An Epilogue.

“—All a play—”
“—Our exits and our entrances.”

She Stoops to Conquer.

MASTERS, we would commend our play to you. For our first act—your grace! Being but of green experience and unversed in the uses of sweet comedy. And so but a foolish company, swelling and sidling before your mirthful gaze, with honest smiles, like any Jockey and his maid in May.

But in our second act, did we not roar you out of all reason with our eloquence?

The third,—a lovely show!—to spice our play with wit and fashion of the time. So did we go a-slashing in unspeakable doublets and hose; so did we dance, and love pretty maids, and sing us tuneful ditties to the moon.

In our last, we are solemn as any owl. We wear the ancient dignities of wisdom; we feel the gravity of years, and love the serious care.

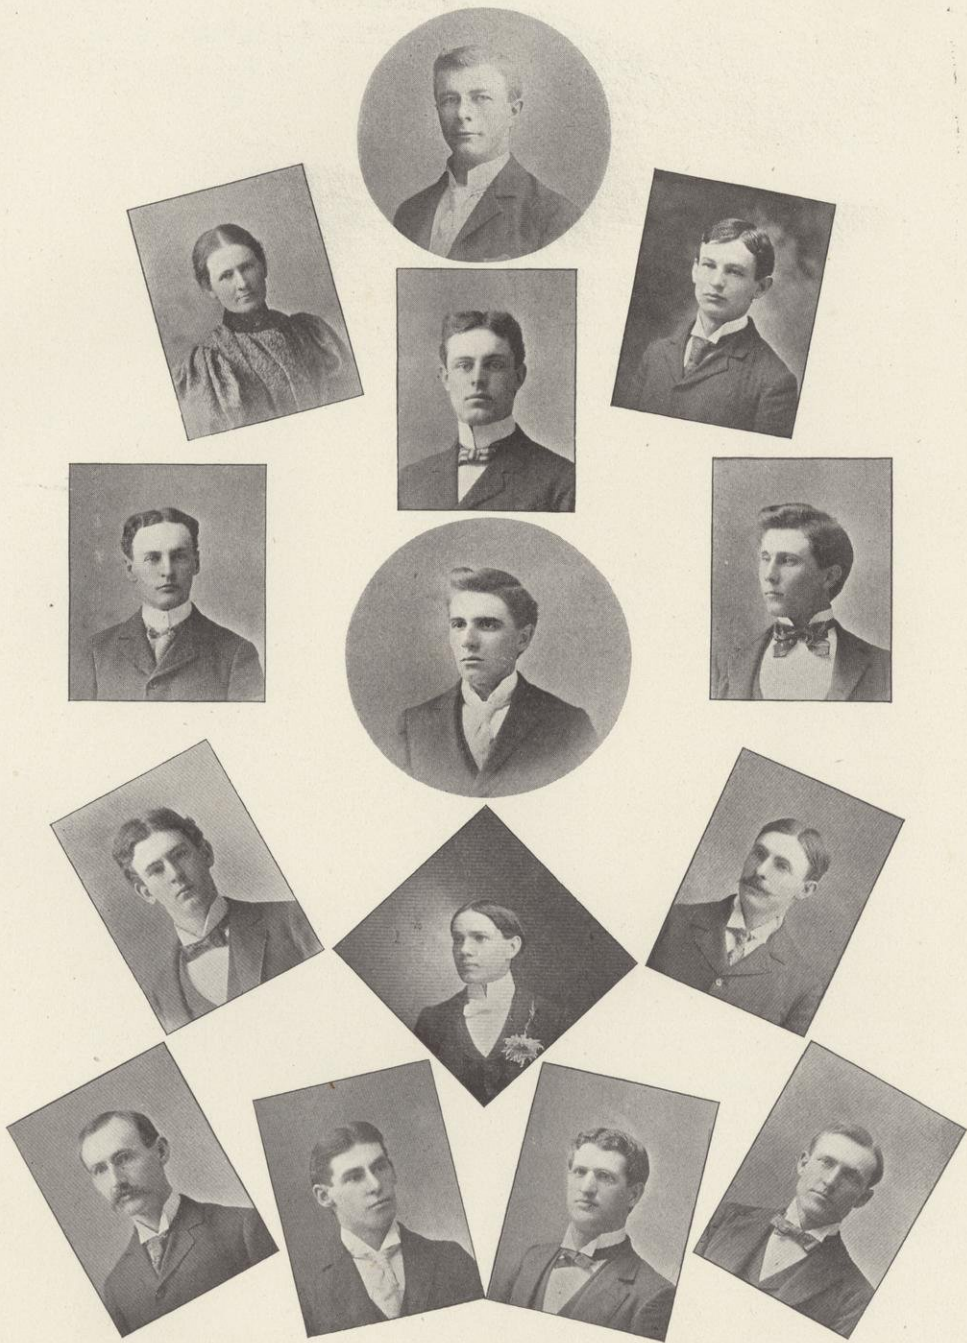

Poor players, to flit away and be forgot, like shadows or as dreams!

Masters, if our play have any savor of wit or truth, we crave a memory; or then, masters, we pray your sweet courtesies, and so, Farewell!

*U. Wisconsin,
Rah, Rah, Rah!
'98, '98,
Zip, Boom, Ba.*

Ne Plus Ultra.

FOR the third time '98 appears before the public. We do not, as in former years, appear tentatively, with bated breath, as befitted us when our prospects and hopes were our only claims to distinction, but standing firmly on the glory of our past. We to-day proudly call attention to a history worthy of a place in our own dear Badger.

In all departments of University activity our leadership has been acknowledged. In athletics we have never feared competition. Were not seven out of eight men in the last 'Varsity Crew enrolled in '98? In their glorious victory over the effete East did we not have reason to take especial pride? Was not the only Sophomore crew that ever defeated a Freshman crew that of '98? In track and field, have we not entered to win?

If you ask for debaters, orators and stump-speakers, we have them without number.

Our Junior Prom. has so far eclipsed the social attempts of our predecessors that we fear instead of stimulating, it will paralyze future efforts.

Finally, on the "Hill" there is great rejoicing when our happy faces appear at eight o'clock's, for throughout the whole University is not "jolly" Junior the equivalent for good nature, wit and wisdom?

On the field, with the oar, in the ball-room, in the classroom, '98 has attained a degree of success to which no other class has ever dared aspire.

Yet be ye not discouraged,
Ninety-nine and naughty-naught,
But ever strive to imitate
What '98 has wrought.

Yes, our greatest claim to the gratitude of our friends is the influence we have ever exercised on our associates. We have always discouraged the presumption of the verdant Freshmen, checking their exuberance by such means as occasion might demand, and "many a time and oft" have we given the Sophomore the benefit of our experience. Verily it is not our fault if they make not wise Juniors and dignified Seniors!

In conclusion, we commend as an example to all future classes—ourselves

As Freshmen—Irresponsible,
As Sophomores—Irrepressible,
As Juniors—Irresistible,
As Seniors—Irreproachable.
Then here's to '98!

Civilitas Successit Barbarum.

URING the past year it has certainly been demonstrated that the Sophomore Class is the great central fact in the University of Wisconsin. All of the various classes, except perhaps that remote, self-edifying aggregation known as Seniors, have, to a greater or less degree, come in contact with us, and been brought under our civilizing influence.

Upon that rude, barbaric, yet presumptuous, heathen horde of Freshmen, upon that most primitive race, barely emerged from the agricultural stage, has our influence been especially profound. From far and near, from every village and hamlet known and unknown to man, from all lands and climes, did they come—they fairly deluged the good city of Madison. Many feared that even the great Class of 'Ninety-nine, that had never yet gone down before the onslaught of any foe, had at last met its match. To all the upper classmen the overthrow of the most cherished traditions seemed imminent. Consternation reigned.

It was at this crisis that the Class of 'Ninety-nine bravely stood forth to defend the fair fame of the University of Wisconsin. With marvelous rapidity the invaders were stripped of their savage attributes and taught the habits of civilized life. Purely by our untiring efforts that heterogeneous mass has been reduced to a fairly respectable body.

The accomplishment of the task, wholly impossible as it seemed, will never cease to be a source of wonder to this and to succeeding ages. It was not effected by the force of arms. It was through the subtle, yet irresistible, influence of our culture and acquirements, through the mere association of the obstreperous Freshmen with us, their magnanimous superiors, that this signal triumph of mind over matter was won, and the honor of our class was vindicated.

This unprecedented achievement would of itself be sufficient to immortalize our class. But not upon it alone rests the glory of 'Ninety-nine. She needs no eulogist. Her deeds speak for themselves. In every line of activity, in every department of University life, her heroes shine with transcendent brilliancy. While other classes may recount in glowing terms their petty, ephemeral victories on the campus or the water, 'Ninety-nine looks confidently forward to greater and more enduring triumphs in useful fields of action. If the past is at all an index of what is to come, the future of the human race is secure. The perplexing problems of social, of political, of religious life, cannot fail to find speedy solution when the Class of 'Ninety-nine shall control the destinies of nations. With that golden age will come the millennium.

1900! Rah, Rah, Rah!*

Fin de Siecle.

AS THE history of the renowned class of 1900 has already become so great and complex as to warrant only a condensed synopsis in the present volume, and, furthermore, as no mere panegyric, both so common and so painful in the past, could do 1900 full justice, the present historian has deemed it wise to submit for present publication only an outline of his greater work.

Book I. The Development of the Idea of Independence.

CHAPTER I.

1900 arrives at Madison.—First impressions.—Feels green.—Sees number of strange people.—Their canes.—Their red neck-ties.—Their cigarettes.—Their self-sufficiency.—Suspected of being Sophomores.—Avoided.—Safe arrival at Law Building.

CHAPTER II.

1900 receives class cards.—Makes first recitations.—Begins to awake to future greatness.—Joins various societies.—Complimented by five presidents and sixteen visitors on unprecedented good intellectual appearance.—The question of yell: What shall 1900 call herself?—1899 proffers advice.—Advice rejected.

CHAPTER III.

1900 proposes meeting.—1899 objects and proposes to prevent.—The first bruises.—Kull to the rescue: Strikes terror in the hearts of the Kobold Kroomen.—More trouble.—1900 captured in part.—Makes good speeches and dismissed.—Still more trouble.—1900 prepares for defense.—Plots vengeance and liberty.—The eve of the new era.

Book II. The Struggle for Existence.

CHAPTER I.

Plans perfected.—The preliminary exercise in the Gymnasium.—The rush below.—Magnificent strategy.—The Armory captured!—1899 out-generaled.—EARLIEST FRESHMAN MEETING in the history of U. W.—1900 proceeds to business.—First President elected.—Vociferous cheers.—The other officers.—More cheers.—The spread of the news.—Sophomores on the scene.—Their council of war.—Immediate action contemplated.—1900 stations guards at doors.—Sophomores attack.—Business interrupted.—Sophomores repulsed.—1900 returns to business.—Constitution adopted.—Colors selected.—Yell formulated.—Business completed.—The motion to adjourn.

CHAPTER II.

The siege.—Deliberation.—Escape determined.—1900 marshals phalanx.—1900 yells.—1899 trembles.—The doors swing open.—The columns meet.—The conflict waxes hot.—1899 wavers, gives way, routed!—FIRST FRESHMAN VICTORY in the history of U. W.

CHAPTER III.

Nightfall.—1899 attempts guerrilla warfare.—1900 studying hard within doors.—No Sophomores admitted.—No victims.—Sophomores foiled again.—Sophomores resort to paint.—The break of day,—Grotesque appearance of sidewalks, fences, and telegraph poles.—Poor penmanship and artistic talent.—“What can it mean?”—Theories and theorizing.—Sophomores flunk.—Brilliant recitations of Freshmen.—Sophomores disgraced and desperate.—Order posters.—These readable and blood-curdling, but, 1900 bold, unterrified, and united.—Congratulations.

Book III. The Reign of Peace.

CHAPTER I.

1900's second meeting.—Inspiring oratory.—Committee on party appointed.—Its subsequent fate a mystery.—Probably lost, strayed, or stolen.

CHAPTER II.

1900's third meeting.—Revisory committees appointed.

CHAPTER III.

1900's fourth meeting.—Remarkable nominating speeches.—Prolonged excitement.—Officers elected.—Great enthusiasm.

CHAPTER IV.

1900's future bright.—The qualities that have won and yet will win.—1900's originality.—Her colors, motto and yell.—1900's physical excellence.—Prof. Elsom's figures.—Marked superiority to former classes.—1900's intellectual powers.—Her debaters, social stars, hard workers and geniuses.—Conclusion: 1900 may justly feel proud of herself.

Ex Cathedra.

WHEN the Board of Regents decided to extend the law course to three years they were in distress to know what to do for a class to be graduated in '97. It is a familiar condition of affairs, but it is nevertheless remarkable, that when a man wants a thing badly and thinks he is willing to take almost anything to meet his absolute needs, he generally winds up by getting the best the market affords. So the class of '97 came into being. The pressing need of any class at all was so evident that the regents concluded to take only the best, and college graduates were decided upon as the only acceptable candidates. The law class of '97 has little to present in the way of what is vulgarly called a history. Like unto the angels in Heaven, the lack of faults and vices furnishes an inadequate back-ground for the display of transcendent virtues; while the experiences of heavenly rulers from time to time have demonstrated that the best way to have your history believed is not to write it down; the Koran, the Zenda-vesta, the Homeric traditions, and the fundamental faith of every religious nationality has been in turn destroyed by the hard and disturbing elements of fact and science; until now only the transactions of the law class of '97, Caspar Whitney in Harper's Weekly, and the Bible remain; and even Caspar is passing.

But there are matters of grave moment in the life of '97, requiring to be outlined in order that future generations may be given a proper steer as to where the class of '97 was at on one or two occasions in its existence. During the first year nothing of any serious import happened to the class except Briggs. Subsequently mighty Ajax tumbled out of the constellation.

There is a story current to the effect that the Satanic realm annexed to the heaven of one of the existing religious orders grew out of the precipitate departure from the aforesaid heaven of a host of fallen angels. To change this rule and bring about a millennium even in a heaven, the class of '97, in the fall of 1896, took into its fold a very hell-upon-earth in the shape of outcasts from the class of '98; and Sheldon and Haskell. This seemed to skeptical people to forebode inevitable corruption of the purity and unity of mind previously existing; but not so! No more humble and docile element now exists in the class of '97 than that composed of the parties from various lower regions who fell up into this modern celestial abode. How this came about may interest outsiders, but it is a secret, and no one assumes to know anything about it. If you think any one does know anything ask Dorr or Wolf. But all is happiness now. To voice the unanimous sentiment of the class, one has only to say in the soft and varying inflections of Hendrickson's voice (to the tune of "I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard"), "I think the same way as the gentleman before me."

To the Badger Board:

IN reply to yours of the 10th ult., asking for an accounting from the Middle Class, I wish to say that, after careful search and inquiry, the Secretary's book cannot be found. You will therefore kindly overlook any errors which may creep in, as the following is purely from memory: We are the second class in the Law School to have the honor of being Middles. Here I will state that the word "Middle" applies only to the situation of our class-room, which occupies a medium position in relation to the Senior and Junior rooms, and that in ranking, the members of this organization of legal talent take no mean position.

The above statement is especially applicable since certain of our last year members, whom the Faculty feared could not pass the Middle work, have been transferred to the Senior Class. As may readily be inferred by those who know the circumstances, this exodus of ignorance and gross inability from our ranks at the very beginning of the year has left the historian but a sparse amount of material upon which to exercise his literary talents. There is still, however, some ground for action.

We are beginning to realize, from our dense ignorance of certain legal subjects, the wisdom of the Faculty in prescribing a three years' course. As an example: After a practical experience of six years' school teaching and two years' careful preparation in the Law School, there is still a member of our class who does not know the "theoretical difference between the calf and the milk."

Again, one would suppose that after being two years in a civilized community, eating cooked meats and breathing the Madisonian atmosphere of learning, all traces of the plains would have disappeared, yet it is not so, for one of our members at times so far forgets himself as to appear in class wearing a "red wampus."

In conclusion, please give the Middle Class credit for the following:

LIEGLER—High Jump, 5 feet 8¾ inches.
 FRAME—Broad Jump.
 RYAN—One Foot-ball Guard.
 ALSTED—One Foot-ball Manager.
 SCHMIDT—Boy Orator of the Great Lakes.
 FRAZIER—One Temperance Lecturer.
 KNEIP—One School Teacher.
 CLARK—One Railroad Magnate.
 HARNAN—One Silver Mine Owner.
 WHEELAN—One Wood County Member.
 ST. PETERS—One Saint, who has given, granted and devised to the Middle Law Class an estate in fee simple in New Jerusalem.

Respectfully yours,

LAW '98.

Ignorantia Legis Neminem Excusat.

IN no way, perhaps, can we better relate the most important events which occurred in the brief period of the Junior Law Class than by presenting extracts from the diary of the historian.

October 1st—Junior Laws meet for their first lecture.

October 13th—Shaw, the sage from Wauwatosa, while reciting, expresses great anxiety lest the professor should not be able to follow his learned discourse on a knotty question of law.

October 20th—Oberndorfer is accidentally discovered.

October 27th—'Varsity Yockey evidently having pleasant reminiscences of "hot wieners" speaks of free sausage while reciting on the subject of free socage.

October 29th—Junior Law foot-ball team is organized.

November 3d—McKinley is elected. Gillen has been on the stump.

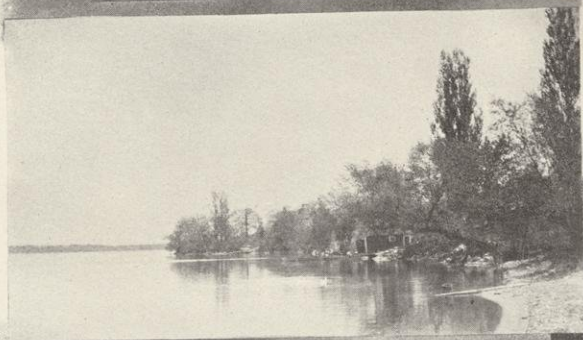

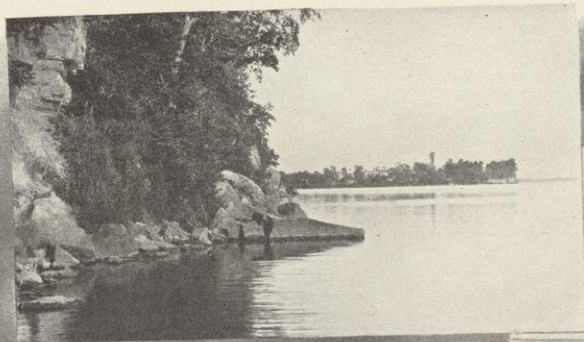

November 17th—Some of the professors declare their intention to carry an additional life-insurance to protect themselves from the vicious thrusts of "Stab" Miller.

November 30th—Junior Law foot-ball team has gone through the season without having been scored upon. (This is mainly attributed to the coaching of Mueller and to the fact that none of the opposing teams dared to line up against it.)

The Short Course in Agriculture.

HE Short Course in Agriculture adopted in 1885, consisted of one term of twelve weeks. It has been, however, extended and now consists of fourteen weeks for two winters. In this course young men are trained in practical and scientific agriculture; the aim being to produce intelligent dairymen, live stock breeders, horticulturalists and general farmers. Including the present class, 482 students have taken the course.

Most of the young men completing the course return to the farm and then put into practical use the knowledge acquired. There is a great demand for the students who have taken this work; and they have no difficulty in securing positions at fairly good salaries. The scope of the work in the College of Agriculture has become so wide, and its efficiency and practical value so generally recognized, that it has attracted students from all over the country. The following table of attendance will be found interesting:

	Long Course.	Special Graduate.	Short Course.	Dairy Course.	Total.

Moses S. Slaughter, Ph. D.

PROFESSOR MOSES STEPHEN SLAUGHTER was born in Indiana in 1860. In 1883 he was graduated from De Pauw University at Green Castle with honors in Latin. The following year he entered Johns Hopkins University and graduated in 1887, taking his degree of Doctor of Philosophy. During his second year he was a graduate student, which is considered quite an honor, and in 1885 he held a fellowship in Latin. The year after graduating he was instructor in Latin at Bryn Mawr, and in 1888 he held a professorship at Hackett's Town Institute, New Jersey.

The following year he accepted a professorship in Latin at Iowa College, which he held until coming to the University of Wisconsin. During the year 1893 to 1894 he studied in Berlin and Munich and also spent some time traveling in Greece and Italy.

Professor Slaughter is a member of the American Philological Society, and has published a number of articles, among them being a thesis on the Substantives of Tunice, in 1891, a treatise on the Carmen Seculaces of Horace issued in the transactions of the American Philological Society.

William S. Miller, M. D.

WILLIAM SNOW MILLER comes of good New England stock, his ancestors being among the earliest settlers of Springfield, Mass. He also can trace his family genealogy to General LaFayette. Professor Miller was born in Sterling, Mass., but his boyhood was passed in the suburbs of New Haven, Conn. Graduated from the Yale Medical School in 1879, he returned the next year for additional work in pathology. He practiced medicine until 1886, and in 1887 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, taking special work in his favorite branch of medicine—histology and pathology. In 1889 he was appointed Pathologist to the Worcester City Hospital, and the following year caused to be erected the finest pathological building in New England outside of Boston. In 1889 he was also appointed Pathologist to the Memorial Hospital, Worcester, an extensive institution devoted to diseases of women and children. In 1892 he was appointed Instructor in Biology in the University of Wisconsin. In 1893 he was transferred to the Department of Anatomy, and in 1896 was made Assistant Professor of Anatomy, and given a year's leave of absence, which he spent in the laboratories of Europe, particularly in Leipzig. Dr. Miller has written a large number of articles in scientific magazines, at home and abroad, and now has nearly ready for publication, in Germany, "The Lobule of the Lung; Its Blood and Lymph Vessels."

William E. Drew, LL. B.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM LINCOLN DREW, Assistant Professor of Law, was born at Newton, Iowa, November 1, 1864. His early life was spent on a farm. His preparatory education was received in the public schools of his native town and the Hazel Dell Academy of the same place. In 1883 he entered the Iowa City Academy, from which he graduated in 1885. In the fall of the same year he became a student in the State University of Iowa, graduating with the degree Bachelor of Science in 1889, and again from the Law Department, with the degree Bachelor of Laws, in 1892. Having become deeply interested in the common law as a scientific system, and beginning to look forward to the possibility of becoming a teacher of it, he decided to spend a year in the Harvard Law School, and entered that institution in the fall of 1892. He pursued his studies there with such success, that before the year was ended, he was chosen a member of the board of editors of the Harvard Law Review, which position he filled until the close of the school year. In 1893 he commenced the practice of law in Omaha, Neb., and remained in practice there until, at the beginning of this year, he was called to his present position of Assistant Professor of Law.

Louis W. Austin, Ph. D.

LOUIS WINSLOW AUSTIN, Assistant Professor of Physics, was born at Orwell, Vt., October 30, 1867. He received his early education in the High School at Middlebury, Vt., and in 1885 entered Middlebury College, from which he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1889, receiving highest honors in Physics. The year following was spent in post-graduate study in the University of Strassburg, Germany. In 1890 he was appointed to a fellowship in Clark University, where he remained one year. In the autumn of 1891 he returned to Strassburg, and in June, 1893, received the degree of Ph. D. from that university, his dissertation being entitled "An Experimental Study of the Elastic Fatigue in Metals."

On his return from abroad in September, 1893, he was appointed Instructor in Physics at the University of Wisconsin, and last June became assistant professor. Besides several scientific papers, Professor Austin, in conjunction with Professor Thwing, is the author of a text-book of laboratory physics.

Rodney H. True, Ph. D.

PROFESSOR RODNEY HOWARD TRUE was born October 14, 1866, near Baraboo, Wis. After the usual term in the schools of that town, he entered the University of Wisconsin in 1885. After two years of attendance, he spent a year in teaching, returning to the University as a member of the class of '90 with which he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science. From 1890 to 1892, he served as University fellow in Botany, at the end of which time he received the degree of Master of Science. During the school year 1892 to 1893, he was principal of the Wisconsin Academy, Madison, Wis. In the summer of 1893, he went to Germany, spending two and one-half semesters at Leipzig, receiving in January 1894, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, magna cum laude, submitting a thesis on "The Effect of Sudden Changes of Trugor and of Temperature on Plant Growth."

On his return to Madison, he studied during the remainder of the year as an honorary fellow in botany. In 1895, he was elected instructor in Pharmacognosy and in 1896, he became Assistant Professor in the same department.

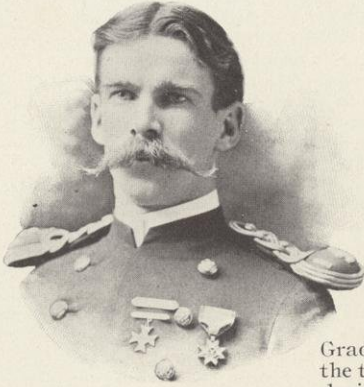

Ernst K. Voss, Ph. D.

ERNST KARL JOHANN HEINRICH VOSS was born at Buetzow, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in 1860. After studying at the Universities of Rostock, Marburg and Leipsic, he served in the German army from 1884 to 1885. In 1888 he went to England and worked in the British Museum. During his stay in England he taught also for a time in Ramsgate, Kent County. He came to the United States in 1889, settling down at Ann Arbor, Mich. He taught in the Central School, Saginaw, Mich., in 1889, and in the High School in 1890. After being an instructor in German at the University of Michigan from 1891 to 1893, he went abroad for further studies, especially in German philology, and remained in Europe until 1895. The degree of Doctor of Philosophy was conferred upon him by the University of Leipsic in 1895. He again served as instructor in German at the University of Michigan until he was called to his present position of Assistant Professor of German Philology last June. Professor Voss has written extensively on the language and literature of the Sixteenth Century, and is now publishing Thomas Murner's "An die Altdeutsche Nation" in Braune's "Neudrucke Deutscher Litteraturwerke des XVI. und XVII. Jahrhunderts."

Lieut. J. C. W. Brooks, U. S. A.

LIEUT. JOHN CRAFTS WRIGHT BROOKS was born July 14, 1862, in Birmingham, Mass., his father being Commodore W. B. Brooks, of the U. S. Navy, now retired. Young Brooks spent his early life in traveling with his father, but having inherited a taste for the army he succeeded in being appointed to West Point from Erie, Pa., in 1881. His four years at West Point were marked by great diligence and brilliancy and on graduating with honors in June of 1885, he was appointed to the rank of 2d Lieutenant, 4th Artillery, U. S. A. Later in the summer he was made 1st Lieutenant, 4th Artillery, stationed then with Battery G, at Fort Adams, R. I. From 1886 to 1888 he attended the Post-Graduate Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va. At the time of the outbreak of yellow fever in Florida, during the spring and summer of 1889, Lieut.

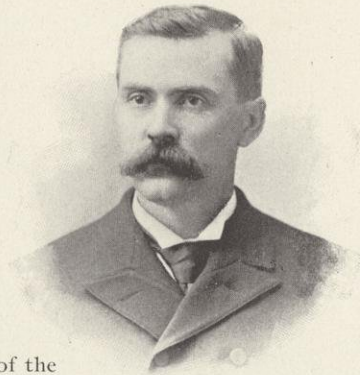

Brooks was ordered with a detachment of troops to Fort Banancas.

In August 1889, he was made Instructor in the Department of Ordnance and Gunnery at the U. S. Military Academy. This position Lieut. Brooks filled most satisfactorily until 1894, when he was removed to the Light Battery B, 4th Artillery, at Fort Adams, R. I., afterwards stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas. He remained with this Post until he accepted his present position of Professor of Military Science and Tactics last fall.

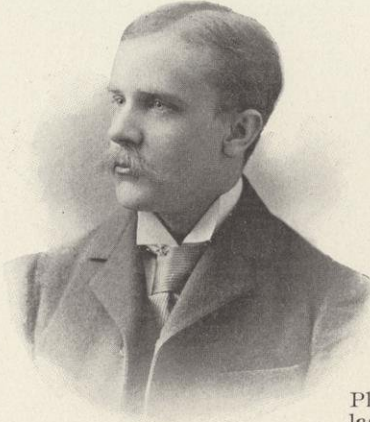

Lellen S. Cheney, M. S.

LELLEN STERLING CHENEY was born on a farm near Essex, Ohio, December 4, 1858. Until he reached the age of sixteen, he worked on a farm and attended the common schools. During a part of the year 1874 to 1875 he attended a private normal school at Ada, Ohio, returning to the farm in the spring. Two years later he came west to Champaign, Ill., where he found himself among strangers with four and one-half dollars in his pocket. The only position available to him was one on a farm at fifteen dollars per month, and he continued to work on a farm until the autumn of 1882. In March of 1882 he came to Wisconsin, and in August entered the Platteville Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1886. In August of the same year he was elected principal of the high school at Barron, Wis., which position he held three years, attending the Summer School of Science at the University of Wisconsin, during the sessions of 1888 and 1889, and entering the regular work in the University in the autumn of 1889, as a Junior. Upon graduation in 1891, he was elected fellow in Botany. In 1892, he was elected instructor in Pharmacognostical Botany. Last June he received the Degree of Master of Science and was elected Assistant Professor of Pharmaceutical Botany.

Frank C. Sharp, Ph. D.

PROFESSOR FRANK CHAPMAN SHARP was born at Jersey City Heights, N. J., in 1866, where he spent his boyhood and youth. After receiving his preparatory education at a private school in Jersey City, he entered Amherst College and graduated in 1887 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The year following, he tutored in Fitchburg, Mass., and in June, 1888, he went abroad for study, specializing in his life-study, Philosophy. He entered the University of Berlin, from which four years later he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. On his return to this country he was made a member of the faculty of the London School for Boys in New York City. In 1893 he was appointed instructor in Philosophy in the University of Wisconsin, and last year was appointed to an assistant professorship in the same department. Dr. Sharp has published a monograph and a number of magazine articles on ethical subjects.

William S. Marshall, Ph. D.

WILLIAM STANLEY MARSHALL, was born in Milwaukee, December 14th, 1866. He is the youngest son of Samuel Marshall, one of the oldest and most widely known financiers of Wisconsin. His early education was received at the Markham Academy in Milwaukee. At the age of fourteen he entered the Preparatory Department of Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania, and after passing through the four years course, he became a student at the college, receiving the Degree of Bachelor of Science in 1888. During the summer of 1886 he accompanied a party sent to the Bahamas by the University of Pennsylvania and Swarthmore College. In the fall of 1888 he entered the University of Pennsylvania, specializing in the Biological Department, under the direction of the late Dr. Joseph Leidy. While at the University of Pennsylvania he was a member of a local society which became a Pennsylvania Chapter of the Psi Upsilon Fraternity.

During the summer of 1889 he traveled in England with Dr. Leidy and family, and in the fall entered the University of Berlin. After remaining in Berlin for one year he went to the University of Leipzig from which institution he received his degree of Doctor of Philosophy. In the spring of 1892, he returned to his home in Milwaukee, where he remained until the fall of 1893, when he received a call from the University of Wisconsin and entered upon his duties as Instructor in Biology. In 1896 he was appointed Assistant Professor of Zoology.

JOINT DEBATE LEAGUE

Athena vs. Philomathia.

Library Hall, January 8, 1897.

Presiding Officer, PROF. D. B. FRANKENBURGER.

Question.

Should a system of municipal government concentrating all executive and administrative powers in the Mayor be adopted in cities of the United States of over forty thousand inhabitants?

INTERPRETATION.—"Executive and administrative powers" to include the sole power to appoint and to remove all heads of departments and chief city officers (except the Treasurer and the Comptroller. The Comptroller to have only the powers of an accounting officer.) All subordinates shall be appointed by the head of their respective department, under Civil Service rules, and may be removed by the same for cause other than political. The Mayor, the heads of the departments and the city officers in their respective capacities shall have the power: To make all contracts; to purchase all materials and supplies; to have charge of the construction, improvement, extension and management of public streets, works and property; to grant all licenses and franchises, subject to confirmation by the Common Council; to make all estimates for the following fiscal year, said estimates not to be increased by the Council.

CONCEDED, that the system is valid under the laws and constitutions of the States and of the United States.

Affirmative—Athena.

JULIUS GILBERTSON, '97.

JAY W. PAGE, '97.

OTTO BOSSHARD, '98.

Negative—Philomathia.

FRANK E. COMPTON, '98.

GEORGE B. NELSON, '98.

THEODORE W. BRAZEAU, '97.

Decision unanimously in favor of the negative—Philomathia.

Organized in 1896.

The object of the Science Club is stated in the preamble—"For the promotion, within the University of Wisconsin, of an interest in and knowledge of the physical and natural sciences and their useful applications." It gives to the instructional force, graduates and undergraduates an opportunity of ascertaining what work their colleagues are doing and the results of their researches. At the monthly meetings one or more papers are read and discussed.

The First Administration.

J. W. Caldwell

It should be mentioned to the credit of the Class of '59, that its members did not employ Bohn's Classics to aid in the translation of Greek and Latin. With no other assistance than that which the lexicons afforded, we framed our guesses as to the meaning of the ancient writers, and they suffered accordingly. To this statement there is an exception, and it is that which I am moved to record.

It was in our Junior year, and we were reading Plato's Crito. The library was then on the fourth floor of the old north building, adjoining the chapel, and on its shelves there was temptingly displayed a translation of the work mentioned. Perhaps we had heard that when Ralph Waldo Emerson was asked if he read Plato in the original, he answered that he would as soon think of wading the Charles River when there was a bridge within easy access; probably not. At all events, we were strongly moved to secure that book; but though we sent an innocent Freshman for the purpose, the librarian refused to issue it.

The door was locked; but there was a transom over it which opened freely. One dark night three forms might have been seen ascending the stairs, one carrying a lantern, and another a rope. This is my confession; so I must not disclose the names of the other two. One end of the rope was secured in some way, and the other thrown through the transom. Then the smallest of the burglars—and no one who can remember me at that time will be left in doubt as to which one that was—was lifted to the top of the door, and crawling through the narrow opening, descended as lightly as possible into the library.

At this critical moment footsteps were heard; what a shame that any student should keep such late hours and interrupt an important enterprise. The two burglars on the outside took refuge in the chapel and concealed themselves by lying on the floor behind the benches until the intruder had passed. Then the lantern was handed over the transom and, with its light, the desired book was found. The rope afforded convenient means of exit, and we returned to the other dormitory without detection. There we sat up nearly all night copying the Crito in its English attire, and first before dawn restored the book to its place on the shelves of the library.

Thereafter, to the close of that term at least, three students of the Class of '59 disclosed a readiness and accuracy as Hellenists of which they had never before been suspected. Alas, that the lips of the learned and amiable instructor who might have avouched this statement are closed in the silence of death.

ALEX. C. BOTKIN.

The University in the War.

Henry Barnardo

THE story of what was done by our alumni and students in the Civil War is one of which every friend of the University may well be proud. With the first call for volunteers for the three months' service, and on the first day on which books were opened for enlistment, April 17, 1861, eight students then in attendance upon the college classes enlisted in the company which was recruited by the late General Fairchild for the 1st Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry. They comprised George W. Ashmore, James M. Bull, Cary M. Campbell, Edward G. Miller, Pliny Norcross, Otis F. Remick, Henry D. Smith and William A. Wyse. With the exception of Campbell, who did not re-enlist, and of Ashmore, who died in the fall of 1861, after recruiting a company for the 11th Infantry, they all re-enlisted, after the expiration of their three months' service, and served until the end of the war, or until mustered out by death.

The daily spectacle of regiments organizing and drilling in Camp Randall, within sight of our recitation rooms, served as a constant stimulus to patriotism, if any stimulus were needed. Each successive call for troops drew largely from our number. Of the one hundred and nineteen students in attendance for the college year ending June, 1861, nineteen had enlisted when the Board of Regents presented their report, October 10, 1861, and forty-six of the one hundred and nineteen entered the service during the war. Forty per cent. therefore, of the number of students in attendance during the first year of the war, entered the military service before its completion.

Of the Class of 1864, comprising forty-nine members, during its freshman year eighteen entered the army. The class entered upon its Sophomore year with twenty members, twelve of whom enlisted before graduation, and only five of the original forty-nine graduated in 1864. No commencement exercises were held that year, four of the five members of the graduating class then bearing muskets in the field. The class of 1861 has a still more enviable record. It graduated nine members, six of whom entered the army, most of them serving during the entire war, five having the rank of Captain. The six comprised William W. Church, Azariah S. Hall, Almerin S. Gillett, Henry Vilas, Farlin Q. Ball and Michael S. Leahy.

It is impossible to determine accurately the entire number of students who entered the service, but from the best data available, supplemented by the personal recollection of the writer and that of other alumni of that period, they numbered about one hundred. This estimate includes only those who were in attendance during a part of the war period, excluding students and alumni of the years preceding 1861. The entire number of students appearing upon the catalogues during this period does not exceed three hundred. Thirty-three per cent. therefore, of the aggregate number enrolled, entered the military service.

The record of the alumni is even more creditable than that of the undergraduates. At the close of the war, and excluding the class of 1865, the alumni numbered just fifty. Of this number twenty-five served in the army or navy, most of them as commissioned officers and several of high rank. It may well be doubted whether any other college in the country can show a record of fifty per cent. of its alumni from 1852, when our first-class was graduated, to and including 1864, who bore arms in defense of the Union.

No complete list has ever been compiled of all students and alumni who served as enlisted men, and it would probably be impossible now to prepare such a list. A very large proportion of the number, however, served as commissioned officers. In the fall of 1861 a military company was organized among the students, arms were furnished by the state, and throughout the remaining years of the war, military drill was continued. This company proved an admirable training school, and many of its members afterward entered the service as commissioned officers. The following list of alumni and students who bore commissions is believed to be approximately correct, although perhaps incomplete as to numbers. In each case the highest actual rank is given, together with the brevet rank, if any.

- Atwell, William P., 1st Lieutenant, 37th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Ball, Farlin Q., Captain, 31st Wisconsin Infantry, and Brevet Major.
- Bird, George W., 2d Lieutenant, 40th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Botkin, Sinclair W., Captain, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
- Bradley, William, Captain, U. S. Colored Infantry.
- Bryant, Gustavus H., Captain, 29th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Bull, James M., Lieutenant Colonel, 5th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Bull, John, 1st Lieutenant, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
- Butler, Richard, Captain, U. S. Colored Infantry.
- Clawson, Phineas J., 1st Lieutenant, 20th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Colburn, Webster J., Captain and A. Q. M. and Brevet Major, U. S. Volunteers.
- Comins, Leander M., 2d Lieutenant, 1st Maine Cavalry.
- Davis, C. K., 1st Lieutenant, 28th Wisconsin Infantry.
- Dawes, Ephriam, Major, 53d Ohio Infantry.
- Dawes, Rufus R., Lieutenant Colonel, 6th Wisconsin Infantry, and Brevet Brigadier General, U. S. Volunteers.
- DeForest, Newton, Major, 2d Wisconsin Cavalry.
- Fairchild, Charles S., Paymaster, United States Navy.
- Fallows, Samuel, Colonel 49th Wisconsin Infantry, and Brevet Brigadier General U. S. Volunteers.

Fallows, William, 2d Lieutenant, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery.
 Frost, Lewis D., 1st Lieutenant, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
 Gillett, Almerin S., Captain, 20th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Gray, Henry L., 1st Lieutenant and Quartermaster, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
 Hall, Azariah S., Captain, 5th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Hammond, B. C., Chaplain 5th Wisconsin Infantry.
 High, James L., 1st Lieutenant and Adjutant, 49th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Hubbell, Richard S., Major 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery.
 LaGrange, Oscar H., Colonel 1st Wisconsin Cavalry and Brevet Brigadier General, U. S. Volunteers.
 Larkin, Courtland P., Major, 38th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Leahy, John, 1st Lieutenant, 35th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Leahy, Michael S., Captain, 35th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Lighthizer, H. B., 2d Lieutenant, 4th Wisconsin Cavalry.
 Mansfield, Fielding, Colonel, 54th Indiana Infantry.
 Marsh, Edwin, Captain, 29th Wisconsin Infantry.
 McCracken, Aaron H., 1st Lieutenant, 38th Wisconsin Infantry.
 McFarland, Andrew J., 1st Lieutenant, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
 Miller, Edward G., Captain, 20th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Norcross, Pliny, Captain, 13th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Powers, William P., 1st Lieutenant, 4th Wisconsin Battery.
 Remick, Otis, Captain, 11th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Rockwell, Albert J., 1st Lieutenant, 20th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Rockwood, S. S., 2d Lieutenant, 13th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Smith, Almon, 2d Lieutenant, 5th Wisconsin Battery.
 Smith, Henry D., 2d Lieutenant, 11th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Spooner, John C., Captain, 50th Wisconsin Infantry, and Brevet Colonel.
 Stone, Emery F., Captain, 20th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Tredway, Dwight, Captain and A. Q. M., and Brevet Major, U. S. Volunteers.
 Vilas, Henry, Captain, 23d Wisconsin Infantry, and Brevet Major, U. S. Volunteers.
 Vilas, William F., Lieutenant Colonel, 23d Wisconsin Infantry.
 Warner, Clement E., Colonel, 36th Wisconsin Infantry.
 Woodman, E. E., Captain, 13th Wisconsin Infantry.

The following are the names of those who are known to have died in the army, or of wounds or disease contracted in the service. The list is necessarily imperfect and includes only those whom the writer knew personally, after entering college in the spring of 1860, and there were doubtless many students of an earlier period who died in the service. The list is as follows:

George W. Ashmore, Leander M. Comins, Charles S. Curtis, A. A. Grout, E. C. Hungerford, Ira O. Isham, Almon Smith, Henry D. Smith, Asher Starkweather, Emery F. Stone, John E. Sutton.

Upon the walls of Memorial Hall, at Cambridge, the names of the sons of Harvard College who bore arms for the Union, and who died bearing them, are preserved as an enduring record of their loyalty to their college and to their country. No more appropriate or touching record of the dead of those far-off years has been anywhere preserved. We who still survive shall not have done our whole duty, until in some like form we shall perpetuate the story of our dead comrades.

JAMES L. HIGH.

An Interregnum.

J. W. Sterling

My earliest recollection of Prof. J. W. Sterling are connected with the Preparatory department of the University of Wisconsin about the year 1853. Dr. Sterling as Professor of Mathematics gave instruction to the Preparatory students, as did also the other University Professors.

I remember very distinctly the impression made upon my youthful mind, by this grave, tall instructor. He seemed the very personification of sternness, erectness and exactness, the ideal of a thorough mathematical professor. I did not catch at first sight the softening lines of geniality which, blended with his firmness, made him the great magnet to draw all the better class of students towards him as to one common center.

He had graduated at Princeton somewhat late in life, and represented the straight orthodoxy of its rigid theological teaching. The hospitality of his home, graced by a beautiful and attractive wife, was freely extended to the students. For a period, Prof. Sterling's family occupied a portion of the South Dormitory. In his charming home life a revelation came to us of the Professor's character, when we saw him lovingly holding on his lap the first baby of the Sterling household, and permitting him to take off the gold spectacles from his nose, and throw them on the floor.

In this preparatory stage of the University, some of the students were poorly grounded in their English studies, and did not seem to care much whether they advanced or not. The righteous soul of Prof. Sterling was vexed within him, as they bungled along in their course. One of them in particular repeatedly tried his patience. He was akin to that student to whom Prof. D. D. Whedon once said in an Eastern college, "Mr. Black, there is one peculiarity about yourself, you may never have noticed. It is this, you never seem to have the slightest idea of the sense your author wishes to convey."

He was in the same category with that other pupil in the University of Wisconsin, who was under the musical instruction of Prof. August Kuersteiner. This young man had no perception of musical tones, but was determined to sing. One day, in a full chapel, this would-be musician piped out in a shrill tone a discord, which brought Prof. Kuersteiner to the middle of the floor, when, with both fingers in his ears, he danced up and down, shouting in a high key of indignation, "Mr. Bones, Mr. Bones, you sphlit mine ear! you sphlit mine ear!"

To his slow-paced pupil, Prof. Sterling at last was compelled to say, with quiet dignity, but with marked emphasis, "Mr. Blecker, you have mistaken your place. You belong to the primary department of the Madison public school and not to the University of Wisconsin." And Mr. Blecker was accordingly retired.

But no Professor was ever more helpful and considerate towards those who were really in earnest in their work than was Dr. Sterling. In season and out of season he was ready to assist. Personally I can never sufficiently express my gratitude for the help he rendered me in the formative period of my life.

How best to study, what books to read, what plans for the future to make were among the suggestions brought out in many conversations. Books from his own library were freely lent, and as my bent was towards theology, the best authors in the Presbyterian fold were read and studied out of college hours, under his guidance, although the Professor never insisted that I must embrace all the five points of Calvinism to be either a Christian or a Minister of the Gospel.

There were many things the University of Wisconsin lacked in those days which the great state, whose name it now so honorably bears, is contributing in its advancing justice and appreciation for its fitting educational equipment. But the personal contact, day by day, with such men as Prof. Sterling, seems given to us who are among the earlier alumni to have been a full compensation for many of these present advantages.

The inspiration of their words, the quickening stimulus of their teachings, the uplifting interest of their brotherly actions, all appearing to us to have a direct individual bearing, we feel sure constituted an essential and abiding element of a truly liberal education.

SAMUEL FALLOWS.

An Era of Expansion.

None but those who knew the University of Wisconsin in her dark days can fully appreciate the changes which took place during the administration of President Paul A. Chadbourne, from 1867 to 1870.

The legislature had just made an attempt to atone for the neglect and wrong doing of many former legislatures; they had reorganized the institution by an act showing a proper conception of the needs of a State University, and had even given promise that her inheritance should be no longer withheld or diverted. For years the students had felt it their duty to watch and wait in the galleries of the legislature, and see whether the University could exist another year. When President Chadbourne came they soon found that he knew all about legislatures, and they found they had little time to play the role of lobbyists. Although in physical stature President Chadbourne was of slender frame and shorter than most of his students, we never feared that the dignity of his place would not be maintained nor that his leadership at the University was in danger. His classic head and face would have attracted attention among any body of men; he had not been among us a week before we had learned that the flash of his dark eye and the quick flush of his cheek indicated a temper which would brook little nonsense.

A little gift of oratory in a college president always warms the cockles of the student heart. President Chadbourne had this gift, and the enthusiastic Western boys were always glad to give him audience. We supposed that he had great executive ability and we knew that he was a good teacher. However strange it may seem in these days of specialization he seemed to us equally at home in his lectures on Natural Theology, Botany, Crystallography and Moral Philosophy.

It is doubtless true that the President had touched the world at too many points and studied too many things to be a specialist of the highest rank; but he was a man eminently fitted for the stirring, practical duties of those days of reconstruction when the lax methods of the old college days were to be given up forever. He was a strict disciplinarian and knew how to inspire enthusiasm among his faculty and students, and how to create confidence among the people of the state. He was able to see the great possibilities of the little, struggling institution to which he had come, and at once bent his energies to the planning of different colleges and courses.

The experimental farm had only been recently purchased. In many circles the whole scheme had been treated as a huge joke, but when he began with enthusiasm the work of arousing public interest in this feature of the University, he found a quick response and hearty support; the hardy farmer boys worked at ten cents an hour in digging out grubs and rocks and thus eked out their college expenses, and at the same time helped prepare the fields and the roads of the University farm. The energetic President tramped over the fields and through the underbrush, personally superintending the work. He began extensively the planting of trees, of which the long rows of Arbor Vitae and the Lindens are a reminder, and of erecting fences and buildings. He began that system of experiments which has since been carried on by other men with such honor to the University.

Before President Chadbourne's administration the only recommendation of the scientific course was that it was a short cut to a diploma. During his term the laboratory system was organized; it began with instruction to a single student who used a carpenter's workbench in the cellar of one of the oldest buildings. But before President Chadbourne left, the University had fully commenced that splendid work of scientific instruction, which had earned for it the first place among Western Universities.

It was in his day that the Law School was organized with a class of ten students, who had their college home in the basement and upper rooms of the state Capitol, and the students of this department long traveled the circuit of dingy rooms in many places inside the Capitol and out.

It was during President Chadbourne's administration that the Military department first became a feature of the University, and it met with no hearty welcome. The students then were much older than the students of this generation, they had gone to the University for very definite purposes, and some of them had already spent four years in the war. The officers were appointed from the ranks of the upper-classmen and with reference to class standing, and it is literally true that some of those who had fought as officers in the great campaigns of Grant and Sherman were found in the ranks drilled and ordered about by seniors and juniors, who were obliged to give their commands while reading from books of tactics. In such a situation there was infinite annoyance to some of the victims, and infinite sport for those who loved the ridiculous. The military commander fancied that he was going to found a second West Point; he saw none of the humor of the situation; he could not see why the farmer boys who had been working in harvest to pay their way, and some of whom were boarding themselves, should not yearn for the military discipline and for wintry drills in the snow drifts. It may be imagined that he did not find his University life a paradise. He had little patience with the lusty fellows who would appear with big overcoats and yarn mittens for the military drill, and he soon left the barbarians of the West for a more congenial home.

It is very certain that in those days the honors of the University were conceded to the men who were foremost in scholarship or oratory. Every young man of promise joined either the Athenean or Hesperian Society, and every one was expected to be something of an orator, unless he was a mathematician. For several years other oratorical displays took the place of public debates which, I believe, had an earlier origin, but about 1868 these were resumed.

In those days the faculty and students were expected to be present every morning for their chapel exercises, the faculty occupying the platform, the seniors sitting in front, and for some years each senior enjoyed the rare honor of having a desk with lock and key. It was one of the forms of conspiracy among the less favored under-classmen that these sacred desks would sometimes be found in the morning along the shores of Lake Mendota. The immortal and ever faithful Patrick was always the first to find and restore them, but always in blissful ignorance of the names of the conspirators.

There were athletics in those days. The gymnasium consisted of a magnificent oak just west of the north dormitory, having attached a long rope to which was fastened a large iron ring on which the athletes could swing in the air to their hearts content.

Secret societies were unknown among us. Had a college student appeared with a dress coat in those days, he would probably have been arraigned before a moot court in one of the dormitories with such a trial and such eloquence and such a punishment as only those tribunals could afford.

Those who were not compelled to board themselves boarded in private families or more often in clubs, and in the latter case they chided the steward if the board exceeded a dollar and a half per week. On one occasion in a well-known club, the careless steward had provided a monster turkey too aged to be thoroughly appreciated even by the hungry students. Like the chickens said to have been found by an officer of General Grant on one of his campaigns, it was "so tough you could not put your fork into the gravy." But at the next meal the poet laureate of the club read a stirring poem inspired by the event, and amid laughter and uproar a vote of thanks was extended to the aged turkey and the young poet.

As I exchange reminiscences with the old boys we sometimes regret that we were denied the splendid opportunities of the modern University, the new modes of teaching, of original investigation, the laboratories, the gymnasium, the enthusiasm of the great athletic contests, the good fellowship of secret societies, and the other advantages of a great modern University: but the self-denial and the poverty of the old days went hand in hand with good cheer and friendship and the joy of youth, and the old memories are good enough for us.

BURR W. JONES.

The Twombly Regime.

THE Twombly period marks a distinctive era in the history of the University of Wisconsin. It reminds me of nothing so much as of the transition epoch in the history of Mother Earth, when one great age was merging into the succeeding age of an entirely different character. Being transitional, it partakes of the characteristics of the preceding era and also gives evidence of the new forces which are to shape its future. I hope, therefore, I may be pardoned if I likewise overlap in my review; since I speak from a personal experience extending from December, 1869, to June, 1874, I must needs be somewhat personal.

Now, the University officials took a very radical step when, in the fall of 1871, they introduced coeducation into this institution. The clock of the century had not then struck woman's hour. The crown of the new woman's head had scarcely emerged above the horizon. That was a quarter of a century ago. In deference to the feeling that the taxpayers had some claim upon the state institution for the education of their daughters as well as their sons, young women had been tentatively admitted to a "normal course."

J. H. Twombly.

The next step was to dub this bothersome "annex" "Female College." How utterly inadequate and unworthy were the advantages offered, may be inferred from my own experience when I entered the "College" in 1869. I wanted the best there was to be had in my part of the country. Shut out from Beloit College by the disqualification of sex, spurning the narrowness and espionage of Rockford Female Seminary, I betook myself to our State University, simply to find that I, a young girl who had known only the advantages of district and select school, put a severe strain upon the flexibility and resources of the curriculum of the Female College.

With much difficulty I was at last classified with the Seniors in geology and political economy, and, without any preliminary preparation, with a class in Latin reading Cæsar's Commentaries! Thanks to the kindness of the respective professors, Daniels and Carpenter and Allen, I still live to tell the tale.

The old South Dormitory was our abode, with its bare halls and stairs well worn by the tread of many feet for two decades or more (a manly tread, at that, before the female irruption); the walls of sitting-room and bedrooms decorated with ancient paper, of hideous pattern, depending in ungraceful folds. In the fourth story was a small hall which, by dint of much crowding, would hold about two hundred people. In this was held the usual evening "chapel exercises," the regular meetings of Castalia and its anniversary exercises. To say that we were satisfied would be to say that the captive hugs his chains.

Playing ball in simple fashion, we sometimes had to follow a truant ball over toward the North Dormitory. To be ordered back in peremptory tones by the passing "Prex" was a downright insult. To be allowed to go to church Sunday evening only in procession, with a teacher at the head, was an indignity not to be submitted to. Nor was our sense of injustice mollified when we looked over to the corner of the Campus, where was rising the (to us) prison walls in which it was proposed to incarcerate the "Female College."

Without question, President Chadbourne was a scholarly man and a magnetic teacher, but old-fashioned and unprogressive to a degree as far as woman's half of the world was concerned. But he could not stem the tide which was rising. The climax came when the Castalians in solemn conclave decided that the coming anniversary exercises must be held "down town."

Since "fools rush in," etc., this writer was spokesman of the committee appointed to beard the lion in his den, inform him of our wishes, and, if possible, secure his consent to our project. With such show of courage as we could muster, we made known our plans—to be received with scant and wrathful courtesy. "We might do as we pleased; but, as for him, he wished us to know that he was unalterably opposed to the whole thing." With that deliverance he turned his back upon us, and we considered ourselves dismissed.

Nevertheless, we "crossed the Rubicon," and the crowded condition of the old Congregational Church on anniversary night and the encomiums in the daily papers of the next day were the testimony to the success of our bold exploit.

But presto! It is the fall of 1871. President Chadbourne is out and President Twombly in. The "Female College" is still undone, but the Female College course is done for, in fact, it is non est. Are we dreaming, or is it real?—that we are at liberty to follow the regular college courses, that we may take lectures in the same room with men, that we may have the exalted privilege of hearing "the boys" make a stab or flunk! Ah! yes, it is true, and we are free and equal. We climb the hill with erect carriage and dignified mien. But what is this we hear? "It's no use to let the girls in. They can't keep up with us." Even good old Prof. Sterling thinks that "a girl may do very well in languages and literature, but when it comes to the higher mathematics—"

Time passes, and the girls demonstrate that they can "keep up." Prof. Sterling says that "the best man in his astronomy class is a Miss —." (His astronomy did not include geography of the heavens, since that was "what they taught in female boarding schools.")

The leader of the Class of '74, easily neck and shoulders ahead, is Mrs. Jennie Field (Bashford).

So peace spread her white wings over the Campus, and the incidents of these years which follow are not so stirring as of those which precede. It was a fortunate circumstance which brought to the young women at this juncture Mrs. Delia E. Carson. The influence of her gentle but firm reign, of her conservative progressiveness, was just what was needed to quell the hoydenish independence of the past, self-respecting self-restraint and good breeding. "Ladies Hall," clean, commodious, well furnished, was entered with feelings of gratulation. Space forbids to tell of life in Ladies Hall, of the exciting fire alarm caused by an overturned lamp, of its receptions and noted reception-room, where "peace had its victories no less than war." We must omit all mention of many phases of the first years of co-education and of the more general incidents of University life which, with the garrulity of age, we might rehearse to younger ears.

JENNIE MUZZY COVERT.

The Time of President Bascom.

The Transition Period.

John Bascom

TWENTY-THREE years ago there went out from the University of Wisconsin a class of forty, most of whose members had known four different heads of the institution, Presidents Chadbourne, Twombly and Bascom, and Vice-President Sterling.

Despite the frequent changes of administration, the work in all departments went on uninterruptedly under the direction of an excellent corps of professors. Vice-President Sterling was the devoted friend of the University and of all its individual members during a generation of useful service, and faithfully stood at the helm in periods of transition from one president to another. Professors Carpenter and Allen were masters in their respective fields, and for many years wielded large influence over all who came under them. The faculty was not large, but, it consisted of men and women of superior attainments and of sterling worth, who maintained an attitude of personal interest toward the students that was most helpful and inspiring.

The student body of the period which my recollection covers was earnest and studious, of simple habits and without expensive tastes. It had experienced in its childhood the stirring events of the Civil War and had felt the force of great national issues. This may account in part for the white heat of enthusiasm with which grave public questions were discussed in the weekly debates of the literary societies, which formed perhaps the most characteristic feature of our college life. Joint debates and oratorical contests between the Hesperian and Athenæan societies stirred the college world as profoundly as does a political campaign the nation, while to all concerned the issues were quite as important.

The essay was then considered the only form of public speech quite proper for ladies. Orations were rarely attempted. Debates were, however, inaugurated among the girls at this time, first in a secret society, called the Egeican, which was formed for the purpose and flourished until its members had acquired a little experience when it was discontinued, and instead, debates were introduced as a common feature of the long-established Castalian society and of the new Laorean.

The library was small in those days but the splendid collection of the State Historical Society was well used; it is doubtful if there has ever been a period when the student body was in closer intellectual touch with the great world of ideas.

A college paper had recently been started and in the first flush of youth entered with ardor into the discussion of vital questions of the day. The writer has recently met a college bred woman of ability, who as a child in a distant state had her ambition aroused by reading copies of the University Press sent to the family by a student then in the University of Wisconsin.

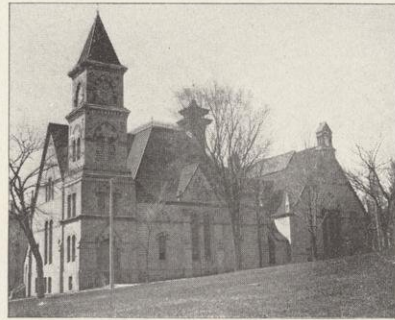

Athletics and intercollegiate contests and fraternities had small space in those days, but life was full of jest, notwithstanding, for a college is perpetually young and always overflowing with high spirits.

To the class of 1874, the first graduated under President Bascom, came the full force of the radical change by which co-education was established. From early years there had been a measure of co-education, various courses of lectures having been offered to young men and women together; though in the lecture-room the latter were never questioned or expected to speak in the presence of the former. But in the autumn of '71 the new system was put into operation and became the settled policy of the University. The Female College, that misnomer of a past age, then came to an end, to the joy of all concerned. The girls who in the previous year, from their old home in what was known as the South Dormitory, watched the erection of Ladies' Hall, feared that with its completion the Female College might take a fresh lease of life, for the new building seemed quite distant from the others, which were all on the hill, and it was supplied with a chapel and classrooms of its own. We used to say that we never wanted to go inside the building, but when, by action of the Board of Regents, all departments were freely opened to us and it was understood that our sphere was not to be restricted to Ladies' Hall we were glad to be among its earliest occupants.

The writer remembers the suppressed excitement with which we entered upon the new order of things involved in co-education. With the enlargement of courses of study and of requirements for graduation, the young women were quite at sea as respected class rank. It was a novel experience to have everything offered to us on equal terms with our brothers.

Heretofore we had been glad to pick up such crumbs of knowledge as might fall from their tables, and we were now perplexed with the very multiplicity of our riches, even though electives were then scarcely known. When the adjustments were made and all were classified, the young men, contrary to the experience in some of the older colleges, welcomed their sister classmates with generous cordiality. The class of '74, then Sophomores, held a meeting at once and decided to wear neckties of blue ribbon as a class badge. The big blue bows were very unbecoming, as I remember, but they were highly appreciated as a bond of union.

The professor of geology looked askance—or not at all for a time—upon the feminine contingent of fourteen that now invaded his domain, and other professors were known to entertain fears that this new element might prove a hindrance to the masculine intellect; but a little experience cast all such fears to the winds, and it may safely be said that the experiment was a success from the first. Was it not foreordained to succeed from the creation, when God said: 'It is not good for man to be alone'? President Bascom's strong testimony to the advantages of co-education has been widely quoted in connection with the history of this modern world movement.

Dr. Bascom entered upon his duties as President of the University of Wisconsin in the spring of 1874, and fifteen successive classes passed under his molding hand. Tall, erect and noble in bearing, he was the embodiment at once of physical and moral uprightness. A thinker and writer of note, with ideas in advance of his time, forciful in public speech, every good cause found in him an ardent champion and every evil thing a dauntless foe. His hold upon the student body was remarkable. Despite the severe strain of Puritanism imparted by a long line of New England ancestry, his high sense of justice made him wise in discipline, while his lofty character and his genuine interest in the youth about him won their hearty admiration and affection.

A strong man anywhere, in the class-room Dr. Bascom was at his best. As a member of his first Senior class it was my privilege to enjoy his instruction for only three months, but they were months of such stimulus as leave their impress for a lifetime, and they witnessed the renaissance which his advent brought to the University. The study of ethics, or of moral philosophy, as it was then called, despite the use of a very dull text book, was, under his direction, no dry-as-dust subject, such as we had before regarded it, but assumed its true place as the most fascinating of studies. All the wealth of learning that characterizes his many volumes on philosophy, religion and sociology seemed at his tongue's end, and a question at any moment would call it forth, when it would be so pungently put and so aglow with enthusiasm, for there was in his oral teaching a clearness and sparkle surpassing his printed page, that the student must be hopelessly dull who would not catch the contagion of his thought and spirit and be roused to higher endeavor. "Establish definite centers of truth, but draw no circumferences. Let the truth be free." "You have a right to your mistakes. Failure is the next best thing to success if it comes as the result of an honest effort."

"What is a strong man for but to tie to?" I yet hear his ringing words as he appealed to the college-trained young people before him to aspire to meet the world's need of wise and helpful leadership. It might have been said of President Bascom, as was said of his own illustrious teacher at Williams College, "Given a Mark Hopkins at one end of a pine bench and a Garfield at the other and that is a college" so, given a John Bascom and a sturdy youth from the Wisconsin prairies under the empty dome of University Hall and that is a university. To those who were privileged to enjoy his instruction, that season must always seem a golden age in their personal history and in that of their Alma Mater.

JANE FIELD BASHFORD.

The Close of the Administration.

Dr. Bascom's term as President of the University is a very important period in its history. It began in eighteen hundred and seventy-four and ended in eighteen hundred and eighty-seven. During this time the state made great gains in wealth and population and, partly from this and partly from other causes, the number of students increased rapidly. As a result new courses were provided, new departments added and new buildings erected. So that when President Bascom retired one who had been a student in seventy-four would, coming back, have found little to remind him of old times.

In language dear to us all as Sophomores, "this was a period of transition." During its early part co-education was by no means an accomplished fact at the University. The same courses of instruction were not open to both sexes, and the "co-eds" were shut off from other privileges they ought to have had or thought they ought to have had. It did not take long for this to change, as we all know. Then there were no secret societies or at least but one or two. By eighteen hundred and eighty-seven there were nine or ten. Then no one ever heard much of athletics. Before many years we heard a good deal. There were also, as I have said, great changes in the number and character of courses, and I may also add in the methods of instruction. In a word, it was during this time that the University began to have a position of importance among the great institutions of learning in the country.

These were golden years for the University. The President was a man of marked ability in many ways. He was a good executive, a persuasive speaker and writer, and an inspiring teacher. His personal influence was strong, both in and out of the classroom. There are, I am sure, few students of that period who did not find it so. He always commanded their respect and I do not believe he ever appealed to them in vain, either individually or as a body, upon any subject requiring their action.

The faculty consisted of many capable men, all of whom labored diligently in the interests of learning. Their opinions were sought for on many public questions. The University grew in influence. The standard of admission was steadily advanced, with good results, on the subordinate schools throughout the state. Lecture courses by prominent members of its staff were established here and there, summer schools under the supervision of its trained men were founded and an impetus thereby given to education generally.

There were many features of college life then which have since disappeared or remain only in a modified form. I can mention but a few. Athletics, though prominent during the latter part of President Bascom's administration, had not reached by any means the importance they have since attained. The tendency was rather towards oratory and debates. The flood gates of speech were seldom if ever closed. The literary societies flourished. There were Joint debates, Junior exhibitions, Sophomore semi-publics and Freshmen declamations. Who should be chosen for these honors was the theme of every class from the day it entered until the places were filled, when the discussion would turn on how they would be filled in the classes below. The ladies came in for their share of the honors. At one time everybody spoke or read an essay commencement day, whether he wanted to or not. We used to have orators even in the classroom. The great question was not, how does he stand in his class, or what can he do in athletics, but can he talk, and, if so, how long? If the answer was satisfactory he was voted unanimously a great man.

It must not be supposed, however, we were always serious. Far from it. The usual gaieties of college life were indulged in. There were class and fraternity parties, picnics, botanizing tours, boating excursions and many other forms of social pleasure. I remember well the first class party I attended as a Freshman. The arrangements had been conducted with great secrecy, as we supposed, no one but Freshmen having been invited. The ice cream, without which no party was considered to amount to much, had been ordered from down town. While being brought up in charge of a solitary and unwary Freshman it was seized by a band of upper class-men, who bore it away in triumph to a hole in the ground not far away, called by courtesy an observatory, leaving the Freshman lamenting. There they spent the young hours of the night in feasting and laughter over our discomfiture, while we went supperless to bed. We had four of the chief conspirators arrested, but they proved an alibi.

In speaking of those days, one is sure to remember the dormitories. I never lived in them myself, which may account partly for my jealousy of those who did. The privileges they afforded were many. If anything of a dark and deep nature had to be done, it was planned there and executed there, if possible. If there was an orchard that needed attending to, a cow that ought to be impounded, or a Freshman to be taken down a bit, the duty of the hour was cheerfully undertaken by some one from the dormitories. I have always been a little sorry that they have had to be dispensed with. We all miss them when we go back.

We were compelled to drill in those days, and many were the shifts resorted to to evade it. One man presented an excuse that he was incapacitated on account of want of exercise. He did not get off. At the time of which I speak there was a certain officer of the regular army in charge of the battalion. It was his custom during the winter when the snow was too deep for drilling, to deliver lectures in one of the rooms of Science Hall. One afternoon a large beam which had been placed in a perpendicular position in the room during some repairs, became loosened for some cause and fell directly toward the desk behind which the Lieutenant sat. A cry of alarm arose from the students. The Lieutenant raised his eyes, saw it coming, and merely turned a little in his chair, the beam falling within a few inches of his head. He then resumed his lecture without a sign of fear and hardly of embarrassment. I think that after this we took more kindly to military discipline.

Many more incidents could be related characteristic of the time, but these will have to suffice.

I remember once seeing in Life or Puck a series of funny pictures, the first represented two Irishmen standing in front of a bar indulging in drinks and reminiscence. The second showed them in violent altercation about a love affair they had quarreled about some years previous at Donnybrook Fair. In the third they were rolling in a rough and tumble fight on the floor. Finally, in the fourth, they appear before the bar again, much the worse for wear, touching glasses and saying: "Thim happy days will niver come agin." So I say now, though not exactly in the same spirit.

The Merry Days of Chamberlin.

TEN years ago is still the present. A decade is too short to change the vivid reality of experiences into the shadowy indistinctness of memories; and reminiscences by an alumnus of eight years would be a paradox if history were measured by time instead of by events. But the boy lives years in the hour that changes him into trousered manhood, and all the experiences of his knickerbockered boyhood belong to an almost forgotten past. Just as rapid has been the development of this Western college into a great university, so that the events of the new era have crowded into the reminiscent past the college life of even the downy-lipped alumnus.

There is scarcely a landmark to recall the old time. The harrowing obscurity of the Roman subjunctive construction, the delicate Teutonic differences between "du" and "sie," and the law of supply and demand as applied to the lonesome jewsharp on the sailing ship are now as they always have been and ever will be; and are not topics that inspire pleasant reminiscent thoughts. Even the venerable Main Hall knows not Joseph. Its old portico is replaced with a thing of furbelows and glistening paint. Without the familiar path our feet had worn into its old stone floor we cannot find our way into its interior, now an unknown region.

We long to see again the rotunda, where the wise were wont to leave their old overshoes, that they might carry away the new ones of the foolish. Where is the President's office, whose atmosphere of sanctity was not so pervading but that our excuses for absences caused the new President to compile statistics on our alarming state of health? Only the ghost of the Light Brigade now charges in the chapels, whose echoing walls repeat mournfully, "This is an age of progress," as a requiem for departed customs, and where once the terrified Freshmen held class meetings, surrounded by Pat as a trocha against the insurgent Sophomores outside. Even the literary societies, which know no law as inexorable as precedent, no longer have the filibuster over the censor's report interrupted by Pat's positive announcement that it is "livin o'clock" and time to "git out," and probably Athena's Tobacco League is in need of a monument beside that of the dearly, beloved Senior vacation, to be joined by another sacred to the memory of college rhetorical, where once a month we received good advice from the President and learned the correct pronunciation of "new." Even the old well, which has watered the students since the Chancellor kept house in the dormitory, the most sacred of Wisconsin's traditions, has been the victim of sacrilege. A green barnyard pump, with the name of the maker cast in the handle, has supplanted the old wooden buckets from which we drank with joy unmarred by the fact that more water went down outside than inside our necks. We resented even the slight blow to traditions offered by '90's cup, though the unpoetic maintained that a tramp stole the cup, thinking it silver. After this it would be no shock to see Main Hall's dome resplendent with fresh paint. Ladies' Hall, formed in austere straightness that made it the perfect embodiment of eminent propriety and the model forbidding chaperon, has become alarmingly frivolous, with saucy oriel windows, and shockingly up-to-date with an elevator, which at best is a poor substitute for the smooth banisters as a means of descending rapid transit. No doubt, one of the dormitories will soon be transformed into a castle on the Rhine, with stained glass windows depicting the Viking voyages, and the other into a Grecian silo, with gargoyles of corn-fed swine and a tower of unpatented butter-testers.

The old "Gym" needs no memorial tablet; it has a noble monument on the old tennis court. No pleasant memories linger about the old thing anyway!—drill frappe and forced songs and dances are not joyful reminiscences of Freshmen days. But it was typical of our athletics, whose horizon included Beloit, Lake Forest, Northwestern and Racine. No Cæsar led us to victory against the fair-haired barbarians of the North. Metoxen's band had not come out of the West, so we were able to wear our scalps on straight. The sleep of the aquatic East was not disturbed by dreams of the Yara Yara. There was no faculty supervision, though there is a legend that one of the professors was known to cut laboratory work to sit on the fence during a class ball game. Our field day was confined to the athletic ticket. But we had a base-ball team. Its victorious return from the "trip" was welcomed with booming guns and tooting conches, and when Racine's Lunt sent us home in shame we consoled ourselves with the Seniors' tales of the invincible Connelly and Waldo, the heroes of former days. Little did we realize of the fame in store for our University when Casper Whitney should discover in it his pet horrible example.

We were a well, mild-mannered lot on the whole. We did not steal apples, like our ancestors; the orchard had been uprooted. Nor was there any direct evidence that on Hallowe'en we played leap-frog with the new President. And then, too, the administration checked our inherent playfulness with a device that forced us to pay for University property destroyed, and, indeed, this protective tariff was so high that it was virtually prohibitive. Freshmen, however, were on the free list, so there was no lack of amusement until the Freshmen undertook to haze a post-graduate. But the police judge reduced the regular price on their victim because the goods had been previously damaged by water.

The pleasantest reminiscence, however, is that our college life was under the administration that marked the beginning of the new era. It was President Chamberlin that saw the possibilities of the University, and his energy that started its development on the broader and more practical lines. He came at a critical period. Had he lacked the comprehension of the needs of the institution, had he quailed before the difficulties, which could be overcome only by boundless energy and fearless determination, the University of Wisconsin would to-day be in the obscurity of a Western college instead of having the distinction of a great university.

The Good New Days.

If there was one thing more than another that jarred upon Denslow's Sophomoric serenity it was when the old Grad dwelt upon the delights of the good old days.

"In my day," the old Grad would say; "in my day, young man, things were not as they are now." And Denslow, making bold, would return that he thanked his lucky stars things were as they were.

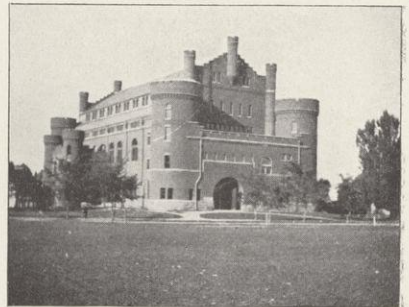

I have often thought of the pranks which Denslow related to the old grad. in exchange for the old grad's reminiscences of the old days, and I have thought how those pranks would improve in the telling throughout the years until they should become dignified as reminiscences of Denslow's good old days. But to call them reminiscences now, when two years have not flown! As well ask the boy who but yesterday somersaulted beneath the shade of the tall oak tree to discourse upon tree and shade and somersaulting.

A truce to the dear old grad. Let him boast of old Science Hall, the dormitory days, the day when old Library was new, when the old Gym was not rotting, when College of Law building was but a myth. Let him declare to you that in those good old times there were conditions marking greater progress and achievement for the University, considering the day, than any later development for its period. And right there, in pitying kindness, check him.

Take the dear old grad. by the arm. Lead him down Langdon Street until you stand before that massive pile, "Erected by the bounty of the state." "This?" This is merely the Gym, dear old grad. The largest university gymnasium in the United States." Pilot him from lockers, bowling alleys, swimming tanks and baths, up the broad stairway, through the labyrinthian ways, story upon story, until he stands within the netting of the cage and courts, a little lower than the sky. From a lakeside window show him where, far below, are the green shingles of 'Varsity Boat-house. Langdon regained, point out those glistening walls and pillars rising above the Campus oaks (those oaks that in the good old days were but a handful of nice, white nuts), and say: "That is our new Library building, in process of construction. Its ultimate cost will exceed $500,000."

When you have taken him from Chemical Laboratory and machine shops to Science, Library, North, South, Ladies', University, Horticultural and Hiram Smith Halls to the handsome brownstone College of Law building, to Washburn and Students' Observatories, to Dairy School building; when you have taken him to Camp Randall and return by way of the beautiful Lake Shore drive; when he has seen 1,700 students thronging rotunda, lecture-rooms and halls; when he has learned that there are 99 professors, 20 instructors and 21 fellows in the nine main divisions of the University; when he knows that the appraisal of the buildings and the 250 acres of grounds stands at $1,500,000; when he has learned that the annual expense of conducting the institution in all its branches is $420,000 and a few odd dollars—press home to him that this is the good new day, the day of President Adams, than whom no "Prexie" has ever been more loved by students.

When you stand under the walls of Science, looking across at President's House, incidentally dwell upon the winning of the Western track championship, the victories of Wisconsin's debating teams over Northwestern and Minnesota, the achievements of the crew at Yale and Minnesota, the winning of the championship foot-ball pennant. Ask him if they played squat tag in the good old days.

When the dear old grad. has seen, and heard, and learned these things, and you are seated on the broad porch of the house overlooking the waters of Mendota; when the peace and beauty of the scene have sunk deep into his soul, and the memories of the good old days begin to flood upon him, tell him how, in Christmas recess time, when the house was as cold as the reception-room of Ladies Hall, two Freshmen put a pendant incandescent lamp between the sheets to warm the bed; how it took ten pitchers of water to cool that bed, and how nine weeks of generous airing did not rid the house of the odor of nice, curly, crisp-burned mattress-stuffing.

Tell him how, near cane-rush time, an unknown band of scheming Sophs spent one wild night in tacking posters all the way from "Tommy's" to University Heights which, by the dawn's early light, read:

"FRESHMEN! ATTENTION!!
You Threaten to Carry Canes.
TIMES ARE HARD!
Do Not Waste Your Papa's Money
Foolishly.
THE DIE IS CAST!
BEWARE !!!"

How those posters, being tacked and not pasted, were lifted by a band of night-blooming Freshmen, who ran as a second section of the Sophomore excursion, an hour later than the first, so that, by the rising of the sun, copies of the Freshman poster of '94 were as scarce as co-eds who do not giggle.

Tell him, if you know, how Governor Peck's ice-cream disappeared on the night of the reception. Tell him on what night of the week the Gamma Phis made fudges; on what night the Kappas; at what hour they—the fudges—were placed out to cool; and who got them.

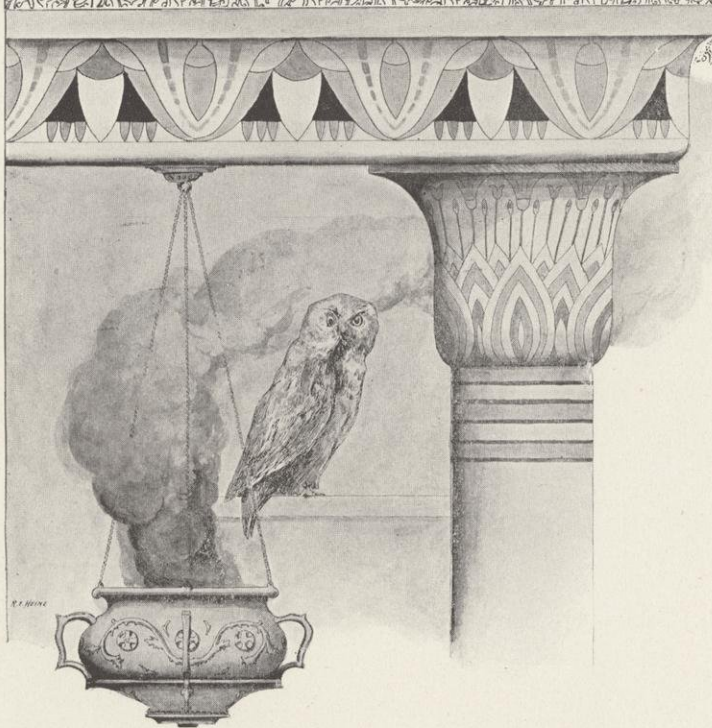

Tell him how, one warm, moonlight night in early spring, a youth, attired in glistening white duck trousers, sat on the rail of the south piazza of Ladies Hall, where man might not sit at that hour; how the youth became alarmed at the approach of the night-watchman; how, in his frantic flight, he dodged a neck-high clothes-line and slid headlong down a three-foot terrace among the soft, green grass, smearing its beautiful emerald across the spotless purity of those white pants. Tell him that the cause of the alarm was not the night-watchman, but only the harmless little pink-and-white waiting maid and her Barney out for a moonlight stroll.

Tell him that there have been high jinks known to the elect as late as '95. Match him joke for joke, lark for lark and prank for prank. Tell him that that was doing and saying nothing more than thousands have done and said before and since, and thousands others will say and do, until the ivy on old chapels creeps up the tower and chokes the bell.

LITERATURE

The Educator.

Kings live and reign whom men in state still crown
With earthly trappings of great pomp and might,
The dazzling fashion of a day's delight,
Subject alike to unearned smile and frown ;
And there are those who claim not earth's renown,
Yet wear it with an all-persuasive light ;
Yea, crowned and glorified in all men's right,
They bear aloft a torch no seas can drown.
For these, by sovereign gift from King of kings,
Know the full meaning of the voice that said,
" Let there be light ; " are by its choral led,
And, climbing heights where its best mandate rings,
Bid those who follow see the vision blest,
Until within God's hand their own is pressed.

My Mandolin.

With withered roses laid away,
And letters old, I found to-day
My mandolin.

Heigh, ho! for the time when I used to wait
By the looming Hall when the hour was late
With my mandolin.

Heigh, ho! for the Club that would tinkle an air
And smile from the stage on the maidens fair,
O'er mandolins.

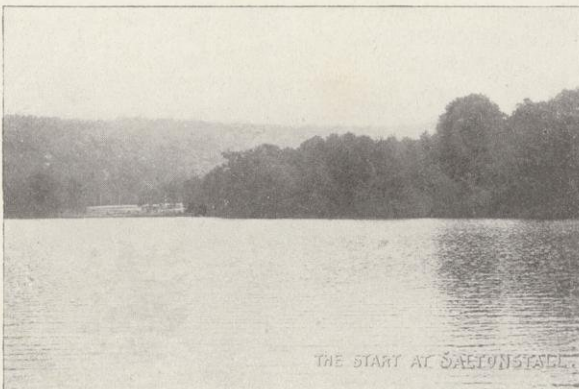

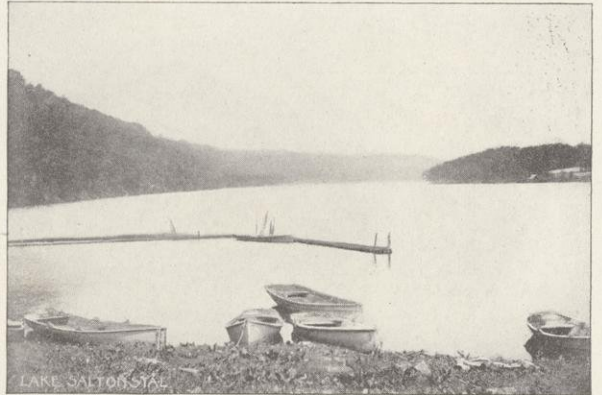

Its days of glory are over I fear ;
I lay it back with a smile and a tear,
My mandolin.

Cardinal and Blue.

NINE oarsmen came riding in from the West,
 In from the West as the sun went down ;
 Each was determined he'd row his best,
 While the small boys stood watching them round the town.
 For if men will race some one must beat,
 And victory goes to him most fleet,
 Though the referee be partial.

The students in Madison thronged the street,
 And they waited for news, as the sun went down ;
 And they thought of their record and
 hoped they had beat,
 While the drops of rain made the gray dust brown.
 For men must wait to learn if they're beat ;
 If starters are rank, if umpires
 cheat
 And the referee be partial.

Nine Freshmen at Yale were left behind,
 Were left behind as Wisconsin went on,
 And the Western boys thought the fates were kind
 While they celebrated at Madi-

 For if men must race, they rejoice
 when they beat,
 And they celebrate their wonderful
 feat,
 Though the referee be partial.

NATURE AND I ARE FRIENDS.

Winter and I are friends:
his rushing winds
Are plunging horses for our sky-course wide
From billowy manes fly
snow flakes as we ride
Upon my feet his piercing

Springtime and I are friends:
here at my feet
She showers her perfumed
wealth of blossoms fair,
fours round about her waves
of humid air,
Summons a chorus of
bird voices sweet.

Summer and I are friends:
her sapphire seas
Chant for my ears, her whispering reeds
Sing me to sleep. She takes my hand, she leads
To where flow wide the tresses of the trees.

Autumn and I are friends:
her calm, great eyes
Look deep into my heart, she wraps me round
With robes of royal purple
only found
On slopes of sun-smoothed hills and sun-set skies.

CHAPTER I.

U, Moike, but it was a grand purty pictcher Oi see last night, Oi did. De boss comes down about two in de mornin' and sez he, "Pat, get up, de lift-han' tap o' de new main is lakin' gas loike de divil where yez' was work-in' yisterday after dinner. Double pay till mornin'." Oi gits up an' goes down an' hadn't bin ter work five minnits whin up druv a carriage in frunt o' de house wid dose signals painted on de door-glass. Oi ain't sure but Oi think thim signals mean ter some, kape out, an' ter others, come in, er hot lunch, er something; any way, de carriage-door opens wid a bang an' out steps a big feller in a overcoat; thin come a gal; moi, but she was a dhrame—Oi could see her aisy in the moon-loight. Her hair was dun up in a big bunch at de back uv her head, wid a mos-ke-ther net tied over thot an' a white cloak on, red insoide—say, but she looked swate!

De feller turned 'round quick an' sez he, "Driver, ye needn't wait fer me," an' then both uv 'em go up ter de steps. She had started ter go in when she turns 'round an' hild out her hand. He takes it—Oi guess she must uv shivered some, fer sez he, "Air ye could?" an' puts his arm rite 'round her. Boi an' boi his head begun ter get close down near hers an' Oi hear her say, "It ain't right; you musn't!" Thin Oi hern him say, in his softest, just wan word—"Dearest;" thin Oi couldn't see but wan head. Der was a total e-klips, ter speake de tecknickle term Oi hern Prof. Comstock say whin Oi was fixin' his gas meter las' week. So Oi sits still an' lets 'em alone.

CHAPTER II.

DEAREST NAN:

I have been so busy I couldn't write you as I promised. By "busy" I mean there has been a man in the question. He is a Psi Delta and the sweetest thing imaginable, and talk about spending money on a girl!—well, he knows how it should be done. Friday night he took me to the theatre—went in a carriage, of course, and had a box with one of the other Psi Deltas. Think of it! The next morning the maid brought up a box of the loveliest roses—from Bob, of course,—and that night he and Ted Hardy—you remember he is the one I had such a crush on last spring when you were down—gave a dinner party—four men and four girls—and Mrs. Mills for chaperone; she makes a dandy, don't you think?

Haven't had so many good things to eat since Christmas and would have had an elegant time if Bessie Masson hadn't thought she was making a terrible impression on my man. She went with Stanley Noyes, and you know he is engaged, and has no eyes for anyone else, not even a A Γ Δ.

She makes me tired.

I feel kind of "pecule" about letting him do as much for me and I wouldn't if Kate, who knows the family, hadn't said that they had all kinds of rocks.

Well, anyway, I'm glad it was he who took me to the Prom last night, because it costs so much that none of the other boys would have thought they could afford American Beauties too.

And Nan, don't you ever tell, but he was awfully nice to me on the way home, and said some lovely things, to which I suppose it was wrong to listen. And Nan, he likes me awfully well and though the girls do say that I fall in love one week and out the next, I really think I have it bad this time—but wait till I write again before you draw any conclusions. Write soon—

With lots and lots of love,

February twentieth.

CHAPTER III.

MADISON, WIS., Feb. 20th, '97.

DEAR FATHER:

I went to the Junior Prom on the money I saved this week. Had a nice time. But this morning an accident happened to me. My head felt dizzy, from the dance last night, and I couldn't see, so I dropped my microscope and smashed it. Please enclose forty to pay costs.

Affectionately,

ROBERT.

SONG OF VICTORY

Some people say, I've heard it, we've heroes now no more
 Heroes there were in '60 and in the days that are of yore;
 Poor hapless creatures! Let it pass: they had not heard of him,
 Who with our team of '96 for battle left the Gym.

CHORUS

Richards at the hurdles, Maybury's dashes hot
 Oh for the words to tell the might of Cochems winning shot!
 Schuchardt after Richards, Peglers jump and Downers run
 Hurrah for these our heroes, in that hot June sun!

I've heard old heroes brag of the foes they had to meet
 Green recruits they often were, tho' the truth's not always sweet.
 Our opponents at Chicago, where we proved ourselves the best
 Were the victors on the cinderpaths of all this Central West!

Fire! Maybury's off while the rest are getting ready;
 That's the stuff our Badger heroes made of, quick yet steady,
 With a brain like Cochems which can match his hammer throw,
 And Richards, doughtless Richards, takes the hurdles high and low.

They were heroes, every one of those who left the Gym;
 If they did no more, they shouted, yes shouted with a vim!
 They Urah-rated Wisconsin! Hurrathed with might and main!
 And thus brought back the "Invincibles" with victory in their train.

See Us as We See Ourselves.

ALPHA LAMBDA—UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

Since the last QUARTERLY appeared not much has taken place in the University circles, and Sigma Chi has been steadily growing in strength, and waiting her chance to show the other fraternities what she was composed of. Our chance came, and on Friday night, January 24, old Alpha Lambda surprised everybody by stepping to the front and giving one of the swellest receptions given by any fraternity in the University for many a day. Besides holding her own in a social way, Alpha Lambda can well be proud of her representation in other fields. Kalvelage will undoubtedly manage the Mandolin Club and Tearse the crew. Brothers Luedke and Wollaege hold responsible positions in Phi Delta Phi law fraternity, the latter also having the honor to preside as president of the Columbian Law Society.—Sigma Chi Quarterly.

BETA GAMMA—UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

The increased amount of work which the faculty has provided in all departments of the University has a tendency to keep the Deltas within doors, where they apply themselves with vigor to their duties. While this is true, there are times when books are laid aside for the sake of some social function, where the boys take no second place. I take great pleasure in introducing the four good solid men that we have initiated since my last letter. They are Dudley Stetson, Charles Romadka, and Edmund McLaughlin of the Freshman class and John Miller, Law '99. May our sister chapters find as good material.—Rainbow of Delta Tau Delta, March, 1896.

PSI—UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

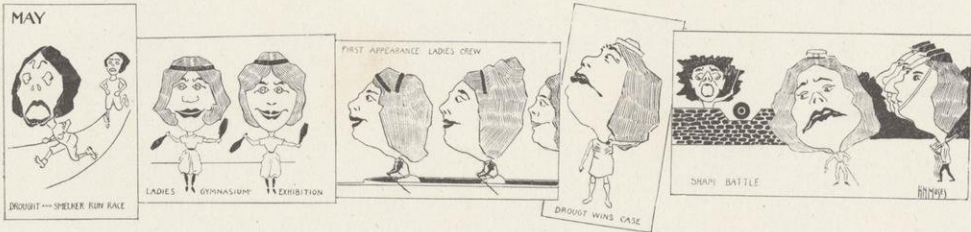

We are very happy now and rejoicing much because we succeeded, during the holidays, in "sticking" the last dear girl that we shall probably pledge this year. Since the last number of the Journal we have pledged and initiated two more sweet little Freshmen, Mollie Strong and Alice Jones.—Kappa Alpha Theta Quarterly, February, 1897.

WISCONSIN ALPHA—UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

The chapter has given three parties since the opening of college, and all, it is needless to say, were successes. We are, as usual, well represented on the various University organizations, and have one or more representatives on the foot-ball team, Mandolin, Banjo and Glee Clubs, Junior Promenade Committee, tennis team, Battalion officers and Cardinal staff. We join hands with sister chapters in congratulating ourselves on this year's success and the brilliant prospects for the future.—Phi Delta Theta Quarterly.

OMEGA—UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

We are in a merry frame of mind to-night, for we have just been to see two charming girls, to whom we said, "Will you?" and they answered us, "Yes." And yet they are not the first by any means, but we seem to be more delighted with each one. It's not boasting, is it, to tell of our successes, for we all know the charms that Delta Gamma has for everybody and of course we never once think that we win because of the unimportant ourselves.—Delta Gamma Quarterly.

After Reading Catullus.

Love, I shall never tire of kissing you,
Nor shall you ever tire of being kissed,
Till rosy lips love's kisses learn to rue
And loving ones from kissing shall desist.
For, if I kiss one vermeil cheek, the other
Turns white and red in jealousies array;
If I kiss down one drooping lid, its brother
Waits to be sealed down in the self-
same way;
And if I kiss those ruby lips, each one Doth purse up and cry out it has been cheated,
Till I re-kiss them evenly, which done,
Brow, cheeks and eyes proclaim themselves ill-treated.
And when I've kissed these back to silence, then
Those red lips tempt me to begin again!

A Startling Inquiry.

“Say, but wasn’t that a hot one on Bucholz?”

“What was it—did he make a recitation under Olin?” asked the senior law, relighting his meerschaum.

“No. Last Saturday Bucholz and Billy McNaught took Miss—Miss, why, you know her, she always wears a big mink collar and a broad smile—”

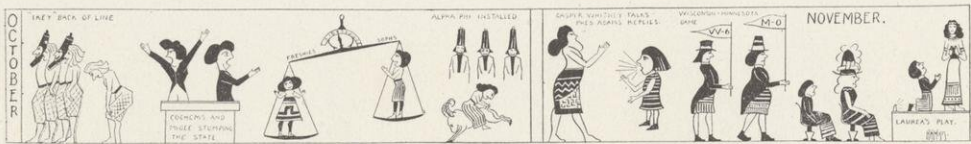

“Miss Kunz?”

“Yes, Kunz, that’s her name. The other girl was Nett Jones. Well, the day was cold and ice-boating poor, and by the time they got across the lake they were nearly frozen. It seems that one of the girls was acquainted with the matron at the asylum, so they all went up to get warm. Bucholz never exerts himself to be particularly sociable; he sullenly went through the formalities of an introduction, and then abruptly left the party, and, planting himself on a stool in front of the fireplace, abstractedly buried his head in his hands. He took no part in the conversation, but, utterly ignoring his friends, sat as though brooding over some great calamity.

“Two pleasant hours sped quickly by, and McNaught and the girls were preparing to leave. The matron, pointing to Bucholz’ crouching figure, said in a low tone: ‘Have you hopes of the patient’s ultimate recovery?’”

Pugna Principum.

COCHEMS—That you have wronged me, doth appear in this: You oft have failed to speak a needed word when Prof. Sharp asked me what “attention” was, and what was meant by “fringe of consciousness,” or sharply questioned me on “reasoning”; and for this cause, I oftentimes have flunked.

BOSSHARD—Let me tell you, Cochems, you yourself are not inclined to buck the Psych too hard. You oft have cut, when you wert hardly pressed, and left me all alone to face the music.

COCHEMS—I, do that! Desert a friend in need! You know that you are Bosshard that speak thus, or, by Dean Birge, that speech were else your last!

BOSSHARD—Remember the last Monday in November. Did not you just escape a woeful flunk? Why tried you to knock his eye out, or to stab, if not because you feared to be conditioned?

COCHEMS—Fellow, bay not me! I’ll not endure it. I am a Senior, I; older in study,—less likely than yourself to be conditioned.

BOSSHARD—Go to, you’re not.

COCHEMS—I am.

BOSSHARD—I say you’re not.

COCHEMS—Urge me no more—I shall forget myself—and he who for three long years has hurled the shot and mighty hammer of Thor, shall cause his biceps to contract, and you, young boy, will be—

BOSSHARD—Hear me, for I will speak. Must I give way and room to your high collar? Shall I be frighted when a Senior stares? Must I, every time that you are questioned in Psychology tell you now this, now that, for fear you’ll flunk? A noble Senior!

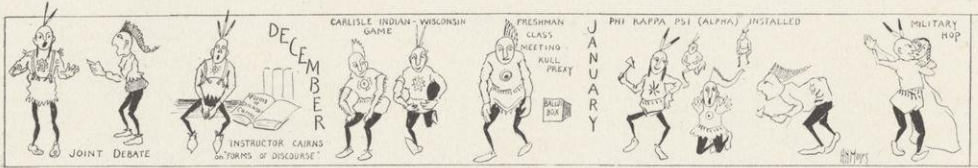

COCHEMS—Is it come to this?

BOSSHARD—You say you are a better student. Then let it appear so; it shall please me well.

COCHEMS—You wrong me every way; you wrong me, Bosshard. I said an elder student, not a better. Did I say better?

BOSSHARD—If you did, I care not.

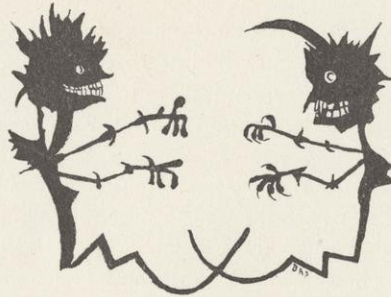

COCHEMS—What! This from Bosshard—this! Oh, I could weep from out mine eyes a sea of bitter tears. Here is my thesis, here the hand that wrote; within, a brain weary and tired with toil. If then thou sayest Seniors never work, that deepest thinking or profoundest study is not required of them, take this, the product of this whole last year—I, that never buck, do give thee this;

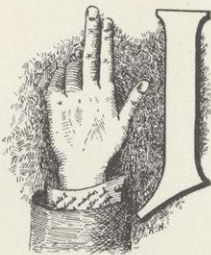

and when that thou hast read it, understood its weighty contents, fully comprehended the depth and height of all that is therein, come then once more to me, for then I know thou wilt henceforth but reverence thy Cochems.

BOSSHARD—Keep your thesis. Be angry when you will, naught shall be said. [Aside.] The very thought of reading stuff like that doth cause my hair to rise, my blood to curdle in my veins, my heart to stop its beating. Contend 'gainst such a weapon I cannot. (Aloud.) Do what you will, your wrath shall not be noted. From this time forth, whenever you seem strange, I'll think that you have meditated deep, have studied overmuch, and leave you so. Farewell, my dearest Cochems.

COCHEMS—Fare thee well.

Before He Wrote.

HEREBY and herein do most solemnly, sincerely, honestly and awfully swear or affirm that I have not received or been rendered any assistance, knowledge, information, or stimulus whatever from my instructor, book, pony, nearest friend or from any person under the canopy of heaven. In testimony and witness of all this I do hereunto affix my own name, so help me God, and keep me steadfast, honest, upright and true in writing this Rhetoric examination.

A Pastel from the Hall.

A log blazing in the brick fireplace throws its changing gleam on the white walls, softened by the darkness, and lights and leaves the rows of old delft plates and tall Venetian glasses. A tea-table from the days of our grandmothers, with its burden of old and new fashioned cups and saucers, samovar and gypsy kettle, stands in the corner, while a merry little copper coffee pot pours forth its fragrance above the alcohol flame whose blue light falls on an apostle spoon.

Flowers and pictures, cushions and books—books that you like to read, not physics or algebra, but books for girls who are tired. A couch behind the door is piled high with pillows, and under the Roman blanket lies a girl asleep.

The moonlight streaming through the latticed windows falls in bright patches on the floor and watching it in her great willow chair before the fire, is the spirit of the place. The silken rustle of her skirt as she rocks is a very lullaby, quite in keeping with the time and place. Her face, so firm and tender, is full of sweetness and grace; eyes grave and kind, and withal a merry shine behind those dear glasses, tell us at a glance in whom to put our trust, whom to obey and love.

Beneath the gentle influence of a sympathetic presence, all the girlish cares vanish. One by one the lists of Greek verbs, dates, ohms and amperes, logarithms, cons, the bitterness of broken promises, tears for tomorrow and all but resolutions to be better grow dim, drift into the general haze and go dancing off with the programme of the last military hop.

It is easy to dream of home here in this pleasant room; easy to forget the heartaches where there is so much love and protection and care; easy to be glad when there is someone to be glad too.

Hill and hall, shady walks, the rippling lake—all so full of memories—but this is the dearest place of all because it knows and loves us best.

She's a girl from our town,
But around the 'Varsity
Meets me always with a frown
If she deign to notice me.

People more select to greet.

Does she not remember how

Just in front of me she sat;
Seldom walked she home alone,
And we'd have the dearest chat
In a low and whispered tone.

(Ethics and Latin and French to get,)
 And her coat heaved over a gentle sigh,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get.)
 Mediocrity pleased her; for levels she longed;
(Ethics and Latin and French to get,)
 The slippery path with sliders thronged,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get.)
 She was bound for a class in the study of Lit,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get,)
 The novel and Shakespeare and Ballads to-wit,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get.)
 But alas! for the maid on the hill-top high,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get,)
 When a short course Agric came sliding by,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get.)
 She stepped from the walk to a deep snow bank,
(Ethics and Latin and French to get,)
 And into the depths her slight form sank,

 Then she reappeared, what a sight to view!

 She'd thank me to stop and so would you,

 In hats and walks, in coats and talks,

 If we find the hidden meaning that beneath the surface lies,
 As we study those about us in their collars and their ties?

Scarce their outline keep,
Edges smoothed off by Time's finger—see,
Plastered over with moss,
Embroidered across
By the spider, the M. R. and G.

There were splashes of gold in the trees

Down this path's same slow
Curve, these same willow wands fanning her head,
Just as now they do yours,
While their greenness assures
To the eye the warm whiteness and red.

Were he here now as then, could he see
As I do, your eyes,
Those deep, strong, sure eyes,
Would he carve once again on this tree
Those letters to-day
We are looking at—say,—
Or as I do, and F. G. and P. ?

University Reporting.

HE city correspondent for a great Chicago daily, hunting for news, stumbled upon a veritable bonanza. The Sophs and Freshmen had been scrapping in front of the gymnasium. This hero of the bleistift stood on the edge of conflict for full fifteen minutes, and returned to his room.

Ruminating later over his responsibility, he exclaims: "Yes, indeed, at this dark midnight have not the western millions sunk into slumber with unshaken faith that I shall perform my reportorial duty well—yea, nobly. It is even so; and by the big dipper twinkling in yon northern sky I will not betray that childlike trust. The Freshmen-

Sophomore scrap on the greensward before the Norman castle on the lake shall be their portion ere the rosy sun, flickering from its bounds, shall overflow the world, or the hired girl sweep off the front steps in the morning. Now, my Horatio (an aid-de-camp standing near), we must work up a thrilling article. Did you note the savage rushes of the Freshmen from the gate of the castle? Surely a leg, or perchance a leg and an arm, must have been broken in the clash."

"I doubt it not," answered Horatio.

"And the Freshmen were in their gymnasium suits," continued the scribe, "and with their bare legs and arms we can truly say they fought with hardly a vestige of clothing on their bodies; can we not, Horatio?"

"Most assuredly, my lord," piped Horatio.

"Did we not see the tangled host rushing toward the lake; and how many may we say were ducked, Horatio, and of which class, Freshmen or Sophomore?"

"It matters but little, my lord," quoth Horatio.

"And methinks I saw a saintly man, a Baptist minister, watching the scrimmage. He certainly must have been immersed also, Horatio."

"Assuredly, my lord."

"Perhaps the professors stood by and cheered the Freshmen; and even refused to allow the patrol to stop the fight long enough to carry off the wounded."

"Except here, they know not different, my lord."

"'Tis done; and, in truth, well done; one dollar and forty cents for sixty lines; sure pay, too. Horatio, betake thyself to the telegraph with this truthful message."

The reporter, finished, reads a Psalm and retires well content:

A Technical Tilt.

Dr. Sharp and Mr. Pyre walking leisurely down the hill.

Dr. Sharp (aspiring to fecundity in original metaphor): "I presume that you are again to gird your loins for the Minnesota game?"

Mr. Pyre—"Yes, I think so. Prof. Wilson of Edinburgh, you know, was a powerful athletic fellow and I——"

Dr. Sharp—"Ye-es, but I would like to ask you whether, in the game, there is any conscious consciousness, conscious unconsciousness, unconscious unconsciousness——"

Mr. Pyre—"Well, you know when I play, I am conscious of nothing but the grand stand and——"

Dr. Sharp—"Oh, ye-es; so I have often thought. It's a great graft, foot-ball is. When a kid it was my highest ambition to play quarter-back, as such."

Mr. Pyre—"Strange! My youth was occupied in reading 'Heroes and Hero-Worship,' and hunting—hunting, by the way, was my pastime."

Dr. Sharp—"Yes, I always associated you with the idea of hunting, but you always confined yourself to dears, did you not?"

And with this Parthian arrow left rankling in the breast of the left tackle, the would-be quarter back walked away, mentally preparing his three-hour lecture on "My Courses for next Semester," "The Awful Evils of the Toothpick," and arranging some totally new "examples from my own experience."

H! Girls, I heard that it was really so!"

Miss Pendleton—"Well, when Max was up this afternoon he said the boys at the Gym said——"

Miss Odell—"Well, I don't care, my Uncle Charlie——"

Miss Church—"Well, disregarding all such personalities and prejudices, and looking at it not superficially but from the standpoint of fairness, it should be said——"

Miss Rogers—"But, girls, my brother, the one that was a Beta at Yale, says they always——"

Miss Hinkley (Louise)—"That can't be so at all, because we heard in class this morning that——"

Miss Butt—"Well, I just saw Allard and he said that Kronshage told him."

Miss Adams—"Yes, sir; that's so, for Mr. Cochems said so too, and he——"

Miss Clawson—"Oh, that isn't so at all, Haskins and Turner both said——"

Miss Leona Smith—"Well, girls, I think——"
And thereupon it was settled.

Phyllis' Flunk.

SHE flunked to-day: with downcast eyes
She took her seat,
Her flushing brow, her little sighs
Betrayed defeat.
Poor Phyllis! Must the next to rise
Her woe complete?
I turned in anger from this maid,
So cruelly right,
To Phyllis' neatly coiffured braid,
That's all my sight
Can feast on and my thoughts have strayed
Back to last night.
She, too, perhaps of that last dance
Is thinking yet—
Those whispered words, that long, last glance—
Does she regret?
I never shall, but she, perchance,
Will soon forget.
Ah, that's the thought that gives me pause
And yet I say,
Go on, you student, give the laws
Of thought, but pray,
Why love I Phyllis more because
She flunked to-day?

After the Minnesota Game.

Third down—and three yards to gain!

Two of them grew. Dead leaves autumnal shed,
Fragrant and damp, and all the varied green
Of moss and spotted trillium between
Kept them apart—two roses, white and red.
And yet each felt the other breathing there,
Sweet, sensuous fragrance through the
wood might float,
A satin petal, or a golden mote
Of powdery pollen lingering in the air.
And so we two, though we have never seen
Each other's face or clasped each other's hand,
Yet know each other's being. We may stand
Some time—some happy day—who knows?
—between
The future and the past, and realize
The happy present in each other's eyes.

A Classic Dream.

One night I dropped my weary head
Upon the books before me spread,
And lo! a youth in form divine
Stood over me in dim outline.

An Attic youth, I knew right well,
A tale of woe he had to tell:
How dreadfully his ear was jarred
By vowels crude and cons'nants hard.

For your Professors do not know
That had a Greek pronounced them so,
When Pericles in Greece held sway,
To Hades would have been his way.

Thus to corrupt our glorious tongue
The greatest e'er by poet sung
Scarce twice alike the same word sounds—
Kerr-Browder-Laird-Smith-Shannon-ζουρδς!

A silent leave the spirit took
My head I lifted from the book
And that he might obtain relief
I wrote these words to calm his grief.

To the Senior Laws.

"The Pythoness."

The Pythoness with radiant eyes,
Where clouds of fragrant incense rise
Before her, holding in her hands
The laurel branch, prophetic stands;
Low at her feet the victim dies,
With pleading looks for mercy cries;
She does not heed its dying sighs,
But closer draws the sacred bands.
The Pythoness.

With fudges for her prophecies,
The latest songs for auguries,
More changing than the shifting sands
They say that blow in desert lands,
My modern maid, and yet she tries
"The Pythoness!"

The Days are Fleet at Madison.

On either side the waters tie
With silver bands the hills that lie,
Green-mantled, toward the pleasant sky
Where sun and moon and stars go by
O'er the fair spires of Madison.
The towers of Learning tall are set
Where town and field and mere are met,
For many now, for many yet,
The days are fleet at Madison.

There bosky banks and shores of green,
There hills that lift and woods that lean,
Cottage and tower with glassy sheen
The mirrored lakes that sleep between Empicture and reflect.
And, visional against the blue,
The far white dome floats on the view,
As fair as Fancy's pencil drew
The dome of Fame. In day-dreams who
But plays the dreamy architect?

From many a home that saved and planned,
In village, town, or farmers' land,
There Youth and Hope come, hand in hand,
Smiling at Time, whose silent sand
(Despite he shows a boyish face)
Runs emptying on apace.
There age anoints the silvered sage
Still turning Truth's eternal page,
Oblivious of his mortal stage,
And young and old alike engage
In swift content the Arcadian place.

Dear lettered city, where the heart
Forgets awhile the clamoring mart,
Studies and dreams (not life's least part),
Where nature hardly needed art
To charm and thrall,
Long may the golden bugles blow,
Calling to guiltless arms, the row
Of god-like athletes punt and throw
And joyous scholars thronging go
Up thy green hill, when we below
Sleep, dreamless all.

Oft in thy school some mightier pen,
[Swords have dominion ne'er again]
Learn the immortal art that men,
Who love the spot where highest thoughts have been,
May count thee classic and again
Wreath up the fadeless bays,
Till we, who are but of thy throng,
To whom no laurel leaves belong,
With thy full paean borne along,
Share the sweet thought, the love, the song,
Of unborn men and days.

A Course of Lectures Given Almost Daily.

Prof. Owen.

HE thermometer in the room registers 80°, when Professor Owen partially unwraps the array of shawls and blankets in which he is muffled, and having ordered each window, and the door firmly closed against a possible draught, begins:

“Miss Tompkins, will you explain that so-called conditional? Well, I didn’t expect you to. That’s rather a knotty point. Ahem! Take an illustration! Now, an example: ‘I see a man coming down the road,’ I say, ‘That is John Smith; that will be John Smith; that should have been John Smith’ (awful pause, during which Miss Fish looks wisely over her glasses and Jack Bacon flirts with the girl next to him). ‘Do you understand?’ Miss Tompkins (absorbed over thinking how blue his eyes are), “Ye-es!”

Prof. Owen—“To resume, what is ‘and?’—Now, it’s an exploded idea that it's a conjunction—Miss Pound (little Martie partially wakes), in explaining 'if' and 'or'—but the first sound of the bell is heard and Prof. Owen re-covers his head, takes his stick from the corner, while the class opens the door to go out.

Prof. Slaughter.

Last straggler puffs in and takes his place on the three-legged chair.

Professor Slaughter: "Say! I'm just going to get after you people for being tardy! Miss Melville, where were you Friday? Was it the 'sick friend' or the 'attractive young man' this time?"

"Miss O'Brien has been playing hookey again, too. Miss Goetsch, did I understand you to say the lesson was dead easy? Well, you may begin the translation."

Miss Goetsch (calm and dignified): "But what countenance does your friend bear—"

Prof. Slaughter (with a laugh): "What sort of a looking guy—"

Miss Goetsch: "I will tell you; thin features—"

Prof. Slaughter: "Hatchet face! yes! yes! Go on!"

Miss Goetsch: "Fair complexion."

Slaughter: "Cream and roses—yes, that's lovely!"

Miss Goetsch (hurrying a little): "Hair reddish, in locks and curled here and there—"

Slaughter: "Red-headed, strawberry blonde with kinky locks—that's lovely, Miss Goetsch!"

Miss Schreiber: "P'fessor, is the derivative of 'kinkey' cinnatus?"

Slaughter: "Yes! yes! Go on, please, Miss Thomas!"

Miss Thomas (lickety split): "Obviously you are trying to creep upon me unawares. Keep the wife you have! The evil that is known is most easily endured."

Slaughter: "Aha! Caught you now! That's the same pony I used when I read this play. 'Tisn't very good either."

Slaughter (skipping to Miss Wright who is reading ahead): "You take it from that point, please—Oh!—I see!—Settling down for a comfortable nap were you? Too bad to disturb you. Read to that nice, sweet little part I'm saving for Miss Dorset."

Miss Dorset: "Give me this sweet one—or—my honey."

Slaughter: "Lovely! lovely!"

Miss Dorset: "And the poor crocodile—that is poor fellow—replies 'O my little eye, my honey boy—'"

Slaughter: "Oh, that's great! Isn't it? 'O, my little eye' that's fine! Next!"

Harvey: "How sweet."

Slaughter: "How sweet!"

Harvey: "Ah! hm—away—um—ah—with—ah you—"

Slaughter: "How sweet it is—that's right. Go on!"

Harvey: "Ah—er—"

Slaughter: "That next is too 'eat—to drink' not to 'be and to drink'—as most fellows seem to think. Next!"

Slaughter (on his own hook): "But I am determined to be a good boy— Here's a good part for you, Mr. O'Connor—I believe you enjoy the swear words."

Mr. O'Connor: "——" "——" "——"

Slaughter: "Miss Burnton, take the doting old father's part."

Miss Burnton: "Etc., etc., etc. Tell your papa what's the matter."

Slaughter: "Yes, tell your papa! Plautus certainly was funny."—

Miss Graham: "Late for Psych. of course!"

And the class hurries out.

Prof. Knowlton.

Professor Knowlton: "As you have no lesson assigned for this time, I will give you a short talk and have a quiz or rawther a written test, it can hardly be called a quiz. All of you pronounce the a in ask flat. Now, don't you think that äsk very much better than äsk and cälſ better than cälſ? The mispronunciation of a is, I find, very prevalent here in the West. Miss Freeman, what do you think about it?"

Miss Freeman: "Why—I guess so, you know—"

Professor Knowlton: "Now, Miss Freeman—you mean think, don't you? Mr. Duke—Is Mr. Duke here? How do you pronounce your name, Deuke or Dook?"

"Well Mr. MacNish, what do you think about it? You look as if you had some ideas on this subject.

"Now, for the next fifteen minutes write a description embodying the rules and cautions in our text book. You need not stick closely to the text."

Prof. C. F. Smith.

Just five minutes after the ringing of the bell a gentle footstep is heard on the platform; a pleasant study in black and white appears, and Doctor C. F. Smith says:

"Now, I hope you all felt a thrill run oveh you when you read those lines in this mawning's lesson. Anyone ought to be put out of the Univehsity—I was goin' to say out of the world—but out of the Univehsity, who could read without tremblin'. Now, when I was in the Smoky Mountains in Tennessee, I made a special study of that word and found it occurs but once. Matthew Arnold would never say that.—I hope you read your note, Miss Pitman. It occurs in the first chapter of the second book of Thucydides seventeen times. There are more interesting points in this lesson—but just one moment before the bell rings—That is a distinct Homeric reminiscence—down to the 390th line.” (Bows.)

Prof. Freeman.

“Monahan? Not here yet? Well, he’ll be along in the course of the hour.”

“Smith, M? E? G. C.?”

“Mann? One man here.

“Spence? Is Spence here? At roll-call his ‘voice was ever soft and low!’”

(Adjusts his spectacles.) “Well, let’s see, where were we? Yes, page 54.

“Duke, what’s the meaning of the word bootless in the line, ‘Puck, bootless, makes the breathless housewives churn?’”

Duke (hastily reads passage and then stabs wildly): “Puck was very mischievous, and he probably hid the housewives’ shoes—compelling them to churn, as it says, bootless.”

(Loud applause. Thomas grins at the girls. Prof. Freeman consults text.) “Tillotson, suppose you read that next passage for us.”

Tillotson reads in a deadly monotone.

Prof. Freeman (dryly): “If you don’t do better than that when you go to propose I’m sorry for you.”

Pause, during which Tillotson looks embarrassed and Parsons goes to sleep, then, “Miss Niederman, what does in medias res mean?”

Miss Niederman: “I don’t know. I never have had any Latin.”

Prof. Freeman: “O, yes you do. Any one who has escaped from the Milwaukee Normal knows enough for that.”

Prof. Freeman twists his spectacles in his fingers and sits with a far-away look in his eye.

“Speaking of the distance to Stratford, has any one ever been there?”

Thomas springs to his feet, waves both hands frantically and shouts: “I have!”

During the excitement which follows Parsons wakes up and the gong sounds.

Her Dancing-Shoe.

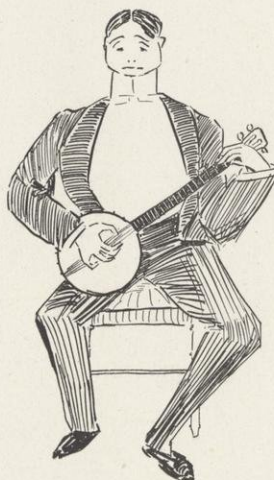

HE has shining yellow hair,
Bluest eyes beyond compare,
And her smiles the earth with sunshine seem to strew.
She's a little Junior girl,
Devoted to the "whirl,"
And I'm her little, old white dancing-shoe.

At the Prom and at the Ball
In the Gym and at the Hall,—
I have glided and I've sauntered up and down;
And the whispers they thought low
I have heard, and surely know—
She's more popular than any girl in town.

I am put behind the door;
I think the dancing's o'er,
But of all my fun I've nothing left to rue.
Tho' she leave me home next year—
I claim the honor dear
Of being her little, cast-off, old white dancing-shoe.

'Twas rumored round with much surprise
That thirty Freshmen had sore eyes.
The results of mid-terms being known,
Found thirty Freshmen going home.

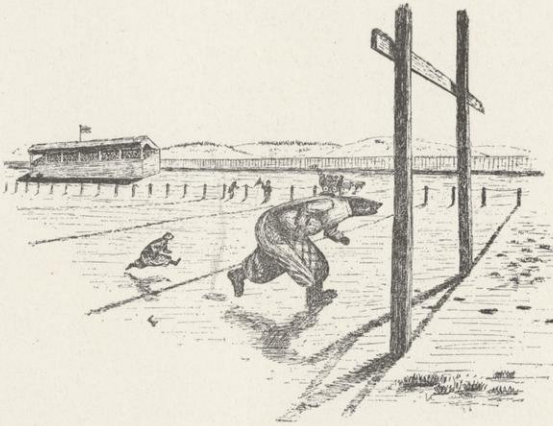

WHY is it that the heavyweight of a banjo club always plays the piccolo, while the midget plays the bass?

The Gopher and the Badger.

THE Sphinx, when seen by Cardinal reporter, refused to talk.

Oh, Shaw!

A Junior Law, so bold and bright,
Lost all his hair one still dark night
For acting in his class that day
Quite like a goose; just like a jay.

There once was a wise Junior Law,
Who, when he went home, told his "paw"
That at the Law School
They gave him this rool,
"If you want to succeed, work your jaw."

Theory of Heat.

PROF. SNOW:—Miss Pendleton, will you please give us an example showing that cold contracts and heat expands?

MISS PENDLETON:—The days in winter are short, while in summer they are long.

The prettiest girls upon the Hill,
Like prettiest flowers beside a rill,
Are always plucked the first.

"HOW!"

Darlington's Darling.

I'm the only pebble on the beach ;
I own the whole parade ;
There's not a Prof. I couldn't teach
And put him in the shade.
Did you not see the bleachers stare
And whisper, "There he goes!"
'Tis Thomas of the taking air
Who knows because he knows.

A Dred Scott Decision.

A con in Economics.

PROF. KNOWLTON:—Miss Horlick, can you bake cakes, biscuits and the like?

MISS HORLICK (of Malted Milk fame):—I hope so! The Horlicks always were famous for thin foods.

Maximum cum Laude.

Who would ask for anything better
 Than to wear the cardinal sweater
 With the W on the breast?
 For these things the victors wear,
 Victors here and everywhere,
 Champions of the West!

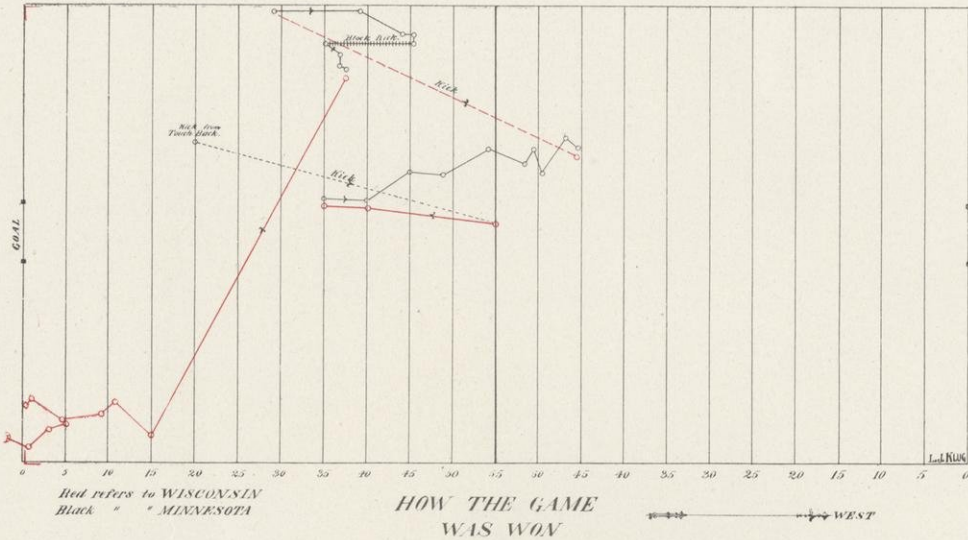

A 'Varsity Tragedy.

TN fitful gusts the rain pelts against the window. The scattered beams from a flickering gas jet struggle into the troubled night without. A dark figure paces up and down the cheerless room, stopping at times before the light and disclosing a haggard face. "One!" "Two!" The wild blast carries the muffled sound from distant Library Hall to the restless inmate of the room. The figure starts, walks rapidly to a table and draws a pistol. A moment of suspense. A crash! The sketching materials are flung into a drawer—the BADGER artist has at last finished the design for the military department.

SHELLEY AND CARLYLE.

The Final Effort.

Dull grey clouds hung low over the field and sharp, biting blasts of cold north wind swept dense dust-clouds over the ground. The crowd stood with bated breath. Wisconsin's third down; three yards to plant the pigskin over Minnesota's goal-line and win! Could she do it? The ball is snapped—the writhing mass lurches forward. The crowd sways, then surges, over fences, past “coppers,” out onto the field like an unrestrained, seething torrent! Has Wisconsin won? No, No. The ball is lost six inches from the line. Minnesota's ball! Her line moves forward like an avalanche. Hold her, Wisconsin! And, on the five-yard line, she is held. Wisconsin's ball! She strikes the Gopher's line as with a sledge-hammer. Again! Again! The “ends” are drawn in—the “backs” bunch. Once more she strikes! The Gopher's line gives way and the ball is pushed over amid the deafening “U! Rah! Rah! Wis-con-sin! U! Rah! Rah! Wis-con-sin!” Wisconsin's touch-down.

PRE COLLEGE.

POST COLLEGE.

MISS LINDE—"I could worship at the feet of James Francis Adonis forever!"

NOT CONNED OUT—JUST ENTERED.

“Big Game.”

Cupid went a hunting
On a summer’s day;
Had some nice new arrows—
Looked for worthy prey :

Tired he was of small game,
Tender students’ hearts ;
Wanted now a royal chase
Worthy of his parts.

Whiz! Dropped a little man,
Smitten in his pride;
“You’re not too Sharp for me,”
Naughty Cupid cried.

Chose a slim, white arrow,
Took most careful sight,
A funny little Snow man
Dropped before its might.

Shot again and yet again,
Rubb’d his hands in glee
As True and Hobbs and Babcock
Topped, all the three.

With Kahlenberg, the sixth,
The sport he then gave o’er;
Looked askance at Olson,
Vowed he’d soon have more.

The Ice-Boats’ Flight.

Hum, Hum, Hum, Hum,
O’er the frozen lake the ice-boats come!
Hark to the runner’s song
As it clinks—clinks along !
The cold north star
Shines white afar
O’er the field of crackling ice and snow,
And over it, away they go—
The ice-boats go !

Hark to the Ice God’s threat of doom,
Boom, Boom, Boom, Boom,
As he rages in his breast !
But the ice-boats in their quest
O’er the ice and snow
Away they go !
Nor heed the boom nor fear the blast
That like a fury whirls them past,
The ice-boats!

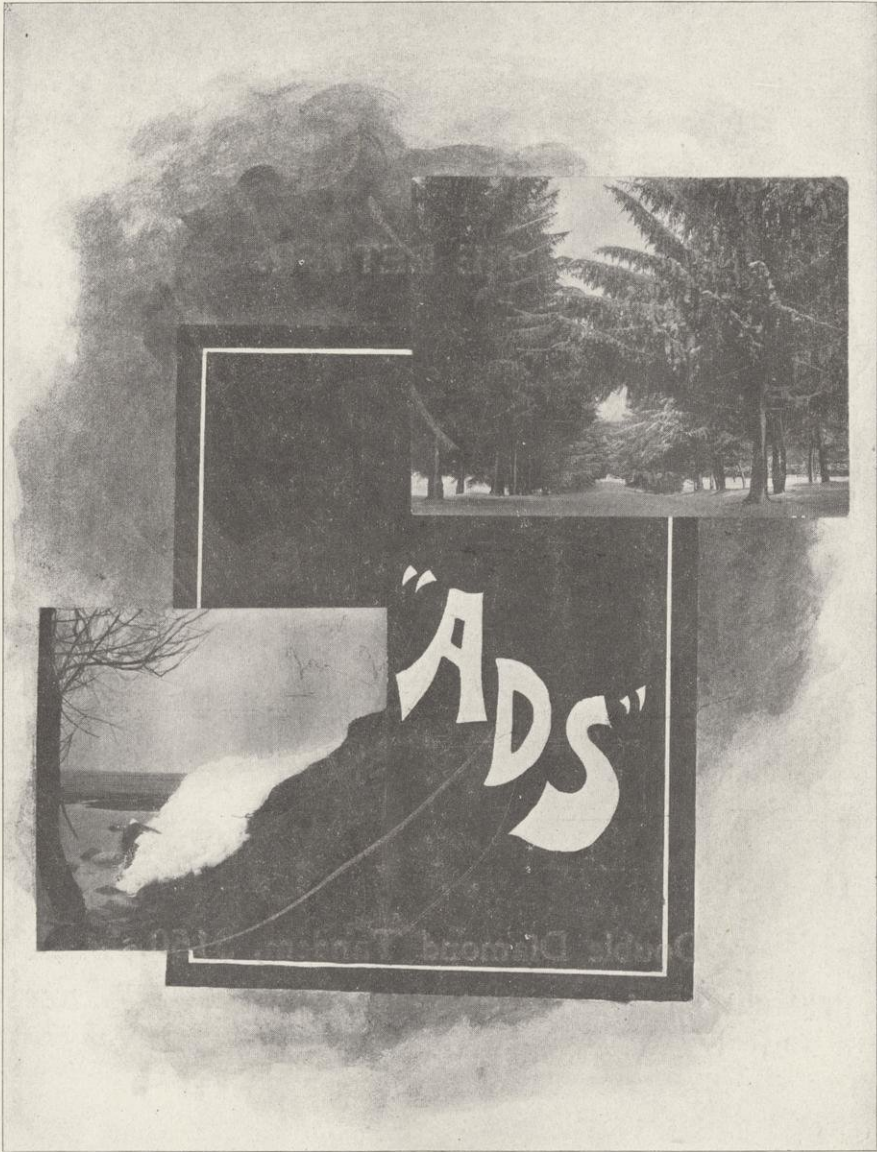

“Say, Jack, did you hear the waiter squelch Fresh-leight when he kicked at the feed this noon?”

“No. How did she?”

“She applied the old adage that a soft answer turneth away wrath?”

“How was that?”

“She called him down.”

CUTICREAM

A Harmless and Healing Application
FOR THE SKIN.

CUTICREAM is not a cosmetic, but a harmless and delightful preparation for preserving the smoothness of the skin, and being free from harmful or injurious substances or anything of a greasy or sticky nature; it will not soil the most delicate fabric. Its agreeable perfume, beautiful appearance and soothing properties commend it as the greatest luxury of the toilet. It cures chapped hands or face, sore lips, tan, sunburn, freckles, pimples, blotches and eruptions, imparts and maintains a soft, velvety condition of the skin, and prevents redness, roughness and chapping. No lady who values a good complexion should use toilet powder or cosmetics without first applying CUTICREAM, as it prevents any injurious effects and renders the powder nearly imperceptible. Gentlemen will find CUTICREAM an unequalled application to prevent skin disease, "barbers' itch," "razor pimples" and roughness of the skin after shaving.

CAUTION.—There are many preparations which in appearance resemble CUTICREAM, but in appearance only, for they lack those soothing and healing properties which have gained for it so high a reputation.

PRICE, 25c. If your druggist does not have it, we will send a bottle by express prepaid on receipt of 30c. Free sample. Enquire of druggist or send 3 cents postage.

PRENTICE & EVENSON, Janesville, Wis.

THE DENTIFRICE.

In selecting a dentifrice, avoid all preparations which are advertised for WHITENING the teeth, as to do that they must contain an acid which will in time destroy the enamel. All that any good dentifrice can do is to keep the teeth clean. Liquid preparations are ineffectual, because in order to keep the teeth clean it is necessary to have the friction of a powder.

"THE PRENTICE TOOTH POWDER" is prepared from select material, and the ingredients are harmless, simple and effective. It is endorsed by the highest dental authorities as the ideal dentifrice.

PRICE, 25 CENTS. Sold by all druggists.

The University of Wisconsin.

Situation.

In point of situation, the University of Wisconsin is unsurpassed. The main body of its grounds, including more than two hundred and forty acres, extends for one mile along the picturesque shores of Lake Mendota. The Athletic Field, known as Camp Randall, consists of forty-two acres, and is adapted to every form of athletic sports. The Lower Campus, fronting the Gymnasium, embracing five acres, affords opportunity for daily practice in college games.

Staff of Instruction.

In the College of Letters and Science there are sixty-nine professors and instructors; in the College of Mechanics and Engineering, thirty-nine; in the College of Agriculture, twenty-five; in the College of Law, fourteen; in the School of Pharmacy, twenty-three; in the School of Economics, fourteen; in the School of Music, nine. The different colleges and schools are somewhat interwoven, and instruction is given in more than one department by some of the instructors. The faculty consists of one hundred and thirteen members, not including special lecturers and fellows.

Library and Laboratory Facilities.

Besides the general University Library, students have free use of the University Law Library, of the State Law Library, of the Library of the Wisconsin Academy of Sciences and of the State Historical Library, in all consisting of about 250,000 volumes. Action of the Legislature during the session of 1897 will enable the Building Commissioners to complete the new building for the Historical Society Library, and the University Library, at an early day. This building, situated on the lower Campus, will be one of the largest and most commodious in the country. The laboratories in all the departments of science are equipped with apparatus of the newest and most approved patterns. For advanced work, seminary facilities with special libraries have been provided.

Facilities for Physical Training.

The Gymnasium is 200 feet long, 100 feet wide and three stories high. Besides offices, locker-rooms, lecture-rooms, shower and tub baths, bowling alleys and rooms for other special gymnastics, it contains a natatorium 80 feet long and 28 feet wide, a running-track of eleven laps to the mile, a ball cage 165 feet long by 36 wide, and a general gymnasium hall 96 feet wide and 165 feet in length. The building is fitted with modern apparatus, is warmed exclusively by indirect radiation, and is ventilated by means of a very large Sturtevant fan. In Ladies' Hall separate facilities are provided for the physical training of young women. Class work in gymnastics is required of all undergraduate students twice a week during the first two years of the course. This work is in charge of the professor of physical culture and two instructors.

Conditions of Admission.

Students are admitted to the University either by certificate of graduation from an accredited high school or college, or upon examination. For detailed information in regard to the requirements for admission, as well as in regard to fees, reference is made to the catalogue, which will be furnished on application to the Registrar of the University.
