Twin Story

Our ancestors very much disliked dancing when the music is played with a violin. The reason for the way they believed was that they had stories. In this one story they say two were living somewhere but not here on earth where we live. One was a good man. The only work he does is for good but the other only tried hard to do what is evil. The more evil he does the more he is satisfied. This one that is the good man they say was named Sky-holder and the one who went in the opposite direction they say was called Tawiskal. The good man often went traveling where the earth dwellers live. He would bring something good in what he did for them.

So then on this one day the Sky-holder had left. Tawiskal remained with the sky dwellers after Sky-holder set out. So he had a chance to think up something evil to do. As he is looking around, he saw a cat sitting there in the sun warming itself and sleeping. He grabbed her and killed that cat. Then he split her open and removed the guts and made string of them. Then he strung the guts on a board and made a bow also of these guts. Then he made himself a violin and a musical bow. Then he played some dancing songs. He invited the sky dwellers to dance and he found the soft-minded and persuaded them and they agreed to dance for him. Then he played more and better songs. They were even happier and were not thinking whether what they were doing was good. They just didn't want anything to bother them now that they were having such good fun.

Then Sky-holder arrived back and he came back from a hard job as he brought his work. He was amazed at the curious ways that these sky dwellers were behaving now. And when he found out how they received the musical instruments, he gave even more power for all the cats to live. They say it was nine lives that he gave them. Now those sky dwellers who were having a good time he punished and sent them out of the sky world.
