?—A. Two; of which one is chartered in the United States, that is the Alert; the other, the Haytian Republic, belongs to the company

Q. What is the usage of the company in what concerns the delivery of tickets for passage?—A. Ordinarily the party presents himself at the office of the agency to get his ticket, but they never have refused voyagers who regulate their passage on board.

Q. Do you give at the agency collective tickets; that is to say, one single ticket for several persons ?-A. I have often delivered collective tickets for families. I have never had occasion to give any for a group of men.

Q. When you deliver a collective ticket does it bear the names of all the persons who are to be benefited thereby?—A. Not necessarily; but the ticket ordinarily announces the number of persons who form the suite of the head of the family whose name is indicated.

Q. If instead of a family should ten friends, for example, present themselves at the office to take a collective ticket, would not the company be obliged to designate them by their names on the ticket?—A. I do not think so; however, the case is not foreseen in the regulations of the company.

Q. In such case what means of control has the company, and does it not violate the police regulations in not designating these passengers by their names?—A. That concerns the captain, who can at any time, and should, control the tickets emitted by the agency. As for what regards the police he is obliged to furnish the names of the passengers at each port where it is demanded of him. The captain, however, is bound to furnish a list of passengers only at the port where he lands them.

Q. In the case of a collective ticket where the names of the passengers are not mentioned, how can the captain remit the names of the passengers ?-A. The captain can make out a list by interrogating the passengers on their names.

Q. Are you aware of what happened to the steamer Haytian Republic, belonging to the line of which you are the agent ?-A. Notwithstanding my efforts at the office of the port first, and afterwards at the legation of the United States, the chief of which on his part wrote to the minister of foreign relations, I have not been able up to the present to have any communication with the vessel in question. In consequence I am not aware of what has happened to the steamer Haytian Republic excepting from the rumors current in town.

Q. Will you have the kindness to tell us what you have heard said on this subject?—A. I will say but one thing; that is, that I have heard said that the Haytian Republic had violated the blockade of the port of St. Marc.

Q. Have you not heard it said that the steamer had taken from the Cape a delegation of insurgents, which it carried, notably to Miragoane, to Cayes, and to Jacmel, to put out their revolutionary manifestoes and to try to raise those cities?—A. What I hear in the public on the subject is so vague that I do not judge it worthy of giving it any affirmation whatsoever.

Q. You are not ignorant, however, that there are on board men that the steamer took on board at the Cape?—A. I am ignorant thereof, only I have been told that there is on board a group of Haytians.

The year 1888, and the 23d of October, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, conformable to the letter that we have addressed to the captain of the steamer Haytian Republic, we, the undersigned, Justin Dévot and Jacques Nicolas Léger, members of the prize court charged to investigate the affair of the said steamer, we went on board of his vessel, assisted by Mr. Christian Duchatellier, clerk ad hoc, to continue the investigation commenced yesterday and proceed to all the acts necessary of a nature to enlighten the court called to pronounce on the capture of the said steamer. We found Mr. David T. Compton, captain of the Haytian Republic, who declared having received our letter of this morning in presence of the minister of the United States of America; that he persists in his refusal to communicate to us the ship's papers and documents, to answer to the questions addressed to him, or to lend himself in any manner whatever to the acts of the investigation; informed us that he referred to the minister of his country for the settlement of the question. The observation being renewed to him that the affair was not one to be settled through diplomacy, being of the competence of the jurisdiction of prizes, that alone can decide in one sense or another; he persists in his manner of seeing; and requested to sign, he refused to do so.

Q. What are your names, surnames, age, profession, place of birth, and dwelling place?—A. I am named Victor Jean Pierre, and I do not know my age; born at St.

Q. When did you arrive at Port au Prince?—A. Yesterday evening at 10 o'clock.
Q. What was the object of your voyage?—A. I am on a mission.

Q. What have you heard said about the steamer Haytian Republic?—A. I was in the country, but Sunday, when I arrived at St. Marc, I heard speak of the captured steamer. They said she had debarked arms on Saturday.

Q. Was this the first time that the steamer had touched at St. Marc?—A. The steamer had made a previous voyage, bringing volunteers coming either from the Cape or from Gonaïves, but these volunteers were not armed.

The year 1888, and the 24th of October, at half-past 9 o'clock, before us, Justin Dévot and Jacques Nicolas Léger, members of the prize court charged to investigate the affair of the steamer Haytian Republic, assisted by Mr. Christian Duchatellier,

Q. What are your names, surnames, age, profession, place of birth, and dwelling place?—A. I am named Solon Ménos; aged thirty years; born at L'Anse à Veau; dwelling and residing at Port an Prince.

Q. Will you tell us what you know about the affair of the capture of the Haytian Republic?—A. I heard the commandant, Gaillard, give an account of the capture of the Haytian Republic. According to this narration, having seen the Haytian Republic on the point of forcing the blockade of St. Marc he hastened to make the usual summons in firing a blank charge. But notwithstanding this injunction, the Haytian Republic having persisted in her intention of entering the port of St. Marc, Commandant Gaillard declares that he fired six shots at the vessel. The blockade was none the less violated, which caused the Dessalines to cruise before the blockaded port to arrest on her return the refractory steamer. The next day early in the mornport to arrest on her return the refractory steamer. The next day early in the morning the capture took place, and the commander of the Dessalines, after the requisite formalities for the search, ordered the Haytian Republic to Port au Prince, declaring that he wished to convoy her on her route so that he could have the case of the captured vessel decided. Then, on the other hand, I have learned from divers sources equally authorized, that for nearly a month the Haytian Republic has been in the service of the insurgents of the North, making the transport of soldiers, volunteers, and ammunition of all kinds, having the character of contraband of war. I have notably had the communication of a letter addressed to Mr. the Count de Sesmaisons by the consul or agent of France at Cape Haytien, establishing that the Haytian Republic took, on the date of October 11, 256 armed volunteers for Gonaïves, also 80 boxes of ammunition.

Q. Is that letter still in your possession?—A. Yes.
Q. We desire to take cognizance thereof in its full bearing. Will you communities to take cognizance thereof in its full bearing. cate it to us?-A. I can only do so in committing an indiscretion, because it is an entirely personal communication that Mr. the Count de Sesmaisons made to me.

Q. An indiscretion being permissible, in the superior interests of justice we persist in our demand.—A. Since you so decide, here is the tenor of the letter.

The original being remitted, we take the following copy:

Q. What are your names, surnames, age, profession, place of birth, and of residence?—A. I am called Charlemagne, Vital Alcide; aged fifty-four years; born at Basseterre (Guadeloupe); living since 1871 in Hayti; and residing at present at Port de Paix.

Q. How long have you been in Port au Prince ?-- A. I have been in Port au Prince since Thursday of last week, the 18th instant.

Q. How did you arrive? -A. By a small boat that I took at Miragoane.

Q. What conveyance did you take to go from Port de Paix to Miragoane ?-A. I took the steamer Haytian Republic.

Q. Will you tell us the itinerary that that steamer followed in leaving Port de Paix ?—A. We touched at Gonaïves, St. Marc, and then Miragoane.

Q. Did the steamer, after touching at Gonaïves, return to Port de Paix ?—A. No. Q. Did you go on shore as soon as you arrived at Gonaïves ?-A. Yes; to see my daughter, who is there. Q. Can you say what the vessel debarked at Gonaïves?—A. In regard to packages of merchandise, I do not know; in regard to men, it landed soldiers.

Q. How many?—A. About one hundred and twenty-five, more or less, armed.

Q. Did it take armed men on board at Port de Paix ?—A. It was at Port de Paix that those one hundred and twenty-five men were taken on board.

Q. Were they all the men that were on board ?-A. Yes.

Q. Did the steamer take armed men at Gonaïves for St. Marc?—A. Yes; but I believe that they were the same men landed at Gonaïves that they embarked for St. Marc.

Q. Where was the steamer to go after leaving Port de Paix?—A. From the itinerary announced the steamer should leave Port de Paix to go to Miragoâne.
Q. Was it from an arrangement with the authorities of Port de Paix that the steamer changed her route ?-A. I suppose so.

Q. Where did she land the armed men taken on board at Gonaïves?—A. At St.

Marc.

Q. On leaving St. Marc what was there on board in regard to men?—A. The crew. Q. Was there not on board a delegation from the North and other Haytiens?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Who were the voyagers landed at Miragoane?—A. Madame Turenne Jean Gilles, whom I accompanied, Madame Girard, and myself. Q. Do the steamers of this line touch regularly at Port de Paix ?—A. Yes; that is their usual itinerary.

Q. What are your names, surnames, age, profession, place of birth, residence, and dwelling?—A. Léon Nicolet; aged twenty-five years; employed in commerce; born at Strasbourg; dwelling at Paris, and residing at Gonaïves.

Q. How long have you been in Port au Prince ?—A. I arrived yesterday morning, at 8 o'clock in the morning.

Q. How did you travel; by land or by water?—A. First by land to Lully, then by sea to Port au Prince.

Q. Can you tell us at what date the steamer Haytian Republic arrived at Gonaïves?-A. She arrived there on the eve of the disembarkment of General Jean Jumeau, in the environs of Gonaïves.

Q. Was the city of Gonaïves already in arms?—A. Yes. Q. Where did the steamer Haytian Republic come from, and what did she bring to Gonaïves?—A. She came from the Cape and landed at Gonaïves with about three hundred armed men, all Haytians.

Q. What did they do with the armed men arrived from the Cape ?-A. They were kept some days at Gonaïves, then forwarded by land to St. Marc.

Q. When the steamer left Gonaïves is it to your knowledge that she went to St. Marc?—A. The steamer left Gonaïves to my knowledge going in the direction of the north. In the city it was said that she went to Port de Paix to land her freight; since then she has not returned.

Q. Have you heard speak of the capture of the steamer Haytian Republic?—A. I have heard said that she entered the harbor of St. Marc, and that in leaving she received some shots coming from a Haytian war vessel. That is all I know.

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI-IN THE NAME OF THE REPUBLIC.

The tribunal of prizes, sitting at Port au Prince, and duly installed in the tribunal of commerce of this city, has rendered in public audience the following judgment:

(1) The decree of the provisional government of October 15, 1888, establishing a blockade of the ports of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and of St. Marc.
(2) The dispatch of October 16, 1888, addressed by the member of the provisional government in charge of the department of foreign relations to the diplomatic and consular agents at Port au Prince, for the purpose of informing them of the aforesaid blockade.

(3) The reply of Mr. John E. W. Thompson, minister resident of the United States of America, the same day, No. 72.

(4) The report of October 21, 1888, of Mr. Gaillard, commandant commanding the Haytian vessel of war Dessalines.

(5) The letter of October 17, 1888, of General Mardi, commanding the district and city of Miragoane, to the president of the provisional government in charge of the departments of war and navy.

(6) The letter dated at Miragoane, October 17, 1888, from Mr. Basse Lorme to Mr.

F. D. Légitime, member of the provisional government.

(7) The two letters dated at Miragoane, October 17, 1888, from Mr. Jean Simon to General F. D. Légitime.

(8) The letter dated October 17, 1888, bay of Miragoane, addressed to the commandant of the department of Miragoane by the delegation of the central revolutionary committee of Cape Haytien, for the departments of the Northwest, the Artibonite, and of the South, which letter is signed J. Nicolas and J. B. N. Tassy.

(9) The letter of October 19, 1888, addressed by the commandant of Cayes to the members of the provisional government and the letter of October 24, 1888, addressed by the same functionary to the councilor of the department of war and navy.

(10) The letter dated October 18, 1888, addressed to the commandant of the department of Cayes by the delegation from the central revolutionary committee of the Cape, and signed J. Nicolas and J. B. N. Tassy.

(11) The summons given by act of the sheriff, Valcourt Viljoin, of October 27, 1888, and at the request of the government attorney to David T. Compton, captain of the steamer Haytian Republic, and to J. D. Metzger, agent for the Hayti Mail Steam-ship

(12) The summons given to the witnesses Solon Ménos, Vital Alcide Charlemagne, and Léon Nicolet.

 (13) The treaty concluded between Hayti and the United States November 3, 1864.
 (14) The list of passengers who were on board the Haytian Republic, and in the bay of Port au Prince.

(15) The proclamation of the 2d of October by which the Cape inaugurates the insurrection.

(16) The proclamation of 3d of same month, of Gonaïves, and that of the 4th of October, of Port de Paix, and that of October 13, of St. Marc, likewise proclaiming

The oral depositions and written statements concerning the affair. Finally, the conclusion, hereto appended, of the government attorney.

FACTS.

The steamer Haytian Republic arrived at the Cape while that town was already in a state of insurrection against the provisional government established at Port au Prince, and landed a piece of ordnance mounted on its carriage, putting herself in the service of the rebels.

This vessel took on board (1) a delegation charged by the central revolutionary committee of the Cape to incite insurrection in the departments of the Northwest, the Artibonite, and of the South; (2) some soldiers and eighty cases of ammunition which she landed at Gonaïves.

From Gonaïves this vessel went to Port de Paix, where she embarked soldiers which she returned to Gonaïves to land; she received still again at Gonaïves troops which she carried to St. Marc, all of these places being in insurrection, and Mr. Compton was not ignorant of it.

From St. Mare the Haytian Republic went to Miragoane. The delegation which she carried tried to stir up that town.

The delegation addressed to the military authorities of the place a manifesto and pamphlets coming from the Cape. The people were deaf to this call to arms. Haytian Republic went to Cayes, where the delegation renewed without success their efforts. Not being discouraged, Captain Compton carried the delegation to Jacmel, a town which they succeeded in arousing to arms.

To insure his success, Captain Compton received on board the constituents of Jacmel, the constituents of Bainet, and some other Haytians, all rebels, to carry them to the north, but on the 15th of October a blockade of Gonaïves, of St. Marc, and of the Cape had been decreed.

When on the 20th of October the Haytian Republic came in the vicinity of St. Marc she found there the Haytian man-of-war Dessalines. The Dessalines made signals, afterwards fired a blank charge; the Haytian Republic did not stop. The Dessalines fired at her six shots without effect. The Haytian Republic, taking advantage of her speed, forced the blockade and entered into the port of St. Marc. She came out on the 21st early in the morning, at which time the Dessalines captured her.

Regularly called before the tribunal des prises, Captain Compton did not appear, Mr. J. D. Metzger, agent of the company, presented himself alone before the tribunal, but withdrew after the rejection of a demand made by him to put off the case.

LAW.

Concerning the prize.—Considering that in case of war between two states, and therefore in case of insurrection of a portion of a country against the established Government, neutral states and their subjects are bound not to interfere in the struggle, whether it be to aid one of the belligerents or to aid the rebels;

That the neutrals who break this obligation render themselves liable to be treated as enemies, and that this rule applies to ships as to individuals;

That it is generally admitted that the neutral ship which transports either troops, arms, correspondence, or emissaries, who enters in any manner whatsoever into the service of one of the belligerents, or in that of the insurgents, places itself beyond the protection given to neutral property, and can be lawfully condemened and confiscated

Considering that the American merchant vessel Haytian Republic has brought to the Cape a cannon mounted upon its carriage, and that this engine of war was not ordered by the Haytian Government, and that the city of the Cape was already in a state of insurrection;

Considering that she brought munitions of war from the Cape to Gonaïves, a town also in rebellion, and making common cause with the Cape;

Considering that the same ship Haytian Republic has, at the same time, transported from the Cape to Gonaïves first, afterwards from Port de Paix to Gonaïves, and finally from Gonaïves to St. Marc, the latter port in arms also, troops of insurgents; Considering that the Haytian Republic has not hesitated to receive on board at the Cape a delegation which the revolutionary committee of that town had sent into the departments of the Northwest, the Artibonite, and of the South, for the purpose of spreading the insurrectionary movements inaugurated at the Cape;

Considering that this delegation carried to Miragoane by the Haytian Republic has addressed to the military chief of the city a call to arms, and tried to incite the people of Miragoane to follow the movements of the Cape; to this effect hostile pamphlets and hostile correspondence, coming from the said steamer, were spread abroad;
Considering that the steamer Haytian Republic went from Miragoane to Cayes where the same efforts were renewed and always with the consent or the complicity of Captain Compton;

Considering that the delegation of the Cape, still on board the Haytian Republic, went to Jacmel, which place they succeeded in inciting by the means heretofore cited; that after the success of this criminal maneuver, Captain Compton received on board, for the purpose of transporting to the north, the constituents of Jacmel, the constituents of Bainet, and some other Haytians, all of whom were rebels;

Considering that the delegation of the Cape and the rebels taken at Jacmel are at present on board the Haytian Republic;

Considering that without the capture made outside of St. Marc by the man-of-war Desalines, Captain Compton and his vessel would have continued in the service of the insurgents he has thus knowingly violated the laws of neutrality in perpetrating a whole series of acts, any one of which would have sufficed to cause the condemnation of his vessel:

ade by a neutral vessel legalizes its capture and condemnation;

Considering that a blockade was according to law, and that prizes are lawfully made in consequence thereof, and that when a blockade has been preceded by a gen-cal notification and a special notification, it is then effective;

Considering that the blockade of the ports of St. Marc, of Gonaïves, and of the Cape was decreed October, 15, 1888, notice of which was given on the 16th of the same month to the accredited diplomatic and consular agents at Port au Prince, specially to Mr. J. E. W. Thompson, minister resident of the United States of America, that concerning St. Mare, the blockade was immediately rendered effective by sending the Dessalines to that port;

Considering that the same ship, Haytian Republic, after coming out of Jacmel, directed her course to St. Marc;

Considering that on entering the line of blockade, she there found the Dessalines, which, by customary signals, tried to stop her, and not succeeding, the Dessalines, after firing a blank charge, fired projectiles after her, as was right;

Considering that these repeated warnings sufficiently established the special notification, and that even then, the Haytian Republic being ignorant of the blockade, it was her duty to stop and await the communication of the Dessalines;

Considering that taking advantage of her superior speed, the Haytian Republic went into the port of St. Marc, from where she attempted to go out when captured;

Considering that the violation of the blockade is flagrant;

Considering that Captain Compton, when brought to Port au Prince after the capture, and when requested by the examining judges to produce the ship's log and his papers, refused to do so; that likewise he refused to answer the questions that were put to him, to allow his vessel to be inspected, and to aid in accomplishing the formalities of justice such as were necessary for an inventory;

Considering this obstinate refusal contrary to the usages of international law, as well as to the provisions of the treaty concluded in 1864 between Hayti and the United States of America, aggravates the offense of Captain Compton;

By these reasons and motives the tribunal, after having deliberated, declare the American merchant steamer Haytian Republic, of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line, a bona-fide prize. Orders, in consequence, the confiscation of the said steamer, and adjudges it the property of the Haytian Republic; and says that the captain, crew, and passengers, shall be disembarked, subject to proceedings which may be brought against them by the Haytian Government.

In that concerning the cargo.—Considering that the refusal, already mentioned, of Captain Compton to show his papers and make the necessary searches provokes legitimate suspicions concerning the nature of the cargo;

Considering that it would not be possible in the absence of papers and precise information on this subject to make a report as to the composition of the cargo after

The tribunal orders that the said cargo shall be disembarked and an account taken of it; that the contraband of war, if any is found, shall be seized and confiscated, as well as merchandise belonging to the enemy.

Says that, concerning the merchandise of neutrals, it shall be turned over to them after their claims are justified by law.

A STATEMENT OF DAMAGES.

Considering that the facts heretofore charged against the Haytian Republic have contributed greatly towards spreading the insurrection, especially in causing the taking up of arms at Jacmel;

Considering, in consequence, that this ship causes a loss appreciable in money by reason of the extraordinary expenses that will be necessary to suppress the insurrectionary movement;

Considering that there is an opportunity to make an application of a general principle of law in virtue of which the damage occasioned to others ought to be repaired by the one that caused it or the one that is responsible for it:

The tribunal condemns Capt. David T. Compton and the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line conjointly to pay to the Haytian Government for damaged interests the sum of 50,000 piasters.

The tribunal, moreover, orders the immediate execution of the present judgment. Given by us, Hugon Lechaud, president; Maximilian La Forest, Justin Dévot, Jacques Nicolas Léger, Dantès Fortunat, judges; assisted by M. Christian Duchatellier, recorder; this 31st day of October, 1888.

It is enjoined and ordered to all the sheriffs upon this requirement to put the present judgment in execution; for the Government attorney to be ready to act for the tribunal des prises; to all commandants and other officers of the public force to put a strong hand in the matter when they are legally requested.

On faith of which the records of the present judgment are signed by the president, judges, and the recorder.

CONCLUSIONS.

For the Haytian Government, represented by Mr. Emanuel Léon, advocate in the prize court.

Against (1) Mr. David T. Compton, captain of the steamer Haytian Republic; (2) Mr. John D. Metzger, agent of the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line at Port au Prince.

Before the prize court on the 30th day of October, 1888.

May it please the court:

Whereas the steamer Haytian Republic, a merchant ship belonging to the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line, sailing under the American flag, has landed upon her arrival at the Cape one gun.

Whereas upon the 11th day of October she took from the same town [Cape], armed in rebellion against the provisional government established at Port au Prince, two hundred and fifty-six men armed with repeating rifles and Remington carbines, and eighty cases of military supplies, which she transported to Gonaïves, a town also in insurrection.

Whereas this constituted in itself a violation of the neutrality imposed upon neutrals in case of war between two powers, and a fortiori in the case of a civil war.

Whereas this act, not entering in any way whatever into the outline of her commercial operations, is in a marked degree in co-operation with acts of insurrection.

Whereas it is the rule in international law that the neutral ship which transports armed men or military supplies in the service of the enemy is liable to seizure and condemnation as a lawful prize, such an offense being of a graver character than in the case of goods which are contraband of war, for the latter may perhaps be considered as a purely commercial act; but it is impossible to be mistaken as to the hostile character of the former, or not to be impressed by its extent.

Whereas after having landed the soldiers from Cape Haytien at Gonaïves, the Haytian Republic then went to Port de Paix, from which place she transported more troops to Gonaives, and then changing her announced route, she went to St. Marc, instead of Miragoane, for the purpose of transporting more soldiers. (See the testiments of Mr. Viel Aleida Challettes mony of Mr. Vital Alcide Charlemagne.)

Whereas the neutral ship which thus carries armed men evidently puts herself in the service of the enemy (Ortolan's Diplomacy of the Seas, Vol. II, pp. 234, 235; Wheaton's International Law, Vol. II, p. 161).

Whereas after these first acts, already very liable to condemnation, this same steamer, as if to insure her recompense for services to the insurgents, has carried around among the ports of Miragoane, Cayes, and Jacmel emissaries from the central committee of the North, whose purpose was to incite revolt and spread the civil war (see the letters of Mr. N. Tassy and Joachim Nicholas).

Whereas she also carried dispatches urging the commandants of these districts to rise up in arms.

Whereas these services must be considered as being of the most hostile character, as in fact the aforesaid emissaries arrived at Jacmel, and having already sent out their call to arms, succeeded in putting in revolt the population, which had only waited for the dispatches from the North to decide the matter.

Whereas from Wheaton, Vol. II, p. 163, the neutral ship carrying hostile dispatches is liable to confiscation.

Whereas the decree of the provisional government of October 16 pronounced the ports of Cape, St. Marc, and Gonaïves in a state of blockade. After notifying the representatives of neutral nations at the capital, after the decree had been promulgated in all the towns in submission to the government, while sailing between the towns of Miragoane, Cape, and Jacmel, the captain of the Haytian Republic should have known of the blockade.

Whereas the blockade was rendered effective, as before the port of St. Marc at the moment the Haytian Republic arrived there she found the guard-boat Dessalines, which guarded the entrance.

Vhereas Commander Gaillard made all possible efforts to stop the steamer and give her the special notification necessary under the circumstances, and that he neglected nothing which he should have done.

Whereas Captain Compton escaped his vigilance and used the superior speed of his vessel to escape being sent to the bottom by the shot of the Dessalines.

Whereas he refused to stop, and thereby violated the blockade.

Whereas the Haytian Republic has been captured going out of the port of St. Marc, it being a general rule that neutral ships leaving a blockaded port thus violate the blockade and become liable to capture. (Calvo, Vol. 4, p. 148.)

Whereas when taken to Port au Prince Captain Compton absolutely refused to show his papers, and to allow seals to be put upon his vessel. As he refused to show his papers the presumption was that he knew of the blockade and deliberately violated it; and also his refusal to speak and to prove to the contrary gave a legality to his detention. (Ortolan, Vol. II, p. 330; case of the French frigate Perle, cruising off the coast of the Pampas, against the two American brigs the America and the Eliza Davidson.)

The foregoing shows that the merchant steamer Haytian Republic, belonging to the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line, is a lawful prize.

The foregoing gives grounds for the confiscation of her cargo as contraband of war. The foregoing gives grounds for levying upon the Hayti Mail Steam-ship Line a fine of $50,000 in reparation for the opposition to the Haytian Government stirred up by its vessel, making it necessary to begin a campaign against the town of Jacmel, roused to arms by the emissaries and dispatches carried to that town by steamer, and to take up arms to control an insurrection which is spreading rapidly, because the Haytian Republic went from town to town carrying arms and munitions of war and troops to aid in the rebellion.

Mr. Basse Lorme to President Légitime.

MIRAGOÂNE, October 17, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I hasten to place by this present to your knowledge that the steamer Haytian Republic made its entry in this port this morning at 6 o'clock, and after having debarked a few packages of merchandise, left at noon precisely for the southern coast up to Jacmel. It came from the Cape, Port de Paix, Gonaïves, and St. Marc, having on board Mr. N. Tassy, second constituent of the cape, and Mr. Joachim Nicholas, who have a mission to raise all the departments of the South. They have the intention of touching at Jacmel before the other ports, for they count a great deal on that city as well as Cayes.

The provisional government must put out all its energy, expedite at once to Jacmel, and at short delay, one or two regiments, so as to prevent an uprising, for that would be a torment for our party.

They have remitted to the consular agent of this place a package of placards that have not been posted up. They have mission for all the arrondissement, but our commandant of place has shown himself firm, and has not answered to their call; at the same instant he made a publication re-assuring the population that he holds strongly the post that the provisional government confided to him.

Hurry, hurry; do not allow time, for those gentlemen will be on the 18th or 19th at Jacmel. The thing is grave. But I hold you as warned of what is on the carpet. Do not pay attention to my erasures, for I have not the time to recopy. Oh, my country!

Receive, etc.,

BASSE LORME.

Mr. Simon to General Légitime.

MIRAGOÂNE, October 17, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL AND FRIEND: By the English steamer Haytian Republic, arrived this morning from Gonaïves and St. Marc, I have received from Cape Haytien a package of newspapers, Le Trait d'Union, of which I send you one number. I have not distributed this subversive journal.

The commandant of the commune has received three packages from the rebellion of the North. From the counsel that I have given him he did not unseal them, and sends them to the President of the provisional government by a horseman.

Through a traveler arrived from Port de Paix, who goes to Port au Prince to find General Turenne Jean Gilles, ex-commandant of the arrondissement, wounded during the night of September 28, we have received bad news from the North. St. Marc has rallied itself to the movement; Jn-Jumeau in flight, and his troops gone over to the rebellion.

начті. 973

Receive, my dear general and friend, the renewed assurance of my very devoted sentiments.

M. JEAN SIMON.

P. S.—This gentleman of Port de Paix leaves during the day or to-night in a small open boat for the capital with the wife of General Turenne Jn. Gilles, with the design to take that general to the North. It would, I think, be well to prevent the departure of that general from the capital. The traveler is Mr. Charlemagne, of Port de Paix.

General Boisrond Canal communicated to us the acts of the rebellion. The steamer continues for Jérémie, Cayes, Aquin, and Jacmel, and I think that it has equally packages for all those ports.

Tranquillity reigns here.

[Inclosure 6 in No. 225.—Translation.]

Mr. Simon to General Légitime.

MIRAGOÂNE, October 17, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have written to you this morning by an express that I made, together with the commandant of the commune.

In my letter I had forgotten to say to you that there arrived here M. Tassy, second constituent of the cape, on board of the steamer Haytian Republic, going on a mission to Cayes and Jacmel for the rebellion of the North. Mr. Nelson Tassy did not come ashore. He is bearer of a great many lying documents, that he is going to distribute at Cayes. He has said to have debarked six hundred men at St. Marc, taken from Gonaives (exaggeration).

After a conversation (entirely confidential) of the captain of the Haytian Republic with a foreigner, the people of the North have in view a project of debarkment at Miragoane, a strategic point. I think that the Government should open their eyes on Miragoane, which is the goal of all the enemies of the Government of the country. You would do well to write to the commandant of the arrondissement, and to send some forces here and arms. It is an important point that I submit to your appreciation. You have no time to lose.

Do not forget 1883. We are here in anxiety and on the "qui vive." Everybody is disarmed.

I learn to-day by the Rivière's steamer news from Port an Prince. The city of Miragoâne, that is so sympathetic toward you, associates itself in the joy of the inhabitants at the capital.

Those people of the North are capable of all. Let the Government that you direct now weigh at its just value the communication that I make you and the counsel that I gave, to send us forces here, with a general sure and solid.

Accept, general and friend, the new assurance of my sympathetic devotion.

M. JEAN SIMON.

I offer my services to the Government as a delegate, to have elbow-room and hold the cause for the triumph of which I will sacrifice myself.

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI, Harbor of Cayes, October 18, 1888 (85th year of the Independence).

CITIZEN GENERAL: In remitting to you the documents of the revolution made in the departments of the North, of the Northwest, and of the Artibonite, we make it our duty to develop the grievances that have brought the three departments to pronunce against the provisional government dismembered by cause of and in consequence of the night of September 28th last.

In the plot laid at Port au Prince against the life of general-in-chief of the revolution of the North that destroyed the Salomonian administration, it imports that the whole country unravel the true motives of the action of the capital.

Already for a long time it has not escaped from the most serious men that Port au Prince has become a hearth of corruption, where the foreign element arrived always at turning the profit of its criminal speculation the revolutions made in the name of the country, in the name of principles the most holy, the most respectable, and by captivating the good faith of our ministers, too credulous, too weak, and very often unfortunately, alas, incapable.

The capital of the Republic becomes therefore an abyss, where the provinces see ingulfed all their economies.

It is thus that Mr. Legitime, spirit weak to too ardent ambition, allows himself to be influenced by men who see in him as future chief of state but the continuation of the financial administration of which Mr. Salomon was the unconscious inaugurator, administration which, should it be perpetuated, would drag fatally the country into bankruptcy and finally to the loss of its independence.

We do not suppose that such a catastrophe can be viewed in cold blood and without any protestation from our brethern of the South.

No; they will lend, on the contrary, an attentive ear to the bugle of the North, that cries to them "Awake, the enemy is in the heart of the Republic, in the capital today, a petty foreign state, raising an odious tax on the rest of the country."

The revolution of the North against the provisional government, already divided, is not only an insult to be washed out, an illustrious death to be avenged, it is also and above all the whole country that wishes to shake off the humiliating yoke of a city since a long time the vassal of the foreigners, and of which the ignoble conduct is capable of compromising our nationality.

In the hope that the North will find the echo in the South,

We salute you in the fatherland.

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI,

Aux Cayes, October 19, 1885 (85th year of Independence). GENTLEMEN: Yesterday some citizens of Cayes, among whom was found Mr. Dutton, went on board of the Haytian Republic, which had just entered this port.

Two citizens of the cape handed him in their presence two packages, addressed to me. On coming ashore these persons had circulated the rumor that I was in correspondence with the North. Mr. Dutton sent them to me about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. I sent and demanded him at my hotel, and did not fail to address to him my reproaches for his conduct in the occurrence. To justify myself, in showing that I was no ways in correspondence with the North, as besides I am not, I caused to be convoked, before sending them to you, the local authorities and the principal citizens, to unseal them in their presence and give them cognizance.

They saw and found only the inclosed documents and a letter from those two citizens, which letter I have the honor to send you, without reserving anything.

When I was informed that I had been criticised by some persons on the motive that guided me on that occasion, I went in the evening to the house of Mr. Milien Dolcondé and explained the affair to him; as I have expressed to you, he did not fail to be in accord with me, as well as the citizen P. Bouzy, who came and found me in the conversation with him (Dolcondé.)

As you will understand, those who have criticised me have said that I belonged to the North, that I should enter into relations with my compatriots of that department. But as a man who in all things acts with visor raised, I have thought to prove to them that unsealing the packages in the presence of the local authorities and principal citizens, these became witnesses of the delicacy of my sentiments, and should in case of need justify me against this criticism.

Indignant of the little account that they have made at Aux Cayes of my honor, notwithstanding the proofs that I have never ceased to give of it, and convinced that the spirit of locality alone has dictated that sudden mistrust that has been declared against me for the sole reason that I belonged to one of the departments of the North, I would have hastened to offer to you my resignation. But to do so at this moment I feel would be cowardice, an epithet that I wish to put off from me, because my past is there to defend me on that point.

I continue to maintain tranquility and public order in my commandment.

Please accept, etc.,

L. Auguste.

PORT AU PRINCE, October 21, 1888.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform you that on yesterday, 20th of October, at about 4.45 p. m., as we were at the point of "Pierre Baie," a distance of 6 miles to St. Marc, we perceived a steamer in the direction of the South, one-fourth west half west, a distance of 12 to 13 miles below the Isle of Gonaïve. We immediately ran to her. As we were approaching her she directed herself in the bay of St. Marc. Having arrived at a distance of 3 miles from the ship we hoisted our flag of rendezvous, whistled at her, but nothing could stop her. We were compelled then to fire one blank shot to stop her. Seeing that she paid no regards we fired six bullets at her which did not arrive, and the last one fell in the direction of her two masts, one-fourth of a mile distant.

Then we were at a distance of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles from the ship. Already she had gained the bay of St. Marc. We put ourselves on her watch all night. The following morning, Sunday, at about  $7\frac{1}{2}$  o'clock, she got ready to come out from the bay. I whistled at her, I ran after her, I fired a cannon, and it was then she changed route. I got very near her, and I told the captain to put his ship by mine and to come aboard with his papers. He sent to me his second officer, and I sent him two of my officers with armed men on his ship; he returned the armed men and kept the officers. I gave him orders to follow me to Port au Prince, which he did.

Whereas that in cases of war neutrals should abstain from all participation in the struggle engaged;

Whereas that the steamer Haytian Republic has violated the principles of neutrality in transporting troops, arms, ammunition, emissaries for the account of the insurrection:

Whereas these acts permit that vessel to be considered as an enemy; Whereas that at date of October 16, the provisional government pronounced the blockade of the ports of the Cape of St. Marc, and of Gonaïves; that a regular notification was given to the representatives of the neutral powers; that the decree of the blockade was published in all the cities of the Republic; that when the steamer Haytian Republic presented herself before the port of St. Marc that port was blockaded;

Whereas that the blockade was effective since the Haytian vessel of war, the Dessalines, guarded the entry; that the Haytian Republic deceived the vigilance of the blockading forces and used the superiority of her speed so as not to be sunk;

Whereas that signals were made to her; that six cannon shots were fired at her to make her stop; that these acts constitute a sufficient special notification of the blockade;

Whereas that the vessel was captured at the moment she was leaving the port of St. Marc, where she had forced the entry, and where she had just taken dispatches;

Whereas that numerous witnesses confirm her illegal participation in the acts of the insurrection of the North; that the captain has refused to show the ship's papers; to allow to search his vessel by the investigating judges with the object of hiding the documents compromising to him; that he has refused that seals be placed on his vessel;

Whereas that a delegation composed of the chiefs of the insurrectional movement are still on his vessel, and were already there when the capture was made;

Whereas that the violation of the blockade is a crime foreseen, and punished by

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Port au Prince, Hayti, November 24, 1888. (Received December 10.) SIR: Early on the morning of the 20th instant the French man-ofwar Bisson, with the Archbishop of the Catholic Church, the Haytian minister of foreign affairs, the French minister, and British consul-general, left here for ports in the north, for the purpose of causing a recon ciliation of the two political factions. I had been invited on several occasions, both by General Légitime and the minister, Mr. Margron, to go with such commission, but declined, giving excuses of important official business, as I knew full well the bad impression that would be created in the North by the presence even of a French war vessel, apart from any of those above-named gentlemen as passengers on board.

General Légitime, in an interview a week back, informed me that he did not wish the French minister to go to the north, as he feared the contrary effect to that desired would be produced, as those in the north had already on more than one occasion denounced the latter; he then again asked me to go with the Archbishop, British representative, and Mr. Margron. On the eve of departure Mr. Margron called upon me and, again requesting me to accompany them, said he felt my appearance at northern ports would show the people that no treachery was intended, and they would accept overtures with better grace. The 22d instant Mr. Rossignol, counselor of finance and commerce, called at this legation, expressed regrets, as he thought the delegates whom they had sent would be unable to accomplish anything. He said it was the intention of the authorities to write to me on the return of such delegation, if such proved unsuccessful, requesting me, as a final effort to avert civil war, to make a trip with any others of my choice, and begging me to use every influence towards reconciliation. I told him we must hope, and it would be better to form no plans until the departed delegation returned.

Some weeks ago, when letters from here requesting those in the north to put down their arms and promising any measures to satisfy them for the sake of peace was received by them, they replied, "We want peace, and to obtain it M. Légitime must withdraw his candidature. Légitime!" Yesterday morning, the 23d instant, the Bisson returned. During the day publication was given as to the result of the mission. I inclose herein, marked A, with translation B, copy of the dispatch sent by the delegation from the man-of-war Bisson to the committee of Cape Haytien, and dated the 21st instant. Inclosure C, with translation D, is the reply from such committee, wherein they regret that the delegation did not land, and in an evasive manner refuse to go on board the Bisson as requested. Inclosure E, with translation F, is copy of a letter from the French consular agent to the delegation, stating that, notwithstanding his persuasion, the committee will not visit the Bisson for deliberation. Inclosure G, with its translation, marked H, the reply from the French minister to the consular agent, says they have traveled 185 miles to bring propositions of reconciliation as friends of Hayti; they can do no more. They leave them the responsibility of their refusal. After traveling 185 miles they could not stoop to go on shore, a few yards further only, although "sincere friends of Hayti, and outside of any political party."

This morning Mr. Margron, counselor of foreign affiairs, called at this legation, informed me that the trip north terminated as he expected it would; that when they arrived in the harbor of Cape Hayti the French consular agent came off to the Bisson and, on seeing the French minister, said he advised him not to go on shore with anticipation of being received kindly, if at all, as the people were indignant against Then it was they decided to send their communication, inclosed herein, No. 1. Mr. Margron then said their dependence was upon me, and he desired to know if I would undertake the mission. I could not promise him, but told him I would meet him next week and learn directly then the propositions to offer, the concessions to make, in order to arrive at a logical reasoning as to the possibilities of success, by the envoy, in his efforts to prevent civil strife.

Notwithstanding the above conversation, the authorities caused a publication to the effect that, having tried means of reconciliation and failed, they would proceed to stringent measures. The report is that the authorities, knowing the delegation would fail, had made all of their arrangements of attack, and that now preparations are being made on the frontier for forces to march on to St. Marc.

I have, etc.,

JOHN E. W. THOMPSON.

this cargo was ready in the month of September last past, and is still awaiting shipment. On the 26th day of October application was made to the custom-house authorities at Port au Prince for the necessary clearance of the said schooner Maggie Abbott from the port of Port au Prince for that of Port de Paix to load cargo of logwood, and such clearance was refused and denied by the director of the custom-house at Port au Prince, on the plea that the port of Port de Paix was under a state of blockade; this refusal on the part of the authorities has prevented the undersigned from fulfilling his agreement according to charter-party duly drawn up and signed at the date of September 20, 1888, whereby he incurs, first, a loss of his freight, amounting to $3,000; second, the liability to an action at law on the part of Messrs. Lyon & Co. for the non-fulfillment of his contract; and, third, the loss of expenses of his vessel for each day of detention since discharging her cargo at Port au Prince, October 25, 1888. The said schooner Maggie Abbott has been ready to proceed on her voyage as per charter-party dated September 20, 1888, to load cargo of logwood at Port de Paix, amounting to $100 per day.

With this statement of my case, I, the undersigned, master of the said schooner Maggie Abbott, a citizen of the United States of America, do submit the same to you,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, Nevember 30, 1888.

SIR: 1 transmit herewith for your information and guidance, copy of a note* which I have addressed to Mr. Stephen Preston the representative or Hayti in this country, setting forth the considerations which make it impossible for this Government to accept as valid the seizure and condemnation of the steamer Haytian Republic.

The examination of the very full and intelligent report received from Captain Ramsey, of the U.S. S. Boston, with the papers and correspondence therewith submitted, left no ground for doubt as to the entire justice of the positive conclusion of this Government in the premises, and as the administrative authorities now in power at Port au Prince appear to have deferred the examination and decision of the tase of the Haytian Republic to the Government of the United States, Mr. Preston's powers will no doubt suffice to enable the question to be disposed of without delay.

While you will avoid any renewal of discussion at Port au Prince, and distinctly decline it should it be proposed, you will not fail to impress upon those assuming the responsibility of speaking for Hayti in the conduct of her relations to the United States that this Government has considered it to be sufficient to convey its decision of the case of the Haytian Republic in order to have it promptly accepted and voluntarily acted upon by Hayti.

It is necessary, therefore, that you should receive from the Haytian authorities assurances of the immediate replacement on the steamer Haytian Republic of those portions of her machinery which it is understood were removed under their orders, so that she may be restored to her usual sea-going capacity and fitness for maritime service.

Protocol of an agreement between the Secretary of State of the United States and the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti for submission to an arbitrator of the claim of Charles Adrien Van Bokkelen, signed May 24, 1888.

The United States of America and the Republic of Hayti, being mutually desirous of maintaining the good relations that have so long subsisted between them and of remeving, for that purpose, all causes of difference, their respective representatives, that is to say: Thomas F. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, and Stephen Preston, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti, have agreed upon and signed the following protocol:

1. It having been claimed on the part of the United States that the imprisonment of Charles Adrien Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, in Hayti, was in derogation of the rights to which he was entitled as a citizen of the United States under the treaties between the United States and Hayti, which the Government of the latter country denies, it is agreed that the questions raised in the correspondence between the two Governments in regard to the imprisonment of the said Van Bokkelen shall be referred to the decision of a person to be agreed upon by the Secretary of State of the United States and the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti.

2. The referee so chosen shall decide the case upon such papers as may be presented to him by the Secretary of State of the United States and the Minister of Hayti respectively, within two months a ter the date of his appointment; but he shall not take into consideration any question not raised in the correspondence between the two Governments prior to the date of the signature of this protocol.

- 3. Each Government shall submit with the papers presented by it a brief of argument, and should the referee so desire, he may require further argument, oral or written, to be made within five months from the date of his appointment. He shall render his decision within six months from said date.
- 4. A reasonable fee to the Referee shall be paid by the Government of Hayti.
- 5. Any award made shall be final and conclusive, and, if in favor of the claimant, shall be paid by the Government of Hayti within twelve (12) months of the date of such award.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this 24th day of May, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Les États-Unis d'Amérique et la République d'Haïti étantégalement désireux de maintenir les bonnes relations qui ont si longtemps existé entre eux, et pour cette raison, d'écarter toutes les canses de différend, leurs représentants respectifs, à savoir, Thomas F. Bayard, Secrétaire d'États des États-Unis, et Stephen Preston, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de la République d'Haïti, se sont mis d'accord et ont signé le protocole suivant:

1. Comme il a été soutenu de la part des États-Unis que l'emprisonnement de Charles Adrien Van Bokkelen, citoyen des États-Unis, en Haïti, a eu lieu en dérogation des droits qui lui appartenaient comme citoyen des États-Unis, d'après les traités entre les États-Unis et Haïti, ce qui nie le Gouvernement du dernier État, il est convenu que les questions soulevées dans la correspondance entre les deux Gouvernements au sujet de l'emprisonnement du dit Van Bokkelen, seront référées à la décision d'une personne qui sera désignée par le Secrétaire d'État des États-Unis et l'Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire d'Haïti.

2. L'Arbitre ainsi choisi, décidera sur telles pièces qui peuvent être produites devant lui par le Secrétaire d'État des États-Unis et le Ministre d'Haïti, respectivement, dans les deux mois qui suivront la date de sa nomination; mais il ne prendra en considération aucune question qui n'a pas été soulevée dans la correspondance entre les deux Gouvernements, antérieure à la date de la signature de ce protocole.

3. Chaque Gouvernement soumettra avec les documents présentés par lui, un mémoire à l'appui, et si l'arbitre le désire, il pourra demander d'autres plaidoiries, orales ou écrites, qui devront être faites dans les cinq mois qui suivront la date de sa nomination. Il rendra sa décision dans les six mois suivant la dite date.

4. Des honoraires raisonnables, seront payés par le Gouvernement d'Haïti à l'Arbitre.

5. Toute sentence arbitrale rendue, sera finale et concluante; et, si elle est en faveur du réclamant, le montant sera payé par le Gouvernement d'Haïti, dans les douze (12) mois qui suivront la date de cette sentence.

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, October 25, 1888. (Received October 27.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti, has the honor to bring to the knowledge of the honorable Secretary of State of the United States the following facts:

After the departure of President Salomon, which took place on the 10th of August of this year, a provisional government took the direction of affairs and called a national constituent assembly, which sat at Port au Prince. It was to proceed to the election of a new President of the Republic and to revise certain articles of the constitution.

This assembly has been freely elected by universal suffrage.

It met the 16th instant and has elected General Francis Denis Légitime chief of the executive power.

The assembly continues to sit, in virtue of a mandate with which it has been charged.

Whilst the Government is thus attending to its legitimate labor, the cities of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc, situated in the north of the territory of the Republic, rose against the regular Government of the country; at the present moment they are in arms, and the undersigned is informed that attempts are to be made to procure from the United States for the insurgents the necessary materials of war.

The undersigned knows that already negotiations have been arranged and the arrival of one or more rebel agents is alone awaited to give a definite form to these projects.

In view of this serious state of affairs, the Government of the undersigned has taken measures, which it has made known by telegraphic dispatches, that the ports of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc have been closed to commerce and they are blockaded by a Haytian naval force.

начті. 989

This assemblage of facts, which in the eyes of international law constitute without any doubt a state of war, the undersigned has no doubt will lead the honorable Secretary of State to take the necessary measures to prevent or suppress any violation of the neutrality of the territory of the United States by the insurgent agents, if it shall have actually taken place. As to what measures the Government of the United States should have to take in this respect, it is not for the undersigned to make any suggestions; he has full confidence in the perfect loyalty and in the energy of the United States Government; he has had too recent proofs of it not to be pleased to recall to the honorable Secretary of State his own words:

"It (the United States), said he in his report on the Pelletier affair, has announced that it will develop as is suitable the territorial rights of the most feeble of these States, not regarding them simply as equals in the eyes of the law, but, in regard to their own policy, as meriting of right their most gracious assistance."

The undersigned closes this note in announcing to the honorable Secretary of State that he shall feel it his duty to bring to his attention any culpable action tending to violate the neutrality of the United States of which he may be able to obtain sufficient proof.

Accept, etc.,

STEPHEN PRESTON.

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, October 27, 1888. (Received Oct. 30.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Hayti, in confirmation of the note he had the honor to address to the Secretary of State of the United States on the 25th instant, upon the situation in Hayti, regrets to bring to his knowledge the following incident, which the department of foreign relations has charged him to communicate to the honorable Thomas F. Bayard:

The Haytien war steamer Dessalines has captured, at the entrance of the port of St. Marc, the American steamer Haytian Republic, which attempted to run the effective blockade of this insurgent port. The Haytian Republic had on board a delegation of rebels, taken at Cape Haytien, with armed soldiers, arms, and munitions of war. This vessel thus armed had been in the ports of the south of Hayti remaining faithful to the Government of the Republic—Miragoâne, Jérémie, Aux Cayes, Aquin, and Jacmel—where the expedition has unsuccessfully tried to rouse the populations of these towns against the regular Government. In consequence of the failure of this culpable enterprise the American vessel has been captured, with its armament, at the moment of forcing the blockade of the port of St. Marc, conducted to Port au Prince, and its case has been submitted to the prize court, having undoubted jurisdiction.

While awaiting the verdict of the court the prisoners and crew of the vessel are respected and well treated by the local authorities.

As soon as the undersigned shall receive the dispatches he expects by the next mail from his Government he will hasten to inform the Secretary of State more fully of this vexatious incident, which has been communicated to him by telegraph.

The undersigned, etc.,

STEPHEN PRESTON.

No. 700.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Preston.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 29, 1888.

SIR: Your communication of the 25th instant gives to this Government the first intimation it has received of the proposed closure to commerce of the ports of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc, and you further therein state that these aforesaid ports are blockaded by a Haytian naval force.

As to any movement in the United States for the sending of vessels to Hayti armed, for the purpose of participating in an insurrection in that island, the Department will take prompt measures, whenever information is laid before it, to advise the proper authorities to inquire into the alleged movement. It would insure more prompt action, however, for Haytian agents at any place within the United States where such an expedition is supposed to be preparing to apply directly and immediately to the United States district attorney, and present to him full information as to such illegal action.

The Government of the United States is fully prepared to respect a blockade of the Haytian ports which may be duly instituted and effectively maintained by the Haytian Government. But the right of the Haytian Government to call on this Government to stop sales of munitions of war to persons who may be concerned in a Haytian insurrection is in no sense conceded. As regards the question of blockade without due prior notice and proclamation thereof, it is not competent that seiz.

ures of vessels should be made by Hayti.

Therefore the Government will regard the seizure and detention of American vessels, with their crews and property, for attempting to enter such ports, without such notice of blockade, as an act of hostility and wrong for which the prompt release of the vessels and crews, restitution of the property, and other suitable redress will be insisted upon.

Accept, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. Preston to Mr. Bayard.

[Translation.]

Washington, November 2, 1888. (Received Nov. 3.)

In reply to the note of the honorable Secretary of State, bearing date of October 29, relative to the state of war now existing on Haytian soil, the undersigned thanks the honorable Thomas F. Bayard for his decisive declarations, which indicate the course which the United States propose to pursue in order to cause the neutrality of their territory to be respected.

The undersigned regards this as a fresh evidence of the sentiments of which he is happy to say that he has repeatedly been assured, and of the happy effects of which he is well aware.

As regards the case of the seizure of the Haytian Republic, the undersigned does not think that he can add any new facts to those which have been communicated to him by telegraph, and which he has already brought to the notice of the honorable Secretary of State. Before being able discuss the matter with full knowledge of its details he must wait until the mails have brought him information concerning allthose details. Nevertheless, he thinks it proper for him to present, without further delay, some observations concerning the principles which may eventually become applicable to the seizure of said steamer.

It is to be presumed that this seizure took place after a state of war had been duly proclaimed, in which case the matter is governed by Articles XXVI, XXVII, and XXVIII of the treaty of November 3, 1864, between Hayti and the United States.

Let us suppose, however, for a moment, that no state of war and no effective blockade yet existed; that, in a word, a state of peace then existed; the undersigned would then appeal to precedents and to the principles of international law which would govern under such a supposition; if a vessel carries an armed expedition, and attempts to effect a landing with such expedition, it is liable to seizure in the territorial waters. The measure adopted in such a case is one of police and security.

The undersigned herewith incloses an extract from Wheaton on this subject. He would also refer the Honorable Secretary of State to the case of Mali and Wildenhus v. The Keeper of the Hudson County Jail (120 U. S.), in which it was decided that "any disorder on board of a foreign vessel which disturbs public peace may be repressed, and, if necessary, the creators of the disturbance may be punished by the competent legal authorities."

The undersigned does not think it necessary for him here to enumerate the other precedents which go to show the competence of Hayti in a case like this. (See Ortolan, Diplomatic de la Mer, vol. 1, pp. 270 et seq.)

It is impossible, however, for these preliminary observations to be based on anything more than an imperfect knowledge of the facts.

The undersigned concludes by expressing the hope that the honorable Secretary of State will, before reaching a decision in relation to this question, give him time to receive full information from his Government.

As soon as he shall have done so he will hasten to examine this case with all possible care and to communicate the results reached to the Honorable Secretary of State, in whose judgment and impartiality he feels every confidence.

The undersigned has the honor to renew to the Secretary of State the assurances of his very high consideration.

STEPHEN PRESTON.

[Inclosure.]

FROM WHEATON'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, DANA'S EDITION, PAGES 166-168.

Whatever may be the nature and extent of the exemption of the public or private vessels of one state from the local jurisdiction in the ports of another, it is evident that this exemption, whether expressed or implied, can never be construed to justify acts of hostility committed by such vessels, her officers and crew, in violation of the law of nations, against the security of the state in whose ports she is received, or to exclude the local tribunals and authorities from resorting to such measures of self-defense as the security of the state may require.

This just and salutary principle was asserted by the French court of cassation in 1832 in the case of the private Sardinian steam-vessel the Carlo-Alberto, which, after having landed on the southern coast of France the Duchess of Berry and several of her adherents, with the view of exciting civil war in that country, put in a French port in distress. The judgment of the court pronounced upon the conclusions of M. Dupin, ainé procureur-générale, reversed the decision of the inferior tribunal, releasing the prisoners taken on board the vessel, on the following grounds:

(1) That the principle of the law of nations according to which a foreign vessel, allied or neutral, is considered as forming part of the territory of the nation to which it belongs, and consequently is entitled to the privilege of the same inviolability with the territory itself, ceases to protect a vessel which commits acts of hostility in the French territory, inconsistent with its character of ally or neutral; as if, for example, such vessel be chartered to serve as an instrument of conspiracy against the safety of the state, and after having landed some of the persons concerned in these acts, still continues to hover near the coast, with the rest of the conspirators on board, and at last puts into port under pretext of distress.

(2) That supposing such allegation of distress be founded on fact, it could not serve as a plea to exclude the jurisdiction of the local tribunals taking cognizance of a charge of high treason against the persons found on board after the vessel was compelled to put into port by stress of weather.

American steamer Saginaw cleared Saturday from New York for Dominican ports. On Sunday took arms and ammunition, not on manifest, for Cape Haytien; sailed yesterday morning, but remained in lower bay until evening, where took arms and munition, also insurgent general, with other officers engaged in United States. Had case reported Collector Magone, who ordered revenue-cutter to stop vessel, but was too late. In view of preventing further complications, if Department allows me, would suggest that telegram sent this day via Kingston, Jamaica, would reach Boston at Port au Prince on the 8th.

F. D. Légitime, Chief of the executive power of the Republic of Hayti, to his excellency the President of the Republic of the United States of America.

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: Chosen by the vote of the National Constituent Assembly, in its session of the 16th of October instant, to the high post of chief of the executive power of the Republic, I entered on the 17th upon the performance of the charge which has been intrusted to me.

In bringing this event to your excellency's knowledge, I am happy to give you the assurance that I shall make constant efforts to maintain and fortify still more the relations of cordial amity existing between Hayti and the United States of America. With satisfaction I embrace this occasion to testify to your excellency my high esteem and my perfect friendship, and to express to you my wishes for your happiness and the prosperity of the American Nation.

I am, great and good friend, your excellency's sincere friend,

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, November 14, 1888. (Received Nov. 15.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Hayti, has the honor to bring to the attention of the honorable Secretary of State of the United States the following papers relative to the capture of the steamer Haytian Republic, which he has received by the last mail from Port au Prince. They are: (1) Procès verbal; * (2) notice of blockade; † (3) reply of Mr. Thompson. †

The undersigned will make it his duty to transmit to the honorable Secretary of State all the other papers of this procedure, which he hopes to receive by the next mail.

The undersigned awaits the receipt of the entire set of papers relating to the affair before submitting to the honorable Secretary of State his full views on the question.

And while awaiting this new communication, he hopes that the honorable Secretary of State of the United States, especially in view of the very grave declarations of certain witnesses contained in the subjoined paper (marked Annex No. 1), will suspend all decisions in the matter.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 13th instant, transmitting copy and original of a letter addressed to the President of the United States by General F. D. Légitime touching his assumption of executive power in Hayti, with request that the same be delivered to the President.

Following established precedents in cases where the titular government of a country with which the United States maintain relations of peace and friendship has yielded to revolution and domestic conflicts of opposing factions have supervened, this Government, while maintaining intercourse with the local authority in possession, reserves its formal recognition of the government, claiming titular succession until it is established.

The reception of General Légitime's letter by the President is therefore deferred for the present, awaiting the course of events.

It is sincerely hoped that the blessings of law and order under a government satisfactory to the people of Hayti may soon be established in that island.

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, November 19, 1888. (Received November 20.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti, has the honor to communicate to the honorable Secretary of State of the United States the decision* of the prize court sitting at Port au Prince, In re the Republic of Hayti vs. The steamer Haytian Republic. It appears from this decision that prize has been found to be good and valid. This document will very soon form the subject of a further communication to the honorable Secretary of State of the United States, in which the undersigned proposes to examine the various aspects of the question, or rather of the numerous questions, which have been raised by this proceeding. This work, however, requires a little time, since the authorities and the precedents governing the matter must be carefully examined. The undersigned will therefore confine himself for the present to stating the following propositions:

начті. 995

(1) No decision of a prize court becomes final without an appeal duly taken has been decided by the court having appellate jurisdiction; even in case no appeal has been taken, there can be no diplomatic action until a decision has been rendered by the court of appeals. And, if the undersigned is correctly informed on the subject, the interested parties are presumed to have recognized the validity of the decision when there has been no appeal, and when the original decision has become final owing to the fact that no appeal has been taken.

Hence the undersigned concludes that in the present case there can be no ground for any action on the part of the United States Government in behalf of the owners of the captured vessel. It seems to him that it is necessary to await the result of the appeal or to ascertain whether the claimants waive an appeal.

(2) Supposing for an instant that the court of appeals should reverse the decision of the prize court at Port au Prince, it would nevertheless appear from the evidence produced on the trial that the steamer Haytian Republic has transported one or more armed expeditions; that it has carried certain dispatches for the insurgents; that it has violated the very principles on which the security and sovereignty of the country rest; consequently the officers of the steamer would then be liable to a criminal action before the ordinary courts. And if it should be decided on appeal that the prize court was not competent, then the criminal court at Port au Prince would be so beyond a doubt. This principle has been established in the United States in several instances, among others in the case of The United States vs. Pender & Rand. (See the Federal Reporter for 1883.)

(3) Any claimant, in order to be entitled to the intervention of his Government, must prove that he is not guilty of any crime. This point is one of those that were so learnedly discussed and decided by the honorable Secretary of State in the case of Antonio Pelletier vs. The Republic of Hayti. The undersigned does not therefore deem it necessary to examine it here.

Consequently, if it is proved (and there is no doubt that in the case of the Haytian Republic ex parte evidence to this effect has already been furnished) that the said steamer has violated the rights of Haytian sovereignty, it can in no case claim the interposition of the United States Government. It is not in a position to do this unless it can show at once that the acts which are attributed to it, and which thus far it has made no attempt to deny, were really never committed by it, or unless the officers of the said steamer can explain them satisfactorily. Finally, it will also be necessary for Captain Compton to furnish a satisfactory explanation of his refusal to exhibit the ship's papers and all the other circumstances that tend to show that his responsibility in this matter is very grave.

The undersigned will now confine himself to these preliminary remarks, and, in conclusion, he begs the honorable Secretary of State to wait, before examining the merits of the question, until he has had time to present his further remarks relative to the decision pronounced on the 31st ultimo by the prize court at Port au Prince.

The undersigned has the honor, etc.,

COPY OF THE SUMMONS TO CAPTAIN COMPTON AND MR. METZGER.

In the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, the twenty-seventh October, at a quarter before two o'clock in the afternoon, at the instance of Mr. Emanuel Léon, a member of the bar of Port au Prince, residing and domiciled in this city, acting in the name and for the account of the Haytian Government, in his capacity as the representative before the special prize court, I, the undersigned, Valmont Viljoint, sworn bailiff, matriculated at the civil court of Port au Prince, residing and domiciled in this city, having been designated for this purpose, summoned (1) Mr. David S. Compton, captain of the Haytian Republic, residing and domiciled at Boston, now in the roadstead of Port au Prince, on board of said steamer, where he was, and speaking to his person; (2) Mr. John D. Metzger, agent of the "Hayti Mail Steamship Line," domiciled at Boston, residing at Port au Prince, at his residence, where he was, and speaking to his person, to appear on Tuesday, the thirtieth day of October, at nine o'clock in the morning, before the members of the prize court established at Port au Prince, and sitting in the room of the court of commerce, situated in Bonne Foi street, in order:

Whereas during the existence of a state of war it is the duty of neutrals to abstain from all participation in the contest that is going on;

Whereas the American steamer Haytian Republic has violated those principles of neutrality by transporting troops, arms, and emissaries for the account of the insurrection;

Whereas those acts furnish sufficient reason to consider that vessel as being hos-

Whereas on the sixteenth day of October the provisional government declared the ports of the Cape, St. Marc, and Gonaïves to be blockaded; whereas due notice thereof was given to the representatives of the neutral powers, and the decree announcing the blockade was published in all the towns of the Republic; whereas when the steamer Haytian Republic appeared off the port of St. Marc, that port was blockaded;

Whereas the blockade was effective, since the Haytien advice vessel Dessalines guarded the entrance; and whereas the Haytian Republic must have eluded the vigilance of the blockading forces, and have taken advantage of its superior speed so as not to be sunk;

Whereas signals were made to it, and six cannon shots, with ball, were fired at it for the purpose of stopping it, which acts constitute a sufficient special notice of a blockade;

Whereas the vessel was captured just as it was sailing out of the port of St. Marc, into which it had forced an entrance, and to which it had borne dispatches;

Whereas numerous evidences confirm its illegal participation in the acts of the insurrection of the north; whereas the captain refused to show his papers, or to allow his vessel to be searched by the examining judges, which he did in order to conceal the papers that were likely to compromise him; and whereas he also refused to allow seals to be placed upon his vessel;

Whereas a delegation consisting of leaders of the insurrectionary movements is still on board of his vessel, and was there at the time when the capture took place

Whereas the violation of a blockade is an offense which is provided for and made punishable by international law;

To hear sentence pronounced upon them, the one to be condemned to the forfeiture and relinquishment of the vessel under his command, which is to be awarded to the Haytian Government, to which it has occasioned great injury, and the cargo thereof to be confiscated; the other for the company whose representative he is, to the forfeiture and relinquishment of the vessel, which is to be awarded to the Haytian Government, to which it has occasioned great injury, the cargo thereof to be confiscated.

All damages reserved that may hereafter be claimed by the plaintiff.

To the end that they may not be ignorant hereof, I have, at the places aforesaid, and speaking to them as above stated, left with them a copy of this paper.

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, November 24, 1888. (Received November 26.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti, has the honor to invite the attention of the honorable Secretary of State to the inclosed affidavit of the Hon. E. D. Bassett.

This document scarcely needs any comment. It establishes the cooperation of the consul of the Dominican Republic in two important shipments of contrabands of war belonging to and destined for the Haytian insurgents.

The learned Secretary of State is aware of the stipulations contained in the treaty between the Republic of Hayti and the United States; he knows that the twentieth article thereof prescribes that "the liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchandise excepting those only which are distinguished by the name of contraband of war." The article enumerates the merchandise comprised under this general designation of contraband of war. Moreover, the twenty-first article prescribes as follows:

All other merchandises and things not comprehended in the articles of contraband explicitly enumerated and classified as above shall be held and considered as free and subjects of free and lawful commerce.

It is evident from these two articles that in time of war the exportation of contraband of war destined for a Haytian port is purely and simply prohibited. And if these articles constitute an important derogation from the generous principles which in the United States regulate the exportation of contraband of war, the undersigned is well aware with what uprightness and loyalty the Federal Government stands ready to fulfill the conventional obligations which flow from treaties concluded with other powers, and therefore he will confine himself in this relation to the following observations:

In fact, neither Hayti nor the Dominican Republic admit the liberty of commerce in arms in time of war or even in time of peace. This commerce constitutes in both the countries named an exclusive privilege reserved to their Governments alone. When, therefore, arms, munitions, in a word, articles contraband of war, are exported from a port of the United States they should be either consigned to the Government itself, or at least they can not be received in the custom-house when imported without a special permit from the consul accredited in the port from which the shipment takes place.

The present course of procedure in this regard is as follows: In the port of New York, for example, whenever a shipment of arms is made, whether by Hayti or by the Dominican Republic, the vessel which carries it must be furnished with a special permit issued by the competent consul.

During this month of November the consul of Santo Domingo at New York, as appears from the deposition of Mr. Bassett, has twice issued permits of the character of those of which the undersigned has just made mention, for the purpose of authorizing shipments of arms to a small port of the Dominican Republic named Monte-Christi. An examination of the map and a simple glance—it matters not what work, on geography—shows that this port, situated upon Dominican territory, is the nearest to the territory of Hayti, and, moreover, that the village which lies near the port in question has scarcely a thousand inhabitants. There is no commerce of any importance whatever with this out of theway place. And, nevertheless, it is to this port that the two permissory certificates have been given by the Dominican consul at New York to the steamer Saginaw, which sailed from New York on the 6th instant, and to the steamer George W. Clyde, which sailed on the 20th instant.

Assuredly, if the Dominican Government had suddenly determined to make purchases of arms, even had it chosen therefor a time when the neighboring Republic is threatened with a prolonged civil war, such shipments would not have been consigned to Monte-Christi; they would have been sent to the seat of the Government itself, that is to say, to the city of Santo Domingo, which lies nearly 250 miles from Monte-Christi. But the strange conduct of the consul of the Republic of Santo Domingo becomes perfectly clear when we look at the acts which have recently taken place at New York, as they are set forth in the deposition of Mr. Bassett. The arms and other articles shipped to Monte-Christi have been notoriously bought at New York by one Papillon, a general in the service of the insurgents, or by his agents; the shipments are in the name of a New York house notoriously employed by the Haytian insurgents. The Dominican consul could not have been ignorant of this. Mr. Bassett had officially notified him of this, verbally and in writing.

These facts constitute, therefore, in the judgment of the undersigned, an act of gravity, to which he officially calls the attention of the honorable Secretary of State, and requests him to take, in regard thereto, the measures which he may deem adapted to prevent acts which amount, at least, to a grave abuse of consular functions. They are also altogether contrary to the conventions existing between Hayti and the Dominican Republic. But this aspect of the subject can not be presented to the Secretary of State, because it is beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

The undersigned has the honor, etc.,

STEPHEN PRESTON.

AFFIDAVIT OF EBENEZER D. BASSETT.

EBENEZER D. BASSETT, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

(1) That he is an American citizen and consul-general of the Haytian Republic to this port.

(2) That as such consul, on or about the 31st of October, A. D. 1888, he called on Mr. L. Julia, consul of the Dominican Republic to this port, to inquire of him whether he, the said Julia, had authorized the steamer Saginaw to take on board, as part of its cargo, arms and ammunition for the port of Monte-Christi, near the boundary-line between Hayti and San Domingo; deponent further says that said Mr. L. Julia informed him that he was not aware that such a shipment was contemplated, and further that his Government had no arms to ship by the Saginaw.

(3) Deponent further says that he, being credibly informed that such shipment was being loaded on the Saginaw, wrote to said Mr. L. Julia a letter, a copy of which is attached hereto and marked Exhibit No. 1.

That in a short time deponent received a letter in answer to his from said Dominican consul, a copy of which letter is attached hereto and marked Exhibit No. 2.

That notwithstanding said official answer, deponent was then informed, and has been informed since, that Mr. L. Julia did deliver to the owners of the steamer £aginaw a permit to receive a large quantity of arms and ammunition intended for Monte-Christi; that said Saginaw sailed on the 5th instant.

Deponent further says that it appears from the manifest of said Saginaw, filed with the custom-house of this city, that the packages of said arms and ammunition shipped as aforesaid, under virtue of the permit of said consul, bore the shipping marks \( \frac{J}{P} \), which are the initial letters of the names of Jimenes, Haustedt & Co.,

the shippers, and of Papillon, who are believed and known to be directly connected with the insurrection in the northern provinces of Hayti, the former as the financial agents and shippers in New York, and the latter as a general in the service of the insurgents.

Deponent further says that he is informed, and believes it to be true, that said Papillon arrived in New York on or about the 25th of October last, and that he sailed on the steamer Saginaw for Monte-Christi, and deponent is informed and believes that said Papillon has since landed at the aforesaid port of Monte-Christi.

Deponent further says that he is informed, and believes it to be true, that the aforementioned arms, shipped by the Saginaw, have been purchased in New York by said Haytian insurgents, had become then and there their property, and were actually intended for the northern ports of Hayti; but that in order to protect them from the risk of capture they were shipped to Monte-Christi; and that the aforestated arrangement could not have been successfully carried out except for the co-operation of the Dominican consul.

(4) Deponent further says that since the departure of the aforesaid steamer Saginaw a second shipment, of the same description as aforesaid, was made by said Jimenes, Haustedt & Co., and was permitted to leave this port under certificate of same character as that above referred to, issued by the same consul as aforesaid; that said invoice was shipped to Monte-Christi by the steamer George W. Clyde, which sailed from this port on the 20th instant.

The consul-general of Hayti to the consul of Santo Domingo.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF HAYTI AT NEW YORK, New York, November 2, 1888.

Mr. CONSUL AND DEAR COLLEAGUE: Confirming the conversation I have had with you upon the situation in Hayti, and in view of the alliance existing between the two Republics which we have the honor to represent in this city, I have to inform you that it has come to our knowledge that agents of the Haytian rebellion now in the United States are about to ship arms and munitions of war to Dominican ports under the pretext that they are intended for your Government.

We have reason to believe that these articles, after having been landed in some point in Santo Domingo, are to be sent to the territory or coast of Hayti, in violation of Dominican neutrality. In warning you of these facts, I count upon your benevolent co-operation, to the end that the good harmony between our countries may not be imperilled by adventurers, at the same time leaving to whom it may concern all official responsibilities. Accept, etc.,

CONSULATE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC AT NEW YORK, No. 253.7 New York, November 3, 1888.

Mr. CONSUL: I have had the honor to receive your polite communication of the 2d instant, wherein you are pleased to charge me to impede the shipment of certain arms which, under pretext of being for the Dominican Government, are intended for the Haytian revolutionists.

I have no knowledge, Mr. Consul, that any such shipment of arms has been attempted or made. But at the same time I permit myself to inform you that it does not pertain to this consulate to ascertain the ulterior effects of the merchandise which may be legally shipped for the ports of the Dominican Republic.

I can assure you that the Dominican Government will authorize no act which might compromise its neutrality as regards the Government of Hayti, and so diminish the good harmony which exists between the two Republics.

For my part, Mr. Consul, I am ready to oblige you in all that it may be proper for me to do, and I repeat to you my desires that the good relations between the two Republics which we have the honor to represent may not be interrupted.

Be pleased to accept, etc.,

No. 708.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Preston.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 28, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 24th instant, in which you inclose a copy of an affidavit of E. D. Bassett, esq., consul-general of Hayti at New York, in relation to the shipment of arms and munitions of war, as part of cargo, on certain steamers from that port to the port of Monte-Christi, in San Domingo, near the boundary line between that country and Hayti.

In communicating this paper you call attention to articles 20 and 21 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, between the United States and Hayti, to which you give the construction that by them the exportation of articles contraband of war from the United States, under the circumstances above stated, is completely prohibited, and request that this Government take steps to prevent such exportation to Hayti, directly or indirectly.

I regret that I am unable to concur with you in the construction which you have placed upon the two articles in question. It is not unusual to find in the treaties of the United States provisions defining what articles may be regarded as contraband of war between the contracting I am not, however, aware that such provisions have ever been held to bind either Government to prevent its citizens from dealing in the designated articles, or from exporting them from its territory to that of any other country under any circumstances.

On the contrary, it is believed that the views maintained by this Government on the subject are correctly stated in the language of Mr. Jefferson, when Secretary of State, to the ministers of France and Great Britain, while war was flagrant between them. "Our citizens," said Mr. Jefferson, "have always been free to make, vend, and export arms."

Subsequent Secretaries of State, down to the present time, have reaffirmed this doctrine.

Since I am unable to perceive any conflict between it and the provisions respecting contraband of war in our treaty with Hayti, it seems unnecessary to discuss other points raised in your note.

Accept, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 709.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Preston.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 28, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your respective communications of the 14th and 19th instant, in which you inclose copies of certain papers relating to the condemnation of the Haytian Republic, an American vessel, at Port au Prince, and the imprisonment of certain of her officers.

On the 26th instant the Department received a full report upon the case by the captain of the United States steamer Boston, who had just returned from Port au Prince to the port of New York.

Upon examination of the record and proceedings in the case, the Department is led to the conclusion that the seizure and detention of the vessel and the imprisonment of her officers have, from the beginning, been irregular and wrongful; that she should, without delay, be restored to her American owners, and her officers released from all detention; and that adequate compensation should be made to them and to the owners of the vessel for the loss and injuries they have suffered by reason of the proceedings in question.

It is unnecessary to discuss the charge of attempting to run a blockade, upon which allegation it is understood that the seizure of the vessel was originally made. Whether any valid blockade did or did not exist, it is clear that the Haytian Republic had and could have had no notice of it.

The Haytian Republic sailed from New York October 4, 1888, with cargo and mails for Turk's Island, Cape Haytien, Port de Paix, Miragoane, Aux Cayes, and Jacmel, and with mails for Gonaïves, St. Marc, and Port au Prince. Arriving at Gonaïves on the 16th of October, she sailed on the same day for St. Marc, and after a brief stop at that port proceeded to Miragoane, where she arrived on the 17th, discharged cargo, and sailed for Aux Cayes, where she arrived on the following day, the 18th. Thence she proceeded to Jacmel, where she arrived on the 19th, discharged cargo, and sailed on the same day for St. Marc.

The decree of blockade of the ports of Cape Haytien, Gonaïves, and St. Marc was resolved upon by the provisional government of Légitime on the 15th of October, and made known to the foreign representatives in Port au Prince on the following day, but was not published in the official paper, Le Moniteur, until the 18th of October.

The means of communication between Port au Prince, Miragoane, Aux Cayes, and Jacmel exclude the supposition that news of the proposed blockade could have reached Miragoane by October 17, Aux Cayes by October 18, or Jacmel by the 19th, and consequently the master of the Haytian Republic could not have been aware of any proclamation of blockade when, on October 19, he sailed from Jacmel for St. Marc. Indeed, it is known that no notice of blockade was sent to Jacmel at that time, as that city and district were not in sympathy with the provisional government of General Légitime at Port au Prince. Therefore even the usual and ordinary means of communication between Port au Prince and the ports proposed to be blockaded had been interrupted.

When the Haytian Republic was entering the port of St. Marc from the southward, late in the afternoon of the 20th of October, a steamer was sighted to the northward of the Bay of St. Marc, and it was afterwards observed that she was firing guns, but for what purpose was unknown.

Upon arriving in the port of St. Marc, the master of the Haytian Republic was informed by a pilot that the steamer which had been discerned outside was the Haytian man of war Dessalines, and that she was blockading the port. This was the first intimation from any source the captain or any officer of the Haytian Republic had of any blockade.

The Haytian Republic left St. Marc on the next morning, the 21st of October, and was captured outside by the Dessalines. It may be here observed that the commander of the Dessalines has made two reports of the capture—one submitted to the prize commission at Port au Prince, and the other published in Le Progrés of October 26, 1888—which are not entirely consistent. To this discrepancy, however, I do not desire further to advert.

It appears that after the Haytian Republic had entered the harbor of St. Marc, on October 20, and there received her first intimation of any blockade, she made no effort whatever to escape, although she could easily under cover of night or with her superior speed at any time have gotten away had her master seen fit to do so or had he had any ground for supposing such action desirable.

When she was stopped on the morning of the 21st of October, when coming out of the Bay of St. Marc, by the Dessalines, the commander of the latter sent a boat-load of armed men alongside and ordered her master to repair on board of the Dessalines with his papers.

No officer was sent on board of the Haytian Republic to examine her papers; and neither the papers, the ship, nor the cargo were examined. Mr. William Smith, the first officer of the Haytian Republic, was taken on board of the Dessalines with the passenger list and a statement as to the voyage of the vessel. He was detained on board of the Dessalines as a prisoner, and upon arrival at Port an Prince was sent to the office of the captain of the port, where he was held as a prisoner until set at liberty at the request of the United States minister.

The irregularity of these proceedings is manifestly shown. The treaty between the United States and Hayti of November 3, 1864, contains the following provisions:

ARTICLE XVIII. And whereas it frequently happens that vessels sail for a port or place belonging to an enemy without knowing that the same is either besieged, blockaded, or invested, it is hereby agreed by the high contracting parties that every vessel so circumstanced may be turned away from such port or place, but she shall not be detained, nor any part of her cargo, if not contraband, be confiscated, unless, after notice of such blockade or investment, she shall again attempt to enter; but she shall be permitted to go to any other port or place she shall think proper, provided the same be not blockaded, besieged, or invested. Nor shall any vessel of either of the parties that may have entered into such port or place before the same was actually besieged, blockaded, or invested by the other, be restrained from quitting such place with her cargo, nor, if found therein after the reduction and surrender of such place, shall such vessel or her cargo be liable to confiscation, but they shall be restored to the owners thereof.

The recital of these provisions in connection with the facts above stated renders comment unnecessary.

I next refer to Article XXIV of the same treaty, as follows:

In order to prevent all kinds of disorder in the visiting and examination of the vessels and cargoes of both the contracting parties on the high seas, it is hereby agreed that whenever a ship of war shall meet with aneutral of the other contracting party, the first shall remain at a convenient distance, and may send its boats, with two or three men only, in order to execute the examination of the papers concerning the ownership and cargo of the vessel, without causing the least extortion, violence, or ill-treatment, for which the commanders of the said armed ships shall be responsible with their persons and property; for which purpose the commanders of all private armed vessels shall, before receiving their commissions, give sufficient security to answer for all damages they may commit; and it is hereby agreed and understood that the neutral party shall in no case be required to go on board the examining vessel for the purpose of exhibiting his papers, or for any other purpose whatever.

And Article XXVII, which also provides:

That proper care may be taken of the vessel and cargo and embezzlement prevented in time of war, it is hereby agreed that it shall not be lawful to remove the master, commander, or supercargo of any captured vessel from on board thereof during the time the vessel may be at sea after her capture, or pending the proceedings against her or her cargo, or anything relating thereto; and in all cases where a vessel of the citizens of either party shall be captured or seized and held for adjudication her officers, passengers, and crew shall be hospitably treated. They shall not be imprisoned or deprived of any part of their wearing apparel, nor of the possession and use of their money, not exceeding for the captain, supercargo, mate, and passengers $500 each, and for the sailors $100.

From the above stipulations it is manifest that so far as the proceedings against the Haytian Republic rest upon a charge of attempting to run a blockade, they were in clear violation of the express terms of the treaty, and wholly improper and inadmissible.

Nor can the tribunal by which the charges against the Haytian Republic and her officers were examined be recognized by this Government as competent for that purpose. By the twenty-eighth article of the treaty above referred to it is provided that in matters of prize "in all cases the established courts for prize causes, in the country to which the prizes may be conducted, shall alone take cognizance of them."

The tribunal before which the Haytian Republic and her officers were brought was hastily improvised for the occasion and consisted of two commissioners specially appointed on the 21st of October, 1888, to examine the case of the Haytian Republic. It was in no sense "an established court for prize causes," as stipulated in the treaty, but had for its special and only authority the order of the provisional president, Légitime. Its proceedings had scarcely a feature of formality and regularity. The witnesses before it, whose statements were generally founded on hearsay and often palpably inconsistent with established facts, were not even sworn, and no opportunity was given for defense, although the reasonable delay of four days, two of which were holidays, was requested for that purpose and refused.

Such proceedings appear only the more indefensible when it is considered that the provisional president, Légitime, and his minister for foreign affairs now set up a violation of the municipal law of Hayti as the ground of the condemnation of the vessel and the imprisonment of her officers. The professed character of the commission was that of a "prize court," and it is so styled in your notes, to which I have the honor now to reply. The trial of an alleged violation of Haytian municipal law was thus wholly outside its competence. As a tribunal for the examination of such a charge its proceedings were thus not only confessedly without jurisdiction, but destitute of regularity, and also palpably violative of the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of 1864, which guaranties to citizens of the United States access to the ordinary courts of justice, and full opportunity to defend their rights and interests before them.

A prize court is not a court of criminal jurisdiction. "The condemnation of a vessel and cargo" (Bates, Attorney-General, 10 Opin. Atty. Gen'l, 453) "in a prize court is not a criminal sentence. No person is charged with an offense; and so no person is in condition to be relieved and re-instated by a pardon."

To such proceedings as those of the special Haytian commission above described, it is the opinion of the Department that the doctrines set forth in your note of the 19th instant, in relation to appeals from the decisions of prize tribunals, have no application. Such rules can be held to apply only to the procedure of regularly established courts acting within the limits of their competency, and from whose decisions appeals are provided for. It can not be admitted that the decrees of an extraordinary commission, which assumes to act in disregard of treaties and the law of nations, must stand unquestioned as a subject for judicial review, or that the persons who have been deprived of their property or of their personal freedom by such decrees are bound to seek judicial relief. Those doctrines apply only to the regular and formal proceedings of the established judicial courts of a country, acting according to recognized principles of justice. In other cases relief and redress may be obtained by direct appeal to the Government of the individuals whose rights of person and property have been invaded.

Another feature of the case of the Haytian Republic, to which I have not adverted because other irregularities rendered it superfluous, is that of the place of her seizure. From the best information which the Department is able to obtain it is believed that the capture of the vessel took place about 6 miles from the nearest point of land. It is unnecessary to comment further than to say that if the capture was made outside the territorial waters of Hayti the inadmissibility of a trial for an offense against the municipal law of Hayti would be obvious, aside from any question as to the character of the tribunal before which the case was brought.

In the confusion which has marked the condition of affairs in the Republic of Hayti within the last few weeks one President, long and formally recognized by the United States, has been forcibly overthrown and, together with his ministers, driven from the country; a provisional government was then formed under the presidency of Boisrond Canal, of which General Thélémaque, chief of the army of the revolution, and a promising candidate for the presidency, and Senator Légitime, another candidate, were both members.

Before a regular election of President could be held General Thélémaque lost his life and Senator Légitime was elected President by the votes of certain persons, only to find himself confronted by a revolutionary committee, who, at last accounts, held possession of a majority of the ports and perhaps the larger part of the territory of the Republic. In the midst of such bloody contentions and the various factional attempts to obtain power it is unjust and unreasonable that merchant vessels of the United States should be made the victims of such lawless proceedings.

Local supremacy in Hayti thus shifts from week to week, and from hand to hand, so rapidly and unexpectedly that it would be wholly unreasonable and impossible to subject the merchant marine and citizens of other countries, who find themselves so surrounded by factions contending violently for mastery, to extreme penalties, because of their alleged favor to either side, or because of their necessary and enforced acquiescence in the demands of factions locally and temporarily in power.

The rights of person and property of American citizens engaged in business in Hayti can not be permitted to become the foot-ball of contesting factions and their evanescent authority; and the protecting arm of the United States will be interposed for their security. By this it is not intended to include cases of deliberate intermeddling in local conflicts, but merely to rescue our citizens, who may be caught in the eddies of local sanguinary émeutes.

The defects and misfortunes of the Republic of Hayti must not be visited upon the citizens of a friendly country, who have contributed in no way to the unhappy condition of affairs with which they find themselves unexpectedly confronted.

начті. 1005

The voyage of the Haytian Republic was commenced on October 4 from the United States, with peaceful and lawful intent, and with no knowledge of Haytian disorders or desire to mingle in Haytian disputes.

On her voyage from Port de Paix to Gonaïves, on October 15-16; from Gonaïves to Miragoâne, on October 16-17; and from the latter port to Aux Cayes, on October 17-18, it is true that she transported as passengers persons variously armed, and, as is supposed, in sympathy with those in possession of the districts in which the ports above named are situated. In such transportation she met with no interference or protest, and merely acted as a common carrier of passengers whom she found awaiting transportation in the ports at which she traded. Such action can not be regarded as constituting complicity in Haytian disorders; and, at the time that the vessel was seized by the Dessalines in the service of Provisional President Légitime, at Port au Prince, the persons whom she had thus carried had been left at their ports of destination and she was proceeding on her voyage.

The Department has just received dispatches from the United States consul at Cape Haytien, one of the ports included in the proclamation of blockade, to the effect that foreign commerce is open at that port, and that merchant vessels enter and depart with cargoes without restriction.

In view therefore of what I have herein fully laid before you I desire to express, under the direction of the President, his confident expectation that, without delay, the steamer Haytian Republic will be released by the authorities at Port au Prince and returned to the custody of her officers and crew, and that investigation may be at once commenced to ascertain the injuries inflicted upon the owners of the vessel, and also upon the captain, officers, and crew in the course of this illegal and most regrettable interference with their rights.

Accept, Mr. Minister, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

LEGATION OF HAYTI, Washington, November 30, 1888. (Received December 1.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti to the United States, begs to call the attention of the Hon. Thomas F. Bayard to the recent incidents which have occurred in regard to the affair of the steamer Haytian Republic.

The dispatches which the undersigned has received this very day from his Government have informed him that on the 15th of this month the Hon. John E. W. Thompson, minister of the United States to Port au Prince, has informed the Government of the undersigned that the case of the steamer Haytian Republic was referred to the Government of the United States.

At the same time his Government has given instructions to the undersigned to examine and to arrange, if it were necessary, this affair in concert with the honorable the Secretary of State of the United States.

In this situation of affairs the undersigned declares himself ready to proceed without delay. He begs, therefore, that the honorable Secretary of State of the United States will inform him of the opinion of his Government upon the affair of the Haytian Republic, which, by the acts approved before a prize tribunal regularly constituted, has been duly condemned.

Confiding in the wisdom and moderation of which the honorable Secretary of State has given him so many proofs, the undersigned will receive and examine the observations of the honorable Secretary of State with all the attention that they deserve; and he will make it his duty on his part to pursue the affair with the most sincere desire to terminate promptly and in the spirit of justice which animates the two Governments.

The undersigned has the honor to renew to the Secretary of State the assurances of his very high consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 1, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt this morning of your note of the 30th ultimo, informing me of the advices you have received from the Haytian authorities you represent to the effect that the United States minister at Port au Prince had been requested to make known to his Government that the case of the steamer Haytian Republic had been referred to the Government of the United States.

Mr. Thompson's dispatch reporting this circumstance was received yesterday, and I was thus enabled to anticipate the request you now make, to be informed of the opinion of this Government in the matter of the Haytian Republic, by addressing you my note of the 28th ultimo on the subject.

The desires you express in the note which I now have the honor to acknowledge, for a speedy termination of the matter in view of the deferential submission thereof to this Government, which you announce and confirm, lead me to look for your prompt acquiescence in the conclusions which this Government has been constrained to reach, and to confidently regard this question as virtually settled.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

Award of the referee in the matter of the claim of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, against the Republic of Hayti.

In pursuance of the protocol, dated May 24, 1888, between Hon. Thos. F. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, and the Hon. Stephen Preston, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Hayti, representing their respective Governments, after having made a declaration that I would impartially and carefully examine and decide the case submitted to me, in good faith, to the best of my judgment, and conformably to the principles of law applicable thereto, I have investigated the claim of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, against the Republic of Hayti, and I now make the following statement and award:

CLAIM OF CHARLES ADRIAN VAN BOKKELEN.

This claim grows out of the imprisonment, during the years 1884 and 1885, at Port au Prince, of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, by the authorities of the Republic of Hayti. The imprisonment continued for a period of nearly fifteen (15) months; and the claim made on behalf of Van Bokkelen is in the form of a demand upon Hayti for pecuniary indemnity in the sum of one hundred and thirteen thousand six hundred dollars ($113,600).

Although the essential facts are within a small compass, and the question submitted for decision to the referee is single and explicit,* the case has been the subject of a multiplicity of proceedings and pleadings, judicial, executive, and diplomatic; and has given rise to voluminous correspondence and elaborate argumentation on the part of the two Governments.

In the disposition of this case I shall confine myself as closely as may be practicable to a presentation of the essential matters, and to the determination of the single and explicit issue suggested by the terms of the protocol. It is proper, however, to state here, that at an early stage of the submission of this case to me as referee, a demurrer was interposed by the defendant Government, and an elaborate brief was presented in support of said demurrer. After consideration of this brief, I notified counsel for the defendant Government that there was no provision under the submission for special pleading, and that the protocol specified and indicated in express terms the subject-matter and the question ^{*} Protocol, May 4, 1888, articles 1 and 2.

submitted for determination. As a matter of fact, the argument which was entitled, "Brief on behalf of defendant Government in support of demurrer," is a full and exhaustive exposition of the material points relied on by the defense, and covers fifty five (55) type-written folios.

In addition, the limitation of time within which the referee was required to render his decision precludes the idea of the interposition of special pleading.

And further as to the propriety of a demurrer, general or special, under this arbitration it is to be said that a State, like an individual, accused of having inflicted wrong upon another, may shape its defense against the charge with reference to the facts, or to the law.* the terms of the protocol, as well as from the correspondence heretofore passed between the contracting parties, it seems clear that there is not now and never was any denial by the defendant Government of the substantive facts which give rise to this claim.

Subsequently complainant Government and the counsel for the respective Governments were notified that I desired briefs on the subject of the measure of damages. These additional briefs were duly filed and have been considered.

The defense set up by the defendant Government is rested upon a collision between the treaty and certain articles in the municipal codes And this issue may only be determined by reference to the treaty stipulations and to the provisions contained in the municipal statutes.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen was a citizen of the United States, who, prior to the year 1872, resided in Brooklyn, N. Y. In that or the following year he went to Hayti and established himself in business at Port au Prince. In 1880 he married a Haytian lady, the widow of General P. Lorquet, an owner of real estate in Hayti in her own right. There were two children of this marriage, who, with their mother, reside at Port au Prince.

On the 15th of February, 1883, having sustained severe losses in his business, and a judgment against him having been affirmed in the court of cassation, which he was unable to pay, and under which he was liable to be imprisoned for one year, he filed a schedule of his assets and liabilities in the civil court of Port au Prince, preparatory to applying for the benefit of judicial assignment, under which, in Hayti, an honest but unfortunate debtor is allowed to surrender all his property for the benefit of his creditors, and is entitled to be discharged from prison, if he has been arrested, and to be free from arrest thereafter on account of his existing indebtedness. At that time, in Hayti, imprisonment for mere debt had not been abolished.

Three other judgments were subsequently recovered against Van Bokkelen, two in favor of the Bank of Hayti and one in favor of J. Archin, under each of which he was liable to three years' imprisonment in default of payment, making ten years in all. A fifth judgment was rendered against him in favor of St. Aude, jr., which does not seem to have decreed any imprisonment. These judgments are enumerated in Mr. Langston's dispatch of January 14, 1885, to Mr. Frelinghuysen, and it is there stated that the terms of imprisonment fixed in three of the judgments are twice as long as would have been imposed in the case of

начті. 1009

After the filing of Van Bokkelen's schedule, which was duly recorded by the clerk of the civil court in Port au Prince, on the 15th of February, 1883, the proceedings seem to have been postponed by notices of writs until the following year.

On or about the 5th of March, 1884, Van Bokkelen was arrested on the judgment of Toeplitz & Co., and confined in the common jail of Port au Prince. Although imprisonment for debts, irrespective of fraud in contracting them or evading their payment, was then lawful in Hayti, there seems to have been no separate prison for debtors. The character of the common jail, and of the military hospital in which Van Bokkelen was confined, and the state of his health when he was incarcerated, will be noticed hereafter in connection with the question of damages.

Van Bokkelen protested against his arrest as illegal, on the ground that by an order of the Haytian authorities, published in the official journal, "it was made obligatory that before a foreigner could be placed in jail the complaint should first be submitted to the attorney for the Government for his examination and approval, and (should be) signed with his signature, with seal attached." On the 18th of the same month it was judicially determined that Van Bokkelen's arrest was it legal. But before he was discharged other creditors, availing themselves of a provision of Haytian law under which, when a debtor is imprisoned, they can keep him in jail by "recommending" him, recommended him accordingly, and the jailor refused to discharge him.

It is to be noted that these creditors took advantage of Van Bokkelen's illegal imprisonment to keep him from getting out of jail by a method which would not have enabled them to put him in.

Van Bokkelen thereupon, through his counsel, applied to the civil court of Port au Prince for the benefit of judicial assignment.

He had been advised that under the treaty of 1864 between the United States and Hayti he was entitled to the benefit of judicial assignment the same as if he were a citizen of that country.

In the proceedings upon Van Bokkelen's petition to the civil court of Port au Prince for the benefit of judicial assignment, twelve of his creditors appeared, and all but two assented.

These opposing creditors raised various objections, but insisted mostly on article 794 of the Code of Civil Procedure and article 569 of the Code of Commerce, which expressly exclude foreigners (les étrangers) from the benefit of this provision of Haytian law.

All the objections of the opposing creditors were traversed by the petitioner. His counsel argued that the schedule of his assets and liabilities was sufficient; that his misfortunes and good faith were manifest; that the treaty of 1864 between Hayti and the United States repealed article 794 of the Code of Civil Procedure and article 569 of the Code of Commerce so far as the disability attaching to the petitioner in his character of American citizen or foreigner was concerned. This he argued at length, and also claimed that inasmuch as the petitioner had established himself at Port au Prince in business and married a Haytian wife, who owned real property in the city and had borne him children, having thus fixed his home as well as his commercial interests in Hayti with the knowledge of the Government, a just construction of the term "les étrangers" required that he should not be treated as a foreigner or a stranger, but as a domiciled merchant entitled to all civil rights and privileges as distinguished from those that are political; and in support of the proposition that the exercise of civil rights is independent of the exercise of political rights, and that "the capacity of a citizen resides in the combination of civil and political rights," he cited article 11 of the Civil Code of Hayti.

The opposing creditors (Toeplitz & Co.) rejoined that they had no knowledge of the treaty and had not been served with a copy; and therefore moved for information in that regard at the cost of the petitioner. Petitioner's counsel replied that the treaty was not a document, but a law of which no one was supposed to be ignorant.

It appears also that the Government of Hayti, as well as all the parties to these proceedings, was represented by counsel and heard by the court.

The first question that the court decided was "whether the petitioner should be condemned to furnish to Toeplitz & Co. information regarding the treaty concluded between Hayti and the United States of America, and whether such information should likewise be furnished to Louis Nadal." That question the court decided in favor of Van Bokkelen, as follows:

Whereas a treaty, concluded between Hayti and the United States of America, November 3, 1864, sanctioned by the Senate, and promulgated by the executive branch of the Government, is a law of the State;

Whereas article 75 of the Code of Civil Procedure renders it obligatory upon the petitioner to furnish a copy of the documents or of that part thereof upon which the petition is based; but it does not provide that a copy of the law or of the provision of the law on which the petition is based shall be furnished;

Whereas, thus, Mr. C. A. Van Bokkelen is not obliged to furnish information of Whereas, thus, Mr. C. A. Van Bokkelen is not obliged to furnish information of the treaty to Louis Nadal, and can not be condemned to furnish such information to Toeplitz & Co., who are under obligations, just as C. A. Von Bokkelen is, to have knowledge of the law.

On the main question, involving the rights of Van Bokkelen under the treaty, and deciding upon the objection of his alienage based upon article 794 of the Code of Civil Procedure and article 569 of the Code of Commerce, interposed by L. Toeplitz & Co. and by Louis Nadal, the court, after having deliberated, denied Van Bokkelen's application.

His application to make the judicial assignment having been denied by the civil court of Port au Prince, Van Bokkelen was kept in jail. He appealed to the court of cassation—the court of last resort—which rendered its decision affirming the judgment of the civil court on the 26th of February, 1885, almost a year from the time when Van Bokkelen was first imprisoned. It seems that pending his appeal the time within which further objections could be made by his creditors to his petition expired on the 21st of October, 1884, and that no one, not even the parties upon whose application he had been illegally arrested the previous March, made any opposition. This fact is stated in a letter from Van Bokkelen's father to Mr. Frelinghuysen, who was then Secretary of State, dated November 15, 1884, a copy of which was transmitted by Mr. Davis, Acting Secretary, to Mr. Langston, United States minister at Port au Prince, November 19, 1884.

The Secretary of State of the United States was informed of this decision on the 21st of March, 1885, and on the 28th of the same month he sent a dispatch to the United States minister at Port au Prince, in which, after reviewing the facts and the law, he claimed that there had been a denial of justice in Van Bokkelen's case, and that he should be released from jail forthwith, in the following terms:

The release of Mr. Van Bokkelen is now asked on independent grounds. It is maintained, first, that continuous imprisonment for debt, when there is no criminal offense imputed, is contrary to what are now generally recognized principles of international law. It is maintained, secondly, that the imprisonment of Mr. Van Bokkelen is a contravention of articles 6 and 9 of the treaty of 1865 between the United States and the Republic of Hayti.

1011 HAYTI.

The Haytian Government has a clear and ample opportunity to relieve this case from all difficulty by recognizing the error of their courts in supposing that the privilege of release of an imprisoned debtor would be denied to a Haytian citizen by the United States courts upon making assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors.

You are now instructed to earnestly press the views of this Government, as outlined in this instruction, on the early attention of the Government of Hayti by leaving a copy thereof with the minister of foreign affairs.

The response of the Government of Hayti should be promptly communicated to this Department.

On the 17th of April, 1885, Mr. Langston sent a copy of this dispatch to the Haytian Government and urged the prisoner's immediate release, inviting attention also to his "feeble and failing health." The reply of the Haytian Government, twelve days later, was an elaborate defense of Van Bokkelen's imprisonment-solely, however, upon the ground that he was an alien.

Meanwhile, and shortly after the decision of the court of cassation, the prisoner, who, at the request of the United States minister, had been removed to the military hospital on account of his infirm condition, was sent back again to the common jail. On the 15th of May the United States minister sent another note to the Haytian Government, insisting on Van Bokkelen's immediate release, and on the afternoon of the 27th of that month Van Bokkelen was conducted to the United States legation by an attorney of the Haytian Government, "on its order, as stated, and thus given his release and liberty." On the 5th of the following June, Mr. Langston received a note from the Haytian secretary of state for foreign affairs, maintaining the position which had been held throughout by the Haytian Government, and closing as follows:

I understand that Mr. Van Bokkelen has been put at liberty. This result, happy for him, is due, doubtless, to some arrangement made with his creditors. This, besides, to which I will not address myself further, as it is not proper, has itself, as you will understand, been accomplished without interference of the executive power; it comes to pass without saying that it annuls in no wise the considerations which this department has plead relative to the case of Van Bokkelen.

Pending Van Bokkelen's appeal to the court of aassation, the Department of State, upon representations of the United States minister at Port au Prince in regard to the adjudged illegality of the arrest in the first instance, and the prisoner's unquestionable right under the treaty to make the judicial cession and obtain his release, had instructed the minister to use every proper effort with the Haytian Government to that end.

Mr. Van Bokkelen sailed for the United States shortly after his release, and on his arrival made a statement of his case to the Secretary of State and an appeal for his good offices in collecting indemnity from the Hay-In response, Mr. Bayard addressed a note to the tian Government. United States minister at Port au Prince, dated October 2, 1885, instructing him as follows:

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Thompson.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 2, 1885.

SIR: I herewith inclose a copy of a letter from Mr. C. A. Van Bokkelen, of the 19th ultimo, in reference to his illegal imprisonment at Port au Prince and his claim for damages in consequence thereof.

In view of Mr. Van Bokkelen's present statement of facts and those already before your legation in regard to his case, I desire that you will call the attention of the Government of Hayti to his claim. There can be no doubt that Mr. Van Bokfielen was wrongfully imprisoned by the Haytian authorities, and that great damage acaccrued to him thereby.

Under these circumstances, therefore, you are directed to ask and to press for the redress claimed by Mr. Van Bokkelen, or, if the amount to be paid can not be immediately agreed upon, for a reference of the question to an arbitrator, so that the case may be disposed of without unnecessary delay.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

To this Mr. Thompson, who had succeeded Mr. Langston, made the following reply:

Mr. Thompson to Mr. Bayard.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Port au Prince, Hayti, November 3, 1888.

SIR: I have to inform you of the death of Mr. Charles A. Van Bokkelen, who died on the 1st instant, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, aged thirty-seven years. He was buried on the 2d instant, many Americans and foreigners following the remains to their last resting place. I attended the funeral, and it was a fact worthy of note that a sincere feeling of sadness at his death and sympathy for his wife and two small children seemed to pervade all present.

I had entered his claim against the Haytian Government to the sum of $113,000, some time before his death, and will continue to press the same, as advised by the Department.

I am, etc.,

JOHN E. W. THOMPSON.

Subsequent negotiations between the two Governments have resulted in an agreement to submit the claim to arbitration.

THE QUESTIONS TO BE ARBITRATED.

Two questions arise on the facts:

1. Was Van Bokkelen entitled, by the terms of the treaty between the Republic of Hayti and the United States, concluded November 3, 1864, to be discharged from prison on the same terms as a citizen of Hayti imprisoned for the same cause?

2. If there has been a violation by Hayti of the treaty rights of Van Bokkelen, what should Hayti pay to the United States, by way of damages, for the benefit of the representatives of the deceased?

The first question submitted by the two Governments for the decision of the referee is contained in the first article of the protocol of May 24, 1888, and is in the following words:

It having been claimed on the part of the United States that the imprisonment of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, in Hayti, was in derogation of the rights to which he was entitled as a citizen of the United States under the treaties between the United States and Hayti, which the Government of the latter country denies, it is agreed that the questions raised in the correspondence between the two Governments in regard to the imprisonment of the said Van Bokkelen shall be referred to the decision of a person to be agreed upon, etc. (English text, article I).

Comme il a été soutenu de la part des tats-Unis que l'emprisonnement de Etats-Unis que l'emprisonnement de Charles Adrain Van Bokkelen, citoyen des États-Unis, en Haïti, a eu lieu en dérogation des droits qui lui appartenaient comme citoyen des États-Unis, d'après les traités entre les États-Unis et Haïti, ce qui nie le Gouvernement du dernier Etat, il est convenu que les questions soulevées dans la correspondance entre les deux Gouvernements au sujet de l'emprisonnement du dit Van Bokkelen, seront référees à la décision d'une personne qui sera désignee, etc. (French text, article I).

It appears clearly from the language of article 1, that the subjectmatter of this arbitration is the imprisonment in Hayti of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, by the authorities of Payti.

The contention of the complainant Government is that said imprisonment was in derogation of Van Bokkelen's rights as a citizen of the United States under the treaties, and the answer of the defendant Govнауті. 1013

ernment, while admitting the American citizenship and the fact of imprisonment of Van Bokkelen by the authorities of Hayti, denies that his imprisonment was in derogation of treaty rights. The contention of the complainant Government is based upon the language of articles 6 and 9 of the treaty between the United States and Hayti, concluded

November 3, 1864.

The defendant Government does not deny the existence of the treaty or the guaranty of the rights and privileges which it solemnly announces. But the substance of the contention on the part of the defendant Government is that this right or privilege of free access to the tribunals of justice in Hayti is defeated and nullified by the language and force of article 794, Civil Gode of Procedure, and article 569, section 2, Code of Commerce. This contention has been sustained by the courts of first and last resort of Hayti, and has been proclaimed by the Executive of Hayti.* Under this decision of the courts and executive of Hayti, Van Bokkelen was imprisoned in the common jail for nearly fifteen months.

Counsel on behalf of defendant Government submit various propositions of fact and law, from which they proceed to argue, which are founded upon or connected with the preliminary proceedings and pleadings in the courts of Hayti anterior to the judgment and decrees of the Haytian courts. These propositions refer to a multitude of defenses, nearly all of which were regularly interposed in defense in the court of the first instance and the court of last resort. But all these several defenses have been withdrawn from the referee as a result of the action of the courts of Hayti, resting their decisions upon a single specific ground (which has been accepted by the contracting parties as the sole question now at issue), and which has been submitted to the decision of the referee. (Protocol, May 24, 1888.)

In this view of the case the referee is not at liberty to go behind the situation and enter upon an original inquiry as to whether the schedule (bilan) was regularly prepared and submitted; whether the circumstances of the case indicated fraud on Van Bokkelen's part; whether a Haytian citizen, under similar circumstances, would have been discharged from imprisonment upon making a judicial assignment, etc. And if, at any time, I shall incidentally advert to such matters, it will be because it seemed unavoidable in the particular connection in which it occurs.

I proceed now to consider various contentions of counsel for the defendant Government.

The first brief, which is entitled a "brief on behalf of the defendant Government in support of demurrer," insists:

1. That the language employed by Van Bokkelen in the proceedings before the tribunals at Port au Prince in April, 1884, in which he describes himself as an American citizen by birth, "residing at Port au Prince and domiciled at New York, United States of America," "defines exactly the international status of claimant." In answer to this suggestion it may be admitted that the general proposition is substantially correct. It is taken to mean that Van Bokkelen was a citizen of the United States at the time of the occurrence out of which his claim against Hayti arose; but it is not understood that Van Bokkelen's description of himself as "residing at Port au Prince and domiciled at New York," has any other or further significance than to place him within the guaranties of protection of articles 6 and 9 of the treaty of

November 3, 1864. It is to be observed, however, that "the international status of claimant" must be determined not by description, but by the facts of his case. As a matter of fact, the American citizenship of Van Bokkelen has never been questioned.

2. The contention of counsel for defendant Government that Van Bokkelen, during the years 1882 and 1883, was a merchant doing broker age business at Port au Prince may be conceded. And the recital of the details of the litigation in preliminary suits between Van Bokkelen and his various creditors may be accepted as correct without having any controlling influence upon the determination of the claim now submitted to the referee.*

3. Counsel for the defendant Government argue "that only one ground of error was assigned and pressed" by Van Bokkelen on his appeal upon the judgment of the civil court to the court of cassation, while the judgment of the lower court disclosed the fact that "at least twelve questions of law or fact were raised by the various pleadings of the parties." And counsel say that Van Bokkelen "sought to reverse the said judgment upon one sole ground, namely, that article 794 of the Code of Civil Procedure and article 569 of the Code of Commerce excluded aliens from the operation of the laws regulating the cessio bonorum, and that said articles were contrary to articles 6 and 9 of the treaty between the United States and Hayti.";

In answer to this suggestion, it seems only necessary to say that the court of first instance and the court of last resort based their final decision on the single ground stated by them.

It may be added that by the very language of the protocol, the single ground upon which Van Bokkelen "assigned and pressed" his appeal to the court of cassation has been adopted as the very question constituting the subject-matter of this arbitration. In this view the anterior and intermediary proceedings, whether by way of diplomatic intervention, or as the result of the various procedures of the local courts of Hayti, can not be held to have any controlling influence so far as the result of the present arbitration is concerned.

In a word, the protocol, which must be the guide and grant of juris. diction for the referee, crystallizes and formulates the substantial grounds of past discussion and controversy in a single, definite issue, and furnishes the rule of decision. The issue presented by the protocol is whether the acts of the authorities of Hayti in respect to Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, were in derogation of his rights as such citizen, and the rule furnished for the decision of the question raised by the issue are the treaties between Hayti and the United States.

4. The contention of counsel for defendant Government is that "full faith and credit must be given to the tribunals of Port au Prince." ||

In answer to this point reference is made to what has just been said in reply to the first point. It may be added that the ground of complaint made by the complainant Government is that the judgment of the Haytian courts is in contravention of treaty stipulation, which the defendant Government denies. And to decide this very issue, the question has been, by consent of the contracting parties, referred to international arbitration.

^{*} First brief of council for defendant Government, pages 4, 5, and 6. † First brief of council for defendant Government, pages 6 and 7.

1015 HAYTI.

The position of the defendant Government as to this point would, if admitted, preclude any examination or decision by the referee; and would result in making the referee simply the register or recorder of the acts and decrees of the local courts of Hayti. This may not be, for the reason that the Protocol imposes upon the referee the decision of the question raised in the correspondence* and found in the record. For a rule and guide for his decision, he is referred to the treaties between Hayti and the United States. And for the interpretation of treaty language and intention, whenever controversy arises, reference must be had to the law of nations and to international jurisprudence. It is a general maxim, when it is a question of international controversy, that neither of the contracting parties has a right to interpret a treaty according to its own fancy.

5. Another argument of counsel for defendant Government is, that a citizen of Hayti, who intends to avail himself of the benefit of judicial assignment (cession de biens), must establish affirmatively that he has been unfortunate and that he has acted in good faith. This point is elaborated with much detail, both in the brief accompanying the note of the Haytian Minister, addressed to the Secretary of State of the United States, August 15, 1887, as well as in the brief now under consideration. The answer to this proposition and argument is that all this may be conceded without its having any influence upon the present controversy, and for this reason: The acts of the judicial tribunals and of the executive of Hayti, of which the complainant Government complains, are rested upon different and independent grounds. grounds are that Van Bokkelen was not permitted free access to the tribunals of Hayti on the same terms as citizens of Hayti. And as has been before stated, the referee is confined to the decision of the single specific question presented by the terms of the Protocol.

6. The further contention of counsel for the defendant Government § is that the jurisprudence of France, Belgium, and Hayti has constantly "maintained a distinction as between aliens and citizens, and have held that aliens have enjoyed natural rights, but that they were excluded from civil rights." The answer to this proposition is, that if any such distinction between what are here styled "natural" rights and "civil" rights existed in Hayti, they were abolished in respect to citizens of the United States commorant in Hayti at the time of the occurrences herein complained of, by virtue of articles 6 and 9 of the Treaty of November 3, 1864. It is not, therefore, necessary to enter into any consideration as to the nice distinction between natural, civil, and political rights. These terms, however, have a well understood meaning in the law of nations and in modern international jurisprudence. In addition to protection to life, liberty, and property, the class which exercises political rights in a community participates in the governing power either by themselves or representatives. The class which enjoys civil rights is equally entitled to protection to life, liberty, and property; but the individuals composing it can not exercise political rights under any claim founded simply upon possession of civil rights. But the record and correspondence clearly show that the extent of Van Bokkelen's claim was a demand, formally and regularly submitted to the tribunals and to the executive power of Hayti, that he might be admitted to the enjoyment of those strictly civil rights guarantied to him by the Treaty of November 3, 1864. And it would appear that even in Hayti the exercise of "civil" rights is independent of the exercise of "political" rights; and that the capacity of a citizen resides in the combination of civil and political rights.*

7. The counsel for defendant Government submit that, "under the civil law nothing short of a clear, positive treaty stipulation can enable an alien to claim the exercise of civil rights." All this may be admitted, and yet the concession would not avail the defendant Government upon the case under consideration, and for the following reasons:

(a) It is here a question of international and not civil law.

(b) And a "clear, positive treaty stipulation" does by express Ianguage enable an alien, if he be a citizen of the United States and within the jurisdiction of Hayti, to claim the exercise of civil rights.†

8. Counsel for defendant Government make a point that at one time Van Bokkelen described himself as "domiciled in New York." It can not be perceived how that fact, although it should be conceded—which it is not—could be held to except him from the guaranties contained in the treaty. The American citizenship of Van Bokkelen being conceded by the terms of the Protocol, the question of domicile cuts no figure in the case.

9. Counsel for defendant Government insist that the true meaning of the second section of article 6 of the Treaty of November 3, 1864, is disclosed by "careful examination of article 794 of the Civil Code of Procedure and article 569, section 2, of the Code of Commerce."

Counsel say that the second section of article 6 of the treaty is simply intended to secure to Americans, against any possible repeal, the rights guarantied them by said articles of the codes, and the construction given them by the Haytian courts.§ The answer to this suggestion is obvious. It is negatived by the very language of article 1 of the Protocol of May 24, 1888. And the guaranty of enjoyment of civil rights (i. e., the admission to the tribunals of justice) by citizens of the United States resident or domiciled in Hayti on the same terms with native citizens was not limited to time, but was to avail them during the existence and operation of the treaty.

By provisions of article 42, Treaty of November 3, 1864, the treaty was to "remain in force for the term of eight years, dating from the exchange of ratifications; and if one year before the expiration of that period neither of the contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, it shall continue in force, from year to year, until one year after an official notification to terminate the same, as aforesaid." It is not denied that this treaty is still in force.

Counsel for the defendant Government seek to restrain and confine the treaty guaranty of "free access to the tribunals of justice" to very narrow limits; and it is insisted that this clause could work no change in the laws of Hayti, either general or special; and it is said that "the meaning of the words free access, used in the treaty," constituted a guaranty of free access to courts "upon the same terms as the civil law and a constant practice provided for them." || But the answer and denial to that proposition is contained in the language of the treaty itself, which provides the conditions, namely, "on the same terms which are granted by the laws and usage of the country to native citizens." And the connection in which this language occurs makes the inference irresistible that it included all the steps and processes of the judical tribunals of either of the contracting parties.

10. Counsel for defendant Government lay great stress upon the declaration that "American citizens sojourning, residing, or trading in Hayti," must be held to conform to the municipal laws of Hayti.* There can be no question but that such an obligation was imposed upon all citizens of the United States in Hayti. But, in this case, there is no complaint that Van Bokkelen, in respect to this matter, did not yield obedience to the municipal laws in operation in Hayti, except as they were modified or repealed by treaty stipulations. And the converse of the proposition is equally true, namely, that American citizens sojourning, residing, or trading in Hayti are under the protection of public law, and the treaty stipulations to which Hayti and the United States are the contracting parties.

11. Counsel for defendant Government devote much space to the consideration of the nature and character of the proceeding known as judicial cessio bonorum. † And it is submitted "that the application made to the court, to be admitted to the benefit of cession de biens can not be regarded in the light of a suit to enforce a right." To this it may be replied that no such contention is presented in this controversy. In the view of the referee, the judicial cessio bonorum does not appear to be in the nature of an independent suit. On the contrary, it is, as I shall further on indicate, a dependent process or step in the ordinary procedure.

12. It is further submitted on behalf of defendant Government, that at the utmost, "argument that the second section of article 6 of the treaty has repealed the provisions of civil law discriminating against aliens in the matter of judicial cession de biens, rests upon a repeal by implication of the aforestated articles of the code of civil procedure and of the code of commerce." ‡

It may be conceded that the cases agree in saying that repeals by implication are not favored. But the very authorities cited by counsel hold that in case of positive repugnancy between the provisions of new laws and those of the old, the former operate to repeal the latter.§

In the case under consideration, the provisions of the municipal codes of Hayti, or rather the interpretation sought to be put upon them by counsel for defendant Government, are absolutely repugnant to the stipulations in the treaty of a later date.

13. It is further contended that if the subdivision of paragraph 2 of article 6 implies the repeal of articles 794 and 569 of the code of civil procedure and the code of commerce, "it would just as well mean that the fundamental distinction underlying the whole system of civil law, as it exists in France or Hayti, has been repealed by implication, and that at best a few obscure words, which referred exclusively to remedies and not to rights, inserted in the treaty stipulation, operate as a repeal of important parts of the whole municipal legislation of Hayti."||

It is not perceived that such a result would follow, and it is not understood that the contention of complainant Government extends to make any such claim or demand that would result in revolutionizing the judicial system of Hayti. On the contrary, as has been indicated, the whole scope and effect of the guaranty clauses in articles 6 and 9 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, stipulating for "free access to the tribunals of justice" of the respective states, is to place the citizens of Hayti and the citizens of the United States, as to the administration of justice, upon the same footing. It is not clear what force there is in the suggestion that the guaranties in the treaty stipulations must be confined to "remedies" and not to "rights." For, whether free access to the tribunals of a country for the purpose of prosecuting or defending a suit be described as a remedy or as a right, is unimportant. It is in this relation a matter of description rather than of substance. It is the proceeding with which we are concerned, and not the name of it. The right or privilege to make a judicial assignment, under appropriate circumstances, involves the application of a remedy recognized by the law of

Hayti.

"Remedies," says Mr. Justice Story, "are part of the consequences of contracts." It is laid down by the same author as a general rule, "that all foreigners, sui juris, and not otherwise specially disabled by the law of the place where the suit is brought, may there maintain suits. to vindicate their rights and redress their wrongs." † It is true, that until the treaty of November 3, 1864, went into operation, citizens of the United States, in common with other aliens, were excluded by the letter of the municipal law from the benefits of the judicial assignment. But from the date of the exchange of ratifications of that treaty, the benefit of the right or the remedy of judicial assignment was accorded to citizens of the United States. "Free access to the tribunals of justice, etc.," means a right to stand in court, either voluntarily as plaintiff or involuntarily as defendant; and after appearance, the suitors or parties litigant must have a right to invoke all the usual, ordinary, and necessary processes of the tribunal, whether it be for purposes of prosecution or by way of defense. In the case under consideration Van Bokkelen was arraigned before the local courts of Hayti, in some of the suits at least, in invitum; and as an incident of compulsory process he was imprisoned. Being within the jurisdiction and power of the Haytian court, the treaty stipulations were intended to secure to him, a citizen of the United States, the right to avail himself of all the instrumentalities and processes of the tribunals of justice.

14. It is further contended on behalf of defendant Government that article 9, treaty November 3, 1864, must be construed in the light of the civil law, and certain provisions of the Haytian civil code in regard to the transmission of property.‡

But the protocol makes the treaties between the United States and Hayti the sources of reference for the guidance of the referee. And consequently the obligations and covenants of a reciprocal character, which are contained in these treaties, constitute the supreme law as between the complainant and defendant Governments.§ In the view which the referee has taken of the question submitted to him, the stipulations and guaranties contained in article 6 of the treaty are in themselves sufficient to justify the claim of Van Bokkelen to stand in justice in the courts of Hayti on the same terms with native citizens. However, it does not seem to the referee that the cumulative force of the stipulations in article 9 in respect to the transmission of property can be lessened by the argument of the defendant Government insisting upon a restrictive interpretation of the latter article. The construction sought to be put upon article 9 is cramped, narrow, and forced.

^{*} Conflict of Laws, section 337. † Conflict of Laws, section 565.

[‡] Brief of counsel for defendant Government, pages 31-33. § Protocol, article 1.

15. It is insisted on behalf of defendant Government that "the whole scope and purpose of the treaty was plainly not to abrogate any law, but to recognize all existing laws in either country and subject the temporary resident to the operation and protection of these laws."*

The answers to this proposition are obvious. The temporary resident was already subject to the operation and the protection of the laws of the respective countries; but this protection was unequal. In the United States the Haytian citizen could not, in the absence of contumacious fraud, be denied the privilege of making a judicial assignment, or what was equivalent to it, for the benefit of his creditors; nor could he be imprisoned, under the circumstances in which Van Bokkelen was held in bodily confinement. In Hayti, on the contrary, prior to the treaty of November 3, 1864, a citizen of the United States was liable, by the letter of the Haytian statutes, to be summarily arrested and imprisoned for an indefinite period of time, and was excluded from the benefit of judi-It was to remedy this and other inequalities that arcial assignment. ticles 6 and 9 were incorporated into the treaty. And their immediate effect and purpose was to relieve the citizens of either of the contracting parties from odious and harsh discrimination of the local laws and to place them on the same footing. If the contention of the defendant Government should be admitted, it would render null and void the stipulations of articles 6 and 9. The object of the treaty, as expressed in its opening paragraph, is "to make lasting and firm the friendship and good understanding which happily prevail between both nations, and to place their commercial relations upon the most liberal basis." The articles defining the reciprocal rights of citizens of each of the two nations residing and doing business in the territory of the other will be hereafter noticed.

16. In regard to the suggestion on behalf of defendant Government, charging Van Bokkelen with falsehood and fraud, because his representations in regard to his financial condition were different at different times, it may be said that there is no proof in the record that Van Bokkelen was endeavoring, or had ever attempted, to keep back or conceal anything or reserve any benefit for himself. And the different estimates which he is charged with having made at different times may be easily reconciled with his changed status and the condition in which he found But whatever presumptions may have availed against Van Bokkelen during the preliminary proceedings in the court of first instance, they may not, in the absence of positive proof, have any force or weight in the consideration of the question now under arbitration. The courts of Hayti and the executive have nowhere rested their action denying to Van Bokkelen the right to make a judicial assignment upon any charge or suggestion of fraud or informality in these proceedings. And the starting point for the decision under this arbitration must be the action of the courts and the executive of Hayti.

17. Counsel for the defendant Government say the "second section, article 6, opens the courts of the country to the alien upon the same terms as they are opened to native citizens; but it does not change or propose to change any rights pertaining to American citizens." And it is insisted that the repeated references to the laws and usages of the country must be taken to mean that American citizens possess no rights in Hayti except those which are specified in the municipal statutes. the contention then is, that the rule of interpretation which is to be applied in this case is that laid down by M. Pradier Fodéré:†

treaties and conventions must be construed in the light which agrees with public order established among the contracting nations, and more particularly with their principles of public law and with the organization of their jurisdiction; in case of doubt, and unless there are irrecusable proofs, the construction which is in harmony with the civil and public laws of France must prevail over that which would create a privileged and exceptional right."

It is not perceived how the contention can be sustained which insists that the treaty does not change or propose to change any rights pertaining to American citizens, when, in view of the language of the treaty, its stipulations provide for the guaranty and protection and vindication of the rights of the citizens of the contracting parties on the same terms. The position of defendant Government does not receive any support from the citation from M. Pradier Fodéré, for the reason that the author is referring to the "public order" and the "civil and public laws," and not to special or private rights and remedies.

M. Pradier Fodéré further on says:

Il est donc manifeste qu' aucune des nations n'a le droit d' interpréter à son gré les conditions obscures du contrat, ou d'en déléguer l'examen à ses tribunaux, pas plus qu'il n' est loisible à la partie qui a consenti une convention synallagmatique d' interpréter elle-meme, ou de faire interpréter par un mandataire à son choix, les clauses obscures ou ambigues que contiendrait cette convention.*

18. It is further insisted that it is "upon the claimant to establish as an affirmative proposition that the treaty of 1864 between the United States and Hayti has repealed the provisions of articles 794 of the Code of Civil Procedure and 569 of the Code of Commerce." This contention has been considered elsewhere in this opinion at some length.

Three cases decided by the court of cassation in France, at long intervals of time, are principally relied upon by counsel for defendant Government in support of the contention that articles 6 and 9 of the treaty may not be interpreted to abrogate or repeal the municipal statutes in repugnance or conflict therewith. The first and most important is the case of Napier and others vs. The Duke of Richmond, † which is cited in support of the contention that "diplomatic treaties must be construed in the light where they are in harmony with public and civil law in use among the contracting nations." This decision, which was rendered on the 24th of June, 1839, holds that treaties between nations are not of the character of simple administrative and executive acts, but that they possess the character of laws; that the courts are competent to interpret treaties between nations on the occasion of private (individual) contests which refer to the particular treaties; that when a treaty has stipulated for the giving up to an alien of immovable property located in France and subject to its authority, the courts are competent to decide whether this giving up, after (agreeably to) the treaty, should operate to the benefit of a single alien heir who is mentioned in it, or of all the heirs, in the proportion of their hereditary rights and interests; that in the interpretation of diplomatic treaties the judges should prefer an interpretation which agrees with the common law and the public law of France to that interpretation which conflicts with these principles; that, in particular, the treaty of 30th of May, 1814, which, in one of its additional articles, decides first, that the withdrawal of the sequestration or embargo levied by the decree of Berlin of the 21st of November, 1806, upon the d'Aubigny tract of land belonging to the Third Duke of Richmond; second, that the restitution to the nephew of the latter should not be considered as a grant of said land in favor of this one alone conformably to the law of primogeniture recognized in England, and to the exclusion of all others having equal right, title, or interest, but this grant must be executed with reference to the succession of the Third Duke of Richmond, so that this tract of land should be divided among all those entitled in succession in accordance with the rule established by the Civil Code under the title "Successions."

It is to be observed in the first place of this decision, that the subject-matter was real (immovable) property within the territory and jurisdiction of France, and the court rendering the decision was a court of France. The rule is familiar, that the law which governs as to real (immovable) property is lex rei sitae;* and under application of this rule the French court, in a controversy between conflicting individual interests, used the language which occurs in this decision, and which has been copied by the Civil Court of Port au Prince as applicable to the question in controversy in Van Bokkelen's case.

As the civil court of Port au Prince, and the court of cassation of Hayti, in stating the rule which must govern in the interpretation of treaty language, have quoted and relied upon isolated expressions of the court of cassation of France in pronouncing judgment in Napier vs. Duke of Richmond, it will be necessary to consider the latter case with some particularity.

The subject-matter in Napier vs. Richmond was a tract of land described as the d'Aubigny tract, situated in the jurisdiction of France. Like many other estates belonging to the Crown of France it had been granted to a foreign family. This grant reached back to the year 1422, having been made by Charles VII in favor of one of the Stuarts of Scotland, who had rendered signal service to France in her wars with In the year 1673 this grant was renewed by Louis XIV in favor of the Duchess of Portsmouth, a French lady, in the language of the grant, to be enjoyed by said duchess, and after her decease, by such one of the natural sons of King of Great Britain whom he might designate, and the male descendants in direct line of this natural son. This grant, which evidently, says the court of cassation of France, had for its object to win over Charles II to the interests of Louis XIV, does not, however, present in appearance any political character. Charles II designated as the successor of the Duchess of Portsmouth a natural son whom he had by her, named Charles Lennox, who took the title of First Duke of Richmond.

He enjoyed until his death possession of the d'Aubigny tract, and transmitted it successively to his eldest son and to the eldest of his grandsons, second and third dukes of Richmond. This property underwent all of the vicissitudes of the French wars and revolutions. Confiscated during one of the said wars of succession it was restored by the treaty of Utrecht; confiscated again in 1792, during the wars of the revolutions, it was restored at the peace of Amiens. Finally, having been confiscated for the third time in 1806, it was again restored by the treaties of 1814 and 1815. When, by the decree of Berlin of 21st of November, 1806, the French Government, availing itself of reprisals against England, declared as good prize all the properties belonging to Englishmen in France, the d'Aubigny tract was occupied by Charles Lennox, third duke of Richmond, who had taken possession in 1750. This duke died on the 19th of December, 1806, without issue, leaving four sisters and the children of a full brother, who died before him, one of whom took the title of the fourth duke of Richmond, who was the father of the defendant in this case. This condition of things continued until the treaty of peace of the 30th of May, 1814, the fourth article of which stipulated in general terms for the withdrawal of confiscations of the war. However, a secret clause of this treaty added:

The confiscation of the Duchy of d'Aubigny and the property which belongs to it will be raised, and the Duke of Richmond placed in possession of the property such as it is now.

A royal ordinance of the 8th of July, 1814, the terms of which reproduced textually those of the secret clause, and an order of the prefect of Cher, of the 3d of August following, were forwarded to the fourth duke of Richmond, who was then in France at the head of a division of the English army, putting him in possession of the d'Aubigny tract. His possession was confirmed by a proces verbal of the 30th of November, The natural heirs of the third Duke of Richmond, who did not live in France, being advised later of their rights, addressed themselves in 1830 to the French courts to demand from the fifth Duke of Richmond, who had succeeded his father in 1819, a division of the d'Aubigny tract, as belonging to the succession of the third duke. To this demand was opposed notably the provision of the secret clause of the treaty of 1814, insisting that it contained a special derogation from article 4 of this treaty which prescribed in a general way the raising of the confiscations of the war. The heirs replied that this article 4 and the secret clause should be interpreted one by the other; that it was proper to reconcile their provisions; that the second was only a confirmation of the first, and that it was not reasonable to regard this secret clause as a private and exclusive grant for the benefit of the feudal heir of the third duke. In this condition of the respective claims of the several parties the tribunal of Sancerre having had the controversy submitted to it rendered judgment on the 9th of July, 1834, which decreed the partition of the d'Aubigny tract.

Among other reasons assigned for this judgment were the following:

As to the second question raised in the argument, that by the literal text the previously dated treaty raised the confiscation affixed to the d'Aubigny tract, and stipulated for the restoration of the property to the Duke of Richmond; that although by this denominative expression could not be understood the third duke, against whom the confiscation had been affixed, since the plenipotentiaries must have known that this duke, their colleague in the cabinet and in the House of Lords in England, had been dead nearly eight years, it must be understood that the grant was in fact to his heirs, according to this maxim, Hæres substinet personam defuncti; that, moreover, if the treaty did not say that in default of the third duke, his representatives should be called to receive the benefit, it was because in a previous article it was stated in a general and absolute manner that the principle of the restoration was in favor of the former proprietors or their heirs, and that this general provision applied to the Duchy of d'Aubigny neither more nor less than to the other cases of restoration; that the confiscation of the d'Aubigny tract, by virtue of the decree of Berlin of 21st of November, 1806, must be considered as a spoliation, and that the treaty of Paris of 1814 ber, 1800, must be considered as a sponanion, and that the blook belowing a right, stipulated for the restoration of this tract to the proprietor or to those having a right, but that it was not possible to regard the terms of this treaty as expressed as a personal statute and as a reward to the fourth Duke of Richmond; that the restoration of the property would not have been complete if it did not result to the benefit of those having a right or claim to it; that the treaty of 1814, understood in such a restricted sense, would not have been a restoration—a reparation—but the maintenance and continuation of an unjust spoliation, which, however, the high contracting parties declared that they wished to put an end to after the military events which had provoked them; that whereas the succession of the third Duke of Richmond was opened 19th of December, 1806, but at that time the law of the 25th of October, 1792, had abolished all kinds of substitution, and that this succession, so far as property situated in France was concerned, was governed by French laws, agreeably to article 3 of the civil code; and that it devolved or descended in five parts to the brothers and sisters of the deceased or to their representatives, in accordance with the terms of article 750, civil code; that in the treaty of the 30th of May, 1814, there is no exначті. 1023

pression that leads to the belief that there was any abrogation of a legislation which had become fixed in our customs or any failure or omission of national dignity which would have resulted in subjecting property situated on the soil of France to the rules of English legislation.

The above decree or judgment of the tribunal of Sancerre was brought by the Duke of Richmond on appeal to the royal court of Bourges, which rendered its decision on the 11th of March, 1835, reversing the judgment of the tribunal of Sancerre. From this decision an appeal was taken by the heirs of the fourth Duke of Richmond to the court of cassation, the eminent lawyer, M. Dupin, then attorney general for the Government, made an elaborate argument in support of the position of the heirs of the fourth Duke of Richmond and in defense of the decree of the tribunal of Sancerre.

The court of cassation of France reversed the decision of the court of Bourges, sustaining in substance the decree of the tribunal of Sancerre, as well as the main argument of the attorney-general. In announcing its judgment the court of cassation, among other propositions, held:

On the first branch of the argument: Whereas the defendant having been summoned to make partition of the d'Aubigny tract and to restore the fruits and allowances received by him, as well as by the fourth Duke of Richmond, has opposed, as the principal exception or objection, a secret clause in the treaty of the 30th of May, 1814, to this effect: "The confiscation affixed to the Duchy of d'Aubigny and on the property which belongs to it shall be raised, and the Duke of Richmond shall be placed in possession of the property such as it is presently;" that the defendant has drawn from this clause the consequence that he had been invested with the exclusive property of this immovable by the diplomatic convention of 1814, and the complainants having disputed this interpretation, the first question to decide in the case is that relative to the true sense and effect of the stipulation above cited; whereas the tribunals having jurisdiction of the action were necessarily competent judges of the exception or objection, since they were not prohibited by any provision of law; that the defendant without avail invokes the principle which forbids the judicial authority to interpret administrative acts; that the treaties between nations are not simple administrative and executive acts; that they possess the character of law and can not be applied and interpreted but in the forms and by the authorities intrusted with applying all the laws within their jurisdiction whenever disputes which give rise to applying an the laws within their jurisdiction whenever disputes which give is to this interpretation have private interests for their object; that the action of complainants, founded upon their character as heirs, raised the questions of private succession and of property, which is allotted by the law to the judicial power; whereas the decrees attacked instead of pronouncing judgment on the questions determining the true sense of this clause, which was never published nor inserted in the Bulletin des Lois, declared that the royal court had not the right to seek out the sense of the treaty, and that the complainants should go before the competent authority who executed this act before availing themselves of their character, pretended or real, as heirs in equal proportion of the third Duke of Richmond; that it resulted from these reasons that the royal court refused to pronounce judgment as well on the principal action and as to the title of the heirs, which was the main question, as also on the exception and the meaning of the clause; that it referred all the points of which it was regularly seized to another authority, which it did not indicate; that the com-plainants would be deprived by this dismissal of all means of obtaining a legal decision upon their demand; whereas the royal ordinance of the 8th of July, 1814, and the prefect's decree of the 3d of August following are only acts in execution of the treaty and of the obligations which article 4 of the additional clauses imposed upon each of the contracting powers to raise several confiscations which had been affixed; that moreover these acts, which did not add anything to the treaty, and with which they are identified, can not be considered as acts belonging to the exercise of the administrative power, cognizance of which was forbidden to the tribunals.

As to the second branch of the argument: Whereas the decrees denounced, after

As to the second branch of the argument: Whereas the decrees denounced, after having in their reasons declared the incompetency of the tribunals and referred to another authority, had meanwhile decided that the complainants could not sustain their action, for the reason that the treaty invested the defendant with the property of the immovable claimed by them; that the reasons for these decrees and their provisions imply a contradiction; that they have, in addition, ignored: First, the text of the laws which govern immovables situated in France and their transmission to the heirs; second, the true meaning of the treaty and of the secret clause; third, the rules established by the Civil Code for the interpretation of conventions; finally, the d'Aubigny tract, being situated in France, was governed, as to the succession of the Third Duke of Richmond, by the law of France; that substitutions were abolished and the privilege of the oldest male was suppressed, and that the heirs of this duke were entitled to receive this property in equal portions, and that they were invested were entitled to receive this property in equal portions, and that they were invested with it by the mere operation of law; that the defendant can not invoke the law of nations to claim the grant of an exclusive right; that the transmission of property by way of succession is governed by the civil law of each State; whereas, if the text of this stipulation left any doubt of its true meaning, it would be disposed of by the rules of law in reference to the interpretation of conventions; that the first is to seek out the common or ordinary intention of the contracting parties, rather than to stop at the literal meaning of the terms; that it is impossible to suppose that the intention of the plenipotentiaries was to regulate the law of succession between cookeirs: tion of the plenipotentiaries was to regulate the law of succession between co-heirs; to grant to one the whole property in the estate or land to the exclusion of the others, without any indemnity whatever to these latter; that this grant to the Fourth Duke of Richmond alone would have been in derogation of French legislation, and would have created in France a property or estate governed by privileged and exceptional law; that such an intention, which would be in opposition to all the provisions of the treaty, can not be admitted without unexceptionable proofs; that it would have been expressed in positive terms if it had existed; that all the clauses should be interpreted one by the other so as to give to each the meaning which results from the whole text, and the secret clause should be understood in the sense of a restoration to the one who was entitled, or to his heirs, in accordance with the spirit of the treaty; that diplomatic treaties should be understood in the sense which places them in accord with the civil and public law recognized by the contracting parties; that the interpretation given to the clause by the decrees which are attacked put them in opposition to all the laws, the civil as well as the public law, of France. That in not designating by name which Duke of Richmond should be placed in possession, the clause could only have had in view the one who was dispossessed, or his representatives; that in admitting the fourth duke to restoration it was for the benefit of his co-heirs as well as for himself. It results from the considerations which precede, that the decrees which are attacked for refusing to take into consideration the rights of the parties in accordance with the interpretation of diplomatic conventions, and in deciding that the apparent text of these conventions had dispossessed the heirs of the Third Duke of Richmond of their rights to the d'Aubigny tract, have violated and misapplied the laws above cited.

It seems to the referee that the above exposition of facts and of law which were involved in the case of Napier vs. The Duke of Richmond, and the decision of the court of cassation of France thereon, make it clear that the case does not justify the use or application which the Haytian courts have attempted to make of it by incorporating in their judgments isolated expressions, which are withdrawn from the context in the decision of the former case. The court of cassation of France simply decided that they would not put such a construction upon treaty language as would result in the abrogation of the law of descent of France in respect to real (immovable) property; that as to such property the lex rei sitæ governed; and that it was impossible to suppose that the intention of the plenipotentiaries was to abrogate the laws of descent of France in this respect, and that such an intention would be in conflict with all the provisions of the treaty.

In the view taken of that case there does not seem to be room for complaint or criticism. And there is no evidence that the action of the Government of France, as expressed in the decree of its supreme court, has been ever excepted or objected to by Great Britain. If, however, Great Britain had considered that as a consequence of this decree injustice had been done to one of her citizens, or a treaty stipulation had been violated by France, she would, no doubt, have made it the subject of international settlement.

The second case cited by counsel for defendant government in this connection is Challier vs. Ovel, which was decided by the court of cassation of France on the 17th of March, 1830.* The extent to which the court went was to hold that, although article 22 of the treaty of the 24th of March, 1760, between France and Sardinia,* had abrogated a principle sanctioned by article 121, ordinance 1629, as also by articles 21–23 and 21–28 Civil Code and 646 Code of Procedure, it did not follow that the execution of these judgments rendered by the Sardinian tribunals should be decreed in France, when they were contrary to the maxims of the public law of France or to the public order of jurisdiction, and that in refusing to decree in France the execution of the judgment and decrees rendered in the cause by the Piedmontese tribunal, the decree attacked only conformed to the principles of the public law, and did not violate either the treaty of 1760 or any law.

Challier vs. Ovel was a case where a citizen of France, having been arraigned before one of the courts of Sardinia, demurred to the jurisdiction of that court, and claimed exemption from suit in the foreign jurisdiction, insisting that he could only be sued in the jurisdiction of his domicile, which was France. The Sardinian court, notwithstanding his plea, proceeded with the cause and rendered judgment against him. It was such a judgment against a citizen of France so obtained that the court of cassation of France declined to put into execution. This case has nothing in common with Van Bokkelen vs. Hayti.

The third case cited by counsel for defendant government in this connection is Alberto Balestrini vs. Aubert and others.† The conclusion reached was, that international treaties are not simple administrative acts; that they may be applied and even interpreted by judicial authority, when it is a question of convention having for their object individual interests.

The case of Balestrini vs. Aubert presented a controversy between contesting associates, one of whom had a concession under the provisions of a treaty which gave him a right to establish and operate a telegraph line under a new system of electric cable between France and the United States. The contest was as to the respective interests of these several associates, and the provisions of the grant or concession in the treaty came thus for consideration incidentally before the court. It was in such a case that the court of cassation of France held that the stipulations of a treaty could be applied and interpreted by judicial authority whenever it was a question of agreements or conventions having private or individual interests for their object. It must be perceived that there is no similarity between that case and the one under consideration.

The ratio decidendi in all these cases is very plain. It is this, that the judicial tribunals of a country, when called upon to decide controversies between individuals which grow out of or are dependent upon treaty stipulations, will not hesitate to construe the language of those treaties according to the rules of law which apply to all instruments. They will construe the provisions so as to give effect to rather than to defeat the intention of the contracting parties; and they will reconcile apparent conflicts of particular parts by reference to the context in which they occur and to the whole instrument. They will not impute to the plenipotentiaries in the negotiation of a treaty an intention which is in conflict with the fundamental law of the State. They will not lend their sanction to execute a treaty stipulation when it is in violation of the fundamental law of the jurisdiction; and they do this upon the ground that it is beyond the competency of the treaty making power to enter into stipulations which are in conflict with the public law or the public policy of the jurisdiction.

The treaty-making power is necessarily and obviously subordinate to the fundamental laws and constitution of the State, and it can not change the form of the government or annihilate its constitutional powers.*

This language has been used by distinguished American jurists in reference to the Government of the United States. It applies equally to the public policy and limitations of all constitutional states.

In every civilized state two divisions of law are recognized: First, the law which regulates the public order and right of nations, which is jus publicum; second, the law which determines the private rights of men, which is called jus civile.† The law of procedure (the adjective law) is distinguished from the fundamental law of a state, and includes remedial law, which is a law whereby a method is pointed out to recover a man's private rights or redress his private wrongs. And the instrument by which the individual vindicates his rights and remedies his wrongs is an action or suit at law. In this sense an action is not a right; but it is the means which the law affords for pursuing the right. "Actio non est, jus sed medium jus persequendi." §

"I consider," says Lord Bacon, "that it is a true and received division of law into jus publicum and jus privatum, the one being the sinews of property, and the other of government."|| Law defines the rights which it will aid, and specifies the way in which it will aid them. far as it defines, thereby creating, it is "substantive law." it provides a method of aiding and protecting, it is "adjective law" or procedure.¶

It would seem to be clear from the cases decided by the court of cassation of France, heretofore cited, that the decisions do not sustain the position taken by the Haytian courts and by the counsel for defendant Government. In the case under consideration Van Bokkelen petitioned the court for the purpose of availing himself of the law of procedure guarantied to him by the treaty. The pretension that articles 6 and 9 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, contained any stipulation that was violative of the fundamental law of Hayti is without any foundation.

The article (1054, civil code of Hayti) which Van Bokkelen invoked for his protection belongs to the law of procedure or the adjective law And the article 794 Haytian code of civil procedure) and article 569 (Haytian code of commerce), which the Haytian authorities opposed in denying Van Bokkelen's petition, are also a part of the law of procedure or adjective law of Hayti. They do not form a part of the constitutional, fundamental, or national law of Hayti. And the attempt by the judicial and executive authorities of Hayti to characterize a simple judicial assignment as an institution of civil law, or an institution of civil right, in the sense intended, is a misuse of language and a misapplication of terms.

The counsel for defendant Government invite attention to "the leading English case on this subject," upon which they place some reliance. This was an action between private litigants upon several policies of in.

surance on a certain ship and cargo, upon which the defendant in error While on a trading voyage ship and cargo were had effected insurance. captured by a British squadron, and thus became a total loss to the owners and insurers. Demand was then made by the insured upon the insurer to make good his proportion of the loss so incurred. to do so, and when sued, set up the defense that the voyage on which ship and cargo were lost was illegal. On the trial before King's Bench and Exchequer Chamber it was admitted that the voyage was illegal and unless it was within the protection of certain articles of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States, concluded the 19th of No vember, 1794. Defendant insisted that the voyage was not within the letter of the treaty, and therefore it was illegal. But the Exchequer Chamber held that the voyage was within the spirit, though not the letter of the treaty; and, in deciding the case, used the language quoted in the argument for defendant Government.*

Chief Justice Eyre, in deciding the case, said:

There may be reason to apprehend that this treaty will open a door to many of our own people whom the policy of our laws has shut out from a direct trade to the East Indies. In truth, it can hardly be expected that the spirit of commerce too often found eluding laws made to keep it within bounds, that the lucri bonus odor should not embark British capital in this trade. This ought to have been foreseen, and therefore I conclude it was foreseen, and that it was found that the balance of advantage and disadvantage preponderated in favor of the treaty. If not, those who advised it will have to answer for it; responsibility is not with us. We are not even expounders of treaties. This treaty is brought under our consideration incidentally as an ingredient in a cause in judgment before us; we only say how it is to be understood between the parties to this record.

This we are bound to do; we have but one rule by which we are to govern ourselves. We are to construe this treaty as we would construe any other instrument, public or We are to collect from the nature of the subject, from the words and from the context, the true intent and meaning of the contracting parties, whether they are A and B, or happen to be two independent states. The judges who administer the municipal laws of one of those states would commit themselves upon very disadvantageous ground—ground which they could have no opportunity of examining—if they were to suffer collateral considerations to mix in their judgment on a case circumstanced as the present one is. * * * Whether the trade should have been conceded stanced as the present one is. under any qualifications or restrictions is one thing; it having been conceded, now to attempt to eramp it by narrow, rigorous, forced construction of the words of the treaty is another and a very different consideration. We can not suppose that an indirect advantage was intended to be reserved to the East India Company by so framing the treaty that the American trade might by construction be put under disadvantage, because this would be chicanery unworthy of the British Government and contrary to the character of its negotiations, which have been at all times distinguished by their good faith to a degree of candor which has been supposed sometimes to have exposed it to the hazard of being made the dupe of more refined politicians. The nature of the trade granted, in my opinion, fixes the construction of the grant. If it were necessary to go further, strong arguments may be drawn from the context of this article and the contrast, which the comparing it with the preceding article will produce.t

Far from advancing the argument of counsel for defendant Government, the conclusions and the reasoning of the Chief-Justice in Marryat vs. Wilson are strongly opposed to the contention of the defendant Government, and sustain the position of the complainant Government in this case. Marryat vs. Wilson is strong authority for the proposition that the municipal tribunals of a country may not nullify the purpose and effect of treaty language by imposing upon it a cramped, narrow, and forced construction. And it is to be observed that in the case before the Exchequer Chamber, the judgment of the court sustaining interpretation of treaty stipulations which would give effect to the spirit, if not to the letter of the treaty, was rendered in a case where the beneficiaries were aliens, that is, citizens of the United States; and in denial of defenses set up by British subjects before one of the superior courts of Great Britain.

It is to be noted that these several decisions of the highest courts of France and Great Britain, which are cited and relied upon by the defendant Government on this branch of the argument, are cases in which the conclusions of the courts were in support of the protective and private property rights of individuals. The result of all these decisions was to work out substantial justice between the parties. In the case under consideration, the result of the judgments of the Haytian courts and the action of the Executive of Hayti was to defeat the efforts of Van Bokkelen to protect himself from wrong and injustice, and to secure to himself rights plainly guarantied to him, in common with all other citizens of the United States, by the treaty.

Counsel for defendant Government cites a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States,* referred to as the head-money cases, to the effect that so far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation can become the subject of judicial cognizance in the United States, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal.

On this point there is not room for much controversy. But an act of the Congress of the United States in derogation of treaty rights has always been held to be a ground for diplomatic intervention. case under consideration, the converse of the proposition announced by the Supreme Court in the head money cases is presented. Here the collision or conflict is between provisions contained in prior municipal statutes of Hayti and stipulations of a treaty between the United States and Hayti of a subsequent date. The rule is universal that a prior statute is repealed by a subsequent statute which is absolutely repugnant; leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. The same principle applies when a municipal statute and a treaty stipulation is in competition. A treaty stipulation of a later date repeals a prior statute with whose provisions it is repugnant. And the reverse of the proposition is maintained by the Supreme Court of the United States.† In the head-money cases the Supreme Court of the United States laid down the following propositions:

A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it.

If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war. It is obvious that with all this the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress. But a treaty may also contain provisions which confer certain rights upon the citizens or subjects of one of the nations residing in the territorial limits of the other, which partake of the nature of municipal law, and which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country. An illustration of this character is found in treaties which regulate the mutual rights of citizens and subjects of the contracting nations in regard to rights of property by descent or inheritance, when the individuals concerned are aliens. The Constitution of the United States places such provisions as these in the same category as other laws of Congress by its declaration that "this Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." A treaty, then, is a law of the land as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined. And when such rights are of a nature to be enforced in a court of justice, that court resorts to the treaty for a rule of decision for the case before it, as it would to a statute.

It will be seen from the above review of the several arguments on behalf of defendant Government, that many of the propositions which are still strenuously urged in defense are addressed to the consideration and support of subsidiary and collateral issues which are, by the terms of the protocol, excluded from the consideration of the referee.

THE TREATY OF NOVEMBER 3, 1864.

It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine the provisions of the treaty upon which complainant Government relies in its intervention on behalf of Van Bokkelen, and to the application of which defendant Government objects.

Section 2, article 6, stipulates:

The citizens of the contracting parties shall have free access to the tribunals of justice, in all cases to which they may be a party, on the same terms which are granted by the laws and usages of the country to native citizens, etc.

Les citoyens des parties contractantes auront libre accès près les tribunaux de justice dans toutes les causes où ils seront intéressés, aux mêmes conditions que les lois et les usages du pays font aux nationaux, etc.

In view of the explicit language in both texts, it would seem clear that the guaranty to the citizens of contracting states of "free access to the tribunals of justice, in all cases to which they may be a party, on the same terms which are granted by the laws and usages of the country to native citizens," means that they shall be entitled to the exercise of all the processes of the courts of the respective countries, whether they concern rights or remedies. And the extent to which these processes of the courts may be invoked is expressed in language equally free from doubt: "On the same terms which are granted by the laws and usages of the country to native citizens." It is not denied that a citizen of Hayti in the situation which Van Bokkelen was, would have been entitled to release from imprisonment upon making a judicial assignment. Indeed, the language and reasoning of the Haytian courts and of the Executive of Hayti admit as much.

Article 9 stipulates:

The citizens of each of the high contracting parties within the jurisdiction of the other shall have power to dispose of their personal property by sale, donation, testament, or otherwise; and their personal representatives, being citizens of the other contracting party, shall succeed to their personal property, whether by testament or ab intestato. They may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, at their pleasure, and dispose of the same, paying such duty only as the citizens of the country wherein the said personal property is situated shall be subject to pay in like cases, etc.

Les citoyens de chacune des hautes parties contractantes auront, dans la juridiction de l'autre, la faculté de disposer de leurs biens mobiliers par vente, donation, testament, ou autrement; et leurs successeurs, citoyens de l'autre partie contractante, pourront hériter de leurs biens mobiliers soit par testament, soit ab-intestat. Ils pourront en prendre possession soit par eux-mêmes, soit par des tiers agissant pour eux, comme ils le voudront, et en disposer sans payer d'autres droits que ceux auxquels sont assujettis, dans les mêmes circonstances, les citoyens du pays, où sont situés les dits biens mobiliers, etc.

There would seem to be no ambiguity in the language of these articles; and the best way to construe them is to follow the words thereof.

But the civil court of Port au Prince, and the court of cassation affirming the decision of the civil court, denying Van Bokkelen's petition to execute a judicial assignment, decide that there is nothing in articles 6 or 9 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, which guaranties to Van Bokkelen, or any citizen of the United States, the right to release from imprisonment upon the execution of a judicial assignment conformably to the terms of the civil procedure of Hayti. The civil court decided, among other things, that the "reason which causes the exclusion of foreigners is that the benefit of an assignment has always been regarded as an institution of civil law which should benefit native citizens only;" and "it is impossible to suppose that it was the intention of the contracting plenipotentiaries to abrogate or modify, by article 9 or by article 6 of the treaty, as those articles are worded, article 794 of the civil code of procedure and article 569 of the code of commerce, which exclude a foreigner from the benefit of making an assignment;" and further, that "whereas, although the text of this stipulation (article 9), and even that of article 6, which grants to the citizens of the two contracting parties free access to the courts of justice, in all cases in which they shall be interested, on the same terms that are granted by the laws and usage of the country to native citizens, might leave some doubt with regard to their true meaning, it would be dispelled by the rules of law concerning the interpretation of conventions which are applicable to treaties;" and this court then proceeds as follows:

Whereas the first of these rules is to seek out the common intention of the contracting parties rather than to be guided by the literal meaning of the terms. *—[Translation.]

From this decision of the civil court of Port au Prince, rendered May 27, 1884, Van Bokkelen appealed to the court of cassation, which rendered its decision, affirming the decision of the civil court, on February 26, 1885, almost a year from the time Van Bokkelen was first imprisoned.

The court of cassation, affirming the judgment of the civil court, held:

Whereas the judicial assignment of property is an institution of civil right, the articles 769 (794) of the Code of Civil Procedure and 569 of the Code of Commerce, excepting foreigners from the benefit of this institution, since they do not exercise in Hayti all rights, they can only enjoy privileges derived from natural rights or of mankind, and not those which are derived from purely civil law.†—[Translation.]

If, as I shall hereafter endeavor to show, the judicial assignment (cession de biens) is simply a step in the procedure of the courts in bankruptcy proceedings, it is not perceived how the description of it "as an institution of the civil law" can have the effect of withdrawing it from the guaranty expressed in the treaty grant of "free access to the tribunals of justice," unless it was excepted in terms from the treaty stipulations.

Of the decree of the court of cassation, affirming the decision of the

In consequence thereof, Americans can not enjoy in Hayti such civil right, the enjoyment of which is attached exclusively to the quality of a Haytian. That in stipulating that "the citizens of the contracting parties should have free access to the courts of justice in all cases, wherein they may be interested, on the same conditions that the laws and usages of the country give to their citizens, furnishing security required in the case," this provision of the article (6) was not intended to grant to the citizens of these two nations the enjoyment of civil rights which do not attach (except) to citizens.—[Translation.]

civil court of Port au Prince, it is to be observed that the latter court follows substantially, though not literally, the reasoning of the former.*

A careful reading of the decree of the court of cassation indicates that the court has, in its attempt to justify the authorities of Hayti, indulged in the same peculiar reasoning as the civil court of Port au

Prince; and it is consequently open to the same criticism.

The extreme to which the court has gone in search of reasons to justify its judgment indicates the absence of that good faith which should characterize the interpretation of treaty stipulations. And in view of the language of articles 6 and 9 of the treaty of November 3, 1864, it is difficult to understand by what process of reasoning the court reached the conclusion that a citizen of the United States, within the jurisdiction of Hayti, "Can only enjoy privileges derived from natural rights or of mankind, and not those that are derived from purely civil law."

Equally illogical and untenable is the reasoning of the court of cassation in holding that nowhere in the treaty of November 3, 1864, is there to be found a provision which may be held to confer upon the citizens of the contracting States other and additional rights; i. e., full right to exercise the "judicial assignment" of property. Under the public law or law of nations aliens enjoy purely natural rights in whatever State they may be. And in the absence of any treaty, a citizen of the United States would have enjoyed natural rights in Hayti; but the terms of the treaty of November 3, 1864, stipulate, in effect, that such citizen shall further enjoy civil rights.

The court of cassation, although admitting that the treaty stipulates that "the citizens of the contracting parties should have free access to the courts of justice, in all cases wherein they may be interested, on the same conditions that the law and usages of the country give to their citizens, furnishing security required in the case," maintains "that this provision of article 6 is not intended to grant to the citizens of these two nations the enjoyment of civil rights."

Hayti all rights, they can only enjoy privileges derived from natural rights or of mankind, and not those which are derived from purely civil law.

"Therefore it follows from that which precedes that the judgment denounced has made a good and just application of article 769 (794) of the code of Civil Procedure and 569 of the Code of Commerce, and a sound interpretation of the articles 6 and 9 of the treaty above cited.

[&]quot;For such reasons, and without there being any necessity of passing on the result of non-acceptance raised by the parties, the court rejects the appeal made by Mr. Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen against the judgment rendered May 27, 1884, by the civil court of Port au Prince, orders, in consequence, the confiscation of the fine deposited, and condemns the said Mr. Van Bokkelen to the expenses, liquidated at the sum of ———, not including the cost of the present decree."—[Translation.]

The court of cassation is in error in assuming that the privilege of release of an imprisoned debtor would be denied to the Haytian citizen by the United States courts circumstanced as Van Bokkelen was when he invoked the protection of the treaty. In such a case, assuming that other and ordinary applications for release had failed, the writ of habeas corpus would lie to the courts of the United States, and would avail to secure his release from imprisonment.

In view of the treaty language and terms of the protocol, it is impossible for the referee to sustain the reasoning or the conclusions reached by the civil court of Port au Prince or by the court of cassation. It is not perceived how the nature or character of the remedy or right expressly guaranteed to citizens of the United States within the jurisdiction of Hayti can be withheld from them by describing it, as the judgment of the civil court of Port au Prince does, "as an institution of civil law," or as the decree of the court of cassation does, "an institution of civil right." The "judicial assignment" (cession de biens), as I have elsewhere pointed out, is simply an incident or step in the judicial procedure in the courts of Hayti in bankruptcy proceedings. And if it be not included within the guaranty of "free access to the tribunals of justice," the language is without meaning and inoperative. "Free access to the tribunals of justice" that was limited to admission to the courts, without the privilege to plaintiff or defendant of employing the usual, ordinary processes of the court, would be a delusion and a snare Such an intention or purpose may not, in the absence of plain language, be imputed to the high contracting parties.

The attempt of the courts of Hayti and of the Executive to exclude a citizen of the United States from the benefit of a judicial assignment, on the ground that the treaty of November 3, 1864, makes no mention of it in express terms, does not seem to call for serious consideration. Such a strained objection would only be satisfied by incorporating the body of the Haytian codes in the treaty articles. With equal force and soundness the courts of Hayti and the executive power might have denied this right, remedy, or privilege to Van Bokkelen on the ground that he was not mentioned or particularly named in the treaty. When the treaty said "free access to the tribunals of justice * * * on the same terms which are granted by the laws and usages of the country to native citizens," it included the whole class of citizens, and fixed the terms upon which the laws and usage of the country were to be applied to them.

Among the international rules proposed by the Institute of International Law of Geneva, 1877, with the view to negotiation of international treaties, the following rules, among others, were adopted:

1 L'étranger sera admis à ester en justice aux mêmes conditions que le régnicole.

Reference is here made to the language of the above rules to show that when an alien is admitted to stand in justice on the same terms as a citizen he must necessarily be entitled to invoke in his behalf all the customary and civil processes of the courts which are open to citizens.

JUDICIAL ASSIGNMENT (CESSION DE BIENS).

In view of the fact that the executive and judicial authorities of Hayti have placed their refusal to admit Van Bokkelen to the benefits of the judicial assignment upon the ground that by the letter of the municipal codes of Hayti all aliens are excluded from its privileges, and that it is confined to native citizens, and that it is a civil institution of the state, it becomes necessary to inquire into the real nature and character of the proceeding known as judicial assignment (cession de biens). This is of the first importance, because the fallacy in the reasoning of the courts and of the Executive of Hayti and of counsel for the defendant Government consists in attributing exceptional characteristics and functions to the act of judicial assignment.

The provisions of the Haytian code which have been cited are here below inserted.*

There is nothing exceptional, unusual, or extraordinary in this proceeding. It is not, as the language of the courts, of the Executive of Hayti, and the argument of counsel for defendant Government implies, a law unto itself of such supreme authority as to negative the purpose and effect of a treaty stipulation.

The judicial assignment (cession de biens) of the Haytian codes is described under title 5 of the Civil Code of Hayti, and of 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and title 2 of the Code of Commerce.

There is nothing hidden or mysterious about it; it possesses no cabalistic power. And the execution of a judicial assignment is simply a step in the ordinary procedure and practice of the courts of Hayti. is a familiar and well-known incident in the jurisprudence of the civil The provisions in the Haytian code were transferred bodily from the civil code of France; and France incorporated them in her code from the corresponding title (cessio bonorum) of the Justinian code, whence they are traced back to the Lex Julia.

The Lex Julia, probably passed in the reign of Augustus, at length exempted insolvent debtors from the penalty of imprisonment and infamy, and secured to them the beneficium competentiae or right to maintenance; provided they made an immediate and complete cessio bonorum to their creditors.;

The surrender was made by solemn declaration, either judicial or extrajudicial. The property thus given up was sold and the price distributed among the creditors. The debtor was not released from his debts unless the creditors were fully paid, but he was protected from imprisonment at their instance. If the debtor subsequently acquired property his creditors were entitled to attach it, except in so far as it was necessary for his own subsistence. This latter privilege was called "exceptio" or "beneficium competentiæ."

The Lex Julia de cessio bonorum introduced a new procedure in relation to a bankrupt's estate (venditio bonorum), which theretofore was governed by the "missio in bona." §

The rule for the interpretation of treaty stipulations suggested in the judgment of the civil courts of Port au Prince, as has been pointed out,

Ne pourront être admis au bénéfice de cession les étrangers, les stellionataires, les banqueroutiers frauduleux, les personnes condamnées pour cause de vol ou d'escroquerie, ni les personnes comptables, tuteurs, administrateurs et depositaires.

The language of all the authorities repudiates such a strained and singular construction, whether it be in application to private contracts or to international covenants.

It may be said of the treaty of November 3, 1864, as was said of the Constitution of the United States by Mr. Justice Story, with the approval of Chancellor Kent, that-

The instrument furnishes essentially the means of its own interpretation.*

The first and fundamental rule in the interpretation of all instruments is to construe them according to the sense of the terms and the intention of the parties. intention of a law is to be gathered from the words, the context, the subject-matter, the effects and consequence, or the reason and spirit of the law.

And the only case in which a literal meaning is not to be adopted is limited to the exception when such construction would involve a manifest absurdity.

When the words are plain and clear, and the sense distinct and perfect arising on them, there is generally no necessity to have recourse to other means of interpretation. In literal interpretation the rule observed is to follow the sense in respect both of the words and construction of them which is agreeable to common use without attending to etymological fancies or grammatical refinements.

All international treaties are covenants bona fide, and are therefore to be equitably and not technically construed.

The principal rule has already been adverted to namely to follow the ordinary and usual acceptation, the plain and obvious meaning of the language employed. This rule is, in fact, inculcated as a cardinal maxim of interpretation equally by civilians and by writers on international law.

Vattel says that it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation. If the meaning be evident and the conclusion not absurd, you have no right to look beyond or beneath it, to alter or to add to it by conjecture. Wolf observes that to do so is to remove all certainty from human transactions. ¶

Treaties are to be interpreted according to their plain sense **
Publicists are generally agreed in laying down certain rules of construction as being applicable when disagreement takes place between the parties to a treaty as to the meaning or intention of stipulations. Some of these rules are either unsafe in their application or of doubtful applicability; and rules tainted by any shade of doubt, from whatever source it may be derived, are unfit for use in international controversy.

Those against which no objection can be urged, and which are probably sufficient for all purposes, may be stated as follows:

When the language of a treaty, taken in the ordinary meaning of the words, yields a plain and reasonable sense, subject to the qualifications, that any words which may have a customary meaning in treaties differing from their common signification must be understood to have that meaning, and that a sense can not be adopted which leads to an absurdity or to incompatibility of the contract with an accepted fundamental principle of law. #

Treaties of every kind, when made by the competent authority, are as obligatory upon nations as private contracts are binding upon individuals, and these are to receive a fair and liberal interpretation, according to the intention of the contracting parties, and to be kept with the most scrupulous good faith. Their meaning is to be ascertained by the same rules of construction and course of reasoning which we apply to the interpretation of private contracts. ##

The infirmity or fallacy disclosed in the reasoning of the decrees of the Haytian courts and in the message of the Executive of Hayti, referring to this case and adopting the views of the courts, is that the judges and President Salomon reason about the competition which exists between the treaty and the municipal law of Hayti, as if the question of relative authority and comparative precedence was between a municipal statute of the United States and a municipal statute of Hayti. doing this they lose sight of the important fact that the competition is between provisions contained in municipal statutes of Hayti and stipulations in a treaty of subsequent date, to which Hayti is one of the contracting parties. It would seem, from the character of the arguments submitted on behalf of Hayti, that counsel did not fail to recognize this infirmity in the reasoning of the judicial and executive author-And this seems to have embarrassed counsel for defendant ities. Government, and accounts for the shifting positions upon which the defense in this case has, at different times, rested. It seems to be forgotten that the operation of treaty stipulations within the jurisdiction of a contracting party is not a foreign interference, nor is it the application of extra-territorial or foreign law. By the constitution and law of Hayti a treaty is a law of the state.

The treaty of November 3, 1864, is within Lorimer's category of the third class of treaties "as sources of international law;" treaties which, among other things, recognize the equal rights of foreigners and natives before the municipal law:*

The value of treaties, as a source of the positive law of nations, is supposed to have been greatly enhanced by the annex to Protocol No. 1 of the conferences held in London in 1871 respecting the clauses of the treaty of Paris of 1856, which have reference to the neutralization of the Black Sea. The protocol is in the following words: "The plenipotentiaries recognize that it is an essential principle of the law of national states of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search of the search o

"The plenipotentiaries recognize that it is an essential principle of the law of nations that no power can liberate itself from the engagements of a treaty, nor modify the stipulations thereof, unless with the consent of the contracting powers by means of an amicable arrangement."

Some of the inconsistencies in the positions assumed, at different times, by the defendant Government have been pointed out in the brief on behalf of complainant. †

It was first maintained that the case of Van Bokkelen in the Haytian courts was decided only on an exception; that is to say, that the court of cassation, affirming the judgment of the court below, held that Van Bokkelen, being an alien, the said court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter.t

At a later date, referring to the decision of the courts, it was argued that "at the utmost the Haytian judges erred in resting their decision upon grounds erroneous, or open to discussion; and the only error, if any, which may possibly be charged to them, was to set forth as a ground for their judgment that Van Bokkelen's case did not fall within the scope of the treaty, instead of stating simply that petitioner had not taken the steps required to be entitled to the rights guarantied him by said treaty stipulations." §

As has been said, "such a decision would, indeed, have created an entirely different situation."||

§ "Statement of Facts and Points of Law," by Hon. Stephen Preston, minister of Hayti, p. 21, et seq.

In the second argument or note the Haytian minister maintained that under article 148 of the Haytian code of civil procedure judgment in the Van Bokkelen case was null and void. His first proposition in regard to the action of the court is, that it dismissed Van Bokkelen's case for want of jurisdiction. His second proposition is, that the judgment of the tribunal of Port au Prince must be regarded as a final decision against Van Bokkelen of all the questions raised by the pleadings; and his third proposition is, that Van Bokkelen did not exhaust the legal remedies afforded by municipal law, because, on account of an omission on the part of the judges to "pass upon" all the questions raised, the judgment was null and void, and Van Bokkelen was therefore entitled to the extraordinary remedy known as "la requête civile."*

It is quite clear from an examination of article 148 of the Haytian code of civil procedure, referred to by Mr. Preston, that the judges are not required to "pass upon" all the points raised in the pleadings in the sense of judicially determining them, but only of taking notice or mentioning them in the judicial summary of the proceedings, which in Haytian procedure constitutes the judgment. And one of the objects of this requirement seems to be to furnish evidence to the parties in the judgment itself that none of their points have been overlooked. ther appears that the re-opening of the judgment under that article can be had only "upon the request of those who have been parties, or of those who have been duly brought into court,";

Reference is again made to the conflicting and contradictory positions assumed, at different stages of the proceedings, by the defendant Government, for the purpose of showing how important and necessary it has been for the referee to confine himself to the narrow ground furnished in the single issue suggested by the terms of the arbitration. guage of the protocol necessarily fixed the decision of the Haytian courts and the action of the Executive of Hayti as the starting point for the referee's examination and decision. ‡ And the treaties between the nigh contracting parties were made the supreme law for his consideration and guidance. IN CONCLUSION.

Whether the literal, natural meaning of the language, or the spirit of the treaty of November 3, 1864, or the common intention of the contracting parties be regarded, I am of opinion, first, that the imprisonment of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States in Hayti, was in derogation of the rights to which he was entitled as a citizen of the United States under stipulations contained in the treaty between the United States and Hayti; second, that the record of the case and the correspondence between the two Governments fails to disclose any extenuating circumstances or sufficient justification for the harsh treatment and protracted imprisonment of Van Bokkelen by the constituted authorities of the Republic of Hayti, notwithstanding the earnest and repeated protests of the representatives of the United States; and I award that the Republic of Hayti pay to the United States, on behalf of the representatives of Charles Adrian Van Bokkelen, the sum of sixty thousand dollars ($60,000).
