Local Woman Tries to End Her Life By Poisoning

Despondent since the death of her husband who committed suicide several weeks ago in Neenah by taking poison, Mrs. Ben Cabot, 1120 N. State St., attempted to end her life the same way at 9:30 this morning at her home. She took a mixture of iodine and mercuriochrome and then ran across the street to the home of Mrs. George Schwab, 1125 N. State St. and told her neighbor what she had done. The police were notified and Mrs. Cabot was rushed to St. Elizabeth hospital. According to the attending physician, her condition is not serious.

Mr. Cabot several weeks ago took poison one evening while over at Neenah, staggered into Theda Clark hospital and collapsed in the corridor. He was dead before a physician could reach him.

Bechman Wins First Place in Bolton-Roth Contest

Vernon Bechman was given first place in the second annual Bolton-Roth extemporaneous contest by unanimous decision of the judges. The contest was held at the Appleton high school Thursday evening. Second place was given to Ellen Balliet, and third place to Fred Marshall. Judges were Roger Tuttrup, M. M. Hanson, and Abraham Sigman. Richard Balliet and Chester Dorschner were the other participants in the contest. Miss Ruth McKennan was the faculty advisor and coach. Bechman will represent the Appleton high school next Thursday night in the Fox River Valley Extemporaneous Speech contest at Sheboygan.

Melvin Bartz, a member of the class of 1928, presented a tribute in memory of the two outstanding members of the class of 1928, Ted Bolton and Carlton Roth, who lost their lives when their boat capsized during a storm on Lake Winnebago. Miss Helene Soffa and Allmore Aaron gave several vocal selections. They were accompanied by Miss Eloise Smeltzer.

Kimberly Man Ends Life By Jumping in River

Jacob Verbeten, 57, Kimberly, ended his life by leaping into the Fox river some time Wednesday night. He was missed at his home about 6:30 in the evening and when he failed to return home, a search was commenced. The search continued until midnight before the party decided to drag the river. Officer Van Lieshout, who led the search, discovered the body beneath the Kimberly bridge. It lay in about three feet of water. Verbeten had been in ill health for a long time. Survivors are two sons, Martin and John of Kimberly, and three daughters, all married, who live in Evanston. The funeral will be held at the Holy Name church in Kimberly Saturday.

Aldermen Vote "No" on Buying Superior Street Property For Free Parking Lot

Business before the common council on Wednesday evening was more or less of a routine nature, with no problems that brought forth much argument or discussion.

One of the most important items brought up for consideration was the resolution instructing the city attorney to proceed with condemnation proceedings against the Mueller and McCann properties in an effort to secure this property for parking grounds. The resolution was lost by a vote of nine to three, Aldermen Groth, Richards, and Thompson casting the affirmative votes. Mayor Goodland urged the council not to start the condemnation proceedings unless it desired to actually acquire this property. He pointed to the expense of the project, indicating that the cost of this property may be in the neighborhood of $15,000. Alderman Thompson spoke in favor of acquiring the property, declaring that the grounds, which include the old Superior street dump, is now unsightly and that the city is assisting in filling up the hole and in reality improving this property. He felt that this improvement should be for the city's benefit rather than for the owner, and that the land could be purchased more cheaply now than in the future. He said the longer purchase is postponed the more it will cost the city, and that now is the time to buy it. He declared the city must proceed with the condemnation proceedings and pay the court costs in order to ascertain the cost of the property. "If we have a parking problem, now is the time to begin to relieve it," Alderman Thompson stated in his plea for immediate action. Alderman Vogt said that he believed the city was courting a problem in its attempt to furnish free parking space. He pointed to the fact that other cities do not provide free parking lots, and that there is other space that can be utilized for this purpose. The city, he said, turned down other necessary improvements in an effort to carry out its economy program, and the purchase of this expensive property for a parking place was inconsistent with the program. The vote defeated the project.

A long report of the street and bridge committee was adopted. It provided for the employment of a sidewalk inspector, replacing of sidewalks in various parts of the city; opening of Drew street to the north limits of the city; that the city assume maintenance of a street north of Erb park from Oneida to Drew streets; preparation of plans for the extension of a storm sewer in Bellaire park from its present terminus to the river; retaining wall on Jackman street; changes in the arterial highway system, whereby the arterial on Rankin street from the south side of North street to College avenue will be removed, and the stop signs on the Lawe street corner of North street will be changed to stop east and west traffic on North street and the stop sign on N. Lawe street at the College avenue intersection will be changed to stop west bound traffic on College avenue; that school District No. 10 of Grand Chute be permitted to connect with the city sewage system, a fee of $50 to be charged for connection and a yearly charge of $50 for service be made; installation of a sewer on W. Washington street and paving the street from Badger avenue to Mason street; and surfacing of the intersection of Durkee and Franklin streets with black top paving.

Alderman Steinhauer offered suggestions for other arterial changes, including a stop at the corner of Alton and Lawe streets, which were referred to the street and bridge committee.

The fire and police committee recommended the purchase of a resuscitator and inhalator at an approximate cost of $375. The apparatus now in possession of the department, it was said, is unfit for use. Installation of water mains on W. Washington street was also recommended. Mayor Goodland asked for adoption of the report exclusive of the provision for purchase of a resuscitator. An aye and nay vote on this feature revealed only one alderman, Earle of the Second ward, opposed to the purchase.

The city attorney was instructed to procure deeds to property owned by Mrs. Mary Haug and to communicate with the Chicago and Northwestern railroad company relative to a small strip of land necessary for widening Memorial drive at the College avenue intersection. The engineer was instructed to prepare plans for the improvement of this street, and the matter was referred to the board of public works with power to act.

Property needed for opening a street in the Sixth ward, which was to have been purchased from R. S. Powell for $450, bears unpaid taxes for several years. The problem of clearing this matter was turned over to the street and bridge committee.

Appleton street property owners presented a petition providing for the installation of ornamental lights, similar to those in use on College avenue. Removal of wooden poles and gasoline pumps along the street was also asked, with the provision that owners of gas pumps be permitted to place them indoors, if they choose to do so. The petition was referred to the street lighting committee.

Mayor Goodland referred a resolution by Wassenberg and McGillan of the William Timm was appointed to membership on the city planning commission, his term to expire in 1934, and Dan Leppla was appointed to fill the unexpired term of F. S. Bradford. Three members were elected to the board of health by the common council. Mrs. D. P. Steinberg and Dr. Carl Neidhold were re-elected and Mrs. W. C. Felton was elected to succeed R. C. Blaine and LaFollete Will Review Over 70 School Bands on Parade in Menasha

Senator John J. Blaine and Governor Philip La Follette will be among those present in the reviewing stand to watch thousands of high school boys and girls, clad in gay, colorful uniforms, and tooting every kind of a tune producing instrument, pass by in the gigantic parade of the Wisconsin high school band tournament on the afternoon of Friday, May 15, at Menasha. This state band tournament at the neighboring city will undoubtedly be the biggest high school event ever staged in the central Fox river valley and the most colorful.

For months the people of Menasha have been preparing for this great statewide music classic, assisted by the citizens of their sister city of Neenah. Already 77 bands have registered for the great event and this represents a personnel of between 4,500 and 5,000 musicians. Appleton's high school band, under the direction of E. C. Moore, will make its contest appearance in the tournament at 9 o'clock on the evening of Saturday, May 16. Each band will have to play one selection assigned to it and one number of its own choosing. All selections for the contest are taken from a list of about 30 numbers sent out by tournament officials. There will also be sight reading contests Saturday morning and there will be solo contests and ensemble contests in great profusion.

Menasha people arranging for the tournament have found accommodations for 1,000 boys and girls in Neenah homes and for 2,200 more with Menasha families. Even so, the matter of accommodations for the vast number coming remains a very formidable problem for the Twin City folks to struggle with. About ten or twelve musical organizations are coming from the city of Milwaukee alone, but in this case the accommodations question already is solved. The Milwaukee musicians are coming up on two long special Pullman trains, one of which will arrive Thursday evening and the other Friday morning. The Pullmans will be spotted in the railroad yards and will serve admirably as hotels. Between five and six hundred boys and girls will come from Milwaukee.

The great state-wide invasion of Menasha will begin Thursday afternoon and evening and the contests will get under way bright and early Friday morning and continue for two days, with time out for the big parade Friday afternoon. Three auditoriums, the Menasha high school gymnasium, the St. Mary high school auditorium, and the Menasha auditorium will be used for the contests. Dances and entertainment will be given in these same three places Friday evening for the thousands of visitors.

Bands will form early Friday afternoon on Nicolet boulevard for the mammoth parade, which will be the high spot event of the tournament so far as the public is concerned. The Appleton band will not participate in the parade this year, due to the fact that it is scheduled to have a prominent part in the Treaty of Cedars dedication the following Monday afternoon and local school authorities did not think it advisable to close the high school both Friday and Monday afternoons.

After the scores of bands have taken their places on Nicolet boulevard the big procession will get under way and will cross the Washington street bridge, thence onto Main street and past reviewing stand where Wisconsin's governor and United States senator and other notables will be stationed. The stand will be located on the Main street square near Hotel Menasha. The line of march will continue to the Menasha high school athletic field, where the marchers will get together and play one number as a huge massed band of several thousand pieces. The number for this part of the program has not been announced, but this feature will without doubt be one of the most inspiring events ever seen or heard in this part of the state. Menasha people estimate there will be all the way from 20,000 to 25,000 people in their city Friday afternoon to witness the parade.

Another dance will be given Saturday for the visiting musicians but the place for this affair has not yet been decided. The tournament will be concluded Saturday evening with the awarding of prizes to the winning bands and soloists. This will take place at the Menasha outdoor stadium if weather conditions are favorable. If they are not the exercises and presentation of prizes will be in one of the city's auditoriums, either the high school gymnasium or the high school auditorium.

The competition in this state tournament is divided into four classes, or A, B, C, and D bands. The class A bands are those which have had more than thirty months experience, while the others are graded down according to the number of months experience they have had. Prizes will be awarded to the winner in each class and there will also be prizes for marching, numerous prizes for soloists and ensemble numbers.

Aldermen Vote "No" On Superior St. Parking Lot

Fourth ward providing for payment of taxes at two periods during the year to the finance committee. The water commission's report in regard to hydrants was referred to the fire and water committee.

The city water commission's recommendation for installation of feeder mains on Parkway boulevard from N. Morrison to N. Richmond streets; S. Drew street from E. Water street across Lawrence college property and across the Fox river to connect with mains on N. Island and Railroad avenues and on S. River street from Jefferson to Lawe streets was referred to the fire and water committee. Permission was granted for the lowering of the main on South River street and replacement of the six-inch main with eight-inch piping.

Petitions providing for opening W.

Summer street and widening of W. Seventh street near the courthouse were referred to the street and bridge committee.

Proposed ordinances on establishment of a set back line on N. Superior street; fees for transient merchants, and the milk test ordinance were referred to the ordinance committee. Fred Peterson was given permission to build beneath the sidewalk on Midway, where he is building an extension to his meat market, he to furnish bond for proper performance. Aldermen are to be supplied with copies of a proposed labor ordinance. Bids for construction of sidewalks were referred to the street and bridge committee and the proposed program of the Wisconsin Michigan power company for the installation of gas mains was approved.

A storm sewer on Verbrick street from E. Bouten street to Memorial drive will be built under the supervision of the city engineer, and the clerk was authorized to advertise for bids.

The board of public works and the city attorney were instructed to acquire twenty feet of land in block 7 south of College avenue on the Mueller property for $800, the land to be used for alley purposes.

New ordinances providing for a salary of $70 for bridgetenders and amending the junk ordinance were passed. Alderman Wassenberg voted against the $70 salary ordinance. The amendment to the junk ordinance provides that no persons or firms engaged in junk business six months prior to the passage of the ordinance, excepting those in the heavy manufacturing district, shall be denied a license. They are required to house the junk, and are given six months in which to clean up their property.

A problem presented itself relative to the N. Ida street pavement. New water and gas mains are being installed on the street and the advisability of paving the street at this time was questioned. The matter was referred to the Second ward aldermen.

A representative of the American Legion appeared before the council and asked for an appropriation for fireworks at the July 3 and 4 celebration being planned by that organization. A request was also made for a concert by the 120th Field Artillery band. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

THAT NORTH SIDE GOLF COURSE

Judging by the extent to which the recreational facilities of the Sixth ward are used by the public, it would admittedly be a wise move if the park board would acquire options immediately for a golf course in this same vicinity. Such a move would benefit a greater number than an enlargement just now of the present municipal golf course on the south side.

Erb park and the Roosevelt athletic field are used as extensively as any play center in Appleton. Every evening there are five or six baseball games in progress, and there is more extensive activity every Saturday afternoon and all day Sunday. Likewise the tennis courts and playground apparatus in the park are almost constantly in use. The wisdom of the city council and the park board in choosing this location is fully borne out by the response of the recreation seekers.

Even now golfers may be seen using the park to practice driving and putting. Expressions are heard many times of the desire to have a course located there. If the sentiment of residents of the northeastern section of the city were known, it would be universal in favor of a north side course.

There is no question about the feasibility of the north side location. It is within convenient walking distance for thousands of persons living in the First, Second and Sixth wards and many in the Fifth ward. The city has expanded northward rapidly within the last few years and new homes constantly are being added. Erb park has created a new residence section, as evidenced by the increasing number of new homes springing up in the surrounding area. Lots even are being sold outside the city limits north of the park in order to be near that scenic spot.

Land values are increasing each year where expansion is evident. The park board therefore ought to determine on a location and secure options while prices are still favorable. Even though it might be another year or two before a course could be built, the land should be assured now. There is no need of waiting until later to build the course, however, because it will begin returning a profit to the city the moment it is used. Petitions circulated by interested persons would bring a quicker response, because the park board would have a definite guide to public sentiment and surely would be willing to grant anything reasonable if requested by the majority.

FISHERMEN WHO TAKE BUT NEVER GIVE

Always taking and never giving is a poor policy in this old world of ours. When applied to the fisherman, it is like killing the goose that laid the golden egg. For is it not a golden sport to roam along Wisconsin's beautiful streams and lakes in health giving recreation while seeking to catch a few of the finny inhabitants of our waters?

Fishermen have been taking to the point where Wisconsin is moving distinctly backward as a fisherman's paradise. Automobiles and good roads have made access to fishing waters rapid and easy. Ingenuity of fishing tackle manufacturers has increased the ability to catch fish. Men today have more leisure time in which to indulge the sport of fishing.

Thus lakes and streams have experienced a demand far in excess of other years; a demand exceeding the supply. It is little wonder that the expression "fished out" is so common. Many are inclined to take that situation as a matter of course, yet it need not be thus if we give proportionately for what we take. We hear of streams in Europe that have been fished for a thousand years, yet yield to any expert of rod and reel today a full basket of the finest game fish.

Fishermen are now asked to give. A bill before the Wisconsin legislature asks a resident fishing license of one dollar a year from all males over eighteen years of age. The proceeds are to be used for replenishing Wisconsin waters with fish, for providing more fishing grounds, and for improving facilities already existing. Strange as it may seem, most of the work now being done in a limited way is financed by hunting licenses. The hunters pay the fee without any complaint, but receive little in return that increases the supply of wild fowl and other game.

Fishermen, on the other hand, will receive much for their dollar. The income will be sufficient to carry on a widespread program. Each man is contributing to something that will improve his sport by guaranteeing him an endless supply of fish in the future. It will mean that thousands of non-resident fishermen who now escape the fishing license will be obliged to make their contribution to stream preservation.

It has been argued that the workingman who goes fishing to supply his family table should not be obliged to pay for the privilege. The workingman today drives an automobile, yet nothing was said in his favor when a four-cent gasoline tax was imposed. He was willing to do his share to create good roads. He should be just as willing to pay his dollar once a year to create better fishing. If he does not invest in a conservation fund now, he may not have many fish for his table in the future. Whether conservation money comes from a fishing license makes no difference. It will be paid either there or in taxes. The state will go ahead with conservation regardless of this bill, and will require from general taxation what it cannot get through special sources closest to where the benefits lie.

Wisconsin must pass the license bill if it will save its tourist industry as well as its fish. Outsiders will not come here to waste their time on depleted streams. The dollar is too small to quibble about. The benefits are too great for any stretch of imagination.

The new outcroppings of fish stories from the opening of the trout season have nothing on the old ones.

Woe unto the Progressives if our taxes are higher after the legislature finishes its work. Of all parties, they have promised the most in economy for the benefit of the workingman and the farmer.

In Russia the farmers are given every facility by the Soviet government for large scale production. If they prosper, however, the tax collector steps in and takes everything they make. This is a moral to the American farmer who thinks he is persecuted.

It is a queer nation, this United States, that finances foreign industries so they can expand and then builds a high tariff wall so the manufacturer sits without the market he most depended upon.

This pressure from influential places to keep wages at their present level is extremely wise, but difficult. It will be an economic achievement if we can hold out until the depression is over and still maintain our splendid American standards.

There ought to be a national Memorial day for automobile victims. They outnumber war casualties so far that a day of mourning, with speeches and statistics, might bring some remedies.

Miniature golf will have its testing time this year. Was it a fad now passing, or will it stay with us as did croquet, pool and such games?

There are a million more men employed now than three months ago. That is a ray of sunshine.

Medical Missionary Speaks At M. E. Group Meeting

Dr. Mina Malek, Chicago, was the principal speaker at the group meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary society at the Methodist church Thursday. The morning session convened at 11 o'clock, at which time Mrs. Malek gave a short address. A luncheon was served at the church at 12:30 and the afternoon meeting was called at 2 o'clock. Dr. Malek gave an interesting talk on her experiences in German E. Africa, where she spent nine years as a medical missionary. Her husband served as a missionary. During the World war, Dr. Malek and her husband were taken prisoners by the British, though they were American citizens, because of their residence in a German province. They were separated and Mrs. Malek and her son spent three and one-half years in a British prison camp. When asked if this was time lost, she replied that it certainly was not. While there, Dr. Malek was the only woman in the entire camp who had a Bible, and a German woman had a German hymn book. The two learned each other's language and conducted services for the 4,000 prisoners in the camp. The missionaries are home now endeavoring to earn enough money to return to Africa to continue their missionary work. The Rev. Malek is serving a pastorate in Chicago, and Mrs. Malek is giving lectures for the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church. Seventy-five women attended the meeting, representing Appleton, Kaukauna, Green Bay, Neenah, Medina, New London, and Clintonville.

Mrs. O. D. Cannon presided at the afternoon session, and Mrs. W. S. Naylor conducted the forum after Mrs. Malek's talk. Three Lawrence college students, Esther Merkle, Margaret Briggs, and Roberta Burns, demonstrated the building of an arch, symbolic of the projects of the local women this year.

INSTALLMENT XIV

Pete Pitchlyn, famous Indian scout of a bygone day, had grown pot-bellied and flabby, now that the Indians were rotting on their reservations and there was no more work for him to do. He was a vast fellow, his height of six feet three now balanced by his bulk. Late in his hazardous career as a scout on the plains Pitchlyn had been shot in the left heel by a poisoned Indian arrow. It was thought he would surely die. This failing, it was then thought he would lose that leg. But a combination of unlimited whisky, a constitution made of chilled steel, and a determination that those varmints should never kill him, somehow caused him not only to live but to keep the poison-ravaged leg clinging to his carcass. Stubbornly he had refused to have it amputated, and by a miracle it had failed to send its poison through the rest of that iron frame. But the leg had withered and shrunk until now it was fully twelve inches shorter than the sound limb. He refused to use crutches or the clumsy mechanical devices of the day, and got about with astonishing speed and agility. When he stood on the sound leg he was, with his magnificent breadth of shoulders, a giant of six feet three. But occasionally the sound leg tired, and he would rest it by slumping for a moment on the other. He then became a runt of five feet high.

These two specimens of the Southwest it was that Yancey now approached, his step a saunter, his manner carefree, even bland. Almost imperceptibly the two seemed to stiffen, as though bracing themselves for action. In the old scout it evidenced itself in his sudden emergence from lounging cripple to statuesque giant. In the Spaniard you sensed, rather than saw, only a curiously rippling motion of the muscles beneath the smooth tawny skin, like a snake that glides before it really moves to go.

They stood, the three, wary, silent. Yancey balanced gayly from shining boot toe to high heel and back again.

Yancey put the eternal question of the inquiring reporter. "Well, boys, what do you know?"

The two were braced for a query less airy. Their faces relaxed in an expression resembling disappointment. It was as when gunfire fails to explode. The Spaniard shrugged his shoulders, a protean gesture intended on this occasion to convey to the beholder the utter innocence and uneventfulness of the daily existence led by Estevan Miro. Peter Pitchlyn's eyes, in that ravaged face, were coals in an ash heap. It was not for him to be seen talking on the street corner with the man who was asking a fatal question—fatal not only to the asker but to the one who should be foolhardy enough to answer it. He knew Yancey, admired him, wished him well. Yet there was little he dared say now before the reptilian Miro. Yancey continued conversationally:

"I understand there's an element rarin' around town bragging that they're going to make Osage the terror of the Southwest, like Abilene and Dodge City in the old days; and the Cimarron. I'm interviewing citizens of note," continued Yancey, blandly, "on whether they think this town ought to be run on that principle or on a Socratic one that the more modern element has in mind." He lifted his great head and turned his rare gaze full on the little Spaniard. His gray eyes, quizzical, mocking, met the black eyes, and the darker ones shifted. "Are you at all familiar with the works of Socrates—'Socrates . . . whom well inspir'd the oracle pronounced wisest of men?'"

Again Estevan Miro shrugged. This time the gesture was exquisitely complicated in its meaning, even for a low-class Spaniard. Slight embarrassment was in it, some bewilderment, and a grain—the merest fleck—of something as nearly approaching contempt as was possible in him for a man whom he feared.

"Yancey," said Pete Pitchlyn, deliberately, "stick to your law 'n."

"Why?"

"Anybody's got the gift of gab like you have is wastin' their time doin' anything else."

"Oh, I wouldn't say that," Yancey replied, all modesty. "Running a newspaper keeps me in touch with folks. I like it. Besides, the law isn't very remunerative in these parts. Running a newspaper's my way of earning a living. Of course," he continued brightly, as an afterthought, "there have been times when running a newspaper has saved the editor the trouble of ever again having to earn a living." The faces of the two were blank as a sponged slate. Suddenly—"Come on, boys. Who killed Pegler?"

Pete Pitchlyn vanished. Yancey and the Spaniard were left alone on the sunny street corner. The face of Miro now became strangely pinched. The eyes were inky slits. He was summoning all his little bravado, pulling it out of his inmost depths.

"I know something. I have that to tell you," he said in Spanish, his lips barely moving.

Yancey replied in the same tongue, "Out with it."

The Spaniard did not speak. The slits looked at Yancey. Yancey knew that already he must have been well paid by some one to show such temerity when his very vitals were gripped with fear. "You know something, h'm? Well, Miro, mas vale saber que haber." With which bit of philosophy he showed Miro what a westerner can do in the way of a shrug; and sauntered off.

Miro leaped after him in one noiseless bound, like a cat. He seemed now to be more afraid of not revealing that which he had been paid to say than of saying it. He spoke rapidly, in Spanish. "I say only that which was told to me. The words are not mine. They say, 'Are you a friend of Yancey Cravat?' I say, 'Yes.' They say then,

'Tell your friend Yancey Cravat that wisdom is better than wealth. If he does not keep his d—n mouth shut he will die.' The words are not mine."

"Thanks," replied Yancey, thoughtfully, speaking in English now. Then with one fine white hand he reached out swiftly and gave Miro's scarlet neckerchief a quick strong jerk and twist. The gesture was at once an insult and a threat. "Tell them—" Suddenly Yancey stopped. He opened his mouth, and there issued from it a sound so dreadful, so unearthly as to freeze the blood of any within hearing. It was a sound between the gobble of an angry turkey cock and the howl of a coyote. Throughout the Southwest it was known that this terrible sound, famed as the gobble, was Cherokee in origin and a death cry among the Territory Indians. It was known, too, that when an Indian gobbled it meant sudden destruction to any or all in his path.

The Spaniard's face went a curious dough gray. With a whimper he ran, a streak of purple and scarlet and brown, round the corner of the nearest shack, and vanished.

Unfortunately, Yancey could not resist the temptation of dilating to Sabra on this dramatic triumph. The story was, furthermore, told in the presence of Cim and Isaiah, and illustrated—before Sabra could prevent it—with a magnificent rendering of the blood-curdling gobble. They were seated at noonday dinner. Sabra's fork, halfway to her mouth, fell clattering on her plate. Her face blanched. Her appetite was gone.

It was all like a nightmarish game, she thought. The shooting, the carousing, the brawls and high altercations; the sounds of laughter and ribaldry and drinking and song that issued from the flimsy cardboard false-front shacks that lined the preposterous street. Steadfastly she refused to believe that this was to be the accepted order of their existence. Yancey was always talking of a new code, a new day; live and let live.

Sabra refused to believe that this business of the Pegler shooting was as serious as Yancey made it out to be. It was just one of his whims. He would, she told herself, publish something or other about it in the first edition of the Oklahoma Wigwam. Yancey stoutly maintained it was due off the press on Thursday. Privately, Sabra thought that this would have to be accomplished by a miracle. This was Friday. A fortnight had gone by. Nothing had been done. Perhaps he was exaggerating the danger as well as the importance of all this Pegler business. Something else would come up to attract his interest, arouse his indignation, or outrage his sense of justice.

She was overjoyed when, that same day, a solemn deputation of citizens, three in number, de rigueur in sombreros and six-shooters, called on Yancey with the amazing request that he conduct divine service the following Sunday morning. Osage was over a month old. The women folks, they said, in effect, thought it high time that some contact be established between the little town sprawled on the prairie and the Power supposedly gazing down upon it from beyond the brilliant steel-blue dome suspended over it. Beneath the calico and sunbonnets despised of Sabra on that first day of her coming to Osage there apparently glowed the same urge for convention, discipline, and the old order that so fired her to revolt. She warmed toward them. She made up her mind that, once the paper had gone to press, she would don the black silk and the hat with the plumes and go calling on such of the wooden shacks as she knew had fostered this meeting. Then she recollected her mother's training and the stern commands of fashion. The sunbonnets had been residents of Osage before she had arrived. They would have to call first.

She got out a plaid silk tie for Cim. "Church meeting!" she exclaimed joyously. Here, at last, was something familiar; something on which she could get a firm foothold in this quagmire. Yancey temporarily abandoned his journalistic mission in order to make proper arrangements for Sunday's meeting. Born entrepreneur, he took hold with the enthusiasm that he always displayed in the first spurt of a new enterprise. Already news of the prospective meeting had spread by the mysterious means common to isolated settlements. Nesters, homesteaders, rangers, cowboys for miles around somehow got wind of it. Saddles were polished, harness shined, calicoes washed and ironed, faces scrubbed. Church meeting.

Yancey turned quite naturally to the one shelter in the town adequate to the size of the crowd expected. It was the gambling tent that stood at the north end of Pawhuska avenue, flags waving gayly from its top in the brisk Oklahoma wind. For the men it was the social center of Osage. Faro, stud poker, chuckaluck diverted their minds from the stern business of citizenship and saved them the trouble of counting their ready cash on Saturday night. Sunday was, of course, the great day in the gambling tent. It was a question whether the owner and dealer would be willing to sacrifice any portion of Sunday's brisk trade for the furtherance of the Lord's business, even though the good will of the townspeople was to be gained thereby. After all, he might argue, it was not this element that kept a faro game going.

Yancey, because of his professional position and his well known power to charm, was delegated to confer with that citizen du monde, Mr. Grat Gotch, better known as Arkansas Grat, proprietor and dealer of the gambling tent. A little plump man, Grat, with a round and smiling countenance, strangely unlined. He looked like an old baby.

Yancey ordered his drink and invited Gotch to have one with him. Over the whisky Yancey put his case.

"Listen, Grat. The women folks have got it into their heads that there ought to be a church service Sunday, now that Osage is over a month old, with ten thousand inhabitants, and probably the metropolis of the great Southwest in another ten years. They want the thing done right. I'm chosen to conduct the meeting. There's no building in town big enough to hold the crowd. What I want to know is, can we have the loan of your tent here for about an hour Sunday morning for the purpose of divine worship?"

Arkansas Grat set down his glass, made a sweeping gesture with his right hand that included all that the tent contained.

"Divine worship! Why, h—l, yes, Yancey," he replied, graciously.

They went to work early Sunday. So as not to mar the numbers they covered the faro and roulette tables with twenty-two footboards. Such of the prospective congregation as came early would use these for seats. There were, too, a few rude benches on which the players usually sat. The remainder must stand. The meeting was to be from eleven to twelve. As early as nine o'clock they began to arrive. They came from lonely cabins, dugouts, tents, Ox carts, wagons, buggies, horsemen, mule teams. They were starving for company. It wasn't religion they sought; it was the stimulation that comes of meeting their kind in the mass. They brought picnic baskets and boxes, prepared for a holiday.

The town seemed alive with blanketed Indians. They squatted in the shade of the wooden shacks. They walked in from their near-by reservations, or rode their many horses, or brought in their entire families—squaw, papoose, two or three children of assorted sizes, dogs.

Sabra, seeing them, told herself sternly that she must remember to have a Christian spirit, and they were all God's children; that these red men had been converted. She didn't believe a word of it.

Rangers, storekeepers, settlers. Lean squatters with their bony wives and their bare-legged, rickety children, as untamed as little wolves.

Knowing Our Children Better

By

Edith D. Dixon

Seek Motive For Stealing

Children have various motives for stealing, and the first step in correcting the child who steals should be to discover the motive behind his acts.

Lena, 5 years old, was attending kindergarten. She persistently rifled the pockets of the children's coats in the cloak room, stealing such articles as beads, doll clothes, fruit, and even money. Unsuspected by the teacher at first, Lena carried away many things. But one day she was caught in the act of stuffing some doll clothes in her coat pocket, and after that whenever anything disappeared Lena was under suspicion.

The time came when Lena had to be searched every night before she went home, but even then she managed to secret articles on her person. The fact that the children had branded her a thief, and were more than ready to lay at her door the responsibility for the disappearance of any toy or article, did not seem to disturb Lena particularly. Her mother was unwilling to believe Lena capable of such deception, since she never brought home the spoils.

Why did she take things in the face of the teacher's scolding, the children's condemnation, and her mother's punishments, and what did she do with them? It took three months to find the answer. Then it was discovered that two girls, 9 and 10 years of age, were the recipients of the stolen articles. These girls admired Lena. They commented on her pretty curls and rosy cheeks. They gave her candy, they played with her, and took her about with them. She in return was willing to play the thief to satisfy them.

Lena was an only child. She had no playmates at home and her mother, who was busy working all day, had left her to her own devices. When the mother learned the truth she was able to substitute satisfying playmates for Lena among children of her own age, and to give her a few jobs in the home in order to supply the attention and recognition that Lena craved. When the teacher saw to it that Lena made a place for herself among the children of the kindergarten, and received recognition for legitimate behavior, the problem of stealing disappeared.

Dr. H. M. Wriston, president of Lawrence college, has urged seniors who plan to take up post-graduate work to do so next fall. Suitable positions are scarce, the president pointed out, and by continuing their education now, students may make leisurely and careful choice of studies and thus prepare themselves for opportunities which may be open to them later. Several new courses are included in the curriculum next fall, including a course in introductory English literature, and history and appreciation of music for liberal arts students.

The Cook's Corner

What Shall We Have For Dinner Today?

WEEDS WE SHOULD EAT

Among many interesting things gleaned from old cookery scrapbooks—when women still “kept house”—are some items on edible weeds that are most timely at this season when we are looking for green things that will do double duty as welcome changes in our list of foods and as spring tonics.

The medical powers and virtues of many “weeds” now known to be not only edible but also very palatable have been extolled for years. So it seems most reasonable to introduce them into our menus instead of waiting until our family physicians prescribe them as medicines, and by so doing enlist nature's help in the art of keeping our families well.

Dandelions

The dandelion has become so familiar as a green food, both for raw salads and cooked, that it is being cultivated (de luxe variety, of course) and listed in seedsmen's catalogs, but the wild variety will do as well, if carefully picked and prepared.

When cooked as greens dandelions should be first scalded to remove the excess bitterness, then stewed (like all other greens) slowly and in their own juices; then chopped fine and seasoned well with salt and pepper and butter. Bacon fat may be substituted for the butter and some like to cook a piece of salt pork with the greens.

For dandelion salad only the most tender young plants and hearts of older ones should be used. A good method of preparation is to scald the leaves by pouring hot water quickly through them, then crisping in ice water. Cook a few slices of bacon until crisp, then cut into squares. To three tablespoonfuls of the bacon fat a tablespoonful of vinegar and a dash of pepper should be added, this with the bacon being thoroughly mixed with the greens. Served at once with coarse whole wheat bread it makes a substantial luncheon or supper dish. The tiniest young leaves may be used in any green salad. Broiled finnan haddie with lemon egg sauce is delicious served on a bed of dandelion greens.

Cowslips

One of the first greens to appear on low wet ground is the marsh marigold, familiarly known as cowslip. Cooked and moulded, the cowslip makes a delicious salad, which should be served with boiled dressing and little balls of cottage cheese dusted with paprika. When used as boiled “greens” a dash of nutmeg may be added to the other seasonings with gratifying results; and the dish strewn with a little hard cooked egg at serving time. Some cooks also make a cream soup of this marigold, the method being like that for all vegetable cream soups.

Young tender shoots of nettle may be cooked as greens or even made into a special porridge with a cream sauce.

Establish a little patch of mint in your garden. It may be used in so many ways besides the familiar mint sauce for lamb; in lemonade, iced tea and a host of deliciously cool summer drinks and salads. Ices and jellies may be flavored with the leaves. Try adding a handful of the tender tops to the fresh green peas you are cooking for dinner, or add a bit to dried pea or white bean puree.

Mustard

Either white or black mustard may be used to advantage in the diet. You have seen it usurping grain fields and cultivated grounds, so you will be joyfully received if you ask permission to cut it.

When very young mustard makes a good salad in combination with greens of milder flavor like purslane, lamb's quarter, cabbage, string beans, peas or tomatoes. As a cooked green it is much sought after by special patrons of certain city restaurants.

Bacon, fish, or cheese sandwiches are greatly improved, according to some tastes, by the addition of a few mustard leaves dipped in French dressing.

Purslane and Dock

The succulent trailing “pusley” makes excellent greens accompanied by a piece of ham, bacon or salt pork. Good salad, too, dressed with rather highly seasoned French dressing and perhaps combined with sliced radishes or shredded green peppers; or it may be strewn with minced mint when it is served with roast lamb or cold ham.

The familiar sour dock, good from June throughout the season, makes an excellent green of tart flavor to serve with beef tongue, ham, corned beef, or other meats with which its flavor will harmonize. Moulded into individual salads and dressed with cooked dressing to which a generous amount of chopped ham has been added, dock makes a substantial luncheon dish.

A relative of dock, sorrel, used to be cultivated in old-time gardens, though now it is seldom found cultivated, but can be gathered in stubble fields, stony areas and along fence rows in two or three varieties. It may be cooked, used in salad alone or in combination with other greens, eggs, potatoes or fish. It makes a delicious cream soup much admired by the French and combines excellently with dandelions in cooked greens.

Plantain

Plantain is a familiar dooryard neighbor that may be used as a green, or combined with equal parts of shredded celery, a dash of minced green pepper and dressed with a French dressing to which a bit of Worcestershire and curry has been added.

Lamb's quarter is another mild-flavored green that used to be cultivated in old gardens like spinach is today. In the late summer it grows to a considerable height. Leaves, tender stems, and tops are usable.

Milkweed

Did you know that milkweed is one of the most delicious greens and that it may be used from the last of May on through the season? The young stalks or branches may be bunched and boiled like asparagus and served in the same ways; or boiled gently in a small amount of water, then chopped and seasoned.

Wintergreens

Then there are some little tricks with wintergreen. In the spring the tiny reddish “pippins” (wee leaves) are an unusual and delicious addition to fruit salad dressed with a French fruit dressing. It may replace mint in combination with fruits and nuts for salads. Cream cheese sandwiches with a thick sprinkling of minced wintergreen leaves are a novelty. Then there is a special wintergreen jelly you might like to add to your list. If so, write for the recipe and we'll gladly forward it. Please enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope.

We hardly need say that all these greens should be fresh, crisp, tender and immaculately clean before they are cooked or dressed as a salad. There is not space to describe them, but most of them are, or should be, familiar. If not, get acquainted with them. Then put on your hat, take a basket and go out and pick yourself a salad or a “mess o' greens”. It will add an entirely new fillip to your appetite and make you more appreciative of and familiar with the things old Mother Nature has provided for our sustenance and well-being.

Judge Theodore Berg granted a motion for non suit Thursday afternoon in the case of Floyd McGillan against Frank and Clara Schmieder, owners of property at the corner of Memorial Drive and W. Fifth St. The plaintiff contended that water had been allowed to drip from eaves, froze on the pavement, and caused an icy spot upon which he slipped and fell on December 22, 1930, sustaining a broken leg and other body bruises. McGillan sued for $937.50 damages.

Dr. Carl Neidhold was elected chairman of the board of health at an organization meeting of that group held at the city hall Thursday afternoon. Mayor John Goodland was elected secretary. Miss Alice Holton was reappointed city nurse; Dr. F. P. Dohearty was reappointed health officer, and Theodore Sanders was reappointed deputy health officer. Mrs. W. C. Felton is the only new member on the board, having been elected by the common council Wednesday evening to succeed R. C. Breitung. Mrs. D. P. Steinberg and Dr. Neidhold were reelected.

Automobiles driven by Norbert Van Roy, Kimberly, and William Bloomer, 208 N. State St., collided on Wisconsin Ave., between N. Drew and N. Durkee Sts., about 10 o'clock Wednesday evening. Miss Sylvia Geniesee, 15, Kimberly, an occupant of the VanRoy car, was cut about the forehead and right knee, and bruised on the right arm. Miss Violet Wingard, also riding in the Van Roy car, and the driver, were uninjured. Both cars were damaged.

Carl Hapala was picked up by the sheriff's department on E. Wisconsin Ave. Thursday night on complaint of residents along the street, who charged the man had entered several homes. According to information, Hapala has been moving about from place to place in Minnesota and Wisconsin. He is said to have entered only the homes where doors were open. He was to be taken into court today.

Junior and Senior Bands to Give Concert Tuesday

A demonstration concert in which just about all the young band musicians of the city will have a part is scheduled for next Tuesday evening at Lawrence Memorial chapel. The first part of the program will be given by the combined band classes of the junior high schools of the city. This junior high school organization which provides excellent material for the senior high school band in later years is made up of the best talent in the three junior schools and the organizations which appear Tuesday evening will consist of 90 pieces, according to E. C. Moore, director of public school music in Appleton.

The second part of the program will be given by the senior high school band and will consist largely of numbers which the band will play in its competition at the state band tournament May 15 and 16 in Menasha. The senior high school band is one of 72 registered in the state meet at Menasha. The concert next Tuesday evening is known as the annual demonstration concert, because it demonstrates the work accomplished in the junior high school band classes throughout the year.

Pat H. Kelly, 208 N. State street, charged with issuing a worthless check in payment of a Chrysler automobile purchased from the Gibson company, was arraigned in municipal court Thursday morning. Preliminary hearing was set for May 11 and Kelly, unable to furnish bail of $1,000, was committed to the county jail. He was arrested at his home Wednesday night by Sergeant John Duval and Officers Albert Deltgen and Lester Van Roy. Kelly purchased a car last Saturday and issued a check for $1150 on a Milwaukee bank in payment. The check was returned and a search was immediately started for Kelly. The automobile was recovered Tuesday after it had been towed from a highway near Green Bay to the Brown County Garage. It had been slightly damaged.

Laying of the cornerstone at the Lawrence college Institute of Paper Chemistry will be part of the commencement exercises at the college. The ceremony is to be held June 8, but as yet no definite program has been formulated. Steel week was started on the building this week and the skeleton of the first floor is partially completed. The building is to be completed about August 1.

The new catalogues were placed in circulation this week and appointments for spring registration have been listed. All students in the three lower classes are expected to register and place a tentative schedule of studies in the hands of their advisors before the summer recess starts. To the sophomores, especially, this time is a very important one because they will be lining up courses in their prospective major.

Tuesday afternoon the inter-fraternity relay was run off at Whiting field with the Delta Iota team showing its heels to the rest of the field by a safe distance. Sigma Phi Epsilon runners placed second while the Betas wound up in third position. The race was very interesting to watch although the eventual winners were never headed. With the relay out of the way there is only one more Greek sport to complete and that is baseball. At present the Sig Eps are out in front in the supremacy cup race with Delta Iota, Beta, and Theta Phi following in close order.

The baseball schedule nears the half-way mark with two undefeated teams—the Theta Phis and the Delta Iotas. The former crew have defeated the Betas and the Phi Taus while the latter aggregation has emerged with a clean slate after playing the Sig Eps, the Delta Sigs, and the Phi Taus. The entire list of games scheduled should be completed by the latter part of next week. All of the games so far have been fairly close, with the result in doubt until the finish. Interest among the groups is keen but at this stage of the chase there have been no actual physical combats between partisans of any team.

The "L" Club held its spring initiation Wednesday and from all reports it was a tingling success. Initiates included all letter winners during the past few months of school.

Fifteen Architects Want to Bid on Village Hall

Fifteen architects appeared before the meeting of the Kimberly village board last Monday evening to present plans and specifications for the proposed new village hall. After some discussion the board members decided they were not yet ready to select an architect, preferring to select a site for the new building first. Claude G. Cannon, village attorney, presented Ordinance No. 78 which would provide for bonding the village for $22,000, its share toward the cost of the new hall. The ordinance was adopted and forwarded to the attorney general for approval.

Action of the board resulted in the sending of a protest to the Outagamie county members of the state legislature, objecting to passage of Bill 248-S, now up for consideration. This measure would cut the utility tax to cities, towns and villages in half and thereby greatly decrease the revenue of these governmental units.

A petition for sidewalks from residents of S. Walnut street was presented to the board members and laid over until the June meeting at which time all petitions for walks and sewers will be acted on.

The village clerk was instructed to notify the county highway committee to draw up an ordinance placing a ten mile speed limit on the Kimberly-Vandenbroek bridge. It is said that heavy trucks weighing from five to ten tons now speed over the bridge and seriously damage the structure.

Instructions were given to the street committee to make a survey of drainage conditions on the south side of the village from Second street south to the railroad track with the assistance of Street Commissioner Van Lieshout and report back at the next meeting. The village clerk was instructed to notify all poor commissioners in various nearby communities to remove poor charges to their own cities or villages, because of the impossibility of giving employment to such people at a time when all people of the village are not employed.

The question of appointing a regular night policeman for the village was discussed, but no action was taken.

The Kimberly State Bank was made sole depository for all village funds and the bank will furnish a surety bond for $5,000 covering the village treasurer's deposits.

Firemen this week started the regular summer system of drills. Each shift is required to hold one or more supervised drills each week. After firemen have displayed proficiency in their work, drills are reduced to one per week. In the practice work, the firemen are required to lay hose lines, attach different types of nozzles and make varied hookups. Special ladder drills are held in the afternoon, while other drill work is conducted in the forenoons.

Flowers will be presented to all visitors on opening day.

Indians Will Take Part in Treaty Program

No event held in Appleton for some time probably is attracting as much attention as the dedication ceremonies planned for the afternoon of Monday, May 18, by Appleton Lions club. The historical marker commemorating the signing of the Treaty of the Cedars on September 3, 1836, will be unveiled at that time in the same natural amphitheatre near Little Chute where the Menominee Indians and the white settlers held memorable negotiations.

Erection of the large granite boulder on an eminence overlooking Highway 41 has been completed. The stone resembles an Indian arrowhead in shape. The side facing the roadway is flat so a large bronze tablet can be mounted on it containing an inscription concerning the historic importance of this spot, known in pioneer days as "The Cedars." The boulder is imbedded in a deep concrete base so it will stand firmly for many years to come.

Invitations have been sent to prominent persons all over the state, and to many local organizations. Members of the Lions club have been acting as "minute men" appearing at service club luncheons and other gatherings to give talks concerning the purposes and importance of the occasion. They have covered a large radius of territory in their efforts to attract a large crowd.

All school children in Appleton will have an opportunity to witness the ceremonies, because a half holiday has been granted. This was done because of the educational value of the exercise, in which interesting history of the early Fox river valley will be revealed. Schools in neighboring communities have been urged to suspend classes, or to send to Appleton at least those classes studying subjects dealing with the early history of the state.

According to tentative plans, the program will start at 1:30 in the afternoon with a concert by the high school band under the direction of E. C. Moore. The program proper will start at 2:30, with Dr. J. A. Holmes, general chairman, presiding. Dr. Louise Phelps Kellogg, of the Wisconsin Historical society, will give the details of the negotiations and consummation of the Treaty of the Cedars, and relate the dians sold 4,000,000 acres of land in the fertile Fox river valley to the white people. The Rt. Rev. Bernard H. Penning, president of St. Norbert college, will give the dedicatory prayer. The principal speaker has not yet been announced, as the arrangements are not final. Gov. Philip La Follette has been invited to attend but his presence depends upon legislative developments at Madison. Princess Alice Oshkosh, hereditary ruler of the Menominee tribe, and a great grand-daughter of Chief Oshkosh, will unveil the stone. An old Menominee Indian will speak in his native tongue telling what the treaty meant to the tribe. Young Menominee warriors in their feathers and paint will stage a war dance. Musical numbers will be interspersed with the speeches and other incidents.

Ample parking space will be available for automobiles right at the scene of the dedication. Highway 41 will be closed, by permission of authorities, until the exercises are concluded.

Local Reserve Officers Will Attend Spring Round-up

Half a dozen regular army officers, National Guard and reserve army officers of Appleton will attend the annual spring round-up and contact camp of the state department of the United States Reserve Army Officers' association at Madison Saturday. Various phases of military activity will be featured, and many prominent army officers will take part in the program. Major General Charles O. Summerall, formerly chief of staff of the United States army, recently retired from active duty, will be the principal speaker. Artillery maneuvers will be supplied by the 2nd battalion of the 3rd Field Artillery, U. S. A. minus battery F, which will camp in Madison over the weekend as it marches from Fort Sheridan to Camp McCoy, Wis., for summer training duty.

Ralph Bewick, nine year old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Bewick, probably saved his mother's life early Wednesday morning after fire broke out in a clothes closet at the Bewick home, 116 W. Atlantic street, and flames in a short time trapped Mrs. Bewick in the room. The fire was believed to have resulted from an electric cord attached to an outlet in the clothes closet. Mrs. Bewick discovered the fire and attempted to throw burning clothing from the room. Flames from the blazing garments ignited the rug and in a few minutes the room was filled with smoke and flames. The boy summoned the fire department, and when Assistant Chief Schwahn entered the room on the second floor where the fire occurred, Mrs. Bewick was found in a seemingly dazed condition, with her hands badly burned. She was also burned about the face and feet. Chief George McGillan summoned a physician and an ambulance and the injured woman was taken to the hospital. The fire was extinguished with chemicals, after only slight damage had been done to the building.

What They Say

Editor, Appleton Review:

What Mr. D. G. Rowell said in a letter to your paper about getting some action on new industries, and your editorials on this subject ought to stir up our citizens to do something.

We often hear criticisms of the Chamber of Commerce because they do not get new industries for the city, but as far as they can go is to investigate those that want to come here. They can't be a money raising organization for industries that need capital, because the members would not want anything done that looks like speculation.

If the citizens got together in a general committee such as you suggest, more could be done. The chamber of commerce could be represented on this committee and give the benefit of its experience and investigation service, but if it were a question of raising some money, the general committee could take this up with interested people and not be representing any one organization.

I think the general industrial committee should be organized right away and see what can be done. Nobody is doing anything now and all we have is talk. Other cities get new industries. We can too.

—B. O. Oster.

Editor, Appleton Review:

As a taxpayer of the city of Appleton, I don't think it is right for our city council to agree to fix up the street north of Erb park and look after it in the future.

This street is all for the benefit of the people that bought lots from a farmer whose land happens to front on that street. Those who bought the lots went outside the city limits because they could buy cheaper there and wouldn't have to pay the city taxes.

Now if people want to build houses out there, they shouldn't expect to have any city improvements. The rest of us paid more for our property because it was inside the city, and we pay for our streets, sewers and everything else in our taxes.

It is not fair for anybody to dodge the city taxes and then try to get the benefit of city conveniences while living outside. Next thing the city will be finding a way to put in sewer and water for these folks. The town of Grand Chute gets the taxes from these people. They get more taxes than the farmer paid on this same land because each lot has a price on it to assess from. Let Grand Chute spend a little of these taxes to make streets for the people that live there. Keep the city tax money inside the city limits where it belongs.
