LIBRARY BUILDING

WHY WE SHOULD HAVE THE LIBRARIES COMBINED.

AND THE NEW BILL SHOULD BE KILLED.

What a Correspondent Has to Say on the Matter.

The fact that the legislature has at hand ready to fall back upon a bill providing for the erection of a building down town for the exclusive use of the state historical society, at a cost of $150,000, will probably weaken the chances for the $360,000 building for the historical society and the university. But if the legislators are prompted by no other and higher motive, a desire not to be outdone by their opponents two years ago should be sufficient to insure the passage of the bill first introduced. The committee on claims, where the bill now is, and where it will, if at all, receive its death blow, certainly ought to see its way clear to report the matter favorably, even though the times are somewhat hard, if it can recommend an appropriation of $20,000 to erect memorials on a battle field. Though $360,000 looks like a rather large sum, six years are allowed in which to raise it; this means less than ten cents a year on each $1,000 of property throughout the state. A level-headed writer has the following in the Milwaukee Sentinel:

"Judging from what I see in the newspapers, there is some difference of opinion as to whether the State Historical society and the university should have a united library building, or whether the State Historical society should now obtain a building near the capitol, leaving the university for the present without any new library building. The reasons assigned for separate buildings, to my mind, are not so strong as those that can be brought forward in favor of a united building. For a separate building, it is argued that the State Historical society should be located near the center of the city of Madison. Now any one who is acquainted with the topography of Madison, and who lives in a city of any size at all cannot regard the proposed location upon the campus of the united building as being very far removed from the center of the city of Madison. It is only a few blocks from the capitol, and electric cars pass every few minutes. It is not a ten minutes' walk from the capitol to the campus where it is proposed to locate the united building.

"Of course it will be cheaper to build a building for the State Historical society at present, but at some future time it will be absolutely necessary to build a library building for the university. Then we must consider that it is more expensive to run two buildings than it is to run one. Again, suppose an author desires to consult the libraries. If they are in separate buildings one-half mile apart, the investigator has to go from one building to the other perhaps two or three times in his researches. Again, we must remember that 90 per cent. of those who consult the State Historical library are from the university. We can see how exceedingly shortsighted it would be to build two separate buildings for the two libraries. It might temporarily save a little money, but eventually every year it would be much more costly to run them. It would cause great inconvenience to those consulting the libraries, and in every way be a shortsighted policy. The site in connection with the university is to cost nothing. Unless it is built in the capitol park the site for the State Historical society building must be purchased. To anyone who lives in a city larger than a village it appears laughable almost to be told that the university campus is too far removed from the center of the city."

MIDWINTER MEET.

A Success Promised—Names of the Patronesses.

Arrangements for the mid-winter meet are nearly completed and the number of entries in each event is large. Every indication points to a large attendance and the interest and enthusiasm among the students is greater than has ever before been aroused by our indoor athletic sports. The contest will take place upon an elevated platform erected in the center of the large drill hall, thus bringing all parts of the vast auditorium within full view of the stage and making seats in any part of the hall desirable. The order and character of events will be much the same as at last year's meet. Many of the contestants of last year will again participate, among others Bozendahl and Richards, who will strive for honors in the heavy-weight boxing contest. The event was won by Bozendahl last year, after a close and exciting contest, and great interest is manifested as to the outcome on Thursday night.

The committee of the Athletic association having the "meet" in charge has been working earnestly for the success of the affair and this is assured by the interest which is being shown among both students and townspeople.

The list of patronesses includes Mrs. J. C. Spooner, Mrs. R. M. Bashford, Mrs. F. Brown, Mrs. S. H. Marshall, Mrs. Gov. Upham, Mrs. E. M. Fuller, Mrs. H. B. Hobbins, Mrs. J. Conklin and Mrs. C. K. Adams.

CONTEMPORARY CLUB.

The Contemporary club will meet Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at the Unitarian church. Mr. F. W. Hall will review Freytag's "Technique of the Drama," translated by Prof. E. J. MacEwan, and there will be an informal discussion of the Report of the Federal Strike Commission.

Absences are not reported at the University of Chicago until the end of the year. A student having more than thirty is requested to take an extra course of study next year.

A CONSTITUTION

ADOPTED BY THE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION.

MEMBERSHIP TICKETS FOR FORTY CENTS.

Enteman Elected to the Board of Directors.

The University Co-operative association met yesterday afternoon in the junior law room and adjourned to Library hall. The amended constitution as published in last Friday's Cardinal, was then read and adopted. Among the changes is the provision for selling membership tickets for the remainder of the year at forty cents each. The board of directors was also increased to nine by the addition of a member from the freshman class; K. E. Enteman was chosen to represent his class on the board. The annual meeting of the association was changed to the third Tuesday in October, fifteen members to constitute a quorum.

The amendments were the result of a year's experience in the running of the Co-operative association and the new constitution will no doubt aid in securing satisfactory results for the coming year.

THE PROM.

Gallery Tickets on Sale—The Decorations by Breese.

Tickets for admission to the gallery at the Junior Promenade can now be obtained of the different committees and at Mosley's, Menges' and the co-op. Only a limited number of tickets have been placed on sale so there will be no necessity for a rush for the seats, there being very little difference in the various parts of the gallery.

The decorations have been placed in the hands of F. W. Breese and considerable attention will be given to this part of the party. A number of flags and a large amount of bunting have been secured and the arches and walls will be almost completely covered. An abundance of flowers will be used and the effect of the hall will be very fine. The stand for the musicians and the box to be occupied by the reception committee will be banked with flowers. The bright light from the electric lights will be softened by a number of piano lamps which will be placed about the hall.

The committee has elected J. B. Sanborn as treasurer for the promenade and those who have had tickets to sell will report to him as soon as possible.

Dr. G. W. Anderson, of the Yale gymnasium, will soon publish a book on the pedagogy of gymnastics. This will be the first book of its kind published.

A class composed of members of the Yale faculty meets every morning in the gymnasium.

RULES FOR HONORS.

At the faculty meeting yesterday it was desired to have republished the rules for special honors which were adopted Dec. 3. They are as follows:

1. Special honors will be awarded by the faculty at graduation to such students as have prepared theses of exceptional excellence to which they have devoted an amount of time above that required for graduation at least equivalent to three-fifth study for two terms.

2. Candidates for special honors must be nominated to the faculty by the professor in whose department honors are sought not later than the third Monday in May. Each nomination, together with the thesis of the nominee, shall be referred to a committee of three to be named by the president, and to consist of instructors in subjects allied to that of the thesis, excluding the instructor under whom the work was done.

3. The committees shall report to the faculty not later than the first Monday of June the names of students worthy of special honors. These reports shall be upon the table one week and be voted on by the faculty not later than the second Monday of June.

ALUMNI NOTES.

'90—J. S. Wangsnes died on the 16th of February at El Paso, Texas. He graduated from the law school and afterward practiced law in Minneapolis. He went south to seek relief from lung trouble a short time ago, but was soon forced to succumb. He was born and brought up in De Forest, a few miles north of here, where the funeral will be held.

'89—C. D. Hawthorne is at present a prominent lawyer of St. Paul, Minn.

'92—Miss Ella Davis is assistant principal of the Tomah high school.

'86—Word comes from Los Angeles, Cal., that R. E. Bundy is very ill in that city. Mr. Bundy went to California hoping to improve his failing health.

—W. A. Rogers, '88, spent last evening in the city on business.

—Prof. Parker has been confined to his room the past two days with sickness.

—E. C. May, '98, who has been suffering from la grippe, is now much better.

—Miss Ino Proctor, '97, who has been spending a few days visiting in Tomah, has returned to the city.

—Prof. Kinley, formerly of the University of Wisconsin, is to act as judge in the Indiana intercollegiate debate.

—Prof. Haskins will give his first lecture on the Alexandrian conquest to the classes in ancient history next Thursday in the chemical laboratory room.

—C. M. Blumer, '98, who was called home last week on account of the serious illness of his mother, is back in the university again.

—The class in ethics held its final examination on the test yesterday. The remainder of the term will be taken up with lectures.

—Professors Schlitter, Scott and Haskins are out of the city inspecting high schools. This work has been carried out more thoroughly this year than ever before. The examiners have nearly finished the list.

President Adams expects every student to do his duty tomorrow by being in the Armory at 5 o'clock.

A reputable college magazine uses the possessive pronoun "who's."
"Who's" fault is it that it doesn't know better?

The fact that so able and experienced a newspaper man as Sumner Curtis is to address the Press club tomorrow evening should be sufficient to insure a large attendance.

Cornell has done away with examinations, and will grade its students
according to daily recitations and occasional quizzes. Wisconsin might have three more weeks each year for work by returning to this plane.

A student of Ann Arbor says there are only two rules: the first, that they shall not set fire to the college buildings, and the second, that they shall not kill any of the professors. Wisconsin has another: freshmen must not carry canes.

Germany has a professor who has been lecturing for sixty-six years on physics and mineralogy. He should write a book on the advancement of science.

An exchange announces that Brown University is the only college in America to offer a course in Dutch. And yet a bystander on our own campus hears of more students going to Dutch
than any other one branch of study.

The call of the president for the meeting of the university tomorrow afternoon should be heeded by every student. It is so seldom that the students can all get together that opportunities of this sort should not be neglected. The legislature probably has a somewhat inadequate idea of the number of students in the university. Figures show little and few persons know just how many 1,500 persons are. But anyone who comes to see the meeting tomorrow afternoon
in the gymnasium can have some conception of that number, for if all the students and instructors are there the number will be above rather than below the 1,500 mark.

MASS MEETING.

The request of Pres. Adams for all departments of the university to meet to morrow in the Gym ought to be unanimously complied with. Whatever the purpose of the call may be,
is is certainly necessary or the same
would not be issued and any attempt on the part of the chief executive of the institution to accomplish desired
results deserves the most hearty concurrence of each and every student.
Whether the absence of one individual or not will materially detract from the success of the plan ought not to be considered. If the intentions are carried out at all they must be done well. Any one can spare an hour at this time of day as there is no possible chance for interruption or conflict with ordinary duties at the well selected hour.

When each student attends with the proper spirit and tries to induce his companions to attend, we cannot fail to be benefited, being conscious we are doing our part, however small, to make the affair a success. It is very seldom any occasion of this nature happens and without question every student can afford to sacrifice one hour
at the most for the welfare of the university as an ultimate end. Looking at the matter in this light it is difficult for us to see how any interpris-ing and patriotic student can consistently remain away from the meeting.

CABINET GOVERNMENT.

Lecture by Prof. Parkinson in His Series of Synoptics.

In his lecture upon the English constitution yesterday, Professor Parkinson said in substance: Not the least of the good ends subserved by the Revolution of 1688 was to supply the conditions which should gradually lead to responsible cabinet government. The balance of power had been conferred from crown to parliament. It only remained to establish some connecting link between them, and to put an end to that unnatural antagonism that had specially prevailed during the Stuart reigns. No such antagonism was possible after the Revolution settlement, and yet the cabinets of William III. and Anne were very different bodies from what they are today.

Under the last two Stuarts the cabinet was a "cabal" of the king's servants, sustaining the crown against both privy council and parliament. Since the Revolution of 1688, it has been a committee of the two houses of parliament, and since the time of George I., has been practically chosen by the commons.

The cabinet, as it now exists, has come about by a gradual process of evolution, and is the result of time, experience and in part of accident. It is only within a comparatively recent period that the two fundamental principles of cabinet government have been understood and thoroughly worked out in practice; 1st, that the ministry should consist of statesmen holding the same political principles, 2d, that they should be able to command and retain a majority of votes in the house of commons. The modern cabinet is due to the establishment of party government. It is now the connecting link between the legislature and the executive—the "threefold hinge" joining crown, lords and commons. All cabinet members are privy councilors; but all privy councilors are not cabinet members. The privy council is known to the written law; the cabinet is known only to the unwritten constitution. The privy council is essentially an executive body; the cabinet is a deliberate one.

Acting through the commons the cabinet is now the great governing organ of the nation. It is not the executive in name, but directs how the executive shall execute. It sustains the whole strain of the government, and is the true center of gravity for the working system of the state. Its members are heads of departments, and as such only are known to the law. They are bound by a common responsibility, and must stand or fall together.

The prime minister, as such, is also unknown to the written law. He and his associates are nominally chosen by the crown. Less than two centuries ago the cabinet was chosen in reality, and the king was his own prime minister. Now, the house of commons, or the electors rather, practically choose the premier, and he makes up his cabinet. He is expected to interpret the will of the nation, and parliament to give voice to his interpretation. He leads and the commons follow, but they dictate, to a certain extent, how he shall lead. If they refuse to follow, he must resign, or appeal to the nation.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

The mention of the Catholic University in the pope's recent encyclical has stirred up the friends of the great denominational institution to renewed activity, and it is now the expectation of the clergy that the university will ultimately have connected with it schools established by all the different orders of the Catholic church. Already the Paulists and the Marists have established schools, and negotiations are quietly being conducted with at Washington. The understanding is that as the different orders establish themselves the provincial or the superior of the order will take up his residence at Washington. Thus, in course of time, all the heads of the various orders of the Catholic church will be brought in close communication with each other, and Washington will become the center of Catholicism of America. It is not generally known that Bishop Keane has been quietly selecting the members of the faculty for the department of arts and literature of the Catholic University, which is to be opened next fall. Professor Edward Green, of the University at Berkeley, Cal., has been selected as professor of botany. Professor Robinson, of Yale, has been offered the chair of law, and has accepted it. Professor Griffin, who is now completing his studies at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, will return to the Catholic University and take the chair of chemistry in the new school. Professor Pace, of the divinity college, will take the chair of psychology and be dean of the faculty.
