Rufus on life; Graff on the game

By JIM YOUNG
Sports Staff

Everybody knows that Rufus Ferguson can run with a football; he currently leads the Big Ten in rushing with 385 yards and in scoring with 38 points. He is generally conceded to be a care-free, fun-loving guy; his little dance at Syracuse being one of his better known escapades. But what is Rufus really like?

Recently he took time out from his economic studies and his "job" playing football to talk about Rufus Ferguson. He spoke in a quiet, serious manner about the things that play an important part in his style of life. This was an honest, down-to-earth Ferguson; a far cry from the god-on-a-pedestal image or dumb-jock stereotype that athletes are put into.

Following are some of his thoughts, ideas, and comments about things he faces. You might call it his philosophy.

On black athletes: "It's an identity thing. You turn on the TV and you see black athletes in sports. You identify with them; you say, 'if they can do it, so can I.' I see players like O.J. Simpson and want to be like that. If I had seen black lawyers on TV, I probably would have wanted to be a lawyer."

On winning: "I believe in winning all the way. Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing. Sportsmanship is important, but it still doesn't take away from winning."

On competition: "I don't let up whoever it is we're playing; I go in and try to win. It's true you probably get up more for a ranked team than you do for a Northern Illinois because that's how you gain recognition; you'd definitely be up for an Ohio State or a Michigan State."

On leadership: "Everyone should have a hand in leadership. The captains are usually seniors, in their last year; it's to give them a sense of responsibility. A team has got to have leadership. I try to give a player confidence; if someone does something wrong, I tell him I think he can do the job, I don't yell at him. Usually I do it in a joking manner; it helps to relax them. You get your point across any way you can. If joking works, I use it. You just have to blend in with the atmosphere."

On psyching-up: "I just concentrate, I know I have to do a job. I talk to myself, teammates, sometimes an opponent. I don't develop hate feelings, just the urge to win."

On getting uptight: "I'm always thinking I'm going to do the job, I always think optimistically."

Rufus looking to block for Neil

On determination: "I try to think ahead and concentrate on working hard. When you've got your back against the wall, you have to keep pushing, and take it out on the next team. You can't quit when everything's not going right, you've got to keep plugging and plugging. The main thing that football has taught me is that you can't quit. You've got to keep going and never give up."

On publicity: "It gives us confidence. It's all for a good purpose, it mostly helps the team. The reporters try to do right, usually they're nice and fair."

On feeling good: "When I feel loose, feel good and the tension is off of me, feel I want to do the job, it makes me want to run a lot. I want to please the crowd. If it looks like we're going to win, I'll do a little something extra. I believe in somewhat pleasing the crowd; the game comes first, but then the crowd. If the atmosphere is flamboyant, I'll do something flamboyant."

On full stadiums: "You get a feeling that people have come to look at you. You hate to let them down, you feel a responsibility to the crowd."

On education: "Education is my main objective, football is a second choice; I can't play football all my life. I want to get my degree. I hope to get a pro contract, but I have to take one step at a time, and getting the first one (B.A. degree) is the first thing."

On pro football: "There you play for money, it's just like a job; you have to feed a family. It gives you a reason to play, a reason to get mad; the guy across the line is trying to mess up your family, to mess up your salary. You have to be mean and vicious."

On doing your own thing: "Everyone has certain identities. When you're young you have certain idols, heroes you look up to, and I think that's good when you're young. But you should shoot to be better than them."

"The key thing is being yourself; when someone approaches you, you'll always be the same person. Everyone should concentrate on being themselves; I concentrate on being Rufus Ferguson."

It's almost a universal rule in the world of sports, that after a bad game, most athletes are anxious for the next contest to try for redemption.

After last week's dismal showing at Northwestern, the Badgers had what Coach John Jardine termed "three good days of practice" this week, and seem ready for a come-back bid against Indiana today.

After exceptional performances against Syracuse and LSU, quarterback Neil Graff had one of his worst days in his three years at the Wisconsin helm; completing only eight of 25 passes against Northwestern.

"It was just a bad day all around," Graff remarked, "we wanted to run a balanced attack, but we got behind early and had to go to the air more often than we wanted to."

ALTHOUGH THE LOSS was disappointing, Graff said that preparation for the next game doesn't allow him to dwell on the loss too long.

"Last week was a big game and, for that reason, hurts even more than a non conference loss," Graff continued, "But the saying, that, any team can beat any other team in this league on any given day is true, and whether we win or lose on Saturday, preparation for the next game doesn't leave you much time to think about the disappointments of last week."

Graff echoed the sentiments that Jardine expressed all week, by saying that they would strive for a more balanced attack.

However, the Sioux Falls, S.D. native remarked that Indiana only puts three men back deep in the secondary and hinted that the Wisconsin passing game will not be neglected.

Despite last week's poor showing, Graff has demonstrated a great deal of improvement over last season, particularly in hitting his secondary receiver.

"EXPERIENCE IS THE big factor," Graff said, "now I feel more at ease. The offensive line has also given me more time this year."

Tim Klosek, the second leading Badger receiver behind Al Hannah, remarked that, "Neil is taking more time and, although he is taking a lot of good shots, he's giving his receivers extra time to get open."

Graff is currently ranked fifth in the Big Ten in total offense and fourth in passing, although he has the second best completion percentage in the conference behind Ohio State's Don Lamka.

Graff has had some feelers from pro teams and says that he would like to give the pros a shot.

However, he adds "right now, I'm thinking about giving Indiana my best shot."

High school football

Cultural vice and what we like

ELLIOT PINSLEY
Sports Staff

The mornings are getting harder to wake up for, aren't they, kid? The grey days seem to come more frequently now, and they're cold and windy besides.

The aisle at Green's is piled high with looseleaf paper, on sale for 69¢ per hundred sheets.

Yes it's fall alright, you're a junior in high school, even the short skirts will be gone soon, and boy are you depressed! How're you going to get through it?

Well, for Madison's East High, the football season has arrived, as it has for countless East, West, and Central Highs all across America. And somehow, this time-battered, and much maligned institution still remains a beautiful thing to watch.

BREEZE STEVENS FIELD, dark and cavernous, surrounded by vendors peddling anything from East High pennants to LBJ and Ringo buttons, is a perfect setting for the Friday night opener between Madison East and Janesville Parker. The scene is one which has hardly changed, at least visibly, in 20 years.

The home team side of the field is packed with all the loyal go-getters, and their alumni parents in the next section, who come to watch their kids, both those on the field and in the stands. Also evident are Madison's greasers, surprisingly genuine, who cruise around looking heavy, and trying to find some "action." And on the visitors' side are the diehards who drove up from Janesville for the game. You know, the ones blessed with that intangible essence known as school spirit.

I must admit, quite frankly, I was impressed. East's team, though not very big, was a relatively strong and efficient unit; they have a potent running attack, led by a guy named Ken Starch, and although they seemed unaware of the pass, were a worthy opponent for Parker. The purple and gold-clad warriors from Madison, put up an exciting battle, though losing a close one to the visitors from Janesville.

But those who watched only that aspect of the game had narrow vision indeed, for high school football is an incredible collage of sight and sound that needs to be absorbed in total.

THE CHEERLEADERS for example—ah, the cheerleaders were a vision. Remember when you were 17 and used to eat your heart out over those beautiful golden haired teen-angels, so wonderful, yet so unattainable. They were so healthy and exuberant, with those indefatigable smiles that even opposing touchdowns couldn't deflate. Granted their pureness was a mindless illusion, but we were all mindless then.

I wonder sometimes whether we've gained anything from the self-consciousness we paid for with our spontaneity. Anyway, Madison East's cheerleaders were no disappointment. In their bright purple sweaters, and, despite the white slacks (no kidding!), they made the game a joy to watch—the realization of my every teen-age fantasy.

Badgers show long, exciting, lucky history vs. Hoosiers

By TERRY RINDFLEISCH
Sports Staff

There's something about the "Fightin' Hoosiers" of Indiana that brings out the best in the Wisconsin Badgers. Wisconsin has lost only six times to Indiana in a series that dates back to 1907 and covers 23 contests.

With the forward pass leading in a complete change in the college football picture after 1906, Wisconsin overpowered Indiana in their first three meetings from 1907-1909. But in 1910 the Hoosiers' tenacious defense held the Badgers to only three points in a 12-3 victory.

It was not until twelve years later in 1922 that the Badgers again played the Hoosiers. It was the first Big Ten game ever between the two teams. Indiana had the nation's best passing combination in a 5-5 quarterback Warren Rommes and a 6-3 end Temp Jefferies. But the Badgers trounced them 20-0, rolling up 534 total yards in the process.

And Wisconsin added injury to insult the next year. For in 1923, the Badgers not only held the Hoosiers to three first downs in the entire game, but also scored seven touchdowns in a 52-0 swamping.

THREE YEARS LATER, Wisconsin's tough defense smothered four successive Hoosier attempts to score in the second half and won 27-2.

A winless, underdog Indiana team came to Madison in 1938 for the first time in twelve years. It was Homecoming and a typical fingernail-biter between the two clubs. The closing minutes were some of the most thrilling moments ever at Camp Randall. Indiana drove all the way down to the Badger's seven-yard line when time ran out, and Wisconsin salvaged a 6-0 win.

In 1939, Indiana shut out Bucky for the first time, as a Badger fumble and a 80-yard run boosted the Hoosiers to a 14-0 victory. It was the first Hoosiers victory over Wisconsin in 29 years.

The 1940 Wisconsin team finished with a .500 season, but looked like champions against Indiana, rolling up a 27-10 upset. George Paskvan, Wisconsin's All-Conference fullback, ran all over the Hoosiers, while the defense held them to zero net yards rushing.

Homecoming-1941 featured Wisconsin's great passing combination of quarterback Tom Farris to All-American end Dave Schreiner. Although Indiana matched Wisconsin's four touchdowns, the Badgers won a 27-25 thriller as the Hoosiers missed two extra point attempts.

WISCONSIN SUFFERED its worst defeat at the hands of the Hoosiers in 1943. Indiana, led by 17-year-old Bob "Hunchy" Hoernschemeyer, the nation's leading back, smothered the Badgers for a 34-0 Homecoming victory.

In 1944, Wisconsin's Earl "Jug" Girard passed, ran, and kicked his way to a high spot among the nation's stars. Three years later, his national recognition helped the underdog Badgers to gain a 7-7 tie with the Hoosiers' great passing machine.

Having just returned from the service, Girard came into the game in the fourth quarter for the first time since 1944. He ran five yards on his first carry. On the next play, he faked getting the ball, drawing the Indiana defense to the right. Halfback Earl Maves ran to the left and bolted 70 yards for the tying touchdown.

Wisconsin and Indiana exchanged wins in 1948 and 1949 as the Badgers finished ninth and fourth respectively in the conference.

The 1951 season featured All-American Alan Ameche and quarterback, ex-Badger coach, John Coatta. On a cold, cloudy November day at Camp Randall, a sell-out crowd of 51,116 saw three quarters of scoreless football. Then, with only 58 seconds remaining in the game, John Coatta threw a touchdown pass to Bill Hutchinson to give the Badgers a thrilling 6-0 win.

THE DAILY CARDINAL told the meaning of the next year's game with the Hoosiers when it said, "Never has a game been more important to a team." The Badgers were battling for the Big Ten title—a win was a "must" with only Indiana and Minnesota left to play. Besides that, the Badgers were seeking their first trip to the Rose Bowl.

The Badgers mauled Indiana, 37-14, as Alan Ameche ran for three touchdowns. Wisconsin went on to win the Big Ten title and that trip to Pasadena.

When the Badgers met the Hoosiers ten years later in 1961, field goals accounted for all the scoring. Jim Bakken gave the Badgers a 6-3 victory in a strictly defensive game.

1962 will never be forgotten in the hearts of Badger fans. In pre-season picks for the Big Ten race Wisconsin was picked to finish seventh or eighth. But the Badgers were sleepers, a team with great balance and depth led by All-American end, Pat Richter and a scrambling quarterback Ron Vanderkelen. After the Badgers crushed Indiana, 30-6, Indiana's head coach Phil Dickens said, "The way they looked today, they ought to finish in the first division." The Badgers finished third in the nation.

Five years later, the Badgers met Indiana again, but this time the Hoosiers thought they would romp. Indiana came into the game with a 6-0 record and ranked nationally. They had two sensational stars in quarterback Harry Gonso and halfback John Isenbarger. The romping never came. Wisconsin outplayed the Hoosiers, but lost the 14-9 thriller.

IT WAS SO CLOSE, that on the last play of the game, quarterback John Boyajian overthrew an open Mel Reddick in the end zone. The Hoosiers went on to the Rose Bowl, and Wisconsin never won a game in 1967.

Homecoming-1968 featured a weak, helpless Badger team suffering from a 16-game losing streak. Wisconsin alumni and fans didn't expect a Homecoming win, but came within an eyelash of getting one. Six missed Wisconsin field goals, including a 30 yarder with 22 seconds left in the game, and a missed two-point conversion, determined a 21-20 loss.

It was another Wisconsin-Indiana Homecoming battle a year later. Just the week before, the Badgers ended a 23-game losing streak by beating Iowa, 23-17. But Indiana was back with Harry Gonso and Co. In 1967, when the Hoosiers lost to Southern California in the Rose Bowl, they vowed that they'd be back in 1969.

It was another tense, emotion-filled contest all the way. But this time it was different! Quarterback Neil Graff threw four touchdown passes to lead the Badgers to a 36-34 upset over the Hoosiers. Wisconsin's second straight victory spoiled Indiana's dream of returning to Pasadena. Graff hit on 13 of 20 passes for 220 yards. Alan "A-Train" Thompson and Joe Dawkins compiled 220 rushing yards. The Badgers danced all night and fans celebrated all over Madison.

After two years of Homecoming thrillers, Wisconsin trounced the Hoosiers, 30-12 and spoiled Indiana's 1970 Homecoming. The victory ended Wisconsin's losing jinx on the road that went back to 1966.

Although there have been some disappointing setbacks, the Badgers have had good luck against Indiana. But that means nothing to John Jardine and this year's crew unless tradition holds up for them today.

Over the wall goes the bouncing ball. . .

By CHARLIE GILBERT
Sports Staff

For several years footballs have been escaping from Camp Randall Stadium on Saturday afternoons. No, Rufus Ferguson hasn't got that carried away and run out of the stadium; Neil Graff hasn't overshot his receivers too badly; nor has Roger Jaeger or John Krugman put too much toe in their kicks. But still they fly over.

During Wisconsin's lean years, after an extra point or field goal was kicked, usually by the opponent, students retrieved the oblong pigskin and threw it to others in the stands until someone near the top tossed it out. It was something to do between the score and the kickoff. Many times, it was the only true enjoyment that Badger fans felt all afternoon.

Since that time, two changes have taken place. Wisconsin scores a lot of touchdowns now, and, although balls do escape, they don't pop over as repeatedly.

According to Athletic Director Elroy Hirsch, the athletic department received "letters of complaint, many from the faculty" urging that something be done to stop the fighting that went on between the fans, including many children, over those stray footballs.

LAST YEAR THE ATHLETIC department took two steps. First, they constructed a giant net behind each goal post to catch the ball before it went into the stands. Secondly, they sent student equipment managers, commonly known as "yellowshirts," due to their yellow jerseys, into the crowd to try to catch any ball that escapes the net.

The nets, which were built at a cost of about $800, are not very effective. They catch only about half of the balls that are kicked. If a ball is kicked either to the left or right of the goalposts, the net will not catch it and often short distance kicks sail over the net. The net also obstructs vision from some end zone seats.

Possibly, for these reasons, it was not used for the first two games this year, but it will be used for the Indiana game.

The "yellowshirts" are student equipment managers who are employed by the athletic department to help out with football equipment during practices and games. Besides chasing down extra points and field goals, the managers act as ball boys during the game.

According to Hirsch the yellowshirts are "instructed not to fight. If a boy catches a ball, he can have it. Our main concern is for the safety of the kid that gets the ball."

Yellowshirt Dick Orth echoed this, "We're not supposed to fight. If you don't get the ball, you don't get the ball. I can honestly say that no one looks for fights."

STUDENT REACTION to the yellowshirts has not been favorable. Nobody has been hurt, but one manager had his glasses snatched from him and then was pushed to the ground from behind. "The little kids aren't going to bother you," said manager Jim Baumann, "It's the kids 16 and 17 who give us trouble. It gets worse as the game goes on and people start to mill around. The second half is a lot worse than the first half."

Orth added, "People got the idea that we were a bunch of sadists, but that's not how it is."

Two years ago, before there were nets or yellowshirts, a football game was affected by a decision of an usher. Wisconsin went into the game against Syracuse a slight underdog, but many people thought this game would bring victory to the Badgers for the first time in two years.

MANY BALLS LEFT the stadium that afternoon, all after Syracuse scores. With little time remaining in the game, Syracuse scored their last touchdown, making the score 41-7 in their favor. They sent out their kicker to try for the extra point but recalled him and decided to go for two points instead. Syracuse made the two point conversion and the scoring ended 43-7.

What should be the status of a $20 football that escapes into the crowd? Are the nets and "yellowshirts" worth the trouble? One avid fan said, "A football that has crossed an opponent's goal line for a Wisconsin touchdown and then booted through the uprights for another Wisconsin point is no longer a common, ordinary pigskin—it is an historic and treasured part of the glorious history of Badger football and is fully deserving of true and proud possession by the University of Wisconsin fans."

Van Davis could surprise and sprint to scholarship

By JIM YOUNG
Sports Staff

In a time when college sports has become more and more big business, recruiting increases in importance as the athletic departments strive for winning teams and the large crowds that result. The athlete who gained enough of a reputation in high school to be recruited finds himself in a favored category at college, and soon learns to make the most of it.

The boy who comes to college athletics as a walk-on finds himself in a different situation. He must prove himself to a group of coaches who never heard of him or didn't feel he had what it takes. Only his pride and determination keep him competing in a sport where he wasn't wanted in the first place. Rare today is the walk-on who succeeds in college sports; athletes like Jim DeLisle, now with the Packers, and Glen Richgels are the exception to the rule.

Van Davis is a freshman, a walk-on trying out for the track team. He has that pride and determination, but more importantly, he has 9.6 speed in the 100 yard dash. Even with that type of speed things won't be easy for him. He doesn't expect them to.

At Atlantic High in Brynton Beach, Florida, he twice ran the 100 in 9.6. They came in intrasquad meets however, and didn't count toward any record. He consistently ran in the 9.7-9.8 range at meets. Besides the 100, he also ran in the 220, 440, and was part of a record 880 relay team.

DESPITE HIS SPEED, Davis went out for track in high school only as a second choice. He had always preferred swimming and only went to track when he found that his high school didn't have a swimming team.

Davis was heavily recruited, as could be expected, but was ignored by Wisconsin. His major offers came from Princeton, Georgia Tech, and Cincinnati. "I wanted to get out of the South because of the hypocrisy of the area," he explains, "I didn't go to Princeton because I didn't want a strict academic atmosphere. I wanted something liberal, something open." So he decided on Wisconsin.

Davis wrote to Wisconsin twice asking about a scholarship, but never even received an answer. Coach Bill Perrin never saw the letters, and if they ever reached Bob Brennan, then head track coach, he chose to ignore them.

It's the kind of mistake that could later haunt a coach; just ask John Jardine about Garvin Roberson, a super-soph wide receiver at Illinois, who was all set to come to Wisconsin until he was forgotten in the Coatta-Jardine transition.

Ignoring the snub, Davis came on his own. Coach Perrin has said, "We consider it good fortune that he came here."

IN HIGH SCHOOL, Davis suffered from a series of pulled leg muscles and still worries about them. He feels he is built to be a distance runner, not a sprinter, but accepts the role he has been put into and is developing his speed.

The person who isn't worrying about Davis' problem is Perrin. He has the track team on a rigorous training program, which he describes as an overload, "power training." He has full confidence in his program to develop the needed strength, and feels that, if Davis sticks with it, his problems should be over.

But his legs aren't his only problem, Davis considers himself to be a shy person and lacks confidence. "I shy away from the group. I've got to learn to work with everybody. I have to mix in more, work out, and gain confidence, before I can start competing."

TO BE COMPETITIVE in the Big Ten, Davis would have to get his time down around 9.4. He is looking toward even better things. "I'd like to run a 9.2 hundred, and after that, there is the Olympics," he says. "If you set goals, you might as well set them at the top."

But for the Olympics to be more than wishful thinking, he will have to improve considerably an really push himself. "I have to learn to put strength and speed together. I can't let the work hinder me, I can't be giving out when I get tired."

The lack of a scholarship may prove to be a blessing in disguise for Davis.

Club sports rising, could revolutionize

By PAT SLATTERY
Sports Staff

Four years ago, sports clubs did not exist on the Madison campus. Today, over 400 men and women compete in 19 different sport activities, as varied as fencing for females to alpine skiing for males.

This phenomenal growth has led to speculation that within ten years, the sport club trend could revolutionize campus sports.

The Sport Club Program provides the opportunity for students and faculty members to participate in sport activities for which there is no existing opportunity within the structure of intercollegiate and intramural sports programs.

The objective of these clubs is to fill the void between intercollegiate and intramural programs. The program is highly adaptable for a student coming to the campus who has played interscholastically in high school. The student wants to participate in something more competitive than intramurals and yet nothing as demanding as college interscholastics.

THE ANSWER COULD BE a club sport like volleyball or water polo, where a certain amount of expertise can be developed by the aspiring neophyte.

In no way do the sport clubs want to compete or interfere with the intentions of intramurals or interscholastic sports.

Milt Bruhn, former UW football coach and now director of club sports, sees tremendous potential for the program's growth. "I wouldn't be surprised," he said, "that in five years the Sports Club Program will double."

The growth on a national scale is easily as strong as the movement at Madison. Many athletic departments are welcoming the growth of a club program, which is financially less demanding and not as high powered as intercollegiate sports.

The Wisconsin Sport Club was initiated in December of 1968. Reacting to pressure from interested groups, Physical Education Department members Leonard Larson, Vern Woodward, and Bruhn went to the administration to ask for the establishment of a Sport Club Program.

"Women sports have been growing on all levels, especially on the high school level," Bruhn said. "There are some tremendous women athletes on this campus, and I think that they should also have the right to participate."

CURRENTLY THERE ARE ten clubs that are entirely composed of women along with two co-ed clubs.

What if a club would like to go interscholastic? This would mean that the intent of the sport would change. The Athletic Department would have to accept the change of the club as now being an interscholastic sport and more finances would be available. Bruhn thought that soccer and alpine skiing did have the potential to become interscholastic in the future.

Bruhn has received some unusual requests in his post as director of the program. Last spring the cricket club asked for certain pieces of sport equipment not normally found in the UW lockers, among them a wicket keeper's glove and abdomen guards.

The rise of sport clubs indicates a new direction for athletic departments. No longer do they solely concentrate on the old staples of football, basketball, and baseball, but now they must recognize the needs of men and women interested in minor sports who also seek competition.

Cricket anyone?

Webster is anonymous, but he's happy that way

By GARY SCHENDEL
Sports Staff

Quickly—who is Wisconsin's offensive center? The typical fan today would answer, "Gee, I don't really know." Or maybe, "Isn't it still that Fedenia fella?"

The correct answer to the question is 6-1, 218 pound Mike Webster, a sophomore from Rhinelander, Wis.

If you missed the question, don't feel bad. Webster and most of his colleagues who play center prefer to remain anonymous, anyway.

The publicity a center gets is usually inversely proportional to his ability.

A bad snap or a bad block draws attention, but the solidly played game, or season for that matter, at center can go completely ignored. In fact, it's usually the case that the less you know about a center, the better he is.

A GOOD EXAMPLE of this rule-of-thumb is Jim Fedenia. As evidenced by his lack of fame, Fedenia put in three hard years of solid performances for the Badgers. His loss by graduation last year sent the coaching staff searching for a center who could remain as anonymous as Fedenia.

This spring, the coaches were counting on junior Mike Passini to take over, but Passini lost his job to Webster. The stocky sophomore has performed well so far this season, and promises to follow in Fedenia's footsteps as a three-year mainstay.

Webster says that he didn't do anything special to overtake Passini at center except develop his self-confidence, and work harder.

"I GAINED ALOT of confidence moving up," he said, "It's just a matter of practice and experience and just hoping that the other fella makes a mistake. And let me tell you, even now I don't feel secure as a starter. I'm just going to keep on doing as well as I can, and hope I hang on."

Webster hung on very well in Wisconsin's first three games, when the Badger offensive unit looked almost unstoppable. But he, along with the rest of the offense, had a rude awakening last Saturday at Evanston.

Webster attributes Wisconsin's lethargic performance against Northwestern to a gross loss of concentration.

"We were really up for both Syracuse and LSU trying to prove we were good; not so much to the public, but to ourselves. Then last week—well, there's just no way to explain a thing like that, you know. It wasn't there, we weren't up for the game mentally. I, myself, wasn't ready mentally either. We all lacked concentration, and that's what you need to be ready for a game," Webster explained.

"They had a good defense," he added, "we prepared for them, but we just got beat. Northwestern's very capable, their whole team. Still, had we been ready mentally, I think we could have beat them."

WHILE EXPLAINING his feelings, the former wrestling and track star shook his shaggy blond head, as confused as anyone by the Badgers letdown.

He added as a final thought on Northwestern, "Sure, we should have been up for the game, but we just couldn't feel it. I just hope this last game taught us a lesson. We'll come back though, we still have the confidence."

Looking forward to today's game against the Hoosiers, Webster was wary but confident of his unit's ability. The offense will be trying to move against a defense that Indiana coach John Pont says he "wouldn't trade for any in the country."

"We know they have a good defense, but we (the offensive line) are ready to meet the challenge—and things will be different than last week," Webster said. "We've been building up all week, hustling more and everything. You can feel that we're going to be ready to get Indiana."

When Sunday's news clippings appear, Webster's hoping that there will be little mention of him and his offensive line mates. Centers are strange that way.

Limb crew should have shakeup today

Everybody jogged along with each other last week, and there were no changes in positioning. But this week, there will have to be a shakeup somewhere.

Today's guest prognosticator is Gary Bender, the voice of the Green Bay Packers on the radio. He also announces Badger football and basketball games.

Bender, who was awarded Sportscenter of the Year honors in Kansas for several years before coming here, is the sports director for WKOW-TV and WTSO-Radio in Madison. He also hosts the John Jardine Show every Monday night at 7:30 on WKOW.

Bender's smooth, dignified manner is reflected in his picks. He differs from the group in only one place, picking Stanford over Sonny Sixkiller and squad.

THE BUBBLE WILL BURST for somebody as co-leaders Kevin Barber and Jeff Grossman differ on three of today's contests. Barber goes out on the limb in choosing Iowa over Northwestern and Oregon over USC.

Jim Cohen, Jimmy Koretz, Jeff Standaert, and Grossman give each other confidence with almost identical picks. In the only exception, Standaert joins Barber in giving Texas the nod over Oklahoma in the Cotton Bowl.

Where is your favorite

Ever wonder where your favorite Badgers of old are now? Here are a few arranged alphabetically.

Because of time limitations and the unavailability of many former athletes and sources, this listing does not include many people whom some people are still interested in.

The Cardinal will, in a future magazine, research the whereabouts of another group of former Badgers. Specific requests can be addressed to Jim Cohen, Daily Cardinal, 425 Henry Mall, Madison. The Cardinal sports staff will do its best in searching out any requests.

AMECHE, ALAN—Football star at Wisconsin for three years, two-time all-American and longterm star running back for the Baltimore Colts.

Now in restaurant business called Gino's, Inc., and sells indoor tennis recreational facilities.

Has six children. Oldest of four sons is a freshman tackle at Yale University. "Too small" for the Big Ten said papa Ameche. "I get as much of a thrill watching my kids play. I'm still pretty much action in football in this way, but I'm too old to think about playing again," said the Horse.

About having his total offense record broken last week by Neil Graff, Ameche said, "Terrific. This is my week for records being broken. The Colt fullback (Norm Bulaich) broke my single game rushing record. Give Graff my congratulations."

Ameche misses his past experiences. "I miss the camaraderie, the friendship, the whole teamwork aspect—that certain closeness that develops between teammates which never really leaves."

But he's not too far away from the game from his home in Malvern, Pa. "I've been in touch with Wisconsin football coach John Jardine and Elroy Hirsch. And I'm still pretty closely aligned with the Colts," he said.

BAKKEN, JIM—Former Madison high school and Badger star now a placekicker for the St. Louis Cardinals and doing well.

BRUHN, MILT—Brought two teams to Rose Bowl as Badger head coach, one of only two to do it. Eleven year record of 52-45-6, his 1962 team was ranked number two in country, highest ever by a Badger team.

After coaching, was assistant athletic director for over three years and now director of club sports at Wisconsin.

Now working in Chicago as assistant manager at Proctor Community Center.

DECREMER, JIM—Leading vote-getter on all-state team after great high school career in Eau Claire. After good freshman year with Clarence Sherrod, Denny Conlon and Craig Manwaring, was reserve forward and center for three years.

Both are Wisconsin graduates and repeated as Father-Son champs in 1948. Two weeks ago inducted into the National Tennis Hall of Fame.

Starting with $45,000 put up by his frat brothers, Nielsen founded A.C. Nielsen Co., now worth $200 million on the stock market. Nielsen's company is in charge of 1) Nielsen Ratings—world's largest in area of T.V. audience research, 2) world's largest marketing research company with subsidiaries in 21 foreign countries, 3) a coupon clearing house responsible for 15 billion grocery coupons, and 4) Magazine Circulation Fulfillment, maintaining the subscriber lists of 40 magazines.

ite his huge financial success, didn't forget his alma mater. He and his wife Gertrude (another Wisconsin alumnus) donated $2,156,500 for the building of the Nielsen Tennis Stadium, whose 12 tennis and 6 squash courts makes it the world's largest building of its type. Nielsen was also generous enough to donate $640,000 dollars to his native Winnetka Park District for the construction of a four-court indoor tennis center.

Nielsen feels his athletic experience at Wisconsin played a big part in his financial success. "Based on long personal experience in both tennis and squash racquets," Nielsen emphasized, "a good competitor learns that no matter how far behind he may be in a competitive match, he still has a chance of winning if he will a) increase his effort and determination and b) change his tactics. The identical principles hold true in competitive business activities and what I learned on this subject, through the aforesaid sports, has undoubtedly been of great assistance in my business career."

"And I have observed, among my tennis playing friends, that the best competitive players are usually the best salesmen and negotiators in business."

A non-predictor from Madison West, Richgels turned in a career high 27-point performance against George McGinness and Co. in Badger double-overtime upset of Indiana last season.

After an aborted trial with the ABA Denver Rockets, Richgels has returned to Madison to attend graduate school in math with hopes of becoming a teacher in the distant future.

Richgels confesses he hasn't the time to play ball and relishes the thought of last year's practice sessions. "Everybody complained about the practices, but you miss them when you're not there," Richgels noted. "The guys were great. It gets to the point where you enjoy working out."

I must admit that I fell for the girl with the honey hair at the left end of the line (facing the bleachers), though the rest of the unit was very fine indeed. On the whole, I thought the girls were much more alive and fun to watch than their drunken boob counterparts serving time on the Wisconsin sidelines.

East's Marching Purgolders provided the half-time entertainment. Led by one of their resident hippies on drums, and with visual accompaniment from a female division of their junior signal corps, they belted out a hot rendition of "Bill Bailey Won't You Please Come Home." The emotional peak was reached with East's own stirring version of "Varsity," bearing remarkably unfortunate resemblance to our own.

In the stands, the fans provided more than ample entertainment for themselves. With confetti and toilet paper flying, and everyone trying to get the latest news on who's going steady with who, one wonders whether anyone was watching. The cops were flirting with the high school girls and slinking around in the corners trying to conceal the cigarettes cupped in their hands.

LITTLE KIDS WITH LONG HAIR and bellbottoms were running around the stands and leaning over the railing drawing familiar screams of "Down in front." And even after the final gun went off, the show still wasn't over. Outside, everyone was milling around in small groups, waiting...for what? My teen-angel hung around for awhile, and then walked home alone, much to my disbelief and dismay.

So what then is the fascination of this event? How can I explain my regressive, sexist, anti-intellectual obsession with high school football? I think Andrew Sarris, in an essay on people's attitudes towards movies, has verbalized my almost intangible feelings.

"As we get older, we begin to develop a more defensive attitude toward this cultural vice to which we have become so hopelessly addicted. The gap begins to widen not so much between what we think and what we feel, as between what we really like, and what we dare admit we like."

Does high school football, then, pose such a threat to our sophistication that we cannot permit ourselves the excursion into this world of "mindless" yet unpretentious fun? Or do we take ourselves so seriously that we can no longer enjoy anything that does not stink of our own culture?

Somewhere, there must still be room, in all of us, for that immature and inscrutable spontaneity that never really dies.

Or does it?

The Nonviolent Revolution: To Build the Earth

October 8&9, 9pm: The Berrigans

The Berrigans: A Question of Conscience is a multi-media readers' theater presentation which examines the development of Frs. Dan and Phil Berrigan from verbal and intellectual inquiry to the active commitment to nonviolent radicalism embodied in their destruction of draft files in Catonsville. When the performance has ended, the Berrigans will have asked each of us, as they have asked themselves: "How do we say 'yes' to human life in the presence of ghettos, in the face of war? Can my friends and I do anything?"

October 10, 8-30pm: Michael Cullen

The questions that the Berrigans confront us with will be examined by Michael Cullen, a man who has felt compelled to come to terms with those questions in his own life. A man of joy, song, compassion, and conviction, Cullen was the founder of the Casa Maria Hospitality House in Milwaukee and a member of the Milwaukee 14. He will discuss the philosophy and theology of nonviolence both from his own experience and from an historical inquiry into the work of such men as the Berrigans and Danilo Dolci.

October 11&12: Danilo Dolci

Dolci, known as "the Gandhi of the West," has earned an international reputation for the creativity and effectiveness of his nonviolent crusade for social justice in Sicily. One of the outstanding nonviolent activists in the world, Dolci received the Lenin Peace Prize in 1958 and was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1967 and 1970. On Monday, October 11, at 8 p.m., Dolci will speak on the topic "Toward a Nonviolent Way of Life." On Tuesday, October 12, at 7:30 there will be music, a reading of Dolci's new poetic work on genocide, "Don't You Smell the Smoke?", and a talk by Dolci on culture.

A sexual outlet? pinball is growing

By BRUCE DIX
and GARY SWENSON

In the last few years pinball's popularity has increased tremendously. More and more people are finding themselves drawn to the electronic boxes that blink, ding, and tick.

Pinball has been around for years. In the early years of its existence, when a player reached a certain point total, a small drawer popped out filled with nickles. Playing pinball was not only exciting, but profitable.

The fun might have continued, except the government found out. Laws were passed to control gambling in general and, specifically, to wipe out pinball gambling. The only legal reward became the extra ball.

People used to getting a free game or a pocket full of nickels weren't interested in playing for a free ball. Pinball machines remained in lonely, dark corners of bars and restaurants.

But, time marches on. The new generation picked up pinball as a sport. The new pinball wizards were perfectly willing to chance a dime to see if they could beat the machine at its own game. The game prospered.

People play pinball for a variety of reasons. Passing the time while waiting for a beer or a hamburger, just something to do on a Friday night, or for the sport of it all. Players can be put into two classes: amateur and professional.

The amateur pinball player is a casual being. This type is usually not particular which game he plays, where he plays it or what his final score is. He usually doesn't know how to score free balls on the particular machine and is almost always just wasting time in lieu of something to do. His eyes wander the room while his ball is in play. He is often sloshing beer and pretzels down his throat while playing. The surface glass is littered.

The professional is easy to spot, especially next to the amateur. The professional plays for keeps. His eyes are glued to the machine at all times. His stance is rigid, yet he looks relaxed. He doesn't make fast or irrational motions. All manipulations are smooth, precise and based on instinct.

The professional is to be admired, yet there is something about him. Something weird and fanatical about his dedication to the game and his lust for winning.

Many attach great sexual significance to pinball playing. Some contend that the ardent pinball professional is merely sexually frustrated, deriving a detached pleasure by playing the game.

Pinball machines vary in shape, size, and theme. Most popular in Madison are the table type machines.

The Modern Specialty Co. supplies the Madison area with, among other things, pinball machines. They rent space from establishments on a percentage basis. The company still owns the machine and is responsible for its upkeep. They handle several hundred machines in the Madison area.

Most machines are manufactured by Gottlieb, although there are a few Williams machines on the Madison pinball beat. The Gottlieb machines are by far the most popular. "Hearts and Spades," "Card Trix," "Homerun," "Astro," "Batter Up," and the current top machine "Dimension" are all Gottlieb machines.

One can play pinball today in every place from Burger Chef to Union

Ruggers win three; host Minneapolis today

By PAT MORAN
Sports Staff

The Wisconsin Rugby Club picked up three victories last weekend. Two were against the University of Iowa on Saturday and another occurred on Sunday against the Milwaukee club.

The final score in Saturday's A game against Iowa was 16-4. Wisconsin scored only one try in the first half, when Les Castleberry touched the ball down in the end zone, assisted by Skip Muzik and Greg Hill. Iowa scored their only points of the game on a try later in the first half, tying the score at 4-4.

In the second half, scores were made by Hill, Bill Ashworth and Tom Toltzien. None of the day's tries were converted, resulting in the final 16-4 score for Wisconsin. Pete Albert was hospitalized with crushed ribs as a result of the rough play which occurred most prominently in the first half.

The Wisconsin ruggers won their B game against Iowa with a final score of 18-12. Bill Thilly made a try which was successfully converted; Tim Moore, John Biel and Jim "the Greek Metaxa" Valhouli also scored points for Wisconsin.

ON SUNDAY, WISCONSIN romped over Milwaukee by a score of 42-3, a score just 9 points short of Wisconsin's all-time high scoring record made against Northern Illinois University. Toltzien made two tries in the first half, both of which were converted by Hill.

In the second half, Milwaukee was allowed to score only on a penalty kick. Scoring for Wisconsin was rapid, and the team's ball handling was superb. Tom Haigh and Ashworth scored two tries apiece, Toltzien scored another, and Bob Hill and Joe Kloiber scored one try each in the final half of the game. Greg Hill converted Kloiber's try to give Wisconsin its staggering total of 42 points.

The Wisconsin club has received some good news from the Athletic Department. Policy in the future regarding membership in the club is that any male who has attended the University in the past at any time will be allowed as a member of the Wisconsin Rugby Club.

In the past, it was official policy that members must be attending or be associated with the University at the time they were playing rugby, thus officially denying veteran players who no longer attended the University the right to membership in the club. This new policy will be of great value to Wisconsin in allowing it to keep playing with essentially its same members and thus allowing it to keep perfecting its style.

This weekend the ruggers will host the Minneapolis team at Wisconsin rugby's famed Lot 60 field. The game will take place immediately after the football game Saturday afternoon.

South. Most establishments are of mediocre quality, but three which merit mentioning.

The Kollege Klub has one of the best selections of machines in the city. They are regularly cleaned and fixed. About the problems with the K.K. is the atmosphere. It's fine for the casual player, but rather disgusting to the true pinball fanatic.

A far more conducive atmosphere exists at Action Billiards on Gorham St. A good pool environment is also a good pinball environment. The relative quiet and friendliness coupled with breathing room, can do wonders for the game. Unfortunately, the machines aren't up to K.K. standards.

The main problem with finding a suitable place to play pinball is getting to the place that has just the right mixture of things to make it go. The Plaza is such a place. It combines the good machines of the K.K. with the atmosphere of Action Billiards.

Unfortunately the bar is beginning to get popular and thus noisy and crowded like the K.K. It's better days may be gone.

The current new surge of pinball playing culminated last winter on campus with a pinball tournament. It did the sport good.

But somehow, pinball wasn't made to be big time, it was made for those dark corners where all frustrations are diffused in the blink, ding, and tick of the machine.

We have to start moving now.
The Red Army already exists in its basic form as the Weatherman underground. They are the leadership of the white revolutionary movement in this country, not because of their ideas, which are basically right, but because they put those ideas into practice.

How can we best relate to their leadership? I don't think that we have to be in direct contact with them to move. We have to start building that Red Army on all levels—an underground can't survive without support from an aboveground. That means we start getting ourselves together to make the revolution grow ahead and make ourselves stronger people, keeping in mind that we need to have a way we can move to win.
When we start to move, we will of necessity have to set up communications with other groups and individuals. Thus new networks are formed and the Red Army is expanded to another level.

THE CELLULOID EXPERIENCE

By M.J. PAGGIE

Director of the Film Program at the Madison Art Center

Two entirely different products are manufactured today on celluloid. One is a movie, the other is an experience. Hollywood makes movies. Individuals create cinematic experiences.

The first product requires a passive, robot-like "audience" to sit in a large dark room and watch the same thing they've been watching for 70 years. They tell us nothing about ourselves that we don't already know.

The second product has no audience. It has only artists: creators and partakers. It is the experience of the new consciousness. Within you, you create with the film just as the film itself is a creation from within the maker. This is personal cinema: experimental films, underground films, or whatever you wish.

PERSONAL OR experimental cinema is not new. There are a few thousand experimental films sitting on the shelves of film cooperatives around the world right now. Compared to the Hollywood machine, there has been no concerted effort to actively promote these films on a large scale for the most part, so that's all they do—just sit on shelves. It is no wonder that the mass public is unaware of the cinematic experience.

In Madison, as elsewhere, there seems to be emerging a desire to personally communicate through film. But how many times can you see Rosemary's Baby, Night of the Living Dead, The 39 Steps, or for that matter Easy Rider? If it was more than once, it certainly wasn't for the cinematic experience. It was to be re-manipulated and directors like Hitchcock are masters at it. (At least Alfred is honest and readily admits it.)

Did Easy Rider tell you anything more about the South than you already knew? (Hopper and Fonda didn't go out in search of America. Hitchcock adequately described it when he said it was the story of two pushers who went out in search of rednecks in the South.)

COMPARE THESE films to something like Ed Emshwiller's Relativity or Stan Brakhage's Window Water Baby Moving. The last time Bob White's Cd Red was shown here, people refused to leave the room after it was over. They wanted to be a part of the experience again. With that film it's easy to see why.

If you haven't had the opportunity to free your mind from the lulling, hypnotic visions of life a la the Hollywood version, you have a chance beginning on Oct. 9th.

This is the first of seven sessions in a Film Study Program being presented by the Madison Art Center as a part of its Fall Semester of classes regularly on Saturday evenings. The program being presented by the Madison Art Center as a part of its Fall Semester of classes regularly on Saturday evenings. The program, consisting of 50 efforts spanning the past 15 years of independent filmmaking, goes under the name of the "Woods Eye Film Program." There probably isn't another introductory set as suited for new audiences as these films are.

The L.A. Times wrote: "What a sampling of the short films in the 'Woods Eye' programs confirms is the immense range of attack and interest in the form. Indeed all that they can be said to have in common is brevity and vitality."

The series is assembled into six different programs. The first one will be presented on Oct. 16 and includes "Grateful Dead" by Robert Nelson, a $2,000 prize winning film "Anthology of Boats" by Fred Padula, "a comic document of a S.F. State College Design Class attempting to float its homemade cardboard fleet in the campus swimming pool while seriously interested U.S. Navy officers take notes; Hold Me While I'm Naked by George Kuchar, concerning the frustrations involved in filming a nude scene; and nine others.

The first meeting, Oct. 9th, is an introductory session with several area filmmakers present to talk about and exhibit their own works, plus the epic featurette, Death Follows the Strangler, written, directed, and starring the Art Center's "young filmmakers."

The fee for the entire program is three dollars and the enrollment will be limited. Contact the Art Center at 257-0158 for registration details.

Hoosiers Here Today

By KEVIN BARBER
Associate Sports Editor

And now we go into Round Two of this scheduled eight-rounder with underdog Wisconsin still reeling from that hard right hook of Northwestern's. The Badger Bomber is up in his corner, dancing, and appears to be completely recovered, if not tenacious.

But this round's opponent is different. Which might be good. And might not.

Indiana invades Camp Randall today with the biggest squad in the Big Ten. But strength isn't necessarily in numbers at this level, and Indiana, a team which most prognosticators figured to be the bottom club in the Big Ten, has only a 1-3 record for recommendations.

But the Hoosiers won-loss statistics could be deceiving. Although their three setbacks have all been shutouts, they have been beaten badly by only one team, Minnesota, 28-0. They held Syracuse to seven points and Baylor to ten, blowing numerous chances to score with untimely fumbles or interceptions.

THEIR STRENGTH is defense, and Indiana coach John Pont is not subtle in his praise. "I think our defense can keep us in the game with anyone," he said.

Indiana's pass defense is its strongest point, ranked statistically second nationally and first in the Big Ten. But the Hoosiers use only three people in their deep secondary, and they admittedly haven't faced a quarterback the likes of Neil Graff yet this season.

The offense is difficult to size up, depending on what is emphasized. They rolled up 26 points on hapless Kentucky, but haven't scored otherwise.

Yet the Hoosiers have outrushed four opponents, 574-573; outpassed them, 346-241; run 294 plays to opponents' 246; and have gained a first down margin of 57-41.

BUT QUARTERBACKS Greg Brown and today's starter Ted McNulty have teamed up for nine interceptions. Add seven fumbles to the mixture and you have a bitter dish. Scoreless turnover.

Should the game be a fingernail-biter, as games in the past have been, Indiana has one scoring statistic going for it. They've been mopped up in every quarter but the last, where they hold a 20-8 scoring bulge.

Wisconsin head coach John Jardine is in a different position from his Hoosier counterpart. Whereas Pont is trying to generate a potency which is most potential, Jardine is trying to muster an ability his team has shown earlier this season, but lost as of late.

ON THE WAY over the wall is another try after an extra-point or fieldgoal try at Camp Randall. Story on page four.

"Psychologically, this is a big game for us," said Jardine, who's latest crewcut seems to exemplify the old new look he wants. "We want to get back on the winning track and we have to pull momentum rather than ups and downs. We have to get in shape mentally and physically and go after people."

Wisconsin is not in an enviable position going into the game. Most fans expect them to beat the Hoosiers, tabbing the game one of the Badgers sure wins before the season began. Only a convincing win would rekindle the flame that Northwestern convincingly extinguished last week.

AND A LOSS to the underdog Hoosiers could drop Wisconsin down the tubes, just when they seemed to be emerging from those forlorn depths of the late sixties.

The Badgers only had their pride damaged against the Wildcats; they have no injuries going into the game. Indiana, although, suffered the loss of two starters last week against rugged Syracuse. Guard Gordon May will be out with a pinched nerve as will split end Terry Woodburn with a sprained knee.

Offensively, the Badgers had a bad day against Northwestern but still show good offensive statistics overall after four games.

Rufus Ferguson leads all Big Ten rushers with 385 yards for a 96.3 average per game. He also leads the league in touchdowns scored with six.

GRAFF DROPPED from second to fourth in the Big Ten quarterback statistics from last week but still is second highest in percentage of completions (.535) and third highest in gain per pass with a 6.6 average.

Flanker Al Hannah also held on to his pass receiving lead of last week, although he was mediocre against Northwestern. He has brought in 18 passes, tied for the league lead, and has the longest yards per pass average in the Big Ten, 15.6.

Jardine is blunt about his strategy against his strategy against Indiana. He wants to let the Hoosiers know who's boss right from the start. "If we can stop them after the kickoff then it would be a big psychological boost for us. We can't let them control the ball," he stated.

Wisconsin solidly lost the first round on points. There's the bell for the start of Round Two.
