PREFACE.

This volume was prepared under the direct supervision of E. Ralph Perkins, formerly Chief of the Foreign Relations Division. He was assisted by S. Everett Gleason, the present head of the Division, and by Fredrick Aandahl. The compilations on the work of the European Advisory Commission were done by William Slany. The bulk of the documentation on Germany was compiled by John P. Glennon and former staff member Douglas W. Houston. The latter is also the compiler of the documentation on Austria. The remaining compilations on Germany were the responsibility of two former members of the Division: N. O. Sappington and George O. Kent.

Acknowledgment is also made to the historians of the Department of Defense, particularly those of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, for their valuable assistance. The editors are also grateful for assistance received from the staff of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park, N.Y.

The Publishing and Reproduction Services Division (Jerome H. Perlmutter, Chief) was responsible for the technical editing of the volume. This function was performed in the Historical Editing Section under the direct supervision of Elizabeth A. Vary, Chief, and Ouida J. Ward, Assistant Chief.

PRINCIPLES FOR THE COMPILATION AND EDITING OF "FOREIGN RELATIONS"

The principles which guide the compilation and editing of Foreign Relations are stated in Department of State Regulation 1350 of June 15, 1961, a revision of the order approved on March 26, 1925, by Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, then Secretary of State. The text of the current regulation is printed below:

1350 DOCUMENTARY RECORD OF AMERICAN DIPLOMACY

1351 Scope of Documentation

The publication Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, constitutes the official record of the foreign policy of the

IV PREFACE

United States. These volumes include, subject to necessary security considerations, all documents needed to give a comprehensive record of the major foreign policy decisions within the range of the Department of State's responsibilities, together with appropriate materials concerning the facts which contributed to the formulation of policies. When further material is needed to supplement the documentation in the Department's files for a proper understanding of the relevant policies of the United States, such papers should be obtained from other Government agencies.

1352 Editorial Preparation

The basic documentary diplomatic record to be printed in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, shall be edited by the Historical Office, Bureau of Public Affairs of the Department of State. The editing of the record shall be guided by the principles of historical objectivity. There shall be no alteration of the text, no deletions without indicating where in the text the deletion is made, and no omission of facts which were of major importance in reaching a decision. Nothing shall be omitted for the purpose of concealing or glossing over what might be regarded by some as a defect of policy. However, certain omissions of documents are permissible for the following reasons:

a. To avoid publication of matters which would tend to impede current diplomatic negotiations or other business.

b. To condense the record and avoid repetition of needless details.

c. To preserve the confidence reposed in the Department by individuals and by foreign governments.

d. To avoid giving needless offense to other nationalities or individuals.

e. To eliminate personal opinions presented in despatches and not acted upon by the Department. To this consideration there is one qualification—in connection with major decisions it is desirable, where possible, to show the alternatives presented to the Department before the decision was made.

1353 Clearance

To obtain appropriate clearances of material to be published in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, the Historical Office shall:

a. Refer to the appropriate policy offices of the Department and of other agencies of the Government such papers as appear to require policy clearance.

b. Refer to the appropriate foreign governments requests for permission to print as part of the diplomatic correspondence of the United States those previously unpublished documents which were originated by the foreign governments.

I. NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENTS REGARDING THE ZONES OF OCCUPATION AND CONTROL MACHINERY FOR AUSTRIA 1

60. Department's 10719, December 26, 8 p. m.² While awaiting my general instructions on the question of a zone of occupation in Austria I have had Mosely 3 present to Gousev 4 and his assistant, Ivanov,5 the American viewpoint in favor of taking the present Gau 6 boundaries of Vienna rather than the pre-1938 limits and of dividing Innere Stadt ⁷ district among the occupying powers.

Our viewpoint has been presented forcefully and in detail but it is too early to discover whether the Soviet insistence on the pre-1938 boundaries has been modified.

At tonight's meeting of the European Advisory Commission Massigli 8 explained that the French Government would want to station a token contingent in Vienna but not take a zone in the rest of Austria in view of its hope that a large part of the available French forces would be committed to the occupation of a zone in Germany. Please furnish paraphrase to Generals Hilldring 9 and Strong. 10

107. For the Secretary and for Assistant Secretary Dunn.¹¹ This morning Mr. Eden 12 expressed to me his grave anxiety over our continued delay in stating our views on the question of zones of occupation in Austria. He fears very strongly the long run effects of further delay in getting down to negotiations on Austria. He pointed out particularly the serious situation which will develop if the Russians secure effective control of Austria without our having made a prior agreement with them to share equally in control. In that case the influence of America and Britain may be excluded and their interests neglected in Austria as completely as in Bulgaria 13 and Rumania,14 and this in spite of the Three Power Declaration on Austria signed in Moscow. 15

The Soviet proposal for an American zone was foreshadowed in my 10348 of November 24, 7 p. m. 16 A full summary was transmitted in my 10441 of November 27, 3 p. m.¹⁷ Some of the far reaching implications involved were set forth in my 10864 of December 8, 6 p. m. 18 Your 10317 of December 9, midnight 19 reported the favorable decision in principle by the President and the Department and stated that final instructions awaited action by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Since then 26 days of valuable time have been lost. Negotiations for American and British participation in control of Austria prior to German surrender, which the Department raised in Moscow in October (Department's 2453 to Moscow, October 17, 8 p. m.20), are in abeyance pending receipt of basic instructions concerning an American zone. I cannot urge too strongly the need for immediate action, since major interests affecting our position and our relations with our Allies are involved.

Washington, January 5, 1945-8 p. m.

117. Eacom ²¹ 41. With reference to our 10317, December 9, 1944, midnight, ²² the following expression of views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff concerning "Acceptance by the United States of a zone of occupation in Austria" has been received:

"There are no military objections to any occupation of Austria by U.S. forces.

"Should it be decided, for reasons other than military, to have U.S. forces occupy a zone in Austria, an area bounding on Bavaria would be preferable, particularly from a logistical point of view. In this connection the zone in northwestern and western Austria proposed for U.S. occupation by the Soviets is acceptable except for Ost-Tirol. Since the only road or rail communications through Austria from Ost-Tirol to the remainder of the country are through the province of Kärnten it is considered that Ost-Tirol should properly be included in the same zone with Kärnten. Assignment of zones in the Vienna area should insure adequate administrative and transportation (water, rail and air) facilities to all three occupying forces. The Soviet proposal appears to provide each zone with the necessary rail facilities but practically all of the municipal and federal headquarters are located in the Innere Stadt which is included in the Soviet zone. It is believed that the Innere Stadt may have to be divided among the three powers perhaps by the adjustment of proposed boundaries. The U.S. zone in Vienna must extend sufficiently beyond the city limits to provide adequate air facilities for U.S. forces within the zone.

"Acceptance of the Soviet proposal will not increase the number of U.S. forces remaining in Europe for at least the first year after hostilities cease, since availability of shipping will preclude their earlier withdrawal. After that time, the exact strength and duration of the U.S. commitment will depend upon Austrian reactions and future political decisions, which cannot now be determined."

The Department concurs in these views and, accordingly, you are authorized to accept the Soviet proposals, subject to the modifications set forth above.²³

Memorandum by the Political Adviser to the United States Delegation to the European Advisory Commission (Mosely)²⁴

[Extract]

[London,] January 9, 1945.

The U.S. Delegation feels that there are important practical advantages to be gained by the use of the present boundaries of Vienna, together with the present district boundaries within Vienna, as a basis for military government. It believes the use of the present boundaries will better serve the accomplishment of the vital political objectives of the occupation of Austria than the use of the pre-1938 boundaries.

1. Allied Military Government in Austria will have a number of vital and difficult tasks to accomplish, among them, the separation of Austria from the Reich, the supervision and administration of local government, the creation of a new Austrian central administration, the thorough de-Nazification of Austrian life, the sorting out and transfer home of large numbers of displaced persons, the direction of Austrian economy, including its reorientation away from Germany, and the preparation of conditions for democratic self-government. To add to these tasks, which are of the highest political importance, the very complicated job of re-drawing local administrative boundaries and of re-aligning local administrative functions to fit the resulting changes would enormously complicate the work of Military Government.

In their work of removing all vestiges of Nazi domination in Austria, it would seem important for the Allies to concentrate their effort on the major issues. Surely the Austrians will be much more impressed if the Allied administrators conduct a thorough purge of administrative personnel and take vigorous steps to recreate a central administration for Austria than if the Allied administrators dissipate their time and effort in trying to accomplish a complicated series of petty administrative changes.

If the present administrative boundaries of Vienna are retained provisionally, the area would again be called by its traditional Austrian name of "Land Wien", and Nazi institutions and terminology, such as Gau, Gauleiter, ²⁵ Reichsstatthalter, ²⁶ etc., would be abolished at once. It would also be made clear to the population by proclamation that as soon as conditions are favorable they will have an opportunity to decide whether they wish to remain in an enlarged Vienna or to be reintegrated into their pre-1938 administrative units. The Austrians have long been accustomed to the administration of Vienna as a Land; it would not seem unusual to them for Vienna to continue, for the time being, as a Land with an increased area and a population increased by some 200,000.

Memorandum by the Department of State 27

TREATMENT OF AUSTRIA—SUMMARY

I. The basic aim of American policy in Austria is its immediate separation from Germany and establishment of an independent Austrian state. This aim is expressed in the Moscow declaration of November 1, 1943 (text attached in Appendix I), which promised Austria liberation from German domination and pledged the three powers to open the way for the Austrian people themselves to find that political and economic security which is the only basis for a lasting peace. Austria's strategic location in Central Europe makes both its future internal stability and its relations to neighboring states a matter of pressing concern to the international community and to the United States.

III. The aims of American policy, the Moscow Declaration, and the requirements of general security can best be achieved by the following steps:

A. Complete tripartite military occupation and government of Austria. (To assure us a full voice in Austria, the Department of State recommends that we occupy a zone equally with the British and Transmitted as an enclosure to Department's instruction 5107, February 15, 1945, to London. This document was one of a set of papers being transmitted for urgent delivery to the United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs, Mr. John Erhardt. Also included were two memoranda prepared by the Committee on Post-War Programs of the Department of State and approved by the President on June 27, 1944: PWC-218, "The Treatment of Austria", dated June 8, 1944, and PWC-217a, "Summary: The Treatment of Austria: Policy Recommendations", dated June 21, 1944. For texts of these memoranda, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 438 and 447, respectively.

Russians. It is clear that we cannot have an equal voice without equal participation in the actual occupation. The Department of State recommends that changes be made in the Soviet proposal for zonal occupation to enlarge the area of the City of Vienna to include the Gau of Vienna to extend tripartite division to the Innere Stadt of Vienna, and to include Ost-Tirol in the same occupation zone as the province of Kärnten).

B. Legal, administrative and economic separation from Germany, and denazification.

C. Treatment different from Germany, designed to foster:

1. Restoration of self-government at local and national levels as rapidly as military exigencies and internal political conditions permit;

2. Révival of a sound Austrian economy within the framework of European reconstruction;

3. Prompt establishment of an independent Austrian state.

IV. It is in the interest of the United States that Austria develop that type of political and economic structure which will not place it in the position of a special ward of the international community or of any single power. The Austrian people should be free to determine their own form of government and the adjustment of their political and economic relations with their neighbors with the proviso that the new regime be democratic and that it accept such international responsibilities and obligations as the tripartite powers may see fit to impose.

ECONOMIC TREATMENT OF AUSTRIA

SUMMARY

The United States is committed to the political objective of a free and independent Austria. Stable and prosperous economic conditions in Austria would provide a strong underpinning for political independence and encourage support from the Austrian people for a separate Austrian sovereignty.

From the moment of occupation it will be necessary to commence the reconstruction of the Austrian economy. The tripartite military government should at once undertake the eradication of German economic influence in that country as well as the denazification of economic life. It must provide some substitute for German economic administration and should sequester all Reich German properties in Austria and administer them on behalf of the eventual Austrian Government. It should take steps to establish financial autonomy, including an exchange of currency and probably the payment of interest on the public debt. Within its capabilities it should attempt to revive civilian production in order to avoid large-scale unemployment and to satisfy essential requirements. Finally it should encourage the revival of Austria's foreign trade and if necessary bring in relief supplies of foodstuffs and perhaps materials for the rehabilitation of Austrian industry.

Most of the longer-range economic problems in Austria can be dealt with effectively only when an acceptable indigenous government comes to power. In the settlement of occupation costs Austria should bear the cost of all expenditures incurred in the country by occupying forces and should be charged for the value of the relief imports. On the other hand, it should be credited for the amount of troop pay spent in the country. It is recommended that Austria should neither pay nor receive reparation. Payments by Austria would threaten its economic viability, while Allied claims to German reparation will be so large that Austria cannot be allotted a share. By the same token, Austria should not obtain any compensation from Germany for German currency, public debt, etc., held in Austria. The Allied powers should assist the eventual Austrian Government in a long-range program of economic and financial reconstruction, in particular by helping it to obtain foreign markets and credits. Austria should be admitted eventually to any world economic organizations that may be formed (including the World Fund and Bank). In addition the major Allied powers may have to make loans to Austria justified on political rather than commercial grounds.

the city to return to an old line which has the merit of ignoring the Nazi delimitation of the city but also ignores its natural delimitations.

We note that the sole Soviet objection expressed by Gousev to the Vienna Gau line is its Nazi origin. If you consider it a useful move, the Department would be glad to take up with JCS ³¹ consideration of a new line drawn in EAC to take in a slightly larger area than the Gau (rather than the smaller area proposed in the Soviet draft) in order to meet Gousey's desires.

(It is recalled that in the Department's 117 January 5, 8 p. m. the JCS did not necessarily propose the Gau line as such, but rather that the U.S. zone in Vienna must extend sufficiently beyond the city limits to provide adequate facilities for US forces.)

ALLIED CONTROL MACHINERY IN AUSTRIA

I circulate, as a contribution to the discussions in the Commission, the draft of an Agreement between the four Powers outlining the structure and functions of the Allied Control Machinery in Austria. I trust that my colleagues will be willing to discuss this draft at an early meeting of the Commission.

- 2. The draft Agreement is designed to cover the period from the surrender of Germany or the cessation of organised German resistance until the establishment of a freely elected Austrian Government.
- 3. The draft proposes, in Article 14, that the system to be applied during the period after the establishment of an Austrian Government will form the subject of a separate Agreement between the Four Powers.
- 4. Interim arrangements for Four-Power Allied control in Austria will, however, in the view of the United Kingdom Government, also have to be made for the period between the occupation of Vienna and the entry into force of the proposed Agreement. A proposal in this sense was made on 30th October, 1944, by the United Kingdom Government to the Soviet Government in a letter addressed to M. Molotov ³³ by His Majesty's Ambassador in Moscow, ³⁴ a copy of which was circulated to my colleagues on 1st December, 1944.35 In reply, the Soviet Government suggested that this question should be discussed in the European Advisory Commission at the same time as the questions of the zones of occupation and of Allied control machinery in Austria. I should welcome an early expression of the views of my colleagues on this proposal.

Draft Agreement on Allied Control Machinery in Austria 36

(U.K. Delegation 24th January, 1945)

The Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the Provisional Government of the French Republic:

in view of the declaration issued at Moscow on the 1st November. 1943 in the name of the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. whereby the three Governments announced their agreement that Austria should be liberated from German domination, and that they considered themselves as in no way bound by any changes effected in Austria since the 15th March, 1938, and declared that they wished to see re-established a free and independent Austria; have reached the following agreement with regard to the Allied Control Machinery in Austria during the period from the surrender of Germany or the cessation of organised German resistance until the establishment of a freely elected Austrian government.

ARTICLE 1

The Allied Control Machinery in Austria will consist of an Allied Council, an Executive Committee and staffs appointed by the four Governments concerned, the whole organisation being known as the Allied Commission for Austria.

ARTICLE 2

(a) The Allied Council will consist of four Military Commissioners, one appointed by each of the Governments concerned. In addition Delegation on January 24, 1945.

⁸⁵ Not printed; regarding a parallel approach made by the American Chargé in Moscow (Kennan), and summary of reply from Molotov, see telegram 2453, October 17, 1944, to Moscow, and telegram 4214, November 3, 1944, from Moscow, Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 466 and 467, respectively.

28 Circulated in the European Advisory Commission by the United Kingdom to being members of the Allied Council, the Military Commissioners will each be in supreme command of the forces of occupation in Austria furnished by his Government. Supreme authority in Austria will be exercised jointly, in respect of matters affecting Austria as a whole, by the Military Commissioners on instructions from their respective Governments, in their capacity as members of the Allied Council. Subject to this, each Military Commissioner, in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the forces of occupation furnished by his Government, will exercise supreme authority in the zone occupied by these forces. Each Commander-in-Chief in his zone of occupation will have attached to him for liaison duties military, naval and air representatives of the other Commanders-in-Chief of forces of occupation in Austria.

- (b) The Military Commissioners will be replaced as soon as military conditions permit by civilian Commissioners;
- (c) The Allied Council will meet at least once in ten days; and it will meet at any time upon request of any one of its members. Decisions of the Allied Council shall be unanimous. The Chairmanship of the Allied Council will be held in rotation by each of its four members;
- (d) Each Military Commissioner will be assisted by a political adviser, who will, when necessary, attend meetings of the Allied Council.

ARTICLE 3

The Executive Committee will consist of one high-ranking representative of each of the four Commissioners. Members of the Executive Committee will, when necessary, attend meetings of the Allied Council.

ARTICLE 4

(a) The staffs of the Allied Commission in Vienna, appointed by their respective national authorities, will be organised in the following Divisions:—

Military; Naval; Air; Economic; Finance; Internal Affairs; Labour; Legal; Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons; Political; Transport.

Adjustments in the number and functions of the Divisions may be made in the light of experience.

- (b) At the head of each Division there will be four officials, one from each Power. Heads of Divisions will take part in meetings of the Executive Committee at which matters affecting the work of their Divisions are on the agenda.
- (c) The staffs of the Divisions may include civilian as well as military personnel. They may also, in special cases, include nationals of other United Nations, appointed in their personal capacity.

ARTICLE 5

The Allied Council will:—

- (a) initiate plans and reach decisions on the chief military, political, economic and other questions affecting Austria, on the basis of instructions received by each Commissioner from his Government;
- (b) ensure appropriate uniformity of action in the zones of occupation.

ARTICLE 6

The Executive Committee, acting on behalf of the Allied Council, will:—

- (a) ensure the carrying out of the decisions of the Allied Council through the appropriate Divisions of the Allied Commission referred to in Article 4;
- (b) co-ordinate the activities of the Divisions of the Allied Commission, and examine and prepare all questions referred to it by the Allied Council.

The Divisions of the Allied Commission will:—

- (a) advise the Allied Council and the Executive Committee;
- (b) carry out the decisions of the Allied Council conveyed to them through the Executive Committee.

ARTICLE 8

The primary tasks of the Allied Commission for Austria will be:-

- (a) to ensure the enforcement in Austria of the Instrument of Surrender of Germany;
 - (b) to achieve the separation of Austria from Germany;
- (c) to secure the establishment, as soon as possible, of a central Austrian administrative machine;
- (d) to prepare the way for the establishment of a freely-elected Austrian government;
- (e) meanwhile to provide for the administration of Austria to be carried on.

ARTICLE 9

In the period before the establishment of departments of a central Austrian administration, which period shall be as short as possible, the decisions of the Allied Commission, insofar as they may require action in the respective zones, will be carried out through the occupying forces. The necessary instructions to the occupying forces will be given by the respective Military Commissioners, in their capacity as Commanders-in-Chief, on the basis of decisions of the Allied Council. In enforcing the terms of surrender and in conducting or directing the administration in their zones in accordance with such instructions, the occupying forces will make use of such Austrian administrative organs existing in the provinces as can be used.

ARTICLE 10

As soon as departments of a central Austrian administration have been sufficiently established, they will be directed to assume their respective functions as regards Austria as a whole. In the fulfilment of its tasks, the Allied Commission will thenceforward work through such departments. It will then be the duty of the Divisions to control the activities of the respective departments and to communicate to them the decisions of the Allied Council and Executive Committee.

ARTICLE 11

- (a) An Inter-Allied Governing Authority (Komendatura) consisting of four Commandants, one from each Power, appointed by their respective Commissioners, will be established to direct jointly the administration of "Greater Vienna". Each of the Commandants will serve in rotation, in the position of Chief Commandant, as head of the Inter-Allied Governing Authority.
- (b) A Technical Staff, consisting of personnel of each of the four Powers, will be established under the Inter-Allied Governing Authority, and will be organised to serve the purpose of supervising and controlling the activities of those local organs of "Greater Vienna" which are responsible for its municipal undertakings.
- (c) The Inter-Allied Governing Authority will operate under the general direction of the Allied Council and will receive orders through the Executive Committee.

ARTICLE 12

The necessary liaison with the Governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such Governments of military missions (which may include civilian members) to the Allied Council.

ARTICLE 13

United Nations' organisations which may be admitted by the Allied Council to operate in Austria will, in respect of their activities in Austria, be subordinate to the Allied Commission and answerable to it.

ARTICLE 14

The nature and extent of the Allied direction and guidance which will be required after the establishment of a freely elected Austrian Government will form the subject of a separate agreement between the four Powers.

985. Comea 38 164. I am glad to have in reserve the suggestion contained in Department's 566, January 24, midnight that the Russian objection to Nazi origin of present boundaries of Gau Vienna might be overcome by a slight enlargement of the present territory The Russians have not vet replied to the substance of our argument and Gousev probably took my memorandum (my 460, January 13, 6 p. m.) 39 to Moscow. While they have not said so, I believe the Russian delegation prefers the pre-1938 smaller boundaries of Land Vienna because they leave a larger area in the presumptive zone of Soviet occupation.

1050. Comea 165. A large part of last night's meeting of the European Advisory Commission was devoted to discussion of zones of occupation in Austria. The United Kingdom representative stated that his Government accepted in principle the French request for a zone (my 849, January 24, 7 p. m.40). Later, without committing his Government to any specific zone, Strang made the "technical suggestion" that Tirol-Vorarlberg be assigned to French forces. Soviet acting representative, Sobolev,⁴¹ and I had no word from our Government on the French request.

At a later stage of the meeting, I inquired concerning the French position with respect to the Moscow declaration of November 1, 1943 on Austria, which is the basis of the joint responsibility of the three signatory powers for the restoration of Austrian independence. In response Massigli cited the declaration made on November 16, 1943,⁴² by the French Committee on Algiers, in support of Austrian independence, and stated that his Government would be glad to adhere to the Moscow declaration on Austria.

Strang, likewise, presented a new proposal concerning the Soviet and British zones, by which lower Danube Gau would form the Soviet zone and Styria and Carinthia, the United Kingdom zone. British objections to the British zone as outlined in the Soviet proposal were, one, that the proposed zone lacked any direct north-south communications and, two, that the Soviet proposal cut across existing provincial boundaries and would, if accepted, create great administrative inconveniencies. Strang stated that the United Kingdom Government could not accept the Soviet proposal with respect to the Soviet and United Kingdom zones. Strang noted that the two zones now proposed by his Government would be almost equal in population, while the Soviet zone would be somewhat smaller in area.

Massigli agreed to study the United Kingdom proposal for British and Soviet zones and expressed decided preference for keeping to major administrative boundaries. Sobolev took note of the United Kingdom rejection of the Soviet proposal and took the new United Kingdom proposal under advisement. I also promised early consideration of the United Kingdom proposal. In response to a Soviet request, Strang agreed to put the United Kingdom proposal in writing.

Strang gave firm support to the United States proposal to use the present boundaries of Gau Vienna in defining the central zone of joint control (my 460, January 13, 6 p.m.). Sobolev stated that he had no instructions concerning it.

In support of his proposal to use present Gau boundaries in laying out zones of occupation, Strang emphasized the importance of the Länder as units of Austrian political life, as well as the greater practicality of using seven Gau[s] or Länder as the basic units of administrative [administration?] instead of 83 districts, without prejudice to the right of the Austrians to work out a different administrative structure later if they so desired.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, January 30, 1945—8 p. m. [Received 10 p. m.]

1051. Comea 166. At last night's meeting of the European Advisory Commission the United Kingdom proposal on control machinery for Austria received a preliminary discussion (my 919, January 26, 5 p. m.; full text in my despatch No. 20639 of January 26 43).

Strang pointed out that his Austrian draft on control machinery differed from the agreement on control machinery in Germany in that central German administrative agencies had been assumed to exist in the German paper, while there were no central agencies in Austria. Accordingly, article IX of his draft described the relations between the Allied Commission and Austrian administrative machinery in the period prior to creation of central Austrian agencies, and article X in the period following their creation. He pointed out that article II gives greater prominence to the role of the Allied Commanders as members of the Allied Council than as Commanders-in-Chief of their national forces, since they might be expected to have relatively small forces under their command. The United Kingdom draft also assumes four power rather than tri-partite control.

At several points in the discussions Strang laid particular stress on the importance of reaching agreement on the arrangements for interim Allied control, to take effect as soon as Vienna is occupied and to continue until German surrender or collapse. In this connection he referred to stage 1 in the United Kingdom memorandum of August 21 ⁴⁴ (my despatch No. 17617 [17616] of August 23 ⁴⁵), to the British note of October 30 to Molotov, and to the covering memorandum transmitting the present United Kingdom proposal on control machinery. Sobolev had no comment to make on the interim arrangements, and Strang made no specific proposals.

Sobolev asked whether the "freely elected Austrian Government", mentioned in last paragraph of preamble to United Kingdom proposal, referred to a provisional or a permanent government. Strang's reply was that, in line with the thoughts outlined in his memorandum of December 14 ⁴⁶ on establishment of self government in Austria (my despatch No. 19893 of December 15⁴⁷), he had thought of Allied control as continuing until a free election of a permanent government; however, he considered this point suitable for discussion.

To Sobolev's query (article II A) as to why Naval liaison officers would be required, Strang referred to Danubian questions of common concern and to the precedent in the German control machinery, and offered to consider its admission. To Sobolev's query (article III) as to the difference between the executive committee for Austria and the coordinating committee in the German machinery, Strang expressed the view, one, that the committee would have to take a more direct role in the administration of Austria because of the absence of central Austrian agencies, and, two, that it would avoid confusion to use different names; he felt there was no fundamental difference between the two.

In article IV Sobolev queried the need for a Naval division, and asked the significance of omitting a division of restitution, deliveries and reparation; he wanted assurance that some provisions would be made for administering Austrian reparations. Strang replied that he had assumed that it might be better for psychological reasons, to administer reparations under the economic division in Austria, but was willing to discuss inclusion of a separate division.

Sobolev drew from the United Kingdom representative a definition of "to achieve separation" (article VIII B) as including complete separation from Germany, destruction of German administration in Austria and establishment of strict frontier control between the two countries. Sobolev asked whether article VIII D meant that free elections would be organized under the supervision of the Allied council. In reply Strang referred to article XV E of his December 14 memorandum; detailed preparation of elections could be carried out after establishment of a national committee; the elections would be conducted by the Austrians, not the Allies. However, the Allied machinery, he added, could transfer its functions gradually to Austrian agencies during the period leading up to free elections, and would give up those functions entirely after a freely elected government had been established.

Massigli suggested that the Allied Commission should continue its work until recognition of an Austrian government by the four Allied Governments. Strang offered to consider revising the last words of the preamble to read "A freely elected Austrian Government recognized by the four powers". With regard to article VIII A, Massigli suggested that the responsibility of the Allies for giving the new state permanent laws and institutions and for effecting fundamental reforms should be stated more positively. With respect to article IV A, Massigli stressed the importance of restitution and reparation in Austria, which had much factory equipment removed from occupied countries.

I suggested as comment, not as a proposal, that in view of the necessity of recreating a central Austrian administrative machine from the ground up, it might be better to group the related administrative functions in three or four large divisions, with suitable sections under them; for example, an economic division might contain sections for industry, agriculture, commerce, finance, manpower and reparation, each section to have a single head, rather than three or four heads.

It was agreed to continue discussion of control machinery as soon as the Soviet and French representatives receive instructions.

1138. Comea 169. My 1051 January 30, 8 p. m. reported a preliminary discussion by the European Advisory Commission of the United Kingdom proposal for control machinery in Austria.

My joint advisers 50 in collaboration with General Flory, 51 Colonel Carey, 52 Mr. Cecil Gray 53 and others of the nucleus United States Group Control Council for Austria 54 have made a preliminary study of the British proposals and I am submitting their recommendations for consideration by the Department in connection with any comments which it may be preparing on the United Kingdom draft. nucleus United States group expects to have the opportunity to submit their recommendations to General McNarnev 55 at an early date.

The nucleus United States group for Austria feels that the British proposals do not sufficiently take into account the basic difference in objectives between the occupation of Germany and the occupation The machinery to be set up in Austria should be designed to provide the most effective means of accomplishing the overall objective of welding the Austrian people into a united, free and independent state as set forth in JCS 1024 of August 27 56 and approved by the President.

A comparison of the British proposal for Austria with the agreement on control machinery in Germany 57 shows that the British give greater prominence in their Austrian proposals to the role of the Allied Commanders as members of the Allied Council in Vienna than as Commanders in Chief of their national forces in their zones. However, it is questioned whether the British draft goes far enough in emphasizing the necessity for uniformity of action through centralizing military government control in the Council.

The nucleus United States group for Austria feels strongly that bearing in mind United States overall objectives in Austria and the small size of the country the problems of any part of the country are of common interest and should be dealt with according to a joint policy; and that it is not enough to provide that the Allied Council will only handle "matters affecting Austria as a whole". Such a provision would leave the way open for any one commander to block joint action in any matter which he alone decided did not affect Austria as a whole.

I should appreciate having the Department's reaction to these suggestions as soon as possible for my guidance in early meetings of the Commission. I should also like to have the Department's views on the interim arrangements for Allied control between the occupation of Vienna and the coming into force of the proposed agreement.

1544. For Gray from Riddleberger. It is true as suggested in your 1921 February 24, 2 p. m., that the War Department desires to place in the hands of the American Commander in Austria an interim directive in which he can find guidance in the event that he should fail to receive such guidance either because of an interval between termination of SACMED ⁶³ and inauguration of an ACC ⁶⁴ or as a result of indecision by latter. The initial draft ⁶⁵ prepared by the War Department for this purpose was based on JCS 1067 without taking into account all the basic differences between Germany and Austria. The Department has now prepared a re-draft ⁶⁵ to incorporate appropriate consideration of the political differences between Germany and Austria. This is now being studied in the War Department. Erhardt was here when it was written and participated in one of our meetings with CAD ⁶⁶ officers.

While it would of course be undesirable to have such a directive solely in terms of 1067, a directive properly framed to suit the Austrian situation would be desirable. We are therefore collaborating with CAD in an endeavor to produce one. Although the Army desires it primarily for the guidance of US forces, it would also presumably be submitted to EAC for consideration as an interim directive to all commanders.

Some delay in the Department's telegrams on EAC business is inevitable since the Department refrains from sending such telegrams until they have been cleared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff or the War and Navy Departments. However, we will endeavor to keep these delays to a minimum and to keep you informed as promptly as we can under the circumstances.

We assume that the directives mentioned in your 1921 as being planned in London would not be in the nature of interim directives.

Dear Doc: At the request of General Meyer, 69 I attended this morning a conference of his staff group, including particularly Colonel Williamson,70 the Military Air Adviser. Others present included Lightner 71 in place of Mosely, and Colonel McCaffrey 72 of General Flory's group. The discussion concerned the new U.K. proposal for the subdivision of the Vienna area. It is assumed that you have in Washington a map illustrating the proposal.

Most of the discussion was devoted to the question of airports. Colonel Williamson made it plain that the air facilities are wholly inadequate in the zone allocated to the U.S. in this U.K. proposal. Attached is a copy of a memorandum of today's date by Colonel Williamson on this subject.78

The proposed Russian zone includes two airports, one of which is the best in the Vienna area, and the French zone includes the second best. There is no large airport in the zones proposed for the U.S. and the U.K. (In the Russian proposal made some time ago for the zoning of the Vienna area, all three of the airports are within the Russian zone.) Colonel Williamson stated that although the U.S. zone as proposed by the U.K. might include one or more small air strips capable of handling fighters or small bombers, it possesses no airport which could accommodate four-engined bombers or transports, even if enlarged to the limits of the surrounding terrain.

Colonel Williamson mentioned that the ATC 74 personnel required for Austria will number 4,000. Consequently he pointed out it is desirable to have an airport at or near which substantial housing facilities could be made available.

Colonel Williamson called attention to the fact that Vienna will be an important intermediate stop on the route to the Far East and adequate U.S. landing facilities are needed for communication and movement of personnel between the European and Pacific theaters.

Colonel Williamson is to bring these facts to the attention of Mr. Winant and a telegram will be drafted in the former's unit for transmission to the War Department.⁷⁵

The purpose of this letter is to provide you with this background and to say it was my impression that the inadequacy of air facilities in the U.K. proposal for our zone was not realized until Colonel Williamson pressed the matter. My contribution, bearing in mind briefing by Jimmy Riddleberger on the subject of air facilities, was to keep the subject under discussion until all the facts were brought out at the conference.

Faithfully yours,

They raised the point that the British and American groups working under SACMED might not be easily separable from AFHQ 76 at Caserta in view of their close integration there.

Mosely, who is now here, thinks the Russians might be presented with a similar difficulty and that if we were to approach them about congregation of the groups for Austria we should offer to locate them at a place agreeable to the Russians since they are sending their nucleus group for Germany to London to accommodate us.

Washington, March 15, 1945—midnight.

2007. ReUrtel 1051 January 30, 8 p. m. 1. In connection with the discussions on the control machinery for Austria the Department has noticed several statements by members of the EAC which apparently assumed that Austria would be required to pay reparation.

2. The Department is highly skeptical of Austria's capacity to make substantial reparation payments. In this connection your attention is called to the following considerations:

(a) In the process of being separated from Germany and reconstituted as an independent national state, Austria will lose the bulk of its most important market.

(b) Austria had a consistently unfavorable balance of trade throughout the inter-war period.

(c) The Allies' virtual cancellation of Austria's World War I reparation obligations as early as 1923 indicated their appreciation of Austria's difficult international economic position.

It is realized that the foregoing circumstances are not absolutely conclusive since Austria had a considerable number of unemployed before the war who might be put to work producing reparation goods, especially if the claimants devised means whereby to furnish Austria with the necessary raw materials. It seems to Department, nevertheless, that the facts of the situation give little support to belief that much reparation could be obtained from Austria.

- 3. Because of the dislocation of the Austrian economy which will probably ensue as a result of the country's separation from Germany, and because Austria is a food deficit area, there is a strong possibility that the country will stand in need of substantial relief and possibly also financial assistance in the early post-war years. While it is too early to state definitely whether or not the United States will desire to participate in such measures of assistance, it can be said with certainty that if the United States should furnish such aid it would expect that the repayment of its advances would enjoy priority over the payment of reparation. Moreover, the possibility of Austria's receiving financial aid from this country will be greater in the event that Austria has no reparation burden, for otherwise there would be the well justified apprehension that this country was in effect financing the payment of Austria's reparation.
- 4. By announcing their intention in the Moscow Declaration to establish an independent Austria the powers implicitly undertook to create economic conditions favorable to the preservation of Austrian independence. The Department believes that accomplishment of this task will be difficult enough even if Austria is not obliged to pay a significant amount of reparation.
- 5. It is believed that in your discussions of control machinery for Austria you should not continue to imply approval of the principle of Austrian reparation. Instead you should apprise the other members of the EAC of our views of the matter, as otherwise this Government may be placed in the false position of seeming to approve Austrian reparations when in fact we oppose them. It is therefore suggested that you discuss this matter with your British colleague on the Commission with a view to obtaining his support and that thereafter you take the earliest opportunity to set forth in the Commission this Government's position as stated above. You should emphasize strongly, however, that this Government does favor and expects the restitution of identifiable looted property found in Austria.⁷⁷

Caserta, March 17, 1945—midnight. [Received March 17—9:30 p. m.]

1015. From Gray. Your 221 of March 15, 1945, 9 p. m. crossed my 965 of March 14, 9 a. m. Due to the recent move of the United States group to Caserta, where it is now engaged in recruiting its planning staff and at the same time going forward with its planning work, it would not be at all practical to move the entire group from AFHQ. Accordingly General McNarney's cable to General Deane only contemplated a liaison group of 2 or 3 persons to meet with the Soviets, if the latter should be agreeable thereto. It is believed here that preliminary conferences, such as General McNarney had in mind, would determine whether working groups of the respective countries would later get together and if so, what place and in what strength. A sounding of the British military here gives every reason to believe that in so far as the military are concerned, they will go along with the procedure outlined above.

General Deane has replied to General McNarney's cable (my 965 of March 14, 9 a.m.) to the following effect: General Deane says lack of information on Austrian planning makes it difficult to offer any suggestions of value. The Soviets he says, do not bother very much about planning in advance. He refers to a letter sent to Harriman by Molotov in November 1944, in which Molotov indicated that the EAC should handle planning for the control of Austria. Deane goes on to say that he is of the belief that over and above this the Soviets will not go and will leave it to the troops of occupation to solve problems as they arise. Harriman has been shown General McNarney's cable and has wired Winant for information about the status of the Austrian work in the EAC. Deane will be glad to talk to the Soviet General Staff and at the same time ask Harriman to deal with the Foreign Office to the end that the Soviet Foreign Office will give authorization to representatives of the Soviets to get together with United States planners, so that United States and Soviet plans can be gone over and all details of coordinating and implementing them be worked out. If General McNarney reaches a decision to do this, Deane makes the recommendation that the Soviets be invited to come to McNarney.

⁷⁸ Latter not printed; it reported that General McNarney had telegraphed Maj. Gen. John R. Deane, the Commanding General, United States Military Mission to the Soviet Union, to inquire of Soviet authorities as to the feasibility of arranging conferences of a preliminary nature between representatives of the United States Planning Group for Austria and corresponding Soviet representatives (740.00119 Control (Austria)/3-1445).

This message has been cleared with Generals McNarney and Flory. Paraphrase of your 221 March 15, 9 p. m. has been repeated to London for Erhardt.

Sent Department, repeated to London for the Ambassador and Erhardt as 142. [Gray.]

The Ambassador in Italy (Kirk) to the Secretary of State

1044. From Gray. My 1015, March 17, 11 p.m. [midnight]. General McNarney has replied today to General Dean's cable as follows:

(Begin paraphrase) I am agreeable to your suggestion about discussing the matter with the Soviet General Staff subject to the provision that at the beginning our representation will only comprise a liaison group of two or three officers with the same representation from the British side. The question of any augmentation that may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out future details and coordinated planning should be determined by preliminary discussions between this liaison group and the representatives of the Soviets. In the event that no suggestions of a specific nature are made by the Soviets as to a place of meeting, please issue their representatives an invitation to proceed to Caserta or Rome. SACMED has cleared this message. (End paraphrase).

It may be noted that this entire matter for the present is proceeding through straight military channels. The inclusion of the British came about when the cable was presented to SACMED for clearance.

Sent Department; repeated to Embassy London for Ambassador and Erhardt as 147. [Gray.]

⁷⁹ In his telegram 1183, April 16, 1945, 10 a.m., the Ambassador in the Soviet Union reported that the draft proclamations for Austria had been communicated to the Soviet Government on April 15 (740.00119 Control (Austria)/-4-1645).

administration of Austria, and that the planning of individual Army commanders entering Austria should look forward to this.

CCS have now prepared two pre-surrender proclamations for use by any of their forces upon entering Austria, and, having the foregoing in mind, they have endeavored to draft them in such a way as to make them suitable for use by Soviet troops also, if desired. The name of the French Government will be inserted in them in the event of its participation.

In consultation with General Deane, and in concert with the British Ambassador, who will receive similar instructions, please inform the Soviet Government that we propose to place these proclamations in the hands of SACMED for issuance by any of his forces that enter Austria, and express the hope that the Soviet Government will consider it desirable to have their own forces also issue them or substantially similar proclamations.

Please report the decision of the Soviet Government, together with any comment it may wish to make.

Text of the two pre-surrender proclamations follows:

Draft Proclamation Number 1

"To the People of Austria:

Pending the establishment of an Allied Commission for Austria by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, I, (here insert description), hereby proclaim as follows:

1. The Allied Forces enter Austria as victors inasmuch as Austria has waged war as an integral part of Germany against the United Nations.

- 2. Nevertheless, the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have in the Declaration on Austria issued at Moscow on the 1st November 1943, affirmed their agreement that Austria shall be liberated from German domination and their wish to see her re-established in freedom and independence. In this declaration Austria was, however, reminded that she has a responsibility which she cannot evade for her participation in the war, and that in the final settlement account will inevitably be taken of her own contribution to her liberation.
- 3. Austrians now have the opportunity to contribute to the liberation of their country by rendering full cooperation by word and deed with Allied Forces and agencies and by affording them all possible assistance and support against the Hitlerite German oppressors."

"To the People of Austria:

Pending the establishment of an Allied Commission for Austria by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, I, (here insert description), hereby proclaim as follows:

Article I

In all areas of Austria occupied by my forces we shall destroy German militarism and the German war machine and overthrow the Nazi rule, dissolve the Nazi Party and abolish the cruel, oppressive and discriminatory laws and institutions which the party has created. We shall pave the way for a free and independent Austria.

Article II

All German control of Austria is abolished. Your political ties and obligations of obedience to the German Government are hereby terminated. Persons complying with any proclamations, orders, ordinances or other instructions which may hereafter be issued by or under authority of the German Government will be punished fully and promptly.

Article III

Supreme legislative, judicial and executive authority and powers within the territory occupied by forces under my command are vested in me as Supreme Commander of the Allied Forces and as military governor. Military government is established to exercise these powers under my direction. Any organization or individual failing to render full cooperation by word and deed with the Allied military and other authorities or failing to comply with any proclamations, orders, ordinances or instructions that may be issued under my authority will be punished fully and promptly.

Article IV

All officials and persons except those suspended or dismissed by the military government are charged with the duty of remaining at their posts until further orders, and obeying and enforcing all orders or directions of military government or the Allied authorities. This applies also to officials, employees and workers of all public undertakings and utilities and to all other persons engaged in essential work. All other persons should continue to pursue their normal occupations. The Order Police (Ordnungspolizei) and the Criminal Police (Kriminalpolizei) will be held responsible for the maintenance of law and order.

Article V

All Austrians not guilty of oppression, crimes or wrongs under the Hitlerite German tyranny will, provided that they conduct themselves peacefully and obey the Allied military and other authorities, be able to help in creating a free and independent Austria."

The United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Commanding General, Mediterranean Theater of Operations, United States Army (McNarney) 80

London, March 23, 1945.

DEAR GENERAL McNarney: In a letter of March 12, 1945,81 which reached me in London on March 15, 1945, Mr. Gray communicated the substance of a conversation of March 12th between you, General Flory, and himself on Austrian Affairs.

Gray informed me that during the course of the conversation, you had invited attention to a number of interesting and highly pertinent questions of policy and had indicated that you would be pleased to have an expression of my views in regard to them. The questions concerned,

(A) Reparations, Restitution and Removal of Property:

(B) Deportation of Labor;
(C) Reform of Land Ownership; and
(D) Allied Efforts to Influence Election Results.

I enclose herewith, for your consideration, a memorandum in which I have endeavored to cover the points raised. The memorandum embodies my personal views, and is based on discussions with Mr. Philip E. Mosely, Political Adviser to the United States Delegation, European Advisory Commission. Mr. Mosely returned to London on March 20, 1945, from a two weeks' consultative visit to Washington. I have also consulted, in general, with Ambassador Winant on these questions.

My discussions with the above two gentlemen, as well as with Colonel McCaffrey and members of our own planning group here, led to an examination of related topics, and for that reason the memorandum likewise includes brief observations on the "Nationalization of Industry and Other Property."

Perhaps you may care to have the statements of principle enunciated in the memorandum incorporated in the proposed MTOUSA Directives 82 which are being prepared for your approval. The Directives are then, as you know, cleared through the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of State in Washington, and thereupon come for endorsement before the European Advisory Commission.

Our method of operation continues to be through the European Advisory Commission in the final stage, as a means of securing agreement on the part of the Allied powers, and I agree with you and General Flory that the best way to obtain prompt action by the E.A.C. is to submit to that body draft proposals in the form of Directives. Our thought would be that the E.A.C. will approve the Directives and then recommend them to the four interested Governments.

The principles regarding the removal of equipment and other property from Austria might be incorporated in the proposed Directive No. 17, "Property Control." The principles on deportation of labor could be incorporated in the proposed Directive No. 22, "The Control of Labor." The policy of not attempting to influence the results of elections in Austria is to be included in a proposed Directive which is being prepared on the subject of local elections.

If we are fortunate enough to secure prompt action and agreement in the E.A.C. on our Directives, the situation in Austria after the Allied Commission has been established would appear to be adequately taken care of. In handling the problems which may arise in the preceding period of military operations, that is to say before the Allied Commission has been established, it seems to me that the best we can do is to try to make sure that this period is as short as possible. I think it is urgently necessary to achieve agreement among the major powers to the effect that as soon as the forces of one of them enter Vienna, the forces (or token forces) of the others should enter also, and that the Allied Commission should be established right away. Obviously, the key to this situation is an agreement with the Soviets. Your suggested military liaison group may find it possible to work out such an agreement with the Soviet representatives, if and when they meet.

Since the beginning of November 1944, it has been understood among the three Allied Governments that arrangements for participation in the pre-surrender control of Austria should be worked out in the European Advisory Commission subsequent to the negotiation of the agreement on Allied control machinery. In several informal discussions, the United States and the United Kingdom representatives on the E.A.C. have stressed the importance of providing for Allied participation in the control of Austria to begin upon the occupation of Vienna. The Soviets have so far given no indication of their attitude toward U.S. and U.K. participation in the control of Austria in the period prior to the surrender or collapse of Germany; this is a matter which will shortly be considered in the E.A.C. The U.S. delegation on the E.A.C. would be glad to have any informal comments which we may care to send to it directly on subjects relating to the extent of U.S. participation during this interim period. Obviously, General Flory and his staff would have suggestions in respect of the number of men required to make an appraisal of the situation in Austria at that time, solely from the point of view of military government, including questions of supply, displaced persons, refugees, public safety, and the re-establishment of border control.

Colonel McCaffrey concurs in this letter and in the memorandum, and I am sending copies of this correspondence to the State Department, for its information.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN G. ERHARDT

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs (Erhardt)

[London,] March 23, 1945.

A. REPARATIONS, RESTITUTION, AND REMOVAL OF PROPERTY

- 1. The Commission for the Compensation of Damage, agreed upon at Yalta,⁸³ is by its terms of reference confined to Germany. However, the terms of reference could be extended by tripartite agreement to cover Austria as well. So far it has been assumed that the problem of restitution, as distinct from reparations, will be handled in the EAC. (As used by our Government, "restitution" means restoration of identifiable looted objects, or, in the case of unique cultural objects only, transfer of objects of equivalent significance and value. "Reparation" covers all other forms of compensation for war damage and losses, including deliveries of non-looted equipment and property, deliveries out of current production, transfers of property owned abroad by Axis nationals, payments in money or foreign exchange, and performance of labor service.
- 2. Austria should not be required to make any substantial deliveries or payments on reparation account, but should be required to make restitution of looted property. No decisions have been reached as yet on the procedures for effecting restitution in an equitable manner; if deliveries of property by Austria are made only on restitution account, it might be desirable to pool all property subject to transfer or restitution, for equitable distribution among the claimants instead of applying the straight principle of transfer of identified property to former owners. For example, it would be unfair to French claimants if property removed from France at an early date had become used up or no longer identifiable and, therefore, could not be restored, while property removed more recently from Czechoslovakia was available for return to its owners.
- 3. We would have no objection to the removal from Austria of plants and equipment useful only for the production of war material, but we are definitely opposed to the removal of facilities essential for the civilian economy (other than facilities looted from Allied Countries).
- 4. In the period after the Allied Commission is established and has commenced operation, all proposals for the removal of equipment or property from Austria should be referred to the Commission before any action is taken; any such property removed as war booty during the preceding period of military operations should be accounted for and offset against claims for restitution. Agreement on these principles should be arrived at among all the occupying powers. It is hoped that the Allied Commission will be established very soon after the forces of any of the major powers have entered Vienna.

5. Any request by a commander-in-chief for the delivery of equipment or other property for the purpose of removing it from Austria should be passed on by the appropriate division of the Allied Commission. All other transfers of equipment and property between zones should be arranged through the Allied Commission. (All rolling stock, motor transport equipment, and telecommunications equipment in Austria should be operated on a nation-wide basis.)

B. Deportation of Labor

- 1. No general or indiscriminate draft should be made upon Austrian man-power for labor service abroad. However, ardent Nazis of Austrian nationality should be subject to labor service. For this purpose, categories such as the following might be employed: persons who were members of the Nazi Party prior to March 13, 1938; persons who were active proponents of Naziism thereafter; and persons who authorized or participated affirmatively in racial persecutions.
- 2. No commander-in-chief of any zone should deport Austrians for labor service by unilateral action. No action of this kind should be taken until the Allied Commission has been established and has passed on the question.
- 3. Relocation of labor within Austria, and conditions of labor, should be determined by the Allied Commission.

C. Reform of Land Ownership

1. As compared with certain other countries in central and eastern Europe, the ownership of farm land in Austria is not characterized by concentration in large estates. There are, however, large private holdings of forest land. It is possible that movements will develop to break up or nationalize holdings of either type. Also, the Allied Commission may find it necessary, as a part of the de-nazification program or otherwise, to take farm or forest estates into custody. In any such case, the Allied authorities should not promote or put into effect any program of reform of land ownership, but should leave this problem to be dealt with by the future Austrian Government. Any landed property taken into custody should be held in trust for the future Austrian Government, to be restored by the latter to the former owners, retained with compensation to the owners, or otherwise disposed of, as that Government may decide.

D. Allied Efforts to Influence Election Results

1. Control or supervision of elections by Allied authorities should be exercised solely for the purpose of insuring that they are honestly and freely conducted. The Allied authorities should make no attempt to influence the results of elections. Elections should be held as early as is practicable, at times and under safeguards agreed upon by the Allied Commission. It may not be feasible for local and provincial elections to be held simultaneously throughout the country. For example, firm registers may be established sooner in some areas than in others and relocation of populations may be completed more rapidly in some areas than in others.

E. NATIONALIZATION OF INDUSTRY AND OTHER PROPERTY

1. All industrial and other property seized by the Allied Commission from the Germans and from Austrian Nazis, or taken into custody for any other reason, should (except in the case of property needed for the use of the occupying forces and subject to restitution) be held in trust for the future Austrian Government, to be restored by the latter to the former private owners, retained with compensation to the owners, or otherwise disposed of, as that Government may decide.

European Advisory Commission is considering zones of occupation and Allied control machinery in Austria. It has before it Soviet and British proposals on zones and a British draft on control machinery. American views on these two subjects are being formulated in Washington for presentation to the Commission. Soviet views on the latest British zones proposal and on control machinery are awaited. At this time it is impossible to predict how soon these two agreements will be completed. Preliminary discussions indicate broad agreement on the principle of joint control of Austria in the period after the defeat of Germany.

I agree with General Deane's view reported by Gray (Caserta's 1015, March 17, midnight, to Department) that Soviet military authorities will be unwilling to engage in detailed planning with United States and United Kingdom nucleus control groups for Austria until agreements on zones and control machinery have been completed in EAC. At time when proposal to assemble the Soviet, United Kingdom, and United States control groups was initiated (Caserta's 489, February 9, 7 p. m. to Department) it was assumed here that discussions on Austrian arrangements would proceed more rapidly than has since proved to be the case. The liaison arrangements suggested by General McNarney would be of value as emphasizing to the Soviet authorities our desire to prepare the way for the smooth operation of Allied control in Austria.

Washington, March 24, 1945-6 p. m.

699. Planning for inter-Allied military government of Austria is now being considered in European Advisory Commission on the assumption that Austria will be occupied by, and administered jointly by, the US, USSR, and Great Britain, and possibly France.

Last August the British representative circulated in EAC a proposal 85 for zoning Austria to provide for its occupation by Soviet and British troops, and a token force of American troops, on the understanding at that time that the United States did not wish to supply a full share of occupation troops although it did wish to participate in the administration of Austria.

On November 23 the Soviet representative circulated in EAC for consideration a Soviet proposal 86 for the zoning of Austria to provide for Anglo-Soviet-American occupation on equal bases.

In January Ambassador Winant informed the Commission that the United States was prepared to supply troops to occupy a zone equally with the USSR and the UK, and that it could agree to this Soviet proposal with certain modifications.87

On January 24 the recently arrived French representative in EAC stated his government's desire in principle to have a zone of occupation.88

See footnote 23, p. 3.

⁸⁸ See telegram 1050, January 30, 8 p. m., from London, p. 13.

On January 25 Sir William Strang circulated a British proposal ⁵⁰ for four-power control machinery for the joint administration of Austria by all four powers, and on January 30 a proposal ⁵⁰ for the zoning of Austria for occupation by Soviet, British, American, and French forces.

All of the last three of these proposals are now under active consideration. This government has not yet formally expressed its views or learned the views of the other governments, although it is expected that all of the participating governments will shortly express their views through EAC on these specific proposals as such.

However, the British, Soviet, and American representatives in EAC have already expressed the intention of their governments in principle to undertake jointly the occupation and administration of Austria during the interval between its liberation from German occupation and the establishment of a suitable American government in the light of the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943.

British and American nucleus groups for the prospective interallied administration of Austria are being assembled, principally at AFHQ, Caserta, to plan detailed administrative measures in accordance with the basic plans agreed in EAC.

The Department agrees it would be desirable to establish contact between the British and American planners and the Russian planners for military government in Austria as suggested in General McNarney's message mentioned in your telegram 767 March 15, 8 p. m. 90a The Soviet Government has already expressed its intention to have its nucleus group for Germany join the British and American nucleus groups for Germany in London. We assume it would be somewhat inconvenient to detach the British and American planners for Austria from AFHQ at Caserta or alternatively to detach the Russian planners from their own military organization. If that should not prove feasible, it would no doubt be desirable, if the respective military authorities wish, to establish liaison in some way between the groups of planners for the occupation of Austria.

Washington, April 3, 1945.

Dear Jack: This letter is intended for your guidance in your new mission as United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs. In that mission you will have the responsibility of representing the interests and policies of the United States, and also will contribute toward the re-establishment of the independence of Austria in fulfillment of the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943, and the continuation of American policy towards Austria reviewed in the memorandum enclosed herewith.

You are attached initially as Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs to the Commanding General. American Forces in the Mediterranean Theater of Operations, and will later serve as Political Adviser to the Commanding General, United States Forces in Austria, whom you will advise in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the American Forces in Austria and American Member of the Supreme Allied Authority in Austria during the period of inter-allied military government following its liberation. In addition to the duties prescribed for political advisers in any international protocol agreed upon through the European Advisory Commission, you will advise the American Commander-in-Chief on all matters with which the foreign policy of this Government is concerned, and will in addition be responsible for representing the interests of this Government in any matters which may not be the responsibility of the Allied Military Commander. Personnel sent to Austria by the Department of State and other agencies of this Government will, insofar as they are not under the direction of the Military Commander, be subject to the exercise by you of the general supervision usually exercised by the chief of the diplomatic mission over American officials in foreign countries. Consular and other similar activities carried on for this Government as distinct from the military government of Austria will be under your immediate direction. It is contemplated that you will also serve as American head of the political division of Allied Military Government in Austria, under the direction of the latter, if desired by the American Commander.

In addition to representing the interests of the United States in all matters with which you are concerned, you will seek to have its policies carried out insofar as they concern Austria. At the present time these policies are set forth primarily in the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943, and in the principles enunciated by President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Marshal Stalin at Yalta.⁹¹ In collaboration with the other United Nations we intend to destroy Nazism and fascism, and take measures to preserve future peace and security.

The basic aim of American policy in Austria is its immediate separation from Germany and the establishment of a free, democratic,

Austrian state. It is in the interest of the United States that Austria develop that type of political and economic structure which will not place it in the position of a special ward of the international community or of any single power, but which will enable it to achieve future internal stability and mutually beneficial political and economic relations with its neighboring states.

The United States intends to execute these policies through the firm establishment of Inter-Allied Military Government in Austria designed to sever all ties with Germany and eradicate all German influence in Austria, and then to facilitate the establishment of a free and independent democratic state as soon as the Austrians are capable of accomplishing it. It intends for the present to recognize no group or groups either in Austria or abroad as constituting the government or official representatives of Austria until the Austrian people themselves, through democratic processes, can elect their own representatives or government. It intends, then, in agreement with the other states participating in the allied administration, to recognize such a government of Austria provided it be essentially democratic in character and accept appropriate internal and external responsibilities.

Depending upon the contribution of the Austrians themselves to their own liberation and reconstitution, the Government of the United States intends, in collaboration with our allies, to create conditions in which the Austrians can achieve their political and economic welfare in harmony with their neighboring states.

In the execution of these American policies and ideals you will contribute to the re-establishment of a country in the heart of Europe which has now been over-run by Nazi invaders but which should be destined after liberation to form a keystone in the regeneration of Central Europe, which itself is so vital to the peace and security of the rest of Europe and of the world.

My good wishes go with you in your mission towards these ends.
Sincerely yours,
EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR.

Memorandum by the Department of State

[Washington,] March 16, 1945.

Subject: United States Policy Toward Austria

March 1933-August 1939

The United States steadily regarded with favor the development of a free and independent Austria dedicated to democratic principles, and viewed with strong disapproval all Nazi attempts to force Austria into the German Reich, including the formal Anschluss in 1938.92

The latter, following repeated protestations by Hitler that "the assertion that the German Reich plans to coerce the Austrian state is absurd," became a fact when German troops marched into Austria to occupy it on March 11, 1938. An Austrian law of March 13, 1938 decreed that Austria was a province of the German Reich 93 and on March 17 the Austrian Minister in Washington informed the Department that Austria had ceased to exist as an independent nation and that it had been incorporated in the German Reich.⁹⁴ The German Ambassador transmitted a note to this effect on March 14, 1938.95

This fait accompli was faced in notes delivered to the German Government by the American Ambassador at Berlin in March [April] 1938 96 which demanded that Germany pay Austria's indebtedness to the United States, and, referring to the Austrian Minister's note, stated that this Government

"is under the necessity for all practical purposes of accepting what he says as a fact and accordingly consideration is being given to the adjustments in its own practices and procedure in various regards which will be necessitated by the change of status in Austria."

September 1939-December 6, 1941

This position was never considered to constitute de jure recognition of the Anschluss however. The attitude of the United States was constantly guided by its policy of refusing to recognize acquisitions of territory by force in violation of treaty obligations. In his radio address of May 27, 1941 97 President Roosevelt referred repeatedly to "the seizure of Austria" and described the Austrians as the first of a series of peoples enslaved by Hitler in his march of conquest. War-time administrative measures in the United States such as the freezing of assets, selective service, and registration of aliens, usually classified Austria among the territories seized or occupied by Germany by force.

The Atlantic Charter signed by President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Marshal Stalin [sic], on August 14, 1941, 98 included a declaration that

"Third, they respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign right[s] and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them."

December 7, 1941-date

To clarify confusion in the public mind regarding the status of Austria, Secretary Hull replied as follows to a question at his press conference on July 27, 1943 [1942]:

"It is probable that such confusion, if it exists, has arisen from administrative steps which may have been taken by this Government in pursuance of its own laws designed to afford adequate protection to this country's interests in dealing with the situation presented by the imposition of military control over Austria and residents of Austria by Germany. This Government very clearly made known its opinions as to the manner in which the seizure of Austria took place and the relation of that seizure to this Government's well-known policy toward the taking of territory by force. This Government has never taken the position that Austria was legally absorbed into the German Reich."

This Government's present policy toward Austria is recorded in the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943 in which it was declared that the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union

". . . are agreed that Austria, the first free country to fall a victim to Hitlerite aggression, shall be liberated from German domination. "They regard the annexation imposed on Austria by Germany on March 15, 1938, as null and void. They consider themselves as in no way bound by any changes effected in Austria since that date. They declare that they wish to see reestablished a free and independent Austria and thereby to open the way for the Austrian people themselves as well as those neighboring states which will be faced with similar problems, to find that political and economic security which is the only basis of lasting peace.

"Austria is reminded, however, that she has a responsibility, which she cannot evade, for participation in the war at the side of Hitlerite Germany, and that in the final settlement account will inevitably be taken of her own contribution to her liberation."

Policies for the Future

The United States intends to:

(a) Recognize no group or groups in exile as constituting the government or representatives of Austria.

(b) Establish Anglo-Soviet-American tripartite military government of Austria as soon as it is occupied. (French participation is also being considered now.)

⁹⁸ Foreign Relations, 1941, vol. 1, p. 367.

(c) Sever all Austrian ties with Germany and eradicate all German influence in Austria.

(d) Facilitate establishment of a free and independent democratic state as soon as the Austrians are capable of establishing it.

(e) Depending upon the contribution of the Austrians themselves to their own liberation from German dominance, extend to Austria economic treatment approaching that for the liberated countries, without subjecting Austria to the reparations and other economic treatment to be applied to Germany.

London, April 4, 1945—midnight. [Received April 4—10:48 p. m.]

3449. Comea 205. At a long meeting tonight of the EAC the Soviet representative presented amendments to the United Kingdom draft agreement of January 31, on zones of occupation in Austria (my 1064, January 31, 3 p. m. Comea 168).

Summary of amendments follows. Soviet zone to include province of lower Austria, except city of Vienna in its pre-1938 boundaries, that part of upper Austria situated on left bank of Danube, and entire pre-1938 province of Burgenland. United States zone to include province of Salzburg and that part of upper Austria situated on right bank of the Danube. United Kingdom zone to include province of Carinthia and province of Styria without pre-1938 Burgenland. French zone to include Tirol-Vorarlberg. Article III of United Kingdom draft to provide that boundaries of city of Vienna and province of Burgenland will be those of December 31, 1937: boundaries between zones, aside from these two cases, to be those in effect since decree of October 1, 1938. End of Summary.

During the discussion I reserved the United States position regarding this new proposal. The acting French representative ⁹⁹ accepted the proposed French zone. This is the first occasion on which the Soviet representative has definitely accepted French participation in the occupation of Austria. Gousev presented no proposal for the division of pre-1938 city of Vienna, but stated that it should be divided into four areas. After the meeting Strang stated privately that his Government was prepared to turn over to the Russians the Styrian part of the Burgenland.

At the close of the discussion Gousev stated his desire to attain agreement promptly, in view of military developments in Austria. Next EAC meeting set for Friday, April 6.

> London, April 4, 1945—midnight. [Received April 5-2:46 a. m.]

- 3450. Comea 206. At tonight's meeting of the EAC the Soviet representative presented the following draft amendments to the United Kingdom draft agreement on control machinery in Austria (full text transmitted with my despatch No. 20639 January 26¹).
- 1. Add "recognized by the four great powers" to last sentence of the preamble.

2. Omit "naval" in last sentence of paragraph [article] 2(a).

- 3. Delete paragraph [article] 2(b).
 4. In article 4 omit the naval division, combine the military and air divisions into one military division and add a reparation and deliveries division.
- 5. In article 9 omit the last sentence beginning with words "in enforcing the terms".
- 6. In article 11 substitute "the City of Vienna" for "Greater Vienna". End of Soviet amendments.
- 1. In the discussion De Leusse, acting for Massigli, proposed inclusion in the preamble of a reference to the declaration of the French Committee of National Liberation of November 16, 1943 endorsing the Moscow Declaration on Austria. This was approved by the Commission in principle.
- 2. I proposed and the Commission agreed to change "15" to "13" March 1938, in the preamble, to conform to date of the decrees effecting annexation of Austria to the Reich.
- 3. The Commission agreed to accept Soviet amendment 1 above, for inclusion at end of preamble.
- 4. In respect to Soviet proposal to liaison officers (article 2(a)) and the naval division (article 4), I urged strongly the need for both naval arrangements because of Austrian factories producing naval equipment. Gousev argued that as Austria was not a naval power it would be sufficient to include naval personnel in a single military division. Strang at first supported retention of a naval division for purposes of naval disarmament and demobilization. Later he advanced tentative suggestion to call the single military division the "armed forces division" and to omit all separate references to "military" "naval" or "air" liaison officers by making provision for "liaison officers".

- 5. In urging omission of article 2(b) Gousev urged undesirability of promising Austrians in advance that military occupation regime will be replaced by one based on civilian commissioners, especially in absence of any active Austrian movement to assist Allies in liberation of country. I expressed concurrence with this general view emphasizing the military character of the draft agreement.
- 6. Soviet insistence on inclusion of a "reparation and deliveries division" in article 4 led to considerable discussion of the question of Austrian reparation, which I report in a separate telegram.² I urged, in accord with Department's 2007, March 15, midnight, that inclusion of a reparation division would discourage Austrians in rebuilding their economic independence, and that provision for restitution could be included in functions of the economic division. Strang expressed preference for no reparation division, but suggested it be called "restitution and deliveries division" with possible later insertion of word "reparation" if it were later decided that Austria should pay reparation. Gousev continued to urge inclusion of a reparation and deliveries division.
- 7. Gousev urged omission of last sentence of article 9 on ground that agreement should make no reference to retention of present administrative organs, which are Fascist in character, and that existing organs should be either liquidated or purged of "obviously Fascist elements". Strang pointed out that draft agreement assumed carrying through of drastic purge of administrative personnel, after which administrative organs could be used to assist Allied authorities in governing.

to begin to apply the principles laid down in the Moscow declaration on Austria. I gave full support to this urgent item on the EAC agenda.

Gousev again insisted that the Commission must first settle arrangements for zones of occupation and control machinery for the post surrender period. On my urging it was agreed to take up the question of interim control machinery at the next meeting of the EAC April 6. No proposals have so far been advanced by any delegation for adapting the post surrender machinery for use in the interim period. I have received no suggestions or comments from the Department on this subject.

2656. We are telegraphing to you tonight ³ as the position of this Government the text of a statement by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the British proposal for zoning in Austria.

Your 3449 April 4, midnight, arrived too late to receive JCS consideration in connection with the above. The Department has taken up the Soviet proposal of amendments with the military authorities but we shall probably be unable to give you official views on it in time for Friday's meeting of the EAC.

We anticipate that JCS will be agreeable to placing in the Soviet zone that part of Upper Austria situated left, i.e., northeast, of the Danube as proposed by the Soviet representative.

We believe, however, that the pre-1938 boundaries of Vienna will not be acceptable to JCS since they are deemed inadequate to meet our need for airfield, billeting, communications, and other facilities.

This Government has already approved the inclusion of the whole of Burgenland in the Soviet zone (Department's 117 of February [January] 5, 8 p. m., Eacom 41), and that approval has not been canceled.

Time does not permit clearance of this telegram with the military authorities and it therefore represents merely the preliminary informal views of the Department.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)⁴

Washington, April 5, 1945-8 p.m.

2658. Your despatches 20742 of January 31 ⁵ and 21394 of March 1.⁶ For your guidance in considering in EAC the British proposal for zoning in Austria and for the sub-division of Vienna the following are the views of this Government which have now been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

There are no military objections to U.S. participation in the occupation of Austria by U.S. forces provided that the zone to be occupied by the U.S. in Austria is contiguous to the U.S. zone in Germany.

Either the zone proposed by the Soviet or the zone proposed by the British representative to the European Advisory Commission for occupation by the United States is acceptable. The zone proposed by the British is considered preferable since a smaller occupation force will be required.

From a military point of view, any proposal for the subdivision of Greater Vienna would be acceptable, provided:

a. Assignment of subdivisions insures adequate administrative and transportation facilities to all four occupying forces.

b. The U.S. subdivision includes adequate air facilities for U.S.

c. Each of the nations involved will be given necessary rights of transit through the subdivisions occupied by the other nations.

d. Satisfactory allocation of the facilities within the Innere Stadt district is made among each of nations involved, such allocations to be made by the commanders in chief of the occupying forces.

The British proposal for Greater Vienna does not fulfill any of these requirements. It is particularly unsatisfactory in that the proposed U.S. subdivision does not contain any airfields. The proposal therefore is not acceptable.

Provided rights of transit through zones of other nations are obtained, it is believed, from the U.S. military point of view, the following subdivision of Greater Vienna (map follows by mail) would be acceptable:

⁴Department's instruction 5315, April 9, 1945, to London, transmitted a copy of State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee document SWNCC 25/2 of April 5, 1945 (neither printed), containing the text, approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, of a letter from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State setting forth the views of the Government regarding zones of occupation in Austria. The substance of that letter is conveyed in this telegram.

Southeastern part of Greater Vienna (districts of Landstrasse, Wieden, Favoriten, Simmering, Schwechat) will be occupied by the forces of the United States of America.

Southwestern part of Greater Vienna (districts of Margareten, Meidling, Fünfhaus, Hietzing, Mödling, Liesing, Penzing) will be occupied by the forces of the United Kingdom.

Northwestern part of Greater Vienna (districts of Mariahilf, Neubau, Josefstadt, Alsergrund, Ottakring, Hernals, Währing, Döbling, Klosterneuburg) will be occupied by the forces of France.

Northeastern part of Greater Vienna (districts of Floridsdorf, Brigittenau, Leopoldstadt, Grossenzersdorf) will be occupied by the forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Central part of Greater Vienna (district of Innere Stadt)—the facilities within this district are to be satisfactorily allocated to each of the nations involved by the commanders in chief of the occupying forces.

This proposed subdivision would, it is felt, meet the U.S. requirements in that it places one of the principal Vienna airports (Schwechat airport) and a large barracks in the Favoriten district under U.S. control. Except for the interchange of U.S. and French subdivisions in the British proposal for subdivision of Greater Vienna, this proposal is quite similar to the British one.

In regard to the whole of Austria, each of the nations involved should be given necessary rights of transit through the zones occupied by the other nations.

In order to provide for proper coordination and cooperation between the various occupying forces, the proposed agreement should include machinery for a joint administration of Austria similar to that for joint administration of Germany.⁷

partment's 2007, March 15, midnight, I objected strongly, urging that inclusion of a reparation division, by underlining the idea of Austrian reparation would greatly discourage the effort of Austria to rebuild its economic independence, which would in any case be precarious initially. I stated that my Government while insisting on Austria's obligation to make restitution of identifiable looted property located in Austria, did not approve in principle imposition of a reparation burden on Austria. I proposed that restitution be handled as a function of the economic division.

Strang also questioned Austria's ability to pay reparation and at the same time to rebuild a stable economic life and asked whether the question of Austrian reparation fell within the sphere of the Moscow Compensation Commission.8 He suggested tentatively a "restitution and deliveries division" with later possible insertion of "reparation" if the Moscow Commission decided that Austria should pay reparation.

Gousev then raised two questions on which he requested early expression of views by members of the EAC.

- (1) Should the question of Austrian reparation be discussed in the EAC or in some other body?
- (2) What should be done with the German industries in Austria, particularly those which have been established or expanded since 1938, and what should be done with other property belonging to the German state or to German citizens and located in Austria?

Referring to great expansion of German industry in Austria, Gousev stated that it was understood at Yalta that the Compensation Commission would take into account German investments in other countries in calculating reparation,9 and that the United States delegation at Yalta had advanced certain estimates concerning German investments located in the United States and other American countries and potentially available as compensation.

In conclusion, Gousev stated what [that?] his Government had no doubt whatever but that in principle Austria must pay reparation for her contribution to the German war effort and for failure to assist the Allies in securing her liberation. He stated that this question of principle must be decided in the European Advisory Commission, but that the calculation of volume and categories of Austrian reparation was a function of the Compensation Commission in Moscow.

In a short private talk I tried to discover whether Gousev envisaged immediate transfers of machinery from stocks existing in Austria or a program of recurrent reparation out of new production. Apparently he has both programs in mind.

I must point out to the Department that it will be impossible for the EAC to conclude an agreement on control machinery for Austria until it has settled the question of including a reparation division. If conclusion of the control machinery agreement, already long postponed, and of the interim arrangements for a shared Allied control in the period between the occupation of Vienna and German surrender or collapse, is long delayed, the Soviet forces will be able to overrun most of the industrial areas of Austria and to carry out a unilateral program of removing machinery as "booty of war" or as interim reparation deliveries. Unyielding insistence on our present position may result in reparation being exacted in hasty and careless manner by the Soviet authorities, who are now on notice regarding our opposition to Austrian reparation.

As I see it, we now have a Hobson's choice between maintaining our opposition on principle or accepting in principle the obligation of Austria to provide such reparation as may be determined by the four powers only not by one of them acting alone. If we should choose the second course actual determination of Austrian reparation would presumably be made by the Three Power Compensation Commission in Moscow and carried out under the Allied occupation authorities in Austria. In discussing any program of Austrian reparation, we might give first attention to the removal of excess machinery found in Austria, beyond the needs of a peaceful Austrian economy.

An immediate decision in principle on this question is necessary if we wish to expedite the conclusion of a control machinery agreement for Austria and to facilitate early United States participation in the decisions which are daily being made in Soviet-occupied Austria.

THE PROBLEM

1. To consider the British draft agreement on "Allied Control Machinery in Austria" ¹¹ and the comments of the U.S. Group, Control Council for Austria thereon, ¹² and to advise the United States Representative on the European Advisory Commission (EAC) of the United States views concerning the organization of control machinery for Austria.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM

2. It has been proposed that there shall be quadripartite Allied control of Austria in the post-hostilities period exercised by the Governments of the United States of America, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic.

- 3. Although final agreement on the boundaries between national zones of occupation has not yet been reached between the Governments concerned, consideration of the problems of control is based upon the assumption that separate zones of occupation will be established as in Germany.
- 4. The British Representative on the EAC has submitted a draft agreement on control machinery to the Commission for its consideration (Addendum to SWNCC 30/D). The United States Group Control Council for Austria has forwarded its comments on the British proposal to the Department of State (SWNCC 30/D).

Discussion

- 5. In furtherance of the Moscow Declaration of November 1, 1943, the treatment of Austria will differ from that of Germany. Nevertheless, the structure of the organization of the Allied occupying forces in the administration of the country will of necessity be similar in many respects.
- 6. The British draft agreement in matters both of form and substance contains many unnecessary variations from the text of the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany (JCS 1130/1), 13 heretofore agreed to by the powers represented on EAC.
- 7. There is attached as Annex "A" to the Appendix, 14 a draft agreement on Control Machinery in Austria which contains no variations other than those believed to be required by political and other considerations.
- 8. Additional discussion will be found in Annex "B" to the Appendix in which are set forth the comments of the Subcommittee on the Draft Agreement on "Allied Control Machinery in Austria" submitted to EAC by the British Representative.

Conclusions

9. The United States Representative on EAC should be provided with United States views with respect to the draft agreement submitted to EAC by the British Representative (Annex "B" to Appendix).

State setting forth the decisions of SWNCC, is not printed. The contents of the subsequent SWNCC memorandum to the Secretary of State are contained in Department's telegram 3077, April 19, to London, p. 76.

RECOMMENDATIONS

11. It is recommended:

a. That the SWNCC transmit this report to the J.C.S. for their consideration.

b. That the SWNCC, after J.C.S. views have been obtained, ap-

DRAFT AGREEMENT ON CONTROL MACHINERY IN AUSTRIA

The Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, having in mind the Inter-Governmental Declaration on Austria made at Moscow on November 1, 1943, have reached the following agreement for the organization of an Allied Administration in Austria, through which they intend to carry out that Declaration:

ARTICLE 1

Supreme authority in Austria on matters of concern to Austria as a whole will be exercised, on the basis of instructions from their respective governments, by the Commanders-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, acting as a Governing Body. This authority shall be broadly construed to the end that, through maximum uniformity of policy and procedure throughout Austria, the establishment of an independent Austrian government may be accelerated. Each member of the Governing Body will conform to the decisions and policies of that Body in the zone occupied by forces under his command, and will, as Zone Commander, exercise supreme authority in his zone over all other matters.

ARTICLE 2

Each Commander-in-Chief in his zone of occupation will have attached to him military, naval and air representatives of the other three Commanders-in-Chief for liaison duties.

¹⁵ Lt. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney.

ARTICLE 3

- (a) The four Commanders-in-Chief, acting together as a body, will constitute the Governing Body of the Allied Administration in Austria.
 - (b) The responsibilities of the Governing Body will include:
- (i) The assurance of the enforcement in Austria of the provisions of the instrument of unconditional surrender of Germany whether or not formally signed by the German authorities;
- (ii) The assurance of the political and administrative separation of Austria from Germany and the elimination of German economic influences:
- (iii) The initiation of plans and the formulation of decisions on military, political, economic and other questions of concern to Austria as a whole:
- (iv) The preparation of the way for the establishment of a freelyelected democratic Austrian Government;
- (v) Meanwhile, the establishment and when established the supervision of such indigenous agencies of central administration as may be required for the early resumption and carrying on of a productive, free and independent national life for Austria;
- (vi) The direction of the administration of "Greater Vienna" through appropriate organs.
- (c) The Governing Body will meet at least once in ten days; and it will meet at any time upon request of one of its members. Its decisions will be unanimous. The Chairmanship will be held in rotation by each of its four members.
- (d) Each member of the Governing Body will be assisted by a political adviser, who will, when necessary, attend its meetings. Each member may also when necessary, be assisted at meetings of the Governing Body by military, naval or air advisers.

ARTICLE 4

A permanent Coordinating Committee will be established under the Governing Body of the Allied Administration, composed of one representative of each of the four Commanders-in-Chief, not below the rank of General Officer or the equivalent rank in the naval or air forces. Members of the Coordinating Committee will, when necessary, attend meetings of the Governing Body.

ARTICLE 5

The duties of the Coordinating Committee, acting on behalf of the Governing Body and through the Staff of the Allied Administration will include:

(a) The day to day supervision and coordination of the activities of the Divisions of the Allied Administration and of the implementation by them of the decisions of the Governing Body;

(b) The consideration of all questions which may be submitted to it and the formulation of recommendations to the Governing Body concerning such questions.

ARTICLE 6

(a) The members of the Staff of the Allied Administration, appointed by their respective national authorities, will be organized in Division:

Military; Naval; Air; Transport; Political and Foreign Liaison; Economics and Labor; Finance; Internal Affairs and Communications; Legal; Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons; Public Health and Welfare; Education; Civilian Supply.

- (b) At the head of each Division there will be four high-ranking officials, one from each Power.
 - (c) The duties of each Division will include:
- (i) Supervising the appropriate Austrian agencies of central administration as they are established;
- (ii) Giving advice to the Governing Body and the Coordinating Committee, and, when necessary, providing representation at meetings thereof:
- (iii) Transmitting decisions to the Austrian agencies of central administration.
- (d) The four heads of a Division may take part in meetings of the Coordinating Committee at which matters affecting the work of their Division are on the agenda.
- (e) The Divisions may include civilian as well as military personnel. They may also, in special cases, include nationals of other United Nations, appointed in their personal capacity by the Allied Administration.
- (f) Alterations in the organization and adjustments in the members of the staff of the Allied Administration may be made by the Governing Body in the light of experience.

ARTICLE 7

- (a) An Inter-Allied Governing Authority (Komendatura) consisting of four Commandants, one from each Power, appointed by their respective Commanders-in-Chief, will be established to direct jointly the administration of the "Greater Vienna" area. Each of the Commandants will serve in rotation in the position of Chief Commandant, as head of the Inter-Allied Governing Authority.
- (b) A Technical Staff, consisting of personnel of each of the four Powers, will be established under the Inter-Allied Governing Authority, and will be organized to serve the purpose of supervising and controlling the activities of the local organs of "Greater Vienna" which are responsible for its municipal services.

(c) The Inter-Allied Governing Authority will operate under the general direction of the Governing Body and will receive orders through the Coordinating Committee.

ARTICLE 8

The necessary liaison with the Governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be insured by the appointment by such Governments of military missions (which may include civilian members) to the Governing Body, having access, through the Political and Foreign Liaison Division, to the agencies of the Allied Administration.

ARTICLE 9

United Nations' organizations which may be admitted by the Governing Body to operate in Austria will, in respect of their activities in Austria, be subordinate to the Allied Administration and answerable to it.

ARTICLE 10

The four Governments at appropriate times will consider alterations of this agreement to meet the needs of the situation as they develop, as well as to define the responsibilities of the Allied Administration after the election of a democratic Austrian Government.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee for Europe has the following comments with respect to the British draft for control machinery and the comments by U.S. Group Control Council (Austria) thereon, transmitted with London Embassy's dispatch No. 20765, dated February 2, 1945. 15a

- 1. The Subcommittee believes in general that the principle weakness of the British draft in comparison with its proposal is that it does not adhere more closely to the language of the agreed protocol for control machinery in Germany. The basic machinery in Austria should not differ radically from that in Germany, even if the objectives to be accomplished are substantially different. The minutes of EAC meetings showed that virtually every word in the German agreement was carefully discussed and weighed by the delegates. It is believed that closer adherence to that language, except in cases where a substantive change in meaning is desired, would result in more expeditious acceptance by EAC of the Austrian paper. Furthermore, the British paper tends to judge in advance what in the light of experience may or may not prove desirable. It is believed better to keep the machinery simple with adequate provision for development later.
 - 2. The Subcommittee believes it preferable to avoid the terms "control" and "council" in denominating the body in Austria which will correspond to the Control Council in Germany. These terms will have acquired in Germany a connotation undesirable for Austria.

- 3. With reference to the British preamble, the words "since the 15 March" should be omitted entirely or be replaced by the phrase "as a result of the purported annexation" or some similar term. The Moscow Declaration itself was apparently in error, since the decrees purporting to effect the annexation of Austria were dated March 13, 1938.
- 4. Although there is no basic objection, the Subcommittee believes that it is not necessary to provide for the replacement of military commissioners by civilians, as set forth in paragraph 2 (b) of the British draft. Since that paper is not prepared primarily for public consumption in Austria, there is no psychological reason for the insertion of this provision. If and when found desirable by the interested governments, such transition will naturally take place.
- 5. The Subcommittee believes that Article 2 (d) of the British draft should follow the pattern of the German paper and provide for military, naval and air as well as political advisers.
- 6. With respect to the comments of the United States Group Control Council on Article 4 of the British draft, it would be preferable in the basic agreement not to create departments as an organizational layer above the Divisions; departments could be created or the organizational structure otherwise changed at a later period if after experience such a change is shown to be desirable. The way has been left open for such changes by Article 6 (f) of the United States draft.

With respect to the suggestion as to creation of additional Divisions, it seems preferable as far as possible to keep the number of Divisions to a minimum. The Subcommittee's view on this point is shown in Article 6 of the United States draft. To point to a particular Division which would deal initially with military missions of other Allied Governments, the name of the Political Division has been changed to Political and Foreign Liaison Division in Article 6 and this is reflected in Article 8 of the United States draft.

- 7. The suggestions made by the United States Group Control Council with respect to Article 9 of the British draft are not acceptable at this time. The ordinary chain of command must continue until the Commanders-in-Chief have had sufficient time to determine that the use of normal military channels are no longer necessary. The War Department feels strongly on this point and General McNarney concurs in its view.
- 8. Other reactions of the Subcommittee with respect to the British draft are made apparent by the changed language of the United States draft.

Washington, April 9, 1945—3 p. m.

2741. The Department will consider with interest any proposals for machinery for use in the interim period in Austria that may be advanced by any delegation in EAC in line with your 3455 April 5, 4 p. m. (Comea 207).

Your requests for comment on this subject in your 1138 February 1, 8 p. m. (Comea 169) were transmitted immediately to the military authorities in Washington but no official views have been formulated here, mainly for mechanical reasons. The Department of State members of the subcommittee at the working level proposed at that time that comment on interim arrangements be included in the views of this Government being formulated on control machinery for Austria as follows:

"Interim arrangements are difficult to formulate in view of the uncertainties about the actual conditions in which they might operate. However, we offer the following comment: As the armies enter Austria they should proclaim the intention to establish inter-Allied military government in Austria as already proposed in connection with the proclamations for Austria now before CCS.¹⁶ As a next step, consultation should be established among the Allied commanders, who would retain complete freedom of command over their own troops but would inform and consult each other in order to concert and coordinate their efforts in so far as possible towards maintaining uniformity of action preparatory to the establishment of inter-Allied military government. Liaison officers might be exchanged for this purpose. Consultation might also be carried on through an inter-Allied committee sitting continuously in, say, Vienna. In any case, we consider it desirable to gather together in one place as soon as possible the nucleus groups of all the participating countries, and also to activate the Allied Commission for Austria for planning purposes as soon as the governments are in a position to name their principal members. Finally, we consider it desirable to place the complete protocol on machinery into operation at as early a date as may be warranted by conditions in Austria."

We hope to get to you shortly the formal US views on control machinery, but they will not deal with interim arrangements.

Moscow, April 9, 1945—midnight. [Received—10:15 p. m.]

1104. In reply to my question this afternoon Vyshinski ¹⁷ informed me that his Government had issued instructions to Gousev with respect to Austrian zones of occupation. He briefly outlined to me these instructions which he said were basically in accord with the British proposals. The Soviet Government had suggested however, some amendments to the Soviet zone so that it would include Burgenland and a part of upper Austria. With respect to the occupation of Vienna, his Government had proposed that "pre-Hitlerite Vienna" and not "the greater Vienna" be occupied by the four Allies.

The Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs (Riddleberger) to the Political Adviser to the United States Delegation to the European Advisory Commission (Mosely)

Washington, April 9, 1945.

Dear Phil: As you know, our machinery for giving you official U.S. views is so cumbersome and slow that our power to speak to you is almost paralyzed, except for the most important formal matters. It therefore occurred to Ware ¹⁸ and me that you might like to have informal comments on some of the matters on Austria now coming up in EAC which do not actually call for official expression of views from Washington.

The Soviet proposals for amendments of the U.K. draft on control machinery in your 3450, Comea 206, of April 4, are interesting. Their suggestion no. 1 to add "recognized by the four powers" to the preamble is one which we ourselves had actually written into our first statement of views, with the concurrence of all members of the informal working party. It does not appear in the final draft merely because we tried to simplify the whole thing by a later different approach.

Andrey Yanuaryevich Vyshinsky, First Deputy People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union.
 Ware Adams, of the Division of Central European Affairs.

Their suggestions 2 and 4 were also almost identical with a suggestion which had been considered, at least in the State Department part of the working party, for having one department of security, or department of the armed forces, to contain both a military and air personnel, and the relatively fewer naval personnel, without trying to line up three coordinate units for these separate services.

Soviet suggestion no. 3 for deleting paragraph 2-B was also suggested here by our military people.

Soviet suggestion no. 5 to omit the last sentence of Article 9 is also the sort of thing our military people were thinking of when they commented that the British draft was too complex in trying to pre-judge conditions which might develop later.

Thus, the first five Soviet suggestions all seem entirely acceptable to us, provided we do keep a place for naval as well as air personnel, whatever it may be called.

With respect to the sixth and last, we still hope that it will be possible to do something better than "the city of Vienna", if not the Vienna Gau line itself.

On the reparations question we are sending a full statement of the Department's own views by telegram.¹⁹

Sincerely yours,

James W. Riddleberger

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, April 10, 1945—7 p. m.

2794. The Department is disturbed by the Soviet desire, reflected in your 3477 April 5, 8 p. m., Comea 208, to hold up completion of an agreement on control machinery unless we agree immediately to exact reparations from Austria.

We do not share the Soviet view that "in principle Austria must pay reparations for her contribution to the German war effort and for failure to assist the Allies in securing her liberation." We feel that this view is unrealistic and would have dangerous political implications in Central Europe. Although in our propaganda we have consistently exhorted the Austrians to "contribute to their own liberation" we do not believe they can be judged at this time to have failed to do so, as stated by Gousev, considering the grip held by the Gestapo 20 and the meager aid from outside up to the entry of the Red Army into Austria this month.

²⁰ Geheime Staatspolizei (German Secret State Police).

We feel that a reparations program for Austria analogous to the German program would be inconsistent with the Moscow Declaration, and that execution of such a program would require a reversal of the whole policy towards Austria on which the Moscow Declaration is based. It would also be inconsistent with April 8 broadcasts by Moscow radio to the people of Austria ²¹ and by General Tolbukhin to the people of Vienna, ²² that "the Austrian population is resisting the evacuation carried out by the Germans and meeting hospitably the Red Army as liberator of Austria." We believe it would turn the Austrians against our cause; and tend ultimately to force Austria back into the arms of Germany thus strengthening Germany again in later years.

While we are prepared to modify our previous position of flat opposition to payment of reparation by Austria, we would strongly oppose any Austrian reparation other than transfer of existing capital equipment of a type which is clearly redundant in relation to the requirements of a healthy, peacetime Austrian economy. Machinery in armament plants established in Austria since Anschluss would be the chief source of reparation under such a program. A program limited in this fashion might be properly regarded, and presented to the Austrian people, as part of the German reparation program, rather than as a separate and distinct imposition of reparation on Austria.

In carrying out the instruction contained in our 2696,^{22a} you should avoid any statements which would commit us to a more extensive program than is set forth above. It would be desirable to avoid extensive discussion of Austrian reparation in EAC, leaving the matter as far as possible to Reparation Commission. The foregoing is, accordingly, for your background information.

of the EAC. Gousev requested answer on principle to question reported in my 3477, April 5, 5 [8] p. m. My attitude in the discussion was based on Department's 2794, April 10, 7 p. m.

In reply to Gousev's query Strang stated UK view that Austria should not escape obligation of reparation as matter of right but that Allied political aim of reestablishing independent Austria should be guiding factor; payment for imports regarded by four powers as necessary for Austria should have precedence over reparation transfers. Massigli similarly pointed out need to decide later whether Austria can pay reparation and how much.

Strang asked whether affirmative reply in principle to Soviet query should not be accompanied by reservation of view or how much Austria could pay. In one exchange Gousev asked whether trade or reparation was basis of Allied policy in Austria. At close of discussion Massigli proposed a formula by which Austria as a former component part of the Reich would be bound to make compensation for damage done to the Allies, while the four governments, having in mind their intention to restore an independent Austria, retain complete freedom of judgment regarding the amount and method of such compensation. The Commission agreed to study this formula.

Gousev's insistence on acceptance by EAC of the principle of Austrian reparation has thus for the moment given the French representative an opening for securing discussion of this question at a four power level. Early in the discussion Gousev had stated that the EAC should merely adopt the principle, without entering into negotiation on implementation.

Memorandum of Trans-Atlantic Telephone Conversation Between the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant), in London, and the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews), in Washington

[London,] April 15, 1945.

W. Hello. Is that you, Doc?

M. Yes, Chief. Good morning.

W. Good morning. I wanted to talk [to] you about a conversation I had last night—or yesterday afternoon London time—and then also about one or two other matters.

M. I am sorry I am not familiar with the conversation yesterday afternoon.

23 Vienna was captured by the Soviet Army on April 13.

as 871, and to Caserta as 330) stated that the Department agreed with the proposal set forth in this telegram and had so informed the War Department; the Department considered it desirable for Erhardt to proceed to Vienna if and when the War Department authorized General Flory and other Army officers to go there (740.00119 Control (Austria)/4-1345).

W. And then about one or two other matters that I wanted to discuss in relation to the European Advisory Commission. Yesterday. I called General Marshall, 25 because I thought he might be the only one I could find at the Pentagon Building. There was a statement in the press here that the office buildings had been closed in Washington yesterday out of respect to the President.26 The military advisors on the European Advisory Commission had just come back from France and they had some ideas in relation to unconditional surrender terms. I explained those to General Marshall and told him that I was not in a position to go forward with any suggestions that had been made until I could get clearance from the President and the Secretary of State. I told him in detail what the position was and he wired back to me this morning saving he consulted the Secretary of War and was clearing with the Secretary of State. I would like you to get a transcript of that conversation because it gives you in detail what the position is. At the end of that discussion, I referred to the negotiations in relation to zoning and control in Austria. I want to talk to you a minute, if I may, on that subject. In considering, however, the subject matter I took up with General Marshall, I wanted to refer you to Embassy's 3405 of April 4 and Department's 2662 of April 5 27 in regard to the Austrian matter. I received two telegrams today; one from the Department 2928 of April 1428 and a repeat message from Moscow 158 of April 13th.29 Let me restate that, that's Harriman's 1104 of April 9th. In those messages, he explains, and the Department also explains, that Stalin proposed that "American, British and French representatives proceed to Vienna to establish the zones in Vienna". Harriman recommends that.

M. Yes. I recall the telegram.

W. And the Department acquiesces in it. That disturbs me because I wouldn't want to see repeated what took place in Rumania and Bulgaria and the only reason for the delay in the European Advisory Commission is because the Russians have been unwilling to meet our wants. The difficulty has to do with their insistence that they want absolute control and occupancy of the central district in Vienna. We would have been willing to compromise, but because they were so unyielding, we have still held out for the larger Vienna, and our reason for doing that was because we wanted to be sure of air facilities and we further argued that we wanted to share with the Russians, the British and the French the central district in Vienna. You will remember that that small area contains most of the facilities in relation to—so far as hotels are concerned, public buildings, cinemas, and so forth. On the question of the larger district of Vienna, we proposed the following compromise: "The Schwechat Airdrome, together with all installations and facilities pertaining thereto, will be under the administrative and operational control of the occupation forces of the United States for the purpose of serving the requirements of the forces of the four occupying powers will enjoy free and unimpaired access to the Schwechat Airdrome from the city of Vienna." In other words, that would allow us to go back and forth from our area within Vienna, and others to go back and forth from their areas to the Airdrome.

- M. You proposed this yesterday, is that correct?
- W. We proposed it yesterday.
- M. At the EAC.
- W. As a matter of fact, we took it up originally on Tuesday,³⁰ but the Russians refused to consider it.
 - M. On Tuesday, or yesterday?
- W. They refused to consider it either Tuesday or in the intervening time or at our meeting yesterday. Now, we have thought of another compromise in relation to the central district. I think it is fair to remember that Vienna is the central city of the Russian zone and that, therefore, it is reasonable that they have greater facilities than the other occupying countries, since we would manage our zones from central cities lying within those zones, but what we don't want is to have our command put out into the poorer districts out of the central district and be forced to maintain their headquarters in inadequate buildings in the outskirts of the city within our zone district. Therefore, we felt that we could not agree to the Russian proposal of complete control in the central district. We were going to suggest the following compromise formula: "The district of Innerestadt will be occupied by the forces of the Soviet Union and the inter-allied authority (Commander Tourer [Kommandatura?]), will regulate the equitable assignment of its facilities among the staffs of the allied commission and the forces of occupation of the four powers." In other words, what we ask is that they give us adequate facilities within that area.
 - M. You feel that that will give us adequate facilities?
- W. Yes, I think it would, but I am certain for the reason for the shift of venire [venue?] away from the European Advisory Commission in London to Vienna is simply because we have been unwilling to compromise on what we believe to be minimum needs for our forces in Vienna

- M. You don't think that there would be any more chance of reaching an agreement working out on the spot?
- W. My thought was, Doc, that there should be no final agreement reached until we have been able to check back and forth with each other, because we have spent weeks now working on this problem and we have an awareness of what the wants are and also complete knowledge of the position of both the British and the French.
- M. You have not yet complete knowledge of what the British and French want?
 - W. No, we have the complete knowledge.
- M. Yes. It was always our thought that anything worked out, of course, out there would be referred to the EAC and possibly having someone on the spot would be helpful to you.
 - W. Yes, it might be, provided there is that contact.
- M. There must be. The decision would depend, of course, still on EAC. There was never any thought of removing it from that. It was merely the belief that if we had somebody on the spot in Vienna, they might be able to work out some practical solution there quicker.
 - W. I understand. Now, You've got our thinking on that.
 - M. Yes, fine.
- W. There is another message that has come in. It is 2927 April 14.30a It suggests that we would be willing to give way in the control machinery agreement the idea of establishing a Navy as well as an Army and Air Division. I believe it is a mistake to give that away at the moment because I believe they are about to concede it.
 - M. You think we are about to obtain it?
- W. No, I think it is a mistake to give that away at the moment because I think the Russians are about to concede it and I think they would only assume weakness on our part in relation to that particular issue and two or three other issues in which we mean to hold firm.
- M. I see. I think the thinking behind that message, which I haven't seen (I was not at the Department yesterday afternoon) was the fact that our Navy Department itself might prefer not to have provision for a Naval Division.
- W. I wonder if they realize that they [there] are naval installations in Austria.
- M. I think they do. I think there is some difference of opinion within that department, but I will be very glad to look into it.
 - W. Would you do that and send me a clarifying message?

^{80a} Not printed; it reported that the Joint Chiefs of Staff perceived no objection to the draft agreement on Allied control machinery in Austria from a military point of view, subject to the deletion of the word "naval" where it occurs in articles 2, 3, 4, and 6 (740.00119 Control (Austria)/4-645).

M. Yes, indeed. Now, the only thing I am not clear on is this subject of your earlier conversation with General Marshall last night. Is there anything that I should know about that?

W. It would be necessary to get in contact with the Secretary and get the whole story because it is a long story.

M. I see. All right. I'll do it that way. Take care of yourself. W. I will. Can we do anything for you here that we are not doing at this time?

M. I don't think of a thing.

W. All right. Thank you, Doc.

M. Good luck, Chief.

W. Thank you. Good bye.

M. Good bye.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

3865. To Erhardt from Winant. In view of Moscow's 54 to Caserta, April 13, midnight, and Departments 330 to Caserta (Department's 2928 to London April 14, 7 p.m.³¹) I want to bring you fully up to date on the European Advisory Commission negotiations concerning Austria. Some meetings on Austrian problems, the latest being held on April 10, 12, and 14, have narrowed our disagreements with the Soviets to two points regarding zones and two regarding control machinery.

With regard to zones of occupation preliminary agreement has been reached that France will occupy Tirol-Vorarlberg, United States will occupy Salzburg and Upper Austria minus strip north of Danube, and United Kingdom will occupy Carinthia and Styria minus pre-1938 Burgenland strip, while Soviet forces will occupy Lower Austria, Upper Austria north of Danube, and Burgenland, present Gau boundaries being used except in Burgenland. With regard to Vienna area, Soviets insist rigorously on pre-1938 narrow boundaries of Vienna City. While preferring present Gau Vienna boundaries on grounds of administrative convenience in governing Austria and better air and land accomodations for our forces, United States, United Kingdom and France have been willing to explore adjustments needed in case narrower limits are accepted.

In order to promote a compromise on basis of narrower limits of Vienna, I advanced following formula April 10: "The Schwechat Aerodrome, together with all installations and facilities pertaining thereto, will be under the administrative and operational control of the occupation forces of the United States for the purpose of serving the requirements of the forces of the four occupying powers. The forces of the four occupying powers will enjoy free and unimpeded access to the Schwechat Aerodrome from the city of Vienna." This formula, which places the four powers on a footing of equality in actual use of Schwechat, gives our forces the necessary control for bringing large transport planes into Vienna. The Soviet representative has been adamant against this or any similar concession, and proposes that United States planes use Aspern Aerodrome under Soviet administrative and operational control. At the close of vesterday's meeting the Soviet representative stated he was wiring his Government concerning the state of the negotiation.

On April 10, I also advanced following preliminary proposal for division of city of Vienna, on assumption that some arrangement would be made to take care of our air needs in return for abandoning our preference in principle for wider limits of "Greater Vienna". Division was as follows: Floridsdorf, Brigittenau, Leopoldstadt and Grossenzersdorf to be under Soviet occupation; Josefstadt, Alsergrund, Ottakring, Hernals, Währing, and Döbling to be under French occupation; Mariahilf, Neubau, Margareten, Meidling, Hietzing, Fünfhaus and Penzing to be under United Kingdom occupation; Landstrasse, Wieden, Favoriten and Simmering to be under United States occupation. I proposed the following tentative formula for the Central District: "the inter-Allied authority (Komendatura) will regulate the occupation of the Innere Stadt and the equitable assignment of its facilities among the forces of occupation". In view of the administrative [apparent omission] and prestige of the United States General participating in control of the Central District, I stood out firmly against the Soviet insistence that it be under sole Soviet occupation. The two points regarding Schwechat Aerodrome and occupation of Innere Stadt are the only questions unresolved.

In order to settle the Innere Stadt question, in case the Russians agreed to let us control Schwechat, I am prepared to advance the following formula: "the district of Innere Stadt will be occupied by forces of the Soviet Union and the inter-Allied authority (Komendatura) will regulate the equitable assignment of its facilities among the staffs of the Allied Commission and the forces of occupation of the four powers". I have not shown this final compromise formula to the Russians because of their unyielding attitude on the question of Schwechat Aerodrome.

With regard to the control machinery agreement the Commission is in agreement on all except two points. The Soviet representative insists on lumping military, naval and air in one division; I have been standing out for three divisions. The Soviet representative insists on inclusion of a "Restitution, Reparation and Deliveries Division"; I have authority from the Department to accept this, but I have held it in reserve as a means of securing the naval and air divisions.

In resisting categorical Soviet demands for acceptance of their proposals without modification, I have fought to secure arrangements for the aerodrome, Innere Stadt, and naval and air divisions which would enable our military authorities to operate effectively and on a footing of equality in carrying out their responsibilities in Austria.

1512. Please communicate to the French Government the substance of, and report its views on, Marshal Stalin's suggestion that American, British and French representatives proceed to Vienna to consider zones in Vienna, which was received in Harriman's 1162 April 13, midnight, repeated to you by the Department.

This Government would like to carry out this suggestion by having American military officers now engaged at AFHQ, Caserta, in planning for the occupation of Austria proceed to Vienna accompanied by Erhardt. They would examine the actual situation in Vienna and make reports on the factors bearing upon zones of occupation in Vienna for final determination of such zones by inter-governmental agreement through the European Advisory Commission.

Please report urgently whether the French government wishes to send representatives to Vienna for this purpose. If it so desires you may offer to ask General Alexander 32 through Erhardt whether AFHQ could assist with travel arrangements for them.

The Department is awaiting similar information from the British government. It anticipates that the British government will wish also to send representatives from AFHQ, Caserta.

Upon receipt of information that the British and French governments concur, the War Department will issue instructions to General McNarney at Caserta authorizing him or his representative to proceed.

[Washington,] April 16, 1945.

Ambassador Winant telephoned Mr. Matthews at the Pentagon yesterday regarding the planning for Austrian zones and control machinery now being negotiated in EAC.

He referred to the Department's telegram 2927 of April 14 33 regarding the JCS decision to strike the word "naval" from Articles 2, 3, 4 and 6 of the American draft for control machinery, and said he was disturbed about this since he felt sure that we would want to have naval advisers in Austria to advise about the demolition of factories there producing naval equipment. The EAC is meeting again today, April 16, to continue negotiation of control machinery, and Ambassador Winant will no doubt be obliged to take a position one way or the other.

Ambassador Winant also wants to know urgently whether the proposed document in lieu of unconditional surrender for Germany is satisfactory.34

He also inquired about the relationship to EAC planning of the proposal to send American and other Allied representatives to Vienna to determine zones in Vienna.

He said that in the EAC negotiations he will continue to try to get the Schwechat airport and all its facilities placed under American administration for use by the forces of all four Powers.

He intends to propose in EAC the following compromise regarding the Innere Stadt:

"The district of the Innere Stadt will be occupied by forces of the U.S.S.R. and the Inter-Allied authority (Komendatura) will regulate an equitable assignment of its facilities among the staffs of the Allied commission and the forces of occupation of the four Powers".

ATDE-MÉMOTRE

Mr. Eden ³⁶ was about to communicate to Mr. Stettinius the draft of a joint message from the President and the Prime Minister to Marshal Stalin on the subject of Allied control in Austria, when the news was received that Marshal Stalin had raised this question with Mr. Harriman on the 12th [13th?].37 It is understood that Stalin said that now that Vienna had been captured it was urgently necessary to settle the respective zones in Vienna. He claimed there had been much delay in the European Advisory Commission. He thought, however, that the Americans, British and French should send their officers at once to Vienna to work out the necessary arrangements on the spot.

It appears that the Russian invitation is limited to the settlement of the respective zones in Vienna and does not necessarily extend to such further questions as the constitution of the interim control machinery for the whole country, removal of industrial plant and equipment and maintenance of agriculture.

His Majesty's Government accordingly consider that a joint message from the President and the Prime Minister bringing out these further points would be desirable. They think that this method would be more effective than that of dealing through the Chargés d'Affaires in Moscow 38 or through the European Advisory Commission in London, although it is true that Marshal Stalin's accusation of slowness on the part of the European Advisory Commission in dealing with this question is unjust, since the delays have been due to the Soviet Government.

Draft Message From the Prime Minister to Marshal Stalin

I was gratified to learn from the United States Government of your statement to Mr. Harriman that, now that Vienna had been captured, it was urgently necessary to settle the respective zones in Vienna, and your proposal that the United States, British and French Governments should send their officers at once to Vienna to work out the necessary arrangements on the spot.

His Majesty's Government gladly accept this proposal and welcome the statement issued by the Soviet Government on April 8th ³⁹ affirming that the Soviet Government stand firm by the Allied declaration issued at Moscow in 1943.

Besides the working out of the respective zones in Vienna it is urgent that the four powers should arrive at an agreed policy in regard to the establishment of interim control machinery for the whole country, and that the representatives on the European Advisory Commission should be instructed to settle this without delay.

There are other important political and economic questions which will arise in Austria. And I am sure that you will agree that our common purpose might well be prejudiced by unilateral action on the part of any one of the occupying powers in regard to the removal of industrial plant and equipment, regardless of whether or not this was German owned or the elimination without regard to their attitude towards the Nazis of [or] Austrians who might prove useful in reestablishing Austrian administration and economy. I propose therefore that the representatives to be sent to Vienna may be empowered to deal with such questions and that your commanders on the spot should meanwhile be instructed to hold their hand. I would also urge the importance of taking all possible steps to maintain Austrian agriculture in full production.

Washington, April 17, 1945—5 p. m.

341. Subject to the approval of the British Government, the Combined Chiefs of Staff have concurred in Marshal Stalin's suggestion that American, British and French representatives proceed to Vienna to study the question of the zones of occupation in Vienna. Instructions are accordingly going forward through military channels to the British and American Commanders at AFHQ, Caserta, to the following effect:

CCS have already sought directly the British Government's approval which will be communicated to the Department of State by the British Embassy when received in Washington; the Department has requested the views of the French government through Ambassador Caffery in Paris; the American Government has already approved the plan on the premise that the Allied representatives will study on the spot the factors bearing on the problem of zoning in Vienna and will report the facts as they find them there, together with their recommendations, to their respective governments and their representatives in the European Advisory Commission; and that the final agreement for zoning in Vienna will be made by the governments through the European Advisory Commission. When the views of the British and French governments have been received in Washington the Commanders of the British and American elements at AFHQ will then be instructed through military channels to proceed or send representatives to Vienna.

With reference to the Department's 330 April 14, 7 p.m.^{39a} suggesting that you accompany the American military representative to Vienna, please coordinate your activities there with Ambassador Winant. You have already received his no. 85, April 15, 11 p.m.^{39b} giving you background information regarding the present status of Austrian planning in the European Advisory Commission. Please keep him fully informed and report both to him and the Department the situation as you find it in Vienna, with special reference to factors bearing on the zoning of Vienna, to facilitate his negotiations in EAC where the final inter-governmental agreement on zones will be made.

You will be informed as soon as the views of the British and French Governments have been received.

1935. The substance of the Department's 1512 April 16, 6 p. m. was communicated to Chauvel.⁴⁰ He said that he had received a telegram yesterday from Massigli indicating that Stalin's suggestion had been discussed by the European Advisory Commission. Massigli reported that there were considerable differences of opinion in the EAC as to the zones in Vienna between the Russians on the one hand and the Americans and British on the other.

He said that the following three points of dispute had arisen:

(1) The Americans and British wish to have the so-called inner city declared an international zone. Whereas the Russians wish it to be a completely Russian zone.

(2) Insofar as the airfields in the Vienna region are concerned, the Russians wished to turn over only one unsuitable airfield for the use of all the Allies while keeping the other fields solely for the Russians.

(3) The question had arisen as to whether Allied troops other than Russian, would be confined to their own zones in Vienna or whether they would be able to proceed into the country districts outside Vienna and from one zone and [to?] another within Vienna. The Russians according to Massigli expressed the opinion that troops should be confined to their own zone.

Chauvel then went on to say that the differences of opinion were already so considerable in the European Advisory Commission in London that "the British are not sure that any useful purpose will be served in sending representatives to Vienna which is completely controlled by the Red Army and where freedom of discussion might be more limited than in London".

According to Chauvel, the French position insofar as sending representatives to Vienna is that if the British and ourselves send representatives the French "will certainly wish to send a delegation also". On the other hand, if either the British or ourselves do not send a delegation, the French will be inclined not to send one at this juncture.

Thus far the French have not organized an "Austrian team". Today, however, General Koeltz is being requested to designate some of the military staff of his German Planning Mission ⁴¹ to be earmarked for Austria. Chauvel added that no "political representative" had as yet been selected by his Government.

In conclusion he stated that the French decision on sending representatives to Vienna would depend largely on the British and American decisions and on reports from Massigli in London.

The Department of State to the British Embassy

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Department of State is in general sympathy with the views contained in the proposed message from the British Prime Minister to Marshal Stalin appended to the aide-mémoire prepared in the British Embassy at Washington on April 17, 1945 regarding the proposal to send Allied representatives to Vienna to work out arrangements for zones of occupation there. It prefers, however, to make its own similar approach to the Soviet Government on this subject through the American Chargé d'Affaires at Moscow along the lines of a telegram of which a paraphrase is attached hereto, ⁴² rather than in the form of a message from the President.

907. Please inform the Soviet Government substantially as follows: This Government was glad to learn from Embassy's 1162 April 13, midnight, that Marshal Stalin suggests that American, British and French representatives go at once to Vienna to consider arrangements for zones of occupation of Vienna. It welcomes this suggestion. It understands that the British Government also is accepting it. The views of the French Government have been requested and they have also agreed. This Government is holding its representatives in readiness at AFHQ in Caserta to proceed to Vienna.

We agree that it is urgently necessary to settle the zones for Vienna and this Government has accordingly given Ambassador Winant full instructions to enable him to complete EAC recommendations for the protocols now pending in the EAC for (1) control machinery for Austria, and (2) the zoning of Austria, including Vienna, provided there is agreement on their content and adequate facilities can be arranged for the occupation forces.

The principal thing now holding up agreement in EAC on these matters is the question of zoning Vienna, on which the Soviet and American Governments have so far been unable to agree. The Soviet representative has been insisting upon use of the pre-1938 city limits which would place all of the five Vienna airfields within the Soviet zone of occupation, leaving none to the United States, while the United States military authorities are unable to accept any United States zone in Vienna that fails to extend far enough to assure adequate airfield facilities for U.S. forces. It is hoped that the Allied representatives will be able to work out on the spot a suitable arrangement of zones which will accomplish this and furnish the basis for an agreement on zones in EAC.

Since the occupying powers will have an equal interest and responsibility in the management of resources found in Austria and in the denazification of Austria and the reconstitution of an independent democratic state in fulfillment of the Moscow Declaration, this Government relies upon the Soviet Government to provide its forces with appropriate instructions to prevent the removal of industrial equipment or other property from Austria, or other changes which might prejudice our common objectives, until appropriate decisions about them have been made by the four powers acting in concert.

The United States will be glad to give urgent consideration to interim arrangements of the kind proposed by the British representative in the EAC on April 12,43 as well as to placing the complete control machinery protocol into effect as soon as the text has been agreed and conditions warrant placing it in operation.

1631. Department's 341 of April 17, 5 p. m. and previous. The Department's telegrams make it quite clear that mission in Vienna will have authority only to examine situation and make recommendations regarding the zoning of Vienna, including the Innere Stadt. It will have no authority to settle the matter on the spot, the ultimate decision on this to be made through EAC. It is regarded as of importance here that the political and military heads of the British. French and American elements of the mission receive identical instructions on this point, and also that Soviets be informed, in order that there can be no cause for misunderstanding as to precise terms of reference of the mission. I am led to make this comment because this morning I learned that British Chiefs of Staff had notified Marshal Alexander that British Foreign Office has asked Soviet Government to confirm its invitation, and also to confirm that purpose of meeting in Vienna is to negotiate a settlement of points relating to zoning of Vienna, which have not been decided at EAC level.

The British Chiefs of Staff have also suggested that Marshal Alexander go on this mission and remain for a day or two if he can. The former are asking JSM ⁴⁴ to request United States Chiefs of Staff to send parallel instructions to General McNarney. Harold Mack, ⁴⁵ who is now in London, will come here to accompany the Marshal.

Meanwhile, the Political Adviser to AFHQ ⁴⁶ tells me the Marshal is disposed to reply negatively to the suggestion of the Chiefs of Staff.

General McNarney is away now but is expected back tonight and will undoubtedly talk this over with Alexander.

General Flory has tentatively drawn up a list of the United States Element of the mission. In No. 322 of April 5, 8 p. m., [April 12, 2 p. m.] ⁴⁸ the Department outlined the acceptable conditions for an allocation of zones of greater Vienna, including the Innere Stadt. Since then I have received Winant's 3865 of April 15, to the Department, repeated to me as No. 85. This indicates to me that the way has been opened for a compromise for something less than a division of greater Vienna. If this is true, should not the Department have the Joint Chiefs of Staff review the basic United States requirements set forth in the Department's telegram of April 5, 8 p. m. to London and repeated to me as Department's 322, April 13, 9 a. m. Austria covering a two or three months' period of SHAEF occupation there would have to be prepared within a few days. This program is based upon the assumption that control will be handed over to SACMED at the earliest possible moment and in any case before the Control Council for Austria commences to function. We were asked to consult on the preparation of the directive. While explaining that Erhardt was the appropriate political officer to consult on this matter, in view of the urgent nature of the talk we sent Knapp ⁵⁴ to SHAEF (forward) ⁵⁵ where the draft was done. The following is a summary of the issues which arose and of the action taken. The SHAEF directive referred to below is a draft which Knapp was given upon arrival.

- 1. The directive forbids fraternization with the civilian population. We suggested that such fraternization "should not be encouraged but need not be prohibited unless you (the military commander) decide otherwise". SHAEF G-1 56 however, remains in favor of an initial policy of non-fraternization.
- 2. The SHAEF directive left Italian displaced persons in Austria to be handled by the Austrian authorities along with other enemy nationals. The question was raised of whether these should not be assimilated to nationals of the United Nations but the SHAEF officers stated that they had no instructions from JCS or CCS on this point.
- 3. The directive left German displaced persons, a category which was not defined, to be handled by the Austrian authorities. Agreement was reached on a definition of enemy displaced persons as any enemy nationals who came to Austria after Anschluss and among the statement of objectives was included the phrase "to repatriate German nationals at the earliest opportunity". The SHAEF officers were not prepared, however, to accept direct military government responsibility for the care and reparation [repatriation?] of these persons.
- 4. The directive contained provisions which would have frozen all church property in Austria and would have subjected financial transactions of the churches to close control and report requirements and in particular would have enjoined the churches to maintain their assets substantially intact. In view of the delicate problem of the Catholic Church in Austria and of the role which it may play in welfare activities deletion of these provisions was suggested and agreed upon.
- 5. The directive was seriously lacking in any statement of positive economic objectives. A number of changes and additions were agreed upon including a new item in the statement of general objectives worded as follows: "You will take such steps as may be feasible to stabilize economic conditions and will support efforts by the Austrian authorities to restore production, trade and employment".

⁵⁴ J. Burke Knapp, Assistant Adviser on Austrian Affairs, then on a visit to Europe.

 Maj. Gen. Ray W. Barker, Chief of the Personnel Division of the General Staff of SHAEF.

- 6. The directive took a very rigid line with respect to relief imports, providing that they should be called for only to prevent disease and such disorder as might endanger or impede military operations. Efforts to obtain a relaxation in this formula were met by insistence that the supply position could not possibly support any more generous treatment. Agreement was reached, however, upon opening the supply section of the directive with the following language "in view of the critical shortage of transport and stocks you will conform to the following policy". It is believed that this provision will make clear to plan commanders that the level of imports is determined on supply rather than on political grounds.
- 7. A proposal that the directive should contain a positive injunction to promote foreign trade was rejected on the ground that this was not appropriate for the very brief period of SHAEF responsibility.

A copy of a more detailed report on these negotiations is being forwarded by air pouch.57

371. You will have observed from Department's 350 April 19, 11 a.m. repeating its 907 to Moscow that the latter informs the Soviet Government, as suggested in your 1631 April 19, 8 p. m., that our representatives proceeding to Vienna will study and discuss on the spot the factors bearing on the Vienna zoning problem, but that we expect the actual agreement to be made on the inter-governmental level in the European Advisory Commission. We have discussed this with the British Embassy at Washington which assumes that the instructions which London will issue to the British element at Caserta 58 will be in harmony with these premises.

This is not necessarily contrary to the British Chiefs of Staff notification to Marshal Alexander mentioned in your 1631 to the effect that the purpose of the meeting in Vienna is to negotiate (though not to close) a settlement of points relating to zoning of Vienna which have not (yet) been decided in EAC. It is true that EAC has not yet been able to complete a protocol on the zoning of Austria because of conflicting views regarding the zoning of Vienna. The purpose of an examination and discussion of the situation on the spot would be to find a zoning arrangement mutually satisfactory to all the representatives there which would facilitate completion of the inter-governmental agreement on it in EAC.

 i.e., the British counterpart to the United States Group, Control Council (Austria).

Although the American recommendations to EAC, based on the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and set forth in Department's 321 April 5, 8 p.m. to you, 59 are framed in terms of "Greater Vienna", they are concerned primarily with the United States zone thereof, and your principal concern in Vienna will of course be to assist the U.S. military representatives in accordance with their instructions to seek an arrangement which will be suitable for the needs of the forces of the United States, whatever may ultimately be agreed regarding the limits of the rest of Vienna. We understand that instructions now going forward to them through military channels discuss U.S. requirements in terms of facilities and make it unnecessary to insist on the Gau line as such on which earlier JCS views were based.

The Soviet proposal would permit allotment to the American zone of the Vienna districts of Landstrasse, Wieden, Favoriten and Simmering, but would leave all five of the Vienna airfields in the Soviet zone. The original American proposal would allot these districts plus the district of Schwechat to the American zone. A proposal which allotted these five districts including Schwechat to American forces and gave them satisfactory access to the facilities of the Innere Stadt might be satisfactory to us regardless of whether the rest of Vienna was zoned on the basis of the pre-1938 city limits or the Gau limits. Our principal concern in insisting on the district of Schwechat was based on our desire to have the control and use of a Schwechat airfield. Whatever compromise may ultimately become necessary, it is imperative that the American forces in Vienna have unrestricted use of an airfield suitable for our big four-engined planes. with adequate space around it and facilities for housing nearby the personnel, work shops, recreational facilities, etc., associated with the airport. We can under no circumstances forego the unrestricted use of adequate airfield facilities for our forces.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff requirements referred to in the last paragraph of your 1631 were framed to meet this requirement. They proposed using the limits of Greater Vienna primarily because this placed the district of Schwechat in our zone, which appeared to be the most reasonable way of assuring an adequate airfield with facilities for U. S. forces. If the American representatives find that an adequate airfield with supporting facilities can be assured to U. S. forces by some zoning arrangement, whereby there is assured to the U. S. an airfield as a part of its zone preferably in the Schwechat District to meet requirements specified in paragraph 4, JCS will presumably give it favorable consideration.

Washington, April 21, 1945.

My Dear Doc: With reference to our conversation on April 19th about Austria, we have now heard from London that the Prime Minister has decided, in the circumstances, not to send a message himself to Stalin on this subject. Instead, instructions have been sent to His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow to approach the Soviet Government through normal channels.

2. I enclose a paraphrase of the instructions which have been issued to Mr. Frank Roberts.⁶⁰

Yours ever,

ROGER MAKINS

[Enclosure]

Paraphrase of Instructions sent to His Majesty's Chargé D'Affaires in Moscow on April 21st

His Majesty's Government have learned with pleasure of the statement made by Marshal Stalin to Mr. Harriman that, now that Vienna had been captured, it was urgently necessary to settle the respective zones in Vienna, and of the proposal that United States, British and French Governments should send their officers at once to Vienna to work out the necessary arrangements on the spot.

- 2. His Majesty's Government gladly accepts this proposal and welcomes the statement issued by the Soviet Government on April 8th affirming that the Soviet Government stands firmly by the Allied declaration issued at Moscow in 1943.
- 3. Besides working out in Vienna the division of the Vienna zones and airfields, it is urgent that the four powers should arrive at an agreed policy in regard to the establishment of interim control machinery for Austria and that the representatives on European Advisory Commission should be instructed to settle this latter question without delay.
- 4. There are other important political and economic questions which will arise in Austria. His Majesty's Government are sure that the Soviet Government will agree that our common purpose might well be prejudiced by unilateral action on the part of any one of the occupying powers in regard to the removal of industrial plant and equipment regardless of whether or not this was German owned, or the elimination without regard to their attitude towards the Nazis, of Austrians who might be useful in re-establishing Austrian administration and economy. His Majesty's Government propose therefore that representatives to be sent to Vienna should be empowered to deal with such questions and that the Soviet Commanders on the spot should meanwhile be instructed to hold their hand. His Majesty's Government would also urge the importance of taking all possible steps to maintain Austrian agriculture in full production.

1308. Have today addressed letter to Vyshinski along the lines of Department's 907, April 19, 11 a.m. concerning occupation of Vienna.

I would be personally inclined to question the advisability of our representatives proceeding to Vienna before general agreement has been reached on the airport question and before we can be sure that they will be received and treated in a manner entirely consistent with the dignity of their position. If we are later to participate successfully in a joint occupation, I think it important that the local prestige of our representatives not be compromised in advance by their being dependent on the favor of the Russian commander for all facilities, particularly entrance and egress for themselves and their staffs and freedom of movement in the Vienna area, during the initial period.

I must also invite attention to the possible effect on the future value of EAC as a channel for working out such tripartite settlements if the Russians are permitted, without remonstrance on our part, to remove these discussions from that body to a place where they feel themselves in effective control and in a position to back up their views by various forms of local pressure.

The Soviet representative stated that he had not been informed by his Government of Marshal Stalin's invitation for US, UK and French representatives to proceed to Vienna to "establish" the zoning of Vienna on the spot. Apparently Gousev first learned of this invitation from Strang just before the meeting. A second factor is that Gousev now has somewhat more flexible instructions.

I have been waiting to report to you until I found out what the British position was. Strang has just informed me that his Government wishes to delay further discussions on Vienna in the Commission until there is a reply from Stalin confirming his invitation to send representatives to Vienna. Think it is important to know whether Stalin's invitation referred only to assignment of area within the city of Vienna or whether it would include a consideration by the military representatives of the larger Vienna Gau.

Since Gousev suggested in Saturday's discussions that Tulln airdrome, which lies outside the boundaries of greater Vienna and in the Russian zone, be substituted for Schwechat airdrome, the representatives who proceed to Vienna should also be able to inspect Tulln or any other suggested air facilities. Neither the British air authorities nor our own feel that Tulln is adequate to meet the joint needs of the three other occupying forces. The British, and I believe also the French, would accept US administrative and operational management of the airdrome assigned to joint use.

With regard to Innere Stadt, Gousev on Saturday accepted provisionally the US formula of April 10 providing for joint occupation and use (text transmitted in my 85 April 15, 11 p. m., to Caserta, repeated to Department as my 3865).

The Russian argument in asking for greater all-round facilities in Vienna is based on their use of Vienna as the administrative center of their zone.

This morning one of Gousev's assistants, Saksin, ⁶² gave Mosely informally a new Soviet proposal for division of the city of Vienna, drafted on the assumption of joint occupation and use of Innere Stadt. Under this new proposal the Soviet zone would consist of districts of Floridsdorf, Brigittenau, Leopoldstadt, Favoriten and Wieden; French forces would occupy Landstrasse and Simmering; US forces would occupy Döbling, Alsergrund, Währing, Hernals, Ottakring, Josefstadt, Fünfhaus and Rudolfsheim; UK forces would occupy Hietzing, Meidling, Neubau, Mariahilf and Margareten.

On Saturday I further insisted that, if the city of Vienna rather than greater Vienna was to be accepted, facilities for training and recreation should be provided for US forces outside the city itself and in the adjacent areas of the Soviet occupied zone. The British and French joined in supporting this position.

If freedom of inspection is given to the military representatives and they report to the Commission, we would be in a much better position to make final recommendations on the arrangements for Vienna. I should like to point out that although we appear to be close to agreement on control machinery, this agreement cannot be finally concluded as article II must refer either to "greater Vienna" or to "the city of Vienna".

The Counselor of the British Embassy (Makins) to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

Washington, April 23, 1945.

My Dear Doc: I enclose herewith a paraphrase ⁶³ of a telegram which the Foreign Office sent to Mr. Macmillan ⁶⁴ at Caserta on April 22nd reporting a further move by the Soviet representative at the European Advisory Commission on April 20th [21st] about Austria. You probably have received a similar account from Mr. Winant. ⁶⁵

As you will see, Monsieur Gousev appeared to be making a move towards reaching a settlement in the European Advisory Commission itself on the questions regarding Vienna which, at Marshal Stalin's suggestion, it was proposed should be dealt with on the spot by American, British, French and Russian representatives.

In spite of this latest development at the European Advisory Commission, the Foreign Office are anxious that the American, British and French representatives should proceed to Vienna as proposed. They think these matters can probably be settled better on the spot, especially if added authority is given to the Allied representatives by the presence of Field Marshal Alexander. They feel also that once the Allied representatives are in Vienna they may be able to discuss other matters besides arrangements for dividing up the City and in fact establish the interim Allied Commission for which we have long been pressing at the E.A.C. At the worst the representatives would be able to report something of what is now happening in Vienna.

The Foreign Office hope that the State Department will share this view and agree that we should both do our utmost to get our representatives to Vienna notwithstanding this latest development.

Yours ever,

ROGER MAKINS

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 23, 1945—10 p. m. [Received April 23—4:40 p. m.]

4160. At tonight's meeting of the European Advisory Commission the Soviet representative introduced formally his new proposal for the division of the city of Vienna, which I reported in my 4125 to Department April 23, 2 p. m., repeated to Caserta as my 92. The grounds advanced were that a large part of the proposed Soviet area, particularly Floridsdorf, had been destroyed in the capture of Vienna. This new proposal and the reason advanced in support of it seem added grounds for looking over the zoning and facilities at Vienna on the spot. I also hope that an officer from the Air Service will be assigned to the mission.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/4-2345

The United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

[Caserta,] April 23, 1945. [Received April 28.]

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that the planning for the occupation of Austria is in its final stages at the United States Group Control Council here in Caserta. It may be of interest to have a general picture of the progress to date.

Basic Planning Documents for Austria

The basic planning documents for Austria, prepared in the field, consist of the following:

- 1. AFHQ Detailed Plans for the Military Occupation of Austria, prepared under the general authority granted by the Combined Chiefs of Staff to the Supreme Allied Commander, Mediterranean Theater of Operations, to occupy Austria;
 - 2. Field Handbook on Military Government;
 - 3. Functional Manuals;
 - 4. Basic Plan;
 - 5. Policy Directives.

With the exception of one, which is of a strictly military character, they will be discussed in the order listed above.

Field Handbook on Military Government

The Field Handbook on Military Government in Austria was prepared jointly by the American and British Planning Groups in London. As a matter of fact, about 95% of this Handbook was written by the American planners. The first draft was mimeographed and sent to Washington under date of October 20, 1944. Subsequently, it has been reviewed and approved by AFHQ, with very few changes. The only exception to this is Chapter 5, on De-Nazification, concerning which there existed a divergence of views between the Americans and British. This chapter is now being considered by AFHQ. At the present time, the printed editions of the Handbook are coming off the press in London, with the exception of Chapter 5.

Functional Manuals

The Functional Manuals, of which there are 12,* were likewise prepared by the American and British planners in London, and subsequently reviewed by AFHQ. They are, as the name implies, detailed guides covering the work of each of the Divisions which are likely to be set up under the quadripartite control machinery during the period in which the administration of Austria is under an Allied Commission. Each manual is based on the corresponding chapter in the Handbook, but it goes into the subject more thoroughly, so that it will offer detailed guidance for the specialists in each branch. Four of the manuals, which will be required by all military government officers in Austria, will be printed, viz., "Administration and Local Government", "Public Safety", "Displaced Persons", and "Legal". The other manuals will be mimeographed. A list of the titles of these manuals is enclosed.

Basic Plan

The U.S. Group Control Council—Austria has prepared what is known as the Basic Plan for Military Government in Austria. It is designed solely for possible use during the phase of Allied Commission government in the event that no approved basic policies are received from higher authorities. It should be pointed out that the Basic Plan represents strictly American thinking—the British did not participate in its preparation—and the annexes and appendices to it consist of statements of what each Division Chief conceives to be his primary tasks and how he proposes to accomplish them. Of course, the Basic Plan may never be used at all, and it is subject to modification at all times by approved policies received in the future.

^{*}This may subsequently be reduced to 11 by the inclusion of Agriculture under Economics. [Footnote in the original.]

The Basic Plan, which is not yet completed, will consist of a general statement of objectives, with 27 annexes and 98 appendices. A list of the annexes is enclosed.

Policy Directives

The U.S. Group Control Council—Austria has undertaken the preparation of a number of policy directives on various subjects along the lines of those prepared by the German Control Council group. These Austrian directives are based on the Moscow Declaration, and on various policies approved for Austria by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Combined Chiefs of Staff, the Department of State, and the President. The German directives, some of which were approved in Washington, were also used for guidance. At the present time, 29 such Austrian directives have been submitted to the American element of G-5,⁶⁷ AFHQ, for comment, and 10 others are in various stages of preparation. After the G-5 MTOUSA comments have been received and discussed, it is planned to submit the directives in final form to General McNarney for approval. When they have been cleared by him, they are to be submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and copies forwarded to Ambassador Winant in the EAC for his information.

It should be pointed out that these Austrian directives are not interim directives but have been prepared in such form that, if time permits† their consideration and approval by the Governments concerned at the EAC level, they could be issued to each Commander-in-Chief on the Governing Body of the Allied Commission in Vienna.

A list of these 39 directives is enclosed.

Despatch of American Officers to SHAEF for Military Government in Austria

On April 12, a mission from AFHQ was sent to Paris, and subsequently to SHAEF Forward, to discuss military government matters involved in the occupation of Austria by forces under SHAEF. In this group were included Colonel George R. Carey, Chief of Staff to General Flory, and Lt. Col. Charles P. Howard, Assistant Planning Coordinator of the U.S. Group Control Council—Austria. As a result of these discussions, it was decided that certain officers of the task force element now in Caserta should be sent immediately to the SHAEF Theater. Accordingly, on April 22 and 23, some 30 officers and 35 men left here for Paris, where they will be formed into military government teams to enter Austria with SHAEF troops in the event that Austria is occupied from the North. It is planned to send an additional 60 officers and 35 men from this theater about the end of April, to supplement the group leaving tomorrow.

⁶⁷ Civil Affairs Division.

[†]If time does not permit, these directives can be used for guidance at the Governing Body level on the Allied Commission. [Footnote in the original.]

A part of the military government team for Greater Vienna will remain here. It now consists of 20 officers and about 20 men, and it is hoped to augment this to 64 officers and 128 men through the acquisition of additional personnel from the Balkan areas and from this theater.

School for Military Government Officers at Portici

From February 1 to April 15, there was held under British auspices at Portici, a small town near Caserta, a school for military government officers, who are subsequently to be assigned to Austria. Approximately 50 percent of the lectures were delivered by American Two types of courses were offered; one for men with no experience in military government, who were given one week of general instruction on the theory of military government and one week of background instruction on Austria; while the other course was for men with some experience in military government, who were offered one week to give them a general Austrian background. Approximately 130 American officers, drawn from the Fifth Army, the Allied Commission for Italy, the task force element of the U.S. Group Control Council-Austria, and other sources, went through this school. Some 200 British officers took these courses. After the American officers had finished the school some 50 of them were returned to the Fifth Army; others were sent back to the Allied Commission for Italy, earmarked for future service in Austria, while the remainder came back to the task force element.

Disarmament and Demobilization School.

A joint Air-Ground Disarmament-Demobilization School has been started at the U.S. Group Control Council—Austria in Caserta to give a two weeks' course in general Austrian background and orientation to American officers, who are to serve with the Army Corps and Division staffs of the American occupation forces in Austria. These officers are scheduled ultimately to be moved to the SHAEF Theater to come in with the troops from the North. The first course started April 19, the second is to begin May 3, and the third on May 17. It is contemplated that 90 officers from the Army, 75 from the Air Forces and 15 from the Navy will attend this school. The Political Division has agreed to furnish officers for three of the lectures to cover Austria from the political, economic, and agricultural standpoint.

$Transfer\ of\ USGCC ext{-}Austria\ to\ Fifth\ Army$

On April 4, 1945, General Order No. 21, dated January 30, 1945,68 which established the U. S. Group Control Council—Austria, was rescinded, and this organization, with the exception of Air, Navy, and Political divisions was assigned to the Fifth Army, effective ⁶⁸ See footnote 54, p. 18.

April 14, 1945. It will remain in Caserta pending further developments.

Liaison with USGCC—Germany

Arrangements have been made to exchange liaison officers between the Control Council groups of Austria and Germany. In accord therewith, Lt. Dale Clark (USNR 69) has arrived in Caserta to represent the German group, and Colonel Donald M. Pearson of the Austrian group has departed to take up his liaison duties with the German group in France.

UNRRA70

Mr. David H. Sulzberger, UNRRA representative, arrived on April 10, on a permanent assignment to plan with General Flory's group for UNRRA work in Austria. At the present time, consideration is being given to a draft of an UNRRA-SACMED agreement along the lines of the SCAEF model.⁷¹ It is contemplated that UNRRA will furnish assembly center cadres consisting of a director, welfare officer, and a medical officer. Once in Austria these three officials will recruit from among suitable displaced persons an additional seven to nine people, the whole forming an UNRRA team of ten or twelve persons. It is impossible at this stage to know how many such teams will be formed, but the number may go as high as 100.

At present UNRRA is empowered to deal solely with displaced persons but the question has been raised as to whether or not this organization may receive special authorization to engage in relief and rehabilitation work.

At the present time, eight experienced American Red Cross officers, who are now in Northern Italy, have been earmarked for service in the American Zone in Austria. These officers are scheduled to go in with the Task Force—either from the North or the South—and will be prepared to distribute to Austrian civilians 100 tons of selected items of clothing, totaling 240,000 pieces. They expect to have some ambulances. Likewise they will concern themselves with civilian hospitals and general welfare work and, in addition, it is their hope to revive the Austrian Red Cross.

In the zone to be assigned to the United Kingdom, the British Red Cross will be used, which in contrast to the American Red Cross, will deal, not only with Austrian civilians, but also with displaced persons.

OSS

According to present plans, the Office of Strategic Services has earmarked a team of 35 men to serve in Vienna, and an additional force of 134 people are to serve in the American zone. If SHAEF troops enter Austria from the north, 30 OSS men, drawn from the above allocations, plan to go in from there.

Personnel on Duty at the USGCC-Austria

On April 23, there were on duty at the U. S. Group Control Council—Austria the following:

	Officers	$E.M.^{72}$
Army Ground Forces	94	123
Navy	10	2

Note: For liaison duties in London there are at present one officer from the Political Division, three from the Air Division, one from the Navy Division, and one officer and two enlisted men from the Army Ground Forces.

An additional 19 officers of special qualifications are expected from Washington to augment the Planning Group in Caserta. General Flory has received authority from the Chief of Staff to General McNarney to recruit twenty more officers for this purpose. General McNarney wishes at least one officer from every division of the Planning Group to enter with the SHAEF forces from the north in order to familiarize themselves with military government problems in Austria at first hand. This will be done, if and when the officers can be spared.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN G. ERHARDT

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State 16

Moscow, April 25, 1945—7 p. m. [Received April 25—5: 35 p. m.]

1348. ReDeptel 907, April 19, 11 a. m. I have received a letter from Vyshinski stating that the Soviet Government has no objection to the dispatch to Vienna of several American officers to participate in the work of the provisional control machinery. Vyshinski states that the Soviet Government considers it extremely important to expedite the delimitation of the zones of occupation in Austria and in Vienna and to discuss plans for the organization of the provisional control machinery in conformity with the proposals advanced from the Soviet side for consideration in the European Advisory Commission.

⁷⁶ The text of this telegram was repeated on April 27 to London as Department's No. 3291 and to Caserta as No. 391.

Concerning political and economic questions and particularly questions of the removal of various types of equipment, Vyshinski states that the Soviet Government considers that no obstacles should be placed in the way of the urgent removal of trophy equipment which might be used in the war against Germany.

Moscow, April 26, 1945—6 p. m. [Received April 26—3:50 p. m.]

1361. Communication has just been received from Vyshinski dated April 24 in which he states that he has been directed by the Soviet Government to communicate the following.

"Upon entry of the Red Army onto territory of Austria the former Chancellor of the Austrian Republic and last President of the Free Austrian Council, Karl Renner, addressed himself to the Soviet Command stating that he was prepared to extend every aid to the Allies in liberating and restoring an independent Austrian state.

"After the entry of Soviet forces into the Austrian capital Vienna Karl Renner informed the Soviet command of his desire to form a provisional Austrian government. In this connection Karl Renner stated that he, as the last President of the Free National Council of Austria which had been dissolved by the Germans, had the legal right to form such a government. He proposes to call together the former Deputies of the Austrian Parliament who have remained in the territory of Austria freed by the Red Army and together with them to decide the question of the composition of a provisional Austrian government into which, in his opinion, representatives of all the political parties of Austria and of non-party elements should enter.

"Karl Renner considers that this means of organizing a government is at the present time the only possible one inasmuch as it is not possible at present to conduct elections to the National Assembly in view of the fact that the greater part of Austrian territory is occupied by the Germans and the entire male population and a considerable part of the female population of the Austrian territory freed by the Red Army has been driven off by the Germans.

"On the assumption that the creation of a provisional Austrian government can be of substantial help to the cause of the Allies in the battle for the complete liberation of Austria from German dependence, the Soviet Government considers it possible not to hinder Karl Renner

The text of this telegram was repeated to Caserta in Department's telegram 393, April 28, to London as Department's No. 3324, and to Paris as Department's No. 1739. With respect to Vyshinski's letter concerning the despatch to Vienna of American officers to participate in the work of the provisional control machinery I wish to invite particular attention to Vyshinski's use of the words "in conformity with the proposals advanced from the Soviet side for consideration in the EAC."

In view of this wording and of Soviet practice as observed on other occasions our officers may expect when they go to Vienna that the Soviet commander will have authority to discuss the questions of delimination of zones of occupation in Austria and Vienna only on the basis of and within the general framework of the Soviet proposals already advanced in EAC.

⁷⁸ On April 27, 1945, an Austrian Provisional Government headed by Karl Renner as Chancellor was formed and the reestablishment of the Austrian Republic was proclaimed. ment will note that most of the Austrian left wing elements were concentrated in the Vienna District and of the non-left wing elements there a very large proportion presumably fled out of apprehension over what might happen to them after the entry of the Red Army at the hands not only of the Russian forces but also of Austrian Partisans and Communist elements. It is not to be supposed therefore that many former parliamentary Deputies could be found in the Vienna area today other than those of a radical left wing persuasion. This is further supported by Vyshinski's own statement that the entire male population has been deported. Thus regardless of the extent to which Renner's name and age might inspire respect in Austrian circles it is not likely that he would be able to mobilize under existing conditions anything resembling a representative Austrian government in the territory liberated by the Red Army.

Vyshinski's statement that the entire male population and a considerable part of the female population of the Soviet occupied area have been driven off by the Germans is the first information of any sort this Embassy has had from Soviet authorities on conditions in Austria.

What they have in mind includes joint occupation and use of the Innere Stadt, airports, facilities, transit rights and freedom of movement of all personnel. The Field Marshal and General McNarney have always been especially insistent on these points. Even today Alexander argued strongly for Gau Vienna and he wished, until dissuaded by General McNarney's position on the subject, to inform the British Chiefs of Staff that unless equality of status in the Vienna Gau was accepted by the Russians now he felt it would be inadvisable to despatch a mission to Vienna.⁸¹

Caserta, April 27, 1945—1 p. m. [Received 8:37 p. m.]

1761. I have talked over with Generals McNarney and Flory Moscow's telegrams giving Vyshinski's reply concerning despatch of an American Mission to Vienna, and also the proposal advanced by Renner to form a Provisional Government. It seems reasonable to suppose that if the Soviet Commander in Vienna is to have authority to discuss zoning of Vienna only on the basis and within the framework of Soviet proposals advanced in the EAC, the US and Soviet positions are so divergent that there is offered no prospect for a meeting of minds, since the US cannot forego obtaining an airport and the Soviet proposals in the EAC, so far as I know, do not provide anything for us except the use of Aspern under Soviet control or the allocation to the US, UK and France of Tulln airport, both proposals being unacceptable.

The military view this latest information from Moscow as portending a repetition in Austria of some of the difficulties experienced in the Danubian area generally unless at the very beginning there is firmly established the principle of equality of status among the occupying powers.

given Brigadier General Flory a directive for guidance the main points of which are:

- 1. Flory, as McNarney's representative, will negotiate with French, Soviets and British on Vienna on zoning of Gau Vienna, and allocating facilities in the inner city. Final action will be taken at each
- 2. As a basis for his negotiations Flory is to be guided by JCS 1169/9 84 and JCS message WX72646.85
- 3. Flory is to examine proposals presented to him and with Soviet permission look over the Vienna zones. If proposals presented are in full accord with principles laid down in paragraph 2 Flory can agree to them as a basis for McNarney's recommendations to Joint Chiefs for transmission to the EAC. If proposals are not in line with paragraph 2 Flory is to submit counter proposals in writing, including substance of following four points: (a) equality between four occupying powers will be the basic principle governing the subdivision of Gau Vienna; (b) there will be a satisfactory allocation of the facilities of the inner city; (c) the US zone will be districts of Landstrasse, Wieden, Favoriten, Simmering and Schwechat; and (d) each of the four nations participating in the occupation will be accorded full rights of transit by ground and air over the zones of the other nations throughout Austria.

Any counter proposal made by Flory was also to include a statement to effect that Allied participation in occupation of Vienna and division of Vienna Gau are based on principle of equality.

4. Flory's counter proposals will be offered as American proposals for American zones and will not include zones of other countries, except that it can be stipulated that facilities of the United States airfield will be available to other three occupying powers on a larger basis until adequate air facilities may be available elsewhere.

5. To arrive at agreement Flory could waive claim to Schwechat district lying beyond Schwechat and Zwolfaxing airfields.

6. Flory is to keep McNarney informed at all times and is to request instructions on matters not covered by this directive.

- 7. Flory is to advise McNarney if he thinks the latter should come to Vienna himself or if he believes the conversations should be ended at any stage of the negotiations.
- 8. If other representatives bring up matters outside of scope of negotiations Flory is authorized to discuss such matters but to make no commitment.

Winterton, 86 Flory's opposite number, has just been made a Major General. Mack will accompany Winterton and I of course shall accompany Flory.

3343. The Joint Chiefs of Staff do not look with favor upon the French suggestion for a mixed rather than a zonal occupation of Austria. Mixed occupation is difficult of administration especially where differences of languages and legal concepts are involved. With occupation forces of different nationalities in the same area, an unfriendly or uncooperative population is in an ideal position to play one nationality off against the other and will be quick to take advantage of the situation. This suggestion would require submission to and acceptance by both the British and U.S.S.R. as well and could not be agreed to by the United States alone. Furthermore, it would require reopening and revising the entire theory of occupation as developed to date under the existing protocols. On the other hand no military objection is perceived to a French zone of occupation of Vorarlberg and Tirol in Austria. Any occupation of Germany or Austria by the French should be subject to all of the general conditions to which the United States, United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. have already subscribed.

In a talk we had with Warner  today, Warner said that the Foreign Office not at all pleased with the way the Russians had handled the setting up of the Provisional Government in Austria headed by Karl Renner. He added that the views of the Foreign Office had been made known to the Department through the British Embassy at Washington, and that instructions to the British and American Embassies in Moscow are being worked out in Washington between the Department and the British Embassy.

The Foreign Office, Warner continued, found it particularly disturbing that the Russians, as the British Embassy in Moscow had been told only a few days ago, had been in touch with Renner ever since Russian troops entered Austria. The Russians, he went on to say, must not be left in doubt about the unfortunate impression made by their secretive and unilateral action in setting up and recognizing this Government in Austria.

Renner, Warner said he believed, was selected merely to give the Government an air of respectability. A man of his age could not be expected to take an active part in the Government. The real work, Warner concluded, would be done by young, active Communists.

I am much concerned about the way things are going in Austria. The announcement of formation of a Provisional Austrian Government, together with refusal of permission to our Missions to fly into Vienna, makes me fear that the Russians are deliberately exploiting their arrival first into Austria to "organise" the country before we get there.

It seems to me that unless we both take a strong stand now we shall find it very difficult to exercise any influence in Austria during the period of her liberation from the Nazis. Would you be willing to join me in sending Stalin a message in terms of my immediately following telegram? 89

Following is message referred to in my immediately preceding telegram:

Begins.

We have been much concerned to hear from our Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow that, despite invitation extended to Mr. Harriman on April 13th, the Soviet Government will not agree to Allied Missions proceeding to Vienna until agreement has been reached in E.A.C. regarding respective zones in Vienna and provisional control machinery. We have also been disagreeably surprised by announcement of the setting up in Vienna of a provisional Austrian Government, despite our request for time to consider the matter.

It has been our understanding that treatment of Austria, as of Germany, is a matter of common concern to the Four Powers who are to occupy and control those countries. We regard it as essential that British, American and French representatives should be allowed to proceed to Vienna in order to report on conditions there before any final settlement is reached in E.A.C. on matters affecting occupation and control of the country and especially of Vienna itself. We hope you will issue the necessary instructions to Marshal Tolbukhin in order that Allied Missions may fly in at once from Italy.

[Washington,] April 30, 1945.

Participants: The President

Mr. William Phillips 90 Mr. H. Freeman Matthews

Mr. Grew told the President that a government had been set up in Austria obviously under Russian instigation. The only information which we had other than that contained in the press was a notification received on April 27 from the Soviet Government to the effect that Renner, a well known Austrian Socialist leader and former Chancellor, was planning to form a government and that the Soviet did not intend to oppose his administration. Mr. Grew continued that the British Foreign Office had already issued a statement declining to recognize the new government (he read the ticker report) and he thought we should get out a statement along similar lines. Mr. Grew then read a draft statement which the President promptly approved (without change) and which was subsequently issued by the Department.

Mr. Grew continued that the Prime Minister proposed to register a strong protest at Moscow and asked the President to join him in a message to Stalin.^{92a} Mr. Grew asked whether the President agreed that we should make some representations to Moscow. He outlined briefly to the President the composition of the Austrian Government and the fact that Moscow-trained Communists seemed to hold the key positions of Minister of Interior and Minister of Education and Religion.⁹³ The President said that he agreed that we should protest against the procedure of the Soviet Government in acting unilaterally without consultation but not to comment on the composition of the Government. He requested that this protest be delivered by our Embassy at Moscow and a copy sent to Winant to communicate to

Statement by the Acting Secretary of State 95

[Washington,] April 30, 1945.

Asked whether the State Department recognized the new provisional government of Austria headed by Dr. Karl Renner as temporary authority in Austria, or whether the Department had received any official confirmation of its formation, the Acting Secretary of State said that he had noted press reports emanating from Moscow that a provisional Austrian government headed by Karl Renner had been formed at Vienna but added that the United States Government has not yet had confirmation of this development. The Acting Secretary also said that on April 27 notification was received by the Soviet Government that the formation of a provisional Austrian government had been proposed by Dr. Renner and the Soviet Government was not disposed to hinder this development. He added that the United States Government does not recognize this provisional Austrian Government and that the whole question is being taken up with the Government of the USSR whose troops are now in occupation of Vienna.

Typed heading to the statement reads: "For attribution to the Acting Secretary of State but not for quotation."

Telegram 972, April 28 to Moscow, not printed, directed the Chargé to inform the Soviet Government that the communication regarding the proposed establishment of an Austrian provisional government was under study by the United States Government; the United States Government assumed that none of the four powers would recognize an Austrian government until all four had agreed on it (740.00119 Control (Austria)/4-2845).

In the spirit of the Yalta declaration on liberated Europe ⁹⁷ this Government was preparing with an open mind and in good faith to consult with the Soviet Government about Renner's proposal, when it was surprised to learn through the press that a provisional Austrian government had already been formed in the Soviet-occupied part of Austria. This development could occur in that area only with the full knowledge and permission of the Soviet authorities. Yet they failed to consult us or inform us beyond the meager information conveyed in your 1361, or to allow time for us to concert with them prior to the establishment of Renner's provisional regime, the details of which we have learned solely from the press.

We assume that it remains the intention of the Soviet Government that supreme authority in Austria will be exercised by the four powers acting jointly on a basis of equality, through the inter-allied military government envisaged in the proposals for control machinery now before the European Advisory Commission "until the establishment of an Austrian government recognized by the four powers".

In order that we may collaborate with the Soviet authorities effectively in accordance with the Crimea declaration as far as Austria is concerned it is, in view of this development, all the more necessary that allied representatives proceed at once to Vienna as suggested by Marshal Stalin (Embassy's 1162, April 13, midnight) and that the protocols on zones of occupation and control machinery be completed in EAC without delay.

1424. With respect to the composition of the Provisional Government which has just been set up in Austria, I wish to invite attention to the significance of the Communist retention of the portfolio of the Ministry of the Interior. It is now established Russian practice to seek as a first and major objective, in all areas where they wish to exercise dominant influence, control of the internal administrative and police apparatus, particularly the secret police. The Russian mind is partial to the belief, founded in the political experience of this country, that control of the police establishment, both open and secret, is half the battle won in the struggle for power, and that all other manifestations of public life including elections can eventually be shaped by this authority.

The Department will see this policy reflected, I believe, in every one of the other countries in Eastern and Central Europe in which the Russians have recently sought dominant influence. In Finland the Ministry of the Interior has only recently been taken over entirely by a Communist (Leino).98 In Poland the administration of public security which controls the police is in the hands of Radkiewicz,99 a Communist of obscure origin widely believed here to be a direct representative of the Russian NKVD 1 and to exercise a unique authority in his field, independent of his colleagues in the Government. Nosek 2 who was given the Interior Ministry in the new Czechoslovak Government has been a member of the Czech Communist Party since its inception. In Rumania, Georgescu ³ is also a Communist and is backed by a fellow party member, Patrascanu, who holds the Ministry of Justice. The Hungarian Minister of the Interior, Dr. Erdei Ferec is, as I understand it, the strength of the Communist sector of the Hungarian Provisional Government. About Yugov 5 in Bulgaria and Zagevich 6 in Yugoslavia I have no detailed information but I think it will be found that if they are not Communists they are at least regarded by the latter as entirely reliable people.

If, therefore, Moscow has contented itself with only three members of the Austrian Provisional Government openly designated as Communists, this should not be taken as an indication that the Russians would be prepared to accept willingly a permanent Austrian Government in which they would not have what they consider a controlling influence. In the present new regime retention of the Ministry of the Interior together with control of education of the youth and an active and watchful Communist 7 in the chancery of the elderly Premier will be considered here as a solid position. For the future Moscow will charge as usual what the traffic will bear.

3400. The Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War and Navy Departments have now considered the proposal of the Soviet representative to amend the British proposal in the European Advisory Commission for zones of occupation in Austria described in your 3449 April 4, midnight, Comea 205. The views of this Government are as follows:

- 1. There are no military objections to the Soviet amendment that the part of the province of Upper Austria north of the Danube River and the Styrian part of Burgenland be made parts of the Soviet zone.
- 2. However, the Soviet proposal that the area to be occupied by the quadripartite forces in the Vienna area should be limited to the pre-1938 City of Vienna is not acceptable. In consideration of the original Soviet proposal for subdivision of only the City of Vienna, the Secretaries of War and Navy pointed out in a letter of January 48 that the U.S. subdivision in Vienna must extend sufficiently beyond the city limits to provide adequate air facilities for U.S. forces within the U.S. subdivision. They also stated in a letter of April 5° containing comments on the British proposal for subdivision of Greater Vienna that the U.S. subdivision must include adequate air facilities for U.S. forces. This letter included a U.S. proposal for subdivision of Greater Vienna that would provide suitable air facilities for U.S. forces. Division of the pre-1938 City of Vienna will not assure any known air facilities to the U.S. forces in the Vienna area, in as much as the subdivision now proposed for Soviet occupation contains the only known airfield within the area. Such a division would result in all five of the airfields known to be in the Greater Vienna area being It is believed that the U.S. should press for the under Soviet control. division of Greater Vienna as proposed in the letter of April 5 which is mentioned, in as much as such a division would result in a more equitable distribution of airfields.

It is suggested that U.S. agreement to the inclusion of that area of Upper Austria north of the Danube River in the Soviet zone could probably be used as a basis for getting Soviet agreement to the U.S. proposal on the division of Greater Vienna.

The foregoing views were expressed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff prior to a telegram addressed by the War Department to General 1431. The British Chargé having received similar instructions, I am addressing a letter to Vyshinski today along the lines of the Department's 981, April 30, 9 p. m., concerning Russian failure to consult us with respect to the Provisional Government in Austria and our desire that our representative should proceed at once to Vienna.

The Department's telegram under reference does not indicate whether the Department had received my 1413, April 29, 6 p. m. concerning the Soviet decision not to admit our representatives to Vienna until EAC has completed action on zones of occupation. I have today received a note from Vyshinski reiterating this position. In this note Vyshinski states that "the American, British and French officers" may come to Vienna to participate in the work of "the provisional control mechanism" when EAC shall have determined the distribution of the zones of occupation "of Austria and Vienna". He then repeats the reference contained in his note of April 25 (ReEmbs 1348, April 25, 7 p. m.) to the urgency of a decision in this question. He adds that corresponding instructions have been given to Marshal Tolbukhin. I take it that this last means that the Marshal has been directed to make arrangements to admit our representatives as soon as EAC has reached its agreement.

In view of the uncertainty as to whether the Department had seen my 1413, April 29, 6 p. m. at the time when it drafted its instruction under reference, I am stating to Vyshinski in my letter that while I have not had a specific reaction from my Government to the communication made to me orally on April 29 and repeated in his note received today, the instructions which I have received to date indicate that my Government still considers it necessary that the Allied representatives should proceed at once to Vienna.

At Baudet's suggestion a meeting of the French, British and ourselves was held in General Flory's office to discuss the mission to Vienna. The French views expressed were:
- 1. On the matter of the area to be subdivided in Vienna, the French military prefer Gau Vienna to the narrower limits of the city because it will best meet their requirements for adequate space and facilities for their troops.
- 2. With regard to terms of reference, the French envisage the mission as one mainly confined to making recommendations in the zoning of Vienna.
- 3. Mr. Baudet said he was not sure that Paris understood that the American and British missions were on a military level. He believed it wiser for the time being, that Brigadier General Cherriere instead of himself should head the delegation. He is telegraphing Paris for instructions on this point.

1432. ReEmbs 1431, May 1, 10 p. m., repeated to Caserta, London and Paris. With further reference to the Department's 981, April 30, 9 p. m. and the communication I have made to Vyshinski pursuant thereto and particularly to the passages dealing with the establishment of the provisional government, I wish to say the following.

I assume that this communication is being made for the record and that we are not entertaining any inordinate hopes as to its effect on the Russians. The latter are accustomed to this sort of reaction and probably discount it in advance when they take action they know will be distasteful to us. It is scarcely conceivable that any such expression of views in Moscow or anything our representatives might say or do in Vienna, if and when they get there, would alone suffice to induce the Russians to withdraw support of this provisional regime, as long as they continue to find it to their liking. In this respect, I invite attention once more to my 4214, November 3, 5 p. m., 1944 repeated to Caserta as 18 and to London as 247.¹³

From now on our best chance of making our influence felt on the general political situation in Austria will lie, in my opinion, in the degree of energy, efficiency and singleness of purpose which we are able to develop, together with our western Allies, in the zones of Austria we may occupy, and the extent to which we are able to create creditable conditions there which will permit people to face the future with some sense of confidence and security. A Soviet-ridden provisional regime whose authority was acknowledged only in Vienna and the Russian zone of occupation could hardly be successful for long, particularly if the remainder of the country were to turn out to be more orderly and prosperous.

In these circumstances I think we will wish to consider carefully once again the precise advantages we expect to gain by sending our representatives to Vienna and clinging to the principle of a quadruple control mechanism. In this we should bear in mind that whether our representatives, once arrived in Vienna, accept passively the Russian fait accompli or complain ineffectively against it, the result will be equally unhelpful to their local prestige and to their ability to influence the further course of events.

The following message from Prime Minister Churchill is forwarded for information and for preparation of a draft reply:

"Prime Minister to President Truman, personal and Top Secret, Number 29, your Number 19.14 (1 May 1945)

1. I have now received from Ambassador Winant a copy of the protest which you have instructed your representative at Moscow to deliver to the Soviet Government after concerting with our Chargé d'Affaires. 14a I am in entire agreement with this protest and our representative in Moscow is instructed to make a similar protest.

2. He is further to make the following separate communication:

- 1. His Majesty's Government are much concerned to hear from the British Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow that despite the invitation you extended to Mr. Harriman on April 13, the Soviet Government will not now agree to the Allied missions proceeding to Vienna until agreement has been reached in the EAC regarding representative zones in Vienna and the provisional control machinery. It is impossible for the EAC to reach any agreement about the zones in Vienna and the provisional control machinery until the Allied missions have reached Vienna and have been able themselves to ascertain the conditions there. The results of the Soviet refusal to allow them to go to Vienna have thus produced a complete deadlock and leave the Soviet Government in sole control of Austria.
- "2. We therefore regard it as essential that the Allied representatives should be allowed to proceed at once to Vienna and thus enable a settlement to be reached on matters affecting the occupation and control of the country, and especially of Vienna itself, on the spot. We request that the necessary instructions be issued to Marshal Tolbukhin in order that the Allied missions may fly in at once from Italy. Ends."
- 3. I trust, Mr. President, that this will be in accordance with your views and that if so you will instruct your Chargé d'Affaires to support his British colleague." 15

THE SECRETARY said the third problem was that of the Provisional Austrian Government which had been set up without consultation with the British and American Governments.

Mr. Molorov said that these Governments had been informed.

Mr. Eden agreed that we had been informed, but said that there had been no consultations.

Mr. Molorov inquired if there were any objection to this Govern-He said that they had not informed Renner that his Government. ment was permanent.

Mr. Eden said we had asked the Soviet Government not to proceed with the setting up of this Government but to allow consultation.

Mr. Molotov asked how the situation could be improved.

Mr. Eden said we desire our people to proceed to Vienna.

Mr. Molorov replied that this could be arranged.

THE SECRETARY said that the matter had been before the EAC, but the Soviet Government had proceeded unilaterally.

Mr. Molorov said that Vienna had been captured quickly and that it had been necessary to set up an administration.

Mr. Eden said he wished to speak quite frankly on the matter. The Russian position is that our people can not go to Vienna until the EAC

Washington, May 3, 1945—noon.

995. After concerting with your British colleague please inform the Soviet Government as follows:

Following Marshal Stalin's suggestion (your no. 1162 April 13, midnight) and Vyshinski's confirmation (your no. 1348, April 25, 7 p. m.) that American, British and French representatives proceed immediately to Vienna to settle the respective zones of occupation, the British and American Governments made plans for their representatives to proceed from Caserta and the French Government sent representatives to join them there en route to Vienna. We were therefore greatly surprised to receive the Soviet Government's subsequent intimation that the arrival of American and Allied representatives in Vienna would be undesirable until after the zones have been agreed to in the European Advisory Commission (your no. 1413 April 29, 6 p. m. and your no. 1431 May 1, 10 p. m.) and are unable to understand the reasons for this change in attitude.

The European Advisory Commission has been unable to agree on the zoning of Vienna, partly through lack of information about conditions there. The Soviet representative has already had occasion to alter his own recommendations in the European Advisory Commission because of the discovery that part of the proposed Soviet zone had been destroyed in battle. It is equally important that we examine on the spot the factors bearing on our own proposals in the European Advisory Commission. Soviet unwillingness to permit this thus is blocking rapid conclusion of the agreements in the European Advisory Commission.

We therefore hope that appropriate instructions will be issued to Marshal Tolbukhin that the Allied representatives may fly to Vienna immediately.

Vyshinski states that the Soviet forces operating on Austrian territory cannot get along without the organization of an administration composed of local citizens, just such an organization he continues has been created in the form of the Provisional Austrian Government by agreement between leaders of all non-Fascist democratic parties in Austria. It goes without saying, he concludes, that later in accordance with the existing agreement an Allied Control Commission will be set up which will carry out the necessary control over the Austrian Government.

[Extract]

Winant: I want to ask you, we have delayed discussing the question of areas in Vienna until after the military mission has gone on.

Matthews: To Vienna, yes.

Winant: Although two or three times Gousev has raised the question, I still think it wise to delay at present until the military mission has had a chance to look over the ground.

MATTHEWS: Unfortunately, we seem to have struck a snag in that. The Russians have now taken the position that the military mission should not go to Vienna until the question is settled and so we have reached a sort of an impasse. We have taken it up urgently with Moscow but have not yet gotten their answer.

WINANT: Well, I understand through Eden in the Foreign Office that Molotov has recommended to Stalin that they be permitted to go.

MATTHEWS: That is correct.

Winant: And so I thought we should wait until we get their reply before we pursue that settlement of the Vienna area and the question of the Air Force here in London.

MATTHEWS: I think that's wise unless the delay is too long. If the delay is too long then I think we'd better go ahead and continue discussions in the EAC. Don't you agree?

WINANT: Yes I agree to that.

Matthews: Yes.

WINANT: But I think it is worth waiting four or five days to get it.

He expressed his Government's dissatisfaction with the unilateral action which had been taken by the Soviet authorities and refused to accept as valid Dekanozov's excuses that the Soviet authorities found need of a local administration and of an immediate demonstration of Austrian independence. He pointed out that it would have been quite possible to establish a local administration without establishing a provisional government. He invited attention to the implications which would arise if the authority of Renner Government were not to be recognized in the other zones of occupation in Austria. The Ambassador has stressed to his Government the importance of the maintenance of the principle of collective Allied responsibility in Austria and Central Europe and has urged that a firm line be taken.

In reply to my letter incorporating the request that instructions be issued to Marshal Tolbukhin that Allied representatives be permitted to fly to Vienna without further delay, I have now received a letter from Vyshinski dated May 6, stating that the Soviet Government does not object as it has not objected previously to our representatives proceeding to Vienna to participate in the control machinery. However, continues Vyshinski, in giving such agreement the Soviet Government was confident that by the time the representatives arrived the necessary agreement would have been reached on the question of zones of occupation and the zones themselves would have been delimited by the EAC. Unfortunately the zones have not yet been delimited. The proposal to transfer the question of zones of occupation for consideration in Vienna is inacceptable in the opinion of the Soviet Government since questions of this nature, as was agreed by the leaders of the three states,²⁹ are entirely within the competence of the EAC.

Vyshinski continues that the statement in my letter to the effect that the conversations in the EAC regarding zones of occupation in Vienna would not be successfully concluded until our representatives arrived in Vienna was unconvincing. It was sufficient to point out, he concluded, that the zones of occupation in Germany and Berlin were set up by the EAC before Allied troops entered German territory.

1035. Your 1453, May 3, 10 p. m. Please inform the Soviet Government that we have noted Vyshinski's letter explaining the need for an administration of local persons in the Soviet-occupied area of Austria, and wish to take this occasion to review developments in Austria as follows:

We fully appreciate the need to have some native local administration in the areas occupied by the Red Army, as we have found desirable in areas occupied by the American Army. It was not our intention to object to this but rather to the Soviet Government's permitting the establishment of a government claiming to represent all of Austria, including areas occupied by U.S. forces, without prior consultation with us. Effective consultation will be possible only when Allied representatives have arrived in Vienna and joint control has begun.

Until then, while each occupying power is administering alone the area it has cleared, the United States is of course not associated with, and accepts no responsibility for, measures taken in the Vienna area. It will be glad to consider the question of a provisional Austrian national government when the Allied Commission begins to function in the period of joint control.

The occupation of all of Austria is now proceeding so rapidly that it may soon become desirable to place in effect the complete protocols on control machinery and zones of occupation now pending in EAC as soon as they can be agreed.

²⁹ For text of the terms of reference of the European Advisory Commission as agreed upon at the Moscow Conference on November 1, 1943, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. I, p. 756.

The American representative in EAC has already stated the zoning needs of the United States in Vienna as well as they can be described without examining on the spot the actual condition of the area to be zoned following the damage of battle. These requirements appear to be entirely reasonable and justified. A suitable airport with supporting facilities must be an integral part of the U.S. zone in Vienna to assure our independence of communications and make possible the maintenance of our forces in Vienna. Insistence on zoning which would place all five Vienna airdromes in the Soviet zone thus seems to us unreasonable and inexplicable, and were the Soviet Government to persist in this attitude we could only conclude that it desired to delay completion of the agreements.

We have now received (Embassy's 1490 May 7, 8 p. m.) Vyshinski's statement that Allied representatives should not arrive in Vienna until after the zones have been agreed in EAC, thus reversing this earlier letter and Marshal Stalin's original suggestion that the representatives proceed to Vienna to establish the zones.

Vyshinski suggests it should be possible for EAC to zone Vienna as it did Berlin without examination on the spot. All three of the other representatives in EAC have for some time been prepared to do just this, i.e., subdivide the present capital, known as "Greater Vienna" just as "Greater Berlin" was subdivided. It is the Soviet Government alone which has been refusing to do this, seeking instead to subdivide the Vienna of 1938 rather than the Vienna of 1945.

Unless the Soviet Government will make it possible to resume the work on zoning in EAC by giving the Soviet representative sufficient latitude to arrive at a subdivision of the present-day capital "Greater Vienna" which will satisfy the legitimate needs of all the occupation forces there, including an airdrome in the U.S. zone, it is difficult to arrive at agreement in EAC.

Meanwhile, pending consultation among the Allies no government can be considered to represent all of Austria including areas occupied by U.S. forces.

The British Prime Minister (Churchill) to President Truman

London, 12 May 1945.

43. The latest reply of the Soviet Government about our missions proceeding to Vienna is wholly unsatisfactory. It is quite unacceptable that the Russians should continue in this manner to exclude our representatives from Vienna. I am perfectly willing that the question of zones in Vienna should be concluded in the EAC, but I feel that we should insist that our representatives should first be allowed to make a survey on the spot. Field Marshal Alexander holds the same view very strongly. As we have now reached a deadlock on the diplomatic level, would you now be willing to send either a joint or parallel message to Marshal Stalin on the following lines:—

- 1. "I am surprised to learn that, despite the invitation you extended to Mr. Harriman on April 13th, the Soviet Government are still refusing to allow Allied representatives to proceed to Vienna. The fact, to which M. Vyshinski has drawn attention in a letter to the British Chargé d'Affaires, that the zones of occupation in Germany and Berlin were established on a tripartite basis by the EAC before Allied troops entered German territory seems to me to have no relevance to the refusal of the Soviet Government to allow the representatives of their Allies to proceed to Vienna which has been liberated by Soviet forces. I have no wish, as suggested by M. Vyshinski, to transfer the ultimate decision of the zones question from the EAC to Vienna. But, the Soviet representative on the EAC having had occasion to alter his own recommendations to the Commission because of the discovery that part of the proposed Soviet zone had been destroyed, makes me feel that we too are fully entitled to have the opportunity to examine on the spot the factors bearing on our own proposals in the Commission."
- 2. "In order therefore to facilitate a rapid conclusion of the agreements in the EAC, which you will I am sure agree to be very desirable, I request that the necessary instructions may be issued to Marshal Tolbukhin so that Allied representatives may fly at once to Vienna."

4786. Comea 247. I have noted the desire expressed in Department's 3627, May 9, noon,³⁰ repeated to Caserta for Erhardt as 449, that the EAC should now resume negotiation of the two protocols on zones of occupation and on control machinery in Austria. I believe the Commission can resume discussion of these questions in the next few days. Latest instructions received here were contained in Department's 3400, May 1, 3 p. m., repeated to Caserta for Erhardt as 415.

Unless otherwise instructed I shall assume Department does not intend discussion in EAC to be delayed pending Moscow's report on the renewed remonstrances transmitted in Department's 1035, May 8, ³⁰ Not printed; it stated that the Department hoped that Ambassador Winant would be able to resume negotiations in the E.A.C. in a further effort to complete the protocols on zones of occupation and control machinery for Austria as soon as possible (863.01/5-945).

7 p. m., to Moscow (repeated to London as 3622; to Caserta for Erhardt as 466).

Since the last EAC discussions on zones in Austria reported in my 4125, April 23, 2 p. m., repeated to Caserta as my 92, no new factors have emerged with respect to the Soviet position in EAC except that I have told the Russians privately that all our information about Tulln airdrome indicates that latter is completely inadequate for our needs.

During the past week I have noticed a gradual hardening in the attitude of the UK delegation. Strang indicated informally last night that he now expects his Government to insist on adopting the wider boundaries of Gau Vienna and that probably he will not be prepared to continue discussion on the tentative basis of the narrower boundaries of Vienna City, even on presupposition that the Soviet delegation might agree to accept our requirements concerning (1) a suitable airfield under US control (2) recreation and training facilities outside Vienna City and (3) equitable sharing of Innere Stadt.

As I understand our position set forth in Department's 3400, it is also more unyielding inasmuch as I am instructed to insist that a suitable airfield must form an integral part of the US zone in Vienna. This involves our withdrawing the tentative formula advanced to me on April 10 (my 85, April 15, 11 p. m. to Caserta for Erhardt, repeated to Department as my 3865) which was designed to assure full US control of Schwechat airdrome and unimpeded access to it without including it as an integral part of the US zone, on condition that the Russians meet all our adjustments in other respects.

Under these circumstances and in light of other developments regarding Austrian affairs, I shall be glad to reexplore the zoning question in EAC, but unless the Soviet delegation has some new instructions, the Department should foresee a continuance of the present deadlock so far as the ability of the EAC to resolve the disagreements on Vienna is concerned.

As suggested in your no. 43, I am sending the following message to Marshal Stalin along the lines of your message to him:31

^{} For text of Prime Minister Churchill's message to Marshal Stalin, see Correspondence Between the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and the Presidents of the U.S.A. and the Prime Ministers of Great Britain During the Great Patriotic War of 1941–1945, vol. I, Correspondence with Winston S. Churchill and Clement R. Attlee (July 1941–November 1945) (Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1957), document No. 468, p. 356.

"I am unable to understand why the Soviet authorities are now refusing to permit American and Allied representatives to proceed to Vienna, contrary to the good suggestion you made to Ambassador Harriman on April 13 that representatives go there to establish the Vienna zones of occupation, in order that the agreements on the occupation of Austria now pending in the European Advisory Commission may be completed.

Intelligent arrangement of the Vienna zones would be greatly facilitated by an examination and discussion on the spot by the military authorities who will later be responsible for smooth operation of the inter-Allied administration of Austria. For example, the Soviet representative in the European Advisory Commission has recently proposed that the air communication needs of the American forces be met by placing under American administration the airport at Tulln, 20 kilometers northwest of Vienna, in lieu of an airport in Vienna itself. However, neither he nor we know the precise dimensions or conditions of this airport, and to give his proposal proper consideration we should be permitted to survey it.

Since the area to be zoned is no longer in enemy occupation it seems only reasonable to examine it, as you suggested, in order to facilitate completion of the agreements in the European Advisory Commission. Continued refusal of the Soviet authorities to permit this, in spite of your original suggestion, would not be understood by the American public.

I therefore hope that you will yourself let me know whether you will issue the necessary instructions to Marshal Tolbukhin to facilitate a survey by the Allied representatives of those Vienna areas which are now under discussion in the European Advisory Commission."

In these messages we contemplate having the representatives merely survey and discuss prospective zones, so that the formal zoning and control machinery agreements can be completed in EAC. I consider the latter our primary objective in Austria now and am inclined to think it would be a mistake to have our representatives reside in Vienna or assume any functions or responsibilities there beyond surveying the zones, until full joint control of Austria can be instituted on a basis of full equality among the occupying powers. I fear that the Russians want before then to do things in Vienna that we would not approve, but that they want equally much to do them in our name rather than carry the onus alone. Until we can have equal control it seems desirable to maintain the position that what is done there is done unilaterally; otherwise we might slip there into the uncomfortable position we occupy in the Allied Commissions in Rumania and Bulgaria.³²

Memorandum by Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Staff to the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, to the Secretary of State

The following message from Premier J. V. Stalin, dated May 18, 1945,33 was received this date:

"I have received your message of May 17 regarding the trip of American and Allied military representatives to Vienna. It is true that I agreed in principle to the arrival in Vienna of the said representatives, but, of course, I had in mind that by the time of arrival there of the said representatives a necessary understanding will be reached on the question of the zones of occupation of Austria and that the zones themselves will be specified by the European Consultative Commission.34

As it was agreed upon among Mr. Churchill, President Roosevelt and myself such questions are entirely within the competency of the European Consultative Commission. I still adhere to this point of view at the present time. Therefore it would not be possible to agree that the question about zones of occupation and other questions concerning the situation in Austria be transferred for consideration to Vienna.

I do not object, however, against a trip of the American and Allied representatives to Vienna for the purpose of acquainting themselves on the spot with the situation of the city and for preparing proposals regarding the zones of occupation in Vienna. In accordance with this necessary instructions will be given to Marshal Tolbukhin.

Besides, it should be kept in mind that the American military representatives could arrive in Vienna by the end of May or the beginning of June, when Marshal Tolbukhin, who is at present on his way to Moscow, will return to Vienna." 35

32. Dept's 1, May 26, 7 p. m. to Vienna [Florence].42 I have discussed with Field Marshal Alexander and Genl, McNarney in Caserta and with Genl. Flory here the matter of having a civilian representative of my staff accompany the mission to Vienna. They are all of the same opinion namely that the inclusion of a civilian representative of the Dept in a military reconnaissance party with the resultant necessity of informing Marshal Tolbukhin of this fact might prejudice the success of the mission by arousing Soviet suspicions and affording a pretext to the [apparent omission]. After many false starts they feel that they are on the verge of getting into Vienna at last and desire to avoid any step that might upset plans that seem to be proceeding smoothly at this stage. Consequently they do not favor making any changes at this late date in the composition of the military party some members of which are leaving here by motor early on the morning of the thirtieth. In view of their strong feelings I do not feel warranted in pressing them to act contrary to their best judgment.

⁴² Not printed; it stated that the Department agreed that the mission to Vienna should be of a military character but considered it desirable for Erhardt or a member of his staff to accompany the mission and report on general conditions in Vienna, if such an arrangement did not in any way prejudice or delay the mission (740.00119 Control (Austria)/5-2645).

This is all the more true since the mission now includes two former officers of the Dept, Lt. Col. Chas. W. Thayer, 43 who has been assigned temporarily to the Fifteenth Army Group for this trip and Lt. Col. Edgar Pallen who is a member of the Political Division.44

I have just been told that two Allied officers who were proceeding overland to Vienna with Alexander's message to Tolbukhin 45 were stopped by the Soviet authorities at Corps Headquarters. Later information was received that they are to proceed under Soviet escort at 2 p. m. today.

- 1852. I have received a reply dated May 30 from Vyshinski to our note setting forth the American position regarding developments in Austria based on Dept's 1035, May 8, 7 p. m. repeated AusPolAd Florence for Erhardt as 1). Substance of Vyshinski's letter follows:
- 1. Soviet Govt has noted that American Govt fully appreciates necessity for local administration in areas occupied by Red Army as in areas occupied by American troops and that American Govt is prepared to discuss question of Provisional Austrian Govt when Allied Commission begins to function in period of joint control.
- 2. With reference to dispatch of American representatives to Vienna Vyshinski states that this question was settled in correspondence between heads of Soviet and American Govts ending with Stalin's message of May 18. Soviet Govt has no objection to dispatch of American representatives to Vienna to acquaint themselves on the spot with condition of city and to prepare proposals for EAC concerning zones of occupation in city. Vyshinski suggests that American Rep arrive at Vienna at end of May or beginning of June when Marshal Tolbukhin has returned to Vienna. Tolbukhin is now in Moscow.
- 3. Vyshinski declares that statement in our note to effect that US Govt could not agree that all five airports in Vienna area should be at disposal of Soviet Command is evidently result of a misunderstanding since there are no airdromes within Vienna city limits. There can be no question with respect to airdromes outside city limits and therefore within Soviet zone of occupation particularly as Soviet Govt has made no claim to airports in American zone in Austria. To meet wishes of US Govt, however, Soviet Govt agrees to place at disposal of Allies airdrome outside city limits at Tulln 20 kilometers from center of Vienna. Soviet representative on EAC has already made a communication on this subject. Tulln airport is completely equipped and can handle all types of airplanes. Soviet Govt accordingly considers that question raised by US Govt concerning airports is settled.

- 4. Soviet Govt has already stated that in its opinion most suitable and correct definition of Vienna city limits is area which was fixed by Austrian authorities and existed up to Nazi occupation of Austria, and not area of greater Vienna which was imposed upon Austria by German occupants.
- 5. Vyshinski refuses to admit contradiction between statements made in his letters of May 6 and April 25 asserting that when speaking of agreement of Soviet Govt to dispatch of American representatives to Vienna he meant in both cases that the zones should first be delimited by EAC.
- 6. Vyshinski characterizes as completely arbitrary and unconvincing any suggestion that Soviet Govt desired to delay completion of the agreements.

Caserta, June 6, 1945—9 p. m. [Received—8:05 p. m.]

2504. Our 2502, June 6.46 Joint Brit, French and Amer plan for reconnaissance of Vienna was submitted to Russians on evening June 4 and at 10 o'clock following morning heads of three missions had further meeting with Russians, Morosov 47 being in charge.

Morosov announced Tolbukhin would receive chiefs of three missions June 10 at which time main work must be completed. Their practical work was to begin that same day and it would not be possible reconnoiter anything outside limits of city.

Question of airfields reconnaissance was raised by Winterton. Morosov stated only Tulln could be seen. Flory stated categorically they wanted to see all airfields given in joint reconnaissance plan for three missions. Those fields are Tulln, Aspern, Gotzendorf, Munchendorf, Setring, Deutsch Wagram, Zwolfaxing, Ebergassing. Cherriere and Winterton supported this claim. Morosov promised he would submit request to Tolbukhin and answer was expected same day. Flory refused make investigation of Tulln pending reply from Tolbukhin. Winterton supported Flory in this. Americans again asked for permission to fly in courier plane suggesting it should land at Aspern. Winterton did not participate in this suggestion. Understood this request also being submitted to Tolbukhin. Winterton has said he intends to request equal facilities for Brit if Amer request granted.

Satisfactory arrangements were made for general and technical investigations which are now in progress. Russians have not interposed any objection to meetings with burgomeister and Austrian technical officials. Members of missions do not even have to have passes. They have complete freedom of access to all installations and barracks inside city whether or not occupied by Russians. Tour of Vienna by heads of mission under guidance Morosov planned for evening June 5.

Flory made statement toward end of meeting on Amer attitude towards airfields and said his instructions were to reconnoiter Gau as well as city since it had not yet been decided whether it was city or Gau which was to be subdivided. Cherriere did same.

It seems to be apparent that Russian instructions are to set time limit on work of missions, insure it is only city Vienna and not Gau which is to be subdivided, and to try to confine three missions to use of Tulln and no other airfield.

Winterton stated he felt anxiety of Russians to fix time limit might be due to genuine desire on their part to settle matter in view of Tolbukhin's statement re dire need of admin in Austria and his eagerness to have four powers begin their tasks. This sentiment was reiterated more than once and Tolbukhin expressed his pleasure at commencement of investigation of problems.

It is also Winterton's opinion that by June 10 missions will have collected sufficient info provided Tolbukhin's reply on airfield and Gau satisfactory. Winterton has asked whether he may point out to Russians in asking for more time that making of recommendations must inevitably involve discussion with his French and Amer colleagues. He has also asked for instructions on point of informing Russians that his orders are to make recommendations to SAC re areas of joint occupation.

2512. Our 2504, June 6, 9 p. m. Evening June 4 chiefs of missions to Vienna presented to Blagodatov 48 and to Morosov agreed plan of procedure calling for individual survey parties from each mission to examine general conditions and combined parties to investigate technical matters such as communication and public utilities. Russians made some objection to detailed examination all facilities on ground they were tasks for permanent occupation and not reconnaissance parties but eventually agreed to general scheme.

Later same evening Marshal Tolbukhin received chiefs of missions and again opened question of length of visit, saying zoning question is of great urgency not only for Allies but also for Austria which was in great need for rehabilitation, and he hoped missions' work would be finished in 7 days. Gen. Flory did not commit himself to any fixed period but said mission could start work soon as detailed programs were agreed upon. Gen. Winterton stated SAC had requested Winterton to remain until zoning question had been settled. Tolbukhin replied he had orders that when survey was completed all missions could leave.

During discussions Tolbukhin stated casually air experts might begin examination June 5 of airfield designated for three western Allies. When Flory said he was not aware any airfield had been designated Tolbukhin replied that London had named Tulln in the Stonz section. Flory made it clear this was not his understanding.

Morning June 5, missions met with Russians and after preliminary discussions re communications, public utilities, medical and real estate, specialists paired off with Russian opposite numbers to work out details. Morosov made it clear he had no objections to complete inspection of all facilities within the "Stadowein", but stated nothing outside city limits were within competence of missions although airfield at Tulln could be inspected immed. Flory insisted on visiting all airfields in Vienna area to render complete report on existing facilities and also pointed out that question of whether city or land limits were to apply to Vienna zones was still not agreed by our Govts and for this reason Flory could not accept Morosov's limitations on missions' activities to city alone. Morosov stated his instructions were likewise clear and matter would have to be referred to Tolbukhin. Meeting was adjourned pending Tolbukhin's reply.

 ⁴⁷⁸ Ambassador Kirk was also U.S. Political Adviser on the staff of the Supreme Allied Commander, Mediterranean Theater.
 ⁴⁸ Lieutenant General Blagodatov, Soviet Commandant in Vienna.

During meeting Morosov also brought message from Tolbukhin that latter would see mission chiefs on afternoon of June 10 at which time he expected their basis [basic?] work would be completed. Morosov was asked to tell Tolbukhin that Flory and Winterton would give no assurance surveys would be completed by that date.

In subsequent discussion re courier plane flights to Vienna for Mission, Morosov stated request for permits for such flights should be answered at same time as question of airfields was settled.

Caserta, June 7, 1945—midnight. [Received June 8—7:30 a. m.]

2523. Our 2512 of June 7, mid. [10 p. m.]. Winterton has reported to Chief of Staff at AFHQ that a most satisfactory meeting with Russians took place yesterday. Morosov has stated that Tolbukhin has agreed to permit all airfields referred to in our 2504 of June 1 [6], 9 p. m., to be inspected by missions except those under Malinovsky's 49 command east of Danube.

According to Winterton's report Gen Flory stated he would not be satisfied unless all airfields could be inspected by AMET's [sic] and Winterton supported this position and Morosov replied that in this event the matter would have to be referred back to Govt's for right to inspect fields east of Danube.

Flory went on to say that occupation and control of Austria was to be set up on a basis of equality between four nations involved and that this problem could not be dealt with except on basis of equality. Morosov inquired whether up to present any obstacles had been placed before missions by Russians. Winterton replied in negative and added that on contrary missions were very pleased with freedom of movement and facilities which had been furnished by Russians in city of Vienna. He stated, however, that it seemed an unnecessarily complicated procedure to refer to govts a matter (airfield inspection) which could easily be resolved between Tolbukhin and Malinovksy. By implication Morosov agreed and said he would approach Tolbukhin. When Morosov took this attitude Flory and Tolbukhin [Winterton?] agreed to begin an inspection of airfields west of Danube. French Gen Cherriere could not be found and was not present until later on.

Winterton then went on to state that it would be necessary to inspect not only Vienna city but also the Gau. Morosov replied that he did not understand what this meant. There were 21 Bezirke in Vienna under old Austrian Govt and Nazis had expanded it to 26. He inquired what Winterton understood as Vienna. Flory and Winterton replied that they interpreted Vienna as including 26 Bezirke. Morosov asserted that the Soviets recognized only 21 Bezirke and that therefore this request for inspection rights outside city limits would have to be referred to Tolbukhin. Winterton argued that this was unnecessary from practical viewpoint. Missions merely wished to visit outside Vienna in order to estimate training facilities available and accommodations in case there should not be adequate space in Vienna.

Head of Brit mission also pointed out that permission to visit airdromes automatically gave opportunity to reconnoiter greater Vienna and that since no detailed reconnaissance was desired outside city he could see no reason why missions should be kept from visiting country around Vienna. Morosov agreed in general and said that in fact there were no control posts and really nothing to stop missions from going wherever they liked. He added, however, that he would have to discuss matter with Tolbukhin and then forthwith invited heads of missions to visit Vienna Woods.

Question of training facilities was then raised by Morosov who explained some of problems about cultivation, etc. Morosov added that he wished to know, at risk of being tactless, how many troops Brit contemplated having in Vienna. Winterton replied that rank and importance of Brit Commander in Chief in Austria would require a brigade group in area of Vienna. Flory and Cherriere made same estimates. Russians according to Morosov had few troops in Austrian capital as it was Russian policy to maintain in towns only sufficient soldiers to guard HQ and installations and to quarter larger groups outside in country. Winterton said Brit agreed with this fully and that this was reason why he wished to inspect area outside Austrian capital.

Morosov then set forth that on June 10 Tolbukhin would receive three heads of mission, would then entertain them at dinner and after dinner would bid them farewell. From June 11 therefore, work of missions would be considered as completed.

Winterton immediately stated to Morosov that his instructions were to remain in Vienna (our 2507, June 7 50) until Brit Govt ordered him to leave since Brit Govt might wish to prefer to him any points not covered in his report. Morosov said he would mention this to Tolbukhin before June 10. In any event Winterton has already made this point clear to Tolbukhin himself. In this connection, Dept is of course aware that neither Flory nor Cherriere have yet received instructions similar to Winterton's on this point.

At AFHQ this evening we conferred with Chief of Staff who stated that SAC will insist that Winterton remain in Vienna but Gen Morgan pointed out that Alexander had not yet received approval from London on his action in this matter.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Italy (Kirk)

Washington, June 9, 1945—7 p.m.

568. Dept has seen Mat 735 in conjunction with your 2504 June 6 and 2523, June 7 and is gratified by General Flory's excellent conduct of mission to Vienna.

You will have observed Stalin's message Deptel 500 May 21 51 to Caserta did not refer to any specific area or specific Vienna limits or duration of visit. His original suggestion Moscow's 54, April 13 to Caserta^{51a} was obviously that officers on the spot should work towards a mutually satisfactory solution of the points not yet settled in EAC; these include (1) whether the pre-1938 city limits or the Gau should be sub-divided and (2) suitable airport for US forces.

We agree that officers should remain until their specific mission is completed, and that it should be completed as expeditiously as possible.

Dept does not share Brit view your 2496 June 5 52 that mission should insist on remaining in Vienna after completing on the spot examination. Dept has always been skeptical about feasibility of interim arrangements for control machinery in Austria and is inclined to believe that at this stage they would be apt to place us in an inferior position of sharing responsibility without corresponding share in control.

52 Not printed.

 $^{^{51}}$ Not printed; it repeated Marshal Stalin's message of May 18 to President Truman (740.00119 Control (Austria)/5–1845). 518 The same as telegram 1162 to the Department, p. 61.

Dept considers our main objective in Austria now to be completion and entry into force of the formal EAC agreements for zoning and control machinery which would assure us full equality of authority as well as responsibility. War Dept is believed to share this view. Until then it is probably better to maintain the position that each military force is individually responsible in area it occupies.

Dept therefore regards present mission intended solely for reconnaissance to solve problem of Vienna zones, and that it would be preferable thereafter not to insist on remaining in Vienna, pending establishment of the Allied Administration on a basis of equality under the formal control machinery agreement.

Please inform Erhardt.

[LONDON,] 9 June 1945.

- 1. Our missions to Vienna have been ordered by Marshal Tolbukhin to leave by June 10th or 11th. They have not been allowed to see anything outside the strict city limits, and only one airfield can be permitted for the Allies. Here is the capital of Austria which by agreement is to be divided, like the country itself, into four zones: but no one has any powers there except the Russians and not even ordinary diplomatic rights are allowed. If we give way in this matter, we must regard Austria as in the Sovietized half of Europe.
- 2. On the other hand, the Russians demand the withdrawal of the American and British forces in Germany to the occupation line, fixed so long ago in circumstances so different, and Berlin of course is so far completely Sovietized.
- 3. Would it not be better to refuse to withdraw on the main European front until a settlement has been reached about Austria? Surely at the very least the whole agreement about zones should be carried out at the same time?
- 4. A telegram has been despatched to the State Department ⁵³ showing the actual situation of our missions in Vienna which, as ordered, will I presume depart on June 10th or 11th after making their protests.

FLORENCE, June 11, 1945—9 a. m. [Received 7: 35 p. m.]

61. Genl Flory's latest message dated June 10 states that it is plain that Soviets desire informal discussion of zoning of Vienna to cover only the city within 1938 limits. He says that clearance to inspect airports east of the river can be secured only through Govt channels. Soviets desire to reach an informal agreement re zones in order to speed up the work of EAC. Flory considers that enough information has been obtained to complete mission except matter of air field inspection east of Danube. Reconnaissance he has made indicates that US position outlined in JCS 1169/9 54 and WX-72646 55 must be reviewed since Soviet proposal is more favorable to US. Instructions of Cherriere allow him to discuss zones informally with Soviets and Winterton has asked for such instructions. Flory believes that while informal discussion would be helpful US should not enter into them until our position is clear and has received approval of higher authority. He is complying with his instructions not to discuss special locations with Soviets. He concludes the message by stating that, if it is not desired that he should remain until a visit to the eastern air fields is permitted, he requests orders to come back to Italy on June 12.56 His message was coordinated with Cherriere and Winterton. after long consideration and detailed discussion with you, I am unable to delay the withdrawal of American troops from the Soviet zone in order to use pressure in the settlement of other problems.

Advice of the highest reliability is received that the Allied Control Council cannot begin to function until Allied troops withdraw from the Russian zone.

I am also convinced that the Military Government now exercised by the Allied Supreme Commander should, without delay, be terminated and divided between Eisenhower and Montgomery,⁵⁸ each to function in the zone occupied by his own troops.

I am advised that it would be highly disadvantageous to our relations with the Soviet to postpone action in this matter until our meeting in July.⁵⁹

I therefore propose to send the following message to Stalin:

"Now that the unconditional defeat of Germany has been announced and the Control Council for Germany has had its first meeting, I propose that we should at once issue definite instructions which will get forces into their respective zones and will initiate orderly administration of the defeated territory. As to Germany, I am ready to have instructions issued to all American troops to begin withdrawal into their own zone on 21 June in accordance with arrangements between the respective commanders, including in these arrangements simultaneous movement of the national garrisons into Greater Berlin and provision of free access by air, road, and rail from Frankfurt and Bremen to Berlin for U. S. forces.

As to Austria, it seems that arrangements can be completed more quickly and satisfactorily by making our commanders on the spot responsible for determining the definition of zones both in Austria itself and in the Vienna area and the readjustment of forces, referring to their respective Governments only those matters that they are unable to resolve between themselves. I consider the settlement of the Austrian problem as of equal urgency to the German matter.

If you agree with the foregoing, I propose that appropriate instructions be issued at once to our respective commanders."

It is not correct to state that tripartite agreement about zones of occupation in Germany were the subject of "long consideration and detailed discussion" between me and President Roosevelt. References made to them at Octagon 61 were brief and concerned only the Anglo-American arrangements which the President did not wish to be raised by correspondence beforehand. These were remitted to Combined Chiefs of Staff and were certainly acceptable to them.

As to Austria I do not think we can make the Commanders on the spot responsible for settling outstanding questions. Marshal Stalin made it quite plain in his message of May 18th that agreement on occupation and control of Austria must be settled by E.A.C. I do not believe he would agree to the change and in any case our Missions may already have left Vienna. I suggest for your consideration the following re-draft of the penultimate paragraph of your message to Marshal Stalin.

Begins. "I consider that settlement of the Austrian problem is of equal urgency to the German matter. The re-distribution of forces into the occupation zones which have been agreed in principle by E.A.C., the movement of national garrisons into Vienna and establishment of Allied Commission for Austria should take place simultaneously with these developments in Germany. I therefore attach the utmost importance to settling outstanding Austrian problems in order that the whole arrangement of German and Austrian affairs can be put into operation simultaneously. I hope the recent visit of American, British and French missions to Vienna will result in E.A.C. being able to take the necessary remaining decisions to this end without delay." Ends.

I for my part attach particular importance to the Russians evacuating part of the British zone in Austria that they are now occupying at the same time as the British and Russian [American] forces evacuate the Russian zone in Germany.

I sincerely hope that your action will in the long run make for a lasting peace in Europe.

[Moscow,] 16 June 1945.

I have received your message regarding the expediting of removal of Allied troops into appropriate zones in Germany and Austria.

To my regret I have to say that your proposal to begin the removal of the American troops into their zone and the entry of American troops into Berlin on June 21 meets with certain difficulties, as, beginning with June 19, Marshal Zhukov ⁶⁴ and all of our other troop commanders are invited to Moscow to the session of the Supreme Soviet as well as for the organization of a parade and for the participation in the parade on June 24. Not mentioning the fact that not all the districts of Berlin have been cleared of mines and that this clearing cannot be finished before the end of June. As Marshal Zhukov and other commanders of Soviet troops are not able to return from Moscow to Germany before June 28th–30th, I would like to request that the removal of the troops begin on July 1 when the commanders will be back and the clearing of mines completed.

As regards Austria—the above-stated in respect to the summons of Soviet commanders to Moscow and the date of their return to Vienna applies to them as well. Besides it is necessary that in the nearest future the European Consultative Commission complete its work on the establishment of zones of occupation of Austria and Vienna as this work has not been completed up to the present time. In view of the stated circumstances the allocation of appropriate troops to their zones in Austria should also be postponed until July 1.

Besides, in respect to Germany as well as to Austria it would be necessary, right now, to determine the zones of occupation by the French troops.

On our part all necessary measures will be taken in Germany and Austria in accordance with the above-stated plan.⁶⁵

The United States Political Adviser on Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

FLORENCE, June 16, 1945—9 a. m. [Received June 17—12:15 p. m.]

78. There follows a summary of the highlights of Genl Flory's report on the Vienna mission. A separate telegram will be sent covering his recommendations since this part of his report is not now available. It is being decided in Caserta today.

The mission was granted almost complete freedom of movement with the exception of a refusal of permission for an air expert to visit the three airfields east of the Danube. Members of the mission proceeded freely throughout the area of greater Vienna south and west of the Danube and they even went beyond the Gau limits, into lower Austria. They also made some trips east of the River without any difficulty. Survey parties were given access to practically every building they wished to see including plants, factories, arsenals and even barracks occupied by Soviet Army. Local Soviet commanders and technicians also showed the greatest cooperation in arranging for the mission specialists to visit utility installations, in arranging interviews with local engineers, public health and municipal officials and in obtaining desired information and statistics. In their contacts the Soviet authorities were most hospitable and friendly both toward the officers and the enlisted men. The friendliness shown by the Soviet officers was in keeping with the warmth with which the Soviet rank and file greeted the American soldiers. Officers of Flory mission with previous knowledge of Soviets were of the opinion that the cordiality and cooperation of Soviet Army during this visit to Vienna was almost without precedent in their previous experiences.

The inner city is one of most seriously damaged areas of the city. Accommodations and facilities in useable condition there other than the hotels will probably be sufficient only to provide for the requirements of the Austrian authorities and the excess if any available for use by the occupying powers will not be very great [apparent omission] Dept, rptd to London as 25).

The US zone proposed by the British on Feb 28 embracing Districts 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 26 66 contains some of the finest accommodations and facilities in Vienna. Good housing and billeting facilities exist there for officers and enlisted men. It contains large buildings suitable for headquarters and recreational facilities. However its useable installations are scattered over a large area and the principal buildings suitable for large headquarters consist of hospital facilities in operation. There are no adequate parade grounds for ceremonies. It contains nothing comparable to District 13 the facilities and accommodations of which are considered the most desirable in the city.

⁶⁶ For the identification of numbered districts, see Map "B" annexed to the Agreement Between the Governments of the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the United Kingdom and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on Zones of Occupation in Austria and the Administration of the City of Vienna, signed July 9, 1945, printed in Department of State, Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1600, or 61 Stat. (pt. 3) 2679.

The US zone proposed by the Soviets on April 23 is identical with the zone proposed by the British except that it does not include the areas beyond the 1938 city limits namely District 26 and the greater portion of District 14.

American zone proposed by JCS 1169 slash 9 embracing districts 3, 4, 10, 11 and 23 contains some fashionable residential buildings and a number of office buildings adequate for housing large headquarters by dividing installations among adjoining buildings. There are no villas suitable for genl officers and the only suitable residential section is in a highly congested district which has been severely damaged by bombing. It contains no suitable barracks or training areas and recreational facilities are nonexistent. Excepting for two small severely damaged districts this zone consists principally of devastated industrial plants.

From point of view of training areas greater Vienna provides ample facilities during winter months for small unit training and extensive maneuvers. However, when crops are standing few areas are suitable for maneuvers except in district 25 and probably in districts 19 and 26. Small unit training can be carried out in almost any district winter or summer.

Brit and US have proposed subdivision of greater Vienna while Soviets have stood for the zoning of the city on the basis of pre-1938 limits. At present the temporary Austrian administration recognizes pre-1938 city limits. In private conversations with members of mission some of the Austrian officials maintained that since it took the Germans a year to integrate greater Vienna with the city as it existed up to 1938 it would only add to the present confusion if an attempt were made at this time to go back to old city limits. On the other hand, it appears to be the view of majority of city officials that while it is a sound principle to expand the boundaries of a growing city, the problem of reconstructing Vienna after the great damage it has suffered is so great that there would be little time or energy available to devote to extending city limits for some years to come. It is, therefore, uncertain whether Austrians themselves would look with favor on retention of Gau limits.

There are some advantages to be gained from extending zone to Gau limits. For example, several airports and airfield sites, training areas and recreation grounds would become available. Against these advantages the administrative problem of occupying areas in which the civil authorities are subordinate to a provincial govt in another zone of occupation. Furthermore air facilities and all season training areas within Gau limits are inadequate to meet the needs of the three western occupying powers. The latter would therefore have to go out of the Gau anyway to fulfill their needs. It is also possible that if the western Allies insisted on the Gau limits it could be made to appear that they were exerting pressure on the Austrians to retain against their will a heritage of the Nazi occupation. It is therefore doubtful whether there is any real advantage in insisting upon the zoning of Gau rather than city within 1938 limits.

A number of facilities of Vienna and its environs, some of which are essential to the occupying forces, are distributed geographically in such a way as to prevent their distribution into zones. Other facilities exist which are too few in number to permit a physical distribution. Among these categories may be mentioned the Danube docks, certain railroad stations serving areas to the west and south, radio and cable terminals, sport grounds, bathing beaches, first class hotels, rifle ranges, training areas and especially air fields. Some of these are essential to the economic life of the community as a whole. If these facilities are to be confined to the exclusive use of one or two occupying forces it would require the wisdom of Solomon to divide the total facilities equitably among all the occupying powers. The economic life of the city can only be maintained by permitting the free circulation of the Austrian population and Austrian officials and the same privileges should be granted the Allied occupying forces.

In the case of air fields lying outside the 1938 limits or outside the Gau limits it seems essential that the users of these fields have unrestricted access to them. If for reasons of security road blocks or patrols are required, they should be under international control and preferably composed of troops of the nation most frequently using the highway. Likewise maintenance, improvement and traffic control should be the responsibility of the principal user. It is believed that unless some arrangement is made a complicated pass system and language difficulties would give rise to a never ending series of unnecessary misunderstandings.

Soviet authorities in Vienna were reluctant to express views on any proposed subdivision of the city and they indicated that they were aware of only one proposal, namely that of their own govt in the EAC. At one meeting they refused to comment on the question as to whether they felt that districts 4 and 10 were essential to them. In private conversations they argued that because of the limited accommodations in the eastern area of the city some western districts with good housing were necessary to them. It is not impossible that the reason for their choosing districts 4 and 10 is to be found in the location in these districts of both road and rail terminals leading to southern Austria. Another indication of the views and preferences of the local Soviet officials was revealed in a question asked privately of an Allied officer by the commander of the Vienna garrison as to whether in this Allied officer's view it would be necessary for high officials of Allied administration to be quartered in their own zone or whether they might be permitted to reside in zones of other nationalities. This question was evidently based on the superiority of villas in 19 district, which the Soviets constantly referred to as the best in town and which they tacitly [agreed?] seemed to come within the American zone.

Soviet representatives made only two comments in replies to direct questions, viz: they believed that a uniform control throughout Austria over all economic and political life was to be desired and striven for; a certain freedom of movement throughout the city including access to some exclusive facilities such as the Danube docks would be most desirable.

In public and private conversations French Mission expressed following views:

1. The zone proposed for them by the Soviets embracing districts

3 and 11 was entirely inacceptable.

2. The French desired a zone with road and rail terminals leading to the west. To accomplish this they proposed for themselves a zone made up of districts 6, 7, 14, 15 and 16; the British to have districts 3, 5, 12 and 13; the Soviets to have 2, 20, 21, 22, 4 and 10; and the US districts 8, 9, 17, 18 and 19.

3. Great importance is attached by the French to the reestablishment of inland waterways connecting French canal system with Danube. For this purpose they wish use of dock facilities in Vienna and rights of access to them.

4. On airfields French position is that they want a field exclusively for themselves only if all other occupying powers will accept lodgers they will content themselves with lodger rights at Tulln but if the power using Tulln will not grant lodger rights then French will be willing to share Schwechat with its principal occupant.

5. French indicated that they would strongly support principle of free transit rights both in city and on highways leading to the airfields. They also feel that suburban training areas are essential.

Brit Mission states that with minor adjustments they can accept Soviet zoning proposal providing training and recreation areas are made available to them outside of towns; if free transit rights are granted British would also recommend abandoning their insistence on zoning greater Vienna. British strongly feel that each occupying power should have a separate airfield but there is some reason to believe that if necessary they are willing to share Tulln with the US and the French. British consider justified Soviet claims to a zone east of river and canal and they likewise feel that French objections to a zone composed of districts 3 and 11 is reasonable.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/6-1645: Telegram

FLORENCE, June 16, 1945—1 p. m. [Received June 17—3:25 p. m.]

80. In my 78 of June 16, 9 a.m., there were given the highlights of Genl Flory's report on the mission to Vienna. This telegram will give his conclusions and a separate telegram will follow giving his recommendations after they have been decided upon at Caserta today. Based on detailed surveys of all aspects of the city including bomb damage the districts of Vienna have been listed in their order of desirability. For this purpose the districts were classified as business, residential and suburban. The business districts include those between the canal and the Beltguertel; the residential districts include those between the belt and the city within the 1938 limits; and the suburban districts include those between the 1938 boundaries and the Gau boundaries. The business districts are closely built up and contain many stores and office buildings. The residential areas chiefly apartment houses, villas, parks and gardens, and some open spaces while the suburban areas are rated largely from standpoint of training and recreational facilities. In the order of desirability the business districts are 3, 6, 7, 9, 8, 4, 5; the residential districts 13, 19, 18, 16, 17, 15, 12, 10, 21, 20, 2, and 11; and the suburban districts 25, 26, 24, 23 and the new portions of 21 and 22.

As previously stated no opportunity was granted to inspect the eastern airfields at Aspern, Seyring and Wagram but it is assumed that these are all all-weather airports. Of the airfields inspected west of the Danube the following are in the order of desirability, Tulln, Schwechat, Zwolfaxing. The other airfields may be disregarded as unsuitable for the purposes envisaged by US occupational air forces.

From the administrative point of view it is believed unnecessary for the zones to extend beyond the 1938 city limits unless the Austrians should desire to do this the zones should be correspondingly extended.

If Greater Vienna is taken as the area to be subdivided, one good but badly damaged airfield, two unsatisfactory airfields and a number of fair field sites would fall within the southeastern zone district 23. The west and northwestern sections of Greater Vienna contain no airfields.

Since it is probable that troops will not be available for maneuvers of any magnitude, it is believed that the general availability of small unit training areas most of the districts makes it unnecessary to give consideration to training facilities as a major factor in selection of zones. After the arrival of the occupation forces unit commanders on the ground will be able to select adequate locations.

In the inner city there are to be found chiefly govt buildings, shops, hotels and rests. This area has been badly damaged and few of the large buildings will be habitable without extensive repairs. Such buildings as are repaired are logical choices to house permanently Austrian ministries when established. The first class hotels and restaurants are in good condition and can be utilized at once. There are enough of them to permit equitable distribution among the occupying powers. They would be extremely useful because there are few others elsewhere in the city.

Certain essential facilities in Vienna are so unevenly distributed or so limited in number that they cannot be divided up equally among the occupying powers. As previously mentioned all airfields within Greater Vienna west of the Danube are in one district. Likewise, the docks, railroad stations and possible training grounds cannot be split into four zones and if they are to be made available on the basis of equality they will have to be shared with free transit rights granted to them throughout all zones. This is especially essential in the case of airports if the difficult problem of allocating the zones is to be divorced from the equally thorny problem of distributing existing air facilities.

Soviet objections to a zone exclusively east of the river and the canal and French objection to a zone including only districts 3 and 11 are not unreasonable considering the paucity of adequate facilities in the two areas.

Judging from the American missions relations with the local Soviet officials the latter are quite ready to cooperate with Allied representatives within the limits of their instructions. There is good reason to believe that the Soviet officials are not only being pressured from Moscow but also are themselves anxious for the early establishment of an Allied administration.

2646. As stated in my cablegram yesterday Gen Flory reported to Gen McNarney at Caserta today his recommendations in zoning Vienna and later in the day at a meeting presided by Gen Lemnitzer ⁶⁷ with Gens Gruenther, ⁶⁸ Flory, Winterton and Cherriere present, the subject was discussed. Col. Thayer and I attended meeting at which other Allied groups were liberally represented.

It was informally accepted that prior to actual physical subdivision of area, the adherence of the several Allied govts concerned should be obtained to principle providing for the sharing of facilities which cannot conveniently be divided physically. These principles are:

1. Free and unrestricted transit rights through and above all zones in Vienna and its environs should be granted to each of the occupying powers. In the case of highways leading to airports outside the zones of the occupants of the airports concerned, and training areas outside the city limits, these should be internationally controlled, patrolled and maintained.

2. Public buildings and office space within the Innere Stadt should generally be left for permanent Austrian Govt ministries and agencies which would normally use them. Other facilities, particularly hotels and restaurants in the Innere Stadt, should be equitably divided between the occupying forces by international town command.

3. Adequate training and recreation areas beyond city limits should be provided by mutual arrangements between commanding generals concerned. At the commencement Gen Cherriere in behalf of France refused categorically to accept districts 3 and 11, as proposed in the EAC on April 23. After a good deal of give and take and on the basis of equality, the respective generals agreed to recommend to their Chiefs of Staff the following:

For France districts 6, 14, 15, 16, and in district 13 certain accommodations are to be arranged between French and British. For Britain districts 3, 11, 5, 12 and in district 13 accommodations for the French to be arranged between them.

For the US districts 7, 8, 9, 17, 18 and 19.

It was assumed that Soviets would occupy districts 2, 4, 10, 20 and 21.

In respect to airports the three Gens were in accord that again bearing in mind the principle of equality, each Allied power should have for its exclusive use and operation an airport and facilities as follows:

France Götzendorf

Britain Schwechat.

US Tulln. Until Götzendorf and Schwechat are in usable condition, the US will permit French and Brit to utilize Tulln on a larger basis. Brit have proposed that French and Brit agree to utilize Götzendorf and Schwechat as joint occupants on a reciprocal basis. When Schwechat is ready Brit expect French to utilize that airport until Götzendorf is available.

Gen Flory learned when in Vienna that the Austrian authorities do not wish to extend the city to the Gau limit until city of Vienna itself has been rehabilitated. However, on question of whether or not zones should comprise the Gau or city limits, Gen Flory believes that its solution should ultimately be based on decision of Austrian administration itself as to whether or not it wishes to expand municipality and to provide for an affirmative decision. The zones boundaries should be drawn to Gau limits on understanding that unless or until Austrians expand city, the outer limits of the zone should and will be pre-1938 boundary of Vienna.

However, Gen Winterton will propose to his Chiefs of Staff that since Soviets, in occupying districts 4 and 10 are causing a certain inconvenience, in compensation therefor the Brit should ask for district 25.

This afternoon Gen Winterton remarked that he will be in London at request of Brit Chiefs of Staff when the zones come up for discussion before the EAC. Before he left for Paris Gen Cherriere remarked that he will next proceed to London to be available to the EAC. It is therefore recommended that Amb Winant request presence of Gen Flory, head of our military mission to Vienna and of Gen Snavely, 69 our Air Corps representative in Gen Flory's mission.

The Dept will be advised of date and number of Gen Flory's message to the Chiefs of Staff, which will probably be transmitted tomorrow.

Rptd to London as 200.

86. Dept should see FH 94530 from Genl McNarney to Agwar containing recommendations to JCS based on mission to Vienna.⁷⁰

70 For text of General McNarney's message of June 17, see p. 147.

⁶⁹ Brig. Gen. Ralph A. Snavely, Commander of Air Task Force for Austria.

This is the message referred to in the last paragraph of my telegram to Dept from Caserta on June 16.

Certain impressions gathered from the meetings and conversations in Caserta may be of interest.

Cherriere was unalterably opposed to a French zone embracing 3 and 11 from a prestige standpoint and because these districts were heavily damaged and hence inadequate. It was obvious that concessions would have to be made to them and the French are now satisfied with their zone as agreed at yesterday's meeting. District 13, Hietzing, which will be the British zone is the best residential district in Vienna. It contains Schönbrunn Palace which the British are pleased to get. However, the British agreed to allow the French to occupy some suitable villas and other desirable housing in this district.

Cherriere readily accepts the Soviet position on the city limits as the Gau limits for the zoning of Vienna but Winterton went along reluctantly. Flory's proposal is a compromise between them. Winterton's proposal to his chiefs of staff to ask for district 25 is another way of getting territory outside the 1938 city limits and if this goes through in the EAC presumably the other govts will expect similar treatment. Winterton is not hopeful and the American military do not believe that the extension of our proposed zone to the Gau limits is important if we get free access to the US air field.

In requesting Tulln as an airport Genl Flory and Genl Snavely our air officer realize that the airport will be very useful for occupational purposes but will have no value in post-war air development. The Brit and French in proposing to utilize Schwechat and Götzendorf as joint tenants may have post-war developments in mind since in private conversations it was stated that the French can hardly expect to improve Götzendorf.

A Brit. Col. remarked: These are tiring discussions but then you should try to get adequate quarters.

Washington, 19 June 1945.

The Secretaries of War and the Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff concur in the recommendations of General McNarney in the attached copy of his cable on the subject of the Subdivision of Vienna and rec-

Acting Chairman

[Annex]

Text of a Telegram From the Commanding General, United States Army Forces, Mediterranean Theater of Operations (McNarney), to the Joint Chiefs of Staff

[Caserta,] 17 June 1945.

- 1. Vienna survey by United States mission is subject.
- 2. Innerestadt is badly damaged and most public buildings will require months to render habitable. Best hotels and restaurants however only slightly damaged.
- 3. Otherwise southeast badly damaged, west and northwest least damaged. Most desirable areas are in west and northwest.
- 4. The Gau contains limited recreation and training areas. At present Austrian city administration covers only the pre-1938 city limits. The majority of Austrian officials appear to consider it inadvisable to expand the city limits to the Gau until the city itself has been rehabilitated. It would be inadvisable from an administrative viewpoint to extend the zones into the Gau unless the city limits are also extended.
- 5. In order of priority airfields are Tulln, Schwechat and Zwolfaxing, although British and French rate Götzendorf their choice over Zwolfaxing. Tulln almost undamaged, has excellent permanent housing and repair and storage facilities.

Schwechat has slightly damaged runway but hardly a building left standing.

Zwolfaxing has no hard runway, practically no facilities, but moderate possibilities for development starting from scratch.

The remaining airfields west of Danube are considered unsuitable.

- 6. Flory registered energetic protest at Russian refusal to let his expert see Aspern, Seyring or Deutsch-Wagram, stating that he could only report to his government that on basis of available information they are all first class all-weather fields.
- 7. Aside from question of airfields, the United States zone proposed in JCS 1169/9 (SWNCC 25/2)⁷² is entirely unsatisfactory from Telegram 4933, June 19, to London, informed Ambassador Winant that General McNarney's recommendations had received the concurrence of the State, War, and Navy Departments, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Ambassador Winant was directed to proceed with negotiations in the European Advisory Commission for a protocol on zones of occupation on the basis of those recommendations (740.00119 EAC/6-1445).

To Not printed; see footnote 54, p. 133.

point of view of housing, office space or facilities as this area has been badly damaged and in normal time, apart from diplomatic quarter, contains chiefly small commercial enterprises, stockyards, slaughter houses, factories and lower class housing.

- 8. Our proposal also contains condition that an airfield must be an integral part of the United States zone. This position would create administrative difficulties both for ourselves and the other occupying forces and is believed to be unnecessary if the principle of free access enunciated in Para 11 A below is adopted.
- 9. As a result of lengthy discussions at a meeting at Allied Force Headquarters (AFHQ) yesterday under the chairmanship of General Lemnitzer, Deputy Chief of Staff, AFHQ, the British, French and American missions agreed to submit the following recommendations to their governments for zoning the city:

Districts 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19 to the United States.

Districts 6, 14 (that part within city limits), 15, and 16 to French.

Districts 3, 5, 11, 12 and 13 to British. Districts 2, 4, 10, 20 and 21 to Russians.

The British and French agreed to recommend that a certain amount of housing in District 13 be made available to the French on a bilateral basis.

- 10. Mission heads also agreed to recommend assignment of one airfield for each power. United States will have Tulln, British Schwechat and French Götzendorf. Pending repairs to Schwechat, British and French will be granted lodger rights at Tulln. Thereafter British will accept Schwechat on joint occupancy basis with French provided French will reciprocate at Götzendorf.
- 11. The above recommendations are contingent on acceptance by the Russians of the following general principles agreed to in substance by the three heads of mission for the sharing of facilities in Vienna not divisible because of location or scarcity:
- A. Free and unrestricted transit rights in ground and air through all zones in Vienna and its environments for all occupying forces. In the case of highways leading to airfields outside the zones of the occupants of the airfield concerned, and training grounds outside the city limits, these should be internationally controlled.
- B. Public buildings and office space within the Innerestadt should generally be left for the permanent Austrian ministries and agencies which would normally use them. Other facilities in the Innerestadt, particularly hotels and restaurants, should be equitably divided on the spot between the occupying forces by the multipartite town command.
- C. Adequate training and recreation areas beyond the city limits should be provided by mutual arrangements between the commanders concerned.

- 12. As explained in Para 4 it is considered undesirable to administer zone in the Gau outside the city limits. The question of whether or not the zones should comprise the Gau or city limits should ultimately be based on the decision of the Austrian administration itself, as to whether or not to expand the municipality to the Gau. If and when the city expands the control of the additional districts by the four powers should expand with it. This idea was agreed to by all three missions. The British and French did not consider it necessary to fix the boundaries at this time. Although we desire to fix the boundaries now we do not consider the point one of great importance.
- 13. Soviet proposals allot Districts 3 and 11 to French. 11 is worthless. French therefore state that this allocation is not acceptable. Their position is reasonable. Districts selected by Russians in Soviet proposal are generally unsatisfactory for offices and living accommodations. They contain industrial installations and bulk of working classes.

Allocation of areas 4 and 10 to Russians is reasonable. However, head of British mission is recommending to his government that these districts be included in British area as bargaining point. This is probably wise since Russian EAC representative may offer objection to allocation of Schwechat and Götzendorf airfields.

British mission also include claims to District 25 for same reason. They suggest that we ask for District 26. We do not require that area but our EAC representative may desire to press for it as a part of bargaining procedure.

14. Conditions in Vienna are generally unsatisfactory. Food rationing is barely above starvation allowance. Critical shortage of medical supplies. Only 3 ambulances in city. No doctor has a car. Russians exercise little control over city administration.

Each district operates as a separate cell with virtually no coordination from above. Business is at a complete standstill. Motor transportation in city non-existent.

Considerable evidence that Russians are stripping city methodically and efficiently. This is especially true of factory machinery. Signal equipment and furniture are also included. Although Russians expect to have a demolished section of Vienna allotted to them their officers are now scattered throughout the city in excellent accommodations. Russians jokingly suggested that it was hoped that suitable living quarters could be retained in United States, British and French areas.

15. It was evident to heads of missions that Russians are extremely eager to have Allies into Vienna at earliest possible date. Situation in city is deteriorating and Russian prestige is lowered every day we remain away. Russians were most friendly and cooperative within limits of their instructions from Moscow. These instructions were adequate except for prohibition to visit eastern airfields.

It was impossible to induce them to budge from that position. At one time Russians granted authority for United States courier planes to land at Tulln, but authority was withdrawn 6 hours later, probably because of fear we might inspect the three eastern airfields from the air.

16. Recommend that proposal outlined in Para 9, 10 and 11 above, agreed to in substance by three missions, be submitted to the United States delegate at EAC.

Also recommend that we continue to press for right to inspect three eastern airfields on the principle that all Vienna facilities should be shared equally by the four powers.

17. I recommend that General Flory with appropriate staff officers proceed to London to consult with the United States representative on EAC to advise and pass on to him detailed information obtained during recent reconnaissance in Vienna.

General Winterton, Head of British Mission, is departing Italy for London Monday 18th June, to report to British government and British EAC representative.

General Cherriere, Head of French Mission, is likewise expected to report to French EAC representative in London after short stopover in Paris to report to his government.

Signature Austrian zones agreement in EAC awaits decision re airfields Vienna for use US, UK, French occupation forces and control staffs located in Vienna. June 23 US proposed assign one airfield each of three forces. June 29 Soviet EAC representative made counteroffer two airfields; in today's EAC meeting position re two versus three airfields remained unchanged. Final conclusion zones agreement now depends only on settlement this question. Until it is settled in EAC and final agreement approved by four Govts, Soviet Govt is technically justified in maintaining that there is no agreement on zones in Austria. Question of interim arrangement whereby Allied forces take up assigned zones [apparent omission] seems mainly military question of provisional arrangements pending official conclusion zones agreement. We believe EAC can conclude two agreements Austrian zones and Austrian control machinery during current week.

Gousev proposed each delegation inform its Govt of discussion this subject and state that each had been unable agree inclusion these provisions. I rejected this procedure as emphasizing failure agree these principles.

In order overcome deadlock and complete agreement I proposed that each delegation have identical communication its Govt as follows: "The question of the working out of practical arrangements to assure free transit throughout Austria by road, rail, air and water for the goods and supplies required by the forces of occupation in Austria including those forces allotted for the occupation of the city of Vienna and by the Allied Commission and for the common use of transport and communication facilities and public utility services in the city of Vienna was considered in the Commission. The latter did not find it necessary to include this point in its report and concluded that it should be referred to the Allied Council." This formula would make clear to Govts and Allied Council that EAC assumed validity these two principles. Soviet delegation accepted US formula for identical communication to Govts.

UK delegation proposed additional sentence to US formula as follows: "The Commission recommends that the Allied Council should be informed that these principles of free transit and common use are accepted by the four Govts and should be invited to make the necessary arrangements for their application and regulation." The basic French demand is to be placed on a footing of equality with the other three powers with regard to German affairs. Massigli urged strongly an early decision in principle on this issue in order to speed the work of the Commission. He implied strongly that, if a favorable decision is made in principle, the detailed working out of arrangements for French participation could be done gradually, without disrupting the consideration of other urgent matters before the Commission. In general Massigli has so far taken a helpful and constructive part in the discussions of the Commission. With regard to assignment of a zone of occupation, Massigli set forth two alternatives. One would be to give France initially a small zone, with provision for later increasing its size; the other would be to assign to the French forces from the beginning a definitive zone of occupation. Massigli stated that he had no preference as between these alternatives. Gousev 4 and I reserved our positions with respect to the French 108. Personal for the Secretary and Assistant Secretary Dunn. My 11575, December 30, 8 p. m.; 7 my 59, January 2, 11 p. m. I hope that the Department is giving careful consideration to the French request for equal participation in the occupation and control of Germany. As soon as the three Governments decided to admit France without reservation to full membership in the European Advisory Commission, ultimate French participation in German affairs on a footing of equality with the other three powers, it must be supposed, became only a question of time.

An early decision on principle on the French request will, I am sure, greatly facilitate the work of the Commission. It is gratifying to be able to report that the French have taken a constructive attitude in the EAC. Massigli implied strongly that if the three Governments agree in principle to modify the agreements on the surrender instrument, on zones of occupation and on control machinery so as to include France, his Government does not plan to present amendments of substance to these basic documents. The United Kingdom Government has already expressed its approval in principle of the French request.

If our Government wishes to avoid being last to accede in principle to the French request, it is urgent for me to make some informal arrangement with Gousev to move together on this question. I think Gousev would agree, if so requested, to inform me of his Government's decision prior to informing the Commission, but I cannot ask him to

[Washington,] January 4, 1945.

The Embassy at London reports that the French representative on the European Advisory Commission has circulated a memorandum 10 giving the views of his Government concerning the instrument of surrender for Germany,11 the protocol and amendment on the zones of occupation in Germany, and the agreement on control machinery. The memorandum expresses approval of these agreements but specifically advances the following five proposals:

- French participation in the Supreme authority for Germany.
 French participation in signing the instrument of surrender.
 Allocation to the French Army of a zone of occupation in
- Germany and a part of greater Berlin.

(4) Substitution of quadripartite for tripartite agencies in the agreement on control machinery.

(5) Preparation of a French text of the instrument of surrender to be equally authentic with the Russian and English texts.

Subject to the approval of the military authorities, it is recommended that this Government approve the French requests. The following reasons suggest this course.

It is in the interests of the United States to assist France to regain her former position in world affairs in order that she may increase her contribution in the war effort and play an appropriate part in the maintenance of peace. The Dumbarton Oaks proposal that France should in due course become one of the five permanent members of the Security Council was a natural corollary of this policy.¹² hand-written notation: "OK FDR".

⁸ Telegram 149, January 6, to London, stated that urgent consideration was being given to the French proposals and that the chances of early acceptance in principle were sufficiently good to warrant Winant's speaking to Gousev along the lines suggested (740.00119 EAC/1-445).

visory Commission in London on July 25, 1944, see ibid., p. 256.

Furthermore, France's vital interest in the solution of the German problem and the realization of the part she will inevitably play in maintaining the future peace of Europe were acknowledged in the statement made on November 11, 1944 by the Acting Secretary of State when France was invited to become a full member of the European Advisory Commission.¹³ In the circumstances it was obviously only a question of time when France would put forward the requests now under consideration.

There is every likelihood that the British and Soviet Governments will support the French. Consequently, disapproval by this Government would probably result in our being placed in the position of being the only Government to stand in the way of French aspirations. It would seem the part of wisdom to accept the proposals now, when credit can be obtained for that action, rather than to wait until it is made to appear that the concessions are won from us grudgingly.

Acceptance of full French participation will probably prove popular with the other small countries of Europe which profess to fear the results of a peace imposed by non-European powers.

Acceptance of the proposals now may help to create a cooperative spirit among the French who may as a consequence be less inclined to raise objections to many of the arrangements which have already been agreed to.

This Government may well wish, after the early period of occupation, to withdraw a considerable proportion of its troops from Germany. It would be logical to assume that they would be replaced by French forces and this replacement is likely to be facilitated if the French are fully associated with plans for the occupation from the outset.

It can be justifiably argued that the French requests are out of all proportion to France's power today and that the acceptance of a fourth country on an equal basis may only serve to make more complicated an already complex problem. It is not believed, however, that these considerations can outweigh the arguments in favor of the move. In the long run this Government will undoubtedly gain more by making concessions to French prestige and by treating France on the basis of her potential power and influence, then [than?] we will be [by?] treating her on the basis of her actual strength at this time. ¹⁴ E. 116. There is no doubt of Joint Chiefs of Staff and War Department's strong dissatisfaction with British proposals for control of Bremen area which has been communicated informally to British representatives here. Formal action has not been taken only because of desire to avoid sharp issue and in hope that attempts to work out solution would be successful. Yesterday at conference with Lord Halifax 15 and General Macready 16 War Department officials and Joint Chiefs of Staff representatives worked out formula which British stated they would recommend to London. If this is agreed to by London War Department advise that they will remove objections to signing protocol. The formula follows:

"The Bremen and Bremerhaven enclave as described will be under complete American control including military government but will be generally administered as a subdistrict of a larger British controlled area. It is understood that the American military government will conform to the general policies pursued in the administration of the larger district subject always to the right of the American commander to vary the administration of the enclave in any particular that he may find necessary on military grounds.

"The United States interest in transit passage from the Bremen area to the southwestern zone is so dominant and the British interest in possible movement through the American zone to Austria so evident that obligation to carry stores and personnel for the one Government through the zone controlled by the other is mutually recognized. To better achieve responsible service, it is proposed that each military zone commander will accept a deputy controller of movement and transport from the other to assist in the coordination of the movement and transport involved in such essential traffic."

We will have large army deep in enemy country with a great redeployment problem to deal with. It is vital therefore that we have the full use of the port which in turn involves authority over labor telephone traffic and other communication systems within the area. There is no half way point of control that can be worked out certainly not at high level. In view of our predominant and important interest as well as of the fact that we relinquished control of the northwest zone on this condition real control is essential. As Halifax and Macready are in accord we hope that matter can now be quickly disposed of on above basis.

188. Comea 143. As reported in my 11080 of December 14, 8 p. m., ¹⁷ (Comea 135), the European Advisory Commission has established an Allied Consultation Committee to consult with representatives of six European Allied governments ¹⁸ concerning German surrender terms. The chairman by seniority of rank is Sobolev, Soviet Minister-Counselor. I have appointed Mosely ¹⁹ and General Meyer. At an organization meeting the Committee decided to ask the Commission to define its mandate more fully.

On Tuesday ²⁰ the EAC instructed the Committee to hand to the other Allied representatives a summary of the provisions of the surrender instrument (copy forwarded by air).²¹ The Committee was also instructed to state that the text of the surrender instrument must be withheld at this stage because of strategic and security factors and that the question of whether it will be shown at a later date to the Allied Governments is being considered by the four governments.

As to zones of occupation and control machinery, it was agreed that the Committee, if asked, may say that the Allies intend to occupy Germany and to establish control over it, but may not inform the Allied representatives of tentative arrangements concerning occupation and control since the agreements recommended by the EAC have not as yet been approved by all four governments.

The United Kingdom representative on the EAC asked the United States, French and Soviet Governments consider whether the text of the surrender instrument should be communicated to the chiefly interested United Nations governments prior to its signature. The British feel strongly that the text should be communicated some weeks prior to the foreseeable time of German surrender, allowing time for study and comment by the Allied Governments. When at one point Strang reverted to his phrase about signature "on behalf of the United Nations", I insisted strongly on adherence to our agreed formula of "acting in the interests of the United Nations", and Strang at once disclaimed any desire to amend the text as approved.

Massigli gave strong support to the British proposal but also insisted that the text should not be modified as a result of comments by the other Allied Governments.

Strang and Massigli felt that the question of consultation has great significance for those Allies who have suffered from German aggression, and that a mere belated notification of the text would leave resentment. They believed that, if the four governments should decide in principle to communicate the text at a later time for examination and comment, a statement now to the Allies of this intention would allay many of their anxieties, while determination of the appropriate time for communication would naturally rest with the four governments.

In the EAC discussion Gousev stressed particularly the strategic and propaganda advantages which the Germans would derive from a leakage of the surrender instrument through any one of the governments which might receive the text. I also emphasized the importance of restricting the distribution of the surrender terms and other documents to the smallest possible number of persons. In general I believe we should think twice before giving or even promising to give the text at an early date to any government outside the EAC. The risks of leakage of information affecting military planning for control over Germany are too great to be incurred lightly even though some of the Allied Governments may resent our apparent lack of confidence in their discretion.

If thought is given to communicating the surrender text to certain Allies, the number of governments to be informed of the text in advance of signature should also be considered. Strang has proposed that the United Nations be approached in two categories: one group to receive the terms in advance with an opportunity to comment; the other group to receive the text for information at the time of its signature. Strang and Massigli propose to include the European United Nations and the British Dominions in the first category. Before agreeing to any definite list for the first category we would need to consider whether it should also include such United Nations as China, Brazil and Mexico.

I should appreciate early instructions of [on] the question raised above. Gousev is similarly requesting the views of his government.

Please furnish a paraphrase to Generals Hilldring and Strong.

Sir: With reference to telegram No. 188 of January 5, 9 p. m., Comea 143, which reported the establishment of an Allied Consultation Committee in the European Advisory Commission to consult with representatives of certain European United Nations Governments, I have the honor to transmit copies of a Summary of the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany which has been prepared in the Commission for the purpose of serving as a basis for discussion in the meetings of the new Committee.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador: E. Allan Lightner, Jr. Secretary, U. S. Delegation, European Advisory Commission

[Enclosure]

Summary of Instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany

London, 7 December, 1944.

The Instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany, as recommended by the European Advisory Commission to the Three Governments,* is a relatively short document of a predominantly military character.

It is designed to be signed on the Allied side by representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union, and on the German side by representatives of the German Government and of the German High Command.

The Instrument consists essentially of three parts:

The first is the preamble which includes an unqualified acknowledgement on the part of Germany of the complete defeat of the German armed forces on land, at sea and in the air, and an announcement by her of her unconditional surrender. The Representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Soviet Union, acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations, thereupon announce the terms of surrender.

The second part comprises a series of articles which provide—

(i) for the cessation of hostilities by Germany in all theatres of war against the forces of the United Nations;

(ii) for the complete disarmament and disposal of the armed forces of Germany or armed forces under German control;

(iii) for the standstill of all such forces in their positions at the time of surrender, pending instructions from the Allied Representatives;

(iv) for the evacuation by the said forces of all territories outside the frontiers of Germany as they existed on 31st December, 1937, according to instructions to be given by the Allied

Representatives;

(v) for the holding by the German authorities at the disposal of the Allied Representatives, intact and in good condition, of all war material, naval vessels, merchant shipping, aircraft, transportation and communications facilities and equipment, military, naval and air installations, and factories designed to produce the foregoing or otherwise to further the conduct of war;

(vi) for the release of United Nation's prisoners of war and of United Nations' and other nationals who are under restraint for political reasons, and for their protection and maintenance prior to their repatriation;

(vii) for the stationing of forces and civil agencies in any or all parts of Germany by the Allied Representatives as they may determine.

The third part is a General Article setting forth the supreme authority of the Three Powers with respect to Germany, including the power completely to disarm and to demilitarise Germany and to take such other steps as the Three Powers may deem requisite for future peace and security. The General Article further states that the Allied Representatives will present additional political, administrative, economic, financial, military and other requirements arising from the surrender of Germany, and will issue Proclamations, Orders, etc., for the purpose of laying down such additional requirements and of giving effect to the other provisions of the Instrument of Surrender. The German authorities will carry out unconditionally the requirements of the Allied Representatives, and fully comply with such Proclamations, Orders, etc.

244. The Department approves EAC instructions to the Allied Consultation Committee as set forth in the first three paragraphs of your 188, January 5, Comea 143.

With reference to the proposals of Strang and Massigli for communication of the text of the surrender terms to the United Nations chiefly interested, the Department fully approves the position you have taken in EAC and in general supports the viewpoint expressed by Gousev. We agree with you that we should not now promise to give the text at a prescribed time to any Government not represented in EAC, and that the risk of leakage in so doing is very great and not to be lightly incurred.

As regards Strang's proposal to treat the United Nations under two categories, the following comment is offered. On the whole, we incline to the view that texts of agreements reached in EAC should not at this stage be given to any other Governments, or at the most only to those United Nations which have been the direct victims of German aggression. If the British Dominions were to be included in the first category, (those to receive the terms in advance with an opportunity for comment) this Government might have to reserve the right to accord the same advantage to China, Brazil, Mexico, and perhaps other Latin American states.

We have not been under any pressure here by Latin American or other Governments to reveal the texts of EAC recommendations. There is reason to believe, furthermore, that at least some of the British Dominions are already substantially informed respecting such recommendations.

In the light of the foregoing considerations, we are not inclined to go further in this matter than the action to be taken by the Allied Consultation Committee.

There is attached hereto a copy of my memorandum of November 25, 1944 31 recommending that you approve the agreement reached in the European Advisory Commission with regard to control machinery for Germany.

The members of the Commission were formally notified of the approval of this agreement by the British Government on December 5, 1944 32 and similar approval by the Soviet Government is expected momentarily. It is, therefore, a matter of the utmost urgency that Ambassador Winant be advised forthwith whether this basic document has the approval of the United States, if we are to avoid placing ourselves in an embarrassing position in the European Advisory Commission. It is for this reason that I urge you to give me your decision on this agreement at your earliest convenience.

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of Navy 33 in a letter dated December 27, 1944,34 which was received by the Department of State on January 5, 1945, have recommended its approval.

Washington, December 27, 1944.

Dear Mr. Secretary: The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have considered the proposed agreement on control machinery for Germany transmitted by your letters dated November 25, 1944 39 and recommend approval of the agreement. However, they suggest that the Department of State give consideration to the desirability of expressing the following views to the governments of the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. on the course of planning for the occupation of Germany under this agreement, at the time that the United States approval is given:

- 1. The United States does not at present consider it probable that there will be a German government or other central administrative authority in existence at the time of the surrender or for a considerable period thereafter, which it would be practicable or desirable for the Control Council to deal with as the central German authority or administration. Planning, therefore, should not proceed solely on the basis that such an acceptable central authority will exist but should proceed with full recognition that many different circumstances may be encountered.
- 2. Accordingly, it is desirable that planning be undertaken on the basis that the Control Council, acting under instructions from the three governments, will determine, in the light of conditions as they may exist at the time of surrender or complete defeat:
 - a. What, if any, central administration or administrative structures in Germany, staffed by Germans, it is desirable and practicable to permit to continue;
 - b. What, if any, such central administration and administrative structures, not then existing, it is desirable to bring into existence; and
 - c. The nature and scope of the functions, authority and operations of any such central administration or administrative structures.
- 3. Although it is highly desirable that agreement be reached as rapidly as possible on the major policy problems of the occupation, ³⁸ Filed separately in Mosely EAC Lot File.

4. To expedite agreement on occupation policies, it is desirable that each of the three governments promptly designate at least temporary members of the Control Council or the Coordinating Committee, as well as the principal members of the Control Staff, and charge them with responsibility for formulating and agreeing upon occupation policies, subject to any agreements upon such policies which may be reached by the governments concerned, in the European Advisory Commission or elsewhere.

604. Department's telegram 502, January 23, 1 p. m., giving approval of control machinery for Germany. We are fully in accord with an urgent suggestion made by the Secretaries of War and Navy that arrangements be made now to bring the control machinery agreement into operation and to activate the control council. Such an activation of the CC ⁴⁰ would be more formal and complete than the presently proposed nucleus groups and would constitute the Council immediately as a planning group ready to undertake operational responsibility when called upon to do so by the Governments.

We fear that if the CC is not presently activated and formalized on a tripartite or quadrilateral basis it would not be ready to start functioning for some time after occupation of Berlin and that it would thus be hard for it to organize itself and be ready to assume the position contemplated by the control machinery agreement.

In view of the foregoing considerations, we believe that it would be wise to put the control machinery into effect now and to build it up. Accordingly, unless you perceive any objections to such a course, we suggest that you propose in EAC that the Commission submit to the governments a recommendation for the immediate activation of the Control Council and that they designate the members of the Council and have those officials not already there proceed to London in order that the Council may commence to function.

Although you are, of course, free to take up this suggestion in whatever way you consider most efficacious, we think that it might be opportune to do so in connection with discussion of French participation in the CC.

The proposed activation of the Control Council does not contemplate any change in the jurisdiction of the EAC.

DRAFT OF CABLE TO AMBASSADOR WINANT

Protocol on zones of occupation is being urgently considered by the British and American military authorities. The formula on the control of the Bremen-Bremerhaven Area arrived at as a result of a meeting with Lord Halifax has been agreed to by the British with minor amendments.45 However, the American military authorities felt that the command channels of the U.S. Bremen-Bremerhaven Area Commander needed additional clarification. The British have queried London on this matter and we are awaiting their reply.

It is the current position of the military that the U.S. Area Commander should be under the command of the U.S. Zone Commander and not under the British Commander of the Northwest Area. In line with this, it is our present position that the British Commander of the Northwest Zone should keep the U.S. Bremen-Bremerhaven Area Commander currently informed of the general policies pursued in the administration of military government in the British Northwestern Zone and that the U.S. Area Commander will conform with these policies subject always to the right of the American Commander to vary the administration of the area in any particular that he may find necessary on military grounds. Since the main reason for securing the Bremen-Bremerhaven Area was to provide facilities for the use of the U.S. Zone Commander, it appears perfectly logical that his command position should be that of a subordinate to the U.S. Zone Commander.

This remains the only point of difference and I believe that it will be resolved rapidly so that the protocol may be cleared for signature.

1400. For Assistant Secretary Dunn. Massigli called tonight at his request to present verbally French proposals regarding French zones of occupation in Austria and Germany. He stated he had presented same proposals today to Strang and would present them tomorrow to Sobolev, Soviet Chargé. At this stage he does not plan to present his proposals in writing in the European Advisory Commission.

French propose that their zone in Germany should include (1) left bank of Rhine from French frontier to Cologne inclusive of latter city and (2) Baden, Hessen-Darmstadt, Hessen-Nassau and Hessen-Kassel on the right bank of the Rhine. Massigli also proposed that province of "Greater Berlin" be enlarged by addition of district of Potsdam.

I pointed out to Massigli that the proposed French zone would, I was sure, meet with strong objections on our part since it would cut athwart our lines of communication between the seaports and the US zone. Massigli then suggested that the omission of Baden from the US zone would cause little inconvenience to the US forces of occupation, but I did not pursue this secondary suggestion further. I gained the impression that the French Government will expect counter-proposals regarding the size of a French zone of occupation. Massigli emphasized that he was advancing this concrete proposal, even in advance of receiving acceptance in principle of the French request for equality of participation in German affairs (my 11575, December 30 55) in order to expedite consideration of the French zone proposal by the Commission.

With regard to occupation of Austria ⁵⁶ Massigli stated that in view of the small size of the country his Government would prefer to see a mixed occupation by contingents rather than an occupation by zone. If this proposal, which he understood had been considered and rejected in the case of Germany, should also be unacceptable in the case of Austria, his Government would ask to have Tirol-Vorarlberg assigned to it for occupation, in line with the British proposal (my 1064, January 31, 3 p. m.⁵⁷). Massigli noted that French occupation of Baden would give French forces access to the Boden See, and across the international waters of that lake to Vorarlberg, without crossing Bavarian territory, which would be, under the French proposal, in US occupation.

1778. For Assistant Secretary Dunn. Yesterday Sobolev informed Mosely that Gousev is on his way back to London and is expected by February 23. Gousev has again become chairman of the EAC by rotation and will no doubt be equipped to proceed expeditiously on matters pending before the Commission including the various French proposals.

On the basis of Crimea Conference Communiqué ⁵⁸ and my conversations with the President, ⁵⁹ I assume that Department now wishes me to give effect to instruction contained in its 712, January 29, midnight, approving in principle the five French requests for equality in German affairs (my 1355, February 8, 1 p. m.). amendments to the instrument of surrender (my 227, January 6, 7 p.m.; full text by my despatch 20275 of January 9 60).

The French amendments to the agreement on control machinery (my 1618, February 15, 5 p. m.; full text by despatch 21116, of February 1961) also conform fully to Department's desire to avoid changes of substance in the agreements already approved by the three Unless otherwise instructed shall therefore assume governments. that Department wishes me to concur in these amendments.

With respect to the delimitation of a French zone of occupation in Germany (my 1400, February 8, 9 p. m.) Strang expressed informally to Mosely his personal view that the United Kingdom Government would agree to transfer to French control part of its zone west of the River Rhine extending northwards from the French frontier to a point about midway between Koblenz and Cologne including Saar, Bavarian palatinate and part of Rhine province. Strang felt that the United Kingdom would not want French control extended as far north as Cologne because of the anxiety this would arouse in Belgium. He stated United Kingdom Government contemplates utilizing Belgian forces as an auxiliary contingent within the United Kingdom zone and under United Kingdom command in area adjacent to Belgian frontier. To Strang's suggestion that it would be "reasonable" if Baden or Baden plus Hesse-Darmstadt were transferred from United States to the French zone Mosely made no comment.

Meither despatch 20276, January 9, from the Ambassador in the United Kingdom nor the enclosed memorandum by the French Representative on the European Advisory Commission, E.A.C. (45)2, January 6, 1945, printed.

Telegram 1618, February 15, from London (not printed), reported that the French Representative on the European Advisory Commission had presented two memoranda proposing specific amendments to the protocol on zones of occupation and to the agreement on control machinery. The French proposed that the protocol on zones be amended to provide a new mid-western zone for France and division of Baylin into four zones but there was no specific proposal for and division of Berlin into four zones, but there was no specific proposal for delimitation of boundaries. All other amendments merely required insertion in appropriate places of such phrases as "France", "French Republic", "French language", etc. (740.00119 EAC/2–1545). The two French memoranda, designated E.A.C. (45) 10 and E.A.C. ceived through army channels 63) and accompanied by my British and Soviet colleagues 64 I delivered to de Gaulle 65 on the evening of February 12 the following two telegrams from the three Heads of Government.

First telegram:

"You will observe that the Communiqué 66 which we are issuing the end of this Conference contains a Declaration on Liberated Europe. You will also see that, in the last paragraph of the Declaration, we express the hope that your Government may be associated with us in the action and procedure suggested. Had circumstances permitted we should have really welcomed discussion with you of the terms of this Declaration. The terms are, however, less important than the joint obligation to take action in certain eventualities and we feel that it is of the highest importance, in the interests of Europe, that the Provisional Government of the French Republic should agree, jointly with her three Allies, to accept such an obligation. Signed: Winston S. Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, I. V. Stalin".

Second telegram:

"We have been considering the question of the control of Germany after her defeat and have come to the conclusion that it will be highly desirable for the Provisional Government of the French Republic, if they will, to accept responsibility for a zone of occupation and to be represented on the central machinery of control. We should be glad to learn that the French Government are prepared to accept these responsibilities. Signed: Winston S. Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, I. V. Stalin".

As I reported to the Secretary (through the same army channels which he used) the atmosphere at the meeting with de Gaulle was chilly and after reading the two messages he said "I am taking due note".

Kingdom Government on December 5,77 by the United States Government on January 24,78 and by the Soviet Government on February 6.79

Thus, in so far as the EAC has jurisdiction, all three documents recommended by the Commission have been submitted to the three respective Governments and have been approved by them through formal acceptances formally acknowledged. We would be glad to forward to the Department certified copies of these acceptances.

Since the French now have full membership in the EAC, it would be impossible for the Commission formally to act on behalf of the three powers unless it can secure the concurrence of the French representative. The French Government has, as you know, presented certain amendments to the three basic documents, which have been reported to the Department and which have been accepted by our Government and the British Government. We understand from the reports of the Crimea Conference that these proposed amendments are also acceptable to the Russians. When formal action has been taken in the European Advisory Commission on the French amendments, the necessary recommendations and documentation of such action will be transmitted to the Department.

It is our understanding that at the Crimea meeting, the three basic papers were again approved by the heads of state without change, except for the addition of a single word 80 in the terms of the unconditional surrender instrument. This action is undoubtedly on record in the Department. We, however, have as yet no authorization to explain to the French the one change which has been made in the unconditional surrender terms by the President, Marshal Stalin and the Prime Minister.

I am also convinced that any move on our part to ask for a further expression of governmental approval of the unconditional surrender instrument, the protocol on zones of occupation in Germany and the agreement on control machinery in Germany, after they have been recommended by the three Governments and now confirmed by the President, Marshal Stalin and the Prime Minister at the Crimea Conference, would arouse serious misunderstanding as to the position of the United States Government in relation to these three basic agreements.

We can not commence our discussions with the American military authorities on the extent of the French zone until we receive specific proposals.

Memorandum by the United States Chiefs of Staff to the British Chiefs of Staff and the Soviet General Staff

United States forces in zones of tripartite occupation will require regular access by air, road and rail to the main United States zones of occupation. In addition, all United States forces of occupation will require access to other parts of Europe across British and Soviet zones of occupation. It appears that similar access will be required by Soviet and British forces.

The United States Chiefs of Staff propose that the general principle of freedom of transit across zones of occupation and zones of tripartite occupation, be accepted. Details of transit shall be worked out between the local commanders.

The foregoing is proposed as an interim military measure pending general agreements as to transit which may be expected from the European Advisory Commission.

Your agreement to the foregoing is requested.⁸¹

PART I.—INTRODUCTION

In accordance with the instructions of the European Advisory Commission contained in the last paragraph of the Chairman's ⁸⁵ letter of 6th January, 1945 (P12/35/45), ⁸⁶ the Committee has the honour to present herewith a First Report on its meetings with the representatives of the Governments of Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Yugoslavia and Greece. The representatives of these countries (whose names are given in Annex A) were received in the above order, which corresponds to that in which the Commission's invitation to engage in consultation was accepted by their respective Governments. The representatives of Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands, whose Governments had submitted a joint memorandum to the Commission, were, at their request, received together.

2. At the first meeting with each group of representatives, two copies (in both the English and Russian versions) of the Summary of the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender in the form approved by the Commission at the informal meeting held on 7th December, 1944 (P8/33/44)^{86*} were handed to the representatives of each Government. Assurances were received in each case that the minimum circulation possible would be given to the document, the secret character of which was explained to those present. The representatives of Czechoslovakia and of Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands were informed, in reply to questions, that the Committee was not authorised to communicate to them the full text of the Instrument, which, for security reasons, must remain secret for the present.

PART II.—CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

- 3. The Czechoslovak, Netherlands, Belgian, Luxembourg and Greek Governments have confirmed their desire to participate with their armed forces in the occupation of Germany. The Committee considers that their wishes might be taken into account in considering the concrete steps to be taken to give effect to the terms of Article 4 of the Agreement of 12th September, 1944, on Zones of Occupation which provides for the possibility of including auxiliary contingents of the Allied Powers in the composition of the forces of occupation. In the Committee's view, this question could best be answered if the Commission were to authorise it to communicate to the Governments concerned a summary of the Agreement on Zones of Occupation.
- 4. The Czechoslovak, Netherlands, Belgian, Luxembourg and Greek Governments have confirmed their desire to participate in the machinery of control in Germany. The Committee considers that this question could best be answered if the Commission were to authorise it to communicate to the Governments concerned a summary of the Agreement on Machinery of Control in Germany.
- 5. All the Allied Governments consulted have expressed a wish to continue the consultations regarding Terms of Surrender for Germany and additional requirements to be imposed under the General Article which are of special concern to those Governments—in particular, economic questions such as restitution and spoliation, repatriation of displaced persons, and disposal of German war material. The Committee considers that this desire could be satisfied by continuing at the appropriate moment consultations with this Committee, or with any other competent body authorised by the European Advisory Commission to continue the discussion.
- 6. The wishes of the Allied Governments consulted as set out in paragraphs 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 33 and 34 below could, in the Committee's view, be considered and given appropriate expression in the forthcoming preparation of Orders, Instructions, etc.
- 7. The Commission may wish to consider whether or not the Allied Consultation Committee should answer the desire of the Belgian, Luxembourg and Netherlands Governments for an explanation of the juridical position of the respective National Authorities in securing the execution of the Terms of Surrender in liberated territory. This request is mentioned in paragraph 21 below. If the E.A.C. authorizes discussion of this subject, the Allied Consultation Committee would appreciate guidance from the Commission with respect to the answers to be given.

- 8. The Committee suggests that consideration of the proposals presented by the Norwegian Government, to which reference is made in paragraph 29 below, should be pursued through appropriate military channels and that this Committee should be authorised to inform the Norwegian representatives to that effect.
- 9. In view of their concrete nature and importance, the wishes of the Czechoslovak Government referred to in paragraph 17 below and set out in Part II of the Memorandum of the Czechoslovak Minister of Foreign Affairs 87 dated 24th August, 1944 88 and in later documents, merit the special consideration of the European Advisory Commission.

PART III.—VIEWS OF THE ALLIED GOVERNMENTS

10. The following paragraphs set out the points to which the several countries attach special importance and in regard to which the Committee undertook to invite the particular attention of the Commission. These points have been arranged, in the sections dealing with each country or group of countries, as they relate to (a) the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender and the Orders, etc. to be issued thereunder, (b) the occupation of Germany, (c) Allied Control Machinery in Germany, (d) further consultation or association between the Allied Governments and the European Advisory Commission.

This Government considers that the Terms of Surrender should stipulate in connection with the evacuation of occupied territory, that all requisitions and other coercive measures should cease immediately, that no damage is to be caused to public or private property, and that all agricultural and industrial plants, installations, services, etc. must be left in good working condition; that nothing must be exported and that persons leaving the country must not carry away anything except their personal goods and chattels.
- 12. In the view of the Czechoslovak Government, cash reserves of currency of all kinds held on Allied territory by enemy military and civilian authorities (but not German currency held by private persons) should be included among the property to be placed at the disposal of the Allied Representatives. Gold belonging to or held by the German State, public corporations and banks in Germany and in neutral countries should be added to the items to be held at the disposal of the Allied Representatives. If provisions to this effect are not included in the Instrument of Surrender itself, but are imposed by orders issued under the General Article, this Government considers that the necessary orders should be worked out beforehand so that they can be issued simultaneously with the signature of the Instrument or immediately after the capitulation.

- 13. The Czechoslovak representatives suggest that the Instrument of Surrender should include an acknowledgment of the responsibility of Germany for loss and damage caused to the United Nations by German aggression and should affirm the right of the United Nations whose territories were occupied by Germany to restitution of the identifiable property seized by Germany and to compensation for other property as well as for damage and loss caused during the occupation.
- 14. A provision is suggested forbidding Germany any intercourse with, or any export to, foreign countries without permission of the Allies. All German or German-held assets in neutral countries should be placed at the disposal of the Allied Representatives by the German authorities.
- 15. The Czechoslovak Government is interested in securing the release from military service and auxiliary services under military organisation, including the Todt organization, so of all Allied nationals (excluding Germans and Magyars). Provisions to this effect should, in its view, be included in the relevant article of the Instrument of Surrender, which should also include a stipulation providing for the best possible treatment of displaced nationals of the United Nations, especially workers, pending repatriation.
- 16. This Government considers that German authorities should be bound by the Instrument of Surrender to deliver up war criminals to justice, the principal ones being handed over immediately on capitulation.
- 17. The Czechoslovak representatives expressed a strong desire that provisions dealing with certain political questions in which their Government is interested should be included in the Instrument of Surrender to be confirmed by Germany by the signature of her plenipotentiaries. These questions are the three included in Section II of the Aide-Mémoire submitted by the Czechoslovak Foreign Minister on 24th August, 1944 [P12B/3/44] relating to (a) political clauses (nullification of certain treaties), (b) the date of the beginning of the state of war between the Czechoslovak Republic and Germany and ⁸⁹ An auxiliary service of the German Armed Forces charged with the carrying out of certain technical construction work, particularly road, rail, and fortification construction. Organization Todt used forced foreign labor to a considerable extent.

Hungary, and (c) the transfer of Germans and Magyars from Czechoslovakia to Germany and Hungary.

Occupation of Germany

18. The Czechoslovak Government reiterates its request to be allowed to take part in the military occupation of Germany.

Allied Control Machinery in Germany

19. The Czechoslovak Government desires to be represented on the various Allied bodies, Commissions and agencies which may be set up for the execution of the Instrument of Surrender and orders issued thereunder.

Further Consultation with E.A.C.

20. The Czechoslovak Government desires to be associated as closely as possible with the drafting of the additional requirements and regulations designed for issue by the Allied Representatives under the General Article. In particular, it wishes to be given the opportunity of making observations and suggestions regarding the restitution of looted property, the question of enemy currency in the occupied countries (including gold), the supply of German goods and services for the economic restoration of Allied countries, and the liquidation of enemy property (including incorporeal property, e.g., patents, copyrights, etc.) in Allied countries.

BELGIUM, LUXEMBOURG AND THE NETHERLANDS

Instrument of Surrender

- 21. The representatives of these Governments have expressed concern about the use in the Preamble of the Instrument of Surrender of the phrase "in the interests of the United Nations". They wish to be assured that "no expression in the Instrument of Surrender leaves any doubt that all obligations to be imposed thereunder have force for the benefit of each of the United Nations concerned and give each of them the direct right to claim their execution by the enemy". They have asked for an explanation of the juridical position of the respective national authorities in securing the execution of the Terms of Surrender in liberated territory.
- 22. The three Governments are anxious that provision should be made in the Instrument of Surrender itself for safeguarding the life and property of all Allied nationals in any territory not evacuated by the enemy before capitulation.
- 23. The attention of the Committee was drawn to the recommendations in Section D of Chapter II of the joint memorandum submitted to the Commission by the three Governments [pp. 7–8 of

- P12C/1/44 ⁹⁰] regarding disarmament and demobilisation of the German armed forces, the disposal of war material and stores, the demolition of military installations and fortifications, and the allocation to the victorious Powers of ex-enemy munitions and war booty.
- 24. As regards the release and repatriation of displaced persons of Allied nationality, the three Governments ask that special attention should be given to the views expressed by any of them regarding the priority to be accorded to individuals or categories of citizens whose early return to their respective countries is required for reconstruction and rehabilitation. They ask whether machinery has been set up to deal with this problem and suggest that, if this has not yet been done, the establishment of machinery should be considered without delay. The Belgian Government ask for special consideration for the early return to Belgium of the King of the Belgians ⁹¹ and his family.
- 25. The three representatives have asked for the insertion in the Instrument of Surrender of a provision by which Germany would be bound as regards each Allied State to carry out her pre-war Treaty obligations in so far as she is not expressly released from such obligations by the other party or parties to the treaties or conventions concerned. The Belgian Representative also asked for provision to be made in the Instrument of Surrender for the nullification of the annexation of Belgian territory (Eupen, Malmédy and St. Vith) unilaterally incorporated in the German Reich in 1940.

Occupation of Germany

26. The three Governments attach importance to the inter-Allied character of the occupation. So far as their other military commitments permit (in particular the obligations of the Netherlands Government in the war against Japan), they would wish to be represented by appropriate contingents.

Allied Control Machinery

27. The three Governments have expressed the view that there should be a permanent Central Allied Commission with adequate representation for all States with a direct interest in the fulfilment of the terms of capitulation, including in particular liberated countries.

Further Consultation with E.A.C.

28. The three Governments have expressed their desire to be consulted at the appropriate stage on the economic provisions to be imposed upon Germany by orders issued under the General Article in respect of such matters as the restitution of looted property, reparations for damage and spoliation, the disposal of German war factories and munitions plant and the allocation of German war material and stores. In addition, further consultation is desired in connection with the surrender of war criminals.

NORWAY

Instrument of Surrender

- 29. The Norwegian representatives drew the particular attention of the Committee to the proposals which their Government had submitted in their memorandum of 2nd September, 1944 [P12H/3/44].⁹² They asked whether consideration had been given to the 14 draft Articles se [set?] out in Annex A to that memorandum which had been drawn up for incorporation in the Terms of Surrender to be imposed upon the German authorities in Norway. The first of these Articles reads as follows: "The terms shall be notified to the Germans and their subordinates in Norway by two Allied plenipotentiaries, one of whom shall be appointed by the Norwegian Government". The remaining 13 Articles provide detailed regulations for the control and disarmament of German forces and German-controlled organisations in Norway.
- 30. The Norwegian Government are especially concerned with the control of German shipping and shipbuilding; their representatives thought that the orders to be issued under the General Article affecting such matters especially affecting Norwegian interests should be issued simultaneously with, or immediately after, the signature of the Instrument of Surrender.

Further Consultation with the E.A.C.

31. This Government's representatives expressed a strong desire to be associated with the Committee or with any bodies set up by the Commission in the future which might be concerned with drafting orders and proclamations for issue under the General Article. They were anxious that there should be an opportunity of discussing matters of particular concern to the Norwegian Government, particularly those relating to naval vessels and merchant ships, before final decisions were reached.

YUGOSLAVIA

32. The representative of this Government attended a meeting of the Committee on 23rd January, when he said that he had no questions to raise at that stage. It would appear from the letter addressed to the Chairman of the Commission by the Yugoslav Prime Minister ⁹³ of 3rd January (P12G/3/45) ⁹⁴ that the Royal Yugoslav Government desire to reserve their attitude until after the formation of a single Yugoslav Government in association with the National Committee of Liberation in Belgrade. ⁹⁵ It may be expected that when this Government has been formed, its fully-considered and documented views will be presented.

GREECE

Instrument of Surrender

- 33. At the meeting of the Committee held on 15th February, the Greek representatives presented a memorandum emphasising their Government's desire that Greece's claims against Germany should be referred to the Allied Representatives who would receive the capitulation of Germany, with a view to those Representatives considering the compensation to be made for the loss and damage suffered by the Greek nation. In particular, the Greek representatives asked "that from the war material, etc. to be held by the German authorities at the disposal of the Allied Representatives, a quantity be allotted to the requirements of the Greek Army sufficient to place the latter on a war footing of 25 fully-equipped divisions".
- 34. The further request was made that a demand should be made on the German military forces who might still be in occupation of Greek territory at the time of surrender for the handing over to the Greek military authorities of all war equipment, military installations, etc. in that territory in good condition.

Occupation of Germany

35. Greece desires to be invited to join in the military occupation of Germany.

Allied Control Machinery in Germany

36. Greece wishes to be represented on the Inter-Allied Commission of Control in Germany.

Further Consultation with the E.A.C., etc.

37. The Greek representatives asked that their Government's desire that the surrender of territory and military installations shall be carried out in the particular way proposed (see paragraph 34 above) should be further discussed with those responsible for drafting orders for issue under the General Article.

DEAR SIR WILLIAM: On behalf of my colleagues 96 at the Consultation Committee I submit to you the attached report for consideration by the Commission.

Sincerely yours,

A. Sobolev

REPORT

The Committee which the Commission agreed on 7th December to set up to conduct discussions with representatives of the European ^{*} Philip E. Mosely (for the United States), Viscount Samuel Hood (for the United Kingdom), and Comte Pierre Marie de Leusse (for France).

Allied Governments would welcome instructions from the Commission on the following points:—

- (1) Whilst the Committee proposes to state, in reply to any enquiry from the representatives of the European Allied Governments, that the Instrument of Surrender itself must be withheld at this stage because it is a document of primary military character which has immediate security significance and must accordingly receive very restricted circulation, may the Committee give an assurance that the full text will be communicated to the European Allied Governments in due course prior to the actual surrender of Germany?
- (2) Is it within the competence of the Committee to discuss with the representatives of the European Allied Governments the questions of occupation and control machinery and to inform them of the Commission's recommendations on these subjects, if necessary by communicating a summary of the two Protocols?
 - (3) Are the functions of the Committee—
- (a) to discuss with the representatives of the European Allied Governments any points raised by the latter on the summary of the Instrument of Surrender whether in regard to the subjects specified in para 2 of the summary or the subjects which will be covered by the further documents mentioned in para 3 of the summary?
- (b) to discuss any points arising from the memoranda submitted to the Commission by the European Allied Governments on which the representatives of those governments desire to obtain the views of the Commission?

London, 29 December, 1945.

[Enclosure 31

Copy of a Letter Dated January 6, 1945, From the Chairman of the European Advisory Commission (Strang) to the Chairman of the Allied Consultation Committee (Sobolev)

As you are aware, I have referred to the Commission the report of the Allied Consultation Committee which you submitted with your letter of the 27th December, 1944. This was discussed at the informal meeting held on 2nd January, 1945, when the Commission agreed on the following answers to the questions in the Committee's report:—

1. The Commission approves the proposal that, if any representatives of the European Allied Governments should ask for the communication of the text of the Instrument of Surrender itself, the reply should be given that it is a document of primary military character which has immediate security significance and must accordingly receive very restricted circulation. The Commission is unable to authorise the giving of an assurance that the full text will be communicated to the European Allied Governments in due course, but if the specific question should be asked, the reply may be given that this question is being considered by the Governments concerned.

- 2. If the questions of occupation and control machinery should be raised by the representatives of the European Allied Governments, the Committee is authorised to inform them that proposals on these subjects have been made by the Commission to the Governments concerned, and are still under their consideration. At this stage the Committee is unable to discuss these questions in any detail. The representatives will see, however, from point (vii) of part 2 of the summary and from the third part of that document that provision has been made in the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender for the military occupation of the whole of Germany and for the creation of control machinery.
 - 3. The functions of the Committee are:

(a) if a question is asked in relation to a subject for which provision has been made in the Instrument of Surrender, to confirm that this is so with reference to the relevant paragraph of the summary;

(b) if a question is asked relating to a subject which will require to be dealt with under the general article mentioned in the third part of the summary, the Committee should state that this is the case and that the consideration of it is part of the further programme of the Commission:

(c) to hear and report back to the Commission on any question which may be raised by the representatives of the European Allied Governments, to which the Committee is unable itself to give an answer.

Members of the Committee are at liberty to report individually and consult as necessary with the heads of their respective Delegations on any questions on which they do not feel able to reach a conclusion, and if they can reach agreement in this way it will be unnecessary for them to report back to the Commission as a body. The Commission would wish, however, that the Committee should report to it in any case where the Committee considers it necessary, and that it should include in its report, if possible, recommendations as to the course to be adopted.

The Committee should render a general report to the Commission on its transactions with the representatives of each of the European Allied Governments, submitting interim reports if this should be considered necessary.

London, March 22, 1945—10 p. m. [Received March 23—4:20 a. m.]

3002. Comea 196. In conversation tonight with Mosely, De Leusse, ⁹⁷ Massigli's assistant on the EAC, put forward informally and not as an official proposal the following division of districts in greater Berlin. De Leusse discussed it today with Hood ⁹⁸ of the Foreign Office and apparently has not presented it to the Soviet delegation.

The informal French proposal is as follows:

French Area:

Tiergarten, Charlottenburg, Wilmersdorf, Zehlendorf.

United States Area:

Kreutzberg, Schoeneberg, Steglitz, Neukölln, Tempelhof, Treptow. Soviet Area:

Weissensee, Prenzlauerberg, Mitte, Friedrichshain, Lichtenberg, Köpenick.

United Kingdom Area:

Wedding, Pankow, Reinickendorf, Spandau. De Leusse indicated that Hood's reaction was that the proposed British area was not adequate in terms of facilities; De Leusse thought Charlottenburg might be shifted from the French to the British area. Obviously the French are not satisfied with the area proposed by the British for French occupation (my 2092, February 28, 10 p. m., Comea 189) and are seeking some adjustment which would give them better railroad and hotel facilities.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, March 23, 1945—11 a.m.

2233. Canadian Ambassador 99 has informally reiterated to the Department his dissatisfaction with a) the wording of the proposed preamble of Proclamation No. 1 which he was under the impression would be promulgated after the instrument of surrender had been signed by the Germans, and b) of the wording of the preamble of the order as it would read if no formal instrument of surrender were signed because of the disappearance of organized authority in Germany. The Ambassador states that the Canadian Government has tried without satisfaction to obtain changes in the form of the instrument of surrender or the draft proclamations based thereon but has been unable to secure amendments satisfactory to it. He finds, however, that the alternate wording in our proposed proclamation (WSC-243) goes beyond anything that has been submitted before in ignoring the participation of other countries in the war against Germany.

⁵⁷ Pierre Marie de Leusse, Second Counselor of the French Embassy in London.
⁵⁸ Viscount Samuel Hood, member of the British Delegation to the European Advisory Commission.
⁵⁰ Lester B. Pearson.

It is being explained to the Canadian Ambassador that the General Order was not intended as a proclamation but as an agreement on additional non-military requirements to be imposed by the occupying powers; and further, that a new draft is now being negotiated to replace the "General Order". He is also being advised that, in accordance with standard procedure, his Government should present its views in London for the consideration of the Commission and that Ambassador Winant has been advised that such a démarche might be expected.

²WSC was the Working Security Committee designation for documentation on proclamations and general orders for Germany. This committee was an interdepartmental group concerned with the preparation and clearance of papers relating to problems before the European Advisory Commission whose functions were assumed by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee at the end of 1944. WSC-243 comprehended a number of drafts and commentaries, but the apparent reference here is to E.A.C. (44) 27 of November 14, 1944, described in the immediately preceding footnote.

For documentation regarding the General Order and the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany, see pp. 369-558, passim, especially the memorandum by the Secretary of the United States Delegation, European Advisory Commission (Lightner), dated February 9, 1945, and printed as annex 2 to the Draft Minutes of a Conference on the Work of the European Advisory Commission, March 13, 1945, p. 447, and the memorandum by the Political Adviser to the United States E.A.C. Delegation (Mosely), dated June 19, 1945, p. 524. See also Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vol. I, pp. 605-606; ibid., vol. II, pp. 138, 407, 1006-1023. For text of the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements, signed on July 25, 1945, at a meeting of the European Advisory Commission at London, see ibid., p. 1008.

The Department believes that the Minister's views have some merit and considers that the agreement as eventually adopted should be as free as possible from any implication that the contribution of Canada and other nations fighting with the Allies had not been adequately recognized.

The Department is consulting the War and Navy Departments and will advise you of their views. In the meanwhile you may discuss the substance of the Canadian complaint informally with your colleagues.

London, March 23, 1945—8 p. m. [Received March 23—6:24 p. m.]

3036. Comea 197. Strang has tonight informed me of official British views concerning the transfer to French occupation of a part of the UK zone in Germany. As foreshadowed in my 1778, February 21, 1 p. m., the UK Government offers to transfer to French control the Saar, Bavarian Palatinate, Rhein Hessen, Regierungsbezirk Trier and Regierungsbezirk Koblenz in its entirety, including its extension east of the Rhine.

Immediately afterwards Strang informed Massigli of the British position. He expects to inform Gousev of it shortly.

Strang states that, according to reports of Steel, UK political adviser to SCAEF,⁴ General Eisenhower has been pressing to know what parts of the UK and US zones would eventually come under French control, in order, for the sake of administrative continuity, to begin placing French civil affairs officers in those areas. Strang assumes that the UK Government will shortly inform General Eisenhower of this decision but that no official decision with regard to this communication has yet been taken.

the Committee on Dismemberment of Germany, which was set up by decision of the Yalta Conference. It is now possible to summarize the initial phase of the Committee's proceedings.

In order to facilitate handling, I shall label my telegrams on this potentially explosive subject as "special German series" and address them as above. In London these matters will be handled by me personally, with Mosely's assistance. For purposes of numbering, my 1852, February 22, 8 p. m., should be considered as "Special German Series [1?]".

The Dismemberment Committee has held one meeting, on March 7, attended by Mr. Eden, Gousev, Strang and myself, which was devoted to defining the mandate of the Committee. At the close of the meeting Strang agreed to reduce our understanding of this mandate to writing for submission to the three representatives.

Strang's draft for the Committee was circulated on March 9. Paraphrase follows:

- 1. In examining the procedure for German dismemberment the Committee will approach its task having in mind following considerations: (a) the Allies' primary objective in treatment of Germany after surrender or end of resistance is to prevent German aggression in future; (b) in considering how this objective can best be achieved, one question is whether it can be attained by measures such as control and destruction of German industry, as supplement to demilitarization and disarmament, or whether it will be necessary, in addition, to divide Germany; (c) if, for attainment of this objective it should be found necessary to divide Germany, inquiry should be made as to (1) in what fashion Germany should be divided, into what sections, with what boundaries for those parts, and what interrelationship to exist among the parts; (2) at what time division should be carried out; (3) what measures the Allies would have to take in order to effectuate and maintain such division.
- 2. Inquiries of the Committee along lines set forth under (c) above will be conducted in the light of subjects set forth in paragraphs (a) and (b). End of Paraphrase.

I objected to paragraph 1 b of this draft, asking that instead of the words "destruction and control of German industry" we substitute the words "elimination or control of all German industry that could be used for military production" as set forth in the Yalta Communiqué. Strang accepted this change and Gousev said he had no objection to it. I have written Mr. Eden to say that with this modification I have no objection to Strang's draft.

In reply to Strang's letter of March 9 Gousev has now written Mr. Eden, setting forth his understanding of the mandate of the Committee and stating that he has no objection to the formula contained in Strang's draft.

Beginning of paraphrase of Gousev's statement submitted as "a proposal for consideration of the Committee".

⁶ Ambassador Winant's letter to Foreign Minister Eden, dated March 29, not printed.

Soviet Government understands Crimea Conference decision in respect to Germany's dismemberment not as an obligatory plan for dismemberment but as a possibility for exercising pressure on Germany with aim of rendering Germany harmless in case other means should prove inadequate. End of Paraphrase.

Gousev's reply has been sent to me informally, and I assume that Mr. Eden will now acknowledge Gousev's letter and will formally communicate to me copies of Gousev's letter and of his own reply.⁷

The Soviet statement of March 26 represents a notable success for the concept that the Committee on Dismemberment is intended to consider not merely the question of "procedure" for effecting dismemberment but also, and in the first instance, the substantive question of the desirability and feasibility of dismemberment. Thus far there is no indication of a fixed Soviet view on dismemberment. Gousev's letter makes it plain that at this stage his Government is not committed in principle to a policy of dismemberment.

I appreciate the indication received from the Department that it sees no objection to enlarging the membership of the Committee to include a French representative. In view of the simultaneous discussions about including France in the Reparations Committee in Moscow, Mr. Eden and I have refrained from raising the question of French membership in the Dismemberment Committee. Meanwhile the formal adherence of France to the Surrender Instrument for Germany is also in abeyance until the three powers decide to inform the French of the addition to article XII of the Instrument as agreed at Yalta (my 1852 February 22, 8 p. m.). Yesterday Massigli made representations to Mr. Eden, urging prompt formal adherence by France to the Instrument. In any case the French would probably be embarrassed if they were asked to join in discussions of dismemberment until they know the attitudes of the other three governments on this question.

In private talks I have asked Gousev if the dismemberment of Germany would not react unfavorably on the amount of reparation which could be secured from the German economy. Gousev professed to see no connection between German economic unity and the total amount of reparation obtainable. On another occasion Mosely asked Gousev if his information led him to believe that any strong separatist movements would arise in Germany proper as a result of defeat and if he thought the German people would itself either seek or support partition. To both questions Gousev replied with an unhesitating "no".

⁷ In a letter dated April 3, 1945 (not printed), Foreign Secretary Eden transmitted to Ambassador Winant copies of Ambassador Gousev's letter of March 26, his own reply of April 3, and the Draft Directive for the Committee on Dismemberment as amended in accordance with Ambassador Winant's suggestion. In a letter dated April 6 (not printed), acknowledging Mr. Eden's letter, Ambassador Winant stated: "I am glad to inform you that the Soviet Government's interpretation of the Crimea Agreement conforms to the understanding of the United States Government, and to confirm my acceptance of the draft directive for the Committee on Dismemberment in the amended form shown in the enclosure to your letter to Mr. Gousev." Mr. Eden subsequently informed Ambassador Gousev of the contents of Ambassador Winant's letter of April 10 (740.00119 EAC/10-345).

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Political Adviser to the United States Delegation to the European Advisory Commission (Mosely)

[London,] March 29, 1945.

Sir William Strang called me on the telephone late this afternoon to inform the Ambassador of the preliminary Soviet reaction to a British démarche. On March 24 the Foreign Office had instructed Sir Archibald Clark Kerr 9 to present to Mr. Molotov 10 in writing the British concern at the inability of the Commission to advance its work. The communication recalled the Soviet Note of last October 11 which had stated that the Soviet Government wished to see the Commission complete a wide range of work. It went on to list a number of matters awaiting action by the Commission and to point out why a number of those matters required urgent consideration. The communication concluded by urging the Soviet Government to put Mr. Gousev in a position which would enable him to act on these matters.

In response to these representations Mr. Vyshinsky,12 acting for Mr. Molotov, who was unable to see Sir Archibald, had received the British Ambassador on March 28 and had given him an interim and verbal reply.

Mr. Vyshinsky stated that the Yalta Conference had been responsible for the delay, inasmuch as Mr. Gousev had been taken away from his usual post, that instructions on several of the urgent matters had already been sent to Mr. Gousev in London, and that Mr. Molotov would reply in a few days to the British representations.

Sir Archibald found nothing in Mr. Vyshinsky's attitude to suggest a desire on the part of the Soviet Government to hinder or delay the work of the European Advisory Commission.

LONDON, March 30, 1945.

Allied Declaration for Use in the Event of There Being No Central German Authority To Sign the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender

The Instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany, prepared by the Commission and approved by the United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Governments, provides for its signature by representatives of the German Government and of the German High Command.

- 2. During the early discussions in the Commission on the draft Instrument of Surrender, the United Kingdom Delegation suggested that it might be wise to prepare alternative drafts to meet the case in which there would be a central German authority to sign the Instrument and the case in which there would be no such authority. It was, however, decided to proceed on the assumption that there would be a German signature. The U.K. Delegation have, however, continued to hold this alternative hypothesis in mind. It is for this reason that they proposed the insertion, in the Commission's report dated: 14th November, 1944,14 covering the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, of a reference to the possibility that the machinery of control might have to be adjusted to meet conditions in which there would not be a central administration in Germany; and that they have appended to the U.K. draft directives circulated to the Commission notes showing how these directives would apply in the event of the disintegration of the central German administration.
- 3. It now seems increasingly probable that at the moment of the final German collapse there will be no central German authority, civil or military, capable of speaking for Germany as a whole or of giving effect to the requirements of the Allies. In that event the Allies will have to dispense with any German signature to the Instrument of Surrender and will have by unilateral act to declare their terms and assume the necessary authority and powers in Germany.

¹⁸ Transmitted to the Department in despatch 22112, April 2, from London; received April 7. In the course of a telephone conversation with Philip Mosely on March 29, Strang noted that in preparing this draft declaration, he had based it on the text of the Surrender Instrument of July 25, 1944, omitting the word "dismemberment" which had been added in article 12 at the Yalta Conference (Mosely File).

- 4. The U.K. Delegation have therefore prepared, and now submit for consideration by the Commission, a draft Declaration (Annex A) which adapts for this purpose, for use in case of need, the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender recommended by the Commission to the United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Governments on 25th July, 1944. In the draft France has been added as a party to the Declaration. I also attach (Annex B), for the convenience of my colleagues, a list showing the places in which the draft Declaration differs from the Instrument of Surrender.¹⁵
- 5. A change in the title of the Instrument is necessary to meet the new hypothesis, since no formal surrender by a central German authority would in fact have taken place. Furthermore, the Preamble has been recast in order to provide at the very outset, rather than in the body of the document as is done in Article 12(a) of the Instrument of Surrender, for the assumption by the four Allied Governments of the authority and powers which they intend to exercise in Germany and which represent indeed the authority on which the Declaration itself is based. By the Declaration the Allies assume all necessary authority and powers in respect of Germany without effecting the annexation of, or the formal acquisition of sovereignty over, Germany.
- 6. The articles of the Declaration follow very closely those of the Instrument of Surrender. As the Declaration rests on the assumption that there are no competent central German authorities, the references in the Instrument to "the German authorities" have either been omitted or qualified so as to designate local authorities.
- 7. When the draft Instrument of Surrender was under discussion in the Commission, the U.K. Delegation proposed that a provision for the surrender of war criminals should be included in it. This proposal was not accepted, on the ground that, since the German signatories might themselves prove to be war criminals, the inclusion of a provision providing for the apprehension of war criminals might make it less likely that German signatures to the Instrument would be obtainable. No such objection would apply to the inclusion of a clause about war criminals in a unilateral Declaration of the kind now in question. The U.K. Delegation therefore now propose that a provision for the surrender of war criminals should be included in the Declaration.

ANNEX A

Declaration made at on regarding the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic.

The German armed forces on land, at sea and in the air have been completely defeated and Germany is no longer capable of resisting the will of the United Nations. Germany has thereby become subject to such terms and measures as may now or hereafter be imposed upon her.

There is no Government or authority in Germany capable of accepting responsibility for the maintenance of order, the administration of the country and compliance with the requirements of the United Nations.

It is in these circumstances necessary, without prejudice to any subsequent decisions that may be taken respecting Germany, for the United Nations to make provision for the cessation of any further hostilities on the part of the German armed forces, for the maintenance of order in Germany and for the administration of the country, and to announce the immediate terms with which Germany is required to comply.

The Representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the French Republic, hereinafter called the "Allied Representatives," acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations, accordingly make the following Declaration:—

The Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, hereby assume supreme authority with respect to Germany, including all the powers possessed by the German Government, the High Command and any state, municipal, or local government or authority. The assumption, for the purposes stated above, of the said authority and powers does not effect the annexation of Germany.

The Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic will hereafter determine the boundaries of Germany or any part thereof and the status of Germany or of any area at present being part of German territory.

In virtue of the said authority and powers the Allied Representatives issue the following instructions with which Germany shall comply:—

Germany will forthwith cease all hostilities against the forces of the United Nations on land, at sea and in the air.

ARTICLE 2

- (a) All armed forces of Germany or under German control, wherever they may be situated, including land, air, anti-aircraft and naval forces, the S.S., ¹⁶ S.A. ¹⁷ and Gestapo, ¹⁸ and all other forces or auxiliary organisations equipped with weapons, will be completely disarmed, handing over their weapons and equipment to local Allied Commanders or to officers designated by the Allied Representatives.
- (b) The personnel of the formations and units of all the forces referred to in paragraph (a) above shall, at the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the Allied State concerned, be declared to be prisoners of war, pending further decisions, and shall be subject to such conditions and directions as may be prescribed by the respective Allied Representatives.
- (c) All forces referred to in paragraph (a) above, wherever they may be, will remain in their present positions pending instructions from the Allied Representatives.
- (d) Evacuation by the said forces of all territories outside the frontiers of Germany as they existed on the 31st December, 1937, will proceed according to instructions to be given by the Allied Representatives.
- (e) Detachments of civil police to be armed with small arms only, for the maintenance of order and for guard duties, will be designated by the Allied Representatives.

ARTICLE 3

- (a) All aircraft of any kind or nationality in Germany or Germanoccupied or controlled territories or waters, military, naval or civil, other than aircraft in the service of the Allies, will remain on the ground, on the water or aboard ships pending further instructions.
- (b) All German or German-controlled aircraft in or over territories or waters not occupied or controlled by Germany will proceed to Germany or to such other place or places as may be specified by the Allied Representatives.

17 Sturmabteilung, Storm Troops of the Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiternartei

18 Geheime Staatspolizei, German Secret State Police.

ARTICLE 4

- (a) All German or German-controlled naval vessels, surface and submarine, auxiliary naval craft, and merchant and other shipping, wherever such vessels may be at the time of this Declaration, and all other merchant ships of whatever nationality in German ports, will remain in or proceed immediately to ports and bases as specified by the Allied Representatives. The crews of such vessels will remain on board pending further instructions.
- (b) All ships and vessels of the United Nations, whether or not title has been transferred as the result of prize court or other proceedings, which are at the disposal of Germany or under German control at the time of this Declaration, will proceed at the dates and to the ports or bases specified by the Allied Representatives.

ARTICLE 5

- (a) All or any of the following articles in the possession of the German armed forces or under German control or at German disposal will be held intact and in good condition at the disposal of the Allied Representatives, for such purposes and at such times and places as they may prescribe—
- (i) all arms, ammunition, explosives, military equipment, stores and supplies and other implements of war of all kinds and all other war material;
- (ii) all naval vessels of all classes, both surface and submarine, auxiliary naval craft and all merchant shipping, whether afloat, under repair or construction, built or building;
- (iii) all aircraft of all kinds, aviation and anti-aircraft equipment and devices;
 - (iv) all transportation and communications facilities and equipment, by land, water or air;

- (v) all military installations and establishments, including airfields, seaplane bases, ports and naval bases, storage depots, permanent and temporary land and coast fortifications, fortresses and other fortified areas, together with plans and drawings of all such fortifications, installations and establishments;
- (vi) all factories, plants, shops, research institutions, laboratories, testing stations, technical data, patents, plans, drawings and inventions, designed or intended to produce or to facilitate the production or use of the articles, materials and facilities referred to in subparagraphs (i), (ii), (iii), (iv) and (v) above or otherwise to further the conduct of war.
- (b) At the demand of the Allied Representatives the following will be furnished:—
- (i) the labour, services and plant required for the maintenance or operation of any of the six categories mentioned in paragraph (a) above; and

- (ii) any information or records that may be required by the Allied Representatives in connection with the same.
- (c) At the demand of the Allied Representatives all facilities will be provided for the movement of Allied troops and agencies, their equipment and supplies, on the railways, roads and other land communications or by sea, river or air. All means of transportation will be maintained in good order and repair, and the labour, services and plant necessary therefor will be furnished.

ARTICLE 6

- (a) The German authorities concerned will release to the Allied Representatives, in accordance with the procedure to be laid down by them, all prisoners of war at present in their power, belonging to the forces of the United Nations, and will furnish full lists of these persons, indicating the places of their detention in Germany or territory occupied by Germany. Pending the release of such prisoners of war, the said German authorities will protect them in their persons and property and provide them with adequate food, clothing, shelter, medical attention and money in accordance with their rank or official position.
- (b) The German authorities concerned will in like manner provide for and release all other nationals of the United Nations who are confined, interned or otherwise under restraint, and all other persons who may be confined, interned or otherwise under restraint for political reasons or as a result of any Nazi action, law or regulation which discriminates on the ground of race, colour, creed or political belief.
- (c) Without prejudice to the foregoing provisions of this Article the German authorities concerned will hand over control of the places of detention there mentioned to such officers as may be designated for the purpose by the Allied Representatives.

The German authorities concerned will furnish to the Allied Representatives:—

- (a) full information regarding the forces referred to in Article 2 (a), and, in particular, will furnish forthwith all information which the Allied Representatives may require concerning the numbers, locations and dispositions of such forces, whether located inside or outside Germany;
- (b) complete and detailed information concerning mines, minefields and other obstacles to movement by land, sea or air, and the safety lanes in connection therewith. All such safety lanes will be kept open and clearly marked; all mines, minefields and other dangerous obstacles will as far as possible be rendered safe, and all aids to navigation will be reinstated. Unarmed German military and civilian personnel with the necessary equipment will be made available and utilised for the above purposes and for the removal of mines, minefields and other obstacles as directed by the Allied Representatives.

ARTICLE 8

There shall be no destruction, removal, concealment, transfer or scuttling of, or damage to, any military, naval, air, shipping, port, industrial and other like property and facilities and all records and archives, wherever they may be situated, except as may be directed by the Allied Representatives.

ARTICLE 9

Pending the institution of control by the Allied Representatives over all means of communication, all radio and telecommunication installations and other forms of wire or wireless communications, whether ashore or afloat, under German control, will cease transmission except as directed by the Allied Representatives.

ARTICLE 10

The forces, nationals, ships, aircraft, military equipment, and other property in Germany or in German control or service or at German disposal, of any other country at war with any of the Allies, will be subject to the provisions of this Declaration and of any proclamations, orders, ordinances or instructions issued thereunder.

ARTICLE 11

The Allied Representatives will station forces and civil agencies in any or all parts of Germany as they may determine.

ARTICLE 12

- (a) The Allied Representatives will take such steps, including the complete disarmament and demilitarisation of Germany, as they deem requisite for future peace and security.
- (b) The Allied Representatives will impose additional political, administrative, economic, financial, military and other requirements arising from the defeat of Germany. The Allied Representatives, or persons or agencies duly designated to act on their authority, will issue proclamations, orders, ordinances and instructions for the purpose of laying down such additional requirements, and of giving effect to the other provisions of this Declaration. All German authorities and the German people shall carry out unconditionally the requirements of the Allied Representatives, and shall fully comply with all such proclamations, orders, ordinances and instructions.

ARTICLE 13

This Declaration enters into force and effect immediately. In the event of failure on the part of the German authorities or people promptly and completely to fulfil their obligations hereby or hereafter imposed, the Allied Representatives will take whatever action may be deemed by them to be appropriate under the circumstances.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] April 2, 1945.

The French Ambassador ¹⁹ came in today and stated that his Government was very desirous of having the question of the French zone of occupation settled as soon as possible. He asked where the discussions with regard to the setting up of the zone would take place, and I replied that I expected it would be in the European Advisory Commission in London. I recalled that the French zone is to be made up of parts taken from the United States and the British zones, leaving the Russian zone as it is.

He asked that steps be taken to expedite these discussions as it was necessary to make certain dispositions of the French forces and take other measures on which decisions should be made now as the war comes to an end. (I understand Mr. Matthews is working on this subject right now in conversations with the War Department.)

He said that his Government was very concerned in view of the rapid developments now in Germany looking toward the early collapse or surrender of that country, and they desired that these matters be concluded and agreed to before such collapse or surrender might take place. 2547. (SCOFM) In our opinion the French should now be informed of the addition made to Article 12 of the Instrument of Surrender as agreed to at Yalta (your Special German Series 2) and arrangements completed for their formal adherence to the Instrument.

It was likewise agreed at Yalta that the Committee on German dismemberment should give consideration to the desirability of associating with you a French representative. In our opinion you should give active support to the proposal of French participation regardless of the status of the discussions concerning the Reparations Committee in Moscow.

3405. For the Secretary, Assistant Secretary Dunn and Mr. Matthews. Document referred to in Department's 2577, April 3, 8 p. m.,²² forwarded by my despatch No. 22112 of April 2 (EAC 54/28 of March 30).

²¹ James W. Riddleberger, Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs. ²² Not printed; in it the Department urgently requested a report on a British document presented to the European Advisory Commission (740.0019 EW/4-345). This document was the memorandum by the United Kingdom Representative on the European Advisory Commission, E.A.C. (45) 28, dated March 30, p. 208.

This document has simply been distributed and not placed before the European Advisory Commission. It was an effort on the part of Strang to prepare a proclamation which might be issued by all the Allied Commanders in Chief in the event that there was neither a German Government nor a German High Command available to sign the unconditional surrender. The omission of the words "unconditional surrender" and other modifications of the Surrender Instrument greatly disturbed Gousev as he assumed it was evidence of a change of policy. I made it clear to him last night that there was no change of policy whatsoever as far as we were concerned and that the agreed documents—unconditional surrender instrument, protocol on zones of occupation, agreement on control machinery—stood as binding on our Government.

I am sure there has been no intention of changing the policy as far as the British Government is concerned. I think myself that it was a mistake to circulate such a document at this time without a verbal explanation to the members of the Commission. The intention was to cover a contingency that might face the armed forces in the final stages of German disintegration.

I feel basically that Gousev and possibly his Government is disturbed because the American-British forces are rapidly penetrating the German defense while the Russians are meeting strong resistance in the east. They are therefore sensitive to any apparent change of policy at the moment. In this connection the introduction of the United States memorandum of March 23 23 has not been an easy matter. I went over the document with Gousev personally before introducing it into the Commission in order to facilitate its early consideration.

surrender terms which had been agreed upon by the three Governments for application to Germany, I asked the Soviet Ambassador to come in to see me this afternoon. At the time the Ambassador made the inquiry of the Secretary, the Secretary informed Mr. Gromyko that we had no knowledge whatever of the proposal he mentioned as being put forward by the British Government. We immediately telegraphed to Mr. Winant, and this morning received from him a report to the effect that a document had been distributed by the British Government but not placed before the European Advisory Commission as yet. He said that this proposal was an effort on the part of the British to prepare a proclamation which might be issued by all the Allied Commanders in Chief in the event there was neither a German Government or German High Command available to sign the unconditional surrender. Mr. Winant stated that the omission of the words "unconditional surrender" had particularly disturbed the Soviet representative, who had assumed that it was evidence of a change of policy.

I told Mr. Gromyko that we had now received a report of the British proposal from Mr. Winant and described to him what we believed was the purport of this new document. I also informed him that the document had been circulated by the British Government but not yet placed before the European Advisory Commission. then went on to say that as far as this Government was concerned there was no change whatever in our policy or attitude toward the terms of unconditional surrender of Germany; that we considered that the agreement on unconditional surrender, as entered into by the three Governments as the result of the deliberations in the European Advisory Commission, was binding upon this Government and that we had no thought or idea of any change in that policy. Mr. Gromyko asked me whether he could take it that the attitude of this Government toward the new document put forward by the British Government was negative. I told him that as far as any substitution for the instrument of surrender as agreed upon was concerned we would not favor any proposal which would change that policy, and that we would consider that the terms of that agreement as embodied in the surrender instrument already accepted by the three Governments should be applied to the case of surrender of the German armed forces in the event of there being no German Government left to surrender, and even to the case of there being no over-all command of the German forces left, resulting in the gradual reduction of the German armed forces piece by piece, as the process of grinding Germany down was pursued. I said further that even in the event of there being no one left in Germany to surrender at the termination of this process, that this Government considered that the terms of the surrender instrument should be carried out by the three Governments in accordance with the agreement embodied in that document.

The Ambassador expressed himself as satisfied with this statement and said he would report it immediately to his Government.

MEMORANDUM

His Majesty's Government have carefully considered the suggestions put forward by the United States Government in the State Department's memorandum 740.00119 EW/10-444 of the 15th November 1944,30 and are in a position to accept them subject to certain provisos. Thus, they hold that before any reply is returned by the United States Government and themselves to the Italian Government, the Soviet Government and the French Government as the other governments represented on European Advisory Commission should be informed through diplomatic channel of what is intended. They further hold that the French Provisional Government should be included among those to whom the Italian Government would be invited to submit their views with regard to surrender arrangements for Germany in accordance with the proposals of the United States Government.

His Majesty's Government would be glad to know whether the United States Government agrees and whether it is prepared to instruct the United States Ambassadors at Moscow and Paris ³¹ to concert with His Majesty's Ambassadors ³² in informing the Soviet and the French Provisional Government of the intentions of the two Governments on the basis of the State Department's memorandum under reference, as modified by paragraph 1 above.

pre-1940 territorial integrity. Fuller study leads his Government to consider the desirability of making a slight rectification in the German-Belgian frontier as established by decision of the conference of ambassadors of July 22, 1920,³⁵ which drew the frontier on the basis of articles 34 and 35 of the Versailles Treaty.³⁶ This settlement left in German hands part of the Eupen-Malmedy Railroad in the German county of Montjoie. To end the abuses and incidents which arose from this transit arrangement the Belgian Government proposes a slight rectification of the frontier.

The letter goes on to cite the ravages inflicted on the Belgian Ardennes during the winter and the destruction caused by flying bombs in Belgian cities. The Belgian Government is studying the possibility of securing reparation for these damages by requesting the assignment of natural resources located in German territory near the Belgian frontier and in a region which in part belonged to the Belgian provinces prior to 1816. Such reparation would mean transferring to definitive or temporary Belgian sovereignty certain neighboring territories outside the Montjoie zone. The Belgian Government reserves the right to present proposals to this effect at an opportune time. End of Summary.

The question raised by Mr. Winant in this conversation has been discussed with the Secretary of War and with General Marshall, and I am forwarding it to you on General Marshall's instructions and in his temporary absence from the city. The Secretary of War and General Marshall both feel that this is a question for action by the State Department and that from the military viewpoint there is no objection to the action Mr. Winant desires to take. The Secretary of War and General Marshall feel that a situation may arise in which there will be no German Government or German High Command to deal with.

Memorandum of Trans-Atlantic Telephone Conversation Between the Chief of Staff of the United States Army (Marshall), in Washington, and the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant), in London

14 April 1945.

MARSHALL: Yes, Mr. Ambassador, this is General Marshall. Winant: This is Winant, General. I wanted to talk to you about a matter that has to do with the unconditional surrender terms.

⁴⁰ Apparent reference to the message regarding the control of Germany from the Heads of Government of the United Kingdom, the United States, and the Soviet Union to General de Gaulle, the text of which is contained in telegram 798, February 21, 5 p. m., from Paris, p. 184.

Marshall: Yes.

Winant: You remember that when you were here with the Chiefs of Staff we went over those terms. I am calling you today because I thought that you were the only one whom I could catch at the Pentagon Building. I sent over the Military Advisors to the European Advisory Commission to see General Eisenhower and General Smith ⁴¹ this past week, and they have returned, and I think you know about the Bern incident.⁴²

MARSHALL: Yes, the Bern; I know that.

Winant: Just at that time, Sir William Strang, who represents the British on the European Advisory Commission, introduced a paper which suggested that we should be prepared to issue a proclamation to take the place of the unconditional surrender terms, provided there was no German political authority or military authority in Germany to agree to surrender. Unfortunately in that paper Strang did not use, or the British did not use the phrase "unconditional surrender". They also so changed the unconditional surrender terms as to include other matters on which we had not come to complete agreement. That added to a feeling of distrust on the part of the Russians, and they felt that we meant to change our general policy.

MARSHALL: That we meant to change our general policy. They, being the Russians?

Winant: Yes. That they thought that the British meant to change their general policy. For that reason I sent a message to the State Department explaining the situation, and I got a reply from them quoting a message to me from the President. It was a single sentence. It reads as follows: "I do not wish any document or proposal changing the unconditional surrender terms."

MARSHALL: I have that.

WINANT. In talking with Ambassador Gusev, the Russian Ambassador, I had previously explained that the United States had no intention of changing the unconditional surrender terms. All military advisors who have been talking with General Eisenhower and General Smith....

Marshall: All military authorities who have been talking with General Eisenhower and General Smith——

WINANT: and with General Smith tell me that they believe that we should get agreement within the European Advisory Commission with the British, the Russians and the French, that if conditions are such that there is no political or military authority in Germany to accept the responsibility of surrender, we should be in a position to issue a proclamation on which all are agreed, calling for, or rather, declaring an unconditional surrender. The urgency of this matter is from a negotiation point of view, and not from an immediate military operational point of view. If there are changes, to be made in the unconditional surrender terms, we want to keep them to a minimum. The details of changes in bringing the unconditional surrender terms document into alignment with a proclamation document I shall forward to the Department of State. I wanted to talk to you only on the changes in substance. One of those changes will be the following:

"And Germany having been rendered powerless to continue organized resistance."

That is one of the additions that we would make to the preamble. And then there is another substitute [substantive?] change. It's to be added the end of Article I, the following:

"Further resistance to the Forces of the United Nations or failure to comply with such requirements or orders will be considered as violations of the laws of war and will be dealt with accordingly." Now it is our idea that this document should be issued by the four governments after consultation with and after attaining the consent of the Soviet Supreme Command and SHAEF.

WINANT: Yes, I am. MARSHALL: All right.

WINANT: The document should not be issued in our opinion until these two Supreme Commanders have agreed that the military situation permits. The document calls for "complete defeat". If you issue the document, before organized resistance was destroyed, we believe it would have a bad effect on the morale of our troops and the whole . . . on morale at home, and it might also affect war production at home. All three of these. The reactions would be equally true in Great Britain. I want to tell you what my problem is. All I have to date is the President's direction to me, stating: "I do not wish any document or proposal changing the unconditional surrender terms." What I would like to do is to follow the recommendations, the suggestions from SHAEF that I negotiate a proclamation document in line with the unconditional surrender terms already agreed upon which were recommended by the European Advisory Commission and accepted by the three governments. The Russians, the British and ourselves. Now, we also are instructed to include the French Republic and we have got agreement so far as the amendment of unconditional surrender terms are concerned. Therefore, I would negotiate to work out a proclamation calling for the declaring unconditional surrender with the three governments, namely, the Russians, the British and the French. I would like permission to do that because I do not want to bring the matter forward until I have clearance from home.^{42a}

Washington: General Marshall has gone and he wanted to know if there was anything further. He said he had gone along to take care of what you had already told him.

Winant: I want to ask one other thing. And I will address them to General Marshall if I may.

Washington: All right. Fine.

Winant: I would also like you to do what you could to expedite agreement on the French zone of occupation in Germany and the Austrian agreement which are before the European Advisory Commission, on zoning and control. We shall forward recommendations and these questions over the weekend. Did the General understand——

Washington: He understood perfectly, Mr. Ambassador. He said he got all of that information and we are giving him a copy of it and he said he was leaving and he was going to go to work on the problem right away.

Winant: I understand. I felt that he would be more familiar with it than anyone I could talk with and that more than anyone else he would realize the significance of it.

WASHINGTON: Certainly.

WINANT: Therefore, I thought it was proper to talk with him.

Washington: Yessir, he waited here about five minutes but we hadn't any prediction whether it would be five minutes or half an hour before the circuit would be back in.

WINANT: Will you thank him for me.

Washington: I will thank him, yes, sir. And that is everything now you have?

WINANT: That is right.

Washington: Because he said anything else that you had to just give us and we would take it right up to him.

WINANT: All right. Thank you.

Washington: We have that. Thank you very much.

 $^{^{42}a}$ Circuit temporarily interrupted at approximately this point in the conversation.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 15, 1945—11 p. m. [Received April 15—9:03 p. m.]

3864. For the Secretary, Assistant Secretary Dunn and Mr. Matthews. Special German Series 6.

During the negotiations on the instrument of unconditional surrender for Germany several alternative situations were envisaged. In order to facilitate agreement it was agreed to draw up an unconditional surrender instrument on the assumption that a German Government or a German High Command or both would be available to sign it. A contrary assumption, namely that there will be no authority capable of signing on Germany's behalf, must now be urgently considered.

After long thought by the Foreign Office and United Kingdom legal authorities the United Kingdom representative in the European Advisory Commission circulated a draft proclamation to be considered for possible assurance [issuance] in case no German signature could be secured. This document was forwarded in my despatch No. 22112 of April 2 (EAC 45/28 of March 30).

In conjunction with certain other matters in controversy between the United States, United Kingdom and Soviet Governments, this new draft gave rise to great agitation in the Soviet Government (my 3405, April 4, noon). Certain modifications in the terms, and particularly the omission of the words "unconditional surrender", were especially unfortunate.

I and my advisers have given long thought to this question, and in early February the United States side of SHAEF, after consultation with my advisers, also drew up a proclamation for possible use in place of the instrument. We have been guided by the idea of making the minimum number of changes possible. I should appreciate Department's most urgent consideration of these proposed changes in the instrument of July 25, 1944.

(1) Substitute following preamble: "The German Armed Forces, having been completely defeated on land, at sea and in the air, and Germany having been rendered powerless to continue organized resistance, the representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the French Republic, hereinafter called the 'Allied representatives', acting by authority of their respective governments and in the interests of the United Nations, announce the complete defeat of Germany and direct that the German people, all German civil and military authorities and the German armed forces, hereinafter called collectively the 'German authorities and people', shall comply with the following requirements of unconditional surrender".

(2) Substitute following for article 1: "Germany, and all German military, naval and air authorities and all forces under German control, will immediately cease hostilities in all theaters of war against the forces of the United Nations on land, at sea and in the air. German authorities and people will comply at once with all instructions issued by the Allied representatives to give effect to the cessation of hostilities. Further resistance to the forces of the United Nations and failure to comply with such requirements or orders will be considered as violations of the laws of war and will be dealt with accordingly." Final sentence of article 1 is a net addition to the instrument. General Bedell Smith and United States side of SHAEF feel strongly that it must be included in order to "put teeth" into the proclamation.

(3) Omit "at the time of surrender" in articles 4 A, 4 B, 7 A.

(4) Insert "and people" after "German authorities" in articles 5 A, 5 B, 5 C, 6 A, 6 B, 8.

(5) Change "instrument" to "proclamation" in articles 10, 12 B, 13, 14.

(6) In article 2 A, change "be completely disarmed" to "disarm completely".

(7) In article 3 B, omit first six words; change "to proceed" to read "will proceed".

(8) In article 4 B, omit first seven words; change "to remain" to read "will remain".

(9) In article 12 A, insert "the French Republic."

(10) In article 12 B, change "present" to read "impose;" substitute "complete defeat" for "surrender"; in last sentence omit "German Government command all"; omit "the German" before people.

(11) In article 13 omit "immediately upon signature"; insert "at blank hours, Central European Time, on blank date."

(12) In article 14 insert "French".

(13) Omit places for German signatures; add place for French signature. End of changes in text.

In working out this adaptation only two changes have been made in substance, one in the preamble and one in article 1. The addition in the preamble is: "Germany having been rendered powerless to continue organized resistance". The addition in article one is the new last sentence. General Eisenhower and General Smith, who have been consulted in the last two days by General Meyer and Colonel Hammond,43 feel that these two additions are essential in order to enable the occupying forces to suppress any guerilla warfare which might continue after the cessation of organized resistance. All other changes are those required to change the instrument into a proclamation for unilateral issuance. If this document is to be negotiated rapidly or successfully with the Russians, any changes must be kept to the absolute minimum.

General Eisenhower feels that from an operational standpoint there is still some time, perhaps a few weeks, before such a proclamation should be issued. He is fully in accord that this proclamation can be issued only by agreement of the four governments, since it provides for their jointly taking full power over Germany, and that the exact time of its issuance should be agreed between SHAEF and the Soviet High Command. He feels, however, and I fully concur, that the necessity for earliest possible negotiation of this proclamation in the European Advisory Commission is very urgent. For that reason I hope the Department will let me have immediately its comments and suggestions on these proposed modifications in the wording of the instrument of unconditional surrender.

[Extracts]

Dear Doc: Just a word about the current trend. Apparently there is on the part of some of our officers no particular eagerness to occupy Berlin first. It is not at all impossible that our forces may linger along the Elbe "consolidating" their position. This will be true in the event there is substantial German resistance. One theory seems to be that what is left of Berlin may be tenaciously defended house by house and brick by brick. I have suggested the modest opinion that there should be a certain political advantage in the capture of Berlin even though the military advantage may be insignificant.

Discussion regarding the life of SHAEF continues unabated. The burning question with many officers is rather a personal one—that of their own jobs—which is not without effect on their thinking. Kenneth Strong 44 estimates that SHAEF would continue for at least three months from now based on the time necessary for the liquidation of the German ports, the redoubt area, Denmark and Norway. In his opinion at least six weeks would be necessary for the deployment of troops to their respective zones. Then there is of course the large question of when and whether the Russians will provide their element of the Control Council. From what Phil Mosely tells me of the past four weeks in EAC these prospects are none too bright. I suppose that under the circumstances three months may be considered as a reasonable estimate.

All the best to you. Yours ever,

3018. In view of the prospect that nearly all of Germany will be under Allied occupation at the time of issuance of proposed proclamation, we question whether an adaptation of the surrender instrument lends itself to use as an initial proclamation.

Since many matters included in the surrender instrument will already have been regulated by SHAEF military government ordinances, issuance of the whole surrender instrument in a proclamation may cause confusion. The instrument appears much too long to be effective as a proclamation, especially if promulgated simultaneously in three or four languages.

The Department and the War Department would prefer the issuance of a brief declaration of the general character of Proclamation No. One [EAC(44) 27].⁴⁵ This declaration should contain:

(1) A statement of Germany's complete defeat and the imposition of the requirements of unconditional surrender;

(2) The assumption of supreme authority by the four Allied Powers:

(3) The establishment of the Control Council and the delineation of zonal responsibility (this article might be postponed for later proclamations if it is not feasible to establish the Control Council at the time);

(4) An injunction to the Germans to comply with Allied orders, with warning of severe punishment for non-compliance;

(5) Notice that further resistance to the forces of the United Nations will be considered unlawful and dealt with accordingly.

Agreement in the European Advisory Commission on such a proclamation should be based on the understanding by the four governments that the policies and procedures envisaged in the surrender instrument would be put into effect by the generals commanding the forces of the four Occupying Powers. In the opinion of the Department this method of implementing the provisions of the surrender instrument would signify no deviation from the policy of unconditional surrender.

The Department, however, does not wish unnecessarily to complicate your problem of reaching an understanding with your colleagues on the EAC, and if, in your judgment, it is desirable to proceed on the basis of changing the surrender instrument into a proclamation, this Government would accept the formulation reported in your 3864, April 15, 11 p. m.

No. 7. Your armies soon, and presently ours, may come into contact with Soviet forces. Supreme Commander should be given instructions by Combined Chiefs of Staff as soon as possible how to act.

In my view there are two zones:

- (a) Tactical zone in which our troops must stand on the lines they have reached unless there is agreement for a better tactical deployment against continuing resistance of the enemy. This should be arranged by the Supreme Commander through Deane 47 and Archer 48 in Moscow or if convenient across the line in the field. Combined Chiefs of Staff have already taken up the issue of instructions to cover this phase. (See telegram C.O.S. (W) 768 of April 16th from British Chiefs of Staff and telegrams leading up to it.49)
- (b) Occupational zone which I agreed with President Roosevelt on advice of Combined General Staffs. In my view this zone should be occupied within a certain time from V.E. 50 day whenever this is declared, and we should retire with dignity from the much greater gains which Allied troops have acquired by their audacity and vigour.

I am quite prepared to adhere to occupational zones. But I do not wish our Allied troops or your American troops to be hustled back at any point by some crude assertion of a local Russian General. This must be provided against by an agreement between the Governments so as to give Eisenhower a fair chance to settle on the spot in his own admirable wav.

These occupational zones were outlined rather hastily at Quebec in September 1944⁵¹ when it was not foreseen that General Eisenhower's armies would make such a mighty inroad into Germany. The zones cannot be altered except by agreement with the Russians. But the moment V.E. day has occurred, we should try to set up Allied Control Commission in Berlin and should insist upon a fair distribution of food produced in Germany between all parts of Germany. As it stands at present, Russian occupational zone has the smallest proportion of people and grows by far the largest proportion of food. The Americans have a not very satisfactory proportion of food to feed conquered population. And we poor British are to take over all the ruined Ruhr and large manufacturing districts, which are like ours. in normal times large importers of food. I suggest that this tiresome question should be settled in Berlin by A.C.C.⁵² before we move from tactical positions we have at present achieved. The Russian idea of taking these immense food supplies out of food producing areas of Germany to feed themselves is very natural. But I contend that feeding the German population must be treated as a whole and that available supplies must be divided pro rata between the occupational troops.

I should be most grateful if you would let me have your views on these points, which from information I receive from many sources are of highest consequence and urgency.

be permitted to participate in armistice with Germany. Similar note was sent to British High Commissioner.⁵⁶

Memorandum of British Embassy to Department, dated October 4,⁵⁷ declared Italian participation in any armistice with Germany unnecessary, and suggested that hostilities between Italian Government and Germany could be ended by declarations issued by either Government at instruction of the Allied Control Commission concerned. Such declarations, British Embassy memorandum suggested, could be followed, if it were desired, by signing of an Italo-German instrument exclusively confined to recording cessation of hostilities.

In reply memorandum of Department to British dated November 15 ⁵⁸ urged that in recognition of Italian contribution to war against Germany and of Italian cobelligerent position which had been recognized for more than year by United Nations, sympathetic consideration be given to Italian Government's request to present its views on German surrender arrangements. Department's memorandum suggested that although it was not deemed necessary or desirable for European Advisory Commission to invite Italian Government to submit its views for consideration, it would seem appropriate to suggest to Italian Government that it submit its views informally to representatives at Rome of Governments of United States, of United Kingdom, and of USSR who would receive them without obligation. Finally Department proposed that when Italian views had been received, they would be forwarded to United States representative on European Advisory Commission for its consideration.

In a memorandum dated April 5, 1945, British Embassy replied to Department stating that British Government, subject to certain provisos, is in position to accept suggestions put forward by Department. These provisos were: first, that Government of the USSR and French Provisional Government, as other governments represented on the European Advisory Commission, should, through diplomatic channels, be informed of the intended action before United States Government or British Government reply to Italian Government; second, that among those governments to which Government of Italy be invited to submit informally its views with regard to surrender arrangements for Germany be included the French Provisional Government.

4078. Comea 224. Under date of April 14 Norwegian Foreign Minister Lie has addressed a letter to Chairman, European Advisory Commission, raising certain questions regarding Norway's relationship to the instrument of unconditional surrender for Germany. Full text by air.62 Summary begins:

Norwegian Government requests that full text of instrument be submitted to it, instead of summary, as a basis for adequate expression of its observations thereon.

Norway feels that imposition of terms "in the interests" of the United Nations other than the principal three powers leaves doubt regarding position of other United Nations towards Germany and may be source of juridical and political conflicts. Lie feels terms should state that in principle all United Nations are entitled to same rights towards Germany. Allies who have made valuable contribution to common victory should take part in notifying terms of surrender to the Germans. In case of Norway publication of special terms to German forces in Norway should be done by authority of Norwegian as well as of the three Governments. Lie draws attention to proposal contained in annex A, attached to his letter of September 2, 1944,63 to EAC chairman, that a Norwegian plenipotentiary should take part in notifying terms of surrender to German forces in Norway. Letter goes on to propose special terms (1) to concentrate in camps German forces and civilians found in Norway, (2) to prohibit destruction of

With regard to the "additional requirements" to be imposed on Germany, Norwegian Government hopes to participate in the preparation of these joint demands and in presenting them to Germany in its name and not merely "in the interests" of the United Nations. 740.00119 Control (Germany)/4-2145

[Washington,] April 21, 1945.

You have requested the views of the Department of State on message no. 7 from Prime Minister Churchill to the President. They are as follows:

Certain implications in the message are disturbing. The zones of occupation for Germany were the subject of long and careful study and negotiation. They were definitively and formally agreed upon by the American, British and Soviet Governments just prior to the Yalta Conference. Following a deadlock lasting many months, the British obtained the northwestern zone which they were so insistent upon having. The general area of the zone allotted to Russia was not in dispute and in fact follows the general lines of a proposal informally advanced by the British as early as 1943. The fact that the Russian zone contained the greater portion of German food producing areas, and that the zone the British sought and obtained was a deficit area was well known throughout the negotiations. The formal acceptance by the three Governments of their zones of occupation was in no way made contingent upon the conclusion of satisfactory arrangements for an equitable distribution of available German food resources. A position taken by this Government (or the British Government) of refusal to withdraw to the agreed boundaries of its own zone pending either (a) some modification of agreed zone boundaries or (b) an agreement on more equitable food distribution would, in the Department's opinion, have serious consequences. The Russians would certainly consider such a bargaining position as a repudiation of our formal agreement and the resultant Soviet course of action and Soviet policy would be difficult to foresee. Furthermore, as a practical matter, any tripartite agreement for food distribution throughout Germany arrived at under such circumstances would probably prove impossible to implement in practice. The Department of State believes that every effort should be made through the Allied Control Commission to obtain a fair interzonal distribution of food produced in Germany but does not believe that the matter of retirement to our zone frontiers should be used for such bargaining purposes.

The question of the tactical deployment of American troops in Germany is largely a military question. In so far as the question has political implications, the Department believes that General Eisenhower should be given certain latitude and discretion; that where time permits, he should consult the Combined Chiefs of Staff before any major withdrawal behind our zone frontiers. In order to avoid incidents between local Russian commanders on the one hand and British and American commanders on the other, the results of which cannot be foreseen, the Department suggests that messages might be sent by the President and the Prime Minister to Marshal Stalin urging that the date and procedure for withdrawal to the respective zones of occupation should be fixed by mutual agreement between the three Governments (since the anticipated French zone of occupation will not be contiguous on the Russian zone there seems to be no need for consulting the French.)

The views of the United States Chiefs of Staff expressed in connection with C.C.S. 819/17 [805/17?] 64 were discussed informally with the Department of State and have its concurrence.

Washington, April 23, 1945—7 p. m.

3193. The following statement of views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff with reference to the British proposal for French participation in the occupation of Berlin have been concurred in by the State, War, and Navy Departments:

1. The proposal would alter the subdivisions in Berlin as designated in the present protocol by creating a 4th subdivision for the French and allocating to the French the districts of Pankow and Prenzlauerberg (formerly allocated to U.S.S.R.) and Reinickendorf (formerly allocated to U.K.). It also transfers from the U.S. subdivision to the U.S.S.R. subdivision the district of Neukollen.

⁶⁴ Not found in Department files.

- 2. Elimination of Neukollen (of a 1941–1942 estimated population of approximately 300,000 persons) from the U.S. subdivision is not expected to reduce the space or facilities allocated to the U.S. below the requirements necessary for the support of U.S. forces. The U.S. subdivision as outlined by the proposal is therefore considered acceptable from a military point of view. The informal French proposal adds to the U.S. subdivision, at the expense of the Soviets, rail and storage facilities in Treptow, which are believed essential to the Soviets and are not needed by the U.S. forces. This change would entail, also, the loss to the U.S. of desirable residential areas which the French propose to remove from the U.S. subdivision and transfer to the French subdivision. Therefore, the British proposal is considered definitely preferable and should be accepted from the U.S. point of view.
- 3. In considering the occupation of Berlin by French forces in addition to those of the other three powers, it has been assumed that the use and exchange of common facilities and utilities will be made available for the support of all of the occupational forces and that arrangements for access to installations and facilities, such as railroad stations, will be subject to adjustment among the respective subdivision commanders or the district commanders (commandants) in "Greater Berlin".
- 4. The French proposals containing suggestions for amendments to the protocol and the agreement on control machinery participation are satisfactory to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, except for the proposed designation of the French zone as "west central zone". Until the area to be allocated to the French has been specified, it would seem unwise to designate it as other than the "western zone".

The Chargé in Luxembourg (Waller) to the Secretary of State

Luxembourg, April 23, 1945. [Received April 30.]

Sir: I have the honor, at the request of the Prime Minister, ⁶⁵ in the absence of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, to enclose for the earnest consideration of our Government a note which the Grand Ducal Government of Luxembourg is transmitting in accord with the Belgian and Netherlands Governments to the American, British and Soviet Governments.

I am not translating this into the English language in view of the fact that as it is being transmitted in its present form to other Governments the Department will no doubt wish to have it in its original.

Respectfully yours,

GEORGE PLATT WALLER

⁶⁵ Pierre Dupong.

[Enclosure-Translation]

The Luxembourg Government to the American Legation in Luxembourg 66

Note

1. In deference to a desire expressed by the Luxembourg Government, the Chairman of the European Advisory Commission, ⁶⁷ in a letter of December 12, 1944, ⁶⁸ was good enough to invite a Representative of the Luxembourg Government to establish contact with a Committee appointed by the Commission. This Representative obtained from the Committee information regarding the Act which will establish the capitulation of Germany, without, however, receiving the text of that Act itself because of its chiefly military character. He was, furthermore, given the opportunity to enter upon an exchange of views concerning the matters relating thereto and offering a special interest for Luxembourg.

The Luxembourg Government deeply appreciated the decision which permitted it thus to get in touch with the European Advisory Commission and it thanks the latter for the courteous reception given by it to the Representative in question. It feels it its duty, however, to invite the attention of the Government of the United States to two important points concerning which it has not obtained all the clarification and satisfaction that it desired.

2. According to the summary of the Act of Capitulation of which the Luxembourg Government has received a copy, the Representatives of the High Commands of the United States of America, Great Britain and the Soviet Union, in formulating the terms of capitulation, will act "in the interests of the United Nations"; whereas, in the armistice with Italy, the High Command acted "on behalf of the United Nations." The Luxembourg Government is aware of the reasons which determined this change of wording; nevertheless, it deems it necessary that the significance thereof be exactly specified, so as to avoid any future ambiguity and to prevent the enemy from attempting to deduce, therefrom an erroneous interpretation favorable to his interests. It is the understanding of the Luxembourg Government that the fact of saying that the obligations to be imposed upon Germany are formulated by the High Commands acting in the interests

The Act of Capitulation, although it has an essentially military character, will constitute, perhaps for a quite a long period, the very basis of the rights which Luxembourg will be in a position to invoke with respect to Germany. It is, therefore, from this Act itself, as well as from the injunctions which, according to the provisions of Part III, will subsequently be imposed upon Germany, that Luxembourg must derive its rights. Among these injunctions, a considerable number will offer particular importance for Luxembourg. It would be inconceivable, under these conditions, that Luxembourg should remain for several years in a doubtful position and without a direct claim as regards Germany.

3. Part III of the Act of Capitulation refers to the injunctions of a political, administrative, economic, financial, etc., character which will hereafter be addressed to Germany. It is in this field that action might be taken on the suggestions formulated by the Luxembourg Government in the memorandum which it addressed on August 26, 1944 to the European Advisory Commission 69 and which refers particularly to remedial measures for spoliation carried out in an occupied country, to restitution and prestations in the economic, monetary, maritime and cultural fields, to the control of enemy property, rights and interests, and of industrial, commercial, etc., property, to the control of imports and exports, etc. The Committee 70 with which the Luxembourg Representative 71 has been in contact has not hitherto been able to furnish any clarification in this matter, the European Advisory Commission not having yet completed its examination of these points. The Luxembourg Government feels it its duty to emphasize the considerable interest which they present for it. The concrete provisions which form the subject of Part II of the Act of Capitulation have an essentially military character and therefore concern primarily the Powers which are directing military operations. On the contrary, the provisions referred to in Part III present a very special importance for the States which, like Luxembourg, have for several years been completely occupied by Germany and subjected, under cover of that occupation, to the systematic exploitation of their resources.

to i.e., the Allied Consultation Committee.

Luxembourg Foreign Minister, Joseph Bech.

The Luxembourg Government does not doubt that the Government of the United States of America will give to its Representative on the European Advisory Commission the necessary instructions in order that the exchanges of views which have taken place hitherto with the Luxembourg Representative may be continued as soon as possible with regard to the questions which have just been mentioned.

9. Replying to your No. 7 of April 18, the following is a message which I consider suitable for sending to Stalin if you agree, and if you will send to him a similar message. Please let me know what you think of this suggestion.

"The approaching end of German resistance makes it necessary that the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union decide upon an orderly procedure for the occupation by their forces of the zones which they will occupy in Germany and Austria. I therefore propose the following:

1. That we agree that in both Germany and Austria our respective troops should, as soon as the military situation permits, retire to the zone which it has been agreed they should occupy.

2. In order to avoid any confusion between our armies in the field we agree that whenever one of our commanders is ready to occupy a portion of the zone allotted to his country which is held by other Allied troops, he inform his own Government of the sector he is prepared to occupy.

3. That we agree that the Government concerned would then consult the other two Governments in order that the necessary instructions be given for the immediate evacuation of the area involved and its occupation by the troops of the country to which it is assigned.

Please let me know if this arrangement is satisfactory to you.

It is of course essential that we promptly reach an agreement on the zones which we are to occupy in Austria.

I think we should, at an early date, reach a common decision as to the time when the control machinery for both countries should be brought into operation."

[London,] 24 April 1945.

13. 1. I thank you for your number 9 in answer to my number 7. I agree with the preamble, but paragraphs 1 and 2 would simply allow the Russians to order us back to the occupational zones at any point they might decide, and not necessarily with regard to the position of the fronts as a whole. It is your troops who would suffer most by this, being pushed back about 120 miles in the centre and yielding up to the unchecked Russian advance an enormous territory. And this while all questions of our spheres in Vienna or arrangements for triple occupation of Berlin remain unsettled. I suggest the following alternative version of your proposed message to Marshal Stalin.

- "1. Our immediate task is the final defeat of the German Army. During this period the boundaries between the forces of the three Allies must be decided by Commanders in the field, and will be governed by operational considerations and requirements. It is inevitable that our armies will in this phase find themselves in occupation of territory outside the boundaries of the ultimate occupational zones.
- "2. When the fighting is finished, the next task is for the Allied Control Commissions to be set up in Berlin and Vienna, and for the forces of the Allies to be redisposed and to take over their respective occupational zones. The demarcation of the zones in Germany has already been decided upon and it is hoped that we shall very soon reach an agreement on the zones to be occupied in Austria at the forthcoming meeting proposed by you in Vienna.
- "3. The occupation of the zones would normally follow immediately upon the signature of the instrument of surrender. It may well be, however, that no such signature will be forthcoming. In this event governments may well decide to set up at once the Allied Control Commissions, and to entrust to them the task of arranging for the withdrawal of the forces to their agreed occupational zones.
- "4. In order to meet the requirements of the situation referred to paragraph 1 above, namely the emergency and temporary arrangements for the tactical zones, instructions have been sent to General Eisenhower. These are as follows:
 - "(a) To avoid confusion between the two armies and to prevent either of them from expanding into areas already occupied by the other, both sides should halt as and where they meet, subject to such adjustments to the rear or to the flanks as are required, in the opinion of the local commanders on either side, to deal with any remaining opposition.
 - (b) As to adjustments of forces after cessation of hostilities in an area, your troops should be disposed in accordance with military requirements regardless of zonal boundaries. You will, in so far as permitted by the urgency of the situation, obtain the approval of the British and American Governments prior to any major adjustment in contrast to local adjustments for operational and administrative reasons.
- "5. It is requested that you will issue similar instructions to your commanders in the field."

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, April 25, 1945—9 p. m. [Received April 25—6:55 p.m.]

Following is for the most secret information of the De-2110. partment:

General Juin 72 in the course of a conversation with a high American officer stated that when the French submitted their proposals regarding their zone in Germany, they were not aware that the United States zone extended eastward to the Soviet zone with a line of communications from the north. The French could, moreover, understand our desire to retain airfields in Hessen-Darmstadt. According to the indication given by Juin, the French would be willing now to withdraw their proposal to include in the French zone of occupation Hessen-Nassau, Oberhessen and Hessen-Darmstadt east of the Rhine. In Juin's opinion, the French would be content in the south with Baden, but in the Wiesbaden area, they would require a bridgehead across the Rhine.

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State has carefully considered the memorandum of the British Embassy of April 5, 1945, and is pleased to note that, subject to certain provisos, the British Government is in a position to accept the suggestions put forward in the memorandum of the Department of November 15, 1944.72a The Government of the United States accepts the provisos suggested by the British Government.

In accordance with the suggestion in the memorandum of the British Embassv, the Ambassadors of the United States at Moscow and at Paris are being instructed to concert with their respective British colleagues to inform the governments to which they are accredited of the intentions of the United States and British Governments regarding the Italian Government and the surrender arrangements for Germany.73

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

Paris, April 25, 1945.

DEAR Doc: I am sure that the Department shares to a degree at least the apprehension of some of us over here regarding Soviet intentions in respect of the administration of Germany after occupation. The conviction seems to be growing on this side that they want to exclude other Allied representatives from the Soviet zone of occupation as completely as possible. It may be difficult, as a result, to protect whatever American citizens and property there may be in that zone, much less to follow developments in the zone or to ensure that Control Council policies are actually carried out. I can imagine how carefully you are all following the Soviet action in transferring administrative power over German territory to both the Provisional Polish Government 74 and to the Free Germany Movement.75

As matters now rest with the US Group CC which for months has been urging to the extent of its ability contact with Russian representatives, we have had thus far no assistance from the Soviet Union and no indication of a real intention on their part to operate as an effective element of the Control Council. On the other hand, the data which the Department sends to us in the Information Series regarding what is happening in Rumania, Bulgaria 76 and elsewhere is not encouraging.

In a recent conversation with Bogomolov 77 it was obvious that while he might possess but little information regarding Russian operations in Eastern occupied Germany, it was clear that they are operating on a unilateral basis.

The occupation by our forces of a considerable portion of the Soviet zone gives us an improved bargaining position. However, it is the intention of our military authorities to evacuate the Russian zone as soon as deployment becomes militarily practicable. I gather that a British view presented to General Eisenhower was to the effect that we should not be in a hurry to withdraw our troops. I believe that General Eisenhower's tendency is to avoid any conflict with the Russian forces and to disapprove the British suggestion for practical reasons relating to occupational burdens, the vast problem connected with the care of displaced persons, military governments, etc.

I hope that we may have some agreeable surprises when we actually come to grips with the problem in Germany and are placed in contact with our Russian opposite numbers. I am confident that some of the doubt and misunderstanding may be cleared up if nothing happens to interfere with direct contact.

As you know, one of the burning issues is the care of Russian displaced persons 78 of whom possibly one or two millions will fall into our hands. I find that our SHAEF officers have cooperated loyally with the Soviet representatives engaged in displaced persons duty. Of 437 repatriation officers now operating out of SHAEF, 192 are Soviet. Recently the Soviet Government stated it would soon make available an additional 300. drawn principally from liberated citizens. The Soviet Military Mission under General Dragun, accredited to the French Government, receives full and effective cooperation from SHAEF authorities. This cooperation has at times been attended by difficulties resulting from unauthorized visits by Soviet officers to military zones, exhortation to Soviet displaced persons not to obey any authority but Soviet, etc. but lately this situation has vastly improved.

Yours ever, Bob

13. Referring to your Number 13, it appears to me, particularly in view of the fact that the Armies now in the Soviet zone are American, that any agreement entered into regarding withdrawal to the designated post hostility zones of occupation in Germany and Austria should be tripartite.

I therefore suggest for your consideration that you address the following message to Marshal Stalin and to me:

"1. The Anglo-American armies will soon make contact in Germany with Soviet forces, and the approaching end of German resistance makes it necessary that the United States, Great Britain, and

- 4. It appears now that no signed instrument of surrender will be forthcoming. In this event governments should decide to set up at once the Allied Control Commissions, and to entrust to them the task of making detailed arrangements for the withdrawal of the forces to their agreed occupational zones.
- 5. In order to meet the requirements of the situation referred to in paragraph 2 above, namely the emergency and temporary arrangements for the tactical zones, instructions have been sent to General Eisenhower. These are as follows:
 - (a) To avoid confusion between the two armies and to prevent either of them from expanding into areas already occupied by the other, both sides should halt as and where they meet, subject to such adjustments to the rear or to the flanks as are required, in the opinion of the local commanders on either side, to deal with any remaining opposition.

- 6. It is requested that you will issue similar instructions to your commanders in the field."

Upon the receipt of the above message from you, I will at once inform Marshal Stalin that I am in full agreement therewith.⁷⁹

To In his telegram 18, April 27, to President Truman, Prime Minister Churchill stated that he had addressed to Marshal Stalin the message quoted above. Churchill added the following comment: "I think Stalin is pleased at our having informed him in such quick unity of our spontaneous view of the Himmler-Bernadotte contacts. Even if there is a short delay or setback, all our forces will be in a much more favourable position. I thank you so much for promoting the easy way in which we are handling this three-cornered business." (Department of Defense Files)

1740. Re Embs 2110, April 25, 9 p. m. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have proposed that initially this Government offer to release Baden to the French zone of occupation. They see no overriding military objectives [objections?], however, to giving to the French, with adequate safeguards of transit rights, Württemberg and Sigmaringen.

The Department wishes you informally to sound out the French immediately on whether Baden would suffice. If, as appears probable, the French Government would not be satisfied with Baden alone, you may indicate that Winant will be authorized to discuss with Massigli the inclusion of Württemberg and Sigmaringen in the French zone. Please inform Winant immediately (repeating to Department) of the result of your inquiry so that the negotiations in the EAC on the French zone may be concluded as soon as possible.

Washington, April 28, 1945—3 p.m.

3332. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have submitted their views with respect to the French zone of occupation in Germany, which are being transmitted by air mail today. The following is an excerpt respecting the territory to be released from the United States zone to the French:

"There are no overriding military objections to giving to the French, with proper safeguards with regard to transit rights, the State of Baden, the State of Württemberg and the Province of Sigmaringen although it is militarily desirable to retain Württemberg and Sigmaringen since U.S. activities may, at a later date, be centered in the Munich area. However, the French may be satisfied with receiving the State of Baden only and it is recommended that the release of that area alone be proposed initially to the French. Regardless of whether or not the State of Württemberg and the Province of Sigmaringen, in addition to the State of Baden, are given to the French, it will be necessary to have a clear agreement with the French guaranteeing rights of passage through any part of the French zone lying contiguous to and west of the U.S. zone, particularly exclusive rights to the bridges which the American forces have built over the Rhine and the communication facilities which the American forces have built in Germany."

The Department is instructing Caffery to sound out the French Government immediately as to whether the cession of Baden alone would be satisfactory and to inform you at once of the result of his inquiry. It is desired that you await Caffery's report before talking with Massigli. You should then offer Massigli such of the area referred to by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as Caffery indicates will be acceptable to the French without further reference to the Department.

Memorandum by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Acting Secretary of State

Washington, April 30, 1945.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee has considered the proposals of the French Government for a French zone of occupation of Germany, together with French suggestions for participation in the occupation of Austria as set forth in your identical letters to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy of March 3, 1945.*5 The British proposal on transfer to the French of a part of the British zone, as described in Ambassador Winant's cable to the Department of State of March 23, 1945 (Comea 197) has also been considered. These matters have been studied in collaboration with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the following comments and conclusions are concurred in by

- 1. While the desirability to the French of having the French zone adjacent to the French border is recognized, it is believed that the present proposal is subject to grave military objections, particularly from a logistical point of view, and it is considered that acceptance of the proposal in its present form would be highly prejudicial to the military support of the United States forces of occupation in Germany and Austria.
- 2. No objection is perceived to that portion of the French proposal which requests the allocation of a zone west of the Rhine but it is noted that this area is under the present protocol allocated to the British, and therefore the French request in that particular is more properly addressed to the British Government rather than the United States. In this connection it is noted that the French proposal does not define the northern boundary of the French zone west of the Rhine. Before any agreement is reached this boundary should be clearly delineated. Any extension of the French zone north of the northern boundaries of the Bezirke of Cologne and Aachen would intercept the flow of communication from the lowland ports to both the United States and British zones and would not be acceptable. The city of Cologne comprises an area on each bank of the Rhine; the portion on the east bank includes railroad facilities which are vital to both the United States and British lines of rail communications along the east bank of the Rhine. While the terms of the French proposals indicate that only that part of the city of Cologne which lies on the west bank of the Rhine is intended for inclusion in the French zone, this should be clarified and definitely limited to such portions of the city as lie on the west bank of the Rhine. Otherwise, a vital link in United States and British rail communication along the east bank of the Rhine will be intercepted.
- 3. As for the British proposal to include the Regierungsbezirk of Koblenz within the French zone, it is the view of the U.S. that the portion of this area which lies east of the Rhine should not be allocated to the French as the same considerations discussed with respect to Cologne apply with even greater force to the Koblenz area. In addition, the city of Koblenz is a transfer point between the British and the U.S. To put it under French control would materially increase the difficulties of an already complicated operational situation to the extent that it would probably become unworkable.

- 4. Initially the United States occupational forces will be supplied over lines established during the entry into Germany which will be supplemented by lines from the lowland ports (Antwerp and Rotterdam). After the ports of Bremen and Bremerhaven become operative, the main supplies for the United States forces will be routed from Bremen and Bremerhaven through the British zones via Kassel and thence to various distribution centers in the United States zone in Germany from which supplies will be distributed to troops stationed throughout Germany and Austria. Distribution of civil relief will follow the same channels. Kassel and Frankfurt am Main are key focal points in this distribution net. For the successful support of the United States forces of occupation, it is essential that these key cities remain in the United States zone since continued availability of these channels of supply is essential.
- 5. The French proposal for a zone in Germany east of the Rhine would allocate to the French the German provinces of Baden, Hessen and Hessen-Nassau (described in the proposal as Baden, Hessen, Hessen-Kassel and Hessen-Darmstadt) and would place under French and not United States control the key focal cities of Kassel and Frankfurt am Main, and the communications radiating therefrom to Württemberg and Bavaria.
- 6. The French proposal, incorporating as it does the area through which the Rhine flows, would deny the United States forces access to this river. Possession of ports of the Rhine system is essential to the use of the river. Coal and other bulk commodities which must be exchanged between the various areas are ordinarily transported by the Rhine river system. In view of the disrupted railway system, use of the Rhine system will be essential for support of United States occupational forces and maintenance of civilian economy in the southwestern zone.
- 7. The French proposal is in accord with the Yalta protocol whereby it was agreed that a zone of occupation should be allocated to France and that it would be formed out of the British and American zones. The conclusions reached with respect to the French proposal are briefly as follows:
- a. Hessen and Hessen-Nassau are essential to U.S. control of the American zone for the support of its occupational forces and contain the key focal cities of Kassel and Frankfurt am Main. For logistical reasons it is imperative that there be as little interference as possible with the lines of communication between the U.S. zone and its base ports of Bremen-Bremerhaven. The necessity of dealing with the forces of two nations with different organizational structures and different languages in order to support the U.S. forces would create an extremely difficult logistical situation. If the principal administrative district for the U.S. zone were also to be in the control of the force of another country the situation would probably become unworkable.

- b. The proposal to include Baden in the French zone presents problems which must be examined with respect to the four smaller geographical areas (Landeskommissarbezirke) into which Baden is divided:
 - (1) Konstanz and Freiburg can be released from the U.S. zone.(2) Karlsruhe would not present any very serious problem were it to be included in the French zone.

- (3) Mannheim intercepts the communications between Frankfurt am Main and Stuttgart both of which are important U.S. administrative and distribution points and contains installations essential to the U.S. zone. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are convinced that for logistical reasons the occupation of this area by the French could take place only on the condition that unequivocal rights of through passage be granted the U.S. forces to the extent the commander of the U.S. forces deems necessary. If such arrangements can be effected there is no serious objection to inclusion of this area in the French zone.
- c. The basic issue, in the opinion of the Department of State, is to carry out the commitment made at the Crimea Conference and to protect the long-range political interests of this government as well as the more immediate military needs.
- 8. There are no overriding military objections to giving to the French, with proper safeguards with regard to transit rights, the State of Baden, the State of Württemberg and the Province of Sigmaringen although it is militarily desirable to retain Württemberg and Sigmaringen since U.S. activities may, at a later date, be centered in the Munich area. However, the French may be satisfied with receiving the State of Baden only and it is recommended that the release of that area alone be proposed initially to the French. Regardless of whether or not the State of Württemberg and the Province of Sigmaringen, in addition to the State of Baden, are given to the French, it will be necessary to have a clear agreement with the French guaranteeing rights of passage through any part of the French zone lying contiguous to and west of the U.S. zone, particularly exclusive rights to the bridges which the American forces have built over the Rhine and the communication facilities which the American forces have built in Germany.
- 9. General Eisenhower has stated that the City of Frankfurt is the only location he has found in the U.S. zone that fills the requirements as the future site for his headquarters. For this reason arrangements should be made for the assurance that Frankfurt and reasonable surrounding territory will remain in the U.S. zone.

- 10. No military necessity or advantage is perceived in enlarging the "Greater Berlin" zone to include Potsdam but it is noted that this is a matter primarily of concern to the U.S.S.R. and requires consideration of all powers concerned.
- 11. The French suggestion for a mixed rather than a zonal occupation of Austria is not looked upon with favor. Mixed occupation is difficult of administration especially where differences of languages and legal concepts are involved. With occupation forces of different nationalities in the same area, an unfriendly or uncooperative population is in an ideal position to play one nationality off against the other and will be quick to take advantage of the situation. This suggestion would require submission to and acceptance by both the British and U.S.S.R. as well and could not be agreed to by the United States alone. Furthermore, it would require reopening and revising the entire theory of occupation as developed to date under the existing protocols. On the other hand no military objection is perceived to a French zone of occupation of Vorarlberg and Tirol in Austria.
- 12. Any occupation of Germany or Austria by the French should be subject to all of the general conditions to which the United States, United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. have already subscribed.

Dear Doc: I enclose a copy of a memorandum prepared on April 29 by G-4 SHAEF ss regarding the technical aspects of a French occupational zone on the right bank of the Rhine which would be taken out of the zone heretofore allocated to the United States.

I think that the idea of having Jeff Caffery conduct the negotiations with the French is a good one. After he received the telegram yesterday we met with him, including General Meyer representing Mr. Winant and Colonel Whipple representing G-4 SHAEF, to discuss the technical aspects. SHAEF urges that the French be offered only the two southern provinces of Baden, namely Freiburg and Konstanz. If it seems necessary to give the French additional territory, they could be offered a small bridgehead east of Koblenz which would include the Kreise of Unterwesterwald. Unterlahn, and Sankt Goarshausen. If it is necessary to go further, they could be offered a province in Baden, namely Karlsruhe. However it is really desirable for our occupational forces to have available the port, communications, and transport facilities offered by the Bezirk of Karlsruhe. A study of this matter is enclosed. I think a careful reading of it will prove the desire of our SHAEF authorities to retain the two northern provinces of Baden, namely Karlsruhe and Mannheim, is founded on more than a whim and has back of it very practical considerations. Personally I support the idea fully. I feel that if the French are going to receive part of the Rhineland, the Saar, the Palatinate, and part of Baden they are getting about as much as they can handle and certainly every bit as much as they are entitled to.

Jeff Caffery made the point that we will be dependent on the French for transit facilities for our forces for a good many months to come and that it is necessary to be nice to them. We will be dependent on French facilities and I think we are being nice to them. In fact, we are giving them so much now and so much more than anybody else that I feel the French should be glad to come along with us on the present SHAEF proposal which is eminently fair. The Soviets of course give them nothing. The British have been able to make a nice gesture giving them part of the Rhineland, the Saar, and the Palatinate, which it is now clear the British asked EAC for originally for that very purpose as it is apparent that they never intended to keep it themselves.

All the best to you.

Yours ever,

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Chief of Staff, Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force (Smith), to Brigadier General Vincent Meyer, Military Adviser to the United States Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Winant)

APRIL 1945.

- 1. In accordance with your verbal request, a study has been made of the implications of certain French proposals for a zone of occupation, with particular reference to US military requirements.
- 2. It is assumed that the French proposal, so far as the transfer of Hessen Nassau, Ober Hessen and Hessen Darmstadt to France is concerned, will be disapproved, and that these States will remain part of the US Zone of Occupation. There remains then only the State of Baden and portions thereof to be considered, together with the feasibility of acceding to the French request for a bridgehead east of the Rhine.

- 3. Considerations pertaining to the release of each of these three areas are summarized in Annexes A and B attached.89
- 4. It is considered desirable that the French be given only the southern part of Baden (Bezirke of Konstanz and Freiburg, see attached map 90). As a final compromise the Bezirke of Karlsruhe might be added; but your view that the retention of Mannheim Bezirke in the US Zone is essential is strongly supported.
- 5. If for political reasons, it is necessary to give the French a bridgehead on the east bank of the Rhine, the area comprising the Kreise of Unterwesterwald, Unterlahn and Sankt Goarshausen (see map attached 90) east of Koblenz in the State of Hessen Nassau is considered least objectionable. To accept the JCS recommendation (cable W-72518 90) that the matter be decided between US and French Commanders is not considered practicable.
- 6. In any event, it is essential that a clear agreement be made with the French guaranteeing US right of passage through any part of the French zone lying contiguous to the US Zone. This is vital, not only prior to the transfer of the US line of communication to Bremen, but also thereafter to carry the great load of traffic incident to redeployment to the French ports. We must also retain the exclusive rights to bridges we have constructed over the Rhine and communications we have built in Germany.

4390. Comea 226. In connection with the UK draft Allied declaration regarding the defeat of Germany, transmitted in my despatch No. 22112 of April 2,91 Strang has informed Mosely informally of an important addition which he intends to present in the European Advisory Commission. In the fourth paragraph of the preamble the UK Delegation will propose that the words "acting by authority of their respective governments and in the interests of the United Nations" be replaced by the words "acting by authority of their respective governments and others of the United Nations which have actively participated in the defeat of Germany and in the interests of all the United Nations".

Strang stated that he is under direct instruction of his Government to urge this addition and that this decision was taken under strong Canadian pressure. The Canadian Government, he said, intends to issue a statement of protest if the instrument or proclamation of surrender is issued in its present language, which it feels, gives inadequate recognition to the contribution made by United Nations other than the four major powers to Germany's defeat.

When questioned by Mosely, Strang stated that this additional language would require submitting the actual text of the surrender instrument to the Governments of the European United Nations, if [of?] the Dominions and Brazil and receiving from them authorization to sign the instrument on their behalf. He was uncertain whether the Government of India would be similarly consulted. Asked whether this amendment meant that the "additional requirements" foreseen in article 12 (b) of the surrender instrument would have to be similarly approved by all governments authorizing signature of the instrument "on their behalf", Strang stated that this would presumably be the case.

In view of Department's 2233, March 23, 11 a.m., reporting the representations made by the Canadian Ambassador to the Department, I shall withhold comment on this proposal when it is presented in the European Advisory Commission. The military developments may not permit consideration of this UK amendment; the latter reopens a question which was argued at great length during the negotiation of the surrender instrument and was definitely decided in favor of the present wording.

London, May 1, 1945—midnight. [Received 11:14 p. m.]

4419. Comea 227. At tonight's meeting of the European Advisory Commission Strang again made a strong plea for showing the text of the German unconditional surrender instrument to the European Allied Governments and securing their approval of the instrument prior to presenting it to the Germans. Strang feels that the 4 Allies will be in a stronger position if such approval is received. Massigli supported the British proposal. Gousev promised to raise the question again with his Government. In accordance with Department's 244 January 11, midnight I reserved my position.

Further discussion of the question of consultation followed later when Strang formally introduced his proposed amendment to the fourth paragraph of the United Kingdom draft proclamation on German surrender, transmitted in my 4390, May 1, noon. Asked by Gousev what Allied Governments would be consulted, Strang listed (1) European Allies with whose representatives the EAC Consultation Committee has been meeting, thus avoiding the Poles who were excluded from such consultation at Gousev's request; (2) British Dominions and India, (3) "maybe" Brazil.

To my question as to whether the "active" Allies would also sign the surrender proclamation, Strang answered in negative. He felt, however, that it would be important for public opinion in such countries as Canada for their Governments to be able to say afterwards that they had been consulted on surrender terms and had approved. To my further question regarding position of the 4 governments if any Allied Government, when consulted, refused to approve the instrument, Strang felt sure that their approval would be forthcoming since they had already been consulted on basis of a summary of the instrument.

Asked by Gousev whether a similar amendment would be required in the surrender instrument Strang declined to commit himself, but expressed view that instrument would be "greatly improved" by such an addition. It is apparent that the British are very uneasy over the bad effect among the Dominions and the western European Allies of neglecting to secure their approval of the surrender instrument. On the other hand, the broad language of Strang's amendment to the draft proclamation would open the way for the "active Allies" to demand a direct voice in all future terms and requirements to be imposed on Germany.

4420. Comea 228. At tonight's meeting of the EAC it was unanimously agreed in principle to prepare a draft proclamation which could be issued in place of the surrender instrument in case there should be no central power or authority in Germany capable of signing the surrender. It was unanimously reaffirmed that the unconditional surrender instrument remains in force as among the 4 powers.

Strang advanced his draft proclamation, EAC 45/28 transmitted in my despatch No. 22112 of April 2, together with his EAC 45/42 of April 20 94 proposing an addition regarding apprehension of war criminals. He also proposed addition of words "and have unconditionally surrendered" at end of first sentence of United Kingdom draft preamble to the proclamation. He presented formally an amendment, reported in my 4390, May 1, noon to provide for "active" Allies to authorize signature of the proclamation by the 4 powers. Discussion of latter amendment reported in my 4419, May 1, midnight. In the discussion I stressed the urgency of having such a proclamation ready in case there were no German signature, and the desirability of making the substitute proclamation as nearly as possible like the already approved surrender instrument.

At the May 3 meeting the Commission plans to consider the draft proclamation and the United States general directive, for whose early consideration I have been pressing on every occasion.

- 1. The basic consideration in the EAC negotiations should be to have the projected proclamation ready to be issued as quickly as SCAEF and the Soviet High Command consider it appropriate;
- 2. We approve showing the texts of the surrender instrument and of the proclamation based on it to the Governments of the United Nations contributing military forces to the defeat of Germany and we agree to inviting their adherence. We would not, however, at this late hour be willing to reopen consideration of the text of the surrender instrument or to delay agreement in the EAC on the text of the proclamation by negotiations with the United Nations not directly represented there.
- 3. We see no objection to making a more specific acknowledgment in the proclamation of the contributions of the United Nations other than the four major powers (refer Department's 2233, March 23, 11 a.m.). We feel, however, that a modification of proposed text of the proclamation which would imply the necessity for the concurrence of United Nations not represented on the Control Council in the "additional requirements" envisaged in article 12 (b) would add a most serious complexity to the work of the Control Council and of the zone commanders. We are persuaded that the practical necessities of military government preclude the formal authorization by these other United Nations of the various measures to be taken in Germany by the four Occupying Powers.
- 4. The phraseology proposed by the UK Delegation for insertion in the fourth paragraph of the British draft proclamation is, therefore, undesirable from our point of view.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Joint Chiefs of Staff concur in the recommendation of General Eisenhower in the attached copy of his cable on the subject of the French zone in Germany and recommend that it be used as a basis for negotiation in the European Advisory Commission. The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that the bridgehead of the Rhine east of Koblenz in the State of Hessen-Nassau comprising Unterwester Waldkreis, Unterlahn Kreis and Sankt Goarshausen Kreis should be given to the French if they ask for it.

This decision supersedes the remarks in the last two sentences of paragraph 7 b (3) and paragraph 8 of the letter dispatched to the Secretary of State by the Secretaries of War and the Navy on 1 May 1945 on this matter.3

ruhe-Stuttgart and Ulm as defined by the following Kreis boundaries: Leonberg, Boblingen, Nurtigen, Goppingen, Ulm, and that portion of Munsingen northeast of Autobahn, inclusive to United States. Also the Kreis of Lindau can be conceded to the French as a corridor to the French Austrian zone.

- 3. In the state of Baden it is most desirable that we retain the Bezirke of Mannheim and Karlsruhe for control of railways, through road traffic via the Autobahn, oil fields north of city of Karlsruhe, port and signal installations. Only as a last resort should the Bezirk of Karlsruhe be released, and under no circumstances can we relinquish the Bezirk of Mannheim.
- 4. If a bridgehead east of the Rhine must be granted I favor the area east of Koblenz in the state of Hessen Nassau, comprising Unterwester Waldkries, Unterlahn Kreis, Sankt Goarshausen Kreis. Can not agree to any bridgehead in the vicinity of Wiesbaden or Mainz.
- 5. In order that there be no misunderstanding request that amended view as expressed herein be transmitted as ultimate instructions to Ambassador Caffery through State Department channels.

SUMMARY OF THE AGREEMENTS ON MACHINERY OF CONTROL IN GERMANY AND ZONES OF OCCUPATION

The Committee agreed to accept as a basis for discussion the draft summary of the Agreement on Control Machinery prepared by Lord

 $^{^6}$ Copy transmitted to the Department by the Ambassador in the United Kingdom in his despatch 22932, May 7; received May 14.

Hood on 10th March [P26/33/45] ^{5a} and the redraft of the summary of the Protocol on the Occupation of Germany circulated on 17th April [P9/38/45].⁶

1. Occupation of Germany

The Committee approved with a number of drafting amendments a "draft summary of the Agreement between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on the occupation of Germany" and decided to submit it in the form attached [Annex I] to the European Advisory Commission.

2. Control Machinery in Germany

The Committee approved the text of a "draft summary of the Agreement between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on Control Machinery in Germany" and decided to submit it in the form attached [Annex II] to the European Advisory Commission.

In discussion, the U.S. Delegation proposed as an alternative to new paragraph 4 the following text:—

"The Co-ordinating Committee, acting on behalf of the Control Council and through the Control Staff, will carry out the decisions of the Control Council and exercise day to day supervision and control of the activities of the German central administrative bodies and institutions.

"The Control Staff will exercise control over the corresponding German ministries and German central institutions, and advise the Control Council and the Co-ordinating Committee."

Brigadier French suggested that if the duties of the Co-ordinating Committee were to be more fully defined, the text of Article 5 of the Agreement of 14th November, 1944, should be incorporated. Mr. Saksin thought that it would be better to omit this paragraph altogether. The Committee agreed to retain the original draft of new paragraph 4 with the substitution of "German central organs" for "the German Central Administration".

The Chairman pointed out that paragraph 8 of the original draft included matter which did not appear in the Agreement of 14th November, 1944, but was taken from the covering report. He suggested that this should be omitted. Lord Hood said that he would agree to omit this, but would wish to reserve the right to raise orally the question of the issue of a public statement at the time of the signature of the Instrument of Surrender regarding the intention of the Draft Summary of the Agreement Between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on the Occupation of Germany ⁷.

1. Germany, within her frontiers as they were on 31st December, 1937, will, for the purposes of occupation, be divided into four zones, one to be allotted to each Power as follows:—

an eastern zone to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; a north-western zone to the United Kingdom; a south-western zone to the United States of America; a western zone to France.

The occupying forces in each zone will be under a Commander-in-Chief designated by the responsible Power. Each of the four Powers may, at its discretion, include among the forces assigned to occupation duties under the command of its Commander-in-Chief, auxiliary contingents from the forces of any other Allied Power which has actively participated in military operations against Germany.

2. The area of "Greater Berlin" will be occupied by forces of each of the four Powers. An Inter-Allied Governing Authority (in Russian, Komendatura) consisting of four Commandants, appointed by their respective Commanders-in-Chief, will be established to direct jointly its administration.

own zone of occupation, and also jointly, in matters affecting Germany as a whole. The four Commanders-in-Chief will together constitute the Control Council.

- 2. The Control Council, whose decisions shall be unanimous, will ensure appropriate uniformity of action by the Commanders-in-Chief in their respective zones of occupation and will reach agreed decisions on the chief questions affecting Germany as a whole.
- 3. Under the Control Council, there will be a permanent Co-ordinating Committee composed of one representative of each of the four Commanders-in-Chief and a Control Staff organised in the following Divisions (which are subject to adjustment in the light of experience):

Military; Naval; Air; Transport; Political; Economic; Finance; Reparation, Deliveries and Restitution; Internal Affairs and Communications; Legal; Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons; Man-power.

There will be four heads of each Division, one designated by each Power. The staffs of the Divisions may include civilian as well as military personnel, and may also in special cases include nationals of other United Nations appointed in a personal capacity.

- 4. The functions of the Co-ordinating Committee and of the Control Staff will be to advise the Control Council, to carry out the Council's decisions and to transmit them to German central organs, and to supervise and control the day-to-day activities of the latter.
- 5. Liaison with the other United Nations Governments chiefly interested will be established through the appointment by such Governments of military missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council. These missions will have access through the appropriate channels to the organs of control.
- 6. United Nations organisations will, if admitted by the Control Council to operate in Germany, be subordinate to the Allied control machinery and answerable to it.
- 7. The administration of the "Greater Berlin" area will be directed by an Inter-Allied Governing Authority, which will operate under the general direction of the Control Council, and will consist of four Commandants, each of whom will serve in rotation as Chief Commandant. They will be assisted by a technical staff which will supervise and control the activities of the local German organs.
- 8. The arrangements outlined above will operate during the period of occupation immediately following German surrender, when Germany is carrying out the basic requirements of unconditional surrender. Arrangements for the subsequent period will be the subject of a separate agreement.

2342. Department's 179 [1799], May 1.8 Having in mind the military considerations set out by General Eisenhower and Bedell Smith, and after due consideration I agree that we offer the French the area as set out in General Eisenhower's telegram 9 sent yesterday afternoon entitled "subject is French zone in Germany, personal for General Marshall," under the conditions set out in that telegram.

I trust that the bridgehead mentioned east of Koblenz in the State of Hessen Nassau will be included.

I note that the Bezirk of Karlsruhe should be released to the French only as a last resort.

Memorandum of a Trans-Atlantic Telephone Conversation Between the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant), in London, and the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews), in Washington May 4, 1945 10

[Extracts]

Mr. Winant: I wanted to talk to you about the Surrender Instrument. I wanted to ask you if copies had been sent through the Combined Chiefs of Staff to SHAEF?

Mr. Matthews: Copies of the Surrender Instrument?

MR. WINANT: Yes. My understanding is that the only copies that they have we forwarded to them from the European Advisory Commission. I wanted to ask you what had been done about the changes in the Instrument? When we added France as a fourth Power?

M. We have not received your copies yet of the original, which you said you have forwarded.

W. Months ago we sent you the original Instrument. Within the last few days we have sent you the amendments to the Instrument which add France as a fourth Power.

⁸ See footnote 1, p. 260.

⁹ Ante, p. 261.

¹⁰ Transmitted to the Department in despatch 25876, October 3, 1945, from London, not printed. For another extract from the record of this conversation, dealing with Austrian matters, see p. 115.

- M. Yes. Well, it's the amendments which we have not yet received, as far as the original copies are concerned.
- W. I understand. This document with the amendments was worked out in the European Advisory Commission and then forwarded to our respective Governments for acceptance and action.
- M. Yes. The recent amendments have not been received in the original. They will be forwarded as soon as they are received.
- W. I wondered if the original document itself had ever been forwarded to SHAEF by you?
- M. No, not the original. I think copies were forwarded to the JCS.
- W. I see. I'm not certain that the Combined Chiefs of Staff have ever forwarded the original document to SHAEF.
- M. I will be glad to look into this and see whether they have or not.
- W. That document should be forwarded by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, with the amendments, to SHAEF.
- M. Yes. I'll be very glad to look into that, and see if they have been forwarded by the CCS to SHAEF.
 - W. That's right. I understand that that has not been done.
- M. Of course the actual original, as a government agreement, would be retained in the Department's archives, but copies of it should have been forwarded by CCS.
- W. Yes, I think that should have been done. It may have been done, but I understand it has not been done.
 - M. I will see if we can get them to send them right away.
- W. Then the amendment to the Instrument by the addition of the word "dismemberment" was accomplished at Yalta and was entirely outside of the jurisdiction of the European Advisory Commission. So far as I know the Russians have never agreed to notify the French.
 - M. Of the change?
- W. Yes. I understand that the French were informed through Caffery, by us in Paris.
- M. The Russians have never agreed in the EAC to inform the French?
- W. Well, they didn't agree in that special committee. They didn't agree in the Dismemberment Committee, where I raised the point. That is the committee which is limited to Eden, Gousev and myself.
- M. But I thought the amendment to the Surrender Instrument, which contained that word "dismemberment" had been approved by the EAC with its four members.
- W. I couldn't get that, Doc. I'd like to restate what I was trying to say to you. I raised the point of informing the French in the special Committee on Dismemberment on April 12. That committee is composed of Eden, Gousev and myself. Each of us agreed to take the matter under consideration, but so far as I know, the Russians have never agreed to notify the French.

- M. That is, they have never agreed to notify the French of the addition of the word "dismemberment"?
 - W. That's right.
- M. But I thought that the EAC, which now has four members, had approved the addition of the word 'dismemberment' in the Surrender Instrument that you have forwarded to us.
- W. No, it does not. The only addition is to include the French as the fourth Power.
 - M. I see. It does not include the word "dismemberment"?
- W. It does not include the word "dismemberment". And I thought that there should be a clear understanding on that also. We are now working on the proclamation, which might be used as a substitute for the Surrender Instrument. I believe it should be understood that the Surrender Instrument gives us a firmer legal base than the proclamation. I think that should be understood. If we use the proclamation with the preamble on which we have gotten agreement, I do not think you need to include the word "dismemberment".
 - M. Is that acceptable to the Russians?
- W. Because we reserve the right to change the status or boundaries in the preamble. It might be, if you wanted to use the Surrender Instrument, that you would want it immediately communicated to SHAEF. We have copies of it ready here, with the inclusion of the French as a fourth Power, and copies with and without the word "dismemberment". We have, also, a plane here which could get it to SHAEF within a very short time.
- M. As I understand from what you say, SHAEF has already received copies from you, but not from the CCS?
- W. Yes, sir. That's copies of the original document which we have worked out and on which there was governmental agreement some months ago. But they have received nothing, as I understand it, since, from the Governments. And they have received nothing from us since the amendment.
- M. Then I should think it would be a wise precaution for you to send it to SHAEF immediately.
- W. I want to be sure that the Government at home and the other Governments have approved of the inclusion of France as a fourth Power and, also, what the attitude of the Governments is in relation to the inclusion of the word "dismemberment". Because, you see, the European Advisory Commission is simply advisory. And I would like to get authority before I take action.

- M. Well, I can tell you that the three Governments definitely agreed at Yalta to the inclusion of France as a fourth Power and to the use of the word "dismemberment".
- W. May I talk to the Russians about informing the French of that fact and the inclusion of the word "dismemberment"?
 - M. Yes.
- W. I think I should take that up with Gousev before we take action. Would you agree to that?
 - M. Yes, we would agree.
- W. The British would prefer today the use of—in place of the word "dismemberment"—the phrase "if necessary, dismemberment".
- M. Well, that was not the form in which it was agreed at Yalta. And I think the Russians might object to that.
 - W. I understand.
 - M. I think we had better stick by what we agreed there.
- W. I wonder if you have seen my message to you, 3278 of March 29? It states the position of the Committee on Dismemberment. And the statement within that cable was agreed upon. It shows the Soviet interpretation in relation to dismemberment as stated by Gousev.
- M. Yes. The background of the inclusion of "dismemberment" was to show the Germans we would have the right in dealing with the Germans to dismember if we wish to.
- W. I think it is very important because in that message Gousev states to Eden that the Soviet Government understand the decision of the Crimea Conference, regarding the dismemberment of Germany, not as an obligatory plan for the dismemberment of Germany, but as a possibility for exerting pressure on Germany with the object of rendering her harmless in the event of other means proving inadequate. If you would simply include the word "dismemberment" in the particular article where it was to be placed, it is in a sense mandatory.
 - M. That was not the intention.
- W. And its only possible qualification is in the sentence that follows. That reads, "as they deem requisite for future peace and security".
 - M. That is part of the same sentence as I recall it.
- W. That is right. I'd just like you to read that over in order to get a fresh judgment on it, in relation to the paragraph in the letter that Gousev wrote to Eden, which I have just quoted to you. I thought you might want to call up Mr. Stettinius and perhaps have him discuss the problem with Eden and Molotov.
- M. Well, I can give you the background. That word was put in there, not as mandatory on the four Governments, but mandatory upon the Germans if the four Governments decided to dismember. And it was put in there by formal agreement of the three Governments. I don't think we can go back and change that.

- W. I understand. Now the question is, whether we have to include it in the proclamation. I doubt if we do.
 - M. I don't think that is necessary, unless the Russians insist on it.
 - W. So far there has been no insistence and no mention of it.
 - M. Then I would not mention it. I think that's good enough.
- W. All right, Doc. 11 I wanted to talk to you about one other thing. I got a message 12 saying you'd like to publish summary of the control machinery in Germany.
 - M. That's the War Department that wants to publish it.
- Yes. We have just worked out a summary to be given to the other Allied governments. And Gousev has told us that his government has not yet given him freedom of action to permit that. And the rest of us feel that we should not publish a summary until we have informed, until we have given some similar document to the other Allied governments.
- M. I think that is quite proper. We consulted you because the War Department felt that public opinion is becoming so strong to know what plans are with regard to Germany. And it would be advisable over here to publish something. We took the position that nothing should be published without consultation with the other parties. That is why we sent you the telegram.
- W. The British, the French and ourselves are in agreement on that. Gousev has asked to delay until-delay giving a summary to the other Allied governments until he hears from his government. Then, if that's done, and he has also asked his government when that is done to permit publication of a similar summary. And I hope to give you some word on it in the next three or four days.
 - M. Well, I think that would be all right, sir.
- W. Just a minute, Doc. I was just talking with Mosely here. He feels that we shouldn't put the word "dismemberment" into the surrender instrument until we have told the Russians and they have agreed to tell the French.
- M. Yes. Well, I agree that they should tell the French. But the decision to include it was a formal decision by the three governments. But we should tell the French as the fourth body to the EAC.
 - The Russians haven't as yet agreed to tell the French.

¹¹ Beginning with this phrase, the record of the telephone conversation continues from another transcript of the same conversation filed separately under 740.00119 Control (Germany)/5-445.

¹² Telegram 3450, May 2, 1945, to London, not printed; see footnote 30, p. 279.

- M. Well, I think that we should insist on that. If they want the word "dismemberment" in that we should let them inform the French of it.
- W. That is the position I will take. One other thing. I thought if the question of the surrender instrument came up, or if the question of the issuance of the proclamation was to come up, I would ask Mosely to go over to SHAEF in order that he might help them, because of his knowledge of the Russian language. I believe we should have somebody there who can read the Russian text.
 - M. That will be quite satisfactory to us.
 - W. All right, Doc. Thank you ever so much.
 - M. Good-bye.
 - W. Good-bye.

The Assistant Chief of the Division of British Commonwealth Affairs (Parsons) to the Ambassador in Canada (Atherton)

Washington, May 4, 1945.

Dear Ray: Over many months Mike Pearson ¹³ with Escott Reid ¹⁴ following up has been endeavoring to secure a modification of the surrender instrument for Germany and related documents so that the military contribution of Canada to the victory might receive greater recognition. As you can imagine, Canadian pride is deeply involved and no doubt there has been considerable feeling in high government circles in Ottawa. I gather, furthermore, that as the matter has developed we have acquired most of the responsibility in Canadian eyes for what they still consider to be a highly unsatisfactory situation.

Aside from one exchange of letters with Jimmy Dunn, the Canadian conception of our position has, I believe, been gained almost entirely through the British representative on the EAC. In other words, I fear that this is one more situation in which one school at Ottawa can complain that again we are driving Canada into the arms of the British and the other school can again say that their view is right that Canada should line up with the British on matters of this kind.

At this eleventh hour Strang has suddenly introduced into the EAC negotiations an amendment whereby all the allies contributing militarily to the victory would authorize signature of the surrender proclamation by the four member powers of EAC. It has been clearly evident that he is speaking on behalf of the dominions and India. No doubt the Canadians are pushing him more than anyone.

Lester B. Pearson, Canadian Ambassador in the United States.
 First Secretary in the Canadian Embassy.

I should doubt if Strang had any hope of his amendment succeeding, but obviously it puts the British in an enviable position vis-à-vis the dominions and is likely to put us in an unenviable position especially as the French went along and the Russians simply referred the amendment to Moscow.

We have a good and sound position on this matter. I believe it should not be filtered through to the Canadians by the British alone and I am, therefore, seeking approval of this letter to you so that you may record in the proper quarters in Ottawa the reasons for our position and our sympathy for that of Canada. I am writing to you rather than to Jack 15 at San Francisco 16 where he could speak to the Prime Minister 17 and to Norman, 18 because I believe that while the gesture to Canada is important we do not want to open up a separate channel through which the Canadians could press again for a modification of our stand.

In response to Strang's amendment, we have told Ambassador Winant that (1) we approve letting the Canadians and the others contributing military forces see the text of the surrender instrument and the proclamation based on it, (2) we agree to invite their adherence, and (3) we would not object to more specific acknowledgment in the proclamation of the other powers contributing military force to the defeat of Germany.

We have, however, a very practical objection to amending the text so that the four powers on EAC would be acting with the authority of the other powers. Such a position would imply that in all future decisions we would have to have the concurrence of the other powers. The task of military government shared by four powers is complex and difficult enough without adding a requirement for the concurrence of four or five additional powers. It seems to us that any reasonable person would agree that an already difficult and thorny task would be made well nigh impossible and we should doubt whether many who realize the difficulties and who do not have to be involved would really wish to be except for prestige reasons.

I think it would be most helpful if you would emphasize the three numbered points above as a mark of our appreciation of the Canadian position and our desire to give them the recognition to which they are

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, May 4, 1945. [Received May 8.]

Sir: I have the honor to enclose two copies of a letter dated May 1, 1945, from the Chairman of the European Advisory Commission to the Chairman of the Allied Consultation Committee of the E.A.C. This letter, which was approved by the Commission at an informal meeting held on May 2, 1945, contains the replies of the Commission to the questions which were raised with the Commission by the E.A.C. Allied Consultation Committee in its report, which was transmitted to the Department with the Embassy's despatch No. 21791 of March 17, 1945.

The enclosed letter constitutes an instruction issued by the Commission to its Allied Consultation Committee, governing the Committee's further consultation with representatives of the Allied Governments.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador:

PHILIP E. Mosely
Political Adviser, U.S. Delegation
European Advisory Commission

[Enclosure]

EUROPEAN ADVISORY COMMISSION

Copy of a Letter Dated 1st May, 1945, from the Chairman, European Advisory Commission, to the Chairman, Allied Consultation Committee 19

Dear Mr. Saksin: As you are aware, the European Advisory Commission has considered, at its informal meetings held on 6th and 25th April, 1945, the report of the Allied Consultation Committee adopted at a meeting held on 14th March, 1945 [P12/60/45] ^{19a}, which you submitted with your letter of 16th March, 1945.

¹⁹ Addressed to Georgi Filipovich Saksin, Counselor of the Soviet Embassy in London and Soviet representative on the Allied Consultation Committee. Chairmanship of the Committee rotated among the four representatives.

^{19a} Brackets appear in the original.

The Commission has reached the following conclusions on the recommendations of the Committee in Part II of its report:

Paragraph 3

The Commission authorizes the Committee to communicate to the representatives of the Governments concerned a Summary of the Agreement on Zones of Occupation in Germany, and will be glad if the Committee will submit for its approval a draft Summary of the Agreement of 12th September, 1944, taking into account the decision of the Crimea Conference that a zone should be allotted to France.

Paragraph 4

The Commission authorizes the Committee to communicate to the representatives of the Governments concerned a Summary of the Agreement on Machinery of Control in Germany, and will be glad if the Committee will submit for its approval a draft Summary of the Agreement of 14th November, 1944, taking into account the decision of the Crimea Conference on the participation of France in the control machinery.

Paragraphs 5 and 6

The Commission approves the recommendations of the Committee. Paragraph 7

The Commission is informed that the Belgian, Luxembourg and Netherlands Governments have addressed a Memorandum 20 to the four Governments represented on the Commission through the diplomatic channel, on the question raised in this paragraph. Pending consideration of this Memorandum, the Commission has decided to defer a decision on the reply to be returned to the three Governments.

Paragraph 8

The Commission approves the recommendation of the Committee, and authorizes the Committee to inform the representatives of the Norwegian Government that their proposals should be pursued through appropriate military channels. The Committee is also invited to consider the letter addressed to the Chairman of the Commission by the Norwegian Minister of Foreign Affairs on 14th April, 1945 [P12H/6/45] 21 and to make recommendations as to the reply to be returned to it.

The Commission agrees with the Committee that the wishes of the Czechoslovak Government mentioned in this paragraph deserve special attention and will give further consideration to them.

Yours sincerely,

Massigli

1869. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have informed us that they agree with General Eisenhower's proposed delineation of the French zone of occupation in Germany, which would include the bridgehead at Coblentz and the Kreis of Lindau. We feel that it is most important to include Karlsruhe and the War Department is prepared to accept inclusion of Karlsruhe in the French zone if General Eisenhower agrees that this should be done. Please endeavor to reach a satisfactory adjustment of this point. You may then communicate this decision informally to the appropriate French authorities as representing this government's agreement to cede that portion of its zone of occupation to the French. Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

Washington, [May 5, 1945].

The Canadian Government has for some months protested what it considers the lack of recognition to be accorded Canada in the surrender instrument for Germany and the proclamations based thereon. This Government is largely blamed for the opposition to the Canadian representations although our position has been based on the sound practical consideration that the four powers on the European Advisory Commission must be free to carry out decisions without the necessity of consulting Canada and other fighting allies.

Canada has contributed to the military victory with a five division, highly mechanized army, an air force virtually half the RAF 25 in aircrew strength and a navy which has handled a large proportion of the Atlantic convoy work.

In view of the sensitiveness of Canada on this subject and the tremendous Canadian pride in the success of Canadian arms, it is felt that the following message would be timely. It is suggested that the draft message quoted below be in your name in view of the close association between the late President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King. May I be informed if you wish us to send the message? ²⁶

(To Ambassador Atherton, Ottawa.)

Please request that the following from the President be delivered at once to the Prime Minister:

With the capitulation of the German Armies in the Netherlands, Denmark and Northern Germany, the battles of the Canadian Army in Europe have ended in final victory. Please accept my warmest congratulations on the stirring achievements of Canadian arms and be assured that the American people share with me the desire to pay tribute to the signal contribution which our Canadian comrades have made to the military defeat of Germany.

[Washington,] May 5, 1945.

This Government is now faced with major political problems in connection with Austria and Czechoslovakia on which we had every reason and right to expect real Soviet cooperation with us. Instead, we have so far had unilateral acts on the part of the Soviet Union, i.e., a recognition of an Austrian Government without consultation with us, refusal to agree to an airfield in the United States zone in Vienna, and a refusal to permit our Embassy to go to the seat of the Czechoslovak Government.²⁷

It therefore seems that some hard bargaining is going to become necessary before these problems are settled in a manner satisfactory to us. The present military situation and its apparent possibilities offer some good material for such bargaining, provided immediate action is taken. It is therefore suggested that the Joint Chiefs of Staff be asked to consider urgently the following:

If the American Armies pushed on to the Moldau River which runs through Prague, this would give us a strong bargaining position with the Russians. This river is a continuation of the Elbe where we have stopped farther north. Furthermore, the United States Third Army has now gone down the Danube through a good part of Upper Austria, which will presumably be in our zone of occupation in Austria. The Russians would, however, like to have us concede to them that part of Upper Austria north of the Danube. We propose that American forces advance to the Moldau River throughout its length. If they could do so we shall then be in a position of equality in both Austria and Czechoslovakia in dealing with the Soviet Government. Otherwise the Soviet Government will probably continue as it has done to the present to disregard our protests with respect to both Austria and Czechoslovakia.

I submit the foregoing discussion of the political implications involved in this situation while fully realizing that the decision will no doubt have to be based primarily upon military considerations.

Having in mind Jeanneney's ²⁹ urgent request that the French be consulted before the French occupation zone was fixed I told de Gaulle this morning that the matter of the French occupation zone is to be discussed by the interested parties in the EAC and that as advance information was giving him informally our ideas on the subject. General Eisenhower agrees with me that Karlsruhe can be included in the French zone but only if essential to secure the success of the negotiations.

The only question that de Gaulle raised was "what about the difficulties of administration in Baden and in Württemberg if you cut them each in two?" I told him that I did not consider that an insurmountable difficulty. He was very affable but did not commit himself.

4599. Comea 229. On receiving Department's 3450, May 2, 7 p. m., ³⁰ I raised the question of publicity on control machinery arrangements for Germany as a matter of first priority in the European Advisory Commission meeting of May 3 stressing the need for an early public statement.

At the May 4 meeting the United Kingdom Representative stated that his Government agreed in principle to publication of a summary. Gousev and Massigli have not yet received the reactions of their Governments to my May 3 request.

At May 3 meeting it was the unanimous feeling of the EAC that it is essential to inform the most interested Allied Governments of control arrangements through the EAC channel prior to issuing a public statement. It was agreed that summaries of the control machinery and occupation zones arrangements ought to be given to the European Allied Governments with whom the EAC Allied Consultation Committee has consulted regarding the summary of the surrender instrument.

At May 4 EAC meeting summaries of the control machinery and one of occupation arrangements were approved for communication to the European Allied Governments and this communication was approved by the United States, United Kingdom and French representatives. Gousev has not received the consent of his Government to transmit these two summaries to the Allies.

I hope the communication of the summaries to the Allies can be carried out within 3 or 4 days. I anticipate that the EAC will then approve for publication a summary of control machinery arrangements probably worded somewhat differently in order not to offend the susceptibilities of the Allied Governments.

WINANT

4657. Comea 232. On receiving Department's 3582, May 7, 5 p. m., I consulted Gousev urgently about an immediate public statement on control machinery arrangements for Germany. Gousev has consulted his Government since I raised the question on May 4. He feels strongly that while hostilities are still continuing against the Red Army according to his information, it is premature to go beyond the statement on control machinery contained in the Yalta Communiqué.31 He also feels that the Allied declaration which is nearly completed should be issued prior to any additional statement on control machinery. He also stated his belief that such a statement on control machinery should follow very shortly upon issuance of the proposed Allied declaration on German surrender. I hope to complete the declaration, with full agreement by all four powers, by tomorrow.

1935. The Russians apparently endeavor to have our armies hold back while Soviet troops occupy as much as possible of the remaining enemy-held territory, and then use the fact of Soviet occupation to further Russian political aims in Europe, refusing on the basis of prior possession to agree to accord us proper facilities for post-war cooperation. As examples, they are now refusing to agree to allot any of the five Vienna airfields or adequate troop recreation areas to any of the other Allies in the projected subdivision of Vienna for international occupation and have refused to permit our military and civil representatives to go to Vienna to survey the areas to be zoned, or to Kosice to communicate with the Czechoslovak Government.

While the demarcation of lines between the Soviet and Allied forces now approaching each other is a question which must naturally be decided primarily on military considerations by military authorities.

the Department hopes that as the latter make these decisions Murphy and Erhardt will keep these political considerations before them, pointing out that the extent to which our own troops occupy the remaining enemy territory may help to minimize serious handicaps like these in our post-hostilities occupation and other relations with the Soviet authorities.

London, May 10, 1945—1 p. m. [Received May 10—9:19 a. m.]

4668. For the Acting Secretary and Mr. Matthews. Special German Series No. 9. In replying to Department's 3630 May 9, 3 p. m., I refer to my telephone conversation with Mr. Matthews on Friday May 4 as background. In that conversation I explained that SHAEF had not received through the Combined Chiefs of Staff an authoritative copy of the surrender instrument as agreed among the four Governments.

On Saturday May 5 I got word that a military surrender was imminent, and late that evening I was told that a very brief form of unconditional surrender was to be used and that approval of this instrument was being asked in Washington and London through military channels. At that time, although the European Advisory Commission had passed on the unconditional surrender instrument with the inclusion of the French amendments of May 1, these amendments were awaiting governmental approval. Likewise, although agreement had been reached by the three governments at Yalta on the inclusion of the word "dismemberment", the Russians had not agreed to informing the French of this addition. Copies of the full text of the unconditional surrender instrument, in two sets both with and without the additional word, were being held available here, but, as I understood it, authority to sign the surrender instrument had not been delegated by the four Governments.

This was not the reason, however, as I understand it, for deciding on the briefer form of surrender. It was known that Germany was smashed and incapable of continued effective resistance and that a quick surrender would save life. It was thought that a simpler acknowledgment of complete defeat could be obtained with least controversy and delay, and therefore the briefer document was used.

My conversations with the Prime Minister and General Bedell Smith were to make certain that this briefer instrument did not preclude the later use of the unconditional surrender instrument or of the declaration prepared by the EAC. I wanted to make certain that the degree of agreement reached in these papers by the four powers after long and painful negotiation would be fully preserved. It was so understood by both the Prime Minister and General Smith and article four of the military instrument was worded in such a manner as to leave the way fully open for the imposition of the terms contained in the instrument or in the declaration based on the instrument. It was after inclusion of that article that I sent my 4600, May 6, 4 p. m., as both SHAEF and the Prime Minister were then agreed on the inclusion of this article.

Last night I informed you in my 4657, May 9 [8], 6 p. m. that we hope to get complete agreement today on the exact wording of a declaration of unconditional surrender, to be issued by the four governments under article 4 of the brief military instrument. Gousev has stated to us that his Government prefers the declaration to the use of the unconditional surrender instrument. We believe the declaration to be equally binding on the four occupying powers and to be a solid basis for the imposition of the will of the four powers on Germany.

I am cabling this morning the articles of the declaration on all of which we have already reached agreement. After today's meeting of the EAC I will cable you the preamble, on which two points remain to be settled. As I stated to Mr. Matthews in my conversation of May 4, the declaration contains no mention of the word "dismemberment" since the preamble of the declaration, as has already been agreed by the four delegations, provides for the later determination by the four Governments of the future status of any or all parts of Germany.

Unfortunately a JCS paper on this subject which was received some time ago and which would have been a valuable guide was completely overlooked. In the absence of a Combined Chiefs of Staff directive and in view of the urgent circumstances, the short surrender document was drafted by SHAEF officers and reported to the Combined Chiefs of Staff, the British Chiefs of Staff and the Soviet High Command as best suited to the military situation. The Prime Minister requested a copy of the instrument of surrender and was referred by SHAEF to the text as reported to the Combined Chiefs of Staff. Supreme Headquarters states that it has no specific plans regarding the surrender terms negotiated in the EAC but suggests that any items covered by that document and not included in the terms of surrender or in the instructions which accompanied them could well be made the subject of additional instructions to the German High Command.

4709. Comea 237. Department's 3449, May 2, 7 p. m., has been most helpful in discussion of consultation with the Allied Governments concerning the declaration on Germany's defeat. At May 4 meeting of the European Advisory Commission I objected to the wording of paragraph 4 of the preamble to the declaration as tending to place the 15 or so Allied Governments on the same footing as the four major powers, and proposed the following wording: "Acting by authority of their respective governments and with the concurrence of others of the United Nations which have actively participated in the defeat of Germany and in the interests of the United Nations". This draft drew a clearer line between the four powers, the "active" United Nations and the rest of the United Nations. It was accepted by Strang, but Gousev raised various objections to it until today, when he expressed a willingness to accept either this US wording or the words of the original instrument.

On further consideration today of the possible procedures for consulting the "active" Allies and for securing their concurrence, the Commission came to the conclusion that time does not permit of awaiting such concurrence. It was accordingly agreed to omit the reference to concurrence and to revert to the wording of the original instrument. In accordance with Department's 3449 I urged that Governments which have contributed military forces be invited to adhere to the declaration by communicating it to them in advance of publishing it to the Germans.

With regard to the Allied Governments to be consulted, Strang proposed the following: (1) the European Allies already consulted concerning the summary of the surrender instrument; (2) British Dominions and India; (3) Brazil. Gousev at once proposed inclusion of the Polish Government in Warsaw 42 among the adhering governments. He argued that absence of diplomatic relations between that government and several of the Allied Governments was no obstacle to informing it, as it was no bar in the case of India, with which the USSR has no diplomatic relations.

I put forward the suggestion, not as a proposal, that each of the four Allied Governments decide to which Governments, among those which had participated actively in Germany's defeat, it wished to communicate the declaration individually and which it wished to invite to adhere to the declaration. To Gousev's objection that this procedure would represent individual action rather than joint action by the four governments, Strang pointed out that it represented individual action taken on the basis of joint agreement. Massigli supported my suggestion. Gousev expressed objection to it without making any counter suggestion.

I believe that the injection of the Polish question into the discussion of concurrence by other Allies, in addition to the time factor, makes it wise to abandon the effort to include in the preamble to the declaration any reference to the "active" United Nations. Since the EAC cannot agree on a list of adherences which would include Poland, I assume that (1) my suggestion of individual communication by each major ally will be recommended to the four governments, or (2) the EAC will forward the draft declaration to the four governments without any agreed recommendation regarding procedure for communicating the text of other Allied Governments and for their adherence to it, thus leaving each government free to invite such adherences as it considers appropriate without reference to the other three governments. Of the two procedures now open, the first seems preferable in all respects.

Washington, May 12, 1945.

Because of the desirability of immediately securing a full capitulation of the German armies the Supreme Commander of the Allied Expeditionary Force and the Soviet High Command imposed on the Germans the brief "Act of Military Surrender" of May 7 rather than risk the delay possibly involved in making use of the instrument of unconditional surrender which had been prepared by the European Advisory Commission and approved by the Governments there represented.

That Act and the similar document signed in Berlin on the day following made only the initial military provisions incident to our victory. It is now in order, therefore, to proceed with the issuance of a proclamation which will make further stipulations and which will formally announce the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany by the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union and the Provisional Government of France as has been previously agreed.

The European Advisory Commission has recommended to its constituent Governments the text of a proclamation designed to serve these purposes. This text represents an adaptation of the instrument of unconditional surrender prepared by the Commission and has the advantage of policy and phraseology already accepted by the four Governments.

I append a copy of the text ⁴⁷ as submitted by the Commission and recommend your approval of its being issued as a proclamation above the signatures of the commanding officers of the armed forces of the four Powers now occupying Germany.

Francisco 48 that the instrument of surrender which had been signed both at Rheims and at Berlin was a brand new document and not the one so carefully and painstakingly negotiated over a period of eight months in the European Advisory Commission. He said it was simply incredible to him that this document, which had the formal approval of the four governments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had been simply forgotten and ignored. He read me a telegram from General Eisenhower which indicated that instead of consulting the G-5 49 people at SHAEF, they had put the matter in the hands of G-3 50 and G-1 51 and people like General Spaatz 52 who knew none of the background. Mr. McCloy said he still could not understand how General Bedell Smith could have overlooked the document because he was familiar with it, nor did he understand why Bob Murphy had not been consulted. Mr. McCloy said that in any event he wished to apologize for this serious oversight and promised to send a telegram to General Eisenhower to make sure that no other documents are signed or proclamations issued which may run counter to the governmental agreements negotiated in the European Advisory Commission. He also said that he thought we should examine carefully to see whether we should still force a German signature of the agreed surrender document or whether the proposed proclamation to be issued by the four governments based on those terms may be adequate for the purpose and for the setting up of the control machinery. In my understanding, this leaves the British Government free to communicate the text, if it is approved by the four Governments, to the Dominion Governments, and the Soviet Government to communicate it to the Warsaw Polish Government, and the United States Government to communicate it to any of the European Allies, the Dominions and Brazil. repeated to Paris as my 259, I reported my démarche of yesterday informing Massigli of the United States proposal concerning the French zone in Germany. Whatever misunderstanding had arisen regarding the procedure contemplated has now been removed. Some confusion had in fact arisen because no description or inkling of General Eisenhower's zone proposal of May 3 referred to in Department's 3546, May 5, 7 p. m., to London repeated to Paris as Department's 1869 was received here until May 10. Even the sketchy description received here on May 10 was forwarded, as stated in Caffery's 289, May 9, 6 p. m., to London ⁵⁶ merely "to complete the record".

In absence until May 10 of any factual information concerning the new United States proposal, it was natural to assume here that Ambassador Caffery had reverted to Department's earlier instructions (Department's 3332, April 28, 3 p. m., to London) directing him to "sound out the French Government" and then to inform me what area would be satisfactory to the French, pending which I was instructed to "await Caffery's report before talking with Massigli". Dear Doc: The story of the negotiation with the German High Command of the short surrender document reported in my 2517, May 10, 7 p. m., and my 2493, May 9, 9 p. m., 60 is amusing.

In considering this matter, the fact that the conversations were closely held by a few officers at different headquarters (SHAEF at Rheims and the 21st Army Group which then had its headquarters at Luneburg) should be remembered because the physical aspects had a good deal to do with it.

I think it is fair to say that SHAEF had made up its mind to restrict these conversations to the military and to exclude Foreign Office or State Department participation.

As you know, our main office of necessity is at Versailles where the US Group CC are housed, but I maintain an office also at SHAEF Forward, Rheims. Jake Beam ⁶¹ stays there regularly and I go to Rheims about three or four times a week. Jake was not told anything about the initial stages of the negotiations. I was at Rheims on May 5, and Smith told me that he was expecting the arrival sometime that evening of Admiral von Friedeburg ⁶² who was coming down from Headquarters 21st Army Group. I waited until the arrival of the party and after a conversation with them which I did not attend as I was not invited, Smith informed me that the Germans had no authority to sign anything, and that as the German ciphers had been left at 21st Army Group Headquarters, probably prolonged communications via 21st Army Group to Admiral Doenitz' 63 headquarters at Flensburg would be necessary. I returned to Versailles that evening and had no further advice from Headquarters regarding the progress of the negotiations until a telephone call at 2 a.m. May 7 saying that Colonel General Jodl 64 had arrived and that a signature of the surrender document would be made within a few minutes. This advice came from Secretary of the General Staff. I assumed that the reference to the surrender document referred to the EAC text. I was amazed therefore to discover only very much later in the day that a new text had been provided, but I was still ignorant of the source. I immediately returned to Rheims to discover that a group consisting of military officers only were proceeding forthwith to Berlin for the signature of a similar document. Upon inquiry I discovered that it was the opinion of several officers who had worked on this matter both British and American (G-3 SHAEF,65 Generals Bull 66 and Whiteley 67) that as there was no Combined Chiefs of Staff directive concerning the use of the text, elaborated in the EAC and approved by the Governments, that SHAEF was not required to use that text which it was believed was only applicable in case a recognizable German Government existed at the time of signature.

I have driven home to all of the top SHAEF officers on both the American and British sides the point that the Russians saw to it that their delegation to Berlin had with it a representative of the Foreign Office (Vyshinski).

I enclose a copy in paraphrase of a telegram sent by Bedell Smith to the War Department on May 10 offering an explanation of the procedure followed by SHAEF in this matter and having reference to the Department's 1950 of May 9 addressed to me 68 the contents of which were conveyed to General Eisenhower and General Smith. As you will probably understand, General Eisenhower entrusted to General Smith the entire responsibility for procedure in negotiating the surrender document.

Yours ever, Вов

Lieutenant General Walter Bedell Smith to Major General John E. Hull ⁹⁹

[PARIS,] 10 May 1945.

A query from the State Department as to why the instrument of unconditional surrender as negotiated in the EAC was not used has just been shown to me by Ambassador Murphy. I must say that we are all shocked to realize that the hours of work and worry spent here in preparing an instrument of surrender were completely unnecessary in view of the existence of a document which our three governments had agreed upon.

As a matter of fact a directive from the Combined Chiefs of Staff on the subject of the surrender terms negotiated in the EAC had never been received by us. Through Mr. Winant we did receive an informal copy and when negotiations began Ambassador Winant reminded me of this by telephone, and stated that a revised document had just been prepared. I suggested that he take immediate steps to invite the attention of Washington to the fact that we had never received a directive from the Combined Chiefs of Staff so that we might receive instructions on it through Combined Chiefs of Staff channels if indeed there was an approved surrender form. We proceeded with the short surrender document which was drafted here since we heard nothing further and in view of the urgent circumstances.

I find on checking back that we did receive a JCS paper on the subject of the surrender terms negotiated in the EAC which would have given us a guide to the existence of a set of agreed surrender terms. Although this was unfortunately overlooked, I do not think that any harm has been done as our own draft and the accompanying instructions cover practically everything covered in the EAC text. We did a great deal of worrying about Russia which we might have avoided had we been a little bit more alert however, and there has been a lot of unnecessary work done. The State Department is being informed by Murphy that any requirement of the EAC draft not

⁶⁰ Maj. Gen. John E. Hull, Assistant Chief of Staff, Operations Division, War Department General Staff. In a letter to General Smith, dated May 11, General Hull wrote in part as follows:

[&]quot;The EAC document being on a governmental basis, would not, as such, be referred to the Combined Chiefs of Staff for review. This coupled with the fact that no request was made on the CCS to forward the document to SCAEF for guidance, I think, explains why SHAEF did not receive a directive from the CCS. I believe this lack of a request was due, in part, to the absence of an approved EAC document that included the French. In January, the State Department requested the JCS views as to amending the Instrument of Surrender and other EAC documents to include the French. To this request the JCS on 24 January replied they had no objection. JCS papers on this (JCS 1226 series) were forwarded to CG, ETOUSA on 31 January. Nothing further on the matter of including the French was brought to the attention of the JCS but Mr. Winant in a cable to the State Department on 9 May 1945 said that an instrument including the French had not at that time been approved by the four governments." covered by our own papers can be made the subject of additional instructions to the German High Command.

Why the Russians did not raise this question is a mystery to me since matters in Berlin were obviously being handled by Vyshinski who must have been thoroughly conversant with the whole affair. As Murphy remembered all the circumstances, if we had brought him into the picture we would not have missed this bet.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)

[Versailles?] May 15, 1945.

Dear Jeff: Before your excellent dinner last evening Gaston Palewski ⁷⁰ opened up on the subject of the French zone of occupation in Germany. He said first of all that the French want Cologne and the Rhine province west of the Rhine up to the Cologne line. I said of course that was a matter between them and the British, to which he replied that we ought to help them with the British. I let that pass and then he said they must have all of the state of Baden. I asked him why and he said because it formed part of a "political ensemble". I said that as I saw it the American suggestion regarding the southern half of the state of Baden and a large chunk of Württemberg and Bezirk of Lindau made a very interesting political ensemble if considered in the light of what I understood the British were willing to concede out of their zone west of the Rhine. Palewski said the French were not much interested in Württemberg, but that Baden represents politically great interest for them.

Palewski went on to develop this theme and said rather grandly that the French would of course be willing to make a "concession" to us, allowing the use of Karlsruhe and Mannheim. I suggested very tactfully that he shouldn't look at it in that light, because the whole matter consisted of a concession on our part of part of a zone won by the hard fighting of American troops as part of the huge war effort of the United States. I suggested that the French go along with us on our proposal now, on the theory that nothing is permanent in this life and that if later on our military found that logistically Karlsruhe and Mannheim were not necessary the matter would always be subject to review. I emphasized that our interest in Karlsruhe and Mannheim was logistic rather than political.

Yours ever,

ROBERT MURPHY

4921. Comea 253. My 4783, May 13, 1 a. m., Comea 241 to Department; repeated to Paris as 259. Yesterday in reviewing with Mosely the US proposal concerning the French zone in Germany de Leusse asked why the Kreis of Oberwesterwald had not been included in the bridgehead east of the Rhine River near Koblenz and pointed out that the addition of this district to the French area would fill an awkward gap between the proposed bridgehead and the area of the Bezirk of Koblenz which has been offered by the Brit for French occupation.

A preliminary survey made here on the basis of detailed War Department studies shows that Kreis Oberwesterwald contains no major railways, only 90 miles of local railways, no autobahn, no industry, and no electric power station of more than a local importance. Preliminary study also suggests that the transfer of this one additional district to French control would simplify local lines of communication within both the American and the French zones. I would appreciate your consulting as a matter of urgency, the appropriate SHAEF authorities who drafted the zone plan of May 3, to inform me of any objection from the military point of view to offering to include this district in the French zone if it should appear that such an offer will expedite agreement.

Sent to Paris as my 275 (for Ambassador Murphy).

5015. Comea 258. For Mr. Matthews. The Soviet representative on the European Advisory Commission has just proposed the following procedure regarding consultation with Allied Governments which have taken an active part in the defeat of Germany. He proposes that the full text of the declaration regarding the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany by the four governments be communicated as follows: (1) by the European Advisory Commission to the European Allied Governments previously consulted, that is, Norway, Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Greece; (2) by the UK Government to the Governments of the British Dominions and India; (3) by the US Government to the Brazilian Government; (4) by the Soviet Government to the Provisional Government of Poland. This proposal has been communicated to the other three delegations on the EAC as a matter of urgency.

This proposed procedure was first advanced by me as a suggestion not as a proposal in the EAC as reported in my 4709, May 10, 10 p. m. Strang and Massigli gave personal not official approval to this suggestion. Gousev who expressed objection to it then has now put it forward as a formal proposal. As stated in my 4709 I believe this is a practical solution to the question of consultation.

I trust the Dept will inform me as a matter of urgency regarding its attitude toward this Soviet proposal.⁷¹

5120. Comea 262. My 5015, May 19, 1 p. m.; Comea 258. At tonight's meeting the European Advisory Commission considered further the Soviet proposal regarding consultation with certain Allied Governments concerning the declaration on the defeat of Germany. Gousev repeated his proposal that (1) the EAC communicate the text of the declaration to the seven European Allied Governments which have been in consultation with the EAC; (2) the UK Government decide whether to communicate it to the Governments of the Dominions and India; (3) the US Govt decide whether to communicate it to the Brazilian Government; and (4) the Soviet Government decide whether to communicate it to the Provisional Government of Poland.

The UK representative agreed to the communication to be made by the EAC to the seven European Governments and stated that his Government would inform the Governments of the Dominions and India. I agreed similarly to the communication by the EAC and stated that the US Government would communicate the declaration to the Government of Brazil. Since the Soviet representative in conclusion failed to state explicitly whether or not his Government would communicate the declaration to the Provisional Government of Poland it proved unnecessary for Strang or me to reserve our positions regarding this intention of the Soviet Govt. In this respect Gousev's proposal and attitude were very constructive.

⁷¹ Telegram 4055, May 22, to London, stated that the Department accepted the procedure set forth in the Soviet proposal but did not want United States concurrence to be construed as a recognition of the provisional regime functioning in Poland (740.00119 EAC/5-1945).

After further discussion it was agreed that the Allied Consultation Committee of the EAC would meet the representatives of the Governments of Norway, Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Greece together on Friday, May 25, at 11:30 a.m. London time, and would then communicate to those representatives the text of the declaration in English, Russian and French. It was agreed that the Committee would emphasize the absolutely secret character of the document; would point out that it is based on the instrument of unconditional surrender of which they had previously received summaries; and would state that the declaration has been approved by the four Govts which propose to issue it to the German people at a time to be agreed between them.⁷² statements circulated as EAC 45/52 of May 7 74 was approved by the Commission since it relates the proposed public statement to the issuance of the declaration on the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority. The purpose of the proposed joint statement is to give effect to pgh 9 of the EAC report of November 14, 1944 75 transmitting the agreement on control machinery in Germany.

In preparing to communicate the text of the declaration to the Government of Brazil ⁷³ the Dept may wish to note the time, Friday May 25, 11:30 London time, at which the communication will be made in London to the representatives of the seven Governments.

In approving this draft statement I restated my understanding that the consultation referred to was intended to be carried on through the Allied military missions provided in article eight of the agreement on control machinery and through diplomatic channels between the various govts of the United Nations.

With regard to the time which the EAC might recommend for the issuance of this public statement on consultation I proposed that it be issued in the four capitals at the same time as the declaration on the defeat of Germany. This question was left open.

In accordance with Dept's 3657, May 9, 7 p. m., I again pressed strongly for the earliest possible communication to the seven Allied Governments of the summaries on zones of occupation and on control machinery in Germany and for the earliest possible publication of an agreed statement on these two subjects. (See my 4707, May 10, 10 p. m. Comea 236.76) Gousev showed some embarrassment at his inability to give a reply and expressed his hope of shortly having instructions on both questions. Strang and I urged the desirability of publishing an agreed statement on zones and control machinery at the same time as the declaration on the defeat of Germany in case it were not possible to arrange its prior publication.

The Commission agreed to consider further the timing of the publication regarding (1) consultation with other United Nations, (2) summary on zones of occupation and (3) summary of control machinery in its relation to the time of publication of the declaration of the four powers regarding Germany.

2887. For Matthews. Following are excerpts from minutes of a meeting between General Eisenhower and the Prime Minister on May 16 at London. Complete text follows by mail.⁷⁷

Eisenhower asked concerning the possibility of the Allied Control Council for Germany being set up in the near future. He mentioned that the Council would serve as a clearing house for the settlement of many urgent problems and, even if the Russian representative had to refer everything to Moscow, the Council at least would provide a rapid means of communication with the Russian authorities.

Prime Minister said he did not think the Allies should assume full responsibility for Germany but should be responsible only for seeing that she never was in a position to start another war. German problems should be handled by Germans. He was not averse to making use of suitably qualified Germans to deal with and reorganize German internal problems. Some of the German Generals in our hands already, who were suitably qualified and whom the German people would obey, might be employed for this purpose. The Prime Minister felt that the control of Germany should remain a SHAEF responsibility until some other body was able to take it over.

Sir Alan Brooke ⁷⁸ agreed that for the time being SHAEF should continue to be responsible for the control of Germany.

Eisenhower mentioned that the Allied Commander's authority did not extend to matters of detailed administration. Though the work of administration was now being coordinated at his headquarters the staff handling it was divided into US and British sections. Both the British and the Americans were prepared to set up the Control Council elements and to get them quickly working.

The Prime Minister referred to a memorandum from the Foreign Office pointing out that the proposals in SCAF 392 (my telegram 2675, May 16, 4 p. m.⁷⁹) could not be adopted without consulting the French and the Russians.⁸⁰ If it were wished to keep SHAEF in being then the declaration regarding the defeated Germany would have to be made by SHAEF on behalf of the Allied Governments. The Russians, if this were proposed, would be offered an opportunity of pressing for the immediate withdrawal of all forces to the zones of occupation agreed upon. It was considered better, under the circumstances, to leave the situation as it was. The Foreign Office memorandum pointed out that the need to establish some German government was becoming ever more apparent. The Prime Minister said he agreed that the setting up of the Control Council was of great importance and that the question should receive urgent consideration.

Other points from the interview included a statement by the Prime Minister [General Eisenhower] that he had issued instructions that rations for non-working prisoners of war should be immediately reduced to 2,000 calories. He would examine the matter further to ascertain whether further reduction was possible. With reference to enemy equipment, especially aircraft, the Prime Minister said he had been concerned to learn that it was our policy to destroy such equipment and he did not agree and he thought we should save all the enemy equipment we could as we might need it to equip the liberated nations. The Prime Minister thought it possible that we could transfer enemy plants and set up our own factories to maintain such equipment.

The British Embassy to the Department of State

Aide-Mémoire

- 1. The governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, Soviet Russia and France have now approved the text of the draft Declaration regarding the defeat of Germany and their assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany in the terms recommended by the European Advisory Commission on the 12th May.
- 2. It seems desirable to His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom that the early issue of this Declaration should be arranged.
- 3. His Majesty's Government therefore propose that the four Allied Commanders-in-Chief should assemble not later than June 1st in Berlin to sign and issue the Declaration and that publicity arrangements should be co-ordinated between the four governments as soon as the date of issue is fixed.
- 4. His Majesty's Government consider that the Allied representatives who sign the Declaration will in effect become the Control Council and should thereafter meet as such to deal with questions as they arise. They would join together in setting up the Four Power Control Machinery along the lines agreed between the four governments at the European Advisory Commission.
- 5. The Declaration would be signed on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom by Field Marshal Sir Bernard Montgomery ⁸³ who will be the British Commander in Chief in Germany and the British representative on the Control Council.
- 6. It will be observed that the proposals in paragraphs two to four above do not mention the question of zones of occupation in Germany. His Majesty's Government feel strongly that no withdrawal of British and American troops from the present tactical boundary line to the agreed zones of occupation should take place until outstanding questions have been cleared up with the Soviet Government. They do not consider that the issue of the Declaration, which seems very desirable on other grounds, will weaken the position vis-à-vis the Soviet Government as regards this question of withdrawal. If the Soviet Government press for immediate withdrawal to the occupation zones it is suggested that the reply should be that this and other outstanding matters should be discussed between the four Commanders-in-Chief in their capacity as members of the Control Council.

- 7. Among the other outstanding matters which might be discussed in this way would be (1) the treatment of Germany as an economic unit for purposes of food supplies etc., and (2) whether, in view of the devastation, Berlin is still suitable as the seat of the Control Commission and, if not, what other seat should be chosen.
- 8. His Majesty's Government also consider it most important that satisfactory agreement should have been reached regarding the occupation and control of Austria before agreement is given to withdrawal from the present tactical line in Germany.
- 9. His Majesty's Government would be glad to know whether the foregoing accords with the views of the United States Government, and in particular, whether the United States Government agree that the British and American armies should continue to stand firm on the present tactical boundary line after the issue of the Declaration. If so and if the United States Government agree with the proposals set out in paragraphs three and four above, His Majesty's Government would propose to put these proposals forward immediately to the Soviet and French Governments for their concurrence and for suggestions as to the date for the issue of the Declaration.
- 10. The issue of the Declaration and the establishment of the Four Power Control Machinery composed of the four Commanders-in-Chief, each being responsible in respect of control matters to his own government, need not and should not, in the view of His Majesty's Government, involve the immediate relinquishment by General Eisenhower of his combined operational command of the British, American and French forces in Germany. It seems to His Majesty's Government that it would be necessary to maintain this operational command at least until the disposition of the forces in the four zones has taken place.
- 11. His Majesty's Government suggest that the Combined Chiefs of Staff should in due course issue instructions to the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force formally defining what his position would be after the issue of the Declaration.

Since De Leusse did not know location of Wehrkreis twelve and had no map available, this count proposal [counterproposal] was merely received for information.

The French instruction stated that aside from the proposed corridor to Vorarlberg the French authorities desired no part of Württemberg or Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen; that Frankfurt and Kassel should remain in the US zone; that US transportation and communication needs could be met by establishing appropriate US agencies in the proposed French zone, in same way as US agencies now operate in France. The main arguments advanced in favor of the counterproposal were: (1) the desirability of following major administrative boundaries in drawing zone; (2) desirability of unifying territorially the French bridgeheads at Koblenz, Mainz, and Pforzheim by giving France control of both banks of the Rhine from Kehl to Koblenz; (3) desire to avoid "breaking the unity of the Rhineland" and to make the Rhine "an artery not a barrier".

I am withholding comment on this counterproposal tonight until the implications of the request for Wehrkreis twelve can be examined.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, May 26, 1945—7 p. m.

4216. Dept is much concerned over delay in issuance of the declaration on Germany and establishment of the Control Council. Brit Emb on May 24 presented memo of which following is a summary.

We immediately discussed foregoing with War Dept and made following oral reply to Brit Emb the same day: 89

US agrees to paragraphs 1 to 5, incl. If the phrase "outstanding questions" in paragraph 6 means all questions outstanding with the Soviet Govt (including the Polish question), US does not agree. Brit Emb promised clarification on this point. US prepared to defer withdrawal into zones for a short period in endeavor to work out arrangements suggested in paragraphs 7 and 8, but feels strongly that the CC ⁹⁰ should be established immediately. However, if Soviet Govt insists upon the execution of the zonal agreement on Germany, US Govt will not hold up withdrawal into zones indefinitely. US Govt suggests that instead of approach to Soviet and French Govts by Brit Govt on proposals in paragraphs 3 and 4 (see last sentence of paragraph 9) these questions be discussed as soon as possible in EAC.

With reference to paragraph 10, US Govt agrees that issuance of declaration and establishment of CC need not necessarily involve the immediate dissolution of SHAEF. However, this transitional period should be of very short duration and only long enough to effect the disposition of the forces into the zones. US concurs re paragraph 11 above. As Brit Govt has not yet replied to our suggestions and as this matter is of great urgency, you are instructed to take up the entire question in EAC as a matter of prime importance and attempt to work out plans for the issuance of the declaration and establishment of the CC at the earliest possible date.

Please report fully to Dept on developments.

that a Wehrkreis administration line was not a logical line to choose since it applied only to military administration which was to be liquidated as quickly as possible and since it did not coincide with civil administrative lines. We added that while the desire of his Govt to occupy both banks of Rhine was understandable, it was no less essential for our large forces in Germany, engaged in a tremendous effort of redeployment, to have every necessary logistic facility for sake of common war effort.

In conclusion we informed De Leusse that Massigli's two earlier suggestions had been examined sympathetically by US Govt and that we were authorized to accept them by adding Kreis Oberwesterwald to the bridgehead east of Koblenz and by adding Kreise of Bühl, Baden Baden and Rastatt to French zone in south. We gave De Leusse clearly to understand that US delegation EAC could conclude zone agreement on basis of previous US offer plus these four districts and that otherwise French counterproposal would require detailed and probably long consideration by US authorities. De Leusse stated that French counterproposal had been formulated by Gen de Gaulle. Advanced personal view that if French desire to occupy both banks of Rhine were not met in EAC negotiations, de Gaulle would probably take up this question during proposed visit to Washington rather than abandon what he regards as a paramount French interest. Leusse is reporting our comments to Paris and obviously has no leeway for negotiating on basis of US offer of May 12.

[&]quot;I am averse to making any 'request' of the Foreign Office in this matter.

The note dated May 29 from the Ambassador in the Soviet Union to the Soviet Foreign Commissar, not printed, incorporated this suggestion (Moscow Embassy Files).

Embassy's Aide-Mémoire of May 24. By "outstanding questions" the British Foreign Office meant to refer to the "whole question of the future relations" of the British and American Governments with the Soviet Government in Europe. In other words, Mr. Makins said, the British Government feels strongly that British and American troops should not withdraw to the agreed zones of occupation of Germany until all these questions have been settled. He left with me the attached Top Secret Aide-Mémoire on the subject. I said that this interpretation did not surprise me but that it made it quite clear that there was a basic difference of opinion on this matter between British and American Governments and that we could not agree with the British position.

I went on to say that in any event there will probably be some delay getting the quadripartite Control Council organized and that I hoped the British meanwhile would go ahead with our plans for the issuance of the proclamation and the establishment of the Control Council in Berlin on June 1. I said that meanwhile our two Governments could continue discussions with regard to the time for withdrawal to the agreed zones and the breakup of SHAEF. Mr. Makins said that personally he favored this and that he hoped and believed the Foreign Office would go along with it. He said that he would telegraph urgently and endeavor to get an immediate reply. I emphasized the importance we attach to taking steps to issue the proclamation assuming authority over Germany which had been agreed to by the four Governments and to setting up the Control Council.

Mr. Makins said that in addition to our proposed presentation of the matter in the European Advisory Commission, his Government thought that we should likewise take it up directly at Moscow and Paris. I told him that we had thought of the European Advisory Commission as the most expeditious method of procedure in view of the fact that Gousev and Massigli were both familiar with all the background. I said, however, that we would be glad to make a parallel démarche at Moscow and Paris urging quick action to meet, if possible, the June 1 date.

Mr. Makins called me back at 6:30 this evening to say that he had now received a reply from the Foreign Office to his inquiry and that unfortunately he had been wrong in his opinion. The British Government does not agree to proceed with the issuance of the proclamation or the setting up of the Control Council until our two Governments have thrashed out the basic issue, namely, whether we will stick to our presently held lines in Germany or withdraw to our respective zones prior to a settlement of "outstanding questions" with the Soviet Government. I told Mr. Makins flatly that we could not go along with the British side on this. I reiterated importance this Government—both the Department and our military authorities—attach to immediate issuance of the proclamation and the establishment of the Control Council. I said that public opinion in this country was, as he must realize, becoming increasingly impatient and bewildered at the delay. I said, therefore, that our instructions to Ambassador Winant to present the matter immediately in the EAC must stand and that we would take simultaneous steps at Moscow and Paris. If the British do not agree, they may, of course, take that position in the European Advisory Commission but we feel that we must proceed without any delay.

Mr. Makins said that he would inform his Government of our position.

The British Embassy to the Department of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The State Department made an enquiry as to the interpretation of the following passage in paragraph 6 of the British Embassy's aide-mémoire of May 24th.

"His Majesty's Government feel strongly that no withdrawal of British and American troops from the present tactical boundary line to the agreed zones of occupation should take place until outstanding questions have been cleared up with the Soviet Government."

2. The Foreign Office now state that by this passage they meant that British and American forces should not withdraw to their respective permanent zones of occupation in Germany until the whole question of the future relations of the two Governments with the Soviet Government in Europe generally had been discussed and settled at the projected meeting of the President of the United States, the Prime Minister and Marshal Stalin.

London, May 29, 1945—9 p. m. [Received May 29—8:30 p. m.]

5417. Upon receiving late Sunday ² Dept's 4216, May 26, 7 p. m. (repeated to Paris as 2351 and to Moscow as 1160) I at once contacted Mr. Eden in order to carry through smoothly abandonment of procedure proposed by UK Govt on May 24 and to secure full UK support for US proposal on procedure. This was accomplished in course of May 28.

In order to place US proposal before today's European Advisory Commission meeting, I presented following draft recommendation:

"The EAC makes the following recommendations to the Govts of the USA, the USSR and the UK and the Provisional Govt of the French Republic:

(1) The four Allied Commanders-in-Chief will meet in Berlin not later than June 1 to sign and issue the declaration on the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany;

(2) Upon signature of the declaration, the four Allied representatives will constitute the Control Council in order to deal with matters affecting Germany as a whole and in order to begin the establishment of control machinery as provided in the agreement on control machinery in Germany, of Nov 14, 1944, amended by the agreement regarding amendments to the above-mentioned agreement of May 1, 1945."

This recommendation met with general support of UK and French Delegations, although they felt that a date somewhat later than June 1, perhaps June 4, would have to be selected. I made it clear that US proposal is designed to expedite as much as possible issuance of the declaration and the beginning of putting control machinery into operation.

At one stage in discussion, Gousev maintained that article 6 of the Sept 12 protocol on zones of occupation provides for that protocol coming into force on signature of the surrender instrument and that pgh 2 of the report of Nov 14 on the control machinery agreement implied to him that establishment of control machinery would take place after occupation of assigned zones has been completed. I pointed out that the gradual establishment of control machinery and the movement of the Allied forces into their respective zones and into the joint Greater Berlin zone require close coordination by the Commanders-in-Chief, which could usefully develop from their proposed meeting in Berlin. I also made it clear that US proposal constitutes no alteration of agreed procedure but is merely further working out of agreed procedure.

Basic question which troubles Gousev is determination of date on which the two agreements on zones of occupation and on control machinery are to come into force. Gousev feels that four Govts must agree on definite date and instruct their Commanders-in-Chief accordingly. Gousev asked how the four Commanders could constitute the Control Council on signing declaration unless the agreement on control machinery has been declared in force by that date. French Representative raised the same question.

I reiterated that easiest way to get the Allied agreements into operation is to bring the four Commanders together to sign declaration and to constitute the Control Council; they could then consider questions arising from implementation of the agreements on zones and on control machinery. On basis of today's preliminary discussion, I believe that US proposal would be acceptable to Soviet Delegation if pgh 2 were replaced by the following pghs 2 and 3:

"2. Upon signature of the declaration, the agreement on control machinery in Germany, of Nov 14, 1944, amended by the agreement regarding amendments to the above-mentioned agreement, of May 1, 1945, comes into force. At the same time the protocol of agreement on zones of occupation in Germany and the administration of 'Greater Berlin', of Sept 12, 1944 amended by the agreement regarding amendments to the above-mentioned protocol, of Nov 14, 1944, and amended by the declaration of the Crimea Conference of Feb 12, 1945, to provide for a French zone of occupation, likewise comes into force.

"3. Upon signature of the declaration, the four Allied representatives will constitute the Control Council in order to begin the practical implementation of the agreements on control machinery in Germany and on zones of occupation in Germany and the administration of 'Greater Berlin', and in order to deal with matters affecting Germany as a whole."

Some such provision for setting a definite date to bring into juridical force the agreements on zones and on control machinery would no doubt meet the Soviet view as expressed today. The practical question of actually implementing those agreements would take a considerable period of time for execution. Control over the timing would require the unanimous agreement of the four Allied Commanders-in-Chief.

I should like Dept's reaction to this addition before discussing it with my EAC colleagues. Next meeting EAC May 30, 3:30 p.m. London time.

receiving Dept's 4216, May 26 I at once contacted Mr. Eden on change of procedure since quick action on US proposal would require UK support or at least minimum of argumentation in EAC.

On morning May 28 I found Strang unwilling to proceed in EAC in accordance with US proposal since Foreign Office was anxious to receive Dept's reaction to UK communication of May 27, particularly concerning proposal to delay withdrawal of Allied forces to assigned zones of occupation, before committing itself to approach Soviet and French Govts either direct or through EAC.

During rest of May 28 I succeeded in convincing Eden that it was essential to proceed in EAC along the lines proposed by US, without attempting first to decide the timing of withdrawal of the US and UK forces into their zones. I pointed out that using slow withdrawal for bargain purposes in new top level meeting would depend not only on the timing of the withdrawal but on the timing of that meeting; except with grave risk to the Big Three cooperation in Germany, the delay in that withdrawal could not be longer than could be justified on military and logistical grounds.

By late Mon Eden had adopted the point of view on this question and brought Strang in line. It was then too late to arrange a meeting of the EAC for May 28 and hence proposal advanced by Dept was presented as reported in my 5417 at May 29 meeting.

many. This appeared to be contrary to the position he took both at Tehran s and Yalta. His explanation of this action on his part was that his recommendation had been turned down at Yalta and more specifically that Eden and Strang on behalf of the British had stated that dismemberment was to be accomplished only as a last resort and that Winant, who was present at the Conference at which this discussion took place in London, interposed no objection, hence Stalin states that it was his understanding that both Great Britain and the United States were opposed to dismemberment. I undertook to tell him that this was not the case; that while you had made no final decision in regard to this, the United States considered this an open question and that you would surely want to thrash it out at your next meeting. I told him that he must not assume that the United States is opposed to dismemberment because he may learn from you that just the opposite was the case. If the United States can agree to the French proposal for its zone in Germany to be taken from the United States zone as given in the European Advisory Commission, the French Government will bind itself to accord all guarantees respecting transportation and other facilities through the French zone that the United States military authorities may desire.

Mr. Berard explained that this offer would include a "window on the Rhine", such railroad facilities as might be required for the supply of United States troops and such American organizations operating in the French zone as might be necessary. He stated further that the French Government would appreciate receiving from us a statement of facilities which would be required and that it would make every effort to accord them in the manner desired by us. The French Government would furthermore be willing to discuss the matter either here or in Paris, according to our desire.

Mr. Berard then went on to state that the French Government had the impression in this matter of the French zone that our desiderata were primarily based on logistical considerations. The attitude of the French Government, on the other hand, was based fundamentally on political considerations, which he then explained.

The French Government attaches the greatest importance to maintaining the political integrity of Baden and would not be able to administer this province unless French forces occupied Karlsruhe, which is the capital of the province. Because of long-term political considerations, the French Government was compelled to insist upon having Karlsruhe, Mannheim and Darmstadt in its zone, but it was most anxious to work out with us any arrangements which the United States might require on account of logistical considerations.

I asked Mr. Berard why, if his Government attached such importance to the political integrity of Baden, it was quite prepared to violate this principle in the case of Hesse and perhaps other provinces when establishing bridgeheads on the east bank of the Rhine. He replied that there was by no means the same provincial sentiment in the Hesse province as prevailed in Baden and Württemberg.

I then got out a map and showed Mr. Berard how the rail communications between Frankfurt and Stuttgart lay. He admitted that the French proposal would obviously cut across our lines of communication but reiterated the willingness of his Government to grant us every facility and to do so formally and in writing if we so desire.

Mr. Berard concluded by expressing his most sincere hope that the United States military authorities would give serious consideration to what the French Government offered in the way of transport facilities. I promised Mr. Berard I would pass along the French offer to the appropriate American authorities at once.

tation and other facilities in the proposed French zone.¹⁷ Please inform French Rep as follows:

US Govt considers it has made a fair and reasonable proposal to accord France a zone of occupation in Germany. This American proposal gives France a sizeable zone in Germany while taking account of the essential transportation and logistic requirements of American occupation forces which require lines of communication of over 3000 miles which cut across other countries or other zones of occupation. On the other hand, the proposed French zone in Germany is largely contiguous to French territory and presents no supply problems comparable to those facing us. US Govt must therefore insist that it retain the facilities it requires for the administration of its zone and is surprised that French Govt does not agree at once to the US proposal.

Please make it altogether clear to French Rep that US Govt cannot accept his counterproposal and that the arguments advanced therefor are by no means convincing in view of the other considerations involved.

The contents of the following message, dated 2 June, from the OSS representative in Bern ²² and addressed to the Director of Strategic Services, ²³ has been transmitted to SHAEF:

"I have pointed out orally the unfortunate results which would accrue from the proposed delimitations of zones of occupation in Germany and Austria. If I am correctly informed, the proposed French zone of occupation will cut off Switzerland from any direct contact with the American zones of occupation in Germany and Austria.

"Switzerland's importance in the reconstruction of Europe far exceeds its size or population. It can be useful (a) in the tremendously intricate task of German re-education, (b) as an observation posed in mytel 6193 and approved by Dept's 4980. Mosely pointed tion with German-Italian as well as German-Swiss trade relations.

"The free passage of persons from Switzerland into the American zone of occupation, subject only to American military control, is extremely important. This is also true of the like passage of Swiss literature, newspapers and other expressions of Swiss culture, when it appears useful to permit these influences to go to Germany.

"By putting a narrow band of French control between American zones of occupation and Switzerland, we already are encountering difficulties which may become increasingly burdensome. Because all German border points have been under French control, we have already lost the opportunity to take over certain German agents operating in Switzerland. The future utility of Switzerland as an observation post for Germany and countries further east will be substantially lessened by the difficulties of obtaining direct and untrammelled access to the American zone from Switzerland.

"To gain the substantial and desirable benefits from such free access it will not be necessary to change the general plan of zone delimitation. It would only be necessary to have one point on the Swiss frontier under American occupation. This point could serve adequately as the channel through the French zone to the American zone.

"I am convinced that we shall on many occasions in the coming months deeply regret, or find ourselves embarrassed by any failure to reserve such a channel."

72. . . .

5. . . . I view with profound misgivings the retreat of the American Army to our line of occupation in the Central Sector, thus bringing Soviet power into the heart of Western Europe and the descent of an iron curtain between us and everything to the eastward.

I hoped that this retreat, if it has to be made, would be accompanied by the settlement of many great things which would be the true foundation of world peace. Nothing really important has been settled yet and you and I will have to bear great responsibility for the future.

[On June 5, 1945, in Berlin, the Declaration Regarding the Defeat of Germany and the Assumption of Supreme Authority with Respect to Germany by the Governments of the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the United Kingdom, and the Provisional Government of the French Republic was signed by the military representatives of the four Governments. For text of the Declaration, see Department of State, Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1520, or 60 Stat. (pt. 2) 1649.

Also on June 5, the Governments of the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, and the Provisional Government of the French Republic made three statements with regard to the arrangements for the control of Germany: (1) Statement on Zones of Occupation in Germany; (2) Statement on Control Machinery in Germany; and (3) Statement on Consultation With Governments of Other Nations. For the texts of the statements on zones of occupation and control machinery, see Department of State Bulletin, June 10, 1945, pages 1052 and 1054, respectively, or A Decade of American Foreign Policy, 1941-49 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1950), page 512. The text of the statement on consultation with the governments of other nations reads as follows: "By the declaration made at Berlin on 5th June the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic have assumed supreme authority with respect to Germany.

Frankfurt, 6 June 1945.

FWD ²⁸ 23680. Prior to the meeting in Berlin, Vishinski ²⁷ sent Simonev ²⁸ to me to discuss what he termed several discrepancies in the Soviet Foreign Office text of the Four Power Declaration. Our delegation had with us the texts of the Declaration prepared by EAC in the English, Russian, French and German languages which we exhibited but the Soviet representative maintained nevertheless that the text which they had was the official version. The discussion narrowed down to the word "Nationals" in article 10 which the Russians claimed should read "freight". After consultation with General Eisenhower the Russians were informed that if Marshal Zhukov ²⁹ desired to make a marginal notation in this regard there would be no objection.

I later discussed this point with Vishinski and Marshal Zhukov and the former admitted that what was bothering them was the realization that this word in article 10 would require the arrest and detention of any Japanese civilians found in the Soviet zone and as the document becomes public it would be the cause of embarrassment. I told them that we would of course be very happy if such a declaration were published whereupon Vishinski replied with a smile "That is for a later declaration!"

It was finally agreed with General Eisenhower's approval and that of the British and French delegations that the word "Nationals" in article 10 would be deleted prior to signature and the following notation made at the foot of the document [: "] The word 'Nationals' has been omitted in article 10 pending a check." It was obvious that without some such provision the Soviet representative would not sign.

The declaration was signed at approximately 6 PM Berlin time and there followed a short meeting of the four representatives to discuss the ways and means of establishing the Control Council. This will be reported subsequently except to mention here that Marshal Zhukov make [made] it abundantly clear that disposition of the troops into their respective zones is a Soviet sine qua non to the operation of the Control Council.

The Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force (Eisenhower), to the Joint Chiefs of Staff

FWD 23724. At the meeting of four commanders at Berlin 5th June, only positive action taken was to sign Four Power Declaration 30 with the correction indicated in Ourad 5th June.31 I proposed and British and French concurred to have the deputies sit immediately to develop methods and procedures for control machinery. Zhukov made it clear that he was willing to meet periodically to discuss matters not related to governing Germany as a whole but that any steps to set up control machinery must await withdrawal into the agreed zones. He stated that he would be willing to join in establishing control machinery as soon as withdrawal starts.

You authorized this question of withdrawal to be resolved by Control Council in Urad W11367 of 3 June. 32 I suggested to Zhukov that it was a question which could be discussed by the Control Council. Montgomery concurred and stated that the Group Council could make a recommendation for the decision of the several governments. Zhukov apparently wanted an answer rather than a discussion.

The Russians treated us cordially. I gave Zhukov, in the name of the President, the Legion of Merit in the grade of Chief Commander and he reciprocated by awarding me the Order of Victory. Montgomery was likewise decorated and De Lattre 33 was given a lesser decoration. Zhukov is to return my visit by a visit to Frankfurt on 10 June.

Nevertheless, it is my opinion that the question of withdrawal must ³⁰ See bracketed note, p. 326. ³¹ For a description of the correction made in the Declaration Regarding the Defeat of Germany, see telegram FWD 23680, June 6, from the United States Political Adviser for Germany, supra.

p. 301. Gen. Jean de Lattre de Tassigny, Commanding General of the First French $\mathbf{Arm} \mathbf{y}$.

be considered by Combined Chiefs of Staff and resolved by U.S. and U.K. Governments before any further discussion of control machinery with Zhukov will serve any useful purpose.

Also it is of utmost importance that the zone boundaries in Germany proper and in the Berlin district be determined finally. I do not believe this can be accomplished in Group Council. Nevertheless, they remain as obstacles to prompt establishment of control machinery.

I stated on several occasions to Zhukov that there was much that Group Council could accomplish in preliminary organization prior to withdrawal of Allied Forces from territory included in Russian Zone, pointing out that the two problems were not necessarily so closely related that they could not be dealt with separately. Obviously there are many steps in organizing Group Council which could be undertaken now. However, the fact remains that there is some justification for Zhukov's position that he is unable to discuss administrative problems in Germany when he is still not in control and hence not familiar with the problems of the zone for which he will eventually be responsible. As a result of my discussion with Zhukov I am optimistic that the Russians will join in some form of control machinery when withdrawal is accomplished and will agree to our forces entering into Berlin concurrently with our withdrawal from their zone.

However, neither I nor members of my party found any evidence of Russian organization for Group Council government. This may have resulted from the apparent unwillingness of the Russians to have anything considered at this meeting other than the signing of the Four Power Declaration. It is possible that the Control Council may become only a negotiating agency and in no sense an overall government for Germany.

As our plans for governing our part of Germany must give cognizance to this possibility, I suggest that our Government should consider now the possible alternatives to quadripartite control of Germany as a whole. We must know if our zone in Germany is to be administered as an economic unit rather than as part of the German economy as a whole if we are to plan soundly. As I see it, if quadripartite government does not treat Germany as a whole we must either establish tripartite control of Western Germany to permit its treatment as an economic unit with full realization of all the implications involved, or else be prepared to govern our zone on practically an independent basis. I realize the undesirability of either alternative and hope that the necessity for the adoption of either will not materialize. Nevertheless, sound planning now does indicate that consideration should be given to this problem as many of our actions within our zone must be governed thereby.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Paris, June 6, 1945—8 p. m. [Received June 7—6: 39 a. m.]

3358. Referring to my telegram sent through War Dept channels last evening.³⁴ Gen Eisenhower (see FWD 23724 to AGWAR June 6) is informing the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the condition very firmly stated yesterday by Marshal Zhukov that Allied troops in occupied Germany be redistributed in their respective zones and that a governmental decision regarding the delimitation of those zones be made prior to organization of the Control Council. Marshal Zhukov left no doubt in our minds that the Russian position rested on the idea that these preliminary actions were necessary before any detailed consideration could be given to the operation of the Control Council.

In response to Gen Eisenhower's suggestion at the end of the ceremony of the signing of the Four Power Declaration yesterday in Berlin that it would now be appropriate for the four Deputies to get together for a detailed discussion of the time and place and certain phases of the operation [Zhukov said it would be out?] of the question for the business of the Council at this stage to be done by the Deputies as "this would be unsuccessful," and that the Council's operation would require the regular attendance of the four members of the Council. He seemed to ignore the existence of the Coordinating Committee and, as one of the officers present put it, "he did not seem to have read the book at all". Gen. Eisenhower emphasized that by the signing of the Four Power Declaration establishing the supreme authority in Germany, an Allied Military Govt had thus been constituted.

During the course of the conversation, Gen. Eisenhower requested Marshal Montgomery to state the British position. Montgomery explained that a certain period of time was required to make the necessary readjustments in the British zone. He thought that while this redistribution was progressing a detailed examination of a lot of questions could begin. This could be started by the Deputies. Zhukov replied that all principal questions must be decided by the Commanding Generals in collaboration with their political advisers. Montgomery pointed out that the political advisers would be present at all meetings of the Deputies. Marshal Zhukov said that now that the battle was over, redistribution should not take very long, and inquired how long, in Marshal Montgomery's opinion, it would take. Montgomery replied that off hand he would say about 3 weeks would be necessary. The mention of a specific time factor seemed to be very pleasing both to Zhukov and Vishinski. The latter had mentioned that it would not be possible for the Russian element of the Control Council to plan for military govt of an area still occupied by Allied troops, mentioning especially Thuringia. While Gen De Lattre de Tassigny and his staff also attended this first informal meeting of the four members of the Control Council which was held on the veranda of an officers building in the suburbs of Koepenick, Berlin, on the banks of the Spree River, the French Delegation made no suggestions during the discussions. The meeting terminated with agreement that the matter of redistribution of the troops is one which is for Govt decision and that each member present would refer the question to his Govt for action.

Some of our officers were discouraged with the results of the day's visit to Berlin because they felt that the Russians had organized it badly and that the latter gave no evidence of ability to work in a quadripartite control mechanism. As the Dept will note from Gen Eisenhower's telegram the recommendation is made that the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff give consideration in their planning to the possibility that the control of Germany may evolve into either a tripartite control by the western powers plus a separate Russian control in the eastern provinces, or a treatment based on four separate zones. These considerations, of course, would be of vital importance to economic and political planning. I feel that we witnessed yesterday a Soviet effort to bargain for the removal of our forces from the zone which has been approved by the governments as theirs. In that respect their position seems to be sound. For the Dept's secret information, I believe that Gen Eisenhower does not consider that the retention of our forces in the Russian zone is wise or that it will be productive of advantages. I believe that it is pretty obvious to all concerned that we really are desirous of removing our forces and that it is only a question of time when we will inevitably do so. The Russians on the other hand may well be content temporarily to consolidate their present position in the territory they hold. In the interim, no progress would under such a circumstance be made in the organization of the quadripartite control of Germany, to which we are committed. I do not believe there is ground here for new discouragement but on the contrary I find that definite progress has been made. I am convinced that Russians believe the Control Council necessary and that it is in their own interest to have it operate.

Gen Eisenhower has invited Marshal Zhukov to visit him at Frankfurt on Jun 10 and Zhukov has accepted. This will afford a further opportunity to go into more detailed discussions than yesterday's brief visit to Berlin offered and at same time we may be able to obtain from Vishinski and the Soviet staff some information and data regarding Soviet control operations in the territory which they now occupy.

One additional point may be worthy of mention. In referring to Gen Eisenhower's suggestion for an immediate meeting of the Coordinating Committee of the Control Council which was made at the end of the signing ceremony yesterday Zhukov's interpreter referred to the Control Council as the "control party" Zhukov interrupted to correct the interpreter by describing it as the "control Soviet".

[Washington,] June 7, 1945.

Mr. Berard called today at my request to discuss the question of the French zone of occupation in Germany. This interview was pursuant to a request which Mr. Berard had made to me on June 1 [May 31?] ³⁵ to take up once more at the War Department his suggestion that this Government would agree to hand over certain parts of its zone in Germany to France after our deployment was concluded. Mr. Berard requested this in view of Ambassador Bonnet's conversation with Mr. McCloy last week, at which time the Ambassador understood that this was a possible development.

In accordance with decisions reached at a meeting in Mr. McCloy's office on June 6, I informed Mr. Berard as follows:

The American Government does not exclude the possibility of turning over portions of its zone at a later date to the French Government. However, this would have to be accomplished at a time and under conditions which would be determined by the American authorities in the light of their requirements in administering the United States zone in Germany.³⁶

Mr. Berard was of the opinion that this response did not go as far as what Mr. McCloy had told the Ambassador. I told Mr. Berard that the reply I had just given represented the agreed opinion of the competent American authorities and that I hoped he would convey it in that precise form to Paris. He promised he would do so.

Mr. Berard then described at some length the reasons why the French Government attach such importance to having the entire province of Baden, but brought forth nothing new.

Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, Special Assistant to President Truman, to the President 37

FRANKFURT, 8 June 1945.

FWD 24075. The following is from Mr. Hopkins to the President: "Have discussed Russian situation in Germany with Eisenhower 38 and have obtained his impressions of his conference with Zhukov at Berlin. I am convinced that present indeterminate status of date for withdrawal of Allied troops from area assigned to the Russians is certain to be misunderstood by Russia as well as at home.

It is manifest that Allied control machiney cannot be started until Allied troops have withdrawn from territory included in the Russian area of occupation. Any delay in the establishment of control machinery interferes seriously with the development of governmental administrative machinery for Germany and with the application of Allied policy in Germany. A delay of a week or two in starting the withdrawal would not be disastrous; however, this question should not remain in its present status until the 15th July meeting.

As a concurrent condition to our withdrawal we should specify a simultaneous movement of our troops to Berlin under an agreement between the respective commanders which would provide us either unrestricted access to our Berlin area from Bremen and [or?] Frankfurt by air, rail, and highway on agreed routes.

I am not sure of British reaction to such a proposal. However, I am sure that every effort will be made there to obtain British agreement to a cable to Stalin that you are prepared to start the withdrawal of American troops by 21 June subject to the respective military commanders working out an agreement with respect to the phasing of such withdrawal, the movement of our troops into Berlin, and the guarantee of routes of communication to our Berlin area. anticipated that United Kingdom will take parallel action.

If you believe that the settlement of the Austrian question should be a prerequisite to withdrawal from the Russian area in Germany, I suggest that your cable advise Stalin accordingly to include the specific conditions to be settled. However, if this question is to be included as one of the requirements for our withdrawal I strongly urge that you advise Stalin that final authority to settle zone questions in Austria has been delegated to our military commander to work out with his military commander and that this question be withdrawn from European Advisory Commission discussion.

³⁷ Transmitted from Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces, For-

As matters now stand in Germany, Eisenhower is in embarrassing position of not being able to discuss a specific date for withdrawal with the Russians. Moreover, the Russians have not been advised as to any specific requirements which we may have in view as a condition to such withdrawal.

I consider the decision as to the date we begin withdrawal into our own zone in Germany or at least specify in detail to the Russians the conditions which they must fulfill before such date can be established of major import to our future relations with Russia. Delays now may make withdrawal at a later date appear to have resulted from Russian pressure. I urge that prompt action be taken to dispose of this issue.

I am prepared to remain in Paris if this question will be decided in the next several days. I would appreciate very much being advised of your wishes to know if I may have the opportunity to discuss it further with Eisenhower prior to reporting to you on my return."

Questions Raised by the Representatives of Belgium, Luxembourg and Netherlands Governments in Memorandum P12C/10/45 $^{\rm 42}$

The Chairman said that before replying to the specific questions raised in the memorandum he wished to make the following general remarks:

These questions were drawn up in February last before the issue of the communiqué on the decisions of the Crimea Conference ⁴³ and before the defeat of Germany had been formally proclaimed in the Declaration signed at Berlin on 5th June. The representatives of the three Governments had not then seen the full text of that Declaration (of which copies were handed to them on 25th May) nor the Statements by the four Powers on Zones of Occupation in Germany and on Control Machinery in Germany (of which they had been informed on 2nd June). All these documents, as well as the statement on consultation with the Governments of other United Nations, had since been publicly issued by the Four Great Powers, on 5th June. Broadly speaking, these four documents provided replies to the six questions contained in the memorandum but the Committee had been authorised to return specific replies to those questions as follows:—

I (Meaning of the phrase "in the interests of the United Nations" used in the preamble to the Declaration of 5th June, 1945)

The European Advisory Commission understands that it is the intention of the four Governments that the Declaration regarding the Defeat of Germany shall operate for the benefit and in the interests of all the United Nations which are in a state of war with Germany.

II and III (Personal responsibility of German signatories of the Instrument of Surrender for acts of terrorism committed in occupied territory)

As there are no German signatories of the Declaration of 5th June, these questions do not arise.

IV (Repatriation of Displaced Persons, nationals of the other United Nations)

Provision for this is made in Article 6 of the Declaration of 5th June, and from paragraph 3 of the Statement on Control Machinery in Germany it would be seen that a Division of the Control Staff would be set up to deal with Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons.

V (Association of other Allied Governments with the Machinery of Control and Military Occupation)

Provision for this has been made, as will be seen from paragraph 5 of the Statement on Machinery of Control in Germany and from the last sentence of paragraph 1 of the Statement on Zones of Occupation relative to the inclusion of auxiliary contingents among the Allied forces of occupation.

VI (Revival of German Pre-War Treaty Obligations)

The Commission are unable to answer this question in the absence of a list of the treaty instruments which the three Governments represented here have in mind.

In the discussion which followed the questions summarised below were asked (unless otherwise stated) by Monsieur Kaekenbeeck and the replies were given by Mr. Saksin.

Q. Could the Committee expand its answer to Question I by saying whether there is any essential difference in the consequences arising from the use of the phrase "in the interests of the United Nations" instead of the phrase "on behalf of the United Nations"? We understood that the former wording was adopted since the circumstances did not permit of prior consultation with, and securing the assent of, the Governments of all the United Nations.

A. The Committee is not empowered to add to its answer in interpreting the meaning of the phrase in question; but it will report to the Commission the desire of the representatives of the three Governments for a more precise definition of the meaning.

Q. (Lord Hood) Could Monsieur Kaekenbeeck indicate whether the consequences to which he referred are the immediate practical consequences of the issue of the Declaration or the legal consequences ultimately entailed by the unconditional surrender of Germany?

A. (Monsieur Kaekenbeeck) If the Declaration imposes obligations on Germany on behalf of all the United Nations in whose interests the Four Powers have issued it, the legal consequences of such an order to the German authorities and people would be the creation of direct rights in favour of each of the United Nations as against Germany, and those rights could be enforced against Germany, after the supreme authority in Germany ceases to be exercised by the Controlling Powers, by each of the United Nations severally, in so far as their interests are respectively concerned.

Q. (Lord Hood) Does Monsieur Kaeckenbeeck suggest that every act of the Control Council must have the concurrence of all the United Nations in whose interest the Declaration has been issued?

- A. (Monsieur Kaekenbeeck) No, that is not suggested. It is the ultimate legal consequences of the Declaration which are in question.
- Mr. Saksin said that the replies given by the Belgian representative had clarified the position and would assist the Committee in making their report to the Commission.
- Q. Referring to paragraph 5 of the Statement on Control Machinery in Germany, would the three Governments represented at this meeting be regarded as "United Nations Governments chiefly interested" for the purpose of liaison with the Control Council?
- A. Countries like Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands who have suffered the worst consequences of Nazi aggression and have taken an active part in military operations against Germany are undoubtedly included in this description.
- Q. Referring to Article 2(d) of the Declaration (which covers the de facto evacuation of occupied territory), what steps are contemplated to restore the de jure status quo?
- A. The Commission has considered this question, but the Committee is not empowered to give an authoritative reply. It will report this question and seek instructions.
- Q. (Lord Hood) No purported "annexation" by the enemy of Allied territory has ever been recognised by the Four Great Powers. Would it not be for the Government concerned to make its position clear to its own people by proclaiming the nullity of any such unilateral "annexation" and asserting that its de jure sovereignty has never ceased?
- A. (Monsieur Kaekenbeeck) The Governments concerned would wish to be assured that the Four Powers share their view that there is no question of the rules of State succession in International Law applying to such territories, i.e. that the "annexation", being based on brute force applied by the occupying Power, would not have burdened the territories with any encumbrances which may have been incurred during the occupation.

The Chairman said that the Committee would report accordingly to the Commission. Count De Leusse added that the French Government were in the same position as the Belgian Government in this matter and, after having ventilated it in the Commission, were quite satisfied that the issue of Article 2(d) of the Declaration was all that was necessary to be done on the part of the Four Powers collectively.

Q. As regards the list of treaties suggested for revival (Question No. VI) could not Germany be obliged to comply provisionally with all pre-war treaty obligations until the countries concerned notified the Control Council that they wished any of them to cease to have effect? Some of the interested Governments had been separated from their archives since 1940 and could not readily compile the suggested list of Treaty instruments.

A. The Committee cannot add to its reply, but would explain that it had no intention of seeking to exercise any judgment in the selection of treaties for revival but merely to inform itself as to the scope of the problem so as to advise the Commission how best to answer the question put by the representatives present.

After an exchange of compliments, the representatives of the three Governments withdrew.

5862. Comea 282. At June 7 EAC meeting acting UK Rep Hood asked Soviet Rep if he could comment on publication in Moscow press of exact description of Soviet zone in Germany and map illustrating same. Hood recalled past understanding that EAC deliberations and documents are secret and that nothing can be made public concerning them without discussion and agreement between member Govts. Gousev disclaimed info concerning this publication. It is matter for regret that Soviet Govt made unilateral announcement of Soviet zone. Manner of publication prevented public from realizing that this was only part of an agreement made by the three Govts at an earlier date and that division of zones was based on relative population and productive value rather than on extent of area alone. Soviet announcement may be due to Russian feeling that the Brit were not keen to see an immediate withdrawal into the zones of occupation assigned in zones agreement.

When Gousev has raised question concerning US attitude toward execution of agreement of zones of occupation in Germany, I have consistently left no doubt in his mind that US Govt intends carry out its agreement.

3543. For Matthews. Dept will recall that Gen Eisenhower informed Joint Chiefs of Staff that from a mil point of view there were no grounds for our retaining the Kreis Lindau in connection with zone of occupation to be given French and that our military requirements would be met by arrangements under which French would afford us such transit and communication facilities as we may need. It has always been my view which I have stated informally in discussions here that for reasons of a general political as well as cultural nature we should have direct access to Switz thru Lindau over Lake of Constance and this point is brought out in an emphatic cable from Allen Dulles of OSS which has doubtless been repeated to Wash.⁴⁵ Gen Eisenhower's advisers feel and I believe properly that he cannot reverse his earlier opinion that retention of Lindau is unnecessary on mil grounds. I consider however that for reasons above stated we should review matter from standpoint of our retaining Lindau and offering French transit and communications facilities they may require. Since French have increased their original demands and have recently been difficult in negotiations re their zone, amendment of our original offer would seem justified and might place us in a better bargaining position. Apart from this is fact that our zone will be virtually enclosed in heart of Europe and I believe it would be a mistake voluntarily to submit to making our communications with Switz dependent upon an intermediary arrangement.

6102. Comea 288. Mytel 5622 to Dept; ⁴⁸ repeated to Paris as mytel 337. Today Massigli handed me memorandum containing French reply to my verbal communication June 4 re French zone in Germany. Summary of memorandum follows:

(1) Regretting failure to reach agreement on basis its previous proposal for French zone and anxious not delay establishment of Allied Control French Govt presents following compromise proposal.

- (2) "The boundaries which would thus be set for the French zone representing [in?] eyes of French Govt a provisional solution which should be revised at later date. Draft agreement to be presented by EAC for approval of four Govts should contain clause permitting revision of this agreement in so far as boundaries of French zone are concerned."
- (3) Following districts to be transferred from British zone as defined in agreement Nov 14, 1944: Saar Palatinate Hesse west of Rhine Trier and Koblenz Bezirke including that part of Koblenz east of Rhine.
- (4) Following would be taken from US zone: (a) Kreise of Oberwesterwald, Niederwesterwald, Unterlahn and Sankt Goarshausen; (b) Bezirke of Konstanz and Freiburg and Alhoskarlsruhe [all of Karlsruhe?] Bezirke south of Bruchsal-Mühlacker railway, leaving railway in US zone, (c) Kreis of Friedrichshafen in Württemberg (French Govt does not seek to occupy remaining districts in South Württemberg as offered by US but will accept them if US Govt insists); (d) Kreis of Lindau in Bavaria.

(5) Deployment of French forces to take place as soon as possible and simultaneously on both banks of Rhine. End of summary.

It would I believe be undesirable include in zones agreement provision for revision as proposed in para 2 Massigli's memo June 16.50 French anxiety to have written recognition US willingness later to review the zones could be allayed by stating in letter policy set forth in Deptel 4561, June 7 (repeated Paris 2602).51 I suggest for consideration by Dept following draft letter which might be addressed by me to Massigli on signature of revised zones agreement:

of Karlsruhe south of the railway Bruchsal Mühlacker. I interpret the comments made by Ambassador Caffery in his 3595, June 15, 6 p. m. to the Dept as being based on the assumption that the French had wholeheartedly accepted our proposal. In view of continued French bargaining in this question, I reiterate the recommendation I expressed in my 3543, June 14, 11 a. m. that we retain the Kreis Lindau to permit us direct access to Switzerland.

The additional reason suggests itself that with a view to encouraging local sentiment and confirming established administrative practice, we should retain in our zone as much of the Laender in their historical identity as is practicable. This is a point which does not seem to have been taken into account in the formulation of our offer to the French which was approved here, purely from the standpoint of military requirements. I infer from Ambassador Winant's message that apart from Kreis Friedrichshafen the French do not seek to occupy the remaining districts in South Württemberg and I am of the opinion that our interest in keeping to the traditional local state forms requires at least that we do not insist upon the French accepting the additional districts in South Württemberg.

Rastatt previously offered should now be offered to the French. You should limit the US offer accordingly. You should note for your own information that the description contained in your Comea 288 of "Karlsruhe Bezirk south of Bruchsal-Mühlacker railway, leaving railway in US zone", is not a description which could be acted upon accurately in any event, for it does not appear how the line between Bruchsal and Mühlacker would be dealt with beyond Bruchsal. The reference to appropriate maps will show you the difficulty that would be experienced if it were necessary to determine what the French desires are in this respect.

3. As to part of the Province of Württemberg, it is the desire of this Govt that the French include in their zone Sigmaringen and that part of Württemberg south of the Autobahn and railway connecting Karlsruhe-Stuttgart-Ulm as defined by the following Kreis boundaries: Leonberg, Böblingen, Nürtigen, Göppingen, Ulm and that portion of Münsingen northeast of Autobahn, inclusive to the US. (3) French Provisional Govt desires publication of the letter proposed in mytel 6193 and approved by Dept's 4980. Mosely pointed out to De Leusse that publication of basic EAC documents can be determined only by EAC on instruction of four Govts; therefore publication of text of supplementary letter could not be determined bilaterally between French and US Govt. Military authorities here have reaffirmed high importance of this matter and have recalled in this connection General Eisenhower's message of April 19 to General Marshall (reference FWD 19462 ^{57a}) in which SCAEF stressed that it would be necessary to have a clear agreement with the French, guaranteeing rights of passage through any part of the French zone lying contiguous to the west of the US zone. He added that this was essential not only prior to the transfer of US line of communication to Bremen but also thereafter, in order to carry to the French ports the great load of traffic to be redeployed southward.

2. I regret the insistence that the French accept southern Württemberg against their apparent desires since it involves the division and possible political obliteration of an important and historically liberal German federal unit.

It is noted that Ambassador Winant and Mr. Mosely have voiced objection to this solution which appears to us to be at variance with the directive to obtain the political decentralization of the Reich, the sound accomplishment of which would seem to depend on rebuilding and reviving the traditional federal units of Germany other than modern Prussia.

[Rome, June 28, 1945.]

Mr. Ambassador: I have the honor of transmitting to you the enclosed memorandum which recapitulates our views concerning Italian participation in the terms of unconditional surrender of Germany.

I take the liberty to draw your particular attention to this question, which is for us of great importance both in consideration of the necessity to define juridically Italy's position as a power participating in the war against Germany, and in providing in some way safeguards for Italian interests and citizens in German territory.

It is superfluous to emphasize that after nearly two years of Italian military cooperation in the war against the Germans our requests have a foundation in equity which appears evident and are, on the other hand, intended to regulate a situation in law and in fact that could not be, without advantage for anyone but of great detriment to us, left in the present state.

I shall be very grateful to you if you will explain this question to your government with kind urgency, and I beg you to believe, Mr. Ambassador, the assurances of my highest consideration.

DE GASPERI

 $^{^{58}\,\}mathrm{Transmitted}$ to the Department in despatch 1838, July 2, 1945, from Rome; received July 12.

[Enclosure—Translation]

Memorandum by the Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs (De Gasperi) to the American Ambassador (Kirk)

[Rome, undated.]

With the letter of September 12, 1944 ⁵⁹ of the Under Secretary of State, Marchese Visconti Venosta, addressed to the Ambassadors of the United States and Great Britain at Rome, the Italian Government advanced the question of Italian participation in the Armistice that was foreseen would be imposed on Germany.

Following upon the act of unconditional surrender by Germany signed May 7, 1945 60 by the representatives of the High Command of the Allied Expeditionary Forces and the Soviet High Command on one hand, and the German High Command on the other, with letter of May 12, 1945 61 the General Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 62 making references to the preceding letter of Marchese Visconti Venosta of September 12, 1944, took up again the question, informing that if the terms of military surrender would be followed by other terms defining the conditions of surrender and of Armistice, they should have been stipulated also in the name and in the interest of Italy, since she was a co-belligerent against Germany.

In Notes Verbale substantially identical, of dates May 26 and 29, 1945, 5 the American and British Embassies, referring to the request made in the letter of Marchese Visconti Venosta that Italy should be placed in a position to participate in the Armistice that had been imposed on Germany by the United Nations, communicated that such a request had been examined by the respective governments and that, consequently, the Italian Government was invited to submit its views in a non-official form, with regard to the agreements concerning the surrender of Germany, to the representatives in Rome of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and of the French Government for examination and eventual submission to the European Advisory Commission. The two Notes added that it was understood naturally that the Allied Governments did not accept beforehand any obligation in matters concerning the possibility of putting the views of the Italian Government into effect.

The Royal Minister of Foreign Affairs, referring to the invitation that has been tendered him, advances the following:

[Here follows summary of the terms of unconditional surrender of Germany signed May 7 and confirmed May 8, the June 5 declaration concerning the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany on the part of the Governments of the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and France, and the June 5 Four-Power statements concerning the zones of occupation in Germany, the control machinery in Germany, and consultation with governments of other nations.]

2. The Italian Government, with a view to putting forth, following upon the invitation that has been tendered to it, its views concerning the Italian position with regard to the agreements relative to the surrender of Germany, feels that it has to assume necessarily, as a point of departure, the position of Germany as defined by the terms above mentioned.

The first point that, in the opinion of the Italian Government, requires to be considered derives from the fact that Italy has not directly participated in the act of unconditional surrender of Germany as was envisaged in the letter of Marchese Visconti Venosta of September 12, 1944. Other states also which found themselves in a state of war with Germany have not directly participated in the said act, but they are included among the United Nations in the name of which the Allied High Command accepted and signed the act of surrender of Germany. Italy, not being one of the United Nations, finds itself in a position which with respect to juridical consequences should be regularized.

In this regard the Italian Government, making reference to the declaration of June 5, 1945, according to which the Governments of the four occupying powers, in the absence of a central German government, have temporarily assumed the exercises of "supreme authority in Germany", expresses the desire that the said Governments will recognize in due form that the terms relative to unconditional surrender of Germany are valid also with regard to Italy, which is a cobelligerent power having actively participated in military operations against Germany. The demand for such recognition is justified not only by the necessity to define juridically the position of Italy as a power participating in the war against Germany, but also from the particular importance of Italian interests in Germany and of the importance of safeguarding them.

The position of Italy which would result from such recognition in respect to Germany, in its relations with the Governments of the four occupying powers should later on allow, in view of the Italian Government, the following consequences:

- (a) The extension to Italian prisoners of war and internees in Germany of the conditions imposed on Germany insofar as they concern prisoners of war and citizens of the United Nations interned in the Reich;
- (b) The extension in favor of Italian ships which on the date of June 5, 1945 found themselves under German orders or control, of the arrangements adopted for the ships of the United Nations that on the date above indicated found themselves in the same conditions, except for further agreements with the Italian Government;

(c) The extension to Italian citizens, goods and interests in Germany for the period of Allied occupation the same protection and the same treatment under law and in fact reserved for the citizens, the goods and interests of the United Nations;

(d) The power of the Italian Government to nominate a mission accredited to the inter-Allied Council of Control in Germany as it is recognized to the "Other Governments of the United Nations Principally Interested" by paragraph 5 of the declaration of June 5, 1945, relative to the mechanism of control of Germany. The Italian mission accredited to the Control Council would have a special task of creating liaison between the Italian Government and the Control Council for questions relative to Italian interests in Germany (property interests of the State and of Italian citizens) and for the safeguarding of Italian citizens who find themselves in German territory.

(e) The taking into consideration also of the Italian Government in respect to the declaration by which the Governments of the four powers have announced their intention of consulting with other governments in matters concerning the exercising of supreme authority assumed by them in Germany.

The Italian Government, in making known its views concerning the position of Italy with respect to the present state of Germany, makes reservations for its demands for reparations from Germany, to be presented at the seat of the peace conference, to which she regards her participation necessary as a power that has taken part with the Allied Nations in the war against Germany.

The Royal Minister of Foreign Affairs begs the Ambassador of the United States of America to courteously bring the above to the attention of his Government and expresses the hope that the American Government, together with the Governments of the other powers occupying German territory, will take into solicitous and benevolent consideration the desiderata of the Italian Government in that spirit of friendly understanding which is necessary to bring about a peaceful European settlement.

Notes of a Conference, by the Commanding General, First Airborne Army (Parks) 66

Notes of Conference Between Marshal Zhukov and Soviet Repre-SENTATIVES, GENERAL CLAY AND US REPRESENTATIVES, GENERAL Weeks 67 and British Representatives at Marshal Zhukov's Headquarters on June 29, 1945, Beginning at 1430 Hours

Marshal Zhukov opened the meeting by saying the principal problem to be settled was the taking over of the Zones of Berlin and occupation by Russian forces of Germany west of Berlin. 68 He stated that apparently it would be necessary to discuss some things pertaining to the Big Three Conference 69 as well. Marshal Zhukov suggested discussing the problems of the agenda by paragraphs. All agreed that this was a good plan.

Marshal Zhukov desired to discuss the number of troops British and US desired to bring into Berlin Zone and what Soviets want to British Zone of Occupation in Germany.

68 For additional documentation regarding the entry of Allied military forces into Berlin and the establishment of access routes to Berlin, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, pp. 85-155 passim, and Truman, Year of Decisions, pp. 306-307.

Between July 17 and August 2, 1945, President Truman, Generalissimo Stalin, and Prime Minister Churchill (later Prime Minister Clement Attlee), with their advisers, met in conference at Berlin. For minutes and other records of the conference proceedings, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 31-606. For correspondence regarding the genesis and arrangements for the conference, see ibid., vol. 1, pp. 1-156.

Germany in his letter of April 7, 1948, to the Assistant Secretary of State for Occupied Areas, Charles Saltzman. This letter reads in part as follows: ". . . I enclose a copy of the complete notes made by the American representative of the conference between Marshal Zhukov, General Clay and General Weeks in Berlin on June 29, 1945. This was the meeting at which a number of decisions were taken regarding the practical features of the quadripartite occupation of Berlin and the use of the corridor Berlin-Helmstedt by railroad and air. As you understand, this agreement was never formalized, each party having made his own notes. However, during the interval that has elapsed since June 29, 1945, the lines of the agreement have become established by daily usage and practice." In a memorandum of April 1, 1948, to Maj. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, then Director of the Joint Staff of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Parks transmitted a copy of these notes and identified them as his own (Department of the Army Files). This meeting was described in Lucius D. Clay, Decision in Germany (Garden City, New York, 1950), pp. 24–27. The events of this meeting are summarized in telegram 87, June 30, 8 p. m., from the United States Political Adviser for Germany in Hoechst, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, p. 135.

keep there themselves. This problem is important because other points hinge on it—supplies, food, and movement of troops. US expect to bring approximately 30,000 troops. British somewhat less, perhaps 25,000, which would be the maximum, and almost all are administrative troops. Soviet forces will be about 25,000 within the zone of greater Berlin. The Marshal asked General Clay if the US expect to bring tanks. General Clav replied that one Armored Division with tanks will be part of the original force entering Berlin. Later it will be replaced with another type of division—an Airborne Infantry Division without tanks. British basis will be an Armored Division with a few tanks for a parade. Marshal Zhukov stated that Soviet troops consist mostly of Infantry, Service and QM 71 troops. General Clay stated the US plan was similar but at present only the Armored Division is available. Russians had no objections to the preliminary figures. Marshal Zhukov stated that if there were no further questions by British or Americans, discussion of paragraph 1 will be considered concluded. All agreed.

Second point Marshal Zhukov suggested was occupation of Berlin and Soviet occupation of western Germany. First the date and the order of movement of troops, and technical questions involved. General Clay said the planning date used by the US was 1 July, but it could be changed if desired by the Soviets. Marshal Zhukov requested British and US to express their points and then he would give his. The Marshal asked when the Americans can move out of German area west of Berlin. General Clay said withdrawal can begin on 1 July, moving in three phases taking nine days, which was an agreement discussed with Soviet Commanders on front lines so that Soviets can move in right behind. The Marshal desired to know if the question was that US couldn't move quicker, or that the Soviets couldn't follow. General Clay stated this was a tentative arrangement with Soviet Field Commanders. The Marshal stated they had no authority to make such a statement and that the entire area could be taken over in The Marshal added that Americans should not accept any statement from Field Commanders as final or authoritative; the occupation can be done with mobile forces in one day. The Soviets can move staff, billeting, and training troops right behind the American troops moving to the west. General Parks stated the Berlin District desired to retain Halle for staging of troops scheduled to go into Berlin. The Marshal asked what purpose necessitated retention of Halle since it was not large enough to stage the entire American Berlin occupation forces. General Parks stated that occupying troops had not been released from parent organizations and it is necessary to stage them at just one day's march from Berlin and SHAEF had obtained authority to use Halle for the staging area. Marshal Zhukov said it was agreeable to retain Halle for this purpose.

British stated they could evacuate Wismar (sic) pocket in one day, (Northern area), and the Southern pocket around Magdeburg in two days, unless it was desired by the Soviets to move them in step with the US forces alongside in which case it would take 6 days to conform. Soviets reminded British that the Southern sector of the area which they occupy requires a move of 85 kilometers in a straight line, 100 kilometers by road. British feel that important point is ability to deal with and make decisions with Soviet Field Commanders. Marshal Zhukov said it will be better to decide at the meeting and give an order. Marshal Zhukov indicated that local arrangements can be made to carry out the order, but the Field Commanders will not have the right to change the order. Agreed: One day for British withdrawal from its Northern sector, and two days for its Southern sector. General Clay mentioned six days for American sector. (This was changed later to four days, provided General Bradley 72 concurred.)

General Parks said that the break up of Berlin using nine days would be difficult, as it was necessary that the maximum number of troops be allowed in as quickly as possible. Marshal Zhukov asked if it would be possible for the Americans to clear out of Russian zone of Western Germany faster. General Clay said he thought it could be done in six days, but he would have to confirm with General Bradley. The Americans have a much greater distance to evacuate than the British. Marshal Zhukov said the guicker the move, the quicker the entry into Berlin. For instance, the QM and reconnaissance or billeting people can go into Berlin on perhaps 1 July, or 2, 3, 4, depending on time that troops are moving to west. For the British, if 1 July is starting day of movement to the west, recce 73 party could start on 1 July and main body on 4 July. Russians and British agreed, with Russians getting permission to send out recce parties into present British occupied territory for places to set up staffs, billeting, etc. The Soviets will furnish a list of the places they desire to reconnoiter and their recce parties will not have more than 100 men each, with a total of 1,000 or 1200 into the entire zone without tanks, artillery—just cars and motorcycles. In addition, the Soviets desired to inspect airdromes occupied by British in Northern zone. British stated that no airdromes are occupied by them in Russian zone to be, but that it was satisfactory for Soviets to make recce of the airdromes in the zone now occupied by British. It was decided that Soviets had complete agreement with British on the occupation of Berlin and German territory west of Berlin.

Marshal Zhukov stated the Soviets desired to do the same with the US forces up to the border. They had 12 scouting parties for ground reconnaissance and additional scouting parties for the airdromes. They will furnish a list of airdromes and spots they desire to reconnoiter. Airdromes are to be available for inspection on 2 July, a day after the ground spots. American can send Berlin recce parties on 1 July, and the main body can enter Berlin on day that movement is complete. General Parks indicated Berlin District desires to build up Berlin occupation force at Halle and use Halle-Dessau-Berlin autobahn to enter Berlin. 2nd Armored Division is now bivouacked near Halle and if it does not move into Berlin at the earliest possible moment, it will be in Soviet zone. Marshal Zhukov inquired why the troops must be in three groups instead of being in one place as a whole. It was explained that Halle is not large enough to hold such a force. General Clay then asked Marshal Zhukov why, if US forces release one-third of German-occupied area to Russians on first day, cannot US be permitted one-third of US occupation force into Berlin. Marshal Zhukov said this was impossible. General Clay then said he now had the impression that the Soviets would like to move into their area as soon as possible. If that was so, he would consult with American authorities and see if the move could not be done more quickly. Subject to confirmation tomorrow, we will set 4 July to be out of Russian zone and expect to move into Berlin District the last day we leave the Russian zone. General Parks stated he understood that troops will be allowed to bivouac as they are now settled until they are permitted to move to Berlin. This was agreed to by the Russians, although they desired the US forces to concentrate on the road to Berlin. General Parks states this could not be because it would disrupt the meager communications we now have. Soviets have allotted one road for Americans to use in entering Berlin. General Parks informed that it takes two days to move an Armored Division, so it was agreed they could start on 3 July and complete move by midnight 4-5 July, although during the moving time they will be in Russian Zone. This was agreeable to Marshal Zhukov. It was also agreed that billeting parties could start on 1 July, with main body closing in Berlin on day that evacuation of Russian zone is completed.

During the movement of British-American troops to the west, with the Soviet forces following, 1 to 2 kilometers will separate the Infantry troops and there will be 3 to 5 kilometers between Soviet armored vehicles and the tail of the British-American forces. This was agreed by all 3 Powers represented. British stated they have several guard posts and desired Russians to take over the strongpoints by advance Soviet parties. Marshal Zhukov stated there will be such a short time lapse between rear echelons and the forward Soviet elements that the take over of strong points will be simple. British suggested meeting of Soviet and British Field Commanders to decide on strong points to be taken over, which was agreed by Marshal Zhukov. Lt Gen Barker, ⁷⁴ a Corps Commander, will meet with Marshal Zhukov's Deputy ⁷⁵ at Kiel, and another Corps Commander will meet Marshal Zhukov's Chief of Staff ⁷⁶ near Magdeburg. General Clay requested a Soviet Liaison Officer come to Wiesbaden, Headquarters of General Bradley, to discuss security strong points in the American occupied zone. Col General Chuikov ⁷⁷ will fly to Wiesbaden tomorrow to call on General Bradley. Will bring an aide, an interpreter, and perhaps his Chief of Operations. Will leave Dresden at 1200 Moscow time. General Clay will have auto transport arranged to meet General Chuikov at the airfield.

Marshal Zhukov raised the question of Soviet citizens—former prisoners—displaced persons, and German nationals. Marshal Zhukov requested that camps be kept intact so that Russian military authorities can take them over. Russians do not want to take over any captured Germans nor any wounded or sick prisoners. Russians suggest that Americans take over and remove displaced persons, but not Russians. General Clay said the Americans will allow those who desire not to go, to remain, but will take no Russian citizens except by mistake which will be corrected later. Marshal Zhukov said displaced persons should be turned over to their respective Governments to which General Clay replied that this would have to be referred to the Governments. British have few displaced persons, but they have 70,000 military prisoners. Russians insist that British march them, 50 kilometers a day if necessary, to get them out of Russian sphere. It would be permissible to keep British guards with prisoners which will enable an orderly movement to the west. Russians asked for length of time required, but British were unable to make definite commitment. British stated, however, they will notify time of movement, will provide the food and will move the German prisoners as soon as they can. Regarding Russian citizens, Marshal Zhukov desired 3 day's food in British area and 5 day's in American area after evacuation. This food was only for those Russians who were in camps, as those now feeding by other means would continue to do as they have been. General Clay said the food situation in American zone was critical and he was unable to make such a commitment as requested. It was finally agreed that Americans would be responsible for food up to 4 July, when they leave 1st zone, up to 5 July, when they leave 2nd zone, and up to 7 July, when they clear last zone. British said they would feed Russian citizens through the time they occupied the Russian area and will let as much food as possible but cannot guarantee three days additional. Will consult status of food situation and let Marshal Zhukov know tomorrow. Marshal Zhukov asked that German prisoners not be released in Russian zone, to which the British agreed. General Clay, in agreeing not to dismiss prisoners, stated that it must be left for Governmental decision in the near future inasmuch as zone prisoners had already been released. Marshal Zhukov stated apparently the Control Council will discuss that problem next time it meets.

Next paragraph dealt with roads and railroads and order of movement. Marshal Zhukov stated he received requests for railroads from Berlin to Hamburg and Bremen, Berlin-Stendal-Hannover, Berlin-Brandenburg-Magdeburg-Hannover, and a 21/2 kilometer rail line within the Russian zone; that he had requests for two highways, one from Berlin through Dessau, Halle, Erfurt, Eisenach, Kassel to Frankfurt, and the other from Berlin-Magdeburg-Braunschweig; and requests for air lanes from Berlin to Bremen as well as Berlin to Frankfurt. It was apparent that all roads and lanes cut across Russian Zone of Occupation and due to the necessity of protecting these roads and lanes an extremely difficult administrative problem arises. Marshal Zhukov stated that one railway and one highway should be enough to feed and supply a small garrison of 50,000 troops, the overall combined figure of British and American occupying forces. He cannot agree to two air lines and suggests as substitute a route from Berlin through Magdeburg and Goslar. That would be 50 kilometers longer, which isn't too much flying. General Clay defended requests for several roads and two air lines. 78 American sole port is Bremen in Northwest Germany, our occupation area is in Southwest Germany, and Berlin is the administrative occupation zone. It is necessary to have freedom of access and rights on roads and lanes. have not asked for exclusive use of the roads and lanes, but must have rights to use them as we need. Marshal Zhukov stated he is not turning down the right but the Soviet authorities are not expected to give any corridor. If Americans do not like route through Magdeburg it can be changed but Marshal Zhukov chose Magdeburg route because it was a central lane, reasonable to both British and American forces. The railway and highway both go through Magdeburg and the central route would be most economical. General Clay asked only for right to move without restriction under whatever Russian regulations are set down. Marshal Zhukov asked if French will have any additional requirements to which General Clay replied that he didn't think so, but British and Americans cannot speak for them. It was agreed to accept Magdeburg-Berlin railway, the gauge of which has not been changed and will not be changed without prior notice to British and Regarding Magdeburg bridge, it was agreed that it will be rebuilt with American material and Russian engineers. ish agreed not to make further demands for the Hamburg-Berlin rail-It was agreed to accept the autobahn Hannover-Magdeburg-Brandenburg-Berlin road for use by both British and American forces. Marshal Zhukov asked that US forces release request for other roads. General Clay accepted the one road with right reserved to reopen question at the Control Council in the event the one road is not satisfactory. Marshal Zhukov stated that possibly all points discussed at this conference may be changed.

General Parks stated that movement of American occupying troops from Halle into Berlin will require at least two weeks. Marshal Zhukov said it was impossible for them to be delayed more than 4 days as the Soviets will be requiring the road for their own troop movement and supply. General Parks urged strongly to General Clay not to release the road from Halle to Berlin, but General Clay said he couldn't hold up negotiations for one short road. General Clay then stated that if the Halle-Berlin road were released, it would be necessary to have a staging area in Magdeburg which Marshal Zhukov said would not be objectionable. General Parks brought up question of Signal Communications stating that long lines—formerly German cables—have been put in shape and now are operating all the way from Frankfurt to Leipzig. They will be the main communication link to Frankfurt for the conference and must be serviced by American troops. Marshal Zhukov stated this question would be settled in discussion of next paragraph. General Clay asked for unlimited access to roads and Marshal Zhukov stated he did not understand just what the British and Americans desired. It will be necessary for vehicles to be governed by Russian road signs, military police, document checking, but no inspection of cargo—the Soviets are not interested in what is being hauled, how much, or how many trucks are moving. This was agreeable to all 3 Powers represented. change of forces for occupation of Berlin and German territory west of Berlin will not have passes due to the imminence of the move. There were no objections to all points and agreement established.

Signal communications were the basis of next paragraph for discussion. Marshal Zhukov stated there is a big cable between Berlin and Leipzig which joins with Frankfurt. This cable is underground and not subject to damage or breakage like an overhead line. It will have Russian repair and Russian guard. Where the cable is in the American territory, it should be brought up to high standard by the Americans and maintained. Any part which later comes under Russian control will be maintained by the Russians after they have taken Whenever American or British authorities desire to inspect lines they are welcome to do so at any time and can come in with Soviet pass. Vehicles can be sent into Russian zone at any time with Soviet pass to inspect, repair, and supply teams within the Russian zone. This cable should be big enough to handle both British and American requirements. The British made reservation to request another line from Hannover through Magdeburg to Berlin, which they have constructed thus far to Magdeburg. This is an overland line and would be completed with Russian permission to do so. This cable will be discussed again soon, possibly in Berlin with Control There was discussion as to the possibility of an underground cable from Berlin to Hannover but neither the Soviets nor the British knew if it was there.

The plan of radio communications for conference is completed. US forces desire radio relay points between Berlin District and Frankfurt as we can get better transmission and speech circuits. This question will be discussed by technical experts of Signal Divisions of each nation concerned. British and Americans asked that decisions be left with specialists which was agreed by all parties. Radio telephone for Washington to be used during conference has been agreed upon.

The next point for discussion was air ways and rights. Russians stated they gave best airdrome to US and British for conference. Gatow has been designated for full use by both British and American delegations. Russians maintain right of exterior guard and will furnish necessary mess and housekeeping personnel if desired. Guard for fuel hangars, etc., will be responsibility of British and Americans on field. Soviets will exercise no control within the field.

After conference, Gatow becomes British field as it lies within British zone according to Soviet official map. Staaken is in the Russian zone and Russians expected British to give Russians the buildings which are in the British zone. British countered that they had not counted on Gatow and expected to get Staaken from the Russians inasmuch as the buildings were within the British zone. Templehof goes to the Americans which was readily agreed. General Weeks stated that his map supposedly official, did not show Gatow in the British zone. Marshal Zhukov stated flatly that Staaken was not available as it was being prepared for another delegation. Gatow will handle all aircraft incident to conference and all authorities have agreed. British desired Gatow and Staaken airfields considered by Governments later or by the Control Council. This was satisfactory.

Americans can move in recce party onto Templehof on 2 July and take over the field on the 4th. This was agreed. Marshal Zhukov asked if an occasional aircraft could land at Templehof and General Hill stated there would be no objection.

General Hill asked for authority to fly in an arc bounded by Hamburg, Berlin and Frankfurt, using whatever direct route to Berlin was required depending on originating point of flight without restriction, and authority to fly 50 miles east of Berlin for instrument landing. Marshal Zhukov stated he would report to his Government that the Americans and British will accept an air lane with the understanding that we operate under US and British regulations, notifying Soviet authorities with the same notice given US and British authorities. For a short while there will be no answer from the Governments; therefore, there should be no problem with previous agreements about aircraft coming into Berlin area. Americans and British will accede to Russian request to notify Soviets one hour before take off time, or arrival over Soviet territory, giving number of aircraft and destination.

Regarding air lanes into Berlin, the main lane from Magdeburg to Berlin will be used. From Magdeburg one lane goes to the southwest to Frankfurt and the other to Hannover to the American and British centers respectively. British and Americans will present the air lane picture to their Governments and give confirmation to Soviets tomorrow.

General Parks asked for permission to bring in an additional 100 vehicles and 500 men to implement force at Babelsberg charged with getting conference area established. Authority was granted by Marshal Zhukov. General Hill asked when the Soviets would vacate Gatow and was told that they can be moved whenever Americans and British desire to take over.

General Weeks stated that he asked British Mission to Moscow to secure permission to bring in troops in a signal dated about 22 June and Marshal Zhukov stated that he had not yet received authority from Moscow. Marshal Zhukov stated further that all requests received had been honored. He also stated that any additional reasonable request would be granted. British desired to bring in 3,500 and the Marshal stated there wasn't room to accommodate them in the compound. Authority was given for 1,500 to 2,000 more and after 4 July they will be able to move in whatever they please. General Weeks stated that they had secured additional space thru Col Gen Kruglov and could accommodate the requested number of men to which Marshal Zhukov replied that 3,000 troops could come in subject to billeting area designated by General Kruglov.

6595. Comea 308. Urtel 5294, June 29. I have noted Dept's addition "and the consequent adjustments in zones of the other three forces", to draft paragraph of report transmitting agreement French zone in Germany (mytel 6544, June 28, repeated Paris 412). Dept will meanwhile have considered June 29 EAC discussion re division Greater Berlin (mytel 6583, June 29, repeated Paris 416) showing clash of UK and Soviet views.

Original US draft designed expedite immediate settlement French zone in Germany without prejudicing redivision Berlin. From June 29 EAC discussion seems probable Soviet representative EAC is instructed insist on either (1) direct statement that French area in Berlin will be formed from US, UK areas by agreement between US, UK, French commanders; or (2) specific definition US, UK, French areas in Berlin for inclusion in draft agreement on French zone leaving Soviet Berlin area unchanged. UK Delegation is instructed insist reconsideration all four areas in Berlin.

Since urtel 5294 crossed mytel 6583, US Delegation will await Dept's comments remytel 6583. In signing today on behalf of my Govt agreement on zones of occupation in Germany and administration of "Greater Berlin," recommended to four Govts by EAC, I inform you on instruction of my Govt that the French Govt assures to the US forces of occupation the right of free passage across and above the French passage [zone] of occupation. It is understood that the US forces will exercise exclusive control over US constructed bridges over the Rhine and US constructed communication facilities built in Germany with the right of passage and use for French forces over these US constructed bridges and facilities in or leading into the French zone. Detailed arrangements regarding these matters will be worked out by mutual agreement between the French Commander in Chief and the US Commander in Chief in Germany. End of Text.

Suggestion of "exclusive control" instead of "exclusive right" seems appropriate since reference is made below to French "right of passage."

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of War (McCloy) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

Washington [Babelsberg], 17 July 1945.

General Clay advises me today that he has tentatively worked out with General Weeks, Deputy Military Governor of the British Zone, an agreement that a French Area of Occupation in the City of Berlin will be formed from the existing areas allocated to the United Kingdom and the United States Forces of Occupation. It would seem appropriate now to inform Ambassador Winant that agreement with the British and French on this point seems likely and to request that he agree in the European Advisory Commission with the British, the Russians and the French that the matter may be referred to the Control Council for Germany for settlement, with the understanding that the French Zone will be created out of the areas presently assigned to the United States and the United Kingdom Forces.

General Clay expects to confer with General Weeks and General Koeltz ^{82a} on this matter on Thursday ⁸³ and to work out a definitive scheme, subject to final ratification by the Joint Chiefs of Staff if that turns out to be necessary.⁸⁴

On June 5, 1945 the Governments of the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the Provisional Government of the French Republic issued a statement on the zones of occupation in Germany, which contained the following provision:

"Each of the four Powers may, at its discretion, include among the forces assigned to occupation duties under the command of its Commander-in-Chief, auxiliary contingents from the forces of any other Allied Power which has actively participated in military operations against Germany."

In as much as the Luxembourg Government would find particularly agreeable the use of its forces in the occupation of German territories on the borders of Luxembourg, it is believed that the Luxembourg Government will wish to direct its request primarily to the Power occupying German territory adjacent to Luxembourg. Final agreement with regard to the zones of occupation in Germany has not yet been ratified, but according to present plans the zone to be occupied by United States forces does not include German territory adjacent to Luxembourg.

Field Marshal Montgomery stated that he had been authorized by his government to offer the two districts of Reinickendorf and Wedding, including the Hermann Goering Barracks, to the French as their sector in Berlin. General Koenig stated that he had been authorized by the French Government to accept this offer. General Eisenhower agreed with these views and stated that he would make available all possible facilities for the French occupation of their sector. Marshal Zhukov stated that since this decision did not affect the Russian sector, he had no observations to offer. The Council agreed that certain details regarding the French sector should be worked out by the Deputies to the British, French, and American Commanders, respectively. General Koenig requested that facilities should be given to the French to enable them to effect rapid occupation of their sector in Berlin. The other three members of the Council agreed that their Deputies would assist General Koenig's Deputy in every way possible to effect this.97 any of the three representatives had proposals or suggestions to put forward, these would be communicated to his colleagues. No further meetings have taken place and no proposals have been put forward.

- 3. In the course of discussion of a memorandum submitted by the Soviet delegation on the administration of the Ruhr,³ Marshal Stalin remarked at the 11th plenary meeting at Potsdam on July 31st last that, whereas previously the three Heads of the three Governments had rather favoured the idea of dismembering Germany after the war, more recently their views seemed to have been modified.⁴ In his proclamation of May 9th last to the Soviet people Marshal Stalin said that the Soviet Union "did not intend either to dismember or to destroy Germany".
- 4. Mr. Bevin agrees with Marshal Stalin that the views previously held have been modified. This seems to him to be confirmed by the general trend of the Berlin Conference and in particular by the agreement concluded there on "the principles to govern the treatment of Germany in the initial control period" which prescribes, amongst other things, uniformity of treatment of German civilian population, treatment of Germany as an economic unit and, subject to a general policy of decentralization, the establishment of certain essential central German administrative departments.
- 5. Mr. Balfour is instructed to inquire whether the United States Government agree that in the light of the above circumstances there is no need for the Committee set up at the Crimea Conference to proceed with the work allotted to it.

[Washington,] 1 January 1945.

PENDING DRAFT DIRECTIVES 6 PREPARED BY THE U.S. ADVISERS EAC,7 NOT ACTED UPON BY THIS COMMITTEE OR BY THE JCS 8

1. The draft directives, which are listed in Appendix A, prepared by the United States Advisers, European Advisory Commission, have not as yet been acted upon, either by this committee or by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. At conferences 10 preceding the dispatch from the State Department to Ambassador Winant 11 of the Cable No. 10371, dated 12 December 1944 12 (Annex B to Appendix "A" SWNCC 113), it was determined that no further draft directives would be submitted for the criticism of the War and Navy Departments or of the Joint Chiefs of Staff at this time. The draft directives listed in Appendix "B" 14 have been the subject of comment already transmitted to London, although in two instances (JCS Memo for Information 341 and JCS Memo for Information 346 15) revised drafts of directives, criti-

The United States Delegation on the European Advisory Commission during ¹⁹⁴⁴ prepared and forwarded to Washington for comment and clearance a series of suggested policy statements to meet the short-range problems of the occupation in Germany. These suggestions were drafted as directives designed, after approval by the Governments, to be issued by the Governments to each of the Commanders in Chief in Germany in order to provide them with a basis for uniform action. cized at an earlier date here, have been submitted by the United States Advisers in London for further comment which has not yet been furnished.

- 2. It has been brought to my attention that it may be helpful to the United States Advisers, EAC, to have prepared in summary form statements of policy on points not dealt with either in JCS 1067 as presently revised ¹⁷ or in draft directives hitherto approved in Washington. As stated in the above mentioned cable of 12 December 1944, any such statements of policy should be confined to broad basic principles and should not deal with details of procedures or administration. It seems to me desirable to have the ad hoc subcommittee on German matters, either directly or through subsidiary working parties, prepare such statements of policy, so that this committee may be ready (either directly or after consulting the Joint Chiefs of Staff) to assist the State Department in furnishing to London general guidance on points of policy as to which no guidance has heretofore been furnished.
- 3. It is requested, therefore, that the draft directives listed in Appendix "A" be referred to the ad hoc subcommittee on German affairs for study, recommendation, and the preparation of appropriate statements of policy confined to broad basic policy principles not dealt with in JCS 1067, as presently revised, or in directives hitherto approved for transmittal to London.

105. Comea 18 142. For the Secretary and Assistant Secretary Dunn. Tuesday's 19 meeting of the European Advisory Commission brought to light certain unexpected obstacles to an early discussion of the treatment of United Nations prisoners of war found in Germany upon surrender or collapse. You will recall that in its memorandum to Eden ²⁰ of October 25 (my despatch 19746 of December 8²¹), the Soviet Government gave the highest priority to this question. On December 1 the Commission agreed to set up a committee on this problem (my 10609, December 1, 6 p, m., Comea 132 22). At the time the Russians were willing to act, I was left without instructions.

On Tuesday Strang's 23 pressing of Gousev 24 to begin immediate discussion of this problem led to a flareup between them. Gousev pointed out the great Soviet interest in the problem because of the large numbers of Soviet citizens who have suffered inhumane treatment at German hands. He also stressed the current Soviet resentment over the treatment and status of Soviet nationals captured by Allied armies. Gousev insisted with considerable emotion that it was contrary both to international law and to good relations among Allies for British military authorities to treat captured Soviet nationals as prisoners of war, and stated in conclusion that in view of the failure to find a satisfactory solution to this problem, especially between the United Kingdom and Soviet Governments, he had no instructions regarding participation in discussion of United Nations prisoners of war. When Strang pressed for discussions on United Nations prisoners of war found in Germany on surrender as a subject distinct from the current problem, Gousev insisted that those questions were closely bound together.

In this connection, I recall my conversations with officials of the International Red Cross prior to our being in the war. I urged Maisky 25 to intercede with his Government in favor of adhering to the Hague and Geneva conventions,26 but at that time the Russians seemed little interested.27 The losses which Russia has suffered in manpower and the brutal treatment of Russians in German-occupied areas, which aroused the sympathy of the Russian people and reacted on their Government, have been responsible for a change of policy. In the last few months the Soviet Government has shown a desire to relieve and assist their own people who have fallen into German hands, regardless of the military or paramilitary uses to which the Germans have put them. I also find a growing impression that the Soviet Government would accept the return of white Russians with the exception of a few outstanding anti-Soviet personalities. This new attitude may be accounted for by an unwillingness to save [have?] small unfriendly minority Russian groups in other countries.

I thought you ought to have this additional background on the Soviet attitude toward Allied treatment of captured Soviet nationals, especially as it may affect the status of American prisoners of war captured by the Russian forces in eastern Germany. In view of the Russians' constant emphasis on their equal role as a great power and their recurring insistence on what they interpret as reciprocity in inter-Allied relations, it is possible that they may decide to organize American war prisoners captured in Germany during the operational period as labor battalions behind the Russian lines. I do not want to be a party to inaction in respect to safeguarding the interests of our soldiers who are prisoners of war.

While the question of the current status of Soviet prisoners is naturally a matter for negotiation in Washington and at SHAEF,28 I believe it would be most helpful in strengthening our position and in safeguarding the future welfare of our prisoners, 90% of whom are located in eastern Germany, if I could be furnished with instructions as I requested on October 24 (my 9134, 7 p. m., Comea 11629) and on December 1.30 In the opinion of my joint advisers and General Barker, G-1, ETOUSA and SHAEF, 31 the revised United States draft directive on prisoners of war (see my 11158, December 15, 9 p. m.³²) fully safeguards American interests. Early circulation of the United States directive in the EAC would, I feel, convince the Russians of our good will towards their prisoners and might help a great deal in securing early consideration for this vital question. with regard to the revision of the proposed interim directive (JCS 1067)³⁷ on Germany and that we had not discussed with the Treasury any of the papers submitted to the European Advisory Commission. With regard to 1067 I explained that the revision was being undertaken at the request of the War Department and that it was up to them to have so indicated if they desired Treasury participation. (I did not say so but Mr. McCloy definitely told me that he did not want Treasury participation in the revision discussions. He undertook to clear the revised paper with the Treasury afterwards.)

As regards the larger question of discussion of all EAC papers with the Treasury, I should like to present some important considerations. Of course any questions having to do with the financial aspects of treatment of Germany should and would be discussed with the Treasury before transmission to our representative on the EAC. As it happens, no such questions (aside from the financial section of 1067) have yet arisen. All matters which to date we have studied and transmitted to the EAC have had to do with political and military matters and they have been carefully and sometimes at considerable length coordinated with the War and Navy Departments before transmission. The functions of the EAC in recommending governmental policy are highly important in the political field of our foreign relations. this reason the American representative on the EAC is a representative of the State Department, the American Ambassador at London. I know of few questions in the field of foreign policy of importance equal to the treatment of Germany and to take the position that our instructions to our Ambassador in this field should be subject to review or approval of the Treasury Department would, in my opinion, be tantamount to abdication of our traditional function as the instrument for the execution of the President's foreign policy. Treasury's position that they should be consulted with regard to political instructions to our representative on the EAC seems to me analogous to a claim on our part that the Treasury should consult the State Department on the timing, amount and interest rate of a war bond issue, or on a new tax program.)

Aside from the important question of principle involved, we have the practical question of urgency. You are aware of the long delays we have encountered in obtaining clearance for the many urgent papers by the War and Navy Departments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. If to this is added the need for clearing with the Treasury Department, I should hate to forecast how long it would take to get Winant the instructions for which he has in recent weeks been so urgently pleading.

³⁷ See footnote 17, p. 370.

(By the foregoing I do not wish to imply that we should not exchange views with the Treasury on the question of the long-term economic treatment of Germany. I am referring specifically to Mr. Morgenthau's complaint that our EAC papers are not communicated to or drafted in consultation with the Treasury Department.)

Washington, January 6, 1945-midnight.

152. In reply to your 11453, December 27, 10 a. m., 38 in the absence of likelihood of early approval of JCS 1067 by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, a redraft thereof to make the document suitable for presentation to EAC has been completed and is now going forward to Ambassador Winant for presentation to the EAC. 39 The revision is quite similar in context to JCS 1067. The War and Navy Departments attach great importance to 1067.

The purpose of paragraph 8 (a) of JCS 1067 was to lay down a much more stringent policy of clearing out all Nazi influences than was pursued in Italy 40 with respect to Fascists, and particular stress is laid on this paragraph which has not been changed in the revision. The Italian policy in retrospect is regarded as having been mild even for Italy and definitely inappropriate for Germany. Nazis are considered much more dangerous than any analogous Italian groups. Accordingly it is our view that a more rigorous policy should be followed in Germany and such a policy for the post-defeat period in Germany was agreed upon by State, War and Treasury Departments in JCS 1067 and has not been changed. Although paragraph 8 (a) is intentionally more stringent than the policy pursued in Italy, it is an attempt to do a more thorough purging but at the same time to be sufficiently flexible to meet the necessities of practical administration.

Under these circumstances, and in the absence of agreed EAC policies and of a further directive from CCS,⁴¹ it is believed that you should exert every effort to inject the thinking of JCS 1067 into policies formulated for the SHAEF post-surrender period and toward bending the pre-surrender directive 42 to SHAEF in a manner which will make it as consistent as possible with the policies outlined in 1067.

Memorandum by the Secretary of the Treasury (Morgenthau) to the Secretary of State

Washington, January 11, 1945.

There is attached a memorandum which I am sending to the President, relating to the problem of what to do with Germany after her defeat.

I am looking forward to discussing the German problem with you next Wednesday.48

HENRY MORGENTHAU

[Annex]

Memorandum by the Secretary of the Treasury (Morgenthau) to President Roosevelt

[Washington,] January 10, 1945.

During the last few months we have been giving further study to the problem of what to do with Germany after her defeat.

We are more convinced than ever that if we really mean to deprive Germany of the ability to make war again within a few years it is absolutely essential that she be deprived of her chemical, metallurgical and electrical industries. We don't think that this alone will guarantee peace, but that it is one of the steps we must take now.

We base this conclusion on the following premises, which seem to us unassailable:

 The German people have the will to try it again.
 Programs for democracy, re-education and kindness cannot destroy this will within any brief time.

(3) Heavy industry is the core of Germany's warmaking potential.

Nearly all Americans grant the first point. A few, such as Dorothy Thompson,44 appear to disagree with the second; but all that we know and have learned recently—our experience with war prisoners, for instance—seems to argue against them. As to the third, America's own accomplishments in four years seem to us a shining lesson of what an equally versatile people can do. Our industry was converted from the world's greatest peacetime producer in 1940 to the world's greatest producer of military weapons in 1944. The Germans are versatile. Leave them the necessary heavy industry to build on and they can work as fast and as effectively as we.

The more I think of this problem, and the more I hear and read discussions of it, the clearer it seems to me that the real motive of most of those who oppose a weak Germany is not any actual disagreement on these three points. On the contrary, it is simply an expression of fear of Russia and communism. It is the twenty-year-old idea of a "bulwark against Bolshevism"—which was one of the factors that brought this present war down on us.

Because the people who hold this view are unwilling (for reasons which, no doubt, they regard as statesmanlike) to come out in the open and lay the real issue on the table, all sorts of smoke screens are thrown up to support the proposition that Germany must be rebuilt. amples are:

(a) The fallacy that Europe needs a strong industrial Germany.(b) The contention that recurring reparations (which would require immediate reconstruction of the German economy) are necessary so that Germany may be made to pay for the destruction she has caused.

(c) The naïve belief that the removal or destruction of all German war materials and the German armament industry would in itself prevent Germany from waging another war.

(d) The illogical assumption that a "soft" peace would facilitate the growth of democracy in Germany.

(e) The fallacy that making Germany a predominantly agricultural country, with light industries but no heavy industries, would mean starving Germans.

We can submit to you studies which in our opinion will demonstrate that these propositions and others leading to the same conclusions are false.

This thing needs to be dragged out into the open. I feel so deeply about it that I speak strongly. If we don't face it I am just as sure as I can be that we are going to let a lot of hollow and hypocritical propaganda lead us into recreating a strong Germany and making a foe of I shudder for the sake of our children to think of what will Russia. follow.

There is nothing that I can think of that can do more at this moment to engender trust or distrust between the United States and Russia than the position this Government takes on the German problem.

P.S.: I have given a copy of this to Ed Stettinius.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, January 13, 1945.

The Secretary of State refers to the Department's telegram no. 10371 of December 12, 1944 ⁴⁵ relative to the presentation to the European Advisory Commission of a general directive on Germany. In accordance with the information given in that telegram, there is transmitted herewith a copy of "Directive to Commander-in-Chief of U.S. (U.K.) (U.S.S.R.) Forces of Occupation regarding the Military Government of Germany in the Period Immediately Following the Cessation of Organized Resistance (Post Defeat)". The financial section of this directive is not included; it is being given further study here and will be transmitted at a later date.

This draft directive is a revision of JCS 1067 which has been approved by the State, War and Navy Departments. It is transmitted for presentation to the European Advisory Commission as an American proposal for an over-all directive.

The British Ambassador in Washington ⁴⁶ has already indicated that his Government is ready to discuss this document in the European Advisory Commission and it is hoped that negotiations thereon in the Commission can be undertaken as soon as possible.

DIRECTIVE TO COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF U.S. (U.K.) (U.S.S.R.) FORCES OF OCCUPATION REGARDING THE MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF GERMANY IN THE PERIOD IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE CESSATION OF ORGANIZED RESISTANCE (POST DEFEAT) 47

[Washington,] January 6, 1945.

1. This directive is issued to you as Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. forces of occupation and is intended to cover the establishment of military government over Germany on a tripartite basis and to lay down certain policies with respect to the administration of civil affairs in Germany for the initial period after the end of organized resistance in Germany. Identical directives are being issued simul-

⁴⁶ Lord Halifax.

⁴¹ Filed separately under 740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2245. A note by the Secretariat of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee entitled "Redraft of JCS 1067 as a Tripartite Directive (Initial Post-Defeat Directive Germany)", designated SWNCC 2, dated January 8, 1945, reads as follows:

[&]quot;1. At its meeting on 6 January 1945 the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee agreed to recommend to the Secretary of State that the enclosed redraft of JCS 1067 be transmitted to the United States Representative in the European taneously to the Commanders-in-Chief of the U.K. and U.S.S.R. forces of occupation. From time to time supplemental directives will be issued to you.

- 2. In carrying out this directive, you will, in matters affecting Germany as a whole, act jointly with the Commanders-in-Chief of the armed forces of the U.K. and the U.S.S.R. The three Commanders-in-Chief acting jointly, will constitute a Control Council which will be the supreme organ of control over Germany in accordance with the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, herewith attached as Annex A. The agreed policies of the Control Council shall be determinative throughout the Zones. Subject to such policies the administration of military government in each of the three zones of occupation shall be the sole responsibility of the Commanders-in-Chief of the forces occupying each zone. You should, however, coordinate your administration with that of the other Commanders-in-Chief through the Control Council. The administration of each zone and of the regional and local branches of any centrally directed German agencies shall be such as to insure that all policies formulated by the Control Council will be uniformly put into effect throughout Germany.
- 3. Prior to the defeat or surrender of Germany the primary objective of the administration of civil affairs has been to aid and support the military objective: the prompt defeat of the enemy. The primary objectives now are the occupation and administration of a conquered country with only such military operations as are necessary for the complete elimination of all resistance.
- 4. Pending receipt of directives containing long-range policies your objectives must be of short-term and military character in order not to prejudice whatever ultimate policies may be later determined. Germany will not be occupied for the purpose of liberation but as a defeated enemy nation. The clear fact of German military defeat and the inevitable consequences of aggression must be appreciated by all levels of the German population. The German people must be made to understand that all necessary steps will be taken to guarantee against a renewed attempt by them to conquer the world. Your aim Advisory Commission for use as a basis of tripartite negotiations in the European Advisory Commission and as representing the United States view on the matters covered in the paper. The redraft is designed to rephrase that paper (originally in the form of a directive from the Combined Chiefs of Staff to a combined theater commander) as a directive from each of the three governments (U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R.) to its commander-in-chief. Such a redraft was necessary in order to put JCS 1067 in an appropriate form for discussion (as requested by the British Ambassador) in the European Advisory Commission rather than in the form of a Combined Chiefs of Staff directive. Certain changes were also appropriate in view of the recently approved Control Machinery Protocol (JCS 1130, 1130/1, and 1130/2)."

The note is signed by Wallace E. Whitson, Kelvin Nutting, and Harold W. Mosely of the Secretariat of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee.

is not oppression, but to prevent Germany from ever again becoming a threat to the peace of the world. In the accomplishment of this objective the elimination of Nazism and militarism in any of their forms and the immediate apprehension of war criminals for punishment are essential steps. It is envisaged that control or surveillance of Germany will be maintained in some form for a prolonged period, and that military government will, when practicable, be replaced by other methods of control involving smaller commitment of forces. Military government should be so conducted as to facilitate the orderly development of forces and the tendencies within German life which will be conducive to the future introduction of less direct forms of control.

- 5. Your occupation and administration will be just but firm and aloof. You will strongly discourage fraternization between your troops and the German officials and population.
- 6. The rights, powers and status of the military government in Germany are based upon the unconditional surrender or defeat of Germany. The text of the instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany is attached hereto as Annex B.⁴⁸ The provisions set forth in this instrument will be imposed on Germany and fully implemented as a matter of Allied policy even though the defeat of Germany is not followed by a formal signing of this instrument.
- 7. a. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing Article 2, you are by virtue of your position clothed with supreme legislative, executive and judicial authority in the areas occupied by forces under your command. This authority will be broadly construed and includes authority to take all measures deemed by you necessary, desirable or appropriate in relation to military exigencies and the objectives of a firm military government.
- b. You are authorized at your discretion to delegate the authority herein granted to you in whole or in part to members of your command and further to authorize them at their discretion to make appropriate sub-delegations.
- c. You should take the necessary measures to enforce the terms of surrender and complete the disarmament of Germany.
- d. The Military Government shall be a military administration which will show the characteristics of an Allied undertaking acting in the interests of the United Nations.
- 8. The military government personnel in each zone, including those in regional and local branches of the departments of the central German administrative machinery, shall be selected by the commander-inchief of that zone except that liaison officers of other nationality may be furnished by the commanders of the other two zones. The respective commanders-in-chief shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the members of the armed forces under their command and over the civilians who accompany them throughout the whole of Germany.

- 9. Representatives of civilian agencies of the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R. governments and of other Allied governments shall, if permitted to function in Germany, be subject to the authority of the military government. United Nations' organizations which may be admitted by the Control Council to operate in Germany will, in respect of their activities in Germany, be subordinate to the Allied control machinery and answerable to it.
- 10. Military administration shall be directed toward the promotion of the decentralization of the political structure of Germany. You may utilize in the beginning whatever German administrative agencies may serve the purposes of military government. You will wherever possible, however, endeavor to make use of and strengthen local municipal and regional administrative organs.
- 11. Appendix "A", Political Directive; Appendix "B", Financial Directive: Appendix "C", Economic Directive; and Appendix "D", Relief Directive, are attached hereto.

APPENDIX "A"

POLITICAL DIRECTIVE

- 1. You will search out, arrest, and hold, pending receipt by you of further instructions as to their disposition, all persons included in the following list of categories:
 - a. Adolf Hitler and his chief Nazi associates;
- b. All persons suspected of having committed war crimes and other offenses:
- c. Officials of the Nazi Party and its formations (Gliederungen), affiliated associations (angeschlossene Verbande), and supervised organizations (betreute Organisationen), down to and including Local Group Leaders (Ortsgruppenleiter) and officials of equivalent rank; d. All members of the political police, including the Gestapo 49 and Sicherheitsdienst der S.S.; 50

e. The officers and non-commissioned officers of the Waffen S.S.⁵¹ and all members of the other branches of the S.S.:

f. All General Staff Corps officers:

q. Officials of the police holding a rank, or equivalent positions of authority, above that of Lieutenant;

h. Officers of the SA 52 holding commissioned rank;

i. The leading officials of all ministries and other high political officials down to and including urban and rural burgermeister and officials of equivalent rank, and those persons who have held similar positions, either civil or military, in the administration of countries occupied by Germany;

j. Nazis and Nazi sympathizers holding important and key positions in (1) National and Gau civic and economic organizations; (2) corporations and other organizations in which the government has a major financial interest; (3) industry, commerce, agriculture, and finance; (4) education; (5) the judiciary; and (6) the press, publishing houses and other agencies disseminating news and propaganda. It may generally be assumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that any persons holding such positions are Nazis or Nazi sympathizers;

k. All judges, prosecutors and officials of the People's Court (Volksgericht), Special Courts (Sondergerichte), and other extraordinary courts created by the Nazi regime;

l. Any national of any of the United Nations or associated states who is believed to have committed offenses against his national law in support of the German war effort;

m. Any other person whose name or designation appears on lists to be submitted to you or whose name may be notified to you separately.

n. All persons who, if permitted to remain at large, would in your opinion endanger the accomplishment of the objectives of your military government.

If in the light of conditions which you encounter in Germany you do not believe all of these persons should be subjected immediately to this treatment, you should report to the Control Council giving your recommendations and the reasons therefor.

- 2. Regulations dealing with the registration and identification of persons within Germany will be issued as deemed advisable.
- 3. A proclamation dissolving the Nazi Party and its affiliates will be issued. Every possible effort should be made to prevent any attempts to reconstitute them in underground or disguised form. The laws establishing the political structure of National Socialism will be abrogated and all necessary measures taken to uproot and discredit Nazi doctrines. No secret organizations or societies of any kind shall be permitted. Property, real and personal, of the Nazi party and its affiliates wherever found, shall be taken into custody and may be used for such purposes as you may direct. You may require health or welfare organizations which were set up, operated or controlled by the Party but which are of direct benefit to the people to transfer their functions and personnel, purged of Nazi elements and practices, to new organizations formed to carry out such functions.
- 4. Special efforts will be made to preserve from destruction all records, books, documents, papers, files, scientific, industrial and other information and data belonging to or controlled by the following:
- a. The German Reich or any agency of government in Germany, whether central, regional, or local;
 b. German military and para-military organizations; agencies and
- b. German military and para-military organizations; agencies and societies engaged in military research or propaganda;

c. All police organizations, including security and political police;

- d. The Nazi Party and its affiliates;
 e. Nazi economic organizations and industrial establishments;
- f. Institutes and special bureaus devoting themselves to race, political. or similar research;

All records included in the above categories and such other records as you may deem advisable should be seized and secured. and held at the disposal of the Control Council.

- 5. All laws, decrees, regulations or provisions thereof, which discriminate on the basis of race, color, creed, or political opinions will be immediately abrogated. All persons who are detained or placed in custody by the Nazis on these grounds will be released, subject to the interests of the individuals concerned. You will take steps to insure that such people, if not released, are provided with adequate clothing, food and quarters.
- 6. The criminal and civil courts of Germany will be closed. After the elimination of all Nazi elements, at such time and under such regulations, supervision and control as may be determined, the courts will be permitted to resume functioning. Full power of review and veto will be retained by the occupation authorities over all courts which are allowed to function. All politically objectionable courts; e.g., People's Courts and Special Courts, will be abolished. Criminal and ordinary police, and such others as it may be proper to retain. under appropriate supervision, must be purged of Nazi or otherwise undesirable elements, who will also be arrested and held for disposition.
- 7. No person in Germany, other than authorized United Nations nationals, shall be permitted to possess arms of any character except that such local police as may be utilized to maintain order may be armed with appropriate law enforcement weapons.
- 8. a. All members of the Nazi party and ardent supporters of Nazism will be removed immediately from all government positions (other than clerks and non-policymaking functionaires) and from all leading positions in industry, banking, education, judiciary, and other public services. Under no circumstances shall such persons be retained in such offices for the purpose of administrative convenience or expediency.
- b. You will decide whether the objectives of military government are better served by the appointment of officers of the occupation forces or by the use of the services of Germans who have been cleared by the security branches of the Allied armies. Failure by such Germans as are permitted to fill Government posts to conform with Allied directives and instructions will be cause for removal and such punishment as you may deem advisable.
- 9. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 11 and to the extent that military interests are not prejudiced, freedom of speech and press.

and of religious worship, will be permitted. Consistent with military necessity, all religious institutions will be respected. All efforts will be made to preserve historical archives, classical monuments and works of art, except that all archives, monuments and museums of Nazi inception, or which are devoted to the perpetuation of German militarism shall be appropriately dealt with, seized or closed and their properties held pending further instructions.

- 10. a. Prisoners of war belonging to the forces of the United Nations and associated nations will be freed from confinement and placed under military control or restriction as may be appropriate pending other disposition.
- b. All nationals of allied nations who have been removed to Germany under duress to serve in labor battalions, or any other units organized by the Nazis, after identification will be repatriated in accordance with the regulations to be established after consultation with the governments of the countries concerned. Pending repatriation, such persons should be adequately taken care of and, if deemed advisable, their freedom of movement restricted. Former prisoners of war released by the Axis may be found among the forced laborers. They should be identified and requests addressed to their respective military commands for instructions as to their disposition.
- c. All allied civilians resident or interned in Germany as a result of their presence in that country upon the outbreak of war shall be identified, examined closely and may, if deemed advisable, be placed under restricted residence. These people will be dealt with in accordance with agreements reached after consultation with the governments of the countries concerned. In general, all practical measures will be taken to insure the health and welfare of United Nations nationals, including provision for employment as authorized and practicable, and repatriation should be undertaken as rapidly as military conditions permit.
- d. All diplomatic and consular officials of powers with whom the United States (U.K.) (U.S.S.R.) remains actively at war will be taken into protective custody and held for further disposition. All other nationals of such powers will be interned. All nationals of other countries with which any of the United Nations are or have been at war (except Germany) will be identified and registered and may be interned or their activities curtailed as may be necessary under the circumstances. Diplomatic and consular officials of such countries will be taken into protective custody and held for further disposition.
- e. All German diplomatic and consular officials and other agents will be recalled. If their recall cannot be effected or if their recall is not practicable by reasons of nationality, their authority as agents for Germany will be terminated. All records and files of these agents and officers will be ordered returned to Germany or otherwise made available for appropriate inspection.

- f. Nationals of neutral countries must register with the appropriate military authorities. Every facility and encouragement will be given these people to return to their home countries, except those neutrals who have actively participated in any way in the war against any one of the United Nations in which event they will be detained, pending receipt of further instructions as to their disposition. Neutral nationals will be accorded no special privileges of communication or business relationships with their home countries or people resident outside Germany. Restrictions on neutrals entering Germany shall be imposed as may be deemed advisable. Persons and property of diplomatic and consular officials of neutrals will be accorded full protection.
- 11. a. Dissemination of Nazi doctrines and Nazi propaganda in any form shall be prohibited. All schools and universities will be closed. Elementary schools should be reopened as soon as Nazi personnel have been eliminated and text-books and curricula provided which are free of Nazi or militaristic doctrines. Steps should be initiated to prepare satisfactory text-books and curricula and obtain teaching personnel free of any taint of Naziism or militarism for secondary schools. You should report to the Control Council prior to reopening secondary schools.
- b. No political activities of any kind shall be countenanced unless authorized by the occupation authorities. No political personalities or organized political groups shall have any part in determining the policies of the military administration. It is essential to avoid any commitments to any political elements.
- c. The publication of all newspapers, magazines, journals and other publications and the operation of all German radio stations and the dissemination of news or public information by mail, motion pictures, telephone, cable or other means will be suspended. Thereafter, the dissemination of news or information may be permitted subject to such censorship and control as are considered necessary in the interests of military security and intelligence and in order to carry out the principles laid down in this directive.
- 12. Except in accordance with regulations established by the Control Council, no person shall be permitted to leave or enter the area under your command without your authority.
- 13. No German parades, military or political, civilian or sports, shall be permitted anywhere in Germany. No German military music, or German national or Nazi anthems shall be played or sung in public or before any group or gatherings. Public display of German national or Nazi flags and other paraphernalia of Nazi or affiliated organizations shall be prohibited. All flags, publications, and other paraphernalia of the Nazi party or affiliated organizations shall be seized and amounts shall be set aside to distribute to approved foreign museums and the remainder will be held for disposition under your direction.

APPENDIX "B"

FINANCIAL DIRECTIVE

No draft of Financial Directive is included in this paper. The Financial Directive draft is being studied further and will be submitted at a later date. Pages 15 to 21, inclusive, are reserved for this purpose.

APPENDIX "C"

ECONOMIC DIRECTIVE

1. You shall assume such control of existing German industrial, agricultural, utility, communication and transportation facilities, supplies, and services, as are necessary for the following purposes:

a. Assuring the safety of your forces, the satisfaction of their needs, and the accomplishment of your mission.

b. Assuring the immediate cessation of the production, acquisition or development of implements of war.

c. Assuring, to the extent that it is feasible, the production and maintenance of goods and services essential (1) for the prevention or alleviation of epidemic or serious disease and serious civil unrest and disorder which would endanger the occupying forces and the accomplishment of the objectives of the occupation; and (2) for further military operations to be conducted in other theaters (but only to the extent that specific directives of higher authority call for such goods or services).

d. Preventing the dissipation or sabotage of German resources and equipment which may be required for relief, restitution, or reparation to any of the Allied countries, pending a decision by the appropriate Allied governments whether and to what extent German resources or equipment will be used for such purposes.

e. Exercising appropriate supervision over transactions of all types between your zone and areas outside Germany.

f. Facilitating the prompt restitution to liberated countries of identifiable property looted by Germans.

g. Prohibiting exports from Germany except for restitution, making surpluses available to liberated areas and for other purposes as may be specified in agreed policies of the Control Council. Except for the purposes specified above, you will take no steps (1) looking toward the economic rehabilitation of Germany, nor (2) designed to maintain or strengthen the German economy. Except to the extent necessary (1) to accomplish the purposes set out above, and (2) to assure thorough elimination of discriminatory Nazi practices in actual operation of economic controls, the responsibility for and the task of dealing with such economic problems as price controls, rationing, unemployment, production, reconstruction, distribution, consumption, housing or transportation will be left in German hands. You should, however, take such steps as may be necessary to assure that economic controls are operated in conformity with the above purposes and the general objectives of military government.

2. You will make a survey to determine:

(a) the extent to which productive capacity and supplies within your zone are or can be made available for shipment to other zones of occupation or to other countries or for relief and rehabilitation in the devastated areas of Europe, and

(b) the extent to which the fulfillment of the purposes stated in paragraph 1 above will necessitate shipment of supplies to your zone from other zones of occupation or from zones outside of Germany.

- 3. You will take such steps as are necessary to protect from destruction by the Germans, and maintain for such ultimate disposition as may be determined by the Control Council all plants, property, patents and equipment and all books and records of large German industrial companies and trade and research associations that have been essential to the German war effort and the German economy. In this connection you will pay particular attention to research and experimental establishments of such concerns.
- 4. You should take measures to prevent transfers of title of real and personal property intended to defeat, evade or avoid the orders, proclamations or decrees of the military government or the decision of the courts established by it.
- 5. Substantial amounts of private and public property of various categories have been seized, looted or otherwise improperly acquired by various Nazi officials and others. While it is contemplated that a suitable commission will ultimately deal with this problem you should take such steps as may be practicable to collect any available information as to property of this kind and to preserve any such property found in the area under your control.
- 6. a. All property in the German territory belonging to any country with which any of the United Nations are, or have been at war may be controlled, subject to such use thereof as you may direct.
- b. Your responsibility for the property of the United Nations, other than U.K., U.S. and U.S.S.R., and their nationals, in areas occupied by Allied forces shall be the same as for the property of U.K., U.S., and U.S.S.R., and their nationals, except where a distinction is expressly provided by treaty or agreement. Within such limits as are imposed by the military situation you should take all reasonable steps necessary to preserve and protect such property.

7. You will take all practicable steps to uncover and compile evidence concerning property held abroad for German public or private account or benefit.

Appendix "D"

Relief Directive

- 1. You will be responsible for the provision and distribution of supplies for civilian relief to the German population only to the extent necessary to prevent disease and such disorder as might endanger or impede military occupation. For this purpose you will make maximum use of supplies, stockpiles and resources available within Germany in order to limit the extent to which imports, if any, will be required. German import requirements shall be strictly limited to minimum quotas of critical items and shall be subordinated to the fulfillment of the supply requirements of any liberated territory.
- 2. German food and other agricultural supplies will be utilized for the German population. It will be necessary to hold German consumption in your zone to a minimum so as to augment the supply of agricultural products to zones having a deficit of such products and to the devastated areas of Europe. You will report on any surpluses that may be available. If supplies available in your zone are insufficient for fulfillment of the purposes set forth in Appendix C, paragraph 1, you will report such deficits to the Control Council, which will establish policies with respect to the inter-zonal problem resulting from regional surpluses and deficits.
- 3. You will permit the German authorities to maintain or reestablish such health services and facilities as may be available to them under the circumstances. In the event that disease and epidemics should threaten the safety of Allied troops or endanger or impede military occupation, you shall take such steps as you deem necessary to protect the health of Allied troops and to eradicate sources of contamination.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/1-1145

[Washington,] January 15, 1945.

I have read the attached memorandum from the Secretary of the Treasury to the President 54 respecting the treatment of Germany.

⁵³ Addressed to the Secretary of State and to the Director of the Office of European Affairs. A marginal note by Riddleberger states that Assistant Secretary of State Dunn had read and approved the memorandum.
⁵⁴ January 10, p. 376.

In its general outline, it is very much the same plan that the Secretary of the Treasury advanced several months ago,55 except for the omission of his scheme for the partition of Germany. In face of the fact that the President has, on at least two occasions, indicated that he wished to discuss these matters first with the State and War Departments, my advice is that we should avoid any discussion with the Treasury on this matter.

If it should again become known that Mr. Morgenthau is actively advancing his ideas, we should once again be presenting Goebbels 56 with some excellent propaganda material which he will no doubt know how to use most effectively inside Germany.

With respect to Germany, Mr. Morgenthau said that although he felt confident that he and Mr. Stettinius would work as a team in the future, he thought it necessary, in order to remove any possible misapprehensions, to review the history of Treasury participation in the policy deliberations regarding Germany. Last August, while he and Mr. White were on their way to Europe, Mr. White showed him the ECEFP document on reparation.⁶⁶ He was distressed by this document because it seemed to envisage the full maintenance of German productive power for the sake of securing reparation. While in England, Mr. Morgenthau looked into the plans regarding Germany, talking to General Eisenhower, 67 Mr. Eden, Mr. Winant and to others at SHAEF 68 and EAC. General Eisenhower expressed the view that during occupation the Germans should not be pampered but should "stew in their own juice". Mr. Morgenthau got the impression at that time that Mr. Eden also favored a severe policy, (though this was not borne out by Mr. Eden's later attitude at Quebec 69). However, Mr. Morgenthau was greatly disturbed by the benevolently paternalistic character of the planning which was going forward at SHAEF and at EAC. Upon his return to Washington Mr. Morgenthau told Mr. Hull 70 of his findings and impressions and reported them to the President. As an outgrowth of this, the President sent a memorandum 71 to Secretary Stimson 72 criticizing the SHAEF handbook on Germany.73 (Mr. Morgenthau has never seen this memorandum, apart

The A German Country Unit which was set up as a special staff of Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force early in 1944 prepared a Handbook for Military Government in Germany for the use of the military government officers who would operate in occupied Germany. The third draft edition of this Handbook completed in August 1944 was the version which came into the hands of Secretary Morgenthau and was criticized by President Roosevelt. For discussions of this Handbook, see Forrest C. Pogue, The Supreme Command, in the official Army history United States Army in World War II: The European from the excerpts printed by Drew Pearson.⁷⁴) The President then set up a Cabinet Committee consisting of the Secretaries of State, War, and Treasury, and, as a member of that Committee, Mr. Morgenthau submitted a memorandum setting forth a program to weaken Germany.⁷⁵ Shortly thereafter he was summoned to the Quebec Conference, where he was called upon to participate in discussion of policies toward Germany, among other matters. Mr. Morgenthau indicated that he remains deeply interested in doing what he can to see that a policy which strikes at the roots of Germany's war making potential is adopted.

Mr. Morgenthau then outlined his views regarding treatment of Germany, which were not substantially different from those set forth in his memorandum to the President of last September. He said that our policy must have two central objectives: (1) to make Germany incapable of further aggression, and (2) to assure the Soviet Union that we do not look to Germany as a buffer and possible future ally against her. The only means of accomplishing both objectives is by assuring an economically weak Germany. A strong Germany would be a source of future European rivalries; Germany, by using her influence to promote divisive tendencies in Europe, could pave the way for renewed successful aggression. The people who oppose drastic economic weakening of Germany, both within and outside Government, are motivated largely by anti-Russian attitudes.

Mr. Morgenthau's program to weaken Germany consists of elimination of the metallurgical, electrical, and chemical industries. He is opposed to any reparation, unless the removal to other countries of existing German capital equipment and supplies be considered as reparation. Germany's loss of heavy industry might be accompanied by a further intensification of German agriculture, so that Germany might become a predominantly agrarian country. Concerning the scope of the industrial measures, Mr. Morgenthau said that he personally favored going so far as to seal up the coal mines for fifty years, but he suggested that his own advisers didn't go along with him to this extreme point. Mr. White said that under the Treasury's proposal Germany would still be left with some types of industry, a transportation system, utilities, etc.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Morgenthau's remarks, Mr. Stettinius stated that the Department was thoroughly in accord with Mr. Morgenthau's objective of making Germany permanently incapable of further aggression, and all officers of the Department were of one mind about this. Mr. Morgenthau was somewhat skeptical, and Mr. Stettinius asked Mr. Riddleberger to summarize the contents of a recent memorandum on this subject.77 When Mr. Riddleberger began by saying that this memorandum had called for destruction of manufacturing facilities in armament and aircraft, Mr. Morgenthau remarked that measures against the armament industry alone were inadequate to achieve the desired result. Mr. Despres said that despite the full agreement which existed regarding the objective, there was a difference of emphasis between the State Department and the Treasury regarding the economic measures appropriate to that ob-He then said that the Department had taken the view that the depth of the cut initially taken into the German economy mattered less than sustained enforcement of whatever program for complete disarmament was adopted, and that the Department favored the program which had the best chance of being sustainedly enforced. Mr. White said that in their view both were important. Mr. Morgenthau then asked Mr. Despres whether the State Department's recommendations regarding policy were based on a genuine desire to make Germany incapable of further aggression. Mr. Despres replied that they were, and Mr. Dunn and others joined in confirming this answer. Mr. Stettinius then designated Mr. Dunn, and Mr. Morgenthau designated Mr. White, to discuss these matters further.

ATDE-MÉMOIRE

His Majesty's Government have had under consideration the forum and machinery for inter-Allied discussion of long-term policy towards Germany.

2. It seems to His Majesty's Government to be essential to have and use inter-Allied machinery of the character of the European Advisory Commission to prepare the way for decisions on long-term policy towards Germany, which will of course have to be taken at the highest level. British studies of long-term German problems have shown how complex they are and how difficult it is to decide on the best way of obtaining the common objective that Germany shall never again be able to embark upon aggression. These problems need to be fully debated between the major Allies so that the various alternatives and their pros and cons can be submitted to the Governments as raw material for the necessary high-level decisions.

- 3. Without such preliminary Allied study it is difficult to see how satisfactory and lasting decisions could ever be taken. The major Allies are agreed upon the broad objectives, namely, the destruction of German power to make war and proper retribution for Germany for her crimes against the Allies, but there are an ever increasing number of alternative ways of reaching these objectives. The decision between the various alternatives invariably depend upon intricate questions of detail—geographical, political, military and economic—which should be thoroughly studied before the heads of governments are asked to give a final decision on them. For example, it is generally agreed that some form of permanent control should be established over German industry's war potentialities in the Ruhr-Rhine area; when it comes to deciding how this should be done, alternatives are presented ranging from the suggestion to turn the area into a pastoral community to the idea of setting up some form of separate state under Allied control whose industry would be made to work as hard as possible to repair the damage done to Allied countries.
- 4. His Majesty's Government believe that the European Advisory Commission is the right body to devil these very difficult questions for the Governments. The Commission as at present constituted has the great advantage that it includes the French on an equal footing which is essential if any lasting plans are to be made about Germany.
- 5. It is true that the European Advisory Commission has hitherto worked slowly. In the view of His Majesty's Government the remedy is to reform the working of the Commission rather than to duplicate the Commission or to attempt the impossible task of discussing these complicated problems by diplomatic correspondence.
- 6. The German problem is of course well within the terms of reference of the Commission which cover "European questions connected with the termination of hostilities which the three Governments may consider it appropriate to refer to it". Long-term German problems have indeed already been laid before it. After the decision of the Tehran Conference in December 1943 79 to refer the question of dismembering Germany to the Commission, the United Kingdom representative raised the matter at the Commission. The United States Government have suggested that reparation and economic security should be studied under the aegis of the Commission. The Soviet representative in October last submitted a plan of work for the Commission which included the abolition of "the Hitlerite regime" and the control of German economy.80

7. This question of machinery and procedure for the study of longterm policy towards Germany is one which it will be essential to discuss at the next high-level meeting.81 His Majesty's Government think the United States Government may care to consider their view set out above before this meeting takes place. They are hopeful that the United States Government will share their view that the European Advisory Commission is the proper forum for inter-Allied discussion of long-term policy towards Germany.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for European, Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and African Affairs (Dunn)

[Washington,] January 18, 1945.

Mr. Michael Wright, Counselor of the British Embassy, came in this morning and left with me the attached memorandum,82 which makes the following two points:

a) That the European Advisory Commission is the proper forum for the discussion of long-range policy toward Germany;

b) That at the forthcoming meeting so of the President, the Prime Minister, and Marshal Stalin, agreements should be arrived at to give an extra impetus to the work of the European Advisory Commission with a view to expediting the discussion in that body of our long-term policy, particularly toward the treatment to be accorded German industry.

I told Mr. Wright that it has always been our view that the European Advisory Commission, according to the terms of reference under which it was established by the Moscow Conference, is the proper place for the discussion of long-range policy toward Germany including the question of what to do with German industry. I recalled that we fully expected the Commission to go into the discussion of this longrange policy as soon as it had completed its work of preparing recommendations as to the control machinery to be set up in Germany after the surrender.

st The Yalta Conference, February 4-11, 1945. 82 British aide-mémoire of January 17, supra.

I also stated that although it did not seem necessary in my opinion for this matter to be brought up in the forthcoming high level meeting, there would be no objection as far as I could see to the British trying to obtain from the Russians an agreement to give a further impetus to the work of the Commission in an effort to have the discussion on long-range policy taken up as soon as possible.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)⁸⁴

Washington, January 26, 1945—1 p. m.

603. There has been transmitted to you as an enclosure to Department's instruction 4980, January 13, 1945, a revision of JCS 1067 designed to adapt it in form but without any change of substance or of policy, for use as a basis of tripartite negotiation in EAC. The revision sets forth a statement of general policy and includes as appendices more specific statements of political, economic and relief policy. An appendix on financial policy will follow. We intend to supplement this revision of JCS 1067 by other statements of policy of subjects not covered either by it or by draft directives or statements of policy heretofore forwarded to you. We expect within a few days to transmit statements of policy regarding prisoners of war and disarmament.

We believe that revised 1067 including appendices should be submitted by you to EAC in substantially the form transmitted to you. We appreciate that you may not be able to persuade EAC to accept it as the basis for discussion of tripartite agreement. In such case we repeat, as indicated in our cable of 12 December, state you are authorized to subdivide 1067, or to rephrase or change the form of any parts thereof (or of any other policy directive furnished you) for purposes of negotiation in EAC so long as any such revised documents are consistent in policy and substance with the views expressed in 1067 and in the other approved policy documents forwarded to you. Any documents agreed to in EAC will of course be subject to final approval by this Government.

In general we believe and we understand that you agree that EAC action should be taken only on broad general policies appropriate for discussion on a governmental level and that it should be a function of the zone commanders collectively as members of the Control Council to prepare and issue supplementary directives, as may be appropriate, covering the implementation of such broad policies. They should do likewise individually in the separate areas of responsibility of the zone commanders. Such supplementary action by the Control Council should not require separate approval by the three Governments as long as it is reasonably within the broad policies previously approved.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, January 26, 1945—9 p. m. [Received 10:27 p. m.]

947. Personal for Assistant Secretary Dunn. Department's instruction 4980 of January 13 received.

I have been struck by one peculiar feature in the appended economic directive. It appears throughout to emphasize the idea of operating each zone as a separate economic unit, with a minimum of provisions for consultation with the control machinery, such as those contained only in paragraphs 1–G and 3.

Unless I am able to offer in the European Advisory Commission fuller comment on United States economic policy toward Germany than is contained in the economic directive, it is going to be very difficult to present the United States proposal effectively. For example, paragraph 2 of that directive might be interpreted as requiring the zone commander to establish detailed control over movements of goods, currency, valuables and persons across inter-zonal boundaries and to assume responsibility for organizing all exchanges of goods between his own zone and other zones. At least there is no indication that the Control Council will have anything to do with these matters.

Paragraphs 1–E and 1–G might appear to place on the zone commander complete responsibility for movement of goods and valuables between his zone and foreign countries.

Paragraphs 1-F and 1-G imply that the zone commander is to be solely responsible for the complicated problem of restitution of property found in his zone. In general it can be foreseen that this first official statement of the United States economic policy toward Germany will lead to my being closely questioned on the long-range question of economic unity versus economic dismemberment. I do not find in the instructions so far provided by the Department any basis for dealing with such questions in the Commission.

A policy of economic dismemberment would, I believe, run directly counter to the views so far expressed informally and frequently by the Soviet representative in the EAC. Gousev has regularly stressed, as reported from time to time by me, that Germany should be treated as an economic unit by the victors and that the zone boundaries should in no sense be regarded as economic boundaries. Our draft economic directive may therefore come as a serious shock to the Soviet Government.

If the Russians come to feel that our Government has decided on a policy of economic dismemberment, such feeling might influence their attitude toward the agreement on zones of occupation and the agreement on control machinery, which are awaiting approval by their Government. Until these two agreements have been approved by all three Governments, our one completely firm agreement regarding Germany is the instrument of surrender. The instrument provides for the Allies taking absolute power over Germany but contains no arrangements for allocation of zones or for exercise of Allied authority as among the Allies themselves.

If the Russians should conclude that United States economic policy toward Germany is in direct opposition to the general spirit in which they are approaching the question of controlling Germany and to the achievement of their direct economic aims, they may delay approval of the two draft agreements until Germany has collapsed. Upon that collapse, in the absence of agreed arrangements for occupation and control, any last-minute arrangements made at the military level might be determined by the de facto military situation prevailing at the moment of German collapse, which might greatly complicate execution of present plans for deployment and logistical support.

Because of uncertainty regarding implications which stem from a premature EAC discussion of the Department's draft economic directive, I am withholding the papers transmitted in Department's instruction 4980 for the time being, until I can be provided with certain clarifications. It is particularly important for me to be informed, in advance of discussion of the directive in the Commission, whether or not economic dismemberment is a settled aim of our policy.⁸⁶ I had understood that this was to be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of the three Governments.

Washington, February 3, 1945—11 p.m.

849. We agree with the view expressed in your 947 of 26 January, 9 p. m., that it would be most unfortunate if our proposed economic directive were interpreted in EAC as providing for the operation of each zone as a separate economic unit. It is the view of the Department that, while feasible decentralization of German administration should be encouraged, we should seek the greatest attainable measure of uniformity in policy among the several zones, and zonal boundaries should not be allowed to become economic barriers. I suggest that, in submitting this directive, you make such clarifying comments along these lines as seem to you desirable.

In interpreting the economic directive, the provisions of paragraph 2 of the basic directive are, of course, applicable. Thus, agreed policies of the Control Council are to be determinative throughout the zones, and coordination of administration is to be effected through the Council. The economic directive, like others, does not attempt to define in advance the precise division of responsibility between the Control Council and the zones; the scope of responsibility of the Council will depend upon the extent of agreement reached on specific questions.

In response to your observations regarding paragraph 1 of the economic directive, it should be borne in mind that the directive is addressed to the Commanders-in-Chief in their roles as members of the Control Council as well as in their capacities as Commanders of the respective forces of occupation. The objectives and policies set forth in this paragraph are not to be considered as matters for independent, uncoordinated action in each zone. This paragraph, along with the remainder of the directive, is regarded as providing guidance to the Control Council as well as to the zonal authority, so that necessary coordination may be secured.

⁸⁶ In letters to President Roosevelt and to the Secretary of State, both dated January 28, 1945, Ambassador Winant further elaborated his views regarding the "Directive to Commander-in-Chief of U.S. (U.K.) (U.S.S.R.) Forces of Occupation regarding Military Government of Germany in the Period Immediately Following the Cessation of Organized Resistance". For the texts of these letters, see Conferences at Malta and Yalta, pp. 130–133.

Paragraph 2 of the economic directive is not designed to erect barriers to the interzonal movement of goods. On the contrary, it was recognized that the fact of zonal occupation might tend to hamper interzonal movements, unless affirmative action were taken to facilitate essential traffic; paragraph 2 was designed to pave the way for affirmative action if it should prove necessary. The responsibility of the Control Council with respect to interzonal trade is made explicit in the second paragraph of the relief directive.

Memorandum by Mr. Philip E. Mosely, Political Adviser to the United States Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Winant)

[London,] February 3, 1945.

1. Receipt of Revised JCS 1067.

The E.A.C. Delegation has now received a revised 1067 consisting of four parts: Overall Military Government Directive; Appendix A, Political Directive; Appendix B, Economic Directive; Appendix D, Relief Directive; a Financial Directive is still being revised in Washington for transmission (Department's instruction No. 4980 of January 13, 1945).

2. Overall or Military Government Directive.

This directive has been very considerably revised. Unlike the original 1067, it no longer relates to the interim period which had been envisaged as extending from the German surrender or collapse to the establishment of the Control Council in Berlin—the so-called post-surrender SHAEF period—, but relates directly to the period of Control Machinery.

However, even in its new form, the Military Government directive will be a difficult document to negotiate. Some Articles, such as Articles 2 and 6 and the second sentence of Article 9, paraphrase the Agreement already made regarding Control Machinery. Other Articles, such as Articles 3, 4, 5 and 10, are purely declaratory or exhortatory in character. Articles 7b and 8, and the first sentence of Article 9 are matters for domestic housekeeping by each commander-in-chief and do not require Allied agreement. This analysis shows that the revised overall Military Government directive provides practically nothing which requires agreement or is appropriate in form to serve as a basis of negotiation.

3. The Three Appendices.

On the other hand, the three attached directives have scarcely been revised at all. One example of such revision is found in Article 3 of the Economic Directive, which formerly provided that German business and industrial property and records should be protected from destruction and held for ultimate disposition by the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The revised directive provides that they shall be held for disposition, "as may be determined by the Control Council". Aside from three or four such substitutions of Control Council for Combined Chiefs of Staff, no effort has been made to adapt these three directives to use in the period of joint Allied control of Germany, and thus they have been sent to the E.A.C. Delegation in a form which appears inconsistent with the emphasis of the overall revised Military Government directive on joint policies and on the role of the Control Council.

The attached directives are excessively detailed in some respects and completely silent regarding other important matters. For example, Article 1 of the Political Directive lists 14 broad categories of persons who must be searched out, arrested and held "pending receipt by you of further instructions as to their disposition". There is no indication as to the source from which these "further instructions" are to be received.

4. Political Directive.

Article 4 of the Political Directive requires that "all records, books, documents, papers, files, scientific, industrial and other information and data" belonging to any one of a list of six broad categories of German agencies should be preserved from destruction. Apparently no estimate has been made of the number of military personnel which would be required to give effect to this requirement.

Article 6 of the Political Directive provides that courts will be allowed to resume their functions "at such time and under such regulations, supervision and control as may be determined". There is no indication as to how that time and those regulations will be determined, whether by the Control Council, the zone commander, or by individual local Government administrators.

Article 10 again goes into considerable detail on the handling of six different categories of persons requiring special handling.

Aside from these few problems which are treated in considerable detail, though without clear provision for either zonal or central control, there is a wide series of political questions which are omitted from this directive, without indication as to whether they will be left entirely to the zone commander or will be treated in later directives to the members of the Control Council.

5. Economic Directive.

The Economic Directive requires the zone commander to exercise "appropriate supervision over transactions of all types between your zone and areas outside Germany", to facilitate "the prompt restitution to liberated countries of identifiable property looted by Germans", to prevent "the dissipation or sabotage of German resources and equipment which may be required for relief, restitution or reparation to any of the Allied countries", to make a survey "to determine the extent to which productive capacity and supplies within your zone are or can be made available for shipment to other zones of occupation or to other countries or for relief and rehabilitation in the devastated countries of Europe", etc., etc., etc.

It can be argued that these economic policies are binding on the zone commander only until overriding general policies are laid down, in accordance with the recognition in the Military Government Directive of a Control Council. However, if such is the intention, it would have been more useful, for purposes of negotiation, to channel the provisions of the proposed Economic Directive toward a consideration of those economic problems which will require uniform handling throughout Germany, rather than to devote it almost exclusively to measures which are to be taken in the separate zones.

The general impact of the Economic Directive on the reader is that it implies the operation of each of the three zones as a separate economic entity, with the zone commander responsible for organizing all commercial and other transactions between his zone and other zones in Germany and with other countries. This concept runs directly counter to Soviet and British emphasis on operating the German economy as a unit with a large measure of Allied control in order to assure to the devastated countries a maximum of German material needed for their speedy reconstruction.

6. Relief Directive.

Article 2 of the Relief Directive sets forth the principle of holding German consumption to a minimum. Yet neither it nor the Economic Directive makes any provision for overall Allied control of German rationing, prices, wages and transport, which, in an economy of scarcity, will be essential if the purpose of providing maximum relief to the Allied countries is to be achieved.

7. Presentation of JCS 1067.

By its 603 of January 26, the Department instructs the Ambassador to present the revised JCS 1067 as a basis of tripartite negotiation in the European Advisory Commission. In passing, it might be pointed out that since November 27 all E.A.C. negotiations are on a quadripartite basis.

The Department states that it intends to supplement this document by "other statements of policy on subjects not covered either by it or by draft directives or statements of policy previously forwarded". There is no indication of what these subjects will be. Apparently the Ambassador is expected to ask the other Delegations to accept 1067 on faith and without being able to give them any advance assurance that any particular subject will be covered in additional statements.

The Ambassador is authorized to subdivide 1067 or to re-phrase any parts of it "so long as any such revised documents are consistent in policy and substance with the views expressed in 1067 and any other appropriate policy documents forwarded" to him. Again in passing, it should be pointed out that the 15 draft directives already approved by our Government and circulated in the E.A.C. are in many respects not consistent with the very narrow substance of 1067.87

8. Remaining Scope of E.A.C. Negotiations.

The same telegram from the Department states that "E.A.C. action should be taken only on broad general policies suitable for discussion on a governmental level" and that all supplementary action should be taken collectively by the zone commanders as members of the Control Council or individually in their separate areas of responsibility, and that "such supplementary action by the Control Council would not require separate approval by the three Governments so long as it came reasonably within the broad policies agreed previously".

The E.A.C. Delegation does not know what those "broad policies previously approved" are. It has never been provided with policy statements from Washington on any of the "broad policies", unless 1067 is supposed to fill that bill.

It is not clear whether the E.A.C. is intended to negotiate 1067 and the present 15 U.S. directives which are before the Commission, or whether it is to go on beyond the "policy statements so far furnished" to it and to negotiate "the broad policies" on the basis of which the separate national commanders are to exercise their responsibility for governing and reconstructing Germany without reference back to their Governments.

The titles of the United States draft directives and the dates of their circulation in the European Advisory Commission are as follows: (1) Censorship of Civilian Communications, November 23, 1944; (2) Control of Works of Art and Monuments, November 23, 1944; (3) Control of Public Information in Germany, November 23, 1944; (4) Securing and Examining Information and Archives, November 23, 1944; (5) Disposition of German and German Controlled Naval Craft, Equipment and Facilities, November 23, 1944; (6) Control of Merchant Shipping Subsequent to Surrender, November 23, 1944; (7) Control of Inland Transport, November 23, 1944; (8) Disposition of German or German Controlled Aircraft, Aeronautical Equipment and Facilities, November 23, 1944; (9) Disposition and Control of the German Police, November 25, 1944; (10) Control and Disposal of Nationals, Armed Forces and Property of Enemy Countries Other Than Germany, November 25, 1944; (11) Administration of Justice, November 25, 1944; (12) Religious Affairs, November 25, 1944; (13) Elimination and Prohibition of Military Training in Germany, December 8, 1944; (14) Control of Post, Telegraph and Telephone Services in Germany, December 14, 1944; (15) Disposal of German Armed Forces, January 1, 1945. For text of draft directive on Control of Works of Art and Monuments, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, p. 1060. None of the other directives is printed, but all can be found in the European Advisory Commission files of the Department of State.

The U.S. Government is committed toward its Allies to negotiate broad policy regarding Germany in the E.A.C., and there is no indication that any Government except the U.S. Government is even contemplating transferring that responsibility to a mainly military group such as the Control Council. Prior to discarding the E.A.C. as a center of negotiation for common Allied policy towards Germany in favor of an unknown and untried alternative body, it would seem essential to give to the E.A.C. Delegation adequate statements of broad U.S. policy as a basis for negotiating Allied policy in the E.A.C. The revised 1067 can hardly be intended to fulfill that function.

London, February 5, 1945—11 p. m. [Received 11:50 p. m.]

- 1277. Comea 173. Attention of Assistant Secretary Dunn. Since receiving Department's instruction 4980 of January 13, I have been making a careful study of the revised 1067 Military Government Directive, exclusive of its appendices, with a view to working out the best approach for negotiating it in the European Advisory Commission. I should appreciate Department's comments on the following points in order to be prepared to answer certain questions which are likely to be raised in the Commission.
- 1. Several articles of the revised 1067 are paraphrases of subjects on which agreement has already been reached in the surrender instrument and the control machinery agreement. For example, article 2 of 1067 in general repeats articles 1, 3 and 5 of the control machinery agreement. Article 6 is basically a restatement of the underlying purpose of the surrender instrument. The second sentence of article 9 repeats article 9 of the control machinery agreement. I should appreciate being informed on the grounds which the Department wishes to have advanced in the EAC for negotiating these points a second time.

2. Articles 7 B, 8, and the first sentence of article 9 deal with matters lying within the jurisdiction of each of the Commanders-in-Chief and not readily susceptible of inter-Allied agreement.

3. Article 3 is declaratory and expository in character. Article 4, similarly, sets forth a statement of intentions or promises [premises?] rather than a precise basis of agreement. Article 5 is exhortatory in its wording and would be difficult to negotiate as an agreement without fuller definition of such words as "just", "firm", and "fraternization". Article 10 proclaims a desirable ultimate objective without setting forth any defined arrangements to be made between the Allies for its attainment during the period of Allied military government.

In general, most of the provisions of this draft directive would seem to be more suitable for issuance to the German people as a broad statement of Allied intentions than for negotiation as an agreement among the Allied Governments. Reference is made in this connection to paragraph 10 of the Commission's report transmitting the control machinery agreement to the three Governments.

Experience in negotiating the agreements on unconditional surrender, zones of occupation and control machinery shows the need for precise and clear wording of any undertakings designed to regulate the joint action of the occupying forces. If the Commission is to devote a large amount of time to inserting a clear and definite content in the revised 1067, it will be greatly delayed in its basic task of arriving at agreements on the really vital questions of broad policy toward Germany.

If the Department, nevertheless, wishes the revised 1067 to be pressed energetically in the Commission, I should appreciate being forearmed with its comments regarding 1, 2 and 3 above. Likewise, since I am directed to state, in presenting 1067, that it will be supplemented by "other statements of policy on subjects not covered by it" or by United States draft directives now before the EAC (Department's 603 87a) it will be essential to give the Commission some indication of the nature and scope of those supplementary statements, of the subjects they will cover, and of the time when they will be presented in the EAC.

As the Department is aware, the United States draft directives which we have prepared here have been submitted to Washington for consideration not as finished expositions of United States policy, but as a means of eliciting broad statements of United States policy as a basis for arriving at Allied agreement, leaving the implementation of broad policy to be worked out by the Commanders-in-Chief in the Control Council. The following United States draft directives on political and administrative subjects are awaiting consideration in Washington: control of education, disposition of political prisoners, international agreements, war criminals, removal of German officials and civilians from territory formerly under German control, control of German foreign relations, control of public health.⁸⁸

A clear indication of the time when these draft directives, or of policy statements dealing with these subjects, can be considered and cleared in Washington for presentation to the EAC might assist me considerably in persuading the Commission that a prompt discussion of revised 1067 will be followed by the presentation of United States policy on further matters requiring agreement between the occupying powers and not covered or not covered adequately in 1067.

London, February 5, 1945—11 p.m. [Received February 6—2:30 a.m.]

1278. For Assistant Secretary Dunn. I was glad to receive the clarifications of the economic directive (Department's instruction 4980 of January 13) contained in Department's 849, February 3, 11 p. m. These explanations will undoubtedly be of assistance in presenting the directive in the European Advisory Commission. Department's 849 is the first interpretation of the revised 1067 received through Department channels.

Receipt of the revised 1067 and of Department's 849 will, I believe, help correct a serious misapprehension which has developed in recent months among military authorities engaged in planning United States participation in control of Germany. Some top people in the United States nucleus control group ⁸⁹ have interpreted 1067 as meaning that, whether or not any overall policies are arrived at in matters affecting Germany as a whole, the United States military policy is to run the United States zone as a separate entity.

The United States side of SHAEF has apparently regarded the future Control Council as an advisory rather than a policy determining body. Responsible United States officers of SHAEF, in consultations with my advisers, have repeatedly emphasized their view that United States membership on the Control Council gives the United States Commander-in-Chief power to veto the adoption by the Council of a uniform policy in any field, and, as a result of such a veto, military government in each zone will proceed along its own lines. United States SHAEF officers also maintain that even in those cases in which an agreed policy is laid down in the Control Council and with the participation of the United States Commander-in-Chief, the zonal authorities will use their own judgment as to whether to carry out that joint policy in the United States zone or to ignore the decisions, or, as they put it, the recommendations, of the Control Council. In expressing these views they seem to ignore the basic fact that the United States Commander-in-Chief is at the same time a member of the Control Council for Germany as a whole and the supreme authority in the United States zone, and concentrate entirely on his allegedly exclusive responsibility as the supreme authority in his zone.

I feel the Department should know of this divergence of interpretation of 1067. It would be most unfortunate if negotiations on the revised 1067 should proceed in the EAC on the assumption, as stated by the Department, that "the greatest obtainable measure of uniformity in policy among the several zones" should be sought, while United States military authorities charged with giving effect to United States policy in Germany operate on a directly opposite interpretation of the same directive. Since the directives issued to the United States nucleus group in London and to the United States side of SHAEF emanate from the War Department in Washington, clarification of this basic confusion should be sought there.

Department's 849 points out that the revised 1067 "does not attempt to define in advance the precise division of responsibility between the Control Council and the zones". However, if great confusion and working at cross purposes are to be avoided, it will be essential to define as early as possible the general scope of the Council's responsibility for working out agreed policies in the various fields, even though direct responsibility for execution of all policies will rest with the zonal authorities. One of the main purposes of the United States draft directives, 15 of which are already before the Commission, is to delimit in broad terms the spheres of responsibility as between the Control Council and the zonal authorities. It will be confusing to the Commission if the proposed overall directive and its appendices ignore even the need for a broad delimitation of the responsibility for policy making as between the Control Council and the zonal authorities.

I note from Department's 603, January 26, 1 p. m., that the Department intends to supplement the revised 1067 "by other statements of policy on subjects not covered" by it. This intention had not been made clear by Department's instruction 4980, which referred only to the future transmission of a financial directive.

Before I can persuade the EAC to accept the existing economic directive as a basis for quadripartite agreement, I must be in a position to set forth a list of the additional economic subjects which the Department proposes to cover in these additional policy statements, as well as the extent to which our Government will seek agreement in the EAC on specific questions not treated in the economic directive (Department's 849).

Some of these supplementary economic subjects are covered in draft directives prepared by my joint advisers. Of those draft directives which have been cleared in Washington and circulated in the EAC, two relate to economic matters: Control of merchant shipping and control of inland transport.⁹⁰ The following draft directives,⁹¹ which are awaiting consideration in Washington, would provide a useful basis for giving content to an agreement among the occupying powers to act jointly in controlling Germany's economic life: Property control, control of food and agriculture, control of labor, control of coal industry, control of oil industry, control of foreign trade, control of internal trade, control of finance, control of aviation.

The draft directives submitted by me have been based on all the policy statements and studies available, particularly those of the Department. They have been prepared in close collaboration with the officers of the control group and with United States civilian experts available here, and have been reviewed with great care by my advisers in cooperation with the control group, with departmental experts, and more recently with United States SHAEF officers. In preparing draft directives my advisers have striven to eliminate all unnecessary detail and to confine them to setting forth a few broad bases on which coordinated policies could be worked out by the Control Council. These remarks apply to all our draft directives—not only to the economic ones.

At my conference of November 6 ⁹² with Mr. Dunn and Mr. McCloy it was my understanding what policy statements on those subjects which require agreement at the governmental level as a basis for the effective functioning of Allied control in Germany would be cleared and transmitted to me. In this connection, I cannot accept the statement of the November 6 understanding as set forth in JCS 1223/2 of January 11,⁹³ since the latter states that no further consideration will be given to specific draft directives and that United States views will be expressed only in an expanded JCS 1067.

I believe profoundly that, if we intend to make a serious effort to attain and preserve Allied unity in the treatment of Germany, statements of policy beyond those contained in the revised 1067 will, as promised in Department's 603, be absolutely essential as a basis for arriving at workable agreements on policy. The need for EAC is pressing. But it is no more pressing than the need for such statements by the nucleus United States control group for its use in planning and in collaborating with the other national components of the Control Council, and by the United States side of SHAEF in planning for administration in the United States zone.

I must therefore urge the Department to clarify the discrepancy between the statement in JCS 1223/2 that no further draft directives will be cleared and the statement in Department's 603 that JCS 1067 will be supplemented by additional statements of policy on subjects not covered by it or by draft directives previously forwarded to me.

[∞] Not found in Department files.

In this connection, Colonel Wildman, my Assistant Military Air Adviser, has informed me of his conversation with Mr. McCloy resulting in Colonel Marcus' ⁹⁴ memorandum to General Hilldring of January 3 (CAD/DM/71748). ⁹⁵ This memorandum urged that additional directives on subjects not covered in 1067 should be studied at once with a view to clearing them for transmission to me for use in the EAC. Colonel Marcus' recommendation of January 3 accords with my understanding of our arrangement of November 6.

Meanwhile, if Department's 849 expresses, as I believe it does, the true purport of 1067, it would, I believe, be wiser to state this affirmatively and unequivocally in the draft submitted to the EAC, rather than to risk arousing suspicion of our allegiance to the principle of acting together in all matters relating to Germany as agreed at the Moscow Conference 96 by presenting 1067 in its present ambiguous form. Any comments which I might make in an effort to relate 1067 to our real position would have to be embodied in written revisions of 1067 if they are to become the basis of an effective agreement among the occupying powers. Such revisions for the purpose of clarifying 1067 might better be made now, in advance of its circulation, so that time and effort in the EAC negotiations may be devoted to forwarding affirmatively the basic principles sought by us, rather than being diluted by defensive acknowledgments by me in the EAC of the need for revising 1067 and for supplementing it by additional policy statements.

The same considerations apply to the instruction in the Department's 604, January 26, 2 p. m. 55 to press for the activation of the Control Council. As the Department is aware, I have constantly urged this step since last June and am continuing to urge it. However, before the three or four Control Council groups can cooperate effectively, it is essential to clarify in the minds of our military authorities the relation between zonal and central authority in the military government of Germany. If the Soviet control group were at this time to begin working with the United States control group and were to discover the strong emphasis which the United States group places on independent operation of the United States zone, the effect on continued cooperation in the administration and control of Germany and on other aspects of Allied cooperation might be extremely serious.

Washington, February 9, 1945.

The Secretary of State refers to the draft directive on "United Nations Prisoners of War" ⁹⁷ prepared by the American delegation to the European Advisory Commission and encloses a redraft of this directive as a general statement of policy on the subject for presentation to the European Advisory Commission.

There is likewise transmitted with this instruction a copy of a memorandum of February 5, 1945 communicating the approval of the State, War and Navy Departments of this redraft and making certain comment thereon.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Chairman of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (Dunn) to the Secretary of State

Washington, February 5, 1945.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee has reviewed the United States draft directive on "United Nations Prisoners of War in Germany" prepared by the United States Adviser, European Advisory Commission. They have approved the appended redraft (enclosure #1) of this directive as a general statement of policy on the subject.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee recommends that this redraft be transmitted to the United States representative on the European Advisory Commission for his guidance.

The Coordinating Committee invites the attention of the Secretary of State to the cable to the American Ambassador in London (10371—12 December 1944) 98 a copy of which is attached as enclosure #2. In accordance with the policy set forth in this cable, the Coordinating Committee has approved a statement of policy on the subject of United Nations Prisoners of War which differs from the somewhat detailed directive submitted by the United States Adviser, European Advisory Commission, in that it contains only general policy provisions of the type on which agreement should be reached in the European Advisory Commission negotiations. It has been phrased in a form applicable for inclusion as a section or part of a broad general directive, or appendix thereto, dealing with the initial governing of Germany.

The Coordinating Committee has given consideration to the possibility of including in this statement of policy (enclosure #1), provisions covering the treatment of internees as suggested in recent cables from the American Ambassador in London. The reason for this suggestion was not stated by the Ambassador and was not apparent to the Coordinating Committee. Internees in enemy custody will not normally be found in prison camps where prisoners of war are also placed. Upon release from detention, they will not, as will prisoners of war, be a part of the armed forces or merchant marine of their nations. Their treatment and disposition would ordinarily differ from that to be afforded to prisoners of war. The Coordinating Committee, however, will be prepared to re-examine this question upon receipt of information as to the reasons supporting the Ambassador's suggestion.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have advised the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy that they have considered the proposed statement of policy on United Nations Prisoners of War submitted to them by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, and that they perceive no objection, from the military point of view.

This advice on the part of the Joint Chiefs of Staff was given prior to the enlarging of the definition of United Nations Prisoners of War to include certain members of the armed forces of ex-enemy countries. However, the Combined Chiefs of Staff have approved the policy in substantially the same form with respect to Italy.

JAMES CLEMENT DUNN

[Subenclosure]

United Nations Prisoners of War 99 (Reference J.C.S. Memo No. 336)¹

- 1. The term "United Nations prisoners of war" as used in this directive includes all personnel held in German custody,
- (a) who are or have been members of, or persons accompanying or serving with the armed forces or merchant marine of any of the United Nations or
- (b) who as members of the armed forces of ex-enemy countries have been captured by the Germans while engaged in serving the cause of the United Nations and who, under the rules and customs of war, should be treated as prisoners of war even though not recognized as such by Germany. The term does not include the nationals of any country who are interned in Germany, but who are not included in the group covered by the preceding sentence: further, such term does not include personnel who, although formerly held in German custody as prisoners of war, have accepted release from that status in exchange for employment in Germany. Persons in the latter classes, after appropriate identification, should be dealt with as displaced persons.

[∞] Circulated in the European Advisory Commission as United States Draft Directive No. 17, designated E.A.C. (45) 31, dated April 14, 1945.

¹ Same as the revised draft directive on United Nations' prisoners of war prepared by the U.S. Delegation to the E.A.C. and transmitted to the Department as enclosure to despatch 18790, October 23, 1944, from London, neither printed.

- 2. The transfer into the control of their respective national authorities of United Nations prisoners of war, and their repatriation, will be treated as a matter of urgency second only to military operations and to maintenance of the forces of occupation in Germany and will receive priority above that of displaced persons, refugees and internees. In determining the order of such transfer and subsequent disposition of such prisoners, the following factors will be taken into account as important considerations, giving due regard to the need for equality of treatment regardless of nationality or branch of military service:
- a. Military operations throughout the world and maintenance of forces of occupation.
- b. Requirements of any United Nations for personnel having special qualifications for its war effort elsewhere.
 - c. Integration with over-all transportation requirements.
- d. Availability of adequate subsistence and accommodation for repatriated or transferred prisoners of war at destination.
- 3. The Control Council will coordinate policies with respect to United Nations prisoners of war.
- 4. In your zone you will free from confinement all United Nations prisoners of war in German custody, assume command of them, and order them to stand fast pending arrangements for their subsequent disposition.
- 5. The German authorities will be held responsible for the safety and well being of all United Nations prisoners of war. You will require the German authorities to maintain the essential administrative supply and other services for all United Nations prisoners of war, including the provision of adequate food, shelter, clothing and medical care, until such prisoners are evacuated or until otherwise directed by you. It will, however, be your responsibility to see that proper care and maintenance are, in fact, accorded United Nations prisoners of war by the appropriate German authorities, and to supply any deficiencies therein arising out of the failure of the German authorities to make adequate provision therefor. You will, as soon as practicable, place an officer in command of each prisoner of war camp in your zone.

Pending such action, you will direct the German authorities to hand over each camp together with its stores, records, arms and ammunition to the command of the local United Nations Camp Leader, senior officer or other designated representative of the United Nations prisoners of war.

- 6. You will render all possible aid to such prisoners of war, consistent with the means at hand, to the end that their safety, health and well-being will be protected from adverse conditions which may exist in Germany and that the conditions under which they live will be as comfortable as practicable under the circumstances.
- 7. You will accord liaison on prisoner of war matters to representatives of each of the other two Allied Powers accredited therefor by their respective Commander-in-Chief, and to representatives of any United Nation accredited therefor by the Control Council or other competent authority. You will arrange for such representatives to have access to prisoners of war who are nationals of their countries, and you will wherever practicable permit them to utilize the facilities of their governments for purposes of relief, transfer and repatriation.

[Washington,] 15 February 1945.

The attached memorandum, prepared by Mr. John deWilde,³ reviews the development and present status of economic planning work for Germany. Of necessity, it takes no account of the decisions reached at the recent conference at Yalta.

Apart from the conference, the progress to date on economic planning for Germany has been slight. Not only has discussion at the intergovernmental level been meager, but divergences among government departments on basic issues have prevented the formulation on an agreed American position. This lack of definition is due to disagreement over (1) the responsibilities and functions of the occupying powers, and (2) policy with respect to economic weakening of Germany.

1. Functions of Military Government

The conception of military government which is now ascendant, and is embodied in the latest U.S. general directive forwarded to Ambassador Winant for negotiation in E.A.C., is one of limited liability. The occupation authorities should concern themselves exclusively with matters of direct interest to the Allies, such as demilitarization and denazification; they should concern themselves with the functioning of the German economy only to the extent of preventing such unrest or disease as would endanger the occupying forces. The War Department favors this limited definition of the Army's tasks because (1) they favor a simple, clear-cut military occupation, (2) they wish, by limiting the task, to minimize the need for consultation and negotiation among the commanders of the several zones of occupation, and (3) they wish to keep the job within the capabilities of the occupation forces. The Treasury supports the doctrine of limited liability because (1) they consider that extreme disruption in Germany is not in conflict with Allied interests, and (2) acceptance of any responsibility for the minimum functioning of the German economy would cause us to make compromises with respect to elimination of Nazis.

² Addressed to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton) and his Deputy, Mr. Edward S. Mason.

³ Assistant Adviser on German Economic Affairs.

⁴ Directive . . . regarding the military government of Germany in the period immediately following the cessation of organized resistance (post defeat), January 6, 1945, p. 378.

The Department, while sharing the view that denazification should not be tempered by administrative expediency, has sought to oppose the principle of limited liability. This issue, though it arises most sharply with respect to the economic directives, is essentially political in character. It is envisaged that the execution of any Allied program for Germany will require Allied machinery for surveillance and enforcement over a considerable period of years. We have an interest, from the beginning, in preventing the development of an unmanageably chaotic situation, and, thereafter, in fostering the emergence of a German government which will carry out the peace settlement imposed on Germany, subject to necessary Allied surveillance.

Because of this basic interest, and secondarily, because of the need for maintaining German production of civilian necessities in order to minimize the diversion of United Nations supplies and transport while the Far Eastern war is in progress, we cannot avoid responsibility for the functioning of the German economy. The speed and success with which we can discharge this responsibility will depend, of course, upon the character of German collapse; such tasks as, for example, prevention of inflation may prove in the circumstances to be beyond the capacity of the occupation forces. However, the greater these difficulties, the slower will be the process of bringing a German government into existence. If we are slow in recognizing the nature of our responsibilities, the process will be needlessly prolonged. The notion that the major powers can assume supreme authority over Germany and follow a "hands-off" policy is the major factor hampering advance planning for the economic aspects of the occupation.

If a broader view of the nature of our responsibilities with respect to the German economy is adopted, the need becomes evident for avoiding interzonal barriers to the movement of goods and for the largest practicable uniformity in economic policy throughout Germany. It is also evident that the occupation forces cannot carry out by themselves a broad program to assure the minimum functioning of the German economy. Reliance must be placed on German agencies. Recognizing this need, the British have been inclined to limit the scope, or adjust the timing, of their planned denazification in order to preserve existing institutions. An implication of our position on denazification is that we must either pick out new executive and administrative personnel to replace dismissed Nazis or permit the German people to select such personnel. Existing U.S. draft directives, however, instruct the occupation authorities both to remain aloof and to restrict drastically any political activity on the part of Germans.

2. Economic Weakening of Germany

It is essential that our policies with respect to "economic disarmament", reparation and abolition of German high-cost, self sufficiency production should be mutually consistent.

Abolition of high-cost production will have to be postponed for a considerable period in the interest of more immediate Allied objectives. In the beginning the necessity of meeting minimum civilian needs will be largely controlling; although production of a few industrial items, such as synthetic oil and rubber may be discontinued, German agricultural production will have to be maintained so far as possible. For a considerable period thereafter, the largest practicable portion of export proceeds will be earmarked for reparation, and imports will be held to a minimum. If, in addition, an attempt is made to curb German heavy industry, the integration of Germany into world trade on the basis of efficient specialization will be further postponed. Abolition of German high-cost production implies enlarged dependence on exports, and tends to conflict, therefore, with restrictions on industries in which Germany is predominant and with rep-In the long run, we should aim at the assimilation of the German economy into the world economy on a non-discriminatory basis. For some years, however, this will be impracticable.

The more immediate problem is that of reconciling reparation and "economic disarmament". The task of keeping Germany disarmed is primarily one of enforcement, not economic disablement. If other countries are prepared to act promptly in response to an unambiguous step toward rearmament nothing more is required; if it is doubted that other countries will respond to an unambiguous step by Germany, there is even more reason to doubt that an ambiguous step, such as erection of a blast furnace or machine tool factory, will evoke any action in response. It is extremely doubtful that other countries would be willing to enforce comprehensive economic controls over Germany for much more than a decade. Nevertheless, reduction of Germany's underlying economic potential has a strong, present appeal as a security measure. It is also allied with other objectives, such as elimination of German economic domination, industrial development of liberated European countries and removal of competition with British and American exports. Along with this demand for economic restraints on Germany, there is an insistent demand for reparation. The two demands are not in conflict so long as reparation is confined to transfers of existing capital assets and labor services, but the possibility of conflicting demands arises when reparation from current production is also envisaged. Restraints on German production and exports will have to be reconciled somehow with the necessity of securing payment for such imports as may be needed for the minimum functioning of the German economy and the production of reparation goods. Unless Germany is allowed to export enough to pay for such imports, the United States may have to supply necessary foodstuffs and raw materials to Germany at its own expense.

Our program for Germany should "add up" within itself, and it should add up at a figure which leaves to the Germans the opportunity of achieving a tolerable living standard even during the period of economic controls. Our measures for reducing Germany's underlying economic potential should be subject to continuous review and adjustment, and should be so framed as to permit the eventual removal of economic discriminations when and if the victorious powers become convinced that German aggressiveness has been destroyed. Finally, economic controls over Germany should be directed toward the objective of accelerating the reconstruction and economic development of the United Nations. This implies integration of the program of German reparation and economic disarmament with positive programs for the industrial development of other areas.

Such a program would call both for German reparation deliveries of existing capital equipment and some types of current production, and for restrictions on other categories of German exports to protect the new industries being developed in other countries. Germany is, above all, predominant in the metallurgical, chemical, electrical equipment, machine tools and allied industries. With respect to these industries, we would have to investigate where non-German capacity could soundly be strengthened and developed. Decisions on this question would largely depend on the availability of raw materials and markets and of adequate labor, engineering skill and know-how. A country like Yugoslavia, for example, might be enabled to build up an aluminum industry since it has bauxite and hydroelectric power resources susceptible of development. In Britain, France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, and the Soviet Union, the machine tool industry might be strengthened. The iron and steel industry might be further developed in Poland, France, Belgium and the Soviet Union. Czechoslovakia and France could be assisted in developing their output of high-grade alloy steels. Countries in Eastern and Southeastern Europe where industrial development might be retarded by lack of engineering skill and know-how could be provided with technical assistance by the industrially advanced countries.

It would be highly desirable if the forthcoming reparation conversations in Moscow ⁵ resulted in the formation of an Allied organization to develop and supervise the execution of policies with respect to reparation and economic disarmament, along the broad lines indicated above. There is ground for hoping that agreement can be reached on the need for an Allied organization to carry out this task. Indeed, it may provide a basis for attaining the long-range objectives which were envisaged in the proposal for a European Economic Committee. ⁶ In the process of formulating an agreed economic program for Germany, it will be necessary to reach agreement on economic problems over a much broader field.

Memorandum by the Assistant Adviser on German Economic Affairs (deWilde)

[Washington,] February 13, 1945.

This memorandum reviews the present status of the work on the economic treatment of Germany. It is intended to survey the preparations made for the Allied government of Germany and the progress achieved in determining basic long-term policies toward that country.

THE GOVERNMENT OF OCCUPIED GERMANY

In determining the machinery and directives for the administration and treatment of occupied Germany a distinction has been drawn between a pre-surrender period and a post-surrender period. In the first period the primary objective of the occupation will be to facilitate further military operations against the enemy; in the second period the principal objective will be to disarm Germany and to enforce the terms of the final settlement which will be imposed on that country. Before final surrender military government will be in the hands of officers attached to the operating armed forces. After complete surrender, or cessation of organized resistance, Germany will be governed by the four principal powers—the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and France—operating within the framework of an international agreement and in accordance with the terms of unconditional surrender whether or not these are signed by competent German authorities.

A. The Pre-Surrender Period

The directives which will govern the administration of German territory falling under the control of SHAEF during the presurrender period have been the subject of negotiation in the Combined Civil Affairs Committee (CCAC) of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. In April 1944 the Combined Chiefs of Staff issued a basic pre-surrender directive to General Eisenhower in his capacity as Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Forces (SCAEF). This directive is couched in very general terms. It provides for the establishment of a purely military government on captured German territory and clothes the Supreme Commander with unlimited legislative, executive and judicial authority and power. It contains directions on the dissolution of the Nazi party and affiliated organizations, on the denazification of the German administration, the arrest and detention of certain categories of persons, and the release and treatment of Allied prisoners of war and foreign workers. Provisional measures governing the use of occupation currency and the control of banking and government finance are also included. In general ecoomic and relief measures are to be limited to those strictly necessary to prevent serious disease and civilian unrest which would endanger the occupying forces and the accomplishment of the objectives of the occupation.

While SCAEF is expected to take no steps that would prejudice the attainment of "ultimate objectives", the directive gives military government officers no guidance on the adoption of interim measures of reparation and restitution. Nor does it define the degree of responsibility which these officers should assume for the functioning of economic life or the extent to which they should utilize and adapt existing administrative machinery and economic controls. In particular it offers little or no guidance on the attitude which military government officers should take toward the continuation or resumption of nonwar production, allocation of available raw materials, prices and wages, and similar subjects.

In a subsequent clarification of the pre-surrender directive SCAEF was instructed to take no steps looking toward the economic rehabilitation of Germany except for those immediately necessary in support of military operations and to keep no active Nazis or ardent sympathizers in office for purposes of administrative convenience or expediency.

B. The Post-Surrender Period

Plans for the joint control and administration of Germany during this period have been the subject of negotiation in the European Advisory Commission (EAC) in London on which the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union have been represented. France has recently been admitted to full membership in this Commission. The recommendations of EAC are subject to approval by the governments concerned. Ambassador Winant, the American member of the Commission, has been assisted by a staff of political, military, naval and air advisers. Recently the State Department and FEA⁸ have jointly designated an economic adviser, Mr. William T. Stone, who also directs a newly organized Division on German Economic Affairs in the American Embassy.

The EAC has drafted, and the three principal powers have approved, the surrender instrument for Germany. This is almost wholly a military instrument by which the German authorities would agree to the cessation of hostilities and would undertake to withdraw all military forces outside the pre-1938 boundaries of the Reich and to put at the disposal of the Allies all armed forces, army, navy and air installations, all shipping and all war material. Moreover, they would be obliged to accept any additional political, administrative, economic, financial, military and other demands which the Allies might subsequently present. Actually there is considerable doubt as to whether competent German authorities will be found after collapse in Germany to sign this instrument. Failing signature, however, its terms will simply be announced to the German people by proclamation.

The EAC has also formulated agreed recommendations on the machinery to be set up by the occupying powers for governing Germany ¹⁰ and on the delimitation of the zones to be occupied by the armed forces of each of the participating powers. ¹¹ These recommendations at present provide for tripartite control and occupation.

having been drawn up prior to the participation of France in EAC. France has approved them in principle, but they are to be revised on a quadripartite basis. By the terms of these recommendations, the Commanders-in-Chief of the armed forces of each occupying power would be military governors in their respective zones and would together constitute a supreme authority in Berlin. This supreme authority, called the Control Council, would have within its jurisdiction all matters "affecting Germany as a whole" and would supervise the German central administration to the extent that this would be utilized for military government purposes. It would also control the administration of the Greater Berlin area through a quadripartite "Kommandatura". A permanent Coordinating Committee, consisting of Deputies of each of the Commanders-in-Chief, would be set up under the Control Council for the purpose of supervising day-to-day This Committee would be assisted by a staff composed of a number of divisions each of which would be headed by a directorate on which each of the participating powers would be represented.

A nucleus of the quadripartite control machinery has been organized in London. The American element in this nucleus (the U. S. Group Control Council headed provisionally by General Wickersham) is still small compared with the British element. The Russians have promised to participate in this project but thus far no Russian (or French) elements have joined the nucleus control group. The extent of civilian participation in the control machinery for Germany remains uncertain, particularly in the case of the United States. While the British have enlisted the participation of numerous civilians in their military government organization and have placed this organization under the direction of the War Cabinet rather than the War Office, the War Department has tended to insist on a government more military in character and controlled strictly by the army.

However, the agreement on control machinery does provide for a civilian political adviser to each of the Commanders-in-Chief and Mr. Robert Murphy has been designated to fill this position on the American side. Mr. Murphy has also been named as Director of the Political Division in the U. S. Group Control Council and a substantial part of his staff in that division will consist of Foreign Service Officers. In an effort to get wider civilian participation, the State Department and the FEA agreed last November upon the joint designation of Mr. Leon Henderson as United States Adviser on German Economic Affairs to operate under the general supervision of Mr. Murphy in his role as Political Adviser and with a civilian staff supplied by the two agencies. However, the War Department has never accepted this arrangement and Mr. Henderson's trip to London and Paris to survey German economic work on behalf of the FEA was arranged only as a temporary expedient. If Mr. Murphy in his capacity as Political Adviser is not to have an economic staff of some sort, the Department's representation in Germany on the economic side must take the form of the assignment of economic officers to the Political Division or possibly to the Economic Division. However, specific arrangements of this character cannot be made until an overall decision is reached on the extent of civilian participation in military government.

When agreement was reached on a short surrender instrument, the three powers undertook to supplement it by more detailed proclamations and directives which were to be negotiated in EAC. Late in October the Soviet Government agreed to the discussion of these matters in EAC and also expressed a readiness to start the consideration of (a) questions concerning the repatriation of prisoners of war belonging to United Nations' forces, (b) additional military requirements concerning the arrangements for the disarmament and demilitarization of Germany, (c) requirements concerning abolition of the Hitlerite regime and the surrender of war criminals, and (4) [(d)] provisions concerning control of the German economy. The American government, however, has on the whole not been prepared for detailed consideration of these questions.

The American Joint Chiefs of Staff have issued a general directive, known as JCS 1067, designed to cover the brief period which might elapse between surrender and the establishment of the quadripartite control machinery. The British took the position in CCAC that the pre-surrender directive would be adequate for this brief period, and JCS 1067 was accordingly issued to General Eisenhower only in his capacity of Commander of the American forces. However, the State, War, and Navy Departments, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff have recently produced a revised version of JCS 1067 which has been transmitted to Ambassador Winant for negotiation in EAC as an over-all quadripartite directive. The financial section of this directive has not yet gone forward and is still under consideration in Washington.

A number of more specific directives have been elaborated in London, for ultimate submission to EAC, by a planning staff attached to Ambassador Winant, acting in cooperation with the U. S. Group Control Council. Some of these directives dealing with purely military and political matters have been cleared in Washington by the State, Navy and War Departments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. All of the economic directives, except one dealing with transportation, have been held up. The U. S. draft directives approved in Washington, as well as a large number of British draft directives on specific subjects, have been circulated informally among all members of the EAC.

A large number of Civil Affairs Guides have been completed at the direction of the Civil Affairs Division (CAD) of the War Department. These Guides, most of which have been prepared by OSS ¹² and FEA under the general guidance of CAD and the State Department, cover most aspects of the economy, administration and government of Germany and are intended primarily to furnish American military government planning officers with the basic background information they need. While almost all the Guides contain recommendations on policies and procedures, these are only suggestive and in no sense definitive directives.

A considerable number of immediate questions are still awaiting decision. The chief among these are briefly described below.

1. Degree of Responsibility for German Government and Economic Life.

The present U.S. draft for an over-all quadripartite policy directive would confine the occupation authorities to a rather narrow role in the administration of the German economy. They would be di rected to assume only such responsibilities as are required to stop the production of implements of war, to prevent sabotage and to insure the production of goods needed for the prevention of epidemics or serious unrest endangering the occupation forces. Except to the extent necessary to accomplish these purposes, the "German people and the German authorities" would be left with responsibility for "such economic problems as price controls, rationing, unemployment, production, reconstruction, distribution, consumption, housing or transportation". This statement has produced widely varying interpretations as to how much responsibility the occupation authorities need exercise to accomplish their objectives. Since the State Department has proposed that no central German government shall be recognized during the period of occupation, the military government may be unable to escape a substantial measure of responsibility for a minimum functioning of the German economy.

2. Division of Authority between the Control Council and the Zone Authorities.

The present directive tends to relegate the Control Council to a secondary role and implies that substantial autonomy would be given to the zone authorities. The present German economic system, however, is highly centralized, with uniform national controls over raw materials, manpower, industrial and agricultural production and distribution, and finance. While a considerable degree of decentralization should probably accompany the ultimate reconversion of the German economy, central controls will remain indispensable for some time, particularly during the initial period when the supply situation will be one of acute scarcity. Provisions for interzonal exchange of goods and services will almost certainly be necessary to the effective utilization of available German resources.

3. Extent of Denazification of the German Administration.

The American government advocates sweeping elimination of active Nazis from positions of influence in the German administration and economy, while the British tend to favor restraint in the realization of this objective in the interest of administrative convenience.

4. Utilization of Existing Control Machinery.

While the draft directives prepared by the British for EAC emphasize the importance of retaining and utilizing existing controls and control machinery in the interest of maintaining order and facilitating the task of administration, the War Department is less interested in seeking to maintain German administrative machinery.

Pending the issue of detailed directives on these and many other questions that will confront the occupation authorities, the military government is generally expected to take no steps that would prejudice the attainment of "ultimate objectives". This makes it all the more imperative that the ultimate objectives that we intend to pursue with respect to Germany should be clarified.

CLARIFICATION OF ULTIMATE OBJECTIVES

One of the first attempts to clarify our economic policies with respect to Germany was made by the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy (ECEFP) which approved a paper on this subject in August 1944.13 This document emphasized that our fundamental interest in the preservation of peace would be best served by adopting certain safeguards against renewed German economic preparations for war and by creating conditions under which Germany would make a maximum contribution to the reconstruction of Europe and the development of a peaceful and expanding world economy. While opposing enduring controls over the German economy as undesirable and impracticable, the ECEFP proposed supervision of imports to prevent stockpiling of strategic materials, measures designed to maximize Germany's dependence on foreign supplies, conversion rather than dismantling of German industry, and destruction of the privileged positions of the Junkers and the industrial oligarchy. It suggested prohibition of discriminatory trade practices and adoption of measures against German cartels in order to prevent Germany from achieving domination over economically weak countries. The document advocated the fullest possible measure of restitution and proposed "heavy" reparations, predominantly in kind. Such payments, it held, should be limited to a period of five to ten years and should be so designed as to make a maximum contribution to the rehabilitation of European countries. The proposals on reparation and restitution were elaborated in greater detail in a separate document.

It soon became evident, however, that this general line of policy was considered too "soft" in some quarters. Renewed discussion and reconsideration was precipitated by the presentation of the "Morgenthau Plan" to the President last September. This Plan proposed that Germany should be divided into three parts (1) an international zone comprising the Ruhr and surrounding industrial areas and Western Germany up to the Kiel Canal, (2) an independent South German State which would be allowed to enter into a customs union with Austria, and (3) an independent North German State. Germany would be compelled to cede the Saar and area between the Rhine and Moselle Rivers to France, East Prussia to the Soviet Union and Poland, Southern Silesia to Poland, and the territory north of the Kiel Canal to Denmark. The plan also provided for elimination of the chemical, metallurgical and electrical industries.

On September 15 the President indicated in a memorandum to the Secretary of State ¹⁴ that he and Prime Minister Churchill had agreed at Quebec that the Saar and the Ruhr should be put under an international organization which would dismantle the metallurgical, chemical and electrical industries. This proposal, the President added, looked toward converting Germany into a country primarily agricultural and pastoral in character.

Subsequently the State Department prepared a memorandum for the President dissenting from the views of the Treasury.¹⁵ In another memorandum, dated September 29,¹⁶ the President tempered considerably his previous views on the economic disarmament of Germany. While reiterating his opinion that rather complete controls should be enforced in the Ruhr and the Saar, the President stated that no one wanted to make Germany "a wholly agricultural nation" or to eradicate completely German industrial capacity in the two areas.

Some additional policy guidance was given to the Secretary of State by the President in an informal memorandum of December 4.¹⁷ In this memorandum the President indicated that he was against reparations but in favor of restitution and that he would let Germany come back industrially to meet her own needs, but not do exporting for some time until we knew better how things were going to work out. While this memorandum gave only very general guidance, it seemed apparent that the President wished to subordinate reparation to the economic disarmament of Germany.

The most recent statement of Department views is contained in two memoranda written early in January as part of the preparation for the President's conference with Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill. A document on "Economic Policies toward Germany", 18 prepared by Mr. Despres, gave some emphasis to measures of economic disarmament. In addition to prohibition of the manufacture of armaments and aircraft and the destruction of specialized facilities for their manufacture, it stated that consideration should be given to prohibiting during a control period the production of a few key industrial items and restricting exports of metals, metal products and chemicals. Subject to these restrictions, it favored conversion of German industries to peacetime production, particularly of reparation goods for the rehabilitation of European countries. A document on "The Treatment of Germany", 19 prepared in EUR, made it clear that the Department did not favor drastic territorial dismemberment or truncation of Germany as a means of limiting that country's economic war potential. It held that partitioning of Germany would be impracticable.

Meanwhile, the Foreign Economic Administration, acting under instructions from the President, has launched a series of studies on methods of controlling the war-making power of Germany. The program of studies, which has been cleared with the Department, is based on the working assumption that economic disarmament, going well beyond the armament industry proper, will be included in our program for Germany.

Washington, February 19, 1945-midnight.

1282. For the Ambassador from Dunn. We have not overlooked your Comea 173 of February 5 with its observations on the revised JCS 1067 and have been considering it in connection with your 1278 of the same day. We have had certain preliminary discussions with the War Department on these matters in which the importance of the Control Council has been repeatedly emphasized. However, we have not attempted to give you a more definite reply during the Crimea Conference and, since the issuance of the Yalta communiqué,²¹ have decided not to raise these questions again until the return of both military and civilian members of the delegation. The War Department no doubt will want to discuss these matters with the military authorities who were at the conference and the Department in particular is awaiting the return of Matthews before giving you additional instructions.

We hope to send you at an early date draft directives on the remaining political and administrative subjects now awaiting action here. Department completed its work on these several weeks ago but clearance from War Department is still awaited. The education directive will be delayed as it will probably have to be taken up at the White House. [Dunn.]

Report of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Sub-Committee for Europe 22

Advice to United States Delegate, European Advisory Commission Addendum to SWNCC 2 (JCS 1067 as revised)

THE PROBLEM

1. To provide the United States Delegate, European Advisory Commission (EAC) with the views of the State-War-Navy Co-

²¹ Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 968.

²This report was an enclosure to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee document entitled "Redraft of JCS 1067 as a Tripartite Directive (Initial Post-Defeat Directive Germany)," designated SWNCC 2/3 and dated ordinating Committee (SWNCC) on subjects dealt with in draft directives relating to Germany prepared by the U.S. Advisers, EAC, which have not heretofore been acted upon by the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) or the SWNCC.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM

2. By a memorandum of the Assistant Secretary of War ²³ (SWNCC 14), there were referred to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Sub-Committee for Europe the draft directives listed therein (Appendix "A" to SWNCC 14 ²⁴) for study, recommendation and the preparation of appropriate statements of policy confined to broad basic policy principles not dealt with in JCS 1067, as presently revised (SWNCC 2) or in directives hitherto approved for transmittal to London.

DISCUSSION

- 3. There is set forth in Annex A to Appendix A ²⁵ statement of policy with respect to the subjects of International Agreements (JCS Memo 330), Control of German Foreign Relations (JCS Memo 340), Disposition of Enemy Diplomatic and Consular Property and Archives (unprinted memo) and Displaced Persons and Refugees (JCS Memo 343).
- 4. Such statement of policy is designed to supplement SWNCC 2 (JCS 1067, as revised) as an addendum thereto. However, on the question of form of presentation for negotiation in EAC, authorization has been given Ambassador Winant to make such alterations in form in JCS 1067, or other policy statements furnished him, as he deems desirable for EAC discussion so long as no change in substance results. (Department of State cable no. 603, 26 January 1945.)
- 5. The disposition of the remaining draft directives listed in SWNCC 14 is as follows:
- a. United Nations Prisoners of War (SWNCC 1/2)²⁶ and Disarmament of the German Armed Forces and Disposal of Enemy Equip-

February 22, 1945. Also included in SWNCC 2/3 was a draft letter to the Secretary of State, designated Appendix "A", not printed, which summarized the contents of the report of the SWNCC Subcommittee on Europe, and an addendum to JCS 1067, designated Annex "A" to Appendix "A", the text of which is printed on p. 474. The draft letter to the Secretary of State was not approved, but instead, by informal action of March 26, 1945, the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee approved a revised letter to the Secretary (for text see p. 474) and the addendum to JCS 1067.

ment (SWNCC 11/1/D)²⁷ have been approved by the SWNCC and forwarded to the State Department and have been transmitted to London.

b. Disposition of Political Prisoners (JCS Memo 326) and Dissolution of the Nazi Party and Purge of Nazi Personnel (JCS Memo 334) are, in the opinion of the Sub-Committee, adequately covered by JCS 1067, as revised (SWNCC 2), or by directives hitherto approved, or by Annex "A" to Appendix "A".

c. The seven draft directives on economic matters (JCS Memos 322, 329, 333, 339, 347, 348 and 349) 28 and the draft directives on War Criminals (JCS Memo 332) and Control of Educational Institutions in Germany (JCS Memo 309) will require further consideration within the interested Departments of the Government before final decision can be reached.

d. The draft directive on Removal of German Officials and Civilians from Territories Formerly under German Control (JCS Memo 341) has been considered. As a post defeat matter such removal is regarded as one for negotiation between the Control Council and the governments of territories formerly under German Control. Accordingly, it is not felt that it is appropriate at this time to furnish the U.S. Delegate, EAC, with a statement of policy on this subject.

CONCLUSIONS

- 6. The statement of policy (Annex "A" to Appendix "A") should be forwarded to the Secretary of State for transmittal to the U.S. Delegate, EAC, in order to supplement SWNCC 2 (JCS 1067, as revised) and the other directives hitherto transmitted.
- 7. There is no need to supplement JCS 1067, as revised (SWNCC 2) on policy matters relating to the Disposition of Political Prisoners (JCS Memo 326), Dissolution of the Nazi Party and Purge of Nazi Personnel (JCS Memo 334), or Removal of German Officials and Civilians from Territories Formerly Under German Control (JCS Memo 341).
- 8. The statement of policy at Annex "A" to Appendix "A" should be forwarded to JCS for their concurrence.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- 9. It is recommended:
- a. That the SWNCC approve the statement of policy in Annex "A" to Appendix "A".
 - b. That the SWNCC approve the conclusions of this report.
- c. That a copy of this report be forwarded to the JCS for their consideration with the request that if concurred in it be transmitted to agriculture, labor, coal, oil, international trade, and foreign trade.

²⁷ This draft directive was transmitted to London as an enclosure to instruction 5069, February 6, and was circulated in the European Advisory Commission by the United States Representative as document E.A.C. (45)12, dated February 16, 1945, none printed.

These were the draft directives concerned with property control, food and the Commanding General, U.S. Army Forces, European Theater of Operations, for his information and guidance.

d. That upon receipt of concurrence by the JCS the letter in Appendix "A" be forwarded to the Secretary of State.29

740,00119 Control (Germany)/2-2445

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Assistant Secretary of War (McCloy)

London, February 24, 1945.

Dear Jack: I was glad to have your letter of January 19 30 and I am sorry my reply has been delayed by the pressure of work here and by the President's summons to meet him for several days in the Mediterranean.³¹

I often wish that we were nearer geographically so that we could work together even more closely on these matters that are of so much concern to us all in trying to deal with the German problem so that our children and grandchildren will not have to face the ordeal of battle again. I am delighted to hear that you are coming to London, but I wish your visit were to be sooner rather than later.

I appreciate your good work in helping to get final clearance in Washington for the Agreement on Control Machinery and on Zones of Occupation. Now that all three Agreements have been approved by all three Governments, we have a common basis for working out joint policy toward Germany, without which the Allies cannot operate effectively in controlling Germany and maintaining Allied harmony in the post-war period.

My concern has always been, as you know, to see that the Allies have as firm and as clear agreements as possible in regard to the treatment of Germany. Without such agreements many frictions and conflicts might arise between the occupying forces, and such conflicts could hardly fail to have a profound influence on Allied harmony, which in turn is the necessary basis for our policy in other parts of the world and in our efforts to establish a security organization. I think the emphasis throughout should be on the attempt to achieve unit [unity?] of action. Unless our people who go into Germany feel deeply this need and sincerely make every effort to accomplish it, they will, unconsciously, be working against its accomplishment.

ⁿ Ambassador Winant conferred with President Roosevelt at Alexandria, Egypt, following the President's return from the Crimea Conference.

I do not think it is wise to stress continually what we all know, that in the absence of tripartite or quadripartite agreement the commander-in-chief in his zone will have a free hand. I am frankly worried because I find that some of our officers who are now planning for, and will later participate in, military government in Germany seem to feel that agreement on uniform policies is to be avoided because it would "tie their hands" in their zone. I wish the approach could be toward cooperation among the occupying Allies in those fields that call for joint agreement in the handling of Germany.

I do not agree with your simile of the Articles of Confederation. That marked a weak beginning and established an inadequate authority. Under the Articles the country lacked the power to make war, to put down rebellion, to tax and to regulate inter-state commerce. We should not go into Germany weak for lack of combined control but strong in an effective coordinated authority. That does not mean that the residue of power will not lie within the zones but that in those matters affecting Germany as a whole we will have firm agreement among the occupying Allies.

The necessity for reaching prior agreements among the occupying Powers on a governmental level is due to the fact that neither the Russians, the British, nor the French are willing to delegate final political authority to generals in the field. The President can do this because he is not only Chief of State but also, under the Constitution, Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the United States. It is contrary to French and British constitutional practice to do this. Stalin might do so but does not choose to do so. An illustration of this, where prior agreement was not reached, is the authority given by Stalin to Vyshinsky 32 in supervising and modifying the execution of the Armistice terms which were being carried out by the military in Rumania.33 This concept of authority has been made very clear by Gousev in the European Advisory Commission. Also our experience in dealing with the Russians in Rumania, Bulgaria and elsewhere has shown that it is easier to get agreement before occupation than afterwards.34

If our approach to the occupation of Germany were on a unilateral basis, the President, as Chief Magistrate and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, could delegate political and military authority to the commanding general, as was done at the end of the Spanish War. In the present situation, we will have an Allied occupation of an enemy country, involving not only the control of Germany but the interrelationship of the four occupying Allies. Under the Unconditional Surrender of Germany the Allies will be taking over control of Germany for themselves and "in the interest of the United Nations". Since we have insisted in the Surrender Instrument that the signatory Powers are "acting in the interest of the United Nations", we have taken on a quasi-trusteeship obligation toward other United Nations which we will fail to discharge unless we get agreement on matters which deeply affect the interests of all European Allies. For example, we must agree on provisions for the freezing of property until such time as equitable arrangements can be made to protect the rights of our Allies to restitution and reparation.

Independent operation of each zone would not in itself help to promote a policy of ultimate decentralization which, like other matters affecting Germany as a whole, must be worked out by agreement among the victorious Powers after an orderly control is established. The effective operation of Allied Control over Germany requires each commander-in-chief, as a member of the Control Council, to participate actively in negotiating and formulating joint policies in matters affecting Germany as a whole, on the basis of prior governmental agreements and of further instructions from his Government, and, as commander over his zone, to execute and enforce those policies in that zone. As the Commander-in-Chief will also sit on the Control Council, in which decisions are reached by unanimous approval, there should not be danger of unsolicited intervention in his zone.

I realize there has been constant criticism in the Civil Affairs Division with respect to "detailing" in our directives. If you will read carefully the Naval Special Order ²⁵ which was negotiated in Moscow, you will find there an insistence on detail that goes far beyond anything we have attempted in the E.A.C. draft political directives. Or take for example the comments in the memorandum ³⁶ transmitting the Prisoners of War Directive, in which you criticize "unnecessary detail" in our directive. The record will show that in clearing and forwarding the revised directive 37 you have simply lopped off the two standard introductory paragraphs and that the remainder of the directive is more detailed than the original draft 38 sent from here.

^{.*5} Draft Special Naval Orders to the German Naval authorities were prepared by the Allied Naval Commander, Expeditionary Force (British Adm. Bertram Ramsey), in consultation with the British Admiralty, for the purpose of setting forth the specific action to be required of the German Navy in the SHAEF theater immediately following surrender. United States naval authorities approved the orders and in October, 1944, following negotiations between U.S., U.K. and Soviet naval officials in Moscow, the Soviet naval authorities concurred in the Orders, subject to such minor technical changes as might be required. The Special Naval Orders were formally circulated in the European Advisory Commission by the United Kingdom Delegation as E.A.C. (45)4, dated 15 January 1945, not printed. United Kingdom and U.S. naval authorities regarded the tripartite agreement on the Orders as "firm" and decided to issue them immediately upon the German surrender. For a brief description of the naval orders issued to the German naval authorities at the May 7, 1945, surrender at Reims, see Forrest C. Pogue, The Supreme Command, in the official Army history United States Army in World War II: The European Theater of Operations (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1954), pp. 500-501. 36 The memorandum printed on p. 409.

Again, in the revised 1067, Article 1 of the Political Directive lists fourteen categories of persons who must be searched out, arrested and held. The final paragraph of that same Article places on the commander-in-chief detailed responsibility for reporting failure to arrest any one of several million persons comprised in these categories and for reporting to the Control Council his recommendation and reasons therefor in each case. This places an exacting obligation on the commanding general without regard to practical obstacles and without leaving any degree of discretion to him—an obligation which is far more binding in its detail than any which we felt wise to write into our draft directives.

I wonder if you realize how closely my advisers have worked with the operational and planning Army officers who are actually going to do some of these jobs in Germany. Those officers look at the problem from a very practical viewpoint. We are also in daily contact with the representatives of the three occupying Powers and the positions taken by them under instructions from their Governments.

In a letter to General Meyer, dated December 16, 1944,39 General Hilldring states:

"I am aware of Mr. Winant's agreement with Strang and if he would abandon the British long terms in favor of our short term instrument, we would agree to include the subject matter forming the basis of the long terms in proclamations and general orders to be issued to the Germans after the signing of the Surrender Instrument. To this we have no objection, although the Joint Chiefs have never been advised of the existence of such an agreement."

I am glad that General Hilldring admits the validity of this agreement, which we and the Russians made as a basis for securing British acceptance of our short military Instrument of Surrender. The instruction which directed me to enter into this agreement (dated February 12, 1944) 40 was approved in a signed memorandum by General Hilldring and was transmitted to me with the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the State Department. My acceptance of this commitment, upon express instructions of our Government, was reported by me in Comea 38 of March 10, 1944.41 The State and War

Departments acknowledged and confirmed this commitment in Eacom 13 of March 16, 1944.⁴²

The remaining paragraphs of General Hilldring's letter, however, go on to argue that there is no necessity for meeting this clear commitment. The consequences of repudiating such a commitment would inevitably lead to undermining the basis of Allied cooperation and unity.

The action taken at the Crimea Conference, which confirmed the acceptance of the Unconditional Surrender Instrument, of the Protocol on Zones of Occupation in Germany and the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, has given us a firm basis for action which should make our work easier in the weeks ahead.

I have always tried to work with you. My problem has been to get on with a job in which the time factor is an important element. Therefore I have pressed to get clearance on those things which I thought were of vital concern in protecting our interests and in safeguarding Allied unity.

I look forward to seeing you. I am sure we will find ourselves in agreement on the basic approach to the question of how best to assure continued Allied cooperation in the handling of Germany.

Sincerely, John Gilbert Winant

Memorandum by President Roosevelt to the Secretary of State

Washington, February 28, 1945.

I desire that you, as Secretary of State, assume the responsibility for seeing that the conclusions, exclusive of course of military matters, reached at the Crimea Conference, be carried forward. In so doing you will, I know, wish to confer with other officials of this Government on matters touching upon their respective fields. I will expect you to report to me direct on the progress you are making in carrying the Crimea decisions into effect in conjunction with our Allies.

Crimea Conference. In pursuance thereof, I am attaching for your approval a suggested directive on the treatment of Germany which I believe conforms to the Yalta discussions and decisions. I believe that such a directive is urgently necessary to implement the Yalta decisions and continue the formulation and development of United States policy to be concerted with our Allies. If you approve of the attached directive, I suggest the establishment of an informal policy committee on Germany under the chairmanship of the Department of State and including representatives of War, Navy, Treasury and the Foreign Economic Administration. This committee would serve as the central source of policy guidance for American officials both civilian and military on questions relating to the treatment of Germany and its proceedings would be based on the attached directive.

MARCH 10, 1945.

DRAFT DIRECTIVE FOR THE TREATMENT OF GERMANY

I. MILITARY GOVERNMENT

- 1. The inter-allied military government envisaged in the international agreement on control machinery for Germany shall take the place, and assume the functions, of a central government of Germany.
- 2. The authority of the Control Council shall be paramount throughout Germany. The zones of occupation shall be areas for the enforcement of the Council's decisions rather than regions in which the zone commanders possess a wide latitude of autonomous power.
- 3. German administrative machinery must be purged as set forth below. It shall be used in so far as it can serve the purposes of this directive and does not permit Nazi abuses.

II. IMMEDIATE SECURITY MEASURES

- 1. The German armed forces, including para-military organizations, shall be promptly demobilized and disbanded.
- 2. All military and para-military agencies, including the General Staff, partly military and quasi-military organizations, the Reserve Corps, and military academies, together with all associations serving to keep alive the military tradition in Germany shall be immediately dissolved and thereafter prohibited.

Another copy of this memorandum bears the handwritten, unsigned notation: "March 12, 1945 approved. Handed in person to the Secy. 3/13/45 Staff Meeting." A covering chit by Mr. Hathaway Watson, Assistant to the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State (G. Hayden Raynor), dated March 14, attached to still another copy of the memorandum reads as follows: "Original was returned from the White House approved by Mr. Roosevelt. I personally handed it to Mr. Stettinius in the Staff Meeting."

- 3. All German arms, ammunition and implements of war shall be removed or destroyed.
- 4. Military archives and military research facilities shall be confiscated.
- 5. The manufacture and the importation of arms, ammunition and implements of war shall be prohibited.
- 6. The German aircraft industry shall be dismantled and the further manufacture of aircraft and component parts shall be henceforth prohibited.

III. IMMEDIATE POLITICAL MEASURES

- 1. The Nazi Party and its affiliated and supervised organizations shall be dissolved and their revival in any form shall be prohibited. Such non-political social services of these organizations as are deemed desirable may be transferred to other agencies.
- 2. Nazi laws which provided the legal basis of the Hitler regime and which established discriminations on grounds of race, creed, and political opinion shall be abolished.
- 3. All Nazi public institutions (such as the People's Courts and Labor Front) which were set up as instruments of Party domination shall be abolished.
- 4. Active Nazis and supporters of Nazism and other individuals hostile to Allied purposes, shall be eliminated from public and quasipublic office and from positions of importance in private enterprise. Active Nazis shall be defined as those approximately two million members of the Party who have been leaders at all levels, from local to national, in the Party and its subordinate organizations.
- 5. Nazi political malefactors and all war criminals shall be arrested and punished.
- 6. Germans taken abroad for labor reparation shall be drawn primarily from the ranks of the active Nazis and of Nazi organizations, notably from the SS and the Gestapo.

This procedure will serve the double purpose of eliminating many of the worst carriers of Nazi influence from Germany and of compelling the guilty to expiate their crimes and to repair some of the damage they have done.

- 7. Under the direction and supervision of the Control Council there shall be established throughout Germany a unified system of control over all means of disseminating public information.
- 8. There shall be established a uniform system of control over German education designed completely to eliminate Nazi doctrines and to make possible the development of democratic ideas.

IV. ECONOMIC CONTROL

1. Pending definite decision on revision of boundaries and partitioning, Germany as it existed on January 1, 1938, with the exception of East Prussia and Upper Silesia, shall be administered and controlled as an economic unit.

- 2. The economy of Germany shall be directed, controlled and administered in such a way as to
- (a) Provide facilities for, and contribute to the maintenance of the occupying forces and occupying authorities.

(b) Stop the production, acquisition and development of implements of war and their specialized parts and components.

(c) Provide a minimum standard of living for the German people including such food, shelter, clothing and medical supplies as are required to prevent disorder and disease on a scale that would make the task of occupation and the collection of reparation substantially more

(d) Provide such goods and services to Allied countries for relief, restitution and reparation as will be in excess of the requirements of the occupation forces and the minimum standard of living.

(e) Conform to such measures for the reduction and control of Germany's economic war potential as the Allied governments may pre-

(See paragraphs 13 to 18, inclusive.)

- 3. It is recognized that a substantial degree of centralized financial and economic control is essential to the discharge of the tasks mentioned in paragraph 2. The Control Council shall have general responsibility for insuring that all measures necessary to this end are taken.
- 4. In particular, the Control Council shall be empowered to formulate, within the framework of existing and future directives, basic policies governing (a) public finance; money and credit, (b) prices and wages, (c) rationing, (d) inland transportation and maritime shipping, (e) communications, (f) internal commerce, (q) foreign commerce and international payments, (h) resititution and reparation, (i) treatment and movement of displaced persons, and (j) allocation of plant and equipment, materials, manpower and transportation.
- 5. It is recognized that the prevention of uncontrolled inflation is in the interest of the United Nations. The Control Council shall strive to insure that appropriate controls, both financial and direct, are maintained or revived.
- 6. The Control Council shall utilize centralized instrumentalities for the execution and implementation of its policies and directives to the maximum possible extent, subject to supervision and scrutiny of the occupying forces. Whenever central German agencies or administrative services which are needed for the adequate performance of such tasks have ceased to function they shall be revived or replaced as rapidly as possible.
- 7.(a) Before utilizing German agencies military government authorities must carry through denazification in accordance with the principles set forth above.

- (b) German nationals deprived of their positions because of previous affiliations with or support of the Nazi party or because of disloyalty to the military government authorities shall be replaced as far as possible by other German nationals. In recruiting replacements military government officers shall rely as much as practicable on the leaders and personnel of freely organized labor unions and professional associations and of such anti-Nazi political groupings and parties as may arise in Germany.
- 8. Military government shall eliminate active Nazis and supporters of the Nazi regime and other individuals hostile to Allied purposes, from dominant positions in industry, trade and finance.
- 9. Military government shall permit free and spontaneous organization of labor and professional employees. It shall facilitate collective bargaining between employers and employees regarding wages and working conditions subject to overall wage controls and considerations of military necessity.
- 10. Germany shall be required to restore all identifiable property which has been taken from invaded countries. It shall also be compelled to replace objects of unique cultural and artistic value whenever looted property falling within these categories cannot be found and restored.
- 11. Germany must make substantial reparation for damage to, or losses, of, non-military property caused by or incident to hostilities. Such reparation shall take the form of (a) confiscation of all German property, claims and interests abroad, (b) deliveries from existing German assets, particularly capital equipment, (c) deliveries from future German output, and (d) German labor services in devastated countries.
- 12. The reparation burden and schedules for delivery should be determined in such a manner that Germany can discharge its obligation within a period of ten years from the cessation of organized hostilities.
- 13. The volume and character of German reparation deliveries of capital equipment shall be largely determined in such a way as to reduce Germany's relative predominance in capital goods industries of key importance and to rehabilitate, strengthen and develop such industries in other European countries, as part of a broad program of reconstruction.
- 14. Germany shall be prohibited from engaging in the production and development of all implements of war. All specialized facilities for the production of armaments shall be destroyed, and all laboratories, plants and testing stations specializing in research, development and testing of implements of war shall be closed and their equipment removed or destroyed.

- 15. Germany shall also be forbidden to produce or maintain facilities for the production of aircraft, synthetic oil, synthetic rubber and light metals. Production facilities in these industries shall be removed to other countries or destroyed.
- 16. In order to foster and develop metal, machinery and chemical industries in other countries, exports of competing German products shall be subjected to restraint for a considerable period. At the same time, German production and export of coal and light consumer goods shall be facilitated.
- 17. German firms shall be prohibited from participating in international cartels or other restrictive contracts or arrangements. isting German participations in such cartels or arrangements shall be promptly terminated.
- 18. The scope and execution of the economic disarmament program should be made compatible with the payment of reparation and both the reparation and economic disarmament programs should take into consideration the necessity of maintaining a minimum German standard of living as defined in paragraph 2.
- 19. In fulfillment of this principle, Germany shall be made to begin paying her own way as soon as possible. There shall be no simultaneous payment of reparation by Germany and extension of credit to Germany. Payment for such imports as are authorized by the Control Council shall be made a first charge on the proceeds of German exports. If Germany is unable to export sufficient goods in excess of reparation deliveries to pay for authorized imports, reparation recipients shall be required to shoulder this deficit in proportion to their respective receipts from reparation.

RELATIONS OF EUROPEAN ADVISORY COMMISSION TO WASHINGTON

Mr. Matthews made it clear that the U.S. Representatives on the Commission had acted independently in making certain criticisms of JCS 1067 and that in so doing he had not received any suggestions or communications, formal or informal, from Washington. Mr. Mosely confirmed this and pointed out that Mr. Winant cabled queries to Washington requesting clarification of many points, primarily with the intention of equipping himself for effective negotiation of JCS 1067 in the Commission. He added that General Meyer had not participated in formulating Ambassador Winant's three cables,⁴⁹ with respect to JCS 1067, since those cables referred only to economic and political aspects of 1067.

Mr. McCloy indicated that the War Department's interest was in having an established policy and directive as soon as possible but that he understood the necessity for independent action on the part of the EAC.

SUMMARY OF LONDON OPERATIONS

Mr. Mosely outlined the present position of the work of the Commission as summarized in the attached memorandum, which he circulated. The EAC was generally ready, or was working toward, the establishment of middle-range plans to deal with Germany. There had been approved by the Commission the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender for Germany, the Protocol on Zones of Occupation, and the Agreement on Control Machinery. In addition, sixteen U.S. draft-directives were pending before the Commission, and the other Representatives had agreed to accept most of them as bases for discussion. Some eighteen additional draft-directives had not yet been cleared in Washington. (A list of those pending in Washington is attached.⁵⁰)

PLANS FOR INTERIM PERIOD AFTER SURRENDER AND BEFORE FUNCTION-ING OF CONTROL COMMISSION

Mr. McCloy expressed concern over the absence of any clear-cut and firm plan to guide SHAEF and the military authorities, should Germany collapse at an early date. He referred to Mr. Leon Henderson's 51 recent visit to the European Theater and his reports which confirmed his apprehensions in this respect. He pointed out that the only combined directive which SHAEF had was CCS 551, the presurrender directive, 52 which was insufficient for a post-surrender interim period. Ambassador Murphy shared this concern and agreed with Mr. McCloy that, in the absence of plans to meet the situation, SHAEF would be compelled to improvise. Mr. Mosely hoped that by the time when Germany was defeated, a minimum area of agreement would have been obtained through EAC and gaps could be filled in by directives to the separate Commanders.

The meeting considered the desirability of attempting to obtain agreement in the Commission upon a modified directive 1067 which would be a quadripartite directive, whereas the former is at present only for the guidance of U.S. troops.

It appeared that this would be impracticable, because

a) The British do not seem prepared to accept the idea of a combined directive, as they were gradually tending away from the idea of combined administration and appeared to be looking toward the time when SHAEF would be dissolved. On the other hand, as Mr. McCloy indicated, British representatives in this country and in the Combined Chiefs of Staff were more sympathetic to the idea of preparing a combined directive to SHAEF for the immediate postsurrender period.

b) It was thought that, judging by the tempo of EAC operations thus far, it would take too much time to obtain agreement on a general over-all directive. Mr. Mosely pointed out that the draft of such a document would have to be translated and referred anew to the interested government agencies in Moscow and Paris; the Russian members of EAC did not enjoy great freedom of action and had to refer substantive questions of this importance to their superiors. On the other hand, the individual directives now before the Commission had already been largely accepted as bases of discussion by the other representatives.

Mr. McCloy proposed, in view of the difficulty in obtaining agreement on a new over-all directive, that the following procedure be adopted: Directive CCS 551, as a combined directive, should be modi-of the Foreign Economic Administration and surveyed the state of planning for the economic control of Germany.

52 For text of the directive to the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force, in respect of military government in Germany for the pre-surrender period, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 217.

 $^{^{51}}$ Between December 1944 and February 1945, Leon Henderson, former Director of the Office of Price Administration, visited Europe as the representative fied to make it adequate for the interim period; JCS Directive No. 1067, with necessary modifications, in the light of Yalta and the Department's proposals now being considered by the President, should stand as a directive for United States troops, and SHAEF should be notified accordingly; consideration of the individual specific directives now pending with the Commission or in Washington should be expedited and these should be taken as bases for combined administration on the assumption that SHAEF would continue to operate for several months after the surrender. SHAEF should be advised so that it would know exactly where it stood.

The sense of the meeting was favorable toward Mr. McCloy's proposal, but the point was raised by Lieutenant Bancroft that the several directives had been drafted as supplementaries, with reference to 1067 as an over-all directive. The individual directives would require, therefore, a thorough revision if 1067 were not coordinated with them and passed by the Commission. It was generally agreed that the separate directives covered in more detail most of the points of 1067 except de-Nazification. This difficulty was discussed but no decision on the feasibility of Mr. McCloy's proposal had been reached by the time the meeting adjourned. A subsequent meeting was arranged for the next day, March 14.

ESTIMATE OF DURATION OF POST-SURRENDER "INTERIM"

In consideration of proposed plans, the meeting sought an agreed estimate for the period which might intervene between the surrender of Germany and the beginning of CC ⁵³ operations. Ambassador Murphy reported that the planning groups at SHAEF were assuming a period of as much as six to eight months duration. He also thought that in spite of the reluctance of the British to commit themselves to over-all combined directives, they might go along on combined instructions for this interim period.

Use of Wording "General Order" with Reference to Directive for Control of Germany

It was the sense of the meeting that the word "General Order" was ill-advised since it carried the implication that the content of the directives constituted a decree which would be public knowledge of the enemy. It was understood that "General Order" was designed primarily to serve as an agreement on additional non-military requirements to be imposed on Germany by the occupying Powers; the question of what orders should be issued to the Germans might be left to the Control Council to decide. Mr. Mosely submitted a report on the "General Order" which is attached.

⁵³ Control Council.

THE PRINCIPLE AS TO ZONES

Mr. McCloy referred to the confusion prevailing as to centralization versus regional or zone administration. It was his understanding that the opportunities for conflict would be strictly limited since the commander of a zone would also be a member of the Council. The decisions of the Council would be administered locally by the zone commander. He did not believe that there should be an effort in Berlin to administer regional problems, but he agreed that some matters would have to be directed from the seat of the Council. The Army would want merely a sort of "military visa" in order to pass on the practicality of a policy.

There was substantial agreement in the meeting on this analysis.

PERSONNEL

Mr. McCloy referred to Mr. Henderson's reports indicating that the American conception of the problem of administering Germany was too narrow. He referred to the contrast afforded by British plans which envisaged employment of many thousands and close regulation of wages, prices, et cetera. Mr. McCloy was inclined to share Mr. Henderson's concern, except that he recognized that the British had a different goal and problem in that they wished to coordinate factory development in the zone that they were to administer with Britain's own industrial and foreign trade policy. There was also an implication of post-war commercial interest. The United States on the other hand would not have much industry in its assigned area.

He stated that General Draper had been selected to take over the economic post in SHAEF and that he had a very good opinion of his qualifications although he had not personally known General Draper before the war. General Draper was formerly a partner in Dillon, Reed.⁵⁴

With reference to the head U.S. post on the Council, Mr. McCloy said that Judge Patterson ⁵⁵ would not be in a position to go immediately and that he thought that the person who would occupy this post should be prepared to leave for Europe now in order to get the feel of the situation. It was the War Department's inclination to assign a soldier to this position. It was believed that a soldier could better assure the liaison with SHAEF and General Eisenhower.

Mr. McCloy thought that the job of control of Germany ought to be broadened and that selection of a larger well-qualified staff should be expedited. It was agreed that many of the persons selected would be civilians and that the Department and other agencies would hasten preparation of lists of candidates for the positions.

⁵⁴ Investment banking firm in New York.

⁵⁵ Robert P. Patterson, Under Secretary of War.

Consideration of Directives

It was agreed that the consideration and clearance of the various separate directives should be expedited both in London and Washington.

MILITARY GOVERNMENT HANDBOOKS AND MATERIALS REQUESTED BY THE SOVIET UNION

SHAEF had directed General Wickersham ⁵⁶ to refrain from making available to the Russians American Military Government handbooks and material unless the Russians should reciprocate. The Russians claimed that they did [not?] possess any such material to give us.

Ambassador Murphy suggested, and the meeting agreed, that there was nothing to be gained in withholding our materials from the Russians and that, on the contrary, an opportunity existed to influence Russian planning toward conformity with our own. It was agreed that the War Department would issue appropriate instructions.

[Washington,] March 13, 1945.

U.S. DRAFT DIRECTIVES FOR CONTROL OF GERMANY

1. Why Directives?

From the beginning of the work of the European Advisory Commission it has been assumed that the skeleton framework of Allied control, set forth in the Agreements on the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender, the Protocol on Zones of Occupation and the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, would have to be supplemented by agreed directives. The intention to have the E.A.C. proceed to negotiate agreed directives was stated explicitly in a series of instructions issued to Mr. Winant by the State Department with the concurrence of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in February and March, 1944.

The three Agreements, which have now been approved without reservation by the three Governments, provide for the taking of absolute power over Germany, for the assignment of zones and areas of occupation and for the joint occupation of Berlin, and for the establishment of Allied control machinery. They do not provide any concrete agreements for the exercise of those powers. Obviously, the dangers of future disagreements among the Allies would be greatly diminished if the range of Allied agreements respecting Germany could be expanded, in advance of actual occupation, to embrace agreement on the fields in which that joint responsibility will be exercised.

⁷²⁸⁻⁰⁹⁹⁻⁶⁸⁻²⁹

2. The U.K. Draft Directives.

During the spring and summer of 1944 the U.K. Delegation on the E.A.C. circulated a series of thirty-eight directives. In October, 1944. these directives were again circulated in bound form.⁵⁷ The U.S. Delegation is not satisfied with certain features of the U.K. directives. They are too detailed in laying down procedures of implementation. They fail to distinguish between matters which will be regulated mainly by the Control Council and those functions which will be performed mainly by the separate zonal authorities.

Two alternative procedures were open to the U.S. Delegation. It could prepare comments and amendments to the U.K. directives, taking the latter as the basis of negotiation in the E.A.C. Or it could

- 1. Germany in the post-surrender period. 2. Austria in the post-surrender period.
- 3. Relations of Germany with countries at war with any of the United Nations.
- 4. Neutral missions in Germany, and communication with German missions to neutral countries.
- 5. Treaties, conventions and other international agreements.
- 6. Reform of Nazi law and release of political prisoners.
- Dissolution and disbandment of Nazi organizations.
 Re-education of Germany.
- 9. Recall of German and Austrian nationals resident abroad.
- 10. Prevention of German nationals from leaving German territory.
- 11. Prisoners of war and internees in German hands.
- 12. Nationals of the United Nations interned in neutral countries.
- 13. Displaced persons.
- 14. German records and archives.

ſ

- 15. The German police.16. Preservation of law and order, and guard duties: use of German forces.17. Definitions of "the German armed forces", "the forces under German command", etc.

 18. Discharge and disbandment of German armed forces.
- 19. Control of German aircraft movements and disposal of German aircraft in German service.
- 20. Disposal of ships, aircraft and personnel of other enemy countries found in Germany at the time of surrender.
- 21. Evacuation of territory by the German armed forces, officials and civil population.

⁵⁷ United Kingdon draft directives for Germany and Austria previously introduced in the European Advisory Commission were collected in a bound volume entitled: "Germany and Austria in the Post-Surrender Period—Policy Directives for the Allied Commanders-in-Chief", dated September 1944. Subsequently, the volume was enlarged to include thirty-eight draft directives and was circulated in the European Advisory Commission by the United Kingdom Representative as document E.A.C. (44) 26, dated October 27, 1944, transmitted to the Department in despatch 19155, November 10, from London, neither printed. The following is a list of the draft directives included in the volume:

present U.S. draft directives as an alternative basis of negotiation. After careful study the Ambassador and his Advisers came to the conclusion that it would be more effective to present independent U.S. drafts. This procedure, while more laborious, would have the added advantage of placing before the other Delegations, in advance of negotiation, considered U.S. thought on these problems and would also serve to emphasize the tri-partite, now quadri-partite, character of the E.A.C. negotiation.

3. Origin of the U.S. Directives.

The U.S. Delegation hoped that a series of brief policy statements would be prepared in Washington, with full Governmental clearance, and transmitted to Mr. Winant for negotiation in the E.A.C. A series of such statements was promised repeatedly during 1944, but none was ever received. As precious months were slipping away, Mr. Winant's Joint Advisers undertook to prepare a series of U.S. draft directives. Between June and December 1944 thirty-five draft directives were prepared in the Delegation and transmitted to Washington.

It was realized that these draft directives would probably be thoroughly rewritten in Washington. But it was hoped through this device to focus the attention of Washington on the need for working out U.S. views regarding the treatment of Germany and thus to provide both the E.A.C. Delegation and the various military authorities concerned with the future control of Germany with a set of authoritative U.S. views.

In 1945, during the remainder of the existence of the European Advisory Commission, the United Kingdom circulated in the Commission eight additional directives as follows:

40. United Nations' Renegades and Quislings.

41. Finance and Property in Austria.

During November and December, 1944, fifteen draft directives, usually with slight changes, were approved in Washington and thereupon circulated in the E.A.C. More recently Washington has transmitted draft directives on United Nations Prisoners of War 59 and Primary Disarmament of the German Armed Forces. 60 Eighteen additional directives are awaiting action in Washington.

4. Preparation of the U.S. Draft Directives.

The U.S. draft directives were prepared on the responsibility of the Joint Advisers in London. A small Planning Committee, with State, Army, Navy and Air Force representation, carried on the work of drafting, with the full cooperation of the appropriate experts of the U.S. nucleus group Control Council and of civilian experts available in the London Embassy. In some instances U.S. SHAEF officers also took part in their preparation.

5. Character of the U.S. Draft Directives.

The U.S. draft directives are designed to lay down basic mediumrange agreements for the joint handling of problems affecting Germany as a whole. They define in broad terms the responsibilities of the Control Council for arriving at agreed policies for Germany as a whole and the special responsibilities of the zone commanders for their application to the separate zones.

The draft directives are not detailed. The only detailed directives are those relating to the armed forces, which the armed services tried to have written out in even greater detail. The political and economic directives could hardly be more general in character than they are.

The draft directives do not prejudge long-range decisions. For example, provision is made for the control and recording of German war material, but no attempt is made to determine its ultimate disposition. Similarly provision has been made for central determination of critical aspects of financial policy, but no attempt has been made to decide such a basic question as to whether inflation should be curbed or encouraged.

The U.K. draft directives were derived from the separate paragraphs of the U.K. draft General Order and treat the various fields of Allied control according to the subject matter of the General Order. The U.S. draft directives, on the other hand, have been based upon an analysis of the prospective functions of the twelve Divisions of the Control Machinery, with a view to defining a minimum of the procedural arrangements required for the effective functioning of each Division.

6. Need for Negotiation of the Directives.

The military authorities directly responsible in the field for control of Germany hope that fullest possible agreement can be reached in advance among the controlling Powers, for immediate application upon the surrender or collapse of Germany. They feel that the more such directives can be agreed among the four Powers, the surer will be the basis of Allied cooperation. In the absence of agreed directives, the Control groups would have to begin operation with the Control Machinery Agreement as their only agreed basis of control. The more procedures for joint administration and immediate policies for application can be worked out ahead of time, the better the prospects of continuing and harmonious Allied cooperation will be. Even if there should be insufficient time to negotiate all or most of the directives in the EAC, there are great advantages in having placed U.S. thinking on these problems before the other Governments prior to German surrender or collapse, particularly since the British, Russians and French have agreed informally to take the U.S. draft directives as a basis of negotiation, and hence of preliminary planning.

The U.S. draft directives represent a coherent whole. The value of individual directives is diminished through failure to present the complete set. Clearance of the remaining draft directives, and their circulation in the E.A.C., would greatly strengthen the impact of U.S. policy or the shaping of Allied policy in the control of Germany.

Memorandum by the Secretary, United States Delegation, European Advisory Commission (Lightner)

[London,] February 9, 1945.

1. History of the General Order.

The idea of having a General Order originated in February 1944 when, in order to get the British to agree to consider a short-term Surrender Instrument for Germany, the Soviet and U.S. Representatives agreed to the British request that the substance of the British Delegation's long (seventy-paragraph) draft Armistice ⁶¹ would be incorporated in Proclamations and General Orders to be issued to the Germans.

Authorization to make this commitment was contained in a Memorandum in Support of U.S. Views which was sent to Ambassador Winant with the Department's instruction No. 3735 of February 12, a Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 112.

1944.62 This memorandum had received the written concurrence of General Hilldring.

The Ambassador's action in making this commitment in the European Advisory Commission was reported to the Department in telegram No. 1944 of March 10, 12 noon, Comea 38.63 The State Department confirmed its understanding of this arrangement in its telegram No. 1976 of March 16, 3 p. m., Eacom 13.64

The E.A.C.'s report transmitting the Instrument of Surrender to the three Governments on July 25 65 states: "The Commission will submit in due course, Orders, Ordinances or Instructions laying down additional requirements as provided in the general Article." The Orders referred to have been interpreted in the E.A.C. as General and Special Orders.

On August 1 the Ambassador forwarded to Washington with despatch No. 17220 66 a set of draft Proclamations and General Orders prepared by the U.S. Delegation. Comments on these documents prepared by the Working Security Committee and approved by the State Department and the Joint Chiefs of Staff were submitted to London with the Department's instruction No. 4665 of October 24.67 They were based on JCS 1103 of October 13.

On the basis of this instruction the U.S. Delegation revised the Proclamations and General Orders and transmitted copies of the revision to Washington with despatch No. 19080 of November 4.66 On November 13, the revised Proclamations and General Orders-now combined as a General Order—were circulated in the European Advisory Commission as E.A.C. (44)27, November 14.66

In its telegram No. 10371 of December 12, 7 p. m.,68 the Department stated that this General Order did not fully reflect the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff as expressed in instruction No. 4665 of October 24 and in JCS 1103. General Hilldring wrote to General Meyer on December 16 and 23 to express the same views in greater detail.⁶⁹

2. Basis of the Criticism of the General Order.

The criticism of the draft General Order is based on the contention that it should contain only specific commands to the Germans to do or not to do certain specific things; and that provisions should not be included merely for the purpose of stating authority and powers possessed by the occupation authorities.

⁶² Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 167.

⁶⁷ Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. I, p. 365.

⁶⁹ Communications not found in Department files.

General Hilldring has also expressed concern that the British, who have indicated they liked the U.S. proposed General Order, were supporting it because they allegedly held the view that some such document was necessary in order "to take power" in Germany; and that our powers in Germany were derived from agreements with the Germans or orders in which we would announce our general powers.

3. Misunderstanding as to the Nature of the General Order.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, whose views have been officially concurred in by the State Department, seem to confuse the General Order with the type of direct, specific military orders, proclamations, ordinances, et cetera, which would be issued by the Allied Commanders-in-Chief to the German people on the basis of agreed directives given to those Commanders-in-Chief by their Governments. The General Order, despite its misleading name, is not an order in the usual sense. It is, rather, an extension of the Surrender Instrument to cover non-military requirements not contained in that Instrument. Furthermore, it has nothing to do with the "taking of powers", which is fully provided for in the blanket authority conferred on the Allied Powers by Article 12 of the Surrender Instrument.

The question of whether all or part of the General Order would be issued to the Germans has never been discussed in the E.A.C. Informally, the other Delegations have expressed the view that parts of the General Order might be published to the Germans, perhaps at various times, and that other parts might never be published but would be held in reserve as a basis of agreed policy decisions.

No doubt large parts of the General Order would not be suitable for issuance to the Germans. However, the most important reason for negotiating a General Order is the need to arrive at a preliminary agreement with our Allies on the range of matters of joint responsibility required for the exercise of Allied control over Germany.

4. Present Status.

In the meeting of the European Advisory Commission on January 29, 1945, Sir William Strang recalled previous understandings to proceed with the work of drawing up agreed Proclamations and General Orders. He stated that his Government was now pressing for action on them on the basis of the earlier arrangement whereby the British Government had agreed to the short-term Surrender Instrument on the understanding that the remaining clauses of the long British draft would be dealt with in agreed articles to be issued under Article 12b at or shortly after the surrender of Germany.

The French Delegate at the same meeting also pressed for action on the General Orders since the French Government had refrained from pressing for amendments to the Surrender Instrument on the assumption that French desiderata could be included in the General Order. The French Delegate had made this clear in a memorandum circulated in the Commission on December 29, 1944 (E.A.C. (44) 47),72 which expressed the French Government's approval of the Surrender Instrument. The French Delegation has now submitted a series of questions, which, if not taken care of in the General Order, might require amending the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender (E.A.C.(45)9, February 7).73

The Soviet Delegate in the meeting on January 29 indicated that his Delegation is preparing to submit comments on the General Order circulated by the U.S. Delegation.

Draft Minutes of a Conference on the Work of the European Advisory Commission and on Plans for Control of Germany, Held at the Department of State, March 14, 1945

STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. James Clement Dunn, Chairman Mr. Matthews Ambassador Murphy Mr. J. W. Riddleberger Mr. Philip Mosely Mr. Emile Despres Mr. Edmund Gullion

This second meeting further considered Plans for the Interim Period immediately after the Surrender and before the Control Commission began to Function.

Mr. McCloy said that in consideration of the discussion at the previous day's meeting, he felt more strongly than ever that the immediate problem was to equip the Military Commanders with a directive which might enable them to begin functioning immediately. He feared that, in view of the difficulties of negotiation in the European Advisory Commission and the time which would be required, it might prove impossible to obtain clearance for the thirty-seven various specific directives. He proposed, therefore, that:

To Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. I, p. 427.

To Memorandum by the French Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Massigli) entitled "Protection of United Nations' nationals in Germany and questions arising in German-occupied territories after surrender", designated E.A.C. (45) 9, dated February 7, 1945, transmitted to the Department in despatch 20898, February 8, 1945, from London (740.00119 EAC/2-845).

To Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Navy (Forrestal).

- (1) JCS 1067 should be modified immediately, in the light of Yalta decisions and the memorandum on control of Germany submitted by the State Department to the President; it should then be established, as a matter of first priority, as the instrument for guidance of SHAEF.
- (2) At the same time, but without delaying the issuance of the U.S. directive to U.S. troops, we should concentrate our efforts in the EAC on getting clearance for a similar over-all quadripartite directive.

Mr. Dunn agreed that it was of paramount urgency to get a directive in the hands of the troops, but saw no reason for discontinuing our efforts to get the specified detailed directives cleared through EAC. EAC was set up to consider these directives on a sub-committee basis, and considerable time had been already gained because they had been adopted as bases for negotiation by the other countries' representatives in the Commission.

The meeting agreed:

(1) As a matter of first priority, to revise JCS 1067 and get it cleared through JCS;

(2) To endeavor to clear a similar quadripartite directive through

EAC;
(3) To continue simultaneously to negotiate the various specific directives in EAC as expeditiously as possible. (It was considered that as soon as 1067 was in final form, clearance of any pending specific directives would be accelerated.);

(4) To modify CCS 551 to fit it for a post-surrender interim period on the assumption that SHAEF continues to operate.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT'S MEMORANDUM ON CONTROL OF GERMANY

Mr. McCloy had read this document, which had been approved by the President, since the previous day's meeting. He expressed great concern over the fact that it seemed to trend toward a greater degree of centralized control than the War Department had anticipated or was prepared to admit. The mere fact that the zone commanders would also be members of the Council did not seem sufficient to assure the necessary degree of regional authority. (In the previous day's meeting Mr. McCloy had been more inclined to find reassurance in this arrangement.)

The State Department representatives at the meeting did not agree that the document was as strongly in favor of centralization as Mr. McCloy believed.

There was an extended discussion on the wording of the memorandum in the light of these conflicting views but no decision was reached. (It appeared probable that the question might be raised again with the President or the Cabinet in the near future. An analysis, dated March 16, of the conflict of views of the Department of State and the Treasury-War Department views is attached.75

⁷⁵ Post, p. 457.

THE "GENERAL ORDER" OR DOCUMENT ON ADDITIONAL NON-MILITARY REQUIREMENTS

Mr. McCloy felt that the present form of the directive gave too little policy guidance and was little more than an "agenda" of things on which Allies would try to reach agreement.

Mr. Dunn referred to the history of this document (See Annex B [2] to Minutes of Meeting of March 13) and said that it represented a compromise.

It was agreed that the wording of the directive ought to be changed to show that its provisions were not final or exclusive. It appeared that this might be done by the addition of a so-called "basket clause" which might refer to the similar clause, reserving opening for further action, which is included in the Instrument for Surrender.

Between the Heads of the Three Governments at the Crimean Conference on the Question of the German Reparation in Kind".83 Secretary stated that, as indicated in the Protocol, the United States had agreed that the position of the Soviet Government—that the total sum of the reparation in accordance with points (a) and (b) of paragraph 2 of the Protocol should be 20 billion dollars, of which 50 percent would go to the U.S.S.R.—seemed fair and reasonable and could serve as a basis for discussion. He stated that the figure of 20 billion dollars is a nominal one and that the exact sum of reparations will have to be determined after the Allies are in Germany and can make an estimate of the German capacity to make reparation. Mr. Matthews pointed out that the Soviet delegation had suggested a period of ten years for the duration of reparation payments but this suggestion had been left out of the Protocol. Mr. Clayton added that he felt the Moscow Commission should adopt as a principle that the first charge on everything that goes out of Germany would be of a sum sufficient to take care of all that goes in. Mr. Matthews stated that the President's mind is perfectly clear on the point that there should be no repetition of our past experience whereunder German reparations were indirectly financed through the medium of American loans to Germany.

The Secretary stated that he believed the basic thought of this Government with respect to reparations should be worked out and incorporated into a general statement prior to the departure of Dr. Lubin ⁸⁴ for Moscow within about two weeks. Mr. Clayton added that he had talked with Dr. Lubin who had agreed with this point.

The Secretary of State then handed to the principal representative of each Agency a copy of the memorandum for the President, "Draft Directive for the Treatment of Germany", so which had been prepared in the Department and approved by the President. The Secretary stated that he himself had fully endorsed the memorandum and the attached draft directive. He then called upon Mr. Riddleberger and Mr. Despres to summarize and comment upon it.

Mr. Riddleberger commented upon those sections of the draft directive dealing with military government, immediate security measures, and immediate political measures. Mr. Despres summarized and commented upon Section 4 dealing with economic control. Mr. Riddleberger stated that the military and political portions of the draft directive were based essentially upon agreements reached in the European Advisory Commission and approved by the three Governments just before the Crimean Conference. These agreements dealt with surrender terms, zones of occupation, and the control machinery. The principal emphasis was upon the establishment of a central Control Council for the purpose of developing coordinated policy, which would be carried out in each zone by the zone commander. The directive also was based upon the principle that German administrative machinery should be used wherever it is possible and advisable to do so. Mr. Riddleberger then commented in detail upon the military and political sections of the directive.

Mr. Despres, commenting on the program for economic control, stated that it was based fundamentally upon the principles laid down in the communiqué of the Crimean Conference. It rested upon the principle that Germany should be made to pay its own way with regard to reparation and that the German economy should be so controlled as to carry out the purposes stated in paragraph 2 of Section 4. Primary responsibility for the carrying out of this policy would be vested in the central Control Council. Mr. Despres then commented in detail upon the economic provisions of the draft directive. Mr. Dunn added that the policy laid down in the draft directive was based upon both the decisions of the Crimean Conference and long discussions with our Allies in London.

The Secretary of State asked Mr. Stimson, Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Crowley, and Mr. Hensel, representing Mr. Forrestal, whether they wished to study the documents prior to discussion. Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Crowley stated that they wished to study the documents; Mr. Hensel said that he would, of course, wish to take them up with Secretary Forrestal; Mr. Stimson also requested time to study the document, adding that he had seen it for the first time this morning. While it was similar to another statement of policy toward Germany which had been worked out earlier, he noted one principal change. The present draft directive appears to place a good deal of emphasis upon centralization, both as to policy formulation and as to administration. He referred in particular to paragraph 6 on page 7.

Mr. Dunn said that the true spirit of the document was a coordination and agreement upon policy in the Control Council with latitude for administration and the carrying out of these policies under the zone commanders. Mr. Stimson stated that he had assumed this was true. He felt that we were not going to get a four-headed body comprising three great nations to achieve uniformity in the application of details of policy. He believed that difficulties would arise from any attempt to force the uniform application of an agreed policy.

Mr. Clayton stated that he thought some rewording of paragraph 6 on page 7 might be necessary in order to clarify its true meaning. It was intended that nationally organized institutions such as banking, the railroad system, and the telegraph system should be administered centrally in order to obtain uniformity throughout the country. It was not intended, however, to interfere with the adaptation of administration to local areas.

Mr. Stimson said that he had no quarrel with the assumption that Germany should be treated as one nation, since this was apparently a basic decision reached at Yalta with which he and the Army were not concerned. He, therefore, did not desire to combat the principle of centralization of policy determination but did not believe that administration should be handed over to the central office.

The Secretary of State said that the policy of treating Germany as a single country for the period of immediate military occupation had been reached at Yalta. Whether Germany would subsequently be partitioned was a matter for later decision. He felt that in the drafting of specific directives to military commanders it would be possible to meet Secretary Stimson's point that administrative latitude in the application of agreed policy could be left to zone commanders.

Mr. Morgenthau asked whether it had been definitely settled at Yalta that Germany should be treated as one nation. Mr. Stettinius said that such a decision had been reached for the immediate period of military occupation. He stated that he would speak privately with Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Stimson, Mr. Crowley, and Mr. Hensel concerning plans for the future. Mr. Morgenthau stated that he would appreciate receiving this private information and added that the policy would appear to be that the power of the German Empire would be continued and reconstructed. The Secretary of State said that the directive did not mean that. Mr. Dunn added that the principle of centralization would apply only to services national in scope. Mr. Morgenthau said that the question was just how much would be continued of the present German centralized Government. heard the question discussed for a long time and wanted a direct answer. The impression he received was that the present German Empire is to be continued through the medium of a central unit in The Secretary of State said that this was not the intention. The agreements reached at the Control Council in Berlin would be applied in four areas. Moreover, this plan was for the immediate period of military occupation. At a later stage, further consideration would be given to the problem of decentralization and partition.

Mr. Crowley said the economic policy would appear to be (1) that Germany was to receive no loans for reconstruction, (2) that Germany would be required to pay reparations in kind or in wealth manufactured within Germany, (3) that German cartels would be broken up, (4) that aircraft industries and other war industries would be destroyed, (5) that all production over that required for a minimum standard of living would be utilized in accordance with the purposes stated in Section 2 of part 4, (6) that we would take over and control the banking system, etc., and (7) later, if we wished to break up Germany, we could proceed to do so.

Mr. Stimson quoted the first paragraph of the draft directive and stated that it indicated a clear intention to run Germany as a whole during the immediate occupation period. The Secretary stated that this was the intention. Mr. McCloy, commenting upon this objective, stated that the plans of the Army had been made upon the assumption of decentralized methods of administration and that any change in this principle would cause an extensive revamping of plans. Army has taken the position that a decision as to what aspects of administration could be centralized would have to wait until we are inside Germany and can estimate the existing situation. Agreement on administrative procedures should, therefore, not be made too far ahead. Meanwhile, the zone commanders will proceed into their zones. and the troops must have the right to carry on administration on the basis of residual authority until coordinated policies are handed down to them. Whether the administrative policy would be one of laissez faire or some other policy would be determined later on. The administration would meanwhile be carried on within the zones by the zone commanders unless and until the Control Council decides differently.

Mr. Matthews pointed out that the provisions for control machinery in the draft directive were based upon provisions in the communiqué of the Crimean Conference. Mr. Stimson said that any arrangement under which inspectors representing the central authority would visit the zone commanders periodically would not be conducive to harmony or coordinated administration. Mr. Stettinius stated that he felt Mr. McCloy had hit upon a very important factor in stating that we could not specify all administrative arrangements until the Allied forces actually get into Germany. In response to Mr. McCloy's statement that "from this standpoint the emphasis appeared to be wrong in the draft directive", the Secretary of State said that this was not intended and that the administrative latitude desired by Mr. McCloy could be obtained in the drafting of the military directives.

Mr. Fowler said that it would probably be necessary to carry out the provisions of paragraphs 15 and 16 on page 10 only after the Allies were established within Germany. Mr. Riddleberger replied that it would be desirable to go into Germany with as fully a determined policy as possible. Such specific policy would be worked out through the European Advisory Commission. In some instances it may be possible to have only a minimum of policy. Mr. Fowler stated that there would be no point in going into Germany without a uniform program. Mr. Riddleberger added that for this reason it is necessary to emphasize the coordination of control.

The Secretary of State then suggested the appointment of a sub-committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Clayton in accordance with the memorandum approved by the President. Mr. Dunn stated that the establishment of such a committee is urgent because our representative on the European Advisory Commission needs instructions in order to get on with common agreement with our Allies. He added that much of the spade work for the proposed subcommittee would be done by the present working committee.

Mr. Morgenthau named Mr. Harry White to serve as his representative on the committee, Mr. Frank Coe as alternate. Mr. Stimson named Mr. McCloy as his representative, General Hilldring as alternate. Mr. Crowley named Mr. Fowler as his representative. Mr. Hensel stated that he would inform Secretary Forrestal of the necessity to name a representative but added that this representative would probably be Mr. Gates.⁸⁶

At the request of Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Stimson, Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Crowley, and Mr. Hensel remained for a private discussion.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-1645

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State

[Washington,] March 16, 1945.

There is a chance that at today's Cabinet meeting objection will be raised by Secretary Morgenthau to the new directive on Germany approved by the President, and that he may have support from Secretary Stimson. The basic difference in view between the State Department, on the one hand, and the Treasury and War Departments on the other, is over the scope of activity of Allied military government and the need for genuine Allied agreement on policy toward Germany. (The Treasury and War Departments advocate the same policy for different reasons: Treasury wants chaos; War wants decentralization and complete authority for its zone commander).

The Treasury-War Department view is that each zone of occupation should be treated largely as a separate unit and that the occupation authorities should concern themselves almost exclusively with a few simple tasks to be carried out in a few months by the occupation forces themselves. These are denazification and primary disarmament. On almost everything else we should keep hands off, avoid general economic controls, and get out as soon as possible, leaving future developments in Germany to the Germans. The War Department has maintained this view over months of discussion with us.

The Treasury-War Department position of granting almost complete liberty of action to the zone commanders would, if adopted, be interpreted by the Russians, and presumably also by the British, as a virtual repudiation of the control machinery agreement and as evidence that Allied unity in the question of the treatment of Germany is at an end. Should it become known to the Russians that we have no intention of working out a joint Allied policy for Germany, they will probably take the position that the agreement on zones is likewise invalid.

In the opinion of the Department, this concept of "smash-and-run" is directly contrary to the Yalta decisions and to the views of our Allies. An agreed, uniform and comprehensive control over Germany and the German economy is essential to achieve the purposes decided upon at Yalta as set forth in the Crimea declaration and throughout the discussions. The dispute in Washington over the past eight months regarding this central point has gravely hampered all negotiations with our Allies on this subject and our planning for control of Germany. Unless the clear-cut decision made in the memorandum approved by the President is adhered to, this confusion will persist, with consequences that will be disastrous to Allied cooperation and to the achievement of our basic program for peace. Unless we go forward with the cooperation promised at Yalta the Dumbarton Oaks organization ⁸⁷ will not be brought to fruition.

Washington, March 17, 1945—5 p. m.

2076. Since the President's return from the Yalta Conference, the Department has been working on a basic memorandum outlining more completely than has hitherto been possible the main lines of American policy toward Germany, based on the Yalta decisions and discussions as well as on the three basic agreements thus far negotiated in the European Advisory Commission. The President has given his approval to this statement of policy, a copy of which has been sent to you today by air.⁸⁸ This basic statement of policy, which is not for presentation to our Allies, will serve as a basic guide to all agencies of this Government during the coming months; as such, it will also be useful to you as background guidance.

Immediate requirements for effective presentation of U.S. views in the EAC have been surveyed this week at two conferences with participation of high State, War and Navy Department representatives. It is understood that you will continue the negotiation of the "General Order," in the form of a draft agreement on additional non-military requirements to be imposed on Germany by the Occupying Powers, making appropriate use of the suggestions contained in JCS 1103 of October 13 89 and in the U.S. SHAEF report on the General Order transmitted by General Bedell Smith 90 to General Meyer on February 7.91 The draft agreement, as revised by your joint advisers on January 27,91 is being examined here and you may receive informal comments on it for your use in negotiation. You need not await these informal comments before beginning negotiation.

You are, as before, authorized to proceed with the negotiation of the 16 U.S. draft directives so far circulated in the EAC.92 The War Department is preparing its comments on your two queries regarding the draft directive on United Nations Prisoners of War, and we hope to forward a reply shortly. It has also been agreed here that the remaining 18 draft directives 93 will be cleared as expeditiously as possible, to be forwarded to you for presentation in EAC.

In view of the President's memorandum on policy toward Germany, it has been decided to revise JCS 1067 in several fundamental respects. When this revision has been completed the new overall directive will be forwarded to you for circulation in the EAC, in addition to the 35 separate directives. Military events may render it desirable for the Commission to concentrate its efforts on negotiating a single overall directive, which would then be available as agreed guidance to the commanders-in-chief in case of an early German collapse. The revised overall directive will not be designed to take the place of the 35 separate directives in case Allied agreement can be reached more expeditiously through negotiating on them.

We trust that the EAC will be able to negotiate a substantial range of agreed policies for the guidance of the Control Council and the commanders-in-chief in Germany.

Washington, March 19, 1945.

The Secretary of State transmits for the confidential information and guidance of the Ambassador a copy of a memorandum of March 8, 1945 to the President and a copy of a directive of March 10, 1945 from the President 95 relative to the treatment of Germany. rective results from the decisions of the Crimean Conference and defines the policy of this Government in respect of Germany. Although the document is entitled a directive, it is not intended for negotiation in the European Advisory Commission but can be utilized by the Ambassador as background and guidance in his negotiations on this subject.

The directive will be utilized by the Department in its consultation with other agencies of the Government on matters related to the treatment of Germany.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2045

Memorandum by the Secretary of the Treasury (Morgenthau) to the Secretary of State

Washington, March 20, 1945.

Reference is made to the draft directive on the treatment of Germany, dated March 10, 1945 which was written by the Department of State to implement the decisions of Yalta.96

On the basis of decisions made at Yalta of which I have been informed, it seems clear that the directive has adopted certain definitive views on the most fundamental issues involved in the treatment of Germany, which views are not required by or even implied in the Yalta decisions. I understand that these views were advanced prior to Yalta within the State Department; they are completely opposed to the Treasury's views on these issues; are contrary in major respects to decisions made by this Government prior to Yalta; and are opposed in their most important implications to the views which I understood the President holds on Germany.

To be specific, the following is a brief summary of decisions made prior to Yalta, decisions made at Yalta, and decisions made in the draft directive of March 10, dealing with three of the most important issues involved in the German problem.

 $^{^{95}}$ Ante, pp. 433 and 434, respectively. 96 For the decisions reached at the Yalta Conference regarding the occupation and control of Germany, see the Communique issued at the end of the Conference, Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 968.

I. DECENTRALIZATION OF GERMANY

A. Prior to Yalta

Directive 1067 provided as follows:

(1) "Military administration shall be directed toward the promotion of the decentralization of the political structure of Germany. You may utilize in the beginning whatever German administrative agencies may serve the purposes of military government. You will wherever possible, however, endeavor to make use of and strengthen local municipal and regional administrative organs."

(2) "The agreed policies of the Control Council shall be determinative throughout the zones. Subject to such policies the administration of military government in each of the three zones of occupation shall be the sole responsibility of the Commanders-in-Chief of the forces occupying each zone. You should, however, coordinate your administration with that of the other Commanders-in-Chief through the Control Council. The administration of each zone and of the regional and local branches of any centrally directed German agencies shall be such as to insure that all policies formulated by the Control Council will be uniformly put into effect throughout Germany."

B. Yalta

At Yalta it was decided that:

"Coordinated administration and control has been provided for under the plan through a central control commission consisting of the supreme commanders of the three powers with headquarters in Berlin." 97

This is a reiteration of what had been agreed upon prior to J.C.S. 1067 and was embodied in that directive. No change of policy was made here.

C. Draft Directive of March 10

The draft directive of March 10 provides:

(1) "The Control Council shall utilize centralized instrumentalities for the execution and implementation of its policies and directives to the maximum possible extent, subject to supervision and scrutiny of the occupying forces. Whenever central German agencies or administrative services which are needed for the adequate performance of such tasks have ceased to function they shall be revived or replaced as rapidly as possible."

(2) "The zones of occupation shall be areas for the enforcement of the Council's decisions rather than regions in which the Zone

Commanders possess a wide latitude of autonomous power."

These provisions completely reverse what had been agreed upon as the American view prior to Yalta, despite the fact that there was nothing in the Yalta decisions contrary to such American view.

er Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 970.

II. ELIMINATION OF GERMAN HEAVY INDUSTRY

A. Prior to Yalta

At Quebec on September 15, 1944, the President and Prime Minister Churchill agreed upon a program designed to eliminate German heavy industry—the metallurgical, electrical and chemical industry.⁹⁸

B. Yalta

At Yalta it was decided:

(1) To "eliminate or control all German industry that could be used for military production."

(2) That the removal of Germany's national wealth in the way of reparations "be carried out chiefly for the purpose of destroying the war potential of Germany." 99

These provisions are obviously not inconsistent with the position adopted by the President and Prime Minister Churchill at Quebec.

C. Draft Directive of March 10

Although the program set forth in the draft directive speaks of reducing "Germany's relative predominance in capital goods industries of key importance" (paragraph 13), the only industries which Germany is specifically forbidden to maintain are "aircraft, synthetic oil, synthetic rubber and light metals," (paragraph 15). And it is specifically indicated that Germany will be allowed to maintain "metal, machinery and chemical industries" (see paragraph 16), although exports of these industries to other countries will be restricted.

This program is contrary to the Quebec agreement and has no basis in the Yalta decisions, unless the reparations protocol requires the maintenance of some heavy industry—and I doubt that it does.

III. CONTROL OF GERMAN INTERNAL ECONOMY

A. Prior to Yalta

In the Directive known as J.C.S. 1067 (revised) which was agreed upon after considerable discussion between State, War and Treasury, and was presented to and approved by the White House as representing the American view, it was provided that:

"Except for the purposes specified above, you will take no steps (1) looking toward the economic rehabilitation of Germany nor (2) designed to maintain or strengthen the German economy. Except to the extent necessary (1) to accomplish the purposes set out above, and (2) to assure thorough elimination of discriminatory Nazi practices in actual operation of economic controls, the responsibility for and the task of dealing with such economic problems as price controls, rationing, unemployment, production, reconstruction, distribution, consumption, housing or transportation will be left in German hands. You should, however, take such steps as may be necessary to assure that economic controls are operated in conformity with the above purposes and the general objectives of military government."

B. Yalta

Nothing was decided on this basic question at Yalta, to my knowledge. It appears from paragraph 2 of section IV of the draft directive of March 10 that the provisions of the protocol on reparations are being advanced as the basis for the argument that in order to collect reparations in the future it is necessary to direct, control and administer the German internal economy. Such a position, however, is not only not required by the reparations protocol but is contrary to the whole spirit of the protocol, namely that reparations policy be a function of reducing Germany's war potential.

The Yalta decisions clearly did not contemplate that the collection of reparations requires the Allies to take steps designed to rehabilitate and strengthen the German economy.

C. Draft Directive of March 10

Paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of section IV of the draft directive provide:

"It is recognized that a substantial degree of centralized financial and economic control is essential to the discharge of the tasks mentioned in paragraph 2. The Control Council shall have general responsibility for insuring that all measures necessary to this end are taken.

"In particular, the Control Council shall be empowered to formulate, within the framework of existing and future directives, basic policies governing (a) public finance; money and credit, (b) prices and wages, (c) rationing, (d) inland transportation and maritime shipping, (e) communications, (f) internal commerce, (g) foreign commerce and international payment, (h) restitution and reparation, (i) treatment and movement of displaced persons, and (j) allocation of plants and equipment, materials, manpower and transportation.

"It is recognized that the prevention of uncontrolled inflation is in the interest of the United Nations. The Control Council shall strive to insure that appropriate controls, both financial and direct, are maintained or revived."

These provisions are diametrically opposed to the provision of J.C.S. 1067 and have no basis in the Yalta decisions, except on the doubtful interpretation of the reparations protocol noted above.

CONCLUSION

Quite apart from the comments above, I would like to point out that, if a decision has been reached to dismember Germany or if there is a likelihood that such a decision will be reached, then the directive will, in my opinion, undermine this basic policy. The directive contains provisions designed to make sure that during the period of military occupation the various parts of the German Reich will be put together and kept together.

On the basis of the foregoing analysis and also of study of the other paragraphs of the draft directive of March 10, it is my firm belief that this draft directive is based in many of its parts upon policies which were not settled at Yalta and in some of its parts upon policies opposed to the decisions of Yalta. On the other hand, from what has been published and told us about the Crimean Conference all of its decisions seem to be consistent with the previous policies of this Government as embodied in J.C.S. 1067 (revised) or expressed by the President at the Quebec Conference.

In view of these conclusions, and in accordance with the President's request and your request that we assist you in implementing the decisions of Yalta, I would like to make the following suggestion:

That for the time being we allow J.C.S. 1067 to remain unchanged as the statement of policy for the U.S. forces during the first period of occupation, and that we attempt to get immediate agreement through the European Advisory Commission on J.C.S. 1067.

I am informed by the Army that General Eisenhower can operate satisfactorily prior to collapse under directive 551 and that after the collapse of Germany initial operations by the Army can take place satisfactorily under J.C.S. 1067.

On reparations and other longer-run policies for Germany, the Treasury is of course prepared to meet with you and your representatives for further discussions.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2045

Memorandum by the Secretary of the Treasury (Morgenthau) to President Roosevelt

Washington, March 20, 1945.

At a meeting at the State Department Mr. Stettinius presented to a number of us a five-page Post-hostility draft Directive for military control of Germany, dated March 10, which had your initials and those of Mr. Stettinius on it.

From many conversations that I have had with you as to how to deal with a defeated Germany, I am confident that this Directive goes absolutely contrary to your views. I would like to call your attention to some of the fundamental points contained in the March 10 Directive which seem to me to be contrary to the views you hold and the views that were contained in J.C.S. 1067 which I understand you collaborated on.

- (1) Decentralization of Germany—It requires the Control Council to "utilize centralized instrumentalities for the execution and implementation of its policies to the maximum extent possible" and requires that for this purpose "central German agencies . . . shall be revived or replaced as rapidly as possible."
- (2) Elimination of German Heavy Industry—It allows Germany to maintain "metal, machinery and chemical industries" with controls on exports; and forbids only "aircraft, synthetic oil, synthetic rubber and light metals" industries.
- (3) Control of German Internal Economy—It states that "a substantial degree of centralized financial and economic control is essential" and requires the Allies to "direct, control and administer" the German economy in order to collect reparations and for other reasons. It requires the Control Council to formulate policies governing "public finance", "prices and wages", "rationing", "internal commerce", etc.

Carrying out the above directions would build up a strong central German Government and maintain and even strengthen the German economy. You, of course, would know whether or not it was decided at Yalta to move in that direction.

I strongly urge that the directive of March 10 be redrafted in accordance with the three principles indicated below which, in my opinion, reflect your views.

1. We should avoid assuming responsibility for the functioning of the internal German economy and its economic controls. The maintenance and rehabilitation of the German economy is a German problem and should not be undertaken by us in order to collect reparations or for any other reason except the security of the occupying forces.

or for any other reason except the security of the occupying forces.

2. We should aim at the greatest possible contraction of German heavy industry as well as the elimination of her war potential. The occupying forces should accept no responsibility for providing the German people with food and supplies beyond preventing starvation, disease, and such unrest as might interfere with the purposes of the occupation.

3. During the period of military occupation policies in the separate zones should be coordinated through the Control Council, but the actual administration of affairs in Germany should be directed towards the decentralization of the political structure.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2045

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edward S. Mason, Deputy to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton) 1

[Washington,] March 20, 1945.

Participants: Mr. McClov

Gen. Hilldring Oscar Cox 2 Joe Fowler

Jim Perkins 3 Harold Glasser 4 Capt. Vanderbilt Another Naval Officer

E. S. Mason A Colonel, formerly with the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. McClov indicated that regardless of what policy is to be adopted towards Germany, the War Department is now of the opinion that the U.S. Control Group for Germany should now be activated. Although no immediate change is contemplated in the structure of the organization, which comprises twelve divisions, it was indicated that these divisions will be brought together in three main groups-military, political and economic. General Draper, who is to head the economic group, then said that his plan was to organize immediately a nucleus of 70 to 80 people, half of whom would be military, with the idea of expanding this to several hundred in the near future. The main purpose of the meeting was to get the views of the civilian agencies on the civilian personnel who might constitute the initial nucleus.

[Here follows an enumeration of the names of persons suggested to head various economic divisions of the U.S. Control Group for Germany.1

After this business was completed, Mr. McCloy raised the question of the significance of the new committee, chairmaned by Mr. Clayton, and of the directive initialled by the President. He said that the only interest of the War Department in political and economic policy for Germany was whether or not the policy determined upon was administrable in so far as the Army was called upon to undertake the administration. He said that it was his personal impression that the directive initialled by the President went somewhat beyond what was necessary in order to implement the Yalta decisions. In particular, he was disturbed by the language indicating that centralized control be established to the maximum extent possible. He then went on to say that he had received a call from Secretary Morgenthau, reporting on a conversation that Morgenthau had had with the President. According to Morgenthau, the President said he regarded the directive as a matter for discussion and that he, the President, was by no means committed to a policy of extensive centralized control. McCloy said also that Morgenthau had transmitted the results of his conversation to Acting Secretary Grew. Mr. McCloy then stated that he had had a meeting with Harry White on the question of whether JCS 1067 needed to be revised in the light of the Yalta decisions. He represented Mr. White as saving that the Treasury's view was that no alterations were necessary. Mr. McCloy said that it was his opinion that probably some alteration was necessary in view of apparent decisions on the reparation question and that if 1067 is to be revised, it should be made a first order of business for the new Committee. I said that as far as I was aware no fundamental differences of opinion existed between the State Department and the War Department on the two questions that had been raised.

- 1. We were prepared to recognize that a centralized administration in Germany could not be undertaken immediately on the cessation of hostilities, but must await the completion of occupation and the determination of policy decisions by the four powers interested in the administration of Germany.
- 2. I said that in the interpretation of the State Department, the words of the directive were not to be understood as going beyond that amount of centralized control necessitated by the Yalta discussions and decisions. It was our feeling that if reparations are to be collected out of current production, considerable de-industrialization is to be attempted, and if the occupying powers recognized their responsibility for the maintenance of a minimum standard of existence in Germany, some considerable measures of centralized control were inevitable. Gen. Hilldring agreed with this position and Mr. McCloy indicated no dissent.

Conclusion: It is clear that at the first meeting of the informal policy committee on Germany the two questions which will have to be taken up will be:

- 1. An interpretation of the language of the directive dealing with central control, and
 - 2. The question whether 1067 needs to be revised.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2245

Report of the Subcommittee of the Informal Policy Committee on Germany

[Washington,] March 22, 1945.

The Sub-committee has agreed upon the following interpretive paragraphs of the Presidential directive of March 10, 1945:

"1. The Inter-Allied Military Government shall be established in Germany pursuant to the international agreement on control machinery for Germany and the principles stated in the instrument of unconditional surrender.

"2. Every effort shall be made to reach agreement in the Control Council on matters of policy. The authority of the Control Council shall be paramount throughout Germany and its agreed policies shall be determinative throughout the zones. The respective zone commanders, in the exercise of their authority shall act subject to such agreed policies, shall see that such agreed policies are carried out within their respective zones, and in the absence of agreed policies, shall exercise their authority in a manner consistent with the principles set out herein.

"3. The Control Council, in those matters as to which it may determine central administration to be desirable, may use or provide central administrative machinery and agencies which shall have such powers, exercise such functions and use such channels of communication as the Control Council may direct. Subject to any agreed policies of the Control Council all persons and administrative agencies acting within the zones shall perform their duties under the supervision of the zone commander. The Control Council and the zone commanders, respectively, subject to agreed policies of the Control Council may make use of such Germans and such administrative agencies staffed by Germans as they may deem necessary within their respective spheres of authority but no Germans or administrative agencies shall be employed except in accordance with the policies for the purge of Nazism set forth below."

The following final paragraph to paragraph 3 was submitted by the Treasury representative for discussion—it was not definitely adopted by the Sub-Committee for recommendation to the Committee:

"Subject to such decisions as may be reached by the Control Council on the desirability of using centralized instrumentalities, military administration shall be directed toward the promotion of the decentralization of the political structure of Germany and to this end local, municipal and regional organs shall be strengthened to the extent possible."

I then told the Secretary that Secretary Morgenthau had told me privately that at a luncheon at the White House the President had reopened the whole question of post-war treatment of Germany. I said that according to Secretary Morgenthau, the President wished to withdraw the directive he had given to Secretary Stettinius, and that the President did not remember signing the directive. The President called a meeting of the State, War and Treasury Departments to discuss the whole matter. I told Mr. Stettinius that, as he knew, there was a wide divergence between Treasury and ourselves, not so much with War. I asked the Secretary what attitude he wished me to take. Mr. Dunn then took the telephone and the Secretary told him that he had asked how much 1067 had been fundamentally changed and he had not been given a memorandum on that point. The Secretary added that he had understood that the general foundation was about the same. Mr. Dunn replied that this was our interpretation of it. The Treasury Department, Mr. Dunn added, said that the new March 10 directive reverses 1067 and that is not our view. The Secretary said he would like to know what our position is, and Mr. Dunn said that this is our position—that the March 10 directive does not reverse 1067. The March 10 directive gives greater emphasis than 1067 on the centralization of control, but it does not go as far as Mr. Morgenthau read it to go. The Secretary said he thought we should endeavor to see Morgenthau and say that we ought to get on with this matter since we have already been on it months and months and ask what Treasury feels has to be changed in view of the position the President has taken. The Secretary added that if he were there he could recall to the President's memory the conversation he had had with him at luncheon a week ago Monday. There would be no question, he said, of the President's having recollected his position. The Secretary said we should now see Morgenthau with Harry White and Mr. Clayton. Mr. Dunn said that the President had called Mr. Grew and Mr. Patterson and Mr. McCloy to the White House at 12:30 today and that he, the President, was now taking over. The Secretary said he didn't understand that, and Mr. Dunn said that the President was taking over at the instigation of our "boy friend". The Secretary said he thought Mr. Clayton should accompany me to the White House meeting, that we should tell the President that he had given us the directive and that we should be permitted to work it out. Mr. Stettinius said that Mr. Clayton ought to tell the President that we do not think that the March 10 directive reverses 1067, and that we are still following the general philosophy of 1067 in our treatment of Germany. Mr. Dunn said the only thing was that the War Department thought that 1067 should be revised.

Mr. Clayton then took the telephone and said that Mr. Stettinius' position was all right as to what position we should take at the White House meeting, but that the President would undoubtedly say that he thought the matter should be reopened and studied again. Mr. Clayton wanted to know what position we should take in that event. The Secretary said he felt very strongly that we ought to stand by our original position. Mr. Clayton said that Morgenthau had sent over a memorandum octaining the points he planned to make. Mr. Clayton stated that he would read only the first point since that was the one that outlined very clearly the sharp divergence we have with Treasury. (He added that the other points could be adjusted.)

"1. We should avoid assuming responsibility for the functioning of internal German economy and its economic controls; the maintenance and rehabilitation of German economy is a German problem and should not be undertaken by us in order to collect reparations or for any other reason except the security of the occupying forces."

The Secretary said that the above was simply impossible—that Hitler would not leave a successor. The Secretary said "if you want to say all right, reorganize it in any way that suits you and put in anybody you want, we will stick by our position".

The Secretary concluded by saying he thought it would be wise to have Mr. Bohlen ⁸ on hand at the 12:30 meeting since Mr. Bohlen had kept a record of Yalta and his presence would strengthen our hand.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/3-2345

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Roosevelt

Washington, March 23, 1945.

I am attaching for your approval a memorandum dealing with American policy for the treatment of Germany. It is my belief, and that of the others who attended yesterday's meeting with you, that it represents your views as brought out in our conversation. This memorandum was prepared jointly and has the approval of the State, Treasury and War Departments.

Memorandum Regarding American Policy for the Treatment of Germany ⁹

[Washington,] March 23, 1945.

The following is a summary of U.S. policy relating to Germany in the initial post-defeat period. As such it will be introduced into the European Advisory Commission, and will be used as the basis for directives to be issued to the U.S. Commanding General in Germany.

The authority of the Control Council to formulate policy with respect to matters affecting Germany as a whole shall be paramount, and its agreed policies shall be carried out in each zone by the zone commander. In the absence of such agreed policies, and in matters exclusively affecting his own zone, the zone commander will exercise his authority in accordance with directives received from his own government.

The administration of affairs in Germany should be directed toward the decentralization of the political structure and the development of local responsibility. The German economy shall also be decentralized, except that to the minimum extent required for carrying out the purposes set forth herein, the Control Council may permit or establish central control of (a) essential national public services such as railroads, communications and power; (b) finance and foreign affairs, and (c) production and distribution of essential commodities. There shall be equitable distribution of such commodities between the several zones.

Germany's ruthless warfare and fanatical Nazi resistance have destroyed German economy and made chaos and suffering inevitable. The Germans cannot escape responsibility for what they have brought upon themselves.

⁹ A marginal note reads: "O.K. FDR, superseding memo. of Mar 10th 45".

Controls may be imposed upon the German economy only as may be necessary (a) to carry out programs of industrial disarmament and demilitarization, reparations, and of relief for liberated areas as prescribed by appropriate higher authority and (b) to assure the production and maintenance of goods and services required to meet the needs of the occupying forces and displaced persons in Germany, and essential to prevent starvation or such disease or civil unrest as would endanger the occupying forces. No action shall be taken, in execution of the reparations program or otherwise, which would tend to support basic living standards in Germany on a higher level than that existing in any one of the neighboring United Nations. economic and financial international transactions, including exports and imports, shall be controlled with the aim of preventing Germany from developing a war potential and of achieving the other objectives named herein. The first charge on all approved exports for reparations or otherwise shall be a sum necessary to pay for imports. extension of credit to Germany or Germans by any foreign person or Government shall be permitted, except that the Control Council may in special emergencies grant such permission. Recurrent reparations should not, by their form or amount, require the rehabilitation or development of German heavy industry and should not foster the dependence of other countries upon the German economy.

In the imposition and maintenance of economic controls, German authorities will to the fullest extent practicable be ordered to proclaim and assume administration of such controls. Thus it should be brought home to the German people that the responsibility for the administration of such controls and for any breakdowns in those controls, will rest with themselves and their own authorities.

The Nazi party and its affiliated and supervised organizations and all Nazi public institutions shall be dissolved and their revival prevented. Nazi and militaristic activity or propaganda in any form shall be prevented.

There shall be established a coordinated system of control over German education designed completely to eliminate Nazi and militarist doctrines and to make possible the development of democratic ideas.

Nazi laws which provide the basis of the Hitler regime or which establish discriminations on grounds of race, creed or political opinion, shall be abolished.

All members of the Nazi party who have been more than nominal participants in its activities, and all other persons hostile to Allied purposes will be removed from public office and from positions of responsibility in private enterprise.

War criminals and those who have participated in planning or carrying out Nazi enterprises involving or resulting in atrocities or war crimes, shall be arrested, brought to trial and punished. Nazi leaders and influential Nazi supporters and any other persons dangerous to the occupation or its objectives, shall be arrested and interned.

A suitable program for the restitution of property looted by Germans shall be carried out promptly.

The German armed forces, including the General Staff, and all para-military organizations, shall be promptly demobilized and disbanded in such a manner as permanently to prevent their revival or reorganization.

The German war potential shall be destroyed. As part of the program to attain this objective, all implements of war and all specialized facilities for the production of armaments shall be seized or destroyed. The maintenance and production of all aircraft and implements of war shall be prevented.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, March 24, 1945-7 p. m.

2292. A new definitive statement of policy to take the place of the memorandum on policy toward Germany, referred to in our 2076, March 17, 5 p. m., has been drafted in collaboration with the War and Treasury Departments. This memorandum dated March 23, 1945 has received the approval of the President and supersedes the memorandum mentioned in our 2076. The new policy statement is considerably shorter than our memorandum of March 10 but contains many of the points made therein. We believe that it sufficiently reflects the Department's point of view to help your continued negotiations in the EAC.

It has been agreed with the War Department that a revision of JCS 1067 must be prepared and likewise that the remaining draft directives must be cleared in Washington and transmitted to you. We shall start to work on both of these at once.

The text of the memorandum of March 23 is contained in Department's immediately following telegram.¹⁰

Memorandum by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Secretary of State ¹¹

Washington, March 24, 1945.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee has reviewed draft directives prepared by the U.S. Advisers, European Advisory Commission, which have not heretofore been acted upon by the Joint Chiefs of Staff with respect to International Agreements, Control of German Foreign Relations, Disposition of Enemy Diplomatic and Consular Property and Archives, and Displaced Persons and Refugees.

The Committee has approved the appended statement of policy on these matters, after obtaining a statement from the Joint Chiefs of Staff that there is no objection thereto from the military point of view.

The Committee recommends that the appended statement of policy be transmitted to the U.S. Representative, EAC, for introduction and negotiation in the Commission.

For the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee:

JAMES CLEMENT DUNN

Chairman

[Annex]

ANNEX "A" TO APPENDIX "A" 12

ADDENDUM TO DIRECTIVE TO COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF U.S. (U.K.) (U.S.S.R.) FORCES OF OCCUPATION REGARDING THE MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF GERMANY IN THE PERIOD IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE CESSATION OF ORGANIZED RESISTANCE (POST DEFEAT) (JCS 1067)

SECTION I

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

1. The Control Council will declare null and void all official acts which have given effect to the territorial expansion of Germany since December 31, 1937.

¹¹ Approved by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee by informal action on March 26, 1945.

¹² Transmitted as an enclosure to instruction 5281, March 30, 1945, to London, which stated that the directives had been formally approved by the Department of State, the War Department, and the Navy Department and which authorized the Ambassador to present them to the European Advisory Commission (740.00119 EAC/3–3045). Ambassador Winant circulated the three sections of this annex in the European Advisory Commission as separate United States draft directives: Section I as U.S. draft directive No. 20, designated E.A.C. (45) 41, dated April 17, 1945; section II as U.S. draft directive No. 19, designated E.A.C. (45) 40, dated April 17; section III as U.S. draft directive No. 18, designated E.A.C. (45) 39, dated April 17.

- 2. All military and political treaties and agreements entered into by Germany for the preparation, initiation, or furtherance of the war upon the United Nations will be regarded as terminated.
- 3. The Control Council will suspend, so far as Germany is concerned, such international agreements or parts thereof as it shall determine.
- 4. The Control Council will require the German authorities to comply with and carry out, in whole or in part, Germany's obligations under such international agreements as the Control Council shall determine.
- 5. The Control Council will require the German authorities to furnish a list of all treaties and international agreements to which Germany is or has been a party since January 1, 1933.

SECTION II

CONTROL OF GERMAN FOREIGN RELATIONS AND THE DISPOSITION OF ENEMY DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR PROPERTY AND RECORDS

- 6. The term "German Foreign Office," as used in this section, refers to the Auswärtiges Amt and all its branches. The terms "officials" and "official personnel" as used with reference to persons serving on missions abroad includes all diplomatic, consular, and other officials and all military, naval and air force personnel accredited to or serving on diplomatic or special missions, together with their staffs and members of their families.
- 7. The Control Council will establish and maintain control of the German Foreign Office and will determine and coordinate policies with respect to German foreign relations.
- 8. In furtherance of the policy of eliminating Naziism, the Foreign Organization (die Auslandsorganisation) in the German Foreign Office will be dissolved, and the activities of the Press, Information, Radio and Cultural Affairs Divisions of the German Foreign Office will be immediately suspended.
- 9. All records, archives, codes and ciphers of the German Foreign Office will be immediately seized wherever found, and secured.¹³ Access to all such secured matter will be permitted any representatives of the Occupying Powers accredited therefor by their respective Commanders-in-Chief, or any representatives of any other United Nation accredited therefor by the Control Council.
- 10. The Control Council will notify all states in which consulates or missions of Germany are located, and the powers protecting German consulates or missions that the Control Council assumes control over all German diplomatic and consular property and archives

¹⁸ For documentation regarding the collection and exploitation of archives and records of German ministries, see pp. 1099 ff.

- abroad.¹⁴ Access to such German diplomatic and consular premises will thereafter be procured for representatives of the Occupying Powers, and the return to Germany will be effected of all German diplomatic and consular records whose return may be desired by the Control Council.
- 11. An examination of German Foreign Office records and German diplomatic and consular records will be undertaken by the Control Council for the purpose, among others, of obtaining information regarding the war aims of Germany and associated governments, their methods of operation, and their responsibility for aggression, ruthlessness, war crimes and other violations of international law.
- 12. All German official personnel serving on missions abroad will be recalled. If their recall cannot be effected or if their recall is not practicable by reasons of nationality, their authority as agents for Germany will be terminated.
- 13. German diplomatic and consular relations with any country or puppet government which is or has been at war since December 31, 1937 with any of the United Nations will be broken off. The official personnel of such countries or governments in Germany will be taken into protective custody, wherever found, and held for further disposition. The diplomatic and consular property and records belonging to such countries or governments and to their official personnel will be seized and secured if not found in the custody of a protecting power.
- 14. You will report to the Control Council the location and general nature of all such enemy diplomatic and consular property and records seized in your zone. You will permit any representatives of each of the other Occupying Powers accredited therefor by their respective Commanders-in-Chief, or any representatives of any other United Nation accredited therefor by the Control Council, to have access to any such property and records.
- 15. In the event that any diplomatic and consular property and archives of enemy countries are found in the custody of a protecting power, you will respect that custody, pending further instructions. You are authorized, however, for security reasons to request the representative of the protecting power for permission to search the premises. If such permission is refused or unreasonably delayed, you are authorized to effect entry and search, if deemed urgently necessary for the security of your forces.
- 16. All communications between neutral officials in Germany and their governments, and between neutral officials and German personnel retained in the German Foreign Office will be under supervision of the Control Council. The withdrawal from Germany of official personnel of neutral countries may be effected, as may be deemed necessary by the Control Council for Security or other reasons.

SECTION III

TREATMENT OF DISPLACED PERSONS AND REFUGEES

- 17. Subject to agreed policies of the Control Council, which will coordinate policies on this subject throughout Germany, you will undertake the repatriation, return to former residence or resettlement of displaced persons who are (a) nationals of United Nations and of neutral states (b) stateless persons, (c) nationals of enemy or former enemy countries who have been persecuted by the enemy for reasons of race, color, creed or political opinion, (d) nationals of Italy, as rapidly as requirements for military operations and maintenance of forces of occupation and arrangements with their respective governments permit, giving due consideration to the wishes of the individuals involved, and giving preference among such persons to nationals of the United Nations and persons freed from concentration camps or other places of detention or internment.
- 18. You will establish or maintain centers for the assembly, repatriation and return of the foregoing displaced persons. Subject to your general control and responsibility, you will require the German authorities to maintain essential supply and other services for them, including adequate food, shelter, clothing and medical care, making up deficiencies in such provision.
- 19. Subject to your general control, you will hold the German authorities responsible for the care and disposition of refugees and those displaced persons who are nationals of former enemy countries not otherwise provided for in this section. You may permit their repatriation or return subject to such control as you deem necessary, and in accordance with appropriate arrangements with the governments of the countries to which they are being repatriated.
- 20. Subject to agreed policies of the Control Council, you will determine the extent to which UNRRA,¹⁵ the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, or other civilian agencies will participate in handling displaced persons and refugees.
- 21. You will accord liaison on matters connected with displaced persons to representatives of each of the other Occupying Powers accredited therefor by their respective Commander-in-Chief and to representatives of any of the United Nations and neutral states and of Italy accredited therefor by the Control Council or other competent authority. You will arrange for such representatives to have access to displaced persons who are nationals of their countries and are authorized to permit them to use the facilities of their governments for purposes of repatriation.

- 22. a. The term "displaced persons" includes (1) non-German civilian nationals who have been obliged to leave their own countries or to remain in Germany by reasons of the war, (2) non-Germans who were formerly members of non-German armed forces and who by reason of having taken up civilian employment or otherwise are no longer entitled to prisoner of war status, (3) stateless persons, and (4) German civilian nationals who have been persecuted by the enemy for reasons of race, color, creed or political opinion.
- b. The term "refugees" includes German civilian nationals within Germany who are temporarily homeless because of military operations, or are residing at some distance from their homes for reasons related to the war.

3212. Comea 202. For Mr. Matthews. In studying Department's 2292 and 2293 of March 24,¹⁶ I am uncertain regarding one point of procedure. Is the new revision of JCS 1067, referred to in Departments' 2292 being prepared for circulation in the European Advisory Commission? If so, is it intended to circulate in the EAC both the March 23 memorandum, transmitted in Department's 2293, and the new revision of JCS 1067? If both documents are to be circulated in the EAC, which one does the Department prefer to see adopted as a basis of negotiation?

Unless otherwise instructed by the Department, I shall state in my covering memorandum transmitting the March 23 memorandum to the EAC that this document is presented as a background document to set forth the US views on the initial post-defeat treatment of Germany, and to assist in clarifying the views of the respective delegations and that it will be followed shortly by a general draft directive, to be circulated as a proposed basis of negotiation. In other words, my memorandum will make it clear to the other delegations that the March 23 memorandum is circulated for their background, to be studied now in preparation for receiving the new revision of JCS 1067 as a basis of negotiation in case the Commission is willing to proceed to negotiate an over-all directive.

If the new revision of JCS 1067 is to be circulated shortly as a basis for negotiation, it will be confusing to place two similar US documents before the EAC, unless I make it clear which of them we circulate as a background statement of our policy views and which one we wish adopted for meticulous textual negotiation.

2486. It is desired that the statement of policy toward Germany, transmitted in Department's 2293,18 should be negotiated as a protocol of agreement between the four governments participating in the EAC as a matter of the highest priority. In view of the present course of the war, we believe that early agreement on these principles would be of great utility and request you to propose to your colleagues its most urgent consideration.

The individual draft directives already approved by the United States Government and others which you will receive should also be negotiated provided that by so doing there is no delay involved in the negotiation of the President's statement.

With reference to Comea 202, revision of JCS 1067 is intended primarily for United States Commanding General in Germany to guide him in his zone and in the deliberations of the Control Council. It has not been decided yet whether revision of JCS 1067 will be introduced into EAC for negotiation or for background information.

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Winant) 19

E.A.C. (45) 30

[London,] April 6, 1945.

GENERAL DIRECTIVE ON THE TREATMENT OF GERMANY IN THE INITIAL POST-DEFEAT PERIOD

In view of the present course of the war in Europe my Government believes that it would be of great utility for the four Governments participating in the European Advisory Commission to negotiate, as a matter of the highest priority, a statement of policy toward Germany in the form of a protocol of agreement between those Governments. for the guidance of their respective Commanders-in-Chief in controlling Germany in the initial post-defeat period. Accordingly, I am circulating a draft General Directive 20 which, I hope, will receive the most urgent consideration of the Commission.

The European Advisory Commission has before it draft General Orders and draft Directives, some presented by the United Kingdom Representative, others by the United States Representative. The draft Directives are designed to establish the framework for exercising many of the specific responsibilities of the Control Council and the Commanders-in-Chief in controlling Germany. I trust that the Commission will also be able to proceed expeditiously to consider these draft Directives and, on the basis of them, to submit agreed Directives to the four Governments for their approval and for transmission to the Allied Commanders-in-Chief who will be charged with carrying out Allied policy in Germany.

U.S. Policy Toward German Participation in International Cartels and Combines

SUMMARY

I. Problem

The purpose of this paper is to formulate a basic United States position, for discussions with Allied governments, on the policies and the measures to be adopted by the central Allied control authority operating in Germany with respect to German participation in international cartels and combines. The recommendations made below pertain primarily to the period during which the Allied control authority operates in Germany, although it is recognized that some of the measures may be initiated by the various governments before the control authority is established or may be continued by other agencies after that authority is abolished. The recommendations are also concerned fundamentally with cartel and combine participation rather than general trade relations, and with action by the central authority rather than by the United Nations. However, since the measures to be taken are closely related to German foreign trade in general and can be made more effective if accompanied by certain cooperative actions by the several United Nations, several supplementary recommendations have been included.

II. Assumptions

It is assumed:

- A. That a central Allied control authority will be established in Germany, with full powers to control or otherwise dispose of German interests or participation in international contracts, combines or trade.
- B. That this central Allied control authority will take measures to identify and control all German foreign holdings in neutral and exenemy countries.
- C. That any long-run policies developed will be directed toward preventing the reestablishment of German participation in international cartels or combines, and will, therefore, be consistent with the recommendations of this paper.

²¹ Filed separately in the Mosely Files.

III. Recommendations

- A. Cartel and Combine Recommendations. The central Allied control authority should:
- 1. Terminate promptly all German participation in international cartels or other restrictive contracts or arrangements and forbid the negotiation of new agreements. To effect such termination, such techniques as may be available and useful may be employed, including, without limitation, stoppage of performance, repudiation, enactment of legislation prohibiting performance and making performance illegal, and so forth.
- 2. Require registration of all international cartel agreements in effect in Germany at any time and for any period after January 1, 1933.
- 3. Require registration by all German firms of their foreign subsidiaries, affiliates, substantial foreign assets, and contracts evidencing substantial community of interest with foreign persons, and of foreign companies with which they are joined by interlocking officers or directors. The registration should call for current information as well as such historical information as the central control authority may desire.
- 4. Organize immediately in Germany a systematic collection, search and analysis of information relating to German participation in international cartels and combines.
- 5. Make available data collected under subparagraphs 2 and 3 hereinabove and other pertinent information on industrial organization to United Nations governments.
- B. Supplementary Recommendations. In recognition of the close interrelation of restrictive and "normal" German foreign business relationships or holdings, and the consequent necessity of taking supplementary steps with respect to all German international trade relationships or foreign holdings in order to effectuate a policy of terminating German participation in international cartels, combines or other restrictive arrangements, it is also recommended:
 - 1. That the central Allied control authority:
- (a) Plan to control closely all important German foreign trade relationships, even though not immediately identifiable as restrictive, with a view to preventing the reestablishment of restrictive arrangements;
- (b) Conduct or control all business communications between Germany and foreign countries;
- 2. That the United Nations, through appropriate machinery, follow a policy, in controlling or disposing of German property in neutral or ex-enemy countries, directed to the avoidance of private monopolies and combines.

3. That the United Nations seek agreement on a policy of controlling or disposing of German property within their borders directed to the avoidance of private monopolies and combines.

IV. Comments

- A. The recommendations made above apply to restrictive contracts and arrangements including those which concern patents and licenses under patents. Special problems relating to the disposition of German-owned patents under licenses to patents abroad or patents granted by the German government or licenses thereunder should be discussed in a separate memorandum.
- B. When licenses under a foreign-owned German patent or contractual rights to use foreign-owned property in Germany are terminated pursuant to the recommendations in Section III it is anticipated that through compulsory licensing, requisitioning, or otherwise the central Allied control authority will be able to make such licenses or property available for use. Other problems peculiar to foreign-owned property situated within Germany have not been considered in the above recommendations. It is believed that certain of these problems may also require separate treatment.
- C. On the basis of studies now in progress recommendations will be made with respect to the acquisition and dissemination of German technical and industrial information, whether or not protected by patents. These recommendations will be designed to further the widest and most equitable distribution and use of such information. Hence, no recommendation on the subject has been made above.
- D. The problem of German domestic cartels has not been dealt with in this memorandum, since it is believed that treatment of this topic is best postponed pending approval of the present document.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/4-2645

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

Washington, April 26, 1945.

The Informal Policy Committee on Germany ²² is presenting to you, for your approval, a revised directive for the military government of Germany prepared on the basis of the policy memorandum of March 23, which was approved by President Roosevelt. The memorandum of March 23 has been introduced into the European Advisory Commission by Ambassador Winant for negotiation as a protocol of agreement with the U.K., the U.S.S.R. and France. Copies of the memorandum of March 23 and the revised directive are attached.²³

In the opinion of the committee the revised directive embodies policies and measures which faithfully carry out the principles set forth in the memorandum of March 23. The committee believes that this directive furnishes the basis for effective initial action to prevent Germany from again becoming a threat to world peace.

The revised directive is being submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for consideration from the military point of view. Thereafter it will be transmitted to General Eisenhower as the basic instrument for the initial post-defeat period in Germany. The directive is designed to serve a dual purpose in that it will give him this Government's policy as formulated to date for his guidance as American member of the Control Council in Germany and will likewise guide him in the administration of the U.S. zone.

If you approve, the Informal Policy Committee on Germany will continue, under your direction, to develop basic policies of this Government for the treatment of Germany, including the pending matter of reparation.

Directive to Commander in Chief of United States Forces of Occupation Regarding the Military Government of Germany 24

APRIL 26, 1945.

1. The Purpose and Scope of this Directive:

This directive rescinds JCS 1067 and is issued to you as Commanding General of the United States forces of occupation in Germany. As such you will serve as United States member of the Control Council and will also be responsible for the administration of military government in the zone or zones assigned to the United States for purposes of occupation and administration. It outlines the basic policies which will guide you in those two capacities after the termination of the combined command of the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force.

This directive sets forth policies relating to Germany in the initial post-defeat period. As such it is not intended to be an ultimate statement of policies of this Government concerning the treatment of Germany in the post-war world. It is therefore essential that, during the period covered by this directive, you assure that surveys are constantly maintained of economic, industrial, financial, social and political conditions within your zone and that the results of such surveys and such other surveys as may be made in other zones are made available to your Government, through the Joint Chiefs of Staff. These surveys should be developed in such manner as to serve as a basis for determining changes in the measures of control set forth herein as well as for the progressive formulation and development of policies to promote the basic objectives of the United States. Supplemental directives will be issued to you by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as may be required.

As a member of the Control Council you will urge the adoption by the other occupying powers of the principles and policies set forth in this directive and, pending Control Council agreement, you will follow them in your zone. It is anticipated that substantially similar directives will be issued to the Commanders in Chief of the U.K., USSR and French forces of occupation.

PART I

GENERAL AND POLITICAL

2. The Basis of Military Government

- a. The rights, power and status of the military government in Germany are based upon the unconditional surrender or total defeat of Germany. The Text of the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender is at Appendix "A".²⁵ You will assure that the policies set forth in that Instrument are carried out in your zone of occupation even though the defeat of Germany is not followed by a formal signing of the Instrument.
- b. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3 below, you are, by virtue of your position, clothed with supreme legislative, executive, and judicial authority in the areas occupied by forces under your command. This authority will be broadly construed and includes authority to take all measures deemed by you necessary, appropriate or desirable in relation to military exigencies and the objectives of a firm military government.
- c. You will issue a proclamation continuing in force such proclamations, orders and instructions as may have heretofore been issued by Allied Commanders in your zone, subject to such changes as you may determine. Authorizations of action by the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force, may be considered as applicable to you unless inconsistent with this or later directives.

²⁵ For text of the Instrument of Surrender for Germany as approved by the European Advisory Commission on July 25, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 256.

3. The Control Council and Zones of Occupation:

- a. The four Commanders-in-Chief, acting jointly, will constitute the Control Council in Germany which will be the supreme organ of control over Germany in accordance with the agreement on Control Machinery in Germany at Appendix "B".²⁶ For purposes of administration of military government, Germany has been divided into four zones of occupation. The agreed protocols on zones are at Appendix "C".²⁷
- b. The authority of the Control Council to formulate policy and procedures and administrative relationships with respect to matters affecting Germany as a whole will be paramount throughout Germany. You will carry out and support in your zone the policies agreed upon in the Control Council. In the absence of such agreed policies you will act in accordance with this and other directives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.
- c. The administration of affairs in Germany shall be directed towards the decentralization of the political and administrative structure and the development of local responsibility. To this end you will encourage autonomy in regional, local and municipal agencies of German administration. The German economic structure shall also be decentralized. The Control Council may, however, to the minimum extent required for the fulfillment of purposes set forth herein, permit centralized administration or establish central control of (a) essential national public services such as railroads, communications and power, (b) finance and foreign affairs, and (c) production and distribution of essential commodities.
- d. The Control Council should adopt procedures to effectuate, and you will facilitate in your zone, the equitable distribution of essential commodities between the zones. In the absence of a conflicting policy of the Control Council, you may deal directly with one or more zone commanders on matters of special concern to such zones.
- e. Pending the formulation in the Control Council of uniform policies and procedures with respect to inter-zonal travel and movement of civilians, no civilians shall be permitted to leave or enter your zone without your authority, and no Germans within your zone shall be permitted to leave Germany except for specific purposes approved by you.
- f. The military government personnel in each zone, including those dealing with regional and local branches of the departments of any central German administrative machinery, shall be selected by authority of the Commander of that zone except that liaison officers may be furnished by the Commanders of the other three zones. The respective Commanders-in-Chief shall have exclusive jurisdiction throughout the whole of Germany over the members of the armed forces under their command and over the civilians who accompany them.

g. The Control Council should be responsible for facilitating the severance of all governmental and administrative connections between Austria and Germany and the elimination of German economic influences in Austria. Every assistance should be given to the Allied Administration in Austria in its efforts to effectuate these purposes.

4. Basic Objectives of Military Government in Germany:

- a. It should be brought home to the Germans that Germany's ruthless warfare and the fanatical Nazi resistance have destroyed the German economy and made chaos and suffering inevitable and that the Germans cannot escape responsibility for what they have brought upon themselves.
- b. Germany will not be occupied for the purpose of liberation but as a defeated enemy nation. Your aim is not oppression but to occupy Germany for the purpose of realizing certain important Allied objectives. In the conduct of your occupation and administration you should be just but firm and aloof. You will strongly discourage fraternization with the German officials and population.
- c. The principal Allied objective is to prevent Germany from ever again becoming a threat to the peace of the world. Essential steps in the accomplishment of this objective are the elimination of Nazism and militarism in all their forms, the immediate apprehension of war criminals for punishment, the industrial disarmament and demilitarization of Germany, with continuing control over Germany's capacity to make war, and the preparation for an eventual reconstruction of German political life on a democratic basis.
- d. Other Allied objectives are to enforce the program of reparations and restitution, to provide relief for the benefit of countries devastated by Nazi aggression, and to ensure that prisoners of war and displaced persons of the United Nations are cared for and repatriated.

5. Economic Controls:

a. As a member of the Control Council and as zone commander, you will be guided by the principle that controls upon the German economy may be imposed to the extent that such controls may be necessary to achieve the objectives enumerated in paragraph 4 above and also as they may be essential to protect the safety and meet the needs of the occupying forces and assure the production and maintenance of goods and services required to prevent starvation or such disease and unrest as would endanger these forces. No action will be taken in execution of the reparations program or otherwise which would tend to support basic living conditions in Germany or in your zone on a higher level than that existing in any one of the neighboring United Nations.

b. In the imposition and maintenance of such controls as may be prescribed by you or the Control Council, German authorities will to the fullest extent practicable be ordered to proclaim and assume administration of such controls. Thus it should be brought home to the German people that the responsibility for the administration of such controls and for any breakdowns in those controls will rest with themselves and German authorities.

6. Denazification:

- a. A Proclamation dissolving the Nazi Party, its formations, affiliated associations and supervised organizations, and all Nazi public institutions which were set up as instruments of Party domination, and prohibiting their revival in any form, should be promulgated by the Control Council. You will assure the prompt effectuation of that policy in your zone and will make every effort to prevent the reconstitution of any such organization in underground, disguised or secret form. Responsibility for continuing desirable non-political social services of dissolved Party organizations may be transferred by the Control Council to appropriate central agencies and by you to appropriate local agencies.
- b. The laws purporting to establish the political structure of National Socialism and the basis of the Hitler regime and all laws, decrees and regulations which establish discriminations on grounds of race, nationality, creed or political opinions should be abrogated by the Control Council. You will render them inoperative in your zone.
- c. All members of the Nazi party who have been more than nominal participants in its activities, all active supporters of Nazism or militarism and all other persons hostile to Allied purposes will be removed and excluded from public office and from positions of importance in quasi-public and private enterprises such as (1) civic, economic and labor organizations, (2) corporations and other organizations in which the German government or subdivisions have a major financial interest,
- (3) industry, commerce, agriculture, and finance, (4) education, and
- (5) the press, publishing houses and other agencies disseminating news and propaganda. Persons are to be treated as more than nominal participants in Party activities and as active supporters of Nazism or militarism when they have (1) held office or otherwise been active at any level from local to national in the party and its subordinate organizations, or in organizations which further militaristic doctrines, (2) authorized or participated affirmatively in any Nazi crimes, racial persecutions or discriminations, (3) been avowed believers in Nazism or racial and militaristic creeds, or (4) voluntarily given substantial moral or material support or political assistance of any kind to the Nazi Party or Nazi officials and leaders. No such persons shall be retained in any of the categories of employment listed above because of administrative necessity, convenience or expediency.

- d. Property, real and personal, owned or controlled by the Nazi Party, its formations, affiliated associations and supervised organizations, and by all persons subject to arrest under the provisions of paragraph 8, and found within your zone, will be taken under your control pending a decision by the Control Council or higher authority as to its eventual disposition.
- e. All archives, monuments and museums of Nazi inception, or which are devoted to the perpetuation of German militarism, will be taken under your control and their properties held pending decision as to their disposition by the Control Council.
- f. You will make special efforts to preserve from destruction and take under your control records, plans, books, documents, papers, files, and scientific, industrial and other information and data belonging to or controlled by the following:
- (1) The Central German Government and its subdivisions, German military organizations, organizations engaged in military research, and such other governmental agencies as may be deemed advisable;
 (2) The Nazi Party, its formations, affiliated associations and supervised organizations;

(3) All police organizations, including security and political police;

(4) Important economic organizations and industrial establishments including those controlled by the Nazi Party or its personnel;

(5) Institutes and special bureaus devoting themselves to racial, political, militaristic or similar research or propaganda.

7. Demilitarization:

- a. In your zone you will assure that all units of the German armed forces, including para-military organizations, are dissolved as such, and that their personnel are promptly disarmed and controlled in accordance with policies and procedures set forth in the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender or in other directives which may be issued to you. Prior to their final disposition, you will arrest and hold all military personnel who are included under the provisions of paragraph 8.
- b. The Control Council should proclaim, and in your zone you will effectuate, the total dissolution of all military and paramilitary organizations, including the General Staff, the German Officers Corps. the Reserve Corps and military academies, together with all associations which might serve to keep alive the military tradition in Germany.

- c. You will seize or destroy all arms, ammunition and implements of war and stop the production thereof.
- d. You will take proper steps to destroy the German war potential, as set forth elsewhere in this directive.
- 8. Suspected War Criminals and Security Arrests:
- a. You will search out, arrest, and hold, pending receipt by you of further instructions as to their disposition, Adolf Hitler, his chief Nazi associates, other war criminals and all persons who have participated in planning or carrying out Nazi enterprises involving or resulting in atrocities or war crimes.
- b. All persons who, if permitted to remain at large would endanger the accomplishment of your objectives will also be arrested and held in custody until trial by an appropriate semi-judicial body to be established by you. The following is a partial list of the categories of persons to be arrested in order to carry out this policy:
- (1) Officials of the Nazi Party and its formations, affiliated associations, and supervised organizations, down to and including Local Group Leaders (Ortsgruppenleiter) and officials of equivalent rank;

(2) All members of the political police, including the Gestapo and

Sicherheitsdienst der S.S.;

(3) The officers and non-commissioned officers of the Waffen S.S. and all members of the other branches of the S.S.;

(4) All General Staff Corps officers;

(5) Officials of the police holding a rank, or equivalent positions of authority, above that of Lieutenant;
(6) Officers of the SA holding commissioned rank;

(7) The leading officials of all ministries and other high political officials down to and including urban and rural buergermeister and officials of equivalent rank, and those persons who have held similar positions, either civil or military, in the administration of countries

occupied by Germany;

(8) Nazis and Nazi sympathizers holding important and key positions in (a) National and Gau civic and economic organizations; (b) corporations and other organizations in which the government has a major financial interest; (c) industry, commerce, agriculture, and finance; (d) education; (e) the judiciary; and (f) the press, publishing houses and other agencies disseminating news and propaganda. It may generally be assumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that any persons holding such positions are Nazis or Nazi sympathizers;

(9) All judges, prosecutors and officials of the People's Court (Volksgerichtshof), Special Courts (Sondergerichte) and other extraordinary courts created by the Nazi regime;

(10) Any national of any of the United Nations or associated states who is believed to have committed offenses against his national law in support of the German war effort;

(11) Any other person whose name or designation appears on lists. to be submitted to you by the J.C.S. or whose name may be so notified. to you separately.

If in the light of conditions which you encounter in Germany, you believe that it is not immediately feasible to subject certain persons within these categories to this treatment, you should report your reasons and recommendations to your government through the Joint Chiefs of Staff. If you believe it desirable, you may postpone the arrest of those whose cases you have reported, pending a decision communicated to you by the J.C.S. In no event shall any differentiation be made between or special consideration be accorded to persons arrested, either as to manner of arrest or conditions of detention, upon the basis of wealth or political, industrial, or other rank or position. In your discretion you may make such exceptions as you deem advisable for intelligence or other military reasons.

9. Political Activities:

- a. No political activities of any kind shall be countenanced unless authorized by you. You will assure that your military government does not become committed to any political group.
- b. You will prohibit the propagation in any form of Nazi, militaristic or pan-German doctrines.
- c. No German parades, military or political, civilian or sports, shall be permitted by you.
- d. To the extent that military interests are not prejudiced and subject to the provisions of the three preceding subparagraphs and of paragraph 10, freedom of speech, press and religious worship will be permitted. Consistent with military necessity, all religious institutions will be respected.

10. Public Relations and Control of Public Information:

As a member of the Control Council, you will endeavor to obtain agreement for uniform or coordinated policies with respect to (a) control of public information media in Germany, (b) accrediting of foreign correspondents, (c) press censorship, and (d) issuance of official news communiqués dealing with Control Council matters. U.S. policies in these matters will be sent to you separately and you will be guided by these in your negotiations on the Control Council.

11. German Courts:

- a. All extraordinary courts, including the Volksgerichtshof (People's Court) and the Sondergerichte (Special Courts), and all courts and tribunals of the Nazi Party and of its formations, affiliated associations and supervised organizations will be abolished immediately.
- b. All ordinary criminal, civil and administrative courts, except those previously re-established by order of the military government, will be closed. After the elimination of all Nazi features and personnel you will permit those which are to exercise jurisdiction within the boundaries of your zone to resume operations under such regulations, supervision and control as you may consider appropriate. Courts which are to exercise jurisdiction over territory extending beyond the boundaries of your zone will be reopened only with the express authorization of the Control Council and under its regulation, supervision and control. The power to review and veto decisions of German courts shall be included within the power of supervision and control.

12. Police:

With the exception of the Reichskriminal polizei (Criminal Police) all elements of the Sicherheitspolizei (Security Police), e.g., Geheime Staatspolizei (Gestapo), and the Sicherheitsdienst der S.S. will be abolished. Criminal and ordinary police will be purged of Nazi personnel and utilized under the control and supervision of the military government.

13. Political Prisoners:

Subject to military security and the interests of the individuals concerned, you will release all persons found within your zone who have been detained or placed in custody on grounds of race, nationality, creed or political opinions and treat them as displaced persons. You should make provision for the review of convictions of alleged criminal offenses about which there may be substantial suspicion of racial, religious or political persecution, and in which sentences of imprisonment have not been fully served by persons imprisoned within your zone.

14. Education:

- a. All educational institutions within your zone except those previously re-established by Allied authority will be closed. The closure of Nazi educational institutions such as Adolf Hitler Schulen, Napolas and Ordensburgen, and of Nazi organizations within other educational institutions will be permanent.
- b. A coordinated system of control over German education and an affirmative program of reorientation will be established designed completely to eliminate Nazi and militaristic doctrines and to encourage the development of democratic ideas.
- c. You will permit the reopening of elementary (Volksschulen), middle (Mittelschulen) and vocational (Berufsschulen) schools at the earliest possible date after Nazi personnel has been eliminated. Textbooks and curricula which are not free of Nazi and militaristic doctrine shall not be used. The Control Council should devise programs looking toward the reopening of secondary schools, universities and other institutions of higher learning. After Nazi features and personnel have been eliminated and pending the formulation of such programs by the Control Council, you may formulate and put into effect an interim program within your zone and in any case may permit the reopening of such institutions and departments which offer training which you consider immediately essential or useful in the administration of military government and the purposes of the occupation.

d. It is not intended that the military government will intervene in questions concerning denominational control of German schools, or in religious instruction in German schools, except insofar as may be necessary to insure that religious instruction and administration of such schools conform to such Allied regulations as are or may be established pertaining to purging of personnel and curricula.

15. Arts and Archives:

Subject to the provisions of paragraph 6 above, you will make all reasonable efforts to preserve historical archives, museums, libraries and works of art.

PART II

ECONOMIC

General Objectives and Methods of Control

- 16. You will assure that the German economy is administered and controlled in such a way as to accomplish the basic objectives set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this Directive. Economic controls will be imposed only to the extent necessary to accomplish these objectives, provided that you will impose controls to the full extent necessary to achieve the industrial disarmament of Germany. Except as may be necessary to carry out these objectives, you will take no steps (a) looking toward the economic rehabilitation of Germany, or (b) designed to maintain or strengthen the German economy.
- 17. To the maximum extent possible without jeopardizing the successful execution of measures required to implement the objectives outlined in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive you will use German authorities and agencies and subject them to such supervision and punishment for non-compliance as is necessary to ensure that they carry out their tasks.

For this purpose you will give appropriate authority to any German agencies and administrative services you consider essential; provided, however, that you will at all times adhere strictly to the provisions of this directive regarding denazification and dissolution or elimination of Nazi organizations, institutions, principles, features, and practices.

To the extent necessary you will establish administrative machinery, not dependent upon German authorities and agencies, to execute or assure the execution of the provisions of paragraphs 19, 20, 30, 31, 32, 39 and 40 and any other measures necessary to an accomplishment of your industrial disarmament objectives.

- 18. In order to decentralize the structure and administration of the German economy to the maximum possible extent, you will
- a. ensure that the action required to maintain or restore essential public utilities and industrial and agricultural activities is taken as far as possible on a local and regional basis;
- b. on no account propose or approve in the Control Council the establishment of centralized administration of controls over the German economy except where such centralization of administration is clearly essential to the fulfilment of the objectives listed in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive. Decentralization in administration should not be permitted to interfere with attainment of the largest practicable measure of agreement on economic policies in the Control Council.
- 19. You will institute or assure the maintenance of such statistical records and reports as may be necessary in carrying out the objectives listed in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive.
- 20. You will initiate appropriate surveys which may assist you in achieving the objectives of the occupation. In particular you will promptly undertake surveys of supplies, equipment and resources in your zone. You will endeavor to obtain prompt agreement in the Control Council to the making of similar surveys in the other zones of occupation, and you will urge appropriate steps to coordinate the methods and results of these and other future surveys conducted in the various zones. You will keep the Control Council, United States Representative on the Reparation Commission and other appropriate authorities, currently apprised of the information obtained by means of intermediate reports or otherwise.

German Standard of Living

- 21. You will estimate requirements of supplies necessary to prevent starvation or widespread disease or such civil unrest as would endanger the occupying forces. Such estimates will be based upon a program whereby the Germans are made responsible for providing for themselves, out of their own work and resources. You will take all practicable economic and police measures to assure that German resources are fully utilized and consumption held to the minimum in order that imports may be strictly limited and that surpluses may be made available for the occupying forces and displaced persons and United Nations prisoners of war, and for reparation. You will take no action that would tend to support basic living standards in Germany on a higher level than that existing in any one of the neighboring United Nations and you will take appropriate measures to ensure that basic living standards of the German people are not higher than those existing in any one of the neighboring United Nations when such measures will contribute to raising the standards of any such nation.
- 22. You will urge upon the Control Council that uniform ration scales be applied throughout Germany, that essential items be distributed equitably among the zones, that net surpluses be made available for export to Allied countries, and that imports be limited to the net deficits of Germany as a whole.

Labor, Health, and Social Insurance

- 23. You will permit the self-organization of employees along democratic lines, subject to such safeguards as may be necessary to prevent the perpetuation of Nazi or militarist influence under any guise or the continuation of any group hostile to the objectives and operations of the occupying forces.
- 24. You will permit free collective bargaining between employees and employers regarding wage, hour and working conditions and the establishment of machinery for the settlement of industrial disputes. Collective bargaining shall be subject to such wage, hour and other controls, if any, as may be instituted or revived by your direction.
- 25. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 48 of this directive you are authorized to direct German authorities to maintain or reestablish non-discriminatory systems of social insurance and poor relief.
- 26. You are authorized to direct the German authorities to maintain or re-establish such health services and facilities as may be available to them.

Agriculture, Industry and Internal Commerce

- 27. You will require the Germans to use all means at their disposal to maximize agricultural output and to establish as rapidly as possible effective machinery for the collection and distribution of agricultural output.
- 28. You will direct the German authorities to utilize large-landed estates and public lands in a manner which will facilitate the accommodation and settlement of Germans and others or increase agricultural output.
- 29. You will protect from destruction by the Germans, and maintain for such disposition as is determined by this and other directives or by the Control Council, all plants, equipment, patents and other property, and all books and records of large German industrial companies and trade and research associations that have been essential to the German war effort or the German economy. You will pay particular attention to research and experimental establishments of such concerns.
 - 30. In order to disarm Germany, the Countrol Council should

a. prevent the production, acquisition by importation or otherwise, and development of all arms, ammunition and implements of war, as well as all types of aircraft, and all parts, components and ingredients specially designed or produced for incorporation therein;

b. prevent the production of merchant ships, synthetic rubber and oil, aluminum and magnesium and other products and equipment on which you will subsequently receive instructions;

c. seize and safeguard all facilities used in the production of any of the items mentioned in this paragraph and dispose of them as follows:

(1) remove all those required for reparation;

(2) destroy all those not transferred for reparation if they are especially adapted to the production of the items specified in this paragraph and are not of a type generally used in industries permitted to the Germans (cases of doubt to be resolved in favor of destruction);

(3) hold the balance for disposal in accordance with instructions which will be sent to you.

Pending agreement in the Control Council you will take these measures in your own zone. You will not postpone enforcement of the prohibitions contained in subparagraphs a and b and the instructions in subparagraph c without specific approval of your government through the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

31. As an additional measure of disarmament, the Control Council should

a. prohibit initially all research activities and close all laboratories, research institutions and similar technical organizations except those considered necessary to the protection of public health;

b. abolish all those laboratories and related institutions whose work has been connected with the building of the German war machine, safeguard initially such laboratories and detain such personnel as are of interest to your technological investigations, and thereafter remove or destroy their equipment;

c. permit the resumption of scientific research in specific cases, only after careful investigation has established that the contemplated research will in no way contribute to Germany's future war potential and only under appropriate regulations which (1) define the specific types of research permitted, (2) exclude from further research activity any persons who previously held key positions in German war research, (3) provide for frequent inspection, (4) require free disclosure of the results of the research and (5) impose severe penalties, including permanent closing of the offending institution, whenever the regulations are violated.

Pending agreement in the Control Council you will adopt such measures in your own zone.

- 32. Pending final Allied agreements on reparation and on control or elimination of German industries that can be utilized for war production, the Control Council should
- a. prohibit and prevent production of iron and steel, chemicals, non-ferrous metals (excluding aluminum and magnesium), machine tools, radio and electrical equipment, automotive vehicles, heavy machinery and important parts thereof, except for the purposes stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive;

b. prohibit and prevent rehabilitation of plant and equipment in such industries except for the purposes stated in paragraphs 4 and 5

of this directive; and

c. safeguard plant and equipment in such industries for transfer on reparation account.

Pending agreement in the Control Council, you will put such measures into effect in your own zone.

- 33. The Control Council should adopt a policy permitting the conversion of facilities other than those mentioned in paragraphs 30 and 32 to the production of light consumer goods, provided that such conversion does not prejudice the subsequent removal of plant and equipment on reparation account and does not require any imports beyond those necessary for the purposes specified in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive. Pending agreement in the Control Council, you may permit such conversion in your zone.
- 34. Subject to the provisions of paragraphs 30 and 32, the Control Council should assure that all feasible measures are taken to facilitate, to the minimum extent necessary for the purposes outlined in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive
- a. repairs to and restoration of essential transportation services and public utilities;

b. emergency repair and construction of the minimum shelter required for the civilian population;

c. production of coal and any other goods and services required for reparation, for your forces and, subject to the provisions of paragraph 21 of this directive, for the German people.

You will assure that such measures are taken in your own zone pending agreement in the Control Council.

- 35. In your capacity as zone commander and as member of the Control Council you will take steps to provide for the equitable interzonal distribution and the movement of goods and services essential to the purposes set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive.
- 36. You will prohibit all cartels or other private business arrangements and cartel-like organizations, including those of a public or quasi-public character such as the Wirtschaftsgruppen providing for the regulation of marketing conditions, including production, prices, exclusive exchange of technical information and processes, and allocation of sales territories. Such necessary public functions as have been discharged by these organizations shall be absorbed as rapidly as possible by approved public agencies.
- 37. It is the policy of your government to effect a dispersion of the ownership and control of German industry. To assist in carrying out this policy you will make a survey of combines and pools, mergers, holding companies and interlocking directorates and communicate the results, together with recommendations, to your government through the Joint Chiefs of Staff. You will endeavor to obtain agreement in the Control Council to the making of this survey in the other zones of occupation and you will urge the coordination of the methods and results of this survey in the various zones.

38. With due regard to paragraph 4 a, the Control Council should adopt such policies as are clearly necessary to prevent or restrain inflation of a character or dimension which would definitely endanger accomplishment of the objectives of the occupation. The Control Council, in particular, should direct and empower German authorities to maintain or establish controls over prices and wages and to take the fiscal and financial measures necessary to this end. Pending agreement in the Control Council you will assure that such measures as you consider necessary are taken in your own zone. Prevention or restraint of inflation shall not constitute an additional ground for the importation of supplies, nor shall it constitute an additional ground for limiting removal, destruction or curtailment of productive facilities in fulfillment of the program for reparation, demilitarization and industrial disarmament.

Power, Transportation and Communications

- 39. Both as member of the Control Council and zone commander you will take appropriate steps to ensure that
- a. power, transportation and communications facilities are directed in such a way as to carry out the objectives outlined in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive;
- b. Germans are prohibited and prevented from producing, maintaining or operating all types of aircraft.

You will determine the degree to which centralized control and administration of power, transportation and communications is clearly necessary for the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 and urge the establishment of this degree of centralized control and administration by the Control Council.

Foreign Trade and Reparation

- 40. The Control Council should establish centralized control over all trade in goods and services with foreign countries. Pending agreement in the Control Council you will impose appropriate controls in your own zone.
- 41. Both as member of the Control Council and as zone commander you will take appropriate steps to ensure that
- a. the foreign trade controls are designed to carry out the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive;
- b. imports which are permitted and furnished to Germany are confined to those unavoidably necessary to the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5;
- c. exports to countries other than the United Nations are prohibited unless specifically authorized by the Allied governments.

- 42. Both as member of the Control Council and as zone commander you will adopt a policy which would forbid German firms to participate in international cartels or other restrictive contracts and arrangements and order the prompt termination of all existing German participations in such cartels, contracts and arrangements.
- 43. You will carry out in your zone such programs of reparation and restitution as are embodied in Allied agreements and you will seek agreement in the Control Council on any policies and measures which it may be necessary to apply throughout Germany in order to ensure the execution of such programs.

PART III

- 44. You will make full application in the financial field of the principles stated elsewhere in this directive and you will endeavor to have the Control Council adopt uniform financial policies necessary to carry out the purposes stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive. You will take no steps designed to maintain, strengthen or operate the German financial structure except in so far as may be necessary for the purposes specified in this directive.
- 45. The Control Council should regulate and control to the extent required for the purposes set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 the issue and volume of currency and the extension of credit in Germany and in accordance with the following principles:
- a. United States forces and other Allied forces will use Allied Military marks and Reichsmark currency or coins in their possession. Allied Military marks and Reichsmark currency and coin now in circulation in Germany will be legal tender without distinction and will be interchangeable at the rate of 1 Allied Military mark for 1 Reichsmark. Reichskreditkassenscheine and other German military currency will not be legal tender in Germany.

b. The Reichsbank, the Rentenbank or any other bank or agency may be permitted or required to issue bank notes and currency which will be legal tender; without such authorization no German governmental or private bank or agency will be permitted to issue bank notes or currency.

c. The German authorites may be required to make available Reichsmark currency or credits free of cost and in amounts sufficient to meet all the expenses of the forces of occupation, including the cost of Allied Military Government and including to the extent that compensation is made therefor, the cost of such private property as may be requisitioned, seized, or otherwise acquired, by Allied authorities for reparations or restitution purposes.

Pending agreement in the Control Council you will follow these policies in your own zone.

You will receive separate instructions relative to the currency which you will use in the event that for any reason adequate supplies of Allied Military marks and Reichsmarks are not available, or if the use of such currency is found undesirable.

You will not announce or establish in your zone, until receipt of further instructions, any general rate of exchange between the Reichsmark on the one hand and the U.S. dollar and other currencies on the other. However, a rate of exchange to be used exclusively for pay of troops and military accounting purposes in your zone will be communicated separately to you.

- 46. Subject to any agreed policies of the Control Council, you are authorized to take the following steps and to put into effect such further financial measures as you may deem necessary to accomplish the purposes of your occupation:
- a. To prohibit, or to prescribe regulations regarding, transfer or other dealings in private or public securities or real estate or other property.
- b. To close banks, but only for a period long enough for you to introduce satisfactory control, to remove Nazi and other undesirable personnel, and to issue instructions for the determination of accounts to be blocked under sub-paragraph 48 e below.

c. To close stock exchanges, insurance companies, and similar financial institutions for such periods as you deem appropriate.

- d. To establish a general or limited moratorium or moratoria only to the extent clearly necessary to carry out the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive.
- 47. Resumption of partial or complete service on the internal public debt at the earliest feasible date is deemed desirable. The Control Council should decide the time and manner of such resumption.
 - 48. Subject to any agreed policies of the Control Council,
 - a. You will prohibit:
- (1) the payment of all military pensions, or other emoluments or benefits, except compensation for physical disability limiting the recipient's ability to work, at rates which are no higher than the lowest of those for comparable physical disability arising from non-military
- (2) the payment of all public or private pensions or other emoluments or benefits granted or conferred:
 - (a) by reason of membership in or services to the former Nazi Party, its formations, affiliated associations or supervised organizations,

(b) to any person who has been removed from an office or position in accordance with paragraph 6, and

- (c) to any person arrested and detained in accordance with paragraph 8 during the term of his arrest, or permanently, in case of his subsequent conviction.
- b. You will take such action as may be necessary to insure that all laws and practices relating to taxation or other fields of finance, which discriminate for or against any persons because of race, nationality, creed or political opinion, will be amended, suspended, or abrogated to the extent necessary to eliminate such discrimination.

- c. You will hold the German authorities responsible for taking such measures in the field of taxation and other fields of public finance, including restoration of the tax system and maintenance of tax revenues, as will further the accomplishment of the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5.
- d. You will exercise general supervision over German public expenditures in order to ensure that they are consistent with the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5.
- e. You will impound or block all gold, silver, currencies, securities, accounts in financial institutions, credits, valuable papers, and all other assets falling within the following categories:
- (1) Property owned or controlled directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, by any of the following:
 - (a) The German Reich, or any of the Lander, Gaue or provinces, any Kreis, Municipality or other similar local subdivision; or any agency or instrumentality of any of them including all utilities, undertakings, public corporations or monopolies under the control of any of the above;

(b) Governments, nationals or residents of other nations, including those of territories occupied by them, at war with any of the United Nations at any time since 1 September 1939;

(c) The Nazi Party, its formations, affiliated associations and supervised organizations, its officials, leading members and supporters;

(d) All organizations, clubs or other associations prohibited or dissolved by military government;

(e) Absentee owners, of non-German nationality including United Nations and neutral governments and Germans outside of Germany;

(f) Any institution dedicated to public worship, charity, education or the arts and sciences which has been used by the Nazi Party to further its interests or to cloak its activities;

- (g) Persons subject to arrest under provisions of paragraph 8, and all other persons specified by military government by inclusion in lists or otherwise.
- (2) Property which has been the subject of transfer under duress or wrongful acts of confiscation, disposition or spoilation, whether pursuant to legislation or by procedure purporting to follow forms of law or otherwise.
- (3) Works of art or cultural material of value or importance, regardless of the ownership thereof.

You will take such action as will insure that any impounded or blocked assets will be dealt with only as permitted under licenses or other instructions which you may issue. In the case particularly of property blocked under (1)(a) above, you will proceed to adopt licensing measures which while maintaining such property under surveillance would permit its use in consonance with this directive. In the case of property blocked under (2) above, you will institute measures for prompt restitution, in conformity with the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 and subject to appropriate safeguards to prevent the cloaking of Nazi and militaristic influence.

49. All foreign exchange transactions, including those arising out of exports and imports, shall be controlled with the aim of preventing Germany from developing a war potential and of achieving the other objectives set forth in this directive. To effectuate these purposes the Control Council should

a. Seek out and reduce to the possession and control of a special agency all German (public and private) foreign exchange and external assets of every kind and description located within or outside

b. Prohibit, except as authorized by regulation or license, all dealings in gold, silver, foreign exchange, and all foreign exchange transactions of any kind. Make available any foreign exchange proceeds of exports for payment of imports directly necessary to the accomplishment of the objectives stated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of this directive, and authorize no other outlay of foreign exchange assets except for purposes approved by the Control Council or other appropriate authority.

c. Establish effective controls with respect to all foreign exchange transactions, including:

(1) Transactions as to property between persons inside Germany and persons outside Germany;

(2) Transactions involving obligations owed by or to become due from any person in Germany to any person outside Germany; and

(3) Transactions involving the importation into or exportation from Germany of any foreign exchange asset or other form of property.

Pending agreement in the Control Council, you will take in your zone the action indicated in subparagraphs a, b and c above. Accordingly, you will in your zone reduce to the possession and control of a special agency established by you, within your Command, all German foreign exchange and external assets as provided in subparagraph a. You will endeavor to have similar agencies for the same purpose established in the other zones of occupation and to have them merged as soon as practicable in one agency for the entire occupied territory. In addition you will provide full reports to your government with respect to all German foreign exchange and external assets.

50. No extension of credit to Germany or Germans by any foreign person or Government shall be permitted except that the Control Council may in special emergencies grant permission for such extensions of credit.

- 51. It is not anticipated that you will make credits available to the Reichsbank or any other bank or to any public or private institution. If, in your opinion, such action becomes essential, you may take such emergency actions as you may deem proper, but in any event, you will report the facts to the Control Council.
- 52. You will maintain such accounts and records as may be necessary to reflect the financial operations of the military government in your zone and you will provide the Control Council with such information as it may require, including information in connection with the use of currency by your forces, any governmental settlements, occupation costs, and other expenditures arising out of operations or activities involving participation of your forces.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Secretary of State

[Washington,] April 27, 1945.

Participants: The President

Secretary Morgenthau

Mr. Clayton Mr. McCloy Mr. Bard Mr. Crowley

Acting Secretary, Mr. Grew

The President this morning at 10:10 received the informal committee set up for the purpose of elaborating the directives for dealing with post-war Germany composed of Secretary Morgenthau, Mr. Clayton, Mr. McCloy, Mr. Bard, Mr. Crowley and myself. As Chairman of the Committee, I told the President the purpose of the meeting and then asked Mr. Clayton to explain to the President the papers which had been drawn up covering the military and political, economic and financial phases of the problem. The President said that he was keenly interested in this matter and that he wished personally to study the papers agreed upon by the Committee, which were then handed to him. In reply to a question from Mr. Clayton, the President said that he would be glad to have the Committee pursue the same studies in connection with the treatment of post-war Austria, but he made it clear that the treatment of Germany and Austria should be quite different.

4628. Comea 230. At its May 3 meeting the European Advisory Commission began the detailed consideration of the US draft General Directive circulated as EAC 45/30 of April 6, with corrigendum of April 20.28 In opening the discussion Gousev and Strang stated emphatically their views that certain points in the General Directive are not in accord with the decisions of the Yalta Conference. I maintained that the General Directive is based on and drafted to fall within the scope of the Yalta decisions.

Paragraph 1. Gousev stated that this paragraph was incorporated in article 1 of the control machinery agreement and asked why any new statement was needed. Strang also felt that the control machinery agreement had said all that was necessary on this subject and saw no need for this paragraph. [I] replied that in a directive addressed to the Commanders in Chief it was helpful to have this paragraph included.

Strang contended that paragraph 1 was not in accord with article 3 of the control machinery agreement which states that the Control Council is "to initiate plans and reach agreed decisions". He recalled that the expression "to formulate policy" used in paragraph 1 of the General Directive had been proposed during discussion of the agreement on control machinery and had been rejected. He asked whether a difference was intended. I stated that no difference was intended and offered to consider a redrafting of paragraph 1 to bring its wording into line with the control machinery agreement.

Strang pointed out that the second sentence of paragraph 1 goes beyond the control machinery agreement in that the latter does not provide specifically for the contingency of there being no agreed Allied policy. He recalled that in discussing the provision for unanimous decisions by the Control Council it had been informally understood that if the Control Council failed to reach an agreed policy the Commanders in Chief would refer the matter to their governments. Strang asked whether this sentence gives complete liberty of action to each government in its zone in absence of agreed policies and whether any one Commander in Chief would then be able to negate agreement in the Control Council and thus to obtain complete liberty of action in his zone.

Advisory Commission (Winant) dated April 20, 1945, transmitted to the Department in despatch 22568, April 21, from London, an omission in the text of the U.S. draft general directive on the treatment of Germany in the initial post-defeat period was corrected (740.00119 EAC/4-2145). As indicated in footnote 20, p. 480, the actual draft U.S. general directive introduced in the E.A.C. has not been printed since it was identical with the memorandum of March 23 approved by President Roosevelt except for the omission of the introductory paragraph. Therefore, paragraph references in this and the immediately following telegram from Ambassador Winant regarding paragraph 1 of draft general directive have reference to paragraph 2 of memorandum of March 23, paragraph 2 of the draft general directive would refer to paragraph 3 of the memorandum of March 23, etc.

Massigli ²⁹ felt that failure to agree in the Council would mean that the question in dispute would be referred to the governments and that action would meanwhile be suspended. Strang agreed with this interpretation in so far as it applied to "matters affecting Germany as a whole". I emphasized that in many instances action could not be suspended and that in absence of an agreed policy the Commander would have to act in his zone on instructions from his own government. Massigli felt on the other hand that any matter of principle important enough to come before the Council would thereby require uniform action by all four Commanders.

Strang alleged one important difference between the control machinery agreement and the US General Directive; the former assumes agreed decisions while the latter postulates the case of no agreed decision. He concluded that the US General Directive was "less optimistic". Massigli felt that the US Directive erred in not impressing on the Commanders the paramount necessity for reaching agreed decisions and reconciling divergent views. He proposed recording the second sentence to provide that the Commanders must, first, do everything possible to reach agreement in the Council and second refer disagreements to their governments; and, third, only later act independently in their zones.

Strang asked whether it was necessary to add anything to what had been said in the control machinery agreement. He proposed omitting paragraph 1 entirely, and leaving it to the Commanders in Chief to work the control agreement, consulting their governments in case they cannot agree. In view of Gousev's rather marked non-participation in discussion of paragraph 1, I again stated at the close of this part of the discussion that the US Government gives full support of [to] the control machinery agreement as approved and that nothing in the General Directive is intended to contradict or weaken that agreement.

For further discussion of the US General Directive see my following telegram 4629,30 repeated to Paris for Murphy as my 249.

4629. Comea 231. Further discussion of US General Directive in May 3 meeting of the European Advisory Commission. See my 4628, May 7, 10 p. m. to Department, repeated to Paris for Murphy as my 248.

Paragraph 2 of the General Directive. Gousev objected to the first sentence on grounds that it implies retention of the German administrative machine in its present Nazi form and says nothing about Yalta decisions to abolish Nazi laws and institutions. I pointed out that these points were covered in paragraphs 6, 8 and 9 of the General Directive and offered to include the Yalta wording. Massigli expressed French support for the principle of decentralization or federalization of the German political structure. He felt it would be a mistake to restore the completely centralized political structure which had been built up under both the Republic and Hitler, especially since that structure had disintegrated in defeat.

Strang proposed that the Directive begin with a statement of the purposes of occupation, based on the Yalta declaration and on paragraph 3 of the United Kingdom draft Directive No. 1.³¹

Strang asked about the reference to "foreign affairs" in this paragraph, and questioned whether Germany would have any "foreign affairs". I interpreted this to mean "international relations" including economic relations and control of German Nationals and property abroad, but not "foreign affairs" in the usual sense of foreign political policy.

Massigli asked if the "controls" referred to in this paragraph were Allied or German controls. I stated that Allied controls were meant but that some controls might be exercised more directly and others more indirectly. Strang asked whether the list of purposes for which controls were permitted, as set forth under A, B and C, is exclusive or illustrative in character. I stated that these controls would probably be essential from the beginning. Strang proposed that the second sentence read: "shall permit or establish" instead of "may permit or establish", and that the words "in particular" be inserted after the words "establish central control", in order to indicate that the enumeration is not intended to be exhaustive. Gousev questioned the meaning of the words "German economy shall also be decentralized". He asked whether this meant decentralization of the economy itself or decentralization of the administration of the economy. I explained that these words did not envisage geographical redistribution of industry which he had at first understood, but rather a long term policy of decentralizing the control or [of] economy, removing the power of great concentrations, monopolies and cartels to dominate German economy, eliminating as many as possible of the central economic controls established by the Nazis.

Strang asked whether economic decentralization implied decentralization of the economic administration parallel with the decentralization of the political structure and whether each federal political unit would have a corresponding economic unit. He asked whether in place of a single central control there would be a number of federal or regional economic controls. In reply I again stressed the need for breaking up dangerous concentrations of economic power. The United Kingdom delegation asked whether it was intended merely to abolish the objectionable parts of centralized control or also to transfer any useful functions of control to regional and local authorities. I stated that some controls would be abolished as they had been created for war purposes; others might be placed under the control of the component federal states to serve civilian needs. Strang restated the objectives of paragraph 2 as follows: Economic decentralization to follow political decentralization; breaking up industrial associations which had gathered too many industries under their control. Massigli requested the United States delegation to provide an explanatory memorandum to facilitate consideration of this part of the General Directive.

Paragraph 3 of the directive met with no comment.

Paragraph 4. Gousev took strong exception to the words "controls may be imposed". He stated that the word "may" implied that controls "may or may not" be imposed. In his opinion, the Yalta declaration, which called for the elimination or control of all production that can be used for war purposes, is much more definite. He pointed out that a very large part of industry can be used for war purposes, and stated that these industries must be controlled.

On instructions from his Government, Massigli proposed that paragraph 4 begin with the following words: "German economy will be subjected to all necessary controls, particularly" those enumerated under A and B.

Strang asked whether Allied controls were meant in paragraph 4. I indicated that Allied controls were meant in paragraph 4 and, generally speaking, German controls in paragraph 5.

Massigli asked whether the second sentence of paragraph 4 meant that Germany's standard of living could be equal to that of any neighboring United Nation. I stated my understanding that these words mean that Germany's standard may be equal to the lowest neighboring standard, lower than the lowest but in no case higher than the lowest.

With regard to the sentence about treating payment for imports as a first charge on exports, Massigli and Strang asked whether this referred to "authorized imports". I stated that this was the case since both imports and exports would be controlled.

Regarding the last sentence of paragraph 4 Massigli asked whether countries receiving German reparations would not be "dependent on German economy" to that extent. I interpreted these words to mean that future or long range dependence of other countries on German economy should be avoided.

Paragraph 5. Massigli felt that the expression "assume administration of such controls" gave great power to the German authorities. He suggested that the word "execution" be substituted for "administration".

It was agreed to continue the discussion of the US General Directive at an early meeting of the EAC.

Sent to Department, repeated to Paris for Ambassador Murphy as my 249.

General J. C. Holmes ³²
Mr. William Phillips ³³
Acting Secretary, Mr. Grew

I called on the President this morning with General Holmes and Mr. Phillips and took up the following problems:

1. Post-war Treatment of Germany. I said that our directive to the Commander-in-Chief in Europe on the post-war treatment of Germany was now completed with the exception of one or two minor points still under consideration by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and that I hoped the paper would be ready this afternoon to submit to the President for his approval. I also said that we are under great pressure from the public to publish our plans in this respect and that after the President had approved the document and after it had been sent to General Eisenhower we could give publicity to the substance of the paper at an early date. The President agreed and said that he had already looked at the preliminary documents which were already before him and he asked us to give him the highlights of the plan. General Holmes said that the main purpose of the plan was to eliminate such industries in Germany as might be able to manufacture the implements of war. The President asked whether this included light as well as heavy industries. General Holmes observed that Mr. Morgenthau desired to have the synthetic oil plants destroyed but our position is that it would be unwise to destroy them as long as General Eisenhower might have use of them instead of having to import large quantities of oil from the United States. The President said that in this respect he entirely disagreed with Mr. Morgenthau. The President said that he would be in his office all the afternoon and that as soon as the paper is ready he would be glad to have Mr. Clayton and myself bring it over and lay it before him personally and he would make a point of studying it without delay.

The President said that as soon as the rough and tumble period is over in Germany he wants Governmental control of Germany to be in civilian hands as rapidly as the transition can be efficiently brought about. The President made a general statement that it is in our tradition that the military should not have governmental responsibilities beyond the requirements of military operations.

Mr. Henri Bonnet, French Ambassador

Mr. William Phillips Mr. Freeman Matthews

GERMANY

M. Bidault said that he would like to set forth his ideas with regard to the treatment of Germany. He said that he understood that the thinking of the United States and of the British on the long term treatment of Germany—he was not referring merely to the occupation period—had not crystalized but was still in a fluid state. He said that he himself had formerly thought that Germany should be divided up into a number of pieces but that he had revised his thinking on this. He has, however, some definite ideas: the Rhineland and the Ruhr and Westphalia should, he was convinced, be separated from the rest of Germany. On the other hand, there were certain definite objections to putting that whole area into a single state. He thought the separate parts of it should be treated differently:

- (1) As to the Saar region, France did not desire to annex it but was determined to have the Saar coal.
- (2) North of the Saar there is an agricultural area over which France feels she must have definite control for security reasons. This area included only the left bank of the Rhine up through Cologne and possibly one or two bridgeheads across the river. It was the area through which France had so often suffered military invasion. If it is placed in the hands of some international organization, the occupation of it might end by some "majority vote" against France. He emphasized that what France wanted was control and not annexation (though he did not define this difference). He said this would not mean slavery nor deportation for the population. While some elements of the population, such as Gestapo members or those who might preach a German resurgence and unification, might be deported from the area, it was his expectation that the local population would remain there. The French, he said, again wish to control this agricultural area north to Cologne without any restrictive international supervision.

⁴⁰ This memorandum has been printed virtually in its entirety in Joseph C. Grew, Turbulent Era: A Diplomatic Record of Forty Years, 1904–1945 (Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1952), vol. 11, pp. 1507–1513.

(3) He then came to the Ruhr. This region, he said, was the source of power and wealth of Germany and he felt should be definitely placed under the control of an international regime.

If a single Rhineland-Ruhr-Westphalia state is created, M. Bidault said, the standard of living in that area would probably be higher than the rest of Germany, its population would be privileged and it would attract more people from other regions of Germany. It conceivably could become another Prussia or Piedmont and form the nucleus or rallying point for a new strong, unified Germany. Under an international control, if such control were set up, the Russians might not agree with the western Europeans as to the policy to be applied. Therefore, as he had said before, he was opposed to the creation of a single Rhine-Ruhr state under international control. Germany will, he believes, in the nature of things, look to the west for hope and particularly to the Rhine area and he does not wish to see a powerful state established which will play one country off against another in typical German fashion, thus dividing the Allies.

In reply to a question, M. Bidault said that it might not be necessary to distinguish between the Saar and his agricultural area on the left bank of the Rhine though apparently what he wants in the Saar is only the control or ownership of the mines, whereas he wants complete security control in the area north of it. He admitted that he has not yet thought out the details. He did not specify what the nature of the international regime to govern the Ruhr should be but he did say in reply to a question that he was opposed to Germany having heavy metallurgical and machine tool industries or any substantial chemical industry. He said the Germans should be allowed to have industries such as textiles and in general "enough to let them live".

His views with regard to the treatment to be applied to the remainder of Germany have not developed. The German people, he said, are badly shocked and there will be no elements prepared to take over a government of the country. He believes that we should wait some months to see how conditions develop before deciding whether the country should be divided into one or more states.

In reply to a question as to whether France desired to utilize German labor as a form of reparation, he said that he had not definitely made up his mind. He thought, however, that a number of Germans, particularly those military elements who knew the job, should be utilized for clearing France of the many thousands of mines which have been laid throughout the country. He said that Dautry, the Minister of Reconstruction had estimated that it would cost ten billion francs, ten years labor and fifty thousand dead finally to clear France of mines.

In concluding his remarks on Germany, M. Bidault reiterated that he had merely wanted to present these strong views of his Government with regard to the Rhineland and he did not seem to expect an immediate answer as to the American position. He was told that, as he had intimated, our ideas on the long term territorial treatment of Germany have not yet crystalized.

The revised draft directive has been formally approved by the State, War, and Navy Departments, with the concurrence of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and is submitted to the Ambassador for his guidance on the European Advisory Commission.

There is also enclosed a memorandum of May 26, 1945, by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee giving reasons for the amendments set forth in the revised draft.

of them. In particular it removes from the zone commander and transfers to the authorities of the particular United Nation the main responsibility for obtaining the evidence that would be required under the law and judicial procedure of that United Nation which would be interested in the prosecution of its apprehended nationals for collaboration with the enemy. Also, as revised, the draft directive permits the zone commander in his discretion to continue to detain the desired person, if such person's continued detention is required by reason of his being a suspected war criminal or for other reasons, or in the case of doubt as to disposition, to consult his own government.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have advised the Committee that they find no objections to the revised draft from the military point of view.

DRAFT

DIRECTIVE ON UNITED NATIONS' RENEGADES AND QUISLINGS 44

- 1. This directive is issued to you as commander in chief of the U.S. (U.K.), (U.S.S.R.) (French) forces of occupation. As a member of the Control Council, you will urge the adoption by the other occupying powers of the principles and policies set forth in this directive and pending Control Council agreement, you will follow them in your zone.
- 2. This directive is concerned with United Nations' renegades and quislings as such. It does not apply to war criminals concerning whom a separate directive will be issued.
- 3. Appropriate measures must be taken against persons of United Nations' nationality who have assisted or collaborated with the enemy. You will require the German authorities to give whatever assistance may be necessary to this end in all such ways as you may specify.
- 4. You will take all possible steps in your zone to apprehend those persons:
- a. Whose names are contained on lists furnished to you by any of the United Nations showing their nationals whose apprehension is desired, when accompanied by a specification of the offense with which the individual is charged;
- b. Whom you have reason to believe are of the nationality of any one of the United Nations and whose names do not appear on any such list, if you have grounds for suspecting that they have, following their country's entry in the war:

(1) voluntarily engaged in activities calculated to assist the enemy in any way whatsoever; or

(2) assumed or obtained, enemy nationality and are not members of communities obliged to accept German nationality.

- 5. Upon the apprehension of any such persons you will notify the respective United Nations' Governments of such apprehension. You will hold such persons pending decision by the respective governments as to their disposition and upon request you will hand them over to the appropriate authorities of the United Nations' Governments concerned, unless they are required to be detained as war criminals or for other reasons. If, in the light of conditions which you encounter, you believe that certain persons within these categories, other than war criminals, should not be subjected immediately to this treatment, you may postpone action reporting to your government the facts and giving your recommendations and the reasons therefor.
- 6. In the event of any Government being unable for any reason to accept delivery of any persons referred to in paragraph 4, you will nevertheless apprehend and detain such persons if you consider such action desirable for security or other reasons.
- 7. The claim of German nationality will not be a reason for failing to apprehend the persons concerned, if included within any of the categories of persons described in paragraph 4. It will be for the authorities of the appropriate United Nation to consider how far the possession of German nationality merely mitigates his offence or affords a defence in law to a charge of treason.
- 8. In the event that information and physical evidence is immediately available, you will obtain and preserve the same for delivery to the authorities of the appropriate United Nation and will afford assistance to such authorities in their collection of evidence. You will cause the German authorities to afford you or the authorities of the appropriate United Nation the fullest assistance and all necessary facilities for this purpose, including the inspection of any books, documents, records, or archives, the provision of documentary evidence for use in court and of witnesses in a position to give oral evidence.

and Navy Departments and General Eisenhower plans to release to the press IPCOG 1/4 ⁴⁶ of May 11 (formerly JCS 1067) within few days. Detailed list of persons to be arrested has been deleted from numbered paragraph 8. Several references to obsolete or incompleted documents also deleted.

Numbered paragraph 10 states that United States policies on control of information media in Germany, accrediting of foreign correspondents, press censorship and news communiqués will be sent to Eisenhower separately. Publication of IPCOG 1/4 will lead to inquiries about status of these papers which include JCS 1109 ⁴⁷ and 1323 ⁴⁸ now before EAC. It is understood no separate papers have been prepared on press censorship and news communiqués.

War and Navy Departments have stated they have no objection to release of 1109 and 1323 at this time. Dept. has asked that telegram be sent to Eisenhower to confirm this view.

War Department states these two papers are now the basis of planning by American component of Control Council for control of public information and regulation of foreign correspondents in U.S. zone in advance of agreement among four occupying powers.

I feel that we should as soon as possible make public here our Government's policies concerning control of information in Germany during the period of occupation but we do not wish to do this until we are sure of status of existing and projected negotiations concerning these matters and plans for putting these policies into effect in American zone.

What is the present status in London of these two documents? Do you concur in Department's view that they be published now if Eisenhower approves?

If 1109 is approved for release, Department plans to bring document up-to-date by deleting first three paragraphs, renumbering remaining paragraphs, changing three governing powers to four, and changing term "supreme authority" to "Control Council". Text of proposed release on 1109 is given in immediate following telegram.

Proposed release on 1323 would be introduced as follows:

"U.S. policy on regulation of foreign correspondents in Germany. The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, June 11, 1945—8 p. m. [Received June 11—7 p. m.]

5899. Comea 285. For MacLeish. I have been giving thought to proposal for releasing to press IPCOG 1/4 May 11 (former JCS 1067) reDepts 4641, June 9. I fully understand public's eagerness for authentic information re US plans concerning Germany and have always sympathized with Dept's desire inform public more fully.

In addition to method proposed for informing public, several alternative methods are available, including (1) public address by an Assistant Secretary of State, (2) prepared release setting forth basic US aims as further development of Secretary Stimson's release of May 11,49 or (3) press conference by ActSecy or Assistant Secretary setting forth US program. Any of these methods has great advantages over proposed publication of IPCOG 1/4.

The three papers referred to in Depts 4641 are secret documents under consideration by EAC. IPCOG 1/4 was circulated as EAC 45/56, May 29 (my despatch 23472, June 5).50 JCS 1109 is secret document EAC 44/32 Nov 23, 1944 (my despatch 19592, Dec 1, 1944).50 JCS 1323 is secret document EAC 45/55 May 18 (my despatch 23459, June 4).50

EAC 45/56 May 29 is being actively studied by EAC delegations as basis for negotiation of US draft general directive EAC 45/30 April 6.51 EAC has already discussed 45/30 in considerable detail and expects to proceed shortly with its negotiation using EAC 45/56 as a basis for enlarging EAC 45/30 where necessary.

EAC 44/32 on control of Public information in Germany is also under negotiation. UK delegation has presented comments and draft amendments in EAC 45/17 Feb. 27 (my despatch 23093 May 16).⁵⁰

EAC 45/55 May 18 is under active negotiation. Detailed exchange of views took place in EAC June 5. Soviet delegation has presented comments and draft amendments and UK delegation is preparing to do same within few days. Publication of this secret document at present would probably bring to complete stop negotiation of any four power agreement on status of foreign correspondents in Germany.

As Dept will recall from recent British protest against unilateral Soviet announcement re Soviet Zone in Germany, reported in mytel 5862, June 9, 52 EAC has always operated on understanding that its discussions and documents will remain strictly secret except when announcements like those of June 5 are specifically agreed between the four Govts. Unilateral publication of three documents now under negotiation in EAC would undoubtedly bring sharp reaction from other Govts and might well result in immediate cessation of EAC work. Such a development would run directly counter to US Govt view which as I understand aims to secure as much agreement as possible with other three occupying powers. Until Control Council begins to function regularly EAC is instrument through which four Govts work to harmonize their views re Germany.

Even if EAC does not have time to complete negotiation of these three papers, publication of detailed eighteen page unilateral directive would I believe greatly handicap US Commander in Germany in attempting through Control Council to achieve substantial measure of uniform policy re Germany. Some policies laid down in detail in IPCOG 1/4 may eventually require modification in some particulars in order to promote major US interest in securing and maintaining Allied unity in treatment of Germany and to cope with future conditions now unforeseeable. The eighteen-page directive if published would thenceforth be cited continually by critics interested and disinterested alike, in opposition to actions which the US Commander might then consider essential to achieve broad purposes of his mission.

Unilateral publication of these detailed documents while they are under negotiation would create presumption in minds of our Allies that US is turning away from principle of joint responsibility and action in Germany and is preparing to proceed unilaterally within its zone without regard to the views of its Allies. While I have never, in course of 90 EAC meetings, underestimated difficulties of securing coordinated Allied action in Germany, I believe it is vital US interest to promote joint action by every means and to avoid in this crucial period any action that could be interpreted by other Govts as withdrawals from our pledge made at Moscow and renewed at Tehran and Yalta, to act jointly with our Allies in matters affecting Germany as a whole.

⁵² Not printed.

I hope Dept will give further consideration to my suggestions above for issuing broad statement public address or press interview on US policy re Germany and will not in this period of uncertainties issue exact texts of secret documents which are under active negotiation with our Allies.⁵³

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, June 12, 1945.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit a Memorandum by the United Kingdom Representative on the European Advisory Commission (E.A.C.(45)58 of June 11, 1945) enclosing a redraft of the United States Delegation's proposed General Directive on the Treatment of Germany in the Initial Post-Defeat Period. The United States proposal was circulated in the Commission as E.A.C.(45)30 of April 6, 1945,⁵⁴ and was sent to the Department with the Embassy's despatch No. 22349 of April 12.⁵⁵

It will be recalled that the United States draft General Directive was discussed at some length in the Commission at its meeting on May 3, 1945. Since that time the other Delegations have been giving further study to the United States draft and since the end of May they have undoubtedly been assisted in their studies of this paper by the United States Directive to Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Forces of Occupation regarding the Military Government of Germany, which was circulated for the information of the Commission as E.A.C. (45) 56 of May 29, 1945. 55

In recent meetings all Delegations have expressed an interest in resuming discussions of the General Directive at an early date.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador: E. Allan Lightner, Jr. Secretary, U.S. Delegation European Advisory Commission

⁶³ Telegram 4979, June 21, to London, stated that after careful consideration of the arguments advanced by Ambassador Winant, it was decided not to publish for the time being IPCOG 1/4, EAC 44/32, and EAC 45/55 (740.00119 EAC/6-2045). The "Directive to Commander in Chief of United States Forces of Occupation Regarding the Military Government of Germany" was eventually released to the press on October 17, 1945, and was printed in Department of State Bulletin, October 21, 1945, p. 596.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Acting United Kingdom Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Hood)⁵⁷

E.A.C. (45) 58

London, 11 June, 1945.

TREATMENT OF GERMANY IN THE INITIAL POST-DEFEAT PERIOD

On 6th April the United States Representative circulated to the European Advisory Commission a draft General Directive on the Treatment of Germany in the Initial Post-Defeat Period (E.A.C. (45) 30). Preliminary consideration was given to this draft by the Commission at its meeting on 3rd May, 1945.

- 2. The United Kingdom Delegation has considered the United States draft and prepared a redraft of it, in which some of the provisions of the original United States draft are rearranged, and other fresh provisions are added.
- 3. I now circulate to my colleagues, as an annex to this memorandum, the United Kingdom redraft of the U.S. General Directive.
- 4. I hope the Commission will agree to take this redraft into consideration when it resumes discussion of the U.S. draft General Directive.

[Subenclosure]

TREATMENT OF GERMANY IN THE INITIAL POST-DEFEAT PERIOD U.K. Re-Draft of U.S. Directive

- 1. The authority of the Control Council to initiate plans and reach agreed decisions on the chief military, political, economic and other questions affecting Germany as a whole shall be paramount, and those plans and decisions shall be carried out in each zone of occupation by the national Commander-in-Chief concerned. In matters exclusively affecting his own zone, each national Commander-in-Chief shall exercise supreme authority in accordance with directives received from his own Government.
- 2. The purposes of the occupation of Germany, to the promotion of which the above plans and decisions are to be directed are:—
- (i) The complete disarmament of Germany and the elimination or control of all German industry that could be used for military production. For these purposes:—
 - (a) the German armed forces, including the General Staff and all para-military organisations, shall be demobilized as soon as practicable and disbanded in such manner as permanently to prevent their revival or reorganisation; and ⁶⁷ Originally circulated in the European Advisory Commission by the Acting United Kingdom Representative on June 7.

- (b) as part of the programme to attain this objective, all implements of war and all specialised facilities for their construction shall be seized or destroyed. The maintenance and production of all implements of war shall be prevented, except as may be otherwise directed.
- (ii) To convince the German people that they have suffered a total military defeat and that they cannot escape responsibility for what they have brought upon themselves, since their own ruthless warfare and the fanatical Nazi resistance have destroyed German economy and made chaos and suffering inevitable.

(iii) To destroy the National Socialist Party and its affiliated and supervised organisations, to dissolve all Nazi institutions, to ensure that they are not revived in any form, and to prevent all Nazi and militaristic activity or propaganda.

- (iv) To lay the foundations for the rule of law in Germany and for eventual peaceful co-operation in international life by Germany.
- 3. Nazi laws which provide the basis of the Hitler regime or which establish discriminations on grounds of race, creed, or political opinion shall be abolished. No such discriminations, whether legal, administrative or otherwise, shall be tolerated. National Socialist courts shall likewise be abolished.
- 4. War criminals and those who have participated in planning or carrying out Nazi enterprises involving or resulting in atrocities or war crimes shall be arrested, with a view to their ultimate disposal. Nazi leaders and influential Nazi supporters and any other persons dangerous to the occupation or its objectives shall be arrested and interned.
- 5. All members of the Nazi Party who have been more than nominal participants in its activities and all other persons hostile to Allied purposes shall be removed from public and semi-public office, and from positions of major responsibility in important private undertakings. Those Germans who are permitted to remain in, or are appointed to, official posts (e.g. in the police or the administration) should understand that they hold office only during good behaviour.
- 6. German education shall be so controlled as completely to eliminate Nazi and militarist doctrines and to make possible the development of democratic ideas.
- 7. The administration of affairs in Germany should be directed towards the decentralisation of the political structure and the development of local responsibility. The German economy shall also be decentralised, except that to the minimum extent required for carrying out the purposes set forth herein, the Control Council shall permit or secure the establishment of central controls and, in particular, of (a) essential national public services such as railroads, communications and power, (b) finance and foreign economic affairs, (c) production and distribution of essential commodities, and (d) such other matters as may be directed from time to time.

- 8. In the imposition and maintenance of economic controls, German authorities shall to the fullest extent practicable be ordered to proclaim and assume administration of such controls. Thus it should be brought home to the German people that the responsibility for the administration of such controls and for any breakdown in those controls will rest with themselves and their own authorities. Any German controls which run counter to the objectives of occupation will be abolished.
- 9. Allied controls shall be imposed upon the German economy but only as may be necessary:—
- (a) to carry out programmes, as prescribed by higher authority, of industrial disarmament and demilitarisation, of reparations, of relief for liberated areas and of other supplies as may be notified;
- (b) to assure the production and maintenance of goods and services required to meet the needs of the occupying forces and displaced persons in Germany and essential to prevent starvation, disease or civil unrest:
- (c) to ensure the equitable distribution of essential commodities between the several zones;
- (d) to control German industry and all economic and financial international transactions, including exports and imports, with the aim of preventing Germany from developing a war potential and of achieving the other objectives named herein. For the same purpose no extension of credit to Germany or Germans by any foreign person or Government shall be permitted, except with the permission of the Control Council;
- (e) otherwise to carry out the objectives of occupation and prevent conditions arising which would endanger the occupying forces or impede them in their tasks.
- 10. No action shall be taken in execution of the reparations programme or otherwise which would tend to support basic living standards in Germany on a higher level than those generally current for comparable categories of the population in liberated territories.
- 11. The first charge on all approved exports for reparations or otherwise shall be a sum necessary to pay for approved imports.
- 12. Recurrent reparations should not by their form or amount require the rehabilitation or development of German heavy industry and should not foster the dependence of other countries upon the German economy.
- 13. A suitable programme for the restitution of identifiable property looted by Germans from Allied territory shall be carried out promptly.
- 14. Subject to the overriding necessity for the maintenance of military security, political activities (including public demonstrations or meetings) shall not be forbidden, but support of Allied authority shall not be lent to any particular political party or policy in Germany.

- 15. Subject again to the necessity for maintaining military security, freedom of speech and freedom of the Press shall be permitted, and the formation of free trade unions shall be encouraged.
- 16. Freedom of religion and the maintenance of respect for the churches in Germany shall be fostered, though steps should be taken to ensure that religious activities are not used as a cloak for the spreading of undesirable political ideas or of propaganda directed against any of the United Nations.
- 17. The attitude to the German population of all Allied forces shall be just, but firm and distant. Fraternisation between Allied forces and the German population shall be strongly discouraged; in particular, contact between Allied forces and German forces not yet demobilized shall be reduced to a minimum. In general, contact with German officials should be as little as is necessary in order to ensure the adequate supervision of administration.
 - 18. This directive does not apply to Austria.

EAC Files: File "140 III Proclamations and General Order"

Memorandum by the Political Adviser to the United States Delegation to the European Advisory Commission (Mosely)

London, June 19, 1945.

THE "GENERAL ORDER" OR AGREEMENT ON ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS

[Here follows the contents of section 1 of the memorandum by the Secretary, United States Delegation, European Advisory Commission (Lightner), February 9, printed on page 447.]

In accordance with Department's telegram No. 10371,58 the U.S. Joint Advisers conducted detailed consultations, in December 1944 and January 1945, with responsible representatives of the U.S. side of SHAEF (G-3 and G-5 59). An exhaustive report by the U.S. side of SHAEF dated January 28, 1945, was transmitted to the Military Adviser by General Bedell Smith in a letter of February 7.60 The report (GCT/387.4-2/PHP) emphasized repeatedly the desirability of negotiating tripartite policy in the E.A.C. through adapting the U.S. draft General Order to serve as a basis of agreement between the occupying Powers. The report concluded that "The General Order . . . 608 should be recast in form of a policy agreement among the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. for ultimate implementation through the Operations Division and Civil Affairs Division, respectively.

Control Council". Appendix 5 of the report transmitted detailed suggestions, article by article, regarding the adaptation of the General Order for this purpose.

3. Preliminary Stages of Negotiation of the "General Order".

From the time that the Ambassador received Department's telegram No. 10371 of December 12, 1944, the U.S. Delegation has never pressed for the negotiation of the General Order. Instead, it has urged negotiation of the separate Directives and, after April 6, 1945, negotiation of the U.S. draft General Directive.

On the other hand, the U.S. Delegation was not instructed to repudiate the commitment, made in March 1944, to negotiate a "General Order". By Department's telegram No. 2076 of March 17, 1945, drafted as the result of two long conferences held in Washington between the State, War and Navy Departments, the Ambassador was informed that it was understood that he would continue the negotiation of the General Order, in the form of an Agreement on additional requirements of a non-military nature, to be enforced on Germany by the occupying Powers, and that in this negotiation he would make appropriate use of JCS 1103 of October 13 61 and of the informal (US) SHAEF report transmitted by General Bedell Smith.

At numerous meeting of the E.A.C. the U.K. Representative pressed over many months for early negotiation of the General Order. For example, at a meeting of January 29, 1945, Strang recalled previous understandings to proceed with the work of drawing up agreed Proclamations and General Orders. He stated that his Government was pressing for action on this matter, on the basis of the agreement whereby the British Government had accepted the short-term Surrender Instrument.

At the same meeting the French Representative also pressed for action on the General Order. He pointed out that the French Government had agreed to refrain from asking for certain amendments to the Surrender Instrument on the understanding that the French desiderata would be covered in the General Order. The French position was made clear in two memoranda: E.A.C. (44)47 of December 29, 1944,62 and E.A.C. (45)9 of February 7, 1945.63

At the January 29 meeting the Soviet Representative also indicated his full understanding of the obligation which he had entered into on behalf of his Government in March 1944. He also indicated that his Delegation was preparing, for consideration in the E.A.C., comments and amendments to the U.S. draft General Order of November 14, 1944,65 which had meanwhile been accepted by the three other Delegations as a basis for discussion in the E.A.C.

Upon the completion of the Declaration on the Defeat of Germany, which was subsequently issued in Berlin on June 5, 1945,66 the Soviet Representative indicated that he was now ready to negotiate the General Order. During the last ten days of May and the first half of June 1945, the E.A.C. devoted a series of meetings to a detailed consideration and redrafting of the General Order.

4. Character of the Document Submitted.

The document which the E.A.C. is now preparing to submit to the four Governments represents an agreement to impose certain additional primarily non-military requirements upon the German people. It is thus, first of all, an agreement among the four occupying Powers concerning certain requirements which are not covered in the Declaration of June 5. It is, secondarily, a document to be issued, in whole or in part, to the German people. In no sense does it represent a "taking of power" since supreme authority in Germany has already been taken by the four Powers through the Declaration of June 5. Basically, the Additional Requirements document is an extension, or second instalment, of the Declaration of June 5, to cover the non-military fields of Allied activity.

During the negotiation of the "Additional Requirements" the U.S. Delegation has succeeded in many ways in strengthening its usefulness as an initial and basic agreement between the occupying Powers, as well as in securing the insertion of a number of important policy matters based on the U.S. Memorandum of March 23 and the revised JCS 1067.

Separate comments on the various articles follow,⁶⁵ to the extent that they reflect policy discussions and revisions.

17. I refer to the second paragraph of the President's memorandum of June 15 ⁷¹ requesting the Department's view concerning the wisdom of attempting to secure agreement at the forthcoming conference on a twenty-five year treaty between the three or four principal powers to demilitarize Germany and to keep her demilitarized by force if necessary.⁷²

Due to the extreme pressure of work here in the final days of the conference it has not been possible for us to go into this question as fully as it deserves. I am therefore sending you a [by] separate telegram ⁷³ two memoranda prepared by officers of the Department here:

one by Llewellyn Thompson 74 and one by John Hickerson. 75 Mr. Dunn is in accord with the views expressed by Mr. Hickerson. These memoranda have been prepared while the officers were under great pressure of work in connection with conference matters. It seems desirable that I send you the three memoranda separately for study and appraisal in the Department along with other information on the same subject. It has not seemed advisable to discuss this matter with Senator Vandenberg 76 and Senator Connally 77 pending at least a preliminary determination of the Department's position on the proposal.

San Francisco, June 22, 1945. [Received June 22—11:26 p. m.]

18. My immediately preceding telegram in regard to the proposal to demilitarize Germany. Thompson's memorandum reads as follows:

"The conclusion of such a treaty would have two great advantages. In the first place it would greatly reduce Soviet fears that Germany will one day be allowed to regain her strength and be used by the western powers in an anti-Soviet combination. With Germany demilitarized, no combination of European powers could effectively threaten the Soviet Union and the latter could afford to adopt a more liberal policy, particularly in eastern Europe. This would make it possible to break the vicious circle in which Soviet moves to insure her security tends to bring about the very combination of powers against her which she seeks to avoid.

In the second place, such a treaty would strengthen the influence of the United States in European affairs, generally, as it would go far to remove the fear of European states that we may within a few years turn our back on Europe and return to the policy of isolation.

The chief arguments against such a treaty are the following:

1. The conclusion of the treaty might be interpreted as showing lack of faith in the efficacy of the United Nations organization. It would undoubtedly detract from the charter of the United Nations if such a treaty were submitted to the Senate at about the same time as the charter.

Acting Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs and a political officer of the United States Delegation to the San Francisco Conference.
To Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs and an Adviser to the United States Delegation at the San Francisco Conference.

76 Arthur H. Vandenberg, Senator from Michigan and member of the United States Delegation to the San Francisco Conference.

Tom Connally, Senator from Texas and member of the United States Delegation to the San Francisco Conference.

- 2. There is great risk in proposing a treaty of this kind unless it is virtually certain that the Senate would accept it. A Senate debate on the subject, which might rally isolationist and anti-Soviet forces would probably be bitter and would not strengthen our international position at this critical time.
- 3. The chief argument against our proposing at the Big Three meeting the immediate conclusion of such a treaty relates to the question of timing. Germany is already effectively being demilitarized and will remain so as long as it is occupied by Allied troops. For the treaty to be fully effective, it should contain provisions, or be related to other arrangements, which cannot be determined at this time, it would be difficult, for example, to agree upon specific provisions covering inspection and enforcement measures until it is definitely known whether or not Germany is to be dismembered. It would appear more appropriate to conclude a treaty on this subject at such time as our troops are withdrawn from Germany and/or the Allied control machinery ceases to function. At that time we could take advantage of the experience gained in the operation of the control machinery; the United Nations organization would presumably have come into operation and we could better judge to what extent the treaty should be related to it. The development of the post-war political situation in Europe should by then have become sufficiently clear as to enable us to conclude a more effective treaty than would be the case at this Moreover, at that time we could propose the simultaneous conclusion of a similar treaty with respect to Japan. There could be little doubt but that this would facilitate approval of the arrangement concerning Germany.

In view of the foregoing it would seem advisable for us to agree in principle to such a treaty but to defer the date of its conclusion. Should this matter be raised at the Big Three meeting, or should we decide to take the initiative in doing so, we could indicate our willingness and intention to conclude such treaties at the appropriate time.

We could point out:

1. That we are already proceeding to the de facto demilitarization of Germany.

2. That juridically the question is now covered by the terms of the Moscow declaration ⁷⁸ which states, inter alia, that the signatories 'will act together in all matters relating to the surrender and disarmament of that enemy' and that 'they will take all measures deemed by them to be necessary to provide against any violation of the terms imposed upon the enemy'.

3. That following the defeat of Japan and before such time as our troops of occupation are withdrawn from Germany and/or the Allied control of Germany is terminated, we intend to propose the conclusion of long term treaties providing for the demilitarization of both Germany is the conclusion of long term treaties providing for the demilitarization of both Germany is the conclusion of long term treaties providing for the demilitarization of both Germany is the conclusion of long term treaties providing for the demilitarization of long term treaties providing for the long treaties and long tr

many and Japan."

19. My immediately preceding telegram in regard to the proposal to demilitarize Germany. Hickerson's memorandum reads as follows:

"Taking everything into account I believe this idea has considerable merit. I do not like the specific draft of a treaty prepared by Oscar Cox." I do not believe we have reached the point yet of considering a draft but I think the idea is worthy of exploration.

Specifically I believe that it would be desirable for the President to sound out Stalin and Churchill on this idea at the forthcoming meeting. I think that it would be undesirable for the President to go further at this time than to express an interest in this proposal and to say that he is willing to consider it and discuss it further through diplomatic channels if Stalin and Churchill think that it is a good idea. I do not feel that any commitment in respect of such a treaty should be made at the forthcoming meeting other than to discuss the matter further through diplomatic channels. The purposes of raising the idea at this time would be to find out how much importance the Russians would attach to such a proposal and whether it would in fact be useful in removing their fears that the western countries might at some time wish to strengthen Germany as a bulwark against the Soviet Union.

After all we fully expect to participate in the demilitarization of Germany anyway and to keep Germany demilitarized for an indefinite period in the future. If there is advantage to the United States in agreeing to do this in a formal treaty it seems to me that it would amount to our obtaining this advantage in return for something we expect to do anyway.

I do not like the idea of a 25 year term. That is exactly the length of time between the outbreak of World Wars I and II and psychologically it seems to me it would be undersirable to use such a figure. Why not 50 years? I do not believe that such a treaty would be interpreted as showing a lack of faith in the United Nations organization. After all the charter makes specific provision for the control of enemy states outside the organization (chapter 12, paragraph 2 of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals). It is perfectly clear that this job will be done by the responsible powers outside the organization for an indefinite period of time.

As to timing such a treaty would not in the ordinary course of events be concluded and ready for signature until after approval in the United States of the charter. I see some merit in the idea of proposing a similar treaty in regard to Japan although the circumstances are quite different in regard to Japan from those relating to Germany.

⁷⁹ For text of Cox's February 17 draft of a treaty on the demilitarization of Germany, see p. 424.

⁸⁰ See proposals for the establishment of a general international organization, October 7, 1944, Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 890.

This point might be met by our making it clear that if we sign a treaty to demilitarize Germany we will expect a similar treaty to be concluded in regard to Japan at the appropriate time.

I think that if such a treaty is concluded it should be between the four countries represented on the control commission. However, I see some advantage to adding China as a signatory since China adhered to the Moscow declaration."

Memorandum by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Secretary of State '81

Washington, 3 July 1945.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC) has considered certain draft directives with respect to Germany which were prepared by the U.S. Advisers, European Advisory Commission (EAC) and which were transmitted by Ambassador Winant. Certain of these have been disposed of by separate JCS papers,82 but certain others of them have not been so disposed of, namely: (a) Political Prisoners, JCS Memo 326; (b) War Criminals, JCS Memo 332; (c) Dissolution of the Nazi Party and Purge of Nazi Personnel. JCS Memo 334; (d) Property Control, JCS Memo 322; (e) Food and Agriculture, JCS Memo 329; (f) Labor, JCS Memo 333; (g) Coal, JCS Memo 339; (h) Oil, JCS Memo 347; (i) Internal Trade, JCS Memo 348; (i) Foreign Trade, JCS Memo 349; (k) Control of Educational Institutions in Germany, JCS Memo 309; and (1) Removal of German Officials and Civilians in Territories Formerly under German Control, JCS Memo 341.83

The recent revision of JCS 1067 (IPCOG 1/4) (JCS 1067/6 as amended by JCS 1067/8)⁸⁴ contains adequate treatment of the policy questions raised in the unprocessed draft directives.

There is set forth in the Enclosure hereto a list of such draft directives and the appropriate paragraphs of JCS 1067/6, as amended by JCS 1067/8 dealing with their subject matter.

ordinating Committee (Dunn) to the Secretary of State, March 24, p. 474.

a This memorandum was included as Appendix "A" to a report by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee for Europe which was designated SWNCC 14/1, dated June 21, 1945. In an action designated SWNCC 14/2, the Statewar-Navy Coordinating Committee approved SWNCC 14/2, the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee approved SWNCC 14/1. This memorandum was transmitted to London in instruction 5847, August 6, 1945, not printed.

See the report of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee for Europe, p. 426, and the memorandum by the Chairman of the State-War-Navy Co-⁸⁴ JCS 1067/6 was the same as IPCOG 1, April 26, 1945, "Directive to Commander in Chief of United States Forces of Occupation Regarding the Military Government of Germany", p. 484. JCS 1067/8 amended JCS 1067/6 as indicated in the memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, May 10, p. 509.

With the exception of the draft directive on War Criminals (JCS Memo 332) now in the course of preparation and except as noted below, it is not believed necessary to provide the United States Representative on EAC with further expression of U.S. policy on these matters. It is suggested that Ambassador Winant be advised that the recent revision of JCS 1067 adequately treats the policy questions raised in the draft directives and that it is not believed necessary to transmit further expressions of U.S. policy on these matters at this time.

As to the Removal of German Officials and Civilians in Territories Formerly under German Control (JCS Memo 341), arrangements should be made between the Control Council and the governments of the liberated countries in which such persons are found, and in the case of Austria with the Allied Administration there, concerning the repatriation to Germany of such persons. In the absence of such arrangements, a zone commander may arrange with appropriate authorities in any liberated country for the repatriation of such persons into his zone.

For the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee:
H. Freeman Matthews
Acting Chairman

Washington, September 6, 1945—8 p. m.

7667. Reurtel 9015, Sept. 4. State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee has approved "Additional requirements" except for Art. 38.90 Committee believes this article is not a requirement to be imposed upon Germans and consequently not appropriate for inclusion in agreement directed to Germans.

26 For the report on the work of the European Advisory Commission, dated September 10, see p. 544.

³⁹ In telegram 9397, September 3, 8 p. m., from London, not printed, Ambassador Winant reported that the French Representative to the Commission in a letter of September 10 had informed him of the French Government's approval of the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements (740.00119 EAC/9-1345).

This final formal meeting of the Commission was never held. For documentation regarding the dissolution and final report of the Commission, see pp. 539 ff.
88 Not printed.

On July 7, 1945, the agreement on additional requirements to be imposed on Germany and the accompanying report by the European Advisory Commission were circulated in the Informal Policy Committee on Germany for consideration by the Committee and for reference to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for comment from a military point of view. This Govt believes Control Council is now proper place for negotiating subject matter of Art. 38 which relates exclusively to arrangements between Occupying Powers. Our policy is contained in draft directive on renegades and quislings which was sent to you for use in EAC negotiations (Dept instruction 5546, May 31 91). This draft directive will be submitted to Control Council for negotiation.

For your information and guidance we feel that Art. 38 might compel us to deliver substantial numbers of persons over to political persecution. Draft directive provides for use of discretion on part of commanding general to refuse delivery of individuals not legitimately indictable as renegades and traitors, a position we wish to maintain out of considerations of decency and humanity.

Repeated to Murphy with instruction to use own discretion as to publication in toto or in part provided deletion is acceptable to other Govts.92

No. 25310

London, September 8, 1945. [Received September 18.]

Sir: I have the honor to transmit copies of the U.S. draft Directive on United Nations' Renegades and Quislings 93 which has been circulated in the European Advisory Commission, for information only, as E.A.C. (45) 64, September 6, 1945.

This revised draft of a Directive on the same subject circulated by the British Delegation 94 was sent to London with the Department's formal Policy Committee on Germany, consideration of the agreement on additional requirements was transferred to the State-War-Navy Coordinating ditional requirements was transferred to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee. On September 1, the Joint Chiefs of Staff informed SWNCC that there was no objection from the military point of view to the agreement.

Article 38 of the agreement read as follows: "Any person referred to in subparagraph 36 (b) above who may be apprehended or surrendered to the Allied Representatives will be handed over immediately, on demand, to the Government of the United Nation concerned." The persons referred to in paragraph 36 (b) included "any national of any of the United Nations who is alleged to have committed an offence against his national law and who may at any time have committed an offence against his national law and who may at any time be named or designated by rank, office or employment by the Allied Representatives".

Ante, p. 515.

⁹² In his telegram 440, September 4, 5 p. m., from Berlin, the United States Political Adviser for Germany reported that the British were strongly in favor of publishing in toto the agreement on additional requirements (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-445).

instruction No. 5546 of May 31, 1945, for the guidance of the U.S. Representative on the European Advisory Commission. It was decided not to circulate this Directive until the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany had been signed in the Commission and approved by the Soviet Government. Article 38 of the Agreement, which had been introduced by the Soviet Delegation, had been approved by the Commission before the U.S. Delegation received the draft Directive, and to have reopened the discussions on the basis of paragraph 5 of the Directive would undoubtedly have further delayed the signing of the Agreement. The U.S. Delegation was most anxious to have the Agreement signed and felt that the implementation of Article 38 of the Agreement could be worked out in Berlin, where the U.S. Representative on the Control Council would of course be guided by the policy set forth in the Directive.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador: E. Allan Lightner, Jr. Secretary, U.S. Delegation European Advisory Commission

"I am instructed to inform you that the US Government has approved the agreement of July 25 on certain additional requirements to be imposed on Germany except for article 38 which my Government believes is not appropriate for inclusion in a document directed to the Germans. In view of the fact that this subject relates exclusively to arrangements between the occupying powers and the fact that the EAC is no longer active my Government considers that the Control Council in Berlin is now the proper place for negotiating the subject treated in article 38."

64. CERTAIN ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS TO BE IMPOSED ON GERMANY

The Council had before them CONL/P(45)34.96 General Sokolovsky 97 referred to Article 38, which had been omitted at the instance of the U.S. Delegation. He was willing to sign the proclamation now but expressed the hope that the U.S. Delegation might see their way later to publish Article 38.

- (64) The Members of the Council:
- a. approved and signed the proclamation; 98
- b. took note of General Sokolovsky's suggestion concerning Article 38;
- c. took note that as a German text was not yet completed a published promulgation of the proclamation throughout Germany would have to be postponed for a few days.

[Twenty-three United States draft directives were circulated in the European Advisory Commission. Draft directives 1–21 were presented for consideration by the Commission, while draft directives 22 and 23 were circulated in the Commission for information only. None of these draft directives was acted upon by the Commission. Unless otherwise indicated, they are not printed.

IV. Report on the Work of the E.A.C.

Mr. Saksin proposed that, in view of the action taken at Potsdam, the E.A.C. prepare a summary of its work. The Berlin communiqué 9a had expressed a high opinion of the work of the E.A.C., and mentioned that it had successfully tackled the work entrusted to it. Mr. Saksin stated that, as a matter of fact, it has performed many complicated tasks since October 1943. It has completed eleven documents; its members have spent 520 hours in 111 meetings. All this work has been justified by the work accomplished. Its great value has been that it has been one of the few existing organs where, in a consistently friendly atmosphere, and [an] attempt has been made to reach agreement on important problems. Mr. Saksin suggested that the Secretary-General, assisted by experts from the four Delegations, be asked to draw up a report of the Commission's work and that the report be completed within about two weeks. Mr. Saksin circulated a memorandum (not enclosed) proposing a preliminary outline for drawing up such a report.

The Commission accepted Mr. Saksin's proposal and agreed to study his memorandum.¹⁰

The meeting adjourned at 2020 hours.

Viscount Hood of the British Foreign Office to Mr. Philip Mosely, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

London, 27 October, 1945.

DEAR PHIL: I suggest that we should try to complete the Report on the work of the European Advisory Commission.

^{9a} For text of the Berlin Communiqué, released to the press on August 2, 1945, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1499, or Department of State Bulletin, August 5, 1945, p. 153.

¹⁰ Memorandum not printed. On August 17, 1945, at an informal meeting, the European Advisory Commission agreed that the Acting Secretary General of the Commission (Lt. M. L. Boggs) would draft a report based on the USSR proposal and would submit the draft to a committee of experts representing the four Delegations. The Acting Secretary General's first draft, not printed, was accepted by the committee of experts on August 27. The Committee's draft report was referred to the Commission for approval on August 31 (EAC File Lot 52M64).

You will remember that at the informal meeting of the Commission on the 31st August, general approval was given to the Report and the Acting Secretary General circulated on the 6th September a text ^{10a} which incorporated the suggestions made and agreed at the meeting. In his covering note ¹¹ Lieutenant Boggs drew attention to certain outstanding points and the United States Representative circulated on the 8th September a memorandum ¹¹ proposing certain further amendments arising from the fact that the United States Government did not approve Article 38 of the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany.¹²

It was proposed that the final text should be approved at a formal meeting of the Commission, but as that meeting never took place, I suggest, that we should now agree between ourselves the few outstanding points and arrange with Lancaster House for the circulation of the Report to the four Delegations.

The points mentioned in the Acting Secretary General's note of the 6th September might, I suggest, be dealt with as follows:

(1) the last sentence of the report 13 should be amended to read as follows:—

"This recommendation was communicated to and approved by the Provisional Government of the French Republic."

(2) The date of 12th September 1945 should appear at the foot of the report.

(3) Under Item 9 in Annex II the following dates should be inserted: 14

French approval: 11th September 1945 United States approval: 8th September 1945 (except for Article 38)

^{10a} Not printed; for the final version of the Report on the Work of the European Advisory Commission, see p. 544.
¹¹ Not printed.

¹² For text of the agreement between the Governments of the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and France on certain additional requirements to be imposed on Germany, signed on July 25, 1945, at a meeting of the European Advisory Commission in London, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 1011.

as follows: "In accordance with this recommendation [the recommendation of the Potsdam Conference that the European Advisory Commission be dissolved], which was communicated to and approved by the Provisional Government of the French Republic, the Commission met for the last time on September, 1945, and recorded its dissolution."

¹⁴ In the draft report of September 6, item 9 to Annex II, left blank the dates of French and United States approval of the agreement on certain additional requirements to be imposed on Germany.

(4) On page 2 the number of formal meetings should be shown as 20.15

I further suggest that we should adopt the amendments proposed by the United States Representative in his memorandum of 8th September.

I enclose a copy of the report showing the amendments suggested above and I should be grateful if you would let me know whether you agree that this should be the final English text. If so, the French and Russian texts might be similarly amended and then the three texts with Annex I and maps can be sent to each delegation.

I am writing in similar terms to Saksin and Gros.¹⁶

Yours ever.

The First Secretary of the British Embassy (Maclean) to the Assistant Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs (Leverich)

Washington, November 5, 1945.

DEAR LEVERICH: I write, in confirmation of our telephone conversation, to tell you the answer we have now received from the Foreign Office to the question which you put to me some time ago regarding the demise of the European Advisory Commission.

The Foreign Office tell us that the E.A.C. went into liquidation without formally recording its dissolution. It held an informal meeting on August 31st at which it decided to hold a last formal meeting for the purpose of approving a report of its work and recording its dissolution. This meeting has however not been held, though I understand the Foreign Office will try to get the record tidied up in some way.

The Potsdam Communiqué, of course, only recommended dissolution but this expression was, we understand, deliberately used in order to meet French susceptibilities. The French have since stated that they agree with the recommendation. Thus there is no doubt that all four Governments do definitely regard the Commission as dissolved.

Yours sincerely,

D. D. MACLEAN

¹⁵ The draft report of September 6 fixed the number of formal E.A.C. meetings at 21, presumably in anticipation of a final meeting to mark the dissolution of the Commission and approve the Report.

[London,] November 17, 1945.

- 1. Mr. Saksin called, at his request, to discuss the status of the final report of the work of the E.A.C. In this connection I had written to him on November 1,¹⁷ as well as to Lord Hood and Professor Gros, approving, on behalf of the Ambassador, the suggestions for revision contained in Lord Hood's letter of October 27.
- 2. Mr. Saksin urged strongly, on behalf of Mr. Gousev, 18 that the draft report dated September 6 be approved without change. The first reason which he advanced was that the Commission had not met since September 6 and was now assumed to be defunct and that it would be embarrassing and inappropriate for the Commission now to appear to be renewing its activity through presenting a report to the four Governments. To this I replied that the completion of the report did not in itself involve any new activity on the part of the Commission since the report was merely a summary of its previous activity. The report itself could be dated September 11, the day following that on which the approval of the Agreement on Additional Requirements had been completed; thus it would be clear that the activity of the Commission, even in the matter of exchanging approval of that Agreement, had been completed on September 11, the date on which the Council of Foreign Ministers had begun its sessions. 19
- 3. It soon became clear that Mr. Saksin's real objection was to the inclusion in the report of the proposed U.S. amendment of September 8 (page 3 of the draft report) referring to the failure of the U.S. Government to approve Article 38 of the Agreement on Additional Requirements. Mr. Saksin implied that his Ambassador had not notified his Government of Mr. Winant's letter of September 8 ²⁰ approving the Agreement with the exception of Article 38, and that it would now be most embarrassing for this reservation to appear in the final report of the Commission.
- 4. I emphasized to Mr. Saksin that the report would be incomplete and misleading unless certain changes were made in the September 6 draft in order to make it factually correct as of September 11. I pointed out that apart from the reference to the U.S. reservation on Article 38, certain corrections would in any case be necessary. In order to find out exactly what final changes Mr. Saksin had in mind,

I offered to go over the text of the draft report with him and to write down the final changes as he would like them.

5. The changes would be as follows:

a) In the last paragraph on page 2 to read "20 formal" instead of "21 formal" meetings.

b) At the end of the next to the last sentence of paragraph 2 on page 3 insert the following words: "with the exception of the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be imposed on Germany, which, as of this date, is under consideration by the Governments concerned (See Appendix II, paragraph 9)."

c) Page 9, final paragraph, should read as follows: "This recommendation was communicated to and approved by the Provisional Government of the French Republic" (as proposed by Lord Hood in his letter of October 27).

d) On page 9 the date would appear as "6th September, 1945".

- e) Appendix II, page 2, paragraph 9, omit any reference to French and U.S. approval of the Agreement on Additional Requirements, leaving only the references to U.K. and Soviet approval.
- 6. In conclusion I explained to Mr. Saksin that I would present his observations to Mr. Winant and would inform him as soon as possible of Mr. Winant's opinion concerning them. I made it clear that I was not agreeing to the changes suggested in paragraph 5 above or to the principle of dating the report as of September 6.

[In identical letters to Viscount Hood of the British Foreign Office, André Gros of the French Embassy in the United Kingdom, and G. F. Saksin, Counselor of the Soviet Embassy in the United Kingdom, dated November 29, 1945, Mr. Philip Mosely suggested slight revisions of the textual changes proposed by Viscount Hood in his letter of October 27, page 540. In a letter dated January 18, 1946, Viscount Hood informed Mr. Mosely that Saksin, Gros, and himself agreed to the proposals set forth in Mr. Mosely's letter of November 29. Report on the Work of the European Advisory Commission 21

Section I: Organisation and Procedure of the Commission

The European Advisory Commission was established by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the ²¹ Transmitted to the Department by the Office of the United States Political Adviser for Germany at Frankfurt in despatch 537, November 25, 1947. This despatch says in part: "The American Embassy in London has informed this

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics pursuant to an agreement concluded on 1st November, 1943, at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers.²² The Conference decided that the Commission would be composed of representatives of the three Powers, assisted where necessary by civilian and military advisers; that it would have its seat in London, where a joint Secretariat would be established; and that the Presidency would be held in rotation by the representatives of the three Powers.

The principal terms of reference of the Commission were defined as follows:-

(1) "The Commission will study and make recommendations to the three Governments upon European questions connected with the termination of hostilities which the three Governments may consider appropriate to refer to it"

(2) "As one of the Commission's first task the three Governments desire that it shall, as soon as possible, make detailed recommendations to them upon the terms of surrender to be imposed upon each of the European States with which any of the three Powers are at war, and upon the machinery required to ensure the fulfilment of those terms " In its study of these matters, the Commission was directed to take into account relevant information furnished by the three Governments, as well as the experience already gained in the imposition and enforcement of unconditional surrender upon Italy.

(3) "Representatives of the Governments of other United Nations will, at the discretion of the Commission, be invited to take part in meetings of the Commission when matters especially affecting their interests are under discussion."

As a result of the scope and complexity of problems connected with the surrender, occupation and control of Germany, and as a result of the way in which military operations in Europe developed, the European Advisory Commission has in practice, with the approbation of the member Governments, concentrated its attention primarily upon German and Austrian questions.

The following were appointed as Representatives of their Governments on the Commission: Mr. J. G. Winant, Ambassador of the United States; Mr. F. T. Gousev, Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and Sir William Strang (later Sir R. I. Campbell), of the United Kingdom Foreign Office.

On 11th November, 1944, the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics invited the Provisional Government of the French Republic to become a member of the Commission.²³ Upon the acceptance of this invitation the French Ambassador in London, M. Massigli, took his seat in the Commission for the first time at the formal meeting held on 27th November, 1944.

Each Representative was assisted by such political, military and other advisers and experts as his Government found it practical to provide for the purpose. These advisers and experts varied from time to time according to the nature of the problems under discussion. As a general rule, each Representative was accompanied at meetings of the Commission by one or two advisers who participated in the discussions as required.

The Commission had at its disposal a combined Secretariat, consisting of a Secretary-General, officials appointed by certain Delegations, and a small staff of interpreters, translators and clerks. The Secretary-General was in charge of the Secretariat and was responsible to the Commission for its work. The Secretariat had its seat in Lancaster House, which was also the meeting-place of the Commission. Expenses incurred as "common service charges," which were not large, were shared equally among the three, later four, Governments, while each Government paid the salaries of its own nationals serving in the Secretariat.

The duties of the Secretariat comprised the following: (1) oral interpretations at meetings (2) translation, reproduction and circulation of documents, (3) arrangement and custody of the official records, (4) preparation of the Minutes of formal meetings and of the Secretary General's notes of informal meetings.

The Chairmanship of the Commission was held in rotation in the following order: Mr. Winant, Mr. Gousev, Sir William Strang (later Sir R. I. Campbell), M. Massigli. Each Chairman presided for a term of one month, from the 14th of January, 1944 (the date of the first formal meeting).

English and Russian were established as official languages of the Commission, with equal validity. When the French Representative took his seat in the Commission he informed his colleagues that, in order to expedite business, but without thereby creating a precedent, he would normally speak in English and would use French when occasion arose for a more precise statement. After the French Representative joined the Commission, Agreements were signed in the English, Russian and French languages, all three texts being authentic.

The Commission decided at its preliminary meeting on 15th December, 1945, [1943] that its proceedings, minutes and documents would be secret, and that members of the Delegations and of the Secretariat would have no dealings with the Press. Such public statements as were to be issued by or on the recommendation of the Commission had first to be approved by the Commission as a whole.

In general the main work of negotiation in the Commission was carried on by the Representatives themselves, without delegation of authority to committees. The Commission, however, did have two formally constituted committees serving under it.

The Establishment Committee, consisting of the Secretary General, as Chairman, and three members, one from each Delegation, was formed on 18th February, 1944, for the purpose of making recommendations with regard to expenses incurred at Lancaster House and the work of the Secretariat.

The Allied Consultation Committee consisting of one civilian and one military member from each Delegation, was formed on 7th December, 1944, for the purpose of facilitating consultation between the Commission and certain European Allied Governments on various matters especially affecting the latter. The work of this Committee is described in greater detail in Section III below.

In addition to these two Committees, ad hoc committees of experts were appointed from time to time and charged with various special and technical tasks.

Meetings of the Commission were called by the Chairman at the request of any Delegation. Although three of the four Representatives were Ambassadors in London and in this capacity had heavy responsibilities aside from their duties in connection with the European Advisory Commission, the Representatives at all times held themselves at the disposal of their colleagues.

The Commission held 20 formal and 97 informal meetings. A preliminary and informal session was held on 15th December, 1943, for the purpose of settling questions of procedure. At the first formal meeting, convened on 14th January, 1944, the decisions of the preliminary session were confirmed and formal meetings continued to be held regularly from that date until 23rd March, 1944. Minutes of these formal meetings were prepared by the Secretary General in draft form and circulated to the Delegations for amendment and approval, after which they were distributed in final form. Thereafter the Commission conducted all its discussions without formal minutes in a series of informal sessions; and formal meetings were convened only for the purpose of signing Agreements or establishing a formal record of other proceedings. The minutes of formal meetings at which Agreements were signed were prepared in advance and signed by the Representatives at the meeting itself. While no minutes of informal meetings were circulated, the Secretary General summarized the proceedings of these sessions in a "Secretary General's note of an informal meeting," copies of which were retained in the files of the Secretariat and made available to any Delegation upon request.

The Commission prepared and recommended to the Governments twelve formal Agreements, the texts of which, together with the Minutes of the meetings at which the documents were signed, are attached [Annex 1].24 These Agreements had their inception in memoranda or draft agreements submitted to the Commission by the various Delegations. Such proposals were the subject of careful study by each Delegation and of thorough and frank discussion in meetings of the Commission. As a result of this detailed examination and exchange of views on each proposal, amendments and revisions were made until a text unanimously approved by the Representatives was The final agreed text was signed by the Representatives and transmitted, usually under cover of a brief report, to the Governments for their consideration and approval. Each Government communicated its approval of an Agreement to its Representative, who then notified the other Representatives by letter. All Agreements signed in the Commission have been approved without amendment by all the Governments concerned, except that the United States Government considered that Article 38 of the Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be imposed on Germany should be referred to the Control Council in Berlin for consideration. The Commission has prepared Summaries of most of the signed Agreements for communication to the Representatives of the chiefly interested European Allied Governments, and also for simultaneous publication in the four capitals.

Continuous contact of the four Representatives has enabled them to consider informally a range of problems considerably wider than that of the Agreements which have actually been signed, and to acquaint their Governments with the views of other Governments on many aspects of the treatment of Germany. For example the Commission has discussed, among other topics, restitution, the status of foreign correspondents in Germany, the protection of United Nations nationals in Germany, and a general Directive on the Treatment of Germany in the Initial Post-Defeat Period. Members of the Commission have studied the drafts presented by their colleagues on such matters as mutual exchange of intelligence information pertaining to Germany, foreign representation in Germany, and directives which were prepared with a view to possible issuance by the Governments to the Commanders-in-Chief in Germany and which dealt with a wide variety of problems related to the political, economic and military control of Germany. The Commission, however, had no time to give detailed consideration to all these matters.

Mutual confidence between members of the Commission, built up over many months of frank discussion, has facilitated the removal of difficulties which might otherwise have hindered the full cooperation of the Allies.

SECTION II: AGREEMENTS SIGNED BY THE COMMISSION

A. SURRENDER, OCCUPATION AND CONTROL OF GERMANY

(1) Unconditional Surrender of Germany

At the first formal meeting the Commission agreed that its initial task should be that of drawing up the terms of surrender of Germany and devising machinery for their enforcement. Each of the Delegations (United Kingdom, United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) accordingly prepared draft proposals on this subject. The United Kingdom Delegation proposed a "Draft German Armistice" (15th January, 1944)²⁵ based on the principle of unconditional surrender and designed to confer on the Allied Powers far-reaching political and military authority. In presenting this draft, which comprised 70 articles, the United Kingdom Delegation emphasized the view that whatever form of surrender was ultimately imposed upon Germany in the light of the conditions prevailing at the time, a relatively long armistice document would in the initial stages of discussion be the most convenient way of ensuring thorough consideration of all the issues involved. The United States Delegation circulated two documents. The first of these (25th January 1944),26 in the form of a memorandum rather than a draft instrument ready for signature, comprised 27 provisions to be imposed on Germany, while the second, a "Draft Instrument and Acknowledgment of Unconditional Surrender" (6th March, 1944),27 contained thirteen general articles under which the Allies assumed supreme military and political authority over Germany. The United States Delegation proposed that this instrument be accompanied by proclamations and orders setting forth in greater detail the more specific requirements which Germany would be obliged to carry out. The Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics circulated (18th February, 1944)28 "Draft Terms of Surrender" in 20 articles. This document was primarily military in character designed to effect the cessation of hostilities, the disarament of the German forces, the surrender of military material and the occupation of Germany. The final article, however, provided that the Allies would present additional political, economic and military requirements connected with the surrender of Germany which would undertake to carry them out unconditionally. The Commission discussed these proposals at considerable length in a series of formal and informal meetings and as a result unanimously resolved to draft a surrender instrument which would be relatively brief and predominantly military in character, while reserving to the Allied Governments complete freedom to impose subsequently such additional terms as might be deemed necessary. It was understood that many of the detailed political and economic provisions which had appeared in the initial United Kingdom proposal and which were not to be included in an instrument of a relatively brief character, could be incorporated in agreed form in a general order or other document of a similar nature. (See below, "Agreement on Additional Requirements.")

With the assistance of a committee of experts, which considered the military terms in all the draft documents on the unconditional surrender of Germany, the Commission analysed, compared and coordinated the relevant provisions of the proposals before it, and as a result formulated, article by article, a single tentative draft of the surrender instrument. This document, after undergoing successive revisions and modifications at the hands of a committee of experts, a drafting committee, and the Commission itself, emerged later as the approved text of the "Unconditional Surrender of Germany," signed by the Representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on 25th July, 1944.29 The accompanying Report by the Commission 30 explained that the Surrender Instrument was predominantly military, comprising an unqualified acknowledgment of the complete defeat of Germany, a short series of military articles providing for the cessation of hostilities and for disarmament, and a general article setting forth the supreme authority of the Allies and binding Germany to carry out unconditionally such further requirements as the Allies might impose. The Report also contained an interpretation of Article 2 (b) of the Instrument and informed the Governments of the action which the Commission contemplated taking in the matter of consultation with other Allied Governments. [E.A.C.(44) Meeting].

By an Agreement signed on 1st May, 1945, 31 by the Representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, the "Unconditional Surrender of Germany" was amended to allow for full participation of the Provisional Government of the French Republic in the imposition of surrender terms upon Germany. [E.A.C. (45) 1st Meeting.]

(2) Declaration regarding the Defeat of Germany and the Assumption of Supreme Authority with respect to Germany

While the "Unconditional Surrender of Germany" was prepared on the assumption that it would be signed on the one hand by the Allied Representatives and on the other by representatives of the German Government and German High Command, the Commission recognized in its initial discussions that the complete defeat of the German armed forces might result in there being at the close of hostilities no Central Government in Germany capable of signing a general surrender or giving effect to the requirements of the Allies. As military operations developed, the possibility of such a situation arising became more probable, and the Commission accordingly undertook to recast the "Unconditional Surrender of Germany" in the form of a Declaration to be issued, without German signature, by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic. On the basis of the "Unconditional Surrender of Germany," a United Kingdom proposal circulated on 30th March, 1945,32 and amendments to the latter proposed by the other Delegations, the Commission drafted and on 12th May, 1945, signed the "Declaration regarding the Defeat of Germany and the Assumption of Supreme Authority with respect to Germany." 33 [E.A.C. (45) 3rd Meeting.]

Following a number of local military surrenders, brief unconditional surrender terms were signed by the German military authorities provisionally at Rheims on 7th May and finally at Berlin on 8th May, 1945.34 The Declaration was approved by the four Governments by 21st May, 1945. The Commission agreed on 4th June to recommend to the four Governments that the four Commanders-in-Chief meet in Berlin for the purpose of signing and publishing the Declaration. In accordance with this recommendation, the Declaration was signed and issued at Berlin on 5th June.

(3) Zones of Occupation in Germany and the Administration of Greater Berlin.

From March to September, 1944, the Commission considered the problem of zones of military occupation in Germany and the administration of Greater Berlin. The Commission had before it basic proposals on this subject presented by the United Kingdom Delegation on 15th January, 1944,35 by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Delegation on 18th February, 1944,36 and by the United States Delegation on 12th June, 1944,37 as well as various revised proposals circulated at informal meetings. The first stage in reaching a complete agreement was the signature by the Representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on 12th September, 1944, of a Protocol 38 which defined the boundaries of three zones of occupation in Germany within her frontiers as they were on 31st December, 1937, delimited three sectors of occupation in the Berlin area, and provided for the establishment of an Inter-Allied Governing Authority for Berlin. The Protocol also provided that the Eastern zone in Germany and the North Eastern sector of Berlin would be occupied by armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, but did not allocate the other zones or the sectors in Berlin as between the United Kingdom and United States forces. [E.A.C. (44) 9th Meeting.] A further Agreement signed in the Commission on 14th November, 1944,39 made certain alterations in the boundaries between the North Western and South Western zones, assigned the North Western zone in Germany, as well as the North Western part of Berlin, to the United Kingdom, and assigned the South Western zone, as well as the Southern part of Berlin, to the United States. [E.A.C. (44) 12th Meeting.] The Crimea Conference decided that a French zone in Germany should be formed from the United Kingdom and the United States zones and referred the matter to the European Advisory Commission for implementation.40 An Agreement signed in the Commission on 26th July, 1945,41 defined the boundaries of the French zone, fixed the new limits of the United Kingdom and United States zones, and provided for French participation in the administration of Greater Berlin. On account of the physical conditions prevailing in the area, the Commission did not attempt in this Agreement to fix the boundaries of a French sector of occupation in Berlin, but recommended that the limits of this sector, which would have to be formed from the United Kingdom and United States sectors on account of the greater destruction in the Soviet area, be determined by the Control Council in Berlin. [E.A.C. (45) 7th Meeting.] On the date this Agreement was signed, an exchange of letters took place between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic regarding a possible future adjustment between the French zone and the United States and United Kingdom zones of occupation.42 The United States and French Representatives also exchanged letters relating to the use by the French authorities of certain records located at Karlsruhe and to the free passage to be accorded United States forces across and above the French zone.43

(4) Control Machinery in Germany

Between February and November, 1944, the Commission considered the subject of Allied machinery required for effective control of Germany. At this stage the three Governments were not yet prepared to formulate in detail the content of their policy towards Germany, but the Commission considered it essential to agree in advance on machinery through which the Allies could carry out in Germany whatever policies the Governments might finally lay down. On the basis of a number of proposals circulated by the United Kingdom, United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Delegations, the Commission undertook to work out an agreement on control machinery which could be put into operation whether or not a German central authority existed at the time of surrender. The Agreement on Control Machinery signed on 14th November, 1944,44 provided for a tripartite Control Council and subsidiary agencies through which the Allies would exercise supreme authority in the period during which Germany would be carrying out the basic requirements of unconditional surrender. The purpose of these agencies comprised the control and disarmament of Germany, including the most urgent tasks of economic disarmament, the abolition of the Nazi regime, and the preparation of conditions for the establishment in Germany of organs based on democratic principles. [E.A.C.(44) 11th Meeting.]

For a description of this exchange of letters, see ibid. For text, see TIAS No. 3070, or 5 UST (pt. 2) 2063.

An additional Agreement signed by the Representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on 1st May, 1945,45 provided for participation of the Provisional Government of the French Republic in the control machinery on an equal basis. [E.A.C.(45) 2nd Meeting.]

(5) Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany

From the beginning of the discussions of German surrender, it was realized that effective control over Germany would eventually require an agreement supplementing the predominantly military clauses of the Surrender Instrument by providing for joint action of the Allies in the political and economic spheres. The Commission agreed in March, 1944, that certain broad political and economic requirements should be imposed upon Germany at the time of, or shortly after, the surrender, and the way for such action was prepared by Article 13(b) of the Declaration issued on 5th June, 1945. After preliminary discussions in late 1944 and early 1945, the Commission during May and June, 1945, worked out a long document embodying some of the more urgent of these requirements. The "Agreement on Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany" was signed in the Commission on 25th July, 1945,46 and submitted to the four Governments with the recommendation that it be transmitted, after approval by the four Governments, to the Allied Representatives in Berlin for their guidance. The Agreement covered a wide range of matters of common concern to the four Powers, including the abolition of Nazi and militaristic organizations, surrender of war criminals, and joint control over German foreign relations, production, trade, finance, transportation and movement of persons. The accompanying Report 47 contained a number of interpretations and explanations of certain articles in the text of the Agreement. [E.A.C. (45) 6th Meeting.] When signing the Report the United Kingdom Representative made an oral statement regarding paragraph 3(d).

B. OCCUPATION AND CONTROL OF AUSTRIA

On the basis of the Moscow Declaration on Austria of November, 1943, and a similar statement subsequently issued by the French Committee of National Liberation,48 the Commission, at an early stage in its discussions concerning Germany, agreed that separate arrangements would be concluded for the occupation and control of Austria. Preliminary consideration of these subjects was begun in 1944 and proceeded intensively in April, May and June, 1945.

(1) Control Machinery in Austria

On the basis of draft proposals submitted by the various Delegations. the Commission formulated, and on 4th July, 1945, signed the "Agreement on Control Machinery in Austria," 49 which provided for an Allied Commission to exercise supreme authority until the establishment of a freely elected Austrian Government recognized by the four Powers. The control machinery for Austria differed from that set up in Germany not only in the details of its structure, but also in its purposes, since the Allied organs in Austria were, in addition to the duty of enforcing the relevant provisions of the Declaration of 5th June, 1945, charged with the tasks of achieving the separation of Austria from Germany, securing the creation as soon as possible of a central Austrian administrative machine, and preparing the way for the establishment of a freely elected Austrian Government. [E.A.C.(45) 4th Meeting. When signing this Agreement, the United States Representative made an oral statement on the subject of Austrian reparations and parallel statements were subsequently made by the United Kingdom and French Representatives.

(2) Zones of Occupation in Austria and the Administration of the City of Vienna

After thorough study and discussion of the drafts submitted and the numerous issues involved, the Commission signed the "Agreement on Zones of Occupation in Austria and the Administration of the City of Vienna" on 9th July, 1945. Austria was divided into four zones of occupation, one of which was allocated to the armed forces of each of the four Powers, while the City of Vienna within the 1937 frontiers was likewise divided into sectors of occupation, with the Innere Stadt being occupied jointly and the City as a whole being subject to the administration of an Inter-Allied Governing Authority. Two aerodromes falling within the Soviet zone, in the vicinity of Vienna, were placed under the administrative and operational control of the United States and United Kingdom forces to facilitate the transport requirements of the British, United States and French Commanders-in-Chief. The accompanying Report of the Commission 51 contained a number

C. ARMISTICE WITH BULGARIA

During August, September and October, 1944, the Commission devoted much of its attention to the preparation of armistice terms for Bulgaria on the basis of drafts proposed by the Delegations.⁵² The discussions which resulted in the final Agreement on this subject were based in the later stages on a Soviet proposal. The Agreement with its accompanying Protocol was signed by the Representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on 22nd October, 1944.⁵³ [E.A.C. (44) 10th Meeting.] On the basis of a letter of the United States Representative of the same date,⁵⁴ letters were subsequently exchanged between the United Kingdom, the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Representatives regarding the manner in which Article 18 of the Armistice should be implemented following the cessation of hostilities with Germany.

SECTION III: CONSULTATION WITH THE EUROPEAN ALLIED GOVERNMENTS

In accordance with its terms of reference, the Commission decided to hold consultations with certain European Allied Governments on matters especially affecting their interests. In a letter of 25th July, 1944,55 the Chairman of the Commission invited the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland (the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics reserving its position in regard to the Polish Government in London) and Yugoslavia, and the Representatives in London of Greece and the French Committee of National Liberation, to submit to the Commission in writing such statements of their views or expositions of their special interests as they desired to make known concerning the terms of surrender for Germany and the machinery required to ensure the fulfilment of such terms. Pursuant to this invitation, basic memoranda were submitted to the Commission by the Governments of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway and Poland. 56 These memoranda (with the exception of the one submitted by the Polish Government in London, which was studied by the United Kingdom and United States experts alone) were studied by the experts of the three Delegations and considered by the Commission. Thereafter the Commission appointed on 7th December, 1944, the Allied Consultation Committee, under the Chairmanship of the Soviet member, Mr. Sobolev 57 (later Mr. Saksin). This Committee prepared a summary of the Instrument of Surrender 58 and held a series of joint meetings early in 1945 with the Representatives of Czechoslovakia; Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands (the Representatives of these three Governments, which had submitted virtually identical memoranda, attended meetings as a group); Norway; Yugoslavia; and Greece. At each such meeting, the Representative of one of the Allied Governments received a copy of the summary together with certain oral explanations. After the Representatives of the Allied Governments had studied the summary, further meetings were held at which these Representatives were furnished additional explanations in reply to questions which they desired to raise.

On 25th May, 1945, the Allied Consultation Committee held a joint meeting with the Representatives of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway and Yugoslavia and transmitted to them the text of the "Declaration Regarding the Defeat of Germany," which had been signed in the Commission on 12th May, 1945. An additional joint meeting on the subject of the Declaration was held on 8th June, 1945, with the Representatives of Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands for the purpose or replying to various questions raised by them. On 2nd June, the Committee transmitted to the Representatives of the seven Governments mentioned above summaries which it had prepared, and which had been approved by the Commission, on the zones of occupation in Germany and on control machinery for Germany.59

On 31st July, 1945, the Committee held a joint meeting with the Representatives of eight Governments, the seven previously consulted

The Allied Consultation Committee held 21 meetings, 11 of which were joint meetings with Representatives of the Allied Governments.

SECTION IV: DISSOLUTION OF THE COMMISSION

The communiqué of the Tripartite Conference in Berlin issued on 2nd August, 1945, contained the following paragraph concerning the European Advisory Commission:

"The conference also considered the position of the European Advisory Commission in the light of the agreement to establish the Council of Foreign Ministers. It was noted with satisfaction that the Commission had ably discharged its principal tasks by the recommendations that it had furnished for the terms of Germany's unconditional surrender, for the zones of occupation in Germany and Austria, and for the inter-Allied control machinery in those countries. It was felt that further work of a detailed character for the co-ordination of Allied policy for the control of Germany and Austria would in future fall within the competence of the Allied Control Council at Berlin and the Allied Commission at Vienna. Accordingly, it was agreed to recommend that the European Advisory Commission be dissolved."

This recommendation was communicated to and approved by the Provisional Government of the French Republic. 62

PARTICIPATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE OPERATION OF THE ALLIED COMMISSION FOR AUSTRIA; INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A GOVERNMENT FOR AUSTRIA ¹

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)

Washington, February 8, 1945—midnight.

509. A coalition of Austrian resistance elements of all the principal former political parties (except the Communists) into a Provisional Austrian National Committee is reported to have been formed in Vienna on December 14, 1944 and to have recently sent an emissary to seek recognition and aid in Paris where he was received at the Quai d'Orsay and the Soviet Embassy (but not at the British or American Embassies).²

This emissary is expected to return to Paris again in February. If he should wish to call at the Embassy, in your discretion please receive him and, without committing the United States in any way towards recognition of his group or the furnishing of supplies, hear any requests or statements he may wish to make and report them together with any information you may be able to obtain regarding the Provisional Committee or other resistance activities in Austria.³

Please consult . . . of OSS for further background information

² A note by James W. Riddleberger, Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs, directed to James C. Dunn, Director of the Office of European Affairs, is attached to the original of this telegram and reads: "Extensive O[ffice of] S[trategic] S[ervices] reports along the lines of paragraph 1 of this telegram have come from the OSS representative in Paris. We thought we had better find out more about it."

³ In telegram 1246, March 15, from Paris, Ambassador Caffery reported that an officer of the Embassy had talked with an emissary of the Provisorisches Oesterreichisches Nationalkomitee (POEN) on that date. The emissary described the POEN as a coalition of all active resistance elements in Austria with no political aim other than the establishment of a democratic republic. It hoped to set up an organization to represent it outside of Austria, and had plans for a committee in the United States. (863.01/3–1545) and possible introduction of the emissary. Do you know what attitude the French and Russians are taking towards the latter? Apparently the British do not know much about him yet but are now making strenuous efforts to find out more.

GREW

Archduke Otto to President Roosevelt

Paris, February 19, 1945.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I regret very much to have again to impose upon your kindness, but I do hope that you will understand that only the absolute necessity forces me again to turn to you.

The first reports of my brother Charles, as well as personal conversations with resistance leaders of inside Austria have given me the impression—I do not yet use the word certitude only because I try to be as cautious as possible—that it will be possible to prepare active guerilla-actions in the mountains as soon as the snow has disappeared and as soon as the conditions for such an action are fulfilled. For that purpose we shall need small arms, that can be dropped in certain areas by parachute. We will need furthermore men, to instruct our people in the use of these arms and in the latest progress of guerilla tactics. For that purpose we will need people of our own, who can talk with their nationals in their language, who know the customs of the place. These men should not be intelligence service people but clearly instructors and later on be able to act within the resistance forces.

It became clear to me, that with very few exceptions emigres could not be used, because they have been away too long.

In a night-long conference on the problem—after having eliminated the possibility to send people out from Austria for the reason that we need everyone in the country—we decided that we should try to get the permission to use reliable prisoners of war for that purpose. The idea was sustained by the fact, that the Russians have already parachuted several hundred communist-trained Austrian prisoners of war into the country in order to organize and lead the Austrian Communist Party, which operates under the name of Freedom Front.⁸ It was also decided, that these prisoners, if obtainable, should receive their training if possible here in France. A request made by me to the French is under favorable consideration and I am certain that they will give us as trainers officers from their own Forces of the Interior, who have done already the same thing before.

^{&#}x27;Ambassador Caffery reported in telegram 668, February 13, that Allen W. Dulles, OSS representative in Switzerland, had been in contact with the POEN emissary, whose pseudonym was Weiser, for over a year. Mr. Dulles was "96 percent sure that he is 'all right'," but was not certain how formidable the Austrian resistance was. On a recent visit to Paris, Weiser had been received by the Soviet Embassy and the French Ministry for Foreign Affairs, but the British Embassy had refused to see him. (863.01/2-1345)

Now I know of several Austrian prisoners of war in American camps in Arkansas, Mississippi and Kentucky, who are considered to be reliable and who have expressed their willingness to serve the cause of Austria. If therefore you should decide to fulfill our request and to give orders accordingly to the military authorities, may I suggest the following procedure: As soon as the decision is made in a favorable sense, my brother Felix, who has the names of the reliable prisoners should be authorised to proceed at once in great secrecy to these camps in order to speak with the soldiers and officers whose names he has. During that talk, other names can be added to the list by the reliable prisoners of war. If they volunteer for the duty, they should leave camp without delay and be brought to the Eastern Seaboard. If possible I would be most grateful, if the first batch could be sent by plane to France, so that their training could start at once. I would be also very grateful if I could be informed of their arrival in advance, so that I could be at hand when they come in. As soon as they are trained, which is estimated at three weeks, we could have them proceed to Austria through channels which we have.

I am in such a great hurry—and make this request before even being able to submit any concrete plans for further action—because the snow will be melting towards the third week of March, at which time we would need the first trained people. I want also to insist once again, that the Russians are doing these things in a great way. which no doubt entitles our side to do at least the same. I suggest for the job in America my brother Felix, because I am sure of his absolute discretion and his experience of the mentality of our people. I add also a note for him, in which I give him detailed instructions. As to the number of men needed I feel that even a few—we have the names of roughly twenty absolutely reliable men-would help, but that these men with their camp-experience shall be able to give us more people. As to the Agency to handle the matter, may I respectfully suggest that it could be the Army and not the OSS. Our people have had a rather unpleasant experience with the OSS in Switzerland and have found that representatives of that agency are sometimes lacking the necessary caution. In this connection I would be most grateful if on these matters an American Officer from the Headquarters here could establish liaison with me already now, so that everything should be ready once the men arrive. They know at the American Embassy always were [where?] to reach me. Finally. and I regret to have to raise the question, comes the fact that we have not the funds to provide for these people while they are here. The French give us the officers, some of my collaborators and myself will give them the necessary knowledge of necessities of our special work in the mountains, I hope that the U.S. Army will find it possible to spare somebody to train them in small arms, so that this side is provided for. What I would ask is whether it be possible that their equipment and living be provided by the U.S. Army.

May I ask also, whether it would be possible for you to let me know by cable through your Embassy here, naturally without any details. whether you can accede to my request or not.9

I am now working on a preliminary report on military, political and economic matters of Austria today, which I shall send you as soon as possible.

As to the general plan and to the suggestions which will derive from it, I must wait till my brother Charles will have returned. Then only do I hope to have all the necessary information and to see exactly how and on what conditions we can act.

Once again I want to tell you, dear Mr. President, my warmest thanks for all your kindness and interest in the cause of my country. I certainly am sorry to have to impose upon you so often and I hope, that your kindness and friendship will understand the great necessity under which I act.

With my warmest regards and all my best wishes to you, I am, dear Mr. President,

Yours very sincerely

tria to organize Austrian resistance. So far, however, it has not seen evidence of any coalition that would warrant or merit any support from this country that might be interpreted as constituting political recognition, or any formal recommendation by the Department of State to the military authorities that material aid be granted beyond such arrangements for the encouragement of individual acts of sabotage or other aids to military operations as the military authorities themselves may on their own initiative take to further military operations as such.

For your background information in connection with your 240, January 18, noon, the effort to form an Austrian battalion in the United States with War Department cooperation ended in failure largely as a result of the efforts of Archduke Otto to assume a position of leadership in the enterprise.

The Department of State to the British Embassy

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State has been following, in concert with the British Government, a policy of denying exit permits to Austrians now in the United States. If the British Government perceives no objection, the Department of State believes the time has now come to terminate the general ban on the exit of Austrians from the United States, and henceforth to grant exit permits to all Austrians applying for them, in the absence of security or other objections in individual cases.

In reaching this conclusion the Department has in mind the following factors:

The reasons which prompted the ban on exit permits for Austrians in the first place have now to a large degree ceased to exist in view of the progress of the war, and the Moscow Declaration. At the same time, positive reasons in favor of permitting the Austrians to leave are developing. Resistance movements in Austria have apparently been increasing in size and importance during recent weeks, and there is accumulating evidence that this resistance is becoming organized under a Provisional Austrian National Committee, generally referred to as POEN (Provisorisches Oesterreiches Nationalkomittee).

¹² John G. Erhardt.

¹³ For a definition of the scope of Mr. Erhardt's mission, and his relationship to the U.S. military authorities, as well as the basic outline of U.S. policy toward Austria, see the letter to him from the Secretary of State, April 3, p. 36.

There is some evidence that this Committee is becoming fairly well organized, comprises all important Austrian political elements from right to left, including former Christian Socialists, Social Democrats, Monarchists, and Communists, as well as other Austrians without definite Party affiliations. Its supporters appear to include practically all shades of Austrian political groupings, and are said to number perhaps 40,000 persons, nearly half of whom are in Vienna. Some of its men are reported to have infiltrated the Gestapo organization in Vienna, and others are reported practically to control the telegraph system and to be placed in other strategic parts of the Austrian economic and administrative systems, including the railways to some extent.

POEN has been endeavoring to establish contacts abroad and to establish representative committees in France, Switzerland, Great Britain and the United States. Its emissaries have been received at the Soviet Embassy in Paris, which is reported to have requested that a POEN representative be sent to Moscow and that a Soviet officer be sent to Austria as liaison with POEN. The French Government has apparently become greatly interested in POEN, and is reported to have discussed it at a recent Cabinet meeting. Foreign Minister Bidault is reported to be inclined to favor dealing solely with POEN representatives in France on all matters concerning Austria.

It is believed that representatives of POEN may have communicated with the Foreign Office in London.

An emissary sent from Austria from POEN has called at the American Embassy in Paris to express the desire of POEN to have two Austrians now in the United States, Hans Karl Sailer (Social Democrat, of the Austrian Labor Committee, New York) and Ernst Karl Winter (former Vice-Mayor of Vienna) go to France to assist POEN in its efforts to establish committees abroad.

A statement of the objectives of POEN, given to the American Embassy in Paris by its emissary, states emphatically that it is not seeking to establish itself as a government of Austria, but merely to organize resistance to the Germans. A copy of the Embassy's report on the interview is attached.¹⁴

While the Department of State does not, at least at this stage, regard the evidence as conclusive regarding either the character or the existence of POEN, or wish to take any steps to assist in the development of POEN, or to aid the activities or movements of other Austrian individuals or groups, it does consider that it would be desirable to refrain from placing any obstacles in the way of the development of such a resistance organization by the Austrians themselves.

¹⁴ Not printed.

It therefore considers it desirable at this time to alter its present practice regarding exit permits to allow these Austrians to leave the United States. To avoid charges of discrimination, it would prefer to accomplish this by removing the general ban on exit permits for Austrians, thus permitting all Austrians to leave this country except those who should be denied permits on their individual merits.

The Department of State would welcome a statement of British views in the premises.¹⁵

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

Verona,20 13 July 1945.

Dear Doc: In a conversation here last Sunday Hal Mack 21 discussed with me a scheme of his for dealing with the problem of the Renner Government. He has spoken to the Foreign Office and believes he has obtained its general approval. The scheme is to call together in Vienna as soon as possible after the entry of the Allied forces the political leaders of all the provinces, designated by the various provisional governments. These leaders would confer and bring forth names for a new national provisional government, which would take the place of the Renner Government. You will understand that what underlies this scheme is a basic opposition on Mack's part to the Renner Government. He has been opposed to it since its formation.

A somewhat similar idea is in the mind of Dr. Gruber, Landeshauptmann of Tyrol,22 judging from a memorandum which he addressed recently to Lt. Col. Watts,23 at that time the principal Military Government officer at Innsbruck. A copy of Dr. Gruber's memorandum is enclosed.²⁴ It is reported that Dr. Gruber has been the object of some criticism by Kunschak and Hurdes,25 as well as by Social Democrats, because of his reactionary attitude. He is the only leader of a provincial or local government in Austria, so far as I have been informed, who has expressed opposition to the Renner regime. Furthermore, with the entry of the French into Tyrol, it is doubtful whether Gruber will maintain his present position. At least he has expressed himself to our people in writing as opposed to having the French take over.

¹⁹ Dr. Renner was President of the Nationalrat, the lower house of the Austrian Parliament.

²⁰ The Political Adviser's Office had been moved to Verona on June 6 from Caserta where it had been set up on March 28.

21 William H. B. Mack, Political Adviser to the Commander in Chief, British Element, Allied Commission for Austria.

22 Dr. Karl Gruber, Governor of the province of Tyrol.

23 Lt. Col. John G. Watts.

²⁴ Not found in Department files.

²⁵ Dr. Felix Hurdes, General Secretary of the Austrian People's Party.

Early this month there were one or two articles in the British Army newspaper, Union Jack, and an announcement on the French-controlled Radio Vorarlberg, to the effect that the British and the U.S. were about to recognize the Renner Government. More recently, the London Daily Telegraph is reported to have published an item saying that the western powers were still "adamant" in their refusal to recognize Renner.

Obviously, the method and circumstances of the formation of the Renner Government were thoroughly objectionable, and the Communist element in it is probably appreciably larger and stronger than is warranted by its popular support. (Jean Lambert,26 who arrived in Linz from Vienna a few days ago, is reported to hold the opinion, whatever it may be worth, that if an election were held in Vienna now the Communists would get only 5% of the votes, while the Social Democrats would get 70% and the Christian Socials 25%.) On the other hand, at the present stage of things, an attempt to thrust the Renner Government aside might result in a deadlock and would probably accomplish nothing constructive in the end. Moreover, from a completely detached viewpoint, the present provincial governments of Austria have no more valid proof of popular support than the Renner Government has. Indeed the Renner regime is perhaps more representative than some of them. Lambert is said to be convinced that the regime has grown in influence in the last several weeks. Reports coming to us here indicate that it has the support of most Austrian politicians of any prominence.

In turning this whole problem over in my mind—so far as I can here in Verona before getting into Vienna and talking to people there—I have been giving some thought to an alternative plan of making two or three changes or additions to the Renner Government and then accepting it as the head of a central administrative machine and also as a provisional government until free elections can be held. The changes or additions could well be made through the procedure of a conference of the provincial leaders—a procedure which would be in line with Hal Mack's wishes even though he might have to be persuaded concerning the result. It would be logical to design the changes in the Government so as to make it representative of the whole of Austria instead of only Vienna. I would hope to see a conference of the provincial leaders called almost immediately upon the formal establishment of the Allied Commission.

Joe Gray ²⁷ reports from Salzburg today by telephone that the political leaders there, and in Upper Austria as well, are all intensely anxious to establish contact with those in Vienna and elsewhere as soon as possible, and to have a voice right away in the political reconstruction of the country as a whole. He feels, in addition, that if they were invited to participate in a national conference and permitted to express their views they might be satisfied with very minor changes in the direction of broadening the Renner Government.

It is possible that at this particular moment we might find the Communist leaders also ready to make certain concessions. Lambert reported that Koplenig 28 and Fischer 29 had lost a certain amount of standing with the Soviets because of their failure, so far, to muster the expected popular support, notably in factory elections in which the Communists polled under ten per cent. A recent OSS report from Salzburg, if true, casts a little additional light on the position of the Communists in Vienna. The report, obtained from "a well placed Austrian" recently in Vienna, is that the anticipated replacement of Marshal Tolbukhin by Marshal Koniev should be attributed not to the official reason, viz., that Tolbukhin's Third Ukrainian Army has by its fighting record earned early discharges, but rather to the alleged fact that Stalin was displeased with the lack of discipline among Tolbukhin's troops in their relations with the Viennese. (Lambert, who also referred to this expected change of command, stated that Colonel Pitersky, Tolbukhin's influential political adviser, will stay on in the same capacity with Koniev.)

Speaking of the position of the Communists in Vienna, you are doubtless familiar with the apparent paradox that regarding the nationalization of industry the Communist policy at present may be slightly to the right of the Social Democratic policy, though at present we do not know very much about the latter. It is sometimes suggested that the Communists wish to allow a capitalistic economy to continue in Austria and elsewhere for a couple of years for the purpose of discrediting it. However, this theory does not entirely jibe with recent speeches by Fischer and other Communist leaders, in which the advantages of private initiative in smaller enterprises is extolled in Rotary Club terms, while at the same time, more conventionally, nationalization is urged for large monopolistic enterprises (most of which have come into Nazi hands).

To come back to the question of the Renner Government, a prompt four party agreement on an enlarged provisional government would not only ease the political situation but would be of invaluable help in administering Austrian affairs. It seems to me that there is only one way to hope for tolerable functioning of the Allied Commission, with its four headed divisions, and that is for the Commission to call upon a provisional Austrian administration to submit proposals for legislation and for executive action. Agreement on necessary action could perhaps be reached in the Allied Commission on that basis without endless argumentation and delay.

What are your ideas?

Reasons given are first, that Koniev is not yet sufficiently recovered from his illness and second, that new instructions are desired from Moscow beforehand since published Potsdam report contains so little on Austria.³² Clark is requesting JCS (Joint Chiefs of Staff) to assist in bringing about early meeting. British and French commanders have made similar requests to their Govts. Meanwhile US forces in Vienna now consist of reconnaissance and maintenance units. 3210. General McCreery 34 has reported to British War Office that he met with General Clark, General Béthouart,35 the political advisers, on August 3 at Verona.

They agreed on points to be included in agenda for first meeting of four Commanders in Chief. Though no firm suggestion for date of Commander in Chief's meeting has yet been received from Koniev, the deputy commissioners hoped to discuss this agenda with their Russian colleague in Vienna August 4.

They agreed that, after settlement of questions of procedure, the chief point for discussion would be the setting up of a combined resources board to report on food and fuel situation in Austria in general and Vienna in particular, in time for consideration by four commanders 10 days later at their second meeting. They agreed that, pending consideration of this report and satisfactory agreement with Russians, they would neither assume responsibility for their respective sectors of Vienna nor agree to formal establishment of Kommandatura.

General Clark intends to bring up question of fraternization and the abolition of all existing restrictions. His object is to emphasize difference in treatment between Germany and Austria. Further, he wishes press to give publicity to this. General McCreery sees no objection but has impressed upon General Clark the mixed feelings over question of many wives in Great Britain and need for careful handling by press.

It was strongly represented by U.S., British, and French deputies that before food is imported by the Allies, surpluses should be drawn by Vienna from the surrounding area of Rumania, Lower Austria, and Hungary but the Russians insist that although the Allied Council could make recommendations, the four governments must decide on the use of Rumanian and Hungarian supplies.

In his letter Mr. Vyshinsky asserted that Soviet military authorities were not delaying a meeting of the four Commanders in Chief or the entrance of Allied garrison troops into Vienna. He pointed out that meetings of subordinate officers had been going on since July 28. "No objections against entrance of Allied troops into Vienna raised by Soviet commander. On contrary Allies have been advised that they could bring their troops into Vienna anytime they so desired." The meeting of the Commanders in Chief had been postponed at British request. Hoping to hurry an agreement, General Clark may suggest at the meeting which may take place next week that he will delay formal entry until the food situation is settled.⁴¹ The pooling system will not be effective by the first of September but the Russians favor a quadripartite resources board.

An immediate agreement in which joint supervision of distribution on a uniform ration scale would be given to supplies furnished on a proportionate basis by each nation is now desired by the Russians, the program to commence on September 1 and to be retroactive to July 25th. An increase of 15,000 tons over the present 10,000 tons of imports will be necessary to raise the scale to 1550 calories per day. The Russians will probably object to increasing the present normal consumer's scale of 850 calories which is creating a critical situation.⁴²

1862. Please see message from General Clark (P 1054, Aug. 16 ⁴³) to JCS being sent in paraphrase to General Deane ⁴⁴ concerning difficulties encountered in establishment of Allied Control Commission in Vienna. General Clark has been instructed to proceed to Vienna for possible meeting of Commanders-in-Chief on Aug. 20 but not adhere to rigid policy of refusing to complete occupation of city until adequate arrangements are made for feeding Vienna population. 152. At General Clark's invitation Soviet, British, and French commanders and their political advisers came to Salzburg to attend a festival concert. Owing to Marshal Koniev's illness he was represented in accordance with previous understanding, by Colonel General Zheltov.⁴⁶

General McCreery told General Clark he had instructions from his Government which Winterton ⁴⁷ later confirmed in an informal meeting of the deputy COS (Chief of Staff) on August 20 that the FonOff (Foreign Office) view was that the AC (Allied Commission) should not be formally established until questions of Austrian food supply have been settled on long term basis including agreement on supplies from Hungary and Rumania as normal sources. British idea was that meanwhile CINC (Commanders-in-Chief) should meet only as COS (Chiefs of Staff) and not as AC (Allied Commission). Zheltov reacted violently saying McCreery would have little authority if he could not act on such questions himself.

⁴⁵ In telegram 3058, August 25, the Ambassador in the Soviet Union reported that consequent to carrying out these instructions he had received a written reply from Mr. Vyshinsky on August 24. Mr. Vyshinsky's reply said in part: "Generalissimo Stalin stated at the Conference that the Soviet authorities might continue to feed the Viennese population up to September. Koniev's proposal that the Allied authorities begin from September to feed the population in the appropriate Viennese zones of occupation is, therefore, correct. Soviet Govt anticipates that the US will send to the Supreme Commander of the American Forces in Austria instructions along the aforementioned lines." (740.00119-Control (Austria)/8-2545)

General Clark after hearing both views informed both Zheltov and McCreery that he did not agree with British proposal and that he felt AC (Allied Commission) should meet at earliest possible date and should itself attempt to aim at a satisfactory Austrian solution.

Mack also discussed food questions in conversations with me. would like to have only interim emergency contributions made by Western powers until Soviets agree to meet certain demands. would include using Austrian exports to pay for imports and compensation to Austria by the Soviets for plant and equipment already removed to the extent necessary to pay for food imports. Pending settlement of food questions on long term basis British Govt would favor having each of occupying powers provide 6,000 tons of food monthly for Vienna to be distributed by Soviet authorities under surveillance of observers from other three powers. This interim arrangement might continue for 2 months but would be subject to termination by other powers on short notice. Mack indicated also that pending settlement of food questions British Govt would prefer to postpone establishment of AC (Allied Commission). Meanwhile they would not recognize Renner regime. Mack believes he has support of Foreign Office for policy of seeking reconstitution of Renner regime with significant changes including particularly elimination of Communist control of internal affairs.48

At one point Mack intimated that in Austrian negotiations British representatives have Balkans in mind. They feel that at Potsdam considerable progress was made toward a more satisfactory basis of Allied participation in Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria. They wish to prevent Austria from coming under Soviet domination as those countries did. British presumably reason that delay in establishing AC (Allied Commission) and in introducing a higher food ration in Vienna will further weaken Soviet position in Austria.

During visit Genl. Clark had conversations with Genl. Zheltov in which Genl. Clark spoke out bluntly and vigorously. He said he had heard of complaints by Zheltov that US-British-French bloc was taking form in opposition to Soviets in Austria. He pointed out that on many points he differed with British views particularly with regard to British proposal not to hold meeting of AC (Allied Commission) until long range food solution was found. (Clark feels and I agree that holding meeting of AC (Allied Commission) will not in itself commit US Govt to unsatisfactory decisions since no decision can be taken without our concurrence.) Clark furthermore told Zheltov he was doing everything he could to eliminate suspicion and establish good relationship with Soviets and demanded that they do their part. Zheltov apologized and promised to recommend favorable action on several matters including allocation of 20 communication channels between Vienna and Salzburg. In response to questioning by Genl. Clark, Zheltov stated that Marshal Koniev really was ill due partly to anxiety over Austrian problems. I believe our relations with Russians were considerably improved as a result of our extremely frank talks.

While this message was being written Genl. Clark as well as British and French received an invitation from Koniev for an AC (Allied Commission) meeting on Thursday, Aug. 23. Genl. Clark has accepted and so informed the French and British. Genl. McCreery, we have been informed by Mr. Mack, will refuse without any explanation. In this event there will of course not be a Council meeting but Genl. Clark is hopeful of constructive results from talks with Koniev in any case. Moreover, French Commander has informed Genl. Clark he will accept and Genl. Clark hopes that Genl. McCreery will reconsider and accept invitation.

supplies in zones and long range procurement, financing and administrative program.

Difficulties surrounding meeting of Control Commission and completion of Vienna occupation are outlined in Salzburg 152 Aug 22 repeated to you as 35. Clark was instructed on Aug 18 to proceed to meeting in Vienna but not to commit US to rigid position of refusing to complete occupation of city and establishing Control Commission until long range plans for feeding Vienna population are completed. Clark likewise instructed to reject Soviet proposals for pooling Austrian resources and replacing Soviet food stocks used in feeding Vienna since July 25. At the same time Moscow was instructed to call to the attention of Soviet authorities Stalin's promise at Potsdam to continue to supply Vienna until Brit and US make adequate arrangements and to request that Marshal Koniev be so informed.

Dept told Maclean that it supported Clark's decision to proceed to meeting at Vienna despite instructions to McCreery not to attend meeting of Allied Commission. Dept will further recommend to War Dept that memo of UK members on long range food policy be withdrawn from CCAC and submitted to Allied Commission in Vienna for discussion.⁵¹

Dept's position is based on following considerations:

1. Failure to establish Control Commission endangers success of quadripartite policy in Austria and is not consistent with existing international agreements and responsibilities.

2. In view of desperate food situation in Austria there is urgent need for establishment of Allied Commission to discuss interim measures of supplying local population.

3. Nothing apparently can be accomplished by refusing to establish Control Commission and referring matters to subordinate committees for discussion.

4. Resolution of UNRRA declaring Austria eligible for relief 52 makes interim measures for feeding population pending establishment of UNRRA machinery more important than agreement on long range policy.

5. Dept believes that acceptable interim solution can be reached by Control Commission and that decision to instruct Clark to attend meeting without committing US to rigid position does not weaken our diplomatic position.

You are requested to bring these questions to the attention of appropriate authorities with a view to securing Brit approval for immediate establishment of Allied Control Commission.

7293. Reference Deptel 7254 Aug 24 following is summary of message from General Clark to JCS (P 7013 Aug 24 53):

General McCreery declined to accept Marshal Koniev's invitation to attend meeting of Allied Council in Vienna. General Clark obtained Marshal Koniev's agreement to change meeting from Allied Council to one of Commanders in Chief. General McCreery accepted and attended meeting on Aug 23. He outlined Brit position stating that Brit Govt was unwilling to instruct him to attend Council meeting until problem of food deficit for Austria as a whole has been discussed by the four governments. Brit Govt however willing in view of emergency to agree on interim program and contribute proportionate share of food for Vienna beginning Sep 1 without prejudicing final solution for Austria. Commanders agreed to this program to begin Sep 1. Food will be distributed by existing Austrian machine under Soviet control with Allied representatives as observers. Also agreed to increase Vienna ration scale not later than Sep 20. Quadripartite Resources Committee will be established immediately to examine possibility of utilizing Austrian food resources.

General McCreery believes four governments will be able to import food from countries in Danubian Basin.

General Clark considers Brit position refusing to permit establishment of Council prior to meeting of Foreign Ministers 54 as an error. 55 If this procedure followed, General Clark foresees delay of one month before establishment of Austrian control machinery. He believes delay in assumption of Allied responsibilities in Austria places us in a vulnerable position in world opinion. At present, Brit, US and French are virtually guests of Soviet in Vienna and will remain so until Brit position is changed.

Marshal Koniev proposed that Commanders consider extension of authority of Renner government. Commanders agreed to examine competence of departments of present central Austrian administrative machine and make recommendations as to use by Allied military government. General Clark believes relations have improved considerably after personal contact with Marshal Koniev and believes he will make concessions. End of summary.

Dept supports General Clark's position that desperate plight of Vienna population makes establishment of Allied Council urgently necessary. US hopes that commanders in chief will meet as soon as possible as Allied Council to carry out interim program agreed by commanders to begin September 1 and to assume responsibilities for liberation of Austria consistent with 4 power agreements. (Dept 7293, August 25 to London repeated to Moscow as 1915.)

Dept believes that interim program agreed by commanders will solve immediate problem of food in Vienna without committing US to long-range policy of supporting Soviet proposal for feeding Vienna zones. General Clark has been instructed not to commit US to any rigid position. Dept does not believe that establishment of Allied Council will prejudice final solution of long-range problem or will involve responsibility for US zone in Vienna to an extent greater than actually established by interim program.

Dept approves discussion of long-range plan, involving charges for Austrian imports, 4 power financing and utilization of resources of Danubian basin in Council of Foreign Ministers in September,⁵⁶ but does not believe establishment of Allied Council should be postponed pending such discussion.

Dept believes that nothing can be gained by refusing to establish Allied Council and that deterioration of food situation in Vienna would place US and UK in extremely vulnerable position. He stated British Government had been reconsidering its attitude and had now come to be in substantial agreement with US position. Harvey said instructions would be sent to Vienna probably today and he expressed hope that first formal meeting of Allied Commission can be held next week.

General McCreery is in London at present but expects to return to Vienna on August 31.

British are willing to forego discussing long term problems prior to setting up Allied Commission but say they must insist on two minor conditions first being met. These are: (1) assurance of equal treatment re office accommodation in Innere Stadt; (2) vacating by Soviets of certain former Nazi buildings located in British zone and now occupied by Russians.

In agreeing to US position Harvey said British must stress again their deep opposition to recognition of Renner government as now constituted. He expressed appreciation of Department's position that US would take no step toward such recognition prior to Foreign Ministers Conference. 173. Russian command in Vienna strongly discourages outdoor meetings and demonstrations sponsored by single parties. Socialist Party application for permission to hold peace demonstration on September 1 was turned down unless other two parties participated.

From August 29 Russian Central Command in Vienna has assumed function of censoring printed posters and speeches of all three legal parties. Prior to this time censorship exercised by a subsection of Austrian Ministry of Education. Party posters must now be approved by Russian Censorship Office in Imperial Hotel. Russians ordered removal of non-approved posters 1800 hours 29th August. People's Party and Socialist Party both instructed by Russians on this point. No confirmation yet of similar instructions to Communist Party.

Commercial printer of People's Party posters reported arrested by Russians on August 30.

Flareup in censorship is believed due to a remark in speech by Chancellor Renner on August 18 before Congress of Lower Austrian Socialists. Renner said "first came Green Fascism. It was replaced by Brown Fascism and I greatly fear that many are flirting with Red Fascism". The speech was ignored by all Viennese papers and the publication of its text forbidden in Socialist press. Full text is available in Informations Dienst, Socialist Party organ with non-public circulation. Reason for ban on single party meetings and demonstrations may be to hide actual strength Communist Party which is diminishing as a result of unfavorable reaction to Russian occupation.

of In despatch 165, September 4, the Political Adviser in Vienna informed the Department that he had advised General Clark in a memorandum on the same date on means to forestall the nationalization program. He suggested that: (1) the Renner government should be informed that such a step would provoke a serious reaction in the U.S. and would reduce the likelihood of recognition, (2) Soviet authorities should be advised that such a measure required the attention of the Allied Council, and any premature action would prejudice the smooth establishment of that body, and (3) if these two measures failed then a direct approach on a governmental level could be made in Moscow. or Not printed; in this message originating aboard the S.S. Queen Elizabeth, the Secretary requested the Department's views regarding the recognition of the Renner government since Foreign Secretary Bevin wished to discuss that question in London (740.00119 Council/9-645).

Dept believes that after establishment of Allied Council in Austria there should be a basic reorganization of the Renner régime which will insure full and unhampered participation of the three principal parties 68 in its political activities and avoid undue dominance by a single party through any such device as control by counter-signatures of deputy ministers. Following such a reorganization of the Renner cabinet we should be prepared to deal with it as the provisional authority to be replaced in time by a Govt elected by the Austrian people under Allied supervision. Final form of Austrian Govt is one which properly should be determined by the Austrian people themselves after free political discussion and unhampered party activity. Dept considers Renner régime if reconstituted with above guarantees would be useful as instrumentality for establishment of a nation-wide administration and arrangement of elections on a unified nation-wide basis. Dept recognizes importance of discussing Brit objections that the balance of parties in Renner administration should be changed. 69 Admission of representatives of the provinces to the cabinet and establishment of a federal structure may be desirable but Dept considers that these questions are not vital requirements for a provisional régime.

Chief qualification involved in US-UK decision to deal with Renner authority is prevention of excessive control by one party at present typified by the Communist control of Ministry of the Interior. Dept realizes it is politically necessary to include Communists in cabinet and also considers that removal of Communist Minister of Interior would be difficult to achieve but that US-UK should press for transfer of control of police force and supervision of elections from Ministry of Interior to Allied Control Commission in order to insure free elections and prevent misuse of power by one party.

Dept considers that recognition of a reorganized Renner administration would facilitate early achievement of our objectives in Austria. Dealing with it as a de facto authority would make possible early transfer of administrative functions from Military Govt to Austrian administrative system, the early holding of free elections in the provinces to ascertain exact balance of party strength and Party.

 In an aide-mémoire dated September 3, 1945, the British Embassy urged the Department not to recognize the Renner government. It also informed the Department that British authorities in Austria were being instructed to make the greatest possible use of Austrian provincial authorities in order to increase the importance of the latter and perhaps pave the way for constitutional developments in the direction of a federal structure. (740.00119 Control-(Austria)/9-345) would be a step in fulfillment of objectives stated in Moscow Declaration of 1943. Dealing with it would also make possible early reduction of occupation forces of the four powers, thus reducing both volume of Allied supply into Austria and present drain on Austrian resources. Brit have already proposed discussion of supply question for Austria and entire Danubian area as a basic problem in US-UK relations with Soviets.

Delay in establishment of Allied Commission and lack of a unified administration has made impossible a nation-wide system of denazification and removal of thousands of Reichsdeutsche 71 and Volksdeutsche from Austria. (Gen. Hilldring 72 reports that one third of total population of our zone in Austria are Reichsdeutsche and their immediate removal to Germany is an urgent necessity to achieve our objectives under the Moscow Declaration.73) Dept believes that dealing with a provisional Austrian authority following establishment of Allied Commission will facilitate solution of these problems.

If agreement is reached on question of dealing with Renner régime, you may also wish to discuss future policy in Austria. In political field Dept believes following steps should be taken after an effective Austrian administration is established.

1. Reduction of occupation troops on a quadripartite basis and transfer of administrative functions to the provisional Austrian state.

2. Progressive change from the purely military character of Allied occupation to civilian control by the introduction of civilian elements into Allied Commission at an early date.

3. To propose abolition of zones of occupation in Austria and to replace control machinery by an Allied High Commission in Vienna supported by small garrisons of the four powers stationed throughout Austria. Dept believes that garrisons could be maintained in areas now designated as zones and would not necessitate intermingling of troops. Dept likewise considers that these garrisons need only be token forces which could be removed at discretion of Allied High Commission.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, September 9, 1945—7 p. m.

7749. For Secretary Byrnes. General Clark (P2045, September 8 74) reports pressure of Soviet Government on Renner to sign before noon September 10 agreement setting up Austro-Soviet corporation for control of exploitation of oil industry in Austria. Renner is attempting delay until Allied Council meets on Tuesday 75 but may be compelled to sign. If he does Clark proposes to ask Koniev on Monday status of alleged agreement and stress interest of Control Council in disposal of such an important natural resource. If Renner is able to delay signature Clark proposes to bring question to Allied Council on Tuesday.

War Department has sent following reply to Clark:

"We fully agree with your proposed action. Koniev's attention should be directed to Article 5 of the Agreement on Control Machinery in Austria 76 which provides that the Allied Council will initiate plans and reach decisions on the chief military, political, economic and other questions affecting Austria as a whole. Since the Supreme Authority in Austria is exercised jointly, according to this agreement, we cannot recognize the authority of the Renner Cabinet to conclude an agreement involving the development of oil industry in Austria which is bound to affect Austrian economy as a whole. It should further be emphasized that there are direct U.S. interests involved in the ownership of properties in the eastern zone which were not renounced by the Potsdam agreement. You should also inform the British and French Commanders of your proposed action." 78

Memorandum by Mr. Emile Despres, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State, and by Mr. Henry P. Leverich of the Division of Central European Affairs to Assistant Secretary Clayton [Washington,] September 10, 1945.

We recommend that the Department of State propose to the War Department that an attempt be made to reach a quadripartite agreement limiting the size of occupying forces in Austria.

Three factors make such an agreement strongly advisable: (1) the general poverty of Austrian resources; (2) the practice of the Russian forces (and French forces) of "living off the land" and the Russian contention that maintenance of the occupying forces should be a first claim on Austria's resources; and (3) the desirability of conditioning any reduction in our own forces on corresponding reductions on the forces of other occupying powers.

The first factor requires no detailed explanation. In view of its scanty resources, Austria will continue to require outside assistance. Before 1938, Austria was only 75 per cent self-sufficient with respect to food. It is estimated that 265,000 tons of foodstuffs per year will be needed to supply our zone in Austria and our sector in Vienna, assuming a daily ration scale of only 1550 calories per person.

The Russian practice of living off the land is reflected in their large requisitions of Austrian foodstuffs and their heavy expenditures of Allied Military schillings. In August alone, Russian forces spent 450,000,000 AM 79 schillings as compared with a total of 100,000,000 by the forces of all the other occupying powers. Expenditures at this rate threaten not only to create serious inflationary conditions but also to exhaust our AM schilling inventory, particularly if the contemplated conversion of Reichsmarks into AM schillings is carried out. At the same time, the heavy Russian drain on Austrian food supplies will, if continued, inevitably force us to supply more food at our own expense (either in form of direct US military relief or in form of our contribution to UNRRA).

The Russian zone in Austria is far better supplied with food than the other zones and would, in fact, normally be able to spare considerable food for other parts of Austria. Before the war, the provinces now in the Russian zone accounted for 47% of the productive area in Austria and produced 52% of the wheat, 58% of the rye, 72% of the barley, 49% of the oats, 47% of the corn, 55% of the potatoes and 88% of the sugar beets grown in Austria. Moreover, the same area accounted in 1934 for 49% of the chickens, 45% of the pigs, 46% of the horses and 33% of the cattle in Austria.

[&]quot; Allied Military.

At present, however, the Russian zone has a food deficit owing to the combined effect of the war and Russian requisitions. The Russians have proposed that Austrian resources be pooled and that Austria be considered as a single economic unit, but under existing conditions, this would mean only a pooling of deficits.

Throughout the occupied countries of eastern and southeastern Europe, the USSR appears to be "pasturing out" its army. The advantage of this practice to the USSR is obvious, since it considerably reduces the drain on Soviet food supplies. This practice, however, is a considerable burden on a small country like Austria which requires and is obtaining assistance from us. While the State Department possesses no figures indicating the size of Russian occupying forces in Austria, such figures as are known regarding forces kept in other countries make it appear likely that their size is out of proportion to reasonable requirements.

For these reasons, an agreement limiting the occupying forces appears imperative. It is not within the province of this Department to determine what the size of the total occupying force should be but it is suggested that a relatively small total should be quite adequate for the purpose of controlling Austria.

and Blagodatov; and that Executive Committee work out by September 18 rules of procedure for Allied Commission and Kommandatura.

Council also decided to "allow as soon as possible" freedom of movement throughout Austria of Austrian officials, commercial travelers and other persons and of road and rail traffic and reestablishment of telegraph and telecommunications throughout Austria under plans to be worked out by Executive Committee which is so directed to work out by October first a plan for utilization of country's productive capacity and supplies of foodstuff and raw materials.

Agreed agenda for the meeting comprised: Commencement and method of operation of the Allied Commission; approval of minutes of meeting of Commanders in Chief on August 23; extension of the competence of the central Austrian administrative machine to all provinces of Austria; new ration scales for population of Vienna; political activities of democratic parties in Austria, confirmation of list of urgent problems; proclamation to Austrian people; communiqué.

On extension of the central Austrian administrative machine it was noted that apart from freedom of movement and communication, consideration of this broad subject should be deferred to next meeting of September 20 following reports yet to be made by committee studying the subject.

It was agreed that new ration scale for Vienna effective September 23 should run from 1,300 calories for normal consumers up to 3,000 calories for heavy workers. British and American insistence raised scales to these figures. Koniev had preferred lower scales based on average of 1,550.

He said in agreeing to higher figure many difficulties must be envisaged and supplies Vienna gets from other Austrian areas would have to be taken into account. Gen. Clark stated his understanding that food supplies from Austrian sources will be developed subsequently, but that at outset Allies agree to provide quantities desired.

Council approved a proclamation that "effective this date democratic political parties are hereby allowed maximum freedom to develop their political activities throughout Austria".

McCreery called attention to disquieting financial situation and said he would like Council at next meeting to examine measures to combat inflation. It was agreed Executive Committee should prepare report on matter for consideration at next meeting.

Agenda moved with speed and precision until draft proclamation evoked conflict between Soviets and British over mention of provisional Austrian Govt. McCreery requested deletion of statement inserted by Soviet member of Deputy Commanders meeting September 6 that "the Allied Council will also study the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding Austria and will submit for extension the competence of the provisional Austrian Govt over all Austria." He quoted the Potsdam Declaration that the "Govts" will examine this question and explain that a flat statement that the Allied Council will submit a proposal for the extension of the competence of the Provisional Austrian Govt would be misunderstood by British people. Béthouart agreed that proposed paragraph would raise question of extension of powers of a govt not vet recognized. Clark recommended substituting "the question of" for "a proposal for". Koniev urged inclusion of paragraph as originally proposed, arguing people of Austria have noted Potsdam Declaration and expect action by Council. Several substitute formulations were suggested by Clark, who was endeavoring to arrive at one which would not commit Council members to a recommendation to accept the Renner Cabinet as now constituted, but they were all rejected. Koniev then stated that under these circumstances there could be no proclamation [apparent omission] was not issued it would be notice to the Austrian people that the Council was failing.

In this deadlock the Council requested political advisers to work out formula acceptable to all. The resulting formula, although saying little, finally made possible the proclamation as it appears in my separate telegram.⁸²

Finally, Béthouart asked permission to state that Tirolean delegation recently expressed to him their desire to have south Tirol population to rejoin Austria. Béthouart recommended that this desire be made known to Govts so that London Council of Ministers may obtain views of Tiroleans from Council members informing their Govts of importance attached to south Tirol by Austrians before determination of Italian frontiers by London Council of Ministers.

met in Clark's office and agreed nothing be said to press. Austrian food situation was discussed in general terms. On political side, Renner said it feasible to call a conference of party leaders and provincial governors to nominate an interim government as in 1919. Conference could do its work in 4 or 5 days and Renner felt Socialist-People's Party strength would reduce Communist representation to small proportion and make retention of Education and Interior Ministers by Communists unlikely. When asked how such a conference could change the present government, Dr. Renner said Chancery might be enlarged and the Ministries increased from 9 to 11 and possibly up to 14.

Renner believes elections should be held latter part November this year because if not held by then, winter conditions will make them impossible until next March. He has full confidence in Austrian proportional representation system and secret ballot but thinks election supervision by Allied Powers desirable.⁸³

Renner was greatly pleased at Clark's invitation. He is vigorous and makes good impression. Despatch follows with more details.⁸⁴

PV 7431. The proposed Austrian-Soviet Agreement further developments, re my PV 7303, PV 7304 and P 2045, Sept. 8,88 given. Gruenther informed Zheltov on 8 Sept. that arrangements for longterm disposition of oil resources of Austria which Renner government was considering should be considered by Allied Council. An oral informal message delivered to State Secretary for Industry and Trade Heinl on Sept. 10 on behalf of General Clark stated any agreement for long-term disposition Austrian resources would unless examined by Allied Council be invalid. On lines of Department's 100 of 9 Sept.,89 a letter was addressed to Koniev by Clark. Clark stated repeated reports had been received by him and his Government that Renner government was considering measures concerning partial control by Soviets of Austrian oil; indicated he would not agree to any action of Renner government disposing of resources without consulting him; referred to Article 5, Control Machinery Agreement; recalled that directly involved in ownership eastern Austrian oil properties were U.S. interests and that these interests had not been at Potsdam renounced.

No reply had been received up to 5 p. m. today from Koniev by General Clark.

Following has been learned from reliable outside source: Contract was presented on 10 Sept. to Renner by Soviet trade representatives after Renner was summoned to Soviet Headquarters. Saying that other Allied Powers should be consulted, Renner would not sign. Renner stated that a provisional government could not act on a longterm agreement affecting the whole of Austria. Becoming angry, Soviets stated contract of no concern to other powers and exerted strong pressure, threatening in particular to isolate Austria from Western Europe economically and also to refuse to accept proposed Austrian trade delegation in Moscow. On Sept. 11, Renner made following points in conversation with Clark and I.

- 1. Upon Potsdam Communiqué, Soviet demands were based. Renner agreed with us when we advanced arguments the Department set forth in its 100. In absence of formal U.S. statement on subject, however, Renner said Soviet interpretation to him seemed rather
 - 2. Proposed contract would be advantageous to Austria;
 - 3. He did not want to displease Western Allied Powers.

Negotiations were opened on a new contract when on Sept. 11, Soviets announced they would postpone return to Moscow. Because of their American bias, Doctors Janoschek 90 and Friedl 91 were barred from the discussions at Soviet demand. By Sept. 14, Soviet representatives demand Renner Government sign. Janoschek is an official in the half of Socony-Vacuum owned Rohöl-Gewinnungs AG. New contract contains provisions for 50-year concession same source reports and also provisions as follows for the $27,000,000 U.S. capital for the corporation.

A. From Austria, $1,000,000. in cash; $12,000,000. worth of new machines to be installed and half a million in oil lands.

B. From Russia, half a million in cash; former German properties worth $12,000,000.; and new installations worth $1,000,000.

Soviets maintain that oil law placed in effect in 1940 92 is still in effect. Same source reports also that transfers of American and other properties made under 1940 law still valid and on this basis under Potsdam agreement Soviets claim such properties.

That a contract which would endeavor to protect interests of the United States another source states Austrians are drawing up. Consumption estimated at 32,000,000 tons for 1945 and production at Thereafter all exploration rights reverted to the German Government and could be disposed of only by it. Ownership of developed property was not disturbed, but existing companies lost the right of further exploration. The Bitumengesetz had not been abrogated by the Renner government.

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State herewith transmits its views on the various questions involving Austria raised in the British Embassy's aide-mémoire of September 3, 1945, Ref. 1904/—/45.95

1. The Department of State is hopeful that the discussions of the detailed proposals for long-range supply arrangements in Austria proposed by the British Government at the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers will result in an agreement satisfactory to the occupying powers. The Department of State recommended the withdrawal of the memorandum of the United Kingdom members of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee (C.C.A.C. 205) from the Committee and the transfer of the discussion to the Allied Council in Vienna on the grounds that agreement had been reached by the four Commanders-in-Chief on an interim program for the feeding of the City of Vienna. The Department of State believes that the actual details of a supply program can be discussed more effectively by the Allied Council in Vienna if an agreement is reached on basic principles by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Kingdom, Louis de Monicault for France, and Evgeny Dmitriyevich Kiselev for the Soviet Union.

Council on the 12th September 98 and of the desire of the four Govts that Austria should have a recognized and fully representative central govt as soon as possible the political advisers (1) took note with interest of reports that Dr. Renner intends to summon a meeting of provincial representatives to discuss this matter and (2) agreed to recommend to the Allied Council that each occupying power should if requested give facilities to such representatives to proceed to Vienna."

Soviets have placed question of Provisional Austrian Govt on agenda of AC (Allied Council) meeting September 20.

Based on experience in Austria to date there is general agreement among Austrian and Allied officials alike that a central administrative machine is absolute necessity to achieve objectives of Moscow Declaration. It is of utmost importance to reach agreement promptly. We are committed by Potsdam communiqué to examine the question of the extension of authority of Austrian Provisional Govt to all Austria. Renner administrative machine is only one in existence which can be considered as meeting the essential requirements of such a machine and the only practical thing to do is deal with it as a de facto provisional administration either (1) as now constituted or (2) as reconstituted by the Austrians themselves subject to Allied Council approval. Dept's 99, September 8 99 favors second alternative.

Renner himself has told General Clark and me that it is entirely feasible to alter composition of his regime or dissolve it and form another through a provincial (Laender) conference along lines of one held 1919; that such a conference would probably alter composition of Cabinet in such way that Honner would not be Minister of Interior; and that Renner feels he himself is in any case assured of votes to keep him Chancellor. By altering the govt we understood from Renner's statement that he meant increasing the members of his political council and the number of Cabinet posts from 9 to 11 and possibly 13 or 14. His view of usefulness of Laender Conference is widely supported by other members of Cabinet. Initial announcement of his regime last April envisaged eventual replacement by govt elected by the people.

Renner has informed press of his intention to call conference of provincial leaders September 24.

This conference will probably produce a slate for the composition of a Cabinet subject to AC (Allied Council) approval. If approved

The proclamation declared that the Allied Council had assumed supreme authority in Austria in matters affecting Austria as a whole. Each Commander in Chief, however, was to exercise full authority within his own zone. It then reaffirmed Allied intentions to further the re-establishment of a truly democratic, free, and independent Austria. See Gazette of the Allied Commission for Austria, No. 1, December 1945–January 1946, pp. 25–27.

the present Renner regime could be adapted to the decision reached by dissolving itself and being replaced by new slate or reconstituting itself with such changes as necessary to conform to approved slate. Cabinet finally approved by AC (Allied Council) could have some such title as "Provisional Austrian National Administration" with authority throughout Austria subject to definite understanding as to time of holding national elections under Allied supervision.

VIENNA, September 15, 1945—4 p. m. [Received 6:25 p. m.]

218. I strongly agree about desirability of transferring Reichsdeutsche and Volksdeutsche mentioned in Department's 99, September 8, 8 p. m.¹ but not wholly with explanation of delay stated therein. Military Government Austria has done excellent job under difficult circumstances in handling displaced persons with full cooperation Austrian authorities.

Reichsdeutsche in US zone Austria numbered 122,000 on September 7. Volksdeutsche including Sudetens number 55,000 and in view of Potsdam decisions should now apparently also be sent to Germany. Plans for removal from Austria have long since been complete. Sole obstacle to removal lies not as in Department's 99 but in unwillingness of military representatives of Four Powers in Germany to receive them there, on grounds of lack of food, shelter and Control Council arrangements for their distribution into zones in Germany.

The same objections as to food and shelter to their presence exist also in Austria in even greater degree. Moreover the number involved is great in proportion to population of Austria but small in proportion to refugee and Displaced Persons problem within Germany itself. In addition there are strong political reasons for getting these people out of Austria as quickly as possible: camps here are overloaded already and Reichsdeutsche Displaced Persons are necessarily billeted on Austrians and move freely among them talking politics and spreading propaganda especially that US looks toward war with Russia and does not really want to get rid of Nazi or other Germans.

Military Government Austria is ready and eager to send these Displaced Persons to Germany where they belong and also to admit Austrian Displaced Persons from Germany thus alleviating strain on food and shelter there and providing two way traffic.

¹ See telegram Secdel 13, September 8, to London, p. 582.

By destinations in Germany the 122,000 Reichsdeutsche breakdown into 9,000 to French zone Germany, 9,000 to US zone, 27,000 to British zone, 15,000 to Russian administered zone, 45,000 to Polish administered zone, 17,000 unclassified [as] yet[.] Military Government Austria has already initiated every effort to arrange through military channels for admission respective zones Germany.

Soviets are reported to have taken similar attitude on all laws proposed by Renner Cabinet re disposition of property. The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Acting Secretary of State

London, September 18, 1945—10 p. m. [Received September 18—8:48 p. m.]

9637. Sent to AusPolAd, Vienna as 36, September 18. Repeated to Department as Delsec 29, September 18. For Erhardt from the Secretary. A note of which substance follows was sent me by Bevin today. The views expressed in it coincide with our views. Please so advise General Clark. Bevin and Bidault are cabling it to their representatives.

Begin substance of note:

It is essential that urgent consideration be given the best means of setting up a representative provisional government in Austria which the occupying powers and other governments can recognize and which can conduct free elections with a view to forming a regular government in due course. It is of the utmost importance that the provisional government be representative of all democratic parties and all the provinces.

It is proposed that the Allied Council should ask Renner to invite to Vienna the heads of all existing provincial administrations accompanied by two other representatives in order that each of the three recognized political parties should be represented in the group from each province. The provincial delegates would constitute a national group to choose freely a provisional government composed of the various political elements. After the delegates had chosen such a government they would submit the names to the Allied Council which would make recommendations to the respective governments as to recognition.

The new provisional government would be responsible for holding elections as soon as practicable in any event within one year for a constituent assembly to decide upon the form of constitution and to provide for the setting up of a regular government.

One of the great weaknesses of pre-war Austria was the cleavage between the rural and urban populations and Vienna's disproportionate influence in relation to the whole country. These defects must be remedied if Austria is to develop satisfactorily in the future. The Allied Council should be instructed to examine this whole matter with special reference to the future of Vienna and offer appropriate advice to the Austrian authorities. End substance of note.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/9-1845: Telegram

The United States Military Commissioner for Austria (Clark) to the Joint Chiefs of Staff²

VIENNA, 18 September 1945.

PV 7519. This message is reply to War 63998 and 65058 and consists of two parts. Part 1 contains recommendations agreed to in three hour meeting of Allied Council for Austria today. Part 2 contains my personal comments.

- 1. The representatives of the four occupying powers on the Allied Council for Austria are unanimously agreed that the magnitude of the food problem and the extent of the food import requirements for Austria for 1945–1946, however calculated, are of very considerable proportions. The need for immediate effective arrangements to meet these import requirements also is unanimously recognized.
- 2. Complete agreement was also reached on an estimate of the food production from domestic sources, each of the occupying powers furnishing the estimate for its own zone. There was also unanimous agreement, except as regards barley, on the amounts which would be available for human consumption. As regards barley the Soviet view was that the total amount available should be used for human consumption, whereas the other members of the Allied Council considered that it should be reserved for the feeding of live stock. (Table I inserted here. Will be included in separate message.³).

3. The appraisal of import requirements depends on the level of food consumption envisioned for the Austrian farm and non-farm populations. Since this is a decision that will concern not only Austria but all of Europe as well as countries outside Europe, it is suggested that the Council of Foreign Ministers decide, at the earliest possible moment, what level of food consumption should be taken as the goal. In the meantime, a number of hypothetical goals have been suggested, and the resulting British-French, USSR and American deficit estimates have been recorded for the information of the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Allied Council considers that ration scales should be established for Austria as a whole, maintaining the principle of differentiation for the various groups of population on the basis of the type of labor performed. (Table II inserted here. Will be dispatched by separate message.3) Most significant information in this table gives deficits as determined by three methods of calculation. Deficits are in order: 1st column is British-French, 2nd column is United States, 3rd column is USSR.3a

- 4. The four Allied Commanders have stated that no food is being taken from indigenous Austrian resources by the forces of occupation; recognizing the gravity of the food situation in Austria, they are unanimously agreed that none shall be taken in the future.
- 5. It is appreciated by the Allied Council that the early establishment of Central Austrian Governmental authority will aid the long range food situation, but not by an[y means solve it.] Statistics in tables I and II will be sent subsequent messages. Part 2 follows.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/9-1845: Telegram

The United States Military Commissioner for Austria (Clark) to the Joint Chiefs of Staff ⁵

[VIENNA,] 18 September 1945.

PV 7521. This is Part 2 of my P[V] 7519 and contains my personal views.

1. At the outset of the discussion it was made clear by the Soviets that they would insist upon a minimal feeding standard for Austria. The following proposal with regard to foreight [foreign?] sources of food supply was made by me and supported by the British and French:

"The Allied Council for Austria is further unanimously agreed that, as a matter of policy, food to meet the Austrian deficit should come from normal prewar sources, principally Hungary, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria;

That an examination be made of the imports which present conditions in those countries will permit;

That the resulting quantities be taken into account as a part of the means of meeting the deficit and that to the extent that the need cannot be met from the countries concerned, other sources of supply be found."

The Russians firmly refused to support this proposal on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the Council's competence.

Further they stated that though we were not fully cognizant of conditions in central and southeastern Europe there were indications that because of droughts and other factors there were no surpluses for Austria to be had from those areas and it would therefore be impracticable to recommend that any reliance be placed on such sources.

Despite innumerable attempts to reword this paragraph in more innocuous terms, the Russians resolutely refused to accept any text which made any reference to the Danubian Basin or Central European supply sources. In fact they refused to accept the recommendation that as a matter of policy, deficit would come from "normal pre-war sources," no geographical areas being named.

2. In this connection, I am aware of the alarming proportions to which the United States is becoming committed as the residual world supplier. I have done everything to stress in the Council meeting the importance of reserving local resources entirely for the Austrian population and of obtaining for Austria supplies from nearby countries. Yet we must steer clear of wishful thinking and give you a fair picture of what we believe are the facts of the case as seen from here.

 $^{^{\}rm 5}\,{\rm This}$ telegram was sent for information to the Secretary of State in London, and to the Department.

It would be unrealistic to assume that more than insignificant quantities of foodstuffs, possibly sugar, from Czechoslovakia, could be obtained from the Danubian Basin during 1945–1946. It has become evident since I dispatched my P 1054 6 to you a month ago that sweeping social changes, population transfers, hasty land reforms, changes in farm controls, indiscriminate removal of livestock, farm machinery and transport vehicles in all of eastern Europe, as well as the drought that affected much of the area, have eliminated virtually all surpluses that would under normal conditions have been produced in these regions.

(This information furnished by experts of the Department of Agriculture. Have had presently the advice of Dr. Motz and Dr. Richter, which was concurred in by a recent conference of 15 United States Agriculture Attachés. These facts, they tell me, are well known in Washington and in London.)

Of course I am speaking of the present crop year and it may well be that over a long-term, the Danubian Basin will be the granary for Austria.

3. As indicated in para 2 of the official agreement, the differences in the calculations of the deficits are accounted for by differences in the feeding goals envisioned. The British-French estimates are based on a feeding goal of an average ration of 1700 calories for the total population, including farmers. The American estimate is based upon an average ration of 1700 calories for the non-farming population, allowing for unavoidable retentions by farmers of approximately 2750 calories, or slightly less than their retentions in previous years. The Soviet position is that the Austrian ration scale should be limited to the ration of a vanquished nation.

Russians also wish to reserve barley for human consumption, while the United States, British and French feel that it will inevitably be used for animal feed.

- 4. The Russians brought up several proposals for increasing Austrian food supplies, such as making use of the existing Central Austrian Government for the initiation of a foreign trade program, rehabilitation of Austrian industry and railroads, and the extension of arable land, all of these proposals answering [assuming?] political recognition of the Renner government. These, however, were rejected on the ground that the question of the Renner government is on the Agenda for the next regular meeting of the Allied Council of September 20th.
- 5. With regard to point 5 concerning non-requisition of indigenous food supplies,⁸ it should be pointed out that although the Russians have invariably taken the position that they never have requisitioned

Austrian supplies nor intend to do so, entirely reliable sources report that extensive requisitioning is going on not only by individuals and units throughout lower Austria, but also centrally by the Russian High Command in Vienna with demands in some instances placed directly on the Renner government.

6. In view of the urgency in reporting to the Council of Ministers, it had previously been decided that only food and not fuel would be dealt with at this time.

[Here follow statistics based on the estimates of United States authorities of the food import requirements for all zones of Austria for the next twelve months.]

8275. Secdel 94. [For the Secretary.] Dept submits following recommendations for your consideration in amplification of your 9637 Sep 18 Delsec 29 containing text of Brit note on establishment of a representative provisional government in Austria. If you approve, Dept would appreciate transmission of these recommendations directly by you to AusPolAd, Vienna.

Dept considers plan for calling of Laender Conference best means of obtaining provisional government consistent with Austrian constitutional and political precedents and representative of all parties and provinces. In order to obtain representative government and prevent abuses, Dept recommends that following objectives form basis of US policy in process of establishment of provisional régime:

1. That Allied Council approve Cabinet appointments and that Renner be retained as head of Cabinet in view of his personal record.

2. That principle of single party representation in Cabinet posts be recognized, and the present system of Under Secretaries representing three parties and countersigning all decrees be abolished as inconsistent with Austrian constitutional procedure.

3. That exact balance of parties in Cabinet be determined by decision of Allied Council on basis of known strength of parties in last free election (1930), modified by any precise information on changes in balance made available by local officials and Allied military authorities in the respective zones.

4. That all three anti-Nazi parties be represented in Cabinet but that principle be recognized that key posts such as Foreign Affairs, Justice, Interior be held by representatives of demonstrably major parties.

5. That re-organized Cabinet constituting a provisional Austrian national administration be given immediate administrative authority throughout Austria as a whole consistent with four-power agreement on control machinery.

6. That national elections be held under Allied supervision at earliest possible date, preferably by Nov 1945.

Please inform Dept if recommendations are transmitted to Vienna.

The Department had recommended a relaxation of the ban on non-fraternization in Austria some time before. In a letter to Gen. J. H. Hilldring, June 20, 1945, Mr. H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs wrote: "This letter is to record the fact that, from the political point of view, the Department of State considers the policy of non-fraternization undesirable in Austria, in contrast to Germany where there are political reasons in favor of it. . . . it is considered desirable to terminate the present general policy of non-fraternization in Austria with respect to non-Germans at as early a date as is consistent with military considerations." (740.00119 Control (Austria)/-6-2045)

¹¹ See footnote 78, p. 585.

Negotiations which have been proceeding for some time in Vienna between representatives of Soviet oil organizations and Austrian plenipotentiaries by their mutual agreement are concerned exclusively with enterprises located in Soviet zone of occupation of Austria. Shares of these enterprises belonged to Germany and by virtue of decision of Berlin Conference they are included as part of German reparations account in favor of Soviet Union. It is the purpose of these negotiations to define juridically the right of Soviet Union to these shares by means of an appropriate agreement with Austrian authorities.

Moreover, conclusion of Soviet-Austrian agreement re joint exploitation of oil enterprises in eastern Austria is intended also to secure their quickest restoration in interests of supplying oil products for Austrian economic consumption.

Above mentioned agreement does not impair American rights and interests and is not in contradiction with Moscow Declaration re Austria and with Article V of agreement on control mechanism in Austria".¹²

246. Laender Conference opens today ¹³ and reports circulating it may last 8 days instead of 3. Such a conference held in 1919 established first Austrian Government. Present conference thus has historical precedent and its decision will greatly influence public opinion. From its deliberations will emerge a proposed Cabinet slate and Governments of occupying powers will have to decide whether to accept it. As background for appraisal of expected developments all members Allied Council agree upon necessity for some kind of central administrative machinery. This is especially true of Soviets who have no operational MG.¹⁴ Until now Soviets have urged in Council meetings

¹² Telegram 277, October 2, from the Political Adviser in Vienna, informed the Department that a substantially similar reply had been received on September 28 by General Clark from Marshal Koniev. General Clark in a counter-reply to Marshal Koniev on October 2, expressed his satisfaction that reports that Soviet authorities were attempting to gain control of the Austrian oil industry were baseless, but he noted that negotiations had been taking place and he repeated the main points of his letter of September 10 to Marshal Koniev. (863.6363/10-245) only the extension to all of Austria of the competence and authority of the present Renner government.

¹⁸ Each of the Länder, or provinces, sent a delegation to meet with members of the Renner Cabinet in Vienna for the purpose of settling matters of common interest. The provincial delegations were each made up of the chairmen of the provincial organization of each of the three major parties, the governor of the province, and a member of the provincial council from each party. The first Länder Conference was held 24–26 September. A total of three such conferences were held during 1945.

At September 20 meeting of Allied Council Koniev said he was not proposing recognition but only extension of competence with a proviso that within one month after agreement on such extension the composition of the Government would be changed. Bethouart pointed out that Koniev's proposal involved de facto recognition and McCreery said he would not agree to extension of competence because all commanders hoped for agreement on a government that could be recognized.

In this connection the British position is clear. They do not like the composition of present Renner government which they regard as over-weighted with Viennese. They also feel Communists have greater representation than they are entitled to and in that they control especially the Ministry of Interior. Conference to announce a Government de novo but in that respect their hopes are dim since Soviets would oppose the dissolution of the present Government as a matter of prestige. British as well as French and ourselves feel that the Interior should go to a non-Communist and Renner himself favors this change. From conversations with the other political advisers I have the impression the Soviets will be willing to have Cabinet posts increased to give the provinces adequate representation with the present incumbents retaining their posts especially Honner.

If Laender Conference gives Interior to a non-Communist the Four Powers may consider this an acceptable solution of principal difficulty, provided always the remainder of new slate is unobjectionable. If Honner remains, three suggestions have been discussed as to how the situation could be met:

Socialists are considering as a compromise appointment of a non-Communist below ministerial level in charge of police functions. Renner himself is thinking of reforms within the Interior Ministry to bring about changes in control and powers of police;

Agreement on national elections under Allied supervision before end of year would make Honner question less pressing especially in view of urgency of establishing a central government. However the British do not favor new elections before next year since they wish the Supreme Commanders to be in absolute control during this winter. Soviet position on elections is not known but last week the Austrian Communist Party has for the first time voiced willingness to have elections at an early but unspecified date. Socialists and Volkspartei have previously expressed themselves in favor of early elections. Most competent observers think that even if Honner remains the Austrian secret ballot offers adequate guarantees for a full and free expression of people's will. In any event such apprehension as may exist applies only to provinces of lower Austria and Burgenland;

Making the police directly responsible to the Allied Commission. Administratively this would be very complicated and difficult and it is believed that the Commission would do well to avoid assuming such an administrative burden.

Outcome of Laender Conference can hardly be entirely agreeable to either British or Soviets. If there is a deadlock General Clark will likely again serve as mediator a role which he already has on two occasions played with great success.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, September 24, 1945—4 p. m.

8369. Secdel 108. From Clayton for Secretary of State. We have following comment to make on Austrian supply problem with reference to telegrams from General Clark conveying Allied Council recommendations and his personal views.

1. It is evident in this and other issues that the Russian view with respect to the economic treatment of Austria differs considerably from ours. If you judge it appropriate to raise this general question, we would explain our view on the treatment as follows. The Moscow Declaration of Nov 1, 1943 on Austria and the necessity of creating strong support in Austria for continued independence from Germany impels us to assimilate Austria to the status of a liberated country and to make a clear-cut distinction between treatment of Germany and treatment of Austria. Essential to this treatment is development of broad rehabilitation program which in turn involves (1) food supplies sufficient for a proper dietary standard in Austria, with all the occupying powers contributing a fair share to such supplies (2) supplies of raw materials and equipment, furnished either through UNRRA or directly by the occupying powers jointly, which will permit reactivation of the Austrian economy and enable Austria ultimately to do without external assistance, and (3) a restrictive application of claims by occupying powers to German property in Austria in such a way as to avoid removals of equipment essential to a sound Austrian economy and prevent a drain on essential Austrian resources by uncompensated transfers of the profits and products of German enterprises taken over by any of the occupying powers. In recent weeks Russian action under (1) and (3) has run counter to our view.

- 2. If you regard it as not useful to raise this general question, the alternatives appear: (a) to accept any real contribution to Austrian relief the Russians can be persuaded to make, even if it necessitates a somewhat disproportionate contribution by the other occupying powers, or a somewhat lower dietary standard for Austria as a whole than we regard as desirable, or both; or (b) to set up in our own zone, perhaps in conjunction with the British and the French zones, a separate economic unit. Since the latter course would delay the transfer of responsibility for internal administration to an Austrian Government, extend the period and degree of American military government commitment, and prejudice the eventual establishment of a unified, independent Austria, it is not advocated by us. It would be less disadvantageous for us to accept a disproportionate share of the relief burden for Austria as a whole than to attempt to operate Western Austria as a separate unit.
- 3. We agree with General Clark that present insistence on obtaining imports from prewar normal sources of supply is largely academic since apparently no overall surpluses available southeast and east Europe. In few cases such as Zecho sugar it may be possible to arrange for procurement in neighboring countries.
- 4. We consider that all occupying powers should make supply commitment along above lines for at least 6 to 12 months. We must point out, however, that as long as external supplies to Austria are confined to food, Austrian economy will have to remain on relief basis. Austria must be given means to procure raw materials and some capital equipment to reactivate industry so that it can produce for own needs and export enough to pay for essential imports. Suggest therefore Allied Council be asked immediately to invite UNRRA to send experts to Austria to survey requirements.
- 5. Foregoing has been informally discussed with CAD,¹⁵ War Dept. Their view is that we should insist strongly in Council of Foreign Ministers on (1) full Russian contribution to Austrian relief on basis of relief standards advocated by us, and (2) principle of reliance on normal pre-war supply sources. Consequently, War Dept. is not in accord with paras. 2 and 3 of this telegram. [Clayton.]

Soviets indicated willingness to lower somewhat their demands on Austria, e.g., as to capitalization of proposed corporation. However, shortly thereafter Renner is reported to have instructed his representatives for political reasons to suspend all discussions. Apparently that is where matter now stands. Meanwhile Soviets indicated there was no longer need for proposed Austrian trade delegation to proceed to Moscow as planned.

Re Soviet interest in Danube shipping (my 236, September 20 16) a Soviet representative in July asked Donaudampfschiffahrt Gesellschaft 17 to prepare proposals for Austrian-Soviet corporation to take over and operate DDSG properties (DDSG was originally an Austrian enterprise controlling bulk of non-German shipping on Danube). After Anschluss control was acquired by Hermann Goering Works.¹⁸ At present about half DDSG fleet is under Soviet flag and about half is held by US forces above Linz. DDSG accordingly submitted plans under which "foreign interests", including USSR, would acquire about 40% stock interest and hold veto power over appointment of Vorstand 19 members. Soviet representatives have made no counterproposals and Director General of DDSG 20 has impression they are not greatly interested. However, some Austrians, e.g., Joham, Director General of Credit Anstalt, feel apprehension of future Soviet pressure in this field.

Soviet railroad experts soon after occupation indicated considerable interest in Austrian railroad system, preparing and requiring urgent printing of a book in Russian containing compendious information. 300 copies were printed and marked "for official use only".

- 5. If by 1 October no agreement has been reached in the Control Council, the Commander in Chief, U.S. Forces of Occupation in Austria, and the Commanding General, U.S. Forces, European Theater, should effect necessary arrangements so that all Germans from United States zone in Austria will be moved to United States zone in Germany by 1 November 1945.
- 6. Although implementation of this directive may inconvenience United States military authorities in Germany the move is considered to be required by urgent political and economic necessity.

The United States Military Commissioner for Austria (Clark) to the Joint Chiefs of Staff²³

[VIENNA,] September 29, 1945.

War Series PV 7803. My views with respect to the extension of the authority of the Renner government are as follows:

The position taken by the representative of the United States on the Allied Council for Austria should rest on, (1) the basic interests of the United States, and (2) our international commitments. With respect to (1), our interests reside in the reestablishment of a free and independent Austria and in making a success of four-power international cooperation in Austria. With respect to (2), our international obligations are to be found in the Moscow Declaration, the EAC protocol on control machinery,²⁴ and in the Potsdam Communiqué. Specifically, the EAC protocol provides that one of the primary tasks of the Allied Council is to secure the establishment as soon as possible of a central administrative machine, and the Potsdam Communiqué stated that the Soviets, British and the United States agreed to examine the question of the extension of authority of the Austrian provisional government to all of Austria after the entry of American and British forces into Vienna.

A copy of this telegram was sent for information to the Secretary of State. The agreement between the Governments of the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the United Kingdom and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on control machinery in Austria, signed at a meeting of the European Advisory Commission in London on July 4, 1945, is printed in Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, p. 351. For documentation regarding the agreement on control machinery, see ibid., pp. 347-356; ibid., vol. 11, pp. 668-685; and ante, pp. 1-160 ff. passim.

In my opinion there is no disagreement at this time among the four occupying powers, with the possible exception of the British, on the proposition that an Austrian central administrative machine is an urgent necessity. This same view is strongly supported by Austrian public opinion. The question presented is whether to utilize the Renner government as such a machine.

In favor of such action it may be stated that:

- (1) The Renner regime is made up of officials of the Socialist, Communist and Peoples Parties, the three democratic political groups in Austria.
- (2) The consensus of opinion is that it commands the confidence and sympathy of the people to as great an extent as would any other non-elected group.
- (3) Insofar as can be judged from here, it would be as acceptable to foreign public opinion as any other non-elected group.
- (4) By and large, it is composed of patriotic and able men, several of whom have demonstrated capacities of leadership and gained national and provincial reputations prior to the annexation. All are free of any Nazi taint.
- (5) Although hurriedly constituted in April 1945 and of a coalition character, it has to date maintained admirable unity in its ranks.
- (6) With some exceptions, its legislative record is good and the vision and force displayed under extremely adverse conditions in planning for Austrian reconstruction commendable.
- (7) Its friendly relations with the Soviets place it in a favorable position, more so probably than any Austrian government that could be formed at this time, in the matter of the reestablishment of historical and traditional ties of all kinds with Czechoslovakia and the Danubian area generally.
- (8) From the first day of its existence it openly proclaimed its intention to submit to modification through consultation with the western provinces at the earliest practical date.
- (9) In harmony with No. 8, it has within the past few days successfully held a Laender Conference, composed of eight delegates from each of the nine Austrian provinces. These delegates represented the three democratic political parties and the provincial government of each province. The Conference, therefore, as nearly represents an expression of the peoples' will as could be had without the holding of an election.
- (10) Among the principal results of the Laender Conference were the following:
- (a) Expression in a resolution of a desire for speedy recognition of the Renner government.

(b) Of seven new appointees to the Cabinet (two Cabinet posts and five Under Secretaries) the Peoples Party obtained five, the Socalists one, and the Communists one. This meets, in a way, the previous complaints of the western provinces, where the Peoples Party formerly predominated, that they should have more representation in the government.

(c) Every province in the U.S., British and French zones is represented through these new appointments.

(d) The controversial matter of having the police under a Communist Minister of Interior was settled through a formula establishing two new agencies. First, a commission will be appointed with jurisdiction in all questions of public safety composed of two members of the Peoples Party, two Socialists, and one Communist. It is to be headed by a new Under Secretary in the Ministry of the Interior from the Peoples Party. The commission functions in agreement with and under the chairmanship of the Minister of the Interior (Communist), and its decisions must be unanimous. Incidentally, this latter provision follows the standard practice of the Renner government which requires unanimous decisions at Cabinet level. The members of the commission have the right of appeal to the Political Cabinet.

Second, three-man advisory councils will be created with one member from each of the democratic parties. These councils, of which there will be nine, will act in an advisory capacity to the security offices (Sicherheitsdirektionen) in each of the nine Austrian provinces.

(e) It suggested November 25 as the date for a national election for the provincial diets and a Nationalrat. The preparations for and supervision of such elections are to be entrusted to the previously mentioned five-man commission acting under the chairmanship of the new Under Secretary in the Ministry of the Interior (Peoples Party). Its decisions must be unanimous; in case of disagreement the Political Cabinet decides.

Against the utilization it may be argued that:

- (1) The Renner government was formed and has up until the present functioned under Soviet control, whether nominal or otherwise. It is thus suspected of being unduly susceptible to Soviet influence. However, it did resist Soviet pressure for an Austro-Soviet oil contract.
- (2) Although Communist strength in Austria was always negligible and no Communist ever was appointed or elected to any high office, it contains three Communists of Cabinet rank, two of them holding powerful and important posts, namely Interior and Education.
- (3) The police being under the Communist Minister of the Interior has caused some concern and it may be argued that the new commission and the three-man advisory councils are no guarantee of the removal of such dangers as may exist. This question is being given further study. Apropos of the matter of influencing elections, which is frequently mentioned in connection with control of the police, there are various ways this could be done in Austria today without requiring any help whatsoever from the police. For example, favoritism in such matters as automobiles, gasoline, travel permits, food and clothing rations, and glass for shattered window panes.

- (4) The Laender Conference only changed the government by adding new people and new offices to it. None of the old appointees were removed. (The Minister of Agriculture, a non-controversial figure, resigned on account of ill health, and was replaced by a member of the same party.)
- (5) The Under Secretary counter-signature device was retained. This has been objected to abroad but, in spite of the administrative difficulties involved, it has worked well in Austria, providing as it does effective intra-party check.

To sum up, the Renner regime in its composition and on its record is probably as satisfactory from all standpoints as any other group that could be formed. Given the urgent need of an Austrian central administrative machine to facilitate the work of the Allied Commission, it is my considered opinion that the United States should agree to the extension of the authority of the Renner government throughout Austria providing we can satisfy ourselves that the present police set up will permit free elections to be held. The United States should couple such agreement with a definite undertaking on the part of the Renner government to hold a national election for a new government before the end of 1945. This will insure that within three months the Austrian people can have a government of their own choosing, and this very fact renders less important any objections that may be had to the United States taking an affirmative position on the utilization of the Renner regime.²⁵

In a following cable I will set forth the British position.²⁶

CLARK

740.00119 Control (Austria)/10-145

Memorandum of Conversation Between the United States Military Commissioner for Austria (Clark) and Dr. Karl Renner²⁷

VIENNA, September 29, 1945.

After an exchange of amenities, Dr. Renner said that he was pleased to be able to bring General Clark the good news that the recent laender conference had gone very well. General Clark brought up the question of the police, and Dr. Renner explained that the conference had not been able to remove Honner as Minister of the Interior. This was ²⁵ In telegram 268, September 30, from Vienna, Mr. Erhardt reported that he fully concurred in General Clark's views as set forth in this telegram (740.00119-Control (Austria)/9-3045).

²⁶ War Series PV-7824, September 30, p. 617.

[&]quot;Sent to the Department in despatch 257, from Vienna, October 1; received October 11.

principally for two reasons, first, insistence upon Honner's removal would likely have embittered the Soviets, and second, it would have opened the way for agitation and trouble-breeding demonstrations on the part of the Austrian Communists. Dr. Renner expressed confidence, however, that the matter had been effectively handled in another way. He then described the five-man Commission established by the conference with jurisdiction in all public safety matters and explained how it would work in actual practice. He laid great stress on the fact that in case of disagreement the Political Cabinet would have the power of decision and not Honner. General Clark called attention to the fact that a Communist was on the Political Cabinet,28 too, and asked Dr. Renner what would happen if the Political Cabinet disagreed on any particular question. To this Dr. Renner replied that he could do exactly like he had done on two previous occasions when the Political Cabinet was deadlocked. He would not permit the question to come to a vote in the Political Cabinet but he would simply say that it was apparent to him that the will of his Ministers was to have the matter decided in a certain way and that on his own responsibility he was deciding it in that way. Anybody who wasn't satisfied with his decision could resign.

Dr. Renner said that the other check imposed by the conference on Honner's police power, namely, the Advisory Councils to the police headquarters in the provinces and Vienna, was very important. The general public, he said, had overlooked this fact. He explained that the decisions of these councils did not have to be unanimous, and he seemed to feel that such councils would exert a real and wholesome influence.

There followed an extended discussion of the Vienna police. Dr. Renner admitted that the heads of the police in practically all of the districts in Vienna were Communists. This situation was due to the fact that when the Russians entered Vienna in April they had installed Communists in these positions. Dr. Renner then said that Dr. Pamer, 29 Police President in Vienna, and an old-line career police official, had been forced on Honner. Pamer had set up his own secret-service to check on these Communist district leaders, and had obtained a great deal of adverse information on many of them. As a result, two or three had been dismissed and replaced by non-Communists. In addition, Dr. Renner said that the Socialists and the Communists in Vienna had recently reached an understanding whereby several men were to be removed, and he thought that by the time the election was held this fall perhaps only one-third of the district police chiefs would be Communists. With regard to the rank and file of the police employees in Vienna, Dr. Renner said that it was often asserted that they were Communists also but in reality they were not.

²⁸ Johann Koplenig.

General Clark asked Dr. Renner whether it would be possible to hold free and honest elections this fall. Dr. Renner, with great confidence, replied in the affirmative. In support of his views he described the five-man commission under a Peoples Party Under Secretary in the Ministry of the Interior which would have complete jurisdiction in election questions. He laid great stress on the fact that this new machinery completely by-passed Honner. As to the voting in the provinces, especially Lower Austria, he said that he had no doubts whatsoever that honest elections could be held. This was due to the fact that Austria had splendid election laws and election machinery. The officials in the polling booths would be composed at least ninetenths of representatives of the Peoples Party and Socialists. Dr. Renner said that the City of Vienna was the only place which offered any real possibilities of manipulations of the elections but that he personally felt sure that even here the Communists would not be able to exercise any determining influence. Dr. Renner said that for his part he would be glad to see the occupying powers supervise the elections in some way and in this connection he said that the mere presence of the troops would exert a good influence.

At the end of this discussion of elections, General Clark asked Dr. Renner if he could guarantee free and honest elections. To this Dr. Renner replied in the affirmative.

Dr. Renner said that no members of the Nazi party should be allowed to vote at this election because they were the very people who had scoffed at elections and all democratic processes.

General Clark then referred to the Allied Council meeting scheduled for October one, and said that he had talked today with both Marshal Koniev and General McCreery. General Clark said he did not know what the Allied Council might decide about the provisional government but that he wanted to go over with Dr. Renner some of the points that might come up at the Council meeting. These points were as follows:

(1) Extension of authority of the government. Dr. Renner said that he would be satisfied with this because it was the essence of the matter providing as it would for his authority in matters of internal administration. He said that he, of course, would prefer recognition (Anerkennung) because it was more dignified, would give his government more prestige and increased scope and power in dealing with the neighboring states.

(2) General Clark said that whatever the Allied Council might do, it would have to be clearly understood that the Allied Commission would remain the supreme authority in Austria. Dr. Renner said that he thoroughly understood this.

(3) Would Dr. Renner obligate himself to hold elections this year. He said he would.

(4) General Clark said that the Allied Commission would reserve to itself the exercise of certain functions such as frontier control, diplomatic representation, etc. Dr. Renner said he was agreeable to this.

(5) General Clark said that the Allied Commission might decide in some way to assume more direct control or supervision of the police. Dr. Renner said he would be pleased if this were done.

(6) General Clark said that the Allied Commission would want to review all the old laws passed by the Provisional Government, many of which might be acceptable but others would require modification.

Dr. Renner said he was agreeable to this.

(7) General Clark said that the Commission would likely wish to pass on new laws before they were promulgated. Dr. Renner said this would be quite satisfactory but that the Commission should do this promptly because some laws were of an urgent character and could not wait a long time for decision.

(8) General Clark said that laws, ordinances, etc., put into effect by the occupying powers could not be set aside by anything the Provisional Government might do. Dr. Renner said he understood this.

At the close of this discussion about legislation, Dr. Renner made a general remark to the effect that he would be quite satisfied if his cabinet could go ahead and discuss such laws as seem necessary and then bring them to the Commission for approval.

Dr. Renner then said that he wanted to bring up something with General Clark which he considered to be of supreme importance. He said that in Austria today he could strongly feel the political tug-of-war between the USSR and Great Britain. This made it extremely difficult for him when he had to do something which he knew would offend one or the other of these powers. The Soviets, for example, had helped Austria in a time of great need and they wanted payment for this political debt. He needed, he said, to lean on an objective friend like the United States. He referred in this connection to the negotiations for the oil contract and said that the support of the United States had been very helpful in enabling him to resist Soviet pressure. He also referred to the Soviet interest in Danube shipping. This was a ticklish matter and he would need all the help he could get in trying to reach a solution which would be fair to Austria and all concerned. General Clark replied that he would be just as helpful as possible at all times.

Dr. Renner said that the Soviets were extraordinarily "tough" in their dealings and that they were meticulous in even the smallest matters; for example, he referred to an Austrian Trade Delegation which the Soviets wanted to come to Moscow. The Soviets had clearly, although not openly, linked the sending of this mission with the oil contract, and when the latter failed to materialize the Soviets had called off the Trade Delegation visit to Moscow.

At the close of the conversation, General Clark said that there were some three thousand political prisoners in jail in the American zone in Vienna. He had ordered an immediate investigation as to why these people were in jail. Any of them who were there for a good cause he proposed to take out and put in special camps. Those whom he found to be held without good reason he intended to set free. Dr. Renner indicated that he was in agreement with General Clark's proposal.

Just before leaving, Dr. Renner said to General Clark that he was glad to see a General in politics, especially a man of action like General Clark.

The United States Military Commissioner for Austria (Clark) to the Joint Chiefs of Staff 30

[VIENNA,] September 30, 1945—11 p. m.

War Series PV-7824. 1. Referring to my PV 7803, 29 September re extension of authority of Renner Government, I can now report some local British views:

a. They may be willing to have the Provisional Government as constituted by Laender Conference possess authority throughout Austria, but they strongly desire that it be instituted as a Government de novo rather than an extension of the authority of an existing government as proposed at Potsdam.

b. Accordingly they want Allied Council to review all past legislation of Renner Government and to decide which laws shall be made valid throughout Austria. In the case of laws found acceptable they would like to have them formally reenacted. All new laws should be submitted to Allied Council for approval before promulgation.

c. They want the Provisional Government to be not only under general supervision of Allied Council but under detailed control to prevent "free wheeling" by Government.

d. They want eight governmental functions to be exercised exclusively by Allied Commission:

Foreign Affairs and diplomatic representation;
 Delimitation of frontiers;

(3) Movement of Austrians and foreigners in and out of Austria;

(4) Displaced persons; (5) Demilitarization;

(6) Construction, operation and control of all forms of aircraft, equipment and landing areas;

³⁰ This telegram was sent for information to the Secretary of State in London.

(7) Settlement of all questions relating to foreign-owned property;

(8) Approval of members of the central and provincial provisional governments; and of the head officials of the central and provincial administrations.

e. They want certain other functions to be exercised by Provisional Government only under direction of Allied Commission and with its prior consent. These include rationing and price control, allocation and distribution of food and other resources, other economic matters, central banking, approval of national budget, and settlement of all questions relating to expropriated Austrian-owned properties.

f. They will press strongly for a thorough-going reorganization of all branches of Austrian police, under Allied supervision and direction. They feel this should be made a condition to the extension of authority of Provisional Government. They have in British element of Allied Commission a staff of British police experts including a high-ranking officer from Scotland Yard. General McCreery has approached me with a view to securing my consent to placing the Scotland Yard officer in charge of Austrian police. They will supply the police with some British equipment and transport.

g. They are now willing to have elections held this year, but even after the elected government takes office they will want to maintain close supervision over it, arguing that since so many Austrians are now away a second election twelve to eighteen months hence will be necessary to ensure establishment of a thoroughly representative Austrian Government.

- 2. Some of the British points would, if insisted upon, probably cause a deadlock in Allied Council. They are aware that this would seriously delay Austrian reconstruction and under certain conditions might lead to chaos.
- 3. British are most anxious to have us present united front to Soviets, arguing that otherwise Soviets can play us off against each other. Russians on other hand are extremely sensitive to any appearance of a US-UK bloc.
- 4. Soviets are prepared to recommend recognition of Provisional Government as broadened by Laender Conference, and have it function under the guidance and control of Allied Council as supreme authority in Austria. They have expressed themselves as agreeable to free elections in near future. On police problem they object to singling out for special Allied scrutiny or control one of the two ministries (Interior) headed by a Communist. This they say would be a blow to Soviet prestige. Accordingly they propose that reliance be placed on the agreed control by the Allied Commission over all ministries, including Interior.
- 5. In an hour's conversation with Renner yesterday he said he would be satisfied with extension of his government's authority although he frankly stated he preferred recognition, because recognition would give the government greater prestige and enable it more effectively to deal with neighboring states. In either case Renner accepts fact that Allied Commission will remain supreme authority. He expressed complete confidence in government's ability to hold free and honest elections in 1945. On the police question he said the safeguards provided by Laender Conference would effectively curb possibility of abuse by Honner or Communists.

6. Question of extension of authority of Provisional Government and related questions are on agenda for tomorrow's Allied Council meeting. I discussed these questions privately with both Koniev and McCreery yesterday and made some progress toward reconciling these views. My own views are set forth in PV 7803.

The United States Military Commissioner in Austria (Clark) to the Joint Chiefs of Staff ³¹

VIENNA, 1 October 1945.

PV 7841. Referring to my PV 7803 of September 29, at a meeting of the Allied Council on October 1, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

1. "After considering the memorandum of the head of the Provisional Austrian Government, Doctor Karl Renner, dated 29 September 1945,³² communicating the agreed decisions of the Austrian Provincial Conference which took place from 24 to 26 September 1945, the members of the Allied Council recommend to their respective government that the authority of the Provisional Austrian Government, broadened as a result of the Laender Conference, should extend to the whole of Austria, subject to the conditions enumerated in paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5.

2. The Provisional Austrian Government will function under the guidance and control of the supreme authority in Austria: the Allied Council. The control over the ministries and departments of the government will be exercised through the machinery of the Allied Commission. Certain functions of government which will be the subject of a separate recommendation will be reserved to the Allied

3. One of the main duties of the Provisional Austrian Government will be to hold free elections not later than December 1945.

4. The Provisional Austrian Government is empowered to enact laws applying to the whole of Austria, provided that they shall first be submitted for approval to the Allied Council and provided that this shall not defeat [affect?] the validity, within the part of Austria occupied by the forces of the Soviet Union, of any provision enacted between May 1, 1945, and the date on which a new law applying to the whole of Austria is enacted in its place. In this connection, the Allied Council takes note that the Provincial Conference decided to examine the provisions referred to above and requires that the result of this study shall be communicated to it for consideration.

5. Nothing in this resolution affects the validity of any Military Government legislation now in force or hereafter to be enacted.

6. A copy of the memorandum submitted by the head of the Provisional Government in Austria, Doctor Karl Renner, will be forwarded to the Council of Foreign Ministers in London."

The Council also passed a resolution by [on] the Democratic Press in Austria, the principal provision of which is that there is to be no censorship. However, certain conditions are set forth to guide the press, violations of which will result in penalties.³³

A further resolution was approved prohibiting effective December 1 the wearing of military uniforms to former personnel of the German Army and to Austrian civilians unless dyed a color other than gray or khaki.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, October 1, 1945—3 p. m. [Received October 1—2:02 p. m.]

10181. Delsec 86. From the Secretary. Please ask the Joint Chiefs to send the following to General Clark at Vienna.³⁴.

The Council of Foreign Ministers has approved the following two telegrams to be sent by the Govts of the US, the UK, the USSR and France to their respective Commanders-in-Chief in Austria. The telegrams were approved Sept 29, and Sept 30, respectively.

Begin First Message

1. The following communication has been sent to the Allied Control Commissions in Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary and to the Govts of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia.³⁵

2. The Council of Foreign Ministers has decided to clarify through the Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria is printed in the Gazette of the Allied Commission for Austria, No. 1, December 1945-January 1946, p. 28.

and also with the Govts of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia whether there are in the above listed countries surpluses of foodstuffs which could be used for supplying Austria.

3. Therefore by instruction of the Council of Foreign Ministers I request you to inform me whether blank country can set aside foodstuffs for supplying Austria. In case there are such surpluses the Council of Foreign Ministers would like to learn in what quantities they can be set aside for Austria now and from the proceeds of the next harvest.

4. The Council requests that the information in respect to the present surplus be made available within one month and as to the next harvest within three months.

5. On the basis of this information which will be communicated to the Allied Council and on the basis of a study to be made by the Allied Council of the possibility of obtaining the maximum quantity of food from Austria itself both at the present time and from the next harvest the Allied Council should examine the long term arrangements for food supplies to Austria and report the result to the Council of Foreign Ministers with such further information on the supply position in Austria as the Allied Council may deem useful.

Begin Second Message

1. With reference to the question of ration scales and consumption levels to which the Allied Council in Vienna referred in their reports on Austrian food supplies the Council of Foreign Ministers consider that the ration scales for the deficiency areas in Austria should be based on a per capita temporary minimum ration of 1,550 calories a day for the normal consumer which has been agreed by the Allied Govts for the present time maintaining the principle of differentiation for the various groups of the population on the basis of the type of labor performed.

2. It is for the Allied Council to estimate both the quantity of food which can be obtained from local production and the quantity which remains to be imported in order to reach the above standard.

3. This scale should be increased by the Allied Council to 2,000 calories or more as more local or imported supplies become available.

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Acting Secretary of State

Vienna, October 2, 1945—3 p. m. [Received October 2—2:22 p. m.]

276. General Clark sent a message (PV-7833, Oct. 1 to Agwar) to be passed to Dept ³⁶ for info giving text of resolution approved Allied Council meeting Oct 1 recommending Govts of occupying powers agree to extension of authority of Austrian Provisional Govt throughout Austria.

³⁶ Not found in Department files, but see telegram PV-7841, from General Clark to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, October 1, p. 619.

Resolution provided that control over the ministries and depts of the Govt would be exercised through the machinery of Allied Commission. This gives Commission leverage for dealing with police or any other agency of the Govt and Council, realizing that further study of police is both desirable and urgent, decided that Executive Committee should place the matter on agenda of its next meeting. Also safeguards established by Laender Conference apparently were regarded by Council as representing substantial progress in solution of controversial police matter. McCreery, appearing satisfied by above considerations, was the one who at Council meeting moved to strike out a paragraph in the resolution originally proposed by him which would have singled out police, putting it under supervisory control of Council.

My impressions are that the major consideration influencing all concerned at Council meeting was the acute and urgent need for a central Austrian administration.

As expected (my 246, Sept 24) General Clark today mediated successfully in reconciling Soviet and British viewpoints.

ERHARDT

863.24/10-545

The Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

Washington, October 5, 1945.

Dear Mr. Secretary: Estimates indicate that it will be necessary to import, annually, to Austria 761,000 tons of subsistence supplies and 1,800,000 tons of coal. These tonnages provide a minimum standard of living and do not include imports of supplies other than coal and food, which may be required at a later date to further the objectives of the occupation. Since the United States is the residual world supplier of these commodities, imports will have a direct effect upon the United States economy.

The supply problem in Austria differs from that in Germany, in that there does not appear to be any hope that supply requirements will decrease in the future nor that the Austrian Government shall at any time in the future be able to reimburse the United States for the cost of these imports. The pre-war economy of Austria was insufficient to provide for the needs of its people. This insufficiency is now exaggerated by restrictions to the free exchange of goods within Austria resulting from the zoning of responsibilities by the occupying powers, and by barriers to trade existing between Austria and other Central European and Balkan countries. Normally these latter areas exported substantial quantities of food to Austria.

The War Department, through negotiations by its military representatives in Austria, is exerting every effort to reestablish a free exchange of foodstuffs and other commodities within Austria. The Allied Council for Austria held its first meeting on 14 September 1945. It is hoped that a Quadripartite Resources Board can be established soon. However, the British Government has been reluctant to participate in any quadripartite organization in Austria until consideration has been given to the supply of Austria as a whole, particularly the utilization of the countries of the Danube Basin as a primary source of supply. The Russian Government opposes this view, and has proposed unilateral responsibility for the separate occupied zones of Austria itself.

In view of the close interdependence between civilian supply for Austria and the complex trade problems existing in Central Europe, the War Department does not feel that it can adequately protect the interests of the United States Government without resorting to negotiation on the governmental level. It is, therefore, recommended that appropriate steps be taken through the State Department to negotiate or otherwise arrange such agreements as are necessary to insure the maximum utilization of Central European resources to reduce the import requirements from the United States to Austria.³⁷

Sincerely yours,

178. After examination of changes in Renner Cabinet made by Laender conference, and resolution of Allied Council Oct 1 (PV 7841), ⁸⁷ Secretary Byrnes, in a reply of November 19, informed the Secretary of War that the Department had made inquiries among the various eastern and central European Governments as to the availability of supplies. He also indicated the Department's readiness to negotiate if negotiation should prove possible. (863.24/10-1545)

³⁸ A memorandum of October 14, prepared in the office of the United States Political Adviser for Austrian affairs regarding this telegram, contains the following comments:

[&]quot;The Department of State's views regarding the Provisional Austrian Government have now been received in telegram 178 of October 11, 1945.

[&]quot;These views are stated in the form of 'recommendations' because 'instructions' come to the Commanding General, not from the State Department but only from the Joint Chiefs of Staff through the War Department.

[&]quot;Normally the spokesman abroad for the United States Government as a whole is the diplomatic representative acting on instructions received from the Department of State, after the latter has obtained the views and recommendations of any other interested agencies of our Government. At present in Austria the spokesman of 'the United States Government' as a whole is the Commanding General, who receives instructions through the War Department from the Joint (Footnote continued on p. 624)

Dept considers that reorganization and modifications have met objections raised in previous instructions and constitute the maximum which can be achieved under existing international circumstances. Although reconstitution does not follow exactly recommendations previously transmitted by Dept, changes in organization of Renner Cabinet will be accepted in view of the following considerations:

1. Laender conference is in accord with Austrian constitutional procedure and gives Renner Cabinet legal basis which it did not possess prior to conference and action of council on Oct 1.

2. Reconstitution of Cabinet to include provincial representatives has met basic criticism that Cabinet was predominantly Viennese. Dept considers that in its present organization, Cabinet is the most representative Govt obtainable in Austria until national elections are held.

3. Creation of a commission headed by Under Secretary of Ministry of Interior and advisory councils in provincial security offices to supervise all questions of public safety has met objections concerning Communist control of police functions. Dept is willing to accept this compromise in view of fact that transfer of control of police to military government would involve major administrative difficulties, and at same time removal of Communist Minister would be politically inexpedient. With reference to elections, Dept considers that early elections based on procedure in Austrian law under supervision of new Commission in Ministry of Interior would offset tendency to influence elections.

Although there is objection to system of Under Secretaries in various ministries as unprecedented in Austrian administrative procedure as well as giving Communists veto power in all ministries, Dept is willing to accept Gen Clark's judgment (PV 7803 Sep 29) that device has worked well in providing inter-party check on administrative action.

In view of these considerations and the urgent need to establish a central Austrian administrative machine to function in Austria as Chiefs of Staff after they have considered the views and recommendations of any other interested agencies of our Government. Although the views of our Government as a whole on foreign political questions are based primarily on views of the Department of State, the latter are expressed not in the form of instructions to the United States representative in Austria (the Commanding General) but in the form of recommendations or advice conveyed through the Political Adviser to the Commanding General or to the Joint Chiefs of Staff who alone can issue 'instructions' to the United States representative in Austria.

[&]quot;The State Department's telegram 178 thus contains the formal, final views of that Department even though it is in the form of 'recommendations' which the Political Adviser can convey to the Commanding General, and which have no doubt been simultaneously conveyed by the State Department to the War Department for the Joint Chiefs of Staff for consideration in connection with any 'instructions' which the latter may wish to issue. The recommendations contained in it can be carried out without further reference to Washington as far as State is concerned. The Commanding General is therefore free in his discretion to proceed to carry them out unless in his judgment he would prefer first to have formal instructions from JCS or thinks that JCS views might be contrary to those of State." (Vienna Legation Files, 1945, Part 24, 801)

a whole, Dept recommends that the Renner Cabinet as reconstituted by the Laender conference be recognized as a provisional régime to operate within limits contained in Council resolution of Oct 1. Dept further recommends that following steps be taken immediately following a four power decision on recognition:

1. Creation of a central Austrian administrative machine and extension of its authority throughout Austria as a whole by integration of existing provincial administration in various zones of occupation with national ministries in provisional régime.

2. Establishment of freedom of movement on an interzonal basis for Austrian Govt personnel, business men and essential workers; interzonal freedom of transportation and interzonal freedom of communication in mail, telephone and telegraph services as soon as possible in accordance with resolutions of Allied Council Sep 20.39

3. Holding of national elections no later than Dec 1945 to establish Govt freely chosen by Austrian people themselves to replace the provisional régime. Dept does not consider that elections this year will affect supreme authority of four commanders during coming winter since authority now vested in Allied Council can be modified only by action of Govts of the four occupying powers. Dept recommends that in elections general supervision should be exercised by Allied authorities in order to insure that procedures utilized are in accordance with Austrian constitution, particularly Article 95 and Article 119 40 of Constitution as amended in 1929, and that full and unprejudiced use is made in all zones of local election laws (Landtagswahlordnung 41 and Gemeindewahlordnung) 42 promulgated before 1930. Allied supervision is also necessary to give widest interpretation consistent with military security to proclamation of Council Sep 11 on activities of political parties, 43 to fulfill provisions in US directive on freedom of speech, press, and assembly, and to prevent interference with activities of single political parties.

Dept agrees with Brit view that preliminary agreement on status and functions of provisional régime is desirable to facilitate discussions in Allied Council, but considers that points raised in PV 7824 Sep 30 can be disposed of as they arise in the Council meetings rather than making them the condition of recognition. Dept does not believe that agreement can be reached on all questions raised by the Brit prior to a four power decision on status of the Renner Cabinet and that proclamation of Allied Council's supreme authority in Austria will automatically assure Allied supervision and control of the 2162. After Quadripartite Financial Committee in Vienna had approved all details of projected conversion of Reichsmarks in Austria into AM schillings scheduled to begin Oct 15 Soviet representative on ACC insisted on Oct 4 that currency conversion be postponed. Subsequently, Marshal Koniev proposed in Oct 8 meeting of ACC direct conversion of Reichsmarks and AM schillings now circulating into Austrian national schillings. Koniev argued desirability of such program on ground that Allies are on eve of recognizing Austrian Provisional Govt hence conversion into AM schillings has "lost its meaning" and Austria should be permitted to have its own national currency.⁴⁸

You are requested to impress the Soviet authorities with this Govt's concern with developing situation. Objective of proposed conversion into AM schillings was to effect immediate separation of Austrian currency system from that of Germany as necessary concomitant to Austrian independence from Germany. Conversion would also permit regularization of Austrian currency situation pending eventual conversion into indigenous Austrian currency. Possibility that Aus-

This information had been reported to the Department in telegram 309 from the Political Adviser in Vienna, October 9. In the same telegram the Department was also informed that U.S. financial authorities in Austria felt that because of the inability of the Austrian Provisional Government to print currency rapidly enough there would be an insufficient stock of Austrian notes available to cover Allied expenditures if conversion directly into Austrian schillings were undertaken. Such direct conversion would run the risk of being excessively deflationary and might lead to failure unless it were delayed an undesirably long period. Accordingly Mr. Erhardt intended to continue to press for conversion into Allied Military schillings prior to conversion into Austrian national schillings. (863.51/10–945) trian Govt may be recognized by Occupying Powers does not reduce the importance of these considerations. This Govt agrees with position taken by Soviet representative in ACC that Austria should have own national currency and does not expect that AM schillings will be maintained in circulation indefinitely. However, conversion directly into Austrian national schillings not possible for extended period during which feared that heavy movement of Reichsmarks into Austria will continue thus blocking effective financial reconstruction. In view these considerations this Govt urges that Soviet accept plan for immediate conversion already agreed upon.⁴⁹

For your info USACA ⁵⁰ estimates last practicable date for beginning conversion into AM schillings is about Nov 5 owing to scheduled Austrian elections in later Nov and subsequent winter weather which will impede necessary transport and communications.

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

[Vienna, October 18, 1945—4:30 p.m.]

PV 8301. October 11 General Clark received from War Department War 74204 October 9 containing substance of State Department's 137 52 (my 325, October 11, 1945 53).

Prior to Executive Committee meeting of October 16 the French member put forward a French proposal indicating general support for having UNRRA undertake relief and rehabilitation operations in Austria. Both this proposal and U.S. proposal referred to in my 325 were placed before executive committee, and committee chose United States proposal for consideration. After brief discussion it was agreed to submit to Allied Council a draft cable to UNRRA inviting latter to send two or three technical representatives to Austria to confer on possible working arrangements, to obtain data on extent of Austrian requirements, and to investigate problems of transportation and distribution. Although United States proposal as introduced also recommended steps to invite UNRRA formally to undertake relief and rehabilitation operations, no action was taken on such steps by executive committee. It was pointed out that inviting technical representatives would not commit Allied Council to inviting UNRRA to undertake relief and rehabilitation operations. Department will be advised of Council action on cable.54

Some doubt exists here whether United States Government is definitely in favor of having UNRRA undertake such operations. It is reasoned that to the extent that UNRRA takes over burden of civilian supply, United States will bear 70 to 80 per cent of the cost with no possibility of reimbursement, whereas if Allied Military Forces carry the burden the United States outlay is limited to supplies for United States Zone, plus at present supplies for French Zone for to Austria. (840.50 UNRRA/10-1145)

64 By means of telegram P-4577, October 29, the Political Adviser reported that the cable was approved by the Allied Council and despatched to UNRRA on October 20 (Vienna Legation Files, 1945, 848-UNRRA).

This telegram, not printed, informed the Political Adviser that the Department had sent a letter to the War Department suggesting that since Austrian relief requirements were still unclear, General Clark should propose to the Allied Council that a team of two or three UNRRA experts be allowed to survey the situation in Austria so that an UNRRA relief program could begin (840.50-UNRRA/9-2745).

so Not printed. In this telegram the Political Adviser informed the Department that as a result of discussions between General Clark and UNRRA officials a proposal had been drafted for submission to the Allied Council inviting UNRRA to study Austrian relief needs and to extend relief and rehabilitation operations to Austria (840.50 UNRRA (10.1145) which some reimbursement may ultimately be received. I would appreciate further advice from Department as to its views, and if possible some appraisal of present sentiment in Congress re the necessary appropriation.

Advice which I have given informally on this question up to the present is that, considering all factors, UNRRA should undertake relief and rehabilitation operations in Austria. If this is confirmed, I assume it follows that Department favors having UNRRA carry as large a portion of the supply burden as it proves capable of carrying.

357. Member of Renner Cabinet has reported to us confidentially (my 323, Oct 11 55) that deliveries of gasoline supplies to Provincial [Provisional?] Govt from Zistersdorf have been cut off by Soviet authorities on basis of technical excuses. Such supplies stated to amount to 10,000 liters monthly, none of which received in Oct. As result Govt is seriously short of gasoline and Renner reported extremely nervous about situation. Inquiry was unofficially [made?] if gasoline could be obtained from other sources.

Informant believes purpose of Soviet pressure is to secure signature of Soviet-Austrian oil contract. Although negotiations on contract have not yet been resumed he expects they will be as soon as Provincial [Provisional?] Govt is recognized. Others share this opinion. Since Soviet pressure can be exerted in many ways we must seriously reckon with probability Renner will not be able to resist indefinitely signing contract.

Meanwhile situation American oil companies here rapidly deteriorating (my 324, Oct 11 ⁵⁶). Vacuum Oil Company and British controlled Shell Floridsdorfer Mineral Oel Fabrik A.G, have addressed joint letter to Provisional Govt's Ministry of Trade and Commerce with copies to us and to British stating that refineries owned by them have recently been subjected to stringent control by Soviet Oil Administration. Every order received for large quantities of oil products must now be approved by Soviet control officers acting on orders of Soviet Oil Administration and deliveries have already been held up. (Griffa of Socony Vacuum reports refining will stop Oct 20 because of limited storage capacity.) Letter expresses urgent desire for Allied Commission control of all production and distribution of oil products in interests of all zones of Austria and with due regard for US and British property.

Feldman of Standard Oil reports that certain regular deliveries from Socony Vacuum and other normal sources have been refused and that their distribution operations are consequently confined to stocks on hand which are extremely limited.

Part II.⁵⁷ Quadripartite Committee on Petroleum Resources whose formation was ordered by Executive Committee on Oct 4 (my 323, Oct 11) has been organized as oil subcommittee of an existing fuel and power committee. Although it should be helpful in securing information, General Gruenther and I feel that a technical working committee at that level cannot be expected to achieve a solution of oil problem as it is now developing.

We hope this problem can soon be taken up directly with Soviet officials here at a higher level. However, since Soviets point to agreements reached at Potsdam as justifying their recent actions with respect to oil industry in Austria, satisfactory solution will depend upon an agreed interpretation of Potsdam agreements. The two fundamental questions are (1) whether "German foreign assets in western [eastern?] Austria" have actually become Soviet property already, as Soviets seem to assume and (2) whether "German foreign assets" include all property whose ownership was claimed by German nationals or German Govt at time of Soviet occupation of eastern Austria regardless of the time and circumstances of German acquisition.

- 1. We assume that the agreements reached at Potsdam did not establish Soviet ownership of German foreign assets and that before Soviet claims to such assets reparations account can be realized, further procedures or formalities of some kind must be carried out.
- 2. We assume that under United States interpretation "German foreign assets" means property of bona fide German ownership. In case of oil properties in Austria, the transfers to German ownership effected after Anschluss were in general executed in technically legal ways and with fair or at least not demonstrably unfair compensation. There was apparently not much haggling over price. What the Nazis wanted was to get control of the properties. However, the transfers after that date were in most cases made under pressure of one kind or another. Consequently, the most workable formula would be to treat as not binding all transfers of property to German ownership effected after March 13, 1938 except in cases where an appropriate judicial body finds after hearings that the transfers were agreed to by the former owners without pressure. Soviets would doubtless object to such a formula on ground that realization of many of their just claims would be tied up in judicial proceedings for a long time. Possible compromise would be a proviso that in cases where there is prima facie evidence that the transfer to German ownership was effected without substantial pressure, the property involved should be treated as "German foreign assets" subject to the right of the former owners to establish later that the transfers were made under pressure to recover their property.

In cases where the transfers were considered or determined to have been made under pressure, it would seem proper to restore the former owners or to the Austrian Provisional Govt or other govts in their behalf against refund of the consideration received with equitable adjustments for changes and transactions since the dates of transfer. The money or property so refunded would then presumably be considered German foreign assets and subject to reparations claims by the Soviets.

It would be helpful if Dept could send me urgently any background information or guidance bearing on these questions, including both substantive and procedural aspects.

War Series PV 8330. 1. At October 18th meeting of Executive Committee General Zheltov, who returned from Moscow on October 16th after two weeks visit there, stated that Koniev has received no instructions from Moscow concerning extension of authority of Provisional Austrian Government. Zheltov would give no hint as to action which Soviet Government is likely to take. He declined to consider a draft communication from Allied Council to Renner notifying him of action by the four governments concerning Austrian Provisional Government.

2. Extension of Austrian Provisional Government is on agenda for Allied Council meeting for October 20th. If Koniev has received no instructions by that time British, French and U. S. members will support a proposal to extend the authority of the Provisional Austrian Government to the British, French and U. S. zones since it is already effective in the Russian zone. We will carefully avoid the use of the term "recognition". We will also stress the importance of proceeding with the elections now tentatively scheduled for November 25th. If Koniev objects to the extension on the grounds that it will embarrass the Soviet Union or refuses to concur in the holding of the national elections you will be advised promptly before any communication is sent to Renner.

- 3. If Koniev has received instructions approving extension of the Provisional Government a communication from the Allied Council to Renner will be proposed which will conform generally to the October 1st resolution of the Allied Council sent to you in our PV 7841.
- 4. General McCreery feels that the Allied Council communication to Renner should enumerate functions of government which are reserved to the Allied Council. However this matter has not been thoroughly studied yet and I am certain that Soviets will not agree. In my opinion it will be a difficult matter to secure Soviet agreement on this subject either now or at a later date. All efforts thus far to secure attendance of the Soviet member of the committee to discuss the matter even on an informal basis have been unsuccessful.
- 5. It has become evident during the past 10 days that the Soviets are following delaying tactics in solving quadripartite problems. At yesterday's Executive Committee meeting Zheltov stated that he was not prepared to discuss six of the ten subjects on the agenda. The only point of importance which he would consider was the currency conversion program and in that discussion he merely reiterated the Soviet point of view that there should be only one conversion even if we must wait until April 1946 to accomplish it. Separate report is being dispatched to you on this subject today.

1. At the October 16 meeting of the Executive Committee, the Soviet representative challenged the figures previously presented with respect to the amount of Austrian national currency required for the conversion and the time required for printing. The Executive Committee therefore directed the Quadripartite Finance Committee to re-study these questions in consultation with Austrian representatives. At the Executive Committee meeting of 18 October the Finance Committee presented a report containing the following conclusions:

"a. The minimum quantity of notes required for conversion into Austrian National Schillings on the proposed partial basis under present conditions would be Schillings six billion with a supporting production of new notes at the present level. This estimate depends on there being no substantial increase in prices, wages and economic activity or in the volume of currency held by the forces of the occupying powers.

- "b. It would not be wise for the Executive Committee to count on a conversion of Reichsmarks and Allied Military Schillings into Austrian National Schillings before April 1946. The difficulty of obtaining supplies of special colors might cause even further delay. A date in the first half of February however might possibly be achieved in the Soviet representative's estimate, if all bottlenecks in production could be entirely eliminated and all supplies became available without interruption." The Soviet representative signed this report only after consultation with General Zheltov.
- 2. Although Zheltov accepted the report and approved its submission to the Allied Council for its meeting on 20 October, he would not change Soviet position that the conversion should be from Reichsmarks directly into Austrian National Schillings. In spite of the fact that this involves delay until at least 15 February and more likely until 1 April 1946, Zheltov could give no arguments in favor of such a delay nor could he challenge the statement that all relevant facts had been before the Allied Council when it passed its resolution on 20 September 1945 calling for conversion into AM Schillings and that the plan had the complete approval of the Provisional Government, including Renner himself. The US, British and French representatives continue to support the proposal to convert Reichsmarks at once into Allied Military Schillings. Matter will come before the Allied Council on 20 October but there is no indication that the Russians will recede from their position. Meanwhile the US, British, and French financial experts are studying technical aspects of possible tripartite action.
- 3. US, British and French financial experts are unable to explain the Soviet attitude upon financial grounds. However, some possible reasons for Soviet position are:
- a. Desire to continue unrestricted spending of Reichsmark holdings in order to purchase materials for export from Austria to USSR and Soviet dominated areas and perhaps to influence the forthcoming elections.
- b. Pressure tactics to force delivery of additional supply of Allied Military Schillings.
 - c. Part of a recent general policy of delay.

3652. Reference Embassy's 3616, October 21. For Department's information. British have told us of Marshal Koniev's continued refusal at the meeting of Allied Control Commission on October 20 in Vienna to accept conversion program into AM schillings and also of Koniev's objections to compromise suggested by General Béthouart that immediate conversion of reichsmarks into Austrian national currency should be made to extent national currency available and the balance converted into AM schillings which in turn will be converted into national currency as fresh supplies become available. Koniev reportedly objected to this on ground AM schillings would drive national schillings out of circulation.

British and French Embassies Moscow are recommending to their Governments that they be instructed to take up question with Vyshinski along following lines:

1. Send Vyshinski copy of Dr. Renner's letter of October 8 69 addressed to General Clark as Chairman Allied Control Commission for Austria which explains need for immediate conversion into AM schillings and states that there will not be sufficient amount of notes of Austrian national currency to permit conversion in near future into that monetary unit.

2. Advance compromise plan as suggested by General Béthouart and answer Koniev's objection by stating AM schillings and Austrian national currency will at all times be mutually convertible on a one to one basis throughout Austria.

British have not yet received reply to their October 19 representations but, in view of Vyshinski's reply to US, they expect similar answer. British and French here believe renewed representations on old basis would be fruitless and compromise plan only one with chance of success.

11172. Embassy's 11146, Oct 24, 7 p. m.⁷⁰ Foreign Office has now decided to postpone any démarche in Moscow on Soviet decision to exchange diplomatic representatives with Austria pending consultation with French and ourselves.

Foreign Office view is that this is further disturbing example of Russian reluctance of [to] cooperate, an attempt to gratify Austrian Provisional Govt and people whom Soviet policy and troops are otherwise antagonizing in various ways, and a further attempt to secure pre-eminence in Austrian affairs.

Foreign Office feels that since Soviets have again stolen a march on other Allies it would not be in interest of Western Allies to hold back express disapproval and leave field to Russians. It is accordingly asking Paris and Washington whether it would not be better to give three Political Advisers in Vienna status of those in Bulgaria, Bucharest and Sofia, i.e. personal rank of Minister.⁷¹

394. Provisional Govt has notified Marshal Koniev it is willing to exchange Ministers with USSR. Koniev had requested exchange of Ambassadors but Provisional Govt answered that the expenses would be intolerable and that no person of the required stature was available. Koniev had intimated it was preferable for Renner not to send a member of Communist Party and Renner is reported to be giving favorable consideration to appointment of General Julius Deutsch.⁷²

At a meeting of Executive Committee October 23 General Gruenther inquired of General Zheltov as to accuracy of statements in press that Soviets wished Austrian Govt to exchange Ambassadors with Soviet Govt Zheltov replied "Marshal Koniev has handed a note to the Austrian Govt. It is possible that this note will involve some changes." Gruenther said he did not understand what was meant by "changes". Zheltov answered "I am unable to foretell future events. I cannot say more on this topic".

Renner is puzzled by Soviet request and would have preferred to let matter wait until after national elections, meanwhile, exchanging merely Consuls or trade representatives. He would also like to have matter discussed by Allied Council but considers it probable that press announcement of the exchange of Ministers will be made before Allied Council is officially informed.

In taking this step without prior consultation with other Allied authorities Soviets may have several objectives in addition to the obvious one of placing themselves publicly in a more advance position than the other powers in carrying out Moscow Declaration. The principal objective may be to establish a special and influential means of contact with Provisional Govt independently of Allied Council. Communist party in Austria may gain some prestige or assistance from presence in Vienna of a Soviet Minister. Soviet-Austrian exchange of Ministers will probably lead to demand for similar exchanges between Austria and Balkan countries. Soviets may gain some small advantages by having consular officers in US, British, and French zones of Austria. Renner suggest Soviets may have in mind securing deanship of Diplomatic Corps in Vienna.

¹² Under Secretary and Secretary for Army Affairs in the Austrian Government 1919-20, former commander of the Socialist Schutzbund, former General in Spanish Republican Army, and from 1942 an employee of the Office of War Information in New York.

On the whole this development should tend to increase Soviet influence in Austria at the cost of some diminution of the supreme authority of Allied Council. It is therefore inconsistent with the spirit of quadripartite collaboration. Yet no express agreement appears to have been violated.

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

No. 378

VIENNA, October 26, 1945.

Sir: I have the honor to report that on October 22 I called on Dr. Karl Renner by appointment at his villa. I told him I was happy to be able at last to make an official call, and in reply he expressed his pleasure that since the Provisional Government had been recognized by the four powers it was possible for him to talk officially with all of the Political Advisers.

Our conversation touched first upon the Soviet request for an exchange of diplomatic representatives. In this connection, I have the honor to refer to my telegrams no. 376 of October 23 76a and no. 394 of October 26. Dr. Renner stated that after the close of the Allied Council meeting on October 20, Mr. Kiselev 76b had asked him to call a meeting of the Austrian Cabinet that same evening, and had later added that Marshal Koniev wished to arrange an exchange of diplomatic representatives. Dr. Renner, after objecting that more time would be needed, had finally agreed to call a cabinet meeting for October 22. Mr. Kiselev had asked that the Soviet Government be notified at once of the name of the man who was to be the Austrian diplomatic representative. Dr. Renner had replied by asking who the Soviet representative in Vienna would be, whereupon Mr. Kiselev had explained laughing that he was not authorized to discuss that question.

⁷⁶ See telegram 10380, November 29, to London, p. 668.

See footnote 71, p. 638.
 Evgeny Dmitriyevich Kiselev, Political Adviser to the Soviet Military Commissioner for Austria.

Dr. Renner said it was realized at the meeting of the Austrian Cabinet on October 22 that the Provisional Government was in a difficult position. He explained that he had angered the Russians by his refusal to sign the Soviet-Austrian oil agreement, and that it would therefore be especially embarrassing to persist in denying the Soviet request for an exchange of diplomatic representatives. The Cabinet was unable to agree upon an appointment since the number of suitable candidates for diplomatic representation abroad is very limited, but it was conceded that the Soviet request could not be denied.

In the conversation, which is the subject of this despatch, Dr. Renner voiced his opinion that the Soviets did not expect a Communist party member to be appointed. Moreover, as stated in my telegram no. 394 of October 26, reports have since reached me that Marshal Koniev has indicated a preference for a non-Communist and that Dr. Renner is giving favorable consideration to the appointment of General Julius Deutsch.

In the course of our discussion I indicated to Dr. Renner that I did not consider it necessary to have diplomatic representatives at this time, that consular or trade missions abroad would be more appropriate for the present, and that in any event the matter should be referred to the Allied Council for decision. Dr. Renner agreed, but said that in view of all the circumstances he would have to meet the Soviet request. I asked Dr. Renner if I could bring the subject to the attention of General Clark officially, and he replied that that would place him in an embarrassing position with the Soviet authorities. He finally stated that he would announce in the press the names of several men who were under consideration for the Moscow appointment, and that he hoped we would then take some action on the matter.

In reply to a question as to possible Austrian representation in the Balkan countries, Dr. Renner said he thought it would actually be more useful for Austria to have representation there than in the countries whose forces were occupying Austria. However, he added that trade representatives or consuls general would be more appropriate than diplomatic officers. I pointed out that it would place the Provisional Government in a difficult position if it were asked to send diplomatic representatives to countries whose governments had not been recognized by two of the occupying powers. He agreed that this would be an embarrassing position for his Government.

The conversation then turned to the proposed Soviet-Austrian oil agreement. Dr. Renner reported that he had had a meeting recently with Marshal Koniev at which this subject was discussed. The Marshal had adopted a serious tone and spoken sharply of Dr. Renner's failure to sign the agreement in September, pointing out that the Provisional Government had had an opportunity then to secure a 50 per cent interest in the oil industry in Austria but had listened to advice from other countries with the result that Austria lost control of the industry entirely. Nevertheless Dr. Renner seemed to expect (as others do) that negotiations would probably soon be resumed by the Soviets looking toward the execution of an agreement.

In seeking to justify his action in rejecting the Soviet proposals, Dr. Renner explained to me that he had not been motivated merely by a desire to protect American, British, and Canadian oil interests, since it was not Austria's task to become involved in a conflict with the Soviets over such a matter. Instead, his principal reason, he said, had been that the Soviets were demanding oil rights not only in Zistersdorf but in all parts of Austria, including the Western provinces, and that prior to the Laender Conference he had had no authority to dispose of resources located there.

Dr. Renner then mentioned that in his opinion the Soviets would soon demand a half interest in Danube shipping, an industry of great importance to Austria.

The question of the delayed currency conversion was also discussed briefly. Dr. Renner declared it was a catastrophe for Austria to be unable to secure the withdrawal of Reichsmarks without delay. He had tried to understand the Soviets' last-minute disapproval of the agreed conversion plan, and had come to the conclusion that there were only two important reasons which might account for their attitude: (1) the Soviets were in possession of large supplies of Reichsmarks obtained in Germany, and which they wished their troops to be able to spend freely in Austria, and (2) if the proposed conversion were carried out each Allied Commander would have to obtain from the Austrian authorities currency to meet his military requirements, with the result that it would be brought to light that the Soviet forces were spending a great deal more in Austria than the other Allied forces. After mentioning some of our estimates on this subject, I observed that the Soviet forces perhaps paid in Allied Military Schillings for many goods which the other Allied forces were simply requisitioning without payment. He replied that this was not the case, and that in the last three weeks the Soviets had not paid for anything. He appreciated that the Soviet soldiers were not very well provided for, and so robberies appeared to be increasing rather than decreasing.

During the conversation, Dr. Renner expressed his great anxiety over the fact that Austria was one of the areas where a conflict between the USSR and Great Britain was taking place. He hoped that the United States as a disinterested power would be able to help and support his country in this dangerous situation.

On leaving, I remarked to Dr. Renner that my Government hoped that Austria could develop in a way which would make it free from political domination, and if possible free from economic domination, by any country. Referring to the possible exchange of diplomatic representatives, I pointed out that such a development would tend to reduce the influence of the Allied military forces in Austria and of the Allied Commission.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN G. ERHARDT

In telegram P-4752, October 31, from Vienna, to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, repeated to the Department for information, General Clark commented further on this incident: "In my opinion we are going to lose the battle because the Soviets can stall long enough until their proposal will be the only logical one. From a standpoint of logic we have defeated them at every turn and their attempts to answer our arguments are indeed feeble. However, they always end up by stubbornly insisting that their proposal is the only correct one. I introduced the proposal for a tripartite conversion for the purpose of throwing consternation into Soviet ranks and it gave them quite a jolt. However I have no hope that it will have any real effect in forcing a change in their position." (740.00119 Council (Austria)/10-3145)

⁷⁷ Not printed. This telegram for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, repeated to the Department for information, reported details of the discussions in the Allied Council on October 30 concerning currency conversion. Though it had been accepted by the Western Allies, Marshal Koniev rejected General Béthouart's compromise plan for immediate conversion of reichsmarks into Austrian national currency to the extent that existing stocks of Austrian currency permitted, and for supplementary conversion into Allied Military schillings. In the absence of agreement General Clark proposed that an investigation be made of the possibility of conversion step by step and zone by zone, beginning with the three Western zones and using the supply of Austrian national schillings currently available. (740.00119 Control (Austria)/10-3145) In the unofficial U.S. minutes of the October 30 meeting of the Allied Council for Austria (transmitted in despatch 405, November 1, from Vienna), General Clark is quoted as saying that he would regret to take action on a zonal basis, but that the need for immediate conversion to stop a flood of reichsmarks into Austria was so urgent that he was willing to Council disagreed on governmental powers to be reserved and decided to refer question to governments and request views in time for next meeting November 10.

Executive Committee had October 23 ordered Chiefs Political submit report for consideration Executive Committee October 26. Political Directorate accordingly agreed unanimously to recommend that "following functions should not be exercised by Austrian Provisional Government (a) demilitarization, etc., (b) military and paramilitary organizations, (c) scientific military research (d) construction or acquisition of aircraft or equipment, and operation of airfields. (e) "foreign owned property", (f) border control of persons and (g) displaced persons.

Directorate reported it could not reach any agreement on inclusion of control of currency credit and international financial transactions or on question whether Austrian Government should have right without consent of Allied Council to exchange representatives with foreign states other than four occupying powers. It suggested that Political Division, consulting other divisions should undertake immediate study of form and method of Allied Council control of functions of Austrian Government.

Zheltov declined to discuss this report in Executive Committee October 26, thus postponing it to October 29 when he suggested following alternative: "In accordance with the memo of the Allied Council to Dr. Renner on October 20, 1945,78 and by way of an addition to it, the Allied Council reserves the following functions for itself:

- (1) Foreign Affairs and diplomatic representation except in the case of countries who are members of the Allied Council,
- (2) Demarcation and alteration of frontiers and lines of demarcation,

(3) Displaced persons and repatriation,
(4) Measures for demilitarization on land, water and air,
(5) Settlement of all problems concerning property of foreigners,
(6) Trade and financial relations with foreign countries except those countries which are members of the Allied Council."

Others questioned points 1 and 5 and especially 6, both then and in Council meeting October 30.

General Clark took exception to opportunity in point 6 for individual members to make unilateral trade arrangements with Austria. Since bulk Austria's normal trade is not with other three powers but with other central and eastern Europe, practical effect of 6 would be Soviet hegemony or monopoly of it accompanied by analogous diplomatic relationship under point 1 Soviet formula "property of foreigners" instead of "foreign owned property" apparently made with Potsdam ex-German assets in mind.

⁷⁸ Not printed, but see footnote 66, p. 636.

French suggested dropping point 1 until after elections. British suggested dividing it into Foreign Affairs wholly prohibited and diplomatic representation except with member countries. Soviet member disagreed. US member pointed out Soviet view affected very foundation of Allied Commission and that US Government intended to act through its representative on Allied Council in Austrian matters.

French noted point 6 implied modification of EAC agreement (article V). All three others told Koniev they could not accept the exception in point 6 since Council must, as a whole, deal with Austrian trade matters. Clark said Soviet element showed, by insisting on this exception, it wants to [conduct?] business on whole guts of Austrian situation on direct unilateral basis rather than through Council whereas US Government expects to act through its commissioner in Council and not through direct unilateral diplomatic representation.

Council agreement being impossible, it was decided to refer matters to Governments for view.⁸⁰

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt)

Washington, November 2, 1945—8 p. m.

235. You are requested to bring following to attention of General Clark for action in Allied Council:

As a consequence of recognition of Provisional Austrian Govt Dept recommends that a system of representation be established whereby Provisional Austrian Govt may deal directly under control and supervision of Allied Council with Govts of occupying powers and neighboring states on such matters which do not affect supreme authority of Allied Council in Austria. Dept considers that such action is desirable at the present time in view of forthcoming elections and number of problems which will arise in international relations

This article provided that the Allied Council would initiate plans and reach decisions on questions affecting Austria as a whole. It would also ensure appropriate uniformity of action in the various zones of occupation. See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, p. 353.

So In telegram P-4752, October 31, from Vienna, to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, ⁸⁰ In telegram P-4752, October 31, from Vienna, to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, repeated to the Department for information, General Clark summarized his position: "Points 2, 3, 4, and 5 were agreeable to all but it was decided to suspend communication of any reservations to Austrian Provisional Government until points 1 and 6 are settled. I consider that controversial points are important to Allied Council control in Austria and I shall not give in to Soviet point of view unless instructed by you to do so." (740.00119 Control-(Austria)/10-3145) of Austrian State which do not necessarily require immediate jurisdiction of Allied Council.

In recommending establishment of representation, Dept considers that any formula adopted by Allied Council must be based on fact of supreme authority of Council in Austria and that control and supervision of policies adopted in Austrian foreign relations should be reserved to Council under terms of resolution of Oct 1 and Council's communication to Dr. Renner of Oct 20 (PV 8396 Oct 21).⁸¹ Representation, therefore, should take form of exchanging representatives or agents until such time that Council relinquishes its supreme authority and transfers its sovereign rights to a freely elected Austrian Govt.

Dept considers that establishment of formal diplomatic relations with occupying powers and neighboring states (urtels 376 Oct 23 82 and 394 Oct 26), marked by exchange of Ambassadors, is not wholly consistent with agreed position of Allied Council and its desirability is doubtful as long as Austria remains under supreme authority of Council. Representatives of occupying powers could also serve as political advisers as provided in Article 2 in Agreement on Control Machinery.⁸³

Erhardt will be designated as US political representative to Provisional Austrian Govt with personal rank of Minister to serve simultaneously as political adviser to US member of Allied Council. US is willing to receive agent or representative of Provisional Austrian Govt in Washington to carry out consular duties and to facilitate trade and economic relations or any other matter not falling exclusively under jurisdiction of Allied Council. You may so inform Renner at such time as you deem advisable.

The occupying power in question is USSR. Dr. Gruber 85 has told me that he received the same advice from Kiselev.

It seems plain that if abrupt and disturbing unilateral action is to be avoided, a new four-power agreement pursuant to article 14 86 of Agreement on Control Machinery in Austria should be reached not later than November 25.87

VIENNA, November 11, 1945.

P 5538. Allied Council meeting held 10, Nov. General relations good. Evident Russians operating under Moscow orders on currency conversion and reservation of governmental powers. On basis of conversation today with Koniev I feel more hopeful of satisfactory agreement on currency conversion. Koniev expressed hope I was not serious about conversion by zones. I assured him I was unless he would be reasonable. Koniev will report our conversation to his Government and hopes for favorable instructions by middle of next week. Koniev expressed personal agreement in general with following principles insisted upon by US, British and French elements and accepted by Austrians.

a. Conversion of reichsmark and Allied Military schilling notes above five reichsmarks or five schillings into Austrial National schillings to begin 10 Dec.

b. Allocation of 2,500,000,000 schillings for civilian needs at outset of conversion, to be supplemented by proportion of current note production in weeks immediately following until total of 3,300,000,000 schillings for civilian needs is reached.

c. Military needs to be taken from balance of estimated stock of 4,500,000,000 schillings expected to be available in Dec if allocation among four powers to be on reasonable basis.

d. If 4,000,000,000 not then available allocation for civilian needs will not be reduced below initial 2,500,000,000 considered minimum necessary for Austrian economy.

e. In deciding on amount and nature of blocking necessary we should take advice of Austrians and in any case include a clause giving Austrians discretion in releasing stringency of blocking measures.

On question of governmental powers reserved by Allied Council each member stated he had consulted his Government and still maintained the position he had taken at 30 Oct meeting, reported in my P 4752,92 that is, Koniev insisted on points 1 and 6 as they stand in para 2 therein,93 other powers would not accept either of them with exception clauses therein.

I asked Koniev whether I was to understand he wanted unilateral action on important things like trade and financial relations with which each agreement charges Allied Council. He argued his formula did not do this saying Council had recognized Renner government de facto and USSR had done so de jure. I pointed out this meant recognizing supreme authority in Renner government rather than in Council. He merely referred to 20 Oct letter to Renner.

In discussion of practical effects of unilateral versus joint action he digressed to Potsdam agreement "by which Soviet Government was given right to all German assets in Eastern Austria", saying that any differences about its meaning were for settlement between governments and not by Allied Council.

I pointed out I was discussing methods not substance and suggested political advisors with DRAA [withdraw?] to try to reword proposal. When they were unable to agree I suggested we may have been mistaken in trying to list specific powers to be reserved and that we had perhaps better drop the attempt and try a new approach based upon fact Allied Council is supreme authority and specific reservations therefore unnecessary. This threw consternation into Soviet group which then began pressing for immediate adoption of the first five points leaving sixth to later consideration.

We decided to let political advisors reconsider whole question for special meeting of Council on Friday next.

Before adjourning I announced that my Government will designate Erhardt as political representative to the Austrian Government and receive a political representative of it in Washington. McCreery made similar statement about Mack. Unfortunately Koniev seized this opportunity to say our action paralleled theirs and there was therefore no longer any reason not to agree with their formula for representation. I stressed that this was in no way to circumvent Council, that Erhardt would continue to sit beside me as my political advisor and that Austro-American affairs would continue to be handled through the Council as heretofore.

In addition Allied Council approved:

(1) 119 decrees of Renner Government found unobjectionable by all powers and five decrees with certain amendments;

(2) Disposal of war material according to Berlin agreement;

(3) Quadripartite censorship of civilian communications in Vienna;
 (4) Acceptance of military missions from Czechoslovakia and

Yugoslavia under article 12 each [EAC] agreement; ^{93a} (5) Asking respective governments to make representations to Yugoslavia, Hungary and Czechoslovakia concerning expelling Germans into Austria and letter to German Control Council on repatriation Reichsdeutsche and disposal of Sudetens and other Volksdeutsche.

445. Dept's 223 October 29, 8 p. m. ⁹⁴ Dominating fact about political composition present Govt Ministries and bureaucracy is that thoroughly Democratic National Cabinet and Vienna City Council, though reflecting compromises demanded by 3 party coalition and composition People's Party, was superimposed upon and controls old civil service hierarchy from which have been dismissed former Nazis, though to my knowledge no clerical Fascists.

All Austrian Govt Ministries from rank of Section Chief downward are dominated by previous adherents Christian Social Party, some of whom were prominent supporters Dollfuss-Schuschnigg régimes. Socialist deplore this fact but state the People's Party monopoly of these positions, which it took them 15 years to achieve, means complete chaos would result if wholesale dismissals occurred. A few other individuals who were continued in office by the Nazis are also still employed. . . .

[Here follows a list of officials still in office who were at one time connected with clerical-fascist organizations.]

Our considered opinion is that National, Viennese City and Provincial Govts are highly competent. Renner Cabinet has produced legislation remarkable both in quantity and quality and its administrative record, given enormously difficult conditions of operation, has been excellent. It has been particularly skilled in its dealings with the Allied Council and with the various elements of the Council.

From your report it is obvious disfranchisement of former Nazis and elimination prominent Heimwehr and Sturmscharen from public office by American Military Govt has been confused in American press. These are 2 separate issues. Neither American Military Govt nor any responsible Austrian group has advocated the disfranchisement of Heimwehr and Sturmscharen. Since both these groups connected with former Christian Social Party, only People's Party, the direct heirs of the Christian Socials, have, however, protested dismissals owing affiliation these organizations.

Though People's Party throughout Austria is critical of Military Govt decision, antagonism is centered in western and southern prov-

[P-5568.] Some improvement in Allied Council progress will be noted in complete report on November 10 meeting in P-5538 of November 11 to Agwar signed Clark for JCS to pass to State.

Although nothing definite was done on currency conversion, it appeared divergences were narrowing and some decision might become possible at extraordinary meeting agreed for Friday, November 16th.

Approval of 125 Renner laws was brought forward in implementing extended authority of Austrian Government. It completed basis for November 25 elections.

Approval of censorship regulations completes long delayed prerequisite to reopening Austrian International Postal and Communication services.

Approval of first two missions of United Nations, viz, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, should facilitate efforts to reopen some foreign trade channels.

Council adopted Executive Committee recommendation set forth in my telegram of November 7 96 that four occupying powers make strong representations through government channels to Czechoslovakian, Hungarian and Yugoslavian Governments to prevent mass expulsion of Germanic peoples into Austria from those countries. (Please repeat such representations to me when made.) 97

On important question of unilateral versus joint action inherent in reservation of governmental powers, although no agreement was reached, the issues were clearly defined. Russians want Allied Council to have full authority over Austrian relations with all countries except members of Council. (Kiselev mentioned Hungary to me as an example.) Soviet member obviously wanted very much to get adoption of first five points of Soviet proposal in my telegram November 1 98 and in P-4752,99 even at sacrifice of sixth point. Clark would have preferred not to announce at this meeting Department's intention designate me representative to Austrian Government but his hand was forced by British decision to announce me [Mack?] as designation. After initial surprise Russians interpreted this as following their own example.

As elsewhere recently, question of precise meaning of Potsdam agreement arose in Council discussion. Russians repeatedly state that in accordance with it all German property in Austria is now Soviet property and that any questions regarding interpretation of that agreement are a matter for settlement between the governments outside the Allied Council.

In accordance Allied Council decision November 10 a quadripartite meeting of Political Advisers was held November 13 to endeavor to arrive at agreement on governmental powers to be reserved.

Complete agreement was found impossible and it was decided so to report to Allied Council.

Meeting did, however, develop certain views.

Russians insist on cardinal principle that nothing shall interfere with freedom of their Govt to deal directly with Austrian Govt without review by Allied Council. British willing agree govts of occupying powers be free to discuss matters directly but held that any agreement to be made should first be submitted to Council not as restriction on govt of occupying power but as control over Austrian Govt vested in Council by EAC agreement. Soviet alone refused submit agreements to Council.

Russians willing omit altogether points 1 and 6 of their proposal in P-4752 to Agwar from Clark but insist that if adopted at all they must except members of Council. British refuse to adopt latter exception and also refuse to omit items altogether.

No pertinent telegram of this date found in Department files; reference is possibly to telegram 404, from Vienna, October 31, p. 644.

Kiselev refused to include in Polish [Political?] Adviser's report to Allied Council any more than statement that agreement could not be reached. He would not include statement of reasons why agreement could not be reached although he had been willing to discuss them. Also he would not include any reference to new agreement under article 14 of EAC agreement 2 following elections, although he told me privately his Govt has no such new agreement under consideration at present (nor have other Govts as far as I know). He repeatedly expressed his desire that close Allied cooperation be maintained and that the Allied Council continue in existence acting in unison. He listened attentively to all suggestions for achieving this. But he was above all determined apparently under instructions from Moscow not to have the Council interfere with matters on which his Govt wishes to deal directly with Austrian Govt.3

The Department of State is in agreement with the views expressed in the telegram of the Foreign Office of October 3, 1945 ⁵ that the ban on the return of Austrian political refugees to their country be lifted except in the case of extreme Nazis and any others who may be objectionable for security reasons. This question has been referred to the War Department with the recommendation that action be taken as soon as possible.

Pending an approval by the War Department for the lifting of the general ban on the return of political refugees to Austria, the Department of State has recommended that individual refugees, who are not objectionable for security reasons, be repatriated as soon as their applications are received for exit permits.

The Department of State considers that it would be desirable to withhold a public announcement that the ban will be lifted until such announcement can be made simultaneously by the British and

469. Representatives three political parties are all extremely cautious in predicting outcome elections next Sunday. Everyone agrees, however, that the Socialists and Peoples Party will run neck and neck, with most persons predicting 2 to 4 percent margin for Socialists. Estimates of Communist vote run as high as 20 percent but most experienced observers forecast 10 to 15 percent. Whatever exact results, no party is expected obtain a plurality and Communists will hold balance of power.

It is generally agreed three parties have campaigned equally energetically but that Socialists have had most skillful propaganda and that Communists have been somewhat unscrupulous in electioneering tactics. Much of their propaganda in recent days incidentally has emphasized recent Red Army favors to Vienna and lower Austria population, which appears to be effort counteract predicted unfavorable effect Red Army behavior on Communist election prospects. Peoples Party in its championing of Heimwehr and small Nazis has probably lost more votes from Anti-Nazi center groups than it will obtain from Nazis, most but not all of whom will be effectively excluded from voting by disfranchisement legislation. No one expects extensive election swindles but possible influence of Red Army on voters in lower Austria is factor about which non-Communist circles have some misgivings.

Whatever the election results three-party coalition will continue in office following election. The Communists following their present line will undoubtedly continue advocate United Labor movement which Socialists will continue resist. A possible split in the Peoples Party, with a liberal minority breaking off to form fourth party following election if [is?] possibility which would introduce element of fluidity into the situation.

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State refers to the aide-mémoire of the British Embassy of November 7, 1945 (1904/173/45) and the aide-mémoire of November 7, 1945 (1904/174/45) in transmitting the following views on the resumption of diplomatic relations with the Provisional Austrian Government:

1. The Department of State is in agreement with the view expressed in the aide-mémoire that no useful purpose can be served by raising in Moscow the question of unilateral action of the Soviet Government in informing the Provisional Austrian Government that it is now prepared to exchange diplomatic representation. No formal reply will be sent to the note of the Soviet Government presented to the American Embassy in Moscow on October 22, 1945 ¹¹ to the effect that the Provisional Austrian Government would be asked to exchange diplomatic representatives.

- 2. Instructions have been sent to the United States member of the Allied Council in Vienna ¹² to recommend the establishment of a system of representation whereby the Provisional Austrian Government may deal directly with the governments of the four-powers and neighboring states on such matters which do not affect the supreme authority of the Allied Council in Austria or which may be reserved for the exclusive jurisdiction of the Allied Council. The United States Government has designated John G. Erhardt to serve simultaneously as political representative to the Provisional Austrian Government with the personal rank of Minister and as Political Advisor to the Commander-in-Chief of the United States forces in Austria.
- 3. The Department of State agrees that it is desirable to maintain for the present the principle of quadripartite control in Austria on all matters affecting the foreign relations, including international trade and finance of the Provisional Austrian Government. Consequently the United States member of the Allied Council has been instructed to recommend that control and supervision of the policies adopted in Austrian foreign relations be reserved to the Allied Council under the terms of its various resolutions proclaiming its supreme authority in Austria until such time that the Council acting on the recommendations of the four governments concerned relinquishes its supreme authority and transfers its sovereign rights to a freely elected Austrian government.
- 4. An informal approach has been made to the United States Political Advisor, Mr. Erhardt, by Dr. Gruber, Under Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, suggesting that Dr. Richard Schueller, a political refugee in the United States, be designated as Austrian representative. The Political Advisor has been informed that in view of Dr. Schueller's political activity in the United States it would be preferable to send a representative or agent directly from Austria to deal with Consular matters and questions of trade and finance which do not affect the supreme authority of the Allied Council in Austria. The United States Government has expressed its willingness to accept the establishment of an agency of the Provisional Austrian Government in Washington.

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

VIENNA, November 24, 1945—noon. [Received 1:53 p. m.]

476. In general the proposed note transmitted in Dept's 271, November 17 13 seems to us an excellent statement.

Three general comments. First, is it impossible to include in note the unpublished Berlin agreement that reparations would not be exacted from Austria? ¹⁴ It obviously adds substantial support to US position.

Second, Dept will appreciate that difficulty may be encountered in obtaining Soviet agreement to formation of board with satisfactorily defined functions. In Allied Council meeting October 30 (my despatches 405, November 1 and 411, November 2 15) Koniev flatly rejected McCreery proposal to have Executive Committee investigate and report on interpretation of "German external assets in Eastern Austria." Koniev's position was that only the Govts are able to interpret Potsdam decisions. He strongly reaffirmed this position in AC meeting November 10 (my P 5568, November 12) when question of oil arose.

Third, Dept may wish to consider the alternative of establishing proposed board outside of AC machinery though it would obviously have to do its work in Austria. Considerations are as follows:

(a) It is conceivable that Soviet resistance to proposed board might be somewhat less if it were to be established on a level above that of an Allied Commission subdivision or agency.

(b) If created at a high level by direct intergovernmental agreement proposed board would have more prestige and its determinations would be less subject to challenge by dissatisfied claimants.

(c) Some of board's functions may continue after final dissolution of AC.

(d) If board is established in AC the logical members will be chiefs of reparations deliveries and restitution division. Some of these men are either not available for prolonged service or else not qualified. They are already overburdened.

¹⁵ Neither printed; these despatches transmitted to the Department the unofficial U.S. minutes and the official minutes of the Allied Council meeting of October 30.

(e) The complex questions of property rights should if possible be examined and settled on their own merits and kept separate from negotiations and bargaining over general problems of AC.

If board is under AC, US contribution to its funds would presumably have to come out of War Dept appropriation which might have result of limiting its personnel or facilities. Separate appropriation for an independent board might be preferable.

On the other hand it is appreciated that some functions of board notably determination of appropriateness for reparation purposes under paragraph 6 (d) would be intimately related to AC responsibilities. Consequently it would at least be necessary to have close and carefully defined relationship between board and AC.

Particular comments follow: Paragraph 3 last two sentences appear to enable Austrian Govt to make unilateral declaration that a given asset is not German with such declaration binding on all claimants. Presumably it is intended that proposed board would make final determination paragraph 3, it might be desirable to indicate here or elsewhere the principles to govern treatment of property additions subsequent to German acquisition. It might also be desirable to indicate that when transfers to German ownership are reversed the former owners would be expected to surrender whatever compensation had been received from the Germans with appropriate adjustments for changes and transactions in the meantime. Principles to govern the disposition of such refunds might also be indicated. Presumably all of these matters would be subjects for determination by proposed board.16 Paragraph 4: In second sentence the important words "or Austrian" appear to be lacking immediately following fourth "Allied." ¹⁷ Paragraph 5 a: It may be anticipated that if there is a 50% German interest in a company 50% of whose property is located in Soviet zone, Soviets will insist on acquiring all of such property in Soviet zone. Paragraph 5 n [b]: It is respectfully suggested that the second sentence be either eliminated or rewritten and clarified. The meaning of "deposits" and "shares" as bank assets is not clear and

¹⁷ Change made in final version as suggested, p. 671.
¹⁸ Last sentence of paragraph 5 a. of the original draft read: "Thus, if a company in which Germans have a fifty percent interest owns a plant in the Russian zone and other plants in the American, British or French zones of Austria, the U.S.S.R. would be entitled to claim a half interest in the plant in their zone." Cf. same sentence in telegram 10380 to London, p. 671.

the statements about bank liabilities appear to us a little too sweeping. Paragraph 5 b: In first sentence of second paragraph is there any reason for not including Austrian claims against Reich Govt? Paragraph 5[b]: The last sentence regarding freedom from foreign control is very broadly qualified. It would seem desirable either to omit it or to make it more definite. Paragraph 7: In cases where removal is permissible under Paragraph 7 d should removal always follow automatically or should 7 b procedure be used in some cases? If the latter is intended this might be an additional matter for proposed board to determine.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/11-2445

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of War (Patterson)

Washington, November 24, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: As a consequence of the qualified recognition of the provisional Austrian government and the extension of its authority to the whole of Austria under the control of the Allied Council, I should like to recommend that steps be taken immediately to reduce the number of occupation troops of the four powers now stationed in Austria. In view of the information furnished to me by the War Department that the number of Soviet occupation troops is far in excess of the combined total of the American, British and French forces, I further recommend that agreement be sought among the four powers equalizing the forces of occupation in the several zones and limiting them to the minimum number required for garrison purposes and for the fulfillment of the policies of the Allied Council.

I consider that the reduction of the occupation forces would be beneficial to Austria from a political and economic point of view and would be consistent with the Moscow Declaration of 1943 and the various four power agreements which state that the occupation powers

²⁰ Change made in final version, p. 672.

^{21a} James W. Angell, Chief of the U.S. Delegation to the meeting of the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency in Paris.

will seek "to open the way for the Austrian people themselves" to find the basis of national independence.

A reduction of forces has now been made possible by the creation of an Austrian nation-wide administrative system as provided for in the agreement on Control Machinery and in the directive issued to General Clark. Furthermore a substantial reduction in the occupation forces would remove a drain from Austrian resources as a whole and enable the Austrians to utilize their resources on a nation-wide basis for relief and economic rehabilitation.

After the forthcoming elections on November 25, 1945, in which a national government will be chosen by the Austrian people I anticipate that members of the Allied Council in Vienna will recommend to their respective Governments that the agreement on Control Machinery be modified to permit the transfer of a greater measure of authority to the Austrian government. I recommend, therefore, that the discussions on the reduction of the occupation forces take into account the possibility that the purely military character of Allied government in Austria may be changed and that the Allied Council may in time operate in a supervisory capacity over the policies and administration of the Austrian state until a four-power agreement liquidates all Allied controls and recognizes the Austrian state as possessing complete sovereignty.

If you approve this proposal I should be glad to communicate it to the other three governments through diplomatic channels in order that it may be discussed on an inter-governmental basis at the same time that it is proposed by the United States member of the Allied Council in Vienna.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

299. Letter has been sent by me to Secretary of War ²² recommending that immediate steps be taken to equalize occupation forces in various zones and reduce them to garrison level required for security and fulfillment of policies of Allied Council. On receipt of War Dept approval instructions will be sent for action in Council and simultaneous representations will be made in Moscow, London and Paris.

In view of report urtel 421, Nov. 3, Dept hopes soon to propose that four-power agreement on control machinery be replaced by new agreement to include following steps in fulfilling international commitments towards Austria:

1. Establishment of a procedure whereby purely military character of Allied occupation can be transformed into a civilian control which will represent interest of all four powers in maintenance of Austrian independence. This objective will involve large scale reduction of occupation troops and progressive transfer of administrative functions and authority to Austrian state with Allied Council exercising supervisory power. Emphasis will be placed on breaking-down rigid division of Austria into zones by stressing military government on a national level rather than on zonal and district basis and providing machinery which will operate through the Austrian government uniformly in Austria as a whole.

2. Establishment of procedure for bringing Allied military occupation to an end and replacement of Allied Council by civilian high commission to supervise fulfillment of Allied policy in Austria and to guarantee Austrian independence.

3. Agreement on form of ultimate liquidation of all Allied controls and transfer of full sovereign rights to Austrian government.

4. Department considers that these proposals should be made soon and early changes effected in character of military occupation but actual liquidation of Allied controls and complete withdrawal of U.S. forces should not take place at this time. Furthermore it is desirable to keep some U.S. forces in Austria during coming winter in order to provide relief supplies pending inauguration of UNRRA activities. Dept does not consider that Austria is at present in a position to bargain with Soviet Union. Since maintenance of independence in the future depends on solution of entire Central and Eastern European question Dept considers that some form of Allied control should be maintained for the present.

Although no specific instructions have been transmitted on reservation of powers (urtel 404, Oct. 31) in view of excellent handling of this question on spot by you and General Clark under terms of general instructions and international agreements, Dept considers that guiding principle in negotiations should be maintenance of supreme authority of Council until authority is modified by international agreement; quadripartite action rather than unilateral action in dealing with all questions affecting Austria as a whole and in all Austrian relations with governments represented on Council; and progressive change in status of Austrian government to enable that government to function ultimately as an independent state.

Dept considers that basis of Austrian independence is precarious and that all possible steps should be taken to establish concept that maintenance of Austrian independence is a European question in which U.S. has a major interest and that U.S. will not accept a unilateral solution placing Austria under immediate and complete control of any power now represented on the Council. Dept realizes that U.S. objectives depend on assistance for economic rehabilitation and participation of Austrian economy in general European economic framework. Discussions are now under way for U.S. assistance and possible loan to Austrian government. These will be facilitated by arrival or designation of Austrian representative in U.S.

Your views and suggestions on foregoing are urgently requested.

His personal opinion is that Communists must now confine themselves to playing role of anti-Fascist gadfly in Parliament. Fischer thinks that formation fourth party composed progressive elements Peoples Party which appeared to loom before election now unlikely following Peoples Party triumph.

In Fischer's opinion Figl Chairman Peoples Party will now form own Cabinet to include Socialist members. Loss of Renner as Chancellor will be felt keenly since only Renner of all contemporary Austrian politicians has stature qualifying him for this most important post. His election as President which is likely might reduce his influence to relative insignificance.

Practically all Communists are stunned and disillusioned by shattering defeat which was expected by no one and older leaders such as Fischer are busy trying to restore faith younger party workers.

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

His Majesty's Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to communicate, on the instructions of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the following proposal for the reduction of the forces of occupation in Austria.

- 2. Good progress has now been made in a number of respects towards the re-establishment of a free and independent Austria. The Provisional Government has been reconstituted with agreement of representatives from all the provinces, its authority has been agreed to cover the whole country, and elections have now taken place. In the view of His Majesty's Government the time has now come to consider reducing armies of occupation, whose present numbers constitute a grievous burden on Austrian economy. That this is very much in the mind of Dr. Renner himself is clear from his recent speeches.
- 3. His Majesty's Government accordingly suggest the four occupying powers should now agree in principle to reduce forces of occupation in such a manner that each force would, after a period of months be reduced to some equal figure to be determined. If the United States Government agree in principle to this proposal, His Majesty's Government suggest that the Allied Council should be instructed to work out a detailed scheme which each power would then put into execution.
- 4. In deciding the numbers required for each force of occupation, account would have to be taken not only of questions relating to internal security but of possible threats from outside. His Majesty's Government therefore suggest that, in order to avoid delaying reduction of their forces on this account, the Four Powers should issue a public announcement to the effect that, pending final definition of Austrian frontiers, they recognise and will maintain the frontiers of Austria which were in force in 1937 and they confidently expect that these frontiers will be similarly recognised and respected by all other States.

315. UNRRA Washington has advised Dept that UNRRA Mission headed by Schaaf, D.D.²⁹ left for Vienna last week to discuss UNRRA program for all Austria.

Informal discussion now in progress between Dept and British indicates divergence views as to manner and extent to which UNRRA should take over relief and rehabilitation program in Austria though both agreed that some form of UNRRA program desirable for Austria. For your info and guidance, therefore, following is summary of Dept's policy in this respect. Full text will be sent you when final draft completed.

1. The Austrian Government, UNRRA and the ACA (Allied Commission Austria as a whole) should jointly work out import program sufficient to provide Austria with relief and rehabilitation supplies at standards approved by UNRRA Council resolutions for guidance in drawing up such programs.

2. Since, in view world-wide needs, UNRRA funds will probably not be sufficient to achieve even such minimum approved program for Austria, the occupying powers should agree in Allied Council that each at least will be responsible during period military occupation for procuring and financing civilian relief supplies for its own zone sufficient to attain ration standard (1550 calories per day) approved by Council Foreign Ministers Sept 29, 1945.30

3. UNRRA should assume responsibility to extent its funds will permit for supplemental relief and rehabilitation imports.

4. Austrian Government should be permitted to make approved barter deals for needed supplies.

5. The ACA should reach agreement with Austrian Government that proceeds all Austrian exports (with certain exceptions such as those resulting from any ExImBank loan) to be pooled under control ACA; and the contributions made by each occupying power as provided in two above, as well as their respective contributions (including that of Canada) made prior to consummation this arrangement, should be repaid out of such proceeds. should be made available to Austrian Government for purposes approved by ACA. No payments out of such proceeds should be required as repayment to occupying powers for imports for use occupying forces or of cost of troop pay not expended in Austria.

6. In order not to increase requirements Austria for external assistance, occupying powers should undertake to abstain from requisitioning or purchasing for use own forces Austrian indigenous supplies needed by civilians; and from claiming as part of German reparations, German property in Austria necessary for rehabilitating sound Austrian economy.

Your comments and suggestions would be appreciated. You may wish to discuss above informally and on tentative basis with UNRRA mission.

Washington, November 29, 1945—8 p. m.

10380. Would you communicate following to government to which you are attached as United States view on appropriate interpretation and execution of Potsdam provisions with respect to reparation claims against German assets in Austria. It is the U.S. view that, since an interpretation of the Potsdam provisions is involved, that this matter must initially be discussed at a governmental level. The U.S. advocates, however, that the Allied Council Austria be designated the forum for the working out of this problem, to avoid divided responsibility in its administration. You should indicate that the U.S. regards the settlement of the German reparations issue in Austria as urgent, since it will continue to interfere with the unified operation of the Austrian economy, and with its rehabilitation.

"1. Agreed Basis for the Reparation Claim. The Allied reparation claim against German assets in Austria must be established and in-

It was repeated for information as telegram 970 to the United States Political Adviser for German Affairs, Berlin, and as telegram 316 to the United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs, Vienna. The following paragraph was added to the telegram as sent to Vienna: "Dept would prefer, if other governments agree, that this matter be dealt with in Allied Council. It hopes that raising of issue at governmental level, and subsequent discussion, will satisfy Koniev view and will permit sufficient general agreement for Allied Council to proceed. Should this outcome result you may wish to make suggestions for strengthening of staff in Vienna for such negotiations. Your helpful suggestions have been taken into account with exception probable USSR view of German share of ownership factories in USSR zone. Your judgement on USSR view undoubtedly correct but we prefer more equitable formulation as initial US position." terpreted in terms of the Potsdam Protocol, as defined and amplified by relevant parts of other agreements between the major Powers, which concern Austria. The principles outlined and the procedures recommended here apply to all Allied reparation claims against German assets in Austria.

- a. The Potsdam Protocol of August 1945 33 establishes the following policy with respect to reparation claims against German assets in Austria: . . . Paragraph IV, 1. 'Reparation claims of the USSR shall be met by removals from the zone of Germany occupied by the USSR and from appropriate German external assets.' Paragraph IV. 3. 'The reparation claims of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the western zones and from appropriate German external assets.' Paragraph IV. 8. 'The Soviet Government renounces all claims in respect of reparations to shares of German enterprises which are located in the western zones of occupation in Germany, as well as to German foreign assets in all countries, except those specified in Paragraph 9 below.' Paragraph IV, 9. 'The Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America renounce their claims in respect of reparations to shares of German enterprises which are located in the Eastern zone of occupation in Germany, as well as to German foreign assets in Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Rumania and eastern Austria.
- b. The Moscow Declaration on Austria of November 1943, signed by the United States, Britain and the USSR, lays down the following agreed policy towards Austria:

'The governments of the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and the United States of America are agreed that Austria, the first free country to fall a victim of Hitlerite aggression, shall be liberated from German domination. They regard the annexation imposed on Austria by Germany on March 15, 1938, as null and void. They consider themselves as in no way bound by any changes effected in Austria since that date. They declare that they wish to see reestablished a free and independent Austria and thereby to open the way for the Austrian people themselves, as well as neighboring States which will be faced with similar problems, to find that political and economic security which is the only basis for lasting peace. Austria is reminded, however, that she has a responsibility, which she cannot evade, for the participation in the war at the side of Hitlerite Germany, and that in the final settlement account will inevitably be taken of her own contribution to her liberation.'

c. The United Nations Declaration Regarding Forced Transfers of Property in Enemy-Controlled Territory of January 1943, signed by the U.S., U.K., and U.S.S.R., as well as by most of the other United Nations, contains the following statement on property rights: 34

'Accordingly the Governments making this Declaration and the French National Committee reserve all their rights to declare invalid any transfers of, or dealings with, property, rights and interests of any description whatsoever, which are, or have been, situated in the territories which have come under the occupation or control, direct or indirect of the Governments with which they are at war or which belong or have belonged, to persons, including juridicial persons resident in such territories. This warning applies whether such transfers or dealings have taken the form of open looting or plunder, or of transactions apparently legal in form, even when they purport to be voluntarily effected. The Governments making this declaration and the French National Committee record their solidarity in this matter.'

 For complete text, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. I, p. 443.

d. The Agreement on Four-Power Occupation Plans for Austria between Britain, the United States, the USSR and France of August 1945 sets down the following duties and rights for the Allied Commission in Austria: ³⁶

'The primary tasks of the Allied Commission for Austria will be:

To achieve the separation of Austria from Germany:

To secure the establishment, as soon as possible, of a central Austrian Administrative machine;

To prepare the way for the establishment of a freely elected Austrian government;

Meanwhile, to provide for the administration of Austria to be carried on satisfactorily.

2. Determination of German Assets Appropriate for Reparation. It is the U.S. view that the extent and character of German reparations from Austria should be compatible with the agreed Allied aim to reestablish a free and independent Austria and to assure its political and economic security; that the word 'appropriate,' used in the Potsdam Protocol, Paras. IV, 1 and 3, should be defined in reference to this aim; and that the disposal of German assets in Austria should be so carried out as not to violate, in fact, the agreement at Potsdam that reparations should not be exacted from Austria.

a. In the case of removals from Germany which, in contrast to Austria, is judged an enemy liable for reparations, removals are related explicitly to a peacetime economy capable of supporting the German population without external assistance. It is evident that removals from Austria, a liberated area, must be related to a higher standard of post-war welfare than Germany. It is suggested by the US that the transfer of German assets from Austria and the conditions surrounding the substitution of Allied for German property interests within Austria should leave capacity, and conditions for its operation, capable under full utilization of yielding in the immediate post-war years a standard of living at least equal to the Austrian standard of 1938. To achieve this aim it is evident that removals must be limited in amount and selective in character.

b. It is the U.S. view that the Forced Transfer clause (see 3, below) should be applied to transfers from Austrian, Allied and Neutral ownership to German ownership after 15 March 1938.

c. It is the U.S. view that the determination of the amount and character of removals from Austria should be the function of the Occupying Authorities, jointly, in view of their joint aim and responsibilities with respect to the future of the Austrian economy.

3. No Acknowledgment of Forced Transfers of Property from Allied or Austrian to German Ownership. The determination of German ownership of assets in Austria must be based on the Moscow Declaration, which regards the annexation imposed on Austria on 15 March 1938 as null and void, and which states that the signatory powers are in no way bound by any changes effected in Austria since that date. In accordance with this declaration, the United Nations Declaration on Forced Transfer of Property in Enemy-Controlled Territory is applicable to transfers of property from Allied or Austrian ownership to German ownership after 15 March 1938. Accordingly, any transfer of property in Austria owned by nationals of the United Nations or Austria to German interests, by unilateral action of the German government, on request or at the instigation of the German government, including 'transactions apparently legal in form, even when they purport to be voluntarily effected,' can be declared invalid by the governments concerned, if the element of duress can be proved to the satisfaction of the Commission, established in Para. 6, below. Such property would then revert to Allied or Austrian ownership and not be subject to reparation claims by the occupying authority; however, compensation received from the Germans must be returned to a fund, which like other such assets discussed in 5 b, below, would be available, for the most part, in settlement of Austrian claims against Germany.

4. Separation of Allied, Neutral and Austrian Property Interests from German Foreign Assets. Taking into account 3 above, Allied, Neutral and Austrian property interest should be defined so as to include movable and immovable properties owned by Allied or Austrian governments or by Allied Neutral or Austrian nationals, individually or through participation in partnerships and other unincorporated associations, and assets of corporations in which Allied Neutral or Austrian nationals have shares or other rights of ownership, directly or through intermediate corporations, including German corporations. Similarly, taking into account 3 above, German foreign assets under Paragraph IV 8-9, of the Potsdam Protocol should be defined so as to include movable and immovable properties owned by the German government or by German nationals, individually or through participation in partnerships and other unincorporated associations, and assets of corporations in which German nationals have shares or other rights of ownership, directly or through intermediate corporations.

5. Allocation of German Assets in Austria by Physical Location.

a. The USSR reparation claim in Austria should be limited to German assets, as determined in accordance with 2 and 3 above, physically located within the Russian zone of Occupation in Eastern Austria, including the Russian zone of Vienna, and should not include liens on, claims to, shares in, or any kind of title to any German assets, the physical location of which is outside the area of Russian occupation. Similarly, the fact that entitling legal documents representing German liens on, claims to, shares in, or any kind of title to physical property situated in the Russian zone are located in the US (French, or British) zone of occupation does not entitle any power other than the USSR to claim such physical assets for its reparation share. Subject to the qualifications of 2 and 3 above, the extent of German interest in any physical property located in the Russian zone is to be determined by the extent to which Germans or the German government owned the stocks or held an equity interest in the company which holds that physical property. Thus, if a company in which Germans have a fifty percent interest owns a plant in the U.S. zone and other plants in the U.S.S.R. zone of Austria, the western powers as a whole would be entitled to claim a half interest in the plant in the American zone, and the U.S.S.R. would be entitled to claim a half interest in plants in the Russian zone.

b. Because the allocation of reparations to claimants is determined by the physical location of German assets in the various zones of Occupation (see 5a, above), German-owned banks, insurance companies and similar financial institutions cannot be treated on a zonal basis. Acquisition of German-owned stock of such enterprises would carry with it ownership interests in various zones, and would violate the principle set forth in 5a, above. A large part of the assets held by such enterprises constitute security against deposits and other liabilities held by nationals of Austria and of Allied and Neutral nations. Such assets are, therefore, not available for reparations (see 3 above). Procedures for the transfer of shares and management of enterprises from German ownership to a new control and the disposition of German claims against such enterprises (or that of German claims against any Austrian company, other Austrian assets or individuals) should be settled by the Board described in 6, below.

It is the U.S. view that German claims and non-physical assets of this type be transferred to the Austrian Government, to be applied towards Austrian claims against the German Government or German companies or individuals. The period of German occupation of Austria was marked by extraordinary financial penetration of its economy. The operation of the Potsdam reparations agreement with respect to German assets in Austria should not be such as to effect a substitution of Allied for German penetration.

6. Board for Establishing German Foreign Assets in Austria Appropriate for Reparations. The U.S. Government proposes that a Board shall be established within the Allied Commission, Austria, representing the Four Occupying Powers with the Austrian Government participating as observer, to make the following determinations, in the light of Paras. 2, 3, 4, and 5a, above:

a. Census of physical property located in Austria, by zones, wholly owned by German nationals, German government, or its agencies;

b. Census of physical property located in Austria, by zones, owned wholly or in part by companies domiciled in Austria and/or Germany which are in turn owned in whole or in part by German nationals or the German government or any subsidiary or agency thereof; and determination of the extent of such German ownership of each of these companies and the physical properties owned by such company;

c. Census of physical property located in Austria in which nationals or corporations of the United Nations have an ownership interest as defined in paragraph 3 and 4 above.

d. The appropriateness for reparation purposes under Para. 2 above, of such assets as are deemed to be German;

e. Decision on the disposition of German property and claims not subject to reparation under 5b, above.

7. Disposition of Reparations from Austria. In accordance with the determinations as defined under 6 above, the following types of disposition of appropriate reparation assets may be chosen:

a. Removal of the physical property if completely German owned. Compensation for Austrian Allied or neutral claims against such property must be granted in accordance with 6d above.

b. Retention of the property in Austria with the claimant power assuming for itself or its nationals the German interest in such property. In cases where mixed German and Allied (Austrian or neutral) ownership interests exist, it is evident that the substitution for German ownership will involve adjustments in the terms of property ownership, management, and production. It is the U.S. position that, in cases where the Allied (Austrian or neutral) interest is 'substantial,' as defined below, removal might, if permitted under 6d, above, take place only with the approval of the Allied (Austrian or neutral) owners. Lacking such approval the interest of the reparation claimant should be exercised through agreed compensation or through exercise of continuing minority interest.

Where German interest is 'substantial', and if permitted under 6d, above, removal by the reparation claimant might be effected, if so desired, and in such cases the Allied (Austrian or neutral) interest would be exercised through agreed compensation or by continuing minority interest, as is agreed in each case.

In cases where compensation is agreed in the course of settlement, such compensation must be paid by the interest which acquires full control.

In all cases where foreign-owned property is physically restored, such property would remain part of Austria's economic resources. Thus, if the property produces goods for export, the export proceeds should go into the Austrian foreign exchange pool which, in turn, should be used for such purposes as the Allied Council approves. If the property yields profits, the transfer of the share in such profits to which the occupying power (or its nationals) may be entitled shall be subject to the same foreign exchange restrictions as apply to the transfer of the profits or proceeds of any other property owned in whole or in part by foreigners or foreign interests.

c. Purchase by the Austrian government or nationals of German assets in Austria, by agreement with the claimant power.

In general, a 'substantial interest' shall be defined as ownership of 50 percent or more of the ownership equity, individually or through business enterprises, subject to modification in specific cases, as may be jointly agreed. An interest other than 'a substantial interest' shall include not only minority ownership of equity, but also legitimate claims in the form of mortgages, loans or other liens on the assets of the affected property."

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt)

Washington, December 4, 1945—6 p. m.

329. Both results and conduct of Austrian elections are regarded as important steps in European reconstruction, particularly in view of your reports on freedom of balloting and orderly elections (reurtels 494, Nov. 27; 497, Nov. 28; 498, Nov. 27; 500, Nov. 28; 501, Nov. 28 and 507, Nov. 29). Little info is available here about Figl. Dept would appreciate your evaluation and any info on his career and political outlook.

Probable reorganization of govt by Volkspartei may raise questions re future of Austria. If Volkspartei control is assured and new govt formed under Figl, Dept recommends that you, with the approval of General Clark, suggest, in your discretion, to party leaders that coalition govt should be maintained, at least until end of military occupation and Communist representation should be retained in cabinet in order to facilitate good relationships among four powers and to avoid impression that Volkspartei victory automatically means anti-Soviet or anti-Communist policy. Abolition of system of under secretaries in each ministry (urtel 477, Nov. 24 40) is desirable from point of view of administrative efficiency provided three parties continue to be represented in cabinet.

Dept does not consider that reorganization of govt should follow usual practice of party victory or that Social Democrats should refuse to collaborate with Volkspartei. In best interests of Austrian independence, reorganization of govt should be based on unique international position of Austria and desirability of maintaining four power interest in Austrian independence. Similarly, it is hoped if Volkspartei reorganizes govt that Renner will be made President, unless he is given some other responsible post, in order to provide continuity with Provisional Govt, although it is hoped that his new office will not decrease his influence in public affairs.

On basis of many reports, Dept supports suggestion of Figl that Ernst Fischer be retained in cabinet and regards elections as excellent opportunity for ending Communist control in Ministry of Interior. Do you consider that police force can be reorganized to support recommendations for reduction of occupation forces contained in Deptel 299, Nov. 26?

Details reported in urtel 445, Nov. 12, concerning composition of ministries also raise question involving future Austrian policy and creation of conditions under which US can propose or agree to major changes in four power controls. Dept considers that traditional Volkspartei policy with regard to relationships with USSR and attitude toward question of "Austro-Fascism" may complicate modification of four power controls by bringing change in Soviet policy towards Austria. Since objective of reduction of number of occupation troops and ultimate liquidation of Allied controls involves four-power agreement, Dept hopes that reorganization of govt and its future policy will facilitate four-power cooperation.

Memorandum of Conversation Between General Mark W. Clark and Ing. Leopold Figl 44

[Vienna,] December 8, 1945.

Ing. Figl, who had been entrusted by the Political Cabinet with the formation of a new Austrian Government following the national elections of November 25, 1945, presented himself at General Clark's office without previous announcement and was immediately received by the General. He handed the General a signed copy of a letter dated December 8, 1945, which he had sent to the Allied Council giving the names of the members of the new Cabinet together with a brief covering letter of the same date addressed to General Clark. (Translations of these communications are attached.)⁴⁵

Mr. Figl started in by saying that he hoped the Allied Commission, at its meeting on December 10, would approve the Cabinet so that it could get to work. He stressed the point that he hoped that the Nationalrat and the Bundesrat could be called together by December 17, and proceed with the election of a President so that the Government could be officially installed and operating by Christmas. He asked for General Clark's support to this end, and the General said that he would do everything that he could to help. General Clark pointed out, however, that the Allied Council itself would only have authority to give its approval to the Cabinet and make a recommendation to the Governments of the occupying powers that recognition be extended to the new government.

In response to a question, Mr. Figl stated that it had been agreed that Dr. Renner would be elected President, and he had no doubts that he would accept.

General Clark said that he could give no assurances, of course, as to what action the Council would take because there was the definite possibility that the Soviets might object to one or more names on the list. The General added that the Soviets were surprised and disappointed at the result of the elections and they would probably scan carefully the list of the new Cabinet. He furthermore stated that a few days ago he had visited Marshal Koniev at Baden where the matter of the new government had been discussed and at that time he had assured Marshal Koniev that if there were any Nazis or Fascists proposed as members of the new government he would certainly support action looking toward their removal. Mr. Figl said that there were no such people in the new Cabinet and that nearly all of them had long concentration camp records.

General Clark said that he wanted to speak quite frankly with Mr. Figl about certain matters, and one of them was that it must be clearly understood that the Allied Council would remain the supreme authority in Austria. Mr. Figl agreed, but he pointed out that the Government must have power in administrative and economic matters throughout Austria so that it could go ahead with its work. To this General Clark replied that he was in accord and furthermore said his position was that the Government should be given more and more authority as it showed that it was capable of efficient functioning. In this connection, General Clark pointed out that he was quite certain that there would be a change in Soviet policy as follows: During the life of the Renner Government the Soviets had constantly supported the idea of giving the Government more authority and the Allied Council less, whereas now he felt that the Soviets would want to give the Government less authority and the Allied Council more.

General Clark told Mr. Figl that he was doing everything he could in the way of working out an agreement for the reduction of Allied troops. This pleased Mr. Figl very much. Mr. Figl estimated that there were between 700,000 and 800,000 Soviet troops in the country and said that it would be so much better for Austria if the total number of troops of all powers were reduced to 100,000. Mr. Figl made it quite clear that he did not expect the reduction to take the form of each power having the same number of troops in Austria. The most that he hoped for was a percentage reduction which would bring the total number down without equalization.

There followed a discussion of the food situation in Austria and Mr. Figl described the situation in Lower Austria as catastrophic. General Clark said that he fully realized this and that he had sent a personal message to Governor Lehman ⁴⁶ and was working constantly to the end of getting an adequate UNRRA program started in Austria. The General said that in the British, French, and American zones conditions were better than in Lower Austria but even in the three western zones the people had a very low standard of living, barely sufficient to get them through the winter. He said it was no solution to the problem to pull food out of the west and give it to Lower Austria as this would only have the effect of pulling everybody down to extremely low living standards. The General frankly stated that he would not lower the standards in the American zone in order to provide food for Lower Austria because the United States felt a responsibility for its zone and he was going to meet this responsibility.

General Clark said confidentially to Mr. Figl that if at times he might appear to be critical of the Soviets it was only because he was trying to be helpful and that to get anywhere he had to employ different strategies on different occasions. He said that it was his practice to talk just as frankly with Marshal Koniev as he talked with Mr. Figl and he said that this had resulted in the development of the very best of relations between him and the Marshal. General Clark emphasized that one must bear in mind at all times that four-power cooperation and unity were absolutely essential in the interests of Austria, and he told Mr. Figl that the Austrian Government on its part should do everything to make such cooperation easier and not harder. Mr. Figl indicated 100% understanding of this viewpoint, and said that such would be the policy of the Government.

The conversation closed on an extremely cordial note by General Clark's saying that his door was always open to Mr. Figl and that he wanted Mr. Figl to come and see him any time and tell him about the Government's problems. The General said that he would always be disposed to help in any way that was in his power. Mr. Figl expressed deep appreciation and made some extremely complimentary remarks to General Clark about the latter's great prestige in Austria and the feeling of high respect and admiration possessed by all Austrians for the General's outstanding work and accomplishments.

558. Reference my 359 [539], December 7,⁴⁸ see General Clark's P-7673, December 9 for JCS ⁴⁹ (Joint Chiefs of Staff) to be repeated to Secretary of State, second section, referring to Topic D of Wagx 86274.⁴⁹ My supplemental suggestions are as follows:

Re paragraph (3) of reference section of P-7673, it is my opinion that highest US representative in Allied Commission should be military as long as Soviets have a military man in that position or have any considerable number of troops in Austria. One important reason for this is General Clark's strong personal relationship with Marshal Koniev, who we believe will continue to be highest Soviet representative.

Subpara (b) of same paragraph states that the matters referred to as appropriate for control or supervision by Allied Commission should be dealt with by latter on basis of unanimity. In some cases Allied Commission would take affirmative action, but in others it would exercise power of veto over proposed acts of Austrian Government. In latter cases there would be two alternatives for the application of principles of unanimity. The first is that when a proposed act of Austrian Government was submitted for approval, it would be allowed to go into effect automatically, unless unanimous agreement was reached in Allied Commission to veto it. This alternative would permit Austrian Government to carry out most of its decisions without Allied obstruction and would encourage development of Austrian self-government. The second alternative is that when a proposed act of the Austrian Government was submitted for AC approval, it would be disapproved unless all four members agreed to approve it. In other words, each representative in AC would alone be able to veto the government's proposed act. Although this alternative would substantially curtail Austrian independence, it would assure to each occupying power that no action falling within the control or supervision category could be taken if contrary to its policies or interests in Austria.

It seems likely that if Austrian Communist Party had not been so badly defeated in recent elections, Soviets would favor the first alternative. However, it now seems plain they will instead insist upon the second. On other hand, it is possible that, partly on account of election results, British policy might now lean toward the first alternative.

560. Statement of US views on interpretation of Potsdam provisions regarding German assets in Austria (Dept's 316, Nov 29 51) has been transmitted to Renner pursuant to Dept's instructions.

US representatives here have for several months been pressing for Allied Commission discussion of meaning of Potsdam provisions regarding German assets in Austria but Soviet representatives have from start taken categorical stand against any such discussion. Their position is that question of German external assets in Austria has already been settled by Potsdam Agreement (in a manner giving USSR all "German" assets in eastern Austria) and that any interpretation of Potsdam provisions is a matter for direct discussion between the govts that signed Potsdam Agreement.

Dept will understand that consequently it may be futile to try to open discussion of this subject in Allied Council until the govts have themselves reached agreement and instructed their representatives in Austria.

Practical importance of Potsdam provisions regarding German assets in Austria can hardly be overestimated. Rough unofficial estimates have placed ostensibly German owned assets in Austria as high as seventy or eighty percent of country's industry largely in "eastern Austria". Present attitude of Soviet representatives on this question effectively blocks comprehensive reconstruction of Austrian economy on unified basis.

VIENNA, December 12, 1945—5 p. m. [Received 6:20 p. m.]

561. RefDepts 315 of Nov 29. Schaaf has discussed Austrian UNRRA program with us and with Economic Directorate of Allied Commission. Since regular UNRRA program cannot be put in operation before March 1 at earliest, the most urgent problem at present is to secure emergency aid starting before then, if possible January 1, in largest possible amounts. There appears to be no chance of such emergency aid in amounts large enough to raise Austrian nutritional standards to levels set at UNRRA council meeting in London. Best that can be hoped for is that Soviet and French zones can be brought up to level of 1550 calories for normal consumers which obtains in Vienna and in US and UK zones at present.

Following is text of telegram approved Monday by Allied Council and sent to UNRRA yesterday:

"1. With reference to resolution 74 of UNRRA council and since UNRRA has complied with request for a delegation of technicians to be sent to Austria the AC officially invites UNRRA to provide urgent assistance for Austria, which faces serious situation in view of shortage of food and vital necessities.

2. The importance and urgency of the assistance requested from UNRRA will be set forth in another telegram.

3. In view of General Clark's statement concerning a telegram received from the Director General of UNRRA the Allied Council expresses appreciation to UNRRA for the efforts already begun to secure as soon as possible an effective food supply for Austria."

Any assistance which Dept can bring to bear to expedite emergency UNRRA aid will be appreciated.

Following are comments on indicated paragraphs of Dept's 315:

(1) Standards referred to here are understood to be 2650 calories for normal consumers. Please advise if this is incorrect.

- (2) US and UK representatives in Allied Commission have made every effort to secure quadripartite agreement on this principle but without success. Soviets insist they are under no obligation as result of Foreign Minister's discussions in London, to import food for establishment of 1550 calories level in their zone Austria. (They recognize a definite obligation, assumed in Allied Council, to provide that level in their districits of Vienna and are in general fulfilling it but they are believed to be taking some food supplies from lower Austria for this purpose.) They argue that food conditions in Russia are extremely bad and that charity begins at home. They also argue that there are no food surpluses in Hungary or Rumania. French representatives recognize moral obligation to try to provide 1550 calories in their zone but warn that they will probably not be successful.
- (2) Use of term "occupation period" in this paragraph seems inappropriate since it is hoped that UNRRA can assume all or major part of supply burden many months before the Allied military forces are withdrawn from Austria.

(3) No comment.

(3) No comment.
(4) We concur fully in this paragraph but suggest adding a phrase to indicate that barter deals should be replaced by normal trade as soon as possible.

- (5) Strongly recommend modification of payment procedure outlined in this paragraph. Exportable surpluses in Austria are negligible now and those produced in near future will be needed for barter deals contemplated in paragraph 4. Moreover most exports must go to countries in central and southeastern Europe which are unable to pay in convertible currencies acceptable to US and other occupying powers. Although all efforts will be made to acquire foreign exchange it will be many months before there is enough to equal cumulative cost of relief imports. Making this cost a first charge on foreign exchange pool would amount to confiscation of all convertible foreign exchange. Instead it is suggested that no payment for relief imports be required for the present and that after a suitable period, say after January, 1947, a scheme of payment be worked out which would be compatible with Austria's financial recovery. Such a scheme might assign percentages of (a) Austria's convertible foreign exchange and (b) its total foreign exchange, to payment for relief imports. quirements for debt service on any foreign credits would also be taken
- (6) Indigenous supplies of some types are probably being purchased or requisitioned for use of some of the occupying forces. No food or other essential supplies are being purchased or requisitioned in US zone or, to best of our knowledge, in UK zone. It is believed that some purchasing and requisitioning of food and other essential supplies is taking place in French zone. Soviets assert definitely that no Austrian food or essential supplies are being requisitioned or purchased for use of their forces. We understand that Soviet formations are now under explicit orders not to requisition local food supplies. The best available intelligence reports indicate that at present the larger units are not requisitioning but that any small units are requisitioning freely. Regarding seizure of ex-German property on reparations account Dept is aware that Soviet interpretation of Potsdam Agreements is different from our own.

564. Upon receipt Dept's 347 of December 9, 9 p. m. US element had activity of political parties removed from Executive Committee agenda for December 14.

However, it is hoped Dept will approve restitution to EC agenda for December 17 meeting in time for Allied Council meeting December 20 for following reasons:

Only change proposed is that Council not be required formally to approve or disapprove applications for political parties to carry on activity as required by paragraph 3 of September 11 proclamation of Allied Council.⁵⁴ Parties would still be authorized to carry on political activity provided they were within policy stipulated in paragraph 1 thereof, i.e., Democratic, anti-Nazi, do not disturb public order or carry on activities against any occupying power or its troops, and are pledged to strengthening and maintenance of a free and independent Austria.

Present paragraph 3 of September 11 proclamation requires parties other than Communist, Socialist and Peoples Parties to obtain final Council approval before they can exist or carry on activities throughout Austria even if they do conform to those principles.

⁵² Not printed; it gave a detailed statistical summary of the program for Austria proposed by UNRRA authorities in Washington (840.50 UNRRA/-12-645).

⁵⁴ The proclamation is printed in the Gazette of the Allied Commission for Austria, No. 1 (December 1945-January 1946), p. 26.

The 14 or more applications that have been received have been examined already and found for the most part to represent unknown and unimportant small groups. It would be undesirable for the Council formally to approve them thus giving advertisement that Allied Council endorses them, and equally undesirable for Council formally to disapprove them and thus lay itself open to charge that it was [,] contrary to basic JCS directive [,] suppressing free political activity by Democratic parties which do conform to all principles mentioned above. Some delegations have already interpreted Council's proclamation as "establishing dictatorship of the three authorized parties". In view of present majority of Volkspartei and its vulnerability to attack as associated with former Austro-Fascist regime, the Council's present position of forbidding nationwide activity by other parties than this one plus the Socialist and Communist Parties would be susceptible of undesirable comment.

As a matter of practical administration it has proven and will probably continue to prove impossible for the Allied Council to take formal action on any or at least most applications before it for reasons stated, with undesirable consequent suppression of unobjectionable though inconsequential movements contrary to provisions of JCS directive on revival of political life.

Quadripartite Political Division had, therefore, unanimously agreed a [on?] recommendation to the Executive Committee that paragraph 3 of September 11 proclamation be cancelled and replaced by simple requirement that new parties file programs and data with Council for its information, thus relieving Council of necessity of either approving or suppressing applications made in good faith although often by inconsequential groups.

British are pressing for immediate action by Executive Committee and Council because they find present position untenable and intolerable.

Does Dept approve restoration of this recommendation to Executive Committee agenda for December 17?

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy of a letter dated November 29, 1945,57 from the Provisional Austrian Government to the Allied Council requesting a reduction in the number of occupation troops as a primary condition of the reconstruction of Austrian economic life and for the stabilization of its currency.

This letter was discussed by the Allied Council at its meeting of November 30, 1945, and a reply, a copy of which is enclosed,⁵⁷ was ordered transmitted to Chancellor Renner to the effect that the question of the strength of the forces of occupation was one within the exclusive competence of the occupying powers and that Austria could not, by its own action, divest itself of the obligation to meet the cost of occupation fixed by the Allies.⁵⁸

⁵⁵ See footnote 32, p. 668. ⁵⁶ Benjamin V. Cohen, Counselor of the Department who was detailed to the Conference of Foreign Ministers in Moscow.

Not printed.

⁵⁸ The Allied Council's reply to Chancellor Renner said in part: "The Allied Council rejects the allegation that the size of the occupation forces in Austria is based on considerations of military equilibrium, and considers the raising of this question as an attempt to make difficulties between the Allies. Such an attempt is all the more regrettable coming from the Government of a country which was liberated by the Allies, and to which they have, from the outset, lent their common assistance.

[&]quot;The Allied Council declares that the question of the strength of the forces of occupation is one which falls within the exclusive competence of the Governments of the Occupying Powers.

[&]quot;The Allied Council emphasizes that Austria, having taken part in the war on the side of Germany, cannot, by its own action, divest itself of the obligation to meet the costs of occupation fixed by the Allies."

It will be noted from Item 7 of the unofficial U.S. minutes of the Allied Council meeting of November 30, transmitted with my despatch no. 539 of December 1, 1945, 59 that the Soviet representative took exception to the language of the Provisional Austrian Government's letter interpreting it as a political effort to divide the Allies, a point of view which was shared by the other representatives on the Council. 60

It is requested that copies of these letters be made available to the War and Treasury Departments with reference to Item 7 of the unofficial U.S. minutes of the 10th meeting of the Allied Council held November 30, 1945.

[Translation] 61

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

No. 991

Washington, December 14, 1945.

The reorganization of Allied control in Austria following the extension to the entire Austrian territory of the powers of the Vienna Government has attracted, in particular, the attention of the French Government.

The French Government believes that the representatives of the Allied Governments on the Control Council should be guided in the decisions they are going to take by a desire to grant the Austrian Government as much power and responsibility as possible, while making the reservations that are essential to the security of the occupation forces, maintenance of order in the country, and defense of the political and economic interests of the Allied Powers.

The measures to be adopted should, in the opinion of the French Government, be based on the following considerations:

The size of the occupation forces would be considerably reduced, while local police and security forces would be established progressively. Allied personnel, both civilian and military, would be reduced to a minimum.

⁵⁰ Neither printed.

Chancellor Renner, in his letter to the Allied Council, had written: "The number of occupation troops has been evidently not been settled according to the security requirements of Austria but rather according to reasons of military balance of the Allied Powers. The Austrian state territory is a threshold of European strategic areas and military reasons demand therefore a greater number of occupying troops. . . . It is obvious that peaceful and liberated Austria in comparison to the number of its population is occupied by far greater military forces than an average area in Germany. Austria cannot be held responsible for the cost of this occupation . . . an occupation which cannot be considered as justified by the demand for security within this state."

The lines of demarcation between the zones would be abolished from the administrative standpoint and would cease to be anything more than the limits of the stationing of the occupation forces. Except for the duties of the commanding officers of military districts, the Allied military authorities would limit themselves to exercising, with respect to local administration, whatever control powers are delegated to them by the Allied Council.

Only important decisions would be submitted by the Austrian Government to the Allied Control Council for prior approval. decisions, which should include, in particular, all agreements with foreign countries, would be enumerated in a restrictive manner. The other laws and regulations adopted by the Austrian Government would be reported to the Control Council, which would reserve the right to veto them within a period to be determined. The Control Council would keep the initiative in certain cases. It could, especially with respect to denazification, demilitarization, restitutions, protection of Allied property, and decisions regarding displaced persons, give directives to the Vienna Government and supervise implementation of such directives at all levels.

The French Government considers that after the Control Council has adopted the provisions contemplated, they should enter into force in all zones simultaneously, and that application thereof would be suspended if not ensured by one of the four occupying powers.

ment in order that four-power approval might be issued when the matter came before the Allied Council. In our opinion, General Clark's handling of the behind-the-scenes negotiations is largely responsible for obtaining prompt recognition of the reorganized government. On the other hand, "Allied" insistence on the replacement, particularly of Raab, Figl's personal friend and one of the founders of the People's Party, caused much dissatisfaction in People's Party circles. This resentment, however, was almost exclusively directed toward the Russians. In criticizing "Allied" dictation, party leaders stressed two points: (1) Such interference is incompatible with Austria's status as a liberated country; (2) it is a violation of democratic principles to deny places in the government to persons enjoying the confidence of the electorate as certified by their election to the Nationalrat. Incensed by the "Allied" attitude, some of the more recalcitrant elements of the People's Party favored refusing to form a government, but the dissidents were persuaded by majority opinion within the party leadership, which pointed out that such a refusal could logically lead only to the establishment of a wholly military government. This resentment, which was fairly lively in the course of the negotiations appears now to be dissipating.

740.00119 Control (Austria)/12-2845

The Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

Washington, December 28, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Please refer to your letter of 24 November 1945 (file 740.00119 Control, Austria) and my interim reply of 4 December 1945,67 which agreed in principle to your proposals for the reduction of occupation forces in Austria.

Current strengths of the national occupation contingents in Austria are approximately as follows:

U.S.: 47,000, including two divisions France: 40,000, including one division U.K.: 65,000, including two divisions U.S.S.R.: 200,000, including 17 divisions

Conditions in each of the national occupation zones, as for example, the amount of frontier responsibility, vary so that occupation force requirements in each zone are not now, and will not be in the near future, equal. United States proposals to equalize the forces in each national zone may be countered by this argument. I therefore recommend that agreement be sought among the four powers to reduce progressively the forces of occupation to the following maximum figures on the dates indicated:

a. In Vienna:

	1 Feb 46	1 Jul 46	1 Nov 46
Each Power	9,000	8,000	5,000
b. Outside Vienna	·	·	,
	1 Feb 46	1 Jul 46	1 Nov 46
$\mathbf{U.S.}$	31,000	16,000	12,500
France	28,000	16,000	12,500
U.K.	50,000	30,000	20,000
U.S.S.R.	60,000	40,000	28,000

Should you deem the principle of establishing equalized occupation force figures important, I recommend that the figures shown for U.S.S.R. be used. In either instance, the proviso must be made that the figures are maximum figures and that each power may, if it desires, maintain garrisons of lesser strength. In every case, the specified strengths should include the personnel of all ranks of ground, air, and sea forces.68

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

No. 681

Vienna, January 9, 1946. [Received January 23.]

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith four copies of the translation of the debate in the Cabinet on November 23 69 over the law to convert currency circulating in Austria. This debate not only reflects the Austrian point of view at the time with respect to the conversion problem but also indicates in a striking manner some of the continuing problems with which the Austrian Government is concerned. At the conclusion of this debate the Cabinet voted to reject the Currency Law. They subsequently requested the right to appear before the Allied authorities and presented a statement to the quadripartite Finance Committee. After discussions between the Allies and the leading Austrian authorities, the matter was brought before the Cabinet again on November 30 with a request from the Allies that a decision be reached immediately. After another heated and long discussion, the Law was approved and came into force December 1.72 by the Austrian Cabinet on November 23.

In its comments to the Allied Council, the Austrian Government urged that it was not in a position to exercise the normal functions of a government and the fiscal control which was required of it by the Allied Council unless come limit was placed on military exercises.

⁶⁸ In a letter of January 4, 1946, the Secretary of State replied to this letter by noting that in its original proposal the State Department had suggested that the question be taken up by addressing notes to each of the Governments concerned. "Since that time, however, considerable publicity has been given to this question in the press of the United States and Great Britain. In view of this public discussion and the delays which would necessarily follow any intergovernmental action, I recommend that the plan proposed in your letter be transmitted to General Clark for introduction into the Allied Council as a United States proposal. I consider that this proposal should be made as soon as possible after any action by the Allied Council or by the four powers in recognizing the new Austrian Government. (740.00119 Control (Austria)/12-2845)

Not printed.

Agreement was finally reached by the Allied Council on a program for the conversion of reichsmarks and Allied Military schillings into Austrian National schillings on November 16. The text of the Allied Council's Conversion Decree is printed in the Gazette of the Allied Commission for Austria, No. 1, December 1945—January 1946, p. 31. The plan adopted was then given to the Austrian authorities with the request that it be drafted into law. The Austrian draft law was approved by the Allied Council on November 18, and was then debated by the Austrian Cabinet on November 23.

and the fiscal control which was required of it by the Allied Council unless some limit was placed on military expenditures.

The Austrian currency conversion law of November 30, the so-called Schillinggesetz, is in Staatsgesetzblatt für die Republik Oesterreich, Jahrgang 1945, Ausgegeben am 1, Dezember 1945, 59. Stück, Nr. 231, p. 419.

The translation of the debate enclosed shows clearly the Austrian fear of inflation, their astonishment over the size of the amounts to be assigned to the Allied occupying authorities, and the fear on the part of many that the size of Allied expenditures may make fiscal control impossible. This translation of the debate should be considered in connection with the financial reports which have described other phases of this problem and which give the schedule of events leading up to final acceptance of the Conversion Law.

The United States Political Adviser for Austrian Affairs (Erhardt) to the Secretary of State

No. 678

VIENNA, January 9, 1946.

Sir: I have the honor to furnish herewith for the record the chronology of events relating to the recognition of the Austrian Government by the occupying powers, as announced simultaneously at twelve noon Vienna time, January 7, 1946, in Washington, London, Moscow, Paris and Vienna.⁷³

The Department's telegram Number 380 of December 20, 1945, stating that President Truman had approved the recognition of the Austrian Government, was received here on the afternoon of December 21. This telegram contained further instructions to consult with General Mark W. Clark, Commanding General USFA, on the proper method of notifying the Austrian Government; furthermore, an endeavor was to be made to reach agreement with the other representatives of the occupying powers so that a simultaneous announcement of recognition might be made. We got in touch at once with the other Political Advisers in Vienna, especially the Soviets and the British, to the end that the Allied Council could reach agreement on the matter of joint notification to the Austrian Government. Neither the British nor the Soviets had received instructions from their Governments, but an understanding was reached that they were to notify us as soon as such instructions were received.

On December 24 the British circulated to all the Political Advisers their draft formula of recognition, which is appended hereto as Enclosure No. 1.74 In a covering letter the British Political Adviser sugthe Austrian State, and the present government as the de jure government, and gested that the Soviet Chairman, Mr. Kiselev, should call a meeting of the Political Advisers on December 26 or 27 to discuss this draft. On December 24, we telephoned Mr. Kiselev, who said that he had received the British draft but that he had no instructions from his Government. He said that he was going to Moscow himself for the holidays and while there would endeavor to expedite the matter. He also said that during his absence Mr. Koptelov, Chief of the Soviet Political Division, would be in charge and would immediately notify the other Political Advisers when he had any word from Moscow.

The status of the matter as of December 24 was telegraphed to the Department by Mr. Erhardt on that date.⁷⁵

During the next few days, we checked with the other elements of the Allied Commission from time to time, but there were no actual developments inasmuch as nothing could be done until the Soviets had received their instructions. Just before General Clark left for Italy on December 31 to accompany the body of General Brann to Florence, he left instructions that General Ralph H. Tate, who was in charge during his absence, should see General Zheltov, Deputy to Marshal Koniev, in order to impress upon the Soviets the extreme desirability of the occupying powers proceeding jointly in the matter of recognition and not separately. Accordingly, General Tate and Mr. Erhardt went to see General Zheltov on December 31 and delivered General Clark's message. General Zheltov said that he personally thought it was not necessary for the Soviets to make any new statement on recognition because in his opinion the recognition accorded to the Austrian Provisional Government under Dr. Renner on October 20, 1945 would automatically extend to the new Figl Government.⁷⁶ General Tate and Mr. Erhardt strongly stressed the desirability of action on a quadripartite basis and General Zheltov said that he would take the question up with Marshal Koniev and would advise General Tate after conferring with the Marshal.

It was learned on December 31, 1945, that Marshal Koniev had sent for Chancellor Figl to come to see him that day at twelve noon, and an

A draft of this declaration had also been submitted to the Department by the British Embassy in Washington and was approved on December 29. telegram 402, December 29, not printed, the Acting Secretary of State informed the Political Adviser in Vienna as follows: "Department will release to press same time as announcement to be promulgated by Allied Council statement on Four Power recognition as drafted and suggested by British . . . officer of USFA was instructed to find out what was discussed at this meeting. This officer reported as follows:

"The New Year's visit at Koniev's headquarters at Baden had been extremely cordial and friendly. Chancellor Figl informed the Marshal that he had received assurances of recognition of his government from the other three powers and was awaiting word from the Russians before releasing the announcement to the public. The Marshal's first reaction was that both de facto and de jure recognition had been extended to the Renner Government in October by Russia, and he saw no need to repeat such recognition. Upon Mr. Figl's insistence, however, that it would be politic for all four governments to recognize the new government in Austria, especially in view of the fact that they had announced that they would recommend such recognition in a public communiqué, Marshal Koniev promised Mr. Figl that he would get in touch with his government and would accomplish the necessary steps within two or three days."

During the next two days, there were no developments as the Soviets still said that they had no instructions. On the morning of January 4, we called Mr. Koptelov, who reiterated that he had no word from his Government and that he would let us know just as soon as anything was received. At about 8:15 that night, Mr. Koptelov phoned and said that he wished to see me urgently. I told him that I would be glad to see him and he came to my house about 9 p.m. He told me that on this day Marshal Koniev had informed Chancellor Figl orally and in writing that: (1) the Soviet Government had approved the Allied Council endorsement of December 18 of the Figl Cabinet, (2) the Soviet recognition of the Renner Provisional Government conveyed in Marshal Koniev's letter to Dr. Renner of October 20, 1945, extended to the Figl Government de facto and de jure, and (3) the authority of the Allied Council remained supreme. (It later developed that Point (3) was conveyed orally and not in writing.)

There is attached hereto as Enclosure No. 2 a translation of Marshal Koniev's letter to Dr. Renner of October 20.77

I expressed the keenest disappointment to Mr. Koptelov that the Soviet Government had unilaterally gone ahead with its notification to Chancellor Figl without telling anybody in advance that it proposed to do so. I reminded him that for the past fifteen days we had been constantly checking and conferring with each other to the end that joint and not unilateral action might be taken in the matter of recognition. I said that the United States could have gone ahead alone fifteen days ago but that in the interest of taking joint action we had waited in the hope that we might recognize the Government through the medium of a joint communication from the Allied Council. Mr. Koptelov rather lamely replied that Chancellor Figl had told Marshal Koniev on New Year's Day that he already had oral assurance of recognition from the other three powers. The implication was that this alleged statement of Chancellor Figl had given the Soviets a free hand to go ahead on their own.

I immediately notified General Clark of what Mr. Koptelov had told me. The General then summoned General Tate, myself, and other officers to his home and letters (dated January 4, 1946) addressed to Dr. Renner and to Chancellor Figl were written as follows:

"I take pleasure in informing you that my Government has authorized me to advise you that it recognizes the present Austrian Government formed as a result of the national elections of November 25, 1945, subject to the supreme authority of the Allied Council."

(signed) General Mark W. Clark

An officer was dispatched to deliver the letters, which was done between one and two o'clock in the morning of January 5, 1946.

The text of the Soviet, British and French communications to the Austrian Government on recognition is attached hereto as Enclosure No. 3.78

General Clark dispatched three priority telegrams to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the State Department—Nos. P 0234, P 0244 and P 0271 on January 5 and a message—P 0312—on January 6,⁷⁹ with reference to the foregoing developments. He was able to coordinate the release date in the four capitals of the occupying powers and in Vienna as twelve noon, January 7, 1946, and announcement was made in the local press here at that time.

The French "Wiener Montag", in its hurry to put out a special edition ahead of the other papers, actually issued it an hour before the agreed time of release. As a result the editor is being relieved of his position and sent back to France by the French Commander.

GERMANY

TRIPARTITE WARNING TO GERMANY REGARDING RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE SAFETY AND WELFARE OF ALLIED PRISONERS OF WAR, INTERNEES, AND DEPORTED CITIZENS

740.00116 E.W./12-2244

The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of State

Washington, 22 December 1944.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Reference is made to your memorandum addressed to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, dated October 24, 1944, with which you enclosed a copy of a note from the British Embassy and the text of a proposed warning to Germany 1 designed to safeguard United Nations prisoners of war from mistreatment or murder in a chaotic or desperate Germany.

It is noted that the Department of State, though doubting the efficacy of such a statement, interposes no objection to its issuance.

You will recall that in the winter of 1943-44, in connection with a reported German threat of reprisals against captive British and American airmen, the President approved statements intended for issuance at the appropriate time by the United States and British Governments. In the view of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the appropriate time for such issuance would be only after it has been determined on the governmental level that there is concrete evidence of the Germans' purpose to take action. However, now would be the appropriate occasion for communicating the above statements, appropriately adapted to the situation envisaged by the British, to the British Government. In view of the fact that the British have also referred this matter to the Soviet Government, it is considered that these statements should also be referred to that Government.

These statements have accordingly been adapted as indicated above, and are enclosed herewith. It is recommended that you secure the approval of the President to their communication through diplomatic channels to the British and Soviet Governments at this time.

Upon receipt of notification that the enclosed statements have been communicated to the British and Soviet Governments, it is proposed

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Durbrow)³

Washington, January 18, 1945.

While it is felt that it would be advisable to make plans ahead of time in order to prevent the Germans from causing any harm to American prisoners of war, it is felt that the suggestions contained in the second proposed warning of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be given very careful consideration before it is adopted.

I do not know whether we have decided, in general, whether we wish to acquiesce in the indicated Soviet policy of using large numbers of German citizens to reconstruct devastated areas in the Soviet Union and, if so, whether we might feel it would be advisable to agree upon the method of selection of these German citizens, etc.

It is felt, therefore, that until we have clarified our own policy on this matter, we should give careful consideration to the various implications which would arise from a public statement on our part that we shall retain one thousand German prisoners for each Allied prisoner murdered; for instance, we must give consideration to the possibility that the Soviet Government might, if it felt in its interest to do so, use this method to retain social democrats, members of the non-communist left, or any other democratic groups which it considered to be anti-Soviet.

Moreover, from an internal American point of view, consideration should be given to the reaction of labor groups to the use of "slave labor" which might be considered as competing with American labor.

For these reasons, I feel that it might be advisable to work out a statement along the lines of the British suggestion rather than the Joint Chiefs of Staff.⁴

E[LBRIDGE] D[URBROW]

⁴ Both Mr. Bohlen and Mr. Dunn indicated their agreement.

³ Addressed to the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for White House Liaison (Bohlen) and to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn).

[In a memorandum for the President of January 23, 1945, Acting Secretary of State Grew described the warning proposed by the United Kingdom and the two statements proposed as an alternative by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Mr. Grew attached copies of the documents and commented that although there were certain merits to the proposal of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, it was felt "that the threat to retain a thousand German prisoners to be employed in the interest of the Allied nations for each American prisoner murdered carries with it definite political implications which it would be best to avoid." Mr. Grew requested the President's instructions (740.00114 E.W./1-2345).

President Roosevelt apparently took no action in the matter at that time, but it was discussed in a meeting of Secretary of State Stettinius and Foreign Secretary Eden and their advisers on board H.M.S. Sirius in Grand Harbor, Malta, on February 1, 1945. The Agreed Minutes of this meeting includes the following:

"15. Anglo-American Warning to Germany about Allied Prisoners of War.

"Mr Matthews said that the State Department were disposed to agree with the text proposed by the Foreign Office but that the United States War Department had some views on the subject.

"It was agreed that the timing of any statement would be important and that the proper time would be when the German collapse seemed imminent or when some German outrage was threatened."

For the full text of the Agreed Minutes, and for other details of the meeting, see Foreign Relations, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, pp. 498–507.

An undated note attached to the President's copy of Mr. Grew's memorandum states that the memorandum was taken to the conference at Yalta but that Mr. Bohlen had said that it was "Not Used" there (762.00114/1-2345).]

The Secretary of War (Stimson) and the Secretary of the Navy (Forrestal) to the Secretary of State

Washington, 14 March 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Reports of a number of incidents in which brutal atrocities have recently been committed against American prisoners of war captured by the Germans have caused great concern to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War and Navy Departments. We believe that there is urgent need for vigorous action on the part of this

701 GERMANY

Government, in association with the British and Soviet Governments if they so desire, to protect our prisoners of war from further atrocities.

We recommend the following courses of action on behalf of this Government:

1. That a warning be issued to the Commander-in-Chief of the German Armed Forces, military commanders and officers of the High Command that they will be held accountable for atrocities committed against prisoners of war in areas under their command, whether or not the abuses are perpetrated by or under the direction of political officials, political police or special military units operating under political control. A draft of such a warning on a tripartite basis is attached hereto as an Appendix.

2. That atrocities committed by the Germans against prisoners of war, and the names of individuals and units involved, be published to the German people and to the German Wehrmacht, with detailed statements as to any punishment meted out to such of them as are cap-

3. That full information along similar lines be given to American units down to and including the individual soldier.

4. That vigorous protests be made to the Protecting Power on all such atrocities and that full publicity be given to such protests and to answers received thereto.

Since the proposed warning, with the exception of one paragraph, is the same as a proposed tripartite warning which the British Government has heretofore submitted to the United States and Soviet Governments, we recommend that it be presented to the British and Soviet Governments for their agreement.

In this connection, we have been advised informally by the State Department that the French Government may desire to participate in addressing such a warning to the German Government. We see no objection, from the military viewpoint, to French participation in issuing the proposed warning, providing no undue delay will result therefrom. However, we understand that the French desire to include the treatment of deportees, as well as prisoners of war, in the terms of the warning. This would pose major difficulties, particularly as the responsibility of German military commanders would seem to be quite different as regards these two categories of personnel. We are therefore of the opinion that the present action should be confined to prisoners of war, and that the matter of civilian deportees should be considered a separate subject.

Since the purpose of all of the actions proposed above is the same, we recommend that when the other interested governments are approached with regard to the issuance of the warning, they also be informed of the other courses of action proposed above.⁵

If the proposed warning is to be issued, we assume that the first and last suggestions made above should be carried out by the Department of State and that the second and third suggestions should be carried out by the War and Navy Departments in conjunction with the Office of War Information.

The views expressed above have the concurrence of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Sincerely yours,

FORRESTAL
Secretary of the Navy

Text of the Proposed Warning

"The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. hereby issue a solemn warning to the Commander-in-Chief of the German Armed Forces, to all commandants and guards in charge of Allied prisoners of war in Germany and German-occupied territory and to members of the Gestapo and all other persons of whatsoever service or rank in whose charge Allied prisoners of war have been placed, whether in battle zones, on lines of communication or in rear areas. They declare that they will hold all such persons, no less than the German High Command and competent German military, naval and air authorities, individually responsible for the safety and welfare of all Allied prisoners of war in their charge.

"They regard the treatment of Allied prisoners of war as the particular responsibility of the High Command of the German Army, Navy and Air Forces. They give notice that the officers of the High Command and the military commanders in any area where such abuses occur will be relentlessly prosecuted and brought to punishment. Accountability of these officers is in no way changed by the Ambassador Winant replied in telegram 3408 of April 4, 6 p.m., from London, that Mr. Churchill had meanwhile raised the question directly with President Roosevelt, that the latter had agreed to the proposed warning subject to concurrence by Marshal Stalin, and that this concurrence was now awaited. "Any person guilty of maltreating or allowing any Allied prisoner of war to be maltreated, whether in battle zone, or lines of communication, in a stockade, camp, hospital, prison or elsewhere, will be brought to punishment.

(711.62114A/3–1745)

The British Prime Minister (Churchill) to President Roosevelt

[London, March 21 (?), 1945.]

[Paraphrase]

920. My message No. 921.6 I have seen your recent exchange of messages with Marshal Stalin on prisoners of war matters.7 As regards the general question of Allied prisoners in German hands, I entirely agree with you that we ought to arrange matters now, so that we are in a position to do something quickly at the right time.

We have long foreseen danger to these prisoners, arising either in consequence of chaotic conditions resulting from a German collapse or, alternatively, out of a deliberate threat by Hitler and his associates to murder some, or all, of the prisoners. The object of this manoeuvre might be either to avoid unconditional surrender, or to save the lives of the more important Nazi gangsters and war criminals, using this threat as a bargaining counter, or to cause dissension among the Allies in the final stages of the war. With this in mind we put to the United States and Soviet Governments last October, through our diplomatic representatives in Washington and Moscow, a proposal for an Anglo-American-Russian warning to the Germans (for text please see my message No. 921) but have so far received no reply.

⁶Mr. Churchill's message No. 921, not printed, merely repeated (with minor variations) the warning proposed in the Note of the British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State, October 19, 1944, Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, p. 1258.

⁷ See section entitled "Arrangements relative to the treatment and reciprocal repatriation of American and Soviet prisoners of war and interned civilians liberated by Allied Forces," vol. v, pp. 1067 ff.

On March 2nd last the British Minister in Berne was informed by the head of the Swiss Political Department that he had received reports from Berlin which he could not confirm, that the Germans intended to liquidate, i.e. massacre such prisoners of war as were held in camps in danger of being overrun by the advancing Allied forces, rather than try to remove the prisoners or allow them to fall into Allied hands. In addition, we have in recent months received various indications that the Nazis might, in the last resort, either murder Allied prisoners in their hands, or hold them as hostages.

Various proposals of a practical nature for bringing immediate military aid and protection to prisoners of war camps in Germany have been under consideration by British and United States military authorities. I believe the issue, at the appropriate moment, of a joint warning on the lines we have proposed would be a powerful aid to such practical measures as it may be possible to take. An S.S. General is now in charge of prisoners of war matters in the German Ministry of Defence and S.S. and Gestapo are believed to be taking over the control of camps. On such people a warning will have only limited effect, though, at the worst it can do no harm. On the other hand, it is by no means certain that S.S. have completely taken over from regular army officers and on the latter the warning might have real effect. We should be sure to miss no opportunity of exploiting any duality of control.

I would therefore earnestly invite you and Marshal Stalin, to whom I am repeating this message, to give this proposal your personal attention and I very much hope you will agree to go forward with us in issuing it at the appropriate moment.⁸

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Truman

Washington, April 17, 1945.

I have just received a letter from Mr. Eden ⁹ referring to the text of messages number 920 and 921 from the Prime Minister to President Roosevelt concerning a joint proposed Anglo-American Soviet warning to the effect that individual prisoner of war camp commandants and guards no less than the German authorities will be held individually responsible for the safety of prisoners of war in their charge.

^{*}President Roosevelt replied in telegram 725, March 22, 1945, as follows: "Your 920 and 921. If Marshal Stalin agrees, I will go forward with you in our issuing the joint warning contained in your 921." (Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, New York)

705 GERMANY

In his message number 725 10 President Roosevelt informed the Prime Minister that if Marshal Stalin agreed he would go forward with Mr. Churchill in issuing the warning contained in the Prime Minister's message number 921.

Marshal Stalin has now sent a message to Mr. Churchill, a copy of which I enclose, in which he agrees it is necessary to issue a joint warning in the name of the three governments and that he has no objection to the proposed text submitted by Mr. Churchill. Marshal Stalin also expresses the view that the warning should be signed by the three heads of government. Mr. Churchill has replied in a message, a copy of which is also enclosed, in which he expresses his agreement that the warning should be signed by the three heads and properly timed. Mr. Churchill also states that he is asking Mr. Eden to discuss the details with me and Mr. Molotov.

May I have your permission to discuss this matter with Mr. Eden and Mr. Molotov with a view to having everything in readiness for the publication of the warning at a moment to be determined? 11

I also agree that it is necessary to issue a joint warning in the name of the three governments about safety of prisoners in the hands of Hitlerite Government. I have no objection to text of warning which I have received from you. Would you be good enough to let me know whether or not signatures are necessary under warning. Please also let me know about day and hour of publication.

[Enclosure 2]

EXTRACT OF MESSAGE FROM THE PRIME MINISTER TO MARSHAL STALIN. OF APRIL 16TH

With regard to warning, it should surely be signed by us three and also be properly timed and I am telling Mr. Eden to clear the matter with Mr. Stettinius and I hope Mr. Molotov in Washington.

See footnote 8, p. 704.
 Marginal note: "Approved 4/18/45 Harry Truman."

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

Washington, April 20, 1945.

My Dear Ed: In Anthony's absence I write with reference to your letter of April 18th 12 stating that President Truman had agreed to your discussing with Anthony and Mr. Molotov the question of the joint warning on prisoners of war in Germany.

We have just heard that the Prime Minister thinks that the warning should be issued without delay and he mentions in this connection recent current reports that "prominent" British and American prisoners have been removed by the Germans to some secret place.

We had, a few days ago, informed Mr. Gufler of your Special War Problems Division, that we favoured leaving it to Eisenhower and Alexander to suggest the right time to issue this warning.¹³ This view is now overtaken and the purpose of this letter is to let you know that Anthony will propose to you and Mr. Molotov when you all three meet, that the message be issued immediately.

We are assuming that you three will not have any difficulties with the actual text, which I sent you with my letter of April 7th, is since both the late President and Marshal Stalin agreed to it.

Yours ever,

HALIFAX

Memorandum by the Combined Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of State and the British Embassy

Washington, 20 April 1945.

The Combined Chiefs of Staff have been informed that the following text of a proposed warning to the Germans has been agreed by the heads of the American, British, and Soviet Governments:

"The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States of America and U.S.S.R., on behalf of all the United Nations at war with forthcoming meeting of the United Nations at San Francisco; not printed.

¹⁸ In a letter of April 18, 1945, Mr. G. R. Ranken of the British Embassy informed Mr. Bernard Gufler that British authorities had proposed that the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force (Eisenhower), and the Supreme Allied Commander, Mediterranean Area (Alexander), be instructed to advise the Combined Chiefs of Staff when either of them thought the time was ripe for issue of the warning. Mr. Ranken also asked for a signature of President Truman to be sent to London as soon as possible for facsimile use on the proposed warning leaflets to be dropped in German territory. (762.00114/4–1845) Mr. Gufler on April 20 sent Mr. Ranken two cards with the President's signature but pointed out that the exact language and timing of the warning were still under discussion (762.00114/4–1845).

Germany, hereby issue a solemn warning to all commandants and guards in charge of Allied prisoners of war in Germany and German occupied territory and to members of the Gestapo and all other persons of whatsoever service or rank in whose charge Allied prisoners of war have been placed, whether in battle zones, on lines of communication or in rear areas. They declare that they will hold all such persons, no less than the German High Command and competent German military, naval and air authorities, individually responsible for the safety and welfare of all Allied prisoners of war in their charge.

"Any person guilty of maltreating or allowing any Allied prisoners of war to be maltreated, whether in battle zone, on lines of communication, in a camp, hospital, prison or elsewhere, will be ruthlessly pursued and brought to punishment.

"They give notice that they will regard this responsibility as binding in all circumstances and one which cannot be transferred to any other authorities or individuals whatsoever."

The Combined Chiefs of Staff believe that in view of the existing situation in Germany this warning should be issued immediately.

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador (Halifax)

Washington, April 21, 1945.

DEAR LORD HALIFAX: I have your letter of April 20th on the warning to the Germans about prisoners of war. As I am telling Anthony to-day, the text and publication have been cleared through the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The message may be issued immediately as far as the United States is concerned.

The French Embassy yesterday afternoon advised the State Department that the French Government would like to be associated with the three signers of the warning. There is no objection to this on our part, provided Marshal Stalin is consulted and agrees. I have advised the French Embassy that they should pursue the matter in ¹⁵ No memorandum of this meeting has been found in Department files, but in his personal Record the Secretary of State wrote as follows: "At my meeting with Eden and Cadogan on Saturday the twenty-first, in preparation for our conversations with Molotov, we reviewed the question of releasing the warning on German treatment of war prisoners. Mr. Dunn said that France had asked to participate. We were willing to agree to this request if the French could obtain British and Russian permission without delay.—We discussed also the timing of the withdrawal of British and United States forces into our own occupation zones: reparations; war criminals; and the status of the French request for part of the American zone of occupation." London and that it is up to them to try to make arrangements with your Government and the Russian Government without delaying the matter.

With best wishes always, Sincerely yours,

E. R. STETTINIUS, JR.

[Mr. Molotov arrived at Washington airport a little before 6 p. m. on April 22. He was met by Secretary of State Stettinius and other officials, and was received by the President at the White House. Later that evening Mr. Eden joined Messrs. Stettinius and Molotov at the Department of State for a discussion regarding Poland. The minutes of this meeting (volume V, page 237) include no reference to the tripartite warning to Germany concerning Allied prisoners of war, but final agreement to its issuance on the following day seems to have been reached at about this time.]

762.00114/4-2545

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Eden) to the Secretary of State

Washington, April 23, 1945.

My Dear Ed: The Prime Minister has now suggested the addition of the following words to the warning about United Nations prisoners of war in Germany to be issued over the names of the President, the Prime Minister and Marshal Stalin:

"On the other hand those who help to preserve the lives of prisoners of war, deported citizens and internees of the United Nations at risk to themselves may be sure that their services will be taken into full consideration by the Allied Powers."

I think such an addition would be valuable and I should be grateful if you would have your people let the Embassy here know as soon as possible whether it is agreeable to the United States Government.¹⁶ We are putting the same proposal to the Soviet Government through our Embassy in Moscow.

I should make clear that owing to printing arrangements it will not in any case be possible to get this addition into the first and second

¹⁶ In a reply overtaken by events, the Acting Secretary of State (Grew) wrote to the British Minister (Balfour) on April 28, 1945, as follows: "The Secretaries of War and the Navy have advised me that they and the Joint Chiefs of Staff approve the addition which the British Government wishes to make to the warning addressed to the Germans as to treatment of prisoners of war. They feel that it would be preferable to omit the words 'at risk to themselves'." (762.00114/4—2745)

Press Release Issued by the White House, April 23, 1945 19

There follows the text of a warning, in leaflet form, which Allied airplanes began distributing at 6 p. m., E.W.T., on April 23, 1945, over those portions of German territory still in German control:

"The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States of America, and the U.S.S.R., on behalf of all the United Nations at war with Germany, hereby issue a solemn warning to all commandants and guards in charge of Allied prisoners of war, internees or deported citizens of the United Nations in Germany and German occupied territory and to members of the Gestapo and all other persons of whatsoever service or rank in whose charge Allied prisoners of war, internees or deported citizens have been placed, whether in battle zones, on lines of communication or in rear areas. They declare that they will hold all such persons, no less than the German High Command and competent German military, naval and air authorities, individually responsible for the safety and welfare of all Allied prisoners of war, internees or deported citizens in their charge.

"Any person guilty of maltreating or allowing any Allied prisoners of war, internees or deported citizens to be maltreated, whether in battle zone, on lines of communication, in a camp, hospital, prison or elsewhere, will be ruthlessly pursued and brought to punishment.

"They give notice that they will regard this responsibility as binding in all circumstances and one which cannot be transferred to any other authorities or individuals whatsoever."

The leaflets bore the facsimile signatures of the President of the United States, Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain, and Marshal Stalin of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

3772. Last night the War Cabinet decided to accept the proposal received by the British Government similar to the one set forth in Bern's number 2132 to the Department. Immediately thereafter Foreign Office instructed British Embassy at Washington to approach Department in following sense:

a. War Cabinet considers that United States and British Governments should have no hesitation in accepting proposal. b. The proposal is similar to the one which Chiefs of Staff forwarded concerning prisoners of war in eastern Germany which proposal was however rejected by Soviets. United States and British Governments should inform Soviet Government simultaneously of German proposal and of United States and British acceptance making it plain that the two Governments assume Soviet agreement. c. Meanwhile in order to ensure that the German proposal is being kept open British Government is informing Swiss that it has approached the United States Government. d. Should the Soviet reply be unfavorable, British Government believes that it and the United States Government should nevertheless accept the proposal, informing the Soviets that the two Governments do so on the grounds that the western front is their responsibility. e. When the Swiss have been informed of acceptance of the proposal, the French should be advised thereof and asked to join. f. The proposal received orally by the British asked for an undertaking that prisoners of war "would not further participate in the war". While nothing is said about the war against Japan, the British assume that such an undertaking would only be in connection with the war against Germany.

1486. Bern's 2132, April 11, to Dep't repeated to Paris for Wideling B. Message communicated to this Government through Swiss states that German Government would be disposed to leave all Allied prisoners of war in the camps as Allies advance, provided Allied Governments obligate themselves not to return Prisoners of War so liberated to active duty against Germany.

Please communicate this proposal to the French authorities and inform them that this Government assumes that similar conditions are offered to the French Government and wishes to be informed whether the French Government intends to make favorable response as regards its participation.

In approaching French authorities you should impress upon them the great importance this Government attaches to the matter. In view of the rapidly deteriorating conditions in the camps and the extreme hardships to which all Allied prisoners of war are now subjected, the United States authorities consider that the offer of the German Government should be accepted. The Government of the United States hopes that the French Government will proceed likewise. It is considered that a maximum of three days should be allowed the French authorities for consideration and reply following your presentation of this matter to them.

The Department leaves to your discretion the manner of presentation of the foregoing. In the event of either an unfavorable reply or absence of reply within the three day period, you should inform Department urgently and at the same time the French Government should be left in no doubt that this Government is proceeding with the acceptance of the German proposal insofar as it concerns American prisoners of war.

It is understood that the British Ambassador⁸ is to be instructed to approach the French Government in a similar sense.

For your information the Soviet Government is also being informed of this proposal and the contemplated action of this Government.

Chauvel stated that the French Government had received a similar message from the Germans through the Swiss about 3 days ago and that it is being studied by the War Ministry and the Ministry of Prisoners and Deportees. He said that the Quai d'Orsay favors an immediate acceptance of the German proposal but that he is not certain of the exact views of the other interested Ministries. 1930. The substance of Department's 1501 April 16 was conveyed to the Foreign Ministry and it was stressed that the deletion of the words "against Germany" did not change the position of our Government in regard to this matter.

The pertinent Foreign Ministry official has just told us informally that while the French Government has not taken a final decision it appears practically certain that the War Ministry will not agree to the German proposal insofar as French POWs are concerned. He said that in contrast with the comparatively small number of American POWs, France has hundreds of thousands in Germany. The French are trying to rebuild a strong national army and will need every available man of experience who is physically capable of serving in the armed forces. Furthermore, it appears the war in the Far East may go on for a considerable time and France hopes to make an important contribution to the Allied war effort in the Pacific theater. Therefore the Ministry of War does not find it possible to accept the German proposal which would effectively prevent French POWs from serving on active duty in the armed forces until war in the Far East is over. He observed that had the German proposal been made several months ago it might have been interesting but that now it has not the same value since the Allied advance will liberate the great majority of Allied prisoners and those that remain in German hands in the so-called "redoubt" in central Germany will not profit from any such agreement.

According to the official who conveyed this message the decision was taken only after the French Government had studied all aspects of the question. He said that acceptance of the German proposal would tie the hands of the French Government and for the reasons outlined in my 1930 April 18 it is not possible to accept the proposal. 1584. Reurtel 1930 and 1939, April 18. Inform French authorities that the Government of the United States considered it necessary for reasons set forth in Department's 1486 of April 15[14], to accept for its part the German proposal. While the position of the French Government in this matter is appreciated, we are concerned lest its failure to take parallel action may provide the German Government with grounds for withdrawing the offer or delaying action.

You are requested therefore to again approach the French on an urgent basis placing emphasis on the fact that the British, Soviet and United States Governments for their part have accepted the German proposal.

It is noted that the primary reason for the French decision appears to be their reluctance to agree not to use prisoners recovered under this arrangement in active duty. In this connection you should convey discreetly the following observations to the appropriate French authorities: The United States authorities have consistently interpreted active military service as used in Article 74 of the Convention to mean service in combat duty. This interpretation is being applied with respect to the present German proposal and does not prevent the use of prisoners so recovered in other military duty, nor require their separation from military service. French authorities may wish to consider a similar interpretation and to give further thought to the German proposal made no mention of the Far East, the United States Government in accepting the offer did not raise the question.

The United States position as set forth in Department's 1584 April 20 was brought to the attention of the appropriate official of the Foreign Ministry and our desire to have the French authorities give further consideration to the German proposal in the light of these additional considerations was stressed.

In reply the official stated that while the Foreign Ministry will present our views to de Gaulle ¹¹ he does not believe that the French decision will be altered. He said that it was de Gaulle personally who had taken the decision and that in addition to the considerations set forth in my 1930 of April 18 de Gaulle seems convinced that this German offer will ultimately be linked in some way with a German proposal looking to the exchange of French political hostages and French POWs within the so-called German redoubt against guarantees of immunity for leading Nazis (he indicated that German feelers have already been put out). The French, he said, have no intention of bargaining with the Germans for immunity for Nazis. Furthermore the French feel that the German proposal is not a real bona fide offer since they are only offering to leave the prisoners in the camps because they lack the facilities to move any large number of them elsewhere.

"1. selves not to employ these prisoners in active service.

2. The French Government has made it known that it would accept this proposal on the following conditions: (1) That it concerns prisoners actually held at the moment of liberation. (2) That the obligation not to use them applies only to operations directed against German force."

The official stated that this decision had been taken after very considerable discussion in the Cabinet meetings. He went on to say that the above message would be conveyed to the Swiss Government through the intermediary of the French Embassy at Bern for transmission to the German Government.

In connection with the second condition in the memorandum, we observed that if this condition were formally communicated to the Germans, the latter might well reply that the prohibition against the use of these prisoners applied to all the terms of military operations including the Pacific. With this in mind, it was suggested that since the German offer had not specified any particular theater, it would appear that the French Government would be in a position to place its own interpretation on the extent of the agreement. Therefore, if the French did not wish to risk the possibility of receiving a negative reply from the Germans on this point, it would appear in their interest not to raise the question. The official with whom we discussed this matter stated that he was in agreement and would endeavor to have the French Embassy in Bern given discretion to omit the second condition from the normal reply but could not assure us that his recommendation would be followed.

I have communicated with the British Embassy which is also receiving a copy of the above memorandum, and I am told that they are taking a similar line with the French.

the Psychological Warfare Division took the position that the policy of unconditional surrender does not apply to the German people as individuals but only to any German Government, party or movement. PWD 16 argued that the policy of unconditional surrender was always meant to apply only to the German Government and High Command and to the NSDAP 17 but not to the German people as human beings and that even if this was not the intention at the outset it has since become the intention. PWD asserted that the American and British Governments have entered into certain definite commitments with respect to the German people regarded as individuals as a result of (a) adherence to the Geneva Convention 18 (b) the issuance of a series of proclamations by G-5 19 SHAEF, stating the principles and procedures of military government and including announcements on wage policy, education policy, attitude to trade unions, judicial procedure, et cetera, and (c) in the statements by the spokesman of military government. PWD also maintained that political commitments were first made "in very general terms" by the President, the Prime Minister and Marshal Stalin not to destroy the German people as such. PWD contended that these general statements of intentions were reiterated more specifically on behalf of the American and British Governments in the proclamations of military government and in the statements by the spokesman of military government.20

The foregoing arose out of an objection which I made recently to a proposed broadcast to German railroad workmen which included three distinct promises to German workmen generally, namely (1) the opportunity of employment (2) employment at prevailing rates of wages and (3) the right of collective bargaining. I stated the opinion that our present policy is against making any general promises or commitments to the German people. I suggested the substitution of factual statements in the broadcast describing what actually happens to German workmen in the zone we are now occupying.

PWD took the view that my position was untenable for the reasons outlined above, and asked for a ruling by the Chief of Staff. The matter was considered at a meeting of representatives of various staff sections at SHAEF on January 10 presided by Lt. Gen. Sir F. E. Morgan, Deputy Chief of Staff. The consensus of the meeting on the immediate issues involved was that the position I had taken and which I took at the meeting was correct. Thus it was agreed that the proclamations by the Supreme Commander to the population of German occupied territory, and the broadcasts explaining them, do not constitute commitments, but are merely expressions of intentions. They are to be regarded as orders which may be changed in the discretion of the Supreme Commander at any time and the Germans of the occupied territory have no rights in the matter. Still less it was further agreed does the expression by the Supreme Commander as an intention vis-à-vis the population of German territory already occupied constitute a promise to the population of German territory not yet occupied that they will be treated in the same way in the future.

The consensus was accordingly that even if the Supreme Commander has expressed his intention to treat in certain ways the civilian population of German territory already occupied the Psychological Warfare Division may not, without special authorization, in each case, promise that civilians in German territory still behind the enemy lines will be treated in the same way.

In the course of the discussions it was further brought out that the War Department has recently asked that propaganda "taper off" on statements promising to release German prisoners as soon as possible after hostilities as provided by article 75 of the Geneva Convention.

While the meeting sustained my views on the immediate issues involved with PWD there was no agreement among those present on the larger question whether in general the policy of unconditional surrender applies only to any German Government, party or movement or whether it also applies to the German people as individuals. It has been my understanding ever since attending the Casablanca meeting 21 when the policy was announced that it certainly does apply to all enemy Germans individually and collectively. No distinction such as that now put forward by PWD was made or even considered at Casablanca. I referred at the meeting to the Secretary's recent statement on unconditional surrender 22 but General Morgan felt that the President's message to Congress 23 by implication restricted the policy to the "German armed forces".

Obviously the task of PWD and ours is to facilitate the work of our combat troops, but I feel that the longer term considerations are of such moment that any and every attempt to compromise the policy of unconditional surrender, and build up a record which unquestionably

Sтоскноім, March 3, 1945—7 р. m. [Received 9:09 р. m.]

844. Acting Secretary General of Foreign Office, Assarsson, has informed me that on Friday Gunnar Carlsson, Chairman Swedish Shipping Association was invited to call at German Legation in Stockholm and was received by Geheimrat von Hesse, a German official who was Counselor of German Embassy in London just prior to outbreak of war and now said to be closely associated with Ribbentrop.²⁵ Von Hesse told Carlsson that he had been instructed by Ribbentrop to ask him to convey following peace proposals to the Allies ²⁶ (a) Germany to have its 1939 frontiers, and (b) British and Americans to join Germany against Russia.

The text of this telegram was transmitted by the Department to London in telegram 1694, March 5, midnight, not printed. Telegram 2347, March 7, 7 p. m., from London, reported that the substance of the telegram under reference had been communicated to the Foreign Office (740.00119 EW/3-745).

²⁵ Joachim von Ribbentrop, German Foreign Minister. ²⁶ Foreign Minister Ribbentrop had at this time put out on his own initiative a number of informal peace feelers; see the testimony of his secretary, Fräulein Margerete Blank, in Trial of the Major War Criminals Before the International Military Tribunals (Nuremberg, 1948), vol. x, pp. 193–194. For Hesse's explanation of the origins of these feelers and an account of his own mission to Stockholm, see Fritz Hesse, Das Spiel um Deutschland (Munich, 1953), pp. 386–419.

Carlsson is reported to have refused to convey any such proposals, explaining that they were on their face absurd. He asked von Hesse what Germans proposed to do with Hitler, Himmler 27 and others and von Hesse replied that they would be obliged to keep these people for some time after the war as otherwise there would be complete chaos in Germany. They would, however, subsequently be got rid of. JOHNSON

We have received information from American and British sources that General Karl Wolf,³² a high SS officer stationed in north Italy, has arrived at Lugano accompanied by an OKW ³³ member of Kesselring's ³⁴ staff together with Messrs. Simmer ³⁵ and Dollmann.³⁶ Report stated that these men are ready to discuss definite surrender. If this should indeed be the case, SAC ³⁷ may consider sending a member of his staff into Switzerland in civilian clothes under secret cover. We have received previous reports in past ten days with regard to desire of Germans in north Italy to negotiate conclusion of hostilities ³⁸ but have not heretofore reported to Department because we did not feel there was sufficient reason to take them too seriously. Inasmuch as this latest report would appear to be reliable, we are informing Department on it. If there should be discussions held in Switzerland, conversations, of course, would be conducted only on basis of unconditional surrender.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, March 11, 1945—6 p. m.

564. Please communicate immediately to the Soviet Government the substance of the following paraphrase of message received from Allied Force Headquarters Caserta by the Combined Chiefs of Staff: ³⁹

"1. On March 8 through the OSS in this theatre word was received that General Karl Wolff, ranking SS officer in Italy, accompanied by Dollmann and Simmer and a representative of the OKW presumed to be from General Kesselring's staff, were expected to arrive at Lugano, Switzerland, in order to discuss the surrender of the German forces in Italy. The arrival of General Wolff and his willingness to attempt the development of a program to take the Germans in North Italy out of the war has been confirmed by information received on March 9.40

⁵⁰ A paraphrase of the message quoted below was received by the Department on March 11 as an enclosure to a letter from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State, not printed. In the letter the Secretary of State was informed:

[&]quot;The Combined Chiefs of Staff have agreed to Field Marshal Alexander's proposals with the proviso that his representatives are not to be dispatched to Berne until the Russians have been informed through the Department of State and the Foreign Office.

[&]quot;The Joint Chiefs of Staff therefore recommend, and we concur, that the substance of the attached paraphrase be telegraphed to Moscow and communicated to the Russians at once and that the Joint Chiefs of Staff be informed at the earliest possible moment when this has been done.

[&]quot;The British Chiefs of Staff are making a similar recommendation to the Foreign Office." (740.00119 EW/3--1145)

For information on the consideration of Field Marshal Alexander's proposals by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, see: William D. Leahy, I Was There (New York, Whittlesey House, 1950), p. 330.

"Under cover of a letter from General William J. Donovan, Director of [&]quot;Under cover of a letter from General William J. Donovan, Director of the Office of Strategic Services, to the Secretary of State, March 10, not printed, the Department received a memorandum which gave further details of the discussions in Bern. This memorandum, based on reports from the agent in Bern, said in part:

[&]quot;Wolff is a distinctive personality, and evidence indicates that he represents the more moderate element in Waffen SS combined with a measure of romanticism. He is probably the most dynamic personality in North Italy and, next to Kesselring, the most powerful.

[&]quot;Wolff stated that the time had come when some German with power to act should lead Germany out of the war in order to end useless human and material destruction. He says he is willing to act and feels he can persuade Kesselring to cooperate, and that the two control the situation in North Italy. As far as the SS is concerned, Wolff states that he also controls Western Austria, since his authority includes the Vorarlberg, Tyrol, and the Brenner Pass with both its northern and southern approaches. Wolff declares that joint action by Kesselring and himself would leave Hitler and Himmler powerless to take effective counter-measures like the ones they employed in the 20 July crisis. Also Wolff feels that joint action by Kesselring and himself would have a vital repercussion on the German Army, particularly on the Western Front, since many Generals are only waiting for someone to take the lead. Wolff made no request concerning his personal safety or privileged treatment from the war criminal viewpoint." (740.0011EW/3-1045)

2. It is Wolff's opinion that mere military surrender would be difficult and he prefers, therefore, that the German leaders in Italy should make a statement to the German people prior to capitulation that there is no further hope and that a continuation of the struggle is needlessly causing the shedding of German blood. He considers Kesselring's adherence essential to the plan, but states that he has not yet been won over. Rahn, however, who is German Ambassador to the Fascist Italian Government, he says is in agreement with him. According to Wolff, Himmler knows nothing of his activities. Wolff will endeavor immediately to inform Kesselring of the plan and will maintain contact with the representatives of the OSS.

3. As evidence of their good faith and ability to act, Dollmann had promised prior to meeting in Switzerland to produce Parri, the recently captured CLNAI leader.⁴¹ Information has been received that on March 9 Parri was in fact delivered in Switzerland unconditionally and is in good health. In view of further discussions now being held with Wolff by OSS, it is suggested that representatives of my headquarters be prepared to go to Switzerland in order to handle the situation if it develops favorably.

4. In the event that further negotiations reveal that the German representatives seem genuine and have definite proposals to make, I propose to act on the following lines:

(a) The representatives of the Germans must have written evidence from Kesselring that they are authorized to treat, and must come to Bern.

(b) A meeting place to be arranged by OSS either at the British or the American Legations at night, or at another place if the Legations are too difficult.

- (c) General Lemnitzer, my American Deputy Chief of Staff, and General Airey, my British Chief Intelligence Officer, to be sent to Bern.
- (d) Their instructions will be to tell the German representatives:
 - (1) That only a method of surrender on a purely military basis will be dealt with in the discussion and not on a governmental or political basis.

(2) That for detailed military discussions they must come to AFHQ.42

- (3) That a method of communication with Kesselring must be arranged by them.
- 5. Although it is wise to be prepared, the fact that two of the leaders are Himmler and SS men makes me suspicious."

The Combined Chiefs of Staff have agreed to the proposals of Field Marshal Alexander with the condition that none of his representatives are to be sent to Bern until the Soviet Government has been informed Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State, to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] March 13, 1945.

The following are the latest developments in the matter that came up on Sunday 46 in regard to certain German proposals involving their Italian forces.

As you recall, at 6:00 p. m., March 11, we sent out the message requested by the Joint Chiefs of Staff 47 which was delivered to the Soviet Government before 7:00 a.m., Washington time, March 12, and the Secretary of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Admiral Leahy were informed immediately upon receipt about 9:45 a.m. Last night a telegram was received from Ambassador Harriman stating that the Russians consider this offer very important and have no opposition to what Field Marshal Alexander proposed and added that they would like to have Soviet officers participate in the discussions.⁴⁸ I immediately called Colonel Wise 49 who came down and obtained the substance of the message for General Hull of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Early this morning a second message was received from Ambassador Harriman 50 in which General Deane concurred expressing the opinion that there was no justification for the Soviet request for participation since it was a matter of purely military surrender in an Anglo-American theater. That message was made available at 8:00 a.m. to Colonel Wise.

This morning after talking with Mr. Matthews 51 and Mr. Dunn I told Colonel Wise that we felt that while nothing should be allowed to delay even for one hour the possibility of surrender, we nevertheless, felt it would be a mistake to give a flat refusal to the Russian request because of possible consequences on other matters affecting German surrender 52 and suggested that the Russians be allowed to come as observers but with the clear understanding that the decision on any surrender on the purely military level would be made by the Commander-in-Chief of the theater. Furthermore, in order that there should be no delay the Russian observers should come in on the second phase, namely, when the Germans had come to AFHQ, but that the contact in Bern should be made without their participation. I later talked with Admiral Leahy on this and he expressed general agreement and emphasized the importance of no delay. He later talked to the President who seemed to be dubious as to the effect of the presence of Soviet officers on the willingness of the Germans to surrender. I repeated to Admiral Leahy that the State Department did not wish to make any suggestion which would mean the slightest delay in this matter but that if it were possible to avoid any delay and at the same time not give the Russians precedent for independent action, that would be desirable.

Colonel Wise called me from the War Department and said that the thinking over there in the Staff was very much along our lines but that no one yet knew the opinion of Secretary Stimson who was on his way to see the President.

We will be kept fully informed on any development and the reply when agreed upon by the military and the President will come to us for concurrence and dispatch through Harriman or possibly General Deane to the Soviet military authorities in order to keep it on the military level.

Memorandum by the United States Chiefs of Staff to the Combined Chiefs of Staff ⁵³

C.C.S. 797

[Washington,] 13 March 1945.

- 1. After considering the communications connected with proposed negotiations with Kesselring, including the Soviet participation proposed by the Russians, the United States Chiefs of Staff are convinced that the procedure and line of action proposed by the British Chiefs of Staff should not be undertaken.
- 2. It is clear that General Alexander's proposal is that he attempt to arrange a military surrender which would not involve political aspects. His proposed procedure is to undertake all negotiations at his headquarters and that the Berne meeting be a contact where his representatives will have no authority to negotiate but will merely attempt to arrange for accredited representatives of the German commander to go to Allied Force Headquarters.

- 3. The United States Chiefs of Staff are informed that the American Ambassador to the U.S.S.R. considers that the Soviet proposal for their officers to participate in discussions at Berne has no justification since the German proposal is for the surrender of a military force on a U.S.-British front. This is not a parallel to the capitulation of a Government and the American Ambassador feels that under similar circumstances the Soviet Government would not allow our officers to He further considers that our agreement to the Russians participate. going to Berne would be considered by the Soviet as a sign of weakness. and would lead to more untenable demands from the Russians. General Deane concurs in the American Ambassador's estimate. United States Chiefs of Staff agree with the estimate of Mr. Harriman and General Deane and further point out that the Russian proposal which the British Chiefs of Staff propose to accept would result in only one representative from each of the U.S. and British military forces meeting the German representatives in Berne, whereas there would be two Russian representatives present.
- 4. It is now apparent that the procedure of handling this matter through the Foreign Office and the State Department is so cumbersome and involved that the very system is likely to eliminate any possibility of useful results. Furthermore, it introduces into what is almost entirely a military matter an unavoidable political element which may well tie Marshal Alexander's hands to such an extent that he will be unable to reap benefits from the present situation which otherwise would accrue.
- 5. It is the view of the United States Chiefs of Staff that the political interests of the governments will be adequately guarded by the military keeping their respective political offices completely informed concerning developments.
- 6. In the light of the foregoing, the United States Chiefs of Staff consider that:
- a. The State Department and Foreign Office should be asked to transmit to the Soviets a communication substantially as that attached.
- b. Marshal Alexander should be instructed by the British Chiefs of Staff for the Combined Chiefs of Staff, to proceed at once with the contact in Berne and to handle Russian participation by communications through the British and U.S. Missions in Moscow on the military level.
 - 7. The State Department concurs in the foregoing.

You should inform Soviet Government substantially as follows: The Russian representatives are welcome. The Combined Chiefs of Staff are instructing Field Marshal Alexander to make arrangements for the Soviet representatives to be present at his headquarters where SACMED 53a will conduct all conversations which may take place with the representatives of the German commander in Italy. All matters concerning surrender will be discussed at Field Marshal Alexander's headquarters. Field Marshal Alexander's representatives are already secretly in Berne and, in view of the time element, are being instructed to give to the representatives of the German commander the instructions which have already been communicated to the Soviets. Field Marshal Alexander is being instructed to communicate to the Soviets through Admiral Archer 54 and General Deane the results of any contact in Berne and to use this channel for any subsequent arrangements connected with the presence of Soviet representatives at his headquarters and with information concerning conversations at that headquarters.

- 2. The British Chiefs of Staff agree that Field Marshal Alexander should be instructed to establish contact forthwith with the Germans at Berne for the purpose of arranging for accredited representatives of the German Commander to go to A.F.H.Q. to the Soviet Union.

This memorandum was sent to the Secretary of State under cover of a letter from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, March 15, not printed. The letter concurred in the recommendation of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that the message sent in telegram 596, March 15, 1 p. m., to Moscow, infra, be dispatched by the Department.

- at A.F.H.Q. and that the Russians should be invited to attend. The Russians have, in fact, asked to "take part in proposed talks" and the only point at issue is what status the Russian representatives will have at the discussions at Field Marshal Alexander's headquarters.
- 4. The British Chiefs of Staff consider that Field Marshal Alexander, as Supreme Allied Commander in this Anglo-American theatre, should alone be responsible for conducting negotiations and reaching decisions. The position of the Russians will thus be virtually that of "observers." The Foreign Office are anxious to avoid the word "observers" as they consider that this would antagonise the Soviet Government. Moreover, they point out that whatever we do now will undoubtedly set up a precedent for the treatment which we may expect at Russian hands in the event of a similar situation arising on the Eastern Front.
- 5. For these reasons the British Chiefs of Staff feel that the reply which is sent to the Russians should clarify this question of the status of their representatives.
- 6. To sum up the British Chiefs of Staff recommend that the Combined Chiefs of Staff should:
- a. ask the State Department and the Foreign Office to despatch the revised draft message at Enclosure "A". It will be seen that this revised draft embodies the points put forward by the United States Chiefs of Staff and clarifies the status of the Russian Representatives.
- b. in order to save time, despatch from Washington the message at Enclosure "B" ⁵⁷ to Field Marshal Alexander, incorporating the text of the instructions sent to Moscow and asking him to proceed at once with the contact at Berne.

I have received the following letter from Molotov tonight in reply to my letter delivered 24 hours ago regarding Soviet participation in the proposed talks in Bern:

"In connection with your letter received by me March 16th concerning negotiations in Bern, I communicate to you the following:

On March 12th you informed me that on March 9th in Bern there arrived the German General Karl Wolff and his companions Dollmann and Zimmer, for discussion with representatives of the Armies of the United States and Great Britain of the question of the capitulation of the German Armed Forces in Northern Italy. You further communicated that Field Marshal Alexander had been directed to detail his officers to Bern for a meeting with these persons and you inquired the point of view of the Soviet Government on this question.

On that same day, the 12th of March, I informed you that the Soviet Government did not object to negotiations with General Wolff in Bern as long as officers representing the Soviet Military Command would take part in these negotiations. In giving this answer the Soviet Government did not doubt that the Government of the United States would take an affirmative attitude to its proposal for the participation of Soviet officers in negotiations with the German General Wolff in Bern, and it named its representatives then and there.

Today, the 16th of March, I received from you a letter from which it appears that the Government of the United States refuses to the Soviet Representatives the right to participate in the negotiations in Bern. The refusal of the Government of the United States to admit the participation of the Soviet Representatives in the negotiations in Bern was for the Soviet Government utterly unexpected and incomprehensible from the point of view of Allied relations between our countries. In view of this the Soviet Government considers it impossible to give its agreement to negotiations of American and British Representatives with representatives of the German Commander in Bern and insists that the negotiations already begun in Bern be broken off.

The Soviet Government, furthermore, insists that also from now on all possibility of the conduct of separate negotiations by one or two of the Allied Powers with German Representatives without the participation of the third Allied Power be ruled out."

M 23249.61 Molotov's letter contained in my last Army cable M 23247 regarding the Berne meeting confirms the growing impression that General Deane and I have received, particularly since the Crimea Conference, that the Soviet leaders have come to believe that they can force their will on us on any issue.

They have, arbitrarily, and in disregard of the facts, placed their own interpretation on the Yalta agreements regarding Poland, liberated areas as applied to Rumania, and liberated prisoners of war.⁶²

In the present case, Molotov again bases his position on a distortion of the facts. In a letter of March 12 he stated that the Soviet Government had no objections to the Berne meeting and expressed the wish that the Soviet Government might be represented. Now he contends that the Soviet Government acquiesced to the meeting on the condition that Soviet representatives would participate. The arrogant language of Molotov's letter, I believe, brings out in the open a domineering attitude toward the United States which we have before only suspected.

It has been my feeling that sooner or later this attitude would create a situation which would be intolerable to us.

I, therefore, recommend that we face the issue now by adhering to the reasonable and generous position that we have taken and by advising the Soviet Government in firm, but friendly, terms to that effect.

790. While the reasons motivating the Soviets to take such a strong position insisting on their participation in the Bern meeting are not clear, I thought it might be of some interest to you to have our speculations from Moscow.

It is possible that (1) they are suspicious of us, (2) they have some undisclosed motives or plans in connection with Germany, or (3) it is a matter of general prestige. It is entirely possible that they do not believe us when we say the Bern negotiations are for the sole purpose of attempting to bring Kesselring's authorized representatives to They may think that the real negotiations will be at Bern with the Caserta meeting as a rubber stamp. This is a procedure, which we have experienced, they themselves are capable of following. On the other hand they may be fearful or have information that in addition to the armies in north Italy there may be other groups of Germans who are considering surrendering to us with a view of protecting themselves and their future whereas the Soviets may have been approached by similar groups with a view of surrendering to Russia for a similar purpose. We have been given no information on what the activities of their Freies Deutschland Committee 63 may be. cannot take seriously the implication in the last sentence of Molotov's letter that the Soviets would refrain from having any conversations with Germans without our participation.

We have seen in their activities in Rumania, Bulgaria and Iran that they have appeared in the first instance to be frank and open with us whereas when their plans have unfolded it has been clear that they have been motivated from the beginning by objectives which were not disclosed to us and were contrary to our understanding. In these cases they have failed to advise us in advance of the action they contemplated taking, as in the case of declaring war on Bulgaria, did so an hour before acting.

From our previous experience and their reaction in this case it would seem that they intend to attempt to dominate all matters relating to Germany in ways not yet fully disclosed.

The question of prestige may also be involved. They have contended to their people and the world that Germany has been defeated almost entirely through the efforts of the Red Army. It may be that with the thaws their advance in the East may be bogged down for a couple of months and if there is a break in Italy leading to one in the West they wish to insure being full participants in any major surrender.

This office if [is] fully apprised of developments as they occur but on grounds of security we shall continue to refrain from reporting in detail to Department unless specifically directed to do so. ⁶⁵ We have seen several telegrams exchanged in the last few days between his HQ and Combined Chiefs of Staff, the Naf-Fan series. We have also seen messages between Churchill and Alexander. If this matter should be concluded successfully does Department have any special instruction which it may care to issue at this time? If so they should be sent to Caserta urgently.

⁶⁵ Detailed reports of the Bern negotiations were never sent to the Department via Department channels. Frequent reports however, did reach the Department from the Office of Strategic Services, and in War Department telegrams passed to the Department for information.

Representatives of the Supreme Allied Commander met with General Wolff in Bern on March 19. It was arranged that General Wolff would leave the following day for discussions with Field Marshal Kesselring and other high ranking German officers in an effort to enlist their support. General Wolff was told that if successful in these discussions, he must arrange for the despatch to Allied Force Headquarters in Caserta of qualified officers armed with full powers to make plans for a surrender.

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State, to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] March 19, 1945.

Mr. Dunn: I talked with Admiral Leahy with regard to the British suggestion for a reply to Molotov's letter of March 16 concerning the meeting in Switzerland. Admiral Leahy said (1) that the Joint Chiefs were against the President's sending a message to Stalin on this subject and that the reply should go through diplomatic channels, and (2) that he felt that the proposed British message was satisfactory as it was along the same lines as that proposed by the War Department but that the sentence in paragraph 2(b) expressing the hope that the Soviet Government "will not press their request for contact in Bern to be broken off" should be omitted since it would give the Soviet Government the impression that it was up to it to decide whether the matter should be pursued or not. I said that I was sure the Department of State would agree with this correction in particular in view of Ambassador Harriman's cables.

I saw Michael Wright 66 this afternoon and explained to him the Admiral's views. I also showed him the text of the proposed reply 67 which, when finally approved by the Joint Chiefs and the President, we proposed to send to Harriman for delivery to Molotov. Mr. Wright said that he agreed with the suggested deletion and was sure that the Foreign Office would accept it. He asked that he be notified as soon as our message had been approved and that he be given a copy in paraphrase.⁶⁸ This I promised to do.

⁶⁹ The message set forth below is identical with a draft transmitted to Assistant Secretary of State Dunn under cover of a memorandum from Maj. Gen. John E. Hull on March 17 (not printed). The memorandum read in part: "The attached represents the views of the War and Navy Departments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the question of the Soviet reply to Mr. Harriman's note of March 16. This has been gone over carefully by Mr. Stimson personally.

"The view of Admiral Leahy and, I believe, the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (General Marshall being out of the city today) is that Mr.

reply to Molotov's letter quoted in your Army cable M 23247.^{69a} You should concert delivery with the British Ambassador who is being instructed to reply along similar lines.

"1. The reply of the Soviet Government to Mr. Harriman's letter of March 16th concerning the contact at Bern is received and this Government is surprised at the tenor of this communication. appears to be a misunderstanding on the part of the Soviet Government as to the purpose of a contact in Bern between the representatives of Field Marshal Alexander and German General Wolff. No negotiations whatever are to take place in Bern and the Bern meeting is solely for the purpose of establishing contact with a view to getting authorized representatives of the German Command to come to Field Marshal Alexander's headquarters where the details of the surrender will be discussed. The British and American officers attending this meeting are merely Staff officers of Field Marshal Alexander representing him for the sole purpose of obtaining this subsequent meeting. They were selected by him without consultation with this Government and the American officer thus selected, General Lemnitzer, has had no instructions whatever from the U.S. Government.

"2. Furthermore the discussions in the subsequent meeting to be conducted at Allied Forces Headquarters at Caserta, Italy, will be limited to the purpose of effecting an unconditional military surrender of the German forces in Northern Italy and these discussions will be conducted by Field Marshal Alexander. The suggested presence of your officers at the Caserta meeting conveyed to you through Mr. Harriman was for the purpose of assuring you that no other matters than the terms of such a military surrender were being discussed between us. It is our view that courtesy and good faith between the Soviet, British and American Allied Powers, would be best promoted by such presence.

"3. It goes without saying that whenever occasions may arise for the discussion between our three Powers of political as distinguished from purely military matters of surrender, each of the Three Powers should be fully represented and participate in the discussions.

"4. Assuming this fully explains to you the character of our proposal, we will proceed with the matter along the lines already indicated and hope your officers will be present at any meeting at Caserta."

Your letter of March 21 concerning the meeting between the officers of Field Marshal Alexander's Staff with General Wolff in Bern has been received. I must state that I see no basis for your statement to the effect that the Soviet Government has incorrectly understood the reasons for the contact between Wolff and Field Marshal Alexander's representatives in Bern since in the present case it is not a question of incorrect understanding of the objectives of this contact or of misunderstanding—it is something worse.

The German General Wolff and the persons accompanying him, according to your letter of March 12,⁷¹ arrived in Bern in order to carry on conversations with representatives of the American and British Command concerning the surrender of German troops in the north of Italy. When the Soviet Government stated that representatives of the Soviet Military Command should participate in these conversations the Soviet Government received a refusal in this respect. During the last two weeks, therefore, in Bern, behind the back of the Soviet Government which has been carrying on the main burden of the war against Germany, representatives of the American and British Command on the one part and representatives of the German Military Command on the other are carrying on negotiations. The Government of the USSR considers that this is absolutely inadmissible and insists on the fulfillment of the statement of the Soviet Government contained in my letter of March 16.⁷²

"The only new light shed to explain the Soviet attitude is Molotov's contention appearing for the first time I believe in an official communication, that the Soviets have carried the main burden of the war against Germany. Switzerland be stopped forthwith because of the non participation therein of Soviet officers.

I am sure that the facts of this matter, through misunderstanding, have not been correctly presented to you.

The facts are as follows: Some few days ago unconfirmed information was received in Switzerland that some German officers were considering the possibility of arranging for the surrender of German troops that are opposed to the British-American Armies in Italy commanded by Field Marshal Alexander.

When this information reached Washington, Field Marshal Alexander was authorized to send an officer, or officers, of his staff to Switzerland to ascertain the accuracy of the report, and if it appeared to be of sufficient promise, to arrange with any competent German officers for a conference with Field Marshal Alexander at his headquarters in Italy to discuss details of the surrender. Soviet representatives would, of course, be present if such a meeting could be arranged.

The Soviet Government was immediately informed of this investigation to be made in Switzerland and was later informed that it will be agreeable for Soviet officers to be present at Field Marshal Alexander's meeting with German officers when and if such a meeting is finally arranged in Berne to discuss details of a surrender at Caserta.

Attempts by our representatives to arrange a meeting with German officers have met with no success up to the present time, but there still appears to be a possibility of such a meeting.

You will, of course, understand that my government must give every assistance to all officers in the field in command of American Forces who believe there is a possibility of forcing the surrender of enemy troops in their area. It would be completely unreasonable for me to take any other attitude or to permit any delay which must cause additional and avoidable loss of life in the American Forces. You as a military man will understand the necessity for prompt action to avoid losing an opportunity. It is in the same category as would be the sending of a flag of truce to your general at Koenigsberg or Danzig.

In such a surrender of enemy forces in the field, there can be no political implications whatever and no violation of our agreed principle of unconditional surrender.

At any discussion of details of surrender by our commanders of American Forces in the field, I will be pleased to have the benefit of the experience and advice of any of your officers who can be present, but I cannot agree to suspend investigation of the possibility because of objection on the part of Mr. Molotov for some reason that is completely beyond my understanding.

I do not expect much from the reported possibility, but I hope you will, with the purpose of preventing misunderstanding between our officers, point out to the Soviet officials concerned the desirability and necessity of our taking prompt and effective action without any delay to accomplish the surrender of any enemy military forces in the field that are opposed to American Forces.

I am sure that when a similar opportunity comes on the Soviet front you will have the same attitude and will take the same action.

ROOSEVELT

The Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Union (Stalin) to President Roosevelt 75

[Translation]

I gave consideration to the question you raised before me in the letter of March 25 [24], 1945, and have found that the Soviet Government could not have given a different answer after the Soviet representatives were refused participation in the discussions in Bern with the Germans regarding the possibility of capitulation of German troops and opening the front to Anglo-American troops in Northern Italy.

I am not against and, more than this, I am fully for using the opportunity of disintegration in the German armies and to hasten their capitulation in any section of the front, to encourage them in the opening of the front for the Allies.

But I agree to negotiations with the enemy on such matter only in the case when these negotiations will not make the situation of the enemy easier, if there will be excluded a possibility for the Germans to maneuvre and to use these negotiations for shifting of their troops to other sections of the front and, first of all, to the Soviet front.

Only with the purpose of creating such a guarantee was the participation of representatives of the Soviet Military Command in such negotiations with the enemy considered necessary by the Soviet Government, no matter where they would take place—in Bern or Caserta. I cannot understand why representatives of the Soviet Command were refused participation in these negotiations and in what way could they cause inconvenience to the representatives of the Allied Command.

For your information I have to tell you that the Germans have already made use of the negotiations with the Allied Command and during this period have succeeded in shifting three divisions from Northern Italy to the Soviet front.

The task of coordinated operations with a blow upon the Germans from the West, South and East, announced at the Crimea Conference 76 is to bind the troops of the enemy to the place of their location and not to give the enemy any possibility to maneuvre and shift troops in the necessary for him direction. This task is being carried out by the Soviet Command. This is being violated by Field-Marshal Alexander.

This circumstance is irritating the Soviet Command and creates ground for distrust.

"As a military man", you write me, "you will understand, that it is necessary to act quickly in order not to miss an opportunity. It would be the same if your general at Koenigsberg or Danzig would be approached by the enemy with a white flag". It is regretted that an analogy does not suit this case. German troops at Koenigsberg and Danzig are surrounded. If they surrender they will do it in order to avoid annihilation but they cannot open a front to the Soviet troops as the front has moved away from them far to the West, to the Oder. An entirely different situation is that of the German troops in Northern Italy. They are not surrounded and they do not face annihilation. If the Germans in Northern Italy, in spite of this seek negotiations in order to surrender and to open the front to Allied troops, this means that they have different, more serious aims relating to the fate of Germany.

I have to tell you, that if on the Eastern front, somewhere on the Oder, similar conditions of a possibility of capitulation of the Germans and opening the front to Soviet troops would arise, I would not hesitate to inform immediately the Anglo-American Military Command and to request it to send their representatives for participation in negotiations as in such cases the Allies should have no secrets from each other.

MARCH 29, 1945.

President Roosevelt to the Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Union (Stalin) 77

[Washington,] March 31, 1945.

217. It seems to me in the exchange of messages we have had on possible future negotiations with the Germans for surrender of their forces in Italy, that although both of us are in agreement on all the basic principles, the matter now stands in an atmosphere of regrettable apprehension and mistrust.

No negotiations for surrender have been entered into, and if there should be any negotiations they will be conducted at Caserta with your representatives present throughout. Although the attempt at Bern to arrange for the conduct of these negotiations has so far been fruitless, Marshal Alexander has been directed to keep you informed of his progress in this matter.

I must repeat that the meeting in Bern was for the single purpose of arranging contact with competent German military officers and not for negotiations of any kind.

There is no question of negotiating with the Germans in any way which would permit them to transfer elsewhere forces from the Italian front. Negotiations, if any are conducted, will be on the basis of unconditional surrender. With regard to the lack of Allied offensive operations in Italy, this condition has in no way resulted from any expectation of an agreement with the Germans. As a matter of fact, recent interruption of offensive operations in Italy has been due primarily to the recent transfer of Allied forces, British and Canadian divisions, from that front to France. Preparations are now made for an offensive on the Italian front about April 10th, but while we hope for success, the operation will be of limited power due to the lack of forces now available to Alexander. He has seventeen dependable divisions and is opposed by twenty-four German divisions. We intend to do everything within the capacity of our available resources to prevent any withdrawal of the German forces now in Italy.

I feel that your information about the time of the movements of German troops from Italy is in error. Our best information is that three German divisions have left Italy since the first of the year, two of which have gone to the Eastern front. The last division of the three started moving about February 25, more than two weeks before anybody heard of any possibility of a surrender. It is therefore clearly evident that the approach made by German agents in Bern occurring after the last movement of troops began could not possibly have had any effect on the movement.

This entire episode has arisen through the initiative of a German officer reputed to be close to Himmler and there, of course, is a strong possibility that his sole purpose is to create suspicion and distrust between the Allies. There is no reason why we should permit him to succeed in that aim. I trust that the above categorical statement of the present situation and of my intentions will allay the apprehensions which you express in your message of March 29.

ROOSEVELT

The Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Union (Stalin) to President Roosevelt 78

I have received your message on the question of negotiations in Bern. You are absolutely right that in connection with the affair regarding negotiation of the Anglo-American Command with the German Command somewhere in Bern or some other place "has developed an atmosphere of fear and distrust deserving regrets."

You insist that there have been no negotiations yet.

It may be assumed that you have not been fully informed. As regards my military colleagues, they, on the basis of data which they have on hand, do not have any doubts, that the negotiations have taken place and that they have ended in an agreement with the Germans, on the basis of which the German commander on the Western front—Marshal Kesselring, has agreed to open the front and permit the Anglo-American troops to advance to the East, and the Anglo-Americans have promised in return to ease for the Germans the peace terms.

I think that my colleagues are close to truth. Otherwise one could not have understood the fact that the Anglo-Americans have refused to admit to Bern representatives of the Soviet Command for participation in the negotiations with the Germans.

I also cannot understand the silence of the British who have allowed you to correspond with me on this unpleasant matter, and they themselves remain silent, although it is known that the initiative in this whole affair with the negotiations in Bern belongs to the British.

I understand that there are certain advantages for the Anglo-American troops as a result of these separate negotiations in Bern or in some other place since the Anglo-American troops get the possibility to advance into the heart of Germany almost without any resistance on the part of the Germans, but why was it necessary to conceal this from the Russians, and why your Allies—the Russians, were not notified?

As a result of this at the present moment the Germans on the Western front in fact have ceased the war against England and the United States. At the same time the Germans continue the war with Russia, the Ally of England and the United States. It is understandable that such a situation can in no way serve the cause of preservation of the strengthening of trust between our countries.

The Copy of telegram obtained from the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, N.Y. A marginal notation indicates that this telegram was received from the Soviet Embassy in Washington April 4 at 3:05 a. m. Greenwich Mean Time, and dispatched to the President in Warm Springs, Ga., at 3:40 a. m. Greenwich Mean Time the same day.

I have already written to you in my previous message and consider it necessary to repeat it here that I personally and my colleagues would have never made such a risky step, being aware that a momentary advantage, no matter what it would be, is fading before the principle [sic] advantage on the preservation and strengthening of trust among the Allies.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

In view of difficulties which have arisen with the Soviet Government in regard to negotiations looking to the surrender of German forces in North Italy, His Majesty's Government consider it urgent to agree to a procedure which could be followed in similar cases in the future.

- 2. As His Majesty's Government see it, German approaches may be of two kinds:
- (a) for a total surrender, and (b) for a purely military surrender on a single front.
- 3. As regards (a) the position is clearly established under the secret protocol agreed in Moscow in 1943 79 whereby the three governments are pledged to consult together with a view to concerting their action.
- 4. As regards (b) His Majesty's Government have carefully considered the view that in the preliminary stages it would be sufficient in the case of an Anglo-American theatre of operations if the Soviet Government were kept informed through military channels of what is going on.
- 5. His Majesty's Government feel, however, that matters of such vital political importance are involved that it is essential to clear any further approaches in the first instance through the diplomatic channel. They do not think this need necessarily entail any serious delay provided procedure to be followed in handling these approaches is agreed.
- 6. In laying down the procedure His Majesty's Government therefore consider it necessary in the first instance to distinguish between
- (1) offers of military surrender by German Commanders in Chief and
- (2) local surrenders in the field. The latter are of course purely a matter for military authorities on the spot. On the other hand an offer of military surrender by German Commander in Chief on the Eastern, Western or Italian fronts, whether or not it arises immediately out of military operations, clearly involves wider issues. Such an offer could be made either by direct contact at the front under a white flag or by preliminary contact on neutral territory. Through whichever channel such an offer may be received, His Majesty's Government would propose the following procedure—Information of any such approach from the German Commander in Chief in Italy or on the Western front should at once be communicated to the Combined Chiefs of Staff. If it is decided to follow up the offer, the British and United States Ambassadors in Moscow would be instructed urgently to inform the Russians of the approach and to say (a) that if the bona fides of the offer is established, arrangements will be made for fully accredited German representatives to proceed to whichever Allied Head Quarters is concerned in order to discuss the implementation of the offer of surrender; and (b) that if any such discussions materialize, and if time permits, the presence of Russian representatives should be welcomed at them in order that they may have first hand information of their progress. It would however be clearly understood between the three Governments that actual conduct of purely military matters connected with the surrender of the German army in question would rest with the Supreme Allied Commander on that front. In the event of any political questions arising, the issues would of course immediately have to be referred to the Governments.

⁷⁹ Reference is to item 13 of the Secret Protocol signed at Moscow, November 1, 1943, Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 749.

7. As regards the establishment of the bona fides of an offer His Majesty's Government consider that it would be better in any future case to avoid sending military representatives of SACMED or SCAEF 81 to meet German representatives on neutral soil and that any contact which may be established should be maintained through suitable Allied organisations on the spot. (If for any reason the Supreme Allied Commander considers it desirable to employ military representatives for the purpose he should first refer to his Governments.) His Majesty's Government would further propose to limit strictly the role of such organisations to that of satisfying the Allied Commander in Chief of bona fides of (a) the German emissaries and (b) the German offer and, this done, of arranging for fully accredited representatives to proceed to the competent Allied Head Quarters where alone discussions of any offer would take place.82

Mr. Bohlen wrote: "The Secretary of State would appreciate very much your obtaining the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in regard to this British suggestion concerning agreed procedure for surrender of German forces in the future. The State Department's opinion is that in view of certain developments this is not the best moment to bring forth any such suggestion although the idea of agreed procedure for such matters is in itself most desirable politically." 222. I have received with astonishment your message of April 3 containing an allegation that arrangements which were made between Field Marshals Alexander and Kesselring at Bern, "permitted the Anglo-American troops to advance to the East and the Anglo-Americans promised in return to ease for the Germans the peace terms."

In my previous messages to you in regard to the attempts made in Bern to arrange a conference to discuss a surrender of the German Army in Italy, I have told you that,

No negotiations were held in Bern;
 That the meeting had no political implications whatever;
 That in any surrender of the enemy army in Italy there could be no violation of our agreed principle of unconditional surrender;
 That Soviet officers would be welcomed at any meeting that might be arranged to discuss surrender.

For the advantage of our common war effort against Germany, which today gives excellent promise of an early success in a disintegration of the German armies. I must continue to assume that you have the same high confidence in my truthfulness and reliability that I have always had in yours.

I have also a full appreciation of the effect your gallant army has had in making possible a crossing of the Rhine by the forces under General Eisenhower 84 and the effect that your forces will have hereafter on the eventual collapse of the German resistance to our combined attacks.

I have complete confidence in General Eisenhower and know that he certainly would inform me before entering into any agreement with the Germans. He is instructed to demand and will demand unconditional surrender of enemy troops that may be defeated on his front. Our advances on the Western Front are due to military action. Their speed has been attributable mainly to the terrific impact of our air power resulting in destruction of German communications, and to the fact that Eisenhower was able to cripple the bulk of the German Forces on the Western front while they were still West of the Rhine.

I am certain that there were no negotiations in Bern at any time, and I feel that your information to that effect must have come from German sources which have made persistent efforts to create dissension between us in order to escape in some measure for responsibility for their war crimes. If that was Wolff's purpose in Bern your message proves that he has had some success.

With a confidence in your belief in my personal reliability and in my determination to bring about together with you an unconditional surrender of the Nazis, it is astonishing that a belief seems to have reached the Soviet Government that I have entered into an agreement with the enemy without first obtaining your full agreement.

Finally I would say this, it would be one of the great tragedies of history if at the very moment of the victory, now within our grasp, such distrust, such lack of faith should prejudice the entire undertaking after the colossal losses of life, matériel and treasure involved.

Frankly I cannot avoid a feeling of bitter resentment toward your informers, whoever they are, for such vile misrepresentations of mv actions or those of my trusted subordinates.

ROOSEVELT

The British Prime Minister (Churchill) to President Roosevelt 85.

London, April 5, 1945.

934. Your No. 734.86

- 1. I am astounded that Stalin should have addressed to you a message so insulting to the honour of the United States and also of Great Britain. His Majesty's Government cordially associate themselves with your reply and the War Cabinet have instructed me to send to Stalin the message in my immediately following.87
- 2. There is very little doubt in my mind that the Soviet leaders, whoever they may be, are surprised and disconcerted at the rapid advance of the Allied armies in the west and the almost total defeat of the enemy on our front especially as they say they are themselves in no position to deliver a decisive attack before the middle of Mav. All this makes it the more important that we should join hands with the Russian armies as far to the east as possible and if circumstances allow, enter Berlin.

- 3. I may remind you that we proposed and thought we had arranged six weeks ago provisional zones of occupation in Austria, so but since Yalta the Russians have sent no confirmation of these zones. Now that they are on the eve of taking Vienna so and very likely will occupy the whole of Austria, it may well be prudent for us to hold as much as possible in the north.
- 4. We must always be anxious lest the brutality of the Russian messages does not foreshadow some deep change of policy for which they are preparing. On the whole I incline to think it is no more than their natural expression when vexed or jealous. For that very reason I deem it of the highest importance that a firm and blunt stand should be made at this juncture by our two countries in order that the air may be cleared and they realize that there is a point beyond which we will not tolerate insult. I believe this is the best chance of saving the future. If they are ever convinced that we are afraid of them and can be bullied into submission, then indeed I should despair of our future relations with them and much else.

"While fully appreciating the high purpose which motivated the suggestion in your no. 73 of April 5,90 I must disapprove any idea of your going to Paris for purpose indicated. In present circumstances I feel that you should refuse absolutely to accept or listen to any approaches. The danger of misinterpretation by the enemy of our position on unconditional surrender is too great, and I must, therefore, request you to abstain from any further discussions on this subject with the Vatican. With best personal regards."

Mr. Myron C. Taylor, Personal Representative of President Roosevelt to Pope Pius XII, to the Secretary of State

[Rome,] April 6, 1945—4 p. m. [Received April 6—4:10 p. m.]

75. For the President only. My 73, April 5, 4 p. m.⁹¹ Following is a translation of written proposal made through Cardinal Schuster ⁹² by the son of Mussolini ⁹³ to His Holiness Pope Pius XII:

"In the event that developments in the war or in the political sphere compel the armies of Kesselring to withdraw within their proper confines, in that moment the Armed Forces of the Italian Social Republic of all branches will meet in previously agreed upon places thus to offer the most strenuous resistance to the enemy and the forces of disorder and to those of the Royal Government, conscious of the fact that anti-Fascist hatred does not allow them any other escape than that of fighting to the last man and to the last cartridge.

"However, in order to avoid additional sorrow to the population of northern Italy and to preserve from total destruction that which remains of the industrial and agricultural patrimony and to show that love for Italy takes precedence over any interest of party or of ideas the Government of the Social Italian Republic proposes that a preliminary agreement be signed with the Supreme Allied Command on the basis of which the two contracting parties would take upon themselves the following obligations:

"1. The Armed Forces of the Social Republic under command of Marshal Graziani and all the other armed units of the Republic will maintain order as far as possible in the cities and country districts until direct agreements are reached between the Allied Command and that of the Italian Social Republic. With Marshal Graziani there will function a commission of citizens of the Italian Social Republic that will do everything possible in order that the life of the nation may not be thrown into chaos or the most absolute anarchy and into civil war.

"2. Every uncontrolled or extremist activity of irregular or popular origin (Partisan Bands, Communists, public meetings, strikes et cetera) will be opposed by the Republican armed forces and by the Allied military authorities. Moreover, the Clergy will undertake the obligation to initiate immediately a decisive publicity campaign in favor of general pacification.

"3. The Allied Command pledges itself to see to it that the Partisan forces take no indiscriminate action of a terroristic or predatory nature and that their disarmament will be effected previous to that of the regular formations of the Italian Social Republic. Furthermore the Allied Command will provide in the most absolute manner that no units of the Bonomi ⁹⁴ Army or of the Carabinieri will come into the Po Valley until order has been completely restored.

⁹¹ Not printed, but see footnote 90, supra.

98 Presumably Vittorio Mussolini.

⁹² Ildefonso Cardinal Schuster, Archbishop of Milan.

[&]quot;Ivanoe Bonomi, Italian Prime Minister.

"4. An absolutely necessary condition for negotiations and signing of the agreement is this: That there will be an immediate cessation of arrests and trials and the abolition of every other form of persecution on the part of the Epuration Commission functioning at Rome against those who kept their faith in agreements freely made and who fought with honor against the enemy whether they be Fascists or soldiers who swore allegiance to the Italian Social Republic or civilians employed in the various Ministries or Government Agencies and their families. The Allied Commission may denounce to the regular courts only those who are guilty of notorious crimes not connected with war guilt or events relating to the war.

"Similarly it is desired that word be given as to the fate of the members of the government and of those who have held positions in the Grand Command of the Italian Social Republic (arrest, concentration camp, exile).

"The Fascist Republican Party will be dissolved. It will be understood that the citizens would have equality of rights and duties and it is to be hoped that in that moment there will be effected the formation of a government which will be representative of every political conviction and that a general election will be held at the earliest possible date."

The document of which this is a copy was consigned to Cardinal Schuster by the son of Mussolini on March 13, 1945.

The Secretariat of State has already given the following answer:

"That insofar as the Holy See is aware the authorities do not intend to enter into negotiations but insist upon unconditional surrender."

It is not necessary to telegraph at this moment certain other "indications" linking German authorities with this proposal. You will be promptly advised of any developments. I have pledged secrecy except as to yourself.

TAYLOR

The Chairman of the Council of People's Commissar of the Soviet Union (Stalin) to President Roosevelt 95

I have received your message of April 5th [4th].

1. In my message of April 3 I spoke not about honesty and dependability. I never doubted your honesty and dependability, as well as the honesty and dependability of Mr. Churchill. I speak about the fact that in the course of this correspondence between us has been revealed a difference of opinions as to what can an Ally allow himself to do in respect to the other Ally and what he should not allow himself to do. We, Russians, believe that in the present situation at the fronts when the enemy is confronted by the inevitability of capitulation, at any meeting with the Germans on questions of capitulation by representatives of one of the Allies arrangements have to be made for the participation in this meeting of representatives of the other Ally. At any rate this is absolutely necessary if this Ally is seeking participation in such a meeting. Americans, however, and the Englishmen think differently, considering the Russian point of view wrong. Proceeding from this fact they rejected the Russians the right of participation in the meeting with the Germans in Switzerland. I have already written to you and consider it not unnecessary to repeat that the Russians in a similar situation under no circumstances would have refused the Americans and Englishmen the right for participation in such a meeting. I continue to consider the Russian point of view as the only right one as it excludes any possibility of mutual distrust and does not permit the enemy to sow distrust among us.

- 2. It is difficult to agree that lack of resistance on the part of the Germans on the Western front can be explained only that they are defeated. The Germans have on the Eastern front 147 divisions. They could without harm to their cause take from the Eastern front 15–20 divisions and shift them to the aid of their troops on the Western front. However, the Germans did not do it and are not doing it. They continue to fight savagely with the Russians for some unknown junction Zemlianitsa in Czechoslovakia which they need as much as a dead man needs poultices, but surrender without any resistance such important towns in Central Germany as Osnabrück, Mannheim, Kassel. Don't you agree that such a behavior of the Germans is more than strange and incomprehensible.
- 3. As regards my informers, I may assure you that they are very honest and modest people who carry out their duties accurately and have no intentions of insulting anyone. These people have been manyfold tested by us by their deeds. Judge for yourself. In February, 1945, General Marshall has given a number of important information to the General Staff of the Soviet troops, where he, on the basis of data he had on hand, warned the Russians that in March there will be two serious counter-attacks of the Germans on the Eastern front one of which will be directed from Pomerania on Torun and the other from the region of Moravska Ostrava on Lodz. In fact, however, it proved that the principal blow of the Germans was being prepared and was realized not in the above-mentioned regions but in an entirely different region, namely in the region of Lake Balaton, to the South-West of Budapest. As it is known the Germans have concentrated in this region up to 35 divisions, including 11 tank divisions. was one of the most serious blows in the course of the war with such great concentration of tank forces. Marshal Tolbukhin succeeded in avoiding a catastrophe and in complete defeat of the Germans later, because my informers have uncovered, true a little late, this plan of the main blow of the Germans and immediately informed Marshal Tolbukhin. Thus I had another occasion to convince myself in the accuracy and knowledge of Soviet informers.

For your orientation in this matter I am enclosing a letter of the Chief of the General Staff of the Red Army, Army General Antonov, addressed to Major-General Dean.⁹⁶

740.00119 E.W./1-1445

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

No. 33

Washington, April 10, 1945.

The Secretary of State refers to Ambassador Murphy's telegram No. 482, January 14, 1945, and his despatch No. 66 of the same date,⁹⁷ and wishes to reiterate support of his maintenance of an unqualified policy of unconditional surrender, as transmitted in the Department's telegram No. 371 of January 15 [16], 1945.

The Department is deeply concerned that this policy of unconditional surrender not be compromised in any way whatsoever. It views the endeavors of the Psychological Warfare Division to modify this policy as unwarranted and finds that the argumentation of the Psychological Warfare Division does not correspond to the views of this Government regarding the meaning of unconditional surrender.

The policy of unconditional surrender was meant from the start to apply to the entire German nation, and not merely to the German Government, the High Command, or the Nazi Party. It is meant to apply to the German Government, the High Command, and the Nazi Party, in particular, insofar as these agencies of the German people, possessing public power and authority, might represent the German people in any formal act acknowledging unconditional surrender, such as the signing of an instrument to that effect. The unconditional surrender itself applies, without exception, to all Germans, individually and collectively, in all respects, including the sense in which the German people may be considered as individual human beings.

Marshall for warning him in February of impending German counter-offensives on the eastern front. Marshal Antonov pointed out, however, that subsequent operations proved the information inaccurate. For text of the letter, see Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Commission for the Publication of Diplomatic Documents, Stalin's Correspondence With Churchill, Attlee, Roosevelt and Truman, 1941–45 (New York, E. P. Dutton, Inc., 1958), vol. II, p. 210.

Great care was taken in the framing of the instrument of unconditional surrender of Germany agreed upon by the three major Powers to avoid therein the appearance of a contractual arrangement and to obtain the acknowledgement of the absolutely unlimited powers of the victors. There is now a growing possibility that the surrender instrument will not be signed and that military resistance will be brought to a close by a series of local capitulations. In this case where no formal acknowledgment of unconditional surrender may be obtained from German military and political authorities, it is particularly important that no statements be made by official or semi-official Allied sources to the German people as a whole or as individuals, which may be construed by them as promises or commitments on our part.

The policy of unconditional surrender has been steadfastly maintained by this Government since the Casablanca Conference, has never been altered nor modified in any way, and should not now be permitted to be compromised during the final stages of military operations against Germany.

STETTINIUS

The British Prime Minister (Churchill) to President Roosevelt 98

London, April 11, 1945.

940. Your No. 734 99 about Crosswords. I send you a private message I have received from Stalin covering the official telegram which he has sent to you with copy to me. I have a feeling that this is about the best we are going to get out of them, and certainly it is as near as they can get to an apology.

However, before considering any answer at all from His Majesty's Government, please tell me how you think the matter should be handled so that we may keep in line together.

1 "Sunrise-Crossword" was the code name for the meetings taking place in Bern.

Your message of 5th April ³ received. In my message of 7th April to the President, which I am sending to you also, I have already replied to all the fundamental points raised in your message regarding the negotiations in Switzerland. On the other questions raised in your message I consider it necessary to make the following remarks.

1. Neither I nor Molotov had any intention of "blackening" anyone. It is not a matter of wanting to "blacken" (anyone) but of our having developed differing points of view as regards the rights and obligations of any ally. You will see from my message to the President that the Russian point of view on this question is the correct one, as it guarantees each ally's rights and deprives the enemy of any possibility of sowing discord between us.

2. My messages are personal and strictly confidential. This makes it possible to speak one's mind clearly and frankly. This is the advantage of confidential communications.

If, however, you are going to regard every frank statement of mine as offensive, it will make this kind of communication very difficult. I can assure you that I had and have no intention of offending anyone.

The Minister in Sweden (Johnson) to the Secretary of State
[Extracts]

Sтоскноім, April 11, 1945—6 р. т. [Received April 12—7:27 a. т.]

1356. My 932 of March 9, midnight.⁴ Olsen had a several hours conference with Kleist ⁵ yesterday afternoon on the same prearranged understanding as his discussion with Hesse; ^{5a} i.e., that the exchange of views would be exclusively on humanitarian subjects and would be entirely personal without political implication. As a matter of fact, Kleist indicated every possible inclination to restrict the discussion precisely to that basis. He spoke with the outward assurance of a person having extremely solid connections at the highest policy levels, expressed his views with the competence of a person intimately familiar with a subject matter from which he did not intend to be diverted, and in general Olsen found him considerably more difficult to penetrate than Hesse.

Olsen suggested that he did not consider it inappropriate to express his inability to understand Germany's objective in continuing a war which all its top leaders including Kleist readily concede is hopelessly lost. It was added that the stubbornness of the German High Command not only was exacting a murderous toll of German civilians and property but soon would create a situation where the High Command would not have even the honor and dignity of surrender. Reference was made to General Eisenhower's recent statement that perhaps the Allies themselves would have to declare that a state of war no longer existed in Germany, and that the small groups of isolated resisters would simply be hunted by an international posse as we hunt and corner bandits in the United States. Kleist, his fingers tightening slightly on the arm of the chair, replied that surrender was simply out of the question—even among the He added that Allied propaganda had been "too frank" to afford the Germans any delusion of hope for the future. He said that the German civilian knows that he is eating today, perhaps not very well, but that he has no idea what he will get in exchange for surrender tomorrow. He then made specific reference to the Allies inability to feed even the friendly areas they had liberated. Olsen replied that, on the basis of a personal humanitarian point of view, he certainly couldn't see how a senseless prolongation of the war would improve the situation and that as a matter of fact Kleist had supplied the strongest possible support to General Eisenhower's recent advice to the Germans to resume planting of crops as quickly as possible. On the contrary, prolongation of the war was only destroying any possibilities of Germany being able to feed itself.

The discussion swung briefly to the occupation of Germany and Kleist described as the "purest nonsense" propaganda about Germany continuing underground resistance as "werewolves". He stated that in the first place if the Allies establish any intelligent type of administration and secure the cooperation of accepted German civilian groups the "werewolf" problem can be stamped out promptly—simply by putting a clamp on a city and insisting that these undesirable elements be apprehended and delivered say within 48 hours. In the second place he added, the German mentality is completely unsuited for underground activity—it must be more open and flamboyant to appeal to the German sense of dignity. He pointed out that the National Socialist Party has never had to function as a suppressed underground group such as political movements in certain other European countries and therefore has no background at all in this type of activity. He emphasized that the Allies would encounter no serious administrative problems at the outset, from underground elements, but that its real test would come a year or two after occupation. Any failure to provide order and workable living conditions would by then produce a resistance movement of proportions which would present serious administrative problems. He mentioned particularly the problems of food supply adding that the German population had moved in large numbers into the western provinces, first in order to get away from the Russian military advance but more recently to get into areas which have been designated for British and American occupation. This would present a critical problem of congestion and food supply since the eastern areas vacated were the source of Germany's food products in normal times.

Kleist then mentioned his own experience with the administration of occupied countries. He said that in both Russia and Europe the Germans repeated the same fatal mistake—that of attempting to control an area by a government composed exclusively of German party members. He said that nowhere could the Germans maintain order by these methods and that it spawned underground resistance. Furthermore the Germans never were able to obtain "workers" only "slaves", which were a constant menace to internal order. He said that entirely different results would have been attained had the Germans searched out acceptable local elements and used them to enlist local cooperation. As a matter of fact he added it was precisely on that point that he had sharp clashes on administrative policies in the Baltic countries. He concluded that it is a very important lesson for the Allies to learn in the occupation of Germany.

Olsen feels that these discussions have progressed to the point where it is now possible to identify the following objectives of at least some high level groups in Germany:

- 1. They are obviously terrified of Russian occupation of Germany and are hoping that, by demonstrating certain humanitarian inclinations at this time, perhaps the British and Americans will endeavor to lighten the more severe and repressive measures proposed by the Russians in occupying Germany.
- 2. They are sending certain ace representatives out to establish contact with the Allies, more or less as a "putting best foot forward" proposition, with the hope that such persons will be able to demonstrate their usefulness in the occupation of Germany.
- 3. Certain groups are establishing for reserve a possible non-military channel of offering unconditional surrender. They would be inclined to consider such channels perhaps more desirable from the point of view of prestige and face saving.
- 4. The ever present hope of compromising the British and Americans with the Russians has become rather remotely considered. Kleist made virtually no reference to the Russians.

121031.8 British Ambassador has this morning shown me a copy of a personal message from the Prime Minister to you Number 940.9 in which he suggests concerting with you on the line to take in replying to Marshal Stalin's latest messages regarding the Bern incident. From the respective times of dispatch it would seem that your message to Marshal Stalin (White House Number 229). Navy Number 120221) had been sent prior to the receipt of the Prime Minister's. Under these circumstances I am wondering whether you wish me to hold up delivery of your message to Marshal Stalin. Since the time of delivery does not appear to be of prime importance, I am holding your message until receipt of further instructions from you.

If you are prepared to reconsider the wording of your message may I respectively [respectfully?] suggest that the word "minor" as a qualification of "misunderstandings" be eliminated. I must confess that the misunderstanding appeared to me to be of a major character and the use of the word "minor" might well be misinterpreted here.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

It appears to His Majesty's Government clear from telegram Naf 916 ¹³ from the Supreme Allied Commander in the Mediterranean that the German Commander in Chief in Italy has no intention of surrendering his forces at the present stage on terms acceptable to the United States Government and His Majesty's Government.

- 2. Under the circumstances His Majesty's Government feel that there is no object in any Allied representatives remaining in contact with German emissaries in Switzerland. Having regard to the effect which this matter has had upon the Soviet Government, His Majesty's Government therefore regard it as essential that all contact should at once be discontinued.
- 3. If the Department of State agree with this it is therefore suggested that the Combined Chiefs of Staff might be invited to send the necessary instructions to Field Marshal Alexander that all con-

13 This telegram from Field Marshal Alexander, April 12, to the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the British Chiefs of Staff reported on developments in the surrender negotiations since he had recalled his representatives on April 4. In subsequent discussions between German officers and various intermediarles in Switzerland and Northern Italy, the Germans had asked to see a copy of the instrument of surrender they were to be expected to sign, and they had expressed anxiety over finding a form for the surrender which would adequately maintain the appearance of military honor. Field Marshal Alexander had informed them that the instrument of surrender could only be seen at appropriate Allied headquarters. (Microfilm copy obtained from Department of the Army files.)

The Department of State to the British Embassy 15

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

- 1. The United States Government is in agreement with the views expressed in the first three paragraphs of the aide-mémoire from the British Embassy of 4 April 1945.
- 2. It is believed that the procedure proposed in the aide-mémoire, while probably desirable in a relatively static military situation, may be too time-consuming for rapidly moving operations on a local front. A less cumbersome procedure would appear to be suggested by existing circumstances and can be achieved without endangering desirable political safeguards.
- 3. It is proposed that a commander should be authorized to accept immediately the unconditional surrender of the forces under the opposing German commander, handling the matter on a military basis and keeping the governments informed through military channels. It is understood, of course, that the governments are in a position to interpolate at any time their wishes on what they consider may be political aspects. In the fluid situation which has now developed in Germany, a chaotic condition can readily develop in a matter of hours. The delay which our experience to date in handling other matters has indicated might well be prejudicial to the earliest termination of the fighting.
- 4. It is considered that Russian representation, if so desired by the Government of the Soviet Union to observe any surrenders to United States-United Kingdom forces should be assured by prior arrangements to be made immediately. In this connection, it should be made clear to the Russians that the actual conduct of an unconditional surrender would be a matter for the military commander of the United States-United Kingdom forces involved. The United States Chiefs

p. 200.

This aide-mémoire was based on a memorandum, not printed, from the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee containing the recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy (740.00119 EW/4-1945).

¹⁴ In a memorandum of telephone conversation, Washington, April 16, not printed, John Hickerson, Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs reported a discussion of this aide-mémoire with Roger Makins, Counselor of the British Embassy. Mr. Makins said that "an approach in the same sense as the memorandum had been made to the United States military authorities by the British Chiefs of Staff and that we should also know that there had been a "top level" approach in the same sense." (740.00119 EW/4-1645) Cf. Harry S. Truman, Year of Decisions (Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday, 1955), p. 200.

of Staff have already made this proposal to the Combined Chiefs of Staff, and it is believed the matter can be worked out on a military level in the same way as the representation of the Soviet authorities at the questioning of von Papen.¹⁶

- 5. It is agreed that in any future case it is preferable to avoid sending military representatives of our supreme commanders to meet German representatives on neutral soil, and that any contacts on neutral soil should be confined strictly to establishing bona fides and making arrangements for immediate transportation of German representatives to one of our headquarters. However, in case the situation requires sending representatives of one of our commanders to neutral soil, the political safeguards seem adequate without accepting the delay which our experience has shown occurs when these matters are passed through several levels and handled between governments. Again, such delay might well be injurious to the earliest termination of the fighting.
- 6. It appears the proper action is to approach the Government of the Soviet Union along the foregoing lines and if the British Government agrees, the United States Ambassador in Moscow will be instructed to do so in collaboration with his British colleague.¹⁷

¹⁹ Sir Victor A. L. Mallet.

²⁰ Erik C. Boheman, Under Secretary in the Swedish Foreign Office.

²¹ Count Folke Bernadotte, President of the Swedish Red Cross; for an account of his activities in Germany during 1945, see Count Folke Bernadotte, The Curtain Falls, translated by Count Eric Lewenhaupt (New York, Knopf, 1945).

Count Bernadotte was on April 23 at Flensburg near Danish border. Himmler who was at some point on German eastern front sent word that he wanted to see Count Bernadotte urgently and the latter said that he would meet him at Lübeck. This meeting took place at 1 o'clock in the morning April 24. Bernadotte reports that Himmler although tired and admitthat Germany was finished, was calm and coherent. Himmler told him that Hitler was so ill that he might be already dead or could not be expected to live more than 2 days longer (General Schellenberg,²² Himmler's confidential staff officer, told Bernadotte that Hitler was suffering from brain hemorrhage). Himmler said that while Hitler was still active he would not have been able to take the step he now proposed to take but as Hitler was finished he, Himmler, is in a position of full authority to act. He asked Count Bernadotte to forward to the Swedish Government his request that the Swedish Government should intervene in order to arrange for him to meet General Eisenhower. The purpose of this meeting would be to capitulate on the whole western front (including the Netherlands). Bernadotte remarked that such a meeting was not necessary as Himmler could simply order his troops to capitulate and that he was not willing to forward this request to the Swedish Government if Norway and Denmark were not included in the capitulation. Because of special technical arrangements in regard to how and to whom Germany would capitulate in Denmark and Norway Bernadotte remarked that in his opinion there might be some point to a meeting between General Eisenhower and Himmler. Himmler said that he would order his troops in Norway and Denmark to surrender to American, British or Swedish troops. He hoped to be able to continue to fight on the eastern front at least for a time. Bernadotte said that this would be scarcely possible to put in practice and would not be acceptable to the Allies. Bernadotte had the impression that Himmler hopes the Allies would be the first to enter into northern and western Germany into Mecklenburg for instance, which district was mentioned by Himmler) rather than the Russians for the sake of the civilian population.

General Schellenberg is in Flensburg near the Danish border eagerly waiting to hear anything which Bernadotte can convey to him. He is in hourly contact with Himmler and could ensure immediate delivery to him of any message it may be desired to send.

Mr. Günther thought this information was of such importance that it should be communicated at once to the American and British Governments.

²² Walter Schellenberg, Chief of Amt VI of the Reich Security Main Office.

Both Sir Victor Mallet and I remarked that Himmler's refusal actually to order surrender on the eastern front looked like a last attempt to sow discord between the western Allies and Russia because obviously the Nazis would have to surrender simultaneously to all the Allies. Mr. Günther and Mr. Boheman while admitting this motive could not be excluded pointed out that the fact that the Nazi chief would order capitulation of all troops on the whole Western Front and in Norway and Denmark must be of great advantage to all the Allies including Russia and would in fact lead to early total capitulation. In any case Mr. Günther thought that Count Bernadotte's information should be passed on to the British and American Governments who were, as far as the Swedish Government was concerned, at complete liberty to transmit it to the Soviet Government as Sweden would in no way be or thought to be an instrument in promoting any attempt to sow discord between the Allies. The only reason the Swedish Government could not convey this information directly to the Soviet Government was because Himmler had stipulated to Count Bernadotte that it was exclusively for the western Allies.

Count Bernadotte is of the opinion that if no reaction at all is forthcoming to this proposal of Himmler's it would probably result in a lot of unnecessary suffering and loss of human life.

The British Prime Minister (Churchill) to President Truman 23

[London,] April 25, 1945.

16. You will no doubt have received some hours ago the report from Stockholm by your Ambassador on Bernadotte-Himmler talks. I called the War Cabinet together at once and they approved immediately following message which we are sending to Marshal Stalin and repeating through usual channels to you. We hope that you will find it possible to telegraph to Marshal Stalin and to us in the same sense. As Himmler is evidently speaking for the German State, as much as anybody can, the reply that should be sent him through Swedish Government is in principle a matter for triple powers, since no one of us can enter into separate negotiations. This fact however in no

²³ Neither the time of dispatch nor the time of receipt is indicated on the file copy of this telegram. In his memoirs Prime Minister Churchill suggests that it was sent in the morning, London time (Churchill, Triumph and Tragedy, p. 536). The transcript of the telephone conversation between Mr. Churchill and President Truman, infra, indicates that this telegram had not been received in Washington by 2:10 p. m., Washington time (8:10 p. m. London time). The paraphrase here reproduced was transmitted to H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs, by Michael Wright, First Secretary of the British Embassy in Washington, on April 26.

Transcript of Trans-Atlantic Telephone Conversation Between President Truman and British Prime Minister Churchill 24

CHURCHILL: Is that you, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: This is the President, Mr. Prime Minister.

CHURCHILL: How glad I am to hear your voice.

TRUMAN: Thank you very much, I am glad to hear yours.

Churchill: I have several times talked to Franklin, but . . . 25 have you received the report from Stockholm by your ambassador?

TRUMAN: Yes, I have.26

CHURCHILL: On that proposal?

TRUMAN: Yes. I have just a short message saying that there was such a proposal in existence.

Churchill: Yes, it's of course . . . 25 we thought it looked very good.

TRUMAN: Has he anything to surrender?

CHURCHILL: I called the War Cabinet together and they opposed [approved?] my telegraphing to tell Stalin and also repeating our news through the usual channels to you.

TRUMAN: What has he to surrender? Does that mean everything, Norway, Denmark, Italy, and Holland?

Churchill: They mentioned Italy, and Yugoslavia. We mentioned everything and have included that to take in Denmark and Norway. Everything on the Western Front, but he hasn't proposed to surrender on the Eastern Front. So we thought perhaps it would be necessary to report it to Stalin that is, of course, to say that in our view the surrender must be simultaneous to agree to our terms.

TRUMAN: I think he should be forced to surrender to all three governments, Russia, you, and the United States. I don't think we ought to even consider a piecemeal surrender.

Churchill: No, no, no. Not a piecemeal surrender to a man like Himmler. Himmler will be speaking for the German state as much as anybody can. And therefore we thought that his negotiations must be carried on with the three governments.

²⁶ See footnote 18, p. 759.

²⁴ The time when this conversation took place is not indicated on the transcript. Prime Minister Churchill (Triumph and Tragedy, p. 536) states that it took place on April 25 at 8:10 p. m., London time. Admiral Leahy (I Was There, p. 415) says that it occurred shortly after 2 p. m., Washington time. The Department of State press release of May 2 giving a chronological account of the Himmler surrender offer places the conversation in the "early afternoon" of April 25 (Department of State Bulletin, May 6, p. 863). Corrections (except in cases of minor variations) have been supplied by the Editors on the basis of the related texts in Stalin's Correspondence, vol. 1, pp. 332 ff., and Churchill, Triumph and Tragedy, pp. 534 ff.

TRUMAN: That's right, that's the way I feel exactly.

Churchill: I see, of course, that's local surrender on the front, Himmler's allied front. And then Eisenhower is still authorized to make [take?] the surrender, well, then he will wish to surrender.

TRUMAN: Yes, of course.

CHURCHILL: You understand that?

TRUMAN: I understand that. If he is speaking for the German government as a whole, that ought to include the surrender of everything, and it ought to be to all three governments.

CHURCHIL: Certainly, what we actually sent was that there could be no question as far as His Majesty's Government is concerned of anything less than unconditional surrender simultaneously to the three major powers.

TRUMAN: All right. I agree to that.

Churchill: Have you said anything to the Russians yet?

TRUMAN: No I haven't. I was waiting to hear from you. I haven't received the message from Stockholm. This information that you are giving me now is the only information that I have on the subject, except that I was informed that your conversation was based on a message that you had from Stockholm.

CHURCHILL: Yes.

TRUMAN: I have no other information except what I am receiving now from you.

Churchill: I see. I can give you the message which our ambassador in Stockholm sent me. Would you like me to read it to you?

TRUMAN: I would appreciate it very much if you will.

CHURCHILL: Yes. It is a little long. Tell me if you don't hear it as it comes.

²⁷ "The Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs wants me and my United States colleague to call upon him at 23 hours, April 25 [24?]. [Boheman] and Bernadotte of the Swedish Red Cross were also present. Bernadotte had just returned from Germany via Denmark tonight. Himmler was on the Eastern Front and asked him to come from Prensburg [Flensburg] to meet him at the [in North Germany] and Bernadotte requested [suggested Lübeck?] where the meeting took place at 10 [1?] o'clock this morning, April 24. Himmler though tired, and admitting Germany was finished, was still strong [calm] and coherent. Himmler said that Hitler was so desperately ill, he might be dead already, and in any case would be so in two days' time.

Could you hear that all right?

TRUMAN: Yes, I could hear.

[&]quot;There is no indication on the original as to where this quotation ends.

Churchill: And General Finisberg [Schellenberg] of Himmler's staff told Bernadotte that it was hemorrhage of the brain.

- 4. In that statement, [Himmler stated] that while Hitler was still active he would not have been able to take the steps he now proposed but that as Herr Hitler was finished he was now in a position of full authority to act. He then asked Bernadotte to forward to the Swedish Government his desire that they could [should] make arrangements in order to arrange for him to meet General Eisenhower in order to capitulate on the whole Western Front. Bernadotte remarked that such a meeting (Bernadotte is a Swede, a Swedish Red Cross man) was not necessary in that Himmler could simply order his troops to surrender. That announcement asked him [He was not willing] to forward Himmler's request to the Swedish Government, and that [unless] Norway and Denmark were included in this capitulation. If this were the case, there might be some point in a meeting because special technical arrangements might have to be made with Eisenhower and de Gaulle 28 if the Germans were to lay down their arms in those two countries. He then replied that he was prepared to order the troops in Denmark and Norway to surrender to either British, American, or Swedish troops.
- 5. He in there [Himmler?] hopes to continue resistance on the Eastern Front at least for a time, which Bernadotte told him was hardly possible, in fact, that it would not be acceptable to the Allies. Himmler mentioned, for instance, that he hoped that the Western Allies rather than the Russians would be first to make this step [to enter Mecklenburg] in order to save the civilian populations.
- 6. Then he said that Himmler's staff officer, Herr Stinsberg [Schellenberg] was eagerly awaiting to hear something and was putting through [could ensure] immediate delivery to Himmler any message which it might be desired to convey. Bernadotte remarked to [us] that if no reaction at all was forthcoming from the Allies that may mean a lot of unnecessary suffering and loss of human life. The Minister of Foreign Affairs at . . .²⁹ explained that he thought this was such an important piece of news that he ought to communicate it to my United States colleague and me (that's the British Ambassador) immediately. Is it okay with you?

I wrote that my United States colleague and I remarked that in [the] reference to the Axis unwillingness [to Himmler's refusal] to surrender on the Eastern Front looks like a last attempt to sow discord between the Western Allies and Russia. Obviously the Nazi would have to surrender to all the Allies simultaneously.

TRUMAN: That is right. That is exactly the way I feel. He ought to surrender to all the Allies at once.

Points appear in the original transcript of conversation.

²⁸ Charles de Gaulle, Head of the French Provisional Government.

CHURCHILL: The Minister for Foreign Affairs and Government [Mr. Boheman], while admitting that this motive could not be excluded, pointed out that the fact that the Nazi chiefs would order capitulation of all troops on the whole Western Front, and in Norway, and Denmark might be of great advantage for all the Allies, including Russia and would in fact lead to early total capitulation. all [still] the Swedes talking), and they say in any case,29a the Minister for Foreign Affairs hoped to clear this up, this provision. He said pass it on to the British and United States Governments who were, as far as the Swedish Government were concerned, at complete liberty to transmit it to the Soviet Government. That the Swedish Government would in no way be, or propose to be, an instrument in promoting any attempt to sow discord between the Allies. The only reason for not informing the Soviet Government directly was because Himmler had stipulated that this information was exclusively for the Western (He said that if the United States colleague is sending a telegram to say so.) Of course we are not bound by that, and it's our duty to tell Stalin, in my opinion.

TRUMAN: I think so, too. Have you notified Stalin?

Churchill: I held it up for about two hours, hoping to get an answer to the telegram I sent you, but I have now released the telegram. This is the telegram I have sent.

TRUMAN: All right, then you notify Stalin, and I shall do the same immediately of this conversation between us.

Churchill: Exactly. Here is what I have said to Stalin ³⁰ and I have telegraphed it over to you. The telegram immediately following is one I have just received exactly from the British Ambassador in Sweden.

The President of the United States has the news also. I thought you had gotten it. Your telegram has not gotten thru.

TRUMAN: No, I haven't received my telegram as yet.

Churchile: There can be no question as far as His Majesty's Government is concerned, arranging thus an [of anything less than] unconditional surrender simultaneously to the three major powers.

TRUMAN: I agree to that fully.

Churchill: We consider Himmler should be told that German folk [forces] either as individuals or in units should everywhere surrender themselves to the Allied troops or representatives on the spot. Until this happens, the attack of the Allies upon them on all sides and in all

Nothing in the above telegram should affect the release of our oration [orations on the link-up.] 30a I sent it off a few minutes ago and I was sending it to you with the following telegram from me, you see. That which I read you. I called the War Cabinet together at once and they approved of this telegram I've just read you.

TRUMAN: I approve of it too.

CHURCHILL: The one I sent to Stalin.

TRUMAN: I approve of that telegram you sent to Stalin, and I shall immediately wire Stalin on exactly the same line.³¹

Churchill: Thank you so much. That is exactly what I wanted. We hoped you would find it possible to telegraph to Marshal Stalin and to us in the same sense.

TRUMAN: Mr. Prime Minister, would you please repeat your message to Stalin and repeat it slowly so I can take it down here.

CHURCHILL: I have already done so through the American Embassy over an hour and a half ago, and it should be with you almost immediately. Would you like me to send you also the telegram I got from Stockholm today?

TRUMAN: I would very much.

CHURCHILL: I will. You will get it very soon. You will get the one from me, the one I just sent out.

TRUMAN: I would like for you to repeat the one which you sent to Stalin so I can send one substantially like it to him.

CHURCHILL: Good. I hope I may——

TRUMAN: Would you do it slowly, please, Mr. Prime Minister?

CHURCHILL: The telegram immediately follows: It is a long one. TRUMAN: I thank you very much.

Churchill: I have just received from the British Ambassador in Sweden. The President of the United States has the news also (that is what I thought). There can be no question as far as state history [H.M.G.] is concerned about anything else but $[less\ than]$ unconditional surrender simultaneously to the three major powers. We consider Himmler should be told that German folk [forces] either as individuals or in units should everywhere surrender themselves to the Allied troops or representatives on the spot. Until this happens, the attack of the Allies upon them on all sides and in all theaters where resistance continues will be prosecuted with the utmost vigor. Nothing in the above telegram should affect the release of our oration (?).

TRUMAN: Thank you very much. I shall get one off immediately to him, and I certainly do appreciate your talking to me on it.

Churchill: I'm delighted. I am so sure we would be pretty well in agreement, and I hope that Stalin will wire back and say, "I agree too." In which case we could authorize our representatives, in Stockholm, to tell Bernadotte that you will pass on the message to Himmler. Because nothing can be done about that until we are all three agreed on it.

TRUMAN: All right.

Churchill: You have my text and your own, and let's see what Stalin says.

TRUMAN: All right.

CHURCHILL: Thank you very much, indeed.

TRUMAN: Thank you.

Churchill: You remember those speeches we were going to make about the link-up in Europe?

TRUMAN: I didn't understand that last statement, Mr. Prime Minister.

CHURCHILL: You know what I am talking about, the speech, the statements that are written. Well, I think they should be let out just as they would be anyhow as soon as the link-up occurs.

TRUMAN: I think you're right on that. I agree on that.

CHURCHILL: Anything helps to beat the enemy.

TRUMAN: I agree with that.

Churchill: Good. I rejoice that our first conversation will be about the first of June. It's very good news.

TRUMAN: I hope to see you some day soon.

Churchill: I am planning to. I'll be sending you some telegrams about that quite soon. I entirely agree with all that you've done on the Polish situation. We are walking hand in hand together.

TRUMAN: Well, I want to continue just that.

Churchill: In fact, I am following your lead, backing up whatever you do on the matter.

TRUMAN: Thank you. Good night.

This telegram from Field Marshal Alexander of April 27 to the heads of the U.S. and British Military Missions in Moscow and to the Combined Chiefs of Staff was dispatched pursuant to instructions from the latter, contained in Fan 532; see footnote 40, infra. Field Marshal Alexander stated that arrangements were being made for General Wolff and Lieutenant Colonel von Schweinitz to proceed to Allied Force Headquarters to sign a local surrender of enemy forces in Italy. As directed by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, there was to be no bargaining or negotiating in Switzerland and the contact would be immediately broken off if the Germans did not come at once to Caserta. Field Marshal Alexander asked that the Military Missions inform the Soviet General Staff of this development, stressing both the condition imposed by the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the fact that the approach had been made on German initiative. He also asked that Soviet officials be informed that General Kislenko, recently designated as representative of the Soviet General Staff at Allied Force Headquarters, would be invited to attend such negotiations as might materialize at Caserta. [&]quot;Reference is to discussions with respect to arrangements for a food relief program for the civilian population of German-occupied western Holland. For documentation on this subject, see vol. v, pp. 1 ff.

SHAEF has been in touch with Seyss-Inquart 44a through Dutch underground channels and proposals have been put forward for a "standstill" in the Netherlands still under German occupation. On our side we would agree not to go beyond the Grebbe Line, to cease bombing and naval action against the Germans in Dutch ports, and to call off action by the Dutch underground. On their side the Germans would order their troops to remain in a "standstill" status, and would refrain from reprisals against the Dutch. It would be understood that the German troops would surrender when resistance ceased throughout Germany. A point not yet decided is the matter of food supplies. Upon the insistence of Prince Bernhard, SHAEF would like to begin dropping supplies by air, announcing in clear on the wireless the fields to which they would be sent. The Germans on the other hand suggest the despatch of the supplies by rail and road transport, under guarantees.

The above is the essence of the matter so far. Sevss-Inquart has sent a message that he would be willing to send representatives tomorrow (Sat) to meet SHAEF representatives at Amersfoort to discuss the "standstill". It had originally been planned that Gen. Smith 45 and Gen. Strong would represent SHAEF but I don't know what is the latest on this.

Apparently no commitments would be made to Seyss-Inquart about his future or that of the Germans in Holland. The Russians have been currently informed through Deane in Moscow. A cable has been drafted setting forth the latest details to the CCS. Our concurrences were not asked for and I think maybe we had better await the sending of the cable to CCS before taking the matter up with the Department. The CCS have been kept currently informed, except for the very latest developments which are still not entirely settled. G-3 46 will give me the cable reference number when sent, so that we can relay it to the Department.47

The American Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Assistant People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union (Vyshinsky)

No. 226

Moscow, April 29, 1945.

DEAR MR. VYSHINSKI: I have been directed to effect transmission of the following message from the President to Marshal Stalin:

"To Marshal Stalin from the President. Personal and Top Secret. "The following is the text of a message I have sent to Prime Minister Churchill:

"'I suggest, with reference to Marshal Alexander's Naf 934,⁵⁴ that the announcement of the local surrender of German armies in Italy to combined Anglo-American forces be made by Alexander at a time that is in his opinion suitable and correct, and that the first announcement be not made elsewhere. "'If you agree, please instruct Alexander accordingly.'

(Signed) Truman."

I would be grateful if you would be good enough to transmit this message to Marshal Stalin.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE F. KENNAN

The Minister in Sweden (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

Stockholm, May 2, 1945—2 a. m. [Received May 2—1:19 a. m.]

1626. Legs 1610, April 30, 7 p. m.⁵⁵ Sweden's efforts to get German troops to evacuate into Sweden to be disarmed here and eventually to be turned over to the Allies are presently believed by high officials of the Swedish Foreign Office to have failed. One reason for this anticipated failure is said to be the leakage of information at San Francisco ⁵⁶ relative to Himmler's offer of capitulation to the Western Allies. The leakage resulted in widespread radio publicity of In telegram 29, April 28, 7:50 p. m., from the Acting Secretary to the Secretary of State in San Francisco, not printed, Mr. Grew commented on a statement from San Francisco being carried in the press to the effect that "a high British source" had told the United Press that Himmler had recently sent word through the Swedish Government that Hitler may not live another 24 hours. "The press correspondents here are of course highly indignant that such sensational news should be released from a British source in the United States and when the full story is eventually known very bad feeling may be engendered. You may wish to explore this through Eden. After consulting the President I have informed the press that I have nothing to say at this time." He also reported that neither the Department nor the White House was making any comments at all on the rumors of a surrender proposal (740.00119 EW/4-2845).

which discredited Himmler. Another given reason is the alleged death of Hitler with the succession of Dönitz 57 and his stated determination to continue the war. Count Folke Bernadotte returned to Sweden today and advised me that he had delivered the President's message (Legation's 1575, April 27, 6 p. m.) and there had been no

There have been countless rumors today to the effect that Dr. Best 58 has turned the administration of Denmark over to the Danish authorities and that the German troops are evacuating the island of Zealand but neither Von Post 59 who is in Denmark nor representatives of the Danish underground here have been able to confirm this information.

There were also rumors this morning that the German authorities in Norway had ordered the release of the prisoners at Grini. Late tonight word was received that this alleged order had been countermanded by reason of the developments in Germany.

In my opinion it is important that the contemplated staff talks (Legs 1606, April 30, 3 p. m.60) take place at the earliest practicable date.

813. You are requested to express to Mr. Günther our sincere regret that premature publicity given to the Bernadotte-Himmler conversations has been the source of concern to his government (your 1640, May 2, 9 p. m.⁶¹). Taking into consideration, however, the intense public interest in this country and abroad in current political and

In this telegram the Minister reported a conversation with the Under Secretary in the Swedish Foreign Office in which Mr. Boheman expressed the view that the publicity given at San Francisco to the Himmler offer had damaged the chances for a German capitulation in Norway and Denmark. He also discussed a communiqué just issued by General Eisenhower regarding the also discussed a communique just issued by General Eisenhower regarding the Himmler-Bernadotte conversations. He concluded by remarking "in a bitter tone," that what had happened at San Francisco and in the Eisenhower communiqué "does not encourage us to tell you what we learn." Minister Johnson ended his report by observing: "While Boheman was speaking under the emotional strain of disappointment in what appears to be a setback for Swedish hopes and plans in connection with Norway and Denmark, it is a fact that in official quarters here the publicity given to the Bernadotte and Himmler conversations is regarded as a very serious mistake." (800.414/5-245) military developments, and the freedom of the press in the United States and Sweden, it is practically impossible to prevent the publication of rumors. In this connection, you may remark that Swedish newspapers have devoted considerable space in the past several weeks to Count Bernadotte's activities in connection with the release of interned Danes and Norwegians, and that on April 24, the same day on which an account of his presence in Denmark appeared in the Swedish press, Expressen published a report that high German officers in Denmark had been negotiating surrender terms with an "authorized Swedish representative" (your 1516, April 24 62). This was followed on April 26 by a Luxembourg radio report, which was picked up and rebroadcast by the BBC, that the Germans had offered to surrender unconditionally to the two Western Allies but that the offer had been rejected.

With respect to Senator Connally's statements at San Francisco 63 on April 28, you may point out that he gave no indication of the source of his information or the personalities involved. SCAEF's statement on May 2 64 was issued subsequent to German reports concerning Hitler's death and the assumption of power by Dönitz and after the Swedish Foreign Office release of April 30 summarizing Bernadotte's conversations with Himmler. 65 It was made with a view to preventing the creation of a German legend of Hitler's martyrdom. Finally, the Acting Secretary's press release 66 merely placed in their proper light certain developments which had become public to clear up existing confusion and put the situation in its proper perspective.
