THE EVENING WISCONSIN CO.
MILWAUKEE.

Dedication.

TO THE BOARD OF REGENTS, FOR ITS GENEROUS SUPPORT, TO THE PRESIDENT AND FACULTY, WHO HAVE GIVEN THEIR HEARTY
CO-OPERATION,
TO THE CLASS OF NINETY-FIVE AND ITS BADGER BOARD, WHO REN-DERED VALUABLE ASSISTANCE IN SHOWING US WHAT NOT TO DO,
TO THE JUNIOR CLASS, WHICH ELECTED US TO THE BADGER BOARD,
TO OURSELVES FOR SERVICES RENDERED,
THIS BOOK IS AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED AND DEDICATED.

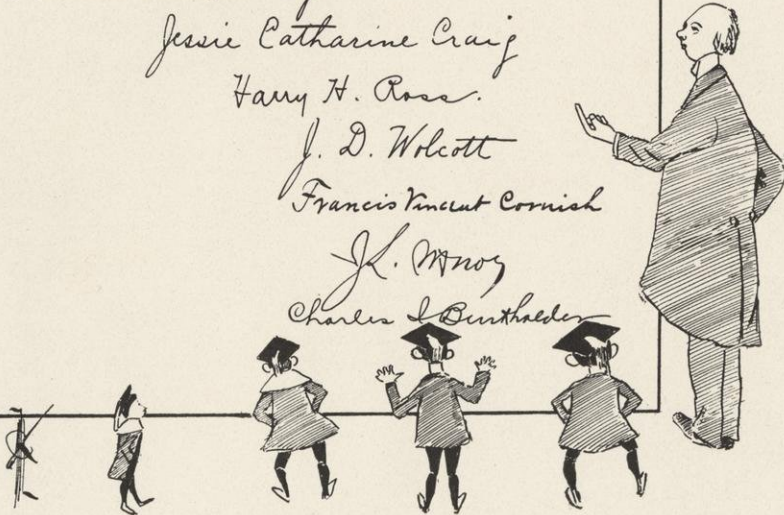

PROLOGUE.

*Accept, dear friends and critics, this, our book.
Scan well each page ; as in a mirror look.
Here you may see a mimic counterpart
Of what you think lies hidden in your heart ;
Your hopes and aspirations, doubts and fears,
Your longings and aversions ; here appears
Your wit, and your wit's opposite ; these all
Are mirrored clearly in our book so small,
As in a pool, made by the summer shower,
You see the heavens, your face, the grass and flowers.
Look, dear critics, then, with lenient eyes ;
You see yourselves, yourselves you criticize.*

History.

The fourth and last year of the Class of '95 is drawing to a close—the fourth and last year of our apprenticeship to these masters of learning. The methods of training have changed since we entered college. As Freshmen we were under the old régime, when a course in elocution and rhetorical was deemed essential. The work of that year seems easy in retrospect, but we were glad enough then to refresh ourselves with class parties and with our Freshman reception.

With the advent of a new president came certain changes, and as Sophomores we passed through the transition period. Now, it was a year of rhetoric that we needed as a solid basis for further work, a course in French irregular verbs to train our memories, and synoptical lectures weekly to broaden our minds. Again we sought recreation in a class reception, and toward the end of the year in meetings for the election of a Badger Board.

As Juniors we passed into the new order of things, and our work was pleasant, for it was of our own choosing. We were no longer one in our work ; we had begun to specialize. Some of us followed philosophy, some the sciences, others the classics, and still others literature. The year passed uneventfully for us, and we thought not of the coming thesis, unmindful of the warnings of our '94 friends. Now we are Seniors. We are still pursuing our chosen work, but Thesis haunts us, waking or dreaming. But it will not be long before the typewriter will be busy, and a little later the library will receive a great addition to its classics.

Our apprenticeship will soon be over. We must pass from beneath the kindly supervision of our instructors, and start out for ourselves in the busy world. How we shall succeed we cannot tell. We can only keep before us our homely yet expressive motto, and resolve that "No matter how hard the nut we'll crack it."

History.

For the third time in the course of its eventful history, an historian of the Class of '96 is called upon to sound its praises, to record victories and to explain defeats ; to hold the mirror to our virtues and throw the mantle of charity over our defects ; for surely charity should begin at home.

The past year might be said to have been "most passing strange," that is, the strangeness lay in "passing." On the field, as in the class-room, the men of '96 have been a host, and base-ball, foot-ball, and field and track events have furnished cause for frequent sounding of our slogan.

Through the years as verdant Freshmen and awe-inspiring Sophs, this class has followed tradition and played each part allotted. And now we find ourselves ranked "Juniors." Surely none so bold to hold we be not worthy of the name. We have lost the stare of inquiry and dropped the swagger of conscious superiority, and the mantle of dignity that now adorns our shoulders, doth it not become us?

The two years, wherein the under classman feels convinced the sum and substance of human understanding has fallen to his lot, have passed, and '96 has begun that final process of unlearning what she had heretofore acquired. We are glad to be relieved of the load, for we did acquire a precious deal.

We should be glad to chronicle each event that has marked the progress and added to the glory of our class, but modesty forbids—so does lack of space, as well as consideration for the feelings of men of other classes whose glories would seem small in comparison with the greatness of the class of '96.

They tell us that we must soon pass away (but it shall be as time doth pass and not by force of "cons"), and that which we are, others have been and still others shall become. The Class of '96 shall always stand in records, in the class, on the field and in society, sans egal.

History.

Fortunate, indeed, is the scribe to whom falls the task of writing the life story of the Class of '97! In his hands lies the power to add another spray to the laurel-wreath of the Class by leading it on to the accomplishment of a great reform. We allude to the needed change in the character of class histories. Surely the substitution of eulogy for history, of panegyric for chronicle, has endured long enough, and surely it is fitting that the pioneer in this movement should be '97, whose career, simply and plainly told, is so far above all others that to praise is to "gild refined gold."

Realizing the worth of its achievements in the short year and a half of its existence the class would prefer to silently point to its record and pass on ; but while this would be all-sufficient for the Sophomores themselves, it might not be intelligible to others, and '97 has always tried to remember that there are other classes in the University.

Fortune has smiled upon our work in athletics. After the cane-sprees at the mid-winter meet, we proudly wrote "won by '97." Ours was the pennant at the annual field-day, ours the honors of the spring regatta, and for us the interclass field day was a field day, indeed. Then the cane-rush, by which we celebrated our victory in the regatta, must not be forgotten. It was an informal affair, but very enjoyable—very! At least, we found it so. Ninety-seven furnished six men for the track team sent to Chicago, three on the 'Varsity crew and four on the foot-ball eleven. In fact her representatives are found in every department of the athletic life of the University, ably sustaining the honor of the class.

Our efforts in other directions have been no less successful. We have done our whole duty toward '98, and realize that whatever can be said in praise of that class is due to us. Without our assistance in electing and properly inaugurating the president, the first Freshman class-meeting would have been a dismal failure. The amount of water used on that occasion will only be equaled by the tears of gratitude which the Freshmen will shed when they appreciate the value of our services. The enlargement of the shops was a graceful tribute to the Sophomore engineers, which we gratefully acknowledge. We also desire to express our appreciation of the faculty's recognition of our phenomenal work in hygiene. In sparing succeeding classes the humiliation of trying to reach our standard we see a great, though not undeserved, compliment to ourselves.

History.

On a sunny morning in the month of September, eighteen hundred ninety-four, there was heard a hurrying and a rushing to and fro of strangers, strangers to the ancient halls and corridors of Wisconsin's University.

Who were these strangers, three hundred fifty strong, marshaled near the office of the registrar? They were Freshmen, young and ardent; Freshmen of the class of ninety-eight.

Whence came they? Let the answer be from "Senioratha:!"

“From the hamlets at the cross-roads,
 From the great lakes of the Northland,
 From the land of the Wisconsin,
 From the land of states united.”

Why came they here, these Freshmen of ninety-eight, stronger and larger than any class gone before?

They “came because of thirst for knowledge—
 Came because of reputation,
 Reputation of Wisconsin,
 Of her mighty school of learning.”

And they will stay until their burning thirst is quenched, until they know the reputation of Wisconsin’s “mighty school of learning.” They will stay, ever stronger and advancing, until the close of ninety-eight, until the eve of the coming century.

Then they will scatter to the Northland, to the Southland, to the East and to West lands, to the homes from whence they came; spreading fame of Wisconsin, boasting of their knowledge, of their strength and muscle, showing that they were not quenched by water—water thrown by the mighty Sophomores.

As the closing years of the nineteenth century see these Freshmen enter the honored halls and portals of Wisconsin’s University, may the opening years of the twentieth century see them enter a wider world with higher hopes and broader aims, yet bound together by the same friendships until that hour comes which must rend their links apart,

“Though years on years have forged the chain.”

History.

Less than two years have passed since the members of '95, College of Law, began to grope among the countless, yellow-bound, compendiums of disputes adjusted, which form the great pedestal above which "Justitia" holds her scales. From the force of circumstances our efforts have been mainly preparatory; we have sought to deduce living principles applicable to the hour from the quondam dissertations of periwigged Lords of England and American Judges, that the full enlightenment of the past might be ours when it shall be our turn to apply and add to the accumulations of legal dogma. Hence, to those who would hear a record of deeds accomplished, the history of the Class of '95 may have less interest than to those "who listen with credulity to the whispers of fancy, and expect that age will perform the promises of youth." Still we have a past of which we are proud, and upon that may fairly base a few predictions of the future.

The Class of '95 has played a more prominent part in the University world than any preceding law class. This has been due to two causes—to the individual members themselves, and to the new conditions which have surrounded the school itself. '95 was the first class to enter the new law building as Juniors. The removal of the College of Law from the Capitol to its own home, among the other college buildings, gave to the law students a feeling of college spirit, the realization that they are an integral part of a great University—a feeling which has of former years been sadly lacking—and they have assumed in University councils a position compatible with the dignity of a great professional school. SENIOR LAW FOOT-BALL TEAM.

new Gymnasium, too, was completed "in our time," and the Class of '95, feeling in common with other students the new impetus given to athletics, can boast far more than her proportional number of successful representatives in the arena.

Each fall it becomes the somewhat painful duty of the Senior Law Class publicly to chastise the verdant Juniors upon the gridiron. This duty, of course, '95 performed with legal precision. Under the sagacious directions of our foot-ball veterans, Ikey, Bolzy, and Bunge, the Seniors, despite the furious and obnoxious bellowings of one, Freddy Kull, did calmly and deliberately dust the campus with eleven chosen Juniors, and did otherwise chastise them to their great benefit. Some authorities hold that Katz was our mascot, but the weight of authority goes to show that the active agency in overcoming the Juniors was the appearance of Shimunok on the field (this sentence to be interpreted in its more charitable sense). But it is not at foot-ball alone that '95 excels, we have champion boxers, wrestlers, swordsmen, etc., besides accurate rubber throwers, long distance missile projectors, and jugglers verborum numerosi. We ought here to especially mention Flunk-Ever Carl Heim, our fencer, who successfully parried the point of all questions put to him, and Monsieur Oleson, the French gentleman from Nebraska, who, during one memorable intermission, gave battle to and overcame a certain turbulent Junior, and was therefore carried in triumph upon the shoulders of his admiring classmates. What few defects we last year had, happily have been nearly all rectified, owing to the untiring efforts of our gentle monitor, Georgie Katz. To see him bending gracefully and smilingly over our "sister-in-law," one would hardly suppose that his wee little body contained a censorial spirit stern enough to take even the Dean to task (assisted always by his partner in objections, Louis Myers) for misinterpreting the law. The judgment roll of the world's great reformers must soon open and let in the name of Georgie Katz. The class was very fortunate at the beginning of the year in receiving an "enlightened contingent" consisting of M. K. Riley and some others, which greatly improved the ventilation, and to which was appended one Rogers, a verbose young man who gambles in single tax theories and other futurities. The generous offer of one of our "enlightened contingent" to become president directly upon his arrival, was graciously declined, and we chose our leader from beneath the beetling brow of Bunn.

All these favorable conjunctions make us sanguine of the future. What wonderful and unsuspected possibilities may not the massive head of Sedgwick have within it, should he ever devote it to the study of the law. Spectacles give the appearance of wisdom, if removed before studying they will not injure the eyes. He, yonder, with the shade upon his lip is Woolsey, called the lionlike, before whose impetuous vehemence jurors are destined to slumber and by their verdict against him show that even jurors may err. The achievements of the past seem trifling when compared with the possibilities of some of the great men of '95. When Sheridan was borne fainting from the House of Commons after his arraignment of Warren Hastings, the excitement was so intense that no one else could get a hearing. Yet we are confident that Elward will be borne out long before he has completed his first arraignment and popular excitement will decree that he himself shall never get another hearing. The gentleman in front is the future Chief Justice Baker, of small stature, but great mind. He reads law with a yardstick, his stint being one foot a day, from where he last left off. As by this means he has now read all the books in the library in order, he amuses and instructs himself at present by transcribing one hundred pages of the statute per diem. He and Aarons, whose greatness likewise does not extend to his physical presence, sit on the front seat in order that they may not be overlooked. Not alone as lawyers is our future great, we have coming statesmen. What Senior, at the late parade in honor of McKinley, but felt a glow of pride as he saw Clark and Shimunok ride gallantly down between the line of red umbrellas tossing in adulation and who could doubt that but a few years would pass ere these gentlemen would exchange their saddles for seats in the carriage behind. Some future bard may sing

A band of freaks marched down the street
 With Shimunok riding ahead ;
Chloupek, Orvis, Walker and Waite
 Formed his chiefs subordinate,
 With Shimunok riding ahead.
A crowd of kids came out to meet
 Said Shimunok riding ahead.
Spuds and cans busted the fake ;
They shipped the freaks across the lake
 With Shimunok riding ahead.

We might mention many more whom posterity will call great—Lees, Richmond (busted politically), Wartner and others. One epitaph we see already written—

Here lies hard old Lawyer Dil, who told a heap of lies,
He drove his clients all to —, garnished then the gates of Paradise.

However bright the future prospects of '95 may be, it will be with sadness that we go out from the class-room for the last time, and in success or failure we can only think with feelings of sincere gratitude of those instructors who sought to make us wiser and better than we are.

History.

With wild, disheveled hair, and starting eyes, he rushed upon the campus; and, as he passed, borne faintly on the wind, came back these exclamations: "Forty bisons bellowing at once—reverberating detonations—ponderous as the thunderroll of an earthquake—tottering roof—walls of Jericho—" Was he insane? Had Erinys with frowning face laid hold on him? Had he a home across the blue waters of Mendota? No! gentle reader, he was a stranger at U. W. and had paid his first visit to the Law Building while the Class of 1896, College of Law, University of Wisconsin, (as they love to call themselves) were reciting to Prof. C— in contracts.

The historian of this class finds no easy task awaiting him. He must truly set forth their deeds, and add thereto, from the rich stores of his imagination, wit and mirth, in language worthy Macaulay or Lord Byron. And if he succeed, great indeed may be his reward, in Heaven, but on earth shall he have neither peace nor good will till 96's "BADGER" is lost in the cobwebbed vaults of memory.

Though only a few short months have gone since first they came together, yet some strange and curious things have happened to the junior law class. On one day only has defeat spread her gloomy mantle over them—on that day, when, struggling hard against the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," and the coaching of "Ikey," they contended with the irreverent Seniors on the foot-ball field. 'Twas a hard fight, but science and skill were no match for envious Fate, and, like Paris of old victorious over Achilles, the Seniors retired—ignominious masters of the field.

But there was another day, the bright sunshine of which made ample amends for such defeat. The love and affection of the Law Faculty for '96 was shown by the cordial invitation extended to certain members of the class by J. M. O—n to visit him in his office. The Seniors, maliciously envious of the high esteem in which this class is held, caused to be published in a city newspaper an account of the friendly call which seemed to place an entirely different meaning on the affair. But we assure our readers this account is correct.

One night in the history of this class deserves to rank with these days. One of the youngest and most innocent of our members, whose knowledge of Domestic Relations excites the wonder, admiration and envy of all the rest of us, was on trial for the wanton destruction of a neighbor's geese. The court-room was crowded, and with bated breath the people listened to each decision of the Judge, each answer from every witness, each kick from the attorneys, knowing well that trembling in the balance hung the fateful decision of the jury. The defense was insanity and delusion, and the bearing of the prisoner, the able efforts of L—tsch and Sp—r, his counsel, and the sworn statement of the latter (who was a goose expert, having killed a hundred tame geese and shot at two wild ones) that he could not tell the difference between tame and wild geese a few yards off, convinced the jury of the justness of the defense, and amid loud applause the accused was acquitted.

The short existence of the class has not given time to make sure just what our brilliant future will be, but that it will be brilliant the personnel of '96 leaves no room for doubt. (Of this, indeed, the class yell is sufficient evidence.) At one end stands the ever-present W—rd—n, who, though the least in size, on roll call can answer from fifty seats at once. At the other extreme we have the choice Kull of center rushes, the bulwark of the foot-ball team, who shows in class the same disregard for legal verbiage, that on the gridiron field he feels for his opponents. From one of our Milwaukee members, who even in Pabst brewery is always Dr—y, come questions which show an earnest search for knowledge and a deep appreciation of legal problems with a masterly comprehension of the easiest way to solve them. And our genial Librarian, whose dagger (ever ready for the fray) he sometimes finds too dull, has already learned that steel is sharper than wit.

We have some other members, but they keep the even tenor, and bass, of their sway, and need no other commendation, unless we except A—d—s—n, G. E., who deserves a medal for his cheering and never-failing presence in the class-room.

But to appreciate this class you must see them in their class-work. Note how delicately they appreciate jokes at which the very dogs do howl; see in what solemnity they bear the wakeful trousers of the youngest of the Faculty; in pity mourn as from the sea of Real Property Prof. O—n hooks them out—victims to a modern Isaak Walton. Observe all these things, and then in admiration lift your hat to the Law Juniors of U. W. Here we must leave them, ending, as does their yell, with a —!

BIOGRAPHIES.

John Charles Freeman.

PROFESSOR FREEMAN comes of good Puritan stock; one Edward Freeman, his grandfather of the eighth generation, in the year 1637 led fifty-eight families into the New World, and planted the town of Sandwich, Mass. This ancestor seems to have been a man of substance, since the records of Lynn show that he presented to the Lynn colony twenty corselets, or pieces of plate armor, brought with him from England. He loved freedom, too, for as the aforesaid records show, he determined that the sorely persecuted Quakers should enjoy all the privileges of the colony. The farm on which Edward Freeman settled is still in the possession of the Freeman family.

John Freeman, the son of this Edward, was deputy of the general court for seven years; he married Rebecca, the daughter of Governor Prince, of the Massachusetts colony. The mother of Rebecca Prince was of a "Mayflower" family. The Freemans were connected by marriage and by friendship with the Otises and Adamses, and with them were active in the inauguration and prosecution of the Revolutionary War.

Professor Freeman was born in Broome County, N. Y., February 14, 1842. That he was a precocious boy may be inferred from this: He prepared for college; studied medicine for nearly two years; was principal of the Kinderhook Academy, of New York, for two years, from 1858 to 1860; and then, in 1861, when but nineteen years of age, enlisted as a private in Company F, Twenty-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry.

He served in the ranks, re-enlisted at the expiration of his term of service, and on September 17th, 1863, was commissioned captain of Company M, First New York Veteran Cavalry. He led a regiment, under General Sheridan, in the battles of the Shenandoah Valley. In April, 1865, he commanded the raid on Lewisburg and Covington, Virginia. In the engagement at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia, he was in command; with two regiments he routed the rebel forces, took two thousand prisoners, including General John McClelland, the commanding general.

The war ended, and now to complete his education. He entered Michigan University, ranking with the classical sophomores, and was graduated with the A. B. degree in 1868. He at once became assistant professor of Greek in the Chicago University, and held the position for six years. In 1874 he became professor of Latin in the same institution, and three years later, in 1877, was transferred to the chair of English literature and rhetoric. This position he held until January, 1879, when he was elected professor of English literature in the University of Wisconsin. He entered upon the duties in September, 1879. In 1871, while assistant professor of Greek, he was graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary. He received the honorary degree of LL. D. from the University of Chicago in June, 1880. Since his connection with the University he has made several voyages to Europe, and has also traveled extensively throughout the United States, mainly in the West.

As a teacher of English literature Dr. Freeman has had a full measure of success. He is exact, popular and inspiring. He had seen the classic places of the Old World, and these mighty names in literature are not merely names to him, but spirits that still live to animate these present times. For himself, he believes that his most successful work has been done as a teacher of the Greek language. He edited, in 1872, an edition of Xenophon's Memorabilia; also in the same year the Dialogues of Lucian, which have found an extensive use in classical schools.

The exactions of his profession and the demands upon his time for public addresses have left him little leisure for the use of the pen. He was for one year editor of the Michigan Magazine, and he has for a long time been an occasional contributor to educational and political papers. On the whole, however, he is to be reckoned as a speaker rather than a writer. It is as an orator that Dr. Freeman has won his most gratifying successes. For sixteen years the state, in a large sense, has been his class-room. He has brought the University to the special notice of nearly every city and village in the state by evening lectures; to many places he has been called again and again. No other professor of the University is more widely known throughout the state. The service is important; the literary side of the University, as well as the mechanical and agricultural, should be presented to the people.

As a lecturer he is both wise and witty. He sees things in the concrete, and is picturesque. Through anecdote and illustration he holds his ideas before the mind. He has the kind of memory we all long for; he cannot forget. A friend tells the following: On the professor's last trip to Europe, a boastful Englishman on board the steamer was sneering at American culture, and offered to wager that no American on board could repeat two successive lines of any great English poem, he, the Englishman, to name the poem. A gentleman accepted the wager, and called on Prof. Freeman to stand for the culture of America. The Englishman named Chaucer; and, to the Briton's utter amazement, the professor recited verbatim the whole of the Knight's tale. With such a memory how could his mind be otherwise than full? His lectures and his writings are crowded with apt quotations and happy allusions, suggesting the literary acquisition of a Lowell or an Emerson; and then, through all, fine humor and wit; for it bubbles and flows as well as flashes. He lectures on many themes. Perhaps the most popular ones are on his travels and on England's literature and her literary men. His delivery is so simple and unpretentious, so easily it wins its way, that we forget to call it eloquent. We go up with him to the Rhine or through the Western Wonderland, the Yellowstone Park, or live through the times of the fathers of English literature, and are always charmed and instructed.

Charles Richard Van Hise.

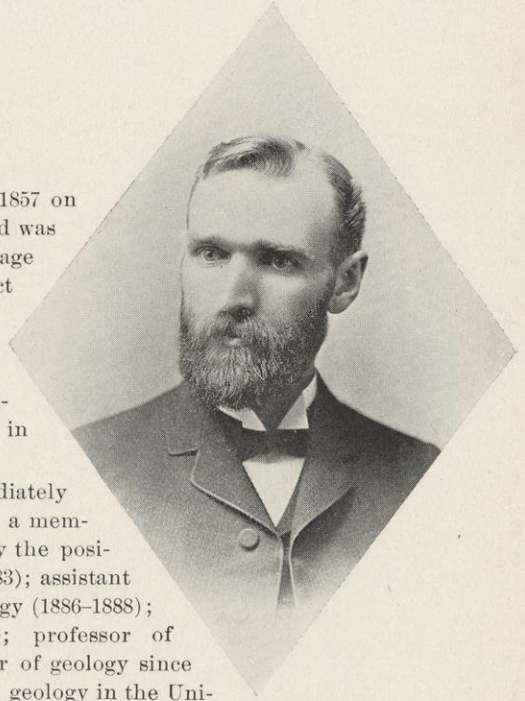

PROFESSOR CHARLES RICHARD VAN HISE was born in 1857 on a farm in Fulton, Rock County, Wis. His early boyhood was spent on the farm. Later the family removed to the village of Milton, where his education began in the district school. He attended the high school and seminary at Evansville; entered the University of Wisconsin in 1874, and graduated in 1879, having taught school during 1876-7. Professor Van Hise graduated in the Metallurgical Engineering Course; took the degree of B. S. in 1880, M. S. in 1882, Ph. D. in 1892.

He entered the faculty of the University immediately after graduating, as instructor. He has, therefore, been a member of the faculty for fifteen years, holding successively the positions of instructor in chemistry and metallurgy (1879-1883); assistant professor of metallurgy (1883-1886); professor of metallurgy (1886-1888); professor of mineralogy and petrography (1888-1892); professor of Archaean and applied geology (1890-1892), and professor of geology since 1892. He is also non-resident professor of pre-Cambrian geology in the University of Chicago.

Parallel to the work of Professor Van Hise in the University is that of research in geology. He was assistant on the Wisconsin Geological Survey in 1881-2, and assistant on the U. S. Geological Survey from 1883 to 1888. In both of these positions his work was in the division of the late Professor R. D. Irving. After the death of Professor Irving the position of U. S. geologist in charge of the Lake Superior Division was given to Professor Van Hise. This position he still holds.

The work of Professor Van Hise has two phases—that of the investigator and that of the instructor. The former demands first place, as it has occupied most of his time during the past decade. Only the main results of the work can be sketched.

The earliest paper of importance was published, in connection with Professor Irving, on secondary enlargement in rocks of crystals of quartz, feldspar and hornblende. This work developed a line of studies leading to important results regarding the chemical changes in structure and composition of rocks. New ideas of the formation of quartzites, schists and gneisses were discovered, and chemical and mechanical forces shown to be sufficient to account for changes formerly attributed to heat or to melting of rocks. He also worked out the development, by processes essentially similar, of the iron-bearing rocks of the Huronian. These, too, had been believed to be of igneous origin, and the story of their genesis was a great advance in knowledge. From these studies resulted a study of the occurrence and method of development of ore bodies in the Lake Superior region—a work of the greatest value in geological theory and to the practical man who is seeking ore.

A second main line of work has been in stratigraphy and historical geology, in the description of various parts of the Lake Superior region. Besides various papers, Professor Van Hise has taken the main part in the publication of two monographs of the U. S. Geological Survey—one on the Penokee-Gogebic district and the other (now in press) on the Marquette district. He has also published a correlative paper on the Archæan and Algonkian rocks of the United States, which is recognized as a masterly work on a most difficult subject, and his paper on "Principles of Pre-Cambrian Geology" shows an equally firm grasp of the theoretical side of his subject.

No field of study is harder than that in which Professor Van Hise is a master. A rare equipment, both of knowledge and of good sense, is needed to read the story of these ancient and much altered rocks. No fossils aid the explorer, the region is largely drift-covered, and exposures of rock are few. A profound knowledge of chemical and dynamical geology is demanded, as well as an unerring instinct for facts and a firm grasp of principles. There is no better example of the constructive imagination in science than can be found in Professor Van Hise's papers, and no better illustration of the patient and successful search for facts and their just valuation when discovered. When the long story of these bottom rocks of our country is finally told, it will be found that many of the more important chapters have come from the observations and deductions of Professor Van Hise.

The teaching of Professor Van Hise is marked by the same accuracy and breadth of view that characterizes his geology. He can grasp the educational aspect of geology and present it, neither narrowing it into mere details nor broadening it into platitudes. He awakens thought and stimulates investigation, and makes his department, in every sense, a branch of the higher education; a contributor to culture and to sound learning in the University. In practical questions of university management Professor Van Hise shows those same qualities of appreciation of facts and power of judging them. The students are well aware of his interest in affairs belonging to their side of the University. They know his interest in athletic matters, and in the work of the literary societies, and the value of his counsel in these directions. The University of Wisconsin has no graduate devoted to the advancement of knowledge in whose past work she can have more pride than in that of Professor Van Hise, nor one from whom she can expect a larger work in the future.

John Myers Olin.

THE subject of this sketch, who is professor of the law of wills, torts and real property in the Law College of the University, is a good example of the efficiency of an old but often forgotten maxim, that the path of duty is the high-road of honor and success. To do thoroughly and well those plain, simple things, however small, which fall in one's way and lie straight ahead, without excursion into any by-path, however alluring—this it is which brings distinction and happiness. In this line have been gained those successes which have attended his work as a lawyer and as a public-spirited citizen.

To be connected with an educational institution of high rank is in itself a good testimonial of character and ability; and a considerable part of Mr. Olin's active life has been in some way associated with our great University.

He was born at Lexington, Ohio, July 10th, 1851. As a farmer's boy he did what a boy can do on the farm; from the age of seven to fourteen he had only such tuition as the district school afforded, three months in the winter. During the next two years he attended the village school at Belleville, Ohio, and then went to a fitting academy for the next year, then to the preparatory department of Oberlin College. He entered the ancient classical course of the academic department. After completing the freshman year, he left Oberlin, and in the fall of 1869 entered Williams College, from which he was graduated in 1873. He was appointed to deliver one of the philosophical orations at commencement, and also was chosen, in his senior year, a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, whose members are chosen wholly on the ground of scholarship, and at Williams College are selected by the faculty.

After graduation Mr. Olin taught school at Belleville for two terms, when he resigned to become principal of the city schools at Mansfield, Ohio. At the end of the year he resigned to enter a law office at Mansfield, and began the study of his chosen profession. Meanwhile Dr. John Bascom, who had been one of his professors at Williams College, had been made president of the University of Wisconsin, and offered him the position of instructor in the department of rhetoric and oratory, upon which he entered in the fall of 1874, and in which he remained until June, 1878. In the fall of that year he again commenced his legal studies in the law department of the University, graduating in June, 1879.

Thus, in the summer of 1879, Mr. Olin was in the position most young men fresh from college find themselves. He had abundance of good sense, boundless energy, and such knowledge of the vast field of the law as a year's intelligent application could give, but without an office, a business or a library. The good judgment which has marked his professional career was here at once exhibited in the choice of a partner. Lars J. Grinde, a young Norwegian lawyer, who had gained a large and favorable acquaintance through his practical talent and a considerable experience in the county judge's office at Madison, was preparing to enter upon the practice of the law, and a partnership was at once formed under the firm name of Olin & Grinde, with its office at Madison. Mr. Olin took immediate advantage of the advice to young lawyers of the late Senator Carpenter to "buy, beg or steal a library," and, providing himself with a good working library, zealously entered upon the duties of his professional life.

Clients came at once, and in a few weeks the new firm had all the work it could attend to. The partnership continued until the death of Mr. Grinde in 1881, after which Mr. Olin practiced alone until 1892, since which time Harry L. Butler has been associated with him as his law partner.

Much might justly be said of him as a lawyer, did not lack of space forbid. Fifteen years must ordinarily be allowed a man to take his settled position in his profession. But Mr. Olin was in the front rank within five. His professional qualifications may be summed up in three words: Industry, thoroughness, rapidity. These characteristics have often been the subject of favorable comment from the bench and bar.

Madison owes much to him as a public-spirited citizen. The Mendota Drive, that picturesque highway, more and yet more to be prized, will be a perpetual monument to his energy and genius for organization. It is true that the conception was not his, but that of Prof. Edward T. Owen. It is also true that both were heartily seconded by the awakening public spirit of the Capital City. But it will never be forgotten that the scheme was given permanent shape and carried to a successful end by his unflagging zeal and intelligent labor.

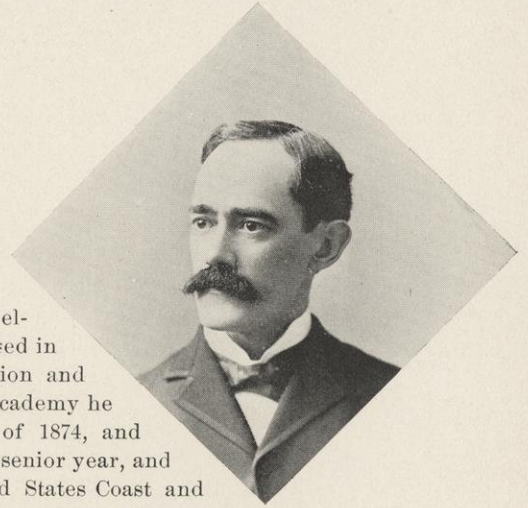

He was married to Miss Helen M. Remington, a graduate of the University, June 14, 1880. In December, 1885, he became a professor in the law department of the University, but went out with President Bascom in June, 1887. In January, 1892, he again became connected with the Law School in a like capacity, and is now professor of wills, torts and real property.

Although at present giving no attention to politics, Mr. Olin was in 1884 a candidate for Congress on the Prohibition ticket, in the Third Congressional District, and the party nominee for governor in 1886, receiving the largest Prohibition vote ever given for any candidate. In 1888, at the National Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis, he threw all his energy into the unsuccessful attempt to prevent his party from making the mistake of subscribing to various reform movements in no way connected with prohibition. Since this time he has had nothing to do with politics, and never took any part therein except to make campaign speeches.

Nelson Oliver Whitney.

NELSON O. WHITNEY was born at Aiken, South Carolina, in 1858, where his parents, who resided in Philadelphia, were spending the winter. His boyhood was passed in Philadelphia, and here he received his early education and prepared for college. After graduating from Mantua Academy he entered the University of Pennsylvania in the fall of 1874, and received the degree, C. E., four years later. During his senior year, and subsequently, he spent several months on the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in Pennsylvania, but returned to the university during the winter term, where he served as instructor in civil engineering. He was also an instructor in the evening sessions of the School of Industrial Art. During the year 1879-1880, Prof. Whitney was in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and was connected with many important engineering enterprises for that great trunk line. The next year he spent as locating engineer on the Mexican National Railway in Mexico, having charge of one hundred and fifty kilometers of main line between the City of Mexico and Dolores Hidalgo. He returned at the end of the year to the United States, to the employment of the South Pennsylvania Railroad Company, as locating engineer, serving also as resident engineer during the construction of the Tuscarora Tunnel Division; so named from a tunnel more than a mile in length, one of the longest in the East.

In 1886 he went to Chicago to supervise the construction of several independent branch roads for the Pennsylvania Company, namely, the South Chicago & Southern, the Calumet River, and the State Line & Indiana City Railways. Later Prof. Whitney was made assistant to the chief engineer of the company, with headquarters at Chicago, where he had charge of its engineering work in the West. In 1881 he gave up this important position in order to accept the professorship of railway engineering at the University of Wisconsin. He has been peculiarly fortunate in receiving his training and experience from some of the foremost engineers of the United States, among whom are A. M. Wellington, Thomas Rodd, Robert H. Sayre and William F. Shunk. Professor Whitney is now chairman of the Board of Engineers in the University.

Charles Foster Smith.

CHARLES FOSTER SMITH, head of the department of Greek, was born in Abbeville County, South Carolina, in 1852. His early education was received in schools near his native place. In 1868 he entered Wofford College, S. C., and in 1872 was graduated with the degree of A. B. After teaching school for one year, he went to Harvard to pursue his studies further, especially in Greek, Latin and German. In the summer of 1874 he went to Germany, where he spent one year, studying in Leipsic and Berlin. In October, 1875, he became a professor in Wofford College, and remained there four years, during the greater part of the time in charge of the Greek department, but teaching besides some German.

He again went to Germany in 1879, and spent the following two years in Leipsic University, taking his Ph. D. (magna cum laude) in February, 1881. His dissertation was "A Study of Plutarch's Life of Artaxerxes, with Especial Reference to the Sources." In 1881-2 he was assistant professor of Latin and Greek in Williams College, but resigned in the summer of 1882 to accept a professorship in Vanderbilt University, where he was the head of the Greek department for eleven years, until elected to his present position in the University of Wisconsin.

Prof. Smith has edited Books III. (1894) and VII. (1886) of Thucydides in the "College Series of Greek Authors," and is under promise to edit Thucydides IV. for the same series. He has also translated a volume of Greek history from the German, which is in the hands of the publishers. His other chief publications have been "On Southernisms" (Trans. Am. Phil. Assoc. 1883 and 1886), "Traces of Tragic Usage in Thucydides" (Proc. Am. Phil. Assoc. 1891), "Poetic Words in Thucydides" (Proc. Am. Phil. Assoc. 1892), "Some Poetical Constructions in Thucydides" (Trans. Am. Phil. Assoc. 1894), "Southern Schools and Colleges" (Atlantic Monthly, Oct., 1884, and Dec., 1885), "Honorary Degrees as Conferred in American Colleges" (Trans. Nat. Ed. Assoc. 1889 and Bulletin of National Bureau of Educ.). Besides contributions to the "American Journal of Philology" and to the "Classical Review" he has written literary articles for various magazines and other periodicals. He was editor of one of the departments of Funk & Wagnall's "Standard Dictionary," and served as a member of the Greek Conference, appointed by the Committee of Ten, which met at Ann Arbor December, 1892.

In Tennessee Prof. Smith devoted especial attention to the building up of preparatory schools, being chairman of the committee on entrance examination in Vanderbilt University, and was the founder of "The Tennessee Association of Schools and Colleges." He is an active member of the American Philological Association, of the American Dialect Society, and of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

Charles Noble Gregory.

CHARLES NOBLE GREGORY, Associate Dean and Professor of Law, was born in 1851 at Unadilla, N. Y. He is a son of the late Hon. Jared C. Gregory, for twelve years a regent of the University of Wisconsin. Removing with his parents to Madison in 1858, he received his early education in the private and public schools of this city. He entered the University of Wisconsin in 1867, and four years later was graduated with honor, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts and taking the Latin salutatory. He was graduated from the College of Law in 1872 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws and two years later received the degree of Master of Arts. He has since been the secretary, the treasurer and the president of the University Alumni Association.

Since graduating Mr. Gregory has given his undivided attention to his profession, and has met with much success. In practice he has been associated with his father and Mr. Justice Pinney of the Supreme Court, and afterwards with Col. George W. Bird. For some time previous to his election to the law faculty he practiced alone. Though never an active politician, Mr. Gregory has held both municipal and state offices. In 1883-4 he was a member of the Board of Education, and for several years has been one of the general commission of the National Civil Service Reform Association. In 1888 he edited the Tariff Reform Advocate. He has also been secretary of the Historical and Political Science Association of the University of Wisconsin since its organization, and a paper which he read before the association, entitled "The Corrupt Use of Money in Politics," is published and has received much favorable comment.

James Claude Elsom.

IN May, 1866, James Claude Elsom was born in Nelson County, Virginia. When thirteen years of age, he entered Norwood College in his native state, having been fitted by private tutors. In the spring of 1883, he was graduated in the Latin, French, German and English branches. His early passion for athletics found opportunity for development at Norwood and he became the leading athlete of the college.

The books of the Medical College of Virginia at Richmond show that Mr. Elsom entered that institution in 1883 and was graduated from it in 1886, having taken prizes for excellence in several branches of medicine.

Soon after passing the examination of the State Medical Board, the Governor appointed him assistant surgeon in the State Penitentiary. In 1889, he resigned this position to enter the field of physical education, and took a thorough course in the celebrated school of athletics at Springfield, Mass. The Young Men's Christian Association, of Galveston, Texas, immediately elected him physical director, and the Texas Chautauqua Assembly, at Georgetown, appointed him lecturer on physical education.

In the early part of 1891, he took charge of the physical work at Atlanta, Ga., and remained until February, 1892, when he resigned to become physical director of the Minneapolis Young Men's Christian Association, which, with its eleven hundred members, has the largest gymnasium in the Northwest.

Dr. Elsom was elected, in 1893, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Physical Culture. He became professor of physical culture and director of the gymnasium in the University of Wisconsin, April 12, 1894.

Samuel Byrod Fortenbaugh.

Not quite twenty-five years ago, Samuel B. Fortenbaugh was born in the village of Halifax, Penn. He prepared for college in the high school at Ithaca, N. Y., and entered Cornell University with the class of 1890. After graduating from the electrical engineering course, Mr. Fortenbaugh entered the employ of the Brush Electric Co., of Cleveland, O.; two years later he resigned his position with that firm to become assistant chief engineer of the Short Electric Railway Co., of the same city. In the fall of '93, he returned to Cornell for graduate work, and the following spring received the degree of Master of Mechanical Engineering. Since the beginning of the present college year, he has been assistant professor of electrical engineering in the University of Wisconsin.

Edward Chynoweth.

EDWARD CHYNOWETH was born in New York in 1853. He came West and entered the preparatory school of the University of Wisconsin in 1869. After remaining two years, he entered the classical course of the University. At the close of his junior year, Lieut. Chynoweth received an appointment at West Point, and entered with the class of '77. He completed his course of study at the Academy and was assigned to the 17th Infantry of the United States Army. For the past seventeen years he has served continuously with his regiment in Dakota, Montana and Wyoming. At the beginning of the present college year, Lieut. Chynoweth received the appointment as professor of military science and tactics.

Edward Holyoke Farrington.

EDWARD HOLYOKE FARRINGTON, Associate Professor of Dairy Husbandry comes from Maine, having been born at Brewer, in that state, December 20th, 1860. After finishing a course in chemistry at the Maine State Agricultural College in '81, he took post-graduate work at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, remaining at New Haven for six years in connection with the Connecticut Agricultural Experimental Station. The winter of 1888, he spent at Lawrence in investigating the purification of sewage for the Massachusetts State Board of Health, and thereafter was engaged for some time with Professor W. O. Atwater in the experimental station of the United States Department of Agriculture. In 1890, Mr. Farrington came West, and after serving for more than three years as chemist in the Agricultural Station at University of Illinois, came to Wisconsin, where he was elected to the position of associate professor of dairy husbandry.

Arthur Gordon Laird.

ARTHUR GORDON LAIRD, Assistant Professor of Ancient Languages, was born at Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, in 1868. He received his early education at Prince of Wales College, in his native town. On the completion of the course there he entered Dalhousie College, at Halifax, Nova Scotia, from which he graduated in 1889, with the degree of B. A. For the next two years he held a fellowship in Greek at Cornell University and in 1891 took his degree of Ph. D., giving a dissertation entitled "Vowel Contraction in the Greek Dialects." In the fall of '91 he was appointed instructor in Greek at Leland Stanford University, which position he held for one year; he then returned to Cornell to fill a similar position; this he held during the two years immediately preceding his coming to the University.

Henry Houghton Everett.

HENRY HOUGHTON EVERETT, Instructor in Gymnastics, was born at Chambersburg, Pa., in 1866. At an early age he showed marked ability in athletic sports; while a pupil in the Chicago High School, he played on the foot-ball team and led his classmates in all that pertained to athletics. After graduating he entered the University of Chicago, where he was chosen a member of the 'varsity foot-ball team, and won several medals in track athletics.

In 1885, after two years at University of Chicago, Mr. Everett accepted the position of assistant superintendent of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. The following year he resigned to accept the position of assistant superintendent of the Casino Pastime Academy, then the largest gymnasium in the West. While occupying this position he studied medicine at the Chicago Medical College. In 1887 Mr. Everett accepted the directorship of the Olympian Club of Manistee, Mich., and the following year, in order to gain a practical knowledge of boating and swimming, he joined the U. S. Life Saving Service. While engaged in this work he was presented by congress with a medal for bravery in saving fifteen persons from drowning.

After acquiring a knowledge of boating and swimming, Mr. Everett traveled throughout Illinois and Indiana, and met all comers at wrestling and sparring, winning heavy-weight championship of Indiana. He has met nearly all the noted professional wrestlers, his only defeat being by Evan Lewis. In 1890 he was appointed director of the gymnasium of the Elgin National Watch Co., resigning this position to accept the instructorship in the gymnasium of the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. Everett has studied Swedish movement cure and massage under the best physicians and has been a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Physical Culture since 1889.

Charles Burton Thwing.

CHARLES BURTON THWING, Instructor in Physics, was born in Theresa, New York, on the 9th of March, 1860. His early training was received in the schools of Hamilton, Missouri, and his academic instruction in the Academy at Evanston, Ill. Entering Northwestern University in the year 1884, he was graduated from that institution in 1888 with the degree of A. B. Immediately upon his graduation he was elected to the position of instructor in physics at his alma mater, which position he held until 1893, when he went abroad for further study in physics. While abroad he began investigation with Professor Hertz at Bonn, and was so successful in the work he accomplished that he made the remarkable record of taking his doctor's degree from that university in a single semester. Upon his return to this country in 1894, he accepted the position of instructor in physics at the University of Wisconsin, which position he now holds.

George McKerrow.

GEORGE MCKERROW, Superintendent of Farmers' Institutes, is a native of Wisconsin, having been born in Waukesha County, April 1st, 1852. The greater part of his early life was spent at his birthplace, where he received a common school education and prepared himself for Carroll College, Waukesha. Mr. McKerrow was unable to finish his college course however, and the winter of 1870 found him teaching school in the village of Sussex. For several years thereafter his attention was divided between the school and his farm, on which he always took much pride in raising improved grains, vegetables and stock. Finally relinquishing the school altogether, his entire time and energy were devoted to raising choice stock, in which field he has had much success, having won many hundreds of prizes at various fairs throughout the country.

Mr. McKerrow's success has won for him many positions of honor in the agricultural associations of the nation as well as the state. He has been Secretary of the Wisconsin Swine Breeders' Association, President of the Waukesha County Sheep Breeders' Association and is now a director of the American Southdown Association, and president of the American Oxford Down Sheep Breeders' Association. For five years, from 1889 to 1894, he was a conductor of farmers' institutes, from which he has made a step to the superintendency of this department of the University of Wisconsin.

Alfred Vivian.

ALFRED VIVIAN, Assistant in Pharmacognosy, is a graduate of the pharmacy course of University of Wisconsin with the class of 1894. He received his preparatory education at the Mineral Point High School and also served his apprenticeship in that city. His work, as an instructor in the University, began with the present college year.

William Oscar Richtman.

WILLIAM OSCAR RICHTMAN, was born at Arcadia, Wisconsin, in 1872, and was graduated from the high school at that place in 1892. The next year he came to the University of Wisconsin and received his Ph. G. in '94. He was appointed assistant in pharmaceutical chemistry during the last term of his senior year.

Arthur Percy Saunders.

ARTHUR PERCY SAUNDERS was born at London in Western Ontario, Canada, there receiving his early education in the private and public schools. In 1886, he went to the University of Toronto and took a course in natural science, specializing in chemistry. After graduation in 1890, he worked for two years under Professors Morse and Remsen in Johns Hopkins University, where he held a fellowship in '92-'93. Mr. Saunders took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in '94 and in the fall of that year he became instructor of chemistry in the University of Wisconsin.

Richard Fischer.

RICHARD FISCHER was born November 18th, 1869, at New Ulm, Minn. He attended the public schools there, graduating from the high school in 1886. He then entered a drug-store, where he was employed until the fall of 1890, when he entered the School of Pharmacy of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in June, 1892. In the fall he returned to Ann Arbor to accept a position as assistant chemist and to continue his studies. He received the degree of B. S. in June, 1894, and in September of the same year was appointed to the position of Instructor in Chemistry in the University of Wisconsin.

Herman Schlundt.

HERMAN SCHLUNDT, Assistant in Chemistry, is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, with the class of '94. He was born at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, in 1869, receiving his preparatory education in the public schools in that city, and teaching there for three years afterward. In 1889 Mr. Schlundt entered the Milwaukee Normal School, and after completing the course of study he came to the University. He was graduated with the class of '94, taking special honors in chemistry.

Twenty-fourth Annual Joint Debate.

Athenae vs. Philomathia,

Library Hall, Tuesday Evening, January 22, 1895.

Question for Debate.

Is our present National Banking System and Independent Treasury preferable to a Consolidated National Bank with branches in the principal commercial centers of the country, which bank shall be the fiscal agent of the government, and shall have the sole power to issue bank notes—adequate security for all notes issued, general supervision of the bank and the power of taxation by the government being conceded?

Interpretation.

(1). No city of less than 75,000 inhabitants shall be considered a commercial center.

(2). Fiscal agent shall mean the power to hold on deposit, receive and disburse government funds and negotiate loans.

Affirmative—ATHENÆ.

J. T. HEALY.

R. D. TILLOTSON.

M. W. KALAHER.

Negative—PHILOMATHIA.

E. R. BUCKLEY.

T. W. BRAZEAU.

E. H. CASSELS.

Decision of Question.—Decided in favor of affirmative.

Judges.—Judge Romanzo Bunn, Judge A. W. Newman, Hon. A. L. Sanborn.

AQUATIC SPORTS.

*Gentle reader, in these pages
You will doubtless sometimes find
Verses that the coming ages
Would have wished that we'd declined.*

*We only make this one request—
Please pass our imperfections o'er,
For on the world's opinions rest
The measure of success in store.*

*And for this mass of rhyme and prose,
At which you'll scarcely look,
We'll only say, before we close,
It helped to fill the book.*

How They Come and Go.

I.

Ve Grind.

To college, to college, to grind night and day;
Home again, home again, with hair all turned gray.

II.

Ve Athlete.

To college, to college, to win foot-ball fame;
Home again, home again, blind, halt and lame.

III.

Ve Swell.

To college, to college, to woo the fair sex;
Home again, home again, six cons, but no ex.

IV.

Ve Sport.

To college, to college, to spend papa's wealth;
Home again, home again, gone home for his health.

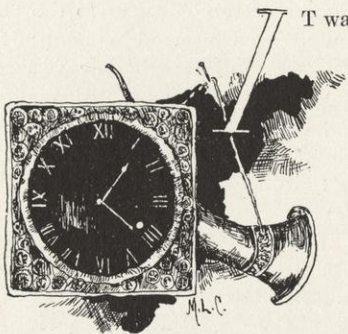

V.

Ve Co-ed.

To college, to college, to be a co-ed,
Home again, home again, soon to be wed.

How the Face of the Clock Was Cracked.

It was in the good old days (of course those of our own time are of all days most wretched), when the University was yet in its infancy; when the fuss and feathers of fashion did not claim so much of the student's attention; when college slang was unknown, and English had not become a dead tongue in college conversation; when class differences did not exist; and when, in consequence of the fact that the majority of the students were but one generation removed from foreign ancestry, so many of the charming old customs of the outlying districts were in vogue. It was no uncommon thing in those days for sons of the ould sod to jig in public contest to settle a question of precedence; or for German students to hold public drinking contests; or for Yankees to vie with each other in eating pumpkin pie; or for Scotch to challenge each other to walk barefoot on thistles; or for Dutch—but here we come to our story.

One calm afternoon in Indian summer there was a great gathering of students and townspeople on the hillslope in front of Library Hall. It was largely Dutch, for it was the occasion of a contest between two Dutch students. On the grass, surrounded by the crowd, lay an immense trumpet. With the Dutch it was not a nimble foot, nor tough soles, nor a capacious stomach that was wont to win the day, but a strong pair of lungs. The stronger blast on the trumpet decided the victor. Antony, the famous trumpeter of New Amsterdam, had inaugurated the time-honored custom, and to-day its usefulness was to be demonstrated in one of the greatest contests ever witnessed in Madison.

There had been for some time sore contention between Mynheer Isaak Witter and Mynheer Kaarl Blomgren over a certain fair Jufrow with blooming cheeks and dove-like eyes. Indeed, Jufrow Ten Eycke would have graced the court of a queen, and what wonder that these two fair-minded and reasonable young men, friends as they were, had found themselves unable to decide which should withdraw and leave the field free to the other. Coming, therefore, to no decision, especially since the lady showed not the least preference, Mynheer Kaarl had challenged Mynheer Isaak to the trumpet contest, and Mynheer Isaak had accepted.

A commotion in the crowd. The contestants were coming, and there was a great craning of necks in curiosity. The excitement extended even to the children at play on the outskirts of the crowd. Louie Waard deserted his hoop; little Blanche Scheerer stopped nibbling at her pastry horse and drew her sleeve across her mouth; Albert Van Vleet swallowed his gum in his excitement; little Georgie Kroncke slid down a tree and tore his pants; Margie Urdaal put up her tin whistle; Ikey Kaarel and Elsbet Spiegelberg abandoned their game of mumblety-peg, Ikey's face all dirty from pulling the peg; Gretchen Boostveg and Regina Frümänn even forgot each other for an instant; and everyone, great and small, came hastening up and crowded around the open space where young Mynheer Blomgren was just picking up the big trumpet.

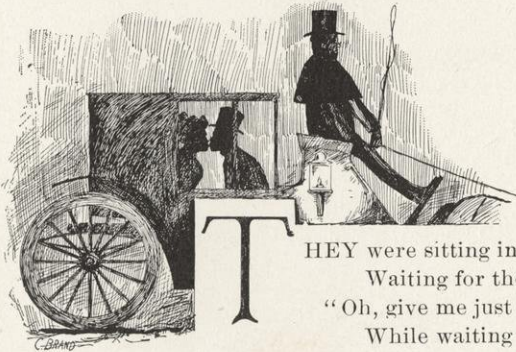

After an enormous inhalation, Mynheer Kaarl lifted the trumpet to his mouth. With cheeks purpled and eyes sticking out like Dutch onions, distended until he looked like a big balloon, he braced himself an instant; then pealed forth a mighty note that startled the stillness for tens of miles around, and made the drooping flag on the old capitol shudder. The crowd applauded, and Mynheer Mekloor, the chairman of the committee of judges, looked very knowingly at Mynheer Van Ness and Mynheer Utendorfer, his colleagues.

Then up stepped Mynheer Witter, a figure fit for the court of the Hague. His enormous breeches were brocaded in the latest style, and their rich purple was offset above by a green silk waist, and below by beautiful yellow silk stockings. His gigantic silver shoe buckles dazzled the eyes of the spectators, and Mynheer Isaak was the object of much admiration on the part of all. All? No, not all. Little Elsbet Stünbergh's eyes glowed with dislike as she thought of the possibility of his succeeding; and in the few moments while the general gaze was directed upon the courtly figure of the contestant, and the trumpet lay neglected, she slyly slipped a pebble into it, and struggled out of the crowd to wait.

Mynheer Isaak blew. Such a blast! It was rougher in quality than Mynheer Kaarl's. It was ragged, jagged—but such a blast! The insects in the haze for miles were startled; the leaves of the trees rustled as in a breeze; ripples broke out all over Mendota; the crowd held their ears, noses and breaths. Such a blast!

But the judges wrangled; Mynheer Mekloor holding for Mynheer Blomgren, because, as he said, his blast was the louder, even though not so startling, on account of its quality. Suddenly the crowd, which favored Mynheer Isaak, began a great clamor which drowned everything else; for someone, looking at the clock in the Hall tower, had discovered a long crack in its face. "Surely," cried all, "this is evidence enough!" And so it was. Mynheer Mekloor gravely removed his long pipe, deliberately blew the smoke away, adjusted his spectacles and carefully observed the face of the clock for two minutes, and then rendered a decision in favor of Mynheer Isaak Witter.

Little Elsbet Stünbergh heard it in dismay. The terrible Isaak had won, and all because of her effort to prevent him; the pebble had only helped him. She dared not tell, however; but with red, tear-stained cheeks, her little heart throbbing in anger and disappointment, home she ran to the Avenue, hid under the bed, and sobbed herself to sleep. It was many years before she ever told anyone how it really was that the face of the clock was cracked.

While You Wait.

THEY were sitting in the carriage,
 Waiting for their chaperone—
 "Oh, give me just one little kiss
 While waiting here alone."

"No, Jack, that business principle
 Has gone too far of late,
 And I draw the line distinctly,
 At kisses while you wait."

A University Alphabet.

Especially Adapted to the Use of Freshmen.

- A Is for Adams, our President wise—
His weakness a fondness for wearing red ties.
- B Is Dean Birge, who thinks it is prudent
To treat gently all creatures except the dull student.
- C Is for Comstock, a star-gazing chap,
Ne'er yet caught in work hours taking a nap.
- D Is for Daniells, who asks you to pass
On the sidewalk and keep off his much-cherished grass.
- E Is for Elsom, the chief of the Gym,
Who strengthens all students, both the stout and the slim.
- F's Frankenburger, our rhetoric man,
Who gives all the ex's he possibly can.
- G Is a lady who always feels gay,
When asking poor Freshmen, "Parlez-vous Français?"
- H Is for Hendrickson, holding it true,
That in Rome we should do as the Romans would do.
- I As to "I," in psychology some day you'll see
Dr. Sharp can distinguish 'twixt that and the "Me."
- J Stands for Jastrow, who, just to get on,
Has a habit of giving full many a "con."
- K Is for Knowlton, who heaves a deep sigh,
As he reads piles of essays, sometimes six feet high.
- L's Dr. Laird, who delves in ancient lore,
With cravings ne'er sated—he always wants more.

- M Stands for Maurer, who, it is quite clear,
Is regarded with awe by the shrewd engineer.
- N Is no one in our Faculty now,
With "no one" there's no chance of having a row.
- O Stands for Owen—how each student fears,
As into the class-room his tall frame he rears!
- P Stands for Parker, a prince of fine fellows,
Who'll play on the organ while you pump the bellows.
- Q 's a queer thing some can't understand,
Why more music can't come from the 'Varsity Band.
- R Stands for Rosie, the lord of North Hall,
The terror of Freshmen—he scareth them all.
- S Is for Snow, suave, polished, and bright,
But don't try to "bluff" him, or he'll have you tight.
- T 's Doctor Turner, who turns o'er the pages
Which bear written on them the work of the ages.
- U 's Mr. Urban, of whom, say his classes,
His urbanity all expectation surpasses.
- V 's Dr. Van Velzer, who still keeps on hand
The same stock of wit at the same old stand.
- W Stands for Williams, our minister-maker,
Of every complexion from Baptist to Quaker.
- X Represents something all wish to acquire,
But some while pursuing get stuck in the mire.

An Autumn Idyl.

It was autumn. Together they strolled through the woods, beautiful in a garb of red and brown. The beauty of their surroundings evidently impressed them, and they amused themselves by hurling their entire stock of adjectives at the scenery. But poor, defenseless Nature could not return these attacks, and as the supply of superlatives is limited they were finally compelled to desist. Of course, he couldn't let the conversation flag, so he bethought himself of all the good stories he had heard recently and not recently, and repeated them with great fidelity, only stopping at the end of each to indulge in a hearty laugh. She bore up bravely under this ordeal, and pretended to enjoy them by smiling sweetly when he laughed. At last Eagle Heights was reached, and the stories were temporarily abandoned, while the ecstasies over the beauties of the landscape were renewed. There they stood looking out over the country. He declared that everything could be seen for twenty miles around. "Oh, Charlie," she exclaimed suddenly, "won't you tell some of those stories again; you know, I think I could see the point from here."

A Glimpse of the Gridiron.

It was the great foot-ball game of the season. Everybody was there to see "the greatest contest on the grid-iron," as the bills read. Yes, everybody was there, from the small boy who crawled in under the grand stand to the swell party who came on the coach. She had come all the way from Plunkville to see the game, and He was at the train to take her to the field. She did not understand much about the game, but he was doing his best to explain why the full-back punted, and the half-backs went around the ends. Just then the teams lined up again, and the umpire called third down for the 'Varsity, with five yards to gain. In a moment the ball was passed to the right half-back, who went around the end with a magnificent spurt, and gained twenty yards before he was tackled. The crowd yelled and applauded and yelled. She waved her dainty red handkerchief and blew a feeble blast on the tin horn he had kindly provided. But the umpire called it an off-side play, and the half-back came back to line-up again. Before he had time to explain the play to her, she exclaimed enthusiastically: "Oh, wasn't that fine, Fred? And they gave him an encore, too, and see, he's going to do it over again."

Overheard at the Prom.

The Junior Prom. was at its height. There was the delightful music, the gorgeous gowns, the artistic decorations, everything that could be desired. She had danced five out of the first six numbers with Him, and just at this moment they were sitting together under a wide-spreading palm, after the last charming two-step. He was fanning her gently and talking of—well, everything. Just then the orchestra struck up another waltz. The selection was a popular waltz song that everybody was singing, and in another moment she was claimed by another for the waltz. The other happened to be the little tenor of the Glee Club, who thought he could sing, and who aspired to be the Beau Brummel of the college. As they glided around he talked of this and he talked of that, and he had nearly exhausted his limited supply of brilliancy; but all in vain, for she seemed preoccupied, and not in the least interested in what he was saying. He made one last effort, and it was like the dying note of a swan. "This blamed tune haunts me everywhere I go," he piped. He was successful! She looked down at him, smiling sweetly, and said, "Well, really, I don't wonder it does, after the way you murdered it at the Glee Club concert last week."

Evolution of the Freshman Yell.

After hearing the Senior yell:

WHOO LA, WHOO LA,
ZIP, RUH, RAH,
U. W., NINETY-EIGHT,
BIFF, BOOM, BAH,
TIGER.

After the Sophomore rush while on the lower campus at drill:

HA, HA, HA,
HO, HO, HO,
U. W., NINETY-EIGHT,
WE'RE THE GO.

After the meeting at which the first president was elected:

HI, HO, HA
BOOM, SIS BAH,
NINETY-EIGHT, NINETY-
EIGHT,
RAH, RAH, RAH.

As it finally took form from the foregoing:

U. OF WISCONSIN,
RAH, RAH, RAH,

A Recitation in the Classics.

EARLY one morning last spring the BADGER, near the close of one of his customary night rambles through Main Hall, had lain down behind a chart in Room 3, intending to take a short nap. It happened, however, that he slept very deeply, prolonging his nap until the middle of the forenoon, when, just as he was dreaming of forty snarling, screaming badgers caught in steel traps, he awoke in a cold sweat. Strange sounds greeted his ear. At one moment, from the sighs, he thought a love scene must be in progress; at the next, from the groans, he was sure it was a death-bed scene. Indeed, what with sighs and groans and grunts and coughs, the BADGER was entirely at a loss as to what was going on; but finally, hearing something about gods, and recollecting that he had once heard something like that from the janitor during a visit to the basement, he ventured to peep out very slyly. There were several young men and a young lady, with books in their hands, sitting before a little man, who might be described either as red-headed or bald-headed. One young man had just taken his seat, and another one rose to recite. He was tall and slim, with long, black hair, and he wore on his vest a peculiar little badge, made of two ornaments connected by a fine chain. The BADGER listened to the recitation, and this was about what he heard:

“H-m-mum! O-wah-h-h lords-sah-h of-ah the land-ah, a-yah super-ah-stition-ah has-ah-h-h—h-m-m-mm! Ah-h-h—lemme see now— —an idea or-ah-h notion-ah or intention or-ah-h-h—has-ah stood or been-ah by me to-ah-h to-ah-h-h ah-h —’s see now—to-ah-h-h-h—O yes! to-ah—approach! the-yah temples-ah—O yes, I see now!—to approach the temples of the gods!— —having? holding? taking-ah-h-h—no, carrying in the-yah in my-ah hands-ah the gar—no hold on!—the-yah—don’t just remember that word—the-yah-h—wreaths! and-ah the-yah-h-h—h-m-m-m-mm!—the-yah-h-h—Oh!!—the perfumer—no, the incense!”*

The BADGER snarled in disgust. He couldn’t help it. Who could? In another instant he had been discovered, and, amid a storm of erasers and books, had made a flying leap through the window and escaped. The identical window can be pointed out to this day.

By the trysting tree
Somebody's sister is waiting for me.
Under the stars
In the dewy grass
Waiting for me—the poor little lass!

And I think of her tears
As she waits in vain
Till it seems almost cruel to give her such pain

Waiting in vain,
Though it may seem cruel,
But how can I help it—the poor little fool!

When summer sunne shins hotly downe,
And sultry wyndes do blow,
Her pebbled shoars are cool and freshe
Beneath the branches low.

An on old Boreas cometh rvd
In furious raging storme;
Mendota chafeth then full sore,
By angry passion torne.

But when, in time of leafy June,

Number 1.

[From a young man, a Sophomore in college, who is out of funds and who has put his watch "in soak" to satisfy the urgent demands of his landlady, who is a widow, and who is a direct descendant of one of the oldest families in New England, and whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower, and who therefore turns out the electric lights at 9:55 each evening, to his father who keeps a flour and feed store and also has a small farm on the river road 2½ miles from Blankville, asking for a remittance with which to satisfy his creditors and to buy a railroad ticket with which to return to his home to spend the holidays.]

MADISON, Dec. —, 18—.

DEAR FATHER—It is with exceeding great regret that it becomes my unpleasant duty to appraise you of the great misfortune which recently befell me while indulging in rowing, the exercise which was especially recommended to me for developing my lungs, which you know have always been weak, when my watch fell overboard, the watch which was one of your parting gifts, and which was therefore prized more highly than anything I possess. If you could possibly send me fifty dollars to be used for dredging purposes the watch could probably be recovered, which is the most ardent wish and desire of your loving son,

JOHN SMITH.

Number 2.

[From a Freshman who has just entered college from the Blank Cross-Roads High School, where he was graduated the youngest member but three of his class, with fourth honors, there being five graduates, and who has just been elected third assistant sergeant-at-arms of the Freshman Class, to his father, who owns a farm that adjoins the farm of the man who was once almost nominated for the place of town clerk on the Populist ticket, but whose name was rejected because he could not write, his right hand having been cut off in a threshing machine while a small boy in New York State, which was formerly his home.]

MADISON, Sept. —, 18—.

DEAR FATHER—It affords me the greatest pleasure to inform you and the family that our class, which is the largest that has ever entered college, has seen fit to confer upon me the great honor of electing me to the important office of third assistant sergeant-at-arms, the onerous and important duties of which I feel I could never be able to perform but for the valuable experience I gained while assisting you in your agricultural vocation, and as assistant secretary of our Sunday school class, and I desire to express to you the deep and lasting obligation I feel that I owe to your instruction, which has made it possible for me to attain to this great honor.

Your affectionate son,

JOHN JONES.

Number 3.

[From a young girl, who was first vice-president of an anti-slang society, who has left home for the first time to attend college, and who had a new dress made for the occasion, with white polka dots, the silk for which was bought, with the proceeds of the last year's maple sugar, from a traveling peddler who also carried a full line of tinware and who visited her home once in two and a half weeks when the weather permitted, to her mother whose brother went West to fight the Indians early in the 70's, but who had never returned and who was supposed to have been killed by Sitting Bull or some other Indian whose name was unknown.]

MADISON, Sept. —, 18—.

DEAR MAMMA—Oh, I have been having the greatest old lark since I struck town last week you ever saw. The whole push of the Pi Kappa Thetas were at the train to meet us, and we have been rushed to beat the band ever since. They had a deal for us last night and I had a knock down to some pretty foxy fellows. The Gamma Delta Kappas are right after us, too, and we are going to work both of them for all the sport there is in it, for you can bet we are right onto our job. I'll have to get down to bucking pretty soon or else I'll get conned, and my class officer will invite me around to his little reception after the mid-terms. Oh, you know I saw the foot-ball team spiel this afternoon. I tell you they're playing a great game nowadays, and they say we're going to beat the Maroons all to pieces next Saturday. I must buck my Poly Con now or the old Prof. will flunk me.

Your lovingest daughter,

BESSIE.

A Japanese Idyl.

In the land of Japan
Once lived a great man,
In a castle that stood by the sea;
His lands they were wide;
He had much gold beside,
And a daughter he loved tenderly.

Oh! more beautiful was she
Than the blue summer sea,
Or the Houris who Paradise bless;
In the whole country round,
Every young man was found,
His love for her mad to express.

Yatsima her name;
Of the nobles who came,
For her hand and her fortune to sue,
Every man who was smitten,
She gave him the mitten;
To Okada alone was she true.

Now Okada was poor,
And so he was sure,
That her father the match would oppose;
For old Koki had said,
He would cut off the head
Of him who presumed to propose.

In secret they swore
To be true evermore,
And after a tender adieu,
His fortune to make,
Okada did take
A post in a battle-ship crew.

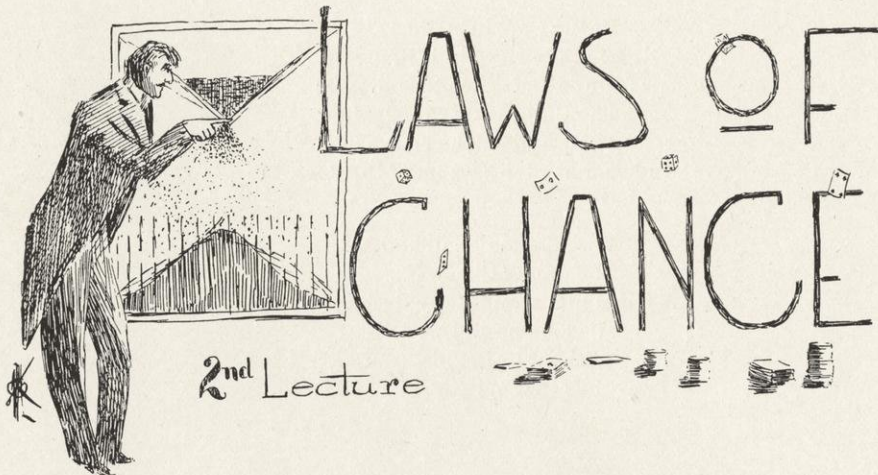

In the Corean strife
He then risked his life,
For fortune and name to compete;
The Chinese he thrashed,
Their cruisers he smashed,
And commander became of the fleet.

When home he did go,
The great Mikado
A noble him straightway declared;
His love he did wed,
Without losing his head;—
'Twas thus that Wisconsin's Jap fared.

Synoptical Course, by Prof. Slichter.

It will be rather difficult for me to speak to-day, as I am so very hoarse. I dreamt last night that we beat Minnesota playing foot-ball. Instead of holding a quiz at the end of the lecture, I shall ask questions during the hour, and shall call on only those whom I think can give an experienced answer.

The last lecture dealt with simple probability, which depends simply on quantity of knowledge. It teaches us to regulate our actions in a way which will, in the long run, lead us to the least amount of disappointment and injury.

Simple probabilities and, in fact, all probabilities, are governed by certain fixed laws. It is not mere chance that a man shakes four aces in a throw of the dice, nor is it mere chance when Anderson makes a recitation, but according to laws by which an ace turns up once in six times, and he makes a recitation once in ninety-seven times.

Most people think that card games are mere games of chance, but I shall show you this afternoon that they are not. In a whist deck there are fifty-two cards, usually four of each kind. Now, if four people are playing, and each is to receive nine cards, what chance have you, Mr. Jefferson, of getting four aces? "That is according." According to what? "According to whether I deal or not."

This answer clearly demonstrates the fact that the "Laws" enter into every game of chance.

These laws may be represented trigonometrically, and receive different names in the different countries. If the hypotenuse of a triangle represents the total number of chances in a raffle, and the perpendicular represents one man's chance, the sine of that triangle will give you the number of the next street car that passes. In this country this ratio is called the "true sine"; the English prefer to use the "co-sine" of the triangle, while the Germans—can you tell me, Mr. Hilbert, what sine the Germans prefer? "The beer sign, I believe."

As this lecture is merely introductory, I shall only mention the leading laws of chance and assign them to some of the members of the class for extended work. Mr. Barnes, will you develop the Eureka law? "How to Beat the Nickel-in-the-Slot Machine." Mr. Heinemann, prepare a paper entitled, "The Chances I Took to Become a Great Man," and the last paper, to be read two weeks from to-day, will be by Mr. Dickinson, on "The Theory of Probabilities, as it Relates to the Chances of a Foot-ball Player Becoming a Junior Law."

The Lament of a Smith.

O that my name were Brown, or Bright,
Or Evans, Thomas, Jones, or White;
Or anything else—it makes no diff.—
Except this miserable name of Smith!

Full seven-and-twenty in college here
Keep me in confusion all the year;
And woe is me!—whate'er my gift—
I'm ne'er distinct from the tribe of Smith.

My efforts fail—my work's in vain
Because of my confounded name;
I'd have been famous long since if
My name were anything else but Smith.

Disgusting! To possess this name,
And, howe'er well deserving fame,
Be talked of, thought of, catalogued with,
The common crowd by the name of Smith!

O that my name were Brown, or Bright,
Or anything else—it makes no diff.—
O that my name were Jones, or White,
Or anything but this name of Smith!

The Foot-Ball Player's Dream.

IT had been a longer practice than usual, because a great game was to be played soon. It had been a harder practice than usual, too, for the coacher had been in even a more profane humor than was his wont, and had kept the play going with scarcely a moment's intermission. And so, by the time the player had gone home, changed his clothes, dug the mud out of his ears and eyes, and scraped it off his face, and finished the process of purification by the application of several gallons of water, he was as tired as only a foot-ball man after a vigorous daily training can be. It was no wonder, then, that he felt heavy and drowsy when he went to his room; and no wonder, either, that after a few minutes of musing he fell asleep in his chair and dreamed.

Yes, Queen Mab was with him, tiny emulator of Jehu, and she drove her team of little atomies fast and furious for hours. Rare were the scenes the sleeper visited. He was a vender of foot-balls at the World's Fair; he was a gondolier in Venice, his craft made of the half of a foot-ball; he was a missionary to China to introduce the game there, and was seized by the yellow heathen, taken to Corea, doubled up inside his own foot-ball, rammed into a cannon and fired across the strait at Tokio. He was an aeronaut with a monstrous foot-ball for a balloon, and suddenly found himself a satellite of the moon, making three revolutions per hour. He was wrecked in the Indian Ocean, and his only way of escaping a score of hungry sharks was to keep on the upper side of a great floating foot-ball. He was Hercules, fishing for whales off Greenland, with a California tree for a pole, braided log chain for a line, and an immense foot-ball for a bobber. He was Jonah, swallowed by a foot-ball, and released by a stroke of Goliath's sword just as he was beginning to experience difficulty in breathing. He was a surgeon with a foot-ball for a case; performed an autopsy on Balliet, and found his head as empty as a foot-ball. He was Æolus, and a foot-ball was the bag of winds; he let out the north wind until it lashed the ocean into a foam, and then found himself sailing through the calm depths below in a submarine ship made of a foot-ball.

But the wind had made old Neptune angry, and with mighty strides he pursued the strange craft to take vengeance on its occupant. With a stroke of his trident he pierced the wall, and cold darkness enveloped the voyageur within. The noise of the rushing waters was the last thing he was conscious of until a pale, ghostly light and shadowy figures moving about in silence told him that he was in the realm of shades. The spectral selves of once famous heroes came crowding eagerly around, and the confused murmur of shadowy voices said: "Hail, prince of men! At last, after much longing, do we welcome the first of thy glorious race to our habitation. Vouchsafe, O thou of renown in the glorious field, to instruct us in thy all-wonderful ways."

And so the famous player coached the ghostly crew of heroes and demigods of old; and apt pupils they proved. True, Ulysses never lost an opportunity for a tricky play; Achilles' fiery temper often overcame him, and he slugged on the slightest provocation; Hector was slow on account of prefacing his plays with long prayers to the immortals, from force of habit; and Paris, delicate youth, had to have time after a down to resume his wonted shape. There were no bruises, however, and the most violent plays could be indulged in with little damage to the unsubstantial bodies of the players.

At length a great match was to be played, and all the pale host of Hades were spectators. The late arrival was to play center against Hercules. Pluto gave the signal by hurling a bolt with a loud crash; there was a rush, a confusion of forms, and then the newly arrived center emerged from the melee and sped with ghostly swiftness down the field. Swift-footed Achilles, however, did not belie his name, and had soon overtaken the flying figure and made a successful tackle. Down came the great center with a crash—not upon the soft and yielding ground of shade-land, but upon a hard and unyielding floor.

He lay a few seconds, wondering, while a voice called out: "Well, well! Old man, what's the matter? Did I scare you, cracking that match, or were you dreaming? Come, come, get up; it's twelve, and time we were abed." Then he slowly sat up, relaxed his grasp on the waste-basket, the foot-ball of his dream, which he had fallen upon, disentangled his foot from the rounds of the chair, the tackle of his dream, drowsily contemplated his room-mate, who had just come in, and said slowly, as he rubbed his bruises: "Well, that's about the greatest time I ever had. I must have got that match of your's mixed with our signal in the dream. - - - Say, hand me that liniment, will you, please?"

AFTER THE PROM.

Oh, girls, you don't know what you missed
At last night's promenade;
Why, it threw all other parties
Ever given in the shade.
Tell you whom I danced with?
And what other girls were there?
I didn't have time to notice girls,
But the men were everywhere.
Well, Vroman Mason danced with me
Just once, and I was mad.
And Willet Spooner cut me
For his supper. Oh, how sad!
John Sanborn came and Louis Ward,
They got their numbers mixed;
They divvied up with half a dance,
And so I had them fixed.
I waltzed with darling Bertie Ball;
Oh my, but he's a tease,
And then, like lots of others,
He's a bit inclined to squeeze.
George Burgess condescended, too,
To ask me for a dance,
And Shirley Tarrant came around
With his angelic glance.
Al Schuette then reminded me
I'd promised him a waltz;
Say, girls, I almost love that boy,
In spite of all his faults.

And then that waltz with "Pat" O'Neil—
My! but that was bliss!
And Alec Paul! why, girls, he looked
Just sweet enough to kiss.
I two-stepped, too, with Floyd McClure;
What a god-like youth he is!
I never saw a man before
With such a face as his.
I danced with "Brodie" Elliott;
He held me, oh, so tight,
I pinched his arm to make him stop,
But he'd not let up a mite.
Then there was Walter Sutherland,
Clyde Warren and John Green.
And Martin Warner cut me—
I think that just too mean.
And then there were a dozen more;
Here, see them on my list.
But, girls, I had the nicest time—
You don't know what you missed!

Caught.

"HAT are you fishing for, young man?"
The pompous stranger said.
"For fun," the quiet youth replied,
And never raised his head.

He answered wiser than he knew;
For, when his sport was done,
He hadn't caught a single fish,
And he had just fished for fun.

Concerning the Sources, Causes and Results of the Phenomenal Emigration from the Collis Universitatis to the Schola Legalis, with Some Appended Statistics.

A THESIS PRESENTED FOR THE DEGREE OF B. A. (BACCALAUREUS ASINORUM), BY A. HAPPIE BLANQUE.

Amid the permutations and combinations of factors and forces that go to make up a revolution of Destiny's wheel, it is frequently discoverable that apparently insignificant atoms form by their conjunction and redintegration a mighty universal totality. Thus do we see that in every phase of human civilization and progress, "Great oaks from little acorns grow."*

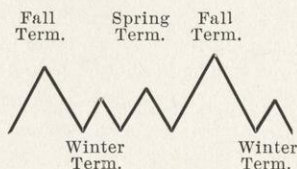

A phenomenon which has been the occasion of the most lively speculations among the sociologists of our day, has been the steadily deepening and broadening current of the stream of emigration from the Collis Universitatis (vulg. "the hill") to the Schola Legalis.†

The sources of this emigration are too numerous and complicated to be presented in detail in a mere compendium such as the present treatise aims to be. The conditions of which this situation is the product, may be briefly stated as follows: The advent of a new administration; failure to comply with English laws; the German question; and problems of our own time.‡

The ultimate causes of this swelling tide of emigration are not altogether, as it were, vague and hypothetical. Exhaustive research and a careful comparison of those multitudinous and multifarious data which have been collected and collated with a patience unparalleled by the most noteworthy examples in history, reveal a vast quantity of suggestive material immediately bearing upon this most significant phase of our treatise. These facts I have graphically represented in the following chart:

* From a forest hymn of great antiquity. The line is best known to-day in its corrupt version "Great aches from little toe-corns grow," the probable result of the metathesis of vowels by some unlettered scribe.

† The fluctuation of this emigration may be demonstrated by curved lines, as follows:

‡ For a fuller discussion of this subject the reader is referred to the works of the following recognized authorities: Professor A. A. Knowlton, Harriet Trayne Remington and Ernest B. Skinner.

TABLE I.

The proportion of the students leaving the hill who engage excessively in open-air sports :

Skating*	8	20	12	100
Foot-ball.....	1½	6	18	27

TABLE II.

Those who indulge excessively in in-door pastimes.

A third cause sometimes quoted is the distinction afforded by the natural beauties of situation of the University of Wisconsin. The part played by this factor, however, is not a large one, since it appeals only to those students endowed with the higher and more poetic temperament, and will not be dwelt upon in these pages. For exemplification of this point the reader is referred to the work of Charles Floyd McClure, now just out of press. ||

While the causes of this emigration are apparent to the most superficial, nay, the most casual observer, the results are manifold and stupendous, and may be divided into two classes: Those consummated within the period of incubation in the Schola Legalis, and those reaching their climax after release therefrom.

Of the first the development of lung and limb is the most important. The exercises bringing about this growth are rhythmical, though inharmonious, beating

*This refers only to skating on ice.

†This sport has found literary expression in a scientific treatise, entitled "The Successful Rider," by the Honorable David Atwood.

‡Thirty-seven is the total number of dances given during the year. This fact is significant.

‡ Surprise has been expressed at this item, but the fact has been explained by Mr. Louis Ward a recognized authority on such matters, as being due to the shrinking timidity of the novitiate.

of the feet, accompanied by vocal performances, running through the gamut of songs possible to the human voice for ten minutes after each lecture, repeated with unflinching regularity.

Here is another aspect of this result: when the wintry blasts have covered the hill with ice, and one's locomotive appendages manifest a marked disinclination to adhere to terra firma, or, more appropriately, perhaps, to Mother Earth, it is impossible to retain an equilibrium while under the painful necessity of marking time to the accompaniment of the aforesaid and above-mentioned stamping. In this way does one man's meat become another man's poison.

The results in after life are far-reaching and wide-spreading, affecting the mode of earning a livelihood adopted, and therefore also greatly influencing the character of the emigrant. Of those who graduate from the Schola Legalis a large proportion find employment as janitors, book-agents, patent-medicine agents, etc., school-teachers, waiters, etc., etc. A very small proportion, usually those having a private income, contrive to live comfortably. About 40 per cent. die of starvation, a small number of overwork,* and the rest commit suicide.

In tilling the field of original research the ruthless plough (Studens in Universitate) can merely harrow up the foundation of the solid fabric, bringing to light of day the crying evils of our own time and generation, and showing the necessity of a philanthropology which will interest itself in devising new means of occupation, requiring careful preparation and investigation, for those previously referred to as emigrating from the Hill.†

* This is due to a too arduous search for briefs, not to professional labor.

† Since the completion of this thesis the attention of the writer has been called to a fact previously overlooked by him, viz., that such a field of occupation has been opened by the institution of the short course in agriculture.

Transformed.

ONCE 'twas a big sun-bonnet she wore
To hide her tresses brown,
And a calico dress with a patch or more,
But now she wears cap and gown.

A Slight Difference.

What His Actions Say.

MAN like me you rarely meet—
As good as gold from head to feet.
In faultless dress I could excel
That prince of dandies—Beau Brummel.
Such are my charms in the social field,
I'm called a very Chesterfield.
In poetry I stand alone,
My style peculiarly my own.
With perfect modesty I say
In prose, I equal Thackeray.
For sparkling wit, great is my gift,
An equal I to Jonathan Swift.
So excellent is my moral tone,
In justice, Heaven should be my home.
If ancient Greece my feet had trod,
Who knows but I'd have been a god!

What His Acquaintances Say.

If one could buy this godlike youth
For what he's worth, in very truth,
And sell him at his valuation,
His wealth would equal all creation;
Sufficient of the golden curse
He'd have to buy the universe.

Entr' Acte.

“Why did you like the play?” asked she
Of a dashing Junior law;
“I thought it about the poorest thing
That I ever heard or saw.”
“Well, you see,” the youth replied,
“When it comes to simple facts,
The reason that I liked it was Because—it had five acts.”

THE PHILOSOPHER OF THE CONCERT TOUR.

Two palace cars, containing six-and-thirty young men, sweep past the country station, en route to the next large city; and as Rusticus, in slouch hat and toil-worn clothes, with gaping mouth and staring eyes, catches a fleeting glimpse of the big cardinal letters, "University of Wisconsin Glee, Mandolin, and Banjo Clubs," of the mirror-like windows and the long-haired Greeks in them, he turns to his comrade, who is standing beside him, leaning against a tree, cutting a plug of tobacco, and remarks: "They're a-havin' a swell time—them there fellers—eh, Jerry?"

Yes, they are. To be sure, though, there are a few slight annoyances, even on a concert trip. It is inconvenient, to say the least, to dress for a performance with only room enough to stand on one leg, while the collar buttons chase each other down your back or under the seats; it is a bother to have all the shoes in the car to look over every morning before you can find your own; it is hard to be one of twenty who have each lost from two to five shirts, and can find not one; it does try the patience of the sleeper to be tormented into wakefulness by the snoring in the next berth; it is expensive to have your hat blown off while going from one car to another, or to find the heavy guitar player sitting on it; and it is absolutely vexatious, when on the stage, to have the fellow in front of you appropriate the smiles intended for you. Yes, there are trials and troubles even on a concert tour—but, then, no young man has ever found it altogether unendurable, for all that.

A car full of musical students is a field for your philosopher. In the edge of the evening, before the lamps are lit, amid the sound of joke, laughter, and snatches of song in every key, mingled with the tinkling of the mandolin, the tang of the banjo, and the thrum of the guitar, he leans back in his seat, his feet upon someone's else overcoat in the opposite seat, and with hat pulled down over half-closed eyes, leisurely looks over his subjects. There are the wise and the foolish in his field of vision—the prudent and the careless. There is the man who is always trying to be funny and can't, and the one who is funny and can't help it. There is young Fortunatus, trying his wings under the guidance of the man who knows all about the laws of chance, but has sent home for money, for all that. There is the man who has the false memory, and who is even now telling some impossible experience of his. There is Adonis, who made such havoc among the fair sex at the last party, and "can prove it by several photos," since received. There is the polished man, who utters honeyed words about the beauty of the city and the charms of its ladies while he is at the reception, and shows his sincerity and his gratitude at the same time when he comes back to the car by cursing the place for its mud and snarling about "that bore of a reception." There is the pretty man, who spends half an hour in front of a glass powdering before each performance. There are the first tenor and first bass, who conceitedly smile from the stage in response to the young lady whose smile is meant for the second bass behind them. There is the manager, who makes them all go to a reception (-30° F.) at the County Club. There is—Why, who can that be down there? Must be a stranger come in with one of the boys. Well, I'll study him. He doesn't look very inviting, sitting there alone and scowling. Don't like his looks a bit—a regular conceited coxcomb! I'm glad he isn't one of us. Wonder who he is. Drat this cigarette smoke! It's thick enough to make a statue wrinkle up its face! What with smoke and being half asleep, I can't see him very plainly.

The philosopher leans forward. So does the other fellow. He stands up. So does the other fellow. He rubs his eyes violently, and exclaims, under his breath: "Bless my soul—it's nothing but one of those confounded mirrors!" and sits down with his face the other way.

Pretty soon, dinner; then—O, Patience!—dressing; then the Opera House, where the manager says: "Now, boys—musical audience—on the watch for your mistakes—do your best—our reputation. Do-sol-mi-do—Stop your infernal tuning back there, you idiots!" Then, "We meet again to-night, boys"; and then, a party; and then, home to the car, one by one; comparing of notes; merry jokes by the bright men; satyr dances by the tall guitar player in the striped night suit; and then—Somnus, with visions of Mr. Banjo and Miss Mandolin waltzing, while Signor 'Cello roars and Monsieur Flute screams with laughter.

Extra Long.

"How long should the half back wear his hair?"
Asks the co-ed, young and gay,
As she views his locks so long and fair;
"Why, till after Thanksgiving day."

Farm and College.

SUMMER and vacation,
Weather very warm;
Now the college student
Is home upon the farm.

Overalls and cowhides,
Pitchfork, rake and hoe,
Cuts a figure that would scare
E'en the festive crow.

Sells as summer agent
Life of General K—;
Talks for seven hours,
Victim faints away.

Preaches at the cross-roads
On the subject "Love;"
"Should be kind and harmless Gentle as a dove."

City streets and autumn,
Weather getting chill;
Now the college student
Is back upon "the Hill."

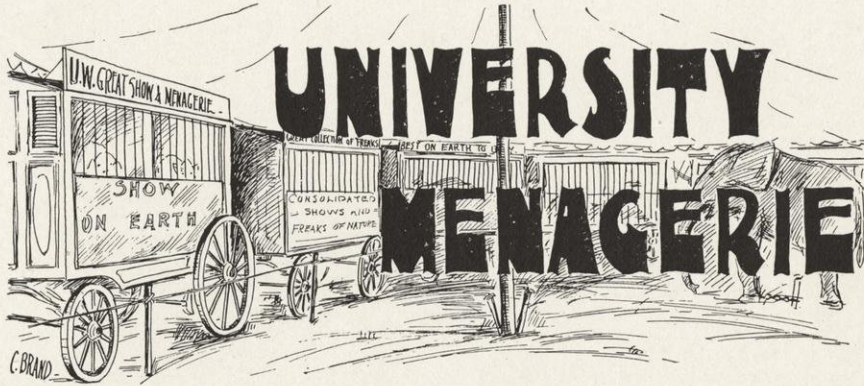

Dress suit, patent leathers,
Diamond stud and bow;
Clasps a maid and trips the Light fantastic toe.

Texts and dictionaries,
Sighs and doleful looks;
Finds it costs him forty Dollars for his books.

Plays a game called football,
Always tackles low;
Bites the half-back's ear off,
Breaks a rib or so.

Country and the city
Summertime and fall,
Just a little contrast—
Across the page, that's all.

The old clock is mournfully tolling
 The hour of bucking once more
 Which calls me from tenderest daydreams
 To dry old historical lore.

I'll just have her picture before me
 It won't do to lay it aside,
 This rose with its flood of sweet memories
 Can nestle right here by her side.

11 P.M.

Well here I've been bucking three hours,
 The lamp's quite dim, what's gone out?
 And no lesson - I'll stink if I'm called up!
 Why what was I thinking about?

Fragments.

[While excavating for the foundations of the new machine shops a tablet was unearthed upon which there was considerable writing, but it was quite illegible, and could scarcely be deciphered. With the aid of the telescope in the observatory and the illumination furnished by some of the bright lights of university society, however, it has been possible to read some of the writing. Several of the professors have studied the tablet, but they are divided in their opinions regarding it, one holding that it was the property of Black Hawk, while two others find strong resemblance to some of the productions that here appear in the university papers, and to certain professors' lectures. The parts that have been deciphered are now presented for the first time.]

Tragedies by the Teaspoonful.

First Teaspoonful.

HE steam roller rolled. There is nothing very remarkable about this, for steam rollers have rolled in the past, and will, no doubt, continue to roll hereafter; but this particular steam roller was rolling near Ladies' Hall. Neither is this so very remarkable, for though they may never have had a steam roller at the hall, they have had steamed rolls, and some of the rolls were as heavy as the steam roller, but that is another story. This steam roller, as has been said, was rolling near Ladies' Hall last fall, and in order to prevent the steam roller from rolling over things over which it ought not to roll, a sign was designed to notify people to wait till the steam roller rolls by. One day the sign mysteriously disappeared, which is a bad habit some signs have, and the disappearance was a great mystery, as not infrequently happens; but as the steam roller could not solve the mysterious mystery, it simply continued to roll, and the steam roller is rolling to-day, but on the wall of a room in Ladies' Hall hangs the sign: DANGER. STEAM ROLLER. And still the steam roller rolls.

Second Teaspoonful.

THE lamp was burning low in the parlor. They were sitting together on the divan. They chatted gayly of this and of that, of the coming Prom., and of almost everything else, except perhaps last term's examinations. As time wore on the conversation seemed to become more fitful and almost to flag, but he appeared to be holding his own—in the conversation, of course. Finally, in sheer desperation, he picked up a copy of Tennyson from the table and was about to ask her how she liked the poetry, but as he opened the book a bit of paper fluttered out. He picked it up and glanced at it hurriedly. It was a newspaper clipping. He looked closer. In black type was the heading,

"Woman's League Resolutions." An awful suspicion flashed across his mind. Could it be true? His face flushed. His breast heaved with suppressed emotion. With a supreme effort to control himself he cried out in anguish:

"Oh, Pauline, tell me that it is not true! Oh, tell me anything else! Tell me that you were conned last term. Tell me that I can't have that two-step at the Prom. Anything, oh, anything! but don't say that you belong to the Woman's League." And the lamp sputtered and went out.

Third Teaspoonful.

HE had an invitation to dinner for that evening. He was dressing for dinner now. He wondered whether she would be there. He wondered whether he would have the pleasure of going down to dinner with her. He smiled in anticipating the pleasure. He glanced at his watch. He saw that it was already a quarter to seven. He knew that he must hurry or he would be late. He was aware that it is a great bore to wait for a late-comer. He picks up his collar case and takes off the cover. What! Empty? He jerks open a drawer of the dressing case. Empty, too. He staggers back. The awful truth just dawns upon him. Things begin to swim before his eyes. He reels and falls into an arm-chair. Everything is black before him.

Ten seconds pass. Another ten seconds. The tinkling of the electric bell breaks the stillness. A voice is heard in the hall. Somebody shouts, "Say, Jack, your laundry's come." What! Could it be true? He rushes to the door. Saved!

The Law Backs Everybody.

He was a Freshman young and gay,
For three short months he held his sway,
Riding his pony night and day,
Then flunked the exams. the usual way.
But hastening along without delay,
Became a Junior Law next day.

A Window in Ladies' Hall.

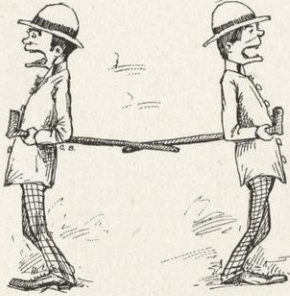

FROM a window in Ladies' Hall both beautiful and varied are the scenes viewed by the interested beholder. In the early morning, while yet the noisy mob is wrapped in slumber, the long shadows lovingly caress the greensward, the squirrels boldly play hide-and-seek over the campus and Robin Redbreast flaunts his college colors from his breast as he hops proudly about; then does the sleepy freshman with empty head, carrying his books and all the learning therein under his arm, slowly and with an anxious countenance ascend the hill.

At one o'clock two youthful forms may be seen coming forth from Library Hall; about the slender figure of the smaller rests the protecting arm of the taller one, and the fair, curly head, adorned with dainty blue ribbons, rests on the shoulder which it just reaches. The classical head of the other is bent down to catch the sweet murmured nothings. Yes, this is shocking, but it's only "Curlilocks" and "Crush."

About two hours later a tall man in white may be seen rushing past in mad flight. Is he trying to create a breeze to cool the sultry air? No; he is pursued by a short man, also clad in white, who is evidently warm and tired, but still enthusiastic. If inquiry be made, it will be found that these are Professor Scott and Dr. Sharp playing tag on their way to the tennis court. Next in this stately procession to the tennis court come Professors Hendrickson and Haskins, shortening the tedious way by playing horse. There is a mild suggestion in the fact that Professor Hendrickson acts as pony. They are going along pleasantly enough when Professor Hendrickson suddenly remembers that he has forgotten his racquet. Professor Haskins drops the reins and chases a butterfly while Professor Hendrickson goes back for his racquet.

In the evening, when all is quiet, the shadows on the grass shift strangely. The moon lights up the smiling countenance of the blue sky, gazing serenely at the fleecy white clouds nestling on her bosom, and the orchestra of the frogs plays a dreamy serenade. A girlish figure may be seen quietly stealing up the fire-escape, and I tremble to think of the result if she should fall, or if the fire-alarm should be sounded and a collision ensue. And these are but a few of the scenes presented on the campus in the course of one brief day.

College Yells.

EAR the noisy college yells—
Barbarous yells!
What a tale of rioting their turbulency tells!
In the lurid air of night,
See them gather 'round the light
Of the fire!

Far too maddened they to speak,
They can only shriek, shriek,
In their hot enthusiasm for the winners of the game,
In their firm resolve to make all other celebrations tame:

Yelling louder, louder—harder,
With the force of students' ardor,
And a resolute endeavor
Now to surpass or never,
Every other campus fire.

O the yells, yells, yells,
What a tale their clamor tells
Of renown!

How they beat and burst and roar!
What a horror they outpour
On the bosom of the palpitating town!
Every listener can see
By the howling
And the yowling
If 'tis defeat or victory,

By the absence or the presence of the spirit in the yells—
Of the yells—

Of the yells, yells, yells, yells,
Yells, yells, yells,
In the howling and the yowling of the yells.

Before They Came to College.

The Catastrophe.

A CHUNKY little boy of four, fat-faced and round-eyed, sat on the floor, patiently twisting the tail of a cat which he held between his knees as in a vise. It was a black cat with yellow eyes, and it screamed terrifically. "Davy, let that cat go," commanded a voice from the kitchen; but the child kept on, with labored breathing, his tongue sticking out of one side of his mouth, and the continued screaming announced the success of his efforts. The rustle of a hurrying woman, and Davy is borne aloft with his round eyes swimming in bewilderment. The released cat darts across the room like a black streak, and crashes through a window pane. Mingled with Davy's piercing shrieks as they reach us through the jagged opening, is it the sound of applause we hear, or only—Nemesis?

A Barnyard Episode.

He sat on the barnyard fence, with his elbows on his knees and his chin on his hands, one sunshiny Sunday morning in May, dressed in his Sunday School clothes. A score of hogs were contentedly grunting as they rooted before him. Suddenly an idea seized him, and with glistening eye he got down and slowly approached them. When fairly among them, he made a quick move and seated himself astride one of them, and soon, with eye flashing in victory, was coursing in triumph around the yard to a chorus of coughs and grunts from the panic-stricken herd. But alas! when near a deep puddle, the terrified hog suddenly swerved, and the little hero lost his grip on the bristles and went sprawling in the mud, while the whole tribe crowded up to stare. And there he was—clean clothes streaked and spattered, and streaming brine making white courses down the muddied cheeks—a very Pearl before swine.

Fishing.

“Had ’nawful lot o’ fun. Jes’ look at m’ fish! Ain’t them dandies?” He had a small pail half full of water, in which were floating a bullhead four inches long and two or three shiners. He had been a mile and a half away to the river; had gone from the “Bullhead Hole” to the “Willow Bend” and from there to the “Elm Tree” in hope of better luck; had toiled through thickets of brambles, climbed high fences, and made long circuits, perspiring in the hot sun; had scratched himself with briars, and had his hands and feet stung with nettles; had stubbed his toes on railroad ties and hurt his fingers with the hook; had been famished for hours, and choking with thirst; and now had just labored home, imping and exhausted. All this, besides laboriously digging over half the garden at first for bait—and yet, he “had ’nawful lot o’ fun!” Ah, true, lad! The fun of boyhood! You are to be envied by kings, and we wise old heads who smile at you know it well.

In Term Time.

It was in a country school-room, one hot afternoon in June; the twitter of sleepy birds without and the murmur of studying lips within. A suppressed titter. “Ernest Hicks, you may take your book and sit with Susy Jones.” Ernest dropped the pin he had been using to keep the boy in the next seat awake, while the convulsive snicker died out and left him sober-eyed and red as carmine. He sat cowering until the command was repeated, then got up and slowly stumped across the room on his bare feet and sat down on the extreme edge of Susy’s seat. She had already turned her back, and both hid their faces and cried for shame. * * * Fifteen minutes later the teacher happened to look down at them. They were sitting very close together, whispering in animated conversation, and oblivious of all surroundings. Before them lay the contents of their pockets—a broken-bladed jack-knife, three spools, a dry apple-core, two old chews of gum, a bit of ribbon, a string of seven beads, two nigger babies, some jackstones, and a hair-pin. They were playing store, and there was a sudden forced assignment.

The Busy Bee.

In a little dell at the foot of a hazel slope stood a small boy, gazing in philosophic mood into the depths of a clear spring. The serious face was impressive, for all the bandless old gray hat and the tufts of tawny hair sticking out through it here and there, the suit of blue jeans patched with white, and the rough, bare feet. A bee fell into the water. "Das arme Ding!" he exclaimed, and stooped to help it out on his finger. With a yell he jumped up and snapped the insect from him. He came down with one foot in a big green thistle and the other on a raspberry stub, rolled over, stuck his finger in his mouth, crept away on his knees, and sat down on the grass. He sat there for an hour with the bottom of his foot within six inches of his face, picking out thistles, sucking his finger, breathing hard—and thinking.

A Press Dispatch.

Romance of a College Editor.

HE editor in the hammock sat,
And the moon in the sky shone bright,
But his thoughts were far from the dainty maid
There at his side that night.

Long he sat in this stupor dull
And stared at the tips of his shoes.
He heard not the maiden's lonely sigh,
For he thought of the morrow's news.

And thus his thoughts went romping on
Till he felt a light caress,
And into his reveries broke the words,
"When are you going to press?"

Miss Milly O'Naire.

She is not young and fair,
Nor has she golden hair,
Nor a dimple in each cheek,
If that is what you seek;
Hers is a gift more rare,
Miss Milly O'Naire.

She has not laughing eyes,
Blue as the summer skies,
Nor lips of cherry red,
On kisses to be fed;
No, its not for these I care,
Miss Milly O'Naire.

She is not wondrous wise;
Seeks not for learning's prize.
'Tis true, she knows no Greek,
And her English grammar's weak,
But why should I despair,
Miss Milly O'Naire?

So woo and win her I will,
For there's my tailor's bill,
And creditors by the score;
But they'll trouble me no more,
For she has a million to spare,
Miss Millionaire.

A Sin-de-Siecle Hero.

Stranger, if thine eyes fall on this face,
So handsome, firm and full of manly grace,
I prithee take thy hat from off thy head,
Uncover as thou wouldst before the dead;
For he whose face is pictured on this page
Stands out alone—the hero of the age.
No greater deeds of prowess man e'er did
Than history tells of him—our modern Cid.
No cavalier e'er bore him in the lists
With half the grace or pride that here exists.
No Indian fighter fought his dusky foe
With valor such as this mild youth doth show.
No pugilistic pounder so well knows
When and where to put in telling blows.
No carpet knight receives such fond caress
As dainty maidens do to him address.
We might speak on and on till words did fail,
But here his visage with regret we veil.

Homes of Famous English Authors.

Mr. Pyre, having been requested by his classes to give a lecture on the homes of famous English authors, which he visited during a recent trip abroad, delivers the following:

“Well, we rose early one morning, had a good breakfast and then strolled about the town. It was Sunday, so we could not see much. As we walked along we remarked the fact that everything was quiet; nothing was running but the river and my companion said that it made no difference whether the river ran on Sunday, or not, for it was dammed anyway. (Here he smiles.) Well, we had lunch after that served by a pretty barmaid. (Here he smiles again.) The next day we wheeled out of Edinburgh and you know we had never been on wheels before so we could not go very fast, but we made ten miles an hour, which was pretty good time for us who had never had any practice. (Here he smiles.)

“Being rather warm we went for a swim and had a good bath. I'm sorry that I can't tell you more about the homes of the famous authors but I see the time is up.” (Loud applause.)

In Court of President's Bench.

PRESIDENT

vs.

GUY P. DODGE.

Killing Tame Geese.

RECORD.

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN, }
COLLEGE OF LAW. } ss.

The jurors of our lord the president upon their oath present, that Guy P. Dodge, of the College of Law, in the University of Wisconsin, hunter, on the thirtieth day of November, in the third year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles Kendall Adams, by the grace of God, of the United Colleges of the University of Wisconsin president, defender of the faith, with force and arms in the County of Dane, State of Wisconsin, did wantonly and wilfully shoot into and kill a flock of ten tame geese, then and there being in a little bay at the west end of Lake Mendota, in the county and state aforesaid, and belonging to one H—, farmer, of the county and state aforesaid ;

And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present, that said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, at the time and place of said shooting and killing, as aforesaid, did firmly believe that the said tame geese so shot and killed by him, the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, as aforesaid, were wild geese, and that he, the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, was in great luck in so shooting and killing the said tame geese, as aforesaid ;

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, stated unto one L—, student, of the College of Law, in the University of Wisconsin aforesaid, that he, the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, had "Never struck such a great snap before," (referring to the shooting and killing of the tame geese, as aforesaid), and that he, the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, shot into the said flock of geese, as aforesaid, a "good many times" before the said geese were all dead, as aforesaid, and that the said geese flew not away, but allowed him, the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, to shoot and kill them, as aforesaid ;

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, was forced to pay unto the said H—, farmer, for the value of said tame geese so shot and killed by him, as aforesaid, the sum of one dollar and fifty cents for each and every goose so shot and killed by the said Guy P. Dodge, hunter, as aforesaid, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of fifteen dollars ;

To the great scandal, infamy and damage of the said H—, farmer, and of the students of the said University of Wisconsin, to the evil and pernicious example of all others, in contempt of our said lord, the president, and his subjects, and against the peace of our said lord, the president, his chair and dignity.

FOREMAN

Grand Jury.

Trial being had upon the indictment as above set forth before a jury of his peers, and the said defendant, Guy P. Dodge, hunter, by his attorneys, having entered a plea of partial insanity, a verdict was entered, finding the said defendant, Guy P. Dodge, hunter, guilty of the facts as charged, but held him free from punishment on the ground of irresponsibility for his acts.

There was a sweet maid from Eau Claire,
Who, when her fond lover did swaire
That if she'd not wed,
He'd shoot himself ded,
Said: "Go on with your slaughter, seau thaire!"

Two Days.

Monday.

Long I studied in the alcoves,
Hoping some professor kind,
Would discover my industry
And I great reward should find.

But not a single prof. then saw me,
And when my class room soon I sought,
Alas! I was not even called on,
So my bucking went for naught.

Tuesday.

But when upon the upper campus,
Where it lingers 'long the lake,
Far removed from thoughts of study,
She and I a walk did take

Three or four professors passed us,
While we the happy hours beguiled;
They called on me in class next day,
And when I flunked they smiled.

WEAR THESE TONIGHT

W. G. Watrous

"Wear these tonight! And so to say,
When stand I in thy eager sight,
My life, my love are thine alway—
"Wear these tonight!"

Amid the throng, in blaze of light,
Where music swells, where all is gay
You ask to read my heart aright

Or roses, blushing to betray
My love: A plot of winged wight,
Dare Cupid!—Ah,—well wooed to pray
"Wear these tonight!"

Charles Floyd McClure.

SEPTEMBER 20.—Arrived in Madison three days ago, did not mind leaving home at all. Had a jolly time on the train. Came to Ladies' Hall, and everybody has been so good to me. About sixty girls have called on me. They have taken me boating, riding, bought me candy and flowers. Do not know why they think so much of me. Such lovely girls, too.

Yesterday there was an address given by Pres. Adams, in Library Hall. I was sitting next such a sweet, friendly lady, who was smiling at everybody, and I asked her if that funny man with the long hair was Pres. Adams. She smiled still more, and said yes. I asked her why he did not have his hair cut. When we were coming out one of the girls asked me what I was talking to Mrs. Adams about.

OCTOBER 15.—I did a most dreadful thing to-day. I am so afraid it will be put in the BADGER. Some of the girls want to be in though, for, as Annie Scribner says, one is so obscure if one isn't. Clare Lyon don't care a bit. She told me she has known for a long time ever so many jokes that are going in on her.

OCTOBER 16.—Visited the Psychology class to-day. A boy near me put his hat on the seat in front of him. The bell had already rung, when a girl they call Nell came hurrying in. She never looked, and sat right down on that hat. She was no small girl, either. During the hour Dr. Sharp remarked that even our clothes come to resemble us. He knew a man who said as soon as he had a hat long enough to look like him, something happened to it. The boys laughed, and the poor girl grew so red. I shall be so glad when I am a Senior and in those funny classes.

DECEMBER 20.—Wrote on History examination to-day. Examination was held in physical lecture room. Prof. Haskins took a chair and sat down in the back of the room. We were all writing for dear life, when suddenly there was the greatest sound of scrambling. I just turned my head enough to see Prof. H.'s feet where he usually wears his head. He had tilted his chair too far and over he went. His head is too heavy, I believe. He knows so much.

JANUARY 21. I have had so many callers. My card basket is nearly full. Then, sometimes the boys don't send up cards. Next time I shall do as Margaret Rogers did. She was going to a party, and her escort sent up no card. Margaret wouldn't go down until the maid went back for one. She said, "I don't care, girls, your basket shan't be filled before mine."

That famous "Ikey" Karel came to dinner to-day. I was so angry I sat at the other end of the dining-room. My neck is lame from twisting to see him. Clara Linde must be a perfect Rip Van Winkle. Why, she said she never heard of him!

FEBRUARY 16.—What a dreary day this has been—no callers—no fun of any description. I have been thinking all day of the folks at home. I can see father sitting with his back to the light, reading, and mother near by writing—to me, probably. I can see the river, sparkling in the moonlight, and hear the faintly muffled sounds of the rapids. How I wish I were there—oh! mother, mother.

How He Won.

JOHN ran a race. This is a simple declarative sentence, of which John is the subject. John was also the object of a practical joke, the subject of which was the race. A further analysis of the sentence shows that John has a great penchant for cross-country runs and hare and hounds chases. John has the reputation of being a good runner, and in order to establish his reputation he proposed to a few of his friends that they should have a cross-country run. His friends willingly accepted and it was decided that the race should take place next morning, and that John should be hare. According to the programme, John started off next morning clad in a light running suit, and his friends who were the hares were to follow fifteen minutes later. John ran hard, and John ran faster and faster, over hill and through dale. Finally he stopped, and deciding that he had gone far enough, began to retrace his steps. He came back at a slower pace and looked eagerly for the hares, but he had evidently gone too fast for them, for they did not appear. On he went, expecting every minute to see the panting hares, but no hares appeared. He was nearing home, but without finding a trace of his friends. John hurried home; upon looking for his companions he found them discussing the race problem, which was to be debated in literary society that evening. That is why John does not enter cross-country runs as the hare any more.

A Pressing Engagement.

When he was a Freshman green
'Twas plainly to be seen
He pressed his suit.

When he was a Junior gay
This was often the way
He pressed his suit.

When he a Senior Law became
His occupation was the same.
He pressed his suit.

My Literary Recollections.

XII.—How I Wrote "Inconstancy."

(BY KIND PERMISSION OF THE JOURNAL.)

YES, I'm an old man! Sitting here, surrounded by every comfort, I realize that I am very lonely. Never before have I felt so keenly the need of a kindred spirit. I yearn for the tender caresses, the sweet smiles and the many delights that only a woman's presence can bring. The dancing flames in my cheerful grate fire throw shadows upon a black garment hanging up in yonder corner; and as my gaze rests lazily on it my thoughts revert to happy college days.

Again it is commencement; I stroll upon the shore of Lake Mendota, and bid farewell to the haunts that soon shall know me no more. Just now I am exultantly thinking of the stupid old world, as yet blissfully unconscious of the (hitherto slumbering) genius so soon to burst upon it. Suddenly I come upon a picture at once charming and distressing.

About ten yards in front of me the most beautiful maiden in all the world stands on tip-toe, one round, white arm held high above her head. The black student's gown falls in graceful folds about her slender form; the golden head is crowned by the black cap, and the delicate, flower-like face is thrown into strong relief by its dark setting. In reaching up for the last, solitary cluster of locust blossoms the treacherous gown had caught on a dead branch, and she is held as in a vice. I hasten to her assistance. For one blissful moment I hold her in my arms, then we walk on together. And now I live over again the agony of that day when I received the box containing that torn black gown, a few faded flowers, my numerous letters to her and one addressed to me—Well! well! Yes, yes, I'm a lonely old man.

Jumping Jerusalem! I say, Jack, old fellow, what a racket you're making! By-the-way, what time is it? Nine o'clock! Nine, did you say? By the blue blazes, though she does think rather too much of me, she won't very readily forgive me for cutting my engagement. What in the name of all my ancestors made me go off into a snivelling revery like that. Ah, I remember reading in the Cardinal that the Seniors had adopted the resolution to wear the cap and gown at commencement exercises.

My readers will probably see without further explanation the connection between the foregoing incident and this exquisite production:

Yesterday she smiled:
With gladness all the world was filled,
In harmony all nature thrilled.
Each pulsing, perfumed summer air
Upon its fragrance seemed to bear,
And breathe the accents of her voice;
Etc., etc.

To-day she frowned:
Dark, driving clouds have hid the sun.
The world is gloomy. One by one
The happy dreams of yesterday
Have vanished from my heart away,
Etc., etc.

[This intensely interesting series of papers was begun in the December number of the Journal, and will probably be continued for some years. In next month's issue an interesting account of "How I Wrote Senioratha" will appear.]

William the Conqueror.

"I will perform a mighty feat!"
The Freshman boasted, loud,
"So that my mamma and my class,
Will be extremely proud."

William the Conqueror, unobserved
By this youth indiscreet,
Came up to witness, and to,—but Behold the mighty feet!

A Tank Drama.

I.

A MAIDEN fair
With golden hair
And eyes of deepest blue ;
An oarsmen bold
Whose deeds are told
When men talk of the crew.

II.

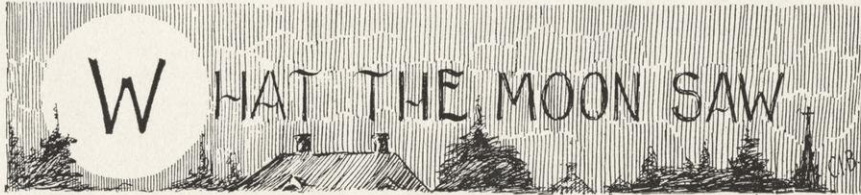

This maiden sweet
Fell from her seat
And in Mendota sank ;
But the oarsman brave
Jumped over to save :
He'd practiced in the " tank."

III.

He called next day
She answered yea—
The cards were soon sent out ;
Now who will say
The tank don't pay
When this story they read about ?

Pretty co-ed
May lose her head
When she comes
To college.
But let her alone
And she'll come home
With that pretty head
Filled with knowledge.

The old moon, dears, sees many strange things. Perhaps few in the world have better chances to throw light on dark subjects. I remember one night as I came lazily up, laughing at my bright, full face in the lake, I saw a comely, athletic youth with a fair maiden walking down the pretty green-walled lane. Of course, I was curious; who wouldn't have been? So I crept behind a veil of clouds, letting a soft light fall on the scene. Ah! I thought there is no need for me to shine brightly, since this youth is so strong and bold. Just then, from behind a dark clump of bushes, sprang a fearful, muffled figure, who shouted, "Your money or your life, your life or your money!" Now is the time for my Hercules to show his valor, but alas! while the maiden shrieked with terror, the youth, with goodly haste, fled. I laughed till the stars looked on in astonishment, as laughing faces peered from the bushes and the highwayman shouted, "Ha! ha! and you from Ripon."

Another night all was still, and I felt stupid, indeed, as I sailed along, my head in a nightcap of clouds. I looked, as I am wont, at Ladies' Hall with one eye—for generally here I have a good laugh. What strange sights I have seen at strange hours on those fire escapes and at those windows! But this night I must have been late—only one or two windows were bright. I have noticed this is generally the case after half-past ten, since Dr. Frisby gave her lecture on saving gas. A sharp Delta Gamma whistled, followed by a cautious Chi Psi, startled me. Again it was given and again. I really grew anxious—however, there was no need. Jessie Hand's sweet hallo was heard over many well-known giggles. Then bump! bump! went down from the second floor that basket I have seen so many times on similar occasions with exclamations of "Oh! good!" "How sweet!" I shone my brightest with delight at those goodies—for I almost smelt green cheese (perhaps only olives, though)—quite forgetful this was a proceeding which better be kept dark. At a whispered "All right!" that basket began to ascend—slowly, oh! with how many ejaculations of fright. It caught on the windows beneath, tipped, rocked, the girls tugged frantically. It was up safely. The dark figures below scattered rather sooner than they might, I imagine, but for an ominous sound from the first floor. A few minutes later I heard such sounds of glee as the girls assembled for a royal spread, the remembrance kept me smiling the rest of that evening.

This reminds me of another night at the Hall. The girls were making fudges. I could see the merry eyes intent on that pan of steaming liquid, so carefully stirred by fair hands. Outside, too, I could see six hungry maidens also intently gazing on the black contents of that pan. The night was cold and clear. As I saw the pan placed on the sill to cool, I cast weird shadows outside to help in the fun. From the weary group of watchers a tall form glided softly toward that window. A moment of agonizing suspense followed, then subdued shouts of joy from the six forms which stole away with their prize. I followed them with curiosity until I saw the six seated with glee around the pan. Then an empty pan—six maidens sick—of life. Later, an empty pan on the window-sill. I peeped in and saw a slip of paper on which was written in orthodox school-boy hand: "The fudges was to soft; please put in some more sugar next time."

In Physiology Class.

Prof. Birge (to Miss G-le)—How do the lachrymal glands secrete tears?

Miss G-le—A spirit cometh forth from heaven, it may be the spirit of a great man, it may be what a hod-carrier thought—it does not matter. Heaven has a language of its own into which earth's thoughts are translated. It may be a little red worsted mitten, ravelled at the wrist. It may be the white hyacinth saying "I shall grow forever." An oriole swings on the lotus bough and listens; on that day the body of a man is washed ashore near the wharf. By the fire two children are sitting, roasting chestnuts, and she looked at them often with so much love in her face. And he went down into the barber shop and laid the coppers on the table. If life was only just beginning. But she was young and the world was wide. The ethereal soul is struck. It is shaken to its very foundations. It quivers and trembles. It is agitated. It is convulsed by new, by tender emotions. From its very core, from its center, there goes forth the pure, the chaste, as from heaven's gates. A moment, an impulse! A negative virtue? It travels along its smooth pathway. Yes, it melts its soul. Nothing is lost in the world—nothing. Fibres quiver. The fountains of pity are opened; they bubble forth; they trickle down the haggard cheek of a poor forlorn fellow with unkempt hair and beard and rough, red hands and——

Prof. Birge—That may do.

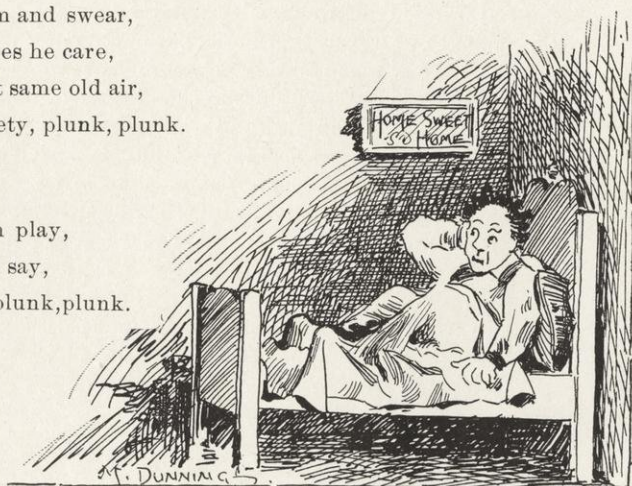

There is a fellow across the way
 Who plays the banjo night and day,
 And all you ever hear him play
 Is plunk, plunk, plunkety, plunk, plunk.

He plays along with might and main,
 Be it foul or fair, be it snow or rain,
 And, oh! it is that constant strain,
 That plunk, plunk, plunkety, plunk, plunk.

You sit here in your room and swear,
 But he can't hear, nor does he care,
 Only goes on playing that same old air,
 The plunk, plunk, plunkety, plunk, plunk.

It is his hope that some fine day
 On the Banjo Club they'll let him play,
 But he won't if we have aught to say,
 With his plunk, plunk, plunkety, plunk, plunk.

Plot for a Novel.

Prof. Fortenbaugh calls on young lady instructor. Young lady much troubled on receipt of card over what to call him. Finally decides on Forten-bo.

Young man shown in. With assumed calmness y. l. i. says: "Good evening. So glad to see you, Mr. Forten-gay."

First topic of conversation (introduced by Mr. F.)—Removal of Faculty table from Kelly's, and meeting of young bachelor professors in Dr. Snow's room to draw lots and see which shall marry and board the others. Mr. F. informs y. l. i. with becoming blushes that lot has fallen to him. Then confides that there is one he would like to know better. Y. l. i. sympathizes, and offers to help Mr. Forten-bo to meet young lady. Mr. F. appreciates sympathy, but shows slight uneasiness at pronunciation of his name.

Second Topic—Mr. F. begs pardon and calls attention to fact that his name is Forten-baugh, not Forten-bo, and that he is Pennsylvania Dutch.

Third Topic—Mr. F.'s special fancies (in order of increasing intensity and prefaced by "Oh, dear me!" in explosive accents).

1. Young ladies in general.
2. Young lady in particular.
3. Pennsylvania Dutchman.
4. Bull dogs.

Call closes after exhaustive discussion of bull dogs.

When Emily is There.

The lectures never seem so long
When Emily is there.
The recitations sound like song ;
Professors smile more kindly then ;
And drooping spirits rise again
When Emily is there.

All the room seems bright and gay
When Emily is there.
The hour is one long gala day,
I sorrow when I know 'tis through
The heavens e'en seem brighter blue
When Emily is there.

But sadness drives my joy away
When Emily is gone.
The room is dim, the sky is gray,
And all the birds refuse to sing,
I wait and pray the bell may ring
When Emily is gone.

Overheard on the Campus.

The grave old Alumnus is toiling up the hill, half-regretfully noting the many strange faces in the throng that hurries from Main Hall to Science—from Rosy's domain to the welcome precincts of the library. But a jolly voice rings in his ears: "Hullo, old man! Glad to see you back,"—and Davy—the irrepressible Freshman he so vainly advised and guided all through his Senior year—is before him. "When did you come? Going up? Good. I'll just walk along with you. Lots of strangers, eh?"

"Say, here come two new girls, Gamma Phi Freshmen. The taller one went down to Moseley's the other day to get a check cashed. She asked 'Hoppie' if she should write her address after her name. He said 'No' it would be enough if she just wrote Freshman, and by Jove, she did it.

"And the other one, too. 'Rosy' asked her what it means in the Minnesänger where it says, 'They sing of every highness that stirs the lives of men,' and she answered, 'Love,' very impressively. Rather young for such wisdom, ain't she?"

"That man? Why, he's the physics professor. Says the quaintest things in his lectures. The other day he informed us that Mr. Fahrenheit took the greatest cold ever known.

"There go the Inseparables. From eight in the morning till six at night they go from recitation to recitation—hand in hand. It's the only genuine Eastern "crush" we have in college.

"Here comes Daisy Sames. In French the other day Prof. Owen called on her for a place she hadn't read. But with the help of the girl next she got along very well until she came to a place where it said something about 'small talk.' Then she misunderstood what the girl next told her and read 'small dog.' Her explanations were funny.

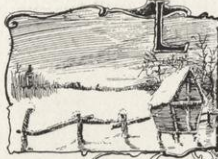

"But funny things happen in that French class. You should see the sketch Prof. Owen made of Richelieu's eyes; and yesterday Jessie Hand was reading about two men's fighting. 'One was very successful,' she read. 'What does that mean?' asked Prof. Owen. 'Oh,' said Jessie, 'he hit him every time.'

"Remember that girl—Katherine Falvey—a Senior, has a faculty of making pithy remarks. In Shakespeare once Prof. Freeman asked Alec Paul for a quotation from 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' He couldn't think of any, so Prof. F. said 'Miss Falvey, you start him out on one,' and she did—'What fools these mortals be.'

"Well, old fellow, I leave you here. So long. See you later."

THE BACHELOR'S REVERIE

Now in the west the sun descends -
The shadows longer growing
Soft warmth the heaping hearth-fire kind,
-Dull coal in the fender glowing

In polished floor and trophied wall
Reflected lights are quivering
Like Katama haze thrown over all
Hosts converse all entrancing

The ice-age flies from my brain,
And in its floating haze
I picture her, my heart's desire
My love of other days...

And half I wish that of this scene
Her presence were a part
And half I wish, "it might have been."
A dull ache at my heart

And yet I would not have her
That I live in the past -
That I echo said I loved her so
I've felt the poison last.

The Kettle from the swinging crane
Hangs low, and softly sings,
The polished brass reflects the flames,
What up the flue are singing

How that! A knock without the door?
Not doors at this hour?
Come in! - This is a beastly bore -
Your Mai? By all the power!

Your wife wants me to come tonight?
To dinner? Kathrya there?
Last four is right? This is not right -
Oh! well, it's hardly fair!

Kathrya sends word that I must come?
That well reviews the past?
And you must hurry right back home?
Your doing things up fast!

He's gone. No, James, put on the light.
Take off that striped coat.
Tell Remus I dine out tonight -
Take care! That thing is hot.

Where did you put my razor, James?
Lay out my dress and shoes
These last lawn ties - Good-bye to dress
Whoever had the bloom!

Charles Floyd McClure

From the Student's Own Jingle Book.

There was a little boy and he had a little crib,
 All written out on his cuff, cuff, cuff,
 And he wrote down all he knew, but they didn't let him through,
 For the Prof. knew it was all a big, big, bluff.

Over the "Hill" and far away,
 That is where the Agrics stay;
 'Tis much they learn, and much they know,
 For in three short months they come and go.

There was a little man, and he had a little sign,
 That hung right over his door, door, door.
 But alas, it caught the eye
 Of two Freshmen passing by,
 And he hasn't his little sign any more, more, more.

There was a young man from Racine;
 For cross-country runs he was kine;
 He ran as a hare,
 But the hounds were not thare,
 So when he came back he felt grine.

A Freshman from Manitowoc
 Imagined himself born to toc;
 He tried it, alas!
 Before his own class,
 And proved himself naught but a goc.

I once had a nice little cane, boys,
 The prettiest cane in the world;
 The stick was real thick and short, boys,
 Just the kind to be gracefully twirled;
 But I lost my poor little cane, boys,
 As I played on the campus one day;
 And I cried for nearly a week, boys,
 For the Sophomores took it away.

Their Perfume Lingers Still.

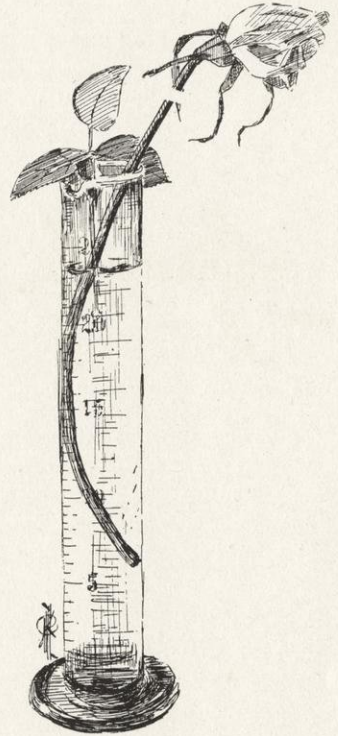

How well I remember
The flowers she wore
The eve of the Athletic Ball.
What fond recollections
And trials by the score
Those blush-tinted roses recall.

How oft do I wonder
If she, the coquette,
Knew half of the trouble they wrought.
Does she ever think
That they trouble me yet,
That big box of roses I bought?

“Bought,” did I say?
Yes, by all that is true,
I thought I could pay for them soon,
But I was mistaken,
And now I am blue,
For I might as well cry for the moon.

For all of my creditors,
Near and afar,
Declared they could trust me no more,
Till I hadn't a nickel
To buy a cigar,
Much less those sweet roses she wore.

My dress-suit and watch
I have put in the “soak,”
And I'm living on hope, that is all;
And 'twas all on account of—
Of course, sir, I smoke—
Of those roses she wore at the ball.

A True Story from Greece.

It was in the midst of the rushing season, and the Phi Chi's were hard at work. They looked carefully over every new man who came to town, and were not satisfied with sending delegations to all the trains, but sent men out to board incoming trains at the neighboring towns. A couple of them boarded the Eau Crosse special at Blanktown one morning, and sauntered leisurely down the aisles. A well-dressed young fellow, buried in a newspaper, attracted their attention. He was good looking, with a smooth face and curly hair. Slipping into an empty seat behind him they sat for a moment, when one of them leaned forward and spoke to him. "Going to the University, sir?" "Why, yes," answered the youth, turning and smiling upon them. "Are you students?" Then they introduced themselves and kept on talking until they reached the station. The young man was not familiar with the city, and their offer to help him find his room was readily accepted. How they rejoiced at the looks of envy on their rivals' faces as they piloted their protégé through the waiting crowd. They worked hard to get his room settled, and took him to supper with them, and then over to their lodge. The other boys were delighted. "A corker!" "Dead swell!" etc., etc., were some of the fellows' opinions. They were seated around the open fireplace talking, when to the inquiry as to whether he didn't think they had a nice lodge, the young man replied: "Most delightful; very homelike indeed. It reminds me very much of our Kappa Delta Theta lodge at Amherst." There was a long silence, and everybody seemed to be thinking hard. The youth seemed to think it out first, and rising, said: "I must go now, boys, and I want to thank you all for your kindness. I shall be glad if some of you are in some of my classes. I am the new instructor in history, you know." And they thought they knew.

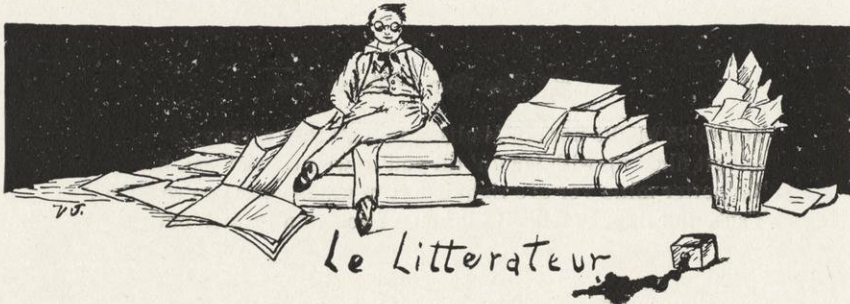

Conundrums.

What scale of music is personified by the instructor in philosophy? F Sharp.

When is a tanner like one of the professors of history? When he has skins (Haskins).

What is the difference between a Japanese lady and a person who fans Miss B-r-t-n? One flirts a fan, the other fans a flirt.

Why should Mr. Sober not be anxious for promotion in his profession? Because he already stands high enough.

I.

I court a carelessness in dress
To make my genius shine;
A careful studied consciousness
Of negligence divine.

II.

I never think to brush my clothes,
My hat, though shabby, suits;
A doubtful shade of linen goes—
I never shine my boots.

III.

I simply dote on oddity;
'Tis thus with all great men,
Who, living in obscurity,
Sway millions with the pen.

IV.

I'm called the bard of Madison,
And likened to Tom Hood;
In prose I follow Addison,
Though 'tis oft misunderstood.

V.

When here my stay is ended,
Out in the world I'll go,
And for what I am intended
All men, at last, shall know.

Hand Painted.

If her face is her fortune,
You'll admit it as true
That she's made her own fortune,
As many girls do.

Ef You Don't Watch Out.

You folks what's here in Madison to tend the 'versity,
An' git filled up with larnin' till you're wise as wise can be,
'Ist better mind yer eye right smart 'n watch what you're about,
'Cause the BADGER folks'll git you, ef you don't watch out.

Onct they wuz a lawyer man what lost a wheelbarl bet,
'N when he come to pay it off you bet it made 'im sweat;
He had to wheel so far 'at he 'ist most went up the spout,
'N the BADGER folks'll git you, ef you don't watch out.

'N onct they wuz a little boy—I 'low ter dodge his name—
What shot a lot o' ducks one day, not s'posin' they wuz tame;
An' every time he'd come to class they'd be a gin'ral shout,
'N the BADGER folks'll git you, ef you don't watch out.

So when you're in the class-room, be careful what you say,
Don't speak 'ntil you're spoken to, and don't be gittin' gay,
'N don't be makin' any breaks, because they haint no doubt
But the BADGER folks'll git you, ef you don't watch out.

GRIFFINDS

Some Shakesperian Quotations.

G-RGE H. K-TZ.—Vex not his ghost: O let him pass.

L-S M. W-RD.—O that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek.

FR-D K-LL.—I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

THE SENIOR CLASS.—Lord! What fools these mortals be!

THE SOPHOMORE CLASS.—There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond,
And do a willful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dressed in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say, "I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!"

J-HN H. B-C-N.—So wise, so young, they say, do never live long.

CH-RL-TTE B. FR-M-N.—For she is wise if I can judge of her,
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true.

G-D-N B-NS-N.—Time himself is bald, and therefore to the world's end will have bald followers.

G-Y L. F-ST-R.—Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike.

CH-RL-S E. H-LB-RT.—If I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.

H-W-RD S. C-DY.—It is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching.

TH-M-S P. S-LV-RW-D.—Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

W-SS-N J. D-G-N.—What a beard thou hast got! Thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin, my fill-horse, has on his tail.

AL-NZO R. SM-TH.—The mightier the man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honored, or begets him hate;
Gnats are unnoted wheresoe'er they fly,
But eagles gazed upon with every eye.

IK Y K-R-L.—This was the noblest Roman of them all.

- ERN-ST L. H-CKS.—With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come.
 Why should a man whose blood is warm within Sit like his grandsire carved in alabaster?
- D-V-D R. J-N-S.—Thy tongue
 Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penned.
- B-RTHA C. K-MB-LL.—And for I know she taketh most delight
 In music, instruments and poetry.
- K-TE N-Y-S.—Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
 Kate, of Kate Hall, my superdainty Kate,
 For dainties are all Kates, and therefore, Kate,
 Take this of me, Kate of my consolation.
- GL-NN D. D-CK-Y.—When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live 'till I were married.
- ALB-RT O. WR-GHT.—I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly.

- VR-M-N M-S-N.—
- CH-RL-S F. McCL-RE.—The lunatic, the lover and the poet
 Are of imagination all compact.
- H-RRY A. H-RD-NG.—I am but mad north-north-west ; when the wind is southerly
 I know a hawk from a handsaw.
- ARTH-R L. G-DD-RD.—I would my horse had the speed of your tongue.
- THE DEBATER.—Here's a fellow frights English out of his wits.
- G-ST-V A. H-N-M-NN.—Hath more hair than wit, more faults than hairs and more wealth than faults.
- EX-M-N-T-N D-Y.—We fail !
 But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
 And we'll not fail.
- EL-Z-B-TH K-NG.—A maiden never bold ;
 Of spirit so still and quiet.
- SH-RL-Y T-RR-NT.—Put off your maiden blushes,
- DR. FR-SBY.—Her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.
- MISSES V-N BR-S-N.—As hazel-nuts and sweeter than the kernels.
- J-C-B F-HR.—
- H-N-Y F-HR.—Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves
 That could not live asunder.

Z-NA G-LE.—Gives to airy nothing
 A local habitation and a name.

L-TH-R L-M-N.—
 FL-R-NCE M-LL-R.—You are a pair of strange ones.

C-LLA P. W-ST-V-R.—Her eyes are gray as glass.

B-SSIE ST-NB-RG.—By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady. There's little of the melancholy element in her.

H-NRY F. ST-CK-R.—Know you he loves her? I heard him swear his affection.

“JUG” BR-WN.—
 “TOT” I-G-RS-LL.—
 “TOOTSIE” H-NT-N-T-N.—As school-maids change their names
 By vain, though apt, affection.

JESSIE H-ND.—I pray you do not fall in love with me,
 For I am falser than vows made in wine.

R-B-RT W-LD.—O, good old man, how well in thee appears
 The constant service of the antique world.

G-RGE J-N-S.—I have no ambition to see a goodlier man.

H-NRY M-NKE.—Such a one is a natural philosopher.

W-LT-R A. S-TH-RL-ND.—Sir! I am a true laborer.

BL-NCHE SH-R-R.—Do you not know I am a woman?
 When I think, I must speak.

GLEE CL-B.—Sing it; 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

R-WL-NS P. ATW-LL.—O, a most dainty man!
 To see him walk before a lady and to bear a fan!

H-NRY R. CR-ND-LL.—What shall I call thee when thou art a man?

H-R-M A. S-B-R.—He's not very tall—yet for his years he's tall.

J-HN M. B-FF-L.—His heart is as far from fraud as Heaven from earth.

THE HILL.—To climb steep hills requires slow pace at first.

H-RR-T B-RNT-N.—Happy in this,
 She is not yet so old but she may learn.

L-CY M. G-Y.—I have loved her ever since I saw her.

P. G. G-RL.—I'm your wife, if you will marry me.

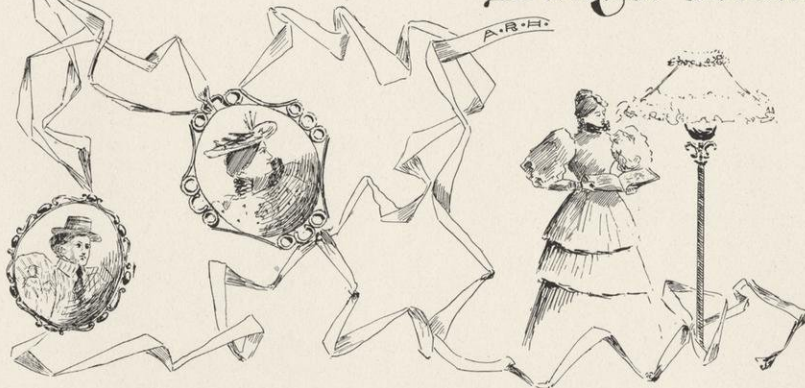

N-MI E. M-LV-LLE. Like Juno's swans,
 C-R-L-NE D. SP-NCE.—Still we went coupled and inseparable.

UN VRAI CONTE

He was an Artist
And she was a maid
As fair as fair could be
"I will not have you
Sir, she said,
"I'll draw you then", said he.

So when the Annual came out,
O'er every page she pored;
She found' her features
Everywhere
And felt quite Badger bored.

Though Nestor swear the joke be laughable.

EDNA K-MB-LL.—In truth, sir, she is pretty, honest, and gentle.

CH-RL-S F. H-G-M-N.—My wife! My wife! What wife? I have no wife.

M-Y P-ND-L-T-N.—Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

IRA L. C-LE.—Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice.

W-LL-M H. H-Y.—Good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.

N-LLIE B. MCGR-G-R.—Whose virtue and whose general graces speak
That which none else can utter.

IDA M. B-SHN-LL.—I'll speak in a monstrous little voice.

J-S-PH F. M-RSE.—By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is a-weary of this great world.

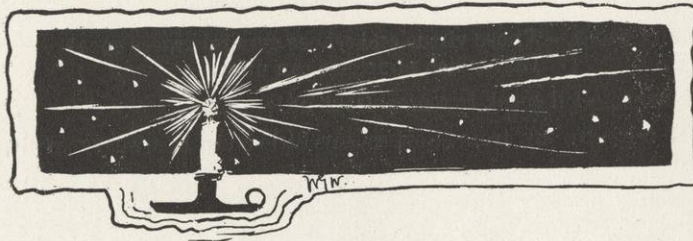

BADGER BOARD.—Now go we in content,
To liberty and not to banishment.

Our Work is Done.

Our work is done,
And as we lay our pens aside,
And our treasure to the world confide,
Be it good or be it bad;
We say, and saying it, are glad
Our work is done.

If some there are who criticise,
We shall not feel a great surprise;
No kind of work could mortal frame
That some would not find words to blame.
If anyone in truth complain
That we have caused him needless pain,
We can no more than say 'tis true
That we have not intended to.
One thing alone we make our boast,
We have not stooped to vengeful roast.
We hope our readers this will find,
We've tried in all things to be kind.

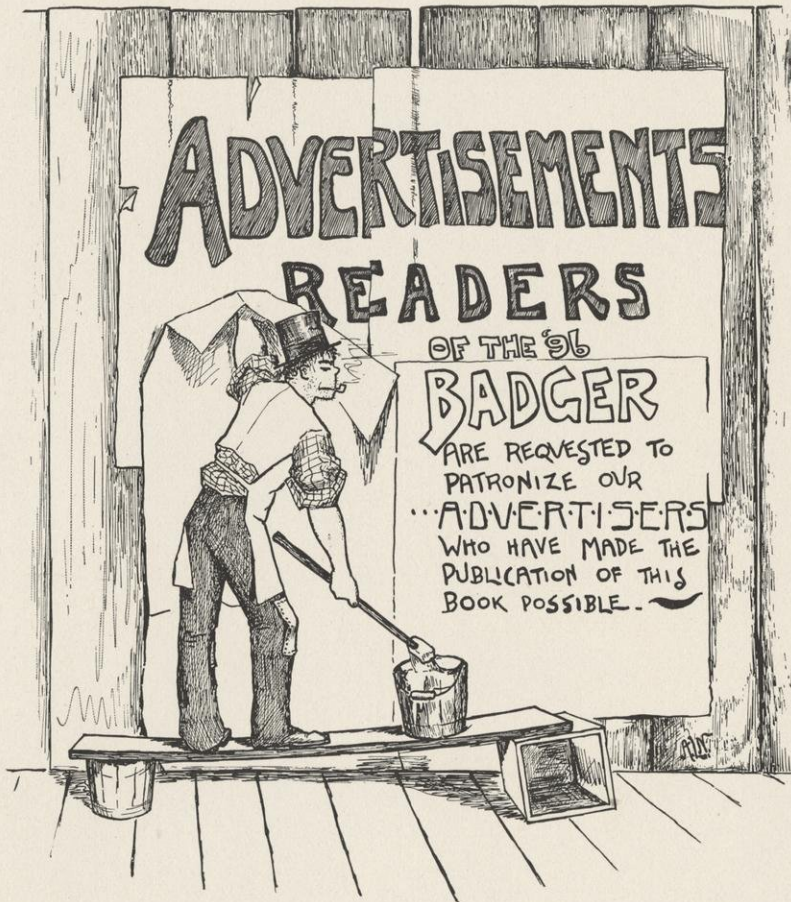

Our work is done,
And as 'tis done so let it stand,
The first rough product of our hand.
We leave our book alone with you,
Repeating, as we say adieu,
Our work is done.

We have made special arrangements for the coming season to show all the NEW and LEADING styles in textures and fabrics that are produced in this and FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

We have likewise made special study of cutting and making FIRST-CLASS GARMENTS, that, in point of fit and gracefulness, will compare favorably with Tailoring produced anywhere.

We sell FINE and HIGH-CLASS Ready-Made SUITS and OVERCOATS, as well as First-Class Furnishing Goods — the Latest in HATS — all at LOWEST PRICES. All we ask is,

Come and Do Business with Us and You will be Treated Right.

MEDICAL SCHOOL, Chicago
 Medical College.

TWO courses are offered, one of four years of eight months each, the other of three years of eight months each. This second course is open to graduates of the special antecedent medical course at the University of Wisconsin. The laboratory and clinical facilities which the school now offers, deserve the careful attention of medical students. Beginning with the session of 1895-6, the department of Physiology will be in charge of a salaried professor whose exclusive time will be given to that work. For circulars of information, address the secretary.
