CLARKE'S BOOK-REST.

The illustration on the opposite page represents a recently perfected device for relieving the reader of the fatigue of holding a heavy book.

It is strong enough to hold an unabridged dictionary, and so easily adjusted that a mere touch will place the book in any desired position before the reader. It accommodates equally well the very near-sighted and the vision of old age. The height is also readily altered to suit a child or a tall man.

If the reader wishes to leave his chair he simply pushes the Book-Rest aside, and finds his place held open for him on his return.

The book is supported upon a finished board about 9 x 12 inches in size, with a suitable ledge or shelf near its lower edge. Thus, unlike some other book rests, there is nothing to mar the cover of the most delicate book.

The arrangement for holding the leaves is unique and admirable. It consists of a strong wire fork held upon the leaves by a spring. When the reader wishes to turn a leaf, he seizes the fork and turns it backward towards himself a quarter circle, where it stops and remains open. When the leaf is turned a touch replaces it, and it will hold a pamphlet or a book four inches thick.

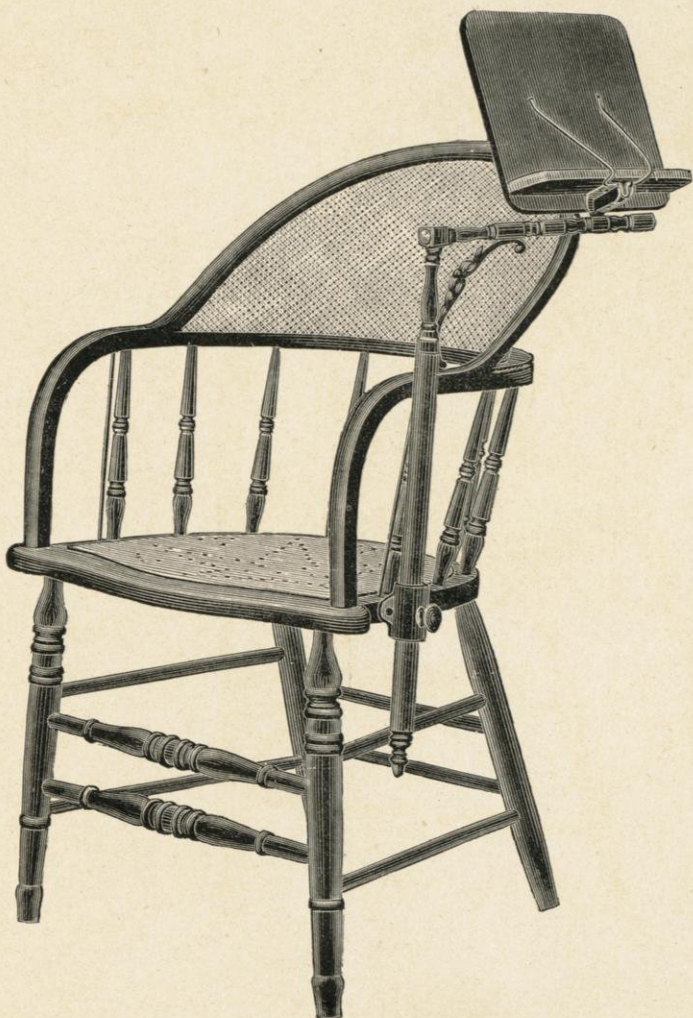

Every part of this Book-Rest is strong and durable. It is made of hardwood and strong iron castings, the lighter parts, malleable, and is bolted securely to the seat or outside of the chair, so that, unlike other so-called book rests, it is not flimsy and shaky, but rigid and strong as the chair itself.

It does not claim to be a desk, nor a dozen things in one; but, as an arrangement for holding a book just where the reader wants it for easy perusal, we confidently offer it as the ne plus ultra.
