1. Appointment of a suitably qualified health officer to have control of all matters of health in the Republic, including particularly the sanitary police of the city of Guayaquil. It is essential that this officer have the cooperation of all the other authorities in the country, otherwise his work will be greatly hampered and he would partially fail, as happened to Dr. Lloyd in 1909.

2. Providing a suitable and sufficient water supply for the city, which will permit the removal of all cisterns and tanks, which are the breeding-places of the stegomya yellow-fever mosquito. At the present time the water supply is so limited that it is only turned into the mains for four hours out of the twenty-

3. A complete system of paving and sewerage, primarily intended to eliminate pools of water which might form breeding places for mosquitos. This would entail a proper system of garbage collection, which would be under the direct supervision of the health officer above mentioned.

4. Building the plague-carrying rats out of existence by putting in cement floors and sills in all the buildings, doing away with the present system of double walls and eliminating the gutters, etc., from the roofs of the houses.

The above measures should be carried out gradually, and Colonel Gorgas estimates that several years will be necessary to effectively sanitate the city.

About $150,000, gold, annually will pay the expenses of the expert employees needed during this period. Colonel Gorgas further considers that the sanitary organization as at present existing in Guayaquil can be utilized, and changes made gradually therein as occasion therefor may arise.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 5, 1913.

Sir: The Department encloses herewith, in duplicate, a letter dated March 18, 1913, addressed to the President of the Republic of Ecuador by Colonel W. C. Gorgas, U. S. Army, enclosing accounts in detail covering the expenditure of certain funds furnished by the Ecuadorean Government for the purpose of making sanitary surveys at the port of Guayaquil. The accounts referred to by Colonel Gorgas in this letter are also transmitted herewith in duplicate, together with his check No. A^A 678524 on El Banco Comercial y Agrícola, Guayaquil, for the unexpended balance of S/9298.90 in favor of the Treasurer General of the Republic of Ecuador.

You are directed to present these accounts and Colonel Gorgas' check in person to the President of Ecuador. The Department has expressed to the War Department its gratification at the manner in which Colonel Gorgas has fulfilled his mission, and at the fact that he expended less than half of the amount of money set aside by the Government of Ecuador for this purpose.

In presenting the check and accounts to the President you may, in your discretion, say that you believe it would have a most favorable effect upon relations between the United States and Ecuador if he would make public the object of your visit and the fact that Colonel Gorgas had returned more than half of the money placed to his credit by the Government of Ecuador.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION, Ancon, C. Z., March 18, 1913.

Sir: I herewith enclose accounts in detail covering the expenditure of certain funds furnished by the Ecuadorean Government for the purpose of making certain sanitary surveys at the port of Guayaquil, Ecuador.

The sum turned over to me by the Government of Ecuador was sixteen thousand eight hundred seven and fifty-hundredths sucres (S/16,807.50). Of this sum I expended seven thousand five hundred eight and sixty-hundredths sucres (S/7508.60), which expenditures are covered by enclosed vouchers, leaving a balance of nine thousand two hundred ninety-eight and ninety-hundredths sucres (S/9298.90).

I enclose check No. 678524 on the Banco Comercial y Agricola, Guayaquil, where the money was originally deposited, for the balance of $/9298.90, in favor of the Treasurer General of the Republic of Ecuador.

Very respectfully,

W. C. GORGAS.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Quito, May 24, 1913.

A crisis is approaching in the foreign loan negotiations and attending contracts for the sanitation of Guayaquil, which will not be awarded by competition but in a manner to best subserve local politics. Foreign firms are actively endeavoring to furnish loan and obtain contracts, as well as at least one American. It is practically certain that no American can hope for success, unless strong representa-tions be speedily made to the effect that giving this matter to any but an American firm will be considered by the Government of the United States as unfriendly. America is known to be the most advanced nation in tropical sanitation, and the American firm competing has secured the refusal of Colonel Gorgas's services as adviser.

I beg to be instructed to urge this matter upon the Ecuadorean

Sir: Referring to recent telegrams exchanged between the Legation and the Department concerning the contract for the sanitation of Guayaquil, I have the honor to inclose copies and translations of a letter written by the president of the committee in Guayaquil having charge of the awarding of the contract.

In view of the extraordinary wording of this letter, I have brought it to the attention of the President and the Minister for Foreign Affairs with the statement that it would, if allowed to pass without protest, constitute a serious discrimination against the American firm interested in obtaining the contract, which discrimination I was sure was far from being the desire of the Ecuadorean Govern-

The Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me yesterday that the Government had telegraphed to Guayaquil to inquire into this matter and that he could assure me that no discrimination whatever was intended against American interests. He also stated that the President of the Republic had decided to leave the matter of the awarding of the contract entirely in the hands of the Guayaquil committee, but that he personally thought that it would be unlikely that the committee would itself decide so important a matter without referring it to the Congress, which is to meet on August 10.

I may add that there is great anti-American feeling in Guayaquil and that efforts will certainly be made by the interests there to defeat the awarding of any important contract to American interests unless the Government of the United States takes a very firm and active position in the case.

I know of no other American firm at present except MacArthur proved.

The Department understands from the Minister of Ecuador that the matter of awarding the contract has been taken out of the hands of the Guayaquil committee and the Congress called on to decide whether the President or a new and smaller committee shall have that authority. The Minister's opinion is that an award will not be made for three months. Telegraph whether the Minister's statements are accurate and do all in your power to procure consideration for proposal of MacArthur's or of any other Americans who may bid.

Did companies mentioned by Illingworth bid before MacArthur, and has the committee or the Congress yet issued any comprehensive plan or specifications for the work? If not, can not this be arranged so Americans may have an opportuity, by making a bid on a competitive basis, to prove their ability to execute the work economically and scientifically?

American Legation, Quito, August 30, 1913.

Sir: Referring to previous correspondence regarding the contract for the sanitation of Guayaquil, I now have the honor of transmitting further correspondence between this Legation and the Minister for Foreign Affairs on this subject.

When I first began to look into this matter there seemed to be at least a fair chance of our getting it, but things have been going steadily worse for some time and Ecuadoreans of responsible position have become more outspoken against us in this than formerly.

The firm of J. G. White & Co. is endeavoring to obtain the contract and, in order to avoid the anti-American feeling, is working through its London house. The local representative of MacArthur Bros., Mr. E. C. Brooks, informs me that the firm does not reply to him and that it has never yet approved the bid he made in its name although there has been plenty of time for such reply and approval. MacArthur Bros., therefore, will have no one to blame but themselves if they fail to obtain the contract. This Legation has been taking all possible steps to remove the anti-American feeling and to get the work for any reputable American concern which might desire to compete, but it is naturally quite impossible for it to overcome the indifference or neglect of the firms themselves. It will continue during the time I am here to forward in every proper way American interests in this as in other matters.

Finally, however, I should add my profound conviction that no American firm, however much it may desire this work, has the slightest chance of success on a business basis. It is acknowledged here that we are the most advanced nation in tropical sanitation and that we could do the work both economically and efficiently; but any American bids will be thrown out probably.

To-day I have received from the said Ministry note No. 619, dated on the 9th of the present month, in which are given the desired explanations, in virtue of which I take pleasure in transcribing it to your excellency. It says:

of which I take pleasure in transcribing it to your excellency. It says:

Mr. Minister for Foreign Relations: I answer your note No. 1251, of the 25th of last month, in which you transcribed to me the note of the minister of the United States of North America calling your attention to and at the same time asking that there be brought to the attention of the Chief of the State the answer which the committee of water supply of Guayaquil gave to Mr. Brooks, an answer which the minister calls extraordinary because, as he says, the above-mentioned committee does not take into any consideration the proposal of the American firm Max Brooks [MacArthur Bros.] except in the event that all European bids are found to be unsatisfactory. The minister believes that this would place the American firm in a bad position and would constitute a real discrimination against the United States.

In the letter of the committee above referred to, to which the minister of the United States of North America refers, there is no phrase which can be interpreted correctly as meaning that that committee considered postponing the proposal of Mr. Brooks because it was made by an American citizen or that it would be taken into consideration only if none of the European bids were satisfactory. In that note it is expressed with clearness that, before the proposal of Mr. Brooks was presented to the committee, that body had begun negotiations with European companies for the sanitation of Guayaquil, and this proceeding imposed on the committee the duty in seriousness and honesty of not opening negotiations with any other person, whether European or American, while the commissioner, and he has labored conscientiously and obtained various proposals and projects, even getting almost contracts ad referendum. Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor of answering the note of your excellency, No. 25, dated the 18th of the present month, in which you acknowledged the receipt of mine marked with the number 419, which contained the text of a communication from the Minister of the Interior relating to the proposal made by Mr. E. C. Brooks, in the name of the firm of Max Arthur Bros. [sic; should be MacArthur Bros.] of New York.

Your excellency says that that communication of the Minister of the Interior approves in all its parts the answer given by the president of the committee of water supply of Guayaquil to Mr. Brooks, confirming that his proposal would not be taken into consideration until it appears that the European proposals are not satisfactory, which amounts to establishing a real discrimination against American interests.

I permit myself to believe, Mr. Minister, that the note of the Minister of the Interior in question has not been properly interpreted by your excellency, since if it is true that there can be seen in it a tacit approbation of the answer of the president of the committee on water supply of Guayaquil, it itself explains in a very clear manner the reasons which the president of the committee had in not taking into consideration the proposal of Mr. Brooks and among these reasons there is none which can be interpreted as an injurious preference against American interests.

Regarding the request which your excellency makes as to informing you whether the answer of the Minister of the Interior should be considered as an official answer of the Ecuadorean Government, I beg to explain to your excellency that my Government does not consider it proper to give an official answer to this matter, which belongs solely and exclusively to the committee of water supply of Guayaquil. On account of the great consideration which your excellency deserves and out of deference to you, I transmitted to the Minister of the Interior your kind note, number 17, of the 16th of July last, with the object of obtaining the explanations which your excellency desired, and when I obtained them and communicated them to your excellency I believed that I had fulfilled the object which I proposed to myself.

Historical summary prepared in the Division of Latin-American Af-fairs of the Department of State.

BRIEF HISTORY.

Previous to 1906 General Alfaro, then President of Ecuador, wrote to Mr. Magoon, then Governor of the Canal Zone, concerning the sanitary needs of the port of Guayaquil. The President of Ecuador saw the advisability and the necessity of securing the cooperation of foreign sanitary experts if the port of Guayaquil was to be rid of the bubonic plague and yellow fever then prevalent.

As a result of several conferences at the Department of State between Secretary Root and the Ecuadorean Minister at Washington, it was decided that the Government of the United States would send the Governor of the Canal Zone and the chief sanitary officer of the Canal Zone, upon invitation of the Government of Ecuador, to confer with the authorities of the municipality of Guayaquil. However, the appearance of opposition in the Province of Guayas and the city of Guayaquil to American assistance of this kind made it advisable to postpone it for the moment.

During the latter part of 1906 and the first months of 1907 a conference was held on the Isthmus between the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Panama, the Ecuadorean Minister at Washington, American Minister Squires, and Colonel Gorgas, out of which grew a draft sanitary convention between Ecuador and Panama the real purpose of which appears in a clause in which Panama agrees to supply Ecuador with one of her sanitary officers to inaugurate a hygienic system similar to that established at Panama.

In spite of strenuous endeavors and for reasons which it is not necessary here to enumerate, and although the interest of this Government in the matter had not relaxed, for a period no practical opportunity presented itself to proceed in the direction pointed out by the policies of the Government of the United States.

In 1908 the President of Ecuador asked that the necessary authorization be given to enable Dr. Lloyd, then stationed at Guayaquil in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, to assist in the struggle against the unhealthy conditions of Guayaquil. Dr. Lloyd in consequence rendered most valuable service during the short period he enjoyed a certain administrative authority at Guayaquil, but, owing to primitive local conditions and consequent lack of sympathy and cooperation, particularly of the Guayaquil medical profession, he found it necessary to give up the task; however, not without having framed a very comprehensive and effective body of sanitary regulations on the basis of this experience.

Since the fall of 1909 the direction of the sanitary service of Guayaquil has been under an Eucadorean sanitary board which has not measured up to the task confronting it, as both yellow fever and bubonic plague continued to prevail in Guayaquil with undiminished force.

The importance which the War Department ascribed to this matter and which placed strongly before this Department the close relations thereof to the canal enterprise appears in correspondence. Two communications from the Secretary of War dated October 5, 1909, and April 6, 1910, respectively, contain expressions in this sense. The following is quoted from the former communication:

Guayaquil is in direct and constant communication with Panama, and it is at present one of the very few ports in the world where yellow fever still lingers. The failure to eradicate this disease and plague is a constant menace to the Canal Zone, where the occurrence of either of these diseases would greatly complicate the work and increase its expense.

In the second letter referred to, the Secretary of War informed this Department that—according to communications received and on file in this Department, the port of Guayaquil is in direct and constant communication with Panama, distant two days by water, and is at present one of the very few points in the world where yellow fever and bubonic plague still linger. The failure to eradicate these diseases is a constant menace to health conditions on the Canal Zone, where the occurrence of either would greatly complicate the work and increase its expense. * * Against such conditions the remedy of a quarantine is costly, unsatisfactory, and inefficient; the only effective safeguard is to sanitate the focus of the disease.

. The Secretary also suggested that recourse must be had to diplomatic channels to discover—some plan whereby a system of sanitation as thorough as that on the Canal Zone and at Habana may be put into operation at the port of Guayaquil.

And further statement is made that—

until some such remedy is adopted the health of residents on the Canal Zone and, indeed, of the inhabitants of the seaboards of America will be constantly menaced by this center of infection.

During the summer of 1910 it was reported that Ecuador was desirous of parting with the possession of the Galapagos Islands and that a transfer of them to a non-American power was being discussed. As a consequence thereof, the Department found it necessary to inform Ecuador that this Government was prepared to consider an offer from Ecuador regarding these islands which should include the employment of a portion of the purchase price in the permanent

Soon after these negotiations had accomplished their purpose in the removal of immediate danger of this archipelago's passing to a non-American power, a French citizen, personally and through influential Ecuadorean representation, entered into an understanding with the Quito Government looking to the construction of certain municipal works which, it was alleged, were essential to the effectual sanitation of Guayaquil. From many sources reports reached the Department that this project, the so-called Coignet contract, would not only fail to accomplish sanitation but, in hypothecating the Ecuadorean revenues available for this purpose to provide for the excessively large loan thereunder, would almost exclude hope of real, permanent betterment in the future. In the light of these facts, and in harmony with the policy which had been consistently pursued with respect to the cleansing of the port of Guayaquil, occasion was availed of to impress upon the Ecuadorean Government the great concern of this Government in the condition of Guayaquil and the necessity of promptly finding some effective system to cure the evil.

In view of the fact that the world's great works of sanitation had been the result of governmental effort or supervision, and because of the practical lack of native experts, this Department took repeated occasion in communications with Ecuador to lay emphasis upon the necessity of foreign assistance and of a preliminary technical examination of the local situation. The Government of Ecuador was opportunely informed that the Government of the United States would be glad to lend its expert assistance so that any contract which might be subsequently entered into to do the work at Guayaquil would effectuate real and permanent sanitation.

The above-mentioned option obtained by M. Coignet regarding municipal improvements at Guayaquil expired on the 30th of last June

Before and subsequent to the election of General Plaza, the present Chief Executive of Ecuador, this Government was formally and earnestly approached for aid in the matter of sanitation. The various proposals of the Ecuadorean Government looked to the carrying through of the work required, either directly by or under the supervision of United States officials.

The Ecuadorean Government has therefore become convinced, in consonance with the purpose which the course taken by the Department above indicated seemed to obey, that the proper sanitation of Guayaquil is of great mutual interest and that the United States is prepared to help Ecuador to formulate an adequate plan to obtain this end of common benefit.

During the year 1912 the Legation of the United States at Quito was frequently approached by appropriate officials of the Ecuadorean Government on the subject of the sanitation of Guayaquil. The Ecuadorean Government expressed the desire to enter into a convention that might enable the United States, through its sanitary officials, to take charge for several years of the administration at the port of Guayaquil pertaining to sanitation, and to place at the disposal of such officials funds which it was believed would be sufficient to support such an administration. It was not proposed, at the time the idea of a convention was broached in the month of February, 1912, by the Ecuadorean Government to include the execution of any work of construction, such as a water-supply system, sewerage, or the paving of the city, but had reference solely to the extinction of yellow fever and bubonic plague through the administration and police action of American officials placed temporarily in charge of local health department.1

A cursory study of the purpose of the Ecuadorean Government during the early months of 1912 brought conviction that insufficient guaranties of a practical nature, such as those assuring permanancy to a work with which the name of the United States would in this manner necessarily be connected, militated strongly against its serious consideration by this Government, and made its preliminary examination and recommendation by responsible sanitary experts a prerequisite to the determination of measures that would effectually meet the real needs of the situation.

It appeared that the solution of the sanitary problem of Guayaquil lay not merely in the enforcement of police sanitary regulations, however carefully prepared, but in a provision for an abundant water supply, the installation of sewerage and drainage systems, and possibly the general reform of building construction.

Reports had also reached the Department, as previously stated, that the contract which a French citizen, Coignet, was desirous of entering into with the Government of Ecuador was absolutely inadequate to accomplish sanitation, although the contract provided for an outlay of from eight to ten millions of dollars. It became more and more apparent that the Government should be placed in possession of data resulting from complete preliminary surveys, the preparation of tentative plans, and specifications showing what means would be accurately adapted to the end it was desired to

The discussion between the Legation and the Ecuadorean Foreign Office regarding the sanitation of the port proceeded along general lines until the month of May, 1912, when the Ecuadorean Government presented a memorandum stating the views of that Government with reference to the sanitation of Guayaquil. A copy of the translation of this memorandum, dated May 6, 1912, is attached hereto 1 merely in the way of information.

With reference to this memorandum the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ecuador in the month of July, 1912, expressed a desire that the complete work needed to bring about the sanitation of Guayaquil and its suburbs should be undertaken by the Government of the United States "without the intervention of any companies, contractors, or private speculators whatsoever." This Government was then invited to enter into a convention with the Government of Ecuador in accordance with the memorandum of May 6, to be submitted for approval to the following Ecuadorean Congress.2

In connection with this the Department of State found it necessary to instruct the Legation to point out the difficulties of the performance of the sanitary work by this Government and to emphasize the importance of awaiting the result of a preliminary examination of the infected region, which would supply accurate technical information then entirely lacking and which would make possible intelligent conversation with the Ecuadorean Government on the subject of a possible arrangement, under which expert assistance of the United States might be made effective in carrying out the actual work of sanitation of Guayaquil and the region in which it lies.

Accordingly, in the latter part of 1912 the Ecuadorean Government deposited $8,000 to the order of the American Legation in Quito for the payment of the expenses of a sanitary commission under the direction of Colonel Gorgas, which was to study and report upon the feasibility of the sanitation of the port of Guayaquil. The commission arrived in Guayaquil in December, 1912, and made a complete study of local conditions. It reported that no insuperable obstacles existed to the sanitation of this port and indicated what methods should be followed in order to carry it into effect. This included an expenditure of some ten million dollars for certain essentially necessary public improvements such as water supply, sewerage, and paving.

Only about one-half of the money available was expended by the commission and $4,000 were returned to the Ecuadorean Govern-

The President yesterday informed me that a representative of the J. G. White Co. sailed from London Oct. 11 to close contract for sanitation of Guayaquil. The President says that if the Government of the United States will assist in having a receiver appointed for the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co. he will include in the sanitation contract a provision requiring the work to be done under the supervision of Colonel Gorgas. He declares that the only cause of unfriendliness toward the United States is the conduct of the railway company. He asserts that the appointment of a receiver for the railway properties, with the assistance of the United States Government, would result in conserving earnings which are being misappropriated and also remove the feeling of unfriendliness against us. President Plaza informs me that Congress has authorized a bond issue of 66,000,000 sucres, bearing 5 per cent interest, of which 20,000,000 are for sanitation of Guayaquil. He hopes that American capital will take the sanitation bonds, which act would be much appreciated by Ecuador.

The MacArthur Bros., of New York, have advised the Department to-day that they are prepared to undertake the work and will send a representative immediately to Guayaquil if assured of a reasonable time after his arrival to investigate the situation and submit bids.

You will confer with President Plaza in the following sense:

That the President of Ecuador should seek to connect the railway case, now on the point of going to arbitration, with the wholly distinct question of the sanitation of Guayaquil is regretted by this Government. If it were permissible to treat these matters as being in any way interdependent, it would be appropriate to contrast the frank and friendly manner in which this Government has met the wishes of the Government of Ecuador in the matter of the railway arbitration with the course which that Government pursues in closing the door to the friendly cooperation of this Government and its citizens in a matter in which they have a deep, immediate and enduring concern. By reason of the physical relation of Guayaquil to the Isthmus of Panama, the sanitation of Guayaquil is of interest to the entire world, but it specially affects the west coast of South America and most vitally concerns this Government as the constructor and operator of the Panama Canal. The true interest of Ecuador is in reality identical with our own. The Government of the United States has not asked for any favors in the matter and has not expected any to be extended either to itself or to its citizens. On the contrary, it has in the first place suggested in the interest of Ecuador herself that she secure the assistance of Isthmian Canal Commission officials in the sanitation of Guayaquil in accordance with the report which Colonel Gorgas made at her own request, this plan insuring the lowest rate of cost for work actually done and the observance of the highest scientific standards. Should this apparently ideal plan prove to be unacceptable to Ecuador, this Government has requested and desired fair opportunity for American engineers and contractors to submit competing bids on the same basis as the engineers and contractors of other nations. The mutual interests and friendship of the two countries would seem to require at least as much as this.

Department's October 22. After considerable delay, due to illness of the President and matters growing out of the revolution, I presented today the views of the Department as stated in your telegram. The President says that Mr. McClusky, the representative of J. G. White & Co., has just arrived in Quito and that, while no definite or final contract has been signed, he believes the contract will be executed with them. I impressed upon him the relation of our Government toward the Panama Canal and its operation, and said that the United States Government, as the constructor and owner of the canal, has the power, and it is its plain duty, to so control its use as not to jeopardize the health of the people of the world, and that in performance of that duty it might, on occasion, be compelled, however reluctantly, to exclude from passage through the canal vessels touching at ports infected with contagious diseases; and that the work of sanitation of Guayaquil should be so thoroughly performed, and according to such high scientific standards, as to remove all doubts as to the safety and propriety of permitting vessels touching at that port to pass through the canal. I suggested that if the work should be done under the supervision of Colonel Gorgas the efficiency of the work would practically be assured. The President expressed his appreciation of the character and superior attainment of Colonel Gorgas and of the merits of the plans submitted by him, but said that the junta at Guayaquil has authority to decide the question of the supervision of the work. I suggested the propriety of me having a conference with Mr. McClusky, and the President agreed that such conference would be desirable. Unless you advise otherwise, I will pursue that course.

The representative of J. G. White & Co. says that his company desires to meet the views of our Government and that Engineer Williamson, formerly with the Isthmian Canal Commission, will be in charge of the work; that his company desires to have the cooperation of our Government and that Gorgas stands at the head of the list in sanitary work. In the absence of instructions to the contrary I am proceeding on the assumption that the Department desires above all else the speedy and successful sanitation of Guayaquil, and, everything being equal, that it prefers to have the work done by American contractors.

The American Consul General at Guayaquil to the Secretary of State.

American Consulate-General, Guayaquil, December 10, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to place the following facts before you, for onsideration.

The White contract for the sanitation of Guayaquil was definitely settled December 9, 1913. It stipulates that the contractors must present documentary proof that the White Company is of English origin, and has its principal offices in London.

The Government will pay the contractors, as compensation for their services rendered in the construction of the work, twelve and one-half per cent of the cost. This payment comprises the earnings of the contractors, and the value of their studies, plans, specifications, reports, and estimates of the works, the direction, inspection and control in their fulfillment, the commission on the purchase of materials as per conditions stipulated, the expenses preliminary to their shipment to Ecuador, arrangement for the marine insurance, expenses of the works that ought to be prepared by the contractors, and everything in general relating to them as stipulated in this contract, without entering into the cost of the work as contained in article 18.

The contractors affirm that the house of J. G. White and Company, Limited, of 9 Cloak Lane, established in London the 10th of July, 1900, under the laws of England, has its independent representation, as per copy of its constitution, and therefore is the only one that assumes, as contractors, the rights, privileges and obligations of the present contract, and shall not be permitted, now or in the future, to transfer the contract for any motive or under any pretext to any other society, person, principal office or dependencies, established or to be established in any other country with the same or any other name; therefore the rights and obligations of this contract refer only and exclusively to the mentioned house of J. G. White and Company, Limited, London, England, and the Government of Ecuador. The engineers and other employees may be of any nationality in agreement with the Government.

The Government declares, in turn, that this contract is contained in the foregoing text, and therefore it is agreed by both parts that the contract will be without effect, and without any claim on all agreed upon, in case the contractor fail on any of the points of the foregoing statement. For the fulfillment of this contract and their relations with the Government, the contractors will have their offices

The agreement will be published immediately the contractors show their incorporation papers, which shall be inserted in conformity with the Código de Enjuiciamentos en Materia Civil; that is, that the public document or instrument by which J. G. White and Company was organized in the market of London, 9 Cloak Lane, as principal office, and independent of any other, and the legal power of attorney authorizing Mr. J. W. Morrosky [sic] to subscribe the contrace and bind the company to all agreed upon.

For the fulfillment of this contract, the contractors will make their domicile in Guayaquil, where they will locate their legal representative, and submit to the jurisdiction of the judges of the Republic of Ecuador and to its laws.

They declare having full knowledge of the 23rd article of the Political Constitution of the Republic of Ecuador, which says: "Every contract which a foreigner or a foreign company celebrates with the Government, or private person, shall carry the condition of renouncing all diplomatic claims."

American Legation, Quito, August 30, 1913.

Sir: In reply to the Department's instruction No. 3, of July 21st, I regret to say that there is no further information available here regarding the subject of labor conditions in the Oriente of Ecuador, than that supplied the Department in the despatch from the British Chargé d'Affaires in this city to his Government, which was transmitted to the Department by the British Embassy.

It is known here in a general way and regretted that the condition of the Indians practically throughout Ecuador is very bad and that they are living in a practical state of slavery or peonage on the large estates of the rich Ecuadoreans. While this would be difficult to prove in any satisfactory way, the fact exists and is condoned by all concerned as a necessary evil. The usual method of procedure is to have some sort of store at which the "employees" of a ranch or farm are expected to do their trading and in which their needs are supplied at "special" prices. The object, of course, is to get them into a state of indebtedness to the proprietor and keep them there so that their wages are never quite enough to pay their "debts" and consequently they are practically unable to leave for some other employment as there is an understanding among the owners as to taking peons from other properties. Conditions in the Oriente are believed to be still worse than in the more civilized portions of the country on account of the distance from the central government and the bad character of a majority of the small officials in that region. In many places there are no officials of any kind and there are large tracts of what is really a savage territory, of which the sovereignty is claimed both by Ecuador and by several other countries. I believe that the central government is sincerely anxious to do what it can for these unfortunate beings, and latterly, the "Junta de Beneficencia" has resolved to appoint a commission to look into the matter of relieving them from what is termed the "savage tyranny" of the proprietors.

As a humanitarian measure, the United States Government could very properly join with Great Britain in a friendly invitation to the Ecuadorean Government, as suggested by the British Government, looking towards the suppression of a slave traffic, but I am extremely doubtful as to the practical results which such a proceeding would have. Undoubtedly the Government of Ecuador would be, in principle, favorable to the suppression of such traffic and to the amelioration of the condition of the natives, but the practical execution of any projects of that kind would be most difficult. It must always be remembered that the Oriente of Ecuador when taken in connection with the similar regions in Peru, Colombia, Brazil and Venezuela, forms an enormous extent of wild territory over which there is only a very uncertain sovereignty and almost no attempt at enforcing any kind of laws. The population or rather settlers which such a region attracts are naturally not of a kind to be over sensitive to sufferings of the natives and the officials, even if their intentions were of the best, would be unable to offer any substantial relief. Conditions in the Oriente are probably much like what they were in the Kongo before investigation had brought to light the illegal and inhuman happenings which were being carried on there.

I regret that the British Chargé d'Affaires in this city is out of town at present for his health so that I cannot consult with him in this matter and under the circumstances I have thought it better not to ask for information from Ecuadorean sources of an official nature.

Dear Mr. Secretary: Sir E. Grey desires me to bring to your notice the following information which has just reached him in regard to the alleged traffic at Iquitos of slaves from the Napo region of Ecuador. You will recollect that a note on this subject was addressed to me by Mr. Moore (No. 85) on July 21.

A copy of the despatch from His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Quito, which was forwarded to you in my note No. 183 of July 5th, was also sent to the British Consul at Iquitos, who was instructed to furnish a report on the subject. The Consul has now replied that, as stated by Mr. Jerome, some rubber hunters, mostly not Peruvians and working independently, have brought about four hundred Indians through Iquitos during the last two years. In the Consul's opinion these Indians are slaves inasmuch as they are practically the absolute property of the rubber hunters; but they are not necessarily ill-treated or unhappy. They are not sold to others but accompany their owners. There is now on the lower Napo a party of one hundred to one hundred and fifty Indians, owned by an Italian born in Ecuador, which is expected to arrive at Iquitos about October. Our Consul thinks that it should be possible to enforce regulations for the prevention of such traffic, as all these parties pass through Iquitos. I venture to suggest that this information may be of use to the United States

Legation at Quito in connection with the report you have called for on the

AMERICAN LEGATION, Quito, November 13, 1913.

Sir: Adverting to the Department's instructions No. 3 and 10, addressed to my predecessor and No. 1 addressed to myself, I now have the honor to report with respect to recent developments concerning the alleged traffic in slaves in the upper Napo region lying within the territory of Ecuador.

Mr. Lucien J. Jerome the British Chargé d'Affaires has confidentially placed at the disposal of this Legation the document referred to by the British Ambassador in his communications of July 5th and August 12th, and also the latest report received from Victor Huckin, Esquire, H. B. M's Consul in Iquitos, who under the date of August 8 has addressed the Foreign Office as follows:

The principal fact which I have ascertained is that bodies of Indians have on several occasions within the past two years been brought down from the Napo to Iquitos and sent on thence to the Madre de Dios as described by Mr. Jerome. I have received from a good source the following list giving in each case the name and nationality of the Patron in charge of and owing the Indians." (See enclosure "A".)

As will be noted by the enclosed list mentioned, the number of Indians who have passed through the Iquitos in the past two years is placed by the Consul at 510. This, according to latest report, does not include "a group of 150 under Samuel Rogeroni, an Italian born in Ecuador, which has been brought down as far as the mouth of the Napo where the men are at present employed in the ivory-nut industries. They are expected to be brought through Iquitos on their way to the Madre de Dios about October next." It will be noticed that the above report fully confirms (with certain discrepancies in the figures given readily accounted for by the fortunes of the journey between the upper Napo and Iquitos) all the statements made by Mr. Jerome in his despatches forwarded to the Department.

The greatest credit is due to Mr. Jerome for his thorough and painstaking investigation of this subject. He has allowed me to examine his latest report (covering 55 pages) concerning the whole subject of the now notorious outrages on the Putumayo as well as the more recent abuses in the Ecuadorean hinterland. From it I have been able to make the following abstract:

The present charges are based upon: (1) The account of an Indian "deputation" from Archidona a town distant only 160 miles (See Mr. Jerome's communication of May 14th on file at the Department.) (2) The account of a Peruvian citizen now residing in Quite who was formerly engaged in business on the upper (See, below, an account of Mr. Cresson's interview with this man.) (3) The accounts of visiting priests and missionaries whom Mr. Jerome has interviewed in Quito and Lima.

The above accounts cover a period from 1910 to the present day, and the present condition of affairs to be deduced from them may be resumed as follows: The once notorious operations of the rubber gatherers in the upper Putumayo basin having been curtailed by the flight of the native population, the failing rubber supply and the scandals involved in the exploitation of this industry, the operations of the "caucheros" had been transferred to other fields from whence the present supply is now largely drawn. These new areas of rubber forest lie (in a general way) to the south of the town of Pebas, to the south of the town of Nauta; and another large district near the Madre de Dios River on the borders of Bolivia. In order to supply these fields with labor, it would appear that the old system of "correrías" or man-hunts, so familiar in the story of the Putumayo outrages, has been applied once more to the upper waters of the Napo in Ecuadorean territory. This is but the revival of an old state of affairs which only died out because [of] the flight and destruction of the native population following on the suppression of the Ecuadorean missions in 1895.

Mr. Cresson the Secretary of this Legation has been given an opportunity by Mr. Jerome of talking with that gentleman's informant, the "cauchero" mentioned above. This man, whose testimony seems to be conservative and credible, confirms all the statements contained in Mr. Jerome's reports and added that "the natives who willingly or unwillingly were taken down the river never returned again to their homes and families in the Napo."

As the literature on this subject has become widely available, it hardly seems necessary for me to enlarge on the nature of the outrages charged. The rumors and testimony referred to would, however, strongly point to the desirability of a thorough investigation of the conditions charged. In my opinion the Ecuadorean Government could scarcely raise objections to any measures which might be taken to put a stop to the kidnapping of useful and laborious citizens of their Republic—uncivilized and even savage though their state may be—to the mean advantage of a few unscrupulous traders.

In Mr. Jerome's opinion real results can only be obtained by an impartial investigation in the interest of humanity which might afterwards lead to representations near the Governments involved based, as is essential, on incontrovertible facts.

Mr. Jerome informs me that, in order to secure this end, he has suggested to H. M's Government the propriety of a personal investigation of the territory concerned, surrounded by as little notoriety as possible. This country is distant only about 160 miles from Quito, which is the nearest center of civilization. It is, however, separated from Quito by the high chain of the Andes and a difficult stretch of country on their eastern slope. The best season to make these investigations would appear to be about the middle of January. Mr. Jerome concurs with me in the opinion that it would be highly advisable, if he is authorized to make this trip, that the Secretary of this Legation, Mr. Cresson, be authorized to accompany him on his expedition. If in the Department's opinion the United States Government could informally cooperate to this extent in the humanitarian efforts of H. M's officials, I consider that Mr. Cresson, who by physique and other attainments is fitted for the work, might readily be detached for this service. Mr. Jerome has asked his Government for a credit, not to exceed $750, in order to cover the necessary expenses of the trip, and in my opinion a similar expenditure should be authorized on Mr. Cresson's behalf.

The above recommendations are made under the apprehension that the Department is inclined to favor the policy of cooperation with respect to these matters suggested by the British Ambassador in his note of July 5th, 1913.

In view of the fact that Mr. Jerome's representations to his Government were made some two weeks ago and that some time will be necessary in order to make proper preparations for the suggested trip, I would respectfully suggest that the Department communicate with this Legation by cable with respect to the attitude I should assume regarding these matters and the proposed investigations.

ARBITRATION AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FRANCE EXTENDING THE DURATION OF THE CONVENTION OF FEBRUARY 10, 1908.1

Signed at Washington February 13, 1913; ratification advised by the Scnate February 19, 1913; ratified by the President February 25, 1913; ratified by France February 28, 1913; ratifications exchanged at Washington March 14, 1913; proclaimed March 15, 1913.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an Agreement between the United States of America and the French Republic, extending the period during which the Arbitration Convention of February 10, 1908, is to remain in force, was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the thirteenth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, the original of which Agreement, being in the English and French languages, is word for word as follows:

Agreement extending the duration of the Arbitration Convention of February 10, 1908.

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, being desirous of extending the period of five years during which the Arbitration Convention concluded between them on February 10, 1908, is to remain in force, which period is about to expire, have authorized the undersigned, to wit: Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of the United States, and J. J. Jusserand, Ambassador of the French Republic to the United States, to conclude the following arrangement:

ARTICLE I.

The Convention of Arbitration of February 10, 1908, between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, the duration of which by Article III thereof was fixed at a period of five years from the date of ratification, which period will terminate on February 27, 1913, is hereby extended and continued in force for a further period of five years from February 27, 1913.

ARTICLE II.

The present Agreement shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the President of the French Republic, in accordance with the constitutional laws of France, and it shall become effective upon the date of the exchange of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

Done in duplicate, in the English and French languages, at Washington this 13th day of February, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen.

PHILANDER C KNOX [SEAL.] JUSSERAND

And whereas the said Agreement has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the fourteenth day of March, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Agreement to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this fifteenth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and [SEAL.] thirteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

FRENCH EMBASSY, Washington, March 6, 1912.

The Government of the French Republic, having learned that the Secretary of State, in the course of the trip which he is at present making, would pay a visit to Caracas where he would be the guest of President Gómez, would be pleased if on this occasion the Department of State would kindly transmit to his excellency the Hon. P. C. Knox its sincere appreciation of the good offices of the representatives of the United States at Venezuela who, since the rupture of the diplomatic relations between that country and France, have undertaken the protection of French interests.

As the Venezuelean Government is the first interested in the resumption of the said relations, it is very probable that Mr. Knox will be asked to lend his friendly assistance with a view to a solution of this question. In this event it might be of service that the Honorable Secretary of State, who already is acquainted with the conditions to which the French Government subordinates the resumption of these relations, should find on his arrival at Caracas a memorandum which would recall them to his mind.

Thus, as the Department of State knows, the Government of the Republic is entirely disposed to resume normal relations with Venezuela provided that the Government of that country consent, as it has been requested, to submit to an effective arbitration those of the French claims which could not be amicably settled within a reasonable period after the resumption of diplomatic relations.

As to the different projects which appear to have been formed by financiers for the organization of a Venezuelan National Bank or the exploitation of certain monopolies, the resumption of diplomatic relations between France and Venezuela can in no manner be bound save to the particular interests which depend on them. In Venezuela as in the other South American Republics it is moreover with capital of the United States that French capital would above all collaborate in the enterprises to be undertaken if the normal relations were reestablished to the satisfaction of the Government of the Republic.

No. 14 of July 3 last I had a further conference with Dr. J. L. Andara, Minister for Foreign Affairs ad interim, and explained to him the position of the French Government as set out in the memorandum enclosed in this despatch [sic]. Dr. Andara discussed the matter very freely and stated that it seemed that the only difference between the Venezuelan and the French Governments was that the Venezuelan Government insisted that the French claims be submitted to Venezuelan courts before arbitration, arbitration to follow if the findings of the local courts were not satisfactory in the opinion of the French Government; and that as he understood it the French Government insisted that there be arbitration without submission to the local courts.

Dr. Andara went on to express the belief that having once taken this position Venezuela could not with dignity recede from it, because to do so would be to admit the incompetency of its own courts. He then expressed the hope, as coming from President Gómez, that the matter could be arranged, and the belief that the friendly assistance of the United States Government would secure an arrangement along the lines desired by Venezuela. He also expressed the hope that I could so submit the matter to the Department as to secure this assistance. In reply I promised Dr. Andara to report the whole matter to my Government.

French Embassy, Washington, August 29, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Secretary of State: As I had the honor to write you on the 24th instant, I immediately acquainted my Government with the substance of Mr.

Elliot Northcott's communication enclosed in your letter of the 21st.1

In reply, the President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic, tells me that he agrees to the Venezuelan courts being first called upon to pass on all the claims preferred by French citizens against the Government of Venezuela, but on the express conditions that all such claims may thereafter be referred, if desire to do so is expressed, to an arbitral tribunal the membership of which would be determined in advance. Further, the French Government will not consent to negotiate with any one but an official envoy of the Venezuelan Government.

Mr. Poincaré requests me to have recourse to the Department of State's habitual kindness in order to have the foregoing answer cabled to the Minister of the United States at Caracas for transmission to the Government of President Gómez.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 29th in which you give the views of the French Government in regard to the reestablishment of diplomatic relations with Venezuela and request the Department to communicate the same by cable to Mr. Northcott, for submission to the Government of President Gómez.

I take pleasure in informing you that a copy and translation of your letter have been sent to the Legation at Caracas.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 30, 1912,

EXCELLENCY: With reference to Count de Peretti de la Rocca's note of August 29, 1912, regarding the relations of France and Venezuela, and to the Department's reply of September 3, 1912, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Elliott Northcott, the American Minister to Venezuela, has just arrived in Washington. Mr. Northcott brought with him the reply of the Venezuelan Government to the note in which he communicated the substance of Count de Peretti de la Rocca's letter to the Department of August 29th. It was at the special request of the President of Venezuela that Mr. Northcott brought this despatch in person to the Department in order that he might at the same time orally state that the President and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Venezuela have expressed the hope that diplomatic relations between France and Venezuela will soon be reestablished.

The Department will be happy if its friendly offices should result in the renewal of those relations.

A copy of the note of the Venezuelan Minister for Foreign Affairs of September 23d to Minister Northcott is enclosed.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Caracas, September 23, 1912.

Mr. Minister: I have had the honor of receiving your excellency's courteous note No. 59, dated the 4th instant, in which, at the request of the French Embassy in Washington, you transcribe the statement of the attitude of the French Government. I informed the President of the Republic, who instructed me to reply in the following terms:

The Government of Venezuela is greatly pleased that the French Government, taking into account the good will and the reasons expressed by this Chancellery, decides upon a conciliatory course preserving the decorum and the interests of both countries.

The Government of Venezuela has no objection to the claims of French citizens, decided by the Federal Court of Cassation, being submitted to an arbitral tribunal whenever there is in such decisions a violation of the principles recognized by international law. The attitude of the French Government can not be otherwise in this respect, in view of the enlightenment and the spirit of justice of the men who direct it. Consequently the Venezuelan Government considers it advisable, with a view to prevent any erroneous interpretation, that such an expression be included in the protocol of the resumption of relations.

As worded in the statement contained in your excellency's note, the right of recourse to an arbitral tribunal might occasion doubts and confusions, and the Government of Venezuela is persuaded that the French Government is also desirous of preventing such; and therefore that it is incumbent to state that the French Government will possess the right of having submitted to an arbitral tribunal those claims which have been decided by Venezuelan courts, when it adduces that in such decision some principles of international law have been violated.

With this modification, which is merely the making clear of the thought contained in the statement above referred to, the Venezuelan Government infers that there will be no objection to proceeding to the definite consideration of the matter, inasmuch, as is gathered from conversations with your excellency, both Governments are animated by the sincerest desire of reaching a satisfactory solution.

Protocol concerning renewal of relations between France and Venezuela.

The Government of the French Republic and the Government of the United States of Venezuela, desiring to reestablish friendly relations between the two countries and declaring that all motive for rupture has disappeared, have named as their respective plenipotentiaries, to wit:

who after the exchange of their respective full powers found in good and true form, have agreed to the following articles:

T

Diplomatic relations between Venezuela and France shall be reestablished from the time of the signing of the present Protocol and the two Governments shall name their respective Ministers at Paris and Caracas.

H

Within a period of three months from the exchange of ratifications of the present Protocol, the French Government shall submit to the Venezuelan Government the list of French claims against Venezuela originated by acts prior to June 30, 1903.

Such of these claims which [sic], within a period of six months after the receipt of said list, shall not have been settled by direct agreement between the Venezuelan Government on one hand and the French Government or the interested parties on the other hand, shall be taken, within a maximum period of three months, at the suit of the claimants, before the competent jurisdiction of Venezuela.

In order to avoid all subsequent dispute the two High Parties agree that the French Government shall have the right, after previous notice and reasons therefor to the Venezuelan Government, to submit to the Arbitral Tribunal [Commission] indicated by Articles III and IV the claims which may have been the subject of a Venezuelan sentence [sic] against which it considers that it ought to raise objections founded in law and equity.

III

In case of lack of a direct agreement no definite sentence or decision shall have been rendered within a period of fifteen months after proper judicial proceedings have been taken, and if such delay be not attributable exclusively to the plaintiff, the Arbitral Commission shall take cognizance of the claims which shall not have been adjudged within samperiod.

Within the three months following the total expiration of the periods indicated in the preceding articles, each of the two Governments shall designate an arbiter, if there be need therefor, and the two arbiters thus named shall by common accord choose an umpire.

In case of disagreement, the designation of the umpire shall be intrusted to a third power designated in common accord by the two Governments. If such accord be not obtainable, each of the two Governments shall designate a different power, and the selection of the umpire shall be made in concert by the powers thus designated.

The French arbiter and the Venezuelan arbiter shall meet in Caracas immediately after their designation and shall examine the claims in the cases provided for in Articles II and III.

Such of these claims of which [sic] a friendly settlement can not be made by the two arbiters within a period of twelve months from their first meeting, shall be submitted by them to the umpire, who shall decide without appeal.

The periods for the presentation of documents and supporting proofs shall be fixed by the arbiters, who shall also establish the other formalities of the proceeding [procedure].

VI

Each of the Governments shall pay the salary of its arbiter and the expenses attending his mission; the two Governments shall pay each one-half the salary of the umpire and the general and common expenses of the proceeding.

VII

The indemnities which shall be accorded to the claimants shall be delivered to the French Government in French gold or in equivalent money of Venezuela, within a period which shall in no case exceed one year, counting from the last arrangement, sentence or decision.

VIII

The Venezuelan Government confirms its preexisting obligations in that which concerns the French Diplomatic Debt. It confirms likewise the declaration annexed to the Protocol of February 19, 1902.

IX

The present Protocol shall be ratified by the competent powers and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Caracas as soon as possible and at latest by June 15, 1913.

The text of the present Protocol shall be drawn up in two copies, one French-Spanish and the other Spanish-French, and in case of dispute the French text shall be authoritative.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present Protocol in two copies, one Spanish-French, the other French-Spanish, and have thereto affixed their seals at Caracas February eleventh, nineteen hundred and thirteen.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS: EXEMPTION OF VESSELS IN THE COAST-WISE TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES FROM PAYMENT OF TOLLS.

File No. 811f. 812/355.

No. 1833.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 17, 1913.

Sir: I enclose a copy of an instruction from Sir Edward Grey to His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, dated November 14, 1912, a copy of which was handed to me by the Ambassador on the 9th ultimo,2 in which certain provisions in the Panama Canal Act of August 24th last are discussed in their relation to the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty of November 18, 1901; and I also enclose a copy of the note ³ addressed to me on July 8, 1912 by Mr. A. Mitchell Innes, His Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, stating the objections which his Government entertained to the legislation relating to the Panama Canal, which was then under discussion in Congress. A copy of the President's proclamation of November 13, 1912,2 fixing the canal tolls, is also enclosed.

Sir Edward Grey's communication, after setting forth the several grounds upon which the British Government believe the provisions of the Act are inconsistent with the stipulations of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, states * the readiness of his Government "to submit the question to arbitration if the Government of the United States would prefer to take this course" rather than "to take such steps as would remove the objections to the Act which His Majesty's Government have stated." It therefore becomes necessary for this Government to examine these objections in order to ascertain exactly in what respects this Act is regarded by the British Government as inconsistent with the provisions of that treaty, and also to explain the view of this Government upon the questions thus presented, and to consider the advisability at this time of submitting any of these questions to arbitration.

It may be stated at the outset that this Government does not agree with the interpretation placed by Sir Edward Grey upon the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, or upon the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, but for reasons which will appear hereinbelow it is not deemed necessary at present to amplify or reiterate the views of this Government upon the meaning of those treaties.

the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, "so as to indicate the limitations which" His Majesty's Government "consider it imposes upon the freedom of action of the United States," he proceeds to indicate the points in which the Canal Act infringes what he holds to be Great Britain's treaty rights.

It is obvious from the whole tenor of Sir Edward Grey's communication that in writing it he could not have taken cognizance of the President's proclamation fixing the canal tolls. Indeed, a comparison of the dates of the proclamation and the note, which are dated respectively November 13th and November 14th last, shows that the proclamation could hardly have been received in London in time for consideration in the note. Throughout his discussion of the subject, Sir Edward Grey deals chiefly with the possibilities of what the President might do under the Act, which in itself does not prescribe the tolls, but merely authorizes the President to do so; and nowhere does the note indicate that Sir Edward Grey was aware of what the President actually had done in issuing this proclamation. The proclamation, therefore, has entirely changed the situation which is discussed by Sir Edward Grey, and the diplomatic discussion, which his note now makes inevitable, must rest upon the bases as they exist at present, and not upon the hypothesis formed by the British Government at the time this note was written.

and the Treaty in the following language:2

It remains to consider whether the Panama Canal Act, in its present form, conflicts with the treaty rights to which His Majesty's Government maintain they are entitled.

Under section 5 of the Act the President is given, within certain defined limits, the right to fix the tolls, but no tolls are to be levied upon ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, and the tolls, when based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, are not to exceed 1 dollar 25 c. per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the Canal. There is also an exception for the exemptions granted by article 19 of the Convention with Panama of 1903.

The effect of these provisions is that vessels engaged in the coastwise trade will contribute nothing to the upkeep of the Canal. Similarly vessels belonging to the Government of the Republic of Panama will, in pursuance of the treaty of 1903, contribute nothing to the upkeep of the Canal. Again, in the cases where tolls are levied, the tolls in the case of ships belonging to the United States and its citizens may be fixed at a lower rate than in the case of foreign ships, and may be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and

These provisions (1) clearly conflict with the rule embodied in the principle established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of equal treatment for British and United States ships, and (2) would enable tolls to be fixed which would not be just and equitable, and would therefore not comply with rule 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

From this it appears that three objections are made to the provisions of the Act: first, that no tolls are to be levied upon ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States; second, that a discretion appears to be given to the President to discriminate in fixing tolls in favor of ships belonging to the United States and its citizens as against foreign ships; and third, that an exemption has been given to the vessels of the Republic of Panama under Article 19 of the Convention with Panama of 1903.

Considered in the reverse order of their statement, the third objection, coming at this time, is a great and complete surprise to this Government. The exemption under that article applies only to the government vessels of Panama, and was part of the agreement with Panama under which the canal was built. The Convention containing the exemption was ratified in 1904, and since then to the present time no claim has been made by Great Britain that it conflicted with British rights. The United States has always asserted the principle that the status of the countries immediately concerned by reason of their political relation to the territory in which the canal was to be constructed was different from that of all other countries. The Hay-Herran Treaty with Colombia of 1903 also provided that the war vessels of that country were to be given free passage. It has always been supposed by this Government that Great Britain recognized the propriety of the exemptions made in both of those treaties. It is not believed, therefore, that the British Government intend to be understood as proposing arbitration upon the question of whether or not this provision of the Act, which in accordance with our treaty with Panama exempts from tolls the government vessels of Panama, is in conflict with the provision of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

Considering the second objection based upon the discretion thought to be conferred upon the President to discriminate in favor of ships belonging to the United States and its citizens, it is sufficient, in view of the fact that the President's proclamation fixing the tolls was silent on the subject, to quote the language used by the President in the memorandum attached to the Act at the time of signature, in which he says:1

It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss the policy of such discrimination until the question may arise in the exercise of the President's discretion.

On this point no question has as yet arisen which, in the words of the existing arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain, "it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy," and until then any suggestion of arbitration may well be regarded as premature.

It is not believed, however, that in the objection now under consideration Great Britain intends to question the right of the United States to exempt from the payment of tolls its vessels of war and other vessels engaged in the service of this Government. Great Britain does not challenge the right of the United States to protect the canal. United States vessels of war and those employed in government service are a part of our protective system. By the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty we assume the sole responsibility for its neutralization. It is inconceivable that this Government should be required to pay canal tolls for the vessels used for protecting the canal, which we alone must protect. The movement of United States vessels in executing governmental policies of protection are not susceptible of explanation or differentiation. The United States could not be called upon to explain what relation the movement of a particular vessel through the canal has to its protection. The British objection. therefore, is understood as having no relation to the use of the canal by vessels in the service of the United States Government.

Regarding the first objection, the question presented by Sir Edward Grey arises solely upon the exemption in the Canal Act of vessels engaged in our coastwise trade.

On this point Sir Edward Grey says' that "His Majesty's Government do not question the right of the United States to grant subsidies to United States shipping generally, or to any particular branches of that shipping," and it is admitted in his note 2 that the exemption of certain classes of ships "would be a form of subsidy to those vessels"; but it appears from the note 3 that His Majesty's Government would regard that form of subsidy as objectionable under the treaty if the effect of such subsidy would be "to impose upon British or other foreign shipping an unfair share of the burden of the upkeep of the Canal, or to create a discrimination in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise to prejudice rights secured to British shipping by this Treaty."

It is not contended by Great Britain that equality of treatment has any reference to British participation in the coastwise trade of the United States, which, in accordance with general usage, is reserved to American ships. The objection is only to such exemption of that trade from toll payments as may adversely affect British rights to equal treatment in the payment of tolls, or to just and equitable tolls. It will be helpful here to recall that we are now only engaged in considering (quoting from Sir Edward Grey's note) "Whether the Panama Canal Act in its present form conflicts with the treaty rights to which His Majesty's Government maintain they are entitled," concerning which he concludes: 2

These provisions (1) clearly conflict with the rule embodied in the principle established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of equal treatment for British and United States ships, and (2) would enable tolls to be fixed which would not be just and equitable, and would therefore not comply with rule 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

On the first of these points the objection of the British Government to the exemption of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States is stated as follows:

the exemption will, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be a violation of the equal treatment secured by the treaty, as it will put the "coastwise trade" in a preferential position as regards other shipping. Coastwise trade cannot be circumscribed so completely that benefits conferred upon it will not affect vessels engaged in the foreign trade. To take an example, if cargo intended for an United States port beyond the Canal, either from east or west, and shipped on board a foreign ship could be sent to its destination more cheaply, through the ojeration of the proposed exemption, by being landed at an United States port before reaching the Canal, and then sent on as coastwise trade, shippers would benefit by adopting this course in preference to sending the goods direct to their destination through the Canal on board the foreign ship.

This objection must be read in connection with the views expressed by the British Government while this Act was pending in Congress, which were stated in the note of July 8, 1912 on the subject from Mr. Innes as follows:5

As to the proposal that exemption shall be given to vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, a more difficult question arises. If the trade should be so regulated as to make it certain that only bona-fide coastwise traffic which is reserved for United States vessels would be benefited by this exemption, it may be that no objection could be taken.

This statement may fairly be taken as an admission that this Government may exempt its vessels engaged in the coastwise trade from the payment of tolls, provided such extension be restricted to bona-fide coastwise traffic. As to this it is sufficient to say that obviously the United States is not to be denied the power to remit tolls to its own coastwise trade because of a suspicion or possibility that the regulations yet to be framed may not restrict this exemption to bona-fide coastwise traffic.

The answer to this objection, therefore, apart from any question of treaty interpretation, is that it rests on conjecture as to what may happen rather than upon proved facts, and does not present a question requiring submission to arbitration as it has not as yet passed beyond the stage where it can be profitably dealt with by diplomatic discussion. It will be remembered that only questions which it may not be possible to settle by diplomacy are required by our arbitration treaty to be referred to arbitration.

On this same point Sir Edward Grev urges another objection to the exemption of coastwise vessels as follows: 1

Again, although certain privileges are granted to vessels engaged in an exclusively coastwise trade, His Majesty's Government are given to understand that there is nothing in the laws of the United States which prevents any United States ship from combining foreign commerce with coastwise trade, and consequently from entering into direct competition with foreign vessels while remaining "prima facie" entitled to the privilege of free passage through the Canal. Moreover any restriction which may be deemed to be now applicable might at any time be removed by legislation or even perhaps by mere changes in the regulations.

This objection also raises a question which, apart from treaty interpretation, depends upon future conditions and facts not yet ascertained, and for the same reasons as are above stated its submission to arbitration at this time would be premature.

The second point of Sir Edward Grey's objection to the exemption of vessels engaged in coastwise trade remains to be considered. On this point he says 2 that the proisions of the Act "would enable tolls to be fixed which would not be just and equitable, and would therefore not comply with rule 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty."

It will be observed that this statement evidently was framed without knowledge of the fact that the President's proclamation fixing the tolls had issued. It is not claimed in the note that the tolls actually fixed are not "just and equitable" or even that all vessels passing through the canal were not taken into account in fixing the amount of the tolls, but only that either or both contingencies are possible.

If the British contention is correct that the true construction of the treaty requires all traffic to be reckoned in fixing just and equitable tolls, it requires at least an allegation that the tolls as fixed are not just and equitable and that all traffic has not been reckoned in fixing them before the United States can be called upon to prove that this course was not followed, even assuming that the burden of proof would rest with the United States in any event, which is open to question. This Government welcomes the opportunity, however, of informing the British Government that the tolls fixed in the President's proclamation are based upon the computations set forth in the report of Professor Emory R. Johnson, a copy of which is forwarded herewith for delivery to Sir Edward Grey, and that the tolls which would be paid by American coastwise vessels, but for the exemption contained in the Act, were computed in determining the rate fixed by the President.

By reference to page 208 of Professor Johnson's report, it will be seen that the estimated net tonnage of shipping using the canal in 1915 is as follows:

Coast to coast American shipping ______American shipping carrying foreign commerce of the United States___Foreign shipping carrying commerce of the United States and foreign _____ 1, 000, 000

It was on this estimate that tolls fixed in the President's proclamation were based.

Sir Edward Grey says, "This rule [1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty] also provides that the tolls should be 'just and equitable.' The purpose of these words," he adds, "was to limit the tolls to the amount representing the fair value of the services rendered, i. e., to the interest on the capital expended and the cost of the operation and maintenance of the Canal." If, as a matter of fact, the tolls now fixed (of which he seems unaware) do not exceed this requirement, and as heretofore pointed out there is no claim that they do, it is not apparent under Sir Edward Grey's contention how Great Britain could be receiving unjust and inequitable treatment if the United States favors its coastwise vessels by not collecting their share of the tolls necessary to meet the requirement. There is a very clear distinction between an omission to "take into account" the coastwise tolls in order to determine a just and equitable rate, which is as far as this objection goes, and the remission of such tolls, or their collection coupled with their repayment in the form of a subsidy.

The exemption of the coastwise trade from tolls, or the refunding of tolls collected from the coastwise trade, is merely a subsidy granted by the United States to that trade, and the loss resulting from not collecting, or from refunding those tolls, will fall solely upon the United States. In the same way the loss will fall on the United States if the tolls fixed by the President's proclamation on all vessels represent less than the fair value of the service rendered, which must necessarily be the case for many years; and the United States will, therefore, be in the position of subsidizing or aiding not merely its own coastwise vessels, but foreign vessels as well.

Apart from the particular objections above considered, it is not understood that Sir Edward Grey questions the right of the United States to subsidize either its coastwise or its foreign shipping, inasmuch as he says that His Majesty's Government do not find "either in the letter or in the spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty any surrender by either of the contracting Powers of the right to encourage its shipping or its commerce by such subsidies as it may deem expedient."

To summarize the whole matter: The British objections are, in the first place, about the Canal Act only; but the Canal Act does not fix the tolls. They ignore the President's proclamation fixing the tolls which puts at rest practically all of the suppositious injustice and inequality which Sir Edward Grey thinks might follow the administration of the Act, and concerning which he expresses so many and grave fears. Moreover, the gravamen of the complaint is not that the Canal Act will actually injure in its operation British shipping or destroy rights claimed for such shipping under the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, but that such injury or destruction may possibly be the effect thereof; and further, and more particularly, Sir Edward Grey complains that the action of Congress in enacting the legislation under discussion foreshadows that Congress or the President may hereafter take some action which might be injurious to British shipping and destructive of its rights under the treaty. Concerning this possible future injury, it is only necessary to say that in the absence of an allegation of actual or certain impending injury, there appears nothing upon which to base a sound com-Concerning the infringement of rights claimed by Great Britain, it may be remarked that it would, of course, be idle to contend that Congress has not the power, or that the President. properly authorized by Congress, may not have the power to violate the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, in its aspect as a rule of municipal law. Obviously, however, the fact that Congress has the power to do something contrary to the welfare of British shipping or that Congress has put or may put into the hands of the President the power to do something which may be contrary to the interests possessed by British shipping affords no just ground for complaint. It is the improper exercise of a power and not its possession which alone can give rise to an international cause of action; or to put it in terms of municipal law, it is not the possession of the power to trespass upon another's property which gives a right of action in trespass, but only the actual exercise of that power in committing the act of trespass itself.

When, and if, complaint is made by Great Britain that the effect of the act and the proclamation together will be to subject British vessels as a matter of fact to inequality of treatment, or to unjust and inequitable tolls in conflict with the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, the question will then be raised as to whether the United States is bound by the treaty both to take into account and to collect tolls from American vessels, and also whether under the obligations of that treaty British vessels are entitled to equality of treatment in all respects with the vessels of the United States. Until these objections rest upon something more substantial than mere possibility, it is not believed that they should be submitted to arbitration. The existence of an arbitration treaty does not create a right of action; it merely provides a means of settlement to be resorted to only when other resources of diplomacy have failed. It is not now deemed necessary, therefore, to enter upon a discussion of the views entertained by Congress and by the President as to the meaning of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty in relation to questions of fact which have not yet arisen, but may possibly arise in the future in connection with the administration

It is recognized by this Government that the situation developed by the present discussion may require an examination by Great Britain into the facts above set forth as to the basis upon which the tolls fixed by the President's proclamation have been computed, and also into the regulations and restrictions circumscribing the coastwise trade of the United States, as well as into other facts bearing upon the situation, with the view of determining whether or not, as a matter of fact, under present conditions there is any ground for claiming that the Act and proclamation actually subject British vessels to inequality of treatment, or to unjust and inequitable tolls.

If it should be found as a result of such an examination on the part of Great Britain that a difference of opinion exists between the two Governments on any of the important questions of fact involved in this discussion, then a situation will have arisen, which, in the opinion of this Government, could with advantage be dealt with by referring the controversy to a Commission of Inquiry for examination and report, in the manner provided for in the unratified arbitration treaty of August 3, 1911, between the United States and Great Britain.

The necessity for inquiring into questions of fact in their relation to controversies under diplomatic discussion was contemplated by both Parties in negotiating that treaty, which provides for the institution, as occasion arises, of a Joint High Commission of Inquiry, to which, upon the request of either Party, might be referred for impartial and conscientious investigation any controversy between them, the Commission being authorized upon such reference "to examine into and report upon the particular questions or matters referred to it, for the purpose of facilitating the solution of disputes by elucidating the facts, and to define the issues presented by such questions, and also to include in its report such recommendations and conclusions as may be appropriate."

This proposal might be carried out, should occasion arise for adopting it, either under a special agreement, or under the unratified arbitration treaty above mentioned, if Great Britain is prepared to join in ratifying that treaty, which the United States is prepared to do.

You will take an early opportunity to read this despatch to Sir Edward Grey; and if he should so desire, you will leave a copy of it with him.

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

British Embassy, Washington, February 27, 1913.

Sir: His Majesty's Government are unable before the Administration leaves office to reply fully to the arguments contained in your despatch of the 17th ultimo to the United States Chargé d'Affaires at London regarding the difference of opinion that has arisen between our two Governments as to the interpretation of the Hav-Pauncefote Treaty, but they desire me in the meantime to offer the following observations with regard to the argument that no case has vet arisen calling for any submission to arbitration of the points in difference between His Majesty's Government and that of the United States on the interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, because no actual injury has as yet resulted to any British interest and all that has been done so far is to pass an Act of Congress under which action held by His Majesty's Government to be prejudicial to British interests might be taken. From this view His Majesty's Government feel bound to express their dissent. They conceive that international law or usage does not support the doctrine that the passing of a statute in contravention of a treaty right affords no ground of complaint for the infraction of that right, and that the nation which holds that its treaty rights have been so infringed or brought into question by a denial that they exist, must, before protesting and seeking a means of determining the point at issue, wait until some further action violating those rights in a concrete instance has been taken, which in the present instance would, according to your argument, seem to mean, until tolls have been actually levied upon British vessels from which vessels owned by citizens of the United States have been exempted.

The terms of the Proclamation issued by the President fixing the Canal tolls, and the particular method which your note sets forth as having been adopted by him, in his discretion, on a given occasion for determining on what basis they should be fixed do not appear to His Majesty's Government to affect the general issue as to the meaning of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty which they have raised. In their view the Act of Congress, when it declared that no tolls should be levied on ships engaged in the coasting trade of the United States, and when, in further directing the President to fix those tolls within certain limits, it distinguished between vessels of the citizens of the United States and other vessels, was in itself and apart from any action which may be taken under it, inconsistent with the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty for equality of treatment between the The exemption referred to appears to His vessels of all nations. Majesty's Government to conflict with the express words of Rule 1 of Article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, and the Act gave the President no power to modify or discontinue the exemption.

In their opinion the mere conferring by Congress of power to fix lower tolls on United States ships than on British ships amounts to a denial of the right of British shipping to equality of treatment, and is therefore inconsistent with the treaty irrespective of the particular way in which such power has been so far actually exercised.

In stating thus briefly their view of the compatibility of the Act of Congress with their Treaty rights His Majestv's Government hold that the difference which exists between the two Governments is clearly one which falls within the meaning of Article I of the Arbitration Treaty of 1908.

As respects the suggestion contained in the last paragraph but one of your note under reply His Majesty's Government conceive that Article I of the Treaty of 1908 so clearly meets the case that has now arisen that it is sufficient to put its provisions in force in whatever manner the two Governments may find the most convenient. It is unnecessary to repeat that a reference to arbitration would be rendered superfluous if steps were taken by the United States Government to remove the objection entertained by His Majesty's Government to the Act.

His Majesty's Government have not desired me to argue in this note that the view they take of the main issue—the proper interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty-is the correct view, but only that a case for the determination of that issue has already arisen and now exists. They conceive that the interest of both countries requires that issue to be settled promptly before the opening of the Canal, and by means which will leave no ground for regret or complaint. The avoidance of possible friction has been one of the main objects of those methods of arbitration of which the United States has been for so long a foremost and consistent advocate. His Majestv's Government think it more in accordance with the General Arbitration Treaty that the settlement desired should precede rather than follow the doing of any acts, which could raise questions of actual damage suffered; and better also that when vessels begin to pass through the great waterway in whose construction all the world has been interested there should be left subsisting no cause of difference which could prevent any other nation from joining without reserve in the satisfaction the people of the United States will feel at the completion of a work of such grandeur and utility.

Note.—The message of President Manuel Estrada C. was read to the National Legislative Assembly March 1, 1913, and transmitted to the Secretary of State March 8, 1913 by the American Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Wilson. The following are the only passages referring to the United States:

[Translation.]

Our relations with the great Republic of the United States of North America become every day closer, not only on account of the facilities offered by the maritime and railway communications, but also due to the increase of our commercial relations which are the logical consequence thereof, and to the interest which the American people feel for a new and industrious country placed but three days journey from their ports. A conclusive proof of this felicitous circumstance and of the friendly relations which unite both peoples and Governments was the visit with which his excellency the Secretary of State, in behalf of His Excellency the President of the United States of America, honored Guatemala in the month of March of last year: a high distinction which the Government and whole country appreciated in all its worth and which it endeavored to return in the most appropriate form. As the Honorable Assembly was holding sessions at that time of the year it also received the distinguished American statesman in its midst, and the Government hastened to respond to the courtesy of His Excellency the President of that friendly nation, by commissioning the Secretary of State in the Department of Foreign Affairs personally to make known to the Government of Washington the gratitude of the nation and of the administration that governs it.

And finally, the labor which has been undertaken by the Department of Finance and Public Credit for the financial reorganization of the country, is about to receive a conclusive resolution, and I hope, if such an event be realized during the present session of the Honorable Assembly, that I have accomplished one of my most earnest aspirations: to fulfill the only promise left to be discharged of those which I made to the nation when I entered its service which I have not yet been able to perform, due to causes stronger than my constant and sincere wish, but which today is near such a solution as is better suited to the sacred interests of the nation.

I hope that you will see fit to telegraph to the Foreign Office a brief outline of the salient and favorable features of the agreement recommending the earnest consideration of the proposal and that as Mr. Cooper already has a copy of it the Foreign Office should consult him and study his copy in order to avoid unfortunate delay.

I would also be pleased if your excellency would strongly urge the adoption of this plan, pointing out the deep concern of this Government in the carrying out by this means of its broad policy with regard to Central America where its interests are necessarily of

I have been surprised at the lack of any information in your note tending to show that the Foreign Office has given any consideration to the proposal outlined in the Department's memorandum of December 3d. Pending additional indications as to the ultimate decision of Great Britain with regard to this Unified Loan Agreement, which will also be submitted to the Foreign Office by the American Embassy in London, I have decided for the present to refrain from replying further to your excellency's note of December 30th. Seligman and Company, to Mr. Cooper, of the Council of Foreign Bondholders, on December 26, 1912, which shows clearly the character of the proposed loan agreement and the consideration of the bankers for the bondholders in not wishing to have the agreement signed until after the Council shall have recommended it to the bondholders, nor ratified by the Congress of Guatemala until after having been favorably voted upon by the bondholders themselves.

The British Embassy's note of December 30th is most surprising to this Government. As has been pointed out orally to Mr. Mitchell

Innes of the British Embassy, the attitude of Great Britain in demanding one and only one solution of the difficulty, especially when the solution is one likely to block the development of a well-recognized policy of the United States in a sphere in which this Government is preeminently interested, would not appear consistent with even an ordinary regard for the broad interests and policies of the United States.

Considering, moreover, the special circumstances of the case, it is the judgment of the Department that in all probability the arrangement submitted by the bankers would secure to the bondholders better returns upon their money than any other measure which the Government of Guatemala could be induced to accept. You will note upon study of the Unified Loan Agreement, that, as pointed out in the Department's instruction of December 6th, it provides for the collection of the customs by an agency to be appointed by the bankers and through a system of certificates which are issuable only by the customs agency, thus assuring the direct payment to the agency of all the revenues derived from the export duty on coffee and from all the import duties payable in gold. Your attention is also directed to articles 7 and 14 of the agreement. The Department believes that the lcan contemplated by this agreement will be sufficiently well secured to relieve the bondholders of any fears such as they have felt in the past for the payment of the interest and prinicpal of the loan. Arbitration, on the other hand, could have at best only results of doubt-Even should it result in the restitution of the coffee revenues there would be no guaranty that what has occurred in the past would not recur in the future, namely, that the export tax on coffee might be reduced or the revenues diverted to other uses. delay incident to such an arbitration and the fulfilment of an arbitral award should also be contrasted with the present proposal to give the British bondholders new four-per-cent bonds in exchange, bond for bond, for their present four-per-cent bonds. The new bonds should pay regular interest and be redeemed at par through the operation of the sinking fund. This offer, as stated in Mr. Strauss' letter to Mr. Cooper, is considerably more favorable to the bondholders than the offer first contemplated by President Cabrera, viz: five-per-cent bonds to the amount of seventy-five per cent of their present holdings, instead of bond for bond.

Emphasis should be laid upon the fact that although the new loan will be not quite four times so large as the present British loan, the security behind it will be four times as great, and that by accepting the loan agreement the British bondholders will enter upon the enjoyment as security not only of the very coffee revenues the specific restitution of which the Foreign Office demands, but also of various other additional revenues.

The Department has stated orally to Mr. Mitchell Innes that it could not accede to the request of Great Britain that it should support the British demand for arbitration or for specific performance in restoring the coffee revenues. The British Embassy appears to be laboring under the misapprehension that this Government had already promised such support. What it actually agreed to in September, when asking a delay of twenty days in which Guatemala might negotiate through American bankers a satisfactory arrangement for financial rehabilitation that should include provision for an equitable settlement of just British and other claims, was informally to urge the British Government to desist from pressing its demand for arbitration for the period, and that at the expiration of that period "this Government in the present circumstances will regret to find itself absolutely unwilling further to intervene in the matter." Although Guatemala did not succeed in concluding such negotiations within the specified time, it now appears to have done so in a manner regardful of all equitable and just British pretensions while calculated to further the fulfilment of that broad policy of financial rehabilitation in Central America in which this Government has such a deep interest.

Thus the circumstances materially changed, and the turn of events for which this Government had hoped appears to have occurred. The Government of the United States, therefore, is greatly interested in seeing the loan agreement, which contemplates also the placing of Guatemala's currency upon a gold basis, become an accomplished fact and it believes that if the British bondholders will promptly accept the Unified Loan Agreement, the Government of Guatemala will adopt it.

The Department desires you to seek an early interview with Sir Edward Grey to urge him to study carefully the Unified Loan Agreement, a copy of which you will hand him and with which he should already be familiar through consultation with Mr. Cooper, and to consider the question upon a broad basis of international policy. You will point out to him the fact that the Department considers that Great Britain should now show a fuller appreciation of this Government's deep and predominant interest in the region of the Caribbean; that it is most desirous of seeing this financial plan accomplished; that it believes the agreement offers the bondholders immediately adequate security upon a basis more satisfactory than any they could probably obtain after extended delays; that this Government only agreed to support the British demands in case this agreement should fail of adoption in Guatemala after having been accepted by the bondholders; and that in view of all these circumstances this Government earnestly hopes that the Foreign Office will recommend to the Council of Foreign Bondholders the acceptance of the Unified Loan Agreement.

In short, you will not conceal from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs the fact that the Government of the United States feels very earnestly in this matter and expects the British Government to consider it from a broader and friendlier viewpoint than appears to have been the case hitherto, when doubtless the importance attached to the subject had not been clearly understood. In the course of your conversation it will doubtless occur to you to give point to the attitude of this Government by the discreet suggestion that the British Government would doubtless be amazed if in some country correspondingly within a sphere of special British interest the Government of the United States should press arbitrarily for a specific solution of a question involving American citizens without any regard for the broad interests and policies of the State, in such a case Great Britain, in whose sphere of special interest the controversy had arisen. The argument indicated is hardly answerable, especially when it is borne in mind that in the case of the rights of the British bondholders the proposed arrangement offers them an alternative consideration quite as advantageous if not, indeed, more advantageous than would be obtained in the opinion of this Department by the specific solution for which the British Government presses to the great inconvenience of the interests of the United States.

You will add, should Sir Edward Grey not respond favorably, that this Government has already been much surprised at the apparent failure of the Foreign Office even to consider the loan agreement as outlined in the Department's memorandum of December 3rd, and that in view of its failure to do so, this Government feels obliged to decline to support the demand of the British Government for the arbitration of the matter.

[Inclosure-Extract.]

Mr. Frederick Strauss to the Secretary of the Council of Foreign Bondholders.

DECEMBER 26, 1912.

Dear Mr. Cooper: Herewith I enclose a copy of Unified Loan Agreement between the Republic of Guatemala and Speyer and Company and J. and W. Seligman and Company. This agreement has been under negotiation for some weeks and is now, I believe, in satisfactory shape. We are informed that the President of Guatemala is in a mood to sign this agreement without undue delay and to recommend its ratification by Congress. If our information is correct, this is a condition of affairs that should not be permitted to go by.

Permit me to point out that the revenues pledged under the agreement in question will be collected by an American Customs Agency. And that the bonds proposed to be issued will thus bear a character giving them greater value, both intrinsically and marketwise, than could be hoped for under any other form of collection. It is proposed to give to the English bondholders an amount in new 4% bonds equal to the principal of the existing bonds. Former agreements contemplated less than the par value in 5% bonds; the change to par in 4% bonds was at my urgent request, in order to meet the intimation you gave me while in New York that you would not look with favor on a settlement that reduced the par value of existing bonds. You will see that I have succeeded in getting what you prefer. You will observe in the schedule attached to the agreement a statement of the revenues pledged. These revenues are pledged not only for the 4% bonds to be given to the English bondholders, but also for the 5% bonds to be issued as soon as practicable; the proceeds of the 5% bonds are to be used for the reform of Guatemalan currency, for furnishing cash to Guatemala and for the settlement of its debts. The revenues are, you will notice, ample, amounting for 1912 to twice the service of the loan on bonds presently to be issued, without taking account of the increased coffee duty, raised on September 18, 1912, from $1 to $1.50 gold per quintal of cleaned coffee and from $0.80 to $1.20 gold for uncleaned coffee.

I further direct your attention to the concluding paragraph of article 14, authorizing the Customs Agency "to invoke and obtain from the national Government of the bankers such further protection and aid as circumstances may render requisite."

A copy of this agreement will no doubt in due course reach you through the British Foreign Office, which will have obtained it through the State Department of the United States. Whether in the present state of the negotiations it is for the Council of Foreign Bondholders to give its answer through the British Foreign Office and thus through the Department of State and our firm at Guatemala, or to Guatemala through our firm direct, is a question of etiquette that I cannot undertake to answer. What I wish to emphasize is the importance of a prompt answer through either channel, if advantage is to be taken of what seems a favorable opportunity for settling this vexatious matter. What we require in the first instance is the statement from you that the Council of Foreign Bondholders is prepared to recommend the settlement to its bondholders. This having been done, nothing further will be required until President Cabrera has signed the agreement, whereupon we will notify you, so that a meeting of the bondholders may be called in London to approve the action of the Council. As soon as this formal approval has been had, President Cabrera will under the agreements be obligated, on notice from us, to submit the arrangement to Congress, and, if our information is correct, Congress is likely to approve whatever the President recommends. * * *

FREDERICK STRAUSS.

P. S. In rereading the letter, I note that I have made no reference to the arrears of interest. The Government of Guatemala has absolutely declined to make any further concession.

The Guatemalan Government has been informed that the British Government refuses to consider a just arrangement for converting the external debt of Guatemala and thereby make it possible to reorganize the finances and currency of that country, and is painfully surprised thereat. If the Department considers it advisable the Guatemalan Government will send a special financial and diplomatic agent to London. The Foreign Office desires to know whether you have any advices since December 28, 1912.

The American bankers have been advised by Cooper that the Council of foreign bondholders cannot consider any proposal unless submitted and approved by the British Foreign Office. In the meantime Cooper's copy should be available to the Foreign Office.

His representations were received amiably but he does not hope for the consent of the British Government. He informed Sir Edward Grey that his representations were merely preparatory and he would be more fully informed of the situation after detailed instructions had been received from the Department.

The Foreign Office seems to have a complete distrust of any negotiations with the President of Guatemala other than the insistence on the restoration of the coffee revenues. The Foreign Office appears loath to depart from the fixed purpose of having the coffee revenues restored, for fear that they would abandon a secure position for one of great uncertainty.

Sir Edward stated in the course of the conversation that the chief concern of the British Government in this matter was its unwillingness to abandon a position of comparative security for one of uncertainty in the chances of success of the loan agreement; to which the Chargé replied that the Department was convinced that the agreement would be successful with his support if prompt action were taken, and in case of failure he felt sure the Department would support the British contention for the restitution of the coffee revenues. If further discussion with the British Foreign Office about the Guatemalan loan contract should prove necessary, his attention is directed to portions of instructions of December 6 and January 7 showing greater permanency and certainty as opposed to restitution of coffee revenues. This Government is not asking the Foreign Office definitely to abandon its position, only in case the loan agreement goes into effect. All that seems to be necessary now to complete the contract is the recommendation by the Council of Foreign Bondholders to the bondholders, but the Council seems to be unwilling to act unless advised by the Foreign Office to do so. If the bondholders agree to the arrangement and the agreement then fail, this Government will be ready to support the British as stated in the memorandum of December 3. At the same time this Government can hardly be expected to abandon so important a step in an important policy when it seems to be upon the point of fulfillment. The present administration is most anxious to see the matter concluded and would deplore any further delay.

He stated that the most careful and willing consideration had been given to the Department's representations, with the earnest wish to meet the desires of the Department, but the Foreign Office did not see its way clear to make the desired recommendations to the bondholders; that the British Government was convinced of the bad faith of the President of Guatemala and could not bring itself to believe in the possibility of success of the loan negotiations; that he had every reason to believe that the Government of Guatemala seemed to be favorable to the loan negotiations in order to avoid a settlement of its obligations. A memorandum was handed to Mr. Laughlin. [Quotation therefrom.]

I think there is very little by way of comment that I can add to the several telegrams on this subject which I have already had occasion to despatch, but I venture to say that while I did not feel very sanguine of the Foreign Office's consent to support the proposed loan agreement, the disposition Sir E. Grey showed at the interview I had with him on the 16th instant had led me to hope for an answer somewhat different from the one he gave me yesterday; and even at yesterday's interview I got the impression that the conclusion he expressed had not been arrived at on the merits of the loan agreement scheme alone or entirely on his own judgment.

Memorandum from the British Foreign Office.

His Majesty's Government have had under careful consideration the arguments advanced by the State Department in favour of a scheme for the conversion of the Guatemala debt by means of a loan to be issued by United States bankers.

In the opinion of His Majesty's Government the case for the British bond-holders is a particularly strong one. The 1895 loan, in which was included the whole of the internal as well as the external debt of Guatemala then outby the loan contract for the security of the coffee duties, which were assigned by the loan contract for the service of the debt. Shortly after the issue the Guatemalan Government arbitrarily withdrew the security and for the past fourteen years have paid no interest at all in spite of the fact which appears from the figures supplied to the State Department by Messrs. Seligman & Company that the appears the coffee duties for the local way. pany that the average receipts from the coffee duties for the last ten years would have sufficed to pay the interest nearly three times over.

The bondholders however being unable themselves to obtain any satisfaction have placed their interests unreservedly in the hands of His Majesty's Government with the request that His Majesty's Government will sustain their right to the restitution of their security.

His Majesty's Government having failed to secure such restitution by means of direct negotiations with the Guatemalan Government invoked the good offices of the United States Government to move the Guatemalan Government to refer the matter to arbitration. To this request the United States Government at first showed a disposition to accede, and a strong note was addressed by the State Department to the Guatemalan Government. Subsequently however the State Department have assumed a different attitude and they now require as a condition of their assistance that the British bondholders should agree to join in a conversion scheme which certain United States financiers are endeavouring to persuade the President of Guatemala to conclude.

In regard to the proposed scheme it should be noted that the offer which the bondholders are invited to accept is not a firm offer but is conditional upon the conditional upon the assent not only of the President, but also of the Congress of Guatemala being obtained. Moreover, if the bondholders were to adopt this scheme they would be renouncing the clearly defined position they at present occupy, in which they are sustained by every principle of legal and moral right. In this connection His Majesty's Government are bound to remember the failure of a similar scheme in Honduras when the British bondholders were induced to abandon an agreement concluded by them with the President of Honduras, since which time they have received no payments at all since which time they have received no payments at all.

His Majesty's Government are aware that the proposed conversion is not regarded with favour by Guatemalans in general nor by the President in particular, since the loss of control of the national finances would deprive the latter of the means of defraying the expenses incidental to his conduct of the affairs of his country. Ever since the first conversion proposal was made by United States financiers some three and a half years ago the President has done all in his power to evade either having to conclude an agreement or to refuse point blank to do so. His success so far has been remarkable and it is highly improbable that he would at this moment give up a point which he has contested with such per-His encouragement of the scheme proposed by the United States financiers is therefore presumably due to his apprehension that His Majesty's Government intended to press the claim and to his desire to prevent it from receivIng any support from the United States Government, and is in itself no guaranty that the scheme will be carried into effect. The State Department indeed assert that the attitude of His Majesty's Government and of the bondholders is preventing the conclusion of the agreement, but it is important to note that in none of the previous negotiations extending over three and a half years had it been thought necessary by the United States Government to consult the wishes of the British bondholders at all, or has it been suggested that its success depended upon their consent. After the experience in Honduras it would not be reasonable to place upon British bondholders the responsibility for failure of similar schemes.

In these circumstances, and in view of the fact already explained to the United States Government, that it would be entirely contrary to the practice of His Majesty's Government to recommend to the bondholders any form of financial arrangement affecting the value of their bonds, His Majesty's Government, whilst deeply regretting that the United States Government feel unable to join them in requesting the Guatemalan Government to refer the question to arbitration, have no option but to adopt such measures as may be best calculated to obtain satisfaction from the Guatemalan Government.

If it is decided to publish the correspondence on this subject, His Majesty's Government will not fail to refer to the United States Government in due course any communications which have been received from them, and which it may be desired to include in the Blue Book.

His Majesty's Government very much regret that they are unable to urge the bondholders to agree to the scheme proposed by the United States Government, especially as the United States Government is so much in favour of it, but they cannot for the reasons given above share the hopes of its success and ask the bondholders to abandon even temporarily the claim to the restitution of the coffee duties, to which they are clearly entitled.

SIR: With reference to the matter of the solution of the British debt which has been pressed upon the Government of Guatemala by the British Minister, Sir Lionel Carden, I have the honor to report that on the 7th I asked President Estrada Cabrera, during a conversation which I had with him, to inform me in what state the matter then was. He replied that it was quite unchanged since our previous conversation. He again spoke most bitterly of the manner in which the British Minister was pressing his demands, stating that Sir Lionel flatly refused to discuss the matter or to listen to any arguments from him, that he merely repeated that he was there not to argue the question but to demand the rights which the British Government would insist upon. The President informed me that the British Minister had stated that on Saturday, May the 10th, he would present his threatened note at six in the evening.

On Sunday the 11th I learned that the note had been presented and an agreement reached between the British Minister and the Government. I at once called at the British Legation where Sir Lionel informed me that in accordance with his promise he had presented a note at six o'clock on Saturday evening stating that relations would be broken on Thursday the 15th if the Government of Guatemala failed to accede to his demands before that time. It seems that the employé carrying the note in question met the Minister for Foreign Affairs coming out of his office at six o'clock. The Minister requested the employé not to deliver the note as he had just finished arranging a counter proposition with Mr. Bickford, local agent of the bondholders, which he was on the point of transmitting to Sir Lionel. The employé telephoned to the British Legation for further instructions and was told by Sir Lionel that the time for listening to a counter proposition had passed, and that he was to present the note as instructed. That same evening, Mr. Bickford was again summoned, and the agreement as outlined by Sir Lionel, was signed.

I had the honor to report in my telegram of May 12 such information as I had been able to obtain as to the nature of the agreement. Yesterday afternoon the Minister for Foreign Affairs requested me to call on him. He stated that in view of the moral assistance that the Government of the United States had furnished the Government of Guatemala many times during the financial negotiations, and in view of the friendly interest that I had shown in the matter, he wished to explain to me what had taken place.

He stated that every effort had been made to come to a satisfactory arrangement with the American bankers, but that there seemed to be one point on which agreement was impossible, which wrecked the entire negotiations, namely the refusal of the bankers to admit the Government of Guatemala as a judge as well as the bankers, of when a sufficient number of foreign bonds had been bought in. This was the reason for the insistence on the part of Guatemala of the insertion of the words "and the Republic" in the contract which I had previously mentioned to the Department. Therefore there was no other recourse than to accept the demands of the British Minister.

According to the Minister for Foreign Affairs these demands consist merely in the restoration of the contract as it stood in 1895, providing for the payment of current interest and amortization. The matter of accrued interest will be taken up at the end of four years by the Government of Great Britain. The tone of the Minister was quite optimistic, a curious contrast to the attitude previously taken by both himself and the President in discussing the matter He felt that the amount necessary to cover the current interest would not only not cripple the financial affairs of Guatemala, but would be so light a burden that it would be scarcely felt.

He stated that it was his belief that the resumption of interest payment would immediately cause a considerable increase in the value of the bonds, thus augmenting the foreign credit of Guatemala. The Government of Guatemala will therefore, at the end of some months, be in a much better situation to arrange a loan with American bankers on easy terms. The Minister assured me that the Government of Guatemala had still the fullest intentions of making such an arrangement.

AGREEMENT TO ARRANGE THE PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON THE FOREIGN DEBT, AND A DECREE APPROVING IT.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in view of the sickness of the Minister for Finance, and with special instructions from the Constitutional President of the Republic for the purpose of resuming the payment of interest on the foreign 4% bonds, and Mr. Andrew Bickford, legal agent of the Council of Foreign Bondholders in London, who in turn represents the holders of the above-mentioned 4% bonds, have agreed on the following points:

1. The Minister for Finance will hand to the Agent of the bondholders, as soon as possible, the certificates for the payment of the coffee export duty referred to in article 9 of the contract of July 11, 1895, in sufficient quantity to cover the current interest of the debt for the year 1912-14, so that the resumption of this income can be made effective from the 1st of July of the present year.

Preference will be given these certificates and no other lien on the coffee exportation tax will be admitted until those which apply to the foreign 4% debt have been paid off.

2. To substitute for the certificates issued under the contract of November 18, 1898, the Government of the Republic will proceed without loss of time and in accord with the Council of Bondholders at London, to issue new bonds to the total value of £29,656 with the corresponding coupons, beginning with that which belongs to the half year ending December 31, 1901; and will give the necessary instructions to its London diplomatic representative for the exchange and other acts.

3. The Government will also issue deferred certificates distinct from those mentioned in the former articles, which will not earn interest, for an equal sum to that of the past and unpaid interest up to the 30th of June of the current year, and will give orders that these be handed over to the Council of Bondholders in London as soon as possible to take the place of the coupons.

4. The bondholders agree to suspend for four years, counting from July 1st of this year, the recovery of the £15,000 which by virtue of Article 6 of the contract of July 11, 1895, ought to be paid to the amortization account of the debt.

5. At the end of four years the Council will treat with the Government as to the manner of the amortization of the deferred certificates mentioned in article 3 of this agreement.

* President Auguste affirms that a number of Syrians who were expelled from Haiti have gone to Kingston, Jamaica, and have joined with the Haitian exiles there and [are] contributing money to start a revolution against the present administration, it being promised the Syrians that if the revolution is successful they will be allowed to return here. I do not think it probable that the Syrians would contribute money to such a cause as with the persecution which the Syrians recently suffered here I do not see why they should seek to return. However, I would thank the Department to make inquiry from our representative at Kingston, Jamaica, as to the Syrians being allied with the Haitian exiles. The Legation from time to time is still kept quite busy protecting the Americans of Syrian origin who, in accord with the agreement with the Haitian Government, were granted licenses to continue in business in Haiti. * *

AMERICAN LEGATION, Port au Prince, March 25, 1913.

S_{IR}: I have the honor to inform the Department that the Legation continues to have much difficulty in protecting United States citizens of Syrian origin.

In 1912, during the Leconte administration when the persecution of those of Syrian origin commenced under the guise of enforcing the Syrian Exclusion Act of 1903, I finally made an arrangement with the President and the Secretary of Foreign Relations whereby such United States citizens of Syrian origin who were naturalized prior to the going into effect of the law of 1903, and who were in business in Haiti prior to the time, would be considered as having a right under the law to remain in Haiti and engage in commercial affairs.

The Haitian Government already having granted licenses to do business for the year 1911-1912 to some of those who are under the protection of this Legation, I occupied myself with procuring licenses for such others as, in accord with the agreement entered into, had a right to licenses permitting them to do business.

I accordingly furnished the Secretary of Foreign Relations with a list of those without licenses, for each of whom I requested one. On this list I set forth the date of naturalization of each. There being one or two to whom final naturalization papers were issued in 1904, it was agreed that these would be accepted [excepted], for the reason that such persons must have filed their first papers at least two years prior, thereby showing that there was no attempt to evade the Exclusion Act of 1903.

The list as furnished was sent by the Haitian Government to its Minister at Washington with instructions to have it verified. Upon the request of the Haitian Minister the Department supplied the date of naturalization of the parties named and sent me a copy of the list handed to the Haitian Minister. The data of the Department's list, with one exception, corresponded with that given on the list which I had furnished the Haitian Government. Upon information furnished by the Legation the one exception noted was corrected by the Department and the Haitian Government issued the desired licenses.

So much for the history of the affair.

It was expected that the matter, once agreed upon with the Haitian Government, would be settled for all time; but, instead, the Haitian Government has continued to harass and embarrass those to whom licenses were issued. A friend of mine, who is an intimate friend of the President and Secretary Léger, has repeatedly told me that it is the intention of the Haitian Government to harass those of Syrian origin who are still in Haiti until they of their own free will leave. My friend says that Secretary Léger assured him there would not be even an American of Syrian origin in Haiti within a year or two. It appears to me that my friend has correctly informed me as to the attitude of the Haitian Government towards those of Syrian origin, for in no other way can I account for the unnecessary harassment and embarrassment occasioned them.

In so far as the Syrians of American naturalization are concerned, the Haitian Government having once admitted their right to remain in Haiti and do business, it would appear to me that they should be protected against any overt act on the part of the Haitian Government, and the Haitian Government should be clearly informed that our Government intends to protect them; intends to see to it that they are no longer harassed and embarrassed. The Americans of Syrian origin in Haiti are respectable and law-abiding citizens. I know every one of them personally, and I wish all of our native-born citizens who come to Haiti would be as much a credit to our country as they are. These Americans of Syrian origin own stores and deal almost exclusively in American products. They are a benefit to our export trade, a greater benefit than any other class for the reason that they are content with a small profit and a large turn-over and are consequently large and frequent importers of our products, while the merchants of other nationalities, more particularly Haitian, prefer large profits and small sales and are consequently small importers.

I shall not attempt at this time to review the Syrian question in Haiti. I have already sent forward numerous despatches on that subject clearly proving that the campaign against them was ill advised. On this occasion I am calling attention to the treatment accorded Americans of Syrian origin and setting forth what I have recently done to protect them.

[Here follow circumstantial accounts of cases in each of which the Minister, in numerous interviews with the President, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and minor officials, vigorously insisted on fair treatment of American citizens of Syrian origin who were being deliberately persecuted by Haitian officials of various ranks; these persons were John Milhim, Elbert Dow, Daniel John and John Stambouly—all except Daniel John coming within the provisions of the Haitian agreement as to licenses for American citizens of Syrian origin. The Minister in each case obtained reluctant compliance with his demands, but was left with a sense of insecurity as to future

I have gone into the details of the above cases that the Department might see the great amount of time consumed in protecting the Americans of Syrian origin. As has been stated in various prior despatches, our citizens of Syrian origin, if let alone, would give no trouble to anyone. They are peaceful and law-abiding. The Haitian Government having agreed to allow them to remain in Haiti, it would appear to me that they should be fully protected by this Legation, which should be empowered to tell the Haitian Government in plain terms that the frequent and unnecessary annoyances to which these citizens are put will not be countenanced by our Government. Perhaps it would be better to tell this to the Haitian Minister at Washington with the request that he communicate it to his Government.

The present Haitian administration has great respect for the opinion of our State Department and would not care to unnecessarily endanger its amical relations with it. While I am always treated with respect and usually succeed in accomplishing what I desire in specific cases, yet it keeps me always on the watch in order to be able to resist the oft-repeated attacks on the United States citizens of Syrian origin in Haiti who, through these attacks, are caused not only unnecessary annoyances but loss of money, etc.

I have with firmness told the President, in informal conversation, that this Legation intended to protect them the same as native born citizens of the United States, and the promptness with which I have gone to him with each abuse and requested its correction has shown this. The Haitian Government, once having acknowledged that under the Syrian Exclusion Act such of our citizens of Syrian origin as are now in Haiti have the same right to be here and do business as those of other origin or nationality, it should be forced to cease annoying them.

American Legation, Port au Prince, April 10, 1913.

Sir: In reply to the Department's No. 373 of March 17, 1913, I have the honor to inform the Department that I have recently talked with President Tancrède Auguste as to his attitude towards such persons of Syrian origin as are still in Haiti and I tried to draw from him a statement as to his attitude but evade [he evaded] making a direct reply. He finally said, with a smile, that I should only be interested in those of American nationality and they would be allowed to remain. He requested me to take his word for it that "all Syrians are bad," to which I replied, "No more so than all Haitians."

It seems that the President is very much prejudiced against those of Syrian origin and would welcome any plan whereby he could get rid of them. In my opinion this prejudice has been created as a result of the information furnished to him by various persons who state that practically all of those of Syrian origin who are in Haiti have combined with those who were expelled from Haiti and aiding abetting [sic] those Haitians in exile who seek to overthrow the present administration.

As a result of the attitude of the Haitian Government towards those of Syrian origin, many who have become Haitian citizens and have even performed military service are leaving Haiti as soon as they can arrange their affairs, preferring to leave rather than to stay and be from time to time harassed and even thrown in prison on trumped-up charges of being implicated in revolutionary movements. Being of Haitian nationality they have no rights which the Government is bound to respect.

As to nationals of Syrian origin who through the intervention of their legations have licenses to do business in Haiti, it is my impression that if their governments take a strong stand and inform the Haitian Government they will be protected, they will not be molested. Otherwise, the tendency is to harass and annoy them so that they, too, will leave of their own will, or [for] the Government pretends to have evidence implicating them in revolutionary movements and expel them.

Mr. Theodore Baker, the resident agent of Swift & Company, keeps in touch with the Syrian question and frequently calls at this Legation for information and advice. As I have found him to be a careful and discreet man, I am sure that whatever information he gives his firm can be relied upon by it.

AIDE MÉMOIRE.

Referring to the matter of the right of persons of Syrian origin to do business in Haiti, which has hitherto been the subject of correspondence between the Governments of the United States and Haiti both through the Haitian Legation at this capital and the American Legation at Port-au-Prince, it will be remembered that during the course of the previous discussion it was agreed by the Government of Haiti that American citizens of Syrian origin who had been naturalized or had taken steps to become naturalized prior to the Haitian Law of 1903, should be exempted from the operation of the law and given licenses to trade.

It was hoped that this action by the Haitian Government would obviate to some degree the difficulties which had arisen by reason of Haiti's recent enforcement of the measures directed against persons of Syrian origin. It appears, however, that the condition of these persons since that action was taken has not been satisfactory and that the American Legation at Port-au-Prince has been forced on numerous occasions to appeal to the Government of Haiti to protect American citizens of Syrian origin from annoyances and embarrassments, which would appear to have been unnecessary and unwarranted, caused by aggressions on the part of the subordinate Haitian authorities.

It would seem that having permitted these American citizens to do business under sanction of Haitian law, the Government of Haitian may rightfully be expected to afford them all due protection and respect. The Department consequently trusts that when the purport of this communication, which has been induced by repetition of the aggressions mentioned above against American citizens, is brought to the attention of the Haitian Government it will take all necessary measures to insure to the American citizens in question the protection and freedom from molestation which their Government now requests for them.

Sir: In further reference to my No. 1208 of April 10th last, wherein I spoke of the attitude of the Auguste administration towards those of Syrian origin, I have the honor to inform the Department that I recently had a talk with President Oreste on the same question.

[The] President said that as senator and private citizen he was opposed to the attitude of the Leconte and Auguste administrations relative to the Syrian question; that he believed that all those of Syrian origin, whatever their nationality or position in life, who were in Haiti prior to the promulgation of the Syrian Exclusion Law should have been allowed to remain unmolested in Haiti. He said that he realized then as now that from an economic standpoint it was a bad move to have expelled them, as the Syrian stores were beneficial to the masses in that their prices and terms were more reasonable than the Haitian stores. He reminded me that he had been attorney for some Haitians and others of Syrian origin and had gained licenses for them through the courts, though afterwards these persons were so persecuted that they had voluntarily left Haiti.

President Oreste assured me that under his administration such persons of Syrian origin as are in Haiti can count upon having full protection of their rights and that the Syrian campaign is at an end. He said, however, that he could not permit to return those who were expelled from Haiti by his predecessors as that might bring on dis-

Yesterday when in conference with Secretary of Foreign Relations Mathon on another matter, he spoke of having received from Minister Ménos the Department's aide mémoire relative to the Syrian question. Mr. Mathon assured me that there would be no ground for complaint from the present administration. He stated that even the Haitian of Syrian origin would be unmolested; in other words, that the anti-Syrian campaign is at an end. I thanked him for the information and told him I would communicate it to my Government. I stated that my Government was determined to protect its citizens and would be pleased to know that its citizens could dwell in Haiti without being persecuted or subjected to annoyances by minor officials.

Sir: I have the honor to report that agreeable to the Department's cablegram of July 23, I called upon the President of Haiti to ascertain the attitude of his administration relative to the entry into Haiti of persons of Syrian origin. I reported a summary of the interview in my [telegram of] July 25.

The President stated that it would be impossible, at least for the present, to permit persons of Syrian origin, whatever their nationality, to come to Haiti, in that the Exclusion Act of 1903 especially prohibited it. At first he had been inclined to have the law modified, but he now finds that quite a campaign against the present administration is being waged by the Syrians in Kingston, Jamaica, and they are contributing funds for the Haitians who are there and who seek to overthrow his administration.

According to a report of the Haitian Consul at Kingston, two prominent citizens of the United States of Syrian origin went to Kingston and had long conferences with the Haitians; in fact it is reported that the carriage of ex-President Simon was in waiting for them at the steamship wharf upon their arrival and they spent a day with Mr. Simon, at whose house congregate many of the exiles. I tried to ascertain the names of these Americans and the President has promised to give me the information. I called the President's attention to the fact that the Haitian Consul at Kingston is rather erratic and should not be depended upon; that when Haitian Consul at Monte Cristi he was the chief adviser of the Dominican revolutionist Desiderio Arias and was more a revolutionist than he.

I do not believe that persons of Syrian origin are aiding and abetting the exiles against the present administration and I await with interest the report of our consul there, which the Department in its No. 372 of March 11, 1913, stated it had instructed him to make.

I told the President that in carrying out the Exclusion Act of 1903 it should not be made to operate against persons of Syrian origin who may desire to come to Haiti, temporarily, in connection with commercial affairs; that I know several Americans of Syrian origin who are commercial travelers and he should construe the law liberally enough to allow such to come to Haiti. I told him that we allowed merchants of Chinese origin to enter the United States on business. He then said that, to be agreeable to this Legation, he would allow American citizens of Syrian origin who represent American commercial houses to come to Haiti provided they remained at most a few months, and further provided that the Department of State or this Legation would vouch for their citizenship and their connection with American commercial houses doing business in Haiti.

Sir: The Department has received your telegram of the 25th ultimo in which you state that you have been advised by the President of Haiti that in view of the exclusion act of 1903 it will not be possible to permit persons of Syrian origin to come to Haiti and remain permanently, but that Americans of Syrian origin representing American commercial interests may enter Haiti on the business of their firms for a few months on the condition that the Department of State of [or] your Legation should certify as to their citizenship and as to their connection with American commercial houses.

The Department is gratified at the position taken by the President of Haiti in this matter and believes that an arrangement might well be made in accordance with his suggestions. Regarding the certification of citizenship by the Department or the Legation, it would seem, however, that it would be possible and proper to do this only in the usual way, that is, in the case of an American coming from this country to Haiti, by the exhibit of a passport, or, in the case of Americans who have been in Haiti, by reference to the records of registration in the consulates. Outside of these two means, any cer-tification would seem impracticable.

Respecting the certification as to the connection of American citizens of Syrian origin with American commercial houses, it would seem possible, of course, for the Department or the Legation to communicate to the Haitian Government such information as might be furnished in this regard. Under the circumstances, however, neither the Legation nor the Department could undertake to give any certain guaranty as to such connection.

You will appropriately communicate the foregoing to the Haitian Government and report to the Department the result of your repre-

From what I have been able to learn I am convinced that the Syrians in Jamaica are in no way endeavoring to overthrow the present Government in Haiti or furnishing funds for the purpose. I have called upon the managers of the three banks in Kingston and am told, confidentially, that but very few of the Syrians here have bank accounts at all and those are very small. The great majority of the Syrians in Jamaica have been here for a number of years and are well known to the banking houses, which have expressed their belief that they are in no way actively inimical to the Haitian Government, being but small traders carrying their stock of goods on their backs. The manager of the Colonial Bank, the oldest bank in Kingston, ridicules the idea that the Syrians of Jamaica are in any way connected with a movement to support a revolution in Haiti as he was convinced that if they transmitted funds to Haiti it would be through his bank and that no drafts of any considerable amount had been sent through his house to Haiti by Syrians.

I am endeavoring to ascertain the number of persons of Syrian origin in Jamaica and the occupations they pursue but it is extremely difficult to secure reliable information either from Government or private sources. As soon as I can collect the data I shall at once transmit it to the Department.

I believe the hostility of the Haitian and the Dominican Governments, which exclude persons of Syrian origin from entering their respective countries, is due to their activity in trading and driving the duller native from business. Even in such an enlightened country as Jamaica the retail merchants have complained to the Government of the ceaseless activity of Syrians and Chinese in supplanting the natives in certain lines of business and the question will undoubtedly be brought before the Legislative Council of the Island when it again meets.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, September 16, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose herewith copies of the correspondence exchanged between this Legation and the Haitian Government relative to granting a license to Daniel John, an American of Syrian origin in business at St. Marc.

Mr. John does not come within my agreement with the Haitian Government as to the issuance of licenses to American citizens, in that he was naturalized and came to Haiti subsequent to the exclusion act of 1903.

In April last I arranged for a reasonable delay for Daniel John to liquidate his business but it appears to me he thought that upon Mr. Michel Oreste becoming president he would not be forced to liquidate, and when informed that he would be expected to do so he appealed to me for further delay. I have arranged with the Haitian Government for an additional month, which was the best that could be done under the circumstance.

wind up his affairs and leave Haiti.

If, upon investigation of Mr. John's case, you are convinced that the enforcement of the order directing him to leave Haiti would entail unnecessary hardship you will request the Haitian Foreign Office on Mr. John's behalf for such additional reasonable time to wind up his affairs as the circumstances may seem to warrant.

You are referred, for your guidance, to the Department's general instruction of January 20, 1912, to your predecessor, regarding the enforcement of the Haitian anti-Syrian law of 1903, and you will, besides reporting fully on the John case, further report on the enforcement of the law of 1903 with respect to Syrians of other nationalities who, like Mr. John, went to Haiti and established themselves in business there subsequently to the passage of that law.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, November 10, 1913.

Sir: Referring to the Department's despatch No. 5 of October 25, 1913, regarding the case of Daniel John I have the honor to report as follows:

Daniel John was naturalized an American citizen July 17, 1906. He arrived in Haiti July 24, 1906, and commenced business during the same vear.

Upon reading over the correspondence of this Legation, I find that an agreement was entered into between this Legation and the Haitian Government whereby all American citizens of Syrian origin who were naturalized and in business in Haiti before the promulgation, in 1904, of the Syrian Exclusion Act of 1903, would be exempt from the provisions of the Act.

Subsequently the Haitian Government discovered that Mr. John did not come within the provisions of the agreement and so informed this Legation, which in turn advised Mr. John.

Mr. John then requested the Legation to procure for him a reasonable delay within which he could liquidate his business, and he finally said that he would be willing to retire from Haiti by October 31st if he were granted a license to that time. At the request of this Legation the Haitian Government agreed to this, provided Mr. John would put in writing that he would retire within the time stated. Mr. John furnished the necessary agreement copy of which is herewith enclosed. The Legation forwarded this agreement to the Haitian Government and the license was issued for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1913. Further reference to this will be found in my predecessor's despatch to the Department No. 1280 of September 16, 1913. It will be noted also in this despatch that, on account of certain difficulties experienced by Mr. John since receiving his license, and his agreeing to liquidate by October 31, 1913, at the request of this Legation a further delay was granted for the liquidation, said delay to expire November 30, 1913.

Subsequently it appeared that the authorities at St. Marc had not been advised as to this last delay and Mr. John's attention was called to the fact, by the Communal Commission at St. Marc, that it was expected that he would close his establishment and leave the country by September 30, 1913. Mr. John made representation as to the matter to this Legation, and the attention of the Haitian Government was called to it under date of October 6, 1913. The Haitian Government replied under date of October 8, 1913, that the necessary instructions would be forwarded to the Communal Commission at St. Marc which would enable Mr. John to take advantage of the new delay which had been granted him. Mr. John was advised of this under date of October 9, 1913. Copies of this correspondence are here-

Referring to the latter part of the Department's instructions No. 5, regarding the enforcement of the law of 1903 with respect to Syrians of other nationalities, I have the honor to state that the law in question has been enforced without respect to person. As far as I can find out, at present there are no Syrians of any nationality in business in Haiti, with the exception of Mr. John, who arrived in Haiti subsequent to the promulgation of this law. The agreement with this Legation as to Americans of Syrian origin has been more respected than has been the case with the other nationalities. Dominicans of Syrian origin have been forced to leave Haiti notwithstanding their rights under the agreement. * * *

Use your personal good offices to secure an extension of time for John. If circumstances justify formal representations, either because John has not been granted sufficient time to wind up his affairs or that this is a case of discrimination, impress upon the Foreign Office that expulsion might lead to international claim.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, MANUEL BONILLA, TO THE CONGRESS.

File No. 815.032/7.

[The message of the President, Don Manuel Bonilla, was read to the Congress of Honduras January 1, 1913, and transmitted to the Secretary of State January 8, 1913, by the American Minister, Mr. White. The following is the only passage referring to the United States:

[Translation—Extract.]

I must mention the very cordial relations which my Government cultivates with the American, European, and some Asiatic nations, among which are prominent those that exist with the United States of America, due in large measure to the fact that the main import and export trade of Honduras is with that nation, and that the chief foreign enterprises established in this country are also American, immigrants and contractors of that nationality arriving here constantly on all kinds of business and being always heard and often heeded, and if not heeded oftener than they are the fault lies not with the Government but with the contractors themselves.

During the past year the cooperation of Honduras was asked for six international congresses, all held in the United States. I should have liked to see the country represented in all of them, but owing to the importance of the matters to be treated and in order to comply with the kind invitations extended, but we were able to send representatives to only two of them.

We were also asked to participate with our products in the International Rubber Exposition opened last September in New York, and we have been officially invited to the International Panama-American Exposition to be opened in San Francisco in 1915, in order to take part in which you will be asked to appropriate the necessary funds.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of my Government will give you a detailed account of the matters just referred to and of all those connected with our relations with the United States; but I can not pass over in silence the visit made to Honduras by Mr. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State of that great nation, in March of last year [1912], for which visit I was so grateful, which I so highly appreciated, and in response to which and in order to express at the same time thanks for so signal a demonstration of cordiality and deference, I accredited to Washington an extraordinary mission charged with conveying the gratitude of my Government for the visit.

I must likewise not refrain from mentioning a fact which, while it caused alarm at first, subsequently afforded a patent demonstration not only of the cordiality of the relations existing between this Government and that of Washington, but also of the spirit of rectitude and justice which actuates the decisions of the latter. I refer to the case of the National Railroad, which you at your last session ordered restored to the nation because it was being illegally and unduly administered by a person who was its lessee but who had no right to keep it in his possession for his own exclusive benefit.

The details of what occurred will be communicated to you by the Secretaries for Foreign Affairs and of Fomento and Public Works, so that it will suffice for me to recall the fact that when the Political Governor of Cortés, in pursuance of orders from the Executive, proceeded to take possession of the railroad by virtue of an inventory and previous notice to the agent of the ex-lessee to participate in the delivery, the Commander of the American war ship Petrel, anchored in the waters of Puerto Cortés, landed sailors of the crew of his ship to take possession of the railroad pending receipt of instructions from Washington and Tegucigalpa. This gave rise to a protest on the part of my Government, made to the American Legation established in this capital, on account of the violation of the national territory and owing to the acts committed by the Commander of the Petrel, who, in compliance with immediate orders from the Washington Government, reembarked his forces, declaring that the act was performed under his exclusive responsibility and without the authorization of his Government, as was confirmed by the Minister of the United States in this capital, who, on this occasion as on all others, has taken special pains to maintain and even strengthen the bonds of sympathy and cordiality which happily unite us with the Republic of the North.

The Government has likewise claimed for the Public Treasury the revenues from the wharf and lighthouse of Puerto Cortés, illegally held to the detriment of the revenues of the Republic and which are at present administered by the proper revenue office.

Foreign Office, Tegucigalpa, February 7, 1912.

Mr. Minister: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's courteous note addressed to me under yesterday's date in which you advise me that according to representations made by the attorneys of Mr. Washington S. Valentine it appears that he fears that he may be dispossessed of the railroad and wharf of Puerto Cortés without the adjustment of his claims connected with both properties having been made; that said attorneys of Mr. Valentine affirm that he is willing to relinquish control and management of said railroad and wharf provided his interests be duly protected; but that he protests against any act by the Government of Honduras by which he might be deprived in any measure of his properties without adequate compensation.

Your excellency adds that your Government, without discussing at present the legal merits of the claim of Mr. Valentine, is convinced that his claim possesses certain equities that should be satisfactorily met; and that any act violative of such equities could not be considered by your Government as an indication of the friendship with which it would like to see the acts of my Government.

ernment toward American enterprise animated.

In reply, and under instructions of the President, to whom I have given account of your excellency's important note, I have the honor to inform you that there is no reason whatever for complaint on the part of the representative of Mr. Valentine because of the action of the Government in respect to the railroad of Puerto Cortés, to which the decree issued yesterday and sent to the Gobernador Político of Cortés for execution was confined.

As your excellency must know, the railroad of Puerto Cortés, exclusive property of the Government, was turned over on August 1, 1908, to Mr. Valentine, with whom a contract of lease was made which was never perfected in the form prescribed by the Constitution of the country, which requires for the validity of these contracts the approval of Congress. Nevertheless Mr. Valentine has in fact been administering and managing the railroad and enjoying the proceeds from it without having any right thereto.

The Congress now in session—in view of the contracts entered into with Mr. Valentine and the fact that, in spite of the invalidity of the same, Mr. Valentine continued in possession and control of the railroad—declared by Decree No. 28 of the 5th instant "that the Executive proceeded hastily and unconstitutionally in delivering the railroad to Mr. Valentine by virtue of a contract which, to be perfected, needed the approval of the Legislative Assembly; and directed the said Executive Power, availing itself of the most proper and efficacious means, to proceed immediately to recover that property and to determine the consequent obligations toward (deducir las responsabilidades consiguientes al) Mr. Valentine.

By virtue whereof and in compliance with the said decree the Government, through the Ministry of Fomento and Public Works, issued a decree, which your excellency will find enclosed as an annex to this note, in which it is ordered: (1) that "the Gobernador Político of the Department of Cortés, with previous injunction (requerimiento) and notification of the Decree of Congress of which mention has been made and of the present order to the administrator or agent of Mr. Washington S. Valentine, take possession of the railroad with the appurtenances and accessories, with formal judicial inventory, advising the said administrator or agent in order that he may attend the transfer and inventory if he wishes to do so; (2) that Mr. Valentine be required to give account of the returns from the railroad during the time he has exploited it, and that liquidation be made in order that there may be adjudicated to each of the parties the portion that belongs to it."

As your excellency will see, the Government in taking possession of the railroad has taken possession of an enterprise entirely the property of the nation and not of Mr. Valentine, a property that figures in the inventories of transfer subscribed by the representative of the said Mr. Valentine on August 1, 1908, with a value of $1,140,976.35, plus the warehouses, etc., at $33,428.94, values which illegally and without the approval of Congress as the Constitution provides had been turned over to Mr. Valentine.

But the Government in issuing the order cited, in compliance with the legislative decree to which I have made reference, has desired to clothe the act with every kind of guaranty for Mr. Valentine; wherefore it ordered that a formal judicial inventory be made, being disposed, upon liquidation of accounts, to recognize and pay the sum or sums, if there should be any, due to Mr. Valentine by reason of the transaction.

My Government has no knowledge of any claim on the part of Mr. Valentine connected with the railroad. It has confined itself to the exercise of a right conferred by the Constitution, and your excellency may be sure that it is and always will be the most faithful guardian of the rights and privileges of forcircous that reside in Honduras and yeary especially of Americans

Your excellency is well aware that in Honduras the interests of American citizens enjoy every kind of security, it being the aspiration of my Government to demonstrate to your excellency its most sincere and cordial friendship by the protection that it affords to American undertakings established in Honduras, of which an example is the New York, Rosario & Honduras Mining Co., of which the same Mr. Valentine is a director, including important negotiations which it has pending with American enterprises, which are the most cordial examples of its friendship for America and the Americans.

My Government, Mr. Minister, cherishes the hope that your excellency, in view of these documents, will recognize the right that warrants the act of recovery of the railroad and will also see that no prejudice be done to the rights which Mr. Valentine may claim—not over the railroad, for this is the property of the Government, but—with reference to the participation which he may have in the proceeds of the railroad.

I pray your excellency kindly to take note of these explanations and of the sentiments expressed by my Government, and I avail [etc.]

The presence of American vessels in Honduran waters is always pleasing to this people and its authorities, likewise that of their marines on its soil; but always with the understanding that they come unarmed, as is international practice between friendly nations.

The present situation in Honduras being perfectly tranquil, so that no danger threatens American lives and interests; and, on the other hand, said interests and lives being perfectly guaranteed by the laws and Government, the disembarking of said force and the fact that afterward, when it had been retired, one of its members still remained, as a sentinel, in a place that is not and cannot be for that purpose in view of the friendly relations that exist between Honduras and the United States and it being a question of foreign territory, could not fail to cause surprise.

With this understanding I have the honor, with instructions from the President, to address your excellency in order to ask whether you have notice of the acts cited and of their significance, since, if true, they do not correspond with the orderly and constitutional condition of the country nor with the friendly sentiments that inspire the relations of the two Governments, which that of Honduras has always desired should be close and sincere.

Mr. MINISTER: With instructions from the President, I have the honor to transcribe to your excellency the following telegraphic messages:

Puerto Cortés, February 7, 1912.

At this moment, which is quarter before 11 of the morning, I have received from the Vice Consul of the United States in this port, Mr. J. H. Watts, the communication which literally says:

"AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE, Puerto Cortés, February 7, 1912.

General, and Departmental Governor, Present:

MY DEAR SIR AND GENERAL: I have the honor to advise you that, having refused us a brief delay in taking possession of the railroad, sufficient to permit instructions to be received from Washington and Tegucigalpa, the captain of the war-vessel now in the port has taken possession for the time being of said railroad until able to receive replies to his telegrams and cables, in which case he will return the railroad in accordance with

In order to reply to this communication I await your instructions. Yours [etc.]

PUERTO CORTÉS, February 8, 1912.

Mr. PRESIDENT: At this moment 10 armed marines disembark without consent of this Comandancia.

I await your orders.

F. C. QUINTANILLA.

My Government, Mr. Minister, has with profound surprise seen the conduct of the Commander of the war-vessel Petrel, inasmuch as the matter in question has as yet no international character and the act committed by him, with violation of the national territory, is in every light contrary to the universally recognized principles of the law of nations.

This act, Mr. Minister, constitutes, further, a transgression of the sovereignty of the nation, for the exercise of jurisdiction belongs to its established authorities alone, in conformity with legal precepts.

In view of what is here set forth, the Government is in duty bound to protest against the acts committed by the Commander of the war-vessel mentioned. acts which it attributes exclusively to said Commander; for it does not for a moment imagine that the American Government, cultured and civilized as it is, has authorized such acts, much less if there are taken into account the frank and cordial relations that today more than ever strengthen the bonds of friendship between the Governments of Honduras and the United States of America.

least were actually enjoyed under the previous Government of Honduras, was very precipitate, and arbitrary. For these reasons, you not having conceded the time necessary to enable me to communicate with my Government, upon my own responsibility I disembarked the force mentioned in your letter. Sir: The Department has received your No. 94 of the 8th ultimo, transmitting a decree of the Honduran Congress and a note of February 7 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in relation to the

You will advise the Minister for Foreign Affairs that this Government will await with confidence the result of the judicial inventory and liquidation of accounts which he states have been ordered in connection with the Government's seizure of the Valentine railway

You will also say that the Department does not find it easy to understand the statement that the Government of Honduras has no knowledge of any claim on the part of Mr. Valentine connected with the railway. The note of the Minister for Foreign Affairs acknowledges throughout its discussion that the Government delivered the railway to Mr. Valentine in 1908, and that from that time until the present it has permitted him to retain possession of and operate the same. It seems quite evident that, totally irrespective of whether or not the formal concession or lease granted to Mr. Valentine was valid and constitutional, the Honduran Government could not now expect successfully to maintain that by this governmental action the Government had not assumed such a special relation to Mr. Valentine in connection with his possession and operation of the railroad as would entail reciprocal rights, duties and obligations, which would have to be adjusted.

The Government of the United States must therefore be understood as reserving the right to make further representations regarding this matter, in the unlooked-for event that the judicial inquiry instituted by the Honduran authorities should appear not to accomplish substantial justice.

Complaint has been made by the attorneys for Valentine because the Collector of Customs at Puerto Cortés notified Mr. Valentine on March 12th that he was limited to twenty days to decide whether he would agree to sale of the wharf and that at the end of that time the Government would not permit further collection of wharfage as it held the collection illegal since the contract expired March 12, 1908. It is claimed that this is practical seizure of the property.

Take this matter up informally with the Foreign Office and call attention to the decree of August 20, 1907, extending the wharf concession for twelve years in accordance with the provisions of article 9 of the contract of March 2, 1896. The Department is convinced in view of the 1907 decree and the operation thereunder for nearly five years, that the collector of customs must have misunderstood the orders from his Government, as the threatened action seems to be arbitrary and without any legal formalities and safeguards with which governments are accustomed to surround the exercise of the high sovereign powers involved. Urge the Government of Honduras to instruct the collector of customs not to interfere with the wharf concessionaires.

MEMORANDUM.

On March 2, 1896, the Government of Honduras granted to Mr. W. S. Valentine a concession, which was subsequently ratified by the National Congress, to build and to operate for a period of twelve years a wharf at Puerto Cortés, In the contract governing this concession provisions Department of Cortés. were made (article 9) for further extension of the concession by the Government of Honduras.

By a decree dated August 20, 1907, the Government of Honduras extended, under the provisions above referred to of article 9 of the original contract, Mr. Valentine's concession for a further period of twelve years, that is, until March 2, 1920.

Mr. Valentine now makes a formal complaint to the Government of the United States of America that he is in receipt of a notification dated March 12th last from the Collector of Customs at Puerto Cortés in which the conces-12th last from the Collector of Customs at Puerto Cortés in which the concessionary is given twenty days, which cannot be extended, in which he may state whether he is prepared to come to an agreement regarding the sale of the wharf and that at the expiration of that period the Government of Honduras will not permit him to collect wharfage on the ground that such collection is illegal, as the contract of 1896 expired on March 12, 1908.

In view of the decree of August 20, 1907, extending Mr. Valentine's right to this concession and the operation of the concession thereunder for nearly five years, the Government of the United States of America is convinced that the Collector of Customs at Puerto Cortes must have misinterpreted his Government's instructions, since the action threatened by the Collector appears from the representations made to the Department of State at Washington to be entirely arbitrary and lacking the legal formalities and guaranties with which governments customarily surround the exercise of the high sovereign powers involved.

In order that the concessionary be unmolested in the exercise of his rights as granted in the contract of March 2, 1896, subsequently extended on August 20, 1907, until 1920, and that the Collector of Customs at Puerto Cortés be carrected in any misunderstanding entertained by him in this matter, it is the urgent desire of the Government of the United States of America that the Government of Honduras, at as early a moment as possible, will instruct him to cease any interference of whatsoever kind with the operation of the wharf by the concessionary.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Tegucigalpa, May 27, 1912.

[Inclosure 2-Translation.]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Chargé d'Affaires.

MEMORANDUM.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Honduras has the honor to reply to the memorandum which the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the United States of America directed to him under date of the 27th instant, regarding the exploitation of the wharf at Puerto Cortes by Mr. Washington S. Valentine, in the following manner:

It is true that the Government of Honduras through the Inspector General of Finance celebrated a contract with the Messrs. Washington S. Valentine and George Isham Scott on March 2, 1896, approved by the National Congress Decree No. 75, of March 24 of the same year 1896, by which another contract was modified which had been approved in favor of Valentine by the Assembly of Honduras on June 7, 1895, for the contract and exploitation of the wharf at Puerto Cortés in the Department of Cortés.

But it is equally true that in section No. 9 of the same contract it was declared that "the contract will last for a term of twelve years, to be prolonged at the will of the Government, and will commence to be in force from the date of its approval by Congress. Upon conclusion of this term the Government can take the wharf, paying its value according to the just valuation by experts, or it will permit that the concessionaries dispose of it as they see fit."

It is also true that the Government of Honduras, upon request of Mr. Washington S. Valentine of July 15, 1907, granted him by means of a simple resolution, not decree, as Mr. Valentine states (to issue the latter being a right reserved for Congress) a concession by means of which the contract of the 2d and 24th of March, 1896, was prolonged for another term of twelve years, to begin March 2, 1908.

But it is also true-and this was concealed by Mr. Valentine in his complaint—that in order to make a concession complete and valid, it needs, by means of an appropriate decree, the approval of the National Congress of the Republic, according to number 21, article 90 of the Constitution of Honduras, without which it has not and can not have any legal value.

The concession of August 20, 1907, prolonging the contract of March 2, 1896, was not approved by Congress, for which reason it was never perfected. Besides, on March 17, 1909, Mr. W. S. Valentine, "for himself and as representative of his associates," concluded an agreement with the Government by means of which (article 2) he revoked "the prolongation of the wharf contract at Puerto Cortés concluded August 20, 1907."

Article 5 of this agreement declared that "the value of the wharf and its appurtenances" "will be estimated by two experts, one named by each party, who will have the power to name a third in case of disagreement."

Finally, in article 9 of the said agreement of March 17, 1909, it is expressly stated that "the contracts annulled" are considered "cancelled and without any value," among which is the contract of August 20, 1907, providing for the extension of time. So that, even admitting, which cannot be done, that the said extension of time might be valid without approval by Congress, which is unconstitutional, it would nevertheless be at the present time cancelled and without any value, according to the agreement of annulment aforesaid.

The National Congress of the Republic so understood the matter at the time of issuing, on February 5, 1912, its Decree No. 28, in which it was declared: "Considering that the above-mentioned contracts are known to the Congress to be already annulled by the parties thereto"; and in the disposing clause it says: "Article 1. It is declared that the National Congress can not recognize the said contracts in their present state."

From the foregoing the following conclusions are arrived at:

(a) The contract for the construction and exploitation of the wharf at Puerto Cortés terminated in accordance with the meaning of article 9 thereof on March 24, 1908: the date of completion of the twelve years approved by the National Congress, counting from the time that it began to be in force.

(b) Said contract has not been extended, because the concession of extension of August 20, 1907, was never approved by Congress, like the original contract of March 2, 1896, and that of March 24, 1896.

(c) Even if it were possible to accept the existence of an extension of the contract of 1896, through the concession of August 20, 1907, this extension was cancelled and deprived of all value by the agreement of March 17, 1909.

(d) In view of the status of the matter, Messrs. Valentine and Scott have no rights other than those expressed in article 9 of the contract of 1896, according to which the Government either takes from them the wharf and pays for it according to a fair valuation by experts, or allows them to dispose of it as they wish.

It was in view of these facts that the instructions were given to the Collector of the Port at Puerto Cortes.

A legal Government having now been organized in Honduras, its first duty has been and is to reorganize the public administration from every point of view. Finding that because of unjustifiable leniency in the first place, and because of the country's abnormal condition in the second place, the concessionnaires continued to avail themselves of the concession although the agreement for the continuation of the contract to construct and exploit the wharf at Puerto Cortés had expired March 24, 1908, the Government decided, in accordance with the aforesaid article [9], to buy the wharf, paying its value according to the just valuation of experts, which decision the Government communicated to Mr. Valentine by means of the Collector of the Port at Puerto Cortés. The answer of Mr. Valentine was that he preferred to continue to exploit the wharf himself, for the benefit, as he said, of the Government and

As it was not the intention of the Government to allow the ex-concessionnaires to select what might best suit their own interests, but to protect those of the Republic, complying with those stipulations of the contract of 1896 relating to its expiration, new instructions were given to the said Collector to request Mr. Valentine to decide whether or not he desired to sell the wharf, appointing, in case he desired to sell, an expert appraiser who in his behalf should make the valuation in order to fix the sale price, and granting him a term of twenty days for this decision.

The conduct of the Government of Honduras has therefore been entirely in accordance with the explicit terms of the contract of 1896, annulled by that of March 17, 1909, and in accordance with justice and right, which form the guiding principle of its operations; and in setting forth the preceding details it confidently hopes that the Government of the United States, whose upright and just standard it is pleased to recognize, will see, in view of the authentic documents which are herewith enclosed, the right of the Government of Honduras to proceed as it has proceeded, returning to the public treasury an income that properly belongs to it, at the same time respecting the interest of the exconcessionnaires of the wharf provided for in the said article 9 of the contract of March 2, 1896, approved by the National Congress March 24, 1896, by buying the wharf in accordance with the just valuation of experts if the ex-concessionnaires so desire or allowing them to dispose of it according to their wis..., destroying it or taking away the material, but to cease charging the wharfage to which the expired contract once entitled them, but to which they no longer have any right since the said date of March 24, 1908.

The Acting Secretary of State to Messrs. Stetson, Jennings and Russell, attorneys for Mr. Valentine.

Department of State, Washington, June 25, 1912.

Gentlemen: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your communication of the 15th instant in which you briefly review the developments in the matter of the claims of Mr. Washington S. Valentine against the Government of Honduras and state that Mr. Valentine is willing to make concessions to that Government upon condition that the whole matter in dispute shall now be settled by a board of arbitration. You suggest, on behalf of Mr. Valentine, that the Government of Honduras be advised, through diplomatic channels, of Mr. Valentine's proposal and that it be suggested to that Government that it appoint an arbitrator with full authority to pass upon all the questions now in dispute between Mr. Valentine and Honduras; that Mr. Valentine shall appoint an arbitrator to represent him, the third to be named by the first two or, in the event of their failure to agree thereon, to be appointed by the Department of State.

As this proposal evidently contemplates a private arbitration of this matter, the propriety and desirability of which are to be determined entirely by Mr. Valentine and the Government of Honduras, the question would appear to be one in which the Department has no official concern other than attaches by reason of its general duty to do all it properly may to facilitate the adjustment of difficulties and disputes between American citizens and foreign governments. Pursuant to this duty, however, it will be glad, in the event such a method of settlement is proposed to the Government of Honduras and that Government manifests an unwillingness to accept the proposal, to instruct the Legation at Tegucigalpa to exercise such informal and unofficial good offices as it properly may, with a view to securing acceptance of such a proposition.

You will, of course, understand that in view of the fact that these claims of Mr. Valentine against the Government of Honduras seemingly have their origin in violations of contract, it is not improbable that as an official question between this Government and the Government of Honduras, the rules governing the presentation of contract claims will be applicable and that before any affirmative official action could be taken by this Government, it would be necessary to examine the question of exhaustion of local remedies by Mr. Valentine and the suffering of a denial of justice as a result of his resort

I have learned that about the middle of last July the President informed Mr. Valentine by cable that Mr. Greely would be permitted to collect wharfage pending final settlement, provided the wharf be sold to the Government, as it did not want to construct a new wharf. No reply was received for fifteen days and the Government proceeded, in accordance with decree No. 30 of the 10th ultimo, to construct a new wharf. Travelers from the north have advised him that work on the new wharf has already begun.

Sir: For some time past local newspapers have been giving currency to statements as to the recognition of Italian sovereignty over Tripoli and Cyrenaica.

Visiting the Foreign Office today, the Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, Prince di Scalea, made reference to the matter and remarked upon the method with which the subject had been dealt with by our Government.

He then read to me a despatch from the Italian Ambassador in Washington detailing a late visit to the Department of State. He wrote that his conversation was with Mr. Adee and that he had broached the subject of the late treaty with Turkey, as to Italy's sovereignty over the territories in question, and that he hoped for action by the United States similar to that taken by other powers.

Continuing, the Ambassador added that Mr. Adee replied that it was not the custom of his Government to proceed in that manner, especially with regard to affairs European; that when the United States took over the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, foreign governments were not asked for their acquiescence nor for their recognition, and none was given. He said of course the United States Government was fully aware of what had taken place and as to the effect of the late treaty, and while it had no objection at all to the attitude of Italy, nevertheless an explicit form of recognition must not be expected.

It should be added that Prince di Scalea did not criticise our method but, on the other hand, seemed to treat the matter as the practical equivalent of what had been done in a more pronounced manner by other nations.

It is assumed that our Consul at Tripoli has been advised.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ITALY AMENDING ARTICLE 3 OF THE TREATY OF COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION OF FEBRUARY 26, 1871.

Signed at Washington, February 25, 1913; ratification advised by the Senate, February 26, 1913; ratified by the President, March 1, 1913; ratified by Italy, June 21, 1913; ratifications exchanged at Washington, July 3, 1913; proclaimed, July 3, 1913.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Treaty between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Italy amendatory of Article III of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of February 26, 1871, was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the twenty-fifth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and Italian languages, is word for word as follows:

Treaty between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Italy, amending the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded February 26, 1871, between the same High Contracting Parties.

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Italy, desiring to define more accurately the rights of their respective citizens in the territories of the other, have for that purpose determined to conclude a treaty amendatory of Article III of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of February 26, 1871, between the two countries and have named as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Philander C.

Knox, Secretary of State of the United States of America;

¹ The same to the American Consul at Tripoli-in-Barbary.

His Majesty the King of Italy: The Marquis Cusani Confalonieri, Commander of the Order of Saint Maurice and Saint Lazarus, Grand Cordon of the Order of the Crown of Italy, etc., etc., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington:

And the said Plenipotentiaries having exhibited, each to the other, their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have concluded and signed the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed between the High Contracting Parties that the first paragraph of Article III of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of February 26, 1871, between the United States and Italy shall be replaced by the following provision:

The citizens of each of the High Contracting Parties shall receive in the States and Territories of the other the most constant security and protection for their persons and property and for their rights, including that form of protection granted by any State or national law which establishes a civil responsibility for injuries or for death caused by negligence or fault and gives to relatives or heirs of the injured party a right of action, which right shall not be restricted on account of the nationality of said relatives or heirs; and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to nationals, provided that they submit themselves to the conditions imposed on the latter.

ARTICLE II.

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Majesty the King of Italy, in accordance with the constitutional forms of that Kingdom, and shall go into operation upon the exchange of the ratifications thereof, which shall be effected at Washington as soon as practicable.

In faith whereof the Plenipotentiaries of the High Contracting Parties have signed the present Treaty in duplicate in the English and Italian languages, and have affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done at Washington this 25th day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen.

SEAL SEAL Philander C Knox Cusani

And whereas the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the third day of July, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this third day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and [SEAL] of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

PAYMENT BY THE UNITED STATES TO ITALY OF AN INDEMNITY FOR THE LYNCHING OF ANGELO ALBANO, AN ITALIAN SUBJECT.

File No. 311.651T15/18.

Memorandum by the Solicitor of the Department of State.

APRIL 13, 1911.

THE TAMPA LYNCHING.

CLAIM IN BEHALF OF THE ITALIAN SUBJECT ANGELO ALBANO.

On September 21, 1910, the Department was informed by telegram from the Italian Chargé that two Italians had been lynched at Tampa, Florida, on the previous night. This telegram was immediately repeated by the Department to the Governor of Florida with a request that the State authorities take such steps as might be necessary to protect the lives of other Italians which were said to be threatened.

The State authorities later informed the Department that it appeared that one of the victims, Ficcarotta, was a naturalized citizen and that the other, Albano, was born in this country. It subsequently transpired that the statement in regard to Ficcarotta represented the fact, but the Italian Embassy has in the case of Albano submitted to the Department a birth certificate setting forth that he was born in San Stephano Quisquina, Italy.

Under date of October 10, 1910, the Governor of Florida addressed a letter to the Department stating that he had taken whatever steps seemed to him to be necessary in the case of Albano and that he had communicated with the Sheriff, the State Attorney of the Circuit in which Tampa is located, the Solicitor of the Criminal Court of Record of Hillsborough County and with the Judge of the Criminal Court of Record of that county. In his letter he enclosed a communication from R. A. Jackson, the Sheriff of Hillsborough County, and several affidavits, the latter to the effect that Albano, in order to vote at city elections, had sworn that he was an American citizen. The Sheriff's version of the affair, as appears in his communication to the Governor just referred to, is as follows:

in the assassination of J. F. Easterling, now deceased. Within thirty minutes after Albano and Ficcarati [Ficcarotta] were taken away from my deputies I had five deputies in the field hunting for the parties implicated in the lynching. They, of course, could find nothing. The next day a jury was empanelled to inquire into the lynching, which jury was kept in session more than a week, and every effort made by myself and thirty special deputies to ascertain something in connection with the lynching. No evidence of any kind could we find pointing to the guilt of anyone, and the jury accordingly found that Albano and Ficcarati [Ficcarotta] came to their death at the hands of parties unknown. * * *

With a note 1 from the Embassy, dated October 13, 1910, was transmitted a report by Count Moroni, Royal Attaché of the Immigration Service at New Orleans, summarizing the results of an investigation made by him at Tampa. Count Moroni states that he has no direct evidence against the principals in the lynching, as the Americans would not incriminate themselves and the Italians would not speak from fear of retribution, they being terrorized by the lynchers, and that accordingly his statements are based upon public rumor and certain clues. The report charges that the lynching was committed by citizens of West Tampa with the connivance of the local police authorities. The charge of connivance by the authorities is made to rest principally upon the following alleged circumstances of the affair: Shortly after the arrest of Ficcarotta and Albano upon the charge of murdering Easterling, Sheriff Jackson gave orders to transfer the prisoner[s] from the West Tampa jail, which was not considered safe, to the jail at Tampa. This order was given to Deputy Sheriff Keagging, who in turn commissioned another deputy, Evans, to effect the transfer. Evans, instead of using the electric van or the wagon intended for the conveyance of prisoners, hired a public hack and attempted to make the transfer with the protection only of a friend, one Bryan, who accompanied him. It is further alleged that a circuitous and unusual route between the two jails was followed, leading through sparsely populated portions of the community. (It should be observed that the local authorities justify this procedure on the ground that had the prisoners been taken by the direct route, through Main Street, where many Italians live, they would have been freed.) As a result of the lack of adequate protection, while the conveyance with the prisoner[s] was proceeding along a lonely part of the road, the prisoners were easily taken from their custodians and shortly thereafter were lynched. It is also alleged that the Deputy Sheriff failed to use all means at his disposal to effect the capture of the lynchers.

This report was transmitted to the Governor of Florida for the purposes of his investigation, with a request that he apprise the Department of the results of the investigation in such time as would permit of prompt communication to the Embassy.

Under date of February 13, 1911, the Embassy informed the Department that it had recently been furnished with a copy of the minutes of the Grand Jury of Hillsborough County, from which it appeared that the Grand Jury had failed to find any evidence connecting anybody with the lynching at Tampa. The Embassy again summarized what it deemed to be the facts of the matter and expressed the hope that some settlement would be arrived at without further delay. This note was communicated to the Governor of Florida. The Department referred to the international duty of affording appropriate protection to aliens within our territory and expressed the hope that it might be possible for the Florida authorities again to investigate the matter with all possible thoroughness in order to bring the guilty persons to justice. It was further observed that the Department was confident that should the facts sustain the construction put upon them by the Embassy, the State of Florida would be prepared to make such satisfaction for the death of Albano as might be required by the applicable rules of international law.

The Department sent to the Embassy a copy of its letter to the Governor of Florida, expressing the hope that an early determina-tion of the affair might be effected. The communication sent to the Embassy continued by adverting, in connection with the Albano case, to a similar complaint, which the Government of the United States therein renewed, to the Government of Italy for the wounding of one of its citizens and for the death of another, both of which events took place under the very eyes of the police and other national Italian officers and in spite of which fact no protection had been given to the American citizens nor had the perpetrators of the crime been apprehended or punished. The facts of the pending Nowell and Wilson case were then set forth, the burden of the statement being that the local Italian authorities wholly failed to apprehend Nowell and Wilson's assailants though it appeared that by the exercise of ordinary diligence they could easily have ascertained their identity. Reference was also made to the circumstance that Nowell, the surviving victim, had been sentenced to a considerable term of imprisonment for defending himself against attacks of the mob.

The Governor of Florida has recently sent to the Department a statement 2 from the State Attorney describing the failure of the Grand Jury to find any incriminating evidence.

Italian Embassy, Washington, June 24, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Secretary of State: With my three previous communications of under the dates of April 7th, #689, May 31st, #994, and June 21st, 1911, #1133, I had the honor to recommend to the usual courtesy of your excellency that the case of the lynching of Angelo Albano, occurred at Tampa, Florida, on September 20th, 1910, should be settled without any further delay.

As I have not received to this date any answer on the subject, I beg to recapitulate the status of the question, in the firm belief that your excellency will be able to give a definite answer to the solicitations of my Government on the matter.

By its note ³ of November 7th, 1910, the Department of State transmitted to this Royal Embassy the copy of a letter, with enclosures, of the Governor of Florida, promising to communicate a further report of the said Governor, which was expected.

With the note of February 28th, 1911, your Department sent to the Embassy the copy of a letter which it had sent to the Governor of Florida, reading, inter alia, as follows:

Should the facts, as finally elicited, sustain the construction put upon them by the Italian Embassy, and should it be found, after careful consideration, that the law applicable thereto is as laid down by that Embassy, the Department is confident that you will consider it necessary and just to meet any international obligation imposed by such a situation and that failing to apprehend and punish those responsible for the outrage, the State of Florida will be prepared at once, should the circumstances and the rules of international law require it, to make adequate satisfaction for the death of Albano, whose Italian nationality, in the absence of any countervailing evidence of naturalization, seems now fairly established.

Since the date of the aforesaid letter, no facts which would tend to contradict the findings reached by the Italian Embassy have been notified to the same, nor have the conclusions of law stated by the same been controverted in any way. In fact, this Embassy has not been notified that the Governor of Florida did ever answer the letter addressed to him by the Department of State on February 28th, 1911, nor that the authorities of that State did ever take any action in consequence of the letter in question.

The Department of State, by its aforesaid note of February 28th, 1911, introduced in the proceedings of the lynching at Tampa an occurrence in Catania, Italy, consisting of a fight between two American sailors and some Italians, but the Italian Embassy could not see any connection whatsoever, or even an analogy, between the two cases, and it replied accordingly with the aforesaid note of April

In consideration of what is above stated, and according to the orders of my Government, I must insist again that an adequate indemnity be granted without any further delay, for the lynching of the Italian citizen Angelo Albano.

I have the honor to enclose a memorandum 2 of some other similar cases, in which such an indemnity was paid for lynchings of Italian subjects.

Trusting that your excellency will take up the matter to that effect, I beg to renew [etc.]

Mr. Secretary of State: The Royal Ministry for Foreign Affairs has directed me to report immediately the reasons why the Royal Embassy has thus far been unable to reach a solution in the case of the indemnity due for the lynching of the Italian subject Angelo Albano at Tampa, Florida, on September 20, 1910.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 1, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 31st of December last, asking for a reply to the note addressed to this Department on June 24th last, by your excellency, regarding the case of the lynching of the Italian subject, Angelo

Albano, at Tampa, Florida, on September 20, 1910.

Referring to the Embassy's previous notes regarding this case, I desire to express my regret that, through an inadvertence, the Department failed to communicate to the Royal Italian Embassy the reply received from the Governor of Florida to the Department's letter to him of February 28, 1911, referred to in the Department's note to the Embassy of that date. I may say now that this reply enclosed a report, made at the Governor's request by the State Attorney of Florida, respecting the proceedings of the grand jury called to investigate the killing of the Italian subject Albano and the related matter of the killing of one Easterling, an American citizen resident of Tampa. This report recapitulated evidence with which the Embassy is already familiar in the main, and stated that, although a large number of witnesses were brought before the grand jury, including the driver of the hack in which Albano was being carried, no one could be found who could give evidence as to the identity of the persons who constituted the party which took him from the custody of the officers who had him in charge. mitting this report, the Governor of Florida pointed out that it evidenced that the State of Florida had exerted itself to secure the names of the persons who had participated in the wrong.

Referring further to the Embassy's note of June 24th, I may say that I have noted the request of the Royal Italian Government that an indemnity be granted by this Government for the killing of Albano and have carefully and attentively studied the circumstances and contentions upon which this request is founded, and I regret that I am not at this time persuaded that under all the circumstances of the matter this Government would, in justice and under the applicable principles of international law, be clearly warranted in taking the course desired by the Royal Italian Government.

ITALIAN EMBASSY, Washington, April 16, 1913.

Mr. Secretary of State: By his note of the 1st of March ultimo your excellency's predecessor, Mr. Knox, advised me that he was not at that time persuaded that the demand of an indemnity from the Government of the United States, formulated by the Royal Embassy on account of the lynching of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, in Tampa, Florida, on the 20th of September, 1910, could be acquiesced in.

As the reasons for this intimation were not stated, my Government has ordered me to bring this pending question, already long protracted, to the kind attention of your excellency, feeling certain that you will give to it the solution required by the principles of equity and in conformity with the precedents already followed, according to the requirements of international law.

I therefore have the honor to refer the foregoing to your excellency, and should be thankful if you would be kind enough to inform me as early as possible what determination you have considered advisable to take in respect to it.

Mr. Secretary of State: While personally handing to your excellency my note of the 16th of April ultimo, No. 481, I had the honor to inform you verbally that the sum demanded by my Government as indemnity for the lynching of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, which occurred in Tampa, Florida, the 20th of September, 1910, is six thousand dollars, pointing out that in consideration of the circumstances and, above all, the delay of three years in settlement of said matter, the said sum is far inferior to the indemnities paid in previous analogous cases.

In accordance with new telegraphic instructions that I have received, I have the honor to confirm said demand of indemnity of six thousand dollars, begging your excellency that with your customary courtesy you will give me an answer as soon as possible, which I have no doubt will be favorable.

House of Representatives. 63d Congress; 1st session. Document No. 105.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting Report from the Secretary of State in relation to the case of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject.

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the case of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, who, on September 20, 1910, was, while in custody on a charge of crime, at Tampa, Fla., seized by an armed mob and killed; and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, Congress make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject thus killed, the proceeds to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper.

Woodrow Wilson.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, June 26, 1913.

The President:

On September 20, 1910, at Tampa, Fla., Angelo Albano, a subject of the King of Italy, was, while in custody on a charge of crime, seized by an armed mob and killed.

On representations made of the affair by the Italian Embassy at this capital, the Department of State immediately communicated with the Governor of Florida in order that appropriate steps might be taken to investigate the case.

The Governor had already taken measures to bring the guilty parties to justice. The next day after the occurrence a jury was empaneled to inquire into the matter. This jury was kept in session more than a week, during which time every effort was made by the sheriff of Hillsboro County and 30 special deputies to ascertain the perpetrators of the crime, but no evidence was obtained pointing to the guilt of anyone and the jury accordingly found that Albano came to his death at the hands of parties unknown.

Subsequently, at the fall term, 1910, of the circuit court for Hillsboro County, the grand jury investigated this case, but no indictment was found or other steps taken resulting in the apprehension and punishment of the perpetrators of the offense; and notwithstanding the cooperation of the Governor of the State with the Federal Government in order to bring them to justice, it appears that all efforts have been in vain.

As a consequence the Italian Embassy, in the name of the Government of Italy, has appealed to the sense of equity and justice of this Government for some settlement of this case and has requested that an indemnity of $6,000 be granted to that end.

In view of all the circumstances of the case and of the action taken by Congress in the cases of the lynching of Italian subjects at Walsenburg, Colo., in 1895; Hahnville, La., in 1896; Tallulah, La., in 1899; and Erwin, Miss., in 1901, and for the preservation of the cordial relations now existing between the United States and Italy, the Secretary of State has the honor to recommend that the Congress be requested as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, to make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject, Angelo Albano, in the amount named, to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper

In this relation the Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to their transmission to Congress for the consideration of that body in relation to this case, copies of papers, some of which have been submitted by the Ambassador of Italy at this capital, in support of the claim for an indemnity made against the Government of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

I am positive that my nephew, Angelo Albano, was born in Italy about 24 years ago. About 15 days previous to his death, as I had the intention to apply for naturalization for myself, I asked him to accompany me to the Federal court to declare my intention of becoming an American citizen; the said Angelo Albano then told me I had better not do so, as he had never gotten naturalization papers himself and that he never intended to apply for them. Acting on his advice I did not go to declare my intention of becoming an American citizen, as I was inclined to do. I am positive that my brother, Petro Albano, father of the said Angelo Albano, was born in Italy about 53 years ago, and I lived with my brother, the father of Angelo Albano, from the year 1899 to 1902, inclusive, and during that time he never obtained naturalization papers or voted. And I remember also that in frequent conversations on the subject he always declared himself as not being in favor of becoming an American citizen.

I am the mother of Angelo Albano, who was lynched on September 20, 1910, near the city of West Tampa, Fla. I gave birth to my son, the said Angelo Albano, in Italy, about 24 years ago. About 15 days before his death, when my brother-in-law, Domenico Albano, asked him to assist him in becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States, my son Angelo Albano said on that occasion in my presence that he had never become a citizen of the United States and never intended to apply for citizenship papers, as Italians would always be considered as Italians regardless of the naturalization papers. I further depose and say that my husband, Pietro Albano, who was born in Italy and raised with me in my native town, always expressed himself as being opposed to taking out naturalization papers in the United States, principally for the reason that during his stay in this country he worked for 10 years on a sugar plantation in the State of Louisiana and for 7 years in the State of Colorado at other manual labor, which kept him out of the influence of politicians, and to my certain knowledge he never voted.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant, in which you state that you do not think it will be necessary for me to send you a transcript of the evidence taken before the grand jury in the above matter, has been duly received.

A large number of witnesses were brought before the grand jury and interrogated about the matter, but no one could be found who could give any idea as to who constituted the party that took Albano from the custody of the officers. The two deputy sheriffs testified that they were sent by the sheriff's office over to West Tampa, which is about a mile and a half from the courthouse, to get Albano and Figarrota, who had been arrested on some criminal charge. They stated that they got a hackman to drive them over to where Albano and Figarrota were held in custody; that they went by way of Fortune Street, and would have returned that way with said prisoners, and it is the nearest way to the jail, if Albano had not requested them to come by way of the courthouse so that he could see if he could not furnish a bail bond before being locked up in jail; that they complied with his request and came by way of Moody Heights, which would have brought them into Tampa by way of Grand Central Avenue and Lafayette Street; that as they were traveling south and a short distance from Grand Central Avenue, at what is called Moody Heights, they were suddenly held up by having pistols thrust into their faces, and the horses stopped by men standing in front of them and grabbing the reins; that while some held pistols in their faces the others in the party took Albano and Figarrota and placed them in an automobile, after which the crowd left; that they then turned around and went back to West Tampa and notified the sheriff's office and the police department of the occurrence; that the prisoners were taken from them about 9 o'clock that night; that they did not recognize the voice, the form, or the size of any person in the crowd, and that they could not give any idea as to who was in the crowd, and that they did not recognize a single individual.

The hack driver also swore that he did not know anyone in the party and that he had no idea who any of them were.

It was impossible to get any evidence as to the identity of the parties from any witness examined.

The grand jury investigated the killing of Easterling at the same time they investigated the lynching of Albano, and the stenographer told me this morning that it would be just as cheap to have all of the testimony transcribed as it would be for him to take the time to go through his notes and pick out only that relating to the lynching of Albano. He said that a transcription of the testimony would cost at least $100. I am confident that the commissioners will gladly pay for it if you think you need it.

I have the honor to remain, very truly, yours,

H. S. PHILLIPS, State Attorney, Sixth Circuit.

PAYMENT OF AN INDEMNITY TO THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT FOR THE KILL-ING OF ANGELO ALBANO, AN ITALIAN SUBJECT.

August 15, 1913, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Sharp, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following REPORT.

[To accompany H. R. 7384.]

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7384) authorizing the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, having had the same under consideration, reports it back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This claim grows out of the killing of one Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, by an armed mob while in custody on a charge of crime, in the city of Tampa, Fla., on the 20th day of September, 1910. The facts in the case detailing the crime and establishing the fact that its victim was an Italian subject at the time of his death, are succinctly set forth in the copies of sworn statements contained in the message from the President (H. Doc. 105), transmitting the report of the Secretary of State in relation thereto. Not only does the President recommend that "as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, Congress make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject thus killed, the proceeds to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper"; but Secretary of State Bryan in his report also recommends that Congress take such action in view of all the circumstances in the case, both on account of the precedents which he therein cites, and "for the preservation of the cordial relations now existing between the United States and Italy."

As to the amount of the indemnity involved the payment of $6,000 is recommended, not only because it seems to this committee to be reasonable, but because it has been requested by the Italian Embassy as one that would comport with "the sense of equity and justice" as a fair sum which our Government should pay.

In view of these facts and the further one that recently similar claims for a considerably larger amount have been generously settled in our favor by the Italian Government, it would seem after this long delay to impose upon Congress an obligation to promptly comply with the request of that Government for a speedy settlement of the claim.

63d Congress, 1st session. H. R. 7384.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

August 12, 1913.

Mr. Sharp introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on For-eign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A BILL

To authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby authorized to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, out of humane consideration and without reference to the question of liability therefor, to the Italian Government as full indemnity to the heirs of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject who was killed by an armed mob at Tampa, Florida, on the twentieth day of September, nineteen hundred and ten, the sum of $6,000.

PROTEST OF JAPAN AGAINST THE LAND LAWS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Note.—The following—extracts from the treaty with Japan signed on February 21, 1911; correspondence with the Japanese Embassy in regard to the treaty, exchanged on the day the treaty was signed; and the complete text of the California statute approved May 19, 1913—all referred to in the correspondence, are here given for convenience of reference.

Articles I and XIV of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between the United States and Japan.

ARTICLE I.

The citizens or subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

They shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens or subjects.

The citizens or subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall receive, in the territories of the other, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to native citizens or subjects, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the native citizens or subjects.

They shall, however, be exempt in the territories of the other from compulsory military service either on land or sea, in the regular forces, or in the national guard, or in the militia; from all contributions imposed in lieu of personal service, and from all forced loans or military exactions or contributions.

ARTICLE XIV.

Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Treaty, the High Contracting Parties agree that, in all that concerns commerce and navigation, any privilege, favor or immunity which either Contracting Party has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the citizens or subjects of any other State shall be extended to the citizens or subjects of the other Contracting Party gratuitously, if the concession in favor of that other State shall have been gratuitous, and on the same or equivalent conditions if the concession shall have been conditional.

Sir: In reply to your inquiry about landownership in Japan and Korea I have the honor under instructions of the Imperial Government to state that landownership in Japan will be regulated by the law of the country, and foreigners and foreign corporations who comply with the terms of the provisions of the law will acquire the right of ownership of land. In return for the rights of landownership which are granted Japanese by laws of the various States of the United States the Imperial Government will by liberal interpretation of the law be prepared to grant landownership to American citizens from all the States, reserving for the future, however, the right of maintaining the condition of reciprocity with respect to the separate States.

The rights in real property acquired by Americans in Korea will be respected. As to the recognition of the title deeds registered in the American Consulate General at Seoul, the Imperial Government are now considering the question with the American Embassy at Tokyo and believe that it will be solved satisfactorily to both parties. In case of the extension of the law of landownership to Korea it will be applied to all foreigners in general including American citizens upon their fulfillment of the provisions of the law on the subject.

Statutes of California; chapter 113.

An act relating to the rights, powers and disabilities of aliens and of certain companies, associations and corporations with respect to property in this state, providing for escheats in certain cases, prescribing the procedure therein, and repealing all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict herewith.

[Approved May 19, 1913.]

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

Section 1. All aliens eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States may acquire, possess, enjoy, transmit and inherit real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the same manner and to the same extent as citizens of the United States, except as otherwise provided by the laws of this state.

Sec. 2. All aliens other than those mentioned in section one of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this state for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

SEC. 3. Any company, association or corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or nation, of which a majority of the members are aliens other than those specified in section one of this act, or in which a majority of the issued capital stock is owned by such aliens, may acquire, possess, enjoy and convey real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such members or stockholders are citizens or subjects, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this state for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

Sec. 4. Whenever it appears to the court in any probate proceeding that by reason of the provisions of this act any heir or devisee can not take real property in this state which, but for said provisions, said heir or devisee would take as such, the court, instead of ordering a distribution of such real property to such heir or devisee, shall order a sale of said real property to be made in the manner provided by law for probate sales of real property, and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed to such heir or devisee in lieu of such real property.

Sec. 5. Any real property hereafter acquired in fee in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section two of this act, or by any company, association or corporation mentioned in section three of this act, shall escheat to, and become and remain the property of the State of California. The attorney general shall institute proceedings to have the escheat of such real property adjudged and enforced in the manner provided by section 474 of the Political Code and title eight, part three of the Code of Civil Pro-Upon the entry of final judgment in such proceedings, the title to such real property shall pass to the State of California. provisions of this section and of sections two and three of this act shall not apply to any real property hereafter acquired in the enforcement or in satisfaction of any lien now existing upon, or interest in such property, so long as such real property so acquired shall remain the property of the alien, company, association or corporation acquiring the same in such manner.

Sec. 6. Any leasehold or other interest in real property less than the fee, hereafter acquired in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section two of this act, or by any company, association or corporation mentioned in section three of this act, shall escheat to the State of California. The attorney general shall institute proceedings to have such escheat adjudged and enforced as provided in section five of this act. In such proceedings the court shall determine and adjudge the value of such leasehold, or other interest in such real property, and enter judgment for the state for the amount thereof together with costs. Thereupon the court shall order a sale of the real property covered by such leasehold, or other interest in the manner provided by section 1271 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Out of the proceeds arising from such sale, the amount of the judgment rendered for the state shall be paid into the state treasury and the balance shall be deposited with and distributed by the court in accordance with the interest of the parties therein.

Sec. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed as a limitation upon the power of the state to enact laws with respect to the acquisition, holding or disposal by aliens of real property in this state.

SEC. 8. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent, or in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY, Washington, May 9, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acquaint you that my Government have learned, with painful disappointment, of the measure recently passed by the Legislature of the State of California on the subject of alien land tenure, and that they feel constrained to offer to the American Government their urgent and explicit protest, which, in pursuance of their instructions, I now respectfully beg to lodge with you against the new legislation.

In the opinion of the Imperial Government the act in question is essentially unfair and discriminatory, and it is impossible to ignore the fact that it was primarily directed against my countrymen. Accordingly, this protest is based upon the proposition that the measure is unjust and inequitable, and that it is not only prejudicial to the existing rights of Japanese subjects, but is inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty actually in force between Japan and the United States, and is also opposed to the spirit and fundamental principles of amity and good understanding upon which the conventional relations of the two countries depend.

It seems to the Imperial Government that the enactment in effect deprives my countrymen of the right to transmit to their legal heirs their already lawfully acquired landed property. Full right of such transmission was a right running with such property, when so acquired, and consequently the annulment of that right at this time is clearly in conflict with the third clause of Article I of the treaty, which guarantees to Japanese subjects, in reciprocity, the most constant protection for their property. Moreover, in its relation to house property, the legislation appears to be, in a much wider sense, repugnant to the provisions of the first clause of the same article, by which Japanese subjects are granted, in reciprocity, and upon the same terms as American citizens, the right to own houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops. All exceptional limitations and restrictions upon or in respect of that right, either in the matter of its transmissibility or otherwise, are thus believed to be irreconcilable with the first and third clauses of Article I of the treaty.

Again, in regard to the right of my countrymen to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, all limitations and restrictions upon the right contained in the act, which are not equally applicable to American leaseholders, are, it seems, also contrary to the treaty pro-

I beg further to point out that the provisions of the enactment relating to companies, associations, and corporations appear to be no less Thus, in case an association, in proceeding to dissoluobjectionable. tion, decides to distribute among its members any real property now owned by it, all Japanese members would, in discrimination, be excluded from such distribution in abridgment of their vested rights. Other instances of grave injustice in disregard of already existing rights of my countrymen may readily be imagined, more especially in case of an institution whose stock is purchasable in the open market. For instance, lawful interests of Japanese subjects in such an institution might become liable to escheat without any unlawful act on their part, since the innocent purchase of its stock by aliens of other nationalities laboring under the same disabilities as the Japanese might lead to that result. But, practically speaking, the enforcement of the measure in question would have the effect of depriving my countrymen of the right to own any stock in any company, association, or corporation liable to become possessed in California of any real property or any interest therein, for no business man of ordinary business acumen and prudence would take the hazard of confiscation. Nevertheless, such hazard would exist in view of that act, notwithstanding the parity engagement on the subject of trade contained in Article I and the most-favored-nation stipulation in all that concerns commerce appearing in Article XIV of the treaty. Further, the act [Section 2] provides in effect that aliens ineligible to citizenship may acquire, possess, enjoy or transfer real property or any interest therein, only in the manner, and to the extent, and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the United States and the country of which such aliens are subjects or Apart from the question as to whether the term "any treaty now existing" is intended to cover any treaty which may hereafter be concluded in supplement to, or in supersession of, the existing compact, it frequently happens that two friendly nations cease to have any commercial treaty in force between them, without impairing in the least their mutual relations of amity and good will. Should such contingency present itself in the intercourse of Japan and the United States, Japanese subjects will apparently be denied all rights relating to real property in California, now guaranteed by the treaty, whereas aliens eligible to citizenship are placed on the national footing, in the matter of such property rights, independently of treaty engagements. Accordingly, the security of the rights acquired lawfully and in good faith by the Japanese would, under the new enactment, be in constant and serious danger, from which aliens eligible to citizenship are safely guarded. Those just rewards of long and honest toil, upon which so many Japanese families depend for their livelihood, might be deprived of all protection under the act, by causes for which they are in no way responsible.

It may be contended by the framers and supporters of the bill, that in the event of any concrete cases arising, in which the Japanese find that their rightful claims are disregarded, it will be open for the aggrieved parties to resort to ordinary process of law for remedy. Considering, however, that such process necessarily involves much delay of time and great hardships for the parties in interest, and that those disadvantages will be wholly unknown in respect to aliens whose eligibility to citizenship has never been called in question, it will be readily conceded that the enactment will operate in effect as a discrimination against my countrymen whose right to become American citizens has not yet been definitely established.

The Imperial Government, while reserving for future consideration other objectionable features of the enactment in question, desire to have it made entirely clear that they attach the utmost importance to the discriminatory phase of the legislation in those affairs of ordinary international commercial concern, in which nations usually accord to peaceful and friendly aliens equal treatment either as a matter of comity or by application of the principle of the most favored nation clause.

The sympathetic and accommodating disposition with which the American administration has invariably extended its helping hands to the Imperial Government, in the cause of humanity and international good understanding, encourages them in the hope that the present difficulties will be set at rest in a manner worthy of the historic relations of cordial friendship between the two neighboring nations.

File No. 811.52/164.

The Secretary of State to the Japanese Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 19, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of May 9th, laying before my Government the representations of the Imperial Government of Japan with regard to the law just adopted by the State of California concerning the holding of agricultural lands by aliens.

The Government of the United States regrets most sincerely that the Imperial Government of Japan should regard this legislation as an indication of unfriendliness toward their people. Being apprised while that measure was still under consideration by the Legislature of California that that might be the feeling of the Imperial Government, the President and I very earnestly attempted to induce the legislative authorities of California to reconsider or to modify their plans in the matter, urging that the State should not act as a separate unit in this case but, rather, in cooperation with the Federal Government. Under the constitutional arrangement of the United States we could do no more than that.

At the same time, we feel that the Imperial Government has been misled in its interpretation of the spirit and object of the legislation in question. It is not political. It is not part of any general national policy which would indicate unfriendliness or any purpose inconsistent with the best and most cordial understanding between the two nations. It is wholly economic. It is based upon the particular economic conditions existing in California as interpreted by her own people, who wish to avoid certain conditions of competition in their agricultural activities.

I have not failed to observe that your note calls attention to certain provisions of the California law which you conceive to be inconsistent with and to violate existing treaty stipulations between the two countries, and thus to threaten to impair vested rights of property. The law, however, in terms purports to respect and preserve all rights under existing treaties. Such is its declared intent. But in case it should be alleged that the law had in its operation failed to accomplish that intent, your Government is no doubt advised that by the Constitution of the United States the stipulations of treaties made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land, and that they are expressly declared to be binding upon State and Federal courts alike to the end that they may be judicially enforced in all cases. For this purpose the courts, Federal and State, are open to all persons who may feel themselves to have been deprived of treaty rights and guarantees; and in this respect the alien enjoys under our laws a privilege which to one of our own citizens may not be in all cases available, namely, the privilege of suing in the Federal courts. In precisely the same way, our citizens resort and are obliged to resort to the courts for the enforcement of their constitutional and legal rights. Article XIV of the treaty, to which your excellency refers, appears to relate solely to the rights of commerce and navigation. These the California statute does not appear to be designed in any way to affect. The authors of the law seem to have been careful to guard against any invasion of contractual rights.

Your excellency raises, very naturally and properly, the question how the case would stand should explicit treaties between the two countries expire or cease to be in force while, nevertheless, relations of entire amity and good will still continue to exist between them. can only reply that in such circumstances the Government of the United States would always deem it its pleasure, as well as a manifest dictate of its cordial friendship for Japan and the Japanese people, to safeguard the rights of trade and intercourse between the two peoples now secured by treaty. I need not assure your excellency that this Government will cooperate with the Imperial Government in every possible way to maintain with the utmost cordiality the understandings which bind the two nations together in honor and in interest. Its obligations of friendship would not be lessened or performed in niggardly fashion in any circumstances. It values too highly the regard of Japan and her cooperation in the great peaceful tasks of the modern world to jeopard them in any way; and I feel that I can assure your excellency that there is no reason to feel that its policy in such matters would be embarrassed or interfered with by the legislation of any State of the Union. The economic policy of a single State with regard to a single kind of property can not turn aside these strong and abiding currents of generous and profitable intercourse and good feeling.

In conclusion let me thank your excellency for the candor with which you have dealt with this Government in this matter and express the hope that this episode in the intercourse of the two great countries which we represent will only quicken our understanding of one another and our confidence in the desire of each to do justice to the

File No. 811.52/165.

The Japanese Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY, Washington, June 4, 1913.

Sir: I did not fail to transmit to my Government at once by cable a copy of the note which you did me the honor of addressing to me under date of the 19th instant [ultimo], in reply to mine of the 9th, idem, with regard to the law recently enacted by the State of California on the alien land tenure.

That reply did not, I regret to say, have the effect of lessening the sense of disappointment and grave concern experienced by the Imperial Government in consequence of the legislation to which it had reference. Having in view the attitude and action of deep sympathy expressed and taken by the American administration in the matter, while the measure was still pending in the legislature of California, the Cabinet at Tokio had good reason, it was thought, to expect some intimation of willingness, on the part of the American Government, to cooperate with the Government of Japan in the endeavor to find satisfactory solution of the problem, instead of the suggestion that the courts of the United States were open to those of my countrymen who might feel themselves to have been deprived of treaty rights and guarantees.

The persons prejudicially affected by the enactment complained of are expressly limited to those aliens who are not eligible to citizenship. Considering that Japanese subjects are, as a nation, apparently denied the right to acquire American nationality, that they are the principal sufferers from that enactment, and that the avowed purpose of the law was to deprive my countrymen of the right to acquire and to possess landed property in California, the Imperial Government are unable to escape the conclusion that the measure is unfair and intentionally racially discriminatory, and, looking at the terms of the treaty between our two countries, they are equally well convinced that the act in question is contrary to the letter and spirit of that compact and they moreover believe that the enactment is at variance with the accepted principles of just and equal treatment upon which good relations between friendly nations must, in the final analysis,

Nor can my Government find in the new law, as you have done, any declaration of the intention to respect and preserve all rights under existing treaties. It is quite true that section 2 of the act provides in effect that aliens not eligible to citizenship may acquire, possess, enjoy, and transfer real property, or any interest therein, to the extent and for the purpose prescribed by any treaty now existing between the United States and the country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise. But, in the opinion of the Imperial Government, that provision can not be reconciled with the treaty stipulations to which they appealed in my former note, and to which they again appeal in this communication. Japanese people own real property, and other interests therein, in California under the existing treaty, as well as in accordance with law. Such property, having been duly acquired, is unquestionably entitled, in virtue of the treaty, to the same "most constant protection and security" as similar property belonging to citizens of the United States. Efforts were no doubt made to bring the measure into accord with the existing treaty stipulations, so far as that could be done consistently with the real purpose of the enactment. But having regard to the pronouncement contained in section 7 of the act, it may be doubted whether the legislature of California considered it absolutely essential to respect the treaty engagements bearing on the subject of alien land ownership, in so far as those engagements could not be reconciled with the wishes of the State in the matter.

In these circumstances, it becomes my duty, under instructions from my Government, to announce to you that the Imperial Government are compelled, much to their regret, to maintain, in its integrity, the protest contained in my previous note on this subject.

I beg to point out, in this connection, that my Government can not regard as responsive to the actual situation the suggestion contained in your note to the effect that the Japanese people are at liberty to appeal to the courts of the United States for the enforcement of their constitutional and legal rights. My countrymen who may suffer wrong in consequence of the enactment will no doubt look to those tribunals for relief. But I venture to make it entirely clear to your appreciation that the Imperial Government are firmly convinced that the phase of the controversy now under discussion is itself appropriately amenable to ordinary diplomatic processes. The question at issue is a question between the Government of Japan and that of the United States, as to the true intent and meaning of their existing treaty, and the extent to which the rules and principles of fair and equal treatment may, in comity and good conscience, be invoked in the present case. The wrong complained of is directed against my countrymen as a nation. It was committed by the authorities of a single State of the Union, contrary to the expressed wishes and advice of the Federal Government. It is, nevertheless, to that Government alone, that Japan must look to have the wrong undone, since it is with that Government alone that the Imperial Government hold diplomatic intercourse.

The number of my countrymen actually affected by the discriminatory legislation complained of is small, and the quantity of landed property in California actually held by them, both as owners and leaseholders, is very inconsiderable. On the other hand, it is a recognized fact that, as a result of a careful and conscientious enforcement of the existing understanding on the subject of labor emigration from Japan to America, the Japanese population in the United States has, since that understanding took effect, shown an annual decrease. cordingly, if the object of the legislation in question was wholly economic, then the conclusion is natural, it seems to the Imperial Government, that the apprehensions upon which the enactment was based were unjustifiable and without sanction of good reason, and I trust I may be permitted in the present context to add the suggestion that the law under discussion does not concern itself exclusively with agricultural lands. But even if the basis of the act had been wholly economic that fact could not, in the opinion of my Government, be advanced as a valid and sufficient reason for annulling or abridging vested rights of property of my countrymen, and I beg to assure you that the Imperial Government have too high an opinion of the sense of right and justice of the American Government to believe for a moment that that Government will permit a State to set aside the stipulations of the treaty or to impair the obligations of reciprocal friendly intercourse and good neighborhood.

In conclusion I beg, in pursuance of instructions from my Government, to invite your attention to the phase of the present question to which, in the situation as it existed at the time my former note was addressed to you, it was not deemed either necessary or advisable to advert. I refer to the matter of Japanese naturalization in America in its relation to the question of Japanese land ownership. The provisions of law, under which it is held that Japanese people are not eligible to American citizenship, are mortifying to the Government and people of Japan, since the racial distinction inferable from those provisions is hurtful to their just national susceptibility. The question of naturalization, however, is a political problem of national and not international concern. So long, therefore, as the distinction referred to was employed in relation to rights of purely political nature the Imperial Government had no occasion to approach the Government of the United States on the subject. But when that distinction is made use of, as in the present case, for the purpose of depriving Japanese subjects of rights and privileges of a civil nature, which are freely granted in the United States to other aliens, it becomes the duty of the Imperial Government, in the interest of the relations of cordial friendship and good understanding between the two countries, to express frankly their conviction that the racial distinction, which at best is inaccurate and misleading, does not afford a valid basis for the discrimination on the subject of land tenure.

File No. 811.52/181.

Aide-mémoire in explanation and support of Viscount Chinda's notes of May 9 and June 4, 1913.

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY, WASHINGTON.

I.

The existing Japanese-American treaty accords to Japanese subjects, in reciprocity, liberty in the United States to own and lease houses upon the same terms as citizens of the United States, and to lease land for residential and commercial purposes also upon the same terms as such citizens.

The words "to own" are words of the widest significance, and, in the context in which they appear in said treaty, include, it is maintained, the right to acquire real property in question by all ordinary lawful means, viz., by purchase, by devise, and by descent, and those words also, it is contended, cover the right to dispose of such real property, when duly acquired, by all various methods known to the law, viz., by sale, by gift, by bequest, and by transmission. In other words, ownership carries with it, as a necessary incident, full right of alienation. But all doubts on the subject will be removed, when it is considered, firstly, that the words "liberty to own" appearing in the treaty are supplemented by a parity engagement, to the effect, "upon the same terms as American citizens," and, secondly, that the liberty so enjoyed by such citizens being full and complete, the corresponding liberty accorded to Japanese subjects is equally without limitation or qualification.

So too, liberty to Japanese subjects to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, upon the same terms as American citizens, naturally carries with it the same freedom in the matter of acquiring and disposing of the leased property.

Again, under the laws actually in operation in California (the new alien land enactment does not take effect until August 10), Japanese subjects have full right to take, hold and dispose of all real property and interest therein. That right carries with it the capacity to bequeath and transmit such property.

The treaty now in force also guarantees to Japanese subjects, in reciprocity, the same most constant protection and security for their property in the United States that is there enjoyed by American citizens in respect of property belonging to them.

The treaty of 1894, which was superseded in 1911 by the present one, provided in Article I that, in whatever relates to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever, which they may lawfully acquire, the subjects or citizens of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights as native subjects or citizens, or subjects or citizens of the most favored nation.

Confidently relying upon the foregoing treaty and statutory provisions, Japanese subjects have become owners and lessees of land and houses in California, and the real property so acquired has, for all purposes, become fully vested in such owners. It was in the presence of this state of things that the new alien land law was enacted. It, in effect, deprives all Japanese subjects of the capacity to bequeath and transmit their duly acquired real property or interest therein, and it also denies to such subjects the capacity to acquire any real property or interest therein by devise or by descent. The measure also contains no less objectionable features concerning companies, associations, and corporations, but as this aide-mémoire is designed to deal exclusively with the provisions of the law which trench upon individual rights the clauses relating to legal persons are, for the present, reserved.

It is the firm convicition of the Imperial Government that the provisions of the statute in question, which are intended either to abridge treaty rights of Japanese subjects in the matter of acquisition and disposition of real property and interest therein, or to unsettle real estate titles already duly vested under the laws of California, are contrary to the express stipulations of the treaty now in force between Japan and the United States in the following respects:

(a) That so far as the act takes away from Japanese subjects the capacity, hitherto freely enjoyed by them, to acquire, by devise and descent, houses for all purposes, and leasehold of land for residential and commercial purposes, it is in conflict with the first clause of Article I of said treaty, since that clause accords to Japanese subjects liberty to own houses and to lease lands upon the same terms as American citizens, and it will not be contended that the liberty of such citizens in that respect has been annulled or abridged;

(b) That, so far as the act deprives Japanese subjects of the capacity to bequeath and transmit to their devisees and heirs real property and interest therein, duly acquired by them under said treaty, it is inconsistent with the first and third clauses of Article I, since, in addition to the guarantee of equal treatment which is contained in the first clause above mentioned, property of Japanese subjects is, by the third clause aforesaid, assured of the same most constant protection, the same equal protection of equal laws, that is accorded to the property of American citizens, and it goes without saying that property rights of such citizens still remain complete and undisturbed; and

(c) That, so far as the act takes away from Japanese subjects the capacity of bequeathing and transmitting real property and interest therein, already duly acquired by them under the laws of California, it is repugnant to the above-mentioned third clause of Article I of the treaty, since it impairs obligations of the contracts under which such property was acquired and is held, and thus deprives Japanese subjects of that equal protection for their property which the treaty extends to them.

The Imperial Government are also of the opinion that the act in question, so far as it takes away from Japanese subjects the right to dispose, in any manner whatsoever, of the real property or interest therein, lawfully acquired by them prior to July 17, 1911, is an impairment of vested rights created under the treaty of 1894.

The foregoing propositions are made with the greater confidence since it is found that the principles upon which they rest are fully sustained by the line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which have contributed to the just renown of that high tribunal.

The decisions to which, in the present relations, the Imperial Government especially refer are found in the following cases:

Fairfax's devisee v. Hunter's lessee.

Chirac v. Chirac. Orr v. Hodgson.

Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Town of New Haven.

Geoffroy v. Riggs.

The Chinese Exclusion case.

In Chirac v. Chirac, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Town of New Haven, and the Chinese Exclusion case, as well as in Watson v. Donnelly (New York Supreme Court, 1859), the principle was clearly announced that duly vested rights, acquired under a treaty, still continue, although the treaty itself is abrogated.

II.

The Imperial Government are equally convinced that the provisions of the land legislation in question are irreconcilable with the spirit and intent of the Japanese-American treaty, as well as inequitable and at variance with the generally accepted principles which regulate commercial intercourse between friendly states, because such provisions discriminate against Japanese subjects, not only as compared with American citizens, but as compared with subjects of other countries, in a matter in which, internationally speaking, aliens are usually placed on national or most favored nation footing.

While, in the relations between states, the principle of equal treatment is sometimes made amenable to exceptions and qualifications, this is the first instance, it is believed, in which a power, having in force a reciprocal commercial treaty with a clause guaranteeing most favored nation treatment "in all that concerns commerce and navigation," has ever been placed by the other contracting state at a disadvantage as compared with non-treaty countries in matters which, in the treaty, are made the subject of reciprocal concession.

International discriminations are in any case obnoxious, and, if carried beyond limits of actual and recognized necessity, are harmful to international good relations, independently of the question whether they are repugnant to treaty stipulations or not. In the definition of those permissible limits, and in the establishment of the principle of equal opportunity, no country has taken a firmer stand or exercised a more powerful influence than the United States. Thus in 1879, the Secretary of State at Washington, in an instruction addressed to the American Minister in Mexico, announced that "a Mexican statute discriminating against citizens of the United States and other aliens in respect to the capacity to hold real estate in Mexico is in conflict with the treaty of 1831." (Dr. Moore's International Law Digest, Volume VI, page 702.) The treaty, so appealed to, contains no express provisions on the subject of ownership of real estate. It reciprocally accords most favored nation treatment in respect of commerce and navigation, and grants the right of residence, of hiring houses and warehouses for purposes of commerce, and of succession to personal estate, and it also extends protection to persons and property. Accordingly, it must be assumed that the discrimination complained of was in disregard of the spirit and purposes, rather than express words, of the treaty.

But unjust discriminations based upon race are still more objectionable. Russia's severe treatment of Jews has been deeply resented by the United States, and on December 13, 1911, the House of Representatives, by an unusual vote of 301 to 1, passed a resolution in strong condemnation of the action of Russia. The resolution de-

That the people of the United States assert as a fundamental principle that the rights of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad, because of race or religion; that the Government of the United States concludes its treaties for the equal protection of all classes of its citizens without regard to race or religion; that the Government of the United States will not be a party to any treaty which discriminates, or which, by one of the parties thereto is so construed as to discriminate, between American citizens on the ground of race or religion; that the Government of Russia has violated the treaty between the United States and Russia concluded at St. Petersburg December 18, 1832, refusing to honor American passports duly issued to American citizens on account of race and religion.

And for these reasons, the resolution called upon the President to denounce said treaty three days after the adoption of the above resolution.¹ The United States notified Russia of the termination of the treaty, saying that it had been recognized that the treaty was "no longer fully responsive, in various respects, to the needs of political and material relations of the two countries." The action of Russia it seems was not directed against American Jews exclusively.

It applied equally to all alien Israelites, and, although resting largely upon race and religion, the discrimination complained of was inspired, in part at least, so Russia declared, by economic considerations. If in the presence of this state of things, the United States Government found sufficient reason to object to Russia's action, then the Imperial Government have much stronger grounds for protesting against the invidious discrimination of the new California enactment, since those discriminations are not only irreconcilable with express treaty stipulations, but, being national and racial, are in clear disregard of national susceptibilities.

III.

In a number of States, the right of aliens to hold real estate has been made to depend upon actual filing of declarations of intention to become citizens. That requirement, as a condition precedent to the exercise of the right in question, can not be said to be unreasonable or illogical. A relation is thereby established between said right and eventual citizenship, because the continued existence of the right depends upon actual completion of the process of naturalization.

California is the only State, it is believed, in which the right of aliens to hold real property has been made to rest solely upon eligibility to citizenship. Such eligibility, in the context in which it is used, has no relation to the question of citizenship, since no action looking to ultimate naturalization is required. The formula appearing in the new California enactment was employed as a convenient paraphrase to express firm intention to discriminate against Japanese subjects as compared with aliens belonging to white and African races in the matter of ownership of land and houses.

Clear and important distinction may, therefore, be said to exist between the laws of such other States and of California, on the subject of alien land tenure in this: By the laws of such other States, actual steps looking to ultimate naturalization have to be taken before the right of real estate ownership can be exercised; whereas, by the law of California, the capacity to take such steps is alone sufficient. The discrimination complained of is no less invidious and disregardful of the treaty rights of Japan, because of indirect language in which it is

TV.

It has been suggested that the power to deal with the question of alien real estate ownership in the United States belongs exclusively to the several States. Controlling decisions of the courts of the United States might be cited in refutation of that suggestion. But it is sufficient to point out that the United States accepted the first and third clauses of Article I of the existing Japanese-American treaty, as well as Article I of the treaty of 1894, and that she can not have given her consent to those stipulations if the power to regulate the question of ownership of real property by aliens was reserved exclusively to the States.

V.

The Imperial Government, in concluding their present study of the question of the recently enacted alien land law of California, desire to invite attention to the note from the Secretary of State to the American Minister in Brazil, dated March 5, 1875, on the subject of appropriate procedure in a case analogous to the present one. The language used in that note is so apposite, and supports in such a striking manner the position taken by Viscount Chinda in his communication of June 4, that indulgence is craved for quoting here the words of Mr. Fish:

The reference of the claimant to the authorities of the Province for redress will not be acquiesced in. Those authorities can not be officially known to this Government. It is the Imperial Government at Rio de Janeiro only which is accountable to this Government for any injury to the person or property of a citizen of the United States committed by the authorities of a Province. The same rule would be applicable to the case of a Brazilian subject who, in this country might be wronged by the authorities of a State. (Dr. Moore's International Law Digest, Vol. VI, p. 816.)

So far as the California enactment injuriously affects individual rights of Japanese subjects, the aggrieved parties will, no doubt, appeal to the courts for redress. The question now under discussion between Japan and the United States involves interpretation of treaties, and, in the final solution of that question, the two Powers have an equal voice and interest. Consequently the only appropriate recourse at this time is diplomatic. In analogous cases, however, the United States has instituted legal proceedings in defence of existing treaties. The cases in point, to which references are made, are the California School and the Horcon Ranch cases. In both instances, suits were brought by the United States in the Circuit Courts of the United States.

Telegram received by the Japanese Embassy on June 30, from the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The larger part of the land actually owned by the Japanese in California was acquired before July 17, 1911, on which date the existing treaty came into force. Consequently such land was lawfully acquired while the treaty of 1894 was in operation. The third paragraph of Article I of the treaty expressly guarantees to Japanese subjects, in reciprocity, the national and most favored nation treatment in the United States in all that relates to "the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever, which they may lawfully acquire." The guarantee still holds good in spite of subsequent abrogation of the treaty. The latter point was clearly announced by the United States Supreme Court in Chirac v. Chirac in following terms:

It will be admitted that a right once vested does not require for its preservation the continued existence of the power by which it was acquired. If a treaty or any other law has performed its office by giving a right, the expiration of the treaty or law can not extinguish that right. JAPAN. 641

These views have been repeatedly and consistently upheld by the same court in a number of similar cases. They will be embodied in the aide-mémoire, which you will shortly be authorized to present to the Secretary of State. You will draw his attention to this important point which seems to be fully convincing in support of our claim.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 16, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: I have had the honor to receive and carefully to consider the note which your excellency was so good as to address to me under date of the 4th instant [ultimo] on the subject of the recent act of the Legislature of California relating to the tenure of lands by aliens in that State.

I am pained to learn that the Imperial Government, after reading the contents of my note of the 19th of May, in reply to their protest, continue to be of opinion that the act in question is not only unfair but "intentionally racially discriminatory"; that it is "contrary to the letter and spirit" of the treaty between the two countries; and that it is at variance with "the accepted principles of just and equal treatment upon which good relations between friendly nations must, in the final analysis, so largely depend ".

In my note of the 19th of May I did not omit to point out that the California statute, far from being indicative of any national discriminatory policy, was not even to be regarded as an expression of political or racial antagonism, but was rather to be considered as the emanation of economic conditions, which were in this instance of a local character. I can not help feeling that in the representations submitted by your excellency the supposition of racial discrimination occupies a position of prominence which it does not deserve and which is not justified by the facts. I am quite prepared to admit that all differences between human beings-differences in appearance, differences in manner, differences in speech, differences in opinion, differences in nationality, and differences in race—may provoke a certain antagonism; but none of these differences is likely to produce serious results unless it becomes associated with an interest of a contentious nature, such as that of the struggle for existence. In this economic contest the division no doubt may often take place on racial lines, but it does so not because of racial antagonism but because of the circumstance that the traditions and habits of different races have developed or diminished competitive efficiency. The contest is economic; the racial difference is a mere mark or incident of the economic struggle.

All nations recognize this fact, and it is for this reason that each nation is permitted to determine who shall and who shall not be permitted to settle in its dominions and become a part of the body politic, to the end that it may preserve internal peace and avoid the contentions which are so likely to disturb the harmony of international relations.

That the Imperial Government of Japan accept and act upon these principles precise proof is not wanting.

By the Imperial Ordinance No. 352 of 1899, which is understood to be still in force, it is provided:

ARTICLE 1. Foreigners, even those who either by virtue of treaty or custom have not freedom of residence, may hereafter reside, remove, carry on trade and do other acts outside the former settlements and mixed residence districts. Provided that in the case of laborers they cannot reside or carry on their business outside the former settlements or mixed residential districts unless under the special permission of the administrative authorities.

The classes of such laborers (referred to in the preceding paragraph) and details for the operation of this Ordinance shall be determined by the Minister for Home Affairs.

The Department is advised that this ordinance was promulgated in order to prevent the immigration of Chinese laborers, who were attracted to Japan by the rise of wages which began in that country after the war with China and has continued ever since. As a result of this rise in wages conditions grew up not unlike those which have existed at certain places in the United States, the objection made in Japan to Chinese laborers being that they worked for lower wages than the natives. In the summer of 1907, as the Department is advised, two groups of Chinese laborers were excluded from Japan under the application of the ordinance above mentioned, one of the excluded groups being composed of coolies, the other of skilled artisans such as mechanics. The Department is not advised that the ordinance has been or is enforced as against laborers other than Chinese. The Department is, however, far from imputing to the Imperial Government in its enforcement of the ordinance a design to make a racial discrimination. On the contrary, the Department assumes that the question with which the Imperial Government were seeking to deal was in its essence economic, and racial only incidentally, and that this would continue to be the case even if the ordinance, although it was no doubt originally designed to exclude Chinese laborers, should be applied to laborers of another race.

In certain statements in your excellency's note, to which I have heretofore adverted, I am obliged to think that due weight has not been given to the provisions of the treaties between the two countries. Your excellency is so good as to say that, "looking at the terms of the treaty between our two countries," the Imperial Government are convinced that the California statute "is contrary to the letter and spirit of that compact," and that they also believe that the statute is at "variance with the accepted principles of just and equal treatment."

In these passages two questions apparently distinct and possibly inconsistent are introduced together; for, while it is readily conceivable that a question of treaty right and a question of fair and equal treatment may co-exist, yet, if the matter under consideration has by the contracting parties been made the subject of an express adjustment and agreement, it is hardly open to either party thereafter to say that the reciprocal measure of treatment which they have voluntarily concurred in establishing is not just and equal.

The treaty to which your excellency's note refers is that which was signed at Washington on February 21, 1911, by Mr. Knox, Secretary of State, representing the United States, and by Baron Uchida, your immediate predecessor, representing the Imperial Government.

This treaty was based upon a draft presented by the Imperial Government. In Article I of this draft there is found the following clause:

3. They [the citizens or subjects of the contracting parties] shall be permitted to own or hire and occupy the houses, manufactories, warehouses, shops, and premises which may be necessary for them, and to lease land for residential, commercial, industrial, manufacturing and other lawful purposes.

It will be observed that in this clause, which was intended to deal with the subject of real property, there is no reference to the ownership of land. The reason of this omission is understood to be that the Imperial Government desired to avoid treaty engagements concerning the ownership of land by foreigners and to regulate the matter

In the treaty as signed the rights of the citizens and subjects of the contracting parties with reference to real property were specifically dealt with (Art. 1) in the stipulation that they should have liberty "to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops," and "to lease land for residential and commercial purposes." It thus appears that the reciprocal right to lease land was confined to "residential and commercial purposes," and that the phrases "industrial" and "other lawful purposes," which would have included the leasing of agricultural lands, were omitted.

The question of the ownership of land was, in pursuance of the desire of the Japanese Government, dealt with by an exchange of notes in which it was acknowledged and agreed that this question should be regulated in each country by the local law, and that the law applicable in the United States in this regard was that of the respective States. This clearly appears from the note of Baron Uchida to Mr. Knox of February 21, 1911, in which, in reply to an inquiry of the latter on the subject, Baron Uchida said:

In return for the rights of land ownership which are granted Japanese by the laws of the various States of the United States [of which, I may observe, there are now about 30] the Imperial Government will by liberal interpretation of the law be prepared to grant land ownership to American citizens from all the States, reserving for the future, however, the right of maintaining the condition of reciprocity with respect to the separate States.

In quoting the foregoing passage I have italicized the last clause for the purpose of calling special attention to the fact that the contracting parties distinctly understood that, in conformity with the express declaration of the Imperial Japanese Ambassador, the right was reserved to maintain as to land ownership the condition of reciprocity in the sense that citizens of the United States, coming from States in which Japanese might not be permitted to own land, were to be excluded from the reciprocal privilege in Japan.

From what has been pointed out it appears to result, first, that the California statute, in extending to aliens not eligible to citizenship of the United States the right to lease lands in that State for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years, may be held to go beyond the measure of privilege established in the treaty, which does not grant the right to lease agricultural lands at all;

and secondly, that, so far as the statute may abridge the right of such aliens to own lands within the State, the right has been reserved by the Imperial Government to act upon the principle of exact reciprocity with respect to citizens of the individual State. the measure of privilege and the measure of satisfaction for its denial were perfectly understood and accepted.

In connection with the question of land ownership your excellency refers to the subject of naturalization in the United States, and in this relation I observe your excellency's statement that "Japanese subjects are, as a nation, apparently denied the right to acquire American nationality." Your excellency further declares that the provisions of law, under which it is held that Japanese are not eligible to American citizenship, "are mortifying to the Government and people of Japan, since the racial distinction inferable from those provisions is hurtful to their just national susceptibilites." Your excellency very properly acknowledges the fact that the question of naturalization "is a political problem of national and not international concern."

I gladly assume that your excellency, in saying that Japanese subjects are "as a nation" denied the right to acquire American nationality, has not intended to convey the impression that the naturalization laws of the United States make any distinction that may be specifically considered as national either in terms or in effect. Nor would it appear, if the legal provisions in question were historically examined, that the Government and people of Japan have any ground to feel that any discrimination against them was intended. But, as the fact is acknowledged in your excellency's note that the question of naturalization "is a political problem of national and not international concern," I infer that your excellency is not instructed to press the matter, and I will forbear to enter into a more extended discussion of it on the present occasion.

In the note of your excellency an apprehension is expressed that, in spite of the fact that the California statute purports to assure to aliens the right to hold real property in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes specified in any treaty, the terms of the law may be found to abridge not only rights of property falling within the terms of the existing treaty but also rights of property acquired in conformity with law theretofore. This Department, however, does not doubt that full protection will be extended by the courts to all vested rights of property. And I desire to add that if a case should ever be disclosed in which it was maintained by the Imperial Government that the existing property rights of one of its subjects had been impaired by the statute, this Government would stand ready to compensate him for any loss which he might be shown to have sustained, or even, in order to avoid any possible allegation of injury, to purchase from him his lands at their full market value prior to the enactment of the statute.

In conclusion, I have the honor to assure your excellency that the subjects of His Imperial Majesty will, as stated in my previous note, find in the courts of the United States, in the manner provided by the Constitution of the United States, full protection for all their legal rights; and I desire further to assure you that this Government will, through its proper officials, stand ready at all times to use its good offices to secure the proper and efficacious determination of such In this manner our Governments will cooperate for the preservation of the traditional friendship and mutual consideration which have ever characterized the relations of amity and good will that have prevailed between the Governments and peoples of the two countries.

File No. 811.52/181.

Aide-mémoire to the Japanese Embassy.

Viscount Chinda's aide-mémoire is presented apparently in pursuance of a telegram received on June 30 from the Imperial Minister for Foreign Affairs. In this telegram the statement is made that the larger part of the land actually owned by Japanese in California was acquired before July 17, 1911, the effective date of the existing treaty; and certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in Chirac vs. Chirac, 2 Wheaton, 259, and other cases are invoked as guaranteeing rights of property which were acquired by Japanese subjects in the United States while the treaty of 1894 was

The Department, following the example set in the aide-mémoire, refrains from entering on the present occasion into a minute analysis of each of the judicial decisions thus cited. The Department, however, accepts the enunciation of principle, quoted from the decision in Chirac v. Chirac, "that a right once vested does not require, for its preservation, the continued existence of the power by which it was acquired"; and that "if a treaty, or any other law, has performed its office by giving a right, the expiration of the treaty or law can not extinguish that right." The Department has already observed, in its reply to Viscount Chinda's note of the 4th of June, and now repeats, that it does not doubt that full protection will be extended by the courts to all vested rights of property,

So far as the aide-mémoire relates to rights secured by the existing treaty of 1911, the Department may again recur to the fact that, by Section 2 of the California statute, it is provided that aliens not eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States, "may acquire, possess, enjoy, and transfer real property or any interest therein in this State in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject." As this clause in express terms requires the recognition of any rights secured by existing treaty, it is not to be assumed that any right so secured would not be fully protected.

The aide-mémoire, however, appears to extend too far the theory that the ownership of property carries with it a vested right to dispose of such property in all the ways in which property may be transferred, by sale, by gift, by devise, or by descent, without future limitation or restriction. Such a theory would render it impossible for a country to alter its laws with regard to the transmission of property. So far as the Department is advised it has never been held that a right of ownership, vested either in a citizen or in an alien, would be impaired by a change in the law denying to any and all aliens the right to purchase lands. Such changes in the law have not been infrequent either in the United States or elsewhere, and it is believed that they have not been held to impair vested rights. If such rights are not impaired by forbidding alienation or transmission to all aliens, they are obviously not impaired by the prohibition of alienation or transmission to particular classes of aliens. Attention may in this relation be drawn to numerous treaties between the United States and other powers by which it is provided that where, on the death of the owner, real estate in the territories of the one power would descend upon a citizen of the other who is disqualified by alienage from taking, the latter shall be allowed a period, varying according to the stipulations of the treaties, to sell the land and withdraw the proceeds. stipulations clearly recognize the fact that the right of ownership is not regarded as carrying with it an unlimited and unalterable right of disposition or descent. The aide-mémoire, recurring to the "spirit and intent" of the existing treaty rather than to its particular stipulations, maintains that the provisions of the California statute discriminate against Japanese subjects "in a matter in which, internationally speaking, aliens are usually placed on national or most favored nation footing. The Department regrets that it is unable to admit that the assumption here made is well founded. Without entering minutely into an examination of conventional stipulations, the Department desires to point out that the alien ownership of land has seldom been treated in the practice of the United States as a matter of most favored nation The most favored nation clauses in the treaties of the United States have almost universally related to matters of commerce and navigation. In only a few cases, perhaps not more than two or three, has alien ownership been conceded by means of a most favored nation clause. With these exceptions the right of alien ownership has been secured only by special treaty stipulations, with the result that the citizens of countries not having such treaty with the United States were unable to enjoy the right of ownership.

In this relation the aide-mémoire quotes from Moore's Digest of International Law, volume 6, page 702, a summary to the effect that "a Mexican statute discriminating against citizens of the United States and other aliens in respect to the capacity to hold real estate in

The Department desires to deal with the subject to which the foregoing summary relates, as it does with all other matters, with entire candor. The aide-mémoire correctly states that the treaty of 1831 contains no express provision on the subject of ownership of lands and that the most favored nation clause which it contains relates only to commerce and navigation and to certain other matters in which the holding of real estate is not included. Nevertheless, the Government of the United States then essayed to make the same argument which is now so strongly urged in behalf of the Imperial Government, but was in the end obliged practically to abandon it. The facts are as follows:

The remonstrance or protest of the United States related to certain Mexican laws restricting the right of alien ownership of lands, and particularly to the law of July 20, 1863, which contains the following article:

2. Any inhabitant of the Republic has the right to denounce up to two thousand five hundred hectares, and no more, of public lands, with the exception of the natural born and naturalized citizens of nations adjoining the republic who, by no title whatever, can acquire public lands in the States bordering the said nations.

That this Department on the occasion in question went the full length of the present Japanese contention is conclusively shown by the text of its instruction dated June 23, 1879, which reads as follows:

The discrimination in this respect between those citizens and other foreigners is still believed to be invidious, unnecessary, at variance with the treaty, and quite incompatible with those friendly relations which the obvious interest of both countries requires should be maintained between them. * * *

The Mexican law of 1863 is specially invidious toward citizens of our border States, because it practically discriminates against them by name, and thereby stigmatizes them as unworthy to have the privilege of holding real estate. This stigma can not be acquiesced in by this Government, which does not admit the right of any foreign power to discriminate between citizens of different States of this Union, who can only be known abroad as citizens of the United States. It may be that the treaty of 1831 does not expressly confer upon citizens of the parties the right to hold real estate in their respective territories, nor does it provide for an equality of rights in that respect between Mexicans and our own citizens. Although the equality between citizens of the United States and other foreigners in Mexico is by the 2nd and 3rd Articles of the Treaty literally restricted to matters of commerce and navigation, it may also fairly be construed to include a like equality in the privilege of acquiring and holding real estate. It can not be doubted that if the construction now claimed had been anticipated, it would have been thwarted by an explicit provision. There is believed to be no such discrimination against Mexican citizens in any law in this country. There may be at least one effect of the Mexican Act of 1863, which may have escaped the attention of that Government. Both the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty guarantee to those Mexican citizens in the ceded territories who might become citizens of the United States their full rights of property in those territories. It is understood that many of those persons were owners of real estate in the border Mexican States. The effect of the law adverted to may be to confiscate that property while the title to that of those in Texas or elsewhere who were formerly Mexicans is guaranteed to them by treaty. It is hoped, therefore, that the policy of the Mexican Government on this subject will be so changed as to free it from the serious objections which have been pointed out.

The position of the Mexican Government was set forth in a note of its Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Minister of the United States in Mexico, dated May 26, 1879, which reads as follows:

Having informed the President of the Republic of the contents of this note, by his direction I have the honor to make the following reply:

The right which a sovereign State has to concede or refuse to foreigners the privilege of acquiring real estate in its territory is indisputable and universally recognized, as well as to establish a limit to this right when it has been conceded. In the use of that right, in exercise of its sovereignty, Mexico has issued different laws upon the subject, among them that of the 11th of March, 1842, which, on permitting foreigners established and resident in the Republic to acquire and possess city and rural property in the territory, made exceptions of those departments adjoining or fronting other nations, determining that in these foreigners could not acquire real estate without express permission from the Government, and that of the 20th of July, 1863, which prohibits native or naturalized citizens of the adjoining countries to acquire public lands in the States of the Republic bordering on those countries.

Mexico, upon issuing these laws, has not infringed the stipulations of article 3rd of the treaty of 1831 nor has it violated the spirit which prevails in that convention, because nothing is established in them which should be considered as contrary to the liberty, privileges, and security guaranteed to North American citizens in order that they may go with their vessels and cargoes to any market, port, or river of the Republic to which other foreigners are admitted, nor are said citizens prevented from renting houses and warehouses for the purposes of their commerce, nor are they prevented from dealing in all kinds of products, manufactures, and goods, nor are they obliged to pay higher duties, imposts, or emoluments than are paid by the citizens of the most favored nations, nor is there anything, in a word, conceded to the latter with respect to navigation and commerce which is denied to North American citizens.

On the other hand, the equality of privileges, exemptions and rights with the most favored nations, stipulated with the United States in Art. III of the treaty of 1831 refers to navigation and commerce; but although it should extend to another subject (capitulo), that equality should be understood to be under circumstances also equal, and with reference to the acquisition of lands in the frontier states, it can not be sustained that the United States which adjoin Mexico are in the same condition as the nations of Europe or of South America, for instance.

I should at the same time call the attention of your excellency to the exception contained in the law of July 20, 1863, which is the most peremptory disposition referred to by the clause of the contract which gave rise to this note, which should not be considered as referring exclusively to the citizens of the United States, as it also comprehends those of the neighboring Republic of Guatelama, having the same conditions of boundary with Mexico; hence there is not nor can there be any justifiable motive for the Government of the United States to consider the prohibition established by the aforesaid law as an exclusion injurious to its citizens, and which refers to the nations bordering on the Republic.

It was in reply to this exposition of the law by the Mexican Government, which had been called forth by previous representations on the part of the United States, that the instructions above quoted, of subsequent date, were sent. They were duly communicated to the Mexican Government. On August 20, 1879, the Minister of the United States in Mexico wrote to the Department as follows:

On the 17th ultimo I communicated to the Mexican Foreign Office in a note of that date the substance of your despatch No. 646, of June 23rd, relating to the prohibition to citizens of the United States from acquiring real estate and public lands in the Mexican border States.

Up to this date I have received no acknowledgment of my note and I regard it as highly probable that no reply will be made thereto, neither have we any reason to expect that the policy of the Mexican Government on the subject will be changed, as a result of the protest you have directed me to make.

The forecast of the American Minister proved to be correct and the remonstrance of June 23, 1879, remained unanswered. The law also remained unaltered.

The aide-mémoire expresses the belief that the present instance is the first one in which a power, being a party to a reciprocal commercial treaty guaranteeing most favored nation treatment "in all that concerns commerce and navigation," has ever been placed by the other contracting party at a disadvantage, as compared with nontreaty countries, "in matters which, in the treaty, are made the subject of reciprocal concession." This passage seems to blend two questions which are by no means interdependent. As is observed in the Department's note of the 16th instant, if the contracting parties have dealt with a certain subject by means of an express reciprocal agreement, it is hardly open to either party to assert that the adjustment thus made is not fair and equal, or that it is open to objection because it falls short of most favored nation treatment.

In the animadversions of the aide-mémoire upon discriminatory legislation the Department desires to express a general concurrence. It must, however, be admitted that discriminations of one kind and another very widely prevail, and that it is often necessary to deal with them in a tolerant spirit in order that greater causes of irritation may be avoided. Perhaps in no case is it more essential to take this moderate view than in that of the ownership of lands.

The aide-mémoire quotes a resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States on December 13, 1911, calling for the termination of the then existing commercial treaty between the United States and Russia because of the refusal of the Russian Government, as the resolution declared, to admit American Jews generally to that country. This resolution, it may be observed, was never communicated to the Russian Government and never assumed an international character. The passage quoted in the aide-mémoire does not appear in the resolution adopted by Congress; and notice was, as the aide-mémoire correctly states, given to Russia of the intention to terminate the treaty on the ground that it was "no longer fully responsive, in various respects, to the needs of the political and material relations of the two countries." The treaty was subsequently terminated, but, with this exception, the previous conditions continue and the discrimination complained of remains unchanged.

The aide-mémoire refers to the California statute as discriminating against Japanese subjects "in the matter of ownership of lands and houses." The distinctions on this subject have been pointed out in the Department's note of the 16th instant, in which the meaning and effect of the clauses of the existing treaty are fully set forth. It may be repeated that the statute contains no discrimination against Japanese as such, but applies equally to all aliens not eligible to citizen-

The Department, following the example of the aide-mémoire, has forborne to enter into the discussion of the various and sometimes intricate questions affecting corporations as compared with individuals. These are questions peculiarly appropriate for judicial examination; for, while it is held that a corporation is a "citizen" of, or has its "domicile" in, the State by which it was created, even though a majority of its stockholders may be citizens of other States or countries, yet these are matters more or less of legal regulation, and the rights, privileges, and immunities of corporations are by no means coextensive in all matters with those of natural persons.

The aide-mémoire refers to a suggestion that the question of alien ownership of land in the several States of the United States is beyond the reach of the treaty-making power. The Department desires only to say that such a suggestion has not come from the Government of the United States. The aide-mémoire is correct in its statement that this subject has been dealt with by the treaty-making power, and that the provisions of the treaties on the subject have been upheld by the courts.

The aide-mémoire quotes from an instruction of this Department of March 5, 1875, in which the Secretary of State of the United States declared, in a case arising in Brazil, that the Imperial Government at Rio de Janeiro must be held accountable for any injury to the person or property of a citizen of the United States committed by the authorities of a Province. The Department is not disposed to question the correctness of this view, but would call attention to the fact that, in the instruction referred to, the statement was made that, as the governors of the Provinces in Brazil were appointed by the Imperial Government, "the latter may be regarded as specially responsible for their acts in all cases where the law of nations may have been infringed, and justice may be unobtainable through the courts."

As is stated in Department's note of the 16th instant, the subjects of His Imperial Majesty will find in the courts of the United States, in the manner provided by the Constitution of the United States, full protection for all their legal rights, held under treaty or otherwise, and this Government will stand ready at all times through its proper officials to use its good offices to secure the prompt and efficacious determination of such suits. Such appears to be the proper and feasible course in the present matter, in which questions of various kinds may arise, in respect of which it is scarcely possible to forecast the appropriate forms of action. The courts of the United States, as is well known, deal only with actual questions, with actual infractions of rights, and not with infractions merely mooted or apprehended.

The California School case and the Horcon Ranch case presented questions of a different order from those now under consideration. In the California School case a single and actual treaty question, not relating to a matter of property, had arisen and was ready for adjudication. In the Horcon Ranch case a suit in equity was brought by the Government of the United States against an irrigation company for the purpose of preserving an international boundary to which the United States was directly a party. The United States is no doubt interested in the maintenance of all its treaties; but, as the numerous adjudicated cases cited in the aide-mémoire clearly show, questions concerning private titles to land, whether such titles be assured by treaty or not are adjudicated upon the suit of the parties in interest without any interposition on the part of the Government of the United States.

Not only is this the practice, but it is greatly to the advantage of individual suitors that it is so. As Governments not infrequently differ in the interpretation of treaties, the private individual, if dependent for judicial protection upon the motion of the Government within whose jurisdiction he asserts that his treaty rights are denied, might be deprived of an effective remedy altogether, in case that Government should hold that the treaty was not violated. Moreover, the individual suitor, in presenting his arguments and allegations, is not restrained by the responsibility which necessarily attaches to the declarations and contentions of an immediate party to the international compact. His dependence upon the action of such a party would hamper his efforts and diminish the opportunity for redress.

For these reasons the judicial defense of private rights, and particularly of rights of private property, even where they may have vested under a treaty, is left to the suit of the individuals concerned. In the present instance, however, this Government has offered to go beyond the usual practice and to use its good offices to facilitate the progress of the judicial procedure, out of deference to the susceptibilities of a friendly power to whom this Government wishes ever to be bound by the closest ties of amity and respect.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, July 16, 1913.

The Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Japanese Ambassador.

[Telegram.]

The two communications addressed to you by the Honorable the Secretary of State on the 16th of July last, in further discussion of the question of the recently enacted alien land law of California, have been received and carefully considered by the Imperial Government.

That act, by depriving the Japanese subjects of the right of land ownership, while freely continuing the right, not only in favor of the subjects and citizens of all the other powers with which the United States maintain reciprocal treaty relations, but in favor of many nontreaty aliens, has established a discrimination of the most marked and invidious character against Japan. The measure is, moreover, in the opinion of the Imperial Government, unjust and inequitable, and contrary to the letter and spirit of the Japanese-American treaty, as well as at variance with the accepted precepts governing and regulating the intercourse of good neighborhood, and being admittedly ex industria discriminatory against this Empire as compared with other states, it is also mortifying to the nation and disregardful of the national susceptibilities of the Japanese people.

This is the gravamen of Japan's complaint. The notes of the Honorable W. J. Bryan contain remarks in explanation and extenuation of the action of California, but nothing, in the estimation of the Imperial Government, which answers fundamentally to that complaint or which tends to shake their conviction regarding the main question. If, as is confidently believed, the existing treaty between Japan and the United States has been violated, there is but one remedy, and the Imperial Government are unable to escape the conclusion that the duty of applying that remedy devolves solely upon the Government of the United States, as the measure complained of has, despite the protest lodged by you, been permitted to go into operation.

The Imperial Government reserve for the present the further discussion of the question at issue. There are, however, some statements and conclusions advanced by Mr. Bryan which the Imperial Government feel it their duty forthwith to call in question. This instruction is designed to answer those observations.

I hasten, in the first place, to say that the Imperial Government do not for a moment imagine that the discrimination complained of was the outcome of a national policy. They regard, and have from the outset regarded, the action in question as of a local character. But, whatever causes may have been responsible for the measure, it can not be denied that, in its final manifestation, it is clearly indicative of racial antagonism. Nor, in the opinion of the Imperial Government, can any justification for such enactment be found in the assertion that it was "the emanation of economic conditions." It is the high office of modern treaties of commerce to prevent undue international discriminations, and the most favored nation principle, which finds a place in nearly all such compacts, has had the effect, in an international sense, of equalizing opportunities in all the various avenues of commercial and industrial life. It is true that special privileges are, in exceptional circumstances, sometimes granted by one nation in favor of another, but the present case stands out, it is believed, as the one single instance without historical parallel, in which a state maintaining, by treaty, the reciprocal most favored nation relations with another state, has ever, in a matter such as that under discussion, essayed to discriminate against such other state, as compared with third powers with which no such relations exist. The action of Mexico in 1863, which was so strongly condemned by the United States, furnishes no such parallel, since the law in that case was, it appears, based upon considerations of a geographic nature exclusively. The Secretary of State denies the proposition advanced by you to the effect that the California statute discriminates against the Japanese subjects, and that in the matter of land ownership aliens are usually, internationally speaking, placed on national or most favored nation footing. In support of that denial he cites the practice which prevails in the United States on the subject of alien land ownership, and he adds. "that the citizens of countries not having such treaty with the United States (i. e., treaty granting, either expressly or by inference, under the most favored nation clause, the right of land ownership) were unable to enjoy the right of ownership." This statement has naturally caused surprise to the Imperial Government, and they confess their inability to understand it. It not only conflicts directly with the California law in question and is irreconcilable with the statutes of many States of the Union by which the right of alien ownership is accorded independently of a treaty stipulations, but it declares, in effect, that the discrimination complained of, which has been repeatedly recognized as a fact, is without foundation. In these circumstances it is quite sufficient for the Imperial Government to repeat their contention that, by the California enactment, the Japanese subjects are denied the right of real estate ownership in localities in which that right is freely conceded to aliens belonging not only to the states which have no treaty engagements with the United States on the subject, but to the powers which have no commercial treaties whatever with the United States.

Recurring to the subject of the Mexican incident, I desire to say that the Imperial Government are unable, upon the record in the case, to concur with Mr. Bryan in the view that the United States was in the end, obliged practically to abandon its contention. Reading in natural sequence the correspondence exchanged between the United States and Mexico, the conviction is, it seems to me, irreprovable, that the quoted words of the Secretary of State on the occasion, instead of being regarded as an argument, must be accepted as a deliberate conclusion of the American Government on the subject.

It is unnecessary, it seems to me, to follow Mr. Bryan in his remarks concerning the negotiations connected with the conclusion of the treaty of 1911. It is sufficient to say that the reason, why no stipulation regarding land ownership was inserted in the treaty, is because neither contracting party desired at that time such a stipulation, the United States equally with Japan. The assurance contained in Viscount Uchida's note of February 21, 1911, on the subject of liberal interpretation of the Japanese land law, was given at the instance of the United States, because of the condition of reciprocity contained in that law. The assurance was given, as stated in the note, "In return for the rights of land ownership which are granted to Japanese by the laws of the various States of the United States."

The laws of Japan on the subject of alien land tenure are not illiberal, but, in any case, they contain no provisions discriminating, in any manner whatever, against the citizens of the United States. On the contrary, in all that relates to land ownership, as well as in the matter of all other civil rights, the American citizens, without distinctions and without conditions, are accorded in Japan full and complete most favored nation treatment, and there is no desire on the part of the Japanese administration to modify this state of things. What Japan claims is nothing more than fair and equal treatment.

The Secretary of State, it is observed, dwells at length upon the subject of labor immigration into the United States, and, in the same relation, he refers to the action of Japan in circumstances somewhat analogous to those existing in America. The reason or necessity for this exposition is not understood by the Imperial Government. The question of immigration has nothing whatever to do with the present controversy, and any reference to it only tends to obscure the real This announcement I wish to make very categorical. More than four years ago, the Imperial Government willingly cooperated with the American Government in adopting suitable measures in regulation of labor movements from Japan to the United States. The steps thus taken were entirely efficacious, so that during the past three years considerably more Japanese laborers left the United States than have entered that country. The Government of the United States has recognized and frankly admitted the sufficiency of the measures enforced by the Imperial Government in the matter. The Japanese Ambassador to the United States, at the time of the conclusion of the treaty of 1911, declared under the authority of his Government that the Imperial Government were fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which were then exerted in regulation of the emigration of laborers to the United States. Accordingly, in order to correct and finally dispel the popular error, I wish to say that there is no question whatever between Japan and the United States on the subject of the Japanese labor immigration into the United States. The present controversy relates exclusively to the question of the treatment of the Japanese subjects who are lawfully in the United States or may hereafter lawfully become resident therein consistently with the existing regulations. So far as such subjects are concerned, the Imperial Government claim for them fair and equal treatment, and are unable either to acquiesce in the unjust and obnoxious discrimination complained of, or to regard the question as closed so long as the existing state of things is permitted to continue.

You are requested to explain the substance of this instruction to the Secretary of State and deliver a copy.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, DANIEL E. HOWARD, TO THE LEGISLATURE.

File No. 882.032/11.

Note. The message of President Daniel E. Howard was communicated to the Legislature of Liberia December 17, 1913, and was transmitted to the Secretary of State by the American Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Richard C. Bundy.

[Extracts.]

The trouble at River Cess¹ has claimed our serious attention this year. We do not now feel wholly warranted in saying that the disorder has been finally quelled, still peace reigns and law and authority are fully established and being maintained from River Cess to Lower Buchanan. An attempt was made by the Krus in June to take River Cess, but they were successfully repulsed with heavy losses by Lieutenant Smith, of the Frontier Force, of whose gallant conduct Major Ballard speaks in terms of merited praise.

I am pleased to be able to inform you that the troubles in the Gio section, in the rear of Grand Bassa County, where the Rubber Corporation is, or was, operating, have been successfully settled.

Conditions on the Franco-Liberian boundary, and particularly the Cavalla River Section, have been very peaceful save for a little trade incident which happened between the merchants of Maryland County and the natives on our side. We were informed that the traders of the Cavalla formed themselves into a combination and greatly reduced the prices formerly paid for produce, while they maintained in fact the selling prices of their goods. As a retaliation the natives elected to and did carry their produce over to the French side for sale. The matter was brought to our attention and was discussed with the General Receiver of Customs and, while we both preferred having the produce disposed of in our territory, we saw no legal way of compelling the natives to do so, since indeed in trading with the French merchants they complied fully with our laws. This is one of the proofs that we are not placing any barriers in the way of traffic with our neighbors on the southeast.

The Secretary of State will submit to your Honorable Body the findings in the matter of the Attia claims against the Government; also the awards concerning the claims for losses sustained by the German merchants at River Cess and points adjacent, at the settlement of Brewerville, and in the case of damages sustained by some clerks of the firm of A. Woermann at the hands of Krumen in Monrovia.

It gives me very great pleasure to convey to you the information that our Consul General at Washington, U. S. A., Dr. Ernest Lyon, notified the Secretary of State on the 9th of October, that he had successfully concluded the transactions relative to the Donovan Fund,² and that the accumulated sum of sixty-five thousand five hundred eleven dollars and eleven cents had been duly turned over to him by the president of the American Colonization Society for which amount he had given his receipt. He further stated that this sum had been deposited in a bank of which the American Colonization Society is a depositor and whose treasurer is a member of the Colonization Society.

The late Caroline Donovan, of the State of Maryland in the United States of America, being possessed of certain real estate in the City of Baltimore, executed a deed of trust to the American Colonization Society, giving said property in trust to the Society for the transportation annually to Liberia of such colored persons as might desire to emigrate from the United States. Should the transportation of such persons for any one year not require the net income from the said property for that year, such balance remaining should be applied by the Society to the maintenance of public schools for the education of This sixty-five thousand five hundred colored children in Liberia. eleven dollars and eleven cents represents the accumulated balances of the net income of this fund.

It is altogether right and fitting that we should express our appreciation for this donation and for the amount now coming to Liberia, and becoming available as it does at this time when there is a general cry throughout the Republic for an industrial school. I am certain that the wishes of the donor, as well as those of our friends in America, will be adequately carried out. We have already placed ourselves in touch with more than one of the societies in America interested in education in Liberia with a view of securing their advice and cooperation in the procuring of suitable teachers for the establishment of an efficient industrial plant, and from this cooperation, backed by our hearty approval and enthusiasm, we are sanguine that such results will be obtained as will revolutionize our school work.

A bill is being prepared relative to the Donovan Fund governing the appropriation of same towards the establishment and maintenance of an industrial and normal school in honor of the donor of this be-

No. 53.]

AMERICAN LEGATION, Monrovia, October 12, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to make the following report to the Department with reference to certain disorders that occurred in the city of Monrovia recently, which at the time seemed to be assuming very serious proportions.

During the last week in September and the first three or four days in October, several Europeans residing in the city of Monrovia were set upon after dark presumably by irresponsible young Liberians and stoned. I have been credibly informed that there were four distinct attacks of this character on as many different parties. The first persons who were victims of these attacks were Englishmen, but after two or three days Germans and Dutchmen were assailed in a similar manner.

One instance I personally investigated and found that a German clerk had been struck on the hand by a missile of considerable size. The hand was rather seriously injured. This was the only case I know of in which bodily injury was sustained. But it was reported to me that several persons had the lanterns which they were carrying smashed, and were compelled to run to avoid being struck. So far as I have been able to ascertain, it does not seem that any of the parties attacked were in any way guilty of actions likely to stir up disorder. They were simply walking the streets in a peaceable manner, as was their custom.

The serious feature about these disorders is, that all the Europeans in the city complained bitterly to their respective consuls. the foreign consuls there was much talk to the effect that foreigners' lives were not safe in Monrovia, and Liberian officials were either so inefficient or indolent as not to be able to control the situation. Acting German Consul was actually on the point of cabling to his Government this view of the situation, on account of pressure from the irritated German residents here. I let it be known that it was my opinion that the situation was by no means beyond the control of the Liberian civil authorities, and that a fair opportunity ought at least be given them to deal with the disorder before any steps were taken by the foreign representatives that were likely to involve consequences the end of which could not be foreseen. The Acting German Consul informed me verbally that it was his intention to cable his Government, if there were another single instance of an attack upon a German subject or property. He made me the promise, however, that if in his opinion it became necessary for him to cable, he would advise me of his intention before so doing.

I have also orally discussed these disorders with the French and English consular officers here, and it has been decided that it would be better to have a conference of all the foreign representatives in Monrovia, at which a common course of action could be outlined, if it became apparent that the Liberian authorities were unable to cope with the situation, than for each officer to act independently and

I do not think the Liberian authorities are unable to deal adequately with disorders of this character, but I feel in the case under discussion that they might have moved more expeditiously and completely suppressed the outbreaks of a few rowdy incorrigibles after the first attack, and thus prevented the question from ever assuming international proportions. The slowness of the authorities gave an opportunity to this lawless element to make an attack on the American Legation.

On the night of October 3rd, 1912, after the retirement of all the occupants of the Legation, a stone of about one-half pound in weight was thrown by unknown parties through one of the office windows on the first floor, where with the fragments of the shattered pane I found it next morning. The noise of breaking the window had not LIBERIA. 657 been sufficient to attract my attention at the time it was done, so the fact was not discovered until next morning.

I promptly took the matter up with the Secretary of State in a despatch of October 4th, 1912, in which I protested against the assault on the Legation and requested protection. In his reply the Secretary of State made appropriate apologies and offered me a guard of frontier soldiers to protect the Legation. This I respectfully declined, as I pointed out to him that a guard of soldiers stationed around the Legation would confirm the impression current in the minds of Europeans in Monrovia, that the civil authorities were unable to take care of the situation; and if this information were to get abroad, it would likely be very embarrassing to the Liberian Government. Not only this, I also expressed the opinion that the disorder could have been very easily subdued by a little greater activity on the part of the civil authorities. I therefore, confined my request for protection to the nightly detail of a policeman to do duty in the vicinity of the Legation until such time as I could feel reasonably sure that all danger from a recurrence of the assault had passed. This request was immediately complied with, and until the time of writing I have heard of no more attacks, either on foreigners or their property.

I am further informed that the Secretary of State offered a guard of soldiers to each of the foreign consular officers here, in his reply to their respective protests and demands for protection. None of the consular officers, I have learned, accepted the guard.

The thing that appears to call forth the most unfavorable comment by the resident consular officers is that they seem to feel that the Liberian authorities too seldom detect criminals; and the punishment inflicted when they are caught and brought into court is not in keeping with the offense. The claim is frequently made that this condition invariably develops if the party undertaking the prosecution is a foreigner. The recent disorders might easily have created a very difficult situation, as I am reliably informed that after the first attack was reported most of the foreigners went about the streets after dark heavily armed and had expressed their intention to protect themselves if they were assaulted. Fortunately no occasion arose which required any foreigner to undertake his own protection.

It is gratifying to report that the Liberian Government and the best citizens greatly deplore these disturbances and I have no evidence that would tend to fix responsibility for the trouble in this direction. Some say that it is an expression of resentment on the part of sympathizers with Cooper and Lomax, directed against foreigners because it was felt that they had scant respect for the court proceedings which acquitted the accused men. I have heard many times that Europeans have frequently and openly expressed their contempt for the outcome of the Cooper-Lomax trials, but I am not yet personally prepared to account for the disorder on this ground. Other reports say, that it was an effort to discredit the present administration by stirring up trouble which it could not manage and involve it in international complications. This explanation I also discard. I think the most probable solution is, that the whole affair was started by rowdy, irresponsible boys and young men who very likely had personal grievances against some foreigners and undertook to take revenge by stoning them after dark. Finding that the mischief was creating widespread alarm throughout the city, the disturbers took a malicious glee in continuing their attacks until the thoroughfares were adequately policed and it was generally known that a recurrence would certainly cause somebody to be seriously hurt. Only then did the trouble cease. This interpretation does not find very general acceptance among the other foreign representatives here.

The thing that I feel must be emphasized to the Department is the unstable condition of affairs in the Republic at this time. The most trivial incident may at any time cause overwrought foreigners to precipitate a situation that would be quite beyond the control of the Liberian Government. The cause of the unrest is to be found, I believe, in the delay in the effective operation of the new loan agreement and the prevalent local European impression, that it is highly probable that the agreement will never become operative. Also there is an ever-increasing opinion among foreigners that the Liberian Government cannot long continue to exist, unless there soon comes an effective supervision of its affairs by forces outside of itself. Meanwhile, the Liberian Government is doing its very best to meet the essential requirements of a most awkward and distressing situation with a fortitude that is, to say the least, commendable.

Department's November 6. No rioting whatever at Monrovia. Stone throwing by irresponsible persons, reported in my No. 53 October 12, suppressed more than a month ago.

At Brewerville, fifteen miles north, German store in charge of Liberian looted ten days ago to the extent of about $1,200. Cause, local feud among Liberians; culprits promptly arrested.

Native uprising at river Cess seventy-five miles south cause refusal Government to permit foreign merchants to sell natives gunpowder. Ballard, American officer, with efficient troops there, reports uprising suppressed. Similar sympathetic uprising vicinity Bassa. Troops dispatched there.

It is true foreign merchants have lost goods from branch stores in these districts due to disorders mentioned but I believe situation by no means beyond control authorities.

Government funds short. Establishment gold basis renders impossible raising emergency funds on duty paper. Loan security until now intact but protracted delay and prevailing uncertainty as to loan are doing great harm to the interests of all concerned. Unstable financial situation coupled with disorders and consequent loss of goods caused German merchants to appeal for war vessel. Am reliably informed that this proceeded from German merchants directly and not through their consul. Their action effectually concealed until fifth instant.

Believe no necessity for presence of war vessel exists. Fears of bankers not warranted by situation as understood here.

No. 62.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Monrovia, November 11, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to submit, for the information of the Department, the following report on the recent disorders which have occurred in Liberia, and have been apparently so grossly exaggerated in European circles.

I am reasonably certain that none of these reports were made by any of the foreign representatives here. Like myself, possibly excepting the Acting German Consul, they were all very much surprised to receive cables from their home Governments instructing them to report immediately as to the true situation of affairs in Liberia, as most alarming reports had apparently reached the various foreign offices through other than official sources.

From what I have been able to ascertain, it would seem that the responsibility for these reports can be traced in only one or two directions, probably in both. At the time the stone-throwing, reported in my No. 53, of October 12, 1912, was going on in Monrovia, two German newspaper correspondents were sojourning here for a few days. I am informed that on leaving Monrovia they proceeded direct to Hamburg, where statements were published relative to the disorders that had taken place, and these statements magnified the incidents greatly beyond their true proportion. I am inclined to believe that some of these rumors originated with these press correspondents. I was further informed that the German Consul requested that these correspondents make no reports on Liberia that would likely be detrimental to the country, and that assurances had been given him by the correspondents that they would comply with his request, but subsequent developments seem to indicate that the request of the German Consul did little or no good.

The other source of these alarming rumors I think can be laid at the door of certain German merchants, possibly at Bassa, who became alarmed at the threatened sympathetic uprising which was being fomented in the vicinity of Bassa on the part of natives who it seemed intended to join forces with the Krus who were rebelling against the enforcement of the governmental regulation with respect to the sale of gunpowder to them by the foreign merchants at River Cess. near as I can arrive at the truth of the matter, it would seem that the agents of German houses at Bassa sent by steamer a message to Freetown, Sierra Leone, to be cabled to their head office in Hamburg to the effect that a native uprising was imminent, and that foreigners' lives and property would not be safe in the vicinity of Bassa. Local German agents and the German Consul seem to have had no information as to the action of the agents of Bassa, and disclaim any responsibility for the alarming reports which were sent to Hamburg. no means of verifying completely this explanation, and I may say, that I entertain some doubt as to the entire truthfulness of this version. I am under the impression that at least local German agents had some knowledge of what was being done, and perhaps were a party to it.

By promptly sending fifty men to Bassa, the backbone of the disorder was immediately broken and until the present no uprising has

With reference to the River Cess incident, I have to say that it originated, as before indicated, on account of the Government's refusal to permit foreign merchants to sell gunpowder to natives. at this prohibition, the Kru people living in this district rebelled and seriously crippled the business of this port of entry by refusing to work on the surf-boats by means of which cargo is landed from the steamers. The Government, of course, had to take immediate cognizance of this disorder, and dispatched, under Major Ballard, one of the American officers, about seventy-five well drilled, efficient men to suppress this rebellion. On October 25th the troops were dispatched. Official reports written on October 27th informed President Howard that the uprising had been completely suppressed, several of the ringleaders captured and order restored.

It is to be noted that there is a well defined impression in Government circles that the German merchants at River Cess instigated this uprising and were in sympathy with the natives.

Concerning the disorders of Brewerville, I have to say that it has been customary for the town of Brewerville to collect license from the foreign merchants' stores there and use the money as may seem best to the authorities of the town. Recently, I understand, the Treasury Department has enforced a regulation which requires that the amounts accruing from these licenses be paid into the General Treasury. The amount involved is only some three hundred dollars per year, but it was sufficient to stir up great animosity in Brewerville against the regulation. The amount of property destroyed is reported to be about $1,200. A claim for this property will be placed against the Government, which probably will recognize it and make some provision for settlement. There is absolutely no connection at all between the Brewerville incident and the Bassa and River Cess disorders.

It is my personal opinion, as well as that of the other foreign representatives residing here, perhaps excepting the Acting German Consul, that there was nothing in the situation that looked alarming and threatened a general destruction of property and menaced the lives of foreigners.

Accordingly, it is not believed that it was by any means necessary to call for the presence of a war vessel. I understand that the German gunboat Panther will make a call here within a day or so, but as things are absolutely quiet and peaceful, I cannot see any use whatever for her presence at this time.

The alarming representations that have been made in consequence of these disorders verifies the statement I made in my despatch of October 12th, with reference to the unstable condition of affairs in Liberia, and at any moment over-wrought foreigners might do things that would precipitate a very serious situation. I feel that we have not yet passed beyond the possibility of further trouble of this character. There is an evident hysterical sentiment prevailing among the foreign merchants here which might kindle into action that would have very unfortunate results. It is particularly noticeable that this sentiment exists mostly among the Germans. I believe that it is largely due to a total loss of confidence on their part in things Liberian. I would hesitate to ascribe their action and feeling to a more sinister motive, yet it is entirely within the realm of possibilities that such motives may exist. However, this much I believe I can state with a considerable degree of certainty: The German merchants have been and are completely hostile to the establishment of the gold basis by Liberia, in the matter of paying customs, before the Receivership has actually gone into operation. In the first place this has largely cut down the profits they have been accustomed to make by "jobbing" in duty paper. Second, no effort has been made by the Liberian Government so far as I know, to pay anything on their current accounts, and at the same time the Government endeavors to secure additional credit which the merchants are now denying. It was probably this fact which led to the report that the Government was short of funds and was unable to suppress the uprisings on that account. I am informed that before Major Ballard and his troops were sent to River Cess, an effort was made by the Government to obtain supplies from German merchants at Monrovia on credit, and they were flatly refused, except duty paper was given. On its part it must be stated to the credit of the Government, that it refused to issue any more duty paper.

It would appear, therefore, that the longer the Receivership is kept from operation the more difficult it is becoming for the Government to raise funds to meet emergencies. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the end of the delay is well in sight and the time approaches when the Receivership can take charge. Personally, I am of the opinion that matters can be very easily controlled if confidence is restored by the Receivership going into effect at an early date.

Just as I was about to bring this despatch to a close I was informed that the German gunboat Panther has arrived in the harbor. It is reported that she proceeds to Bassa, the seat of the alleged disorder, at 11:00 this evening. I will promptly and fully advise the Department of future developments.

German gunboat Panther arrived yesterday Monrovia. Commander made formal written request of the President that Liberian Government take energetic and decisive measures to guarantee safety of Germans on Bassa coast. If satisfactory measures were not undertaken within twenty-four hours commander expressed intention to make armed intervention. Reply demanded by seven p. m. If no expression made by President, commander reserved liberty to act as he saw fit.

President replied giving assurances that situation is under control and declining intervention. Panther left here for Bassa coast last night. Believe situation in regard to disorders unchanged but cannot forecast German action.

The Department could not give definite instructions until it had received and examined Ballard's report. Inasmuch as no American officer was present and because such course would be for the purpose of avoiding long delay, it is difficult to see why the closing of the incident in the manner outlined in the last paragraph of your telegram of January 5 should affect the usefulness of the American officers, and certainly the earliest possible adjustment of the incident is desirable. Perhaps you could agree with the German Consul that the dismissal of the Liberian officer should be provisional, pending an ultimate exchange of views between the American and German Governments after both had received full reports from their respective representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 10, 1913. The commander of a German war vessel in Liberia charges a

Liberian officer and soldiers with an assault upon a German officer and marines at River Cess. The American Chargé d'Affaires at Monrovia reports that the German Government demands dismissal of the Liberian officer, an apology and a guaranty that the officer will not again be employed in an official capacity. The Liberian Government is willing to dismiss the officer and offer an apology but will not give the demanded guaranty because it would violate the Liberian Constitution. An investigation of the disturbances at River

Cess is being made by an American ex-army officer who is in command of the Liberian forces at that place and his report may exonerate the Liberian officer or set up counter charges as grave as those made by the German officer. It is reported from Monrovia that the German Government will take drastic action if the Liberian officer is not dismissed. The American Chargé has been instructed that if the incident could be closed by the dismissal of the officer it would be desirable that the Liberian Government take that action. It has also been suggested that the dismissal be made provisional pending ultimate exchange of views between the German and American Governments after full reports have been received.

Use good offices with the German Government and ask that the demand on Liberia be modified so that the Liberian Constitution be not violated and point out that Liberia's willingness to dismiss the officer and apologize even before report of investigation is received would seem all that could be equitably expected. If the German Government refuses to waive its demand upon Liberia suggest that the Liberian Government give a guaranty that the dismissed officer be not again employed in the Liberian Frontier Force.

Make it clear to the German Government that in view of the marked consideration of German wishes from the very beginning of the Liberian negotiations, this Government feels justified in expecting on the part of Germany a patient and liberal attitude toward Liberia and a cordial cooperation with this Government to save the

Referring to your several reports as to recent disturbances at different points in Liberia and to the recent visit of the German cruiser Panther, the result of exaggerated accounts from the German press, it would seem that the German Government is rightfully entitled to ask indemnity from the Liberian Government for the destruction of German property at Brewerville and possibly other points. The German Ambassador informs me that upon the demand of his Government in this regard the Liberian Government at first promised to satisfy the claims of German merchants interested at once but has now changed its position and insists that the question must be left to the decision of the Liberian courts. In reply I informed the Ambassador I had every confidence that the judicial decision would be an equitable one, but you will discreetly bring to the knowledge of the proper officials the sympathetic interest this Government takes in the satisfactory settlement of this question. * * *

American Legation, Monrovia, January 13, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to make the following report with respect to the efforts made to reach a satisfactory settlement of the claims of the German merchants:

During the first discussion concerning these claims, it was very apparent that the German Consul and nearly all of the merchants were strongly opposed to permitting the claims to go before the Liberian courts for adjudication. The fact that most of the claims were for losses sustained by the merchants at places not ports of entry, and were therefore not legally entitled properly to become the subject of diplomatic representations, according to contract and Liberian laws, seems to have made little or no difference in the firmness of the German contention that the claims should not be submitted to the Liberian courts.

After spending many weary days in futile discussion, I proposed as a compromise that the matter should be finally decided by an international commission composed of five members, the Governments of the United States, Germany, France, Great Britain and Liberia appointing one member each; the findings of a majority of the commission to be final and binding alike upon the Governments of Germany and Liberia. I informed the Liberian Government, and the German Consul as well, that I could not pledge the Government of the United States to support this proposal, as it had emanated from me personally and without the knowledge of my Government. However, I promised to lay the matter before the Department and secure, if possible, some expression from it as to the feasibility of such a scheme, and ascertain whether or not the Government of the United States would favor an arrangement of this kind. Meanwhile, I suggested that the Liberian Government acknowledge liability for the losses and make a proposal to the German Government to adjust the claims along a line in keeping with the international commission idea; the ultimate adoption of this method to be of course contingent upon all of the Governments mentioned becoming a party to it. The Liberian Government acted upon my suggestion and replied to the German Consul's demands respecting the claims (inclosure No. 1) in terms which called for the adjudication of the claims either by the Liberian courts or by an international commission (inclosure No. Adjudication of claims by the Liberian courts was included in the proposal of adjustment to prevent waiving of the right to settle the matter in that way if it should become expedient to revert to that method. Before presenting the international commission plan to the Liberian Government I had fully and freely discussed the proposition with the British Consul General, the French Vice Consul and the German Consul. All agreed that it appeared to meet the conditions adequately, but could do nothing more than give their personal approval to the scheme before communicating with their respective Governments. This, I understand, they have done. What results have attended their efforts is not known to me yet.

I was led to propose the commission plan not only as a compromise, but also for the following additional reasons:

First. It appears to me very likely that it might be quite difficult to have these claims treated with absolute fairness by the Liberian courts at this time. There is so much anti-German sentiment in the country at present that the element of feeling might easily prevail where reason ought to control. Without doubt the Executive Government would be inclined to deal perfectly fair with the question, but it is questionable whether or not it could exert enough influence on the courts to secure an equitable adjustment of the claims. Then too, it seems to me to be inadvisable to encourage the Executive Government to exert influence on the courts even in the interest of a righteous cause, as such a procedure is distinctly irregular. At this time all efforts ought to be directed toward the elimination of practices that are open to question.

Second. If the claims are presented to the Liberian courts, it would be difficult to have the adjustment satisfy the merchants should the awards be much reduced from the original amounts presented, and it is not unlikely that the claims will be exorbitant. An international commission, acting without prejudice or bias, could well make large reductions and still not have its findings questioned or

Third. The payment of these claims, by whatever means they are adjudicated, becomes a matter of great importance since the Receivership will undoubtedly be called upon to furnish the money to liquidate them, and an international commission's findings would therefore probably receive much more consideration than those of the Liberian courts. Moreover, it seems to me that any additional obligations contracted by the Liberian Government ought to be with the knowledge of all the Governments that are identified with the loan agreement, because new obligations might seriously impair the security of the bonds. While the proposal of an international commission ignores the Liberian courts, which normally ought to treat these claims, I believe this method uses a means that will protect the Republic as effectively as the courts, perhaps even more so. In any event the precedent thus established cannot, in my opinion, embarrass the Liberian Government in the future should other claims arise against it.

Other reasons could be enumerated, but I think those already stated are sufficient to indicate my point of view.

It is significant that when these claims were first talked over by the German Consul and myself it was intimated to me that in the aggregate they would not amount to more than twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. After the international commission plan of settlement was proposed, the claims took a sudden jump to sixty thousand dollars or more. It is my personal opinion that the merchants will endeavor to secure damages not only for goods actually lost, but also for profits they would have made if their business had been going on without interruption in the disturbed areas.

Before closing this despatch I had a call from the German Consul, who informs me in confidence that his Government thinks a commission of five too large and unnecessary, and it makes a counterproposal, that the commission be composed of three members, one each representing the German and Liberian Governments, and these two to be empowered to choose a third member who will be a disinterested party. This modification might be acceptable, it appears to me, if the other Governments have no objection. Personally, I think that a commission composed of five members chosen as before indicated would give better satisfaction to all the interests involved. However, if that plan cannot be carried out, the next best thing will be tried. I expect that certain phases of this matter will have been taken up with the Department by cable before the arrival of this despatch. Should that not be the case, I earnestly request that the Department furnish me with its views on this matter at the earliest practicable moment.

German Consulate, Monrovia, December 30, 1912.

DEAR SIR: With your declaration of November 6 the Government of the Republic of Liberia has taken over the guaranty for the protection of life and property of all foreigners residing within the areas affected by the existing unrest.

This declaration of your Government has been accepted by my Government with despatch of November 12, J. No. 700; the contents of this despatch has been carefully noted, without any objection by your Department of State, with its despatch No. 582 of November 14.

In a verbal declaration of the 16th instant you made me understand that the declaration of November 6 had to be interpreted in a restrictive manner, that the indemnity for damages of property sustained by foreigners could be accorded only after an appeal has been made to the Liberian courts and without being made the subject of diplomatic intervention and in accordance with the law concerning the trade of foreigners interiorwards or coastwise beyond ports of entry.

In accordance with the instructions I have received from my Government I have to declare that my Government cannot accept any restrictive interpretation of the first declaration and that it holds the Liberian Government responsible for any damages sustained by German firms.

I respectfully beg in the name of my Government at the earliest date the declaration whether the Liberian Government is willing to pay the damages sustained by German firms, of which I will hand particulars as soon as I have got them myself.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

DEAR BARON: I have the honour, in keeping with my note to you of the 30th of December last, to communicate to you the views of the Liberian Government on the subject-matter of your despatch J. No. 881, dated the 29th of December.

1. The Liberian Government considers the discussion of claims of German subjects for losses alleged to have been sustained by them, growing out of the disorders at River Cess and its adjacent coast, quite premature at this time, since no claims whatever have up to the present moment been presented to the Liberian Government by German subjects; and until the presentation of such claims to the Liberian Government by German merchants and the former's refusal to admit and satisfy their claims, I respectfully submit that they could not be properly made a subject of discussion between the two Governments, especially upon the lines and to the extent indicated in your said despatch.

2. With reference to the declaration made in my despatch of November 6, 1912, to your predecessor, to the effect that "The Government of Liberia guarantees protection for the life and property of all foreigners residing within the affected areas", and the construction placed upon it by your Government I beg to say that the Liberian Government regrets that it cannot harmonize its view with the construction placed by your Government upon its declaration

The protection guaranteed by the Government of Liberia for the lives and property of foreigners residing within the affected areas is only that protection which such foreigners would be entitled to under the existing laws of Liberia, and further only to such foreigners who were and are still legitimately residing and carrying on business within disturbed areas.

The Government of Liberia is most firm in its conviction on this point, as it cannot at all imagine that the Imperial German Government would for a moment insist upon compensation being given to such of their subjects who might be residing and carrying on mercantile operations within the disturbed areas in open violation of the laws of the Republic permitting foreigners to reside and trade at non ports of entry.

The Imperial German Government has always in the past lent its influence in securing from its subjects residing in Liberia full respect for the laws of the Republic. And the Liberian Government therefore has every confidence that your Government will continue such a correct and friendly policy.

However, as an evidence of the Liberian Government's sincere desire to meet as far as practicable the expressed wish of the Imperial German Government and also to maintain those most friendly relations which have so uniformly in the past existed between the two Governments, I have been directed by His Excellency the President to state that upon presentation to the Liberian Government of the claims of German subjects for losses said to have been sustained by them, due to disorders at Brewerville, River Cess and its adjacent-coast, it will admit liability for all claims to which German subjects may be entitled provided that such claims be adjudicated either by the Liberian courts or by an international commission composed of one representative each from the American, British, French, German and Liberian Governments; and that the findings of the majority of the members of such a commission shall be final and binding alike upon the German and Liberian Governments.

I trust that the proposed solution of the difficulty will be acceptable to the Imperial German Government, whose relations with Liberia have always been of a most friendly character.

The American Legation at Monrovia reports that the German Government demands that the Liberian Government agree to pay the full amount of indemnity for property destroyed by native uprisings in one year, although the claims commission has not yet been constituted and the amount of indemnity is unknown. The German Consul at Monrovia has been unable to induce his Government to modify this demand. The Liberian Government is willing to agree to a definite time of settlement after the commission has ascertained the full amount of the claims, and to pay five per cent interest until claims are paid in full. Unless the German Government accepts these terms financial difficulties will result. The proposition of the Liberian Government seems to be just and has the support of this Government. Use your best endeavors with the German Government to accept these terms.

The German Government has rejected every American proposed for third commissioner, insisting upon appointment of an Englishman. While this Government does not object to the appointment of a British subject the Department is of the opinion that the third member of the commission should represent a nation which has no

Owing to the strained financial conditions of Liberia the Government of that country looks for most favorable terms in the settlement of the German claims. If the German Government's suggestion is accepted the claims must be paid in much less time than one year as originally proposed. The total of the claims will probably not exceed $25,000. Again bring to the attention of the German Government the Liberian proposal contained in Department's telegram of the 8th instant and add that under the circumstances it seems that the Liberian Government cannot be expected to offer a better settlement of the claims.

American Legation, Monrovia, February 14, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to make the following report in continuation of my No. 76 of January 13, 1913, respecting the commission which has been proposed as a means of adjusting the claims which the German merchants have filed against the Liberian Government.

By reference to my cable of January 17, it will be noted that I stated that the German Government would propose a commission of three, the Governments of Liberia and Germany to appoint one each, and these two were to be empowered to choose the third member. This proposition, as emanating from the German Government, was stated to me verbally by the German Consul, who has rather an indifferent knowledge of English. Later I saw a written statement of the proposition as presented to the Liberian Government by the German Consul, and the manner of choosing the third member of the commission was materially different from that orally stated to me by him. Instead of the Liberian and German commissioners choosing the third commissioner, the German Consul's written proposal provided that the Governments of Liberia and Germany should agree on a neutral man to become the third commissioner. I found that the Liberian Government readily accepted the proposal as written, and I let the matter pass without comment, since indeed it might easily have happened that through his deficient knowledge of English, the German Consul may have thought he had stated the proposition to me orally as he had written it to the Liberian Government. I felt at the time that a great deal more difficulty would be experienced in arriving at a choice of a third member by referring it to the two Governments to make the selection, than if the two members designated by the German and Liberian Governments had power to choose the third member; and such has proved to be the case. * * *

After rejecting the names I proposed, and intimating that any others I might bring forward would scarcely prove acceptable to the merchants, the German Consul proposed Mr. W. E. O'Connell, agent at Monrovia for the Paterson Zochonis Company, whose headquarters are in England. Mr. O'Connell is locally called an Englishman, but I believe that he is actually of Irish extraction. He bears a good business reputation at Monrovia, but the Liberian Government regards him as a man of mediocre ability, and not able to

When the negotiations reached this stage, it was very apparent that the Germans were trying to secure some unfair advantages. In the first place the German Consul let it be known that it was the purpose of the German Government to nominate Mr. Lange, the German Receiver of Customs, as its representative on the commission. The Liberian Government and Mr. Reed Paige Clark, General Receiver of Customs, immediately objected to this procedure. Enclosure No. 1 is a copy of a letter received by this office from the General Receiver, in which his objections are stated.

The Liberian Government has taken the position, that Mr. Lange is a Liberian official and as such is not available for assignment by the German Government to do work on the contemplated commission or otherwise, irrespective of the Liberian Government's wishes. so long as he is under contract to it. The German Consul claims that Mr. Lange is not a Liberian official, and can be designated to serve on the commission by the German Government, whether the Liberian Government agrees to it or not. The German Consul has informed me that if the Liberian Government persists in maintaining the position it has taken, the German Government will regard such action as distinctly unfriendly to it, and quite likely to lead again to strained relations between the two Governments. The German Consul asked me whether or not I thought that Mr. Lange was a Liberian official, and I replied that it was my opinion that he was, and that the Department of State had expressed this view to the German Chargé d'Affaires at Washington when the question of Mr. Lange acting as German consular officer and receiver of customs at the same time was under discussion.

I am of the opinion that the German Government is preparing to use great pressure to carry this point. In view of the position taken by the German Government with respect to Mr. Lange, the reason for such persistent efforts on its part to have the third commissioner chosen before either of the other two members were selected became apparent. The Germans' evident desire was to fill the third place with a neutral, non-American commissioner, and then force Mr. Lange on as the German representative. In this way they expected to dominate the commission.

When the Liberian Government recognized that the German Government would not recede from its contention, a verbal statement was made to the German Consul, to the effect that if Mr. Lange were nominated as the German member of the commission, then the Liberian Government would be obliged to insist that Mr. Reed Paige Clark should be the third member. The German Consul informed me that he would get an expression from his Government with reference to this statement but rather doubted that it would be acceptable to the German merchants.

While the personnel of the commission was receiving so much attention, the German Consul came forward with a very extraordinary proposition with respect to the payment of the claims. Although the members of the commission are not yet chosen, and the amount of the damages that will be awarded are necessarily unknown, still the German Consul demanded that the Liberian Government agree to pay the full amount of the commission's awards in one year (see enclosure No. 2). When this proposition was presented to me by the German Consul, and my views requested, I stated that it was my opinion that the proposition was not fair either to Liberia or to the Receivership. I added that I thought it was a very undesirable policy to force the Liberian Government to contract to pay an indefinite amount in one year without regard to the Receivership or the Financial Adviser. Moreover, the principle involved would, to my mind, not be changed if the exact sum in question had already been definitely ascertained.

I have been endeavoring to discern the motive underlying the attitude the German Government has assumed with respect to the payment of these claims, and I believe it may perhaps be accounted for on the ground that there is a feeling among the Germans that if the advice of the Receivership is given Liberia with regard to the terms of settlement, it is very probable that the time will be stretched out over several years. Furthermore, it is apparently believed that the British and French receivers and the American General Receiver are hostile to these claims, and would be inclined to favor the Liberian Government when the terms of adjustment are decided upon. Another fact of significance is that there are merchants of other nations, notably English and Dutch, having claims against the Liberian Government growing out of these same disorders, and from statements inadvertently dropped by the German Consul during some of our conversations he appeared to be fearful that more favorable terms of settlement will be granted to the English and Dutch claimants than to the German. In order to forestall any such arrangement, the German Consul seems to be taking a course which is designed to secure preferential treatment of the German claims.

In talking over this whole matter with President Howard he has taken occasion to say to me many times, that he does not propose to be intimidated any further by the German Government when he feels that gross advantage is being taken of Liberia and there is little or no regard for justice and fair play. If threats of force are again used by the German Government to carry its points irrespective of the right in the matter, I believe it is entirely possible that the Liberian Government will take such a stand that the threats will have to be translated into action, in which event a crisis will of course be precipitated. The Liberian Government now feels that Germany is bent on her destruction, and that no more concessions can be made merely for the purpose of pacifying the ambitious program of the Germans in Liberia. I have used much effort to reassure the Liberian Government that I feel that its fears with respect to German designs in Liberia are not well founded, but I can not say that I have been very successful in changing the views that it now holds. The Liberian Government continues to point to the aggressive and unfriendly action of the German Government, despite its protestations of friendship, as a much more convincing proof of the soundness of its views than all the arguments and logic I can present to the contrary.

I think that the situation is aggravated a great deal by the sentiment which most Germans residing in Liberia hold and express, that Liberia has no right to exist. Many times this statement has been made in my hearing by Germans. The German Consul, however, has repeatedly told me that he had been instructed by his Government to do all he could to preserve the autonomy of the Liberian State, and that it was his intention to observe carefully his instructions. This position of the German Government has also been stated in conversation by the German Consul to the Liberian Government, but it is pointed out to me by Liberian officials that the acts of the German Consul do not square with his words, and the German professions of friendship and kindly interests are insincere. I feel that I can candidly say that if it had not been for the fact that I have continually acted as a mediator between the Liberian Government and the German Consul in the difficulties which have arisen, an open rupture would have already taken place between the Liberian and German Governments. The view-points of each Government are so diverse that there seems to be very little common ground upon which to reach understandings.

On an entirely independent basis I have been compelled to reflect considerably upon the German attitude in Liberia, and it appears to me that in certain of its features it challenges, or at least to some extent is disregardful of, American primacy in Liberian affairs. I have never been unmindful of the instructions to me in the Department's cable of December 19, but I am firmly convinced that the success of the American policy in Liberia, as I understand it, is totally dependent on the Government of the United States retaining unimpaired its leadership in Liberian affairs. In support of this conviction I have always used my best endeavors.

Sir: It has recently come to my ears that Mr. Lange, the German Receiver of Customs, has been suggested as the German member of the mixed commission which, it is proposed, will investigate the claims of certain merchants against the Liberian Government.

Without entering into a discussion of the matter, I wish to protest most emphatically against the assignment of Mr. Lange to the commission. An appreciable per cent of his time would necessarily be taken up by the work of the commission and he would be unable to give the receivership work the attention that it imperatively requires. Mr. Lange is scheduled to go on leave April 17th and he can not possibly be spared in the meantime.

May I not rely upon you to put this protest before the Department in such a way as to bring about the Department's objection to the proposed assignment of Mr. Lange?

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Monrovia, February 5, 1913.

Dear Mr. Chargé d'Affaires: For the information of your Government, I beg to submit to you the following facts in connection with the proposed commission to enquire into and pass upon the claims of German merchants, presented to the Liberian Government, for losses alleged to have been sustained by them, growing out of the recent disorders at Brewerville and River Cess and its adjacent coast.

On the 30th of January the Imperial German Consul called at the Department of State and intimated the willingness of his Government to submit the claims of the German merchants in question to an arbitration commission as proposed by the Liberian Government, provided that such a commission be composed of three members only, one to be named by the German Government, one by the Liberian Government and the third by agreement of the two Governments. This proviso made by the German Government to the Liberian Government's proposal was agreed to by the latter. It was also agreed,

(a) That each Government pay the expense of its own member of the commission, and the expense of the third member be equally divided between the two Governments.

(b) That the majority decision of the commission be final and binding upon the two Governments.

(c) That the period for the sitting of the commission do not to exceed one month.

(d) That on all unpaid amounts of the claim which may be awarded by the commission, interest of 5% be charged to the Liberian Government.

The Consul, however, declared that his Government desired that the time for the payment of the amount of the claims which may be awarded by the commission be fixed in these preliminary arrangements for the commission, and suggested the term of one year. In reply to this demand of the German Government, I expressed to the Consul the hope of the Liberian Government that his Government would not press the point of fixing the time for payment at the present stage of these negotiations, for the following reasons:

1. Because the Liberian Government would find it difficult to fix the time for the payment of a sum of money the amount of which is unknown and not yet declared by the commission.

2. Because the Financial Adviser of the Republic will necessarily have to be consulted before the Liberian Government could fix the time for the payment of such amounts as may be declared and awarded by the commission, as under the provisions of Article 4, Sec. 4, page 13 of the refunding loan agreement the Receivership is charged with the responsibility of providing for the payment of all such claims.

Therefore the Liberian Government respectfully and earnestly requests the United States Government to use its good and friendly offices with the Imperial German Government to induce it to withhold its demands of fixing the time of payment of such portions of the claims that might be awarded until they have been finally passed upon by the proposed commission.

German Foreign Office has informed our Ambassador at Berlin that it has proposed to Liberian Government Mr. O'Connell, an Irishman, as arbiter for claims commission but that Mr. O'Connell had confidentially informed German Consul that he was unable to accept position for reason that Liberian Government through its Attorney General had threatened him that it would be injurious to his business interests to act as arbiter in the commission.

German Government willing to make following concessions as to terms of settlement: Liberia to deduct from customs receipts the necessary funds for loan service, salaries of receivership and customs administration and then set aside twenty-five per cent of remainder, instead of thirty per cent originally proposed for paying off indemnity.

German Government feels that O'Connell affair is an intrigue on part of Liberian Government to delay negotiations for settlement of claims and states that it is not willing to stand any further pro-traction.

Ambassador Leishman informs the Department that he received the impression at the Foreign Office that when the question of the personnel of the commission is satisfactorily decided German Government might be willing to accept twenty per cent though such further concession would undoubtedly evoke protests from claimants. This arrangement might be favorable to Liberia since in months of small customs receipts the payments would be correspondingly small.

Inquire from Clark how this proposition would affect customs receivership and if it would be crippled by deducting twenty-five per cent. Inform Department the maximum per cent finances would permit.

American Ambassador at Berlin reports that German Foreign Office appears much annoyed over alleged dilatory action of Liberian Government relative to appointment of third commissioner. Ambassador is informed that on account of difficulty experienced in securing foreigners to serve, owing to threats made in case of O'Connell, German Government proposes calling upon French Consul to act as third commissioner providing consent of his Government can be obtained.

Stubborn insistance of German merchants and fear of parliamentary criticism have so far prevented American Ambassador from being able to induce Foreign Office to modify terms of settlement but should question of commissioner be promptly settled it is thought a counter offer of Liberian Government extending payment over two vears pavable monthly out of customs receipts might possibly be

You will take this matter up with the Liberian Foreign Office discreetly pointing out that Liberia's interest would call for a prompt and amicable agreement as to third commissioner. It may be stated that while Department would not express objection to appointment of Englishman or Frenchman it would seem desirable for all nations concerned that third commissioner should represent nation having no territorial possessions adjacent to Liberia.

Opposition of Liberian Government to O'Connell was consistent and for good reasons. German Government endeavored to force Lange on commission as its representative; thereupon Liberia insisted that Clark be third commissioner. German Government objected to Clark and withdrew Lange. Liberian Government has accepted Mr. Pigott, an Englishman, nominated by German Government as third commissioner. Verbal agreement on personnel of commission reached more than week ago. Copy of written statement made by O'Connell totally disavowing expressions attributed to him by German Consul has been given me by Liberian Government.

Clark objects to terms of settlement proposed by German Government because, first, they contemplate deduction from funds under direct control of Receivership and necessary for its successful operation, such as upkeep of sea-patrol service and frontier force, Liberia powerless to pledge any portion of these funds; second, any charge on balance turned over to Liberian Government by Receivership would destroy budget and nullify all measures of financial reform instituted, paper would again be issued for short paid Government debts; third, Receivership owes foreign officials in the service of Liberian Government more than $10,000 arrears salaries, this obligation ranks prior to any claims for indemnity; fourth, Receivership already embarrassed by falling revenue, deficit since November 26 over corresponding period last year more than $30,000, state of revenue precludes any added charges at present; fifth, there are other foreign claimants who will likely demand treatment not less favorable than that accorded Germans.

Clark proposes that the sum of at least $20,000 be appropriated next year and substantial sum annually thereafter for payment of claims, German claims being preferred. Further that all unexpended receipts over term of years be similarly applied.

Clark says he cannot assume responsibility for financial reorganization if German proposal is forced upon Liberia.

Sir: I have the honor to report to the Department that Mr. Pigott, who was named and had accepted the position as arbiter on the German merchants' claims commission, was subsequently rejected by the German Government although in the first instance he had been named by the German Consul. The Liberian Government thought this procedure very irregular but for the sake of peace did not insist upon the retention of Mr. Pigott.

I have heard that the German Consul approached the French Vice Consul at Monrovia and requested him to serve, but it appears that the French Government did not give its assent when the matter was laid before it; so the French Vice Consul was not able to serve. The German Consul then turned to Mr. I. Odin, a Frenchman, and the local manager of the French wireless station at Monrovia. Mr. Odin agreed to serve and the Liberian Government found no objection to his nomination; so the commission was finally constituted of Mr. Fritz Specht, German representative; Mr. James Cooper, Liberian representative; and Mr. I. Odin, arbiter.

The commission began its sittings on March 18th, at Monrovia, and claims for damages sustained at Brewerville by the German merchants were the first to be brought before the commission. I have been reliably informed that after a two days' examination of these claims, the commission awarded eight hundred dollars ($800) to the claimants. The original amount of the claims filed for the Brewerville damages was, I understand, about fifteen hundred dollars

On March 24th, the commission left Monrovia aboard the German gunboat Panther, for Grand Bassa, where it has resumed its work. It is expected that all of the claims will be investigated and the awards made in less than a month's time if no untoward conditions arise.

There remains open the question of the terms of settlement. I am informed that it has been agreed between the German and Liberian Governments that this question shall be disposed of after the commission's awards are made. It is hoped that acceptable terms of settlement may be arranged without arousing any further friction between the two Governments.

It appears that the merchants feel that the German Consul is responsible for their failure to obtain damages from the Liberian Government in substantial amounts. In fact, some of the merchants have in conversation expressed themselves to me in this sense, and have intimated their intention to disregard the awards of the commission.

The Liberian Secretary of State has informed me that the Government has been approached, since the awards of the commission were made, by some of the German merchants who urge that they desire a private settlement of their claims. Of course, such settlements would inevitably involve far larger amounts in each case than were awarded by the commission. I understand that the Government has steadfastly refused to consider any terms of settlement not based on the actual findings of the commission. * * *

It is not at all improbable that these claims will be brought to the UPRISINGS OF NATIVES ON THE SIERRA LEONE FRONTIER.

File No. 882.00/478.

The American Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State.

No. 110.7

American Legation, Monrovia May 15, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that it is being reported to me from various sources that there is a good deal of unrest among the Liberian natives who inhabit that portion of Liberian territory that is adjacent to the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary. In fact, I am reliably informed that the paramount chief of this section, Mambu by name, was recently captured by a powerful rival chief called Bumbo-koli, and killed in a very barbarous fashion. what I have learned of the matter it would seem that this recent trouble is an echo of the disorder fomented in this district by Cooper and Lomax more than a year ago, which culminated in the execution of eight chiefs of the action. It appears that it was through the support given by Messrs. Cooper and Lomax to Mambu that he succeeded in becoming paramount chief of the district. As a result he was exceedingly unpopular with the natives whom he governed, principally, it is stated, in his own interests. It is also claimed that a large portion of the domain ruled by Mambu originally belonged to the eight chiefs who were executed; and their relatives, one of whom is Bumbo-koli, swore vengeance. The Liberian Government desired to have Mambu and Bumbo-koli come to Monrovia and present their respective grievances, with a view to composing their difficulties and pacifying that section of the country over which they ruled. It is said that Mambu was on his way to Monrovia, in compliance with the request of the Government, when he was captured and killed.

The foregoing is the bare outline of a situation which, in my opinion, will call for very energetic treatment on the part of the Government to prevent a native disturbance which might easily assume considerable proportions. This matter is further complicated by the presence in the disturbed area of Liberian commissioners representing the Government who have apparently allied themselves on opposite sides of this question. One is constrained to feel that the Government has been particularly unfortunate in the choice of the commissioners who are operating in the affected territory, * * * and it is not unlikely that the case under discussion has in it the germ of more difficulties between the Liberian and Sierra Leone Governments. Two of the best Liberian lieutenants in the Frontier Force service are in the district with 100 men, but it appears that they are not able to cope with the situation.

Major Young had expected to send Major Ballard into this section of the country as soon as he could leave River Cess, but now that Major Young's health has broken down it will undoubtedly be necessary for Major Ballard to remain at Monrovia as the administrative officer, and Captain Hawkins will perhaps go to the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary. Captain Newton is in the Cavalla River district, where it looks as if conditions will require that one American officer be permanently stationed. The Sierra Leone boundary will require another, and the Kru Coast between Bassa and Sinoe will need the third. Indeed, it is asserted that the Kru Coast has only been subdued on account of the wholesome fear the natives have of Major Ballard and it is anticipated that as soon as he leaves that station and puts a Liberian officer in charge there will be trouble again.

This leads me to express an opinion which I have entertained for some time, in which the Military Adviser and the General Receiver of Customs concur. In view of the failure of the Liberian Government to furnish proper material out of which to make competent officers, and, further, because of the actual scarcity of such material in the country, I feel that at least two more American officers will have to be obtained. If not, the three men already in the service will be overworked and not accomplish the task assigned them. I need not dwell on the severity of this climate on persons alien to the country. The job is too big for any three men in the world when one considers, along with all other factors, how little effective assistance Liberia herself is rendering. To attempt to disguise this truth is to defeat all proper measures of reorganization.

It is hoped that this matter will receive some attention before Major Young goes on leave, and if the Liberian Government agrees to the engagement of two more American officers, and the General Receiver of Customs thinks the finances will warrant his becoming responsible for their salaries, it is likely that an effort will be made to secure them. Major Young has stated that he thinks he can obtain two good men to serve as first lieutenants for $1400.00 each per annum. If this additional help can be secured a very effective Frontier Force can be maintained, whether the Liberian Government furnishes any efficient material for officers or not.

At an early date some working arrangement will have to be established for correlating the functions of the Liberian Frontier Force officers and the interior commissioners. Hitherto officers and commissioners have been one and the same person, but with the passing of the Frontier Force under American officers the old system has been discontinued and nothing has as yet been done to provide for the altered conditions. The situation can easily prove a fruitful source of vexatious questions.

These problems, and many others that I might mention, cause me to deplore the necessity of Major Young taking a leave of absence at this time on account of his broken health. If it had been possible for him to have remained at work without interruption for a few months longer, a very orderly and systematic condition of affairs would have been evolved from what heretofore has been a chronic state of confusion and chaos.

[Extract.]

No. 121.7

American Legation, Monrovia, July 7, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report, for the information of the Department, that Captain Newton, one of the American officers, has just arrived at Monrovia, and reports that the town of River Cess, on the Kru coast, was attacked on June 30, at 2 a. m., by a force of rebellious natives estimated at three or four hundred.

River Cess was garrisoned by a force of about eighty Frontier soldiers under a Liberian officer. It will be remembered that this is the same town and district which Major Ballard has held in subjection for the last five or six months. When Major Young was compelled to take leave it became absolutely necessary to have Major Ballard come to Monrovia, and take over the administrative work Major Young had given up.

I stated in my No. 110 of May 15, 1913, that "the Kru coast has only been subdued on account of the wholesome fear the natives have of Major Ballard, and it is anticipated that as soon as he leaves that station and puts a Liberian officer in charge there will be trouble again." This forecast has been literally fulfilled within less than five

It was by the merest chance that Captain Newton was at River Cess at the time of the attack. He had gone there for the purpose of paying the troops stationed at that post, and intended to proceed immediately to his own station on the Cavalla river. Apparently the natives did not know of his presence, which is regarded here as having saved the situation. * * * The Kru natives have profound contempt for Liberian officers, and know of their lack of stamina and military skill. * * * Contact with German merchants on shore, and German sailors and officers aboard ship has made them very untractable. The Liberian Government has actually never had more than nominal control over several of the large towns on the Kru coast. * * * This cannot be remedied until the Receivership can get a revenue cutter. Once these towns are subdued and governmental authority well established there, they will contribute large revenues to the Republic. But this is a task of no mean size. The Frontier Force is at present far too small to undertake this work and for the time being will doubtless have to confine itself to the preservation of order as best it can.

The present situation on the Kru coast again demonstrates the point I have called to the Department's attention in some of my recent despatches, that three American officers are not enough to deal with present conditions in Liberia. To keep order American officers are necessary on the English boundary, the French boundary, the Kru coast, and at one or two important points in the interior. Moreover, at least one American officer will have to be permanently stationed at Monrovia, to conduct the administrative work and prevent hopeless confusion and inefficient handling of funds. Obviously, this is too

Another serious question is likely to arise out of this last attack on River Cess. During the fight, I understand, the houses and stores of the foreign merchants were shot into by the Kru natives. I have not heard that any foreigners were injured; but the incident will very probably be used to make good the previous assertions of the German merchants at River Cess that their life and property are not safe at that place.

American Legation.

Monrovia, September 27, 1913.

Sir: I had the honor to report to the Department somewhat at length in my No. 110 of May 15, 1913, concerning the disorder which existed among the native tribes that occupy Liberian territory adjacent to the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary. I regret to inform the Department that from reports which have recently reached Monrovia it would seem that conditions have gotten worse in this section of the country instead of better.

The specific causes which have led up to the present state of affairs are so obscured in a mass of conflicting reports from the Liberian commissioners operating in the affected district, which are conspicuous for apparent inaccuracies, petty jealousy, rivalry, spite and venality, that I seriously doubt whether the Government itself has a correct understanding of the situation. In a general way it seems that the root of the difficulty may be found in the untrustworthiness of the commissioners which the Government has appointed to look after its affairs in the boundary districts. The proper supervision of native tribes that dwell in Liberian territory contiguous to the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary is one of the most pressing problems before the Republic, and is destined, if not speedily and satisfactorily solved, to involve the Liberian Government in controversies with the Colonial Government of Sierra Leone that may have far-reaching conse-

The Liberian Government lives in constant fear of aggressive acts and encroachments upon its territory by the Sierra Leone authorities, and yet it seems to me that very little care is exercised to keep down contentions and disorders which could easily furnish plausible excuses for additional aggressions by officials of the Sierra Leone Gov-In a recent conversation with the British Consul General, conditions along the Liberian side of the border were represented to me as being very grave. He stated that the whole population of a large and populous district was in revolt, and many chiefs with their retainers had fled into Sierra Leone for protection and safety. Consul General unhesitatingly blamed the maladministration of Liberian officials for the disorders and sought to leave with me the impression that the situation was hopeless. However, he took great pains to deprecate the suspicion entertained by the Liberian Government, which apparently had come to his knowledge, that there were ulterior motives back of the strong representations which I understand he has been making concerning conditions on the boundary. As if to remove any doubt that might have lodged in my mind respecting the matter, he earnestly assured me that there was not the slightest desire on the part of the British Government to acquire any of the territory now recognized as Liberian. But he did not tell me, what I subsequently learned from the Secretary of State, that the Government was being urged to accept a proposition that would permit the disgruntled natives to throw off their allegiance to Liberia and become British subjects. Great emphasis was laid on the immediate necessity of restoring order, and the Consul General gave it as his opinion that the task would be altogether too great for the Liberian troops now stationed along the border. These number some two hundred and fifty men, who are under the command of Captain Hawkins, one of the American officers. It is admitted that he and his detachment have been and are doing good work, but the distracting activities of the commissioners among the natives have kept up such a turmoil that much of the good that Captain Hawkins could otherwise have accomplished has been nullified by their presence. The intimation was also dropped by the Consul General that the Sierra Leone Government was willing to use its police force to assist in the work of pacification, and from what was said one might readily infer that the next step would be to insist that the use of the Sierra Leone police force had actually become necessary.

From the General Receiver I have learned that the Collector of Customs, A. D. Thomas, at Laingedue, an interior station on the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary, was killed and the customs house looted by rebellious natives in the early part of September. This incident is also a reflex of the same boundary disorder.

The delimitation of the Sierra Leone-Liberia boundary has been in progress since March of the current year and is now, I understand, practically completed. Mr. James G. B. Lee, an American of New York City, who has represented Liberia on the Delimitation Commission, has apparently given general satisfaction to the British and Liberian Governments by his work. There are a few undetermined questions remaining which are, I am informed, in process of adjustment. The presence of Mr. Lee on the boundary has been very helpful in preventing the native disorders from assuming far greater proportions. It seems that Captain Hawkins and Mr. Lee have both succeeded in inspiring respect for their personal worth on the part of the British officials with whom they have come in contact. More men of their kind could undoubtedly unravel for the Republic the muddle existing on the boundary. But I very much fear that there are no Liberians of this quality who are likely to become interior commissioners, while the Americans in the employ of the Government at this time are too few to admit of sending even one more officer from their number to the Sierra Leone frontier.

The long-continued practice of sending weak, arbitrary, venal agents to the interior and boundaries to perform the functions of Government for their superiors, who remain constantly at Monrovia playing petty politics, will have to cease or disaster will overtake the Government. Just what the Government will do to rectify conditions that have brought about the present revolt along the Liberian side of the border, remains to be seen. Until now its efforts have been confined to talk.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 7, 1911.

S_{IR}: Your attention is invited to the Department's letter of June 27 last, enclosing copy of one received from Mr. Ernest Lyon, the Liberian Consul General at Baltimore, relative to the payment to the Liberian Government of the accrued Donovan Fund, for the purpose of which the Department has been asked to designate an official to approve the Society's accounts, to receive the balance due, amounting to about $60,000, and to give the Society proper acquittance. No reply has been received by the Department to this letter of June 27, 1911.

From the files of the Department it appears that on February 20, 1909, you wrote to Mr. Robert Bacon, then Secretary of State, to the effect that the American Colonization Society had approximately $22,000 which was available for educational purposes of the public schools of Liberia, and an annual income of about $3,500 which, under certain conditions, might also become available for the same purpose. To insure this money being applied to the specific purpose mentioned by you, it was suggested by you that the funds be received by the Department and by it transmitted to the American Minister at Monrovia subject to the order of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of Liberia to be expended solely for educational purposes of the public schools and that in the event of doubt and misunderstanding arising in connection with the expenditure or disbursement of the moneys thus transmitted, all such questions should be submitted by the American Minister to a committee of three, composed of himself, the Secretary of State of Liberia, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Your proposal was referred to the Liberian Government through the American Minister at Monrovia who, in reply, forwarded to the Department copy of a note from the Liberian Minister for Foreign Affairs suggesting certain modifications to your proposition. It appears that a copy of this despatch from the American Minister at Monrovia, with its enclosure, was transmitted to you in a letter dated May 14, 1909, which was addressed to you at 1821 Jefferson Place, but that no reply has been received to that letter.

The Department now transmits copy of a recent letter which has been received from Mr. Ernest Lyon¹ enclosing copy of a telegram and a letter from the General Superintendent of Public Instruction of Liberia, appointing him agent of the Department of Education of that Republic with full power to conclude all necessary arrangements with the American Colonization Society with reference to the Public attention has been occupied greatly by the public disorders which have occurred during the last six months, since they might have had influence in some manner on the cordial relations which up to date we have maintained with foreign nations.

As a matter of fact the criminal depredations committed in various parts of the Republic by armed groups which have placed themselves outside the law, committing acts now of rebellion, now of brigandage, have brought about, on the part of victims of foreign nationality, claims against the Mexican Government, directed by the representatives of their respective nations. The form in which the claims have been presented has in no wise inspired any doubt or the least fear that our relations of friendship with foreign nations could suffer any alteration from this cause. Prudence, discretion and serenity have been characteristic of the conduct of the diplomatic agents accredited to Mexico in taking up these affairs, showing once more the esteem which their Governments and up these affairs, showing once more the esteem which their Governments and they themselves have for our country.

The Mexican Government, anticipating the investigation ordered by the American Congress to fix and estimate the personal damages caused by the revolution of 1910 by citizens resident in El Paso, Texas, and Douglas, Arizona, ordered two of its consuls to compile with the greatest zeal the data for the appraising the real damage and to set the amounts of indemnities which should be forthcoming. The result was that only eleven persons presented claims in El Paso and six in Douglas, for injuries received, in some cases because of acts imputable to their own negligence or their impertinent curiosity to witness a battle. In equity and in view of the damages suffered, indemnities were fixed, the amounts of which were similar to those fixed by the American courts and by the Mexican and American chancelleries in cases where the damages, in part at least, are the fault of the victims. The matter is not yet ended due to the exaggerated pretensions of those interested, who have thought to find in the commission appointed by the American Congress an unconditional support.

The fratricidal struggle that has been exhausting us is fortunately near its end, due to the efforts of the glorious Federal Army, any praise of which is too little. Besides this struggle the tension of our diplomatic relations with the Government of the United States of America, although fortunately not with that people, have caused us to suffer more than one disappointment that we did not merit from that source and has retarded the complete pacification of the As this matter is of such a delicate nature and as I have already informed the Permanent Committee and the whole nation of the still uninterrupted state of negotiations, I have only to add that the Government with reason expects soon to see settled the differences that today keep in suspense the friendship that unites us to that powerful and civilized neighbor.

Notwithstanding the very delicate circumstances in which the country has been placed, and to which I will refer in the proper place, our foreign relations have not suffered, and, far from becoming strained, they have been characterized by a more cordially amicable tendency since the country began to emerge from its great revolutionary crisis.

Among the international questions awaiting settlement there are some that have arisen of late on account of the revolutionary conflict and others of an earlier date, which for various reasons had not been settled. To both, the Executive has devoted special attention, the desire being that the Department of Foreign Relations develop an activity commensurate with the urgency that exists at the present time that all questions in which friendly governments are interested be promptly despatched.

The Executive hopes that Mexico will be able to give the most solid guaranties of its good will to the nations with which she is bound by ties of friendship and interest, and she on her side will do her best to the end that all delicate questions pending in our chancellery may soon be disposed of, while upholding, as is right, before all things, the honor and interests of the nation, in accordance with adequate precepts of international law. To this end certain projected conventions will shortly be submitted to the Senate, the general terms of which are the subject-matter of negotiations which have been initiated in a friendly spirit.

minished, but one or more revolutionary movements may at any time be dangerous to the Government, already suffering from universal unpopularity. In the north the revolution exists only in the States of Durango and Chihuahua; violence elsewhere is simply brigandage. In the south the States of Mexico, Michoacán, Guerrero, Morelos, and parts of Oaxaca, Puebla and Vera Cruz are practically in revolt against the Government and brigandage is existent everywhere.

The Government is making frantic efforts to borrow, but the German and French Ministers have made cautionary representations to their Governments, and success would appear problematical. Unless an unexpected change occurs a crisis will be inevitable.

The strike on the National Railways is at present the gravest situation the Government has to deal with, as suspension would bring about intolerable conditions. Unless this difficulty is arranged within two or three days all communication throughout the Republic. except by the Mexican Railway, will be suspended and thousands of men added to the forces of disorder.

[Extract.]

American Embassy, Mexico, February 4, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Knox: Upon resuming my duties at this post after an absence of two months' I find practically the same conditions existing that prevailed prior to my departure. The area of the armed revolution against the Government appears to have sensibly diminished in the north, but at this moment there are abundant indications of a resumption of formidable revolutionary activities in the States of Chihuahua, Durango, Coahuila, Nuevo Leon, and Zacatecas. The peace negotiations which recently took place were, in the opinion of this Embassy, initiated by the revolutionists for the purpose of gaining time to cement various alliances and to complete their shipments of arms and ammunition across the border.

The area of the revolutionary movement in the south continues to be about the same as hitherto, though the scene of activity is constantly changing. To such a degree is it apparent that the Federal troops, either through inactivity or disloyalty or for the purpose of prolonging a situation from which their officers reap unusual pecuniary benefits, are unable to dominate the situation that I am reluctantly forced to the conclusion that hope of the procurement of improved conditions in those States is illusory and that not only will the revolutionists continue to maintain a reign of terror and destruction over this vast section of country, but that they will eventually extend the theater of their operations over the whole of the States of Vera Cruz and Puebla.

There are periods of activity when the whole country, from the Pacific to the middle of the State of Vera Cruz, seems to be alive with revolutionists, and when the Federal Government seems to be utterly unable to cope with the situation. Following this there is frequently a considerable period of inactivity during which widespread brigandage prevails, but apparently no organized movement of revolutionary troops. After a long study of this peculiar phenomenon I have come to the conclusion that the periods of activity follow immediately upon the procurement and distribution of additional arms and ammunition, and that when these are exhausted activity ceases and insincere negotiations for peace are initiated.

As time goes on it becomes more and more evident that the prime cause of the failure of the Government to more thoroughly dominate the revolutionary situation in the north and in the south is due to the hopeless state of the Federal army, which is rapidly losing the morale and discipline it possessed under the Diaz régime is torn by intrigues and dissensions and united only in its contempt and dislike for the present Government.

While the almost hopeless condition of disorder which exists in the country might be expected to wholly absorb the Government's energies and resources it has other grave and even menacing problems, the most pressing of which, and one indeed that is undermining the already weak foundations of the Madero administration, is the economic situation which is hourly assuming more threatening proportions. Over one-third of the States of the Republic a revolutionary movement has now been in progress for two years and not only have those identified with it been idle and nonproducers but the prevalent lawnessness and conditions of anarchy which have resulted from their activities have deterred a vastly greater number of industries and law-observing people from the pursuit of their usual occupations. The revolutionary elements in control of those vast sections which ordinarily constitute valuable sources of and contributors to the nation's prosperity, instead of being producers of wealth, are not only consumers of the fruits of toil but also destroyers of the sources of supply. Thus an enormous number of haciendas are standing idle for want of cultivation, their improvements destroyed, and their owners frequently either in exile or in refuge in urban centers. The gravity of the situation thus produced is vastly increased by the immense and constantly increasing destruction of railway properties and the interruption of railway communication, thus depriving the unmolested planters, manufacturers, and miners of the facilities for marketing their products and of the means essential to the carrying on of their business. The number of mines which have been closed down because of these conditions can not be accurately estimated, but it is undoubtedly very great. These conditions, supplemented by many others which need not be cited here, have greatly disturbed and demoralized the financial and banking interests of the Republic and have resulted not only in a general stringency and curtailment of credits injurious to commerce and trade but have threatened the very life of these institutions. Attention might here be called to the circumstance that no less than nine States of the Republic are at this moment virtually in a state of bankruptcy; some of them because of a disparity between their incomes and ordinary expenditures, and some of them because of the indebtedness accumulated by profligate and dishonest administrators. Some of these States are now appealing to the Federal Government for relief and I anticipate that their number will increase as time goes on.

While the country at large is being overwhelmed by the stress of the financial situation the Government naturally has not been without its troubles. The sound condition of the public finances and the large reserves stipulated by the country's financial obligations, which existed at the time of the downfall of the Government of General Díaz, have given place to disorder and a dissipation, through unknown but presumably, in some instances, corrupt channels, of the treasures which a wise and thrifty Government had accumulated. Its acute distress has led the Government to resort to all sorts of quack economic remedies, like the imposition of unusual tariff duties and the taxation of the raw products of the country, while at the same time it is imperiling its good name in the financial world by attacking and appropriating those sacred reserves to which the honor of the nation is pledged. It is obvious that the conditions which have heretofore been recited could not prevail without bringing in their train high prices, food scarcity, and great distress. These conditions already exist in Mexico City, and reports from the interior indicate corresponding conditions.

Confronted by the intolerable conditions which exist throughout the country, the administration of President Madero remains impotent to remedy or offer any solution for the rapidly accumulating The Cabinet is divided into warring factions of radically conflicting views, all of which are absorbed in petty intrigues and liliputian politics which have little to do with the salvation of the country or the restoration of national prestige at home or abroad. The kind of government that must necessarily be evolved out of a situation like this could not be otherwise than that which exists, viz, one that is impotent in the face of domestic ills and disorders and truculent, insolent, and insincere in its international relations. Government which came into power with an altruistic program, and with party pledges of a free press, free elections, free education, and the division and distribution of great estates finds itself, after a period of a little more than a year, in a position of not having accomplished any of its high-sounding measures for the relief of the Mexican population but responsible for the sacrifice of thousands of human lives, the destruction of vast material interests, aggravation in the condition of the poorer classes, for unspeakable barbarities, and for desolation and ruin over a third of the area of the Republic. Liberty of the press does not exist either in fact or pretense. In the matter of free elections, which constituted so important a feature of the revolutionary program, the attitude of this Government has been a travesty and a disappointment even to those who did not accept the revolution with enthusiasm. Hardly had the new Government been seated in power until it began, by intrigues in some cases and by the exercise of force in others, to interfere in State elections, deposing some governors and imposing others. icy it has continued to the present day, the recent uprisings in the States of Tlaxcala and Puebla being consequences thereof. The Government also actively interfered in the election of Delegates and Senators to Congress, but as its local organizations were imperfect and as there is very little loyalty felt in the Provinces toward the administration the Congress remains, and is rapidly growing more, independent. In the matter of free education and the division and distribution of great estates, which constituted an important part or the pledges of the new administration to the people, nothing has been done, and as the present tendencies of the administration are in the direction of force and repression, and as it regards with undisguised suspicion those same elements of population to which it owes its elevation, it is highly improbable that anything will be done. At the present moment, in the capital, the situation is marked by an infinite number of intrigues and political deals, by an intolerance on the part of the Government of free thought and free speech, by a wide system of espionage which marks and dogs the steps of every important public man not in accord with it, by deception and misrepresentation as to the actual conditions obtaining throughout the Republic, and by aspersal of the motives of all those who have the independence and courage to criticise it and demand a more intelligent management of public affairs. This campaign of misrepresentation is being conducted on an extensive scale. The agents of the Government, both Mexican and American, official and secret, are constantly at work not only in Mexico but in the United States, and a part of their policy is not only to spread false impressions as to actual conditions but to discredit and impugn the motives of the consular and diplomatic representatives of our Government who, under instructions from the Department, are endeavoring faithfully to portray the conditions which exist and to recite the political and revolutionary events as they occur.

The President's speech, delivered to the diplomatic corps on New Year's Day, can leave very little doubt in the mind of anyone as to this administration's conception of its obligations to foreigners who have come hither with their energy and capital and have given to this country whatever of progress it has achieved and whatever of prestige it enjoys throughout the world. The public speeches of Mr. Calero, formerly Ambassador to Washington, in which he frankly admits the country to be on the verge of ruin and that he, under instructions from his Government, systematically falsified and misrepresented the situation in Mexico; the speech of Mr. Cabrera, leader of the Madero forces in Congress, in which he said that conditions in Mexico were being systematically misrepresented abroad by the Mexican Government; the reports of our consuls and of hundreds of resident Americans whose interests lie in peaceful conditions and the prevalence of order—all these are significant facts which must be fully estimated and must have that value attached to them which should pertain to impartial and disinterested testimony.

I stated that I was unable to take any action, as he had no credentials, and that I would not assume any responsibility except with the approval of the entire Diplomatic Corps. He went away and returned with credentials.

Meanwhile, I called together all chiefs of mission. It was decided that I should ask Minister for Foreign Affairs categorically whether the Government could or could not afford adequate protection to the foreign colonies. The Minister limited himself to saying that he would do all he could. My colleagues then authorized me to demand such protection from Díaz, and to inform him, in the name of the Diplomatic Corps, that he would be held responsible for the maintenance of order and the proper protection of foreigners.

Nothing has been done which would involve any recognition of

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have the honor to request that there be immediately despatched a battleship to Vera Cruz and a battleship to Tampico; that some vessel be sent to Mazatlan; and that the vessel now at Acapulco be detained there for the present, it being made clear to the commanding officers that the sole purpose of these dispositions is that they shall observe and report upon the situation particularly with reference to the protection being afforded foreigners and their interests; that it is of the first importance that there be created no impression of the slightest bias on the part of the Government of the United States as to which side shall gain the ascendancy; and that the naval dispositions herein requested represent no change whatever in the policy of the President but respond merely to the fresh necessity of great caution due to the extreme uncertainty of the new conditions created by the uprising in the Mexi-

I make this request as a result of the official reports which I have brought to the attention of the President and which show that a serious outbreak has occurred in the City of Mexico and that a struggle for supremacy is now in progress there between the Government of President Madero and the faction of Felix Díaz, a struggle which is likely to have marked effect upon conditions throughout the Mexican Republic where American citizens and their interests are so very numerous.

No material change since my February 9, 7 p. m. The President and Cabinet have abandoned the palace; whereabouts unknown. General Huerta, whose loyalty is questioned, is in charge of the palace. Practically all of the local State authorities, police, and rurales, have revolted to Díaz, who is intrenching himself strongly.

No protection can be obtained for resident foreigners and the diplomatic establishments. In conjunction with my diplomatic colleagues, who heartly approve such action, I am organizing a foreign guard for the protection of foreign lives and property, which I hope to have in good working order before night, as we anticipate an invasion of Zapatistas from the south. Department should take immediate steps to dispatch of war vessels of sufficient size to produce an impression and with marines to render aid where necessary. And on the border equivalent steps should be taken.

Department's February 10, 11 a.m. There are some 5,000 Americans and perhaps 25,000 foreigners of all kinds in this city absolutely without protection either against invading Zapatistas or against the rising of a mob. I can not indicate how the Government of the United States could extend protection to Americans and foreigners in Mexico City, because of its interior position and other difficulties and because of the uncertainty of a situation which may radically change at any moment for the worse or for the better. There is, however, no doubt in my mind as to the immediate necessity, in anticipation of sympathetic outbreaks in Mexican ports, that formidable warships supplied with marines should be dispatched to points on the Atlantic and the Pacific and that visible activity and alertness should be displayed on the boundary.

It has been decided to dispatch a battleship to Vera Cruz, a battleship to Tampico, a vessel to Mazatlan, and a vessel to Acapulco, to replace the one under orders to leave there for Central America, which will await the arrival of the fresh vessel to be sent to Acapulco.

The sole purpose of these naval dispositions is observation and report upon the situation, particularly with reference to the protection being afforded foreigners and their interests. The sending of these vessels represents no change whatever in the policy of the President; indicates no bias on the part of the Government of the United States as to which side shall gain the ascendency in the struggle which has broken out in Mexico City: and responds merely to the fresh necessity of great caution due to the extreme uncertainty of the new condition caused by the uprising in the Mexican capital, both locally and in its effect upon conditions throughout Mexico, where American citizens and their interests are so very numerous.

Serious and possibly prolonged fighting between the Federal and revolutionary forces is now taking place in the heart of this city, violating the rules of civilized combat and entailing untold loss of life and destruction of noncombatant property and depriving of any guaranties of protection the 25,000 resident foreigners. I am convinced that the Government of the United States, in the interest of humanity and in the discharge of its political obligations, should send firm, drastic instructions, perhaps of a menacing character, to be transmitted personally to the Government of President Madero and to the leaders of the revolutionary movement.

If I ere in possession of instructions of this character or clothed with general powers in the name of the President, I might possibly be able to induce a cessation of hostilities and the initiation of nego-

Your telegram February 11, 6 p. m. The conjecture that drastic instructions might enable the Embassy to induce a cessation of hostilities leading to negotiations for peace does not convince the President of the advisability of any such instructions at the present If the Embassy's representations under such instructions should be disregarded the enforcement of such representations, with the accompanying message to Congress looking to authority for measures of actual war, might precipitate intervention, which should not be considered except as a last resort and if found justified after deliberate consideration of the whole Mexican question, including the situation of foreigners throughout the Republic. Action at present looking to intervention might, moreover, precipitate many of the evils of actual intervention and might, indeed, subject American interests in the City of Mexico to increased dangers under the cloak of the present turmoil. Drastic representations, furthermore, might radically affect the issue of military supremacy at the capital, which is one for the determination of which it is not now expedient for this Government to become responsible, and is, moreover, one which, once definitely settled, may well create a better situation than has existed for some time. As to the situation of foreigners in the capital, bad as it is, nothing seems thus far called for beyond the precautionary dispositions already made as to ships and so forth. In view of the warnings given, the kind of representations to both sides already approved, and other precautions so promptly taken by the Embassy, it appears evident that foreigners ought to seek places of safety until after the fighting, giving due heed to the emphatic recommendations which the Embassy should continue to make in this sense. The Department is gratified to note that there are no indications that Americans or other foreigners as such have thus far been subjected to more than the ordinary perils incident to such an unfortunate condition.

I went with the Austrian and Spanish Ministers, and with the written authority of the British Minister, to National Palace this morning and saw the President. I stated on behalf of my Government and those of my colleagues, that we had come to protest against the continuance of hostilities in this city. I informed him of the loss of American life and property and damage to property and particularly of the destruction of the Consulate General, and that the President of the United States was greatly concerned about the situation. President Madero was visibly embarrassed, and tried to fix the responsibility on Díaz. He added that measures were being taken by the Government which would end the rebellion by to-morrow night. These statements made no impression on me or my colleagues and we insisted that there be a cessation of hostilities until we could make representations to Díaz, to which the President Joined by the British Minister, we then conferred with Díaz, who received us with all the honors of war. I made practically the same representations to him as to the President; urged that the firing be confined to a particular zone, owing to the danger to noncombatants; stated that much damage had been done in the residential district by the indiscriminate firing; that the President of the United States was much concerned over the situation; that vessels had been ordered to the various seaports, as well as transports withmarines, which would be landed if necessary and brought to this city to maintain order and afford protection to the lives and property of foreigners. I added that these representations had been made to President Madero.

Díaz replied that he greatly regretted what was happening, but that he could prove that his attitude from the beginning had been one of defense, although he could have taken the National Palace at any time. He considered the placing of the Federal cannon in their present positions as an utter disregard of all rules of civilized warfare. The morale of his troops was excellent, and he would be igned by about 2,000 coldiers now at San Lazaro station.

fire and that you should evacuate the Embassy premises; that you positively declined to do so; and that thereupon the Minister for

If this is true you should record a formal protest, but if this is ineffective and the position of the Embassy becomes really dangerous you should evacuate the premises rather than risk casualties. In view of the situation in the city it would perhaps be best for you and other Americans to take up temporary quarters entirely beyond the range of fire.

Almost intolerable as is the situation, it should be remembered that fighting within cities is by no means without precedent and that the convenience of foreigners and the dignity of diplomatic establishments can not in all cases be interposed in a manner to affect the issue of such fighting where the danger to foreigners and diplomatic representatives is incidental and where they may escape such danger

Americans can not be advised to go to a safer place, because there is none. Outside the firing range there are bandits and inside there are bullets. Your February 14, 11 a.m. As stated in the Department's February 10, the naval dispositions in Mexican waters are for the purposes of observation and report upon the situation with particular reference to the protection being afforded foreigners and their interests; the sending of the vessels represents no change whatever in the policy of the President, but responds merely to the necessity of great caution due to the uncertainty of the new conditions caused by the uprising at Mexico City and the effect of these upon Americans and their property, both locally and throughout Mexico. The latest reports from Mexico City would seem to indicate a turn for the better, hence there would appear to be still less reason for the Navy Department to change the orders which have been given the vessels at the request of this Department; and while the Department fully appreciates your anxiety with regard to the situation in Mexico City under the present distressing circumstances it feels strongly that the requirements of the general situation are such that it would be inadvisable to instruct you in the way you suggest. American Embassy, Mexico, February 15, 1913—7 p. m.

Referring to my February 14, midnight. In order to supplement the work done with Mr. Lascurain in our interview Friday morning [Feb. 14], I requested the British, German, and Spanish Ministers to come to the Embassy last night to consider situation and resolve upon some action. Conference lasted from 1 o'clock in the morning until nearly 3. The opinion of the assembled colleagues was unanimous and clear that we should at once, even without instructions, request President Madero to resign in order to save further bloodshed and possible international complications, the idea being that the Executive Power should be turned over to Congress. The Spanish Minister was designated to bear to the President our joint views, it being understood that his representations, while frank, were to be in the way of advice and supposedly unofficial. This morning he went to the palace and entered slightly in advance of 30 Senators, who had come on a similar mission. He went over the points which had been discussed the night before and stated the conclusion which had been reached, saying that it was our unanimous opinion that the President should resign. The President replied that he did not recognize the right of diplomats to interfere in a domestic question; that he was the Constitutional President of Mexico and his resignation would involve the country in chaos; that he would never resign, but if necessary would die in defense of his rights as the legally elected President. At this moment the arrival of the 30 Senators was announced with the statement that they were coming to ask for his resignation. He replied, "Tontería!" and, after a hurried conversation, vanished through one of the doors. When the Senators entered they were told that the President had gone with General Huerta to examine firing points, and the Senators were obliged to return without seeing him. It appears that the Senate had voted that President Madero be asked to resign by a vote of 27 to 3 of those present, which is a majority but not a quorum. After leaving the palace some of the Senators harangued the populace, asking them to support the Legislative Power and to prevent the impending intervention of the United States, which was being demanded by the European Powers.

Mr. Lascurain had worked very hard to bring this movement about, and the attitude of the President moved him so profoundly that he broke down and wept.

This morning a battery was sent to the block in which the Embassy is situated. The whole American colony, which is dependent on the Embassy for almost everything at this moment, became panic-stricken. I wrote a courteous note to Huerta asking him to remove the battery to another part of the city. He sent me a very courteous reply, saying that orders in compliance with my request had been issued, and that the battery had been removed.

The German Minister has come to tell me the Federals are now being maneuvered so as to fire over the foreign residential district against the citadel; also that the French school which I have filled with women and children had been filled with Federals, and that a battery had been stationed there. He asked me to join him in a visit to Huerta and we have asked for a cessation of firing at 3.30, when we will take up the question of a daily armistice and of a definite limitation of the firing zone.

There is no question of removing Americans to a safer place. There is no safe place, and many of those in the worst districts refuse to leave their homes. The work of placing Americans and that of other committees goes on well. We have a temporary cable and post office, first aid to the injured, rescue and housing work, and quarter for the volunteer guard, as well as a branch of the Banco de Comercio. Our only point of weakness is defense, wherein I have not been able to secure entirely satisfactory results, on account of obstacles which the Department will recognize.

At the palace, much to our regret, we were taken to see the President, whom we [had] not asked to see, and it was only after repeated requests that we were allowed to have an interview and then only in the presence of Mr. Lascurain.

I asked, first, that the military dispositions of the Government forces be so made as not to require firing on the citadel over the residential quarter; second, that a free zone be established around the Embassy, which should be treated not only as an embassy but also as a humanitarian establishment; third, that the Government unite with an American committee for establishing centers for distribution of bread for the poor; fourth, that firing soldiers [located] on certain American buildings and public buildings, and especially on one which I have made a general refuge, be removed; fifth, that an armistice of three hours be given to enable our rescue committee to take starving Americans in dangerous localities to safer ones; sixth, that an armistice of 12 hours be given to enable foreigners to leave Mexico by train.

All of these demands were finally agreed to by General Huerta and the President.

The President submitted to me a telegram he had sent to President Taft; a considerable part of it was misleading and inexact and I so informed him. The President also attempted to convince me that the situation in the country at large was at variance with the information I have received. There was a noticeable effort to prevent our talking alone with General Huerta.

The President received the following telegram on February 14, at 9 p. m., from President Madero:

[Translation.]

I have been informed that the Government over which Your Excellency worthily presides has ordered warships to Mexican coasts with troops to be disembarked to come to this capital to give protection to Americans. Undoubtedly the information which you have and which has caused you so to determine is erroneous or exaggerated, since the lives of the Americans in this capital will be in no danger if they quit the firing zone and concentrate themselves at certain places in the city and in suburban towns in which there is absolute tranquillity and in which the Government can give them every measure of protection. If you will instruct Americans resident in the capital to do this, according to the practice established by one of your former messages, all danger to the lives of American and foreign residents will be avoided. With regard to material damages to property, the Government does not hesitate to accept all the responsibility imposed upon it by international law.

I request, then, that Your Excellency order your ships not to disembark troops, since this will cause a conflagration with consequences inconceivably more vast than that which it is desired to remedy. I assure Your Excellency that the Government is taking all measures to the end that the rebels in the citadel shall do the least damage possible and I have hopes that soon everything will be settled. It is true that my country is passing at this moment through a terrible trial, and the disembarkation of American forces would only make the situation worse; and, through a lamentable error, the United States would do a terrible wrong to a nation which has always been a loyal friend, and will tend to make more difficult the reestablishment in Mexico of a democratic government similar to that of the great American nation. I appeal to the sentiments of equity and justice which have been the rule of your Government and which undoubtedly represent the feelings of the great American people over whose destinies you have presided with such skill.

This evening the Mexican Embassy has presented a note embodying the following instruction from the Mexican Government:

[Translation.]

At the suggestion of Ambassador Wilson, with a part of the Diplomatic Corps. one of its members was commissioned to request President Madero to resign in order to solve the present conflict in the city. The President refused to recognize the right of the diplomatic representatives who had come to-gether to interfere in the domestic affairs of the nation and informed them that he was resolved to die at his post before permitting foreign interference. Ambassador, in view of local circumstances, will try, perhaps, to disembark marines, and this will produce an unnecessary international conflict of terrible consequences. It is urgent, therefore, to avoid disembarkation. We will give all possible protection to Americans and their interests.

The President before replying would like to know as soon as possible just what the Embassy has said to the Mexican Government regarding the landing of forces and what part the Embassy had in the reported request to President Madero in regard to resigning, made by a part of the Diplomatic Corps.

President Taft: to President Madero.

[Telegram.]

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 16, 1913.

From Your Excellency's telegram, which reached me the 14th, it appeared that Your Excellency was somewhat misinformed as to the policy of the United States toward Mexico, which has been uniform for two years, or as to the naval or other measures thus far taken, which are measures of natural precaution. The Ambassador telegraphs that when you were good enough to show him your telegram to me he pointed out this fact. Your Excellency must, therefore, be aware that the reports which appear to have reached you that orders have already been given to land forces were inaccurate. The Ambassador, who is fully informed, is nevertheless being again instructed to afford you any desired information. Fresh assurances of friendship to Mexico are unnecessary after two years of proofs of patience and good will.

In view of the special friendship and relations between the two countries I can not too strongly impress upon Your Excellency the vital importance of the early establishment of that real peace and order which this Government has so long hoped to see, both because American citizens and their property must be protected and respected, and also because this nation sympathizes deeply with the afflictions of the Mexican people.

In reciprocating the anxiety shown by Your Excellency's message I feel it my duty to add sincerely and without reserve that the course of events during the past two years, culminating in the present most dangerous situation, creates in this country extreme pessimism and the conviction that the present paramount duty is the prompt relief of the situation.

Department's February 15, midnight. Although the Embassy's February 14, 2 p. m., February 15, 11 a. m., February 15, 7 p. m., ¹Printed in telegram of February 15, midnight, from the Secretary of State to the Ambassador.

²Telegram of February 15, 11 p. m.

February 15, 11 p. m., would seem to have covered the Department's inquiry, I may say in amplification thereof that in the interview with Mr. Lascurain on Friday [Feb. 14] he asked me in a purely offhand and friendly way whether our Government had any intention of landing troops in Mexico. I replied that I had received no instructions in that matter and had no authority therein, but that he must understand that it was possible that European powers were bringing pressure upon the Government and that if the situation here grew to be intolerable, involving great danger to foreign nationals, my Government would necessarily have to consider the question of obtaining that protection which the Mexican Government seemed unable to give. It was distinctly understood at that time that we were talking man to man and entirely outside of official relations. I have not mentioned the intentions of our Government on any other occasion except that of my visit with the German Minister to the palace, when, as recited to him, my February 15, 11 p. m., the President expressed the hope that we would not land marines, [I] replied simply that I had no instructions and no authority in the matter. This afternoon I visited Mr. Lascurain and recalled the character of our interview to him. He agreed with me in every particular and said that if I would address a note to him he would reply in accordance with our understanding. I accordingly wrote such a note, marked it purely personal and unofficial, and dispatched it to him by Mr. Tennant, asking for a reply. Notwithstanding the personal character of the note Mr. Lascurain said that he could not reply without consulting with the President, asking Mr. Tennant to return at 7.30. Mr. Tennant went at 7.30. Mr. Lascurain, apparently much excited, asked for a further delay until morning.

I may say, in regard to President Madero's telegram, that it is irregular, false, and misleading, and that, having informed him so, I may also inform the Department to the same effect. My colleagues, who united with me in sending a representation to the President relative to his resignation, desire me to express their entire disapproval of the President's telegram in so far as the same relates to the nature of their representation, as it was fully understood both by the President and my colleagues that their representations were friendly and unofficial. They intend to so inform their Governments. I shall greatly appreciate and believe it to be of real importance that the President, in his reply to the President of Mexico, will sharply rebuke the scarcely veiled attack on this Embassy, which is endeavoring to do its full duty in a trying situation; and also that the note of Mexican Embassy may be rebuked as false, misleading, and entirely irregular in the diplomatic conference exchanges between governments.

Although only the representatives of the great powers have acted with me in these matters, we have the support of the entire Diplomatic Corps.

Department of State, Washington, February 17, 1913—2 a.m.

Your February 15, 7 p. m., February 15, 10 p. m., and February 15, 11 p. m., appear to cover in the main the questions asked in the Department's February 15, midnight, and therefore before the receipt of your reply the President is now telegraphing to President Madero the following reply, which is quoted for your information and guidance: [Here follows the telegram from the President dated

February 16; see ante.]

The action of certain Mexican Senators in exciting the crowds by stories of intervention, supposedly with the object of influencing Madero to yield, causes the President to fear danger to Americans. But I apprehend that a too emphatic denial might possibly destroy the sobering effect of the idea that intervention in certain contingencies could not be avoided. On the other hand, messages from various sources indicate that President Madero has telegraphed widely over Mexico an intimation that the landing of American forces has been ordered. This, like his circulation of the unauthorized Associated Press statement reported in your telegram of February 15, 10 p. m., to the effect that there would be no intervention unless Americans were wantonly slaughtered, appears to be part of his effort to manipulate to his own advantage Mexican opinion as to this Government's attitude. These false reports present the same danger and the same problem. Accordingly, with your full knowledge of the President's policy and your intimate knowledge of the local situation, it is left to you to deal with this whole matter of keeping Mexican opinion, both official and unofficial, in a salutary equilibrium between a dangerous and exaggerated apprehension and a proper degree of wholesome fear.

You may publicly and officially state that the telegram of President Madero regarding American intervention is entirely misleading; that President Madero has been informed of his error; that the fact is that the policy of the United States remains unchanged, that no American forces have been landed in Mexico, and that no action has been taken except on the principles set forth in the Department's public statement to the press, which was telegraphed you on February 10 and on February 11, 4 p. m. The marines ordered to Guantánamo today are being sent on exactly the same principle, namely, as a measure of natural precaution.

My telegram of February 17, 1 a. m. I received this morning from Lascurain a note in which he states that he regrets very much that the incident referred to ever occurred; that I had stated to him on the 14th that I had no control over the marines and had not asked for their landing; that the Mexican Government were much worried by the reports of the imminence of the landing, and that this increased when the Diplomatic Corps suggested that the President resign; that the telegram to the Mexican Embassy' was sent for the purpose of avoiding an international conflict and the disembarkation, which could be authorized only as result of my reports; and, finally, that the scope of the telegram depended upon future conditions which might cause European powers to ask the Government of the United States to protect their nationals.

In other words, the President of Mexico knew that this note was

Know ye that the Congress of this State has decreed as follows:

The XXII Constitutional Congress of the free, independent and sovereign State of Coahuila de Zaragoza decrees:

Number 1421.

Article 1. General Victoriano Huerta is not recognized in his character of Chief of the Executive Power of the Republic, which he alleges to have been conferred upon him by the Senate; and none of his acts and orders in that capacity are recognized.

Article 2. Extraordinary powers are granted to the Executive of the State in all the branches of the Public Administration in order that he may suppress any that he may see fit to suppress and in order that he may proceed to arm forces to aid in the support of constitutional order in the Republic.

Let the Governments of the other States and the Chiefs of the Federal Forces, Rurales and Auxiliaries of the Federation be urged to second the attitude of the Government of this State.

Done in the Hall of Sessions of the Congress of the State this nineteenth day of February, 1913.

14. It is quite evident that the public believes that the storm is over. The city has been quiet all day, though many looters were abroad last night. There are very few people about the Embassy. The storm may or may not be over, according as Díaz and Huerta continue to work in accord. To that end I am now devoting myself.

The originals of the two agreements made between Huerta and Díaz last night are on record in this Embassy. These documents provide for the convening of Congress, name the new Cabinet, stipulate the election by Congress of General Huerta as Provisional President, and contain various other provisions for the maintenance of order throughout the Republic. There are three agreements which I stipulated but which are not reduced to writing, viz: (1) The release of the Madero Ministers; (2) The liberty of the press and an uncensored telegraph service; (3) Joint action between the two generals for the maintenance of order in this city. Congress is now in session; I imagine its ratification of the agreement made in the Embassy last night will be little more than a matter of form.

The President and Vice President are still in the guardhouse of the palace, as are Generals Delgado, Angeles, and the Minister of War. The report was current early this morning that Gustavo Madero

General Huerta stated that, inasmuch as the situation of Mr. Madero's Government was unsustainable and in order to prevent further bloodshed and out of feelings of national traternity, he had made prisoners of Mr. Madero, his Cabinet, and other persons; and that he desires to express his good wishes to General Díaz to the effect that the elements represented by him might fraternize and, all united, save the present distressful situation.

General Díaz stated that his movements have had no other object than to serve the national welfare, and that accordingly he is ready to make any sacrifice which might redound to the benefit of the country.

After discussions had taken place on the subject among all those present as mentioned above, the following was agreed on:

First. From this time on, the Executive Power which has held sway is deemed not to exist and is not recognized, the elements represented by Generals Díaz and Huerta pledging themselves to prevent by all means any attempt to restore said Power.

Second. Endeavor will be made as soon as possible to adjust the existing situation under the best possible legal conditions, and Generals Díaz and Huerta will make every effort to the end that the latter may within seventy-two hours assume the Provisional Presidency of the Republic with the following Cabinet:

The Army invites the people, on whom it counts, to continue in the noble attitude of respect and moderation which it has observed up to the present, and it likewise invites all revolutionary bands to unite in order to confirm the national peace.

FELIX V. HUERTA. I went to see General Huerta this afternoon to get guaranties for public order and to learn the exact situation. He gave me satisfactory assurances and explained that Gustavo Madero had been killed by soldiers, without orders. General Huerta said that the President and Gustavo Madero had twice tried to assassinate him and had held him a prisoner for one day. He asked my advice as to whether it was best to send the ex-President out of the country or place him in a lunatic asylum. I replied that he ought to do that which was best for the peace of the country.

18. The installation of the Provisional Government, with the personnel indicated in my No. 16 of February 19, 7 p. m., took place amid great popular demonstrations of approval. A wicked despotism has fallen, but what the future contains can not now be safely predicted. The new Government will be inaugurated this afternoon and General Díaz will immediately turn over his forces to the Federal Government. So far no other executions than those reported to the Department have come to the knowledge of the Embassy. At the request of the wife of the ex-President I visited General Huerta today, in company with the German Minister, and unofficially requested that the utmost precaution be taken to prevent the taking of his life or the life of the Vice President, except by due process of law. General Huerta replied that he would have sent the President and Vice President out of the country last night but feared to assume the responsibility, in view of the possibility of an attack on the train. He said that every precaution was being taken to guard the life of these two persons and that they would probably be tried, but upon what charges he did not state. Madero, the Vice President and some generals are still confined in the National Palace, and I understand Madero is being severely treated. This feature of the situation I think should be brought to the attention of the President: I suggest that instructions be sent for me to deal unofficially with General Díaz in the matter of reprisals as an intermediary with General Huerta. I urgently recommend the retention of all American warships in Mexican waters until further advices. bassy considers that the question of the retention of the vessels should not be left to the discretion of the commanders, who, although competent to judge the situation in the particular ports where they are stationed, which immediately become quiet from their presence, can not have the same sources of information which are available to the Embassy regarding general conditions in Mexico. The presence of our ships has undoubtedly prevented serious trouble in the last few days.

I have this moment had word from Huerta that the ceremonies had just taken place and that everything was going on well. The revolution is now complete as far as the City of Mexico is concerned.

He requested that I advise the American Government that his opposition meant a revolution of far more import than the country had previously experienced. As the Governor is a man of force and of no mean ability his position was to be taken seriously. Governor Carranza is one of Mexico's ablest officials, and I believe a man of strict integrity.

The trains for Monterey and Piedras Negras were not permitted to leave Saltillo this morning. The Governor further said that no trains would be allowed to move in any direction without his special order. To this I verbally protested on the ground that American citizens must not be cut off from exit from the country. I insisted further that the main line of the National Railroad must be opened to Vanegas in order that marooned Americans could leave that part of the country. This he positively and emphatically declined to do, but proposed that he furnish me such special trains from Saltillo under military escort to Eagle Pass at such times as I should request. My interview with Governor was held at the National Telegraph office, where I found him personally in charge. He informed me that he had taken charge of all federal offices in Saltillo for the time and had instructed the officials to report to him.

After this interview I had a conference with the British Vice Consul about affairs of mutual interest to our respective countries. In a short while we called into the conference citizens of other countries. After some discussion it was decided that a special train for Eagle Pass should be requested of the Governor for nine o'clock the next morning and that all foreigners should be notified. As an engagement between the opposing forces appeared to be at least 48 hours off this would give ample time for those who wished to do so to get out of the way and across the border.

With the assistance of the Vice Consul, Mr. Silliman, all Americans were promptly given notice to assemble at the American Consulate at 2 p. m. today. In the meantime alarm had spread to the Mexicans and the business men became interested and sent a committee to see the Governor and to inform him that he did not have the support of the people in his attitude.

Promptly at 12 o'clock the Governor sent for me, stating that he had special information which he wanted to communicate to me immediately. Within a few minutes I was at the palace and received personally the Governor's announcement. He stated that he had completely changed his attitude as he had received a telegram from General Huerta to the effect that the resignations of President Madero and Vice President Suárez had been properly presented to the Mexican Congress and had been duly accepted. That he had raised opposition to the new administration was due to the unconstitutional deposition of the President, so he stated; and that as his cause for opposition had been removed he felt it his duty to accept and support General Huerta.

Within an hour the news had percolated through the entire city. The news was telegraphed to the towns within the State. The meeting of Americans at the Consulate was called off, the special train abandoned and the city has apparently settled down to peace and quiet.

25. In view of the statements and tenor of your recent telegrams, the Department is disposed to consider the new Provisional Government as being legally established and to believe that it apparently intends to reestablish peace and order throughout Mexico, and to hope that it has the support of the majority of the Mexican people. It will, however, be evident to those now in responsible control in Mexico that, especially in view of the situation which has prevailed for the past two years or more, this Government must very carefully consider the question of their ability and earnest disposition to comply with the rules of international law and comity, the obligations of treaties, and the general duties to foreigners and foreign governments incidental to international intercourse.

You are instructed, therefore, to say to those seeking recognition as the new Provisional Government that the Government of the United States will be glad to receive assurances that the outstanding questions between this country and Mexico, which, among other things, have done so much to mar the relations between the two Governments, which should be so especially friendly, will be dealt with in a satisfactory manner. These questions and the grievances of this Government against Mexico are set forth in general terms in the Department's note of September 15, 1912, to which the attention of the new Provisional Government should be invited.

In the interest of definiteness, however, and for the sake of an unequivocal understanding, the Department desires you to say that the questions which it is most necessary and desirable to have dealt with and got out of the way are as follows:

This Government desires settlement of the Tlahualilo controversy at the earliest possible date, either by direct agreement between the Mexican Government and the Tlahualilo Co. or by a submittal of this question to arbitration;

It desires settlement of the question of the Chamizal tract by direct agreement between the two countries:

It desires that the immediate matters regarding the equitable distribution of the waters of the Colorado River be arranged for by convention:

That the border claims growing out of battles at Aguaprieta and Juárez in 1911 be settled on the terms and according to the arrangement suggested by this Government after full consideration and arrival at the conviction that the requests made of the Mexican Government are just and fair;

That the Alamo murders be settled by the payment of $10,000 for each of the murdered men, and the prompt punishment of the guilty parties;

That the administration of justice throughout Mexico shall be raised to such a plane that this Government will no longer be compelled, by manifestly unfair and improper action on the part of certain Mexican courts, to make diplomatic representations in favor of its unjustly treated nationals;

And, finally, but most important, that the Mexican Government agree in principle to the settlement of all claims resulting from the loss of life by American citizens and damages to American property on account of the recent political disturbances in Mexico by presentation thereof to a mixed international commission which shall award damages therefor.

You will point out that no greater assurance could be given of a disposition to cement and maintain friendly relations with this Government than to give the assurances which you are above instructed to secure.

I believe that I can secure the results aimed at by the Department without resorting to the refusal of full recognition or of [sic] the course of taking the matter up with General Huerta directly. The Department will probably recall that my relations with De la Barra are extremely intimate, as I have known him for more than 12 years. I shall not commit our Government further or take any additional steps until I have had an interview with De la Barra, which he arranged on Monday [the 24th]. This Government understands that I expect something to be done immediately and there seems to be every disposition to be grateful to the Embassy for its good offices to bring about termination of the conflict. Department of State, Washington, February 22, 1913—12 midnight.

28. By direction of the President the Fifth Brigade of the Army, comprising about 5,000 men, will proceed from Fort Omaha to Galveston. This movement is merely one of the measures of precaution previously determined upon on account of the disturbances in Mexico, and represents no change whatever in the policy of this Government. Should you be questioned regarding the movement, or find it necessary to correct false interpretations which might disturb the present satisfactory equilibrium of Mexican opinion, or unduly alarm Americans in Mexico, you will explain the movement as it is above explained to you, and point out that it is only a matter of routine. In this connection the President has today issued the following statement:

The movement of troops is merely to bring a brigade to Galveston, to which place four transports had already been ordered as a mere precautionary measure because of unsettled conditions in Mexico. It is not prompted by any recent news from Mexico, and is only part of the reasonable precautions directed to be taken some time ago, in which the sending of battleships to the various ports in Mexico was the first step. The sending of four transports and two brigades to Galveston is the next and final step.

Last evening while Messrs. Francisco I. Madero and José Ma. Pino Suárez were being taken from the National Palace to the Penitentiary as prisoners for trial on various charges, two groups of armed men attempted to release the prisoners and twice attacked the escort. There was a fight in which five persons, among them Messrs. Madero and Pino, lost their lives. The Government marked the event for thorough judicial investigation so as to clear up every circumstance. The late functionaries will be buried with the honors due the offices they held. The Federal Government is recognized and supported by nearly all Governors including former Maderistas; general yearning and well-founded hopes for restoration of peace. Representatives of foreign nations manifest sentiments friendly to the Government. Public opinion tranquil and optimistic.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 23, 1913.

Developments in Mexico since the 9th Your telegram of the 23d. of February have so altered the situation in that country that it is radically different from what it was in October last, when, under date of October 2, this Department addressed to you a communication 2 regarding the desirability of arresting and detaining, so far as warranted by law, all Mexican insurrectionists who might find their way onto United States territory.

This Department is persuaded to think, by the latest official reports from Mexico City and particularly by the character of the selections for the Cabinet of those now in control and establishing a de facto government, that those in control seriously desire to harmonize all conflicting elements in Mexico, and the Department is disposed to see in the selection of David de la Fuente for Minister of Communications an effort to secure the allegiance and support of followers of Orozco and insurrectionists in northern Mexico generally.

The overthrow of the Madero administration and the establishment of the present de facto authority casts a certain measure of Federal character over former insurrectionists, and especially so if they show a disposition to adhere to the new de facto régime, and it appeals forcibly to this Department that the wisest policy at the present juncture is not in any way to frustrate the efforts of the de facto authorities in this regard (as might be the effect if obstacles should prevent De la Fuente from going at once to Mexico City) and I

It is further suggested that they be required—if and when the permission is given—to remain no longer on United States territory than is reasonably necessary to make the journey from Columbus to Juárez.

I think we are on the eve of the procurement of peace, except perhaps in the districts immediately south of Mexico City, where the Government informed me they do not intend to negotiate but to suppress all disorders with a firm hand, sparing no violators of the law, and furnishing an immediate proof to the world of the stability and vigor of the present administration. I urge the Department to inform the American public of the friendly disposition of this Government toward the United States and of the activity which it is displaying in restoring order; also of the fact that one of the last acts of Madero was to send out telegrams to all the governors which amounted to an incitement against American residents in Mexico. The Secretary of the British Legation believes his Government will not recognize the Provisional Government on account of the murder of Madero. This would be a great error, endangering the present Government, upon which the safety of all foreigners depends. Mr. de la Barra informed me to-day that in a meeting which occurred at the palace immediately after the death of Madero he stated to the President that unless he were convinced that Madero had not been murdered with the connivance of the Government he would immediately resign with two of his colleagues. He added that he was convinced and that he had therefore given out the statement published by the Associated Press. to and complied with.

Before receiving this reply I had an interview with De la Barra, wherein he agreed to use his best efforts to procure an immediate solution of all pending matters in a manner satisfactory to the Government of the United States. I urged him to take such action as would bring satisfactory results before the new American administration should take office, in order that it might not be embarrassed by having to deal with questions which so nearly concern the good relations between the two countries. He promised that, after having received instructions from the President, he would proceed to the solution of all difficulties except the Chamizal matter, which was being treated through the Embassy in Washington. He promised to send an immediate instruction to the Embassy touching these matters and to say also that the new ambassador who will be shortly appointed would have full authority to arrange the Chamizal matter in a satisfactory way.

In my communication to General Huerta I said that we ask nothing of Mexico which we would not cheerfully accord on our part under similar circumstances, and I have recited the history of the discussions which have taken place. The Acting Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the Vásquez Gómez Provisional Government to the Secretary of State.

[Translation.]

Palomas, Chihuahua, February 25, 1913.

TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA:

The Provisional President of the Revolution of the United Mexican States has ordered me to inform your excellency, through the Received March 6; communicated to the Ambassador March 17; filed March 21.

Department of Foreign Affairs of the Provisional Government, for the purpose of convincing the Government and people whom you represent, of the formation and existence of the Provisional Government of Mexico, and of the functions which it is performing, all for the proper purposes.

The principal purpose of the Revolution begun in 1910 was to meet urgent needs existing among the Mexican people. It was proposed, by the powerful hand of the nation, to store up the great quantities of water which flow through our territory; to buy up large tracts of uncultivated land for the purpose of dividing and distributing it among the poor farmers in order to form a system of small agricultural holdings and in this way bring under cultivation the large tracts of arable land which we have in Mexico and which is now of no use to any one; and furthermore to develop agricultural instruction among our inhabitants in order to fit them for the struggle for existence, thus elevating their intellectual, moral and economic condition.

The triumph of the revolutionary arms in May, 1911, established new officials, but as they did not proceed to satisfy the aforementioned needs, the armed revolution continued its course against the new high officials, at the head of whom was Francisco I. Madero.

After various events which it is unnecessary to relate in this note, whatever may be their importance, General José Inez Salazar, Commander in Chief of the revolutionary forces of the North, and his lieutenants, saw fit to call upon the candidate of the Revolution for the sane and honorable purpose of forming a Provisional Government in order to organize the revolutionary forces, direct the policy of the Revolution, and enact laws by which to solve the agrarian problem, that is, the storing up of our waters, the formation of small agricultural holdings, and the practical education of the Mexican people in the labors which will fit the members thereof for the struggle for existence. Consequently, upon the arrival of the candidate at this camp, the principal members of the revolutionary forces met and made the following declaration for the purposes indicated:

Licenciado Emilio Vásquez Gómez is hereby declared Provisional President of the United Mexican States, to preside over and direct the affairs of the Revolution and enact laws relating to the agrarian problem, being empowered immediately to form a Cabinet composed of such persons as he may deem suitable, all for the purpose of carrying on the Revolution according to the plan of San Luis as revised at Tacubaya and Villa de Ayala, directing the domestic and foreign policy of the Revolution. Second: It was resolved to communicate this to all the revolutionists of the Republic.

With a view to carrying out the mission intrusted to it, the Provisional Government, through the proper executive departments, has enacted various measures the chief of which are the following:

1. Confirmation of General José Inés Salazar as Supreme Commander of the revolutionary forces of the North.

2. Rules to govern the revolutionary forces, prescribing [etc.]

3. Decree opening to foreign commerce the customhouse of Palomas.

4. Law organizing all persons confined in jails for common-law crimes, in order to execute the works connected with storing up waters throughout the national territory.

5. Law imposing on the Provisional Government, when the Revolution triumphs, the obligation to buy up uncultivated lands and divide and distribute them so as to introduce a system of small agricultural holdings throughout the Republic.

I inclose a copy of all these decrees, and as your excellency will see, the existence and operation of the Provisional Government of the Revolution in the United Mexican States is an actual fact. two important circumstances, the orderly and regular movement of its forces, the guaranties which it gives to all persons and interests within the jurisdiction under its sway, and the tremendous benefit which it procures to the Mexican people and all persons residing in the country by solving the agrarian problem in the way it does, cause the Provisional Government of the Revolution to exert the only powerful influence on the public mind of the country.

The City of Mexico alone is excepted from this influence, but this is due solely to the violence of the events which have just occurred in that city.

What has been stated, and the honesty and morality which characterize the conduct of both the officials and the forces of the Provisional Government, which moreover exclusively dominate a considerable area of territory, suggest the suitability of its being recognized just as every government is recognized which operates honorably and with high purpose in behalf of the people and of humanity.

The undersigned hopes that your excellency will kindly give an account of this note to your Government for all proper purposes.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico, February 26, 1913-4 p. m.

46. I have the honor to submit the following for the consideration of the President and the Secretary of State.

The Government of Madero during its entire existence was anti-American; neither appeals nor veiled threats affected it in its incomprehensible attitude; during the last three, and perhaps six, months of its existence it presented the aspect of a despotism infinitely worse than that which existed under General Díaz. Though the new Government resulted from an armed revolution and at certain critical stages events occurred for which the responsibility has not yet been definitely fixed, and which must be deplored by the civilized opinion of the world, it nevertheless assumed office according to the usual constitutional precedents, and therefore is, in my opinion, clothed with the form of a representative Provisional Gov-The new administration is evidently approved and accepted by Mexican public opinion and especially by the more respectable part thereof; it is equally approved and accepted by the foreign elements in Mexico; the Cabinet is united, active, and moderate in its policy, acting in full concert with the President, with prevailing public opinion, and with the army. Anti-American sentiment has almost entirely disappeared and the new Government is showing decided pro-American proclivities. The prospects for settlement of all of our existing complaints against Mexico in a prompt and just way are excellent. If this Government can not be maintained, chaos must inevitably result and the demands and necessity for intervention could hardly be resisted.

Moved by these considerations, which I believe to be also entertained by my colleagues, I am endeavoring in all possible ways, and frequently on my own responsibility, to aid this Government to establish itself firmly and to procure the submission and adhesion of all elements in the Republic. It is assumed that in the course which I have adopted I have the approval of the Department of State and the President, and an expression to that effect will enable me to proceed with great vigor and more confidence in a delicate question, work which I believe to be not only in the interest of our Government but also in the interest of the peace of this continent.

Following received this date from commonding officer, Eagle Pass:

"Colonel Carranza informed Consul Ellsworth, Piedras Negras, today that he would open customhouse and other Government offices in name of Carranza at once and that he was expecting to defend town against Huerta forces. Guard of Federal soldiers who came in with railway pay car were disarmed today and confined. Rebel authorities closed bridge last night after nine o'clock. Forty mounted men left last night to occupy towns above here in name of Carranza. Conditions quiet on both sides river. Fully two thousand refugees now in Eagle Pass. Have placed guard on both bridges and patrol in town to aid local authorities in case of stampede from Piedras Negras, looked for at any time. Commanding Officer Clark has sent additional troops today. This gives ample force to handle any situation that may arise here. Rudolph and Gabriel Madero, brothers of late President, arrived here today coming overland."

59. With practical unanimity the American press treated as inadequate the explanations made by the Huerta régime in regard to the death of Madero and Pino Suárez, and is consequently expressing its horror thereat. Having by inadequate precautions made possible that horrible occurrence those responsible can not expect to escape public suspicion, and this Department is naturally obliged to decline to express itself on that painful subject pending the results of the promised thorough judicial investigation. The Embassy will, of course, perceive the necessity of extreme circumspection and the importance of bearing clearly in mind the reserved attitude which this Government is maintaining in the present situation.

The Department is giving rather fully to the press the substance of the Embassy's reports on the situation and will also explain it to the British Embassy here.

The policy of the President as to recognition, which has already been made so clear to the Embassy, seems to call at present for no more specific instructions as to the course to be pursued, unless it be to point out to the Embassy that the exact forms of correspondence and modes of address, whether they be maintained as usual or whether the de facto officials be addressed by name with et ceteras added, are not in themselves very material so long as the exact attitude of the United States and the theory upon which it is dealing with the Mexican authorities is made quite clear to them. They are,

The Government of the United States is in de facto relations for the purpose of transacting all business with those in de facto control, who are the only effective authority in evidence. Whether the recent resignations under duress and the subsequent proceedings of the Mexican Congress suffice under the Mexican law to clothe the present régime with such de jure status as attached to the interim government of De la Barra is a question into which the Government of the United States is not now obliged to enter.

A distinction may be drawn between de facto relations with a de facto government and formal recognition of such government, just as the same distinction may be drawn between de facto relations with and formal recognition of a normal and permanent government. Formal recognition would in either case require some formal act of recognition, as, for example, the formal reply to a note announcing the new government or the receiving or accrediting of an ambassador. Any such formal act of recognition is to be avoided just at the present. In the meantime this Government is considering the question in the light of the usual tests applied to such cases, important among which are the question of the degree to which the population of Mexico acquiesce in and assent to the new régime and the question of disposition and ability to protect foreigners and their interests and to respond to all international obligations.

Just now the issuance by the Department of a public statement on the subject of the recognition question appears to the Department to be unnecessary.

The Department realizes, of course, that the paramount interests of the Government of the United States, namely, the safety of American citizens and their interests in Mexico, will be subserved by the consolidation of warring factions. Therefore, directions have been given to relieve the movements of De la Fuente and others from the various restrictions which surrounded them under the neutrality statutes while the former Government, against which they were in revolt, was still in control. This will enable them to confer and to repair to Mexico City by way of the United States.

The question of the propriety of some modification of your telegram to all consular officers in Mexico, quoted in the Embassy's No. 31, February 23, 6 p. m., will doubtless have suggested itself to you. The present instruction is intended to supplement the Department's recent instruction and to be responsive also to the Embassy's telegrams of the last few days.

58. Mr. de la Barra began our interview today by saying that he wished our conversation to be considered as friendly and unofficial and not for a moment binding the Provisional Government in any wise, as it was simply an exchange of ideas to lead to a definite settlement.

He first took up the Chamizal case. * * * *1

As I started to leave he expressed the hope that in view of the earnest efforts the Provisional Government was making to meet our wishes and to establish order our ships might be retired from Mexican waters and our activity on the border moderated.

I replied that our military preparedness had no reference to the question between Mexico and my Government, but was aimed solely to afford protection to Americans and other foreigners in the event that the naval force was not able to meet its obligations.

I added, further, that if it should become evident that I could not accomplish promptly and effectively the instructions of my Government in these matters I intended to tender my resignation, as I had been working for two years to get justice and was not disposed to wait two weeks longer.

This latter statement seemed to cause a profound impression, as I intended it should.

The following report of firing across the border on March 2 near Douglas has just been received:

While patrolling two miles west of Douglas, Lieutenant W. C. F. Nicholson with three men was fired on by forty or fifty Mexicans from a point across. the boundary. The lieutenant with his men rode toward them merely to investigate which side of the boundary the Mexicans fired from. He made no hostile demonstration but before he had an opportunity to speak to them they fired about fifty shots at him from about ten yards. Sixteen other patrols came up to support Nicholson, having heard the shots. Nicholson thereupon returned the fire, held his position, and was later reinforced by Troops E and F, Ninth Cavalry, Captain Armstrong; these troops also fired on the Mexicans, who retreated, firing, and were finally dispersed in disorder. At least a thousand shots were interchanged. At least six Mexicans killed. No American casualties.

I arrived during the engagement, with Inspector of Immigration Heath, Deputy Marshal Hopkins and my Secretary, and can vouch for the infor-

Morrison,
United States Attorney.

You may say to the Government that the information received by the Department seems to show that the aggressors were the Mexican troops and the action of the United States troops was the perfectly justifiable action of repelling what is known in international law as foreign invasion of national territory.

For any discreet use that may seem necessary, you are informed that although Colonel Guilfoyle had ordered patrols if fired upon to return fire and pursue regardless of international boundary, the following instructions have been sent him by General Bliss in command of the army headquarters at San Antonio, Texas.

In case of intentional firing from Mexican side upon persons on the American side your proposed action in using rifle fire when necessary to stop such shooting is approved. If the firing from Mexican side consists of random shots accidentally reaching our side you will use every proper means to induce citizens to temporarily withdraw from zone of fire but you will not in any event send or allow any armed American troops to cross the border without specific instructions to that effect from these headquarters or the War Department. Keep these headquarters fully advised of the situation and report any important action taken by you.

With reference to the Department's past telegrams on the subject of the situation at Cananea and elsewhere in northern Sonora, you should impress upon the administration at Mexico City the paramount necessity of taking steps adequate to control the situation in that section. The Department is apprehensive that if feeling should run unusually high as a result of the apparently quite unwarranted and deplorable action of the Mexican troops near Douglas, the safety of Americans and American interests in northern Sonora will be seriously jeopardized and that a situation may be created which will be most difficult for this Government to deal with and which may permanently injure the administration at Mexico City and materially retard, if not quite frustrate for the present, the efforts to control and pacify the northwestern region of Mexico.

The American Consul at Ciudad Porfirio Díaz to the Secretary of State.

[Telegram—Extract.]

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Ciudad Porfirio Díaz, March 4, 1913.

The Governor of Coahuila, Carranza, has submitted to the Consulate at Saltillo a proposition directed to the American Embassy demanding the resignation of the Chief Executive of the Provisional Government and suggesting Lascurain for President. It will be transmitted.

The Governor says he has 12,000 well armed men. He probably has half that number. There appears to be no longer any hope of the Governor submitting to the Provisional Government.

American Embassy, Mexico City, March 4, 1913.

General Felix Díaz called at the Embassy early this morning to pay his respects to the Ambassador and requested him to have the kindness to convey his hearty compliments and good wishes to His Excellency the President and the people of the United States on the inauguration day of a new administration. General Díaz said that while he had no official position he felt that inasmuch as he has at all times here a singere trional of the American people and a decided all times been a sincere friend of the American people and a decided admirer of American institutions, the example of which he considered of great value to the world and especially to the American countries, he could not refrain from reiterating the above sentiments on a day of so great significance to the people of the United States. The Embassy will be glad to deliver to General Díaz such reply as the President may care to make. WILSON.

77. The State of Coahuila appears to be the center of the most formidable opposition to the Provisional Government, and Carranza, the former governor, is in arms again, after repeated protests of loyalty, at the head of about 1,500 men. The Department will note that at the present time only Coahuila refuses submission to the Federal Provisional Government and that Sonora's position is undetermined. In the northern part of the State of Nuevo León some rebel bands are evidently cooperating with Carranza. The States which have submitted represent 90 per cent of the people of Mexico and order has been reestablished over three-fourths of the territory they represent. In order that the Department may not be misled by the character of Carranza's rebellion, I must inform it that he is not a Maderista, but constituted one of the league of northern governors, whose plans for the formation of an independent republic were interrupted by the Díaz revolution.

American Consulate, Hermosillo, March 6, 1913—5 p. m.

Fearing that the Provisional Government is entirely too weak to combat the situation in Sonora and can not send reenforcements, I have suggested to the Embassy that it would be good policy for the Provisional Government to withdraw all their troops from the State, as they are a menace instead of a protection. State troops will guarantee to restore peace and order in a week and also finish Yaqui campaign. After peace is restored will send a commission, consisting of members of Chambers of Commerce of Guaymas and Hermosillo, to Mexico to discuss recognition. I am positive that recognition can be brought about, otherwise bloodshed and the ruin of State for a long period, as uprising will be very great. All asked for is State rights, free and honest elections, and a payment State troops by Federal Government while in service. I have not heard from Embassy. Excitement is growing worse every minute and, with my suggestion, am sure we can establish peace and confidence as well as arrange matters.

I presented your instruction of March 7 to the Consul at Saltillo, in cipher, at the telegraph office. Colonel Carranza, chief of the State volunteers in this district, personally absolutely refused to forward it, and personally ordered the telegraph operator to refuse it. He told me that no telegram to consuls or others would be accepted if in cipher or any other code; that they would be transmitted only when in easily understood Spanish or English. I then sent to the telegraph office a telegram in plain English addressed to American Consul, Saltillo, covering your instructions of today relative to interruptions of telegram from Consulate and Embassy or Department, and that also was refused. The colonel was very abrupt and personally told me in Spanish that your instruction would not go forward because of its contents and he clearly understood that you are Secretary of State of the United States.

the revolutionary movement in the north terminated except in the State of Sonora. The attention of the Department should be sharply directed to Sonora and to Lower California, or international complications may be brought about by intrigues on both sides of the frontier.

If any of our consuls have inadvertently been sympathizing with local activities against the Federal Government for supposedly good motives they should, in my opinion, be instructed to avoid such complications and to work for submission to the Federal authorities, by which alone peace can be restored.

The American Consul at Saltillo to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

No. 175.]

American Consulate, Saltillo, March 11, 1913.

Sir: * * * Immediately after the announcement of General Huerta as the Provisional President, Governor Carranza, Governor of the State of Coahuila, denounced the new administration. He claimed to know that President Madero had not resigned and insisted that the Provisional President had unconstitutionally assumed the office of the Chief Executive. He held this attitude until noon of February 21.

On the morning of February 21 the Consul was emphatically informed by the Governor that he would not accept the Provisional President and that he would resist with armed forces. He had already demonstrated his purpose by recruiting and arming men.

When the Consul found that he could not prevail upon the Governor to accept the new order of affairs he requested a special train for the morning of February 22 to permit the foreigners to leave the disturbed district. This was readily granted. This conference was at 10.30. At 12 o'clock the Governor sent his carriage for the Consul and informed him that he, the Governor, had decided to accept the Provisional President. The Department and Embassy were notified of the Governor's acceptance in the telegraphic despatch of February

On February 22 the American Consul urged the Governor to issue a bulletin announcing his conformity with the new administration. The Governor gave his assurance that a bulletin would be issued as soon as a conference by telegraph, between the Governor and the Provisional President, had been completed. By the night of February 22 the situation became tense as the Governor had not issued the bulletin of acceptance. This was taken as very unfavorable as he had been apparently precipitate in issuing former bulletins.

On the night of February 22 this Consulate received the following telegram in code from the Embassy through the Consul General at

Monterey:

Our Ambassador instructs as follows:

"You are requested to inform all consular officers under your jurisdiction by telegraph as follows:

'Provisional Government installed yesterday with General Huerta as President. General public approval in the city, which is perfectly quiet. Reassuring reports come from other places. President Madero is a prisoner awaiting the decision of the Congress in his case. Senate and House of Representatives in full accord with the new administration. You should make this intelligence public and in the interest of Mexico urge general adhesion and submission to the new Government, which will be recognized by all foreign governments today.'"

The Consul called at the Palace on the morning of February 23 to deliver the Embassy's message to the Governor. At this conference the Governor stated that he had been perfectly willing to accept the Provisional Government, but while in conference by telegraph with the Provisional President, he, the Governor, had been cut off from communication by order of the Provisional President. The Governor requested the Consul to try to get into communication with the Embassy and in that way urge the Provisional President to open communication with him (the Governor). In pursuance of this request the Consul sent the following telegraphic despatch in code to the Embassy:

Federal Telegraph Office closed. You will receive this despatch by railroad wire. Governor advises me that his communication with Mexico has been cut by order of the President, and he believes federal troops are approaching to depose him. He reiterates to me his conformity with the new administration. I believe if the President deposes him, he will lose the strongest man in Northern Mexico and a serious mistake will be made.

At 3 p. m., after this telegraphic despatch was sent, Don Miguel Cárdenas, ex-Governor of the State of Coahuila, called at this Consulate to ascertain if any reply had been received. He called again at 5.30, but no reply had been received.

At 6.15 p. m. the Governor addressed a crowd from the Palace balcony, proclaiming his opposition to the Provisional Government, and left the city with his troops for Ramos Arizpe, twelve miles north-east, on the main line of the National Railroad. The following telegram was sent in code to the Embassy:

February 23, 10 p. m. From the Palace the Governor addressed a multitude this afternoon, the State troops being drawn up around plaza. At 6.15 he went north with a thousand heavily armed cavalry. His word for the Embassy and for Washington was that his overtures to the Government at Mexico had been ignored; that he did not propose to stay in Saltillo and meet the fate of Madero; that he would not resign but that he would go out into the open and fight. That the Government of Mexico was responsible. It is reported here that he will tonight meet and attack at some point north from here Federal troop train, which is reported to be en route from Monterey. It is reported that he will establish his capital at Monclova. The city tonight is in charge of the municipal authorities with hundred and fifty policemen.

This telegram was also sent to the Department but was returned the morning following with the statement that there was no communication with the United States.

On the morning of February 24 the Governor sent a detachment of 80 soldiers to Saltillo to force a loan of 40,000 pesos from the merchants. As soon as the merchants were apprised of this project the German, French and Spanish merchants severally and collectively sent committees to the American Consulate requesting that the Consul represent them in the matter. At a general conference of the merchants of the various nationalities, including Mexican merchants, the Municipal President appointed a committee of three Mexican merchants to confer with Governor Carranza as to the security he would give for this loan, whether the loan would be considered a loan to the State of Coahuila and so secured by the State. To this committee the Consul delivered a verbal message, to be transmitted to the Governor, requesting that he not make any demands upon the foreign merchants. On the morning of February 25 the Governor returned to the Palace and called for a conference with the Consul. In this conference the Consul was assured that this loan would not be forced from the foreign merchants and that at no future time would any demand be made upon the foreigners. The Consul is gratified to report that at no time did any foreigner contribute anything to the Governor or his officers.

In this conference the Consul again urged the Governor to respond to the general call for his acceptance of the Provisional Government. In a short while the Governor reassured the Consul that, if the Consul through the Embassy could induce the Provisional President to accept the Governor's conformity and would communicate with the Governor, either direct or through the Embassy, he would make terms. Subsequent to this interview the following telegram was sent to the Embassy:

February 25, 3 p. m. Referring to his relations with the Federal Government, the Governor requests me to say to the Embassy, as follows:

"The situation is serious and may come to conflict at any moment. Have been unable to communicate with General Huerta. My last message to him remains unanswered. I know the Government is moving forces against this State. This will be the beginning of a new war in the Republic."

I believe it would be advisable for the Embassy to counsel the President to communicate personally and immediately with the Governor, thereby avoiding a conflict with the combined northern States. He depends upon this Consulate and the Embassy to relieve the acute situation. I believe it would be consummate folly to send Federal troops here now. Governor requests that Embassy advise me whether President Madero has been killed as reported.

The Governor was told that in case any reply was received from the Embassy the Consul would immediately deliver it to him, either in Saltillo or at his camp, then at Arteaga, 10 miles east. At 5 p. m. the Governor informed the Consul that he had been apprised of approaching Federal troops and was forced to go out to engage them. The following telegraphic despatch was sent to the Department and Embasy:

February 25, 5 p. m. Governor Carranza has left to engage Federal troops, within ten miles. Fighting reported to have begun. Ex-Governor Cardenas left an hour ago with a fiag of truce. All hope of peaceful settlement aban-

As no replies to these despatches to the Embassy were received, the Consul felt that any further hope of reconciling the Federal and State Executives was not well grounded. It is unlikely that the telegraphic despatches of this Consulate reached the Embassy promptly, as communication was very slow.

A newspaper which was brought in on horseback on the 10th states that the Department had invited the opposition leaders through the consuls to meet for conference in San Antonio, Texas. If this published statement is true the Department's instruction has not reached this Consulate.

On February 26 the Governor returned to Saltillo and reoccupied the Palace and continued to muster forces, a part of which he despatched under his brother, Jesús Carranza, to Monclova.

By this time opposition had risen against the Governor among various prominent Mexicans. Some arrests were made. One of the Federal officers who had refused to align himself with the Carranza movement was shot while resisting arrest.

The Municipal President, Dr. Antonio Rodríguez, appealed to the Consul on the morning of February 26 for refuge. He was very much frightened and feared apprehension and execution at the hand of the Governor. He was given refuge until the afternoon of February 27, when ex-Governor Cárdenas informed him that he need have no further fears. Frequent appeals were made to the Consul for refuge, but this was denied to all private citizens of Mexico as the Consul did not feel justified in granting refuge to citizens of the country to which he is designated, especially as the refugees were seeking the protection of the Consulate in order to avoid a forced loan which had been ordered by the Governor.

On March 1 the Governor demanded a loan from the banks and merchants. The foreign merchants again appealed to the Consul, and, upon representation to the Governor, he confined his forced loan to the banks, and March 3 received 75.000 pesos.

On March 1 the following telegraphic despatch was sent to the $\operatorname{Embassv}$:

March 1, 8 p. m. The Governor is now in open and armed opposition to the Provisional Government, I fear beyond reconciliation. My efforts were futile after the President cut communication with him. It is possible that a personal message from the President might still be effective. I suggest as the last resort that the President make a proposition through the Embassy and this Consulate. Local conditions could hardly be worse. Governor has over 1,000 well-armed men. He has disarmed the city police and has liberated and armed prisoners. He has taken all public funds and this afternoon is making heavy demands and threats on the banks and merchants, including foreigners.

Frenchmen, Germans and Spaniards are today urging the protection of this Consulate for themselves and their interests.

On March 1, the following telegraphic instruction, dated February 26, was received from the Embassy:

Mexico, D. F., February 26, 11 a.m. You should display the greatest possible activity in bringing about on the one hand submission and on the other hand a disposition to deal justly, honorably, mildly with the dissatisfied elements. Spare no effort and report to the Embassy promptly. The Provisional Government is being generally adhered to throughout the Republic and is showing great firmness and activity.

The Vice Consul was immediately despatched to Arteaga, the military camp of the Governor, to make the representations contained in the Embassy's telegraphic instruction.

On the morning of March 3, a statement was received from the

On the morning of March 3, a statement was received from the Governor embracing the propositions to the Embassy contained in the following telegraphic despatch from this Consulate:

March 3, 6 p. m. Governor of this State has submitted a communication to this Consulate directed to the Embassy proposing immediate resignation of the Chief Executive of the Provisional Government; that the President, the leader of the recent revolt and his chief of artillery leave the country; that Lascurain be designated to form a new constitutional government. Governor says he has 11,000 men in the following localities: Saltillo 2,600, Piedras Negras 1,600, Monclova 3,000, Sierra Mojada 1,000, Laguna District 3,000. Probably he has half the number quoted. Governor says that the miners of the north are joining his forces and begging for arms. There appears to be no longer any hope of the Governor submitting to the Provisional Government. He secured a loan of 76,000 pesos today, and assures this Consulate that he will withdraw his demand upon the foreigners for a loan and that there will be no fighting in the city.

It will be seen from the above telegram that there was little hope of the Governor making terms with the Provisional President. This despatch was also sent to the Department.

On March 4, at 10.30 p. m. the following telegraphic instruction was received from the Embassy:

Mexico, D. F., March 4, 6.45 p. m. Assure the Governor that he is rebelling against a legally constituted provisional government which is strongly fortified in the confidence of the country; that his overthrow and defeat appear to the Embassy to be inevitable. With all energy and as a solemn warning, urge upon him the necessity of immediately making terms with the Provisional Government and thus avoiding further shedding of Mexican blood, the destruction of property and the disturbance of the peace of the country.

Immediately upon receipt of the Embassy's telegraphic instruction the Military Commander, Colonel Cos, was sent for, an automobile ordered, and by midnight the Consul and Vice Consul were in conference with the Governor in his camp at Ramos Arizpe, 12 miles northeast. While the Governor received the Consul and Vice Consul with his usual gracious manner, it was evident that the Embassy's communication only provoked resentment. After moderating with him for a season he finally said: "The Consul can report to the Embassy that the Governor is in the fight to stay; that the Governor believes the Embassy to be largely at fault for the present conditions of affairs; that the Governor does not care to receive any further communication from the Embassy."

The Governor was told that it did not become a Consul to deliver such a message to the Embassy, and that he would have to decline to deliver the Governor's message.

The Governor, speaking further, said that he knew that the Embassy's statement—that all countries would acknowledge the Huerta Government on February 21—was incorrect, and that the telegraphic communication was wrong; in fact, he said, that he believed that the United States had not recognized the new administration. The Consul could only reassure the Governor that the United States had recognized the Huerta Government as he had received no advice to the contrary. So far as persuading the Governor to make terms with the Provisional Government the Consul's mission was fruitless.

On March 5, the following telegraphic despatch was sent to the Embassy:

March 5, 1 p. m. Your instruction March 4 submitted to the Governor at his military camp twelve miles north at midnight. Governor resents and declines suggestions of Embassy, insisting upon the fundamental wrong of the Provisional Government. Confidently and defiantly he announces armed resistance. His strength should not be underestimated. The Consulate is denied communication with the Embassy. City well guarded and quiet but situation becoming hourly more serious. Foreigners have been ordered to display their flags.

The Department received this despatch also, and was requested to notify the Embassy, as, at the time, the line to Mexico City was closed. Later on the message was transmitted.

On March 5, the Governor ordered the telegraph operator of the National Railroad to refuse all official telegrams of the Consul unless countersigned by the Governor. A protest was promptly made to the military commander with satisfactory results.

On March 6, Colonel Cos, Military Commander, ordered all delinquents to pay their taxes and licenses within 72 hours. It is not definitely known how much he derived through this project, but it is estimated from 25,000 to 50,000 pesos. * * * [Details of collecting of taxes.]

intention, seemed disposed to put a false construction on the relations of the Embassy with Generals Huerta and Diaz during the bombardment of this city.

As the Embassy's telegrams treating of these relations were necessarily brief because the transactions with those individuals were extremely limited and not in any way intricate, it may be advisable to furnish the Department with more details at this time.

In preface I may say that I never met or saw General Díaz until the meeting reported in my telegram of February 12, 8 p. m., and that I never exchanged messages, written or verbal, with him other than those reported to the Department in my February 9, 7 p. m.; February 12, 2 p. m.; February 13, 3 p. m.; February 12, 8 p. m.; February 14, 3 p. m.; February 16, 8 p. m.; February 16, 11 a. m.; and February 18, midnight.

I first saw and knew General Huerta in the meeting reported in my telegram of February 15, 11 p. m., and I exchanged with him no other communications, verbal or written, than those which have been furnished to the Department in my telegrams of February 15, 7 p. m.; February 16 1 p. m.; February 16, 8 p. m.; February 16, 11 a. m.; February 15, 11 p. m.; February 17, 10 p. m.; February 17, 4 p. m.; February 18, midnight; February 18, 5 p. m.; February 18, 10 p. m.; February 19, 10 p. m.; February 20, 6 p. m.; February 19, 10 p. m.; February 20, 6 p. m.; Februar 24, 8 p. m.; February 27, noon; February 28, midnight; March 1, midnight; and March 4.

I was brought into communication with him in the following way: On the day when the Federal forces were proposing to establish a battery in the immediate vicinity of the Embassy I asked a volunteer from the crowd outside to carry a verbal message directly to the General asking him immediately to send an officer and to remove this battery, without waiting to reply to my note of February 15. A Mexican gentleman by the name of Copeda, whom I had known for some time, said that he knew General Huerta intimately and would carry the message. This he did, and on his return he informed me that General Huerta wished to have an interview with me, as Dean of the Diplomatic Corps. As many of my colleagues had been urging me to appeal directly to General Huerta to abate the intolerable situation which then existed, I promptly said that I would be glad to meet him. No such meeting, however, occurred, and it was only when I received the message reported in my February 17, 4 p. m., that I began to believe that some steps were under contemplation to put a termination to the battle. In my own mind I anticipated that a mild form of coup d'état, which would lead to the resignation of Madero after a refusal on the part of the Federal troops further to engage the troops of Díaz, might be undertaken. But I had no reason to think that violence would occur and that the President and his Ministers would be made prisoners, and when the news reported in my February 18, 5 p. m., was brought to me I regarded it for some time with incredulity. When satisfied of the accuracy of the report I was confronted with the following situation:

Two hostile armies were in possession of the capital and all civil authority had disappeared. Some 25,000 foreigners, who, as developed during the bombardment, seemed to rely upon the Embassy for protection, were at the mercy of the mob or exposed to indiscriminate firing which might at any moment begin. Without conferring with anyone, I immediately decided to ask Generals Huerta and Díaz to come to the Embassy for a consultation, my object being to have them enter into an agreement for the suspension of hostilities and for joint submission to the Federal Congress. Four hours after the fall of Madero these two generals arrived, with their staffs, at the Embassy and remained there five hours endeavoring to reach an agreement. Three times the discussion was broken off and I interfered and with appeals to their reason and patriotism induced them to continue, with the result that at 1 o'clock in the morning the agreement was signed and deposited in the Embassy and immediate proclamation announcing the suspension of hostilities is-The consummation of this arrangement I regard as the most successful and far reaching of all the difficult work I was called upon to perform during the revolution in that it stopped further effusion of blood, allowed the population of the city to resume their ordinary peaceful occupations, and led finally to the creation of a provisional government which is rapidly establishing peace throughout the Republic.

Moreover, at this crisis the news of the President's telegram to the governors about intervention,2 his attempt to discredit me with the President at Washington, and his announced intention to use mortars and dynamite shells in attacking the citadel, seemed to relieve me of all moral responsibility to him as Chief Executive of this nation, while, at the same time, the possibilities of increased horrors and dangers added to my responsibilities to the American and foreign colonies in this city. Had it even been possible to communicate with him-which was not the case-he would in all probability, judging from past experiences, have treated my message with scorn and suspicion and pursued his course of devastation and ruin.

THE KILLING OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

As this subject seems to have developed considerable press discussion it might be useful to amplify the information contained in my telegrams relative thereto, and to furnish the Department with some details which at the time were not considered essential, as I never for a moment believed the lives of Madero and Pino Suárez to be in danger from the Government.

Immediately after the arrest and imprisonment of Madero and his Ministers I sent the volunteer messenger of the Embassy to General Huerta, asking that no further violence be committed or blood shed, and also that if it were compatible with the safety of the city he would release the Ministers. The messenger brought back to me the assurances of General Huerta that no violence against the President and Vice President was contemplated and that, acting upon my suggestion, he had immediately placed all of the Ministers of the Madero Cabinet at liberty. Later on, as reported in my telegram of February 19, 10 p. m., he asked my opinion as to what disposition should be made of the President; and as both of the courses he indicated an intention of following seemed to be comparatively mild, I did not think it expedient to assume the responsibility of advising him, but answered that he must do what was best for the peace of Mexico.

Later, as reported to the Department in my telegram of February 20, 6 p. m., I remonstrated with the President, and I think with Mr. de la Barra, against the unnecessary severity of the ex-President's confinement, and suggested that he and the other prisoners should be transferred to more comfortable quarters. It was at this time that the Provisional President informed me that the ex-President and ex-Vice President would be put in a place of safety and later tried for crimes the character of which was not indicated to me.

As reported in my telegram of February 20, 6 p. m., I went to the Presidencia with the German Minister and had a very serious conversation, in which my colleague took part, requesting assurances that the lives of the ex-President and the ex-Vice President would be saved. These, as the Department knows, were given; and I believed, and the German Minister believed, as well as many of our colleagues who had been to the Provisional President on a similar mission, that there existed no reason for apprehension as to the attitude of the Government toward the deposed President and Vice President.

I also, at the request of Mrs. Madero, verbally asked the Provisional President to permit her to see the ex-President and that he should be furnished more palatable food.

At the request of Mrs. Pino Suárez, to whom I paid a visit, I addressed a letter to General Blanquette, especially interceding for the life of the ex-Vice President, which I believed to be in some danger from unofficial enemies.

Not content with these efforts, I personally visited different members of the Cabinet for the purpose of expressing my deep concern for the preservation of the ex-President's life and my desire that his treatment should be humane and considerate. If I had been in the slightest degree apprehensive of any intention on the part of the Government to deal foully with the ex-President I might have been more agitated and more vehement, but not more active.

Moreover, at the request of the family, I sent two special American messengers to General Mondragón for the purpose of recovering the body of the unfortunate Gustavo Madero, and obtained authority for these men to search for the remains near the citadel, which they did for two days without success.

Mrs. Wilson added her efforts to mine and went frequently to see the mother and widow of the ex-President, carrying them flowers and expressions of sympathy.

Believing at one time that the life of Ernesto Madero might possibly be in danger, I sent him a letter inviting him to come, with his family, to the Embassy; and I afterwards caused the soldiers (who were ugly and threatening) to be removed from the house of his brother-in-law, where he was staying.

I think, therefore, that I am warranted in saying that so far as this Embassy is concerned everything was done to save the life of Mr. Madero that humanitarian considerations, public opinion in the United States, and the instructions of the Department could demand.

Concerning the facts of the deplorable death of the ex-President and ex-Vice President it is not possible for this Embassy to furnish the Department with a reliable account beyond the official version, which, in the absence of any other, I felt obliged to accept. A dozen different accounts by "eyewitness," all differing absolutely in details, have been offered to the Embassy, but all are lacking in the elements of probability, and none convincing or positive.

My own opinion is that the Government was not privy to the killing of these men, but that either their deaths resulted as related in the official version or that they resulted from a subordinate military conspiracy, actuated by sentiments of revenge for the murder of General Ruiz in the National Palace, the probable murder of General Reyes, and the shooting to death by the ex-President of Colonels Riverol and Izquierdo at the time he was made prisoner.

History will undoubtedly straighten out this tangle, and while the crime was revolting to all people of civilized and humane sentiments it is not evident to me that, politically speaking, the death of these two Mexicans, relegated to private life by their resignations, should arouse greater expressions of popular disapproval in the United States than the murders, unrequited by justice, of some 75 or 80 Americans in Mexico during the last two years.

I believe that in announcing publicly my acceptance of the official version of the death of these two men—and indeed I could not, with reference to the gravity of the situation, take any other course—I adopted the surest method of arresting hasty judgment and of allaying that singular and perverse sentimentality which frequently leads to the commission of greater crimes as punishments for lesser ones.

As the Department is aware, an official investigation, apparently impartial, is being made of all of the circumstances connected with the death of Madero, and in due time its conclusions will be published and transmitted by this Embassy.

LEGALITY, ETC., OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

There can be no doubt as to the legal constitution of the present Provisional Government in conformity with precedents and the Mexican Constitution.

When President Díaz and Vice President Corral resigned simultaneously, De la Barra, Secretary of Foreign Relations, was summoned by Congress to take the earth negoring to the Congritution.

by Congress to take the oath according to the Constitution.

Had Díaz died or resigned, his legal successor under the Constitution would have been his Secretary of Foreign Relations; and in case no such appointment had been made the Presidency would, under the Constitution, have devolved upon the Secretary of Gobernación.

Madero and Pino Suárez resigned simultaneously and their resignations were accepted by Congress. Lascurain, Minister of Foreign Relations under Madero, then immediately took the oath as Provisional President under the Constitution. He did not appoint a Secretary of Foreign Relations, but he did appoint General Huerta Secretary of Gobernación. Huerta having taken the oath as Secretary of Gobernación and Lascurain having resigned and his resignation having been accepted, the Presidency devolved upon Huerta under the Constitution in his capacity of Secretary of Gobernación, and he took the oath of office before Congress as President of the Republic.

The incumbency of Huerta is as legal as was the incumbency of De la Barra after the resignation of Díaz.

From this it would appear that if the Provisional Government of De la Barra, which was recognized without any question by the Government of the United States and by all other Governments as constitutionally inducted into office, the Provisional Government of Huerta is entitled to the same appearance.

is entitled to the same acceptance. [Sic.]

The second consideration for recognition lies in the imperative need of sustaining and strengthening this Government. Without our recognition, upon which the recognition of many other Governments depends, it will be constantly exposed to attacks from its enemies; and our attitude will take on a color of at least constructive sympathy with the elements conspiring against the reestablishment of order and peace in a neighboring and friendly Republic.

The financial situation, too, which at the present moment is pressing and urgent, can not be solved by the procurement of the necessary loans while the question of the legitimacy and constitutionality of this Government is in doubt. By hesitating too long, therefore, we might contribute to the weakening and possible demolition of the present Government and reinvoke the movements of disorder and anarchy which so recently brought us to the verge of an intervention in the affairs of this Republic, fraught with great dangers to its future integrity and placing burdens of responsibility upon us the gravity of which can not be accurately estimated but which may easily be imagined.

On the other hand, I do not advocate the recognition of the present Provisional Government until its ability to restore and establish peace and order throughout the Republic and afford guaranties to the lives and property of foreigners shall have been demonstrated to the satisfaction of our Government.

Nor do I advocate it until our just and equitable claims, as set forth in the Department's note of September 15, 1912, and in my subsequent note of February 24, 1913, to the Provisional President, General Huerta, shall have been satisfied either by their acceptance in principle or by adequate fulfillment in fact.

I fully expect this Government to reestablish peace and order and I also expect that within a brief period the substance of our complaints—except, perhaps, that relating to general claims for damages growing out of the revolution-will have been satisfied.

The question of our recognition, therefore, would appear to depend more upon expediency and interest than upon correct procedure, and I believe that it should be considered entirely from those viewpoints.

THE AMERICAN COLONY.

I can not too highly praise the attitude of the American colony during the recent bombardment. The activity, courage, self-reliance, and self-sacrifice exhibited in hours of danger, and their patience amid discomfort, excessive labors, and their isolation from home and business were conspicuous and worthy of all admiration. I trust that the Department may, in due season, make full recognition of the bearing of these excellent examples of our race and nationality.

PROGRESS OF REESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE THROUGHOUT THE REPUBLIC.

The present Provisional Government has shown remarkable activity and energy in restoring order, in subduing rebellious elements, and in consolidating different political factions and revolutionists in arms against the Government of Madero.

In the brief period of two weeks the whole of the Republic to the south and west of the Federal District has, either by force or persuasion, been brought into a state of comparative peace. A small district in the State of Guerrero is still in arms under Genevievo Delao, but a strong force of Federals has been sent against them and it may be anticipated that they will soon be defeated and brought to submission. Zapata remains inactive at some point south of Cuernavaca, but negotiations with him are being carried on and the indications point to his early submission. In the north all of the leading rebel chieftains, with the exception of Salazar, have submitted to the Government and most of them are now enrolled in its service. Salazar's attitude remains undefined, but it is supposed that he is simply holding out for terms.

In a general way, it may be said that, with the exception of isolated brigandage committed by roving bands formerly under the lead of chieftains who have now surrendered, the whole of the north is at peace with the exception of the State of Sonora and some portions of the State of Sinaloa, where the governor is supposed to be hostile to the present administration.

MOVEMENT HEADED BY CARRANZA.

The Sonora situation presents some aspects of gravity which should have the attention of the Department. It is not a Maderista movement, but the remains of the movement which was initiated by the border governors to form an independent republic, in which Carranza, then Governor of Coahuila and now a fugitive from justice, was the originator and prime mover.

It must be understood by the Department that the people of Sonora and of a large part of the State of Sinaloa have never been closely identified with this Republic. Most of the people in these States are of Texan origin, of mixed American and Spanish blood, and, as a matter of fact, they would prefer unity with the United States rather than with Mexico. There is evidently, notwithstanding the reassuring advices sent hither by the Department, a movement there to declare an independent republic comprising the States of Sonora and Sinaloa and the Territory of Lower California; and while I have no positive proofs of intrigues by American interests in that direction it is believed here that they exist. The situation, therefore, at this point should be carefully watched by the Department in order that we may not be involved in a movement aimed to disintegrate this Republic.

PROVISIONAL PRESIDENT HUERTA.

General Huerta is preeminently a soldier, a man of iron mold, of absolute courage, who knows what he wants and how to get it, and is not, I believe, overly particular as to methods. He is a firm believer in the policy of General Porfirio Díaz and believes in the cultivation of the closest and most friendly relations with the United States. I believe him to be a sincere patriot, and so far as my observations goes at the present moment he will cheerfully relinguish the responsibilities of office as soon as peace is restored in the country and financial stability is reestablished. I may possibly err in my estimate of his character, but I am supported in it by the opinion of Captain Burnside, who spent a month with him in the campaign in the State of Chihuahua.

GENERAL FELIX DÍAZ.

I do not believe him to be as strong a character as General Huerta, but he is a man of humane character, averse to the shedding of blood and to cruelty of any kind. He strongly resembles his uncle, the late President Díaz, both in appearance and manner, and doubtless with time and training will develop a capacity for government and a high measure of usefulness. At present he is somewhat disposed to be governed in his judgments and conclusions by satellites and hungry office seekers, but this is possibly only a passing phase. He professes to be pro-American, and I think is so, but he is surrounded by some men who can hardly be placed in that class.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MADERO.

From a study of the press of the United States I discover much erroneous opinion is prevalent relative to the character of the Government of Madero. By many journals it is assumed that the Government which was established after the overthrow of Porfirio Díaz was a pure democracy of high ideals, devoted to the uplifting of the masses and the betterment of their condition. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

It is true that Madero came into power with an altruistic program and apparently with many high ideals, but his character and that of his administration departed each day of its incumbency farther from its supposed benign character, degenerating rapidly into a despotism of the worst character accompanied by the worst possible evidences of corruption, incompetency, impotency, inefficiency, and

During the last months of its existence a practical reign of terror existed, supported by espionage, the reckless squandering of public money, illegal and unwarranted seizures and imprisonments, the intimidation or censorship of the press, the deception of the public at home and abroad by paid native and foreign agents, bribery of Congress and the army, the misconception and disregard of international obligations, and the practical government of the Republic by one family, unfitted by training for public affairs and devoid of that measure of patriotism, prudence, and policy which was imperatively essential in view of the abnormal and chaotic condition of the country.

It was active in small things and evasive, sluggish, and neglectful in greater things. Madero came into power as an apostle of liberty, but he was simply a man of disordered intellect who happened to be in the public eye at the psychological moment. The responsibilities of office and the disappointments growing out of rivalries and intrigues shattered his reason completely, and in the last days of his government, during the bombardment of this city, his mental qualities, always abnormal, developed all of the characteristics of that dangerous form of lunacy of which the best example in ancient times is a Nero and in modern times a Castro.

Remote from the great position where his misguided ambition carried him he would doubtless have remained a quiet and simple country gentleman of benevolent ideals and blameless life. Clothed with the chief power of the nation, dormant evil qualities in the blood or in the race came to the surface and wrought ruin to him and to thousands upon thousands of the Mexican people.

THE FUTURE.

Present indications point to the reestablishment of peace and order throughout the Republic within a fairly reasonable space of time, when due allowances are made for the enormous extent of territory which must be covered.

The new administration is not popular, but it is respected; and it, in its existence, has given birth, not only in the minds of Mexicans but in the minds of foreigners, to a new feeling of confidence and belief in conditions which will permit the resumption of peaceful occupations in the cities and throughout the agricultural districts.

In all probability Mexico will become and afterwards remain quiet for some time, but ultimately, unless the same type of government as was implanted here by General Porfirio Díaz is again established, new revolutionary movements will break forth and general unrest will be renewed.

With 80 per cent of its population unable to read and write permanent democratic government can not be established in Mexico. But if we desire to contribute to the continued existence of democratic government and institutions under healthy conditions we should direct our efforts toward inducing this Government to adopt and encourage a plan for universal education, assisting in the meantime in the maintenance of such a government as may guarantee protection to life and property and peace and progress, without being especially particular as to whether its character is in accordance with our ideas of genuine democratic institutions.

The following telegram has been received from José M. Maytorena at Tucson, Arizona, who signs himself Constitutional Governor of Sonora:

If there is a suitable opportunity you may orally say to Maytorena that you know the views of the Secretary of State to be as follows:

The Government of the United States is deeply interested in the restoration of peace so that law may be enforced, order preserved and the rights of Americans protected. Disagreements generally arise from misunderstandings or conflicting interests and therefore it would be wise to remove misunderstandings by conferences whenever possible and to reconcile conflicting interests by mutual concessions.

Consuls may exercise such influence as may properly be employed without any interference on our part in the affairs of our sister Republic, to bring about cooperation between the State and the Central administrations on a basis of justice to all.

Mexico, February 24, 1913.

Dear General Huerta: On September 15th, 1912, I addressed, under instructions of my Government, a very strong and vigorous protest to Your Excellency's Government, relative to many old, some continued and more fresh cases which were causing my Government the greatest distress and the adjustment of which it seemed unable to secure by any other methods than severe, drastic and probably what appeared to be unrestrained language. So grave had become the situation developed by the then Mexican administration's refusal, either through impotency, unfriendliness or lack of proper conception of the amity and probity which should govern the exchanges between contiguous and apparently friendly republics, that relations were strained almost to the breaking point and an extremely grave situation would have resulted from the carelessness, cynicism and superciliousness of the administration which has gone out of power. A further precipitation of this situation was prevented only by the fact that the administration of President Taft hesitated to assume the responsibility of further action in view of its remaining short life.

I am now in receipt of instructions from Washington on the threshold of Your Excellency's administration to secure without fail or delay an acceptance in principle of the demands made in our note of September 15th, to which must be added the settlement of the Colorado River, the Chamizal case and the question of a definite arrangement of all claims for damages to American life and property, not in accordance with the generally accepted principles of international law, but in accordance with the sentiments of friendship which exists between these two republics, which sentiments we would be ready to recognize under similar circumstances. I therefore beg Your Excellency to immediately give consideration to these grave matters and enable me through instructions to Mr. de la Barra to secure final and definite settlement of all grievances of which we are complaining, at the same time advising you that we are willing to adjust in similar manner any complaints which the Mexican Government has against the American Government. As a friend of Mexico I earnestly desire that these matters may be adjusted before the new administration at Washington assumes office, in order that it may be net with a clear evidence of Mexico's desire to discharge its duties of friendship towards us.

EXCELLENCY: In compliance with express instructions received from my Government, I have the honor to bring the following to your excellency's knowledge:

By reason of the resignation of their respective offices tendered to the Chamber of Deputies of the Congress of the United Mexican States on the 18th of February last by Don Francisco I. Madero and Don José María Pino Suárez, President and Vice President of the Republic, respectively, the said Chamber, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by Article 72, Section A, Paragraph 2, and Articles 81 and 82 of the Federal Constitution of the Republic, decreed that it was proper to accept the resignations above referred to and to call the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Foreign Relations to the service of the Chief Magistracy, as required by our Fundamental Charter. But the last-named official, Don Pedro Lascurain, having in turn resigned that high office, and his resignation having been accepted, the Federal Executive Power devolved upon the Secretary of State next in the Constitutional order to that for Foreign Relations, that is to say, the Secretary of Gobernación, General of Division Don Victoriano Huerta, who was called upon by the Chamber of Deputies to take the oath of office as President ad interim of the Republic on the nineteenth day of the same month. AMERICAN CONSULATE, Hermosillo, Sonora, March 15, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report that as the road is now open and some chance for letters to go through I will try and give a statement of events as they happened.

The State Government upon receiving notice of the imprisonment of President Madero from General Huerta, telegraphed to the Ministro de Gobernación for information regarding the state of affairs and whether the telegraphic information from General Huerta was correct They claim to have received no answer to the same. meantime I worked with them to secure recognition of the Provisional Government and had succeeded when the news of the assassination of Madero and Pino Suárez was received and this ended the matter for the time being. I then received a telegram from the Ambassador asking to do what was possible for recognition. I again worked with these people and secured a promise that if a majority of the States of the Republic were recognizing the same and [if] I could secure this information from the Ambassador they would recognize the Provisional Government. I never received an answer to the same. then telegraphed to the Honorable Ambassador that as the State had such a strong following here it would be best for the present, if the Central Government did not have enough troops to subdue the State, to withdraw the few that were here, and the State people guaranteed to have peace and order throughout the State in ten days and then would go, with a commission of the Chamber of Commerce, and discuss recognition. I also advised that as the Federal Government had never corresponded direct with the State Government it would be advisable to do so and take the matter up directly with them. To this came no answer and the State Congress, then in session, decided to leave the question open for the present until they knew the exact state This decision they telegraphed to Mexico City, when, in return, they received a very short telegram signed "Granados" stating they wanted to know at once whether they would recognize the Provisional Government or not. This brought on the decision not to recognize the same. [Description of destruction of the railroad.] The Chamber of Commerce here elected two members to go to Mexico and see if peace could not be established in some manner. these, a Mr. Alejandro Lacy, * * * was arrested. * * [State] Government, upon acting for itself, took possession of all Federal Government offices, and also named bank examiners to take the place of those appointed by the Federal Government. These the banks refused to recognize and so closed their doors. fect protection is given to Americans and their property and no one has been molested in any way except the railroad company. I have been of great assisstance to Americans and all foreigners here, as the State Government know I have been working for peace and for If the Mexican Government in the * * * the good of all parties. City of Mexico could be made to withdraw the few troops they have here in the State and allow these people to restore peace and order, which they can very easily do in ten days' time, the question of recognition could then be gone over with any commission sent from here and can be settled. The principal thing the State desires is the right to elect its own officials and have no military governor. If, as from appearances, the Provisional President has no troops to send to Sonora at present and is not in a position to dominate the situation, he should be made to accede to this and end all bloodshed and trouble in the State until he is strong enough to better his own desires.

I have not received a single telegram either from the Department or Mexico City since the fifth day of this month.

I received a telegram from the Embassy, February 26, asking me to do all in my power to have the State recognize the Provisional Government. I notified the Embassy that nearly the entire State was against recognition and it would be hard to accomplish, as these people do not want a military government. I also advised him of the true situation and of the strength of the State and suggested that if the Central Government did not have enough troops to reenforce those at present in the State it would be best to withdraw the few they have for the present, as the State authorities and the military leaders here guaranteed to have perfect peace and order in the State within ten days after the others left and would then send a commission to Mexico to treat on recognition. As all these people asked was State sovereignty, to elect their own officers, and payment of their troops while in the Service of the State, I have thought it would be possible to secure these terms. AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico City, March 17, 1913—10 p. m.

117. Today General Huerta and Mr. de la Barra called at the Embassy. Huerta made statements of which a memorandum was afterward handed me by De la Barra who said he intended to give it also to the press. Translated it reads:

Interviewed as he was leaving the American Embassy concerning the object of his call, President Huerta said the object was—

First, to reiterate the sentiments of amity uniting his Government and people with those of the United States.

I have just received through the Embassy a telegram from Mr. de la Barra in which he expresses the desire that as many of our war vessels as possible might be removed from Mexican waters; he calls my attention to the Mexican law which does not permit foreign war vessels to remain more than thirty days in Mexican ports.

I have in substance replied that since my Government has not yet recognized the Provisional Government as a de jure government, the above-mentioned representations are inopportune and that the attitude of the Mexican Government should be expectant and receptive.

Sir: * * * Thus far the victories of the State troops have been followed by the immediate restoration of the normal government and good order is maintained. There is a disposition on the part of the State officials to continue the established order of things as formerly. The State Government only desires to repudiate President Huerta, demands his resignation and refuses to permit Federal troops to remain in the State. The officials reiterate further that they have no intention of seceding from the Republic of Mexico but will not tolerate the present Provisional Government and that their belligerency is a movement to secure a constitutionally elected president, and that they do not believe President Huerta will permit a constitutionally elected president to succeed him to his present office.

The attitude of the Sonora State Government seems to be receiving enthusiastic encouragement, which is almost unanimous all over the State. Recruits continue to join the armed forces of the State and there seems to be a real sentiment of patriotism behind the revolt. Foreigners generally are well treated and so far this office has received no complaint from Americans as to the treatment accorded them by the State Government. Colonel Obregón refused to receive American recruits while at Nogales, and explained to this office that he was waging a patriotic war and wanted only his own countrymen to help him. * * *

It is considered that the bringing up of the question of the United States war vessels remaining in Mexican ports at this time, in view of the fact that the

Government at Washington has not as yet formally recognized this Government as a de jure government, is inopportune. The Embassy has recommended the withdrawal of two of the United States vessels now in Mexican ports, but, as the Governor and the Military Commander of the port of Vera Cruz are supposed not to be loyal to the Federal Government, I can not make further representations with reference to the withdrawal from Vera Cruz of another vessel, and, in view of the anti-American spirit in Tamaulipas I can not make representations to the end that the war vessel at Tampico be withdrawn, as the foreign interests there are very large.

It is pointed out that should these war vessels be withdrawn entirely from the eastern coast and then were obliged to return in order to protect foreigners, a very embarrassing if not dangerous situation would arise. Referring to the boat at Acapulco, it is pointed out that if the Mexican port officials and the Federal authorities at that port indicate to the Commander that he is not within regulations in any act which he may perform, any difficulty will disappear.

The recognition of the present Government of Mexico as a de jure government by the Government of the United States is expected daily and it would seem more politic for the present Government in Mexico not to bring up the question of war vessels in Mexico but to await recognition by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge your excellency's esteemed note No. 5740 of March 31 relative to the retention of American war vessels in the port of Vera Cruz for a longer period than the Mexican law permits without the permission of the Mexican Senate.

On March 20 I received a telegram while in Vera Cruz from the Secretary of this Embassy informing me that your excellency had brought this matter to his attention, and I then replied that in view of the fact that our Government held serious responsibilities toward all classes of foreigners in Mexico, and in view of the further fact that the American Government has not yet formally recognized the Provisional Government of Mexico, I deemed the intrustion [introduction?] of this question at this time as inopportune.

I, moreover, called your excellency's attention to the fact, as reported to me by the American Consul at Vera Cruz, that the Governor of the State of Vera Cruz and the Military Commander thereof are supposedly not loyal to the Federal Government, and that on this account the removal of these war vessels might at any time encourage rebellious spirits to precipitate a conflict endangering foreign lives and property. Nevertheless I informed your excellency at that time that two of the ships would probably be immediately recalled to American waters, and I notice by the telegraphic despatches of this morning the announcement that all ships in Atlantic waters will probably soon be recalled.

Since the date of this telegram just referred to I have called the attention of my Government to the existence of the law which your excellency had the goodness to cite, but I have as yet received no expression of opinion from Washington. I am therefore obliged to express my regret that I can not at this moment furnish your excellency any definite information, though you may be super that it would afford me great placeure to do see

I might say to you that it is no part of the policy of the Government of the United States to offend the sensibilities or to derogate in any measure from the sovereignty of the Mexican Government, and that I regard it as extremely unfortunate that retention of these ships in Mexican waters should at this moment be a matter of public discussion. Conditions in Mexico at the present time are not normal and rules which might have paramount force and acceptance when peace and order hold full sway throughout Mexico must necessarily be suspended or held in abeyance for the moment. Our Government, as you very well know, has heavy responsibilities to its citizens in Mexico and, also, important ones of a secondary character to all foreigners. be discharged, and, frankly speaking, I believe that in discharging our duties to these Americans and foreigners we are also contributing materially to the reestablishment of peace in Mexico.

Mr. Ambassador: This Department has received, first your excellency's note of the 2nd instant, and afterwards, your note of the 1st, relating to the stay of American vessels in ports of this Republic.¹

Your excellency states [etc.]

It is my duty to invite your excellency's attention to three points which I consider of the greatest importance in the matter:

1st. At no time, whatever may be the circumstances of the country, can the principles upon which the sovereignty of a country is based be considered as suspended, and much less with reference to measures of a military and naval character. For this reason Mexico considers as a matter of the greatest timeliness, and duly appreciates, the explanations contained in your excellency's letter, to which I will refer in due time.

2nd. The opportunity in which a question of this character can not exist or fail to occur on account of external acts, such as the recognition or non-recognition of the government of a sovereign nation; and,

3rd. Speaking of recognition itself, I must say that Mexico considers that its Government has been formally recognized by all friendly Governments which have representatives in this country, as appears from the official relations maintained by said representatives with the Chief Executive and with the Department under my charge, the undersigned being of the opinion that the reply given to the autograph letter by which the President announces his succession to power [is] a mere consequence of the above-mentioned relations.

In the opinion of the undersigned, these considerations are of much more weight considering that in the present case it is not a question of a de facto government, but of one which has all the constitutional characteristics and requisites, as is known to your excellency by means of evident and well-known

After having made the above explanation, I can not refrain from thanking your excellency for the information contained in the note under acknowledgment that orders have been given by the Navy Department recalling the vessels stationed in Gulf ports, which stay I can assure your excellency is not necessary to maintain the peace in the port and State of Vera Cruz, because, contrary to what appears from the reports of the American Consul, the Government of the State as well as the Commander of the port, are loyal to the Government.

I trust that your excellency will have the kindness to communicate to me the result of the action taken in the matter after informing the Washington Government of the provisions of the Mexican law which forbid foreign vessels from staying in Mexican waters for more than thirty days.

Mr. Ambassador: I have the honor again to address your excellency in order to reiterate the desirability of securing from the Department of State a reply concerning the stay of American vessels in ports of this Republic, as it has been extended beyond the time which the law permits the Mexican authorities to grant, as explained to your excellency in my previous notes.

I believe that your excellency's Government will duly understand this indication, inasmuch as it must be convinced that mutual respect has always constituted the firmest basis of the good relations which happily unite the two peoples and the two Governments, and that it would be lamentable if they should become less cordial, even for a brief time, which would probably happen if unfortunately the representatives of the press should take note of the provisions of the law of Mexico, which are imperative in this connection, and which do not leave any discretion to my Government concerning the strict watch it should exercise in the performance of its duties in matters of this kind.

I do not doubt that the Government of the United States will justly estimate these suggestions, which are in keeping with friendly relations and the spirit of justice on which they are based.

The Embassy of Mexico presents its respectful compliments to the Department of State of the United States of America and has the honor to say that it has received from its Government a telegram reading word for word as follows:

In some of the notes exchanged between the Embassy and the Department of State the Department refers to the Government of Mexico as "the Administration in Mexico City" and in view of the fact that the phrase implies an idea about various points of great interest to the relations between the two Governments, you will please call on the Secretary of State of the United States and submit to him appropriate remarks in the matter. If by the cited phrase it is intended to intimate that the Government of Mexico is a de facto Government and does not possess the constitutional requisites to be considered as a de jure Government, it must be noted that, in point of law, it emanated from acts that were unquestionably lawful, for although the resignations of President Madero and Vice President Pino Suarez were the result of a revolutionary movement in which elements of very different origins took part, the transfer of power was effected in accordance with the terms of the Constitution and with the concurrence of functionaries belonging to Mr. Madero's Administration and of men who had long been faithful members of his party, such as the members who form the majority of the Legislative Chambers elected under Mr. Madero's Ad-

To this is to be added the fact that the Administration over which General Don Victoriano Huerta presides is recognized, not as a de facto, but as a Constitutional Government by the Governments of the States, many of which, the great majority, also belonged to the party led by Mr. Madero, were elevated to the offices they now hold in accordance with the political tendencies of that party. The Mexican Government, therefore, is not in the position of a de facto Government of revolutionary organization, nor in that of a de jure Government before which stands another with pretensions to absolute domination throughout the national territory and to the suppression of its adversary, as was the case with the Federal Government during the War of Secession, and with the Constitutional Government presided over by Citizen Benito Juarez during the War of Reform and that of Interven-If the words "the Administration that is officiating in the City of Mexico" are intended or understood to mean a Government lacking lawful origin, that can not be admitted and much less if the words carry the idea that the Mexican Government commands respect in only a portion of the national territory; for, as already stated, its action covers the whole country and obedience is only withheld by knots of rebels in Sonora, Coahuila, Durango and Morelos, a rebellion that in no wise can be taken as stripping the Mexican Government of all the attributes of an undeniable political power; for even if it be taken for granted that the rebellion be such as to outweigh the means of repression at the Government's disposal, the rebellion has not as yet come out with the pretension of organizing a new Government and opposing it to the Constitutional Government, but is only bent on continuing the rebellion and withdrawing certain parts of the national territory from obedience to the lawful authorities, involving the authorities in conflicts that might cause the overthrow of the President of the Republic.

It is to be hoped that the foregoing remarks will find an echo in the justiceloving mind of the Secretary of State and that, as a result, they will fully define the consideration which, in the matter of international relations, is due to the Mexican Government as the nation's sole representative with friendly nations, not merely as an administrative organization accidentally in charge of the various public services in certain places. The Government of Mexico is far from affecting an easiness it does not entertain as to the situation of the country; indeed it is well known, on the contrary, to have divulged, on several occasions, through its official organs, the many difficulties of the situation and the efforts required for the restoration of order and revival of public prosperity; but it also knows that the group at the head of the present situation is not responsible to the nation for the ills that have befallen it and that acceptance of the administration of public affairs in one of the most trying crises that Mexico has undergone is prompted by a sentiment of abnegation and patriotism; for that reason it also believes that not only ought it to be recognized as a constitutionally organized power but also that the Government of the United States, always a friend of Mexico's, will appreciate at its true value the significance of the efforts now being put forth by all the men in charge of the public administration to attain the ends above referred to and more particularly the discharge of their duties for the protection of life and property.

Please make special mention to the Secretary of State of the fact, for which there are few precedents in our history, that the Government's moral authority succeeded in bringing together many political elements of very diverse affiliation which, inspired by a yearning for public peace, vigorously urge forward the undertaking of conciliation applauded by the press of the country without distinction of party and stimulated by the utterance of public opinion.

EAGLE PASS, TEXAS, April 21, 1913.

I hear from Laredo, Texas, that the military authority of that place has permitted the importation into Laredo, Mexico, for General Trucy, chief of the Huerta forces, of two machine-guns and 5,000 cartridges. As the illegal government of Huerta has not been recognized by Your Excellency, I judge that you must consider General Huerta and his officers to have a status inferior to mine as Constitutional Governor of the State and also chief of all the Constitutionalist forces of the Republic, who have refused to recognize the government deriving from a military conspiracy.

The Government in my charge therefore believes that if the United States has permitted or permits the importation of arms and munitions of war for Huerta's forces, an equal concession should be made to the Constitutional Government of this State, which I represent, and to the States and Chiefs who are fighting for the reestablishment of legal order in Mexico, thus placing the contending parties on an equal footing in the war now involving the Republic.

I therefore beg Your Excellency's Government to permit the importation of the arms and munitions of war needed by the forces of legal order which I represent, without difficulties being made by the United States authorities.

I trust that Your Excellency will pardon the Government in my charge for thus addressing you directly; it is an irregularity due to my Government's inability to act through the Minister for Foreign Affairs of my country, as I do not recognize as legal the so-called government of General Huerta.

Sir: The Department has received your despatch No. 112 of April 7, 1913, explaining your action in allowing General Estrada to enter your Consulate on the 17th of February, 1913.

While the Department is not inclined to disapprove your action under the circumstances as you explain them, it is not entirely clear that it was necessary for such protection to be extended over so long a period of time, especially in view of the proximity of the international border.

In this connection it seems pertinent to invite your attention to the Department's standing instructions that, while indisposed to direct its representatives to deny temporary shelter to any person whose life may be immediately threatened, this Government does not sanction the usage of asylum and enjoins upon its representatives the avoidance of all pretexts for its exercise.

Your action therefore in similar cases which may arise in the future should be limited to the affording of protection only when it appears to be absolutely necessary for the preservation of life and should be in the nature of temporary refuge. It should be distinctly understood that the protection extended should be strictly limited as indicated, and that no promise of shelter should be given in advance of an emergency seeming to call therefor.

212. Your April 25, 7 p. m. If you find it necessary to renew representations to the central administration on the subject of the war vessels you will say that the Department believes it not necessary for this Government to request permission for vessels of its Navy to remain for more than one month in Mexican waters. Mr. de la Barra, it is assumed, bases his objections to their presence upon paragraph 16 of article 72 of the Mexican Constitution; but this paragraph apparently does not require the permission referred to. It provides inter alia that the Mexican Congress has power "* to consent to fleets of other powers remaining for more than one month in waters of the Republic." This clause refers to fleets or squadrons, not to a single vessel nor to a small number of vessels. Similar clauses are found in other constitutions or laws, and are thus construed. If the Mexican Administration were to manifest a disposition to raise questions as to the prolongation of the stay of American ships here and there in Mexican waters for the purpose of affording local protection in emergencies, it is needless to point out to you how unfortunate it would be, in the present troubled state of affairs in Mexico involving so much peril to Americans and American interests and to other foreigners and other foreign interests.

225. The President yesterday informed me that public opinion was being greatly irritated throughout the country on account of the delay of our Government in recognizing the present Provisional Government, for which there seemed to be no good reason, as it has been recognized by Great Britain and Spain and would soon be recognized by Germany, Italy, and France. He said that this Government was earnestly endeavoring to perform all of its international obligations; that it was rapidly reorganizing and increasing the army for the reestablishment of peace and the protection of foreigners; that this administration, though not elected, had been as legally constituted as any government could possibly be; that it was solvent although it had entered upon its task of reestablishing order with a bankrupt treasury left by the Madero administration, which had plundered the nation, and with no army; that constitutional liberties were being granted to all law-abiding Mexicans; that by careful administration and wise direction of public funds a new army had been built up, equipped, and was about to take the aggressive against the rebels throughout the Republic. In view of these facts his administration regarded as unwise the attitude of the United States in refusing to accord it official recognition; that such an attitude was susceptible of an unfriendly interpretation; and that in the event of this Government failing to sustain itself the opinion of the Latin-American world was certain to place the responsibility for whatever disasters might follow upon the administration at Washington. said that on this account his Government did not feel that it would be justified, in view of a hostile public opinion and of the undignified position in which it would be placed by so doing, in concluding the important questions at present pending between the two Governments—that is to say, the Chamizal and Colorado River cases and the special and general claims cases. He added that the Washington Government's views in these and other cases had been accepted in principle by this Government, and that whenever the Government of the United States would place this Government in the position of settling the questions as matters between two friendly and sovereign if not equally powerful countries their solution might be expected.

I replied briefly that the views of the President and Secretary of State on this question had not been communicated to me and asked if he desired me to transmit the substance of what he had said to Washington. He asked me to do so.

[Extract.]

No. 1955.]

American Embassy, Mexico, May 15, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Bryan: Since my despatch of March 12, 1913, which aimed to cover in the fullest detail the events of the recent revolutionary uprising which led to the installation of the present Huerta Government, events have crowded so thick and fast that an intelligent analysis of the situation has been difficult if not impossible. I have, therefore, confined my reports to brief telegraphic narratives of the most conspicuous and urgent matters, hoping from day to day that the situation might become more clearly defined and that I might be able to put in the hands of the Department such a comprehensive and thorough statement as would be of value for its guidance. Even now I do not feel that the situation is clear enough to warrant decisive conclusions either of a pessimistic or optimistic character, and I must beg you to accept such views as I may, from time to time, present to the Department as more or less tentative.

The present Provisional Government, which came into power with the apparent enthusiastic approval of all classes of Mexicans and which displayed in the earlier stages of its incumbency marked activity, great sagacity, and a broad and conciliatory spirit, has not entirely fulfilled the hopes of all those who anxiously desire the restoration of peace and order throughout Mexico, nor has it given, under prolonged tests, those evidences of administrative ability which it revealed in the first moments of its existence and which I then believed would enable it to triumph over all difficulties. In no inconsiderable measure the failure by the present provisional administration to secure better results is due to the lamentable condition in which the finances of the country were left by the Madero administration. public credit had been greatly injured and the national prestige greatly lowered by the peculiar methods of that administration and its inability or disinclination promptly to fulfill its international obligations. In addition to this the public treasury had undoubtedly been looted by the vast horde of greedy adventurers who surrounded Madero, controlled his councils, and led him into the commission not only of financial blunders but of serious attacks on the constitutional rights of the people. Thus, the new administration was confronted at the time of taking office with a grave economic situation, with a disordered administrative system, with a hostile legislative majority, and with an army which had been reduced to diminutive proportions and demoralized in discipline and morale. Moreover, the vast extent of territory over which it has been compelled to assert its authority against the violent and destructive spirits which were loosed by the Madero administration and which are now being encouraged by secret agents in the United States and in every part of this Republic to revolt against the Provisional Government has made the task of restoring peace enormously difficult and is impressing both native and foreign opinion with the belief that the restoration of normal conditions will be well-nigh impossible for any government to procure.

In one direction the Government has shown commendable energy which may possibly produce good results in the early future. It has moved with great activity in the reorganization of the army, and has enlisted by one process and another somewhere between 15,000 and 20,000 soldiers during the past month. These are being dispatched rapidly to the disturbed sections of the country and the administration confidently relies upon their ability to destroy the forces now in arms against the Government.

With reference to the disturbances which exist throughout the country the situation is about as follows: [Military situation described.

The phase of the entire situation in Mexico which is being commented on now most extensively by foreign and native opinion and which is a matter of lively concern to the present Government is that resulting from an apparent collusion between a more or less clearly defined interventionist organization in the United States and the State authorities on the American side of the border. This organization, according to reports which have been received here, is contributing moral and material support to the revolutionary cause and is conducting a campaign in conjunction [with] or with the aid of representatives of the Madero political party now in refuge in the United States with the primary object of forming an independent republic from Mexican territory contiguous to the border and reaching as far south as the twenty-sixth parallel. This would embrace

Lower California, the States of Sonora, Chihuahua, Coahuila, and parts of the States of Nuevo Leon, Durango, and Sinaloa. The program of the organization is, first, to seede from Mexico and then, following the Texas precedent, to apply for admission as States into the American Union. * * *

The existence of this organization and its power are not in the least doubted by the Mexican Government and people, and the opinion is general that it is influencing the attitude of the United States toward Mexico at the present moment. To this large section of public opinion the failure of our Government officially and formally to recognize the present Provisional Government is unhesitatingly accepted as evidence that it is secretly in sympathy with the plotters against the integrity of the Republic and is conniving at the overthrow of the authority of a neighboring and friendly State. The Government is actively propagating this idea not only at home but abroad, and it is beginning to have lodgment in the opinion of the Diplomatic Corps here.

The resentment which exists here against our policy is profound and growing, and it is finding expression in excited discussions in the press in open attacks on our Government and this Embassy (which is supposed to be making representations against recognition) and by what appears to be an organized boycott of American commodities of all kinds which would be most effective if any great amount of American products were coming into the country.

Whatever reasons of policy lie at the foundation of our Government's present attitude toward Mexico, and it is not doubted that they are conceived in a spirit of justice, it is none the less true that the effects here have been most disastrous, not only creating and reviving a new and intense anti-American spirit in this country which is making itself felt in all the channels of trade and the daily relations of life, but is giving ground for a false interpretation by rebels of friendliness toward them. The other foreign interests in this country are taking (and openly state so) advantage of our present unpopularity, and, through their diplomatic representatives and in other ways, are taking from Americans trade and privileges which, under normal conditions, would belong to us. The British Minister informed me a few days ago that he thought it entirely fair to make use of the opportunity growing out of the present embarrassed relations with the United States to push British enterprises in every direction, and there is a semiofficial statement in the press emanating from the President to the effect that the Government intends in all ways to show a preference to the nationals of those Governments which have recognized Mexico over those which have failed to do so.

The economic situation of the country, to which the attention of the Department has been frequently called by telegraph, continues to be very grave. Exchange on Europe and the United States has been as high as 2.40 and at the present moment is 2.20. These rates are, of course, practically prohibitive except for small transactions and an abnormal situation of foreign trade relations therefore exists which is without parallel in the history of this country for the last 50 years. The destruction of railways and lines of communication, which is being extensively carried on and which has now brought about the annihilation of over 60 per cent of the railway system of Mexico, adds in a very marked way to the general economic disorder. The coffee, sugar, rubber, and fruits of the south are either going to waste on account of a diminished labor market or because the products if harvested can not be transported to market. The closing of silver and gold mines and the suspension of the smelting and iron mills of the country, which are the principal supplies of foreign exchange, have enormously increased the difficulties of a situation already almost strained to the breaking point. The strong probabilities are, however, that this economic situation will soon be relieved by the dissemination through all the channels of trade of the $150,000,000 loan which appears now to be in the last stages of negotiation. This loan is being secured through a Belgian-English-French syndicate and, although the details have not been fully arranged and are not known to the public, my advices are that they are highly disadvantageous to this Government as they include a high rate of interest and a fixed percentage charge on customs duties.

The attitude of the President and his Cabinet vis-à-vis the situation which has been recounted in these pages remains calm, serene, active, and vigilant. The President is a man of indomitable courage, great energy, and, I believe, great patriotism. His manners and methods are not always above reproach, but he understands his country and the Mexican people, and he knows what he wants and usually manages to get it. The Cabinet is composed of some of the best material the country affords, and is in marked contrast with all others which have existed in the past ten years. While not in perfect political harmony, it is working unitedly and unselfishly for the restoration of peace throughout the country and it is having the support of the best elements.

296. This morning General Díaz assured me that his relations with Huerta were excellent up to date; that he had no reason to doubt Huerta's good faith nor his intention to carry out the election law impartially and regularly; that the compact made in this Embassy between himself and Huerta he now considered dissolved by the definite agreement and law for the constitutional election on October 26: and that he believed Huerta should receive the support of all Mexican elements and foreign powers in his difficult task of restoring peace. His information was that the revolutionary forces in the north were becoming badly demoralized, and on account of the large number of troops that were being dispatched north he expected to see a radical change in the situation there within two weeks. He greatly regretted the failure of our Government to accord official recognition of the present Provisional Government, as our attitude was misinterpreted both by the rebels and the Government, and tended rather to breed disorder than to impress what he believed was intended—our adherence to constitutional methods.

316. On behalf of our great trade and commercial interests with this country, which have been practically wiped out; of those harmonious relations which should exist between contiguous and friendly nations; of the 30,000 suffering Americans who are still left in Mexico, the objects of public hatred and without any guaranties of protection for their lives and property; of the more than 100,000 Mexicans whose lives have now been sacrificed in the struggle to restore order and peace in Mexico, I am obliged again to urge upon the President the pressing necessity for some action of a drastic and convincing kind that will convince this Government and this people that our nationals must be protected in life and property, and that the barbarous and inhuman warfare which has now been waged for three years shall cease. This may be brought about in two ways. First, by the official recognition of this Government, coupled with a demand for guaranties not only for the settlement of the existing questions between Mexico and the United States, which have already been agreed to in principle, but also for a clear and defined policy of protection to American lives and to American interests, either against the depredator or corrupt judiciary. Second, by the closing of our diplomatic establishment, leaving the same in the hands of this Embassy's clerks, but under the political charge of one of the resident ciplomats, and the withdrawal of the Ambassador and First Secretary from Mexico as a protest against existing conditions. I state this remedy simply, though if it were adopted it should be the subject of further discussion between the Embassy and the Department.

I submit these two courses as the only ones by which our interests may be conserved, our people protected, and a bloody war arrested. I can not obtain protection for our people at the present time because of the deliberate policy of the Mexican Government not to accord it, and because of the further fact that the whole course of events during the last three months, including the presence here in Mexico of persons claiming to be representatives of the President, are lowering the dignity of the Embassy and detracting from the respect and deference which the Mexican people have been taught to regard it during the last three years.

I believe this telegram should be called to the attention of the President and the Cabinet on account of the important policies it involves, and I [1] some important and definite expression as of paramount importance.

Therefore the Department desires when you learn that some one other than Mr. de la Barra is in charge of the business of the Mexican Foreign Office that you continue to make such representations as from time to time you are instructed to make to the central administration at Mexico City in the same manner as in the recent past. This applies equally to whoever may succeed Mr. de la Barra as Acting Secretary of State and whoever is subsequently appointed in his stead as Minister for Foreign Affairs. This, of course, does not raise any question of recognition.

316, July 9, 5 p. m., it should be called also to the following:

The transaction of business of any kind by this Embassy with this Government has now become practically impossible, as no attention is paid to representations concerning protection to either property or life, even when repeatedly made. Americans have been told by subordinate officials that they have instructions to discriminate, delay, and ignore all American matters. A practical boycott is being directed by this Government, against not only our official representatives, but also individual Americans all over the Republic who require protection or who have matters pending with the Government. This is accompanied by a rising tide of bitter resentment which is finding unlicensed expression in the press, which is now exciting the mob and is almost the sole topic of conversation. The incomputable sufferings and losses of Americans in Mexico promise to become infinitely greater, and their treatment is rapidly tending toward persecution. The insolence of public officials to this Embassy has become intolerable, and on Monday I was obliged to say to the President that unless the Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs was immediately dismissed for his insolent bearing toward the Embassy I should be compelled immediately to take some action that would bring matters to a crisis. This official was dismissed, but the general situation remains

The President should understand that in dealing with this situation he is now face to face with grave responsibilities which can be met only by an action of a firm, formidable and impressive character. One of the two courses indicated in my 316, July 9, 5 p. m., is all I can suggest, but perhaps another more satisfactory may be found by the President.

A great demonstration in honor of the new Japanese Minister, who will soon arrive, is being planned as expressive of friendship for Japan and mutual hatred for the United States. The press continues to publish untruthful and inciting articles against our Government, evidently inspired by this Government. A strong and aggressive attitude should be assumed at Washington. American Embassy, Mexico, July 12, 1913.

Mr. Subsecretary: I have noted with the greatest concern and some astonishment the remarkable demonstrations of ill will and hostility toward the Government of the United States which have taken place in this metropolis during the last three days. The excited and sensational utterances of an irresponsible press reciting occurrences which never occurred and events which never transpired; the supposedly patriotic ebullitions of misguided and tempestuous youth seeking to find expression in denunciation of a friendly Power at the risk of endangering the lives of Americans who have lived among them, and who, in the large majority, are in sympathy with their views; and the apathy of those who might guide and restrain public opinion at a time when, for the interests and good name of their own country, they should be active and vigilant, have made a profound impression on this Embassy and have brought it with great reluctance to a realization of the necessity of urging your excellency's Government to take active and immediate steps looking to the abatement of an entirely unjustifiable public excitement which might easily be made use of by demagogues or the enemies of order in bringing about conditions in this capital dangerous to all peaceful foreigners.

I am obliged to say to your excellency in the most friendly way that while this Embassy is under my charge I can not permit, without making use of all the resources placed in my hands, indiscriminate and unjustifiable abuse of the American Government, the American people, or Americans resident in Mexico, nor will any act of violence toward Americans, which it is within the power of your excellency's Government to prevent, be tolerated or extenuated. I recall to your excellency's recollection the circumstance that over half a million Mexicans are living on the other side of the frontier in peace and prosperity and under the protection of the laws of the United States. These Mexicans are not being menaced by public demonstrations, traduced by the press, injured in their business affairs, or threatened with violence. I must, with full knowledge of what this Government can and of what it can not do, request that your excellency's Government take steps guaranteeing to the Americans in Mexico every privilege and as much safety from abuse and violence as the citizens of this Republic enjoy under the laws of my country.

Foreign Office, Mexico City, July 15, 1913.

Mr. Ambassador: In note No. 6243, dated the 12th instant, your excellency states that you have noted [etc. to the end of the note].

It is a matter of much regret to me, as it is to your excellency, to refer to the manifestations of ill will on the part of a certain group and of various journals of the capital against the Government of the United States; but I can not but call your excellency's attention to the fact that such manifestations, in so far as the majority of the newspapers and the greater masses of the people are concerned, especially the youth of the schools and the working classes, are not directed against the American nation and much less against the Americans residing in this capital, which facts perhaps have not reached your excellency's knowledge in all the extent of the truth, because of the natu-

Your excellency states that the Americans who live in Mexico, whose supposed dangers have given rise to the representations I have the honor to reply to, are in perfect sympathy with the mass of the demonstrators. This very thing indicates to what extent their demonstrations will go, and I can without the least doubt assure your excellency that if the Americans have enjoyed in Mexico the fullest protection [sic], the same has not been the exclusive result of the vigilance of the Government, but also of the spirit of justice which moves the whole country, even at a time of excitement produced by the acts to which your excellency refers and which I am sure would not have caused the excitement of passions, such as we see, if certain representations had been attended to in time when made by the Government of Mexico in the most friendly way and with the desire to present before public opinion in this country the satisfactory results of its diplomatic action near the American Government in order to calm all kinds of animosity.

Your excellency may be sure, as there are many proofs in support of it, that the Mexican Government spontaneously will at all times prevent the overflowing of popular sentiment against the citizens or representatives of a friendly nation, whatever may be the diplomatic relations with the foreign Government to which they may belong, and your excellency may also feel certain that my Government will do nothing that will excite public opinion by giving out events which should remain a secret in the Chancelleries or by presenting others in an adulterated

I can not refrain from mentioning and examining the latest events, in order to make it completely clear as regards the reference made in your excellency's note.

The case of the Mexican flag insulted in Tucson was not published by the Mexican Government but on the contrary the statements of the Department of Foreign Relations very eloquently show, the desire to appease public opinion, notwithstanding that it has been necessary, as your excellency knows, to resort to all the means of persuasion in order not fully to show the lack of an active and energetic desire on the part of the United States to satisfy the just demands of the Mexican Government.

With reference to the case of Consul Johnson I shall say only that the events having occurred about the middle of June and the details of the same having been published since then with regard to the attempt to have the military band held at Brownsville pass into the ranks of the rebels, as suggested by by the above Consul, it has not been the Mexican Government which has published the matter in the press and it is not to blame if its efforts have been without a satisfactory reply to this day. To withdraw the exequatur of the above Consul, though perfectly justifiable, would have meant to deprive the Government of the United States of the occasion it had to show its spirit of impartiality and its good will toward this country and it would have tended to exasperate the people.

In the case of the conduct of the Commander of the S. S. Pittsburg some representations have been made to the Government of the United States, not precisely with reference to the direction given to the rays of the searchlight at the time of the fight between Government and rebel forces, but in regard to certain maneuvering of a suspicious character which might not indicate complicity, but a sign of the sympathy which, according to evidence generally obtained by the Embassy, exists between American residents of Sonora and the rebels operating in that state. On the other hand, the acts executed by the Commander of the Pittsburg were so public that no official declaration was needed to have them become the property of the press.

As your excellency may see, the whole of this affair is not a matter of fictitious doings to excite public opinion, but of a status of deep excitement, the cause of which is well known to your excellency, which you implicitly recognize when you say that the impartial and just American colony resident of this city is in close sympathy with the views of the demonstrators to whom you

It is not my intention to defend the press which maliciously tends to create disturbance, which it preserves by means of false reports and inflammatory statements; but if such were the theme of this note there is no doubt that the Mexican press would be the less guilty in view of the amount and intensity of the insults, slander and offenses of all k nds which, as your excellency knows, the press of the United States has been publishing during the past three years against men and groups of parties in my country and even against the whole nation, encouraged sometimes by the opinion of persons of political influence in the United States and on no few occasions by correspondents who live among us and who claim to be eye-witnesses of acts of their own invention or fancy, thus contributing to the torrent of misguided opinion of which your excellency has been one of the victims.

I will not make a comparison between the privileges and advantages enjoyed Mexican and American emigrants, as from such a comparison your excellency's compatriots would surely not be at a disadvantage. Your excellency's indications will always be carefully attended to, as in the past, without taking into consideration the equal treatment received by our nationals in the United States; because even though in many cases they may be treated differently on account of their origin or position, to do likewise would not be the means of remedying a deplorable condition, but rather of causing a lowering of the level of Mexico's obligations to protect all foreigners residing within its territory.

The Revolutionary Junta of the South and Center of the Republic of Mexico invites briefly the attention of the Embassy to its sentiments of gratitude and marked admiration, on account of the following:

The Revolution in the South and Center of the Republic is pursuing, with tenacity and constancy, the realization of the principles contained in the Plan

Therefore it is natural that we should be watchful of everything which in any way might affect the maintenance of our Creed, whether for our welfare or ruin.

We refer to events emanating from the White House in Washington, of great significance in favor of our country and therefore all we could desire in behalf of our revolutionary cause.

The national press has published the news that the Government of the White House will not recognize the Pseudo-Government of General Victoriano Huerta, because he has been unable to restore peace in Mexico.

Reason, judgment, political expediency and everything pertinent are on the side of the Government of the United States when proceeding as it has in the matter, because General Victoriano Huerta never will carry into realization the cherished ideal of peace on our soil.

The Revolutionary Junta, cognizant of what it means, economically as well as politically, that the Government of the United States should not have recognized the false Government of Huerta, we pray the Embassy under your excellency's worthy charge to convey to the Government and people of the United States our sincere gratitude, assuring the United States that our statements bear the approval of the whole nation.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs told me today that he had no opinion to express as to the mission of Mr. Lind. I am surprised that his coming has not excited more comment.

Several correspondents of American papers have received telegrams from their home offices stating that Mr. Lind is coming to suggest peace terms and also to insist on the resignation of General Huerta as a sine qua non. I am informed that tomorrow's papers will have a statement to this effect. I therefore request the Department immediately to give me authority to deny the part of the statement referring to the resignation of Huerta, as one of the correspondents informs me that the Governor of the Federal District told him that if it is true he does not see how he could prevent the crowd from mobbing Mr. Lind at the station; I fear that such notices in the press would both thwart Mr. Lind's mission and damage Americans in certain parts of Mexico.

It is impossible to reach any agreement between the military dictatorship of Huerta, fruit of treason and crime, and the just aspirations of the good Mexican people. War will continue until the downfall of Huerta is consummated. If the American Government will waive the embargo on arms and ammunition the Mexican people will end the war within a very short time and peace shall be solidly implanted in the Mexican Republic. The State of Sonora, of which I am Constitutional Governor, has succeeded in sweeping away from its territory Huerta's troops that occupy only the port of Guaymas, which is besieged by our troops. Throughout the entire State is peace and the legal authorities are in office, as your excellency can prove by the testimony of the United States [omission] in Sonora. As Governor of Sonora I beg leave to suggest to your excellency that the waiving of the embargo on arms and ammunition would abbreviate the civil war and produce, with the triumph of the Mexican people, peace in the Republic. ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT DELIVERED AT A JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS AUGUST 27, 1913, EMBODYING THE PRESIDENT'S INSTRUCTIONS TO MR. LIND, AND ACCOMPANIED BY THE REPLY OF THE MEXICAN FOREIGN OFFICE TO THE PROPOSALS MADE THROUGH MR. LIND.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS:

It is clearly my duty to lay before you, very fully and without reservation, the facts concerning our present relations with the Republic of Mexico. The deplorable posture of affairs in Mexico I need not describe, but I deem it my duty to speak very frankly of what this Government has done and should seek to do in fulfillment of its obligation to Mexico herself, as a friend and neighbor, and to American citizens whose lives and vital interests are daily affected by the distressing conditions which now obtain beyond our southern border.

MEXICO.

Those conditions touch us very nearly. Not merely because they lie at our very doors. That of course makes us more vividly and more constantly conscious of them, and every instinct of neighborly interest and sympathy is aroused and quickened by them; but that is only one element in the determination of our duty. We are glad to call ourselves the friends of Mexico, and we shall, I hope, have many an occasion, in happier times as well as in these days of trouble and confusion, to show that our friendship is genuine and disinterested, capable of sacrifice and every generous manifestation. The peace, prosperity and contentment of Mexico mean more, much more, to us than merely an enlarged field for our commerce and enterprise. They mean an enlargement of the field of self-government and the realization of the hopes and rights of a nation with whose best aspirations, so long suppressed and disappointed, we deeply sympathize. We shall yet prove to the Mexican people that we know how to serve them without first thinking how we shall serve ourselves.

But we are not the only friends of Mexico. The whole world desires her peace and progress; and the whole world is interested as never before. Mexico lies at last where all the world looks on. Central America is about to be touched by the great routes of the world's trade and intercourse running free from ocean to ocean at the Isthmus. The future has much in store for Mexico, as for all the States of Central America; but the best gifts can come to her only if she be ready and free to receive them and to enjoy them honorably. America in particular—America north and south and upon both continents—waits upon the development of Mexico; and that development can be sound and lasting only if it be the product of a genuine freedom, a just and ordered government founded upon law. Only so can it be peaceful or fruitful of the benefits of peace. Mexico has a great and enviable future before her, if only she choose and attain the paths of honest constitutional government.

The present circumstances of the Republic, I deeply regret to say, do not seem to promise even the foundations of such a peace. We have waited many months, months full of peril and anxiety, for the conditions there to improve, and they have not improved. They have grown worse, rather. The territory in some sort controlled by the provisional authorities at Mexico City has grown smaller, not larger. The prospect of the pacification of the country, even by arms, has seemed to grow more and more remote; and its pacification by the authorities at the capital is evidently impossible by any other means than force. Difficulties more and more entangle those who claim to constitute the legitimate government of the Republic. They have not made good their claim in fact. Their successes in the field have proved only temporary. War and disorder, devastation and confusion, seem to threaten to become the settled fortune of the distracted country. As friends we could wait no longer for a solution which every week seemed further away. It was our duty at least to volunteer our good offices—to offer to assist, if we might, in effecting some arrangement which would bring relief and peace and set up a universally acknowledged political authority there.

Accordingly, I took the liberty of sending the Honorable John Lind, formerly Governor of Minnesota, as my personal spokesman and representative, to the City of Mexico, with the following instructions:

"Press very earnestly upon the attention of those who are now exercising authority or wielding influence in Mexico the following considerations and advice:

"The Government of the United States does not feel at liberty any longer to stand inactively by while it becomes daily more and more evident that no real progress is being made towards the establishment of a government at the City of Mexico which the country will obey and respect.

"The Government of the United States does not stand in the same case with the other great Governments of the world in respect of what is happening or what is likely to happen in Mexico. We offer our good offices, not only because of our genuine desire to play the part of a friend, but also because we are expected by the powers of the world to act as Mexico's nearest friend.

"We wish to act in these circumstances in the spirit of the most earnest and disinterested friendship. It is our purpose in whatever we do or propose in this perplexing and distressing situation not only to pay the most scrupulous regard to the sovereignty and independence of Mexico—that we take as a matter of course to which we are bound by every obligation of right and honor—but also to give every possible evidence that we act in the interest of Mexico alone, and not in the interest of any person or body of persons who may have personal or property claims in Mexico which they may feel that they have the right to press. We are seeking to counsel Mexico for her own good and in the interest of her own peace, and not for any other purpose whatever. The Government of the United States would deem itself discredited if it had any selfish or ulterior purpose in transactions where the peace, happiness and prosperity of a whole people are involved. It is acting as its friendship for Mexico, not as any selfish interest, dictates.

"The present situation in Mexico is incompatible with the fulfillment of international obligations on the part of Mexico, with the civilized development of Mexico herself, and with the maintenance of tolerable political and economic conditions in Central America. It is upon no common occasion, therefore, that the United States offers her counsel and assistance. All America cries out for a settlement.

"A satisfactory settlement seems to us to be conditioned on-

"(a) An immediate cessation of fighting throughout Mexico, a definite armistice solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed;

"(b) Security given for an early and free election in which all will agree to take part;

"(c) The consent of General Huerta to bind himself not to be a candidate for election as President of the Republic at this election; and

"(d) The agreement of all parties to abide by the results of the election and cooperate in the most loyal way in organizing and supporting the new administration.

"The Government of the United States will be glad to play any part in this settlement or in its carrying out which it can play honorably and consistently with international right. It pledges itself to recognize and in every way possible and proper to assist the administration chosen and set up in Mexico in the way and on the conditions suggested.

"Taking all the existing conditions into consideration, the Government of the United States can conceive of no reasons sufficient to justify those who are now attempting to shape the policy or exercise the authority of Mexico in declining the offices of friendship thus offered. Can Mexico give the civilized world a satisfactory reason for rejecting our good offices? If Mexico can suggest any better way in which to show our friendship, serve the people of Mexico, and meet our international obligations, we are more than willing to consider the suggestion."

Mr. Lind executed his delicate and difficult mission with singular tact, firmness and good judgment, and made clear to the authorities at the City of Mexico not only the purpose of his visit but also the spirit in which it had been undertaken. But the proposals he submitted were rejected, in a note the full text of which I take the liberty of laying before you.

I am led to believe that they were rejected partly because the authorities at Mexico City had been grossly misinformed and misled upon two points. did not realize the spirit of the American people in this matter, their earnest friendliness and yet sober determination that some just solution be found for the Mexican difficulties; and they did not believe that the present administration spoke, through Mr. Lind, for the people of the United States. The effect of this unfortunate misunderstanding on their part is to leave them singularly isolated and without friends who can effectually aid them. So long as the misunderstanding continues we can only await the time of their awakening to a realization of the actual facts. We can not thrust our good offices upon them. situation must be given a little more time to work itself out in the new circumstances; and I believe that only a little while will be necessary. For the circumstances are new. The rejection of our friendship makes them new and will inevitably bring its own alterations in the whole aspect of affairs. The actual situation of the authorities at Mexico City will presently be revealed.

Meanwhile, what is it our duty to do? Clearly, everything that we do must be rooted in patience and done with calm and disinterested deliberation. Impatience on our part would be childish, and would be fraught with every risk of wrong and folly. We can afford to exercise the self-restraint of a really great nation which realizes its own strength and scorns to misuse it. It was our duty to offer our active assistance. It is now our duty to show what true neutrality will do to enable the people of Mexico to set their affairs in order again and wait for a further opportunity to offer our friendly counsels. The door is not closed against the resumption, either upon the initiative of Mexico or upon our own, of the effort to bring order out of the confusion by friendly cooperative action, should fortunate occasion offer.

While we wait, the contest of the rival forces will undoubtedly for a little while be sharper than ever, just because it will be plain that an end must be made of the existing situation, and that very promptly; and with the increased activity of the contending factions will come, it is to be feared, increased danger to the noncombatants in Mexico as well as to those actually in the field of battle. The position of outsiders is always particularly trying and full of hazard where there is civil strife and a whole country is upset. We should earnestly urge all Americans to leave Mexico at once, and should assist them to get away in every way possible—not because we would mean to slacken in the least our efforts to safeguard their lives and their interests, but because it is imperative that they should take no unnecessary risks when it is physically possible for them to leave the country. We should let everyone who assumes to exercise authority in any part of Mexico know in the most unequivocal way that we shall vigilantly watch the fortunes of those Americans who can not get away, and shall hold those responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning. That can be and will be made plain beyond the possibility of a mis-

For the rest, I deem it my duty to exercise the authority conferred upon me by the law of March 14, 1912, to see to it that neither side to the struggle now going on in Mexico receive any assistance from this side of the border. follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We can not in the circumstances be the partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Mexico, or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire

I am happy to say that several of the great Governments of the world have given this Government their generous moral support in urging upon the provisional authorities at the City of Mexico the acceptance of our proffered good offices in the spirit in which they were made. We have not acted in this matter under the ordinary principles of international obligation. All the world expects us in such circumstances to act as Mexico's nearest friend and intimate adviser. This is our immemorial relation towards her. There is nowhere any serious question that we have the moral right in the case or that we are acting in the interest of a fair settlement and of good government, not for the promotion of some selfish interest of our own. If further motive were necessary than our own good will towards a sister Republic and our own deep concern to see peace and order prevail in Central America, this consent of mankind to what we are attempting, this attitude of the great nations of the world towards what we may attempt in dealing with this distressed people at our doors, should make us feel the more solemnly bound to go to the utmost length of patience and forbearance in this painful and anxious business. The steady pressure of moral force will before many days break the barriers of pride and prejudice down, and we shall triumph as Mexico's friends sooner than we could triumph as her enemies—and how much more handsomely, with how much higher and finer satisfactions of conscience and of honor!

REPLY OF THE SECRETARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, SEÑOR GAMBOA, TO THE PROPOSALS OF THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT CONVEYED THROUGH THE HONORABLE JOHN LIND.

Foreign Office. Mexico, August 16, 1913.

Sir: On the 6th instant, pursuant to telegraphic instructions from his Government, the Charge d'Affaires ad interim of the United States of America verbally informed Mr. Manuel Garza Aldape, then in charge of the Department of Foreign Affairs, of your expected arrival in this Republic with a mission of peace. As fortunately neither then nor today has there existed a state of war between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, my Government was very much surprised to learn that your mission near us should be referred to as one of peace. This brought forth the essential condition which my Government ventured to demand in its unnumbered note of the 6th instant addressed to the aforesaid Chargé d'Affaires—"that if you do not see fit to properly establish your official character" your sojourn could not be pleasing to us according to the meaning which diplomatic usage gives to this word.

Fortunately, from the first interview I had the pleasure to have with you, your character as confidential agent of your Government was fully established, inasmuch as the letter you had the kindness to show me, though impersonally addressed, was signed by the President of the United States, for whom we entertain the highest respect. It is not essential at this time, Mr. Confidential Agent, that I should recall the whole of our first conversation. I will say, however, that I found you to be a well-informed man and animated by the sincerest wishes that the unfortunate tension of the present relations between your Government and mine should reach a prompt and satisfactory solution.

During our second interview, which, like the first one of the 14th instant, was held at my private [¹], you saw fit, after every earnest, honest and frank exchange of opinion concerning the attitudes of our respective Governments, which did not lead us to any decision, to deliver to me the note containing the instructions, also signed by the President of the United States. Duly authorized by the President of the Republic, pursuant to the unanimous approval of the Cabinet, which was convened for the purpose, I have the honor to make a detailed reply to such instructions.

The Government of Mexico has paid due attention to the advice and considerations expressed by the Government of the United States; has done this for three principal reasons: First, because, as stated before, Mexico entertains the highest respect for the personality of His Excellency Woodrow Wilson; second, because certain European and American Governments, with which Mexico cultivates the closest relations of international amity, have in a most delicate, respectful way, highly gratifying to us, made use of their good offices to the end that Mexico should accord you a hearing, inasmuch as you were the bearer of a private mission from the President of the United States; and, third, because Mexico was anxious, not so much to justify its attitude before the inhabitants of the Republic in the present emergency, the great majority of whom in imposing and orderly manifestations have signified their adhesion and approval, as to demonstrate in every way the justice of its cause.

The imputation contained in the first paragraph of your instructions—that no progress has been made toward establishing in the capital of Mexico a government enjoying the respect and obedience of the Mexican people—is unfounded. In contradiction of that gross imputation, which is not supported by any proofs, principally because there are none, it affords me pleasure to refer, Mr. Confidential Agent, to the following facts which abound in evidence and which to a certain extent must be known to you by direct observation. Mexican Republic, Mr. Confidential Agent, is formed of 27 States, 3 Territories, and 1 Federal District, in which the supreme power of the Republic has its seat. Of these 27 States, 18 of them, the 3 Territories and the Federal District (making a total of 22 political entities) are under the absolute control of the present Government, which, aside from the above, exercises its authority over almost every port in the Republic and consequently over the customhouses therein established. Its southern frontier is open and at peace. Moreover, my Government has an army of 80,000 men in the field with no other purpose than to insure complete peace in the Republic, the only national aspiration and solemn promise of the present Provisional President. The above is sufficient to exclude any doubt that my Government is worthy of the respect and obedience of the Mexican people, because the latter's consideration has been gained at the cost of the greatest sacrifice and in spite of the most evil in-

My Government fails to understand what the Government of the United States of America means by saying that it does not find itself in the same case with reference to the other nations of the earth concerning what is happening and is likely to happen in Mexico. The conditions of Mexico at the present time are unfortunately neither doubtful nor secret; it is afflicted with an internal strife which has been raging almost three years, and which I can only classify in these lines as a fundamental mistake. With reference to what might happen in Mexico neither you, Mr. Confidential Agent, nor I, nor anyone else can prognosticate, because no assertion is possible on incidents which have not oc-On the other hand, my Government greatly appreciates the good offices tendered to it by the Government of the United States of America in the present circumstances; it recognizes that they are inspired by the noble desire to act as a friend as well as by the wishes of all the other Governments which expect the United States to act as Mexico's nearest friend. But if such good offices are to be of the character of those now tendered to us we should have to decline them in the most categorical and definite manner.

Inasmuch as the Government of the United States is willing to act in the most disinterested friendship, it will be difficult for it to find a more propitious opportunity than the following: If it would only watch that no material and monetary assistance is given to rebels who find refuge, conspire, and provide themselves with arms and food on the other side of the border; if it would demand from its minor and local authorities the strictest observance of the neutrality laws, I assure you, Mr. Confidential Agent, that the complete pacification of this Republic would be accomplished within a relatively short time.

I intentionally abstain from replying to the allusion that it is the purpose of the United States of America to show the greatest respect for the sovereignty and independence of Mexico, because, Mr. Confidential Agent, there are matters which not even from the standpoint of the idea itself could be given an answer

His Excellency Mr. Wilson is laboring under a serious delusion when he declares that the present situation of Mexico is incompatible with the compliance with her international obligations, with the development of her own civilization, and with the required maintenance of certain political and economic conditions tolerable in Centra' America. Strongly backing that there is a mistake, because to this date no charge has been made by any foreign government accusing us of the above lack of compliance, we are punctually meeting all of our credits; we are still maintaining diplomatic missions cordially accepted in almost all the countries of the world, and we continue to be invited to all kinds of international congresses and conferences. With regard to our interior development, the following proof is sufficient, to wit, a contract has just been signed with Belgian capitalists which means to Mexico the construction of something like 5,000 kilometers of railway. In conclusion, we fail to see the evil results, which are prejudicial only to ourselves, felt in Central America by our present domestic war. In one thing I do agree with you, Mr. Confidential Agent, and it is that the whole of America is clamoring for a prompt solution of our disturbances, this being a very natural sentiment if it is borne in mind that a country which was prosperous only yesterday has been suddenly caused to suffer a great internal misfortune.

Consequently, Mexico can not for one moment take into consideration the four conditions which His Excellency Mr. Wilson has been pleased to propose through your honorable and worthy channel. I must give you the reasons for it: An immediate suspension of the struggle in Mexico, a definite armistice "solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed," is not possible, as to do this it would be necessary that there should be some one capable of proposing it without causing a profound offense to civilization, to the many bandits who, under this or that pretext, are marauding toward the south and committing the most outrageous depredations; and I know of no country in the world, the United States included, which has ever dared to enter into agreement or to propose an armistice to individuals who, perhaps on account of a physiological accident, can be found all over the world beyond the pale of the divine and human laws. Bandits, Mr. Confidential Agent, are not admitted to armistice; the first action against them is one of correction, and when this, unfortunately, fails, their lives must be severed for the sake of the biological and fundamental principle; then the useful sprouts should grow and fructify.

With reference to the rebels who style themselves "Constitutionalists," one of the representatives of whom has been given an ear by members of the United States Senate, what could there be more gratifying to us than if, convinced of the precipice to which we are being dragged by the resentment of their defeat, in a moment of reaction they were to put aside their rancor and add their strength to ours, so that all together we would undertake the great and urgent task of national reconstruction? Unfortunately they do not avail themselves of the amnesty law enacted by the Provisional Government immediately after its inauguration, but, on the contrary, well-known rebels holding elective positions in the capital of the Republic or profitable employments left the country without molestation, notwithstanding the information which the Government had that they were going to foreign lands to work against its interests, many of whom have taken upon themselves the unfortunate task of exposing the miseries and infirmities from which we are suffering, the same as any other human aggregations.

Were we to agree with them to the armistice suggested this would, ipso facto, recognize their belligerency, and this is something which can not be done for many reasons which can not escape the perspicacity of the Government of the United States of America, which to this day, and publicly, has at least classed them as rebels just the same as we have. And it is an accepted doctrine

The assurance asked of my Government that it will promptly call free elections is the most evident proof and the most unequivocal concession that the Government of the United States considers it legally and solidly constituted and that it is exercising, like all those of its class, acts of such importance as to indicate the perfect civil operation of a sovereign nation. Inasmuch as our laws already provide such assurance, there is no fear that the latter will not be observed during the coming elections; and as the present Government is of a provisional character it will cede its place to the definite Government which may be elected by the people.

The request that General Victoriano Huerta should agree not to appear as a candidate for the Presidency of the Republic in the coming elections can not be taken into consideration, because, aside from its strange and unwarranted character, there is a risk that the same might be interpreted as a matter of This point can be decided only by Mexican public opinion personal dislike.

The pledge that all parties should agree beforehand to the results of the election and to cooperate in the most loyal manner to support and organize the new administration is something to be tacitly supposed and desired; the experience of what this internal strife means to us in loss of life and the destruction of property will cause all contending political factions to abide by the results; but it would be untimely to make any assertion in this respect, even by the countries most experienced in civil matters, as no one can forecast or foresee the errors and excesses which men are likely to commit, especially under the influence of political passion.

We hasten to signify to the United States of America our appreciation of their agreement to recognize henceforth and aid the future [omission?] which we, the Mexican people, may elect to rule our destinies. On the other hand, we greatly deplore the present tension in our relations with your country, a tension which has been produced without Mexico having afforded the slightest cause therefor. The legality of the Government of General Huerta can not Article 85 of our Political Constitution provides: be disputed.

If at the beginning of a constitutional term neither the President nor the Vice Presi-If at the beginning of a constitutional term neither the President nor the Vice President elected present themselves, or if the election had not been held and the results thereof declared by the 1st of December, nevertheless the President whose term has expired will cease in his functions, and the Secretary for Foreign Affairs shall immediately take charge of the executive power in the capacity of Provisional President; and if there should be no Secretary for Foreign Affairs, or if he should be incapacitated, the Presidency shall devolve on one of the other secretaries pursuant to the order provided by the law establishing their number. The same procedure shall be followed when, in the case of the absolute or temporary absence of the President, the Vice President fails to appear, when on leave of absence from his post if he should be discharging his duties, and when in the course of his term the absolute absence of both functionaries should occur.

Now, then, the facts which occurred are the following: The resignation of Francisco I. Madero, Constitutional President, and José Maria Pino Suárez, Constitutional Vice President of the Republic. These resignations having been accepted, Pedro Lascurain, Minister for Foreign Affairs, took charge by operation of law of the vacant executive power, appointing, as he had the power to do, General Victoriano Huerta to the post of Minister of the Interior. Lascurain soon afterwards resigned, and as his resignation was immediately accepted by Congress, General Victoriano Huerta took charge of the executive power, also by operation of law, with the provisional character and under the constitutional promise already complied with to issue a call for special elections. As will be seen, the point of issue is exclusively one of constitutional law in which no foreign nation, no matter how powerful and respectable it may be, should mediate in the least.

Moreover, my Government considers that at the present time the recognition of the Government of General Huerta by that of the United States of America is not concerned, inasmuch as facts which exist on their own account are not and can not be susceptible of recognition. The only thing which is being discussed is a suspension of relations as abnormal and without reason; abnormal, because the Ambassador of the United States of America, in his high diplomatic investiture and appearing as Dean of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps accredited to the Government of the Republic, congratulated General Huerta upon his elevation to the Presidency, continued to correspond with this Department by means of diplomatic notes, and on his departure left the First Secretary of the Embassy of the United States of America as Chargé d'Affaires ad interim, and the latter continues here in the free exercise of his functions; and without reason, because, I repeat, we have not given the slightest pretext.

The Confidential Agent may believe that solely because of the sincere esteem in which the people and the Government of the United States of America are held by the people and Government of Mexico, and because of the consideration which it has for all friendly nations (and especially in this case for those which have offered their good offices), my Government consented to take into consideration, and to answer as briefly as the matter permits, the representations of which you are the bearer. Otherwise, it would have rejected them immediately because of their humiliating and unusual character, hardly admissible even in a treaty of peace after a victory, inasmuch as in a like case any nation which in the least respects itself would do likewise. It is because my Government has confidence that when the justice of its cause is reconsidered with serenity and from a lofty point of view by the present President of the United States of America, whose sense of morality and uprightness are beyond question, he will withdraw from his attitude and will contribute to the renewal of still firmer bases for the relations of sincere friendship and good understanding forcibly imposed upon us throughout the centuries by our geographical nearness-something which neither of us can change, even though we so desired-by our mutual interests and by our share of activity in the common prosperity, welfare and culture, in regard to which we are pleased to acknowledge that you are enviably ahead of us.

With reference to the final part of the instructions of President Wilson, which I beg to include herewith and which say, "If Mexico can suggest any better way in which to show our friendship, serve the people of Mexico, and meet our international obligations, we are more than willing to consider the suggestion," that final part causes me to propose the following equally decorous arrangement. One, that our Ambassador be received in Washington; two, that the United States of America send us a new ambassador without previous conditions.

And all this threatening and distressing situation will have reached a happy conclusion; mention will not be made of the causes which might carry us, if the tension persists, to no one knows what incalculable extremities for two peoples who have the unavoidable obligation to continue being friends, provided, of course, that this friendship is based upon mutual respect, which is indispensable between two sovereign entities wholly equal before law and justice.

In conclusion, permit me, Mr. Confidential Agent, to reiterate to you the assurances of my perfect consideration.

For the rest, I deem it my duty to exercise the authority conferred upon me by the law of March 14, 1912, to see to it that neither side to the struggle now going on in Mexico receive any assistance from this side of the border. I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. This is sent you for your information and can be shown to any Americans and other foreigners as well as to those who exercise authority in your consular district.

The note says that while the Government appreciates the action of the Department in communicating the propositions, it would have been difficult to advise Huerta to forego his presidential aspirations in view of the fact that the Spanish Government had recognized him; that as the situation had changed since receiving the propositions, the Spanish Government limits itself to the ardent wish that the understanding between the Republics may be of a character most favorable to the general interest of the two countries.

The Embassy's communication on Mexican affairs has been carefully examined. Animated by the desire to contribute to establishing good relations between the Cabinets of Washington and Mexico, the Imperial Government has expressed through its representative in Mexico its desire to see the Mexican Government inspired with a large spirit of conciliation in the settlement of pending questions; but it can not, to its great regret, support in a more formal manner the proposed good offices of the United States since no request in this sense has been made by Mexico.

Especially in regard to the candidacy of General Huerta for President, the Russian Government is of the opinion that having already recognized him as Provisional President, it is impossible for it to advise him to renounce his candidacy.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico, September 15, 1913.

492. Following is a translation of the most salient points of the presidential message to be delivered tomorrow, the 16th. It is only for domestic consumption and does not represent the real attitude of the Government here toward the United States, which is one, in my opinion, of falling in with the suggestions of the President of the United States without admitting that it is doing so. The Department will note that Mr. Lind's mission is only casually referred to. The message side-steps all issues. I am of the opinion that it may be considered as purely perfunctory.

Gamboa told me today that he did not know of Huerta's plans but that he took it as a matter of course that the elections would take place according to law.

Besides the fratricidal strife among Mexicans, which is about to end, we have the tenseness of our diplomatic relations with the United States Government, though not with the people, which has called universal attention to us and has caused us more than one hardship and retarded the complete pacification of the country. As this is a very delicate matter and inasmuch as the status of the noninterrupted negotiations has been brought to the attention of the Permanent Commission of Congress and of the nation in general, I shall only say that the Government hopefully expects that the contention which today holds in suspense the good friendship which of old and for an indefinite future has and will bind us to our powerful and civilized neighbor will soon be settled. I will add that the congratulations of the Permanent Commission and of the Supreme Court of the nation for the attitude of the Executive in these moments of trial are its best encouragement and the unmistakable sanction that when the dignity of the nation is at stake the three powers, as the last one of the Mexicans, will stand as one man and accept any kind of sacrifice. It is to be regretted that notwithstanding our bonds of blood, language, customs, aspirations and destinies, certain nations have abstained from responding to my autograph letter. The Executive does not know the cause and will not endeavor to ascertain it.

Several foreign vessels having been sent to Mexican waters for the protection and care of their nationals, due to the dangers arising from the present abnormal conditions of the country, the Foreign Office corresponded with foreign diplomats on the subject and as satisfactory explanations were made the Mexican Government dictated such orders as were in keeping with its laws, and as the same forbid the stay of a foreign vessel in Mexican territorial waters for more than 30 days the Senate passed a decree on April 25 last allowing the stay of such vessels during a period of six months from the above date but will not entertain the idea of a renewal of this permission. The Government, in accepting such liabilities as may arise from the present strife, but in accordance with the rules of international law, convened several diplomats accredited near it and proposed the creation of a committee made up of the leading business men and lawyers of Mexico to dispose rapidly of the claims of foreigners growing out of the abnormal conditions of the country. This committee, however, has not as yet been established, but the project for its creation will soon be sent to Congress for its deliberation.

The Executive refers to the enactment of the law of procedure concerning the elections to be held next October. The law was approved and will be put in force at the proper time.

Sir: I have the honor to report that at the weekly reception at the Foreign Office yesterday, Doctor Barbaroux, the Minister for Foreign Relations, in expressing the hope that conditions would improve in Mexico and become permanently settled upon the foundation of justice and popular government, referred to the message delivered by President Wilson in the Congress of the United States on August 27th, 1913, and stated that President Batlle y Ordóñez had read the message in its entirety and that he was greatly impressed with its broad spirit of justice and the frank and generous character of its sentiments and purposes. The statement, evidently, was made at the request of the President.

The Secretary for Foreign Affairs to Mr. Lind.

MEXICO, August 26, 1913.

SIR: Yesterday I had the honor of receiving from your hands a note in which you are pleased to state that, although you had no instructions from the President of the United States of America, from the scope of your instructions you reply to the note of this Government, given to you through me on the 16th instant.

You are pleased to repeat from those same instructions the paragraph which says literally:

"We wish to act in these circumstances in the spirit of the most earnest and disinterested friendship. It is our purpose in whatever we do or propose in this perplexing and distressing situation not only to pay the most scrupulous regard to the sovereignty and independence of Mexico—that we take as a matter of course to which we are bound by every obligation of right and honor—but also to give every possible evidence that we act in the interest of Mexico alone, and not in the interest of any person or body of persons who may have personal or property claims in Mexico which they may feel that they have the right to press. We are seeking to counsel Mexico for her own good and in the interest of her own peace, and not for any other purpose whatever. The Government of the United States would deem itself discredited if it had any selfish or ulterior purpose in transactions where the peace, happiness and prosperity of a whole people are involved. It is acting as its friendship for Mexico, not as any selfish interest, dictates."

In spite of the fact that at the beginning of the note which I now answer you state that you lack instructions from the President of the United States of America, after the statement which I have reproduced above you state in the name of the same President that the method indicated in my note of the 16th instant, in so far as it concerns the recognition of the present Government (which I may say in passing is quite far from being a de facto Government, as you have chosen to qualify it) or-this you add-of any other future Government of Mexico, is something which only the United States of America may decide, which in the exercise of its sovereign rights in this respect will not hesitate, especially in times of serious domestic troubles, to consummate in the manner which, in the judgment of the United States of America and not in that of Mexico, may be best for this latter. You add that the President of the United States of America sincerely and ardently believes that my Government will see in the suggestions of His Excellency Mr. Woodrow Wilson the most feasible plan for serving our vital interests and for insuring the speedy reestablishment of our domestic tranquillity. And, still in the name of the President of the United States, you submit to the consideration of my Government the three following propositions:

(1) That the election called for the 16th of October of the present year [the note sent to the Foreign Office by Mr. Lind stated October 26 and not 16] shall be held in accordance with the constitutional laws of Mexico.

(2) That President Huerta, in the manner originally indicated by the President of the United States of America, give the assurances called for in paragraph "c" of the original instruction, a paragraph which says literally "The consent of General Huerta to bind himself not to be a candidate for election as President of the Republic at this election."

(3) That the remaining propositions contained in your original instruction shall be taken up later but speedily, and resolved as circumstances permit and in the spirit of their proposal.

You add, furthermore, Mr. Confidential Agent, that the President of the United States of America has authorized you to say that if my Government "acts immediately and favorably upon the foregoing suggestions," the President will express to American bankers and their associates assurances that the Government of the United States of America will then look with favor upon the extension of an immediate loan sufficient in amount to meet the temporary requirements of the present Mexican administration. At the end of your note, Mr. Confidential Agent, you express the hope of your Government that my Government will judge it consistent with the best and highest interests of Mexico immediately to accept such propositions; that they are submitted in the same spirit and to the same end as the original propositions, but in a more restricted form to the end that my Government may act within its faculties without the cooperation or aid of any other outside factor.

It appears at once, Mr. Confidential Agent, that in this case the proposal of His Excellency Mr. Woodrow Wilson is not to remove himself an iota from the position originally assumed by him, for notwithstanding the time consumed since the 16th, the date of my reply, to the 25th, in which you delivered to me your second note, which I am here answering, the essence and even the form of his original instructions are the same, with the aggravating feature well qualified by you as "more restricted."

For my part it would have been sufficient to answer this note in its totality by reproducing the whole of my note of the 16th instant as negative as it is categorical, as I have the honor to reproduce it in the present note. But the President ad interim wishes to carry his forbearance to the last point, and to the end that Mexican public opinion, which is so justly disturbed by the present tension in the diplomatic relations between the two countries, and also to the end that the various foreign Governments which have offered their good offices in the most delicate possible manner—I am glad to repeat that this has been their attitude and not less pleased to express grateful acknowledgment thereof—may be duly informed, has authorized me to reply to you in the following terms:

I will begin by taking notice of a highly significant fact: Between the night of the 14th instant, when I received the sheets containing your instructions—not directed to anyone and calling the present administration "the persons who at the present time have authority or exercise influence in Mexico"—and yesterday, some progress has been made, in that now the Constitutional President ad interim (see paragraph No. 2 of the new propositions) is called "President"

Huerta," and in the whole course of the note the personnel of his administration is referred to as the "de facto Government."

But, inasmuch as this or that qualification is of no importance, upon the ground that all the representations of your Government have not been initiated except with ourselves, which gives us, upon the supposition that we have been dispossessed of it, a perfect political and moral personality to clear up the present divergence, I intentionally limit myself solely to pointing out the facts.

If your original proposals were not to be admitted, they are now, in the "more restricted" form in which they are reproduced, even more inadmissible, and one's attention is called to the fact that they are insisted upon, if it be noticed that the first proposal had already been declined. Precisely because we comprehend the immense value of the principle of sovereignty which the Government of the United States so opportunely invokes in the question of our recognition or nonrecognition—precisely for this reason we believe that it would never be proposed to us that we should forget our own sovereignty by permitting that a foreign government should modify the line of conduct which we have to follow in our public and independent life. If even once we were to admit the counsels and advice (let us call them thus) of the United States of America, not only would we, as I say above, forego our sovereignty, but we would as well compromise for an indefinite future our destinies as a sovereign entity and all the future elections for President would be submitted to the veto of any President of the United States of America. And such an enormity, Mr. Confidential Agent, no government will ever attempt to perpetrate, and this I am sure of, unless some monstrous and almost impossible cataclysm should occur in the conscience of the Mexican people.

We believed, taking into consideration the disproportionate interest that the President of the United States of America has shown concerning our internal affairs, that he as well as his Government would know perfectly well the provisions of our Constitution in the matter of elections. Unfortunately, and in view of the insistence with which His Excellency Mr. Wilson sustains his first ideas, we are compelled to acknowledge that we have made a mistake. The reform of constitutional articles Nos. 78 and 109, put into effect by the Congress of the Union on November 7, 1911, provides among other requirements that which is contained in the final part of article 78: "The Secretary of State in charge of the Executive power shall not be eligible to the office of either President or Vice President when the elections shall take place."

This transcription, which I take the liberty of making, Mr. Confidential Agent, in order that the Government of the United States of America may take due note of it, prevents the constitutional ad interim President of the Republic from being a candidate at the forthcoming elections; and if His Excellency President Wilson had taken into consideration that paragraph before venturing to impose upon us the conditions in question, and which we may not admit, the present state of affairs between you and ourselves would have been avoided, leaving out of the discussion our decorum and the personal pride of the President of the United States wrongly interested in this discussion without foundation.

It should be well understood that the ad interim President could not be elected President or Vice President of the Republic at the forthcoming elections already called for the 26th of October, because our own laws prohibit him from being a candidate, and these laws are the sole arbiters of our destinies; but never through the imposition, although friendly and disinterested, of the President of the United States of America, or of any other ruler, powerful or weak (this does not matter in the case), who would be equally respected by us.

I beg to inform you, Mr. Confidential Agent, that up to the present time, at least, only the President of the United States of America has spoken of the candidacy of the constitutional ad interim President at the forthcoming elections. Neither the solemn declarations of this high functionary nor the most insignificant of his acts—all of which have been done with a view of obtaining a complete pacification of the country, which is the supreme national aim and which he has decided to bring about in spite of everything—have authorized anyone even to suspect that such are his ultimate intentions. It is perfectly well known that there does not exist in the whole country a single newspaper, a single club, a single corporation or group of individuals who have launched his candidacy or even discussed it.

On what, then, is the gratuitous suspicion of the President of the United States of America based, and his demand, which is absolutely inadmissible, that the ad interim President of the Republic should enter into agreements and contract obligations which have never heretofore been imposed upon the ruler of any sovereign nation?

The question having been set forth, as I have had the honor of doing in this reply, His Excellency Mr. Wilson will have to withdraw from his present attitude, at the risk that his motives—which, I take pleasure in acknowledging, are, as he himself quotes them, friendly and disinterested, altruistic and without ulterior ends—at the risk, I repeat, that they may be wrongly and differently interpreted by all the other nations, which look upon our present international conflict with more or less interest. And although the President of the United States of America should take an altogether different stand from the universal viewpoint, which considers differently an administration under the conditions in which our own is at present (the best proof of my assertion is the unconditional recognition of the foremost powers of the world, amongst which the United States of America occupies such a prominent and legitimately acquired rank), he will have to cease to call us a de facto Government and will give us the title of ad interim Constitutional Government, which is the only one to which we are rightly entitled.

Permit me, Mr. Confidential Agent, not to reply for the time being to the significant offer in which the Government of the United States of America insinuated that it will recommend to American bankers the immediate extension of a loan which will permit us, among other things, to cover the immunerable urgent expenses required by the progressive pacification of the country; for in the terms in which it is couched it appears more to be an attractive antecedent proposal to the end that, moved by petty interests, we should renounce a right which incontrovertibly upholds us. When the dignity of the nation is at stake, I believe that there are not loans enough to induce those charged by the law to maintain it to permit it to be lessened. On the other hand, I have seen with great pleasure that the President of the United States of America proposes for a later date, and, according to what the circumstances permit, the solution of what was marked with the letter "a" in the original instructions, and in the note to which this is a reply with the number 3; for this reveals that we are really in the way of arriving at an arrangement equally dignified for both sides.

In view of all this, Mr. Confidential Agent, today, more than ever, we profoundly hope for an immediate solution of the conflict which unfortunately has separated us. I would go even further: I would forego on our part that our respective ambassadors be received immediately, since for the end in view the present personnel of our reciprocal embassies is sufficient, if it remains as it has been heretofore, until the elections of October have taken place; but I will always stand on the unavoidable condition which declares that we are in reality

In my turn, Mr. Confidential Agent, I beg again to repeat to you the pleasing impression which you leave with me as a citizen of the United States of America, and as an able, righteous and well-intentioned personal representative of His Excellency Mr. Woodrow Wilson; I esteem in you greatly the gratitude which you say you profess for the well-deserved treatment which you have received in Mexico at the hands of the ad interim Constitutional President of the Republic, from private individuals and from myself, and I reiterate to you, as in my previous note, my perfect consideration.

The Government assures me that its troops, which have been successful in other parts of the north, will now concentrate in the vicin-

The President, shocked at the lawless methods employed by General Huerta and as a sincere friend of Mexico, is deeply distressed by the present situation. General Huerta's course in dissolving Congress and arresting deputies the President finds it impossible to regard otherwise than as an act of bad faith toward the United States. It is not only a violation of constitutional guaranties but it destroys all possibility of a free and fair election. The President believes that an election held at this time and under conditions as they now exist would have none of the sanctions with which the law surrounds the ballot, and that its results could therefore not be regarded as representing the will of the people. In accordance with the resolutions transmitted in Mr. O'Shaughnessy's telegram of October 10, 10 a. m.

V. Huerta.

I sent the Minister of Gobernación to ask that that body reconsider its resolutions. All was in vain. The reserves of prudence and order being exhausted, I was forced to decide upon the dissolution of the Legislative Power in order that the voting public, satiated with the anguish of a long civil war, may send to the national representative body citizens whose only zeal, whose only ideal, is the reconstruction of the fatherland upon a solid foundation of public peace.

PRESIDENT DISSOLVES CONGRESS AND CALLS FOR NEW ELECTIONS.

[Extract from news item.]

The Lower House of Congress was dissolved by force of arms yesterday afternoon, the Liberal and Renovador members being arrested and sent to the penitentiary by order of President Victoriano Huerta. Minister Garza Aldape of the Department of Gobernación, attempted to persuade the Deputies to retract their action of Thursday but failed and then ordered the arrests made.

After a committee of Senators had conferred with the President and the Upper House had been fully informed of the happenings in the associate assembly, it adjourned without date. A record of the events leading up to the dissolution was drawn up and signed by the Senators.

None of the members of the Upper House was arrested and it was stated last night that President Huerta had assured them that the Deputies under arrest would be treated with due consideration.

AMERICAN LEGATION, San Salvador, October 17, 1913.

Sir: Referring to the Department's telegraphic instruction of October 14, 7 p. m., I have the honor to report that the Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs told me that his Government knew nothing officially of recent events in Mexico as the Salvadoran Minister accredited to that Republic was at present on leave in this city, and that the Government of Salvador was astonished at the high-handed actions of General Huerta. The present attitude of the Government of the United States toward Mexico, he added, met with the approval of his Government, which believed that it was for the ultimate good of the Mexican people.

[Inclosure—Translation.]

Speech of Senator Belisario Domínguez made of record in the Mexican Senate but not read, being ruled out of order on September 23, 1913.

Gentlemen: You have all read with deep interest the message presented by Don Victoriano Huerta to the Congress of the Union on the 16th instant [Sep-

There is no doubt, gentlemen, that you as well as myself felt indignant in the face of the accumulation of falsities contained in that document. Whom does that message aim to deceive, gentlemen? The Congress of the No, gentlemen; all its members are cultured persons who take an interest in politics, who are in touch with events in this country and who can not be deceived on the subject. Is it the Mexican Nation that is to be de-Is it this noble country which, trusting in your honesty, has placed in your hands her most sacred interests? What must the National Assembly do in this case? It must respond promptly to the trust and the confidence of the Nation which has honored this body with her representation, and it must let her know the truth and so prevent her from falling into the abyss that is opening at her feet.

The truth is this: During the reign of Don Victoriano Huerta not only has nothing been done in favor of the pacification of the country, but the present condition of the Mexican Republic is infinitely worse than ever before. revolution is spreading everywhere. Many nations, formerly good friends of Mexico, now refuse to recognize this Government, since it is an illegal one. Our coin is depreciated, our credit in the throes of agony. The whole press of the Republic, either muzzled or shamelessly sold to the Government, systematically conceals the truth. Our fields are abandoned. Many towns have been destroyed. And, lastly, famine and misery in all their forms threaten What is the cause of such a to spread throughout our unhappy country. wretched situation?

First, and above everything else, this condition is due to the fact that the Mexican people can not submit and yield to and accept as President of the Republic the soldier who snatched the power by means of a treason and whose first act on arising to the presidency was to assassinate in the most cowardly manner the President and Vice President legally consecrated by the popular vote, and the first of which two men was he who promoted and gave position to Don Victoriano Huerta and covered him with honors, was the man to whom Victoriano Huerta publicly swore loyalty and faithfulness.

Second, this situation is the result of the means adopted by Don Victoriano Huerta and which he has been employing in order to obtain the pacification of the country. You know what these means are: nothing but extermination, death for all the men, all the families, all the towns which do not sympathize

"Peace will be made at any cost whatever," said Don Victoriano Huerta. Have you studied, gentlemen, the terrible meaning of these words of the egotistical, ferocious man, Don Victoriano Huerta? They mean that he is ready to shed all the Mexican blood, to cover with corpses the whole surface of the national territory, to convert our country into one immense ruin, so that he may not leave the presidential chair nor shed a single drop of his own blood.

In his insane desire to keep the post of President, Victoriano Huerta is committing a new infamy. He is provoking an international conflict with the United States of America, a conflict in which, if it is to be solved by fighting, all surviving Mexicans would participate, giving stoically the last drop of their blood, giving their lives-all save Don Victoriano Huerta and Don Aureliano Blanquette, for these disgraced ones are stained with the blot of treason and the nation and the army will repudiate them when the time comes.

It seems as if our ruin is unavoidable, for Don Victoriano Huerta has taken hold of power in such a way, in order to insure the triumph of his candidacy to the presidency of the Republic in the elections to be held October 26, that he has not hesitated to violate the sovereignty of the greater part of the States, deposing the legally elected Constitutional Governors and supplanting them with military governors who will take good care to cheat the people by means of ridiculous and criminal farces.

However, gentlemen, a supreme effort might save everything. National Assembly fulfill its duty and the nation is saved, and she will rise up and become greater, stronger, more beautiful than ever.

The National Assembly has the duty of deposing Don Victoriano Huerta from the Presidency. He is the one against whom our brothers up in arms in the North protest, and consequently he is the one least able to carry out the pacification which is the supreme desire of all Mexicans.

You will tell me, gentlemen, that the attempt is dangerous, for Don Victoriano Huerta is a bloodthirsty and ferocious soldier who assassinates anyone who is an obstacle to his wishes. But this should not matter, gentlemen.

country exacts from you the fulfillment of a duty, though there is the risk-the certainty—that you will lose your lives.

If in your anxiety to see peace reign again in the Republic you made a mistake and put faith in the false words of the man who promised to pacify the Republic, today when you see clearly that this man is an imposter, a wicked inept who is fast pushing the nation toward ruin, will you, for fear of death, permit such a man to continue to wield power? Reflect, gentlemen; meditate, and reply to this query.

What would be said of those on a vessel who, during a violent storm on a treacherous sea, would appoint as pilot a butcher who had no recommendation to the post other than the fact of his having betrayed and assassinated the captain of the vessel?

Your duty is unalterable, unavoidable, gentlemen, and the nation expects of you its fulfillment.

This first duty discharged, it will be easy for the National Assembly to fulfill others derived from it, asking all revolutionary chiefs to stop all active hostilities and to appoint their delegates in order that by general accord the president be elected who is to call for presidential elections and who is to take care that these be carried out in all legality.

The world is looking on us, gentlemen, members of the National Assembly, and the nation hopes that you will honor her before the world, saving her from the shame of having as first magistrate a traitor and assassin.

78. Your October 14, 7 p. m. Last night Sir Edward Grey said his Government would wait till October 26 before deciding its next step and that then he would inform me what they would do. He expressed hope that there was no truth in the newspaper rumor that the President would raise embargo on arms to the "rebels in the north."

I again explained at length the President's policy and reasons therefor, saying that if he used the power of the United States in favor of one adventurer in Mexico or any other Latin American state merely because he seemed at any given moment stronger than his opponents no progress toward stable government could ever be made and that there must be some moral foundation for our approval. I explained how we could not consider financial interests except as secondary to moral interests. I expressed my own belief that the President would never intervene for mere financial interests, however great or insistent, and that merely to restore order by force would not mean progress toward stable government by Mexicans, but would be only another name for conquest, which was abhorrent.

Sir Edward expressed sympathy with this view and remarked that the trouble with intervention was the trouble of getting out.

I reminded him that Mexico was only a part of Latin America and that the investments made there under Diaz did not change the fundamental problem.

He granted that the problem of the United States with Mexico was very different from the problem of any other Government. His direct comment was meager, but the general impression he made on my mind very distinctly was his appreciation of the difficulties and an increasing respect for the President's policy

Sir: On the receipt of the Department's telegraphic instruction of October 14th, 7 p. m., I called upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs in order to acquaint him with the attitude of our Government on the matters to which the despatch referred. After conferring with the President, Dr. Lauro Muller renewed his assurances to me that the Government of Brazil intended to act in full accord with that of the United States.

Regarding the question whether Brazil would feel justified in accepting the result of an election held under the conditions which it appeared likely would surround the approaching election in Mexico and would not recognize the President who should be chosen as the result of that election, Dr. Muller reserved his opinion but without indicating that the judgment of the American Government would not strongly affect his own in the matter.

Subsequent to my interview with him, the Foreign Minister took occasion to discuss the Mexican situation with the Chilean Minister, to whom he said that the Government of Brazil was working harmoniously with that of the American Government and that the course which General Huerta had pursued in imprisoning the members of the Mexican Congress justified both Governments in withholding their recognition of the Huerta Government.

576. General Huerta received the Diplomatic Corps today. He was accompanied by the entire Cabinet and made the following statement: That as the sole reason for his having taken the Presidency was the pacification of Mexico and that as the elections decreed by law are now about to take place, his Government must await the will of the people; that he had dissolved the Chamber because it was revolutionary and disloyal to the Federal Government, nearly 50 Deputies having joined the revolution in various parts of the Republic, and that incriminating documents had been found in the desks of a large number of Deputies who had been arrested on the dissolution of the Chamber. Coming to the elections, he said that all candidates would have equal protection by the Government; that as he had reason to fear that some of his friends would propose him as a candidate for the Presidency at the polls and would vote for him he wished to make it known that such votes would be null and void, and that even if he should receive the majority of the votes cast his election would be null and void, and that he will under no consideration accept a mandate from the people at this time; that he desired to impress upon the Diplomatic Corps that he would not consider accepting the Presidency not only because the Constitution prohibited him but also because he had given public promise to the contrary. He requested the members of the Diplomatic Corps very insistently to inform their Governments in the sense of the above.

After the formal statement Huerta asked me to be good enough to assure my Government of his bona fides, and that his greatest desire is to see Mexico again normal and prosperous in order that the Government of the Republic might approach the question of social betterment, which he says is at the bottom of the revolution and which is being exploited by unprincipled leaders thereof.

Grey asked: In case the British Government should withdraw recognition of Huerta, what would happen? I replied: "In my own opinion he would soon collapse." Grey said: "What would happen then? Worse chaos?" I said: "That is impossible. There is no worse chaos than deputies in jail, dictatorial doubling of the tariff, suppression of opinion and practical banishment of independent men. If Huerta fell, there was hope that suppressed men and opinion would set up a successful government." He asked: "Suppose that fails, what then?" I replied that in case of continued and utter failure the United States might feel obliged to repeat its dealings with Cuba, and that continued excitement of opinion in the United States might precipitate this. The request was received in an agreeable spirit, qualified by the statement that they would probably eventually follow the lead of

The comparison was drawn between our position in connection with Mexico and that of the Austro-Hungarian Government and Servia, and attention was drawn to the fact that although for political and commercial reasons the new régime in Servia was promptly recognized, King Peter has never been received at the Austrian Court, as a protest against the methods through which he came into power.

3d. If there should be sufficient time for it, strict orders should be given that polls for rural estates should not be established in the seat of the municipality or town, but in the estates themselves of the electoral division, this for the purpose of avoiding the attendance of those who are to take charge of the polls, the principal object being to prevent the elections in two-thirds, plus one, of Therefore, the greatest number of polls the polls constituting the district. * * To meet the provisions of the law, and conceal the abovementioned omission, a complete list should be published giving the names of the persons who are to have charge of the polls in accordance with article 13 of the electoral law of May 31, 1913, it being understood that only the appointments corresponding to the third part or less shall be sent to the sections, among which are to be included the polls in the urban wards.
4th. In all the polls which may operate, blank tickets shall be made use of in order that the absolute majority of the votes may be cast in favor of Gral.

5th. In spite of the fact that article 31 provides that the returns should be at once and directly sent to the Chamber of Deputies, the chairmen of the polls shall be instructed that the returns be sent to the Political Prefecture, which returns shall be quickly examined by the Jefe Político, and if the same are found to be in accordance with the instructions given therein, he shall return them to the chairmen, informing them that they must send them directly to the Chamber of Deputies. If upon making the examination, it should appear that the third part of the polls have not acted right, they shall fail to send the number of returns that may be necessary, to the end that the Chamber of Deputies may receive only one-third or less of the total.

6th. Political parties and citizens shall be given full freedom in the polls which may operate, allowing them to make all kinds of protests, provided they refer to votes in favor of any of the candidates appearing before the people; but care shall be taken that such protests do not refer to the votes mentioned in paragraph 4 of these instructions.

7th. If upon examining the returns the Jefes Políticos should find that the votes do not agree with the instructions, before sending them they should fix them up to the end that the note of transmission, the minutes of the election, etc., should agree with the instructions.

8th. Persons shall be chosen who will inspire absolute confidence and are well versed in the electoral law, to make a quiet and reserved inspection of the polls which may be in operation and to present before them all sorts of protests in accordance with article 30 of the electoral law, it being understood that all protests should refer to the candidates who may be in the field, but never in regard to votes mentioned in paragraph 4.

9th. After elections, they shall make a quick concentration of the polls which were in operation, and shall communicate this information to the Government, if possible, on the same day and in cipher and by special courier.

10th. Under the most strict responsibility, the Governor of a State who may receive these instructions shall comply with them, under the penalty of discharge from office and other punishment which the Federal Government may see fit to apply.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 28, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date transmitting a copy of a telegram received by you from Admiral Fletcher, at Vera Cruz, with reference to the action of the U. S. S. Wheeling in taking on board General Díaz and two friends, and Williams, American correspondent of the New York Herald. In this connection I beg to advise that, while the rule governing such cases is that it is the duty of American men of war to protect American citizens, it is, as a general rule, against the policy of this Government to grant asylum in its ships to the citizens of foreign countries engaged in political activity, especially when such asylum is for the purpose of furthering their political plans. Temporary shelter to such persons, when they are seeking to leave their country, has sometimes been conceded on grounds of humanity, but even this is done with great circumspection lest advantage be taken of it to further the political fortunes of individuals with the result of involving us in the domestic politics of foreign countries.

In this case you will please direct the commander of the Wheeling to furnish Williams, the American correspondent of the New York Herald, who, we take it for granted, is not a citizen of Mexico, asylum on the American ship until he can secure passage to the United States. In the case of General Díaz and his two friends, you will give them temporary asylum until they can find a ship to take them away from Mexico, it being taken for granted that they do not desire to remain in Mexico. They will, of course, understand that while they are on an American ship they can not use it as a basis

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 7, 1913—10 p. m.

While the President feels that he can not yet announce in detail his policy with regard to Mexico, nevertheless he believes that he ought, in advance thereof, to make known to the Government to which you are accredited his clear judgment that it is his immediate duty to require Huerta's retirement from the Mexican Government, and that the Government of the United States must now proceed to employ such means as may be necessary to secure this result; that, furthermore, the Government of the United States will not regard as binding upon the people of Mexico anything done by Huerta since his assumption of dictatorial powers, nor anything that may be done by the fraudulent Legislature which he is about to convoke. The President hopes that the Government to which you are accredited will see fit to use its influence to impress upon Huerta the wisdom of retiring in the interest of peace and constitutional government.

Department's November 7, 10 p. m. I said today to Sir Edward Grey some appreciative words regarding his Guildhall speech. Later, in giving his answer, promised last Saturday, as to the British Government's attitude toward Huerta, Sir Edward unhesitatingly declared that they would lend no support to Huerta as against the United States.

Question: What do you mean by support?

Answer: Aid of any sort as against the United States.

Question: How would that be made effective?

Answer: If Huerta asks for our aid we shall tell him we can not lend it.

Question: Suppose he does not ask it? Answer: If he shows he expects it.

Question: Will you declare that to Huerta?
Answer: I will instruct Carden that if Huerta asks for aid or shows by act that he expects it, he (Carden) is to inform him that he shall not have it.

Sir Edward stopped short at saying that without such act or request from Huerta he would instruct Carden to take the initiative in approaching him. It is possible that he may have in mind a wish to hear first from the other Governments he is consulting. He said he would continue the conversation with me after he had heard from the other Governments, mentioning in particular France, Germany, and Spain.

Sir Edward Grey was definite, positive, exceedingly friendly, even cordial, and he seemed to me to give all we asked. He does not regard it as proper for his Government to take an aggressive attitude because that would imply active British intervention, which the British Government does not regard as its duty, nor as desired by the United States. But if Huerta shows by word or act that he counts on British aid in any form, he will be promptly informed that the British Government will not give it. Sir Edward left the question of possible mediation between Huerta and the United States open until he should hear from other Governments, when it may be they will voluntarily advise Huerta to retire. We feel here that our whole contention has been granted. The general feeling toward Huerta has completely changed here, and his elimination is regarded as certain, imminent and desirable; but they regard this as the task of the United States, with their cordial approval, and not as their task.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose, for the consideration of the Department, a copy and translation of an interesting editorial from the Jornal do Commercio of Rio de Janeiro, of the 19th instant, relative to the policy of our Government as regards Mexico.

As the Department is doubtless aware, the Jornal do Commercio is by far the most representative paper published in this capital and in fact, in the opinion of many, ranks among South American papers second only to La Prensa of Buenos Aires. Its editor and owner is Dr. José Carlos Rodrigues, a man of wide experience and balance, who has traveled extensively in the United States and elsewhere. Dr. Rodrigues is a close personal friend of Dr. Lauro Müller and is in full accord with the Minister's policy as regards the relations between the United States and Brazil in the Mexican situation. * * *

The accompanying excerpt and translation from the Correio da Manhã of today's date—another important metropolitan journal—indicates quite clearly the trend of public opinion.

I have [etc.]

J. BUTLER WRIGHT.

[Inclosures - Extracts - Translations.]

From the Journal do Commercio:

President Wilson does not desire intervention in Mexico nor in any other country. What he desires is that there should be established in that country a regular government, recognized by the people. He is not influenced by the fact that other nations, badly informed, hastened to recognize Huerta. He has his policy and does not waver in it. He has a perfect right to intervene in Mexico now, or to end the illegal and immoral government of Huerta, or, if he should be appealed to by the revolutionists, if the constituted "government" allows the struggle to be prolonged by lack of resistance: this right is the same as that exercised 46 years ago when the Government at Washington intimated to Napoleon that the French troops should be withdrawn from Mexico.

It is enough for us, not having interests there ourselves, to follow the policy of our friend the United States, which has important interests; and we should remember also that this is the policy of our Minister for Foreign Relations, who is so wisely directing our international policy.

From the Correio da Manhã:

The United States, in endeavoring to free Mexico from Huerta's Government, is inspired by the requirements of civilization and the rights of humanity. All the civilized world is in sympathy with this desire. Brazil, an old friend of the United States, together with other countries, welcomes the efforts of the Government at Washington to restore peace in Mexico, freeing that country at the same time from a government which Mexico herself repels, a government detested by the best citizens, a barbarous government which rose out of the assassination of Madero and which only lives through terror and the shedding of blood.

It remains to be seen whether the United States is in such a position in regard to Mexico that intervention is justified. This is a delicate question and for this reason the Government at Washington has hesitated to decide it. Nevertheless the United States and its citizens have suffered great losses. In Mexico it is not only the property of Americans that is to be protected but even their lives. The United States might also legitimately intervene in the cause of humanity.

ARTICLE 1. The extraordinary elections for President and Vice President of the Republic which took place on October 26, 1913, are declared null since the majority of the electoral precincts did not function legally and since this is a cause for nullity as is provided in article 42, fraction 3, of the law of May 31, 1913.

ART. 2. The Mexican people is convoked to new extraordinary elections for President and Vice President of the Republic, which shall be direct and in accord with the provisions of the electoral law of May 31, 1913, and shall take place at the same time as those for Deputies and Senators the first Sunday in July of the coming year of 1914.

Art. 3. The mandatories elected shall begin the occupation of their posts as soon as the Chamber of Deputies makes the respective declaration and shall terminate them on November 30, 1916.

ART. 4. Citizen General Victoriano Huerta shall continue as Constitutional President ad interim of the United Mexican States until the extraordinary elections for President and Vice President of the Republic have been held and Congress issues the necessary declaration setting the date when he shall turn over the power to the President elect.

VIOLATIONS OF NEUTRALITY—PROHIBITION OF SHIPMENT OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS OF WAR INTO MEXICO FROM THE UNITED STATES, AND EXCEPTIONS THERETO.

Note. On March 14, 1912, the President proclaimed a joint resolution of Congress of that date providing:

That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war 2 procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

I have found that there exist in Mexico such conditions of domestic violence promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States as contemplated by the said Joint Resolution; and I do hereby admonish all citizens of the United States and every person to abstain from every violation of the Joint Resolution above set fouth beacher media and its latest and the contemplation of the Joint Resolution above set fouth beacher media and its latest and the latest an tion of the Joint Resolution above set forth, hereby made applicable to Mexico, and I do hereby warn them that all violations of such provisions will be rigorously prosecuted. And I do hereby enjoin upon all officers of the United States, charged with the execution of the laws thereof, the utmost diligence in preventing violations of said Joint Resolution and this my Proclamation issued thereunder, and in bringing to trial and punishment any offenders against the same.

In regard to the shipment of arms into Mexico from the United States for the protection of American citizens, the Mexican Foreign Office in objecting to shipments to consular offices of the United States stated on December 12, 1912, to the American Ambassador as follows:

This Government has followed the invariable rule of not allowing foreigners residing in Mexico to be armed by their Governments; therefore I beg that when you think it proper to ask that any American citizen domiciled in this Republic should procure arms, you will make your request as if it concerned a transaction between individuals, so that the Mexican Government may have the satisfaction of granting it in all cases where it is possible.

The Secretary of State in response instructed the Ambassador⁴ to say:

that although the arms and ammunition are for convenience consigned to the consuls, they are intended for the protection of individual American citizens,

Another point discussed in 1912 was the distinction between the shipments of arms forbidden by the above-mentioned Proclamation and the mere commercial sale of arms. The Department of State announced the attitude of this Government in the following statement 5 to the Mexican Embassy:

It is the well-known practice of merchants of neutral countries to furnish munitions of war to one or both of contending belligerents.

² "Munitions of war" are defined by the Attorney General in a letter to the President dated March 25, 1912. See For. Rel. 1912, pp. 759-761.

³ For Rel. 1912, pp. 877-878.

The situation is somewhat different, however, with reference to the so-called neutrality statutes which have been enacted by this Government, which, going beyond the provisions of international law, do make illegal certain acts specified in the statutes even when no state of belligerency exists, such acts being directed against the established government of a country with which this Government is at peace. But the duties of neutrality under the law of nations cannot be either expanded or contracted by national legislation. * * Our own statutes bind only our own Government and citizens and those within our jurisdiction. If they impose on us a larger duty than is imposed on us by international law, they do not correspondingly enlarge our duties to foreign nations. Since therefore these statutes only qualify as offenses certain specified transactions which would not otherwise have that character * * it is evidently necessary that the act complained of should clearly fall within the statutes in order that it should be regarded as illegal.

These so-called neutrality statutes do not, any more than the general laws of neutrality, prohibit the mere commercial exportation of arms and ammunition, and, that being true, the Executive is, under them, powerless, however much it might in any given case wish to do otherwise, legally to prevent this traffic so long as it remains purely commercial and is unconnected with any other act

It will therefore be quite clear that under the principles of international law as well as under the so-called neutrality statutes of this country, the mere commercial sale of supplies in El Paso to Mexicans, whether insurrectos or supporters of the Government, and their simple delivery across the border, cannot be looked upon as a violation of international law or of the so-called neutrality statutes.

The Mexican Embassy responded (For. Rel. 1912, p. 743) that the failure of the neutrality statutes to cover many important points was not good ground for failure of this Government to take any steps calculated to prevent acts that come within the field of international duty, and consequently the Mexican Government hoped this Government would take measures to prevent exportation of arms and ammunition into Mexico.

The majority of the complaints made by Mexico in relation to such shipments, however, characterized the shipments as violative of the neutrality laws of the U.S. This attitude prevails in the correspondence during 1913.

As this correspondence is largely a series of notifications of reported shipments of this kind, which the Department of State disposed of by reference to the competent authorities, without controversy, this portion of it is reduced to the following list. The correspondence is printed in full in cases where it contains remarks not of a routine nature.

The Acting Secretary of State to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 24, 1913.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: A joint resolution of Congress, approved March 14, 1912, provides: "That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress." On the same date the President issued a proclamation declaring and proclaiming that the conditions contemplated by the joint resolution existed in Mexico and making applicable to Mexico the provisions of the resolution. The Attorney-General was then called upon to define the term "arms and munitions of war" within the meaning of the proclamation, and it was left for the State Department, with its knowledge of conditions in Mexico, to decide whether or not a contemplated shipment of arms or munitions of war from this country into Mexico should be recommended to the President for exception from the operation of the law and the proclamation of March 14th.

It has been the custom, when an application for an exception is made, to investigate through the nearest consular officer the conditions in the vicinity of the destination of the shipment and along the route from the port of entry into Mexico to destination, and, where it appears necessary, to investigate also the bona fides of the consignee and the matter of the use to which the arms or munitions in question will be put after delivery. The necessary orders to the Secretary of the Treasury, which are sent to the Executive Office for signature by the President, are then prepared and at the same time the necessary communications to consuls at the ports of entry into Mexico and to the shippers in this country; these communications being held until the Department is informed by the Executive Office that the Treasury orders have been signed by the President, whereupon they are immediately despatched and the shipments may go forward to their respective destinations.

Shipments of arms and munitions of war may be divided into five classes

First: those which are exported to commercial houses for the ordinary purposes of commerce, that is, for hunting, self-protection, et cetera. All such shipments are carefully scrutinized by the Department in all particulars and where it seems reasonably certain that there will be no violation of the provisions of the law, recommendations are made that the shipments in question be excepted.

Second: those which are exported to American citizens in Mexico who need them for their self-defense. The exception of such shipments is recommended if it seems possible for the shipments to reach destination in safety, and when the bona fides of the applicant seems certain. Where there is any doubt it is ascertained through the

At first it was the practice to have such exportations, which at one time were of large quantities, sent in the care of either the Embassy or the nearest consular establishment. This somewhat official procedure was not agreeable to the Mexican Government, and various obstructions were placed in the way. It has been found more expeditious, therefore, to send such arms and ammunition to the consignee privately, since, when this is done, the Mexican Government interposes no hindrances.

Third: those which are exported to industrial establishments, such as mines, smelters, power plants, building enterprises, harbor improvements, plantations, et cetera. In such cases exceptions have been recommended, since the Department believed that the best way to avoid domestic disorder was to keep as many industrial enterprises in operation and as many people at work as possible. Accordingly, even when an industrial enterprise is in territory completely under the control of insurrectionists, it has been the custom to recommend the exception of shipments of dynamite, blasting powder, blasting caps, fuse and kindred articles, everything in fact except actual firearms and ammunition. This practice reduces losses to the minimum and by keeping the natives employed prevents them from swelling the number of insurrectionists or bandits, and seems especially desirable on account of the fact that the great majority of industrial enterprises in Mexico are American owned.

With regard to industrial shipments to enterprises within the sphere of insurrectionary control the practice has been to have the companies import small amounts at frequent intervals rather than large single shipments, it being understood that the Department will continue to recommend exceptions for small amounts until such time as some shipment is seized, whereupon no further shipments are excepted until it is again safe to do so. In this way not enough powder or dynamite to be of material aid falls into insurrectionary hands and the enterprises are kept at work as long as possible.

Fourth: those which are exported to military or civil officials at the instance of the central administration at Mexico City. been the custom heretofore to recommend exceptions for shipments of this kind when application therefor is made through the Mexican Embassy at this capital, thus insuring, it is taken for granted, the bona fides of the consignee and the safety of the route. This practice, which is directly dependent upon the policy of this Government with regard to Mexico: i. e., our attitude towards the central administration, has been followed in order to conform to the verbally expressed desire of President Taft that this should be done. President Taft intended at first to write into his proclamation a blanket exception for all shipments requested by the central administration, but was, at the last moment, dissuaded from so doing by the Department, which thought that the inclusion of such blanket exception in the proclamation would make it appear so partisan, so favorable to the Madero administration as such, that it would cause insurrectionists to make reprisals against Americans in Mexico, which it was to the best interest of every one concerned to avoid. The proclamation did not, accordingly, contain any statement with reference to shipments of arms and munitions of war for the Mexican central administration, but in view of the President's directions, the practice has been to recommend their exception nevertheless.

It may be observed here that the Department is still of the opinion it expressed with regard to the exportation of arms and munitions of war to Mexico and with regard to the joint resolution of March 14, 1912, when this matter first came to its attention, namely, that the law if enforced would prove embarrassing (since it arbitrarily interfered with the natural course of events in Mexico and fixed upon this Government a certain measure of responsibility for the outcome), but that, if passed, it should be applied impartially, exceptions being granted only for shipments of arms and munitions of war to commercial houses for commercial use, to Americans for self-defense, and to industrial establishments for their operation.

Three objections besides others will be perceived at once to this impartial enforcement: First, the Mexican central administration may be materially hindered in enforcing law and order and in putting down insurrection. Second, the Mexican central administration, finding itself unable to import arms and munitions of war from the United States, might be apt to obstruct in every way shipments of arms for Americans for self-defense and arms and munitions of war for commercial and industrial establishments belonging to Americans, and might probably make its resentment felt in other ways. Third, it would set about securing its war material in other countries (a matter which this Government could not assume to control), and our merchants would thus be deprived of business which otherwise they might secure.

Fifth: special cases, as for instance, arms and ammunition for protection and for sporting purposes for private persons not Americans, and for the United States naval vessels in Mexican waters, within or without the three-mile limit, when shipped via naval vessels or merchant vessels, et cetera. All such cases are given special scrutiny before an exception is recommended, and where, as is sometimes the case, the scope or meaning of the law is involved, the Department of Justice is requested to render an opinion.

The Department would much appreciate, for its guidance, an expression of the President's views as to the course it should follow in pursuance of the Presidential proclamation of March 14, 1912, (which it is assumed will for the time being be continued in force, otherwise this whole matter becomes one which will have to be taken up de novo) and particularly with reference to the shipments falling under the fourth classification.

And another matter upon which the Department especially desires to have an indication of the President's wishes is the following: Frequently a period of from two or three days to a week or more intervenes between the date when the Department finds conditions such that the exception of a specific shipment may be recommended and the date when that shipment arrives at the port of entry into Mexico. It has several times happened that during this interval conditions have so materially changed as to make it unsafe for the shipment to enter Mexico after arrival at the port of entry. face of this situation, in order to save time and prevent shipments from falling into insurrectionary hands, it has been the practice of the Department to request the Treasury Department not to permit such shipments to enter Mexico, notwithstanding that a Presidential order had been given the Treasury Department to permit them to enter, and in several instances the alternative course has been pursued of recommending that the shipment be forwarded by some other route not passing through disturbed territory. This is done so that the spirit as well as the letter of the law may be obeyed and because the situation would be beyond remedy if the necessary time were taken to refer the matter to the President and to secure a special order from him countermanding his previous order. Since the Department does not, however, wish to appear to be interfering with an order given by the President, it would be glad to know what the President would like to have done in instances of this kind so that it may either act as it has done heretofore or in some expedient way take up such matters directly with the President and secure, when necessary, a countermanding of his previous orders.

The President to the Acting Secretary of State.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, March 25, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Adde: Thank you sincerely for your memorandum, bearing date of March 24, concerning shipment of arms and munitions of war from the United States into Mexico. It furnishes me with just the information I desire, and I want to say that it seems to me that the action of the Department in these matters has been prudent and entirely satisfactory. My inquiries implied no criticism whatever, and I wish to express my appreciation of the careful consideration given this important matter in the routine of the De-

I would be obliged if you would have it so arranged that when the permission for shipment, which I am to sign, is made out, the five classes of shipments, which you distinguish in your letter of March 24, be separated so that each order or permit will contain articles falling under only one of the five classes. This will enable me from time to time to form an idea of how large the shipments are under the several classes, and I hope it will not cause the Department serious inconvenience.

Cordially yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

The Secretary of State to the American Consular Officers at Nogales, Ciudad Juárez, Ciudad Porfirio Díaz, Nuevo Laredo, Matamoros, Tampico, and Vera Cruz.

> DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 2, 1913.

SIR: With reference to the President's proclamation of March 14, 1912, prohibiting the exportation of arms and munitions of war from this country to Mexico, the Department desires to call your attention to the practice followed in recommending to the President that exceptions to the proclamation be granted.

It is the object of the Department to interfere with the ordinary course of business as little as possible, and accordingly consignments of dynamite, blasting powder, blasting caps, fuses and kindred articles for the use of mines, smelters, power plants, building enterprises, harbor improvements, plantations and similar enterprises are recommended for exception whenever the information in possession of the Department shows that conditions along the routes of travel are normal and that the consignments are likely to reach their destinations in safety. Even when consignments are intended for enterprises situated in territory completely within control of insurrectionists, the Department recommends that exceptions be granted to allow small shipments to be made from time to time, provided the consignors can give the Department convincing assurances to the effect that the shipments will not be interfered with by the insurrectionists and that they will reach their destinations in safety.

Shipments of this character are allowed to proceed to any particular locality until such time as some shipment is seized, whereupon no further shipments are excepted until it again seems safe to do so. The Department has followed this practice believing that it is better to risk having a small amount of dynamite, caps or fuses, et cetera, seized by insurrectionists, than to force a number of industrial enterprises to close, and thereby throw out of employment many workmen who, if unemployed, might go to swell the ranks of the insurrectionists or become bandits.

Shipments intended for Mexican military or civil officials are recommended for exception from the President's proclamation upon assurances being received from the Mexican Embassy in this city that they are for the use of the central administration and that they will in all probability reach their destination in safety.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, Austin, April 7, 1913.

DEAR SIR: I quote below report of Sergeant M. W. Hines of Company B of the Texas Ranger Force, to the Adjutant General of Texas:

In regard to the condition I have found here, beg to report that at present Eagle Pass and vicinity have about 1,800 or 2,000 strange Mexicans, who are strong partisans and they represent practically every faction in Mexico, and they make no pretensions in concealing who they are for, and they are taking active interest in their various sides.

The Mexican element of Díaz, across the river from Eagle Pass are over here in large numbers. Most of them seem to be in favor of the Huerta government, while the American Mexicans who live here are strongly against the

There is no doubt but what both sides are smuggling arms across the river below this place. The people residing along the river say that they are crossing all of the time practically, and it seems they are not molested any from the number of reports that I have.

At one time the Texas State authorities endeavored to assist in the enforcement of the neutrality laws, but after the Secretary of War stated that it was none of our business, I directed efforts to cease, as I did not wish to have any conflict with the Federal agents or au-

Laredo, Texas, April 14, 1913.

It has reached our knowledge that a consignment of arms and munitions of war including a rapid-fire gun has reached Laredo, intended to be crossed for the supporters of the Huerta criminal government of our country. As Mexicans, and desiring that the slaughter of men fighting for constitutional rights in our beloved cause, we respectfully petition Your Excellency not to grant permission for the exportation of such arms and ammunition intended for the army of Huerta. And we further request, if it please Your Excellency, that if in your judgment the Constitutionalist party in Mexico is fighting earnestly and sincerely for that which is most dear to human sentiment of liberty and independence, that due consideration be given to men in the Constitutional army and their belligerent rights recognized. We love men but liberty is dearer. We want in Mexico the same form of government that you have and enjoy in this great country. We do not believe that an army of assassins should govern the destinies of our fellow-men and coldly and without cause murder the people that support and feed them. Let the people rule in Mexico and help us establish in our dear and humiliated country the the true government for and by the people. We thank you for due consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 30, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 8th of April, in which you request that this Government make known to the appropriate Mexican authorities all future exportations of explosives to Mexico, in order that the Mexican War Department may state whether or not there is objection to such exportations.

In reply I beg to inform you that this Government regrets that it is not practicable to accede to your request. The enforcement of the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress of March 14, 1912, made applicable to Mexico by the President's proclamation of the same date, is, from the point of view of this Government, a domestic matter, and this Government cannot, therefore, make its action in any way contingent upon the opinion of the Mexican Department of War as to whether or not a certain exception to the President's proclamation should be made.

I beg to say in conclusion, and with particular regard to the exportation to Mexico of explosives, that this Government is scrupulously careful to examine the circumstances of each shipment thereof for which an exception is asked, and that no exception is granted when there appears to be any probability of its being used in any way to promote domestic disorder in Mexico.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 7th of April, quoting a report from Sergeant M. W. Hines, of the Texas Rangers, in regard to violations of the neutrality statutes of the United States at Eagle Pass, I have the honor to inform you that the Department has received from the Honorable J. F. Curtis, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, a letter dated the 8th of May, the substance of which is as follows:

The Collector of Customs at Eagle Pass reports that Captain Biegler, Mr. Chas. R. Breniman, Special Agent of the Department of Justice, the Immigration Service, and the collector's office are in conference nearly every day in reference to the violation of the neutrality laws, and that neither of them believes there is any foundation in fact for the report that large quantities of arms and ammunition are being smuggled into Mexico, as alleged. The collector adds that while he does not deny that it is probable that there is some smuggling of arms and ammunition in a small way he believes it has not occurred to any great extent and that there is no reason for any alarm at this time.

The collector further reports that Captain Biegler has stationed some soldiers at the place about seventeen miles below Eagle Pass referred to by Sergeant Hines, since when, the collector is informed, everything has been quiet there.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 13 by Counselor J. B. Moore, in reply to mine of the 7th of April in which I enclosed a report of Sergeant M. W. Hines of the Ranger Force, regarding the violation of the neutrality laws of the United States at Eagle Pass, is received.

I note what is said in the letter quoted from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the conferences held between the agents of the departments and the conclusions which they have reached.

I felt it to be my duty to call attention to the report made to me by one of our officers. The departments of the Federal Government have assumed the position that the State of Texas has no jurisdiction over the enforcement of the neutrality laws, and I think their position is correct and have instructed the officers of this State accordingly. Notwithstanding the request made of me by President Taft to aid him in enforcing the neutrality laws, I have asked the State officials to desist in their efforts to do so until further request by the head of the present administration. There is absolutely no doubt, however, in my opinion about the daily violation of the neutrality laws, both by the friends of the Constitutionalists and Huerta's followers.

Washington, June 26, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: Since the overthrow of the constituted Government of Mexico and the commencement of the present armed movement which has for its object the restoration of the constitutional order in that country, the Government of the United States has from time to time permitted the Huerta Government to purchase, in this country, for exportation to Mexico, large quantities of munitions of war, without which privilege it is doubtful if it could have sustained itself in power but for a brief period. But a like privilege is denied to the Constitutionalist Government, though it is confidently hoped, by reason of the extent of territory now under its control and the respectable size of its military force, that it possesses attributes sufficient to justify the Government of the United States in giving consideration to certain observations that it desires to respectfully submit.

The act of Congress approved March 14th, 1912, as well as the proclamation of the President thereunder, contain the following:

That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

That "conditions of domestic violence" do exist in Mexico is a fact. It is also a fact that those conditions are being promoted and protracted by reason of an exception made in favor of the so-called Government of Mexico, of which Victoriano Huerta styles himself Provisional President, under which it is allowed the privilege of importing "arms and munitions of war procured from the United States." If that exception were withdrawn, or if the Constitutionalist Government were allowed a similar privilege, the duration of the present struggle would be materially diminished.

Taking constant advantage of this privilege, the Huerta Government, so I am advised, was recently enabled to remove from Laredo, Texas, to Mexican territory, to augment the ammunition supply of General Téllez, seventy-five cases containing mauser cartridges, and representatives of the same Government have recently brought to the identical place, four mountain guns for the purpose of conveying them across the border. These are merely two shipments, among a large number, that the Huerta Government has made and proposes to make. As the continued introduction of arms and munitions of war from the United States by the Huerta Government results in grave prejudice to the Mexican people as well as to the Constitutionalist cause, I am instructed to invite your excellency's attention to the matter, and to record an earnest protest against what would seem to constitute an unjust discrimination against the latter.

The Consul at Naco tells the Inspector of Consulates at El Paso, Texas, the following:

That the American authorities at Naco, Arizona, continue to protect the rebels, and he bases the statement on the following facts:

That they cross the boundary-line with impunity carrying provisions and ammunition without being molested by the authorities; that they hold their revolutionary meetings in the saloon of John Referred, December 6, to the Attorney General and the Secretary of War.

Newell, Deputy Sheriff, without any measure whatever being taken by that officer, notwithstanding the Consul's vigorous protests; it is hard to explain how the contraband of munitions is so frequent and so large, in spite of the increased patrol, and how in the majority of cases contraband is done with automobiles which night after night and many times in the night come to Naco from Bisbee.

There is something else that can not be explained, and that is that when the secessionists attacked Naco, they opened their trenches or "loberas" within American territory more than one hundred feet north of the boundary-line and just at the place where it is marked by one of the monuments; of this the American officers hold photographic proof. That on the day of the final assaults, delivered on April 13 of this year the assailants effected their offensive march through American territory, taking advantage of the darkness of the night, and for that reason the defending troops refrained from firing their arms, naturally believing that they had to do with a patrol of American negroes, and were not undeceived until the assailants rushed into the town keeping up a heavy fire, which the patrol did nothing to prevent, proof of which can be produced in plenty, as several houses of Naco, Sonora, close to the boundary-line and facing north, bear unmistakable marks of the terrific musketry fire to which they were exposed. On that same day there was found in the yard of William Campbell's house that is parallel with the line the dead body of a rebel with his arms, hand grenades, etc., whose tracks showed he had come from that town, making toward the Mexican side; Justice of the Peace Edward A. Folsom had the body removed, speaking to Commander Obregón for the purpose.

These facts and many others seem to prove that the local authorities as well as the majority of the inhabitants of Naco, Arizona, are favoring the rebels.

Public opinion points to Justice of the Peace Folsom as the one who does them the greatest service.

The local authorities appear to have assumed an attitude which may be characterized as hostile against Mexican refugees in this city, showing, on the other hand, open partiality for the rebels who daily pass from Ciudad Juárez to El Paso without molestation; certain employees of the local police maintain relations and receive commissions from the rebel Junta which has placed spies around the building occupied by the Mexican Consulate, spies whose business it is to denounce the refugees who present themselves there.

On November 27, last, when the federal army attacked the town of Las Vacas, the leader, Roberto Rivas, and 45 of his men fled from the place and took refuge in Del Rio, Texas; and, when Captain Winterburn ordered the apprehension of the rebels by 75 of his men, who in their flight had swum the river on horseback, they were set at liberty after their arms, equipment and mounts had been turned over to the Customs officer; this being done in spite of the courteous protests of the Mexican Consul at the place, addressed to Captain Winterburn, whose aggressive replies it is not necessary to state.

Inasmuch as the said rebels were apprehended with arms in their hands and seeing that, on the occasions that federals were obliged to pass across the river between Brownsville and Eagle Pass they were detained by the authorities of this country and not only were their arms seized but they were also arrested in their quarters, it would appear that the processes which, in cases apparently identical, have been observed have been with prejudice to the federals.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LIFE AND PROPERTY IN MEXICO.1

Note. On September 15, 1912, the American Ambassador presented a note to the Mexican Government specifying many instances of crimes committed against the life or welfare of American citizens in Mexico by mobs, rebel and Federal soldiers and others, and demanding that measures be taken (1) to capture and punish the murderers of American citizens; (2) to stop discrimination against American interests; and (3) to bring about such general improvement of conditions as to prevent further molestation of Americans. (For. Rel. 1912, pp. 842–846.)

On November 22, 1912, the Mexican Government responded to this note declaring that it had not spared any effort to comply with its international duties, but recognizing the right of the United States to inquire into the nature of such efforts. (Id., pp. 871–877.)

The correspondence from that point largely consists of inquiries and replies concerning the safety of American citizens and other foreigners and reports of the protests and other representations made to the Mexican authorities in that connection. These are omitted as involving no exchange of representations between the two Governments other than those in the nature of routine. For the same reason the reports in reply to the series of instructions here printed, from consular officers and the Embassy, are also omitted. The instructions themselves are given in order to show the steps taken by this Government in its general plan of protecting American citizens in Mexico.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 25, 1912.

Gentlemen: The Department desires to ascertain the extent to which American citizens resident in Mexico have suffered in their lives, peace and property as a result of the disturbed conditions prevalent throughout Mexico for the last two years, to be apprised of the wrongs for which no redress has been furnished that have been suffered by them and to which the passage of time but adds an intensity of degree, and to be informed of the measure of protection, if any, that has been afforded them generally and in specific instances by the Mexican Federal Government. You are instructed, therefore, carefully to review the correspondence on file in your office since October 1, 1910, and earlier correspondence wherever necessary, and to submit to the Department, at the earliest time compatible with a thorough compliance with the requirements of this instruction, a succinct but comprehensive report on these matters in accordance with the accompanying directions, which should be carefully studied. These directions have been so prepared as to cover the entire field. It will be obviously unnecessary, therefore, to do more than to comply with them in so far as they are applicable to the peculiar circumstances of the instances of murder, death, hardships, annoyances, et cetera, that have occurred in your district. Your report should be prepared in as compact and neat a form as possible, your various statements being made to follow the sequence of the heads given in the directions, so far as possible, and being so arranged and numbered as to make them easily identifiable.

Your report, when sent to the Department, should consist of the following papers:

First. A list of the murders that have occurred in your district.

Second. The histories of the various cases of murder, each history being made a separate document, and all the documents being placed together.

Third. A list of deaths incident to the existence of the revolution and its attendant state of war.

Fourth. The histories of the various cases of such deaths, each history being made a separate document, and all the documents being placed together.

Fifth. A list of hardships and annoyances.

Sixth. The histories of the various cases of hardships and annoyances, each history being made a separate document, and all the documents being placed together.

Seventh. A list of property losses.

Eighth. The separate histories of the various cases of such property losses, each history being made a separate document, and all the documents being placed together.

Ninth. A brief statement of instances of constructive losses.

Tenth. A brief statement of claims cases.

Not printed. The directions consist of minutely detailed amplification of the eleven points enumerated in this instruction.

Eleventh. A statement of the general conditions under which Americans in Mexico have been obliged to live since the beginning of the present revolutionary unrest, and the sufficiency or insufficiency of the measures taken by the Federal Government in the conduct of its operations against the insurrectionists, and to afford protection to American life and property.

[Extract.]

American Embassy, Mexico, January 18, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Knox: * *

The draft of the note sent hither by the Department of State to be transmitted by this Embassy to the Mexican Government marked a distinctly new departure in our dealings with this Government and the questions arising out of the situation which exists here. note, which differs only from an ultimatum in that it contains no prescribed limitation of time for the performance of the demands made, we clearly and fully recited our grievances against Mexico and in a number of cases demanded specific performance. Having assumed this position and having stated clearly to the Mexican Government that unless compliance with the demands made therein was forthcoming we would feel compelled to take such steps for the protection of our rights as might seem proper to us, we can not, with due regard for our dignity, prestige and consistency, retrace our steps, ignore the formal diplomatic exchanges, and reappear before the Mexican Government in the light of a humble supplicant. Our note of September 15 was undoubtedly carefully considered in all of its bearings by the Department before its transmission to the Mexican Government and it must have been understood at that time that there could only be one of two conclusions resulting therefrom, viz, either the Mexican Government must yield, repair the damages it has done to us, and give clear guaranties for the future or we must take some vigorous and drastic action with the purpose of securing redress for our wrongs, an abatement of the situation, and perhaps, incidentally, the downfall of a Government which is hateful to a vast majority of the people of this country and which has given us innumerable evidences of its bad faith, inefficiency, hostility and insincerity.

I wish to make my own views quite clear here. I do not believe in the occupation of Mexico nor do I believe in or advocate the acquisition, either justly or unjustly, of a single foot of Latin-American territory. On the contrary, I am and have been since I have had an opportunity to study Latin America and Latin-American conditions from an unusually advantageous position more and more impressed with the circumstance that the government of these countries, alien in speech, customs and race, is, under our form of government, a most difficult enterprise and that each new burden which we assume and each new adventure which we essay leads to the creation of additional burdens and the invitation to more perilous adventures. At the same time my experience has taught me that these Latin-American countries should be dealt with justly and calmly but severely and undeviatingly. Any other course will bring disaster and forfeit to us, in the estimation of these peoples, the respect and awe with which they have been taught to regard us and will sacrifice the genuine benefits which spring from a consistent, firm, and wellunderstood attitude on all international affairs.

I am of the opinion that all the matters treated of in our note of September 15 must be made parts of a direct settlement with Mexico growing out of the diplomatic correspondence based thereon, and that any other course will be tantamount to a sacrifice of national dignity and prestige. The draft of the note verbale or memorandum which is transmitted as inclosure No. 1 of this despatch expresses briefly, but I think clearly, what our position is or should be in the light of the Mexican Government's reply of November 22 to our note of September 15. It may be amended, amplified, or changed to suit the Department's views as to phraseology, but it expresses, in my judgment, the logical position at which we have arrived as a result of our note of September 15. Of course the Department will understand that unless the delivery of this proposed note should obtain satisfaction from the Mexican Government we must then adopt one of the several drastic courses which have been under consideration by the Department, and which in my judgment—though per-haps necessarily delayed by patience, a repugnance to extreme meas-ures, a reluctance to engage in adventurous sallies, and a natural fear of misinterpretation of our motives—must finally be adopted in the interest of peace in America and the protection of our own interests.

The memorandum inclosed with this dispatch, and numbered 2, was prepared by Mr. Schuyler. It is not intended as an alternative with the inclosure No. 1, but simply for the use of the Department in indicating the Embassy's views upon some of the points raised by the Mexican reply to our note of September 15.

I am [etc.]

DRAFT MEMORANDUM.

For a period of more than two years now the Republic of Mexico has been in a state of revolution, first against the long-established Government of President Diaz and subsequently against that of President Madero. During all of this long period a state of anarchy, intermittent, sporadic, and rising and falling as the tides, has prevailed through a large part of the territory supposedly under the control of the Mexican Government, and for the administration of which it is responsible not only to its own citizens, but, under accepted principles of international law, to the nations of the world, which, upon the invitation of Mexico, have sent their nationals and their capital hither, relying upon the ability of this Government to afford to both the usual safeguards guaranteed by civilized states.

The present revolution, which began under the Presidency of General Díaz and which has continued without intermission to the present hour, has brought neither order, peace, prosperity nor happiness to the Mexican people. On the contrary, there has been a vast sacrifice of human life, enormous destruction of property, a riot of barbarity and inhuman savagery, throughout large parts of the Republic. Government and the law have ceased to be respected, and general and local administrations are helpless and impotent to deal with a situation of constantly increasing gravity and which has become a menace not only to the material interests of foreigners who have invested their money in Mexico and contributed to the development of the material resources of the Republic, but it has also placed in jeopardy and in numerous cases actually sacrificed the lives of foreigners who must necessarily rely upon the Government for protection.

The American Government, though embarrassed by obsolete neutrality laws, henestly endeavored during the revolution against the Government of General Díaz to discharge its full obligations toward the recognized government of a friendly state. When the Government of General Diaz fell and was succeeded by the administration of President Madero, the American Government promptly recognized its duties in the new order of things and, by word and deed, gave its loyal and friendly support to the Government which it understood to be the Not content with these ordinary demonstrations choice of the Mexican people. of good will, and believing that by so doing it would contribute in no inconsiderable measure to the restoration of peaceful condition in Mexico, it amended its neutrality laws and in conformity therewith, and for the proper execution thereof has maintained upon the Mexican frontier since February, 1911, a military force varying in number from ten to forty thousand men, and has, moreover, at a great expense, and to the detriment of other localities, kept there a not inconsiderable number of extraordinary employees of the Departments of Justice, Labor, and the Treasury, expecting no other recompense for the sacrifices incurred than the grateful appreciation of the Mexican Government, the just treatment of American citizens, and the protection of their lives and property against the assaults of the elements of disorder, the tyranny of local administrations, and the collusive confiscatory intrigues of those who, being unable to lay up fortunes by industry, toil and intelligence, find it both convenient and popular to prey upon the foreigner who has brought hither his thrift and his

At the beginning of the revolutionary movement there were in Mexico somewhere between fifty and seventy-five thousand American citizens, and American capital invested to the extent of probably a billion of dollars. As the revolution progressed it became evident, not only to the official representatives of the Government of the United States in Mexico but to all observing and patriotic Americans, that there existed a strong anti-American sentiment among a large number of the more ignorant part of the population of Mexico, a sentiment which if not in some measure shared by the Mexican Government was at least In no single instance that can be renot discountenanced or reproved by it. called has an official of the Mexican Government voiced an appreciation of the unselfish attitude of the American Government and people or expressed the smallest measure of gratitude for the material benefits which American intelligence and energy and American capital has bestowed upon this country. numerous occasions, however, public orators, the press, and all the organs capable of influencing public opinion have been busily engaged inflaming the public mind and in rendering more dangerous the lot of Americans and the safety of their properties in Mexico. This lack of sound and civilized public policy has borne its fruit, as might be expected, in a wide and indiscriminatory attack on everything bearing the stamp of American origin. American interests honestly acquired, and on which vast amounts of capital have been expended, have been attacked on a wide scale on baseless and absurd pretexts by persons in collusion with friends of the Government and have been harassed by confiscatory taxes and by the denial of that protection which the most elemental conceptions of government would afford them.

American citizens to a great number have been arrested on frivolous and insufficient charges and inearcerated in filthy and uncivilized jails, from whence neither the protests of our own Government nor the palpable and proven injustice of their imprisonment could release them. American citizens have been foully and brutally murdered, and neither diplomatic representations, entreaties or threats have served to procure the trial or punishment of the offending criminals; their property destroyed, with only a deaf ear turned to their complaints and with a denial of that justice in the consideration of their claims which is incumbent upon all civilized nations. To such an extent has this persecution passed that today probably 15,000 of them have been obliged to abandon their homes, their factories, their mines and their haciendas and to return to the United States, and their property which has been sacrificed or damaged, along with that of other American financial concerns, has now reached a sum of vast proportions, which, if all present indications do not fail, the Mexican Government has no intention of recognizing its responsibility for.

On the 15th of September, 1912, the Government of the United States, after a long, prudent and patient series of representations to the Mexican Government touching individual causes of complaint, addressed a most vigorous and direct but nevertheless friendly note to that Government setting forth in a general way its dissatisfaction with the situation set forth above and supporting its averments by the citation of many, but not nearly all, of the cases which gave ground to its complaint. The purpose of this note was to recall the Government of Mexico to a realization of its unfulfilled obligations and to an appreciation of the dangerous situation which it was confronting not only with reference to the American Government, but to all other governments having substantial interests in that country. The American Government permitted itself to believe that the Mexican Government would heed this solemn but friendly warning and bestir itself in a practical and evident way to procure a betterment of the evils complained of. The hope was indulged in, having in mind our patient attitude, that the answer of Mexico to our just and reasonable demands would be moderate, conciliatory and specific. On the contrary, it has been obliged to note with the greatest regret and distress that Mexico, far from appreciating the grave and solemn warning contained in our note, delayed its reply for a period suggestive of intentional discourtesy, and that the answer which it finally gave was evasive, disingenuous, frivolous, at variance with the facts, illogical in its conclusions, and lacking in that seriousness of tone and dignity of utterance which should characterize the diplomatic exchanges of governments seeking the support of a just cause before the world. The averments contained in the Embassy's note of September 15 are each and every one of them sustained by positive and unequivocal evidence which will stand the test of revelation to the world and the judgment of history. The performance of exact justice in each and every instance is insisted upon by the Government of the United States.

In addition to the specific complaints which were set forth in its note and which the Government of the United States has not the least intention of abating or subtracting from and for the righting of which it demands and will expect specific performance, it must, having due regard for the responsibilities with which it is charged, call the attention of the Mexican Government to the deep apprehension of the American Government and people that the present administration will not be able to successfully cope with the armed revolution and the sporadic and widespread brigandage which has now for some two years

Notwithstanding repeated assurances of the procurement by the Government of positive and definite results, and in spite of the optimistic appreciations of the situation which have been actively spread abroad through the world, the revolutionary movement continues, brigandage grows apace, the destruction of property increases, and the economic situation has become an immediate menace. Independently of the losses and sufferings incurred by American citizens, the Government of the United States can not for a much longer period, having due regard for the peace and order of this continent, permit a savage and desolating war to continue at its threshold. The Government of the United States recognizes that within certain sound and established limitations every sovereign government has the right to put its own household in order, but it can not commit itself to the principle that a cruel and devastating warfare, the sole object of which, as nearly as can be judged by an impartial opinion, is the gratification of the rival ambitions of aspiring chieftains, can be carried on in territories contiguous to it for an indefinite period.

Finally, and in the exercise of its great patience, preferring to secure redress and an amelioration of conditions through methods and by an attitude in keeping with its constant and undeviating policy with all nations of the world, the American Government solemnly and firmly, but none the less in a friendly spirit, adjures and warns the Mexican Government that there must be a just and prompt adjustment of the grievances set forth in its note of September 15 and that substantial guaranties of future protection to American life and property against armed violence, against malicious intrigue, against antiforeign sentiment, shall be given, and that those who take American life and American property shall be swiftly pursued by justice and punished adequately and quickly by competent courts.

Inclosure 2.1

DRAFT MEMORANDUM.

The following facts are brought to the attention of the Mexican Government in reply to its note of November 22, 1912, which was itself an answer to the Embassy's note of September 15.

The Mexican Government, referring to the specific cases of murder of American citizens in Mexico which had not received adequate action nor proper punishment from the Mexican Government, tabulated ten cases. An endeavor was made to extenuate several of these on the ground that they occurred under the previous administration of President Diaz. The Government of the United States can not, however, admit that a change of administration is sufficient reason for a complete stopping of the course of justice nor is any reason known why the present administration should not exert itself to the utmost to mete out adequate justice in these cases. Some of the reasons given in the note of the Mexican Government are as follows:

Case of Waite, "investigation still in progress".

Case of Crumbley, "assailant's whereabouts unknown".

Case of Ayres, "arrest of murderers impossible". Case of Krause, "murderer not found". Case of Ellick, "murderer escaped".

Case of Lockhart, "rebels have prevented investigations".

Case of Hidy, "no results; lack of data".

Such excuses given by a sovereign state for seven out of ten cases of murder brought to its attention by a foreign government would seem to indicate the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of such a form of government as would be able to afford proper protection to foreign interests. The further statement made by the Mexican Government that it is impossible in many cases to arrest and punish criminals on account of the great extent of Mexican territory and the scarcity of population in many sections of the country must undoubtedly have weight, but it is not thought that the extent of territory was less under the previous administration nor has the population sensibly diminished since that time.

So far as the United States Government is aware no action of any kind has been taken by the Mexican Government since the receipt of the note of September 15-a period of four months-either to apprehend or even to locate the criminals guilty of these murders. The entirely inadequate reasons for such failure can only be regarded by the United States as a willful disregard of the rights of foreigners in Mexico and of the obligations of a sovereign state to enforce order and to administer justice in its dominions. The Government of the United States regrets that it must inform the Mexican Government that it will no longer tolerate such flagrant disregard of international obligations and that, unless a written promise to take immediate steps to obtain satisfactory action be furnished, the Government of the United States will unavoidably and regrettably find itself under the necessity of protecting the lives and interests of its citizens in Mexico in the manner which shall seem best under the circumstances.

It is unfortunately true that certain Mexicans have been murdered in the United States and in several instances, extending over a number of years, the murderers have not been punished. This fact the American Government deplores as much as can the Mexican Government, and is, and has been, at all times ready to afford the promptest justice to Mexicans or other foreigners in its territory. It should, however, be pointed out that in the majority of cases the Mexicans who have lost their lives in the United States were killed as the result of having taken part in disorderly or illegal occurrences.

The Government of the United States can not refrain from expressing the stupefaction with which it found in the note of the Mexican Government, in reply to the demands made in its note for concrete action in the cases of Foster. Glennon, and Carroll, which demands had frequently been made not only during the entire term of President Madero but under the administration of Mr. de la Barra as well, the extraordinary statement that these men were accused of being filibusters. The Government of the United States has made two separate investigations of this entire matter with the utmost care before bringing it to the attention of the Mexican Government, and the amazing allegation of the latter concerning this absurd charge at this late day inevitably suggests that up to that time the Mexican Government had not even taken the trouble to investigate this case for itself. Too serious attention can not be drawn to those diplomatic methods which would allow the discussion of such an important matter to continue for two years and at the end of that time in a general note make to the other Government the absurd and utterly unwarranted charge which has been made in this case.

With reference to the anti-American spirit which exists not only among the Mexican people but among Mexican officials as well, concerning which the Mexican note stated that the "enormity" of the charge obviated the necessity for a reply, it should be pointed out that the information on this matter in the possession of the Embassy is naturally more complete and more accurate than that which could be known to the Mexican Government, since almost daily reports are being received from different parts of the country indicating specific instances of such unjust and discriminatory action. Not only is this seen in cases of obvious collusion between judicial officers and interested litigants, such as the Butler case, but also in many recent criminal matters where the sympathy of the judge or magistrate is quite apparently on the side of the Mexican Among recent examples in criminal cases is the familiar case of the American citizens Koch and Lundquist, arrested in Lower California on the accusation of stealing guano from an island on which they had been wrecked. Delay after delay occurred in this trial, and when the prosecuting attorney finally declared that there was no "charge" against these men they had already suffered a longer imprisonment than if they had actually been convicted of the offense with which they were charged. Another and more recent case, that of Mr. O. J. Langendorf, of Parral, Chihuahua, who was arrested for alleged complicity in the killing of the chief of police of that place, is even worse. evidence in this case shows that police entered the mine, of which Mr. Langendorf was superintendent, at night in search of ore thieves, and without disclosing their identity met a party of the employees, who were also looking for the thieves, with the result that in the dark the chief of police was regrettably Although the evidence showed that Mr. Langendorf's weapon had not been discharged, he was nevertheless arrested and held "incomunicado" for a number of days without bail, while eight of the ore thieves, who had been captured at the same time, were promptly released, in spite of the fact that seven of them were captured in the mine in flagrante delicto and another one was captured at the mouth of the tunnel holding a burro upon which the stolen ore had been loaded. Of the guilt of these thieves there could be no possible doubt, while there was no evidence whatever to show that Mr. Langendorf had shot the chief of police.

The above instances, taken from many, suffice to show the anti-American spirit of many minor Mexican officials. From the nature of the case it is obvious that such actions would naturally occur among the lower and less scrupulous officials, who, perhaps not unnaturally, would hesitate to inform the Federal Government or even their own superiors that they had acted in an illegal manner or even with an anti-American bias.

With regard to the third portion of the note of September 15, in which was pointed out the condition of anarchy and chaos through which Mexico is passing, the Government of the United States regrets to have to say that in the period of time since that note was written not only have the conditions regarding safety of foreign life and property not improved, but, in many places, they have actually grown worse until, in many parts of the country, no American citizens dare longer to reside even for the proper protection and supervision of their properties. While in certain districts an evident improvement is to be noted, in other and more important districts there are practically no American residents left even in those places where formerly there were numerous and flourishing colonies of Americans who contributed in no small degree to the prosperity of Mexico.

The American Government, actuated by the friendliest feeling toward the new administration which had succeeded that of General Díaz, was content to wait with unexampled patience until the necessary period of disturbance incident to the establishment of a new regime founded on principles which, in so far as Mexico is concerned, were new and untried should have passed over and the new administration should have had a full and sufficient opportunity to root itself firmly in the respect and support of the Mexican people. At the present time, however, the American Government, which, time after time, has given the most signal proofs of long suffering and hard-tried patience, must, in spite of the repeated declarations of responsible members of the Mexican Government that all revolutionary disturbances have disappeared from the country, in spite of the repeated promises of the authorities made on the repeated demands of the American Government in countless instances for the protection of its citizens and their interests in Mexico, take this occasion to say, in the most earnest manner, that conditions in a large portion of Mexican territory are such-and among specific localities should be cited the States of Durango, Chihuahua, and Mexico, with large parts of the adjacent States-that, in view of the immense American interests in those places, it must, while disclaiming and deprecating any hasty action, place itself on record in this formal way by declaring to the Mexican Government that so little hope is entertained of the restoration of normal conditions in the above-mentioned regions in the near future that it reserves to itself the right to take such action for the protection of its citizens and their interests as shall seem necessary and proper.

The statements made in the American note of September 15 concerning the practically confiscatory interference with and hindrance of American corporations doing business in Mexico are as true today as they were then. So far as the American Government is aware nothing whatever has been done by the Mexican Government toward rectifying the discriminatory practices against these corporations complained of in that note. The American Government desires once again to protest in the strongest terms against what it described before as a predatory persecution amounting to confiscation. Not only have these annoyances and persecutions not been discontinued, but they have been aggravated in certain instances, one of the most familiar of which is that of That company possesses a vast property in the State the Hacienda de Cedros. of Zacatecas which is not given the military protection which the constant depredations of the rebels demand, but, on the contrary, is so loaded down with unbearable taxation that its life is being taken with the connivance and evident approval of the local authorities. It is regrettably true that the real reason for these abuses is the desire on the part of certain highly connected Mexicans to be able to purchase the property at a small portion of its real present administration of Mexico and, as must be patent to any impartial observer, has on every possible occasion shown its good will toward Mexico and the Mexican people. In return for this extreme forbearance during the past two years its citizens have been murdered with impunity; their interests and their properties have been raided and destroyed, in many cases without the slightest protection, even when, as has several times happened, neighboring properties owned by officials of the present Government have been promptly and adequately protected; American women have been violated in several instances and in none of these have the assailants been punished. The just, temperate and patient representations and protests of the American Government have been met with cynical indifference and absolute lack of sincerity underlying the profuse promises, both written and oral, of immediate and satisfactory action which have been given to representatives of the United States in their vain endeavors to secure simple justice for American citizens and their interests.

In view of all the above the American Government is reluctantly forced to state that should there not be observed an immediate improvement in the attitude of the present Government of Mexico toward American interests it will be obliged to withdraw its troops from the border, to allow the resumption of traffic in arms and ammunition across the border without restriction, and to cease its efforts to keep justly indignant foreign nations who have suffered much from Mexico in the last two years from insisting on that reparation for their wrongs which up to now only the attitude of the United States has been successful in

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico City, February 12, 1913—noon.

The Embassy is crowded with Americans driven from their homes by the firing or the occupation of their homes by troops. Their number will doubtless increase and other nationalities will probably seek the Embassy's protection. As the resultant sanitary conditions would become intolerable, I am distributing the majority among adjoining houses, keeping here only those for whom there are beds or sofas. I desire to be instructed whether I am authorized generally to supervise and care for these people.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 16, 1913.

Gentlemen: The Department confirms its telegram to you of August 8, 1913, directing that you submit a report supplementing the information now in the Department's possession, submitted by you in reply to the instruction of November 25, 1912, relative to American citizens and their property in your district. This information should be brought down to August 20, 1913.

You will also revise in a separate report the reply submitted by you to the Department's instruction of June 4, 1913, giving the names and locations of settlements and communities of Americans, and you should include in your report a statement of the number of Americans in cities and large centers of population. As requested in the telegram, you will add to this report a sketch or map showing the geographical location of American citizens and means of communication, whether by railroad or otherwise. In the latter case your report should be made by cantons, and in both cases should cover the entire district, including that part under the supervision of consular agents.

The Department desires to have in its possession complete information as to Americans in Mexico, and that this information be kept up to date in order that such Americans may receive, if necessary, such protection and assistance as it may be possible to give them.

You will accordingly submit a tabulated statement giving the number, names, location and condition of all Americans in your district on August 20, 1913.

You will also arrange to keep in touch with Americans in your district and to have them notify you promptly in the event that they shall leave your district, giving you the name, date, route to be traversed, and destination. This information should at once be forwarded to the Department upon the enclosed form. Similarly, you will notify the Department of the arrival of Americans in your district.

In order that the Department's information may be as complete as practicable, you should add to your report, giving the list of Americans in your district, such comments as may seem appropriate to you as to the manner in which various American citizens could be reached in case of necessity, and the approximate cost of transporting them to the United States if it should become necessary for them to leave Mexico.

SPANISH LEGATION, Mexico, October 16, 1913.

My DEAR COLLEAGUE: With reference to your suggestion and my offer of last night, I must again tell you that I have been unable as yet to obtain absolutely exact information regarding the Spaniards assassinated by the rebels.

There remains no longer any doubt that on September 26, nine Spaniards were assassinated on the hacienda "Palomar" in the most cruel manner, having been forced to dig their own graves, one by one, before being shot; a thirteen-year-old boy was apparently among them. Captain Felix Ramirez, of the forces of Francisco Villa was responsible for this act. According to information from other sources, four or five others were murdered in that vicinity, but I have as yet no confirmation of this.

A Spaniard saved his life in Tlahualilo by giving $10,000 which Francisco

Villa received, but the latter ordered his men to return to the place and kill the Spaniard; as he had already fled, they arrested a sick clerk and executed him. Another Spaniard, from a ranch in the vicinity, saved his life by giving $500 to a captain, whom Villa had executed after receiving the money for not having complied with the general order for killing them.

It is asserted that three Spaniards were assassinated in Mapini; and in Torreon, according to information up to the 7th instant, one or two Spaniards died, but no information has reached me yet as to how they died. It has also been known that Francisco Villa demanded from the merchants in general, excepting the American citizens, a forced loan of three million pesos in cash or in drafts on New York, and that he appointed to that effect a committee, among which there are four Spaniards; all of which has caused no little alarm, because they have all been threatened in case the money is not promptly delivered.

You will understand all the affliction which these happenings have caused me and my serious concern regarding the indefinite continuance of this sad state of affairs, which encourages the uncultured masses to murder with impunity, to sack and destroy, and that I am so deeply concerned when orders are given to pursue in such an unjustifiable manner my countrymen, who are so industrious and in general endowed with qualities which honor their fatherland and who contribute effectively to the wealth and progress of Mexico.

Bring this to the attention of Carranza and informally say that it is expected, if he exercises the control over Villa's forces which he is reported to have, that he will immediately order adequate punishment of the authors of these outrages, and that no more such outrages will be perpetrated.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 9, 1913.

Sir: The Department is in receipt of a telegram from the American Consul at Chihuahua, Mexico, dated November 30, in which he states that the Federals have evacuated the City of Chihuahua. It is the understanding of the Department that the Constitutionalist forces have already occupied Chihuahua. There seems to be considerable uneasiness in certain quarters as to the safety of Americans and other foreigners.

Under date of December 1st, Consul Edwards at Juárez telegraphed that General Villa was disposed to give full protection to all foreigners who have been neutral in the political affairs of Mexico, but that those who are known to have contributed to and are in sympathy with the Huerta Government will be subject to having their property confiscated when found. He also states that foreigners who have sympathized with the Huerta Government are in no danger of their lives and liberty.

On account of the unsettled conditions in that section of Mexico, the Department believes it would be advisable for you to make a trip into the State of Chihuahua with a view of conferring with General Villa and other leaders, for the purpose of insuring, in so far as may be possible, the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners.

If your affairs are in such shape that you can leave immediately, you may draw on the Department for necessary expenses, telegraphing when you leave, the port of entry into Mexico, and such data as will enable the Department to aid you in making this trip expeditiously.

They claim that if forced to leave Chihuahua their property will surely be looted. Efforts of consuls to prevent this have been without result. They state that if efforts by this Government are not promptly taken serious crimes will be committed and immense property losses. They further state that an armed force of Villa's soldiers forcibly entered British Consulate and took Luis Terrazas Jr. therefrom, despite protests of British Consul who had granted Terrazas asylum. The Department has received from various sources information that Villa refused to permit the wives and children of refugees to leave Chihuahua; that coal has been taken from the American Smelting and Refining Company and from the Chihuahua Mining Company; that Victor Hector, an American citizen, was compelled to pay six thousand pesos; that the German colony feels great uneasiness lest confiscatory measures similar to those used against Spaniards be applied to them, and that Japanese are also fearful of expulsion and confiscation of their property.

Discreetly ascertain from Villa all possible details of the subjects mentioned. Represent to him that the world is watching with intense interest his every move and that his treatment of the Spaniards has already provoked much comment unfavorable to the cause of the Constitutionalists. Urge upon him the advisability of relieving this situation by permitting departure of all who desire to leave, and of making a declaration that protection will be afforded to all foreigners and their property.

EL PASO, TEXAS, December 31, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I received your telegram dated the 13th instant, at Texas City, and at once proceeded here. I arrived in El Paso on the 17th and found Mr. Lázaro de la Garza and Felicitos Villareal, confidential advisers of Villa. through them that two representatives from Carranza, Luis Cabrera and Eliseo Arredondo, were on the way to see Villa, so I decided to wait until their arrival and go down to Chihuahua together. We arrived in Chihuahua on the morning of the 22d. invited me to breakfast with him the next morning, after which I had an hour's interview with him, principally regarding his treatment of Spaniards. He told me that he had found arms and ammunition in many Spanish houses and that he had positive information that they had aided the Federals in the defense of Chihuahua, both financially and physically, and that he had ordered them all to leave, as he had not the time to investigate each case, but that he was going to permit all those who could prove to him their innocence to return; that he knows very well that the Spaniards throughout Mexico are in sympathy with the Huerta Government assisting it in every way possible, and that it was necessary to "throw a scare into them," as he expressed it, in order to force those in Mexico City and other places to stop mixing with politics. He said that he has no intention of executing any of them unless he has positive proof of their guilt.

I suggested to him that it would be well to give his prisoners a trial in proper form before executing them, pointing out to him the possibilities of petty revenges on the part of persons who had influence with him to do away with their enemies through false denunciations.

He agreed to this, and I believe that he will be much easier than heretofore, as I am only one of many who have made similar representations to him.

He said to tell you that the only way they can firmly establish a permanent peaceable Government in Mexico is by doing away with the bad elements when they catch them; that frequently his measures appear very harsh to our people, but that they are absolutely necessary, and that when the facts become known to our people they will change their opinion.

I asked him about the Terrazas family, and he told me that he had confiscated everything they had, that they were enemies of his cause, working against him, but that he was not going to execute young Terrazas, whom he is holding in Chihuahua pending some investigation. I do not believe he is in any body danger. * * * I have [etc.]

THE CHIHUAHUA NEWSPAPER "EL NUEVO MUNDO."

SUMMARY.—The American Chargé d'Affaires on December 15 reported request of the Spanish Minister for the good offices of this Government to prevent seizure of the establishment in Chihuahua of "El Nuevo Mundo," of which Villa had taken the keys. The Department instructed the Consul at that point to extend all proper and possible protection to this property. (File Nos. 312.52/67, 80.)

CERTAIN SPANIARDS AT CIUDAD PORFIRIO DIAZ.

Arrest and extortion.

SUMMARY.—The Consul reported that on July 26 the Carrancista chief of arms at C. P. Díaz, Gabriel Calzado, arrested a Spanish woman and extorted $2,000 Mexican. The Consul vigorously protested but without avail. (File No. 312.52/13.)

Arrest and confiscation.

Summary.—The above-mentioned chief of arms, Calzado, seized the merchandise of Trueba Hermanos Sucesores. Their manager, Jacinto Barquín, appealed to the Consul on July 31 and to the Department August 1. The Consul immediately protested to Calzado and was instructed on August 13 to continue his good offices. He obtained the release of one member of the Trueba family who had been arrested and on August 18 reported that his protest had stopped the confiscation of the firm's merchandise. (File Nos. 312.52/14, 16, 17, 18, 21.)

Arrest.

Summary.—The above-mentioned chief of arms, Calzado, arrested Manuel Martínez and Galindo Palacio on August 4, as spies. The Vice Consul reported the matter on August 7 but no further correspondence appears. (File No. 312.52/19.)

Seizure of Live Stock.

SUMMARY.—The Constitutionalists seized the live stock of the firms of Maiz Hermanos and Compañía Sautena; the Consul reported August 24 that he had protested vigorously. The Spanish Minister at Washington requested the Department's assistance, including directions to the Texas authorities to the same end. The Department replied that those authorities would have no jurisdiction but the matter had been referred to the Treasury Department for its consideration and had instructed the Consuls at various points "to use their good offices with the local authorities in behalf of Spanish subjects in need of protection." Part of this live stock was returned after insistence by the Consul at C. P. Díaz, as the Spanish Minister was informed on September 9. (File Nos. 312.52/20, 22, 23, 26, 27, 35.)

CASE OF MIGUEL DIEGO AT LAS VACAS.

Summary.—Upon complaint of H. J. Ware, that Diego's store had been looted by federal troops, the Consul at Ciudad Porfirio Díaz was instructed to endeavor to secure the return of the stolen goods. Upon protest by the Consul, the federal general at C. P. Díaz telegraphed December 4 to the local commander at Las Vacas to return the property and not to molest foreigners in the future. (File Nos. 312.51/48, 49, 52, 69.)

CERTAIN SPANIARDS AT CIUDAD JUÁREZ.

Seizure of Merchandise.

Summary.—The Spanish Minister on November 20 requested the good offices of the Department in behalf of various Spaniards having goods in danger of seizure by the revolutionists. In response to the Department's instructions based on this request, the Consul at that point reported having requested the Mexican authorities to allow transfer of the goods to the American side. (File Nos. 312.52/44 and 45.)

Confiscation and threatened violence.

Summary.—The Spanish Minister reported to the Department on November 27, receipt from the Spanish subjects Manuel Trueba, Domingo Trueba, Andres Delreumberri, Monjo Laredo y Cia, Francisco Sainz, E. Fernandez, and Francisco Gutierrez, living in Ciudad Juárez, a telegram begging him to ask this Government to use its good offices to protect their lives and property. It stated that the revolutionists had closed their establishments and they were threatened with utter ruin and were in great personal danger. The Consul was instructed immediately to use all efforts to secure protection for them and their property. (File No. 312.52/46.)

CERTAIN SPANIARDS AT MATAMOROS.

Protection of person and property.

Summary.—The Spanish Consul at Tampico and the Spanish Minister at Washington, on June 20 and 24 respectively, requested of the Department the protection of the persons and properties of the family and firms of Armendáiz (Armendaráiz) at Matamoros, where there was no Spanish Consul. The American Consul at Matamoros was instructed to use his good offices to that end on June 23. (File No. 312.52/7 and 8.) There was some controversy with the Mexican authorities as to the Spanish citizenship of those concerned. (File Nos. 312.52/9, 10 and 12). On July 10 the Consul was instructed to use his good offices for the protection of the property of Modesto Arconada, Spanish subject and representative of Armendaiz Sucesores. (File No. 312.52/11.) On September 15 the Spanish Minister was informed of a report from the Consul saying that his repeated efforts to protect the property of Spanish subjects at Matamoros had met with little success, the position assumed by the Carranza party being that those hostile to them must make contributions. (File No. 312.52/28.)

Robbery by revolutionists.

SUMMARY.—Complaint being made on behalf of E. Colsa Mora of robbery, the Consul was instructed on September 9 to make urgent unofficial representations to the Mexican authorities and to give such assistance as possible. (File No. 312.52/25.)

Confiscatory tax on cattle.

Summary.—The Spanish Ambassador on December 23 informed the Department that a tax of $10 per head had been placed on 2,000 cattle belonging to Señor de San Román and other Spaniards. San Román had telegraphed that "total ruin of Spanish interests in that region is inevitable unless the United States Government, the only one, apparently, respected by Carranza, is disposed once more to intercede on their behalf." The Department on December 23 instructed the American Consul at Matamoros to remonstrate earnestly with Carranza or his representatives and say that "this Government looks with grave disfavor on unjustifiable discriminatory exactions such as that of which the Embassy complains. Such incidents can not fail to accentuate the present unfortunate condition of affairs in Mexico." The Consul at Hermosillo, Sonora, was instructed in the same terms. (File No. 312.52/96.)

Spaniards at Torreón.

Summary.—The Spanish Minister on October 15 requested the Department to commend to the appropriate consul all Spaniards in Torreón in order to prevent injury to their persons and property. The Consuls at that point and at Durango were so instructed on the same date, the latter being also instructed to request Carranza to issue immediate orders for the adequate protection of all foreigners at Torreón. He responded, October 18, that Carranza had informed the Consul at Hermosillo that "Spaniards in Torreón not implicated in politics will have same protection guaranteed them as Americans and all foreigners." (File Nos. 312.52/30 and 33.)

PROTECTION OF GERMAN SUBJECTS.

CASE OF SOL HARBURGER.

Summary.—On July 30, 1913, the Vice Consul at Ciudad Porfirio Díaz informed the Department of the complaint to him of a German subject, Sol Harburger, of detention at the border on his way to the United States side on a charge of being a Huerta sympathizer, on the order of the Carrancista chief of arms, Calzado. The Consul's protest resulted in permitting this German to go and come at will (File No. 312.62/15). Harburger again complained, on August 22, that his ranch was overrun by cattle driven there by the rebels. Protest by the Consul caused the removal of the cattle (File No. 312.62/17). Harburger was arrested on September 24 for failure to pay a $2,000 tax for permission to lend money. The American Consul demanded his release on the same day which was granted on certain conditions to which he agreed (File No. 312.62/19). The German Ambassador at Washington on October 16 thanked the Department for the protection given by the Consul to Harburger (File No. 312.62/31).

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 29, 1913.

Sir: The Japanese Ambassador at this capital has requested that in case Japanese subjects in Chihuahua should be forced to leave Mexico, as was done in the case of the Spaniards, temporary refuge may be given them at El Paso.

In this relation I beg leave to refer to a letter addressed by the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor to this Department on March 14, 1912, by which it appears that our immigration authorities on the border accorded to Chinese residents in Mexico in times of disturbance refuge on the American side of the border, and the Department understands that this practice has been continued.

The Department has also taken up with the Department of Labor the question of affording temporary refuge at El Paso to Japanese subjects in case they should be obliged to leave Chihuahua.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Nogales, June 23, 1913.

At request of Chinese colony here Department is advised that a Chinaman named Wong Wing Giat, whose Mexican name was Ramón Wong, was shot and killed yesterday at his store in Nogales by a Mexican soldier. There seems to have been no provocation for the killing, the Chinese informing me that the soldier killed Wong after a dispute over the price of cigarettes. Under Department's instructions of May 3 I brought this murder to the attention of Governor Pesqueira at Hermosillo unofficially and informally requesting him to order an immediate investigation with a view to the punishment of the murderer. Local Chinese request that this information be conveyed to the Chinese Legation at Washington to the end that he take some action to secure protection for them here and at Cananea where oppression of Chinese is increasing.

Sir: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 244, of June 19th, stating that a large number of Chinese in the vicinity of Cananea have appealed to the American Consular Agent at that place for permission to go with their wives and families across the international boundary to Naco, Arizona, should a situation arise at Cananea endangering their lives, and setting forth the fact that conditions now obtaining in northern Sonora are unfavorable to them.

In reply you are informed that heretofore the United States immigration officials along the Mexican border have permitted Chinese to seek refuge in United States territory when their lives have been actually endangered on the Mexican side of the line. They will doubtless in future accord the same permission whenever it becomes necessary to do so.

You should, however, when the case arises, in order that the Department of Labor, which is now charged with the enforcement of the immigration laws and regulations, may have all necessary information in its possession, transmit to this Department by telegraph full particulars regarding the number of Chinese men, women and children, their occupations in Mexico, and the exact place in Arizona in which they seek refuge, so that the immigration officials along the border may be appropriately instructed by the Department of Labor.

Since the beginning of the Mexican disturbances the American Government has issued repeated instructions to American consuls in Mexico to afford protection to Chinese residents of the country; also, when seventy odd refugees fied to El Paso they were provided temporarily with sustenance. When the disturbance of the "vegetable gardens" occurred for the second time, over thirty Chinese found refuge and were protected in the American Consulate.

The Department does not fully share some of the views which, it infers from the memorandum, you expressed to Mr. Lascurain. The Department deems it best at present to press individual cases as occasion requires pending that future time when a general settlement with Mexico may be necessary. Mr. Lascurain made a decidedly favorable impression. At the interviews with the President and at the Department it was sought to impress upon him that Mexico must protect American life and property; do justice to American citizens; restore order; respond to the great moral obligation to be especially considerate of American interests and promptly meet this Government's requests in specific cases; and, in general, exemplify that friendliness, earnestness and efficiency in protecting American interests necessary to justify before public opinion the continuance of the signally friendly and patient policy of the United States. Mr. Lascurain seemed sincerely anxious to make every effort along the lines suggested.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico, January 8, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Department to the apparent discrepancy and inconsistency in the character of its various instructions to this Embassy on the subject of the claims of American citizens. In the Department's telegram of April 14th, [1912], 3 p. m.2 the President's views of the attitude of the United States towards claims was given and the following definition of our position was made:

The enormous destruction, constantly increasing, of valuable American properties in the course of the present unfortunate disturbances, the taking of American life contrary to the principles governing such matters among all civilized nations, the increasing dangers to which all American citizens in Mexico are subjected, and the seemingly possible indefinite continuance of this unfortunate situation compel the Government of the United States to give notice that it expects and must demand that American life and property within the Republic of Mexico be justly and adequately protected, and that this Government must hold Mexico and the Mexican people responsible for all wanton or illegal acts sacrificing or endangering American life or damaging American property or interests there situated.

This instruction, as the Department is aware, was given wide publicity at the time of its issuance, both in the American and Mexican press, with the natural result that numerous Americans were encouraged to present their claims against the Mexican Government believing that the above was the policy of the United States. Ever since April these claims have been presented with frequency and as no tangible results have been obtained the claimants are naturally desirous of knowing whether they may expect any action on the part of the United States.

On December 2nd, however, the Department, in its No. 1116, informed the Embassy, in the care of Carlos A. Miller, that:

You are instructed to advise Mr. Kearful that when the general question of the claims of American citizens against the Government of Mexico growing out of the recent revolutionary disturbances shall be taken up, the Department will give careful consideration to the claim of Mr. Miller.

In the meantime, you will invite Mr. Kearful's attention to the following generally accepted principles of international law: That a claimant against a foreign government is not usually regarded, subject to certain exceptions not at present necessary to consider, as entitled to diplomatic intervention by his own government until he has exhausted his legal remedies in the appropriate tribunals of the country against which he makes the claim; and that a sovereign government is not ordinarily responsible to alien residents for injuries they may receive within its territories from insurgents whose conduct it cannot control.

On December 19, again, in its instruction No. 1142, the Department, in the case of Daniel E. Sherron et al., in which the Mexican Government had stated that—

No State is legally responsible for damages and prejudices which during an insurrection may be suffered by foreigners at the hands of rebels, replied that—

You are instructed to write a note to the Mexican Foreign Office, acknowledging the receipt of its note of December 2, regarding the claim of Sherron et al., and informing it that the Government of the United States can not admit the existence of any such unqualified rule as that stated by the Mexican Government, and that full reservation must be made of the right of this Government further to press this matter in connection with the hundreds of other claims which, it is now apparent, this Government must ultimately present to the Government of Mexico for settlement.

For the protection equally of the Department and of this Embassy in replying to claimants or would-be claimants, it would seem imperative that the Government of the United States adopt a fixed policy in regard to claims and inform interested persons either that the United States will hold Mexico liable for just claims or that it will not. Sooner or later our Government will have to decide this matter and the longer it is postponed the more difficult it will be, and the more innocent and meritorious claims will suffer.

Department's January 7, 5 p. m. I believe that while it is my duty faithfully to reflect and execute instructions it is also my duty to repeat that the matters set forth in our note of September 15, 1912 i—to which we have asked a categorical and explicit answer should be treated collectively instead of independently. We owe it, I believe, to our dignity to require clear, specific promises of satisfaction for all the items of complaint set forth in that note.

While fully sharing the Department's estimate of Mr. Lascurain, my experience with him, and that of the Chargé d'Affaires in my absence, is that while he is prolific in promises his performance is negligible, probably because of little or no influence with the administration; and that while sincere he makes an entirely inaccurate

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 9, 1913.

Sir: As supplementary to the Department's telegraphic instruction of January 7, 5 p. m., I now inclose copies of memoranda of my conversation with Mr. Lascurain on January 3, and of his conversation with the Assistant Secretary of State on the following day. Mr. Lascurain was received by the President on the 2d instant the President spoke to him along similar lines.

When Mr. Calero called at the Department preparatory to his departure from Washington, I took advantage of the opportunity to speak to him rather strongly along the general lines which were under discussion during your recent visit to Washington.

What with the fact that the situation in Mexico has appeared for the past few weeks to be somewhat quieter and the fact that there has been communicated to the Mexican Government, first through Mr. Calero and then through Mr. Lascurain, a very clear impression of the views of this Government and of the more earnest, energetic and friendly action which it expects of the Government of Mexico in behalf of American interests, it does not seem necessary at this time to make to the Government of Mexico any further written representations of a general character. From the present instruction and its inclosures and by consulting the telegram of January 7, to which I have alluded, it is thought that the Embassy will gain a clear idea of what it was sought to impress upon the Government of Mexico through Mr. Lascurain as well as of the present attitude of the Department toward the general situation.

You will note that Mr. Lascurain requested a recapitulation of what he had learned at the Department regarding certain specific cases, and that in reply to his request he was informed that although the specific cases mentioned were simply examples and did not by any means constitute a complete list, such a recapitulation might possibly be communicated to him personally and unofficially. In this connection the Department has prepared a paper, copy of which is inclosed, to be handed to Mr. Lascurain quite informally in compliance with

Memorandum of conversation between the Sceretary of State and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mexico, January 3, 1913.

PROTECTION OF AMERICANS AND AMERICAN INTERESTS IN GENERAL.

His Excellency Pedro Lascurain, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Mexico, called upon me at the Department of State this morning at 10 o'clock, stating that he had been on a visit for the past three weeks to the United States with a view of making inquiry as to the American point of view in respect to American interests in Mexico by personal conversations with individuals and corporations having interests in his country.

He said that he had in his possession a large number of letters written by owners and representatives of American interests in Mexico, certifying to the fact that conditions with them were quite normal and that they were enabled to prosecute their business without molestation or interference. I called his attention to the fact that the feeling in the United States had no reference to the interests that were undisturbed, but to those that were disturbed; that we were not claiming that all American interests in all of Mexico had been subject to molestation or interference, but that many American interests in many parts of Mexico had suffered from lack of protection in various ways, such as having their property seized and converted to the use of the parties seizing it, their cattle and horses stolen, and in many cases the individual rights and liberties of American citizens seriously interfered with; that the constant reiteration of stories of Mexican outrages on American citizens had produced a condition of mind in this country that had to be taken into account in our dealings with his Government, and that we had called the attention of his Government from time to time to the necessity of greater vigilance in protecting and redressing American rights; that great pressure had been brought upon the President and upon members of Congress for the repeal of the resolution authorizing the President, by proclamation, to forbid the exportation of arms and ammunition to Mexico that would likely fall into the hands of parties engaged in revolution in that country.

We talked over the situation generally and I endeavored to impress upon him the necessity of prompt and effective protection in cases where protection was needed as being the best means of meeting the pressure to which I had referred.

Mr. Lascurain said that he was authorized to assure me that the greatest vigilance would be employed in correcting the matters of which I had spoken; that he could assure me that in Chihuahua and Sonora they would at once restore complete order so that no further complaints would likely come from those States, and would to the very utmost of their ability employ adequate means to the same end in other parts of Mexico.

CLAIMS IN GENERAL.

He said another branch of his mission, and the one which he came to Washington to discharge, was to come to some understanding about various matters of difference between the two countries and referred to the claims that had been made for injuries to American citizens at Douglas and El Paso.

DOUGLAS AND EL PASO CLAIMS. CHAMIZAL CASE. COLORADO RIVER, TLAHUALILO, AND ALAMO CASES,

I then called his attention to the fact that the Chamizal matter was one that it would be wise to have adjusted as early as possible; that the people of Texas were quite concerned in its early settlement and that since last June the Mexican Ambassador here had been promising a reply to the proposition made by this Government as a basis for its adjustment. I sent for Mr. Anderson, the Counselor, and had him explain to Mr. Lascurain somewhat in detail the points connected with the Chamizal case, and Mr. Lascurain assured us that it would receive his immediate attention as soon as he returned to Mexico. I then sent for the Solicitor, Mr. Clark, who took up and discussed in some detail with Mr. Lascurain the El Paso and Douglas incidents, the Colorado River matter, the Tlahualilo case, and the Alamo case.

DOUGLAS AND EL PASO CLAIMS.

The Solicitor having explained the status of the El Paso and Douglas claims—namely, that the report of the military board appointed by the Secretary of War at the direction of Congress to investigate these claims was now before Congress and was still unacted upon by that body—I informed Mr. Lascurain that, pending action by Congress on these claims, the Department was not in a position to discuss them. Mr. Lascurain appeared to desire to forestall a congressional discussion of them, but I gave him to understand that that seemed not now possible.

COLORADO RIVER CASE.

It appeared from the discussion of the matter that the next move in the Colorado River negotiation lay with us, and the Solicitor having indicated that while the Mexican counterdraft contained some things which we could not accept it also contained others which would be unobjectionable to us, and, further, that in no case were the differences of such a character that they could not be easily adjusted. I stated to Mr. Lascurian that it would seem we should be able to make an early arrangement on this matter and that the Department would at once prepare and send to Mexico City a second draft.

TLAHUALILO CASE.

Mr. Lascurain stated, with reference to the Tlahualilo matter and the proposition made by England and the United States to arbitrate the questions involved, that there were some questions in the controversy which they regarded as involving the sovereign rights of Mexico, and that Mexico could not, therefore, undertake to arbitrate them. He added, however, that he was most anxious to secure a settlement of this matter, and stated that he desired to waive a further discussion of settlement by arbitration and to take the matter up with the Tlahualilo Co. and make with them a private settlement. I explained to Mr. Lascurain that if he wished to adjust the matter in this way it seemed that he might reply to the proposal for arbitration, stating that he desired to make a private settlement and requesting that to that end the discussion of the question of the arbitration of the matter be postponed. I also stated to him that such a letter should contain a definite offer of settlement of the controversy between the Government and the company, and I assured him that if the offer of settlement was, in the opinion of the Department, just and equitable the Department would advise the company to accept the terms and that if the company failed to accept the terms it would decline further to interfere in the matter and leave the company and the Mexican Government to arrange the matter between themselves.

ALAMO CASE.

Mr. Lascurain stated that they desired to make an adjustment of the Alamo matter and spoke of the Americans killed there as filibusters. The Solicitor pointed out that the Department had had two investigations made, each of them under directions for the exercise on the part of the investigators of the greatest care, and that such investigation had failed utterly to elicit anything upon which could be based an assertion that the Americans who were killed were filibusters. It was suggested that as this Government obviously desired nothing but what was just and proper in this matter the Department would be very glad to be furnished with the evidence upon which the Mexican Government relied to establish that these people were filibusters. Upon the Solicitor's suggestion that were the facts of the case as they had been disclosed to the Department generally known to the American people, as also the fact that thus far the parties guilty of the crime had remained unpunished, there could not fail to be a strong feeling of resentment in this country which might make the situation difficult, Mr. Lascurain reiterated his desire to reach an early settlement of the case.

Toward the close of the interview I asked Mr. Huntington Wilson, the Assistant Secretary, to come in to meet Mr. Lascurain, and in the presence of the latter briefly recapitulated what had passed during the interview. Being then obliged to go to the Cabinet meeting, I asked Mr. Wilson to confer with other officials of the Department and then to give Mr. Lascurain any information upon any further points that it might be thought useful to develop.

Memorandum of conversation between the Assistant Secretary of State and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mexico, January 4, 1913.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Saturday, January 4, 1913.

When I was about to telephone to Mr. Lascurain this morning, to say that although there occurred to me no specific points requiring mention beyond those covered in the interview of the previous day, it was announced to me that his excellency had arrived with the Mexican Chargé d'Affaires and desired to see me. I then received Mr. Lascurain, who came in alone.

I explained that it did not seem necessary to mention other specific cases because I was sure all the President or the Secretary had intended to do in mentioning certain cases was to give examples of the sort of cases the prompt settlement of which would redound to better feeling in the United States, thus affording the Mexican Government opportunity to give appropriate signs of friendship and of activity. I remarked that, of course, the archives of the Mexican Foreign Office would be found to contain full information upon very many cases, information as to which had been to it presented by the embassy at Mexico City.

Mr. Lascurain inquired about public opinion in this country and mentioned the fact that very many Americans in Mexico were suffering not at all and were satisfied with the situation. I replied that it was natural that those Americans directly interested who were not suffering should see the situation in a rosy light, while those who were suffering greatly should see it in very dark colors. I added that there was a vastly more important body of public opinion-namely, the opinion of the general public of the United Stateswhich was without direct personal interest in the Mexican situation. Of this general public, I said, there was a small section of persons who cared little for foreign affairs and were indifferent to the fate of their countrymen in foreign countries, but that the great and most important body of public opinion comprised, I thought, the average disinterested citizen who had heard for two years or more of wrongs to and failures to protect his compatriots and their interests in Mexico, and was aware of the remarkably friendly attitude of the Government of the United States and who resented the inadequate return shown in Mexico for this friendship and who was beginning to regard as intolerable the continuance of such a situation in a neighboring The great danger, I said, was that this great public opinion should have cause to reach a point where it could no longer be resisted.

Mr. Lascurain wanted to know in what form there came to the Government the pressure for a change of policy, to which Mr. Knox had alluded. I intimated that it came from reputable editors, public-spirited citizens, students of foreign affairs, and such people who were fairly representative of public opinion, as well as from those who were directly interested in the situation.

Mr. Lascurain intimated his doubt as to the basis for any impression that the Mexican Government was unfriendly or apathetic in its attitude toward American interests. To avoid a useless discussion of matters of fact, I reminded his excellency that we were discussing public opinion, not making allegations.

I emphasized the great lengths of friendliness and patience to which this Government had gone, and referred to the fact that the bandits and rebels in Mexico had been alleging resentment of this policy as a reason for increased depredations upon American interests. I pointed out that this placed upon the Mexican Government a peculiarly heavy moral obligation to protect American citizens and their interests from suffering as a result of the friendly policy of the Government of the United States. I pointed out that a continuance of our policy ought to suggest on the part of the Mexican Government an attitude, not of captious criticism and excessive sensitiveness, but one of active effort to do its utmost share toward making longer possible the policy of the United States, which it was generally admitted had been a sine qua non to the continuance of the Madero administration.

I alluded to the great wrong of occasionally introducing false stories of American aggression as elements in the internal politics of Latin-American countries. I admitted, however, that this had not, so far as I was aware, been recently done at Mexico City, although this most damaging expedient had been resorted to, I was sorry to say, early in the Madero administration.

The whole interview was most amicable and agreeable. Mr. Lascurain said that he was going home by way of El Paso, where he intended to examine into certain matters on the spot, and he gave the impression that upon his return to Mexico City he expected to be able to do much to improve the relations of the two countries.

Mr. Lascurain said that he would like to have repeated to him the details of what we desired in the Chamizal case and also the details of the other specific incidents which Mr. Knox had mentioned. Since it was not possible to have this done orally immediately, I suggested the possibility of a personal and unofficial letter, recapitulating some of these points. I impressed upon him again, however, that the specific cases mentioned were simply examples and were no complete list. He was anxious that such a letter be written him, either this evening before his departure, or to the Foreign Office to meet him on his arrival at Mexico City.

Recapitulation of cases discussed at the Department of State with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mexico.

CHAMIZAL CASE.

The Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Lascurain, had a conference this morning at the Department with the Secretary of State and the Counselor for the Department of State with regard to the Chamizal case and expressed a desire on behalf of his Government to reach a prompt settlement, but he stated that he personally was not familiar with the situation or the course of the negotiations up to the present time, and asked that the position and wishes of the Department of State be explained to him. In compliance with this request he was informed that the bases for a settlement which would be acceptable to the Department of State had been handed to the Mexican Ambassador here last spring, and that these bases, together with certain alternative suggestions brought forth by the Mexican Ambassador, had been exhaustively discussed at that time; that at the beginning of the negotiations the Mexican Ambassador had been anxious to secure for Mexico an additional supply of water somewhere along the boundary for irrigation purposes, either from the Rio Grande by enlarging the guaranteed supply under the treaty of 1906 between the United States and Mexico, or from the Colorado River in connection with the settlement of that question; that a careful examination of the situation had shown that it was impossible to increase the guaranteed supply from the Rio Grande, and that combining this case with the Colorado River case would lead to unnecessary delays and complications, and inasmuch as they were wholly unrelated questions it was finally decided that it would be advisable to deal with them separately. The final proposition of the Department of State, therefore, had been to exchange Mexico's claim to a portion of the Chamizal for the Horcon Bar tract, which was equivalent in surface area, although not equal in value, and that the difference in value of that tract and the portion of the Chamizal claimed by Mexico was to be made up by the payment of an amount of money to be agreed upon, which the Mexican Government was to use as compensation for the holders of Mexican titles in the portion of the Chamizal claimed by Mexico, which would be eliminated by the surrender of that claim. He was further informed that when these negotiations were suspended last summer, in consequence of the departure of the Mexican Ambassador, the Government of the United States had been assured by him that he would promptly take the matter up with the Mexican Foreign Office and endeavor to secure new instructions conforming as nearly as possible with the terms of settlement proposed by the United States, and that he expected upon his return to Washington to be able to bring with him two draft treaties, one for the settlement of the Colorado River question and one for the settlement of the Chamizal question; that notwithstanding these assurances the Department of State had received no further communication from the Mexican Ambassador on the subject since his return to Washington this fall except a vague MEXICO. 931 suggestion of a possibility of the settlement of the Chamizal question on advantageous terms if it was delayed until the settlement of the Colorado River question, or, in the alternative, a more prompt settlement of the Chamizal if some entirely new bases of settlement could be agreed upon. This suggestion was not in writing, but was communicated orally at an interview which was secured only after great delay, and apparently with considerable reluctance on the part of the Ambassador.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs then stated that it would be impossible for him to make any positive reply without consulting the records of the case, which he could not do until his return to the Foreign Office; that he was opposed to delay, and saw no reason why the case could not be settled at once in a way which would be satisfactory to both Governments.

At this point in the conference the Secretary of State called the Minister's attention to the importance to Mexico, as well as to the United States, of reaching a prompt settlement of this and several other questions which had already been unnecessarily delayed, and were likely to occasion considerable friction between the two Governments. In this connection it was stated to the Minister that although the portion of the Chamizal tract claimed by Mexico was comparatively small in area and of no great value, nevertheless it so happened that a number of important American interests were centered in it, including the railroad terminal facilities at that point; and the delay of the Mexican Government in proceeding with these negotiations had aroused strong criticism and feeling.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs then stated again that he was anxious to take the matter up at once and would do so immediately upon his return, and he assured the Secretary of State that a proposal for a settlement would be immediately made by the Mexican Government and that no further delays in negotiation would be permitted, as he was aware of the importance of settling the question promptly, and particularly before the expiration of the two years' period from the date of the award of the Chamizal Arbitration Tribunal.

EL PASO AND DOUGLAS CLAIMS.

The Solicitor having explained the status of the El Paso and Douglas claims—namely, that the report of the military board appointed by the Secretary of War at the direction of Congress to investigate these claims was now before Congress and was still unacted upon by that body—the Secretary of State informed Mr. Lascurain that, pending action by Congress on these claims, the Department was not in a position to discuss them. Mr. Lascurain appeared to desire to forestall a congressional discussion of them, but the Secretary of State gave him to understand that that seemed not now possible.

COLORADO RIVER NEGOTIATION.

The Solicitor having indicated that while the Mexican counterdraft contained some things which the Department of State could not accept, it also contained others which would be unobjectionable to the Department of State, and, further, that in no case were the differences of such a character that they should not be easily adjusted. The Secretary of State stated to Mr. Lascurain that it would seem that the two Governments should be able to make an early arrangement on this matter and that the Department of State would at once prepare and send to Mexico City a second draft.

THE TLAHUALILO MATTER.

Mr. Lascurain stated, with reference to the Tlahualilo matter and the proposition made by England and the United States to arbitrate the questions involved, that there were some questions in the controversy which the Mexican Foreign Office regarded as involving the sovereign rights of Mexico, and that Mexico could not, therefore, undertake to arbitrate them. He added, however, that he was most anxious to secure a settlement of this matter, and stated that he desired to postpone a further discussion of settlement by arbitration and to take the matter up with the Tlahualilo Co. and make with them a private settlement. The Secretary of State explained to Mr. Lascurain that if he wished to adjust the matter in this way it seemed that he might reply to the proposal for arbitration, stating that he desired to make a private settlement and requesting that to that end the discussion of the question of the arbitration of the matter be postponed. The Secretary of State also stated to him that such a reply should contain a definite offer of settlement of the controversy between the Government and the company, and the Secretary of State assured him that if the offer of settlement was, in the opinion of the Department of State, just and equitable the Department would advise the company to accept the terms, and that if the company failed to accept the terms it would decline further to interfere in the matter and leave the company and the Mexican Government to arrange the matter between themselves.

THE ALAMO MATTER.

Mr. Lascurain stated that the Mexican Government desired to make an adjustment of the Alamo matter and spoke of the Americans killed there as filibusters. The Solicitor pointed out that the Department of State had two investigations made, each of them under directions for the exercise on the part of the investigators of the greatest care, and that such investigation had failed utterly to elicit anything upon which could be based an assertion that the Americans who were killed were filibusters. It was suggested that as the Government of the United States obviously desired nothing but what was just and proper in this matter, the Department of State would be very glad to be furnished with the evidence upon which the Mexican Government relied to establish that these people were filibusters. Upon the Solicitor's suggestion that were the facts of the case as they had been disclosed to the Department generally known to the American people, as also the fact that thus far the parties guilty of the crime had remained unpunished, there could not fail to be a strong feeling of resentment in this country which might make the situation difficult, Mr. Lascurain reiterated his desire to reach an early settlement of the case.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 25, 1913.

Sir: The Department has received your No. 1845, of the 8th instant, in which you invite attention to the seeming discrepancies in the instructions which the Department has given your Embassy at different times, concerning the claims of American citizens against Mexico. You suggest that the United States adopt a fixed policy in this matter.

The Department feels sure that if a more careful examination had been made of its various instructions regarding claims of American citizens against Mexico the apparent discrepancies and inconsistencies to which you refer, but which were not specifically pointed out in your despatch, would have entirely disappeared.

It was stated in the Department's telegram of April 14, 3 p. m. [1912], that "this Government must hold Mexico and the Mexican people responsible for all wanton or illegal acts sacrificing or endangering American life or damaging American property or interests there situated." Obviously this means acts which are illegal according to the rules controlling in the premises, including the applicable principles of international law, which principles the Department had prominently in mind when the telegram was pre-Inasmuch as the facts and circumstances which called forth this strong instruction required that the attention of the Mexican Government be called in as forceful a manner as possible to its legal liability to foreigners, it was necessary to state the principle of international law in broad and unqualified terms. To have surrounded the broad principle at that time with a statement of any generally accepted limitations and exceptions would clearly have robbed the telegram of its force and deprived it of its essential purpose.

In its No. 1116, relative to the case of Mr. Miller, the Department made a statement of some of those principles of international law which seem to be applicable under the circumstances set forth. This statement contained the express provision that the principles set forth were subject to exceptions, which exceptions, when established by the particular facts and circumstances of any case, would of course fix the legal liability. This instruction might appropriately be regarded as supplementing the previous instruction and rounding out at a suitable time the statement of the principles of international law therein contained.

In its note regarding the Sherron case the Mexican Government stated very broadly and incompletely the principle of international law with reference to a government's liability for damages suffered by foreigners in times of insurrection, without admitting any exceptions to the rule. It was to the failure of the Mexican note to acknowledge any exceptions to the broad rule of international law therein set forth that the Department instructed you to demur. Clearly the statement of principles of international law contained in the Department's No. 1116 is vastly different from the statement contained in the Mexican note in the Sherron case. If the principle is stated correctly in the Mexican note, Mexican federal troops might stand by and witness wanton destruction of foreign life and property at the hands of rebels whose actions they might easily control, without the Mexican Government's incurring any liability in the premises.

The Department has always intended and still intends to hold the Mexican Government responsible to the full extent of the applicable and controlling principles of international law for the injuries suffered by American citizens in the recent revolutionary disturbances. However, in order that claimants might know the international law problems which they must meet and in order that the Department might not be regarded as having caused claimants to be unduly optimistic regarding their prospects of recovering indemnity for such injuries, it has seemed proper to the Department to call the attention of persons desirous of presenting claims to some of the pertinent rules of international law such as are noted in your despatch, which rules, as the Department has always stated, are subject to exceptions.

As the claimants and the Embassy have been advised, the Department expects, at an opportune time, to take up for careful consideration all of the claims of American citizens against Mexico which shall have been filed with it, and it is not doubted that such considerations will disclose the international law liability of the Mexican Government with regard to some of these claims. Such liability will, of course, and as above stated, be insisted upon by the United States Government. This is the "fixed policy" of this Government.

The Department remarks, in conclusion, that while it regrets that numerous Americans were unduly hopeful with regard to their claims on account of unwarranted statements which they may have seen in the American and Mexican press with regard to the position of the United States in this matter, it can assume no responsibility whatsoever for their ill-founded expectations; and in the situation thus created it becomes more than ever necessary to represent to claimants the matter of claims in its true light. It would be manifestly against their interests for their claims to be presented at a time not opportune, and it is bootless and but invites disappointment to expect damages for losses suffered if by generally accepted governing rules and principles of international law there is no legal liability therefor.

Mexico, January 30, 1913—7 p. m.

A long interview, based on memoranda of conversations in Washington, was had today by Mr. Schuyler with Minister for Foreign Affairs, who had just come from the President.

The Minister stated that he would shortly send a note declining arbitration in the Tlahualilo case not only because such arbitration was impracticable on basis of protocol but because the Mexican Government and the company would come to an amicable settlement. He would later in a separate communication submit offer of a settlement to the Department, which had agreed to be judge of its justness. He added that Mr. Potter's ideas of settlement could not be entertained for a moment; that he was evasive and insincere to the highest degree, and it was evident that he only desired to gain time. Mr. Schuyler does not think that there is any possibility of the offer being acceptable either to the Department or the company, although he impressed upon the Minister the necessity of prompt settlement of case in view of the attitude he had taken with the Secretary of State.

The Minister thought the Colorado River convention would soon be satisfactorily negotiated.

Regarding Alamo cases he threw up his hands, exclaiming: "Oh, those cases again! I don't know what further can be done about this."

He said concerning Chamizal matter that it was being taken up through Mexican Embassy and could be disregarded here, and that nothing more could be done regarding border cases at present.

My Dear Mr. Knox: Referring to my telegram of January 30, 7 p. m., which is more or less a confirmation of the correctness of the brief estimate given in my telegram of January 9, 5 p. m., of the true purpose of Mr. Lascurain's representations in the interviews which he had with you and with the Assistant Secretary of State, I deem it my duty to say to you that I very seriously doubt and question the intention of the Mexican Government to make an earnest and diligent effort to remedy the wrongs complained of in our note of September 15. In view of the attitude assumed by Mr. Lascurain upon different occasions when the matters treated of in our note of September 15 were broached, and in view of the circumstance that there is apparently no effort being made in any specific instance to bring about a betterment of conditions or to procure any remedial arrest of the abuses complained of, I am reluctantly constrained to believe that the real purpose of his mission was to secure delay in the hope that a new administration, either with a different policy or necessarily in need of the time requisite for a comprehensive study of the questions at issue, would enable this Government, as frequently happens in dealing with some of the Latin-American nations, to eventually avoid complying with our just demands.

Some of the questions which you discussed with him, like the Chamizal case and the Colorado River case, while of great importance, I have not considered as subjects for diplomatic protest and I am quite willing to believe that they will eventually find a reasonable and just solution. These cases were not recited in our note of September 15, but two others, the Alamo cases and the Tlahualilo case, were incorporated in the note. Concerning these cases Mr. Lascurain, since his return, has assumed an entirely different attitude and bearing than that which I infer from the memoranda he assumed in the discussions had with you and Mr. Wilson. I confess I am deeply disappointed that better results have not followed your interview with Mr. Lascurain and my purpose in sending this is to prevent any illusions being indulged in by the Department as to the possibility of substantial results flowing from the discussions which took place.

HENRY LANE WILSON.

File No. 412.00/23.

The American Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

No. 1888.]

American Embassy, Mexico, February 5, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's instruction No. 1168 of the 10th ultimo, relative to the correspondence exchanged between the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs and the British Minister concerning the status of claims growing out of the revolution.

In order, if possible, to have an authentic explanation of the attitude taken by Mr. Stronge, I wrote both to him and to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and transmit herewith copies of the correspondence exchanged.

The general instructions mentioned by Mr. Stronge are substantially in accord with the position taken by the Government of the United States and by other governments regarding claims, when considered in a general way, and presuppose the non-liability of a government for damages occasioned by insurrectionists over whom it can not exercise control.

I am unable, however, to understand Mr. Stronge's position as regards the difference in character between claims arising from one or the other of the recent revolutions in Mexico. It was taken apparently by him in agreement with statements made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs to which he probably assented without considering their full import and which the Minister cleverly incorporated in his reply to the British note.

The significance of the statement made by the Foreign Office, as I understand it, is that the Mexican Government, wishing to show special consideration regarding the claims arising out of the Madero Revolution, appointed the Consultive Claims Commission with a view to the separate treatment of such claims, and endeavors to emphasize the difference between those claims and others which might be brought forward. Although the commission was heralded abroad as showing the good faith of the Mexican Government in this matter, I am unable to find that its work has resulted in the settlement of a single claim made by any American citizen. Claims have been promptly transmitted to that body for "consideration" and there, so far as I am aware, they still remain. The Mexican Government in thus separating the two classes of claims obviously intended to give preference to the Madero Revolution claims if at some future time it should become necessary to give serious consideration to their settlement.

In view of the fact that the damages to American life and property and consequently the claims arising therefrom growing out of the MEXICO. 937

Madero Revolution were trifling compared with the losses to American interests due to the subsequent revolutionary disorders throughout Mexico, the appointment of the claims commission has been of no material advantage but on the contrary has served only to delay and befog the question of prompt and adequate settlement of our claims.

I can not see the difference pointed out by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the British Minister between the two classes of claims mentioned and I should be glad to have the further views of the Department upon this matter, which may at any time assume great importance.

It might be advisable for the Department to exchange views with the British Foreign Office for the purposes of arriving at a common understanding relative to the claims question. The British Minister here agrees entirely too easily with the Mexican Foreign Office in matters affecting all classes of questions growing out of the revolution and it might be well to secure uniformity of policy.

MY DEAR MR. LASCURAIN: Referring to the note which it is understood your excellency wrote to the British Minister in this capital in November last, in which as I am informed the statement was made that the disturbances now occurring in Mexico, "do not have the character of the Revolution of 1910," in the matter of the settlement of claims, I am instructed to obtain from your excellency an explanation of this statement and its significance, since the Government of the United States is unaware that there is any difference between the two movements as they may relate to the question of claims of foreigners for damages to life and property.

HENRY LANE WILSON.

[Inclosure 2.]

The American Ambassador to the British Minister.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico, January 27, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. STRONGE: Mr. Schuyler has handed me a memorandum of a conversation had with you on January 23rd relative to the question of claims against the Mexican Government for damages growing out of revolutionary disturbances in Mexico. In this memorandum Mr. Schuyler states that you quote page 207 of the printed instruction to His Majesty's consular officers, which says:

Where claims are made for compensation for damages done by insurgents in armed insurrections against a government which was unable to control them, claimants should be reminded that His Majesty's Government do not regard a government as liable in such cases unless that government were negligent and might have prevented the damage arising or unless they pay compensation to their own citizens or subjects or to other foreigners in similar cases, or unless the rebellion has been successful and the insurgent party has been installed in power.

These instructions do not differ in any material way from the printed instructions of the Government of the United States by which this Embassy must be guided in its consideration of the claims of American citizens against Mexico for damages growing out of the revolutionary disturbances. extent we are in full accord, therefore, and doubtless will remain so until such time as His Majesty's Government or the Government of the United States shall, one or the other, modify the established rule. This, however, was not the point which I desired Mr. Schuyler to ask you to be good enough to explain and which I fear he did not make sufficiently clear. In the letter of Mr. Lascurain to you, which I asked Mr. Schuyler to call to your attention, you are placed in the position of assenting to the statement of the Minister that the claims growing out of the Madero revolution differ in character from those growing out of the revolution which has been in more or less active progress since the installation of the present Government. Whether you inadvertently permitted Mr. Lascurain to assume that this was your position or whether you really hold such an opinion and your reasons therefor is what I am endeavoring to ascertain. My Government recognizes no difference in the character of claims growing out of the Madero revolution from those growing out of the more recent revolutionary disturbances and has instructed me to ask Mr. Lascurain for a clearer explanation of the general statement contained in his note to you of November 9th last. At some time in the future my Government intends to take up the matter of claims against the Government of Mexico for damages growing out of revolutionary disturbances in a very active and vigorous way and I am informed that His Majesty's Government intends to do This circumstance will account for my desire to have the situation made perfectly clear and unembarrassed.

Believe me [etc.]

The British Minister to the American Ambassador.

Mexico, January 28, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Wilson: I am glad to learn from your letter of yesterday that the general instructions issued by our two Governments in regard to claims are in substantial accord.

As regards Mr. Lascurain's letter to which you refer, I certainly do think that, if the principles laid down in the British instructions are admitted, it must also be admitted that the claims for damages by rebels since the accession of the present Government to power are in [on] a different footing from those resulting from damages by rebels during the previous period. This difference, as I see it, is specially dealt with in the British instructions, for it is expressly stated that except under certain conditions, which are duly specified, His Majesty's Government do not regard a government as liable for compensation for damage done by insurgents in armed insurrection unless the rebellion has been successful.

Now, the rebellion against General Diaz' Government was successful and the quondam insurgent chief, Francisco Madero, is now the President. On the other hand the various revolutionary movements directed against the present Government have, so far, entirely failed.

Whatever view our Governments may take of claims for damages by rebels during the present disturbances I think it will be impossible to ignore this It may be that they will hold that the present Government has shown such negligence in protecting the foreign interests that it must be held liable for the losses incurred, if not in all, at least in many of the cases where claims have been presented. This consideration does not, however, affect the distinction which can, and I think must, be drawn between the present and former claims.

I may mention that in forwarding to Sir Edward Grey a translation of Mr. Lascurain's letter I stated that the latter's proposal to postpone a decision respecting the present claims until the cessation of the disturbances did not seem to me to meet the requirements of the case.

Yours sincerely,

FRANCIS STRONGE.

The Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Mexico, January 29, 1913.

My dear Mr. Ambassador: I have taken notice of your excellency's note of January 21, in which reference is made to a note addressed to the British Minister, wherein, according to your excellency's information, I made the statement that the present disturbances do not have the character of the revolution of 1910, with regard to the payment of indemnities, and your excellency wishes to know the scope of this statement, inasmuch as the Government of the United States does not see any difference between one movement and the other, concerning the question of indemnities to foreigners on acount of damage suffered in their lives and properties.

In reply I have the honor to say to your excellency that in answer to a question from the British Minister as to whether any action had been taken to indemnify British subjects and other foreigners on account of the losses suffered by them in consequence of the present conditions of the country, as was done with the claims presented to the special Consultative Claims Commission which is at present operating, notwithstanding that the circumstances, as stated by the British Minister, are not the same, I said to him that while the disturbances which have occurred during this year in various points of the Republic do not have the character of the revolution of 1910, the Government has not taken any action with reference to the claims of foreigners, because it has been awaiting the conclusion of the above disturbances; but that as soon as any measure is adopted, the same shall be communicated to him.

I have seen no impropriety in causing your excellency to know of this determination, notwithstanding that the note of the British Minister is of a confidential character, and that the reply to it should be considered likewise; but as I do not know the manner in which your excellency became acquainted with these documents, I have preferred to let you know, as I have done by the above lines, the details of this correspondence, in order to avoid comment which might be based on the lack of exact knowledge of the facts. I must say right now that the responsibility which the nation assumed on account of damages caused by the revolution of 1910 was a voluntary act, but that this attitude can not be invoked as a precedent, considering international correspondence on the subject.

Mexico, February 3, 1913.

My Dear Mr. Stronge: Replying to your note of January 28th last, for which I beg you to accept my thanks, I have again to say that a claim which has any status under international law is not altered in character by the circumstance of its having originated in either one or the other of the two revolutions which have taken place in Mexico since 1910. A claim which, according to rules now established and universally accepted, is valid as growing out of one revolutionary movement is equally valid as growing out of the other. As to any obligations which this Government may voluntarily assume in dealing with those claims having their origin exclusively in 1910, they must necessarily fall outside the rule and have a peculiar and special character. It is true that this Government has of its own volition established a claims commission to exclusively consider and pass upon claims growing out of the revolution of 1910, but I have yet to learn of any cases decided by this commission wherein the Government has accepted responsibility for the payment of any kind of claims except those falling within the strict rule of international practice. If I am mistaken in this estimate of this Government's present attitude respecting claims I shall be glad to be informed wherein, as I have no knowledge of the adjudication by the Consultive Claims Commission of any claims for which this Government would not be responsible under established precedents.

58. Mr. de la Barra began our interview today by saying that he wished our conversation to be considered as friendly and unofficial and not for a moment binding the Provisional Government in any wise, as it was simply an exchange of ideas to lead to a definite settlement.

He first took up the Chamizal case and recited at length his discussions with Mr. Knox, indicating he was now prepared to propose an exchange of the territory and that if the United States would cede the islands of San Elizario and Beaver, near El Paso, Mexico would be able, in conformity with national sentiment, to cede El Chamizal based on interpretation of the treaties of 1853 and 1884. The exchange could be made as Mr. de la Barra had proposed while he was Ambassador at Washington, but the arrangements could not be carried into effect until Mexican sentiment had been prepared.

With reference to the Colorado River question Mr. de la Barra said that the matter was now in the Department of State at Washington awaiting the reply to the Mexican counter-project and that his Government was ready to treat with the Embassy here as soon as the attitude of our Government was defined.

With regard to the Tlahualilo question he said that although he had maintained in the Cabinet discussion that it should not be the subject of diplomatic representations and that a decision of the Supreme Court of Mexico in a contention between the Government and a Mexican corporation should not be substituted to arbitration, he nevertheless had strong hopes that he could procure a satisfactory solution by means of a private arrangement between this and another company owning rights in the Laguna region. He added that he hoped soon to be in a position which would justify his sending for the representative of the Tlahualilo Co. for the purpose of arriving at a definite solution.

In regard to the question of claims Mr. de la Barra said that he had not been able to complete the study, but before next Tuesday would give the Ambassador a definite reply concerning this and other questions treated of in our note of September 15 and in my letter to General Huerta.

In regard to Mr. de la Barra's statements relative to the Chamizal question I made no comments, as the case has never been treated in this Embassy and, as I believe, it is the intention of the Provisional Government to meet our views as far as possible. I, moreover, avoided discussion because this question has been submitted to arbitration, which makes our position a delicate one.

In regard to the Colorado River question I am of the opinion, as I have before said to the Department, that the difficulties which exist can be arranged easily and that no disposition exists here to delay effective arrangement.

In regard to the Tlahualilo case I observed that the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain had expressed their disapproval of the Mexican contention that by a decision of the Mexican Supreme Court it became res judicata, and said to him very clearly that either the Tlahualilo claimants must be satisfied or the Mexican Government must accept our proposal for arbitration.

Mr. de la Barra seemed to think that his proposals were concessions and that we were on the road to a satisfactory settlement of all pending questions, but I indicated to him the disinclination which my Government would feel in having the questions under discussion involved in a long and profitless controversy, and that we had had plenty of views but were still anxiously looking for facts. * * * * 1

64. Mr. de la Barra called at the Embassy this morning for the purpose of a further discussion of matters referred to in my February 28, midnight. He dictated a memorandum which he proposes to submit to the Cabinet tomorrow, part of which is satisfactory and part is not.

His position in the Colorado River and the Chamizal cases, he states, depends on replies now pending from the Department.

In the Tlahualilo matter he made an inadequate offer of an increase of 30,000,000 cubic meters of water annually and was told that it was not discussable. Mr. de la Barra maintains that the decisions of the Supreme Court could not be questioned or submitted to arbitration.

In the matter of our claims for damages in the Douglas, El Paso, and Alamo cases he will recommend to the Cabinet their immediate settlement, after discussion with the Embassy, according to principles of international law.

In the matter of general claims of American citizens growing out of the revolutions he will recommend that they be settled in a spirit of friendly agreement following the precedents observed by the Government of the United States in similar cases.

92. At an interview with Mr. De la Barra this day the Minister began by saying that he was almost ready to give a decisive answer to the urgent questions now under discussion between us (questions referred to in Department's February 21, 11 p. m.²).

Tlahualilo matter: Mr. De la Barra said he expected to have a definite basis agreed upon by Monday which would warrant the coming of interested parties for the purpose of settling the whole

¹ The omitted passage is printed under Political Affairs, p. 749. ² See, p. 940, editor's note under this date.

Chamizal matter: He said he would probably, early next week, be authorized (perhaps with some amendment as to land) to accept the Department's proposition for the exchange of the Horcón tract of [for?] the small tract south of the Rio Grande near El Paso. But Mexico would desire to have all questions of payment of money eliminated from the discussion.

Alamo, Douglas and El Paso claims: He would make me a direct offer in the early part of the coming week.

General claims growing out of revolutions: He would arrange a settlement in an amicable discussion with me later. Mexico is willing to follow the precedents adopted by the United States in paying claims not falling within the rules of international law but settled for amicable and humanitarian considerations.

All of the foregoing will be given me in written form early next week.

None of your references to this general subject of claims growing out of disturbances in Mexico since Department's February 21, 11 p. m., 1 seems to show a perfectly satisfactory attitude on the part of Mr. de la Barra. 102. Minister for Foreign Affairs De la Barra, informed me today that he expected to be able to advise me officially within two days that our views on the Chamizal case would be accepted and that a satisfactory arrangement of the Tlahualilo case would be proposed.

I handed him a paraphrase of the Department's No. 98, March 11, 6 p. m., but as he was just leaving for an official function he simply said such an arrangement would be contrary to Mexican law. I told him that our position would probably be supported by the representatives of France, Germany, Great Britain and Spain.

General Huerta told me today that the Chamizal case was agreed upon according to the American proposal; that the Tlahualilo case was arranged in such a manner that its acceptance by the Company would be beyond doubt; that a direct offer for our specific cases of damages growing out of the revolution would be made; that regarding general claims our demands were acceded to in form though there were some difficulties as to methods which would have to be overcome. He added that the intention of the Government was to pay all damages. Will the Department inform me as to whether an official confirmation of this will meet its demands. In the meantime I shall continue to insist upon an international commission.

118. The exact text of a note just received from the Foreign Office follows:

Relative to the questions pending between our Governments, I have the honor to assure your excellency of the friendly attitude of Mexico in its desire to settle them satisfactorily.

The Government of Mexico not only wishes to show that it is moved by the highest sentiments of justice and that it desires to create closer relations with the United States, but to demonstrate by actual deeds that, the national crisis having passed, it wishes to initiate a reorganization of the country by satisfying all claims founded on law and equity.

With reference to the Chamizal case the Government has deeply interested itself in order to establish definite bases to the end that this question may be promptly settled and with this object in view proper instructions will be given to its Ambassador in Washington who will have the prompt settlement of this case as the main object of his diplomatic mission; and inastruch as it was started and carried on at that capital it would seem that it should be now continued there to a definite conclusion.

With reference to the Colorado River case my Government is awaiting the reply of the Government of the United States to its last note relative thereto.

The case of the Tlahualilo Company was definitely decided by the Supreme Court of the Republic but the Government of Mexico desires to demonstrate its good intentions toward enterprises which add to the welfare and material progress of the country, and in view of this it will do everything possible in order that the Tlahualilo Company may obtain advantageous arrangements with another or other concerns of those that use the waters of the Nazas River and insure a quantity of water which will satisfy the necessities of its agricultural pursuits. The Secretary of Fomento has made a special study of this case and in accord with my Department will use his good offices toward securing the above arrangements.

Claims pending for the loss of life and other bodily injuries in Douglas, El Paso, and Alamo shall be the subject of a general indemnity proposition on the part of the Mexican Government in order that the question of principle having been settled the amount of each individual claim may be fully and easily determined; therefore this Department is now ready to study the amount of each particular claim and to that end it will discuss the matter with your excellency.

With reference to general claims growing out of the civil struggle I must say to you that a report has been requested from the chairman of the commission. I can say to your excellency that within a very short time, perhaps within one month, a division of the claims, separating them in three classes, will be made, that is: first, those which are acceptable on account of their foundation and amount; second, those which are acceptable in principle but disputable as to their amount; third, those which are totally inadmissible. In this way the negotiations will have a fixed basis, and the work toward the agreement accepted by your excellency and this Department will be considerably simplified to the end of establishing a method for the decision of the cases in which an indemnity is not allowed in accordance with the pretensions of the interested parties and the opinion of your excellency's Government.

I believe that the above will convince your excellency that the President of the Republic has given preferred attention to the matters in question and that when they are definitely decided he will do everything necessary to have them closed as soon as possible and in accordance with the general principles of law and the highest equity.

As soon as compatible with careful study of the foregoing, I desire the Department's instructions thereon. The matters of Chamizal, Tlahualilo, Colorado River, and the Alamo, Douglas and El Paso claims, may be considered as settled in a satisfactory way, as our contentions are acceptable in principle.

In the matter of general claims growing out of the revolutions, it appears to me that although the Minister proposes a solution different from that insisted on by the Department, the Mexican Government is thoroughly in earnest about them. If the Department is of the same opinion, it might be well for it to consider relaxation of its adherence to the international-commission plan of settlement of these claims.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 1, 1913.

158. Your 145 of March 30, 1 p. m. * * * As to submitting claims to an international commission you will recall that it was the Department's desire in the first instance, as you were instructed in the Department's telegram of February 21, 11 p. m., to have the Mexican Administration commit itself to this course of action with regard to American claims, it being understood that the membership of such mixed international commission would be entirely American and Mexican, save the umpire who should be from some third and quite disinterested nation. While the Department perceives no objection to having other nations request that the claims of their nationals be submitted to commissions similarly constituted, it believes it could hardly expect Mexico to submit all claims to one general international commission, since (while this Government would not permit itself to be party to such combinations) in this way Mexico might by voting combinations be effectively and entirely deprived of having anything whatsoever to say as to the merits, procedure or adjudication of claims, and, indeed, even the proper settlement of American claims, whose settlement is the paramount consideration both for this country and for Mexico, might be seriously interfered with. Referring again to American claims, nothing that has been said by the Mexican Administration, as reported by you, has given this Government any reason for changing its attitude, and it would seem that the Mexican Administration, in view of all the circumstances, should readily have assented to having the American claims dealt with in this way.

[Extract.]

Before leaving the Embassy for the National Place, the Ambassador made a memorandum of the three following matters to be discussed with President Huerta: 1 * * *

(3) International Claims Commission.

The Ambassador called the President's attention to a telegram he had shown Mr. de la Barra from an important business man now in Washington to another person of this city, in which it was assured that if the Mexican Government would adopt the idea of an international claims commission to take charge of the study and settlement of just claims, the present Government of Mexico would be immediately recognized by Washington. The President said that he had seen the telegram and that he was of the opinion that such course ought to be favorably considered by the Cabinet; that he was going to take it up in a most vigorous way at the next meeting to be held early next week and would personally bring the result of the Cabinet's deliberations to the Ambassador's attention.

The President yesterday informed me that public opinion was being greatly irritated throughout the country on account of the delay of our Government in recognizing the present Provisional Government. * * * He said that on this account his Government did not feel that it would be justified, in view of a hostile public opinion and of the undignified position in which it would be placed by so doing, in concluding the important questions at present pending between the two Governments—that is to say, the Chamizal and Colorado River cases and the special and general claims cases. He added that the Washington Government's views in these cases—together with the Tlahualilo case, which had been entirely concluded—had been accepted in principle by this Government, and that whenever the Government of the United States would place this Government in the position of settling the questions as matters between two friendly and sovereign if not equally powerful countries their solution might be expected.

I replied briefly that the views of the President and Secretary of State on this question had not been communicated to me and asked if he desired me to transmit the substance of what he had said to

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 21, 1913.

Sir: The Department has received your No. 1888, of February 5, 1913, transmitting correspondence with the Foreign Office and with your British colleague in regard to the claims arising from the different revolutionary outbreaks in Mexico.

It being assumed that the so-called Madero revolution was successful, it would appear that, under the generally accepted rules of international law, claimants seeking compensation for damages caused during that revolution would, as a class, be in a better legal position than would persons whose claims arose out of an unsuccessful revolution.

The statement in your notes to the Mexican Foreign Office and the British Minister, that the Government of the United States perceived no distinction between the two classes of claims, appears to have been made upon your own responsibility and without instructions from the Department. Probably it was intended to convey the opinion that claims arising out of the late revolutionary movements were valid; but it might, on the other hand, be construed as involving a renunciation or waiver of the benefit of the rule which imposes upon successful revolutionists liability for their acts. You will therefore take occasion to inform the appropriate authorities that the statements contained in your note of January 21, 1913, were made on your own responsibility, and were not intended to admit a doubt as to any of the established grounds of international liability; and you should make a similar expression to the British Minister with relation to the statements contained in your letter to him of January 27, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the Department's No. 1337, of June 21, 1913, in which I am directed to reopen with the British Minister and the Mexican Foreign Office the question of claims growing out of a successful revolution and those growing out of an unsuccessful one.

While the correspondence had upon this subject with the Mexican Government and with Mr. Stronge, the British Minister, was initiated upon my own responsibility and the position therein taken was taken upon my own responsibility, I was, in the course I pursued, guided solely by a desire to protect a vast and growing array of American claimants whose rights, it appeared to me, would be placed in jeopardy if this Government were able even by inference to establish its right to avoid responsibility for the claims growing out of the revolution against Madero, which was unquestionably the design it had under cover.

The American claims growing out of the revolution against the Madero Government are in number and amount infinitely greater than those growing out of the brief and comparatively peaceful revolution against General Diaz. I should say that the relative losses could best be expressed in the figures 10 to 1. Since the revolution against Madero as such did not succeed, but was followed by a totally unconnected revolution which did succeed, the claims against the Madero revolution would be weakened by the action which the Department desires taken and the claims growing out of the Madero revolution would not be strengthened at all. These two classes of claims must now be added to the claims growing out of the revolution against General Huerta, which can not yet be defined as those occasioned by a successful or unsuccessful revolution. Having these considerations in mind and also the circumstance that we are insisting that all American claims shall be assigned to the judgment of an international claims commission, I cannot, unless the Department shall see fit to reiterate these instructions, assume the responsibility of hazarding, by what appears to be an unnecessary discussion, the rights of a vast majority of the American claimants.

Several have, however, been paid with the understanding that such payment should not be held as a precedent and that the same should be considered gratuitous. The Covadonga indemnity which amounted to 400,000 marks was made the subject of direct negotiations between the German Legation here and the Mexican Government. It was paid some time during the year 1912, the German Minister threatening to make the facts of the case public property through the European press; and I was credibly informed at the time that in the event of Mexico's refusal he would have recommended the sending of a warship to Vera Cruz to enforce the demands of his Government. [Inclosure—Translation—Extract.]

Minutes of a meeting relative to the creation of a commission for the settlement of claims growing out of the disturbances in Mexico.

At the invitation of the Subsecretary for Foreign Affairs, the Ministers of Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy and Belgium, the Charges d'Affaires of Germany and Austria-Hungary, assembled at the Foreign Office and Licenciado Don Carlos Pereyra, Subsecretary for Foreign Affairs, proceeded to explain to them the purpose of the meeting in the following terms:

"The Government of Mexico having considered the notes of several foreign ministers, relating to claims growing out of damages caused by the revolution, and having made a study of the suggestions contained in said notes with reference to the creation of mixed commissions, the Mexican Government considers it fit to make the following statements:

"In the first place, it desires to set in relief, in a clear and precise manner, its purpose to satisfy the just wishes of the nationals represented by your excellencies, provided that these nationals represent in Mexico live forces which have helped and will help the progress of the nation.

"In the second place, the Government of Mexico desires that such indemnities as may be granted should be allowed within a short period of time. There is no doubt that the ministers who proposed the creation of mixed international commissions had in mind the efficiency of the results; but the Government of Mexico is of the opinion, without discarding the idea of the international commissions, that there might be a way by which the intention of my Government to settle just claims, and to reach decisions on the matter as speedily as possible, may both be accomplished at the same time. Therefore my Government believes that the idea it will submit to your excellencies will be more efficacious than the international mixed commissions.

"My Government proposes to your excellencies the appointment of a Mexican commission, formed by an uneven number of members, not more than five, chosen from the most distinguished, independent and honorable persons.

"It might be objected to this idea that the Government, supposing that the idea is accepted by your excellencies, would prefer lawyers. Several of the ministers have expressed the opinion that lawyers would by professional tendency evade the merits of cases and go into questions of an entirely techincal character; but in private conversations with the ministers who raised this objection I stated that the Government of Mexico would not insist upon the appointment of only members of the bar, even though it is convenient that a legal guidance should be had, but that the commission should be composed of a few lawyers and business men able to consider every feature of the claims presented to them for decision.

"It might be further objected, that we have the example of the former commission, now studying claims presented against the Government; but I must say that there is a marked difference between the old and the proposed commission. In the first place, the former commission has to take cognizance of claims from nationals as well as foreigners, and the one proposed will be confined exclusively and distinctly to the study of claims by foreign min-

This is a point of notable difference.

"The second point is of still greater importance. It would consist in giving the commission a fixed period of time, say of four or five months, to pass upon all claims presented, establishing their merits—that is, their consistency—and the amount to be awarded.

"With reference to the procedure, formality will not be observed, inasmuch as it is the intention that the commission shall act both as a conscientious tribunal and as a jury, in accordance with its best knowledge and belief-a tribunal of honest men, to use the phrase of the old Spanish laws—which will decide whether there is any right in support of the indemnity and will fix the amount, be it one, five or a hundred thousand pesos.

"I believe, in short—if the ministers have faith in the good intentions of the Mexican Government, in the desire it has to show the nations represented by your excellencies its purpose to do right when the nation again resumes its course of progress and production, and if the ministers are persuaded that this high tribunal will be formed by absolutely irreproachable and respectable men, from the point of view of their moral and intellectual character, and, in conclusion, if the ministers bear in mind the desirability of speedy accomplishment of practical results—that this idea will not only be well received, but that it will be followed by closer bonds between Mexico and the nations represented by your excellencies."

His Excellency Mr. Stronge, Minister of Great Britain, made the following statement:

"Mr. Minister, we have instructions from our Governments to suggest the creation of an international commission. Therefore we have not the right, the power, to accept your proposition. But I believe, though I do not know whether I can voice the sentiments of my colleagues, that the only thing I can do is to inform my Government of this proposition, which may be accepted if it is regarded as appropriate."

His Excellency Paul Lefaivre, Minister of France, expressed himself in the following words:

"Evidently, in order to recommend the idea to my Government, I would have to inform it concerning the constitution of the commission, because, so far as I am concerned, the results obtained through the commission created two years since are not encouraging, but rather to the contrary; and in order to recommend the idea I shall have to supply my Government with concrete motives persuading me of the worth of the commission. After being apprised of the persons who are to form the commission, I may be able to say to my Government: This is a tentative proposal, the last to which we can submit, to see whether we can attain results; otherwise we will have to return to our purpose as already accepted by our Governments, that is, to suggest a mixed commission."

Subsecretary Pereyra replied as follows:

"The statement just made by the Minister of France has already been considered by me; in fact, I referred to the commission now operating in anticipation of an objection of this character, and I said that the Government of Mexico desires to avoid the repetition in this commission of the objections to the former one. Mexico is persuaded that one of the means by which it can secure the cooperation of the persons, capital and great institutions of the nations here represented is undoubtedly the settlement of this question. We are not in the condition of Mexico in 1830 or 1838 when we defended ourselves against claims presented by nations which exerted pressure upon us, and when we, MEXICO. 953 without any other hope than that of eluding the burden which had fallen upon us, had to resort to jurisprudence and all possible forms of international law, to evade the evils by which we were menaced. I believe that at this moment Mexico is no way depressed; it may be deeply concerned, but it has great hopes and the certitude that with the cooperation of civilized nations it will yet see a new flourishing of civilization. In view of this, the question of distrust should be laid aside.

"The Minister of France has referred to the unsatisfactory results of the commission now operating, and I could also refer to the unsatisfactory results obtained from international commissions; in many cases, after the effect of them has been frustrated, diplomatic or some other action has been adopted to settle such difficulties as have been left unattended to by an international commission.

"Therefore, if we are to establish a national commission, we are not going to reproduce past errors but prevent them, and this is to be done in two ways: First, the formation of a commission that will guarantee the desires of the Ministers; second, the procedure: if the method adopted leaves no room for a postponement, then it can not be said that we are resorting to the commission tentatively but are fully hopeful of arriving at a satisfactory result."

The Minister of Italy said: That he appreciated the explanation made by Mr. Pereyra and had full faith in him; that the idea of the creation of a Mexican commission does not exclude the formation of a mixed one, if the former should be a failure, and that in this way some of the representatives, such as the British Minister, could meet the instructions they had from their Governments.

The Minister of Belgium said that he also appreciated the explanation made by Mr. Pereyra, but would like to learn the names of the persons who were to form the Commission.

Subsecretary Pereyra spoke again, as follows:

"I will answer the suggestions of the Belgian Minister. The guaranty sought by the nations represented by your excellencies concerning the formation of the commission is regarded by me as perfectly just; and it seems to me that I have said that the Mexican Government would appoint persons of an irreproachable character, that is, such as would cause your excellencies to congratulate yourselves upon their appointment and to have nothing more to say than that the names of the commissioners were a sufficient guaranty."

The French Minister said:

"Since we accept the principle, I believe we should be informed upon the rules under which the commission will admit claims."

Mr. Pereyra said:

"I will at once say that with reference to the term, we must not place any limitation. I believe that the claims which have been presented to this date, a complete list of which is in the possession of the Foreign Office, will furnish the data for the manner of operation of the commission.

"With reference to rules, they will be brief and precise, as they will be applied by an equity court, what is called in Spain a tribunal of good men, who will regard every indication tending towards the results.

"We would pass over the principles of international law, the rigor of which would be entirely set aside, and we would state that this is done for the purpose of inspiring good will and with a desire for closer relations.

"The Minister of Spain has not allowed us to hear his opinion, and I should like very much to hear it."

The Minister of Spain said:

"With reference to the formation of the commission, we know there must be something of jurisprudence and law, as should be the case; but we have the assurance that formalities will be avoided, and in this I am absolutely in accord, because I have always maintained that to adhere blindly to the letter of a code is the thing which is most in opposition to justice.

"With reference to the consultative commission, I see an inconvenience in the restrictive term which would limit the commission to June 5. Besides, there is the question of private patrimony as interpreted by the consultative commission, (and in this connection I attribute a great value to the remarks of Mr. Pereyra, when he tells us that the commission proposed by him will treat only cases in which foreigners are concerned, which is, in fact, a further guaranty), as this question of private patrimony and the incompetency of the commission in cases of death, has for me a very great interest not only because among my nationals I have had similar cases, but because, in due justice, I believe that the widows and orphans of a man without fortune are much more worthy of an indemnity, than a man several times a millionaire who may have suffered the misfortune of seeing his estate reduced to one million pesos.

"There is another question of positive interest which we must take up. For example, in the promise that all legal formalities will be set aside, I suppose exaggerated formalities. In the Consultative Claims Commission, where I have to go often, I have found that the receipts signed by rebel chiefs, perfeetly well known, have to be legalized and certified to in each case through the efforts of the person in interest. All of this will be set aside in the present case. Therefore, I, for my part, have heard my colleagues with pleasure and I adhere to the ideas of Mr. Pereyra."

The Minister of Italy closing the argument:
"It appears, Mr. Minister, that, more or less, we are all in complete accord."

The Subsecretary said:

"If such is the case, I am greatly pleased by the result."

The meeting then adjourned.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES.

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutional Forces, to all the inhabitants of the Republic—Take notice:

By virtue of the extraordinary powers conferred upon me, I have issued the following decree:

ARTICLE I. We recognize the right of all natives and foreigners to demand payment for all losses sustained during the revolution of 1910, that is to say, for the period between November 21, 1910, and May 31, 1911.

ARTICLE II. We recognize the equal right of natives and foreigners to demand damages for losses that they have suffered and which they may suffer during the present troubles; that is to say, from February 19, 1913, until the restoration of Constitutional order.

ARTICLE III. We recognize the same right of foreigners to demand payment for damages suffered through the revolutionary forces or armed groups during the period between May 31, 1911, and February 19, 1913.

ARTICLE IV. As soon as the First Chief of the Constitutional Army reaches the capital of the republic, and in accordance with the Plan of Guadalupe assumes executive power, he will appoint a commission of Mexican citizens charged to receive, discuss and liquidate all demands that may be made for damages suffered in the periods mentioned in Articles 1 and 2 of this decree.

ARTICLE V. At the same time he will name a commission as mentioned in the previous article in accord with the diplomatic representatives or special representatives that may be commissioned by each government to which the foreign claimants belong, and will proceed to name a mixed commission in-cluding an equal number of Mexicans and foreigners, the latter belonging to the nationalities of the claimants, for the purpose of receiving, discussing and liquidating all demands that may be presented in accordance with the first three articles of this decree.

ARTICLE VI. The form, time, terms and conditions under which shall be paid the claims for damages which may be presented, as well as the organization, procedure and other matters connected therewith, shall be decided by the commissions and shall be upheld by a special law which will be passed at an opportune time.

Let this decree be published and circulated and given due heed.

until further ordered by court. And so these cases stand.

Deputy Marshal Hillebrand advises me in writing that he is in possession of the land covered by suits with the exceptions above mentioned, and I have verified this by personal examination. Deputy Marshal states he can turn over property to railroads immediately upon receipt of instructions from Marshal to accept their bond. Marshal was in possesison of this land on March 15, 1910, with exception of what [was] occupied by four parties above mentioned who will not now be disturbed, I am of opinion that the taking over of this land by railroads would not violate agreement for status quo, and recommend that Department cause Marshal to be given instructions to accept bond. Apparently to [no?] good purpose would be served either Government by continuing the present satisfactory [unsatisfactory?] conditions on the property in question, while great good will be done the communities on both sides of the river if this large enterprise be permitted to proceed with its plant. Mexican Commissioner telegraphed requesting intervention and I have written him advising him of facts in case. Unless I receive instructions to contrary will leave here Saturday.

MEMORANDUM.

The Department of State ventures to recall to the attention of the Embassy of Mexico the recent correspondence with regard to the Chamizal case, more particularly the Embassy's memorandum of September 12¹, the Department's memorandum of October 6², the Embassy's response of October 12³, and the Department's aidemémoire of August 24⁴.

In its aide-mémoire of August 24 the Department stated:

The ever present possibility of friction between the citizens of the two countries on the tract in dispute renders it highly important that the long-standing controversy as to the international boundary line at El Paso and Juárez be settled as speedily as possible.

Advices which have come to the Department of State since that time merely accentuate, in its judgment, the importance of a speedy understanding with regard to this matter which until it is settled will be a constant source of irritation on the border, irritation which, in spite of the best efforts of the two Governments, may at any time lead to the most regrettable results.

Under these circumstances the Department of State begs to request that the Embassy of Mexico will again be so good as to communicate with the Mexican Foreign Office so that the Government of Mexico may be fully advised of the importance which the Government of the United States attaches to the speedy and just solution of this long-standing difficulty.

Referring status quo Chamizal tract. Since my telegram of 14th Mexican Commissioner officially protested against evictions in Chamizal without compliance with terms of agreement pending representations by Mexican Government. I called on Marshal for explanation of alleged evictions and he advised that he had permitted certain parties to occupy vacant houses on land in question with understanding that they leave when requested. He so requested some ten days ago and they left land as soon as other houses could be obtained. There were no forcible evictions. Weather was bitterly cold and as these people are extremely poor every opportunity was given them to find other homes and railroad companies placed small sum of money at disposal of Marshal to assist them in order to prevent suffering. Eight persons removed from the land and I have investigated the case of each one and find absolutely no intention to establish or maintain any possession adverse to that of Marshal and therefore not sufficient to meet the requirements for occupancy under Mexican title filed by agreement.

Washington, December 22, 1911.

Sir: Referring to your note of October 3 last, and the Department's response under date of the 18th of the same month, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 15th instant, in which you request the good offices of the Department to prevent the United States Deputy Marshal at El Paso, Texas, from "forcibly ejecting various occupants [of the] Chamizal Zone, some of them holding Mexican titles" and your note of December 16th,

in which you say that the Mexican Government has been informed "by the Mexican Consul at El Paso, Texas, that the Mexicans have been expelled from the Chamizal Zone by the American authorities" and request the good offices of the Department to the end that the status quo may be respected in the Chamizal Zone.

In reply to your telegram and note, I beg to say that the Department feels assured that in view of the telegraphic reports of Mr. Keblinger, the officer appointed by the Department to pass upon the question of possession on March 15th, 1910, under claim of prima facie Mexican title, copies of which are enclosed for your Excellency's information, your excellency will recognize that some misapprehension exists on the part of the Mexican Consul at El Paso, as to what has taken place in the Chamizal tract.

As your excellency will observe, no lands within the Chamizal Zone are in question under the present circumstances except certain lands which since 1907 have been in the undisputed possession of the United States Marshal under writs of sequestration issued out of the Federal Courts. It appears from Mr. Keblinger's telegraphic report that the Marshal had "permitted certain persons to occupy vacant houses on the land in question with understanding that they leave when requested. He so requested some ten days ago and they left land as soon as other houses could be obtained." None of these persons, however, could fairly be regarded as entitled to protection under the status quo agreement between the United States and Mexico, since, as they were on the land not under claim of prima facie Mexican title but by permission of the United States Marshal in whose possession the land has been since 1907, they were not covered by its provisions.

As to the three defendants in the original suits who gave replevin bonds and the one defendant who was not served, they are entirely undisturbed, as will be observed from Mr. Keblinger's reports.

As your excellency is aware, the terms of the status quo agreement between the two countries are set forth in this Department's note of March 22, 1910,¹ the Embassy's note of June 9, 1910,² and this Department's response of June 17th, 1910,³ while article VIII ⁴ of the convention of June 24, 1910, providing for the arbitration of the Chamizal Case, extends for two years longer the time during which the two Governments have consented to abide by these terms, although the award which has been rendered is not regarded by this Government as valid and binding.

In its note of March 22nd, 1910, this Department proposed "to appoint an officer who shall be authorized to pass upon the question of the existence of prima facie Mexican title and of the fact of actual possession under such title March 15, 1910, and to report to this Department the cases wherein ejectment should be prevented by virtue of international comity." In your note of June 9, 1910, you accepted the Department's proposals with respect to the status quo, with the proviso "that the decisions of the commissioner to be designated by the Department of State shall have but a provisional character and shall not impair the rights that the interested parties may have on the land."

This Department, in its note of June 17, 1910, responded as to this point: "By this the Department understands your excellency to mean that the decision of the Commissioners designated by this Department shall have force and effect only pending the arbitration and shall have no effect whatever as regards the ultimate title to the lands in question after the decision of the international commis-

Your excellency will observe that in accordance with the arrangement set forth in this exchange of notes the two Governments agree to commit the determination as to the existence of prima facie Mexican title and actual possession thereunder on March 15, 1910, to an officer to be designated for that purpose by the Department of State, whose decisions are to be deemed effective during the life of the status quo agreement (since extended as above noted for two years) although the two Governments were careful to stipulate that these decisions should have only a provisional character and should in no wise prejudice the ultimate rights of parties in interest after the termination of the period fixed as the limit of the status quo agreement.

It is not doubted that your excellency will recognize in the Department's attitude in this matter its earnest desire scrupulously to comply with the letter and the spirit of the status quo agreement between the two countries and that your excellency, in the light of the facts and circumstances herein set forth, will agree with the Department in its conclusion that the present action of the United States Marshal at El Paso in no wise violates the status quo agreement.

EXCELLENCY: With reference to the correspondence previously exchanged between the Department and this Embassy and especially to your excellency's memorandum dated December 16, 1911, relative to the Chamizal case, and in compliance with special instructions from the Department of Foreign Relations of my country, I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Mexican Government adheres to the opinion that the Chamizal case was finally decided: because the Tribunal of Arbitration conformed to the procedure agreed upon by both Governments; because the President of the said Tribunal, the Honorable Eugene Lafleur, was chosen by the two countries, which took into account the high reputation for learning and probity of that jurist, of which he gave high evidence in the hearings of the case; because the two Governments agreed, with the completest formality that can be given to an international covenant, to abide by the award; because the opinion that one of the parties may form as to the said award being defective or ineffective does not confer upon it the right to quash it; and lastly because the admission of the opposite proposition would strike at the root of the high conquest achieved by the nations in looking to arbitration as the means of settling international disputes.

Notwithstanding the foregoing statement, the Mexican Government, desiring for its part no abatement of the cordiality of the relations that bind it to the Government of the United States, is disposed to listen to such proposals as that Government may see fit to make, and the Government of Mexico will give them the full consideration they deserve, on the understanding that they are not to deal with the question of the validity of the arbitral award nor the possibility of determining scientifically the site of the river bed

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 26, 1912.

Your No. 1309 of March 12. Seek a personal and informal interview with the President before the possible departure of Calero for Washington. Express the gratification of this Department at the disposition of the President, shown in the interview you reported, to reach a practical solution of the Chamizal question, for an early settlement of which this Government is most solicitous. Add that the Department was glad to learn, from the note of the Mexican Embassy of March 9, that Mexico is willing to consider the proposals of this Government "on the understanding that they are not to deal with the question of the validity of the arbitral award or the possibility of scientifically determining the site of the river bed in 1864."

By this the Department understands that neither Government is to be expected at any stage in the proposed negotiations to admit the correctness of the contention of the other with respect to these two mooted questions; and that without prejudice to the position of either Government—which positions may be expressly recited if desired—the negotiations will seek solution on a basis of mutual convenience.

As suggested in its memorandum of August 24 last, the Department desires the details to be taken up in personal negotiations at Washington as soon as possible. You will express the hope that the Ambassador here may be so instructed as to enable him to take

File No. 711.1215/410.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Mexican Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 30, 1912.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 9th instant, setting forth the position of the Mexican Government with respect to the validity of the award in the Chamizal case, in which you state that:

Notwithstanding the foregoing statement, the Mexican Government, desiring for its part no abatement of the cordiality of the relations that bind it to the Government of the United States, is disposed to listen to such proposals as that Government may see fit to make, and the Government of Mexico will give them the full consideration they deserve, on the understanding that they are not to deal with the question of the validity of the arbitral award or the possibility of determining scientifically the site of the river bed in 1864.

By this language, in connection with the memoranda of the Department of August 24th and October 6th last, to which the Embassy is responding, the Department understands the Embassy to mean that neither Government is to be expected at any stage in the proposed negotiations to admit the correctness of the contention of the other with respect to the validity of the award and the possibility of scientifically relocating the site of the river bed in 1864. The Department understands that, without prejudice to the position of either Government with respect to the two matters mentioned, which positions may be expressly recited if so desired, the proposed negotiations will seek a solution upon a basis of mutual advantage.

This Government is desirous, as suggested in the memorandum of this Department of August 24th last, that the details of the proposed arrangement be taken up in negotiations in Washington as soon as possible, and the Department expresses the hope that, in case the Embassy in this city is not already empowered to that end, the Mexican Government will deem it appropriate to authorize the Embassy to take up these negotiations without delay.

With high appreciation of your Government's courteous action in the matter, I avail [etc.]

Sir: I inclose herewith for your information a copy of tentative bases for a convention between the United States and Mexico for the settlement of the Chamizal case and other related questions, the original of which was, on the 28th ultimo, handed on the part of the Department to Señor Algara, the Second Secretary of the Mexican Embassy.

[Inclosure.]

TENTATIVE BASES FOR A CONVENTION FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF THE CHAMIZAL CASE AND OTHER RELATED QUESTIONS ALONG LINES OF PRACTICAL CONVENIENCE PROPOSED ON THE PART OF THE UNITED STATES FOR CONSIDERATION WITHOUT PREJUDICE TO THE CONTENTIONS OF EITHER GOVERNMENT IN REGARD TO THE VALIDITY OF THE CHAMIZAL AWARD.

1. A Preamble reciting that certain differences have arisen and still subsist between the United States and Mexico in regard to the proper interpretation to be given certain provisions of the Boundary Treaties in force between the two countries and with respect to the location of the international boundary line near El Paso, Texas, and Juárez, Chihuahua; and reciting further that differences have arisen and still subsist between the two Governments as to the validity and binding effect of the decision of the International Boundary Commission in the Chamizal Case, the United States maintaining that said decision is absolutely invalid for all purposes and of no binding effect whatever for the reasons set forth in the dissenting opinion of the American Commissioner and in the protest of the American Agent, and the Government of Mexico on the other hand maintaining the validity of said decision ; therefore, in order to obviate these differences and to avoid like differences in future, the two Governments, as a matter of practical convenience, have agreed to negotiate a convention on the following tentative bases:

2. A declaratory interpretation of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of February 2, 1848; the Treaty of Boundary of December 2, 1853, and the Boundary Convention of November 12, 1884, as establishing or recognizing the "centre of the normal channel of the Rio Grande" from its mouth "to the point where the parallel 31° 47′ north latitude crosses the same" as a fluvial or arcifinious international boundary line between the United States and Mexico, subject at all times to the principles laid down in paragraphs three and four.

3. A declaratory interpretation of Articles I and II of the Convention of November 12, 1884, and Article IV of the Convention of March 1, 1889, as referring only to two classes of changes: first, changes by "erosion," i.e., the erosion of one bank and the deposit of alluvium upon the other; and second, by "avulsion," i.e., "the cutting of a new bed, or, when there is more than one channel, by the deepening of another channel" than that previously recognized as the boundary.

4. A further declaratory interpretation that these two classes of cases embrace all the changes and all the classes of changes, other than artificial changes, which have occurred in the channel of said river since the signature of the Treaty of 1848, or may occur hereafter, except the special class of changes provided for in the Convention of March 20, 1905, for the elimination of the bancos in the Rio Grande.

5. The above declaratory interpretations apply in all respects to the Rio Colorado where it forms the international boundary line.

6. In order to terminate forever certain differences which have arisen and still subsist between the two Governments with respect to the location of the international boundary line near El Paso, Texas, and Juarez, Chihuahua, it is hereby specifically recognized that from the point where parallel 31° 47′ north latitude intersects the channel of the Rio Grande to a point immediately below the more easterly of the two tracts of land segregated from Mexico and the United States, respectively, by the artificial cut-off of 1901, the boundary line follows the centre of the normal channel of the Rio Grande, which boundary line at present is substantially as shown by the red line on a map to be prepared by the two sections of the International Boundary Commission and signed by the Plenipotentiaries.

7. In order to preclude the possibility of any question with respect to private titles, the Government of Mexico recognizes the validity of the private titles derived from grants of the State of Texas to the lands in the small portion of land southerly from the present channel of the Rio Grande and lying between it and the abandoned channel of 1901, the same being substantially as shown on the map referred to in paragraph six. The Government of the United States recognizes the validity of titles derived from Mexican grants in the so-called Córdova Tract, being the tract bounded westerly, northerly and easterly by the abandoned channel of the Rio Grande of 1901 and southerly by the present channel of the Rio Grande, and being substantially as shown on said map.

8. It is furthermore specifically agreed that the international boundary line at the artificial bar known as El Horcón shall follow the centre of the normal channel of the Rio Grande, which channel at present is substantially as shown on a map signed by General Anson Mills, United States Commissioner, and Señor Don F. B. Puga, Mexican Commissioner, accompanying the Joint Journal of the International Boundary Commission of October 24, 1906, now on file in the archives of the two Governments.

9. In order to preclude the possibility of any question with respect to private titles the Government of Mexico recognizes the validity of the private titles derived from grants of the State of Texas to the lands within the so-called bar of El Horcón as shown on the map referred to in paragraph eight, supra.

10. The three parcels of land segregated by artificial cut-offs and mentioned in paragraphs 6 and 8 shall be marked by the International Boundary Commission in accordance with the rules adopted by the Commission for the marking of bancos under the Convention of March 20, 1905.

11. If, in the course of the negotiations, it should appear that the readjustment of the boundary line herein provided renders it equitable that any difference in the area or value of lands falling thereby to the respective parties should be equalized through the payment of a money consideration, suitable provision shall be made therefor in this convention.

The Secretary of State to the American Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 14, 1913.

Sir: Referring to the Department's instruction of July 1st last transmitting for your information a copy of tentative bases for a convention between the United States and Mexico for the settlement of the pending Chamizal controversy and other related questions, which bases had been communicated to the Mexican Embassy in this city in June last, I will state for your further confidential information in connection with this case, the substance of a conference at the Department on the 3rd instant between the Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Lascurain, and myself.

Mr. Lascurain expressed a desire on behalf of his Government to reach a prompt adjustment of the Chamizal controversy, but he stated that he personally was not familiar with the situation or the course of the negotiations up to the present time, and asked that the position of the United States Government and its wishes be explained to him. In compliance with this request he was informed that tentative bases for a settlement which would be acceptable to this Government had been communicated to the Mexican Embassy here last spring, and that these bases, together with certain alternative suggestions brought forth by the Mexican Ambassador, had been exhaustively discussed at that time; that early in the negotiations it appeared that the Mexican Government was prepared to effect a settlement on the basis of exchanging its claim to the Chamizal tract for a guaranteed supply of water somewhere along the boundary for irrigation purposes, either from the Rio Grande by increasing the amount to be delivered under the treaty of 1906 with Mexico, or from the Colorado River in connection with the settlement of the question of the distribution of the waters of that river and other related questions; that, however, a careful examination of the situation had shown that it was impossible to enlarge the supply of water from the Rio Grande guaranteed by the treaty of 1906; and that combining the negotiations for the settlement of the Chamizal question with those for the adjustment of the Colorado River matters would lead to delays and complications which would unduly postpone the settlement of the question, and inasmuch as the subjects of the two controversies were wholly unrelated, it was finally decided that it would be advisable to deal with them separately. Finally the Ambassador was left with the tentative proposition of the United States that the Mexican Government exchange its claim to a portion of the Chamizal for the Horcón Bar tract, which was considerably larger in surface area, although not equal in value; and that the difference in value between the latter tract and that portion of the Chamizal claimed by the Mexican Government be offset by the payment to Mexico of an amount of money to be agreed upon, which the Mexican Government should use as compensation for the holders of Mexican titles which would be eliminated by the surrender of the Mexican claim to the Chamizal. Mr. Lascurain was further informed that when these negotiations were suspended last summer in consequence of the temporary absence of the Mexican Ambassador, this Government had been assured by the Ambassador that he would confer with the President of Mexico and with the Minister of Foreign Affairs with a view to obtaining new instructions, and that he expected upon his return here to be able to bring with him two draft treaties, one arranging for the settlement of the Colorado River question and one for the settlement of the Chamizal question; that notwithstanding these assurances this Government had received no further communication from the Mexican Ambassador on the subject of the Chamizal since his return to Washington this fall, except a vague suggestion of a possibility of an arrangement of the Chamizal matter on advantageous terms if it was delayed until the settlement of the Colorado Kiver question, or, in the alternative, a more prompt settlement of the Chamizal if some entirely new bases of settlement could be agreed upon. This suggestion was not in writing, but was communicated orally at an interview which was secured after great delay and apparently with considerable reluctance on the part of the Ambassador.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs then stated that it would be impossible for him to make any positive reply without consulting the records of the case, which he could not do until his return to the Foreign Office; that he was opposed to delay, and saw no reason why the case could not be settled at once in a way which would be satisfactory to both Governments.

At this point in the conference the Minister's attention was called to the importance to Mexico as well as to the United States of reaching a prompt settlement of this and several other questions which had been unnecessarily delayed, and were likely to occasion considerable friction between the two Governments. In this connection it was stated to the Minister that although the portion of the Chamizal tract claimed by Mexico was comparatively small in area and of no great value, nevertheless it so happened that a number of important American interests were centered in it, including the railroad terminal facilities at that point; and that the delay of the Mexican Government in proceeding with these negotiations had roused strong criticism and feeling among those interests, which were far-reaching

The Minister of Foreign Affairs then stated that he was anxious to take the matter up at once, and would do so immediately upon his return to Mexico, and he assured me that a proposal for a settlement of the Chamizal question would be immediately made by the Mexican Government and that no further delays in negotiations would be permitted, as he was aware of the importance of settling the question promptly, and particularly before the expiration of the two years' period from the date of the award of the Chamizal Arbitration Tribunal of June 15, 1911.

This outline of the conference with Mr. Lascurain is sent to you for your information merely, and it is not desired that any action be taken thereon except upon further instructions from the Department.

[Memorandum-Translation.]

Fundamental ideas out of which to evolve the bases for the settlement of the Chamizal question:

1. Both countries adhere to the attitudes they have respectively taken on the matter and to the scope given by each to the final award.

2. In view of the foregoing and by way of compromise as well as in consideration of the fact that El Chamizal is an integral part of the city of El Paso, Mexico will desist from claiming sovereignty rights over the said tract in consideration of the obligation assumed by the United States to deliver one or more American tracts of land on the right bank of the Rio Grande equal in area to the Chamizal, said tracts passing to the control and sovereignty of Mexico.

3. By virtue of the principle laid down in the first clause, both parties agree that the Chamizal award does not establish any precedent whatever as to the construction to be given to the boundary treaties and conventions in force between the two countries. consequence it will be left to future negotiations between the two Chancelleries to define whether the Rio Grande is to be declared the arcifinious line from the year 1852, date of the Emery-Salazar survey, or whether it is to be considered arcifinious from the date only on which both Chancelleries shall reach an understanding on the subject. 4. In view of the assertion always made by Mexico that the parts of El Chamizal covered by titles of Mexican origin must be considered as being under a valid title, and whereas the American Government for its part does not acknowledge the validity of those Mexican titles, it is agreed, by way of compromise, as follows: (A) A commission or tribunal appointed by both Governments and composed of three representatives, one a Mexican, another an American and a third chosen by these two, will examine the alleged Mexican titles to determine their value from the standpoint of civil law, laying aside, to that effect only, any question of international law that might affect the juridicial range of such titles. (B) When any title shall have been found valid, in the form above stated, the land covered by said title shall be located and appraised, its present actual merchantable value being taken into account, and the value shall be paid by the American Government to the lawful holder of the title, by way of indemnification, the said title being thereby extinguished and annulled.

He first took up the Chamizal case and recited at length his discussions with Mr. Knox, indicating he was now prepared to propose an exchange of the territory and that if the United States would cede the islands of San Elizario and Beaver, near El Paso, Mexico would be able, in conformity with national sentiment, to cede El Chamizal based on interpretation of the treaties of 1853 and 1884. The exchange could be made as Mr. De la Barra had proposed while he was Ambassador at Washington, but the arrangements could not be carried into effect until Mexican sentiment had been prepared.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 3, 1913—8 p. m.

69. Your 58, February 28, midnight, and your 64, March 1, midnight, Chamizal case.

The Department is at a loss to understand Minister de la Barra's suggestion of a settlement of the Chamizal case through the cession by the United States of San Elizario and Beaver Islands, except upon the theory that Señor de la Barra has not had opportunity to become conversant with the recent course of the negotiations. reasons explained to Señor de la Barra when he was Ambassador here and since then repeatedly pointed out to Ambassador Calero, the cession of San Elizario Island is absolutely impossible and can not even be discussed by this Government. You will so inform the Minister of Foreign Relations at once, adding that the Department is under the impression that Beaver Island, as such, no longer exists. His proposition is, moreover, entirely inconsistent with the whole course of the negotiations for the past year, culminating in a recent memorandum by the Mexican Embassy in this city, containing tentative bases which, in the opinion of this Department, afford a reasonable basis for discussion, although naturally the Department will desire to propose certain modifications.

You will point out these considerations to the Foreign Minister and say to him that if a settlement is to be reached it must be upon these bases, certainly not less favorable to the United States than those already proposed by his predecessor in office.

¹ The remainder of this telegram is irrelevant to the present subject; it is printed under Claims of American citizens against Mexico, etc.

The substantive modifications which the Department proposes to the Embassy's recent propositions are, first, the inclusion of the Córdoba tract as well as the Chamizal tract in the United States, the boundary line being so drawn that the Horcón tract and the small tract near El Paso south of the river would fall to Mexico; second, a provision that the awards of the proposed commission should in no case exceed the appraised value of the lands in question as fixed by the tax assessors in El Paso at the date of the award without taking into account any improvements except those, if any, made by claimants under Mexican private title.

A prompt commitment of the settlement of this question along these lines is regarded by the Department as of the utmost importance.

Relative to the questions pending between our Governments, I have the honor to assure your excellency of the friendly attitude of Mexico in its desire to settle them satisfactorily.

The Government of Mexico not only wishes to show that it is moved by the highest sentiments of justice and that it desires to create closer relations with the United States, but to demonstrate by actual deeds that, the national crisis having passed, it wishes to initiate a reorganization of the country by satisfying all claims founded on law and equity.

I believe that the above will convince your excellency that the President of the Republic has given preferred attention to the matters in question and that when they are definitely decided he will do everything necessary to have them closed as soon as possible and in accordance with the general principles of law and the highest equity.

As soon as compatible with careful study of the foregoing, I desire the Department's instructions thereon. The matters of the Chamizal, Tlahualilo, Colorado River, and the Alamo, Douglas and

281. A note from the Foreign Office just received states in substance:

Concerning questions growing out of the Chamizal arbitral award, the Mexican Government has always shown its disposition to enter into equitable negotiations in accordance with the views of the United States.

The failure of the United States to recognize Emilio Rabasa as Ambassador at Washington, and the unusual relations existing between the two Governments—preventing further negotiations on a matter originating at Washington and which should be continued there, and causing the Mexican Foreign Office to confine its dealings with the United States to urgent and routine business—make it indispensable that the Chamizal question should be treated from a new point of view.

The provisions of Article 8 of the Chamizal arbitral convention dated June 24, 1910, and its additional protocol, fix June 15, 1913, as the date for the execution of the award. Considering that its practical execution requires the cooperation of the two Governments, Mexico submits this point to the United States, reserving all of its rights to the portion of the Chamizal covered by the award and maintaining that its failure to execute the award on the date fixed shall not be argued in the future as detrimental to Mexico.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith copy of letter sent to Mr. Puga, commissioner from Mexico, and his reply thereto, both relating to the resumption of work on the Colorado River.

In accordance with his suggestion 1 have taken the matter up with the representative of the Colorado River Land Company in Mexico City, through General H. G. Otis, with the request that a decision may be reached at the earliest practicable date, in order that resumption of work may not be delayed.

I did not understand that the exchange of notes between the two Governments included any limitations as to time in which the work should be completed; and if need be, I suggest that the matter be revived through the State Department.

Very respectfully,

The Commissioner for the United States to the Official Inspector for Mexico.

St. Louis, August 25, 1911.

DEAR SIR: The resumption of work along the Colorado River in Baja California, which was suspended on account of floods on May 20th last, is contemplated early in October.

1. A careful survey will be made to determine the present condition of the levee and dam. It is my intention to take this up very soon.

2. The first construction work will be the restoration of such portions of the levee north of the Abejas River as have been damaged, and the construction of tapoons or spurs at suitable intervals along the river side thereof to prevent erosion from water flowing along the base during overflow stages of river.

3. The raising and enlarging of the levee north of Volcano Lake to such height and section as may be necessary to insure its safety for several years.

4. The dismantling of such railway tracks and equipment as will not be needed and laying such new railway tracks as the projected work may require.

The details of the projected work can only be determined after a careful survey of the present conditions has been made and maps and plats will then be sent to you.

In the meantime I assume the work can be carried on under the same terms as defined by your Government both as to operating under the Colorado River Land Company by me as attorney in fact, and also as to the customs rulings covering the entry of any and all things required for the proper prosecution of the work.

Your prompt consideration and favorable response to these suggestions is earnestly requested in order that there may be no delay in the inauguration of active operations as contemplated.

With highest regard [etc.]

My personal opinion is that the permit and privileges granted to your company last year in regard to the construction of a levee and dam on the western bank of the Colorado River in Lower California, Mexico, has expired, since all correspondence relating to those works specially mentioned the month of May, 1911, as the latest date in which they should be finished and since they were actually completed—though badly damaged later on—within the designated time. In my own judgment, your company ought to apply again to our Department of Fomento for new authority and customs rulings, and please notice that I say and mean "Fomento" and not "Foreign Relations," as the former is the only department of our Government empowered by law to grant such kind of permits and privileges. I should say you won't meet with any particular trouble in getting what you wish if you act quickly through the company's representative in this capital and along the general lines herein suggested.

Nevertheless, I am forwarding at once your consultation to the proper Mexican Government officials and will let you know their final answer as soon as it reaches me.

I wish to add that the outline of what you propose to do in handling the new constructive work is satisfactory to me in a technical sense, and I don't believe any serious objection will be made to your plans, once properly legalized.

Yours very truly,

F. B. Puga.

Sir: I enclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting correspondence from which it appears that work on the Colorado River protective works is about to be resumed, but that the Mexican official inspector has advised the American engineer in charge that he believes that the permit and privileges granted by Mexico in this case have expired. I also enclose copies of previous diplomatic correspondence relating to the construction of these works.¹

You will say to the Foreign Office that it is desired soon to renew the construction along the Lower Colorado River of the protective works begun but uncompleted last winter. It is very desirable and apparently necessary that such works be entirely finished before the flood-water season of next spring. The Government of the United States would, therefore, be pleased if the Government of Mexico would issue the appropriate orders to customs officials and other interested officers, so that the work may be proceeded with and speedily completed under the arrangements heretofore entered into between the two governments.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In respect to the situation on the lower Colorado River I suggest that negotiations be opened with Mexico for the early creation of an international commission, embracing in its membership both American and Mexican engineers, to investigate and report as to the proper method of utilizing the waters of the lower Colorado in the two countries to the best advantage to each, taking into consideration the rights and interests of both countries. Such a commission should be vested with broad powers and ample

Such a commission should be vested with broad powers and ample authority to examine into and submit a basis for the adjustment of all questions relating to the conservation, use and control of the waters of said river, with a view to such governmental action upon the part of both Governments as shall result in a complete, just and final settlement of all matters with reference to the river and its waters, in which the two countries are interested. The considerations calling for the appointment of such a commission at this particular time are as follows:

There has heretofore been constructed a canal and irrigation works for the irrigation of the valuable lands of the Imperial Valley and other parts of California. A portion of this canal lies in Mexican territory and is being maintained and operated under authority from that Government. It is important that the status of this canal and the appurtenant works shall be properly established and provision made for its future development and maintenance with due regard to the rights of the citizens of both countries.

The Colorado River is subject to great fluctuations in flow and the lower portion of the river lying within the Republic of Mexico naturally overflows its banks and has in the past seriously threat-ened the security of the lands and people of the Imperial Valley. It has also overflowed extensive areas in Mexico, thus affecting the productive uses to which this land can be put. On account of the danger to the property in the United States, this Government has already expended large sums of money in the construction of embankments and other works on Mexican territory. The expenditures have been made and the work carried on through the agency of a Mexican corporation, the Colorado River Land Company. Definite provision, however, has not been made for the continued maintenance of this work and it must be apparent that it should not be necessary to resort to this method to construct improvements of this nature. Moreover, the work thus far accomplished is largely temporary in character. Expensive permanent works are essential to any really satisfactory treatment of the situation. The Mexican Government has extended courteous consideration to the Colorado River Land Company, knowing that these courtesies were being extended in effect to the United States Government; but the adequate solution of this problem requires direct action on the part of both Governments. The necessity of an immediate adjustment of this entire matter should appeal to the Mexican Government since her people in that locality are dependent upon an uninterrupted flow of the waters of the Colorado River, and a complete and definite understanding with the Government of the United States would have many advantages over the various uncertain agreements with private corporations through which both countries have attempted to work out a partial solution of the problem and to meet present emergencies.

I trust the above will serve as a suggestion as to the procedure which was recommended by the consulting engineers, whose report has just been transmitted by the President to Congress.

I am enclosing herewith a copy of said report 1 for such ready reference as you desire to make to it, and should be pleased to transmit from time to time to your Department, as you may desire, such documents and papers as may be found in the Department of the Interior upon this subject.

As bearing upon our own interest in the definite adjustment of this matter with Mexico, permit me to call your attention to the fact that it is reported that there are upwards of ten thousand citizens living in the Imperial Valley and that property to the extent of many millions of dollars has been created, all dependent upon the supply of fresh water derived through a single canal which heads in the United States on the west side of the Colorado River, extending into Mexican territory, thence back to the valley heretofore referred to. Any interruption to the flow of this water will be at the sacrifice of millions of dollars of property of citizens of the United States, and if the supply were suddenly cut off, as it might be at any moment, there would be no possibility of taking out of the Valley all the people and their live-stock quickly enough to save them from intense suffering, or even death by thirst, as there is no fresh water within one hundred miles or more of the locality.

The United States as a land owner has hundreds of thousands of acres of land, the value of which is dependent upon obtaining water from the Colorado River and conducting it through Mexico. The head of the canal adjacent to the Colorado River is in the possession of citizens of the United States. The main trunk line, consisting largely of natural channels leading through Mexico and adjacent to the border of the United States, is under the control of a Mexican corporation now in bankruptcy and in the hands of the Mexican courts. From the canals on Mexican territory water is distributed according to the orders of the Mexican officials to the canals which lead into the United States. The condition has become more and more acute as time goes on, and although the subject of frequent discussion and much correspondence during the past decade apparently nothing has been accomplished as yet toward the solution of the international question.

Yours respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 19, 1912.

Sm: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, transmitting a report by the consulting engineers in regard to the utilization of the waters of the lower Colorado River, and suggesting that negotiations be initiated with Mexico for the early creation of an international commission, including in its membership both American and Mexican engineers, to investigate and report as to the most desirable method of distributing such waters.

In this connection I beg to refer to previous correspondence on this subject of the equitable distribution of the waters of the Colorado River, and especially to letters from this Department to the Interior Department of April 10, 1908 (File No. 3172/84), April 15, 1908 (File No. 3172/85–86), April 25, 1908 (File No. 3172/89), and May 22, 1908 (File No. 3172/92–94), and also to letters from this Department bearing dates of April 15, 1910 (transmitting a memorandum on the matter in question (File No. 17420/19), May 6, 1910 (File No. 17420/22), and May 9, 1910 (File No. 17420/22), with its enclosure.

You will observe that there is already in existence a commission organized for the purpose disclosed in the correspondence above referred to. The subjects of investigation assigned to this commission include some of those which the commission proposed by you would have to undertake, as you will also see from the correspondence referred to. As at present composed, the existing commission is made up of Mr. Wilbur Keblinger for the United States, and Señor Puga for the Government of Mexico. The latter gentleman has, I believe, been delegated by the Mexican Government to perform certain duties in connection with the erection by this Government of the levee works in the Imperial Valley.

Before taking this question up again with the Mexican Government it would be advantageous to know whether it is your desire that the commission already existing, increased by the appointment of competent engineers by each Government, shall be utilized for the work your Department has now in mind, or whether you prefer that we propose to the Government of Mexico the abolition of this commission and the appointment of an entirely new one.

Upon receiving information from you upon this point I shall be glad to direct our Ambassador at Mexico City to take up the question with the Mexican Government with a view either of augmenting the present commission by the addition of the necessary engineers, or by abolishing the present commission and creating a new commission, as you may desire. It is probable that the latter course would entail a longer delay than the mere increasing of an existing commission.

Before taking this question up again with the Mexican Government it would be advantageous to know whether it is your desire that the commission already existing, increased by the appointment of competent engineers by each Government, shall be utilized for the work your Department has now in mind, or whether you prefer that I propose to the Government of Mexico the abolition of this commission and the appointment of an entirely new one.

I am of the opinion, after looking carefully into the duties and powers of the present commission and the purpose for which it was appointed, that the same will not suffice and could not well be made to answer the requirements in this case, but that the public interest will be better served by the appointment of an entirely new commission with broad powers and composed of men from each country of known standing and familiarity with the subject to be dealt with. Said commission should not be limited to engineers but should permit of the appointment of some members familiar with the legal and diplomatic issues necessarily involved.

It is my thought that a commission so composed should be given a broad latitude and directed to go into every phase of the Colorado River matter in which both countries are interested, to the end that said commission may formulate a report on the whole subject, with proper recommendations, to be submitted to each country, with the hope that the two countries may then enter into a permanent agreement, along the lines laid down by said commission, for the final disposition of all international phases of the Colorado River problem.

In reply I have the pleasure to say to your excellency that the Mexican Government abounds in similar wishes and believes, like the Government of the United States, that it is eminently necessary to make a thorough study of the points mentioned by your excellency, for which reason Mexico accepted with pleasure the appointment of the commission suggested by the Government of the United States since the beginning of the year 1908, which com-

In view of the above, I beg to recommend to your excellency to inform your Government that Mexico accepts the appointment of the proposed international commission, and take the liberty to suggest that for the purpose of the early action and facilities of said commission, the one now existing as the International Water Boundary Commission be permitted to remain in force with an increased and practical personnel to study and propose an arrangement of the matters pertaining to the Colorado River, increasing to that end, if necessary, the powers it now has.

The Mexican Government believes that the way suggested will be favorably considered by that of your excellency, in view of the promptness and facility with which the International Boundary Commission will be able to act concerning the works on the Colorado River without disregarding the works it

Senate Doc. No. 846, 62d Cong., 2d sess.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter of the Secretary of the Interior submitting an appeal of the Board of Supervisors of Imperial County, California, for further appropriations and works for protection against the flood waters of the Colorado River.

[Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.]

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior inclosing an appeal from the board of supervisors of Imperial County, California, for further appropriations of money and further works for the protection of lands and property in the United States against the flood waters of the Colorado River.

In my message dated February 2, 1912, transmitting data of the work of the Interior Department, published as House Document No. 504, Sixty-second Congress, second session, there is contained a report of the engineer in charge of the work of protection done under the act of June 25, 1910, appropriating $1,000,000 for this purpose, and also a report of a special board convened by my direction to review this report and advise what further work should be done along the lower Colorado River for the protection of the interests of the United States. In this report of the special board, dated June 7, 1911, there will be found a recommendation that certain additional work should be at once executed, and an estimate of $1,000,000 as necessary for this work.

In my message I stated that I did not at that time make a definite recommendation, for the reason that the plan to be adopted for the betterment of conditions near the mouth of the Colorado River proves to be so dependent on a free and full agreement between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States as to joint expenditure and joint use that it is unwise to move until we can obtain some agreement with that Government which will enable us to submit to Congress a larger plan, better adapted to the exigencies presented than the one adopted. As stated in this message, the matter was being pressed upon the attention of the Mexican Government and favorable progress has been made in the negotiations. However, it is not probable that the negotiations with Mexico can be consummated before the adjournment of Congress, and it is therefore desirable to provide against a possible emergency which may arise after Congress has adjourned.

Since the report of the special board above referred to a part of the work proposed has been executed, and it is believed that the work will prove adequate for the protection of the lands in Imperial Valley against serious overflow during the present flood, which materially exceeds the average flood in volume, but as shown in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior the Colorado River since the date of the report of the special advisory board began and has continued to cave its banks, until the protecting levee on the Mexican side about 7 miles below the intake of the Imperial Canal is threatened, and apprehensions are aroused that the Colorado will again cut a deep channel into the Imperial Canal and flow again into Salton

Sink with disastrous results to American lives and property.

I request that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior be followed and that an appropriation of $1,250,000 be made to meet any emergencies that may arise for the construction of levees and revetments along the Colorado River and for the protection of property in the United States from damage by the flood waters of that river, and to be expended in whole or in part for the purposes stated and under the direction of the President of the United States.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1912.

[Inclosure.]

The Sccretary of the Interior to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 13, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of letter from the board of supervisors of Imperial County, Cal., relative to the securing of an appropriation in sufficient amount to safeguard the Imperial Valley from the further overflow of the lower Colorado River.

Your attention is respectfully invited to your message dated February 2, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 504, 62d Cong., 2d sess.), transmitting data of the work of the Interior Department, in which will be found a detailed report of all work done prior to that date under the special appropriation of $1,000,000 made by Congress on June 25, 1910, for the protection of lands and property in the Imperial Valley, Cal., against the flood waters of the Colorado River, and also the report of the special advisory board convened by your direction, which report, dated June 7, 1911, contains a full statement of the physical and related facts concerning the lower Colorado River and its floods and the recommendations of the board as follows:

We recommend that further work should be undertaken at once and in approximately the following order:

(a) The levees north of Volcano Lake should be raised, strengthened, and extended. (b) The existing levees along the west bank of the Colorado River to the Abejas should be repaired and protected.

For this purpose and to meet emergencies there should be immediately available the sum of at least $1,000,000. This provides only for temporary maintenance of levees and does not include the systematic revetment of the river banks.

With the balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 secured under the act of June 25, 1910, amounting to about $175,000, a part of this work (a and b) under the above recommendation has been completed since the date of your message of February 2, 1912. The levee north of Volcano Lake has been raised about 34 feet, strengthened and riprapped over a distance of about 8 miles, and the levee along the west bank of the Colorado River north of the Abejas River has been repaired and protected against scour as far as may be done without gravel or stone covering by short spurs or tapoons. There remains still to be done the raising of the Volcano Lake levee about 3 feet additional and extending it over 10 miles to a junction with the line heretofore constructed by the California Development Co., and the further strengthening and protection against scour of the levee along the west bank of the Colorado River north of the Abejas, none of which work, however, is at this time considered so urgent as to constitute an emergency.

Since the report of the special advisory board, the necessity for revetting the banks has been emphasized because the Colorado River about mile 7 below the Imperial Canal intake has begun and continued caving its bank until the levee is seriously threatened, and if this caving continues there is danger that the river may make a deep connection with the Imperial Canal and again flow into Salton Sink, with disastrous results to the Imperial Valley. The situation there now is such that the river may possibly in one flood accomplish this result; on the other hand, the caving may cease and the danger be temporarily averted: but there will always be this danger as long as the Colorado River caves its banks in this vicinity, which danger can only be averted by fixing the river in its present channel by a strong revetment as recommended by the special advisory board in its report of June 7, 1911.

To revet the banks on either side of the river for 10 miles of its course. wherever caving is likely to cause damage, and to complete the work on the levees above referred to, there should be a fund at the disposition of the President of at least $1,250,000, $500,000 of which is estimated as necessary for raising, riprapping, and strengthening the levees already constructed and for closing the gap between the Volcano Lake and California Development Co.'s levees, and $750,000 for revetting the banks where necessary to prevent further caving on the United States and Mexican sides. This fund should be now held and applied only so far as may be needed from time to time to meet emergencies, but to be expended in full whenever negotiations now under way with Mexico may be so far perfected as to permit the work indicated herein to be done under proper international supervision, the work being, except part of the bank revetment, in the Republic of Mexico, but for the benefit of lands and property in the United States and to a quite small extent in Mexico.

Very respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER.

[Subinclosure.]

Board of Supervisors, Imperial County, Cal., to the Secretary of the Interior.

DEAR SIR: In your communication of December 22, 1911, addressed to the President, you recommend that "at least $1,000,000 should be appropriated" by Congress "to meet the present emergencies" existing along the lower Colorado River. You are already fully aware of the serious danger confronting the Imperial and Coachella Valleys from this source, while the engineer's reports which accompany your letter disclose the fact that conditions are so serious as to constitute this an emergency.

The conference board incorporated in its report of June 7, 1911 (H. Doc. No. 504, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 161), the recommendation "that further work should be undertaken at once and in the following order: (a) The levees north of Volcano Lake should be raised, strengthened, and extended; (b) the existing levees along the west bank of Colorado River to the Abejas should be repaired and protected."

On page 160, caption 3 (ibid.), they further recommend that in addition steps be taken to "hold the river by adequate bank revetment practically on its present alignment."

Gen. W. L. Marshall, consulting engineer for the Department of the Interior, concurs with these recommendations. On page 185, caption 8 (ibid.), he says:

To revet the banks in the most substantial way yet developed and as applied along our western rivers, as far as a breach directly into the Imperial Canal or Alamo River can take place, then to construct and riprap the levee north of Volcano Lake, is in my mind the best possible solution in so far as affects the interests of the United States.

As is pointed out by Gen. Marshall:

The greatest and most imminent danger to United States lands and property lies in a possible breach in the banks and levee on the west bank of the Colorado River in the first 8 miles below the Mexican-California boundary, thus admitting water directly into the Imperial Canal. (Ibid., p. 185, cap. 11.)

The serious cutting of the western bank at a point known as House 7 suggests the necessity for adopting some method, such as revetment, to stop bank crosion and preserve the alignment of the river at this point. This situation calls for immediate action, while the conference considers the proper raising and strengthening of the Volcano Lake embankment to be "an essential requisite as a protection of Imperial Valley against menace from the south, and should be constructed without delay." (Ibid., p. 160, cap. 4, b.) (Italics ours.)

Connected with the permanent control of the Colorado River are international questions which must be settled by an international board, as is pointed out by the conference. In view of the length of time which will probably elapse before these questions can be determined, it is manifestly inadvisable to defer for consideration, by such possible commission, the work above outlined, which all agree should be done immediately.

When the overflow occurs, as is certain to happen if steps to prevent are not taken—when it does come the Colorado will again send its waters into the Salton Sea. Owing to the great fall which the water will have and the peculiar character of the soil, the checking of the river will prove a most serious undertaking and would be accomplished only by the expenditure of millions, if at all. The floods of 1905–1907 are estimated to have cost between $5,000,000 and $7,000,000 in money expended to control the river and for the damage wrought. When this task was accomplished, in 1907, nine out of ten engineers are reported to have pronounced the undertaking impossible. If not checked, the river will fill the Salton Sink, compelling the abandonment of the Imperial and Coachella Valleys. Within this region there are now 30,000 inhabitants and property valued at $40,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Wherefore, on behalf of the people of Imperial Valley, we, their properly authorized representatives, do most respectfully request that you urge upon Congress the necessity of an appropriation, at the present session, of a sum sufficient to permit the following work being done:

1. The proper repairing and strengthening of the levees along the west bank of the Colorado River as far as the Abejas River.

2. The retention of the river, by adequate bank revetment, on its present alignment, and thus preventing a breach in the banks, admitting water directly into the Imperial Canal.

3. The raising, strengthening, and extension of the levee north of Volcano

Lake and riprapping the same.

We have the honor to be, most respectfully, yours,

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, Imperial County, State of California.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 10, 1912.

Sir: Referring to previous correspondence regarding the matter of appointing a commission to consider the equitable distribution of the waters of the Colorado River, and particularly to the Department's instructions of March 21, 1912, and the Embassy's despatch No. 1379 of April 27, 1912, I enclose herewith a draft of a convention providing for a preliminary commission to study and report upon the bases of distribution of the waters of this river.

It is desired that you at once write a note to the Mexican Foreign Office, submitting the attached draft, and say that this Government would be glad to sign the convention and put it into operation at the earliest possible moment. Should any changes in the draft be proposed, you will submit them to the Department and await its instructions.

[Comment for the information of the Ambassador.]

The Department is most anxious that this matter shall be concluded at the earliest possible moment.

SETTLEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY OF THE TLAHUALILO COM-PANY WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

Note.—The Tlahualilo Company, whose legal title is "Compañía Agrícola, Industrial, Colonizadora, Limitada, del Tlahualilo, Sociedad Anónima," was organized under the laws of Mexico August 25, 1885. In 1896 it mortgaged its properties and franchises for the purpose of securing an issue of £350,000 of bonds. The bond issue was made in London and New York. The properties of the company are situated on and near the river Nazas, Mexico. In April, 1887, the company entered into contract with the Mexican Government, approved by the Mexican Congress in 1888, by which the company was authorized to colonize its lands, to build a canal from the Nazas River and to take water from that river for irrigation purposes. In 1908 the Mexican Government issued regulations for the distribution of the waters of the river Nazas, which greatly reduced the amount of water the company had been receiving. The company protested and, having received no redress, instituted suit in the courts of Mexico against the Government. In the meanwhile the company requested the good offices of the British and American Governments. The American Ambassador at Mexico City was instructed to support the representations of the British Minister at Mexico City in behalf of the company. On August 5, 1910, the American Ambassador reported that on August 4 he accompanied the British Minister to the Foreign Office to present a British memorandum dated August 4, which, after reviewing the entire history of the company, concluded as follows:

In the conclusion thus stated His Majesty's Government desire to say that they have not overlooked the reported plan and policy of the Mexican Government to conserve the waters of the Nazas River, and wish to assure the Mexican Government that they view with entire sympathy all efforts made by that Government to store and preserve for effective use in their arid regions the waters of their various streams and rivers. Moreover, they thoroughly understand and appreciate that in carrying out any extensive plan of conservation there may well be as incident thereto inconvenience and perhaps some loss to individual enterprises and undertakings. But His Majesty's Government cannot admit, and they feel sure that the Mexican Government would not contend, that any plan of conservation should be undertaken and carried out which shall appropriate or wilfully confiscate without full and complete compensation, the lawful and established rights of private individuals; and if in the course of the consummation of any such conservation plan it should become necessary to take the lawful and vested property or interest of any private individual or company, that then and in that event the injured party must receive due, proper, and full compensation for any and all such property which it has been found necessary to appropriate.

His Majesty's Government do not, however, understand that the present difficulties of the Tlahualilo Company arise as the result of any such conservation measures, but that on the contrary as the facts are presented they flow from and are the result of a disposition and purpose on the part of the Mexican Government, for some reason not apparent, to encourage and foster upon the lower Nazas River large agricultural enterprises at the expense of similar enterprises upon the upper river, and specifically and particularly (if the regulations of 1895 and 1909 are to continue in force) to bring about such a result in a way that will be all but wholly at the expense of the Tlahualilo Company. Therefore, His Majesty's Government, without presuming to pass upon the national propriety or impropriety of the action so taken by the Mexican Government, must insist that if the fruition of this policy carries with it the destruction of British interests then and in that event the Mexican Government are under obligation fully and amply to compensate the British interests which are thus sacrificed. His Majesty's Government therefore, desire to say in all friendliness but with all earnestness that if the present plans of the Mexican Government are carried out and such plans result in the loss and destruction predicted by the Tlahualilo Company, His Majesty's Government will, at the proper moment, find it necessary to present to the Mexican Government a claim for damages for the injuries which have been suffered by those British subjects who have so heavily invested in this enterprise.

His Majesty's Government are, however, sincere in their desire that such an eventuality may be avoided and to this end they renew the suggestion which they have already made and now make in connection with the representations made by the Government of the United States that every effort be made to reach with the Tlahualilo Company an amicable adjustment of this difficulty by allowing it to retain and by confirming it in such of its rights as will enable it successfully to carry out its enterprise which, as an individual undertaking, ministers in no small degree to the national prosperity of Mexico; and that pending such adjustment of this difficulty, or at least for one year, the Tlahaulilo Company be permitted to enjoy the abridged rights granted to it under the Regulations of 1895 in order that meanwhile its enterprise may not be completely destroyed.

His Majesty's Government, sincere in their desire that nothing whatever shall happen which may threaten in the slightest degree to disturb the traditional friendly relation of the two Governments and firm in its belief that a proper and equitable adjustment of this controversy is possible if it be approached in an amicable and conciliatory manner by the parties thereto, cannot urge with too much emphasis, in order to avoid expensive litigations and controversies which, if the Company loses, are almost sure to result in diplomatic representations and claims for large amounts in damages, that such adjustment as that recommended above shall be entered into by the Mexican Government and the Company at the earliest possible moment.

His Majesty's Government feel confident that the Mexican Government will give earnest consideration to the suggestions made for an immediate amicable settlement of this controversy, but in case it should unfortunately transpire that such a settlement is for any reason impossible, His Majesty's Government suggests the propriety of immediately submitting the whole matter for determination to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague.

The American Minister on this occasion handed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs the following note:

Mr. Minister: Referring to the memorandum re the Tlahualilo case now under the consideration of the Mexican, British and American Chancelleries, which His Britannic Majesty's Minister in Mexico has handed to your excellency on this date. I have the honor to inform your excellency that I am instructed by my Government to say that it fully endorses, approves and makes its own the contentions and conclusions thereof, and at the same time to express the earnest hope that an early and just solution of this question may be arrived at.

The British memorandum and the American note of August 4 were submitted by the Foreign Office to the Department of Fomento on August 17. On October 10, 1910, the American Ambassador received from the Foreign Office a copy of a note to the latter from the Department of Fomento, which the Ambassador transmitted to the Department of State with his despatch of October 13, 1910. This note reads as follows:

In accordance with the President's express directions I have to inform you that he finds no provision in the laws of the country permitting him to intervene in suits being prosecuted in local courts; and, as I have advised you previously, neither the law nor the dignity of the Government itself, will permit the withdrawal or suspension of the case brought by the Tlahualilo Company against the Government of Mexico; that upon examination of the British memorandum reasonings are discovered which are based either on unproved or distorted facts, and in addition there are omissions concerning the acts and conduct of the Tlahualilo Company relative to its contract with the Mexican Government; that this deficiency in the relation of the facts demands verification of the bases upon which the conclusions presented by the Minister of Great Britain rest and render it indispensable that the suit which has been brought be continued, so as once for all to fix precisely the facts from which the rights of the Mexican Government as well as those of the Tlahualilo Company emanate; that, as I have informed you on a former occasion, there is nothing to do but to await the decision of the courts. If this is adverse to the Government, it will be strictly complied with in favor of the Company; it will then be proper to listen to the Company's propositions for arriving at an arrangement, which, without jeopardizing rights previously acquired, may favorably settle the difficulties in which the Tlahualilo Company finds itself.

Therefore, in accordance with the President's directions, I enclose to you a counter-memorandum in which the Department under your worthy charge will find well-founded reasons for not accepting the conclusions referred to in the communications from the Minister of Great Britain and the Ambassador of the United States of America.

The counter-memorandum above referred to is to the effect that:

The contract under which the Company bought of Don Juan Flores certain lands in the Tlahualilo marsh cannot confer upon the Company the right to take water from the Nazas River notwithstanding that the contract so declares, since Flores had not possessed that right. It was, indeed, for this reason that the Company solicited a concession of such a right from the Federal Government.

The concession was granted, but was expressly made subject to approval by Congress.

This concession provoked serious opposition by riparian owners, and commissions were appointed to measure the river's flow, and reported a flow sufficient to warrant the concessionaires' use of surplus waters.

A solution of the surplus-waters problem—the bifurcation of the Nazas

A solution of the surplus-waters problem—the bifurcation of the Nazas River by a canal and dams—was stipulated by the Government of Coahuila and accepted by the Company and made an integral part of the concession. Congress thereupon approved the concession (June 6, 1888).

In 1891 and again in 1895 certain regulations were made to secure a fair apportionment of the waters of the river, and the Tlahualilo Company received the surplus granted by the concession.

But neither of these regulations entitle the Company to the water because (1) the Company's rights derive from a contract approved by Congress, and only Congress can modify that contract; and (2) the Company has no title of ownership of the waters, nor does it claim to have such a title. insofar as the Company was concerned, the Government was at liberty to modify the regulations of 1891 by those of 1895.

The Company claims that the 1895 regulations deprived it of eight tenths of its allowance. It also states that it was under the regulations of 1891 that it made its large loan of £350,000. But this loan was carried into effect much later than 1895, when the second regulations, now complained of, were promulgated, "so that when English capital was invested in the business of the Tlahualilo Company it was well known that the amounts of water used by said Company on its properties were governed by the Regulations of 1895. The date of the instrument covering the loan is November 14, 1896."

The Mexican Government is not responsible for incautious investments in the Company's bonds regardless of the foregoing facts. And as to the assertion by the Company of a loss of eight-tenths of its water supply as a result of the Regulations of 1895, the loss is in reality only 53%, as shown by the measurements. And even with this loss the Company is still unable to make use of all the waters allotted by the Regulations of 1895, as shown by the measurements of the Nazas Commission.

But there is a point of decisive importance that was omitted from the memorandum presented by the British Minister, namely, that the Company expressly accepted the Regulations of 1895, as shown by documents to which reference is hereby made.

And finally it must be remembered that the Tlahualilo Company is and was from its beginning a Mexican corporation, whose shareholders, as far as the Mexican Government knows, were neither British subjects nor American citizens when the concession was granted nor when the regulations of 1891 and 1895 were issued; and that it was only after these dates that a group of British subjects and American citizens acquired shares in the Company by virtue of the £350,000 loan.

The Department of State on November 14, 1910, replied to the Ambassador's despatch of October 13, and inclosed a proposed draft note to the Mexican Foreign Office in reply to the above-summarized counter-memorandum of the Department of Fomento. The Ambassador was instructed to support any note or memorandum delivered by the British Minister to the Foreign Office which substantially accorded with and did not essentially differ from the proposed draft note, a copy of which he was instructed to leave with the British Minister if desired. The Department's instruction continues:

It will be observed that the proposed draft summarizes the essential equities of the Tlahualilo Company, points out that these have not been denied by the Government of Mexico, accedes to the request of that Government that discussion of the concessionary water rights of the Tlahualilo Company be postponed until the decision of the Mexican courts, and formally requests that inasmuch as the reply of the Mexican Government does not deny the essential contentions of the Government of the United States regarding the San Fernando water rights of the Tlahualilo Company, the Mexican Government shall at once put that Company into the immediate possession of such rights. The note moreover declares that if the Government of Mexico is unwilling to grant this request, then the matter of the San Fernando water rights should be submitted to arbitration before the Permanent Tribunal at The Hague; and in the event the Mexican Government should choose the latter course, there is transmitted for its consideration a draft protocol of submission.

File No. 412.11T54/113. These are the rights embodied in the purchase from Don Juan Flores, before mentioned.

The draft protocol mentioned in the last sentence above submits for arbitration the following seven questions:

1. Was the Tlahualilo Company, on December 17, 1890, as the owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, vested with the right to receive water from the Nazas River; and, if so, what was the nature and extent of the right?

2. If such right existed, what effect if any did the Regulation of June 24, 1891, have upon it?

3. If such right existed, what effect if any did the Regulation of June 15, 1895, have upon it?

Was it just, fair, equitable or lawful for the Executive of Mexico, in 1908 and in 1909, by Executive decree, without prior judicial sanction and without compensation either to the Tlahualilo Company or to its British and American shareholders, to take from said Company, as owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, any portion of the water of the Nazas River which, as such owner, said Company had been receiving under the Regulations of 1891 and of 1895 aforesaid, or under either of them; and, if not, is the Government of Mexico under obligation to reinstate said Company in its water rights as enjoyed under either or both of said Regulations, or as defined by said Regulations or either of them?

5. Was it just, fair, equitable or lawful for the Executive of Mexico, in 1908 and in 1909, by Executive decree, without prior judicial sanction and without compensation to the British and American mortgage creditors of the Tlahualilo Company, to take from said Company, as the owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, any portion of the water of the Nazas River which, as such owner, said Company had been receiving under the Regulations of 1891 and of 1895 aforesaid, or under either of them, thereby lessening and impairing the security of said British and American mortgage creditors; and, if not, is the Government of Mexico under obligation to reinstate said Company in its water rights, or to restore the security of said foreign creditors, as enjoyed by them respectively under either or both of said Regulations or as defined by said Regulations or either of them?

6. If the award under the 4th question above should be against Mexico, what sum, if any, is under all the circumstances equitably and justly due from the Government of Mexico to the Tlahualilo Company or to the British and American shareholders of said Company, for the water of which they have been deprived by the Government of Mexico as a result of the making, issuing and enforcing by that Government of the Executive Orders or Regulations of July 1st and August 13th, 1908, and of August 27, 1909, and for the damages which they have sustained and the expenses which they have incurred as a result of the action of the Government of Mexico in that regard?

7. If the award under the 5th question above should be against Mexico. what sum, if any, is, under all the circumstances, equitably and justly due from the Government of Mexico to the Tlahualilo Company or to the British and American mortgage creditors of said Company for the water or security of which they or any of them have been deprived by the Government of Mexico as a result of the making, issuing and enforcing by that Government of the Executive Orders of Regulations of July 1st and August 13, 1908 and of August 27, 1909, and for the damages which they or any of them have incurred as a result of the action of the Government of Mexico in that regard?

The protocol then provides as follows:

Article 8. If the Tribunal shall find that the Government of Mexico, in 1908 and in 1909, as a matter of fairness, justice, equity and law, should not have taken from the Tlahualilo Company, as owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, through Executive decree, without prior judicial sanction, and without compensation either to the Tlahualilo Company or to its British and American shareholders, any portion of the water of the Nazas River which, as such owner, it had been receiving under the Regulations of 1891 and of 1895 aforesaid or under either of them, then and in that case the Government of Mexico shall, within thirty days after such award shall have been made, reinstate the Tlahualilo Company in its rights as owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, in accordance with the provisions of the Regulations of 1891 and of 1895, or of either of them, as may be decided by the Arbitral Tribunal; and the Government of Mexico shall thereafter continue to respect such rights and to protect said Company and its successors in the full and free enjoyment thereof.

Article 9. If the Tribunal shall find that the Government of Mexico, in 1908 and in 1909, as a matter of fairness, justice, equity and law, should not have diminished or impaired the security of the British and American mortgage creditors of the Tlahualilo Company by depriving said Company, as owner of the Hacienda of San Fernando, through Executive decree, without prior judicial sanction and without compensation either to the Tlahualilo Company or to its British and American mortgage creditors, of any portion of the water of the Nazas River which, as such owner, it had been receiving under the Regulations of 1891 and 1895 aforesaid or under either of them, then and in that case the Government of Mexico shall, within thirty days after such award shall have been given, reinstate the Tlahualilo Company in its rights as owners of the Hacienda of San Fernando in accordance with the provisions of the Regulations of 1891 and 1895, or of either of them, as may be decided by the Arbitral Tribunal; and the Government of Mexico shall thereafter continue to respect such rights and to protect said Company and said mortgage creditors and its and their successors in the full and free enjoyment thereof.

In his despatch No. 272 of November 30, 1910, the Ambassador reported that in compliance with the foregoing instructions a memorandum and protocol in substantial accordance with those forwarded by the Department were presented to Mr. Creel, Minister for Foreign Affairs, on November 29, jointly by the British Minister (Mr. Tower) and himself, the principal part on that occasion being taken by the British Minister, in accordance with the Department's instructions. The last two paragraphs of the memorandum read as follows:

In view of the fact, therefore, that the Mexican Government have not denied and do not deny the existence of the fundamental elements involved in the substantial and large rights and equities of the Tlahualilo Company with reference to its San Fernando water rights (the existence of which rights and equities must, therefore, be regarded as admitted by the Mexican Government), and considering that under the facts and law of this case there be deemed to exist in favour of the Tlahualilo Company an unimpeachable right to the water which it acquired under its San Fernando purchases, as such rights have been determined, defined and confirmed by the Mexican Government, and have been enjoyed by the Company without let or hindrance or question for almost two decades—His Majesty's Government are forced to conclude that the interference with those rights by the Mexican Government cannot be sanctioned either by the law of Mexico or the law of nations, and that therefore the Mexican Government are under the obligation immediately to restore to the Tlahualilo Company its rights under the San Fernando purchase as those rights were determined, defined and confirmed by the Regulation of 1891, and reaffirmed by that of 1895, and also to compensate such Company and its security-holders for the losses which this interference has occasioned. However, should the Mexican Government be unwilling to undertake to carry out the adjustment thus proposed, His Majesty's Government request that the whole matter be immediately referred for adjudication to an international arbitral tribunal to meet at The Hague. At the same time His Majesty's Government cannot but feel that the added expense and delay which this latter course will entail upon the Company and the security-holders are unwarranted and unjustified.

Should, nevertheless, the Mexican Government elect to arbitrate rather than to settle this claim, in accordance with the proposal hereinbefore made, the undersigned, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, has the honour to propose the subjoined protocol of submission, to conclude which he is duly and fully authorized.

The despatch of November 30 continues:

Mr. Creel said that it seemed to his Government rather unusual and at variance with established diplomatic usage for the representatives of foreign Governments to press for a decision in a matter pending before the national tribunals. To this, answer was made that the question of the San Fernando water rights was not considered as submitted for decision to the Mexican courts, but the general proposition he advanced was not discussed.

Another point made by Mr. Creel was that the Tlahualilo Company was a Mexican corporation and that he was doubtful whether the Mexican Government was prepared to recognize the right of foreign governments to intervene in behalf of the stockholders of a registered Mexican corporation.

To this Mr. Tower replied that the announcement of such a doctrine by the Mexican Government would do the greatest possible harm to Mexican credit with British investors and capital and that, speaking as a friend of Mexico, he would greatly deplore the assumption of such a position by the Mexican Government.

In my turn I stated that while I was not prepared to speak positively in regard to the general rule, I felt quite sure that my Government would be averse to refusing its protection to American investors abroad upon the pretext that their rights to protection as American citizens had been waived or forfeited as a result of foreign incorporation or registration.

Mr. Creel said that there must be some limit put to the intervention of foreign governments in such cases and that the Mexican Government was inclined to regard them with apprehension.

I replied that something ought to be granted to the sense of justice and to the dignity and correctness of procedure of the interested Governments, and that it might be confidently relied upon that no self-respecting nation having friendly relations with Mexico would ever intervene in behalf of a cause not considered to be founded in justice or sanctioned by international precedent.

Mr. Creel stated in reply that this point was having more weight with him in making up his decision than anything else and that, knowing the correctness of the attitude of Great Britain and the United States, he was disposed to find a solution of the difficulty in some direct arrangement mutually satisfactory rather than to resort to the expensive and protracted consideration of the case that would be necessitated by its submission to an arbitral tribunal at The Hague.

The Department in replying to the foregoing despatch, and particularly the last paragraph above quoted, instructed the Ambassador on January 5, 1911, as follows:

Observing from your report that the Minister of Foreign Affairs expressed his disposition to find a solution of the controversy otherwise than by arbitration, you will continue to support such representations looking to that end as may be made by your British colleague.

On March 7, 1911, the Department of State telegraphed the Chargé d'Affaires at Mexico City² the text of the following instruction to the American Ambassador to Great Britain,³ sent on the same day:

Informally represent to the Foreign Office the apparent desirability of requesting from Mexico an immediate answer to the British Minister's memorandum of November 29, 1910, and say that this Government will support and adopt the British representations to Mexico if they embody the following essential points:

After referring to the fact that on August 4, 1910, as a result of previous discussion, the Government of the United States joined with that of Great Britain in presenting to the Mexican Government a note setting forth the position of the United States upon the Tlahualilo controversy; that on October 7, 1910, the Mexican Government submitted a memorandum in reply to that note; and that under date of November 29, 1910, the Government of the United States joined in a note answering the contentions put forth in the memorandum of the Mexican Government, which note set forth the final position of this Government in this matter—the note or memorandum should say:

"It will be recalled that in this latter note, after distinguishing between the concessionary rights and the San Fernando rights and after calling attention to the fact that the United States was willing to postpone further discussion of the concessionary rights pending an early final adjudication thereon by the Mexican courts, this Government discussed the San Fernando rights of the Tlahualilo Company and concluded with the following paragraphs: (Insert last two paragraphs of British memorandum of November 29.)1

"Notwithstanding the serious urgency with which the views of the two Governments and the propositions made by them were thus expressed, more than three months have now elapsed without any word having been received from the Government of Mexico as to its determination in the matter. In view of the full consideration which the subject has already received by the Mexican Government, as also of the absolute need of the Company for an early determination of the matter in order to prevent the infliction of still further injury which would go to swell the great damages already suffered by the Company, the Government of the United States finds itself under the necessity of again bringing this matter to the careful attention of the Mexican Government and of again requesting that the matter be given immediate consideration in order that the Mexican Government may at once inform this Government which of the alternative methods proposed it elects to follow in making a settlement of this really serious matter."

The Department, having quoted the above instruction to the Embassy at London, instructed the Chargé d'Affaires to act in accordance therewith, and the British Government instructed its Minister to Mexico to join his American colleague on the lines suggested.²

The British note to Mexico, in conformity with the foregoing, was presented on March 16, 1911, supported by a note by the American Chargé d'Affaires on the 17th.3

In the meantime, on March 9, the American Chargé d'Affaires had informed the Department that the Mexican Supreme Court had on February 15 adjudicated the Tlahualilo case and that he would forward a summary of the decision, as soon as available. This was done shortly thereafter and showed that the Court had rescinded the concession, declaring that the Tlahualilo Company had not nor had at any time possessed any rights thereunder to the waters of the Nazas River.

The findings and decision of the Supreme Court occupy an octavo pamphlet of 193 pages ⁵. The decision (pp. 190–193) is in translation substantially as follows:

First. The Compañía Agrícola Industrial Colonizadora Limatada del Tlahualilo has not justified the action for specific performance and for damages brought by it against the Federal Government on April 27, 1909.

Second. The Federal Government has justified its counterclaim for rescission of the contract of concession granted to said Company on June 2, 1888, and approved by decree of June 6, 1888.

Third. The Federal Government, represented by its Department of Fomento, is consequently absolved of the claim against it presented by said Company which claim comprises the following: (a) Fulfillment of the contract of May 30, 1888, as amended by the law of June 24, 1891. (b) Recognition of the water rights of said Company as set forth in the Regulations of June 24, 1891. (c) Reinstatement in the enjoyment of said rights. (d) Nullification, in regard to said Company, of the Regulations of June 15, 1895, and of the various orders that had for their object the reduction of the water rights confirmed to said Company by the Regulations of 1891. (e) Payment of the sum of $11,348,743.12 damages suffered up to September 1, 1908. (f) Payment of damages arising from curtailment of water supply to this date and those that may arise pending the re-entry of the said Company into possession of its water rights, calculated on the same bases that served in preceding calculations of damages. (g) Payment of the further damages caused by emigration of colonists, loss of labor, cessation of industries and impairment of properties and improvements such as shall be ordered and proved in the course of this action and according to the bases of liquidation to be fixed by the court. (h) Payment of legal interest on the sums owing from the dates from which such obligations begin to run.

Fourth. The contract of June 2, 1888, between the Secretary of Fomento as representative of the Executive of the Union and José de Teresa y Miranda as representative of the Compañía Agrícola Limitada so-called "del Tlahualilo," which was approved by decree on June 6, 1888, is hereby rescinded.

Fifth. The intervention in this action of the Sindicato de Ribereños Inferiores del Río Nazas is pertinent only insofar as it coincides with the negative claim made by the Federal Government and with the counterclaim for rescission. It has no basis for declarations touching the transaction of May 22, 1888, nor any other controversy between the said Syndicate and the said Company whose respective rights are left unaffected.

Sixth. The question of costs is not here adjudicated: Each party will pay its own costs and expenses, and those incurred in common will be shared equally. * *

So ordered, by a unanimous vote of the Tercera Sala of the Supreme Court of the Nation.

The Department of State, in view of this decision, on March 18 instructed the Ambassador at London to say to the British Government:

That this Government, after preliminary examination of decision is convinced of desirability of immediately bringing to the attention of the Mexican Government the fact that the recent decision of the Mexican Supreme Court regarding the rights of the Tlahualilo Company cannot, for the reasons indicated below, be regarded as a satisfactory disposition of the matter, and the American Ambassador at Mexico City will be instructed to support and adopt representations to the Mexican Government upon this case, if representations embody the following essential points:

The Government of the United States finds itself under the necessity of declaring that the decision of the Court rescinding the concession and declaring that the Tlahualilo Company has not and never had any rights thereunder to the waters of the Nazas River cannot be regarded by the Government of the United States as a just, equitable, or satisfactory determination of the questions involved. The Government of the United States, therefore, has the honor to request either that the Government of Mexico, as heretofore requested by this Government, at once undertake to make a mutually satisfactory adjustment with the Tlahualilo Company regarding its water rights under its concessionary grant of 1888; or that, failing such an adjustment, the matter be immediately referred to arbitration. In the latter case and in case the Company's San Fernando water rights be submitted to arbitration as heretofore proposed, the Government of the United States requests that both questions be dealt with at the same time. However, should the Mexican Government elect to restore the Company to the possession of its full San Fernando rights without arbitration, then the Government of the United States requests that the questions involved in the extent of the Company's concessionary rights be at once submitted to arbitration under a separate protocol which will be proposed.

The above instruction was on the same day quoted in a telegram to the Chargé d'Affaires at Mexico City¹ and he was instructed to act in accordance therewith in supporting such representations as might be made by the British Minister.

In response to the above instruction the American Chargé d'Affaires at London telegraphed on March 23 to the Department as follows:

Your March 18 was informally presented in substance on March 22 to the Foreign Office, with mention of its urgency. The judgment of the Mexican Supreme Court is daily expected and an answer will be given me immediately after its receipt.

On March 30 the American Ambassador to Great Britain telegraphed 1 as follows:

Embassy's March 23 and Department's March 18. The decision of the Supreme Court of Mexico received by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who in view thereof concurs in proposal to address to Mexican Government a joint note on lines of your March 18, in which sense British Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico has been instructed.

The Department on March 31 replied:1

Your March 30. Refer to previous instructions and do not overlook that by reason of preponderant British interest the British Government assumes the lead in all Tlahualilo representations, the United States merely supporting and adopting the original representations made by the British Govern-

The Ambassador answered this on April 3 as follows:2

Your March 31. I mentioned to Sir Edward Grey today that we expect his Government to assume the lead. Sir Edward seemed to have no objection to your view.

The Mexican Foreign Office on March 30 had sent a memorandum³ to the British Chargé d'Affaires in response to the British memorandum of November 29, 1910; this Mexican memorandum (prepared on March 4 in the Department of Fomento) goes minutely into the technical details submitted in the British memorandum, and concludes:

For these reasons it is not possible for the Mexican Government to admit any claims on the part of the Tlahualilo Company; for these same reasons the Mexican Government are not of opinion that the question is one for submission to an international court of arbitration.

Against this measure of solution the Mexican Government have in addition other observations to make, to-wit:

(a) The Tlahualilo Company are a Mexican Company constituted in accordance with Mexican laws, in the organization of which neither British nor American citizens appeared. (b) The Tlahualilo Company accepted as a condition of the concession submission to the Mexican courts.

(c) The interests in the Tlahualilo Company held by persons who have solicited the support of the Governments of His British Majesty and of the United States of America are those of the mortgage loan issued on the Tlahualilo Company's properties, as has at various times been proved and as is publicly known.

Consequently the only legitimate interest possessed by the holders of the mortgage bonds is that their loan be well guaranteed, and the only action open to the said bondholders is, not by proceeding against the Mexican Government, but against the Tlahualilo Company.

The Mexican Government therefore believe it to be their duty to decline the two extreme alternatives proposed by the British memorandum of November 29, 1910.

The Tlahualilo Company carried its case to the Mexican Court of Appeals, while the British Government on May 3 reiterated the representations made in the memorandum of November 29, 1910. The Mexican Government in reply 4 on May 3 reiterated its statements in the memorandum of March 4 delivered to the British Legation on March 30; it emphasized the contention that as the Tlahualilo Company was a Mexican corporation diplomatic representations could not be invoked, adding in support of its position many quotations from American and other decisions; and concludes:

In view of the soundness of the reasons above given the Government of Mexico hopes that the Government of His Majesty will not insist on the representations contained in the notes under acknowledgment.

On July 15, 1911, the Department of State instructed the American Ambassador to Great Britain to inform the Foreign Office that the American Ambassador to Mexico "will be instructed to support any informal representation by the British Legation in Mexico embodying the following essential elements":

Owing to a desire of His Majesty's Government to refrain from unnecessarily embarrassing the Government of Mexico during the present transitory disturbed political conditions in Mexico, no formal reply has yet been made to the note of the Mexican Government.

In order that this delay may not be wrongly interpreted, I am directed by my Government informally to advise your excellency that my Government can not accept the contentions of your excellency's note as a satisfactory reply to the representations heretofore made, and particularly that it can not accept the contention that the fact that the Tlahualilo Company is Mexican operates as a bar to representations by His Majesty's Government on behalf of British stock and bond holders of that company, but that on the contrary His Majesty's Government must insist upon its right under the circumstances of this case to intervene for such stock and bond holders, such course being in accord with well-recognized international precedents.

The American Ambassador to Mexico was instructed ² on July 15 to adopt and support informal representations by the British representative embodying the Department's views as above expressed.

The British representative sent his note on August 2, 1911, supported on August 4 by the American Chargé d'Affaires. The British note reads as follows:

Upon receipt of the note from your Department dated May 3d last, on the subject of the Tlahualilo Company controversy, I lost no time in forwarding it to my Government for their consideration.

His Majesty's Government being desirous to cause no additional embarrassment to the Mexican Government during the period of political unrest in the Republic, delayed for a time their reply to the above note, but I am now instructed to inform you that they can not accept the validity of the second contention put forward by the Mexican Government, namely that the Tlahualilo Company being a Mexican Company is not susceptible of intervention in its affairs on the part of a foreign Government. While His Majesty's Government are prepared to await the result of the suit in the Court of Appeal, yet, should the verdict not give the Company that relief to which they are entitled, they will feel obliged to make diplomatic representations on behalf of the British interests which are involved.

The American supporting note says:

I am instructed by my Government to inform the Mexican Government that it fully endorses, approves and subscribes to the note presented to your excellency's office by the Chargé d'Affaires of Great Britain at this capital, under date of the 2nd instant, this note being a rejoinder to one of the contentions of your excellency's Government relative to the Tlahualilo controversy, as set forth in your excellency's note of the 3d of May last to the British Legation, a copy of which your excellency's office was good enough to transmit to this Embassy in note No. 34918 of the same date.

In this connection I have the honor to say that the Government of the United States cannot accept any more than that of Great Britain the contention that the fact that the Tlahualilo Company is a Mexican corporation operates as a bar to diplomatic representations by the Governments concerned, on behalf of their respective nationals who are stock and bond holders in the company, such protective intervention being in accord with well-recognized international precedents.

Further and more formal reply to the note of your excellency's Government of May 3d last will, without doubt, be made by His Britannic Majesty's Government in due time, and will in all probability, after having been considered by my Government, be fully subscribed to by it.

Copies of the foregoing notes were forwarded to the Department of State on August 4.1

Interviews with the President of Mexico had meantime been had by the American and British representatives looking to a suspension of legal proceedings and a settlement out of court, but came to no conclusion, and on August 29, 1911, the British Chargé d'Affaires requested the Mexican Government "that the legal proceedings may be continued and carried to their conclusion with all possible celerity." To which the Mexican Government acceded.

The time prescribed by law for rendering the decision expired December 16, 1911, but the Court of Appeal had not yet decided the case on that date. On December 21 the British, and on the 22d the American representative, called the Foreign Office's attention to this delay.3

Matters so stood until July 24, 1912, when the Court of Appeal rendered its decision, the first paragraph of which is as follows:

First. The decision of first instance, dated February 15, 1911, rendered by the Third Chamber of the Supreme Court, in the civil suit brought by the Compañía Agrícola, Industrial, Colonizadora Limitada del Tlahualilo, S. A., against the Mexican Government, concerning the observance of the contract of May 30, 1888, and the payment of damages is hereby confirmed in every respect.

The remaining portion is merely a repetition of the orders of the lower court. This decision, however, was not unanimous, as one of the three judges in a dissenting opinion favored the essential contentions of the plaintiff company. The decision was forwarded 4 on July 24 to the Department, and on August 12, 1912, the American Ambassador was instructed 5 that:

For reasons already brought to the attention of the Mexican Government (see British memorandum presented August 4, 1910, and approved by this Government; British memorandum of November 29, 1910, also approved by this Government) as well as for other considerations not now necessary to mention, the Department cannot accept the decision of the Supreme Court of Mexico in the Tlahualilo case as a satisfactory disposition of the questions involved in the controversy between the Tlahualilo Company and the Mexican Government.

Moreover the Department is convinced that the only proper and satisfactory method of adjusting this dispute is by arbitration, which, to be of most service to the Company and to the Government of Mexico, should be immediate.

The Government of the United States cannot admit the validity of the contention of the Government of Mexico that the fact that the Tlahualilo Company—the party immediately involved in the controversy—is Mexican, operates as a bar to representations by this Government for and in behalf of the American stock and bond holders possessing the real beneficial interest in the enterprise, but on the contrary this Government must insist upon its right under the circumstances of this case to intervene for such stock and bond holders, such course being in accord with well-recognized international precedents (British note of August 2, 1911, approved by this Government.)

The attitude of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain upon the question of representation in such cases was made clearly apparent in the measures mutually taken by them in the now famous Delagoa Bay Case, a case practically on all fours with the present, the principle of which has been repeatedly affirmed.

You will approve and support for and in behalf of the American interests in this claim any note or memorandum delivered by the British Minister at Mexico City to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico embodying essentially the above position and looking to the early making of an agreement for the submission of the Tlahualilo case to arbitration including in such arbitration both the San Fernando and Concessionary water rights.

The substance of this telegram was transmitted 2 on August 15, 1912, to the American Embassy at London. The British Government approved the position taken and Sir Edward Grey inquired through the Ambassador³ on September 7 whether or not the American Government would be willing to take the initiative in the demand for arbitration, basing its demand on the Treaty for the Arbitration of Pecuniary Claims, of January 30, 1902, extended by a convention signed at Rio de Janeiro August 13, 1906, and ratified by the United States and Mexico. If so, instructions would be sent to the British Minister at Mexico City to expedite such action as the British and American Governments may consider desirable.

In conclusion Sir Edward said that the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs had recently stated that he would be willing to discuss the case with Mr. James Brown Potter, President of the Mexican Cotton Estates of Tlahualilo, Limited, with a view to settlement, and that the British Government had no wish to object thereto but could not postpone arbitration negotiations, which should continue simultaneously.

On September 13, 1912, the Department of State, referring to the foregoing and previous correspondence, sent to London 6 a draft preamble for a protocol of arbitration, to replace that of November 14, 1910, the remainder of the protocol to stand as in that of November 14. The Ambassador was instructed that the Department felt that the two Governments should not acquiesce in a perfunctory objection by Mexico to the language of the draft but should insist on its form as presented unless Mexico adduced some well-founded objection. As to the initiative being taken by the United States the fact that the Tlahualilo holding company was a British corporation and the majority of its stock and bond holders British, it would materially weaken the representations for this Government to take the initiative. But the United States would invoke the Pecuniary Claims Convention, if Mexico showed a real unwillingness to arbitrate, in its notes supporting any British representations that might copy of the draft protocol was sent to the Foreign Office.3

The Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs had meantime left for Washington to discuss in person all the affairs pending between his Government and the United States, including the Tlahualilo case, and the arbitration matter was held in abeyance. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, after an interview with the President, said to-day to Mr. Schuyler that he would soon send me a note refusing arbitration, not only because arbitration is impracticable on the basis of the protocol, but because the Government and the Company were expecting to arrange an amicable settlement, the terms of which will be submitted to the Department which, he said, had agreed to be judge of its justice.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 21, 1913.

Sir: Referring to that part of your telegram of January 30 which relates to the Tlahualilo case, the Department notes with some surprise the position of the Minister for Foreign Affairs as recorded therein.

In stating that he would address to the Embassy a note in which his Government would express its willingness to abandon arbitration as a means of settlement for the difficulties between the Tlahualilo Co. and the Mexican Government without, at the same time, indicating that that note would contain, as an alternative for arbitration, proposals for the settlement of these difficulties by direct agreement between the Mexican Government and the Tlahualilo Co., Mr. Lascurain did not act as the Department understood that he would on the occasion of the conversation between Mr. Lascurain and Secretary Knox on January 3, a memorandum of which was transmitted to vou with the Department's No. 1166 of January 9, 1913.4

You will secure an early interview with Mr. de la Barra and say to him that it is the Department's understanding, as he will observe by reference to the memorandum of Mr. Lascurain's conversation with the Secretary of State, that he would, in the same note in which he would express the willingness of his Government to abandon arbitration as a means of settlement of the Tlahualilo controversy, also propose that the differences between the Mexican Government and the company be settled by some sort of direct agreement; and at the same time would submit definite proposals which should serve as a basis for such agreement in settlement.

In speaking to Mr. de la Barra the Department hopes that you will not lose the opportunity of saying to him that Mr. Lascurain's remarks to the effect that the company's contentions are not well founded can not be accepted by the Department without some expression of demurral, since it is understood that the dissenting opinion of the Supreme Court of Mexico at the time of the decision to which the company now objects upheld the company's contentions in almost every particular.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Mexico, March 18, 1913—2 p. m.

118. The exact text of a note just received from the Foreign Office follows:

Relative to the questions pending between our Governments, I have the honor to assure your excellency of the friendly attitude of Mexico in its desire to settle them satisfactorily.

The Government of Mexico not only wishes to show that it is moved by the highest sentiments of justice and that it desires to create closer relations with the United States, but to demonstrate by actual deeds that, the national crisis having passed, it wishes to initiate a reorganization of the country by satisfying all claims founded on law and equity.

[References to the Chamizal and Colorado River cases.]

The case of the Tlahualilo Company was definitely decided by the Supreme Court of the Republic but the Government of Mexico desires to demonstrate its good intentions towards enterprises which add to the welfare and material progress of the country, and in view of this it will do everything possible in order that the Tlahualilo Company may obtain advantageous arrangements with another or other concerns of those that use the waters of the Nazas River and insure a quantity of water which will satisfy the necessities of its agricultural pursuits. The Secretary of Fomento has made a special study of this case and in accord with my Department will use his good offices towards securing the above arrangements.

I believe that the above will convince your excellency that the President of the Republic has given preferred attention to the matters in question and that when they are definitely decided he will do everything necessary to have them closed as soon as possible and in accordance with the general principles of law and the highest equity.

The matters of Chamizal, Tlahualilo, Colorado River, and the Alamo, Douglas and El Paso claims, may be considered as settled in a satisfactory way, as our contentions are acceptable in principle.

My Dear Mr. Wilson: Enclosed I have the honor to transmit to your excellency a copy of the contract between Sr. Alberto Robles Gil, Secretary of Fomento, Colonization and Industry, as the representative of the Executive, and Mr. James Brown Potter, representative of the Compañía Agrícola, Industrial, Colonizadora, Limitada del Tlahualilo, S. A.

The said contract will show your excellency the friendy disposition which the Executive has to favor the company referred to in so far as is possible.

I am [etc.]

F. L. DE LA BARRA.

[Subinclosure-Translation.]

Contract settling the controversy between the Mexican Government and the Tlahualilo Company.

Contract entered into on the one hand by C. Alberto Robles Gil, Secretary of Fomento, Colonization and Industry, in representation of the Executive of the Mexican Republic, and on the other hand by Mr. James Brown Potter, in representation of the Compañía Agrícola. Industrial, Colonizadora, Limitada del Tlahualilo, S. A. (hereinafter denominated the Company) and the said Mr. James Brown Potter and Mr. Severo Mallet-Prevost, in representation of the Trustees for the holders of the mortgage bonds issued by the said Tlahualilo Company (hereinafter denominated the Bondholders).

With the object of promoting the cultivation of the lands at present belonging to the Company and which, although open to cultivation, lack the water necessary for their irrigation, and at the same time with the object of putting an end to the differences which have up to this date existed between the said Company and the Federal Government, both parties have come to an agreement, which the Bondholders accept, in accordance with the following clauses:

1. The Federal Government ratifies and confirms in favor of the Company, the water rights belonging to the Hacienda de San Fernando, in the manner and in the terms in which the same are expressed in the Regulations of August 30th, 1909 and in accordance with the interpretation which has been given in actual practice to the said Regulation by the Comisión Inspectora del Nazas during the past two years; and the said Government obligates itself to neither alter nor diminish, without the previous consent of the Company, the water to which this clause refers.

2. The Federal Government obligates itself to grant to the Company, within six months from the date of this contract, in perpetuity, a dotation of water which, taking as a basis the Regulation of August 30th, 1909, shall be represented by the following volumes in "tandas," during the agricultural periods or "ciclos" established by the said Regulation, namely:

First period: 5,335,688 cub. meters.

Second period: 4,198,758. Third period: 5,128,632.

The company shall receive this water preferentially to the other riparian property owners located below the San Fernando Dam, or, in other words, immediately subsequent to taking the water corresponding to the Santa Margarita, San Fernando and San Antonio Canals in accordance with the said Regulation of August 30th, 1909.

To this end, the Government shall acquire such property or properties in the Nazas region as may be necessary in order that the above water may be obtained without altering the present Regulation.

3. The Federal Government ratifies and confirms in favor of the Company, in perpetuity, the water rights which articles fifth, sixth and seventh of the Regulation of August 30th, 1909, assign to the said Company.

4. In case it shall not be able to utilize the Canal intakes and works appurtenant thereto, which the Government shall acquire in accordance with clause 2 hereof, the Company may construct above the Santa Rosa Dam or above the San Fernando Dam, a special canal intake with a dimension of four meters and fifty centimeters in the clear, corresponding to a normal flow of 11.547 cubic meters, as well as the necessary canal and other works appurtenant thereto, in order that it may convey the waters referred to in the said clause 2, to the Tlahualilo Hacienda lands. The sill of such canal intake shall be at an altitude of 1136 meters 12 centimeters if it be constructed above the Santa Rosa Dam, and of 1137 meters 66 centimeters if it be constructed above the San Fernando Dam.

The Government obligates itself to give to the Company all the aid necessary for the acquisition of the requisite land on which such works shall be located, and in the event that the Government shall acquire any property containing works which may be utilized for the purpose mentioned, the Government will cede them to the Company in so far as the Company may need them, and the Government shall also give to the Company, where a canal is concerned, such portions of land as may be convenient, together with a protective zone and right of way of up to 50 meters on either side of such canal in all its length, to the Tlahualilo Hacienda.

5. The Company shall have the right to take its waters indiscriminately through all or any of the Tlahualilo, San Fernando or San Antonio Canals, or through the canal mentioned in article 4, as it may see fit, and may utilize such waters on any lands belonging to it, at present owned by it or in future acquired.

6. In order that it may enjoy its maximum allotment of water, the Company may take through the San Antonio Canal, over and above the maximum volume alloted to this canal, the maximum volume of six cubic meters per second assigned by the Regulation of August 30th, 1909, to the Santa Margarita

Canal; and to this end, the Company may construct the necessary hydraulic works. Upon doing this, the Company shall abandon its Santa Margarita Canal, but it shall nevertheless preserve its right to take the water corresponding to this canal, either at the Santa Margarita or at the San Fernando Dam.

The Company may also construct such hydraulic works as may be necessary in the San Fernando Canal, in order that the latter shall be able to take the maximum supply of 7.34 cubic meters per second assigned to it by the Regulation of August 30th, 1909.

7. In consideration of the confirmations and concessions granted to it in the foregoing clauses, the Company shall desist from the "Amparo" proceedings which it has instituted against the Department of Fomento, and shall desist from all actions, rights and claims which it may have alleged or which it may claim to have against the Federal Government, in its capacity as owners of the Haciendas of San Fernando and Tlahualilo, whether in regard to the use or enjoyment of water or in regard to damages, or in any other respect, on account of the decisions taken up to this date by the Federal Government regarding the distribution of the waters of the Nazas River. In consequence, the Company also renounces the claims presented against the Government of Mexico before the Governments of the United States and Great Britain.

8. The Government will try, although without any commitment on its part, to have the taxes at present paid by the Company reduced by the Government of the State of Durango, to the end that the same may be proportionate to those paid by other similar enterprises of that region located within the State of

9. The fifteen thousand pesos in bonds of the Public Debt which, according te the provisions of article 14 of the April 14th, 1887 contract between the Government and the Company, the latter deposited in the Banco Nacional de Mexico, shall be returned to the Company together with their unpaid coupons, and the Government will issue the necessary orders to this effect.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE MOROCCAN GOVERNMENT FOR THE SAFETY OF FOREIGNERS TRAVELING OR SOJOURNING IN THE EMPIRE.

File No. 881.111

The American Chargé d'Affaires to the Secretary of State.

No. 363.]

American Legation, Tangier, February 18, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that on December 21st, 1912, the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps put into circulation a letter addressed to him by Sid Mohamed Ben Mohamed El Guebbass, the Sultan's Minister for Foreign Affairs at Tangier, drawing the attention of the representatives of the Powers to the insecurity existing in various parts of the Shereefian Empire, and requesting the members of the Diplomatic Corps to warn their respective nationals who may be traveling or sojourning in the said regions of the dangers to which they are consequently exposed. Sid Guebbass expresses the hope that this regrettable state of affairs will shortly be brought to an end and states that the Diplomatic Corps shall be duly notified of any modification in the long list of districts now alleged to be unsafe for European travel or residence.

In his annotation upon the Dean's circular, the British Chargé d'Affaires recalls the fact that as similar communications in the past were addressed to the Diplomatic Corps by the Sultan's Foreign Minister at Tangier, he suggests that it would be advantageous if the Dean would submit to his colleagues the Décanat dossier on this subject in order that they might acquaint themselves with the attitude of the representatives of the Powers on former occasions concerning this question.

In compliance with the British Chargé d'Affaires' suggestion, the Dean in a second tournée circulated the documents from the archives of the Décanat relating to the question under consideration and in view of the possible importance of the subject the following historical outline of the former correspondence is now laid before the Department.

On the 5th of July, 1895, the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps circulated a copy of the minutes of a meeting of the Diplomatic Corps called to discuss a circular from Sid Mohamed Torres—the Sultan's Foreign Minister at that time—prohibiting the circulation of foreigners in the interior of the Empire and stating that the Maghzen¹ declined all responsibility for the security of foreigners ignoring this prohibition and requesting the representatives of the Powers accordingly to restrain their respective nationals from undertaking journeys into the interior. Annexed to the Décanat circular were drafts of a reply to the Maghzen from Mr. White, the British Chargé d'Affaires, and also from the Minister of Spain.

The British Chargé d'Affaires stated that he had submitted Sid Torres' letter to the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, and that he was instructed to reply that his Government could not countenance any measures involving a general prohibition to foreigners to circulate in the interior of the Empire. This was contrary to treaties which explicitly stipulated that British subjects should enjoy the right to travel and trade throughout the country in all security. The failure of the Maghzen to repress disorder and brigandage could in no way absolve the Moorish authorities from their responsibility in respect to public security and the protection of the lives and property of foreign subjects. The British Government considered that it was reasonable to request that British subjects should be warned of the danger that they would be exposed to by entering the District of Rahamna-at that time in open revolt against the Maghzen-but that even in this rebellious territory, in the event of misfortune befalling a British subject, the Maghzen would still be bound to do justice to the victims of any molestation. The British Government further reserved to itself the right to decide, in each case, as to the responsibility of the Maghzen, for whatever might befall a British subject traveling in Morocco. As to the requirements that foreign travelers in the interior should be accompanied by a soldier of the Maghzen, British subjects had always been instructed to comply with this regulation, but that the Maghzen's attention must be drawn to the fact that the charges for this military escort were often exorbitant.

The terms of this draft reply from the British Chargé d'Affaires were approved by the other members of the Diplomatic Corps with the exception of his attitude regarding the requirement of military escort. Upon this point the majority favored the point of view advanced by the Minister of Spain, which was to the effect that the Government of Spain reserved to itself the right to judge under what circumstances Spanish travelers in Morocco should be accompanied by a Maghzen soldier, but that in normal times, it could not admit that the Maghzen should not be responsible for the security of persons traveling without such escort. In other respects the Spanish Minister's reply was identical with that of the British Chargé d'Affaires.

In a third circular from the Dean, on the 14th of July, 1895, a draft reply from the French Minister was submitted to the Diplomatic Corps, which stated that the French Government could not adhere to the measures initially proposed by the Sultan's Foreign Minister. These measures resolved themselves into an absolute prohibition to foreigners to travel in Morocco. They were detrimental to commercial interests and contrary to treaties which stipulated that French subjects should without molestation travel and trade by land and sea in complete security throughout the Empire. The Maghzen could not disown its responsibility to safeguard the lives and property of foreign travelers, nor shirk its duty to maintain the security of the roads of the country.

The French Government appreciated the reasons advanced for the necessity of military escort, and accordingly instructed its consular authorities to recommend such escort to French nationals but providing that travelers incurred no expenses thereby.

On the 2nd of October, 1903, the Dean circulated another letter from the Sultan's Foreign Minister drawing the attention of the Diplomatic Corps to the insecurity of the territory surrounding the town of Rabat and stating that the Governor of that part declined all responsibility for the safety of foreign subjects venturing away from the town. The Moorish Minister for Foreign Affairs therefore requested the ministers to issue instructions to their consuls and subjects prohibiting their excursions to the country surrounding Rabat.

The draft of the Dean's reply was unanimously adopted by the Diplomatic Corps. It was to the effect that while the representatives of the Powers took into consideration the unsettled state of the country, these conditions could not remove the responsibilities of the authorities nor relieve them of their duty to provide for the security of the country, but that on the contrary under these conditions their responsibility was actually accentuated. The Sultan's Foreign Minister was therefore requested to instruct the Governor of Rabat that he should take proper measures to restore order and security. The consuls would no doubt act with prudence and would properly counsel their respective nationals but that the responsibility of the Moorish officials could in no way be diminished by a state of affairs which demanded the full exercise of their authority.

Again in November of the same year, the Sultan's Foreign Minister requested the members of the Diplomatic Corps to notify their respective subjects of a Shereefian order that no Europeans, either employes of the Maghzen or others, should undertake a journey to Fez or to Marrakesh without securing special permission, and adding that the Moorish Government declined responsibility in respect to Europeans who should travel unprovided with special authorization.

In his reply, which was unanimously approved by the Diplomatic Corps, the Dean stated that his colleagues requested him to say that while they regretted that circumstances demanded the restriction of free circulation in the Empire, they hoped that these measures were entirely temporary and at the same time they could not discharge the Maghzen from its responsibility for the security of the lives and property of their nationals traveling in Morocco.

From the above it will be conspicuously noted that in every instance in which the insecurity of the country was signalised by the Moorish Government the Powers invariably laid special stress upon the fact of the responsibility of the Maghzen and made it quite unmistakable that no circumstances would warrant any diminution of its liability regarding the safety of foreign subjects.

In accordance with this consistent attitude, the British Chargé d'Affaires, in the second tournée of Dean's circular referred to in my opening paragraph, the object of the present despatch, stated in his annotation that he was willing to issue instructions to British consular authorities that they should warn their subjects not to venture into the regions where the Maghzen had no authority, but he was of opinion that Sid Guebbass should be reminded that the treaties granted to foreigners the right to travel everywhere in Morocco and that the responsibility for the security of their lives and property devolved upon the Maghzen.

I put myself in harmony with the annotation of the British Chargé d'Affaires as several of my colleagues have done.

A rather interesting detail lies in the fact that the Moorish Minister's letter at present in circulation contains no explicit reference to the Maghzen's desire to repudiate its responsibilities, though no doubt this is the inference to be drawn from the mere fact that the dangerous regions have been specifically indicated as well as from the request that the representatives of the Powers should notify their subjects of the dangers attending them in these districts.

This attitude on the part of the Maghzen seems to receive subtle support from the French Chargé d'Affaires who states in his annotation on the Dean's circular that he agrees with Mr. White, but that it should be understood that the Maghzen, as in the past, remains free to indicate the regions where it will not answer for security.

Inasmuch as this question is still under discussion I respectfully solicit instructions from the Department as to what attitude I shall assume in the matter.

Sir: In further reference to my No. 363 of February 18, 1913, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the amended draft of the letter which the Chevalier de Rappard, Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, proposes to address to Sid Mohamed Ben Mohamed El Guebbass, the Sultan's Minister for Foreign Affairs at Tangier, in answer to his communication upon the subject of the insecurity for foreigners traveling in certain regions of the Shereefian Empire.

All my colleagues have expressed their approval of the draft herewith submitted, with the exception of the Chargé d'Affaires of Belgium, who stated that he was referring the matter to his Government for instructions, my own annotation being of a similar nature.

The Department will observe that in the reply proposed by the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps to the Sultan's Foreign Minister, a clause has been introduced reserving the right for the Diplomatic Corps to determine, in each particular instance, the extent to which the responsibility of the Maghzen is involved, and I respectfully request that the Department inform me whether it deems this clause a sufficient guaranty to prevent the Maghzen from escaping its responsibility in respect to the protection of the lives and property of foreign subjects traveling or sojourning in any part of the Shereefian Empire.

In view of the urgency attached to the matter by the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, I would respectfully request that the Department communicate its reply by cable.

I have [etc.] MAXWELL BLAKE.

After usual compliments:

The Diplomatic Body has been informed with great interest of the contents of your letter of the 10th Moharrem 1331 (December 20, 1912) in which your excellency requested us to warn our subjects that certain parts of the Shereefian territory, specified in the above-mentioned letter, are disturbed.

Although the treaties grant to foreigners the right to travel everywhere in Morocco and although the Diplomatic Body reserves to itself the right to consider, in each particular case, up to what point the responsibility of the Maghzen should be deemed to be exonerated, it recognises the difficulties which the Shereefian Government may experience in answering for the security of foreigners who should venture into certain districts.

Appreciating the anxiety shown by the Maghzen to watch over the security of foreigners in certain regions named, the representatives of the Powers have drawn the attention of their nationals to the parts of the Empire which they will do better to avoid for the moment.

Referring to the passage of the letter of your excellency in which it is declared that the list drawn up by the Maghzen may be modified in proportion to the progress of pacification, the Diplomatic Corps observes that this list is conceived in very vague terms and draws the attention of your excellency to the advantage there would be to define, if it were possible, in a more precise manner the regions where the insecurity is real, notably as far as concerns the communications between the large towns.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Tangier, June 30, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that according to its cabled instructions dated March 26, 1913, after personally assuring myself that the same would be acceptable to the majority of my colleagues, I officially communicated to the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps the modification suggested therein by the Department to the text of the letter which it was proposed to address to the Sultan's representative at Tangier, Sid Mohamed Ben Mohamed El Guebbass, in answer to his letter concerning the insecurity of foreigners traveling in certain parts of Morocco. The draft of this proposed reply was transmitted to the Department in my No. 370 of March 4, 1913.

The modification proposed by the Department was adopted by the representatives of the following Powers: Holland, Belgium, Italy, Great Britain, Portugal and Germany; and the amended passage in the second paragraph of the letter now reads:-

* * * the Diplomatic Body reserves to its respective Governments, etc. instead of:—

* * * the Diplomatic Body reserves to itself, etc.

The letter thus amended was transmitted to the Sultan's representative here by the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps under date of April 30th last.

In view of the ambiguous nature of the annotation of the Representatives of France and Spain, the Powers principally interested, on the question of the amendment, their observations on the Décanat circular submitting my proposed modification being limited to a simple "Vu" (Seen), the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps invited the various Legations to send their respective interpreters to collaborate in the translation into Arabic of the amended answer to the Sultan's representative; and the compliance on the part of the French and Spanish Legations with this request together with the fact of the actual collaboration of their interpreters cannot but be construed as an acceptance on their part of the terms of the reply as it was amended in accordance with the proposal of the Department.

In view of the possible importance of this question, I have deemed it advisable to place these facts before the Department in order that they may become a matter of record.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that on the 28th ultimo the Palace of Peace at The Hague was dedicated. His Excellency Jhr. A. P. C. van Karnebeek, President of the Carnegie Foundation, in an appropriate address tendered the palace to the Administrative Council of the Court of Arbitration, which was formally accepted for the Nations in an address by His Excellency Jhr. R. de Marees van Swinderen, Minister for Foreign Affairs, ex officio President of the Administrative Council.

The ceremony, which was of a formal, dignified, impressive character, was attended by the Queen, the Queen Mother, the Prince of the Netherlands, with their full suites, the Diplomatic Corps, Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie, the Carnegie Foundation Committee, about 40 members of the Court of Arbitration, the Secretary General of the Court of Arbitration with all the other functionaries, the Cabinet Ministers, members of the States General and other high dignitaries, all with their ladies. In all there were about 400 persons assembled in the large hall of the Palace of Peace, when the Chairman of the Carnegie Foundation, at 3.30 p. m., delivered his address, setting forth the history of the peace movement and the constitution of the Carnegie Foundation for the purpose of erecting the Palace of Peace at The Hague.

These official proceedings lasted fully an hour, after which the Queen, escorted by Messrs. van Karnebeek and van Swinderen, and followed by the entire audience, made a general inspection of the building and the beautifully laid out gardens surrounding the palace.

Both on his approach and his return to the Legation, where he was a guest during his entire stay in The Hague, Mr. Carnegie was the recipient of a great popular demonstration.

MISUSE OF THE AMERICAN FLAG, FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES.

File No. 811.015256.

The American Consul at Amsterdam to the Secretary of State.

AMERICAN CONSULATE,

No. 103.] Amsterdam, July 10, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report that the American flag is constantly to be seen floating above the entrance of a so-called "American bar" on the Rokin and of a so-called "American lunch room" on the Kalverstraat, two of the most important thoroughfares in Amsterdam. Neither place is distinctively American, nor unlike other places of the same kind in Amsterdam which do not have the word "American" on their signs. The "American bar" admits upon inquiry that none of its proprietors or attendants are Americans, but the "American lunch room" evades answering a similar inquiry. The latter has a menu in English, but also in Dutch, French and German. Evidently the Stars and Stripes are displayed at these two places for the purpose of alluring Americans, of whom some 50,000 visit Amsterdam yearly and whose custom is particularly desired by traders of all kinds.

I respectfully submit this matter to the Department of State, for instructions, being unaware of any law or treaty through which this misuse of the American flag can be stopped. However, on page 135, Volume II, of Moore's International Law Digest, a case is cited which seems pertinent, wherein the United States Minister to Brazil, in 1864, after laying the matter before the Brazilian Government and receiving its sanction and approval, issued a circular to the United States consuls in that country prohibiting the flying of the United States flag without his permission, unless by persons in an official capacity. This action, the Digest adds, was approved by the Department of State.

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract.]

I have been as careful of peace abroad as I have been of internal tranquility and have maintained the best of relations with our sister republics of Central America and with all the nations of the world.

The negotiations with the United States are still pending relative to the convention which conceded to it under conditions very advantageous for Nicaragua an option to construct a canal through our territory by making use of the facilities offered by our great lakes and the river San Juan del Norte. I deem it unnecessary to present to you its preeminent importance which is already realised by all parties peacefully inclined and whose beneficial consequences we perhaps can as yet but little appreciate. So deep rooted is our conviction in this respect that—unheeding unfounded alarms that this treaty has excited among certain foreign governments, who have given grounds not only for mere suspicion but have shown their hostile intentions—we have hastened our diplomatic negotiations in favor of the convention, which means inalterable peace among us, a prosperous and civilising development, the guaranty of our sovereign rights, loyally promised by a strong friendly nation.

Another of the most cruel obstacles found in the path taken in search of the good of the country, has been the precarious economic situation. At times when the Government has wished to begin its progressive advances it has met with the insuperable barrier of dire need and general poverty. To remedy this is decided to send the Minister of Finance, Don Pedro Rafael Cuadra, to the United States as financial agent, in order to endeavor to procure funds sufficient to pay the public debt. This has been a chief purpose of the administration, in which it has presevered with earnestness, because we understand that with this payment the prosperity of the business of Nicaraguans would be reestablished after the failure brought on by the State; and immediately deriving from this prosperity is the general prosperity and happiness of the country, which is the most beneficent assurance of peace.

Although I cannot yet announce a complete success in these labors of the Government, some good has been attained through the loan contract for one million of dollars celebrated with the bankers Brown Brothers and Co., and J. & W. Seligman & Co. The money acquired has been applied to completing the monetary conversion, to increasing the capital of the National Bank, to the payment of deferred salaries, and a sum of one hundred thousand dollars to the payment of the judgments of the Mixed Commission not exceeding one hundred dollars. The latter, although it establishes a sort of exception or privilege, has been done in protection of the poor and laboring classes of the country who are the most needy.

Even though this small loan has produced some relief to the economic situation, and has redeemed our internal revenues, we do not think that the mission of our financial agent is as yet concluded. He continues to remain there to negotiate another larger loan which will place us in a position to pay our floating debt. To this end we requested authority of the National Assembly, during its recent extraordinary sessions, for the emission of bonds to liquidate this debt, either all or the part which may remain unpaid after paying the other part in cash.

The chief points in the success of these negotiations consist in the bank contract and the increase of the monetary conversion fund, by virtue of which an institution is strengthened which is necessary to the commerce of the country and assures definitively the prestige of the new money of Nicaragua.

By these same contracts, with the previous authority of the honorable Assembly, the sale was made for one million dollars of 51% of the shares of the Compañía Ferrocarril del Pacífico, the Government keeping in its possession the remaining 49%; and the same company was given a concession for the construction of a railway within five years from San Juan del Sur on the Pacific to San Jorge, a port on the Great Lake. The economic interest of the bankers, tied up in this enterprise, will redound to our advantage by virtue of the improvements in the railway; and as far as the railway from San Juan del Sur to San Jorge is concerned it is most opportune, because in addition to being the beginning of rapid communication with the southern Department which it will most directly benefit, it will be the natural terminus of the mixed interoceanic route in connection with the projected railway to the Atlantic.

PROPOSED INTEROCEANIC CANAL TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND NICARAGUA, AND PROTESTS OF SALVADOR AND COSTA RICA IN RELATION THERETO.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE. On December 15, 1912, the American Minister notified the Department (File No. 817.812/5) that the Government of Nicaragua desired to negotiate a treaty with the United States giving to the latter a thirty-year option to acquire a strip of land for canal purposes under conditions similar in form to those of Panama, the consideration being: (1) payment by the United States of three million dollars gold at the time of the exchange of ratifications, and an additional sum to be agreed upon, together with an annual rent charge, at the time of the exercise of the option; (2) grant to the United States pending the negotiations of a discretionary right to let a subsidiary privilege of putting the existing water-way into navigable condition for light-draught vessels; and (3) grant to the United States of a naval station in the Gulf of Fonseca and one on Corn Island, if these should be desired. The advantages to Nicaragua besides the cash payment were the guaranty of the peace and independence of the Republic, the development of its great resources through capital attracted by the definite settlement of the question, the prospect of eventual construction of the canal, and elimination of a constant European incentive to revolution. The advantages to the United States were the preparation for further growth of its coastwise commerce, elimination of foreign political influence, the service of a caveat against any more canal concessions or territorial privileges such as had been attempted with European and Asiatic powers, an additional important defense of the Panama Canal, and an effective means for guaranteeing the Washington conventions.

This proposal resulted in the signing of a treaty between the United States and Nicaragua, February 8, 1913, which was submitted to the Senate on February 24, 1913. It is this treaty to which reference is made in the following communications.

File No. 817.812/22.

The Minister of Costa Rica to the Secretary of State.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF COSTA RICA, Washington, April 17, 1913.

Mr. Secretary: My Government has learned, although in an informal way, that during the latter part of February last there was submitted to the consideration of the Senate of the United States a contract made between the Governments of Nicaragua and Washington for the construction of an interoceanic canal through the former Republic.

This information has caused great surprise to my Government, as the transaction to which it refers could not have been carried out without flagrant violation of the clear treaties now in force which estop Nicaragua from entering into any interoceanic canal agreement without previously consulting Costa Rica in one instance and without its consent in another.

Article 8 of the boundary treaty entered into between Costa Rica and Nicaragua on April 15, 1858, reads as follows:

If the contracts for canalization or transit entered into by the Government of Nicaragua previous to its being informed of the conclusion of this treaty should happen to be invalidated for any reason whatever, Nicaragua binds herself not to enter into any other arrangement for the aforesaid purposes without first hearing the opinion of the Government of Costa Rica as to the disadvantages which the transaction might occasion the two countries; provided that the said opinoin is rendered within the period of 30 days after the receipt of the communication asking for it, if Nicaragua should have said that the decision was urgent and if the transaction does not injure the natural rights of Costa Rica, the opinion asked for shall be only advisory.

The arbitral award made by His Excellency Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, on March 22, 1888, declares, first, that the said boundary treaty of 1858 is valid, and, next, after duly construing the tenth point of the eleven of doubtful meaning which Nicaragua proposed in the controversy, decides as follows:

10. The Republic of Nicaragua remains bound not to make any grants for canal purposes across her territory without first asking the opinion of the Republic of Costa Rica, as provided in Article 8 of the Boundary Treaty of April 15, 1858. The natural rights of the Republic of Costa Rica alluded to in the said stipulation are the rights which, in view of the boundaries fixed by the said treaty, she possesses in the soil thereby recognized as belonging exclusively to her: the rights which she possesses in the harbors of San Juan del Norte and Salinas Bay, and the rights which she possesses in so much of the River San Juan as lies more than three English miles below Castillo Viejo, measuring from the exterior fortifications of the said castle as the same existed in the year 1858; and perhaps other rights not here particularly specified. These rights are to be deemed injured in any case where the territory belonging to the Republic of Costa Rica is occupied or flooded; where there is an encroachment upon either of the said harbors injurious to Costa Rica; or where there is such an obstruction or deviation of the River San Juan as to destroy or seriously impair the navigation of the said river or any of its branches at any point where Costa Rica is entitled to navigate the same.

Upon a careful reading of the foregoing documents, your excellency will agree that the Republic of Nicaragua has not been empowered to conclude the convention referred to, submitted today to the consideration of the Senate; and that such incapacity, solemnly declared in 1888, as stated before, by the Chief Executive of the United States of America, fundamentally annuls said transaction.

But my Government not only has incontrovertible reasons de jure for opposing the treaty, but powerful, inflexible reasons de facto also compel it to intervene in the matter, because, as your excellency undoubtedly knows very well, it is impossible from every point of view to build an interoceanic canal in Nicaragua without affecting Costa Rican lands and waters to a greater or less extent.

In view of the foregoing reasons, and complying with the instructions of my Government, I very respectfully beg leave to make, in its name, to the enlightened Government at Washington, through your excellency, a formal protest against the perfecting of the convention for canal purposes to which I have referred, feeling assured that the high ideals of equity which invariably actuate the Government of the United States of America will cause it to adopt in this case a decision which will be in perfect accord with justice and with the traditional friendship with which the Government of Costa Rica has always been honored by the great American nation.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have this day received a telegram from my Government in which it advises me that the answer to the protest made to it by the Government of Costa Rica against the canal convention concluded at Managua between your excellency's Government and mine on the eighth day of February, 1913, is ready.

I have no doubt that your excellency is already fully acquainted with the said protest.

My Government's reply tends to explain to the Government of Costa Rica that the said convention of February 8, 1913, is not a final canal treaty properly so called but only an option dealing with the rights the United States might exercise in the event of the construction of a canal through the territory of Nicaragua.

At the same time I have been instructed by my Government to obtain from your excellency the opinion you may have formed of the said protest from Costa Rica, so that the United States and Nicaragua may, if possible, proceed in accord in the statements it might be necessary to make to the Government of Costa Rica, and also as to the proper time when to deliver the reply.

I therefore beg your excellency kindly to accede, if you see fit, to the wishes of my Government as above stated.

through the territory of Nicaragua.

Adverting to that portion of your note under acknowledgment which invites my opinion on the protest of the Government of Costa Rica, I desire to confirm our conversation of the 17th instant in which I had the pleasure of informing you that it is the intention of my Government to take up this matter directly with the Government of Costa Rica with the view to a settlement of the questions at issue which may be satisfactory to all the Governments concerned:

Reports have been received from the Legations at San José and San Salvador of public demonstrations and inflammatory newspaper articles evidently based on a misconception of the scope of the proposed canal convention with Nicaragua—which is as much desired by that Government as by our own—and on an impression that this Government contemplates establishing a protectorate over Central America. AMERICAN LEGATION, San José, September 19, 1913.

I have just learned that the Government of Salvador has invited the Governments of Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras to send representatives to a meeting at Salvador to consider and perhaps protest against the prospective acquisition by the United States of the Fonseca and Dulce stations. The President of Costa Rica replied that he would not send a representative unless the Government of Nicaragua should be invited also. To this the Government of Salvador has not yet responded. HALE.

In regard to Salvador's invitation reported in your September 19, you may if opportune suggest to Costa Rica that its acceptance should be based upon the willingness of Nicaragua to attend such a conference rather than merely on the extending of an invitation to Nicaragua.

Say to the President of Salvador that this Government has heard with surprise and deep regret the insinuations against this Government contained in the invitation which Salvador is said to have extended to other republics to protest jointly against the action of the United States in connection with the canal convention which has been discussed with Nicaragua. You may assure the President of Salvador that this Government will be pained to learn that the Government of Salvador questions the good faith and friendliness of this Government, which has done nothing and contemplates nothing to justify the movement which it is reported Salvador is attempting to start.

AMERICAN LEGATION, San Salvador, September 30, 1913.

I imparted the contents of your September 26 to the President of Salvador who told me that his Government had indeed invited Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica to a conference to discuss the proposed protectorate of Nicaragua by the United States and the latter's desire to acquire interests on Fonseca Bay, but he denied that any reference was made to the canal convention, and added that the matter was, in any case, now closed, since the invitation had not been well received by the Governments to which it was sent.

I have learned that the movement was aimed at assembling delegates at Managua to oppose the attitude of the Government of Nicaragua towards the Government of the United States in regard to the proposed protectorate, the cession of a naval base, and the canal and loan conventions. I have also learned that Nicaragua protested to Salvador as the initiator of the movement.

MINISTRO CHAMORRO,

Washington, D. C.

Honduras and Guatemala on the 23d of this month [September] declined the invitation [to a Central American conference at San Salvador]. Salvador renewed its invitation, proposing the sending of delegates to this capital [Managua] to offer cooperation of the other republics of Central America in aid of Nicaragua in its serious political and financial problems by concluding an agreement by which the five Governments would collectively guarantee the territorial integrity of Central America. The President of Honduras believes Salvador's invitation is a pretext for creating a revolution in Nicaragua. President Díaz has begun to prepare for any emergency. This Ministry is preparing a note protesting against the interference of Salvador in Nicaraguan affairs in violation of the Washington Convention, and against the promotion of conferences for discussion of Nicaragua's international policy without Nicaragua's consent and even while deliberately excluding her.

The Minister of Salvador to the Secretary of State.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF SALVADOR, Washington, October 21, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: My Government has heard that the Government of Nicaragua has signed a treaty with the United States for the building of an interoceanic canal over the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua and that the convention grants to the United States, among other concessions, that of a ninety-nine years lease, renewable at the latter's pleasure, of a point within the Gulf of Fonseca and on the Nicaraguan Coast, for a naval station.

The geographical and juridical situation of the Gulf or Bay of Fonseca is such that the lease of any one of its parts must necessarily affect the other.

From the day when, at the beginning of the 16th century, the Spanish discoverers who occupied and conquered Central America came upon the considerable expanse of water that penetrates the land from Amapala Point in our territory to Cosiquina in Nicaragua, the bay or gulf which was then named "Fonseca," after the President of the Council of the Indies which from Spain ruled those countries in behalf of the Crown of Spain, has not ceased, even for a day, to belong to three riparian countries—Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua—under whose sovereignty and jurisdiction the said Gulf of Fonseca was and remains.

During the three centuries of Spanish domination in that part of the continent, the three countries above named held the aforesaid bay without objection or opposition from any quarter, asserting their dominion through the defense offered on more than one occasion by the peoples of Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua to the filibustering hordes which in those centuries preyed on the Central American coasts and worked their way up to the heart of the gulf in their intention to settle on Tigre Island.

These historical facts, and many others it seems needless to call to mind, suffice to demonstrate that the Gulf of Fonseca undoubtedly belongs in the class of bays styled "historic" by international law and on that ground alone subject to the exclusive dominion and sovereignty of the riparian States no matter how far they run inland or how wide at the mouth, even though it may exceed the six nautical miles recognized by international law for territorial bays, provided that, as is the case with the Gulf of Fonseca, the riparian countries shall have asserted their sovereignty under circumstances that depend on geographical configuration, use from time out of mind and, above all, self-defense.

The bay or gulf of Fonseca therefore possesses the historical character in the same manner and by the same right as the Chesapeake and Delaware bays in the United States and Conception, Chaleurs and Misamichi bays in British America, which have been recognized as such. The rights of the United States to the former and of Great Britain to the latter have been recognized and sanctioned by treaties and arbitral awards as an indisputable title of ownership and sovereignty.

These same rights held by the Spanish Government from time immemorial over the waters embraced inter fauces terrae, whether or not territorial, that form the Gulf of Fonseca, were transferred by virtue of its independence to the Federal Republic of Central America which comprised the said gulf within its maritime limits, as successor to all the rights of dominion and sovereignty which within its territory belonged to the Crown of Castile. And during the life of the Central American Federal Government the possession and dominion of the Gulf of Fonseca were asserted by many acts of legislation and national jurisdiction, laws being enacted in regard to harbors, police and many other matters.

When the bond of union between the five States that formed the Federation was sundered in 1839, the States of Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua remained the joint lawful owners and sovereigns of the Gulf of Fonseca as they now hold it, for no convention or agreement has yet been arranged to bring to an end the condition of undivided and joint ownership that the three riparian States found as preëxisting when they erected themselves into free and independent nations, even if there were some occasions when attempts were made to do so, as was the case with the boundary treaty, which failed to be perfected, signed on April 10, 1884, between Salvador and Honduras, and provided in its Article 2, with a view to doing away with indivision, that: "the maritime boundary line between Salvador and Honduras starts from the Pacific, cuts in half the distance between Meanguera, Conchaguita, Martin Pérez Islands and Zacate Point of Salvador, and Tigre, Zacate Grande, Inglesa, and Exposition Islands of Honduras and ends at the mouth of the Goascorán." The treaty never went into effect having been rejected by the Congress of Honduras and the condition of indivision and community was left as it originally stood.

From the foregoing reasons and facts, the Government of the United States must have satisfied itself that my Government has a right to consider itself concerned in the contemplated lease of a part of the Gulf of Fonseca without the previous advice and consent of the other States which are joint owners and sovereigns, even if it be on the coast of Nicaragua.

In addition to these considerations, others arise, even more troublesome, to make Salvador and Honduras feel that they are wronged by the promised alienation of a part of the Gulf of Fonseca contained in the clauses of a hundred-year lease.

It is a principle of international law, based on universal equity, that a nation must refrain from acts which in their nature may endanger the existence or safety of the others. By virtue of that principle, nations are given the right to appropriate to themselves, even to the point of forbidding admittance, the gulfs and bays naturally defended by islands, sandbanks or reefs, or by the crossfire of cannons mounted on the headlands.

By the same rule it is agreed that bays whose mouths are not more than six nautical miles wide, for police and safety measures, and than ten miles, for fishery rights, are territorial bays forming part of the national territory, and the three miles of marginal sea are counted, seaward, from a straight imaginary line running from headland to headland.

Those principles must in reason apply to gulfs or bays that are the joint property of several States, regardless of the extent of their penetration inland and whatever their geographical configuration may be in respect to the marginal belt of territorial waters belonging to each riparian State.

The foregoing doctrines have been declared and accepted by Great Britain and the United States in the arbitral award made at The Hague, on September 7, 1910, on the fishery dispute.

"It has been contended by the United States," says the award, "that the reunuciation applies only to bays six miles or less in width, 'inter fauces terre,' those bays only being territorial bays, because the three-mile rule is, as shown by this treaty, a principle of international law applicable to coasts which must be strictly and systematically applied to bays. But the tribunal is unable to agree with this contention, because admittedly the geographical character of a bay contains conditions which concern the interests of the territorial sovereign to a more intimate and important extent than do those connected with the open coast. Thus conditions of national and territorial integrity, of defense, of commerce and of industry are all vitally concerned with the control of the bays penetrating the national coast line." ¹

The same award notes the treaty concluded in 1846 between Great Britain and the United States by which both ended the joint ownership and co-dominion of the waters of the Strait of Fuca, reciprocally and exclusively assigning to themselves the ownership thereof over an expanse as broad as seventeen miles from their respective shores.

The existence of various islands belonging to Salvador and Honduras within the gulf of Fonseca is another reason which lends force to the cited doctrines of law on which rest the rights of Salvador which my Government deems impaired by the concession it is proposed to give the United States for the establishment of a naval station, which would not only of necessity restrict the said rights but also jeopardize highly important interests of Salvador and Honduras.

It must be noted that the interests and rights ceded by Nicaragua to the United States are much less in value and valuation than those of Honduras and Salvador.

As a matter of fact Nicaragua has no port of entry within the gulf of Fonseca whose waters are common to the three States and the ports of Corinto and San Juan del Sur would not come within the zone of influence appertaining to the naval base it is proposed to establish within the gulf. That influence and the predominance flowing therefrom would strongly affect the exercise of the revenue and police rights of Honduras and Salvador which are of great importance to them and would be overridden by such measures of police and safety as the United States might order for the conservation and protection of its naval base.

And, in case of war between the United States and some other maritime power, the three countries that own the gulf would unavoidably become involved in grave danger and most serious difficulties to maintain and defend their neutrality; their territorial waters within the gulf being furthermore turned into a theater of belligerency and surrounded by all the calamities that go with armed conflicts.

These dangers and difficulties are enhanced when it is considered that Salvador and Honduras have, within the gulf, two large ports of entry, La Union and Amapala respectively, whereas Nicaragua has none in the bay. Through these ports, both States move a large part of their internal wealth and import staples of trade on a large scale; so that there would be no exaggeration in saying that Nicaragua, by its concession of a naval station, concludes with the United States a convention by which it touches, rather than its own patri-mony, the vital interests of Salvador and Honduras. Salvador cannot and must not assent to this unauthorized alienation of its rights.

On the other hand, the Constitutions of the Central American Republics, especially those of Honduras, Salvador and Nicaragua, have consecrated the principle that the said Republics are segregated parts of the former Central American Federation and hence recognize it as their positive duty to contribute to the restoration of the Central American nationality.

This fundamental duty, which the United States must recognize and respect, incapacitates them, in a manner and measure, from impairing the integrity of Central American territory without the concurrence of the other and more especially at points and in parts where two or more States have common rights and joint interests.

Such an alienation would require, besides the collective consent, the plebiscitary authorization of the people whose territorial and jurisdictional rights would be curtailed by the contemplated alienation.

On the strength of these grounds and motives, my Government has given me special instructions respectfully to lodge with your excellency's Government a formal assertion of its rights and interests that would be affected or impaired if the concession were carried out in the Gulf of Fonseca for the establishment of a naval station at any point of the bay, even though it should lie solely within the small part of the coast held by Nicaragua on the said gulf.

On account of the community created by the condition of indivision in the jurisdictional and sovereign rights exercised over the Gulf of Fonseca by the three riparian States it became indispensable to mention the interests and rights of Salvador and Honduras in conjunction as contradistinguished from those of Nicaragua, in the course of this statement; but it is of course to be understood that this protest is exclusively confined to the interests and rights of Salvador in the aforesaid Bay of Fonseca.

FOREIGN OFFICE, Managua, December 24, 1913.

MR. MINISTER: Your excellency's note of September 25 last, in which you enclose a certified copy of the note which your excellency says was addressed to this Department under date of August 9 last 2 through the Legation of Nicaragua at Washington, has been received here, with considerable delay. That and the further circumstance that up to the 22nd instant, as telegraphed by the Legation on that date, no note from the Department of Foreign Relations of Colombia had been received by the Minister of Nicaragua to the United States, will afford your excellency sufficient explanation to excuse the silence heretofore maintained by this Government and its delay in returning a precise and suitably prompt answer to the important questions touched upon by your excellency in the above-mentioned papers.

Your excellency says, in the note of August 9, that the Government of Colombia has become acquainted with Article 2 of the treaty concluded between Nicaragua and the United States of America whereby the former gives in leasehold to the latter the islands in the Caribbean Sea called Great Corn Island and Little Corn, over which your excellency asserts Colombia holds the right of sovereignty by unquestionable titles to which my Government's attention was more than once called by your Government, as it has protested against what your excellency terms usurpation consummated in the said islands.

Your excellency adds that the terms of that convention, which has been published by various periodicals in North and South America, again compel your Government to enter a formal protest against the disregard of Colombia's aforesaid right of sovereignty and to reiterate the reservations made in several notes addressed to my Government by several of your predecessors in your Department, and your excellency concludes with a statement that the Minister of Colombia at Washington has also received instructions to formulate appropriate reservations at the Department of State of the United States of America.

In reply your excellency will permit me to say that inasmuch as the question involves a treaty, not yet perfected, between the Governments of Nicaragua and the United States, to the mutual advantage of both countries, which is kept secret for international reasons that concern the signatory nations only, I cannot enter into considerations of any kind bearing on any of the clauses contained in the said treaty.

But since your excellency, in referring to unofficial press reports on the subject, has taken occasion, in the notes I have the honor to answer, to make declarations about the right of sovereignty of Colombia over the mentioned islands, Great Corn and Little Corn, by turning to the protests of your excellency's predecessors in your Department without adducing further arguments in support of that alleged right, I deem it my duty to adopt and reproduce in this answer those presented in their time to the Chancellery of Colombia by the Ministers of Foreign Relations of Nicaragua—Doctor Adán Cárdenas, in 1880, Doctor Benjamín Guerra in 1890, and Don José Dolores Gámez in 1896—wherein absolute denial is made of any right that Colombia claims or may claim to the Mosquito territory; denial is even made of any possibility to question, with any semblance of justice, the plain and unexceptionable rights of Nicaragua to that territory, and the suggestion of arbitration offered by your excellency's Government is roundly rejected, for the reason that Nicaragua's rights are clear and do not admit discussion and therefore there is no territorial question whatsoever pending between the two

Therefore the dominion of Nicaragua, incontestable in every light over the Atlantic Coast belonging to her between the Republics of Honduras and Costa Rica and over the islands comprised therein, and the non-interrupted possession for four centuries of the said territory and islands, leads me to return to your excellency's Government, Mr. Minister, a definite and concrete answer to the particular point touched on by your excellency in the note of August 9 last, towit: that if Nicaragua did or should lease the Great Corn and Little Corn islands, she did or would do so by virtue of the dominion or sovereignty she holds over them—a dominion and sovereignty that Colombia lacks over Nicaraguan territory, but necessary to an objection to the acts above mentioned.

And I must add here, on the same ground, that in respect to the archipelago of the San Andrés, Vieja Provincia and Santa Catalina islands, and all other islands and keys adjacent to the Mosquito Coast. Nicaragua most solemnly denies any right of sovereignty

Colombia may allege thereto, whether it be attempted to base it on a royal order that was never carried out and was considered as nonexistent from the time it was issued, or on some unlawful possession that bears all the marks of actual forcement; and consequently reserves to herself the right to vindicate at any time her dominion and sovereignty over the said archipelago.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS —CONCLUSION OF A LOAN CONTRACT WITH AMERICAN BANKERS; GOOD OFFICES OF THE UNITED STATES—RELATION OF LOAN FUNDS TO THE MIXED COMMISSION'S AWARDS.

Note.—On November 4, 1912, Nicaragua entered into an agreement with the New York banking firms of Brown Brothers and Company and J. & W. Seligman & Company whereby the bankers released to Nicaragua $100,000 out of customs moneys received by them as per previous contracts; and set aside $400,000 received by them at the settlement with the Ethelburga Syndicate, to be paid to Nicaragua in such installments as might be agreed on². This agreement was subject to the approval of the Nicaraguan Assembly before it could go into effect; the Assembly's approval had not been given at the time of the beginning of the following correspondence. The correspondence after November 4, 1912 shows nothing but routine affairs up to the following telegram of January 31, 1913.

The Department is informed that the President of Nicaragua wishes to know whether or not the bankers are prepared to accept immediate liquidation, thereby releasing all guaranties except the option on 51% of the railroad, which will not expire before March. President has received, it seems, an offer of financial backing, source not stated.

As to the request for immediate liquidation, you will informally say to President Díaz that it is with great surprise that this Government learns of the proposition, since the financial condition of Nicaragua is quite clearly such as to make impossible the liquidation of its obligations—incurred after long consultation with the United States—merely by applying the revenues to them. This

A résumé of Nicaragua's financial affairs from the signing of the convention of June 6, 1911, will be found, post, in the memorandum of May 22, 1913; a statement of Nicaragua's assets and liabilities, prepared July 15, 1913, follows; and the inclosure with the bankers' letter of November 24 shows the condition of the gold reserve at that time.
² For. Rel. 1912, p. 1105.

Government is therefore convinced that the proposed liquidation is possible only by assuming new obligations, which would probably be most onerous to Nicaragua.

In view of the interest, repeatedly evidenced, of this Government in the welfare of Nicaragua, and of the close relationship of the two countries—which would become even closer upon the conclusion of the proposed canal treaty—this Government could not favor any alteration in the present financial system of Nicaragua a system that promises in a reasonable time to place the country in a stable financial condition hitherto unknown—unless this Government had examined and approved such alteration.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Managua, February 2, 1913.

Your January 31. President Díaz appreciates the fair dealing of Brown Brothers and the benefits thus far derived from their methods although they may have seemed to him ultra-conservative at times; and he would like to continue dealing with them. But they will not advance another dollar nor entertain a new proposition until they are certain that the incoming administration at Washington will continue the present policy. This is deeply disappointing to President Díaz, who desires to reach a definite settlement of the financial question while the present Washington administration is still in office, as it thoroughly understands that question. Nevertheless President Díaz assures me he will not enter into a final loan contract without previous consultation with the Department.

Interests inimical to the United States have industriously circulated the rumor that after March 4 the restraining influence of the United States in Central America will be withdrawn. If so, the indications are that Salvador, by its intrigues against Guatemala and Honduras, will provoke a war into which Nicaragua may be unwillingly drawn. Therefore Nicaragua is compelled, as a precaution, to adopt strong defensive measures. But there are no funds for this purpose, and the conditions are such that, I am informed, President Diaz had personally advanced $100,000 gold to purchase military supplies and to meet interest on the tobacco and liquor loan. He desires to maintain peace particularly in order that the coffee crop may be gathered and shipped—a crop worth $5,000,000 gold.

The existing financial system tends to reduce extravagance and dishonesty to the minimum, as the Fiscal Agent passes on all disbursements and publishes monthly a full account of them. In a separate telegram the Legation will venture to suggest for the Department's consideration the outline of a plan based on this system.

You may inform the President of Nicaragua that, as far as this Department is aware, there is no foundation for the rumor that the incoming administration will change the present policy of the United States toward Central America. Brown Brothers inform the Department that unless the agreement of November 4, 1912—carrying the additional option on the remaining 49% of stock of the railroad and the National Bank—be approved by the Assembly, their exercise of the existing option on the remaining stock would result mainly in discharging Nicaragua's debt to the bankers and would not make any large amount immediately available to Nicaragua. Although not promising to exercise these options, the bankers give the Department to understand that they wish to continue in Nicaragua and are actively investigating the desirability of purchasing the railway.

The most important advantage of this plan is that it would immediately establish the security and authority of the Mixed Commission and win the confidence of the people by payment of the thousands of small awards now ready for publication. The strengthening of the Foreign Claims Tribunal would relieve the Government of the undue pressure now being brought against it, especially by Germany, Great Britain and Italy, apparently working in concert.

Your February 4. As far as current expenses are concerned, President Díaz approves the bankers' proposal but he thinks they do not appreciate the need for prompt relief from the most pressing obligations, nor the strength of the influence brought to bear on the Assembly to oppose any plan not making funds immediately available.

Another plan has been proposed to the bankers, as follows: immediate purchase of the entire railroad for $2,000,000; after partial liquidation of the debt to the bankers, the balance to go toward satisfying the most of the Government's creditors and perhaps toward partial payment of Mixed Commission awards (less than 2,000 pesos). This may prove more acceptable to the bankers than the plan set forth in my February 4.

He also fails to recognize that our security has shrunk: (1) the Ethelburga-London fund, originally about $1,800,000, is no longer available because it has been collected and applied to various purposes; (2) the priority of the annual interest and sinking-fund charges on customs, about $375,000, in favor of 1909 bondholders, was formerly questioned by Nicaragua but is now admitted by Nicaragua and by us. Nevertheless, in view of the urgency, we today cabled the Nicaraguan Government as follows:

"In view of Nicaragua's urgent request and of the representations of the Government of the United States, we withdraw all offers made thus far and instead authorize the Government to draw on us immediately for $150,000 subject to Ethelburga rights and fixed charges. We also agree to place at the Government's disposal all customs receipts now on hand in Nicaragua and not yet remitted, and all customs to be collected up to June 30, 1913."

The above meets Weitzel's second suggestion, giving the Government sufficient funds for its needs until June 30 and leaving us free to consider new proposals.

MEMORANDUM.

May 22, 1913.

NICARAGUAN FINANCES AND THE MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The loan convention between the United States and Nicaragua was signed June 6, 1911, under which Nicaragua agreed:

to enter into a contract for the refunding of its internal and external debt;

the adjustment and settlement of claims;

the placing of its finances upon a sound basis;

currency reform;

and the future development of the resources of the country. Various stipulations regarding supervision were included:

the loan was to be secured by the Customs of Nicaragua, the customs to be collected by a person chosen by Nicaragua from a list of names approved by the President of the United States;

Nicaragua agreed to protect the Collector in the exercise of his functions;

and the Government of the United States agreed, should the circumstances require, to exercise such protection as it might find requisite.

This convention was approved by the Nicaraguan Assembly, but it has not yet been reported out by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the U.S. Senate.

In the hope that this convention would become effective Nicaragua entered into a contract with Messers. Brown Brothers and J. and W. Seligman for a loan of $15,000,000, this contract being dependent upon the ratification of the convention.

Nicaragua also arranged with the United States for the formation of a tribunal 2 for the settlement of all liquidated and unliquidated claims arising from the beginning of the régime of President Zelaya until the commission closes its work. Nicaragua appointed one of the three commissioners, a Nicaraguan. The other two, Judge Otto Schoenrich, of Porto Rico, as umpire, and Judge Arthur Thompson, of Washington, D. C., were recommended by the Secretary of State and appointed by the Government of Nicaragua. The Claims Commission began its sessions March 26, 1912. During the time that the commission has been functioning, of the six thousand claims laid before it, three thousand have been acted upon and awards made. There has been no dissenting opinion in any case. Three thousand claims remain and among them are some of the most important and largest. The three thousand claims already dealt with aggregate over $600,000 gold. The awards amounted to about $250,000 gold.

Owing to the fact that the loan convention has not been ratified by the U. S. Senate, however, Nicaragua has had no money with which to pay the awards of this commission. The salaries of the commissioners, however, have been paid and provision has been made for them until June 30th of this year through an arrangement entered into between the Nicaraguan Government and the American bankers.

¹The text of this convention is printed in For. Rel. 1912, pp. 1074-1075.

While for the large loan the bankers were unwilling to act without the convention, they made a small loan to Nicaragua of $1,500,000 for the establishment of the National Bank of Nicaragua; the reform of the currency; and the establishment of the Claims Commission. They have from time to time also made further advances. They have also entered into an arrangement with the holders of part of the bonded debt of Nicaragua, known as the Ethelburga loan. Under this small loan Colonel Clifford D. Hamm, an American, was appointed Collector of the Customs. Under his administration the customs receipts have been showing a marked and steady increase, except for a period of two or three months during the revolution of last summer. The bank has been established at Managua, with one or two branches, and, the Department has been informed, has been doing very good work, making loans to needy borrowers at a reasonable rate of interest, whereas before they were the victims of userers. The currency has been reformed and Nicaragua is now on the gold basis; although at one time not far back exchange was at the rate of 22.50, the conversion was made amid perfect order at the rate of 12.50.

Under their private arrangement with Nicaragua the bankers have also been operating the railroad, and they have an option to buy 51% of the stock of the railroad, paying to the Government of Nicaragua $1,000,000 therefor. It is understood that the railroad has shown satisfactory earning power since it came under American management, and that there is a possibility that the bankers may exercise their option which would give Nicaragua very much needed cash. Nicaragua, however, has so little ready money at present that the Government feels it imperative to have a new loan, and if the loan convention cannot be ratified, or if the Department of State will not promise a certain measure of protection and support to the American bankers, it seems probable that their arrangement with Nicaragua will come to an end on the first of July. Much of the good that has already been accomplished will be lost and Nicaragua will probably look to Europe for a new loan.

If, however, it should prove impossible to have the loan convention ratified and if the Department should not be willing to assume towards this matter a clearly defined attitude similar to the one adopted by the last administration, it might be possible to have the Senate pass the canal convention recently negotiated with Nicaragua and approved by the Nicaraguan Assembly, by which the United States would pay Nicaragua $3,000,000 for the option to construct an interoceanic canal by the Nicaraguan route, for the lease of the Corn islands on the Atlantic side, and for the right to establish a coaling station in Fonseca Bay, the most strategic point on the Pacific coast of Central America. If Nicaragua could obtain this $3,000,000 it could undertake important public works and might perhaps be freed of the necessity of making a new loan for any large amount.

To return to the Mixed Claims Commission, it would seem wiser from the point of view of expediency and in the interest of peaceful conditions in Central America, especially in Nicaragua, to have the commission continue and to enable Nicaragua to come to some sort of understanding with the bankers whereby she could get the funds she needs. If the funds can be obtained Nicaragua can at once settle the claims which have been adjudicated and thus reestablish her credit, and by giving tangible evidence of her intention to settle all claims, bring the British, French and Germans, and nationals of other countries who have claims against Nicaragua, into a better frame of mind. This would relieve both Nicaragua and this Government of the pressure which is being brought to bear by the chancelleries of the various countries to have claims of their nationals settled.

For some time past the Department has been taking the position vis-à-vis European Governments that it would be better for them to submit their claims to the American-Nicaraguan Claims Commission than to subject themselves to the probably unsatisfactory handling of their claims by an all-Nicaraguan commission. This is an acquiescence in the paramount influence and importance of the United States Government in Central America which, in the present state of affairs, the European Governments seem unwilling to give. At present their desire seems to be that the claims of their nationals shall be passed upon by mixed commissions composed of Nicaraguans and people of their own nationalities; that is, French claims to be passed upon by a commission composed of Frenchmen and Nicaraguans, British claims by British and Nicaraguans, etc.

As is indicated above, the European nations could probably be induced to forsake their pretentions with regard to a special claims commission if Nicaragua could get money from the bankers and go ahead with the payment of claims which have already been adjudicated by the American-Nicaraguan commission.

What Nicaragua needs and wants is peace. It seems doubtful whether she can secure it without some support and cooperation on the part of the United States. She can certainly not secure it unless she can obtain the funds necessary to pay the awards of the Claims Commission, to refund all of her old foreign and internal debts, to pay the salaries of Government employees which are now in arrears, and to undertake much needed work in developing the resources of the country.

Perhaps the most marked instance of the so-called dollar diplomacy of the past administration was to secure these results to Nicaragua by means of the loan convention. The time has now arrived for the present administration to define its attitude towards that loan convention and towards the Nicaraguan questions in general.

I have tried to point out the alternative means by which Nicaragua might secure funds should the attitude of administration, when defined, be adverse to the loan convention.

Legation of Nicaragua, Washington, July 15, 1913.

NICARAGUAN STATISTICS.

1. The indebtedness of the Government of Nicaragua consists of the following:

A. $6,200,000, a bonded loan issued by the Ethelburga Syndicate of England and secured by a first lien on the customs receipts to the extent of $31,500 monthly. Interest at 5%. This loan exists until paid off by these monthly payments with the option to the Government to pay off the entire amount at 92 if paid in 1913 or at rates gradually approaching par if paid within the next seven years. This bonded debt is a legacy of the Zelaya Government. It was contracted in 1909 at 75, bearing 6% interest. A part was used to fund earlier debts, a part was brought to Nicaragua and practically wasted, and about $1,800,000 was retained by the Ethelburga Syndicate in its coffers until it would be used for railroad construction. Though the syndicate thus retained this sum, it nevertheless collected 6% interest thereon. The loan was guaranteed by all the customs receipts, the liquor and tobacco taxes, the Government railroad and steamers, and any other property which the Government might have. The hope of American assistance in obtaining a new loan enabled the present Government of Nicaragua to make a very favorable compromise with the bondholders, according to which the interest rate was reduced to 5%, the Government was given the option of redeeming the bonds at much less than par if redemption took place at an early date and the large sum held by the Ethelburga Syndicate was turned over and used to pay New York bankers amounts advanced for establishment of stable currency. If there is no American assistance and no new loan can be made, the interest will again become 6% and the Republic will be obliged to pay par on these bonds.

B. $750,000 to Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. of New York being secured by the balance of the customs receipts and bearing interest at 6% per annum due October 15, 1913. This is the balance remaining of sums aggregating $2,655,000 which have gradually been advanced by the bankers since January, 1912, at par. The remaining portion of the debt has been paid off from the customs receipts and out of the Ethelburga money above referred to. The greater part of the money so advanced by the New York bankers has been used for the establishment of a small National Bank (the only real bank in Nicaragua) the retirement of the discredited paper money and the establishment of a stable currency with sufficient reserve.

C. $1,500,000 to miscellaneous creditors of the Government for salaries unpaid, supplies furnished, advances made, etc. This is the debt which is causing the most trouble and is most urgent. Upon finding that assistance would soon be obtained under the convention signed with the United States the Nicaraguan Government made the contracts above referred to with New York bankers for the establishment of a sound currency, and a great part of the Government's income has been used for the payment of the New York bankers, the local creditors being neglected. Payment has been deferred for too long a time, however, the smaller creditors are becoming restless and the larger ones are on the verge of bankruptcy. Unless the Government can obtain adequate funds within a very short time there will be many failures throughout the country. Even now business is stagnant and a crisis is plainly imminent.

D. Approximately $3,000,000 in claims against the Government growing out of revolutions and bad government. The nominal amount of the claims will probably exceed ten million but it is believed they can be scaled down to three millions or perhaps less. Many of these claims are for property taken by Government forces during the recent wars. The failure to pay them has caused suffering among the poor countrymen whose entire movable property was sometimes taken. It is very urgent that as many as possible of these claims be paid.

2. The total annual receipts of the Government are approximately as follows:

P4 E0	20.000
Customs receipts $1,50	50,000
National Deliverd of Nicaragua 150 miles long and in good con-
3111	00,000
Excise tax on liquors and tobacco1, 23	55, 000
Excise tax on liquors and topacco	00, 000
Internal Revenue40	00, 000
	55 000

The Annual Budget expenditures of the country are approximately three millions dollars. This sum is distributed among the five departments of the Government approximately as follows:

Cop to a series	$800,000
Interior Department and Police 700,000
War	400,000
Foreign Affairs and Public Instruction	400,000
Treasury (including cost of alcohol and tobacco, which are Govern-Treasury (including cost of alcohor and costess,	800,000
ment monopolies)
Public Works, including postal, telegraph and telephone service	300,000
Public Works, including poster, testage of 3,000,000
Makal	5, 000, 000

These sums do not include extraordinary expenditures of the Government in the case of war or disturbance of the public peace. Unfortunately such extraordinary expenditures have in the past sapped the life blood of the Republic.

Whenever the public peace is threatened it is necessary for the Government to increase the army and equip it well; payments in other than the War Department must be suspended and thus the interior debt grows. Unless the unruly spirits are curbed by the fear of foreign intervention no government in Nicaragua can avoid incurring enormous ordinary and extraordinary expenses for war

3. The size of Nicaragua is about 49,000 miles, a little larger than Louisiana or Cuba and about fourteen times as large as Porto Rico. Owing to its many wars and misgovernments, Nicaragua has been unable to develop its enormous natural resources, and its commerce is now only a little over $8,000,000 per annum as compared with over $236,000,000 for Cuba, and over $92,000,000 for Porto Rico. The population is approximately 600,000.

Brown Brothers and Company and J. and W. Seligman and Company to the Secretary of State.

NEW YORK, July 24, 1913.

SIR: We have the honor to enclose herewith for your information, copy of a decree which was issued by the President of Nicaragua on June 22nd, 1913, and which was put in the form of a contract which bears date of June 30th, 1913.

We beg [etc.]

Brown Brothers & Co. J. & W. Seligman & Co.

[Inclosure—Translation.]

Executive Decree issued by the President of Nicaragua on June 23, 1913.

Whereas, the contract of November 4, 1912, between the Government and Brown Brothers & Company and J. & W. Seligman & Company modified two prior contracts between the same parties dated respectively March 26th and May 25th, 1912, with the result that the bankers were relieved of the obligation to provide one hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of the Monetary Law of March 20, 1912, said sum being a part of certain five hundred thousand dollars mentioned in said contracts; and

Whereas, notwithstanding the provisions of said contract of November 4, 1912, the Executive considers it advisable that said sum of one hundred thousand dollars shall remain available for the purposes indicated, and desires that the bankers shall not avail themselves of the provisions referred to, but that on the contrary they shall provide said sum as an integral part of said five hundred thousand dollars upon the same conditions that would have governed if the contracts of May 25th and November 4th, 1912, had not been entered

Whereas, the bankers have offered to waive said provisions of said November 4, 1912, contract and to provide said one hundred thousand dollars for the purposes of said Monetary Law as originally agreed;

Whereas, the bankers have offered to waive their right to apply the Customs collections up to October 15, 1913, to the payment of the principal and interest of the Treasury Bills still outstanding and to the repayment of the amounts advanced and to be advanced by them under the supplementary contract of March 26, 1912, for the purposes of said Monetary Law;

Whereas, said offers by the bankers are upon the following conditions,

First, that the one hundred thousand dollars above mentioned to be provided by the bankers shall be applicable exclusively to the purposes of said Monetary Law.

Second, that the Customs duties to be collected between June 30th and October 15th, 1913, after the payment of the costs of collection, shall be applied as follows:

A. To the payment during each month to the bankers of the amounts which, under the provisions of the May 25, 1912, contract between the Republic and the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders, are payable for account of interest, sinking fund and service of the 1909 loan.

B. To the payment during each month to the United States Mortgage and Trust Company of one-quarter of the balance of said Customs collections, said amounts to be treated as additions to the exchange fund established by the Monetary Law.

C. To the payment during each month of a sum not exceeding three thousand dollars to the Mixed Claims Commission for salaries and expenses of said commission. D. After the foregoing payments shall have been made, any balance during each month shall be deposited with the National Bank of Nicaragua, Incorporated, to the credit and for the benefit of the Republic.

Third, that any failure on the part of the Republic to comply with any of said conditions shall operate to terminate the proposed arrangement.

Fourth, that such waivers shall in no manner affect the rights of the bankers under the Treasury Bills and Supplementary Agreements.

Now therefore the Executive decrees to accept the offers made by the bankers as above set forth and hereby authorizes and empowers Señor Pedro Rafael Cuadra, Minister of Finance of Nicaragua, to execute and deliver on behalf of the Republic such contract as may be required to give effect to the arrangement referred to.

The Minister of the Treasury of Nicaragua on an official visit to Washington, to the Secretary of State.

[Translation.]

Washington, August 30, 1913.

Mr. Secretary: In order that you may have a clear idea of the economic situation of Nicaragua, which has caused the need of a loan, of which we have already spoken on various occasions, I take liberty of laying before you certain antecedents and data, which justify our urgent request.

An unfortunate administration, which we would like to blot out from our history, left the country oppressed with an enormous internal and external debt, mostly created without any administrative vigilance, the country's resources and productive sources of wealth having been exhausted. The present administration of our country, seeking the natural remedy for this situation, thought of a foreign loan and an appeal to American capital, because the Government of the United States had offered, in the form of a treaty, to aid in its attainment.

When the Castrillo-Knox Convention was concluded,¹ Messrs. Brown Brothers and Company, and J. and W. Seligman and Company, bankers of New York, promised to give us up to fifteen million dollars, if the Senate of the United States ratified that convention. In the meanwhile they advanced, under various contracts which we successively concluded, about three million dollars. But as they gave it to us on very short terms, and demanded from us in return all our revenues as a guaranty, this loan has, in a way, made our situation more unfortunate and precarious; because, to pay off such a sum in such a short time (we now owe only $700,000), we have not been able to pay debts that should have been paid; our administrative service is in a bad condition; and we have a great number of employees who are with unpaid salary; so that if we do not hasten to meet this need, public tranquility may be placed in danger.

To justify this statement I must state to your excellency that the large loan of fifteen millions forced us to create new offices, maintaining an office for the collection of the customs receipts, which increased the expenses of such collection by an enormous sum in American gold. This extraordinary expense, which could only be borne if the loan of fifteen millions had been obtained, has nevertheless weighed heavily on our scanty present revenue since the day when the negotiations were initialed with the bankers of New York. The increase of customs receipts should not be attributed to the management of the General Collector of Customs, whom I value and give his due; but rather to the increased commerce which is growing up in our country under the shadow of a good Government, in view of a stable peace and in the hope of a large loan.

We were obliged to found a National Bank for the loan contracts, with a capital up to five millions, which was to begin with about a hundred thousand dollars pending negotiation of the large loan. Nicaragua spent a large sum in founding it; and, although it seems hardly believable, in this bank of only a hundred thousand dollars there is spent annually in salaries more than forty thousand dollars, thus rendering its use and advantages nugatory. The Bank has been administered and managed by the bankers since it was founded.

Counting on the loan of fifteen millions, we agreed to change our monetary circulating medium. For this purpose we retired an enormous amount of national paper money from circulation; and, as we have not been able to replace it with a similar metallic one, a commercial crisis has arisen such as the history of our country has never seen. We fear the ruin of all the business of the principal cities.

In this abnormal situation, it can almost be said that we have rebuilt a railroad with our own resources; that is to say, however, that we have intensified the crisis by retiring from circulation the capital employed in these improvements, and we have done this at a very unpropitious time.

I state this because it is also a result of the contracts with the bankers, contracts in whose terms may be observed the different intention which the Nicaraguan Government had in concluding them, since they gave the bankers the right to buy fifty-one per cent of the railroad's bonds, at a fair price, obliging them to lend to the [railroad] company while exercising this option five hundred thousand dollars to make the aforesaid improvements.

Counting on the loan, we created, in agreement with the American Government, a Claims Commission, composed of two Americans and a Nicaraguan, in order that claims pending against the Government of Nicaragua should be heard and settled therein. This Commission has been a great expense to us without any benefit to the country, since as it cannot pay its awards the lack of money makes its establishment a mockery.

It will not escape your excellency's observation that a short-time loan, or, to state it more clearly, one whose cancellation and interest bear directly on the revenues of the country, will not remedy our situation. All nations have their times of crisis; all owe money; all have recourse to loans; but all arrange their debts to be paid over such a long period of years that their gradual cancellation does not disturb the public administration or the development of the country.

That is what we want: a loan of suitable and sufficient size for a long term, so that we should have to pay each year only the interest and so much per cent amortization, to an amount within the limits of our budget. In short, Mr. Secretary, what Nicaragua needs is money on a long term.

As regards the character of the bankers, we have preferences for none. We prefer the one who will give us the necessary money on the conditions mentioned above. Our desire is that the natural and legitimate profit of the bankers be rendered consistent with the best terms for the country. Another thing that should be understood is that the bankers with whom we negotiate should not go outside of their purely financial sphere; because the present Government of Nicaragua well understands what the real interests of the country are, and what are its obligations in the free exercise of its administrative function.

As regards the data of our debt, I refer you to the report which we personally put into your hands, and to another which is in the possession of the Chief of the Latin American Division of the State Department, and which is the same as the undersigned Minister of the Treasury furnished the American Minister in Managua, in reply to his request. From these figures your excellency will see that—aside from the six millions more or less which the Republic owes the Ethelburga Syndicate, a loan which has not matured and which is arranged at 5% interest—a loan of four million dollars would fill our urgent necessities, placing our country on a solid economic basis.

Your cordial interest in my country, for which we Nicaraguans can never be grateful enough, has allowed this matter to be in your hands; and we appeal to your excellency to find some way whereby the different bankers who have made proposals, may in the shortest possible time arrange them in conformity with the outline stated above, which harmonizes with the interests of our country.

I have the honor to append to this note some suggestions for remedies for the evils mentioned.

I am [etc.]

PEDRO RAF. CUADRA.

[Inclosure.]

Summary of the above letter and some suggestions for remedies for the evils mentioned therein.

FINANCIAL AGENT.—If a Financial Agent must be appointed it should with the sole and exclusive object of obtaining in the shortest possible time a loan of four million pesos gold, which will be acceptable to us at 92%, 30 years' term, 5 or 6% annual interest and 1 or 2% of amortization.

CONDITIONS OF APPOINTMENT OF FINANCIAL AGENT.—As the needs of Nicaragua are peremptory and the guaranties that we can offer are all in the power of Brown Bros. and Seligman, the Financial Agent should agree to advance, to be repaid from the loan which he himself will procure, a million dollars, with which Brown and Seligman will be paid, the rest to be placed at the disposal of the Government for its urgent needs.

Guaranties.—We offer to place the Customhouses under a system of collection guaranteeing to the money-lender or money-lenders that the receipts will be chiefly devoted to the service of the debt which is created. The present very costly system of collection will be abandoned. The Collector now receives $10,000, and others $10,000, including the Sub-Collector and the Auditor of Customs. We suggest that the collection be done through the National Bank, Inc., which will be paid a just and equitable commission; and no obstacles be placed in the way of the Government in Customs legislation, nor in its administration.

NATIONAL BANK.—The National Bank needs more capital. It is believed that it would be well for the Financial Agent to have the right to subscribe to 51% of the shares of the Bank, and thus the capital could be increased to $500,000.

Railroad.—If the present bankers do not exercise the option to which they have the right, it is our desire that that Company always remain under its present organization, that is to say, that American law protect it, as it is a company incorporated in one of the States of that Republic. Only the Board of Directors of the Company would be changed, and other reforms of minor importance enacted.

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION.—As the Mixed Claims Commission was created on the initiative of the Government of the United States, the Government of Nicaragua will take no steps of any kind regarding that Tribunal without the advice of that Republic; and we will likewise submit everything relating to this question to their judgment and decision.

The Minister of Nicaragua and the Minister of the Treasury of Nicaragua to the Secretary of State.

Legation of Nicaragua, Washington, Sept. 1, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: Having in a general way pointed out the pressing immediate needs of our country, we wish to add that there is but one bank in the Republic of Nicaragua, that it has an insignificant capital, so little that it can not extend loans to even a small percentage of those worthy of credit. The current rates of interest are from 18% to 24% for loans in general, even for those with which to move the crops. We need a bank with more capital, and an experienced man who understands dealing with our people at its head.

Very shortly the former "billetes" of our country cease to be legal tender. We need money now to supply in their stead the new standard "córdoba," which is the equivalent of your American dollar.

The Mixed Claims Commission, created at your country's suggestion, sorely needs money to begin to pay off the awards it has made. Already there is evidenced a tendency to endeavor to effect settlements direct with Nicaragua because the creditors have so far seen no practical evidence of finality in matters the Commission has taken up.

The original suggestions of Mr. Jarvis, a man who has in dealing with Latin America succeeded largely in Cuba, that he could arrange a loan for us of from two million to two million and a half dollars in gold, and could put up a million of it himself, on terms better than those of the present bankers, met with our approval and immediately Mr. Jarvis delivers this amount to the Department of State in Washington, or to whomsoever it shall designate, approximately 711,000 of which shall be used for liquidating our obligation and thus cancelling our contract with the present bankers, and the balance placed at the disposition of Nicaragua, we, having the authority of the President of Nicaragua to do so, will definitely appoint Samuel Miller Jarvis as Finance Commissioner, the appointment to be according to the terms of the agreement copy of which is attached to this letter, and have the appointment confirmed by our Congress now in session at home.

This offer is made in the belief that Mr. Jarvis can raise money in any reasonable quantity in the near future and that instead of two and a half millions the loan might be for as much as four millions, and at long instead of short time, with precisely the same guaranties as the present bankers have except the option on the Railroad stock.

After great reflection it occurs to us that any plan which did not comprehend liquidating with the present bankers prior to definitive naming of a Finance Commissioner might give rise to differences the effect of which might reflect little credit on the foresight of our country, or possibly even give rise to question as to our fair intention towards those who have had business with our Republic.

We have [etc.]

Memorandum of Agreement between the Republic of Nicaragua and Samuel M. Jarvis, which becomes effective on compliance with terms of letter dated September 1, 1913.

1. The Republic of Nicaragua shall through its Congress create the office of Finance Commissioner, who shall attend to the international financial affairs of the Republic; and he shall cooperate with the Minister of Finance in Nicaragua under the advice of the Secretary of State at Washington. It shall be the duty of the Finance Commissioner, and he shall be required, at all times to furnish to the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua and to the Secretary of State at Washington any information which either may request as to the financial affairs of the Republic; and he shall make to the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua quarterly reports of such affairs. He shall in no case be interested in any concessions from the Government, except that mentioned in Clause 7, referring to Banco Nacional de Nicaragua.

tioned in Clause 7, referring to Banco Nacional de Nicaragua.

2. The office of Finance Commissioner shall be filled by the appointment by the President of Nicaragua of Samuel Miller Jarvis of New York. And he shall continue to hold this office during the existence of the present loan and of all loans negotiated by him for Nicaragua, if approved and accepted by the latter. His appointment shall be officially certified to the Department of State at Washington.

3. Said Jarvis shall do everything in his power to arrange for meeting the present financial needs of Nicaragua and shall have authority to secure funds for the conversion of currency, the refunding of all loans in a proper and economical mannér on the best terms obtainable by him, all contracts to be subject to the approval of the Department of State at Washington, D. C., and ratification by the Nicaraguan Government, and for the placing of the finances of Nicaragua on a sound basis. All expenditures of the loans to Nicaragua shall be made through the National Bank of Nicaragua; and the books of the bank shall at all times be open to the inspection of the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua and of the Secretary of State at Washington.

4. Said Jarvis shall have at all times the active cooperation of the Gov-

4. Said Jarvis shall have at all times the active cooperation of the Government of Nicaragua. He may also have the right to refer for advice to the Department of State at Washington, independent of the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua.

5. Said Samuel Miller Jarvis shall be empowered at once by Nicaragua to investigate and report upon the financial and economic condition of Nicaraguan financial affairs. And to authorize and to have executed and carried out such action, legal or otherwise, as shall be necessary to properly protect and conserve the interest and welfare of Nicaragua; and to recover whatever may be properly due her on any account or from any source. And for this purpose he shall have the right to investigate records and accounts, demand accountings, employ auditors and legal and other services wherever necessary to carry out the purposes of this article.

6. Said Samuel Miller Jarvis shall have proper compensation for the services performed in pursuance of the duties devolving upon him under this instrument. And shall have reimbursement for all his proper expenses incident to said work. Said expenses to be determined and allowed from time to time as the same are incurred. The compensation for services in connection with loans shall be one per cent upon amount negotiated and approved by the Department of State at Washington and accepted by Nicaragua. All compensation for services in all other matters to be agreed upon between the Government of Nicaragua and said Samuel Miller Jarvis, and approved by the Department of State at Washington, D. C.

7. Samuel M. Jarvis shall have the right to purchase a controlling interest in the shares of the National Bank of Nicaragua within a reasonable time to be determined by the Secretary of State at a price to be agreed upon by the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua and said Jarvis, and in case they should be unable to agree, to be fixed by a person to be designated by the Secretary of State of the United States.

It is understood that the purpose of this transfer of the shares of the bank is to assure its development as an institution whose importance, strength and solidity shall comport with the dignity of the Republic.

Brown Brothers & Co. and J. and W. Seligman & Co. to the Secretary of State.

New York, September 4, 1919.

Sir: Yesterday we held a conference with Mr. Douglas (of the firm of Douglas, Baker, Ruffin & Obear, counsel for Nicaragua) with reference to the proposed new loan to the Republic of Nicaragua.

Our memorandum of August 9th has now been modified by our letter to you of August 26th 1 and our telegram to you of August 28th 1 and our conference with Mr. Douglas on September 3rd. We have accordingly, had a memorandum prepared which embodies in one document all of these various suggestions and now enclose herewith a copy thereof for your attention.

We have [etc.]

Brown Brothers & Co. J. & W. SELIGMAN & Co.

[Inclosure.]

Proposition in regard to Nicaraguan financing as contained in memorandum handed to Sr. Cuadra August 9, 1913, and sent to the Secretary of State August 13, 1913; amended by letter to the Secretary of State August 26, 1913, telegram to the Secretary of State of August 28, 1913, and at the interview with Mr. Douglas on September 3, 1913.

Amount of Loan.—To be $2,000,000, to be represented by Treasury Bills; or, if option on 51% railroad is now exercised, $1,000,000.

INTEREST.—Interest to be at 6% per annum, payable either monthly or through discounting bills at time of issue. In latter event amount of loan may be increased by an amount equal to the interest.

TERM OF LOAN.—Loan to be for one year, with option to Republic to liquidate same after three months at premium of 1%.

SECURITY.—The security to be as follows:

(a) All shares of the railroad; or, if option of 51 per cent is exercised, then remaining 49 per cent of railroad stock.

(b) All shares of National Bank of Nicaragua, Incorporated, including those to be issued upon increase of capital out of proceeds of loan as stated below.

(c) Customs duties, subject to requirements of 1909 bonds. Until the maturity of the new loan, however, such customs duties in excess of requirements of 1909 loan, expenses, etc., are to be paid over to the Government, subject, however, to the provision made below for additions to the Conversion Fund. Administration of customs to continue as at present, subject to any changes in form which will not affect in any way the complete control of the Collector General.

Application of Loan.—The $2,000,000 proceeds of loan, or proceeds of exercise of option and of loan, to be applied as follows:

Liquidation of pending accounts of Bankers, expenses, etc_____$711,000 250,000 Conversion fund_____ Additional bank capital $200,000, or (at option of Government)_____ 250,000

The balance, after paying expenses in connection with negotiations, etc., to go to the Government by deposit thereof in the National Bank; to be disbursed by means of checks on the Bank in the manner observed at present according to the decree of October 31, 1912.

RAILROAD OPTIONS.—(a) Option on 51 per cent of railroad stock either to continue for one year, and further, if loan is not paid at maturity, until repayment of loan; or, if Government prefers, option to be exercised at once. (b) Preferential right to purchase remaining 49 per cent of railroad stock to continue as in Supplemental Loan Agreement.

(c) If 49 per cent of railroad stock is at any time sold for more than $1,000,000, the difference between $1,000,000 and the purchase price to be divided equally between the Government and the Bankers or in such other proportion as the Secretary of State may determine.

(d) Bankers not to be under obligation to loan $500,000 to railroad against mortgage bonds for improvements.

(e) If 51% option is not exercised at once but is continued as above stated. monthly dividends not exceeding ½ per cent to be paid to Government on railroad capital if such amount is earned after all expenses of operation, administration, repairs, etc.; balance of earnings to remain in corporate treasury or applied to improvements.

Conversion Fund.—Provision to be made that, in the event of Conversion Fund being reduced to $100,000, 25 per cent of the customs duties will be applied monthly to this fund until it is again brought up to $200,000; this operation to be repeated as often as Conversion Fund is reduced to $100,000. Conversion Fund to be administered by the Bank and deposited in a special account in New York apart from the general funds of the Bank.

Memorandum of subjects pending and necessary to arrange: Controversy over wharf; oil tank; ship "Nicarao"; right of way of Momotombo.

[Telegram-Paraphrase.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, September 13, 1913.

The Department desires you to ask the President whether he favors the sale of the 51% of the railroad merely because the bankers have an option in their present contract and whether he would consider the option price of $1,000,000 sufficient if no option existed.

The Department has under consideration with the bankers, Minister Chamorro and the Nicaraguan Minister of Finance an immediate loan of $2,000,000, of which $1,000,000 involves the said option. The Department is inclined to believe the railroad worth more than the option price.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Managua, Sept. 16, 1913.

Department's September 13. President Díaz says the option is worth more than $1,000,000, but in view of the dangerous economic conditions and the failure to secure funds elsewhere, he wishes the bankers to exercise their option on the 51% of the railroad.

The earning capacity of the road amounts approximately to 10% on $3,000,000. On this basis I believe it worth fully $3,000,000.

Acting Manager Bennett says the value of the road is slightly greater than at the time of granting the option, owing to small additions to rolling-stock and improvements, and that the annual earnings have increased.

Kindly inform me whether the contract contemplates extension of the road and whether provision for expending the $1,000,000 by the Nicaraguan Government will be made.

While we regret that it has not been possible for us to eliminate from the proposed contract the security of the 49% of stock of the railroad, we are glad to inform you that an understanding has been arrived at which meets the views of Señor Cuadra and of Mr. Douglas, and which we trust will meet your approval. Mr. Douglas informs us that he will discuss the matter with you in detail, and that it will be unnecessary for us to write you further at this time.

DEAR SIR: Complying with the request contained in your telegram of September 17th, we hand you herewith drafts of the following proposed contracts with the Republic of Nicaragua:

1. Collateral Trust Agreement between Nicaragua and the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, for the purpose of securing an issue of $1,060,000 Treasury Bills.

2. Agreement between Nicaragua and ourselves for the purchase by us of the Treasury Bills above mentioned.

3. Agreement between Nicaragua and ourselves regarding the purchase by us of 51% of the capital stock of the Ferrocarril del Pacífico de Nicaragua, the increase of the capital stock of the National Bank of Nicaragua, and the acquisition by us of 51% of the capital stock of said Bank.

4. Agreement between Nicaragua and the National Bank of Nicaragua, Incorporated, relating principally to the increase of the Currency Exchange Fund and the maintenance of the present currency system.

5. Agreement between Nicaragua and the Ferrocarril del Pacífico

Wishing to comply in all respects with your request, we have not committed ourselves with Nicaragua to the acceptance of the above contracts, but have notified Señor Cuadra, Financial Agent of the Republic, that our action with reference to said contracts must depend upon whether or not they receive your approval.

DEAR MR. CUADRA: After carefully reviewing the matter of the $400,000 which is to be set aside for the Nicaraguan Mixed Claims Commission, it seems that a clause might be added to the loan contract to read as follows:

The Nicaraguan Government having so desired, it is agreed that the bankers shall pay $400,000 from the amount of the loan to the persons entitled thereto under the awards of the Nicaraguan Mixed Claims Commission.

This Department would be glad if you could have this clause so incorporated.

GENTLEMEN: Confirming the telephone conversation of even date between Mr. Thatcher Brown and me, I am pleased to note the disposition of the bankers who are about to make the loan to Nicaragua to leave for future consideration the contract between the Republic of Nicaragua and the Pacific Railway of Nicaragua, which provides for a concession between San Jorge on Lake Nicaragua and San Juan del Sur on the Pacific coast.

This Department has been informed that Nicaragua gave a similar concession a few years ago, and has telegraphed the Legation at Gentlemen: Referring to the contract between the Government of Nicaragua on the one part and Messrs. Brown Bros. and J. and W. Seligman on the other part relating to the purchase of 51 per cent of the railway stock and 51 per cent of the bank stock, I beg leave to say that the Government of Nicaragua has expressed a desire that the bankers shall purchase the specified percentages in pursuance of an option given to them by the Government of Nicaragua under a contract made in 1911, such contract being approved by the Department of State at that time. As the purchase is to be completed under a contract made in 1911, upon the terms and conditions of which it is not within my province now to take any action, I merely state the facts without expressing any opinion upon the merits of the transaction.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 6, 1913.

Gentlemen: The loan contracts (embraced in the two contracts called the Collateral Trust Agreement and the Contract for the purchase of the Treasury Bills) which Nicaragua has completed with the Trust Company and the bankers having been submitted to the Department of State for examination and approval, I beg to say that the terms of the loan are approved by the Department, with the following reservations:

The Department would have preferred to have had the loan made without including the 49% of the railroad stock among the securities given, but in view of the fact that the Nicaraguan Government is willing to include this stock as security, and in view of the further fact that twelve months' time is allowed for the redemption of the said stock after the maturity of the loan, the Department will not interpose an objection to this particular feature of the loan.

In approving this loan the Department desires it distinctly understood by the Nicaraguan Government, by Brown Brothers and by the Trust Company that this approval does not commit the Department to any further action, but is merely advisory. Because of its friendly interest in Nicaragua, because it desires to encourage all legitimate American investments in foreign countries, and because Nicaragua is dealing with American citizens, it has, at the request of all the parties interested, expressed this approval, with the understanding that the Department will be free to act according to its judgment and with the light that it then has upon any request that may be made thereafter in connection with the carrying out of the terms of these contracts.

This Department does not wish the provision about the inspector of customs to remain in the contract.

NEW YORK, October 8, 1913.

Gentlemen: I am in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of State under date of the 6th instant in which he suggests that a provision be inserted into the General Loan Contract which will provide for the setting apart of $400,000 of the loan for the account of the "Mixed Claims Commission," and in this connection I take note of the fact that you have a communication from the Secretary of the same date, in which he sends you copy of his letter to me. I regret that I cannot consent to the incorporation of such provision in the contract. When this suggestion was made at an early stage of these negotiations I then objected to it on a number of grounds then stated, all of which I repeated to Mr. Bryan, and then an understanding was arrived at between us to the effect that while such provision should be omitted from the contract, the subject matter of the Mixed Claims Commission would be arranged on a basis as to amount and method of payment that would be satisfactory to the Secretary of State at Washington, and I propose in perfect good faith to do this, and to that end I will have a conference with Mr. Bryan in a few days, and meanwhile let me say that the amount to be deposited with you for the account of Nicaragua will not be drawn against by Nicaragua or by me on behalf of Nicaragua below $400,000 pending adjustment of this matter with the Department of State. When the matter is adjusted you will of course be informed of it.

After conference with General Chamorro I wrote, with his assent, as follows to Finance Minister Cuadra in New York on October 6:

[Quotes the letter; see ante.]

The Nicaraguan Mixed Claims Commission originated with the Dawson Pact ¹ as referred to in the Martínez note of November 5, 1910, ² and was organized under a decree of the Congress of Nicaragua. It is necessary that decisions of the Commission be respected. Three thousand awards have been made, totaling about $350,000. These should be paid from the present loan in the same order as awarded, without respect to the political affiliations of the claimants. These payments, reaching every part of the Republic, should produce a favorable effect on public sentiment.

Read this telegram to the President and urge upon him the importance of acting upon it favorably.

Sir: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your esteemed favor of the 6th instant.

Desiring to meet your wishes as expressed in your letter, I communicated with President Díaz asking his authority to so comply, as my former instructions were final and against the separation of any sum for any other object than the payment of the debts of the Administration. I regret to inform you that I have received a complete denial to my appeal in the cable which is given below:

It is impossible to separate the $400,000 for Mixed Commission. The urgent needs of the Administration would remain unsatisfied. It would mean nothing in payment of claims of mixed Commission. Moreover, the Congress does not grant right to include this condition in the contracts and therefore it should not be included in them.

To this I think it well to add that according to my own knowledge of the situation in Nicaragua acquired in the discharge of the duties of the office of Minister of Finance, to which I owe the honorable mission to this country conferred upon me by my Government, President Díaz has much reason for his denial. If this amount of $400,000 were separated, the economic situation of the Government would be in a worse predicament, as it would leave unprovided for the urgent needs of the Administration and sacred debts, to give preference to claims that, although just, are not of this important character. Also, the force of the Administration would be broken if this were done, and in consequence thereof the public peace would be endangered.

Department's October 10 and October 11. President Díaz emphatically declares it impossible to accede to Department's suggestion relating to the $400,000, asserting that such legitimate expenses as unpaid salaries of Government employees and rental of Government buildings practically equal the disposable funds of the loan, and that neither Chamorro nor Cuadra was authorized to agree to set aside the $400,000.

However, President Díaz will agree to the following: If back salaries and current expenses shall not have exhausted all disposable funds, he will be [omission] to consider with the Department an appropriate expenditure of the balance; but he refuses to bind himself in the sense indicated in the Department's telegrams referred to. He promises that, in any event, he will inform the Department before drawing against the $400,000.

File No. 817.51/605.

Statement of the features of the loan contracts of October 8, 1913, prepared by the bankers and given to the press October 20 with the assent of the Secretary of State.

Brown Brothers & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. have purchased from the Republic of Nicaragua 51% of the stock of the Pacific Railways of Nicaragua (incorporated under the laws of Maine) and of the stock of the National Bank of Nicaragua (incorporated under the laws of Connecticut). This purchase was made under a contract executed in 1911 and at that time approved by the U. S. Government. The remaining 49% continues to be owned by the Government of Nicaragua. The bankers have also discounted at par $1,060,000 one-year Treasury bills of the Republic of Nicaragua dated October 1, 1913, and maturing October 1, 1914, drawing six per cent.

The Treasury bills are secured by lien on the customs, subject only, first, to the existing lien amounting to about $375,000 per annum in favor of the English bonds of 1909, and second, to the lien on the fourth of the customs in favor of the currency fund referred to below. Customs revenues for the year ending August 31, 1913, amounted to approximately $1,683,000 (U.S. gold). The Customs administration is conducted by an American Collector General recommended by us.

The Pacific Railways of Nicaragua is the only railroad in the Republic and extends for 163 miles from the port of Corinto on the Pacific Coast to Managua, the capital, and Granada on Lake Nica-rauga, with branches. The capital stock outstanding is $3,300,000. For more than a year the railroad has been operated by the J. G. White Management Corporation, who will continue in charge. Two members of the Board of Directors are to be nominated by the Minister of Finance of Nicaragua, and the Secretary of State of the United States has the privilege of appointing one. The latter will also act as Railroad Examiner, making confidential reports to the Governments of the United States and of Nicaragua.

The Bank has been in operation for over a year. Its capital has just been increased from $100,000 to $300,000." Its head office is at Managua, with branches at Bluefields and Granada and an agency The Bank is the depository of the Government and its issue department issues bank-notes on behalf of the Government. Two of the members of the Board are to be nominated by the Minister of Finance of the Republic and the Secretary of State of the United States has the privilege of appointing one.

There is an exchange fund to maintain the gold standard and in order to insure the permanent maintenance of this fund it is provided that whenever it is depleted below a certain point, one-fourth of the customs revenues is to be applied to it month by month until it is again replenished. Each time this process becomes effective it will by so much permanently strengthen the fund.

During the years of political unsettlement recently past, the commerce of Nicaragua suffered from successive inflations of paper currency. A plan of monetary reform which was recommended by F. C. Harrison of London and Charles A. Conant of New York has been placed in operation, the necessary funds being derived through various loans made since 1911 by Brown Brothers & Co., and J. & W. Seligman & Co. The plan provided first of all for the gradual retirement and incineration of all the previous issues of paper money, and during the last two years a total of 37,300,000 pesos of paper money, out of an estimated aggregate of 48,000,000 pesos originally outstanding, has been bought up by the Government (or exchanged for córdobas) and incinerated.

The present currency is on a gold basis. Bank notes are in córdobas (the new standard of value, equivalent to the United States gold dollar) and such of the paper pesos (the former standard) as are still in circulation are received as the equivalent of 8¢ in gold, or at the rate of 12½ pesos to the córdoba, and fractional currency in silver, nickel and copper is also in circulation. The exchange rate has been maintained at the present level since January, 1913.

The financial position of Nicaragua has been fundamentally improved. Efficient collection of customs during the past two years by Colonel Clifford D. Hamm, formerly of the Philippine Revenue Service, has, without change in rates of duty, more than doubled the receipts. The physical condition of the railroad has been entirely changed. In addition, deficits have given place to dividends. the credit facilities afforded by the National Bank, and with the currency, which underlies credit, established on a firm basis, the most serious evils in the finances, both of the Government and of the country, have been remedied. Nicaragua is now in a position to realize the progress in national welfare which has been the aim of the administration of President Díaz. In the meantime the Government has practically the entire use of all revenues, both internal and customs, for its current needs, excepting only the $375,000, annual requirements to meet the charges on the English bonds of 1909.

Proceeds arising from the sale of the Railroad and Bank stock and the Treasury bills have been applied to strengthening of the currency fund and to the payment of existing advances by the National Bank of Nicaragua, Incorporated, and by the bankers. The balance will, it is understood, go to make payments on account to sundry creditors. Should the United States Senate at its regular session this winter ratify the pending treaty with Nicaragua, providing for the establishment of a naval station on the Gulf of Fonseca and granting a perpetual right to build the Nicaragua Canal, the proposed payment to Nicaragua of $3,000,000, provided in the treaty as compensation, would put that Government in a position where it could liquidate the greater part of the local debt and claims accumulated during former periods of political disturbance. The only foreign debt of the Government of Nicaragua, except the $1,060,000 Treasury bills now issued, is the English bonds of 1909 amounting to £1,200,240, and paying interest at 5% and amortized by a cumulative sinking fund of 1% per annum, calculated to retire the issue on or before maturity.

Sin: We received yesterday morning your telegram of the 27th instant, and have accordingly notified the Nicaraguan Government at Managua that the $200,000 referred to in your telegram, out of the $400,000, was subject to its disposal.

We understand, unofficially, that Mr. Cuadra has drawn a check to the order of yourself and Mr. Charles A. Douglas for $100,000 on Brown Brothers & Company which has not yet been presented for payment. When this check is deposited for collection, we beg to advise that it will be necessary to send us instructions to pay it out of the $200,000 now held in reserve, as per your telegram of the 27th instant; also that it will be necessary for Mr. Cuadra to give instructions to the same effect.

Under arrangements made with the representatives of Nicaragua on November 4, the Department now desires you to place the remaining $200,000 at the disposition of the Republic of Nicaragua, $100,000 of which sum has already been allotted to the Nicaraguan Mixed Claims Commission by draft drawn by Mr. Pedro Rafael Cuadra, Minister of Finance of Nicaragua, made payable to the Attorney of Nicaragua.

If it is still necessary for Mr. Cuadra to give instructions to this effect, you will kindly request the same of him before complying with the suggestion made in this letter.

NEW YORK, November 24, 1913.

DEAR MR. LONG: For the information of the State Department we beg to enclose herewith statement which was given to the press on Saturday [November 20] with reference to the Gold Reserve Fund for the redemption of Nicaraguan Bank Notes, etc.

Yours, very truly,

Brown Brothers & Co.

[Inclosure.]

Statement to the press concerning Nicaraguan finances.

The capital stock of the National Bank of Nicaragua has been raised from $100,000 U.S. gold to $300,000 U.S. gold, all of which has been paid in, in cash. Of this amount, 51% is owned by Brown Brothers & Company and J. & W. Seligman & Co., New York; 49% is owned by the Republic of Nicaragua.

The Bank was organized for the twofold purpose of acting as Fiscal Agent of the Government and of doing a strictly commercial business. It operates in two Departments: The Issue Department, which has charge of the issue of the new currency on behalf of the Government, and the Banking Department, which is charged with the ordinary commercial business of the Bank. two Departments are entirely distinct.

In connection with this matter, a short statement of what has been accomplished through the Issue Department of the Bank since its organization and of the present condition of the Issue Department and the Reserve Fund will be of interest.

The Issue Department has, by purchase and in exchange for its córdoba notes and silver cordobas, retired the bulk of the old national currency consisting of paper pesos (billetes) until the amount outstanding on November 15, 1913, had been reduced to a sum estimated at about 9,500,000 pesos, having a total gold value of about $760,000. On that date there were also outstanding $1,570,683 in córdoba notes of National Bank of Nicaragua and córdoba silver coins. This issue of currency (bank notes, silver and billetes) of a gold value of $2,330,000 is exchangeable for drafts on New York on presentation at the counter of the Issue Department. The Issue Department, on November 15th held in the Property of the Issue Department, and the counter of the Issue Department. ber 15th, held in its Reserve Fund the sum of $932,693 U. S. gold (equal to 40% of the outstanding currency). Of this, the sum of $829,100 was on deposits in, or in transit to, New York as special deposit to meet any drafts of the Issue Department that may be drawn for the purpose of redeeming Nicaragua currency. This Reserve Fund can not be used by the Bank in its commercial business; the balance, $103,590, consists of the bullion value of the silver coins. It will thus be seen that there are ample reserves for redemption of outstanding bank notes, silver and billetes. As additional currency is from time to time required by the expanding commerce of the country, that currency will be issued by the Bank and simultaneously there will be added to the Reserve Fund, by deposits in New York or London, an amount equal to the new currency so issued. As additional bank notes are thus from time to time put out, the Reserve Fund will be correspondingly strengthened and will bear a progressively higher relation to the total amount of currency issued. The Reserve Fund will be further increased by interest and commissions earned.

In order further to strengthen the Reserve Fund, provision has been made that in the very unlikely contingency of the Fund at any time declining to $100,000 U. S. Gold, there shall be added thereto 25% of the Customs Revenue until the Fund amounts to $200,000 and this reinforcement of the Fund will be repeated as often as the Fund shall so decline in amount. Any such additions from Customs Revenues are to be permanent additions to the Fund. The present arrangements thus put the National currency of Nicaragua on an abundantly safe permanent basis.

The value of the córdoba is equal to $1 U. S. Gold. The value of the old peso is equal to 8c U. S. Gold.

File No. 817.51/613.

The Nicaraguan Minister of Finance to the Minister of Nicaragua at Washington.

[Memorandum—Summary—Translation.1]

There seems to exist in Washington an erroneous idea of the political and economic situation of Nicaragua.

As the loan secured is to be employed preferably in payment of the indebtedness to the bankers, increasing the capital of the [National] Bank, and monetary conversion, with $100,000 for the Mixed Commission, there will remain for the use of the Government only $640,000 to cover urgent administration expenses embracing salaries, liquor and tobacco bonds, maize imported from Salvador during the revolution at a cost of $35,000, payments to Cartago Court and Central American Bureau, and other expenses entailed by agreements.

This explains the insistence that no reserve be made for the account of the Mixed Commission, and you can easily understand what will happen if $300,000 more is drawn for this Commission, which is not sitting at present.

As evidence of the economic crisis in the country, note is made of the fact that all commercial houses in Granada and other sections are on strike; that all are suffering from loss of credit and cannot make importations, which in turn lowers our customs receipts and prolongs the economic crisis.

To meet this crisis the Government wishes to advance $500,000 which is not possible if $100,000 should be diverted for the Commis-

¹The original was shown to the Chief of the Division of Latin-American Affairs of the Department of State; the translation of the summary was read to the Secretary of State and filed December 13, 1913; it is not dated.

The purpose of the Department of State to set apart 25% or 20% of the customs receipts for the Mixed Commission would be disastrous. The present budget as passed shows a deficit of $170,000 which, with a decrease of imports, will probably amount to not less than $1,000,000. If a reduction of 25% is made you can readily judge whether the work of the administration can be carried on during the present year.

You may assure Mr. Bryan that all financial matters have been settled through the Bank and all claims submitted to the Mixed Commission, those that have been paid directly by the Foreign Minister having been based on the rulings of the Commission.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, December 5, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to relate some facts concerning the present status of the 4th of July incident.

Captain Barber, Chief of the Canal Zone Police, gives it as his opinion that Leonidas Pretelt, Comandante of the Panaman National Police, has been willing to do as much as possible towards the detection and apprehension of the guilty policemen, but that he is only actually doing as much in that direction as the Administration allows him to do.

While I have no definite knowledge I have the feeling that the Administration is not really exerting itself but is hoping that the passage of time will in some way enable them to wriggle out of the responsibility of satisfying the demands of the United States in adjustment of the 4th of July affair. I therefore, take every opportunity of reminding the Foreign Office that the expectation of the American Government has not lessened. Accordingly I have made use of the reception of instruction of November 23rd, 1912,3 to address a note to the Minister of Foreign Affairs mentioning the sentiment expressed in the above instruction.

The Secretary of State to the American Minister.

No. 98.7

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 9, 1913.

Sir: Referring to Mr. Andrews' No. 250 of November 20 last, the Department desires you to take up again with the Foreign Office the question of the adjustment of the matters growing out of the disturbances in Panama on July 4 last, in which two American citizens lost their lives and many other American citizens were more or less seriously injured.

You will say that the Department has given careful consideration to the testimony collected by the Panaman authorities with regard to this affair. As a result of this consideration and a comparison of this testimony with the great mass of evidence collected by the representatives of the United States Government in Panama, the Department has come to the conclusion that such Panaman testimony as was not given by interested policemen and other guilty participants in the affair was obtained through force and intimidation; indeed, the Department is in possession of information showing that these practices obtained in the collection of this evidence.

The witnesses whose testimony was secured by the Panaman authorities aside from those classes before mentioned are mainly inmates of the disorderly houses located in the section where the disturbances occurred, and many of these people also gave evidence before the United States representatives which is largely at variance with that which they are reported as having given in the course of the Panaman investigation. On this point it is interesting to note that one of these persons, Clara Bernard, in an affidavit made before the police authorities of the Canal Zone stated that when her evidence in regard to this affair was obtained by Señor Quijano the latter omitted everything which she said detrimental to the police; while another of these persons, Becky Katz, states in an affidavit that she was warned by the police to make no statement favorable to the Americans.

The Department considers therefore that it is entirely warranted in declaring its belief that the testimony supplied by the former administration of Panama with relation to this affair is unworthy of credence so far as it attempts to absolve the Panaman police from guilty responsibility for the killing and wounding of American citizens.

However, it is abundantly shown by that very testimony that the police fired revolvers and rifles at American citizens during the progress of this affray and that Panaman civilians pursued the Americans with sticks, stones and clubs.

Moreover, as showing the animus of the police and their superior officers, it is worthy of great note that Eleuterio Solano, who was assistant desk officer at police headquarters on July 4 last, has furnished an affidavit to the representatives of the United States in which he says that Lieutenant Vergara, the desk officer, upon receiving reports of the disturbances in question sent by the sergeant in charge of the Cocoa Grove station, replied by orders to the latter to shoot and kill some Americans. Furthermore, evidence given by

PANAMA. 1071

Rafael Alzamora and A. Mendoza before the representatives of the United States is to the effect that they heard policemen upon leaving the station to go to the scene of the trouble say they were going to kill "gringos."

The United States Government is not to be understood as denying that there was some disorderly conduct on the part of the American citizens in the Cocoa Grove district on July 4 last, but it does not appear that such disorder was directly dangerous to the life of any person. On the other hand, the evidence obtained by the representatives of the United States not only from soldiers and marines and Americans generally but from Panamans and persons of other nationalities clearly and overwhelmingly establishes that on the occasion in question the police of Panama virtually ran amuck, shooting and stabbing indiscriminately.

Thus the death of the American civilian Ralph W. Davis, who had taken no part in the affray, is shown to have been caused by a bayonet thrust through him by a Panaman policeman from whose attack, while Davis was peacefully seated in a bar-room, the latter had endeavored to seek refuge behind a piece of furniture.

To cite another instance, it may be said that the evidence in regard to the severe wounding of the American civilian John Young, a non-participant in the disturbances, shows that he was walking peacefully with a friend when they were fired upon by five or six Panaman policeman and Young received three bullet wounds in the head.

The evidence further shows that a soldier who had thrown himself upon his back was fired at and beaten by a policeman standing over him; that another soldier who knelt and begged for mercy was ruthlessly beaten; that another American citizen dangerously wounded with a compound fracture of the thigh was brutally beaten to make him walk and then thrown roughly in a carriage.

You will therefore renew the insistence of the United States Government upon the bases of adjustment set forth in the Department's telegram of September 24 last ¹ and say that the United States Government expects immediate compliance therewith.

In order to assist the Panaman Government in establishing the identity of some of the guilty policemen (which, you will add, should not be a difficult task) you will state that the evidence in the possession of the Department indicates that the number of the policeman who fired the first shot in the affray appears to have been 360; that policeman Alberto Pena knocked down and kicked an American soldier; and that policeman Florencio Casiano, No. 315, afterwards shot the same soldier through the leg with a rifle. Witnesses who have testified before the United States representatives upon these points are Gerardo Brown, Bertin Mina, Juan Cortez, Antigua Cortes, all Panamans.

The Department is also in possession of information imparted on September 3d last to Inspector Belknap of the Canal Zone Police by Juan B. Wellington, Panaman policeman No. 343, to the effect that the latter's brother, also a policeman, was at the Cocoa Grove station on the evening of July 4th last when he saw policeman Mariano Carabati, then No. 531, come into the station with a bayonet affixed to a rifle covered with blood and badly bent. Juan B. Wellington further stated that his brother could testify that Carabati had killed the above-mentioned American Ralph W. Davis, and could identify another policeman (Domingo Moreno, present No. 210, No. on July 4th last 532?) who was present when Carabati committed this murder. Wellington added that on July 6th or 7th last Carabati's number was changed to 110, and that about August 1st he was discharged but still remained in Panama City.

American Legation, Panama, Feb. 1, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your instructions No. 96 of December 27th and No. 98 of January 9th last, the former directing me to use my discretion in the matter of acceding to the request of the Panaman Minister for Foreign Affairs for a copy of the testimony taken by American officials bearing upon the riot between Americans and Panaman policemen on July 4th last, and the latter directing me to make a communication to the Minister for Foreign Affairs relative to this testimony collected by the Panaman Government.

Since receiving your former instruction I have given serious consideration to the question of furnishing the copy desired, consulting with Mr. Belknap, Assistant Chief of the Zone Police, in the absence of Captain Barber, Chief of the Zone Police; Colonel Greene, Commanding the 10th United States Infantry Regiment; Major Butler, Commanding the Marine Battalion; and Colonel Hodges, Acting Chief Engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission. All these gentlemen expressed their willingness that copies of the testimony taken by their subordinates should be given to the Panaman Government.

Captain Barber's opinion is similar to my own and I have now decided, in view of the discretion given me, to send a copy of all our testimony to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs. This copy I am now having made and it will probably be finished and transmitted on the 3rd instant. In reaching this decision I am not unaware that this testimony may possibly be misused either for political purposes or simply in an effort to discredit it. On the other hand in view of the fact that the Panaman Government have already furnished us with a copy of their testimony, and of the repeated requests to me of both President Porras and Señor Lefevre and the assurances of both that the Panaman Government desires this testimony to assist in an earnest effort to find out and punish the guilty and for no other purpose whatever, it is difficult to refuse it without furnishing ground for allegations on their part of lack of confidence and failure to give proper assistance. I also believe that although the Panaman Government sees no advantage for itself, and perhaps the reverse, in endeavoring to find and punish the guilty in this affair, yet it desires greatly to avoid any appearance of failing in its duties toward us. By constantly keeping these duties before it, I trust that it will be possible to secure the proper results. Moreover it seems clear not only that our testimony will be of very substantial assistance but that without it it would probably be impossible for the Panaman Government to secure full information especially as so many of the witnesses are Americans living in the Zone, soldiers, marines and civilians, whose testimony would be extremely difficult for it to obtain.

As safeguards in addition to the assurances already mentioned, President Porras and Señor Lefevre have agreed willingly to allow a representative of the Legation to be present at the investigation and take notes, and General Pretelt has agreed to have all the Panaman witnesses make new affidavits before him in the presence of Mr. Belknap, using the old ones to refresh their memories. this way it is hoped to avoid the possibility of these witnesses varying their testimony.

Regarding your instruction No. 98, I have taken the liberty of delaying to make the communication therein in order to do so at the same time that I transmitted our complete testimony.

I trust that through our testimony, the communication which I am now addressing from the Department and my own continued efforts a satisfactory result may finally be obtained. It seems entirely clear that notwithstanding the absence of any records the present Administration with the knowledge of General Pretelt at hand could readily have found the guilty had it really desired to do so.

I may add that in prosecuting this investigation Señor Arjona is assisted by the Fiscal (District Attorney) of the Panama Circuit, Señor Eusebio A. Morales, jr., and that the Court before which the investigation is taking place is the Panaman Circuit Court of which Dr. T. Demóstenes Arosemena is the Judge. Señor Morales is a friend of the present Administration and Señor Arosemena of the last when he was Governor of Colon Province.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 313 of February 1st last, relative to my furnishing the Panaman Government with a copy of the testimony taken by American officials bearing upon the riot between Americans and Panaman policemen on July 4th last, I have the honor to inform you that in accordance with the arrangement made by me with General Pretelt, Chief of the Panaman Police, the important Panaman witnesses Leonidas Olarte, Juan Cortez, Antigua Cortés, Eleuterio Solano, Bertin Mina and Gerardo Brown recently made before him new affidavits confirming the affidavits formerly made by them before the Zone Police during August last, and that in them they re-affirmed all their former statements. These confirmations, which I believe to be important in order to avoid the possibility of these men varying their former testimony when brought before the Judge, have now been sent to Señor Arjona, the Attorney General, who is in charge of this investigation.

In my note transmitting our testimony to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, I stated that my Government in thus acceding to the desires of the Panaman Government gave a proof of its appreciation of and confidence in the assurance given by the Panaman Government of its determination to identify and properly punish those responsible for the killing and wounding of American citizens on this occasion, it being of course understood that this testimony would be used exclusively for this purpose. On the same date I addressed another note to Señor Lefevre, in which I made the communication which I was desired to make by your instruction No. 98 of January 9th last. I presented both notes personally to Señor Lefevre, again laying stress upon the extremely serious character of this affair and my Government's expectation that the guilty would now promptly be brought to justice.

Since then Señor Lefevre has informed me that both he and President Porras had read our testimony and had been greatly impressed by it, both on account of its completeness and the far greater seriousness of the affair which it showed than they had before realized. Señor Lefevre stated that President Porras had directed him to inform me that no efforts would be spared for the execution of entire justice.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 349 of March 4th last, I have the honor to inform you that I have continued to keep myself as fully advised as possible regarding the progress of the Panaman Government's investigation of the riot between Americans and Panaman policemen which occurred on July 4th last. Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, has informed me that immediately upon receiving my note enclosing copies of our testimony he began personally to translate these into Spanish. Later he transferred this work to the interpreter of the Foreign Office. After five weeks I learned that the translation was still far from completed and accordingly urged Señor Lefevre to expedite the work by dividing it between two translators. This was done and about a month later I was informed by Señor Lefevre that the translation of all the testimony which he considered to be of any importance had been completed and sent to the Attorney General (Procurador de la Nacion) and District Attorney (Fiscal del Distrito) for study and consideration. Another long delay then ensued and in a further effort to expedite the proceedings I addressed on the 3rd instant a note to Señor Lefevre inquiring, for the information of my Government, what steps had already been taken by the Panaman Government with a view to securing the adequate punishment of the persons criminally liable in this affair.

On the following day Señor Lefevre requested me to call at the Foreign Office where I found Dr. Demosthenes Arosemena, the Judge of the Superior Court making the investigation, with him. Señor Lefevre then informed me that our testimony had now been sent to Judge Arosemena who desired to proceed immediately with the case and suggested that I should cause all our witnesses to present themselves before him in groups of five each morning and five each afternoon to sign and swear to the affidavits formerly made by them. This procedure was in order to make these affidavits admissible in evidence according to the Panaman law. I replied that I would do everything possible to meet the Judge's wishes whereupon Judge Arosemena assured me of his desire to make the most thorough investigation and bring the guilty to justice.

Accordingly I have arranged so that from the 8th instant our witnesses have appeared before Judge Arosemena who in all cases has had them sign and swear to their former affidavits and has further questioned them. These questions have on several occasions brought out new facts of some importance. According to my agreement with Señor Lefevre (Despatch No. 313 of February 1st last) Mr. Wicker, the Secretary of the Legation, has accompanied our witnesses and been present during their entire examination, taking brief notes of them.

Although from the foregoing it will be seen that some progress has been made in this case, and although both President Porras and Señor Lefevre frequently assure me of their firm determination to discover the guilty and punish them, I do not believe that the Panaman Government is really desirous of doing more than it feels to be necessary in order to enable it to escape from possible charges of failure to take proper action made by our Government. As none of the persons injured in this case was a Panaman, it feels little interest in this matter, while on the other hand it fears that this investigation, if leading to trials and convictions, may stir up animosities which may prove to be to the political disadvantage of the members of the Government.

In this connection I may add that Señor Julio Quijano, the Chief of the Panaman police at the time of this occurrence, who fied to Guayaquil to escape from dismissal upon the demand of the Department of State,1 returned to Panama a few days ago.

No. 467.]

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, June 9, 1913.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 443 of May 14th last, relative to the investigation now being made by the Judge of the Superior Court of Panama into the disturbance which took place at Cocoa Grove, Panama, on July 4th last I have the honor to inform you that nearly all the American witnesses and a number of the Panaman witnesses, whose testimony was furnished by the Legation to the Panaman Government, have now appeared before the Judge who has caused them to sign and swear to their former affidavits and statements. This the witnesses have readily done in all cases, some of them being also cross-examined by the Judge. This cross-examination has occasionally brought out some new facts of importance. Mr. Wicker, Secretary of the Legation, has been present during all the examinations of these witnesses and reports that the attitude of Judge Arosemena and Judge Guardia, who has now temporarily replaced him on account of his illness, has appeared to be satisfactory. Nevertheless as Judge Guardia was the Judge who conducted the extraordinarily partial investigation into this matter made by order of the Arosemena Administration, his acting as Judge in the present investigation seems most improper. I have accordingly taken occasion to intimate this strongly both to President Porras and to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, both of whom stated that they agreed with me entirely but that as Judge Guardia was the first substitute Judge (Suplante) in Judge Arosemena's absence he was obliged by law to take his place. They further stated that Judge Arosemena would return to his duties in about two weeks and that if Judge Guardia failed in any way to do justice, the case would be brought before the Supreme Court in which the majority of the Judges were friendly to the Administration. I replied that I must nevertheless strongly urge that Judge Guardia should not conduct the investigation further and reminded President Porras and Señor Lefevre of the responsibility toward our Government which the Panaman Government would incur if this Judge should continue to [The] President and Señor Lefevre finally stated that every effort would be made to have Judge Guardia replaced in the investigation. I have also now addressed a note to Señor Lefevre formally stating the above-mentioned objections against this Judge and the Panaman Government's responsibility in allowing him to act further.

I have also taken occasion to express some disappointment to President Porras and Señor Lefevre that although strong testimony against certain ex-policemen was now in evidence, no arrests had been made or criminal prosecutions begun. Both assured me that the ex-policemen in question were being watched and could not leave the country. Before beginning these precautions, however, they considered that it would be desirable to complete the investigation or at all events proceed with it further than at present. President Porras and Señor Lefevre reiterated with the greatest earnestness their strong determination to find and punish the guilty in this affair, which President Porras stated he considered necessary for the honor of his country.

In my despatch No. 443 above mentioned, I have referred to the fact that a number of our witnesses, some at least of whose testimony appears to be of importance (as that of George T. Stokes and Isaac J. Thomas, an ex-marine private), are no longer on the Isthmus and so are unable to sign and swear to their affidavits before the Panaman Judge as required by the Panaman law. I have invited Señor Lefevre's attention to this matter in a note, to which I have received a reply stating that he had requested the Superior Judge to issue letters rogatory to secure the testimony of these witnesses.

I have recently received from Captain Barber, Chief of the Zone Police, what purports to be an original sheet giving the numbers and duties of all the Panaman policemen on duty on July 4th last. Captain Barber advises me that this sheet was handed to him by General Pretelt, Chief of the Panaman Police, who informed him that he was entirely willing that it should be transmitted to the Panaman Government and also that he was willing to furnish to the Government the names of all the policemen whose numbers appear on this sheet, which I have transmitted to Señor Lefevre with a note informing him of its origin and of General Pretelt's readiness to give the names of these policemen. This evidence should be of very material assistance in the investigation.

Sir: The Department has received Mr. Dodge's No. 467 of the 9th instant, reporting concerning the progress of the investigation which is being made by the Panaman Government into the disturbances at Cocoa Grove, Panama, on July 4 last, in which certain Americans were killed and wounded.

The Department approves Mr. Dodge's protest made to the Government of Panama against the further participation of Judge Guardia in the case, and, referring to the Minister's statement that the Foreign Office had decided to send to the Panaman Minister in this city letters rogatory for the examination of foreign witnesses, I have to say that the Department will be glad to assist the Panaman Minister in ascertaining the desired addresses of any such witnesses.

You will, however, inform the Foreign Office that the Department considers that in view of the great mass of testimony which has already been submitted in this case little time should be spent in obtaining evidence from witnesses who are absent from Panama and whose testimony would be very largely cumulative.

Sir: With reference to the disturbances which took place in the city of Panama on July 4, 1912, I have the honor to inform you that I have been informed by Señor Lefevre, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that the Panaman Government has already arrested seven officers of the police force who are believed to have been concerned in the riot, and is pursuing an investigation, a report upon which has been promised to me within a very short time.

In view of the noticeable delay on the part of the Panaman Government in pursuing this matter I have vigorously urged with Señor Lefevre that it be given immediate attention and that the report be prepared as quickly as possible setting forth the attitude and proposed action of the Panaman Government in adjusting this affair along the lines indicated by the Department.

Sir: The Department has received your No. 498 of the 11th ultimo. You will state to the Foreign Office, in relation to the investigation of the disturbances which took place at Coco Grove on July 4, 1912, that the United States Government has exercised a great amount of patience in regard to this affair, but that the long and apparently needless delay which has occurred in the pursuit of the investigation by the Panaman Government has served to arouse suspicions that it is not conducting this investigation with any degree of earnestness. The United States Government has, therefore, to request that a report of such investigation as has been made be immediately transmitted to the Legation together with a statement showing what action the Government of Panama proposes to take with relation to all features of the case, including the indemnity which is due to various American citizens who received injuries during the affair mentioned.

Sir: Supplementing my despatch No. 15 of October 29, 1913, in which I refer to the fact that the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Panama, had assured me that the incident of the 4th of July, 1912, at Cocoa Grove district, Panama, in which one American was killed and certain others wounded, was being given attention, I have the honor to inform the Department that I have insistently urged upon the Secretary of Foreign Affairs from time to time the importance of this pending matter and insisted on a definite and satisfactory reply from his Government to our demands in this case. He has declared that his Government felt it most necessary to get returned the letters rogatory heretofore sent by his Government for the purpose of obtaining the testimony of various witnesses in this matter, one particularly from Brazil, and that the former Minister here, my predecessor, had expressed his desire that this testimony be in the files before final action in the case.

I expressed to him my opinion that this testimony was of a cumulative character and not absolutely necessary in consideration of the merits of the case and that there had been great patience already shown by our Government in its dealings with the Panaman Government regarding this matter.

The Secretary of Foreign Affairs has now requested me to withhold for the time being a Foreign Office note from this Legation regarding this matter, which I informed him I should have to draft in rather vigorous terms, and has assured me that he is discussing the matter with various officials of his Government for the purpose of replying to our Government in a manner calculated to bring about a satisfactory settlement of our demands.

I shall continue to press this matter and the Department will be

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, December 22, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: Referring again to the occurrence in this city on the 4th of July, 1912, in the restricted district known as Cocoa Grove, in which one American citizen was killed and several others wounded by the Panaman police, I have the honor to communicate by this note what I have several times already communicated verbally; that my Government instructs me to say that the large patience it has exercised in this matter has been subjected to such continued strain by your excellency's Government, that it has almost become exhausted.

The files in this case in your excellency's office set forth in detail the demands of my Government in this matter and further exhibit the persistency with which compliance with same has been insisted on. It was one of the first things taken up by me with your excellency promptly upon assuming the duties of my post here and ever since has continued to be a matter of urging on my part with your excellency and the importance of a prompt and gratifying settlement of the whole affair has been already pointed out.

I have been given assurances each time by your excellency that all possible dispatch was being employed to bring these negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion with my Government, and at your excellency's request a Foreign Office note from this Legation regarding this matter has been held in abeyance until now.

The very definite and determined attitude of my Government has been presented in the repeated communications to your excellency's Government respecting this cruel and criminal wounding and taking of life by men occupying official position under one of your branches of Government and any rehearsal would be more than unnecessary.

It is now nearly a year and a half since the enactment of this tragedy.

In addition to the permanent force of officials of eminent ability and worth that our great Canal will demand upon its completion, now near, and the body of skilled and high grade employees necessary under them, it is understood that there is to be stationed in the neighboring Zone a large body of soldiers and marines some of whom, as your excellency knows, are already on the way here.

The proximity of all these representatives of my Government to the Republic of Panama and your chief and capital city can but be a source of considerable revenue and it is believed may be materially beneficial in other ways to your excellency's country. The desirability of pleasant feelings on their part toward your people and particularly on the part of the soldiers and marines, on account of the connection of the shocking events of this cocurrence with men of their rank, must seem clearly apparent.

I shall indulge the hope of a prompt fulfillment by your excellency's Government in this distressing affair of what has resolved itself far beyond hope and into expectancy by reason of the amount of incontrovertible proof, that has made the position taken by my Government unquestionable, and respectfully ask an undelayed response to that end.

I have just obtained copy of contract signed a few days ago by the Panaman Government with Basil Barnes [Burns] Duncan, an American residing here, which now requires approval of Assembly to become law, providing for construction within five years of a railway starting from west side of mouth of Chagres River and running more or less in southwest direction at least fifty kilometers. cessionaire may construct at any time such branches of such length and direction as he may consider necessary to the enterprise, previously requesting consent of Executive. He may establish wharves at Chagres and other places which he may consider suitable. Authorization to be granted in accordance with Law 82 of 1904 and he shall execute at his expense necessary works at Chagres or another port to allow entry of larger ships. Government grants all necessary Government land including strip of fifty meters for main line and three hundred hectares per kilometer of main line in alternate sections; also right to operate necessary telegraph lines. Concessionaire must deposit $10,000 guaranty, allow connections to other railways and allow Government to use railway whenever it considers it to be desirable. He surrenders right to make diplomatic claim and agrees to pay percentage of receipts after ten years. Concession for seventy-five years, Government reserving the right to purchase main line after thirty years. AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, January 8, 1913.

Sir: Referring to my telegram of January 8, I have the honor to enclose herewith the text of this contract as furnished to me by Señor

I became aware by chance a few days ago that some railway contract of this nature had just been signed but notwithstanding frequent requests I was unable to secure a copy of it until late last evening. Upon examining this contract it appeared to me that its nature and provisions made it one which the Department would desire to have an opportunity of considering before it became law notwithstanding that the nominal concessionaire is an American; for, especially, the concessionaire is to construct a railway to start from a point a very short distance from the Atlantic entrance of the Canal; the length of line which he is allowed to build is entirely left to his discretion, providing he builds at least 50 kilometers; he is also allowed to construct as many branches as he likes at any time and running in any direction; he is to establish wharves at various places near the Canal and to improve the mouth of the Chagres River so that it can be entered by large ships, etc. Certain provisions of the contract appear favorably, as the system of land grants in sections, alternately. for the Government and the concessionaire; the fact that the concessionaire must, under reasonable conditions, allow connections with other railways (as the Pan-American) and allows the Panaman Government to use the line whenever it considers this desirable; and the provision that the contract requires the Government's consent to be assigned and cannot in any case be assigned to a foreign Government.

I accordingly called this morning upon President Porras and after stating my opinion as above, I requested him to delay further action upon this contract until I had been able to consult my Government. I added that although the Department's instruction No. 89 of September 20, 1911, which I had especially brought to his attention in August last, was particularly written in view of a railway contract with foreigners, it seemed to me to apply also to the present case. President Porras replied that, as he had read this instruction, it appeared to apply only to railway contracts made with foreigners but that nevertheless if I desired it, he would be happy immediately to stop further proceedings until I had had an opportunity of consulting my Government as I desired. He wished me however to address my request in writing to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, in order that he might justify his action. This I ageed to do and I enclose a copy of my note 2 to Señor Lefevre. President Porras then said that I had made this request at the right moment, as he had been about to send the contract to the Assembly for its approval.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 281 of the 8th instant, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Basil Burns Duncan, the concessionaire of the railway contract therein mentioned, has since then called upon me. He inquired as to the action taken by me which I fully explained to him, giving him my reasons as stated in my despatch No. 281 referred to. Mr. Duncan replied that he understood fully my reasons and had always understood this to be the attitude of the American Government which he thought perfectly reasonable. He was glad to have the Department of State examine his contract and as a patriotic American did not wish to do anything which might be disapproved by his Government.

In reply to my questions, he stated that he alone was interested in this contract at present but that he expected to interest certain persons in the United States. He expected to form an American corporation, the control of which would remain in the United States where also any stock and bonds which may be issued would be sold. It would be a strictly American enterprise. His plan was to construct the main line in a westerly direction, how far he could not now tell. Its purpose was to open up the country to sugar, cocoa,

Since Mr. Duncan's call I have had a conversation with Mr. Mc-Kay, the manager of the United Fruit Company's plantations at Bocas del Toro, who is now temporarily here. Mr. McKay informed me confidentially that Mr. Duncan had spoken to him about his concession and that he had told him that the United Fruit Company would be glad to look into the concession when it had been definitely granted. Mr. McKay also confidentially informed me that he believed that the only other person now interested with Mr. Duncan was a Señor Florencio Harmodio Arosemena A., a Panaman of some property and an excellent engineer educated in Paris who had formerly been in the employ of the United Fruit Company. He added that Mr. Duncan was intending to construct his line of the same guage as the United Fruit Company's lines in Bocas.

In reply to my inquiry as to whether there was any truth in the report which I had heard that the United Fruit Company was considering the construction of a railway from Puerto Limon, Costa Rica, to Bocas del Toro, Mr. McKay stated that the United Fruit Company was not considering such a line but that, as I was probably aware, Mr. Minor C. Keith had a strong desire, if he lived long enough, to complete the Pan-American Railway as far as Panama City. The Panaman section of this line he thought would presumably follow the Atlantic coast.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that the American Minister at Panama reports to the Department under date of January 8th that an American citizen, Mr. Basil Barnes [Burns] Duncan, residing on the Isthmus, has signed a contract with the Minister of Public Works of the Republic of Panama for the construction of a railroad starting at the west side of the Chagres river, near its mouth, and that the concessionaire has also by the contract a right to build such branch railroads as the Government of Panama may approve.

Minister Dodge has taken this matter up with the Panaman Government and has been assured that before legislative approval of the contract was had the Government of the United States would be given an opportunity to examine it.

I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of Mr. Dodge's despatch No. 281, together with a copy of its enclosures, for your information, and I have the honor to request that the War Department examine this contract with a view to ascertaining and informing this Department with regard to its desirability from a strategic viewpoint. As was done in the case of the Santiago-Agua Dulce Railway, it might also be well to submit the contract to a technical board in order that its feasibility and merit as a railroad enterprise may be examined and reported on by the board.

The Minister of Panama has informed the Department that his Government is most anxious, if possible, to have a decision in this matter prior to the adjournment of the present session of the Legislature, which is due to expire about the end of the month, but which will probably be prolonged for some little time thereafter.

In view of the Minister's recommendation, I have the honor to request that appropriate instructions issue from your Department in order that the American Minister as chairman, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission to be designated by the chairman thereof, and the Chief Engineer of the Panama Railroad may meet to pass upon the technical merits of this project and be requested to report at their earliest possible convenience. Instructions are being issued to the American Minister in this sense, who is desirous of reaching an early conclusion in view of the shortness of the time that the Panaman Assembly has to remain in session.

Report of a board appointed by the Secretaries of State and War to pass upon the technical merits of a contract for the construction of a railway signed by the Panaman Secretary of Public Works and Mr. Basil Burns Duncan and approved by the President of Panama on December 30, 1912.

In accordance with the telegraphic instructions of January 21 and 23, 1913, of the Secretaries of State and War, a Board composed of the American Minister at Panama, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Chief Engineer of the Panama Railroad met at the American Legation in the city of Panama, at 8:15 a. m., on January 27, 1913, to pass upon the technical merits of a proposed railway contract (in pursuance with the instructions of the above-mentioned telegram). The Board was composed of the following members: the Hon. Percival Dodge, American Minister, Chairman; Lieut. Col. D. D. Gaillard, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., (designated by the Chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission) and Lieut. Frederick Mears, U. S. A., Chief Engineer of the Panama Railroad.

The Board carefully considered the said proposed Contract No. 70, between Señor Ramón F. Acevedo, Secretary of Public Works, on the one part, and Mr. Basil Burns Duncan on the other part, which contract was signed on the 30th of December, 1912, by the aforesaid Secretary of Public Works and Mr. Basil Acknowledged by the Department February 11, with the addition that a copy of the despatch and inclosure had been sent to the Secretary of War for his comment.

This report is not dated.

1089 PANAMA.

Burns Duncan and approved on the same date by the President of the Republic

The Board finds it impracticable to discuss properly the technical merits of the proposed contract for the reason that neither the location of the main line of the proposed railroad nor the location of any of its branches is shown either in the text or by accompanying maps, Art. 1 of the contract simply specifying that the railroad shall start from the mouth of the Chagres River on the west bank of the same river and run in a direction more or less southwest and that the length of the main line shall be of at least fifty kilometers. This indefinite description is further modified by the statement that the general direction may be changed by the topographic conditions, nor are there any definite stipulations as to the number of tracks, or limiting grade or degree of curvature. The method of construction is not mentioned, nor is any definite terminal point given at the vaguely located southwest extremity of the line.

The contract contains no stipulations as to the quantity or character of the rolling stock to be provided for the operation of said road, nor in regard to station buildings, water tanks, etc., nor does it provide for the submission to the Government of any maps, profiles or plans until eighteen months after the approval of the contract by the National Assembly (Article 13, Para. 2).

So far as the Board has been able to ascertain, there would be little or no business for such a railroad at present in the general locality mentioned and it is therefore presumed that the sole purpose of the project is the exploitation and development of the Government lands as the various sections of the railroad are completed.

The Board is further of the opinion that the sums mentioned in Article 13. Paragraph 4, to be deposited by the contractor are inadequate to properly protect the Government in a contract of this nature, which is so indefinite and where so many necessary details are lacking.

The Board is of the opinion that to comply properly with the requirements of Art. 5, Page 2, would require the expenditure of a sum largely in excess of that needed for the construction of the proposed railroad alone. The Board also notes that no description of the character of the works proposed for the improvement of the mouth of the Chagres River is submitted, as should be done, for the information and protection of the Government.

The Board believes it proper to invite the attention of officials of the War Department to the fact that the proposed terminus of the railroad at the mouth of the Chagres River will be but a few hundred feet from the boundary of the Canal Zone and will afford additional facilities to enable a hostile force to land on the coast to the southwest of this terminus and reach, by means of the railroad and the Chagres River, the locks and dam at Gatún.

The Board has no assurances from evidence furnished it that the contractor possesses the financial resources requisite for the proper prosecution of the work of constructing the railroad. It bases this opinion to a large extent upon the fact that he took over a contract in December, 1910, between Lewellyn Swain and the Isthmian Canal Commission (see page 158, Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912) for the excavation of certain material in the Canal Prison aggregating, as was estimated, 108,992 cubic yards at 211¢ per cubic yard, and on May 16, 1912, signified his inability to complete the contract for lack of financial resources. total amount involved in the contract was less than $25,000 and as monthly payments on same were made for a period of sixteen months, it will be seen that the amount of capital required for this contract was not large.

In order that a project of the nature of that proposed should be intelligently considered as to its technical merits it would be necessary to have definite maps, plans and profiles, accompanied by complete specifications for the construction and final acceptance of the railroad, with accurate description of the rolling stock, water stations, station buildings, etc.

In order to permit any contractor to bid intelligently on a project of this character the Board believes it essential that some means should be provided by which the topographic features of the area in question could be properly determined in advance of the drawing of a contract.

In view of the foregoing the Board has the honor to recommend that this contract be not approved.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 302 of the 27th instant, relative to Mr. Basil Burns Duncan's railway contract, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Duncan called upon me on the following day and handed me a letter of which the following is a copy:

> LAS CASCADAS, C. Z., January 27, 1913.

To the Technical Board appointed to examine the Chagres Railroad Contract. Panama.

Gentlemen: In the knowledge that you are about to examine, in behalf of the American Government, contract No. 70, drawn up between the Panama Government and myself for the construction of the Chagres Railroad with the exclusive object of developing that part of the country, I desire to inform you that I am willing to alter or suppress any clause in the said contract which may be found to conflict with the interests of the United States.

I trust, therefore, that you will kindly take note of this declaration before coming to any resolution which may be contrary to the carrying out of the

Yours very respectfully,

B. Burns Duncan.

In reply to his earnest request I then informed Mr. Duncan of the general tenor of the technical Commission's report at which he expressed some disappointment, repeating his willingness to alter his contract in any way desired. He further requested that the Department's decision might be expedited so far as possible as, if he was unable to submit his contract to the present Assembly, he would be obliged to wait for two years until the next session of the Assembly. I assured Mr. Duncan that the Department would not delay its decision any longer than was absolutely necessary. Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, has now informed me that there must have been some mistake in President Porras' statement to me on January 8th to the effect that this contract had not then been sent to the Assembly, since it had actually been sent a few days before. Señor Lefevre added that in compliance with my request further proceedings upon it by the Assembly had been postponed pending the receipt from me of information as to the Department's desires.

This feature and the branch roads that are stipulated are objectionable from military standpoint. The contract also interferes with rights of the Panama Bailroad.

GOETHALS.

From this you will perceive that the Duncan contract as it stands is considered objectionable from strategic and other standpoints, and you will therefore direct an appropriate communication to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, referring to the Legation's action on Department's instruction to your Legation of September 20, 1911, and say that under the circumstances this Government considers that the contract should not be permitted to become effective by the Panaman Government.

You will at the same time say that this Government, possessing every desire to assist the Government of Panama in the promotion of the growth, development, and welfare of that Republic, would be glad to approve this contract if it were possible to have it so amended as to meet the views its duty imposes upon this Government and the objections which have been made thereto by your commission and by Colonel George W. Goethals, or to approve any other railroad contract which will not be detrimental to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal, matters in which the two Governments should take an equal interest, and which promises to bring about the proper development of the resources of Panama.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 26, 1913.

I have received your letters of the 11th and 12th instant, requesting the opinion of this Department upon the proposed Duncan concession for a railroad in the Republic of Panama.

I enclose memorandum from the Chief of Staff upon the subject, which is self-explanatory.

This contract would not only seriously interfere with the military problems involved in the defense of the Canal Zone, but it is believed would interfere with the rights which the Panama Railroad enjoys under its concession.

It is therefore requested that steps be taken by the State Department to prevent its consummation.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF, Washington, February 19, 1913.

THE DUNCAN CONCESSION FOR A RAILROAD IN THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA.

On December 30, 1912, a contract was signed by Mr. Basil Barnes [Burns] Duncan, an American citizen residing on the Isthmus of Panama, with the Panaman Minister of Public Works for the construction of a railroad, 50 kilometers long, starting from the west side of the Chagres River, near its mouth, and running in a generally southwest direction parallel to the Canal across the continental divide and as far as the lower lock at Miraflores. In addition, such branch lines were to be allowed as might meet the approval of the Government of Panama. This measure was signed on the same date by President Porras and sent to the Assembly with a recommendation for favorable consideration. Action in the Assembly has been suspended at the request of the American Minister pending receipt of the State Department's views in regard to the matter.

A Board was appointed by the Secretaries of State and War to consider the contract, consisting of the following members: Hon. Percival Dodge, American Minister, Chairman; Lieutenant-Colonel D. D. Gaillard, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.; and Lieutenant Frederick Mears, U. S. A., Chief Engineer of the Panama Railroad.

The Secretary of State refers all papers in the case for the comment of the War Department. In addition to the report of the Board, there is a letter and cablegram, under date of February 8th, from the Chairman and Chief Engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The Board found that it was impracticable to discuss properly the technical merits of the proposed contract for the reason that neither the exact location of the main line nor that of any of its branches is shown either in the text of the contract or in the maps accompanying same. Such indefinite description as is given is further modified by the statement that the general direction may be changed by the topographic conditions. There are no definite stipulations as to the number of tracks, or limiting grade or degree of curvature. The method of construction is not mentioned, nor is any definite terminal point given at the southwest extremity of the line. The contract contains no stipulations as to the quantity or character of the rolling stock, the station buildings, or the water tanks, etc., nor does it provide for the submission to the Panaman Government of any maps, profiles or plans until eighteen months after the approval of the contract by the National Assembly. It is the opinion of the Board that there would be little or no business for such a railroad at present, and it is therefore presumed that the sole purpose of the project is the exploitation and development of the Government lands as the various sections of the railroad are completed. The Board furthermore believes that the sums to be deposited by the contractor are inadequate to properly protect the Panaman Government in a contract of this nature. It further asserts that there are no assurances that the contractor possesses the financial backing requisite for the proper prosecution of the work. It bases this opinion to a large extent upon the fact that he took a contract in December, 1910, for excavation of certain material in the Canal prison which he was unable to complete for lack of financial resources. As the total amount involved was less than $25,000, and as monthly payments were made for a period stretching over 16 months, the amount of capital required was not large.

The contract provides for the improvement of the mouth of the Chagres River but contains no description of the character of the work proposed. Colonel Goethals in regard to this feature states that a "deepwater port at the mouth of the Chagres, or anywhere on the line of such a railroad, would threaten the safety of the Canal and would require a modification of the plan of defense and an increased armament." He further believes that the main railroad line would interfere with the rights which the Panama Railroad enjoys under its concession, and that the branch lines stipulated are objective.

Under date of January 27th, Mr. Duncan submitted a letter to the Board in which he offers to alter or suppress any clause in the contract which might be found to conflict with the interests of the United States.

The Board recommends that the contract be not approved. In this opinion

Colonel Goethals evidently agrees.

In view of the above facts, it is recommended that the Secretary of State be advised that this contract would seriously interfere with the military problems involved in the defense of the Canal Zone, and that he be requested that steps be taken by the State Department to prevent its consummation.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 291, of the 14th instant, and to my telegram of January 19, I have the honor to inform you that I received late on the 18th instant a letter 1 from Señor Arango, Secretary to President Porras, enclosing a copy of a bill "relative to the construction of railways and authorizing the Executive Power to contract a loan" ("Sobre construcción de ferrocarriles y autorización al Poder Ejecutivo para contratar un empréstito"). A copy of this bill and a translation are enclosed. In his letter Señor Arango informed me that this copy was sent to me by direction of the President and that this bill took the place of the one sent to me a few days before, which was reported in my despatch No. 291 of the 14th instant.

Learning that this bill was about to be submitted to the Assembly, I immediately telegraphed its substance to the Department in my telegram of January 19, above referred to. As the bill, however, merely confers authority in the broadest terms upon the Executive to make contracts either by public bidding or directly for the construction of such railways as he may consider necessary, having in view the best interest of the country, and contracting for this purpose the necessary loan, also under extremely broad powers, I enquired in my telegram whether the Department desired me to request a postponement of its submission to the Assembly. Should the bill be passed as now drafted it would seem to furnish ample opportunity for consultation between the Panaman Government and our own regarding whatever action the Panaman Government might propose to take under the authority conferred by it. The Panaman Government might accordingly be informed substantially that in view of the great interest which any action taken under this bill, should it become a law, would have for the Government of the United States, this Government would expect previously to be consulted as to any such action.

I may add that I now learn that this bill has since been submitted to the Assembly and is on the calendar for first reading today.

This note is in reply to mine of the 21st ultimo, referred to in my despatch No. 310.

In a conversation last evening with Señor Lefevre, he mentioned this note, casually intimating the opinion that the only ground upon which the United States could properly object to this bill was in case it violated the provisions of Article V of the Canal Treaty. In reply I expressed my surprise to Señor Lefevre and briefly mentioned other possible and proper grounds of objection, referring him to the Department's instruction No. 89 of September 20, 1911, of which a copy had formerly been furnished to his office under instructions from the Department.

I also enclose, with a translation, a clipping from the "Gaceta Oficial" of the 30th ultimo, which appeared several days later, giving the text of President Porras' message to the Assembly which accompanied, evidently, the former of these railway bills. The message states that the principal reason for the failure of Law 2 of 1911, authorizing the Executive to contract for the construction of the Panama-David railway, was the limitation to ten million dollars gold of the loan which the Executive was authorized to contract for this purpose, this sum being too small.

Message of the President of Panama to the Congress.

Honorable Deputies: Law 2 of 1911, of January 2, relative to the construction of a railway from Panama to David, with branches to the Provinces of Los Santos and the town of Antón, remains ineffective, as you know, because the call for public bids for these works which the Government was obliged to make within two months after its approval according to the provisions of Art. 1 of this law gave no results.

And as the construction of this railway is of incalculable benefit for the country and especially for the Provinces which the main line and branches will cross, I consider that the proposal of putting into effect this important project should be insisted upon, endeavoring to suppress in the new law to be passed the obstacles and inconveniences which impeded the effective accomplishment of the former law.

On this account I request the Honorable Assembly, if it thinks proper, to confer upon the Executive as wide powers as possible to construct the railway to David, Los Santos and Anton either through the Government itself or by contract, all together or in sections, endeavoring always to attain the quickest completion of the whole work relatively to the resources which the country can dispose of.

It is reasonable to suppose that one of the most serious obstacles, if not the principal one, which prevented the execution of Law 2 of 1911 was the one relative to the authority given to the Executive for contracting a loan up to the sum of ten million balboas for the cost of works so difficult and valuable as are those of the railway in question. Careful and prior studies show that an undertaking of such size and technical difficulty cannot be completed with only ten million balboas; and on this account it is indispensable to enlarge the power of contracting the loan up to the amount which may be indispensable for the conclusion of the railway, under the same securities and terms as are contained in the law concerning this matter.

The Executive will begin this colossal work, so advantageous for the Republic of Panama, as soon as it is fully authorized to contract the loan and to secure the construction of these railways either altogether or in sections which will be connected together as soon as the resources of the country allow.

In order to secure these results I place before you Honorable Deputies the accompanying project for a law.

Your No. 298 of January 20, 1913. Subdivision D of Article 3 of the proposed general railway law would seem to include the annuity of $250,000 shortly to become payable to the Panaman Government by the United States and the income on the $6,000,000 invested in New York. The Department's position as to the first of these matters has already been made clear to the Legation in its telegram of May 31, 1912.1 Concerning the second, the Department feels that it is a matter which should be most carefully considered and decided only after consultation between the two Governments. The Department would therefore object to the passage of the law as it now stands and believes that an addition to paragraph D should be included so as to except the annuity and the principal and interest of the money invested in New York. You will earnestly lay this matter personally before the President, and point out that the Department could not consent to appear to be bound by any law such as this if it were to pass, and would be obliged to make formal representations to the Government of Panama concerning it.

Upon receipt of Department's February 17, I requested interview with the President and at request of Minister for Foreign Affairs sent him paraphrase of Department's telegram. I was not able to obtain interview until this afternoon when Panaman President stated that law in question had passed Assembly February 17 (see my telegrams of February 7 and February 12) and been signed by him February 18, after the receipt of my paraphrase, as he could not then properly modify it. Panaman President expressed surprise at Department's objections in view of telegram from Valdes of 12th stating that Department had no objection to pledge of interest on six millions. With some vexation Panaman President insisted that doctrine that the United States had any right to control employment of annuity and six millions was new and declared that these moneys belonged to Panama to use as she pleased. He considered the six millions should be kept invested. Nevertheless if the United States desired he would agree not to use annuity or interest of six millions for railway construction which would thus probably become impossible for want of funds although Panama needed railways greatly for her development which the United States seemed not really to desire. In reply I explained Department's views as to Panaman finance and railways in the sense of instructions 89, September 20, 1911, and 42, April 8, 1912. Panaman President stated he would send me statement in writing as to attitude of Panaman Government.

AIDE MÉMOIRE.

The Government of the United States has instructed the American Minister earnestly to lay the following personally before His Excellency the President of the Republic relative to the "Ley_ de_ sobre construcción de ferrocarriles y autorización al Poder Ejecutivo para contratar un empréstito":

Paragraph D of Article 3, of this bill appears to include the annual payment of $250,000 United States currency, which will soon be payable by the Government of the United States to the Government of Panama, as well as the income of the fund of $6,000,000 United States currency, which is at present invested in the City of New York.

The position of the Government of the United States relative to the former of these matters was made clear in the communication F. O. No. 71 of June 3rd 1912, which the American Minister had the honor to address to his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Panama, relative to the proposed railway contract between the Panaman Government and Messrs. J. N. Hyatt, H. G.

Prescott, and R. Wilcox.

Regarding the latter matter the Government of the United States considers that this is a question which ought to be given the most attentive consideration and determined only subsequently to the consultation together of the Governments of the United States and of Panama. The Government of the United States would accordingly have objection to the bill being passed as it is framed at present and considers that there should be included in it an addition to Paragraph D of Article 3 that will exclude both the interest and principal of the sum of $6,000,000 United States currency, and the annuity of $250,000 United States currency.

The Government of the United States has instructed the Minister to indicate that his Government would be unable to assent to appearing to be bound by any bill of this character in case it should pass and that his Government would feel compelled to address representations of a formal character relative to it to the Panaman Government.

Memorandum of interview of Mr. Dodge with President Porras and Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, February 22, 1913.

After Mr. Dodge had explained the Department's instructions, which President Porras had already read from the paraphrase sent to him, President Porras replied that the geographical situation of the towns of Panama required in his opinion a lateral railway, otherwise it would be necessary to have forty short lines running to the coast where the ports would have to be improved, there being practically no natural ones. It seemed to him that it was not the desire of the United States that Panama should construct railways, which were necessary for her development, for except through some guaranty of the annuity or the revenue from the 6 millions it would probably not be possible to obtain the money to build them. He did not see what right the United States had to prevent Panama using these funds which belonged to Panama and which she should be able to use as she pleased. In the past the United The revenue from the 6 States had never attempted to restrain their use. millions had been used for general purposes, often useless ones, yet the United States had never interfered nor even enquired into its use. According to Law 2 of 1911, providing for the construction of the Panama-David Railway, which was still in force, these same funds could be used for guaranteeing a loan, yet the United States had never objected to this law.

Mr. Dodge stated substantially that his Government had many times declared that it desired the development of Panama, that it was prepared to assist Panama to secure this development in every way it properly could, that the United States had no objection whatever to the construction of railways in Panama provided their construction did not interfere with the proper protection of the Canal, in which Panama was as greatly interested as the United States, and provided the plans for their construction appeared advantageous to Panama from all viewpoints including the financial one. He believed that from the very beginning the United States had shown its interest in seeing the funds which it had paid to Panama only used for the best advantage and permanent benefit of the Panaman people. The terms of Law 2 of 1911 did not seem very clear.

President Porras replied with some vexation that Panama's financial stability was a matter in which both he himself and his Government took the greatest interest, which was apparent by the improvement in the finances since the beginning of his administration. The interest of the United States in the financial stability of Panama was new and could not be greater than his own. He enquired why the United States took this interest and Mr. Dodge replied that it seemed to him to come directly from the fact that the United States had guaranteed the independence of Panama: financial stability was essential to political stability. President Porras then said that although he had no objection to this new interest, he thought it unnecessary in view of his own careful financial management.

President Porras enquired why Panama could not use the annuity and interest of the 6 millions as she saw fit. As to the 6 millions themselves, both he and his advisers were absolutely decided not to touch it. I stated that as to the annuity a sufficient reason was the fact that the Colombian treaties, which theoretically might be ratified by Colombia at any time, made these annuities payable to Colombia for a number of years. As to the interest of the 6 millions he invited President Porras' attention to the communication which he had sent to him which nowhere stated that Panama could not use this interest but that its use was a matter for the most attentive consideration and consultation between the two Governments.

Señor Lefevre asked why the American Government assumed that Panama intended to do anything contrary to the Colombian treaties as it was not stated in the law that these funds were to be used. Mr. Dodge replied that the law as worded appeared to include these funds and that his Government was merely inviting attention to this wording.

Señor Lefevre then stated that he had duly informed Mr. Dodge that the discussion of this law would be postponed until February 14th and that he had heard no objection from the United States to the law until February 18th when the law had already passed. In fact he had received a telegram on February 12th from Dr. Valdes, Panaman Minister at Washington, stating that he had been informed by the Department of State that there was no objection to the employment of the interest of the 6 millions as security. President Porras added that although he had not yet signed the law when he received Mr. Dodge's communication, yet as the bill had originally been presented by him he could not then properly modify it and return it to the Assembly. Nevertheless if the United States did not desire him to use the annuity and interest of the 6 millions to carry out this law, he would not do so; in that case this railway could probably not be built. He would send Mr. Dodge a reply to his aide mémoire which would give the attitude of the Panama Government.

President Porras then said that he had promised Secretary Stimson while he was here that he would build no railways without consulting the United States; he would fulfill his promise. This law was simply a general enabling law.

During this interview President Porras seemed vexed at the Department's communication, inclined to misunderstand the attitude of the United States and to insist that the United States really had no desire for Panama's development.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 28, 1913.

Your telegram February 22. As outlined in Department's May 31, 1912, this Government would be unwilling to consent to the pledging of future installments of the annuity payable under Article 14 of the Treaty of 1903. From the inception of negotiations first with Colombia and later with Panama it has always plainly appeared to be the intention of the Governments concerned to create by means of the annuity a fund which would assure a permanent revenue for the maintenance of a stable Government on the Isthmus. The permanent investment in New York City of the six million dollars was also provided for a like purpose.

It is obviously the desire of the Government of the United States to see Panama prosper and develop, and it will omit no proper effort to that end, but just as obviously this Government feels bound to caution the Government of Panama against any unwise or illadvised use of these funds, and this Government is of opinion that it would be imprudent to discount these future revenues of the Republic.

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 341 of February 24 last, I have the honor to inform you that I have not yet received the statement which, as mentioned therein, President Porras said that he would send me as to the attitude of the Panaman Government in this matter. Upon referring to this lately to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, he stated that the Government were awaiting the return in a few days of Dr. Valdés, Panaman Minister at Washington, in order to question him as to his telegram reporting that the Department of State had no objection to a pledge of the interest of the fund of six million dollars (see my telegram of February 22.)

I enclose in this connection a clipping 1 from the "Gaceta Oficial" of the 4th instant, containing the text of this law as passed by the National Assembly, which it will be noted is identical with the bill, the text and the translation of which were enclosed in my despatch No. 298 of January 20th last. It will also be noted that this law was passed by the Assembly on February 18 and not on February 17, as stated to me by President Porras (see my telegram of February 22), and so would seem not to have been passed when my paraphrase of the Department's telegram of February 17 was received by Señor Lefevre.

I take this opportunity to enclose a copy of the aide mémoire which I handed to Señor Lefevre on the 1st instant, after communicating to him the substance of the Department's telegram of February 28.

AIDE MEMOIRE.

The American Minister stated that he had received a reply from his Government to a telegram which he had sent informing it briefly of the substance of the views expressed by His Excellency the President at the interview which the American Minister had with His Excellency and his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the 22nd ultimo.

This reply stated that the American Government obviously entertained the desire that the railways of Panama should develop and prosper and that it would neglect no proper endeavors which might conduce to this result. Just as obviously however the American Government considered that it was bound to caution the Panaman Government against any use of this annuity payable in accordance with Article 14 of the Treaty of 1903 and of the fund of six million dollars invested in New York which might be ill-advised or unwise. It was the opinion of the American Government that the discounting of these future revenues of Panama would be imprudent.

The American Government would not be willing to agree to the future installments of the annuity above referred to being pledged. This was outlined in the American Minister's communication to his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, F. O. No. 71 of June 3rd, 1912. It has always been plainly manifest from the beginning of the negotiations first with the Colombian Government afterwards with the Panaman Government that the purpose of the interested Governments was through the annuity to constitute a fund by which a permanent revenue would be assured for maintaining on the Isthmus a stable Government. A similar purpose was also provided for by the permanent investment of the fund of six million dollars in New York,

PROTECTION OF CHINESE INTERESTS IN PANAMA; GOOD OFFICES OF THE AMERICAN SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

File No. 704.9319.

The Legation of China to the Secretary of State.

MEMORANDUM.

This Legation is in receipt of cabled advices to the effect that the federal Legislature of the Republic of Panama has passed on its first reading a bill, consisting of thirty-eight articles, dealing with the right of residence of Chinese citizens domiciled in that Republic. Among the most unjust features are:

(1) Chinese residents shall be required to renew their registrations. Those who can not produce evidence of having previously registered shall be liable to a fine of two hundred and ten dollars; and those who have duly registered shall nevertheless be required to pay an additional fee of twenty-five dollars each, under penalty of deportation.

(2) Papers of registration shall be presented every six months to local authorities for examination, each time at a fee of seventy-five cents, under penalty of a fine of ten dollars.

(3) A monthly tax of one thousand dollars shall be levied on each of the Chinese societies or clubs, payment of which shall be for three months in advance. A monthly tax of fifty dollars shall also be levied on each of the Chinese benevolent or protective associations.

The Government of the United States has in the past, at the request of this Legation, permitted its diplomatic officers on the Isthmus to use their good offices for the protection of Chinese interests in that quarter, and this Legation has had several occasions to express to the Department of State its appreciation for these courtesies. In view of the discriminatory nature of the measure above referred to, the enforcement of which can not fail to inflict serious injury on Chinese interests and work great hardship on all classes of Chinese domiciled in that Republic, prompt and energetic action is called for. Therefore, a renewal of the Department's instructions to those officials in this regard will be highly gratifying to the Chinese Government.

Sir: Referring to my telegram of March 15, I have the honor to enclose the text of this bill as presented to the Assembly by the Administration. I also enclose a translation of this bill which I have made.

This bill modifies the former laws on the subject of the immigration of persons of these races, except North Africans, that is, Arabs, Egyptians and Moors, whose immigration has not previously been regulated; these former laws are Laws 6 of 1904 and 28 of 1909. Its provisions will be noted to be extremely severe although it is probable that they will be made less so before its passage. It is also very probable that the provision in it as to permitting the introduction of Chinese coolies under contract to labor on plantations will be struck out. Meanwhile there is of course very considerable excitement among the Chinese colony here who are extremely prosperous and number about three thousand in Panama and Colon alone, many of whom have been introduced into the country through the fraudulent complicity of Panaman officials. The Chinese Consul General called upon me lately in this connection and advised me that he had reported on the bill to the Chinese Minister at Washington from whom however he had as yet received no instructions. No doubt that there is a wide-spread feeling among the Panamans that the Chinese, in spite of the present laws, are becoming too numerous here and are absorbing too much of the business.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, March 27, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's telegram of March 22,2 directing me to use my good offices in accordance with the indications in instruction No. 66 of December 4, 1907, for the protection of Chinese interests in connection with the bill pending before the National Assembly dealing with the right of Chinese subjects domiciled in Panama to reside here, and to inform you that I again immediately saw the Chinese Consul General here, Mr. Ow Yang King, advising him of my instructions and requesting him to enumerate his objections to the bill in question. Mr. King did so and I subsequently accompanied him to the Foreign Office where we had two conferences with Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Morales, Minister of Finance, both of whom stated that my good offices would be entirely acceptable in accordance with the consent thereto of the Panaman Government in its note addressed to this Legation on April 12, 1905 (Despatch No. 131 of April 17, 1905).

After some conversation Señor Lefevre and Dr. Morales stated that the stamp tax payable under Article 7 of the bill by Chinese domiciled in Panama prior to the promulgation of Law 6 of 1904 had already been reduced during the debates in the Assembly from two fourth-class stamps ($25, United States currency) to four third-class stamps ($3, United States currency); they stated that it was unlikely that this reduction would be again increased. They further stated that they would endeavor to have Article 23, paragraph 2, of the bill re-drafted so as clearly to exempt the Chinese Chamber of Commerce from the payment of the tax on associations. In the bill as passed on the 24th instant the stamp tax on the Chinese above mentioned remains at $3 and the Chamber of Commerce is specifically exempted from the association tax.

Señor Lefevre and Dr. Morales also agreed that in accordance with the desires of the Consul General the regulations which were to be issued by the Executive under Article 37 of the bill would provide for the following:

Article 1. It would be made clear in the regulations that this article was to be understood as not excluding the wife and minor children of Chinese duly registered in accordance with Article 7 who might not be in Panama and also as not preventing the return to Panama of Chinese now absent in accordance with the provisions of

Article 3 of Law 28 of 1909;

Article 7. It would be provided that the certificate now held by Chinese would be sufficient for the new registration required by this article in the absence of suspicious circumstances; an endeavor would be made to provide in the regulations so that Chinese who were obliged to pay a stamp tax of twenty fourth-class stamps ($250, United States currency) and who were not financially able to do so might be allowed to pay for these stamps or furnish them by installments:

Articles 7 and 14. The registration and inspection of Chinese would take place before the alcaldes of the districts where the Chinese resided instead of before the governors of the provinces, according to a modification made during the debates in the Assembly, except in Panama and the provincial capitals. This would be done by providing in the regulations that the governors should deputise the alcades to perform these functions in these cases. Mr. King greatly desired this provision as many Chinese would be greatly burdened by having to come so often to the capitals.

Article 14. The regulation applying this article, relative to the inspection every six months of Chinese certificates would be drawn with every endeavor to cause as little annoyance to Chinese as possible.

Finally Señor Lefevre assured Mr. King that he would be allowed to see the regulations before they were signed and given an opportunity for suggesting modifications in them.

During the interview Mr. King stated to Señor Lefevre and Dr. Morales that he considered that both the special tax applicable to Chinese; Turks, Syrians and North Africans and the restrictions which the law placed upon the right of public meeting and association were unconstitutional (Constitution of Panama, Articles 42 and 20). Señor Lefevre admitted that many Panamans had also expressed this opinion but added that probably little satisfaction could be obtained by bringing these questions before the courts.

expressed this opinion but added that probably little satisfaction could be obtained by bringing these questions before the courts. Mr. King has now expressed himself as greatly gratified at the results obtained through my good offices which he considers will, if the regulations actually conform to the assurances given to me, render the law much less harsh for his people. He stated that he believed (and Señor Lefevre has since confirmed this to me) that the Government were not in favor of this law but that it had been in a way forced upon them by the Assembly which was at present strongly anti-Chinese and desired an even more drastic law.

I have requested Mr. King to inform me if he desired any further good offices from me and I have requested him to give me a statement of his objections to this law which he has now sent me and a copy of which I enclose.1

From this statement it will be noted that the prinicpal modifications are: The omission of the permission to introduce Chinese agricultural laborers; the substantial reduction, from $25 (United States currency) to $3 of the value of the stamps to be supplied by Chinese proving a domicile in Panama, prior to Law 6 of 1904, in order to obtain re-registration; and the substantial reduction of the tax imposed upon the associations of the foreigners mentioned in this law in the provinces of the Republic. The religious and benevolent associations are to be wholly exempted from this tax instead of being subject to the payment of a tax of $50 according to the original bill. The Chinese Chamber of Commerce will be exempted from this tax as a benevolent association.

American Legation, Panama, June 10, 1913.

Sir: Referring to my despatches Nos. 385 of March 27th and 417 of April 18th last, both reporting as to the recently passed law prohibiting the immigration of Chinese, Turks, Syrians and North Africans of Turkish origin and my good offices for the protection of Chinese interest in connection with this law, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Ow Yang King, Chinese Consul General, called upon me a few days ago and informed me that he had heard that the proposed regulations for the application of this law were about to be completed. He also showed me a letter addressed to Señor Lefevre, Minister for Foreign Affairs, which he proposed to hand to him, referring to the conferences at which he, Señor Lefevre, Dr. Morales, then Minister of Finance, and I were present, reported in my despatch No. 385, and requesting that certain points which he enumerated might be incorporated in these regulations. I enclose a copy of this letter 1 from which it will be noted that most of these points had already been brought up at the conferences referred to. At his request I accompanied Mr. King to the Foreign Office and expressed the hope to Señor Lefevre that Mr. King's letter would be given full consideration.

About a week later Mr. King again called and gave me a copy of the proposed decree containing the regulations for the application of this immigration law, which he stated had been sent to him by Señor Lefevre. He stated that instead of making the application of this law as easy as possible for the Chinese, as formerly promised by Dr. Morales, the decree made it a great deal harder. In explanation he handed me a copy of a letter, which he had addressed to Señor Lefevre, containing a list of objections to the regulations. I thereupon again accompanied him to the Foreign Office where he handed this letter to Señor Lefevre, a rather prolonged discussion then following. The substance of this discussion appears fairly clearly in the memorandum of it which Mr. King has furnished to me at my request. From the objections in Mr. King's letter and the memorandum it will be noted that some of the agreements of Señor Lefevre and Dr. Morales, reported in my despatch No. 385, have not been satisfactorily carried out. Certain further changes desired by Mr. King were however agreed to by Senor Lefevre during our discussion and Señor Lefevre also was able to explain certain other provisions of the regulations so that Mr. King admitted that they were practically unobjectionable. Throughout the conversation Senor Lefevro showed the greatest courtesy in discussing Mr. King's objections and appeared to desire to meet them in so far as possible. He finally assured Mr. King that after the regulations went into effect further changes might be made in them if they appeared to be unnecessarily severe. In any case he stated that he would always be ready to attend personally to any complaints brought to him by Mr. King and assured Mr. King that the regulations would be applied fairly and without animosity or any unfriendly spirit.

Mr. King expressed his sincere thanks to me for my good offices, stating that they had materially assisted his endeavors to secure fair treatment for his people.

No. 473.7

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, June 18, 1913.

SIR: Referring to Mr. Dodge's despatch No. 469 of June 10th, 1913, and previous correspondence, I have the honor to inform the Department that Mr. Ow Yang King, the Chinese Consul General at Panama, has called upon me twice with regard to Law 50 of 1913, recently enacted, prohibiting the immigration of Chinese, Turks, Syrians, and North Africans of the Turkish race into the Republic of Panama, and with regard to Supplementary Decree No. 44 of 1913, of May 31st, 1913, modifying the above law.

At his first visit Mr. King expressed his regret that no changes had been made in the decree in spite of his efforts and the good offices of Mr. Dodge in presenting the matter before Señor Lefevre, the Minister for Foreign Affairs. Mr. King informed me that the greater number of his people could not pay the registration tax which amounts, in the case of Chinese who have entered the country since the 18th of March, 1904, to $250 United States currency for each individual, and that it meant the ruin of many of the smaller Chinese merchants doing business in Panama unless some modification could be introduced into the law. He reiterated that the decree instead of rendering less severe the law which it was enacted to modify had made it unbearable; that the tax of $1,000 United States currency per month levied upon the Chinese Chamber of Commerce was excessive, and that the law withdrew from the Chinese their constitutional rights, adding that the more prominent Chinese in this city had intimated to him that the only way to obtain fair treatment would be for the Chinese merchants as a body to close up their shops and refuse to sell goods to any person whatsoever. He thought that such action by affecting the poorer classes of Panamans who deal largely with the Chinese because the latter sell them goods more cheaply than merchants of other nationalities and are, moreover, in the habit of extending credit for several days at a time to their customers, would presently compel the Panaman Government to modify or at least to postpone the actual enforcement of the law. He added that his people were entirely prepared for united action but that he, for his part, was not in favor of resorting to extreme measures until all other means had failed, fearing that the closing of the shops would cause a great rise in prices and lead to disturbances and riots.

Copies of Law 50 of 1913 and of its supplementary decree were printed last week and published together, on a single sheet, but were not for some unknown reason distributed until yesterday. After receiving the printed copies, the Consul General called again at the Legation. He reported a conversation which he had had a short time before with three of the leading wholesale merchants of this city, in which they expressed the uneasiness felt by the entire business community in anticipation of the effect of this new and prohibitive law. It is well known that the smaller Chinese firms doing business with the poorer classes of Panamans in the necessities of life obtain the greater part of their goods from the large wholesale dealers who will be disastrously affected if the Chinese, who control more than 70% of this trade, are compelled to close their shops or eventually be driven from the country. In this same connection, I would mention that this morning the managers of the two leading American banks of this city came to the Legation and explained to me that they had extensive credits with the Chinese both here in Panama and throughout the country in general and were desirous of knowing what was being done with a view toward calling in their loans should it seem likely that the extreme measures now enacted by the Panaman Government would be actually put into effect. They both expressed the hope that the date for the operation of the law might be postponed for at least six months in order to enable the business community to meet the situation without the uncertainties and heavy losses which would otherwise almost certainly occur.

In view of the Department's instruction contained in the telegram of March 22¹ requesting this Legation to use its good offices with the Government of Panama for the protection of Chinese interests along the lines indicated in the Department's previous instruction, I am prepared to take up with Señor Lefevre the points outlined above, but have so far, at Mr. King's request, refrained from doing so, particularly as it seemed to both of us that the delay in actually publishing the law and its supplementary decree might have been caused by the desire of the Panaman Government to reconsider its provision with a view toward their further modification as well as to determine the possible effect of the measures upon the Chinese. Now that both the law and the decree have been published, I have arranged for an interview tomorrow morning with Mr. King, at which I shall take up with him the advisability of presenting the points above mentioned to Señor Lefevre for his consideration.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, June 30, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report that since the date of my despatch No. 473 of the 18th instant I have had several interviews with Señor Lefevre, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, as also with Mr. King, the Chinese Consul General. * * * Señor Lefevre assured me that Chinese Consul General. a suspension of the law would be impossible but said that the attitude of his Government was now more lenient as to the enforcement of its more objectionable provisions, the chief of which seemed to be the tax of $250 United States currency levied on all Chinese who had entered the country since 1904. He said that while this tax might not be abrogated or amended without special act of the Assembly, he thought it could be rendered less burdensome by permitting its payment over a long period of time and in installments of $20 to $30 monthly. On my return to the Legation I was informed that the President in the meantime had expressed the opinion to the delegates that although the tax could not be reduced, an extension of time for its enforcement of from eight to ten months might be granted; which if true would indicate that there is still an uncertainty of purpose on the part of the Government with regard to the enforcement of the gram of June 28.

I communicated the result of this interview this morning to the Chinese Consul General who came to the Legation and expressed himself as pleased at the result. He assured me that he offered no objection to the taking of the census of his people or to their registration, except upon certain disputed points, particularly on the ground that the fee of $3.00 United States currency provided for in Art. 7 of the law was an infringement of the constitutional rights of his people, upon which point he promised to submit objections in

With regard to the Government's proposal to summon a special session of the Assembly in August, to reduce the tax, the Chinese Consul General assured me that his Government would prefer a suspension of the law as it now stands of from twelve to twenty months to its reconsideration by the National Assembly, even with the certainty of a reduction in the tax and the abrogation of the other objectionable features of the Law, as the former would afford time to his Government for the establishment of a Legation at Panama.

I am therefore prepared to press this matter again with Señor Lefevre if it is considered advisable by the Department, believing, in view of the attitude of the President, that something may be accomplished in this direction; although it seems at present more likely that the Government will try to secure from the Chinese even a smaller amount than was at first anticipated, rather than have the whole matter postponed, thus inviting a possible attack upon the constitutionality of the law or else the establishment of a Chinese legation and the settlement of the matter by treaty.

Sir: The Department has received Mr. Dodge's No. 469, of the 10th ultimo, reporting his interview, in company with the Chinese Consul General, with the Panaman Minister of Foreign Affairs on the subject of the proposed regulations for the application of the law recently passed by the Panaman Assembly prohibiting the immigration of Chinese, Turks, Syrians, and North Africans.

The Department approves Mr. Dodge's use of his good offices in behalf of the Chinese, and desires that you will continue the same if necessary. In this connection you are referred to the Department's Sir: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 475, of June 30, 1913, wherein you report on your action in carrying out the instructions contained in the Department's telegram of June 26, 10 a. m. Your despatch has been read with interest and your action, as therein indicated, is approved.

With regard to the Panaman Government's proposal to summon in August a special session of the Assembly to reduce the tax upon Chinese who have entered the country since 1904, the Department notes the statement of the Chinese Consul General that his Government would prefer a suspension of the law as it now stands of from twelve to twenty months to its reconsideration by the National Assembly, even with the certainty of a reduction in the tax and the abrogation of the other objectionable features of the law, as the former would afford time to his Government for the establishment of a legation at Panama. You add that you are prepared to press this matter again with Señor Lefevre, if it is considered advisable by the Department.

It is not the desire of the Department that you further press the question of the suspension of the law with the Panaman Government, as the Department would feel satisfied with the proposed reduction of the tax and the more lenient enforcement of those features of the law considered objectionable by the Chinese.

You are instructed to keep the Department fully informed of any developments in this matter, particularly with regard to the proposed special session of the Assembly in August next.

No. 493.]

American Legation, Panama, August 4, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I have had several interviews with Mr. Ow Yang King, the Chinese Consul General, and with Señor Lefevre, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and that I have been fully aware of the delicate position of the Legation in this matter and in the absence of instructions from the Department, have refrained from pressing any of the points raised by Mr. King with Señor Lefevre, but have confined my offices to those of friendly mediation.

As a result of these representations I have obtained nearly all of the concessions desired by Mr. King from the Panaman Government with regard to the eventual enforcement of the law, receiving from Señor Lefevre the assurance that the tax of $250 gold upon the Chinese who may be found to have entered the country since 1904 without legal right to do so, would be reduced by one-half, and that, if necessary, a special session of the National Assembly would be called to effect this change. He also promised me that if this sum were still considered too high the time for paying the tax would be extended for a period of twelve months or more, during which payment could be made by installments. Señor Lefevre also agreed that in making out their application the Chinese would not be required to state by what means, legal or otherwise, they entered the country, but might leave that space blank. He also explained to Mr. King's satisfaction that where Chinese domiciled in the country prior to 1904 had left the country bearing passports and subsequently returned, this would not be considered an "entry" under the law so as to make them liable to the tax of $250 from which they would otherwise be exempt; and also that wives and children of Chinese domiciled in the country prior to the executive decree of April 15, 1904, would not be included among those subject to the tax provided under Law 50. These and many other points where Law 50 seems to have been badly drawn, I have been able to clear up at personal interviews, and have received from Mr. King frequent expressions of his appreciation and thanks. He has, indeed, lately changed his attitude from one of uncertainty to one of confidence, and has in turn yielded practically nothing, but after consulting with various Panaman lawyers remains opposed even to the taking of a census and registration of his people by the This is a point on which the Panaman Panaman Government. Government is firm and it has been repeated to me several times by Señor Lefevre that if this census and registration are not complied with, as provided for in the law, by the 15th of the present month his Government will take prompt and probably severe meas-Mr. King, on the other hand, on the advice of his lawyers, informed me this morning that his people would exhaust every legal means before complying with the law and this after I had repeatedly urged him to persuade his people to yield the point of allowing the census and registration to be taken.

Mr. King prefers to contest the constitutionality of the entire law and to base his opposition to its enforcement on the ground that for many reasons it is invalid and unconstitutional, and also declares that his people are not treated as on an equality with other foreigners and Panamans, as provided in the Constitution, but are compelled to be registered as a class and to be reregistered thereafter every six months, a procedure which he says opens the way to a continuance of the system of persecution under which his people have suffered so much in the past. Otherwise, he adds, the law might be of benefit to his people in that it clears up once and for all time their right to reside in Panama.

In summary I am of the opinion that there is a strong feeling of obstinacy on both sides and I have endeavored to present the exact point at issue to the Department, emphasizing on the side of the Government of Panama the necessity of having definite knowledge as to the number of Chinese, their occupation, the time and also the authority under which they entered the country, and on the part of the Chinese the fear that by presenting their certificates they will find the same to be invalid and so lose what protection they already possess, being compelled either to pay a heavy tax or be expelled from the country.

In view of the Department's instructions, I have the honor to inform you that I shall use every effort consistent with the exercise of good offices in endeavoring to arrange some further ground of understanding between the Foreign Office and the Chinese Consul General so as to minimize whatever difficulties may be expected on the 15th of this month.

Your August 19¹ was promptly repeated to the American Legation at Panama, which replies as follows:

August 20. Period for registration of Chinese under Law 50 extended until September 1, after which they may be liable to imprisonment or expulsion. So far no Chinese have registered. Panaman Government threatens severe measures, regarding Chinese as wilfully obstinate in this matter.

At an interview this morning the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in reply to my representations, requests me to inform you that the charge for registration is only $3 U. S. gold, barely covering the expenses of preparing the registration papers in triplicate; also that the tax on societies is in purpose a prohibitive tax on gambling institutions. He also assured me, for transmission to the Department and to the Legation at Peking, that when the registration of Chinese is completed the law will be modified so that reporting every six months thereafter will not be compulsory. The special session of the Assembly will be held only after the registration is completed, to take up then the reduction of the tax and the necessary modifications of the law.

The Chinese Consul General at Panama has telegraphed the Chinese Legation here that the Chinese colony believes Law 50 is unconstitutional; that they fear wholesale arrest and deportation, which would cause immense damage and hardship before an opportunity would be given to test constitutionality of the law; and would like this Government to request Government of Panama to allow such test before compelling Chinese to comply with the law.

You may communicate this request by way of good offices to the Government of Panama. The Department has advised the Chinese Legation that this request will probably not be granted, and that it would seem to be advisable to comply with the law and test its constitutionality afterward rather than incur the risk of the application of its penalties before the question of constitutionality can be determined.

American Legation, Panama, September 20, 1913.

Sir: With reference to my despatch No. 493 of August 4, 1913, and previous correspondence with regard to Law 50, I have the honor to inform you that, as reported in my telegram of August 30, a committee of Panaman merchants called recently on the Minister for Foreign Affairs on behalf of the Chinese to protest against the application of the law, which would in their opinion if carried into effect result in the virtual expulsion of the Chinese colony from the country and have a disastrous effect on trade. They explained to the Minister that over a million dollars in trade and credits would be adversely affected by the Government's determination to enforce the law, and requested a change in the Government's attitude with regard to the taxation or expulsion of such Chinese as failed to comply with its provisions.

To this protest a verbal reply was returned; in effect the Government confirmed its intention to take the registration of the Chinese, but promised a reduction from $250 to $125 U.S. currency in the tax levied upon Chinese who had entered the country since the passage of the exclusion act of 1904 and desired to remain. Lefevre added that the Government pledged itself to urge and effect with the Assembly the reduction of the tax to the amount of the first payment, namely $125. In this connection I would refer to my despatch No. 493 of August 4, 1913, and to my subsequent interviews with Señor Lefevre at which I have been repeatedly assured by him that the tax would never amount to more than $125 and that a special session of the Assembly would if necessary be called to effect this re-

In his repy Señor Lefevre added that the time within which aliens affected by the provisions of the law might register would be extended until September 20, after which date they would be liable to arrest and imprisonment for non-compliance. Those possessing valid cédulas must surrender them and will be given new ones on paying the registration fee of $3 gold.

To nearly every one of the above points the Chinese have objected, and particularly to the provisions regarding registration. It is, I believe, the determination of the Government to obtain and examine these cédulas, under the guise of registration and probably with a view to taxing the owners of cédulas which are invalid or illegal, and the refusal of the Chinese as a body to surrender to Government officials the cédulas-legal or illegal-which they already possess, issued to them under previous administrations and which at least recognize their presence here on the Isthmus, probably with the same idea that these will be found illegal and they themselves liable to taxation, which has led to the present difficulty.

Up to the present, so far as I am aware, not one of the 2,500 to 3,000 Chinese upon the Isthmus has registered, and the situation is at a complete deadlock.

Part of this difficulty has been caused by the action of the Chinese Consul General, who has asked all of his people to surrender their cédulas to him for examination, and now has the greater number of these in his hands. He states as his reason the desire to take an accurate census of the Chinese, as well as to examine the nature of the cédulas to detect forgeries, but it is possible that he is retaining them in order to prevent the registration of any considerable number of the Chinese, either among the more wealthy, the more timid or the more favorably situated of his people, until some satisfactory arrangement can be made with the Panaman Government. Señor Lefevre has told me that many of the Chinese have informed him that they were ready and willing to register and pay the reduced tax but could not recover their cédulas from the Consul General, and he even showed me a telegram received from Chinese in the interior laying their inability to register to this cause. While in the present state of feeling upon both sides I can not lay much weight on the validity of the motive which prompted this telegram, it, among other reasons, has caused intense ill feeling between Mr. King and the Foreign Office, and Señor Lefevre has threatened to cancel the Consul General's exequatur.

In the exercise of my good offices I have offered to allow the cédulas, more than 1,400 of which are now in the possession of Mr. King, to be brought to this office and examined here in the presence of the owner of the cédula, a representative of the Government and a representative of the Chinese, and on proof of its validity to certify to the authenticity of the document, my idea being that the owner of the cédula could then present it and register without fear that it would be found illegal. In this way those who possessed valid cédulas and wished to register could do so, to the gradual elimination of those possessing forged or invalid cédulas who could be dealt with later in separate classes. This plan would seem to offer a solution of the difficulty by at least starting the registration of the Chinese in conformity with the law, and has met with the entire approval of the Government but has been refused by Mr. An alternative method has been proposed by Mr. King under which certain Chinese would be arrested for non-compliance with the law and under habeas corpus proceedings a test case made which would involve the constitutionality of the law. Apart from the danger of such procedure, the very name of unconstitutionality arouses the anger of the Government, due to the activities of the many Panaman lawyers retained by the Chinese, and the plan has been rejected by the Government.

A further complication has arisen recently on the arrival of the steamer Acapulco bringing thirteen Chinese direct from San Francisco to Panama. These were at first not permitted to land, although they bore passports issued by the Government of Panama, and were told that they would have to register, the Government apparently using every effort to get someone to register in order to break the deadlock. On its appearing, however, that their destination was the Canal Zone and not Panama their passports were at length examined and being found correct they were released.

I have the honor to reopen this despatch to report that, as confirmed in my telegram of September 17, direct relations between the Foreign Office and the Chinese Government have been broken off by the revocation of the exequatur of Mr. Ow Yang King. This act has not been unexpected and the reason for the revocation is laid by the Panama Government to the persistent advice given by Mr. King to his people not to register under the law, thus rendering him persona non grata to the Panaman Government.

HERPERT G. SQUIERS, ESQUIRE, Panama.

Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your No. 186 of the 24th ultimo, requesting the Department to furnish you with some specific rule as to when you are permitted to lend your good offices in favor of Chinese subjects residing in Panama.

In reply I have to say that the Department is of the opinion that the published instructions on the subject of representation by our diplomatic and consular officers of the interests of third governments, to be found in the volume of Foreign Relations for 1871, page 28; that for 1872, page 5; and that for 1897, page 1076, are sufficient for your equifores. guidance.

my temporary appointment in charge of Chinese interests in Panama has been favorably received by the Government and press and that, out of consideration for my appointment and in order to give me time for a full consideration of the Chinese question from this new point of view Señor Lefevre, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has announced a temporary postponement in the application of the provisions of Law No. 50, thereby courteously enabling me to deal with this difficult subject with the fullest information available.

I have also the honor to report that on the day following the receipt of the Department's telegram above mentioned I called upon Señor Lefevre and was received by him in my new capacity, and that he expressed the hope that with my intimate knowledge of the situation and my close and friendly relations in the past with himself and with the Foreign Office, a satisfactory solution might be arrived at through my good offices. In reply I stated, as confirmed in my Foreign Office note No. 353 of September 23, 1913, a copy of which note I have the honor to enclose herewith to the Department that in assuming these new duties toward the Government of Panama, with a full sense of the responsibility and importance of the questions involved in dealing with the present situation of the ama, with a full sense of the responsibility and importance of the questions involved in dealing with the present situation of the Chinese in Panama, I trusted there might be no change in the uniformly cordial and friendly relations which had so far characterized my relations with himself and his Government. To this end I made it clear to his excellency that my position while acting in charge of the interests of China in Panama was entirely distinct from my representative capacity as an official of the United States Government.

Following my interview with Señor Lefevre, I called at once on

Mr. Ow Yang King, the former Chinese Consul General at Panama, who also expressed his pleasure that I had been appointed to temporarily take charge of the interests of China in Panama, and promised his cooperation for as long as he remained on the Isthmus in case I should desire to consult with him. He offered also to hand over the archives of the Consulate General and, with the consent of a committee of his countrymen, to whom they had been entrusted, the cédulas mentioned in my despatch No. 506 of September 20, 1913, which still remained in his possession. Having received the archives as a matter of form, and also the cédulas, which I placed in the Legation safe, I addressed a letter to Dr. King and also to the Chinese resident on the Isthmus, informing them of the action of the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs and of my acceptance of the charge, and inviting them by delegations or as individuals to call freely at any prearranged hour at the Legation to express their views as to the best means of safeguarding their interests under the present law. I have taken particular care to inform Dr. King not only verbally views as to the best means of safeguarding their interests under the present law.

I have taken particular care to inform Dr. King not only verbally but also in this letter, that the cédulas entrusted to me would never under any circumstances be placed at the disposal or examination of any official of the Panaman Government, which is an assurance greatly desired by the Chinese, as they fear that following an inspection of their cédulas, which may be found to be invalid, they will be subject to the tax of $250 under the law.

As I have anticipated for some time past that the Panaman Government might deprive the Chinese of their representative here through the revocation of Dr. King's exequatur and that I might be called upon through my experience with the present conditions to take his place, I have for the last two weeks given my most earnest consideration to this question of the safeguarding of Chinese interests. * * *

To effect some compromise between the Chinese and the Panaman Government, I have decided, with the approval and cooperation of Dr. Ow Yang King, to take, in my capacity as the representative of the Chinese Government in Panama, a registration of all the Chinese here in the Republic of Panama, in a book kept for that purpose, which shall be the property of the Chinese Government and which shall not under any circumstances be placed at the disposal or under the observation of any official of the Panaman Government. This book shall contain the photograph, by way of identification, of each Chinaman registering, attached firmly to the page and sealed with a seal which I am having made, bearing in its center in Chinese characters the words, "Seal of the Republic of China", and around the border the words in English, "In charge of the interests of the Republic of China in Panama". The book will also set forth the name in Chinese, and also in English characters, of the person registering, together with such other facts as he may desire to offer in the way of identification, such as a personal description or thumb marks. At the time of registraton I shall inquire if the person registering possesses a cédula, and if this is the case and it is shown to me, either among those which I now have in my possession or brought by him in person, I shall record in the book the fact that the person registered possesses a cédula.

As these cédulas vary greatly in nature and character, and possibly validity as well, a minute examination and authentication of these would be practically impossible, but it is my opinion that, having registered all the Chinese who possess cédulas, I trust to be able, through my efforts and the exercise of good offices with the Panaman Government, to secure from the latter the assurance that those Chinese who have registered in the book and who are recorded as possessing cédulas issued by any responsible official of the Panaman Government, may be allowed to remain hereafter within the country as of right.

The matter of registration involves considerable expense and a great deal of time. I have, in the absence of instructions from the Chinese Government, already hired the services of a competent stenographer on behalf of the Chinese Government, and will go to such other expenses as may seem necessary, rendering an account therefor to the Chinese Government. In the matter of the registration I shall, in the absence of instructions, charge the same fees as those charged, according to the official statement of Dr. Ow Yang King, by the Chinese Consul General at San Francisco, protecting myself in this way and holding myself accountable to the Chinese Government for their collection.

It may be that this plan as outlined will not result in a successful solution of this present difficulty, but the matter is being placed before the Chinese at a meeting of their people held this evening, and has received the approval and support of Governor Metcalfe and Judge Feuille, as before mentioned. I would request that in case my efforts on behalf of the Chinese here in Panama, and as the representative of their Government, may be approved by the Department, that the substance of my action to date may, through the kindness of the Department, be telegraphed to the American Legation at Peking for the information of the Chinese Government, in order that I may be supported, if advisable, in carrying through this plan, which seems at the present moment to afford the only practicable solution.

If my knowledge of conditions and experience, through the exercise, for four months, of good offices on behalf of the Chinese, coupled with my acquaintance with the weakness of the position of the Panaman Government and my sense of the justice of the cause of the Chinese, are of value to their people, I trust I may receive instructions as to where I have failed to best protect their interests, and support where I may succeed in upholding their rights, both through the Department of State and the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs at Peking.

Sir: With reference to previous correspondence regarding Law 50 of 1913, prohibiting the immigration of Chinese, Turks, Syrians and North Africans of the Turkish race into the Republic of Panama, I have the honor to enclose you herewith a copy of my Foreign Office No. 2 addressed to Señor Lefevre, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, covering many disputed points which have arisen in connection with the application of this law. This note was instigated by the request of Señor Lefevre himself who asked me to put in writing, in a form requiring written reply, certain questions which are still matters of uncertainty with the Chinese.

The feeling of the entire community, even on the part of those who would naturally object to the presence of the Chinese within the Republic, being opposed to the application of the law, not as a law excluding the Chinese but in the form in which it now stands, I have urged at the close of the note the suspension of the application of the law until the next session of the National Assembly, to be held in October, 1914, when, after a full consideration of all of its provisions, a new law may be passed freed from the objectionable and probably unconstitutional provisions of this one.

The attitude of the Government is now weakening on this point and it is, in my opinion, their unspoken desire to suspend the application of the law until after the opening of the next session of the National Assembly. Their reluctance to state this up to the present is due in part, in my opinion, to a regret at losing the expected opportunity for heavily taxing the Chinese under the present law, and even more, according to the confidential statement of Señor Lefevre, to fear of the opportunity given to the opposition in the next Assembly to attack the Government for weakness, or even of trafficking with the Chinese. It is probable that some method will now be found, probably by taking the matter into the courts, to suspend the law without appearing to do so, and as this is the earnest desire of the Chinese colony here I am lending my best effort in that direction.

As mentioned in my despatch No. 509 of September 29, 1913, I have taken great care at the very beginning to make clear to Señor Lefevre, as well as to the Chinese and to the press, that while in charge of the interests of China in Panama I am acting as a representative of that Government and not in my capacity as an official of the United States Government. I would accordingly request, if it seems advisable to the Department, that the duplicate copy of my Foreign Office note enclosed herewith may be transmitted to the American Legation at Peking for forwarding to the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of China.

> CHINESE LEGATION. Panama, October 10, 1913.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to our recent interview with regard to the situation of the Chinese in the Republic of Panama under Law 50 and Decree No. 44 of 1913, and to inform you that the census and registration which I am making of the Chinese within the Republic indicates that all but a very small percentage of these possess cédulas signed by officials of the Panaman Government, authorizing their admission or recognizing their presence within the country. A certain number of these cédulas present difficulties in the way of identification, due in part to errors resulting from local dialects and the plural names of the Chinese. It is of course probable that only the most correct cédulas have so far been presented, and that a few Chinese have no cédulas at all, but their number will be proved definitely only with the completion of this registration.

In the course of the investigations inseparable from this registration I have been brought into closest touch with the Chinese and been made aware of many difficulties, easily explained by your excellency, which are still to them matters of uncertainty and doubt. I have accordingly and at your excellency's suggestion put these in writing in order that through your reply I may receive your excellency's answer in a form suitable for accurate communication to the Chinese.

It appears, following the recent reply of your excellency to the delegation of Panaman merchants, a matter of vital importance to the Chinese in their commercial relations with the Panaman people, as well as with Americans and other foreigners who are creditors of the Chinese to very considerable amounts, that the Chinese receive some assurance that they enjoy constitutional rights within the Republic, and that neither by registering with your excellency's Government, nor by in any other way conforming with the provisions of Law 50, will they lose constitutional rights which they at present possess. Written assurance on this point, however needless it may appear to your excellency, when transmitted through me to the Chinese, will, I feel sure, tend to relieve an existing tension and uncertainty in commercial relations between the Chinese and your own people, as well as with Americans and other foreigners, which are now most unfortunately affected.

A second point which your excellency can easily make clear but which is not yet realized by the Chinese, is that under Law 50 all Chinese who are now in the country in conformity with the provisions of the Law of 1904 and subsequent legislation, and who possess or can prove the loss of cédulas signed by authorized agents of the Panaman Government recognizing their presence within the Republic, shall be allowed to remain permanently as of right, without being subject to further compulsory registration or to the payment of any special tax, and also that these rights will not be affected under With this assurance in writing, which your excellency future legislation. has so frequently expressed to me in person, the position of the Chinese will be no longer uncertain or precarious, and I beg your excellency clearly to express the attitude of your Government on this point in your esteemed reply.

As a third point I would call your excellency's attention to what seems a most important matter in connection with the granting of the new certificates and the surrender of the old. Aside from the constitutional objections, which I am assured by the most eminent lawyers from among your own countrymen exist in regard to the registration of the Chinese as a race, coupled with the payment of a compulsory registration fee, but which objections are at this time more properly a means of defense than matters to be raised at a friendly adjustment of this problem, I would point out that the application blank required to be filled out by the person registering and issued under the law in return for the surrender of the cédula already possessed by that person, fails to assure that person so registering of his right to remain thereafter within the country as a right. This new paper, a copy of which was handed to me recently by your excellency, appears on the contrary to be a mere application blank which when filled out will contain only items of identification and no assurance of the continuance of rights to its possessor. The form, moreover, resembles the identification blanks used in the registration of criminals in foreign countries, for which reason it appears most objectionable to those whose registration is thus required. I cannot see that to obtain such a document offers any inducement to the possessor of a cédula to register, and your excellency will, I am sure, consider it a most inadequate exchange to demand of the Chinese the surrender for destruction of cédulas issued by the proper authorities and which bear on their face an authorization to remain in the country in return for a mere paper of identification. I would therefore request from your excellency some assurance, for transmission to the Chinese, that the law will be so modified that upon registration the old cédula will not be surrendered and burned, but marked in some way for indentification and attached permanently to the new application blank. With regard to this document, moreover, I venture to suggest a simpler form, such as that now used in taking my registration of the Chinese for the information of the Chinese Government, namely: photograph of the applicant, firmly attached to the page and sealed; name; customary name; age; height; physical peculiarities; address in Panama; occupation; district of residence in China (which involves the added test of acquaintance with the local dialect); thumbmark. To this should advisedly be added the assurance that the person registering was thereby entitled to remain within the Republic as of right and free from taxation under the present law as well as from special taxation in the future. This would go far to remove a deep-seated feeling of opposition and suspicion with regard to registration which the application blank in its present form seems inadequate to allay.

Moreover the Chinese have come forward willingly at my request to register in the books of the Chinese Republic but are absolutely opposed to registration with your excellency's Government under the present law, objecting, if I understand their attitude aright, not so much to the law, or even to the tax imposed under it, but in the fear that by complying with it in its present objectionable and unmodified form they will lose inherent rights which they would not lose under a law more fully considered and more carefully drawn. Registration also involves considerable expense and a second registration will very possibly raise intense opposition. I would suggest that even this matter might be simplified by taking, with the permission of the Chinese, certified copies of the pages of my registration books in place of a personal registra-This procedure might involve as well an inspection and certification of cédulas, which could be accomplished following some plan which your excellency may be pleased to suggest.

Finally I have received from your excellency assurances not only that the amount of the tax to be levied upon Chinese who are here without legal right but also every matter connected with the application of Law 50 will be brought up before the National Assembly at its next session for approval or disapproval as well as possible modification, in order that the provisions of the law may be made to conform more nearly to the wishes of the people and to avoid at the same time the present constitutional objections. I would accordingly request from your excellency in a form suitable for accurate communication to the Chinese assurances of this intention on the part of your excellency's Government as expressed to me verbally, renewing your promise that the efforts of the Government would be directed to induce the National Assembly to reduce from 250 balboas to 125 balboas the tax on Chinese who may be here without legal right; to discuss a return of the registration fee of three balboas, against which constitutional objection has been raised; and upon broad lines to consider such modifications of the law as a whole as may, following this present full and valuable investigation of all its provisions, be found just and advisable by the National Assembly.

I have in the foregoing paragraphs enumerated at your excellency's request and placed in a form appropriate for written answer the several points raised at our recent interviews and leading toward a satisfactory adjustment of the matters in dispute. I would now go further and outline to your excellency my conviction that the really and only satisfactory and permanent solution of the present situation must lie in placing this whole matter for full consideration and final action in the hands of the National Assembly at its next session. In arriving at this conclusion I have been struck by the variety and weight of the objections raised with regard to the application as well as the constitutionality of the Law No. 50 in its present form. Merchants, bankers, consumers and the press, not only Panamans but also Americans and foreigners, have all commented unfavorably upon this law, not indeed as a law for excluding further immigration by the Chinese, but in its form as it now stands.

In fact I have up to the present heard not a single expression of approval from any person whatsoever with regard to its application in its present form. The obvious dislocation of trade and shortening of credit, the consternation among the poorer classes with whom the Chinese largely deal following the proposal for the expulsion or withdrawal of the entire Chinese colony, and the opinion expressed by the most eminent lawyers of your country that the law is open to attack on constitutional grounds, all merit a greater consideration than was given to the law at the time of its passage by the late Assembly. Your excellency knows best the attitude of your own people on this point and the support which they have already accorded this measure.

I urge this with the more earnestness in view of the well-known conditions under which the present law was passed, namely at nearly the last hour of an extraordinary session of the National Assembly, with a bare quorum of the delegates present and a bare majority to insure its passage, and certainly, although an opportunity was given at earlier readings for a discussion of the law, without that full consideration of all of its provisions which its subsequent importance demands. I feel sure that at a later consideration many points heretofore overlooked would be dealt with and a law passed which would accomplish the purpose of the desired legislation in excluding the further immigration of Chineses without violating the constitutional rights of any class of the community or the best interests of your excellency's people.

This would indeed be a greater achievement than any present application of so disputed a law, and I respectfully urge that before considering the replies to be made by your excellency to the points enumerated above the matter may be laid before His Excellency the President of the Republic with the request that by the exercise of the Executive Power the application of Law 50 may be postponed for further consideration by the next Assembly.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Panama, November 13, 1913.

My despatch of October 21. Panama Government having refused to modify essential provisions of Law 50 and subsequent decrees providing for registration and taxation or expulsion of Chinese Colony, the Chinese have unanimously refused to register with the Panama Government, fearing in any compliance with the law a loss of constitutional rights and continued extortionate taxation. Panaman Government has suddenly terminated period of negotiations and sent ultimatum, confirmed at personal interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, withdrawing all rights, including those of liberty and residence, from entire colony if the latter fail to commence registering with the Government within seventy-two hours expiring tomorrow noon. Chinese at large meeting have absolutely refused to comply with the law under present terms.

Immediate cause of crisis appears to be enactment and enforcement of recent Executive Decree No. 72 of 1913 which (1) refuses passports and terminates further rights of residence to any Chinaman leaving the country without having registered; and (2) refuses to permit Chinese now abroad but possessing passports entitling them to return to Panama, commonly issued by the Government and for which Chinese have paid heavy fees, to embark for return to Panama without having appeared before the Panama Consul in the port of embarkation and agreed in writing to register upon arrival. I have protested against this decree as seemingly a retroactive violation of passport or breach of contract.

Panaman Government having failed in efforts to start registration threatens as first step to arrest tomorrow and imprison one hundred of the more prominent Chinese merchants and thus force the remainder to register. I have urged without avail further extension of the time for application of the law, a modification of the proposed measures for its enforcement or in some less provocative way the taking of a test case before the court.

Presence of large number of unemployed in Panama dependent on Chinese for cheap daily food lends importance to probable closing of Chinese shops. American banking and commercial credits with the Chinese amounting to quarter million dollars affected by precarious position of Chinese colony. Please repeat as much as seems advisable to American Legation Peking for the information of Chinese Government and advise action in case of American interests openly affected.

AMERICAN LEGATION. Panama, November 17, 1913.

My November 14. Panaman Government has ordered, through resolution of the Governor of Province of Panama declared to be authorized under article 18 of Law 50, the arrest, placing at hard labor for six months and final expulsion from the country of ten prominent Chinese merchants, with more to follow unless Chinese colony commences registration with the Panaman Government within the ten days allowed. Regrettable, because Chinese for the moment too excited quietly to consider registration, upon issuance of new and more satisfactory cédula which a week ago they might have accepted, and have closed their shops. Poorer classes feeling effect in rising prices. Rice at four cents, now ten.

Unsigned circular has been issued announcing public meeting tonight to congratulate the Government. Marshal informs me he will attend although meeting disavowed as Government measure. I have called his attention to possible danger of meeting causing unfortunate incidents and warned Chinese to stay indoors, formally disclaiming all responsibility on the part of Chinese Colony and Government for any resulting injury to property of Chinese or foreign interests, and requesting full police protection for Chinese person and property, which has been assured.

My November 17, and particularly enclosure to my despatch Octo-

I am convinced, following long talks with Chinese merchants, that the only solution now lies in placing entire matter in the hands of National Assembly either at its regular session next October or preferably in session specially summoned to discuss modifications of Law 50, particularly terms of new cédula and Chinese rights under it with the elimination of certain objectionable paragraphs. New law imperatively needed and National Assembly, with the President, seems alone empowered to alter the acknowledged objectionable features. Chinese colonies in South America now looking to Panama. Deadlock results necessity on the part of Panaman Government unless special session summoned to apply law in unmodified form. Verbal assurances of Minister for Foreign Affairs convinces me all reasonable modifications will be discussed if matter is put in the hands of National Assembly.

In the absence of instructions, I have directed, with the entire approval of Chinese colony, every effort toward this end looking to regular session of National Assembly. Present situation seems to make advisable immediate calling of special session. If this course is approved request from Peking urgent support in this matter.

The Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Minister.

Foreign Office, Peking, November 15, 1913.

Six: I have just received a telegram from the Chinese Consul General in Panama stating that the Secretary of the American Legation in Panama, acting for the Chinese Consul, addressed an inquiry to the Panaman Government in regard to the harsh laws, and that Government replied to him that the Chinese were an inferior race not entitled to the protection of the Constitution, and that these harsh laws would be put ino effect within seventy-two hours.

I have the honor to refer to the fact that in September of this year the Panaman Government suddenly withdrew the exequatur of Consul General Ou-yang King on the ground that he was giving illegal protection to Chinese residents in that country.

This Ministry, considering that Panama was laboring under many misunderstandings, was under the immediate necessity of devising some method of straightening out the difficulty and therefore requested that the American Chargé d'Affaires in Panama might act temporarily on behalf of Chinese residents in the conducting of diplomatic negotiations. The Ministry therefore addressed a note to Mr. E. T. Williams, American Chargé d'Affaires, asking him to transmit its request to the American Government to present for it to the Panaman Government the alternative measure proposed by the Chinese Government, consulting with the Panaman Government and stating that the sole object of the measure was the conservation of international amity, in the sense indicated in the telegram received from the Chinese Consul in Panaman.

The present action of the Panaman Government in insulting a friendly nation and offering a slight to Chinese residents is highly objectionable. This Ministry is telegraphing instructions to Charge d'Affaires Chang in Washington to request the aid of the Department of State in settling matters by negotiation with the Panaman Government. But in addition to this action I have the honor to make a renewed request of the American Minister, namely that out of regard for the friendship between the two nations you will telegraph to the American Government conveying the hope of the Chinese Government and requesting it further to extend its friendly offices.

This Ministry lately received a telegram from the Chinese residents in Panama stating that Cyrus F. Wicker, Esquire, Secretary of American Legation in Panama, is very conversant with the details of this matter and requesting that subsequent to the arrival of the new American Minister Mr. Wicker continue to be entrusted with the sole management thereof. I have the honor to make the comment with regard to this request that ever since Mr. Wicker began acting for the Chinese Consul Mr. Wicker has shown himself most zealous in his attention to this subject, greatly to the gratitude and gratification of the Chinese residents. If, therefore, it would be possible for you to telegraph to the Department of State asking whether it would not be possible to direct Mr. Wicker to continue the direction of this affair until the arrival of the new Chinese Consul, I should be both highly pleased and grateful.

The Department's November 12 and November 18. Minister for Foreign Affairs says no objection on the part of the Panaman Government to receive new Chinese Consul General, adding his hope to arrive at some comprehensive solution of difficulty before his arrival. Courtesies, exact nature as yet undefined, will be extended Chinese Consul General Ow Yang. Minister for Foreign Affairs has requested me to communicate to the Chinese promises of his intention to effect modifications, and particularly certain more favorable interpretations of the law, in the near future if the Chinese will commence registering now with the Panaman Government, but that he is unable to state these promises in writing. I have communicated these proposals to their leaders. Chinese at meeting last night considered and finally rejected these proposals, regarding registration of even a few as recognizing the loss of acquired rights of all who possess cédula, and decided to await word from Peking. Chinese shops universally closed and some distress poorer classes.

I am taking greatest care in following instructions, distinguishing my position in charge of the interests of China in Panama from that of the Secretary of the American Legation, so as not to involve the United States interests. Chinese taking inventories of their goods are depositing these with me for safekeeping in the event of their being deported.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

At the beginning of the present year the American Foreign Office through its representative here, expressed to our Government its desire to learn the mind of the Peruvian Government with regard to the opening of the Panama Canal and the bearing of that work on the different Peruvian enterprises, as well as our Government's economic policy with respect to the Canal and its influence on the development of our home and foreign trade.

The American Foreign Office also expressed its keen desire to be furnished with a summary of the projects, both municipal and national, for the improvement of our ports and harbors as well as sanitary works.

Our ideas and intentions in this interesting matter were duly communicated to the American Government.

Our Minister at Washington has already visited San Francisco, California, with the object of selecting a site for the installation of our Pavilion at the International Exposition of 1915, which is to celebrate the termination of the Panama Canal.

In view of the positive interest to the solution of the problem of national education, which is the subject to be dealt with at the Congress of School Hygiene to meet at Buffalo in August next, our Government has accepted the invitation tendered it by the United States and appointed as its Delegates, Dr. Luis Miró Quesada, a distinguished Professor of Pedagogy of the University of St. Mark, and Dr. Francisco Graña, Professor of Hygiene of the Faculty of Medicine.

In May last the capital was visited by a distinguished and numerous group of representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston who were received with proper attention and cordiality.

PUTUMAYO AFFAIR.

The region of the Putumayo which, for reasons it would be sad to recall, has given cause for comment and exaggerated alarm both at home and abroad, which have not always been based on facts, has been the object of continual and preferential attention on the part of the Government, with such success that, thanks to the measures adopted, both judicial and administrative action are widely felt in our river regions within a spirit of order, of guaranties, and the tranquillity so peremptorily required.

In order to obtain the practical and immediate results aimed at by the various measures taken for the evangelization and civilization of the tribes of aborigines which are still to be found in a savage state in that section of our territory, the Government is engaged in securing for those regions the most appropriate and efficacious ecclesiastical administration so that the same may be felt in the most positive manner and in harmony with the national patronage and the sovereign rights of the Republic.

The Government, in its lively desire to carry out the dictates of justice, and interested as it is in maintaining the good name of the Nation, has endeavored at all times to facilitate the prosecution of the trial which was instituted in consequence of the criminal acts committed in the rubber regions of the Putumayo, in order that the punishment of the law shall fall on the guilty parties. For that purpose the Government has given to the judicial functionaries all the guaranties necessary for the accomplishment of their duties and at the same time has appointed to hold the public offices men of fitting, honest and energetic character who shall consolidate a régime of morality and the supremacy of the law in that part of our territory.

The result so far obtained is completely satisfactory as proved by the rapid and effective action of justice and the public tranquillity which reigns in those districts.

Alarm and uneasiness have therefore disappeared which might affect the prestige of the Nation with regard to the crimes of a purely individual character perpetrated in former years which have given to the foreign press a theme on which to deal harshly with Peru, without bearing in mind events which have recently happened in regions which are much nearer to the centers of civilization.

PERU-ECUADOR BOUNDARY DISPUTE.

[Summary.]

The questions at issue in connection with the Peru-Ecuador boundary 1 have been taken up by the two Governments at some length and in a spirt of the greatest cordiality. The Government of Peru is in accord with the suggestion made by the Mediatory Powers in 1910, that the question be brought before The Hague for settlement. A bulletin issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs deals at considerable length with the results of the various conferences, as well as with the deplorable happenings on the Morona river.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Lima, July 25, 1913.

A mob yesterday surrounded the house of the President of the Senate and another took possession of the Senate Chamber. The cause is said to be the recognition on July 23 of the credentials of an anti-administration Senator. The President, Mr. Billinghurst, is said to have inspired both attacks, in an alleged determination to prevent Congress from convening because a majority of each House is against him.

Last night ex-President Leguía telephoned me that his residence had been attacked by a mob for three hours and was defended by only six men. He asked for and was offered asylum at the Legation in protection of innocent human life if he could make his escape. He and his son were arrested later, and this morning at 2.30 they were placed in the penitentiary. Two of the mob were killed and several wounded.

Doubt as to the constitutionality of President Billinghurst's election and his alleged pro-Chilean sympathies have aroused extreme opposition and his deposition by Congress is freely predicted. The Civilista (Leguía) party controls both Houses, and Leguía's brother, who is First Vice President, would succeed to the Presidency.

Both Houses meet to-day preliminary to the regular session on July 28, and trouble is predicted.

Your July 29. Vice President Leguía has been given asylum by the Italian Minister, who informed the Foreign Office on July 26 of the rumored attempt on the life of ex-President Leguía, who is still a prisoner. The representations of the Italian Minister were supported by the British and Brazilian Ministers and my own, asking for an ample guard. The Under Secretary of State assured me later that he had communicated these representations to the President. No attempt has been made on the life of the ex-President and indications forecast temporary quiet.

American Legation, Lima, August 3, 1913.

Sir: Following my cablegrams of July 25 and July 31, I have the honor to report further upon the subject of the attack by a mob upon the residence of ex-President Leguía on the night of July 24, 1913, as well as to briefly narrate the political situation as viewed by the followers and opponents of President Billinghurst. * * *

A few days prior to the regular convening of Congress on July 28 each House sits to pass upon the credentials of new members, the officers still presiding until the election of their successors by the new Congress. On July 23 the credentials of an anti-Billinghurst Senator were recognized by the President of the Senate, after his election had been contested and decided in his favor by the Supreme Court. The President is reported to have resented this action on the ground that this Senator opposed the terms of the Government's proposition for settling the Tacna-Arica question with Chile. A crowd of two or three hundred people, as reported, created much disorder before the Senate Chamber. That night an effort was made to dynamite the residence of the President of the Senate. The next day a mob surrounded his residence and prevented his leaving it, and another took possession of the Senate Chamber. It was on that night that the house of Mr. Leguía was attacked, about 6.30 o'clock. * * *

The ex-President continues a prisoner at the penitentiary but will be allowed from yesterday to receive visitors. Rumors of both extremes are: that he will be exiled from the country, or will be given freedom if he will promise to leave the country, which he refused to do; on the other hand, that he will be given his freedom unconditionally in a day or two, for want of any proof against him, or will be given a trial, charge not known. * *

No. 231.7

AMERICAN LEGATION, Lima, August 19, 1913.

Sir: Supplementing the Legation's No. 228 of August 3, 1913, and the cablegrams of July 25, July 31, August 5, August 8 and August 10, concerning the attack by a mob upon the residence of former President Leguía, his subsequent arrest and imprisonment, and finally his deportation from the country, I have the honor to report additional details, as well as upon the present political conditions.

I have been favored by the Italian Minister with a copy of his note addressed to the Foreign Office, dated July 25, 1913, informing the Peruvian Government that Vice President Roberto Leguía had taken refuge, and been given asylum, in that Legation on that day. It will be noted that such asylum was sought the same night on which the residence of the former President was attacked. The French Minister also informed me that another brother, Carlos Leguía, Vice President of the Senate, had asked for, and been offered, asylum in the French Legation, provided he found that the necessity therefor should exist.

The Peruvian Foreign Office replied to the Italian Minister on July 29 stating that no order for the arrest of the Señor Leguía in question had been issued. It was then that the latter left the Italian Legation. I have learned that the Italian Minister, in addition to writing the Foreign Office, personally asked for and was furnished a guard of half a dozen soldiers, who were placed within the Legation residence.

I have sought this information because it will preserve written evidence of the recognition by the Peruvian Government of the right of a political refugee to seek and be accorded asylum in the legation of a foreign country, which may prove of value in the future and serve as a precedent.

Concerning the departure of ex-President Leguía, as reported in the Legation's August 8, and supplementing statements there made, there has been no positive obtainable information as to the exact terms of his departure. President Billinghurst said to me in the first interview after the mob's attack that Mr. Leguía's friends were trying to induce him to go abroad. He said he was perfectly willing that the trial upon the charge growing out of the night of July 24 (he did not name the charge) should be postponed, and that Mr. Leguía should go abroad under bond, but that he demanded a previous hearing or that such charge be dismissed. The President added that he was perfectly willing that he be set free, but he said: "I can not be responsible for his safety." He further said that Mr. Leguía had acted hastily in firing upon the mob, etc., and his attitude was that of an observer of passing events. From the fact that Mr. Leguía was accompanied by Señor Gabriel Bernales, a Comisario of the sixth district, which includes the Leguía residence, and also by the Minister of Government and Police, Colonel Gonzalo Tirado, it would seem that his departure was a deportation from the country rather than upon any agreed terms.

On yesterday the papers announced that Vice President Roberto Leguía had sailed for Valparaiso under an assumed name on the junction of the Morona and Cagimina Rivers 1 in the Oriental region, by the Jibaros Indians.

The Government of Ecuador has taken occasion to protest formally to the Government at Lima on account of the presence of Peruvian troops in this locality, claiming that the territory in question is within the limits of Ecuador, and has requested that the Peruvian troops be withdrawn.

To this note the Peruvian Government instructed its Chargé d'Affaires in Quito to reply verbally to the Ecuadorian Foreign Office as follows:

1. The Morona River district is regarded by the Government of Peru as Peruvian territory.

2. Ecuador has no right to protest against the Peruvian occupation of this locality because Ecuador has failed to comply with the conditions of the Treaty of 1887, which provided for submitting the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador to the arbitration of the King of Spain.

3. The Peruvian Government declined to withdraw its troops.

I am informed that since the attack by the Indians above mentioned the Peruvian garrison at the junction of the Morona and Cagimina Rivers has been increased by three hundred men.

Department's telegram May 19 to Peru. I have had a long interview with Dillon, Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs. He believes there must be a mistake in the telegram from Lima, as he understands that the President of Peru wishes the Ecuadorian Government to ask for withdrawal of troops whose presence is regarded as a violation of status quo, which demand would give him sufficient excuse for withdrawal.

Regarding general boundary dispute, Minister said positively that Ecuador could never allow such an important matter, involving its very life, to be submitted to The Hague, but that his Government was prepared at any time to take up direct settlement and to appoint a plenipotentiary to meet a Peruvian plenipotentiary in any American capital, preferably Washington. He much appreciated, as did the Ecuadorian people, the good offices of the United States.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs today requested the Brazilian Minister and myself to come to the Foreign Office, where he said that the Ecuadorian Minister at Santiago had made the following statement to the Argentine Minister there:

Since the defeat suffered by a Peruvian force attacked by Jibaros [Indians], Peru has entered into military occupation of Morona, violating by this act the status quo of 1910.

The Government of Ecuador has protested energetically, requesting the recall of the Peruvian troops.

The Peruvian Government in reply requests that the solution of this incident be submitted to the Mediators.

The attack of the Jibaros took place in territory not disputed by Peru, and it is an established and proven fact that it was provoked by Peruvian soldiers who pillaged the Jibaros cabins and violated women.

The Ecuadorian Government wishes to know whether the Mediators are resolved upon requiring from Peru respect for the status quo of 1910, for otherwise if Peru shows herself irreducible Ecuador will appeal to force of arms, declining all responsibility for what may happen to Peru.

Doctor Bosch added that he thought the three Powers should study the matter, and desired your views. I request instructions.

LEGATION OF ECUADOR, Washington, June 5, 1913.

MEMORANDUM.

Mr. Secretary: Ecuador has just been invaded by regular Peruvian troops in the section of the Morona River, the dominion of which Peru has never disputed from Ecuador, as it is clearly demonstrated by the processes upon the boundary dispute between the two countries.

Ecuador has protested at this irritating military occupation and is ready to revindicate its territorial rights by force, if necessary.

Peru has accepted without reserve and has adhered to the Program of Peace suggested by your excellency to avoid future wars; and I believe this is a good opportunity to show to the world the practical results of that program.2

Ecuador, realizing the importance of the Peace Program which your excellency proposed to the nations of the world, has only protested at the unjustified act of invasion effected by Peru, and the Ecuadorian Government cherishes the hope that your excellency may intervene in this regrettable incident which has occurred in the very moment that Peru has made a solemn declaration to adhere to the Program of Peace of your excellency, so enthusiastically received by the whole world.

On the basis of the immediate withdrawal of the troops of Peru from the Morona River, Ecuador would be ready to accept the good offices of the United States of America to settle the incident. This does not mean that Ecuador recognizes or will recognize any right whatsoever of Peru to consider the incident of the military occupation of the Morona River as a principal issue in the boundary controversy that must be carried out and settled directly between the two countries.

Ecuador wants peace, and does not consider that the acts of hostility of Peru against Ecuador are consistent with Peru's declaration of endorsement of your excellency's Peace Program. These acts of hostility on the part of Peru will be productive of bad results as they will place the two countries on the verge of war; and if your excellency wishes to give his attention to this important subject it would afford your excellency an opportunity to render an invaluable service to the noble cause of peace in our continent; and, impressed by this belief, my Government wishes to know the views of your excellency upon this matter.

The President says that nothing can be accomplished by direct negotiations and asks that the mediating powers act as arbitrators; he says that policemen have been kept on the Morona for years as a vanguard protection against savages, and that the recent attack evidences necessity therefor. Peruvian Legation, July 18, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to confirm by this note my night letter of this date, which reads as follows:

The Secretary of State, Washington. I have the honor to inform you that my Government delivered to the diplomatic representatives in Lima of the Mediating Powers a memorandum in reference to the Morona incident. I also beg to inform you that I am addressing a note to you giving the views of my Government for a solution of the boundary dispute with Ecuador. I trust that, as I am in the Yosemite, you will accept this communication; but should you, after receiving my note, desire to discuss the matter, I beg you to advise me % the Peruvian Consul, Los Angeles, and I shall proceed to Washington. Yours very respectfully, (signed) F. A. Pezet, Minister of Peru.

In accordance with the above and acting upon the instructions received, I have the honor to inform you that on the 15th instant my Government handed in to the representatives of the Mediating Powers at Lima a memorandum in which it declared that, following their advice, it had reduced its military forces to a peace footing; that the small detachments of soldiers that it now has on the rivers are solely there for the maintenance of order and a guaranty to life and property in such regions; that peace in the Morona River is threatened by the action of the Ecuadorian Government in granting concessions to European enterprises for the colonization of lands possessed by Peru and occupied by Peruvians; that the recent incidents in the Morona River which culminated in the destruction of the military posts and the killing of soldiers and settlers on that river justified the presence in that region of a military detachment while proving that its force (thirty men) has been entirely inadequate to properly protect the settlers and to maintain order in the region; that, yielding however to a sentiment in favor of peace, and to show its interest in the mediation, and as proof of its desire to avoid delay in reaching a definite solution of the boundary question with Ecuador, it has ordered the Prefect of the Department of Loreto to maintain in the Morona only police authority so as to protect the inhabitants against attacks by the savages and the renewal of occurrences similar to those in the Putumayo region; and, finally, my Government expresses the wish that the Mediating Powers shall be able to carry out their generous intent of bringing Ecuador to agree to their recommendation of taking to The Hague Tribunal the pending controversy, and recalls the fact that Peru has accepted unconditionally this recommendation, as its constant desire has been the settlement of this long pending controversy.

This Legation already has had the honor to bring to your attention the memorandums of July 6 and 29 of the year 1910, and the one of March 25, 1911, and I presume that in view of the personal interest that you have manifested in behalf of a speedy settlement of this boundary dispute, you have read very carefully these important statements that embody the views of my Government in support of the position that it has taken in reference to the controversy, and to the absolute necessity of ending it before an impartial tribunal such as The Hague.

My Government, that has consistently advocated the settlement of international disputes through arbitration, now looks to you as the foremost advocate of this principle and as the prime mover in an international peace policy, to exert your great personal influence to induce the Government of Ecuador to submit to the recommendation of the Mediating Powers.

My Government has shown its love of peace by its unconditional acceptance of the several recommendations of the Mediating Powers; by the manner in which it heeded the advice of the previous Administration in Washington to reduce its military forces to a peace footing; and finally by its avowed purpose of submitting to the eventuality of an arbitral award a question that involves a vast territory over which it not only claims sovereignty but is in actual possession of, whilst its adversary has but a mere claim unsupported by any of the attributes which constitute the essentials of ownership.

In conclusion I would recall that for more than half a century we have tried to reach a definite solution of outstanding boundary questions with our neighbors by direct negotiations; unfortunately all of these have proved ineffectual and the futility of renewing these in any manner or form has been sufficiently proven by subsequent events and by the impossibility of reaching any kind of understanding through the unwillingness of the contending parties to withdraw from their maximum pretensions; so arbitration has been resorted to as the sole means of attaining an end which each party in solemn treaties has acknowledged to be its desideratum and aim.

Consequently my Government can not see any good to be derived from reopening discussions which while they have lasted have not resulted in anything practical and on the contrary have tended, after each successive failure, to embitter the controversy.

However, my Government, bent upon a peaceful settlement of all its pending questions with foreign powers, would feel very grateful if in the present case the Mediating Powers could be convinced that the only solution lies in an arbitration of the question, and then exert all possible influence over the Government of Ecuador to the end that it consent to submit the present dispute to The Hague Tribunal of Arbitration.

I have [etc.]

F. A. Pezet.

[Memorandum—Translation.]

The Peruvian Government, owing to the request of the mediator nations and wishing to avoid every motive that would prevent the solution of the boundary litigation with Ecuador, is disposed to order that the District of Loreto keep in charge in Morona only police agents to protect the civilized inhabitants of that region against the fresh attacks of Indians and to avoid by so doing the reproduction there of the events that took place on the Putumaio. The recall of the troops would not amount to very much if the two countries would not mutually yield in some of their demands. It will be the continuation indefinitely of the status quo which could only create new inconveniences and complications. For that reason the Brazilian Legation at Quito has been instructed to impress upon the Government of Ecuador the importance of it also making some concessions to show a desire to settle this disagreeable question, pointing out the advantage of submitting the question to arbitration, which we always thought the only way to solve it, as it is evident that it is impossible for the two countries to reach a direct agree-As it is possible that Ecuador will continue to refuse The Hague Tribunal, we suggest the choice of the President of the United States, or, in case he also is rejected, to submit the question to a tribunal that would meet in Washington or some other capital, composed of Peruvian and Ecuadorian judges and presided over by a judge of another nationality, which [sic] could be selected later. This would be the practical way to combine the solution by arbitration, which is desired by Peru, as well as by direct accord, which Ecuador wishes. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Argentina is in full accord with this plan and finds the idea of a mixed tribunal excellent. It is necessary now to know the opinion of the American Government on the subject so that the combined mutual action of the three mediator nations will be agreed upon in the presentation of the proposal to the two countries in litigation.

Department of State, Washington, July 22, 1913.

Dear Mr. Chermont: Referring to our conversation this afternoon, I now write to you personally what I then suggested, namely, that if it should be proposed by the mediating powers to Peru and Ecuador that the President of the United States be chosen as arbitrator, it would seem to be more suitable that this proposal should be conveyed to those two Governments by Brazil and Argentina without the nominal concurrence of the United States. Should this proposal be so made and be found to be unacceptable to Ecuador and Peru, then, if it should subsequently be decided to propose the appointment of a mixed commission consisting of a Peruvian, an Ecuadorian, and a citizen of some third power, to sit at Washington or some other American capital, there would be no embarrassment to this Government in joining Brazil and Argentina in making the latter proposal.

Sir: I have the honor to report that upon the receipt of the Department's cablegram of July 11, concerning the Ecuadorian boundary dispute, a paraphrase thereof was submitted to the President and to the Minister for Foreign Affairs. Shortly thereafter the latter asked that I call at his office; and, after expressing his Government's appreciation of the Department's attitude, he read the enclosed memorandum, commenting as he proceeded. Copies have also been given to the Brazilian Minister and Argentine Chargé. I asked whether the rescue soldiers had actually been withdrawn from the Morona, as the memorandum implied. The Minister said that he could not state positively that they had. I replied that the President had said that he refused to withdraw them at the behest of Ecuador because admitting the right to demand it, but that he would do so if Ecuador would agree to arbitrate the boundary dispute. My purpose was to ascertain whether Peru would be unvielding in this small matter, a racial trait; but the Minister was not disposed to depart from the last known expression of the President. The latter, as reported, has denied himself to visitors for many days in the preparation of his message to Congress, and I have no news of a change in the Peruvian attitude as reported in recent cablegrams. As the enclosed memorandum adds nothing thereto, I have not had it translated.

MEMORANDUM.

The Government of Ecuador having protested to the Mediating Powers against the maintenance of a Peruvian detachment sent to the Morona River region for the purpose of rescuing the persons captured by the savages following the massacres committed by the latter, and said Powers having manifested a desire to secure a satisfactory solution of this incident, the Peruvian Foreign Office hereby declares:

1. That the Peruvian Government duly and fully complied with the suggestions of the mediators with respect to a reduction of its military forces to a peace footing.

2. That the detachments which the Loreto Prefecture has kept in the river region have been for the sole purpose of maintaining internal order and affording security to persons and property.

3. That on the Morona River internal quiet was threatened by the attempt at colonization carried out by an European enterprise to which the Ecuadorian Government granted a concession of lands owned by Peru and occupied by Peruvian inhabitants.

4. That the extermination by savages of a detachment of settlers on the shores of the Morona not only justifies the procedure of the Loreto Prefecture but also clearly demonstrates the fact that the forces detached there were still insufficient in number (about thirty men) to accomplish the purpose of maintaining internal order as announced above.

5. That, always deferring to the wishes of the Mediating Powers and desiring to avoid any cause of obstruction of the final settlement of the boundary dispute with Ecuador, the Peruvian is ordering the Loreto Prefecture to keep on the Morona River only mere police officers subject to the civil authorities, charged with guarding civilized inhabitants of that region from fresh attacks by the savage tribes, preventing at the same time by their presence a repetition there of events similar to those that occurred on the Putumayo.

6. That it is the most earnest hope of the Peruvian Government that the Mediating Powers may accomplish their generous purposes by inducing the Government of Ecuador to accept the recommendation, already unconditionally approved by Peru, that the pending boundary controversy be left to the decision of the Tribunal of The Hague.

LEGATION OF PERU. Washington, D. C.

MEMORANDUM.

The Government of Ecuador having addressed itself to the Government of the United States insisting that, thru the mediation of the Argentine Republic, Brazil, and the United States, the Government of Peru be called upon to seek, by a direct discussion, the settlement of the pending boundary questions between Peru and Ecuador, this Chancellery considers that it behooves it to confirm in this memorandum the ideas that it has made manifest already in previous memorandums, giving in detail the reasons that it has for considering as inefficacious and fruitless such a manner of solving the question.

After a discussion that was begun in the first years following the Independence, the Governments of Ecuador and Peru agreed on solving by means of arbitration their boundary differences, and signed a convention dated August 1, 1887, in which H. M. the King of Spain was designated as Arbiter.

The nature of the arbitration agreed upon was to be strictly "juris" and the award final and without appeal in accordance with article 1 of the convention.

It was further established in this convention that before the rendering of the award, and in the shortest time possible after the exchange, "both parties should do their utmost to reach by direct negotiations a settlement of all or of some of the points embraced in the boundary questions," and that if such agreements should be perfected in conformity with such proceedings as govern the validity of public treaties, they should be made known to His Catholic Majesty and the arbitration be considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended, or limited to the points are considered as ended as a considered as a considered as a considered as a considered not agreed upon, as the case might be. And there was added that in default of a direct agreement, the arbitration should hold in all its fullness.1

In conformity with this stipulation, the Government of Ecuador, after the exchange of the convention on arbitration and when the King of Spain had accepted the designation to be Arbiter, invited the Government of Peru on December 28th, 1888, to a direct discussion of the question, to see if it were possible to reach a friendly agreement as a compromise, without prejudice to the continuation of the arbitration proceedings. The Government of Peru accepted the invitation tendered it and gave full powers to its Minister at Quito, Senor Garcia, for such negotiations.

These negotiations in behalf of a direct agreement were begun on October

These negotiations in behalf of a direct agreement were begun on October 28, 1889, and concluded on May 2, 1890, with the signing of the treaty "Garcia Herrera" in which was stipulated the boundary line that appears in the Annex No. 1 (green line, on the accompanying map).

By this treaty Peru ceded the greater portion of the river Pastaza, the rivers Santiago and Morona, and one shore of the Marañón between the Chinchipe and the Pastaza, notwithstanding that in the protocols of the conference that preceded the agreement it was fully demonstrated, without any contradiction from the Ecuadorian plenipotentiary, that the Marañón as likewise the rivers Santiago, Morona and Pastaza, had remained since the incorporation of Mainas to Peru, by the Royal Cédula of 1802, subject to the Peruvian authorities and under the effective sovereignty of Peru.

The Peruvian plenipotentiary called attention to the fact that our country was sacrificing in its desire to attain a settlement "the possession that she holds on the left bank of that great river (Amazon) from the Chinchipe to the Pastaza.

The foregoing considerations explain why the Garcia-Herrera treaty was warmly accepted by the political leaders of Ecuador, the Congress of which approved it unanimously; while on the other hand a formidable opposition against it was raised in the Peruvian Congress. The jurists, well knowing the strength of the titles that assisted Peru, could not consider acceptable so great a sacrifice of perfectly clear rights, and the representatives in Congress of the Department whose citizens inhabited and explored the regions that were going to be turned over to Ecuador, made strenuous efforts to obtain that the treaty be not approved.

The Congress of Peru desiring, however, to reach a settlement even though ceding a portion of the territory which both by right and in effect belong to Peru, resolved to accept the treaty, but on the condition that two amendments should be introduced, (dotted green line on the accompanying map) so that a part of the rivers Morona and Pastaza and of the territory ceded in the region of the river Napo, should remain within Peru.

The Government of Ecuador did not accept said modifications and it withdrew its approbation from the treaty.

As a result of the aforesaid events that define in a manner absolutely unquestionable the interests and aspirations of both nations as to the projected boundary line, the arbitral proceedings as a matter of fact came to a standstill, but by no means were they broken, because by virtue of the treaty the proceedings had to follow their natural course after the direct negotiations had failed.

The ample discussion between the negotiators that the agreement of 1890 gave rise to, the thorough study of it by technical commissions and by the Congress of both nations, and the heated polemics in the press, proved with absolute and conclusive evidence the utter impossibility of arriving at a direct settlement; as the agreement that was satisfactory to Ecuador, such as the Garcia-Herrera treaty, was not acceptable to Peru, and the one that even incompletely considered the interests of Peru, such as the line proposed by the Peruvian Congress, encountered serious opposition on the part of Ecuador.

After the disavowal of the Garcia-Herrera treaty, Peru, actuated by a friendly sentiment towards Colombia, accepted the indication to discuss conjointly with said Republic and with Ecuador, the boundary problems pending with both nations. The result of these negotiations was the convention for an arbitration of equity agreed upon by the three nations on the 15th of December, 1894. This convention was approved by Peru and Colombia, but did not receive the sanction of the Congress of Ecuador, and thus the tripartite arbitration failed.

The absolute faith of the Government of Peru in the validity of its titles from a juridic standpoint induced it to work for the carrying out of the convention of 1887 and obtain that Ecuador should remove the obstacles that she had presented for the prosecution of the arbitration proceedings. After protracted negotiations the desired end was attained in 1904.

The arbitral proceedings having been renewed, Peru and Ecuador presented to the Arbiter their respective defenses, which were submitted for study to a Technical Commission appointed by H. M. the King of Spain. The commission after a thorough examination of the allegations and proofs adduced by each, presented to H. M. a finding in which it proposed as a boundary between both-countries the line that appears in the Annex No. 3¹ (black line on the accompanying map).

This decision and its findings were the subjects of renewed study by the Council of State. This High Body submitted the question of [sic] its Permanent Commission, who introduced into the boundary line proposed by the Technical Commission the modifications favorable to Peru, which appear in Annex No. 4¹ (red line in the accompanying map).

This notwithstanding, the Council of State meeting as a full Body concluded by adopting the same findings as the Technical Commission, although it recognized the fundamental right as presented by its Permanent Commission.

At this stage of the proceedings news of an extra-official character reached Ecuador and Peru, in reference to the boundary lines suggested in the said findings.

These boundary lines produced a very disappointing impression on public opinion in Peru as they barely indicated some modifications favorable to Peru from the line of the Garcia-Herrera Treaty, while they were decidedly less favorable, than the line which the Peruvian Congress considered as indispensable to the needs of Peru.

However, the Government of Peru, being absolutely confident in the justice of its cause, limited itself to reiterate to the Arbiter its confidence and instructed its Plenipotentiaries in Madrid to redouble their efforts to the end that the Arbiter should concede to Peru a line that would better conform to her interests and rights.

In the meanwhile, in Ecuador, the press attacked most vehemently the line proposed by the Technical Commission, although this line did not substantially differ from the one of the Garcia-Herrera Treaty which had been unanimously accepted by her Congress in 1890 and when by reason thereof Ecuador would have extended her jurisdiction to points where it had never reached or been able to reach.

This propaganda produced its effects. In the first place it determined the Government of Ecuador to paralyze the arbitral proceedings or to break them, so as to attempt direct negotiations on bases more convenient to its pretensions; and later it brought about amongst the masses of the people a current of opinion hostile to Peru, that caused them to perpetrate the lamentable acts of April 3, 1910, without any provocation for such excesses from either the Government or the people of Peru.²

As a consequence of the attacks that were made on that date upon the Peruvian Legation in Quito and our Consulate in Guayaquil, a very perilous situation akin to an armed conflict was created, and it was then that the Governments of the United States, Argentina and Brazil interposed the weight of their authority and influence in behalf of peace.

Peru readily accepted unconditionally the mediation tendered, and which came to reinvigorate the principle of arbitration, invariably upheld by Peru, as the most honorable method of solving international conflicts.

Ecuador, likewise accepted the mediation tendered, but expressed the desire that the solution of the question should be sought by direct settlement, in the discussion of which Colombia should participate.

The Mediating Powers then addressed to Ecuador and Peru a new memorandum, wherein they stated that the acceptance of their mediation implied the acceptance of their condition to the exclusion of all other conditions.

Ecuador insisted in demanding a direct settlement, invoking Article 6 of the Convention of 1887 and declaring that the resistance on the part of Peru to comply with it was equivalent to the rescinding of the treaty.4

In answer to a question from the Legation of Chile in reference to this matter the State Department at Washington addressed said Legation, a memorandum that was likewise sent to Peru and Ecuador. This memorandum expressed the sorrow of the State Department that it could not receive with its usual good will the proposal contained in the memorandum of May 26th, because said proposal invoked article 6 of the Arbitral Convention of 23 years previous, and, based on this, at the last hour, without the consent of Peru and as by right, it insisted on the idea of direct settlement, which had already failed on former occasions.

Ecuador in answer to said memorandum reiterated her demand, and subsequently addressed a new communication in which she asked that dates be fixed for conferences wherein would be discussed a compromise designating Washington as the place of conference.1

The mediating Powers submitted to the consideration of both Governments a protocol which in reference to the boundary question stipulated that Ecuador and Peru should await events, and accept the action of the mediation in case that the rendering of the Spanish award should be withheld indefinitely, or that difficulties should arise after its promulgation, or that the two nations should wish to enter upon some direct settlement, they being obligated to consider as binding the boundary line that might result from the action of the mediation.

The Government of Peru, that has entire faith in the strength of its titles, was disposed to accept the protocol with the same sincerity with which it had accepted the mediation.

Not so the Government of Ecuador, the Chancellery of which addressed to the representatives of the mediating Powers a note in which it stated that acceding to the friendly advices of Chile, it asked that the protocol should be modified in the sense that the arbitration by Spain should be discarded, and a solution of the boundary question sought by means of a direct settlement. This attitude was the occasion for a memorandum from the mediating powers to the Ecuadorian Government in which they stated that they deplored the attitude of Ecuador, that signified in their judgement, either a wish not to terminate pacifically the boundary question, or else a lack of confidence in the mediators.

Such was the state of affairs when in November 1910, the Spanish Monarch excused himself from pronouncing an award.4

The Mediating Powers under date of December 29th of said year, advised the Government of Ecuador and Peru to submit their pending boundary dispute to the Hague Arbitration Tribunal.⁵ Peru accepted the new proposal; but Ecuador manifested that she could not accede to said advice because the question with Peru involved her sovereignty, and that, therefore, it could not be included in article 38 of the Hague Convention on Arbitration.⁶

Having restated the antecedents of the case it is now necessary to explain Peru's position in the disputed territory, in order to reaffirm the reasons that lead Peru to consider ineffectual all attempts for a direct settlement.

Peru exercises full dominion over the territories claimed by Ecuador, and not only has she the support of complete and effective possession but also that of the geographic conditions of the zone under dispute.

The Department of Loreto with over 200,000 inhabitants constitutes an indissoluble organism that has its axis the course of the Marañón, called down stream "Amazon," to which converge as northern arteries the rivers Santiago, Morona, Pastaza, Tigre, Napo, Putumayo and Caquetá. The regions watered by said rivers form one continuous and inseparable whole. Its industrial life depends on the Peruvian towns situated on both banks of the Marañón. The capital of the Department, the city of Iquitos, is the center of the vast organism, and from it flow all elements of culture and of economic prosperity, extending from there to the limits of fluvial navigation.

The influence of Iquitos extends over all of the affluents of the Marañón. The colonists that live on the banks of those rivers could not exist if from Iquitos they did not receive the necessaries for their sustenance.

It is indispensable that the Governments of the Mediating Powers should have a perfect conception of what the Department of Loreto means to the Peruvian nation. The revenue of its custom houses constitute the fifth of the total customs revenues of the Republic. Iquitos has a population of over 20,000. It is the capital of the Department, seat of the Prefecture and of a Superior Court of Justice, center of the fifth Military Zone. Most of the nations maintain at Iquitos consular representatives, even unto Ecuador, although her territorial pretensions reach out to the Amazon, and thereby include the said city.

⁵ Id., pp. 506-507. ⁶ For. Rel. 1911, pp. 177-180.

The Marañón and Amazon as far as the Brazilian frontier are absolutely and thoroughly Peruvian. This explains the discontent aroused in Peru by the Garcia-Herrera Treaty and the decided opposition of the Department of Loreto to the supposed line of the Spanish award. The Minister for Foreign affairs was interpellated by the 1910 Congress in secret sessions, a great number of representatives being of opinion that in view of the probable terms of the award it was preferable to postpone its rendering; manifestations were started throughout Loreto and petitions against the possible award were circulated and signed. The fact being that the lines of the various findings affected and harmed Peruvian interests, even unto the line most favorable to Peru, the one recommended by the Permanent Commission, which left to Ecuador the river Santiago, a large portion of the Morona and one bank of the Marañón regions in actual exploitation by Peruvians, leaving to Ecuador an opening on the Marañon, that is to say, on a river upon which the flag of Ecuador has never been seen.

The preceding considerations make it clear why Peru refuses to entertain direct negotiations and the reason she has for considering them as to no purpose.

Settlements by means of direct negotiations imply solutions thru compromise, inspired on principles of equity and of a just appreciation of the interests of

It is a fact, amply indicated in all the foregoing, and which is known to all, and has been acknowledged by the public men of Ecuador in official publications and in articles in the press that Peru possesses and exploits nearly the whole of the region that Ecuador lays claim to.

Ecuador, on the other hand, merely has in the region of the Oriente aspirations and ideals with no actual base; and furthermore, due to unsurmountable geographical conditions, with no prospect of a substantial base in the future. because it is a well known fact that the development and the economic advancement of regions traversed by navigable rivers do not follow a down-stream course but run counter to the stream, so therefore, in the development of such regions the influence of the nation that possesses the lower reaches of the river and their mouths predominates. Specially is this so in the case of Ecuador that by reason of her difficulty of access to the Oriente, can scarcely make felt her influence even at the head waters of the rivers.

Consequently the territory in dispute is and shall be essentially Peruvian, by reason of every factor, historic, geographic and political.

But there is even more. The aspirations of Ecuador, leaving out the exaggeration of her demands—a method of defense in judicial proceedings had their inception in the Garcia-Herrera Treaty which her public men received with applause and her Congress approved with significant unanimity; whereas the interests of Peru in 1891 were expressed by the modifications introduced and demanded by the Congress of that year in order to accept the Garcia-Herrera Treaty.

Since the year 1891 the situation has changed, modified by the natural course of events in a sense favorable to Peru and decidedly adverse to Ecuador. The interests of Peru have grown in an astonishing manner in the region. The line of demarcation which the Congress of 1891 had resigned itself to accept would now harm interests of so great an importance that the Government of Peru could not consider itself at liberty to adopt it. The formula that Peru cannot separate itself in behalf of an equitable compromise from the absolute respect for her own possessions could readily be established.

It would be unjustifiable for us not to maintain strictly the principle of possession when along with the possession for over a century there are our historic titles acknowledged in part by a reliable arbiter.

On her part, Ecuador found inacceptable the probable line of the award, a line that Peru could not agree upon in a direct settlement, due to the fact that it jeopardizes to a great extent her rights.

In a direct discussion our nation can not surrender territories which she possesses; and even although she would have accepted the award of the King of Spain out of respect to the agreement contracted, she could not of her own accord have ceded the same; while to enter into a treaty that should consider a less favorable boundary line would be impossible; the entire nation could reject such a treaty. And as Ecuador wishes to better in her favor the boundary line of the Spanish findings the failure of direct negotiations is inevitable.

In view of the fact that it is impossible to conciliate in a direct agreement the interests real, effective and vital that Peru has in the disputed territories with the ideals and aspirations of Ecuador in the same regions, it becomes evident that nothing other than an arbitration de juris [sic] which would have the full force and prestige of the International Tribunal of The Hague can settle this boundary dispute.

For this reason Peru hastened to express her willingness when the mediating powers advised such a mode of settlement, because she considers it to be the only possible manner of ending this long-standing controversy.

The Chancellery of Ecuador declined the invitation because she considered that her dispute with Peru "does not refer to a mere delimitation or rectification of boundary lines but to the dominion and sovereignty of very vast territories; to the very life of Ecuador who, without the possession of the zone that Peru claims, would be dead to all future developments." And it further added, "the boundary question is to us a question of existence; and by reason of the same can not be included in article 38 of The Hague Convention.'

It is necessary to observe, before all else, the curious fact that Ecuador should consider as being absolutely essential to her existence as a free nation the possession of territorial divisions that since the time of the Independence until now have remained under our own sovereignty.

Ecuador has existed during nearly a century as an independent nation without having possessed or even possessing at this date the territories that she claims from Peru.

But there is even more: by the physical nature of said territories, Ecuador has been unable to exercise sovereignty over them nor will she in the future be able to make apparent her influence there; whereas to definitely consolidate Peru's sovereignty over the northern affluents of the Amazon, the region under dispute, several special conditions have contributed, notably the free vote of its townships at the time of the Declaration of Independence, their invariable adhesion to Peruvian nationality for over a century, the acts of the Administration and of the citizens of Peru who by strenuous efforts have carried civilization to those far off regions; and besides all this there are to be considered the salient features of the topography of the region, the course of the rivers—in a word, the whole of nature.

When a nation has lived and has developed as Ecuador has done without any need of the territories that she claims, her references to vital interests and to future development are lacking completely in sincerity. needs of organisms can not be abstract, and when they really exist they determine concrete expansion.

Besides, Ecuador has given to article 38 of The Hague Convention such restricted interpretation that it conflicts with its own terms and with the antecedents of the discussions on arbitration. None of the articles approved in the chapter relative to arbitral justice establishes the exclusion of arbitration from the juridic controversies that may be of exceptional importance to the disputing nations, which is the case in the boundary question between Peru and Ecuador.

To appreciate the sentiment with which Ecuador accepted the ample declarations of the Arbitral Convention it will suffice to recall the statements that the Ecuadorian Delegate made before the Congress of The Hague in the name of his Government and his country, at the time that arbitration was under discussion:

The Delegation of the Republic of Ecuador has the honor to declare and in the name of its Government that it will fully agree to such propositions as may tend to establish the obligatory recourse to courts of arbitration for the pacific solution of international conflicts; or at least to render such proceedings usual and as frequent as possible, reducing thereby when practicable the numbers of cases that are not submitted to this high jurisdiction jurisdiction.

The Republic of Ecuador in so doing faithfully adheres to the principles it has always sustained. And in regard to this subject we take the liberty to recall that Ecuador had the honor, more than nineteen years ago, to succeed in having a general clause of arbitration included for the first time in France in a treaty on friendship, commerce, and navigation which treaty unfortunately was not approved by the French Parliament.

During the last twenty years Ecuador has stipulated numerous conventions of arbitration and has signed various agreements appointing arbitrators and enacting the proceedings to be followed in order to reason a pacific solution of the controversies she has pending with other nations. At this very time our boundary question with Peru is submitted to the arbitration of H. M. the King of Spain.

We have therefore always sustained the principle of arbitration and we have always applied it when possible. We would deem ourselves fortunate indeed could we contribute to render the practice customary if not obligatory in solving all international conflicts, for we consider that if, as has been stated, peace is the normal condition among nations, arbitration should be the normal solution to all difficulties arising among them. (Deuxième Conférence Internationale de la Paix; Tome 11, page 274.)

Ecuador declared, as has been shown, in favor of the compulsory recourse to arbitration for the peaceful settlement of international conflicts, without any restrictions. She recalled the invariable tradition of her Chancellery in the matter, and precisely stated that she had submitted to arbitration her boundary dispute with Peru, and which now in forgetfulness of her own declarations and of the words cited she pretends to exclude from the jurisdiction of The Hague International Tribunal.

This new Ecuadorian doctrine, which for the first time appeared on her obtaining knowledge of a project of award rendered precisely on the same dispute and in respect of an arbitration to which the Government was a party of its own free will, does not conform with the diplomatic history of Latin America nor with that of Ecuador.

The greater number of Latin American controversies have been settled through arbitration. Thus we have:

The dispute between Brazil and Argentina over the territory of Misiones (30,000 square kilometers) settled by the award of the President of the United States:

The dispute between Brazil and France over Guayana, settled by the award of the Swiss Government;

The dispute between Brazil and Great Britain over Guayana, settled by H. M.

the King of Italy;

The dispute between Argentine and Chile (94,000 square kilometers) settled by the award of H. M. the King of Great Britain;

The dispute between Argentine and Paraguay over the region between the rivers Verde and Pilcomayo, settled by the award of the President of the United States:

The dispute between Peru and Bolivia (over a territory as extensive as the one claimed by Ecuador) settled by the award of the President of Argentine;

The dispute between Colombia and Venezuela, settled by the award of H. M. the King of Spain.

The dispute between Colombia and Costa Rica, settled by the award of the President of France;

The dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain over Guayana (100,000 square kilometers), settled by the award of an arbitration tribunal;

The dispute between Venezuela and The Netherlands over the Ares Islands, settled by the award of H. M. the King of Spain;

The dispute between Honduras and Nicaragua, settled by the award of H. M.

the King of Spain;
The dispute between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, settled by the award of the

The dispute between Haiti and the Dominican Republic, settled by the award of H. H. the Pope.

President of the United States:

Ecuador herself, although she now hesitates to accept the arbitral recourse in the hope of obtaining from Peru more than an impartial arbiter might give her on examining unbiasedly the titles upon which she builds her claims, sought always that mode of solution for her boundary questions, stipulating it in the convention of 1887 with Peru; in the tripartite agreement of 1894, entered into on her initiative; and with Colombia in the Convention of 1858, in the aforementioned tripartite agreement and in the treaty of 1904.

It has been demonstrated in the foregoing expose that:

1. All negotiations for a direct settlement between Ecuador and Peru are to no purpose, because Ecuador would try to better in her behalf the line of the probable Spanish award, the knowledge of which was the occasion for the attitude assumed by Ecuador in 1910 and that gave rise to the very serious conflict that the mediation of the Powers solved; and Peru, on her part, can not in a direct settlement accept even the boundary line of the Spanish award as she is obliged to maintain all the territories that she possesses and that she has developed through her efforts.

2. The direct discussion would be productive of nugatory results because its inevitable failure would bring about a new crisis in the relations between Peru and Ecuador.

3. The only manner in which to solve this dispute, the existence of which is a lasting cause of friction between both nations, is in submitting it to the decision of an arbiter having sufficient prestige and authority so that his award shall have the necessary moral force.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 24, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of July 18 last, on the subject of the boundary controversy between Peru and Ecuador, in which you state that your Government would be grateful if the mediating powers could be convinced that the only solution of the question lies in the arbitration of it and if they would exert all possible influence over the Government of Ecuador with a view to the submission of it to The Hague Tribunal of Arbitration.

MEMORANDUM ON THE TACNA-ARICA QUESTION.

IMPORTANCE OF CONTROL OF NITRATE REGIONS.

Between parallels 25 south and 19 south the Pacific coast plain is rainless and unfitted for agriculture, but valuable for its guano, silver, and especially for its nitrate deposits. Practically the world's whole supply of nitrate comes from this region. Fifty-five per cent of Chile's public revenues are nitrate royalties.

Between 19 south and 171 south are the provinces of Arica and Tacna which produce food supplies. Arica is the nearest Pacific port to La Paz and the inhabited parts of Bolivia.

Prior to 1866, both Chile and Bolivia laid claim to the coast plain between parallels 25 and 23. Its inhabitants were mostly Chileans-recent immigrants engaged in exploiting guano.

In 1866, an amicable treaty was made by Chile and Bolivia fixing the boundary at parallel 24—the countries agreeing to divide equally all the guano business and export duties on minerals produced in that territory.

The half included between parallels 24 and 23 turned out to be very rich in nitrate and silver, and the mines were worked by Chilean companies and no Bolivian settlements existed, although the sovereignty was Bolivian.

In 1874, Bolivia agreed not to increase during 25 years the export duties on minerals mined within this zone, or to impose any other taxes whatever on Chilean citizens or capital employed therein.

Rich, however, as was this Bolivian nitrate territory and that immediately north, extending to the Peruvian line (parallel 21½) Peru's nitrate supplies were better. They lay in the Province of Tarapaca, which extends from the Bolivian frontier north to parallel 19.

From them Peru derived the major portion of her revenues, which revenues were hypothecated to secure her numerous European loans, and European capital was extensively and profitably invested in the exploitation of the Peruvian guano and nitrate.

The growing competition of the Chilean nitrate companies operating in the southern part of the Bolivian littoral alarmed the Chilean Government and its European creditors and concessionnaires. Chile feared that Bolivia would go in with Peru, expel the Chilean companies and establish a nitrate and guano monopoly.

So, in 1873, a secret treaty of alliance was made between Peru and Bolivia. When its existence was unearthed by a Chilean diplomat a few years later, Chile regarded it as directed against herself, and especially as intended to deprive her and her citizens of vested rights.

In 1878, Chile being then involved in a serious boundary dispute with the Argentine that put the countries on the verge of war, and both countries mobilizing their land and naval forces, the Bolivian Congress passed a law imposing a duty of 10 cents a quintal on nitrate mined in the zone between parallels 24 and 23. When the Chilean Government protested against this action as a violation of the 1874 agreement, Bolivia answered that the tax was imposed not upon Chilean citizens but upon Chilean companies and associations; and that these had not been expressly mentioned in the treaty.

The dispute between Argentine and Chile was quickly adjusted, largely owing to the friendly mediation of the United States. Nevertheless, Bolivia proceeded after a short decay to put into effect this new nitrate tax. When early in 1879 the Bolivian customs authorities levied upon the property of a Chilean company at Antofogasta, Chile at once occupied the Bolivian coast and dispossessed ian officials there resident.

Peru sent a special envoy to Chile who demanded that she disoccupy the territory and consent that it be placed under the joint protectorate of Peru, Bolivia and Chile.

On her side, Chile demanded that Peru disavow or explain the secret treaty of alliance with Bolivia and give assurances of her neutrality. After a month of negotiations during which both parties actively engaged in war-like preparations, Peru categorically refused and Chile declared war.

Having for the moment command of the sea, Chile promptly landed troops in Tarapaca and decisively defeated the Peruvian garrisons that occupied the province.

This gave her the very great advantage of reducing Peru's available revenue by more than half, at the same time doubling her own. Her further progress was, however, delayed for some months by the operations of the Peruvian iron-clad Huascar.

As long as this vessel was at large, the sea was not safe, for Chilean transports and armies could not be supplied by the land route through the desert. But as soon as the Chilean iron-clads caught the Huas-car they destroyed her, and an efficient army was at once disembarked in Tacna and Arica which overwhelmed the main Peruvian and Bolivian forces.

MEDIATION.

Within three months after war was begun, Chile being already in possession of the Bolivian littoral and while the campaign against Tarapaca was being successfully conducted, simultaneous but independent overtures were made to the Government of the United States by the Cabinets of London and Berlin, looking to a future formal proposal from Great Britain and Germany to act with them in a mediation between the belligerents. Subsequently, France and England conjointly made abortive attempts toward inducing Chile and Peru to make some practical agreement. Important British, German and French financial interests existed which would be endangered by complete Chilean success.

Doubtless the Hayes administration feared lest European mediation might insensibly become European intervention and even result in a European protectorate. So the American Government gave no encouragement to the French overtures and the European Governments refrained from proceeding further at that time.

About the same time, the Bolivian Government succeeded in gaining the active sympathy of our Minister at La Paz, and the latter, though he had received no instructions on the subject from Washington, consented to go to Santiago via Lima to offer his personal mediation. At Santiago he succeeded in obtaining from the Chilean Government an expression of its willingness to submit its difficulties with Bolivia to arbitration, but met with a refusal as to those with Peru, Chile insisting that the latter unconditionally abrogate the secret treaty of alliance.

Ecuador and Colombia at about the same time offered their mediation, and suggested a general conference of all American Powers to discuss and settle any existing disputes between them, including the Peruvian-Chilean question. These suggestions met with no encouragement on the part of Chile.

In the fall of 1880, Chile having meantime been completely victorious and being already in possession not only of the Peruvian nitrate province of Tarapaca but also of Arica, Tacna and Moquegua Provinces, the United States made a formal proffer of friendly mediation, which was accepted by the belligerents. Their representatives met on board the U. S. S. Lackawanna in the presence of Messrs. Osborn, Christiancy and Adams, American Ministers to Chile, Peru and Bolivia, respectively. Peru and Bolivia insisted upon arbitration and upon confining it to the determination of the amount of a war indemnity without giving Chile territorial compensation. The Chilean representatives answered that their country must receive a cession of territory and refused to consent to arbitration. Accordingly the conference adjourned without having accomplished anything.

Shortly thereafter Argentina proposed to Brazil to join her in mediation. But Brazil was reluctant to undertake something the United States had just failed in, or to forego the manifest advantage to herself of permitting Chile to become strong enough to become an effective counter-balance to the Argentine.

The war went on. Chile determined to force the Peruvians to consent to peace. Her armies were sent up the coast, overwhelmed the Peruvian militia at Miraflores, and occupied Lima and practically the whole Peruvian coast.

Deprived of her principal revenues by the loss of the nitrate territory, her capital and ports in the possession of foreign troops, Peru was helpless and bankrupt, and European bondholders and concessionnaires importuned their Governments anew to intervene and force

Chile to withdraw.

The President of France proposed in 1881 to the American Ambassador that the French, British and American Governments make a concerted effort to bring the conflict to an end. Mr. Blaine declined to consent to joint action, regarding American countries, with European Powers. Nevertheless he determined that the United States should independently offer mediation. Mr. Hurlbut was named and sent to Lima as American Minister. Acting under his understanding of Mr. Blaine's instructions, upon his arrival in Peru he represented strongly to the Chilean Minister there the advisability of making peace and of consenting to accept a money indemnity instead of a cession of territory.

The announcement at Santiago that the American Minister at Lima had declared that the United States would under no circumstances consent to Chilean annexation of Peruvian territory roused intense indignation. Mr. Kilpatrick, the new American Minister to Chile, apparently had not received a copy of Mr. Blaine's instructions to Mr. Hurlbut or understood them indifferently, for he disavowed his colleague's declarations.

Mr. Blaine at once sent Mr. Trescot to Santiago as Special Commissioner, with explicit instructions to insist that Peru be given the opportunity to pay a money indemnity before being forced to cede the territory. He added that in case of Chile's refusal the United States "will hold itself free to appeal to the other Republics of this continent to avert consequences which threaten with the extremest danger the political institutions of all America."

It seems probable that if this moral pressure should prove ineffective Mr. Blaine intended to follow it up with more drastic measures and that he had determined not to permit wars to affect the changes in South American boundary lines.

When Mr. Trescot arrived at Santiago, Mr. Blaine was already out of office. Mr. Frelinghuysen was not prepared to go as far as his predecessor. He telegraphed Mr. Trescot that "the United States only proposed to give counsel and aid to Chile in any negotiation which that country might desire to make; that Chile must herself determine whether or not she will accept such aid." Like Mr. Blaine, Mr. Frelinghuysen thought that Chile ought not to exact the surrender of Tarapaca, but he refused to authorize Mr. Trescot to make any threats.

Mr. Trescot was unable to persuade Chile to yield as to Tarapaca but got a protocol signed by which she agreed to let go of Tacna and Arica, accepting $20,000,000 indemnity therefor.

· Mr. Frelinghuysen disavowed Mr. Trescot's action in regard to this protocol and accredited Mr. Logan as Minister to Chile and Mr. Partridge to Peru. The former obtained from the Santiago Government an offer to make peace upon Peru's consenting to cede Tarapaca and to sell her reversionary right to Tacna and Arica for $10,000,000. He advised Peru to accept, but Mr. Partridge protested and subsequently called a meeting of the European diplomatic representatives at Lima, and proposed that he and they send identic notes to their respective Governments, recommending joint mediation or intervention.

Mr. Frelinghuysen promptly disavowed Mr. Partridge's action and recalled him as well as Mr. Logan and Mr. Manney, our Minister to

This ended our efforts at mediation, and they have not since been renewed.

Shortly thereafter, Chile in direct negotiations with Peru consented to a modification of her terms as to Tacna and Arica. Instead of insisting on Peru's consent to their unconditional transfer on the payment of $10,000,000 by Chile, the latter was to hold them provisionally for ten years—namely, until March, 1894. At this time their final nationality was to be determined by a plebiscite.

The following is a translation of the treaty article referring thereto:1

Article 3. The territory of the provinces of Tacna and Arica—bounded on the north by the river Sama from its source in the Cordilleras on the frontier of Bolivia to its mouth at the sea; on the south by the ravine and river Camarones; on the east by the Republic of Bolivia; and on the west by the Pacific Ocean—shall continue in the possession of Chile, subject to Chilean laws and authority, during a period of ten years, to be reckoned from the date of the ratification of the present treaty of peace.

After the expiration of that term a plebiscitum shall decide, by popular vote, whether the territories of the above-mentioned provinces shall remain definitely under the dominion and sovereignty of Chile or continue to form part of Peru. Either of the two countries to which the provinces of Tacna and Arica will have been annexed shall pay to the other ten millions of Chilean silver dollars or of Peruvian soles of the same weight and fineness.

A special protocol, which shall be considered as an integral portion of the present treaty, will prescribe the manner in which the plebiscitum is to be carried out, and the terms and times for the payment of the ten millions by the country that will have become the sovereign (dueño) of the provinces of Tacna and Arica.

EFFORTS TO SETTLE.

Exhausted and impoverished by the Chilean war and the long continued civil wars which followed, the Peruvian Government would have been embarrassed to find the $10,000,000 for Chile, and several years elapsed before serious negotiations were entered into to secure the carrying out of the above treaty article and the signing of the protocol provided for therein.

Shortly before 1894, Peru proposed that Chile definitely return Tacna and Arica and accept certain commercial concessions in lieu of the $10,000,000. Chile refused.

Next, Peru demanded that Chile temporarily turn over the provinces to Peru upon the expiration of the ten years' period, so that the plebiscite might be held under Peruvian auspices. Chile refused, claiming that her possessory title would not lapse until the plebiscite had been held and resulted favorably to Peru.

Peru then proposed to submit to arbitration (1) which nation was entitled to possession after March 28, 1894, and (2) whether only Peruvians should vote, or also Chileans and other foreigners who had moved into the disputed territory since 1884. If only the old Peruvian residents could vote, Peruvians would be sure to win the plebiscite, but if Chileans and other foreigners should also vote they would probably outnumber the Peruvians, especially if the election be held with Chilean authorities in charge. Chile refused to arbitrate either question—the first on the ground that it involved her territorial sovereignty, and the second because the words "popular vote" are used in Article 3 of the treaty.

Peru then proposed that Chile unconditionally cede her claim to the portion north of the Chero, she to cede hers to the portion south of the Vitor, and that the plebiscite for the central portion be held under the auspices of a mixed commission composed of one member named by the Peruvian Government, one by the Chilean Government, and the third by a friendly Power. Chileans were not to be permitted to vote unless they could prove two years' bona fide residence and that they were not members of Chile's armed forces. Chile failed to pay any attention to this proposal.

Shortly thereafter the ten-year period terminated and Chile remained in possession against Peru's protest. No progress in the negotiations was made until 1898, when Chile, being on the verge of war with Argentine, the time seemed opportune for Peru to obtain the desired concessions. Señor Billinghurst was sent to Santiago, and there he and the Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs signed the protocol submitting to Spain's arbitration the question as to who should have the right to vote in the plebiscite. But strong opposition to this protocol developed in successive sessions of the Chilean Congress and it was never ratified. Diplomatic relations were subsequently interrupted and only renewed about three years ago. The first Peruvian Minister sent to Santiago, Señor Alvarez Calderon, returned at the end of 1907 without having accomplished anything.

In 1908, Senor Seoane, his successor, received a proposal of settlement from the Chilean Foreign Office. Peru was asked to admit the right of all residents, Chileans and foreigners as well as Peruvians, to vote; Chile agreed to appoint local Peruvian and foreign as well as Chilean representatives on the electoral boards in charge of the plebiscite; her officials would continue to administer the territory while the plebiscite was being held. Chile claims that this is substantially the manner in which the Nice-Savoy plebiscite and others were conducted. In return for Peru's waiver of her insistence on arbitration as to who is entitled to vote and take charge of the election, Chile expressed her willingness to form a customs union with Peru, to give subventions to coastwise ships, to make large appropriations for the building of a railway from Santiago to Lima, and finally to increase the indemnity for Tacna and Arica by 50 per cent.

Believing that a plebiscite held in the form proposed would result unfavorably to herself, Peru considered the proposal nothing more than a disguised offer to purchase Tacna and Arica, and rejected it. The then Peruvian Government did not, however, sever diplomatic relations and it was the evident intention of both parties to continue negotiations.

THE WREATH INCIDENT.

A few months subsequent to the events just recited, Señor Echenique was received at Lima as Chilean Minister, and shortly thereafter addressed a note to Señor Polo, Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs, expressing the desire of the Chilean Government to place a bronze wreath on the mausoleum erected to the memory of the Peruvian soldiers who died in the war with Chile.

Señor Polo answered, thanking Señor Echenique, and adding: "that when the necessary arrangements would be made, he would be pleased to settle with the Chilean Minister all concerning the homage offered by the Chilean Government."

A few days later, a new administration came into power in Peru, and one not so hopeful of being able to reach a satisfactory settlement with Chile by friendly negotiations. Through a colleague, Señor Echenique sounded the new Minister of Foreign Affairs, Señor Porras, as to the latter's willingness to fix a day for the official ceremony of offering the wreath. Señor Porras indicated to Señor Echenique's friend that the Peruvian Government did not desire to accept the wreath. Señor Echenique addressed a formal note to the Foreign Office, referring to Señor Polo's former communication and asking definitely that a day be fixed for the ceremony. Señor Porras answered that as long as the treaty of 1883 was not fulfilled, he thought all demonstrations pending to show that a reconciliation had occurred were out of place. Señor Echenique replied, deprecating the attitude now assumed by the Peruvian Government and reiterating assurances of Chile's desire to reach an amicable settlement. Señor Porras ended the correspondence by saying he considered it useless to deal any further with Señor Echenique's theories.

The Chilean Minister immediately left Santiago for his own country (January, 1909) and his return was a signal for demonstrations of intense popular indignation at the treatment given Chile's representative and the rejection of the offer of the wreath. A large section of the press and public demanded that war be declared.

OBSERVATIONS BY MR. DAWSON.

Two principal reasons have been advanced why the United States Government is now under moral obligation to that of Peru to offer mediation with a view of persuading or intimidating Chile to agree to submit to arbitration the question as to who shall control the election and who shall have a right to vote:

First, that Mr. Blaine's intimation in 1881 to the European powers that their intervention would be disagreeable to the United States prevented Great Britain and France from recovering for Peru her lost Provinces. But it was not for altruistic reasons these countries desired to intervene, but rather for the purpose of protecting pecuniary interests of their citizens. It is possible that their formal intervention would have resulted in nothing more favorable to Peru than the forcing of Chile to recognize and indemnify Peru's European creditors and concessionnaires as a condition of getting the territory. In fact, they did bring strong and effective, though unofficial, pressure to bear upon Chile while the 1883 treaty was being negotiated directly between her and Peru. Many of the articles of that agreement concerned the satisfying of the European creditors, and Chile's first preoccupation after 1833 [1883] was to get these European claims out of the way.

Second, that Mr. Hurlbut's declaration, made in 1881, that the United States would never consent to Chile's depriving Peru of territory, encouraged the latter to further resistance. But the fact [was] that the war was already virtually over and the military situation did not materially change after the date of said declaration. On the other hand, it is true that in Trescot's time Chile offered to give up Tacna and Arica on the payment of $20,000,000. The 1883 arrangement doubtless seemed to the then Peruvian Government less onerous. They were really getting $30,000,000 for Tacna and Arica—$10,000,000 in cash at the end of 10 years and $20,000,000 immediately in the remission of war indemnity. They obtained 10 years' respite for national recuperation before being obliged to decide between definitely ceding the provinces or paying out money.

Argentine interests lie always in weakening Chile internationally and politically. Therefore that country would be glad, with the backing of the United States and Brazil, to mediate for the purpose of compelling Chile to give up Tacna and Arica. Without these provinces—whose agricultural resources are adequate to the temporary maintenance of their garrisons—Chile's northern frontier and her garrisons in all her desert country south to parallel 25 would be defenseless in case a single fast hostile cruiser were at large to destroy convoys and transports. Those garrisons can now only be supplied by sea. The revenue from the nitrate territory is essential to Chile's military power and financial credit. While in possession of Tacna and Arica she can hope to make head against Argentina and Peru at the same time, because she could hold out there and threaten southern Peru, even in case of a temporary naval defeat; without those provinces an Argentine fleet, or even one fast cruiser, could starve out the nitrate territory, and Chile's only chance would be for her own fleet to pursue, catch and destroy all Argentine and Peruvian war ships.

Brazil would not feel safe on her southern frontier if the Argentine were once free from a check on the side of Chile.

Respectfully submitted.

The American Minister to Chile to the Secretary of State.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, November 1, 1909.

Sin: Referring to the negotiations for a settlement of the Tacna-Arica question, pending between Chile and Peru, I have the honor to report that about two or three weeks ago the Chilean Foreign Office sent instructions to the Chargé d'Affaires at Lima to present to the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs the bases which Chile was willing to accept. I am now able to inclose herewith a statement of these bases written in Minister Edwards own hand.

The Peruvian Government had already proposed to enter on negotiations for a settlement and that ministers plenipotentiary be sent respectively to Santiago and Lima. No bases were, however, suggested by Peru, and Chile refused to exchange ministers until Peru should have definitely accepted preliminary bases.

The Argentine Minister has been aiding the Foreign Office all he can during the last three weeks to induce the Peruvian Government to accept Chile's preliminary terms. He tells me, however, that his Government's action has not been and will not be in the way of intervention or mediation, but only by way of friendly counsel. Undoubtedly already the Argentine Foreign Office has offered advice on the subject to the Peruvian Minister at Buenos Aires and has instructed its own Minister at Lima to offer similar advice to the Foreign Office there.

The Argentine Minister approached me two days ago with the purpose of ascertaining the probable disposition of the State Department as to seconding Argentina's action at Lima and Washington. I told him I had received no instructions, information, or intimations from the Department.

I have [etc.]

T. C. DAWSON.

[Inclosure—Translation.]

Statement by the Minister for Forcign Affairs of Chile of the bases for settlement of the Tacna-Arica question which Chile is willing to accept.

(1) The plebiscite will be held on a date that will allow Chile to fulfill her undertakings with Bolivia as to the construction of the Arica-La Paz railroad. Note: It is calculated that the section in Chile will be finished in 1911.

(2) The voting shall be by secret ballot and in it shall be entitled to take part all the inhabitants—Chileans, Peruvians and foreigners—who shall have the following qualifications:

(a) Citizenship with right to vote in Chile or Peru. Note: The same qualifications are required in both countries.

(b) Minimum residence of six months (in the disputed provinces.)

(3) Chile shall preside over the acts connected with the plebiscite and the Electoral Commission shall be composed of three members: a Chilean, who shall be President, a Peruvian, and a neutral. Note: As to this point Chile thinks that the right to preside over the plebiscite can not be conceded by her seeing that her sovereign rights continue until the inhabitants of Tacna and Arica may determine to return to the dominion of Peru. This does not permit her to act otherwise without violating her own national decorum and dignity. Chile is disposed to accept whatever method Peru may propose in order to assure the correctness and fairness of the plebiscite, but she can not give up the presidency thereof. In her opinion the giving up of the presidency would not tend to this end, because she does not insist upon it with the purpose of making the plebiscite unfair and incorrect, but rather because the existing legal situation requires it, and because of the rights conferred upon her by the Treaty of Ancon.

She would even be disposed to consent that the Electoral Commission be composed of four members: A Chilean, who would preside; a Peruvian, and two neutrals of differing nationalities, with the condition that in case of a tie the opinion of the President shall prevail; but this is the farthest concession she could make.

(4) In everything not inconsistent with the present proposition, Chile would accept the stipulations of the Billinghurst-Latorre protocol.

Note: In Peru this procotol is considered the ideal solution, and therefore the above formula is proposed.

The American Minister to Peru to the Secretary of State.

No. 285.]

American Legation, Lima, November 4, 1909.

Sir: I have the honor to state that on Saturday when calling on the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Porras, I was shown by him an interesting despatch from Mr. García, the Peruvian Chargé in Chile, reporting a recent long interview with Mr. Edwards, the Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs, in which Mr. Edwards stated that, in reply to the good offices of the Argentine to reestablish full diplomatic representation between Peru and Chile, his Government had decided that it would not be desirable or in the interests of good relations between the two countries, nor would Chile again send a Minister to Peru until a practical settlement of the Tacna and Arica question had been reached. That to send one before that time would invite the friction of useless discussion and another withdrawal which would be much worse than the present situation. He stated frankly that the negotiation must be on a basis that would secure these provinces to Chile; that their ownership was only a sentiment with Peru while it was a necessity to Chile. This was the substance of the despatch. Mr. Porras showed me also a memorandum of Chile's terms furnished him by Mr. Pérez-Canto, the Chilean Chargé here:

1st. A plebiscite to be taken in Tacna and Arica when the Chilean obligations with Bolivia for the construction of railroads through the provinces had been completed, i. e., some five or six years hence.

2nd. All otherwise qualified voters of whatever nationality who had been residents for six consecutive months to participate in the election.

3rd. The elections to be held under judges, one selected by Peru, one selected by Chile, and the third either by the consular representatives in these districts or a friendly power.

Mr. Porras said he was having daily consultations with the leaders of Congress over these proposals, but it was impossible to accept these terms. I ventured to suggest that Chile, to secure all the proposition contained, had only to continue a few years more the policy she has heretofore successfully pursued, and that if Peru did not clearly see an alternative she could doubtless now obtain in other directions some valuable considerations that might be lost by drifting. Mr. Porras hinted obscurely at a conflict if Chile persisted in her position, but I do not think such an eventuality need be taken into account by the Department.

I think the renewal of the discussion is a mistake. I do not think the Peruvian authorities at this time have the courage, perhaps they have not the power, to execute such a settlement as could be effected with Chile.

Since writing the above Mr. Porras kindly sent me a copy of the Chilean proposals and of the Peruvian counter propositions, which I enclose. As accurate information concerning these negotiations is confined for the present to the leaders of Congress, I beg to particularly point out its confidential character. I also enclose copies of the correspondence between Mr. Porras and Mr. Edwards over the President's allusion to the Tacna and Arica question in his message to the Peruvian Congress.1

[Inclosure.]

CHILEAN PROPOSAL.

First. The plebiscite shall take place on a date which will permit the Chilean Government to carry out its obligations towards the Republic of Bolivia regarding the construction of a railway from Arica to La Paz.

Second. Those entitled to take part in the voting (which shall be secret) are the following: All Peruvians, Chileans and foreigners who possess:

a. The qualifications necessary to a citizen-voter.b. Six months residence (at least).

Third. The nomination of the president of the supervising committee shall belong to Chile, as well as those of the committees on inscription and regis-These shall be composed of three members, i. e., one Chilean, one Peruvian, and one neutral chosen by the Consular Corps of Arica, or a friendly nation.

Fourth. Should any objections be found to the above articles, Chile would accept, if it would be preferable to Peru, the stipulations of the Billing-hurst-La Torre protocol.

PERUVIAN PROPOSAL.

The following modifications would be necessary to the four principal articles submitted by the [Chilean] Chargé:

First. The supervising committee charged with organizing the plebiscite shall enter upon its functions within a period of three months counting from the date of signing the protocol governing the plebiscite.

Second. The persons taking part in the voting (which shall be public) shall be: All Peruvians and Chileans possessing the following qualifications:

a. Those twenty-one years of age.

b. Those who were residing in the territories previously to July 1, 1907.

Those native born citizens of the territories of Tacna and Arica who shall be present during the voting who shall have registered themselves for that pur-

All persons in the public service or in the Army or Police employed in the provinces shall be disqualified from voting.

1175

Third. The supervising committee shall be composed of three members, i. e., a Peruvian, a Chilean, and a neutral designated by a friendly nation. The latter shall be the presiding officer. The committees of registration and inscription shall also be composed of a Peruvian, a Chilean and a neutral, and the latter shall be their presiding officer.

Fourth. The supervising committee shall designate the places which shall be opened for inscribing and registering voters. In all questions of detail, other than the above, the articles of the Billinghurst-La Torre protocol shall govern.

OBSERVATIONS.

Peru is disposed to accept arbitration in case any irreconcilable difference of opinion shall arise.

Second. While Peru will accept the votes of Chilean citizens as proof of her desire to reach an understanding, she in no way recedes from the position she has always maintained as to the exclusive right of the native citizens of Tacna and Africa. In case no agreement is reached this concession must not be taken as a definite recognition [of other rights].

Third. The fact should be taken into account in judging the Peruvian proposals, that more than sixteen years have elapsed since the terms of the occupation were forced upon her.

Fourth. As there is certain contradiction between the spirit which animates the Chilean proposals and the measures taken or proposed concerning Peruvian residents [of the provinces in question] which measures have been the source of protests both verbal and written on the part of the Peruvian Government, this Government believes that these measures should be suspended, revoked or remain unenforced.

The American Minister to Peru to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

No. 290.]

American Legation, Lima, November 17, 1909.

Sir: I have the honor to report that when I called upon the President last week to pay my respects and to inform him of my return to my official duties the conversation took a most interesting turn, and Mr. Leguía gave me clearer information on the situation and of the hopes and purposes and policies of Peru than had before come to my knowledge.

Referring to the recent exchange of proposals, which were the subject of my hastily prepared despatch No. 285, of November 4, 1909, Mr. Leguía set forth the reasons that were controlling his course.

In the first place, he said, * * * no government could live a day that was thought to contemplate any surrender respecting their ultimate destiny. Peruvians have, therefore, to compare the disadvantages of external friction with that of internal disorder. If, however, he continued, I felt that the real interests of my country lay in such a settlement as can now be achieved with Chile, if I thought we should part with our rights respecting Tacna and Arica in consideration of a pecuniary indemnity and for the advantages accruing from the elimination of the past friction and agitation with a neighbor, I would make the arrangement and take the consequences; but I do not take that view. Chile, he continued, is a small, poor country, developed about to its limits, while Peru is a large and rich country capable of tremendous development and growth, and in twenty years, or at some future time, is sure to be the military superior of Chile, and then we will enforce rights we will never part with. Perhaps you do not know, he said to me, that Arica has deposits of borax that have been estimated of a value in excess of £250,000,000; but while that is true, we do not consider money in taking our attitude.

Chile may annex Tacna and Arica, she may pursue whatever course of aggression she may determine upon, but she shall never have the color of Peruvian consent and we will always reserve the moral right to repossess ourselves of them when we can do so.

He said my frankness and my friendly attitude led him to be equally frank and to confide in me his innermost feelings on this question. I thanked him and said my Government would be most interested in his views, and would always, I felt sure, appreciate and protect any confidence with which we were entrusted.

While Mr. Leguía made patriotism the keynote of his conversation and the base upon which his conclusions were founded, he confirmed the opinion I have expressed in former despatches that political use is being made of the controversy by his administration to bid for popularity, or at least to distract the people from thought of Subsequently, at the reception at the Brazilian Legation, I had a confidential conversation with Mr. Aspillaga, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and one of the foremost men in Peru in politics, business and society. He told me that he recognized that Tacna and Arica were lost to Peru and that he was in favor of accepting that fact and of making a material settlement of the question by which Peru would get such advantage as was possible, but that the present Government could not possibly entertain such a plan; that the slightest indication of such a purpose would afford pretext for successful revolution; that public opinion must be prepared, and that the arrangement must be entered into as a national policy for which all parties would share the responsibility, or it must be conducted in settled, prosperous times by a government strongly entrenched in power, able to impose its views and face and suppress opposition.

I think I should add that Mr. Leguía further stated that he entertained the views he had expressed so deeply that if he ever found Congress and other influences too strong in favor of any other course he would resign the Presidency rather than approve or share the responsibility of concession.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Lima, January 29, 1910.

Sir: I have the honor to report that with the closure of certain churches in the Provinces of Tacna and Arica, the territory administered by Chile under the terms of the Treaty of Ancon, the political struggle between the two countries regarding these provinces seems to have entered upon a new and especially irritating phase.

In countries where religious matters are so intimately a part not only of the national politics but also of the social life of the community, the closing of the churches of Tacna and the consequent interdiction of the religious services to which a large part of the population considers themselves entitled can not but be a matter of serious import.

I would recall to the Department that the Provinces of Tacna and Arica, while administered by Chilean officials under the laws of that Republic since the signing of the Treaty of Ancón have nevertheless remained within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Peruvian See of Arequipa. The Papal authority has never approved of any measures tending to subvert the authority of the Bishop of Arequipa who, according to Chilean views at least, has always reserved these appointments for Peruvian prelates.

In line with the policy of nationalization they have pursued in these provinces, the Government of Chile invoked some months ago for the first time rights granted them under the Treaty of Ancón, and demanded that every new ecclesiastical appointment in those provinces should submit to the regulations in force elsewhere in Chile, and that these appointments receive the visé of the Chilean authorities.

In the cases of the curates of Estigue, Belén, and Cedpa, and more recently of Tacna and Tarapa, and within the last few days, those of Tarata and other parishes of the occupied provinces, after the ecclesiastics appointed by the Bishop of Arequipa had refused to submit to these formalities, their parishes were declared vacant and the churches closed by the Chilean Government.

As the Vatican appears resolved to maintain the old ecclesiastical prerogatives of the See of Arequipa, at least until the question of the political sovereignty of the provinces be definitely decided, and as the Chilean Government appears equally determined to persist in its present course, the resulting privations of the religious population of those provinces have brought about a peculiarly distressing state of affairs, and one which may tend to precipitate the long-deferred solution of the political differences centering about Tacna and Arica.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Lima, March 14, 1910.

Sir: I have the honor to report that in an interview yesterday with the Peruvian Foreign Minister I communicated to him the sense of your cable just received in answer to his formal request regarding the Santiago Legation transmitted in my cable of March

This ended our formal interview.

Mr. Porras said that he had decided to expose to me (in confidence and informally) his own desires as regards the Tacna and Arica question. He said he considered an early solution not only advisable but inevitable. His own hope was that an international tribunal of American Powers (preferably the United States, Brazil and the Argentine) would be formed with full powers to judge of the merits of the case. He said that even ignoring Peru's well-founded rights (in his opinion) the award might be made acceptable by Peru in one of two ways as follows:

(1) Tacna and Arica to be erected into a buffer state;
(2) The provinces to be divided between Peru and Chile, with due consideration of Peru's rights and of the status quo.

I thanked Mr. Porras for his confidence and informed him that I would with his permission transmit the substance of our conversation (informally) to my Government. * * *

Perhaps the most important question in the present situation is: To what extent is Dr. Porras justified in his apparent reliance on the great American Powers to intervene in the solution of the Peruvian-Chilean controversy? * * * As regards the United States, I respectfully suggest that some direct indication of the Department's views regarding the matters set forth above would be of the greatest value in the not wholly improbable eventuality of a crisis in Peruvian-Chilean affairs.

I have considered it wise to report at some length in view of the fact that whatever be the political fate of Mr. Porris, the results of his policies as indicated are likely to have a considerable influence on the foreign relations of Peru for some time to come. * * *

Sir: I have the honor to report that I have to-day visited the Foreign Office to make some inquiries concerning the approaching centennial celebration. On my arrival there a newspaper reporter told me that Chile and Peru had just broken off diplomatic relations. The Minister for Foreign Affairs did not know that I had received this news. He soon introduced the subject of the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru and spoke upon it at considerable length. The impression made upon me was that he was favorable to Chile. He seemed to feel that the failure to hold the plebiscite required by the Ancon Treaty was not the fault of Chile (which had proposed methods of holding the same) but the fault of Peru in refusing all the Chilean proposals. He was particularly bitter against Mr. Riva Agüero, the Peruvian Minister here, whom he characterized as impractical and unwilling to receive friendly suggestions. He dwelt largely upon what he called the unsettling influence that the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs had exercised upon this question, charging him with stirring up the Peruvians so as to obtain from them a cession of territory to secure Brazil's cooperation in case of war, which cooperation he believed would not be forthcoming when the occasion for it arose. The only comment I made upon his remarks was that it seemed unfortunate that the much-vexed Tacna-Arica question could not be removed from South American politics.

American Legation, Santiago, March 22, 1910.

SIR: By my cable of the 20th instant the Department was informed that the Peruvian Legation in Santiago has been withdrawn on account of the violent attitude of Chile toward Peruvians in Tacna and Arica, the expulsion of the Peruvian priests, and the futility of all efforts on the part of the Legation to cause the Government of Chile to heed the desires of Peru. * *

Though the causes mentioned are the ones advanced by Peru for withdrawing its Legation I am led by the Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires, Señor Arturo García Salazar, to understand that the expulsion of the curates is regarded as the climax of a series of events, namely the expulsion from Tacna and Arica of Peruvian freight-handlers and laborers and the sending of arms to Ecuador, all of which are considered by Peru as evidence that Chile intends simply to disregard Peruvian protests and that a Legation here is of absolutely no account as regards the policy and actions of Chile. Rather than to continue to protest in vain, Peru has found it more dignified simply to withdraw; at least such is the opinion of Señor García.

Obedient to your telegram of this morning, I have communicated to Señor García the fact that I am authorized to accept the custody of the archives of the Peruvian Legation as requested by him, and I have received from him two cases said to contain the said archives.

It appears that shortly before the withdrawal of the Legation the Government of Peru received a note from the Chilean Government suggesting the basis for holding plebiscite. This proposal differed from former ones only in that the plebiscite should be supervised by one Chilean, one Peruvian, and a third individual to be chosen by the Foreign Consular Corps resident in Tacna, but it specified a residence of only six months, the plebiscite to be held six months from the ratification of the protocol providing therefor.

The Government of Peru has not yet replied to this proposal though the Chilean newspapers state that the withdrawal of the Legation is Peru's answer.

In conversation with Baron do Rio Branco on the 28th instant this subject was reverted to and I advised him with reference to his suggestion made to Chile—that the Governments of Chile and Peru submit their question to those of Brazil, Argentina and the United States—of the readiness of the Government of the United States, in case the plan were acceptable to Chile and Peru, to respond to their request by contributing so far as possible to a solution of the difficulty.

The Baron then informed me confidentially that his overtures had so far resulted in failure, the Chilean Government declining to consider his proposal or anything savoring of arbitration. He had then proposed that the three countries be asked as amiables compositeurs to determine solely a proper division of the provinces between the contestants, but this suggestion also was rejected. The only concession Chile was willing to make was to authorize the Brazilian Government to offer Peru clear title to the Province of Talara, an interior and valueless strip claimed to have been turned over to Chile along with Tacna and Arica at the end of the war—a fact denied by Peru. This offer, as a settlement of the long-standing question, was so manifestly unentitled to serious consideration that it will not be officially communicated to Peru by this Government.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, April 1, 1910.

Your March 26. Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs replies verbally to my note 1 as follows:

Chile will always be pleased to have the United States extend good offices to citizens of any third nation not having its own Legation, as in the case of China, when Chile gladly accepted American representation. But in the present case Chile considers it to be desirable that the United States should not act in behalf of Peruvians on account of the following reasons:

First. Chile believes Peru does not seek protection for its citizens, who had all necessary protection from their consuls during other suspensions of diplomatic relations, as from 1901 to 1905, but rather a means of disturbing the friendly and cordial relations existing between the United States and Chile by constantly urging this Legation upon any pretext to press Peruvian claims. Peru has for years followed policy of pressing claims and would surely accentuate it if she could count on such influential intermediary as the United States.

Second. Peru is interested in estranging the United States and Chile for without reason she feels that such estrangement would be to her advantage in Tacna-Arica dispute. As Peru has ulterior motives her request to the United States may be viewed with suspicion.

Third. Peruvian public opinion has hoped for American aid in this dispute, and that of Chile has feared that such hope might have some foundation. Even though the two Governments know this to be inexact, general opinion would be likely to exaggerate the importance of good offices sought, and thus stimulate Peru to resist a solution and provoke in Chile a mistrust which Chile earnestly desires to avoid. This would tend to postpone the solution, which surely is contrary to the desires of the United States.

Chile considers that in thus manifesting the pleasure which she would experience if, in this case and for the reasons cited, the United States should avoid taking charge of dealings which Peru wishes to turn over to her and which the United States could not have eluded of her own accord without appearing little friendly to Peru, she is performing an act friendly to the United States and facilitating a reply to Peru in harmony with the often repeated desires of the United States not to intervene in pending questions unless requested by both Chile and Peru.

Chile believes that a verbal answer to this question is more friendly and deferential to the United States. She would have adopted and will adopt towards any other friendly nation with which she desires, as in the case of the United States, to strengthen her relations, and from which Peru might solicit the same good offices, this identical attitude.

Foregoing is an accurate memorandum of what Minister for Foreign Affairs said and appears especially significant because Chile is going to subject inhabitants of Tacna-Arica to obligatory military service.

Minister for Foreign Affairs declares that Chile is going to finish

The Secretary of State to the American Chargé d'Affaires at Lima.¹

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 2, 1910.

No. 110.]

Sir: For your information I quote a memorandum of a conversation between the Assistant Secretary of State and Mr. Villegas, Argentine Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, March 30, 1910:

Mr. Villegas called for a response to the question involved in a paraphrase of a telegraphic instruction which he received from his Government on March 29, which he left at the Department on the day of the receipt of the instruction.

¹ The same to the Embassy at Petropolis, the Legation at Buenos Aires, and the Legation at Santiago de Chile.

This question referred to a reported project of Brazil for mediation by the United States, Brazil and Argentina to refer the Tacna-Arica controversy to

The Hague or to Brazil.

The Assistant Secretary of State told the Argentine Chargé d'Affaires that the Department had received a similar inquiry from Minister Sherrill, and that the Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs seemed to have inaccurate information, in that the Department had heard nothing of any proposal to refer the Tacna-Arica question for decision by Brazil or by The Hague. The Assistant Secretary intimated that the Minister for Foreign Affairs had given Mr. Sherrill the impression that he thought the name of the Argentine Republic had been used without authorization in an improper manner. The Chargé d'Affaires evidently had this idea.

The Assistant Secretary of State said that what the Department had heard was through informal conversation with the Ambassador at Petropolis, who understood that Baron Rio Branco, at the instance of Peru, was sounding Chile as to whether a joint effort by the Argentine Republic, Brazil and the United States to settle the question between Chile and Peru would stand any chance of acceptance. The Assistant Secretary pointed out that the question was altogether hypothetical; that if it became a practical question the Department understood Argentina, Brazil and the United States would take part jointly and equally. He pointed out that of course the question could not become a practical one without prior acquiescence by Argentina. The Assistant Secretary intimated that in sounding out the theory, Brazil had to begin somewhere, and this doubtless accounted for the fact that Argentina had not been sounded already. He also intimated that it would seem to be for Brazil rather than for the United States to explain the idea.

The Assistant Secretary of State said that the Department had replied to Brazil with an assurance of this Government's sharing as a matter of course the universal hope that the very troublesome Tacna-Arica question should be settled; adding that should such a theory commend itself to Chile, Peru, Argentina and Brazil and the question thus become practical instead of hypothetical, this Government would be ready, as usual, to respond to the request to join doing what it could to improve the situation. The Assistant Secretary said that the Department was sitting quietly and doing nothing under present circumstances.

The Assistant Secretary of State told the Argentine Charge d'Affaires that the Department would telegraph Minister Sherrill in this sense, and added that he was at liberty confidentially to telegraph his Government. The Assistant Secretary added that, for the obvious reason that any proposal would be less likely to be accepted by Chile if it were known that Peru had instigated it, Baron Rio Branco desired the fact that he had evolved this theory at the instance of Peru treated as especially confidential at this time.

I am [etc.]

Memorandum handed to the Assistant Secretary of State by the Minister of Chile.

The American Chargé d'Affaires sent to this Department a communication stating that Peru has left to his care the archives of the Legation at Santiago and that the American Government has been requested to take charge of the protection of the Peruvian citizens in Chile during the rupture of the relations. In this regard he wishes to ascertain whether such a representation—which would be limited to the exercise of impartial good offices, when necessary—would be agreeable to Chile. I have answered verbally as follows:

"Chile would be very pleased to see the United States represent any third country not having her own representation in Chile, as happened last year in the case of China, when the American representatives were recognized by Chile with genuine satisfaction. In the present case, however, it would be desirable that the American Government would not undertake the representation of Peru, for the following reasons:

PERU.

"First Because Peru, with this protection to her citizens—who are not in danger and who on other occasions of rupture, as was the case from 1901 to 1905, were sufficiently protected by her own consuls—only seeks to disturb the cordial relations existing between the United States and Chile."

Please inform the Secretary of State of the foregoing reasons and let him know that the communication of the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at Santiago has not been answered in writing, Chile believing that it thus acts with greater deference towards the United States Government, and that it would have dealt in an identical way with any other friendly nation in the same position as the United States.

Foreign Office, Santiago, April 4, 1910.

File No. 944/139.

Memorandum of a conversation held by the Assistant Secretary of State with the Minister of Chile.

Mr. Cruz, Minister of Chile, called at eleven o'clock by appointment. He said that our Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago had written to the Foreign Office saying that besides taking custody of the archives of the Peruvian Legation, which has been withdrawn, this Government has been requested by Peru to leave him to look after the interests of Peruvians in Chile, and he was directed to inquire whether this was agreeable to Chile. He handed me a paraphrase of his instruction, which I read and found similar to Chargé Pierrepont's telegram.

After reading it very slowly and reflecting a while, I said that this surprised me very much; that it looked as if the Minister for Foreign Affairs did not fully understand what we had acquiesced in Peru's request to do; that it was nothing like mediation, a pressing of claims or an advocacy of anything; that it was simply the habitual arrangement so common to diplomacy, i. e. allowing one's representative to be an impartial channel of communication. I said never, in all my reading, had I heard of a case of any government refusing to lend such offices or of any case where the government at the capital from which a legation had been withdrawn had refused to acquiesce in such an arrangement.

I said the request of Chile was a very difficult one and I could not answer offhand but must lay the matter before the Secretary in order that he might give it full consideration, after which I would let the Minister know (to-morrow or so) whether the Secretary could receive him and discuss it.

I said that, speaking personally, it seemed to me that Chile's refusal to allow Peru this very conventional and usual privilege, sanctioned by the whole history of diplomacy, would appear an exceedingly hostile act, and that, for our part, to refuse Peru would place us, not in a position of impartiality, but, in view of the unusualness of such a refusal, in a position of distinct hostility to Pern.

The Minister's tone was one of intense animosity toward Peru, which he sought to blame for unjustifiably withdrawing the Legation. He said that although the Chilean Government might understand, the Chilean people would certainly misinterpret our granting Peru's request into an effort at mediation. He said that the Chilean people all remembered Mr. Blaine's effort at mediation during the war which gave rise to this Tacna-Arica dispute; that they all remembered the names of Trescot and Hurlbut, and that they would think that the United States was again intervening. He said this in a very considerate and pleasant way and said that his whole work in Washington had been in the effort to create the most friendly relations between Chile and the United States, and he hoped that anything that might be misunderstood by the Chilean people could be avoided.

I said I well remembered the history of our attempted mediation during the war and that I thought it the most unsatisfactory page of our diplomacy because it had been ineffective. I added dryly, that if we had not intervened at that time history showed clearly that France or Great Britain would have done so, and effectively.

I expressed astonishment that the Chilean public should be ready to misunderstand so customary a diplomatic situation as one legation naming good offices impartially on behalf of a country and its citizens when not represented by their own legation, and I brought out the point that we were requested to take action entirely at variance with all diplomatic precedent simply because the Chilean public did not understand that the action was nothing like media-I added that, speaking personally, I feared that if his Government felt so strongly they would have to put us in a position to say that we had been entirely willing but that the Chilean Government had categorically refused to agree. He deprecated such an idea and intimated that their whole desire was that we should say to Peru that we had reason to believe that our lending the Legation in the manner desired would be misunderstood and would not be entirely agreeable to Chile.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, April 5, 1910.

Sir: Referring to the Department's cable of March 26, regarding good offices to Peruvian citizens in Chile, I have the honor to transmit a copy of the note which, in the absence of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, I handed to the Sub-Secretary for Foreign Affairs on March 28, in accordance with the Department's instructions. The answer to this note was given verbally by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and cabled to the Department in full on April 1, the day after the Minister's return to Santiago.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs, in making it clear that Chile would be pleased if the United States should refrain from extending good offices to Peruvian citizens in Chile, was evidently desirous of so wording his reply that the Government of the United States should not be offended, and in my cable I endeavored to communicate as nearly as possible his own words.

That the Department may be fully aware of Chile's attitude as now expressed on this long-disputed question of Tacna and Arica, I inclose also copies and translation of the note directed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Chile to the Government of Peru under date of March 3 last proposing bases for holding the plebiscite. A great deal of bitter comment was caused here by the fact that the Peruvian Legation was withdrawn two or three days after the Peruvian Government is said to have received this communication, and it was generally stated that the withdrawal of the Legation was Peru's answer to a note couched in friendly though positive terms.

As reported in my cable of April 2, however, Peru made answer in the form of a counter proposal suggesting, I am informed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the division of the territories, which answer was communicated to Chile by the Brazilian Minister. In stating that such a proposal could not be accepted by Chile, the Minister for Foreign Affairs told me frankly that Chile considered the possession of Tacna and Arica absolutely necessary for the proper military defense of her all-important territory in Tarapaca. He appears anxious that the United States should understand why Chile is so determined to keep the disputed territories; that she wants them for the best reasons, as he called military defense; and that she is pursuing a determined policy, not out of caprice nor to take advantage of Peru, but because she feels she needs the territories. He added that, as he had informed Brazil, Chile would be disposed to pay as much as £3,000,000 as indemnity for the two territories.

In my cable of April 2 I went on to say that the Minister had also told Brazil that if Peru would be willing to accept the decision of a third nation or of the United States, Brazil, and the Argentine Republic on the basis that Chile should keep Tacna and Arica, Chile would be willing to pay even a larger sum if the third nation or group of nations should so decide, and also to cede Tarata. In a later conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs I learned that he said this only to me and that he had not said it to the Brazilian Minister.

His idea seems to be that Peru would do well to accept such a sum, being so badly in need of money as she is; that Chile is ready to go to great sacrifices to keep Tacna and Arica; and that if the two countries could agree to submit the question to the decision of another power with the previous understanding that such decision would give Tacna and Arica to Chile and to Peru the Department of Tarata and a large indemnity Chile would be willing to pay whatever sum such decision demanded. The Minister evidently thinks that if such a previous understanding could be kept secret the Government of Peru would be willing to accept such a solution, as it could deceive the people of Peru into thinking that the plan proposed was a genuine arbitration.

The mention of £3,000,000 goes to show that Chile is prepared to seek a peaceful solution of the difficulty, and I think I am safe in stating that such is the case.

The recent agitation has proved conclusively the general fear among the people of Chile that the United States would intervene, an opinion which seemed to be partially based on the fact that so much American capital is invested in Peru. Thus, the disinterested attitude of the United States appears to have gone a long way toward restoring trust in her on the part of the people of Chile. Certain it is that in Government circles there is a better disposition than there has been for months toward the United States.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, March 28, 1910.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Government of the United States, through its Legation at Lima, has been requested by the Government of Peru to undertake the protection of Peruvian citizens in Chile.

My Government, in communicating this request to me, says that it is willing that this Legation should exercise its impartial good offices in behalf of such Peruvian citizens during the suspension of diplomatic relations between Chile and Peru.

I am therefore instructed—provided, of course, that the Government of your excellency consents to such action on the part of this Legation—to exercise my impartial good offices in behalf of Peruvian citizens in Chile. I would be pleased to know whether, in case the necessity for such protection or good offices should arise, it would be agreeable to the Government of Chile that I should exercise the same.

I should also make known to your excellency that the late Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires confided the archives of the Peruvian Legation to my custody.

I seize this occasion to renew [etc.]

SETH L. PIERREPONT.

[Inclosure No. 2-Translation-Extract.]

The Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Santiago, March 3, 1910.

Mr. Minister: My Government is in possession of the communication that your excellency has been so good as to send on the 23d of December last, dwelling upon the observations due the Government of your excellency by certain measures taken by mine in the territory of Tacna and Arica. * * *

In the correspondence of your excellency's Government that I have just cited it has been demonstrated in a manner that Peru has not yet been able to refute that according to the letter and the spirit of the Treaty of Ancon the districts of Tacna and Arica were ceded to Chile in plain and absolute sovereignty, without any limitation as to her control and only limited as to duration by the event of a plebiscite called for after ten years had passed.

If the plebiscite has not been held yet, it is because your excellency's Government seeks to restrict the right of suffrage, divesting of the rights of naturalization the very essence of the plebiscite act, which, as its name indicates and diplomatic precedents confirm, should be popular; and because, moreover, Peru demands that Chile suspend, during the process, the exercise of a sovereignty which only the adverse result of the plebiscite itself can extinguish.

It is not Chile, as your excellency says it is, that is the obstacle in the way of realizing the plebiscite, because she may not have decided to come to an agreement with Peru. Your excellency, on stating that, forgets her reiterated propositions which have always been turned down.

For the rest, I should remind your excellency that the plebiscites recorded in history prove that these are measures adopted by governments to mitigate, with the appearance of a popular vote, a cession or an annexation agreed upon beforehand, thus avoiding, as far as possible, the wounding of the national pride of the country dismembered.

The reason is obvious: The governments can not seriously consent to leave to the result of voting the fate of a territory susceptible, as in this case, of representing the security of their frontiers and the compensation of sacrifices of blood and money.

The preliminaries, the alternatives, and the incidents of the diplomatic negotiations which resulted in the pact of Ancon clearly demonstrate that the plebiscite would be the only manner shown by history for satisfying the territorial exigencies of Chile without deeply injuring a national sentiment of Peru, which is supported by certain elements in order to bring down the vacillatory Government of the celebrated General Iglesias, who agreed to it. * *

Before entering on more practical ground, and above all more effective for the desired object of putting an end to this difficulty that has already lasted more than a quarter of a century, for the sake of the friendly relations which my Government would like to have at all times with yours, I shall give you an exact explanation, if not of the right, which is indisputable, of the notions which induce my Government to take measures in Tacna and Arica which your excellency rates, in the note I am answering, as grave acts.

Of all the observations which your excellency makes, none surprise my Government more than the one relating to the opening of new industries in the Province of Tacna.

First of all, the opening of industries called upon to develop as best they can where free competition exists can not be material for discussion between two Governments; and the fact that your excellency takes up the question indicates that you consider it possible to restrict the freedom of commerce, the fundamental base of the progress of nations.

The Government, convinced of the importance that the growth of industries has for the future of the Republic, protects and fosters them throughout the country, taking advantage of the various measures which the laws grant; and thus as factories for woven goods, shoes, cloth, steel, sugar, paper, and tobacco are prospering in other Provinces, it is hoped that those recently opened in Tacna, bringing down the prices for the consumers of the articles they produce and creating new centers of activity, will flourish.

My Government fulfills the duties inherent to the sovereignty it exercises in those territories by expediting and encouraging the opening of new industries, and considers that even in cases of districts notably contentious it is permitted to foster industries which guarantee the rights that are disputed.

To prove this statement I need only to appeal to the liberality of sentiments of your excellency, who will have to admit as the truth that Peru has encouraged in every way possible the creation of Peruvian interests in all territory she has disputed or is disputing with bordering nations.

In the very Province of Tacna your excellency's Government protects and helps not only agricultural, commercial, and industrial interests of Peruvian subjects, but also direct means of active propaganda to keep hidden its ancient acts of entailing, which my Government has tolerated up to the present time in spite of the abuses that have been committed in order to denigrate it for tolerating the same.

Your excellency's equity of spirit will doubtless cause you to recognize the fact that it is not possible to qualify as grave and abusive that which your excellency's own Government practices with even greater zeal.

My Government, in its communication of March 25, 1908, proposed to yours different ways by which the two countries could come to a perfect agreement, and among them the holding of a plebiscite on conditions that were equitable, but to no purpose.

Unfortunately, its propositions were not well received, and your excellency's Government stated that for the present it wanted to limit itself to an agreement with mine as to the conditions for holding the plebiscite.

For the sake of cordiality and a national sentiment, my Government desires once more to be deferential to that of your excellency, and, leaving to one side juridical considerations and historical precedents which fix the real meaning of the plebiscite, proposes to celebrate it according to the following bases:

1. The plebiscite shall take place six months after the ratification of the protocol.

2. All the acts of the plebiscite shall be under the vigilance of a "governing board" and realized by "commissions of inscribers" ("comisiones inscriptoras") and "commissions of receivers" ("comisiones receptoras").

3. The governing board that will act in the city of Tacna, as well as the committees of both classes that will act in Tacna and Arica, shall be composed of three members, as follows: One named by the Government of Chile, another by the Government of Peru, and a third elected by the consular corps resident in Tacna or in Arica, by a majority of votes.

The presidency of the governing board and of the two committees shall correspond to the member named by the Government of Chile.

4. The duties of the governing board shall be:

(a) To make out and publish a list of all the voters, in conformity with the partial lists of the committee on registration.

(b) Practice a general vigilance, proclaim the result of the plebiscite, and communicate the result to the Governments of Peru and Chile.

(c) To decide upon all questions and doubts that may arise in the registration, voting, and other acts of the plebiscite.

(d) To dictate all the measures that would insure correctness and seriousness in the proceedings of the plebiscite and public order during election time. 5. The committees on registration shall be installed, one in Tacna and another in Arica, within the eight days following the constitution of the governing board, and shall hold their sessions continuously for twenty days, from 10 in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, registering all those who apply and have the following requisites: 6. Male Chileans, Peruvians, and foreigners who fill the following conditions shall be eligible to registration: (a) Twenty-one years of age.

(b) Know how to read and write.

(c) Six months' residence in the territory.

7. The committee on registration shall hand to each individual a certificate of registration which he should afterwards present to the receivers.

8. Whenever the committee on registration refuses to register an individual it shall make note of it in the minutes of the session of that day, the name of the person refused and the reason for the refusal, and the party concerned shall have a right to demand a copy of the part of the minutes that refers to him. 9. At the foot of the last list the members of the committee on registration shall sign their names every day, placing before their signatures, in writing, the number of individuals registered during the day.

10. At the end of the time set for the registration, the governing board shall cause the lists to be published, within the eight days following, in the newspapers of Tacna and Arica and on posters placed on the public buildings.

11. Within the fifteen days following this publication those who wish to complain about their exclusion may present themselves before the governing board, and at the end of that time the registration will remain definitely formed with the changes recommended by the board.

12. The final list of voters being completed, the governing board shall name, within the eight days following, the date on which the polls shall be open. The polls shall be open on the appointed day from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the afternoon, and the tellers shall be the same individuals who formed the committees of registration.

13. The voters shall present their tickets of registration at the time of voting, and that ticket shall be canceled by the tellers and exchanged for a certificate which shall show that the individual has voted.

14. When all the votes are in, the commission shall make a partial examination of them and shall turn them over to the governing board, together with the acts, registers, canceled registration tickets, and other documents they may have in their power.

15. Within the next twenty-four hours the governing board shall count the votes at one sitting and shall proclaim the result.

16. The governing board and the two committees shall be entirely independent in the exercise of their functions, and the president of each one of them shall take the necessary means to maintain order and to insure liberty to the voters.

17. The governing board and the committees shall only perform their functions when there is a majority of their members present, and when any one of them is disabled he shall be replaced during his illness by some one named by the authority who named the disabled party.

18. All resolutions must be passed by a majority of votes.

19. A special protocol that shall be signed at the same time as the one fixing the conditions of the plebiscite shall determine the administrative acts of the Government of Chile and the rights of third parties that Peru engages to respect, in case the result should be favorable to her, as well as the pecuniary indemnities which may be owed for any reason.

Such liberal and equitable propositions must deserve frank and favorable reception by your excellency's Government if it cares to settle the difficulty pending according to the stipulations of the Treaty of Ancon. The conditions and requirements as to the time when the plebiscite should take place, the nationality of the voters and other requisites pointed out, and the presidency of the act are not new to your excellency, since they have been formulated already by the representative of Chile in Lima. * * *

May your excellency see in the suggested bases the high spirit of justice that inspires my Government and the efforts she puts forth to give Peru unquestionable proof of her intention, never broken, of complying with the treaties she has signed.

I take this opportunity [etc.]

Sir: I have the honor to report that this afternoon the British Minister called upon me and stated that he had received instructions from his Government to offer its moral support (see my telegram of today) to the Argentine Government in its reported negotiations for the settlement of the Tacna-Arica question. Because he later stated that he had forwarded these same instructions to the British Legations at Santiago and Rio de Janeiro, I assume that similar offers will be made to the Chilean and Brazilian Governments. He said that he had had the French Chargé d'Affaires to luncheon today and had learned that he was in receipt of the same instructions from his Government, but he did not say whether or not the French Legations at other South American capitals were being similarly instructed. The English Minister said that he would be pleased to associate himself with me in this matter, but (as I took this to be an attempt to learn whether or not I had also received instructions) I replied that it would seem best to have such association discussed by his Foreign Office directly with you in Washington. I at once telegraphed you reporting the above. During an interview which I had later in the afternoon with the Minister for Foreign Affairs I told him of this interview with the English Minister, that I had referred him to Washington, and that he might expect an early visit from the English Minister and the French Chargé d'Affaires. I added that, if it were not indiscreet, I should be glad to receive an intimation of how he would receive such an English or French offer. He replied that he would do just what I had done—refer them to Washington. I said that I had made this inquiry on my own responsibility, pointing out that sufficient time had not elapsed since the said interview for me to have received instructions thereon from Washington.

The Legation of Bolivia to the Department of State.²

[Memorandum of the Bolivian Foreign Office handed to the Secretary of State by the Minister of Bolivia on June 9, 1910.]

The Government of Bolivia can not allow the existing circumstances to pass without learning how Chile and Peru would receive suggestions tending to solve the Tacna-Arica controversy.

The only practical importance of those territories resides in their geographical and commercial relationship to Bolivia to the point that they may and will, with the ways of communication now building, constitute a province inseparable from the destinies of this country. For the signatories to the Pact of Ancón they possess no other than that attached to historical sentiment and national dignity.

Chile and Peru, holding the opinion of many of their eminent public men, should cease to have a common boundary and should set up the territorial sovereignty of Bolivia over an intermediate zone on the Pacific coast. It is needless to demonstrate the importance of this proposition, vital to the policy and equilibrium of the Spanish-American nations.

² This memorandum was transcribed to all American diplomatic officers of the United States in Latin-American countries, with a request for their opinions (June 11, 1910).

Bolivia can not be cut off from the sea and live: now and at all times she will, as far as her strength permits, do all that lies in her power to own at least a convenient harbor on the Pacific, and she will never be content to stand idle whenever the Tacna-Arica question, which affects the very foundation of her existence, is agitated. She has pursued in the last few years a course of absolute fidelity to the conventions by which she was deprived of her coast, and has settled her boundary disputes with Peru by sacrificing much that in the light of her duties and rights appeared incapable of impairment, confident that some day events and high Providence would compel the only possible solution of this grave South American problem: the final embodiment of all or part of Tacna and Arica in Upper Peru.

A sovereign state can not forego the possession through legitimate means of a zone of territory whose existence and prosperity depend on its traffic, commerce and proximity and whose embodiment in the country with which it maintains such intimate relations affects its safety and would assure its sovereign existence and economic development. This is the doctrine which within the canons of human rights this Chancellery professes and which Bolivia will defend with all the power of her will and spirit.

The Bolivian Government is far from seeking difficulties to bring into the controversy but it must fulfill a paramount duty in making known with entire nobility to Chile and Peru that she can not stand idle at the historic moment that confronts the three countries and that she wishes to know whether the two countries that separate her from the Pacific could listen to propositions conducive to results that would conciliate the interests and dignity of the three peoples and insure their peace, good faith and fraternity.

Within the essential purpose that the delivery of a port to Bolivia would achieve and as a direct consequence of cessation of border proximity between Peru and Chile there would lie many forms of agreement by means of which diplomacy could conciliate and seal forever and by indelible bonds the interests and aspirations of each one of the participants in the War of the Pacific.

Bolivia, in taking this step, formulates her inalienable right to exist within the solidarity of America and hopes that the Governments of both Chile and Peru, as well as the Powers able to bring their influence to bear on the course of the destinies of the South American nationalities, will appreciate the importance, sincerity and honesty of our purpose, which rest on aspirations and interests of such magnitude that nothing can suppress them now or in the future.

The Cabinet of La Paz would be ready to propose to those of Santiago and Lima satisfactory bases and compensations in the event of their being willing to enter upon negotiations and their looking upon the attitude of Bolivia in a spirit of justice.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
DIVISION OF LATIN-AMERICAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, November 10, 1910.

Dear Mr. Secretary: The following are extracts from correspondence during the present year regarding the disposition of the Chilean Government as to the Tacna-Arica question:

In October of last year the Chilean Government presented to the Peruvian Government bases for the settlement of the Tacna-Arica matter.² Our Minister at Santiago reported, on November 1, 1909, that the Argentine Government had been assisting in inducing the Peruvian Government to accept Chile's preliminary terms. The Argentine Minister at Santiago stated that his Government's action had not been and would not be by way of intervention or mediation, but only by way of friendly counsel. The Argentine Minister desired to know the probable disposition of the Department as to seconding Argentina's action at Lima and Washington.

On April 5, 1910, our Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago stated ¹ that Peru had made a counter-proposal to Chile. He reported as follows:

As reported in my cable of April 2, however, Peru made answer in the form of a counter proposal suggesting, I am informed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the division of the territories, which answer was communicated to Chile by the Brazilian Minister.

In stating that such a proposal could not be accepted by Chile, the Minister for Foreign Affairs told me frankly that Chile considered the possession of Tacna and Arica absolutely necessary for the proper military defense of her all-important territory in Tarapacá. He appears anxious that the United States should understand why Chile is so determined to keep the disputed territories; that she wants them for the best reasons, as he called military defense; and that she is pursuing a determined policy, not out of caprice nor to take advantage of Peru, but because she feels she needs the territories. He added that, as he had informed Brazil, Chile would be disposed to pay as much as £3,000,000 as indemnity for the two territories.

The purpose of the proposed plebiscite for the settlement of the question as understood by Chile appears from the following extract from a note of the Chilean Government to the Peruvian Government of March 3, 1910:2

For the rest, I should remind your excellency that the plebiscites recorded in history prove that these are measures adopted by governments to mitigate, with the appearance of a popular vote, a cession or an annexation agreed upon beforehand, thus avoiding, as far as possible, the wounding of the national pride of the country dismembered.

The reason is obvious: The governments can not seriously consent to leave to the result of voting the fate of a territory susceptible, as in this case, of representing the security of their frontiers and the compensaion of sacrifices of blood and money.

The preliminaries, the alternatives and the incidents of the diplomatic negotiations which resulted in the pact of Ancon clearly demonstrate that the plebiscite would be the only manner shown by history for satisfying the territorial exigencies of Chile without deeply injuring a national sentiment of Peru, which is supported by certain elements in order to bring down the vacillatory Government of the celebrated General Iglesias, who agreed to it.

In a telegram from our Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago, of March 26, 1910, it is stated that the Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs has informed him that "should any neutral power desire to assist the settlement it should address Peru, urging the acceptance of a money indemnity, Chile being very determined." ¹

In a despatch from our Embassy at Petropolis, dated March 31, 1910, the Ambassador stated as follows in reference to the attempt made by Brazil to settle this matter:

In conversation with Baron de Rio Branco on the 28th instant this subject was reverted to and I advised him with reference to his suggestion made to Chile—that the Governments of Chile and Peru submit their question to those of Brazil, Argentina and the United States-of the readiness of the Government of the United States, in case the plan were acceptable to Chile and Peru, to respond to their request by contributing so far as possible to a solution of the difficulty.

The Baron then informed me confidentially that his overtures had so far resulted in failure, the Chilean Government declining to consider his proposal or anything savoring of arbitration. He had then proposed that the three countries be asked as amiables compositeurs to determine solely a proper division of the provinces between the contestants, but this suggestion also was rejected. The only concession Chile was willing to make was to authorize the Brazilian Government to offer Peru clear title to the province of Talara, an interior and valueless strip claimed to have been turned over to Chile along with Tacna and Arica at the end of the war—a fact denied by Peru. This offer, as a settlement of the long-standing question, was so manifestly unentitled to serious consideration that it will not be officially communicated to Peru by this Government.

 See Inclosure 2 in Mr. Pierrepont's No. 74 of April 5, 1910, cited above.

This was in reply to the Department's telegram of March 24, in part as follows:

The Government of the United States of course fully shares the hope of the Government of Brazil for a definitive settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute. As for Baron Rio Branco's important suggestion made to Chile—that the Governments of Chile and Peru submit the question to those of Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the United States—if this plan were acceptable to Chile and Peru the Government of the United States would be prepared to respond to their request by contributing what it might toward a satisfactory solution of this very troublesome problem.

It is evident that this question has had an indirect but very irritating effect upon the former Peru-Bolivia and the present Peru-Ecuador questions.

On April 2, 1910, the Ambassador at Petropolis telegraphed:1

Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs, March 28th, confidentially informed me Chile had declined to consider his proposals or anything in the nature of arbitration of the Tacna-Arica question. He asserted Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs is prejudiced by unfounded suspicion of some secret understanding between Brazil and Peru consequent upon recent settlement of their boundary question. Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs intends therefore to leave matter in abeyance pending the arrival President Montt on this coast.

On the same date, the Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago telegraphed:1

Peruvian counter proposal on the basis of dividing territories received yesterday by Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs through Brazilian Minister was found utterly unacceptable as Chile needs both territories for military defense. Minister for Foreign Affairs says he told Brazil Chile would be disposed to pay as much as three million pounds sterling indemnity for both Tacna and Arica and that if Peru would accept the decision of a third nation or of the United States, Brazil and the Argentine Republic on the basis that Chile will keep Tacna and Arica, Chile would be willing to pay even more, should the Powers so decide and also to cede Tarata.

The Chargé d'Affaires at Lima reported, on March 14, 1910, that Mr. Porras, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, had informed him that:

His own hope was that an international tribunal of American Powers (preferably the United States, Brazil and the Argentine) would be formed with full powers to judge of the merits of the case. He said that even ignoring Peru's well founded rights (in his opinion) the award might be made acceptable by Peru in one of two ways as follows:

(1) Tacna and Arica to be erected into a buffer state.

(2) The provinces to be divided between Peru and Chile with due consideration of Peru's rights and of the status quo.

In connection with this information, the Chargé d'Affaires stated:

As regards the United States, I respectfully suggest that some direct indication of the Department's views regarding the matters set forth above would be of the greatest value in the not wholly improbable eventuality of a crisis in Peruvian-Chilean affairs.

I have considered it wise to report at some length in view of the fact that whatever be the political fate of Mr. Porras, the results of his policies as indicated are likely to have a considerable influence on the foreign relations of Peru for some time to come.

The Department replied to this in a despatch, No. 113, of April 13th, 1910, stating in part:

PERU.

Referring to your suggestion that some direct indication of the Department's views on the intervention of neutral third powers in the Tacna-Arica question would be of the greatest value, you are informed that the Department has recently indicated its willingness to join with Argentina and Brazil, at the suggestion of the latter, in an attempt to see a solution reached of this troublesome dispute.

On May 15th, 1910, the Minister at Buenos Aires telegraphed:2

[I] respectfully submit that because next week Chilean President and Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Peruvian Vice President will visit Buenos Aires, adjustment Tacna-Arica might be reached by American Legation cooperating with Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs. Because Chile is overconfident that Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs prejudiced in their favor, arrangement might be reached submitting question to joint arbitration of United States and the Argentine Republic. Believe Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs would use all his influence to effect above arrangement because he would receive the public credit for it. Believe that he can deliver Chilean assent if he desires, but doubt his serious efforts to that end if Brazil were included as arbitrator. If foregoing in any way meets your approval, may I be favored with early instructions to permit me to open the subject with the Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs before arrival of said Chileans and Peruvians?

The files do not show that any reply was sent to this telegram. There is no subsequent reference of importance to this question in the files. There are statements in several late despatches from Buenos Aires, I think, that some of the leading men in Peru at least realize that Chile will never consent to any settlement which will not guarantee Chilean sovereignty in Tacna and Arica, but there seems to be nothing to show that the previous irreconcilable attitude of the Peruvian Government has altered. The present Chilean Ministry is reported to be less aggressive in regard to this question than its predecessor in which Mr. Edwards was the Foreign Minister. Recently an interesting memorandum, written by the Chilean Minister in Mexico, was forwarded by our Ambassador there, and reconfirms what appears from the above correspondence—that Chile will not consent to any arbitration which does not, first of all, guarantee her sovereignty in Tacna and Arica.

It will be noted from the above correspondence that both Argentina and Brazil have tried to settle this question during the present year, but have failed.

Both Argentina and Brazil are friendly to Peru, and both are now—especially the former—on friendly terms with Chile.

This inquiry of the United States may be a last resort after Argentina's and Brazil's failure. Whether we could succeed any better than these two Powers seems very questionable.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 18, 1910.

On November 10 the Peruvian Minister handed to the Secretary of State a telegram from his Foreign Office dated Lima, November 5, 1910, in which it was stated that some friction exists between Bolivia and Peru regarding the interpretation of the boundary protocol of September 17, 1909, Bolivia contending under Chilean influence that Peru should evacuate the upper waters of the Manuripe. The telegram states that a detailed report is being mailed; that the American Minister at Lima has also been informed in regard thereto; that a Chilean member of Congress, Mr. Alfonso, at present at Lima, has suggested the idea of reaching an understanding on the Tacna-Arica controversy.

In view of the attitude of Bolivia, Peru desires to know, without delay and openly and explicitly, what aid she may expect from the United States in regard to the Tacna-Arica question in order to frame her action.

On being shown this telegram the Secretary of State merely expressed the hope that Chile and Peru might be able to find a basis for settlement consistent with their national honor and interests. The Peruvian Minister desired to know if he might inform his Government, to which the Secretary assented.

Sir: I cabled the Department on the 17th the substance of the replies of the Argentine and Brazilian Governments to the inquiry directed to the capitals of the mediating Powers by the Peruvian Foreign Office, regarding their views with respect to the negotiations opened in Lima by Mr. Alfonso, the secret diplomatic agent of Chile, for the settlement of the Tacna and Arica dispute.

Subsequently, I cabled that the President of Peru had accepted the proposal made by Mr. Alfonso in the name of the President of Chile.

In reporting the details of these negotiations I have the honor to state that the inquiry directed by Mr. Porras to the Governments of the United States of America, Argentine, and Brazil to know "without delay openly and explicitly what she [Peru] may expect "from these countries in regard to the Tacna and Arica question was, I think, largely for the purpose of having a record, for future publication, to show that the Peruvian Foreign Office had discovered it could not hope for outside assistance in solving this question and was forced to make the best of the situation.

Mr. Alfonso had maps with a proposed line, which he exhibited; the Peruvian Government offered a different line, and finally it was decided that with these two lines as a basis an agreement as to the exact line and the amount of pecuniary compensation could be reached by discussion, and Mr. Porras notified Mr. Alfonso that his proposal in principle was accepted.

Mr. Porras told me that both Governments felt that it was very important for the success of this plan of settlement that it should be presented to the public as one emanating from a power mutually friendly to Peru and Chile, and that in accordance with this view Mr. Alfonso had suggested Great Britain should propose the settlement and that he had accepted this idea.

These matters having been decided, Mr. Porras mentioned that it would now be advantageous for Chile to quiet the anti-Peruvian agitation in Ecuador and Bolivia, and Mr. Alfonso smilingly bowed assent.

There is no question but Chile, by the difficulties she has created for Peru in Ecuador and Bolivia, has forced Peru into this negotiation. At the same time, the Powers mediating the question between Peru and Ecuador have put such a moral pressure upon Chile that the policy of the latter in these countries was becoming more and more difficult, and she was compelled to offer a more moderate basis for settlement than would otherwise ever have been formulated.

There is no doubt in my mind but for the mediation, planned by the State Department, Peru would have soon found herself at war with Ecuador, Bolivia, and Chile, with a result little short of her destruction.

However this may be an agreement between Chile and Peru guarantees the success of the mediation.

I have, of course, done all that I could in an unofficial way to forward this settlement.

Referring to Department's November 18, repeated from Peru. Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me Chilean Government has not sent Mr. Alfonso to Peru nor authorized him to negotiate and is ignorant of his proceedings except as learned from others. Minister for Foreign Affairs, however, very confidentially intimated that Chile might accept such a division of the territory as would leave the Arica-La Paz Railway in Chilean territory. This would give the Province of Arica and a small portion of Tacna to Chile, leaving the city of Tacna and most of Province of Tarata to Peru.

He has instructed Chilean Minister to thank Secretary of State for Department's attitude, which he highly appreciates. He also very confidentially informed me he had again, since the withdrawal of the King of Spain as arbiter, urgently advised Ecuador to accept mediation and had refused them arms, etc., because they had not accepted the mediation. Chilean Minister instructed to inform Department of this fact also. My opinion is that no definite steps are likely to be taken in Tacna-Arica matter until after new government takes office on 24th instant.

On December 20 the President-elect, Mr. Barros Luco, announced his idea of the policy Chile should follow in this matter, as follows:

I believe that at present it is not for our country to take the initiative in the Tacna-Arica question and that we should defer it. Peru withdrew its Legation from Santiago without just cause, and on this account I think that we, ourselves, should not raise any question as long as that Legation is not reestablished.

MEMORANDUM.

After the long series of hostilities carried out in Tacna and Arica against the Peruvian customhouse agents, carters, workmen, professors, teachers, and village priests with the object of obliging them to abandon those Provinces and so reducing a great number of the votes which Peru would have been able to count on upon the carrying out of the plebiscite stipulated in the treaty of Ancon, the Chilean populace of Iquique held a meeting on the 27th of May last expressly directed against the Peruvian element still residing in that port. A number of outrages were committed on the Peruvians, including the destruction and looting of commercial establishments, newspaper offices, and the Peruvian Club and social centers, the destruction of the shield of the Consulate, the ill treatment of many of our fellow citizens, and threats against the person of the Peruvian Consul, Mr. Forero, who was obliged to take refuge, first, in the American Consulate, then in the British Consulate, and finally to return to his own country, in order to avoid greater complications which might have brought about a disastrous conflict. These offenses were the more outrageous because uncalled for, as it is well known that neither Peru nor any of its citizens had given any pretext whatever for their perpetration, nor can any other explanation be given for them than the design to prosecute [provoke?] on the part of our country retaliation on which to base aggression. The state of things to which Chile tenaciously and unjustly seeks to drag us is the desire of checking our recovery and rendering the peace of the country and its progress for a long time impossible; and this opposition, far from being imaginary, is confirmed by later events, for on the 18th of July another meeting was held in Tacna on the pretext of demonstrating the adhesion which was considered necessary to the conclusions drawn up at the meeting held in Iquique, and thus without cause or explainable motive gave rise to the horrible, contemptible outrages and crimes of May last, when, amid the savage fury of the Chilean mobs, complete destruction was visited upon the newspaper offices, clubs, places of business of our fellow citizens in those parts, causing them, as in Iquique, to begin to emigrate in large numbers in consequence of finding themselves deprived of peace and protection in their own land.

Happily, the good common sense of our people, in spite of the painful news received of these events, avoided any kind of hostile demonstration toward Chile, frustrating the sinister plans of that country, in whose interest it is to drag us into an armed conflict the result of which is only too obvious, considering that country's undeniable superiority.

Shortly afterwards news came of the invasion of our territory and of a probably unjustifiable occupation of Peruvian territory on the border (Ticaco), a scandalous act which was not consummated, thanks to the opportuneness of the intervention which the Governments of the United States of America, the Argentine Republic, and Brazil interposed, which made Chile aware of the previous discovery of those disgraceful plans.

Chilean forces a short time ago furtively and by surprise established themselves in the little village of Conchachire, situated on the left bank of the River Maure, completely outside of the jurisdiction of the Provinces of Tacna and Arica and even of that of Tarata, and hence unjustifiably occupied by

Chile.

This village, on account of its being on the left bank of the river, belongs to the Province of Chucuito, in the Department of Puno, whose boundary on the west is the said River Maure.

This last occurrence serves to show that in their desire to injure and provoke Peru there is nothing that is respected nor worthy of respect by the insatiability and fury of the Chilean Government. Lastly, within the last few days, taking as their pretext a falsified version of a speech delivered by the President of Peru at a meeting organized by the exiled Peruvians from the Provinces of the south, who are now resident in Lima and Callao, wherein he recognized the necessity of providing for the national defenses, and inventing the report that our country had acquired the old French battleship Jeanne d'Arc, the Chilean press has carried to an extreme its call for war against Peru and has widened the district of operations and the number of its forces in military maneuvers carried on on the Peruvian boundary line. It has decreed the acquisition of new naval units and even large military supplies, and has decided to carry this almost warlike demonstration to such a point on our frontier line that its forces will probably cover territory and localities which are indisputably ours, and again bring about a fresh provocation, the consequences of which it may prove very difficult for Peru to overcome. In this situation and as the patience of our people can not be eternal, now tired of innumerable outrages, the peace of America is threatened by a country that has resolved upon our ruin, after having in 1879 treacherously assaulted and impoverished our country and mutilated its territory, denied all justice and right by us to the point of indefinitely postponing the fulfillment of solemn agreements which should have been In a condition when might becomes the only right and effected since 1893. abuse the only national resort, when the continent is scandalized and disturbed at sight of such unjustifiable and unprovoked insult, all of which is aggravated by the attitude which, at the instance of Chile, Ecuador, Colombia and Bolivia are now assuming in their boundary disputes with our country, and in view of the alarming coincidents of the last mentioned of these countries, carrying out simultaneously with Chile extraordinary military maneuvers which take place on our frontier, this Government can not but address itself to the highly civilized and powerful nations who have honored it with friendly mediation in our conflict with Ecuador in order that they may apprise their respective Governments of the facts here narrated, and call their attention to the dangerous situation prevailing in this part of America, in order that they may contemplate the storm which is threatening these nations to the detriment of peace and to the discredit of the civilization of the continent, and in order that they may in their greatness and wisdom at once ward off the danger by all the means in their power.

Extracts published from Peru newspapers charge that there is systematic plan of driving Peruvian citizens out of the Provinces. Manager of the Peruvian Bank of Tacna, who was also the so-called Peruvian intendente, left a few days ago at the instance of Chilean general commanding there. Chilean forces engaged in maneuvers will remain in the vicinity of Tacna until distribution of garrisons is decided. American Legation, Santiago, Chile, November 14, 1911.

Sir: I have the honor to report, in amplification of my telegram of the 9th instant, that Senator Walker Martinez presented on November 8 in the Senate a motion designed to provide representation in the Chilean Congress for the Provinces of Tacna and Arica.

As the Department is well aware, this territory, since the treaty of Ancon, has remained under the administrative control of Chile, pending the plebiscito which should determine its definitive status, but has not sent representatives to the Chilean Congress.

The Senator prefaced the introduction of his motion by referring to the law of October 31, 1884, which, after creating of the territories of Tacna and Arica "a Province of the Republic, provides that the laws of Chile shall rule in the new Province, and that its inhabitants shall enjoy the same guaranties secured by the Constitution to all inhabitants of the remainder of the Republic". He claimed that, far from denying, this law safeguarded the rights of the Chileans in Tacna and Arica to be represented and to elect their municipalities, and that if they had not enjoyed these rights heretofore it was because the secondary laws fixing number of Senators and Deputies had omitted the name of the new Province. He stated that this omission was a generous compliment to Peru in giving a conditional appearance to the occupation, and that it was a proper one as long as the period fixed by the treaty had not elapsed, but now that the ten years and more had passed, and it had not been possible to come to an agreement with Peru, it was proper for the Chilean Congress to act. Mr. Walker restated the Chilean position as to the plebiscito provided by the treaty, and recommended that Chile proceed, "with serene tranquillity", to incorporate in all respects the territories of Tacna and Arica into the national life. believed this definite act would tend to bring nearer the reestablishment of cordial relations with Peru. He then proposed the formal motion as an amendment to law No. 2453 of the 1st of February, 1911, which fixes the number of Senators and Deputies. The text of his speech and the press comments it called forth appear fully in the clippings which I forward in this mail.

No definite action seems to have been taken on the motion to incorporate the matter in the legislative program of the present session of Congress, without which no progress can be made. The press of all shades applauds the motion enthusiastically. Senator Walker is an Independent and the Government has not yet given any indication as to its attitude. The legislative deadlock continues, owing to the obstruction of the Liberal minority, and unless some compromise political arrangement is made with the minority, it is doubtful if even this question which appeals strongly to all Chileans will be allowed to make any progress in Congress.

The Sub-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, speaking informally and confidentially of the Tacna-Arica situation, intimated that the present intendente, Mr. Maximo Lira, would probably be transferred to another post, possibly a diplomatic one; that General Solar had accomplished more in the few weeks he had been there than the intendente had in years; that the Walker motion was not designed to force Peru's hand, as Chile did not expect that any progress toward a settlement with Peru could be made while President Leguia remained in office.

In view of the delicacy of Chilean sensibilities I have been very guarded in all my references to this question, and have therefore not had occasion to hear an explicit statement of Chile's policy, but I gather from such casual conversations as I have had that their present intention is to take stronger and more radical measures to "Chileanize" these Provinces.

The headquarters of the first division have been removed from Iquique to Tacna, and from the activity displayed in erecting fortifications at Arica and barracks, etc., at Tacna it would seem evident that it is the Government's intention to use the troops there not only to guard against any sudden descent from Peru, but also as an instrument in the "Chileanization" of the district.

Many Peruvians have already left Tarapacá as a result of annoyances culminating in the Iquique riots last May, and a similar exodus is reported as in progress from Tacna and Arica. The resignation and return to Peru of Mr. Espejo, manager of the Peruvian Bank in Tacna, who, the Chilean papers say, was also Peruvian intendente of the Province and agent of the Bishop of Arequipa, has attracted much comment. His leaving is thought to be due to an intimation from General Solar.

The general staff of the Chilean army leaves for Arica on the 15th, ostensibly for the purpose of examining military situation and deciding upon the distribution of garrisons.

Colonel Echavarría, a member of the staff, told me the other day they expected to be gone about three weeks. He offered to take Lieutenant Hammond, military attaché, with him on his next visit to the north, which he said would be shortly after his return from this trip. If the matter can be arranged simply and naturally, I shall send Mr. Hammond north on his return from the Argentine, as I feel somewhat handicapped by want of accurate information as to the situation, both political and military.

The opinion of the best informed of my colleagues is that, while Chile is very anxious to conclude this old matter, on the basis of her retention of the Provinces, she will not force the issue; that being in possession she feels secure, and will stand firmly on this possession until it shall be recognized diplomatically by Peru or challenged by force.

Sir: I have the honor to report that while calling upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday to obtain the agreement of the Argentine Government to the appointment of Mr. Garrett to this post, the Minister told me that about a week previous he had received a memorandum from the Peruvian Government enumerating many annoying acts committed by the Chilean authorities in the Provinces of Tacna and Arica against Peruvian citizens residing there, and drawing the attention of the "mediating Powers" to the particularly harassing attitude of the Chilean Government as shown by these acts, and requesting the cognizance on the part of the "mediating Powers" thereof with a view to putting an end to them.

The Minister went on to say that Peru, by this memorandum, was endeavoring to extend the friendly intervention on the part of the United States, Brazil, and Argentina in the Peru-Ecuador boundary dispute to include the long-unsettled Tacna-Arica question. He assumed that a similar communication had been made to the other two Governments of the tripartite mediation and that they had not taken any steps in the direction desired by the Peruvian Government, since he had received no information in the matter from the Argentine representatives at Washington and Rio de Janeiro. To the Minister's question as to whether I had been advised in the matter, I replied that my Government had made no communication to this Legation relative to the receipt of such a memorandum as he had just described.

Dr. Bosch then went on to say that a short time ago the Brazilian Government had offered its good offices to Chile as a mediating power in settling amicably with Peru the Tacna-Arica question, and that these overtures had been received with distinct signs of annoyance by the Chilean Government. From this, and from statements which he said had recently been made to him by the Chilean Minister, he drew the conclusion that any offers of intervention by friendly powers would be distasteful to Chile. He further said that in Peru the matter was so complicated by political considerations that there was apparently no hope of its Government voluntarily accepting a monetary compensation until there should appear, in that country, a strong statesman, unswayed by spasmodic public demonstrations or the certainty of ending his political career.

The American Minister to Chile to the Secretary of State.

No. 155.]

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, Chile, November 27, 1911.

Sir: Confirming my telegram of the 22d instant, and continuing the subject matter of my despatch No. 148 of November 14, I have the honor to inclose the text and translation of the decree issued by the President on November 21 last, extending the law of obligatory military service to the Province of Tacna (which includes also Arica).

The decree, it will be noticed, refers in the preamble to "Chilean" citizens, but the question will immediately arise as to whether persons of military age, born in the Province of Peruvian parentage, are embraced. In the press the claim has frequently been made that all persons born in this Province since the Chilean occupation are, under international law and the laws of this country, Chilean citizens. I can not certainly predict what attitude this Government will take in this respect in the enforcement of the decree, but it seems to form an essential part of their plan to Chileanize this region. Whether persons of military age born in the Province of Peruvian parents since the occupation shall be called upon or not, this mere possibility will no doubt induce a considerable exodus of this class from Tacna and Arica before the time fixed for the execution of the decree, viz, January next, and the desired "Chileanization" will be advanced protanto.

The Department can readily see how a rigorous enforcement of this decree may further complicate and embitter the present unfortunate relations between Chile and Peru.

As I reported by telegraph on November 22, there were fears of another anti-Peruvian outbreak in Iquique at the beginning of last week. It seems that the Chilean laborers, incited thereto by the Patriotic League which was responsible for the riots there last May, went in a body to the various industrial establishments where Peruvians were employed and demanded their dismissal. There was, however, no violence. The intendente acted promptly and energetically. The Government ordered two regiments to return to Iquique from Tacna and instructed the intendente to endeavor to disband the The newspapers today state that the intendente called the leaders before him, delivered the message of the Government, and that they agreed to disband the league. It is impossible to judge how far the Government sympathizes with the anti-Peruvian propaganda which seems to be in progress in the north of Chile. The elections are approaching and this fact may explain the want of stronger and more repressive action. On the other hand, labor is scarce in the nitrate fields and the Peruvians must be depended upon, and the fear of crippling this industry undoubtedly explains the prompt measures recently taken by the Government in Iquique to stop the agitation.

The demonstrations which have taken place in Tarapacá, though undoubtedly a phase of the general anti-Peruvian sentiment in the country, is not in my opinion directly connected with the apparent policy of the Government to Chileanize Tacna-Arica. While certain prominent politicians or groups probably used this sentiment in furtherance of their political ends in Tarapacá, I do not, however, believe the Government as such was implicated. The present Government, it must be borne in mind, is made up of a number of elements, and any united positive action is very difficult, but such policy as it may be said to have is directed to the Chileanization of Tacna and Arica. This is apparent in (1) the military occupation of Tacna and the fortification of Arica, (2) the strong line taken by General Solar in Tacna, (3) the renewed efforts to encourage Chilean colonization by advancement of funds for purchase and improvement of land (see clippings), (4) the extension of the law of military service to Tacna, (5) the Walker Martinez project (so far merely a project) for representation of the district in the Chilean Congress. It is possible, also, that the recent loan of £5,000,000 has some connection with this policy. The loose financial methods in vogue here and the ease with which money raised for one purpose may be devoted to another would permit such connection. As I have several times recently reported, Chile seems to have decided to conclude this question gradually and, if possible, peacefully, but definitely and on the basis of Chilean ownership, and whether her acts of ownership and sovereignty be challenged by war or acquiesced in by diplomatic arrangement, a supply of ready cash will be useful to meet the military expenses or pay the indemnity.

Public opinion, as reflected in the press and in public meetings, seems strongly in favor of a conclusion of this old question and may force the Government to move more rapidly than is now their intention. A large public meeting was held here yesterday in the Municipal Theater under the auspices of the Patriotic Military League for the purpose of organizing a reserve corps, and resolutions were adopted and presented to the President urging the settlement of the frontier question and asking the Government's support of the reserve movement. The meeting was attended by representative citizens—was dignified and orderly in every respect. The Minister of War and Marine was invited to attend the meeting, but declined, and no members of the Cabinet were present, but the resolutions adopted, which were presented by a committee escorted by a procession composed of those who attended the meeting, were formally received by the President, the Minister of Interior, and the Minister of War and Marine at the Moneda.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: With reference to the memorandum delivered by my Government to the representatives of the United States, Argentina, and Brazil at Lima, on the 23d of October, and complementing the information therein contained, I am advised that my Government has presented, on the 30th ultimo, a further memorandum to the aforesaid representatives calling their attention to the following facts, that tend to prove the intention of the Chilean Government to effect in Tacna and Arica an unilateral plebiscite. This my Government would be obliged to reject through a natural sentiment of dignity, and in consequence a serious conflict will sooner or later ensue.

The facts I allude to are as follows:

I. The Chilean Government has expelled the Peruvian delegate from Tacna;

II. The Chilean Government has demanded the resignation of the Peruvian commissioner of irrigation (delegado de aguas), appointed by the local farmers, and in his stead has substituted a Chilean citizen, with instructions to deprive the Peruvian farmers of the water they need;

III. Chile continues to authorize the injuries to the persons and properties of Peruvian citizens residing at Tacna and Arica, Iquique, and Antofagasta;

IV. The Chilean Government has presented to Congress a project of law nominating representatives to Congress from Tacna and

Arica:

V. The enforcement of the law on military service has been extended to Tacna and Arica, thereby obliging those Peruvian citizens who are affected by it to abandon their native land or to serve in the Chilean army;

VI. The unusually large number of troops actually concentrated at Tacna is to be considerably augmented by the Chilean Government; and

VII. Chile has ordered to Germany 100,000 rifles and requires their immediate delivery.

In view of these facts and as the first memorandum of my Government has as yet remained unanswered, my Government jointly reiterates to the Powers who have mediated in previous conflicts its request that they exercise their good offices in the form they deem best, with the intent of upholding the prestige of our continent and maintaining international peace.

Sir: Following my cable of this date, I have the honor to report the receipt, from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, of memorandum No. 2, continuing the narrative of October 23, concerning Chilean activities on the Peruvian frontier and the former's preparation for war.

I had called at the Foreign Office to obtain confirmation or denial of some of the many current rumors, and was there informed of the preparation of the inclosed memorandum, and that up to this time the Chileans have driven as many as 5,000 Peruvians from their homes, a fact not mentioned in the memorandum.

MEMORANDUM.

Office of Foreign Relations.

Chile has made no halt in the series of provocations and abuses briefly outlined in this office's memorandum of the 23d of October last, which it found itself obliged and had the honor to submit to the illustrious Governments of the United States of America, the Argentine Republic, and Brazil.

On the contrary, anxious to draw Peru into an armed conflict which should afford it a propitious opportunity to bring about the country's total ruin, Chile has carried its measures of violence to an extreme, has willfully planned the commission of outrages and carried out the most unjust administrative acts, with the clear intention of wresting from us the dominion of the Provinces of Tacna and Arica in a wholly one-sided manner, which is all the more injurious, scandalous, and irritating as in consequence of these acts the sacred stipulations are ignored of the treaty of Ancon, which Chile seeks not to respect or fulfill or even bring to mind. Hardly had the vexatious acts terminated which I related in my previous memorandum when, on the 24th of October, there commenced in Antofagasta a boycott of the Peruvian business establishments and hostiliites were committed on the persons of all the Peruvians residing at that port.

On the 24th of October the so-called Patriotic League, organized to the image and likeness of that in Iquique, in terrifying terms notified the most prominent and influencial members of the Peruvian colony, such as Mr. Meneses Cornejo and others, of their expulsion, and they were immediately given notice to quit the place in the limited space of eight days (October 31); and all this in the presence and hearing of the authorities, who, when asked for guaranties for the lives, property, and freedom of residence of those whom it was sought to expel, pleaded the lack of sufficient forces to carry out their decisions should they be opposed to the objects of the league and its members.

On the 3d of November, General Solar, commander of the forces at Tacna, imposed upon the manager of the Bank of Tacna, the Peruvian citizen Mr. Artidoro Espejo, the closing of that institution without alleging any of the reasons for so doing than "the unsuitability to Chile of the existence of a Peruvian bank in the locality"; and, on the following day (the 4th), that chief carried out his threats by sending troops to the doors of the bank and closing the entry to or exit from same by all persons who were either engaged or wished to engage in business operations. Mr. Espejo called a meeting of the directors, and, rightly presuming that the outrage committed was directed principally to the elimination of his person, resigned his position as manager; without, however, appeasing the fury of the Chilean authorities, who almost simultaneously ordered him to leave the town in a very limited space of time, together with other influential Peruvians, such as the judicial agent, Mr. Enrique Zerga; the president of the Peruvian Benevolent Society, Mr. Carlos Vives, and several others.

On the same day (the 4th of November) the doors of the Peruvian Club were forcibly closed and on futile pretexts one or more of the houses of Peruvian families were even entered, thus violating the most sacred rights of the home.

On the 7th of November, as a result of a series of threats, which eventually overpowered the good will of Mr. Hudson, the English Consul in Iquique in charge of the Peruvian Consulate at that port, it was found necessary to order Mr. Garcia, the clerk of that Consulate, to leave the place.

On the 20th the injuries and outrages against the Peruvians in the town and in the nitrate districts were renewed under the direction of the famous Patriotic League, which preached the depriving of our fellow citizens of all work and brought about a strike to carry out their desires. Their pretension was, as usual, carried to the extreme of shouts and vociferations, calling for the expulsion of the Peruvian colony, which, in spite of its being honest, hardworking, and of proverbial usefulness which makes it preferable and preferred in all kinds of hard labor and in every kind of business, finds itself to-day excluded from both one and the other through the fear of those who require its services; abandoned to misery through the want of a daily wage and, consequently, constrained to leave for kinder and more hospitable regions, where its members will be treated as rational and free beings.

In speaking of this matter it is a crying shame that such a contradictory and inhuman system should, only in the case of Peruvians, seem to prevail in Chile. On the one hand they are deprived of work and their daily bread, and their expulsion is continuously the cry, while on the other hand, under the allegation that the nitrate industry can not be deprived of labor to the detriment of both owners and the State, the authorities by armed force stationed on the landing stages forcibly prevent their departure. What qualification, rationally and calmly speaking, can be given to such an absurd and contradictory state of things?

Latterly, after securing the permission of the Argentine Government, which expressed its satisfaction at the idea to our Minister in Buenos Aires, a plan was formed for an emigration of the Peruvians from Iquique to the farm ranches of Rio de la Plata, which, for reasons well known to all, require labor in harvest time; that emigration was to have begun on the 7th of October, when it was prevented by the authorities in the forcible and violent manner I have just described.

II.

Conjointly with these measures, which we may qualify as fortutious, in spite of their exceeding gravity, Chile has set on foot other extraordinary and scandal-ously aggressive measures against the rights of our nation which signify the disregard of our sovereignty, the violation of solemn treaties in full effect, and the most flagrant heedlessness of the principles, practices, and laws sanctioned by international law.

On the 8th of November Senator Walker Martinez submitted to the Senate a project of law authorizing the Provinces of Tacna and Arica to hold elections for Senators and Deputies, and muncipalities; as if those Provinces were not simply occupied by Chile under the treaty of Ancon, and as if it were dealing with parts of the country already definitely incorporated in the nationality, territory, and sovereignty of Chile. Such willful extralimitary action, in which is to be discerned the secret desire to generate a new and inevitable conflict, considers the fate decided and the annexation as resolved upon of portions of territory historically Peruvian, in which the stipulated plebiscite has not yet been held that is to determine their final condition and the legitimate dominion, and places in evidence the deepest contempt for the faith pledged in treaties and the most striking violation of the duties imposed by the law of nations.

States so respectable and civilized, so just and straightforward, as those to which this memorandum is addressed require no explanations on this topic nor comments which would offend their eminent wisdom. The simple enumeration of such an international absurdity is sufficient to merit their verdict of condemnation and evoke the attitude in keeping with their greatness.

The project of Senator Walker Martinez would in itself really matter very little to Peru; for every man has a right to think, wish, and propose according to his own opinions, aspirations, and interests; but the extremely grave and injurious point of the project is that it should be openly patronized by the Government of Chile. Indeed, the Chilean Council of State, in a session presided over by His Excellency Mr. Barrion Luco himself, the President of that country, decided on the 15th of November instant to include the project in the matters to be submitted for discussion during the present extra session of Congress; on which account it is to be feared that very soon the legislative power of our southern neighbor will sanction it as a law, thus consummating the outrage planned by the measure and legalizing the iniquity which the project in each and every one of its clauses embodies.

A few days ago the director of the irrigation of the Valley of Tacna, Mr. V. Belaude, a Peruvian citizen, was summoned by the above-mentioned Gen. Solar to appear before him, and was by him obliged peremptorily and under threats to sign his resignation, being replaced in that post, which is filled according to Chilean law by election and by virtue of which he was elected, by a Chilean employee directly appointed by that chief. One would at first imagine that such an outrageous usurpation of functions was the result of a personal display of furious hatred of Peru, which inspires the acts of all the Chilean officials. But it is not so. There is at the bottom of it all another plan, aggressive and striking, like the rest. On that same day, the 15th of November, the Government of Chile presented to the extra session of Congress another project for the granting of gratifications to the soldiers, subofficers, and revenue officers, etc., in Tacna and Arica, which gratifications are to be expressly expended in the acquisition by the grantees of country farms in both Provinces; and it can not otherwise be presumed, given the information in possession of this office, than that the forced resignation of the director of irrigation, Mr. Belaude, and his illegal substitution by a Chilean employee, are directed to the obtaining of the administration of water at their discretion, and the cessation of the present irrigation concessions; in a word, the object being to commit hostilities on the Peruvian agricultural population, who impeded in cultivation in every way, and through the ruin of their interests, will find themselves in the dire necessity either of promising to vote for Chile in the projected one-sided plebiscite or parting with their small property holdings, selling them at infamous prices to Chilean buyers, who later will invoke their new conditions of property holders in order to claim direct participation in the holding of the

The same is the object of the last decree, issued on the 21st of November, which establishes that all those who were born in Tacna and Arica after 1885 are subject to the Chilean law concerning recruits and conscription of the 5th of September, 1900; that they are in consequence to be called out for military service in the Chilean Army, and are consequently obliged to matriculate in the conscription lists, which matriculation is to be effected in the first 15 days of January, 1912. To this end Gen. Solar, on the date above mentioned, has written to the offices of the civil register requesting a list of those born between 1885 and 1911; and Gen. Arancibia, according to advice received from Señor Holder Freyre, our governor at Tacaco, which is on the frontier, has been in Tarata since the beginning of November (the 9th) on a like mission in connection with the civil registers' offices of that place.

It is natural to suppose, in the face of this decision of the Government of Chile, when strictly carried out by the subaltern authorities, that all the young Peruvians thus threatened with being made Chilean conscripts will, in their unswerving and conspicuous patriotism, have to choose voluntary expatriation rather than the possibility of entering into a service so opposed to their dignity as men and the sentiments of loyalty to the country of their birth; and then when their emigration is consummated and the two Provinces are stripped of all the Peruvian element, conscious of their rights and competent to vote, we shall se the Chilean Government mockingly invite Peru to hold the plebiscite which ought to have been held 17 years ago and which Chile has indefinitely postponed under a thousand pretexts until it finds, as a result of this series of violent and scandalous measure, the Chilean element there predominant, as if Peru-who well knows that the Peruvians of Tacna and Arica are the only ones who ought to choose their nationality in the postponed plebiscite, and not the Chileans who have nothing to decide with regard to a nationality which they possess ab origene-could accept solutions prepared in a cold-blooded manner to their detriment, the formula of which is seen to have been resolved upon beforehand, ignoring all mutual agreement, with complete disregard for our right and scorn for the most rudimentary justice.

Our agents in Germany have opportunely informed us of a very recent and large order for warlike elements, which Chile has given to that country, and have drawn our attention to the eloquent circumstances that this order was and continues to be called for with a condition of supreme urgency.

In Arica, Tacna, and Tarata there remain the 7,000 men which our gratuitous and pertinacious enemy concentrated there under the pretext of military maneuvers; and we are in possession of trustworthy information of an early, successive, and secret concentration in the same region of up to 50,000 men; all of which information, like the foregoing, go to prove without a shadow of a doubt that a plan is to be executed in the near future with the purpose of causing fresh ruin or a fresh outrage on the Republic of Peru.

We are well aware as to the nature of this plan, but the Peruvian Foreign Office refrains from presenting it at present in all its nakedness and repugnancy, since its desire is that the present document shall be submitted as based, not on mere conjectures but on solid facts.

III.

As will be seen from all the foregoing, the situation between Peru and Chile appears to be daily growing in gravity, and the imminence of a contest on the coasts of the South Pacific more certain.

If the conditions of the presumptive combatants were those of approximate equality, the abstention of the great powers of the continent would be a natural event, inclined as they naturally are to a customary neutrality. But the enormous inequality of the land and naval forces of the two countries—Chile, the stronger of the two, having the further advantage of an alliance, either tacit or explicit, with all those with whom Peru has unsettled boundary questions: an alliance directed to the polonization ["polonización" in the original] and ruin of Peru—gives this interminable international contest the character of spoliation—without risk, counterpoise or danger—comparable to those murders which penal science calls qualified and which are committed in cold blood and without the possibility of defense.

Peru, with great faith in the reality and efficacy of international law, places its trust in the great nations which, exercising their noble and altruistic purposes, mediated in its conflict with Ecuador at the mere sign of a rupture; and trusts that they will now adopt like action in this case in order to prevent Peru—out of pure malevolence and pride, for the sake of the display of a might born of and supported with the spoils taken from the vanquished—from being bled and mutilated in the presence and with the knowledge of the civilized world, only because it has committed the strange and horrible crime of refusing to allow that spoliation to be amplified and extended with its own consent and in flagrant violation of the laws and obligations by which the conqueror spontaneously bound himself to abide in a solemn treaty concluded without the slightest indication of error, violence, or deceit—defects which it is impossible to suppose existed in the conqueror, who at the time the treaty was signed was not only well aware of their meaning, but was strong and powerful by reason of his victory.

File No. 723.2515/261.

The Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires at Washington to the Secretary of State.

Peruvian Legation, Washington, December 12, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In the earnest endeavor to avoid a conflict with Chile over the question of Tacna and Arica, my Government has instructed me to approach you once more on the subject, trusting you will understand the motives of its insistence and therefore will overlook its seeming pertinacity.

It would appear that all the facts of the case have been stated, disclosing the intentions of the Chilean Government to forcibly settle to its own advantage the long-standing controversy it has sustained with that of Peru in regard to the execution of the treaty of Ancon. No doubt can either subsist that such an act, unrighteous in itself, would be fraught with serious consequences for the peace of our continent.

What my Government now wishes to emphasize is that only the action of the Governments to whom it has appealed can now solve the problem that has caused such prolonged unrest in South America, and avert useless strife.

If it ever seemed possible that in the course of time a direct understanding between the Governments of Peru and Chile could be reached, events have unfortunately dispelled such a belief. Left to themselves, both countries have drifted farther and farther apart, until they have reached to-day the point of a definite and irreparable breach

It would be irrelevant to analyze at present the various causes that have contributed to engender such a result; suffice it to say that all attempt tending to a direct and peaceful settlement of the dispute has failed, and that consequently but one resource is left: that of a common action on the part of friendly nations, who would interpose their good offices between the contending parties.

That such a course is possible, no one can deny; nor is it wholly improbable that even those who heretofore have rejected all outward interference would welcome to-day the opportunity of withdrawing from the extreme positions in which they have ill-advisedly placed themselves. For, in spite of their arrogance, they must be well aware that the benefits of peace greatly outbalance those to be derived from undue territorial expansion, and that a friendly settlement of a controversy, assuring a stable understanding, is certainly preferable to temporary advantages obtained by force, that leave behind an aftermath of resentment and discontent. No clear-sighted statesman could fail to perceive that a solution imposed by sheer might would be merely provisional, postponing and aggravating the final adjustment instead of definitively regulating the dispute.

Moreover, if one stops to consider that were Chile to carry out its plans of annexing Tacna and Arica by coercion the indignation of the people of Peru would be aroused beyond control, and that no possible direct agreement can avert the crisis, it becomes apparent that, if peace is to be maintained, only the influence of parties not directly concerned in the controversy can dominate the situation.

Owing to its great moral strength, but above all because its motives can not be misconstrued, the Government of the United States seems to be the one called upon to take the initiative in the matter. Far above and apart from the frictions that probably hinder the movements of the other friendly nations of South America, too intimately united, perhaps, to our political life to act with utter freedom, the United States could easily lead them on a road they would be sure to follow, but in which they may hesitate to take the first step.

My Government, therefore, hopes that after the Government of the United States has studied the question, ascertaining the accuracy of the statements made in the two memorandums lately delivered to the representatives of the United States, Argentina, and Brazil at Lima, it will reach a decision securing a durable peace to our continent and the normal development of each country within the bounds of its lawful sphere of action.

American Legation, Lima, June 1, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that in one of the interviews with the President of Peru upon the subject of the discovery of nitrate about one hundred miles north of the Chilean frontier, he stated that he had been informed, after the Chilean press had published vague rumors to that effect, that a commission of four of the representative citizens of Chile were coming to Lima for the ostensible purpose of investigation and report upon Peruvian methods of agriculture, mining, irrigation, etc., but that in fact the purpose was to open negotiations for some settlement of the question of Tacna and Arica.

Upon discussing with Mr. Paxton Hibben, late American Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, the questions between that country and Peru, I found that, coupled with a comprehensive grasp of the situation and a knowledge of Latin-American peoples, he had the added information of the exact sentiment of the Chilean President, Minister of Foreign Affairs and other public men on the one hand and of the Chilean public on the other. I asked that he accompany me to see the President of Peru in the possible hope of approximating, at least, some understanding between the two Republics, which might ripen through diplomatic intervention into a solution of the long-pending question. In view of the information looking to that end of which Mr. Hibben was possessed, we accordingly spent some time with the President on yesterday afternoon, and I beg to report the following:

Repeating his conversation with me, Mr. Hibben stated to the President that the visit of the four public men of Chile, which had been reported by him to the Department, had been decided upon and that their real purpose was a consideration of the Tacna and Arica question; but that on account of the sentiment of the people of Chile in opposition to any settlement other reasons had been assigned for their visit. He said that the President of Chile, having yet four years more of his term to serve, had expressed himself as most desirous of an amicable settlement of the Tacna and Arica question during his incumbency and before the completion of the Panama Canal. He stated that he had urged upon the Chilean officials that the continuance of the unsettled conditions from which war might result at any time had such an effect upon Chile's standing with the financial world as to tend to retard its development; and, regardless of the merits of the proposition, with which the world at large had little or no concern, a settlement should be reached even though both countries had to sacrifice what each claimed as rights. He said that the President of Chile was advanced in years, and had no ambition for a political future; and that the President had stated to him that any solution short of a continued occupation and ownership of Tacna and Arica meant the political doom of any man or men advocating or consummating same; but that he personally cared nothing for He quoted other public men of Chile as being in accord with this sentiment, but excepted as radically opposed thereto the Chilean Minister to Ecuador, Mr. Victor Eastman. He quoted the latter as saying that within two years he might be in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and that he personally would be in favor of placing beyond all question the ownership of Tacna and Arica by proclaiming it, once and for all, as Chilean property, following a plebiscite to be held along the lines of Chile's proposals. Mr. Hibben said that the real proposition that the four Chilean emissaries would submit was that the provinces in question should be returned to Peru, and be simultaneously reconveyed at an agreed purchase price to Chile. named the approximate sum of thirty million dollars, as heretofore mentioned, saying that amount would, no doubt, be increased if de-Various phases of the proposition were discussed by the President of Peru, but, in conclusion he said that if Chile was not willing to arbitrate, he did not believe that the Peruvian Government could or should transfer to Chile the provinces of Tacna and Arica, so long as they were populated by Peruvian citizens. He indicated that such a course would be an abandonment of the obligation that the Republic owed to its citizens, which he did not think that Peru would consent to. He expressed the belief that the natural resources of his country under the development that must come would place Peru upon a footing of equality, if not of marked superiority, and upon a plane from which she would be in a position to dictate rather than to submit to terms. Mr. Hibben, upon the other hand, said that he did not believe that any Chilean would entertain for a moment any proposition of settlement which involved the surrender of one foot of the territory in question.

The President then said that Peru was, of course, desirous of settling all of her international questions, and whether that desire would be sufficiently potent to acquiesce in a division of the territory—Arica to Chile and Tacna to Peru—he could not now state.

Mr. Hibben said that he felt positive that Chile would not agree to any surrender of territory.

I will add that during the conversation some suggestion was made that Chile's change of front may have been prompted by a desire for the settlement proposed while her land and naval forces placed her upon the vantage ground and in a position to more or less dictate the terms of any agreement that might be reached. It was also stated that Chile assigned as a reason for not surrendering the territory that Peru could not pay anything for it; to which the President replied that in that they were wholly mistaken, as Peru could and would make it a cash transaction at any time; and that, moreover, in any settlement made, Peru would be willing to pay for any improvements that Chile had made upon territory to be owned by the former.

With regard to the question of the plebiscite, Mr. Hibben stated that the Chileans steadily rejected all suggestion of an impartial umpire as between a Peruvian and Chilean election officer to come from any European nation, whose disinterestedness in the affairs of either country would insure impartial action.

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, November 11, 1912.

Minister for Foreign Affairs has given out statement to the effect that an agreement has been effected by telegraph with Peru to reestablish diplomatic relations and fixing precise terms of settlement of the Tacna Arica question. Council of State will be held today and if they approve the bases of settlement will be submitted to Congress at once.

The Department has been informed by Legation at Santiago and Chilean Minister here that an agreement has been effected for reestablishment of diplomatic relations between Peru and Chile and the settlement of Tacna-Arica question. Has Peruvian Government officially informed you of the conclusion of such an arrangement so full of promise for the future welfare of both countries? What are the probabilities for its ratification by Peruvian Congress?

Sir: When the press on the 11th instant announced the resumption of diplomatic relations between Peru and Chile and an agreement for the settlement of the Tacna and Arica question, I have the honor to report that the President had agreed to notify me when certain data was at hand upon the nitrate development, and I had delayed calling because expecting a notice from him. It was not, therefore, until today that confirmation of the reports was sought and obtained. The President said that he had been wanting to see me to give the particulars, and went into a communicating room where he dictated the enclosed paper giving the substance of the agreement reached between the two countries. I herewith enclose same and a translation. He spoke with apparent gratification at the outcome, saying that his country was at this time in no condition to press for a plebiscite, and he expects that Congress will ratify the action taken.

I called at the Foreign Office on the 15th upon other business, and at the close of my conversation with Mr. Huneeus informed him of the communication made to the Department by Mr. Suárez Mujica and of Mr. Knox's reply as learned from the Department's telegram of November 12, and congratulated him upon his achievement. expressed his appreciation and said that any points which seemed unsatisfactory could and would be settled in the negotiations which would follow immediately upon the resumption of diplomatic rela-

He very frankly communicated to me the bases of settlement, though he stated that they were confidential for the present. They are substantially as stated in my telegram of November 10, but for the Department's convenience I recapitulate them here, as follows:

1. Diplomatic relations to be reestablished at once.

2. A commercial treaty of reciprocity to be negotiated immediately.

3. Chile to pay Peru 500,000 pounds on the signature of the treaty. (It is understood that Peru will devote this sum exclusively to economic, i. e. non-military, purposes.)

4. Definitive status of Tacna and Arica provinces is to be decided by a plebiscite to be held 21 years after signature of new treaty or protocol which will stipulate that the right to vote on the question will be limited to Peruvians and Chileans, able to read and write, who shall have resided in the province three years before the plebis-(This will exclude Indians and foreigners.)

The Election Board will be composed of five persons: the Peruvian Government will nominate two of its nationals as members and the Chilean Government likewise will nominate two Chileans; to these will be added the President of the Supreme Court of Chile, at the time being, who will be President of the Tribunal; and in case of disagreement the majority of the Tribunal shall decide and their acts will be binding on the whole Board. (This will enable Chile alone to hold the plebiscite in case Peru should withdraw for any reason.)

The losing nation is to pay the full amount of the indemnity stipulated in the Treaty of Ancon. (The 500,000 pounds bonus to be paid by Chile to Peru on the conclusion of the commercial treaty is entirely independent of any indemnity connected with the plebiscite.)

AMERICAN LEGATION, Santiago, January 30, 1913.

S_{IR}: I have the honor to report that the Chilean Congress has been adjourned until June first, next, and that no action has been taken on the President's message of November 11th, last, recommending the creation of a Chilean Legation at Lima. * * * The recent or, as one might say, the present negotiations, for informal negotiations are still being carried on, and have undoubtedly advanced [the Tacna-Arica] matter toward a solution. Peru, in accepting the Chilean majority and organization of the election board which by the Huneeus-Valera arrangement was to have held the plebiscite, practically accepted in advance a result adverse to her pretensions and from that to a frank recognition of a fait accompli may not be

PERU. 1231

I gather from casual conversations with Mr. Villegas 1 that the Chilean idea is to propose a definite recognition on the part of Peru of Chilean sovereignty of Tacna and Arica, or at least of the major portion of these two provinces—for it may be that a division such as suggested in my No. 32 of December 2, 1910, will be resorted to in order to more readily secure acceptance of the cession in Peru-Chile paying practically any sum fixed by Peru. Of course the difficulty in this apparently simple solution is the strong probability that it will not be entertained by Peru and Mr. Villegas has hinted to me that, if matters progress so far, Chile would greatly appreciate our good offices in recommending to Peru the acceptance of such an arrangement. To this I have replied very guardedly, saying merely that my Government would be very pleased to see the matter settled to the satisfaction of all concerned but that in a delicate matter of this sort the President and Secretary of State would have to decide how far it would be possible to offer friendly advice to either party, and I have hinted that, as our friendly and disinterested action in the past towards securing peace between Chile and Peru has been misjudged and badly interpreted in Chile, the Department may feel reluctant to interpose its good offices again. In other words, I did not encourage the Minister to hope for a favorable reply in case he should make his request, but, on the other hand, I did not without instructions feel at liberty to discourage him from

It is the general impression here that no Peruvian Government will be able to agree to the definite cession unless it can give the impression that it is accepting the inevitable and yielding not only to the pressure of Chile but to the advice of third parties as well.

In my opinion it would be a great mistake for the United States alone to offer any advice in the dispute—how far it might be possible to go in company with Argentine and Brazil and other countries in the premises is perhaps another matter—but it seems to me that our own interests will be better served by a strict impartiality and absolute non-interference either singly or collectively. If this course shall be maintained Chile can not complain; the unfortunate results of former similar efforts on our part are a sufficient answer. In Peru the particularly friendly feeling towards us would be changed in a twinkling to enmity and distrust. We have, I believe, everything to lose and nothing to gain by interfering.

Should the Department wish me to discourage the Minister for Foreign Affairs from making a request for our good offices in this connection, there will be time to instruct me in this sense before the negotiations reach that point and I can do so quite informally and without difficulty. Failing to receive any instruction on the subject, I shall allow the matter to take its course without encouragement or discouragement.

Sir: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 300, of January 30, 1913, regarding the question of the settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru, which it has read with considerable interest.

The attitude adopted by you in your formal interview with Mr. Villegas meets with the Department's approval.

The Department does not wish definitely to instruct you to discourage any suggestion from the Chilean foreign office looking to the friendly mediation of the United States, either alone or in conjunction with Argentine and Brazil, as it may not be impossible that at some future date the situation may change in such a way as to render it desirable that this Government should act.

You will accordingly be guided by the knowledge that it is the general policy of this Government not to act as mediator unless requested to do so by all parties to a dispute.

Should the Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs again approach you on this subject, you should reply, without indicating that you have any special instructions, that you know the above to be the general policy of this Government in such matters, even when, as in this case, it is most desirous, for the welfare of both countries, that a speedy solution of the question, satisfactory to both Chile and Peru, be reached.

Such a reply would leave the Department free in the eventuality that both Chile and Peru should indicate a desire for the friendly and impartial good offices of the United States.

The Department is sending to the Legation at Lima, for its strictly confidential information, a copy of your despatch and also a copy of this instruction. Should it develop in the future that the Government of Peru should desire outside advice, it might see fit to request the mediation of this Government, in which case you will be informed by telegraph.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that the negotiations with Peru are, and have been for over a month, at a standstill. As outlined in my telegram of March 19th, negotiations were conducted through the Chilean Consul at Callao which are thought to have cleared up the misunderstanding arising from the secret message of the Peruvian President to his Congress, but there the matter is resting.

It seems that President Billinghurst communicated the Huneeus-Valera arrangement to the Peruvian Congress in a secret message. When the terms of this message became known in Chile the impression was created that President Billinghurst was either not playing fair with Chile or else was trying to deceive the Peruvian Congress, and this was the real cause of the halt reported in December. During an interview last month the Minister of Foreign Affairs showed me the telegrams he had exchanged with the Chilean Consul at Callao, by which it appeared that the Consul had communicated personally with President Billinghurst on the subject of his message and the adverse effect which his interpretation might have in the future if allowed to go unchallenged by Chile. The President explained his position in respect to the Peruvian Congress and reiterated his strong desire to reach a satisfactory settlement with Chile.

Mr. Villegas seemed satisfied with the explanations given. He said that he had wished to nullify the effect of the President's secret message on the interpretation of any arrangement which might be reached and had insisted on clearing up this point before proceeding farther. He has subsequently informed me that, in his opinion, the next move should come from Peru; that the Chilean Government is unwilling to carry the negotiations further by means of telegrams, etc., which are unsatisfactory and give rise to misunderstandings; that he thinks Peru should appoint a confidential agent to come to Chile to arrange matters. President Billinghurst is, I believe, of the same opinion except that he thinks diplomatic relations should be reestablished and the negotiations carried on through regular channels; but Chile, after the failure of 1909, insists on having all points settled in advance of the formal resumption of diplomatic intercourse.

Another very important explanation of the present inactivity is found in the political situation both here and in Peru. The Conservative Party has practically passed sentence of death on the present Ministry, which must retire on June first unless the Conservatives shall have been placated meanwhile, and active negotiations are being carried on to arrive at some solution of the impending crisis. In this uncertain situation the Ministry feels too weak to proceed with the Peruvian negotiations. In Peru also the elections for Congress are being held this week and President Billinghurst's policy is an important issue.

Nothing will be done, in any event, before June first, the date of the opening of Congress here, and the confused conditions make an intelligent forecast of the probable trend of events impossible.

Sir. I have the honor to report that no progress has been made in the Chilean-Peruvian negotiations for the settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute since the date of my last report, April 29th, last (No. 334).

Mr. Edwards, Chilean Minister in London, who was Minister for Foreign Affairs of Chile when the diplomatic relations of the two countries were last severed, recently arrived in Santiago. On his way he stopped a few hours in Lima and, in company with Admirals Montt and Uribe, was received by the President of Peru.

In a conversation with him a few days ago I asked him if there were any developments. He replied that he had a very friendly talk with President Billinghurst, but only along the general line of the interest of both countries in a prompt and mutually satisfactory settlement. He then said that his idea was that the Chilean Minister in Berlin or some other European capital—not London—be authorized to conclude a treaty with his Peruvian colleague, who would be similarly authorized; that if the Congresses of both countries were thus confronted with a signed treaty he thought the matter would be readily adjusted, whereas it seemed impossible to make any progress with the negotiations as at present conducted. His idea is that Chile should insist upon a plebiscite being held within two or three years or else after 99 years—either a very short or a very long time. He is convinced that if a plebiscite were to be held in the two provinces now, Chile would win. He even went so far as to say that he thought it would be possible to arrange that the inhabitants of this district should, of their own initiative, vote or petition for definite incorporation with Chile. He was evidently much impressed with what he saw and heard during his short stay in Arica. Subsequently I had an informal conversation with Mr. Villegas, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the subject. He informed me that there was nothing new, but that he hoped to advance matters in the near future. He said that it was absolutely necessary to conclude the question and that if Peru would not come to terms directly and as a result of friendly overtures, Chile would try to find some other means of persuasion. He hinted that the good offices of friendly governments might be asked to counsel Peru; he especially mentioned Brazil and hinted that the United States might also be called upon. His policy since he has been Minister for Foreign Affairs has been to draw Brazil and Chile as closely together as possible, and while he has maintained most friendly relations with the Argentine it has been apparent to me that he sets greater store upon the friendship of Brazil—and of course, in speaking with me, the United States also.

Mr. Alfredo Irarrazaval, the new Chilean Minister to Brazil, is considered a more able man than his predecessor, Mr. Herboso, and his transfer from Tokio to Brazil, in my opinion, is intimately connected with the Chilean-Peruvian controversy and their desire to settle the same before the opening of the Panama Canal. He remained in Chile about a month receiving instructions and presented his credentials in Rio a few days ago, and the formal presentation discourses were more than usually cordial.

The Minister also said that after the Congress adjourned for the national holidays he hoped he could so far advance matters as to be in position to give me definite news before my departure for the United States on leave, as he was very anxious to have me explain to the President and Secretary of State Chile's position. I replied that I would be very glad to do so.

Meantime there is a multitude of counsellors but no purposes established.

Sir: Mr. Fletcher, our Minister to Chile, will already have reported to the Department that when he passed through Rio de Janeiro during September last, the Chilean Minister to Brazil, Sr. Irarrazaval, informed him of the substance of the conversations which he was then having with Dr. Lauro Müller about a final and complete settlement of the long-standing dispute between Chile and Peru over the status of Tacna and Arica. I was in São Paulo on the day Mr. Fletcher visited Rio de Janeiro and consequently had no opportunity of exchanging opinions with him upon this subject. But Dr. Lauro Müller has handed me copies of the memoranda which the Brazilian Foreign Office has exchanged with the Chilean Legation thereon, copies of which memoranda I have the honor herewith to enclose both in originals and translations. Furthermore Dr. Lauro Müller has asked me to tell you that he believes the moment to be a favorable one for the settlement of the only pending territorial dispute likely to disturb the peace of the American continent and that once the Tacna and Arica question has been buried the way may be opened for the settlement of territorial questions of minor importance between Peru and certain of her neighbors which have dragged on for many years. In arranging these latter disputes it may not be impossible, so he thinks, to afford some compensation to Peru for the territorial losses she would sustain from the alienation of the two provinces.

The Government of Chile does not yet appear to have apprised the Government of Argentina of these negotiations nor to intend to do so until the views of Brazil and the United States have been learned. The reason that is given for not doing so is that Chile on previous occasions has found that Argentine has proved somewhat difficult to bring into line unless she knew that other powers had already given their approval to a certain course of action. When however she has learned that they had done so she raised no objection to keeping in step with them.

I am unable to believe that the Argentine Foreign Office is ignorant that the Chilean Minister has recently initiated fresh negotiations at Rio de Janeiro for the settlement of the Tacna and Arica dispute, especially since the South American press on several occasions has published reports to that effect.

PRO MEMORIA.

TACNA-ARICA DISPUTE BETWEEN CHILE AND PERU.

Historical antecedents.

In 1879 war broke out between Chile and the republics of Peru and Bolivia, the latter being allied by a secret treaty. Chile invaded the territories of the enemy on three different occasions: firstly to claim the province of Antofagasta, which had been formerly ceded to Bolivia conditionally; secondly to occupy the Peruvian provinces of Tarapaca and Tacna; thirdly to invade the capital of Perú, Lima, in order to impose peace.

After the second of these campaigns, i. e. before marching on the capital, Lima, several conferences took place on board the North American sloop Lackawanna, stationed at Arica, in 1880, between the delegates of Chile and Peru, with a view to securing peace. These conferences were held at the suggestion of the United States.

Chile then declared her intention of retaining Tacna and Arica as the guaranty of her independence. As nothing came of the said conferences, the Chilean Foreign Office, in a circular note dated November 10th, 1880, directed to the Powers, declared that "should the northern frontier of Chile be limited by the Quebrada de Camarones, the port of Arica, fortified and thereby converted into an impregnable fortress, would be a continual danger to Chile and would oblige her to fortify her frontier. In any case, peaceful relations would be in danger of disturbance at any moment." If Chile, in 1880, made this declaration, it could not be supposed that she would alter or seriously modify her demands after the third campaign, which carried her troops to the capital of Peru.

The treaty of peace between Chile and Perú (Treaty of Ancon) was arranged by the Provisional Government of General Iglesias, which Government Chile was interested in supporting so that she might have someone with whom to negotiate. This Peruvian General, who was strongly opposed by public opinion in Peru, did not wish to increase his unpopularity by handing over to the victors the territories of Tacna and Arica, as demanded by Chile. It was for this reason that the Treaty of Ancon was formulated, by providing an indirect surrender of the territories after a simulated plebiscite (of which there are many examples in the history of nations). By this treaty Chile was to retain possession of Tacna and Arica for a period of ten years and only in case of the plebiscite resulting unfavorably to her would she, after that period, end her rule of those two provinces. The plebiscite however was to occur after the drawing up of a special protocol; the drafting of this protocol was postponed for an indefinite period. It was further agreed that the articles of the said protocol should be subject to the approval of Chile.

The additional protocol referring to the plebiscite has never been drafted, as Chile refused to accept any clause that did not recognize absolutely the right of her continued dominion over Tacna and Arica. The declaration of her delegates to this effect at the conferences held on board of the Lackawanna (these provinces being the key to her northern frontier) constitutes now an historical fact, confirmed by the Treaty of Ancon and by an uninterrupted occupation of 33 years. No country in the world would abandon, under such conditions, territory dearly bought with blood, which had further been recognised by treaty as surrendered to Chile and administered for the third part of a century, and showing important improvements, of which the Arica to La Paz railway is only one example. Should a solution to the dispute be sought, the simplest of all would be found to be the best, i. e. that the present state should be left unaltered, thereby leaving unmodified a situation which has existed for 33 years.

History of the Latest Negotiations Between Chile and Peru.

On many occasions Chile and Peru have sought for a satisfactory solution of their dispute but always without success. The most recent negotiations took place in November last; the following points were agreed upon, subject to the approval of the two Congresses:

a) Chile and Peru agree that it would be desirable to renew diplomatic relations after long interruption.

b) They also agreed that a plebiscite should take place within 21 years, i. e. up to 1933.

c) That an agreement should be arrived at regarding those who should have a right to vote at the plebiscite and also that a tribunal should be immediately constituted to organize the plebiscite. This tribunal or committee should consist of five members, two of which should be appointed by Peru, two by Chile and a third by the President of the Supreme Court of Chile. This committee should, by simple majority of votes, transact its business, and its ruling should not be subject to any further appeal.

d) Chile would pay to Peru, immediately, through a sinking fund, the sum of £500,000.

These negotiations, which were opposed both in Peru and Chile, gave rise to a secret note from President Billinghurst to the Peruvian Congress. This document contained statements which the Chilean Government considered contrary to the policy it has upheld throughout this dispute: That the territories of Tacna and Arica should definitely and by means of a plebiscite be surrendered to Chile. The fact that official cognizance of this secret note was taken by the Peruvian Government caused the negotiations to be broken off. afterwards demanded, as conditional to their continuation, the official withdrawal of the note. The Government of Peru promised to do this. Several circumstances however continued to delay the negotiations; they will be resumed shortly in Chile between a confidential agent of Peru and the Chilean Foreign Office.

The Object of the Negotiations.

(a) The negotiations will reestablish relations interrupted for many years between the two nations; they will also do away with the permanent source of unrest and ill feeling that has made it necessary for the two countries to maintain constant military preparations, which in turn have produced in the other republics of America a like effect and have interfered with the investment of capital in Perú, Bolivia and Chile, etc.

(b) The negotiations provide for a period of 21 years for the organization of the plebiscite. This clause has not found favor in Chile. The Government of Chile has indicated that this would mean that for a period of 21 years (or practically a quarter of a century) the actual state of unrest and ill feeling would continue to exist. Peru has at present no right to demand the evacuation of these territories by Chile; this delay of 21 years, however, would give her fair hopes of possibly regaining the two provinces at the expiration of that period. Besides, the railway from Arica to La Paz has furnished Bolivia with an outlet to the Pacific and in 21 years time that country would also become interested in the possession of these territories; this fact has been recognized by the present President of Bolivia, General Montes.

In order that the bases of the negotiations shall constitute effectively an act of approximation and a guaranty of the peace of America, it would be necessary to either refer the question immediately to the two countries by means of a plebiscite or to consult the countries over a period of 90 to 100 years.

(c) It would now be easier than ever to carry out an immediate plebiscite, as the Governments of Chile and Peru have agreed upon the base of the electoral committee that shall supervise the plebiscite, the said committee to decide by a simple majority of votes, without appeal.

(d) The sum of £500,000 offered by Chile, as an extra payment, is almost couble the indemnization agreed upon by the Treaty of Ancon as a recompense to the nation that should lose the election. Chile has always declared that she would be ready to increase the amount of that indemnization.

MEMORANDUM ON THE TACNA-ARICA DISPUTE BETWEEN CHILE AND PERU.

Firstly. That the friendly suggestion is made without in any way affecting the absolutely neutral attitude which the United States has always observed and proposes to continue to observe in the Pacific regarding pending questions between Peru and Chile, which questions, in the opinion of the said United States, the interested nations are alone competent to settle-

Secondly. That in the higher interests of the peace of America, the desire has been expressed that a dispute which keeps alive a state of unrest on this continent shall be brought to a satisfactory settlement; and, further, that in order to avoid the postponement of such a settlement for another 80 or 90 years, a referendum shall take place immediately.

Thirdly. That the only serious obstacle to the above referendum would have been the organization of an electoral committee in view of the fact that the Treaty of Ancon provided that no plebiscite should take place until the two countries should be in entire accord regarding the new protocol which should regulate the election. It appears now however that this obstacle may be considered removed since Peru and Chile appear to have come to an agreement that the said electoral committee shall consist of five members, viz; of two Chileans, two Peruvians, and the President of the Supreme Court of Chile, who shall preside.

Fourthly. That this suggestion of the United States, interpreting a noble American idea, shall be communicated to Peru.

Fifthly. That the answer to the Government of the United States shall be transmitted in a note from the Chilean Minister at Washington, in which the said representative shall communicate to the American Chancellery the stage of the negotiations with Peru, which were begun in November last. This information shall be communicated to the American Government as soon as the attitude of Peru is known.

The Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Chilean Minister at Rio de Janeiro.1

Mr. Minister: I have read with careful attention the confidential note of September 1st in which your excellency, in relating the history of the latest incidents, describes the actual state of the disagreement that exists between Chile and Peru with reference to Tacna and Arica, the continuance of which disagreement has always seemed to us undesirable and antagonistic to the peace both of these two friendly republics and of the continent.

The Chilean Government is certainly aware of the great interest with which Brazil, always desirous of seeing a friendly settlement, has from the first followed the various phases of this old question. It was therefore a source of lively satisfaction to her to learn that negotiations were well on their way towards a solution of the deplorable situation that exists between the two republics of the American continent.

Our satisfaction has been notably increased by the news that one of the principal, if not the principal, cause of the old disagreement—the organization of an electoral committee which shall put through the plebiscite for which the Treaty of Ancon made provision—may be considered as removed, since the two countries appear to have come to an agreement regarding the manner in which the said commission shall be constituted.

Under the influence of this agreeable impression, the Brazilian Government, without in any way pretending to interfere in the private affairs of the two interested nations, thereby recognizing that those two nations alone are competent to settle their disagreement, and animated by the good will shown by the Governments of Chile and Peru, wishes to express its sincere desire that the two republics shall not further delay the solution of the Tacna and Arica question, but that on the contrary they shall settle it promptly and definitely in their own interest and in the interest of the peace and fraternal harmony of America.

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

To the President:

The undersigned, Secretary of State, to whom was addressed the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

[Text of the above-printed resolution.]

has the honor to submit correspondence on file in the Department of State containing information sought by the resolution, with a view to its communication to the House of Representatives if in the judgment of the President it be not deemed incompatible with the public interest so to do.

The circumstances under which the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, responding to the public sentiment which had been aroused in both countries by reports of the cruel treatment of the indigenes in the rubber-gathering districts of the tributaries of the upper Amazon, had taken concurrent steps to ascertain the actual conditions in that region are set forth in the initial paper of the subjoined correspondence, being an instruction given on the 6th of April, 1912, to Mr. Stuart J. Fuller, who had been a short time before assigned to the reopened consulate at Iquitos, in Peru, in order that an impartial agent of the United States might cooperate in obtaining first-hand information regarding the asserted brutal extermination of the native inhabitants of the important outlying district of the Putumayo, over which Peru claims jurisdiction and in which Peru exercises administrative control under a modus vivendi entered into with Colombia, whose claims to the sovereignty of a large extent of the territory conflict with those of Peru, and, in part, with rival claims advanced by Ecuador.

In taking this step the Government of the United States was mindful of the sensibilities of the Government of Peru, and, in the light of the measures then being considered by that Government to put an end to the barbarous practices reported to exist, it was believed that an impartial ascertainment of conditions in the Peruvian part of the Putumayo district could not fail to strengthen the hand of the Government of Peru in dealing with a problem of such magnitude and gravity. The entire friendliness of this Government and its sincere desire to aid Peru in acquiring knowledge of the facts and in applying the needful remedy for the existing evils have been consistently impressed upon and, it is believed, are well understood by that Government.

In pursuance of that instruction Mr. Fuller visited the Putumayo region during August and September of the past summer, in company with Mr. George Babington Michell, the British Consul at Iquitos. Mr. Fuller's report, dated October 28, 1912, gives a full narrative of the extended journey as undertaken and sets forth his views of the labor conditions in the rubber-gathering region, with suggestions as to the treatment of the evils which have existed and to a great extent are believed still to exist therein. Mr. Fuller's report was received in December last.

The circumstances under which the journey was made, the inaccessibility of the native country, and the difficulty of obtaining trustworthy information at first hand from the Indians themselves handicapped Mr. Fuller and his British colleagues in their onerous task.

That the natives of the region have been inhumanly treated by the mercenaries of the rubber-gathering concerns and been reduced to a state of peonage indistinguishable from slavery is undenied and unquestionable; that the horrible conditions laid bare by the testimony of observers in the past still exist in all their enormity in the districts visited by the inquirers is not fully substantiated by the scanty evidence they were able to collect, but enough is known to show that whatever amelioration of labor conditions has been effected falls short of the demands of common humanity, and that the efforts of the Peruvian Government to work a remedial change and clear itself before the bar of the world's opinion have been for the most part painfully inadequate and unhappily misdirected to a degree making the results unresponsive to the unquestionable desire of the administration at Lima that its control of the vast and almost trackless regions of the Putumayo, embracing some 12,000 square miles of territory, shall be just and humane. The more energetic action of the present administration in Peru in sending a prefect of recognized ability and integrity to Iquitos and in pushing the prosecution of Messrs. Arana and Vega is considered significant as indicating the attitude that will be henceforth assumed by the Peruvian Gov-

Supplementing the report and cognate dispatches of Mr. Fuller, the undersigned submits other papers found in the Department of State bearing on the subject of the resolution, including the British Blue Book, entitled "Correspondence respecting the treatment of British colonial subjects and native Indians employed in the collection of rubber in the Putumayo district," which was laid before the Parliament in July last. A knowledge of the contents of this publication appears to be needful, inasmuch as the inquiry of the House of Representatives is based on a journalistic recital of its import.

Among the interesting papers herewith subjoined are two reports made in November and December, 1907, by Charles C. Eberhardt, then the American Consul at Iquitos. The first of these, dated November 30, 1907, is a carefully prepared paper on the condition and characteristics of the native Indians of Peru. As an ethnological study its scientific value led to its publication by the Smithsonian Institution, in volume 52 of the Miscellaneous Collections. dental to that investigation, and in view of the assertions in American journals that American companies were exploiting the rubber production in the upper Putumayo district under concession from the Government of Colombia, Mr. Eberhardt submitted, under date of December 3, 1907, a report on the general conditions in the Putumayo River district of Peru. This report, while exhibiting the condition of virtual slavery to which the native tribes were subjected, showed that the cruelties so disclosed were not the work of American citizens, nor affected American interests, and, it would seem, did not call for representations to any of the three Governments concerned in the disputed territory. Indeed, the prospect that the controversy as to the sovereignty in that quarter was about to enter on an acute stage might have made it a delicate matter for a neutral government to impute territorial responsibility to any one of them.

The undersigned has not deemed it advisable to expand this report, pendente lite, by including any correspondence in regard to the conflicting territorial claims in the upper Putumayo district or to do more than make passing reference to this circumstance as bearing on the difficulty of practical and effective administration in that quarter.

Respectfully submitted.

PAPERS ACCOMPANYING THE FOREGOING LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

File No. S23.5048/37a.

The Acting Secretary of State to the American Consul at Iquitos, Peru.

No. 1.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 6, 1912.

Sir: In arriving at the decision to reopen the American Consulate at Iquitos, Peru, the Department has had primarily in view the advisability of securing information as to the labor conditions along the affluents of the upper Amazon, and particularly the Putumayo Reports transmitted to the Department by Mr. Eberhardt, formerly American Consul at Iquitos, during 1907 and 1908 indicated that those directing the gathering of rubber in the territory claimed by Peru to be within her jurisdiction were responsible for practices of exploitation of the native Indians which threatened the complete extinction of the primitive races. Subsequent to the receipt of the reports of Mr. Eberhardt by the Department the British Government, which was in possession of information concerning the horrible condition existing in the forests of the Putumayo within the concession of a British corporation, directed His Britannic Majesty's Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, Sir Roger Casement, to make personal examinations of the situation. Previous to this time this Government had been in consultation with the British Embassy at Washington, with a view to cooperation in representations to the Government of Peru in order that the Peruvian Government might undertake a thorough investigation of the subject and obtain such first-hand information regarding the brutal extermination of the native inhabitants of one of the important outlying Provinces of Peru as would impel it to take the remedial measures that the circumstances appeared imperatively to demand. Owing to the imminence during the early months of 1910 of an outbreak of hostilities between Equador and Peru because of conflicting claims of these countries regarding the territory of which the Putumayo region was a part, the Government of the United States at that time deemed it wise to postpone communication with the Government of Peru en the matter until the outstanding dispute, which it was then hoped was approaching settlement, had been terminated. It was felt that, the international situation having become tranquilized and the question regarding the title over the upper Amazon region decided, such representations as the Government of the United States might determine to make in the matter would more certainly produce the results which it was desired to bring about.

During the early part of 1911 the Department was informed, through the British Embassy at Washington, that as a result of the efforts of the British Minister at Lima, acting under instructions from his Government, the Peruvian Government had appointed a commission to proceed to the Putumayo region and report on conditions there found to exist. The Department, to which the cause of the defenseless natives of the Putumayo had so strongly appealed for humanitarian reasons, had received information from time to time of the views of the British Government in the matter and in regard to the steps which the British Minister at Lima had been instructed to take. During the months of April and May of the past year the British Ambassador at Washington transmitted, for the confidential information of the Department, copies of three reports of His Britannic Majesty's Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, which presented the horrible details collected by personal observa-tion of the methods employed in the collection of rubber by the employees of the rubber company in the Putumayo district. These reports relate the appalling brutalities and atrocities from which the native rubber gatherers of the forest of the Putumayo were suffering. Copies of these pamphlets and other reports of more recent dates are attached for your information and for the files of the Consulate.1

On the 17th of July last the American Minister at Lima was instructed to express to the Peruvian Foreign Office, at a favorable opportunity, the pleasure that was felt by this Government upon learning of the steps initiated by Peru, inspired by the high ideals of serving humanity, to put an effective end to the excesses in the Peruvian rubber forests of the Amazon Valley by dispatching a judicial investigating commission to the Putumayo. The Minister was also directed to express the hope that adequate and vigorous measures would follow to put an end to the reported barbarous system in vogue, which threatened to accomplish the complete extinction of a defenseless people. It was at this time pointed out that Peru would undoubtedly understand the friendly spirit prompting a mention of this matter by the Government of the United States and would realize that there was no disposition or intention present to offend by referring to a matter concerning the internal affairs of Peru

It has subsequently developed from information before the British Government, that the action taken by the Peruvian Government in organizing this commission has almost entirely failed of its object. The corrupt influence of those responsible for the conditions in the Putumayo has been seemingly so powerful as to defeat the laudable ends of the Central Government. As a result a few of the underlings have been arrested while no serious effort has been made to apprehend or punish the leaders. It is alleged that the local administrative and judicial authorities residing at Iquitos have afforded such improper protection to those guilty of the atrocities systematically practiced upon the natives as to make it impossible to bring the criminals to justice without a thorough carrying out of drastic administrative local reforms. Unless the Central Government of Peru takes a vigorous and earnest stand it is to be apprehended that the practices which, it is understood, have been temporarily suspended as a consequence of the measures already taken by the Government, may be resumed in all their former intensity until the native tribes will have become completely exterminated.

¹These reports and related correspondence (not printed here) were gathered into a folio volume of 163 pages, which is referred to hereafter as the "British Bluebook"; it was presented to the two Houses of Parliament in July, 1912; the reports are signed by Sir Roger Casement, British Consul General at Rio de Janeiro. This Bluebook is reprinted in Document 1366 (from which the most of the correspondence here given is extracted—see heading of first paper) at pp. 215–443.

The Department has been in recent close communication with the British Foreign Office, following several personal conferences with Sir Roger Casement at the Department. It appeared that the British Government was seriously contemplating the publication of the evidence on the Putumayo in its possession in the belief that such publicity might provide an effective remedy to the shocking situation. However, at the suggestion of this Government, the publication of the reports was withheld pending further representations to the Government of Peru on the subject. The Department therefore informed the American Minister at Lima of the apparently wellfounded rumor that no really serious efforts are being made to prosecute those responsible for the atrocities in the Putumayo, and to instruct the Legation to cooperate with the British Legation in taking the matter up again unofficially and informally with the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs. In these representations the American Minister was directed to advise the Government of Peru that it was understood that the official reports on the situation in the Putumayo probably could not be withheld much longer from publication, the details of which inevitably would be exploited in all parts of the world by the press. The American Minister was directed to say that unless drastic and effective action demanded by the circumstances was taken by Peru previous to the publication of this evidence, which appeared imminent, such an exposure of the situation as almost surely must follow might induce public opinion of the world to believe that Peru had shown herself unable effectively to exercise sovereign rights over a region to which Peru lays claim and the ultimate rights to [sic] which Peru desires to submit for determination to arbitration.

The British and American representatives at Lima had a conference during the early days of February with the Peruvian President and Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Peruvian Government stated that it was endeavoring by all means within its power to bring to justice those charged with the crimes in the Putumayo, and welcomed suggestions as to a system of reforms which would guarantee adequate protection to the Indians within its jurisdiction. The difficulties of the problem presented to the central administration were emphasized—the unsatisfactory communication between Lima and Iquitos; the difficulty of finding men worthy of being intrusted with administrative functions in that outlying region; the barrier presented by the topographical character of the wild region of the upper Amazon; and the almost absolute impossibility of counteracting the influence of those identified with the continuation of the present iniquitous system.

Under the circumstances at present existing and after careful consideration of the reports which were received from the American Legation at Lima and the information transmitted by the British representative, kindly furnished through the British Embassy here, the Department has informed Ambassador Bryce that it deferred to the judgment of the British Government in fixing the time for the publication of the Casement reports. The Embassy at the same time was informed that the Department could not but believe that the Peruvian Government should properly regard any publicity given to the matter as in accord with the purposes so frequently enunciated by the Peruvian Government of doing everything within its power to put an end to the inhuman treatment of the Indian populations. Further, it was felt by the Department that the publication was strongly recommended in view of the efforts that are being made to procure funds by public subscription making it possible to establish in the Putumayo region missions for work among the Indians. The British Government now states that it will proceed with the immediate publication of the reports in its possession regarding the situation on the Putumayo.

You will make yourself thoroughly conversant with the local situation upon arriving at your post and keep the Department fully and promptly informed regarding this subject, in which the Department is taking the keenest interest.

You will, upon consultation and cooperation with the British Consul at Iquitos, make arrangements to visit, at intervals which may in your judgment appear advisable, the rubber stations along the Putumayo region in order that the Department may have before it your views based upon personal observation. For this purpose a special allowance of not to exceed $500 is hereby granted you.

I am [etc.]

Sin: The difficulty I experienced after receiving my appointment to this post in obtaining reliable information relative to conditions in general in this region leads me to believe that the results of certain studies I have made regarding the Indians of Peru may be of some practical value and interest to others, as well as to the Department, more particularly as the most of these tribes live across the Andes, or in that part of Peru which would seem naturally to form the territory of which this consular district is comprised. An extra copy is also sent, with the idea that there may be some item of interest to the National Museum. I had hoped to make a more thorough study of this interesting subject from actual observation among the different tribes, securing specimens of their weapons of warfare, clothing, utensils, etc., but ill health has prevented any systematic work along such lines. I have been fortunate, however, in being able to make several trips among different tribes with Mr. George M. von Hassel, thus gaining first-hand a limited amount of information on the subject, but the greater part comes from Mr. von Hassel himself, who, it seems to me, is probably the best authority on the subject and better qualified than any other person to give reliable data, and talk knowingly regarding the matter. * * *

The average Peruvian would no doubt show resentment at the statement that slavery exists in Peru, yet such is in reality the case with most of the Indians who come in contact with the whites. For the most part, however, they are not treated harshly, and in their submissive way, with enough to eat and drink, seem to be contented and probably as well as when roaming the woods. existence might be termed a system of peonage. The Indian enters the employ of some rubber gatherer, often willingly, though not infrequently by force, and immediately becomes indebted to him for food, etc. According to Peruvian law, a person so indebted to another can be held and obliged to work till that debt is paid, and in these instances the employer sees to it that the employee never receives sufficient wages to pay off his indebtedness, and he is therefore always practically a slave. A person can, by paying off this indebtedness, secure the servant, who in this way becomes similarly the slave of the payer of the debt. However, the scarcity of labor and the ease with which the Indians can usually escape and live on the natural products of the forest oblige the owners to treat them with some consideration. The Indians realize this and their work is not at all satisfactory, judging from our standards. This was particularly noticeable during a recent visit I made to a mill where "cachassa" or aguardiente is extracted from cane. The men seemed to work when and how they chose, requiring a liberal amount of the liquor each day (of which they are particularly fond), and if this is not forthcoming or they are treated harshly in any way they run to the forests.

The employer has the law on his side, and if he can find the runaway he is at liberty to bring him back; but the time lost and the almost useless task of trying to track the Indian through the dense forests and small streams makes it far the more practical that the servant be treated with consideration in the first place. It is not uncommon for launches returning from trips up the river to bring Indians who have been taken from their tribes and sell or present them to households in Iquitos, where they are kept as servants. They are usually quick to learn what is expected of them and may often be said to be better off than in their former state. During a recent trip which I made an Indian woman and child, who had been sold for $80, was brought aboard the launch and the woman seemed less concerned about leaving her people, her new surroundings or probable fate than an intelligent dog might have done. On another trip a little girl of about 8 years was brought aboard by her father and sold for a small amount of silver and a half dozen cans of sardines.

Through intermarriage with the whites, disease, and battle, the Indians of Peru are rapidly disappearing, and I am told that statistics compiled for a given period during recent years show that their numbers are diminishing at the rate of 5 per cent per year; that in 20 years the wild Indian of the Upper Amazon will have disappeared almost entirely, and it seems only a question of time when the dying races of South American Indians must meet the fate of their brothers of North America, and the two in common, once the rulers of two continents, become only scattered remnants of their former greatness, if not entirely engulfed by the wave which seems sweeping over them.

I have [etc.]

The American Consul at Iquitos to the Secretary of State.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Iquitos, December 3, 1907.

Sir: In view of certain articles which have appeared in different periodicals at home at different times during the past few months (India Rubber World, of May, September, and October, and New York Times of September 6 and ¹Printed at pp. 111-117 of Document 1366; published also in Vol. 52, Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections, October 28, 1908.

19) regarding the exploitation by an American company, under concession from the Colombian Government, of a large tract of rubber lands in the Upper Putomayo (or Ica) and Yapura (or Caqueta) Rivers district, a territory which is now in dispute between that Government and Peru, the results of a trip of inspection which I recently made to that part of the district at present controlled by the company which has a complete monopoly of all Putomayo rubber shipments through Iquitos may be interesting. Out of an absence of eight weeks from Iquitos, six weeks were spent in the Putomayo River and its two branches, the Igaraparana and Caraparana (sometimes written Carapanama), where the two principal posts of the local company of J. C. Arana y Hermanos are located, and while it is by no means presumed that a thorough knowledge of existing local conditions could be gained in so short a time, it is presumed that one could gain a knowledge of many phases of those conditions—such as the manner of extracting rubber, the class of work, conditions of the Indians, health conditions, feeling between the Peruvians and Colombians of the district—which a promoting company would probably not make public, and which the Department, at least, might be interested in knowing. * * *

The business is conducted from Iquitos, where a considerable office force is employed, though a resident manager is stationed at both posts, each of whom has complete charge of a given territory and to whom the foreman of certain specified tracts of territory, or sections as they are called, must report. These foremen, together with their assistants, all of whom are armed, number approximately 200, and they have control, by "rule of the rifle," over approximately 10,000 Indians—men, women, and children, principally of the Huitoto, Bora, Ocaino, and Andoque Tribes. * * *

These foremen work on a commission, and while their contracts are not all alike, the men are all making a great deal of money, at the same time spending it most freely and gambling much of it away during their three visits a year to the post, when they come from the forests with their hundreds of Indians laden with rubber, the results of some three months' work.

When the Indians flee to the forests, expeditions headed by armed whites and made up of Indians of neighboring tribes toward whom the runaways have always been hostile go in pursuit, and so, hunted by the whites and surrounded on all sides by hostiles of their own race, they are eventually killed or brought back captives to work as slaves of the whites, though of course some do escape. The word "slavery" is used advisedly, for the condition of the Indians is in reality nothing else. * * *

In the vicinity of Chorrera considerable land has been cleared and it is an interesting, yet withal a sad sight, to see these Indians—once the owners of this vast region—men, women, and children alike, now slaves, filing along in the distance over this clearing, heavily laden with rubber from their native forests, which they lay at the feet of their conquerors. As has been said before, these overseers are in reality armed guards who compel the Indians to work, and who are usually illiterate whites, receiving the equivalent of from $25 to $50, United States currency, and board per month, and capable of most any brutal deed. About two years ago a number of negroes were brought from Barbados for these positions, but they soon sickened of the brutalities they were obliged by their superiors to inflict upon the poor Indians, and practically all have worked their way back to Iquitos or Barbados. They have frightful stories to tell and have no hesitancy in telling all they have been through.

As before mentioned, the foremen receive a percentage on the product delivered at the post, and naturally drive the Indians as hard as possible, which has been responsible for much of the ill treatment of the Indians. One negro told me that he had been compelled, under penalty of receiving the same punishment himself if he did not carry out the orders of his superior, to punish Indians by all sorts of cruelties; in fact, he showed me a scar which he said he had received when he first began work for having interfered with the foreman, who was beating and kicking an Indian woman. He told me, further, that he had seen a foreman shoot an Indian through the foot for not having brought a satisfactory amount of rubber from the forest, and he was told to return to the forest, wounded as he was, and bring more, or he would be killed. Women and children are also obliged to work, and the same negro told of a woman whose baby seemed to interfere with her bringing in a sufficient amount of rubber, and the baby was therefore killed by dashing its brains out against a tree and the woman told to go to work again or she would be similarly treated. A man of standing here in Iquitos says he saw a woman, pregnant, disemboweled with a stroke of a sharp machete. Such stories, almost without number, could be cited, and I have no doubt they could be proven, for it is common rumor here that such conditions do exist there, and from what I myself For example, a negro from French Guiana brutally saw I am convinced of it. beat and bruised an old Indian in my presence till I went beyond my right and interfered. Another employee, a Spanish clerk in the storehouse, knocked down his little servant (they all have boy slaves to wait on them), broke a rib and two teeth with brutal kicks, and I also saw poor Indians, mere skeletons, in chains, living on fariña (dried yucca meal) and water, thus detained as examples to others because they had tried to run away and be free again in their own native forests. The foremen themselves at first talked very freely with me about the severe and even brutal measures which they considered necessary to adopt to keep the Indians under control, but later, evidently having been instructed by the manager, they tried to persuade me that such talk had all been an exaggeration. Of course as consul of another Government, I had no comment to make, nor as a plain American citizen could I have had anything to say on the subject. The Peruvians are seeking to get the benefit of the Indian's labor before he disappears entirely, and to that end do not hesitate to perform the most outrageous acts of cruelty.

It at first seems incredible that so many Indians can be kept under control by so few armed men, and there seems little doubt that they could successfully resist for years to come the invasion of the white man, poorly armed as they are in comparison, if they had any sort of organization or union, but the different tribes and subtribes, enemies for centuries, will not lay aside their jealousies and differences to unite and fight against their common enemy. Thus it is that, as often happens, when numbers of them run away, expeditions made up of Indians of another tribe who have been lifetime enemies of the fugitives are sent after them and, in the end, the runaways are usually recaptured. infrequently the leader of a certain group, or captain, as he is called, will even hunt down his own people who may have tried to escape, in this manner further ingratiating himself in favor with the whites and receiving more than ordinary consideration and good treatment from them for his traitorous action toward his own kind. Naturally the poor chances the Indians have with their inferior arms (lances, spears, etc.) of any successful resistance and the rough treatment they have received from the whites have cowed their spirit to a certain extent.

No. 3.]

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's confidential instruction No. 1 of April 6, 1912, and inclosures, relative to the situation in the rubber districts along the Putumayo River. The instruction has been carefully studied, and every effort will be made to keep the Department promptly and fully advised of developments.

Immediately on arriving I called on the British Consul, Mr. G. B. Michell, who told me that he had already been informed by his Government of my transfer to this post. He stated that he had already collected some data on the subject and had had several conferences with the prefect, Señor Francisco Alayza Paz-Soldan, regarding the situation.

Mr. Michell left the day after my arrival for an 18-day trip up one of the other rivers, but we arranged for further conferences on his return. In the meantime, he has courteously placed some of his information at my disposal.

We shall try to make some arrangement to go up the Putumayo on a launch other than those belonging to the parties responsible for the atrocities, and it is altogether probable that we may be able to go up together in the latter part of July or August. In the meantime, I shall collect what information I can here and will report to the Department by the next mail.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that the present prefect leaves Monday, June 3, for what is stated to be a 3-months' trip to Europe; but that there seems to be some doubt locally as to his return. As the Department is aware, this gentleman has been regarded as favoring measures that would put a stop to the practices that have occasioned so much serious criticism.

I regret my inability to furnish more information at present. It is very hard to get anything done here, and I have been obliged to live on the steamer that brought me until I finally managed to put up temporarily in one large room, without any furniture at all, in an unfinished building. There is absolutely no accommodation for travelers in Iquitos, and the cost of everything is so exorbitant that no one maintains an establishment of a size that would enable them to put up a guest even for a few days. Thus, most of my time since arriving has been taken up in making provision so that I should at least have a place to sleep.

Owing to his imminent departure, the prefect is so busy that it is very difficult to secure interviews with him, and the moment did not seem opportune to inquire what is being done along the Putumayo. Besides I had the question of temporary recognition to settle first, and, as stated in another dispatch, this is not yet satisfactorily concluded.

[Extract.]

No. 13.7

American Consulate, Iquitos, July 1, 1912.

Sir: Supplementing my dispatch No. 3 of the 31st ultimo, I have the honor to report that the Putumayo question proves on examination to be considerably more complicated than would on first sight appear. There are a number of factors that must be taken into account in addition to the conditions in the Putumayo region itself.

Real lasting reform can only be accomplished with the aid and support of the inhabitants of the Department of Loreto, and to what extent public opinion here would back up active and actual reform is problematical. Both the influence of those controlling the Putumayo and the general labor situation in this part of Peru enter into the question.

In the first place, those in control of the Putumayo concession are among the wealthiest and most influential men in this part of Peru, and in fact in the whole ocuntry. Their influence in Lima is great, and locally they could bring pressure to bear on many people who might otherwise strongly support a movement to protect the Indians and improve their condition. An indication of the state of local public opinion in regard to these men is to be found in the Iquitos attitude toward Pablo Zumeta, the moving spirit in the Peruvian-Amazon Co., who is still under indictment and for whose arrest a warrant was at one time issued. He is in enjoyment of most of the local honors, vice alcalde (vice mayor of the municipality), vice president and acting head of the chamber of commerce (an influential organization), president of the benevolent society, etc., to all of which he was elected subsequent to his exposure. He is well respected in the town and stands high, the charges under the shadow of which he rests being entirely disregarded.

In the second place, for a full comprehension of the existing situation it is necessary to examine into the general labor situation throughout this part of Peru. An important factor in this phase of the situation is found in the ancient, deep-rooted, and almost universal attitude of the Peruvians, who, while they may not approve of cruel and inhuman treatment, generally regard the Indians as placed here by Providence for the use and benefit of the white man and as having no rights that the white man need respect.

This attitude of the people has found concrete expression in the universal system of peonage, an old institution, well established, recognized by law, and which has come to be the basis on which the rubber business (the sole industry of trans-Andean Peru) almost entirely rests. The system of advancing supplies, necessities and luxuries, to peons and rubber gatherers is universal in this part of Peru and has led to the establishment of what is virtually a slave The trades encourage the "patrons" operating rubber sections to continually enlarge their sphere of operations, so that they will have more rubber to sell and can buy more imported goods. Labor being comparatively scarce and expensive throughout the district, it is to the patron's interest to get those working for him hopelessly into his debt, which means that he can retain their services as peons until they pay this off. It is difficult to maintain that this system of servitude is not recognized, since it is universal and, while never discouraged by the authorities, is certainly in many cases upheld.

It simply means that the native who is unable to pay for the advance he has been encouraged to take is seized by the patron who designedly advanced him more than he could pay for, and is compelled to work off the debt. As he must be lodged and fed in the meanwhile, the cost of this is added to his old debt, and, by further advances, care is taken to keep the debt at a point where it can never be overtaken. As these claims are transferable, the person of the debtor being also transferred to the new creditor, the Indians and their families are really bought and sold, passing from hand to hand under a system that bears a striking resemblance to actual

There is a lurking fear in the minds of many business men here that too real and serious investigation of the conditions in the Putumayo district may lead to an exposure of the peonage system in general here and bring about an outcry abroad that may break it up, totally disrupting the labor situation and existing credit system, with heavy resultant losses, to say nothing of an increase in labor costs that they fear will constitute a death blow to the rubber industry of Peru for many a year to come. The cost of labor in this consular district is now so high that, in view of the necessarily expensive freights to Europe, it is hard for Peruvian rubber to compete except in times of high market price abroad. There is a decided local demand for readjustment of the import duties on foodstuffs (all of which must be brought from abroad) and of the export duties on rubber, to the end that Peruvian rubber may be enabled to compete with that from other sources. Any movement tending in the least to increase labor costs would thus meet with little or no local support. Not only does this system of peonage touch closely the business of the people; it also comes into their family life, and, though this is not so important a factor as the servitude of the rubber workers, still it must be taken into consideration as affecting in no small degree the local attitude toward the Putumayo question. * * *

On the publication of the Casement reports, the more farsighted will likely realize that to settle the Putumayo question by punishing those responsible for past outrages and providing protection for the Indians from cruelties and inhumanities in the future would tend to divert the attention of the world at large from the institution of peonage in the southern river systems. On the other hand, I am inclined to fear that the majority will oppose any change in present methods and, though resenting interference, will rely on the storm blowing over.

As for the officials charged with the administration of the department, the prefect, Señor Alayza y Paz Soldan, left June 3 for a three months' vacation, and doubt is expressed locally as to his return. He was regarded as favoring reform in the Putumayo and punishment of those responsible for the atrocities, though, it must be admitted, he never accomplished much in this direction.

The acting prefect is Señor Estanislao Castañeda, whose real office is that of subprefect.

The acting subprefect, who has charge of police matters, is an employee of the Peruvian-Amazon Co. His name is Casanova, and he is a storekeeper for them.

The judge of the criminal court, Dr. Valcarcel, has returned after having been reinstated. He is the man who issued the warrant of arrest against Pablo Zumaeta, and is a friend of Dr. Paredes.

I have not yet taken the Putumayo question up with the acting prefect, thinking it best to employ the time for a while in picking up what information I could outside and familiarizing myself with local conditions while allowing him ample time to get his administration fully organized and familiarize himself with the details of his office. As long as there was no probability of securing any information additional to that already furnished Mr. Michell by the titular prefect, I thought nothing would be gained by approaching the acting man, especially after the delay and hesitancy to act in regard to my recognition without instructions from Lima, and it seemed that I would likely get more extensive and reliable information by waiting a bit than by asking him what was being done, directly on my recognition.

I have now, however, requested him to give me a list of the officials in all the principal rivers charged with administrative and judicial functions. This, when received, will give an idea of the theoretical organization of the government in the Putumayo district, and I shall endeavor to secure and forward to the Department information regarding the personality and affiliations of the officials there.

The next step that I propose to take is to ask the acting prefect, in a manner and at a time as opportune as may be, (1) what has been and is being done in regard to the Putumayo cases; (2) what is now being done in that district for the further protection of the Indians, stating that, as public subscriptions are being asked for to be used in missionary work in the district in question, information as to these points is desired in the United States.

I have not yet approached the Peruvian-Amazon Co. for information, though I may eventually do so should the right opportunty present. I understand that they claim to have made a change in their administrative system and collecting methods, such that there is no longer any incentive to their white foremen to maltreat the Indians, and that they also claim to have made extensive changes for the better in their personnel. An Argentine, said to be a new employee occupying a responsible position in the Putumayo, is expected in Iquitos before long, and I hope to get some information, directly or indirectly, as may seem advisable, through him.

As the Department is doubtless aware, the general administration of justice in this consular district is far from satisfactory. In fact, it has been frequently complained of in the local press. There seems, however, to be small prospect of an improvement in the present thinly populated condition of the Department of Loreto, with its immense distances and difficult and slow communications. * * *

The prefect himself, Señor Alayza y Paz-Soldan, when asked by Consul Michell late in May, just before his departure, what had been done and was being done toward the punishment of those responsible for the atrocities in the Putumayo, stated that the delay in the trial of those now in prison was due to the appeals of the accused to the supreme court at Lima, that it took a long time for the documents in the appeals to reach Lima, and that the supreme court had been enjoying a vacation from January to March. He also stated that the Iquitos courts were greatly overworked on account of the small number of officials. He said that he had been repeatedly urged by Lima to push the matter, and had personally requested the officers of the court here to lose no time in bringing the criminals to justice, but that, as the courts are independent of the executive, he can do no more than this. * * *

One thing is certain, that nothing of any importance will be done without energetic and continued pressure from Lima, and the expenditure of more money by the Peruvian Government for administration and judicial purposes in the Department of Loreto, which furnishes so large a part of the revenues of the Republic and for which hitherto so little has been done.

As to facilities for visiting the Putumayo, the Peruvian-Amazon Co. sends up a launch five or six times a year to take up supplies and bring back rubber. I have no doubt that passage could be arranged on the next launch they send up, and anyone who went up in this way would be allowed to see exactly what the company wished him to see and no more. It would be better too, not to be under obligations to them, and one would be in going on their boat even though he paid passage. The usual rate of passage is £1 ($4.8665) per day, and the trip would last from 8 to 10 weeks, thus costing something like $275 to $350.

The only alternative is to go up on one of the small Government launches that make the trip three or four times a year with garrison supplies. This would also take me away from Iquitos for from 7 to 10 weeks. There would be no passage money, but I should have to contribute to the officers' mess, which would come to about the same thing or possibly a little more. This would only admit of visiting Chorrera, and possibly one or two other river points, but I might be able to get some information from the trip.

Chartering a launch is out of the question, as this would cost £20 to £30 a day, or a total of $5,500 to $10,000. Traveling away from the rivers is possible only by permission of, and with assistance from, the company, and its cost is so high as to place it beyond my allowance.

As stated in my previous dispatch on this subject, I shall probably arrange to go up, in company with the British Consul, on a Government launch, in late July or August.

In accordance with the instructions of the Department, I have cooperated throughout with the British Consul, exchanging information, etc. He is an experienced and capable gentleman, who was at one time stationed in the rubber districts of the Kongo.

Trusting that the action taken so far may meet with the approval of the Department.

The American Consul at Iquitos to the Secretary of State.

No. 19.]

American Consulate, Iquitos, Peru, July 15, 1912.

Sir: Supplementing my dispatches No. 3 of May 31, 1912, and No. 13 of July 1, 1912, I have the honor to transmit herewith a duplicate of the latter, with duplicate of its inclosure. Since writing my last dispatch, no launches have gone up to the Putumayo, but I have been able to gather locally further information that may interest the Department.

1255

As an understanding of the organization of government in the Department of Loreto is important in looking into the present status of the Putumayo question, it may be well to give a brief outline of it here. At the head of the department is the prefect, which office is for the present, occupied—in the absence of the titular official—by an acting man, really the subprefect of the Province of Bajo Amazonas. This gentleman was spoken of in my No. 13.

PERU.

The total area of the Department of Loreto is estimated at 288,500 square miles. This is more than the combined areas of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and North Carolina, or, to go further west, more than the combined areas of Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota. The department is divided into three provinces, at the head of each of which is a subprefect.

The Putumayo region is in the Province of Bajo Amazonas (the same one as Iquitos), and the acting subprefect at the present time is Señor Daniel Casanova, an employee of the Peruvian Amazon Co.,

the concern responsible for the atrocities.

The provinces are divided into districts, each having a governor. In each of the larger towns and villages the Government is represented by an official called a lieutenant governor. These last are very minor officials and are under the governors. There are three justices of the peace (juez de paz) in each provincial capital and one in each district. They are unpaid officials.

In addition to these functionaries, there are officers called comisarios, appointed for certain river districts, which constitute authorities independent of the subprefects and immediately under the prefect of the department.

Also, in many places in which, on account of the sparse population, it has not been practical to appoint lieutenant governors, the prefecture has stationed small detachments of troops under the command of army officers, with the title of "jefes de guarnicion." These are partly under military authority, but under the prefecture in affairs of a civil character in which they may be required to intervene.

There being no towns worthy of the name in the Putumayo region, the sole representatives of the civil power are a justice of the peace for the whole river and a comisario. The Putumayo River itself is about 1,000 miles long. There are two other important rivers, tributaries of the Putumayo, in the district—the Igaraparana and the Caraparana—which rise near the Caqueta and parallel each other southward for some 300 or 400 miles through continuous forest to junctions with the Putumayo. The mouth of the Igaraparana is some 400 miles from the point where the Putumayo joins the Amazon and that of the Caraparana, about 200 miles further still from the same junction. The area of the entire Putumayo basin (the better part of which is controlled by the Peruvian Amazon Syndicate) is estimated as high as 35,000 to 40,000 square miles, or more than the combined areas of all the New England States but Maine.

The strong arm of the law and the sole protection to the defenseless Indians in the whole of this vast region seems at present to be found in one justice of the peace, an employee of the company which has fathered such reprehensible practices in the past, and one comisario, who draws, in the face of strong temptation, the munificent salary of some $1,500 a year (United States currency), about the same as a clerk gets in Iquitos, together with a handful of soldiers shut up all the time in La Chorrera and possibly El Encanto. There may be more troops, but I have been unable so far to get exact information. I believe, however, that there are not enough in any case to be a factor in the situation.

The justice of the peace for the whole Putumayo basin is a man named Manuel Torrico, an employee of the Peruvian Amazon Co. Dr. Paredes denounced the appointment of this man as a scandal, and a clear proof that the local authorities had no real intention to bring about an improvement in the state of things on the Putumayo. When Sir Roger Casement was on the river in 1910, Torrico was a subagent of the company, a subordinate at Occidente to Fidel Velarde, one of the leaders in the atrocities (and one of the first to "escape"). He has since been promoted to be a chief of section for the Peruvian Amazon Co. Sir Roger Casement said of Torrico, "From him no more than from his predecessor could any public service be expected."

The comisario is a man named Juan Garcia Buenaño. He is fairly well spoken of as a man, but stated by many to be in a position where he can do little or nothing to better things, even though he might wish to. I expect to see and talk with him when I go up to this district, and will report further on my return.

As to the administrative staff in general in the Department of Loreto, allegations of venality on the part of Government officials of all grades are frequent, open, and common here in Iquitos, and it certainly would seem as though there must be some fire to cause so much smoke. River comisarios are a special target. Their salaries are small, but they are said to return from their posts rich after a year or two in a jungle where they are supposed not to engage in trade.

Protests against illegal trading by Government transports and river comisarios in the rivers closed to trade on account of the troubles with Ecuador have been made, and I have heard it openly stated that the late prefect was interested in this illicit trade to a heavy extent.

As to the prosecution of the cases brought against those accused of crimes committed in connection with the Peruvian Amazon Co.'s enterprise in the Putumayo, despite all the reasons held forth for the failure so far to show results, it really must be admitted that they have been conducted in a most desultory manner. Since my last dispatch nothing has developed, and, in fact, up to date no judgments of any importance have been handed down. It will be recalled that the prefect (Señor Alayza y Paz-Soldan) assigned this to delays involved in appeals to the supreme court at Lima and to the fact that the local courts were provided with too few officials for their work. There is something in the first excuse, but it would certainly seem that if the Government of Peru really wished to push these cases the first thing they would have done would be to provide the necessary machinery without delay.

The return of Dr. Valcarcel, referred to in my No. 13, added nothing to the facilities of the local courts, as he merely replaced the man who had been acting temporarily (i. e., during Valcarcel's suspension) a local lawyer. It was not until the 7th instant that any additions to the bench were made. On that date Dr. Morelli, a justice who had been on leave, returned, and two new judges, Drs. Jose Dolores Contreras and Lorenzo Guarcia, arrived from Lima.

Pablo Zumaeta, in whose case nothing further has been done, continues to stand high in the esteem of the local public. He took a prominent part in the official ceremonies of July 12 connected with the mass celebrated for those who died in the Battle of the Caqueta last year in the troubles with Colombia. He and his friends black-balled, at the Iquitos Club, the judge, Dr. Valcarcel, who had issued the warrant against Zumaeta, and that in a club where a majority is necessary to shut out a proposed member. Zumaeta may not be guilty of all that is laid at his door; he may have been accused and the warrant issued against him unjustly, but if as innocent as he claims to be, it is strange that he does not go into court and vindicate himself once for all.

El Oriente published, on July 1, dispatches from Lima regarding the appointment of two more commissions to investigate and devise plans for the future for government in the Putumayo region "and other regions similar to it." These are inclosed, together with trans-The news did not appear in any of the other daily papers and it aroused no special comment.

Julio Ego-Aguirre, appointed on the principal commission, is the senator from this department, and the deputy, Julio Abel Raygada, appointed likewise, is believed to be the Raygada who is a deputy from Loreto. Ego-Aguirre is stated to be an able lawyer. He at one time took lessons in English from Hardenberg (the man whose articles in London Truth first directed attention to the Putumayo atrocities) and is known to have spoken well of him in the past.

As to the personnel of the auxiliary commission, I have already referred (in my No. 13) to the acting prefect, who is ex officio its head. An idea of his attitude toward the question may be gained from what he said to me unguardedly in a conversation regarding the Putumavo, viz, that he had lived in Loreto 25 years and did not believe that more than six or seven serious crimes had been committed in the whole Putumayo region in all that time; that the Indians were wild, irredeemable cannibals, who could only be handled by force; and that the whole Putumayo agitation smelled to him strongly of Colombian intrigue. As to the president of the superior court I have heard widely varying opinions expressed. It is altogether possible that if given the chance he may do genuine service. The third member, Dr. Maradiegue, is a local lawyer, rather old and infirm, and more likely to prove a figurehead than one to whom you could look for service in this matter.

The auxiliary commission itself looks very much like the interposition of red tape, with the object of delay and obstructing any action of a vigorous or prompt nature. In fact, the whole commission plan to one on the ground looks suspiciously like a device to produce the appearance of doing something when really leaving things as they are. What these commissions could do in the matter of punishing the crimes of the past is hard to see. As for the future, it would be strange if the local knowledge of the senator and deputy from this Department, added to the data given in the voluminous report already made by Dr. Paredes, were not sufficient for the drawing up of a plan to protect the Indians and furnish organized government to the district in question.

As to what the administrative branch of the local government has done and is doing in regard to Putumayo matters, this is either nothing at all or else they have proceeded without giving out any information either publicly or to the British Consul. Short of going up the river, which the lack of facilities will make impossible for some time, the only way to find out was to inquire of the prefecture. This I did, calling personally on the acting prefect and presenting the memorandum of which a copy is inclosed, with translation of the I thought it more likely to secure a satisfactory answer if presented in writing, and assigned in the conversation as my reason for so doing my unfamiliarity with the Spanish language. The acting prefect stated that he would look into the matter and let me hear from him. I do not expect a reply for some time, as I believe that he will undoubtedly communicate with Lima before replying. The questions in the letter were carefully drawn to avoid offering any ground for offense, and I stated verbally that I had heard that the Government was taking measures, as stated in the decree appointing the commission, but had no information as to what they

As to what the company is doing, I have nothing further to report by this mail, but the more one looks into the question the more it appears that the point is not so much what changes they have made and what their present treatment of the Indians is (though this is important), but what guaranty the Government is furnishing of protection to the Indians. We have already seen what the business developed in the past, and, regardless of what reforms the private corporation may have undergone, one has good reason to fear that without firm and adequate government in the territory the temptation—ever present to men of the only kind that apparently can be got to go out into these unhealthy jungles—may bring about a repetition of the atrocities. Everything may be all right now—this can only be determined by thorough inspection—but the present condition would not constitute a guaranty for the future.

News of the publication of the Casement reports has reached here since my last dispatch, and, so far as I have yet been able to ascertain, it attracted very little attention or interest in Iquitos. I do not believe that local support for measures of reform can be secured to any appreciable extent, unless the fear is aroused that the failure to provide decent and adequate government in the region under discussion may lead to loss of the territory. If this feature were to be made a point by Ecuador and Colombia in pressing their claims it might help.

Granting all the reasons for the failure to accomplish anything so far, they do not redound to the credit of Peru nor constitute any proof of determined effort to better conditions. No real effort has yet been made to make the administration of justice and the protection of the Indians in the region a reality or a possibility. The same old form of organization is maintained, although it has been proved a complete failure and totally inadequate. It is still necessary to travel 1,200 miles from the Putumayo to Iquitos to get a hearing in a court of first instance, and there are only five or six chances a year to make the trip.

It can not be claimed that the district is unproductive of revenue and can not afford a better organization, for a glance at the tables showing the amounts of rubber produced there, and a thought of the heavy Peruvian export duty, will show what a heavy return has come to the Peruvian treasury from this source for years past and is still coming in.

Another factor in the situation worthy of consideration is the feeling, that doubtless is more or less present with the Lima authorities, that they face the possibility of serious political troubles if they try to force unpopular measures, inimical to the rubber business, the sole trade of the Department of Loreto, already poorly treated and having little in common with the rest of Peru.

The Peruvian Amazon Co.'s launch Liberal, I hear, is to go up the Putumayo about the 5th or 6th of August. Nothing further has been heard regarding the next trip of a Government launch to this region. It is probable that the British Consul and myself will go up in the next boat that the Government sends. We hope to secure the services of an interpreter who speaks several of the dialects spoken by the Indians in the Putumayo Basin, and shall endeavor to work out a plan for a bit of land traveling in the region, if it can be arranged at a cost within our allowances. We shall probably be away from Iquitos for from six to eight weeks.

I have, etc.,

American Consular Service, Iquitos, Peru, July 10, 1912.

Mr. Prefect: In view of the fact that public subscriptions are being asked for abroad, to be used in establishing religious missions in the Putumayo region and relieving the condition of the Indians there, I have the honor to inquire:

1. What measures have been and are being taken to bring to punishment those guilty of the atrocities in the Putumayo region?

2. What measures to protect the Indians from further ill treatment have been in force since the disclosure of these atrocities?

3. Whether it is proposed to put into effect any further measures to protect the Indians during the six months or more that must elapse before the plan of administrative and judicial reform to be drawn up by the new commission can be submitted and partial upon.

be submitted and acted upon.

Your excellency will doubtless understand that, in making these inquiries, there is no disposition to offend by referring to a matter concerning the internal affairs of Peru, but will appreciate that mention of the matter is prompted by the desire for information as to existing and past conditions on the part of those charitable members of the Church of Rome abroad who are seeking to aid these unfortunate Indians with the same high ideal of serving humanity that has actuated your Government in the steps they have inaugurated to put an end to the excesses in the Peruvian rubber forests.

I take this opportunity to repeat the assurances of my high consideration and personal esteem.

The American Consul at Iquitos to the Secretary of State.

No. 20.]

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Iquitos, Peru, July 16, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that this afternoon I was waited on by the secretary of the prefecture, who presented me with a photograph which is inclosed, and an unsigned memorandum, a copy of which, with translation, is inclosed as well.

This indicates to me that the prefect, having heard from Lima, and been told to give me all the information that he can, has seized on the opportunity offered by the arrival of a launch from the Putumayo bringing some prisoners (who, by a happy coincidence, are Colombians).

The case particularly mentioned in the memorandum may be taken to indicate activity on the part of the Peruvian military posts up near the border, well beyond the scene of the Peruvian Amazon Co.'s atrocities disclosed hitherto; in other words, the discovery of fresh atrocities in a new field of action.

The secretary stated that information against this gang was lodged with Lieut. Col. Castro by an Indian woman; that he sent out Capt. Alvarez and three soldiers disguised as caucheros (rubber hunters) to find and arrest them; that in revenge the woman was starved to death by Ordonez and his accomplices. The Yubineto or Jueveneto, near which this crime occurred, is an affluent of the Putumayo, joining the latter just beyond the extreme limit of the Peruvian Amazon Co.'s sphere of action. The actual scene of the crime is stated to be two days' journey from the River Yubineto.

Finding the secretary disposed to talk on the subject, I learned from him that while the headquarters of the comisario of the Putumayo are at La Chorrera, he is supposed to travel continuously throughout his district. He confirmed my understanding that there are only two officials representing the civil government in the whole region; but, according to his statement, the garrisons are more numerous than I had believed. He stated that in the whole Putumayo Basin there are 10 garrisons which were primarily stationed in the district to guard the frontier, but which have recently been instructed also to hunt out and prevent crimes against the Indians. The locations of these garrisons he stated to be as follows, adding that they were not in any way regarded as military secrets:

In the Peruvian-Amazon Co.'s sphere: Chorrera, Encanto, Union, and Puerto Militario Peruano.

On Brazilian boundary: Tarapaca.

On Colombian border: Pto. Delicias and Pto. de los Monos.

Interior but not in Peruvian-Amazon Territory: Molino and mouth

Rio Jueveneto (2).

The department can locate these points if desired on the map which accompanied Sir Roger Casement's confidential report. The secretary could give me no definite idea of the number of troops represented by the garrisons listed, but stated that they are all under the command of Lieut. Col. Castro, one of the best officers of the Peruvian army and who was educated at St. Cyr in France. This gentleman has been well spoken of in Iquitos as an intelligent and active officer, as has also Capt. Alvarez, who made the capture.

In considering the case mentioned in the memorandum, one should not lose sight of the fact that it is entirely separate and apart from the Peruvian-Amazon Co. and the district which has hitherto been under discussion and was dealt with in the Casement reports, and constitutes evidence of maltreatment of the Indians more widespread than has hitherto been admitted. If desired, it would be comparatively easy to make these border Colombians the scapegoat for the Peruvian-Amazon criminals, and in their cases the local government would not be so much troubled by expensive appeals to the supreme court at Lima.

The great emphasis laid on the fact that the persons arrested were Colombians leads me to believe it possible that Sir Roger Casement's remarks regarding the better government given the region by Colombia may be known in Lima, particularly as the secretary plainly endeavored in the conversation to make me believe that the Colombians had never treated the Indians well and were really responsible for the outrages that had attracted so much attention. There may be, too, some idea that the United States contemplates interfering in the Colombian-Peruvian-Ecuadorian boundary question.

This information reached me only a few hours before the mail closed. The secretary stated that he was also to call on the British Consul to present a copy of the memorandum and a photograph.

Memorandum of the Prefecture.

After the fiscal (prosecuting attorney) of the Supreme Court of Justice of Peru, Dr. Salvador Cavero, denounced the crimes committed in the Putumayo region, the Peruvian Government sent out a judge of the first instance and numerous detachments of troops with the object of pursuing and capturing the criminals and preventing the commission of further crimes.

The result obtained is eminently satisfactory when one takes into account that the theater of the crimes is an impenetrable forest of many thousands of square leagues. Notwithstanding, success has been attained in capturing a good part of the assassins and it has been brought about that in the region of the Peruvian Putumayo order reigns and the law is supreme.

Unfortunately, however, on the Peruvian Putumayo live many hundreds of Colombians, some of whom have escaped from prison and others of whom have been deported by the Colombian Government, and these in the majority of cases have been the authors of dreadful crimes, committed with impunity, crimes which unfortunately have been laid at the door of the Peruvian Amazon Co., because they constitute the sole industrial enterprise at work in such distant and solitary places.

To show how the Government of Peru prosecutes crime, we cite the example of the Peruvian garrison of the Rio Yubineto, which, having received information that the Colombians, Antonino Ordonez, Sebastian Gonzales, Cornelio Josa, Carlos M. Lopez, Miguel Cucalon, Pedro Guevara, and Dionisio Pasaje, were evildoers and assassins and abductors of natives whom they sold in Brazil as they would mere bagatelles, organized a posse to capture these persons. After two days of hardship, this expedition came across a rancho in the midst of the forest where these seven individuals lived, and found them at that moment consummating one of their sinister crimes. They were watching the agonies of an Indian woman condemned to die of starvation.

From the photograph herewith, taken by this very expedition, may be seen how great the cruelty was. The seven individuals have been captured and sent to Iquitos to jail, at the disposition of the judge of criminal court. The band of evildoers was composed of eight, but one of them, Jesus Lopez, fled and could not be captured.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Iquitos, July 31, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith duplicates of my dispatches No. 19 of the 15th instant and 20 of the 16th relative to the Putumayo question.

Although I am unable to point out at present anything specific, still my impression is now that the Government is no more anxious to have us make a trip to the Putumayo or to see personally the conditions existing there than the company is, so that we should probably gain no more information from a trip on one of the Government launches than from that of the company. Finding that the future dispatch of Government launches to the Putumayo is very indefinite, and learning that the company expected to make two dispatches of their launch Liberal, at intervals that will enable us to do some traveling in the interior, away from the rivers, if we can figure out our allowances to cover the expense, my British colleague and myself decided to go up to Chorrera on the Liberal about August 5, travel to what interior points we can, and return from El Encanto. Accordingly we made arrangements with the company for this on July 20. The trip will keep me away from Iquitos from August 5 or a day or two after until about September 25 or later. It should also be borne in mind that one always runs the risk of stranding in this river, where there is practically no traffic at all, and it is possible to be tied up in this way for four or five weeks.

In making our arrangements with the company, we insisted on paying our passage and stated that we also wished to pay for anything that we might find it necessary to buy up the river, although they offered us free passage and all we might need.

The local situation remains much the same as it was two weeks ago, so far as the Iquitos public in general is concerned. The tone of the articles that have been appearing in the public press has produced, however, a feeling of irritation and resentment at what they privately characterize as meddling on the part of the United States and England among the Government officials here, but to both Consul Michell and myself they have continued studiously courteous. The officials are undoubtedly becoming nervous in regard to the situation.

My British colleague and I called on the acting prefect and applied for some document in the nature of a passport, to be addressed to the local authorities, and this he said he would be glad to give us. He also suggested sending a military aide to accompany us, and though we were by no means enthusiastic over this proposition I fear that we may not be able to avoid it.

He also took occasion to repeat the remarks detailed in my dispatch No. 19 of July 15, minimizing the Putumayo question altogether, and added that efforts to secure the extradition from Argentina of Normand (one of the accused criminals) were being made and bade fair to be successful. He complained that Sir Roger Casement had taken away all the worst criminals, and also that he had taken away with him two native boys, whom he later returned to Iquitos and left here without homes or support.

1263PERU.

When I have been asked, and a reply seemed necessary or politic, I have stated that I have neither desire nor instructions to interfere in any way whatsoever with the administration of justice or the internal affairs of Peru, but that in the course of duty it falls to me as a consul to keep my Government informed as to labor as well as other commercial conditions in the district in which I may be stationed, no matter what part of the world, and that I shall report on these in the Putumayo as well as in the other rivers of the district; and that as public subscriptions are being collected abroad by persons with the same high ideal of serving humanity that has actuated the Peruvian Government in the steps it has inaugurated to put an end to excesses in the Putumayo region, for the announced purpose of sending missionaries to that region, information is desired as to the condition that American citizens coming on this mission may meet with and the conditions under which the money will be expended.

My British colleague has based his action in the matter on four

1. The responsibility of an English company, still in existence though in process of liquidation, for the atrocities in the past and their share in the responsibility for conditions in the present.

 The presence in the region of British subjects.
 The collection in Great Britain of subscriptions with the object of sending missionaries to the region.

4. The general idea of serving humanity by reporting to his Government the true conditions, to be published if they see fit.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, Iguitos, Peru, August 6, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter just received from the acting prefect of Loreto in reply to the letter I addressed to him on the 10th of July, together with a translation, a copy of my reply, and a translation of it.

As I asked for no information that would not form a necessary part of that at the command of the prefecture if they are at all responsible for the government of the region in question, it is hard to see why they should state that it is beyond their sphere of action and go to authorities as far removed from the Putumayo (in point of fact) as Europe is to apply for information. If anything has been done, it seems most extraordinary that the departmental authorities should not know of it. It is hard to conceive of any reason for their wishing to conceal any reforms already accomplished.

If it is really considerations of time and distance that prompt the Lima Government in the course they outline, it is hard to see why they should wait until especially asked for the information by the Minister. They know that it would be at least October before any advices could reach him from me, and there is nothing to prevent their saying to the Minister, "Your consul at Iquitos has asked for certain information on behalf of inquirers from the United States, but on account of time and distance from Iquitos we prefer to give the information to you for transmission to your Government."

In fine, the letter is really an admission that the responsible government of the Department of Loreto can not point out anything that has been done to better conditions, and a warning that any attempt to get at facts on the ground will not meet with their assistance or cooperation, as well as an effort to hold off any inquiry until the matter blows over, or until they have at least had time to start something in the Putumayo. It is a good example of the shifting equivocation that meets one throughout in the attitude of the local authorities.

The Acting Prefect of Loreto to the American Consul at Iquitos.

IQUITOS, August 5, 1912.

The Consul of the United States of America:

I was glad to receive your note of the 10th of last month, in which you asked me for some information relative to the Putumayo region. As the greater part of the information requested by you relates to measures and acts that are not within the province of this prefecture, I asked my Government to furnish me information in regard to what you wished to know. My Government charges me to inform you that they will have the greatest pleasure in submitting to the Government of the United States the information desired with regard to the Putumayo region, but that they consider it more convenient, on account of considerations as to time and distance, to furnish this direct to the American Legation in Lima, which already has knowledge of the affair, whenever the Legation asks for it, etc.

The American Consul at Iquitos to the Secretary of State.

No. 33.7

American Consulate, Iquitos, October 28, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I left Iquitos on August 7, 1912, by launch, for the Putumayo region, and reached here again in return late on October 6. Total absence of facilities prevented my communicating with the Department in the meantime.

There is evidence that the company has mended its ways to some extent, at least for the present, but it is plain that, up to date, the Government has done nothing at all on the ground.

As previously reported to the Department, my British colleague and I desired to go up to the Putumayo quietly, and in such a way as to be independent of the company if possible. After we had waited over two months for the dispatch of a Government launch to the region (as stated in my No. 25 of July 31) we finally gave that idea up and decided to take the company's launch. We took care, however, to say nothing about it until the very last minute, and then we made it plainly understood that we would accept no favors whatever, and would insist on paying for everything that we got.

To be as independent as possible, we provided ourselves with tents and rations, and took with us our own cook, a colored Barbadian. We also took, as interpreter, John Brown, a native of Montserrat, a British subject, thoroughly familiar with the Huitoto language, who had spent some years in the Putumayo region at the time when the atrocities were at their height. He is the man whom Sir Roger Casement brought down from the West Indies to act as his interpreter, and he gave testimony before the prefect at Iquitos in the matter, as stated in the Casement report.

The acting prefect failed to provide us with the letter to the local authorities, which we had asked for, and which he had promised us; but on the evening before departure I received from him a letter, a copy of which, with translation, is inclosed, to the effect that Carlos Rey de Castro, the Peruvian Consul General at Manaos, would join the Peruvian Amazon Co.'s launch Liberal at the mouth of the Putumayo, and that he was going up "on a journey of investigation, with the object of ascertaining the fulfillment of the measures taken there, and to see how the instructions issued to the authorities of that zone were being carried out." Although Señor Rey de Castro is a high official of the Peruvian Government, I do not consider the selection of a man of his reputation, for the duty of accompanying us, by any means a compliment to myself or to the United States Government. His reputation is well known and a matter of common talk in Iquitos. It is epitomized in Sir Roger Casement's report of November 24, 1911, on page 3, where he states that Señor Rey de Castro, on the occasion of his previous investigation of affairs in the Putumayo, was bought by Señor Arana for the Peruvian Amazon Co., the proof of which was seen by Sir Roger Casement in the company's books at Manaos. I am inclined to believe that the prefect's reticence as to the exact nature of his mission was largely due to the fear that we might withdraw from the trip altogether were we advised of the real facts before our departure. Indeed, I did think seriously of so doing, but decided to continue in view of the arrangements already made at considerable expense and the doubt as to facilities for going up at a future date.

The launch Liberal, with the British Consul and myself on board, was met in the River Amazon, not far from the mouth of the Putu-mayo, by the English mail steamer Napo, bound for Iquitos, and Señor Arana, of the Peruvian Amazon Co., with his party, joined us. This party consisted of Julio C. Arana, the liquidator of the Peruvian Amazon Co., his secretary and brother-in-law, Marcial Zumaeta, a photographer, an agronomist, a bookkeeper, a Huitota named Julia (the mistress of the criminal O'Donnell), and Señor Rey de Castro and his servant. All of these proceeded to La Chorrera with us in the Liberal.

On August 16, the night before we arrived at La Chorrera, Señor Rey de Castro showed my British colleague and myself copies of extracts from two telegrams and a copy of a letter from the acting prefect of the Department of Loreto, which, he stated, constituted his instructions. Copies of these, with translations, are inclosed. He said that he would take entire charge of the trip and make all the arrangements. This was the first mention that he made of the nature of his mission.

I thanked Señor Rey de Castro for his courtesy, but declined his assistance, stating that, from the advices I had received from the acting prefect at Iquitos, I understood his mission to be an investigation as to the conduct of their business by the local authorities, and hence not the same as mine, which was to report on commercial and labor conditions, those under which money being publicly collected for missionary purposes might be spent, and the conditions to be met with by any American citizens who might elect to go there as missionaries. I also stated that it was beyond my province to sign formal acts with him regarding the internal affairs of Peru without explicit instructions from my Government. I added that I expected and desired to travel quietly and independently, to see the people in their home life; that I had complete equipment for so doing, and that neither assistance nor escort were necessary.

When asked if I did not form one member of a joint commission with the British Consul to investigate crimes committed in the Putumayo, I stated that I did not; that I might and might not travel in the interior with Mr. Michell; that I was not informed whether he had instructions to investigate possible criminal acts on the part of the British company operating there.

When asked if I would give him a copy of my report, I stated that I could not do so, but that the Peruvian Legation at Washington might, if they wished, apply to the Government for it.

The letter of the acting prefect which he showed us is an interesting commentary on the lack of good faith that has characterized the local authorities in their dealings throughout. The Department will recall that I wrote and asked the acting prefect for certain information regarding the Putumayo, as reported in my dispatch No. 29 of August 6, and in previous dispatches. In his reply, which accompanied the dispatch just cited, he stated that the information desired was beyond the province of his office; but his letter to Señor Rey de Castro, although it bears a date anterior to the one he addressed to me, conveys exactly the information asked for by me.

On our arrival at La Chorrera, Mr. Michell and I politely, but firmly, declined to stay in the company's house. This position was fully understood by the company manager and taken without offense. For what meals we had on board the launch after arrival and at the company house, when unavoidable on account of the delay in unloading our food supplies, we paid and hold receipts.

In addition to several others, I visited all the posts referred to in the Casement reports as having been the scene of outrages except Matanzas and Abisinia. The former has been abandoned, and to visit the latter would have meant spending two months more in the region at an expense to the Government that I did not consider would be justified by results.

The British Consul also visited Oriente and Sur, in the La Chorrera section of the company's property, and Argelia, in the El Encanto section. At the first named there were at the time no Indians to be seen. Indians from the second were our carriers to La Sombra. Both are small posts near to La Chorrera. I could not see that the additional expense would be justified by any possible results, as I could get all information from Mr. Michell and the Indians themselves. It also seemed to me a tactful policy to omit a few of the places so as not to appear too completely identified with the British Government measures, and I chose these, as the least important, to be omitted. As to Argelia, I felt that my time could be spent to better advantage in El Encanto.

Throughout the trip we were so carefully watched and hedged about that if there was anything to hide we could not possibly have seen it. In fact, as stated in my dispatch No. 13, of July 1, anyone traveling through here is of necessity entirely dependent on the company. None but their men know the roads, there is no food but what they have, there are no facilities for water transportation but what they own, carriers can only be obtained through them, and all the time one is traveling on their private property.

The Peruvian Consul General and his suite were far from being of any assistance to us. At the very start, on his request, the departure was postponed five days, as he said he wished to see that certain prisoners were really sent back on the Liberal. When we suggested going on ahead by land it was not possible to secure the necessary carriers. On the trip he succeeded in delaying us in one way and another, apparently on purpose, to such an extent that the river trip, where, for lack of facilities, we had no choice but to go all together, was extended from the proposed three days to a week. He insisted on stopping at unimportant places, where he apparently did nothing but take meaningless photographs of Indians.

He continually attempted to take the direction of the whole thing into his hands and ordered the company's men about to suit his convenience, apparently with the intention of conveying the impression that this was an inspection tour under his sole direction.

We particularly did not wish to be identified with this party that insisted on accompanying us, and, though always courteous, we took care to emphasize our independence by living separately, except on the launch, where it was not possible, but where we paid for what we had. We also paid our own carriers separately in every instance.

I am sure that it was not Mr. Tizon's intention to delay or interfere with us on the trip, as his personal man in charge of the launch arrangements chafed at and complained of the delays, had not provided sufficient food for so much time in transit, and told me that Mr. Tizon had told him to press on as quickly as possible, that we might have the opportunity of seeing as much as possible in the time at our disposal. It was quite clear that the direction of affairs was taken out of Mr. Tizon's hands by Messrs. Arana and Rey de Castro. Difficulties as to securing carriers at La Chorrera, where Mr. Tizon had immediate charge, did not arise until after Messrs. Arana and Rey de Castro had stepped in and were not suggested before.

It was quite evident throughout the trip that not only ourselves, but even our interpreter were the subjects of a close espionage. It was not possible to go anywhere among the natives without being followed by employees of the company. Whenever we tried to talk privately to the Indians an employee of the company familiar with the Huitoto language always approached, with the result that the Indians invariably ceased to be communicative.

At Emeraes, on August 27, Mr. Michell and I, accompanied by our interpreter, had engaged in conversation in the Indian house with a number of Indians of more than average intelligence. They were talking quite freely, when suddenly the spokesman, a chief, turned off the conversation, saying, with indifference: "Yes; we are quite contented. We are well paid and the white men are very good to us." The change was so striking that we looked around and saw there the cook of the Arana party, who must have left his work to listen to our conversation. He immediately pushed forward and volubly assumed the office of interpreter, plainly putting his own words into the mouths of the Indians. We dropped the subject and the cook left, but no sooner did we again start a conversation with other natives than a station hand ran over to the house where the Arana party were and brought the cook back, again to interfere in a similar manner. Immediately afterwards Julio Arana appeared and we were unable to continue. This cook told our servants that he was acting under instructions to hear and repeat everything that we said to Messrs. Arana and Rey de Castro. This same sort of thing was repeated in the other posts, and the fear among the Indians of speaking frankly or of making any complaints was marked. In a letter which he addressed to me on my return to Iquitos, Señor Rey de Castro states that he considered this sort of surveillance a part of

We only managed to get in three days without this constant surveillance by altering our arrangements at Ultimo Retiro suddenly in the middle of the night, arranging independently with the section chief, an Englishman, who had incautiously said that there would be no trouble to get carriers, before the Peruvian Amazon party or Señor Rey de Castro had had the opportunity of warning him against extending any facilities to us. Even then two so-called guides, for whom we had not asked, were sent along to keep an eye on us.

Except on the trip from Ultimo Retiro to Entre Rios, it was not possible for us to see the Indians in their native homes, for, when we were coming they were all called into the section center by the signal drums, given a dance, provided with food, and evidently enjoyed themselves hugely. Interesting as this was, it conveyed no idea of the real situation nor of the relations between the Indians and the company. All it went to show was that such lavish treatment on the part of the company is distinctly unusual, though pleasing to the Indians. Though these displays were stated to be for our benefit, we were carefully prevented on all such occasions from having any independent conversation with the Indians.

I have discussed thus in detail the treatment that we received for two reasons. It throws an interesting light on the protestations of the company and of the local government that they have nothing to hide and no fear of unprejudiced publicity; and it also goes to show one phase of the problem that confronts Peru in attempting to do something toward the government of the region. A Government officer, to become conversant with the local situation in the Putumayo, must be prepared to stay in the district a year or more, well and independently provisioned and equipped, and having back of him ample authority from the Peruvian Government. Such a man would have to be absolutely honest and well paid (to remove the possibility of temptation). He must also be prepared and unafraid to risk his life in many ways while he is there. Men of this kind are hard to find.

Throughout the trip, both my British colleague and myself were careful to avoid even the appearance of interfering in the internal affairs of Peru. My position was as stated to the Peruvian consul general, and detailed above, and Mr. Michell based his action on the following grounds:

1. The responsibility of an English company, still in existence, though in process of liquidation, for the atrocities of the past and their share in the responsibility for conditions in the present.

2. The presence in the region of British subjects.

3. The collection in Great Britain of subscriptions with the object of sending missionaries to the region.

4. The general idea of serving humanity by reporting to his Government the true conditions, to be published if they see fit.

As to the Indians themselves, whatever they may have been in past generations, I am satisfied that they are not now, and were not at the time when the atrocities took place, wild, untamable, cannibal savages, but mild, docile, inoffensive, and childlike, just as they are reported to have been by Robuchon the explorer, by Consul Eberhardt, and by Sir Roger Casement. It is practically impossible to estimate the total number to be found in the Putumayo region. A personal visit to every Indian house would be necessary to this end.

These natives can not count over 20, and many not over 10. They have no idea of time or of dates other than that some can count moons and a few recognize the equinoctial changes. They have no idea of their own ages.

As to conducting business, they simply know that if they bring in rubber they get guns, hammocks, and other things from the white man. They could not possibly calculate quantities or debts, nor would they realize what peonage means.

I doubt whether they know the difference between proper treatment at the hands of the whites and maltreatment, for the simple reason that the first idea of the white man they had was bad usage. In case of any trouble they would not be likely to appeal to the authorities. They would not understand how, and they have no conception of government. The only way to protect them is to watch over them and their interests.

The natural supply of food for these Indians comes from their chacaras or farms, and consists of cassava and yucca and some maize, sugar cane, and plantains. There is very little game in the forest, but they get an occasional monkey or bird. The soil is so poor, despite the luxuriousness of the forest, that they are obliged to move these chacaras every two or three years to get crops. They clear a new place in the forest, let the fallen timber dry, burn it over, and then plant between the stumps. It is plain to see that if prevented in any way from working their farms, the Indians must of necessity starve. They state, and so do the employees of the company, that in former times they were so pushed by the company for rubber that their chacaras were neglected and they often found themselves at the point of starvation.

All of the Indians that we saw looked well fed and vigorous. The photographs which accompany the present dispatch, and which were taken by the writer, will give an idea of what they are like. Our interpreter, who was in the district at the time the atrocities were being practiced, says that there is no great difference between their appearance then and now. They are a small people and not over strong physically. We saw a considerable number in the various posts who bore the scars of old floggings.

The Indians all knew who Arana was. They called him "Captain of the Peruvians" and evidently stood in great awe of him. He is much more to them than the whole Peruvian Government.

Mr. Tizon, the manager at La Chorrera, states that on the books of his sections there are at the present time about 2,600 working Indians. He admits that it was all forced labor in the beginning, but believes that it is now retained by the growth among the Indians of the desire for European articles, guns, hammocks, etc. He states that all goods are furnished on the advance system. While he deprecated peonage, he said he did not see any way out of the system of advances at the present time. He says that if more Indians were needed in addition to those already working rubber, he has the hope that the desire for goods would bring them to work, but he was inclined to touch rather lightly on this phase of the question.

As to the Peruvian Government, it is plain that they apparently leave the whole zone to the company to do as they please, the occurrences of the past notwithstanding. I saw nothing whatever to support their repeated protestations as to the measures they were taking to improve conditions.

In fact, the total absence of any attempt at government up to the present time was freely admitted to both the British Consul and myself by Señor Rey de Castro. There was no other position he could take, when once he was on the ground.

Señor Rey de Castro stated that Peru was not in a position to take any action in the Putumayo region prior to 1910, on account of her modus vivendi with Colombia, by virtue of which Peru was to have jurisdiction of the Napo, Colombia of the Caquetá, and the Putumayo was to be a region alias where neither party was to attempt jurisdiction. If any such arrangement was entered into by Peru in 1908, when this agreement was stated to me by Señor Rey de Castro to have been entered into, it is a sad commentary on the position of both of these nations toward the exploitation of the Indians by ruthless and unprincipled rubber gatherers, for the horrors of the Putumayo were then, and had been for some time, a matter of common knowledge, and the character of the white inhabitants of the region was no secret to either Colombia or Peru.

Señor Rey de Castro also stated that no action had been taken by Peru against the criminals at an earlier date, because it could be proved that the crimes were committed almost exclusively by early Colombian settlers, and to admit this would support the claim of effective occupation set up by Colombia. This, however, does not excuse the supineness of the Peruvian Government after the establishment in the district of the Arana House, a Peruvian enterprise, which by 1906 controlled the region entirely.

Up to the time we arrived in the Putumayo, the sole representative of the Government for the entire region was the comisario, Señor Buenaño, at La Chorrera, and a justice of the peace, Señor Torrico, the latter an employee of the company and with jurisdiction limited to civil suits and those of the most minor importance. This is what the prefect informed me and what I found to be a fact.

The prefect also informed me that the comisario was actively engaged in traveling throughout the region, continuously inspecting the country under his charge. At every post I visited I inquired how often Comisario Buenaño had visited there in the course of his year in office. At some of the posts he was not even known by name. One section chief was surprised to learn of his existence. All were surprised at the idea that a Government official might visit their posts. It developed, as a result of these inquiries, that Señor Buenaño did some traveling, but only to sections about which little or no question had been raised. He visited Oriente, Sur, Sabana, and Santa Catalina. He also visited El Encanto four times, where he traveled to two or three of the subsections. At Sur he spent nine months, living with the section chief, an old school friend of his.

The strength of the Government's hand and the extent of their control is indicated by the fact that Consul General Señor Rey de Castro found it necessary, in order to secure information in regard to his mission, to rely entirely on the company.

The fact is that this vast territory was handed over by the Peruvian Government to a private business enterprise, at first Peruvian and later British, while the Government made no effort to exercise sovereign rights or establish law and order therein. The sole officials—two in number—were Government officials in name only, being employees of the company. It is only now, after repeated exposure of the maltreatment of the natives, extending over a period of some eight or nine years, that the Government has even made a pretense of doing anything.

The pressure brought to bear in Lima has evidently borne some fruit, in that just before my British colleague and I left Iquitos, and apparently only after we had announced our intention of making the trip, the organization of a force of constabulary for the region was hastily undertaken. As men could not be secured in the day or two available, 25 of the soldiers stationed at Iquitos were drafted for the service. These men were selected on the day that we left and sent up on the launch Liberal with us. They were ill equipped and the facilities necessary for their efficiency were totally lacking. They have had no training in their new duties and even the manner of utilizing them is still in doubt. Reenforcements, consisting of three boys of from 16 to 18 years of age, reached Chorrera by the second voyage of the Liberal. Twenty-five more men have been sent up with a military expedition by the launch Adolfo in the last few days, but there seems to be some question whether they are to be used as troops or as gendarmes.

The company feels that the establishment of constabulary forces through the district will interfere with their business, scaring the Indians, whom it will take a long time to teach that these gendarmes are their friends. This is doubtless true.

Another argument advanced by Señor Rey de Castro to account for the failure of the Peruvian Government to establish any form of administration in the region, was that the whole district (it is about the size of the State of Maryland) is private property, on which, according to law, Government forces may not enter except at the request of the owners. This would not account for the presence of Peruvian troops and it is absurd to deny the police power of the state under the existing circumstances. A slightly different view is taken here at the prefecture. The secretary states that as the company's title to the property is not complete the forces of the Governmen may enter at will, and adds that it is proposed to make this a condition of the final confirmation of the proposed grant.

Throughout the region, up to the present time, the administration of any justice that has been administered has been in the hands of the company's section chiefs. Several of these admitted frankly that they put in the stocks both Indian and white employees for minor offenses and to maintain order, and, indeed, it is hard to see what other course was open to them under the circumstances. Señor Loayza, at El Encanto, says that he has encouraged the Indians to come to him with their disputes and troubles, for the reason that the sole method of treating these known to the native is so cruel and drastic. The only penalty they know is death and they have been known to impose this for the theft of no more than a few bananas.

In the statements made by the Peruvian Government officials regarding the region there is a great tendency to confuse the military forces there with civil administration. Although Senor Rey de Castro insisted that the troops were instructed to assist in the administration of government in the region, the officer in command on the ground and the officer in command in Iquitos assured me that the military had nothing to do with civil matters, their sole business being to guard the frontier.

Señor Rey de Castro stated to me that when the present commandant of the Putumayo region came there to take over command he found the troops working rubber for the company, and was obliged on this account to alter the arrangement of the posts—an important comment on their value in protecting the Indians. At the present time they are all posted well away from the company's workings, in small detachments of 15 to 25 men each, at points on the borders I do not believe that there are more than 125 in the whole region.

A great deal was said in the region about slave trading raids along the borders made by Colombian freebooters and there is little doubt that such take place. I could not see, however, that much had been done by the Government to protect the Indians against these.

As to the prosecutions for the crimes of the past it will be recalled that, although their existence had been a matter of common knowledge for years, nothing was done until Sir Roger Casement brought them officially to the notice of the prefect in November, 1910, representing them as having been committed by the agents of a British company operating in the zone. It was shortly after this that the Paredes judicial commission went up, resulting in the indictment of over 200 persons. Of these, some 75 of the more insignificent were captured and are still in jail at Iquitos. Most of the principal ones were allowed to escape. In all the time since the authorities have been in possession of the facts presented by their own commissioner no punishments have been imposed and the cases have been allowed merely to drag along. It was stated to me by the prefect and the acting prefect that this was largely due to the fact that the indictments of Dr. Paredes were faulty; but, apparently, no effort had been made to perfect them or to strengthen the Government's case and, in the meantime, the difficulty of securing reliable witnesses is increasing. In fact, it is quite possible that the indictments were purposely drawn in such a way as to make prosecutions difficult, if all that is said of them by the acting prefect be true. In view of this it is hard to see why the Government should have again chosen this gentleman to assist in the task of drawing up a plan of government for the Putumayo.

I can not see now, after visiting the region, any more than I could when writing my dispatch No. 19 of July 15, what can be accomplished by the roving commission of Dr. Paredes or by a commission sitting in Iquitos (none of whom I believe have ever visited the region in question) toward assisting in a plan of administration. Dr. Paredes has not gone up and it is stated by his friends that he does not intend to go. So far as I have been able to ascertain the commission has not yet had a sitting.

The fact is that no change was made in the district until the gendarmes were hurriedly sent up with us and a new comisario appointed. The proposals now put forward by the Government are the very minimum for the insurance of order and protection to the Indians. They depend for the least degree of success on the active, costly, and sustained efforts of the Government themselves, now suffering serious financial embarrassment, and on the loyal and self-denying cooperation of a bankrupt trading company exposed to the temptation of working out the last pound of rubber while the price will still enable them to sell at a profit.

The plea of distance and difficulties of communication advanced by the Peruvians is an admission, in reality, that the region lies without their natural sphere of administration, an acknowledgment that Colombia would promptly meet by undertaking to administer this territory, to which she has never relinquished her claim.

As to public opinion, it stands just where it did when I first got here, as outlined in my previous dispatches. Considerable resentment has been aroused by the agitation that has taken place abroad, but it is fear for the political sovereignty of Peru in the region that has been aroused rather than solicitude for the welfare of the Indians.

As for the company, I believe that, having followed the policy of forcing everything out of the native labor that they could, they are now resting on their oars until the Indian population can recuperate and the rubber sources replenish themselves; but, believing (as a result of the way in which the Government has handled the pending prosecution) that they would be immune from interference, they would not hesitate a moment to repeat the past were it necessary to make a big showing preparatory to unloading the property. In fact, it is hardly good policy for those in control to force the property while the company is in liquidation, but, rather, it is advisable to conserve the resources until after the settlement of the receivership.

It was about 1898 that the Colombians began working in the region to any considerable extent. Since 1906, as the Department will recall, it has been controlled by the Arana house and their successors, the Peruvian Amazon Co. The company operating there now is still the British company, but in liquidation, with three bodies of creditors, the Peruvian, Brazilian, and European. The Peruvian creditors demanded the appointment of Julio C. Arana as liquidator, in lieu of which they threatened to close everything up, and the Brazilian and European creditors could do nothing but agree. Señor Arana states that the European claims have now been largely settled and that there is only a small European interest now in the liquidation. He says that he has from three to five years to com-

The property, for administration purposes, is divided into two parts, the La Chorrera section and the El Encanto section. The management of each of these is independent of the other, the heads reporting to the main office in Iquitos. The La Chorrera section is the larger and more important and was the scene of the atrocities described in the Casement reports. The El Encanto section includes the territory which was first worked by the early Colombian rubber

The administrative staff for the La Chorrera part of the property consists of a chief manager at La Chorrera and 85 white employees, located in 10 posts and La Chorrera itself. The section is divided into subsections, at the head of each of which is a section chief. present chief manager, Señor Juan A. Tizon, states that he feels he has removed all incentive to the abuse of the Indians by abolishing payment to white employees on a commission basis, depending on the amount of rubber produced in their respective sections. that he stopped this practice on taking charge in January, 1911, and that no commissions have been paid since. He says that the section chiefs have no knowledge of the accounts for their sections and do not know whether they are showing a profit or not; that five of them receive £25 per month and five £30, all being fully found. He states that only one of the old chiefs of section, Señor Seminario, is left, all the others having been discharged.

The El Encanto portion of the concession is stated by the section manager, Scnor Miguel A. Loayza, to have a staff of 55 white employees. He says that he also abolished payment by commissions in January, 1911, though he claims that no bad results had come of it under his previous administration of the section. He has been chief manager at El Encanto for six years. He says that all his subchiefs date back to 1908; that he had gradually discharged the previous chiefs, as he could, in 1906 and 1907 on account of their ill treatment of the Indian population. There are nine subsections in this part of the property. Señor Tizon, at La Chorrera, I believe to be sincere and honest and trying to do the best he can. His ideas are good, and if allowed to work them out he should in time accomplish much for the good of the Indians. I am inclined to believe, however, that his authority at present is limited and that he will only be allowed a free hand with his reforms so long as they suit the business purposes of those in control of the company. If the company were recapitalized and the necessity for paying dividends on a heavy stock issue were to arise he would likely go.

He has a difficult task and realizes it. The situation in the La Chorrera section is such that the chief manager at La Chorrera might easily and without blame to himself be unaware of maltreatment of the Indians at the outposts.

He offered to show me his books, but I stated that I did not care to see them, being neither a Peruvian nor a British official, but that if my Peruvian and British colleagues examined them I should be glad to be present. This examination took place. The books apparently showed no commissions; but it would be easy, if the company were paying them, to credit salary only at La Chorrera and commissions on the main books at Iquitos, thus deceiving both Mr. Tizon and anyone who might base his opinion on the La Chorrera It is a little hard to believe how some of the section chiefs are induced to undertake the work for the same salary that is paid an ordinary clerk at Iquitos, unless it is with the hope of opportunities for substantial gain in the future.

While the two chief managers are men above the average, those in charge of the subsections (with a few exceptions) are very ordinary and, I believe, entirely capable of repeating the atrocities of the past if instructed to or offered inducements, such as commissions on rubber produced. In other words, the machinery is all there; and there is danger that the temptation to make a big showing preparatory to seeking new capital might bring about a return to old conditions. The sole value of the property lies in the labor. The product is inferior and, I believe, worked out to a considerable extent, and the only possible way to make a showing is to push the Indians.

Not much can be said for the morality of the white employees. Now, as when Sir Roger Casement was there, all the whites live with native women without the formality of marriage, and change these consorts at will.

The atrocities of the past were everywhere admitted throughout the regions, and there can be no question of the substantial truth of the Casement reports. Only one attempt at palliation was made to me during the whole trip.

As previously stated, payment for the labor of the Indians is all on the advance system, with the exception of a single tribe in the El Encanto section. The company states that the manner of utilizing and directing the work of the Indians is as follows: The neighborhood of an Indian house is divided into three parts, two near the house and a third fairly well removed, which are assigned to the tribe inhabiting the house. These three parcels of land are worked in rotation, three months being devoted to each. After sojourning in the two nearer sections for three months each, living in tambos or temporary shelters that they build for the purpose, the tribe is allowed to return to their house and work chacaras or plantations for three months, and then proceeds to the far section again to work rubber. It was stated that no effort is made to keep the natives at work in the division allotted to a special time, but only to hinder them from working in those lying fallow. Each one of these working periods is referred to as a "fabrica." In part of the property the year is divided into three instead of four periods, but the system is essentially the same. In some sections the time allowed to the natives to work their plantations is divided into periods of one month each at the end of their rubber-working periods. It will thus be seen that the time and place of his labor are determined for him by the company and he is not altogether free in any case.

It is not trade and can not properly be so called. The Indians, who can not count over 10 or 20 and can give no intelligent idea of quantity, are hardly capable of understanding trading on a system of advances. Say what you will, it is nothing more nor less than forced labor, whether it is secured and kept by the rifle or by a system of peonage based on advances of merchandise.

From their action while we were in the zone, it was apparent that the company either had something to hide or feared that we might confuse the Indians' statements of the past with the present. I can see no other plausible reason for their having us, and particularly our interpreter, watched so carefully.

I believe that the Indians only work rubber in the fear of what might be done to them, based on the experiences of the not far-distant past. I am inclined to believe that "commissions" are still undertaken to get the Indians to work, though it was stated that no pressure is brought to bear on them. At present threats and reminders of the past would still be sufficiently effective to bring them in, but Comisario Lores indicated to me that he did not have full confidence in the measures adopted by the expeditions sent out, and intended as soon as his force was trained and organized to send a gendarme out with each such "comision."

Another thing that is hard to believe is that valuable merchandise is handed out to these Indians, whose thieving propensities are very evident, without any security, and that nothing whatever is done if they fail to bring in rubber to cover.

There were cepos [stocks] in plain view at Oriente, Sur, El Encanto, and Argelia, and they were stated to be used. We heard of some flogging, too, but it was said by our informants to be limited to punishments of the Indians attached to the stations and not extended to those engaged in working rubber. Fears based on the past may account for the payment by Indians against advances to some extent, as may also the desire for more of the articles of barter; but I am inclined to believe that these are necessarily reenforced by some additional pressure, though I do not think that the company at present is engaging in the destructive methods of the past or doing worse than administering an occasional flogging.

The road between Ultimo Retiro, Muinanes, and Entre Rios was the only place where we had an opportunity to discuss with the Indians their relations with the company. The captains of the native tribes, who were considerably above the rank and file in intelligence, were not afraid to talk in our tent, where there was no company employee about, after we had made it plain to them that we were not engaged in collecting rubber or doing other forest work and were merely traveling through to see how the Huitotos lived. They stated that a white man, who had since run away, had treated the Indians very cruelly for a long time, but that the present man in the company's house was very kind. They said that they now had ample time to work their plantations, though previously they had often been very short of food because they were forced to carry cargo and make roads in the time that they should have devoted to cultivation. They were emphatic and unanimous in saying that they wished the whites would go away altogether and leave them entirely alone, but that they had come to realize that this would probably never come about. They said that they felt they were now satisfactorily paid for their rubber and well treated. They had no conception whatever of the Peruvian Government, but regarded Arana as the chief of all the Peruvians.

These Indians were from the Ultimo Retiro section, which is managed by a young Englishman, formerly a storekeeper for the company in La Chorrera. It is the section which has been reduced from 2,000 working Indians to 200. It is the last section in which to expect maltreatment of the natives, for the simple reason that there are hardly any of them left to maltreat. I believe that here the company could see no other way to proceed except by kindness, in the hope of attracting back to their former haunts some of those who had run away. It was for this reason, I believe, that Mr. Parr was not prevented from giving us facilities (as was the case in some of the other sections when we wished to proceed overland through Indian villages by ourselves), the Arana and Rey de Castro party believing that it would be impossible for us to find here anything very derogatory to the company.

The amounts of rubber brought down by the company continue to increase. They brought to Iquitos 77.5 tons in August and 46.972 in October, making a total for the current year to date of 293.93 tons, as compared to 154.72 for the corresponding period in 1911 and to 225.53 tons for the whole year 1911. They will have one more cargo to bring down, which will make the total for the year 1912 at least

There is no doubt that the company is in a very bad way financially, and, as something will have to be done before long unless the price of rubber goes up, the temptation to abuse is imminent and strong. Considering the inaccessibility of the region (with consequent high cost of transportation for supplies and product), the unproductive nature of the soil (making food extremely scarce), and the very inferior quality of the rubber produced, it is hard to see how the enterprise can be made to pay without hard treatment of the Indians, forced labor to say the least.

As to the past, the truth is that the district was the ash barrel of both Peru and Colombia, and the concessionaires, though cognizant of this, were so anxious to make money that they took into their employ without investigation any of the ashes who professed a willingness to work. The deplorable result is already known to the Department. It was due to the criminal negligence of the Peruvian and British concerns, who in turn controlled the district, and the total absence of Government supervision. The British directors who entrusted the conduct of their business here entirely to Peruvian hands can not rely on that as relieving them from responsibility in

Nevertheless, in the absence of government machinery in the zone, I question whether the withdrawal of the company would better the situation of the Indians, for the territory would then be thrown open to freebooting expeditions like those of the Yaguas and Yubineto, discussed in my dispatches Nos. 13 and 20 of July 1 and July 16, respectively, and in these slave raids the Colombians would be as much to be feared as the Peruvians.

As to the proposed establishment of missions in the district, the company representatives and Señor Arana state that they would not mind missions of Peruvians, but they are noncommittal as to what their attitude would be toward missions of foreign nationality. is easier to understand this when one bears in mind the fact that the authorities of the State church in Iquitos do not favor the establishment of missions in the Putumayo, fearing that they will not be allowed a free hand. In other words, the company is willing, if they must have missionaries, to have those whom they can keep under their thumb.

Although little or no interest is generally taken in religion in Iquitos, the local press of late have been making a great outcry against the admission to the Putumayo of missionaries of any nationality other than Peruvian, and columns have been published on the subject. Throughout, however, the fact has been overlooked that in all trans-Andean Peru there are only two or three missionaries of Peruvian nationality. The apostolic prefect here, who is not a Peruyian, stated to the British Consul that it has been found impossible to get Peruvians to come over the mountains for the work; that they only come when forced to, and then leave as soon as they can

I do not believe that foreigners coming here as missionaries would get a particularly pleasant welcome. They certainly would get no The establishment of such a mission would involve heavy expense. The launches they would have to provide for the carriage of the necessary food supplies would cost them at least $6,000 to $9,000 a year, as it is not probable that they could arrange with the company to transport their goods. In addition to this they would have to take into account the extraordinary cost of all the necessaries of life in Iquitos.

I regret that both the company and the Government adopted the course of preventing us from seeing the actual conditions wherever possible, but trust that the course I pursued in the matter may meet with the department's approval.

PREFECTURE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LORETO, Iquitos, August 2, 1912.

The Consul General for Peru in Manaos,
On special mission to the River Putumayo, Mouth of the Putumayo.

The chief clerk of the ministry of foreign relations, in a telegram of July 31 ultimo, tells me that, as you have been appointed a commissioner to accompany Messrs. George Bobington Michell, His Britannic Majesty's Consul in Iquitos, and James S. Fuller, Consul of the United States of North America in that port, who are going to the River Putumayo to ascertain the condition of the aborigines of that region, I should give you information with regard to the measures taken by our Government to prevent the perpetration of crime and the measures taken to capture delinquents.

On account of the indictment formulated by the fiscal of the supreme court, Dr. D. Jose S. Cavero, the Government arranged that one of the judges of first instance should go from Iquitos to the Putumayo for the purpose of drawing up a "sumario" in regard to the crimes committed in that region. Dr. Romulo Faredes, who at the time was charged with one of the benches of first instance, was the one designated to carry out this difficult mission, and went to the region referred to, accompanied by clerks of the court, interpreters, and the troops necessary to surround him with guarantees. This expedition was completed by the presence of Medical Dr. Fernandez Romero, who was to make the technical examination of such bodies as the judge should order. After some months of incessant labor and examination by the commission of nearly all the more important of the sections into which the business of the Peruvian Amazon is divided, the judicial commission of investigation brought in 215 indictments against various persons.

The repeated orders, both of the President of the Republic and of the department of foreign relations, which demanded of this office the immediate capture of the accused, were fulfilled as best they could be, and some (captures) of importance were made, but it was impossible to catch some of the accused, as they had fled abroad, and others because they died in the lapse of time between the commission of the crimes and the date when the region was examined by the judicial commission.

Despite the fact that all those who figure in the indictment as authors or accomplices have been sought for by the authorities, who have taken those whom they could find, it has not been possible to catch those that have taken refuge in Brazilian territory.

After this our Government, with indefatigable zeal, has made various arrangements for the establishment in the zone referred to of the rule of law and justice, and has named a special commission to propose for the consideration of the Government a sincere plan for the establishment of the proper judicial procedure adapted particularly to the said zone.

Furthermore, an auxiliary commission has been nominated, to have its seat in Iquitos, composed of the writer, the fiscal of the court, and Dr. J. V. Maradiegue, for the purpose of assisting in the formation of opinions in the capital of the Republic, and, among other things, Dr. Romulo Paredes has been ordered to go to the Putumayo and examine the region and there personally collect fresh data and impressions, so that the question can be taken up with absolute knowledge of the circumstances.

What is more, the Government has created a corps of gendarmerie especially for the Putumayo, completely independent of our garrisons, to second in everything the action of the political (military) and judicial powers. The first lot of gendarmes is proceeding to the district by the same steamer that takes this letter.

Furthermore, Señor Benito Lores has been appointed special comisario of the Putumayo, to reside in La Chorrera and travel through the entire zone under his jurisdiction, inquiring into the crimes that may be committed and capturing those who still live there as fugitives from justice. Señor Lores has special powers and instructions from the department of foreign relations, with the object of establishing a wise and honest police administration, which will furnish every possible guaranty to those who live in this distant zone, especially to the aborigines, whom our Government watches over with all the concern that is awakened by their primitive customs.

With the creation of the office of special commissary and the corps of gendarmes it is certain that in a very short time those who have not yet been captured will be caught, and the percentage of crime will be reduced to a minimum or will entirely disappear, as is natural for it to do.

In a short time the Government will create a court of the first instance in the Putumayo in order to prosecute with all promptness the cases which are brought there, in this way making justice more prompt and efficacious than by the procedure through the interchange of judicial requisitions and other delays due to the great distances.

There is also to be installed a wireless station in El Encanto, in order to maintain a constant and rapid communication with this port, and in that way with the capital of the Republic. The tower is already boxed and ready to be sent to the Putumavo.

As you see, our Government is doing and has done all that is humanly possible to control the action of justice in a zone so distant, and is most actively occupied in removing the bad impression that the declarations of Sir Casement have made in their own mind, those declarations which were such disastrous revelations for our country.

The very dispatch of a functionary of your rank shows the interest of our Government in the normalization of this very vast section of our territory.

You, with your great talent and well-known discretion, will understand how to insure that the consuls learn the truth of affairs.

The comisario will show you his archives, and in these you will find in all detail the orders sent him by this office and what has been done toward the accomplishment of the judge's mandates.

EXTRACT FROM TELEGRAM NO. 1.

August 10, 1912.

We have informed English and American Governments that you are going to the Putumayo on an official mission of investigation. You are to present to us detailed and exact reports of all that you investigate and observe in company with the consuls. The common object is to discover true facts, and the Peruvian Government has for its duty the repression of crimes, if they perchance exist. See that the consuls sign with you records (formal acts) substantiating the data collected and investigations made in each zone.

EXTRACT FROM TELEGRAM NO. 2.

August 10, 1912.

By agreement with the minister, I send you the following instructions: First. Your mission consists in insuring that the English and American consuls who are going to the Putumayo in the steamer Liberal obtain exact data, free from all prejudice, regarding the situation in that zone. Second. The investigations, as we have shown the chancelleries of England and the United States, will not repeat those already made by Casement. Third. A new comisario, with a force, is going to the Putumayo. He is charged to repress crimes if they should exist and send the guilty to Iquitos. Fourth. Action must be taken without temporizing with delinquents, according to the reiterated orders of the Government.

PREFECTURE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LORETO,

Iquitos, August 5, 1912.

The Consul of the United States of America:

I take pleasure in informing you that Señor Carlos Rey de Castro, consul general for Peru in Manaos (Brazil), has been commissioned by my Government to proceed to the Putumayo zone on a journey of investigation, with the object of ascertaining the fulfillment of the measures taken there and to see how the instructions issued to the authorities of that zone are being carried out. Senor Carlos Rey de Castro will embark in the steamer Liberal when she passes the mouth of the Putumayo River.

E. CASTANEDA.

File No. 823.5048/109.

The American Consul at Iquitos to the Secretary of State.

[Extract.]

On Board Steamship Manco, Iquitos, Peru, November 20, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy and a translation of the letter, with its annexes, addressed to my British colleague and myself by Consul General Rey de Castro at Iquitos, after our return from the Putumayo, and which was referred to in my dispatch No. 33, of October 28, 1912.

The letter and its annexes contain several inaccuracies and a number of statements which in themselves are not altogether clear and might even mislead the Department if not fully explained.

In the first place, Señor Rey de Castro is mistaken in stating that he informed us of the object of his journey immediately after boarding the Liberal. As stated in my dispatch No. 33 (referred to above), he said nothing to indicate that his mission was other than what the acting prefect had informed us until the night before we arrived in La Chorrera, or six days after he boarded the Liberal. This was his first intimation to the effect that he desired or intended to accompany us.

A copy of the letter of the acting prefect to Consul General Rey de Castro (referred to in the second paragraph of the latter's note to us) accompanied my despatch No. 33 ¹ and was discussed therein, as was also my refusal to sign formal acts with our Peruvian colleague dealing with conditions of law and order in the various sections to be visited. The statement I made to Señor Rey de Castro as to the nature of my mission in the region was given in full in the dispatch No. 33 (referred to above), which, it will be noted, does not exactly agree with the way in which that gentleman puts it in his letter.

agree with the way in which that gentleman puts it in his letter.

As to collaborating with my Peruvian colleague, as suggested by him, without going through the formality of signing acts, I made it plain to him that I could not undertake this course of action—an interference with the internal affairs of Peru—any more than I could the other without definite instructions from my Government, but that there was nothing to prevent the Peruvian Legation at Washington from asking for a copy of my report if they should see fit to do so. Furthermore (though I did not state this to Señor Rey de Castro), I considered that his method of investigation, i. e., by calling in Indians to dances and relying on the company's employees for all food, accommodation, information, and even for interpretation from the Indian language, was better adapted to cover up any shortcomings than to make possible any throwing of "light on the facts."

I did not make any "examination" of the company's books at La Chorrera nor at El Encanto, as Señor Rey de Castro's letter would seem to indicate, nor, so far as I know, was any real examination made. I was present at La Chorrera, but not at El Encanto, when the manager showed to Messrs. Rey de Castro and Michell certain entries which he considered substantiation of his statements with regard to the method of remuneration of the white staff. I do not consider that the books of a branch agency which does not pay the men in question are any corroboration of the claims made and in connection with which these entries were exhibited. The first I saw of any dispatches addressed to the managers at La Chorrera and El Encanto was after my return to Iquitos, from the copies which accompanied the letter under discussion.

It is true that Consul Michell and I drew up our own itinerary in the first place, but Señor Rey de Castro neglected to state that, once decided on, we were not permitted the liberty of changing it in the slightest particular; and he also omitted to say that at Atenas he and Señor Arana, for reasons of their own, saw to it that we were forced to abandon our original plan, drawn up "on our own initiative with entire liberty."

The Department will recall that it was only by a stratagem executed in the middle of the night that we were enabled to travel without our undesirable escort from Ultimo Retiro to Entre Rios or to see anything of the real life of the Indians. The section chief who was responsible for furnishing us the facilities for this is now on board the vessel on which I am writing this dispatch and tells me that he was severely censured for it. In the effort to arrange for traveling overland through the Indian villages from Atenas to La Chorrera, in accordance with the understanding we had at the outset of our trip with Mr. Tizon (who had assured us it was entirely feasible). I went ahead of the main party to the first-named place. There I made all arrangements with the section chief, who told me the road was good and the trip would give us an excellent view of native life, for carriers and facilities to go on with. After the others arrived, however, and interviewed him, this gentleman found, though he had not had an opportunity to look into the matter, that the road was impassable, and that we could not get carriers for the three days' journey because the Indians had to work their "chacaras," or plantations. This, however, did not prevent their being called in to dance two days for Señor Rey de Castro and spend a third in carrying the baggage to Puerto Peruano.

As to the picket of gendarmes, we particularly did not want anything of the kind, and said so, seeing no necessity for it and fearing they might intimidate the Indians. Although they were a nuisance and scared away the section chief and all the Indians from the first place where we stopped, the Peruvian consul general insisted in retaining them, stating that they were necessary to support his dignity.

The photographer to whom Señor Rey de Castro refers was a Portuguese in the employ of Señor Arana. Señor Arana told me this himself, and added that the pictures were for the use of the company (presumably for illustrating a new prospectus).

PERU. 1283

As the Department is aware, far from proving "the correctness of the particulars transmitted by the prefect of the Department of Loreto with regard to the persistent and active labor of the political, military, and judicial authorities of Peru," the one thing that could not be concealed from us anywhere on the trip was the very absence of any governmental action worth mentioning.

Mr. Michell informs me that he never ventured to express any opinion of the present condition of the Kongo natives. He has not been in the Kongo for some five years or so.

As to the point made by Señor Rey de Castro relative to the possession of arms by the natives, he forgets that they were thus armed at the time of the atrocities and omits to state that the guns to which he refers are antiquated muzzle-loading shotguns, from which the employes, armed with modern rifles and automatic pistols and revolvers, have little more to fear than from the old native blowpipes, arrows, and spears, and that the company has absolute control of the supply of powder, by exercising which they could at any time they wished render practically useless all these trade muskets.

I do not consider that the evidence we saw justifies the formally stated conclusions in Señor Rey de Castro's letter. As to the amount of rubber produced per man, I do not know what can be the source of his figure of 800 to 1,000 kilos per annum. Estimates of 250 kilos per man per annum in southern rivers are regarded in Iquitos as high. In the upper Madre de Dios and Inambari regions, where conditions do not differ greatly and where abuses of the Indian labor are freely stated to exist, the average is about 85 kilos a year. The figures given me by the company managers were 50 to 60 kilos for La Chorrera sections and 120 for El Encanto. The tables given in the annexes to the Peruvian consul general's letter, it will be observed, do not by any means check.

The money value of goods delivered to the Indian, which Señor Rey de Castro derives from the tables furnished him by the company, is no measure of the Indian's remuneration for his work. At the present time in the La Chorrera sections an Indian must bring in 20 kilos for a machete or an ax, 40 kilos for the cheapest grade of small canvas hammock, and from 60 to 70 kilos for a muzzle-loading trade gun. In other words, the average laborer can get for himself by working the average amount of rubber for a whole year in the La Chorrera sections a hammock and an ax or a gun without any ammunition.

Particular attention is called, in the letter under discussion, to the point referred to in my No. 33, that Señor Rey de Castro, after being introduced on the scene by a subterfuge and after having forced his company on us, considered the espionage practiced by himself and associates to be a part of his official duty.

I have gone thus into detail with regard to the letter addressed to us by the Peruvian consul general for the reason that it constitutes his effort, as a representative of the Peruvian Government, to put words of exoneration into the mouths of my British colleague and myself—an exoneration I do not consider justified by the evidence and the letter will doubtless be published with this end in view. I did not enter into any controversy with Señor Rey de Castro on the subject for the principal reason that I have not yet received any intimation from the Peruvian Government to the effect that they wished him to be associated with me in the mission intrusted to me by the Department, and I did not think it advisable to address him in any way that might be construed as recognition of any authorized participation by him in my investigations.

I have also learned that while we were in Ultimo Retiro there were employees working there who were under indictment for the old crimes. It seems strange that Consul General Rey de Castro, whose mission was directly connected with matters of this kind and who had shown me a list furnished him of those indicted and still at liberty, took neither notice of nor action in these cases.

I am also informed by the recent section chief at Ultimo Retiro, who was in charge when we were there, that human bones are much in evidence along the old trails and by-roads in that section. It will be recalled that here the working population was reduced from 2,000 to 200 in a few years.

As to public opinion in Iquitos, a large subscription dinner was given to J. C. Arana just before I left by the inner circle of the chamber of commerce. At this Consul General Rey de Castro and others made speeches lauding him and the company. Only one discordant note was heard. One of the speakers made the point that "throwing bouquets" was all very well, but that Peru and the whole civilized world were waiting to hear from Arana some word or proof to exonerate him from the charges under which he rests.

Local merchants in Iquitos state that the agitation abroad has greatly affected Iquitos credit in Europe in all lines, and under the present business conditions constitutes a serious question for them.

STUART J. FULLER.

[Inclosure—Identic letter—Translation.]

The Fiscal Commissioner and Consul General for Peru in the States of Amazonas and Pará to the American and the British Consuls at Iquitos.

Gentlemen: On the day following my transshipment to the steamer Liberal, on the 11th of August last, at the mouth of the Putumayo, I fulfilled the pleasant duty of making you acquainted, as you will remember, with the object of my journey to the zone watered by the said river and its affluents, the Igaraparana and the Caraparana, and proposed to you at the same time that, in accordance with instructions from the Lima chancellery, we should sign statements in the places that we should visit, in order to place on record the information and the impressions that we might gather there.

You will also recollect that I put into your hands a copy of the dispatch, dated the 2d of the said month of August, in which the acting prefect of this department, Don E. Castaneda, transmitted to me exact and precise particulars which demonstrate conclusively that the Government of Peru calls into action all the lawful means compatible with its attributions to bring to order the situation in the extensive zone referred to, and in which the Peruvian Amazon Co. (Ltd.), an enterprise registered in London, but which does not yet enjoy definitive titles of possession to the lands which it there exploits, carries on the greater part of its rubber business.

You will not have forgotten, either, that you both excused yourselves from accomplishing the formality of subscribing statements, on the ground that your commission was simply of a consular nature, unconnected with considerations of another kind, with the exception of that relating to the possibility of the establishment in those rivers of missions of Catholic priests for the purpose of teaching religion to the Indians. Mr. Michell was good enough to add that his visit to the Putumayo was in fulfillment of general instructions from his Government, which reached his consulate in March of the present year.

PERU. 128

I do not doubt that you also bear in mind that in consequence of your declining to subscribe I expressed to you the satisfaction I should experience if, profiting by your visit to these rivers and in the exercise of your proved aptitude as sagacious and enlightened consular officers, you would do me the honor of transmitting to me any particulars, reference, or impression which you might consider conducive to the realization of the ends pursued by the Peruvian Government in sending me to the above-mentioned zone. to you that the chancery at Lima and the whole of Peru would regard with legitimate satisfaction that the representatives of two countries so cultured and advanced as England and the United States should take the opportunity of affording us their collaboration in the righteous proposition of demonstrating to the world that if in reality excesses have been committed in the Putumayo the former system has been changed in a substantial manner and the whole of the public powers of Peru are being employed in the work of regen-Your word, which must be supposed to be exempt from prejudice, sincere and independent, was called to influence universal opinion, which, believing that that which belongs to an epoch now passed away is still the actual condition, is alarmed at the narratives put into circulation to-day by means of the press in the principal cities of the globe.

Lastly, you can not have forgotten that each time we arrived in one of the different sections worked by the Peruvian Amazon Co. (Ltd.) I repeated to you my request that you would be so good as to honor me with your valuable assistance to get light upon the facts and to adopt the means required by the circumstances, and I took care to explain to you with some insistence that in my capacity of special commissioner of the Government I had at my disposal the elements necessary to correct abuses and to remedy deficiencies.

Before Mr. Michell set out on his journey to the sections Argelia, Union, and Florida, in the Encanto, as Mr. Fuller was not accompanying him in his visits to those posts, I again begged him to grant me the favor of his intelligent and sagacious collaboration.

I can not entertain the least doubt that you have given your attention to my justifiable solicitude; first, because I am dealing with two officials who, by reason of their office and their humanitarian sentiments, can not be supposed to be indifferent to the lot of a considerable number of men, nor to the prestige of the nation in which they discharge their functions, and, secondly, because on various occasions they accompanied me in inquiring into the acts and practices relative to the system established by the Peruvian Amazon Co. (Ltd.) (examination of books, reading dispatches addressed to the managers at La Chorrera, El Encanto, etc.) and they did me the favor of expressing their opinion on the measures which I considered it proper to suggest in order to make definitive the effectiveness of the laws and to guarantee, in a permanent manner, the life, the rights, and the interests of all the inhabitants of the Putumayo.

The itinerary of the different journeys which were performed was that which you drew up, on your own initiative, with entire liberty, and considering only the distances and facilities for the marches as well as the means of river transportation which had to be reckoned with.

Señor Benito Lores, the special commissary of the region made, in concert with myself, the necessary arrangements for your most complete safety, as is proved by the fact that a picket of gendarmes accompanied us all the time.

So as to respect your liberty of action, we secured to you the enjoyment of the greatest independence in your investigations, without forgetting, however, that our most elementary duty as representatives of Peru in a territory under the national domination obliged us to note with careful attention what might be the particulars, the information, and the impressions you were gathering.

For the purpose of fixing up in a graphic form the general proof of your action in the rivers visited, I took with me a photographic artist, and I preserve reproductions of views, groups, and incidents of the tour, which it will be a pleasure to me to send to you shortly, knowing that they will be useful to you to accentuate the clearness of your reports.

During the time that you were in the zone to which I refer, you have been able to prove the correctness of the particulars transmitted by the prefect of the department of Loreto with regard to the persistent and active labor of the political, military, and judicial authorities of Peru to bring to order the situation of the Putumayo, both as concerns the full exercise of our sovereignty and as concerns the rule of our laws and administrative practices.

You have had occasion to observe the zeal and diligence displayed by the chief of staff of the fifth region, Lieut. Col. Don Antonio Castro, whom you met in La Chorrera. You have been witnesses of the energy and rapidity with which the special commissary, Señor Benito Lores, who accompanied you in your journey there and back, proceeds, bringing on the latter occasion, under his own direct supervision, five individuals against whom an order for preventive apprehension had been issued. You have had knowledge of the intervention which is the part of ordinary justice in the ventilation of matters within its competence, since I placed in the hands of Mr. Fuller, for him to read, the provisional deed executed before the justice of the peace resident at El Encanto, Señor Oscar Coloma Reborg, by Messrs. Josa and Arana and, finally, you have seen that in every part Peruvian gendarmes served you as guardians, you having on two occasions, at Ultimo Retiro and El Encanto amiably requested the aid of the said gendarmes for the better protection of your persons and your baggage.

I understand that a journey such as you have accomplished, without delaying more than a short time in each place, would not permit you to form a definite conception of some things, but I think, too, that the general impressions which you have received and the information acquired from books and documents of the company (such as the examination of the current accounts of the chiefs of sections and the perusal of the letter written by the Judge Dr. Romulo Paredes to Señor Juan A. Tizon, manager at La Chorrera) are sufficient to convey an approximate idea of the reality, and all the more as I am treating, as I said before, with officials of long experience, who have served in regions which have many points of contact or similarity with that of the Putumayo.

I remember in this connection that in conversation with Mr. Michell he repeated to me several times that the position of the Peruvian Indian in the Putumayo is much superior to the present position of the workmen of the Kengo, not to that which weighed upon them under the old system.

Further, there were presented to your intelligent and perspicacious observation facts and scenes, of which I preserve photographic testimony, which carry with themselves the resolution of many doubtful points; for example, that referring to the life and alimentation of the Indians. You have looked upon very considerable groups of the latter, even on multitudes amounting to more than 1,200, as in Occidente, and you must have been convinced that all that has been spread about with respect to their emaciation and bad nourishment is to-day a fable of the worst kind. Men of your enlightenment and clear-sightedness can not be presumed to accept, even as a remote hypothesis, that the aborigines of the Putumayo may be divided into two grand classes—one the starving and the lean, the anemic and extenuated; the other the vigorous and healthy. When one has seen the number of Indians—men, women, and children—that you and I have seen there is no right whatever to imagine that these radical and absurd differences exist.

Apart from the cordial and friendly manner in which the Indian addresses his superiors, the chiefs, and employees of sections, there is a particular which will not have escaped your observation and which can not be more significant; almost all the adult Indians are armed with carbines and shotguns, which they use for hunting wild animals and birds for food. What does this prove? That a reign of terror does not exist there at the present time, for it can not be conceived that arms would be given to a man who is dominated by threats and punishments to make him strong and stir him up to vengeance; added to which vengeance would be all the more easy as to-day the staff of white or civilized employees is very much reduced, in some sections not amounting to more than two or three individuals.

The picture presented to us by the Indians in the different aspects of their life, whether engaged in the industrial occupations or enjoying themselves in feasts and dances, the questions addressed to them on their position and their relations to their chiefs, and the state of the houses and fields which belong to them, as well as the examination of the books of the offices at Chorrera and Encanto and the communications which I have received from Señores Juan A. Tizon and Miguel S. Loayza, in charge of these factories, I consider justify me in forming the following conclusions:

1. The procedure employed to-day by the Peruvian Amazon Co. (Ltd.) complies with the twofold obligation to care for the lives and health of the natives who lend it their services and to stimulate their better expansion and development.

2. The Indians do not perform crushing labor nor labor which wastes their energies, seeing that the proportion of rubber extracted by each one of them annually does not amount to 150 kilos, the greater number of them extracting only 80 to 100 kilos, a very exiguous amount when it is remembered that any cauchero will extract 800 to 1,000 kilos in the same period of time.

3. The remuneration which the Indians receive for their work is much superior, according to what Mr. Michell declared, to that which is given to the working people of the Kongo, and exceeds by more than 20 centavos per kilo that which, according to the famous American writer, Mr. H. C. Pearson, the rubber makers of India, Java, etc., earn.

4. The labor demanded by the porterage of the rubber is lessened by various circumstances:

(a) The limitation of the weight of a load to 30 kilos.(b) The limitation of a day's work to four hours.

(c) The good condition of the road's, above all for the Indian, who is accustomed to travel by almost inaccessible trails.

(d) The transport of the rubber for the more considerable distances by means of launches in the service of the company, the Huitota, Callao, Veloz, etc.

5. The Government of Peru takes care, perhaps going beyond the measure that the economic conditions of the country permit, to take to the Putumayo all the elements capable of contributing to the maintenance of the national sovereignty and the force of the laws, practices, and uses that regulate the public and private life of the Peruvian commonwealth.

In addressing you the present communication it was not only my desire to recall facts and circumstances which I conceive to be acceptable to you in your twofold character as consuls of two countries friendly to Peru and as men of noble sentiments, but it was also my intention to carry out my offer to hand to you the documents and particulars which I have the honor to annex hereto, viz:

Copy of the dispatch of the acting prefect of this Department to which I refer at the beginning of this communication.

Ditto of the notes which I exchanged with Señores Juan A. Tizon and Miguel S. Loayza, managers at Chorrera and Encanto, respectively, on the organization and plans for reform in the zones which are under their care.

Statistical tables showing the number of Indians at work in the Putumayo and its affluents, the tribes to which they belong, the quantity of rubber they extract, and the remuneration they receive.

Copy of the letter addressed by the judge, Dr. Romulo Paredes, to Señor Tizon, dated July 4, 1911, in which assurance is made by that severe magistrate that the system has changed in a radical manner, with visible good effect for the natives.

I am convinced that you must receive favorably the information and documents above mentioned, and I will not conclude without repeating to you my request that you will be so good as to grant me the valuable assistance of your ideas and your observations so far as you think would contribute to the satisfaction of the aspirations of Peru in the desire to completely normalize the position of the territory which we have just traveled over, and in which it has been such an honor to me to enjoy your interesting and enlightened company.

Sir: With reference to previous correspondence relative to the Putumayo atrocities, I have the honour to transmit to you, herewith, two copies of a despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Iquitos reporting on the recent visit to the Putumayo district, which he carried out in the company of the United States Consul, Mr. James Fuller.

In communicating this report to you I am to ask you to be so good as to furnish His Majesty's Government with a copy of Mr. Fuller's report on the visit and to favor me with the expression of your views on the general question and on the action which the two Governments should or can now take.

I am also to inform you that in the opinion of His Majesty's Government the Peruvian Government should be given an opportunity of offering any observations they may desire to make on the reports of the two Consuls before these reports are published.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt of your excellency's note No. 29, of the 6th instant, enclosing two copies of a despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Iquitos, reporting on the labor conditions in the Putumayo region.

In accordance with your excellency's request for a copy of Consul Fuller's report on the same subject, I have the honor to enclose herewith duplicate copies of the correspondence on the Putumayo atrocities, submitted to the House of Representatives by the President on the 7th instant.

Before transmitting this correspondence to the President, the Department of State conferred with the Peruvian Minister, apprizing him of the general tone of Mr. Fuller's findings. Mr. Pezet thereafter described the measures recently adopted by the Peruvian Government with a view towards ending the mistreatment of the Putumayo Indians and made renewed assurances, on behalf of his Government, to the effect that it would henceforth rigorously increase law and order throughout the rubber-producing district of Peru.

In your excellency's note under acknowledgment you were good enough to ask for an expression of my views regarding the Putumayo question and the action now called for thereon. In reply I may say that, in view of the vigorous policy apparently animating the present administration in Peru, the remoteness of the district and the attendant obstacles in the way of effective reform, I am of the opinion that any further action on the part of His Majesty's Government or of the American Government would appear inopportune, at least at the time being, inasmuch as it might be instrumental in stirring up public sentiment in Peru to such an extent as to hinder whatever real desire now exists there for bettering the conditions under which the Indians labor.

In passing, I should like to inquire whether or not you have any confirmation of the press reports stating that Mr. Arana is expected before long to arrive in England for the purpose of testifying be-

I need not recall to your mind the particulars of this question which has engrossed the attention of our two Governments for the last two years, but I have now been instructed by Sir E. Grey to inquire what conclusions you have arrived at in regard to Mr.

Fuller's report.

I should therefore be much obliged if you could give me your views on the question and could indicate to me the policy which you think it best to adopt in the present position of affairs.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, St. Michael's, October 17, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith enclosed a copy of my despatch to the American Minister at Lisbon, together with an application for a Department passport, and a copy of the registration of Antonio Cabral Rezendes; and for the Department's consideration wish to state that the military authorities here take exception to my claim that a person, any person, born within the United States, or its territories, is an American citizen by birth, if they wish to claim it, and that no act of the parent can deprive the child of the rights given him by his birth.

It appears that young Rezendes, or Cabral as he is known here, returned to the Azores when about 15 months old, and contemplates returning to the United States within one year. The Military Commission at Nordeste, this island, have entered his name in the list for military service, and, notwithstanding he presented a document proving birth at New Bedford, Massachusetts, April 29, 1894, they took up this certificate and refused absolutely to return it to him. They also on two occasions refused to deliver it to me. However, after my conference with the Civil Governor and Colonel Pacheco, presiding officer of the Central Military Commission, referred to in my despatch to the Legation, and in response to a telegraphic request therefor, the certificate was returned today in registered mail, and it bears evidence of many erasures on its reverse side.

In my despatch to the Minister I have requested that appropriate action be taken to definitely settle the status here of American-born children, [as] it appears Portugal does not admit our claim that nativity establishes citizenship; and if this question might be definitely settled I am sure it will remove a cause of much friction. I also believe that it might be well to take up with Portugal the matter of children born in the Azores to naturalized American citizens, that their status may be established, for I am creditably [sic] informed—I hope to be able to forward the evidence in the near future—that the names of young men to whom I have issued emergency passports are still on their military enrollment list, and they are considered refractories, to be punished should they ever return to the Azores; and, further, as refractories, their leaving the Azores puts a cloud on any real estate they may inherit.

The correspondence between this office and the island of San Jorge, Pico, Flores and Corvo is voluminous, and every mail brings letters beseeching me to issue some form of certificate in Portuguese that will satisfy the local military commission that their boys emigrated legally on American passports, and that they are American citizens under our laws.

I shall endeavor in the near future to present this matter to the Department with evidence showing the true situation here, and at that time will submit a form of certificate for the Department's con-

In closing I beg to state that in the case of Rezendes the matter does not come within the scope of the powers of the Civil Governor; it is a military condition, and were it not, there would be no necessity for this or my despatch to our Minister.

AMERICAN CONSULATE. St. Michael's, October 15, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to invite your attention to the enclosed copy of the registration of Antonio Cabral Rezendes, and to advise you that I this day have accepted his application for a Department passport, as he intends to go to the United States within one year.

It appears that Rezendes was born at New Bedford, Massachusetts, of Portuguese parents, April 24, 1894, and since the fall of 1895 has resided in the di trict of Nordeste, this island. The Military Commission at Nordeste, it appears, have entered this boy's name on the list for military service, and did so notwithstanding the fact that the boy claimed American citizenship by birth and produced a copy of the church record, a certificate under the seal of St. John the Baptist Church and the signature of its pastor, Rev. Joaquim G.

Cardozo. During the month of Augu t Rezendes appeared at this Consulate and requested registration as an American citizen, which was refused pending his identification and a document proving birth in the United States. He then alleged that his birth certificate was taken up and retained by the secretary of the Military Commission, and that he, the secretary, refused to return it I then communicated with the secretary, Manuel Bento Pacheco, and requested the return of the certificate to this office, which request was politely refused. However, he did send a copy of it certified by the Commission's seal and his own signature; upon which I have recognized Rezendes as an American citizen. In the accompanying letter the secretary states that Antonio Cabral Rezendes—Antonio Cabral as he is known here—is considered a Portuguese citizen by law and that his name cannot be eliminated from the list.

Under date of October 4, 1912, I again communicated with this secretary and sent a letter of which the following is an exact copy 1, to wit:

SAN MIGUEL, AÇORES, October 4, 1912.

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL BENTO PACHECO, Secretary of the Military Census Commission, Northeastern Council, San Miguel,

I have before me the kind note of your excellency, No. 48, under date of the 2d instant, relating to the case of Antonio Cabral, which note I read with great care and interest. For your excellency's information permit me to say that one of the fundamental bases of the Constitution of the United States of America is that every and any individual who is born within the boundaries of the United States or their territories is an American citizen and as such is entitled to the most ample protection which my Government can afford him, when he happens to ask for it. This basis of our Constitution is recognized internationally, including Portugal, both by the Monarchy and the Republic; and I, as a representative of the United States Government in the Azores, respectfully protest against the censusing of an American citizen to serve the Portuguese Republic against his will.

I have the honor to request your excellency, or whoever may consider it to be in his power, to return to this Consulate the original certificate referred to in your excellency's note; and on this same date I am summoning Antonio Cabral to report here.

By virtue of our laws Antonio Cabral has, until he arrives at the age of 21 years, the privilege of declaring his nationality; and if he makes a declaration in my presence that he desires to be recognized as an American citizen, and proves that he was born in the United States, a document will be issued to him recognizing him as an American citizen. Unon this document being presented to your excellency I hope that the name of Antonio Upon this document being presented to your excellency I hope that the name of Antonio Cabral will be eliminated from the list of military service.

I sincerely hope that this matter will be settled amicably, without the necessity of resorting to our Legation at Lisbon.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE U. S. CONSUL AT PONTA DELGADA:

I acknowledge the receipt of the letter which your excellency sent me under the date of the 4th instant, and in regard to the same I will inform you that as I have no authority under the law to do anything but authenticate the acts of the Commission of which I am secretary and take all the notes and information presented to me regarding the census service in order to submit them to the action of the said Commission, it is not within my legal powers to eliminate or enter any youth from the military census, this being the duty of the said Commission and the other authorities designated by the law.

I will furthermore inform your excellency that as such service in this district is in charge of his excellency the Head of the Recruiting District No. 26 with headquarters in this city, I am sending to him all the documents relating to the case of Antonio Cabral da Lomba da Feteira of the parish of Achada of this Council, with whom your excellency may reach an understanding in the matter.

Health and fraternity,

Health and fraternity,

MANOEL BENTO PACHECO. Secretary of the Commission.

HALL OF THE COMMISSION OF MILITARY CENSUS OF THE NORTHEASTERN COUNCIL, October 11. 1912.

At an informal conference this morning with his excellency the Civil Governor and Colonel Pacheco, it was very apparent that the Colonel felt that the Commission's action was supported by Portuguese law, and for that reason was unwilling to admit my claim that Rezendes is an American citizen and as such his name should be eliminated from their list. And the Colonel further stated that Rezendes had voluntarily asked that his name be entered, which statement I believe is open to argument.

After two hours examination of Rezendes I am satisfied the boy did not voluntarily ask that his name be put upon the list, although he did voluntarily call upon the secretary, when he made the claim of American citizenship and produced a copy of his birth record. However, it is immaterial whether he submitted voluntarily to a military examination or not. If he did, this cannot, it seems to me, be regarded as abandonment of citizenship. On the ground that he was born in the United States and has been identified and the secretary attest [sic] this fact, I maintain the young man is entitled to recognition as an American citizen and that his name should be eliminated from the military list; and further that his certificate of birth, being an American document, should be returned to him.

This matter is respectfully submitted for your consideration and appropriate action; and I cannot too strongly recommend that this entire matter be definitely settled. I shall appreciate being advised of the decision made in this case.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, November 7, 1912.

Sir: The Department has received your despatch No. 721 of the 17th ultimo, transmitting the passport application of Antonio

Cabral Rezendes, who has been called upon by the Portuguese authorities to perform military service. It appears that Mr. Rezendes was born at New Bedford, Massachusetts. April 24, 1894, of Portuguese parents, by whom he was taken in the following year to the Azores, where he has resided ever since. You do not say that his father had obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States before his (the son's) birth, and it is presumed that he had not.

As Mr. Rezendes was born in this country he may be considered a citizen of the United States under the provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. A passport was therefore issued to him for use in returning to this country when he desires to do so, and it is enclosed herewith. Your attention is called to the provision of section three of article eighteen of the Portuguese Civil Code which provides that the following are Portuguese citizens:

The children of a Portuguese father, even though he may have been banished from the Kingdom, or the illegitimate children of a Portuguese mother, even though they were born abroad, who become domiciled in the Kingdom, or who declare after becoming of age, or through their parents or guardians during minority, that they wish to become Portuguese citizens.

Under this law, which is similar to section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Mr. Rezendes was born a Portuguese subject if his father had that status at the time of his (the son's) birth. Such being the case, he has a dual citizenship and this Government is not in a position to insist that he be relieved of the performance of military or other duties to the Portuguese Government so long as he remains within the Portuguese jurisdiction. For a discussion of cases of dual nationality, you are referred to Van Dyne's "Citizenship of the United States," pages 12 to 31.

In your despatch you also call attention to the cases of children born in the Azores of American citizens, and it appears to be your opinion that this Government may insist upon their recognition as American citizens by the Portuguese authorities. In connection with these cases, your attention is called to the provision of section two of article eighteen of the Portuguese Civil Code which provides that the following are Portuguese citizens:

Those who are born in the Kingdom of a foreign father, who is not in the service of his country, unless they declare for themselves after becoming of age or through their parents or guardians during minority that they do not wish to become Portuguese citizens.

Your attention is also called to section 5 of the Citizenship Act of March 2, 1907, which provides as follows:

That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

AMERICAN CONSULATE, St. Michael's, February 27, 1913.

Sir: I have the honor to advert to the third paragraph of my des patch No. 721 of October 17, 1912, and in support of the claim that young men to whom I have issued emergency passports are considered refractories by the local military authorities I copy here-under excerpts of despatch No. 650 dated December 4, 1912, and despatch No. 662 of the 6th instant, in full, from Mr. Moyses Benarus, our Consular Agent at Fayal, to wit:

(No. 650.) I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 509 re status of children born in the Azores to American naturalized citizens, as well as copy of that No. 327 from the Department of State on the same subject for which I thank you. . . .

. . . As I have a similar case on hand, viz. that of the son of Manuel Souto Correia, Consular case No. 41.

Francisco Souto Correia, son of the above-named naturalized citizen, embarked from Fayal to the United States on the 13th day of June, 1911, with an American passport issued by you at my office on or about May 9, 1911, and visaed by me on the same date of issuance, and according to the complaint of his father made to me this day at my office, the said son is now on the list affixed at the door of church of his parish (Capello, Fayal) as a refractory and to pay the military tax.

It will be as well for me to say that Manuel Souto Correia, father of said Francisco Souto Correia, regularly claimed his said son before the Municipality of Horta in conformity with Section 18 of Portuguese Civil Code on September 22, 1908, and again made usual declaration of nationality on the 3d day of November of the same year. . .

I am receiving similar complaints every day from fathers and guardians of boys that have embarked to the United States with American passports until I am tired of the situation. . .

I would suggest that you make all these facts known to the American Minister in Lisbon for a final decision.

(No. 662.) I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 529 of January 21st ultimo, with copy of that received from Francisco Alves Pereira, Calheta, Pico, and relative to the subject of military tax imposed on his sons Francisco and Domingos, now residing in the United States.

Responsive to same I have the honor to say that similar complaints are being brought into my office every day, until I really do not know which way to turn, because I am perfectly sure of the Portuguese law being in favor of all these lads; this most illegal imposition of making them pay the military tax (Rs. 3$000) and of considering them refractories is I believe a "skin" brought or made up by the military Junta and one that really has no reason to be, because it is in opposition to the Portuguese law as it stands now.

In my letter No. 650 of December 4, 1912, with a similar complaint, I suggested that you brought to the knowledge of the American Minister in Lisbon all these irregularities, pointing out to him the urgent necessity of these local military authorities (in Tereira and I believe Lisbon also) being instructed to act according to the Portuguese standing law and not according to their ideas as it seems.

I have consulted my lawyer on these cases, who in his turn studied the law on the subject, and am told by him that the imposition of payment of military tax and that of considering these lads refractories after their leaving the country with American passports is one that can not be.

In my letter No. 650 I suggested your sending me a certificate of nationality to be given to the father of this boy in order that with its presentation to the respective authority he might be remitted from the payment of tax.

I hesitate to make an exposition of the case to the respective authority (military of course) because of my doubt whether the same has to be made by you as the superior consular officer in the Azores or by myself as your subordinate officer.

Such reclamation would have to be addressed, I believe, to the military headquarters at Terceira island.

The official notice enclosed appears to support our claim that young men born in the Azores of naturalized American citizens, who have gone to the United States on American passports, are considered refractories by the military authorities, particularly in the district of Horta. This district embraces the islands of Faval, Pico, Flores and Corvo; from which islands come nearly all the complaints.

Francisco Alves Pereira, referred to in the accompanying Portuguese official notice,1 is registered here as an American citizen; he registered October 7, 1911, and re-registered in 1912; therefore his registration is valid until October 7, 1913. He is residing here because of poor health. April 28, 1911, after satisfactorily overcoming the presumption of expatriation, I issued him emergency passport No. 433, and he went to the United States accompanied by his two sons Francisco and Domingos. Ill health forced him to return to the Azores, and he arrived here en route to Pico October 6, 1911. two sons remained in the United States. Notwithstanding the fact that these boys legally embarked with Portuguese permission; that the father has met every Portuguese condition and is registered at Lages, Pico, as an American citizen, as may be seen by enclosure No. 2,1 it appears his sons are considered refractories, and he required to pay 3$000 reis annually until the boys reach the age of 45 years. Failure to pay the assessment puts a cloud upon any real estate they may inherit.

I have instructed our Consular Agent at Horta, Mr. Pereira at Lages and many other citizens that this matter would be transmitted to the Department for consideration and appropriate reference; and I do so with the recommendation that the Consul here be authorized to issue certificates, without fee, in such cases covering facts of citizenship similar to Form No. 179——Consular.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 27, 1913.

Sir: The Department sends you herewith a copy of a despatch No. 765, of February 27, 1913, from the Consul at St. Michael's, Azores, concerning the action of the officials in the Azores, especially in the district of Horta, in requiring military service, or imposing fines in lieu thereof, in cases of persons born in the Azores, whose fathers, also natives of the Azores, had previously obtained naturalization as citizens of the United States.

You will please take this matter up with the Portuguese Government and call attention to the bearing of the following provisions of article one of the naturalization treaty of 1908 between the United States and Portugal and section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Article 1. Subjects of Portugal who become naturalized citizens of the United States of America and shall have resided uninterruptedly within the United States five years shall be held by Portugal to be American citizens and shall be treated as such.

Section 1993 R. S. All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

Under the provision of law just quoted, which corresponds with article eighteen, section three, of the Portuguese Civil Code, the persons referred to are born citizens of the United States, and come within the purview of section six of the Citizenship Act of March 2, 1907, which provides as follows:

SEC. 6. That all children born outside the limits of the United States who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section nineteen hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States and who continue to reside outside the United States shall, in order to receive the protection of this Government, be required upon reaching the age of eighteen years to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

You will please ask the Portuguese Government to instruct the officials in the Azores to recognize as American citizens persons born in the Azores of American fathers, native or naturalized, unless, having reached the age of eighteen years, they have failed to make the declaration of intention to retain American citizenship required by section six of the Expatriation Act of March 2, 1907, or, having reached the age of twenty-one years, have failed to take the oath of allegiance to the United States as required by the same law.

The American Minister to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

AIDE MÉMOIRE.

In conversation with his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the American Chargé d'Affaires ad interim had the honor to call the attention of his excellency to certain actions on the part of Portuguese military officials in the Azores Islands, especially in the District of Horta, in requiring military service or imposing fines in lieu thereof, in cases of persons born in the Azores whose fathers, also natives of the Azores, had previously obtained naturalization as citizens of the United States and who are American citizens.

In this connection the Chargé d'Affaires called attention to the fact that

In this connection the Chargé d'Affaires called attention to the fact that such action on the part of the Portuguese officials was contrary to the following provisions of Article 1, of the Naturalization Treaty of 1908 between Portugal and the United States, reading as follows:

Article 1. Subjects of Portugal who become naturalized citizens of the United States of America and shall have resided uninterruptedly within the United States five years shall be held by Portugal to be American citizens and shall be treated as such.

and to Section 1993 of the Revised Statute of the United States as follows:

Section 1993, R. S. All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

Under the provision of law just quoted, which corresponds with Article Eighteen, Section Three of the Portuguese Civil Code, the persons referred to are born citizens of the United States, and come within the purview of Section Six of the Citizenship Act of March 2, 1907, which provides as follows:

Section 6. That all children born outside the limits of the United States who are cittzens thereof in accordance with the provisions of Section Nineteen Hundred and Ninety Three of the Revised Statutes of the United States and who continue to reside outside the United States shall, in order to receive the protection of this Government, be required upon reaching the age of eighteen years to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

The Chargé d'Affaires had the honor to ask his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Portuguese Government instruct the officials in the Azores to recognize as American citizens persons born in the Azores of American fathers, native or naturalized, unless, having reached the age of eighteen years, they have failed to make the declaration of intention to retain American citizenship required by Section Six of the Expatriation Act of March 2, 1907, or, having reached the age of twenty-one years, have failed to take the oath of allegiance to the United States as required by the same law.

To illustrate, the Charge quoted the following specific instances where Portuguese officials had acted in contravention of the Convention between the Government of Portugal and the Government of the United States. of Francisco Souto Correia, son of Manuel Souto Correia, in the municipality of Horta, who, notwithstanding that his father was a duly naturalized citizen of the United States, and he himself duly registered at the Consulate as an American citizen, has had his name affixed to the door of the church of his parish (Capello, Fayal) as a refractory and under the obligation to pay the military tax. The cases of Francisco and Domingos Pereira, sons of Francisco Alves Pereira, of Calhita, Pico, also American citizens and now residing in the United States, upon whom the military tax has been imposed.

The Charge stated that the American consular representatives have reported to the American Government that similar complaints are continually being brought into their offices and that there is reason to believe that the local military officials are imposing the military tax, claiming these American citizens as Portuguese refractories, with insincere intent, since they must know well that their action is in opposition to Portuguese law as it now stands.

The two cases above quoted are quoted as examples, being typical of many other complaints which the American Government has received from its consular representatives, most of these abuses being reported as taking place in the district of Horta, embracing the islands of Fayal, Pico, Flores and Corvo.

In concluding the conversation with his excellency, the Chargé d'Affaires had the honor to ask on behalf of the American Government that instructions may be sent by the Portuguese Government to the proper officials in the Azores Islands to the end that such officials shall recognize as American citizens those persons defined to be such under the provisions of the Treaty between the Portuguese and American Governments, thus putting an end to the troubles mentioned.

S_{IR}: I have the honor to advert to my despatch No. 721 of October 17, 1912, and the Department's reply thereto dated May 7, 1913, enclosing a copy of a despatch No. 108 of April 22, 1913, from the Legation at Lisbon, setting forth the substance of the Chargé d'Affaires' interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, upon the subject of Portuguese officials in the Azores attempting to impose military obligations upon certain American citizens.

I note what is written in the despatch from the Legation at Lisbon, particularly the paragraph requesting a report if the evils complained of are not corrected, et cetera.

In our mail from the islands to-day there are a number of complaints and petitions for some form of document or certificate over my seal and signature by which they can prove their boys are American citizens. Two of the cases are from the island of Flores. One Felipe de Mendonça (Consular case No. 377) complains that the authorities have posted his son's name on the church door, and he is to be fined if the boy does not report for inspection. This boy, João Felipe de Mendonça, embarked on emergency passport No. 546, issued to him September 17, 1911, and has fixed permanent residence in Marin County, California. The second case from Flores is from José Pimentel Braz. Mr. Braz was born in the United States and his case was reported to the Department in despatch No. 575 dated July 20, 1911.

These complaints appear to indicate that the authorities at Flores are still active in imposing fines on boys we recognize as American citizens, and I am reporting the matter for consideration and appropriate reference.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Chargé d'Affaires.
Foreign Office,
Lisbon, August 2, 1913.

MONSIEUR LE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES: I did not delay to inform my colleague the Minister of War of what you told me in our conversation of last April, and which is stated in your memorandum of the 19th of that month, in regard to the claims of young men listed for military service in the Azores who allege themselves to be American citizens. The Minister of War, in his turn, has given instructions to the military authorities of the Islands to carefully observe the legal provisions which exclude foreigners from enlistment, and also to furnish all possible information upon cases specifically pointed out by you. These orders have just been repeated in view of your note of July 21. So soon as the complete information requested arrives and has been carefully examined I shall inform you of the result. Meanwhile the Ministry of War has furnished me information which I deem useful to transmit to you.

In the first place, one must distinguish between claims presented to the consular agents of the United States by young men who claim to be exempt from military service and those of young men who really have a right not to be included in the enlistment because of being de facto foreign citizens. Many of those who complain do so without any right to do so according to the Treaty of 1908, and the military authorities believe that frequently the consuls of the United States, by themselves looking into the complaints which the young men present them, would be able to recognize their non-validity. Again, the consular complaints would not be necessary if the young men would have recourse to the Ministry of War, which the law grants them, where the questions of nationality are scrupulously examined. As regards this aspect of the question, if you would find it convenient to send instructions to the consular agents, your subordinates, they might be of much use.

I desire also to call your attention to another point which needs a practical solution, and this is that there is a divergence between Portuguese laws and American laws. The latter, as I see from your statement, regards as American the sons of citizens of the United States, born abroad, who make a declaration before the consulate of the country to which their parents belong. Portuguese law recognizes as foreigners the sons of foreigners born in Portugal who make a declaration to this effect before the municipality of their place of residence. So an individual born of an American father, in Portuguese territory, is held by the Government of the United States to be an American citizen from the time he has made the consular declaration, but continues to be considered Portuguese by the Government of the territory so long as the declaration has not been made at the municipality.

It does not seem to me difficult for the Governments of Washington and Lisbon to come to some definite understanding on this point. But while they do not do so, the consular authorities of the United States doubtless might aid greatly in the solution of the difficulty and in the interest of the young men by making known to the young men who present themselves to make the declaration required by the American law that they must observe before the Portuguese municipality the formality which the law of the territory prescribes.

Animated, as the two Governments are, by a spirit of cordiality, I do not see that this practice can offer difficulty. As regards the young men, they also can suffer no inconvenience from obeying that suggestion, providing they are acting in good faith.

I beg you will kindly inform me of your opinion in this respect. As a proof of friendly sentiments and while awaiting your reply, the Minister of War has recommended that the declarations made before the consuls may be considered, provisionally and temporarily, valid.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Charge d'Affaires.

Foreign Office, Lisbon, September 2, 1913.

Mr. Chargé d' Affaires: In my note of the 2d of last month, I had the honor to state to you the circumstances of some of the claims presented to the authorities in the Azores in regard to military enlistment, and I called attention, on the one hand, to the fact that many of the complaints received by the American Consuls residing there are without any basis under the terms of the treaty of May 7, 1908; and that, on the other hand, a large number of young men regarded as Americans by United States law would be spared much inconvenience if in due time they were led to make before the proper municipality the declaration prescribed by Portuguese law.

In your memorandum of April 19th, which summed up the conversations you had with me on the subject, you cited the cases of Francisco do Souto Correia and Francisco and Domingos Pereira. As I informed you in my note of August 2d, the Ministry of War gave the necessary orders in order that these cases should be specially looked into, and I am now prepared to speak of them. The claim of Francisco and Domingos Pereira was attended to, as I am informed by the military commander of the Azores. With respect to Fransisco do Souto Correia the necessary instructions were sent from Lisbon for him also to be eliminated from military enlistment, but the circumstances of his claim counsel me to call them to your attention.

The father of Francisco Correia was naturalized an American on May 12, 1887, and he declared before the municipality of the district of Horta that his son had chosen American nationality. When he made this declaration, however, he had lived at Fayal over nine years, having consequently lost his new nationality under the terms of Article 3 of the Treaty of 1908. In the strict interpretation of the applicable provisions of the treaty, Francisco Correia is an American, and orders have been given for him to be so considered. But certainly you will agree that the claim presented by this young man was of a nature to justify the doubts of the authorities in the Azores, and all the more inasmuch as the complainants have the right to appeal to the Ministry of War, where with greater authority definite resolutions may be adopted.

In expressing to you the satisfaction the Government of the Republic feels in giving a favorable solution to the cases specially cited in your memorandum of April 19th, I beg to thank you for the kind expressions with which you acknowledged my note of August 2d, and its suggestions I trust will be cordially received by the American Government.

[Telegram—Extract.]

American Legation, San Salvador, February 5, 1913.

At half past nine last night while President Araújo was seated in the Parque Bolívar attending a serenade an infamous attack upon his life was made by about five unknown individuals who fired five shots at him and one of the men inflicted upon him a terrible wound with a machete. * * * I called at the Presidential Mansion at eight o'clock this morning and was present while the surgeons were stitching the wound. * * * The surgeons informed me that while the wound is very serious it is not necessarily fatal and they entertain hopes of saving the President's life. * * * Complete tranquility reigns throughout the Republic and this murderous attack is thought to have no other significance than to remove President Araújo. By a Presidential decree issued today martial law has been declared throughout the Republic of Salvador. * *

The American Consul General at Smyrna, Horton, telegraphs that the steamer Texas of the Archipelago-American Steamship Company was sunk while leaving harbor about 6 p. m. on April 29. Several killed, many wounded; that according to evidence of survivors it would appear that the steamer was sunk by shore batteries. He suggests the presence of a competent naval officer. I will make recommendation when more fully advised. The captain of the Texas is presumably a Greek subject; Turkish authorities may proceed against him for criminal negligence and the loss of life of Ottoman subjects. In this connection I beg leave to call attention to the Embassy's despatch 342 of April 21, 1911, in conformity with the conclusions of which we could not claim that such Greek subjects be tried in our consular court. No. 23.7

American Consulate General, Smyrna, May 10, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose herewith a memorandum on the subject of jurisdiction in the case of Spiro Macris, captain of the American ship Texas, recently sunk in the harbor of Smyrna.

The question is a serious one, involving the prestige of the Consulate, and one that will establish a precedent affecting generally the rights of foreigners in Turkey.

My colleagues the Russian and Belgian Consuls, who have steamship lines in their jurisdiction similar to the American Company, tell me that I am undoubtedly right in my views. I am not pressing my claim as I cannot enforce it without definite support.

Being on the ground here, however, I am in a position to inform the Department that though it may be unfortunate that these ships have acquired the right to carry the American flag, no middle course is now possible. Either some way must be found to take the flag off these ships or they must have full protection within the law. The fact that I have not insisted on taking over Captain Macris is already giving the impression here that American protection is a weak pillar to lean on. As I point out in my memorandum, it is hard to distinguish between ships "regularly documented" and others.

I have [etc.]

GEORGE HORTON.

[Inclosure 1.]

Memorandum as to the law concerning jurisdiction in the case of Spiro Macris, Captain of the American S. S. Texas.

On the 29th of April, 1912, the Texas, a ship of the American Archipelago Steamship Company, was sunk at the entrance of the Harbor of Smyrna, either by a shell fired from a shore battery or by a torpedo anchored in the bay.

It is certain that shells were fired from the shore battery; it is also claimed by the Turks that the harbor is mined, as a precaution against attacks by the Italians, there being now a state of war between Turkey and Italy.

The sinking of the Texas occurred about 6 o'clock in the evening, and this Consulate General immediately began an enquiry as to the causes and reasons.

The captain of the Texas was rescued from the water in a wounded and insensible condition and taken to the Greek hospital, an Ottoman institution, and put under strong police guard, the Turks claiming that he was the sole cause of the unfortunate incident.

It immediately appeared that various witnesses of the disaster were afraid to give their testimony to the Consulate; and the possession of the captain, a most important witness, by the Turkish authorities seemed likely to work detriment to the American interests involved. This Consulate General therefore notified the Vilayet that the crew of the vessel were temporarily under American protection and demanded that the captain be turned over to the American authorities. The Vilayet denied this request and replied by conducting the captain, with great show of military force, to the Ottoman hospital, where he was locked up in a room with criminals.

The Consulate General did not press its claim for the custody of the captain but has proceeded with great caution, awaiting definite instructions from the imbassy.

The action of the Turkish authorities is based upon two reasons:

1. They admit that a seaman takes his protection from the flag under which he serves; but they contend that, the vessel having been sunk, the reason for protection no longer exists.

2. They do not admit that the company in question is American.

In this second contention they come into sharp conflict with the American Government, which says that the company is American and has so notified its consular and diplomatic officers in Turkey. A copy of the Turkish Government's answer, with translation, is herewith enclosed.

As to the first point at issue, this Consulate General acted after careful study of the law and the facts, which it interprets as follows:

The ships of the American Steamship Company formerly belonged to a Turkish company; they were bought by Charles J. Missir, a naturalized American citizen, the transfer taking place before Mr. Harris, at that time our Consul General at Smyrna.

Charles Missir then organized the Archipelago American Steamship Company under the laws of the State of Maine, and sold out his interest to said company, taking stock in exchange. This stock he afterwards sold to Rufus W. Lane, a native-born American citizen, who now is president of the company and holds over $\frac{3}{4}$ of the shares. Thus more than 95 per cent of the entire stock is owned by American citizens.

These vessels are not vessels of the United States according to the provisions of the Revised Statutes of 1878, Section 4131 et seq.

According to Paragraph 341, however, of the Consular Regulations the right of citizens of the United States to acquire property in foreign ships is held to be a natural right, independent of statutory law; and according to Paragraph 347 of the same Regulations "the practice of carrying the flag by such vessels is now established". Paragraph 200 of the Consular Regulations states that: "It is held that the circumstance that the vessel is American is evidence that the seamen on board are also American, and that in every regularly documented merchant vessel the crew will find their protection in the flag that covers them." See also Paragraph 629, C. R.

The question now arises whether, in countries where extraterritoriality exists, it is possible to make a distinction between regularly documented American vessels and those which, having been bought by American citizens, have acquired the right to carry the flag.

A vessel owned by American citizens and flying the American flag becomes to all intents and purposes an American vessel, and the Government of the United States, in allowing the use of the flag, assumes certain responsibilities to those serving under it, the non-enforcement of which may result in loss of prestige for the flag itself. Foreign peoples cannot always distinguish between regularly documented vessels and others not so documented.

Hinckley, in "American Consular Jurisdiction in the Orient", says (page 87), "It is a rule, believed now to be generally accepted, that for purposes of protection a seaman, duly enrolled as a member of the crew of a merchant ship of a nationality different from his own, is to be regarded of the same nationality as the ship on which he serves"; and the John Ross case is cited. On page 88 of Hinckley is found the following footnote: "A foreigner, the master of an American-owned, unregistered American vessel, sailing under an American flag, and whose name was borne upon the ship's articles, was held to be under the jurisdiction of the American Consular Court at Kanagawa in 1886 for a crime committed in Japan." This is a precedent in all respects relevant.

In the present case of the Texas the captain was seized by the Ottoman authorities and imprisoned, for the reasons above given, who will probably try him on a criminal charge, and may convict him and sentence him to severe punishment. The Ottoman authorities recognize the principle that a seaman takes his protection from the flag that covers him, but attempt to evade it by a quibble, as seen above. As has been pointed out, the people of this region do not discriminate between "regularly documented" vessels and others, and failure of the American Government to demand the captain, who is a Greek subject, for trial in the American tribunals will be set down to weakness and will result in loss of prestige.

Wharton's "International Law Digest", vol. 1, page 808, states: "When, however, such an offender, being a member of the crew of an American vessel, is a subject or a citizen of a country having no treaty engagements on this question with China or Japan, or where the consul of the nation to which such person may belong shall decline to assume jurisdiction over him for the offence charged against him, it is the opinion of this Department that the consular officers of the United States may properly assume jurisdiction in the case." (Mr. Cadwalader, Acting Secretary of State, to Mr. Avery, No. 2, 1875.)

The records of this Consulate show that on several occasions the Turkish courts have sent citations to the American Consulate General for officers of the Archipelago American Steamship Company to appear before a Turkish tribunal. This Consulate has paid no attention to these citations, as the United States Government does not admit that an American citizen can be tried for a criminal offence by a Turkish court; but the fact of the citations proves that the Ottoman courts acknowledge that these seamen take their protection from the American flag.

Henry Bonfils and Paul Fanchille, in the "Manuel de Droit International Public", page 400, section 601, state: "La nationalité d'un navire de commerce est fréquemment reconnue, pour l'oeil exercé des marins, par la forme extérieure même du navire, par son gréement ou par sa voilure; mais juridiquement elle n'est établié que par le pavillon et par les papiers de bord."

Indeed, what other means exists more inevitable for establishing the nationality of a ship than the flag which it carries? It should be observed that in cases concerning seamen on the vessels of the Archipelago American Steamship Company the Greek Consulate has invariably acknowledged the right of the American jurisdiction, and the Greeks have gone more deeply into these matters than any nation in the Near East.

In volume 6 of "The Federal Statutes", edited by McMinney & Kemper, section 4612, we find a definition in point: "In the construction of this Title, every person having command of any vessel belonging to any citizen of the United States shall be deemed the master thereof; and every person (apprentices excepted) who shall be employed or engaged to serve in any capacity on board the same shall be deemed and taken to be a seaman."

In view of the above facts, I respectfully request that such action be taken at Constantinople as will induce the Sublime Porte to give the necessary orders to the authorities here to deliver over the Captain of the steamship Texas to the jurisdiction of the American Consular Court in this city.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE HORTON.

[Inclosure 2-Translation.]

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs to the American Consul General at Smyrna.

VILAYET OF AIDIN, MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS, May 4, 1912.

The present is in answer to the verbal note No. 476 of 2d May, 1912. The formalities for the recognition as American, by the Ottoman Government, of the company to which the S. S. Texas belongs, have not yet come to a conclusion. Leaving this point aside, it is exclusively possible for the crew of a vessel to enjoy the protection of the flag the vessel flies, while they are in the vessel. By the fact that the vessel sank and her captain and crew have landed, they cannot enjoy the protection in question, and as they get back to their original nationality they should be acted upon accordingly. Although, as already stated above, the American nationality of the vessels of the Hadji Daout Company has not been accepted by the Government, nevertheless the investigation which you state is being conducted by the Consulate General will not be prevented, but the result of the investigation, no matter what it may be, will not be considered as official, by the local authorities, and this investigation will not affect the dispositions of the one which the Government has made.

The Consul General has requested delivery of the captain for his detention in accordance with your instructions to me. I have also made representations to the Foreign Office in the same sense ¹ and asked it to supply me with certain data necessary to elucidation monetary [sic] facts. I have reserved all questions of importance, claims and jurisdiction.

My telegram of May 12. In your cable of May 8 you directed that, should the charge be connected with the sinking, the surrender of the captain should be requested. These instructions were complied with, at the same time requesting chart and data necessary to establish the facts.¹

While our right to protect the steamship company as an American corporation in all its civil and commercial affairs and litigation is clear, it is very doubtful that penal jurisdiction of American consuls can be extended to persons other than American citizens. The present case is not an action against the company for damages caused to passengers or others by the sinking of the vessel, but the beginning of prosecution against the person of a Greek subject charged with having caused the sinking of a merchant vessel in Ottoman territorial waters through disobeying regulations concerning navigation during war and resulting in the death of many persons of whom several were Turkish subjects. If it could be established or should it appear reasonably likely that the facts of the case are as stated by the Turkish authorities and that the charge is not trumped up, I cannot perceive how we can object to Ottoman jurisdiction.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs assured me today that the data I had asked for would be furnished. In case I am convinced that the data thus received justifies me, I will waive request for surrender of the captain, unless otherwise instructed. The Department can be sure that the Turkish Government will categorically deny our jurisdiction in the matter, and it has the advantage over us of its custody of the captain. Where our right is not clear it is better not to make the claim than to make it and then withdraw.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 29, 1912.

Your May 13 and May 16. The Department, after careful consideration of the facts leading up to the arrest and detention of the captain of the Texas by Ottoman authorities at Smyrna, can reach no other conclusion than that it would be disadvantageous to waive our rights under circumstances which would create an undesirable precedent.

The following points are mentioned for your information as having among others influenced the Department in arriving at its conclusion:

First. Vessels belonging to citizens of the United States are entitled to fly the American flag in foreign ports, and are internationally American vessels.

Second. A seaman of whatsoever nationality serving under the American flag owes temporary allegiance to that flag and is therefore subject to its appropriate jurisdiction.

Third. American vessels and consequently their crews in the waters of countries in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction are subject to two sorts of consular jurisdiction: Firstly, that which (as to the internal government of the ship and members of its crew) would belong to the consul in any port not extraterritorial, either by virtue of the general principles of international law or by virtue of special treaty provisions; and, secondly, that which would accrue by virtue of extraterritorial rights, which the Department is strongly inclined to believe extends to jurisdiction in the case of crimes and misdemeanors committed in territorial waters by a citizen or member of the crew (other than subjects of the port country) against whatsoever parties.

Therefore, in accordance with the principles of extraterritorial jurisdiction which this Government has hitherto asserted, you are instructed, notwithstanding the probability that the Ottoman Government may decline, again to make upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in such manner as you deem most appropriate, a specific request for the surrender of the captain to the jurisdiction of the American Consul General at Smyrna, in addition to reserving in behalf of this Government all rights in connection with the case.

The steamship New York of the American Company while leaving Saloniki on the 23d instant, being warned that it was dangerous to proceed without a pilot boat, is reported to have dropped anchor when told not to stop there and in so doing to have pulled up cable connecting the mines electrically controlled from shore. Had they been contact mines, another catastrophe would have been almost inevitable. This is at least the tenth time that one or another of these vessels has required warning because of specific violation of well-known regulations governing passage of mine fields in Smyrna and Saloniki bays. The Sublime Porte points out the urgent necessity for putting an end to this inexplicable and inexcusable conduct of these captains and disclaims all responsibility for the results of their disobedience of established regulations.

I am warning the company of the tremendous risks it takes in permitting such irregularities on the part of its captains but I fear it will pay scant attention to my notice, as it has done in most previous cases. It is particularly regrettable that not one of the captains or chief engineers of the company is an American citizen or presumably qualified to secure American certificate for the position he holds.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 4, 1912.

The American Ambassador at Constantinople advises Department that while leaving Saloniki on the 23d ultimo the steamship New York of the Archipelago-American Steamship Company, having been warned it was dangerous to proceed without pilot, dropped anchor in place forbidden, thus pulling up cable connecting mines controlled electrically from shore. Had they been contact mines, another catastrophe like Texas incident would almost certainly have occurred. Further reported that this is but one of many occasions when vessels of this line have violated well-known and specific regulations governing passage of mine fields at Smyrna and Saloniki bays.

This and many other complaints of a not dissimilar character convinces the Department that, as at present conducted, this line is not only not a credit to this nation, but is a source of such constant irritation and friction between this and the Ottoman Government as, if continued, might menace the friendliness of the two Governments, and the Department is therefore constrained to say that unless orders are immediately given to the captains of this company's boats to obey the port regulations governing passage of mine fields established by the Ottoman Government, and unless those orders and regulations are immediately and properly observed, the Department will be compelled wholly to withdraw protection of this Government and so to inform the Ottoman Government and American diplomatic and consular officers.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's cable instruction of May 29th, wherein the Embassy was instructed, notwithstanding that the Ottoman Government might decline, to make upon the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs in such manner as I might deem most appropriate a specific request for the surrender of Captain Macris, of the Archipelago American Steamship Company's vessel Texas, to the jurisdiction of the American Consul General at Smyrna, reserving at the same time, in behalf of the United States Government, all rights in connection with this

Mr. Horton further reported, on June 6th, that Captain Macris was still in the prison ward of the Turkish hospital at Smyrna. The Embassy thereupon made to the Sublime Porte, in its note of June 8th, a copy of which is enclosed, a specific request for the surrender of this captain to the custody of the American Consulate General at Smyrna, to be tried by the American Consular Court for such charges as may be properly brought against him on account of any act committed by him while performing his duties as master of the said American vessel. Referring to the Embassy's memorandum of May 11th, 1912, regarding the matter of the sinking of the steamship Texas of the Archipelago American Steamship Company, wherein reservation was made for later discussion of the question of jurisdiction in this matter, the Embassy of the United States of America now has the honor to point out that as the Texas was an American vessel, the property of an American corporation and flying the American flag, and as the captain of this vessel is held for a crime alleged to have been committed by him while aboard this American vessel and in his capacity as master of the same, he is subject to the same jurisdiction as would be an American citizen serving in like capacity.

This Embassy has now the honor to inform the Sublime Porte that it has been surprised to learn through the American Consulate General at Smyrna that the said Spiro Macris has been removed by the Ottoman authorities from the hospital prison and thrown into the common prison of convicted criminals.

This Embassy can not understand how, before the Sublime Porte had done the Embassy the honor to give a reply to the memorandum of the 11th of May last requesting that the local authorities should not be permitted to proceed further in the matter, and to the said note verbale of the Sth instant, requesting the surrender of the said Spiro Macris to the American Consulate General for trial, the Ottoman authorities at Smyrna have been responsible for such action altogether incompatible with the elementary rules of international courtesy. MEMORANDUM.

In the matter of the sinking of the American steamship Texas, flying the American flag, on the 11th of May, 1912, the American Ambassador called at the Sublime Porte and in an official interview informed the Imperial Ministry for Foreign Affairs that, having been informed that the captain of the said vessel had been removed to the prison hospital, and reserving the discussion of the question of jurisdiction, he had instructed the American Consul General at Smyrna to request the Governor General of the Vilayet of Aidin to inform him of the charges brought against the captain. In case the local authorities would inform the Consul General that the captain was held for alleged offense connected with the sinking of the Texas, the Consul General was instructed to point out that diversity of report existed concerning the cause of the sinking of the said vessel, and to request the Ottoman authorities that pending determination of this point, which is now under investigation, they surrender to him for custody the captain of the said American vessel.

In order to clearly and definitely understand the case, the Ambassador requested the Imperial Ministry for Foreign Affairs to immediately furnish the Embassy with a chart showing the exact and actual location of the wreck, the buoys, the courses, and the ships at the date of sinking, these data being absolutely necessary to determine the facts of the case. The Ambassador further stated that before the above chart was furnished and the facts of the case were fully known, the local authorities should not be permitted to proceed further in the matter. The discussion of damages also was reserved.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Department's unnumbered instruction of June 5th, 1912, expressing approval of the manner in which the question of jurisdiction over the captain of the S. S. Texas has been handled by this office. The support of the Department in this matter has caused me the liveliest satisfaction as further reflection and study has strengthened my conviction that such vessels are, internationally, American vessels. Indeed logic and reason, which are or should be the basis of all law, admit of no other conclusion. American citizens have the natural right to acquire property in foreign-built vessels. Such property once acquired, the question arises: How shall it be classified for purposes of international jurisdiction and protection? A ship can never be treated as a factory, a shop or a piece of real estate, for the reason that it is in its nature totally distinct from such kind of property and is subject to special laws, traditions and regulations. A ship is always a ship, even though acquired as property, and when the Government gives a ship the right to fly the flag, it assumes the responsibility connected with the act. For this reason the transfer of foreign ships to the American flag is considered such a serious matter and is hedged in by so many precautions by the Government. Common sense suggests the question: If a ship legally flying the American flag is not an American ship, what is it? A sufficient answer to that question will suggest how else to treat such vessels in matters of jurisdiction, than as American vessels.

I have the honor to enclose herewith a further report of some incidents seeming to have a bearing on the sinking of the Texas.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that yesterday the captain of the Texas was taken to the penal court at the Konak and his trial, in connection with the sinking of the vessel, begun, as telegraphed to you this morning. He was taken through the streets in company with about twenty others, also under indictment, himself handcuffed to another man. In accordance with my instructions, he replied to the court that he did not recognize their jurisdiction as he was, at the time when the catastrophe occurred, captain of a vessel flying the American flag.

After a few questions had been asked him, and other witnesses examined, the trial was adjourned to the 30th July next.

The whole conduct of the Turkish authorities in this case convince me that they are merely feeling their way. They cannot but recognize that they have no jurisdiction in the premises, and they are proceeding slowly to see how far the Americans will let them go. They first left him in the hospital for a long time before removing him to prison. Next, they have commenced a trial and have postponed it for three weeks, again feeling their way. The situation and the question of jurisdiction are thoroughly understood by the more intelligent portion of the community here, and our helplessness in the matter seriously compromises our prestige to an extent which probably cannot be realized either at Washington or at Constantinople. The facts that the vessel never should have been allowed to fly the flag and that the captain is a Greek has no bearing on the question at issue, which is one of law and prestige.

Constantinople, July 15, 1912.

Mr. Ambassador: I have had the honor to receive the note in which your excellency, referring to previous communications from the Embassy of the United States of America, feels called upon to protest against the imprisonment and trial by the Ottoman judicial authorities of Captain Spiro Macris, who was in command of the Texas at the time of her shipwreck; to request the suspension of the inquiry until a detailed sketch of the locality of the accident should be furnished to the Embassy; and finally to demand the transfer of the judicial action and the surrender of the accused to American consular jurisdiction.

In seizing this occasion to repeat to your excellency how much I deplore this accident, which caused the death of a large number of Ottoman subjects as well as the loss of a ship flying the American flag, I feel obliged to point out that the judicial proceedings brought against the said captain have been amply justified by grave evidence establishing his responsibility, of which the competent Ottoman tribunal will have to judge the value.

Although for pressing reasons of national defense in time of war (reasons already known, if I am not mistaken, to the Embassy and the American Consulate at Smyrna) the military authorities had been unable to furnish the sketch demanded by your excellency, the notices from my Department, dated May 19th and 30th, as well as the information gathered on the spot by the representatives of the Embassy, ought to have enlightened your excellency about the circumstances which brought about this deplorable accident.

This written and verbal information has demonstrated clearly that, in spite of the scrupulous care with which the Imperial authorities at Smyrna had particularly drawn the attention of the Hadji Daoud Company to the inexplicable negligence of its captains in complying with the regulations made solely in the very interest of the safety of vessels, the captain of the Texas on the day of the accident, following the custom of the captains of the company, did not heed the blank and loaded shots fired by the battery and had himself run against a torpedo.

The imprudence or the bravado with which the said captains prided themselves in transgressing the regulations was fated to end in this catastrophe, and it is not difficult to imagine the spirit in which the company and its employees now seek to cast all the odium of it upon our military authorities, and that, too, against all evidence and against all the abstract and concrete proof establishing in such an overwhelming manner the fact that the loaded shots were not aimed to strike the vessel and did not and could not hit

The judicial proceedings intended to establish Captain Macris' responsibility are therefore absolutely legitimate, and I find it impossible to arrest their course, particularly as my Department and the Impossible to arrest their smyrna have already enlightened the Embassy of the Republic upon the circumstances of the accident without its seeming necessary to unmask the whole system of defense of a port which is continually menaced by the enemy.

Regarding the competency of the American Consular Court, I am constrained to point out, while reserving the Imperial Government's point of view concerning Article IV of the Treaty of 1830, that in this complicated case, where grave Ottoman interests are at stake, the accused, who is not of American nationality, was arrested outside of his ship, which was as a matter of fact lost, and that he is being prosecuted for having caused injury to the said Ottoman interests.

There cannot therefore be any question of the competence of the American Consulate.

As to the reserves formulated by the Embassy of the Republic in the last paragraph of its note verbale of June 8, I need not remark that the Imperial Government cannot under any circumstances admit any responsibility whatever in connection with an accident due solely to the fault of Captain Macris, and that, on the contrary, it reserves all rights to an indemnity for losses caused to individuals and to the Ottoman State.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of the 15th instant which his excellency Assim Bey, then Minister for Foreign Affairs, had the kindness to send me in reply to several communications from this Embassy concerning the case of Spiro Macris, captain of the steamship Texas, at the time of her sinking in April last, and in which his excellency expressed his regrets for the sinking of this ship.

As stated in its memorandum of May 11,1 in order to arrive at an intelligent conclusion as to the facts of the case, this Embassy had requested to be furnished with a chart showing the location of the wreck and other data, and that the local authorities should not proceed further in the matter before all the facts of the case were fully known. By its note verbale No. 91 of the 8th of June which referred to the question of jurisdiction, this Embassy had the honor to state that as the Texas was an American vessel, the property of an American corporation and flying the American flag, and as her captain was held for a crime alleged to have been committed by him while aboard that American vessel, and in his capacity as master of the same, he was subject to the same jurisdiction as would be an American citizen serving in like capacity. Embassy therefore specifically requested the surrender of the said captain to the custody of the American Consul General at Smyrna, to be tried by the American Consular Court for such charges as might be properly brought against him on account of any act committed by him while performing his duties as master of the said American vessel.

By its note verbale No. 103 of the 27th of June,3 the Embassy found itself obliged to enter a protest against the authorities at Smyrna, who had seen fit to remove the said captain (a man who had not been tried by any court whatsoever, competent or incompetent) from the hospital prison and to throw him into the common prison of convicted criminals. By the note No. 111 of the 10th instant, I had the honor to inform his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that notwithstanding the request contained in the above-mentioned communications, all of which had remained unanswered, the trial of Spiro Macris had commenced in the Ottoman criminal court at Smyrna, and therefore. reserving all rights. I entered a formal protest against the attempt on the part of the Ottoman authorities to try the said captain, pending the determination of the question raised in the above-mentioned communications.

A careful perusal of the above-mentioned communications will clearly show that this Embassy had expressed no opinion as to the culpability or nonculpability of the said Spiro Macris. The Embassy had requested:

1. To be furnished with a chart, and that the local authorities should not be allowed to proceed with the case before all the facts of the case were fully

2. Whereas the said captain is, for the reasons fully explained, subject to the same jurisdiction as would be an American citizen serving in like capacity, that he be surrendered to the custody of the American Consul General at

3. The Embassy had found itself obliged to enter a formal protest against the unwarranted action of the local authorities, who had taken the liberty to throw the said captain into the common prison of convicted criminals even, before the question of jurisdiction had been fully discussed between the Imperial Ministry and this Embassy.

In the Imperial Ministry's note of the 15th instant, I notice that notwithstanding its importance the third point is entirely ignored. Part of the first is incidentally mentioned, and the second is not directly and fully answered. may be allowed to state that the note seems to seek to carry the discussion on There seems to be an effort to prove that the Ottoman authorianother ground.

ties at Smyrna acted quite properly, while the captain of the Texas, like other captains of the American Archipelago Steamship Company (not the Hadji Daoud Company), an habitual violator of port orders, brought about through his own fault the sinking of the Texas. I beg, however, to state that that is not the point under discussion. Supposing that the captain of the Texas was at fault, supposing that the sinking of the vessel with all the loss of life and of property which it entailed was solely due to the captain, supposing that there was criminal negligence on his part and a very just ground for a prosecution, the question at issue is: Who has jurisdiction to try the captain of the American vessel? This Embassy replies it is the American Court at Smyrna which has jurisdiction, because the Texas was an American vessel, the property of an American corporation and flying the American flag, because the captain of the vessel is held for a crime alleged to have been committed by him while aboard this American vessel and in his capacity as master of the same, he is consequently subject to the same jurisdiction as would be an American citizen serving in like capacity. The Sublime Porte, however, without giving a direct answer to the argument put forward by the Embassy, states that the captain, who is a Hellenic subject, was arrested outside of his vessel, and that he is prosecuted for having caused damage to Ottoman interests.

I am therefore obliged to take note that the Imperial Ministry has not fully replied to the important points contained in the several communications from this Embassy, to again ask that orders be given to the local authorities to proceed no further in the matter before all the facts of the case are fully known and the points of jurisdiction fully discussed. Otherwise I shall be obliged to maintain my protest against any attempt on the part of the local authorities to try the captain of an American vessel for charges of acts alleged to have been committed by him while performing his duties as master of the said American vessel, and I hereby have the honor to renew the reservations as to all rights in the premises.

The American Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

American Embassy, Constantinople, September, 6, 1912.

No. 273.]

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 247 of July 18, 1912, with regard to the trial of Spiro Macris, Captain of the S. S. Texas of the Archipelago American Steamship Company at the time of her sinking in Smyrna harbor on April 29th last, I have the honor to report that I had an interview with his excellency Noradunghian Effendi on August 26 last, in the course of which this matter was again discussed.

In reply to my presentation of the arguments which this Embassy had previously put forward under the Department's instructions, the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs repeated the arguments already advanced by his Government to support its claim of jurisdiction, to the effect that the charge against the captain of the Texas is one against the person of Spiro Macris, not against the Archipelago American Steamship Company, the crime for which the accused is held, that of disobeying the port regulations of Smyrna in time of war, was committed by an Hellenic subject in Ottoman territorial waters and resulted in the loss of life of Ottoman subjects; and he pointed out that at the institution of the trial jurisdiction in the premises was recognized by the Hellenic Government, which could not have done otherwise, as vested in the Ottoman courts. With reference to the last point, I beg leave to enclose herewith copies of recent correspondence with our Consul General at Smyrna, from which it appears that the trial of Macris is being conducted by the Ottoman court in the presence of the dragoman of the Hellenic Con-sulate.

His excellency then proceeded to make an assertion that includes points which have not hitherto been made in support of his Government's contention in this case. He said that if his Government should admit the view of the American Government this Hellenic subject should be tried by the American Consular Court as an American citizen, because the Texas was an American vessel, the property of an American corporation and flying the American flag, and because this Hellenic subject is held for a crime alleged to have been committed by him while aboard this American vessel and in his capacity as master of the same; should his Government admit this, it would be forced to the consequent admission that an Ottoman subject who might happen to be the captain of one of the ships of the American company would, under similar circumstances, be subject to the jurisdiction of the American Consular Court. that such a thing would be manifestly impossible, contrary to all principles of penal procedure and jurisdiction as applied in Turkey, and which the American Government would not think of claiming. The Minister said that, moreover, a trial of an Ottoman subject in

The Minister said that, moreover, a trial of an Ottoman subject in an American Consular Court under an analogous state of facts would be contrary to the provisions of the "Regulation in regard to Foreign Consulates" of 1863. This regulation was accepted by all the diplomatic missions accredited here and lays down the general rule that no Ottoman subject can be withdrawn from Ottoman jurisdiction by a "trust, employment or service which he may hold from a foreign

In tracing the origin of this regulation it appears that in the 18th and the beginning of the 19th centuries a system of protection of Ottoman subjects by foreign consulates grew up in Turkey which seems to have been abusive. A large number of Ottoman subjects, not in the foreign diplomatic or consular service, was being "protected" by some foreign consulate. The effect of such "protection" was that in all civil or criminal actions these persons were treated as foreign subjects. The system of "protection" was even extended to the members of the "protégé's" family and could be transmitted by inheritance to his descendants. The Porte objected to this system and when towards 1860 it realized that at certain seaports the foreign "protégés" were more numerous than Ottoman subjects themselves, it decided to use every proper means at its disposal to put an end to this anomalous state of affairs. In September, 1860, the Porte informed the diplomatic missions that any Ottoman subject who should obtain foreign "protection" must leave the Empire within three months after securing such "protection." If he refused to leave, he would be treated in every way as an Ottoman subject. The attitude of the Porte was regarded as justifiable and in 1863 the diplomatic missions agreed to the above-mentioned regulation, so that the Porte has ever since considered it as in the nature of an international act.

The principal provisions of the regulation are that foreign consular "protection" extended to Ottoman subjects is limited only sular "protection" extended to Ottoman subjects is limited only to dragomans and cavasses in actual service, called privileged "temporary protégés"; that the number of such "protégés" is fixed according to the rank of the consular office they serve; that so long as they are in such service they are treated in all their affairs, official and private, as permanent protégés, i. e., as subjects of the country which they serve; that this withdrawal from their natural jurisdiction is a temporary and exceptional condition which lasts only so long as they are in the actual service of the foreign consulate. other Ottoman subjects who are employed by other foreigners, this regulation clearly provides that "no Ottoman subject can be withdrawn from Ottoman jurisdiction by the trust, employment or service that he may hold from a foreign subject, only the foreign interests that may be found in his hands shall enjoy foreign protection.

* * * " "Beyond the foreign interests with which they may be entrusted Ottoman subjects (other than temporary protégés) shall not cease for a single instant to retain their character of Ottoman subjects and to be under Ottoman jurisdiction in their private affairs and in their persons."

The last is the provision to which the Minister for Foreign Affairs attaches great importance, because, he says, as stated above, should American jurisdiction be admitted in the case of this Hellenic subject, the same jurisdiction must be admitted in the case of an

Ottoman subject who might serve in a similar capacity.

After hearing the argument of the Minister, I reiterated our view of the question at issue and in reply to his request that we should admit the jurisdiction of the Otoman courts, I stated that I could not do so.

In connection with this matter, there is another important consideration which I deem it proper to submit. From the remarks of some Ottoman officials, it would appear that certain of the heirs of Ottoman subjects who lost their lives in the Texas disaster, or other Ottoman subjects who claim to have sustained losses on account of the disaster, may bring against the Archipelago American Steamship Company civil actions to recover damages; such actions, if ever brought, would be brought in the Mixed Court at Smyrna. Before taking any steps, however, these persons would naturally wait to see the result of the criminal prosecution against the captain of the Texas. Should he be acquitted, they may give up the idea of bringing actions against the company. Should he, on the other hand, be found guilty, then probably they will act against the company.

The Ottoman officials may think, therefore, that in order to shield the American Company against the future civil suits, the American Consular Court would be more lenient towards the accused than the Ottoman courts; but, following the same line of argument, the American Consulate General at Smyrna or the American Company might think that the Ottoman Court would be unduly severe against the captain, in order to pave the way for the same civil actions of Ottoman subjects.

Had the Porte admitted the view of the Department and had the man been tried by the Consular Court and found guilty, then such Ottoman subjects would at once apply to the Mixed Court and claim damages from the company. But if, on the contrary, in spite of this Embassy's representations, the Porte allows the trial of Macris to go on in the Ottoman courts and they find him guilty, and then civil actions are instituted against the company, the Consulate General at Smyrna would be in a position to dispute the legality of the sentence against Macris which Ottoman subjects might use as a basis for the civil action.

The captain is still lying in a Turkish prison, and has recently been moved from the private room where he was put at the request of this Consulate General to a room where he is confined with a

This Consulate General, soon after the sinking of the Texas, and acting under instructions from the Embassy, requested that the Six: I have the honor to confirm my telegram of yesterday in reply to telegraphic inquiry from the Embassy in the matter of the captain of the Texas. The status of this case remains unchanged, with the single exception that, owing to representations made by this Consulate General, Macris has again been removed from the large room where he was confined with several other prisoners and been given a room to himself.

I obtained this confession by informing the Governor General that my Government still held steadfastly to the opinion that this captain of an American-owned vessel belonged to the jurisdiction of the American Consulate and was being illegally detained by Ottoman authorities and that all mental suffering or bodily discomfort sustained by him as the cause of such illegal detention would be taken into account in the final reckoning.

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL, Smyrna, October 22, 1912.

Sir: Referring to my telegram of yesterday, I have the honor to inform you that the procedure in the case of the captain of S. S. Texas before the Penal Court of this city has now taken a different phase. At a sitting held today three petitions were read. One from the Ministry of War, demanding the condemnation of the captain and the Archipelago American Steamship Company to the payment of a sum amounting to over Ltqs. 660 for the mine alleged to have exploded at the time of the catastrophe. The other two, brought by the heirs of certain persons who sank with the steamer, demand indemnification for life and property lost, from the same parties. The company having now been implicated in the case, the presence of the American dragoman was deemed necessary, and for this reason the Court adjourned and postponed the case for a later date.

The Consulate General has received summons for the general manager of the company to appear before the Penal Court as defendant for "causing deaths," but these were not served by the Consulate in virtue of Art. 4 of our Treaty of 1834 with the Sublime Porte.

I have learned that the claims by the relatives of the victims for damages from the captain and the company have been provoked by the Turkish authori-

I am at a loss to understand the motive of the Government's action, as the authorities here know better than anybody else that the American Government does not recognize the jurisdiction of the Turkish Penal Court in cases where an American is implicated as defendant.

The American dragoman will therefore refuse to attend officially any trial in the Ottoman Penal Court either against the captain or the company.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Constantinople, October 31, 1912.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that on the 21st instant, having received your cabled instructions of October 18, in regard to the trial of Spiro Macris, captain of the Archipelago American S. S. Texas, sunk in Smyrna harbor on April 29th last, I had an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs. * * * I called his excellency's attention to the fact that the man had now been incarcerated at Smyrna for more than six months, that no effective steps had been taken to push on his trial, and that as a result of his incarceration after removal from the hospital, his state of health was very much impaired. I added that at the present time the default of witnesses both for and against the accused seemed to render impossible an equitable disposal of his case. Furthermore, the long term of preventive prison which Macris had already served seemed a sufficient punishment under the circumstances; and I suggested on purely humanitarian grounds that it might be found possible to release him.

During the course of the conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, I suggested that it might be found possible for the Ottoman Government to enter a nolle prosequi or ordonnance de non lieu. It is obvious that a request from me that either the trial be pushed to a judgment or be nol-prossed would constitute an acknowledgement of jurisdiction, and therefore impossible for me to make.

Seeing the impossibility of securing acceptance by the Ottoman Government of our views in the matter of jurisdiction in this case, I have made numerous efforts to have Macris released, which would have left the question of jurisdiction in such cases where it was before the sinking of the Texas, but I regret to say that all my efforts have so far been unavailing. I enclose herewith a docket in which are noted the dates on which representations have been made the Minister for Foreign Affairs and to the Minister of Justice either by myself or by the legal adviser of the Embassy.

Both of these Ministers had promised to have a talk with the other in view of coming to some decision, and the Minister of Justice, who is not tied down by diplomatic usages, appeared favorably disposed to find a solution on the lines I had suggested. But pressure of work on account of the war had, the Minister of Justice stated, made it impossible for the two to find an opportunity to discuss the subject. Of course now that in the Kiamil Cabinet a new Minister of Justice comes in, the whole matter will have to be discussed over with him before I can hope to bring it to as favorable a point as it was a short time ago. This remark applies to practically all the pending affairs of this as well as other Embassies.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 19, 1912.

Several American consular officers in Turkey report the seizure of horses belonging to Americans by Ottoman authorities for military purposes. While Department is of opinion that there is insufficient legal basis upon which to rest a formal protest against the requisition of horses in cases of military necessity by the Ottoman authorities, yet you should, in the event that this practice continues, point out to the Sublime Porte that payment must be made in ready money in all such cases, or if this is impracticable, acknowledgment made by receipt with a view to future payment. In cases of requisitions already made, you will demand their return, or that full payment be made, or their acknowledgment by receipt.

The Department is informed that British and German horses have been seized, which in the case of the British were returned to their owners on demand of the British Consul General, and the German Embassy has protested against the seizure of German horses. If it be true that horses belonging to other foreigners have been returned, or if the Ottoman Government has promised not to seize horses belonging to foreigners, you will, of course, in all cases de-

While reserving the question of principle as to the legitimacy from the point of view of the Capitulations, and while admitting, out of considerations of convenience, that the Imperial authorities are justifiable to a certain extent in having recourse to such requisition, the Embassy of the United States of America desires to point out that such requisition, in order that it may be valid and executed in conditions excluding all abuses and irregularities, can take place only with the assistance of the Consulates.

For the same reasons the estimate of requisitioned objects, in view of an indemnity to be paid to the interested party, could not take place under the exclusive direction of the Imperial authorities.

In reply, the Imperial Ministry deems it its duty to point out again that foreigners residing in all countries being, equally with the natives, subject to the measure of requisition enacted in time of war, the reservations made by the Embassy of the Republic as to the legitimacy of this measure could in no way be justified.

As to the presence of the consular dragoman during the estimate of the said horses and vehicles, the Imperial Ministry begs to point out that the question of requisition being one of those which are related to the national defense and consequently has an urgent character, it could not admit of consular assistance, especially as the Imperial authorities pay very great attention to the estimate of the value of the horses and vehicles in question, in order to avoid any legitimate claim on the part of foreign nationals.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs to the American Embassy.

At the request of certain foreign missions, the Ministry for Foreign Affairs had sent the necessary communications to the Imperial Departments of War and the Interior for the safeguarding of the furniture, as well as articles of value, found in the houses at San Stefano belonging to foreign subjects where soldiers were to be lodged.

In the meantime, the military authorities have informed the Department of the Interior that, in view of the needs of the army, it has been decided to lodge the troops in the unoccupied houses of the locality, but that in order to protect the articles of furniture found there they have ordered that they be placed in a room under seal in the presence of the members of the municipality, the Mouktar and the gendarmes. The said authorities add, however, that if the foreign missions desire it they may send a delegate from their consulates in the cases in which foreigners are interested.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Constantinople, March 8, 1913.

The Embassy of the United States of America has had the honor to receive the circular notice of the Imperial Ottoman Ministry for Foreign Affairs of March 4, 1913, concerning the requisition of real property at San Stefano.

The Embassy reserves the question of principle relative to the legitimacy of this measure from the point of view of the treaties in force.

At any rate it could not admit that in a case as important as the occupation by troops of houses belonging to foreigners, the inviolability of which is consecrated by express stipulations, the Imperial authorities could of themselves decide the matter without previous agreement with the diplomatic missions.

The Embassy of the United States consequently feels obliged to protest against this proceeding, and to make the most formal reserves in regard to the damages and losses which will result from it for those within its jurisdiction; and declares that from this moment it holds the Imperial Government responsible for the reimbursement of the amount of the damages caused in this connection.

The Embassy of the United States of America regrets that consular assistance, which was provided for in the last paragraph of the above-mentioned notice, and which constitutes not a concession but an unquestionable right, has not been required at the proper time in all the cases which have arisen up to the present.

Sublime Porte,
Ministry for Foreign Affairs,
Constantinople, April 21, 1913.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has had the honor to receive the note verbale identique which the American Embassy addressed to it on the 8th of March last, in regard to the requisition of property at San Stefano belonging to American citizens.

The Commander-in-Chief ad interim of the Imperial Army, upon being informed of this step, calls attention to the fact that in time of mobilization the lodging of troops in the villages where they happen to be is provided for by the Ottoman law, as also by the laws in force in all countries, without this fact entailing the obligation of indemnifying the inhabitants.

The installing of troops in the houses at San Stefano took place by virtue of this rule. The foreign proprietors, who are in questions of real estate assimilated to Ottoman subjects, could not, owing to this fact alone, as well as considerations purely humanitarian, claim an exceptional treatment.

The Imperial Ministry feels obliged to point out that, always solicitous to safeguard foreign interests as far as possible, the Imperial Government decided to have recourse to this measure only when the rigors of winter made themselves felt to an extreme degree.

In bringing what precedes to the knowledge of the American Embassy, the Imperial Ministry is persuaded that it will kindly recognize that there is in this matter a case of force majeure and that, consequently, the Imperial Government could not be held to pay to foreign proprietors in the above-mentioned village an indemnity on the ground of the occupation of their houses.

SUBLIME PORTE. MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS. Constantinople, April 23, 1913.

The Imperial Ministry for Foreign Affairs has received the note verbale which the Embassy of the United States of America addressed to it the 22nd of February, 1913, in regard to the requisition for the needs of the war of horses and vehicles belonging to foreign subjects.

The Imperial Ministry regrets that it is unable to alter the conclusions expressed in the previous communications on this subject.

In fact, requisitions in the interests of national defense are of an urgent nature and therefore do not permit of consular assistance. Such a method would be impracticable, which the American Embassy in its sentiments of high impartiality will indeed admit.

As for the payment of the compensation for animals or objects requisitioned, the Imperial Ministry hastens to inform the Embassy that the system previously adopted is modified in the sense that the Imperial Ministry of Finance will make the said payment in cash to the interested parties at the end of the

Sir: Referring to my despatch No. 481 of April 29, 1913, on the subject of requisitions for war purposes, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy and translation of an identic note verbale sent by the diplomatic missions to the Sublime Porte in reply to its circular note verbale of April 23, 1913 [Inclosure 4 with despatch No. 481], copy of which was transmitted to the Department in my above-mentioned despatch.

AMERICAN EMBASSY. Constantinople, June 6, 1913.

The Embassy of the United States of America has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the circular note verbale of April 23 last, addressed to it by the Imperial Ministry on the subject of the requisition for war purposes of horses and vehicles belonging to foreign subjects.

This Embassy regrets that by reason of experience acquired in this connection it is unable to accept the conclusions of the Sublime Porte in regard to this question and states that it must hold to the reservations and arguments brought forward in its identic notes verbales of the 25th of January [Inclosure 1 with despatch No. 347] and the 22nd of February last [Inclosure with despatch No. 429]. The urgent character of these operations which the Sublime Porte evokes cannot in any way diminish the necessity of recourse to consular assistance.

Finally, the Embassy of the United States of America begs to point out that its above-mentioned note of February 22, has in view not only the requisition of horses and vehicles but every other sort of requisition.

SIR: Referring to my despatch No. 481 of April 29, 1913, wherein I enclosed a copy of the Sublime Porte's circular note verbale of April 21 [inclosure 3 with said despatch] in regard to the occupation by Ottoman troops of the houses of foreigners at San Stefano, I now have the honor to transmit a copy of the identic note verbale sent by the foreign missions in reply to the said note.

W. W. ROCKHILL.

[Inclosure—Identic note verbale.]

The American Embassy to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Constantinople, June 17, 1913.

The Embassy of the United States of America has had the honor to receive the note verbale addressed to it by the Imperial Ministry for Foreign Affairs on April 21 last, in regard to the requisition of property at San Stefano belonging to foreign subjects.

In reply, the Embassy of the United States takes the liberty to point out that the assimilation of foreign subjects to Ottoman subjects in matters of real property is limited, according to the provisions of the Protocol annexed to the Law of 7 Sefer, by the privileges granted to foreign subjects, by virtue of the Capitulations, in regard to the inviolability of their domicile. It is therefore inadmissible that the Imperial Ottoman Government should, without previous agreement with the foreign missions, formulate unilateral legal provisions which infringe upon this right.

If the Embassy of the United States, out of deference for the Imperial Ottoman Government, has raised no objections to the requisition of uninhabited foreign properties, it must, on the other hand, insist in the most formal manner that Ottoman troops shall not be lodged in inhabited American houses without a previous agreement between the Embassy of the United States and the Sublime Porte.

As the necessity for reimbursing foreigners for the losses and damages caused by requisitions is recognized in all the literature of international law, the Embassy of the United States of America cannot but reiterate the reservations which it formulated on this subject in its note verbale of March 8th last [inclosure No. 2 in despatch No. 481].

ARBITRATION CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND URUGUAY.

Signed at Washington, January 9, 1909; ratification advised by the Senate. January 13, 1909; ratified by the President, March 1, 1909; ratified by Uruguay, June 27, 1913; ratifications exchanged at Washington, November 14, 1913; proclaimed, November 15, 1913.

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an Arbitration Convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Uruguay was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the ninth day of January one thousand nine hundred and nine, the original of which Convention, being in the English and Spanish languages, is word for word as follows:

The Government of the United States of America, signatory of the two conventions for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, concluded at The Hague, respectively, on July 29, 1899, and October 18, 1907, and the Government of the Republic of Uruguay, adherent to the said convention of July 29, 1899, and signatory of the said convention of October 18, 1907;

Taking into consideration that by Article XIX of the convention of July 29, 1899, and by Article XL of the convention of October 18, 1907, the High Contracting Parties have reserved to themselves the right of concluding Agreements, with a view to referring to arbitration all questions which they shall consider possible to submit to such treatment:

Have authorized the Undersigned to conclude the following Convention:

. ARTICLE I.

Differences which may arise of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two Contracting Parties, and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th July, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, and maintained by The Hague Convention of the 18th October, 1907; provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two Contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third Parties.

ARTICLE II.

In each individual case the High Contracting Parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special Agreement, defining clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, and the periods to be fixed for the formation of the Arbitral Tribunal and the several stages of the procedure. It is understood that on the part of the United States such special agreements will be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and on the part of Uruguay shall be subject to the procedure required by the Constitution and laws thereof.

ARTICLE III.

The present Convention is concluded for a period of five years and shall remain in force thereafter until one year's notice of termination shall be given by either Party.

ARTICLE IV.

The present Convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; and by the President of Uruguay in accordance with the Constitution and laws thereof. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the Convention shall take effect on the date of the exchange of its ratifications.

Done in duplicate in the English and Spanish languages at Washington, this 9th day of January, one thousand nine hundred and nine.

ELIHU ROOT [SEAL] LUIS MELIAN LAFINUR [SEAL]

And whereas the said Convention has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the fourteenth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER POWERS FOR THE UNIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES OF LAW WITH RESPECT TO ASSISTANCE AND SALVAGE AT SEA.¹

Signed at Brussels, September 23, 1910; ratification advised by the Senate, January 18, 1912; ratified by the President, March 14, 1912; ratification of the United States deposited with the Government of Belgium, January 25, 1913; deposit of ratifications closed February 1, 1913; convention effective March 1, 1913; proclaimed, February 13, 1913.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Convention between the United States of America and Germany, the Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, the United States of Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, the United Mexican States, Nicaragua, Norway, the Netherlands, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Sweden and Uruguay, providing for the unification of certain rules of law with respect to assistance and salvage at sea, was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Brussels on the twenty-third day of September, one thousand nine hundred and ten, the original of which Convention, being in the French language is word for word as follows:

Who, duly authorized thereto, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1.

Assistance and salvage of seagoing vessels in danger of any things on board, of freight and passage money, and also services of the same nature rendered to each other by seagoing vessels and vessels of inland navigation are subject to the following provisions, without any distinction being drawn between the two kinds of service and in whatever waters the services have been rendered.

ARTICLE 2.

Every act of assistance or salvage which has had a useful result gives a right to equitable remuneration.

No remuneration is due if the services rendered have no beneficial esult.

In no case shall the sum to be paid exceed the value of the property salved.

ARTICLE 3.

Persons who have taken part in salvage operations, notwithstanding the express and reasonable prohibition on the part of the vessel to which services were rendered, have no right to any remuneration.

ARTICLE 4.

A tug has no right to remuneration for assistance to or salvage of the vessel she is towing or of the vessel's cargo except where she has rendered exceptional services which can not be considered as rendered in fulfilment of the contract of towage.

¹This translation of the 19 articles is identical with that transmitted to the Department by the American delegates to the Third International Conference on Maritime Law, and printed in For. Rel. 1911, pp. 14-17.

ARTICLE 5.

Remuneration is due nothwithstanding that the salvage services have been rendered by or to vessels belonging to the same owner.

ARTICLE 6.

The amount of remuneration is fixed by agreement between the parties, and, failing agreement, by the court.

The proportion in which the remuneration is to be distributed among the salvors is fixed in the same manner.

The apportionment of the remuneration among the owner, master, and other persons in the service of each salving vessel is determined by the law of the vessel's flag.

ARTICLE 7.

Every agreement as to assistance or salvage entered into at the moment and under the influence of danger can, at the request of either party, be annulled or modified by the court if it considers that the conditions agreed upon are not equitable.

In all cases, when it is proved that the consent of one of the parties is vitiated by fraud or concealment, or when the remuneration is, in proportion to the services rendered, in an excessive degree too large or too small, the agreement may be annulled or modified by the court at the request of the party affected.

ARTICLE 8.

The remuneration is fixed by the court, according to the circumstances of each case, on the basis of the following considerations: (a) First, the measure of success obtained, the efforts and the deserts of the salvors, the danger run by the salved vessel, by her passengers, crew and cargo, by the salvors and by the salving vessel, the time expended, the expenses incurred and losses suffered, and the risks of liability and other risks run by the salvors, and also the value of the property exposed to such risks, due regard being had, the case arising, to the special adaptation of the salvor's vessel; (b) second, the value of the property salved.

The same provisions apply to the apportionment provided for by the second paragraph of article 6.

The court may reduce or deny remuneration if it appears that the salvors have by their fault rendered the salvage or assistance necessary, or have been guilty of theft, receiving stolen goods, or other acts of fraud.

ARTICLE 9.

No remuneration is due from the person whose lives are saved, but nothing in this article shall affect the provisions of the national laws on this subject.

Salvors of human life who have taken part in the services rendered on the occasion of the accident, giving rise to salvage or assistance, are entitled to a fair share of the remuneration awarded to the salvors of the vessel, her cargo, and accessories.

ARTICLE 10.

A salvage action is barred after an interval of two years from the day on which the operations of assistance or salvage are terminated.

The grounds upon which the said period of limitation may be suspended or interrupted are determined by the law of the court where the case is tried.

The High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the right to provide by legislation in their respective countries that the said periods shall be extended in cases where it has not been possible to arrest the vessel assisted or salved in the territorial waters of the State in which the plaintiff has his domicile or principal place of business.

ARTICLE 11.

Every master is bound, so far as he can do so without serious danger to his vessel, her crew and passengers, to render assistance to everybody, even though an enemy, found at sea in danger of being lost.

The owner of the vessel incurs no liability by reason of contravention of the foregoing provision.

ARTICLE 12.

The High Contracting Parties whose legislation does not forbid infringements of the preceding article bind themselves to take or to propose to their respective legislatures the measures necessary for the prevention of such infringements.

The High Contracting Parties will communicate to one another, as soon as possible, the laws or regulations which have already been or may be hereafter promulgated in their States for the purpose of giving effect to the above undertakings.

ARTICLE 13.

The convention does not affect the provisions of national laws or international treaties as regards the organization of services of assistance and salvage by or under the control of public authorities, nor, in particular, does it affect such laws or treaties on the subject of the salvage of fishing gear.

ARTICLE 14.

This convention does not apply to ships of war or to Government ships appropriated exclusively to a public service.

ARTICLE 15.

The provisions of this convention shall be applied as regards all persons interested when either the assisting or salving vessel or the vessel assisted or salved belongs to one of the contracting States, and in any other cases for which the national laws provide.

Provided always, that:

1. As regards persons interested who belong to a noncontracting State the application of said provisions may be made subject by each of the contracting States to the condition of reciprocity.

2. Where all the persons interested belong to the same State as the court trying the case, the provisions of the national law and not of the convention are applicable.

3. Without prejudice to any wider provisions of any national laws, article 11 only applies as between vessels belonging to the States of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE 16.

Any one of the High Contracting Parties shall have the right three years after this convention comes into force to call for a fresh conference with a view to seeking such ameliorations as may be brought therein, and particularly with a view to extending, if possible, the sphere of its application.

Any power exercising this right must notify its intention to the other powers, through the Belgian Government, which will see to the convening of the conference within six months.

ARTICLE 17.

States which have not signed the convention are allowed to adhere to it on request. Such adhesion shall be notified through the diplomatic channel to the Belgian Government and by the latter to each of the other Governments. It shall become effective one month after the sending of the notification by the Belgian Government.

ARTICLE 18.

The convention shall be ratified.

After an interval of at most one year from the day on which the convention is signed, the Belgian Government shall place itself in communication with the Governments of the High Contracting Parties which have declared themselves prepared to ratify the convention with a view to deciding whether it is expedient to put into force.

The ratification shall, if so decided, be deposited forthwith at Brussels, and the convention shall come into force a month afterwards.

The protocol shall remain open another year in favor of the States represented at the Brussels Conference. After this interval they can only adhere to it on conforming to the provisions of Article 17.

ARTICLE 19.

In the case of one or other of the High Contracting Parties denouncing this convention, such denunciation should not take effect until a year after the day on which it has been notified to the Belgian Government, and the convention would remain in force as between the other Contracting Parties.

140322°-F R 1913----86

In witness whereof the plenipotentiaries of the respective High Contracting Parties have signed this convention and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done at Brussels, in a single copy, the 23rd September, 1910.

Le President de la Conférence Internationale de Droit Maritime, A. Beernaert.

Certifié par le Secrétaire Général du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères de Belgique.

Bruxelles, le 1er décembre 1910.

BON VAN DER ELST [SEAL]

And whereas the said Convention has been duly ratified by the Government of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the Governments of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Great Britain, Mexico, Netherlands, Roumania, and Russia, and the ratifications of the said Governments were, by the provisions of Article 18 of the said Convention, deposited by their respective plenipotentiaries with the Government of Belgium;

Now therefore be it known that I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this thirteenth day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

The President of the French Republic for Tunis:

M. de Peretti de la Rocca, Premier Secrétaire de l'Ambassade de la République française à Washington.

Who, after having been given their full respective powers, made in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 1.

The contracting countries constitute a state of Union for the protection of industrial property.

ARTICLE 2.

The subjects or citizens of each of the contracting countries shall enjoy, in all the other countries of the Union, with regard to patents of invention, models of utility, industrial designs or models, trademarks, trade names, the statements of place of origin, suppression of unfair competition, the advantages which the respective laws now grant or may hereafter grant to the citizens of that country. Consequently, they shall have the same protection as the latter and the same legal remedies against any infringements of their rights, provided they comply with the formalities and requirements imposed by the National laws of each State upon its own citizens. Any obligation of domicile or of establishment in the country where the protection is claimed shall not be imposed on the members of the Union.

ARTICLE 3.

The subjects or citizens of countries which do not form part of the Union, who are domiciled or own effective and bona fide industrial or commercial establishments in the territory of any of the countries of the Union, shall be assimilated to the subjects or citizens of the contracting countries.

ARTICLE 4.

(a) Any person who shall have duly filed an application for a patent, utility model, industrial design or model, or trademark, in one of the contracting countries, or the successor or assignee of such person shall enjoy, for the purpose of filing application in the other countries, and subject to the rights of third parties, a right of priority during the periods hereinafter specified.

(b) Consequently, the subsequent filing in one of the other countries of the Union, prior to the expiration of such periods, shall not be invalidated by acts performed in the interval, especially by another application, by publication of the invention or the working of the same, by the sale of copies of the design or model, nor by the use of the mark.

(c) The periods of priority above referred to shall be twelve months for patents and models of utility and four months for industrial designs and models as also for trademarks.

(d) Whoever shall wish to avail himself of the priority of an anterior filing, shall be required to make a declaration showing the date and the country of this filing. Each country shall determine at what moment, at the latest, this declaration must be executed. This information shall be mentioned in the publications issued by the competent Administration, particularly on patents and the specifications relative thereto. The contracting countries shall require of one who makes a declaration of priority the production of a copy of the application (specification, drawing, etc.) previously filed, certified to be a true copy by the Administration which shall have received it. This copy shall be dispensed from any legalisation. It may be required that it be accompanied by a certificate of the date of filing, issuing from this Administration, and of a translation. Other formalities shall not be required for the declaration of priority at the time of the filing of the application. Each contracting country shall determine the consequences of the omission of the formalities prescribed by the present article, unless these consequences exceed the loss of the right of priority.

(e) Later other justifications can be demanded.

ARTICLE $4\frac{1}{2}$

Patents applied for in the different contracting countries by persons admitted to the benefit of the Convention in the terms of articles 2 and 3, shall be independent of the patents obtained for the same invention in the other countries, adherent or not to the Union.

This provision shall be understood in an absolute manner, particularly in the sense that the patents applied for during the term of priority are independent, as much from the point of view of the causes of nullity and of forfeiture as from the point of view of the normal duration.

It applies to all patents existing at the time of entrance into force. It shall be likewise, in case of accession of new countries, for patents existing on both sides at the time of accession.

ARTICLE 5.

The importation, by the patentee, into the country where the patent has been granted, of articles manufactured in any of the countries of the Union shall not entail forfeiture.

However, the patentee shall be obliged to work his patent according to the laws of the country into which he introduces the patented objects, but with the restriction that the patent shall not be liable to for feiture because of non-working in one of the countries of the Union until after a term of three years, from the date of the filing of the application in that country, and only in case the patentee shall fail to show sufficient cause for his inaction.

ARTICLE 6.

Every trademark regularly registered in the country of origin shall be admitted to registration and protected as that in the other countries of the Union.

However, there may be refused or invalidated:

1. Marks which are of a nature to infringe rights acquired by third parties in the country where protection is claimed.

2. Marks devoid of all distinctive character, or even composed exclusively of signs or data which may be used in commerce, to designate the kind, quality, quantity, destination, value, place of origin of the products or the time of production, or become common in the current language or the legal and steady customs of commerce of the country where the protection is claimed.

In the estimation of the distinctive character of a mark, all the circumstances existing should be taken into account, particularly the duration of the use of the mark.

3. Marks which are contrary to morals or public order. The country where the applicant has his principal establishment shall be considered as the country of origin.

If this principal establishment is not located in one of the countries of the Union, that to which the applicant belongs shall be considered as country of origin.

ARTICLE 7.

The nature of the product on which the trademark is to be applied cannot, in any case, be an obstacle to the filing of the mark.

ARTICLE $7\frac{1}{2}$.

The contracting countries agree to admit for filing and to protect marks belonging to associations the existence of which is not contrary to the law of the country of origin, even if these associations do not possess an industrial or commercial establishment.

Each country shall be judge of the special conditions under which an association may be admitted to have the marks protected.

ARTICLE 8.

Trade names shall be protected in all the countries of the Union without the obligation of filing, whether it be a part or not of a trademark.

ARTICLE 9.

Any product bearing illegally a trademark or a trade name shall be seized at importation in those of the countries of the Union in which this mark or this trade name may have a right to legal protection.

If the laws of a country do not admit of seizure on importation, the seizure shall be replaced by prohibition of importation.

The seizure shall be likewise effected in the country where illegal affixing shall have been made, or in the country into which the product shall have been imported.

The seizure shall be made at the request of the public ministry, or any other competent authority, or by an interested party, individual or society, in conformity to the interior laws of each country.

The authorities shall not be required to make the seizure in transit. If the laws of a country admit neither of the seizure on importation nor the prohibition of importation, nor seizure in said country, these measures shall be replaced by the acts and means which the law of such country would assure in like case to its own citizens.

ARTICLE 10.

The provisions of the preceding article shall be applicable to any product bearing falsely, as indication of place of production, the name of a definite locality, when this indication shall be joined to a fictitious or borrowed trade name with an intention to defraud.

The interested party is considered any producer, manufacturer or merchant, engaged in the production, manufacture or commerce of such product, and established either in the locality falsely indicated as place of production or in the region where this locality is situated.

ARTICLE $10\frac{1}{2}$.

All the contracting countries agree to assure to the members of the Union an effective protection against unfair competition.

ARTICLE 11.

The contracting countries shall accord, in conformity with their national laws, a temporary protection to patentable inventions, working models, industrial models or designs, as well as to trademarks, for products exhibited at international expositions, official or officially recognized, organized in the territory of one of them.

ARTICLE 12.

Each of the contracting countries agrees to establish a special service for Industrial Property and a central office for the communication to the public of patents, working models, industrial models or designs and trademarks.

This service shall publish, as often as possible, an official periodical.

ARTICLE 13.

The international Office instituted at Berne under the name of "Bureau international pour la protection de la Propriété industrielle" is placed under the high authority of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, which regulates its organization and supervises its operation.

The international Bureau shall centralize information of any nature relative to the protection of industrial property, and form it in a general statistical report which shall be distributed to all Administrations. It shall proceed to considerations of common utility interesting to the Union and shall edit, with the aid of the documents put at its disposal by the different Administrations, a periodical in the French language on questions concerning the object

Numbers of this periodical, like all the documents published by the international Bureau, shall be distributed among the Administrations of the countries of the Union, in proportion to the number of contributive units mentioned below. Copies and supplementary documents which shall be requested, either by the said Administrations, or by societies or individuals, shall be paid for separately.

The international Bureau shall hold itself at all times at the disposition of the members of the Union, to furnish them special information of which they may have need, on the questions relative to the international service of industrial property. It shall make an annual report of its management which shall be communicated to all members of the Union.

The official language of the international Bureau shall be French. The expense of the international Bureau shall be borne in common by the contracting countries. They may not, in any case, exceed the sum of sixty thousand francs per year.

In order to determine the contributive part of each of the countries in this sum total of the expenses, the contracting countries and those which later join the Union shall be divided into six classes, each contributing in proportion to a certain number of units, to-wit:

		Units.
Class	1	25
Class	2	20
Class	3	15
Class	4	- 10
Class	5	10.
Class	0	6
Ciass	V	3

These coefficients shall be multiplied by the number of countries of each class, and the sum of the products thus obtained will furnish the number of units by which the total expenses are to be divided. The quotient will give the amount of the unit of expense.

Each of the contracting countries shall designate at the time of its accession, the class in which it wishes to be ranked.

The Government of the Swiss Confederation shall supervise the expenses of the international Bureau, make necessary advances and draw up annual statements of accounts which shall be communicated to all the other Administrations.

ARTICLE 14.

The present Convention shall be submitted to periodical revisions with a view to introducing improvements in it of a nature to perfect the system of the Union.

To this end Conferences of the delegates of the contracting countries shall be held successively in one of the said countries.

The Administration of the country where the Conference is to be held shall prepare, with the concurrence of the international Bureau the works of such Conference.

The Director of the international Bureau will assist at the meetings of the Conference and take part in the discussions without a vote.

ARTICLE 15.

It is understood that the contracting countries reserve to themselves respectively the right to make separately, between themselves, special arrangements for the protection of industrial Property, in so far as these arrangements may not interfere with the provisions of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 16.

The countries which has not taken part in the present Convention shall be permitted to adhere to it upon their request.

Notice of adhesion shall be made through diplomatic channels to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, and by the latter to all the others

It shall entail complete adhesion to all the clauses and admission to all the advantages stipulated by the present Convention, and shall take effect one month after the notification made by the Government of the Swiss Confederation to the other unionist countries, unless a later date shall have been indicated by the adhering country.

ARTICLE $16\frac{1}{2}$.

The contracting countries have the right to adhere at any time to the present Convention for their colonies, possessions, dependencies and protectorates, or for certain ones of them.

They may, to this end, either make a general declaration by which all their colonies, possessions, dependencies and protectorates are included in the adherence, or expressly name those included therein, or simply indicate those excluded from it.

This declaration shall be made in writing to the Government of the Swiss Confederation and by the latter made to all the others.

The contracting countries can, under like conditions, renounce the Convention for their colonies, possessions, dependencies and protectorates, or for certain ones of them.

ARTICLE 17.

The fulfillment of the reciprocal obligations contained in the present Convention is subordinated, in so far as need be, to compliance with the formalities and regulations established by the constitutional laws of those of the contracting countries which are bound to secure the application of the same which they engage to do with the least possible delay.

ARTICEE $17\frac{1}{2}$.

The Convention shall remain in force an indefinite time, until the expiration of one year from the day when the renunciation shall be made.

This renunciation shall be addressed to the Government of the Swiss Confederation. It shall affect only the country giving such notice, the Convention remaining operative as to the other contracting countries.

ARTICLE 18.

The present Act shall be ratified, and the ratification filed in Washington, at the latest, April 1, 1913. It shall be put into execution, among the countries which shall have ratified it, one month after the expiration of this period of time.

This Act, with its Final Protocol, shall replace, in the relations of the countries which shall have ratified it: The Convention of Paris, March 20, 1883; the Final Protocol annexed to that Act; the Protocol of Madrid, April 15, 1891, relating to the dotation of the international Bureau; and the additional Act of Brussels, December 14, 1900. However, the Acts cited shall remain binding on the countries which shall not have ratified the present Act.

ARTICLE 19.

The present Act shall be signed in a single copy, which shall be filed in the archives of the Government of the United States. A certified copy shall be sent by the latter to each of the unionist Governments.

In Witness Whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Act.

FINAL PROTOCOL.

At the time of proceeding to the signing of the Act concluded on this day, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries are agreed upon the following:

AD. ARTICLE 1.

The words "Propriété industrielle" (Industrial Property) shall be taken in their broadest acceptation; they extend to all production in the domain of agricultural industries (wines, grains, fruits, animals, etc.), and extractives (minerals, mineral waters, etc.).

AD. ARTICLE 2.

(a) Under the name of patents are comprised the different kinds of industrial patents admitted by the laws of the contracting countries, such as patents of importation, patents of improvement, etc.,

for the processes as well as for the products.

(b) It is understood that the provision in Article 2 which dispenses the members of the Union from the obligation of domicile and of establishment has an interpretable character and must, consequently, be applied to all the rights granted by the Convention of March 20, 1883, before the entrance into force of the present Act.

(c) It is understood that the provisions of Article 2 do not infringe the laws of each of the contracting countries, in regard to the procedure followed before the courts and the competency of those courts, as well as the election of domicile or the declaration of the selection of an attorney required by the laws on patents, working models. marks, etc.

AD ARTICLE 4.

It is understood that, when an industrial model or design shall have been filed in a country by virtue of the right of priority based on the filing of a working model, the term of priority shall be only that which Article 4 has fixed for industrial models and designs.

AD ARTICLE 6.

It is understood that the provision of the first paragraph of Article 6 does not exclude the right to require of the depositor a certificate of regular registration in the country of origin, issued by competent

It is understood that the use of badges, insignia or public decorations which shall not have been authorized by competent powers, or the use of official signs and stamps of control and of guaranty adopted by a unionist country, may be considered as contrary to public order in the sense of No. 3 of Article 6.

However, marks which contain, with the authorization of competent powers, the reproduction of badges, decorations or public insignia, shall not be considered as contrary to public order.

It is understood that a mark shall not be considered as contrary to public order for the sole reason that it is not in conformity with some provision of laws on marks, except in the case where such provision itself concerns public order.

The present Final Protocol, which shall be ratified at the same time as the Act concluded on this day, shall be considered as forming an integral part of this Act, and shall be of like force, value and duration.

In Witness Whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Protocol.

RADIOTELEGRAPH CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER POWERS. FINAL PROTOCOL. SERVICE REGULA-TIONS AND SUPPLEMENTS THERETO.¹

Signed at London, July 5, 1912; ratification advised by the Senate, January 22, 1913; ratified by the President, February 5, 1913; ratification of the United States deposited with the Government of Great Britain, February 20, 1913; proclaimed, July 8, 1913.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Radiotelegraphic Convention, with the Final Protocol and Service Regulations, between the United States and other Governments was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at London on the fifth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twelve, the originals of which Convention, Final Protocol and Service Regulations, being in the French language, are word for word as follows:

[In the publication "Treaty Series, No. 581," from which this is printed, the French text here follows, with a translation in English

[Translation.]

International Radiotelegraph Convention concluded between Germany and the German Protectorates, the United States of America and the Possessions of the United States of America, the Argentine Republic, Austria, Hungary, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Belgium, the Belgian Congo, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Denmark, Egypt, Spain and the Spanish Colonies, France and Algeria, French West Africa, French Equatorial Africa, Indo-China, Madagascar, Tunis, Great Britain and the various British Colonies and Protectorates, the Union of South Africa, the Australian Federation, Canada, British India, New Zealand, Greece, Italy and the Italian Colonies, Japan and Chosen, Formosa, Japanese Sakhalin and the leased territory of Kwantung, Morocco, Monaco, Norway, the Netherlands, the Dutch Indies and the Colony of Curaçao, Persia, Portugal and the Portuguese Colonies, Roumania, Russia and the Russian Possessions and Protectorates, The Republic of San Marino, Siam, Sweden, Turkey, and Uruguay.

The undersigned, plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the countries enumerated above, having met in conference at London, have agreed on the following Convention, subject to ratification:

ARTICLE 1.

The High Contracting Parties bind themselves to apply the provisions of the present Convention to all radio stations (both coastal stations and stations on shipboard) which are established or worked by the Contracting Parties and open to public service between the coast and vessels at sea.

They further bind themselves to make the observance of these provisions obligatory upon private enterprises authorized either to establish or work coastal stations for radiotelegraphy open to public service between the coast and vessels at sea, or to establish or work radio stations, whether open to general public service or not, and board of vessels flying their flag.

ARTICLE 2.

By "coastal stations" is to be understood every radio station established on shore or on board a permanently moored vessel used for the exchange of correspondence with ships at sea.

Every radio station established on board any vessel not permanently moored is called a "station on shipboard."

ARTICLE 3.

The coastal stations and the stations on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radiograms without distinction of the radio system adopted by such stations.

Every station on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radiograms with every other station on shipboard without distinction of the radio system adopted by such stations.

However, in order not to impede scientific progress, the provisions of the present Article shall not prevent the eventual employment of a radio system incapable of communicating with other systems, provided that such incapacity shall be due to the specific nature of such system and that it shall not be the result of devices adopted for the sole purpose of preventing intercommunication.

ARTICLE 4.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 3, a station may be reserved for a limited public service determined by the object of the correspondence or by other circumstances independent of the system employed.

ARTICLE 5.

Each of the High Contracting Parties undertakes to connect the coastal stations to the telegraph system by special wires, or, at least, to take other measures which will insure a rapid exchange between the coastal stations and the telegraph system.

ARTICLE 6.

The High Contracting Parties shall notify one another of the names of coastal stations and stations on shipboard referred to in Article 1, and also of all data, necessary to facilitate and accelerate the exchange of radiograms, as specified in the Regulations.

ARTICLE 7.

Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves the right to prescribe or permit at the stations referred to in Article 1, apart from the installation the data of which are to be published in conformity with Article 6, the installation and working of other devices for the purpose of establishing special radio communication without publishing the details of such devices.

ARTICLE 8.

The working of the radio stations shall be organized as far as possible in such manner as not to disturb the service of other radio stations.

ARTICLE 9.

distress from whatever source, to similarly answer such calls and to Radio stations are bound to give absolutely priority to calls of take such action with regard thereto as may be required.

ARTICLE 10.

The charge for a radiogram shall comprise, according to the circumstances:

1. (a) The coastal rate, which shall fall to the coastal station; (b) The shipboard rate, which shall fall to the shipboard station.

2. The charge for transmission over the telegraph lines, to be computed according to the ordinary rules.

3. The charges for transit through the intermediate coastal or shipboard stations and the charges for special services requested by

The coastal rate shall be subject to the approval of the Government of which the coastal station is dependent, and the shipboard rate to the approval of the Government of which the ship is dependent.

ARTICLE 11.

The provisions of the present Convention are supplemented by Regulations, which shall have the same force and go into effect at the same time as the Convention.

The provisions of the present Convention and of the Regulations relating thereto may at any time be modified by the High Contracting Parties by common consent. Conferences of plenipotentiaries having power to modify the Convention and the Regulations, shall take place from time to time; each conference shall fix the time and place of the next meeting.

ARTICLE 12.

Such conferences shall be composed of delegates of the Governments of the contracting countries.

In the deliberations each country shall have but one vote.

If a Government adheres to the Convention for its colonies, possessions or protectorates, subsequent conferences may decide that such colonies, possessions or protectorates, or a part thereof, shall be considered as forming a country as regards the application of the preceding paragraph. But the number of votes at the disposal of one Government, including its colonies, possessions or protectorates, shall in no case exceed six.

The following shall be considered as forming a single country for the application of the present Article;

German East Africa German Southwest Africa

Kamerun Togo Land

German Protectorates in the Pacific

Alaska

Hawaii and the other American possessions in Polynesia

The Philippine Islands

Porto Rico and the American possessions in the Antilles

The Panama Canal Zone

The Belgian Congo

The Spanish Colony of the Gulf of Guinea

French East Africa

French Equatorial Africa

Indo-China Madagascar

Tunis

The Union of South Africa The Australian Federation

Canada

British India New Zealand

Eritrea

Italian Somaliland

Chosen, Formosa, Japanese Sakhalin and the leased territory of Kwantung.

The Dutch Indies.

The Colony of Curação.

Portuguese West Africa

Portuguese East Africa and the Portuguese possessions in Asia

Russian Central Asia (littoral of the Caspian Sea)

Bokhara

Khiva

Western Siberia (littoral of the Arctic Ocean)

Eastern Siberia (littoral of the Pacific Ocean).

ARTICLE 13.

The International Bureau of the Telegraph Union shall be charged with collecting, coordinating and publishing information of every kind relating to radiotelegraphy, examining the applications for changes in the Convention or Regulations, promulgating the amendments adopted, and generally performing all administrative work referred to it in the interest of international radiotelegraphy.

The expense of such institution shall be borne by all the contracting countries.

ARTICLE 14.

Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves to itself the right of fixing the terms on which it will receive radiograms proceeding from or intended for any station, whether on shipboard or coastal, which is not subject to the provisions of the present Convention.

If a radiogram is received the ordinary rates shall be applicable to it.

Any radiogram proceeding from a station on shipboard and received by a coastal station of a contracting country, or accepted in transit by the administration of a contracting country, shall be forwarded.

Any radiogram intended for a vessel shall also be forwarded if the administration of the contracting country has accepted it originally or in transit from a non-contracting country, the coastal station reserving the right to refuse transmission to a station on shipboard subject to a non-contracting country.

ARTICLE 15.

The provisions of Articles 8 and 9 of this Convention are also applicable to radio installation other than those referred to in Article 1.

ARTICLE 16.

Governments which are not parties to the present Convention shall be permitted to adhere to it upon their request. Such adherence shall be communicated through diplomatic channels to the contracting Government in whose territory the last conference shall have been held, and by the latter to the remaining Governments.

The adherence shall carry with it to the fullest extent acceptance of all the clauses of this Convention and admission to all the advantages stipulated therein.

The adherence to the Convention by the Government of a country having colonies, possessions or protectorates shall not carry with it the adherence of its colonies, possessions or protectorates unless a declaration to that effect is made by such Government. Such colonies, possessions and protectorates, as a whole or each of them, separately, may form the subject of a separate adherence or a separate denunciation within the provisions of the present Article and of Article 22.

ARTICLE 17.

The provisions of Articles 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12 and 17 of the International Telegraph Convention of St. Petersburg of July 10-22, 1875, shall be applicable to international radiotelegraphy.

ARTICLE 18.

In case of disagreement between two or more contracting Governments regarding the interpretation or execution of the present Convention or of the Regulations referred to in Article 11, the question in dispute may, by mutual agreement, be submitted to arbitration.

In such case each of the Governments concerned shall choose another Government not interested in the question at issue.

The decision of the arbiters shall be arrived at by the absolute majority of votes.

In case of a division of votes, the arbiters shall choose, for the purpose of settling the disagreement, another contracting Government which is likewise a stranger to the question at issue. In case of failure to agree on a choice, each arbiter shall propose a disinterested contracting Government and lots shall be drawn between the Governments proposed. The drawing of the lots shall fall to the Government within whose territory the international bureau provided for in Article 13 shall be located.

ARTICLE 19.

The High Contracting Parties bind themselves to take, or propose to their respective legislatures, the necessary measures for insuring the execution of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 20.

The High Contracting Parties shall communicate to one another any laws already framed, or which may be framed, in their respective countries relative to the object of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 21.

The High Contracting Parties shall preserve their entire liberty as regards radio installations other than provided for in Article 1, especially naval and military installations, and stations used for communications between fixed points. All such installations and stations shall be subject only to the obligations provided for in Articles 8 and 9 of the present Convention.

However, when such installations and stations are used for public maritime service they shall conform, in the execution of such service, to the provisions of the Regulations as regards the mode of transmission and rates.

On the other hand, if coastal stations are used for general public service with ships at sea and also for communication between fixed points, such stations shall not be subject, in the execution of the last named service, to the provisions of the Convention except for the charge of Articles 2 and 2 of this Convention the observance of Articles 8 and 9 of this Convention.

Nevertheless, fixed stations used for correspondence between land and land shall not refuse the exchange of radiograms with another fixed station on account of the system adopted by such station; the liberty of each country shall, however, be complete as regards the organization of the service for correspondence between fixed points and the nature of the correspondence to be effected by the stations reserved for such service.

ARTICLE 22.

The present Convention shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913, and shall remain in force for an indefinite period or until the expiration of one year from the day when it shall be denounced by any of the contracting parties.

Such denunciation shall affect only the Government in whose name it shall have been made. As regards the other Contracting Powers, the Convention shall remain in force.

ARTICLE 23.

The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at London with the least possible delay.

In case one or several of the High Contracting Parties shall not ratify the Convention, it shall nevertheless be valid as to the Parties which shall have ratified it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed one copy of the Convention, which shall be deposited in the archives of the British Government, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each Party.

FINAL PROTOCOL

[Translation.]

At the moment of signing the Convention adopted by the International Radiotelegraph Conference of London, the undersigned plenipotentiaries have agreed as follows:

T.

The exact nature of the adherence notified on the part of Bosnia-Herzegovina not yet being determined, it is recognized that one vote shall be assigned to Bosnia-Herzegovina but that a decision will be necessary at a later date as to whether this vote belongs to Bosnia-Herzegovina in virtue of the second paragraph of Article 12 of the Convention, or whether this vote is accorded to it in conformity with the provisions of the third paragraph of that Article.

II.

Note is taken of the following declaration:

The Delegation of the United States declares that its Government is under the necessity of abstaining from all action with regard to rates, because the transmission of radiograms as well as of ordinary telegrams in the United States is carried on, wholly or in part, by commercial or private companies.

III.

Note is likewise taken of the following declaration: The Government of Canada reserves the right to fix separately, for each of its coastal stations, a total maritime rate for radiograms proceeding from North America and destined for any ship whatever, the coastal rate amounting to three-fifths and the shipboard rate to two-fifths of the total rate.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have drawn up the present Final Protocol, which shall be of the same force and effect as though the provisions thereof had been embodied in the text of the Convention itself to which it has reference, and they have signed one copy of the same, which shall be deposited in the archives of the British Government, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each of the Parties.

SERVICE REGULATIONS AFFIXED TO THE INTERNATIONAL RADIOTELEGRAPH CONVENTION, LONDON, 1912.

[Translation.]

1. ORGANIZATION OF RADIO STATIONS.

ARTICLE I.

The choice of radio apparatus and devices to be used by the coastal stations and stations on shipboard shall be unrestricted. The installation of such stations shall as far as possible keep pace with scientific and technical progress.

ARTICLE II.

Two wave lengths, one of 600 meters and the other of 300 meters, are authorized for general public service. Every coastal station opened to such service shall be equipped in such manner as to be able to use these two wave lengths, one of which shall be designated as the normal wave length of the station. During the whole time that a coastal station is open it shall be in condition to receive calls according to its normal wave length. For the correspondence specified under paragraph 2 of Article XXXV, however, a wave length of 1,800 meters shall be used. In addition, each Government may authorize in coastal stations the employment of other wave lengths designed to insure long-range service or any service other than for general public correspondence established in conformity with the provisions of the Convention under the reservation that such wave lengths do not exceed 600 meters or that they do exceed 1,600 meters.

In particular, stations used exclusively for sending signals designed to determine the position of ships shall not employ wave lengths exceeding 150 meters.

ARTICLE III.

1. Every station on shipboard shall be equipped in such manner as to be able to use wave lengths of 600 meters and of 300 meters. The first shall be the normal wave length and may not be exceeded for transmission except in the case referred to under Article XXXV (paragraph 2).

Other wave lengths, less than 600 meters, may be used in special cases and under the approval of the managements to which the coastal and shipboard stations concerned are subject.

2. During the whole time that a station on shipboard is open it shall be able to receive calls according to its normal wave length.

3. Vessels of small tonnage which are unable to use a wave length of 600 meters for transmission, may be authorized to employ exclusively the wave length of 300; they must be able to receive a wave length of 600 meters.

ARTICLE IV.

Communication between a coastal station and a station on ship-board shall be exchanged on the part of both by means of the same wave length. If, in a particular case, communication is difficult, the two stations may, by mutual consent, pass from the wave length with which they are communicating to the other regulation wave length. Both stations shall resume their normal wave length when the exchange of radiograms is finished.

ARTICLE V.

- 1. The International Bureau shall draw up, publish, and revise from time to time an official chart showing the coastal stations, their normal ranges, the principal lines of navigation, and the time normally taken by ships for the voyage between the different ports of call.
- 2. It shall draw up and publish a list of radio stations of the class referred to in Article I of the Convention, and from time to time supplements covering additions and modifications. Such list shall contain for each station the following data:

(1) In the case of coastal stations; name, nationality, and geographical location indicated by the territorial subdivision and the latitude and longitude of the place; in the case of stations on shipboard; name and nationality of the ship; when the case arises, the name and address of the party working the station;

(2) The call letters (the calls shall be distinguishable from one another and each must be formed of a group of three letters);

(3) The normal range;

(4) The radio system with the characteristics of the transmitting system (musical sparks, tonality expressed by the number of double vibrations, etc.);

(5) The wave lengths used (the normal wave length to be underscored);

(6) The nature of the services carried on;
(7) The hours during which the station is open;

(8) When the case arises, the hour and method of transmitting time signals and meteorological telegrams;

(9) The coastal rate or shipboard rate.

3. The list shall also contain such data relating to radio stations other than those specified in Article I of the Convention as may be communicated to the International Bureau by the management of the Radio Service ("administration") to which such stations are subject, provided that such managements are either adherents to the Convention or, if not adherents, have made the declaration referred to Article XLVIII.

4. The following notations shall be adopted in documents for use by the International Service to designate radio stations: PG Station open to general public correspondence. PR Station open to limited public correspondence.

P Station of private interest.

O Station open exclusively to official correspondence.

N Station having continuous service.

X Station having no fixed working hours.

5. The name of a station on shipboard appearing in the first column of the list shall be followed, in case there are two or more vessels of the same name, by the call letters of such station.

ARTICLE VI.

The exchange of superfluous signals and words is prohibited to stations of the class referred to in Article I of the Convention. Experiments and practice will be permitted in such stations in so far as they do not interfere with the service of other stations.

Practice shall be carried on with wave lengths different from those authorized for public correspondence, and with the minimum of power necessary.

ARTICLE VII.

1. All stations are bound to carry on the service with the minimum of energy necessary to insure safe communication.

2. Every coastal or shipboard station shall comply with the following requirements:

(a) The waves sent out shall be as pure and as little damped as possible;

In particular, the use of transmitting devices in which the waves sent out are obtained by means of sparks directly in the aerial (plain aerial) shall not be authorized except in cases of distress.

It may, however, be permitted in the case of certain special stations (those of small vessels for example) in which the primary power does not exceed 50 watts.

(b) The apparatus shall be able to transmit and receive at a speed equal to at least 20 words a minute, words to be counted at the rate of 5 letters each.

New installations using more than 50 watts shall be equipped in such a way as to make it possible to obtain with ease several ranges less than the normal range, the shortest being approximately 15 nautical miles. Existing installations using more than 50 watts shall be remodeled, wherever possible, so as to comply with the foregoing provisions.

(c) Receiving apparatus shall be able to receive, with the greatest possible protection against interference, transmissions of the wave lengths specified in the present Regulations, up to 600 meters.

3. Stations serving solely for determining the position of ships (radiophares) shall not operate over a radius greater than 30 nautical miles.

ARTICLE VIII.

Independently of the general requirements specified under Article VII, stations on shipboard shall likewise comply with the following requirements:

(a) The power transmitted to the radio apparatus, measured at the terminals of the generator of the station, shall not, under normal conditions, exceed one kilowatt.

(b) Subject to the provisions of Article XXXV, paragraph 2, power exceeding one kilowatt may be employed when the vessel finds it necessary to correspond while more than 200 nautical miles distant from the nearest coastal station, or when, owing to unusual circumstances, communication can be established only by means of an increase of power.

ARTICLE IX.

1. No station on shipboard shall be established or worked by private enterprise without a license issued by the Government to which the vessel is subject.

Stations on board of ships having their port of registry in a colony, possession, or protectorate may be described as subject to the authority of such colony, possession, or protectorate.

2. Every shipboard station holding a license issued by one of the contracting Governments shall be considered by the other Governments as having an installation fulfilling the requirements stipulated in the present Regulations.

Competent authorities of the countries at which the ship calls may demand the production of the license. In default of such production, these authorities may satisfy themselves as to whether the radio installations of the ship fulfill the requirements imposed by the present regulations.

When the management of the radio service of a country is convinced by its working that a station on shipboard does not fulfill the requirements, it shall, in every case, address a complaint to the management of the radio service of the country to which such ship is a subject. The subsequent procedure, when necessary, shall be the same as that prescribed in Article XII, paragraph 2.

ARTICLE X.

1. The service of the station on shipboard shall be carried on by a telegraph operator holding a certificate issued by the Government to which the vessel is subject, or, in case of necessity and for one voyage only, by some other adhering Government.

2. There shall be two classes of certificates:

The first class certificate shall attest the professional efficiency of the operator as regards:

(a) Adjustment of the apparatus and knowledge of its functioning;

(b) Transmission and acoustic reception at the rate of not less than 20 words a minute;

(c) Knowledge of the regulations governing the exchange of radio

The second class certificate may be issued to operators who are able to transmit and receive at a rate of only 12 to 19 words a minute but who, in other respects, fulfill the requirements mentioned above. Operators holding second-class certificates may be permitted on:

(a) Vessels which use radiotelegraphy only in their own service and in the correspondence of their crews, fishing vessels in particular;

(b) All vessels, as substitutes, provided such vessels have on board at least one operator holding a first-class certificate. However, on vessels classed under the first category indicated in Article XIII, the service shall be carried on by at least two telegraph operators holding first-class certificates.

In the stations on shipboard, transmissions shall be made only by operators holding first or second-class certificates except in cases of necessity where it would be impossible to conform to this provision.

3. The certificate shall furthermore state that the Government has bound the operator to secrecy with regard to the correspondence. 4. The radio service of the station on shipboard shall be under the superior authority of the commanding officer of the ship.

ARTICLE XI.

Ships provided with radio installations and classed under the first two categories indicated in Article XIII are bound to have radio installations for distress calls all the elements of which shall be kept under conditions of the greatest possible safety to be determined by the Government issuing the license. Such emergency installations shall have their own source of energy, be capable of quickly being set into operation, of functioning for at least six hours, and have a minimum range of 80 nautical miles for ships of the first category and 50 miles for those of the second. Such emergency installations shall not be required in the case of vessels the regular installations of which fulfill the requirements of the present Article.

ARTICLE XII.

1. If the management of the radio service of a country has knowledge of any infraction of the Convention or of the Regulations committed in any of the stations authorized by it, it shall ascertain the facts and fix the responsibility.

In the case of stations on shipboard, if the operator is responsible for such infraction, the management of the radio service shall take the necessary measures, and, if the necessity should arise, withdraw the certificate. If it is ascertained that the infraction is the result of the condition of the apparatus or of instructions given the operator, the same method shall be pursued with regard to the license issued to the vessel.

2. In cases of repeated infractions chargeable to the same vessel, if the representations made to the management of the country to which the vessel is subject by that of another country remain without effect, the latter shall be at liberty, after giving due notice, to authorize its coastal stations not to accept communications proceeding from the vessel at fault. In case of disagreement between the managements of the radio service of two countries, the question shall be submitted to arbitration at the request of either of the two Governments concerned. The procedure is indicated in Article 18 of the Convention.

2. HOURS OF SERVICE OF STATIONS.

ARTICLE XIII.

(a) Coastal stations:

1. The service of coastal stations shall, as far as possible, be constant, day and night, without interruption.

Certain coastal stations, however, may have a service of limited duration. The management of the radio service of each country shall fix the hours of service.

2. The coastal stations whose service is not constant shall not close before having transmitted all their radiograms to the vessels which are within their radius of action, nor before having received from such vessels all the radiograms of which notice has been given. This provision is likewise applicable when vessels signal their presence before the actual cessation of work.

(b) Stations on shipboard:

3. Stations on shipboard shall be classed under three categories:

(1) Stations having constant service;

(2) Stations having a service of limited duration;

(3) Stations having no fixed working hours.

When the ship is under way, the following shipboard stations shall have an operator constantly listening in; 1st, Stations of the first category; 2nd, Those of the second category during the hours in which they are open to service. During the remaining hours, the last named stations shall have an operator at the radio instrument listening in during the first ten minutes of each hour. Stations of the third category are not bound to perform any regular service of listening in.

It shall fall to the Governments issuing the licenses specified in Article IX to fix the category in which the ship shall be classed as regards its obligations in the matter of listening in. Mention shall be made of such classification in the license.

3. FORM AND POSTING OF RADIOGRAMS.

ARTICLE XIV.

1. Radiograms shall show, as the first word of the preamble, that the service is "radio."

2. In the transmission of radiograms proceeding from a ship at sea, the date and hour of posting at the shipboard station shall be stated in the preamble.

3. Upon forwarding a radiogram over the telegraph system, the coastal station shall show thereon as the office of origin, the name of the ship of origin as it appears in the list, and also when the case arises, that of the last ship which acted as intermediary. These data shall be followed by the name of the coastal station.

ARTICLE XV.

The address of radiograms intended for ships shall be as complete

It shall embrace the following:

(a) The name or title of the addressee, with additional designations, if any;

(b) The name of the vessel as it appears in the first column of the list;

(c) The name of the coastal station as it appears in the list.

The name of the ship, however, may be replaced, at the sender's risk, by the designation of the route to be followed by such vessel, as determined by the names of the ports of departure and destination or by any other equivalent information.

2. In the address, the name of the ship as it appears in the first column of the list, shall, in all cases and independently of its length, be counted as one word.

3. Radiograms framed with the aid of the International Code of Signals shall be transmitted to their destination without being translated.

4. RATES.

ARTICLE XVI.

1. The coastal rate and the shipboard rate shall be fixed in accordance with the tariff per word, pure and simple, on the basis of an equitable remuneration for the radio work, with an optional minimum rate per radiogram.

The coastal rate shall not exceed 60 centimes (11.6 cents) a word, and the shipboard rate shall not exceed 40 centimes (7.7 cents) a word. However, each management shall be at liberty to authorize coastal and shipboard rates higher than such maxima in the case of stations of ranges exceeding 400 nautical miles, or of stations whose work is exceptionally difficult owing to physical conditions in connection with the installation or working of the same.

The optional minimum rate per radiogram shall not be higher than the coastal rate or shipboard rate for a radiogram of ten words.

2. In the case of radiograms proceeding from or destined for a country and exchanged directly with the coastal stations of such country, the rate applicable to the transmission over the telegraph lines shall not, on the average, exceed the inland rate of such country.

Such rate shall be computed per word, pure and simple, with an optional minimum rate which shall not exceed the rate for ten words. It shall be stated in francs by the management of the radio service of the country to which the coastal station is subject.

In the case of countries of the European system, with the exception of Russia and Turkey, there shall be but one rate for the territory of each country.

ARTICLE XVII.

1. When a radiogram proceeding from a ship and intended for the coast passes through one or two shipboard stations, the charges shall comprise, in addition to the rates of the shipboard station of origin, the coastal station and the telegraph lines, the shipboard rate of each of the ships which have participated in the transmission.

2. The sender of a radiogram proceeding from the coast and intended for a ship may require that his message be transmitted by way of one or two stations on shipboard; he shall deposit for this purpose an amount equal to the radio and telegraph rates and, in addition, a sum to be fixed by the office of origin, as surety for the payment to the intermediary shipboard stations of the transit rates fixed by paragraph 1. He shall further pay, at his option, either the rate for a telegram of five words or the price of the postage on a letter to be sent by the coastal station to the office of origin giving the necessary information for the liquidation of the amounts deposited.

The radiogram shall then be accepted at the sender's risk; it shall show before the address the prepaid instruction, to wit: "X retransmissions telegraph" or "X retransmissions letter" according to whether the sender desired the information necessary for the liquidation of the deposits to be furnished by telegraph or by letter.

3. The rate for radiograms proceeding from a ship intended for another ship, and forwarded through one or two intermediary coastal stations, shall comprise:

The shipboard rates of the two ships, the coastal rate of the coastal station or two coastal stations, as the case may be, and the telegraph rate, when necessary, applicable to the transmission between the two coastal stations.

4. The rate for radiograms exchanged between ships without the intervention of a coastal station shall comprise the shipboard rates of the vessels of origin and destination together with the shipboard rates of the intermediary stations.

5. The coastal and shipboard rates accruing to the stations of transit shall be the same as those fixed for such stations when they are stations of origin or destination. In no case shall they be collected more than once.

6. In the case of every coastal station acting as intermediary, the rate to be collected for the service of transit shall be the highest coastal rate applicable to direct communication with the two ships concerned.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The country within whose territory a coastal station is established which serves as intermediary for the exchange of radiograms between a station on board ship and another country shall be considered, so far as the application of telegraph rates is concerned, as the country of origin or of destination of such radiograms, and not as the country of transit.

5. COLLECTION OF CHARGES.

ARTICLE XIX.

The total charge for radiograms shall be collected of the sender, with the exception of:

(1) Charges for special delivery (Art. LVIII, par. 1, of the Telegraph Regulations); (2) Charges applicable to inadmissible combinations or alterations of words noted by the office or station of destination (Art. XIX, par. 9 of the Telegraph Regulations) such charges being collected of the addressee.

Stations on shipboard shall to that end have the necessary tariffs. They shall be at liberty, however, to obtain information from coastal stations on the subject of rates for radiograms for which they do not possess all the necessary data.

2. The counting of words by the office of origin shall be conclusive in the case of radiograms intended for ships and that of the shipboard station of origin shall be conclusive in the case of radiograms proceeding from ships, both for purposes of transmission and of the international accounts. However, when the radiogram is worded wholly or in part, either in one of the languages of the country of destination, in the case of radiograms proceeding from ships, or in one of the languages of the country to which the ship is subject, in the case of radiograms intended for ships, and contains combinations or alterations of words contrary to the usage of such language, the bureau or shipboard station of destination, as the case may be, shall have the right to recover from the addressee the amount of charge not collected. In case of refusal to pay, the radiogram may be withheld.

6. TRANSMISSION OF RADIOGRAMS.

(A) SIGNALS OF TRANSMISSION.

ARTICLE XX.

The signals to be employed are those of the Morse International Code.

ARTICLE XXI.

Ships in distress shall use the following signal:

repeated at brief intervals, followed by the necessary particulars.

As soon as a station hears the signal of distress it shall cease all correspondence and not resume it until after it has made sure that the correspondence to which the call for assistance has given rise is terminated.

Stations which hear a signal of distress shall conform to the instructions given by the ship making such signal as regards the order of the messages or their cessation.

In case the call letters of a particular station are added at the end of the series of calls for assistance, the answer to the call shall be incumbent upon that station alone unless such station fails to If the call for assistance does not specify any particular station, every station hearing such call shall be bound to answer it.

ARTICLE XXII.

For the purpose of giving or requesting information concerning the radio service, stations shall make use of the signals contained in the list appended to the present Regulations.

(B) ORDER OF TRANSMISSION.

ARTICLE XXIII.

Between two stations radiograms of the same order shall be transmitted one by one, by the two stations alternately, or in series of several radiograms, as the coastal station may indicate, provided the duration of the transmission of each series does not exceed fifteen minutes.

(C) METHOD OF CALLING RADIO STATIONS AND TRANSMISSION OF RADIOGRAMS.

ARTICLE XXIV.

1. As a general rule, it shall be the shipboard station that calls the coastal station whether it has radiograms to transmit or not.

2. In waters where the radio traffic is very great (British Channel, etc.), a coastal station should not, as a general rule, be called by a shipboard station unless the former is within normal range of the shipboard station and not until the distance of the vessel from the coastal station is less than 75 per cent of the normal range of the latter.

3. Before proceeding to call, the coastal station or the station on shipboard shall adjust its receiving apparatus to its maximum sensibility and make sure that no other correspondence is being carried on within its radius of action; if it finds otherwise, it shall wait for the first pause, unless it is convinced that its call will not be likely to disturb the correspondence in progress. The same applies in case the station desires to answer a call.

4. For calling, every station shall use the normal wave of the station it wishes to call.

5. If in spite of these precautions the transmission of a radiogram is impeded at any place, the call shall cease upon the first request from a coastal station open to public correspondence. The latter station shall in such case indicate the approximate length of time it will be necessary to wait.

6. The station on shipboard shall make known to every coastal station to which it has signaled its presence the moment at which it proposes to cease its operations and the probable duration of the interruption.

ARTICLE XXV.

1. The call shall comprise the signal the call letters of the station called transmitted three times, the word "from" (de) followed by the call letters of the sending station transmitted three times.

2. The called station shall answer by making the signal followed by the call letters of the corresponding station transmitted three times, the word "from," its own call letters, and the signal

3. Stations desiring to enter into communication with ships, without, however, knowing the names of the ships within their radius of action, may employ the signal (signal of inquiry). The provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 are likewise applicable to the transmission of a signal of inquiry and to the answer to such signal.

ARTICLE XXVI.

If a station called does not answer the call (Article XXV) transmitted three times at intervals of two minutes, the call shall not be resumed until after an interval of fifteen minutes, the station issuing the call having first made sure of the fact that no radio correspondence is in progress.

ARTICLE XXVII.

Every station which has occasion to transmit a radiogram requiring the use of high power shall first send out three times the signal of warning , with the minimum of power necessary to reach the neighboring stations. It shall not begin to transmit with high power until 30 seconds after sending the signal of warning.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

1. As soon as the coastal station has answered, the shipboard station shall furnish it with the following data in case it has messages to transmit; such data shall likewise be furnished upon request from the coastal station:

(a) The approximate distance, in nautical miles, of the vessel from the coastal station;

(b) The position of the vessel indicated in a concise form and adapted to the circumstances of the case;

(c) Her next port of call;

(d) The number of radiograms, if they are of normal length, or the number of words, if the messages are unusually long.

The speed of the ship in nautical miles shall also be given if specially requested by the coastal station.

2. The coastal station shall answer stating, as provided in paragraph 1, either the number of radiograms or the number of words to be transmitted to the ship, and also the order of transmission.

3. If the transmission can not take place immediately, the coastal station shall inform the station on shipboard of the approximate length of time that it will be necessary to wait.

4. If a shipboard station called can not receive for the moment, it shall inform the station calling of the approximate length of time that it will be necessary to wait.

5. In the exchange of messages between two stations on shipboard, it shall fall to the station called to fix the order of transmission.

ARTICLE XXIX.

When a coastal station receives calls from several shipboard stations, it shall decide the order in which such stations shall be admitted to exchange their messages.

In fixing this order the coastal station shall be guided exclusively by the necessity of permitting each station concerned to exchange the greatest possible number of radiograms.

ARTICLE XXX.

Before beginning the exchange of correspondence the coastal station shall advise the shipboard station whether the transmission is to be effected in the alternate order or by series (Article XXIII); it shall then begin the transmission or follow up the preliminaries with the signal

ARTICLE XXXI.

The transmission of the radiogram shall be preceded by the signal and terminated by the signal followed by the name of the sending station and by the signal

In the case of a series of radiograms, the name of the sending station and the signal - shall only be given at the end of the series.

ARTICLE XXXII.

When a radiogram to be transmitted contains more than 40 words, the sending station shall interrupt the transmission by the signal • • after each series of about 20 words and shall not resume it until after it has obtained from the receiving station a repetition of the last word duly received, followed by the said signal, or, if the reception is good, by the signal .

In the case of transmission by series, acknowledgment of receipt shall be made after each radiogram.

Coastal stations engaged in the transmission of long radiograms shall suspend the transmission at the end of each period of 15 minutes, and remain silent for a period of three minutes before resuming the transmission.

Coastal and shipboard stations working under the conditions specified in Article XXXV, par. 2, shall suspend work at the end of each period of 15 minutes and listen in with a wave length of 600 meters during a period of three minutes before resuming the transmission.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

1. When the signals become doubtful every possible means shall be resorted to to finish the transmission. To this end the radiogram shall be transmitted three times at most at the request of the receiving station. If in spite of such triple repetition the signals are still unreadable the radiogram shall be cancelled.

If no acknowledgment of receipt is received the transmitting station shall again call up the receiving station. If no reply is made after three calls the transmission shall not be followed up any further. In such case the sending station shall have the privilege of obtaining the acknowledgment of receipt through the medium of another radio station, using, when necessary, the lines of the telegraph system.

- 2. If in the opinion of the receiving station the radiogram, although imperfectly received, is nevertheless capable of transmission, said station shall enter the words "reception doubtful" at the end of the preamble and let the radiogram follow. In such case the management of the radio service of the country to which the coastal station is subject shall claim the charges in conformity with Article XLII of the present Regulations. If, however, the shipboard station subsequently transmits the radiogram to another coastal station of the same management, the latter can claim only the rates applicable to a single transmission.
 - (D) ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF RECEIPT AND CONCLUSION OF WORK.

ARTICLE XXXIV.

1. Receipt shall be acknowledged in the form prescribed by the International Telegraph Regulations; it shall be preceded by the call letters of the transmitting station and followed by those of the receiving station.

2. The conclusion of a correspondence between two stations shall be indicated by each of the two stations by means of the signal followed by its own call letters.

(E) DIRECTIONS TO BE FOLLOWED IN SENDING RADIOGRAMS.

ARTICLE XXXV.

1. In general, the shipboard stations shall transmit their radiograms to the nearest coastal station.

Nevertheless, if a shipboard station has the choice between several coastal stations at equal or nearly equal distances, it shall give the preference to the one established on the territory of the country of destination or normal transit for its radiograms.

2. A sender on board a vessel shall, however, have the right to designate the coastal station through which he desires to have his radiogram transmitted. The station on shipboard shall then wait until such coastal station shall be the nearest.

In exceptional cases transmission may be made to a more distant coastal station, provided that:

(a) The radiogram is intended for the country in which such coastal station is situated and emanates from a ship subject to that country;

(b) Both stations use for calling and transmission a wave length of 1,800 meters;

(c) Transmission with this wave length does not interfere with a transmission made by means of the same wave length by a nearer coastal station;

(d) The station on shipboard is more than 50 nautical miles distant from any coastal station given in the list. The distance of 50 miles may be reduced to 25 miles provided the maximum power at the terminals of the generator does not exceed 5 kilowatts and that the stations on shipboard are established in conformity with Articles VII and VIII. This reduction in the distance shall not be admissible in the seas, bays or gulfs of which the shores belong to one country only and of which the opening to the high sea is less than 100 miles wide.

7. DELIVERY OF RADIOGRAMS AT THEIR DESTINATION.

ARTICLE XXXVI.

When for any cause whatever a radiogram proceeding from a vessel at sea and intended for the coast can not be delivered to the addressee, a notice of nondelivery shall be issued. Such notice shall be transmitted to the coastal station which received the original radiogram. The latter, after verifying the address, shall forward the notice to the ship, if possible, by the intervention, if need be, of another coastal station of the same country or of a neighboring country.

When a radiogram received by a shipboard station can not be delivered, the station shall notify the office of the origin by official notice. In the case of radiograms emanating from the coast, such notice shall be transmitted, whenever practicable, to the coastal station through which the radiogram has passed in transit; otherwise, to another coastal station of the same country or of a neighboring country.

ARTICLE XXXVII.

If the ship for which a radiogram is intended has not signalled her presence to the coastal station within the period designated by the sender, or, in the absence of such designation, by the morning of the 8th day following, the coastal station shall so notify the office of origin which shall in turn inform the sender.

The latter shall have the right to ask, by a paid official notice, sent by either telegraph or mail and addressed to the coastal station, that his radiogram be held for a further period of 9 days for transmission to the vessel, and so on. In the absence of such request, the radiogram shall be put aside as not transmissible at the end of the 9th day (exclusive of the day of posting).

Nevertheless, if the coastal station is certain that the vessel has left its radius of action before it has been able to transmit the radiogram to her, such station shall immediately so notify the office of origin which shall without delay inform the sender of the cancellation of the message. The sender may, however, by a paid official notice, request the coastal station to transmit the radiogram the next time the vessel shall pass.

8. SPECIAL RADIOGRAMS.

ARTICLE XXXVIII.

The following radiograms only shall be accepted for transmission:

(1) Radiograms with answer prepaid. Such radiograms shall show before the address the indication "Answer prepaid" or "R P" supplemented by a statement of the amount paid in advance for the answer, thus: "Réponse Payée fr. x", or "R P fr. x";

The reply voucher issued by a station on shipboard shall carry with it the right to send, within the limits of its value, a radiogram to any destination whatever from the station on shipboard which has issued such voucher.

(2) Radiograms calling for repetition of message (for purposes of verification);

(3) Special delivery radiograms. Only, however, in cases where the amount of the charges for special delivery is collected of the addressee. Countries which can not accept such radiograms shall make a declaration to this effect to the International Bureau. Special delivery radiograms with charges collected of the sender may be accepted when they are intended for the country within whose territory the corresponding station is located.

(4) Radiograms to be delivered by mail;

(5) Multiple radiograms; (6) Radiograms calling for acknowledgment of receipt. But only as regards notification of the date and hour at which the coastal station shall have transmitted to the station on shipboard the radiogram addressed to the latter.

(7) Paid service notices. Except those requesting a repetition or Nevertheless all paid service notices shall be accepted in transmission over the telegraph lines.

(8) Urgent radiograms. But only in transmission over the telegraph lines and subject to the application of the International Telegraph Regulations.

ARTICLE XXXIX.

Radiograms may be transmitted by a coastal station to a ship, or by a ship to another ship, with a view to being forwarded by mail from a port of call of the ship receiving the radiogram.

Such radiograms shall not be entitled to any radio retransmission

The address of such radiogram shall embrace the following:
(1) The paid designation "mail" followed by the name of the port at which the radiogram is to be mailed;

(2) The name and complete address of the addressee;
(3) The name of the station on shipboard by which the radiogram is to be mailed;

(4) When necessary, the name of the coastal station.

Example: Mail Buenosaires 14 Calle Prat Valparaiso Avon Lizard. The rate shall comprise, in addition to the radio and telegraph rates, a sum of 25 centimes (.048 [4.8] cents) for the postage on the radiogram.

9. FILES.

ARTICLE XL.

The originals of radiograms together with the documents relating thereto retained by the managements of the radio service shall be kept, with all the necessary precautions as regards secrecy, for a period of at least fifteen months beginning with the month following that of the posting of the radiogram.

Such originals and documents shall, as far as practicable, be sent at least once a month by the shipboard stations to the management of the radio service to which they are subject.

10. REBATES AND REIMBURSEMENTS.

ARTICLE XLI.

1. With regard to rebates and reimbursements, the International Telegraph Regulations shall be applicable, taking into account the restrictions specified in Articles XXXVIII and XXXIX of the present Regulations and subject to the following reservations:

The time employed in the transmission of radiograms and the time that radiograms remain in a coastal station in the case of radiograms intended for ships, or in the station on shipboard in the case of radiograms proceeding from ships, shall not be counted as delays as regards rebates or reimbursements.

If the coastal station notifies the office of origin that a radiogram can not be transmitted to the ship addressed, the management of the radio service of the country of origin shall immediately instigate reimbursement to the sender of the coastal and shipboard rates relating to the radiogram. In such case, the refunded charges shall not enter into the accounts provided for by Article XLII, but the radiogram shall be mentioned therein as a memorandum.

Reimbursements shall be borne by the different managements of the radio service and private enterprises which have taken part in the transmission of the radiogram, each management or private enterprise relinquishing its share of the rate. Radiograms to which Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention of St. Petersburg are applicable shall remain subject, however, to the provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations, except when the acceptance of such radiograms is the result of an error made by the telegraph service.

2. When the acknowledgment of receipt of a radiogram has not reached the station which has transmitted the message, the charges shall be refunded only if the fact has been established that the radiogram is entitled to reimbursement.

11. ACCOUNTS AND PAYMENT OF CHARGES.

ARTICLE XLII.

1. The coastal and shipboard charges shall not enter into the accounts provided for by the International Telegraph Regulations.

The accounts regarding such charges shall be liquidated by the managements of the radio service of the countries concerned. They shall be drawn up by the radio managements to which the coastal stations are subject, and communicated by them to the radio managements concerned. In cases where the working of the coastal stations is independent of the management of the radio service of the country, the party working such stations may be substituted, as regards the accounts, for the radio management of such country.

2. For transmission over the telegraph lines radiograms shall be treated, so far as the payment of rates is concerned, in conformity with the International Telegraph Regulations.

3. For radiograms proceeding from ships, the radio management to which the coastal station is subject shall charge the radio management to which the shipboard station of origin is subject with the coastal and ordinary telegraph rates, the total charges collected for answers prepaid, the coastal and telegraph rates collected for repetition of message (for purposes of verification), charges relating to special delivery (in the case provided for in Article XXXVIII), or delivery by mail, and those collected for additional copies (TM). The radio management to which the coastal station is subject shall credit, when the case arises, through the channel of the telegraph accounts and through the medium of the offices which have participated in the transmission of the radiograms, the radio management to which the office of destination is subject with the total charges relating to answers prepaid. With respect to the telegraph rates and the charges relating to special delivery or delivery by mail, and to additional copies, the procedure shall be as prescribed in the Telegraph Regulations, the coastal station being considered as the telegraph office of origin.

For radiograms intended for a country lying beyond the country to which the coastal station belongs, the telegraph charges to be liquidated in conformity with the above provisions shall be those which result either from tables "A" and "B" annexed to the International Telegraph Regulations, or from special arrangements concluded between the radio managements of adjacent countries and published by such managements, and not the charges which might be collected in accordance with the special provisions of Articles XXIII, par. 1, and XXVII, par. 1, of the Telegraph Regulations. For radiograms and paid service notices intended for ships, the radio management to which the office of origin is subject shall be charged directly by that to which the coastal station is subject with the coastal and shipboard rates. However, the total charges relating to answers prepaid shall be credited, if there is occasion, from country to country, through the channel of the telegraph accounts, until they reach the radio management to which the coastal station is subject. As regards the telegraph charges and the charges relating to delivery by mail and additional copies, the procedure shall be as prescribed in the Telegraph Regulations. The radio management to which the coastal station is subject shall credit that to which the ship of destination is subject with the shipboard rate, if there is occasion, with the rates accruing to the intermediary shipboard stations, the total charge collected for answers prepaid, the shipboard rates for repetition of message (for purposes of verification), and the charges collected for the preparation of additional copies and for delivery by mail.

Paid service notices and answers prepaid shall be treated in the radio accounts in all respects the same as other radiograms.

For radiograms transmitted by means of one or two intermediary stations on shipboard, each one of such stations shall charge the shipboard station of origin, in the case of a radiogram proceeding from a ship, or that of destination, in the case of a radiogram intended for a ship, with the shipboard rate accruing to it for transit.

4. In general, the liquidation of accounts relating to correspondence between stations on shipboard shall be effected directly between the companies working such stations, the station of origin being charged by the station of destination.

5. The monthly accounts serving as a basis for the special accounts of radiograms shall be made out for each radiogram separately with all the necessary data within a period of six months from the month to which they refer.

6. The Governments reserve the right to enter into special agreements among themselves and with private companies (parties operating radio stations, shipping companies, etc.) with a view of adopting other provisions with regard to accounts.

12. INTERNATIONAL BUREAU.

ARTICLE XLIII.

The additional expenses resulting from the work of the International Bureau so far as radio telegraphy is concerned shall not exceed 80,000 francs a year, exclusive of the special expenses arising from the convening of the International Conference.

The managements of the radio service of the contracting states shall, so far as contribution to the expenses is concerned, be divided into six classes, as follows:

1st Class:

Union of South Africa; Germany; United States of America; Alaska; Hawaii and the other American possessions in Polynesia; Philippine Islands; Porto Rico and the American possessions in the Antilles; Panama Canal Zone; Argentine Republic; Australia; Austria; Brazil; Canada; France; Great Britain; Hungary; British India; Italy; Japan; New Zealand; Russia; Turkey.

2nd Class: Spain.

3rd Class:

Russian Central Asia (littoral of the Caspian Sea); Belgium; Chile; Chosen, Formosa, Japanese Sakhalin and the leased territory of Kwantung; Dutch Indies; Norway; Netherlands; Portugal; Roumania; Western Siberia (littoral of the Arctic Ocean); Eastern Siberia (littoral of the Pacific Ocean;) Sweden.

German East Africa; German Southwest Africa; Kamerun; Togo Land; German Protectorates in the Pacific; Denmark; Egypt; Indo-China; Mexico; Siam; Uruguay.

5th Class:

French West Africa; Bosnia-Herzegovina; Bulgaria; Greece; Madagascar; Tunis.

6th Class:

French Equatorial Africa; Portuguese West Africa; Portuguese East Africa and the Portuguese possessions in Asia; Bokhara; Belgian Congo; Colony of Curação; Spanish Colony of the Gulf of Guinea; Eritrea; Khiva; Morocco; Monaco; Persia; San Marino; Italian Somaliland.

ARTICLE XLIV.

The management of the radio service of the different countries shall forward to the International Bureau a table in conformity with the annexed blank, containing the data enumerated in said table for stations such as referred to in Article V of the Regulations. Changes occurring and additional data shall be forwarded by the radio managements to the International Bureau between the 1st and 10th day of each month. With the aid of such data the International Bureau shall draw up the list provided for in Article V. The list shall be distributed to the radio managements concerned. The list and the supplements thereto may also be sold to the public at the cost price.

The International Bureau shall see to it that the same call letters for several radio stations shall not be adopted.

13. METEOROLOGICAL RADIOGRAMS, TIME SIGNALS AND OTHER RADIOGRAMS.

ARTICLE XLV.

1. The managements of the radio service shall take the necessary steps to supply their coastal stations with meteorological radiograms containing indications concerning the district of such stations. Such radiograms, the text of which shall not exceed 20 words, shall be transmitted to ships upon request. The rate for such meteorological radiograms shall be carried to the account of the ships to which they are addressed.

2. Meteorological observations made by certain vessels designated for this purpose by the country to which they are subject, may be transmitted once a day, as paid service notices, to the coastal stations authorized to receive the same by the managements concerned, who shall likewise designate the meteorological offices to which such ebservations shall be addressed by the coastal stations.

3. Time signals and meteorological radiograms shall be transmitted one after the other in such a way that the total time occupied in their transmission shall not exceed ten minutes. As a general rule, all radio stations whose transmissions might interfere with the reception of such signals and radiograms, shall remain silent during their transmission in order that all stations desiring it may be able to receive the same. Exception shall be made in cases of distress calls and of state telegrams.

4. The managements of the radio service shall give to agencies of maritime information such data regarding losses and casualties at sea or other information of general interest to navigation, as the coastal stations may properly report.

14. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

ARTICLE XLVI.

The exchange of correspondence between shipboard stations shall be carried on in such a manner as not to interfere with the service of the coastal stations, the latter, as a general rule, being accorded the right of priority for the public service.

ARTICLE XLVII.

Coastal stations and stations on shipboard shall not be bound to participate in the retransmission of radiograms except in cases where direct communication cannot be established between the stations of origin and destination.

The number of such retransmissions shall, however, be limited to two.

In the case of radiograms intended for the coast, retransmission shall take place only for the purpose of reaching the nearest coastal station.

Retransmission shall in every case be subject to the condition that the intermediate station which receives the radiogram in transit is in a position to forward it.

ARTICLE XLVIII.

If the route of a radiogram is partly over telegraph lines, or through radio stations subject to a non-contracting Government, such radiograms may be transmitted provided the management of the radio service to which such lines or stations are subject have declared that, if the occasion should arise, they will comply with such provisions of the Convention and of the Regulations as are indispensible to the regular transmission of radiograms and that the payment of charges is insured. Such declaration shall be made to the International Bureau and communicated to the offices of the Telegraph Union.

ARTICLE XLIX.

Modifications of the present regulations which may be rendered necessary in consequence of the decisions of subsequent Telegraph Conferences shall go into effect on the date fixed for the application of the provisions adopted by each one of such conferences.

ARTICLE L.

The provisions of the International Telegraph Regulations shall be applicable analogously to radio correspondence in so far as they are not contrary to the provisions of the present regulations. The following provisions of the Telegraph Regulations, in particular, shall be applicable to radio correspondence: Article XXVII, paragraphs 3 to 6, relating to the collection of charges; Articles XXVI and XLI relating to the indication of the route to be followed; Article LXXV, paragraph 1, LXXVIII, paragraphs 2 to 4, and LXXIX, paragraphs 2 and 4, relating to the preparation of accounts. However:—(1) The period of six months provided by paragraph 2 of Article LXXIX of the Telegraph Regulations for the verification of accounts shall be extended to nine months in the case of radiograms; (2) The provisions of Article XVI, paragraph 2, shall not be considered as authorizing gratuitous transmission, through radio stations, of service telegrams relating exclusively to the telegraph service, nor the free transmission over the telegraph lines of service telegrams relating exclusively to the radio service; (3) The provisions of Article LXXIX, paragraphs 3 and 5, shall not be applicable to radio accounts. As regards the application of the provisions of the Telegraph Regulations, coastal stations shall be considered as offices of transit except when the Radio Regulations expressly stipulate that such stations shall be considered as offices of origin or of destination.

In conformity with Article 11 of the Convention of London, the present Regulations shall go into effect on the first day of July, 1913.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed one copy of these Regulations, which shall be deposited in the archives of the British Government, and a copy of which shall be transmitted to each of the Parties.

Certifié conforme à l'original déposé aux archives du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Eyre A. Crowe Sous-Secrétaire d'État pour les Affaires Etrangères. Londres, le 20 septembre, 1912.

And whereas the said Convention has been duly ratified by the Government of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Belgium (and the Belgium Congo), Denmark, Egypt, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Monaco, Netherlands, the Netherlands Indies, and the Colony of Curaçao, Roumania, Russia, Siam, and Spain, and the ratifications of the said Governments were, by the provisions of Article 23 of the said Convention, deposited by their respective Plenipotentiaries with the Government of Great Britain.

And whereas the Senate of the United States gave its advice and consent to the ratification of the said Convention with the following understanding: "that nothing in the Ninth Article of the Regulations affixed to the Convention shall be deemed to exclude the United States from the execution of her inspection laws upon vessels entering in or clearing from her ports."

Now therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Convention and annexes to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof, subject to the said understanding.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this eighth day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-eighth.
